Earlston (e-rul-stin) n. town on the Leader Water, about 3 miles up from the Tweed, and about 25 miles from Hawick. It contains the ruined tower where ‘Thomas the Rhymer’ was born, and has the site of the castle of the former Earls of March. The old Earlston Bridge, a thatched cottage and the Rhymer’s Mill are other historic attractions. Post Office Close has a house with a lintel bearing the date 1581. Earlston Civic Week is at the beginning of July. Population (1991) 1,629 (the origin is possibly ‘Ercil’s fort’).

Earl Street (e-rul-stree’) n. road between Duke Street and Trinity Street, with houses built in 1887, and named after the 6th Duke of Buccleuch (Henry Walter Scott), who had been Earl of Dalkeith.

Eastbank see East Bank

East Bank (eest-bawngk) n. former name for the area near where Trinity Church now stands, which formed the eastern extremity of the town boundary. This was the site of the East Bank Kirk, and the lower ground was once called the Wheathole.

East Bank House (eest-bawngk-hoes) n. Manse of East Bank Church, beside Trinity Gardens at the start of Bourtree Place. Once the building was turned over to secular use it became a shop, run by A. Kyle then Fred W. Robertson as a souvenir and art supplies retailer in the early 20th century. Later it was a Scottish Power show-room. From 1991 it has been Hamish Smith’s jewellery shop, Nos. 2 and 4 Bourtree Place, and is a grade C listed building. Local joiner Tosh Scott designed the new frontage in mahogany, and it contains custom cabinets to Hamish Smith’s designs, as well as the Teribus Clock outside.

the East Bank Kirk (thu-eest-bawngk-kirk) n. church formerly built at the Wheathole, being the lower part of the current Trinity Gardens. It was originally erected in 1780 as the East End Meeting House of the East End Burgher Congregation, which had been founded in Hawick in 1773 by the ‘dissenting seceders’, and previous to that members of this congregation had travelled to Selkirk for services. The first minister was George Williamson, but he left after disagreements with his congregation, and it was 8 years before James Henderson was appointed. He significantly increased the numbers, placing the congregation on a firm footing. Many worshippers came from the neighbouring Parishes of Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Hobkirk. There were 673 members in 1806. From 1847 it became part of the United Presbyterian Church, and formed an offshoot in 1886, which became Wilton South Church. The original structure was an unpretentious, square, 2 storey building with an attached church hall. An adjacent manse was built in 1793. In 1837 a dispute over whether to build a manse for the assistant minister caused a schism in the congregation. The church was enlarged in 1877. Members of the Free Church worshipped there for about a year, before St. George’s was built. The old meeting house was converted for use as a private school for a few years (the forerunner of St. Mary’s and Trinity schools), and was last used by a joiner’s firm in the early 20th century. Photographs of it exist from the late 19th century. The present building was constructed in 1843 higher up than the original, was officially called the East Bank United Free Church, and later became part of the Church of Scotland again. In the 1890s a Church Hall was built to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1958 the church merged with the nearby congregations of St. Andrew’s and St. John’s to become Trinity Church. An entrance pillar from the former gates by the Horse was dumped in the Teviot at Mansfield, but rescued to form the base of the Frank Scott Memorial Seat on the Miller’s Knowes. The oldest existing communion token is marked ‘Rev. J.H. 1791’ and ‘Ass-o-c-Hk.’ on the other side. A history was written by Stewart Richmond Scott in 1923. A roll of the ministers is: George Williamson 1774–83; James Henderson 1791–1840; Adam Thomson 1833–60; James McEwen 1862–72; James Orr 1874–91; Charles Allan 1892–99; James Brand Scott 1900–.

the East Bleachin Green (thu-cest-blee-chin-green) n. former public drying green off the Loaning in Denholm. Comrades Hall was built on the lower part in the 1920s, while the upper part continued to have clothes poles until about 1960, when it was turned into a children’s playground.

East Boonraw (eest-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Power Road Ends’, just next to West Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It probably corresponds to the location of the main farm of Boonraw. Robert Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1841–72 (see also West Boonraw).

East Buccleuch (eest-bu-kloo) n. farm in the Rankle Burn valley off the B711 and near West Buccleuch. This area gave its name to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The present house stands on the site of a much older manor house, near where the Clear Burn joins the Rankle Burn. This was probably the first local seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch (or ‘Rankilburn’, as it was originally). The modern farmhouse was built in 1832, during the construction of which the foundation walls of the castle were discovered (at the western end). The house incorporates a freestone door-rybat from the earlier mansion, as well as a stone above the door bearing the crescent moon of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is said that an old spur, a bridle bit and other relics were once dug up there. It is also said that when a fireplace was replaced in 1921 that the floor gave way, revealing the vault of the old house. The original ‘castle’ there was probably a fortified house and may have been ruined in an attack by the Routledges and accomplices in about 1490, although it has also been speculated that it was destroyed by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1544. There are nearby signs of possible other buildings and rig field systems. The farm also once contained the lands of Gair and Ropelawshiel. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 2265 acres, with the farmhouse in roughly the present location. The ‘East side of Buccleuch’ stock and teind was valued at about £11 45 in 1785. David Park was tenant there until about 1800, when it was taken over by James Grieve of Branxholme Park (also sometimes ‘Easter Buccleuch’).

East BurnFIT (eest-burn-fii) n. East Burnfoot, former farmstead in the Ale valley, corresponding approximately with the modern Burnfit on Ale, with the ‘West’ farm actually to the south east. James Hart was tenant there in 1711 and Robert Riddell in 1721 (it is ‘eister burnfoot’ in 1688).

East Burn Park (eest-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common to the east of West Burn Park and to the west of Williestruther cottage.

East Castle (eest-kaw-sul) n. fortified house said to have been at the east end of Denholm village, so-called to distinguish it from Westgate Hall, at the other end of the village.

East Cavers (eest-kë-vurz) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, also known as Easter Cavers.

Eastcote (eest-kö) n. farmhouse just outside Hawick, about half-way between Weensland and Denholm, lying on the left between the A698 and the East End Kirk

the East End (eas-tul) prep., arch. on the east of (also eassel).

the East End Kirk (eas-tul-kirk) n. the East End Church, also known as the East End Meeting House, the original name for what became known as the East Bank Church. The name distinguished it from the other Secessionist church, the West End (or Green) Kirk.

Easter Alemoor (ees-tur-äl-moor) n. farm beyond the dam at Alemoor Loch, on the Easter Burn, and actually to the north of the modern Wester Alemoor. It appears to have existed as a separate estate from at least the mid-16th century. David Armstrong ‘of Ailmure’, recorded in 1573, may be the first known owner. It was owned (along with Wester Alemoor) by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 17th century, but by the late 18th century was the property of Pringle of Haining. Alexander Pringle, a prominent Scottish Judge, became ‘Lord Alemoor’. The farm was in Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Rutherford in 1689. William Lamb was there in 1714, Walter Scott in 1716, James Govenlock in 1715, Walter Scott in 1716, George Sinton in 1720, William Scott in 1725, James Anderson in 1753, John Storie in 1757 and James Grieve in 1765. John Pringle of Clifton paid the Land Tax of £308 there in 1785 and Mark Pringle in 1802. There are signs of rig and furrow cultivation nearby and former buildings to the north-west (it is ‘Easter Ealmuir’ in 1725; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Easter Barnhills (ees-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. It was sold by John Turnbull of Barnhills to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1613. In 1678 it was combined with Wester Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. By 1788 the lands were valued at about £450 and held by the Miss Stewarts.

Easter Buccleuch see East Buccleuch

Easter Burnfit (ees-tur-burn-fi) n. former farm bordering on Midshiels and Appletreelhaill, all tenanted farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Burnfoot, distinct from Wester Burnfoot. The mill there is recorded from 1574, when William Scott ‘in Harden’ and James Scott ‘in Quhitislaaid’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside for a loan on the lands. James Shiel was living there in 1682. Robert Wright was a shoemaker there in 1690. The residents there in 1694 were Alexander ‘Hymers’ and Robert Wright. Bessie Gray was from there in 1717. There is still mention of ‘easter Burnfoot mylne’ in 1718 and in the survey of Buccleuch properties in that year it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Wester lands. Robert Riddell was recorded there 1721–29, Alexander Moore in 1723, Walter Riddell in 1725 and James Scott in 1733–35 (it is ‘Easter Burnfoott’ in 1694 and ‘E: burnfoot’ in 1725).

Easter Cavers (ees-tur-kä-vurz) n. former farm on Cavers estate, also known as ‘East Cavers’. John Miller and William Nichol are listed there in 1694. Walter Lorraine was there in 1714. It is possible it was the same as Little Cavers.

Easter Clarilaw (ees-tur-klä-ree-law) n. former name for the eastern half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. It was included in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 146 acres and was bounded by Midshiels, Wester Clarilaw and Hassendean Common. It was also stated that 6 acres of land belonging East Cote House Archery Centre. Andrew Rodger was there in 1727, John Douglas in 1731 and William Douglas in 1733. William Blyth was there in 1772. John Johnston was farmer there in at least 1794–97 and Thomas Scott in 1841. Thomas Armstrong was farmer in the early 20th century. Aerial photography revealed the outlines of what appears to be a Roman temporary marching camp in the nearby fields. The name was used to distinguish it from West Cote and it is essentially the same as the earlier Little Cote (also spelled ‘East Cote’, ‘East Coat’ etc.; it is marked ‘Eastcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address with no farmer recorded there, but it was owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £17,000. On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address (also written ‘Eastend’).

the East End (thu-eest-end) n. former name for the area around the High Street, to distinguish it from the ‘West End’. This was the commercial part of Hawick, where the merchants etc. lived. The name came later to refer to the eastern boundary of Hawick, around where the Horse now is. In 1770 there were 96 houses there owned by Burgess, with a value of over £17,000. On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address (also written ‘Eastend’).

the East End Kirk (thu-eest-end-kirk) n. the East End Church, also known as the East End Meeting House, the original name for what became known as the East Bank Church. The name distinguished it from the other Secessionist church, the West End (or Green) Kirk.

Easter Clerklands (ees-tur-lerk-lindz) n. former name for part of Clerklands.

Easter Common Haugh (ees-tur-ko-min-hawf) n. former name for the Wee Haugh, including the extended area now occupied by Teviot Crescent.

Easter Craik (ees-tur-kraik) n. formerly half of the lands of Craik. In 1548/9 these lands were granted by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Sir Walter Scott and his wife Janet Betoun, having been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston. The lands were re-granted to John Cockburn by James, Earl of Bothwell in 1567. It was inherited by Simon Scott in Newton in 1618, from his brother Walter. It is probably the ‘Easter Craig’ listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The lands were also described as having a mill (it is ‘Eistir Craik’ in 1548/9, ‘Eister Craik’ in 1567 and ‘Eister Craik’ in 1661).

Easter Dykeback (ees-tur-dik-bak) n. former name for land lying on the north side of Rosebank Road, probably once part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Wester Dykeback, which lay further to the south-west.

Easter Essenside (ees-tur-e-sin-sid) n. farm west of Ashkirk, adjacent to Wester Essenside. It was part of the estate of the Scotts of Headshaw in the late 16th century. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton and valued at £200, with the teinds being valued at £60. There were 6 tenants listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William Redford was tenant there in at least 1709–17 and James Nichol was living there in 1710. The Shortreeds were there in the 18th century, with James Shortreed being the owner in 1759. In 1778 it was purchased by John Elliot, younger son of the 2nd Lord Minto (who would become an Admiral and settle at Monteviot); when he died in 1808 it passed to his nephew, the next Lord Minto. In 1788 it was valued at £365 (and had a value of 10s more in 1811). In 1820 it may have been sold to Miss Ann Carnegie (perhaps a relative of the Elliots by marriage). John Scott was farmer there in 1789–97. It was farmed in the 19th century by John Douglas (father of Bailie James) and his son, who was also John. 2 small bronze axe-heads (or ‘celts’) were discovered on the farm, in 1882 and in 1887, as well as a bronze armlet, possibly loaned to the National Museum of Antiquities by Tom Scott.

Easter Hassendean (ees-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the eastern half barony of Hassendean, the name being used from at least the 15th century to refer to the part with barons being the Cunninghams. This is distinct from the western part, which included some of the northern Borthwick valley. In 1510/1 the lands were granted to David, son of James Scott of Hassendean. In 1514 Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencarn, granted the lands to Elizabeth Cunningham, widow of John, Lord Hay of Yester. And in a charter of 1529, John, Lord Hay of Yester takes possession of the ‘ten merkis landis of ald extent’ of ‘estir hassindane’, previously belonging to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. This was confirmed to the Hays of Yester in 1617, when the daughters and heirs of another John, Lord Hay of Yester dispossed the lands to him. Although the Cunninghams and Hays held the superiority, the lands were possessed by the Scotts of Hassendean, with a confirmation to William Scott of Hassendean in 1532. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served as heir to his grandfather Robert in half the lands of ‘orientalium de Hassinden’ with the mill there. The lands, including ‘the toure, fortalice, and mylne theirof’ were listed among the possessions of the Scotts.

Easter Grundistone (ees-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former house and farm, which was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 16th century, situated near Grundistone. ‘Robert Scot of Easter-groundiston, brother-son to Robert Scot of Headshaw’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. George Scott was there in at least 1682–88. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. George Scott and Robert Stewart were there in 1694, with William Bell as shepherd and James Young there among the poor of the Parish. William Miller was there in 1711. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 371 acres, bounded by Hassendean, Newton, Boonraw, Wester Grundistone and Synton. A stream separated it from Wester Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. The small farmstead of Boghall was also included within its limits. John Armstrong was farmer there in 1797. (it is ‘Easter Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘Eister grundiston’ in 1688 and ‘Easter Groundiestone’ in 1718).

Easter Heap

of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Eister Hassindene’ in 1514, ‘Estir Hassindene’ in 1532 and ‘Easter Hassindean’ in 1663).

Easter Heap (ees-tur-heep) n. former name for an estate roughly corresponding to the modern Silverbuthall, and being part of ‘the Heaps’.

In 1635/6 James Waugh was served heir to the lands there belonging to his grandfather, John Waugh ‘de Heip’; this was explicitly land valued at 5 merks. In a 1650 list of ‘communicants’ there are 39 people listed on the estate, namely (using modern spellings) Adam Welsh, Margaret Davidson, Marion Waugh, Janet Percival, Margaret Sheen, John Percival, Walter Scott, Bessie Scott, James Aitchison, Gavin Elliot, Janet Percival, Robert Easton, James Easton, Margaret Fletcher, William Easton, Isobel Fowler, John Scott, James Scott, James Stevenson, Bessie Easton, Bessie Stewart, William Easton, Janet Gray, Helen Johnstone, James Stewart, Agnes Scott, Patrick Lorraine, William Lorraine, Marion Rule, Robert Scott, Margaret Percival, Robert Aitkin, James Aitkin, David Aitkin, Bessie Brydon, Adam Aitchison, Robert Mitchell, James Learmonth and Isobel White. In 1788 it was ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’ when valued at £80 and owned by James Scott. The 1808 will of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ mentions ‘Easter Heap or Heip now commonly called Silverbuthall’. ‘Three Inclosures and Stackyard, part of Easter Heap, or Silverbuthall, formerly belonging to James Scott, and possessed by Robert Smith, acquired from James and Walter Knox’ are listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the owner being Archibald Dunlop of Whitmoor and the value being £13 (also spelled ‘Heip’ or ‘Hepe’; it is ‘Eister Heip’ in 1636 and ‘Eister heape’ on a parish map of 1650).

Easter Hermiston (ees-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone, both valued at £130, along with teinds valued at £51 10s 2d. John Scott of Synanton and John Johnstone owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Easter Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Easter Hislop (ees-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘Eister Heisloip’ in 1572 and ‘Eister Heissloip’ in 1615).

Easter Hoose (ees-tur-hoos) n. house in Robertson that used to be the local manse.

Easter Howlands (ees-tur-how-linz) n. old name for the area that was later called Dovemount (mentioned as early as 1511), making up a large part of Wilton east of Roughheugh, or today east of Wilton Crescent and Stiches Road. Note that the name does not signify that it is east of Howlands, but rather that it is the eastern lands (of the Langlands estate) which lie in the hollow. A 1726 charter granted Easter Howlands to William and Charles Tudhope, then it passed to John and William Sharp of Maxside in 1763 and George Haliburton in 1770, by which time it was known as Dovemount and subsequently parcelled off.

Easter Kirkstile (ees-tur-kirk-stil) n. former name for the Kirkstile, to distinguish it from the formerly existing Wester Kirkstyle – ‘John Bridges weaver att the easter kirkstyle had a child baptized . . .’ [PR1713].

Easter Swanshiel (eest-tur-swan-sheel) n. former part of the farm of Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. It was situated on a promontory jutting into the Swanshiel Cleugh. In 1643 it was the larger part of Swanshiel, and valued at £66 13s. 4d. It was owned by a branch of the Turnbulls, then acquired by the Grieves of Easter Swanshiel in the early 18th century, before being sold and annexed to Wolfelee. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was still valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in 1694. The last occupant of the steadie there was a pauper by the name of Loraine. By 1788 it was owned by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and still owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 (it is ‘eister Swansheli’ in 1663 and ‘Easter Swansheall’ in 1694).

Easter Toll (eest-tur-toil) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, a plaque marks the site on Bourtree Place near the Conservative Club. The toll house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. George Grieve was tollkeeper in 1841.

Easter Weens (eest-tur-weenz) n. former stables on the Weens estate, located north of the main house.

Easter Wells (eest-tur-welz) n. former name for farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Wester Wells.

Easter Whitehaugh (eest-tur-whi-uf) n. former name for the lands also known as Wester Heap.

Easter Winds (eest-tur-windz) n. former name for lands somewhere near Dryden, Commonside etc. Distinct from ‘Wester Winds’, this may have been an early form of ‘Weensland’. It is listed in 1686 among lands tenanted by Robert Grieve in Commonside in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch.

Eastfield Mills (eest-feeld-mils) n. main premises of Blenkhorn Richardson & Co. Ltd. on Mansfield Road, opposite the footbridge. The main building, along with an engine room and a huge single-storey weaving shed, was erected in 1882/3 by Bell & Hill, Builders, with Melrose’s planning most of the engineering. The frontage is in the style of a French Renaissance chateau. The main warehouse, fronting the Teviot, was 120 feet long, with free-stone from Woodburn Quarry. It was extended in 1886 to incorporate the spinning of worsted yarn, with the addition of 2 extra 2-storey structures, as well as a matching gatehouse. There was further expansion in the period 1895–1921, with enlargement of the weaving sheds and an additional office block on Rosevale Street. The mill carried on through troubled times, until it sounded its whistle for the last time in 1976. Since 1981 it has been home to a knitwear mill for Johnstons of Elgin. The large octagonal chimney, spinning sheds and engine house were all demolished. The mill is a grade B listed building. There is a piece of film of workers leaving the factory in 1909/10.

Eastfield Road (eest-feeld-rod) n. built in 1962 in an area where Waverley Mills and part of Blenkhorn and Richardson’s, Eastfield Mills had been. Some of the council flats there were demolished in 1998.

East Fodderlee (eest-fo-dur-lee) n. eastern part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying east of West Fodderlee, and also Old Fodderlee. It was also known as ‘Easter Fodderlee’. Near the bend in the road to the south are Easter Fodderlee Cottages, and a little further south is Easter Fodderlee March Wood. The owner in 1707 was Mary Kerr, when the value was £80. The lands were disposed by James Thomson to William Riddell in 1784 and then granted to John Thomson 3 years later. However, the lands are recorded being owned by George Thomson in 1788, and still in 1811 (so there may be some confusion with names). John sold them to Thomas Gregson in 1802, who sold them to Charles Kerr of Abbotrule 4 years after that. Kerr sold them to William Walker in 1815, and they passed to Walker’s nephew James in 1832. However, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the farm is recorded being owned by George Thomson and valued at...

£80. In 1864 the farm was purchased by Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs, who had plans to encourage the railway to pass through the land. James Fairbairn was farmer there in 1861 and his widow was recorded as farmer in 1868. The farm was bought by John Usher of Norton and Wells in 1895. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum (formerly written ‘Fotherlie’ and variants; see also Fodderlee).

Eastgate (eest-gā’) n. street running through the middle of Denholm, being part of the A698. It is also known as Main Street.

Eastgate Hoose (eest-gā'-hoos) n. house on the Loaning in Denholm. It was the home of the local master joiner around 1900.

East Grain (eest-grān) n. small stream in the headwaters of Twislehope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twislehope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill joining Muckle Sike to become Deep Gill.

East Highchesters (eest-hi-ches-turz) n. former name for a smaller part of the main Highchesters estate, distinguished from West Highchesters. There were 9 ‘communicants’ there in 1650, namely John White, Bessie Allan, Adam Noble, George Heatie, Janet Adam, John Gavin, Robert Renwick, Helen Napier and James Scott. It was within Wilton Parish until the Parish of Robertson was formed in 1689/90. It was probably the farm within Wilton Parish owned by Robert Scott of Glack in 1678. In 1694 there were 5 separate householders recorded there. John Wilson was there in 1714–20. John Hume was there in 1736, John Scott in 1742 and Robert Scott in 1763. It was purchased from Elliot of Fenwick by the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1756. George Hart was farmer there in 1797. In 1788 and 1811 it was part of the Buccleuch estates and valued at £130 (also called ‘Easter Highchesters’, it is ‘Easterhaychesters’ in 1694 and ‘Easter Heichester’ in 1718).

East Hill (eest-hil) n. hill just to the south-east of the Note o the Gate. It reaches over 420m (it is marked ‘Easter Hill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Easthope (eest-hōp) n. John (d.c.1899) son of a soldier, his widowed mother and sister came to the Hawick area, where they slept in the barn at Branxholme Braes. The mother died overnight and the children were taken charge of by Mr. Grieve, then raised by Nancy Ewart. He attended school in Newmill, was apprenticed as a stone mason, and taught the herds’ children at Penchrise, later starting a school in Hawick. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a teacher on the Back Row, but it was also said that his private school was on the Mid Row. He wrote some articles for the Kelso Chronicle, which helped secure him a Civil Service job in London, where he rose to a high position.

eastin (ees-tin) adj., poet. east, eastern (noted by J. Leyden).

Eastla (eest-la, ees-la) adj., n., arch. the eastern part of Hawick, as opposed to the ‘Wesla’, i.e. the part to the East of the Slitrig, also known as ‘Eastla Water’. The rivalry between the two parts of town used to be quite strong, with, for example, competing bonfires at the ‘King’s Ranting’ in the 18th century, and a tradition for the Cornet to be elected from alternate sides. In the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson) there used to be gangs from each side, made of youths under about 16 years old, which formed ‘regiments’ with drums, flags, halberds, clubs and even swords. They would battle in the 2 or 3 weeks before and after ‘Eastern’s Eve’ (the time of the ‘Baa’ game), when injuries were common. They also used to have competing bonfires on July 4th, with material collected over the preceding month, and regular raids on each other’s store of fuel. The rivalry survived into the Baa game of the 19th and early 20th centuries – ‘... a total of 86 deaths ... 34 were in Eastla water, and 52 in Westla water’ [JE] (cf. easla.

Eastlea Drive (eest-lee-driv) n. street in Denholm, off the main road after the Ashloaning, with construction began in the 1930s and finished after WWII. The local police station was on the corner with the Jedburgh road until it closed in 1971.

East Langlands Ludge (eest-lawng-lindz-luj, -kof) n. former gatehouse for Langlands House, now a separate dwelling, situated on Sunnyhill Road. It is dated 1880 and has picturesque detailing, including deep overhanging eaves. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh firm Kinnear & Peddie. It is a grade C listed building.

East Lees (eest-leez) n. former farm adjacent to West Lees, between Newton and Appletreehall. James Cranston was farmer there in the mid-19th century (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for a set of lands to the east of Hawick, distinct from West Mains. The boundaries probably changed over time, but it consisted of essentially all the land to the east of the Burgh. Together these were originally part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron. The detailed outline is shown in a survey of the lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718. At that time it consisted of 572 acres, bounded by the Slitrig, Meikle Whitlaw, Hummelkowes, Weensland and the eastern limits of the Burgh; the enclave of Hillesland and some smaller portions of lands were not included and the land was described as ‘corn land which is indifferent good, but it lyeth very inconvenient by reason that there is so many hills and valleys in it’. A great deal of what is currently the eastern part of the town (including the Terraces, the Wellogate, Slitrig Crescent, etc.) was once part of these lands. Over time various parts were sold to the Burgh and other landowners, or incorporated into neighbouring farms, so that eventually the name ‘East Mains’ ceased to be used. There was a court case of 1437 where William Douglas of Drumlanrig recovered part of these lands from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirktown’ recorded in 1470 are probably the same as Kirkton Mains, and not the East Mains of Hawick. These are probably the ‘easter dominical lands’ which James Douglas, together with his wife, held in 1484 before he inherited the Barony of Hawick. They are listed as part of the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron in the 1511 charter. Part of these lands are referred to as being to the north of the Trinitylands in a charter of 1557 (assuming that ‘Vest manis de Hawik’ is meant for ‘East Mains’). The lands were included in the Baron’s property in a promise of infeftment in 1559, the return of 1572 and in the Parliamentary ratification for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1594. It was listed among the lands of the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, valued at £1120. The lands were described as having a mill, although it is unclear where this was simply Hawick Mill, or referred to another, perhaps on the Slitrig. would have been, and whether on the Teviot or Slitrig. In 1630 Drumlanrig gave a quarter of the lands to Thomas Lidderdale of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire). They are described as ‘extending to 19½ husband lands’ in 1675. In 1684 a piece of land called Crumptlands Croft, within East Mains, was sold by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop. In the 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch it is listed first (supporting the idea of this as part of the demesne lands) as being ‘nineteen husband lands and three fourth parts’. Rentals for the lands are included in the Buccleuch archives from 1690. However, it appears that some of the lands were purchased in the 1740s by the Duke of Buccleuch from John Scott and Thomas Turnbull (ex-Bailies of Hawick) and Patrick Cunningham. Improvements to the lands are mentioned in 1764. The lands of Crowbyreshaugh are recorded in a dispute of 1822 as being part of East Mains (it is ‘Est Manys’ in 1511 and 1514, ‘Eist Manis’ in 1514 nd 1559, ‘lie Eist Manhattan’ in 1565/6, ‘Eist Manis’ in 1572, ‘Eist Manys’ in 1594, ‘Eist Maynes’ in 1615 and ‘East Maynes’ in 1686).

East Mains (eest-mänz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. It was presumably to the east of West Mains, and once formed part of the demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull in 1782 (it is ‘Cavers eastmains’ in 1794).

East Mains (eest-mänz) n. former name for Knowetoonheid in Hassendean. It is referred to by this name in a ‘letter of reversion’ by Walter Turnbull, when it was assigned to the new Baron of Hassendean, Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4 (and hence was originally the ‘home farm’ for the Baron). The name distinguished it from ‘Middle Mains’, which was also referred to in early times as part of Hassendean.

the East Mairch (tu-eest-märch) n. the East Marches of Scotland coincided with the area known as the Merse, with wardenship often held by the Home family. It was also more or less the same thing as the Sheriffdom of Berwick. The English East March, more or less Northumberland, often had wardenship by the Percy’s.

East Middle (eest-mi-dul) n. farm by the Honey Burn, east of Cavers. The name distinguishes it from West Middle. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, but in the Parish of Kirkton. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 valuations. Andrew and William Douglas were there in the 1680s. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. It was farmed by James Turnbull in 1785, Alexander Douglas was there in 1795 and Thomas Blyth was tenant in 1797. There were Turnbuls there in the 19th century (it is ‘Easter Midle’ in 1685; it is marked ‘Easter Middle’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Easter Middles’ in 1797).
Easton (ees-tin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Greensidehall. His son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. Margaret (b.1715) may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1723 and 1725. He married Mary Turnbull and their children included: Anna (b.1720); Jean (b.1723); Beatrix (b.1725); Agnes (b.1728); Gideon (b.1731); and William (b.1734). The witnesses in 1723 were William and Robert Easton (possibly his father and brother) and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Robert Wilson and in 1729 for Adam Wright in Dean Mill. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps living at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Renwick and their children included: Agnes (b.1770); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas (perhaps his father) and Thomas Hoy. He could be the Adam who (along with George) was recorded owning part of Roughenheim in 1788 (valued at £11 8s 8d), and still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Oxnam Parish. In 1791 he married Isobel Helm, who was from Cavers. In 1792 he was at Shiplaw Corse when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish. Adam (b.1783) son of Andrew and Margaret Kedie, he was farmer at Overhall. In 1851 he was farming 62 acres and in 1861 he was a widower farming 60 acres. In 1814 he married Janet, daughter of John Michie from Old Northhouse. Their children included: Isabella (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); William (b.1821); Robert (b.1824); John (b.1826); George (b.1828); Christian (b.1830); and Helen (b.1833). Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who received poor money from the Session in 1706. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Twislehope in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the shepherd at Broadleehope listed among heads of households in 1835–37 and Broadlee 1838–40. He may be the Alexander, married to Jean Kyle (daughter of Andrew Kyle and Jean Murray), whose children, born in Castleton Parish, included: William (b.1822); Andrew (b.1824); Jane (b.1826), who married Walter Gledstains; Alex (b.1828); Robert (b.1834); James (b.1835); Isabel (b.1836); and Elizabeth (b.1838). This family emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1840. He left around the same time as the other Alexander, who was surely related. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1836, when he was at Whithaugh. He was at Bellshiels in 1838 and 1840, and emigrated to America about that time. He was surely related to the other shepherd Alexander. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the Andrew, married to Helen Swan, whose son Stephen was born in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of one of his children is recorded in 1782. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Kedzie in 1771, with children including Robert (b.1773), George (b.1775), Thomas (b.1777), Agnes (b.1779), an unnamed child (b.1782), Adam (b.1783), Christian (b.1786) and Andrew (b.1789). Andrew (1743–1820s) tenant farmer at Overhall, son of Robert and Christian Murray. He was recorded as farmer at Overhall in 1797, with Thomas also listed there. He owned some property in Edinburgh and would go there for a couple of days a year to collect the rent. On one such occasion he returned early to find his daughter Christian holding a party. Being a strict and disapproving man, he said nothing until leaving the next time, when he told her ‘Kirsten, if you’re going to again have a party, you’d better have it a day earlier’, and so no party was held again. In 1771 he married Mary (or Margaret) Kedzie, who died in 1809, aged 63. Their children included: Robert (b.1773), who became a minister in Montreal; an unnamed child (b.1782); Adam (b.1783); Christian (b.1786); and Andrew (b.1789). It is said that his wife was excommunicated from East Bank Kirk for attending the service of a minister she knew who was preaching at a neighbouring church, and so the family moved to the Green (Anti-Burgher) Kirk. Andrew (b.1805/6) born in Roberton Parish, son of George. He was farmer at Easter Alemoor and then Todrig. He was farmer at Alemoor, according to an electoral roll of 1837. In 1841 he was at Easter Alemoor. In 1851 he was at Todrig, farming 1376 acres, 46 of which were arable and in 1861 he was farming 1400 acres and employing 3 labourers. His wife was Isabella. Francis (1758/9–1829) gardener in Hawick. He was probably son of Overhall farmer Thomas (since they were recorded on the same headstone). He is probably the Francis who was recorded as a gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, as well as at Roberton (for the minister James Erskine) in 1779. He may be the same Francis who was gardener at Stobs in 1794 and 1797. He married Elizabeth Ormiston, who died in Hawick.
in 1833, aged 53. George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to John and Peter, who were also listed. George (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier (along with Richard Brown) of Salenside Croft and ‘Skakriggis’. These same lands were then assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses by Walter Scott of Ashkirk. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He came right after William, to whom he was presumably related. George (17th/18th C.) servant to William Henderson in Clarilaw. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1702); and Helen (b.1709). George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded tenant in Woll in 1715 and 1717. He married Bessie Murray and their children included William (b.1705), James (b.1708), John (b.1713), Agnes (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1717). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait and their children included: John (b.1733), George (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787. He may be the ‘younger mason’ recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1790 when he was involved in a dispute over an unpaid bill in Selkirk. Probably the same George is recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, along with Adam. They were still recorded as owners on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to Adam, or the other Eastons. George (1785–1875) born at Upper Glendivan in the Ewes valley. He was recorded as a roadman at Glendivan in the 1841 census. He moved to Edinburgh and became an agent of the Scottish Temperance League, who talked all over Scotland about abstinence and sobriety. In 1834 he married Mary Hetherington. Their children included James, Douglas and Margaret. His autobiography was published in 1869. George (b.c.1810) son of William. He was a hairdresser in Hawick, who was an early Trustee and deacon of St. George’s Kirk. On the 1861 census he is listed at 1 High Street. He married Elizabeth Brack and their children included: Andrew (b.1805); George (b.1809); and Margaret (b.c.1810). George (19th C.) farmer at Fenwick, recorded on the 1834 electoral roll as a tenant, with lands acquired from William Turnbull of Fenwick. Gideon (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Scott in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Irvine in Hawick in 1763 and their children included: Margaret (b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); and Janet (b.1771). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were butcher Thomas Waugh and smith Robert Telfer. He could be the Gideon, son of Adam and Mary Turnbull, born in Wilton in 1731. He may have earlier married Margaret Laidlaw in 1758. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Isobel (b.1632), Margaret (b.1633), Robert (b.1635) and Marion (b.1639). The witnesses in 1652 were M. ... Scott and William ... James (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: George (b.1650); John (b.1652), William (b.1657); Thomas (b.1658); and Robert (b.1661). Agnes (b.1647) and Bessie (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, are probably also his children. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at West Burnfoot in 1722 and Alton in 1729. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: John (b.1714); Jean (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1722); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1729 were James Dryden and Thomas Irvine. He could be the James recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Heap in 1725. He married Isobel Aitken (probably in 1714, although no wife’s name is given) and their children included: Anne (b.1716); Isobel (b.1720); Agnes (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1725 for James Smith, also resident at Heap. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Geamscleugh’ (i.e. Gamescleuch) in Ettrick Parish in 1716 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the William who married Helen Stavert in Roberton in 1716. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in 1764, with witnesses John Anderson and James Hogg. He may be the James... who in 1765 witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps his brother). James (1739/40–95) tenant at Broom, which must have been in Rulewater or nearby. He was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with his son William and an unnamed daughter. James (18th C.) married Agnes Sanderson in Hawick in 1758. It is possible that they had a son James in the 1770s (the entry being hard to read). James (18th C.) resident of Branzholme. He married Betty Cook and their children, baptised in Hawick, were Isabel (b.1774) and Mary (b.1779). The witnesses in 1774 were James Roger and William Mitchellhill. James (18th/19th C.) carter in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Thomson and their children included: George (b.1790); Isobel (b.1792); James (b.1794); Maney and Agnes (b.1796); and Thomas (b.1799). He is also recorded in Selkirk (in the Walter Mason Collection) in a dispute over an unpaid bill. Probably the same James, resident of Lilliesleaf, is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the James who owned land in Lilliesleaf in 1788 (still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £26 13s 4d, which was among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. James (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) listed as a wright in Wilton on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the James born to Andrew and Margaret Kedie in Wilton in 1782. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and Peter, who were also listed. John (17th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier of a ‘husbandland with onset, toft and croft’ in Ashkirk, later wadsed by Walter Scott of Ashkirk to John Scott in Kirkhouses. John (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1698 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Tandlaw. John (d.bef. 1691) resident of Ashkirk. He married Blanche Bell and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1691. His wife was recorded as his widow at the baptism, with witnesses Robert and John Easton (who were probably related to him). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk who married Isobel Helm and had children Isabel (b.1690), William (b.1692) and Elizabeth (b.1696). The witnesses in 1690 were William and John Scott. He may be the John who (along with Robert, also married to a Helm) witnessed a posthumous baptism for another John in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, distinct from the James in Salenside. In 1698 he was recorded as tenant in Ashkirk. He married Janet Easton and had children Agnes (b.1695), Robert (b.1698), George (b.1699), Isobel (b.1702), William (b.1704), John (b.1707), Thomas (b.1709) and Robert (b.1715), all baptised in Ashkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish. In 1710 he was ‘Elder tenant in Ashkirk’. He married Bessie Leithead and their children included Janet (b.1706) and Agnes (b.1709). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Galalaw in 1723. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. He married Isobel Learmoth and their children included John (b.1718), Isobel (b.1720), Margaret (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). William (b.1715), with no mother’s name given, may also be his child. The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Taylor and John Scott. John (18th C.) from the Damside family. He married Euphan Douglas. Their daughter Rachel married Merrylaw farmer William Goodfellow in 1773. The 84 year old Euphan who was recorded as ‘Independent’ on Underdamside in 1841 could be his daughter. John (18th C.) barber in Hawick. The death of his wife (name not given) is recorded in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the John who married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton in 1797. Peter (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a tenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and John, who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the Robert who married Isobel Helm and had a son James (b.1690), with witnesses Robert Scott and John .... He may also be the Robert who married Margaret Henderson and had a daughter Margaret (b.1698). He could be the Robert who (along with John) witnessed a posthumous baptism in 1691 for another John. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, but some of the dates were unreadable. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Todshaw’ in 1696 when he leased the lands of Todshaw for 5 years from Gideon Scott of Highchest. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Anna ‘Kair’ in Wilton in 1708. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes ‘Steward’ and their children included Robert (b.1708). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1717) and William (b.1719). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Greensidehall in 1725. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 (along with William) for Thomas Liddell, in 1723 (along with William) for Adam Easton and in 1733 for William Goodfellow. He married Margaret Scott, the marriage probably being the one recorded in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). Their children included Anna (b.1725) and Isobel (b.1728). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for James smith in Wilton in 1725. He may also be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident of Heap, in 1733. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737. He married Jean Dodds in 1736 and their children included: William (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Thomas (b.1742); and Mary (b.1744). The witnesses in 1737 were Andrew Martin and William Gray. Robert (1702/3–91) farmer at Overhall, probably older brother of Thomas, who also farmed there. In 1746 he was living at Calaburn. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Archibald Turnbull in 1759, for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and for Robert Oliver in 1770. He married Christian Murray in Wilton in 1735, and she died at Pathhead, aged 82. Their children included: Isobel (b.1736); Andrew (b.1739); Mary (b.1740); Andrew (again, b.1743), who also farmed at Overhall; Adam (b.1746); Thomas (b.1748); and Christian (b.1750). The witnesses in 1746 were James Robertson and John Murray. Robert (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Dickson and their children included an unnamed child (b.1755), John (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1758). Robert (d.1778) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record lists him as ‘An old Man’, suggesting he had no family at that time. Robert (18th C.) builder who was paid in 1751, along with Robert Oliver and their workmen, for work on the new Teviot Brig. This was explicitly for ‘helping the far pillar of the bridgem and 12 drains’. He may be the Robert who married Christian Scott in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included: James (1763); and James (again, b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were cooper Alexander Scott and church officer Alexander Bunyan, and in 1765 were James (probably his father or brother) and Alex Bunyan. Elizabeth (b.1760), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1767); and William (b.1768). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Tibby was baptised in 1773. Robert (1749–1823) land surveyor of Jedburgh, only son of William of Rankend and Isobel Bridges of Maxton. He was said to be a ‘self taught student of natural science, chiefly astronomy and mathematics’. He married Mary, elder daughter of George Douglas (from the Timpendean family), tenant of Howden, and Agnes Oliver from Dykeraw. His wife survived ‘nearly all their family’. Their children were: William, who died in childhood; Jane, who died young; Betty, also died young; Agnes (1784/5–1856), who died unmarried; Isabella, who married William Mattewson and died in Greenlaw; Mary, last of the family, who died in Edinburgh, aged 84; Esther (1789/90–1839), who married John Tinline; Jean (1793/4–1865), unmarried. A memorial stone was erected to the family in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Easton and their children included Francis (b.1790). Rev. Robert (1773–1831) son of William and Nelly Thomson, he was baptised in Selkirk. His father was a gardener and he was the eldest of 4 children. Note that there is an alternative suggestion that he was eldest son of Andrew, farmer at Overhall. He attended Hawick grammar school, then Edinburgh University. He was licensed as a Burgher minister in 1793 and ordained at Moffeth in 1798. Along with 5 other clergymen he emigrated to New York in 1802 and moved to Montreal in 1804. He ministered privately to Presbyterians there and then helped found St. Peter’s Street Presbyterian Church (also known as St. Andrew’s), Montreal. In 1818 he helped set up the Presbytery of the Canadas. He also worked with the British and Foreign Bible Society. With his eyesight failing, he retired in 1824. He married Mary Beattie and they had 4 children, 2 of whom died in infancy. He had sermons published in 1815 and 1816. Robert (b.1797/8) weaver in Hawick, son of William, who was from Southdean Parish. He was living with his father on Bourtree Place in 1841 and 1851. On the 1861 census he was at 2 Bourtree Place, living with his sister Isabella and described as ‘Woollen Weaver & Chelsea Pens’. This suggests that he spent some time in the army. Stuart (1883-) born and educated in Hawick, he became a motorbike racer. He was British Supersport Champion in 2002. He has ridden for Ducati, Kawasaki and Honda. He suffered a serious crash during practice in 2011. Thomas (d.1800) farmer at Overhall, probably younger brother of Robert, who also farmed there. He was recorded at Overhall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew is also listed there, who was probably his nephew. His wife Margaret Easton (apparently the same surname) died in 1777, aged 50. This was at Whitehillbrae (part of Dodburn farm), suggesting he earlier farmed there. Their children included: Margaret (1742–67); Mary (1746/7–65); Robert (1762/3–98); and Gideon, who died in infancy. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Hawick gardener Francis may have been another son (since he was recorded on the back of the same headstone). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Groundestone. His daughter Mary died in 1811. Thomas (1780/1–1846) precentor of the West-end Church, who ran a school for teaching English and Music on Silver Street in the early 19th century. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His school later moved to the Fleece Inn Ballroom (presumably the High Street location where he was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory), and it was here in 1838 that the meeting took place to organise the opening of the Chartist Store. He only taught reading, writing and counting, with Saturday morning lessons consisting entirely of reading the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. On Saturday afternoons he went round the district cleaning clocks, often accompanied by a pupil of mechanical bent. He also held singing classes in the evenings. He is listed on Tannage Close in 1841, with his wife Margaret. Thomas (b.1787/8) born in Selkirk, he was gardener at Chisholme. He was listed at Chisholme in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Anne Lumsden in Robertson Parish in 1917 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Helen (b.1820); Robert (b.1822); Charles (b.1823); Isabella (b.1826); William (b.1827); and John (b.1839). William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George appears right after him on the list, and so was probably closely related. He is probably the William who married Isobel Dodds and whose children (baptised in Ashkirk) include a son ‘Betreck’ (b.1697) and another son William (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were James Veitch and George Scott. In 1690 he (along with George Scott) in turn witnessed a baptism for James Veitch. He also witnessed baptisms (along with James Veitch) in 1691 for John Tait and for Robert Turnbull. William (17th C.) listed as resident in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His daughter Agnes married Walter Hall (from Jedburgh) in 1713. He may be the William who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Thomas Liddell and for Adam Easton (perhaps his son) and in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw and James Young at West Burnfoot. William (18th C.) cottar in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Small and their children included: Margaret (b.1719); Isobel (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (again, b.1728). William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Jean Scott and their children included an unnamed son (b.1727) and William (b.1731). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1732 he married Margaret Scott, the marriage being recorded in both Roberton and Wilton Parishes. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1733. He was probably related to the earlier William who was at Heap. He married Margaret Scott in 1732 and their children included: James (b.1733); Robert (b.1735); and Bessie (b.1736). The witnesses in 1733 were Andrew Drummond and Robert Easton (who was surely related). William (18th C.) schoolmaster in Ewes Parish. In Edinburgh in 1739 he married Margaret, daughter of Walter Turnbull, schoolmaster at Hawick. Their children, baptised in Ewes, included: Christian (b.1740); William (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Elizabeth (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1759. He married Janet Scott in 1758 and their children included Jean (b.1759) and Elizaebth (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were Walter and Robert Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1773); and Joanna (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1769 he married Violet Lorraine. Perhaps the same Violet Lorraine married Walter Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1771 (in which case he must have been deceased). William (b.1768) son of Robert, he was born in Saouthdean Parish. He was probably the William recorded as gardener at Green River (working for James Chisholme) in 1797. He later lived in Hawick, where he worked as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Bourtree Place in 1841 and was described as a retired gardener in 1851. His children included: Robert, weaver and ‘Chelsea Pensioner’; Margaret; and Isabel. William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Smith. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Janet (b.1795); Joseph (b.1797); Margaret (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800); George (b.1804); and Adam (b.1806). The witnesses in 1795 were James Winthrop and Thomas Hugan, and in 1797 were Joseph Caverhill and James Scott. William (b.1783/4) barber in Hawick. He is recorded as a hairdresser on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, as well as a fishing tackle maker. He is listed in the 1834 electoral roll along with his son George as a joint proprietor. In 1837 he was listed as a High Street hairdresser, as well as a fishing-tackle maker. He is still listed as a High Street hairdresser in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer and fishing-tackle maker. He lived at about 2 High Street according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: an unnamed child (d.1809); George (b.c.1810), who took over the business; Catherine (b.1815); John; William (b.1822); and James (b.1824). William (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is recorded as simply a ‘dealer’ on the High Street. This could be the same man as the hairdresser. William Scott (1853–1877) son of hairdresser George and Elizabeth Jane Scott. He was related on his mother’s side to local poet William Scott. He was well known for writing satirical rhymes and doggerel, leaving us with the familiar ‘Kinly Stick’ and ‘The Anvil Crew’, as well as ‘Run Them In’. Robert Murray says that ‘his best pieces are now lost, never having been committed to paper’. He was Bard of Masonic Lodge St. John 111, but could not have lived long in that position. He died tragically at age 23 in a shooting accident when training with the Volunteers. He had apparently stood in to replace someone else as a marker during practice at the Whitlaw Range near Hummelknowes. A poem ‘Alane’, found in his private notebook, was published after his death, but essentially nothing else survives (formerly spelled ‘Easten’, ‘Eastoun’, ‘Eastonne’, ‘Eston’, ‘Eistone’, ‘Eistonne’, ‘Eistoun’, ‘Esten’, etc.).

east o the gate (eest-ô-thu-gâ’i) adv., arch. in an easterly direction, eastwards – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe’ [HI] (also ‘east the gate’).

East Port (eest-pôr’) n. old entrance to the town, situated roughly opposite Baker Street, corresponding to the modern 74 High Street, removed in the mid-18th century. An entry in the Town Treasurer’s Book for 1751 states that a tanner is paid ‘for lime to the East Port Cross’, which is the only mention of the possibility of a ‘cross’ being there (but may be an error). The port is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. This once marked the beginning of the road out of town along Bourtree Place towards Jedburgh. A plaque was erected by the Callants’ Club beside the Waverley Bar (78 High Street) in 1964. The place was formerly used to distinguish among families of the same name that lived in different parts of the Town, e.g. ‘Walter Scott at the Eist-port, Robert Deannes, thair’ in 1638 – ‘…Bailie Scott and Thomas Hardie from Wm. Dickson’s house to ye East Port on both sides of ye toun’ [PR1722].

East Spittal Road (eest-spi’-ul-rôd) n. former name for a road in Minto Parish. A ‘Haugh be-East Spittal Road’ was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

East Stewart Place (eest-stew-ur’-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, built in 1886, and named after Rev. James Stewart.

East Teviotdale (eest-teev-yi’-dâl) n. name used to refer to lands owned by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th century. They were among a list of lands to which the Scotts of Buccleuch were appointed as bailie. It is unclear precisely the location and extent of the lands so-named (it is ‘Estwydail’ in 1519, ‘Estwydail’ in 1524, ‘Esteydail’ in 1524 and ‘Est Teuidail land’ in 1553/4).

east the (eest-thu) adv., arch. towards the east, ‘east of the’ – ‘…differing ten minutes or so from its modern sister east the street’ [WNK] (this was formerly a common expression).

East-the-witter (eest-thu-wi’-ur) adj., arch. another form of Easla or Eastla water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the eastern side of the Slitrig – ‘By cash for stent collected east the Water of Slitrig, …3 8 8’ [BR1761], ‘As soon as public worship began, the elders started on their quest, two being appointed for east-the-water’ [JJV] (cf. West-the-witter).
East Whitehaugh

East Whitehaugh (eest-whi’-af) n. former farm in the hills behind Wilton, once also known as Wester Heap.

easy (ee-zee) adv. easily – ‘We were that easy pleased when we were bairms . . .’ [WL].
easy-osie (ee-zee-ō-ze) adj. easy-going, flexible, insouciant, unconcerned about a choice – ‘A’ll take either yin, A’m easy-osie’ (also written ‘easy-osi’ and ‘easy-osie’; an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).
eatche (eech) n., arch. an adze.
eatin-hoose (ee’-in-hoos) n. an eating-house – ‘There was a snod bit leilik-leike eateen-hoose, nerr bye . . .’ [ECS].
eave (n., arch.) n., arch. a nave, hub of a cartwheel (noted by J. Jamieson).
ebber (e-bur) adj., poet. shallower – ‘The good apostle’s whisky cask, Would grow but little ebber’ [JR].
eebbit (e-bi’) interj., arch. yes but, literally ‘aye, but’ or ‘ah, but’ – ‘Ehbit NA!! Nehh!’ [ECS], ‘Eh, bit gaun back teh 1707 an oo find that yin o’ the toon’s twae bailies was a Rob Broon . . .’ [BW1979] (also written ‘eh, bit’ and variants).

Eben (e-bin) n. short form of ‘Ebenzer’, occasionally used in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Ecclefechan (ek-kul-fe-kin) n. town in Annandale, off the M74, birthplace of Thomas Carlyle by the Arched House, built by his father and uncle in 1795. The nearby Hoddom Castle was a Maxwell stronghold. Population 857 (1991) (named after the church of St. Fechin).

Eccles (ek-kulz) n. village north-east of Kelso, in Berwickshire, also being the name for the associated parish. The village contains the ruins of St. Mary’s Priory, burned by Hertford in 1545. The mansion house there dates from 1898, replacing an earlier house. Surviving estate buildings include a clock tower, dovecote and lodged gateway (the origin is probably from ‘church’, since there are the remains of a Cistercian Convent there; it is ‘Ekkils’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Eccles Hoose (ek-kulz-hoos) n. large house near Kelso, built 1895–8 in a Scottish 17th century revivial style.

ech (ech) interj., arch. exclamation of disgust, surprise or sympathy – ‘Eh, ech, preserve us a’. What now?’ [JEDM].
echi (e-ki) n., v. echo (also spelled ‘echih’).
echt (echt, ech’) n., arch. eight – ‘A gaed ti bed at neine an A sleepeet on till echt, gey nerr the clock roond . . .’ [ECS], ‘The daily wumman had arrived at Sharp’s house as usual, at echt in the morning . . .’ [DH], ‘Is my clock an echt-day or a thirty-hour movement?’ [DH], ‘Echt days, echt’ days, a week (ago): ‘this time (or day) echt days!’ [GW], an eighth (this was once the common pronunciation: cf. aicht, aucht, aeight and eit).
echteen (ech-teen) n., arch. eighteen (also aichteen, auchten, eiteen and aeighteen).
echty (ech-tee) n., arch. eighty – ‘He throve fae seeeventeen-fifty-five And leaved to be echty-yin’ [DH] (also eity, echty and aeighty).

Eckford (ek-furd) n. village about 5 miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name for the surrounding parish, containing the villages of Eckford, Cessford and Caverton. The lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1450 and erected into a barony in the following year. They remained part of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch through the 17th century. The lands were valued at £20 in 1574, and along with Lanton were held ‘by the service of ward and relief’. The lands were given in livery to Margaret Ker when she married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1586. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Barony was coupled with the lands of Hawick and Lempitlaw in the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1692, when set to Sir Patrick Scott. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties. The village was burned during the ‘Rough Wooing’ of 1544/5. The church dates from 1771, with some earlier fragments; it closed in 2006 and is now privately owned. There is an existing communion token from 1696. The graveyard contains a Mort-house for guards to look out for grave robbers. The parish united with Crail in 1777 and became part of Ale and Teviot United Church in 2004. The village has a community hall, built in 1930. The bridge at Eckford Mill was built in the 1690s (the origin of the name is probably ‘Ecka’s Ford’, from the Old English personal name; it first appears as ‘Eckford’ about 1200 and was ‘Eckfoord’, ‘Ekfurd’, ‘Ekfurde’, ‘Eskfuird’, ‘Hecfurd’, and other variants).

Eckford Mill was built in the 1690s (the origin of the name is probably ‘Ecka’s Ford’, from the Old English personal name; it first appears as ‘Eckford’ about 1200 and was ‘Eckfoord’, ‘Ekfurd’, ‘Ekfurde’, ‘Eskfuird’, ‘Hecfurd’, and other variants).

Andrew George John Nichol ‘A.N.’ (b.1851), son of John. He carried on his father’s grocer and spirit merchant business. The Museum has a stone bottle labelled ‘Andrew Eckford’s celebrated nourishing stout, 21 High Street, est. 1838’. John ‘Johnny’ (c.1770–1843) stocking-maker in Hawick. He was
The text contains information about the life and activities of John Eckford, a grocer and farmer in Hawick. He was born in Ancrum Parish, son of William and Jean Nichol. Jean was a servant living at Honeytown in 1851, with sons John, Thomas and George. William (b.c.1780) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a slater in Denholm. In 1851 he was a widower, living at around 21 Main Street; Jean was living there in 1841 and so possibly his wife.

Eckford’s (ek-furdz) n. grocer’s shop at 21 High Street in the mid-19th to early 20th centuries. It was run by John Eckford and later by his son A.N. Eckford. It was also the name of a kind of ‘nourishing stout’ that was made there.

ecky-pecky wine (e-kee-pe-kee-win) n. a kind of medicinal wine??.

The Eclectic Club (thu-ee-klek-teek-klab) n. society existing in Hawick in the middle of the 19th century, which met in Miss Riddle’s room on the High Street and discussed literary topics.

eddart (ed-ar) n., poet. the adder — ‘...thaye ar like the deef eddart that stapps hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Thaye hae sherpenet thair tungs like ane serpint; eddarts’ venim is amunder thair lips’ [HSR].

Edgar (ed-gur) n. (c.1072–1107) King of Scotland from 1097, he was the son of Malcolm III and succeeded his brother Duncan II. He died unmarried and the nation was split between his brothers Alexander and David.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. James (17th C.) served as ‘procurator’ to Walter Scott of Goldielands in 1670. This was when Scott of Goldielands brought an action in Melrose against Andrew Tunno to make copies of instruments of sasine for Goldielands, which Tunno had in the previous Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’. It is unclear if he was a Hawick or Melrose lawyer. James (b.1780/1) born in Kirkcudbrightshire he was a teacher pupil, but gave up due to ill health and took up work as a stockmaker, becoming an apprentice in Hawick in 1801. He was one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 19th century. He married Jean, a daughter of shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1841 he is... recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Jean, as well as Robert and John, probably his sons. He died in his 80s, after working about 60 years as a stockingmaker in Hawick. James (b.1827/8) from Canobie, he was a merchant in Newcastle. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1861. He married Elizabeth, daughter of shepherd Walter Jackson. Their children included Jane, Helen, Isabella, William and James (1860–1920, who died at 11 Oliver Crescent, Hawick). James (19th/20th C.) eldest son of Robert and cousin of editor James. He worked for Pringle’s and was known for his hay preaching. It is said that when given some lily of the valley he planted it within a biscuit tin in the ground, saying ‘Aw’m no gaun to have a weed in ma gairden’. He married Mary Scott. James (1862–1940) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was proprietor and editor of the Hawick Express, who wrote several local books, including ‘Hawick Common-Riding’ (1886), ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ (1892, 1901), ‘Hawick in the Early Sixties’ (1913), ‘History of Lodge St. James’ (1932) and ‘The Provosts of Hawick’ (1933). He was also responsible for publishing many more books, such as ‘Hawick Songs’ (1914) and ‘Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook’ (1903). A keen Common Riding supporter, he was Secretary of the Committee from 1887 until around 1908, and acted as Clerk of the Course at the Races. His letter to the Hawick Express on 2nd April 1887 suggesting changes to the Common Riding ceremonies led to the resuscitation of the festival in the following years. In 1928 he was gifted a grandfather clock for 32 years of service on the Common Riding Committee (and this is now in the Museum). He was also one of the first members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, joining in 1838. He married Helen Armstrong, who died in 1888, aged 75. Their sons were James (who worked for Pringle’s), Robert (who married Mary Robson, sister of the joiners, and became a baker in Inverness) and John (who married Jessie Anderson and became a mill cashier in Inverness). Walter H. (1855/6–1933) son of the first James and brother of John. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick. He was also one of the founders of the Callants’ Club, being the first Honorary Secretary and President in 1924. He was a Town Councillor for several years. He was the initiator of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column in the Hawick Express. He was also Honorary Secretary of the Cricket Club. He married Janet, daughter of Bailie John Richardson, and she died in 1930, aged 65. Their son John was a banker in Edinburgh. John (c.1826–1909) son of the first Hawick James. He was a warehouseman in Teviot Crescent, lived at 3 Village and was father of newspaper proprietor James. He was a prominent Common Riding supporter of the mid-1800s. He married Isabella, daughter of James Richardson of ‘Saut Haa’, and she died in 1909, aged 78. Their children were Margaret (who married baker James Scott) and James (who became editor of the Hawick Express). Rev. Nicol (1658–1724) minister at Hobkirk, he was a son of John and Elspeth of Wedderlie. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1693. He was ordained as minister at Hobkirk in 1694 and served there until his death. There is a story of how one night about midnight in the church, he confronted a ghost that had been haunting the churchyard, finding it to be the spirit of a murdered cattle-dealer, and an arrangement was made that it be allowed instead to roam freely between Hoddleswoodie and Howabank. Whatever the basis of this story, he was apparently thereafter looked on with suspicion by some of the parishioners. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Susanna, daughter of John Veitch, minister of Westruther, and she died in 1713, aged 52. Their children were Susanna, Elizabeth (who married Robert Blyth in Edinburgh in 1739) and John (who died age 17). He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard, but it is said he was dug up shortly afterwards to be buried in some lonely spot, but his arms coming free and striking one of these superstitious men, they dropped him in the ditch and fled, so that he had to be reburied the following day. The inscription for his burial was carved into the same stone as that of Rev. James Douglas. Robert (1815/6–99) son of the first James and brother of John. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick. He was also one of the first members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, joining in 1838. He married Helen Armstrong, who died in 1888, aged 75. Their sons were James (who worked for Pringle’s), Robert (who married Mary Robson, sister of the joiners, and became a baker in Inverness) and John (who married Jessie Anderson and became a mill cashier in Inverness).

the Edge (thu-ej) n. former popular name used in Liddesdale to refer to the pass over into Teviotdale, perhaps named after the Limekilnedge and Sandy Edge.

Edgerston (e-jur-stin) n. estate about 7 miles south-east of Jedburgh, home of the Rutherfords of Edgerston. It was a detached part of Jedburgh Parish, with its own church. There was probably a fortified house there from at least the 15th century. In 1544 it was stormed by a group of Olivers, Halls, Croziers and Turnbulls, who had entered into a bond with the English. Thomas ‘the Black Laird’ was possessor at the end of the 16th century; his arrival at the Raid of the Redeswire is meant to have turned the tide. Tax was paid on 7 hearths at the main house in 1694. The present mansion house dates from the 1720s, with major renovations in the 1830s. The house is surrounded by an area of diverse woodland and contains an octagonal dovecote from about 1800. Nearby farms include Edgerston Rig and Edgerston Tofts. Records of the Rutherfords and Olivers of Edgerston are in the National Library of Scotland, including estate account books and charters (the name probably derives from the Old English ‘Ecgheard tun’, i.e. ‘Ecgheard’s town’; it first appears as ‘Edyarston’ in the late 15th century, is ‘Edyarstoun’ in 1553/4, ‘Edgaristoun’ in 1561, ‘Edgarston’ in 1567, ‘Edyarston’ in 1571, ‘Edyarstoun’ in 1581, ‘Edzarstoun’ in 1597 and 1561, ‘Edgarstoun’ in 1567, ‘Edyarston’ in 1571, and ‘Edyarstoun’ in 1597 and 1599; it is probably the place marked as ‘Iedgerton’ on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland; note that it is easy to confuse with early marked as ‘Iedgerton’ on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland; note that it is easy to confuse with early other prepositions).

Edgie (e-jee) v., arch. to be quick in doing something (noted by J. Jamieson).

Edgy (e-jee) adj., arch. sharp, smart, quick – ‘Be edgy’ [GW], ‘Look edgy’ (= hurry up)’ [GW].

Edie (e-dee) n. William (1865–1936) son of Robert, joiner in Hawick, and Christian Miller. He attended school in Roberton and was educated at St. Andrews University from 1882 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1892. He was minister at King Edward 1893–1905, Dumfries Greyfriars 1905–1910 and Inveresk from 1910 until he died. He translated ‘Textual Criticism of the Greek New Testament’ by Eberhard Nestle (1901).

Edina Place (e-dee-na-plis, e-di-na-plis) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellowgate, with houses built in 1885, and called after a poetic name for Edinburgh, e.g. Burns: ‘Edina! Scotia’s darling seat!’.

Edinburri (e-din-bu-ri, -ru) n. Scotland’s capital since the 15th century, now seat of the Scottish Parliament, lying between the Firth of Forth and the Pentland Hills, approximately 51 miles north of Hawick by road. Linked to Hawick by rail from 1849–1969 and by road via the A7, it has been the most important city for Hawick people for many centuries. The main A7 was dramatically improved locally as the Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike in the late 18th century. In Hawick the main road north went up Wilton Path (after crossing the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd or the Teviot Bridge after 1741) and then up Stiches road towards Ashkirk. In the early 18th century the road to Edinburgh then proceeded to Selkirk, followed by Darnick, and then by way of a ferry, ford and bridge to Leader, Oxton, Channelkirk, Fala and via Dere Street to Dalkeith. The new road from Selkirk to Edinburgh was built in 1755 and went via Fairnilee and Clevenfords and along the west bank of the Gala Water. The modern route via Galashiels, Stow, Heriot and Fushiebridge was not laid out until 1833. The city had its own Riding of the Marches from 1579 until 1718. Population (1991) 401,910 – ‘Did ee gang ti sei eer freends the teime ee was in Edinburrih?’ [ECS] (Teries often talk about going ‘inti Edinburgh’ rather than using another preposition).

Edinburgh an Hawick Railway (e-din-bu-ru-an-hfk-ral-wi) n. line operating between Hawick and Edinburgh, owned by the North British Railway. It began as the Edinburgh and Dalkeith Railway, in 1831, incorporating the Marquess of Lothian’s Waggonway in 1845, extended to Gorebridge in 1847 and reaching Hawick in 1849. After being extended to Carlisle the route was renamed the Waverley Line.

Edinburgh Borderers’ Union (e-din-bu-ror-der-urz-yoon-yin) n. former club in Edinburgh, with rooms at 22 Forth Street. It was founded in 1874. The organisation gave prizes for essays and offered aid to Borderers who were in difficulty. They also published an edition of Leyden’s poetry and a life of Sir David Brewster, as well as having their own reading room. From 1890 they instituted an annual excursion and a choir was formed in 1894, followed by a Literary and Debating Society, a Cycling Club, a Whist Club, a Golf Club and a Cricket Club.

the Edinburgh Cup (thu-e-din-bu-ru-kup) n. presented by Teries in Edinburgh, it was competed for at the Common Riding Games in the late 1800s, the event being the 250 yards foot race on the Saturday.
Edinburgh Road

Edinburgh Road (e-din-bu-rőd) n. popular name for the ‘new road to Selkirk’ leading north out of town. It was used as a street name up until the mid-20th century for that part of the road beyond Wilton Hill, but still within the Burgh.

Edin’s Hall (ee-dinz-hal) n. remains of an Iron Age broch and several other contemporary walls and earthworks on the hills above the Whiteadder outside Duns. This is the best preserved example of a broch anywhere near Hawick (also called ‘Edwin’s Hall’, ‘Edenhall’ and other variants).

Edmonds (ed-mindz) n. Rev. Donald Kinlock (b.1941) born in Hawick, son of Alexander McDonald and Catherine Maria Balfour Kinlock. He was educated at George Watson’s, Dalkeith High and Edinburgh University.

Edmondson (ed-mindz) n. Rev. Donald Kinlock (b.1941) born in Hawick, son of Alexander McDonald and Catherine Maria Balfour Kinlock. He was educated at George Watson’s, Dalkeith High and Edinburgh University.

George (c.1842–1900) son of Isaac, he was a butcher in Hawick. The family were members of the ‘English Kirk’. In 1871 he married Joan Bowie, who appears to have been the aunt of his brother Isaac’s wife, Jane Bowie. Their children included: Isaac (b.1870), who died young; Isaac (b.1872), also died young; Isabella (b.c.1874); Isaac (1876–1959), who died in Galashiels; Richard (b.c.1878); Elizabeth (b.c.1880); Janet (1883–1971), who married George Henry Cairncross; and George (b.c.1887). They also had 2 children who were illegitimate from Joan: Cathrine (b.1863), whose name is also given as Oliver and married Robert Anderson; and John (b.1868). Isaac (b.c.1785) from England, he came to Hawick probably in the 1830s, and worked as a dyer. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Round Close. He was listed as a dyer on the Round Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Johannah Lewarne, who was still alive (on Allars Crescent) in 1861. Their children included: George; Isaac (b.c.1820); Richard; and Johanna. Isaac (c.1820–55) from Coldbeck, Cumberland, he came to Hawick with his parents Isaac and Johanna. He worked as a Skinner. He married Isabella Montgomery. Their children included: George (c.1842–1900); Richard (b.c.1843), who married Elizabeth Patison Kennedy; Johanna (or Hannah, b.c.1848); and Isaac (1855–1924), who married Jane Bowie. He died in Hawick. Isaac (1855–1924) 3rd generation of Isaacs. He was born in Hawick, but died in Edinburgh. In 1876 he married Jane Bowie, who was the niece of his brother George’s wife, Joan Bowie. His son was also Isaac (1876–1942), who died in Hawick. Isaac (1876–1942) 4th generation of Isaacs in Hawick. He married Margaret Little in Hawick in 1897. James (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Baron of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. His name is recorded as ‘James Edmestone’. James (1872/3–1947) married Mary Murray, who died in 1955, aged 81. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. They had a son John Murray (1903/4–88). John (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. William Douglas in Deanbrae was charged to enter him for the slaughter of Thomas Hoggarth; Oswald Mason was also accused of the same crime, with Ralph Ker charged to enter him. Failing to appear he was denounced a rebel and his goods escheated to the King. Given that his surety was a Douglas from Deanbrae, then he may have been local. John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of James of that Ilk and Katherine, daughter of George Home of Wedderburn. In 1530 he was charged (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme and John, Abbot of Jedburgh) with disisting from his claim to the lands of Ednam. In 1567 he was cautioner for ‘Dand Ellot’ of Caveling. Either he or his son was listed among the men who signed a bond in 1569 to suppress thieves on the Border. In the same year Robert Kerr of Woodhead promised to relieve him of a bond to make payment to an Englishman. In 1529 he married Euphemia, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie-Marischal. He was succeeded by his son Sir John. Sir John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of John, he was Sheriff of Lauderdale. In 1593 he resigned his lands at Synton and Synton Mill to John, Earl of Mar. He may be the same Sir John who in 1569 signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Border and he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his father Sir Walter. In 1575 he was found to have falsely accused Robert Fraser in Overton of stealing horses belonging to Englishman Sir George Heron. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. His father was probably the John of that Ilk who was on a panel of ‘retour’ in 1551 for David Home of Wedderburn. He married Agnes, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the John of that Ilk whose daughter Margaret married George Scott of Synton. Rev. John (1801–1865) son of Thomas, an Edinburgh ironmonger and Isobel Howden. He was dux at Edinburgh High School in 1815, graduated from Edinburgh University, and was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1825. He was presented to the Parish of Ashkirk by Gilbert, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1837. He may have been assistant there previous to the death of Rev. Hamilton in 1837. He walked out during the Disruption of 1843 and became minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk. It is said that he suffered great hardship as a result, for example sheltering in a small house 4 miles from the church, and then having to move to a dilapidated farmhouse 3 miles further away, before in 1845 finding a residence in Selkirk, 6 miles from his congregation (a distance that he would walk every week). He married Janet (or Jane) Waddell in 1842, and she died in 1895. Their children were Jessie Traill, Thomas William (farmer), Isabella Howden (who married William Ross), Wilhelmina Euphemia, Elizabeth, and Mary Margaret (who married William Ebenezer White). In 1854 he edited an edition of ‘Paradise Lost’ and ‘Paradise Regained’ for schools and was assistant editor on ‘Works of John Owen, D.D.’ (1850–54). His surname is sometimes given as ‘Edmonstone’. Richard (b.c.1843) 2nd son of Isaac. He was a hand-loom weaver in the 1861 census. He married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy (b.c.1849) in Hawick in 1868. Their children included: Isaac (b.1869); Elizabeth Pattison (1871–1918); James (b.1872); Isabella Montgomery (b.1874), who married Bailie Francis Scott; Ann; Janet; Mary; Joanne; Richard (1884/5–1915); George; and John (b.1891), who married Jessie Hogg Wilkinson (who may have been his father’s half-sister) and emigrated to Canada. Richard (1884/5–1915) son of Richard and Elizabeth Kennedy. He served in the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders and was killed in action. He is commemorated on the Loos Memorial in France. He married Elizabeth Robertson, who lived in South Shields. William (18th C.) recorded at Stobicote in 1727 when his daughter Martha was baptised in Cavers Parish (formerly ‘Edmondston’), also written ‘Edneston’, ‘Edmistone’, ‘Edmonston’, ‘Edmiston’, ‘Ednemston’, etc.).

Ednam (ed-num) n. village a few miles north of Kelso. Birthplace of James Thomson, who wrote ‘Rule Britannia’ and Henry Lyte, who wrote ‘Alasde With Me’. This is also the name of the surrounding parish, which is claimed to be the first named parish. It borders Sprouston, Kelso and Stichell, as well as part of Berwickshire. The Eden Water crosses the parish and the Tweed forms its south-east boundary. The church has communion tokens from the late 17th century. A book ‘Ednam and its indwellers’ was written by John Burleigh in 1912 (the origin is ‘town on the Eden Water’; it first occurs as ‘Ednaham’ in the early 12th century).

Edward (ed-wurd) n. name of eight Kings of England. Edward I ‘Longshanks’ (1272–1307) English King who invaded Scotland in 1296, removing the ‘Stone of Destiny’ and historical records, and beginning the War of Independence. He was thus partly responsible for the unrest that plagued the Borders for the next three centuries. After dispute over succession of the Scottish crown, he gained overlordship of Scotland and chose Baliol as the King. Later many Scottish nobles swore fealty to him rather than to Robert the Bruce. In 1307 for example, the Lovels lost their lands around Hawick as a result. After invading in 1296 he also called a ‘parliament’ at Berwick and forced about 2,000 Scottish landowners and clergymen to sign the ‘Ragman Rolls’, this becoming a valuable historical document (partially making up for those he destroyed!). In 1297 he made a presentation to Cavers Kirk, since the former Baron’s lands were now in his hands. It is also said that he visited Bedrule Castle in 1298.

Edward II (1284–1327) English King from 1307, son of Edward I. He was never very popular as a King, partly because he was heavily influenced by Piers Gaveston (who was possibly his lover) and later Hugh Despenser. He tried to continue his father’s subjugation the Scots, including his disastrous expedition in 1314 to relieve Stirling Castle, which led to the Battle of Bannockburn. He was forced to flee from Bannockburn, pursued by James Douglas. He was denied entrance to Stirling Castle, but made it to Dunbar, where he escaped to England by ship. He was forced to abdicate in favour of his infant son Edward, and died in a dungeon, possibly the result of a red hot poker up the backside – ‘Gang cry the hounds of Douglas vale, Gang scream the Ettrick wall, Gang warn the spears of Lidadesdale, That Edward leads the foe’ [T]. Edward III English King from 1327–77, including a time of much war and the Black Death. He renounced the Scottish throne in the 1328 Treaty of Northampton, accepting Scotland’s right to independence. But he continued to battle the Scots and was victorious at the Battle of Halidon Hill in 1333. He was given much of southern Scotland by the puppet King Edward Baliol in 1334. And he took full possession of the Borderland in the 1340s, restoring lands to families who had supported England. The Lovels regained (at least on paper) their lands of Hawick in 1347. Edward was the self-appointed patron of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1355, presenting it to ‘John de Hawyk’. Edward VIII British King who abdicated in favour of his brother. He visited Hawick in 1924 when he was Prince of Wales, opening the Laurie Bridge, laying a foundation stone for wards at the Cottage Hospital and giving an address in the Town Hall. The avenue from the new bridge to the Park gates were lined with school children to see the Prince, escorted by the Provost – ‘The Prince was resplendent with his Chain and Ermine Robes, escorted by a Wee Soldier’.

Edwards (ed-wurzd) n. Thomas (18th C.) coachman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. William (19th C.) dentist of Edinburgh who visited Hawick every Saturday in the latter part of the 19th century. He was based on Queen Street in Edinburgh, and set up at the Tower Knowe on his visits to Hawick. He gave a silver cup for the Cornet’s Races in the 1880s and also donated a gold-mounted whip to be competed for by married supporters on several occasions through to the mid-1890s.

Edwin (ed-win) n. (585–633) King of Northumbria. He was the son of Ella, who had been King of Deira, before it was united with Bernicia by Æthelfrith. He was expelled by Æthelfrith around 605, but was part of the force that defeated him and reclaimed the kingdom around 617. He is also supposed to have brought Christianity to the region. He was killed by Cadwallon and his allies near Doncaster (also called ‘St. Edwin’).

Effie (e-fe) n. pet name for Euphemia.

Effledge (ef-lij, ef-leej) n. farm to the east of Cavers, between Nether Tofts and Whitriggs, in Kirkton Parish. Effledge Cottage is just off the road to the north-east. Archibald Douglas was there in 1502. It was once part of Cavers estate, listed among the lands belonging to the Barony of Cavers in charters of 1511 and 1558. There is a 1535 record of William Scott ‘in Layk’ being charged with stealing 13 cows and oxen from Arthur Douglas and Thomas ‘Fresall’ (possibly Fraser) and 7 cows and oxen from Marion Davidson, all from the lands there. Walter Noble was tenant there in 1686 when declared a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was still held by Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. William Turnbull, widow Marion Turnbull and James Gledstaines were all there in 1697. James Goodfellow was there in 1710, James Henderson in 1716, Walter Graham and Robert Scott in 1720 and Robert Stavert in 1794. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. James Bunyan was farmer there in 1797 and it was farmed by William and then Thomas Grierson in the 19th century. William Blyth was farmer there in 1868 (also spelled ‘Efflidge’; the name first occurs as ‘esilidge’ in 1502, then ‘Eflesche’ in 1511, and is ‘Eflesche’ in 1535, ‘Efleche’ in 1558, ‘Effadge’ in 1684, ‘Effletche’ in 1687, transcribed ‘Affecth’ in 1698 and ‘Efflithe’ in 1710 and 1716; it is ‘Efflidge’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is possibly from the Old English personal name ‘Ælf’, plus the Middle English ‘leche’, meaning ‘a bog’, but ‘the elf-swamp’ has also been suggested).

efremmit (e-fre-mee’, -mi’) adj., poet. estranged – ‘The wicket ar efremet frae the wome; thaye gang astraye sune as thaye be born, speiken’ lees’ [HSR] (perhaps only used once).

efter (ef-tur) prep. after, subsequent to – ‘A’m efter yow’, ‘A’ll sei ee efter the schuil’, ‘it wasni her efter aa’, ‘an efter aa the things A’ve din for’, ‘…deh throw guid money efter bad’, ‘Blisset be efter yow’, ‘A’ll sei ee efter the schuil’, ‘it wasni her efter aa’, ‘an efter aa the things A’ve din for’.

‘The wicket ar efremet frae the wome; thaye be born, speiken’ [HSR], ‘Thou art ane priest for ever efremmit frae the wome; thou art ane priest forever after the oordir o’ Melchizedek’ [HSR], ‘…waled, etter an agony o’ choice’ [DH], ‘Aw wonder what he’ll think o’ us After a’ that years’ [LJ], in accordance with – ‘…did ryd the meiths and marches of their Common, mooses, muir, and pasturage, after the usual manner’ [BR1711], adv. after, later – ‘she left right efter’, ‘…sal pay £10 etter tryal, toties quotes, and wairdit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘…thaye ca’ thair lan’s efter thair ain names’ [HSR], ‘What man is he that langs efter liffe …’ [HSR], ‘Hei saw the Cornet’s Chase, hei said efter, an’ went tae the Muir for the horse-races’ [BW1939], ‘…And she shortly efter flitted Frae the Vertish Hill’ [IWL], also ‘to be etter’ means ‘to want’ – ‘what’re ee efter then?’.

Eildon Knowe (ee-ld-din-no-w) n. small hill in the headwaters of the Ale Water, south of Crooked Loch, being the north-eastern spur of Mid Rig (it is unclear if there is a connection with the Eildon Hills).

Eildon Quaw (ee-ld-din-kwaw) n. boggy area near the head of Byrelee Burn, west of Eildon Knowe.

Eildon Road (ee-ld-din-ro’d) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the Eildon Hills, which can be clearly seen from here.

the Eildons (thu-ee-ld-inz) n. the Eildon Hills, between Melrose and St. Boswells. They are somewhat peculiarly known as Eildon Mid Hill, Eildon Hill North and Eildon Wester Hill, with heights of 422 m (1385 ft), 404 m (1327 ft) and 371 m (1216 ft), respectively. Eildon Mid Hill contains a triangulation pillar. The northernmost summit held the largest Iron Age fort in Scotland, constructed around the 10th century B.C.E. The Romans built a signal station there in the 2nd century, as well as an extensive fort and settlement nearby, and called the hills Trimontium. By local legend they were separated by Michael Scot the wizard, and also Arthur and his knights supposedly sleep here, waiting to return – ‘From Eildon’s cairns no more the watch-fire’s blaze, Red as a comet, darts portentous rays’ [JL], ‘Gaze where Eildon’s triple height Guards the secret dread’ [RSC], ‘A mist of tenderness so lightly folds the Eildons in her mantling love …’ [WFC] (they occur on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Heeldoun Hills’).

the Eildon Trei (thu-ee-ld-in-tri) n. a tree on the slopes of the Eildons where Thomas the Rhymner supposedly met the Queen of the Fairies and was spirited away for 7 years. The site is marked by the Eilden Tree Stone, which is modern (1929), but replaces an older one – ‘Mysterious Rymour! doom’d by fate’s decree Still to revisit Eildon’s lonely tree’ [JL].

Eildrig (ee-ld-ri-g) n. older name for the area around Eilrig and still used for the hill and stream there. There was a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at Eilrigburnfoot, of which there are now no visible remains.

ei-lid (ee-lid) n. an eye-lid – ‘she didni bat an ei-lid when A telt her’, ‘I wullna gie sleepe til mine eyne, or sloom til mine eelyds’ [HSR].

Eilrig (ee-lig) n. farm on the ‘Eild Rig’, south of the Borthwick Water about a mile before Craik. Before 1689 (when Robertson was formed) it was part of Hawick Parish. The lands were held by Robert Scott of Rankilburn from the early 15th century. In 1426/7 Robert’s son and heir Walter, was granted the lands by the Baron of Hawick. They were then valued at 10 merks and given ‘by the service of one penny’, due at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The lands were included in those resigned in 1463 and re-granted by James III in 1464 to Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. Robert Scott of Eilrig is recorded in 1477 renting the lands of Craik. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at £10 Scots. In 1501 the tenant was Simon Scott. In 1517 the lands were part of the estate of the Scotts of Buccleuch and said to be then ‘waste’, but valued at 10 pounds in times of peace; they had the same value in 1553/4. This is probably the ‘Elreg’ where David Armstrong was in 1533, the ‘Elryg’ where John Armstrong was recorded in 1561 and also the residence in 1576 of ‘Andro Armstrong, callit Reid Andro in Eilrig’. The lands were included in a list of those formally inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch from his great-uncle David Scott in 1574; they were at that time annexed to the Barony of Branxholme and valued at £10. In 1581/2 the lands were held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, when she complained that a gang led by the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Braidlie had raided the farm; they came ‘bodin in feir of weir, with jakkis, steilbonettis, speris, swordis and utheris wappinis invasive’, stealing 24 cows, a horse and some goods. The lands were listed...
Eilrig Burn (along with Philhope) as a ‘pendicle’ of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. ‘Rowie of Huttkil, furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig’ is recorded in 1616. The lands were estimated to pay ‘200 lb., in vicarage to 32 lb.’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Walter Grieve, Margaret Hall, Janet Grieve, Janet Murray, Robert Grieve, Margaret Scott and Maly Laing. It was still valued at £10 in 1653. Sir William Scott was recorded paying the land tax on £500 in 1663. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls it was still valued at £500 and listed as ‘Elerig’ or ‘Flerig’ under Walter Scott of Raeburn. John and Robert Grieve were there in the 1680s. Walter Herd was there in 1710, John Johnston and William Black in 1712, John Nichol in 1716, John Shortreed in 1718 and James Rutherford in Eilrig. In 1719 it was leased by John Chisholme of Stirches from William Scott of Raeburn, then James Home of Eccles and in 1730 Walter Scott of Merrylaw. Robert Welch and James Grieve were living there in 1722, James Rutherford in 1728, Walter Laidlaw in 1733–36, John Nichol in 1735, William Scott in 1736 and Archibald Henderson in 1743. In 1759 it was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch by Rev. John Clinie of Whitekirk, when the lands are still described as being in the Barony of Branxholme. John Mitchellhill was there in 1764, William Lawson in the 1770s, Andrew Geddes in 1781 and Francis Elliot in 1786. James Tait was tenant farmer there in at least 1787–1815. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued at £500. James Scott was shepherd there in the 1840s and 1850s – ‘Have you along the lonely road When the storm was raging near, Down by the old stone bridge At Eilrigg?’ [WFC] (the name first appears in 1426 as ‘Elerig’, with several later spelling variations, including ‘Ealrig’, ‘Ealrigg’, ‘Ealrigge’, ‘Eelridge’, ‘Eildrigg’, ‘Eildrige’, ‘Eilrig’, ‘Eilryg’, ‘Eylrigg’ and ‘Eylrige’, as well as ‘Yealrig’, ‘Yealrigg’ and ‘Yield Rigg’; it is marked ‘Eilrigge’ and ‘Ealrigge’ on parish maps of 1650, ‘IrIÓN on Blaen’s 1654 map and ‘Eildrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the origin is probably simply ‘ridge’ with an Old English personal name Ælla, Ella or Ila).

Eilrig Burn (eel-rig-burn) n. stream that runs near the farm of Eilrig, flowing roughly north to join the Borthwick Water opposite Meadshaw. A building was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map near the confluence with the Rough-hope Burn (marked ‘Eildrig Burn’ on the modern Ordnance Survey maps).

Eilrigburnfoot (eel-rig-burn-fi’) n. Eildrigburnfoot, former cottage by the road near where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. A building is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, on the south side of the road. It is recorded in 1616 that ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott and William Scott of Satchells met Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ at ‘Eilrig-burne-fute’ after riding at night from Hawick, before meeting further accomplices and continuing to Howpasley, where they slaughtered the sheep belonging to the Laird of Drumlanrig. The Lamb family and 3 other people were living there in 1841 and just ‘annuitant’ Georgina Tait in 1861.

Eilrig Shank (eel-rig-shawngk) n. another name for Eilrigburnfoot (it is ‘Eildrige Shank’ in 1841).

Eimond (ee-mond) n. James (17th C.) probable name of a resident of Ashkirk Parish (but hard to read). He married Isobel Thomson and their son William was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Tudhope. Steven (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray and their children included William (b.1652) and ‘Andira’ (b.1662). The surname may be the same as that of the earlier ‘John Eamont of Hillhouse’ in Liddesdale.

Ekron (iik-, ek-ron) n. Agnes (b.1788) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. In 1841 she was a grocer on the Loan, probably at about No. 17, and was at about 8–10 in 1851. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He erected a stone in St. Mary’s Cemetery to commemorate his children: Agnes (1814/5–20); Ann (1816/7–20); Agnes (again, 1819/20–23); John, Mary and Eliza, who died in infancy; and James (1828/9–30). Given that all these children died young, it is possible he is the same Andrew as the son of John, who had several surviving children with Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1792) Hawick framework knitter, son of John and Ann Johnstone. His wife was Elizabeth (surname unknown). In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Walter’s Wynd. His children include: Margaret (b.1826/7), who married George Pringle in 1851; Helen (b.1828/9); Mary (b.1831/2), who married Alexander Scott; Agnes (b.1834/5), who may have married Allan Stewart in 1857; and Ann Johnstone (b.1838/9), who was living with her cousin John Hall in 1861 and married Robert B. Wilson in 1862. His daughters Helen and Mary were lodging with Jane Turnbull on the High Street in 1851. Andrew (b.1829) frameworker in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Thomson. He lived at 48 Loan, 7 Back Row and 13 Drumlanrig Square. He married Elizabeth Stewart in Hawick in 1850. Their children include: Jane (b.1851/2); John (b.1856); Margaret (b.1858); James (b.1861); Janet (b.1862); James Stuart (b.1864), who married Nettie E. Blodgett in Michigan in 1895 and died in Indianapolis; Walter (1866–1909), married Grace Thwaites, but had no children; Robert (b.1868), who lived in Philadelphia and Chicago; Elizabeth (1872–1966), who married Archibald Drummond and died in Jedburgh; and Helen (1875–78). Family stories said that James and Robert emigrated to America, with one of them being an opera singer in Boston and the other one having a wooden leg! He was still alive in 1891. Andrew (1894–c.1952) son of John and Jemima Baxter, he was born in Hawick. He changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott, apparently due to some mix-up during WWI (because he deserted or got separated from his unit and needed a new name in order to get back into the army). He married Althea Theadora (‘Dora’) Jones (1895–1973). They had a son, Arthur Frederick ‘Fred’ Scott (b.1920). He probably died in Wales. Ann (b.1790) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. She was a grocer on the Mid Row, recorded there in 1841. She had an illegitimate daughter, Adeline (or Adelina, d.1897) with French prisoner of war Adam Bellom. Apparently she lived with Bellom for several years, but they never married. She appears to have died before 1851. James (1721–87) son of William and Mary Graham. He was a merchant in Hawick, presumably a bookseller, since he is recorded on the subscribers list for the reprinted Buchanan’s History of Scotland (1752, 2 volumes), ordering 13 sets. He was also on the subscriber’s list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), for 12 copies, and listed there as ‘merchant, Hawick’. He is additionally recorded as ‘Messrs James Ekron, Hawick’ when listed as one of the sellers of ‘A Display of Genuine Christianity and Christian Love’ (1784), Caw’s second book published in Hawick: a copy of the book bears the inscription ‘When this you see, Remember me, James Ekron’. He appears to have operated as a bookseller in about the period 1757–84. He owned property in Silver Street and in the Crescent. In 1780 he was one of 6 trustees for the East Bank Meeting House who had a bond with them for erecting the building. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780 and James Black (at Packhouses) in 1781. He was recorded as a merchant in 1784 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for what appears to be a Hume. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was probably owner (and not James Aitkin, as suggested in notes) of a book, ‘The Duty and Advantage of Religious Conferences, Proved from Scripture and Reason’ (1743) by Rev. John Wilson; this book (which survives and is in the Museum collection) passed to his direct descendant, Sir James A.H. Murray, who wrote on 3 pages at the beginning, describing the book’s provenance. He was at Kelso Fair during the great Slitrig flood of 1767 and on returning was surprised to see some of his own goods left lying on the haugh at Menslaws. His house was one of those carried away by the flood waters, his wife escaping just in time by crawling along a ladder laid horizontally to an upper window of a house on the other side of Silver Street, across the rushing water (their house must have therefore been between Silver Street and the river). His bed was found stranded on the Common Haugh after the flood, with the cat still sleeping on it. He may be the ‘Joseph Eckron’ (written in error) whose ‘whole onstead of houses’ were stripped of furniture etc. during the great flood of 1767, and several people helping save items had to be rescued themselves; these houses were close to John Kedie’s house and it said that the damage to them amounted to £1000. He married Isobel Betty Richardson, who was probably daughter of merchant James Richardson and died in 1764. Their children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1746–85), who married merchant Walter Scott in 1765; Agnes (1748–80), who married John Oliver in 1766, was mother of Margaret Oliver who married Charles Scott, and was paternal grandmother of Sir James Murray; and William (1758–60). He had another daughter, who married a Mr. Adams and emigrated to America; she gained his Silver Street property after his death, with the Crescent property going to his daughter, Agnes Oliver. Mary, who married John Thomline in 1772 may also have been his daughter (based on the names of her children). The witnesses in 1746 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and maltman John Moss and in 1758 were James Beattie and George Telfer. He also had young children who died in 1759, 1760 and 1764. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He witnessed baptisms for his daughter and merchant Walter Scott in 1766, 1768 and 1771. He secondly married Margaret Brown in Hawick in 1766; she was traditionally said to be his former maidservant and died in 1802. ‘Mrs Eckron Merch in Hawick’, listed on the 1789 female servant tax roll, was probably his widow; she also paid the same tax in 1790. In 1790 there was a case on his behalf in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill by William Cranstoun formerly in Maxside, now in Clarilaw on Ale, for ‘5 yards Bleu cloth intrist one it for laying out’. Additionally his widow Margaret Brown had cases for non-payment against James Stoddart, tailor in Shielshaughand in 1790, against a servant of Andrew Thomson in Oakwood Mill in 1791 and against John Campbell in Fauldhope, now in Whitehillbrae in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. James ‘The Blast’ (b.1757) son of William and Elizabeth Dobbie. He was said to be a merchant and bookseller in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century; however, it is possible he is being confused here with the man of the same name born a quarter of a century earlier. The origin of his nickname is uncertain, perhaps related to smoking. He was probably a member of the Masons. He was Cornet in 1779 and also wrote some poetry. He married Helen Turnbull (from Kirkton Parish) in Hawick in 1781. They had a daughter Janet (b.1782), possibly the ‘Jane’ who married Benjamin Hooven. He could be the James who is recorded as recently deceased in a letter of 1794 between Hawick men living in Pennsylvania. James (b.1793) South African settler, born in Hawick. He is sometimes said to be son of John and Ann Johnson, but that may be confusion with another James (based on the names of his children, it is possible that he was a son of James ‘The Blast’). He worked as a ploughman. He was in the party of settlers of Robert Pringle (farmer at Blakelaw) who went to South Africa in 1820, and worked as a ploughman. He is mentioned in John (son of Robert) Pringle’s ‘Narrative of a residence in South Africa’ (1834) in connection with a lion hunt. In 1832 he was sentenced to 2 years hard labour for the murder of a ‘Hottentot’ with whom he was living. He firstly married Elizabeth Keen (1796–1870), but they seem to have had no children. He secondly married Mary Ann Moffat (from Gloucestershire) and their children were: James (1835–1916); Margaret (b.1836) and Matthew (b.1837), who died in infancy; William Moffat (b.1838); Janet Margaret (b.1840); John (b.1842); Mary Anne (b.1844); Mathew Charles Linton (1849–1915); and Thomas Edward (1852–1925). James (b.1794) Hawick frameworker, son of John and Ann Johnson. He was living somewhere on the Back Row in 1841 and 1851 and was at 7 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Thomson in Etick in 1821. Their children include: John (b.1822); Elizabeth Anne (b.1824), who married John Rae; Andrew (b.1827); Andrew (again, b.1829); Helen (or ‘Nelly’, b.1831), who was a servant with grocer Adam Turnbull in 1851 and later that year married Alexander Ballantyne; Janet (b.1834), probably the Janet who married John Little in 1866; and Johnson or Johnstone (b.1839), who is said to have emigrated to America and worked as a lady’s maid. A photograph of him exists. Jane (18th C.) recorded in Hawick Parish in 1787 when her daughter Janet was born. Perhaps the same ‘Janet’ had a child who died in Hawick in 1795 and a ‘bastard child’ who died in 1802. It is unclear who her parents were. John (18th C.) waulker, dyer and tenant in Hawick. He was brother of William, but the identity of their parents has not been established. The surname seems to be peculiarly Hawick and has not been found any earlier than the early 18th century; given that the local pronunciation was ‘Aikren’, it seems possible that there was some kind of name change, e.g. from ‘Aiken’. He was ‘John Aicron Tenent’ in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker William Wright in Hawick. He married Jean ‘Dinlap’ (presumably Dunlop) in 1714, this being the first known record of the surname. Their children included: William (1714–80), who married Elizabeth Dobbie; John (b.1715), probably died young; Janet (b.1716); John (again, 1718–1801); Jean (1721–75), who married Robert Tudhope in 1767; Helen (b.1723); and George (b.1725). Witnesses to the 1714 baptism were Robert Henderson and Andrew Turnbull, servants to Rev. Robert Cunningham. Witnesses in 1716 were Bailies William Laing and George Martin, in 1718 were William Laing and flesher George Renwick, in 1721 were William Laing and Robert Renwick, in 1723 were George Martin and John Glendinning and in 1725 were Robert Scott of Falmash and Hugh Somerville. In 1721 he is recorded as ‘John Aikren Tenant in Hawick’. John (1718–1801) mason in Hawick, son of John and Jean Dinlap and uncle of James ‘The Blast’. He may be the John who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. He may also be the carrier in Hawick recorded in a dispute over a bill in Selkirk in 1787. He married Agnes Douglas in 1752. Their children include: John (1754–1816), apparently known as ‘Esau’; Mary; and Agnes (b.1762), who died young. The witnesses in 1762 were William (probably his brother) and John Scott. John (1754–1816) probably son of John and Agnes Douglas. He was said to be known as ‘Esau’ (for reasons that are not clear). He married Ann Johnston (or ‘Johnson’, 1759–1820). Their children include: Janet (b.1782), who died young; Janet (again, b.1784), probably the 66 year old seamstress ‘Jane’ living at Kirkcaldy in 1851, and the seamster living at Kirkbyard in 1841; John (b.1786); Agnes (b.1788), grocer; Ann (b.1790), probably the grocer on the Mid Row recorded on the 1841 census; Andrew (b.1792); James (b.1794), who may have moved to South Africa or have been a weaver in Hawick; Margaret (b.1796), perhaps the Margaret who married Andrew Anderson; Helen (1800–30), who married William Davidson in 1823; and Elizabeth (b.1807), who may have married John Brown in 1835. He may be the ‘John Ekron Junr.’ who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He and his wife are buried at St. Mary’s. John (b.c.1790) army pensioner. He was living on the Loan in 1841, along with Agnes (about 40 years old) and James Oliver (about 15). He is probably the son of John and Ann Johnson, born in Hawick in 1786. John (d.1854) son of James and Margaret Thomson. He was listed as a framework knitter at about 28 High Street in 1851. He may also have helped his aunt as a grocer on the Fore Raw. In 1844 he married Margaret (d.1858), daughter of stock-making Thomas Anderson and Isabella Scott. John (1856–1916) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart, he was a frame-worker who lived on O’Connell Street. In 1881 he was living at 50 O’Connell Street, in 1891 was a stockingsmaker at 17 Loan and later lived at 35 Loan. He firstly married Agnes Carruthers (d.1883) in Hawick in 1875. In 1887 he secondly married Jemima Baxter (1865–1935), but separated from her after the death of their son James. His children were: Mary (b.1875), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (b.1876), who married Andrew Elliot; Andrew (b.1878), who died in infancy; Helen (or ‘Nellie’, 1879–1943), who married twice, had no children, and died in Edinburgh; Jane (b.1881) and John (b.1882), who died in infancy; an unnamed child (b.1883); Jane (b.1887), died in infancy; Andrew (1888–91); James (1890–1906); Margaret (b.1891), died in infancy; Janet (1892–1971), who married Hugh Gilroy and died in Glasgow; Andrew (1894–1952), who changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott and died in Wales; Mary Jane (1897–1913); Isabella (1899–1935), who married Wilson Hogg and died in Hawick; and Jemima (b.1902), who married John Douglas also died in Hawick. Walter (1866–1909) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart. He worked as a lorryman. He married Grace Thwaites, but had no children. He died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, probably brother of John and great-uncle of James ‘The Blast’. Where he came from, or the identity of his parents, have not been established. He firstly married Mary Graham and their children included: James (1721–87); and George (b.1725). In 1726 he secondly married Margaret Douglas and their children included Marion (b.1727), who may be the Mary who married Walter Ballantyne in 1760. Witnesses to the 1721 baptism were shoemaker Robert Allan and Robert Hardie, tenant. The witnesses in 1727 were Bailie Purdom and candlemaker John Scott. William (1714–80) son of John and Jean Dunlop, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1762 for John (likely his brother). He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Dobbie in Hawick and their children include: James (b.1757), ‘The Blast’; plus William (b.1762), Elizabeth (b.1766) and another William (b.1768), who all died young. The witnesses in 1768 were George Swan and Robert Tudhope (also spelled ‘Ackren’, ‘Aicren’, ‘Aicron’, ‘Aikren’, ‘Aikrin’, ‘Eckrom’, ‘Eckron’ and ‘Ekrin’; this family seems to have been almost entirely based in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries; the origin of the name is unknown).

elbi (el-bi) n. an elbow – ‘hei got an elbih in the face frae yin o’ his brothers’.

elbi chair (el-bi-chār) n., arch. an armchair – ‘Frae the wean to the granny in auld elbow chair’ [JJ].

elder (el-dur) n. a lay church officer elected by the local congregation to have official duties in the Presbyterian Church, and who, with the minister, compose the church session. In 1717 the Hawick Parish Session records lists 19 elders, each (mostly in pairs) assigned a specific area to collect monies from; together with elders from the further part of the Parish, plus the Bailie of the Regality, the total number must have been about 2 dozen.

Elder (el-dur) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (d.1836) bookseller, printer and publisher of Peebles. His brother Walter was a bookbinder in Hawick at about the same time. Indeed, he spent some time working in the same trade in Hawick, as indicated by him being listed as ‘bookbinder, Hawick’ in the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible he was the son of John and Mary Brown born in Wilton in 1764 (and that he was thus half-brother of Walter). He is probably the Alexander who in Hawick in 1786 (along with John ‘Senior’, probably his father) witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his brother). He gave Peebles its first lending library, where the young Robert Chambers would borrow books (Chambers later became a successful publisher and anonymously wrote a book in 1844 which contained ideas about the origin of the Earth and life). He also brought the first printing press there in 1814 (later used to produce that town’s first newspaper). He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Oliver of Hawick in 1788 and they had 8 children. His daughter Agnes (b.1811) married Alexander ‘Booky’ Scott from Peebles, who took over the business on the High Street there. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1820–1904) possibly a son of Walter by an earlier marriage. He was one of the last 2 coach drivers between Carlisle and Hawick (along with William Crozier). He started as a postboy at the Tower Hotel in Hawick and was recorded as ‘postillion’ there in 1851. When driving he would dress in a top-coat. He took over the Cross Keys Hotel in Canonbie in about 1860. In his old age he drove a ‘four-in-hand’ from Canonbie to the opening of the new Moss-paul Inn. David (18th C.) gardener at Birthwickbrae in 1794. He was listed as groom at Birthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He married Helen Jardine and their children included Thomas (b.1794) and an unnamed son (b.1798). John (1728–1816) weaver in Hawick. In 1786 he was John ‘Senior’ when (along with Alexander) he witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his son). In 1788 both he and his son John ‘Junr’ witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. He may have witnessed a baptism for Margaret (presumably his daughter) and Alexander Inglis in 1791. He married Jean Stewart (b.1729) in 1769. It seems likely that this was his second marriage and that he had first married Mary Brown in 1756, with children: Mary (b.1757); John (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Alexander (b.1764), publisher in Peebles, and said to be brother to Walter; and Thomas (b.1766). In 1764 this John was living at the Sandbed, in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1760 were schoolmaster William Dyce and shoemaker John Scott and in 1764 were Thomas Scott and Robert Ormiston. His children with Jean Stewart included: Walter (b.1770); Ann (b.1771), who married Robert Henry; and Jane (b.1773). He is probably the John whose unnamed granddaughter died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) bookseller in Hawick, probably the son of John born in Hawick in 1760. He was recorded as a merchant in 1786 when his daughter Janet was baptised, with witnesses John senior (probably his father) and Alexander (probably his brother). In 1788 both he and his father John ‘Senr’ witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. His daughter Peggy died in 1795. He is probably the John who married Margaret Lamb and also had a son Walter (b.1784) in Hawick. Robert (b.1797/8) frame-work knitter, originally from Peebles. He is recorded at about 41 High Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Margaret O., Robert, Susan and John McRae. Turnbull (b.1822/3) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor at Kilknower in Holfkirk Parish in 1841. He married Agnes Tait in 1847 and their children included Margaret, Rachel and John. Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1849) bookbinder in the Fore Row and Howegate in the early 19th century. He was son of John and Jean Stewart. He subscribed to 12 copies of William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His brother Alexander was a bookseller and printer in Peebles (and also subscribed to Wilson’s book). He was the seller for the 1836 edition of James Hogg’s words for ‘ Teribus’. This was printed by John Elder of Edinburgh High Street, who was surely a relative of some sort. He was listed as a bookbinder on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded on the Kirk Wynd, still as a ‘book binder’, aged 70. In 1790 he married Isabel Lamb (d.1831), who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Mary (b.1791), who was 2nd wife of hairdresser James Brisbane; Jean (b.1792); John (1796–1844); Janet (b.1800); Walter (b.1802); Alexander (1804–22); and Ann (1806–31). The witnesses in 1791 were Robert Oliver and James Rae and in 1796 were John (probably his father) and James Hume. Walter (b.1802) son of Walter and Isabelle Lamb. He was a stocking frame-worker, recorded on the Fore Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851, at 69 High Street in 1861 and 11 Teviot Crescent in 1871. In 1835 he married Margaret (1818–1901), daughter of hardresser James Brisbane. Their children include: Walter (b.1835); Christine (b.1837); Isabella (b.1839); Janet (b.1841–65), the first to survive past infancy; James (b.1843); Sarah (b.1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabelle (b.1849); John (b.1851); John (again, b.1853), who married Ellen Turnbull: Mary Ann (1856–63); William Brisbane (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1860). Alexander (b.c.1822), coachman at the Tower Hotel, was possibly a son from an earlier marriage. Walter (1847–1926) son of Walter and Margaret Brisbane, he was born in Hawick. He married Jane Johnstone. Their son William Johnstone was born in Monkton, Ayrshire.

Eldinhope

Eldinhope (el-din-höp) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, on the B709, before the Gordon Arms Hotel, with Eldinhope Knowe to the east. It was a Crown property from 1456, mentioned many times in the exchequer Rolls. It was assigned to Sir Walter Scott in at least the period 1460–67, Alexander Scott in 1469 and Sir David Scott in the period 1475–90, transferring to the Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and remaining with him until at least 1496. In 1499 it was assigned to John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle, with sheep for the King’s flocks there being mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1501 it was again assigned to Walter Scott. It remained Crown property until at least 1510, when it was leased by John Murray and David Pringle. In 1539 William Scott complained that James Stoddart took violent possession of the lands. In 1541 the tenants were Andrew Brydon, John Blackstock, William Tait, John Hislop and Margaret Melroe, paying £92 yearly. The former tower there was built by the Scotts. John Chisholme was in Eldinhope in 1579. The farm later became part of the Buccleuch estates, being mentioned in services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661. Walter Scott was tenant in 1737. Over and Nether Eldinhope were valued at about £900 in 1785, with...
Eldin hopeknow valued at a further £370. Francis Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; he lived to the age of 94 and still travelled to church on a pony when he was 90. It is said that it suffered some of the heaviest losses of sheep during the harsh winter of 1794, around 120 animals. Note that it is easy to confuse with the ‘Aldanecop’ also referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of the late 15th century, this being ‘Auldshope’, whose name became the modern Anneshope in the Ettrick valley (it is ‘Eldanehope’ in 1456, ‘Aldanecop’ in 1468, ‘Eldashop’ in 1469, ‘Eldinhope’ in 1477, ‘Aldanishop’ in 1479, ‘Auldanecop’ in 1480, ‘Aldanhop’ in 1481, ‘Aldanecop’ in 1486, ‘Auldanehop’ and ‘Eldanhoop’ in 1487, ‘Eldanecop’, in 1490 and 1491, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Eldinhop’ in 1499, ‘Eldanecop’ in 1501 and 1507, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1502, ‘Eldin- hop’ in 1539, ‘Eldinhope’ in 1541, ‘Eldinghope’ in 1576, ‘Eldinghop’ in 1581, ‘Elhoip’ in 1634, ‘Eldingshope’ in 1653 and ‘Eldingshope’ in 1661; the origin of the first part may be Old English personal name ‘Aldwine’; ‘Eldin hopeknow’, ‘Mild Eldin hope’ and ‘Over Eldin hope’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey.

elekin (eld-rin) n., arch. a freshwater fish — ‘How out of that pool there we drew many a fine young eldering with the bait!’ [BM1905].

Elec see Elick

Elec the Bellman (e-leek-thu-bel-mawn) n. nickname for Alexander Stainton, immortalised in a poem by William Peffers.

the Election Denner (thu-e-lee-shin-den-nur) n. celebratory dinner of the old and new Town Councils in the 18th and early 19th centuries. It was held during October, and was at the town’s expense up until about 1817.

Election Night (ee-leek-shin-ni’) n. phrase sometimes used for the night of the Pickin.

Election Riot at Hawick (ee-leek-shin-ri-i’-hIk) n. engraving by D.H. Tristam of the supposed riot at Hawick during one of the elections of the 1830s. It appears in Cassell’s ‘Illustrated History of England’ (c.1860). The engraving depicts a pitched battle between a crowd of men on the Auld Brig.

electit (ee-leek-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. elected – ‘...quhilk council and communitie, all in ane vois, electit the said Gilbert Watt, notar, clark for ane yeur to cum ...’ [BR1638].

electricity (e-leek-tri-si’-ee) n. first introduced publicly into Hawick by the Urban Electric Supply Company in 1901. The first electricity in town had been generated using the water wheel under Tower Mill some years earlier, this being constructed by William Melrose and William Elliot used to provide light in Mr. Elliot’s house at Teviot Lodge.

eleven hoors (e-lee-vin-oorz) n., arch. a light meal taken at 11 a.m. (see also ‘le-en hoor’).

eleevin see eleeven elements (e-lu-mintz) n., pl., arch. the bread and wine used at communion – ‘James Gray in Whitta, James Davidson in Newbigging, with James Scott in Branzholm, by reason of their old age to wait upon the Elements’ [PR1718].

the Elephant’s Back (thu-e-lee-fintz-bawk) n. common name for a rock at ‘the Dunk’ from which diving is popular.

elevint (e-le-vint) adj., arch. eleventh – ‘...faithfullie maid and gevin yp be his awne mouth vpoun the eleventh day of Aprile, the zeir of God foirsaid ...’ [SB1574] (cf. eleeventh).

Elffhaugh (elf-hawch) n. former farm in the Rule valley, to the south of Braithwaugh, probably close to Cleuch Head. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Elscheuch’ in 1612 when John Turnbull was tenant there. It is marked on Pont’s manuscript as ‘Elphheuch’ (which has become ‘Elfhaugh’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map) and close to the modern Mackside (although Mackside itself is marked much further to the north). Adam Turnbull was tenant there at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is no obvious incidence of a similar name later (it appears to be ‘Elphnest’ in 1694; it is also marked as ‘Elfeleuch’ on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650).

elf-shot (elf-sho’) adj., arch. said of diseased cattle, with the supposition that they have been bewitched by fairies – ‘...with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies,) she was said to be elf-shot ...’ [EM1820].

Elibank (e-lee-bawn-gek) n. ruined 16th century tower overlooking the Tweed, between Galashiels and Walkerburn. It was home of Sir Gideon Murray from 1594, who married off his daughter ‘Muckle-mou’d Meg’ to William Scott of Harden in 1611. The ballad version of the story was popularised in Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. Sir Patrick Murray (sister of ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) became the 1st Lord of Elibank in the 17th century, and his great-great-grandson was Gen. James, first Governor-General of Canada. A more modern house was built there in the 1840s – ‘But when they arrived on the Elibank green, The yett was shut, and the east grew pale; They slinked away, wi’ the tears i’ their een, To tell to Auld Harden their sorrowfu’ tale’ [ES] (also called ‘Elibank Castle’ and formerly ‘Eliburn’).

Elick (e-lik) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also spelled ‘Elec’).

Eliott (e-li’, e-lei’, el-yi’) n. (see also Elliot) Alexander (1805–83) youngest son of Sir William of Stobs, christened in Cavers Parish. He was a naval storekeeper at Devonport. He was appointed as a trustee of his brother’s Wells and Haddon estates in 1863. He died unmarried. Alexander Boswell (1830–82) 2nd son of Sir William Francis of Stobs. He was christened at Cavers. He was in the Royal Navy for a short period. In 1855 he married Katharine Wigrane, daughter of John Craigie, a builder in Portobello. This was apparently just 5 days after they met, with her being just 16, and the couple eloping to Lamberton Toll Bar near Berwick. With his wife pregnant, neither family approving and him not having a job, he enlisted in the 17th Regiment of Foot and was sent to India, while his wife and son went off to America with his brother-in-law James and settled in Chicago. He later obtained a divorce and secondly married Annabella, daughter of Neil Carmichael. His children were Arthur Boswell (only child with his first wife, who inherited Stobs from his uncle William Francis), Alexander Boswell Vassal (who married Hannah Josephina Kavanagh and settled in Australia), Charles James (who settled in Alaska), and Rawdon Popham Vassal (who married Nellie Thompson and died in Alaska). Archibald of Middlestead (17th C.) 3rd son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens’. He inherited the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings in Ettrick from his father, according to a charter of 1637. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638 (along with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert). In 1662 he was fined £ for supporting the Commonwealth and then his lands were ‘appraised from him’ to pay his debts. There are no records of him after that. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Learmonth of Birkhill. Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (d.c.1683) 2nd son of William of Stobs. He inherited Craigend from his uncle Gilbert. In 1656 he witnessed the resignatio by Edward Lorraine of the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in Rulewater (in favour of William Elliot of the Binks and Harwood) and another contract in which the Lorraines reserved a small piece of land for themselves. He had at least 2 children, Gilbert and John. His son Gilbert was served as heir in 1683 to his lands of Craigend, Deanfoot and Minto. Archibald (1710–59) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He was born at Stobs and baptised in Cavers Parish. He was a merchant in London, being Secretary to Ramsgate Harbour. He married Frances Seer in 1737. He had an only child, Vernon (who was left a legacy by his uncle William).

Sir Arthur Boswell of Stobs (1856–1926) 9th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. Born at Portobello, he was the only son of Alexander Boswell and his first wife Catherine Craigie. He never really knew his father, being taken by his mother to join his uncle James Craigie in Chicago when only a few months old. He returned to Britain to attend school, but his mother’s condition was that he not see his father. He spent the holidays with his aunt Blanche, but also was not allowed to see his uncle Sir William (due to the dispute between his aunt and uncle). After school he moved to Australia, where there were several Eliott relatives. There he purchased a sheep farm, but was forced to return to Britain after several droughts. He then tried dairy farming in the United States. He succeeded his uncle Sir William in 1910, but by then Stobs and Wells had both been sold. He received some compensation for these sales, and invested it in his father-in-law’s business in Burbank, which failed. After difficult years, he made a career as a stockbroker in Boston and then New York. In 1884 he married Lilla, daughter of John Burbank of Boston and had 3 children: Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell, who succeeded; Marie Vera Margaret Emily Boswell, who married Edward Bois Cowles and secondly John Francis Barry and died in the Bahamas; and Beatrice Maud Boswell, who married Frank V. Burton. He died while visiting his son near New York and was brought to Scotland to be buried in Cavers Kirkyard. His wife was also buried there in 1945. Sir Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs and Redheugh (1915–89) 11th Baronet and 28th Chief of the Elliots. He was older son of Sir Gilbert and Flourney Hopkins. Born in New York, he was educated at Harrow and Cambridge, where he studied economics. He joined his father in the City, and became a Member of the London Stock Exchange before WWII. He served in the K.O.S.B. and King’s African Rifles during WWII. After the War he returned to the city, becoming a member of the Stock Exchange Council in 1965 and retiring in 1968. He then spent more time in Scotland. He was therefore able to move the family seat back to Redheugh after many generations. Along with Lady Eliott he started the Eliott Clan Society. He was a member of the Royal Company of Archers. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1978. In 1947 he married Frances Aileen, elder daughter of Lt.-Col. Sir Francis Kennedy McClean (a British flight pioneer). They had a single child, Margaret Frances Boswell.

Charles (1709–56) son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs, he was born in London. He trained as a lawyer. He was a member of the 3rd Provincial Council of Charleston, South Carolina and served as Attorney General for North Carolina for a few months before he died. He is buried at the Episcopal Church, New Bern, Craven County, North Carolina. His gravestone is inscribed ‘An honest lawyer indeed’. Charles (18th C.) son of the 2nd Gilbert of Stanedge. He was Master of a ship in the Lisbon trade. Charles (1800–19) 6th son of Sir William, 4th Baronet of Stobs. He served with the East India Company. He was killed during the siege of the fort at Capaul-droog. Charles Joseph Alexander (1837– ) 12th Baronet of Stobs, distant cousin of the 11th Baronet. He married Wendy Baily in 1959 and had 5 children. Sir Daniel (1798–1872) christened in Cavers, a younger son of Sir Francis Kennedy McClean (a British flight pioneer). They had a single child, Margaret Frances Boswell.

Sir Daniel (1798–1872) christened in Cavers, a younger son of Sir William of Stobs. He was at school at Houghton-le-Spring in Durham, along with his 3 brothers, and he was later at Edinburgh Academy. He joined the East India Company at the age of 19 and sailed to Madras. He showed an aptitude for Indian languages and law. He was appointed deputy Tamil translator to the Madras Government in 1822 and Marāṭhā translator in 1823. In 1838 was appointed as the Madras member of the Indian Law Commission, helping to draw up the Indian codes. By 1848 he was a member of the Council of Madras and in 1850 became President of the Revenue, Marine and College Board of the Madras Government. He returned to Britain in 1853, but returned a year later to be Madras representative of a new supreme legislative council for India, and remained there until 1860. In 1867 he received the order of the Star of India. In 1818 he married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell of the Bengal Army. Their children were William Russell (who became a Major-General and married Jessie McIntosh and Frances Helen Cloete), Henry Manning (also a Major-General, married Jessie Fennell), Edward Frederick (married Rykie Sophia Cloete), George Augustus Robertson, Georgina Mary (married John Hutcheson Fergusson), Caroline Mary (married Col. Charles Colville Young), Emma (married Richard Stuart Palmer), Mary Bethia (married Maj.-Gen. W.C. Russell), Cecilia Wheatley (married Maj.-Gen. Eustace Hill) and Claudine Francis Leonora (married Rev. T.D. Gray). He died at The Boltons, West Brompton, London.

Dora Flournoy nee Hopkins (20th C.) wife of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. She carried out 40 years of research into the family history. Dorothy (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin of Stobs. She was served as heir (along with her sister Esther and niece Jean) in 1607. Shortly afterwards her half-brother Gilbert purchased Stobs, although it took him until 1614 to pay the amount in full and became sole owner of Stobs. She married George Haliburton of Pinnacle before 1608 and had children. Elizabeth (17th C.) daughter of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’. She married John Turnbull of Minto in 1641 (although Turnbull was technically too young), and their son John became Laird of Minto. She long survived her husband and lived at Hillhouse. It is possible she was the ‘Lady Minto’ recorded paying £200 in Southdean Parish on the Land Tax Rolls of 1643.

Ellinor Jane Augusta (1829–34) daughter of Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells. There is a memorial plaque to her in Bedrule Kirk stating that she ‘died after a lingering illness born with the most exemplary patience, aged 4 years 11 months’. Capt. Elliot (1712–45) younger son of Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, brother of John, William, Gilbert, Anne, Charles, Archibald, Gavin and George. He was born at Stobs a few weeks before a major fire there and was christened at Cavers. His first name was spelled like the non-Stobs branches of the family. He served in the Royal Navy, being 3rd Lieutenant on H.M.S. Argyll, then spending some time in the West Indies and in the merchant service. He was a Lieutenant on the St. George in 1742 and a year later was Captain on the H.M.S. Lively, on which he died at sea. He also captained the fireship Aetna, on which his young distant cousin John Elliot (son of Capt. John Elliot and Jean Grieve) served. In his will he left money to his nephew Vernon and nieces and Anne and Eleanor. Esther (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin, 1st Laird of Stobs. In 1607 she and her sister Dorothy, along with their niece Jean, were served heirs to Stobs. Shortly afterwards she sold her share to her half-brother Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’. She married Gilbert Ker of Lochtoun, eldest son of John of Hirsel, and had children with him. Sir Francis of Stobs (d.1791) eldest son of Sir John, he was named after his aunt, Lady Frances de Nassau d’Averquerque, who was wife of Col. William Elliot of Wells, and a close friend of his parents. When young he served with the 3rd Regiment of Foot Guards. He was still ‘younger’ in 1761, when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He succeeded in 1768 as the 5th Baronet, having already been favoured by his grandfather, who changed his will to leave all his personal estate to him (under the condition that he lived continuously at Stobs). He was known locally as ‘Frankie o the Stobs’ and was said not to have kept up his position in society and to have made a poor marriage (i.e. he mixed with common people!). He planned the new mansion at Stobs, but died before building work commenced. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 saddle or carriage horses in 1785, then 3 or 4 in the years 1786–91. He was also taxed for having a 4-wheeled carriage in the years 1785–91 and also for having 2 male servants from 1778–91 and 2 female servants in the period 1785–91. He was said to be in ill-health in 1788 when listed on the roll of voters in Roxburghshire. In 1788 his lands of Stobs and Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, together with teinds acquired from Douglas of Cavers, were valued at about £3000; at the same time his lands in Kirkton Parish (including Acreknowe, Barnes, Birkwood, Dodburn, Horseliee, Newton, Smithfieldhaugh, Turn, Whitehillbrae, Wiminnington and Wiminningtonrig) were valued at £1846 13s 4d, and in Hobkirk Parish he held Hallrule, Billerwell and part of Hawthornside valued at £2355 16s 8d. It is unclear where he lived after inheriting the Stobs estates, since the mansion has burned down. However, he may have been involved with plans for a new house before he died. He was probably also the Eliott of Stobs who was one of the trustees for the Langlands estate during its last years. He was said to have been the only heritor who did not share in the spoils of the Division of Hawick’s Common. In Edinburgh in 1767 he married Euphan (or Euphemia) Dickson (or Dixon), daughter of the Galashiels piper. They had 4 children: William (b.1767), who succeeded; Catp. John (d.1795), who died at sea; Anne (b.1771), who was baptised at Cavers; and Mary (d.1826), who married a Mr. Guy. He had a stroke in 1784 (after dining at Sinton with James Grieve of Branzholm Park, Gilbert Chisholme, and Mr. Riddell) and never fully recovered. Francis Willoughby (1832–82) younger son of Gilbert, who was Speaker of the Queensland Parliament. He was born in Scotland, and baptised in Melrose Parish. He emigrated to Australia when he was 7 years old. He married Sarah Jane Richards and they had 6 sons and 2 daughters. Gavin or ‘Gawain’, ‘Gawin’, etc. (d.1606/7) Laird of Stobs, also ‘of Bailielee’ and ‘of Horsleyhill’. He was probably the 5th son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill (with his 2nd wife) and was descended from the Ellitis of Redheugh. It is sometimes claimed incorrectly that he was a son of William Elliot of Larriston and Mary Scott (daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch). He gained Bailielee after the death of his brother Andrew in 1563/4 and execution of his brother Robert in 1564. He was acquitted of any involvement in the 1564 murder of David Scott of Hассendean, and gained the escheat of his 3 relatives who were executed for the crime. He is probably the ‘Gawin Elliott in Skelfhill’ recorded in 1569 when he signed a bond of security in Hawick for his tenants, with the ‘young Laird of Greneheid’ (probably a Ker) acting as surety for him; he had 9 tenants at that time, including on farms at Skelfhill and Priesthaugh. In 1569 he was managing the lands of Skelfhill, Peeblrae and Penagushope for the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson) when he signed the ‘Band of Teviodale’ promising the Regent Moray to suppress rebels. He was ‘of Skelfhill’ when he was one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Also in 1569 he was ‘Gawin Elliot of Skelfhill’ when there was an order from the Privy Council that he should enter into the Regent’s custody on 8 days warning, wherever he should be. Also in 1569 he was surety for 9 men, who were presumably his tenants. His pleige in 1569 was ‘young Greneheid’ and his son (actually step-son) Robert promised to enter if his father required it. He was sold Horsleyhill by his nephew William in 1569, but it seems that young William had also sold the same lands to his brother William, who won the court case to keep them in 1573/4. In 1573 a complaint is recorded against him before the Privy Council (when he was listed as brother of William of Horsleyhill); William Douglas of Cavers complained that he had no right to occupy his lands of Caveling. He is listed as ‘of Bailielee’ in 1573, when, along with his wife Jean Scott, he complained that his servant James Storie was attacked on his newly purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton; the attackers were Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton (they were step sons of Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, who was also from the Horsleyhill Elliots). Later in 1573 Margaret Turnbull and Walter Scott promised not to harm him, his wife, their children and servants. In 1575 he is probably the Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill who was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He is ‘in Skelfhill’ in 1575/6 when he complained that he was owed the ‘mails’ for his steading of Baillielee. He is probably the Gavin who Walter Scott found surety not to molest in 1576. In 1581 he was ‘of Baillielie’ when he James McDougall of Makerstoun gave sasine of an annual rent in Makerstoun to him and his wife Janet Scott. In 1581 he was witness to the sasine whereby Gavin Gledstains inherited the land of Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains of Stobs. He was first to gain the lands at Stobs, purchasing them before 1584 from Gavin Gledstains of Stobs. Thereafter he was referred to as being ‘of Stobs’. In 1584/5 he was ‘Gawin Elliot of the Stobbis’ when listed among the Border Lairds who had to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. His son may have been Gilbert, ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’, although information about these early generations are unclear (and there are claims that they were entirely unrelated). In 1592 he was a tutor to William of Horsleyhill, his grand-nephew (although he had to fight a court case to win this right over William’s father’s half-brother, also William). There is a bond of 1594/5 in which James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledges that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw shall not harm him or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; presumably there was a feud at the time between the two families. He is probably the Gavin among the Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the ‘Gawen Elliot who said he was Buccleuch’s deity’ recorded in an English letter in 1597 giving excuses for not delivering up Scottish prisoners. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present discords of the Bourdours’. Also in 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1603 he is on a long list of local landowners to whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) issued a ‘summons of removing’ to vacate their lands. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott, sister of Buccleuch (but it is unclear which one) and widow of Robert of Redheugh; it has been suggested that the marriage was part of attempts to end the feud between the Elliots and Scotts in the 1560s. His surviving children were: Jean, who married Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston, and pre-deceased her father; Dorothy, who married George Haliburton of Pinnacle; and Esther, who married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour. His wife brought him 5 step-sons, including the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (who acted as surety for him on several occasions). Having no sons of his own, he appointed his stepson Gilbert along with Gilbert Ker of Lochtour (his son-in-law) as executors, shortly before his death, and they were also appointed as factors and attorneys by his widow in 1608. When he died he held no fewer than 19 farms (which he had run with his stepson Gilbert’s help). His daughters Dorothy, and Esther and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford inherited Stobs in 1607. There was another service of heirs in 1619, to Dorothy and Esther and also his great-grandson Robert, with a further service to these 3 in 1621. Gavin or ‘Gawin’ (c.1625–bef. 1678) of Grange, ancestor of the family of Midlem Mill, and also of the Elliots of Minto. He was probably born at Stobs, 4th son of ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’. He was ‘of Grange’ in 1640 when he and his wife had a charter of North Prieston and Sunderland Hall. He is recorded in 1643 being in possession of Midlem Mill as well as North Prieston in Bowden Parish and part of Grange in Ancrum Parish (valued at £260). He was apparently a royalist, his actions on behalf of the King in 1645 and 1646 were enough to grant his son Gilbert remission in 1685 for being involved in the Argyll rising. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He was appointed Commissioner of Excise in 1661 and was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663. He settled Midlem on his son Robert in 1653, followed by ‘Graystainhauch’ in 1671. He also appears to have sold Grange before he died. He paid tax for Midlem on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He firstly married Mary Bennett, probably in Jedburgh (and she died without children); given the connection between the Bennetts of Chester and the lands of Grange, his first wife was probably from that family. In 1646 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Hay of Haystoun, Principal Clerk of Sessions. His sons were Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Gilbert Elliot, the first Lord Minto (note the change of surname spelling). However, these early generations are somewhat uncertain, and so the exact connection between the Eliotts of Stobs and the Elliots of Minto may never be known. His eldest daughter was Margaret, who was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. Gavin (17th C.) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of William of Stobs. He had a will registered in 1684. He married Jean Nicolson (perhaps related to his sister-in-law, Magdelen Nicolson), receiving a dowry of £20,000 Scots. She transferred all her effect to him in a document of 1687 in which their son Gavin is mentioned. He may have earlier married Barbara Creighton. Along with his nephew Gilbert of Stonedge, he had a bond with John Turnbull in 1691. Gavin (b.1713) younger son of Sir William of Stobs. Like several of his brothers he served in the East India Company. He captained a large trading ship. He died in India before 1756. Gen. George Augustus (1717–90) later Lord Heathfield and Baron Gibraltar, he was 9th son of the 3rd Baronet of Stobs, Sir Gilbert. He was born at Wells House where the family were living after Stobs House burned down (although there is also a tradition that he was born while his parents were visiting their farm at Hallrule). He was educated by private tutor at Stobs, then in Leyden and at the École Royale du génie militaire in Picardy. He returned to Scotland at the age of 18 and obtained his warrant at Woolwich in 1739. He worked his way through the ranks in different regiments and was wounded at the Battle of Dettingen in Germany, serving with the Horse Grenadier Guards. In 1759 he left to raise a new regiment called the 15th or Light Regiment of Dragoons, commonly called ‘Elliot’s Horse’. He was well known for strict discipline among his troops. They fought in the War of Austrian Succession, the Seven Years’ War and the War of American Independence. He was involved in the capture of Havana in 1762, the spoils from which meant that he could purchase the estate of Bailey Park in Heathfield Parish, Eastbourne in 1766. He spent about a decade back in Britain during times of peace. However, he is probably best known for his stint as Commander of Gibraltar, successfully defending the rock against a 3½ year siege by the Spanish. After the victory he was made a Knight Bachelor by George III, and in 1787 was made Lord Heathfield, Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar. He retired to London, recovering from a stroke. However, he asked to be reappointed as Governor of Gibraltar, essentially desiring to end his days there, but died when visiting Aachen (now in Germany) on the way. He was said to have been extremely disciplined, setting an example for the men on Gibraltar, where he was ‘perhaps, the most abstemious man of the age. His food is vegetarian and he drinks water. He never sleeps more than four hours at a time . . . He has so inured himself to habits of hardness that the things that are difficult and painful to other men are to him daily practice’. Robert Burns was referring to him when he wrote ‘Yet let my country need me, with Elliot to head me, I’d clatter on my stumps at the sound of a drum’. He married Anne Pollexfen Drake, a distant relative of Sir Francis Drake, and she died in 1772. Their children were: Francis Augustus (1750–1813), 2nd and last Lord Heathfield; and Anne Pollexfen, who married John Trayton Fuller of Brightling, Sussex. He built a mansion on the Heathfield estate, called Ashdown House, designed by Benjamin Latrobe, which became a boys’ school. The Museum has one of his walking sticks, presented by Thomas Turnbull in 1856. There is a portrait of him by Joshua Reynolds in the National Gallery and he is depicted in the huge painting ‘The Defeat of the Floating Batteries at Gibraltar’, which is the centrepiece of the London Guildhall Gallery – ‘Brave Elliot, as you all well know, Gibraltar’s rock protected: And well he beat the Spanish foe, Tho’ by a Duke directed. A scene like this you soon will see In Roxburghshire repeated: And Dukes and Dons again will be By Elliot’s name defeated’ [T]. George Augustus (1799–1872) 5th son of Sir William of Stobs, he was born in Cavers Parish. He became an Admiral. He married Alice Anne, daughter of Thomas Jeffrey of Halifax, Nova Scotia. He secondly married Harriett Sophia West, daughter of the Admiral of the Fleet. His children were: George Augustus (1838–84), a Major, who married Helen Jane Gallen and Mary Anna Crampton; and Francis John Jeffrey (1844–1903), Naval Captain, who married Florence Caroline Schmidt. He had descendants in South Africa. Gideon (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Haliburton and their children baptised in Hawick were: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); and Simon (b.1722). Gilbert of Stobs and of Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Gartins’ (d.1634). From his seal it seems clear he was directly related to the Elliots of Redheugh. His parentage is uncertain, some accounts (e.g. Scott of Satchells) saying he was the son of Elliot of Larriston and a Scott of Buccleuch, while a Liddesdale tradition states that he was an illegitimate child of William (or Robert) Elliot of Larriston (or Redheugh) with Maggie (or Helen) Kidd. However, it seems that he was a younger son of Robert, the 16th Chief and Jean, and step-son of Gavin of Stobs (who was the 2nd husband of Jean Scott). He helped Gavin run his farms and shortly before his death in 1606/7 was appointed as one of his executors and trustees. There are many variants on his nickname (‘Gowden’, ‘Garties’, ‘Garters’, etc.), which presumably arose from his choice of colour of device for keeping his socks up! He may be the Gilbert who, along with several other Elliots, signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the ‘Gebbe Elliot his brother’, named after Robert, chief of the Elliots in a letter written by English Border officials in 1583. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596 and may have acted as a hostage for one of the Scotts after they were captured after a raid on Gilsland in 1597. He is probably the ‘Gybb Elwood alias Robes Gibb’ who, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden, met with Englishmen a few days before to plan details of the raid; if this was him, then it would verify that he was a son of Robert. He may be the Gilbert of ‘Hardlisdale’ (possibly Horsleyhill) who was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England in 1599.

Elliott

In 1600 he gained the lands of ‘Elinburn, Schawis’ alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest’ from William Cranston (as registered in 1608). He is probably the ‘Gilbert Elliot of Horsliehill’ coming after Gavin of Stobs in the list of local men served a ‘summons of removing’ by the Baron of Hassendean in 1603; and he may be the Gilbert of ‘Horsliehill’ who was on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He was clearly a man of local importance and wealth, since in 1607 he bought Stobs from the heirs of Gavin Elliot (probably his step-father), paying off the full amount of 15,000 merks and being formally infested by the superior Sir John Cranston of that ilk in 1614. In 1607 he purchased Baxtonlee from John Home, as well as ‘Carlinghall, Lailsell, Brounishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill’ from Hector Turnbull of Staneedge. In 1608 he purchased ‘Danzeltoun’ from James MacDowgall of Makerston. In 1609 he purchased ‘Harwood in Fainmileyes and Stenletch’ from Hector Turnbull. In 1610 he was recorded as ‘of Horsliehill’ when he stood as cautioner for Walter Scott of Harden and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, George his son, Thomas Scott, called of Ormiston, and his brother Alexander. Also in 1610 he complained to the Privy Council that Will Scott of Northhouse and his brother Hob ‘assaulted him in the town of Hawick with drawn swords, and would have slain him but for his own better defence and help of certain inhabitants of the said town’; this was presumably related to a dispute over land, with the same William Scott being accused in 1608 of attacking Stobs (just before he took over ownership), threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted. In 1611 he purchased lands in Ettrick from his son-in-law Gilbert Ker of Lochtour and bought further lands from him in 1628. In 1616 he bought the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Horsleyhill from the Earl of Home; in 1630, along with his eldest son William, he resigned the lands on receipt of the agreed 8,000 merks from James, Earl of Home. In 1617 he (and his son Gilbert) had a ‘wadset’ with John Turnbull of Barnhills and purchased Wester Barnhills from Turnbull in 1618. Also in 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. In 1620 he resigned the reversion on half of Glenkerry and Midgehope to Walter Scott of Tushielaw. In 1622 he was fined for not being on a jury in Edinburgh. Also in 1620 he purchased Corriesike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig from Douglas of Cavers. In 1621 he had a charter for Hanging-side and he also purchased the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded in the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 as having some sheep stolen from his land at Kershope in 1621 and again in 1623. And in 1623 William Wilson (of Carlisle) was hanged after being found guilty of stealing 6 sheep and 13 goats from his lands at Stobs and Teviothead, while Adam Turnbull, miller in Harts-garth, was acquitted of stealing cows from his lands of ‘Leisburne’. Also in 1623 he was on the commission (representing Roxburghshire) to discuss the export of Scottish wool to England. He is supposed to have been a great hunter of deer, and at one point angered King James by hunting on his land. He was probably the ‘Sir Gilbert’ mentioned in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, who captured William Henderson. In 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s for Roxburghshire. In 1628 he received the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings (in Et-trick), in 1630 he gained the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton and in 1632 he received a charter of the lands of 'Town o Rule' and was involved in a 'wadset' for the lands of Harwood (although this may have been another Gilbert). Also in 1632, he is recorded as owner of the lands of 'the Hill, Streuchehill alias Stitchel-hill, Laidhop and Quithop' (probably Laws Hill, Stitchel Hill, Laidlehope and Whitrope) in Lidddesdale. He is sometimes referred to as the earliest ancestor of the Eliotts of Stobs, although the family history around this time is uncertain (and his relationship to the previous Gavin of Stobs is unclear). He married Margaret Scott ('Maggy Fendy'), and had 11 children. His wife's parents were 'Auld Wat' of Harden and Margaret Scott,
'the Flower of Yarrow'. A story is told about how he stayed under his father-in-law's roof after his marriage, with Auld Wat making the condition for his board being the plunder of the first harvest moon. His children were: William (d.1654), who succeeded him; Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680); Archibald of Middlestead; Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill, father of the 1st Lord Minto; John (d.1639), advocate in Edinburgh; James (d.bef. 1661), married Margaret Elliot of Redheugh, heiress of Larriston; Elizabeth, married John Turnbull of Minto; Jean, mar-rried Robert Pringle of Blindlee; Margaret, mar-rried Andrew Scott of Fawside; Esther, married Andrew Ker, ancestor of the Scott-Plummers of Sunderland Hall; and Anne, married Andrew Bell of Colross, Kelso. He is also said to have had an illegitimate daughter who married Simon Elliot of Binks. His wife was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish in 1643; she may also have been the 'Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill' who was owner of lands in Horsleyhill Parish in 1643. Since he is said to have died in 1634, he is probably not the 'G. Elliot of Stobbes' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638; this was more likely to be his son Gavin, who signed it along with his brothers Gilbert of Craigend and Archibald of Middlestead. Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680) 2nd son of 'Gibbie wi' the Golden Gartins'. In earlier records he was Laird of Hartshaugh. He is mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records (along with 'Archie Elliot of Bowholme') as cautioner for 'Will Elliot of Hi-esches'. In 1630 he was witness to his father Gilbert and brother William redeeming the lands of Hassendean and Horsleyhill for payment from James, Earl of Home. A contract of 1632 (between Rev. William Weir, Francis Hamilton and Edward Lorraine) records that he was given certain lands of Harwood. He held a 'wadset' from Edward Lorraine in 1633 in exchange for the lands of Tythelouse. And in 1638 he had an agreement with William, son of Simon Elliot of the Binks over teinds of Harwood and Tythelouse. In 1637 he witnessed a deed of Robert of Redheugh to his dughter and son-in-law. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. Both he and his wife were described as 'zealous Presbyterians'.
There is a crown charter of 1638 in the name of him and his wife for the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, and where he is described as 'of Har-tisheneuch'. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of land in Minto Parish (specifically Craigend and Deanfoot), valued at £660 and land in Abbot-rule Parish, valued at £65 (this probably being part of Hartshaugh). In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644 and 1649. In 1649 he gave a discharge of 52 merks Scots to William Elliot of Harwood, as the part owed to him for the lands of Harwood, Tythelouse and Tythelouselield. He was recorded in a document relating to the lands of Appotside in 1656. He may be the Gilbert who in 1661 witnessed a baptism for Archibald (perhaps his brother) in Ashkirk Parish. He was fi ned £1200 in 1662, after the Restoration. He paid tax on £660 in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 and 1678 in Minto Parish. He may also be the Gilbert whose land of 'Killnow' in Hobkirk Parish was valued at £80 in 1678. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire to raise money for the King. He married Alison Ker, but died without issue. He was succeeded in the lands of Craigend by Archibald, 2nd son of his brother William. His wife, Lady Craigend leased the lands to Edinburgh 'writer' Thomas Porteous in 1686; she is mentioned by Rev. John Livingstone of Ancrum as one of the Covenant-ter supporters in Teviotdale. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (d.c.1683) eldest son of William of Stobs and grandson of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins'.
In 1648 he was 'fier thairof' listed after his father on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the Borders. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire along with his father. He was an ardent royalist and served in the army, commanding a troop in Sir Walter Scott of Whit-sdale's regiment of horse. In 1650 he was named (along with his father and several Scotts) as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis. In 1651, along with his father, he bought Stonedge and Woollee (later Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun, his brother-in-law. However, due to Cranstoun’s imprisonment, he did not claim the properties until 1659. He was Sir Gilbert ‘fiar of Stobbis’ who witnessed contracts relating to Appotside in 1654 and 1656. He succeeded his father in 1654, and immediately had to contend with the fine of £1000 sterling imposed by Cronwell on royalist supporters. In 1655 he sold Kirkton to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1656 he was the superior of the lands who confirmed the charters of William Elliot of Harwood for Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. In 1657 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall, as well as ‘Porthheid’, ‘Horslie’, ‘Turie’, ‘Arkendknow’, Winningtonrig, Over and Nether ‘Swynsteid’, Over and Nether Dodburn, Birkwood, Birkwoodhead, ‘Bromsydbrae’, ‘Bromsyke’, ‘Huntshill’, ‘Abbotis-aiker’, Baxtonlees, ‘Ellinburne’, Shaws, Middlestead, ‘Gildhou’s and Bailielee. He was one of the trustees for Mary Scott of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1658 he was among 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1659 he sold Peel (or Baxtonlees) to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside and his son John. Also in 1659 he had a charter of Over and Nether Wells and Macksidshaw. In 1660, after the restoration of the monarchy, he was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.P.s.) for Roxburghshire, and reappointed in 1669, serving until 1674. In 1662 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), an appointment that was renewed ten years later. He was involved in a libel action with Robert Scott of Harwood in 1663. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was still one of her curators at that time. He was reappointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663, and nominated as the convener for Roxburghshire. According to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 his rentals in amounted to £10,226 13s 4d, including lands in Hobkirk, Cavers, Kirkton, Castleton and Abbotrule Parishes; this also included £666 13s 4d from his mother’s rentals. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651 on Largo sands, and was made 1st Baronet (of Nova Scotia) in 1666. In 1671 he had the lands of Stonedge separated from the Barony of Hallrule, so that he could give it to the eldest of his 2nd family. In 1673 he succeeded his cousin Robert the 17th of Redheugh as Chief of the Elliots. He is probably the Gilbert ‘of woolie’ recorded being taxed for £1000 in Southdean Parish in 1678. He married first Isabella (or Isobel) Cranstoun (daughter of James, Master of Cranstoun and Lady Elizabeth Stewart, who was daughter of the Earl of Bothwell) and secondly in 1661 Magdalen (or Magdaline), daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. He had 10 children, including: Sir William, who succeeded him (and was the 2nd born son); James, recorded in 1679; John, excise collector, still alive in 1704; Elizabeth (d.1662), buried in Greyfriars Cemetery; Esther, who married William Douglas of Morton; Thomas (d.1671), who would have inherited Wolfelee and Stonedge, but died young; Gilbert (1669–1706), eldest surviving son of his 2nd marriage, to whom he gave the estate of Stonedge; another William (d.1699), merchant of Edinburgh and later of London, who married a daughter of Sir George Hume; Janet (d.1694); and Magdalene (d.1739), who married John Pringle of Stichel. There seems to be some confusion over the year of his death, but he certainly signed a bond of provision for his wife and children in April 1677. And his son Sir William was served as his heir in 1692, perhaps a while after his death. His widow occupied old Wolfelee House, until that fell into disrepair, afterwards moving to Hobsburn. Gilbert of Craignend and Deanfoot (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was a grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ and son of Archibald (and hence cousin of the 1st Baronet of Stobs). He may be partly confused with Gilbert of Craignend and Hartshaugh, who was probably his uncle, and he is also easy to confuse with the later Gilbert of Minto. In 1683 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Craignend, Deanfield and Minto, as well as ‘Grassland’, Ladyland, ‘Viccars land’ in Hobkirk Parish, Wester Swanshiel and Clerksbank. He inherited the lands of Craignend and Deanfoot from his father, but in 1687 sold the land to Lord Tarras. He was already deceased by 1696 when his brother John was married in Edinburgh. Gilbert of Stanedge (1669–1705) eldest surviving son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife, Magdalen Nicolson. He was served heir to his brother Thomas in 1671 and succeeded to the Stanedge lands in 1682, while still a minor. The lands had been separated from the Barony of Hallrule in 1671 and originally disposed to his brother Thomas, who died shortly afterwards. As part of the arrangements for his inheritance he had to provide the sum of 20,000 for his 3 younger siblings. During his minority his 'curators' were his mother Lady Stobs, William Elliot of Grange (his uncle), Gavin Elliot in Dalkeith and John Eliott (brother of Sir William of Stobs, and his half-brother). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hob Kirk Parish; he was also 'of Stenhouse-edge' when listed as owner of Woollee in Southdean Patish. His 'brother-german' William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691. He became first Laird of Stonedge and also of Woollee in 1671, the lands being given by his father after an older brother died. He witnessed the marriage contract of the daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. A sasine of 1693 shows him in a bond with Sir John Pringle of Stichell over the lands of Fairnieles, Unthank, Hova, Hobsburn, Snipe and Little Gledstains. That year he also had a bond with Patrick Johnston, Edinburgh merchant and had an action raised against him and his curators by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' (Gervald perhaps) for non-payment. This was followed by a letter of 'homing' against him and Walter Scott of Wauchope by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' in 1695. Henry Elliot of Harwood appears to have paid off several of his debts about 1694, so it is clear he was in financial difficulties. In 1694 he sold the 3 eastern quarters of Fairnieles (part of the Harwood estate) to Henry Elliot of Harwood. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. From 1698 he started on extensive alterations to Woollee, to turn the tower into a home; however, this placed him further into debt. A stone formerly built into the house (but later destroyed) was inscribed 'D.M.E. G.E. E.S.' In 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1693 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Scott of Harwood-on-Teviot. Their children were: Magdalen (b.1694), who married Robert Ainslie; Gilbert (b.1695), who succeeded; Walter (b.1696), unmarried; Christian (b.1697), who married a Mr. Dawson, a Kelso surgeon; Helen (b.1698), who married John Haswell, Provost of Jedburgh; Elizabeth (b.1699), who married a Mr. Ogilvie of Ayrshire; William (b.1701), unmarried; John, also unmarried; Robert (b.1704), who became an apprentice in 1721 and died unmarried; Isobel (b.1705), who married Alexander Jerdon of Newcastle; and Margaret (b.1706), who married John Angus, an Edinburgh lawyer. He died suddenly aged 37, leaving a large family of children. His widow stayed in Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) after his death and married James Campbell, minister at Legerwood. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (c.1680–1764) 3rd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William. He was served heir to his father in 1699. Soon after getting married he moved from London to Edinburgh, where his house was on the north side of the High Street at the top of Trunks Close (and was demolished in 1873); this was in the Canongate, where several other Roxburghshire families lived. In 1704 he was among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also lived at Stobs, but resided at Wells for a few years after Stobs House was burned down in 1712. It is possible he was the 'Gilbert Elliot of Midlamih younger' (the family having previously held Midlem Mill) listed in 1708 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 by right of his father Sir William. Following the rebellion of 1715 he bought up the 'wadsets' of Adam Turnbull of Denesyde (who had been a Jacobite supporter) and forced him to leave, thereby gaining a local reputation as a high-handed Laird. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1708–15 and again 1726–27 (taking over from his distant cousin Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in a bye-election. In 1718 he drew up a bond of entail (at the insistence of his father-in-law), ensuring that none of the estate (except for Haddon) could be sold off; despite the best of intentions, this agreement led to financial trouble for later generations. After 1723 the family began to regularly spell their name with the double 't' and single 'i'. In 1722 a letter was sent to Winningtonrig, warning his tenants there not to pasture their animals on Hawick Common, and in 1723 one of the Hawick Bailies was paid for 'taking instruments' against him. In 1725 he gave the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414, to his son John, retaining the other £1939. In 1726, following a court meeting in Jedburgh, the drinking party he was with discussed the recent election (and particularly who did not vote for him) and he got into an argument with Col. Stewart of Stewartfield (now Hartrigge) in the Black Bull in Jedburgh and stabbed him to death with his sword. He apparently sobered up in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard, hid out in Wauchope Forest and fled by boat to to Holland. He was declared an outlaw, but was later pardoned and allowed to return, partly through the influence of Lord Minto and his father-in-law, William Elliot. The sword that he had used later came into the possession of the Marquess of Lothian. It is said that he led a sober and quiet life after his return. He added the farms of Lyniecleuch and Penchrise to the family estates. The Bailies and Council of Hawick complained about his tenants' encroachment onto the Common in a notorial instrument of 1734. On the other hand, in 1736 he applied to the Board of Trade for manufactures for a grant of £40 to purchase some looms for the manufacture of coarse tarred wool, which was probably a significant moment in the development of Hawick as a knitwear centre. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He leased Peelbraehope from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. In 1750, after the death of Gilbert Elliot, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston, he arranged for the education at Stobs of Robert's grandson, William (who would later buy back Larriston and become a Major-General). In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Tandlaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Shortly before his death he changed his will to favour his grandson Francis over his eldest son John, stipulating that Francis should live constantly at Stobs. In London in 1702 he married Eleanor (or Eleanora), daughter of William Elliot, who was a tailor in London (and later of Wells), and was a distant cousin from the Brugh branch of the family. She died in 1728 and it is unclear if he also married another Eleanor later. He had 11 children: William (1703–05), who died in infancy; Gilbert (1704–06), who also died in infancy; Sir John (b.1705), who succeeded him; another William (b.1706), who became a merchant with the East India Company; Gilbert (b.1707), also with the East India Company; Anne or Eleanor (b.1708), the only daughter, who probably died young; Charles (1709–56), who became Attorney General of North Carolina; Archibald (1710–59), who was born at Stobs and became a London merchant, being secretary to Ramsgate Harbour; Elliot (1712–45), who was born at Stobs and became a Captain in the Royal Navy; Gavin (b.1713), who was born at Wells and became Captain of a ship in the East India Company; and George Augustus (1717–90), who was born at Wells and became Lord Heathfield. His wife's dowry was said to be £15,000, which was a fortune at the time. He bestowed on her the lands of Langside, Shankend and Hawthornsie, and the rentals from Penchrise. Gilbert of Stanedge and Howa (1695–1727) son of Gilbert, he was the 2nd (and last) Elliott Laird of Stonedge and also owned Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) as well as several neighbouring farms, all of which were part of the Stonedge lands. He was said to have been a delicate child who was mainly kept at home. He succeeded at age 11, to an estate that was heavily in debt, and so the management was in the hands of his curators. In 1718 he sold Stonedge and Howa to Adam Scott, tenant of Wauchope, but retaining lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1722 he succeeded to his uncle's lands of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee). He died while still in debt, but arranged a Deed of Provision for his younger children. In 1715 he married Cecily (or Cecilia), daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, having known her for many years. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married William Kerr of Gateshaw, Town Clerk of Kelso; Gilbert, who married Margaret Ainslie and was designated 'of Otterburn'; and Charles, who was a merchant Captain in the Lisbon trade. Gilbert (1707–bef. 56) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. He was born at the family home at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He served with the East India Company, serving for a while on the Heathcote. He died unmarried in India. Gilbert of Otterburn and Wells (1717–1801) eldest son of Gilbert of Stonedge. While a minor his ‘tutor’ was William Kerr of Abbotrule. He trained as a surgeon and in 1739 became surgeon to the regiment raised by his cousin Gen. George Augustus Elliott (later Lord Heathfield), who was born in the same Parish in the same year. He received money after the death of his uncle William and purchased Otterburn estate from Thomas Moir; however, he held Otterburn for only a few years, selling it in 1765. After retiring from the army he served as factor of Wells for his distant relative William Elliot, taking over from Archibald Jerdan, probably in the late 1760s. Sometime before leaving the country for the last time Lord Heathfield entrusted him with the key of the main gate of Gibraltar, and it later passed to his nephew when he retired. A great admirer of James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), he acquired the armchair the poet used when composing the ‘Castle of Indolence’, said to have been sent to him from London by the Liddesdale-born Dr. John Armstrong). In 1787 he invited Robert Burns to dine at Wells (described in Burns diary as breakfast) during the poet’s Border Tour; he insisted that Burns sit in the chair, making such a fuss over it that Burns grew confused, the situation became very awkward and the whole visit was not the great success that he had planned. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Otterburn’ in Morebattle Parish, valued at £224 13s 4d (and the teinds valued at £40). He was ‘in Walls’ in the period 1785–98 when taxed for having a carriage. He was also taxed for having 1 or 2 male servants in the period 1785–97, and a female servant in 1785–90. He was ‘in Walls’ on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 carriage horses; he is probably also the Gilbert recorded paying the horse tax at Stonedge in 1791. He is recorded in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Gilbert Elliot Esq. at Wells’, when he owned 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid tax on 2 dogs in 1797. In 1764 he married Margaret, daughter of Jedburgh Bailie and apothecary William Ainslie. He died without issue and the male line of Eliott of Stanedge therefore became extinct. Gilbert (b.1707) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father’s house at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company, like his brother William. He died before 1756, unmarried. Gilbert (1796–1871) 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was baptised in Cavers Parish and schooled at Houghton-le-Spring. In 1812 he became a ‘gentleman-cadet’ in the Royal Corps of Artillery and served in the Peninsular War in 1815 just after Waterloo, leaving as 1st Lieutenant in 1821. He then returned to Scotland and stayed with his mother at Wells (which his elder brother William had inherited). He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1822, but resigned in 1834 along with other Whig supporters. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1830 he married Isabella Lucy, daughter of Rev. Robert Elliot of Wheldrake (son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, 5th Baronet of Minto), after meeting her the year before when she was visiting Weens; the couple were married at Minto. In 1839, along with his brother-in-law Dr. Grant of Jedburgh, he emigrated to Australia. There he prospered, and was appointed Police Magistrate in Parramatta, then moved to Wide Bay (north of Brisbane), where he bought a sheep station called ‘Yenda’. He became Member of Parliament for Wide Bay and was appointed first Speaker of the Queensland Parliament (serving for 11 years). He apparently refused to be given a knighthood, but agreed to have his portrait painted (which hangs in Parliament House in Brisbane). His children were: Gilbert William (b.1831), who was a police magistrate and married Jane Penelope Thomson; Francis Willoughby, who married Sarah Jane Richards; Henry Alexander (b.1834); and 2 daughters. There are many descendants now living in Australia. Gilbert William (1831–93) son of Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs. He was born in Scotland and baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He moved to Australia with his father at the age of 8. He kept in touch with his family back in Scotland, and welcomed their kinsman Arthur (later 9th Baronet of Stobs) when he came to Australia in 1875. He married Jane Penelope Thomson and they had 2 sons and 4 daughters. Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell of Stobs (1888–1958) 10th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Massachusetts, only son of Sir Arthur and Lilla Burbank. He left school at 16, worked for a bank and started his own firm on Wall Street at the age of 20. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the McGill University Battery in Canada and after training served with the Royal Artillery in England. After the War he was an apple farmer in California for a while, then returned to Wall Street. When his father died in 1926 he remained in the U.S.A., but sent his 2 sons to be educated in England. In 1932 he retired from his partnership, bought Wolfelee and moved there himself. He also joined his cousin’s firm in London, later setting up under his own name. Before he died he was able to purchase Redheugh, the ancient seat of the Elliots. In 1912 he married Dora Flournoy, only child of Alexander Stephens Hopkins of Atlanta, Georgia; she carried out extensive research on the family. They had 4 children: Charlotte Elgitha Veronica Boswell, who married Landon Thorn, secondly Capt. Andrew Burk and thirdly Stanley Maxted; Jean Cecilia Constance Boswell, who married Maj. Alwyn Nigel Parker and secondly Maj. Alan Edward Seton Jackson, K.O.S.B.; Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell (b.1915), who succeeded; and Fl-Lieut. John Livingston Hopkins Boswell (1916–42), who was killed in action in WWII. James (d.bef. 1661) 6th and youngest son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Gairters’ and Margaret Scott of Harden. He was a lawyer based in Edinburgh. In 1620 his father gave him the half-lands of ‘Glencarie’ and Midgehope that were help in wadset from Robert Scott of Tushielaw. He witnessed the document whereby Edward Lorne sold Harwood outright to William Elliot in 1537. In 1637 he married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Larriston, and the lands of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston were given to them by his father; this included Hartsgarth, ‘Layfauld’, ‘Carriescheill’, Langhaugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Blackhope, ‘Greinhoillis’ and ‘Downaynholme’. The lands of Hartsgarth, Carryeshielis, Langhaugh and Bankhead were held in wadset, but he was able to pay the reversion of 3,800 merks by 1639. He may have been the ‘James Elliot appearand of Redhaugh’ whose lands in Castleton were valued at £600 in 1643. His wife died in 1697 (probably in Edinburgh) and is buried in the Henderson tomb in Greyfriars cemetery. Their children (whose surnames are usually spelled ‘Elliot’) were: Robert, of Larriston, who married Elizabeth Maxwell, and secondly married Janet Scott of Todrig; William, who went away to be a horner’; and a daughter, who married William Scott of Milsington. Jean nee Scott (d.aft. 1608) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is unclear which one). She married Gavin of Stobs, probably around 1550. She was still alive in 1608 when she complained (along with her daughters Dorothy and Esther, and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford) about William Scott of Northhouse and others coming to Stobs and taking ‘all the evidents and writs’, threatening to burn them if they did not have their demands met. Jean (d.bef. 1608) daughter of Gavin, the first Eliott owner of Stobs. She married Thomas Rutherford the Black Laird of Edgerston and died before her father. Her only child was Jean, who married William Elliot, brother of Robert of Redhaugh; she inherited the Stobs estate, along with her aunts, after the death of her grandfather. Jessie Blanche Adelaide ‘Blanche’ (c.1830s–98) daughter of Sir William Francis, 7th Baronet of Stobs. In 1868 she married Capt. James Wood, who was brother of her own brother’s wife, Charlotte Wood of Quebec. She was appointed by her father in 1863 as one of the trustees of the estates of Wells and Haddon (essentially to exclude her brother, Sir William, from his inheritance). She was said to be unhappy at how quickly her brother remarried after his first wife (her husband’s sister) died in 1878, and was then involved in about 20 years of legal battles with him over rights to the rents at Wells. John of Goodtrees (d.1639) 5th son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’. He became an advocate in Edinburgh. In 1632 he was described as ‘bailie in that part’ for a charter where his brother Gilbert purchased the lands of Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir, as well as for a sasine where Rev. Weir sold Appotside and Tytehhouse to Edward Lorraine. He married Marion, daughter and heiress of David McCulloch of Goodtrees (and whose wife was Margaret Elliot, a cousin). Their only child was Margaret, who married Sir Thomas Stewart of Coltness. After his death his wife remarried, to her daughter’s father-in-law. John (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet of Stobs and Isabella Cranston. He was brother of Sir William and uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. In the 1680s he was one of the ‘curators’ for Gilbert of Stonedge (his half brother). He was made collector of excise for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1686. In 1687 he had a charter from his brother William for the lands of Lymiecleuch (this being obtained by adjudication from Adam Elliot of Mosspeebles and his brothers when they were unable to repay their loan); however, owing to the Revolution, he only took possession of the farm in 1695. He was cautioner for a bond by Gilbert of Stonedge in 1691 and witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. In 1702 he witnessed the marriage arrangement by his nephew Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs to Eleabor Elliot. In 1704 (along with shoemaker John Elliot) he witnessed a baptism for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield; he was recorded there as ‘Collector’. Sir John of Stobs (1705–1768) 4th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Sir Gilbert, and said to be named after the Duke of Argyll. He was probably educated at home, like his brothers. He received liferent of ‘Eastside’ when he reached 21. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Jedburgh in 1713 (when still a boy) and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1748, ‘gratis’. In 1725 his father gave him lands in the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414. He was ‘of Stobs, junior’ when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His father disinherited him as much as possible in favour of his son Francis (perhaps a result of his marriage and the fact that he moved to England), and in fact he was only Baronet for 3 years before he died and was succeeded by Francis. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He married Mary Andrews of London (about whom nothing else appears to be known). His children were: Francis (d.1791), who became 5th Baronet; John (d.1769), who was Captain with the Inniskilling Dragoons; Anne (1735–1803), who died in Bath, unmarried; and Eleanor (d.bef. 1767). He died on New Year’s day in 1768 at his house in New Portugal Street in London. He left everything to his wife and daughter Anne. John (d.1769) son of Sir John of Stobs and brother of Sir Francis. He was a subaltern officer in the Inniskilling Dragoons for many years and died as a senior Lieutenant in the regiment. Capt. John (d.1795) younger son of Sir Francis of Stobs. He was a Captain in the 20th (or Jamaica) regiment of Light Dragoons. He died on the Princess Royal packet on his journey home from Jamaica. He was unmarried and his brother William was his executor. Maj. John (1793–1837) 2nd son of Sir William, 6th Baronet of Stobs. Born at Stobs, in 1812 he was gazetted to the 8th Hussars as a Cornet. By 1824 he was a Captain in the 4th Dragoons and was later promoted to Major. He died unmarried. Dame Magdelen nee Nicolson (d.1699) wife and later widow of Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet of Stobs. She was daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. She is recorded borrowing ‘4 Punds Scots’ for her share in building the new Hobkirk church of 1690–92. She stayed at Wolfelee and kept an account book that survives. Margaret Frances Boswell of Stobs (1948– ) heir of the Chieftanship of the Elliotis, only child of Arthur Francis Augustus, 11th Baronet of Stobs. She published ‘The Elliotis, The Story of a Border Clan’ (1974). Richard of Fallahill (17th C.) younger son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a sasine in 1669 and received a charter for Fallahill in 1677. He had sons Gilbert and William who were both witnesses to a bond of caution at Dumfries in 1684. Sir Robert of Stobs (17th/18th C.) recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 in right of his father Sir William. Adm. Russell (1802–81) christened at Cavers, younger son of Sir William of Stobs. He lived at Easter Langlee near Melrose. He became an Admiral in the Navy. In 1830 he married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell (by a coincidence the same surname as his first name), and she died in 1843. In 1852 he secondly married Henrietta, widow of John Ward and daughter of Sir John Kaye. His children were Capt. John Francis (b.1820), Capt. Charles Francis (b.1830), Sophia Mary (b.1832), George Gilbert (b.1834), Claud William (b.1836), Georgina Katherine Grisell Billie (b.1840), Gilbert Henry John of the Royal Navy (b.1842) and Bethia Russell (b.1843). It seems that all of them died without surviving children. Thomas (d.1671) younger son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs, with his 2nd wife, Magdelen Nicolson. It is said that his mother convinced his father to settle lands on his 2nd family. So proceedings were started to transfer Wolfelee and Stonedge to him, even although he was still just a boy; hence he is referred to as being ‘of Wolfelee’. However, he died before the charter was obtained in 1671, and so the lands went instead to his brother Gilbert, who was served as his heir in 1671. William of Stobs (d.1654) eldest son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garties’. He was probably the first member of his family to spell his name ‘Eliott’ rather than ‘Ellot’ (as recorded in a letter of 1641). He was a strong supporter of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner to Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1641 (in place of Sir William Douglas of Cavers, who was absent in England), this being the Second Parliament of Charles I. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. Also in 1642 he had a charter of Borthwickshiels. He was also recorded as Convener of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1643. In 1643 his lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £160, those in Cavers Parish at more than £3400, Kirkton about £1200, Wilton at £260 and Hobkirk at £80. Also in 1643 his mother Margaret Scott was recorded as liferenter of lands in Kirkton valued at about £670. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649. It appears that he switched from supporting Cromwell to supporting the King. In 1645 he was served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Hangansyd’ and Baxtonlees and he had a charter for Town o’ Rule in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1649 he wrote a description of Selkirkshire with Walter Scott of Arkleton. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testators’ for the will of Francis. He added Hallrule (it is said, through some underhand means) to the family possessions, adjoining the estate of ‘Toon-o-Rule’. He bought Woolee (i.e. Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun in 1651. In 1621 he married Elisabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Cavers (and she appears to have been a supporter of the Covenant, like the rest of her family). Their children were: Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet; Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (dead by 1683); Gavin, who married Barbara Creighton and Jean Nicolson; William, probably of Grange, who had no male heir (and is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh); Margaret, who married William Bennet, minister of Ancrum, and secondly James Scott of Bonnington (in Lothian); Richard of Falahill; John, who witnessed a charter in 1657; Anna, who married John Maxwell of Cowhill in 1641; Marie, who married John Young of Gulyhill; Isobel, who married Francis Scott of Arkleton in 1664; and Elspeth, who is mentioned in 1658 when her mother assigned a bond to her. It is said that he was concerned about having his lands confiscated by his mortal enemies Lord Balmerino and Lord Colvin, this eventually leading to him hanging himself. His last testament is in the National Archives. William of Grange (17th C.) probably 4th son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a charter in 1659. In 1678 he was recorded as owner of part of Grange in Ancrum Parish, valued at about £350. In the 1680s and early 1690s he was one of the ‘curators’ for Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge during his minority. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He appears to have had no surviving male heir, since a pedigree of about 1704 states that the Elliott of Grange line was now extinct. Note that he is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh. Sir William of Stobs (d.1699) 2nd Baronet and Chief of the Elliotts, son of Sir Gilbert (by his first wife, Isabella Cranston). He was the 2nd but oldest surviving son and was served heir to his father in 1692. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), along with his father and others. In 1676 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Laing. Also in 1676 he was one of the men charged with seizing 5 women who were accused of attacking the minister of Abbotrule. In 1677 he inherited the Barony of Winnington and was served heir to his father in the lands of Stobs in 1692 (which, for some reason, was probably several years after his father’s death). His estate included Stobs itself, as well as several lands in Cavers Parish. In 1678 he and his brother Gilbert paid the land tax on £4642 in Hobkirk Parish. He also paid for Stobs, Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Singley, Harwoodburn and Williamrig, valued at £1633, for half of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, valued at £500, as well as £1846 13s 4d in Kirkton Parish (for Winnington, Winningtonhall, Winnington Mill, Winnington Rig, Horselee, Turn, Smithfieldhaugh, Acreknowe, Hunthill, Abbot’s Acre, Birkwood, Dodburn, Newton, Whitehillbrae and Barnes). In 1684 he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father-in-law Charles Murray of Haddan; he eventually took complete possession of the Haddon estate (near Kelso). He was appointed one of the tutors of the children of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King, and again in 1685. About 1685 he was made Lieutenant in a troop raised by the Earl of Lothian for the purpose of rounding up local Covenanters. In 1685 he was in Hawick to oversee 9 local farmers swearing against the Covenanters by repeating ‘the test’. In 1689 he was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire. However, he was replaced in 1693 for not taking the oath of allegiance. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1690 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He witnessed a disposition for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. Also in 1694 he was served heir to his deceased sister Janet. He married Elizabeth Scott of Langshaw (d.1680, daughter of John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum); he had no children with his first wife and secondly married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Charles Murray of Haddan. His 2nd wife survived him until 1739 and they had 8 children, including: Gilbert (d.1764), who succeeded his father; William, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1700; Margaret (perhaps the Margaret born in 1682 in Jedburgh), who married John Paterson of Granton, later Baronet of Eccles; Magdalene, who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Janet, who married Capt. Alexander Corbet; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Bonnington and possibly John Forrest of Edinburgh; Christian (d.1775), who married Rev. Thomas Blair of Edinburgh; and possibly John, who was in the Army. His testament is recorded in 1684. William (b.1670s) 2nd (perhaps originally 3rd) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson. He was apprenticed as a merchant to Patrick Johnstone in Edinburgh in 1691. He was a merchant in Edinburgh and then London. He was left half of his sister Janet’s share of the money left to his sister Janet when she died before 1694. He is said to have married a daughter of Sir G. Hume, Baronet (possibly Sir Gustavus Hume of Hume Castle, Ireland). Their children were: Jean, who married Mr. Ker of Littledean; Helen, who married Captain Wilkinson; Gilbert, Customs Officer at Gravesend and chief clerk at the War Office; and George, Deputy Searcher of the Customs at Gravesend, who married Mary Fortrey of Woomble Hall. He was probably the brother of Gilbert of Stanedge who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1691 and who witnessed a bond of 1694. In 1694 he was also served ‘retour’ to the provision given to his deceased sister Janet by his father. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Stobs and Margaret Murray. In 1700 he was apprenticed to merchant John Hepburn. William (b.1701) 3rd son of the 1st Gilbert of Stonedge and Margaret Scott. He witnessed a sasine in 1722, when he is described as ‘brother-german to Gilbert now of Stonedge’. He died unmarried. William (1706–79) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father’s house at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company and died in London, unmarried. He had property in East Florida and on the Island of Barbados. He left a large amount of money to several family members, appointing his brother Lt.-Gen. George Augustus and nephew Capt. Francis Augustus as joint executors. His house in London was left to the Countess Dowager of Chioza.

Sir William of Stobs (1767–1812) eldest son of Sir Francis, he was 6th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened in Cavers and died at Stobs. He succeeded his father in 1791 and had the new mansion built at Stobs around 1793, to plans started by his father. The construction apparently strained his resources to the limits, already stretched by his father. This meant he had to re-lease some of his farms for a lump sum, rather than yearly rent. It is said that he also borrowed from Gideon Pott of Penchrise (his son breaking the deal he made with Pott). He also managed to make money by being allowed by the Court to sell off some of his land, but buying it himself and reselling (Hallrule, Hallrule Mill and Town-o-Rule) at a much higher price. This broke the entail made on the estate in 1725, giving his son legal problems later. In the 1790s he complained to the county Justices about the circuitous route taken by local mail and the cost according to actual distance travelled, thus helping introduce the local mail coaches. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1792, 4 in 1793 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1792–97, owning up to 6 carriage horses and 3 farm horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in the same year. He was additionally taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1792–95. He served as President of the Heritors of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of Billerwell, Hawthornside and the west part of Outer Hallrule; he was also listed as owner of several farms in Kirkton Parish. In the early 19th century he sold 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule to John Wilson. In 1790 he married Mary, youngest daughter of John Russell of Roseburn, Clerk to the Signet; she died in 1850.

They had 10 children (all but the first 2 baptised in Cavers Parish): Bethia Mary (b.1791), who died unmarried; Sir William Francis (b.1792), who succeeded; John (1793–1838), who became a Major in the 4th Dragoons and died unmarried; Gilbert (1796–1871), who eventually emigrated to Australia; Sir Daniel (1798–1872) of the Madras Civil Service, who married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell; George Augustus (b.1799), who became an Admiral; Charles (b.1800), who was killed in action at 19; Russell (b.1802), who became an Admiral and married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell; Alexander (1805–99), naval storekeeper at Devonport; and Euphemia Elizabeth Anne (1809–99), who married Rev. David Bagot. He died suddenly at Stobs aged 44. Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells (1792–1864), son of Sir William, he was 7th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened at Cavers in 1793. He was gazetted to the Queen's Bays at the age of 16 and left when his father died, with the rank of Lieutenant. It is said that during this time he once lost money to the Prince of Wales at cards. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1812, before he had reached majority, and was faced with an estate that was heavily in debt. Bored with rural life he joined the Roxburgh troop of Yeomanry Cavalry as a Lieutenant, later becoming Captain. In 1817 he was appointed a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. His financial situation improved when he gained the estate of Wells in 1818 on the death of a cousin (William Elliot, M.P.), although there was further litigation involved there for many years. He embarked upon a costly lawsuit over his father’s sale of Hallrule, which lasted almost 20 years. His finances were in such dire straits that in 1828 he had to put them in the care of trustees. He also eventually gained back the estate of Haddon, near Kelso. He purchased East Fodderlee, and had plans for encouraging the railway to pass through his property. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to 6 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He stood as a Liberal candidate in the 1831 Roxburghshire election, losing to Francis Scott of Harden, but as the populist candidate he was still being carried around the streets of Jedburgh shoulder-high. It was said that on election day a procession set out from Hawick at 5 a.m., roused by the drums and fifes and set out for Jedburgh, picking up his carriage at Spittal, and numbering about 2,000 when they reached the county town. He took part in the Reform Bill celebrations in Hawick in 1832. He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. During a trip to the north he was made a Free Burgess and Guild Brother of Wick, Banff and Elgin. He was said to have taken a keen interest in the baa game in Bonchester.

1862, and spent his last few summers there, as well as this being the residence of his mother. In 1826 he married Theresa Janet, eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, and she died in 1836 during childbirth. His wife’s father had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland, and her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of Johnson. They had 8 children: Eleanor Jane Ann Augusta (b.1825), who died in infancy; Sir William Francis Augustus (b.1827), who succeeded; Grace Theresa Emmeline (1828–52), who died unmarried; Alexander Boswell (b.1830), who married Katherine Craigie and Annabella Carmichael, and whose son Arthur Boswell succeeded to Stobs; Charles James John (1832–49), who died aged 16; Jessie Blanche Adelaide (d.1898), who married Capt. James Wood, and died at Hyde Park; George Augustus Leslie (1833–54), who married Mary Ratray; and Frances Elizabeth (d.1869), who married Edmund Forrest. He was said to be furious at his eldest son marrying without his consent, and effectively dispossessed him, assigning as trustees for Wells and Haddon his brothers Daniel and Alexander, as well as his brother-in-law Gen. Vassal, Allan Elliott-Lochert of Borthwickbrae and his daughter Blanche. He died in London and was buried in the family vault in Cavers Old Kirk. On the day of his funeral a large beech tree fell across the road near the House, making it hard for the carriages to approach. The procession was well attended when it neared the old church. His funeral ‘hatchment’ is in the Museum. Sir William Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs (1827–1910), 8th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William Francis, was born at Stobs. At the age of 9 his mother Theresa Boswell died and he (along with his other siblings) was put into the care of his grandmother, Lady Boswell, at Ochiltree. He served for many years in the 93rd Highlanders, going with the regiment to Canada and reaching the rank of Lieutenant before he left at the age of 26. In Canada he married without the knowledge of his father, and this caused him to be dispossessed of much of his inheritance. He succeeded to the estates at the age of 37, but with much of it under the control of his sister Blanche and the other trustees appointed by his father. In fact he had a protracted legal battle with his sister over the rent on Wells (this was said to be due to her unhappiness at how quickly he had remarried after the death of his first wife, who was her own husband’s sister). He lived much of his life at Stobs, and also lived at Wells in the late 1800s, but had to sell off that estate in 1896 to clear debts on it. He had the family arms regranted to him in 1869. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. He was known as a keen sportsman, being a good shot and fine horseman, and was elected Master of Foxhounds. He was the (honorary) President of Hawick Curling Club. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire from before his father’s death. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Hallrule, as well as Billerwell, Hawthornside and the Stobs estate. He also owned a house in Crieff (Rubserlaw House), where his first wife died in 1878. Largely due to falling rents he was forced to sell off his lands, with Stobs itself going to the Military in 1903. He then moved to Crieff. In 1846 he firstly married Charlotte Maria, daughter of Robert Wood of Quebec, and she died in 1878 (although not an heiress, she was great-granddaughter of the Duke of Kent). In 1879 he secondly married Hannah Grizel, daughter of H.T. Birkett; she was the (rich) widow of Henry Kelsall. He only had one child, Theresa, who was brain-damaged from birth; it is said that this was owing to a fall down a flight of stairs that his wife had when seeing him carried in from a hunting trip on a gate and thinking the worst. He died at Crieff and was succeeded by his nephew Sir Arthur (note this spelling, and the common local pronunciation).

Eliott-Lockhart see Lockhart

the Eliotts (thi-e-lits, -lee-lits) n. normal spelling of the Stobs branch of the family, adopted formally after 1723 in preference to the previous form ‘Eliot’, probably to distinguish the leading branch of the clan from the others (see the Eliots).

Elizabeth (ee-liz-u-bith) n. name of 1 Queen of England and 1 Queen of the United Kingdom. Elizabeth I (1533–1603) last of the Tudors, she was known in Scotland for her treatment of her cousin Queen Mary and for the involvement of England in Scottish political and religious affairs during her reign. There was a period of greater unrest on the Borders immediately after her death. Elizabeth I Elizabeth Alexandra Mary Windsor (1926–) reigning monarch, daughter of George VI. She visited Hawick, while still Princess in October 1945, inspecting troops at the cricket field and attending a rally of women’s organisations in the Pavillion Theatre. She also visited Hawick with her family in 1947. She came back as Queen in 1962, and returned to Hawick in her Silver Jubilee year, 1977, visiting the Katharine Elliot Centre amongst other places. And in her golden jubilee year, 2002, she bussed the Hawick Flag at a ceremony in Melrose. Pringle of Scotland was long the official manufacturers of knitted garments to the Queen.

ell (el) n., arch. a Scots length, corresponding to about 37 inches, used to refer to lengths of cloth etc., or 45 inches for yarn, using the English convention – ‘...for art and part of theft and concealment ...six ells of melley, twenty-four ells of white cloth ...’ [RBA1537], ‘...Imprimis, for three ells of silk at 44s. per ell, £6 12 0’ [BR1707], ‘...They fand their tree three ells o’er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma’. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘...13s 4d in money, six quarters of woolf, a per of shoon, a ell of linnen, and a mad’ [DMW], ‘...’An’ mony an ell birls roond the beam, Afore the whustle blaws’ [IJ] (see also five ell o wund and eln).

Ellabank (e-la-bawngk) n. former house adjaent to St. George’s Kirk, which, along with its grounds was purchased by the church in 1913. The new church was built partly on this land, and part of the old house is now used as a kitchen for the church halls. There were Scotts living there in the 1880s and Bonsors in the early part of the 20th century.

Ellen Riddle’s (e-lin-ri-dulz) n. former confectioners at 24 High Street, selling home made sweets and chocolates from the mid-19th century until the mid-20th. This may also have been the same premises known as ‘Miss Riddle’s’ where several local societies held their meetings in the latter part of the 19th century – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock bools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ...’ [IWL].

Ellen’s Pool (e-linz-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water, near where the mill lade from Mangerton Mill used to come out (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

eller (e-lur) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra (note that the elder tree is allar).

eller ee (e-lur-ee) n., poet. enchanted eye, preternatural insight, a person with such ability – ‘Confoundit by philosophy, I gove’t at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an ellers ee!’ [DH] (also written ‘elleree’).

Ellice (el-is) n. Edward (1781–1863) Liberal M.P. for Coventry, known as a reformer, he was also Secretary of War and Director of the Hudson’s Bay Company. His sister Helena Anne married Charles Chisholme of Chisholme. During a visit to Chisholme in 1823 he was made an Honorary Burgess. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825.

ellie (e-lee) v., arch. to disappear, vanish gradually – ‘Now this is the fashion: they thus pass the day, Till night comes at last and they ellie away’ [DA] (also ellie and yillie; probably from French ‘aller’ and piked up from Napoleonic prisoners).

Elliot (e-li’, e-lee-i’, el-yi’) n. (see also Eliott) Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. His name is recorded as ‘Edy Elwald’, and his brother Ingram was also listed, as well as Airchie. Perhaps the same man was ‘Ede Ellwald, son to Gaytspalldes’ listed in 1541 among a group of Eliotts, Armstrongs, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; it is unclear what his father’s nickname may have meant. Adam ‘Ade’ of Leyes (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of ‘Streichelhope’. He is recorded as ‘Ade Elwald de Leyis’ and is probably related to ‘Jock o the Lies’ recorded in 1587 and ‘Hob o the Lies’ recorded in the 1590s. Adam of the Shaws (16th
Elliot

C. (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was also recorded in 1578/9 when his sureties swore that they had previously presented him to the Privy Council. He is listed as ‘Adie Elliot, callit Adie of the Schawis’ and his sureties were Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Brairdlie and Gavin ‘in Swinsteis’, then in Newbigging; since he was said to have not been entered, then his cautioners were fined. He was also listed in 1583 among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh in a letter from the English wardens. He was ‘Adie Elliott of the Shawes’ in 1587/8 when listed among Armstrongs and others accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. He may have been brother of Gib, who is also recorded in 1583, and perhaps son of Hob, who is recorded in 1566. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Ade Elliot callit Cawdais’ in 1569, when he was pledge for ‘himself and the haill branches of the Burnheidis and Weschaw’. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety. He was also listed in 1569 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle. He was ‘Ade Elliot callit the Cowdais’ and was pledge for ‘Wilcokis Hob’ and Gavin’s Jock of Ramsiegill. He is also recorded as ‘Adie Elliot, called Cowdais’ in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was ‘callit Cowdais’ there, when it was reported that he had previously been a joint surety for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will. He was also listed as ‘Adie Elliott, called Cawdes’, in 1581 when he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1583 he was recorded as ‘Con dus’ in a letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor, where he is listed among the Elliots of Burnhead. He is ‘Ade Cowdais’ when recorded along with ‘Gawins Jok’ under the heading ‘Burnhead’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. The other man was probably an Elliot, and the lands of Burnhead were probably those in Liddesdale. It is possible that ‘Cowdais’ is ‘Cowdhouse’, i.e. ‘Coldhouse’ (although not the one in Wilton). It is unclear what his nickname means, or even how it should be spelled. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded as ‘Eddie Elliot son to Davie the Carling’ among Borderers complained about for a raid on Woodburn in England in 1589. He is also recorded in 1590 as ‘Eddie Elliot sone to Davye Calinge’ when he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘Edward Elliot son to Davye’ (but this could be an English error assuming that ‘Adie’ was short for ‘Edward’) when accused along with Robert Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipphase. Adam (16th C.) son of Davie of Dinlees, who was accused in 1590 of being in a group who were accused by William ‘Loren’ of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner. The other men named were all Armstrongs, ‘Robin the Tailor’, Ringan of Tweeden, Matthew and ‘Alexander’s Airchie’. It is possible he is the same man as the son of Davie the Carlin. Adam of Philhope (17th C.) recorded as being of ‘Fillip’ (presumably Philhope) in 1643, when he became an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk, along with a number of Scotts. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He may have been succeeded by his son Andrew. It is unclear how he was related to the contemporary Archibald Elliot of Philhope. Adam of Meikledale (1598/9–1682) son of the 4th son of William of Falnash (whose name is unknown), who was probably of Unthank. He was recorded as tenant at Gorrenberry in 1656, when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood and was again so recorded in 1662. He was fined £1800 for backing the wrong side in the Civil War. He was also listed as indweller at Gorrenberry in 1657 when he purchased the lands of Isgill, Midgehow and Newbigging for his eldest son John, reserving the liferent for himself. He was described as ‘in Gorinberrie’ about 1665, when he was listed (along with many other Elliots) as a creditor for William Elliot of Binks for the rent of ‘Sofeield’ (and this was ‘in Woolfhoilder’ in 1662). He also was a witness to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. In 1669 received a charter of the lands of Meikledale, held in fee for his son Andrew. He is additionally said to have acquired Arkleton, but this may have been his son. He also held Burngrains and Carrot Rigs (i.e. Carewoodrig). He paid tax on £900 of land for Meikledale in 1671. He is said to have married a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk, and secondly married Janet, daughter of John Scott of Remalbdurn. His children were: John of Thorlieshope (b.1621); Walter of Arkle ton (b.1634); Andrew of Meikledale; William of Meikledale; and one daughter, said to have received a dowry of 8,000 merks. He was known as a very successful as a farmer, he left separate lands to 3 of his sons; Meikledale went to Andrew, eldest son from his 2nd marriage, but afterwards was inherited by William. He is buried in the Overkirk churchyard near Unthank, the stone being inscribed with the date of his death and also having an armorial carving of a man holding a tree in one hand (for Armstrong), with a shield in the other. He could be the basis for the tradition that the last Elliot of Gorrenberry, Adam, whose family for generations had known a friendly fairy called ‘the Cowie’, was said to have frozen to death by Hermitage Chapel after falling off his horse when fording the river, with the fairy giving loud lamentations at Gorrenberry, for the last time. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood. The will of his wife, Bessie Murray, is recorded in 1688. Adam of Lymiecleuch (17th/18th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Unthank. He received a lease of Mosspeebie in 1643. Along with his father and Simon of the Binks and Swinside, he purchased Lymiecleuch in 1670, from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. He had a charter for his share of Lymiecleuch in 1673, but lost everything in 1687. Along with his 2 brothers, they were guarantors for someone in 1681 (probably a tenant) who failed to appear and so they had to pay the 5000 merks fine. They could only do so by seeking an advance on Lymiecleuch from Sir William Elliott of Stobs, but were unable to repay the loan. Eventually, in 1687, Lymiecleuch was settled on John Elliott, brother of the Laird of Stobs. He was still called ‘of Lymiecleuch’ when involved in legal proceedings with Anna, Duches of Buccleuch, in the period 1698–1703. He is probably the Adam ‘in Lymiecleuch’ who witnessed a baptism for ‘Wester’ James Grieve in Commonside in 1705. His children were: John in Dinlees (1650–1728), who married Margaret Scott of Falnash; and Adam in Dykeraw. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704. He married Margaret Halliday. Their children included: Thomas (b.1689); and Isobel (b.1704). The witnesses in 1689 were Thomas Halliday (presumably related to his wife) and John Stewart and in 1704 were Thomas Falside and ‘student’ John Thorbrand.

Adam of Beirhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and Swinside. In 1704 he purchased Beirhope in Hownam Parish, which he had partly owned before that. In 1702 he married Isabelle Ainslie in Jedburgh and their children were: Simon (b.1703), mentioned in his grandfather’s entail of 1714; Robert (b.1705); William (b.1707); Thomas (b.1711); Elspeth (b.1713); and John (b.1714). Adam of Teindside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was also recorded being ‘of Tyndside’, but the lands were clearly Teindside in upper Teviotdale. He was referred to as ‘younger of Arkletoun’ when he and his cousin Walter Elliot gave a bond of 2,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. This presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was ‘of Arcleton’ in 1698 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash, and in 1700 for smith John Dryden and for James Laidlaw in Harwood. He was also ‘of Arcleton’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve in Teindside. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1702 (when listed as ‘of Arkleton’ and along with his servant John Bell) for William Davidson in Holt, in 1706 for Hawick apothecary Walter Scott and in 1707 and 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood. In 1708 Stevenson was described as ‘(in Harwood) tenant to arcleton’, making it clear that he was owner of Harwood at that time, as well as Teindside. Also in 1708 his ‘servitor’ John Laidlaw had a child baptised in Hawick, with him as a witness: he is described there as ‘of Arcleton In Harwood’. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside. He also owned the land on which the Grammar School would be built from 1713, selling it to James Rodger of Cavers in 1722 (although whether this is a coincidence or connected with the Orrock Bequest is unclear). He is said to have fallen out with his father over wasting the price of a drove of cattle his father had given him to sell in England, and also because he brought back an English woman for a wife. He was left only £200 by his father, but he did not receive the money until 1714, following an extended legal battle. Arkleton went to his younger brother William, after he and his brother Arthur of Harwood were disinherit by their father. In 1700 in Hawick he married Ann Drury (with both being described as parishioners). 1700) and had 3 children who were christened in Hawick: Katherine (b.1701), who married Robert of Midlem Mill; Walter (1705–bef. 1721); and Anne (b.1707). He may also have been father of Isobell (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1717), also baptised in Hawick. In the 1707 baptism he is recorded as ‘of Arkleton at Harwood-on-Teviot’ and the witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and William of Arkleton (his brother). Adam in Dykeraw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam, who was associated with Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch. His children included: Robert in Know, who married Helen Grieve; John in Harden; Adam in Tweedside, who married Isobel Glendinning; and William in Millburnholm. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Dykeraw. According to a family history he was younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. However, this might be confusion with Adam in Dykeraw son of Adam of Lymiecleuch. Adam of Arkleton (b.1702) eldest son of William and Anne Ainslie, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. In 1722 he was confirmed in his father’s testament as his oldest son. In 1725 he was forced by his father’s cousin William of Thorlieshope to sell Meikledale in order to pay debts. In 1744 he disposed of Arkleton to his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself and 600 merks a year for his wife. In 1733 he married Isobel Glendinning and had a daughter Helen, who married James Elliot. Adam (18th C.) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill. He was tenant in Flatt. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Henry in Sorbytrees and Christian Scott of Falnash. Their children included Christian (b.1761); Jean (b.1762); and Henry in Canonbie, who married Helen Little. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he is related to other contemporary Elliots, or other Elliots connected with Kirndean. Adam (d.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. He was the only known son of Robert and Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and perhaps grandson of Walter in Brugh. His wife Peggy Scott died in 1797; theirs is probably the 1760 marriage of Adam with Margaret Scott. Their children included: Robert (1761–1810); Walter (b.1766); James in Goldielands (b.1769), schoolmaster at Wilton; and Helen (b.1773), whose baptism was witnessed by John Elliot, tanner. He is probably the shoemaker Adam who witnessed the birth of William Elliot, son of Wilton schoolmaster James, in 1801; this was presumably his grandson. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1815, when he is clearly listed as father of James in Goldielands. Adam (1740–1804) younger son of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a merchant in Danzig. He married Rose Leonard and they had a daughter Charlotte, who inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill from her uncle Robert. He died on the Isle of Wight. Adam (18th/19th C.) said to be a printer in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Wilson and they had a son Adam born in Hawick in 1812. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (1765–1852) son of shepherd Ninian. He was a carter in Newcastle. He married Margaret Little (1763–1851). Their children included: Ninian (1786–1800); Margaret (1795–1816); Esther (b.1797), who married Robert of Powisholm; and Adam (b.1806), mason. Adam (1774–94) eldest son of William of Arkleton. He was a Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot and was said
Elliot to be present at the taking of San Domingo (presumably modern Haiti). He died of wounds in the West Indies and was unmarried. Adam of Arkleton see Adam Scott-Elliot. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was probably son of James and Helen Elliot. He married Margaret Oliver and lived at ‘Burntshields’ (although it is unclear where this is). Their children included: Lizzy (b.1800); James (b.1801); Daniel (b.1803); Helen (b.1805); Isabella (b.1808); Jean (b.1811); Margaret (1813–16); and Jane (1813–36). Dr. Adam (b.1797) eldest son of James of Goldielands, former schoolmaster of Wilton.

He was born in Wilton Parish and became a surgeon with the East India Company. He is probably the Adam who was a medical student at Edinburgh University 1813–18, receiving an M.D. in 1819. He was recorded at Goldielands in the 1837 electoral roll, and was listed there on the 1841 census. He was described as ‘in Goldielands’ in about 1850 when he was one of the men charged with arranging the ‘Coutard Fund’ for the poor in Hobbirk Parish, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish. In 1851 he was at Goldielands (listed as a former maritime surgeon with the H.E.I.C.), living with his sister Helen, cousin William, a shepherd and 3 servants. He was ‘Dr. Elliott, Goldielands’ when listed as an informant to the Ordnance Survey Name Books in about 1859. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Graduate of the University of Edinburgh, Not practising recevg. compensation annually as Surgeon in the Ex Maritime Service of the Honl. E.I. Company., Farmer of 200 accres Employing 5 men’. He was still at Goldielands in 1868. He donated many items to the Museum in the 1860s, and was consequently made an honorary member of the Archaeological Society. Adam (b.c.1800) listed as a tailor in Newcastleupon in 1841. He was then at about 28 Langholm Street, with a younger tailor, Henry, as well as Jean (perhaps his siblings) and young baker John. Probably the same Adam is still recorded as a tailor in Newcastle-upon in the 1860s. Adam (1806–89) son of Newcastle-upon carter Adam. He was a mason in Newcastle-upon on the 1841 and 1851 census and listed as a ‘Feuar’ on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Murray (1818–1901). He was blind by the 1881 census. Adam Scott (1807/8–99) born in Hawick Parish, son of miller William and Margaret Scott. Along with his parents and siblings he emigrated to Canada in 1816. He worked in farming and milling and built a saw and grist mill in Sullivan township. In 1858 he moved to Bruce County, Ontario, where he is credited as the founder of the settlement of Chesley. He married Janet Halliday and had a family of 10 children. Adam (1827–80) son of Robert in Powisholm, Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was living in Wilton Kirkstyle and working as a journeyman baker. He later was a bread and biscuit baker in Dumfries. He married Euphemia Oliver (b.1830) in Wilton in 1851. Their children included: Mary (b.1854), who probably died young; Esther (b.1856); Mary Oliver (b.1863); Euphemia Oliver (b.1866); and Margaret Law (b.1871). Adam (19th C.) resident of Slitrig Crescent. In 1861 he donated a heron to the Museum. Adam of Caver-ton (d.c.1900) brother of Col. William of Teviot Lodge and James of Mosstower. In 1901 his extensive natural history collection was presented to the Hawick Museum. This included mounted butterflies and moths, as well as stuffed mammals and birds. Adam (d.1938) said to be the last of the hand-frame knitters in Hawick when he died. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Brig-hous’ in 1662 among people who owed money to the decease William Elliot of Harwood. Then she was ‘in Brighouse’, i.e. tenant farmer in the Liddel valley in 1665 in a record relating to William Elliot of Binks. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book in June 1698, when she was said to be due £6 Scots. The reason is not given, but it was along with money due to the Burgh Officer for his Common Riding coat, and so it may be that this was a charge for providing refreshments or similar at the Common Riding that year. Agnes ‘Little Auld Nany’ (d.1776) resident of Hawick whose death is recorded. Alexander (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1533 as husband to Isabel Murray. His wife assigned her lands in Kershope (in Ettrick Forest) to her ‘brother german’ Michael Scott (suggesting that she was a Scott, who first married a Murray). In 1539 his wife was ‘Esebell Scott’ when she discharged a loan from Michael Scott. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘Elwauld’ in Borthwick was recorded in 1539 when accused (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) of stealing a large number of sheep belonging to the Elliots in Cranston. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexander Elwald’ in 1535 when his son William was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. Alexander (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Crichton to his mother, Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (where it was witnessed). Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Will in Aderstonestiel, Will of the Burnmouths' and 2 Croizers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. He was probably associated with lands owned by Gledstains of that Ilk. Alexander (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. He is probably the Alexander ‘of Fallon’ (likely an error for ‘Falnash’) complained about by the English for a raid of 1589. Along with many of the same men he is ‘of Fallenesche’ later that same year for a raid on farms of the Laird of ‘Troghwenn’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’, when they are said to have slain 2 men and taken 2 prisoners. Alexander ‘Mill’ (16th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as being ‘alias Myll thair’, listed after ‘Law’s Jock’ in Priesthaugh, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Elliots. Alexander (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1766, announced in Southdean and Ancrum Parishes. They had children Betty (b.1766) and Jean (b.1769). Alexander Kynynmound (1754–78) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, and brother of Gilbert, the 1st Earl (1754–78) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, Kynynmound and Jean (b.1769).

A new bandstand was erected in her memory in the Park in 2015. Alison (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears to be written ‘aliaun Ilwand’ and she was probably related to John and Margaret, who are also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to the sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Ninian, Robert, William and John ‘Elwald’, as well as others. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew ‘Dand the Man’ (15th/16th C.) son of William, recorded in 1502, along with his brother ‘Hob the King’. Patrick Gray from Greenhead, James Elliot in ‘Quhitmere’ and Ralph Ker of Primsdie Loch had a respite for helping them, specifically in the theft of 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1516 as witness to a document for George Ker prebendarry of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Perhaps the same Andrew acted as a bailie for Margaret Haliburton and George Ker in Falkandside in 1539/40. Andrew (d.1531) recorded as ‘Elwald’ when he was hanged for theft along with Patrick ‘Dowglass’ and David ‘Blynskale’, as given in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’. It is unclear which area this involved, or how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andree Elwald’ when he and others held the lease on Braidlie on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as agent in Sekirk for Margaret Haliburton, Lady of Dirleton. He was probably the same man as (or closely related to) the Andrew who purchased a tenement in Selkirk in 1579. Andrew ‘Dand’ (d.bef. 1564) third son of Gavin, 1st Laird of Horsleyhill. He was involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547. His father gave him the lands of Bailleelee in 1551. He was dead in 1563/4 when there was a case before the Privy Council involving his brothers William and Robert, and sheep that had been stolen from his lands by the Scotts of Tushielaw. He is referred to as ‘umquhile Andro, alias Dand Elliot’ when his brother Robert in Horsleyhill appeared on his behalf and the Scotts of Tushielaw were ordered to replace the stolen sheep. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falmash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Ellot’ and he may have been related to Will, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘callit of the Heuchhous’ in 1576/7 when he was convicted for theft, including stealing 80 sheep from the Laird of Cessford. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Martin of the same location and the slightly later Hob. His son John is mentioned in 1579/80. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andro Ellot, callit the Wowaris Andro’ in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was supposed to have been presented to the King and his Regent, but had not been. This was along with John ‘callit of the Dewisleis’, with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. It is unclear what his nickname meant (perhaps his father was ‘the Wooer’). Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he purchased a tenement in Selkirk. He is also recorded in 1579/80 as Burgess of Selkirk in a dispute with another Burgess, John Watson. In 1581 he loaned money to William Hogg in Melrose, receiving an annual rent of tenements in Melrose. He was a Burgess in 1581 when he was asked for the key to Selkirk Tolbooth. Also in 1581 he loaned money to John Murray in Lindean. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. It is unclear who his father was, and whether he is the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. The ‘Dand Elliot of Braydley’ complained about in 1590 (about a raid in 1588) is either him or his cousin Andrew (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1590 he was recorded as ‘Dande Ellott brother’s son to said Martinge’ on a list of Elliots (including Martin’s sons Airchie and John), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Clement’s Hob. He is listed in 1581 among many Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about the actions of the Scots and their followers. It is possible that he is the same man as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is easily confused with his cousin, who was nephew of Martin, and sometimes also just called ‘of Braidlie’. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ listed along with Clement’s Hob when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Martin complained to the Privy Council in 1581 of an attack on him and his brother Hob while they were riding near Headshaw. The pair were attacked by Walter Scott of Headshaw and others, with one of them losing a hand and the other also being injured. His son Hob was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. He was probably ‘Dand Ellott of Braidley, fugitive’ listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580 (but his name occurs after 4 sons of Martin of Braidlie, so perhaps this was a brother or some different man). He was also listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583, his name appearing as ‘Dand Ellot of the Brandley’, along with ‘John Elliot of the same’. He is probably the ‘Dand Elliot of Braydley’ recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on their livestock in 1588. He is probably the ‘Martin’s Dande’ listed in 1590 along with Will of the Steele and other Elliots and Armstrongs, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. He is also ‘Martins Dande’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ listed along with Clement’s Hob when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586 as ‘in Borthuikmains’ when he was a fugitive from trial. Andrew of Blackhall (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was presumably from Blackhall in Ewesdale, since other Elliots of Ewes were also listed. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) brother of Hob of Bowholm. He was recorded in 1590 when he, his brother Robert and ‘Willie’s Airchie’ of Stitchillhill were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew ‘Dand’, ‘Sweet Milk’ (16th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who raise to the fray’. It seems likely he was related to the slight later William who was also called “Sweet Milk” and whose death is supposed to have been the inspiration for the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wower’s Andro’ in 1605. His son Jock was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Dandie of Bowholmes’. In 1611 his brother Will was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew of Philhope (17th C.) possibly son of Archibald. After the restoration of the monarchy in 1662 he was fined £1,000. Andrew of Meikledale (d.1682) eldest son of Adam of Meikledale with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott. He succeeded to Meikledale on the death of his father, but died himself later in the same year. The lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope then went to his ‘brother german’ William. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Treasurer of the Burgh of Selkirk in 1676. He gave a discharge to Thomas in Borthwickshiels (who may have been related) for some payments. Perhaps the same Andrew, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk, was deceased in 1683 when his wife Agnes Scott had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘sone to Langsyde’ in 1677 when there was a petition to grant him freedom of the Burgh of Selkirk. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. He married ‘Beatie’ Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1684) and Helen (b.1689). Probably the same ‘Dand’ had a daughter Elizabeth baptised in Roberton in 1681, with no mother’s name given and witnesses John Hardie and Walter Elliot (who may have been related) for some payments. Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded as a servant to Rev. Thomas Sharp when he witnessed a baptism for John Lamb in Hawick in about 1789 and another for Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in Hawick in 1789. Andrew (b.1771/2) joiner in Newcastle. In 1841 he was at about 16 South Hermitage Street, living with Helen and Thomas (probably his children) and Thomas Simpson (probably a grandson). Andrew (1772–1850) blacksmith in Newcastle. He is recorded as such in the 1841 census, probably at about 8 Doncaster Street. He married Janet (or Jane) Wilson and she died in 1851, aged 74. They had a son, John (1834/5–1907), who married Elizabeth Scott. They are buried at Ettleton. Andrew (1787–1866) farmer at Twislehope, son of John, who also farmed there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was farmer there in 1841 and in 1861 was farming 2300 acres and employed 3 people. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He married Eliza Armstrong and their children included: Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1836), who emigrated to New Zealand and Canada; Janet (b.1838); Walter (1840–99), whose family emigrated to Canada after his death; Eliza Murray (b.1843), who died unmarried; Robert...
Elliot

(1845–1918), who emigrated to New Zealand; Archibald (1847–1900), emigrated to Canada; Margaret (b.1847), twin of Archibald, who regularly corresponded with her nephews in New Zealand; Andrew (b.1849), emigrated to America; Mary (b.1849); and Thomas (1852–1906). Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Mount in 1851 and was based at Stobs Limery in the 1850s. By 1861 he was farming 186 acres and employing 3 people at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Boosmill in 1868. He married Janet Thomson in 1843 and they had a son James (b.1844). Andrew (1844/5–1930) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Hannah Storey. He firstly married Agnes Telfer, who died in 1880, aged 29. He secondly married Margaret (1851–1940), daughter of shepherd William Glendinning. Their children were: Thomas (b.1883); Helen (b.1885); Hannah (b.1886); John (b.1889); Mary Jane (b.1891); Maggie (b.1892); and Bessie (b.1895). He is buried at Ettrickton along with his wives and 4 children. Andrew (d.1961) married Elizabeth Ekron. His wife Elizabeth (b.1876) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children included John Burns, who married Margaret Butler. Anna Mary (19th/20th C.) daughter of Thomas of Redheugh and sister of Robert. Her brother inherited Redheugh, but died in 1915. In 1918 she sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. She was described as a widow at that time. Anthony of the Binks (16th/17th C.) eldest son of William of the Binks. He was ‘Anthony of the benks’ in 1590, when accused along with James of the Hill, James ‘Half Lug’, Hobbie ‘the Tailor’ and 60 others, of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He is mentioned in 1590/1 being ‘of the Binks’ and ‘brother son of Martin of Braidley’. He was ‘Anthony of the Benks’ in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others (including Will Elliot of the Steele and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. He was described as ‘Antone Elliott in Rouchlie’ in 1622 when he was on a Jedburgh jury with his brother Simon. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Gavvin. With Gavvin, along with Simon Armstrong of Whitlaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Faskellvo’ to Fairnilee to answer for crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. He was listed along with brothers Adie and Ingram, who may have been related to him. He may be the same as Archibald of Gorrenberry. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Aillat, vicar of Kassiltone’ in 1557 when he wrote a bond involving Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It is thus possible that he was a relative of the Elliot Chief. Archibald ‘Airchie’ 1st Laird of Farnash (d.bef. 1566) third son of Robert, 13th Chief (who was probably killed at Flodden). His brothers were Robert of Redheugh, perhaps Martin of Braidlie and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the Archibald, brother of Robert Redheugh who served as surety for William, James and Simon ‘Elwald’ in 1537/8; he was also one of the Elliot sureties for several Croziers, that they would not harm John Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1541 he was designated ‘of Gorrenberrie’, and was probably the Archibald ‘Elwald’ who was tenant of ‘Gorrmurray’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably the Archibald, uncle of ‘Robert Elwand, sone to Robyne of the Redhwych’ who signed a bond to enter prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst in 1546 (and then had to have the notary help him sign). In bonds for re-entry of the same men he was recorded as of ‘Northows’ (i.e. Northhouse) in 1547 and ‘of Gorranbery’ in 1548. He is also probably the Archibald (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Larriston) who had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548. In 1554 he was ‘in Gorinbery’ where he was granted an acre of arable land in Spittal-on-Rule (‘Harparhill’) and the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig; he there signed ‘with my hand at the pen’ led by the notary. In the following letter of reversion he agreed to hold the land and patronage of the chapel for 13 years for 86 pounds Scots. He was probably the ‘Arche Elwald’ who, along with ‘Robyn’ (probably of Thorlieshope) went ‘to lord Maxwell at Gedforthe’ to seek pardon for the English rebels that they were resetting. He had a Crown charter for Farnash in 1556. In about 1557 he and Simon Scott of ‘Fernill’ rented Bowanhill and ‘Grangia alias Stanyheton’ from Melrose Abbey; he was there listed as ‘Arche Elliot of Gorunberry’.

In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders and later that year appeared before a Justice Court to answer for his tenants. As ‘Arche
Elliot

Elliot of the Fawnyche' he signed a bond in 1561/2 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge as a prisoner (the other Elliots were his son and heir Gavin, John of Copshaw and 'Elder Will'); he may thus have been serving as Captain of Hermitage Castle. In 1562 he had another bond, along with his son Gavin, to enter John, son of Mungo Routledge to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. His wife's name is not known. He had 3 children: Gavin of Falnash, who succeeded by at least 1566; William, 'Archie's Will', of Gorrenberry; and Robert, 'Archie's Hob'. In 1647 his great-great-grandson Archibald was served heir to his lands, thus confirming the succession over 5 generations. His descendants held Falnash until about 1675. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Dinlees. He may be the same as Archibald of Falnash. Archibald 'Airchie' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) said in 1541 to be one of the main ringleaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale who were raiding into England. He was specifically believed to be responsible for the 'burnynge of William Carnabyes come at Halton'; he was referred to as 'brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorlyshope'. Sir John Heron led a party of men from Tynedale who burned 'the saide Arche Ellwodes house' at 'Thirlishope'. In 1557 probably the same man rented, along with Scott of Synton, the lands of Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey; he is there recorded as 'Arche Ello of Thirlishoup'. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill and brother of the next Laird, William. He is recorded as 'Arche' in 1564, along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Gavin, and other Elliots and Scotts, tried for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He was acquitted, along with Gavin, partly because he was a 'puer' (i.e. a boy under 16 at the time). In 1596/7 he was witness to a sasine and was there described as brother of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie Keen' (16th C.) one of 10 Liddesdale rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567 and afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1569 he was pledge for himself 'and the hail branche of Gorrumberry'. Also in 1569 he and 'Clement's Hob' escaped from imprisonment in the Castle of Doune. Also in 1569 he is listed being held in Blackness Castle as pledge for Clement's Hob and 'Dand of Braidley'. In 1578/9 it was restated that Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw had pledged to the Privy Council that he been entered into ward in Castle Doune (in Monteith); since this did not happen, then his cautioner was fined. He is probably the same as 'Archie Keene' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but prepared much earlier) under the heading 'Gorumberie'. It is possible that he was a younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1561 renting the farm of Corrie Sike for 17 years from Gledstains of Cocklaw. The transcription of his surname is uncertain, but is given as 'Willat'. He is recorded more clearly as 'Archie Ellot in Corresik' in the bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569 by several Elliots, Scotts and others; the Laird of Gledstains there served as surety for him for 1000 merks. In 1569 the Privy Council ruled that Gledstains was liable for the £1000 when he failed to appear and additionally Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme became surety for him. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Possetts' (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as 'Archie Ellot callit Possettis in Queitilbray' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He is probably related to some of the other Elliots of the Priesthaugh area who are also named in 1574, particularly James 'Dobson', who was also in Whitehillbrae. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but perhaps the hot drink). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braudlie and Robert of Redheugh had already entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not 'Archie Kene', who is listed separately). Archibald 'Archie' (16th C.) listed in 1578/9 as 'sone to Ringanis Wil' when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also recorded in 1579 as 'Archie Ellot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar', when he was among the 'Armstrangis of the Gyngillis and thair complices' who gave in to the demands of Lord Maxwell and agreed to end the feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs. His name was also given as 'sone to Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoren'. He appeared personally before the Lord's of Secret Council later in 1579 and hence John Carmichael was relieved from his surety. From his name he was presumably son of Will and grandson of Ringan; this could be Ninian the same man as the 'porter' of...
Ewesdoors. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Will’s Airchie’ recorded a little later. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (d.bef. 1583) tenant in Dodrig. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. He farmed at Dodrig from about 1547, and built a house there; ‘he hes pecgeable bruikut and josit thrie quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaiplanrie of the paroche kirk of Caveris, as kyndlie tennentis thairof’. In 1583 his son Robert complained that men sent by Robert Elliot of Redheugh had attacked the workers on the farm. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James in Yair and John Gray in Lindean. He was probably related to James, as well as Thomas, who were both in Yair at the same time. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as brother of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James McDougall of Makerstoun and Gavin Elliot of Baillielee (later of Stobs). His brother Gavin also witnessed the same transaction (and may have been Gavin of Brugh). He was also listed as one of the brothers of Robert of Redheugh according to a 1583 letter from the English wardens; he is listed separately from Archie ‘Fyre the Braes’, but it is unclear if the was the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. He may be the same as Archibald, son of Robert, 15th of Redheugh. Archibald ‘Fyre the Braes’ of the Shaws (16th C.) listed in 1569 along with his brother ‘Hob of the Schawis’, when John of Thorrishope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. It is possible that all 3 men were brothers. He is also recorded as ‘Arche Elliot’ in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor. He was probably a close relative of Robert of Redheugh, since his name appears shortly after the Laird’s brothers. In 1584 he was listed among the Elliots of Thorrishope, giving assurances to the English Wardens for the following year; there he is ‘Arche Elliot called Fyrebraies’. He was recorded as ‘Arche Elliott of the Shaws called ‘Fye the braes’’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs, where he is appears as Arthur and is listed beside Rob of Thorlieshope. He could be the brother of Robert of Redheugh listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He could also be the same as Archibald of Thorrishope, recorded in 1557. Archibald of the Park (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Others listed there are Hob of the Park and John of the Park. He was also listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes. His name appears after ‘James Rowe of the Park’, who was probably ‘Jamie’s Rowe’ and possibly his brother. He is probably the ‘Arche Elliot, called Symmis Arche’ listed as one of the cautioners for ‘Symmis Rowe’ and others in 1581 and 1582/3; this would make him son of Simon of the Park. His name comes first among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage. He is presumably not the same as ‘young Archie of the Park’ recorded in 1599. Archibald ‘Aircie o the Hill’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had previously entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie, but he escaped. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not ‘Archie Kene’, who is listed separately in 1578/9). He was also listed as one of the Elliots accused in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from James Foster of ‘Symwhaite’. In 1581 William Turnbull in Bonchester was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer the charge of stealing a horse from him. He was further listed in 1583 as ‘Arche of Hill’, when listed among the Elliots of the Burnhead branch; Jock of the Hill is also listed. He was probably from Liddesdale, although it is unclear where his seat was. He signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsigill, making it clear he was closely related to them. In 1587 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. There was a complaint by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with Archie ‘Dog Pintle’ and Archie’s 2 brothers) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is listed in 1590 among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; James of the Hill is also listed, as well as a Crozier, Douglas, Laidlaw and Henderson. Also in 1590 he, his brother James, Martin Crozier and others were accused of rieving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale. Furthermore, in 1590 he was accused, along with several Croziers, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. In 1591 he was accused of leading a group of men to plunder from Jeffrey Tailor and stole livestock and goods from the tenants of Scaleby; others included his brother James and his nephew Jock. Probably the same man signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599, along with ‘Willie’s Archie’, ‘Cull with the Shaid’ and ‘Jock o the Hill’ (possibly his son). He was probably related to ‘Joanni de lie Hill’, who is recorded in 1541. He may be the ‘Archie Ellot of the Hill, callit Gleyit Archie’ who was acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. [Archibald ‘Will’s Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among a large number of Elliots and others accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585. Others listed include Hob of Burnhead, Hob of Ramsiegill, Airch o the hill, Jamie’s Geordie and Reid Martin of Heuchhouse, which may be clues to his family connections. It is possible he is the same man as the Archie son of ‘Ringan’s Will’ recorded in the 1570s or the ‘Will’s Airchie’ of Stitchillhill recorded in the 1590s. [Archibald (16th C.) brother of Will, tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother, he was accused of ‘a great strough at the Eschelles in England’, with William of Falnash standing as surety for them. [Archibald of Muselee (16th/17th C.) son of Gavin of Falnash and brother of William of Falnash. He was mentioned several times regarding raids on England. In 1587 he was named in relation to compensation for raids, the issue being raised with the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. There were also explicit complaints by John Hetherton of ‘the Cairs’ that he had stolen 20 cows, and by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with his 2 brothers and other Elliots) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is recorded as ‘Arche Ellott called dogpyntle’ and ‘Arche Elliott alias doge pinte’, and he was brother of George ‘Burgerback’. Other Elliots named along with him include those of the Hill and of Bowholm. His nickname was clearly not complimentary. [Archibald of Clintwood (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He is referred to as ‘Martin’s Arche of Clintwood’. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Hobbie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. He was also among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Arche Elliot’, brother of Gavin and Hobbie (and probably Simon) who was listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. He may be the ‘Archie Elliot’ who, along with Gibbie (perhaps his brother) was accused of a raid into England in 1587. He was also ‘Arche Elliot of Clyntwood called Martins Arche’ when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; William of Hartsgarth was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1588 he was among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid. He is ‘Martin’s Arche’ in 1590 when, along with his brother Gib and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he was ‘Martin’s Arche’ when, along with Will of Heuchhouse he was accused of rieving from ‘Hallideu’. In the same year he may be the Martin’s Airchie accused of further rieving along with Hob of Bowhome and William ‘Rydlie’. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother John, as well as ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Martin of Prick- inghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Black- hall. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of taking cattle and goods from ‘Stealie’ and was ‘Martin’s Arche’, who, along with ‘Martin’s Dande’ and other Elliots and Armstrongs, was accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. Also in 1590 he was first on a list of men, including James (‘Martin’s man’), the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie ‘Cowfowle’ and 2 shiels, accused of stealing from ‘Dotland’. He was further accused in 1590 at the head of a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithaull’. He could be the ‘Arche Elliot’ further listed along with elder Will of the Steele, ‘Lang’ John and Martin’s Gib ‘the cousin’ in 1590, accused of rieving from the tenants of ‘Grein- ridge’. Also in 1590 he was explicity recorded as son of Martin on a list of Elliots (including his brother John and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Rob- son of ‘Allerweshe’. He is ‘Arche Elliot of Clent- wood’ listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elli- lots complained about by a large group of En- glishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is on a bond with Scott of Buccleuch along with Gavin of Brugh in 1599. He is also mentioned in 1621 (after his death) having previously loaned money to Chisholme of that Ilk (probably the family of his mother). His brother Gilbert succeeded to the estate. Note that he is sometimes confused with a later Archibald (who died at the Battle of Dunbar in 1650). Archibald ‘Airkie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulishiel. In 1611 George Pringle in Newhall was cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. In the same year John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for his son John. Archibald ‘Airkie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Bowholme’ in 1623 when he and Gilbert Elliott of Craignend were cautioners for Will ‘in Hisches’. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Burnughysyde’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (17th C.) possessor of the farm of ‘Overraw’ (i.e. Upper Raw) in Castleton Parish in 1632. Archibald of Arkleton (17th C.) son of John and Ester Armstrong, he was grandson of William of Falnash. He is mentioned in 1623 and was served heir to his father in 1631. In 1626 he was described as ‘Archibald son of the late John Elliot of Arkleton’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Archibald of Brugh (d.1650) eldest lawful son of Gilbert of Brugh. In 1648 he received a ‘precept lare constant’ from William Eliott of Stobs (as heir to his grandfather Gavin of Brugh) of the 10 merk lands of Over and Nether Dodburn and ‘Brandsyde Bray’. He was Corporal in John Rutherford of Edgerston’s troop, fighting for the King in the Civil War. There is a record in 1642 from him ‘for a sufficient horseman and arms for the hail lands of Edgerston’. He died at the Battle of Dunbar, when Rutherford’s troop was essentially wiped out. His wife’s name is not recorded. His children were: John, who farmed at Southfield; Gavin, mentioned in 1665 as brother of John; and Gilbert in Carllops, also mentioned in 1665. Note that he is sometimes confused with his uncle Archibald. Archibald of Philhope (17th C.) made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1642. It is unclear what branch of the Ellists he was from. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1646 (although incorrectly written ‘Scott’ in the manuscript version), probably again in 1648 (when the place is transcribed ‘Philloe’) and in 1649. He appears to have married Elizabeth Chisholme, who was widow of Simon of Philhope. In 1644 he and his wife were granted half the lands of Philhope from his step-daughter Grizell. There is some confusion over his wives, since later he was certainly married to Marion Nichol; in 1651 she was granted 8 bolls of grain yearly during her lifetime in the will of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed first under the ‘communicants’ at Philhope in 1650, followed by ‘Maly Nicoll’ (presumably his wife), then Helen and Maly Elliot (probably his daughters) and 8 others (likely to be farm workers). He was also recorded in 1663 when his eldest son William married Margaret of the Binks. Andrew of Philhope, recorded in 1662, may have been another son. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Fisher in Melrose in 1649. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1650); William (b.1652); Gavin (b.1658); and George (b.1661). The witnesses in 1652 were William...and Gavin ‘Ellot’ (who was probably a relative) and in 1661 were Gilbert (likely another relative) and George Scott. It is possible he is the same man as Archibald of Middlestead, younger son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens’, with is brothers including Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill and Gilbert of Craignend and Hartshaugh. Archibald of Falnash (d. bef. 1675) succeeded his father Robert, since his elder brother William had died. He was ‘younger of Falnash’ at the time of his sister Jean’s sasine in 1637. He is probably the ‘young Falnash’ mentioned in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, who (along with Gilbert Eliott of Stobs) apprehended William Henderson for the murder of William Elliot. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Falnash and his 10 merk lands of Hislop (in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig), as well as his 5 merk land of Langhaugh. In the same year he was separately served heir to his great-great-grandfather Archibald’s lands of Falnash, ‘Cawsya’ and ‘Tandilnes’ (probably Tullie). James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry then exercised his right of reversion of Broadlee, Langhaugh and Hislop, paying 10,500 merks for them in 1650. In 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Falnash who paid the land tax in 1663; the lands redeemed by Queensberry from ‘Ffalmash’ were valued at £716, and he separately paid tax on £360. In 1667 he paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott for what was effectively a mortgage on Falnash, and almost immediately sold the property to Gavin of Caerlenrig, his brother. Before 1645 he married Esther Scott (probably a daughter of ‘Auld Wat o Harden’).
and by 1660 secondly married Isobel Scott (who died by 1668). His children probably included: Archibald, who succeeded and may have married a widow of Gledstains of that Ilk; Grizell (b.1642), born in Hawick Parish; and Robert (b.1645), also born in Hawick Parish. Archibald ‘Superior of Falnash’ (17th C.) elder son of Archibald. He succeeded to the estate in 1675, this including ‘Cawsya’ and Tanlaw Naze as well as Falnash itself. He probably married a widow of Gledstains (perhaps William of that Ilk), since Walter Gledstains is mentioned as his son in 1677. He probably had no male children, since the Lairdship went to his cousin Ninian. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Middlester, (Midlem-mill)’ in the 1643 valuation for Castleton Parish. His lands were valued at £36. He was transcribed as ‘in Midlesteed’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and hence the earlier record perhaps was an error for Middlestead. He was recorded among local landowners of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been Archibald of Middlestead, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been father of the later tenant of Bowanhill. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded paying for use of the mortcloth. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1697 he married Helen ‘Broun’ (or perhaps ‘Burn’). Their children included: Robert (b.1704); and Francis (b.1706). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is surely related to (or the same as) the slightly later Archibald in Minto. Archibald (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brown and their children included: William (b.1704) and Francis (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were weavers James Wight and John Swan and in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is probably the resident of Minto who married Helen Gray in Hawick in 1706. His children included: William (b.1710); Margaret (b.1710); James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1715); Archibald (again, b.1719); John (b.1721); Archibald (again, b.1723); Marion (b.1726); and Helen (b.1729). It is possible that these are children of more than one family, since no mother’s name is listed. Archibald (1679/80–1757) recorded in 1722 as farmer at Bowanhill (near Teviothead), renting from the Duke of Buccleuch. The following year he rented half of the farm, with James Elliot in the other half (probably a close relative). He re-leased the lands in 1744. He was surely related to the Archibald recorded at Bowanhill in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Hutson’ at Blackcleugh in 1741. His wife was Christian Elliot (c.1692–1779). Their children included: Archibald (b.1717/8), who succeeded as tenant of Bowanhill; Thomas (1722–3/1791), who died at Bowanhill; Walter (1726–1813), who died at Binks; John (b.1729); and Isabel (b.1731). His grandson John died at Falnashburnfoot in 1832, aged 72. Archibald (18th C.) smith in Bewlie in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Archibald (1717/8–1812) son of Archibald, he succeeded to the tenancy of Bowanhill. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs there in 1797. He is probably the Archibald of Henderson’s whose son Walter was born in 1791. He lived to be 94 and was buried at Teviothead. Archibald (18th C.) cotter at Falnash. He married Margaret Scott and their son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. The witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Walter Jackson at Falnash. Archibald ‘Archie’ (18th C.) dyker in the Hawick area. One year in the earlier part of the 18th century he was hired by the tenant of Fenwick to build a dyke that was inside the bounds of Hawick Common. At the Common Riding the riders accosted him and brought him in; he was arrested and had to give a bond for £100 Scots as a promise not to do so again. This was described by George Richardson in 1767. Archibald (18th C.) born in Roberton Parish, he lived at Boonraw. In 1759 he married Elizabeth Cunningham, who was also from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1759); Jean (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1767); and Alexander (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Thomas Reid. Archibald (d.1803) weaver in Hawick, son of William. He married Janet Aitkin in 1760 and she died in 1805. Their children included: Mary (b.1761); Helen (b.1769); William (d.1805); and Robert (d.1775). He may be the son of William and Margaret Balmer born in Hawick in 1729. He could be the Archibald who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert Miles in 1766. Archibald (1761–1823) son of Archibald, a carrier from Ancrum. He became an architect along with his younger brother James. They designed some of the most imposing late 18th Elliot and Elizabeth. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1782. The witnesses were Charles Scott at Commonside and Thomas Grieve. He could be the Archibald living at Bowanhill who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Ridgedell in Commonside. Archibald (b.1800) son of John, he was born at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1825 he married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Oliver and Christina Elliot. Their children included: John (b.1827); Thomas (b.1828); and Kitty (1830–1902). In about 1830 he emigrated with his family to Delaware County, New York. There 4 more children were born: Walter (1832-1907); Margaret (1835–1901); William (b.1837); and Elizabeth. Archibald (b.c.1795) stockmaker in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living on Broughton Place. His wife was Euphemia (or Euphan), and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Margaret (b.c.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.c.1832); Isabel (b.c.1834); and Euphan (b.c.1837). Archibald (1847–1900) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He had a twin sister, Margaret, who lived in Newcastle. He married Margaret Scott and emigrated to Canada. Their children were Andrew, John, Helen (who married Wallace Hood), Eliza, Agnes (married a Dunlop), Isabella (who married Robert Laidlaw) and Marianne (who married John Hobson). Arthur of Harwood (d.1698) son of Walter of Arkleton and grandson of Adam of Meikledale. His lands were at Harwood-on-Teviot, for which he received a Crown Charter in 1698 (shortly before his death). He married Anne Disney and they had a daughter (his heiress), Margaret, who married William Elliot of Thorleishope. Arthur (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter of Arkleton. It is said that after his father had fallen out with his older brother Adam, he refused to accept the family estate, and so the lands went to his younger brother, William. Arthur (18th C.) first schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, being appointed in 1755 and resigning 2 years later. Bessie (16th/17th C.) wife of John in Redden, ‘callit Johnne of Rynsiegill’, a riever who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1610, and imprisoned in the church steeple, where he apparently hanged himself, leaving her with ‘ffyve fatherless bairns’. Branch of the Burnhead (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s accusing Englishmen Thomas Carleton and ‘Riche of the Moat’ of stealing 200 cattle and 40 horses from Burnhead. It is unclear whether his name is a transcription error or a nickname of some sort. He must have been related to ‘Hobbie’ who was Laird of Burnhead only a few years earlier. Charles Edward (1693–1763) eldest son of Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick. It is likely that his grandfather was Robert of Larriston. Along with his (unnamed) brother, he is said to have taken part in the 1715 Jacobite rebellion and was wounded at Preston. He escaped to Holland, where he married a Dutch lady. He then worked for the Dutch East India Company, living for a while in Java (where his brother also lived) before settling in Essex (after he was no longer considered an outlaw in Britain). There he was appointed Searcher and Tidewaiter in H.M. Customs at Burnham-on-Crouch, where he also owned a mill. He had 12 children, although only 1 son (Charles, b.1752, who wrote his name ‘Elliott’ and became a wealthy cabinetmaker in London) and 2 daughters survived; the first 9 were born on Java and died young. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95) 3rd son of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. He was Admiral of the Fleet 1870–73. He was recorded living at Bonjedward House in a directory of 1868. He firstly married Louisa, daughter of Sir Edward Blackett and secondly married Harriette Emily Liddell, daughter of the 1st Earl of Ravensworth. They had one surviving son, Bertram Charles. Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815) son of shepherd John, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1818 the family emigrated to America. By about 1840 he had moved to Easton, Pennsylvania, where he became a Presbyterian minister. He was Professor of Hebrew Language and New Testament Exegesis in Chicago. There are other ministers of the same name with whom he is easily confused. A portrait of him exists. Col. Charles (1824–88) son of James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He was Colonel in the Royal Artillery and died in London. In 1859 he married Christina, daughter of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Balmain, and she died in 1873. In 1877 he secondly married Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse. His children were Lieut. Walter, George Ramsay, Elizabeth Maule and Mabel. Charlotte ‘Black Charlotte’ (18th/19th C.) only daughter of Adam and grand-daughter of William, 1st Laird. of Wolfelee. Her father was a merchant in Danzig, who married Rosa Leonardi there. She inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso from her uncle Robert (who had tried to leave it to his nephew James, but the will was insufficiently stamped). Christopher ‘Kirstie’ (16th/17th C.) only known child of Robert, ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’. He is recorded in 1611 when he took part in a raid on Robsons in England. Later that year he was afterwards sentenced to banishment with his wife and children by the Jedburgh court. He is recorded as ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’ in 1611 when Robert of Redheugh and several others were cautioners for him and his wife. In 1618 he is recorded as a fugitive. He had at least one child, Robert. This is probably the Robert ‘sone to Hobbeis Chrystie’ recorded as a fugitive in 1642. Cornelius ‘Auld Corrie’ (1732–1821), W.S., 2nd Laird of Wolfelee, eldest son of William, the 1st Elliot Laird. He succeeded to the Lairdship after his older brother Thomas had died. He also followed in his father’s legal business in Edinburgh’s Lawmarket, becoming Writer to the Signet. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, when ‘of Woollie junior’. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was also one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. Also in 1780 he was the lawyer for the legal aspects of several new voters being added to the county roll after being granted liferent of lands by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and others. He was himself on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the Cornelius who purchased Barnhills from Matthew Stewart in 1780 (and appears to have sold it back). Also in 1780 he matriculated arms, proving descent from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. By 1788 his estate included Mackside, Broadhaugh, Blackcleughmouth, Catlee, Easter Swanshiel, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill and Wolfelee, as well as parts of Stonedge and Kilknouwe. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, privately described as probably a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot and also as ‘Brother-in-law to Adam Ogilvie, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch’ (although that appears to be an error for another Elliot branch). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son James. In 1811 he was listed as owner of ‘Woollie’, as well as Catlee, Catleeshaw, Easter Swanshiel, ‘Shiel’s Lands’, part of Kirknowe, lands that were formerly part of Stonedge, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Mackside and Blackcleughmouth. In 1765 in Leith he married Margaret, daughter of James Rannie, and she died in 1796. They had at least 6 children: William (1766–1807), a Major who died in Vellore, Madras, and had his portrait painted by Raeburn; Mary (b.1767), who married Gen. Sir Thomas Dallas in Madrid, and in later life lived with her sister Margaret; Eleanor (or Eleanor), who married Robert Anderson, merchant in Leith; Magaret Jane, who was unmarried; James (1772–1855), who succeeded; and Janet Hyndford, who married Sir John Gibson-Carmichael of Castlecraig and later John, 12th Lord Elphinstone from Edinburgh. He lived in Queen Street, Edinburgh, but also held several country residences. His will is in the Peebles Commissary Court Records in 1823. Cuthbert (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1560. His wife Christine Roberton, widow of John Hogg of Corsehill in Bowden, gave lands to her daughter Bess Hogg, with ‘Vatte Elwand’ also being named. David (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but William (also son of William) was probably his brother. David (16th C.) recorded as witness in Selkirk in 1562. David (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the steadings of Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William and David Elliot are also listed. David (d.bef. 1570) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He was a tenant in his father’s lands of Caveling in Cavers Parish. In 1564 John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank accused him of stealing 80 sheep from his farm at Hassendeanankirk. William of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Cavers (proprietors of the lands of Caveling) were ordered to present him before the Privy Council. In 1567 he was given notice to remove himself as tenant from the 6 merk lands of Chamberlain Newton by George Turnbull of ‘Wowlie’. He was probably the ‘Dand Elliot of Cavilling’ for whom John Edmonson of that Ilk was cautioner in 1567/8 for him to remain in ward on this side of the Tweed. The Laird of Edmonson was also surety for him in 1569. A decree of removal was given against his widow Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1573 his widow was said to have encouraged her 2 sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack James Storie, who had been placed on the other half of the farm (sold by George Turnbull to Gavin Eliott of Baillielee and Stobs, who was coincidentally also from the Elliots of Horsleyhill). His wife must therefore have remarried to a Scott. David (16th C.) son of ‘Elder Will’. Along with his brother Martin he signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of their whole part of the clan. It seems likely they were closely related to the Elliots of Heuchhouse, but a different Martin from there, along with his brother John of Heuchhouse, were listed separately in 1584. David (16th C.) recorded as ‘Davie Elliot of Bra-cley’ in 1584, when he was one of the signatories of the band of assurance with the English Wardens. He was one of 3 men to give assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry, suggesting that ‘Bracley’ was an error for Braudlie. David (16th C.) listed as ‘Davie Elliot of Hongrige’ in 1584. Along with David of ‘Bracley’ (probably Braudlie) and Will of Mosspatrickhope, he gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. His designation is probably a misunderstanding of some sort, but it is unclear where he was from. David ‘Davie’ of Dinlees (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when his son Adam was part of a group of Armstrongs and others accused of rieving. David ‘Davie, the Car-linge’ (d.1598) probably a son of ‘Elder Will’. He was listed in 1569 as ‘David Carling his brother’ along with Elder Will’s eldest son, when ‘Elder Will the Tod’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for their behaviour. He is listed in 1574 along with his son, among Scots rebels who were reset in England. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Croizers, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men; he is there recorded as ‘Davye Elliot called the Car-linge’. He was also recorded in 1588, when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon (from the Edinburgh area) were convicted of helping bring in him and his accomplices to steal cattle. This took place in 1588, the accomplices being ‘Hob Billie’ Eliott and 2 Armstrongs, suggesting they were from Liddesdale. He was ‘Davye the Carlinge’ among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England in 1589. His son ‘Eddie Eliott’ (probably Adam) was listed among Border-ers complained about for another raid on a farm in England in 1589 and further recorded in 1590, among Elliots accused of a raid. He was ‘Davie the Carlinge’ listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croizers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hed-ley of ‘Garret Sheills’. He may be the David who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1598 he was ‘Davyd Elliot alias Carlyne’ who killed William Ogle on a raid in Gilsland, and was in turn killed by a group of Ogles and Shaftoes. David ‘Hob’s Davie’ of Eweslees (16th C.) presumably son of Robert. He is listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. His name appears as ‘Hobs Davie of Dewes leases’. David (16th/17th C.) son of John of Bowholm. He was listed in 1605 among men of Liddesdale declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. David (17th C.) Treasurer of Selkirk in the 1650s and 1660s. He is probably the ‘el-der merchant burgess of Selkirk’ recorded in dis-charges for annual rent in 1666, 1668 and 1679. An undated account from him to the Burgh of Selkirk relates to the town coble and other matters. He may be the deceased David whose house rental is referred to in Selkirk in 1709. His son David was witness t a discharge for him in 1664. David (17th/18th C.) merchant and Burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded as ‘younger’ in 1708, and hence probably son of the earlier David. Probably the same merchant David was recorded in Selkirk in 1723 and 1737. David (18th/19th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1797, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Dorothea Helen (d.1925) daughter of Sir Walter. In 1866 she married William Elliot-Lockhart, heir to the Lairdships of Borthwickbrae and Cleghorn. The marriage was held in Hobbkirk Kirk, but officiated by her uncle, Rev. John Elliot-Bates, who was an English clergyman (this event causing much local consternation at the time). On the death of her brother Edward she became heir in line to the Elliots of Wolfelee, and also of Borthwickbrae, following her marriage to William Elliot-Lockhart in 1866. She was succeeded by her daughter Mary Charlotte Elliot-Lockhart of Cleghorn. Edmund (13th C.) recorded as ‘Edmundus de Elaund’ in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained about the actions of ‘Johanne de Cram-melyngton’ in the town of ‘Corburg’. He could be an early member of the Elliot family. Ed-mund (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is given as ‘emmundi elwalkd’. Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54) son of John Edmund. He was born in Calcutta and died at Varna, Bulgaria. He served with the 79th Regiment. He married Matilda Inglis. Their son Edmund Halbert was born posthumously and baptised in Wilton in 1854. Edward Hay Mackenzie 6th Laird of Wolfelee (1852–1920) 3rd son of Sir Walter. He was born in Vizagapatam, Madras and came to Britain at age 3, growing up mainly in Ayrshire and Wigtownshire. He attended Harrow, tried unsuccessfully for the Indian Civil Service and spent 3 months in a commission with the Scottish Borders Militia, then became a Lieutenant with the 82nd Regiment from 1874–88 before transferring to the 40th Regiment, the South Lancashire Regiment, where he became a Major. He also served as Private Secretary to Lord Glasgow, serving under him in New Zealand. He succeeded his eldest brother James T.S. in 1892, another elder brother Walter Blair having died in 1869. He retired early, in 1899, to attend to the family estates. He served again in the Boer War (going there at his own expense), but was invalided home, and lived for a while in London. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. In 1905 he married Edith Margaret, daughter of John Charles Crawford, minister of Canehill, Coulson, Surrey. On the couple’s home-coming to Wolfelee after the wedding a huge bonfire was litten on Wolfelee Hill. He made his home more permanently at Wolfelee about 1908, but sold the estate in 1912 (to Sir Robert Laidlaw) and died without issue. The heir of the line then became his sister, Dorothea Helen. Elizabeth (16th C.) married Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. She became a widow and secondly married John ‘Wynterhop’ (i.e. Winthrope) according to a marriage contract of 1580. This was a double arrangement, where her daughter Janet Waugh was also to marry Robert, eldest son of John Winthrope. Additionally the young couple were to live ‘in housshald’ with her and her new husband, being servants to them, but inheriting their lands and property when they died. Her son James Waugh was also to live with them until he reached the age of majority. The contract, witnessed in Selkirk, also contained a brief list of her property, including livestock and grain from Ashkirk and annual rent on a tenement in Selkirk. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (d.1811) teacher in Hawick. Her death record states she was ‘Late Schoolmistress’, but it is unclear where her school was. Esmond (1895–1917) full name Gavin William Esmond. Son of the 4th Earl of Minto and elder brother of the 5th Earl, he was a Lieutenant in the Scots Guards in WWI. He was killed at Ypres and commemorated at Mendinghem Military Cemetery. His sister, Lady Violet Astor gave money to establish a memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital, which was opened by the Prince of Wales in 1924. The face of the Minto War Memorial statue (by Thomas J. Claperton) is supposed to have been modelled on his. Esther (d.1664) younger daughter of the last Robert of Redheugh. In 1653 she married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton. Her father left her the lands of Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat. She died in Inverness, where she was buried. Here gravestone was engraved ‘Here lies the bodie of ane pious and vertuous gentlewoman called Hester Eliot spouse to Master Alex. Clerk minister of Inverness and 2nd lawful daughter to the very honourable Robert Eliot of Larriston in Liddesdale and Lady Jane Stuart . . .’. They had no children and her husband died in 1683. Frances Anna Maria ‘Lady Elliot’, ‘Countess Russell’, ‘Fanny’ (1815–98) 2nd daughter of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. She was born at Minto House, spent much of her youth there, then 2 years in Berlin with her family, before they moved to London in 1835. The leading Whig politician of the day, Lord John Russell proposed to her in 1840. He was a widower, 20 years older than her, and she refused. After persistence she changed her mind the following year and they were married, meaning she was step-mother to 6 children. She appears to have had a keen interest in political issues of the day. She is said to have disliked London life and missed her life in rural Scotland. Her husband was created Earl Russell in 1861 and finally retired from active politics in 1868. She had 4 children, including John (Lord Amberley) and Rollo, as well as several miscarriages. Lord Amberley died in 1876 and so her 2 grandsons, Frank and Bertrand (the philosopher) came to live with them; she probably had more influence on Bertrand than anyone else. Her husband died in 1878 and she survived him by 20 years, dying in their home at Pembroke Lodge. Francis ‘Copshaw’ (16th/17th C.) accused of stealing 2 horses belonging to ‘Jock Storrie in Lewin’ and ‘Antone of the Scub’. He was tried by the Commissioners’ Court in 1622, cleared of the theft, but found guilty of reset and sentenced to be hanged. He was probably related to the John of Copshaw who was denounced as a rebel in 1607 and may be the brother of Robert of Copshaw who was listed among Elliots and Armstrongs declared as rebels in 1611 for illegally hunting and also failing to show up for a jury in 1612. He is probably also the Francis son of ‘Thom of Copschaw’ who was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Francis (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was described as the eldest lawful son and heir of William ‘called of Hartisheugh’ in 1637 when he was served heir to his brother Robert. In 1642 he was served heir to his mother Jean in the Mill of Edgerston, the lands of ‘Rigg, Renshead, etc.’ However, Robert Rutherford of Edgerston purchased these lands from him a few years later. It is said that his line became extinct, but it is also claimed that he might be the ancestor of the Elliots of Dinlabyre. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Laing and their children included: Janet (b.1688). William (b.1707) could also be his child. Francis (17th C.) listed as resident at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gullenflatt & Greeholme’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Crackuool’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. In 1698 he is recorded as cottar in Kirkhouses. He married Bessie Stoddart and had children: Isobel (b.1689); Francis (b.1692); and Thomas (b.1698). Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably the same place as Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1701 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter, who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He may thus have been related to Walter. Also in 1701 he witnessed a baptism for smith George Scott. He was probably the innkeeper who witnessed baptisms in 1702 for Baille Walter Graham and in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport, suggesting that he himself lived in that area). Probably the same Francis was ‘Vintner’ in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for James Leithhead and in 1706 for carrier David Minto. He was ‘in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism for James Scott ‘Laird’ in 1708 (his step-son James Scott ‘Doctor’ was also witness to a baptism for the same man). In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the Francis whose son William was born in Hawick in 1707. He may be the Francis who witnessed a baptism (along with Baille Walter) for merchant Walter in 1713. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and for wright John Pringle in 1716. Perhaps the same Francis paid tax for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694 and was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the Francis who acted as a cautioner in 1706 to James Scott and John Graham, when they were imprisoned and fined for being the main instigators in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. Francis (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae. He was apprenticed to merchant John Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1710. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1721. His wife was Helen Anderson. Their son Walter was baptised in 1721, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Irvine. Francis of Fenwick (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Gavin of Caerlenrig. He bought Outer-siderig in 1719. He married Rachel Langlands (who was probably a cousin or other relative of his brother Robert of Caerlenrig’s wife Agnes Langlands). They had 2 sons: Robert, Burgess of Galashow, who married Jean Scott and Catherine Elliot from Arkleton; and William, about whom nothing is known. He may also have had a daughter Rachel who married Walter Scott of How-cleuch and Wauchope. Francis (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Murray, and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Ann (b.1746); Isabel (b.1751); Jean (b.1754); and John (b.1756). Francis (18th C.) resident at Harwood on Teviot, brother of Thomas, who was also there. In 1740 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot, tenant in Slaidhills (who may also have been related to them). In 1746 he and Thomas (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he and his brother Thomas were connected to other Elliots. Francis ‘Frank’ (1733–79) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a Skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1766, along with John (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister). He witnessed another baptism for merchant John Oliver and Christian (his sister) in 1772. He died unmarried. Francis (b.1758) resident of Roberton Parish, son of James and Margaret Scott. He was living at Eilrig in 1786 and Craikburn in 1788. In 1785 he married Mary Hislop (b.1754). Their children included: James (1786–1859); John (1788–1851); Margaret (c.1790–1859), who died on Albion Place; and William (1792–1861), who died in Hawick. Francis (b.c.1800) from England, he was a farm labourer living at Ryeleahead in southern Castleton Parish in 1841. His wife was Betty and their children included Matthew, Walter, John, Helen and Katherine. Francis (1819–94) son of John, labourer and dyker at Parkhill. In 1851 he was a labourer at Parkhillhaugh. By 1861 he was a mason at Deanburnhaugh. He first married Christine Wintrup (1825–53) from Lilliesleaf in 1840; she died at Roberton Burnfoot. Their children were Andrew, James and Frank, who all died in infancy, as well as John (b.1841), Douglas (b.1843), Jane (b.1845) and Robert (b.1848). He secondly married Mary Burnet (1827–64) from Drumelzie, who died at Deanburnhaugh; they had Marion (1854–79), James Proctor (b.1857), born at Branzholme Town and perhaps Francis. He thirdly married Elizabeth Paterson (1832–98) in Hawick in 1870, and she died in Hawick. Their children were: William (b.1870); James (b.1871), blacksmith at Boucheur Bridge; and Francis (b.1874). He died at Damfoot and the family are buried at Bothwick Waas. Gabriel of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with John of the Park, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. Since ‘Gabriel’ is an unfamiliar first name, it may be that the English report confused the name. Gavin (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1526/7 as ‘Gavin Elwald’ the Earl of Bothwell’s Bailie in a document relating to the lands of Harden. Perhaps the same Gavin was witness to documents for Ker of Primside relating to the lands of Softlaw in 1530/1. Probably the same Gavin was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for about 1532, marrying Margaret, daughter of Andrew ‘Makduell’ (i.e. McDougall) of Makerstoun; he received 200 merks from Andrew Ker in Primside and gave to Margaret his lands of ‘Toftlawe’ and ‘Boucherflat’ in the Barony of Hassendean. The same Gavin probably witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. Also in that year had a letter of reversion to William Scott regarding the lands of Nether Galalaw, with Thomas acting as his procurator. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots, but it is possible he was the same man as Gavin of Horsleyhill. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Archibald. With Archibald, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Flaskvod’ to Fairnilee to answer for crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1543 in English documents as ‘Gawen Elwald Scotsman’. Along with a large group of other Elliots they attacked Over Howden in Lauderdale, taking a prisoner, along with 30 oxen and cows. He also led a group of Elliots who took 27 head of cattle, 40 sheep and other goods from the Laird of Cessford’s farm of Newton. He may be the same man as Gavin of Ramsiegill or Gavin of Horseleyhill. Gavin of Ramsiegill (d.c.1563) chief of a branch of the Elliots of Liddesdale, with the seat being near Riccarton. The connection between this branch and other branches is unknown. In 1563 he and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon ‘Grey Will of the Kylf Fuird’. Later in 1563 his son ‘Jock Elliot’ was subject of a bond by Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, to enter him before Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, in which he is described as deceased. The Gavin of Ramsiegill recorded soon afterwards was presumably another son. Gavin of Horseleyhill (d.bef. 1562) probably a grandson of William of Larriston, who married the daughter and heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. However, the names of his mother and father are not known. In 1543 he is ‘of Hoslaw hill’ when he was involved in a transaction with Ninian Cranston over a place called ‘Schawes’ in Ettrick Forest. In about 1547 he and his 3 sons, Robert, William and Andrew, were charged with killing Hugh Douglas; no details of this event are known. He was one of the signatories of the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551, when he was a tenant in Horsleyhill. Also in 1551 he purchased Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) from Gilbert Ker of Primside. He was granted a Charter by Lord Home in 1555, making him 1st Laird of Horsleyhill, as well as other lands. He married twice, the name of his first wife being unknown and the second being a sister of McDougall of Makerstoun. Around the late 1550s there was a dispute over the lands of Newbigging (part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean) between his children by his first wife and those by his second wife. This was resolved through a panel consisting of Gilbert Ker of Primside, David Turnbull of Wauchope, William Elliot in Larriston (probably a relative) and Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He had 6 sons: Robert, 2nd Laird; William, who later became the 5th Laird; Andrew, also called ‘Dan’; David, tenant at Caveling; Gavin, who was the first of the family to own Stobs; and Archibald (possibly ‘Archie Keen’). Note that the family name was often spelled ‘Elliot’ at that time. He may be the same as ‘Gilbert of Horsliehill’ (perhaps an error in transcription) who witnessed the marriage contract between William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray, ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. He may be the Gavin who in 1534 sold the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott of Hassendean, with Thomas acting as his procurator. He was already deceased in 1561/2 when his son Robert was involved with a land transaction in Selkirk. Gavin (16th C.) brother of Archie’s Will. He is listed in 1561 among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Gavins. Gavin (d.1565) 3rd Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, who was executed only a year before he died. He was succeeded by his brother William. In 1564 he was ‘Gawaine Elliot, sone to unquhime Robert Elliot of Horsliehill’ who was heritable owner of part of the lands of Caveling; his ‘fadir bruther’ (i.e. uncle) and tutor at that time was William in Horsleyhill. He may be the ‘Gawane’ who was listed along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scots) in the trial over the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1564, for which he was acquitted along with Archibald. He may be the Guideman of Horsliehill listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was listed along with William of Larriston and ‘Gavin’s Willie’ of Falnash in a follow-up of the same case of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He may be the Gawine Elliot of Hosliehill who was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme as one of the men who owed him for the teinds for several years earlier; if so then he probably owned Skelfhill and Peelbrae. However, this could well be Gavin Elliott of Stobs, since it is hard to separate these nearly contemporary Gavins. Gavin in Skelfhill (see Gavin Elliott of Stobs). Gavin of Ramsiegill (16th C.) possibly son of the previous Gavin. He was one of the 10 Liddesdale thieves held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. ‘Hob Elliot of the Ramsigill’ is also listed, so they must have been either brothers or father and son. Also in the 1580s, along with John of Heuchhouse he accused a band of Englishmen from raiding his lands. His seat was probably somewhere near Riccarton. Gavin of Hoscoat (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1579/80 of committing raids into England. He was ‘Gawen Elliot of Hostcoit’, accused along with Robert of Redheugh and Walter Scott of Harden of a raid on Coquet Water. William of Hoscoat was also among those listed, and hence it is unclear which of the two was the Laird at the time, or whether they were the same men as other Elliots, with other designations. Gavin 2nd Laird of Falnash (d.c.1584) son of Archibald. He appears to have avoided being involved in many disputes, which is unusual for the time. He is listed in 1561 (as brother of Archie’s Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He is among Elliots who had a bond in 1561/2 with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, to enter Thomas Routledge into prison at Ferniehirst (the others were his father Archie of Falnash, John of Copshaw and ‘Elder Will’). In a bond of 1562 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst he is described as ‘of the Merynes’ (i.e. ‘Merry Naze’). He is first recorded as Laird of Falnash in 1566 in an altercation with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig concerning violent profits from certain lands. In 1569 he signed a bond of security in Hawick, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch acting as surety for him; he is recorded as ‘Gawin Elliot in Fallinesche’ and 14 tenants of his are also listed. When he failed to appear in 1569, Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was to be sent to St. Andrews as a pledge, with Will of Gorrenberry, Gavin Eliott of Skelfhill (later of Stobs) and Sim of Dodburn designated as his relief pledges. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He was entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was listed in 1576 among local Lairds who acted jointly as sureties for Hob Elliot, ‘Mirk Hob’ in Penchrise as well as ‘Vicar’s Hob’ Elliot, pledging that they would refrain from theft, but in default of the pledge by 1578/9. In 1583/4 he was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was dead by the end of 1584. He had at least 4 children: William, who succeeded; Archibald of Muselee; Gilbert; and Alexander ‘of Fallon’. Gavin Scot’s Hob’s Gavin (16th C.) son of ‘Scottis Hob’, hence his father was clearly Robert, and he was related to the Elliots of Park.

In 1578 there was a dispute between John Cunningham of Glengarnock, who had held him as a pledge for about three years, and John Hamilton of Stonehouse, who was supposed to receive him, but let him go. In 1580 he was among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle and presented to the Privy Council by their keeper, Malcolm Douglas of Mains. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie and others were cautioned for his not appearing and fined in 1582/3; he is recorded there as ‘Scottis Hobbis Gawin’ and ‘Hobbiis Jok’ was one of the cautioners, who may have been his brother. He is ‘Scotis Hobbe’ when recorded among the Elliots of Park in 1583. Gavin (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Hobbie and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. They were also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Gowan Ellot called the clarke’ listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. It is unclear why his nickname should be the ‘Clerk’ (perhaps jocularly for cleric, scholar or scribe). It is possible he was the ‘Gawine Ellott of [ ]’ (with the designation blank) listed first in 1590 among other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. Gavin of Swinstead (16th C.) recorded ‘in Swinsteis’ in 1576 when he was ‘surety found not to molest’ with the Privy Council. He was also recorded as ‘sometime in Newbigging, and now in Swinsteis’ in 1578/9; presumably he was also the Gavin in Newbigging recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he was among the sureties who swore that they had earlier presented ‘Adie of the Schawis’. He was also listed similarly in 1581, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was also listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council to discuss keeping peace on the Border, where he is recorded as ‘Gawin Ellot of Swinsteidis’. It seems probable he was the same man as Gavin of Brugh, brother of Robert of Redheugh, who held the lands of Swinstead (and not the same as the contemporary son of Martin of Braidlie or the Laird of Baillielee and Stobs). In 1581 he is probably the Gavin, listed along with William as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Baillielee, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is given as ‘Wilcox’ Gawen Ellott’; it is unclear what this means, but one possibility is that he was ‘Will Cock’s Gawin’, and perhaps son of Will who was related to ‘Cock’ Crozier. ‘Wilkoke Elwald’, recorded in 1541, could have been his father. Gavin ‘John’s Gavin’ of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when he was accused of cutting off the nose of Thomas Tweedie ‘in Dunsyre’. A group of Armstrongs were separately charged. Robert Elliot, younger of Fahnash, acted as cautioner for him. Given his nickname, his father was presumably John. He must have been related to Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton, who was executed in 1608. Gavin (d.1606/7) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill, see Gavin Eliott of Stobs. Gavin of Hillhouse (16th/17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to have plotted the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He was listed as ‘Gawane Ellott of Hilhouse’ and ‘Gawine Ellott in Halhouse’. Gavin of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Dinlabyre and Braidlie. He is probably the Gavin, brother of Robert ‘of Drumlybye’ who was denounced as a rebel in 1611, along with several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Coklek’ in 1611 when Robert of Fahnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. Gavin of Brugh (d.bef. 1631) youngest son of Robert of Redheugh and Jean Scott, and brother of Robert the 16th chief. He was probably raised partly by his step-father, Gavin Elliot of Stobs. He may be the Gavin, who, along with his brother Archibald (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1581 witnessed a transaction between Gavin of Baillielee (later of Stobs) and James McDougall of Makerstoun. He may be the ‘Gawan Ellot his brother’ recorded along with Robert of Redheugh and other Elliots in 1583. He is ‘of Brugh’ when he witnessed a deed in 1597 and is recorded as ‘in the Burgh’ in 1599 when he had a bond with the Laird of Buccleuch. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. He was among Elliots who raided into England in 1603 and later had remission for this crime. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about being attacked by servants of Douglas of Cavers, specifically that William Douglas of Whittiggs and others confronted his family and servants on their way home from the Kirk, ‘threw thame af thair horssis, pullit thame in myris, struck them with horse wands about thair lugeis and upoun thair face’, and violently took his sons sword; however, the men were acquitted. He helped his nephew Robert of Redheugh in his dispute with Buccleuch, thus putting himself in debt. In 1621 Robert granted him Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae, as well as discharging him from all previous bonds. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of Selkirk jail (the others being Robert Scott of Thirlestane, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and John ‘Skaillis’). He married Margaret Chisholme (who may have been a daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk) and they had 4 children: Archibald, who died before him; Gilbert, who succeeded; Robert, mentioned in 1621; and William, who became Provost of Peebles. However, the first couple of generations of this family are quite uncertain, and it has been suggested that 2 of his sons were illegitimate. He was certainly the first of the Elliots of Brugh, a family that was well represented in the Hawick area for at least the next 200 years. In 1631 his widow sold Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae to William Elliott, younger of Stobs. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘of the Schawis’ in 1611 when William of Falnash was cautious for him in Jedburgh. He was further ‘callit of ye Schawis’ in 1623; Rowie Foster stole sheep from ‘Callshiels’ owned by him and John Nixon in Lawshill. He was probably related to the earlier Elliots of Shaw. Gavin (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of Burnmouth, Over Heuchhouse, Nether Hightrees, Dyke, Kilford and Byrestead in 1632. Given the lands he owned, he was probably of some significance among local Elliots. Perhaps the same Gavin is recorded in the same 1632 document as joint tenant, along with John Scott, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Closse alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. Gavin of Caerlenrig (17th C.), 4th son of Robert of Falnash. He was mentioned as early as 1635, when he witnessed the marriage of his brother William. He had a charter of Caerlenrig from Sir Gilbert of Stobs in 1668. In about 1668 he purchased Falnash from his brother Archibald, and settled it on his son Ninian. He was ‘in Carlenrick rige’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Cavers Parish. He was ancestor of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. He married Janet Elliot by 1655 and their children included: Ninian, who succeeded as Laird of Falnash; Robert ‘of Carlenrickrig’ (b.1655), baptised in Hawick Parish; Francis of Fenwick; and Mary. Rev. Gavin (d.bef. 1678) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1645, he became minister at Kirkton in 1652. However, he was deprived in 1662 (for refusing to conform to Episcopacy), and forced to leave not only his manse, but the bounds of the Presbytery. His sons were Robert and William both ‘in Borthwickbrae’. He was presumably related to the Elliots of Horsleyhill, Borthwickbrae, Borthwickshiels, etc., but the precise relationship is unclear. The name of his wife and date of his death are both unknown. Gavin of Outerside Rig (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. Ninian of Eweslees was his grandfather, and appointed his guardian. His brothers were William of Unthank and James in Harwood. In 1662 he was among a long list of men fined and given a pardon by the King after the Restoration. In 1678 he paid the land tax for lands in Wilton Parish valued at £360. Gavin (17th C.) described as ‘in Stob’ in 1668 when his son Gilbert became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This is unlikely to have been the same man as Gavin Elliott of Grange, since his son Gilbert was the 1st Lord Minto. Gavin 4th Laird of Midlem Mill (1727–86) eldest surviving son of Robert and Katherine Elliot. He was born in Old Langholm Castle. He left a sort of diary in the family bible. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and then went to college in Edinburgh for 3 years, lived at Midlem Mill for 18 months and moved to London in 1743. There he joined the counting house of Alexander Coutts, before sailing to Virginia in 1745 where he opened a store. Returning to Britain in 1747, he lived in London and then in 1752 moved to Danzig as a clerk with Gibson & Hogg. He succeeded his father in 1753, but there was a large debt owed to Col. William of Wells, and the family estate was sold by the trustees in about 1756. He subsequently lived in London. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Anna Catharine Clemens in Danzig in 1758 (and he received a large dowry). They had 7 children, including Robert (who died aged 11), Catherine Elizabeth (who married Rev. William Lance), Helena Constantia (who died young), Clemens (also died young), Anna Renata (who married Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and received money in the will of her relative William, son of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Gilbert (died aged 12) and William (the only surviving son, who became Rector of Simonburn). He died in London and was buried in Greenwich Church.

Gavin of Fenwick (18th C.) last Elliot of Fenwick. He was son of Robert and Katherine, daughter of William of Arkleton. He may have also had a brother James, for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1758. In a pedigree of 1811 (by J.W. Henderson) he is said to have lived with a loose woman and had a son (who went abroad in about 1796 and died), as well as several daughters. He eventually acknowledged her as his wife, in England, so his children could succeed to Arkleton.

Gavin (b.c.1800) born in Channellkirk, Berwickshire, he was a stockingmaker in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was probably on Sunnyside and in 1861 was on Westside. He married Isabella Best, from Cavers and their children included: Agnes (b.1824); Jane (or Jeany, b.1826); and Henry (b.1828), who was a mason.

Gedwin (18th/19th C.) listed at Haggiehaugh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Observations on the Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear if his forename was an error or how he could have been related to other Ellios. George (15th/16th C.) chaplain who is recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairmile in 1526. His surname is ‘Elwand’ and John was also a witness. Probably the same ‘sir George Ellott’ was witness to a document for David Pringle of Galashiels and Smalholm in 1529. Also in 1529 he was recorded as ‘curate in Lyndene’ when he solemnized the marriage of John Ruthford of Hunthill and Christian Pringle. Probably the same ‘George Elwand chaplain’ witnessed a transaction related to lands at Bowhill in 1539/40 and another for the Pringles of Blindlee in 1541. Either he or a different George ‘Elwand’ was recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other Ellios. George (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘Georgii Elwald’ when he had remission for associating with ‘Jacobi Elwald’. It is unclear how he was related to other Ellios. George (16th C.) recorded in 1550 as curator to the sister of Janet Chapman in Selkirk. He was directed to deliver money to his mother Bessie, which was to go to Margaret Chapman, who was in England. The agreement was signed in his house in Selkirk.

George (16th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshie. In 1563/4 he was listed along with Will ‘of the Burnmouthis’, Alexander and 2 Croziers who were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. George ‘the Cleg’ (16th C.) named in a pledge of 1576 by James Langlands of that Ilk, along with the ‘cobobman to the lard of Langlands’. In 1578/9 the pledge to the Privy Council for the same pair of men was considered broken with the joint cautioners being liable, namely Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. George ‘Jamie’s Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Ellios. His name is recorded as ‘George Elliott called James Geordie’, but it is unclear which James his father was.

George (d.bef. 1580) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1580 his first-born son Thomas resigned all rights to his lands in Lindean. George ‘Buggerback’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Nixons and Ellios complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on ‘Haslegyll’, as well as separately for stealing 12 ewes and a ram. Others named included servants of William of Larriston, suggesting that he was from this part of Liddesdale. He was listed in another complaint in the same year, and said to be brother of Archie ‘called dogpynle’. Rev. George (1676–1748) younger son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1701. Also in 1701 he and his father witnessed the baptism of the twin daughters of his brother Gilbert. In 1711 he was ordained as Minister of Hownam and remained there until his death. He paid the window tax for Hownam Manse in 1748. In 1710 he married Sarah, daughter of Hugh Lind, Bailie of Edinburgh. Their children were Arabella (baptised in Kirkton, b.1712), Margaret, John, George Augustus, Robert, Sara, Jane, Janet and James. All but the first child were baptised in Hownam Parish. George (18th C.) younger son of Walter in Brugh. He is said to have lived in Cuba, but nothing else is known about him. George (18th C.) farmer at Burnmouth in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. It is unclear how he might have related to other Ellios in Liddesdale.

George (1729/30–1805) tenant farmer at Doorpool in Rulewater. He was probably brother of William, tenant at Lanton Mains. He may be the George at Ruletownhead on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Doorpool on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Doorpool in the same year. He may also be the George who owned parts of Ruletownhead, 'Bossithill' and Burnkinford that were among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by 1811. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included: William (b.1767), who died in infancy; Mabel (b.1768); Mary (b.1770); George (b.1770); and William (1772–1855), who farmed at Doorpool. The family are recorded on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1786); Gilbert (b.1789); Janet (b.1791); Mary (b.1793); James (b.1795); William (b.1797); and John (b.1800). George of Larriston (18th/19th C.) see George Fraser Scott-Elliot Adm. Sir George (1784–1863) 2nd son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He joined the Navy and at a young age took part in the capture of the Danish Fleet at Copenhagen Harbour, led by Lord Nelson. He accompanied his father (then Governor-General of Bengal) out to Java, and on the trip made one of the only known sketches of John Leyden. He captained H.M.S. Victory 1827–32, and was later promoted to Admiral, as well as Lord of the Admiralty. He was also General of the Mint in Scotland. A Whig in politics, he became the first M.P. for Roxburghshire after the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, defeating Lord John Scott. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Bill and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1833. In 1834 many of the Whig members of the Jedforest Club resigned when the Chairman refused to toast his health. He was defeated by Scott in the 1835 election. It is said that he helped get John Ewen appointed as minister at Hobkirk. In 1810 in Calcutta he married Eliza Cecilia, daughter of James Ness of Osgodly, Yorkshire and they had 9 children, one of whom, George, was also an Admiral and M.P. He may be the 'Hon. Captain Elliot, Teviotbank' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. George Mackenzie (1822–56) 5th son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolflee. He went to Australia with his brother Thomas. A stone was erected to his memory, with an inscription describing that he died at Gracemore Fitzroy River. Gideon of Horsleyhill (16th/17th C.) along with 'Auld Wat' of Harden and Gideon Murray, he was responsible for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale) in 1599, for which they obtained remission in 1604. He (probably wrongly transcribed as 'Gilbert') was one of the landowners of Hassendean who the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to evict in 1603. He was also recorded in 1611 as witness to a marriage contract of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray. Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1712) third son of Robert of Bewlie, tenant in Borthwickshields. He became an apprentice surgeon in Edinburgh in 1681. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1689 and was Chair in 1693/4 and 1699/1700. In 1695 he and Thomas Burnet were employed by the Council of King William to visit the Earl of Home, then a prisoner in the Hirsel, and report whether his health would allow him to be transferred to Edinburgh Castle. In 1691 he married Margaret Cunningham, heiress of North Sinton and was then designated 'of North Sinton'. In 1705 he secondly married Jean, daughter of James Loch of Drylaw. In 1695 and 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. His children all died young. His portrait hangs in Surgeons’ Hall in Edinburgh. Gideon of Harwood-on-Teviot (d.1735), 3rd or 4th son of Simon of Swinside and grandson of William of the Binks. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 and became an elder in 1723. In 1724 he purchased Teindside from his brother Robert. He was probably the uncle of Rev. Simon Haliburton, minister of Castleton and Ashkirk. He married Mary Haliburton in 1715 and she died in 1735. Their children (all baptised in Hawick) included: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); Simon (b.1722); Christian (b.1723), who married Rev. Isaac Davidson, minister at Sorbie, Wigtonshire; Elizabeth (b.1726), who married Andrew Oliver; and Mary (b.1728). Only Christian and Elizabeth survived their mother. In the 1719 baptism in Hawick he is recorded in error as 'Simeon Elliot of Harwood', with his wife being a ‘Halyborton’, and the witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and ‘Doctor Halyburton’ (probably his wife’s brother). In 1726 he was ‘of harwood’ and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Falnash and Andrew Scott . . . . The 1728 baptism was witnessed by Robert Scott of ‘F...’ (probably Falnash) and ‘Mr. Shiel in Todja...’. Gideon (b.c.1793) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. In 1835 and 1841 he was at Bellshiels. He married Agnes Anderson (b.1795) and their children were: Jean (b.1819); Betty (b.1821); Gideon (b.1824); Helen (b.1827); Mary (b.1830); Agnes (b.1832); Anne (b.1835);
and Janet (b.1840). He could be the Gideon, son of John and Betty Crozier, born in Castle- tons in 1791. Gideon (1833–1913) son of John and Jane Goodfellow. In 1861 he was a dyker living at Muckle, In Roberton Parish in 1853 he married Margaret Wilson. Their children included: Agnes E.; Jane (b.1856); John (b.1859); Thomas (b.1861); James (b.1864); Archibald Hoy (b.1866); William (b.1868); Francis (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1873). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbert Elwald’ in 1453 when he witnessed a ‘letter of reversion’ between Andrew Ker of Alltonburn and Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam for the lands of Feu-rule. It is unclear how he is related to other Elliots, but he may have a connection to John who witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1436. Perhaps the same Gilbert is mentioned in 1493 when his son Robert produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw. Gilbert (15th C.) son of Nicholas, listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Gilbert ‘Gib’ of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Pater Hay of Megginch, with a pledge to the King for good behaviour. In 1580 he was held in ward in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. He is probably the ‘Gib of the Schawis’ listed in 1580 when his procurator explained to the Privy Council that he had ‘departit hame to his awin cuntrie and sensyne wes slayne’. In 1583 he is ‘Gybbe Ellot of the Shaues’ in a letter from English wardens; he is listed among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh, and surely related to Adam of the Shaws, who is also listed. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded among merchants of Edinburgh in a case before the Privy Council in 1565/6. His surname is given as ‘Elwand’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braiddie. In 1569 he was recorded as ‘Martin’s Gib the Cousin’ when he was among a number of pledges to support Martin of Braiddie with the Regent Moray. He was recorded being ‘left with my Lord Regentis Grace to the returning of Martine Elliot’. He was also recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. In 1584 he was ‘Gyb the cousin’, who defended the tower at Larriston, which was taken by an English raiding force under Sir John Forster; he was said to have been trained as a soldier in the wars in Flanders and France. He is ‘Martin’s Gib being Martins cosen’, recorded in 1590, along with ‘Martin’s Airche’ and Martin’s brother Gib and others, when accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he and William, younger of the Steele, were accused of stealing cattle 2 years earlier. Additionally he was ‘Martins Gib being Martins cosen’ when accused of further rieving in 1590, along with elder Airchie, Will of the Steele and ‘Lang’ John. It is unclear who his father was, or whether he was the same as one of the contemporary Gibs. His killing by men of Tynedale is recorded in 1597, with the description that he was ‘a notorious offender in England, and besides, being a soldier and trained in war, was a captain and principal leader’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Redheugh. In 1583 a letter from Musgrave to Burleigh describes him as ‘Gibbe Ellot’ among the most important Elliots of Liddesdale, along with his brothers Robert of Redheugh, William of Hartsgarth and Archibald. He may be the Gib, ‘son to Robine Elliot’ who was among a number of Elliots (along with servants of Robert of Redheugh), Croziers and others accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589; he is recorded as ‘Gib Elliott son to Robin’, and his servant John Noble and ‘his man’ ‘John Shevell’ were also listed. In 1591 he was described as ‘louit freind and seruitour’ of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when he rented Com-monsoide, Northcroft, Hillend and ‘Stoghill’ from him, being given this lease for service performed for the Laird of Branxholme. In 1595 he was also servitor of Sir Walter Scott Branxholme when he witnessed a charter. He is probably the Gybb Elwood alias Robes Gibb’ who, according to an English account, along wth Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden met with some Englishmen to get help in the plan to rescue Kimmont Willie. He is probably the ‘Gyb Elliot brother to Robert Elliot of Reidheuch’ who was held as a prisoner in England in 1597. In 1599 he had a remission, along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Walter Scott of Harden, for burning Westburnflat in Liddesdale. In 1603 he was probably ‘my louit Gilbert Elliot of the Kirktoun’ to whom Sir Walter Scott leased the lands of Wester Commonside and Northcroft. He may have been an illegitimate son of Robert the 16th Chief, with his mother possibly being Helen Kidd (unless this story is complete fabrication); he would then be the ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ recorded in 1603. It is not impossible that he is the same man as ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He may be the ‘Gibbie’ who, along with Archie and their accomplices, was accused of taking part in a raid into England in 1587. He is probably also the ‘Martins Gib’ in a group complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He is recorded as brother of ‘Martin’s Arche’ in 1590 when, along with Gib, cousin of Martin, and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was probably the ‘Martin’s Gib’ who, along with Will Elliot of Henchouse and ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier were accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofeeld’ in 1590. Also in 1590 he was accused of stealing from Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall (in England), along with Martin’s sons (and so presumably his brothers) Airchie and John, as well as Martin of Prickinghaugh. He was probably the ‘Martin’s Gib’ accused in 1590 along with a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. He was probably the ‘Martinges Gib’ listed in 1590 among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the Gib, son of Martin, who (along with his brother John) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He is probably the ‘Martin’s Gibbe’ who Lord Evers described being killed by English raiders in 1597; the slayer was a Dodd, it is said in retaliation for an earlier raid. He was described as ‘brought up in the wars in Flanders and France, and has since been a lively leader to that wicked race’. Note that he may be confused with ‘Martin’s Gib the Cousin’, who is recorded at about the same time. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. In 1595 he was mentioned along with Wat Scott of Harden and 2 of his nephews (sons of William of Falnash), Archie and Hob in a list of English complaints against Liddesdale men. His name is recorded as ‘Gibbe Ellott brother to Will E. of the Fawenesh’. Gilbert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 as ‘Gib Ellot called Stottan Gib’, along with his brother John and other ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash. There were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. Gilbert of the Mains (16th/17th C.) witnessed in 1599 to the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. His name is recorded as ‘Gilbert Ellot of the Maynis; it is unclear where ‘the Mains’ might have been, but it seems likely he was a prominent Elliot of the time, and perhaps the same as one of the contemporary family members noted by another designation. Gilbert ‘Gib the Galyart’ (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1618 of stealing the purse of John Armstrong of Holm when they were in the house of Alexander Young of Selkirk. He was sentenced to be scourged through Edinburgh and then banished from the Kingdom. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. His nickname referred to a lively dance, and was apparently a common nickname for someone who was smart in dress or lively in spirit. Gilbert ‘Gib the Tutor’ (17th C.) described as a servant of Robert of Redheugh. He was involved in stealing cattle from Englishmen at ‘Chipsies’ and ‘Islyysde’ in about 1623. He was one of the men who had planned to murder Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the feud between the Scotts and the Elliots. He is listed as ‘Gib Ellott, callit the Tutour’, along with Gavin of Hillhouse and ‘Will Ellot, callit Gibbis Will’, who may have been his son. They were meant to kill the Earl in Jedburgh at the time of a Justice Court, and then followed him to Edinburgh, but after failing they confessed. Robert of Redheugh stated that the idea for the murder originally came from him, but Gavin of Hillhouse said that ‘Gib wes bot a feible coutcher and wald never do the turne’. Gilbert (17th C.) married Janet Richardson in Kelso in 1635. They had a daughter Elizabeth in 1636. Janet (b.1639) and Margaret (b.1642), both baptised in Hawick Parish, were probably also his children. He may be the same as one of the other Gilberts. Gilbert (17th C.) signatory of the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He is recorded as being ‘now in Quiththauche’, which could be Whithauch in Liddesdale. Gilbert of Brugh (d.bef. 1648) 2nd son of Gavin, he gained the Lairdship since his elder brother Archibald died before 1621. In 1621 he is recorded as witness to a contract for money due by the Chisholmes to his deceased brother. He is recorded in the Circuit Court of 1623 when he acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo Scott in Castleside (who may have been his tenant). His wife’s name is unknown and his only son was Archibald (d.1650), who was served heir to his grandfather in 1648. However, details of these generations of the Elliots of Brugh seem quite uncertain. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1637 he was apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Archibald of Brugh. He was mentioned being ‘in Carllops’ and brother of John in Southfield (who succeeded to Brugh) in 1665. Nothing else is known about him. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) referred to as ‘of the Park’ in 1699. He and his son William ‘in Castletown’ were subject of a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is unclear how he might have been related to earlier Elliors associated with Park. Sir Gilbert ‘Gibbie’ (1651–1718) of Headshaw and of Minto, 1st Baronet and Lord Minto. He was younger son of Gavin Eliott of Grange and Midlem Mill, and grandson of ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’ (although these early generations are somewhat uncertain). His sister Margaret was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. He may have purchased part of the land of Minto (perhaps Craigend and Deanfoot) from John Turnbull in about 1674. He may be the ‘Minto’ who acted as an agent for renting some of the Duchess of Buccleuch’s farms in 1675. He may be the Laird of Minto who paid the Land Tax on more £2100 in 1678. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and a zealous Presbyterian. In 1679 he acted to have the preacher William Veitch’s sentence commuted from execution to banishment, and it is said that this established him as a capable lawyer. In 1681 he is reported to have ridden from London, beating the King’s messenger, and allowing the Earl of Argyll to escape from Edinburgh Castle before the capital sentence was imposed. He later took part in Argyll’s disastrous expedition to Scotland from Holland (perhaps helping to raise funds, along with the Lairds of Torwoodlee and Polwarth). In 1685 he was among the rebels (under Sir Patrick Home and Sir John Cochrane) who engaged the Royalist force at Muirdykes in Renfrewshire, and afterwards fled to Holland. He was then convicted of high treason for plotting against the King, but pardoned in 1687 (it was stated this was because of the service to the Crown offered by his father). He became an advocate in 1687 and was fully back in favour when William of Orange acceded in 1689, when he was appointed Clerk to the Privy Council in 1689 (until 1692). He was knighted in 1692. In 1694 he was listed as one of the creditors of Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge. In 1696 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1696 he bought the Headshaw estate (from the female heiress Mary and her husband Patrick Porteous) and in 1697 purchased Langhope (probably the one near Ashkirk). He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia (for Headshaw) in 1700 and became a Judge. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1702 and hence was a member of the last Scottish Parliament, voting against the Union. In 1703 he purchased the Minto estate (which had been combined with Craigend and Deanfoot) from Gideon Scott of Highchester. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of the Signet and shortly afterwards was created a Lord of Session, taking the title of first Lord Minto. Also in 1705 he had a royal charter for the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and ‘Clews’ in Ashkirk Parish, which included the erection of these lands into the Barony of Headshaw, as well as the patronage and teinds of Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 he combined the Barony of Headshaw and his lands of Langhope and Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. In 1705 he was one of the members of the Scottish Parliament to vote against having a single Parliament for the whole of the United Kingdom. He is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1717. His portrait was painted in about 1715. On the frieze of the pulpit in Ashkirk Kirk are the initials ‘S / GE’ and ‘D / (I)C’ for ‘Sir Gilbert Elliot’ and ‘Dame Jean Carre’, his second wife. He married first Mary (or Helen) Stevenson, daughter of an Edinburgh Burgess, and they had one daughter, Mary, who married Sir John Elphinstone of Logie; his first wife died in 1689 after 9 years of marriage. In 1692 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Sir Gilbert (b.1693), who succeeded; and Andrew, who drowned at age 16 on his way to Holland. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Larriston and grandson of James Eliott of Stobs. He was a merchant in Hawick, was said to be ‘of Nethermill’ (which was probably the place of that name in Dumfriesshire, adjacent to lands owned by his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill), and is described in 1696 as ‘brother german to Robert Elliot of Larriston’. His son Charles Edward was born in 1693, and settled in Essex, while another (unnamed) son eventually emigrated to California, where he is said to have descendants. It is claimed that both sons fought in the 1715 Jacobite uprising and later lived in Java for a while (but like

The 1701 baptism was witnessed by his father John and brother George, the 1702 baptism by Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Ogilvie in Branzholme and the 1704 baptism by John Elliott (uncle of Sir Gilbert of Stobs) and shoemaker John Elliot. He was referred to as ‘Mr. Elliot in Rig’ in the 1712 baptism and as being ‘in Rige’ in 1718. The year of his death is not known. Gilbert (d.bef. 1752) son of Robert of Larriston. It is unclear if he was the oldest son, but he appears to have been the only one who had issue. He settled in Newcastle and married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. He had 2 children: Jane, who married John Williams of Kensington; and Maj.-Gen. William (b.1741), who bought back the family lands of Larriston, but died unmarried. Sir Gilbert (1693–1766) 2nd Baronet and Lord Minto, eldest son of ‘Gibbie’. He was educated in law at Utrecht University in the Netherlands, and became an advocate in 1715. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1722–26. He reached the bench as a Lord of Session in 1726, assuming the title of Lord Minto, later becoming a Judge and eventually Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland in 1763. It is said that it was partly through his influence that his relative Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs was eventually pardoned for the murder of Colonel Stewart. In 1727 and 1731 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. He purchased Raperlaw (which had once belonged to an Elliott of Stobs), followed by Fallahill in 1727, Newlands in 1734 and part of Langhaugh in 1743. He was responsible for the extensive alterations carried out at Minto House in 1744 and 1745, including the addition of 68 new windows, and building up a library. He also improved the grounds, with a pond-head being built across the glen in 1735, an avenue of larches added in about 1736, and most of the houses moved to Minto Green. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. An anti-Jacobite, he reputedly hid among the crags when part of the Jacobite force stopped at Minto House in 1745. He paid the window tax for Minto House in 1748. He was known as a music-lover and supposedly introduced the German flute into Scotland in 1726. When appointed Lord Justice Clerk, he had a house built in Edinburgh, on Argyll Square. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1718 he married Helen (d.1774), daughter of Sir Robert Stuart (or Stewart) of Lanbank and had 13 children: Eleanor (b.1719), other family legends, this may be confusing generations and individuals). Gilbert (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was ‘at Mount’, which may have been the farmstead near Whitropefoot. He died without issue. Gilbert (c.1670–aft. 1727) second son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield, and younger brother of William ‘the Laceman’. He lived for many years at Nether Southfield and took over the tenancy at Winningtonrig in 1710. He was also factor for his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He is probably the Gilbert who leased the farm of Over Southfield (perhaps an error for Nether Southfield) from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1698. He was at Nether Southfield in 1698 when he witnessed a baptism for James ‘Colwort’ in Whitlaw. Both he and John (his father) witnessed Hawick baptisms in 1700 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from witon Parish). He witnessed a baptism for Glendinnings in 1702, and both he and John ‘in Nether Southfield’ witnessed a baptism in 1704. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for James Stevenson in Harwood, for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, and in 1706 another for William Cowan, herd in Southfield. He was stated in 1767 to have been tenant in Nether Southfield like his father before him and in about 1710 he ‘broke Hawick Common by plowing a part of it’, for which he got no protection from the Duchess’ Chamberlain, ‘Auld Fahnash’; during the riding of the Common that year his flock was hounded more than those of the other neighbouring farmers and he was fined by the Hawick Bailies. In 1717 there was a complaint that one of his servants had encroached upon the Hawick Common at Winnington Moss. He witnessed the baptism of a child of Walter Scott in Newbigging in 1725. In 1727 his brother William of Wells left him money in his will. He is probably the Gilbert who witnessed the baptism of his grandson Gilbert in Hawick in 1734. He married Agnes Turnbull of Southfield in 1698; she was daughter of Walter Turnbull (from Jedburgh) and Helen Elliot (from Hawick). Their children were: Jean and Barbara, twins (b.1701); ‘Helenora’ (b.1702), who married James Grieve, farmer at Commonsid; Jane (or ‘Janmet’, b.1704); John (b.1708), who became a Captain and married Jean, daughter of James Grieve in Todshawhaugh; Agnes (b.1710), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (Arabella, b.1712); James; and another Agnes (b.1718). They were all christened locally (in Hawick, Cavers and Kirkton Parishes).

He was at Nether Southfield in 1698 when he witnessed a baptism for James ‘Colwort’ in Whitlaw. Both he and John (his father) witnessed Hawick baptisms in 1700 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from witon Parish). He witnessed a baptism for Glendinnings in 1702, and both he and John ‘in Nether Southfield’ witnessed a baptism in 1704. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for James Stevenson in Harwood, for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, and in 1706 another for William Cowan, herd in Southfield. He was stated in 1767 to have been tenant in Nether Southfield like his father before him and in about 1710 he ‘broke Hawick Common by plowing a part of it’, for which he got no protection from the Duchess’ Chamberlain, ‘Auld Fahnash’; during the riding of the Common that year his flock was hounded more than those of the other neighbouring farmers and he was fined by the Hawick Bailies. In 1717 there was a complaint that one of his servants had encroached upon the Hawick Common at Winnington Moss. He witnessed the baptism of a child of Walter Scott in Newbigging in 1725. In 1727 his brother William of Wells left him money in his will. He is probably the Gilbert who witnessed the baptism of his grandson Gilbert in Hawick in 1734. He married Agnes Turnbull of Southfield in 1698; she was daughter of Walter Turnbull (from Jedburgh) and Helen Elliot (from Hawick). Their children were: Jean and Barbara, twins (b.1701); ‘Helenora’ (b.1702), who married James Grieve, farmer at Commonsid; Jane (or ‘Janmet’, b.1704); John (b.1708), who became a Captain and married Jean, daughter of James Grieve in Todshawhaugh; Agnes (b.1710), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (Arabella, b.1712); James; and another Agnes (b.1718). They were all christened locally (in Hawick, Cavers and Kirkton Parishes).
who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Jean (b.1720), who died in infancy; Sir Gilbert (1722–77), who succeeded; Mary (b.1724), who probably died young; Robert (1725–57), Captain in the Royals; Jean (or Jane, 1727–1805), who was author of ‘Flowers of the Forest’; Andrew (b.1728), who became Lieutenant-Governor of New York, married Elizabeth Plumstead and lived at Greenwells; Marianne (1730–1811), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; John (1732–1808), became an Admiral and died at Monteviot; twins Margaret (b.1734), who died in infancy and Ann (or Anne, b.1734), who married Charles Congleton of Congleton in Edinburgh in 1762; Grizell (b.1737), who probably died young; and Archibald (1743–59), who died in Antigua, aged 16. He died suddenly at Minto. Sir Gilbert of Minto (1722–77) 3rd Baronet, son of Sir Gilbert. Born at Minto, he was educated for the Scottish bar, becoming an advocate in 1743. He went to Holland in 1744 and married 2 years later. He was said to be a great public speaker. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1753–65 and for Roxburghshire 1765–77 (when he died, but was succeeded as M.P. by his son). He was appointed one of the Lords of the Admiralty, as well as being Keeper of the Signet in Scotland. He was conspicuous as a parliamentary orator, being said to have almost single-handedly argued the successful case for making the office of Sheriffs in Scotland independent of the Crown. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’ of Minto). In 1761 he became Lord of the Treasury, in 1762 Treasurer of the House of Commons and from 1771 he was Treasurer of the Navy. He was also known as a man of philosophical interests and literary talent, with his song ‘Amynta’ being popular in its day; it begins ‘My sheep I neglected, I broke my sheep-crook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsook’ (or alternatively ‘My sheep I forsaken, and left my sheep-hook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I’ve forsook’). He also had poems published on the death of Col. James Gardiner and the Earl and Countess of Sutherland. In addition he wrote a letter to David Hume, which was later published. Before inheriting Minto he lived in London and later Twickenham. In 1767 he started the first experimental postal service in Hawick. He is probably the Sir Gilbert who is recorded as owner of the lands of Dryden, Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in about 1788. In 1746 he married Agnes Murray-Kynynmound, only daughter of Hugh Dalrymple; she was heiress (from Sir Alexander Murray) of Melgund in Forfarshire and of Kynynmound in Fife, and died in 1778. He was succeeded by his son Sir Gilbert (b.1751), who became 1st Earl of Minto and adopted the Murray-Kynynmound extension to his surname when inheriting his mother’s lands. His other children were: Isabella (b.1749), who died unmarried; Hugh (1752–1830), Governor of Madras and the Leeward Islands; Alexander (1754–78) of the East India Company; Rev. Robert (1755–1824), Rector of Whedrake; David (b.1757), who died aged 5; an unnamed son; Eleanor (1758–1818), who married William Eden, 1st Baron Auckland; and Marianne, who died in Edinburgh in 1811. He died when visiting Marseilles for his health and is buried at Minto. Gilbert (b.1725) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter in Brugh. He became tenant farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Forbes and their children included: George, who lived in Castleton; Gilbert, tenant in Glenzier, who married a Miss Davidson; William; and Margaret, who married Adam Scott from Langhaugh. Gilbert (b.1731) younger son of the 2nd William of Borthwickbrae. He had one child, Thomas (probably illegitimate, by Sarah Growesmith), who purchased Wilton Lodge. He paid the Horse Tax at Langlands in 1785–86. He is recorded as ‘Gilbert Elliot of Longlands’ or Langlands when he was taxed for having a footman in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was also taxed for having 2 female servants in 1785 and 1786; his son Thomas is listed on the tax roll from 1787, suggesting he may have died or moved. Gilbert (1734–59) eldest son of Capt. John of the Elliotis of Brugh. He was baptised in Hawick, the witnesses being his grandfathers Gilbert Elliot and James Grieve. He joined the Navy when no more than 10 years old, and served under Capt. Elliot Elliot (his distant cousin from the Stobs Elliotts) on the fireship Aetna. In 1759 he was on the Tyger, commanded by Capt. Brereton, ‘who deserted his post for a slight wound in the head and tied a white napkin on his face and went below’. Elliot took over command of the vessel ‘till a cannon shot carried away his bowels, and he dropped on the deck’. Apparently the Captain was court-martialled, and although acquitted was afterwards known in the Navy as the ‘white-faced Captain’ because of this incident. In his will, made a week before his death, he left most of his possessions to his shipmates, but his sword and belt to ‘William Elliot of the Honourable Company’s Military of Madras’ (whose identity is unclear). He died unmarried. Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound (1751–1814) 4th Baronet and 1st Earl of Minto. Son of Sir Gilbert and Agnes Murray Kynynmound, he was educated largely in England. He studied for the bar, but followed his father into politics. He became M.P. for Morpeth, Helston and Berwick in 1774 and was known for his debating skills. He was then M.P. for Roxburgh 1777–84 (following in his father’s footsteps), Berwick 1786–90 and Helston 1790–95. He was served heir to his father in 1778, in the Barony of Minto and Headshaw, and the lands of Shielwood. He paid the land tax for Langhope in Ettrick Parish in 1785. In 1780 he held Craigend, but had liferent of the rest of Minto to 6 other gentlemen (surely for the sole purpose of allowing them to vote in Roxburghshire, where he was standing as a candidate, each of them having just a little more than the required £400 of land: Alexander Alison; David Dalrymple, Lord Westhall; Sir John Dalrymple, Baron Dalrymple; Rev. Robert Elliot, his brother; Sir John Stewart of Allanbank; and Robert Trotter of Bush. At the same time he disposed the liferent of Dryden to 3 other men: Dr. William Elliot; George Potts, younger of Todrig; and Rev. Simon Haliburton. He was listed as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1788 he was listed as owner of most of the Parish of Minto, valued at £2108 13s 4d and Newlands (which had formerly been in Hassendean Parish), valued at £80, as well as Raperlaw (valued at £416) and Willie’s Peel (valued at £104) in Lilliesleaf Parish and the associated teinds (valued at £129 12s 4d), and Shielwood, Dryden, parts of Headshaw and associated teinds (valued at £1420 18s 4d) in Ashkirk Parish. He was taxed for having 4 servants (gardeners) in 1778 and 1779 and 3 gardeners in 1785 and 1786, with 5 (including butler, footman and groom) in 1787–92 and 6 in 1793, 1794 and 1797. He paid tax on 3 female servants in 1785 and 1786, 6 servants in 1787, 7 in 1788, 6 in 1789, 5 in 1790 and 4 in 1791. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 2 carriage horses, 4 in 1787–89 and 6 in 1790–94. In 1797 he was taxed for having 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Minto. He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1787–98. In 1791 he gave a speech in the House of Commons proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). He was appointed Commissioner in Toulon in 1793, then went to Corsica as Viceroy. In 1796 the Duke of Buccleuch and others tried to convince him to remain in Corsica rather than contest the election. He was present at the Battle of St. Vincent in 1797, and a sword taken there from the Captain of the ‘San Josef’ was presented to him by Adm. Nelson. On his return in 1797 he was made Earl of Minto for his services attempting to secure Corsica against the French Republic. He was Lieut.-Col. of the 1st Battalion of Roxburghshire volunteers in about 1803. His estate added the lands of Barnhills in 1797 and Hassendeanbank about 1799. In 1806 he resigned the lands of Barnhills, Hassendeanbank, Standhill and Lantonhall in his own favour. He was appointed Governor General of Bengal (which effectively meant India at that time) in 1807, holding the post until 1813. There he annexed Amboyina and the Molucca Islands, took Bourbon and Mauritius from the French and subdued the pirates in Borneo. He also helped quell an army mutiny and personally led the expedition to take Java (where John Leyden died) from the Dutch. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. Returning to Britain in 1814 where he was created Earl of Minto, and Viscount Melgund. Much of the improvements to the Minto estate were carried out under the supervision of his wife, since he spent so much time away; Minto House was extensively altered, with the work completed in 1814, and the plantations were added to; this included doubling the width, adding to both wings and covering the entrance hall with a cupola. Unfortunately he died on his way back to Scotland, the sad news being brought to people preparing to draw his carriage through the streets of Hawick and light bonfires in celebration. Many locals apparently refused to believe he was dead, and there grew a tradition that he lived in secret rooms in the House and wandered the Crags at night. A life-size portrait of him hangs in the Town Hall. In 1777 he married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir George Amyand and she died in 1829. They had 3 daughters and 4 sons: Gilbert Elliot (b.1782), who became the 2nd Earl; Adm. Sir George (b.1784); Anna Maria (1785–1855), who married Lt.-Gen. Sir Rufane Shawe Donkin; John Edmund (b.1788), M.P. for Roxburghshire; Harriet Mary Frances (1790–1825), who died unmarried; William (1792–1811), who died returning from Bengal; and Catherine Sarah (1797–1862), who married Sir John Peter Boileau. He is buried in Westminster Abbey. He adopted the addition of ‘Murray-Kynynmound’ to his surname by royal licence in 1797 (the surname becomes confusing at this point; see Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1815. His portrait, by George Chinnery, is in the Museum. His wife's portrait was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, but was stolen from Minto House in 1930. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) son of Gilbert in Blackburnothe and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Glenzier, near Canonbie and married a Miss Davidson according to a family pedigree. He is probably the Gilbert, married to Isobel Davidson, whose children, baptised in Canonbie Parish, included Elizabeth (b.1786), Margaret (b.1790), John (b.1792), Margaret (again, b.1794) and Matthew (b.1797). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Gilbert (b.1807); Mary Elizabeth (b.1811); and Frederick William (b.1812). It is unclear how he is related to other Gilberts. Gilbert (b.1809) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Jesse and Margaret Smith, he was a millwright in Hawick. He was listed as a journeyman millwright on Melgund Place in 1841, by 1851 was a millwright at the Coach House on Langlands Place in Wilton, but in 1851 was still listed as a journeyman millwright at Langlands Place. In 1832 he married Cecily (or Cecilia) Robson (b.c.1811) and their children included: Walter (b.1834); Helen (b.1837); George (b.c.1839); and Margaret (b.1841). Lt.-Col. Gilbert (1826–65) 5th and youngest son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 2nd Earl of Minto. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1858 he married Katherine Anne, daughter of Rev. Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester. Gilbert John of Brugh (1864–1945) 2nd son of Rev. William of Hereford, from whom he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Bessie Clark Davidson in 1895 and their children were Air Chief Marshal Sir William and Brig. James. Grizel (17th C.) only child of Simon ‘in Philhope’. She was the heiress of the lands at Philhope (in the Borthwick). When her father died she was given as ward to Robert of Falnash, and later (sometime before 1644) married his son John. In 1642 she was served heir to her great-grandfather Simon of Philhope in the 10-pound land of Philhope. In 1644, with the consent of her husband, she resigned half the lands of Philhope to her mother Elizabeth Chisholme and step-father Archibald in Philhope. Rev. Harold ‘Harry of Peebles’ (c.1611–53) recorded as ‘Hairie Ellot’ and also ‘Henry Elliott’. He was son of William of Peebles, and grandson of Gavin of Brugh (near Dodburn). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1631, taught for a while in Jedburgh, was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1639 and ordained there in 1640. He replaced Henry Pearson, who was ousted for his connections to Episcopalianism. However, he was himself ousted from his position in 1649 for being on the side of the King. He may have remained in Bedrule until his death about 4 years later, and ‘lived in a most dejected and miserable and cast down tradition’. After that the church of Bedrule was vacant for another 5 years. He married Elizabeth Douglas and also earlier Helen MacGhie (daughter of John of Balmagie) and had at least 3 children. In 1650 he had a discharge of a debt with Robert Pringle, ‘tutor’ to Will Bennet of Grubet. It is recorded in 1662 that Elizabeth Douglas and 7 fatherless children petitioned Parliament, claiming persecution (presumably for not supporting the Covenants) of her husband and family for publicly supporting his Majesty’s interests, for example during the expedition of 1648, and that he had been forced out of his charge, and they had lived from hand to mouth since then. They were allowed £100 out of vacant stipends (although 10 years later she had received none of it). His children include: Christian, John (possibly son of his first wife, who married Elizabeth Fithie) and Adam (who may have been a minister in London). John’s elder son was Thomas, who was Solicitor to the Prince of Wales, and his elder son was Sir John of Peebles (d.1786), who lived in London and was a famous physician. Hector (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Judiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was recorded being ‘in Rig’, so that he might have been related to the Elliots of Rig; however, it seems likely to be a different Rig. Hector (18th C.) lived at Southdean, where he married Christian Oliver in 1736. Their children included: Robert (b.1738); John (b.1740); and Mary (b.1741). Hector (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Hector, as well as Robert from the same parish, whose children were born about a decade later. His children included: William (b.1753); Susan (b.1754); and Christian (b.1756). Helen of Binks (b.1796) daughter of John, she was known as ‘the White Rose o Liddesdale’ and married Archibald Blake in Liverpool in 1820. Henry (16th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He was probably related to some of the others Elliots who were listed. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document of 1520 for George Ker of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Henry (17th C.) recorded as ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ when he was overseer of William Elliot of Binks in 1665. Assuming that the date is correct, it is unclear who he might have been. Henry (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Henry (d.bef. 1715) farmer at ‘Sorbye-trees’ (i.e. Sorbietrees) near Newcastle. In 1715 Henry Elliot of Bells in Northumberland and John Elliot of Larriston in Roxburghshire were appointed ‘tutors’ for his children Jane, Elizabeth, Margaret, Gilbert, Christine, Henry and Adam. Based on the names and the date, it seems this may be the same man as Henry of Lodgegill. Henry ‘Harry’ (17th/18th C.) 2nd (or 3rd) Laird of Harwood, son of William and grandson of Simon of the Binks. His father left him the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. He built a new house at Harwood and also purchased Chapellknowe in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1690. He is recorded in 1676 as ‘Harie Elliot’ when he was cautions to a ‘letter of horning’ against William Elliot of Philhope, brought by Walter Scott, called ‘Westport’. He witnessed Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs ‘bond of provision’ in 1677. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. He is recorded in a bond of 1683 with Robert, Lord Jedburgh, with Simon Elliot of Swinside as cautions, and in 1688 he was a cautions for Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge. He also feued the lands of ‘Caephope and Calahope’ from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1692. He had a bond with William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, another in 1694 with John Kerr of Cavers, and one in 1696 with Rev. John Goudie of Sprouston. He appears to have paid off some of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge’s debts in the mid-1690s. He was the Laird of Harwood in 1694 when the tax on 7 hearths was paid on ‘Harits hous and office houses’. In 1694 he purchased Fairnielees for his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself. However, in 1699 he gave up the liferent on the condition that William paid off some of his debts and provided for the 2 youngest sons, John and Henry. He married Mary, daughter of John Scott of Dryhope and had at least 6 children. He had 3 sons who married sisters, all of them daughters of the Laird of Todrig, Walter Scott: William (who succeeded) married Jean; John married Nelly; and Henry of Peel married Elizabeth. He had another son, Walter of Ormiston, who is said to have married the eldest daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean. He also had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Robert Elliot, 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill, and another daughter Anne (or Anna) who married William Currer, tenant in Hyndhope. In 1699 he gave his eldest son William the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse in agreement for paying his debts and granting him a yearly allowance (the implication is that he was infirm by this time, his son already being mentioned in all the documents relating to Harwood for several years previously). The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he was certainly alive in 1701, and in 1707 his heir William was still described as ‘younger of Harwood’. Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714) 2nd son of John of Thorlieshope, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His brothers were John of the Binks and William of Thorlieshope. He succeeded his father in Hudhouse. In 1708 he had a Crown Charter of the lands of Lodgegill in Ewesdale (part of what had been known as Black Tarras), this being settled on him by his brother William, after Simon of Lodgegill became bankrupt. He was ‘of Tarras’ when listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He married Margaret (1680–1768), daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; she survived him for more than 50 years. Their children were: William of Lodgegill, who married Jane, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood-on-Rule; John and Robert, who probably died young; Adam in Flatt, who married Elizabeth Elliot of Sorbietrees; Margaret, who married Charles, brother of Scott of Gorrenberry; Catherine, who married Edmund Atchison in Mosspeebie; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott in Singlie; Jean, who married John Armstrong in Sorbie; and Henry (1712–94), who farmed at Flatt and married Janet Little. Henry (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve, he was tenant in Riccarton. He married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees, and sister of John in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope. He may be the ‘Harry in Hudhouse’ recorded as one of the witnesses to the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood (his brother) and Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig.

He was tenant farmer at Bells in Northumberland and was later at Deadwater. He purchased the lands of Peel (which had been called Baxtonlees) from his cousins (heirs of his uncle John Elliot) sometime after 1731. He was a tenant at Deadwater; one story is recounted (in ‘Beauties of the Border’) where after a harsh winter he reported to the Duke of Northumberland that unlike on the neighbouring farms he instructed his shepherds not to skin any of the dead sheep until the warm weather came, ‘when, to my great joy, the most part of them came to life again!’. He is said to have been well known as a ‘toper’, with his standing toast being ‘Here’s to all Ellios and Ellios’ bairns, And them that lie in the Ellios’ airm’s’. He married Elizabeth Scott of Todrig (probably the sister of 2 of his brothers’ wives). He had many children, but only 3 are recorded: Henry of Peel, who married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of the Binks and sold Peel; Walter (d.1741), surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, who died following a shipwreck off Patagonia; and William, who was a Captain and tenant in Rowanburnfoot. Henry (1700–84) Laird of Harwood, successor to William. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood (this being before he succeeded to Harwood). He did not get along with his father, particularly after much of Harwood was let for an extended period to the Pott brothers. He appealed to the Court of Session about his father’s behaviour and finally managed the estate for his father’s trustees. He was keen to improve the lands, in particular to enclose the fields, but he cared nothing for antiquities, and had all the old buildings pulled down (including the old town of Harwood). He did, however, build an edifice thatched with heather (‘Elliot’s Folly’) on a small hill, from which he could watch his workers. He paid the window tax in the churchyard. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew William; the succession was set out in a ‘deed of tailzie’ in 1769, and formalised in a disposition of 1783. Henry (18th C.) younger son of John, farmer in Cooms. He farmed at Sorbie-trees. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Henry in Sorbie-trees. He married Christian Scott, from Falnash. Their children were: William in Sorbies; Catherine; and Elizabeth, who married Adam Elliot in Flatt. Henry (1712–91) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill, he was farmer at Flatt. He is probably the ‘Henry Elliot in Flatt’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded at Flatt on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was a witness in 1788 at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. Also in 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, specifically under ‘Votes of Mr. Thomas Waugh’. He married Janet Little (c.1730–99). Their children were: Margaret (b.1760), who died young; Catherine (b.1762), who married Dr. Andrew Graham from Dalkeith, probably related to Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick; Henry (1763–93), who died unmarried; and John (1769–1823), who married Jean Scott and farmed at Flatt. Henry of Peel (d.1780) son of Henry of Peel and Elizabeth Scott from Todrig. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He sold Peel, and afterwards farmed at Rowanburnfoot in Dumfriesshire. He married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of Binks. Their children included: Jean, William and Thomas, who all died unmarried; Capt. John (d.1782) of the 28th Foot Regiment, died at St. Kitts; George (c.1753–1807), who had a lumber business in North Carolina; Col. Henry of the Royal Marines, who emigrated to Canada; and Catherine, who married Joseph Jackson in Harlaw Mill. His executors were: his brother Capt. William; Henry in Flatt; John of Binks; advocate Adam Ogilvie; Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Lieut. John; Robert, brother of Henry of Harwood; and John in Burnmouth. Henry (1731–90) son of William of Tarras, he was tenant in Dinlees. He is recorded at Dinlees in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. Henry (b.c.1740) son of William of Bush and Binks. He was tenant farmer in Stanniswater, Westerkirk. He married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry and their children included: Henry, who died young;
William in Staniswater (b.1774), who moved to Fualdshope; Margaret (c.1776–1842), who married Walter Anderson of Broom; and Catherine, who married James Graham at Irving. Maj.-Gen. Henry of Rosebank, Kelso (1763–1841) younger son of Robert of Harwood. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was served as heir of provision to his uncle Henry of Harwood in 1787. He married Jean (or Janet, 1780–1863), daughter of Rev. Dr. Thomas Somerville. He died without issue. Henry (c.1765–1860) tenant at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He could be the son of William, shepherd in Templehallshielis, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. He was at West Fodderlee in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower at Westerhouses, farming 200 arable acres and 870 acres of moor and pasture, employing 13 people. He married Robina Burnett (c.1722–1844) in Roberton Parish in 1790. Their children included: William (b.1790), baptised in Roberton; James (b.1794), baptised in Yarrow; Henry (1802–73), baptised in Yarrow, tenant at Greenriver; and Robert (1805–45), baptised in Roberton. He died at Westerhouses. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Elliots. His children included: Henry (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); an unnamed child (b.1817); and Robert (b.1819). Henry (1769–1841) son of Capt. Robert and Elizabeth Pringle. He became an ensign in the 70th Regiment, serving in Ireland and the West Indies. He was then an officer with the 60th and 96th Regiments, and ended up as Lieut.-Col. He retired from the Army and settle at Rosebank, near Kelso. He became a member of the Jedforest Club and was the chairman at the 1834 dinner when refusal to toast the sitting M.P. led to most of the Whigs to leave the club. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. He died at Rosebank, Kelso, and is buried in Jedburgh Kirkyard.
Elliot (b.1821–63) son of Thomas and Helen Scott. In 1851 he was farmer of ‘a large store farm’ employing 9 labourers at Kirndean. He lived with his sisters Ann and Christian. In 1861 he was farmer at Lanton in Jedburgh Parish, where he died. Henry (b.1823/4) from Canonbie, he was a baker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Ann and their children included Robert, John, William and Helen. Henry Erskine (b.1829/30) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was journeyman carpenter with James Douglas in Newcastleton, and listed there as ‘Cousin’s Son’. He was living at about 6 Langholm Street in 1861, and employing 7 men. In 1859 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and Isabel Grieve. Their children included: James Douglas (b.c.1860); Beatrice Cavers (b.1861); Isabella (b.1863); William Thomas (b.1866); and Jane (b.1868). Henry (1839–91) son of Henry, from whom he took over as farmer at Greenriver in Rulewater. Shortly after his mother’s death in 1878 he became ill himself, eventually becoming paralysed. He was looked after by his sister Robina Pennycook and the farm was run by his nephew James Lindsay Oliver. Herman F. (1854–95) 4th son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in India, was educated at Harrow and joined the Black Watch, rising to the rank of Major. He was apparently very stout. He was decorated in Egypt and the Sudan and died in Mauritius. Hugh (17th C.) described as ‘Hew Elliot, smith’ when he was a witness in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642. ‘John Elliot, wag’ was also a witness, so may have been his brother or other relation. He is probably the Hugh, married to Margaret Dickson, whose children born in Hawick included Helen (b.1640), William (b.1643) and Hugh (b.1644). Hugh (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hewgo Elliot, smith’ in 1685 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for throwing off Adam Young’s bonnet in the church, to which Adam Young retaliated and was also fined; Adam was also a smith, so this may have been a professional rivalry. He is probably the Hugh, son of Hugh and Margaret Dickson, who was born in Hawick in 1644. He was listed as a smith in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for James Aitchison in 1685 (along with Lancelot Aitchison, who lived at Newmill), in 1687 when he witnessed a baptism for James Davidson and another for James Atkinson in 1687. He is probably the ‘Hew Elliott, smythe in Newmynles, in Slttrig’ in 1672 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, gratis, ‘by the importunity of ane person of quality’. Hugh (1752–1830) 2nd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was brother of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was educated along with his elder brother and the pair were mentored by David Hume. He attended Oxford University and finished his military training at Metz. He fought with the Russian Army and then became a British diplomat in Bavaria before being appointed Ambassador to Prussia. In 1780 he married his first wife, Charlotte von Kraut and fought a duel with her lover (a scandal that, it is said, followed him for the rest of his life). After he moved to Copenhagen he abducted his daughter Isabella from his wife’s influence in Berlin, and the couple divorced. He then served in Dresden and Naples and was Governor of the Leeward Islands 1809–14. He was a strong abolitionist and was reported to be the force behind the conviction of a man for the murder of a slave in the British Virgin Islands. In the period 1814–20 he served as Governor of Madras. He secondly married Margaret Jones, after whom Lady Elliot Island in Queensland was named. His children were: Isabella (d.1826), who married George Payne; Theodore Henry (d.1842); Emma (d.1866), who married Sir Thomas Hislop; Edward Francis (1796–1866); Caroline; Harriet Agnes; Gilbert (1800–91), Dean of Bristol; Adm. Sir Charles (1801–75), who was Governor of Bermuda, of Trinidad and of St. Helena; Hugh Maximilian (1802–26); and Sir Thomas Frederick (1808–80). He died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed after Edmund and before Martin, who he may have been closely related to. Ingram (15th/16th C.) given a dispensation to marry, within the usually prohibited bounds of consanguinity (in the 4th degree), with Elizabeth Scott. This was granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale and recorded in Selkirk. The witnesses included Thomas and Alexander Scott. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. His brother Adie was also listed, as well as Airchie. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John, who was listed before her must have been closely related. Isabella (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. She could be the Isabella from Nicol Forest in Cumberland, who was listed in 1851 at about 7 Douglas Square, with her daughters.
Agnes and Violet; she was wife of shepherd William. James (15th C.) listed along with Laurence, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. His name was listed first, and so he was presumably head of some Borders branch. For his service Dickson received a grant from the King for the following 19 years. He probably is the ‘Jacobi elwald’ recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1498 when Thomas Middemas had remission for resetting him after he and his accomplices had burned a ‘pele in bothil’. James (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. Thomas Brown in Minto and George Davidson in Raperlaw were given remission for several crimes, including helping him in thefts occurring before the date of their existing remission. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing livestock from Synton, with his help. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobus elwald’ in Whitmuir in 1502, along with William Ker (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, when they had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William (called ‘Hob the King’ and ‘Dand the Man’) and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Also in 1502, along with John Lauder and Janet Ker, he had 7 cows stolen from him from Whitmuir, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Perhaps the same James ‘Elwand’ was recorded in 1514 when he was a witness to George Ker appointing Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Glasgow. James (d.1526) recorded as ‘James Elwald’ when he was convicted and hanged in Edinburgh for his part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. This was an event where Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme, along with other Scotts, Elliots and their followers tried to wrest control of the young James V from the Earl of Angus, this being part of ongoing power struggles within Scotland. His crimes also included ‘common Theft and Reset of theft’. However, it seems clear that he was simply a scapegoat, being probably the most important Elliot that was captured (perhaps a son of Robert of Redheugh, for example). He could be the ‘Jacob Elwald’ recorded in 1535 when ‘Georgii Elwald’ had a remission from the crime of associating with him. James (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother Simon ‘Elwald’ and William in Leaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. James (16th C.) tenant in Skelfhill in 1569 when he was listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick. He may have been related to ‘Gawin Elliott in Skelfhill’ (later of Stobs) who was the proprietor of the lands. His name is listed as ‘Jame Elliot in Skelshill’. James (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he loaned money to John Gray in Lindean. The transaction was done in Selkirk and Thomas in Yair was one of the witnesses. In 1580 Gray confessed that he owed him more for the crops they had jointly sown at Lindean. In 1581 he paid the same John Gray £40 and was assigned half his grain; Archibald in Yair was a witness. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. He was brother of ‘Rowans Hobbe’. They were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. James ‘Jamie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded having a pledge before the Privy Council in 1573. He was also recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots compiled by the English wardens. He must have been related to Jock Elliot of the Park, and may also have been descended from Simon. He was surely related to ‘James Rowe of the Park’ recorded in 1581. He is probably the James of the Park for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. However, there may be 2 men here, since in 1573 James of the Park was deceased when his son Hob was interchanged with John of the Park as ward with Sir William Scott of Balwearie. James ‘Dobson’ (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘James Elott alias Dobsoun thair’, after Archie in ‘Quheitilbray’, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He may have been related to other man of this area who were also listed, e.g. the Elliots in Priesthaugh and ‘Vicar’s Hob’. It is unclear what his nickname meant. James ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jeme Elliot called gray Wills Jeme’ in 1583, and listed among the Elliots of Park (separately from Jamie of the Park). He was presumably son of ‘Grey Willie’. James ‘Jamie’ of Millburnholm (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name was listed as ‘Jame of Milbourne home’, and seems highly likely to have been an Elliot, perhaps the same as one of the other Jameses. James ‘Airchie’s Jamie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named as ‘Arches Jamye’ along with ‘Gib Ellott son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses. James of the Binks (16th C.) recorded in 1590 amongst Ellots of the Steele, the Park, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. On a later record of the same case he is ‘of the Bryrks’, so there could be confusion over where he was from. In 1590 he was ‘of the Bynckes’ when accused of stealing a gelding and furniture from Englishmen John Heron and Henry Charlton. It is unclear how he might have been related to later Ellots of Binks. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Martin’s man’ in 1590 when he was on a list of men, including Martin’s Airchie, the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie ‘Cowfowle’ and 2 Shiels, accused of stealing from ‘Dotland’ a couple of years earlier. He was presumably a servant of Martin of Braidlie, and could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James see James Ellott. James of the Hill (16th/17th C.) brother of Airchie of the Hill. He is listed among a large group of Ellots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and robbing them. He was additionally listed in 1590 along with Airchie of the Hill among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick, and along with his brother Archie of the Hill among a group accused of rieving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale. He was ‘James on the hill’, also in 1590, when named first along with Anthony of the Binks, James ‘Half Lug’, Hobbie ‘the Tailor’ and 60 others, accused of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He was also listed as brother of Archie of the Hill among Ellots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Crozier, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with his brother Airchie of the Hill) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. Probably the same man is listed along with John and Mark of the Hill among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England in 1595. James ‘Tod’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘alias ‘toddle’’ in 1596 when he was among men complained about for a raid on ‘Allergarthe’ in England, along with Willie and Geordie ‘Kange’. He was also ‘Jamy Ellott ‘toddle’’ when accused of raiding ‘Dormontstead’ in the same year. James (16th/17th C.) merchant in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1629 as brother of William, who was a Bailie there. James (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Clintwood in Liddesdale in 1632. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Archibald in Clintwood. James (17th C.) son of John ‘wag (soldier) in Hawick’ recorded in 1642. He was named as one of the men accused of stealing the wallet of the servant of the Laird of Cavers in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Davidson and their children included: William (b.1650); Jean (b.1652); and Archibald (b.1655). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Bessie Knox and their son James was born in 1651. The witnesses were William Mark and Robert Mathieson. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for Thomas Mark in 1651. James (17th C.) tenant in Snaiberlee, one of the executors or overseers for William Elliot of Binks in the mid-1660s. James (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear if he is connected to the later Ellots of Ormiston. He could be the same as the James who was later in Hummelknowe Mill. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed as tenant at ‘bour’ (possibly near Bower Rig) in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was tenant ‘wt an kilne’. James (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Howison, along with Robert Huntly in Ormiston. His children probably (with no mother’s name given) included: Marion (b.1698); Jean (b.1700); Janet (b.1702); Martin (b.1707); Isabel (b.1709); James (b.1710); John (b.1715); Walter (b.1718); and an unnamed child (b.1719). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bowanhill. In 1723 he halved the lease of the farm with Archibald Elliot. In 1725 it is recorded that he was ‘trysted with a long continued sickness’. Isobel Beattie was assisting him, which she used as an excuse to postpone appearing to be publicly rebuked in Hawick. James (18th C.) shepherd in Stobicote. His son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733; this could be the James who married Betty Goodfellow and lived at Newcastleton. James (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet Elliot. He was tenant in Millholm in Castleton Parish. He had a son, who was also James, and who died without children. James (18th C.) tenant at Meikle Whitlaw, recorded in 1753. He was probably son of Robert of Larriston, and brother of Robert who was a senior clerk at the Pay Office in London. Helen, who married Rulewater joiner Walter Amos, may have been his sister. He died unmarried. James (18th C.) recorded as being ‘Fenwick’ in 1758 when his daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish. Gavin was witness to the baptism, this presumably being the Gavin who was known as last Elliot of Fenwick. He may have been brother of Gavin and another son of Robert of Fenwick. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Young. Their children included: John (b.1760); and Charles (b.1764). James (18th C.) son of James in Millholm and descended from the Elliots of Unthank. He was ‘in Castleton’ (although it us unclear whether he was tenant in the farm of Castleton, or just lived in the Parish). He died without issue. James (18th C.) recorded being ‘in Harroldknow’ (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in 1760 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He must have been related to John in the same place, who had children baptised in 1775 and 1780. James (b.1728) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Milsington in 1756. He married Margaret Scott in 1753 and their children included: John (1754–1817); Margaret (b.1756); William (b.1757); Francis (b.1758); Andrew (b.1760); James (1761–1850); and Betty (b.1768). James (1729/30–1819) tenant at Harwood-sike-foot and then Little Whitlaw. He was at Sykefoot in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 farm horses and 2 non-working dogs. He married Christian Blyth, who died at Harwood-sike-foot in 1796, aged 61; she was daughter of John Blyth, Deacon of the Parish. Their children were buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. James (1733–94) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Betty, 1729–1817) Goodfellow, and they both died in Newcastleton. Their children included: James (1762–1851), who married Christian Fletcher; probably Eupham; Elizabeth (b.1766); and Elspeth (b.1770). He could be the James, son of James, shepherd at Stobicoate, born in Cavers Parish in 1733. James (18th C.) listed as innkeeper at ‘Harrot’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Harwood-on-Teviot. James (c.1733–1816) son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott. He was a shepherd in Twislehope. He married Elizabeth Jackson (c.1744–1806) Their children included: Rolland (c.1766–99), who married Katherine Little; Barbara (c.1774–92); and James (b.1783). James of Ormiston (1736–82) son of Walter of Ormiston. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer. In 1778 he married Isabel Rule in in Hawick; she was presumably his 2nd wife and the couple were fined by Cavers Session in 1779 for their irregular marriage. An entry in the diary of James Sibbald states ‘Heard at the fair James Elliot of Ormiston was married to his own servant’. His children included: Simon (b.1770); James (b.1776); and Andrew (b.1777), who may have been shepherd at Cocklawfoot and emigrated. All 3 of these children were baptised in Cavers in 1778. It seems that his children were unable to inherit and hence Ormiston went to his sister Helen and her husband Thomas Currer. James (1748–1828) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot, who died in 1809 at Cleuchhead. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary Castleton couple with the same names. Their children probably included: William (b.1773); Isabel (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); James (b.1783); John (1785–1854), who married Helen Murray and emigrated to Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario; and Walter (b.1787), who may be the Walter who lived at Dimleyhaughfoot. He died at Burngrains and is buried in Castleton. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary couple of the same names. He was recorded in Tweedside in at least the period 1774–79. His children included: Isabel (b.1774); Adam (b.1777); and Helen (b.1779). Other children probably included: Helen (b.1775); Mary (b.1780); and Thomas (b.1791). James (18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons Charles (b.1784) and George (b.1786). James (b.c.1765) joiner in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was at about 3 Walter Street. James (b.1765) son of shoemaker Robert. In 1798 he married Janet Reuwick, announced in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. His wife died in 1835. James (1769–1824) youngest son of William of Whithaugh. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in Hawick. He worked as a clerk for William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’, who was the most prominent general merchant and banker in Hawick at the time. He was listed in Oliver’s 1808 will as ‘my clerk, brother of John Elliot Esq of Whithaugh’. He is probably the merchant James who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808 for Joseph Peacock and Jean Miller. He is probably the James, merchant in Hawick, who was declared bankrupt in 1815, and who was listed as ‘late Merchant in Hawick’ in 1824 when his outstanding debts were to be sold. James (1770–1855) son of Ninian. His mother’s name is not given on the baptism record, but it seems likely it was Janet Douglas. He was a shepherd in the Teviot-head area; most of his children were born at Sundhope. In 1798 he married Janet (1774/5–1843), daughter of John Grieve and Elizabeth Paisley; she died at Broadhaugh. Their children included: Ninian (1799–1885), who died in Ontario; Elizabeth (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); John (b.1806), who died young; Jean (or Jane, b.1809), who married James Riddell, who lived at Lochburnfoot; John (again, b.1811), probably the carrier in Roberton; James (1814–80), who died at Northhouse; and William (b.1816). In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter Jane. He died at Valesburn. James ‘Jamie’ (1772–1855) 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, younger son of Cornelius, the 2nd Laird, his brother William dying during their father’s lifetime. He became Writer to the Signet in 1798. Trained in his father’s Edinburgh law office, it is said he did not enjoy the sedentary job, but he did attend to much of his father’s country business. However, from the early 1800s he improved the Wolfelee estate by planting trees and hedges, repaired dykes, cottages, etc. He was still ‘junior of Woollee’ listed along with his father as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1810 he became a Major in the 1st Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was also ‘younger of Woollees’ in 1811 when recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh. He succeeded to the estate in 1821, and for a few years lived at Mackside. He built the mansion there in 1825–27 (although probably retaining some of the previous house) and it was him who changed the name from ‘Woollee’ to ‘Wolfelee’. He was a Justice of the Peace and in 1823 fined some shepherds for playing Hobkirk Baa on the wrong day. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the Reform Bill in 1832. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club, but left after a political dispute in 1834. He was also one of the Magistrates of the county who were present in Hawick during the election troubles of 1837. He was living at Stewartfield in 1837. About 1849 he gave land for Wolfelee Free Kirk and Manse to be built. He had 12 children, many of whom were born at at Stewartfield (later called Harrigge), near Jedburgh. Although personally attached to the Established Church, he gave land to establish a Free Church and manse. In 1799 he married Caroline, daughter of Walter Hunter of Polmood and Lady Caroline Mackenzie, and she died in 1824. In 1827 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Robert Davidson of Pinmachiehill, Kelso, his cousin, who died in 1856 (and is buried in Kensing Green, London). His children were: William (who died in infancy); Sir Walter (1803–87), who succeeded; James Forbes (1807–41), a Lieutenant with the 5th Madras Infantry, who died in Nellore; Robert (1807–96), twin of James, who reached the age of 89; John Elphinstone (b.1810), Rector of Whalton, Morpeth, who married Georgina Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates; William Thomas (1812–90), who died in Australia; George Mackenzie (1822–56), who also died in Australia; Charles (1824–88), Royal Artillery Colonel, who married Christina Ramsay of Balmain and later Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse and the Archbishop of Canterbury’s sister; Caroline (b.1805), who died at the age of 13; Elizabeth Margaret (d.1889), who died unmarried; Eleanor Mary (1815–1915), who married Herman Freyherr von Poellnitz and reached the age of 100; and another child (with his 2nd wife), who died young. He helped 2 of his sisters out of debt. He was known as a Liberal in politics. He was said to be still riding his horse into his eighties. James (18th/19th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Young and their children included: John (b.1796); Isabell (b.1798); Daniel (b.1800); James (b.1802); and Elizabeth (b.1804). James of Goldielands (1769–1848), son of shoemaker Adam and descended from the Elliots in Brugh, he became a teacher in Wilton. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism, with references instead of answers’, running to 4 editions (the last 3 being 1798, 1803, 1808). He retired as schoolmaster at Wilton in about 1810 and was replaced by James Turnbull. Around the same year he was put in charge of supervising the cutting that had to be done to create the Avenue leading to Wilton Lodge. He was overseer of works (or factor) for the Duke of Buccleuch, serving from about 1810 into at least the late 1830s, and living at Goldielands; he was there on the 1841 census. Baron Von Holbein lodged with him as a prisoner during the Napoleonic Wars. He was recorded as ‘Mr. Js.át Goldielands when his father died in 1815. He was a prominent Hawick Tory, taking an active part in local politics in the early 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and may be the ‘J. Elliot, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. A letter to him from 1825, relating to the Duke of Buccleuch’s share of the assessment for Ettrick Kirk is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was also one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He provided the minister with details of the agricultural state of Hawick Parish for the 1839 entry in the New Statistical Account. He married Agnes Pirrie (d.1840) in Wilton in 1794; it is suggested that she was born in 1758, but that is surely too early. All their children were baptised in Wilton Parish: Margaret (b.1795), the eldest daughter, who married John Wilson, ‘the Dip’; Adam (b.1797), a medical doctor, who later lived at Goldielands; Agnes (1799–1863); William (b.1801), hosiery manufacturer; Helen or Nelly (b.1803); James (b.1805), mathematics and physics professor in Liverpool; and Robert (1807–88) of Laighwood, Dunkeld. Letters of his for the period 1810–37 are in the National Archives. His will in Jedburgh Sheriff Court Records is dated 1849. His portrait is in the Museum, painted by an unknown artist. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably the same as another James. He could be the James recorded as driver in Newcastleton in 1835 or the other James recorded as joiner. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith, probably in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included James (b.1818/9), who was an agricultural labourer in Newcastleton. His wife secondly married William Cowan, who she is recorded with in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Glendinning and their children included: William (b.1837); John (b.1829); Thomas (b.1832); Adam (b.1834); and Jane (b.1837). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Bella Armstrong and their children included: Betty (b.1826); George (b.1828); and Janet (b.1831). These 3 were all baptised in 1835. His widow, son George and daughter Janet (or ‘Jenny’) were living at about 11 South Liddle Street in 1841. James of Cooms (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed as shepherd at ‘Waterside, Castleton’ among heads of household in 1836–41. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Foulishiel in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–40. He emigrated to America in about 1840. James (18th/19th C.) teacher at Hermitage School. He was listed there among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–38 and recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 the schoolhouse there was occupied by labourer Robert (and family), who may have been his son. James (b.1783/4) from England, he served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at about 54 High Street with his wife Mary. In 1851 he was a lodger with the Bells on Turk’s Close and recorded as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1861 he was living with his daughter Agnes and her husband Thomas Crosbie. James (c.1785–1850) farmer at Lymiecleuch in 1841. He may have been son of James, shepherd in Twislehope. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He married Betty Scott (c.1789–1835). Their children included: Elizabeth (1810–35); James (1814–27); Rolland (b.1815), tenant in Mackside; Henry (b.c.1819); Scott (b.1824); Mary (b.c.1826); James (again, 1828–43); William (b.1830); Janet (b.1834); and Walter (b.1835). In 1851 the head of the family was Henry, with the 3700 acre farm held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. James (b.1787/8) agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Roberton Woodfoot and in 1851 was farmer of 6 acres there. In 1861 his wife and 2 sons were living at Riddell Mill. His wife was Jane (b.1799/1800) and their children included: John (b.c.1823); James (b.c.1825), a dyker; Janet (b.c.1826); William (b.c.1828); Adam (b.c.1830); and Alexander (b.c.1832). James (1792/3–1873) carter and sheep dealer in Newcastleton. He could be the ‘J. Elliot, N. Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is probably the cattle dealer of that name listed as male head of his family in Newcastleton in 1835. In 1851 and 1861 he lived at about 29 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Shiel (1808–87). Their children included: Roland E. (1832–88), who died in New Westminster, British Columbia; Robert (b.1834); Thomas (b.1836); James (1839–47); Katherine (1841–47); Charles Scott (b.1843); William (b.1846); and James (b.1849). He died at Kershopebrae, and his wife died in Hawick. James (1794–1884) born in Roberton Parish, son of John and Elizabeth Scott. He was long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, being a spirit merchant at 3 Orrock Place. He may be the same James recorded as proprietor of a public house on ‘High St.’ in Pigot’s 1825 directory (and this could be the Punch Bowl at No. 27, marked ‘Elliot’ on Wood’s 1824 map), and listed as a vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory; this same James was proprietor of the Royal Oak in 1832. On the 1841 census he was an innkeeper and spirit dealer on the Sandbed. In 1851 he is listed as a vintner on Orrock Place, in Slater’s 1852 directory he is a vintner at the Ewe and Lamb and in 1861 he was innkeeper at 3 Orrock Place. He married Helen Paterson (1806/7–54). Their children included: John (1835–58), who was Cornet in 1855; Helen (b.1838); William (b.1841), who died in infancy; Elizabeth or ‘Betsy’ (b.1843); Ann Scoon (‘Annie’, 1844–92); Margaret (b.1846), who died young; and James. A portrait exists of him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. James (b.c.1797) grocer and spirit dealer on Needle Street. He is recorded there in 1841, along with wife Agnes and children Agnes, Margaret and Benjamin. Probably the same James is listed as a grocer on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1837 directory. James (1797–1866) son of Robert and Wilhelmina Hislop, he was born in Castleton Parish, where most of his children were baptised. He became farmer at Middleholm, near Langholm. He married Helen (1804–80), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: Robert (1824–50), who died in Liverpool; Elizabeth Beattie (1825–94), who married Langholm clogger Thomas Houman; John (1828–56), who worked as a joiner with his uncle James Douglas; Anne (1830–95); Christian Douglas (1833–89), who married shepherd William Elliot Pringle; Janet Douglas (1835–92), who married forester Adam Inglis; William Douglas (1837–87), who lived in Langholm; James Douglas (1840–1920), who also farmed at Middleholm and late lived in Evesdale; Walter Douglas (1843–77), bank clerk, who moved to County Durham; and Douglas (1846–1919), bank cashier in Yorkshire. James (b.c.1800) from Newcastle-on-Tyne, he was a shoemaker on Havelock Street in Wilton, listed in 1861. His children included Andrew, Elizabeth, Helen, James and William. His children were born in Teviothead and Langholm parishes. James (b.1800/1) from Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Wauchope Common. In 1851 he was living at Hawthornside Cottages and listed as a shepherd, and was listed as retired at Wauchope Common in 1861. He married Margaret Scott (from Ettrick), and their children included Adam, Isabella and Mary. James (b.1802/3) born in Minto Parish, probably son of William. He was a farmer and then a grocer, wine and spirit dealer at the Crown Inn in Denholm in the 1860s. He may also have been a joiner in Denholm. In 1837 he married Mary, daughter of farmer Robert Bulman. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his father-in-law, probably at Eastgatehall farm. By 1861 he was on Main Street as a grocer, etc. His children were: Alison (b.1838); Janet (b.1840), perhaps also known as Jessie; Elizabeth Simpson (‘Eliza’, b.1840), probably twin of Janet; William (b.1845); and Mary Ann (b.1850). James (b.1803/4–80) son of John and Jean Scott, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish and later at Westwater. By 1851 he was ‘Farmer not now tenant but residing’ at Flatt. He was succeeded in the tenancy of Flatt by his nephew John. He married Margaret Little (c.1818–83) in 1847 and their children included: John (1848–66); William (1849–97), also tenant in Westwater; Thomas Scott (1850–1906), who died at Salkend; Jane Scott (1851–1928); James Main (1855–1917); George Thompson (1855–1921), who died at Twickenham; and Henry (1864–1913), an engineer, who died in Barcelona. James (b.c.1805) labourer in Hobbirk Parish. In 1841 he was living at Langburnshiel. He married Margaret Scott in 1838. Their children included: Janet (b.1838); Isabella (b.1845); and Mary (b.1850), born in Kirkton Parish. James (b.1862) may also have been their son. James of Goldielands (b.1805) son of the earlier James, who was teacher at Wilton. Later in life he was also referred to as ‘Professor Elliot’, while his brother Adam was called ‘Dr. Elliot, Goldielands’. In 1841 he was listed as a teacher, living with his father at Goldielands. In 1851 he was a teacher of mathematics, lodging in Duke Street in Edinburgh. He contributed talks to the Archaeological Society (e.g. on local birds in 1876), and he described the geology of Upper Teviotdale for the Edinburgh Geological Society.
in 1870 and the Hawick district for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1873. In 1880 he gave the land of the former bowling green off Bourtree Place to the Baptist congregation. He is probably the James who was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at Queen's College in Liverpool. He wrote 'An Elementary Course of Practical Mathematics' (1850), which ran to several editions, 'Moses and Modern Science', as well as several other books. In 1857 he was described as 'late of Edinburgh, now of Queen's College, Liverpool'. In 1879 he wrote to the Spectator about the extraordinary mental arithmetic powers of his friend (and fellow student at Edinburgh) George Bidder. Adam who wrote to Charles Darwin from Liverpool in 1872 (about the possible offspring of a woman and an ape) may have been his son. James (1807–41) eldest son of James the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee and brother of Walter, 4th Laird. He was a Lieutenant in the 5th Madras Native Infantry and died in Nellore (south-eastern India). He had a twin, Robert, who died in 1896. James (b.1807/8) from England, he was a farmer in Newcastle on Tyne. In 1861 he was living in North Hermitage Street and farming 4 acres. His wife was Helen and their children included: George (b.c.1839); Janet (b.1841); Thomas (b.c.1845); Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse. James (b.1818/9) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, son of blacksmith James and Janet Robson. In 1861 he was living at about 13 South Liddel Street. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse. James (b.1818/9) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, son of blacksmith James and Janet Robson. In 1861 he was living at about 13 South Liddel Street. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who but had no children and hence was succeeded by his brother Edward. In 1888 he married Emily Grace, 2nd daughter of William St. Lawrence Gethin, brother of an Irish Baronet, and the couple resided at Wolfelee. He died suddenly, aged 47 and was buried in Southdean churchyard – ‘My name it is J.T.S. Elliot, And I am the laird o’ Wolfelee; A fig for the Rosebury Earl, Wha thinks he daur meddle wi’ me’ [JCG]. James (1848–1928) son of William, shepherd at Scotch Kersehope. He worked as a gamekeeper in Liddesdale and was later a farmer over the Border. He married Margaret Murray (1854–1918) and their children were: Davina (1873–96); William (1875–1902); and Catherine (1877–1974), who married Alexander Hunter. James (1859/60–1936) postmaster in Newcastleton. He was grandson of William and Isabella Armstrong, who are buried in the same lair at Ettleton. He married Lizzie Jane, who died in 1919, aged 50. They had a son John who died of wounds in 1918. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.1923), J.P., farmer at Burnhead and later at the Flex. He was for a long time a member of the Common Riding Race Committee. He was recorded as the starter at the Common Riding Races in 1873 and 1875 and gave several speeches at Common Ridings in the 1890s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He also acted as Convenor of West Teviotdale for the Highland and Agricultural Society and was invited to be a wool judge when the Agricultural Show came to Hawick in 1914. In 1895 he gained the farms of Meikle and Little Whitlaw from the Scotts of Buccleuch, exchanging them for Fenwick. He was still alive in 1919 when there was a gathering of the Flex photographed. In 1892 he married Isabella Douglas Amos (d.1945), daughter of James Amos. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. He left a sum of £500, the interest to be run for as prize money in the Flex Stakes each year at the Common Riding. James (b.1873) son of Francis, he was born at Parkhill-haugh in Roberton Parish, where his father was a stone dyker. He was educated at Robert School and was an apprentice blacksmith with William Pow at Borthwickbraeburnfoot. He came to Bonchester Bridge as a journeyman blacksmith with Thomas Rutherford, then went to Edinburgh and worked with Mackenzie Brothers there for 8 years. He joined the 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots in Edinburgh in 1896. He returned to Bonchester Bridge to take over as blacksmith from the Rutherford’s in about 1902. He was Superintendent of Range for Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905 and then Secretary. In 1899 he was married in Edinburgh. Jane see Jean. Jane (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Miss Jane, Burngrains’ in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. She could be the Jean (b.1781), daughter of James, who died at Burngrains. Janet (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hawick Toun’. Janet (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. She could be the ‘Jeanie’ listed in the 1851 census as mother of grocer James Edgar, probably at 28 Langholm Street. Jean nee Rutherford (d.bef. 1621) daughter of Jean and granddaughter of Gavin of Stobs. She inherited Stobs in 1607, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. She married William, brother of Robert Elliot, 17th of Redheugh, and they had 3 children: Robert; Francis; and James. Her husband was successively called ‘of Hartsgarth’, ‘of Rig’ and ‘of Hartshaugh’. Jean (17th C.) listed as resident of Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. There were John Elliots listed before and after her, and so she was presumably related to at least one of them. Jean (1709/10–74) daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. In 1731 she married William Elliot of Black Tarras, also called ‘of Ludgell’. The marriage contract is signed by Thomas Scott of Todrig, Charles Scott (brother of the Laird of Gornenberry), Thomas Scott of Stonedge, George Scott (brother of the Laird of Newton), John Scott of Weens, Henry Elliot (both elder and younger, in Deadwater), Robert and William Elliot (sons of John Elliot in Larriston), Henry Elliot (son of William of Harwood) and Robert Kerr (son of the deceased Andrew Kerr in Roughleennook). Many of these men were her close or distant relatives. Their oldest son was William, tenant of ‘Dinlie’ (presumably Dinlees). Jean (1727–1805) born at Minto, 3rd daughter of Sir Gilbert, 1st Earl of Minto. In her teens she entertained a group of Jacobites under John Goodwillie at Minto House, while her father (a staunch anti-Jacobite) hid among the crags. She is also known as the writer of a popular version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. This was published anonymously in 1776. It was written in response to a bet by her brother Gilbert (later 3rd Baronet) that she would be unable to produce a good ballad on the subject of Flodden. She must have based her version on parts of a traditional ballad, but nevertheless her interpretation quickly became popular. And although she declined to claim credit for it, she was locally referred to as ‘the Flower’. Some of her other verse is published in ‘The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897). She played a strong role in sorting out her father’s affairs after his death in 1766. She later moved to Edinburgh, where she was described as ‘a prodigous fund of Scottish anecdote’, but also that she ‘did not appear to have ever been handsome’. She was said to be elegant, fashionable and intelligent, with a liking for French literature. However, she was also said to be the last lady in Edinburgh to use a sedan chair. Returning to Teviotdale in her last year, she died, unmarried, at her brother’s house at Monteviot. A portrait of her as an elderly woman was painted by an unknown artist (also sometimes ‘Jane’). Jean ‘Lucie Lass’ or ‘Jeanie Luce’ (b.1788/9) postmistress in Newcastleton. She was described as ‘a crazy female who could neither read nor write’, and it later seemed unthinkable that she would ever be entrusted with the mail. She would be dressed in ‘a drugget petticoat reaching a little below the knee, a man’s coat and shepherd’s plaid, with her feet and legs encased in a pair of Wellington boots’ and in later years had a weather-beaten face, piercing eyes, shaggy eye-brows and an uncovered head. She was said to be treated well by residents of Liddesdale because she was related to some of the better families in the area, and also because she was such a gossip. She was succeeded as postmaster by Jamie Nichol. She may be the pauper living with carrier Thomas Turnbull’s family at about 1 Whitchester Street in 1841. In 1851 she was listed as ‘Parish Relief once District Post’ on Douglas Square. She could be the pauper living with the Beattie family in 1861. It is unclear what her nickname meant. Jean (b.c.1910) originally at Monteviot. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. and 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes de Elaund’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained that one of his neighbours tried to strangle him. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Elwald’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots, and it is even possible he was the clan leader at the time. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Elwald’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 for the Lincluden area when his fine was compounded. Probably a different ‘Johannis Elwald de Dauduran’ is also listed. John (15th C.) listed along with James, Laurence and Simon Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as ‘Jak elwald’, he lived at Newton of Caverton. He had remission for several thefts: cattle from John Waddell from ‘elinburn’; sheep from John Lamb in Wilton; a horse from Wilton; and sheep from William Martin in Whitchester. He also committed common theft before the time of his previous remission. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh leased the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne. He is recorded there as ‘John Elwalde of Thorleshope’ and his brother Patrick is also mentioned as a witness. In 1494/5 he was listed being ‘in thornlawishop’ among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘John Elwald in Thorleshope’ in 1498 in a document listing many Liddesdale men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell for good behaviour. He must have been a close ancestor of Roland, Robert (or ‘Hob’ or ‘Robin’) and the later John of Thorlieshope. He may be the John who was one of the Elliots who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who did not appear before the court in Jedburgh in 1494/5. His name was given as ‘Johnnis elwald lawson’, with the last part presumably being a nickname. It is possible he is the ‘Law’s John’ recorded 40 years later. John (15th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was son of ‘wrycrag’, but it is unclear how to interpret this nickname, or who his father may have been. John (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Johe Elwald in Sondhope’ in a respite of the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 given to Robert of Redheugh and several others in Liddesdale. Since only a few Elliots are mentioned, it seems likely that he was a close relative of the chief. He is also listed along with William of Larriston and a number of other Liddesdale Elliots in another respite of 1516. He is recorded there as ‘John Elwald in Sandop’. He was probably tenant of the lands of Sundhope, near Whitrope. John ‘Gret Johnnie’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. In about 1510 he and Patrick were entered by Robert of Redheugh at a Justice Court in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairnilee in 1526. His surname is ‘Elwand’. Chaplain George was also a witness. John ‘Law’s John’ (16th C.) listed as one of the band of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as ‘John Elwald, called Lawis-Johnie’; it is possible that his father was a Lawrence. He may have been a servant of Thomas of Mangerton, along with William, son of Alexander ‘Elwald’, who is also listed. It is possible he is the same man as (or otherwise related to) ‘Law’s Jock’ mentioned in the 1570s. He could alternatively be the ‘lawson’ recorded in 1494/5. John ‘Jock Unhappy’ (d.1536) recorded as ‘John Elwald, alias Jok Vnhappy’ when he was convicted of theft etc., and hanged. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joanni Elwald’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He and his brothers were the tenants of ‘Catlie’ (probably ‘Gatliehill’). John of the Hill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joanni de lie Hill’ in 1541 on the rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of ‘Streichelohe’. He may be related to Airchie of the Hill, recorded around the 1580s and others with the same designation. John (16th C.) tenant of Ramsiegel in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. Other men recorded as being ‘in Ramsiegel’ (but tenants of other farms) were Robert and William. He may also be the John who was a tenant in Stirkshielhope (along with other Elliots associated with Ramsiegel); his son ‘Jacobo Elwald’ called ‘Nelis Jok’ was also named (but may be a confusion). He was perhaps related to the earlier Hob and later Gavin of Ramsiegel. John of Thorlieshope (16th C.) son of Robert (or ‘Robin’). Along with others he was entered in a bond to John Kerr of Ferniehirst by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546. He was there recorded as ‘John Elwand’. There are other similar bonds involving Robert of Redheugh and him in 1547 and 1548. It is unclear what crimes he was accused of. He may be son of the ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorleshop’ recorded in 1516 and may be related to the John of Thorleshope recorded in 1583. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name appears as ‘Johnne Iwand’ and he was probably related to Alison and Margaret, who are also listed. John (16th C.) recorded as son to ‘Hob Quhytserk’ in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was recorded as son of ‘Quhytserk’ in 1548 when there was a further bond of Robert of Redheuch with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for him and John of Thorlieshope to be ‘entered’. He was probably another Liddesdale Elliot. John ‘Nelly’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1548 when, along with Robert of Redheugh and Richard of the Park, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as ‘Jhone Elliott, callit Nelleis Jhone’. He is probably the same man as ‘Neillis Jok’ (although listed as ‘Jacobo Elwald’, i.e. James rather than John) recorded in 1541 among the tenants in Stirkshielhope; he appears to have been son of another John, with his mother presumably being Helen. John ‘Jock o the Park’ or ‘Little Jock Elliot’ (d.bef. 1578) son of Simon of the Park. He was a notorious riever, and subject of a traditional ballad. His tower may have been located where Newcastleton railway station was later built. He is recorded purchasing (or perhaps leasing) Hangingside (i.e. the land later known as Hawthornside) in 1562, confirmed in 1572/3. In October 1566 he was pursued by the Earl of Bothwell, after failing to appear at Hermitage along with the other Elliot leaders. Since he refused to stop, Bothwell shot him and they then fought at close quarters. He apparently struck Bothwell 3 times, while himself being stabbed twice in the chest, and collapsed about a mile away. It is said that he died of his wounds (although this is not clear, since it seems that the same man is documented later) and traditionally this is said to have happened on the Billhope Burn. Meanwhile Bothwell was taken back to Hermitage where he eventually recovered, after being visited by Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 he was pledge for ‘the haill branche of the Park’, with William Ker of Cessford, younger, as his surety. In 1569 he was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for ‘Gray Will Elliot’ and ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’, who were surely close relatives. In 1570 he signed a bond along with other Elliots, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will and John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for him in 1573, before the Privy Council. He may be the same ‘Johande the Park’ listed among Monipennie’s Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but probably compiled earlier). He was ‘unquhile Johnne Elliot of the Park’ when it was reported that he had previously acted as joint surety for Simmie Elliot of the Park; he also served as surety for 2 other Elliots. Unless he lived to be quite old he is unlikely to be the same John of the Park recorded in the 1580s – ‘They leave not spindle, spune nor spit, Bed, bolster, blanket, sark nor sheet, John o’ the Park, Rypes kist and ark. For a’ sic wark, He is richt meet’ [SRM], ‘Wha daur meddle i’ me? Wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T]. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Havick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Jok Elliot’. John (16th C.) tenant of Fiddleton. He is recorded in 1569, along with Hob ‘the Lady’ and Hob of Unthank, when ‘Will Elliot callit the Lord’ when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. He may be related to the later John in Fiddleton. John ‘Law’s Jock’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1574 as ‘Jok Elliot callit Lawis Jok in Priesthaugh’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Thome’ and ‘Lawis Richie’ were also named and presumably brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Probably the same ‘Jokke Elliot in Priesthaugh’ is listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Lawis-Johne’ recorded in 1535. John (16th C.) described as John ‘Elwood’, brother of Will of the Steel in 1576 when the English Wardens complained to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale that he had stolen 100 sheep from Hexhamshire. He could be the same as John ‘of the Steill’ who was taken prisoner by Johnstone of that Ilk in 1572, with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braudlie entering into a bond with Johnstone for his return to Johnstone after they had ‘borrowit’ him. He could be the recorded John of the Steele (unless this was an error for Will of the Steele) recorded in 1590 as first in a list of Elliots of the Park and Binks, and others, accused of a raid into England. John ‘Scot’s Hob’s Jock’, ‘Rob’s John’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given ‘Jok Elliot, callit Scottis Hobbis Jok’, and hence he was presumably son of ‘Scot’s Hob’. In 1581 he was part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale; ‘Scot’s Hob’s Gavin’ was also listed and presumably his brother. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘hail gang of Park’. He was listed in 1582/3 as one of the cautioners for Sim’s Rowie of the Park. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Elliot, called Robeis Johnne’, and his name appears with Sim’s Archie, Jamie’s Hob and others. His name comes second (after Airchie of the Park) among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage; there he is ‘Scots Hobbs Jock of the Parke’. He was recorded as ‘Scotts Hob’s Jocke’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed ‘Scot’; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park. John of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Elliot of Bewholmis’ among cautioners for men accused of crimes against Englishmen in 1579/80. He was recorded as ‘John Elliott of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including Hob of Bowholm. It is unclear how he was related to Hob, but they were probably brothers or father and son. His son David was declared as a fugitive in 1605. John (16th C.) son of ‘Elder Will’, he was sentenced to imprisonment for rieving in 1580/1, along with several other Elliots, Armstronngs and Nixons of Liddesdale. In 1581 James Stewart ‘of Scherelaw’ was cautioned to present him to the Privy Council and in 1582/3 Stewart was found liable to pay a penny for his non-appearance. He was probably brother of Robert, who was captured in Hawick in 1567. Their father was clearly William, but it is unclear to which branch of the Elliots they belonged. It is possible he was the man transcribed as ‘Johnne Elliot, son of the Elder Tod’ who was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. John of Heuchhouse (16th C.) prisoner in Blackness Castle in 1570, along with Hob Elliot, son of ‘Elder Will’. The pair were allowed to return to Liddesdale following a bond given by Martin of Braudlie, Elder Will, John of the Park, Adam ‘called Cowdas’, Hob of Heuchhouse and ‘Clementis Hob’; however, they were not produced after 8 days, and the Elliots incurred a penalty of 4000 merks. There was a reminder at the Privy Council in 1578/9 of the pledge to enter him into ward, along with Hob, son of Elder Will: they were supposed to go to the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Halton, but did not go. He was also listed in 1581 along with William of Redheugh, Adam of Shaws, Archie of the Hill and others. They were accused by Englishman James Foster of ‘Symwhaitie’ of stealing cattle and goods. In 1579/80 he was ‘Johnne Elliot, son of Dand of Heuchhous’ when he was listed among men (including Martin of Heuchhouse) accused of raiding into England. In the 1580s he (and Gavin of Ramsay) also accused Capt. Carvell and his band ‘with the clans of Leven’ of stealing 200 cattle and 30 horses from their lands. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Martin of the same place. He could be the John who is recorded in 1583 as brother to Hob of Heuchhouse. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid in England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including ‘Reid’ Martin of Heuchhouse, who was surely a close relative. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeild’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’ in England. His name was also given in 1590 along with Croziers, Fosters and others accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. ‘William Elliott son to John of the Hewghhouse’, complained about for a raid into England in 1595, was presumably his son. John ‘the Gyde’ (16th C.) listed in 1576 when Robert of Redheugh acted as surety for him ‘that he sould abstene fra thift and resest of thift in tyne cumming’. His name was given as ‘Johinne Elliot, callit Jok the Gyde’, and the pledge was stated to have been broken by 1578/9. He was probably related to Jock the Gyde recorded almost 50 years later. John ‘Gavin’s Jock’ of Ramsiehill (16th C.) listed in 1569 as ‘Gawins Jok in Ramsygill’. Ade, ‘callit the Cowdais’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for him and ‘Wilckis Hob’. Perhaps the same ‘Jock’ was listed as tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569; the Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants, and he may have been related to Will, Dand and Hob, other Elliots who were also listed as tenants. He is recorded in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England, where he was ‘Gawynnis Jok’ (making it clear that his father was Gavin); his brother ‘Hobbe’ was also mentioned. In 1576 there was a complaint that Neil Montgomery of Langshaw had allowed him to break from ward. In 1581 he was listed along with Martin of Braudlie and Robert Kerr of Ancrum when they were cautioned for the non-appearance of Jock’s Willie and ‘Ill Hob’, both from Ramsiehill, who were possibly his sons; they were fined in 1582/3. In 1581 the notary signed for him because he could not write himself. He was listed in 1583 as ‘Joke of Ramsgill’ in a letter from the English wardens, where he was the first man listed under the Elliots of Burnhead. He was probably related to the Jock of Ramsiehill recorded in 1612, as well as to other Elliots of Ramsiehill and Burnhead. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Gawins Jok’ under the heading ‘Burnhead’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs (published around 1594, but probably compiled earlier). John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Elliot, callit of the Dewisleis’ in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was previously meant to have been placed into ward, but in fact had not been. This was along with Andrew ‘callit the Wowaris Andro’, with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. He was probably related to Jock the Gyde recorded almost 50 years later. He was probably related to Jock the Gyde recorded in 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John ‘Jock’ of the Hill (16th C.) recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots of the Burnhead branch. He was surely related to Archie of the Hill, who is also listed. Probably the same ‘Jocke Elwood’ was ‘brothers sonne’ to Archie of the Hill in 1591 when they were accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is probably the Jock listed along with Mark and James of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into...
England in 1595. Possibly the same ‘John Ellott of the Hill’ acted as cautioner in 1611 for John of Heuchhouse to appear in court at Jedburgh. John of Burnhead (16th C.) named in 1590 along with ‘Gib Elliott son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He was recorded as ‘called the lard of Burnheheads’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots associated with Burnhead. John ‘Half Lug’ (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Burnhead in 1583, where his name is given as ‘Joke Elliot called Halfe loges’. Probably the same John was ‘halfe lug’ in 1590, when accused with several other Elliots of leading a raid on ‘Windgates’ in England. He may be the ‘Wyll Elliotts John of Burnheades’ recorded in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. He was ‘Jok Elliott of Burnheheid, called Halfe Lug’ when listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in 1605. John ‘Jock’ of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Braudlie branch, his name appearing as ‘John Elliot of Thoresnesope’. He may be the same as the John of Thorlieshope recorded 4 decades earlier, but is more likely to be his son. Probably the same John was recorded in 1569 when Martin of Braudlie and Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton promised to enter him in ward if requested by the Lord Regent. Probably the same John was pledge in 1569 for ‘the haill branche of the Thorlishoip (except Hob of the Shaws and his brother Will of the Steele), with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule as his surety. He was also ‘of Thorlischopy’ when held in Wester Weemys in 1569 as pledge for Hob of the Shaws and Archie ‘Fyre the Brais’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Hobbis Jok’ in 1581 when he was among those cautioned for the non-appearance of ‘Simnis Rovie’ of the Park. Others listed were Rob’s John (unless this was an error and the same man), Sim’s Archie and Jamie’s Hob, who may have been related to him; they were fined in 1582/3. He was also referred to as ‘Johne Ellot, called Roweis Johne’. John ‘Sim’s John’ of the Park (16th C.) presumably son of Simon, and probably related to ‘Jock o the Park’ from a couple of decades earlier. He is probably the John of the Park for whom surety was recorded in 1573. He was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, but was interchanged with Hob, son of the deceased James of the Park; the cautioners were Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He may be the ‘Johnne Ellot of the Park’ listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. An English list of 1583 has him first among the Elliots of Park, giving his name as ‘Sims John Elliot of the Parke’; others named (to whom he was probably closely related) are ‘Grey Willie’, ‘Scots Hobbie’, Jamie of the Park, ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ and ‘Hob’s Hobbie’. Also in 1583 he was ‘John Elwet of the Park’ when the Halls of ‘Haveracres’ complained that he had led about 100 men in a raid that resulted in the deaths of 4 Halls. He may be the John of the Park, recorded in 1590 along with Gabriel, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. ‘He must have been related to ‘Rowie’ or ‘Robin’ of the Park, recorded in 1578 and 1581 and ‘young Archie of the Park’ who was one of the Elliots to sign a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599 John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as being ‘Jok Ellat in Bowgrannis’. This was probably somewhere near Langholm, but could be same as Burngrains. John of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) probably a son of Robert of Redheugh, his brothers being Robert, the 14th Chief, possibly Martin of Braudlie and Archibald of Falnash. In 1561/2 he was among Elliots who had a bond with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge; the others were Archie of Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin and ‘Elder Will’. In 1568 he led a party of Elliots, Armstrongs and others, which burned the house at Torwoodlee, killing George Pringle there. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh; his brother Tom was also listed. Also in 1580 he was said to have joined the group of Elliots and Armstrongs that raided the farm of Slaidhills, stealing cattle and leaving a servant for dead. He was also in the party that attacked some Elliots, Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in Liddesdale in 1580, killing Walter Gledstains. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. He may be the ‘Jock of Copshaw’ (surname not given) who was among a group of men accused in 1582 of taking part on a raid into England in which Martin Taylor and 3 others were killed. He is probably ‘Joke Elliot called Copshawe’ listed among the Elliots of Braudlie in 1583. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the ‘principalis of the branchis of Liddisdaill’. He is also mentioned in 1588 (although this could have been his son) when Nichol Cairncross was surety for his brother Hob, who was in the Tolbooth. He may be the ‘John of Copshawes’ whose tower, somewhere near Saughtree, was marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He was named by an English informer as part of the group that raided Carlisle Castle to free ‘Kimmont Willie’ (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself, and so this may have been a son). In 1594/5 he was named in an indenture between the Scottish and English Wardens. He is probably one of the 3 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In an English letter of 1596 it is stated that he had built a tower at ‘Blackstone lee’ (which was probably near Mangerton, or may simply have been a misunderstanding for Copshaw). He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In that year he wrote (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Hartsgarth) from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. In 1599 he was ‘Jok Ellot of Copscaw’ among Elliots who signed a bond at Branxholme for the English Warden regarding 2 separate raids in 1588. He was also recorded in 1590 as ‘longe Jocke Elliot’ when, along with relatives of Martin of Braidlie and others was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Probably the same man was ‘longe John Elliot’, accused in 1590 along with elder Will of the Steele, Archie and Martin’s Gib ‘the cousin’ of stealing from the tenants of ‘Greinridge’. He is also ‘longe John’ listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. He was also named in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Nixons and others who were accused of being on a raid into England in 1588. His nickname presumably means he was tall. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Cowshawes’ in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle. He may be related to Will ‘called Cowsauche’, who was a fugitive in 1605. John ‘Cull the Spade’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons who were accused of going on a raid into England in 1588. He is listed separately from John ‘Cowshawes’, along with Gavin’s Hob, who may have been close relatives. John ‘the Child’ (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. It is unclear what his nickname referred to, or whether he is the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) listed among Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking horses and prisoners on a raid into England. He is recorded being ‘of the Hillend, but separately from Mark of the Hill (making it seem that he was not directly related to that branch), and just before Elliots of Ewesdale. John ‘Jock’ of Buirgrains (d.bef. 1608) probably from the lands near Meikledale, in Ewesdale. In 1606 his sons Hob and Will were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘vnamle Johnne Ellote of Burnegranes’ and also ‘Jok of Burgranes’ in 1608 when his son William (or possibly Ninian, since the records are confusing) was sentenced to hanging for resisting the King’s Guard. He may have been related to Adam of Meikledale, who also held Burngrains later in the 17th century. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie, referred to as ‘Martin’s John of Burnmouth’. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother Airchie, as well as ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. He was probably the John, son of Martin, recorded on a 1590 list of Elliots (including his brother Airchie and cousin Dan), Croizers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. He is probably also the John listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the John, son of Martin, who (along with his brother Gib) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He was denounced as a rebel in 1611 and his lands and goods forfeited to Thomas Cranston. It is possible that he was the ‘Johnne Elwode in Barnmouth’ listed in 1612 among those who supported Sir William Cranston in his commission to keep peace on the Border. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of Will of Fiddleton and listed along with his father and brother Ringan. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed among fugitives who did not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of ‘Heidheid’, but it is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 as son of ‘Wower’s Andro’. He was listed as a fugitive among Liddesdale and Eskdale men not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Hawick. It is unclear who his father might have been. John ‘Jock’, ‘the Murt’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was also referred to in 1611 when ‘Robert Elliot, called Martenis Hob’ was cautioner for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. It is unclear what his nickname meant, but he may have been related to Will in Burnhead, called ‘Murth’. John ‘Jock’, ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Jok Elliott, called Blakheide’. His nickname was presumably to distinguish him from other contemporary Johns. He was perhaps related to Archibald and William, who also had the same nickname. John ‘Reid Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. John (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Foulshiels. In 1611 John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. John of Heuchhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when John of the Hill acted as cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. He was acquitted of the charges. He is surely related to the John of Heuchhouse recorded 30 years earlier. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) referred to in 1612 as ‘in Braidlie’. He was on the jury for the trial of Hawick Bailies and others over the death of John Elliot ‘in Redden’ while in custody. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Jock of Rynsiegill’ (16th/17th C.) from Ridden in Liddesdale, the designation is probably the same as ‘Ramsiegill’. He was a thief who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1612, and imprisoned in the church steeple. He then apparently committed suicide, and his widow Bessie ‘with the ffyve fatherless bairns’ brought an action against the Bailies. However, it was proved by witnesses that ‘he was fund lyeing deid ... hangit himself in his aume belt’. He was recorded in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ as ‘Johme Ellote in Redden, callit Johme of Roynsiegill’. John of Arkleton (d.bef. 1622) 2nd son of William of Falnash and brother of Robert of Falnash (who was Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire). He was also referred to as ‘of Falnash’. In 1615 he witnessed a sasine of Kirkton by William Armstrong. In 1616 he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. In 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters.
and tenants. He married Ester Armstrong, who was one of the heirs-portioners of Ninian Armstrong of Arkleton. They had one child, Archibald of Arkleton. John ‘the Dod’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 when Adie and Will Usher were convicted for stealing sheep from him and others. He is distinguished from John ‘callit the Gyde’ in the same case. He may have farmed on the Dod Burn. Perhaps the same John ‘callit Dods’, tenant in Thorlieshope, was recorded in 1623 when he was a cauntery (along with John Turner in Nether Nisbet) for Michael ‘Birnie in Fairnylies’ at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was probably also the ‘Jok Elliot, callit Dod’ who had 3 cows stolen from his lands of ‘Buceburne’ in 1623. John ‘the Gyde’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 along with John ‘the Dod’ when they had 5 sheep stolen from them by Adie and Will Usher. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but there was also a William Scott ‘the Gyde’); he is probably related to the earlier ‘Jok the Gyde’. John (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as ‘Jock Elliot called Jock a gods name’ on a long list of Borderers to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. It is unclear what his peculiar nickname meant. His lands were probably around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Falnash. Before 1644 he married Grizel Elliot, heiress of Philhope, who had been ward of his father since her own father had died. In 1644 Philhope was sold to Archibald Elliot and Elizabeth Chisholme. He started as a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1636, but the entry is deleted 2 years later, presumably meaning that he had changes in his circumstances. This may have been the time of his marriage, when he took over running Philhope. He was probably the John, ‘Falnashes brother’, recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish in 1663, paying £216 for Broadlee. John (17th C.) described as a ‘wag’, i.e. soldier, in Hawick in 1642 when he is listed among a large number of people accused of theft (probably wrongly). His son James was also mentioned there. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Whitscheill’ in 1665 when he was named as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. John (17th C.) said to have been an illegitimate son of the first Gavin of Brugh, he was hanged for theft at Hexham. However, these generations are quite confused. John (d.1679) from Southdean Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Hyndhope (although it is not clear which one). His will is recorded in 1685. John of Thorlieshope (1621–98) son of Adam of Meikledale. In 1657 his father purchased for him the lands of ‘Is-gill’ (or Elfgill), ‘Midgehop’ (or Midgeholm) and Newgibbing, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1671 he was ‘indweller in Hudshouse’ and already possessed Thorlieshope. He purchased Larriston Rig and Hopehead and in 1675 he gave a ‘wadsett’ for Robert Elliot of Larriston’s lands of Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and ‘Greenhollis’. He paid tax on £520 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He probably had the house at Thorlieshope rebuilt in 1682 (since there is a stone there bearing that date). In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1697 he (along with his 3rd son John) purchased another wadsett on the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead. He was a Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1690. It is said that he was conspicuous among the band of local minor Lairds who engaged in smuggling cattle across the Border during the time when such trade was illegal. He was a cauntery for a bond by Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692, and also witnessed the bond between Harwood and Bewlie in 1692. He was recorded at the Castleton Kirk Session in 1698. He married Jean Elliot of Dinlabyre before 1671. In 1677 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Stodrig. He had 10 children: William of Thorlieshope and Ove, who was also Commissioner of Supply and married Christian Ainslie; Henry of Lodgigill (1672–1714), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; John of the Binks (1674–1751), who married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch; Andrew, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married Simon Elliot of Lodgigill; Janet, who married William Elliot in Penchrise; Helen, who married John Elliot of Cooms (or perhaps William of Cooms); Jean, who married Thomas Armstrong of Sorbie; Christian, who married John, brother of Elliot of Dinlabyre; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Elliot. He is buried at the Nether Kirk of the Eves. John (17th C.) described as ‘sometimes in Dinilibeir now in Hudshouse’ in 1665 and 1668, when he was named as a creditor for the estate of William Elliot of Binks, who was his father-in-law. In 1662 he was also one of the witnesses to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks, described as his father-in-law. John of Brugh (1627–1705) eldest son of Archibald of witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). In 1701 he was witness to the birth of the twin daughters of his son Gilbert.

In 1702 he helped arrange the settlement for his grand-daughter Eleanor when she married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for merchant Thomas 'Hotson' and another along with his brother Gilbert. In 1704 he and his son Gilbert witnessed a baptism for William Hood in Newbigging. He married Margaret (1630–1706), daughter of Robert Johnstone, who was said to be Minister of Ancrum, although no man of that name held that particular office, and so he was possibly minister elsewhere. She died the year after him. They had at least 9 children: William, merchant in London, later of Brugh and Wells; Gilbert in Winningtonrig and Nether Southfield; Robert, mentioned in his brother William’s will; Thomas of Haydon Bridge or Canonbie Mill, who married a Miss Robinson; an unnamed son (b.1672); George (b.1676), Minister of Howman; Beatrice (b.1654); a daughter who married Hobie Scott; Jeanette (b.1672), who was left money in William’s will; and Joan (b.1675), also left money in her brother’s will. Most of their children were christened in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1654 were William Douglas (perhaps of Cavers) and Gilbert Eliott (perhaps of Stobs), in 1672 were James Liddell (probably Hawick Town Clerk) and James Scott and in 1675 were John Hardie and schoolmaster John Purdom. His wife died the year after he did and they were buried at St. Mary’s, the tombstone once reading 'Here lies John Elliot in the Southfield descended from the renowned family of the Elliots of Lariston by his grandschir Gavin Elliot of the Brough …' and that his wife was 'sister of the ancient family of the Halliburtons of Muirhouselaw'. John (c.1650–1728) son of Adam of Mosspeeble. He was described as being 'in Dinley' (i.e. Dinlees). He married Margaret Scott from Falnash (perhaps an older child of Gideon Scott). Their children were: probably Ninian (1697–1724); Adam (1702–24); John (b.1703), who died young; John in Park; William (c.1703–91), who married Helen Scott, from Blackhall; Isobel, who married Henry, 2nd son of William Elliot in Penchrise; Janet; Christian; and Anna. He died at Park. His will is registered in Edinburgh Commissary Court in 1730. John in Leahaugh (17th C.) 3rd son of William of Penchrise and Mary Elliot, he was recorded in 1683. He had a son, Archibald, who was an Excise Officer. John (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harwood’ in 1688 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Corporal James Campbell and Gideon Scott of Outsides. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Isobel, who was recorded after him, must have been closely related. John (17th C.) tenant in Sanghtree in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) name of 2 separate men recorded paying the Hearth Tax in 1694 for households near Redheugh in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, listed between Sorbietrees and Flatt, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It is possible he was the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Monk’s Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William who was also listed there. John in Harden (17th/18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He had a daughter, Marion, and a son, William in Hole. His lands were Harden in Liddesdale. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Tower’ in Cavers Parish in 1698 when his daughter Jane was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Langside in Cavers Parish in 1700 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be the tenant in Langside who is recorded paying tax on 3 hearths in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, where he had 2 children baptised. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) married Christian Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Southfield. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Gilbert, farmer in
Elliot

Southfield and Winningtonrig, who was probably a relative of some sort; the other witness was John Elliott, ‘Collector’, who was uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1705. The witnesses in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, where he married Helen Laidlaw in 1705. Their children included: Andrew (b.1705); William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); John (b.1711); and Walter (b.1713). In 1709 he was described as a tenant, but the location is missing, and in 1711 he was tenant in Lees. John (17th/18th C.) miller at Appotside Mill who was witness to a sasine for the Elliots of Harwood in 1704. His son James was also a witness. John of Castlehope and Billhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Mosspeebie, he was descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Castlehope was an earlier name for Twislehope. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. Their children were: William of Castlehope and Billhope, Robert of Castlehope and Billhope, and Walter Elliot. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, where his is recorded as ‘in Twislehope’. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. Their children were: William in Whithaugh and Braidlie (b.c.1678–1676); Robert of Castlehope and Billhope; and Walter in Brugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Rig’ 1711 when his son Francis was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the other Elliots in Rig. John (17th/18th C.) said in some genealogies to be son of Robert of Lodgegill. In 1711 he married Helen, daughter of John of Thorlieshope. However, this information may be confused, and his name may be an error for William of Cooms. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He was brother of Robert of Rigg. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brierhill. John of Larriston (17th/18th C.) appointed in 1715 as one of the legal guardians for the 7 children of Henry, farmer at Sorbietrees. ‘John’ could be an error, since Robert was the Laird of Larriston at this time. He could also be the John whose sons Robert and William signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Stobicote, where his is recorded in 1716, 1722 and 1728. He witnessed a baptism in 1720 (along with James Scott in Stobicote) for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included: Archibald (b.1716); Isabel (b.1722); and James (b.1728). Other children, baptised in Cavers to a John around the same time, could also be his. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1714. Their children (with no mother given) may include John (b.1715), Janet (b.1723) and Helen (b.1725). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Goldielands and Crumhaugh. His brother William was tenant in Crumhaugh. He was already tenant in Goldielands according to a baptismal record of 1713. 2 of his servants (Walter Scott and Helen Turnbull) are recorded in 1721 getting married in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘in Goldielands’ in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1727. He was still tenant in Goldielands in the period 1730–5 when his shepherd, Robert Hobkirk, had a run-in with the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong (as recounted in 1767). And a few years later he had to speak with the Bailies to recover cattle owned by himself and other local tenants, which the Burgh Officers had driven to the West Port after they were found being pastured on the Common. In 1720 he presented for baptism a posthumously born child of his brother William. In 1731 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. He married Helen Laidlaw and their son Walter was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Walter Grieve in Branholme Park and Andrew Riddell (who also lived at Goldielands). John (17th/18th C.) described as being in Earlsdie in 1724 when his daughter Katherine was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John of Demainholm (17th/18th C.). Recorded in the period 1695–1726 in papers with the Scotts of Buccleuch dealing with his debts. In 1727 he sold the lands of Demainholm to William of Thorlieshope and Overton. John of Peel (d bef. 1721) youngest son of William of Harwood. His older brother Simon pre-deceased his father, while his brother Henry succeeded to the main estate of Harwood. He was given the lands of Buxton-foes (also called Peel) by his father. He paid the land tax on £160 in Castleton Parish in 1678, and was recorded then as being ‘in Backestone-lyes alias peel’. He married Elizabeth Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family). He had a son John, to whom he conveyed the lands of Peel; however, on John’s death these lands went to his daughters. His children were: John, tenant in Langside in 1723; Christian, who married Adam Elliot of Unthank; Jean, who married Thomas Pringle in Kirkton; and Margaret, who married Robert Dalglish in Fastheugh. His daughters sold Peel to Henry, son of their uncle Henry of Harwood. He appears to have been dead by 1721, when Elizabeth is referred to as his widow (although Tancred suggests that his son John predeceased him and he lived until about 1730). John of Binks (1674–1751) 3rd son of John of Thorntonhope. He was granted a charter of Binks by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1674. His brother Henry of Lodghegill died in 1714, when he became a curator for his nephew William. In 1718 he was granted a charter for Binks by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He and his descendants also held the lands of Burnmouth; he is probably the ‘Jo. Eliot in Burnmouth’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. In 1700 he married Christian (c.1682–1726), daughter of Robert Elliot, Factor to the Duke of Buccleuch, and had 9 children, but the only sons who survived to adulthood were Robert of Binks and William of Bush. His children included: Robert of Binks (1702–66); John (b.1704), who died young; William of Bush (1705–99), who married Margaret Aitchison; John (again, b.1710), who was a Burgess of Jedburgh and died without issue; James, George, Henry and an unnamed son, who all died young or unmarried; and Jean (b.1726), who married Henry Elliot of Peel. He is buried at Castleton. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children baptised there were: John (b.1727); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) referred to as being ‘of Langlands’. He married Elizabeth Wilson in Ashkirk in 1723. Their children, born in Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes, included: Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); John (b.1731); and Beattie (b.1733). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Park, son of John of Dinlees. He is mentioned in 1730, but nothing else is known about him. His brother William may have taken over the tenancy from him. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1726 he was recorded at Nether Southfield. He married Catherine Elliot in Hawick in 1723. Their children included: Bessie (b.1724); William (b.1726); Katherine (b.1729); and Henry (b.1737). The witnesses in 1726 were James and Walter Scott. John of Whithaugh (c.1702–48) eldest son of William, who purchased Whithaugh for him (as well as Redheugh for his brother Robert) in about 1730. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He married Margaret (c.1704–1768), daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry. Their children were: William (c.1723–76) of Whithaugh, who married Margaret Shortreed of Essenside and secondly Elizabeth, sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; Robert (1725–70), farmer at Hermitage and Millburnholm, who married Janet Scott from Greenwood; John (1726–1813), farmer at Twislehope, who married Janet Turnbull from Mangerton; Margaret (b.1727), who died young; Mary (b.1728), also died young; Walter (b.1729), died young; Thomas (1730–1807), also tenant in Twislehope; Helen (b.1731), married A. Waddell, purser in the Royal Navy; Isabel (1732–1807); James (c.1733–1816), shepherd in Twislehope; and Elizabeth (c.1734–1807), who died unmarried. He and his wife are buried at Unthank. John (18th C.) rented the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in at least the years 1744–46. Note that his name may have been James rather than John. John (b.1701/2–88) from Castleton Parish. He married Hannah Grieve. Their children included: Robert (b.1761); William (1763–88), a surgeon who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa; Janet (b.1765); John (b.1767); and John (again, b.1769). He and his wife are buried at Langholm, but mentioned on the family gravestone in Castleton (although the dates may not be correct, since he would be very old when he had his children). John (18th C.) recorded in Penchrise when his sons William (b.1728) and Thomas (b.1730) were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the same as another contemporary John. In 1728 he is ‘in Penchruss’ when his sister Margaret married James Linton (from Ettrick Parish). John (18th C.) married Agnes Best in Bedrule Parish in 1726. Their children (with no mothers’ name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Linhope’, when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. He could be the same sa John ‘in Southdeanrigg’ whose daughter Katherine was baptised in 1741. John (17th/18th C.) from the Black Tarras branch of the family, he was eldest son of William of Cooms. In 1732 he was described as ‘now of Cumes’, having inherited Cooms from his father. In 1709 he married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Robert Mather of Greenhill. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) were: Robert (b.1711), who married Catherine Armstrong from Sorbie; John (b.1715); and an unnamed child (b.1716). John of Brugh (d.bef. 1756) 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells. He is said to have been settled on a trade in London with £1000. He may be the John, described as tailor of London, who witnessed his sister Eleanor’s marriage contract with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1702 (along with his father William of Wells). In 1735 he was described being ‘of Islington’. He married Elizabeth, widow of Sir John Crispe. Nothing much is known about him, except that he died before his brother William. His only child was William Nassau, who inherited Wells from his uncle. Capt. John of Brugh (b.1708) only surviving son of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig. He was christened in Cavers Parish. William ‘the Lace-man’ was his uncle. He may have farmed for a while at Over Southfield. He is said to have joined the Army in about 1739 and at Dettingen in 1743 served under Lieut.-Col. William Elliot, who was his cousin, and alongside George Augustus Elliott, who was another relative. In 1749 joined the 2nd Troop of Horse Grenadier Guards and he became a Captain. In 1730 he married Jean, daughter of James Grieve of Branxholme Park. Their children, mostly baptised in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes, were: Helen (b.1731), who probably died young; Gilbert (1734–59); Mary (b.1735); Helen (again, b.1739); Anne (1740–1833), eldest surviving daughter, who married Thomas Hall; and William (d.1817). A portrait shows him on ‘Old Crop’, the charger that his cousin George Augustus Elliott had ridden at Dettingen and gave to him. John (1710–bef. 54) younger son of John of Binks. He was a Burgess of Jedburgh. He appears to have been given the farm of Binks by his father. In 1754, after his death, his older brother William of Bush was served as his heir. He died without issue. John of Adderstonesheil (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh, possibly the eldest son. He was at Fahnash in 1740. He married Helen Moffat from Gorvald and they had a son John, who was baptised in Hawick in 1740. John (18th C.) merchant in Castleton. There is a record of Robert, farmer in Braehead, paying him for ‘merchant goods’ in 1749. John (1711–92) 3rd Laird of Borthwickbrae, being one of 14 children of William, the 2nd Laird. Probably the same John of Borthwickbrae was apprenticed to a goldsmith in Edinburgh in 1731. He was christened in Robertson and died at Orchard. In 1744, along with Walter Grieve (farmer at Branxholme Park), he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch Estates. In the period 1743–60 he had a dispute with Sir James Stuart of Coltness over the lands of Branxholme Muir. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1750. His wool manufacturers in Hawick is mentioned as early as 1754 (in records of the Board of Trustees for Manufacturers), although it is unclear precisely what the company made. However, this may well have been the early partnership with Thomas Turnbull and some local men. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others in the main carpet factory in Hawick, receiving the money that was offered by the Government for encouraging initiatives in Scottish industry and agriculture. The partnership was renewed in 1779 and consisted of Walter of Ormiston (his brother-in-law), Thomas Turnbull of Minto and William Robertson from Dunfermline. He may be the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who purchased the liferent of the superiority of the Barony of Stonedown and Howa before 1766, but had renounced this by 1788. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780. It is said that a ewe presented to him by Douglas of Cavers gave birth to a lamb in 1774 which lived until 1796 (a very old age for a sheep). He was taxed for 2 male servants in 1778, and 1 in 1779, 1785, 1787 and 1788 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae on the 1785 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1792 at Orchard. He paid the land tax on part of Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch in 1785. He also paid tax on 2 female servants at Borthwickbrae in 1785, 3 in 1787 and 2 in 1788–91. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Borthwickbrae in the period 1785–92, and is probably the ‘John Elliot Esqr. in Orchard’ who was taxed in Cavers Parish in the year 1792/3. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and probably a supporter of the Duke of Buccleuch’s interests in the county; the privately-printed description is ‘family in good circumstances. The son has a good estate through his mother, and is at the Bar. Second son in the Army’. He was also listed in 1788 among the voters in Selkirkshire. In 1753 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Murray of Cringletie. In Edinburgh in 1764 he secondly married Margaret (who died in 1792), daughter of Walter Laing and heiress of the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale; she was probably the ‘Mrs. Elliot’ listed as owner of the Flex in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased before then), as well as Wester Essendie, part of Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish (valued together at £952). His children were: twins Alexander and William (b.1754), who died young; William (b.1764), baptised in Robertson, who succeeded, but changed his surname to ‘Lockhart’ or ‘Elliott-Lockhart’ (see Lockhart); Walter of Old Elliot (1766–1809), baptised in Robertson; Margaret (b.1767), who married David Simpson of Teviotbank and Knowe (and was mother of Gen. Sir James Simpson), and may secondly have married Walter Grieve, tenant of Bruxholme Park; and Janet, who also died young. John (18th C.) tenant in Kershopeburnfoot. His wife Elizabeth died in 1752, aged 36. Their children David Matthew and Agnes died young. They are buried at Etteleton. John (18th C.) shepherd at Earlshiel. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. He could be related to the earlier John in Earlsid. John (18th C.) shepherd in Langburnshields in Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1770). John (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Grange near Chesters. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as former owner. John (1725–1801) son of Robert, from the Caerlenrig branch. He was born in Cavers Parish and was a tanner in Hawick. He was listed as a tanner in 1748 when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick. He is probably the tanner of that name recorded being paid in 1751 for lime for mending the East Port. He is probably the tanner of that name who witnessed baptisms in 1757 for Hawick distiller and merchant John Aitchison and in 1762 for shoemaker George Gardner. He was appointed as Hawick’s first part-time postmaster in 1767; he was re-appointed, apparently against his better judgement, several years later. He lived down the Punch Bowl Close, which also acted as the post office. Probably the same John, tanner, was one of those appointed in 1763 to oversee the collection of money for a new bell for St. Mary’s. He is probably the John who in 1766, along with Francis (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister); he also witnessed another baptism for them in 1781. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 (although the date is uncertain) he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1787–92 he was recorded as a tanner on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for exciseman Hugh Grieve. In 1778 he married Margaret Curle, who died in 1807, aged 67. Their children included: Isobel (b.1779), who probably died in infancy; Robert (1780–1851), farmer at Roan; James (b.c.1781), who died in infancy; Christian (1883–1855), who died at Roan; William (1785–1827), also died at Roan; and Isobel (again, 1784/5–1859), who died in Hawick. He was buried, along with most of his family, at Teviothead. In 1773 he witnessed the christening of Helen, daughter of shoemaker Adam Elliot (suggesting they were related). His will is registered with the Peebles Commissary Court in 1802. John (1725–1813) younger son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott of Gorrenberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in ‘Tweeslihope’ also subscribed (although it is unclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Elliot, Twislehope’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Mangerston. Their children were: John (b.1781), who died young; William (b.1783), also died young; Robert (b.1789), surgeon in Haltwhistle, married Jane Elliot from Cringleedykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage; Andrew (b.1787), married Elizabeth Armstrong from Newcastleton; Walter (b.1789), who lived in Charleston, U.S.A.; and Margaret (b.1791). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Nelly was baptised in 1785. John (18th C.) Hawick bookseller of the late 18th century. A book by Samuel Charters was published by him in 1793. John (1731–1808) eldest son of William in Park. He was tenant in ‘Baggot’, i.e. Bygate in Liddesdale. He was farmer at ‘Bagget’ and elsewhere in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 9 horses. He is probably the ‘Mr. John Elliot, Park’, who subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and who is recorded on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He died unmarried. His will was recorded with Peebles Commissary Court in 1808. Adm. John (1732–1808) son of Sir Gilbert, 2nd Lord Minto. He joined the Royal Navy at the age of 13, becoming a Lieutenant in 1756. He was famed as a Captain for capturing a fleet of the French admiral Thurot in 1760, having chased them from Carrickfergus to near the Isle of Man. An 8ft long cannon captured from the French was long on display outside Fatlips Castle. On being received by the King afterwards he apparently turned down a knighthood, but received cash instead. He was promoted to Commodore, and retired on half-pay in 1765. He then served as M.P. for Cockermouth in 1767 and was appointed General of the Mint in Scotland in 1767. He returned to active duty in 1777, attaining the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1787 and full Admiral in 1795. He was ‘Captain John Elliot of his Majesty’s ship the Edgar' in 1780 when he was entered into the voters' roll for Roxburghshire, on the basis of his ownership of Easter Essenside and Hermiston. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Mounthooly and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, as well as Kirk-lands in Ancrum Parish and Easter Essenside in Ashkirk Parish. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788.

Elliot

He was taxed for owning a carriage, horses and dogs at Monteviot in the 1780s and 1790s, as well as for having several male and female servants. He lived at Monteviot House, where he died, unmarried. He also purchased Easter Es-senside, Mounthooly and Woodend, which he left to his nephew Lord Minto. He was sometimes known locally as being 'of Essenside', e.g. when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when he was already deceased).
He was also listed on the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 at Mounthooly (although this was after his death). His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. John (18th C.) tenant in Wigg. His children included: John (b.1768), tenant in Wauchope Gardens; James (b.1770); and Betty (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident in Shankendshiels. His children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Agnes (b.1771) and Helen (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other John from Hobkirk Parish. John (18th C.) resident in 'Harrotnow' (i.e. Harwood-knowe) in Hobkirk Parish, when his children Jean (b.1778) and John (b.1789) were baptised. He must have been related to James in Harwood-knowe, who is recorded in 1760. John (18th C.)
resident in 'Harglechuguhead' in Hobkirk Parish.
It is unclear where this was, but possibly he was shepherd at Harecleuchhead (near the old boundary of Hawick's Common), which was actually in Kirkton Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1762, and may have been the direct ancestor of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau.
He could also be the same as some (although surely not all) of the Johns recorded in these other nearly contemporary baptisms in Hobkirk Parish, with no mother's name given: Elizabeth (b.1758), 'in Earlsheldishells'; William (b.1764), in Langburnshiels; William (b.1766), 'in Hopehead'; John (b.1768) in Wigg; Margaret (b.1770) in Langburnshiels; James (b.1770), in Wigg; Agnes (b.1771) in Shankendshiels; Betty (b.1772) in Wigg; Helen (b.1772) in Shankendshiels; Jean (b.1775) 'in Harrotnow'; and John (b.1780) 'in Harrotnow'. Without knowing which of these children were his it is impossible to guess the names of his parents and hence trace this Elliot line further back. John of Reidheugh (1740/1– 1809) 2nd son of Robert of Reidheugh, whose father had purchased the ancestral farm for him.
He himself farmed at Cleughhead and Foulshiels, while his brother (presumably Thomas) was given liferent of Redheugh. He is probably the farmer at 'Cleughhead' or 'Cleughheads' in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797.
In 1793 he disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to his brother Thomas (who also lived at Redheugh and farmed Foulshiels). In 1799 he married Margaret, 2nd daugh-They had no children and he settled Redheugh on his nephew Robert in 1806. He died at Newlands and is buried in Castleton cemetery. Dr.
John (18th C.) surgeon living at Cleuchhead in Liddesdale towards the end of the 18th century.
He could be the same as the farmer at Cleuch-head. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784, and it is possible he supplied material for it; indeed he may be the 'Gentleman of taste, in Liddesdale' to which Caw was indebted for providing a manuscript copy of 'Dick o' the Cow' and other verses. He was also 'J. Elliot, M.D. Cleughheads' in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was visited in about 1792 by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Short-reed, on their 'raid' into Liddesdale, to gather material for what would become 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border'. He apparently already had a manuscript copy of ballads that he had collected himself. He presented Scott with an old Border war horn, which still hangs in Abbotsford. And afterwards he sought out other ballads 'among the darker recesses of the mountains'. Rev. John (1749/50–1817) licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1793, he became assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers (who was probably his uncle). He was presented to the Parish of Kirkton in late 1800 and ordained there early the next year, remaining as minister until his death. In 1786 he mar-rried Jean Armstrong, who died in 1828, aged 75.
Their children were: Elizabeth: twins Adam and Mary (b.1794); and Isobel (1797–60), who died at Coliforthill. John (18th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the 1780s. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). His son James died in 1782. In 1786 he was recorded as 'late Bailie' when he (and shoemaker Thomas Wallace) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. This suggests that he may also have been a shoemaker. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (c.1750–1801) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Little (c.1757–1825). Their children included: Christian (b.1792); Robert (b.1794); and Thomas (b.1799). He and his wife died in Newcastle. John (c.1750–1821) eldest son of Robert, tenant of Hermitage. He farmed at Hermitage, Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater. In some family trees he is confounded with an earlier John. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1783 he married Christian Grieve (b.1753), but she died less than a year later; she was probably daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. He secondly married Margaret Scott from Skelhill. His children included: Jean (1790–1886); Robert, who married a Miss Maxwell from Langholm and had children who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Janet, who married Robert Elliot from Haltwhistle, son of John who farmed Twislehope; James, who emigrated to the U.S.A.; John (1796–1833) in Nether Hindhope; Thomas (1815/6–87), who married Elizabeth Turnbull and succeeded his brother as farmer at Nether Hindhope; Catherine, married Robert Webster; Mary, married Robert Hall of Doanham in 1846; Elizabeth, married Gideon Yule from Kelso; and Margaret, who married John Dagg from Kidderminster. He is buried at Ettleton Cemetery, the stone being inscribed ‘Here lies John Elliot in Burnmouth and Christian Grieve his spouse’. John of Binks (1754–1820) eldest son of Robert. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. He owned Binks from at least 1780 (when it was valued at £300) and was listed as owner of Binks in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. In 1790 he married Mary Robson (1767–1858), who was from Boglehall, daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Janet also married a John Elliot and she must have been related to his mother, who was also a Robson from Boglehall. Their children were: Robert (b.1791), who died young; Jane or Jean (b.1792), who married William Nixon of Lynwood; another Robert (1794–1814); Helen (b.1796), ‘the White Rose of Liddesdale’, who married Archibald Blake from Liverpool; Elizabeth (d.1798), who died in infancy; John (b.1799), who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith of Darnick and farmed at Calaburn; and another Elizabeth, who married William Turnbull of Merrylaw in 1847. In 1851 his widow was listed as an ‘Annuitant, Gentlewoman’, farming about 610 acres at Binks. He died at Burnmouth and is buried in Castleton Cemetery. He is probably the John who was recorded as farmer at Burnmouth on the 1785–97 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls, and who was of Binks’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. His will was registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1821. John (1753/4–1817) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded living at Borthwickbrae in 1794 and Woodburn in 1798. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Elizabeth or ‘Betsy’ Scott (1757/8–1842), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1792); James (1794–1884), long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb in Hawick; and Jean (b.1798). The marriage is probably the one recorded between James and Betty Scott in Cavers in 1787. He died at Branholme and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John (18th/19th C.) lived at Bowanhill, near Teviothead. He is probably related to the earlier Archibald who farmed there. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1793. Their children included: Archibald (b.1800); Walter, married Jean Anderson and emigrated to Delaware County, New York; John; Margaret, who married Thomas Thompson and later George Stewart; and Betty, who married a Mr. Thompson. John of Cooms (1740/1–1809) married Margaret Helen (b.1776), daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister at Canonbie. He died at Newlands in Liddesdale. John (1760–1806) son of Ninian and Ester Crozier. He was born at Burnmouth in Liddesdale. A family pedigree describes him being ‘in Middlemoss’. He married Janet Robson (1761–1848), daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Mary married another John Elliot. Their children included: Ninian (1789–1870), who died in Westminster Township, Canada; Adam (1791–1871), who died in Ontario; Helen (b.1794), who joined her brothers in Ontario; Ester (b.1797), who married Robert Elliot in Powisholm; Mary (1801–77), who died in Newcastle; and Janet (1805–81), who died at Teviothead. He died at Middlemoss, near Langholm. John of Whitaugh (1759–1847) eldest son of William of Whitaugh. He was served heir to his grandfather John in 1777. In 1788 his lands of Whitaugh (half of the former farm) were valued at £200 3s. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded as farmer at Whitaugh on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, and also served as a Justice of the Peace. He subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the John of Whithaugh listed on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories; Walter was also listed as a farmer there about the same time. He was listed as head of his household at Whithaugh in 1835–41. He married Jean (1758–87), daughter of Elliot of Binks. They had 1 child, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Keir from Powisholm, and whose son William Keir inherited Whithaugh. He was still alive in 1841, when he was 'Esquire of Whithaugh' and in his 80s. His will is register in the Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1848. John (1769–1823) son of Henry, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Liddesdale. He was already at Flatt in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. He is recorded as farmer as Flatt on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Scott, from Ladhope in Yarrow, who died in 1838, aged 63. Their children included: Henry (1793–1818), who died in Jamaica; Margaret (b.1794–1804); Janet (b.1795), who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; William (1796–1838); Jean (b.1798), who died in infancy; Jean (again, b.1800); John (1801–40), engineer in Glasgow, who married Helen Elliot of Kirkdean, granddaughter of Elliot of Harwood; James (1803/4–80), who died at Westwater; and Margaret (again, b.1809). This Margaret may have been the 'Miss M. Elliot, Flatt' who subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.1767) cooper in Castleton Parish, son of William and Anna Scott, descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Some of his children were born at Byreholm. He married Elizabeth Crozier and their children included: William (b.1790), probably shoemaker in Newcastleton; Gideon (b.1791); Helen (b.1793); Anne (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1803); John (b.1804), who probably died young; and Margaret (b.1808). John (b.1768) labourer at Wauchope Gardens, Blackcleuchmouth and Templehallshiel. He was son of John in Wigg and surely related to William in Templehallshiel. He married Betsy Taylor and their children included: William (b.1798), who lived at Wauchope Cottages; Betty (b.1800); John (b.1802); Walter F. (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); Alexander (b.1809), probably the shoemaker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1813); and Agnes (b.1815). Most of the family emigrated to Otsego County, New York. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Agnes Inglis, also from Hawick. It is possible they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No occupation or other information is given. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose son John was born in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) lawyer who set up a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick around 1790. They became agents for the Commercial Bank around 1820 and are listed as writers in Hawick in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the 'John Elliot, Hawick' who subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821. However, he left for Jedburgh in 1829 to become Sheriff-Substitute, which office he held until 1835. The Hawick firm eventually became Geo. & Jas. Oliver's. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. John (b.1769) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in London. He married Miss Robinson in London and they had 13 children, William, Robert, Margaret, John, Mary, Ann, Jane, Eliza, Mary, Thomas, Louisa, George and Walter. John of Reidheugh (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. It is unclear who this is, since the owner at that time was Robert Elliot; perhaps this is an error. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He had several children baptised there, including John (b.1807), Brown (b.1820), Elizabeth (b.1822), Jane (b.1824) and an unnamed child (b.1826). John Edmund of New Belses (1788–1862), youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was named after the statesman Edmund Burke. He had a successful career in the Bengal civil service. He accompanied his father back from India in 1814 and had to perform the sad duty of carrying the news of his death to the Borderers who were awaiting his triumphal return to Minto (including celebrations for drawing his carriage through Hawick). He is probably the 'Hon. J.E. Elliot, Eildonhall' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was elected Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1837, when several people in Hawick were prosecuted for rioting. He spoke in the House of Commons in the following year, when Sir James Graham proposed a motion that Hawick be removed as a polling place; he supported the actions of the Bailies and townspeople, and claimed that the situation had been exaggerated by the other side (and perhaps fabricated in order to discredit the election). In 1841 he received a majority in Hawick, but lost to Francis Scott in the County. However, he was re-elected in 1847 and remained M.P. until 1859, being elected unopposed in 1852 and 1857. In a directory of 1852 he was listed as living at Wilton Lodge. He was donor of a silver-mounted hammer for the Chief Magistrate’s use in Council meetings (engraved with his initial electoral poll results). He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1837. He was a keen hunter (despite his weight), keeping his own pack of hounds until 1844. He held lands at Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow, which were sold to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1809 he married Amelia, 3rd daughter of James Henry Cassamajor of Madras and they had 6 children: Amelia Jane (d.1837), who married Thomas Campbell Robertson; Anna Maria Elizabeth, who married Pierce G.E. Taylor; Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54), who married Matilda Inglis, and died in the Crimean War; William Brownrigg of Benrig (1820–1900), who married Mary Geraldine McCartie; Capt. Amyand Powney Charles of the Bengal Army (1823–69), who married Anna Maria Alexander; and Augustus John (1824–89) of the Bengal Civil Service, who married Helen Lewis and Katherine Mangles. John (1780/1–64) from Castleton Parish, he married Ann Graham, who was from Hartsgarth. Their children were: Ellen (b.1816), who probably died young; and John (1818–1902), who married Agnes Beattie and Elizabeth Nichol in Canada. In 1818 the family emigrated to New Brunswick, with the infant John. His wife died on the voyage and he later married Helen, with whom he had daughters Elizabeth and Ellen. The family settled in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario in 1836. He was a farmer and strong churchman and gave land for the First Presbyterian Church in Westminster Township. There were several Johns born in Castleton Parish around 1781, so he could be son of John and Janet Turnbull, or Walter and Isabel Douglas or a different John entirely. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their children included: Margaret (b.1808), who married George Stewart; Matthew (b.1811); Nelly (b.1813); Robert (b.1815); Henry (b.1817); and Janet (b.1819). John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hartsgarthburnside. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835 and 1836. John (d.1848) perhaps son of John from Morebattle. Some of his children were born in Morebattle Parish, but most in Bedrule Parish. He was associated with Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull (1783–1854), who was born in Northumberland. Their children included: John (1806–73); James (1809–85); Andrew (1811–79); William (1813–81); Mary (1815–83); Robert (1818–89); Brown (1820–93); Elizabeth (1822–45); Jane (1822–51); and Isabel (1826–91). The entire family emigrated to Howick, Quebec, where they died. John (c.1785–1854) son of James and Helen Elliot. He was born in Castleton Parish and worked as a shepherd. He married Helen Murray and in 1818 the family emigrated to America, settling in New Brunswick and then in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. Their children included: James (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1813), who died young; Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815); John (b.1817), who died on the passage to America; John (1819–99); and possibly Helen. John (1788–1878) son of Walter, who farmed at Bowanhill. He lived in Robertson Parish, but emigrated with his family to Bathurst Township, Ontario, then settled in Andes, Delaware County, New York State. In 1809 he married Margaret Oliver in Cavers Parish. Their children included: Janet or Jennie (1811–82); Isabel (b.1812); Walter (1814–91); George (b.1816); Margaret (1820–39). He died in Andes, New York. John (1788/9–1869) son of Andrew, shepherd at Halterburn. He was an agricultural labourer living at Shiplaw Corse in Cavers Parish from about 1830, but before that appears to have lived in Roxburgh, Ashkirk and Ettrick Parishes. In 1815 in Ancrum Parish he married Margaret Hart, who died before 1841, when the family are listed at ‘Sheeplawcross’. In 1851 he was shepherd at Wester Essenside. Their children included: Margaret (b.1816); Andrew (b.1817); Mary (b.1821), who probably married William Irvine, farmer at Cavers Mains; Christina (b.1823); Isabel (b.1827), who probably married Robert Elliot, gamekeeper at Cavers East Lodge; John (b.1832); Janet (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); George (b.1837); and Agnes (b.1837). John (b.1790/1) agricultural labourer living in Parkhillhaugh in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Goodfellow (1795–1860) in Robertson Parish in 1818 and their children included: Francis (b.1818), whose wife was Christina; Elizabeth (b.1820); James (b.1822); William (b.1824); John (b.1827); and Gideon (1833–1913). John (b.1795/5) born in Canonbie, he was an agricultural labourer in

Elliot

Castleton and Southdean Parishes. In 1835–41 he was living at Clerkleap and in 1851 was at Westerhouses. He married Henrietta Carruthers and their children included: Janet (b.1821); Gilbert (b.1831); Henry (b.1833); Mary (b.1836); Matthew (b.1838); and Elizabeth (b.1841). John (1795–1859) 2nd son of William ‘of Carlenrickrig’ (who was an architect in Kelso) and grandson of the minister of Cavers. He was born in Kelso and became a solicitor in Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 and 1851 he was a banker in Jedburgh, where he lived at Boundary Bank. However, by 1851 he is described as blind. He married Janet Usher (daughter of Thomas of Courthill). Their children included William (procurator in the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court), Thomas Usher, Isabella, John, Jane Robertson, Charles Scott, Elizabeth Pott and Esther. He should not be confused with the earlier lawyer John who had a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh. John John (1795/6–1834) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He was tenant in Templehall. John (1796–1833) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was tenant in Nether Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. After his death he was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. John (1796/7–1875) shepherd at Blinkbonny in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was a labourer in Newcastle, living on North Hermitage Street. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Blinkbonny. He married Jean Armstrong (1809/10–85) from Kirkpatrick. Their children were: Janet (1828–52); Helen (1829–60); Jane (1833–97), who married James Beattie; William (b.1836), also died young; Robert (b.1837), also died young; William (1840/1–60). He must also have lived at Border Rigg, where some of his children died. The family are buried at Ettleton. John of Binks (1799–1875) eldest surviving son of John of Binks and Mary Robson. He purchased Calaburn in Wilton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as owner of Burnmouth. He is probably the farmer at Burnmouth listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He is listed at Upper Burnmouth in 1841, along with Janet, possibly a relative. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres there and employed 6 labourers. By 1861 he was farming 5,000 acres and employing 10 people. He was still at Burnmouth in 1868. In 1851 he married Mary, 2nd daughter of Thomas Smith, architect in Darnick. Their children were: John (1853–1909), who married Jane Pott Oliver; Jane (1855–1939); who married Rev. John C. Martin; and Mary (c.1858–1941). He died at Burnmouth and is probably buried in Castleton Cemetery. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and labourer in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Newhouses in England in 1836 and perhaps the same shepherd is at Sorbietrees in 1840 and 1841. John (b.1800/1) from Castleton, he was a tailor who lived at Quarrelhaa, near Harwoodon-Teviot. It seems possible he was related to Henry and Adam, who are recorded as tailors in Newcastleton in 1841. In 1851 he was a tailor employing 2 men. He married Helen Scott (b.c.1806) from Galashiels. Their children included: Janet (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); John, Munro (b.1828); William (b.1830); James Rutherford (b.1832); Nenion (note the spelling, b.1834), a lawyer in Edinburgh; Walter (b.1840); Edward (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); and Thomas (b.1846). It seems the family must have moved from the area before the 1861 census. John (1801–40) son of John, tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish, with his mother being Jean Scott from Ladhope. He was an engineer in Glasgow. He married Helen Elliot (1812/3–82), daughter of Thomas of Kirkdean and grand-daughter of Elliot of Harwood. They had a son, John (1839–97), who was also tenant in Flatt. John (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shoemaker in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1840. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Pott (from Castleton Parish) and their children included: Betty; Andrew; James; John (b.1840); Isabel (b.1844), Esther (b.1844), twin of Isabel; and Margaret (b.1846). He lived at about 2 Whitchester Lane. John (1801/2–90) from Southdean Parish. In the 1830s he moved to Ross and Cromarty, where he was manager at Tarbot Mains farm, Poinicol, for about 50 years. He married Margaret Dagg from Castleton. Their children were: William (1825–94), who died at Poinicol; and Michael (1827–82), who died in Melbourne. John (1808–89) son of Matthew, who farmed at Netherraw, with his mother being Janet Scott. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Newcastleton. He was listed as labourer daughter Helen. He was recorded as proprietor of James (probably keeper of the Grapes Inn) and in 1861 he was living on Douglas Square with his son.
Elliot

John was also a road contractor.

ers, he was a road contractor in Newcastleton. In 1843 he married Georgina, daughter of Col. Ralph Wilson, and she died at the Grapes Inn, Newcastleton, in 1860, aged 62.

secondly married Mary Thomson. His children included: William (1826–47); Matthew (1828–65), who died in London; Margaret (1829–1904), who died in Newcastleton; James (1830–77), who was innkeeper of the Grapes Inn: Janet (b.1833); Andrew (1835–1905), who died in Birmingham; John (b.1838), road surveyor; and Helen (1842–1908), who died at Brix. John (1809–81) younger son of William of Harwood and Helen Rutherford. He was born at Hunsdale and farmed at Primroshill. He married Jane, daughter of Archibald Jordan of Bonjedward and they had a son and 2 daughters. Rev. John Elphinstone (1810–90) son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He trained as a lawyer, apprenticing to William Bell and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1833. He was appointed as Rector of Whalton, Morpeth. In 1843 he married Georgina, daughter of Col. Ralph Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates. John (b.1810) son of Ninian and brother of Ninian and James. Like his brothers, he was a road contractor in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square with his son James (probably keeper of the Grapes Inn) and daughter Helen. He was recorded as proprietor of the Grapes Inn in the 1860s. His brother Ninian was also a road contractor. John (1811–88) from Castleton Parish, son of James and Janet Grieve. In 1841 he was a carrier, living at Scarnook in Robertson. He married Helen, daughter of shepherd William Murray; she died at Oliver Place in Hawick in 1909, aged 86. His children included Helen Grieve (d.1855), who died at the age of 4, and 2 sons who died in infancy. John (b.1816/7) carter in Newcastleton, on Doncaster Street. In 1851 he was living with his sister Helen and nephew George Aitchison. By 1861 he had a 2nd wife Betty, and step-children James Scott and David Scott. They also had children Janet and Margaret. John (19th C.) Inspector of Nuisances in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (b.1819/20) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer in Cavers and Teviothead Parishes. In 1851 he was at Castleweary. In 1861 he was farm steward, living at Borthaugh Cottages. He married Jane Murray and their children were: William (b.1839); Matthew (b.1843); and Gideon (b.1845). John (b.1822/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a labourer in Hobkirk. In 1851 he was at East Fodderlee Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Bonchester Cottages. He later lived in Southdean Parish and in Denholm. In 1846 he married Christian (or Catherine) Scott Crozier (b.1825), from Ettrick. Their children were: William (b.1846); Jane (b.1848); Thomas (b.1852); Robert (b.c.1854); Patrick (b.c.1855); David (b.1856); Scott (b.1860); Margaret Murray (b.1862); and John (b.c.1863). John (b.1823/4) son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a labourer living at Adderstoneshiel Stable in 1841, with his family at Adderstoneshiel in 1851 and a ploughman at Barnes in Kirkton Parish in 1861. He married Sibella Hunter (from Langholm) in Wilton in 1848 and their children included (b.c.1849): Elizabeth; Matthew (b.1851); John (b.1852); James (b.1855); Thomas (b.1858); William (b.1861); Margaret (b.1863); Dorothy (b.1865); and Georgina (b.1867). Some of the family may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario. John ‘Jock’ (b.c.1825) son of George and Agnes Beattie. His grandfather drowned, perhaps when he was thrown into Whitehaugh pond near Newcastleton. He lived near Bonchester Bridge since about the 1870s and worked as a dyker. His biography is told by Tancred in ‘Rulewater’; if some information was incorrect, he could be the same as one of the Johns from Castleton. John (b.1825/6) shoemaker in Newcastleton, son of William, who was also a shoemaker. In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street and in 1861 on Douglas Square. In 1849 he married Jane McVittie (1826–1905) from Ewsedale. Their children included Jane (b.1850), Christian (b.1851), Janet (b.1853), Robert (b.1855), Mary (b.1857), William (b.1860), Helen (b.1863), Elizabeth (b.1866) and Isabella Anne (b.1869). John Scott (1829–1914) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was Cornet in 1851, when he was a joiner’s apprentice. In 1855 he married Mary Scott, from Southdean. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1855). By 1857 he had emigrated to Culross, Ontario, along with his wife and daughter, as well as his brother Thomas. John (1830/1–1915) tenant in West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1904, aged 73. They had 2 sons called Robert who died young. They are buried at Etttleton. John Davidson (1834–96) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Christopher Foster. Their children were: Margaret (b.1863); Helen (b.1865); Jane (b.1868); Robert (b.1870); Isabella (b.1872); Christopher (b.1875); and Mary (b.1880). He died at Clerkleap, killed by being knocked down by a goods train. John (b.1835) son of James, a spirit dealer at 3 Orrock Place. His mother was Helen Patterson. He worked as a railway clerk and bank clerk. He was Cornet in 1855 and can be seen as Left-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. John (1836–58) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh. He was baptised in Castleton Parish and died at Cardona, Mexico, predeceasing his father. John (1836–1905) son of Ninian, he was a roadman like his father. In 1864 he married Jane Jackson (1840–1912). Their children were Jane (b.1865), James (b.1866), Eliza Jane (b.1868) and Marion (b.1871). John (1838–1913) son of John. He was District Road Surveyor in Newcastle on. He married Betsy, daughter of innkeeper John Scott; she died in 1889, aged 60. Their children included: Agnes (b.1865), who died in infancy; Archibald (1863/4–90); William (1861/2–1904); Frances Mary (1866/7–1907); and Jane (1872/3–1956) John (1839–97) born in Glasgow, son of John and Helen Elliot. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, succeeding his uncle James there. He was recorded at Flatt in 1861 and 1868. When another uncle, John Scott-Elliott died, he succeeded to the liferent of Kirndean, in 1861 and 1868. When another uncle, John Peel, and also carried on the leases on Kirndean, he succeeded to the liferent of Myredykes and Singdean. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1880. He matriculated arms in 1897. He sold Calaburn, breaking his families direct ties with the Hawick area. He married Jane Pott Oliver and their children were: Margaret (b.1863); Helen (b.1865); Jane (b.1868); Robert (b.1870); Isabella (b.1872); Christopher (b.1875); and Mary (b.1880). He died at Clerkleap, killed by being knocked down by a goods train. He married Lieut.-Col. Edwyne Douglas-Jones; Lt.-Com. James Oliver (1883–1965), who married Margaret Hogben; Mary Smith Turnbull (1885–1967); John Stephen (1886–1972), Navy Captain and Surgeon, who married Magda Virginia Salvesen and became a lecturer at Newcastle University; Clement Nixon (1889–1969), who married Katherine Winifred Penney and moved to Rhodesia; Edward John, who married Dorothy Allen, daughter of Richard Sidney Smith of Clifford Chambers, and was killed in WWI; Lt.-Col. Henry Hawes (1891–1972), who became Surgeon to the Viceroy of India and retired to Springbank, Melrose; Robin Alexander (1891–1969), twin of Henry, he became abanker in Canada; and Jean Oliver (b.1892), who was an Almoner at the Royal Free Hospital, London. He died at Southsea, Hampshire. Katherine of Arkleton (b.e.1700) daughter of William of Arkleton and Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh. She was married 3 times. Firstly (about 1720) she married David Laing of Westerkirk. Secondly, in 1727, she married Rev. Charles Telfer, who was minister of Hawick Parish. Thirdly, she married Robert Elliot of Fenwick (son of Francis and Rachel Langlands). Her only child appears to have been Gavin, who succeeded to Arkleton (but is said to have lived with a loose woman he had to acknowledge as his wife) to qualify his daughters to succeed to the estate). Katherine (b.1701) elder daughter of Adam of Teindside, she was baptised in Hawick Parish. In Wilton Parish in 1719 she married Robert, son of Robert of Midlem Mill. When her brother Walter died in 1721 she was served as his heir. Baroness Katharine ‘Kay’ (1903–1994) of Harwood, born Katharine Tennant in Peeblesshire, 7th daughter of Sir Charles Tennant. She died 171 years after her father was born, and her great-grandfather was a witness at Robert Burns’s christening in 1759. As a child she played at 10 Downing Street, where her half-sister Margot was married to Prime Minister Herbert Asquith. She studied politics at the London School of Economics, was an accomplished violinist, played the organ, spoke fluent French, rode until age 80 and boasted that she beat 2 Prime Ministers at golf. In 1934 she married Walter Elliot, Conservative M.P. for Glasgow Kelvingrove and they made their home at Harwood, near Bonchester. She was a leading public figure in her own right, being active in farming, council and social work. She was made C.B.E. in 1948, D.B.E. in 1952 and was raised to the peerage in 1958 after her husband’s death, becoming Baroness Elliot of Harwood. She became...

Chairman of the Conservative Party in 1957, serving on several government committees and being on Roxburghshire County Council for 29 years. She worked tirelessly for the Conservative Party, although never abandoning some of her Liberal roots, being strongly against the death penalty and involved with prison reform, for example. In 1973 the Katharine Elliot Centre was named in her honour. She was the first woman, other than the Queen, to speak in the House of Lords and the first woman to get a private bill through the Lords. The Tweeddale Press Group voted her ‘Borders Man of the Year’. She became a Justice of the Peace in 1998. In 1993 she tripped over her parliamentary robes after the opening of Parliament and was rushed off to hospital, still in her robes, suffering a fractured hip. She died at Hawick Cottage Hospital shortly afterwards and was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard (note her name is also spelled ‘Katherine’). Lawrence (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Perhaps the same ‘laurencii elwald’ was recorded at Mosspaul in 1494/5 when fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary, the Earl of Bothwell seving as surety (but 3 other men of the same name were also listed in 1494/5). Lawrence (15th C.) listed among Elliots and other men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, but appears after William and David, sons of William, and before John in Thorlieshope. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, along with Ralph, William, Edmund, Ingram, Martin and Lawrence (son of Martin). Lawrence (15th C.) son of Martin, he is listed among many Liddesdale men who did not appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Cap- tain of Hermitage were fined as a result. Martin, listed just before him, as presumably his father. Len (20th C.) starting as a message boy with Stothart’s in 1939, he eventually took over the firm when David Stothart retired in 1971. He ran Hawick’s well-known toy emporium until its final closure in 1989. He is also believed to be the last person in Hawick to go through the 6-year apprenticeship as a saddler. Leon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Leoni Elwald’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddes- dale, when he and his brothers were the tenants of Sundhope. He was also listed as one of the tenants of Whiptrope, along with William in Ram- siegill, John, Robert and another ‘Leoni’. Madge Callaghan, M.B.E. (1928– ) wife of Bob Known as a campaigner for the Waverley Line, she had a carriage on the new line named after her in 2015. She received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. She recited David Hill’s poem ‘The Bleach’ on the ‘Hawick Speaks’ tape and on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’. She was recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project in 2004. Margaret nee Roger (16th C.) widow of Robert ‘Elwand’, who was a tenant of Mark Ker at Borthwickshiel. In 1540 she raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiel in 1528, apprehending her and burning her house. The Mur- rays defence was that their actions were part of a raid by the Earl of Angus (Lieutenant of the Bor- ders) against thieves and traitors in Teviotdale and that she was harbouring such thieves, namely her sons David and Alexander, as well as helping her other sons John and Ringand (Ninian). Margaret (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. She was probably related to Alison and John, who are also listed. Margaret (d.1697) heiress of Reidheugh, elder daughter of Robert. She was recorded paying the land tax (of £500) in 1663. In 1637 she married James Elliott, 6th son of Gilbert of Stobs in 1637. The couple were granted many of the Elliot lands in Liddesdale, excepting 3 farms that were given to her sister Esther and some farms that were held in ‘liferent’ by their father Robert. Her son Robert succeeded to the Redheugh and Larriston lands, but she retained a dower right to rentals from Larriston. She later reduced her claims in order to help her son’s financial difficulties. She further reduced her claims on the family’s former lands on Hermitage Water, which helped enable her grandson, Robert of Larr- iston, to buy back Larriston in 1695. However, right after her death Larriston Rig was sold off, and the rest of the estate was bought by Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of Arthur of Harwood, who died in 1698. She was recorded as proprietor of Harwood in a 1710 land evaluation of Hawick Parish, with her lands being valued at more than £800, the third highest in the Parish. She was served heir to her father in 1711, probably when she reached the age of majority. She married William Elliot of Thor- lieshope and they had 14 children. She is buried at Oxnam. Margaret nee Laing (d.1792) daughter of Walter Laing of Meikledale. She inherited Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-ong-Ale. In 1764 she became the second wife of William of Borthwickbrae. She was recorded as owner of the Flex (valued at £114 10s 9d) in 1788, and also in about 1811 (although she was deceased by then). She also owned Wester Essenside, Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish, which were valued together at £952 in 1788. Her children included William (who succeeded to Borthwickbrae and changed his surname to include ‘Lockhart’), Walter of Old Melrose, Margaret (who married David Simpson of Teviotbank) and at least two children who died young. Margaret (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton, she was born in Jedburgh. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, Minister at Southdean. In 1810 her brother Robert died, and she succeeded him as the only surviving child of their father. She then assumed the surname Scott-Elliott and her son William succeeded to Arkleton. Margaret (19th C.) recorded as proprietor of a shoemaker’s business on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Mrs. Marjorie L. nee Laidlaw (19th C.) from Ancrum Mains, daughter of Adam, who had been a builder in Hawick. She is sometimes incorrectly named as ‘Margaret’ rather than ‘Marjorie’. She was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library 1878–94, and possibly only the second female chief librarian in Britain. She was said to be a forceful and dominating lady. She was married to a farmer, but later re-married to D. McBurnie Watson. Another Mrs. Elliott, librarian, is recorded as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, although this cannot be the same woman. Mark (d.1564) recorded as being ‘callit of the Hill’ when he was found guilty of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged. Those convicted along with him were Hob Scott ‘of Colyfurd’ and John Scott ‘the Clerk’. He may be related to later Martins. Martin ‘of Abye’ and of Braedlie (d.c.1590), possibly second son of Robert of Redheugh who died at Flodden (in which case he must have been born before 1513). However, he could instead have been son of the next Robert of Redheugh (b.c.1505, 14th Chief), and hence born somewhat later. He was first known as ‘of Abye’, these probably being the Abbey lands in north-eastern Liddesdale that were once owned by Jedburgh Abbey. He acted as the effective leader of the Elliots in roughly the period 1563–73, presumably during the minority of his nephew. He received a Crown Charter to the lands at Braedlie in 1549; although it would seem to make more sense for this to be the lands on the Hermitage Water, in fact it seems that these were the lands on the Borthwick Water (as claimed in the Dower of the Elliots in roughly the period 1563–73). He later served as a Captain in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry, and helped get the Liddesdale men to the muster in Hawick. A story is told of him at an inspection of the troops in Hawick, during which his horse made a bolt forward. When Capt. Elliot of Harwood asked ‘Where the devil are you going Mark?’, he replied ‘Ask my horse’. He was tenant farmer at Lanton, where he died unmarried. A portrait of him hung at Clifton Park. Martin (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when he was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. His son Lawrence was listed just after him. He may have been related to the later Martins. in 1565. In 1566 the Elliots were again raiding into England, and the feud with the Scotts appears to have been resolved. His force to have defeated that of the Earl of Bothwell in 1566/7, sent to subdue the Elliots and others. In 1567 he received a pardon for his former crimes, and agreed to keep peace on the Border, being given money by both the English and Scottish authorities. He may have been among the roughly 300 men who raided Torwoodlee in 1568 (perhaps slaying several Pringles), and was one of the men summoned to settle the feud between the Pringles and Elliots in 1575. In 1569 he was said to have met the Black Laird of Ormiston in Liddesdale and forced him to stop giving refuge to the English Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland to return to England (from where they had fled after an uprising in support of Mary, Queen of Scots). He and Archibald Armstrong promised in 1569 to enter into ward John Elliot of Thorsleshope. In 1569 he also served as pledge for ‘the haill branche of the Reidheuch that dwellis within the Swyris’, with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. He was also pledge for the Nixons in the same year. Additionally in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh, to ‘Rowie Forster’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cun- tre’. Also in 1569 he was recorded being held ‘with My Lord Regentis Grace’ as pledge for his eldest son Simon, as well as ‘Archeis Hob’. Furthermore, in 1569 he appeared in Edinburgh to request that he be released from ward to return temporarily to Liddesdale, to be replaced with his nephew Gib and offered to give service ‘in keping the hous of Armitage’; he signed ‘with his hand at the pen’. In 1570 he wrote to the English Warden, Sir John Forster, making a deal that avoided Liddesdale being ravaged by the English on their way to Teviotdale. Also in 1570 he headed a group of Elliots who signed a bond, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will Elliot and John Elliot of Heuchhouse. In about 1572, Robert of Redheugh came of age, and he ceased to be the leader of the clan; later there would be strife between the two sets of the Elliots that they led. He was probably the ‘Martin of Brady’ who gave a pledge for the surname of Nixon in 1573. In 1573 he was given ‘liferent’ of the teinds of Castleton by Scott of Buccleuch. According to the register of the Privy Council he gave a pledge for the Nixons in 1573, was also surety in 1574, was moved from ward in Blackness to St. Andrews and had re-entry in ward in 1577. In 1575 he was summoned to appear to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was said to have built himself a strong tower around 1576, described in an English letter being ‘strongly vawted, att the head of Liddell, with open ventes for traynes of powder’; this was distinct from Larriston, but it is unclear where it was situated. In 1578/9 William Ker of Cessford and Andrew Ker of Faldonside were cautioners for him, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; he had been surety for several different sets of men (mainly Elliots), who had not been entered into ward as promised. He is probably the Martin who in 1579 purchased a 10 poundland of land ‘of Reuhop or Philop’ in the Barony of Hawick from John Turnbull; he granted a reversion on these lands and then immediately gave sasine to his son Simon (who would become known as Simon of Philhope). His sons ‘Sym, Gawin, Arche and Hob’ are mentioned in 1580; they were implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh (and it may be that he was the instigator of the raid on Whithaugh that preceded it). In 1580 there was a complaint by the Countess of Bothwell, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden that he was maintaining Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh and his family and followers, and that a group of Elliots of the Park and Gorrenberry had attacked Harwood, Whithaugh and Hosocate; this included his own sons Gavin, Hobbie and Archie, as well as his nephews Airchie, Gib and Dandie. In 1580/1 there was caution of £2000 for his entry to the Privy Council ‘when warned’. In 1581 he and John Turnbull of Minto were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braidlie (who had been released from prison in Edinburgh), as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. Also in that year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riev- ing crimes. In 1581 he was allied with Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he specifically complained about a group of Scotts attacking his farm of Northcroft, and of another group of Scotts attacking his sons Hob and Dand as they rode near Headshaw. All the leaders were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters; it is interesting that at that time he appeared to be on siding against Robert of Redheugh. And lastly, in 1581 he had a bond of caution with Lanie Armstrong of Whithaugh and a number of other Elliots, entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel for the non-appearance of his supporters who had been accused of raiding Eilrig, Bellendean and other farms. Along with Robert of Redheugh and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. The Elliots of Braidlie are listed in an English letter of 1583 as Martin, his son Simon, Gavin ‘the Clerk’, Hobbie, Archie (all 4 of these probably his sons), Jock ‘Copshaw’, John of Thorlieshope, Will of the Steele, Dand and John of Braidlie (probably also his sons) and Simon of Harden; they were probably all closely related to him. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to give their advice regarding the quieting of the troubles in Liddesdale and Teviotdale, and it appears that the feud between factions within the Elliot clan were resolved at this time. In 1584 he was listed second among the Elliots when they gave a bond of assurance to the English Wardens at Hermitage Castle. In 1586 he and his eldest son Simon had a lease of lands from the Earl of Bothwell, including Kilford, ‘Hietrie Clewis’ and ‘Ricartoun Cleucht’. He was last definitively mentioned at a Wardens meeting at the Bell Kirk in April 1590. Also in 1590 he was on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses; others listed include his sons Airchie and Hob, as well as Robert of Redheugh (his nephew); of course he may not have been on this raid himself. In 1591 he had a charter of ‘liferent’ of ‘the ten pund land of auld extent of Phillop’ from James VI, confirmed by Parliament the following year; he must have been very old by this time, or this was the later Martin of Braidlie. He is mentioned in one version of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’, where he is referred to as being ‘of the Preakin Tower’, i.e. Prickinghaugh, which may have been his home for a while. He was among several Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6 (although, since he was probably deceased by then, this may have been his grandson, also called Martin of Braidlie). He may have married an Armstrong (supported by his first son being called Simon) and their children were: Simon, probably first Elliot of Philhope; William of Braidlie, who married Mary Scott of Buccleuch and was hanged in 1607; Robert of Braidlie, called ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’, whose son and grandson were both declared fugitives; Andrew ‘Dand’; Archibald, called ‘Martin’s Archie of Clintwood’, banished from both Kingdoms; Gavin; Gilbert, ‘Gib’; John, called ‘Martin’s John of Burnmouth’, denounced a rebel; and a daughter who married Francis Foster of Kershopfoot. Martin ‘Martin o Heuchhouse’ (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567 and held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike many of the others who were drowned. He was probably a descendant of the William ‘in Heuchous’ recorded in 1516. If he was not executed in 1567, then he could be the same man as ‘Reid Mertin’. Martin (16th C.) presented to the Parsonage and Vicarage of Castleton in 1574. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Martins (or closely related to them). The charge was vacant in the following year. Martin ‘Reid Mertin’ of Heuchhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘Rid Martine Elliot of Heuchhous’ on a list of men accused of raiding into England. ‘Hob’ of Heuchhouse is also listed as his brother. In 1584 he was ‘Mar-tinge Elliot of the Hewghhowse’ when, along with John of Heuchhouse, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Reade’ Martyn Elliott of the Hewghouse’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; John of Heuchhouse was also listed, and so presumably closely related. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1584 along with his brother David, as sons of ‘Elder Will’ on the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. They gave assurance on behalf of their whole part of the clan, but it is unclear where they were from; certainly Martin of Heuchhouse was listed separately. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Rytchis Martyn’, on a list of the Elliot chiefs of the time, said to be closely related to the leader of the clan. Presumably his father was Richard. Martin of Braidlie (d.1607) son of Simon of Philhope (‘Mertin’s Sym’) and grandson of the earlier Martin of Braidlie. He could be the ‘Martyne’ listed by Monipennie in about 1594 among the chiefs of the Border, along with the Laird of Redheugh (but this list was probably compiled earlier, and referred to his namesake, who was already deceased by then). He was also sometimes known as ‘of Prickenhaugh’ and so presumably inherited those lands from his relatives. He was probably the ‘Martine Elliot of the Prickinge hawghe’ accused in 1590, along with ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Airchie and John (sons of Martin, and hence probably his uncles) of stealing horses from Englishman Thomas Rutherford. In 1592 he had a charter of the lands of Philhope, along with his eldest son Simon. This charter also included rights of the Kirk of Castleton. In 1593 he was probably the ‘Martyn Elliot of Bradly’ who was part of the large raiding party of Elliots and Armstrongs into Tynedale. In 1599 he and Robert of Redheugh made an agreement (on behalf of their relatives and friends) to settle their differences with with Sir Walter Scott of Branhomne. Also in 1599 he was part of a bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) to be responsible for the behaviour of the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He must thus have been an important Liddesdale Elliot chieftan, and sometimes confused with his grandfather, the more powerful Martin of Braidley, who died about 15 years earlier; he was described as good old Martin’s oye’ (i.e. grandson). He may have acquired Braidley in only 1606, from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, the cautioners for the payment of 4000 merks being Gilbert of Mains, William of Falnash and Robert Scott of Haining. He was captured in 1606 by the Earl of Dunbar (then Commissioner on the Border) and hanged at the court at Foulden (near Berwick), along with his uncle William as well as the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh. After his death Braidley (in the Barony of Hawick) went to William of Falnash, who had been one of his guarantors in an arrangement between him and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The name of his wife is unrecorded, but their children included: Simon of Philhope; and a son, whose name is unknown, but whose son Robert was served heir to his grandfather’s great-grandfather, Martin Elliot of Braidley, in 1653. Martin (d.bef. 1618) holder of lands in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Lorraine and had a son and William. It has been suggested that he was the same man as Martin of Braidley; although this seems unlikely, the similarity of names may indicate a relationship with that family. Martin (17th C.) servant of John Letham. In 1656 he was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although he was let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. Martin (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Stewart in 1821 and their children included: John (b.1723); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). Mary (18th C.) cook at Dinlabyre in 1791, when she worked for William Oliver. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) listed as former tenant in ‘helmys’ among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His lands were possibly Helm in Cavers Parish (or potentially Whames in the Borthwick valley), and he is listed separately from another Matthew. Matthew (16th C.) chaplain who witnessed a document in Selkirk. Walter Scott of Robertson begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert’s brother John Hunter. Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk was also listed, and perhaps a relative. Matthew (18th/19th C.) from Canonbie, he lived in Castleton Parish. He married Janet (also known as ‘Fanny’) Wilson. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); John (b.1787); Matthew (1788–1874); Henry (b.1791); and Janet (b.1796). Matthew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their children included Betty, Margaret and William. It is possible this is an earlier marriage of the Matthew who married Dorothy Purdom. Matthew (1788–1874) son of Matthew and Janet Wilson. He was a labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 9 Doncaster Street in 1841 and 26 South Hermitage Street in 1861. He is probably the labourer in Newcastleton listed among male heads of households in 1835. He married Dorothy (‘Dolly’) Purdom and their children included: Annie (b.1821), who married farm-worker James; Matthew (b.1821); John (b.1823), a ploughman at Barnes, who may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario; Isabel (b.1825); and Thomas (b.1827), who possibly emigrated to Canada with his brother. Matthew (1788/9–1877) tenant in Netherraw. He was listed as head of household at Netherraw in 1835–41. He was farmer of 20 acres at Netherraw in Castleton Parish in 1841 and 1851. He was the last farmer of Netherraw, with the buildings being demolished after his death, and much of the land planted. He married Janet Scott (c.1788–1875) and their children were: John (b.1808); Betty (b.1811); Matthew (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); Helen (b.1816); Ann (or Annie, 1819–84); William (1820–36); Andrew

(b.1821): Isabel (b.1823), who married a Wilson; Margaret (b.1825): Janet (or Jane, b.1827); and Frances (or Funny, 1829–1914). Matthew (b.1821) resident of Castleton Parish, son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdon. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Hudshouse. He married Cecilia Turnbull and their children included: Stavert Turnbull (b.1844); and Elizabeth (1850–96), who married James Duncan Helm and died in Hawick. Matthew ‘Mattha’ (c.1871–1945) half-back for Hawick in the 1890s, who also played for Scotland. His 1895 Scotland cap is in the Museum. Michael (13th C.) recorded as ‘Michaelis de Elaund’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He may have been an early Elliot, living just across the Border. His son Nicholas, who was 7, and Gilbert, son of Thomas, from the same place, seem to have died in an accident ‘in villa de Elaund’. Miss ?? (b.1830s) became famous for knitting about 130 pairs of socks to send to local soldiers during WWII. She lived on Dalkeith Place. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) teacher at the ‘Latin School’ in Hawick, i.e. the Grammar School. His son John died in 1798. It is unclear if he was the main master or an assistant at the school. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She probably ran an inn or shop. She could be the same Mrs. Elliot recorded in 1735 when the Council records show £2 7s being spent in her establishment ‘when the poer was mended’, suggesting that her inn was near one of the town’s ports. Mrs. ?? (20th C.) from Borthaugh. She was heavily involved in the local Women’s Voluntary Service during WWII. Ninian (19th C.) Edinburgh-based solicitor before the Supreme Courts of Scotland and Clerk of the Teind Court. He was involved with the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and contributed several papers to the Hawick Archaeological Society Transactions. Nichol (17th C.) 4th son of Walter of Arkleton. He was farmer at Unthank. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. John Lithgow of Ewes. His children were: Thomas (b.1700), who probably died young; Anna (b.1702); Adam (b.1703); Janet (b.1704) referred to as ‘in Newmill’, who died unmarried; and Margaret (b.1707), who married William Armstrong of Woodhead. In 1704 he was listed being of Ewes Parish when he witnessed a baptism for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn. Nichol (17th/18th C.). His son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1725. Given the forename, he was probably connected with the farmer at Unthank. Nicholas (14th/15th C.) recorded as deceased in 1408 in a document relating to St. Giles’ lands in Edinburgh, where he is ‘Elwald’. Ninian (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when his son Gilbert was among Liddesdale men cited for non-appearance at the Justice- aire. Ninian (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Robert, William, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ (presumably important men of the clan), as well as 2 Croziers, a Graham and a Forster. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as a tenant of the steadings of ‘Cleirlands, Robsteid, Thomsclotteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded, along with John, as tenant of Roughley in the same roll. Ninian ‘Ringan the Porter’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant at Ewes Doors about 1567. His nickname could be an epithet from the ‘Doors’. In 1569 he was ‘Ninian Elliot, callit the Portar of Ewis durris’ when order to enter as pledge for ‘hail Elliottis dwelland in Ewisdai’. Possibly the same ‘Renyen’ was recorded as being ‘of the Dewhowses’ in Ewesdale, along with John, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. ‘John the Portars son’, recorded in 1578/9 and also in about 1594, was his son; in 1578/9 he was ‘umquhile Ringane the Portar’ when his son John (or ‘Blasteis Jok’) was cited, and hence he was already deceased by then. ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhais Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoren’ could be his grandson. Ninian and John, who were tenants of Roughley in 1541, may also be related. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in a huge list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell in 1585, when they had remission for their previous crimes. He is the first named of ‘Nini- ane, Thome, George and Will Ellattis’, suggesting they all resided in the same place. They are listed among Armstrong, Littles etc. of the area around Eskdale. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Dodburn (16th C.) recorded among a large number of Eli- lots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. His name is listed as ‘Rynion Elliot of Dodborne’ and ‘Renyen Elliot of Dod- burne’. He is surely related to the slightly earlier Simon of Dodburn and Will in Dodburn. Ninian ‘Hob’s Ringan’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Rinyeane Elliott, called Hob’s Ringane’. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.c.1608) son of William of Fiddleton. He was listed (along with his father and brother John) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. In 1608 he was sentenced along with William, son of John Elliot of Burgrains with resisting the King’s Guard. They were also recorded as ‘Ninian Elliot, sone to umq Jok of Burgranes; William Ellote, sone to Will of Fiddletoun’, which is confusing. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for theft, murder and other crimes. Hiding in ‘the West cuntrie’ they were sought out by Sir Robert Hepburn and men of the King’s Guard, but they shot at the Guard, killing William Baillie and being captured after the house they were in was set on fire. They were sentenced to be taken to Edinburgh Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and then to be hanged. He must have been related to Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and men of the King’s Guard, but they shot at the

Ninian (d.1660) 4th son of Elliot of Unthank (whose name is unknown), he was tenant in Eweslees. His brothers were probably Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeebie and William of Unthank. He received a lease of Eweslees from the Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. His eldest son appears to have predeceased him, and when he died he left 2 grandsons who were minors, with their appointed guardians being William of Unthank, Gavin of Outersiderig and James in Harwood. He married Margaret ‘Acheson’ (probably Aitchison). His children included: a son, whose children were Ninian of Eweslees and Robert of Eweslees; Robert in Gorrenberry; and William in Lymiecleuch. However, this information is all quite uncertain. Ninian (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Ninian was baptised in 1694. It is possible he is the same as Ninian of Falnash. Ninian of Falnash (d.bef. 1703) son of Gavin and grandson of Robert. He had a charter of Falnash dated 1667 from Archibald of Falnash, his cousin. He had a son, Walter. He may be the Ninian who leased Todshawhill, Whames and part of Branhoulme Muir in 1672 and 1673. Ninian (b.c.1709) born at Shaws in Castleton, he may have been son or grandson of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. He married Agnes Paterson and they had a son Ninian (b.1735) who lived at Riccarton. His wife’s gravestone is in Teviothead cemetery; she died at the age of 58. He could be the shepherd in Commonbrae marked on the same stone, who died at Slatehills in 1762. He may have been father of Adam (1734–60), also marked on the gravestone, who died at Commonbrae. Ninian (18th C.) son of Robert in Know. He was tenant in Priesthill, which was probably the farmstead near Whithaugh. Ninian (1735–1816) son of Ninian and Agnes Paterson. He was a shepherd in Castleton, associated with Riccarton and Dod. He was at Riccarton in 1778. He was also recorded as shepherd at Riccarton on both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls and also in the Castleton Parish section of the Roxburghshire Militia in 1797. He appears to have married 3 times, to Margaret Brydon (b.1731) at Riccarton in 1756, then Esther Crozier (1731–66) and lastly to Janet Douglas (1745–1834) at Upperraw. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1756); John (b.1760) in Middlemoss; Margaret (again, b.1763); Adam (b.1765); Ester (b.1766), who married Robert Ballantyne from Pinglehole; Mary (b.1772); Robert (b.1774); Ninian (b.1776); Catherine (b.1777); Christian (b.1778); William (b.1784); and Walter (b.1789). He died at Shaws.

Ninian (1776–1847) son of shepherd Ninian and Janet Douglas, he was born at Riccarton. In 1841 he was listed as ‘Lab. or Roadman’ and living at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret (1779–1863), daughter of John Nichol and Elizabeth Riddell. Their children included: Ninian (1800–89); John (b.1810); Helen (b.1812); James (1814–98), road contractor; and Janet (1821–1901), who had a daughter to John Nichol (presumably a cousin of some sort). Ninian (1789–1865) eldest son of John and Janet Robson, he was born in Castleton Parish and may have lived at Blackburnfoot. He emigrated with his family to Middlesex County, Ontario, and all but their first child was born there. He married Agnes Turnbull (b.c.1790). Their children included: Janet (b.1815), born in Castlelyon; Mary (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Esther (b.1829); Francis (b.1829); and Agnes (1837–41).

Ninian (1799–1885) born at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He married Janet, daughter of Elliot Grieve, who was born at Blinkbonny. They emigrated to Canada where their children were born, Janet, James, Elliot, Janet Grieve, Gardner, John, William, James, Catherine, Thomas and Margaret. They lived in North Dorchester Township, Middlesex County, Ontario, where he was a farmer. Ninian (1808–89) son of Ninian and brother of John. He was a road contractor in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square in 1851 and 1861. He married Jane (1812–65), daughter of John Nichol and Marion Murray. Their children included: John (1836–1905), also a roadman; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; Marion (1840–99). Patrick (15th C.) brother of John of Thorlieshope. He is recorded in 1488, when he was witness to a sasine for the lands of Girnwood. It is possible that the same Patrick was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Patrick (16th C.) entered at a Justice Court in Jedburgh in about 1510, by Robert of Redheugh, along with ‘Gret Johnnie in Priesthaugh. Patrick ‘Pate’ of Ryleknow (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men that Sir John Forster served as surety for. This makes it seem like he was from the English side. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1678 when he had a deal about providing timber to the Burgh of Selkirk. Percival (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535. Along with William (probably a relative), Andrew ‘Louche’, Patrick Gourlay and others were accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. His name is written ‘Parsevell Elliot’. He is probably the ‘Perse’ recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1542 for a transactions involving Burgess Robert. In 1544 he (along with Walter Scott of Branxholme) was a captor of an Englishman who William had a bond to return to them. Phillip (18th/19th C.) saddler of Hawick (probably from the Eastend). He was the Council’s elected Cornet in 1790, but after he drew up a narrow list of invitees some of the young men of the town (presumably mainly the West-unders) chose George Wilson as their own Cornet instead. The two cavalcades approached the West Port from different sides of the Raws and Bailie Hardie blocked the rebel cavalcade (felling the first man with an oak stick), allowing the elected Cornet’s party to proceed unmolested to the Moor (as described by Robert Wilson). Ralph (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Two men listed as ‘radulphi elwald’ are there, although this forename is not otherwise common among the Elliots. One of them had a brother, William, who is also listed in 1494/5. Ralph (16th C.) priest who was recorded as witness to 2 documents in Selkirk in 1532. Richard ‘Little’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘parvus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as William ‘One-Eyed’, who was also recorded. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1548 as ‘Ryche Elliot of the Park’. Along with Robert of Redheugh and ‘Nelly’s John’, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Fernichirst. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Park. Richard ‘Law’s Richie’ (16th C.) tenant in Swinside. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Richie Elliot callit lawis Richie in Swinstead’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ and ‘Lawis Thome’ in Priesthaugh were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Richard (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as ‘Ritchie Elliot, callit Rowanes Willis Ritche’ among Elliots accused of raiding the farm of Harwood on Teviot. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Roland. He is listed after ‘Rowans Hobbe’ and his brother Jamie, who may be related. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is written as ‘Riche Ellott, ‘Bessies wifes Riche’’, but it is unclear exactly what this means and who he was related to. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (d.1606) called ‘Richie Elliot of Heuchous’ when he was found guilty of stealing a sheep. The Border Commissioners wished to spare him, but he was nevertheless sentenced to death by the Privy Council. He could be the same man as ‘Ryche Ellott of the Lowlandes’, listed just before William, son of John of Heuchhouse in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England. He was also listed along with Will, also of ‘the Hewghhouse’ in relation to another 2 raids in 1595. Richard (17th C.) see Robert. Richard (1817–91) eldest son of William, farmer at Doorpool. Along with his brothers William (1819–91) and John (1823–1910) he was farmer at Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. In 1861 they were farming 900 acres and were all unmarried. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto Elwald’ in 1481 when he and his mother leased the lands of ‘Glenstokane’ in Galloway. Perhaps the same Robert had a sasine for the lands of ‘Rachane’ in Peeblesshire, also in 1481. It is unclear how this man (or men) may have been related to local Elliots. Robert of Reidhheugh (d.1497) first Elliot chief about whom we have documented information. Since it is said that he died as an old man, he may have been born in the 1420s. He is described as 10th Chief of the Elliots, even although the names of the first 9 chiefs are unknown (but it is a safe bet that some of them were Robert!). It is claimed the first chief was granted lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in about 1320; this earlier Robert was probably the first Elliot Laird of Redheugh and Larriston. A record found among papers at Ferniehirst was said to refer to an early Elliot of Redheugh, ‘Chiefman of the South’, who was killed in battle with 3 of his sons (possibly Homildon Hill in 1402), and whose daughter Mary married Cutibert Blackadder, whose eldest son was alive in 1447; this earlier Elliot may have been his grandfather. He was established at Redheugh from at least 1476, when he was granted lands of ‘Dalman’ (possibly Demainholm), ‘Bluntwood’ and ‘the Crouke’ by Archibald Douglas (‘Bell-the-cat’), Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; the charter describes him as ‘our vellbelufty famelian squiar, Robert Elwald of ye Redheuch for his guid and faithful servis to us don and for to be don’, and it is signed at Lintalee. In 1479 he was further granted ‘Layhalcht, Carolschelis, hartsgarth et le faulde’ (i.e. Leaughough, Corrie’s Shiel and Harts-garth) in the lordship of ‘ledesdale’. In 1484 he was Robert ‘Elwald’ of the Redheuch when the Earl of Angus directed ‘Walter Scot de Edschaue, Ralulpho Ker, fratri Walter Ker de Cesfurud et Willieumo Elwaldo de goranbery’ to infet him in the lands of Over and Nether ‘Larrostane’. In 1489 there was a further precept for ‘redehuch’, ‘layhauch’, ‘hartsgarth’, ‘caraschele’, ‘dawmane’ and ‘larostanys superior et inferior’. In 1491 the Earl of Angus swapped Liddesdale for Bothwell, ending the association of the Elliots with their superiors the Douglases. He may be the Robert son of Gilbert ‘Elwald’ who produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw; his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. He may also be the Robert mentioned in 1493 when Patrick Hardie had remission for stealing oxen from him. It seems likely he was the ‘roberti elwald, seniour’ who was listed among many Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He is said to have had one son, Robert, Captain of Hermitage, who died in his lifetime. He was succeeded by his grandson, Robert, according to a ‘retour of inquest’ of 1497/8 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. He is there said to have died ‘about the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross last bypast’, i.e. in early May, and his grandson inherited his lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1491) son of Robert, he was also known as ‘Robin’. He is sometimes listed as 11th Chief of the Elliots, even though he died in his father’s lifetime. He served as Captain of Hermitage Castle (probably Deputy Keeper), perhaps being appointed on the death of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch (in about 1484). In 1491 the Earl of Angus was bound to hand over his son Robert (as well as his own son, the Master of Angus) to King James. He was succeeded by his son Robert (12th) of Redheugh. He may also have been father of William of Larriston, although these early generations are not clear. Robert ‘the King’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among a long list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and George Turnbull of Hallrule, Captain of Hermitage, served as their sureties and were fined. His name was given as ‘Roberti elwald vocatus king’ and he listed second (after William) in a long list, perhaps suggesting his prominence among the Elliots. He was also one of a large number of Elliots (mostly ‘Elwalds’) listed in a 1500 document relating to pledges of good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1502 he is probably the ‘Hob the King’, brother of ‘Dand the Man’ and son of William, who was involved with stealing 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. They were already rebels at that point, with 3 men from around Greenhead producing a ‘respite’ for resetting them. It is unclear which William was his father, and how he was related to any other Elliots. He may be the Robert who witnessed a sasine (along with several Elliots and others) for Robert of Redheugh in 1497. Robert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. His name is listed as ‘roberti elwald comitis’, with his nickname perhaps being ‘the Count’ (to distinguish him from ‘the King’ and other contemporary men of the same name). Robert of Langhaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. He is listed there as ‘Robert elwald de langhalch’. He is also recorded in the document listing men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498 for good behaviour. He is there recorded as ‘Robert Elwald de Langhalch’. This is probably the Longhaugh on the Hermitage Water. Robert ‘Young Rider’ (15th/16th C.) listed in a large number of men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is also listed among men who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elwald, callit zong ridar’. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1516) 12th Chief of the

Elliot, son of Robert and grandson of the previous Laird of Redheugh. In 1491 he is probably the Robert, son of ‘Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage’ who was delivered (along with the Master of Angus) as security by the Earl of Angus to King James. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1497/8 in the lands of Tillielee and Cauldecheuch, according to a ‘retour’ in the Douglas of Cavers papers (where he is ‘Robert Elwalde’). 2 other Robert Elliots, and 2 William Elliots were on the panel for this inquest. He had sasine for the Liddesdale estates in 1497 and in 1501 he had another retour (at Jedburgh) for his grandfather’s lands, held of the Earl of Bothwell. He additionally inherited Priesthaugh, with the Abbots of Melrose as superiors. In 1502 he was ‘Robertus elwald in redheuch’ when he and George Turnbull in Hall-rule were fined for failing to present David Turnbull in Boinchester at court in Jedburgh. He was witness to a sasine at Hermitage (for Adam, 2nd Earl of Bothwell) in 1508, along with William Elliot and Robert in Dinlees. He may be the Robert ‘Elwald’ who was on the 1509 panel for deciding on the inheritance of Cavers by James Douglas. He was ‘Robert Elwald of Redheuch’ when summoned to come before the King to promise to keep good order in 1510. Following this he had a respite in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 for all crimes carried out by him and his associates (except for treason) to be unpunished for 19 years to come. Also listed explicitly were Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope, suggesting they might have been brothers or sons (other associates were 2 Nixons, 2 Croziers, 2 Hendersons and an Armstrong). His children were Robert (possibly killed at Flodden) and a daughter who may have married David Scott of Howpasley (or possibly Tushielaw), with William of Larriston perhaps being another son. In general it seems difficult to separate him from the next Robert (in deciding how many generations there really were, and who may have been killed at Flodden). It is unclear if he was the ‘Robert Elwald of Redheuiche’ who had a respite for his crimes in 1515/6, along with his brother William of Larriston and some Nixons, Foresters and Croziers, numbering 40 men. If this was him, then he seems likely to have died in 1516 and was succeeded by his grandson Robert in 1526. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1513) referred to as 13th Chief of the Elliots, even although he appears to have died in his father’s lifetime. He was son of Robert, although the number of different Roberts in the preceding couple of decades seems quite uncertain. His sons were: Robert, who succeeded his grandfather in 1526; possibly Martin of Braidlie (although he seems more likely to have been his grandson); Archibald of Fahnash and Gorrenberry; and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the ‘Master Elliot’ said to have been killed at Flodden. However, this may be confusion with his father (since it seems hard to believe he was very old at Flodden), and there is no documentary evidence to separate the various Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Elwald of Dunle’ in a 1510 respite to Robert of Redheugh and many others in Liddesdale. It seems likely he was a close relative of the Elliot chief. He is also listed as ‘in Denly’ in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He was presumably tenant farmer at Dinlees on the Hermitage Water. Robert (d.1530) referred to as a ‘common thief’ in 1530 when he and Adam Nixon were allowed to escape from the custody of John, Lord Hay of Yester, and for which Lord Hay’s brother (also John) was imprisoned in Linlithgow. Probably the same Robert ‘Elwald’ was hanged for theft in Linlithgow that same year, along with Matthew and William Nixon and Robert Noble. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. Robert (d.bef. 1539) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book in 1539/40 when his widow, Janet Scott, purchased lands in Appletreehall from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elwand of [Toungtis?]’, but could possibly be a deceased Robert of Redheugh. Perhaps the same Robert was described as ‘layman’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535 for Alexander Scott of Palace. Robert (d.bef. 1540) referred to as ‘Robert Elwand’ in 1540 when his widow Margaret Roger raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels (where he was a tenant) in 1526. His sons included David, Alexander, John and Ringand (Ninian), all of whom were wanted as thieves. Robert of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsegill’ in 1532 when the King charge a commission with his capture (along with Croziers and Foresters) for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull. In 1541 he was ‘antiquo Roberto Elwald de Ramysgill’ when listed among the tenants of Stirkshielhope; ‘Roberto Elwald in Rammisgill’ was also listed and presumably a different man (although it is unclear if they were related). Robert of Reidheugh (c.1505–bef. 1557) 14th Chief of the Elliots, served heir to his grandfather in 1526, with his father probably being killed at Flodden. His grand-uncle (or perhaps uncle) William of Larriston led the clan during his minority. In 1526 he inherited his grandfather’s Liddesdale lands of ‘Reidheuch, Layhauch, Hartsgarth, Careeschel, Dalemane’ and ‘Over and Nether Larastanis’. In 1531 he was probably the Robert ‘Elwole’ of the ‘Armuytage’ who was one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland. He was further recorded as Captain of Hermitage in a document of 1532 and another in 1548/9 (when he had a bond to enter John ‘Cragill’ as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst). In 1537/8 he and his brother Archibald were sureties for William in Leabaugh, plus brothers James and Simon, who had broken open a shop in Selkirk. He may be the ‘Robert Elwald seriendo’ (i.e. ‘sergeant’) who was recorded as tenant of Shaws in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale;
he may also be the Robert who was tenant of the lands of Copshaw. He may be the ‘Robert Ellwald’ listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton.
In 1546 his son was described as ‘sone to Robyne the Redhwych’. He was listed as ‘Rot. Eluand of Reidheuch’ in a 1550 bond signed by him and 10 Scotts in which they promised the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1552/3 he entered 3 Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. One of the other witnesses was a Bailie of Hawick; their.causer was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh.

Robert ‘Flaskwood’ (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1529/30. Archibald and Gavin Elliot, along with Simon and Ninian Armstrong pledged to bring him to Fairnilee to answer for attacks and other crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He is also recorded as ‘Roberto Elwald de Flaswood’ in 1535 in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535, where Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of bringing him and William ‘Mend the caill’ from Liddesdale to plunder cattle at Midlem and elsewhere. His lands could be the place of this name in Liddesdale or ‘Flask Wood’ in Ewesdale. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas and Helen Rutherford. In 1541/2 he inherited his deceased father’s tenement and 2 rigs in Selkirk and then resigned a house to his mother, in lifer-ent. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk recorded in 1542; ‘Perse’ was one of the witnesses and may have been related. Probably the same Robert witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. In 1561 his mother Helen Rutherford assigned the tenentment and 4 rigs to Robert, son of the deceased
Gavin of Horsleyhill, leaving liferent for herself;
Robert of Horsleyhill also assigned to him the ‘kindness’ of the King’s Croft in Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Rammisgill’ in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants at Stirkshiellope. Old Robert ‘Elwald de Rammisgill’ was also listed among the tenants, and is hence presumably a different man. He is surely related to the William in Ramsiegill who is also mentioned in 1541, and is probably related to the Robert in Ramsiegill who is recorded in the 1580s. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Hobbe Elwode Clemyt [Crozier’s] syster sone’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The Clement mentioned here, who was presumably his mother’s brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family
at that time, and possibly Clem Crozier of Stobs.
It is not impossible that he was the same man as Robert of Horsleyhill (which also had a Stobs connection). It is also possible he was the same man as the ‘Clement’s Hob’ mentioned several times in the 1560s and 1570s. Robert ‘Gavin’s Hob’ (16th C.) witness to the bond in 1546 to enter 3 Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. One of the other witnesses was a Bailie of Hawick, and hence he was probably fairly local, but it is unclear which Gavin was his father. Robert (d.1564) 2nd Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of Gavin, 1st Laird. His brothers were William (who later succeeded to Horsleyhill), Andrew, David, Gavin of Stobs, and Archibald. He was said to have been involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547, along with his father Gavin, and brothers William and Andrew. In 1561/2 he was recorded as son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill when he purchased a tenement and 4 rigs in Selkirk from Helen Rutherford, widow of Thomas Elliot; he promised to retain liferent of a house for Helen and gave up the ‘kindness’ of the King’s Croft in Selkirk to Helen’s son, who was also called Robert Elliot. In 1563/4 he is ‘in Horslehill’ when he appeared on behalf of his brother Dand, whose sheep had been stolen from Baillelee by the Scotts of Tushielaw; their cau-tioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh.
He is probably the Robert who was listed in 1564

along with William of Horsleyhill and Gavin and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, for which he was said to be the instigator; however, it is confusing that he was not named as Laird at the time, perhaps because he had not formally succeeded his father by then. He had at least 2 children: Gavin (d.1565), who succeeded; and William (b.1547) who succeeded after his brother. He was executed for the murder of David Scott. His uncle Gavin (later of Stobs) was appointed as guardian to his children, although his half-brother William (later Burgess of Peebles) disputed this, but was deemed too young.

Robert of Reidheugh (d.bef. 1564) 15th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert, whom he probably succeeded some time before 1557. He may have appeared along with his father at a Judiciary Court held by Lord Maxwell in 1537/8. In 1546/7 he was ‘sone to Robyn of the Redhwych’ when he was among several men entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst, and in 1548 (referred to as ‘younger of the Reidhewcht’) had a similar bond for entering John, son of Robin of Thorl ship. His ‘eym’ (i.e. uncle) Archibald was also referred to there and he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He had a bond for entering Nixons in 1557 and in that year his brother Martin is also referred to (confusing, since Martin of Braidlie is sometimes placed in the family tree as his uncle). He was ‘of Reidhuche’ in about 1557 when he rented Priesthaugh and Penangushope from Melrose Abbey. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1561 he was ‘of Reidheuch’ when listed (along with his Gavin, brother of Archie’s Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft; he was called ‘of Redheuch’ when later listed (after Martin of Reidheuch) among men charged by the Privy Council to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle, while the Earl of Bothwell was in exile, with William Douglas of Cavers acting as security for him. He had a bond of 1563, along with Martin of Braidlie (his brother) for entering Jock, son of Gavin Elliot to Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He married Jean Scott, sister of Buccleuch, around 1550 (and after his death she married Gavin Elliot of Stobs). His children were: Robert of Redheugh; William of Hartsgarth; Gilbert of Stobs, ‘Gibbie wi’ the Golden Garties’ (although this is not certain); Archibald; Gavin of Brugh; and a daughter, who was the 2nd wife of Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. A report on the West Marches compiled in the period 1563–66 states that ‘oulde Robyn Elliot and young Robyn, his son, are both dead’. Robert ‘Reid Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliot in Skelhill was surety for. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of the Shaws (16th C.) said to have been the Elliot who convinced those who had been rounded up in Hermitage Castle to allow the wounded Earl of Bothwell to enter in 1566, by agreeing to let all of them go. It is said that he was granted the rent of the lands of ‘Blackgrave’ as a reward. It is possible that ‘Shaw’ is the same as ‘Coppshaw’, but is more likely to be the lands of that name on the Hermitage Water. In 1569 he and his brother Will of the Steele were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorliveshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. Also in 1569 he was ‘Hob of the Schawis’, listed along with Airchie ‘Fyre the Brais his brother’, when John of Thorliveshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. In 1572 he was among the Elliots who signed a bond with John Johnstone of that Ilk for returning John of the Steel (who had been broken out of ward). He is also ‘Hobb Elliott of the Shawes’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret shells’. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with Airchie of the Hill and others) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Either he or his son was probably the ‘Hob of the Schawis’ who was one of the Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Bucceleuch in 1599. He was probably also related to Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws who are recorded in 1583. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘the Lady’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Elliots of Ewesdale. ‘Will Elliott callit the Lord’ was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge him, as well as John of Fiddleton and Hob of Unthank. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. This was along with Hob ‘the Lady’ and John of Fiddleton, when Will ‘the Lord’ was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Fahnsh in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. He may have been related to Will, Dand and Jock, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘Sweet Milk’, ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when Andrew Ker of Faldonside had a bond with him. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Council as ‘Hob Ellot callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggs’. It is possible that he was related to William ‘Sweet Milk’, whose death in a duel at Newmill is immortalised in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. His second nickname presumably means that he was tall. However, there is no information about how he was related to other Elliots. Robert ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’ (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He was also sometimes called ‘Hob of Braidlie’. His lands were at Prickinghaugh in Liddesdale. He was one of the band of 300 or so Elliots, Armstrongs and others who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568. He is probably the Robert of Braidlie for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. He is listed as ‘Hobbi’ in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charges. He was also implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He was ‘Hob’ of Braidlie when sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He is probably the ‘Hob Ellott of Braidley’ for whose release in 1581 Martin of Braidlie (presumably his father) and John Turnbull of Minto served as caution; he was pledge for the ‘gang of Gorrumberrie’, and was released from ward in the Castle and Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1581 his father complained about how he and his brother Dand had been attacked while riding near Headshaw; Walter Scott of Headshaw and 5 or 6 others attacked them and ‘struckin the hand from the aue and hurt the uther in perrell of his lyff’, although it is unclear whether he or his brother lost his hand. He is listed as ‘Hobbe Elliot’ among a 1583 list of Elliots of Braidlie and was probably also the ‘Robin Elliot of Braidley’ listed among the landed men of the Border in about 1590. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Airchie) accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynantle’ in the previous year. He is probably the Hob listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Two of his sons were later denounced as rebels (‘Kirstie’ and one other). In 1611 he was ‘Robert Ellot, called Martenis Hob’ when he was cautioner for ‘Jok Elliot, called the Murt’, for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also one of the cautioners in 1611 for ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’, along with Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and William of Prickinghaugh. He may be the same as ‘Robert Elliot, called of Braidlie’ when witness to the document of 1613 infesting Robert of Redheugh in his lands. Robert ‘Hob’ of Heuchhouse (16th C.) listed among Elliots who signed a bond in 1570, promising to give pledges for the release of John of Heuchhouse (who was surely a brother or son) and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; it was reported that he had previously been surety for John of the Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son to Elder Will. In 1579/80 he is recorded along with his brother ‘Reid Mertin’ on a list of men accused of raiding into England. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He is recorded in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, describing the leaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale. He is described as ‘Hobbe Elliot of the Hewghus’, and listed along with Robert of Redheugh and 3 of the chief’s brothers, so he was presumably closely related. His brother John is also mentioned, and he could be the John of Heuchhouse who is recorded about the same time. Robert ‘Scot’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Scottis Hob’, along with his 2 unnamed sons, in a 1574 list of Scots rebels who were reset in England. In 1578/9 he is ‘Hob Elliot, callit Scottis Hob’ when it was declared by the Privy Council that he was meant to return to prison with William Cunningham of ‘Caprintoun’, with cautioner John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk. However, he had not re-entered ward with Cunningham, and hence his cautioner defaulted. He is recorded as ‘Scotes Hobbe’ in 1583 in a list of Elliots of Park. It is unclear whether his nickname meant ‘Scottish’ or that he was perhaps stepson of a Scott, or his father was nicknamed ‘Scott’. It is possible that ‘Hobbie’s Hob’, who is also listed, was his son. Gavin, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1, was probably also his son; he was ‘Scottis Hobbis Gawen’ in 1581. Another son, ‘Scottis Hobbis Jok’ is recorded in 1580, 1581 and 1584. Robert ‘Hob’ of the Park (16th C.) son of James of the Park. There is a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573; he was exchanged for John of the Park, who was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, and although he had been freed, was ordered to present himself again to be warded. In 1576 there is a complaint that he had been freed from ward with William Porterfield. He is listed in 1578/9 in a re-statement of a promise made to the Privy Council as a ‘plege for the gang thairof’, that he should stay in ward with William Porterfield of Ducchall. His sureties were Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie. However, he was stated to have ‘not remanit bot eschaipit fra the said William Portarfeild’. He was listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Also in 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer charges about farms near Hawick being raided. He was presumably important in the family of Elliots of the Park, and also related to the deceased John of the Park and ‘Symmy’ of the Park, who were also mentioned in the same 1578/9 document. Either the same or a different ‘Hob Ellot of the Park’ was declared a rebel of 1606. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) son of ‘Dand of Brailedy’ and probably grandson of Martin of Brailedy. In 1574 it is recorded that he was to remain in ward. In 1576 the man with whom he had been warded, George Maxwell of Newark, was ordered to appear before the Privy Council to explain why he had been freed. In 1580 he was warded with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh, along with John, son of ‘the Elder Tod’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Elliot, callit Kene’. The meaning of the nickname is unclear, but he may have been closely related with ‘Archie Kene’, and must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh. Robert ‘Hob’ of Glenvoran (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobbie of Glenvore’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Lands. His lands were in the upper Ewes valley. Probably the same man was ‘Robine Elliott the Bastarde of Glenvoren’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Probably the same ‘Robene Elliot of Glenvorane’ was declared a fugitive in 1606. (‘Reid Hob Elliot’) suggests that he had red hair. He is probably also the Robert of Skelfhill who was one of those summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to settle the feud between the Elliots and Pringles. Robert ‘Hob Billie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon were convicted of helping him, David Elliot, Armstongs and others steal cattle from near Edinburgh. He is probably the ‘Hobbe Elliott ‘Hobbe bullie’ listed among Elliots, Armstongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he is also ‘Hobb ‘Bullie’ when accused of having been in another group who stole from the same farms earlier. Robert ‘Gavin’s Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle. He is recorded as ‘Gawens Hob Elliot’, but it is unclear who his father Gavin was. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Borthuikbra, servant to Wat Scott of Tushelaw’ in 1589 when he refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. He was presumably tenant at Borthwickbrae, but was not obviously related to the later Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hob bullie’ in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c. 1591) 16th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was a minor when his father died sometime around 1563, and Martin of Braidlie (probably his uncle or perhaps great-uncle) acted as clan chief, while his new stepfather was Gavin Elliott of Stobs and Skelfhill. In 1569 he was ‘Robert Elliot of the Skelfhill’ when he promised to enter as surety in place of his stepfather, if required. He became of age in about 1572 and took over as clan chief. He was recorded as Captain of Hermitage in 1573. Also in that year he was among a large group of Border lairds to sign a bond with the Regent Morton. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. Additionally in 1573 there was a decree by Douglas of Cavers for his removal from the lands of Langside (which he fought against, on the basis that his father and grandfather had held these lands). He was the Robert of Redheugh who signed a bond recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. It is probably the ‘Young Robin’ recorded ‘for the wrangus spoliacion and awaytaking of thair teindis’, along with Gaving of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Crook, on the 1574 testament of Walter Scott.
of Buccleuch. Also in 1574 he witnessed a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that Ilk. Additionally in 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers with the Privy Council, specifically for the lands of Priesthaugh, Peelbrae, Swinstead and Dodrig; he was found liable for 5000 merks for not removing the thieves and replacing them with 'trew men'. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was found liable for the fines, because the men he made pledges for had continued their riving activities (in his case, 'Joke the Gyde' Elliot and Sim, son of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh).

In 1579/80 he acted as surety for a group of Elliots and others accused of conducting raids into England; his brother Archie is also named there, and he himself was accused of being part of a raid on Coquet Water. In 1580 he, the Scotts of Buccleuch, Gledstains and others, followed a group of English and Scottish thieves who had raided Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded in a fray with Armstrongs and Elliots on their return. In 1580/1 he was directed to give up his position as Captain of Hemitage. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw when they made a set of complaints against Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Along with Martin of Braidlie and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. He signed a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. He is 'Robin Elliot, of the Redheugh' when he complained of an English raid on his lands at the Steele in the 1580s. In a letter of 1583 from Musgrave to Burleigh he is 'Robin Elliot of the Reddhughe, cheife of the Ellilotes', along with his brothers William of Hartsgarth, Gilbert, Archibald and Gavin, and many other Elliots, including Hob of the Heuchhouse and his brother John, Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws, Archibald 'Fyre the Braes' and 'Richie's Martin', as well as Garth Simson, all of whom were said to be his 'brethren, or his men that are daly at his commandement'. Also in 1583 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge brought against him by Robert in Dodrig, that his men had repeatedly attacked the servants there, although he had no legal right to the lands. He was recorded in 1584 as 'Robeine Elliot' in a letter from the King and was temporarily imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle, along with Martin of Braidlie and Armstrong of Whithaugh.

He was chief of the Elliots (named first, along with Martin of Braidlie and William of Falnash) in their assurance to the English Wardens to keep the peace in 1584, signed at Hermitage Castle. In 1583/4 and 1584/5 he was among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was named first on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses. In August of 1590 he appeared before the King and Council to answer for some of his men, and this may be the last time he is recorded (he certainly died before June of the following year). He was probably the Laird of Redheugh listed on Monipennie (published around 1594, but compiled earlier) among Border chiefs, along with Robert (probably his son) and Martin (probably of Braidlie). He married Marion (or Marjorie), daughter of James Hamilton of Sprouston in 1572; through this marriage and its Bothwell connection, he became allied with the side of Mary, Queen of Scots. They had 5 children: Robert of Redheugh; William of the Rig and of Hartsgarth, who married Jean Rutherford; a daughter, who married Hector Lorraine of Harwood; Nicola, who married Gerard, brother of Sir Thomas Carleton; and Gilbert, illegitimate (possibly by Helen Kidd). His sons were all minors at the time of his death. He may also be the Elliot of Redheugh who is said to have married a daughter of Thomas Carlton of Carlton Hall. He could have been the 'Robert Elliot callit Yhoung Robene' who was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholmie in 1574, along with William Douglas of Crook and Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill, as men who owed him for teinds several years earlier; if so, he probably owned (or leased) Penangushope. He may also be the 'Robin Elliot' who, along with his brother William, George Simpson and their accomplices were accused of raiding into England in 1582. Robert 'Clement's Hob' (d.bef. 1578) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Moray, in a surprise attack during the Market. He was one of the 10 who were afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike the 18 who were immediately drowned. His father was presumably Clement; although it is also possible that he was the same as the Robert who was nephew of Clement Crozier (and certainly Clement was a prominent name among Croziers and otherwise unknown among Elliots). In 1569 he and Archie Keen escaped from the Castle of Doune and then went on ‘a marauding expedition’; he is there listed as being ‘in Gorumbery’. Also in 1569 he is listed along with ‘Dand of Braidlie’ when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. In 1570 he was one of several Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of John of Heuchhouse and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1574 he is ‘Hob Elliot callit Clemmettis Hob’ when listed among a list of mostly Croziers who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers; he is listed after Mirk Hob in Penchrise. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council that he had been one of the joint sureties for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will; he is listed as ‘umquhile Hob Elliot, callit Clemmetnis Hob’. His son Dand is recorded in 1581. Robert ‘Mirk Hob’ (16th C.) one of the 10 Liddesdale rievers held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. Surely the same man was ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’ in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwrearie Castle, as pledge for him and ‘Gray Will Elliot’. He is probably the same as ‘Mirk Hob in Peneryse’ recorded in 1574 among a list of Croziers who Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from his lands. His is also ‘Hob Elliot, callit Mirk Hob, in Pencryise’ recorded in 1576 when several Border Lairds acted as joint sureties for him; they were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He was thus associated with the farm of Penchrise. By 1578/9 he was among many Borderers state to have ‘brokin and contra-venit the conditionin abonespecifit, having committit diverse crymes of thift and resset of thift’; he was thus declared a fugitive. Robert (16th C.) son to ‘Elder Will’, another of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. In 1570 there was a charge brought against several Elliots involving him and John of Heuchhouse, complaining that they had been released from Blackness Castle, but their clan had failed to ‘enter the said pledges’ on eight days’ warning; among those who signed the bond was ‘the said Elder Will’, as well as Martin of Braedie. There was a reminder of this pledge in 1578/9, where it was stated that he and John of Heuchhouse had not been imprisoned in the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Haltoun, as pledged. He was probably brother of John, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1. Robert ‘Vicar’s Hob’ (16th C.) one of the outlaws of Liddesdale apprehended in Hawick in 1567, where he is ‘Rob’. In 1574 he was listed among men who had been ordered removed from the lands of Priesthaugh and others by Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he is there ‘Robert Ellott callit the Vicaris Hob’. In 1576 there was a pledge to the Privy Council that he would refrain from thieving; he was recorded there as ‘Hob Ellot, callit the Vicaris Hob’, with cautioners being jointly Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is probably the same ‘Hobbie Elliot, called Vicar’s Hobb’ for whom Edward Lorraine of Harwood and John Turnbull of Minto were cautioners in 1589. Robert ‘Hob o Thorlieszhope’ (16th C.) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured at Hawick market by the Earl of Moray in 1567; he is recorded as being ‘in Thirlinsope’. In 1569 he was entered before the Regent by Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Ker of Faldonside. Probably the same Robert of Thorlieshope was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He is ‘Roberto Elwald officiario’ who was tenant of Thorlieshope on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale; ‘officiario’ suggests he had an official role in the area. He is ‘Robyn Elwald of Thorlieshop’ listed in 1541 by the English among Scotsmen who reset English rebels; ‘Wilokes Elwald’ is listed along with him, and so possibly a relative, and he is also listed along with Clem Crozier, who may have been a neighbour. He was also mentioned in 1541 when Airchie, ‘brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorllyshope’ was listed among Scotsmen responsible for the burning of the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; this suggests that Airchie was his brother and perhaps that their father was also Robert. He is also probably the ‘Robin of Thorlyshop’ whose son John was entered in a bond by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546 and in other bonds with Robert of Redheugh in 1547. In 1546 he had to sign with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He was probably related to (or possibly the same as) the ‘Rob of Thorlishop’ recorded in about 1594. Robert ‘Will Cock’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 as ‘Robert Elliot callit Wilkokis Hob’. He and ‘Gawins Jok in Ramsygill’ were the pledges for whom ‘Ade Ellot callit the Cowlais’ was held in Blackness Castle. It is possible he was the same man as Hob of Thorlieszope. His father was probably ‘Will Cock’. Robert ‘Airchie’s Hob’ (16th C.) third son of Archibald of Falnash, he seems to have been a regular supported of Martin of Braedlie on raids. He was mentioned in 1569 among a number of pledges to exchange for Martin of Braedlie when Martin was warded with the Regent Moray. He is probably the ‘Arches Hobbes’ whose 2 sons were among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. His name is recorded as ‘Hobbe Elliot of the Sheale’, but it is unclear where his lands were. He could be the same as Hob of the Staneshiel recorded in 1590 and 1595. Robert ‘Willie’s Hob’ (16th C.) presumably son of William. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, but separately from ‘Hobb Elliot of Ramsegill’ (the leader of this branch). He was recorded in 1587 in a bond by several Elliots, including his brother John, when he was imprisoned, probably for rieving; he had to be entered ‘as haill man and feir’ at Melrose. He was released in 1598, with Adam Tweedie obliged to make good for this theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ of Bowholm (d.1595/6) listed as ‘Hob of Bowholmes’ in a list of Borderers made in about the 1580s. He was listed along with ‘Will Colithis Hob’ under the area of ‘Welshaw’. In 1584/5 he was listed as ‘Hobb Bowholms dwellinge in Teydail’ along with other Elliots of Heuchhouse; he was singled out as the only member of the Heuchhouse branch that the leaders would not vouch for. He was recorded as ‘Hob Elliot of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including John of Bowholm. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersonfleld’, and also accused of another raid along with Archie (who was probably related). In the same year he is ‘Hob of Behomes’ who was accused of further rieving along with Martin’s Archie and William ‘Rydlie’. Also in 1590 he was accused along with his brother Dand, as well as ‘Willie’s Archie’ of Stitchillhill of stealing from Englishman Richard Turwall; he was recorded as ‘Robine Elliot Bohomes’. He is ‘Hobb Bohomes’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was ‘Hobe Elliott of the Bowholmes’ listed among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. In 1595/6 he was ‘Hob of Bowholme Scotsman’, servant of William (possibly the William in Hoscote who was delivered as a prisoner to England about this time), when sentenced to death for several crimes in England and ‘taken with the bloody hand’ by the Captain of Harbottle. He was executed at Hexham. Robert ‘Ill Rob’ or ‘Hob’ of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Yll Hob’ in 1580, when he was held in ward in Edinburgh Castle, with Alexander Erskine as his pledge. He was convicted for theft in 1580/1 along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He was recorded there as ‘Hob Elliot, callit Ill Rob of Ramsigill’. In 1580 he was produced at the Privy Council to prove that he was in ward with Erskine of Gogar. In 1581 Martin of Braedlie, Gavin’s Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were cautioned for his non-appearance, when he was stated at that time to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle; his brother ‘Gavin’s Jock’ of Ramsiegill was one of his cautioners. The same group were fined in 1582/3 for his non-appearance, as well as that of Jock’s Will, his brother; he is recorded there as ‘Ill Hob of Ramsygill’. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing first to speak for his branch, with Archie of the Hill, Rowie of Ramsigill and Will’s Hob also listed. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Hob Elliot of the Ramsygill’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond in 1587 for ‘Willie’s Hob’. Several other Elliots are also mentioned there, in particular ‘Gavin Elliot of Ramsigill’, who must have been a son or brother. He was also ‘Hob Elliot of Ramsigill’ who complained in the 1580s of an English raid upon his lands, stealing livestock and taking prisoners. Probably the same man is ‘yll’ Hobb Elwood’ recorded in 1591 as part of a group of Elliot and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He was presumably a son of Jock and probably related to the Robert recorded as ‘in Ramsygill’ in 1541. However, he was probably the ‘Hob Elliot, brother of Gawan’s Hob (probably a transcription error for Jock) of the Ramsygill’ who remained in prison in 1581 for the ‘haill gang of the Burnehedis’ after Jock’s Willie was released; this would make him son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. Robert ‘Jamie’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 and 1582/3 among the cautioners for Sim’s Rowie of the Park. His name was recorded as ‘Hobbe Elliot, called James Hobbe’, and he was listed along with Rob’s John, Sim’s Archie and others. His father was thus presumably James. He was also listed in 1581 along with other Elliots in a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haill gang of Park’. Robert (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. His name is given as ‘Rowy Elliott, callit Rowans Hobbe’, which is confusing, although it is later ‘Hobbe Elliot, callit Rowans Hobbe’. His brother Jamie, as well as ‘Rowanes Willis Ritchie’ are listed after him; they were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. Robert ‘Hobbe’ of Burnhead (16th C.) Laird of Burnhead in Liddesdale (and not the one just outside Hawick). In 1584 he was accused of being part of a foray into England. He is perhaps the earliest known resident of Burnhead, and may have had the tower built for him there. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Rob Elliott of the Burneheads called ‘Fydlers Hob’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; the reference to ‘Fydlers’ may refer to the nickname of his father. He was ‘Robin Elliott the laird of Borneheades’ in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. He may have been ‘Hob Elliot called Hob thearde’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; there he is ‘Hobb Elliott of the Burneheads’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was also ‘Hob Elliott called the laird of Burneheads’ when complained about for another 2 raids into England in 1595, this time along with Elliots of Fahnash, as well as ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, Armstrongs and Hendersons. Additionally in 1596 he was ‘Hobb Elwood larde of Burnehead’, when it was said that along with Scott of Buccleuch he met secretly with Englishmen, presumably to discuss helping each other with raids. It is unclear how he is related to other local Elliots, such as ‘Branche of the Burnhead’, also recorded in the 1580s and ‘Gawins Jok’ recorded in the 1590s. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Curst Hobbie’. Robert ‘Curst Hobbie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 (in a letter from the English wardens) among the Elliots of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Hobbie of Burnhead, recorded a year later. He is probably related to other Elliots of Burnhead, as well as Elliots of Ramsiegill and of the Hill. Robert ‘Rob o Thoirlishop’ (16th C.) mentioned in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published around 1594 (put probably compiled earlier). ‘Arthur fyre the Brays’ is listed beside him. He must have been related to the earlier ‘Hob’ of the same place, Thorlieshope. He could be the son of Robert of Unthank who is listed in a pedigree of the Elliots of Thorlieshope (in the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club transactions of 1889); he was known as ‘Bonny Hob’, warded in Lochdun in 1569 and died unmarried (although that could be the earlier Hob of Thorlieshope). In 1584 he, ‘Fire the Braes’ and one other ‘assure for the hole branch comeage of the howse of Thorlosope’. He was recorded as ‘Hob of Thorlesopp’ in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when accused of raiding into England. Additionally, along with Martin’s Gib and ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofeeld’ in 1590. In another case in 1590 he was ‘Robin Elliott of Thorlesopp’ when listed among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others accused of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England. He was listed in 1595 as ‘the officer alias the laird of Thorlesope’ among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England; the ‘officer’ designation suggests that he inherited the position of sergeant of Liddesdale from the earlier Robert of Thorlieshope. In a complaint about another raid in 1595 ‘young Robyn Elliot of Thorlesop’ was probably his son. There was a complaint against him (along with a Nixon and 2 Armstrongs) by the English in 1597; but Scott of Buccleuch stated that he was already in Hexham Jail. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Dodrig, son of Archibald. In 1583 it was stated that he and his father were ‘kindlie tennentis’ of ‘thrie quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertaining to the chaisplanrie of the paroch kirk of Caveris’ for 36 years previously, and had built a house there. This may have been the pele-house whose remains are on the east side of Gray Coat. He complained to the Privy Council that his servants there were attacked by Robert of Redheugh’s men on several occasions, trying to dispossess him of the lands. Robert of Redheugh was denounced as a rebel for not appearing to answer the charge.

Robert (d.1592) 6th Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of William, the 5th Laird. He is recorded in 1564 when he was granted all of his father’s property. In 1581 he is listed along with many Armstrongs and Elliots who complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts. In 1582 he took legal action against Dame Isabel Ker, Widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for the delivery of his father’s charters, specifically for Horsleyhill, ‘Dowiswod’, Westerhouses (called Little Hassendean), Newgibbing (called the Middle Mains of Hassendean), Caveling, Monkscroft and Hassendean. However, the order to deliver these seems never to have been followed, since he died without formally being served heir to these lands. He also had a dispute with Robert Scott of Hassendean over a merk land in ‘Dowiswod’; his widow Agnes Scott was served with the letter of removal in late 1592. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts she belonged, but there may have been a connection with Haining (given that their son William was later a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining). He married Agnes Scott, and their children included: Robert, who pre-deceased him; William, who succeeded and sold Horsleyhill to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; another Robert, who married an illegitimate daughter of Scott of Harden, and from whom the Elliots of Borthwickbrae are descended; and one more son, from whom the Elliots of Selkirk and Newhall probably derive (probably father of James, Burgess of Selkirk in 1635). The existence of these last 2 sons is suggested by Scott of Satchells, but no direct evidence has been uncovered. Robert ‘the Tailor’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1590 among a large number of Elliots and others who were accused by Ralph Hall of ‘Gersomfleid’ and others for taking Ralph and other prisoners, then ransoming them. His name was recorded as ‘Robine Elliot called the Taillour’. Also in 1590 he was ‘Hobbie the taylor’ when accused along with James of the Hill, Anthony of the Binks, James ‘Half Lug’ and 60 others, of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. There was an Armstrong of the same name at that time, and it is possible there was confusion and they are the same man (although whether an Armstrong or an Elliot would then be unclear). Robert ‘Hob of the Leyes’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1591 in a group of Elliots of the Hill and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. He was also ‘alias the troche’, although it is unclear what this nickname may have referred to (perhaps a trough). He may have been related to some of the others named in 1595 e.g. Robert of Thorlieshope, Rich of the Lewlandes’ or William, son of John of Heuchhouse. Robert ‘Hob’ of Staneshiel (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’ in 1590. Hob Elliott of Staneshiel, John of Heuchhouse and Davie ‘the Carlin’ were also named in the same accusation. He was further accused in 1590 by William Hall of ‘Gersomffeld’ of riving at ‘Steward sheile’, along with Quentin’s Airchie Crozier and others. He was also recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as ‘Hob Ellott of the Staneshale alias bane pryck’. He probably lived at Staneshiel in Liddesdale, and the meaning of his nickname is unclear (but probably not complimentary). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. His name was recorded as ‘Hob Elliott alias kyll of the spade’, although it is unclear what his nickname meant. He was listed along with John of Burnhead, who may have been related. Robert (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert, 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and Agnes Scott. According to Scott of Satchells (who confusingly refers to him as William) he became a servant to Scott of Harden (presumably ‘Auld Wat’) and married Scott’s illegitimate daughter (whose name is not recorded). He was recorded as a servant to Scott of Harden in a bond dated 1620. He is the progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae, Oakwood Mill and Wolflee. His only known child was Robert, who was ‘in Borthwickshies’. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) son of Jock of Burngrains. He was listed (along with this brother Will) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Langraw’ in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Gledstaines’ in 1610 when he denounced his possession of this part of Feu-Rule when he was not accepted as a ‘kindly tenant’ by his superior, Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. This could have been the land later called ‘Little Gledstains’. Robert of Dinlabyre (b.c.1580) son of William of Braodlie and Dinlabyre. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Bucquech and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was said to be about 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. In 1611 he was denounced as a rebel, along with his brother Gavin and several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; his name is transcribed there as being ‘of Drumlybye’. He is recorded as ‘Robene Ellote of Dunlabyre’ in 1612 when he failed to appear to serve on the jury for the case of Jock Elliot dying while in custody in Hawick. In 1613 the King granted him all the lands forfeited by his father in 1607. In 1623 he served as cautioner for Robbie Armstrong in ‘Greinay’ and his brother John. Probably the same ‘Robert Elliot of Dinlabyre’ is recorded in 1632 in a rental roll of Kelso Abbey when he possessed the lands of ‘Hoillis’ in Liddesdale, as well as Dinlabyre. His sons probably included William of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1693) and John in Unthank. Robert of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. His brother Francis was also listed. He was also recorded among those fined in 1612 for failing to appear to sit on the jury when the Hawick authorities were accused of the murder of a man who died in the steeple of St. Mary’s. His brother Francis was also listed. Robert (d.bef. 1637) eldest son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was served heir to his mother in 1621 and was in turn succeeded by his brother Francis. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Ladd, in Quhythauch’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and a daughter of Scott of Harden, he was grandson of Robert, the 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and brother of William, the last Elliot Laird there. He is referred to as being ‘in Borthwickshiels’, and so must have been tenant of that farm. He married a Haitlie from Mellerstain and had 2 children: Thomas (d.1686), who succeeded him; and William (1617-85), who became minister in Yarrow. He is recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650, with his wife being ‘Euphemia Hastie’ and their son Thomas also listed. Robert ‘Hab’ (17th C.) possessor of the lands of ‘Baggat’ (i.e. Bygate) in Liddesdale in 1632. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1645), J.P., son of William, he was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was recorded along with his father (and more than 170 others) in a ‘respite’ of 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and his followers for the killing of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he was listed among Elliots and others accused by the Lord of Gildland for raids into England; he was explicitly listed with ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, as well as his brother Archibald and uncle Gilbert. In 1598 he was recorded as son of William of Falnash when he was witness to a document for the Regality of Meireose. He is probably the Robert ‘younger of Fallinesche’ who was cautioner for Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton in 1606. In 1610 he was cautioned for James Irving of Cleuchhead and in 1611 for Gavin ‘of Cokek’. In 1618 his father is referred to as ‘William called of Falnash in Braidley’, suggesting Falnash had already been passed to him. He rebuilt the house at Falnash around 1620, probably replacing the tower with a farmhouse; a stone built into the present house carries the date 1620 and the initials ‘R.E.’ and ‘M.S.’. The family also owned land in Wilton Parish. In 1623 he sold Arkleton to Adam Cunningham, the reason not being known, but Scott of Satchells wrote ‘By Maxwell’s rage out of their hands it got, And was possess’d by Cunningham and Scott’. In 1624 he purchased Hislop and Langhaugh in the Barony of Hawick. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. Also in 1628 he had a crown charter for the lands of Philhope and the wardship of Grizell Elliot, heiress of Philhope (to whom he would marry his son John). He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1634. He married Marion Scott (from an unknown branch of the Scotts, but perhaps the Scotts of Harden). They had 7 children: William, who married a Maxwell of Cowhill, but died before his father; Archibald, who succeeded; John, who married Grizel Elliot of Philhope and held the lands of Broadlee; Gavin of Caerlenrig, who married Janet Elliot and was father of Ninian; Gilbert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637; Robert, who also became a merchant’s apprentice in 1646; and Jean, who married Adam Carleill of Byrdkirk. Robert (d.1663) 4th son of William of the Binks and brother of Simon. He was called ‘of the Binks’. In 1630 he was charged as ‘ane commoun and notorious theefe’ and fled to Flanders. It is described in the Register of the Privy Seal that ‘he is returned again and hes begun his old accustomed trade of theft’, stealing 6 cattle from Englishman Sir Arthur Gray. He was convicted of theft and tried in Jedburgh, but the Provost there released him on a bond whereupon he fled. In 1631 he turned up in Carlisle jail, from where the Sheriff of Roxburghshire requested his transfer. He had a son called Simon, who was a minor when he died. Robert ‘Hob’ (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called of Thor-bishop’ (presumably Thorlishope) in a 1642 list of many Borderers who were to be captured and tried for theft and other crimes. In about 1648 he was recorded as Robert ‘of Thorlishope’ on a list of ‘mostroopers’ (i.e. thieves). He may be the ‘young Robyn Elliott of Thorlesop’ recorded in 1595. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falsnash. In 1646 he was apprenticed to Edinburgh merchant Archibald Graham. apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) listed as a fugitive in 1637. He was also recorded as ‘sone to Hobbeis Chrystie’ listed among fugitives of the Border in 1642. It may be that he was listed twice, since Robert ‘called Chrysteis Hob’ also appears. He was probably son of the Christopher who was son of Robert of Braidie; he was thus a great-grandson of Martin of Braidie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Henderson and their children included: John (b.1646); William (b.1650); Bessie (b.1652); and Janet (b.1655). Robert of Black Tarras (d.bef. 1665) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and younger brother of the William, Laird of Harwood. He was granted the lands of Black Tarras by his father. After the Restoration both he and his brother William were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Riddell ‘portioner’ of Bewlie. In his wedding contract he is described as ‘in Sauchetrie’ and was infested in the lands of Black Tarras. His children were: Simon of Black Tarras; Francis; and William of Cooms (d.1714), who married Helen Elliot of Thorlishope. He was still alive in 1663, when referred to as ‘of Ludgegill indweller in Sauchtrees, Liddesdale’. By 1665 his wife was a widow. Robert of Reidheugh and Larriston (c.1583–c.1644) 17th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was the last of the Elliots of Redheugh in the direct male line. He was still a minor when his father died, with his guardian being his uncle William of Hartsgarth and when he was 14 the additional trustees appointed were William of Falsnash, John of Copshaw and his mother’s brothers, John and Andrew Hamilton of St. John’s Chapel. At the time when Francis, Earl of Bothwell forfeited his lands, he was in possession of Redheugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Hartsgarth, Leafuld, Corrie’s Shiel, Langhaugh, Leaugh and Demainholm. He is probably the Robert who was the first Elliot name signed on the bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1597 he (along with William of Hartsgarth and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen, and furthermore they offered security for the actions of their followers. In 1599 he, along with Martin Elliot (son of ‘Mertin’s Sym’), made an agreement to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. They also promised to the Warden (Sir Walter Scott) to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. There was also a pledge made in his name (and others) in 1599 following the murder of several Englishmen (who had been waiting in hiding to ambush the Scots) near Bewcastle. In about 1600 he was ordered to pay £ for theft of horses by Will of Fiddleton. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disorders of the Bourdours’. He escaped the convictions and executions that came down on the men of Liddesdale around 1606; it is said that this may have been due to the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray of Lochmaben. In 1607 he brought an action against George Henderson, tenant of Winnington, accusing him of cutting down trees on his land at Birkwood. In 1608 he (and 14 other lairds) were removed from their lands by the Privy Council for being ‘ringleaders suspected either of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he was sent along with Walter Scott of Goldielands to Cupar in Fife. In 1608 he was charged by Scott of Buccleuch to remove from all lands in Liddesdale, but this was not followed through with; however, there was a decree of removal in 1612, after the death of the old Laird of Buccleuch. He was then denounced as a rebel, but through the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray he obtained a new agreement with Buccleuch over these lands in 1613; this included Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope, ‘Greenholles’, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Leahaugh, ‘Carriescheill’ and ‘Downmane’. In 1615 Buccleuch accused him of adding the names of 3 properties to the charter, and he went to London to plead with Scott of Buccleuch. A court case was started in 1617, and he was unable to produce the charter, which led to a further order of removal. However, Robert was served heir to his father in 1619, presumably part of the ongoing legal proceedings. His main dwelling around that time was at Demainholm. There were also attempts to remove his tenants; William Scott of Newark complained that his tenants at Foulshiels were harried by a group of Elliots. Over the next few years he failed to collect any rent on his lands, incurred debts and many of the old Elliot lands in Teviotdale were lost. In 1622 he and his brother William sold the lands of Winnington Rig to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1622 and 1623 he served as cautioner for Rowie Crozier from Hartsgarth. He was probably the ‘Robert Elliot of Reidheuch, in Larestoun’ who was removed as a tenant of Scott of Buccleuch in 1624. His brother-in-law John Murray (Earl of Annandale) apologised to Scott of Buccleuch in 1624 for a dispute over lands with Buccleuch and for stealing from Englishmen. Also in 1624 he was accused of conspiring to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, the 3 would-be assassins (all Elliots) apparently confessing their part. He was at that time prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth related to debts. He was also accused of being involved in stealing cattle from Cuthbert Heron, an Englishman; he seems to have escaped punishment, although his servant Adam Usher was hung for that crime. Despite being induced to confess to the crimes, pleas by Francis Hamilton and the Earl of Annandale resulted in Scott of Buccleuch asking for the trial to be postponed. Within a short period of the King’s death in 1625 he received a pardon for the theft and other crimes, although it is unclear when he was released from confinement. His wife petitioned the Privy Council because of poverty during his imprisonment. It seems that when his daughter and heiress was married in 1637 he still held his Liddesdale lands, including the 3 farms that had been in dispute, namely ‘Blaikhope’, ‘Greenholles’ and Langhaugh. He married first a sister of John Murray (later Earl of Annandale) and secondly (after 1618) Lady Jean Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell and Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had no children with his first wife, and with his second had no sons, but 2 daughters: Margaret, (or Mary) his heir, who in 1637 married James Elliott (6th son of Gilbert of Stobs); and Esther (d.1664), who married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton, and died in Inverness. He gave all his lands to his daughter Margaret and her husband James, except Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat, which were given to Esther and her husband, and he retained Larriston, Blakehope and Greenholm ‘in liferent’ for himself. The year of his death is quite uncertain, but he probably died in the period 1666–73, with his estate heavily encumbered by debt. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet ‘Red’ (i.e. Reid). Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses John Elliot (probably related to him) and Thomas Jackson. Robert of Braidlie (17th C.) nephew of Simon in Philhope. In 1653 he was served heir to Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded in several accounts in Selkirk in the 1660s, e.g. one for a Common Riding dinner. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.c.1645) younger son of Archibald of Fulnash, he was christened in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) referred to as ‘Robert Elliot, called of the Maynes’ in 1659 when he witnessed a document relating to lands of Hobkirk Parish for William Elliot of Harwood. Robert of Larriston (d.bef. 1695) eldest son of James Elliott, and Margaret, heiress of Redheugh. He was thus a grandson of the last Elliot of Redheugh as well as being grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ of Stobs. He took the ‘Elliot’ spelling after inheriting the Liddesdale lands through his mother. He was probably the Robert of Larriston whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1334 in 1643. He may have been the ‘younger of Lristoun’ who was an executor for William Elliot of Binks in the 1660s and when appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was recorded paying the land tax (on £1334) in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending moststroopers). He was served heir to his grandfather Robert of Redheugh in 1673, inheriting these lands through his mother. However, the Teviotdale lands had already been sold off and the Liddesdale lands were heavily encumbered by debt. Hence in 1675 he was forced to put Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and Greenholm into ‘wadsett’ with John Elliot of Tholriethope and in 1677 sold outright the land of Demainholm to John Elliot ‘in Mainholm’. In 1678 he still paid the land tax on £1934 in Castleton Parish. In 1685 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ from the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch as heir to all the lands of his grandfather, Robert of Redheugh. About 1688 he was forced to sell most of his lands after getting into financial difficulties, his creditors obtaining a ‘decree of adjudication’. He managed to hold onto Over and Nether Larriston only. In 1667 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John Maxwell of Cowhill, Dumfriesshire, and she had one son with him, but died before 1675. He later married Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig (probably Thomas). His children were: Robert, who succeeded to Larriston; Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick; William, who was apprenticed to a barber in 1699; and Janet, who married Robert Gledstains of that Ilk and secondly John Scott of Gorrenberry. His testament is recorded in 1688, but he may have died after that. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as owner of part of Raperlaw called ‘Wyliespeel’, or Willie’s Peel. This was valued at £104, and corresponded to William Turnbull’s lands in Raperlaw in 1643. In another version of the 1678 records he is transcribed as ‘Richard’ and ‘in williespeil’. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Blackhall’ in 1680 when he was indicted at the Justiciary Commission in Jedburgh for ‘reset of theft’. He probably lived in Ewesdale. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Stobs’ in 1684 when he was on a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopaliansm. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Giddenscleuch in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) miller at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the slightly later Robert. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Stitchellhill in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert of Caerlenrig (1655–98) 2nd son of Gavin. He was also known as Robert ‘of Rig’. He paid tax on 2 hearths at Caerlenrig in 1694, and ‘his herd’ is also listed. He firstly married Agnes, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton (as recorded in the will of Agnes’ brother George Langlands in 1690); she was related to his brother Francis of Fenwick’s wife Rachel Langlands. He secondly married Mary Elliot, who died in 1727, aged 80. His sons were Robert (b.1690s) of Caerlenrig and John. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married John Elliot of Castlehope and Bilhope. His testament is recorded in 1699, when he was ‘of Carlenrickrig’. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.bef. 1725) elder son of Gavin Elliot of Midlem Mill and Grange, and probably grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gafters’. His father settled the lands of Midlem Mill on him in 1653. He paid the land tax on £36 in Cavers Parish in 1678; it is unclear what lands these were, but they were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by the late 18th century and listed in Castleton Parish in 1788. Also in 1678 he also paid tax on about £400 for Midlem Mill and other lands in Bowden Parish. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690, and it appears that he acted as factor to Elliot of Minto. He is recorded in 1693 as witness to a bond between Elliot of Harwood and Henry Douglas, writer in Edinburgh. In 1694 he was cautioner to a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and John Kerr of Cavers. He also witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliot of Stanedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood, as well as other bonds for the Elliots of Harwood about the same time. He was described as ‘sheriff in that part of the sheriffdom of Roxburgh’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1695 he acquired the lands of ‘Clarelaw, called Langsyde’ and North Prieston, which he bought from John Elliot of Langsyde. He added Whitmuir in 1702. He may have acted as factor for Gideon Scott of Highchester in the period 1695–99. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. He also had a ‘tack’ for the lands of Stanedge the discharge of which is recorded in 1700. He was factor for his younger brother Sir Gilbert of Headshaw (and Minto) from 1706: it is said that when he was introduced as the brother of Sir Gilbert, he would say ‘na, na, Gibbie’s my brother’. He rented Easter and Wester Hassendean from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1720. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1678 and had 9 children: Gilbert (d.1709); Robert (d.1753), who succeeded to Midlem Mill; Margaret (c.1680–1768), who married Henry Elliot of Lodgegill; Marion, who married Andrew Haliburton of Newmains; Anny, who married Robert Paterson of Drygrange; Elizabeth, who married lawyer John Elliot.
Elliot and possibly another Paterson of Drygrange; Helen (or ‘Nelly’), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee; Magdalen (1694/4–1773), who married John Pasley of Craig; and a ‘natural daughter’ Elizabeth, who married Richard Paterson, portioner of Midlem. Robert of Penchriser (17th C.) involved in a court case in the 1690s. Along with William of Lymiecleuch he failed to pay a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; when they failed to show up in court the farms went to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was married to Marion Culbertson and in 1694 their son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Halliwell and this was one of the earliest entries in the existing records for Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert in Galalaw had a son Alexander baptised in Wilton in 1704; William Henderson and James Janieson were witnesses. Probably the same Robert was described as servant to Adam Scott of Galalaw when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Wilton in 1709. Esther (b.1706), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his child. Robert of Larriston (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert. His father had sold the family’s lands in 1688 after being declared bankrupt. In 1689 his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill, gave him the lands of ‘Cullshangan’ in the Parish of Crossmichael and the half merkland of Kirkland of Kirkpatrick Irongray. His grandmother further reduced her dower rights, and with this help from his grandparents he was able to in 1695 to buy back (or perhaps redeem the ‘wadsett’ on) the lands of Over and Nether Larriston (including the mill, mill lands and Larriston Rig) from Christopher Irving of Binks. In 1696 he reinstated his grandmother’s 500 merks dower rights from the rents of Larriston. However, after his grandmother died in 1697 he gave a wadsett for the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead to John of Thorleshope and his son John. He formally succeeded his father as heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston in 1712. However, he continued to have financial difficulties and in 1719 he sold outright the last of the family’s local possessions to John Oliver of Dinlabyre, these being Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig. He then moved to Newcastle, but later returned to Liddesdale, taking up residence in a cottage on the farm of Redheugh, where he died. He married Mary Applebie (or Appleby), and possibly had a 2nd wife. His children included: Robert (d.1752), a clerk in London, who died unmarried; James, farmer at Whitlaw, who died unmarried; Jean; another daughter, probably Helen (‘Nelly’), who married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater in 1768; and Gilbert, who married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Nielton, and was father of Maj.-Gen. William. Robert of Dinlabyre (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of Dinlabyre. He was recorded as ‘younger’ in 1697 when he married Helen, eldest daughter of Arthur Forrester of Kingfield. In about 1698 he sold Dinlabyre to John Oliver. Nothing else is known about him. Robert (1665/6–1757) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Jean ‘Ruan’, who died in 1743, aged 73. Their children included William, merchant in Castleton, who died in 1741. They are buried at Castle- ton. William, son of John and Hannah Grieve, is also mentioned on the gravestone, and so presumably related. Robert (17th/18th C.) probably resident at Acerknowe. He married Mary Hislop in Cavers Parish in 1703. He is likely to be the father of William, born to a Robert in Cavers in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Brydon in Hawick in 1706. He was probably the Robert whose daughter Bessie was born in Wilton in 1709. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1709 and 1721. He also witnessed one in 1716 for Robert Turnbull and Margaret Elliot (who may have been related to him). He married Jean Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1710. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Mary (b.1712); Agnes (b.1714); Jean (b.1717); Anna (b.1719); and Margaret (b.1720). The witnesses in 1714 were ‘officer’ William Douglas and John Tudhope and in 1717 were Bailie Walter Elliot and weaver Robert Turnbull. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer in Powisgol. In 1707 he was ‘taken upon tryall as precenter’ in Castleton Parish. Robert of Teindside (17th/18th C.) younger son of Simon of Swinside. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Tyneside’, although his lands were certainly Teindside in Teviotdale and not in England. His brother Gideon owned Harwood-on-Teviot and in 1724 he sold Teindside to Gideon. In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Rev. John Simpson of Morebattle. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Hummelknowes or Hummelknowes Mill when his children were baptised. They were: James (b.1720); William (b.1732); Robert (b.1735); and Isabel (b.1737). He may be the Robert who married Jane Elliot in 1717 or the Robert who married Margaret Douglas in Cavers and Kirkton in 1719. Robert

(17th/18th C.) resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1727); and Bessie (b.1729). Robert (d.1752) son of the last Robert of Larriston. His brother James farmed at Whitlaw, and his sister (or perhaps other near relative) Helen married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater. He went to London in 1712 was a clerk in the office of Sir John Bernard. He became a senior clerk in the Pay Office, Great Court Yard, St. James's, London. He lived in the Parish of St. Peters, Cornhill, London. He loaned money to the Eliotts of Stobs (his distant relations). He died unmarried. He left some silver plate, gold rings, snuff-boxes and a portrait of Lord Heathfield. Robert 3rd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1753), oldest surviving son of Robert, 2nd Laird. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale from about 1723–27 (although complaints about his conduct are recorded in letters of the 1740s), with Robert Scott of Burnhead taking over in 1728. In 1728 he took over as Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead from Gideon Scott of Falmash, serving until 1741. During this period he lived at Langholm Castle, Broadhaugh and Branxholme. He must also have lived at Midlem Mill for some of that period and remodelled the house, since a stone built into the mill is inscribed ‘R.E. 1730 K.E.’ In 1734 there was a formal inquiry by the Bailies and Council ‘how he came to take down the Bailies’ seat in the kirk and by whose allowance’, suggesting some disagreement over the authority of the Patron versus the Burgh. In 1735 he rented part of the farm of Branxholme Mains. He was one of the local lairds asked to decide on the position of the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick in 1739. In 1740 a baptism in Hawick was witnessed by ‘Gardiner to Midlamiln at Branxome’, showing that he was living at Branxholme at that time. He leased the farms of Priesthaugh and Peelbrae from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748 (and his widow paid in 1753). In 1719 in Wilton Parish he married Katherine (b.c.1701), only child of Adam Elliot of ‘Tyndeside’ (i.e. Teindside) and grand-daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton. They had 14 children: Robert (b.1719), who must have died young; Elizabeth (b.1721), who married Simon Haliburton of Howcleuch, minister at Castleton and Ashkirk; Ann and Margaret (b.1722), who were unmarried and lived at Lichfield Street in London; Gilbert (b.1724), died in infancy and buried in Ewes Kirkyard; Gavin (b.1727), 4th and last Laird of Midlem Mill, selling the estate to Prof. George Stewart and moving to London; Henry (b.1729), baptised in Cavers; Robert (b.1730), also baptised in Cavers, served in the Royal Navy; Andrew (d.1779), a Major in the Marines, who died in Rhode Island, U.S.A.; Adam (d.1752) a baker who died in Lisbon; Maisy, who lived in Berwick with her mother; Helen (d.1798), who married James Wilkie, merchant in Marseilles; Jean (b.1738), who was christened in Hawick and lived with her mother in Berwick; and another child who died young. He is buried at Bowden. When he died the estate was in debt and was sold off 3 years later by his trustees. His widow and unmarried daughters then moved to Berwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was listed as ‘Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick’ in the baptism records of some of his children. He was ‘miller’ in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson (recordly incorrectly as ‘Robert Miller’ in one version). He was ‘Taxman’ in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Howison. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Rachel (b.1718); Jean (b.1722); Margaret (b.1724); Beatrix (b.1727); and Janet (b.1728). The witnesses in 1718 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Baille William Laing. He was probably son of Walter, who was listed as miller in the 1710s. He was also described as ‘tacksman of mill and lands of Hawick’ in 1722 when he rented Gingenwells and Dinlees (on the Hermitage Water) from the Buccleuch estates. He was probably the Robert listed as ‘Tacksman’ in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Tudhope. Robert of Caerlenrig (1694–1777), eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig, his mother probably being Agnes Langlands. The dates of his birth and death are given elsewhere as (1697–1767), but those on the tombstone in Teviothead are probably correct. He is described as ‘of Carlenrickrig’ and ‘of Rig’ in different records. In 1718 his ‘brother German’ John, ‘wigg-maker in Hawick’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. In 1739 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick Parish for tenant Robert Whutson and for John Scott at Dryden. Due to ‘embarrassed circumstances’ he was forced to sell Caerlenrig and then farmed at Winningtonrig. He is among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752), being listed at ‘Winnington-bridge’. In 1721 in Roberton he married Christian (b.1697–1767), daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae; she was sister of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae at the time of their marriage. Their children were baptised in Cavers Parish. They had 6 sons: Robert (1722–1770), writer in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; William (1724–97), farmer at Wintonningrig; the male children of Margaret Anderson; John (1725–1801), who married Margaret Curle; Thomas (1731–1808), who became minister of Cavers; and Francis, ‘Frank’ (1733–79), skinner in Hawick, also died unmarried. Another son, Gideon, may have died young. They also had 4 daughters: Mary (b.1727), who married William Grieve, farmer at Southfield; Isobel (b.1729), who married a Kerr; Agnes (b.1729), twin of Isobel, who apparently did not survive; Margaret (b.1735), who married George Pott, the purchaser of Caerlenrig; and Christian (b.1738), who married James Oliver in 1765. He and his son William were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his daughter Mary in 1764. He and his wife both died at Wintonningrig. Robert of Binks (1702–66) eldest surviving son of John of Binks. He was tenant farmer in Burnmouth. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Robson (c.1722–93), who was from Boghall. Their children were: John (b.1754), who succeeded; Robert (b.1756), who died young; Jean (1758–87), who married John Elliot of Whitehaugh; Christian (1761–82); and Catherine, who died unmarried. His daughter Jean was probably the ‘Miss Jean Elliot, Burnmouth’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is buried in Castleton Kirkyard.

Robert (1720/1–82) youngest son of William, Laird of Harwood. He joined the army as an Ensign in the 1st Regiment of Foot in 1738 and was a Lieutenant on half-pay in Sir William Pepperell’s Regiment of Foot by 1757. Although commonly referred to as ‘Captain’, he appears never to have held that rank. In 1763 he had a bond with his brother Henry for the lands of Ferneilees and a sasine in 1763 from William Elliot of Tarras for Blakehope, Lodgegill and other lands. He was also tenant at Stonedge in the late 1700s when it was owned by Robert Lisle. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1766 he married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Pringle of Clifton, and she died in 1820, aged 88. They had 8 children: the eldest son, William (b.1766), succeeded to Harwood after the death of his uncle Henry; Robert (b.1767), married Anne Hilly of Portsmouth and was a Vice-Admiral in the Royal Navy; Pringle (c.1768–88) was apprenticed to a surgeon; Henry (1769–1841) married Janet, 2nd daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh and attained the rank of Major-General in the Army; Thomas (b.1771) farmed at Kirndean and married Helen, daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel; Margaret (b.1773), the only daughter, married Peter Brown of Rawflat; Andrew (1775–1810), was a Captain in the 70th Regiment and died unmarried at St. Thomas, Virginia Islands; and Mark (1776–1854), who was a tenant farmer in Lanton. He died at Hobsburn.

Robert of Fenwick (18th C.) son of Francis and Rachel Langlands. He may be the Laird of Fenwick recorded paying a year’s rent for the weight-house in Hawick in 1729. Along with Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) he leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates in 1733. In 1737 he and Robert Harrison, William Ogilvie of Hoscote and lawyer Thomas Watson entered into a partnership to establish a stillhouse and brewhouse in Hawick. He is recorded in 1738 receiving the ‘tack’ from the Buccleuch Estates of a stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slidridge, and of ground adjacent; also a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick’. This may be the first record of brewing and distilling near Hawick: it may refer to the lands of ‘Whusky Hooses’ and/or the ‘Brewery Haugh’ on Slitrig Crescent. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. He became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1753. About 1756 he sold Easter Highchesteers and Lairhope to Henry Scott, Duke of Buccleuch; he may have died shortly afterwards, since there are other documents between the Duke of Buccleuch and his trustees in 1756–8. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He firstly married Jean Scott (from an unknown branch of that family), this probably being the irregular marriage of Robert ‘eldest lawful son to Francis’ to Jean Scott in Carlisle in 1716 that was a matter brought before the Hawick Parish Session in 1717; he must have been fairly young at the time, suggesting this was an elopement or rushed marriage of some kind. He secondly married Katherine (b.1697), daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton; she had previously married David Laing of Westerkirk and Charles Telfer minister of Hawick. It is said that his only child was Gavin, who was the last Elliot of Fenwick; however, ‘James Elliot, Fenwick’, whose daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1758 was probably another son. Robert ‘Hobie’ (18th C.) resident of a cottage called Hassy Cleugh on Stonedge farm. A story is told (recounted by Walter Deans) of how he went to the blacksmith’s at Unthank to get a ‘sling’ (perhaps for a sled), but the smith was busy, and by the time it was his turn he had forgotten what he came for. Eventually he decided ‘it was time for him to gang hame, as he had a ferr road ta gang’ and the smith said ‘Ay Hobbie, it’s a lang sling, that’s the verra thing a’ wanted made, a gude sling, darsay am donnert’. Robert (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Brugh. He married Elizabeth Scott, who came from Doorpool. He had one known child, Adam, who lived in Hawick and was father of James of Goldielands, schoolmaster at Wilton. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Sundhope farm in the middle of the 1700s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Janet Scott, who was also from there. Their children included: Thomas (b.1741); and Mary (b.1743). Jean (b.1737) and Robert (b.1739), born in Langholm Parish, may also have been their children. Robert of Redheugh (1705–93) 2nd son of William in Braidlie and Whitaugh. His father purchased Redheugh for him around 1730, thus regaining the home of his ancestors. He was tenant in Cleughhead in 1744 when he had a charter of confirmation for Redheugh in liferent for himself and in fee for his son William. In 1778 he was also tenant in Foulshiels, Kershope and Shaws. In 1786, for reasons unknown, he disinherited his eldest son William in favour of his 2nd son John. He was recorded as Robert of Redheugh on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. His lands of Reidheugh were valued at £96 11s in 1788. He married Margaret Beattie (d.1767). They had at least 3 children: William, tenant in Hillhouse, who married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley; John of Redheugh (1741–1809), farmer in Cleughhead and Foulshiels, who married Margaret Russell; and Thomas (1745–1800), who married Mary Thomson. Both he and his wife are buried in Castleton Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1715) eldest surviving son of William of Thorthieshope and Overton. He succeeded his father in 1744 and immediately sold Thorthieshope. He is probably the Robert who paid tax at Overton (in Oxnam Parish) in 1748 and also the Robert of Overton recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may then have moved to London. He married Mary Henderson, who died at the age of 25. He also married a second time. His children included: Cassandra, who was 2nd wife of Dr. William of Arkleton; Margaret (1751/2–1842), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Rebecca (b.1753), who died in infancy. Robert (1717/8–1816) resident of Roxburghshire, whose death is recorded at the age of 98. The report states that ‘a short period previous to his death, he told Mr John Scott, meal-dealer, Hawick, that about 70 years ago he was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennyworth of tobacco – all of which he got for the said shilling’. Robert (1722–79) lived at Sorbie in Ewes Parish. He married Janet Wilson (1726–85) and their children included: William (1753–85), who married Jean Davidson; Jean (b.1756); Margaret (b.1758); Walter (b.1764); John (d.1792); and Mary (1778–88). He and his wife are buried at Ewes Churchyard. Robert (1722/3–70) eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a writer in Edinburgh and died unmarried. He could be the Robert, writer in Edinburgh, who acted as Proctor for Hawick during the 1767 perambulation of the Common, undertaken as part of the case brought by the Duke of Buccleuch for its division. Robert (1724/5–70) 2nd son of John in Whitaugh. He was tenant farmer at Hermitage and elsewhere from about 1748, farming an area of perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 acres, on the eastern side of the Hermitage Water, including Braidlie, Gorrenberry, Hermitage and Millburnholm. It is said that he was a well organised farm manager, who had little help from the Buccleuch Estates. He married Janet Scott from Greenwood. Their children were: John (1750–1821), tenant in Hermitage, and also farmer at other farms, who married Christian Grieve and then Margaret Scott from Skelfhill; Walter (1754–97), who farmed Millburnholm and married Helen Crozier from Brighouse; William (1759–1829) in Millburnholm, who married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Fahnash; Jean (b.1760), who married William Sharp of Hartsgarth; Robert (b.1760) tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge, who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill; and Philip (b.1862), merchant in America. There are meticulous farm records of his, which survive. Robert (d.1777) Hawick resident. The death of his wife Betty Scott is recorded in 1777. Robert (1725–57) 2nd son of the 2nd Sir Gilbert of Minto. He was a Captain in the Royals. He died suddenly at the home of his brother Sir Gilbert. Robert (b.1730) younger son to Robert of Midlem Mill, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1744 he was apprenticed as a merchant to John Haliburton of Howcleuch (who was surely related to Rev. Simon Haliburton who married his sister Elizabeth). He later joined the Navy, being an ensign in the Marines. He is also said to have been a clerk on H.M.S. Royal George. He married, but nothing else is known about him. Robert (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was described as being ‘in Know’, which is probably Priesthill Know in Liddesdale. He married Helen Grieve and their children included: Robert in Know, who married Marion Elliot; and Ninian in Priesthill. Robert (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh, who was legal agent for the town, particularly during the protracted case involving the division of the Common. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. It is possible he is the same as the descendant of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. Robert (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1757 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert was resident at Woodburn in Roberton Parish in 1763 and 1767 when his children Helen and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1750 or the Robert who married Margaret Rieve in Roberton in 1754. Isobel (b.1760) may also have been his child. Robert (d.1799) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd. He was probably son of Adam, older brother of schoolmaster James (later of Goldielands), and may also have been brother of shoemaker Adam. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the shoemaker Robert who in 1787 witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland. In 1761 in Hawick Parish he married Isobel Scott, who died in 1796. His children included: Walter (b.1762), who carried on his business; James (b.1765), whose wife may have died in 1835; Janet (b.1767); and John (b.1771). The witnesses in 1765 were carrier James Wilson and weaver John Wilson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He could be the son of Hector born there in 1738. His children included: Hector (b.1765), probably father of Robert (b.1792); Isobel (b.1767); Jean (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1771). He is surely related to the Hector whose children were born in Southdean Parish in the 1750s. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Heap in Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Russell and their children included: Isabel (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); Betty (b.1779); and Isobel (again, b.1785). Robert (18th C.) resident at Parkhill Wester in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. There are several other children born in Roberton around that time who could also be his. Robert (18th C.) son of Robert in Know, this probably being Priesthill Know in Castleton Parish. He married Marion Elliot and died without issue. Robert (b.c.1745) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Amsterdam. He purchased the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso. He died without issue and left Pinnaclehill to his niece Charlotte. Robert (1746–1817) tenant at Powisholm and other places in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was son of William in Southdeanrig. He married Wilhelmina Hislop (1763–1836). Their children included: Christian (b.1788); Margaret (1790–95); Ann (b.1793); Robert (b.1796), who also farmed at Powisholm; John (b.1797), who farmed at Middleholm; James (b.1798); Margaret (b.1799); and William (b.1802), who was farmer at Harden in Castleton Parish. Robert (c.1752–1827) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot (c.1755–1828) and their children included: Ann (b.1783); Elizabeth (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); and Robert (1788–1812), who was a teacher. Rev. Robert (1755–1824) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was Rector of Wheldrake Church in Yorkshire. In 1779 he was given livery of a set of small pieces of land formerly called Minto Townhead, consisting of: South Croft; North Croft; Quicksands Park; Notman’s Shot; Langlands; Temple Croft; Howden; Whitfield; West South Croft; Minto Town; and the green of Minto. These were valued at £461 1s 10d, enough to put him over the required minimum of £400 to be on the roll. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot’ among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was still listed as liferenter of lands in Minto Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1788 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. Edmund Garforth of Askham. They had 5 children: Eleanor Maria Anne, who married Dr. James Grant of Jedburgh; Isabella Lucy, who married Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William Elliott, the 6th Baronet of Stobs; Agnes, who died unmarried; Robert, who was a Captain in the Royal Navy; and Edward Eden, Accountant General in Bombay. Robert (c.1759–1844) cattle dealer in Newcastle. He may be the son of William who was born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. In 1841 he was living at about 10 Langholm Street, with Helen and Mary, who were probably his daughters. He is probably the Robert who married Mary Elliot (c.1768–1840) in Castleton and whose children included Isabell (1799–1804); Mary (1804–54); and Robina (1816–42). Robert (c.1760–1824) son of Robert, who farmed at Hermitage. He was tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. He married Mary Scott (c.1776–1843) from Skelfhill and their children were Robert (1809–44) and James (1813–90), who were both tenants at Galalaw. Capt. Robert (1761–1840) younger son of William of Whithaugh, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was in the Merchant Navy, serving as Captain of the ‘Hope’, which operated between Calcatta and Canton. He farmed at Glencartholm, near Canonbie. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Grieg (c.1779–1856). Robert (b.1762) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He emigrated to America, settling in Quebec, where he married Elizabeth Louise Josephite Savoie in 1788. Their children included: Andre (b.1788); Marie-Louise Allet (b.1790); Simon (1793–1865), who married Rebecca Armstrong and was great-grandfather of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau; Joseph (b.1795); Marie (b.1796); Charlotte (b.1798), who probably died young; Helene Allet (b.1802), also died young; Margaritte (b.1805); twins Helene and Charlotte (b.1807); and Sara-Marie (b.1810). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roan in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He died in Trois-Rivières, Quebec. Robert ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Byrehom in Castleton Parish. In the ‘Local Historians Table Book’ of 1841 it is described that he was ‘a dwarf’, ‘reputed to be a fairy changeling’, who had died less than 20 years previously. He was ‘a most irascible creature’ who would pull out a knife when insulted, but was too slow to catch people. He also had a run-in with his neighbour William Scott from Kirndean, threatening the big man to a duel for tarnishing his reputation, causing Scott to flee from his house. Robert (b.1767), W.S., son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Halfburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a lawyer in Kirkcaldy and died unmarried. Robert (1767–1854) son of Capt. Robert, and grandson of William of Harwood. He was born at Hobsburn in Hobkirk Parish. He joined the Navy in 1781 and rose through the ranks, becoming Commander in 1801 and going on half-pay in 1814. In 1846 he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral. In 1797 he married Ann, daughter of Andrew Hilley of Plymouth. His children were: Elizabeth Pringle (1801–47); Robert Hilley (b.1803), Captain in the Navy, who married Elizabeth Carr; and Helen (or Ann), who married John Paton of Crailing, his 1st wife being her cousin Eleanor Elliott. He stayed at Hundalee and then at Glenbank and was a member of the Jedforest Club. For several years before his death he was completely blind. Robert (1768/9–1856) shepherd at Blinkbonny. He married Elspeth ‘Huitson’ or ‘Hotson’ (possibly Whitsun), who died in 1815, aged 50; she was probably related to George ‘Hotson’ (d.1728), who is buried in the adjacent lair at Ettleton. Their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); William (b.1794); Christian (b.1799), who may have married shoe-maker William Elliot; Elspeth (1803–59); Robert (b.1807); and John, who died in infancy. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Langburnshiel. He was an apprentice baker with Thomas Kedie in Hawick. He produced a sketch entitled ‘Wilton Path and Damside, 1810’, which is one of the first representations of Wilton. It was reproduced in the Hawick News in 1910 and discussed in the Transactions in 2015. Robert (b.1769) farmer at Lanton Mains, taking over from his father, William. He married Margaret Hall (c.1778–1818) and their children included: Christian (c.1810–27); and Jane (c.1812–31). The family are buried at Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same Robert was father of: Mary (b.1783), born at Tythehouse; William (b.1792), born at Harwood; and John (b.1794), born at Robert’s Linn. Robert (b.c.1770) born in Bedrule, he was a farmer. In 1841 he is ‘Independent’ and in 1851 recorded as ‘Pauper Formerly Farmer’. His wife was Jessy from Morebattle and their children included Margaret, Mary (who married David Turnbull), Christian and Janet. Robert of Cooms (18th/19th C.) subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a Caerligen, tanner in Hermitage. Their children were Margaret, Jane, Alice, Georgina, Andrew (who married Helen from Hermitage), Kate and Margaret (who married James Hill, Controller General for Scotland). Robert (1790–1872) eldest son of William, and grandson of Robert of Caerligen, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He became tenant in Teindside and is recorded there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Robert ‘of Teindside’ was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He is recorded there as farmer in 1841, living with William (probably his brother) and Margaret (probably his mother). In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer of 440 acres, employing 6 labourers. He died unmarried. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (c.1785–1849) son of William and Jean Davidson from Ewes. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was at about 2 Loan in 1841. He married Janet ‘Bleak’ (or Black, c.1789–1831). Their children included: Margaret (1811–79), who married William Miller; William (1814–67), who married Helen Smith; Jane (1816–74), who married John White; Janet (1818–83), who married Thomas Thomson; twins Martha (1822–92) and Robert (b.1822), who probably died young; Thomas (1825–64); and John Scott (1829–1914), who was Cornet in 1851. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1849. Robert (1791–1858) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He farmed at Hermitage, like several members of his family before him. He is the Elliott from Kindean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres of moorland and employing 4 labourers. He married Mary (c.1804–35), daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis, from Whisgills. She was probably already dead in 1841, and he was certainly a widower by 1851. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. His children were: Janet (1826–73), who married Colin Hay; Walter (1828–93), who farmed Hermitage after his father died; Thomas (1830–54), who died on the Isle of Mull; Helen (1832–93); and Mary (b.1834). Robert (1793/4–1858) only son of William, tenant at Millburn. He also farmed at Millburnholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of John Davidson from Bewcastle; she died in 1886, aged 82, and was buried at Ettleton. Their children: included William (1828–91), who emigrated to New Zealand; Anne (b.1829); Elizabeth or Betty Laidlaw (b.1831); and John Davidson (b.1834–96). He died at Toftholm and is buried at Unthank. Robert of Reidheugh (1794–1869) only son of Thomas and Mary Thomson. He inherited the lands of Redheugh from his uncle John. During his time the road to Hawick (B6399) was built adjacent to the farm. He also had the Rede Burn partially diverted and drained the marshy area behind the farm. In 1805 (although this date seems too early) he sold Cooms and Middlemoss to Humble Lamb of Ryton. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in Castleton Parish in 1837. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also Vice-President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was listed at Redheugh in Slater's 1852 directory and in the 1861 census was 'Land Proprietor' there. In 1851 he and his wife settled Redheugh jointly on their 2 sons, reserving the liferent for themselves. He was still at Redheugh in a directory of 1868. In 1820 he married Jessie (or Janet, c.1796–1871) Elliot from Flatt. Their children were: Thomas (1821–69), who married Elizabeth Kyle; Jane (1822/3–67); Mary (b.1824), who died young; John (1825–58), who died in Mexico; Mary (1827–53); Henry (b.1829), who also died young; and another daughter. He settled Redheugh jointly on his 2 sons in 1851. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Robert (b.1794/5–1878) carrier in Newcastleton. He may also have lived at Greens. He was a carter in Newcastleton, listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as carrier to Carlisle once a week, and also to Hawick once a week. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at about 33 North Hermitage Street. He was an agricultural labourer and shepherd. He was listed among heads of households as labourer at Gillfoot in 1835 and Whitropeburn in 1836–38, and shepherd at Phaupknoe in 1840 and 1841. He is listed as labourer at Phaupknoe in 1841 and Upperraw in 1851. He married Betty Telfer (c.1805–75). Their children included: John (1822–26); Isabella (1827–46); William (b.1829); Jeannie (b.1832); Robert (b.1834); Sarah (b.1839); and John (b.1841). He died at Whitehillbrae. Robert Kerr 6th Laird of Harwood (1805–73) eldest son of William the 5th Laird. Before 1835 he lived at Greenriver on the Stonedge estate. He succeeded to the Harwood estates at the age of 30 and moved into the new house that his father had had built on the estate. He served in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. He is said to have been a keen country sportsman, excelling at riding with the hounds. Along with some friends he started the 'Jedforest Harriers', meeting at Swinnie Toll-bar, Howahill, Chapel of Cross (presumably Shiplaw Corse), Ruletownhead and elsewhere. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1829. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), a Commissioner of Supply for the county, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board. In 1845, after a 2 year legal battle, he inherited the Clifton estates from his cousin Robert Pringle. He said 'The name Clifton has been a lucky one with me. When staying at Clifton, near Bristol, I met my wife, a Miss Clifton, and I succeeded to the estate of Clifton'. On the announcement of the legal victory there was a great celebration at Harwood, with a bonfire lit on a nearby hill. He was said to be a keen supporter of the 'uppies' in Hobkirk Baa. In 1833 he married Mary Anne, daughter of Charles Claude Clifton of Tving, Brecon, and she died in 1871. His 13 children were: Mary-Anne Frances (1834–1817), said to be the prettiest, who married Sir Edward Cliffe Cockburn; William Claude (1835–1822), who succeeded; Charles John (1836/7–1863), who died aged 27, after returning from India; Robert Henry (b.1838) of Clifton Park, who married Anna Maria Louisa, daughter of Lord Trimbleton, and whose son Robert would later succeed as Laird of Harwood; Ellen Eliza (b.1839), who married Chetwode Drummond Pringle; Adelaide Catherine (1840–1926), who married Sir Basil Francis Hall; Chandos Frederick (1842–62); Anna Maria Octavia (b.1844), who died young; Caroline Clifton (1845–1923), who married James Moffat of Edenhall; Edward Claude (1846–1913), married Eleanor, daughter of John Jones of Melbourne; Charlotte Elizabeth (1848–93), who married John Dalton of Sleningford Park, Yorkshire; Anna Maria (b.1849), who married Lieut.-Col. James Colquhoun; and Mark Pringle (1851–98), the prettiest, who married Sir Edward Cliffe Cockburn; William Claude (1851–1922), who was an elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk and also took a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. He lived to the age of 89. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd and labourer. In 1861 he was at about 37 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Armstrong in 1840. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); Robert (b.1845); Jane; and Archibald. Robert (b.1814/5) born in Newcastleton, he was an agricultural labourer living around Sunnyside in Denholm in 1841. The family was living in a cottage at Hundalee in 1851. In 1861 he was a ploughman in Oxnam Parish. In 1836 he married Hannah Whillans from Crailing. Their family included: John (b.c.1837); Archibald; and Walter. His elderly uncle Walter, formerly a mason from Cavers, was also living with them in 1851. The family may have emigrated to Bruce County, Ontario. Robert (b.c.1815) labourer who was living at Hermitage Schoolhouse in 1841. He married Agnes Milligan and their children included: Jessie (or Janet, b.1835); Margaret; and Jane (b.1839); and Matthew (b.1841). He may have been related to James, who was schoolmaster at Hermitage. Robert (b.1818/9) born in Hawick Parish, he was farm steward at Cavers estate in the 1860s. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Cavers East Lodge (called 'Cavers Garden' in 1861). He was listed as 'gamekeeper' and his wife as 'portress'. His wife was Isabella Elliot, probably daughter of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Corse. Their children included: Margaret (b.1850); William (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); Stuart Douglas (who became a Colonel in the Volunteers); Elizabeth (b.1858); John (b.1860); Isabella (b.1863); Janet (b.1869); Janet (again, b.1866); Agnes (b.1869); and Robert (b.1872).

Robert (1821–1908) son of Robert, who farmed at Powisholm, and Esther Elliot. He was an agricultural labourer living at Bankend in Castleton Parish in 1861. In 1849 he married Christian Elliot (c.1826–1904) and their children included Agnes Murray (1850–1904); Robert (1851–1928); John (1853–1935); Esther; and Adam (1858–1903). He died at Powisholm. Robert Henry of Clifton Park (b.1837) 3rd son of Robert Henry. He inherited the lands of Clifton Park from his father. In about 1874 he also owned lands in Linton Parish. In 1868 he married Anna Maria Louisa Barnewall, only daughter of Thomas, Lord Trimleston. Their son Thomas became the next Laird of Harwood. Robert (1845–1918) younger son of Andrew, farmer at Twisdehope, he emigrated to New Zealand in 1864 and married Elizabeth Fitt. Their children were Ettie, Eliza, Maud, Agnes and Andrew. Robert (b.1850/1) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1901 he was farm steward at Barnes Cottages. His wife was Annie and their children included Annie, Henry, Thomas, Jane, Edward and Robert. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1915) only son of Thomas and Elizabeth Kyle. He inherited Redheugh, being served heir to his grandfather in 1887. He married Effie McGregor Corbett, but they had no children. In 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Robert (1865–1937) son of Walter, farmer in Hermitage, and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He also farmed at Hermitage, but gave up the lease and retired to Newcastle. He married Isobel, sister of J.G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick. He secondly married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Paisley, ironmonger from Hawick. His only child was Isabella Jane Armstrong. Robert Young Scott ‘Bob’, M.B.E. (1920–2016) born on February 29th, so he celebrated his 21st birthday in 2004! A High School Maths teacher for 28 years, he coached tennis locally and received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. He married Madge, who coached tennis along with him, and they had sons Kim and Sean. Roland (15th C.) recorded as ‘Rollando Elwald’ in 1466 when he witnessed a charter at Kirkcudbright for Robert Herries. Roland (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with ‘Willot’ and some Armstrongs, Hector Lander, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitemuir. They are described as ‘traitors of Leven’, but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Roland (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He is listed as ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorleshope’. He is surely related to the other Elliots of Thorleshope, perhaps the generation between the John of the 1480s and 90s and the Robert or Robin of the 1540s to 60s. Roland (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Riccarton, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Listed after him are William Elliot, along with Martin and Patrick Crozier. He may be related to some of the other nearly contemporary Rolands. Roland of Thorleshope (16th C.) recorded in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. This was along with John, son of Robert of Thorleshope (whose relationship to him is unclear), as well as John, son to ‘Hobe Quhytserk’.

Roland ‘Rowie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Patrick Houston of that Ilk with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. He is probably the Robin of the Park who was accused (along with Simon and others) by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner. He could be the man transcribed as ‘James Rowe in the Park’, listed along with Sym of the Park and Archibald of the Park in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1581. It is thus possible that he was son of James of the Park. However, he is probably the ‘Rowie Ellot of the Park, called Symmis Rowie’ listed in 1581 as the leader of the gang of Elliots of the Park released from Edinburgh Castle; his father was thus Simon. In 1582/3 his name was transcribed as ‘Robbe’ when several other Elliots were charged for his non-appearance. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1594 as ‘Rowie Ellot of Ramsgill’ when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Rowe Ellocht of the Hall’ in a huge 1585 remission of crimes for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; his name appears near those of Ewesdale residents, and it seems likely he was ‘of the Hill’ (rather than ‘Hall’). ‘Hob and Will Elliottis, brether’ are listed after him, so possibly his brothers, or brothers to each other and more distantly related to him. Roland ‘Rollie’ (17th C.) described as ‘called Park’ in the 1660s when he was listed as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. He may have been a descendant of the earlier Elliots of Park. Roland (1815–41) son of James, tenant at Lymiecleuch. He was tenant farmer at Macksidie in 1841. In 1837 he married Beatrice Pott (c.1799–1878), who died at Wilton Hill, Hawick. Samuel (18th C.) possibly a resident at Macksidie. He was recorded as a wright in Denholm in 1723. Probably the same man was father of: James (b.1723) in Cavers Parish; Samuel (b.1725) in Cavers; Walter (b.1828) in Hobbirk and Bedrule Parishes; Alison (b.1730) in Hobbirk; and William (b.1732) in Bedrule. Samuel (b.c.1750) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Antigua. He has 2 daughters: Alicia, who married William Hay Carre and Sir M.A. Crosby; and Eliza, who married Lord Despenser. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Lawrence and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Simon (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother James 'Elwald' and William in Leahaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Park in Liddesdale. Either the same or a different Simon was also tenant at ‘Coklaik’. He was probably an ancestor of the Simon of the Park recorded about 4 decades later. Simon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Sym Elwald’ in 1546 when he was witness to the bond entering some Elliots as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He signed with the help of the notary (suggesting that he could not write), ‘in absens of my brother young William’. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) proprietor of lands at Dod Burn and adjacent farms. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme as surety for him and Archie’s Will in Gorrenberry. He is recorded in a bond of security of 1569 signed in Hawick, in which he is given as ‘Sym Elliot in Dodburne’, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch serving as surety for him. 5 tenants are listed for whom he was surety himself. He may have been related to the other Elliots in the bond, e.g. Gavin in Skelfhill or Gavin of Falnash. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and Willim of Gorrenberry), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. Also in 1569 he was one of the relief pledges listed for Gavin in Falnash (the other 2 being William of Gorrenberry and Gavin Elliott of Skelfhill, who were probably close relatives). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1573 he was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews, according to the register of the Privy Council. Simon ‘Simmie’ of the Park (16th C.) probably related to the earlier Simon of the Park. In 1578/9 there was a restatement at the Privy Council of a pledge that he should be placed in ward with the Laird of Corstorphine; his sureties were Martin of Braendillie and the deceased John of the Park, while Hob of the Park was also mentioned in the same document and so surely related. He was said to have escaped from ward, and hence his cautioners were fined. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. He is listed as ‘Sym Elliot of the Park’ in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies. He was surely father of ‘Symmis Rowie’ of the Park, recorded in 1582/3, and possibly also father of ‘Symmis Arche’, who was one of the cautioners for ‘Symmis Rowie’. ‘Sims John Elliot of the Parke’, recorded in 1583, was probably also his son. He was likely related to the other Elliots of the Park who are listed in 1583, namely ‘Grey Willie’, ‘Scots Hobbie’, ‘Jamie of the Park’, ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ and ‘Hob’s Hobbie’. Simon of Philhope, ‘Mertin’s Sym’ (d.bef. 1592) eldest son of Martin of Braendillie. He is first mentioned in 1569, when he was among a number of pledges in exchange for Martin of Braendillie with the Regent Moray. In 1579 his father Martin purchased a 10 poundland of ‘Reuhop or Philop’ from John Turnbull and granted them to him. He is mentioned in 1580 along with his brothers Gavin, Archibald and Robert; in that year they were all implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is ‘Sime Elliot’, son of Martin of ‘Bradley’ in a letter of 1583. In 1586 he was ‘Sym Elliot, sone to the said Martene’ when he occupied the farm of Riccarton Cleuch, which was released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was ‘Syme Elliott Martin’s son’ in 1590 when accused of stealing 8 cows from ‘Medupp’ in England, along with ‘Ill-willed Will’ Crozier and ‘Quentin’s Archie’ Crozier. He received a Crown Charter of the lands of Philhope (in the Borthwick valley) in 1591, along with his father. It is unclear if he succeeded to the lands for long after his father’s death. There were Elliots at Philhope for several subsequent generations. His wife’s name is not recorded, but his children included: Martin of Braudley; William of the Binks; and James ‘in Hollis’ (Hollow). His son Martin, along with Robert of Redheugh, made an agreement to bury their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1599. Simon of Harden (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Braudlie in 1583. His lands were presumably Harden in Liddesdale. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Phillhope. Simon ‘in Philhope’ (d.bef. 1628) eldest son of Martin of Braudlie and grandson of the earlier Simon of Phillhope. He is recorded in the charter for the lands of Phillhope in 1592. In 1615 his wardship, which had been in the hands of the Crown since his father’s execution in 1607, was granted to Thomas Armstrong of Craig. He married Elizabeth Chisholme (who was presumably from one of the local families), who survived him, and may later have married Archibald of Phillhope. They had one child, Grizel, who was given as ward to Robert of Falnash when Simon died; she later married Robert of Falnash’s son John and was heiress of Phillhope. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) recorded with a tower in the Debateable Land on Sandison’s c.1590 map, to the north of Larriston. This could have been near Burmemouth perhaps. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Syme Elliott, callit Guyd, in Linsburne’ when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buceburne’. He was found guilty along with Abie Armstrong, although Archie Armstrong ‘Raccas’ and Francie Armstrong ‘Tueden’ were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656) 2nd son of William of the Binks, and great-grandson of Robert, 13th Chief. He is first mentioned in 1599 when accused of theft and then in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of ‘Gibbie wi’ ye Gowden Garters’ of Stobs. It is said that he ‘hand-fasted’ with her on condition that he pay a considerable dowrie if was unsatisfied with her (which he was, since he married another woman). This led to him selling Binks to Gilbert Elliott (around 1601), although his son William bought it back. He was on the inquest at the Judiciary Court of 1622 and 1623, when listed as ‘Sime Elliott, Benkis in Thorlieshope’ and ‘callit of Benkis’. He is also referred to as ‘Symion Elliott of Binkis in Thordleshope’. He was tenant at Thordleshope (from at least 1622), Larriston (around 1627) and Huddleshouse (around 1637). He is referred to as ‘Symione Elliot called of the Benckis in Huddishous in Liddersdall’ in 1637 when his son William purchased Harwood; William may have ‘wadset’ the lands to him and hence he himself was listed as owner in 1643, when ‘Harritt’ was valued at £433 6s 8d. As a result he is occasionally referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood. He purchased Lodgegill in 1647 and Cooms in 1650, and together these made up Black Tarras. He is recorded in a contract of 1648 involving the vicarage teinds for Hobkirk Parish, and in a discharge for the teinds in 1649. His sons were: William, more usually called 1st Laird of Harwood; and Robert of Black Tarras, who married Margaret Riddell from Bewlie. His brother Robert is noted in the Register of the Privy Seal as a thief. He also had a daughter who married a Scott, her sons John and William later witnessing a document relating to Harwood (and it is possible this was Rev. John of Hawick). His name is sometimes written ‘Simeon’ or ‘Syme’. In 1656 his charters of Lodgegill and Cooms were confirmed by Cromwell, by which time he was deceased. Simon of Black Tarras (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert of Black Tarras and Margaret Riddell. He inherited half of the lands of Lodgegill. He is mentioned in 1671 when he brought a case of assault and robbery of his lands of Tarras, Skelfhill and ‘Longkeip-side’ against Henry in Harwood, Henry’s brother James, John in Dinley, Robert of Pingleholes, William of Phillhope, John of Brugh and others; this suggests some dispute with his neighbours. He was declared bankrupt in 1690 and the lands of Lodgegill were adjudged to William of Thorlieshope, who settled them on his brother Henry. Simon of Dinlabyre (17th C.) recorded in a letter of 1692 to the Earl of Tarras. He must have been related to William of Dinlabyre, who died around 1693. He may have been the last Elliot Laird of Dinlabyre, who sold the estate to John Oliver in about 1700. Simon of Swinside and the Binks (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of the Binks and Harwood. In 1670, along with William of Unthank and his son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. However, he sold his share to William Elliott of Stobs 3 years later. In 1672 he bought Middleknows in Oxnam Parish and in 1674 he obtained a Crown Charter of the Barony of Swinside, designating his eldest son as heir, but retaining liferent for himself. In 1678 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Swinside and Middleknowes in Oxnam Parish, valued at more than £2000. He is ‘Symeon Elliott of Swinside’ when he signed... the 1678 marriage contract between the Elliots of Midlem Mill and Harwood. He is recorded as ‘Simeon of Swinesye’ in a bond of 1683. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was cautioner for a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and William Elliot of Beulie in 1692, witness to a bond for Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1696 and cautioner for another in 1696. He registered his arms as Baron of Swinside in 1697. In 1699 he witnessed a disposition for Elliot of Harwood. In 1714 he settled various of his lands on his sons and he sold the lands of Binks to John of Thorlieshope, sometime before 1718; however, it has also been suggested that he sold them to Christopher Irving some time before this.

He married Jean Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family) before 1672. They had 7 children: William, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, who succeeded to Swinside; Adam of Beirhope; Gideon of Harwood on Teviot; Simon, mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); James, also mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); Robert of ‘Tyneside’; and Christian, who married Dr. John Haliburton from Jedburgh and whose son Simon Haliburton married Elizabeth Elliot of Midlem Mill. Simon John of Brugh (1940– ) only son of Sir William (Air Chief Marshal). He was educated at Eton and McGill University. He is the present head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Sonia Annabel Shand in 1972 and their children are Alice Rosalind, Benjamin William and Catherine Camilla. The family live in Dorset. Stuart Douglas (1856–c.1930) son of Cavers gamekeeper Robert and Isabella, he was born in Cavers Parish. He worked in Edinburgh as a Supreme Court Solicitor, and was also a City Councillor there. He was President of the Edinburgh Borderers’ Union for 23 years and Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association for 25 years. He was heavily involved with the volunteer movement, which he joined in 1876; he was an officer of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment), rising through the rank to become Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1882 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw. Their children were Agnes Laidlaw Douglas, Isabella, Edith, Constance R., Florence W., Robert A.D. and William Gilbert. Note that his name is also sometimes ‘Stewart’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1528 and 1534 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528, along with William. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1534 as procurator to Gavin in a legal agreement carried out in Hassendean Kirk; Gavin (who may have been related) made a letter of reversion to William Scott for the 40-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’. He is probably the Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk, who in 1555 witnessed a document, in which Walter Scott of Robertson begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert’s brother John Hunter; chaplain Matthew was also listed, and perhaps a relative. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in 1535/6 jointly owning 2 rigs of land with his wife Helen Rutherford. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1536. He is probably the Thomas who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40 and who witnessed another transaction in 1540/1. He is probably the Thomas who was deceased in 1541/2 when his son and heir Robert inherited his tenement and 2 rigs; Robert resigned a house to his mother Helen Rutherford, in liferent and in 1561/2 she sold her tenement and rigs to Robert, son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyn-dene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. Thomas ‘Law’s Tom’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Thome Elliott callit Lawis Thome’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ also in Priesthaugh and ‘Lawis Richie’ in Swinstead were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he witnessed a transaction done in Selkirk. This involved James in Yair, who was probably related. In 1581 he was still in Yair when there was a promise to pay him and James Ker in Yair for the tacks on ‘Brigheucht’ and Lindean Mill by Thomas Ker in Sunderlandhall. Thomas (16th C.) brother of Jock of Copshaw. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh. He is recorded as ‘Thom Ellot of Copshawe’ when accused along with William of Gorremberry, the Armstrongs of Whitaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He is probably the ‘Thom of Copshaw’ whose son Francis was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Thomas of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when is son Will was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Gilbert of Craigend who witnessed a... sasine for Appotside in 1632. Thomas of Bewlie (d.1686) tenant farmer at Borthwickshiels, son of Robert in Borthwickshiels and descended from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. He is recorded along with his parents in a list of communicants in the Borthwick valley in 1650. His only known sibling was William, minister at Yarrow, for whom he became executor (for his debts!) after his death. In 1672 he purchased Bewlie from Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and settled these lands on his eldest son William in 1675. In 1676 he was involved in the redemption of annual rent with Isobel Riddell, wife of David Elliot, Burgess of Selkirk (and widow of George Dunn). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1682 in Robertson for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his daughter). He is probably the Thomas who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is recorded as Thomas ‘in Borthwickshiels’ in an undertaking of 1685 with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He married Margaret, doughter of William Scott of Chamberlain Newton (and she died in 1672). They had 5 children:
William, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658); Thomas (c.1660–1723), progenitor of the Oakwood Mill Elliots; Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1723), of North Sinton; Mary (or ‘Marie’), who married Patrick Riddell (incorrectly recorded sometimes as Nichol) of Muselee; and Susanna, who mar-rried William Scott of Stonedge (and whose daughter married William of Wolfelee). His will is recorded in 1686. Thomas of Haydon Bridge (d.c.1688) 4th son of John of Brugh. He may also have been described as ‘of Canonbie Mill’.
He married a Robinson. Their children included:
George, who was killed in battle; Walter, unmarried; Gilbert, killed at Dettingen; and Williarm, born posthumously, who was a joiner at Haydon Bridge. Thomas (1659/60–1723) tenant of Oakwood Mill, 2nd son of Thomas and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and brother of the 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. In 1719, along with his son Andrew, he witnessed a sasine for Helen, 2nd daughter of James Elliot in Carlous. Also in 1719 he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He may additionally be the Thomas who in 1719 was charged with taking div-ots off Selkirk Common. He served as Treasurer of Selkirk, as attested in 1734 when his widow had a discharge with the Burgh. He married Jean (c.1660–1743), daughter of Cornelius Inglis of Newton (possibly from the same family who once owned Branxholme); she died in Selkirk in 1743, aged 83 (although she is still recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1745). His children were: Thomas in Oakwood Mill, Bailie of Selkirk, who married Bessie Tudhope; William (b.c.1688), 1st Elliot of Wolfelee; Andrew, who married Agnes Shortreed and Mary Simpson; Bessie (b.1697), who died young; Isobel (b.1702); another Bessie (or ‘Elizabeth’, b.1704), who mar-rried Robert Shortreed of Essenside in 1725; and Agnes (d.1801), who married John Sibbald from Whitelaw and Walter Cunningham from Hind-hope, and had 20 children in total, with Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle being a grandson of hers. He may also have had a daughter Elizabeth who was the 2nd wife of William of Whithaugh. He is buried in Lindean churchyard, this location suggesting a connection with the family of ‘James Elliott of Bridghugh’ mentioned by Scott of Satchells.
Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitmuir Hall in 1709. In that year he purchased meal for the use of the Selkirk Town Herd. Thomas (b.c.1685) eldest son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. He was also tenant in Oakwood Mill, was described as a ‘malster’ (presumably a maker of malt) in Selkirk and was Bailie there from 1721, being mentioned in many records. For example, he was late Bailie when he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, the Bailie whose ser-ant was involved with a debt case in 1737, the Bailie involved in a legal case in Selkirk in 1741 and the ex-Bailie asked about non-payment of anual rent on part of Selkirk Common in 1752. He may also be the Thomas recorded in receipts with Selkirk in 1743. In 1708 he married Bessie, eldest daughter of John Tudhope (also a Bailie in Selkirk). Their children were John, John (again), William, Agnes, Jean, Agnes (again), Andrew, Jen (again), Robert, Elizabeth, Elizabeth (again) and Margaret. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident at Falnash Mill. His wife was Helen and their son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. His wife was probably Helen Allan, and their other children included Jean (b.1717). Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1727 for work done on the herd’s house and dam there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen. He married Margaret Legerwood in Selkirk in 1736 and their son William was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1743.
His wife may have secondly married James Scott in Wilton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Harwood on Teviot. In 1740 he was ‘at Harwood’ when he witnessed baptisms for William Nichol, shepherd at Teindside and for Robert Elliot, tenant at Slaidhills; his brother Francis was also witness in 1740. He was described as 'in Harwood' in 1744 when he leased Northhouse and Suddenrig from the Buccleuch Estates. He was recorded in the list of rental arrears for Northhouse in the period 1745-48. In 1745 he was 'in Harwood' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson (resident of Teindside). In 1746 he and Francis (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Thomas (1723–51) eldest son of William the 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a physician. In 1751 he married Helen, daughter of Sir John Elphinstone and whose mother was a daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He died only about 6 weeks after the marriage. A story is told of his wife being accidentally shut in a secret lower vault of Megginch Castle after being instructed to locate some family valuables and papers there, and being rescued by her cousin through chance circumstances. He pre-deceased his father, his death coming after catching fever in attending to a sick family. In grief, his wife spent a year living in the dark, but survived her husband by almost 56 years. Thomas (18th C.) purchaser of the Langlands estate (later called Wilton Lodge) in July 1783. His lands were valued at £278 12s 8d in 1788 (with much of the former Langlands estate having been sold off to others, but still including Calaburn). He sold it again in about 1790 to Lord Napier. He was the probably an illegitimate son of Gilbert, a younger son of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and Sarah Growesmith. There is a record of a boundary dispute between him and the Duke of Buccleuch over the Pipewellengh and Gardener’s Haugh. His father Gilbert is recorded at Langlands on the female servant tax roll for 1785 and 1786, and he himself in 1787 and 1788. He was also taxed for having a footman and 2 horses in 1787 and 1788. In the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick he was listed as ‘late of Langlands’. Thomas (1730–1807) son of John of Whithaugh. He was tenant in Twislehope, along with his elder brother John. He was a subscriber to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. In 1786 along with John (his brother), also in ‘Tweeslihope’, he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was listed at Twislehope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, and his wife was also taxed for 2 dogs. It is said that Sir Walter Scott visited him at Twislehope on his first trip through Liddesdale. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Rev. Thomas (1731–1808) local minister, 6th son of Robert ‘of Carlenrickrig’ and Christian Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He may be the Thomas in Stobicote who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for William Grieve and Mary Elliot (probably his sister), with the other witness being Robert Elliot in Winningtonrig (his father). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1757, presented to Kirkton on the last day of that year and ordained in mid-1758. Then he was translated to Cavers in 1763. He paid the Horse Tax in 1785–92. He was said to have gentle manners and great modesty, but also was talented as an astronomer and mathematician. The famous Dr. Thomas Chalmers had his first ministerial duty as his assistant 1779–1800. In 1760 he married Anne, daughter of William Elliot (2nd Laird) of Borthwickbrae (presumably his cousin). Although she died only a year later they did have a child, William (b.1761), who became an architect in Kelso (designer of the extension to the old Wilton Kirk), and probably the same William became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He published a description of Cavers for Sinclair’s Statistical Account and a paper on practical astronomy, ‘New and improved Method of taking Observations at Sea’ in the Transactions of the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh. A miniature portrait of him exists. A communion token dated 1761 (the second oldest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. He died in Kelso. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1769); James Thomas (b.1771); Thomas (b.1774); William (b.1777); and Isabel (b.1780). It is possible he was the Thomas who married Ann Veitch in Southdean in 1762. Thomas (18th C.) mason at Newmill. He married Helen Douglas. Their children, born in Hawick Parish were: Betty (b.1771, with ‘Margaret’ crossed out); Margaret (b.1772); Walter (b.1772); and James (b.1774). The witnesses in 1771 were Thomas Laidlaw and William Riddell. He could be the Thomas who in 1800 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Glendinning, shepherd at Blackcleugh. Thomas (b.1741) from the Ewes valley, son of Robert and Janet Scott. He married Elizabeth (born in Bowden), daughter of Robert Carruthers and Isobel Balmer. Their children included: William (1770–1824), who married Jean Easton; Robert (1781–1858); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1782–1843), who married farmer James Scott; Mary (b.1786); and Thomas (b.1791), who married Isabella Aitchison and may have died in the U.S.A. Thomas (1744/5–1800) 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh. His brother John farmed at Redheugh, but he also lived there and owned Foolshiels. He is the Thomas who was recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Redheugh. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. In 1793 his brother John of Redheugh disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to him ‘in order that he may be enabled with more ease and convenience to live upon the lands of Redheugh’. He married Mary Thomson. Their children included: Jean (1794–1867), who married Thomas Jardine; Robert (b.1794), who married Jessie Elliot and inherited Redheugh from his uncle; and Margaret (1797–1823), who married William Nichol. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1781 and Parkhill in 1784. He married Margaret Elliot in Roberton in 1775 and their children included Margaret (b.1778), William (b.1779), Agnes (b.1781), Janet (b.1783) and Christian (b.1784). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is said to have married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, cooper in Castleton and farmer at Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1783. His children included: Isabel (b.1783); Archibald (b.1788); and Thomas (b.1791). It is possible he was connected to the Thomas of Colterscleuch who lived at roughly the same time. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Appletrehall according to the 1797 Horse Tax register, when he owned 2 work horses. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Fenzlehope’ in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwick Mains, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwick Mains in 1797. Thomas (1771–1850) son of ‘Captain’ Robert and brother of Capt. William of Harwood. He lived at Kirndean in Liddesdale. He was a Corporal in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers), directing some of the Liddesdale part of the troop, along with his brother Mark. Together with Robert Kerr Elliot (his nephew) he is recorded loaning money in 1805, which was repaid by James Scott in 1845. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He was farmer at Kirndean listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He is still recorded at Kirndean in Slater’s 1852 directory (even although he was deceased). In 1802 in Southdean Parish he married Helen (1776/7–1849), elder daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. They had 5 sons and 6 daughters: Esther (c.1803–27); Robert (1805–24), Ensign in the 16th Madras Native Infantry, who died at Wallajabad in India; Thomas Scott (1806–32), who died at Lanton; Elizabeth Pringle (1808–18); Margaret (b.1809), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1810–39), who married William Boog of Swethope; William (1811–71), the eldest surviving son, who inherited the lands of Peel from his uncle Thomas Scott (and the lands later descended to John, farmer at the Flatt in Liddesdale), taking the additional surname Scott; Helen (1813–82), who married John Elliot, tenant in Flatt; Ann Jane (1815–92), who died at Friars Mount, Jedburgh; Christian (1817–86); John (b.1819), 2nd surviving son, who inherited Riccalton from his uncle John Scott, and also took the additional surname of Scott; and Henry (b.1821–63), who farmed at Kirndean for a while. Thomas (b.1766) younger son of William of Whithaugh. He was a doctor in Carlisle. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and to Robert Wilson’s ‘ History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Eliza, daughter of Robert Batey of Hightown near Haltwhistle and their children were William (doctor in Carlisle), Robert (b.1811), Elizabeth (b.1813), Margaret (b.1814), Sophia (b.1816), Thomas (b.1817, surgeon in Carlisle) and Jane Isabella (b.1819). Thomas (b.1771) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He may have been tenant in Hillhouse for a while, like his father. He died unmarried. Thomas (c.1776–1838) son of Walter, from the Henderson’s Knowe branch. He had brothers Archibald and William. He lived at Colterscheuch (where he is recorded in 1800) and Bowanhill. He married Magdalene Thomson (1776–1861). The family emigrated to America, eventually settling in Andes, New York, where he died. His children were: Mary, who married shepherd Walter Scott in 1822; Walter (1798–1858), who lived at Niagara, Ontario; Betty (b.1800); James (1802–28); William (1809–88), who settled in Bovina; and Robert (1812–18), who died at sea. Letters have survived to him from relatives in Scotland. Thomas (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish, he lived in Roberton Parish. He was a labourer living at Howecleruch in 1841. He was Land Steward at Borthwick Mains in 1851 and 1861, and still recorded there in 1868. He may have been related to Thomas who was at Borthwick Mains a few decades earlier. He married Mary Grieve and their children included: James (b.c.1815); Thomas (b.1818); Esther (b.1819); John (b.1821); Helen (b.c.1825); and William (b.c.1833). Thomas (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He may be the Thomas, son of John and Janet Little born in 1799. In 1835 he was at Myredykes and in 1837–41 was listed as shepherd there. He married Anne Pott (b.c.1811) and their children included John (b.1829), Betty (b.1832) and Janet (b.1840). Thomas (19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Crescent, marked in Wood’s 1824 map at around No. 10. It is unclear who he was, since he is not listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory or the 1841 census. He could be the Thomas from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (1804/5–bef. 1861) originally from Ireland, he was a hosiery worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the High Street in Mather’s Close. In 1851 he was at Lynnwood Cottages. However, in 1860 he moved to Bunchester, where he was postmaster and letter carrier for the Rule valley. He was first to introduce a spring cart to the district and would carry passengers to and from Hawick. However, the venture was not a great success and he gave up, eventually moving elsewhere. In 1824 he married Margaret Hume, from Cavers Parish. Their children included: James (b.1825), who was a merchant at the Sandbed; Elizabeth (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Rev. William Hume (1837–1927), minister at Ramsbottom; John Little (1839–60); Thomas (b.1842); Michael (b.1844); George Lewis (b.1846); Michael (again, b.1849); and Betsy (1852–57). Thomas (1807–91) son of William and Jean Easton, he was farmer at Mangerton. He was recorded as shepherd at Mangerton among heads of households in 1835–41; his brother Robert was also listed as a shepherd. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Mangerton. In 1851 he was farming 115 acres there, and employed 5 labourers. In 1852 he was listed as miller at Mangerton Mill and was listed at Mangerton in a directory of 1868. In 1838 he married Janet (1815–47), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: William (1839–1923), who died at Gattonside; Elizabeth Beattie (1841–1911); Jean Easton (1842–1910), also died at Gattonside; Helen Douglas (1844–1917), also died at Gattonside; Janet Anne (1846–97); and John (1847–1904), who worked for a bank in London and married Margaret Eliza Middleton. Thomas (1811/2–76) grocer in Newcastleton, probably son of joiner Andrew. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 14 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 he married Hannah Storey, who died in 1882, aged 61. Their children included: Mary (b.1843); Andrew (1845–1930), who married Margaret Glendinning; Betty (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Thomasina (b.1853); Arkle; Helen; Hannah Janet (b.1862), who died in infancy; and John James (1865/6–1944), who died in Longtown. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (1815/6–87) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledye and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. In 1861 he was at Under Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He succeeded his brother John as farmer at Nether Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull from Redmoss. Their children included: John (1859–1918) in Hyndhope; Thomas of Attonburn, who married Jane Robson from Bellingham; James; Mary; Margaret, who married Dr. J.P. Elliot from Bellingham; Robert Turnbull of Chatto; Jean (d.1913); Elizabeth (d.1870); Susan, married A.O. Rutherford; William Scott (1876–1912); Walter of Toft (b.1878); Arthur of Hindhope (1880–1968); and George of Alnham Moor and Brockdam (1883–1933). Dr. Thomas (1817–59) son of a doctor who came from Whitehaugh in Liddesdale. He was probably born in Carlisle. He studied in Edinburgh and Paris and then took up a surgeon’s practice in Carlisle, in partnership with his brother William. He became known as a pioneering ophthalmologist, who had an early understanding of how to cure strabismus (squinting). He was on the Carlisle committee for the proposed railway between Hawick and Carlisle. He died of typhus at the age of 42 and has a plaque to his memory in Carlisle Cathedral. Thomas (19th C.) wright recorded in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. It is possible he is also the Thomas listed as grocer in the same directory. Thomas (1821–69) elder son of Robert of Redheugh and Jessie Elliot. He was born in Castleton and inherited Redheugh jointly with his brother John. In 1851 (while living at Redheugh with his father) he was already listed as farmer of 90 arable plus 1200 moorland acres, and employer of 4 labourers. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Kyle and their children included: Robert, who inherited Redheugh and married Effie McGregor Corbett; and Anna Mary, who sold Redheugh in 1918. He died at Knockton, just a few days after his father. He is buried in Castleton cemetery along with his wife. Arthur (1864/5–93), who died in India and is marked on the same gravestone, was probably another son. Thomas (1825–64) younger son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a grocer in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed on the Fore Row as a grocer and spirit dealer, and in 1851 he was also listed as a blacksmith. In 1847 he married Helen Welsh and their children included: Helen Broad (b.1848); Robert (b.1850); Janet Blake (b.1853); and an unnamed child (b.1855). He was buried in the Wellogate (although the inscription is illegible). Thomas (c.1827–89) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong (c.1819–1919), who died at Glendivan. Their children included Mary (b.1851) and probably Maggie (1866–86). He died in Langholm. Thomas Robert Barnewall 8th Laird of Harwood (1871–1924), only child of Robert Henry of Clifton Park. He succeeded his father to Clifton Park and his uncle William (7th Laird) in Harwood. He was also referred to as ‘of Clifton’. He sold Harwood to William Elliot of Muir Glen in 1924. He married 3 times: firstly in 1892 to Rose, 3rd daughter and co-heir of Col. John Joicy of Newton Hall, Northumberland, and she died in 1912; secondly in 1915 Dagmar, daughter of C.E. Ahbom of Landekrona, Sweden, and she died in 1937; and lastly in 1942 to Mrs. Helen Campbell. He had 7 children: Robert Barnewall of Clifton Park, who lived in Carmarthenshire; Liet.-Comdr. James Kerr; Thomas William Henry; Rose Adelaide Maud: Frances Eva; Lietut. Charles Edward of the K.O.S.B.; and Diana Catherine. Walter (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls as William ‘Alight’ or ‘d’Alyth’ (in Perthshire) when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems likely that he was a direct ancestor of the Elliots of Roxburghshire. He was imprisoned at Tonbridge Castle and his younger brother Thomas was taken to Kenilworth Castle. The family lands at that time were ‘Alyth’ or ‘Eliot’ in Perthshire, although they were probably given Redheugh and associated lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. He further paid homage to Edward in 1304. In 1306 he is listed among the adherents of Bruce who forfeited lands, and it was probably in the few years following that he was granted Redheugh. There are no recorded links between him and the later Roberts of Redheugh; however, it may be that his descendants were called Robert in honour of his patron. His son Thomas is recorded as a witness to a Perthshire charter in 1304. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as ‘Watte Elward’ and he owned a rig at ‘quhitreig’. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 when his wife Christine Roberton was involved with a transaction for lands in Bowden. Walter (17th C.) Factor and Chamberlain to Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. In 1637 and 1638 he was involved with discharges with the Treasurer of Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1635); Janet (b.1644); Janet (again, b.1646); John (b.1648); James (b.1651); and Marion (b.1655). Walter of Arkleton (1634–1702) second son of Adam Elliot of Meikledale, his mother being a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1669 he bought back the lands of Arkleton (from Francis Scott), which had previously belonged to the Elliots; he was described as ‘indweller in Arkleton’, showing that he already lived there. In 1671 he paid tax on £700 of land for Arkleton. He probably had the old tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, which contains a stone bearing the date 1676 and initials ‘W.E.’ and ‘K.F’ (for him and his wife). He registered arms in 1676 and in 1694 documented how the estate was to be inherited after his death (excluding his eldest 2 sons). He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he married Katherine, daughter of Arthur Foster of Stanegartside. Their children were: Adam of ‘Tyneside’, who married Ann Drury; Arthur of Harwood, who married Anne Disney; William of Arkleton (d.1721), who married Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh; Nichol in Unthank, who married Jane Lithgow; James, who married Miss Chambers; Walter, who died unmarried; Henry, Robert and Gilbert, who all died young; Jeanette, who married Gideon Scott (later of Falnash), brother of Walter of Harwood; Helen, who married Andrew Murray of Tundergarth by contract of 1679; and Mary, who married Robert Graham of Slipperfield. He is buried in Ewes churchyard, along with his wife and several children. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Grieve and their children included: William (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); and Adam (b.1675).
Elliot (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William of Unthank. He was described being ‘of Carotrig’, which was Carewoodrig. He died unmarried.

Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Commonbrae in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Blackcleuch and in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Telfer, workman in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He was ‘tacksman of ye mill’ in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for undermiller Walter Riddell (along with the other undermiller, James Paterson). He was also ‘tacksman if ye milne of Hawick’ in 1711 and 1714 when he witnessed baptisms for Archibald Aitkin, undermiller in Hawick (with Walter Riddell as the other undermiller). He was called ‘tacksman of ye milne and customer of Hawick’ in 1712 when he asked the Session to find him and his family specific seats in the Church ‘seeing he was burdensome to others’. It thus appears that he was tenant at Hawick Mill and also a weaver of some sort. Robert, who was ‘Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick’ around 1720 was probably his son. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for miller Walter Riddell, along with miller James Paterson. Walter of Ormiston (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood. He witnessed his brother’s marriage in 1700 and a bond by his brother in 1703. The connection with Ormiston is confusing, since it was probably his son Walter who acquired Ormiston from the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is said to have married the 1st daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean (whose first name is not recorded); however, this may be confusion with later family connections with Currer descendants of Kerr of Lindean and Whitmuir. They are said to have had 4 sons, all of whom died without a male successor. However, it seems likely that he was succeeded by another Walter, who was one of the founders of carpet-making in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He is often referred to in Parish records as simply ‘Bailie’, but held the office of the representative of the Baron, rather than Magistrate of the Town. He is recorded as ‘Bailie, substitute of Gideon Scott of Falnash’ in 1700/1 when he presided over a criminal court in Hawick, banishing an offender (who had been in irons for 10 days) from the town. He was ‘bailie of the regality of Hawick’ in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Deans. He is recorded as ‘bailie’ when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Ruecastle in 1705, for wright John Pringle in 1707, for glover John Scott in 1708 and for shoemaker John Scott in 1708. In 1709 he was ‘bailie deput of the regalitie’ when he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster John Purdom and also ‘bailiff’ when he witnessed baptisms for wigmaker John Scott, for Henry Orrock and for tailor John Scott. He was also ‘Bailie’ when he witnessed baptisms in 1709 for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for John Scott ‘Whitegate’, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood), in 1713 for his namesake the merchant Walter Elliot and in 1714 for candelmaker John Scott and for Bailie George Martin. He was ‘bailie of ye Regalitie’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert in 1717. He is described as ‘bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick’ in 1718, when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Dickson and also when his servant John Turnbull was rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. By 1721 he was ‘late Bailie Depute of the Regalitie’ (probably meaning he had given up the office, rather than being deceased) when he was recorded having provided ‘as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell in the year 1718’ (i.e. the axle for the bell). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. He married Marie Lindsay, and their son Francis was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1701; he was there described as ‘bailie’, with the witnesses being Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’ and James Ogilvie. He may also be the merchant in Hawick whose son Gideon was baptised in 1700, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash (after whom the child may have been named) and Bailie Walter Graham. Walter (d.1741) son of Henry of Peel. He was a naval surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, which shipwrecked off Patagonia. This event became infamous because of what followed, with the survivors marooned on an island in the southern winter. There was a mutiny and the crew split into groups. Walter was among officers who were set adrift before regrouping with some of the men and trying to row up the coast of Chile. After suffering several mishaps and enduring horrendous weather Walter became ill and was ashore with 4 officers when the 6 other men rowed off in the boat, never to be seen again. He died of starvation, while the others traded their last possession, a musket, and were taken in a canoe and were imprisoned by the Spanish, eventually to return to Britain. John Byron (later Vive-Admiral and grandfather of the poet Lord Byron) wrote ‘he died the death many others had done before him, being quite starved. We scraped a hole for him in the sand and buried him in the best manner we could’. Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer in Brugh. He was 3rd son of William in Whitehaugh and Braedlie (who repurchased Redheugh) and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. It is unclear whether he farmed at Brugh or if the appellation was just to distinguish him from other Walters. The name of his wife is not recorded. He had 7 children (the order of births being unknown): John, farmer at Adderstoneshiel, who married Helen Moffat from Garvald; Robert (b.c.1700), who married Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and whose children lived in Hawick; Adam in Harts, who married Mary Pott; George, who lived in Cuba; Helen, who in 1727 in Hawick Parish married James Gray, tenant in Whitlaw; William (b.1710) who was a cooper and married Hannah Scott; and Gilbert (b.1725) who was tenant in Blackburnfoot and married Betty Forbes. William was baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert in Cavers. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott in 1712. Their children included: Janet (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); John (b.1717); Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1724); Marie (b.1726); Bessie (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailie Walter Elliot (who was therefore clearly a different man, but perhaps related to him) and Francis Elliot. Walter (1702-bef. 21) only son of Adam of Teinds and grandson of Walter of Arkleton. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. He died before marrying and was succeeded by his sister Katherine. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1726 when his son James was baptised. There are several other children baptised in the parish who could be his. Walter of Ormiston (d.1777) probably son of Walter, he was one of the founders of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He (or perhaps his father) obtained Ormiston after 1734, when the last of the Gledstains of Cocklaw died, and he proceeded to build a mansion house there in 1747. Before that he was tenant in Bellendean and Braedhaugh. He was in Bellendean in 1736 and 1741 when two of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Walter, tenant in Bellendean, who was recorded as brother of Isobel, when she married Walter Turnbull of Firth in 1738. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1766 he wrote to the Duke of Buccleuch, in response to a suggestion that a woollen factory be developed on one of the Duke’s estates, proposing that Hawick would be the perfect place. He formed a partnership with others in 1769 (perhaps earlier), constituting the main Hawick carpet factory. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1735 in Roberton he married Margaret (b.1716), daughter of George Currier of Hartwoodburn. Their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: James (1736–1782), who inherited Clerklands; Andrew (b.1739); Simon (b.1741); Walter (1744–80), who died at Bellendean; and Helen (b.1747), who married Thomas Currier (perhaps a cousin), Bailie of Selkirk. The first 3 children were baptised at Bellendean and the last 2 at Braedhaugh (in Cavers Parish). He secondly married Isobel or ‘Tibbie’, (probably youngest, b.1708) daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, and she died in 1797 (being referred to as ‘Mrs. Elliot of Ormiston or Isobel Elliot of Borthbrae’. ‘Mrs Elliot of Ormston in Hawick’, who paid the female servant tax in 1789 and 1791, was probably his wife. Walter (18th C.) married Isobel Hogg in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Southdeanrig in 1757. His children included John (b.1757). He was probably related to William, who was at Southdeanrig at about the same time. Walter (b.1731) son of William from Robertson and Bessie Scott from Wilton. He was a resident of Wilton Parish. His children were born at Alton, ‘Moortown’ (probably Moorfarm or Muirfield) and Wester Groundstone. In 1758 he married Helen (or Elinor or Nelly) Robertson (or perhaps Robison) in Ashkirk Parish. Their children include: Elizabeth (b.1759); Elspeth (b.1761); Janet (b.1765); Violet (b.1773); Nelly (b.1776) and Mary (b.1779). John (b.1771), baptised in Robertson, son to Walter in Mabonlaw, may also have been his child. He may also be father of William (b.1676), also baptised in Robertson, son of Walter at Whithope. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Henderson’s Knowe, near Teviothead, where he is recorded in 1778. He married Isabel Grieve and their children included: Thomas (b.1776), farmer at Colterscleuch and Bowenhill; Christian (b.1778); William (b.1780), miller; Margaret (b.1783); John (b.1788), who emigrated to New York State; and Archibald. Walter (18th/19th C.) cooper at Dinlabyre. He is probably the farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John is recorded separately as farmer there (and with more horses), and so presumably a near relative. He married Isabel Douglas.
and their children included: Christian (b.1777); Adam (b.1779); John (b.1781); Adam (b.1790); and probably Catherine, Margaret, Henry, Elizabeth and Walter. He may be the son of Adam in Hartsaid born in 1762 (but that would make him too young to have married by 1777). Walter (1753/4–97) younger son of Robert in Hermitage and brother of John. He was probably tenant at Hermitage and also at Millburnholm. He was at Millburnholm in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is probably the Walter listed as a farmer at Hermitage on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Helen Crozier (c.1767–1851) from Brighouse. Their children were: Robert (1791–1858), who married Mary Murray from Whisgills and farmed at Hermitage; Jean (1792/3–1872), who married Henry Elliot from Coltersceleuch; John (1795/6–1834) in Templehall; and Helen (b.1797/8), who married Walter Scott, from Newton near Hawick. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Blaikie, who was from Wilton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1785. Walter (1762–1827) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd, son of Robert and Isobel Scott. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1802. Their daughters were Margaret (b.1803) and Isobel (b.1805), of whom Adam Brown painted miniature portraits, as well as Janet (b.1807). He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His wife Margaret carried on the business and is listed in the 1837 directory. Lt.-Col. Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809) christened in Roberton, he was a younger son of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He became Lieutenant Colonel in the 22nd Regiment of Foot (the same rank reached by his elder brother William, who changed his surname to Lockhart). He was recorded among heads of households in 1835. He may be the same as the shepherd at Castleton Townfoot in 1836 and 1837, farmer at Greenholm in 1838 and 1840, and labourer in Newcastle-in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as a flesher in Denholm in 1837. Sir Walter 4th Laird of Wolfee (1803–87), collector, Indian archaeologist, naturalist and sportsman. Born in Edinburgh, he was eldest surviving son of James, the 3rd Laird. He spent his early life at Hatreigge near Jedburgh and was educated at Hailburn in England. He had an illustrious career in the Indian Civil Service 1821–60, working with the Board of Revenue and as private secretary to Lord Elphinstone. He was later Vice-Chancellor of Madras University and a Member of the Council of the Governor of Madras, briefly serving as Provisional Governor. Early in his career he was captured during an uprising at Mahratta, and was imprisoned for 6 weeks. He was an early contributor to the ‘Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal’ and helped establish the ‘Madras Journal of Literature and Science’. In 1833 he travelled through the Middle East with Robert Pringle of Yair and others, being present at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre when about 500 pilgrims were crushed to death on Good Friday. In 1837 he was appointed private secretary to Lord Elphinstone (a distant cousin), Governor of Madras. He eventually rose to become a Member of the Council of Madras, which was the highest position a civilian could attain. He was responsible for rescuing the Amaravathi Marbles (now in the British Museum), compiled a history of the coins of southern India, donated his Indian coin collection to the British Museum and wrote...

an important work of ethno-botany ‘Flora Andhricia’ (1859). His hunting trophies from India were fixed around he entrance hall and staircase at Wolfelee. He only succeeded to the estates at the age of 52, and appointed William Oliver of Langraw as factor. In 1860 he returned permanently from India and retired to the family home at Wolfelee, where he had the House altered and extended and immersed himself in natural history and other projects. He was a Vice-President of the Archaeological Society. He donated several items to the Museum, including the bronze horde found near the summit of Ruberslaw in 1863. His collections have been the focus of an exhibit in the Museum, these included stuffed animals, Indian weapons and coins, and he also owned several Raeburn paintings. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1861. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1862. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He was heavily involved with the construction of the new Hobkirk Kirk in 1863, and was said to have an ‘unwavering belief in the truths of Christianity’. In 1867 he contributed a sketch of the history of ‘Denholm and its Vicinity’ to the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. In 1868 he also gave land for the erection of a new Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1871 he published a call for cooperation among regional societies of naturalists. He was listed as owner of Wolfelee on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. By 1875 he also owned part of Kirknowe, Wester Swanshie and half of Langraw. He was also on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He was knighted (as a Knight Commander of the Star of India) in 1866, waqqqs a Fellow of the Royal Society, as well as several other learned societies and was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1878. In 1885 he published a final volume of ‘Coins of Southern India’, reviewing the proofs by ear, since he was quite blind by then. In 1839 (in Malta) he married Maria Dorothea (1816–90), daughter of Sir David Hunter-Blair of Blairquhan (granddaughter of Sir James Hunter-Blair, Provost of Edinburgh). They had 6 children: James Thomas Spencer (1845–92), who succeeded; Walter Blair (1847–1869), Navy Lieutenant, who died at sea; Edward Hay Mackenzie (1852–1920), who succeeded his brother; Dorothea Helen, who in 1866 married William Elliott-Lockhart, 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae; Herman F., who served with the Black Watch and died childless in Mauritius; and Caroline Elizabeth, who married he cousin Arthur von Poelnitz. Lady Elliot was known as an outspoken woman, who shared in some of her husband’s interests and made Wolfelee an open house for visitors to the district. Sir Walter became blind in old age, but retained his memory to the end, which came suddenly. He is buried in the kirkyard at Chesters. His collection of the coins of Southern India was gifted to the British Museum. A limited-edition book ‘Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee: A Sketch of his Life and a few Extracts from his Notebooks’ was written by Robert Sewell in 1896. Walter F. (1804–74) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish and was a joiner in Chesters. In 1841 he is recorded as farmer at Abbotrule and in 1851 as joiner at ‘Abbotrule (penticle)’. In 1827 in Hobkirk Parish he married Margaret (1803–80), daughter of George Minto. Their children included: Helen (1828–1915); John (1830–1910); George (b.1831); William (b.1835); James (b.1837); Walter Henry (b.1841); Robert Henderson (b.1843); and Margaret (b.1849). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his family in 1852, joining his brother John, who had gone out about a decade earlier. They settled in Otsego County, New York. Walter (b.1811) son of John and Margaret Forrest, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a quarryman at Stitchehill Quarry. In 1861 he was listed as a blind quarryman, living with his mother on South Hermitage Street. Walter (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Lairhope in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and 1861. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Elliot and their children included: William (b.1843); Jane (b.1845); Thomas (b.1847); Walter (b.1850); James (b.1853); Margaret (b.1856); Jane (b.1858); and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1862). Walter (1828–93) son of Robert and Mary Murray. He was farmer at Hermitage in 1861, having taken over from his father. In 1861 he was living there with his sister Mary, a domestic servant and 3 farm workers. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1866. In 1864 he married Agnes, daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Robert (b.1865), who also farmed at Hermitage; Mary Murray (b.1867), who married John G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick; Janet Glendinning (b.1869), who died aged 14; and Ellen (b.1873), who married Archibald R. Oliver Rutherford of Dinlaybre. Walter (1840–99) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He was recorded as farmer at Twislehope in 1868. He married Anne Brown and their children were: Andrew (b.1874); James (b.1876); Eliza (b.1878), who married Thomas Potts; Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), who married Christopher Hether and Archibald Bridges; John (b.1881), married Anne Gwilliam; Anne (b.1883), married William Broatch; Sarah (b.1885), married Edmund Harvey Thompson and lived in Galt, Ontario; Walter (b.1887), married Gertrude Gwilliam; Agnes (b.1889), married Dennis Rivers Le Deau; Janet, died in infancy; and David (1898–1918), killed in action in France. In 1905, after his death, most of his family emigrated to Canada. Walter Nichol (1846–82) son of William and Christian Crozier, he was born in Liddesdale Parish. He married Mary Cowan, who died at the Golf House, Hawick in 1933, aged 85. Their daughter Jane Tait died in Hawick in 1892, aged 21. He himself died at Millburn. Walter Blair (1847–69) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in Madras, served in the Royal Navy, became a Lieutenant and died of yellow fever on H.M.S. Racoon. Walter (b.1851) eldest son of Thomas in Blackhaugh and descended from the Elliots of Newhall. He worked as a factor in Argyll, but in 1896 purchased Kirnدهe in Liddesdale. Later he also bought Walterhead of Dryfe in Dumfriesshire and was tenant at Clenries. His children were Mary, William (who became tenant of Middletown, Stow), Thomas and Walter. Walter of Harwood (1888–1958) son of auctioneer and farmer, William, he was born in Lanark. He was descended from the Elliots of Newhall, and hence Horsleyhill. His father purchased the estate of Harwood. He studied medicine at Glasgow University, and served with the Scots Greys during WWI, being decorated with the Military Cross and Bar. Early on he developed a centrist stance in politics, as well as an interest in science. He became a Conservative M.P. for Lanark, Kelvingrove, Scottish Universities and Kelvinside again, being Secretary of State for Scotland, Minister of Health, Minister of Agriculture, Financial Secretary to the Treasury and Privy Councillor. He was Rector of Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities, Lord High Commissioner to the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and made a Companion of Honour. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933 and also made a Freeman of Edinburgh and Lanark. Late in life he settled in the estate at Harwood that his father had purchased. He suffered a terrible accident at Hawick Station in 1943, trying to catch a moving train on an icy morning, when he fell between the platform and the carriage, breaking his pelvis and other bones. It took him most of the year to recover from his injuries. In 1956 he was appointed Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was described as ‘a big man physically and he was a big man in his mental range and in scholarship and courage – a Borderer to the very marrow of his bones’. In 1919 he married Helen, daughter of Lt.-Col. Hamilton, but this ended with a tragic accident on the Isle of Skye during their honeymoon. In 1934 he remarried, to Katherine, daughter of Sir Charles Tennant of Peeblesshire, who became Baroness Elliot of Harwood in 1958. He died suddenly and is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Walter (1834–) Selkirk-based poet and historian. He spent his early life in the Ettrick valley, served in the K.O.S.B., then worked as a fencer and woodcutter, before a fractured skull led him to change career to being a museum assistant, performer and writer. His books include Clash-ma-clavers chap book’ (1985), ‘Song for Yarrow’ (1991) and the series of guide-books ‘Ballads Trail’ (2000), ‘James Hogg Trail’ (2000) and ‘Sir Walter Scott Trail’ (2000), as well as in ‘Jorum: six poets in Border Scots’ (2000). William (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Perth who signed the Ragman’s Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as ‘William Alight’. Since there is a strong suggestion that the Border Elliots came via the Perth and Angus areas, it seems possible that he was the direct ancestor of the first Laird of Redheugh, perhaps given lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 14th century. William ‘One-Eyed’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘monoculus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as Richard ‘parvus’. William of Gorrenberry (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willielmo Elwando’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infest Robert of Redheugh in the lands of Larriston. In 1489 he was one of the men further directed to infest Robert of Redheugh in other lands, there recorded as ‘Wilielmo elvad de gounibery’. He may also be the William who was witness (along with Ninian, Robert, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ and others) to a saisine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. He was probably closely related to the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston, as were the later Elliots of Gorrenberry. However, it has also been suggested that this branch of the family was one of the ‘twelve great families’ of Elliots who came to Liddesdale in the 14th century. William (15th C.) recorded in the records of the Justice-aire held at Jedburgh in 1493. Hector Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including associating with him and ‘alias fures de branxhame’ (i.e. other thieves of Bransholme). In 1494/5 John and Thomas Liddersdale in Hawick were allowed to ‘compone’ for aiding the ‘elwaldis de branxhame’ in their crimes. It thus appears that there was a branch of the Elliots living near Bransholme at that time, although it is unclear how they might have been related to other Elliots. Perhaps the same William ‘elwald’ was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for crimes that included resetting him and Robert Heiton. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Willelm elwald’ in 1494/5 when he failed to appear along with 85 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Wighholms, Croizers and others. This resulted in fines for the Lord of Liddesdale (Patrick, Earl of Bothwell) and the Captain of Hermitage (George Turnbull of Hallrule). His name was given first, suggesting he may have been an important member of the clan. Ralph, listed as brother of William in 1494/5 may have been his brother. Perhaps the same William was also described as ‘Wilzam Elwald’, son-in-law of George Armstrong in a document of 1500, listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Several other men of the same name are mentioned in that document, e.g. William and David, sons of William (who may have been his sons, but without further designation it is impossible to say). William (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but David (also son of William) was probably his brother. William ‘Siders’ (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed as ‘Willelm elwald syders’. He is also recorded in the 1498 pledge to Patrick Earl of Bothwell, along with many other Elliots, Armstrongs and others. He is listed there as ‘Wilzam Elwald, Siders’; the designation is possibly the same as ‘Side’. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1501/2 as ‘William Elwath his follower’ when Andrew Kerr of Fernihurst received the lands of Feu-Rule from their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He may have been acting as Kerr’s Bailie. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Ramsigill’ in a list of Elliots and others given respite for their crimes in 1510. Since Robert of Redheugh is listed with only a small number of other Elliots, this might suggests he was closely related to the chief, as well as to Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope. He may be the same William ‘in Rammilgill’ recorded as a tenant of Whitrope in 1541; the other tenants were Leon, John and Robert. He must have been related to Robert who was also ‘in Ramsmisgill’ in 1541. William of Larriston (15th/16th C.) second son of Robert of Redheugh, 11th Chief, recorded in 1511. He is listed as brother of Robert of Redheugh in a ‘respite’ given in 1515/6. In 1516 he had a further respite in the Register of the Privy Seal, where he is ‘William Elwald of Larestanis’. A number of other Elliots are also listed, specifically those at Mosspatrick, Dinlees, Thorlieshope, Sundhope and Heuchhouse and ‘Bagget’, and others bound to them, including men by the name of Forester, Thomson, Gledstains, Turner, ‘Leche’, Atkinson, Caverhill, Rowill (presumably Rule), Lawson, Wilson, White, Telfer, Nixon, Henderson, Simpson, Hunter, Davidson, ‘Billop’ (i.e. Billhope), Warwick, Dickson, Noble, Burn and ‘Purdoun’ (Purdom). He was probably serving as chief of the Elliots in 1516, since Robert of Redheugh (his nephew perhaps) had been killed at Flodden, and the next in line Robert was probably still a minor. He probably led the clan during the minority of the next Robert of Redheugh (probably his grand-nephew). He may be the William of Larriston who is recorded in 1547, along with William ‘younger’ (so presumably his son). He is said to have married the heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and to have had one son, whose son was Gavin, the first Elliot of Horsleyhill (if this was not William, then perhaps he had another son). He may be the Elliot of Larriston whose daughter married Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘William Elwald in M’Patrick’ in a ‘respite’ of 1516 to William of Larriston and a large number of neighbouring Elliots and others. He may be related to the William in Mosspatrick recorded in 1541. William (15th/16th C.) listed in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale. He appears as being ‘in Heuchous’, this probably being Heuchhouse near Dinlabyre. The later Martin of Heuchhouse is surely his descendant. William (16th C.) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528, along with Thomas. Perhaps the same William is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535, along with Elliot (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 as being in Layheuch (i.e. Leaungh) along with brothers James and Simon. They were entered by Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald for breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk and stealing 100 merks worth of cloth, hides, etc. They were also bound not to harm Thomas Graham or his friends and servants in the future. He was presumably related somehow to the Redheugh branch. William (16th C.) referred to as ‘Williame Elliot callit Bruk’ in 1540/1 when he had respite for treasonable acts, including not being at the Solway raid and associating with the Douglases. One possibility is that his name is associated with ‘Brugh’. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1540/1 when he was given respite for being at the horn. He had been tried in Kelso, but since then had found surety. It is unclear where he was from. William (16th C.) tenant of Mosspatrick recorded in the rental roll of Liddesdale in 1541. Williams with no designation are also listed as tenants of several other farms, including ‘Pantodene’, Singdean, Heuchhouse and the small steadings of Clearlands, etc. It is unclear if some of these were the same men. He was probably related to the William recorded in Mosspatrick in 1516. William ‘Cock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Willie ‘White Sark’ and Clement Crozier, accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at ‘Tredermayn’. His name is listed as ‘Wilkoke Elwald’, which seems likely to be a combination of his forename and nickname. The same ‘Wilcokes Elwald’ was listed along with Clem Crozier and Robin of Thorlieshope, accused in 1541 of resetting English fugitive Robsons. He may have been related to ‘Cock’ Crozier and it seems likely he was father of ‘Wilcokies Hob’ recorded in 1569, as well as ‘Wilcox’ Gawen Elliott’ recorded in 1587/8. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William ‘White Sark’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with ‘Wilkoke’ and Clement Crozier. They were accused of having raided ‘Tredermayn’ and killed Englishman Robert Hall. His name is given as ‘Willy Elwald called ‘whitsarke’. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwals’. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘William Elwode John Crossier sister sone’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The John mentioned here, who was presumably his mother’s brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, possibly the son of ‘Cock Crozier’, who seemed to be chief of the Slitrig valley branch of the family a generation earlier. William (16th C.) resident of Whitliehope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. William of Larriston (16th C.) recorded as ‘Ellot of Larestanis’ in 1556 when he had a bond for entering William Nixon to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may have been the son of the previous William of Larriston, and the ‘younger’ mentioned along with William of Larriston in 1547. He is probably the ‘yowng Wylliam Elwald’ involved with a bond to enter some Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst in 1546; however, his brother Simon was witness on his behalf. He also (along with Robert of Redheugh and Archibald) had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548; he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the ‘Williame Elliot, callit young Williame’ listed (after Robert of Redheugh) in 1561 among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is surely the ‘William Elliot of Lamestone’ recorded in part of the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1565, along with Gavin of Horsleyhill and William of Falnash. For his non-appearance John Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of the Crook were fined and he was denounced as a rebel. However, he may be confused with William of Braidlie, who was also described as being ‘of Larriston’. William ‘Elder Will’, ‘the Tod’ (d.bef. 1586) recorded in 1561/2 in a bond between Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter a Routledge. The other Elliots were Archie in Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin, and John of Copshaw (all of whom may have been relatives). He is also recorded in 1567 when his son John was captured in Hawick for being a Liddesdale thief. In 1569 he was ‘elder Will Elliot’ when he was pledge ‘for himself and his hail branche’, with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. Also in 1569 he was ‘Elder Will the Tod’ when held in Blackness Castle as pledge for his eldest son and also ‘David Carling his brother’. In 1570 he was among a group of Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of his son Hob, as well as John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for one of his sons (name not given) in 1577, according to the register of the Privy Council. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had been among the sureties for an earlier assurance for his son Hobbie, as well as John of the Heuchhouse. He is also recorded in 1580/1 when his son John was convicted of rieving. In 1581 he was ‘Will Elliott, called Elder Will’, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. His sons David and Martin signed the bond of assurance for the English Wardens, taking ‘the burden upon us for ourselves, brethren, and brethren bainres and servants. He is probably the ‘Willie the Tod’ from Liddesdale who was already deceased in 1586 when his son William was granted a lease of the lands of ‘Culgatis’. He may be the Will of Heuchhouse accused along with Martin’s Archie in 1590, of stealing from ‘Halliden’ and additionally he was named among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them; however, these are probably his son William. The Will of Heuchhouse accused (along with Rich and others) accused of rading into England in 1595 may have been his son William. William ‘Wedder-Neck’ (d.1561) hanged in 1561 for the crimes of theft and reset, along with Peter Turnbull (‘the Monk’) and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. His name is recorded as ‘Will Elliot, callit Woddir-nek’. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adderstoneshie, Alexander and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. His name is recorded as ‘Will Elliot of the Barmouthis’, which seems likely to have been Burnmouth near Saughtree (although perhaps there was another place of the same name in the Slitrig valley, where the Gledstains’ lands were). William (16th C.) listed as ‘bastard sone to vmqle Robert Elliot’ in the 1564 trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others. His father may have been Robert, 15th of Redheugh. He may be the ‘William Elliot of the Redhughe’ who was among several Elliots accused by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from ‘Symwhaite’. He may also be the William, brother of ‘Robin Elliot’ accused of raiding Englishman Andrew Taylor’s livestock and goods in 1582. William (d.1580) 5th Laird of Horsleyhill, he was the 2nd son of Gavin, the 1st Laird. He is presumably the William, along with his father Gavin and brothers Andrew and Robert, accused of murdering Hugh Douglas in about 1547. In the late 1550s he was involved in the family dispute over the lands of Newbigging in Hassendean and in 1563 was arguing with John Scott in Catslack. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill who witnessed a bond in 1561/2 between several Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1563/4, along with his brother Robert, in a case involving the Scotts of Tushielaw stealing cattle from Bailielee; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1564 he was listed as ‘fadir bruther and tutour’ to Gavin, son of the deceased Robert of Horsleyhill; this was in connection to the complaint by John Turnbull of Hassendean against Dand (who was also his brother). In 1564 it was presumably he (although the Lairdship around this time seems hard to follow) who was found guilty of involvement in the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; also involved were Robert, Gavin and Archibald, who were probably his brothers. He was banished after this, but was pardoned in 1565 by Queen Mary (perhaps because of his marriage to a Kerr). He purchased the lands of Horsleyhill from his nephew William, initially in 1568 for a period of 15 years, finally buying them.

outright from William’s wife Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1569 he also bought the Middle Mains of Hassendean from his nephew. In 1572/3 he promised the Regent that his family, servants and tenants would continue to be obedient subjects, with Thomas Weir of Kirkton as cautioner (it is unclear what events this was in response to). In 1574/5 he was involved in a court case where Scott of Buccleuch claimed some lands; he was able to prove that he was infested in Westerhouses, Clarilaw and Hassendeanburn, but his superior, William Douglas of Cavers, was instructed to remove him from the lands of Catslack. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to settle the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles; his brother Gavin was also summoned. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for his steading of Easter Montbenger. He may be the William ‘of Torslyhill’ (if this is an error for ‘Horslyhill’) on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Border Lairds. He married Elizabeth Kerr sometime before 1556, and secondly in 1569 married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas of Cavers. He had at least 2 children: Robert, who succeeded; and William of Caveling, (b.1572), Burgess of Peebles, who married Christian Chisholme. James in Peebles may have been another son. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as ‘Wille Ellot’ and he may have been related to Dand, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. William ‘Ringan’s Will’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 when his son ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar’ was among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is separately recorded in 1579 as ‘Ringanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoran’. He may have been related to Ninian, tenant in Ewesdoors and Glenvoran (with Will, son of Ringan the Porter also named in the same citation). Possibly the same ‘Ringanis Wille Elliot’ was listed in 1611 for not appearing at court in Jedburgh. William ‘Grey Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’. He was listed in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England. His name there is given as ‘Will Elliott, called Gray Will’. He is also listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Park branch. His name is given as ‘Will Elliot, gray Wille’. He is probably father of ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’, who is also listed. He is ‘Gray Will’ when listed along with Jock of the Park in a list of Borderers in the 1580s. William (16th C.) recorded in Lindean in 1580/1 when he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Robert Fletcher, witnessed in Selkirk. William ‘Jock’s Willie’ (16th C.) warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was recorded in 1581 when he was released from being warded as pledge for the ‘gang’ of Elliots of Burnhead. Hob, brother of Gavin’s Hob (this may be an error for Gavin’s Jock) of Ramsiegill remained as pledge for these Elliots. Also in 1581 he was ‘Will Elliott, called Jokis Willie, pledge for the haill gang of Ramsygill’. He was also recorded in 1582/3, when Martin of Braidlie, Gavin’s Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were fined by the Privy Council for his non-appearance, along with ‘Ill Hob’. He was ‘plege for the haill gang of Ramsygill, quha wer ressavit be thame out of ward of the tolbuith of Edinburgh’. ‘Ill Hob’ of Ramsiegill was his brother, and presumably they were both sons of Jock. His son may be the ‘Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheads’ recorded in 1595. William ‘Will the Lord’ (16th C.) recorded in Monipenne’s list of Border chiefs of c.1594. He is listed under Ewesdale along with ‘John the Portars Son’ and ‘Will of the Devisleyes’. In 1569 he is ‘Will Elliot callit the Lord’ when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for John of Fiddleton, Hob ‘the Lady’ and Hob of Unthank, all Elliots of Ewesdale. In 1578/9 he is ‘Will Elliot, callit the Lord’, when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and other Elliots of Ewesdale) not to raid into England. It is possible he is the same man as Will of Fiddleton. William (16th C.) merchant recorded in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He may have lived near Riddell, or otherwise was from Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Will of Devisleyes’ in Monipennie’s list published about 1594 (although probably compiled earlier). He is listed among the Elliots of Ewesdale. It is possible that the place is a misreading of ‘Eweslees’. William (16th C.) son of ‘Jock’s Willie’, although it is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant in Mosspatrickhope in 1558 when he appeared on a list of Armstrong, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of various crimes. He and 2 others gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry to the English Wardens in 1584. He is recorded as being 'of Morspatrikshors' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs (published around 1594) along with 'Archie Keene' under the heading 'Gorumberie'. He is probably related to the William who was tenant in Mosspatrick in 1541. William 'Archie's Will' (16th C.) second son of Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry. He is first mentioned around 1556 and probably still alive in 1596. In about 1556 he is 'Vil Elliot callit Arche Wille' when, along with Walter Scott, he rented 'Westcoit' in Ringwoodfield from the monks of Melrose. He is probably the William 'callit Archeis Will' listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. His brother 'Gawin Elwald' also appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide the names of thieves. He was 'of Gorrinberry' when witnessing a bond of his father's in 1561/2, and hence must have acquired Gorrenberry by then. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for him and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. He is recorded in 1569 acting as surety for his tenants in a bond of security signed at Hawick (but not listing any tenants explicitly); he is there recorded as 'Will Elliot alias Archeis Will'. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and Sim of Dodburn), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was also one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin of Falnash in 1569. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the William 'of Gorrunberry' who was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Douglas of Cavers over the lands of Caerlenrig (which had been held on wadset by his father from Douglas' father). Douglas tried to have him removed from the lands, and in 1576 the case was still not settled, with his sisters having to confirm that he was still alive. He may be the William in Gorrenberry who was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Kerrs and also summoned with other Border Lairds (including Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braiddie) to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is recorded as 'William Elliott of Goddamburie' when accused along with Tom of Copshaw, the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was said to have been part of the group who raided Carlisle Castle to free 'Kimmont Willie', being named by an English informer as 'Will Elott goodman of Gorrombye' (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself). In 1590 he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh were accused of rieving from the Lord Warden's tenants. He is probably the William 'of Gorrumberrie' in 1599 (unless this was a son) among Elliots who signed a bond at Branxholme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; along with Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braiddie and Jock of Copshaw he was listed as one of the 'principallis of oure brench'. His son may have been the 'Willie's Archie' who, along with many other Elliots, signed bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599; he did this with his hand on the notary's pen 'because I can nocht wryte my selff'. He is the 'doughty Willie o’ Gorrenberry' in some versions of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead'. William 'Will o the Steele' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when he and his brother Hob of the Shaws were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlaciehope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. A letter from Sir John Forster in 1576 complains that his brother John 'Elwood' had stolen 100 sheep from his lands in Hexhamshire. In 1581/2 his son William was listed among men accused of raiding Harwood-on-Teviot. He was listed among the Elliots of the Braiddie branch in 1583. In 1584 he was among the Elliots of the Thorlaciehope branch who gave assurances to the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1590 there is a complaint by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid into England made by both old and young 'Will Elliot of the Steill' in 1588, and in 1590 there was a further complaint against 'Will of the Steile the elder, and his son Will'. The younger William is also recorded on his own in a further accusation in 1590, while he was accused in 2 separate cases, where he is 'elder Will of the Steile' (and 'Steill') and in a further complaint of 1590 (for stealing from Englishman John Armstrong 2 years earlier) where his is just 'Will of the Steill'. Both he and his son were among men accused in 1590 of having raided the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Both he and his son are on a 1590 list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braiddie) accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. Also in 1590 he is 'old Will Elliot of the Steile' listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh.

Hence it seems likely that all mentions of Will of the Steele after that date are probably for his son. William (16th C.) recorded as possessor of the fields in ‘rindaill’ near Hermiston for which in 1580 Patrick Johnstone gave sasine to his father John Johnstone’s wife Marion Wilson. William ‘Will’ of Hartsgarth (16th/17th C.) probably 2nd son of Robert (15th) of Redheugh. He was hence brother of Robert (16th) of Redheugh, as well as ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairties’, Archibald and Gavin of Brugh. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Robyn’s Will’ and was recorded as early as 1581. He was said to have ridden with his brother on raids into England and the pair were involved in a dispute with Scott of Buccleuch. In 1581 he is probably the Robert, listed along with Gavin as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Baillielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). In a letter from Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor he is ‘Will Elliot of Harskarth’, brother of the chief. He was accused of leading a group of Liddesdale and Teviotdale men on an attack into Mindrum in England in 1583/4, in which several men were killed and a number taken prisoner; these being freed by the King and the Warden had orders to get him to repay what was stolen, but that had still not been done by 1590/1. In a letter from the King in 1584 he is described as ‘Will Elliot of Hartstarth bry’ to Robene of Reidhwech. He was ‘of Harkescarth, called Robyns Will’ when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; Martin’s Airchic was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. He served as a guardian for his nephew Robert (17th) of Redheugh; in about 1590 he was listed as ‘Well Elliot of Hartsarcth, tutour of Reidheuch’ among the landed men of the Borders. In 1593 he was ‘of Lariston’ when accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England, along with Scott of Buccleuch. He was also ‘William Elliot of Lawreston’ when accused in 1593 (along with Martin of Braudlie and Kinmont Willie Armstrong) of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. In 1593 he was ‘of Hartscarthar’ when accused of killing 2 Tynedale men called Dods. In 1594 there was a complaint against him by Englishman Gilbert Park of ‘Warton’. In 1595/6 he complained about men of Tynedale who was stolen cattle from him, and was himself involved on a retaliatory raid into England; he was there ‘Will Elliot of Larrestone alias Harshkarth’. He was ‘of Larestone’ in 1594/5 when there was an attempt to deliver Jock Graham as prisoner in his stead. He is probably one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He appears to have held Hartsgarth through wadset until 1595/6, when it was gained by William of Larriston (son of Martin of Braudlie). In 1597 he (along with his nephew Robert of Redheugh and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. He was also known as William ‘of Rigg’ until 1622, when Wiminstonrig was sold by his brother, and he received 2500 merks for his share. In 1605 he represented his mother, Marion Hamilton, in a complaint against the Douglases. Some time before 1608 he married his half-cousin Jean, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Edgerston, with her mother being a daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs; this may be garbled into him being the ‘William called ‘Neck of Steel’, a son of Robert Elliot of Laristoun’, who is said to have married Joan, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, the ‘Black Laird’ of Edgerston. He may have married a second time, since in 1642 the deceased Jean Rutherford is described as his 1st wife. He probably had children, but this branch of the Elliots was extinct by 1634 (as stated in the matriculation of arms for Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1673).

Note that some genealogies suggested he had 3 sons, including William of Roan, but this may be confusion with another William, perhaps the son of Martin of Braudlie. His children probably included: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis, who succeeded his brother; and James, who was ‘second lawful son’ in 1639. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) son of William, ‘callit the Tod’. He is probably the eldest son (name not given) of ‘Elder Will the Tod’, who, along with his brother ‘David Carling’, were the pledges for whom their father was held in Blackness Castle in 1569. In 1586 he was granted a lease of the lands of ‘Culgatis’ in Liddesdale by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It is unclear where exactly these lands were. Given a connection with ‘Tod’, it is probable he was son of ‘Elder Will’. William (16th C.) tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother Archie, he was accused of ‘a great strough at the Eschelles in England’. William of Falnash (probably their laird) was surety for them at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to other Elliots associated with Dodburn. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Scottish and English Wardens. His name is written as ‘Wille Elliot, called Cowcaughes’ when he was delivered as a pledge for the crimes of Hob (who may have been related). Probably the same man was ‘Will Elliott, called Cowsauche’ listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He may be related to John ‘Cowshawes’ who is recorded in 1590. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded along with ‘Riche Elliott of the Hewghhouse’ in 1595, as well as another Elliot called Hob. They were accused of stealing horses from a farm in England. William of Braidlie (d.1606/7) 2nd son of Martin, who was probably responsible for the burning of Hawick in 1565. He was known as ‘Will o the Dale’, as well as being ‘of Larriston’, ‘of Hartsgarth’ (although this may be confusion with a different man, brother of Robert of Redheugh) and later ‘of Dinlabyre’. He may be the ‘Will Elliot of Bradlie’ who entered the bond of 1557 to bring ‘Robene Pet’ to the Warden, John Kerr of Ferniehirst (although that seems too early, and hence may be a different William). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1574 he was one of the hostages taken by the Regent Morton to ensure the good behaviour of the clan and was held by James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee. In 1578, there was a pledge to the King after he was released by Scrimgeour; he was there referred to as William, son of Martin. However, within a few months he headed 200 men on a raid into Tynedale. He may have spent time in the wars in Flanders and France, since he is not recorded for more than a decade. He was ‘of Larriston’ in 1593 and 1594 (making him possibly confused with another family branch). He led the Elliots and Armstrongs in a massive raid on Tynedale in 1593, with as many as 1,000 men taking part; they drove more than 2,000 head of livestock back to Scotland, as well as taking £300 in goods. In 1595 he was ‘of Lareston’ when his servants John and Clement Nixon were complained about for a raid into England. In 1595/6 he may be the same man as ‘William Elliott of Harscat a principal actor in the attempt of Tyndale’ delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to Sir John Forster (this is presumably Hoscote, but it is not entirely clear if this is the same or a different William). In 1596 he was ‘Wille Elliott of Lairston’ when (along with Walter Scott of Harden and the young Laird of Whithaugh) accused of stealing a large number of cattle and horses from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkinascarre’. He was ‘Will Elliott of Larestane’ in 1597 among a list of men the English Warden demanded pledges for. He is probably the ‘William Ellwald of Duneleabryre’ listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597 as hostages for the general peace on the Border. He remained a prisoner for more than 2 years, despite pleas by several Elliots for his release. In 1598/9 he was ‘William Elwood, elder’, (to distinguish him from a youngster of the same name) among a group of Scotsmen who tried to escape from their English prison. In 1600 there was an offer to substitute his son Robert, which was rejected; however, he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh escaped soon afterwards. He may also be the William ‘of Eskez’ listed in 1600 (along with William of Clintwood and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh) as the men delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Warden as pledges for Liddesdale; after his escape from York he is described as ‘Will of Hescottes an Elwood’, suggesting he is the same William who was tenant in Hoscote (but then the designations become hopelessly confused!). In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar, then Commissioner on the Border. He married Mary, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and their children were: Robert of Dinlabyre; Gavin of Braidlie; and William of Braidlie. He was hanged at Foulden Justice Court along with his nephew Martin and other Elliot and Armstrong leaders. William (1546/7- aft. 1616) 4th Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, he succeeded from his brother Gavin when he was 19. In 1566 he was served as heir to Gavin in a Precept of Clare Constat of the Middle Mains of Hassendean and of Horsleyhill, from the superior, Alexander, Lord Home. He then settled the ‘4 merk land’ of Horsleyhill on his wife, Margareta Turnbull. There is no record of children for the couple. In 1569 he gave a charter of the lands to his uncle William and in 1570/1 his wife sold Horsleyhill to his uncle William. However, it appears he also sold Horsleyhill and the Mains of Hassendean to his uncle Gavin in 1572, with his uncle William taking the case to court, with Gavin’s infeftment being annulled in 1574/5. In 1573 he also sold Caveling to his uncle William. He may be the William of Horsleyhill who is recorded in a bond of 1594/5, when James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledged that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm him or Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1616 he is recorded acknowledging the redemption of the reversion of the Middle Mains of Hassendean, granted by his grandfather Gavin of Horsleyhill to Lord Home in 1555. He may be the William of Horsleyhill whose son Robert ‘Ellet’ is among those listed in the King’s 1594 ‘respite’ for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands; if so, then he had at least one child. William ‘Will o the Steele’ (16th/17th C.) son of the elder William. In 1588 both old and young ‘Will Elliott of the Steill’ were complained about for a raid. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘William Elliott of the Steile the younger’ among a group of Elliots and others who took livestock and goods from Over Wardens in England. Also in 1590 both he and his father were accused of leading a raid on Catton, where they took livestock and prisoners. He was further accused in 1590 (along with Shiel and Nixons) of stealing from Roland Walker. Both he and his father were accused in 1590 of being in a group of Elliots and others who raided Dotland about 2 years earlier. He is listed along with Elliots and others accused in 1590 of stealing from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. Both he and his father are on a list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. In 1596 there was a complaint that he and others (including Anthony Elliott of Binks and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. In 1597 he is listed among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. In 1597 he was ‘William Ellwald of Steale’ when he was among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. However, he was recorded as ‘Will Ellwood alias Will of the Stile’ when released on a bond to return to Scotland; however, he soon led a raid into Tynedale, taking 200 head of cattle and 30 horses in broad daylight, so that the English Wardens called for his execution. He may have escaped punishment, since he is recorded in 1599 as ‘Will of the Steill’ when, along with many other Elliots, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch. William of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlaybre. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of the Binks (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Simon of Philhope and grandson of Martin of Braidlie. This line of Elliots of Binks is easy to confuse with the slightly later line that came from the Elliots of Fahnash. His wife’s name is not recorded. Their children were: Anthony ‘in Roucheie’; Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656); James; and Robert (d.1663). William ‘Will’ of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded occupying Fiddleton in 1567. In 1578/9 John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him, that he would not raid into England. He was complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He is probably the ‘Will of Fyttington’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and other prisoners and ransom them. Also in 1590 he was listed first in a group of Elliots and about 80 others accused of stealing from ‘Trowhen’ and killing 2 Englishmen in 1589, with the complaint repeated in 1590; he was there ‘Will Elliott of Fydderton’. Additionally in 1590 he was the first in a list of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was also among a group accused of having earlier stolen livestock and goods from the same people. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. In about 1600 Sir James Sandilands complained about the theft of 2 horses by him. He was probably the Will of Fiddleton listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605: his sons John and Ringan were also listed as fugitives. He was apparently still alive in 1608 when his son Ninian was sentenced to be executed for killing one of the King’s Guards while trying to escape arrest. William, son of John of Burngrains, was also convicted (and the records confusingly also switch the 2 men’s fathers in one part, so it is possible that his son was William and not Ninian). He must have been related to the Gavin and John recorded in 1606. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Will Elliot, sone to Will Elliot of the Steill’ in 1581/2, when he was among men accused of raiding the farm of Harwood-on-Teviot. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. William ‘Will’ of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. His name is given as ‘Will Ellott of Thorleshoppe ‘Renyon Will’, suggesting that his father was Ninian. William 3rd Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1620) son of Gavin. He is first recorded in 1564, when he was ‘Gawenis Willie, of Fallinesche’ at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; he was denounced as rebel for not appearing, but must have been rehabilitated later. In 1566 he was among a group of Elliots cited for attacking the Pringles and killing George Pringle of Torwoodlee; this was part of a feud between the 2 families. He also purchased ‘Hoscoit’ (i.e. Hoscote). In 1575 he was listed as son of Gavin of Falnash among those summoned to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. In 1579/80 he was charged by John Carmichael, Keeper of Liddesdale, with raids into England. He is probably the William of Falnash who signed the Assurance of Liddesdale with the English Warden Sir John Forster in 1584; this was along with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, making it clear that he was an important Elliot chief at that time. In 1586 he was cited along with 15 other Border Lairds for failing to bring their followers to justice. He was also surety for 2 of his tenants in 1586, Will in Dodburn and his brother Archie; however, the fines were not paid and by 1590 he was ‘put to the horn’ (although he must have somehow been reprieved). He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He is probably the ‘Williame Ellet in Fellinesche’ listed (along with his son Robert and many others) in the King’s ‘respite’ of 1594 for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. In about 1590 he is listed among the landed men of the Borders. He is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He may be one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In 1598 there were complaints by the widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig against several of his ‘brother’s, tenants and servants’. Also in 1598 there were complaints to the Privy Council by Sir James of Sandilands about raids on his property in which his name is listed. Along with his son Robert, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disordouris of the Bourdours’. In 1602 he signed the ‘New General Band’ along with other Border landlords. He received 500 merks for redemption on the lands of Outersiderig with Walter Scott of Synton. He then purchased the farms of upper Ewesdale from the Earl of Home, specifically Mosspeebles, Over and Nether Woodend, Unthank, Fiddleton, Blackhall and Mosspaull; he forced out the former tenants. After Martin of Braidlie and Prickenhaugh was executed in 1607, he paid the 4000 reversion money to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and acquired the lands of Braidlie in the Barony of Hawick. In 1607 he was cautioner for John Elliot of Copshaw, who was found guilty of the murder of George Pringle of Torwoodlee; he had to pay the fine of 500 marks on the non-appearance of John of Copshaw. He had a charter of the lands of Arkleton (presumably purchased from the Armstrongs) in 1611. Also in 1611 he served as cautioner in Jedburgh for Gavin ‘of the Schawis’ and for the Laird of Foulshiel. Additionally he was part of an assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping the peace in the Borders. In 1618 he is referred to as ‘William called of Falnash in Braidley’, suggesting he had already passed Falnash to his eldest son. He had 4 sons: Robert of Falnash, J.P. in Roxburghshire who married Marion Scott; John of Arkleton, also called ‘of Falnash’, who married Ester Armstrong; Archibald, who is mentioned in 1595; and probably one other, who owned Unthank, and whose children were the Elliots of Meikledale, Mosspeeble, Unthank and Eweslees. William (16th C.) tenant in Falnash Mill in 1589. He was listed among the ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash who were complained about by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. William (d.c.1608) son of John of Burngrains. Listed (along with his brother Hob) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Along with Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton (although they are also confusingly listed the other way round, with his father being Will of Fiddleton) he was sentenced to execution in 1608 for killing one of the King’s Guards while resisting arrest. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for crimes including theft and murder. William of Caveling...
Elliot

(b.1572) 2nd son of William, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. His mother was Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers. In 1592 he was passed over (in favour of Gavin Elliott of Stobs) as tutor to his nephew William of Horsleyhill because he was still too young. In 1599 he was described as indweller and Burgess of Peebles; his connection was through his uncle, Archibald Douglas, who was Parish in Peebles. He was served heir to his father in some lands in 1603, when he was described as a Burgess of Peebles. About this time he sold Caveling to Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1604 he bought (under wadset and reversion) the lands of Cruxton from Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was listed in 1607 among Douglasses and others who swore not to harm the Horsburghs. He may be the William ‘called of Horsliehill’ who was among the group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608. Also in 1608 he rescued a man who was chased into his house in Peebles by a gang of his enemies. He was still living in 1610. He married Christian Chisholme. William of Gorrenberry (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he was one of the cautioners for ‘Kirstie Elliott callit Hobis Kirstie’. Other cautioners included Robert of Redheugh, Archie of Clintwood, Martin’s Hob and William of Prickinghough, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also witness in 1613 to the infeftment of the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other Elliots of Gorrenberry or of Redheugh. William (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Clintwood. He is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. His name is repeated in 1600, when the list of pledges for Liddesdale, delivered to the English Warden by Buccleuch consisted of him, William ‘of Eskez’ (possibly ‘Hoscote’, and probably his uncle, William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre) and Simon Armstrong of Whitaugh. He was described as ‘young Elwood’, also called ‘the boye’ when listed in 1598/9 as one of the Liddesdale prisoners in England. In 1600 (after the other 2 Liddesdale pledges had escaped from prison in York) he is described as son of ‘an Ellwood called Martins Archie’, making it clear that he was a grandson of Martin of Braidlie. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Will Elliott in Burnheheid, called Murth’. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Burnhead and may also have been related to Jock ‘the Murth’. William ‘Gleyd Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men those who were fugitives for not appearing in a Borders Commissioners’ court in Hawick in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Gleyd Will’. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin and Agnes Lorraine. In 1618 his mother granted him her half husbandland of lands in Lilliesleaf. He later deponed this land to Andrew Riddell, as confirmed in a service of heirs to Walter Riddell in 1702. William of Prickinghough (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to the 1613 infeftment for Robert of Redheugh in his lands. It is unclear how he was related to Christie (son of ‘Martin’s Hob’ of Prickinghough) who was declared a rebel in 1611. Also in 1611 he was one of the cautioners for ‘Kirstie Elliott callit Hobis Kirstie’, with others including Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and Martin’s Hob, some of whom were probably relatives. William of Rig (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, 16th Chief and brother of Robert. He may have been raised partly by his step-father Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He was probably the brother of Robert of Redheugh who had a bond to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was witness to the infeftment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands in 1613. He may also have been known as ‘of Hartsgarth’. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Jean Elliott, co-heiress of Stobs. Their children were: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis (d.bef. 1699), related to the Elliots of Dinlabyre; and James (d.bef. 1699). He may be the William of Hartsgarth who died in 1613 and whose great-grandson William of Dinlabyre was Kene’. He was acquitted of charges at court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to Archie and Hob, both called ‘Kene’, recorded a few decades earlier. William ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611. 2 Hendersons were accused in Jedburgh of several crimes, including the theft of 4 cows of his from the lands of Flatt. He may have been related to Archie and Jock, who had the same nickname. William ‘Sweet Milk’ (d.1627) from the Rule valley, said to be a minstrel. He is cited for immorality as ‘William Sweet Milk’ in the Cavers Parish records in 1623 and along with Robert Scott and Helen Langlands in 1624. He was killed at Newmill in a duel by William Henderson from Priesthaugh, as immortalised in the song ‘Ratlin Roarin Willie’. Although the basis of the story was traditional, the Jedburgh Presbytery records describe his ‘fearful and cruel slaughter’ and the excommunication of his assailant. A thorn bush near the spot was called ‘Milksweet...
Elliot

Willie’s Thorn’, and was still pointed out in the early 1800s. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged, however, his murderer is said to have been rooted out by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and young Elliot of Falnash (either of whom may have been a distant relative). It is possible he was related to ‘Dandie Elliot called Sweet Milk’ whose name is recorded in association with complaints about raids into England in 1598. William (16th/17th C.) 7th and last Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert and Agnes Scott. He was a minor when his father died in 1592, with his grand-uncle Gavin of Stobs appointed as his tutor. In 1606 curators were appointed to manage his affairs and in 1607 they requested from the Chancery the writs and charters of Horsleyhill so that he could be served heir to his grandfather William. However, he sold Horsleyhill shortly afterwards to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and was thereafter ‘called of Horsleyhill’, rather than being the Laird. He became a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining, who may have been related to his mother. In 1617 he was accused of attacking William Mitchell, a Burgess of Selkirk, apparently trying to rip his ears off, as well as half his beard; however, he was acquitted on assurance of ‘his great oath’. In 1619 he was found guilty of attacking and stabbing William Turnbull in Philiphaugh, who had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk to till a piece of land that he had tried to get for himself. He was fined £40 and ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for 500 merks.

He is probably also the ‘Wm. Elliott, sometimes in Horslaw’ who in 1623 was acquitted of the charge of stealing sheep from Clunthill. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. His nickname was given as ‘Cauldfute’. William ‘Laurie’s Jock’s Willie’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. His name is recorded as ‘Willie Elliott in Carlaverok, called Lowrey’s Jok’s Willie’. His father was therefore John and his grandfather ‘Laurie’ (or Lawrence). However, the designation ‘Carlaverok’ is confusing, since this is not in Teviotdale. William (16th/17th C.) brother of ‘Dandie of Bowholmes’. In 1611 he was listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 and 1623 being in ‘Huntlaw’. John Nichol in Craikhope was caution for him at the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh. William ‘Gib’s Will’ (17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to carry out the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the ongoing feud between the 2 families. The other men were Gavin of Hillhouse and ‘Gib Elliott, callit the Tutour’, who may have been his father. All 3 later confessed.

William (16th/17th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. He was ‘procurator’ for James Melrose in a land transaction in 1629. His brother James was one of the witnesses. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Murray and their children included: Robert (b.1634); Jean (b.1636); Marie (b.1640); and William (b.1643). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Stoddart and their children included: High (b.1635); Gavin (b.1640); Robert (b.1642); and Bessie (b.1645). William (d.1637) eldest son of Robert, he is described as ‘Younger of Falnash’. In 1635 he married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowhill. Their daughter Margaret was christened in Hawick 2 years later. His wife was granted the liferent of Outerside and an annual rent of 200 merks from ‘Falnesche, Causalisch and Tandilheir’. He was dead within a few months of the baptism of his daughter. His wife may have remarried a Haswell, since Margaret Haswell held the liferent of Outerside in 1643. Falnash was inherited by his brother Archibald. William (d.bef. 1638) youngest son of Gavin of Brugh. He was probably born locally, but became Provost of Peebles, and founded the Peebles branch of the family. He was served heir to his father in 1603. He was Provost of Peebles in 1622 when he served on an assize at the Court of Judiciary in Dumfries. He married Mary, daughter of John Ker of Faldonside and their children were: Lillian (d.1638); Gavin, who witnessed a tack for his brother in 1643; and Harry, who was Parson at Bedrule. He is sometimes suggested (e.g. by Tancred) to have instead been son of William Elliott of Stobs. His great-grandson, Sir John was physician to the Prince of Wales and was created a baronet in 1778. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of Peill’ in 1622 when 2 men were accused of stealing sheep from his lands at Brighouseleuchhead. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Heisches’ in 1623, when he was entered at the Judicial Court. His cautioners were Gilbert Elliott of Craigend and Archie of Bowholm. However, it is unclear where ‘Heisches’ may have been. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 being ‘callit of ye Myline, in Casiltoune’, presumably meaning he was tenant in Castleton Mill. A man was found guilty of stealing a clock from him. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th
C.) son of Thomas of Bonjedward. In 1623 along with George Johnstone in Essenside he was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. He was probably executed as a result (and may have also been referred to as son of ‘Thome of Fawsyde’). William (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Hermitage in 1632. He may have been ancestor of the later Elliots of Hermitage. William (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called of the Boulex’ when he was listed among a large number of Borderers who were declared fugitives in 1642. It is unclear where the place name might have been, but many of the men he is listed with were from the Liddesdale area. William (17th C.) described as ‘William Elliot, tailor in Cavers’ in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers’ servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) from Ashkirk, he married Mary Taylor. Their children included James (b.1651), with baptismal witnesses John and William Welsh. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Agnes Elliot and their son Francis was born in 1653. William of Mosspeeble (17th C.) 2nd son of an unknown Elliot, probably owner of Unthank. His grandfather was William of Falnash. He married Mary, daughter of John Carmichael, Laird of Castlehope. They had 2 sons: Robert of Mosspeeble, who died unmarried; and John of Castlehope and Billhope. William (17th C.) recorded in 1662/3 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Canonbie and Morton, and in 1663–70 for Hawick, Hassendean and Eckford. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Binks and Harwood (d.1662) eldest son of Simon of the Binks. In 1637 he bought the lands of Harwood, including Tythhouse and Appotside from Edward Lorraine (with the permission of Gilbert Elliott, who had the lands in wadsset). However, his father was listed as owner in 1643. Thus, although he is sometimes referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood, this may really have technically been his father Simon. He later sold Binks to John Elliot of Burnmouth. He may be the William ‘in Harret’ who acted as surety for Janet Scott (wife of John Glendinning, ‘Sow-tail’) in 1644, when she promised to appear before the Justice-General on a charge of witchcraft. He is listed in a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirik Parish in 1648 and discharge of 1649. He was also the William ‘of the Burnmouth, indweller in Liddesdale’ who had a loan discharged in 1653. In 1654 he purchased a wadsset of Appotside from Edward Lorraine and his son Walter; his signature was written by the notary because he could not write himself. He purchased Appotside outright in 1656 and was confirmed in his charters of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside by his superior, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He (along with his son John) purchased lands at Baxtonlees near Peel in 1659 from Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. After the Restoration both he and his brother Robert were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. He was recorded paying £4336s8d on the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663. He married Christian Greenlaw in 1627 and in 1659 gave her a sasine of ‘liferent’ of Appotside (presumably as part of the marriage contract); he was then described as ‘of Aiptsyde’. His children were: Simon of the Binks and Swinside (although there is some confusion between him and his son William); Henry (or ‘Harry’), who succeeded to Harwood; Jean, the eldest daughter; Margaret, who married William Elliot of Philhope; Jean (also called ‘Jennet’), the youngest daughter; and John of the Binks and later of Baxtonlees or Peel. George may have been another son, who died about 1666. He was ‘indweller in Burnmouth’, although described as ‘of Harwood’, when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ is recorded as an overseer of William of Binks, who may have been him (if the date is correct). William of Unthank (d.1670s) probably 3rd son of the 4th son (whose first name is unrecorded) of William of Falnash, his brothers being Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeeble and Ninian of Eweslees. He ‘flitted from Eweshead’ in 1642’ and probably moved to Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1660 when he was guardian to the 2 grandsons of his brother Ninian in Eweslees. He is referred to as ‘called Unthank’ in a list of debtors in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. He was also among the men fined (£1800) after the Restoration in 1662, presumably meaning that he acted against the King in the Civil War. In 1670, along with Simon of the Binks and Swinside, and his own son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including He is probably the William who paid the land tax for half of Lymiecleuch in 1678 (the other half being paid by Sir William Elliott of Stobs). Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. His children included: Robert, who died unmarried; Adam of Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch; William of Penchrise; and Walter of Carewoodrig. Rev.
William (c.1617–85) from Borthwickshiels, son of Robert. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637 and became minister at Yarrow in 1641. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy. However, he was ‘indulged’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties) in 1679 for about a year. In 1664 he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden (his father and grandfather having had close connections with the Scotts of Harden). When he died he had debts amounting to £8,333 13s 4d (Scots probably), with his brother Thomas in Borthwickshiel becoming his executor. His will is recorded in 1684. William of Lymiecleuch (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been a son of Ninian of Eweslees, or else was son of William of Unthank and the same as William of Penchrise (or perhaps was William of Unthank himself). William of Grange (17th C.) paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was probably related to other Elliots of Grange. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1788 he was listed as a former owner of lands in Nether Ancrum, valued at £20. William of Penchrise (17th C.) son of William of Unthank, he was the first Elliot at Penchrise. He may have been the same William (along with Robert) of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise who was involved in a court case in 1695 over not paying a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; not appearing, their lands were yielded over not paying a bond due to John Riddell of Penchrise who was involved in a court case in 1695.

William of Borthwickbrae (c.1617–85) was the eldest son of Thomas of Borthwickbrae. His father was Margaret Scott from Chamberlain Newton. He could be the William who (along with Thomas) witnessed baptisms for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his sister) in 1682 and 1686. He may be the William who was taxed for 4 hearths at Borthwickshiel in 1694 (assuming he kept his father’s tenancy of the farm there). It is said that he wanted to buy Horsleyhill, but since it was not for sale, he instead purchased Borthwickbrae. He could be the William ‘of Belvie’ who in 1696 directed the Bailies of Selkirk to incarcerate William from Castleton. He received a Crown Charter for Borthwickbrae in 1698. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, 1695 and 1704. He was involved in a bonds with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692 and with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. Scott of Satchells describes him as a good farmer (‘kept the sheep upon the Down’) and a generous supporter of the poor ‘was the Poors relief, for he fed and clad them both with Flesh and Fleece’, in contrast to his cousin James of Bridgehaugh. He was still ‘of Belvie’ in 1699 when he complained about non-payment by Gilbert ‘of the Park’ and his son William in Castleton. In 1686 he married Isobel, daughter of William Scott of Synton and sister of John Scott of Synton. He may also have married a second time, but her name is unknown. He had 16 children, 9 of whom survived: William (1689–1756), who succeeded to the Borthwickbrae Lairdship; Francis, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1710; Thomas (b.1687); Jean (b.1688), who in 1705 married Gideon Scott of Newhouse, brother of the Laird of Woll; Mary, who in 1715 married Gideon Burnett in Whitehope; Christian (b.1697), who married Robert Elliot of Rig (probably Caerlenrig) in 1721; Anne (b.1704), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers; Susanna (b.1704); and Margaret, who married William Borthwick in Glendinning. Isobel (or ‘Tibby’, b.1708) may have been his youngest daughter and married Walter Elliot of Ormiston. William of Philhope (17th C.) eldest son of Archibald of Philhope. He married Margaret Elliot of the Binks and Harwood in 1663. He is recorded in the 1678
Land Tax Rolls as ‘William Elliot of philip for bradlie’, paying the tax for land valued at £216 in Hawick Parish. He was also listed paying tax on land valued at £400 in Selkirkshire in 1678; he was recorded being ‘of phillip’ and ‘hes bene threetie [although hard to read] yeires bypass residenter in the land’. He was ‘Wm Elliott of Phillip’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1700 his wife assigned to him the remainder of the money bequeathed to her by her mother. His son William was a witness to this document of 1700. He was probably succeeded by William, although father and son are hard to separate in records. He may have been the Elliot of Philhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. William (17th C.) listed as son of deceased William of Philhope, son-in-law of William of Binks, when he was in the testament for the deceased George, son of William of Binks. He was recorded in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of the heritors in support of the suppression of Hassendean Parish in favour of Robertson. There is a ‘letter of horning’ against him (and Henry Elliot of Harwood) by Walter Scott, called Westport in 1676. His son Arthur became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1694. And possibly the same Arthur married Mary Douglas in Edinburgh in 1721, by which time William is recorded as deceased. Another son James became a tanner’s apprentice in Edinburgh, also in 1694. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 fellow merchant Samuel Newbie was convicted of striking him in the head with his sword and wounding him in the face with a bridle. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in 1693. The Ballie of Regality, William Scott, was in his house sorting out some financial business between John Hardie and Walter Ruecastle, when he was assaulted by Walter Ruecastle. He must have been an innkeeper, or some prominent townsman. He could be the William of the Sandbed listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the William recorded in the Sandbed in 1702 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for shoemaker George Allan and for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708 and again for shoemaker George Allan in 1709. Probably the same William, married to Agnes Allan had children baptised in Hawick, including: Margaret (b.1685); and William (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Allan and James Deans. William of Dinlabyre (d.1693) son of William of Braidlie and Mary Scott, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. However, he seems to have lived rather late in the century for a man whose grandfather is meant to have died in 1607, suggesting that there may be some confusion here. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, and appears to have been the most prominent Elliot in Liddesdale in the latter half of the 17th century (after the death of the last Robert of Redheugh). He may be the William ‘of Dunliebyre’ whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643; if this was not him it must have been an earlier relative. In 1667 he was ‘now of Dinlabyre’ when served heir to his great-grandfather William (who died in 1613), in the lands of Killoley, Bighouse, Heathhousebrae, Dinlabyre, Easter Flicht, ‘Hie-Eshies’ and Burnfoot in Liddesdale; in 1691 he appears to have been served again as heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartshaugh in 4 quarters of the lands of Killoley, Brighouse and Heathhousebrae (called the lands of Dinlabyre), as well as Easter Flicht, ‘Hydashes’ and Burnfoot. He is probably the William (transcribed as ‘of Dunlillries’) who paid tax on £400 of land in Castleton Parish in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He signed the bond of provision for fulfillment of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs marriage contract in 1677. He paid the land tax on £400 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was made a Justice of the Peace in 1680. A carved stone lintel bearing his initials and the date 1682 is built into a rockery at Dinlabyre and an earlier one dated 1668 might suggest when he had the house rebuilt. In 1691 he was served heir to his grandfather. He firstly married a sister of Archibald, Lord Rutherford and secondly in 1686 married Margaret Scott. His children included: Robert of Dinlabyre, who probably sold Dinlabyre; Thomas; Henry; Gilbert, apprenticed to a periwig-maker in 1692; and Christian. His testament is recorded in 1693. William of Caerlenrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. William (17th C.) tenant in Carewoodrig. He is recorded being ‘in Carritridge’ in 1685 among local men who were accused of frequenting conventicles. William of Meikledale (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Adam of Meikledale. He succeeded on the death of his brother Andrew (who was eldest son of Adam with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott) in 1682. He was served ‘heir of tailzie’ to his ‘brother german’ (meaning that they had the same mother as well as father) Andrew’s lands of Meikledale and Elliot (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Arkleton. He married Barbara Forrester and also possibly a Scott of Merrylaw. His children included Adam (who died at Harestoke in 1760) and Lucy. He is said to have died in reduced circumstances, leaving his children unprovided for. He was still alive in 1698. William (17th C.) recording being ‘[writer?]’ at Casseltoune when he was incarcerated in Selkirk at the insistence of William ‘of Belvie’ [possibly Bewlie] for non-payment of annual rents. William (17th C.) recorded as resident in Pingleton in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Stripshileden in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident in P...............
Elliot

of Swinside (b.1701); Thomas (b.1703); Sussana (b.1705); John (b.1706); Adam (b.1709); Elizabeth; Walter; George; and Robert of Sharpitlaw. Note that Tancred's history places him as the son of William of the Binks and Harwood, rather than the grandson. A document of 1707 lists William 'younger of Swinside', so it is also possible that there was an additional generation. William (1661/2–1731) tenant in Whitaugh and Braidlie. He was eldest son of John of Castlehope and Billhope and descended from the Ellots of Falnash. Around 1730 he bought Whitaugh for his 1st son and Redheugh for his 2nd son. He married Isabella (c.1680–1679), daughter of Scott of Falnash (perhaps Gideon Scott, who would be the right generation, or his brother Robert). Their children included: John of Whitaugh (c.1702–78), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry; Robert of Redheugh (1709–93), who married Margaret Beattie; and William in Braidlie (1711–71), who died unmarried. Note that the dates of his birth and death are very uncertain, with some sources suggesting he died in 1767, aged 89. He and his wife were buried at Hermitage Chapel. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of James of Redheugh and brother of Robert of Larriston. He was grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'. He will was proved in 1694. According to a family pedigree of about 1704 he 'went away to be a horner'. William of Penchrise (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrisie and Bessie Grieve. His siblings included Henry in Riccarton, John in Lealhaugh, Ninian in Ruecastle, Adam in Catlowdie and Jean (wife of Robert Grieve in Teindside). He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of John Elliot of Thorthieshope. Their children included: Gilbert of Mount; John; Walter; James in Millholm; William in Selkirk, who married Marion Elliot; and Adam in Dykeraw. He may also be father of Thomas, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1699. Note that information about this family seems uncertain. William (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam in Dykeraw, he was tenant farmer in Millbunholm. He is said to have firstly married a Miss Henderson and secondly married Marion Nixon, with whom he had a son William in Dykeraw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Beatrix (b.1707); Agnes (b.1710); and Dand (b.1714). William 1st Laird of Wolfelee (1688–1768) second son of Thomas of Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Borthwickshiel, with his mother being Jean Inglis. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, being sent there by his father, and it is said he did not really settle down to a serious business life until his marriage. He was apprenticed to Andrew Haliburton, W.S. and his own law office was in the Lawnmarket, although later he also had an office in Selkirk (with receipts recorded with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1729, 1733 and probably 1744). He dealt with legal business for Scott of Harden for several decades. He purchased the estate of Wolfelee in 1730 (from his distant relatives, the Eliotts of Stobs), although it is said that he seldom stayed there, except when his legal business took him to the area. He sold off the Stonedale part to his future father-in-law. In 1751 he bought several neighbouring properties from William Kerr of Abbotrule, as well as half of Kirknowe from Richard Mair. And in 1757 he and his son Cornelius bought 'Forkings of Unthank', 'Eyelee', the 'old Glebe of Hobkirk' and the 'Cleugh or back brae of Unthank' from Thomas Scott of Stonedale. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1722 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elizabeth Elliot of Harwood. In 1727 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Stonedge, and she died only 3 years later. In 1732 he lastly married Margaret, daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and she died in 1796; there was a portrait painted of her. His children were: Thomas (b.1723, by his 1st marriage), a doctor who pre-deceased his father; Elizabeth (also by his 1st marriage), who married William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, her father’s brother-in-law; Cornelius (1733–1821), who succeeded to Wolfelee; Adam (1740–1804), who married Rose Leonardi, worked in Danzig, and died on the Isle of Wight; Thomas, who died in infancy; Robert, merchant in Amsterdam, who bought Pinnaclehill, Kelso; Samuel, merchant in Antigua; Janet (or Jean), married Maj. Henry Balfour of Pilrig, Leith; and Helen, married Capt. Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill. Not known as a great land improver, he nevertheless purchased several Border estates, becoming quite wealthy in later life. He was a friend of the Grieves of Branxholme Park, often staying there. He is said to have been tall and handsome. He was healthy and working up until the day he died. William (17th/18th C.) son of John in Harden and grandson of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’, which is probably the same as ‘Hollows’. His children included William, John and Isabel. William of Harwood (d.c.1736) 3rd Laird (although some say he was 4th), eldest son and successor to his father Henry. He is recorded in bonds of 1693 and 1694 as the eldest lawful son of Henry and in 1697 as ‘younger of Harret’. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Harrow’. His father assigned the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythhouse to him, suggesting he took over financial control of the family estates, although his father appears to have lived for several years afterwards. He was just ‘of Harwood’ in 1700 when he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He is listed in 1704 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jean (or Jane), eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig by post-nuptial contract in 1700. The witnesses (probably all relatives) were Robert of Midlem Mill, Henry in Hudshouse and his own brothers Walter, John and Henry. They had 10 children: Henry (1700–84), who succeeded; Thomas and John, who died young; Robert, ‘Captain’, whose son William became Laird of Harwood; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Milsington; Jean (1709/10–74), who married William Elliot of Lodgell and Taras; Marion (or ‘Mary’), who married John Scott of Weens; and Margaret, Christian and Janet, who all died unmarried (Janet in her 90th year). It is unclear when he succeeded to his father, but certainly by late 1707, when he was involved in the discharge of a bond along with Walter Scott of Todrig (his father-in-law). He had a bond of provision for his children in 1720, updated in 1726. He had a reputation for being eccentric (or perhaps ‘of weak intellect’) and for not seeing eye to eye with his son and heir, Henry. In 1731 they both ran horses in the annual race held near Hartshaugh, and he tricked his son by buying an old racehorse from Newcastle, which won at a canter; it is said that the cheers could be heard across the Rule valley. He let much of the Harwood estate to James Pott and his brothers, provoking his son into appealing to the Court of Session, and having him placed under trust, with only a small annuity. This ‘Bond of Indemnation’ was in 1731 and to last 21 years. The appointed trustees were Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, Thomas Scott of Todrig (his brother-in-law), Henry (his son) and Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He was essentially forced to resign his lands to his son in 1733. His wife had a contract in 1736 restricting her ‘liferent’ and handing over the mansion house of Harwood to her son Henry. William of Thorleshope and Overton (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John of Thorliveshope. His father settled on him several lands, including ‘Isgill’. In 1690 Simon of Lodgegill and his brother William of Cooms were declared bankrupt, and he was awarded Lodgegill, which he settled on his own brother Henry. In 1698 he acquired Blackhall and Overton from his father-in-law (Andrew Ainslie), and had a crown charter for these lands. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was appointed Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1704. He could be the Laird of Thorliveshope whose Chaplain, Mr. Tait, was recorded preaching in Hawick in 1721. He forced his cousin’s son Adam to sell Meikledale in 1725 to pay off debts. In 1729 he entailed all his lands on his eldest son William. In 1682 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Andrew Ainslie of Blackhall (who had been Provost of Jedburgh). They had at least 10 children, including: William of Thorliveshope and Overton (b.1694), whose 2nd wife was Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood; John; Robert; Walter (b.1701); Elizabeth (b.1702); James (b.1704); Walter (again), described as 5th son; Helen, who married William Mather of Greenhill; Christian, who married Adam of Arkelton; Cecile (b.1706), who married William Hall, tenant in Hyndhope; and Andrew (b.1707), tenant in Edgerston Tofts. He moved to Oxnam Parish and is buried there.

William (17th/18th C.) cottar in Ashkirk. He married Mary Ker and their son Thomas was baptised in 1715. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1719 he married ‘Jesobel’ Wilson, who was also from Roberton. Perhaps the same William is recorded at Mabonlaw in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1726 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the William at Whitecleughside whose son Walter was baptised in 1727. Either he or a different William was recorded at Alemoor in 1721 when his son James was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) writer in Edinburgh who acted as agent for the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1724 he was paid by Selkirk for researching the town’s erection as a regality. In 1733 he was paid for inserting an advertisement for Selkirk Races in an Edinburgh newspaper. He may be the ‘younger’ writer in Edinburgh in a case with the Burgh of Selkirk. Probably the same writer in Edinburgh had a receipt for salary from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742 and further receipts for legal work in 1743 (including borrowing the charter of 1449 to establish the establishment of a court of regality in Selkirk), 1745 (including a dispute with Douglas over Selkirk’s right to a market). He may be the William also recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in the 1750s. He is probably from one of the local Elliot families and may be the same as William of Wolveee. William (1689–1756) 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest son of William and Isobel Scott. In 1708 he was ‘younger’ when he was listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who in 1715 and 1716 witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton (his brother-in-law). In 1721 he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch for 21 years. Little else is known about him. In 1706 he married Margaret (probably his cousin), daughter of John Scott of Synton, and they had 14 children (mostly baptised in Robertson): William (b.1706), christened at Robertson, but died at sea; Margaret (b.1707), who married Thomas Scott of Wauchope, who later purchased part of the Borthwickbrae estate; John (1711–92), who succeeded to Borthwickbrae; Magdalene (b.1713), who married Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park; Elizabeth (b.1716), who died unmarried in 1809, aged 92 (90 in the Parish Register); Jean (b.1718), who married Thomas Borthwick of Shaws; Alexander (b.1720); Mary (b.1722); Christian (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728), who probably died young; Ann (b.1729), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers in 1760; Gilbert (b.1731), whose son Thomas purchased the Langlands estate; and Isobel (b.1731), who married Walter Elliot of Orniston, one of the founders of Hawick’s carpet-making trade. He must have been quite young when he married. A Robertson Parish record of 1707 relates to Isobel Riddel, who acted as midwife to his wife, the baby being delivered ‘before the time’. William of Thorliveshope and Overton (1694–1744) eldest son of William of Thorliveshope. He lived in Oxnam Parish. His father settled on him the lands of Blackhall in 1698, Thorliveshope in 1711 and the remainder were entailed to him in 1729. In 1727 he acquired Demainholm from John of Demainholm and in 1731 he sold Meikledale to William Scott in Meikledale. In 1707 he had an illegitimate child with Isobel Minto, Charles. In 1711 he married his 2nd cousin Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood. His wife was recorded as having the third most highly valued lands in Hawick Parish in 1710. They had 8 sons and 6 daughters, including: Robert, who succeeded; James (b.1726); Walter (b.1729); and Andrew (b.1737). Col. William of Brugh and Wells (1696–1764) eldest son of William of Brugh and Wells, ‘the Lace-man’. He was guardian for his nephew Granville Elliott (son of his sister Charlotte and the deceased Roger Elliott) around 1720. He joined the Army in 1722 as Coronet in the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards and was then Captain in Churchill’s Regiment of Dragoons. He was served as heir to his father in 1730. However, he spent most of his time at his estate near London, with Archibald Jordan acting as his factor at Wells (and whose surviving rental book from 1728–60 gives a glimpse into the conditions of a Border laird at that time).

At Wells he was keen on developing the gardens, had a bowling green, kept dogs and also had fishing and hunting gear. His Border estates included Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) as well as Hadden (near Kelso). In 1737 he became a Major in the Grenadier Guards and was Lieutenant-Colonel by 1741. In 1743 he was at the Battle of Dettingen, where he served as A.D.C. and equerry to King George II. His nephew George Augustus Elliott (later Lord Heathfield) and his cousin Capt. John Elliot (son of Gilbert of Winningtonton) were officers under him. He resigned his army commission in 1746. He paid the window tax for ‘Walls’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was elected M.P. for Caine, Wiltshire in 1749 and held the seat until 1754. His children included: John; Henry, who married Jean and Helen (b.1731). William (b.1729) and Archibald (b.1729), who may be the weaver brothers in Groundistone. William whose children were born at Alton and Walter whose children were born at Whitfield, who is probably the Walter whose children were born at Alton and Wester Groundistone; and Agnes (b.1733), born at Groundistone. William (b.1706) eldest son of William of Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott. He died at sea, but the details are not recorded. The farm was inherited by his brother John. William (1707/8–41) son of Robert and Jean ‘Ruan’, he was a merchant in Castleton. He died aged 33 and is buried at Teviothead. John, who married Hannah Grievre, may have been his brother. William (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’ (although it is unclear where this was). His children included William, John and Isobel. William of Tarras (1708/9–79) son of Henry of Lodggeill and Margaret Elliott of Midlem Mill. His father died in 1714 and his uncle John of Binks... was appointed one of his curators. He succeeded to Lodgegill (or Black Tarras) in 1732. He rented Gingenwell from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. He was involved in bonds with Capt. Robert Elliot for Fairnielees in 1761 and Blakheope and Lodgegill in 1763. He was a great breeder of race-horses, and once raced an unknown horse in Newcastle, but was virtually ruined by betting debts when it fell near the post after he had backed it heavily. The financial problems during the American War meant he had to sell Blakheope and Tarras to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was allowed to lease Dinlees for a modest rent. In 1731 he married Jean Elliot (1709/10–74), daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. Their children included: Henry (1731–90), tenant in Dinlees; Margaret, who married Mr. Haig; Janet, who died unmarried; John (1741–54); Jane (1742–61); William (b.1745), also tenant in Dinlees; and Jean, who married Mr. Crichton. He and his wife are buried at Castleton. William (1711–71) tenant in Braidlie on Hermitage. He was 3rd son of William in Whithaugh and Isabel Scott. He died unmarried and was buried at Unthank, where the stone stated that he died aged 50. However, a family pedigree also suggests he was born in 1694. William (b.1710) son of Walter in Brugh. He was a cooper (in London according to some sources, but that is surely a transcription error, since his entire family were born and lived locally). He married Hahhah (or Anna) Scott and their children, born in Castleton Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1755), who married Robert Mathieson from Castleton; Helen (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759), who married William Elliot from Selkirk; Ann (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1764); and John (b.1767), also a cooper. Margaret, who married Thomas Elliot from Hawick, was probably also his daughter. William (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1741 for James Nimmo and in 1742 for shoemaker John Brown. He is recorded as a ‘Diker’ in 1760 when he hired the Hawick mortcloth. William of Whithaugh (c.1723–76) eldest son of John of Whithaugh. He is probably the William ‘of Whithaugh’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, with William ‘junior’ perhaps being his son. He firstly married Margaret Shortreed (c.1735–88) from Essendie (perhaps daughter of Robert) and secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; she may be the ‘Betty Elliot of Whithaugh’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798. His children were: Elizabeth (1754–1815), Grove Plantation’. Their only son William, who succeeded, was an M.P. He may have earlier married Mary Scawen of Reigate. In 1775 he purchased West Lees, extending the Wells estate. But he died a few months later at his lodgings in Bath. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Marion or Mary Laidlaw and their children included Adam (b.1750), Henry (b.1753) and Mary (b.1761). Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Jedburgh. He is recorded as liferenter of Dryden and part of Headshaw in 1788. Dryden was then valued at £290 and his part of Headshaw at £116 19s 6d. He was among a group of men to whom Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto granted liferent of part of his lands in order to add them to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll. He may have been related to the Ellots of Minto, William (18th C.) farmer at Nether Stanegarthside, probably son of Thomas. He married Mary (or Marion) Pattison, who died in 1794. Their children included: John (b.1761); Robert (1784–1813); Margaret (1769–1846); an unnamed child (b.1772); and Mary (b.1780). The family are buried in Ettrington Cemetery. Dolly, who married Andrew Pattison in Nether Stanegarthside, and died in 1763, aged 64, was probably related to him. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Probably the same William was father of Gideon (b.1767) and John (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps tenant in ‘Sandridgeshiells’. In 1746 he married Margaret Elliot and they had a daughter Margaret in 1755. William (18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (1723–97) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He farmed at Winnington Rig and neighbouring farms. He and his father Robert were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his sister Mary in 1764. He may be the William who was joint possessor (along with Robert Potts) of the farm of Turn in 1779. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Winninton’ on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls and ‘Winningtonridge’ in 1786, continuing there until 1797 when he farmed at ‘Winningtonrigg & c.’ and owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for having 4 non-working dogs at Winningtonrig in 1797. He married Margaret Anderson and she died in 1845, aged 90. Their children were all baptised in Kirkton Parish. Their sons were: Robert (1790–1872), tenant at Teindside; James (b.1791), who died in infancy; and William (1796–1842), tenant at Mangerton. Their daughters probably included: Christian (1786–1880), who married Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; Margaret (b.1788), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1793–1809); and Mary (1795–1837). His will is registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1798. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in 1751 when the lands were sold. His son William, younger, was also mentioned. His daughter Elizabeth was born in 1750. William (18th C.) Hawick baker, son of Henry in Riccarton and Isobel Elliot. He is probably the William listed as Bailie during the 1760s to 1780s. In 1762 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for fellow baker Robert Scott, junior. He is recorded as ‘baxter’ in 1763. He is probably the baker who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter Scott in 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the proceedings for the Division of the Common and in 1769 was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the horse tax in Hawick in the period 1785–90 and 1794. He married Janet (her name sometimes given as ‘H.’) Grieve of the Branxholme Park family. Their children were: Henry (b.1756); Jean (or Jane, b.1759), who died unmarried; James (b.1761); Walter (b.1763), who died young; and Helen, who married Henry Armstrong from Riccarton Mill (who may have been a cousin). The witnesses in 1763 were Excise Officer Archibald Campbell and merchant Thomas Wilkie. William (c.1714–1806) shepherd at Templehallshiel. In 1757 he married Helen Turnbull (c.1725–95) from Wilton, with the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Hobkirk Parishes. Their likely children are: Robert (b.1758), possibly the cattle dealer in Newcastle; Thomas (b.1761); George (b.1762); Henry (b.1764); and Margaret (b.1770). It also seems likely that he was father of John, labourer around Wauchope. He died in Newcastle; and his wife died at Roan. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson in 1756 and they had a son John (b.1760). He witnessed a baptism for James Buckham in 1764. His name also appears to be written in the baptismal records for 1765, but crossed out. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: John (b.1760); and Helen (b.1761). He is probably the William who married Christian Oliver in Southdean in 1758. William of Arkleton (1735–91) eldest surviving son of Adam and Christina Elliot, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. He succeeded when quite young, and in 1744 had tutors appointed, including Andrew, younger son of William of Thorlleshope. However, the estate was probably heavily encumbered when he succeeded. He became a doctor in Jedburgh, where his children were born. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid tax in Jedburgh for having a male servant in the period 1778–85 and a female servant in 1785, as well as the Horse Tax in Jedburgh from 1785. He is probably the Dr. William of Jedburgh who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He may also be the William of Arkleton who was as a voter in Dumfriesshire in the same year. He inherited Thorlleshope through his wife, but sold it to James Jardine, tenant of Arkleton. He first married Marie, a sister of Dr. Lindsay, then secondly married Cassandra, daughter of Robert Elliot of Overton, co-heiress of Thorlleshope. His children were: Adam (1774–97), Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot, who died unmarried; Robert (1775–1810), Major with the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, who died at sea; William (b.1777), army surgeon, who died unmarried while serving in the West Indies; Margaret (‘Peggy’, 1779–1816), who married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean; John (b.1781); and Gilbert (b.1784). His son Robert succeeded when he returned home in 1803 and his daughter Margaret succeeded in 1810. William (18th C.) farmer at Burnhead and Appletreehall. His wife was Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1770), Margaret (b.1773) and Jean (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Chisholme in the Borthwick valley. His daughter Margaret was baptised locally. He was given a commission in the Army in 1758, was appointed Cornet in the Inniskilling Dragoons in 1761 and was appointed A.D.C. to Gen. Johnstone (who commanded the forces in Ireland) in 1766, holding that post until 1780, but being transferred to the 11th Dragoons in 1779. He was also Commissary General of Stores for the Army in Ireland. William of Brugh (c.1740–1817) eldest son of Capt. John and Jean Grieve. He was a grandson of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig, and was descended from the Elliots of Brugh. He is said to have been born in Belgium (presumably where his father was serving), although his siblings were all christened locally. He was a regimental chaplain. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicolas FitzGerald, from Turlough, County Mayo. Their children were John (who died as a young man), Eliza (who married John Mockler from County Meath), Harriet (who married Capt. Elliott Seward, godson of Lord Heathfield), Lt. Col. William (d.1845) and Gilbert (who served in the Army and was Governor of the Island of Paxos). He died in Cheltenham and was buried in St. Mary’s Churchyard there. Maj.-Gen. William (1741–1803) only son of Gilbert of Larriston, who was the direct heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston. His mother was Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Califield. His father died when he was quite young. He is said to have worked for a while as a tailor’s apprentice at Bowanhill (Teviothead), perhaps spent a year at Skelhull, then entered the service of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs as a stable boy. Being recognised as the head of the clan, Sir Gilbert had him educated and arranged for him to go out as a cadet in the East India Company Artillery in 1761. By 1763 (or perhaps 1764) he obtained a commission and was rapidly promoted, becoming a Lieut.-Col. in 1782. It is said that he distinguished himself in the Carnatic, where he commanded artillery under Sir Eyre Coote. He made a small fortune in the East India Company and was able to resign in 1785, to return home. He repurchased the lands of Larriston (including Nether and Over Larriston and Blackhope) from William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1786, and added Larriston Rig and (also called Haggiehaugh) in 1790. His lands of Larriston were valued at £834 in 1788. He is recorded at Haggiehaugh on the both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls (when he was a Colonel) and in the same year when taxed for having a male servant. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He tried to establish his claim to be head of the clan through court proceedings in Jedburgh (presided over by the Sheriff, the same Oliver of Dinlabyre), being formally served heir to his grandfather Robert of Larriston in 1788, and matriculating arms in 1793. Perhaps country life was too quiet for him, because he resumed his commission with the East India Company by 1788. However, it seems unlikely that he returned to India, and may have worked for the company in England, rising to the rank of Major General. He died unmarried and named George Fraser Scott (a son of his cousin) as his heir. A memorial to him in Littleham Church, Exmouth misspells his appellation ‘of Larrinton’. He is probably the William from Castleton whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1803. William (1744/5–93) farm worker who lived at Deeburn in the Hermitage valley. His children included Elizabeth (b.c.1770). William (1745–1807) son of William, who farmed at Tarra and Lodgegill. He was tenant in Dinlees on Hermitage Water. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded at Dinlees on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89 and 1794. He was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Amos (c.1753–1842) from Langholm. Their children included: Margaret (b.1781); William (b.1790), who also farmed at Dinlees; and Henry (b.1792) in Colterscleuch. William (1753–1821) son of Robert and Janet Wilson. He was born in Ewes Parish. He married Jean Davidson (1751–1827) from Canonbie and their children were born in New Langholm. He could be the William listed at New Langholm on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Robert (1785–1849); John (1785–1847), who became a minister in Peebles and married Janet Scott; William (1789–1822), who lived in England; Matthew (b.1791), who died young; Janet (b.1793); and Jane Beatie (b.1797), who died young. William ‘Willie’ (c.1750–1827) son of Robert in Hermitage and Janet Scott from Greenwood. He was tenant in Millburnholm. He was the farmer there when Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited on their tour around Liddesdale; it seems likely that Scott took some of the qualities of ‘Dandie Dimmont’ from him. The meeting is described in detail by Scott. He is probably the farmer at Millburnholm who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1786–1797 and also on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. In 1787 in Hawick he married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash, who died in 1822, aged 72. Their children were: Jean (b.1792); and Robert (1793–1858), who married Mary Scott from Skelhull and died in Toftholm. One source states he was born in 1759. William (1761–c.1835) son of Rev. Thomas of Kirkton and Cavers. He was an architect in Kelso and may have been the William who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He built the Teviot Bridge near Kelso 1794–95 (probably to designs by Alexander Stevens). He also designed the extension to the old Wilton Kirk, which was built in 1801. Langholm Town Hall and the houses at Chesters and Crailling were his work, as were renovations at Yair and Drumlanrig Castle. He married Jean Robertson in 1791 and their children included: Esther (b.1792); who married Charles Scott of Knowesouth; Thomas (b.1793), who died in infancy; John (b.1795), W.S. in Hawick and Jedburgh, who married Janet Usher; William (b.1797), surgeon in London; Ann (b.1799) who married Kelso ironmonger Thomas Sibbald; Jean (b.1799); another Thomas (b.1802); Alexander (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); and Walter (b.1810), who carried on the architect’s business in Kelso. William Nassau of Brugh and Wells (1766–1818) only son of William Nassau of Brugh and Wells, whom he succeeded in 1775. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having ‘a good estate’ and supporting Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1778 and 1779 in Hobkirk Parish he was taxed for having 3 male servants. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Wells and West Lees (in Hobkirk Parish) and Huntknow (listed in Bedrule Parish), as well as Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) and Hadden (in Sprouston Parish). He was also taxed for having a male servant at Wells in 1794 and 1797 (along with Gilbert Elliott, who was serving as his factor there). Already owner of the Wells estate (which had been erected into a barony by his grandfather), in 1801 he purchased the adjacent Barony of Bedrule from the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. This included the lands of Bedrule, Fulton, Dunionhill, Dunionshanck, Bedrule Mill, Gourlaybog and Poinderauhgh. He became an M.P., for Portarlington 1801–02 and for Peterborough in 1802–18. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland and was a member of the Privy Council. In Westminster he was called ‘the Spectre of the Castle’, because he was so thin; however, he was said to be well regarded by his contemporaries. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was also recorded as owner of Wells and West Lees, as well as the Barony of Hadden, on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He died unmarried at Minto House. He had named his relative Lord Heathfield (or his son) as his successor to the Wells estate, but outlived them both, so succession fell to Sir William Elliott of Stobs as heir of the line. He left his portrait, plate and library to Lord Minto. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1818.

William (1762–88) son of John and Hannah Grieve, he was a surgeon, who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa. He is mentioned on the family’s gravestone in Castleton cemetery. William (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., younger son of William of Whithaugh (descended from Elliot of Mosspeebie) and Elizabeth Elliot (probably sister to the Laird of Wolfelee). He was a writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick, where he was also a Justice of the Peace, and he lived in Newcastle on his later life (probably from about 1820). It is also possible he was the writer in Edinburgh who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was ‘Writer in Hawick’ in 1789 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1791–94. He drew up a pedigree of the Elliots in about 1790 (and made a formal deposition of the document in 1841, when he was living in Newcastle on). This was said to be quite accurate back to the time of his great-grandfather’s generation, but incorrect before that. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the writer in Castleton who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is described as ‘Writer Ind.’ living in the house of joiner John Cavers in Newcastle on at the time of the 1841 census. He seems to have died without issue. William in Orchard see William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Gordon from Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: William (b.1796); and Frear (b.1798). William (1765–1851) eldest son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He may be the William of Liddesdale who studied at Edinburgh University 1784/5. He received a surgeon mate’s diploma from the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh in 1794. He was a doctor in Newcastle. In 1808 he received an M.D. from St. Andrews University. He married Jane Grieve, from Newburn. Maj. William (1766–1802) eldest son of Cornelius the 2nd Laird of Wolfelee. He was a Major in the 1st Madras Cavalry and died in Vellore (southern India). His portrait (in a red hunting coat) was painted by Raeburn. Wolfelee was inherited by his younger brother James. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykecroft, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (d.1816) Town Herd of Hawick. He is ‘late Town Herd Hawick’ in the record of his death. It is possible he was the same as the William recorded at Whitchesters in 1797. He was already Town Herd in 1800 when the death of his sister Janet is recorded. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1797, when he paid tax on 2 non-working dogs. William 5th Laird of Harwood (1766–1835) son of ‘Captain’ Robert and Elizabeth Pringle of Clifton. He succeeded his uncle Henry, who had considerably improved the estate. Gideon Pott, farmer at Penchrise, was appointed to clear his debts before he succeeded to the estate. Shortly afterwards he joined the recently formed Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons.
He was promoted to Major and served under his distant relation Lt.-Col. William Elliot (later Eliott Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae, repelling the French from Killala Bay in Ireland in 1798. It was claimed that his men were guilty of killing a group of Irishmen who were hiding in a straw barn (this apparently told by a man from an Irish Cavalry regiment who visited Hawick a few years later, whose father and brothers were said to be among the dead). In 1788 his estate consisted of Harwood, Appotside, Fairmielees, Templehall and Kilknknowe, valued at £2143 2s. Also in 1788 he was mentioned as being about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax in Wells in 1791 and Hundalee in 1792. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses at Borthwickbrae. In 1802 he was made Captain commandant of the western troop of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers). Every man of the troop assembled (in Jedburgh) at the False Alarm. He was commonly called ‘The Major’ locally. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1811 he was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Harwood and Appotside, as well as Fairmielees, Templehall and Kilknknowe. In 1819, after troubles over the proposed Reform Act, he suggested forming his own troop of yeomanry to quell the riots, but the offer was declined. He lived for many years at Hundalee (where he paid tax for having a male servant in 1792–94 and the dog tax in 1797), where several of his children were born, and was also tenant at Stonedge. He then leased Weens from 1819 or 1820 for a few years, moving to Greenriver (Stonedge again in 1824) and then Mossburnford. He also had a house in Jedburgh. In 1834/5 he had a new house built at Harwood, but he died before moving into it. In 1804 he married Helen (or Eleanor, c.1783–1846), 2nd daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. His children were: Robert Kerr (b.1805), who succeeded to Harwood; Eleanor (or ‘Ellen’, b.1806), who married John Paton of Crailing; and John (b.1809), who married Jane Jordan of Bonjedward and farmed at Primrosehill. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1838. William of Borthwickbrae, see William Eliott Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Wilson in 1791 and their children included Archibald (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), Janet (b.1796) and Walter (b.1798). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Thorlieshope. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots connected with Thorlieshope. William (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roan. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Jackson and their children included: James (b.1800); Robert (b.1802); George (b.1805); Thomas (b.1807); Ann (1810–92), who married Walter Armstrong; William (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); Walter (1818–99), died a bachelor; Walter (again, b.1819); and Jane (b.1822). He drowned in the Kershope Burn and is buried at Unthank. William (1771/2–1855) son of George, like his father he was tenant farmer at Doorpool in the Rule valley. He was a prominent member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. In 1812 he married Isabella Stephenson, who died in 1850, aged 65. Their children included: George (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Richard (1817–91); William (1819–91); and John (1823–1910), who married Agnes Stevenson Rutherford. His sons Richard, William and John were tenants in Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. He died at Hartwoodmyres. The family were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotsrule Kirk. William (c.1778–1843) from Hawick. He married Agnes ‘Bone’ and they had a son William (c.1800–78), who married Jane Oliver. In about 1833 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Halton, Ontario. William (c.1780–1824) from Castleton Parish, he lived at Gillside. His wife was Mary Murray and their children included: Mary (b.1803); Nelly (b.1811); Betty (b.1815); Christian (b.1818); Eppy (b.1821); and Isabel (b.1824). William (b.1780) son of Walter, who farmed at...
Elliot

Henderson’s Knowe, he was a miller in Hawick Parish. In 1816 he emigrated with his family to Smith’s Falls, Lanark County, Ontario. In 1802 he married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1802); Janet (b.1804); William (b.1806); Adam Scott (1807/8–99), who died in Ontario; Walter; James; Margaret; Janet; John; and Ellen. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1800); James (b.1802), probably the grocer in Denholm; Nelly (b.1804); and Betty (b.1806). He is probably the miller whose record is included dying in Hawick in 1815. William (b.1790) son of William, tenant at Dinlees. He was farmer at Dinlees on Hermitage Water, like his father. His children included William, Jessie, Helen and Margaret. He is probably the ‘W. Elliot, Dintle’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beaties of the Border’ in 1821. William (c.1790–1853) labourer in Castleton. In 1841 he was at Little Whithaugh with his wife’s mother, Jenny Crozier also living with them. In 1851 he was a widower and farm servant at Whitinhaughburn. He is listed as a farm servant at Whitinhaughburn in 1835. William (18th/19th C.) labourer listed at ‘North Gunholm’ (perhaps meant for Greenholm) among male heads of households in 1835. He married Jean Oliver (c.1792–1847). Their children included: Agnes (b.1813); Betty (b.1815); John (b.1817); Jean (b.1819); James (b.1822); George (b.1825); Gideon (b.1828); William Keir (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He died at Whitinhaughburn. William (1789/90–1869) boot and shoe maker in Newcastle. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived at 6 Whitchester Stret. In the 1841 census he is listed with his wife Christian and children Betty, John (also a shoemaker), Ann, Christian and James. His cousin Robert Murray (‘Formerly Teacher’) was living with him in 1851. He married Christian Elliot (1797/8–1846) and their children included: Betty (b.1819); William (b.1821); Helen (b.1823); John (b.1825); Isabel (b.1827); and Anne (b.1829). He may have been son of cooper John and Betty Crozier, who was born in 1790. William of Brugh (1789/90–1845) eldest surviving son of William, Rector of Trim, and descended from the Eliotts of Brugh and farmers of Southfield. In 1818 he succeeded as head of the Eliotts of Brugh on the death of William of Wells. He became a Lt.-Col. in the Royal Canadian Rifles. He served in the Peninsula Wars and commanded the Niagara frontier, where he died, and where there is a memorial to him in St. Mark’s Church. In 1829 he married Mary Ann Charlotte Moore, daughter of Capt. Moore of the Royal Marines. Their children were: Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford; and Capt. Henry Sheridan (d.1867). William (1792–1811) youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was 3rd Lieutenant on the H.M.S Fox and died returning from Bengal. William (1794/5–1866) shepherd in Castleton. In 1861 he was on Langholm Street. He married Isabella Armstrong, from Nichol Forest, Cumberland, and she died in 1870, aged 75. Their children included: Walter (1820/1–40); Robert (1825/6–74); Violet; and Agnes (1836/7–90). William (b.1794/5) mason in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside and in 1851 was at Woodfoot (probably Cleuchfoot). His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Isabella, Francis and William. Perhaps the same William was a widowed dyke builder living at Myrselawgreen with his daughter Jane in 1861. William (b.1795/6) from Selkirk, he was ‘Tacksman, Tollbar’ at Mackside Toll in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included James, George and William. William (1796–1842) younger son of William, farmer at Winningtonrig. He farmed at Mangerton and died unmarried. William (1796–1838) son of John and Jean Scott. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, like his father before him. He was one of the Tory supporters who became a victim during the ‘Tully’s Mill’ mobbings at the 1837 election. William (1797–1869) younger son of William, architect in Kelso and grandson of Rev. Thomas of Cavers. His brother John was a lawyer in Hawick. He was born in Kelso and became a surgeon in London. He married Sarah Georgina Miller and they had 14 children. William (b.c.1800) son of John, labourer at Wauchope Gardens. His children were born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish, although he was living at Wauchope Cottages in 1841 and Tythehouse in 1851 and 1861. He was Farm Steward at Tythehouse in 1861. He married Margaret Murray (who died before 1851) and their children included: Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), b.1822; John (b.1823); Margaret (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); James (b.1828); Scott (b.1830); Anne (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Peter Cairns. William (1801–64) hosiery manufacturer who founded William Elliot & Sons in 1823. He was son of James of Goldielands and brother of Dr. Adam and of Margaret, who married John Wilson, ‘the Dip’. He served his time as a stocking-maker, then built up his own business in Slitrig Crescent (around No. 6). His business is listed as a hosiery manufacturers on the Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was an executor for the estate of fellow manufacturer John Nixon in 1849. In 1851, essentially as an extension of his nearby factory he built Tower Mill over the Slitrig and paid for a new bridge (now part of the Kirkstile) to be built in place of the Auld Brig (which was demolished, with the approval of the Town Council and Roads Trustees). As a result he obtained possession of the stone from the demolition of the Auld Brig, some of which found its way into other buildings. He was one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a Town Councillor from 1861, and his portrait hangs in the Museum. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He lived on the Crescent. It was said that the citizens of Hawick, keen to hear about the future fortunes of the hosiery industry, looked forward more to his speach at the New Year’s factory festival than they did to the throne speach! He is also supposed to have said that he preferred hosiery because ‘though it was not so profitable, it gave most employment in proportion to the capital invested’. He was probably the William whose heirs are recorded in about 1874 owning part of the ‘particate lands’ once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabella Scott (b.c.1806) in 1836. Their children included: Jane Carlin (b.1836); Agnes (b.1838); James (b.1840); William Scott (b.1843); and Adam (b.1844). His 2 sons carried on the firm of Elliot’s. He died at the old family home of Goldielands. William (b.c.1802) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm. He farmed at Harden in Castleton Parish. He married Jean Pattison (b.c.1811). Their children included: Robert (b.1839); and William (b.1843). William (19th C.) blacksmith and leader of the Jedburgh drum and fife band. He walked to Hawick in 1832 after the Reform Bill was defeated in the House of Lords, calling on Hawick men to follow him to London to overthrow the Lords, a threat he was talked out of. He later left Jedburgh, then emigrated to America, where he set up the Elliot Frog and Switch Company in St. Louis, which helped build the U.S. railroads. William (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded as winner of the ‘standing high leap’ at the 1834 Common Riding Games. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William Scott see William Scott-Elliot. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1861 he was farming more than 6000 acres. He lived with his sisters Ann Jane and Christian. William Scott of Arkleton see William Scott-Elliot. William (1812–c.78) raised by William and Jane Easton, he appears to have actually been the illegitimate son of William’s younger brother Thomas (i.e. the man whom he would have called uncle) with Isobel Aitchison (who may have died in childbirth). He was shepherd at Scotch Kershope in at least 1841–1861. In 1841 he married Christian Crozier (1806–77). Their children included: John (1842–79), died at Whithaugh Mill; William (b.1844); Walter Nichol (1846–82), died at Millburn; and James (1848–1928), farmer. William (1814–67) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a joiner on the Loan. He was listed as a joiner at about 2 Loan in 1851 and as ‘House Proprietor’ at 2 Loan on the 1861 census. He married Helen Smith, and their children included: Robert (1851–1930), who married Isabella Mitchell; Helen T. (b.1852), who lived in Liverpool; Peter Smith (1854–1915), who married Jane Drinnan; Janet B. (1855–1933), who married Alfred Hannah; Elizabeth (1857–1934); William R. (1859–1934), who was a teacher; and Martha (1863–1945), also lived in Liverpool. His younger brother John Scott Elliot was Cornet. William (1817–98) son of Henry in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He was tenant in Colterscleuch. He was helping his father with the farm according to the 1851 and 1861 censuses. William (b.1817/8) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Arkleton in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Jane, Esther and Henry. William (b.c.1819) agricultural labourer, born in Castleton. In 1851 he was a cattle-feeder at Ruletownhead in Southdean Parish and in 1861 was a ploughman at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish. He married Jemima Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1852), Isabella (b.1854), John, Margaret and Matthew. William (1819–91) son of William, tenant at Hartwoodmyres. He farmed at Hartwoodmyres along with his brothers Richard and John. He was recorded at Hartwoodmyres in 1868. William (1820–97) shepherd of the Ewes valley and elsewhere. He married Helen McVittie who was from Fiddleton, and secondly married Elizabeth Little. He died at Peebreathope and was buried at Ewes Kirkyard. William (19th C.) recorded at ‘Road End’ near Newcastleton in 1868. This could perhaps be the same as Steeleroad-end. William (1828–91) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson. His father was farmer at Millburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 at Lochburnfoot near Teviothead he married Helen (1839–1920), daughter of James.
Elliot

Miller and Euphemia Winthrope. At that time he was living at Falnash. In 1862 they emigrated to New Zealand, and he died at Nevis, Central Otago. Their children were Euphemia Winstrup, Helen Davidson, Jane, Isabella Douglas and Ann Jemima. Rev. William Hume ‘Hume’ (1837–1927) from Hawick, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was brother of James, merchant in the Sandbed. He trained as a writer’s apprentice in Hawick. He went to Edinburgh University in 1859, and was minister at Haltwhistle in Northumberland. In 1874 he became minister of the St. Andrews Presbyterian (Dundee) Church in Ramsbottom, and served until his retirement in 1907. He wrote ‘The Country and Church of the Cheeryble Brothers’ (1893), and ‘Story of the ‘Cheeryble’ Grants: from the Spey to the Irwell’ (1906), describing the real life counterparts of the Scotsmen used as inspiration for characters in Charles Dickens ‘Nicholas Nickleby’. He also wrote verse, for example ‘God and our Country’, about the Covenanters, as well as verse in both Scots and Lancashire dialects. He was a keen member of the Bury and District Burns Club as well as the Manchester Branch of the Dickens Club. He was said to have a ‘remarkable command of the Scotch language and Scots dialect, and also of the Lancashire dialect’. He married a daughter of P.L. MacTaggart of Liverpool. He is buried in Wandsworth Cemetery, London. William (19th C.) Hawick’s first cabman. His daughter Jessie married Alexander Kyle. William ‘Wullie o Gowdlands’ (or Goldielands) (19th C.) simple-minded soul who lived at Goldielands, ‘Wullie o Gowdlands’ (or Goldielands) (19th C.) Hawick’s first cabman. William ‘Wullie o Gowdlands’ (or Goldielands) (19th C.) simple-minded soul who lived at Goldielands, and liked to dress up for special occasions, marching in front of the Saxhorn Band, the Volunteer Band, with the Cornet, etc. He was long remembered for one occasion when he arrived the night before a band event so as not to sleep in. William Claude 7th Laird of Harwood (1835–1922) eldest son of Robert Kerr. He succeeded to Harwood in 1873, with Clifton going to his brother Robert. He was born at Greenriver and baptised at Mossburnford. Educated at Cheltenham College, he entered the army in 1854 and soon became a Lieutenant in the 9th (Norfolk) Regiment. He was decorated in the Crimean War, but had retired from the army after only about 2 years. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a keen hunter and also proficient in boxing. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of the farms of Harwood, Appotside and others. In 1876 he married Bertha Eliza, daughter of William Charles Blackman of Southsea, and she died in 1895. After his marriage in 1876 he lived mainly in Wales, seldom visiting Harwood, which was let out for the hunting season. He had no children and was succeeded by his nephew Thomas. William (b.1838/9) born in Castleton Parish, he was a cattleman, living at Adderstone Shiel Cottages in 1901. His wife was Christina and their children included ploughman James. Col. William Scott (1841–aft. 1919) son of William Scott, with whom he is easily confused, his mother being Isabella Scott. He had brothers Adam of Caverton and James of Mosstower. He ran the factory at Tower Mill and lived at Teviot Lodge. Some time before 1900 he installed electric lighting at his house at Teviot Lodge, using wires running from his factory at Tower Mill. In 1859 he (or perhaps his father) instigated setting up a company of Hawick Volunteers, and he eventually became Colonel of the Battalion. In 1874 he won a shooting competition between Volunteers from around Scotland. He was later Major and Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel of the Battalion’s successors, the Border Rifles, serving until 1891. He was also a keen meteorologist, and regularly sent his readings to GJ. Symons who published British Rainfall readings. He donated fossil shells to the Museum. In 1919 he retired from the firm of William Elliot & Sons, and passed ownership to his son, who was also William Scott. He married Margaret Cadenhead, daughter of Dr. George William Thompson. He secondly married Elizabeth MacNee. His second daughter was Isabella. His youngest daughter Margaret (b.1879) married manufacturer William Boyd Sime. Teviot Lodge was gifted to the High School by his daughters in 1933. William (1830/1–1903) eldest son of Lt.-Col. William, he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh in 1845. He was educated at Cambridge and trained as a minister, becoming Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral and Rural Dean of Hereford. He married Anne Louise Bennett in 1829 and their children were Col. William (who wrote ‘The Elliots of Brugh and Wells’) and Gilbert John. He wrote a study of Ecclesiastical Dilapidations. Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam Elliot (1849–1928) 4th son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. He served with Princess Louise’s Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. In 1880 he married Elizabeth Fanny, daughter of John Rutherford of Halifax, Nova Scotia. His children were Mary Adelaide (who married Sir John Hepburn Milne-Home), Margaret Cecil Anne (who married Maj. Frederick Adrian Cathcart) and John Augustus Ellioti
Gilbert (who worked in Kenya). William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of Col. William Scott of Teviot Lodge. He took over the hosiery firm of William & Elliot and Sons when his father retired in 1919. William (b.1859) son of Walter of Holybush and descended from the Elliots of Newhall, he was an auctioneer in Muirglen, Lanark. He farmed at Langburnshiel on the Harwood (on Rule) estate and in 1924 he bought the whole estate from the 8th Laird, Thomas Robert Barnewall Elliot. He was a prominent auctioneer in his day, who was well known in agricultural circles. In Glasgow in 1866 he married Ellen Elizabeth Shields, daughter of a farmer. Their children were Ellen Elizabeth (who married Lt.-Col. John Craig of the Royal Scots Fusiliers) and Walter, who also farmed at Harwood and was an M.P. William of Brugh (b.1861) elder son of Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford. He matriculated arms in 1902, establishing his descent from Gavin of the Brugh and Robert of Redheugh. He wrote the book ‘The Elliots of Brugh and Wells’. In 1890 he married Mary Frances (d.1919), daughter and co-heiress of Arthb B. Warre of Westfield House, Ramsgate. Their only child was Allison Mary, who married her cousin Lt.-Col. George Augustus Elliot of the Royal Irish Regiment. Sir William of Brugh (1896–1971) born in Wornit, Fife, elder son of Gilbert John of Brugh, he became head of the Elliots of Brugh. He joined the army in 1915, becoming a pilot in 1918 and was shot down and rescued in Russia in 1919. He rose to become Air Chief Marshal and Chief Staff Officer to the Minister of Defence, also receiving a knighthood. He married Elizabeth Rosemary Alice Chancellor (nee Hislop (1824–82) daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop and wife of the 3rd Earl of Minto. She wrote several works relating to family history, including ‘A Memoir of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliot’ (1868), ‘Life and Letters of Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of Minto’ (1874), ‘Lord Minto in India’ (1880) and ‘Border Sketches’ (1870). George Francis Stewart (1822–1901) son of Gilbert, the 2nd Earl of Minto. He wrote ‘The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897) as well as some other works. He was a local M.P., and was given a celebratory dinner in the Exchange Hall in 1868. He died unmarried. Gilbert (1782–1859) 5th Baronet and 2nd Earl of Minto, born in Lyons. He was son of Gilbert the 1st Earl, who had adopted the extra surname after inheriting titles through marriage. Educated at Edinburgh University and Cambridge. He was Captain of the Roxburgh Militia 1802–05, and later (from about 1808) Lt.-Col. Commandant of the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He became M.P. for Ashburton in Devonshire, and then for Roxburghshire from 1812 (following a long family tradition), defeating Alexander Don by 6 (or perhaps 7) votes.

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (e-lee-i’-nu-ri-kin-in-mund) n. Arthur Ralph Douglas (1846–1923) son of William Hugh and brother of Gilbert John, the 4th Earl of Minto. He was editor of the Edinburgh Review and Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire 1880–92. In 1880 he defeated Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas by only 10 votes. He also defeated Charles Barrington Balfour of Newton-Don in 1885 and Mark Francis Napier in 1886, when he had become a Unionist. However, he lost in the rematch of 1892, although he returned as an M.P. for Durham 1898–1906. He was Financial Secretary to the Treasury 1903–06. In 1888 he married Harriet Dagmar Ryan and they had 2 children, Robert Douglas (who died young) and Capt. Hubert William Arthur (of the Wiltshire Regiment). Emma Eleanor Elizabeth (nee Hislop (1824–82) daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop and wife of the 3rd Earl of Minto. She wrote several works relating to family history, including ‘A Memoir of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliot’ (1868), ‘Life and Letters of Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of Minto’ (1874), ‘Lord Minto in India’ (1880) and ‘Border Sketches’ (1870). George Francis Stewart (1822–1901) son of Gilbert, the 2nd Earl of Minto. He wrote ‘The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897) as well as some other works. He was a local M.P., and was given a celebratory dinner in the Exchange Hall in 1868. He died unmarried. Gilbert (1782–1859) 5th Baronet and 2nd Earl of Minto, born in Lyons. He was son of Gilbert the 1st Earl, who had adopted the extra surname after inheriting titles through marriage. Educated at Edinburgh University and Cambridge. He was Captain of the Roxburgh Militia 1802–05, and later (from about 1808) Lt.-Col. Commandant of the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He became M.P. for Ashburton in Devonshire, and then for Roxburghshire from 1812 (following a long family tradition), defeating Alexander Don by 6 (or perhaps 7) votes.
He was only M.P. until 1814, when he succeeded as Earl, taking up his seat in the House of Lords. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was an early member of the Jedforest Club, but resigned in 1834 following a dispute over politics. It was suggested that he intervened during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822/3. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1825 and subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in that year. He was ambassador to Berlin 1832–34, First Lord of the Admiralty 1835–41, and Lord Privy Seal 1846–52. It is said that while he was in charge of the Admiralty there was a complaint raised about the number of Elliots who held positions in the Navy. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and a member of the Royal Society. He retired to Minto House in 1852. In 1806 he married Mary, daughter of Patrick Brydome (traveller and author) of Lennel House near Coldstream, and she died in 1853. They had 10 children: Mary Elizabeth (d.1874), who married Baron Dunfermline; Francis Anna Maria (d.1898), who married Lord John Russell; Elisabeth Amelia Jane (d.1892), who married Frederick Romily; Charlotte Mary (d.1890), who married Melville Portal; Harriet Anne Gertrude (d.1855); William Hugh (1814–91), who became 3rd Earl; Adm. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydome (1810–95), who married Louisa Blackett and Henrietta Emily Liddell; George Francis Stewart, who was also Roxburghshire M.P.; Lt.-Col. Gilbert, who married Katherine Anne Gilbert; and Sir Henry George (1817–1907), who married Anne Antrobus. Gilbert John (1845–1914) 4th Earl of Minto, eldest son of William Hugh. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He was known as an allround sportsman in his youth, excelling on horseback, at rowing, shooting and angling. He rode in the Grand National 5 times (breaking his neck in 1876) and won the Streeplechase de Paris in 1874. He was newspaper correspondent in a number of wars and an officer in others (serving in the Scots Guards), this taking him to various parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. He was Commandant of the Border mounted volunteers. He first went out to Canada in 1883 as military secretary to the Governor-General, and there helped suppress the rebellion led by Louis Riel, being present at the battle of Fish Creek. Back in Scotland, in 1889 he became Brigadier-General of the Scottish Border Volunteer Brigade. In 1891 he succeeded to the Earldom of Minto, before which he had the title of Viscount Melgund. He became Governor-General of Canada in 1898, serving until 1904 and then was Viceroy of India (1905–1910), being jointly responsible for the Morley-Minto reforms of 1909. He returned to Scotland in 1910, but did not long enjoy his retirement. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1898, following his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, and Minto Place was named after him. In 1883 he married Mary Caroline, daughter of Gen. Charles Grey. They had 5 children: Eileen Nina Evelyn Sibell (1884–1938), who married Lord Francis George Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 6th son of the Duke of Buccleuch; Ruby Florence Mary (1886–1961), who married the 2nd Earl Cromer; Violet Mary (1889–1965) who firstly married Lord Charles George Francis Mercer Nairne and secondly became Lady Astor; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975), who succeeded; and Gavin William Esmond (1895–1917), who was killed at Flanders. Photographs of him show a fine handle-bar moustache. He died at Minto House and was buried there. Many streets, schools, parks and towns (particularly in Canada and India) were named after him. Sir Gilbert Edward George Lariston, O.B.E., J.P. (1928–2005) 6th Earl of Minto, succeeding his father in 1975. He was baptised in S.S. Mary & David in Hawick. Educated at Eton and Sandhurst, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards and served as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in the Far East and then Cyprus. He returned to run the farm at Minto, and played an active part in local affairs. He was elected to the Borders Regional Council, serving 1974–80 and 1980–96, being Convenor for the period 1990–96. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire from 1961 and was Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale. He was called ‘Gibbie’ by his friends, the same nickname used generations earlier in his family. He was a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen’s bodyguard in Scotland. He served on several national committees, including being President of the South Scotland Chamber of Commerce, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1986. In 1952 he married Lady Caroline Child-Villiers, and after a divorce married Miss Ballantine of New Jersey, and had 2 children: Gilbert Timothy George Lariston (b.1953), who succeeded; and Laura (b.1956). Gilbert Timothy George Lariston of Minto (1953– ) son of Gilbert Edward George Lariston, he became 7th Earl of Minto in 2005. Hugh Frederick Hislop (1848–1932) 3rd son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. Like several members of his immediate family he served as an M.P., for the North Division of Ayr, 1885–92. In 1879 he married Mary Euphemia, daughter of Col. Samuel Long. His children were Nina Emily (who married Sir Charles Lennox Somerville Russell), Mabel Victoria (who married Hugh Munro and secondly married William Stewart McGeorge and Lieut. Hugh Samuel Roger of the Coldstream Guards. Sir Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975) 5th Earl of Minto, son of Gilbert John. He was known as Viscount Melgund until he succeeded his father in 1914. He was educated at Eton, being then commissioned into the Lothian and Border Horse before entering the Scots Guards in 1913, becoming a Captain and serving through WWI. After the war he read the Roll of Honour for the fallen in WWI in St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He then went to Canada as A.D.C. to the Governor-General. Returning to Scotland, he ran his estate and played an active role in local work, becoming a Justices of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1924. In 1930 a portrait of the 1st Countess Minto by Joshua Reynolds was stolen from his private collection at Minto House and has never been recovered. In 1921 he married Marion, daughter of George William Cook of Westmount, Montreal. They had 4 children: Bridget Elliot (1921–2005), who married Lt.-Col. James Averell Clark and Maj. Henry Claude Lyon Garnett; Willa (b.1924), who married Maj. George David Chetwode; Gilbert Edward George Lariston (b.1928), who succeeded; and Lieut. George Esmond Dominic (b.1931), who married Countess Marie-Anna Esterhazy, ‘Bunny’. William Hugh (1814–91) 3rd Earl of Minto, eldest son of Gilbert. He was Liberal M.P. for Hythe 1837–41, Greenock 1847–52 and Clackmannanshire 1857–59. In 1859 he succeeded to the Minto titles. In 1860 he had a writ for the lands and Barony of Headshaw, part of Hassendean Common and Langhope. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and chaired the Board of Lunacy Commissioners for Scotland. He was also a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as on the county Prison Board. He was a staunch supporter of the Established Church. He gave the main speech at the inauguration of the Leyden Monument in Denholm in 1861. He was also Patron of Hawick and Wilton Football Club. In 1844 he married his cousin Emma Eleanor Elizabeth, daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hyslop (or Hislop). They had 4 children: Gilbert John, who succeeded; Arthur Ralph Douglas, barrister, who married Madeleine Harriet Dagmar Ryan; Hugh Frederick Hislop, M.P., who married Mary Euphemia Long; and Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam, who married Elisabeth Fanny Rutherford. He died in London. William Brownrigg (1820–1900) eldest son of John Esmond Elliot, M.P. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire and a Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He resided at Benrig, near St. Boswells. In 1858 he married Mary Geraldine, daughter of Justin McCartie of Carrignavar, County Cork. Their children were William Gerald and Cyril Herbert, both of whom died unmarried (whether the extra names are included in the Elliot surname or as middle names is confusing in these generations, with the triple-barrelled surname typically being only adopted by the Earl of Minto; note that ‘Kynynmound’ is also spelled ‘Kynmmond’ etc.).

the Elliot Bandstand (thu-e-lee-it-bawnd-stwand) n. bandstand constructed in the Park in 2015 on the site of the former structure, named in commemoration of Zandra Elliot (see also the Bandstand).

the Elliots (thu-e-lee-itz, e-litz) n. important local family since at least the 15th century, thought to have been granted land in Liddesdale sometime in the 12th to 14th centuries, perhaps originally as vasals of the Douglasses. There are theories and legends of how they came originally from Angus or from Elliot (now called Arbrilot) in Forfarshire, or were descended from a Norman soldier named ‘Aliot’. This might be consistent with ‘William Alight, burgois de Seint Johan de Perth’ (who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296) being a direct ancestor of Elliots who were granted land in Liddesdale, perhaps in the time of Robert the Bruce. Another version of the origin of the name is that it derives from the old English personal name Elwold; this is consistent with some of the earliest local recordings of the name as ‘Elwald’, ‘Ellwand’ and variants (although it is possible that this was simply a scribal affectation). Probably the most likely early history has a Breton origin, perhaps ‘Halegouet’ (or Huelgoat), with land (later called ‘Alyth’) being given in Perthshire around the late 12th century, then moving to Liddesdale when given the lands of Redheugh around the early 14th century. There were people of that name close to the Borders from at least the 13th century (e.g. ‘Elewald’ and ‘Helewald’ in England in 1230, and Reginald son of Eliot in Dumfriesshire in the period 1242–95); the close geographic connection makes these people seem like likely ancestors for the Border Elliots, although other branches may have a different origin entirely. The first recorded example in the Borders may date from 1425/6 and there is certainly a ‘Johannis Elwald’ in 1436 and Gilbert in 1453. They grew more powerful and numerous through the 15th century and in the 16th century effective took over control of Liddesdale from the Armstrongs. In 1494/5, among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justiciary there were listed 27 Elliots. They then had a reputation as notorious rievers, e.g. the Master of Hailes brought in ‘the Elwands’ in 1515/6. The clan submitted to England in 1547, with 74 men giving their pledges to Lord Wharton. Under Martin of Brandlie they were particularly powerful in the 1560s, but this led to a deadly feud with the Scotts, which included burning Hawick in 1565! A letter of 1583 lists the leaders of the family in Liddesdale. The clan suffered after the Union of the Crowns and attempts at ‘pacification’ of the Borders. The Elliots of Minto are derived from a grandson of the Elliots of Stobs (who spelled their name differently), who in turn come from the earlier Chiefs at Redheugh in Liddesdale. The family moved their seat to Stobs for some time, although the chief once more sits at Redheugh. The Elliots of Brugh were also once well represented in Hawick, with other branches such as the Elliots of Horsleyhill and Wolfelee also being locally important. Elliots have been famous as soldiers, administrators and landowners. A pedigree of the family, dated about 1704, was discovered among the papers at Minto. The clan motto is ‘Fortiter et recte’ (boldly and rightly) – ‘The double L and single T Descend from Minto and Wolfelee, The double L and single T Mark the old race in Stobs that dwell, The single L and single T The Elliots of St. Germains be, But double T and double L Who they are, nobody can tell’ [T], ‘Land of Elliots and of fame, Of every bold and Border name, The Scottish pulse still beats the same Through the lands that were formerly part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, precise location uncertain. There are deeds relating to the lands in 1545, 1566 and 1614.

Elliott (e-lee-i’) n. Nichol (b.1835–1904/5) born in Cornhill, Northumberland, near Coldstream, where his father was schoolmaster. He became a joiner, working around the Borders. In the late 1850s he worked at Wilton Lodge, which was then being renovated for David Pringle. His ‘Literary Hours of a Working Man’ (1862) consists of prose and verse pieces, many from around this time, some having been previously published in the Hawick Advertiser. He also had poetry and prose printed in the Border Treasury (in the 1870s), as elm (e-lum) n. elm (note normally pronounced as 2 syllables).

Elm Bank (e-lum-bawngk) n. original name of villa-type house at 6 Fenwick Park. It was built for Burgh Surveyor John Manuel in 1884, to designs by Manuel himself. The access road became known as ‘Manuel’s Brae’. The house was bought by Robert Scott-Noble about 1900 and renamed ‘the Elms’. It was used as Wilton Manse in the period 1945–90 and then renamed ‘Ellistrin’ when purchased by Ron and Eileen Smith.

Elmbank (e-lum-bawngk) n. small house in Denholm that used to be the preacher’s house attached to the Cameronian Chapel.

Elm Cottage (e-lum-ko'-eij) n. former cottage to the north of Elm House, off the Green in Denholm.

Elm Court (e-lum-kör’) n. housing developed by Eildon Housing in 2000, in the renovated Store Dairy off Orchard Terrace, also incorporating the former Provost’s House. It consists of 30 flats.

Elm Grove (e-lum-gröv) n. street in the Wellogate, built off Orchard Terrace in 1897 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It was named after the elm trees that used to grow there. The Hawick Co-operative Society had extensive premises in the street, including stables for the Store horses. One of the last town gas lamps from this street is preserved in the Museum. Nos. 1–7 are grade C listed buildings.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hooz) n. villa-style house at 17 North Bridge Street, converted into a hotel. It was built as the residence of Dr. John R. Hamilton in about 1880. After conversion to a hotel the dining room became one of the town’s restaurants. It is grade C listed.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hooz) n. house in Denholm near the eastern corner of the Green. It held a baker’s shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and housed the Co-op store from 1951–85 (not to be confused with the hotel in Hawick).

Elm Hoose Hotel (e-lum-hooz-hö-tel) n. name used for Elm Hoose after it was converted into a hotel.

the Elms (thu-elms, e-humz) n. name given in 1901 to the house off Weensland Road known as ‘Elmbank’ (or ‘Elm Bank’), which had been built in 1884. It was purchased in 1945 as a manse for Wilton Parish Church. By the 1990s it was back in private hands and renamed ‘Ellistrin’, with present address 6 Fenwick Park.

eln (eln) n., arch. a unit of length approximately equal to 37 inches, a yard – ‘…ten pennis for weaving of the elne of cloth against their will …’ [BR1660], ‘…that none who shall cast peats for this year in Whitchesters Moss shall take above twelve yards of measure amongst the Moss side for spreading of the said peats, and that conform to the said twelve elns there must be a bridge left’ [BR1735], ‘…to take no more ground to spreed peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns …’ [BR1743] (also ell).

Elphinstone (el-fin-stin) n. Alexander (17th C.) witness in 1652 to the marriage contract between Robert Elliott (2nd son of Simon of the Binks) and Margaret Riddell (eldest daughter of William, portioner of Bewlie), where he is described as ‘in Hopsburne’. In 1653 he is recorded in a sasine as ‘indweller in Hobisburne, baillie in that part to William, Earl of Lothian’. He was presumably related to the later Alexander.

Alexander (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William and Margaret Langlands. In 1713 he sold the lands of Hartshagha and Kirklands of Hobkir to William Kerr of Abbotrule.

John of Henderstoun (16th/17th C.) brother of George, Janet and Agnes. William Turnbull of Rulewood had a ‘letter of apprising’ against him in 1622 for non-payment of several bonds. He then had to yield up the Barony of Henderstoun (in Peebleshire) and other lands to Turnbull. His son and heir was William. John (d.1649) 2nd Lord Balmerino, son of James, who was tried for supporting catholocism. He was imprisoned for opposition to Charles I, but eventually pardoned. He remained a staunch Covenanter, presiding over the Parliament which met in Edinburgh in 1641.
In 1643 he was recorded in the valuation rolls as owner of Over Crailing and the Wester Mains of Hundalee. He also held lands in Hobkirk Parish, valued at £4844 16s 8d. It is said he was a mortal enemy of William Eliott of Stobs. Some of his lands in Rulewater were sold to John Stewart, Earl of Traquair and combined into the Wells estate. However, the bulk of his Rulewater property eventually became part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs. He was succeeded by his son John, and the title became extinct in 1746 when Arthur, 6th Lord Balmerino was beheaded for supporing the Jacobite cause. Thomas (d.c.1519) received a gift of rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with William (probably his son) in 1510. In 1512 he is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal along with his wife Elizabeth (an error for Janet?) Turnbull in a deed for Hassendeanbank. In 1512 he had a charter from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with his wife Janet Turnbull (daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock). William had a 'precept of clare constat' in 1519, suggesting he was deceased by then. William (d.c.1486) younger son of Sir William of Pittendreich. He took up an ecclesiastical career. He became a Preliminary Canon of Glasgow and was Rector of Ashkirk by 1437. In 1479 he was stated to be a holder of the Preliminary of Auncrum. He probably succeeded to his sons rights as Archdeacon by 1437. In 1479 he was stated to be the Jacobite cause. Thomas (d.c.1519) received a gift of rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with William (probably his son) in 1510. William (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1519 he had a 'precept of clare constat' for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank. This suggests he was son of Thomas, who held the lands in 1512. Almost immediately he gave a charter of the same lands to Andrew Ker of Cessford and Agnes Crichton. William (17th C.) acquired the lands of Hartshaugh in the Rule valley, along with his heir Alexander. The lands were probably bought from Gilbert Elliot of Craigend in the mid-1600s and remained in the family until 1713. It is unclear to which branch of the Elphinstones he belonged. In 1637 he was 'Williame Elphingstoun in Blacklyemouth, alias Steytheveyage' (presumably 'stay the voyage') when he witnessed a Hobkirk sasine. He married Margaret, daughter of John Langlands, the minister of Wilton. William (17th C.) listed as tenant of Hartshaughmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely a descendant of the earlier William of Hartshaugh. He was recorded as owner of Hartshaugh (including the mill and mill lands) in 1707, when they were valued at £60 (formerly written 'Elphingston', 'Elphingstoun' and variants).

Etrickhill (el-rik-hil) n. lands near Denholm, recorded in the Douglas of Cavers deeds around the 16th century. In 1511 it is 'Etrichill' when listed (along with 'Drileth', 'Murelaw' and 'Dennumains') as part of the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when written 'Ellrighill', and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed 'Elvighill'. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located, but presumably near Denholm.

else (els) adv., arch. already, ere now – ‘Forbye, A was i the hert’s hyimm, els!’ [ECS], ‘…for it was weel-on o haaf-past five, els!’ [ECS], ‘Have ee come back else!’ [GW] (also written ‘els’).

elshin (el-shin) n., arch. a shoemaker’s awl – ‘…or pinglin’ wi’ an elshin like the souters o’ Selkirk’ [JMW] (also elsin).

elsin (el-sin) n., arch. an awl (also elsin).

Elwald (el-wawl’) n. early form of Elliot, e.g. recorded in a in 1497 when several men of that name witnessed a sasine for Redheugh. It is unclear if the Gilbert son of ‘Elewald’, ‘Walter son of ‘Helewald’ and ‘Helewald’ son of Herbert, listed in an assize in Newcastle in 1230, were connected. Perhaps the earliest record is for ‘Johannis Elwald’, who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. Gilbert Elwald is mentioned in 1453, on a document relating to lands in Feu-rule. ‘John Elvalde’ of Thorleshope is recorded in 1488 and 1498. ‘Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage’ is recorded in 1491. A letter of remission for Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1500 names 14 men of that surname in Liddesdale and surrounding areas. The same spelling is used in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 and 1516, for families of Redheugh, Larriston, etc., so this is clearly an alternative early spelling (although Pitcairn in his ‘Criminal Trials’ states ‘The Elwalds, notorious Border Thieves. The name is now extinct’). It is unclear whether this spelling was related to the pronunciation of the time, but it seems likely it was only used by scribes as an anglicised version of the name. In 1526/7 we have Gavin recorded, and in 1535 George and James. William and Robert Elwald are recorded as Liddesdale thieves in 1535. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale the name is recorded consistently as Elwald. Letters from English Wardens to their superiors from around this time also consistently use the form ‘Elwald’ (with spelling variants; although one letter of 1542/3 uses the perhaps more phonetic spelling ‘Eylwittes’). James Elwald in Dalkeith is recorded as witness to a document relating to the lands of Pettie in 1555. In a list of Borderers charged to appear before Queen Mary in 1561 we find the names ‘Elwald’ and ‘Ellot’ used interchangeably. By the end of the 16th century the forms ‘Elot’, ‘Ellat’, etc. are certainly more common. It is also possible that some of the earlier references were to an entirely different family, e.g. there were Elwolds in Ellingham Parish, Northumberland in the 12th century, in Newcastle in 1230 and throughout the Border counties of England in the 13th and 14th centuries. A man called ‘Elewald’ was killed in 1278/9 when accidentally struck in the head by a mallet near Alston in Cumbria. There were also people of the designation ‘de Elauud’ recorded in Northumberland in the 1260s and 1270s, which may be the same family (also written ‘Ellwald’, ‘Ellwald’, ‘Elvalde’ and occasionally ‘Elwand’ and ‘Elwood’; the ‘-wald’ ending suggests a Saxon origin, and there is an ‘Elwaldus’ mentioned as early as 964 in the Melrose Chronicle; the use of this form for members of the Border Elliot family has caused some confusion in accounts of the origins and history of the Elliots, but was probably mostly an affected form used in formal documents).

Ely Grain (e-lee-grain) n. small stream that joins the Hermitage’ is recorded in 1491. A letter of remission for Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1500 names 14 men of that surname in Liddesdale and surrounding areas. The same spelling is used in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 and 1516, for families of Redheugh, Larriston, etc., so this is clearly an alternative early spelling (although Pitcairn in his ‘Criminal Trials’ states ‘The Elwalds, notorious Border Thieves. The name is now extinct’). It is unclear whether this spelling was related to the pronunciation of the time, but it seems likely it was only used by scribes as an anglicised version of the name. In 1526/7 we have Gavin recorded, and in 1535 George and James. William and Robert Elwald are recorded as Liddesdale thieves in 1535. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale the name is recorded consistently as Elwald. Letters from English Wardens to their superiors from around this time also consistently use the form ‘Elwald’ (with spelling variants; although one letter of 1542/3 uses the perhaps more phonetic spelling ‘Eylwittes’). James Elwald in Dalkeith is recorded as witness to a document relating to the lands of Pettie in 1555. In a list of Borderers charged to appear before Queen Mary in 1561 we find the names ‘Elwald’ and ‘Ellot’ used interchangeably. By the end of the 16th century the forms ‘Elot’, ‘Ellat’, etc. are certainly more common. It is also possible that some of the earlier references were to an entirely different family, e.g. there were Elwolds in Ellingham Parish, Northumberland in the 12th century, in Newcastle in 1230 and throughout the Border counties of England in the 13th and 14th centuries. A man called ‘Elewald’ was killed in 1278/9 when accidentally struck in the head by a mallet near Alston in Cumbria. There were also people of the designation ‘de Elauud’ recorded in Northumberland in the 1260s and 1270s, which may be the same family (also written ‘Ellwald’, ‘Ellwald’, ‘Elvalde’ and occasionally ‘Elwand’ and ‘Elwood’; the ‘-wald’ ending suggests a Saxon origin, and there is an ‘Elwaldus’ mentioned as early as 964 in the Melrose Chronicle; the use of this form for members of the Border Elliot family has caused some confusion in accounts of the origins and history of the Elliots, but was probably mostly an affected form used in formal documents).

Emigration (e-mee-grä-shin) n. moving overseas, expatriation. This was common for local people, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the usual destinations being America, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Most boats would leave from the western ports, Hawick folk often being ferried from Annan to the ships that left Liverpool. In the early part of the 19th century it was common to see carts leaving along the New Road towards Langholm, loaded with woman and children and modest luggage, with the men walking, and friends following them a mile or so out of town.

em (em) v. am (first person singular, present tense) – ‘A em so’, ‘em A allowed oot the night?’; ‘A em listenin ti ee’ (often used emphatically; also sometimes um as well as occasionally the English am).

Embroy (em-brö, -bru) n. familiar for of Edinburgh – ‘When dominie and minister Could offer him nae mair, He took the gate to Embro’ toun To stoke his lairing there’ [WL]. ‘… wee boggles, big boggles, anid and young boggles, Embra boggles, Border boggles, Fife boggles …’ [JuH] (also written ‘Embra’).

Emery (e-mu-ree) n. John Dixon (b.1810/1) from Berwick, he was a ropemaker, living at Howdenburn. He is listed there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Gordon and their children included Elizabeth G. and John J.S.

emmet (e-mi, -it) n., poet. an ant – ‘…An emmet ran up a blade o’ gress And beis thrae the clover were hingin’’ [DH].

Emmett (e-mi, -mit) n. John T. (1828–98) English architect and architectural critic who designed the new Wilton Church, built 1859–62. He had previously been responsible for Bath Street Independent Church in Glasgow (now called Renfield St. Stephen’s and also referred to as Blythswood), which has the tallest spire in that city. He also designed Sandyford Church, Glasgow. It is said that he was influenced by Gothic revivalist August Welby Pugin, and that his designs (being quite Gothic and Anglican in appearance) heavily influenced later Presbyterian and Episcopalian church designs in Scotland.
Emmettshiels (em-mi’sheelz) n. former name for lands probably near Harwood-on-Teviot, in the Barony of Hawick. They were held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick from at least 1511, mentioned again in 1572, 1594 and 1615, and recorded again in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the latter part of the 17th century. Precisely where they were is uncertain, but in 1686 they are ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtimes called Lant and Emmetsheels’ (it is ‘Emetschelis’ in 1511, ‘Emetscheilis’ and ‘Emetschelis’ in 1572, ‘Emeschellis’ in 1594 and ‘Emetschelis’ in 1615).

eanni (em-, am-, um-ni) contr. am not, literally ‘amn’t’ – ‘A emni din yit’, ‘Mibbe ee’re feenished, bit A emni’, ‘... an’ in the nicht seesen, an’ anna secelent’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘ammi’ etc.; used for emphasis, cf. enn’t; it is unclear why ‘A emni’ is used sometimes in preference to ‘Am erni’; local dialect fills the gap left in standard English, where ‘amn’t’ doesn’t exist).

eenn’t (em-in’, am-in’, um-in’) contr. am not – ‘A’m the wunner, emn’t A?’, ‘emn’t A the daftest glaik ee’ve ever seen?’ (also ‘amn’t’ doesn’t exist).

Émond (e-min’d) n. Robert (19th C.) probably son of James and Thomasina Montgomery. He was Cornet in 1876 and fleisher to trade. He was arrested along with 7 others after Edward Darden was fatally injured at the Thursday Night Chase, but later released. Probably the same Robert was listed as a butcher in Selkirk in 1897.

The Empire (thu-em-pIr) n. name for the cinema at the Exchange in the early 20th century.

The Employment Exchange (thu-em-ploi-mm-in’-iks-châin) n. Hawick’s Employment Centre, which opened in 1939 on Teviot Crescent, off the Little Haugh. The building is now Diesel’s night-club.

Empy (em-pee) adj. empty – ‘A sei ma gless ees empy’, ‘it was is empy is the High Street on Common Ridin Fridi’, ‘An’ gif he cum til see me, he raves owt empie things ...’ [HSR], ‘In A gaed ti fill ma empie keite, for my certies! A was howe!’ [ECS], n. an empty object – ‘did ee pit oot the empies?’ (also written ‘empie’ and ‘emp’y’).

Émtelle (em-tel) n. manufacturer of fibre-optic cable duct, with factories in both Hawick and Jedburgh. Founded in Jedburgh in 1980, the Hawick manufacturing facility was opened in Hawick in 1999. The Hawick premises are located at Haughhead, to the east of the town, on the big bend in the A698 after the junction with the Bonchester road.

-end (en) suffix ending for some strong past participles, of which only a few survive in standard English (e.g. ‘beaten’, ‘eaten’, ‘fallen’ and ‘written’). Several more survive locally (e.g. ‘bitten’, ‘litten’, ‘putten’, ‘stunned’, ‘strucken’ and ‘sutton’), and even more used to be common (e.g. ‘baken’, ‘cuisen’, ‘cruppen’, ‘hauden’, ‘setten’ and ‘stunken’).

-en’ (en) n., poet. end – ‘They’re naïe ways nice about the means Gif they but gain their selfish en’s’ [RDW], ‘... an’ let thame ken that God rings in Jacob untill the en’s o’ the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Och let the wicketniss o’ the wicket cum til ane en’ ...’ [HSR].

the Engineer (thu-in-ji-neer) n. name of one of the stagecoaches which regularly ran between Carlisle and Hawick before the railway, the other being ‘the Favourite’. The route started at the Tower and finished at the Grey Goat Hotel (on English Street) in Carlisle. The coach ran from 1825 until 1862. Robert Govenlock was one of the original guards. According to Pigot’s 1825 directory the 2 coaches were called ‘the Mail’ and ‘the Sir Walter Scott’, but it may be that these names were never used locally.

England (ing-glund, -glund) n. country to the south of Hawick, usually entered across the Carter Bar or near Canonbie. The 19th century saw a large immigration to Hawick of people from English hosiery centres around Derby, Leicester and Nottingham – ‘Ours was a land – a free fair land – Ere England had a name: And minstrel’s harp and warrior’s brand Have aye upheld her fame’ [JT], ‘‘Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near ...But I like auld Hawick the best’ [TK], ‘Dive ee leike ti beide up Ingland’ [ECS], ‘Here were the white road from England Drops to the Rule and the Jed, Leaps the proud pulse of the exile, Back to the mother-land speed’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘Inglund’; note the pronunciation is always i-, never e-).

Englishshire (ing-glund-shIr) n. humorous name for England – ‘Here, hevin contemlated the ‘glorious river Tweed – clear and majestic’ Burns, for the first time in his life crossed owre inti Englandshire ...’ [IWL] (a Landlesim).

English (ing-gleesh) adj. coming from south of the Border, n. the people living south of the Border – ‘...in refusing to go as ane gyd to the Inglis to Langholm’ [BR1651], ‘The English love to sip through a stiffened upper lip. They believe they are a race of self-made men; thus relieving the Almighty of the blame for making Blightly, and relieving Him of blame for making them’ [TD], v., arch. to translate into English – ‘And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches’’ [EM1820].

English (ing-gleesh) n. Adam (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Thorbrand. Their children included: John (b.1642); Janet (b.1644); William (b.1646); and Janet (again, b.1649). Probably the same Adam is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (it is possible that this is a variant of ‘Inglis’).

the English Cricket Field (thu-ing-gleesh-kri-ki’-feeld) n. former field near St. Cuthbert’s, used for cricket, P.S.A. rugby matches etc., situated where Lyle & Scott’s offices now stand.

the English Grammar Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-graw-nur-skil) n. another name for Hawick Grammar School, once in Orrock Place. The name possibly came from a combination of the formerly separate ‘English’ and ‘Grammar’ schools, and may only have been used once they were merged (otherwise the name is too confusing!).

the English Kirk (thu-ing-gleesh-kirk) n. informal name for the Episcopal Church, because of its ties with the Anglican Church. In Hawick this was the name given (with no obvious sense of disparagement) to St. Cuthbert’s Church, partly the English Schuil name formerly used to refer to the ‘Parish’ as opposed to ‘Grammar’ school, i.e. the elementary school, which was taught in English rather than Latin. In the 17th century the school-house was St. Mary’s Kirk, and it is unclear what building was used in the early 18th century. In 1683 there was a plea made for the school to be house elsewhere than the Kirk, partly because ‘the pews had suffered a considerable loss by the scholars breaking the same’. In 1715 it is recorded that 5 merks were appropriated by the Council for the rent of a house for the school, with the other half to be paid by the Kirk Session. In 1722 the master was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’ and in 1737 he was allowed £8 annually for the rent of a schoolhouse. In 1739 the first purpose-built school was erected, being 30 feet by 16 feet (inside the walls). The school once had its own flag that was carried in the Common Riding procession, behind the Grammar School flag and in front of the apprentices flag, according to the 1747 Council decree. Pupils attended this school for 2 years, learning reading, writing and arithmetic. It united with the Grammar School in 1824/5. The same name was later informally used for St. Cuthbert’s School, which was attached to the English Kirk and opened about 1848, with a purpose-built school constructed 1849/50. An Episcopal school was also opened in Wilton in 1851, and there appears to have been a third one in the town at about the same time.

the English side the other side of the Border into England – ‘Here Johnie Armstrang, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae ne; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’ [T], ‘...James Olifer, toun piper, seeing several immoralities, revellings, drunkenness, frequent cursing, blaspheming ye name of God, ...beside his irregular marriage on the English side ...’ [PR1720], ‘The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side’ [WHO].

enlichten (in-li-ch-tin) v., arch., poet. to enlighten – ‘...the commandment o’ the Lord is pure, enlichtenin’ the eyne’ [HSR], ‘His licht-enini’s enlichtenet the warld; the yirth saw, an’ trimmel’ [HSR], ‘...an’ was enlichtent on the possession as regards the Common-Ridin’’ [BW1939].

enormitie (ee-nor-mi-tee) n., arch. a shocking crime, outrageous wrong – ‘...quither we or any of oure foirsaidis be the actoris of the enormities, sall be chalenged ...’ [SB1599], ‘...by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous outrages ...’ [BR1706], ‘...John Binnie, late Baylyea for his miscarriages, egregious enormities and faults ...’ [BR1706].

enshair (en-shär) adj. to ensure – ‘Enshair for sunshine! That’s what they want tae dae tae make the Common-Riding pay’ [HE1939].

Ensign (en-sín) n., arch. a standard-bearer in an army unit. This word is used in the 1706 Burgh Records to refer to the Cornet, but does not appear again after that – ‘...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carrie the colour’ [BR1706].

enter (en-tur) v., arch. to present oneself or someone else in court, to assume possession of lands or property – ‘...to haue enterit, ressauit and rentallit, and be the tennour heirof enteris, ressauis and retallis the said Gilbert and his airis ...’ [SB1591].

entry (en-tree) n., arch. presentation to a court – ‘...and thair to remane quhill lawfull entre be takin of him be Sir Jhone of Farnhirst, Knycht’ [RBA1561].

epie (e-pee) n., arch. a blow with a sword (noted by J. Jamieson).

episcopacy (e-, ee-pis-kô-pi-see) n. the government of a church by bishops, also known as ‘prelacy’ in Scottish history. This form of church organisation was thrown out in Scotland during the Reformation, about 1560. However, Episcopalianism was also favoured by the Stewart kings, as well as by most of England, and Charles I tried to forcibly reimpose this form of worship and governance on Scotland in 1637. This led to the signing of the National Covenant in 1638 and the Solemn League and Covenant in 1643, and the resultant complications over Scotland’s role in the English Civil Wars. Later Episcopal was forcibly re-introduced in Scotland following the restoration of Charles II in 1660. All ministers appointed since 1649 were ordered to resign and ask for reinstatement. Although most accepted, the strongest Covenanters refused, particularly in the south-west of Scotland, where there was a growing rebellion as more bishops were appointed. There then followed 2 decades of persecution of the Covenanters until Presbyterianism was again introduced in the Revolution of 1688–89. Episcopalian ministers were ejected soon after William arrived in Britain, and for the next few years ministers continued to be removed for refusing to ‘pray for William and Mary’. The last Episcopal incumbent of Hawick Parish was John Langlands, ousted in 1689 during the Revolution. Episcopal services apparently continued for a while in a private house. The ideals became mixed with those of the Jacobites through the 18th century. Thomas Somerville, minister at Cavers, apparently refused to take the oath for William and Mary, moving to Hawick to preach to a group of episcopalians including members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Along with Francis Scott (ex-minister of Hassendean) they set up a meeting house at the Playlaw (i.e. near the Auld Mid Raw and Kirk Wynd) in 1712, following the passing of the Act of Toleration. A small groups continued to met in a house in the Kirk Wynd until about 1777, with Rev. Findlay McLennan leading the last services. With a lapse of almost 70 years a mission station was started by Rev. W.S. White of Jedburgh in 1846. Rev. Robert Campbell continued in the following year, the first baptism was 1847, the Church Schools were built in 1850 and the new Church itself opened in 1858.

Episcopalian (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in) adj. belonging to the Episcopalian Church, pertaining to the government of a church by bishops.

Episcopalianism (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-i-zum) n. the doctrine of governing a church through bishops, prelacy. In Scotland’s history this has tended to mean the opposite of Presbyterianism.

the Episcopalian Kirk (thu-ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-kirk) n. the Scottish Episcopalian (or Episcopal) Church is essentially a vestige of the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. It is run by bishops, and has much in common with the Church of England. Like the rest of Scotland, Hawick’s parish church was Episcopalian in the period 1662–89. Thereafter local Episcopalians probably met in secret. There is an entry (in the Parish Kirk records of the 1770s) of a baptism performed by Rev. Findlay McLennon ‘Minister of the Episcopal Congregation of Hawick’) in 1753. The church met publicly again in a Kirk Wynd house in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. This building was situated at the western end, opposite the churchyard. A new church was opened in Jedburgh in 1844 and a mission was started in Hawick by the Jedburgh minister in 1846, meeting in the Orrock Place Grammar School, with the school (and possibly the congregation itself) meeting in Inglis’ Ballroom from 1847. The Church Schools were built about 1850 on Slitrig Crescent, with services held there for several years. The purpose-built St. Cuthbert’s Church was erected in 1857/58, with the site and building paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch.

the Episcopalian Schuil (thu-ee-pis-kō-pal-skil) n. another name for St. Cuthbert’s Schuil. There was also a private school taught under Episcopal supervision in about 1846 by Thomas Marchbanks in a pended apartment in the Mid Raw; probably the same school operated in the ballroom of the Half-Moon Hotel around a year later. An Episcopalian school opened on Wilton Crescent in 1851, and in 1852 it is recorded that there were 3 such schools operating within Hawick and Wilton, with 180 children registered.

Eppy (e-pee) n. Christian name, a pet form of Euphemia, Elspeth or Elizabeth (also spelled ‘Epie’).

Eppy Suitty (e-pee-si’-ee, -soo’-) n. local nickname, probably from the late 18th or 19th centuries. Her real name was probably Euphemia Stevenson, and her name came with the darkness (or dirtiness) of her attire. She is described in an Edinburgh Magazine article of 1820 as a modern witch, who wore a mantle that was ‘black as soot (whence probably she derived her title), and of a most aromatic perfume’ and also wore a large hood. Her personal appearance was also said to be striking, with 3 prominent teeth and a long ‘whiskin’ beard’. She was said to be demanding of food and money, promising good luck to those who complied and cursing those who refused. She told fortunes, especially relating to affairs of the heart, and it is said that she was so well connected with the common people, that she could use the information gathered previously to yield apparently impressive readings. Her death is said to have come a few days after convincing her own sister to sever her foot, after the appendage had apparently caused her so much trouble that she wanted it to be amputated. She may have been married to William Scott, with the death of their daughter Helen recorded in 1805. She was dead by 1820 and was said to have lived into the 90s – ‘...the far-famed Euphemia Stevenson, alias equal-aqual

Black Eppy, alias Eppy the Witch, alias Eppy Sooty' [EM1820], ‘...bar ye haaflang chasp as black as Eppy Suittie’ [ECS], ‘Black as the yiss o spades; black as Eppy Suittie.’ – Expressions signifying exceeding blackness [ECS], ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band claird, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI] (also written ‘Eppie Suittie’ and variants; the name may have been in more widespread use as a dark-faced 18th century witch).

equal-aqual (ee-kwål-aw-kwål) adv., arch. in equal shares (an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

the Equestrian Monument (thu-ee-kwes-tree-in-mon-ew-min’e) n. formal name for the Horse.

equipppit (ee-kwi-pee’, -pi’) pp., poet. equipped – ‘Wi’ a cur’d tail she was eqцип, An’ han’some head’ [JR].

equip (ee-kwup) v. to equip.

er (er, ur, ir) v. are, specifically the plural and 2nd person singular form of ‘to be’ – ‘er ee shuir aboot that?’, ‘er they ony guid?’, ‘oo er the Borders’, ‘...and gaun among oor ain folk without them jaloosin whooo er’ [JEDM], ‘Ma breeks er a’ splattiered wi’ glaur’ [RM], ‘...sin maist o thum er hidden ahint street fronteeges’ [BW1978], also used for 1st person singular – ‘am er so’, ‘ee might no be fri Hawick, bit am er’, ‘You’ll never hear the words ‘I am’ For Hawick folks say ‘A’m er’’ [IWL] (note the pronunciation varies depending on context, stress, etc., this form often used emphatically).

‘er (ur, er, ir) pron. her – ‘her mother sin sorted ‘er oot’, ‘...Naiter’s buskeet in er bonniest braws’ [ECS], ‘Nocht’s ullo stopp if she’s taen the maggots inti er heed’ [ECS] (also written just ‘er’; note that ‘her’ is probably used more frequently, depending on the preceeding word; E.C. Smith notes that the pronunciation is between er and ir).

erd an stane (erd-an-stän) n., arch. earth and stone, used as a symbol for the legal transfer of land – ‘...with the pertinents as said is, be erd and stane, to the said James Scot and his aeries ...

Ern Cleuch (ern-klooagh) n. stream that joins the Ettrick Water between Singlie and Ettrickbridge. The lands there were owned by the Crown from at least 1456. They were associated with a branch of the Turnbulls in the 15th century, perhaps the same branch who were also at Whithope and Harden in the Borthwick valley. John Turnbull was Laird there in 1464/5. It is probably the Crown property of ‘Ernheugh’, which was let along with Singlie to Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock in 1484, Thomas Home of Langshaw in 1490, Patrick Home of Fastcastle in 1492 and Sir Robert Ker in 1499. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Laird of Whithope ‘in ernheugh’ was recorded in 1494/5 and Robert Scott was recorded there in the same year. The Laird of Cessford was tenant in 1541, paying £28. It passed to Sir William Scott of Harden about 1605 and was later owned by the Scotts of Bonnington (it is ‘Ernhuch’ in 1456, ‘Ernyuch’ in 1464/5, ‘Ernleuch’ in 1468, ‘Ernheuch’ in 1490 and in 1494/5, ‘Erneheuch’ in 1502, ‘erin heuch’ in 1534, Ernheuch’ in 1541, ‘Orneheucht’ in 1580/1, ‘Ernesclough’ in 1593, ‘Erneheuch’ about 1605 and ‘Ernesheugh’ in 1624).

Erneside Craigs (ern-sül-krägz) n. craggy outcrop in southern Castleton, situated between Blinkbonny Height and the Kershope Burn. Nearby are the remains of a settlement, about 70 m by 40 m in size.

Ernest Augustus (er-nist-aw-gus-tis) n. (1771–1851) King of Hannover. He was 5th son of George III, being made to serve with the Hanoverian hussars in 1790, returning to England in 1776. In 1799 he was created Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. Very unpopular in Britain at the time, he was variously accused of murder and incest. Because of the rules of succession he became King of Hanover in 1837 on the death of his brother William IV, and was apparently much more popular there than back home. He married Friederike Caroline Sophia Alexandrina of Solms-Braunfels. He outlived his 8 brothers and was succeeded by his son George V of Hannover.

Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick (1845–1923) only son of George V of Hanover and grandson of Ernest Augustus. After the death of his father the assumed the title of Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale in the British peerage. However, he was an officer in the Austrian army, and since he fought against Britain in WWI he had his titles stripped in 1919. He was thus the 3rd and last Duke.

erni (er-nil) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they erni likely ti help’, ‘looks erni evenyhin ee ken’, also used to negate ‘am’ – ‘am erni gaun oot the night’, ‘The pruud hae howket pitts for me whilk arna efter thy law’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants; cf. erren, ern’t).

Ernilton (er-nil’-in) n. former house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, located in the hills approximately north of Steele Road. The area to the north is marked ‘Erniltoun b. fell’, corresponding probably to the modern Arnton Fell, suggesting that one of the streams there was the Ernilton Burn. The rental roll for Liddesdale from about 1376 lists 42 separate pieces of land under ‘Quarterium de Ernyldoume’, which is probably the same place. The name was thus formerly of much greater significance. Owners of land there around 1376 include ‘Johannis Raussen’, ‘Ricardi Broun’, ‘Thome Gilson’, ‘Ade de Syde’, ‘Elie Nobill’, ‘Daudi Stodhire’, ‘Emnie de Lawys’, ‘Ricardi de Lawis’, ‘Roberti de Lawis’, ‘Mathei Meryng’ and ‘Willelmi Nyeson’.

ernit (er-nil’n) n. arch. an earth-nut, the edible tuber of certain wild plants, particularly Bunium bulbocastanum and Bunium flexuosum (also ernnit).

crines clowp (ers-linz-kowp) n., arch. a fall onto the buttocks – ‘Arselins coup. The act of falling backward on the hams’ [JoJ].

The Ern Kirk (thu-ern-kirk) n. iron sheeting structure that existed at the site of Wilton South Church from 1888–1894, having been given to the local United Presbyterian Church by worshippers in Rothesay.

ermail (ern-mail) n., arch. a red stain on cloth caused by rust – ‘Ern-mail = iron mould; an iron or sodium stain on cloth’ [ECS].

ernit (ern-nil’) n., arch. an earth-nut, particularly Bunium bulbocastanum and Bunium flexuosum – ‘...we used to go to the wood ... and howk ’ern-nits’’ [JTu] (also ernit).

Ernpistols (ern-pis-tuls) n. popular name for the Nichol family, who were bakers in Hawick in the 18th century. One of the family, William, became a naval officer.

ernt (ern, ern’) pp. ironed – ‘...Then ernt and well aired Afore a roarin’ fire o coals’ [DH].

ern’t (e-rin’) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘ern’t they the yins fri Lynnwud?’ (note that this is used before the noun, where erni tends to be the form used after the noun; also spelled ‘errent’).

Erntage (ern-tij) n. local variant of Hermitage.

errant (e-rin’, -rint) n., arch. an errand (cf. yirrant).

erren (e-rin) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they’re awfi sawl losers, erren they?’ (short form of ern’t; culd be written ‘er’n’).

errant see ern’t

erse (ers) n., imp. arse, the fundament, bottom, hinder part of something – ‘deh teer the erse oot o that, a stupid or contemptible person – ‘deh mind him, hei’s jist an erse’, a mess – ‘ee made a right erse oot o that, didden ee’.

erselins cowp (ers-linz-kowp) n., arch. a fall onto the buttocks – ‘Arselins coup. The act of falling backward on the hams’ [JoJ].
Erskine

Erskine (ers-kin) n. Adam (15th C.) left 3 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Ade Erksyn’. Alexander (d.bef. 1509) served heir to his father Thomas in 1494, when he became 3rd Lord. He thereby also inherited the estates of Synton and Dalgleish and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk (as well as many other lands and titles), for which he already held a crown charter of 1489. He witnessed a document relating to ‘Langhassendean’ in 1480/1. He had a sasine for Synton on 1493. He held the lands on formal presentation to the King of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. He may be the Laird of Whitslade who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1502 his son and heir Robert had a charter of the lands of Nisbet from him. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Their children included Robert (4th Lord), Walter, Christian and Agnes. He later married Ellen, daughter of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. Charles of Shiel-field (1771–1825) 2nd son of Rev. James, he succeeded on the death of his brother Lieut.-Col. Henry. He was a lawyer, who was Sheriff-Substitute for Selkirkshire, as well as being Baron Bailie of Melrose, and stayed at the Priory there. He was a good friend of Sir Walter Scott, under whom he worked. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1806 at Borthwickshiel he married Barbara, only daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and married his cousin Barbara Pott; and Col. George Pott, who married Jane, daughter of Rev. G. Coventry. David Stuart (1742–1829) 11th Earl of Buchan. Interested in history and the arts in Scotland, he was a founder member of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland and also founded the Ednam Club to maintain interest in the poetry of James Thomson. He was also instrumental in having the Encyclopaedia Britannica published. In 1786 he purchased the Dryburgh estate, saving the abbey from further destruction. He used it as the centrepiece for his planned ‘Caledonian Temple of Fame’. The main parts of this vision that were completed were the obelisk in the Abbey grounds, the Wallace statue and the Temple of the Muses. He had Dryburgh House substantially rebuilt and lived there until his death. Sir David (1772–1837) historian and dramatist. His father, the 11th Earl of Buchan, had bought Dryburgh Abbey, saving it for posterity, and he inherited the estate in 1810. He wrote historical plays, among them ‘James V; or, The warlike days o’ Hab of Hawick: an historical drama’ in 1829, published by John Anderson, Edinburgh, 1830 (this being a fanciful version of the old story). He is also described as ‘Captain Erskine of Dryburgh’. He died without issue and the Dryburgh estate passed to Henry David, 12th Earl of Buchan. Rev. Henry ‘Harry’ (1692/3–1773) son of James of Shiel-field in Berwickshire and Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott of Ancrum. He was licensed to preach by Kelso Presbytery in 1722, was presented to Robertson Parish at the end of 1727 and became minister there early the next year. He was recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742, 1767 and 1772. He married Janet Cunningham (who died aged 64 in 1766), daughter of the minister of Hawick. Their children included James (b.1731), Marjory (b.1734) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Robertson. He was succeeded in the Robertson ministry by his son James. Note that the slightly earlier minister of Chirnside of the same name (whose wife Margaret Halcro is famous for being roused from the family mausoleum when the sexton tried to cut the ring from her finger, thereby recovering and living for another 51 years!) and his son Ebenezer, founder of the secession church, who were related to him. The memorial tablet to Rev. Robert Scott of Robertson had some lines added to it in his memory also. James of Grange (1680–1754) 2nd son of Charles, 5th Earl of Mar. He served as Lord of Session. He held the superiority of the lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish, which he sold to James Adam in 1723. He married Rachel, daughter of John Chiesly of Dalry. Rev. James (1731–88) son of Harry, the minister of Robertson, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1757 and became preacher at Caerlenrig ‘chapel-of-ease’ (i.e. Teviothead) in 1763, remaining for only about a year. He was presented to Kirkton at the end of 1763 and became minister there in 1764. He was then translated to Robertson Parish in 1774, replacing his father. A new Manse was built for him soon afterwards. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. In 1777 he succeeded his cousin Patrick as 7th Erskine of Shiel-field. In 1779 he was listed as ‘Rev. James Askin of Drybrugh’ in Robertson Parish when he was taxed for having a male servant. He wanted to transfer to Wilton (according to a letter of 1784 to Hugh Scott of Harden). He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Robertson Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was translated to St. Boswells, but died only about 2 years later.
He married Henrietta Scott, daughter of Charles of Goldielands, and she died in 1818 at the age of 79. Their children included: Henry, who was in the army and succeeded, but had no offspring; Charles, who became a lawyer in Melrose, married Barbara, daughter of George Pott of Todrig and succeeded his brother; and William, who was a preacher and tax surveyor in Haddington. James of Shielfield (1809/10–75) son of Charles. In the 1850s he was said to hold the female representation of the female line of the Scotts of Goldielands and Drumhaugh. He married his cousin Barbara Pott and she died in 1886, aged 76. He was succeeded by his son Charles. He and his wife are buried at Dryburgh Abbey. Sir John (d.1552) 5th Lord Erskine, 2nd son of Robert, who died at Flodden. He was also referred to as ‘of Nisbet’. He was named along with his father in an indenture of 1510 involving lands within their Barony of Synton, with Kers. He inherited the lands of Synton from his father in 1513 and they passed to his son and heir John in 1557. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. His 2 eldest sons, Robert and Thomas, died before him. His daughter Margaret was a mistress of James V, and mother of James, Earl of Mar (and later Regent of Scotland). John (d.1572) 6th Lord Erskine and 1st (or 22nd) Earl of Mar. He was a member of the Council of Mary, Queen of Scots, guardian of James V and served as Regent of Scotland in 1571. In 1557 he inherited his father’s lands of Synton. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He married Annabella, daughter of William Murray of Tullibardine, and was succeeded by his son John, 2nd Earl of Mar. His daughter Mary married Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. John (c.1562–1634) 2nd (or 23rd) Earl of Mar and 1st Lord of Cardross, son of the 6th Lord Erskine. He served as Treasurer of Scotland. He inherited his father’s lands of Synton in 1573, but sold them to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619. He is recorded gaining the lands of Synton and Synton Mill from Sir John Edmondston in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1620, so they could be re-granted to his heir. This included superiority over the local lands of Synton, Whitlade and Dalgleish. He married Anna, daughter of David, Lord Drummond and was succeeded by his son John and had several other children. John (d.1653/4) 3rd or 24th Earl of Mar, descended from the family who formerly held lands at Synton. In 1635 he was served heir to his father’s Earldom of Mar, which included superiority over Whitlade and Dalgleish (which was one third of Synton). The Scotts of Whitlade held the main estate at this time, and Synton was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Jean Hay (daughter of the Earl of Erroll) and was succeeded by his son John, who was Chancellor and married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. Sir Robert (d.1452) 1st Lord Erskine, son of Sir Thomas of that Ilk and his 2nd wife, Janet Keith of Synton. Through his mother he probably inherited the Synton estates and possibly the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, but released by 1405 and was again in English captivity in 1427. He claimed the Earldom of Mar in right of his mother in 1435. He passed on his estates (retaining the ‘liferent’) to his son Thomas in 1448, this including Synton and Dalgleish. He married a Stewart and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of David Lindsay of Glenesk. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, 2nd Lord. Robert (d.1513) son of Alexander, 4th Earl of Mar. He had a charter for the lands of Nisbet, Synton and lands within Selkirk in 1499/1500. He and his heirs had a charter for Nisbet in 1502. He obtained a charter of the lands of Synton and associated lands of Whitlade and Dalgleish in 1507/8 (when he was heir apparent to his father). Part of the deal was that he could infeft Whitlade to John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Glendinning the lands of Dalgleish. He was Baron of Synton, rather than owner of specific lands within it, since Scott of Synton is mentioned as early as 1509, about the time he became 4th Lord. In 1510 there is an indenture of him and his son, with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst involving lands in Synton, as well as Nisbet; this was witnessed by John of Dun, as well as Alexander and Robert, who were probably all closely related. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir George Campbell of Loudon. Their eldest son, Robert, died before him and he was succeeded by his second son Sir John, the 5th Lord. The youngest of his 3 sons was James, who married Christian Stirling, and who was progenitor of the Erskines of Shielfield. He was killed at Flodden. Robert (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer. Perhaps the same Robert married Katherine Gledstains and their daughter Mary.
was baptised in Hawick in 1775. She is probably the ‘Kate Gladstains Mother to Molly Eskine’ whose death is recorded in 1816. Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1404) son of Sir Robert, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed charters during the reign of Robert III. He was witness to the confirmation of the lands and titles of George Douglas, Earl of Angus. He held many other titles and positions, including Keeper of Edinburgh Castle in 1371. He was recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1373. In 1383 he is recorded when Peter ‘of Koeburn’, Lord of Henryland renounced to him the rights to the rentals from the lands of Dalgleish in Selkirkshire. In 1389 he witnessed the charter of Walter Scott to the superiority of Kirkurd; he is there referred to as ‘consanguineo nostro’, suggesting he was related to King Robert II. He married Mary, daughter and heiress of Sir William Douglas; she died in childbirth and a duel was fought over the right to her titles, the crucial dispute being over whether her child was stillborn or died after birth. He secondly married Joneta Keith, from whom he may have inherited the Synton estates. He was captured at Homildon Hill and may have died while a prisoner. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Thomas (d.1493/4) 2nd Lord Erskine, son of Sir Robert, the 1st Lord. Among other lands he held the estate of Synton and office of Sheriff of Selkirk, which passed to his son Alexander. This may have come through his grandmother Joneta Keith, Lady of Cadzow. He had a crown charter in 1448 for the lands of Erskine, Sheriffdom of Aberdeen, etc., as well as the lands of Dalgleish and Synton; these had been resigned by his father, while retaining ‘liferent’. He was ‘Thoma, domino Erskin’ when witnessing charters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1451/2 and 1455 and another for the Douglases in 1456. He is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1469. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in 1474. Along with Alexander, he witnessed an ‘instrument’ relating to lands in Hasseenden in 1489/1. He resigned his lands in the King’s hands in 1489, and they were re-granted to his heir, Alexander. He married Janet Douglas, possibly a daughter of the 1st Earl of Morton. His children included Alexander, 3rd Lord; Helen; Isobel; Elizabeth; and Mariotta or Muriella. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He died 3 months before his son Alexander succeeded in April 1494. William (16th C.) Parson of Campsie and Commendator of Paisley. He was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1585, but deprived in 1587, when the General Assembly dissolved the archbishopric. He may have continued to be referred to as Archbishop until 1594, but unlike his predecessors, played no important role in affairs in Teviotdale. His seal was rather crude compared to those of earlier bishops, showing St. Kentigern and the words ‘S|G|LLUM G|UL|IELMI E|RS|KENE A|RC|H|IE|P|S|C|O|P|I| G|L|A|S|G|U.’ (formerly written ‘Erskyn’, ‘Erskin’ and variants).

es (ez) v. is (third person singular, present tense) – ‘she es so’, ‘...how grand a privilege it hez been and still ez ti bide in the West End’ [IWl]. ‘If we are inquiring about a sick friend we might say, ‘Is hei bediit?’ We would not, however, hear the word ‘is’ so sounded in the answer. ‘Hei ez that, puir fella’ [WL] (often used emphatically, in response to a statement, even if it contained ‘is’; note is is also frequently used, depending on context, and eez is sometimes used for emphasis; also spelled ‘ez’).

Esa (ee-sa) n. (b.c.457) possibly first chief of Bernicia, the Anglian kingdom of north-eastern England and south-eastern Scotland, which included Hawick. He was succeeded by his son Eoppa and grandson Ida who became the first genuine King of Bernicia.

Escape (ees-kâp) n. organisation providing services to support young people, officially known as Escape Youth Services. It was set up in 2004. Drop-in sessions have been held at HAVElock Street, at Burnfoot Hub and in Denholm.

E-scape (ee-skâp) n. Hawick-based electronic band of the late 1980s and early 1990s, mainly Iain Scott on vocals and posing, supported by Keith Middlemas and sometimes others. They were the last band to play at Humphrey’s (ex-Marina) before it burned down.

Eschetho (e-she-tô) n. lost place-name in Liliesleaf Parish, probably replaced with Lintobank or perhaps being the same as the lands later referred to as ‘Riddell’ (the name is recorded from about 1150 and likely comes from the Old English ‘æsc sceat hoh’, meaning ‘the corner height with the ash tree’).

Esdale Law (es-däl-law) n. hill to the west of Hawick, just north of Blawearie, reaching a height of 357 m. It has been suggested that the line of a Roman road passed here, connecting Craik Cross with Dere Street, via Groundistone Heights and Harelaw.

Esdale Sike (es-däl-sik) n. stream that rises near Blawearie and flows in a north-western direction to reach the Ale Water.
esh (esh) n., arch. ash (the tree or wood) – ‘Aa mind yince o’ sei-in a wise-like esh-plant that was growin’ on a steep cley bankin’ . . .’ [DH].

esk (esk) n., arch. the eft or newt – ‘The pert little eskis they curlit their tails, And danced a myrthesome reele’ [JTe] (also ask).

the Esk (thu-esk) n. popular name for the River Esk. It is formed of the Black and White Esk, which merge near Castle O’er Forest. It then runs through Langholm, merges with the Liddel and the Eden and empties into the Solway Firth. Historically it was an important part of the West Marches. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrav described it thus: ‘Eske is a fayre ryver, and cometh throughge Esdall, and is Scottishe, inhabyted with Battesons of Esdell, until it come neare a placed called the Langhalme castill and meteth with the water called Use, which waters and dales are bothe my Lorde Maxwells untill it come to Canonby kyrke, and then the Armestronges and Scottishe Graymes have it untill it meete the ryver of Lydall at the Mote skore, where Fargus Grayme his howse stands. Till saddening memory all our haunts restore, The wild-wood walks by Esk’s romantic shore’ [JL], ‘From rocks and glens, and lofty peaks, In many purling rills; The Esk rolls on through spangled meads, Adorn’d with verdant hills’ [WSH], ‘...’Twixt Esk and Till there were maidens fair But none with the sheen of her nut-brown hair . . .’ [WHO], ‘But though the men who rode are gone, A ghostly spirit marches on, Frae Langholm’s Esk tae Teviotside, A troupe of phantom Rievers ride’ [SCO] (note there are several other rivers of the same name, including the one running past Dalkeith and Musselburgh, the one in Cumbria, another in Angus, and a fifth in North Yorkshire).

Eskdaill (esk-däl) n. courtesy title of the heir to the heir to the Dukedom of Buccleuch (i.e. first son of the Earl of Dalkeith), which keeps the older spelling. It was written this way in 1619 when Walter Scott was created Lord of Whitchester and Eskdail, as well as Earl of Buccleuch.

Eskdail Bank (esk-däl-bawngk) n. street rising steeply uphill across the roundabout from Mart Street, better known as the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’. It was developed in 1897 and named after a title of the Scotts of Buccleuch.

Eskdail Terrace (esk-däl-te-ris) n. street named in 1883, developed in 1885, and incorporated into the west end of Weensland Road in 1955. Since the land was originally purchased from the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, it was named after one of the titles given to Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1619 and more recently borne by heirs to the Earldom of Dalkeith. The main road to Denholm used to pass through this location (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) until rejoining near Bogliebarns (i.e. near the present Little Shop).

Eskdale (esk-däl) n. valley of the River Esk, running from roughly Canonbie to Eskdalemuir. It was once a Lordship, held by the Avenel family from the late 12th century until it passed to the Grahams through marriage in 1243. In 1309 Robert the Bruce confirmed a charter to Melrose Abbey of lands there (held of Graham) and the superiority was granted to Sir James Douglas. It remained with the Earls of Douglas until they forfeited their lands and it was granted to George, Earl of Angus in 1458/9. Melrose Abbey still held lands there in the 15th century – ‘March! march! March! march!’[T] it is ‘Eschedal’ in about 1185 and ‘Escedal’ in 1235/6).

Eskdale an Liddesdale Farmers’ Association (esk-däl-in-li-diz-däl-fer-murz-awso-see-ā-shin) n. farmers club existing from at least the 1830s. It met alternately in Langholm and Newcastleton, with prizes given for the best livestock.

Eskdalemuir (esk-däl-mewr, -mär) n. town in Eskdale, with the Meteorological Observatory and Seismological Station above, as well as the Girdle Stanes and Loupin Stanes and the Samye Ling Temple nearby. The lands there were long owned by Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch held the office of Bailie from around 1484, and it still belonged to the Abbey in 1553/4. The area used to be a centre for sheep farming, but is now heavily forested. An old drove road used to pass by the north of Hawick to the Borthwick valley and then go from Howpasley over towards Eskdalemuir. The parish of the Esmond Elliot Wards

Esandalmuir was created in 1702 from part of Westerkirk – ‘The stag-hounds, weary with the chase, Lay stretched upon the rushy floor, And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviotstone to Eskdale-moor’ [SW], ‘... And then, ten miles threa anywhere, We had arrived at Eskdalemuir!’ [DH] (it is ‘Eskdailmuir’ in 1524, ‘Esdaill Muir’ in 1553/4 and ‘Eskdail Mure’ in 1633).

the Esmond Elliot Wards (thux-ez-mind-e-lee-i'-wawrdz) n. wards in the Cottage Hospital, named for the Hon. Esmond Elliot, brother of Lord Minto, who was killed in WWI. His sister Lady Violet Astor gave a sum to build the wards, and the foundation stone was laid by the Prince of Wales in 1924.

Esplin (esp-lin) n. Thomas (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He helped introduce cricket to the Town. He may be related to (or an error for) John, who was living at about 19 Howegate in 1841.

Essenside (e-sin-sid) n. hamlet to the west of Ashkirk, consisting of Wester and Easter Essenside, with Essenside Head above the former and Essenside Loch above the latter. Old Essenside was a former farmstead between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch. An ancient fort and settlement are in the hills to the west. The lands were owned by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century, and Easter Essenside was later farmed by the Shortrees for several generations. Bernard Shortreed was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. George Shortreed was there in 1579. Residents recorded in 1581 were Walter Chisholme, Robert Waugh, John Johnstone, William Chisholme, Mungo Robson, Thomas Shortreed, David Shortreed there, Thomas Aitcheson and James Hall. In about 1616 a group of Scotts murdered Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) while he was fishing on the Ettrick. Geordie Johnstone was there in 1623. In 1643 the teinds of the Laird were valued at £60 and held by Robert Scott of Heap. In 1678 John Scott of Synton is recorded as owner of these lands, valued at £365. The ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ was listed there in 1694. Robert Prendergast was herd there in 1698.

William (probably Scott) was a tenant there in 1702, and William Redford also lived there – ‘Out beyond the Langhope Burn and over Essenside...’ [WHO] (it is marked as ‘Essingsy’d’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘W. Essinsyid’ and ‘E. Essinsyid’ and it is ‘Eastenside’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey; it is ‘eschinsy’d’ in 1494/5, ‘eschynesysyd’ in 1544, ‘Eschinside’ in 1569, ‘Eschinside’ in 1581, ‘Eschinside’ in 1622 and ‘Essinsyde’ in 1623).

Essenside Head (e-sin-sid-heed) n. hill above Wester Essenside, reaching a height of 314 m, and now being in a wooded area. The higher hill to the west (which appears to be unnamed) contains the remains of a fort and settlement. The hill-fort is oval, about 75 m by 50 m, with 3 ramparts, and containing 9 hut-circles, some perhaps being from a later settlement. Another hill to the north (also unnamed) contains traces of cord rig.

Essenside Loch (e-sin-sid-loch) n. body of water lying just above Easter Essenside in the Ale valley. A plan of the Loch was made by John Ainslie in 1774. In 1815 there was a dispute between Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk and Gilbert Elliot, Ear of Minto, over rights to the marle in the loch. There are rig lines visible to the south of the Loch – ‘But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth’ [WHO] (marked as ‘Essinsyde L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ettrick (e-reek, et-reek) n. village on the Ettrick Water, well away from main roads. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd was born near here and is buried in the parish church graveyard, along with Tibbie Shiel and Thomas Boston. There has been a church there for about 800 years, and the village was once ‘Ettrick Kirkton’. The name is also used for a former parish, and in general for the valley. Lands there that were granted by Alexander II to Melrose Abbey and are described in detail in the charter. The present church was built in 1824. There is also the Boston Memorial Hall. The lands of ‘Ethrik’, Rodono and ‘Carrick’ were erected into a free regality by James I in 1436 (origin uncertain; sometimes formerly spelled ‘Etterick’, it is ‘Ethryc’ and ‘Ethric’ in c.1236, ‘Etricke’ in 1415 and ‘Ettryk’ in 1519).

the Ettrick (thu-e-reek) n. popular name for Ettrick Witter – ‘The border lass sings it in strains sweet tho’ sad, On the banks o’ the Ettrick or Yarrow’[WS]; ‘Fareweel, my Ettrick! fare-ye-weel! I own I’m unco laith to leave ye; Nane kens the half o’ what I feel, Nor half the cause I ha’e to grieve me!’[ES].

Ettrickbank (e-reek-bawngk) n. cottage in Ettrickbridge, once the home of the Ettrick Shepherd and of the Scott family in the mid-19th century.

Ettrickbrig (e-reek-brig, et-reek-brig) n. Ettrickbridge, also called ‘Ettrickbridge-end’, a village set out by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch in the late 18th century in the Ettrick valley, west of Selkirk. The lands there had been held by the Scotts of Harden until about 1746. The original bridge there was built of freestone in 1628 by Auld Wat of Harden and had 3 arches. The romantic version of the story is that the old riever had accidentally killed a child in a cross-Border raid, and at the request of the Abbot of Melrose erected this bridge at a spot where several lives had been lost crossing the river, so that in future many lives would be saved. The bridge was ruined by 1715 and rebuilt in 1739, but washed away in 1777. The replacement came in 1780 about half a mile further up-river, and this had the old stone displaying the Harden coat of arms built into it. It was widened in 1858. The Cross Keys Inn was once a coaching inn and survives as a hotel.

Ettrick Brig-end (et-reek-brig-end) n. the village of Ettrickbridgend, also known as ‘Ettrick-brig’.

Ettrick Forest (e-reek-for-ist, et-reek-for-ist) n. name formerly used for a large tract of land generally lying to the west of Selkirk, and also sometimes called ‘Selkirk Forest’ or just ‘the Forest’. It formed the last large part of the great Caledonian Forest situated around the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, and now almost entirely gone. It consisted of Scots pine, oak, birch and hazel. However, it should be noted that the word ‘forest’ could also refer to an area of bare, high land, rather than necessarily implying that it was full of trees. It became a royal hunting forest, with royal parties being based at Selkirk and Galashiels. Lands there were granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce in 1321, and they remained in the superiority of the Douglasses until forfeited to the Crown in the middle of the 15th century. Rents were paid to the Crown, with a few specific farms where the King or Queen kept their own flocks of sheep. Margaret Tudor received lands there in 1503, which later passed to the Scotts. There was often a Keeper of the Forest, with the Earl of Gloucester being one of the first appointed, by Edward I. It was also used as a sanctuary for fugitives, with Wallace and Bruce hiding there, for example, and known as a lawless place in rievng days. In early times there were special Forest Courts, with jurisdiction over the residents, and the Forest was divided into 3 Wards, known as Ettrick, Tweed and Yarrow. Each Ward was under the charge of 2 rangers, one of whom was referred to as the Master Ranger. The Wards were divided into steadings; in the 15th century there were 45 in Ettrick, 23½ in Yarrow and 17 in Tweed, each paying £6 in rent, as well as payment in livestock – ‘...May hang upon a soor ploom tree, And sleep in Ettrick Forest’[JT] (it is ‘Etrick-Forest’ in 1525).

Ettrickheid (et-reek-heed) n. area around the head of the Ettrick Water. The lands there were part of the holdings of Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch had the office of Bailie from the late 15th century (it is ‘Etrickheid’ in 1524 and 1525 and ‘Etrikheid’ in 1553/4).

Ettrickhill (et-reek-hil) n. village, being the western extension of Ettrick. Here is the monument to the Ettrick Shepherd, marking the site of the cottage he was born in.

Ettrickhoose (et-reek-hoos) n. Ettrickhouse, former farm in the Ettrick valley. In 1557 Scott in Thirlestane paid rent to Melrose Abbey for these lands. The tenants there in 1609 were John Scott, James Amos and Archibald Stewart. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these and other lands in about 1620 and granted them to Sir
Ettrick Shepherd

Walter Scott of Whitslade in about 1622. They were inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655 (it is ‘Ettrikhous’ in 1557, ‘Atrikhous’ in 1564 and ‘Ettrikhous’ in about 1622).

Ettrick Pairish (e'-reek-pa'-reesh) n. parish in Selkirkshire, containing the upper reaches of the Ettrick valley, extending to St. Mary’s Loch. It is bounded by Robertson to the south-east. It incorporated the ancient parish of Rankilburn or Buckie from 1650. There was a ‘New Kirk’ there from the early 16th century, with the present building dating from 1824 (it is ‘Atrik’ in 1539).

Ettrick Pen (et-reek-pen) n. summit that is the highest point in the headwaters of the Ettrick, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway, reaching a height of 692 m (2,270 ft). It was long referred to as ‘Eskdalemuir Pen’ by those living in Eskdale – ‘...For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen, And swift as the towering kestrel stoops When a field mouse moves in the bracken hoops’ [WHO], ‘Away owre i’ the wast, Ettrick Pen, raxin abune his neebors, And the muckle roond shooders o’ the Moffat Hills ...’[DH] (the name is probably another example of the p-Celtic ‘pen’).

the Ettrick Shepherd (thu-et-reek-she-purrd) n. popular name for the other James Hogg.

Ettrickside (et-reek-sid) n. the side of the Ettrick Water – ‘There are brase on Ettrickside Where the broom and bracken bide; But the’re charmin’ spots that hide Roond auld Hawick’ [TK].

Ettrickside (et-reek-sid) n. former name for a farm in the Ettrick valley, owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in the early 17th century, with tenants in 1609 being William ‘Hoop’ and Thomas Brydon. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. In 1621 it was described as an ‘outset’ of Gamescleuch (it is ‘Etriksyde’ in 1609 and ‘Etriksyd’ in 1621; it is marked ‘Ettricksyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ettrick Terrace (e'-reek-te-ris, et-reek-te-ris) n. street in ‘the Terraces’ of the Wellogate, built around 1892 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the river.

Ettrick Witter (e'-reek-wi'-ur, et-reek-wi'-ur) n. river that rises at Ettrick Head, east of Moffat, and joins the Tweed near Abbotsford. The first bridge across it was built for Alexander II in 1234 and connected Kelso Abbey with a cell of monks at Lesmahagow in Lanarkshire, although it is unclear how long it lasted. The next bridge was built by Auld Wat of Harden at Ettrickbridge in 1628 and replaced in 1780. There was also a ford near here from at least 1647 – ‘...I hear the liltie in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘So Ettrick flowed by an elf-heart led With an elf-song sung the while, And the crystal tear that a fairy shed Made a wasted moorland smile’ [WHO] (the river was formerly known as ‘Ethrie’, ‘Etryk’, ‘Hetterich’, ‘Etreyich’, ‘Atric’, etc., and may be related to the Old Welsh ‘Atre’ meaning ‘playful’).

Eunson (yoon-sin) n. Paul educated at Hawick High School, he is a pediatric neurologist at the Royal Hospital for Sick Children in Edinburgh. He has worked to train pediatricians in developing countries.

the Evangelical Union (thu-ee-vawn-je-lee-kul-yoon-yin) n. evangelical church group in Hawick, formed in 1848 and later renamed the Congregational Kirk (although there were separate, but related, groups with that name at about the same time, the early history being complicated). They met on O’Connell Street, with Rev. Alexander Duff being the first minister. The church was formed on E.U. principles, but only joined the Scottish Evangelical Union in 1859. The building was constructed on O’Connell Street in 1848–9 and finally sold about 1892 when the new church was erected on Bourtree Place. Also called the ‘Evangelistic Union’ and later the ‘E.U. Congregational Church’ when there was a union between the Evangelical and Congregational churches in Scotland. It was finally renamed simply the ‘Congregational Church’, and moved to new premises on Bourtree Place in 1894.

A’ things are changed for evermair ...’ [FL], ‘...I’d cherish her, my faultless dove For evermair’ [WP], ‘Till in His hame I dwell for evermair ...’ [WL].

Evers (ee-vurz) n. Sir Ralph (1508–1545) officer of Henry VIII, born in Witton Castle, Yorkshire, son of William the 1st Lord Eure (or Evers). He was married to Margery Bowes (grand-daughter of Sir Richard Bowes, who had been Warden of the English Middle Marches). He was deputy at Berwick and Governor of Scarborough Castle in the siege of 1536. About 1545 he became English Warden of the West Marches, at the same time as his father was Warden of the East March. In 1544 he led a raid on west Teviotdale, when Branxholme tower was burned, 8 Scots slain, 30 taken prisoner and a large amount of livestock carried off. His force met Hertford’s force at Edinburgh, after razing Haddington and Hawick on the way from England (although this may be an error, since the two places are hardly on the same route). He was certainly in charge of the force that looted and burned Jedburgh in 1544. He later led an English invasion that devastated the Borders in 1545, being promised lands that he conquered in Teviotdale and the Merse. This invasion followed the raid of Lord Hertford as part of the ‘Rough Wooing’, in which the Border Abbeys were attacked and tombs were destroyed. It probably included Hawick, although there are no explicit records of this. He was supported by several Kers and other locals, at the siege of Conlingham and the burning of Selkirk. His forces were routed at Ancrum Moor, where he was killed along with his fellow commander Sir Brian Latoun. He was ironically buried at Melrose Abbey, which his own forces had desecrated earlier. Apparently his body was skinned and the skin used to make purses for Scottish officers. An English ballad, ‘Lord Ewie’, is about him – ‘Lord Ewie was as brave a man As ever stood in his degree; The King has sent him a broad letter, All for his courage and loyalty’ [T]. Ralph 3rd Lord Eure (1558–1617) son of William. He succeeded Sir John Forster as Warden of the English Middle March in 1595. In February of that year he wrote to Burghley ‘Sir Robert Kerr rode to Edinburgh with a number of Kers who are reconciled to him and Fernieherset. It is thought in revenge of the quarrel of the Trumbils which the laird of Buccleuch undetaketh. And so Buccleuch is strengthening the Armitage which lies too near is here – has also drawn most of the Eliots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extraordinary number in the house there.’ He apparently resigned after complaints were made against him. Note that he was the 4th generation of his family to have been a March Warden. He married Mary Dawny of Sassay and was succeeded by his son William. Sir William 1st Lord Eure (c.1483–1547/8) son of Sir Ralph Eure (or Evers) and Muriel Hastings. He was appointed by the Earl of Surrey to be one of the Marshalls of the English army that attacked Jedburgh in 1523. He was Sheriff of Durham and Northumberland and Warden of the English East March in the 1530s and 1540s. In 1541 he complained about the large flocks of Scottish sheep and other animals that were being pastured on the English side of the Merse. He married Elizabeth Willoughby of Parham. Since his son Sir Ralph died before him, he was succeeded by his grandson William, the 2nd Lord.

William 2nd Lord Eure (1529–93/4) son of Sir Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written Ewen). Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written Ewen). Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written Ewen).

evite (e-vee’) v., arch. avoid, evade – “The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was tried with and could not evite’ [PR1724].

the Ewe an Lamb (thu-yoo-au-lawm-in) n. public house on the Sandbed at 3 Orrrock Place, previously known as St. Leonard’s Vaults, and popularly called ‘the Monkeys’. It was built around 1860, presumably replacing an earlier building. James Elliot was proprietor from at least 1841. The pub closed in 2005, becoming the Y.M. clubrooms (sometimes referred to as the ‘Ewe & Lamb Inn’).

Éwe Hill (yoo-hil) n. hill on the south side of the upper Hermitage valley, located south-east of the farm of Twislehope. It reaches a height of 471 m.

Éwe Knowes (yoo-nowz) n. name for a hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the west of Foulshiels Wood, being an eastern extension of North Birny Fell.

Ewelair Hill (yoo-lär-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, just north-west of Wolfcleuchhead. It lies between Muckle Knowe and Grey Hill, reaching a height of 434 m.

Éwen (yoo-win) n. Andrew (c.1760–1840s) born in Kelso, son of Andrew and Mary Hogherd. He was a skinner and tanner in Hawick. He had the premises in Tannage Close from 1812, moving to Slitrig Crescent by the 1820s. He was listed as Andrew ‘sen. Crescent’ in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and his tannery on Slitrig Crescent is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, around No. 1. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835. He was listed as a tanner in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His business was eventually taken over by John Nichol, who was later Provost. He was a staunch Whig who worked to help elect Capt. Elliot. It is said that Elliot influenced the Whig members of the county to appoint his son as the Minister of Hobkirk the year after the 1832 election. He married Jane Peddie (from Kelso), and their children included: Jean (b.1790), who was living unmarried at Slitrig Crescent in 1851; Andrew (b.1792), a manufacturer in Jedburgh; Mary (b.1794); Helen (b.1796); Rev. John (b.1800), local minister; and Henry (b.1804), also a skinner. He was still alive in 1841 and listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (although he was probably deceased by then). His children Jane, Helen and Robert were all living together unmarried on Bridge Street in 1861. One of his daughters was probably the ‘Miss Ewen’ who donated a 1576 bible to the Museum in 1857. Andrew (b.1792) son of Andrew. He worked in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh, where he was a manufacturer. He was still in Hawick in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as ‘Andrew Ewen, jun.’ as a currier on the Crescent in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was a manufacturer at Alars Mill in Jedburgh, living with his son Robert.

Henry (b.1804) son of Andrew and Jane Peddie. He was also a skinner in Hawick. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ he was mentioned as exchanging property with John Haldane in Selkirk, apparently for the purpose of voting. He is recorded as such in the electoral roll of 1837 and on the 1841 census is living with his elderly father and sister Helen on the Crescent. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer on Slitrig Crescent.
and in 1861 was at 3 Bridge Street (probably corresponding to the modern No. 20), still unmarried with his mother and sister. In 1857 he donated the skull of an ancient ox to the Museum, found at Synton Moss. Rev. John (1800–75) son of the Hawick skinner Andrew and Jane Peddie, he was born in Hawick. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach in 1822. He became assistant to Rev. James Arkle in Hawick soon afterwards, apparently refusing to accept remuneration for this position. He was then tutor to several notable Roxburghshire families, including travelling in Europe, and also worked as preceptor to the only son of a gentleman in Yorkshire. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in late 1833 and ordained there in 1834. This was said to be due to the influence of Capt. Elliot (brother to Lord Minto) who his father had supported in the election the year before. There was much dissent among the heritors and some even laid an accusation of simony against him, so it was a year before he was finally ordained. He also acted as Persbytery Clerk. His was appointed by the Crown amid some controversy, the heritors being unable to agree. He remained there until his death. He wrote a statistical account of Hobkirk Parish in 1834. The oldest known communion token from Hobkirk is from 1837 and bears his initials; it is crudely made and probably formed from the material of older tokens. In 1841 he is recorded living at the Manse with Jane an Margaret (presumably his sisters). He married Isabella Yeaman (who died in 1898), daughter of James Fitzie, manufacturer of Deanfield, Melrose. Their children were: Anna Jane, who married George Watson, minister of Hownam; Rosanadra, ‘Rose’ (1849–1913); and Charles Henry, stockingmaker (1851–1913); and Charles Henry, engineer (1855–1909). Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Ewans’. Robert (1823–1900) native of Hawick, son of Jedburgh manufacturer Andrew and grandson of Hawick skinner Andrew. He was educated at Peebles, then briefly worked in the Hawick Town Clerk’s office before working with his father in the hosiery trade in Jedburgh. For many years he worked for William Watson & Sons, then about 1860 opened his own tweed and hosiery firm at Millbank, apparently the first firm to make tartan stockings; he sold the firm in the early 1880s and it became Currie’s and then Hogg’s.

He was part of the old ‘eternal council’, and after reconstitution became a Councillor and Magistrate for 9 years before being Provost 1875–78. His Provostship saw the new sewage works developed, and the purchase of Wilton Manse and Glebe. He was a Libreal who worked locally for the Reform Bill. Although not a Common Riding supporter, he was a member of the Parochial Board, member of the South of Scotland chamber of Commerce, one of the founders of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, and a deacon in the Hawick Free Church. In 1841 he was living with his father in Jedburgh, but by 1851 was living on Hawick High Street with his widowed mother Elizabeth and sisters Elizabeth and Jane. In 1861 he was recorded as a hosier, employing 40 people. His wife was Blanche, from Edinburgh, and their children included Andrew and Eliza. He wrote the booklet ‘Through Canada in 1878’. Long involved in banking, he left Hawick about 1880 to promote the ‘People’s Bank of Scotland Ltd.’ in Glasgow, died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Welogate (also sometimes ‘Ewin’).

Ewen’s Court (yoo-winz-kör) n. former name for Tannage Close, after Andrew Ewen, skinner, who ran a tannage business there. It marked the southern end of the Little Haugh on Woods 1824 plan.

Ewen’s Loch (yoo-winz-loch) n. small pond in the ‘Ewen’s Moss’ area, to the west of Kaimend.

Ewen’s Moss (yoo-winz-mos) n. former name for an area in the hills to the south-east of Hawick, corresponding to the area now centred on Ewen’s Loch, west of Kaimend. This is south of the once much larger Hilliesland Loch.

Ewes (yooz) n. settlement on the River Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, or more generically the name for the valley. The surrounding parishes of ‘Over Ewes’ and ‘Nether Ewes’ were here. The church by the roadside at Ewes, built 1866/7, is famous for its ancient bell hanging in the fork of a tree. It is built on the site of the 13th century Nether Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There was formerly a school here and a blacksmith’s and post office to the north at Brieryshaw – ‘Sequestered vale! my loved, my native Ewes, Thy beuty’s worthy of a nobler song, Nor can these broken notes express the strong Unuttered thoughts that thrill my rustic muse’ [MW].

Ewesdale (yooz-däl) n. valley of the River Ewes, running north of Langholm. It is familiar to Terries who drive much of the valley between Fiddleton and Lanholm along the A7. Historically it appears never to have been a barony, and to have been separate from the Regality of Eskdale to the south. In the 15th century it was a Lordship, held by the Douglases. The upper part (with the ‘Ower’ Kirk) was once a Lordship of the Homes, while the lower part of the valley belonged to the Lindsays, then the Maxwells; the 2 parts were united in the hands of Alexander, Earl of Home in about 1610. However, the superiority of the lands in the lower part (along with patronage of Nether Ewes Kirk) continued to be held by the Maxwells into at least the 18th century. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as ‘8 myles of Lenth in the said Marches, wherupon was 27 pleughes’. George, Lord Home, granted lands in ‘the vuyr parrochyn of Ewisdale’ to Ninian and David Armstrong in 1528. Throughout the 16th century it was listed among those places near the Border whose inhabitants were responsible for ‘dalie slauchteris, birning, fyre raising, open reffis, thiftis and depredationis’. In 1579 there is a record of a feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs of ‘the Gyngillis’. Much of the land fell into possession of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1643. The ‘lordship of Ewisdaill’ was listed among the possessions of the family in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The region was for a time part of Roxburghshire (on account of being part of contiguous lands held by the Duchess of Buccleuch), from at least 1672, and was last restored to Dumfriesshire in 1747. The name formerly applied to parts of Eskdale as well. There were once mills at Meikledale, Sorbie, Arkleton, Bliss, Glenvorane, and Wrae. The main families of the area were the Littles, Armstrongs, Elliots, Scotts (of Ewesdale) and Beatties. An ancient turf dyke ran along the hills on the western side of the valley, and old roads of various vintages can be traced up the hillsides and across the pass at Ewes Doors. There are many signs of ancient habitation in the area, with more than a dozen locations marked as settlements, along with a couple of hill forts. A book ‘The Ewes Valley: An Historical Miscellany’ was written by Brenda I. Morrison and R. Bruce McCartney in 2000, with a historical article by John Elliot (spelled ‘Euesdaill’, ‘Euisdaill’, ‘Euisdale’, ‘Ewisdaill’, ‘Ewisdale’ and variants; it is ‘le Vale de Ewithe’ in 1296; some sources suggest the origin of the name is ‘efts dale’ or ‘newts dale’, but it seems more likely that like other local rivers, the origin of ‘Ewes’ is obscure).

Ewes Doors (yooz-dörz) n. pass at the source of the Eweslees Burn, about a mile up the burn from Eweslees farm, off the A7 south of Moss-paul. There is a mound here that may have been a Roman watch tower. It can also be known as Glenvorane and was owned by a branch of the Elliots in the 16th century. It was the location for a fight between the Elliots and the Scotts in August 1565, part of the feud between the Lairds of Braidlie and Branxholme, in which several Scotts were killed. It was said that the Elliots raided into Scott territory, then about 400 of them waited in ambush at the pass, killing 6 of the Scott party (2 Scotts, 2 Dalgleishes, a Short and one ‘Theffinmis’) and capturing 60. Another story tells of how Walter Scott of Branxholme and his men laid in wait here for a gang of Cumbrian raiders, scaring them off and capturing their booty. There was once a chapel near here (presumably closer to the river), dedicated to St. Paul and connected with Melrose Abbey. The last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Brandholme records a debt owed ‘to the porter of Ewisdy’ for the rest of the price of ane horse; this suggests that there may have been a change-house located at the pass here, with the proprietor known as the ‘porter’. There are also several linear earthworks here, crossed by the terrace-way that forms part of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (which may have been originally Roman). The Parish of Ewes was disjoined from Dumfriesshire and united with Roxburghshire in 1672 (it is ‘Ewes dores’ in 1565).

Ewes Kirk (yooz-kirk) n. name of one of 2 churches in the Ewes valley, formerly referred to as the Ower Kirk and the Nether Kirk. The upper one was abandoned after the Reformation and the congregation merged with that of the lower one. The present building was constructed in 1867, with designs by James Burnet of Langholm. A roll of ministers is: Roger Kirkpatrick in 1556; William Graham, from 1627; Mr. Chisholme in about 1642; John Lithgow 1646-64; John Home c.1664–81; John Melville early c.1682–89; John Lithgow 1689–94; Robert Darling 1694–1717.
Eweslees

Eweslees (yooz-leez) n. farm off the A7 near where the Mosspaul Burn meets the Eweslees Burn. John Elliot ‘callit of the Dewisleis’ is recorded in 1578/9. Edward Aitchison was tenant there in 1711. Hugh and David Scott were there in the period 1788–97. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. Eweslees Knowe is about 7 km to the north-west. Remains of rig-and-furrow cultivation can be seen near the head of the Eweslees Burn, as well as signs of several enclosures. In 1942 an RAF Hurricane aircraft (JS346) crashed into the hillside in poor visibility, narrowly avoiding the farmhouse, and killing the pilot, Prince Supeabat Chirosakti of Siam (it is ‘Dewisleis’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Dewislyis’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Dewisleis’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Eweslees Hope (yooz-leez-höp) n. farmstead up the Eweslees Burn from the farm of Eweslees. It was occupied in 1841 by Armstrong Scott and Mary Scott (probably his mother).

Ewes Witter (yooz-wi’-ur) n. Ewes Water, small river that rises in the Blackhall and Mosspaul Burns and joins the Esk at Langholm, with a length of about 8 miles (13 km). The A7 road follows the valley of Ewesdale after crossing down into Dumfriesshire near Mosspaul (it is ‘Euss fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Ewss Riner’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

It has been there since the mid-19th century, the building previously being the Chartist Store. It is a grade C listed building.

the Exchange Buildings (thu-eks-chänj-bildinz) n. built over the Slitrig beside Towerdykside, the foundation stone was laid in 1865 by the Duke of Buccleuch. A photograph of 1860 shows the site before construction commenced. The buildings consisted of a large hall, accommodating about 1500 people (and thus the largest in town), smaller halls, an arcade of shops and a house. It had a dual role as agricultural hall and entertainment centre, but soon came to be used mainly for concerts, shows, etc. It was later used as a dance hall and cinema, with various names, the Empire, the King’s, the Odeon, the Classic and finally the Marina. In later years it was a bingo hall, with attached bars, most of which burned down in 1992. The northern section and the Arcade doorway survive, the rest being converted into a car park in 1998. The remaining three level building is designated to house the Border Archives.

the Exchange Hall Congregation (thu-eks-chänj-hawl-kong-gree-ga-shin) n. name used for the Free Church congregation established in 1866, which met in the Exchange Hall for a few years until St. Andrew’s Kirk was built. The name continued in popular use for some years afterwards.

excommunication (eks-ko-mew-ne-kä-shin) n. official exclusion from the Church, being the ultimate punishment in former times. Imposition of this order meant that public proclamations were read at all nearby churches ordering all parishioners to shun the offender, and to refuse to offer them food or shelter. Civil rights were also affected, until an Act of 1690. But in general excommunication meant being a social outcast and losing one’s livelihood. The Pope excommunicated the whole of Scotland for Robert the Bruce’s involvement in the murder of John ‘Red’ Comyn (who was Baron of Bedrule, among other places). This led to the Declaration of Arbroath, and the eventual lifting of the National excommunication. There are no records of individual Teris suffering this fate. In 1724 2 people from Stow had their Act of Excommunication read at Hawick Kirk and all the churches of the Presbytery of Merse and Teviotdale.

The nearby mansion of Gunsgreen House was the home of the Homes, built around 1755 by James Adam. Somerset erected a fort nearby for his 1547 invasion force, which led to the battle of Pinkie. It became a Burgh of Barony in 1597, prospered through the herring trade and was once an infamous smuggling centre. In a disastrous storm of 1881 more than half the shipping fleet was wrecked, and 191 men drowned, including 129 from Eyemouth. Eyemouth Herring Queen Festival started in 1939, following on from an earlier celebration. Population (1991) 3,473 (the origin of the name is the Eye water’s mouth, with ‘Eye’ from Old English for ‘river’).

The scene is fair entrancin’ And draws the smile’ [RH], ‘...And eer chin was fair rinnin wi grease’ [AY] (common in Hawick as an intensifier).

Fair (fä-r) n., arch. ‘ti take a body ti the fair’ is to take aback an over-confident person, to disagreeably surprise someone – ‘Now that’s nate where A got a drop that raether taen iz ti the fair!’ [ECS] (usually occurring in the passive voice).

Fair (fä-r) n. Richard (16th C.) owner of half a particland of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter.

Fairbairn (fä-r-bärn) n. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Patrick Nichol. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleside, in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (b.1806/7) born in Westruther Parish, he was farmer at Easter Fodderlee around the 1860s. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh, but by 1861 he was farming 212 acres and employing 7 labourers. His wife was Helen Rutherford, and they also lived with his mother-in-law, who was a farmer’s widow. By 1868 his wife was recorded as farmer at East Fodderlee, and so he was presumably deceased. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Spittal in 1781. His children included Betty (b.1779) and David (b.1781). John (1858–1943) son of the Maxton blacksmith Charles, with his mother being Elizabeth Elliot, he came to Hawick in the early 1900s. He eventually became manager of the King’s Theatre (in the Exchange Buildings). He retired in 1928. He was known as a writer of poetry, several of which were published in the Hawick Express. His output includes ‘Alec, Oor Bellman’, ‘On Seeing A Tramp Passing’, ‘Look On The Bright’, ‘The Cornet’s Chase’ and ‘Wilton Park’. He also published the poem ‘To the most glorious...Memory of...Sir Walter Scott’ in 1932. However, he is best remembered as writer of ‘The Exile’s Dream’, which was put to music by John Huggan. He died at his home, 25 Wilton Crescent, and is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. Peter (1807/8–69) from Edinburgh, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of Michael Grieve and Rachel Scott, and she died in 1877. In 1861 he was living at 3 Fore Raw. Robert (1813/4–96) married Hannah Ann Murray, as recorded in Cavers and Southdean Parishes in 1825. His wife died at Lanton Craig in 1851, aged 49. He emigrated to America with his family, with daughter Helen dying in Nebraska in 1872 and Margaret at Burnkinford in 1845. He died at Elmina, Illinois, and there is a memorial to him and his family in Bedrule kirkyard.
Fairbairn’s Craigs

Fairbairn’s Craigs (fär-bərnz-kraɪgz) n. rocky region to the south-west of Larriston Burns in Castleton Parish, located near the head of the Staneshiel Burn.

fairce (fərs) adj., arch. fierce – ‘...thir verra rigs was den for fairce sodgers in fechtin-graith’ [ECS].

fair dae wi (fər-də-wi) v. to need, desire strongly, ‘murder’ – ‘A could fair dae wi a fish supher the now’, ‘Now oo’ve got nae rails or bridges Hawick could fair dae wi’ thum now’ [AY].

fair din (fər-din) adj. done in, worn out, exhausted – ‘Whilst admitting to being ‘fair din’, our mothers took a great pride in the results of their wash-day’ [BB], ‘...the horse hez obviously been in a battle. It’s fair dune. It’s jeegered ...’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘fair dune’ etc.).

The Fairest Spot o’ a’ (θu-fə-rist-spɔ’-əu) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, written about 1890. It was often performed at social nights for the Teviotdale Bicycle Club and first sung at the Common Riding at the 1909 Colour Bussing by T. Caldwell. It fell into obscurity after WWII, but was revived after WWII, with music arranged by Adam Rutherford Grant (from his own memory and some notes left by Tom Ker and Adam Grant). In its new form it was first sung by George L. MacDonald at the Callants’ Club Smoker in 1948. It has the same rhythm and meter as Ker’s ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, and like his other songs, each ‘chorus’ has different words. Again falling out of fashion for decades, the song was revived for the 2005 Colour Bussing by Joyce Tinlin and is included in the CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) sung by Joyce Tinlin.

Fairfoul (fər-fəwl) n. Andrew (c.1606–63) son of a minister from Anstruther, he studied at St. Andrews and became minister of North Leith and then Duns. In 1661 he became the first Archbishop of Glasgow after the Restoration. He was zealous in persecuting Covenanters. He died on his way to Edinburgh after less than 2 years in office and is buried at Holyrood. His seal showed a crozier and a saltire, with a monk and a tree with fowls, together with a fish and the words ‘SIGILLUM R. P. ANDR. ARCH[EPISC]OPI GLASGU’.

Fairgrieve (fər-griev) n. David (b.1791/2) born at Ledgerwood in Berwickshire, he was a tailor on the Howeagate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and in Slater’s 1852 directory on ‘Middle row’. In 1841 and 1851 he was on the Mid Row. His wife was Janet and they had a son Robert. George (b.1781/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tin-plate worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was a tinsmith on O’Connell Street and in 1851 he was listed as a white-smith at about 6 High Street. Slater’s 1852 directory lists ‘George Fairgrieve & Son’ on the High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included William, Thomas, Helen and Margaret. George D. (19th/20th C.) 5th man to serve as Secretary of the Congregational Kirk. Helen (b.1830/1) daughter of tinsmith George. She was listed as a milliner on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. James (18th/19th C.) tin-plate worker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed as an ironmonger as well as tin-plate worker at the Tower Knowe. In 1841 he was living at Tower Knowe (probably No. 3) with his wife Isabella. Janet (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Bruce and their son William was baptised in 1726. The witnesses were Bailie Martin and candlemaker John Scott. John (b.1789/90) from Galashiels, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the John from Galashiels who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawik’ in 1825. His daughter Jessie married road labourer James Goodfellow. In 1852 he is listed running his cart from Hawick to Lilliesleaf, leaving from the Plough on Thursdays; his name is given in Slater’s directory as ‘Job’ (also written ‘Fairgreave’, ‘Fairgreive’, ‘Feirgrive’ and ‘Fergrieve’).

Fairhurst Drive (fər-hurst-drəv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1950 and extended around 1966. The name derived from the fact that the first houses were of the early concrete ‘Whitson Fairhurst’ style. Later houses built to fill gaps were of a different style.

fairies (fərz) n., pl. imaginary mischievous spirits. The exact nature and appearance are ill-defined, this being part of their mystique. However, the picture of small, winged creatures is largely a Victorian English invention, having little in common with the Scottish concept. Local stories often had them as small creatures, sometimes dressed in green. There was great local superstition about fairies until well into the 19th...

century. People claimed to have seen them cavorting at the Miller’s Knowes and the Wellgate. 2 green circular mounds, or ‘fairy rings’ (now known to be generally caused by a fungus) were once situated on the north bank of the Teviot, but were obliterated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. Similar rings once existing at Carterhaugh were supposedly related to the fairies in ‘Tamlane’. Windburgh Hill was supposed to be a domain of the ‘guid folk’, and a shepherd disturbing them by throwing a stone into the (non-existent) bottomless loch there is said to have caused the great flood of the Slitrig in 1676. An area in the Borthwick Water was called the Fairy Knowe, apparently where a shepherd was thrown in the flooded burn by the fairies. An article on local fairies, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’ appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine in 1820. A child of a woman at Minto Craigfoot was said to have been swapped for a changeling and only saved when Rev. Borland of Bedrule administered a concoction made from the foxglove. Another tale is of a changeling baby who became ‘an ugly emaciated creature’, who demonically played the fiddle and was thrown in the fire by a tailor, when the original baby reappeared. James Ruickbie told a story of a girl in Innerleithen who was taken by the fairies, but returned after prayers. The farm of Winningtonrig was said to have 2 fairies, which often performed favours on the farm, but once were interrupted while piping and dancing, and in retaliation made all the animals call out loudly for the next day. A fairy at Bedrule was said to have been given the farmer’s wife’s last barley, and in return filled her meal chest. Objects that were meant to offer protection from these spirits include a husband’s ‘blue bonnet’, a hank of red thread, a natural stone with a hole in it, and branches of the rowan tree. Related supernatur- al phenomena of local lore include ‘bogles’ and ‘spunkies’. Prehistoric tools and other artefacts turned up by the plough were formerly associated with fairies or elves.

fairkishin (fur-ki-shin) n., arch. a good quantity, sometimes implying untidiness – ‘Thae scones ir weel heirt; A pat a guid fairkeshin o butter inti thum’ [ECS] [cf. ferkishin].

Fairley (fur-lee) n. Robert (19th/20th C.) weaver from Northumberland, who lived in Selkirk, Innerleithen and elsewhere, but spent much of his life in Hawick. He wrote poetry, being a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition, where he used the pseudonym ‘Birkinshaw’. He published ‘Poems and Songs’ (1881) and a second edition called ‘Teviotside Musings’ (1892) (also sometime spelled ‘Fairlie’).

Fairloans (fur-lonz) n. farm in Liddesdale, located to the east of Saughtree, near to Myredykes and very close to the Border. Robert Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. Walter Jardine was farmer there in 1794–97, with James Beat tie as shepherd. David Jackson was shepherd in the early 19th century. Nearby limestone quarries were developed, this being the ‘Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries’. In 1841 the ‘spa’ at Deadwater was also listed as being here (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Fairloans (fur-lonz) n. farm near the head of the Kale Water, north of the Border at Catcleuch Hill. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Liddesdale. Around 1800 an old woman lived there called Kitty Hall, a native of Northumberland, who recited for James Telfer a version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’, this being published in 1844.

fairm (farm) n. a farm – ‘Holstered pistols cairried For gairdin’ o’ the fairms, Less militant in eichty fower The year thae laid doon airms’ [MB] (cf. the more common ferm).

fain (fain) n., arch. a fern – ‘A’ll sort ee, yih little bleckie, for poww-in aa ma fairns (ferns)’ [ECS], ‘Ilk day, I’ll gather soft green fairns For beddin’ for oorsels an’ bairns’ [WP].

Fairneylaw (fur-nee-law) n. George (d.c.1493) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow who is recorded as notary for a sasine relating to Hawick in 1490. He is separately recorded as ‘Sir’, usually indicating that he was a cleric without a Masters degree. He was notary to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Mangerton, where he is called ‘Priest’ and another sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick in 1484, where he is referred to as ‘Chaplain, Glasgow Diocese’. According to tradition he was a chaplain sent from Melrose Abbey to collect the tithe from Roger (or sometimes Robert) Langlands. When he persisted Langlands supposedly drew his broadsword and cut off Fairneylaw’s head at Wester Hepe. The story further relates how Langlands escaped punishment from the King by apologising for removing the chaplain’s hat, but omitting to add that his head was inside it! How much of the story is true remains unclear, although it is clear that Fairneylaw did have a local connection, and there is a record of Roger Langlands being denounced a rebel in 1494/5 for failure to appear to answer for the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’. It is also unclear whether there is a connection with the Heap Cross, which probably once existed at Stirches, and which was traditionally said to mark the site of the murder (however, it seems likely its existence as a marker long preceded these events). Fairneylaw Place in Stirches is named after him. Janet (16th C.) listed in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. She is recorded as ‘Jonete Farnielaw’, but it is unclear whether she was from the Hawick area or not. John (16th C.) holder of 2 partigates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s Charter. His name is written ‘Farnelaw’. It is conceivable that he was related to the earlier 1537 Charter. His name is written `Farnelaw'. John was from the Hawick area or not. ‘Jonete Farnielaw’, but it is unclear whether she was from the Hawick area or not. Scott, younger of Branxholme. She is recorded as ‘Joan Farnelaw’. It is possible that he was related to George (the name is also spelled ‘Farnylaw’, ‘Farnelaw’ and other variants).

Fairneylaw Place (far-nee-law-plis) n. part of Stirches, off Stirches Road, along with Oxnam Court and Maxton Court, built in 1978 and named after Sir George Fairneylaw – ‘Then thinking it time to finish off The story of the bonnet, He said, wi’ a twinkle in his een, ‘The Abbot’s heid was in it’’ [FL].

Fairneyside (far-nee-sid) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Fairney-side’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Fernielees (far-nee-leez) n. Fernielees, part of the former estate of Harwood in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It belonged to Hector Turnbull of Stonedge in 1609, when he sold it to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs by wadset and reversion. It may be the ‘Farnylees’ where in 1623 Michael Birnie stole sheep belonging to Walter Scott of Todrig and Simon Nichol. It is recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ in 1647 (discharged in 1649) involving Walter Riddell and William, Earl of Lothian. Different quarters of the lands were owned by Sir Walter Riddell, Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers and James Laidlaw. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernylie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. In 1694 the 3 east quarters are recorded being sold by Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge to Henry Elliot of Harwood. There were Ogilvies there in 1758. By 1788 it had been disjoined from the estate of Elliott of Stobs and was valued at £1200 (meaning it was a large farm at that time), forming part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood. In 1811 it was listed among those lands owned by William Elliot of Harwood and with the same value. These lands were still being referred to in documents of the late 19th century. The precise extent is uncertain, but Lurgiescleuch was the eastern quarter of the lands. Fernielees Sike rises between Berryfell Hill and Pike Fell and joins Lurgies Burn just north of Lurgiescleuch (it is ‘Phairnilies’ in 1562, ‘Fairneleyis’ in 1609, ‘Fairnileyis’ in 1647, ‘Fernilies’ in 1677, ‘Fairnelies’ in 1694, ‘Phairnilies’ in 1700 and ‘Fainelies’ in 1811).

Fainrilee (fär-nee-lee) n. mansion house in the Tweed valley, near Yair, built 1904–06 by John James Burnett. It was a Crown property from at least the 1460s, leased to Thomas and James Ker in 1480 and by 1501 let to George Ker. John Hervey was recorded there in 1494/5, when he had remission for rieving crimes. In 1541 it was tenanted by George Ker of Linton. The farm remained a property of the Kers until at least the late 17th century and there were Rutherfords of Fairnilee in the 18th century. The grounds contain the ruins of ‘Old Fairnilee’, a 16th century house, where Alison Rutherford wrote her version of ‘The Flowers of the Forest’. It was also the setting for Andrew Lang’s story ‘The Gold of Fairnilee’. Until 1818 the main road from Selkirk to Edinburgh passed here, avoiding Gala. This is probably the ‘Fernleigh’ mentioned in the 1837 inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, 10 men having been denied their claim to the life-rent there, including John Goodfellow, William Goodfellow, John Hislop, Andrew Ewen, Peter Wilson and Walter Wilson, all of Hawick (also spelled ‘Fairnele’, ‘Farnile’, ‘Farnilee’, ‘Fernile’, etc.; it is ‘Farnylee’ in 1501 and ‘Fairnalie’ in 1780; the origin is probably Old English for ‘fern pasture’).

Fairninning (fär- nin-tin) n. hamlet just to the north of Peniel Heugh monument. There was formerly a hospital associated with the place. There is said to have been a stone circle in the nearby Harlaw Plantation, but there is now no sign of it. There were once Maitlands there. In 1494/5 Ninian Rutherford in Ancrum was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing cattle and grain from several tenants there and Walter Rutherford for similar crimes, the victims including men by the name of Hogg, Ormiston, Stenhouse, Purves and Wyat. The Earl of Bothwell was recorded as owner in 1502. The lands (including the hospital) were listed among those possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634. The estate was sold by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch to George Rutherford in about 1647, and was afterwards a seat of a branch of the Rutherfords. The mansion house dates mainly to the end of the 17th century, but incorporates part of an earlier structure. It is said that there was once a stone circle in a field to the east (the origin of the name is Old English ‘fering dun’, meaning ‘the ferny hill’, and first occurs around 1200 as ‘Faringdun’; it is ‘farnyton’ in 1502, ‘Farnyntoum’ in 1505, ‘Pharnyntoune’ in 1568/9 and ‘Farnyntoum’ in 1580/1; it is ‘Fer- nitoum’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

fairy-faced (fär-nee-fäsd) adj., arch. freckled.
Fairnyside (fär-nee-siéd) n. former farmstead in the upper part of the Allan Water. It was described as a ‘pendicle’ of Brugh in 1660. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Langcleuchside. It was leased from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 by Elizabeth Mason, widow of Robert Scott of Har- dale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Tailside and Cleuch- side.

fairy-tickle (fär-nee-ti-kulz) n., pl. arch. freckles – ‘A bit beekin callant, eis chubby chowks an fairnytickle, an eis airm up ti shade eis een …’ [ECS].
fairs (färz) n., pl. fairs and markets were once important focal events for towns, involving buying and selling, as well as hiring and entertainment. In Hawick there were several regular fairs, which petered out by the end of the 19th century. The horse- and cattle-related tryst was on the third Tuesday in October, starting in 1785. The main hiring (of servants) and cattle fair was on the 17th of May, with another on the 8th of November (also called the Winter Fair). For a while the May Fair lasted over 2 days, and was one of the most important events in Hawick’s annual calendar. In 1669 there was a request by William Douglas of Drumlanrig for the town to be allowed to hold 2 other fairs and this was allowed by the Crown, these being on the 6th of May and 10th of September, ‘for buying and selling of horse, nolt, sheip, fish, flesh, meill, malt and all sort of grain, cloath, lining and wollen, and all maner of merchant wair’. St. Jude’s Fair was mentioned in 1673, and this may have been another name for the Winter Fair. In 1700 it is recorded that 27th June was a fair day (but it is unclear which one). Herds were hired on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Thursdays in April starting in 1780 and moving to the 1st of March by the late 19th century. A sheep market (also called the Tup Fair) was on the 20th and 21st of September, and a wool fair was held on the first Thursday after the St. Boswells Fair in July (or sometimes the day before, i.e. 17th). Fair days were extremely busy in town, with the High Street, Tower Knowe and Sandbed thronging with people. Into the late 18th century they were also commonly scenes of fighting and riots – ‘The rural Fair! in boy-hoold’s days serene, How sweet to fancy was the novel scene, The merry bustle, and mix’d uproar, While every face a jovial aspect wore’ [JL].

Fairside (fär-siéd) n. former farmstead in Liddlesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Tailside and Cleuch- side.

fair wather (fär-waw-thur) n., arch. flatterly, coaxing – ‘Phrase: ‘If he’ll no dae’t be fair wather, he’ll dae’t be foul’ (= by severity)’ [GW].
fairy (fär-ree) n. an imaginary being with mischievous magical powers – ‘Survey yon ring, of lively green, Where fairies, dancing, erst were seen’ [JTc] (see also fairies).
fairyfauld (fär-ree-fawld) n., arch. a fairy ring, nearly circular ring of dark grass (or sometimes mushrooms), said to be where fairies held their meetings, but naturally explained by the outward growth of the mycelium of a fungus as it exhausts the soil nutrients.

the Fairy Fauls (thu-fär-ree-fawldz) n. former name for an area on the Wilton side of the Teviot, next to the ford that was at the foot of Walter’s Wynd (so where Victoria Laundry was later built). The name presumably relates to the 2 ‘fairy rings’ that could once be seen there (due to the growth pattern of a fungus), but were eradicated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. A ‘clay-stone axe’ was found there, and once in the Museum collection.

the Fairyfauld’s Stream (thu-fär-ree-fawldz-streem) n. former name for a stream that entered the Teviot near the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, on the opposite bank. It may also have been used as a fanciful name for the Teviot itself before industrialisation – ‘… before Laidlaw’s Cauld was built, the river was a fine stream, which auld folks called the ‘Fairyfauld’s Stream’ …’ [JTû] (also written ‘Fairy Fauld’s; the name derived from the ‘fairy rings’ which once existed beside the stream).
the Fairy Knowe (thu-fa-ree-now) n. former name given to a hill somewhere in the upper Borthwick valley. It is said that a shepherd was thrown into a flooded burn by the fairies there.

faisible (fä-zí-bul) adj., arch. neat, tidily done, fair, satisfactory, of pleasing appearance, respectable – ‘...A made a faisable mael oot o pei-soop ...wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen owre-an-abuin’ [ECS], ‘She’d mony a hatter, puir craitir, bit she wuddlt an brocht thae bairns up rael faisable, for aa’ [ECS], ‘I dinnae want buriet in Wulton, boys, For although it’s faisable near ...’ [DH], ‘And drucken Airchie swore, life-lang, Wull’s funeral was the best Attendit that he’d ever seen And the maist faisable dressd’ [DH] (also spelled ‘faisable’).

fait (fët) adv., poet. neatly, cleverly – ‘For Nelly had, wi’ former ties, Fair bound him in her halter’ [JR] (cf. feat).

faithfi (fàth-fi, -fé) adj., n. faithful – ‘Colin will just say what he thinks, that his Mysie was a guid brave hearted lassie tae stand sae faithfu’ tae sic a blackguard’ [JEDM], ‘There was aye a lot o’ religious tolerashion in Haaick an naebody cared how their neebirs worshipped so the door was aye open teh the faithfeh’ [BW] (also written ‘faithful’ etc.).

faitur (fàt-ur) n., arch. a feature.

faix see faiks

faizen (fä-zin) v., arch. to unravel, fray at the ends – ‘It’s beginnin’ to faizen oot’ [GW].

faizent (fäzin’i) adj., arch. frayed, unravelled – ‘...a shauclhlin, husslin-shoodert keibult wui ...stoory claes aa tairgets an spatches an faizent-ends’ [ECS], ‘It’s a’ faizen’t oot’ [GW] (also ‘faizent’).

faizenins (fä-zin-inz) n., pl., arch. frayed edges or ends.

fake (fàk) n., arch. a trick, performance – ‘Thus a clever fake describes a smart act or ‘turn’ at a theatre or elsewhere’ [ECS].

Fake Graham (fäk-gra-um) n. nickname for several male members of the local Graham family.

Fala (faw-la) n. town on the A68 just into Midlothian. Fala Moor stands on the high ground between Fala (on the A68) and Falahill (on the A7). It was there in 1542 that James V tried to organise an attack into England, but the collected nobility refused to follow him.

Falahill (faw-la-hil) n. former farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Greenhouse farm. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. James Riddell was farmer there in 1789–91.

Falahill Summit (faw-la-hil-sum-i) n. highest point on the Waverley line between Hawick and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The summit itself was level and had extensive sidings. The lands of Falahill were once a seat of the Murrays – ‘Frae the grey auld city it started oot Wi’ an unco herty will; But it hirpled alang like a sair dune man Or it breested Fala-hill’ [WL].

falchion (fäl-chee-in) n., poet. a short sword having a convex edge and sharp point – ‘...Yet, not of warring hosts and faulchion-wounds Again the harp of ancient minstrels sounds’ [JL] (also written ‘faulchion’).

Falconer (fawl-ki-nur) n. Rev. James F. minister of Denholm and Bedrule, linked with Minto, 1976–77. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertum Fawconnar’ when he witnessed the 1450 ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick. All the other men listed were important locally. He was also ‘Roberto Falconar’ in 1452 when he witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name appears among a list of 4 burgesses. Thomas (15th C.) witness to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there ‘Thoma Falconar, presbiter’ (presumably of Glasgow Diocese). He is also recorded as ‘Thoma Falconar capellan’ in 1452 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick, signed in Hawick. He was thus a chaplain, presumably of Hawick or Cavers. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed. And a second Thomas is also listed as a witness. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ from Robert Cessford in Hawick. He was probably a local resident.

falderal (fawl-du-rawl) n., arch. folderol, trifle, petty matter, fancy but inconsequential thing – ‘They can eat their falderals that like, but recommend mei tae a sonsy bicker o’ guid auld fashioned Scotch porridge ...’ [JEDM] (see also faitheral).

Faldonside (faw-, fal-din-sid) n. hamlet, house and nearby Loch just south of the Tweed between Selkirk and Melrose. The estate was long

owned by the Kers. Part of the lands were owned by the Riddells of that Ilk in the 17th century. Being immediately to the south-west of Abbotsford, the estate was planted in a similar style in the early 19th century (formerly written ‘Fawdonside’, ‘Fadounsyde’, ‘Fawdounside’, ‘Fawdounsyd’, etc.).

the Falkland Raid (thu-fawl-klind-rād) n. raid on the Royal Palace at Falkland in 1592, led by the Earl of Bothwell, along with 300 horsemen from the Borders, including Wat of Harden. The raid was unsuccessful in capturing the King, James VI, but Bothwell did take him prisoner at Holyrood the following year. After the raid Walter Scott of Goldielands and Gideon Murray were instructed to destroy the houses of Harden and Dryhope belonging to Walter Scott of Harden (although it is unclear if this was done).

fall (fawl) n., arch. old Scots unit of length, also used for area. As a length unit it corresponded to 6 ells or about 18.6 English feet, with measurements traditionally being made using a rope of this length. A Scots furlong was 40 falls and a Scots mile 320 falls. After unification with England the fall became 6 English ells or about 22.5 feet. As a unit of area it was one square fall, i.e. 36 square ells or about 346 square feet. 40 square falls (or a unit of area it was one square fall, i.e. 36 square ells or about 346 square feet. 40 square falls (or just ‘40 falls’) were equivalent to 1 rood or 1/4 of a Scots acre.

Falla *(faw-la) n. village in Oxnam Parish, to the east of Camptown off the A68 (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘fag hlaw’, meaning ‘speckled hill’ and first occurs as ‘Falaw’ in 1549).

Falla *(faw-la) n. John (d.c.1743) wright living at Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. He made coffins for those on the poor roll, as recorded in 1725. However, He was also elder and treasurer to the Parish Session during the time of Rev. Riccarton, and so there may be 2 generations here. John *(18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1808. Robert *(19th C.) son of John, he was a mason who lived at Hassendale Common. In 1851 he is recorded there with Alison (possibly his mother) and Jane, probably a daughter. Letters from him exist dealing with the Smith family who moved to Manchester. William (b.1805/6) born in Wilton, he was a woolen slubber who lived on O’Connell Street in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean, Margaret, George, Betty, Simon and William. By 1851 the family were in New Abbey, Kirkcudbrightshire, where he was a woolen machine keeper, and soon afterwards they emigrated to America. By 1870 they were in North Andover, Massachusetts and by 1880 their surname appears to have changed to ‘Falls’. The house he live in in O’Connell Street was known as ‘William Fala’s house’ on the 1851 census.

Falla Cleuch (faw-la-kloog)l n. stream that rises on the northern slopes of Drinkstone Hill and drains into Synton Loch.

falli (fu-li, -lō) n., arch. a fellow – ‘...a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, ane stuffy, that staapeet alang the Jethart road wui a taatih-steppin streide’ [ECS], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang fallows’ or ‘Muckle leash fallsows' now-a-days’ [JTu], ‘...A dizen near, I’m sure they were, O fallaws in a raw’ [WaD], ‘...A biurdly auld falla wi’ muckle to sell, And muckle to gie wi’ his crack’ [WL] (also written ‘falliih’; cf. the now more common felli).

falliship *(fu-li-ship) n., poet. fellowship – ‘Sall the throne o’ inequitie haec fallsship wi’ thee ...?’ [HSR].

Falnash *(fawl-nash, faw-nesh) n. farm and hamlet near Teviothead, reached by the side road across the Teviot at Bowanhill. It is described as a ‘20 merklands’ around 1390 when given to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk and may have been the residence of Dalgleishes in the mid-15th century. In 1456 William Dalgleish had a sasine for the lands, which had previously been in the hands of the King. Simon Dalgleish had a sasine in 1464. In 1511 it was confirmed to a later Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern. The Elliots owned the lands from at least 1556. In 1569 a bond of security signed in Hawick lists the following tenants: ‘Wille Elliot, Johnne Turnair, Jame Caveris, Georde Armestrang, Georde Turnbull, Andro Turnbull, Jame Billop, Jame Bichat, Jame Caveris, Georde Armestrang, Georde Turnbull, Andro Turnbull, Jame Billop, Jame Bichat, Jok Murray, Will Huntar, Johnne Nobill’.

In 1627 its value was ‘estimat to 300 merks in stok; in teynd to 1678 Land Tax Rolls; his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £1400. In 1667 Archibald Elliot paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott to clear the ‘reversion’ on the lands, and then sold them to his brother Gavin Elliot of Caerlenrig. Walter Scott of Harwood and Falnash is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £1550 13s 4d. James Baptop was recorded as resident there in 1678. James Veitch was smith there in 1706. The lands held by the Laird of Falnash once extended much further than the modern farm; in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the lands of Falnash bordered on those of Commonside. Gideon Scott, the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain in the late 17th and early 18th centuries lived here and was called ‘Old Falnash’. He also acted as the Duke’s Bailie in Hawick, and others in his family were also nicknamed ‘Falnash’. The Scotts of Langshaw also held lands along with the mill (so this may be Falnash Mill), inherited by Walter of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. In 1703 James Stewart was smith there and Robert Riddell was miller. John Scott was recorded there in at least 1703-05 and William Scott was tenant in 1712. Walter Scott paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. By 1788 Falnash and Haregrain were valued together at £684. Robert Laidlaw was the farmer there in the 18th century, followed by Thomas Laidlaw. John Baptie was shepherd in 1797. In 1811 it was valued (along with Haregrain) at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. William Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 4500 acres and had 17 labourers. Robert L. Turnbull was farmer in the 1860s and 70s. The burial place of the Scotts of Falnash is in Teviothead Cemetery, with a large table-stone once inscribed with most of the names. The area was part of Hawick Parish until Teviothead Parish was formed in 1850. Before the mid-18th century one of the routes from the south towards Selkirk diverted at Teviothead and went over to the Borthwick valley via Falnash, Lairhope and Old Howpasley – ‘...Falnash, and Commonside; inform Fenwick, and Goudiland, With Ha’ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command’ [WSB] (the name first appears in the late 1300s as ‘Fallyness’; it is ‘Fallinashe’ and ‘Fallineche’ in 1456, ‘Fallyn Eche’ in 1461, ‘Fallinesch’ in 1464, ‘Fawnesch’ in 1511, ‘Fawnyche’ in 1561/2 and is later spelled ‘Fallenash’, ‘Fallenashe’, ‘Fallenesche’, ‘Fallenesh’, ‘Fallinash’, ‘Fallin-asche’, ‘Fallineche’, ‘Fallinesche’, ‘Fallnesg’, ‘Falnashe’, ‘Fahnnesche’, ‘Fahnnesche’, ‘Fahnsh’, ‘Faneshe’, ‘Faneash’, ‘Fawandeshe’, ‘Faweneshe’, ‘Fawinesche’, ‘Fawnyche’, etc.; it is transcribed ‘Fenneske’ in 1644, written ‘Fennish’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728 and ‘Finesh’ in tax records of 1748; it is marked ‘Fanessh’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; its origin is simply Old English for ‘at the fallen ash-tree’; note there is also a ‘Fawnys’ in Berwickshire, near Mellerstain).

Falnash (fawl-nash) n. Richard (13th C.) described as ‘Richard de Fawnys’ when his daughter Christian married William of Haliburton. This may well have been Falnash, since the Haliburtons of that Ilk were involved in transferring the lands to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in the late 14th century.

Falnash (fawl-nash) n. nickname for Chamberlains of the Duke of Buccleuch in the 18th century, who were Lairds of Falnash. The Chamberlain also acted as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, with local administrative power, involvement in the kirk session, etc. Previous owners of Falnash, the Elliots, were also given that appellation – ‘For Stobs and young Falnash, They followed him up and down In the links of Ousenam Water They found him sleeping sound’ [T].

Falnash Burnfit (fawl-nash-burn-fi) n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden. John Elliot died there in 1832. The Helm family lived there in 1841.

Falnash Mill (fawl-nash-mill) n. former farmstead near Falnash, perhaps the same place later called Birkiebrae. William Elliot was tenant there in 1589 (while another William was Laird of Falnash). It may be the lands of ‘Fahnish de molendino [mill]’ inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. Walter Davidson is recorded there, among the poor of Hawick Parish, in 1694. Robert Riddell was there in 1703 and Thomas Elliot in 1720. James Veitch, blacksmith, lived there in the early 18th century and Robert Elliot in the mid-18th century. Walter Hogg lived there in the early 19th century. Adam Beattie and his family were there on the 1841 census. In about the middle of the 18th century, near Falstone, a boy called Paterson was born without hands or feet, and shortly after his birth his family moved to here, where he was brought up, although not long afterwards the family moved again to the Carlisle area, where he died at the age of 7; at the time many claimed that this fulfilled a prophecy (sometimes ascribed to Alexander Peden, but probably older) which went ‘Atween Craig-cross and Eldon Tree A bonny bairn there is to be, That’ll neither have hands to feight, not feet to flee; To be born in England, brought up in Scotland, And to gang hame to England again to dee’ (it is ‘falneshmilne’ in 1694, ‘Fahnesh milne’ in 1720 and ‘Falneshmiln’ in the 18th century).

Falnash Parkheid (fawl-nash-park-heid) n. former farmstead near Falnash. The Andison family were there in 1841.

the False Alairm (thin-fawls-a-lärn, -a-lär-rum) n. perceived French Invasion on the evening of Tuesday 31st January 1804, when warning signals blazed all across the Borders, calling men to arms to repel Napoleon’s forces. At 9 p.m. in Hawick a beacon was lighted at the heights of Crumhaughhill, known then as Gotterson’s Knowes or the Watchknowe. James Knox spotted it and ran down the Howegate to the Tower Knowe, firing his gun to signal the lighted beacon, and gaining a prize of 20 shillings. Caleb Rutherford then went around town beating his drum. A trumpeter was dispatched up the Slitrig valley to rouse the men as far as Liddesdale, where several men swam across the Liddel to muster. A piper there mounted his donkey and played the rousing ‘I am little Jock Elliot and who daur meddle wi’ me?’ Walter Scott of Wauchope was at the head of the company that came from Liddesdale to meet the company of Capt. Corse Scott of Synton at the Tower Knowe. All the local volunteer units were mobilised, and people bid farewell to their loved ones. The Liddesdale volunteers reached Hawick by 8 a.m., travelling on horse and foot. After the muster at Hawick, the mounted men proceeded down the Teviot valley, many reaching Duns before they heard of the mistake. The foot volunteers were arranged on parade at the Haugh by Lord Minto, awaiting marching orders, which fortunately never came. Capt. Pringle of Wytbank was visiting Lord Napier at Witon Lodge at the time and the butler is supposed to have said ‘My Lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon’s blazing’; Pringle rode to Selkirk to assemble his troops there. The Selkirk men marched off and reached as far as Dalkeith. Meanwhile the Berwickshire Yeomanry mustered at Duns and marched to Dunbar. A tailor from Selkirk to assemble his troops there. The Selkirk men marched off and reached as far as Dalkeith. Meanwhile the Berwickshire Yeomanry mustered at Duns and marched to Dunbar. A tailor from Denholm, who marched off with the others, but would rather have remained at home was apparently heard to mutter ‘Aw wush aw was a wummin! aw wush aw was a wummin!’ The Alarm had been raised by a soldier at Home Castle at about 8.30 p.m., probably mistaking the fire from a charcoal burner at Shoreswood Colliery for a warning beacon. It spread via beacons on Caver-ton Edge, Pennielheuch, the Dunion, Crumhaugh Hill, the Tudhope, the Wisp and Black Andrew. Although there were rumours on the following evening that the French were not really coming, the official word did not come until the morning of 2nd February. The readiness and speed with which the troops were mobilised was a source of great local pride, although some suggested it had been a ruse to test the Volunteers (but there is no evidence to support this). Sir Walter Scott describes some of the local events in his note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’ (he himself is said to have ridden from Gilsland to reach Dalkeith 24 hours later). The Hawick Provost lit a centenary beacon at Crumhaughhill in 1904, and there was a reenactment in 2004 – ‘One moment the watcher stood, robbed of his wit, Then he roared to the farmhouse: ‘The beacons are lit! The lightnings are loosed, the war dogs untied, And it’s time for the Borders to saddle and ride!” [WHO].

Falside (fawl-sid) n. farm in Southdean Parish, between Chesters and Roughlee. This could be the lands held by ‘William de Fawsyde’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It was men- tioned in a document of 1502, when Ralph Ker of Primside Loch obtained a charter of apprais- ing of the lands after George Douglas, Master of Angus failed to present one of his tenants who had stolen from the English. 2 towers near here, ‘West Fawsyde and Est Fawsyde with a pele of lime and stane in it’ were burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513. It was described as 8 steadings valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 (with William Douglas being allowed the ‘fermes’ from there in 1538 and Sir Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst in 1539. Tenants in 1541 were Adam Cowman, Robert Oliver (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian Oliver, Walter Oliver, Roger Oliver (called ‘Little Roger’), Robert Laidlaw, Alexander Laidlaw, John Oliver, and Roger Oliver (called ‘Lung Roger’). The lands were split into 9 separate steadings with a total value of 175 shillings.
Ringan, Dandy and Martin Oliver were recorded there in 1544. Jock Common was tenant there in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. In 1669 there were 5 Oliver tenants, namely Stephen, David, Thomas and 2 Patrick's, as well as Commons. In 1694 the tenants recorded were Steven Oliver, David Common and John Oliver, Thomas Oliver and his sons, and (another) Steven and Dand Oliver. In the 17th century the lands were split into ‘East Fa'side’, ‘West Fa'side’ and ‘Fa'side’. The Oliviers were tenant farmers there through the 17th century until 1747 and were the ancestors of the Oliviers of Langraw. George White and John Armstrong are recorded there in 1797. William Fringle was shepherd there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. J. Ord was farmer in the 1860s. The farm also had a mill, with a mill pond. On the hill on the opposite side of the road there are signs of rig and furrow. There was also a place of the same name in Selkirkshire, owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. There is a restored 16th century L-plan mansion of the same name in East Lothian (also ‘Fawside’ etc.; the name dates back to at least 1502/3 and the origin is probably Old English ‘fah side’, meaning ‘the speckled slope’; it is ‘Fawsyde’ in 1538, ‘Fawsyd’ in 1539, ‘Fawsid’ and ‘Fawsie’ in 1544, ‘the Fawside’ in 1571/2, ‘Fawside’ in 1606, and ‘Fa'syd’ and ‘Fasyd’ in 1669; it is ‘Fasyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Fallside’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Falside (fawl-sid) n. former lands in the Ettrick valley in Selkirkshire, north of Foulshiels. They were once Crown lands from at least 1456 until 1502. James Scott (also of Kirkurd and Hassendean) was recorded as possessor of the lands of ‘Myddilstede de Fausyde’ 1473–99, being granted the lease for life. James Scott is recorded in 1494/5 having sheep stolen from him there. In 1501 the rentals were assigned to his wife Margaret and son John, and he again had the lease in 1503. Margaret, received the lands ‘in liferent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (probably James’ son) being granted heredity. Adam Scott ‘in Falside’ is recorded in 1526 and 1531/2. Adam Scott claimed the tenancy in 1541, paying £13 6s 8d yearly. This was probably the ‘Fawsyde’ where Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwander’ received instruments for lands at Appletreehall that she bought from Robert Scott of Howpasley. It was recorded as a 40-merk land in 1653. The ‘landis and steading of Falsyde’ were listed among the Buccleuch estates in the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and in the marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands were later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean. And in 1693 they were still part of the estates of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Falsyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Fausyde’ in 1456, ‘Fawsyde’ in 1473, ‘Fawside’ in 1480, ‘Fawsyde’ in 1483 and 1491, ‘fawsyd’ in 1494/5 and ‘Fawside’ in 1541).

Falsyde (fawl-sid) n. Helen (b.1787) recorded as ‘a very old woman’ in 1787 when she died in Hawick. Her surname is written ‘Falsyth’.

James (14th/15th C.) parson of the church of ‘Ruale’, probably ‘Rule’. He was a witness to the charter from Archibald, Earl of Douglas about 1406, granting the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Another James ‘of Fausyde’ of Glasgow Diocese was an imperial notary in the 1450s and may have been related. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate.

James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for Walter Martin in Alton Croft, for glover James Scott and for schoolmaster John Purdom, in 1702 for James Robson’s illegitimate child, in 1703 for carrier David Minto and for William Wilson in Fenwick, in 1704 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for merchant William Oliver, in 1706 for shoemaker George Allan, in 1707 for wigmaker Richard Miles, in 1708 for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Dunn), for Dand Gray in Whitlaw, for glover James Burn, for Robert Tudhope (servant to Fahnh), for David Young and for John Rae, in 1709 for merchant James Simpson, for William Scott, tenant in Whitchesters and for William Scott, son-in-law of John Scott, tenant in Branxholme, in 1711 for merchant William Black (whose wife Elizabeth Falsyde was probably related to him), in 1712 for Walter Bryson and for William Turnbull (along with ‘Mr’ Thomas), and in 1719 for William Goodfellow. He is probably the James recorded as an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1718 (but not mentioned as such in a list a year earlier). He married Isobel ‘Jerdon’ (or Jar- dine). Their children included: Marion (b.1692), who married Andrew Turnbull; Janet (b.1694); James (b.1701); and William and Bessie (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were glovers James Burn and James Scott. He may have been related with Thomas. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. John Cuthbert Rutherford (d.1915) son of Rev. J.T., minister of Eskdalemuir. He was training as a lawyer when WWI broke out, and as a member of the 1/5th K.O.S.B., he served as a Lance Corporal. He was killed by a shrapnel shell in Gallipoli. His 2 older brothers were also killed in the war, and it appears that the surname may have died out with them. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish.

In 1767 he married Margaret Armstrong, who was from Castleton Parish. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when she paid tax for 2 hearths. It is possible that she is the Margaret who married William Scott, but was widowed and secondly married Robert Thomson in Newmill. Nicholas (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, where his name is given as ‘Nicol Fausy’ in the county of Roxburgh. He may well be an ancestor of the local Falsides. William (in Roxburghshire) and Robert (in Edinburgh) also signed in 1296. His seal was attached, showing a tree of life. In 1303/4 he is ‘de Fausside’ when his wife’s dower lands in England were restored to him. Philip (14th C.) owner of lands in Liddesdale, listed on a c.1376 rental document of the Douglases of Morton. His lands are recorded as ‘Terra Philippo de Fausyde cum Holdoun’, worth 35 shillings. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is written ‘Faside’ and he was probably related to the William who is also listed. He may be the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for William at Woodburn in Roberton Parish in 1686 and for Adam Elliot (resident of Whitchesters) in Hawick Parish in 1704. He may be the Thomas whose son Alexander was baptised in Wilton in 1699. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1712 as ‘doctor of the grammar school at Hawick’. He was also recorded in 1709 as schoolmaster at Hobkirk. So whether he was actually associated with Hawick school (perhaps temporarily), or whether this was an error, is uncertain. In 1712 he was designated ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in Hawick; the other witness was James, who was probably a relative. He married Anne, daughter of the late Alexander Robertson in Edinburgh in 1712. William (13th C.) recorded as being ‘de Fausyde’ in Roxburghshire when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He may have been related to ‘Nicol Fausy’, who also signed. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there ‘del Fausyde’. His lands may have been the Falside in Southdean Parish. William (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was pardoned by Edward III for crimes in Scotland, along with Eustace Lorraine and Richard of Craik. His name is listed as ‘Willo de Fawsede’ and it is possible he was a descendant of the earlier William. William (16th C.) factor (or similar) for Scott of Branxholme in the Parish of Eckford, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. William (17th C.) resident of Woodburn in 1686 when his daughter was baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely a relative) and Robert Learmonth. He could be the same William who was later at Winningtonrig. William (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Faside’ and Thomas is also listed, and so presumably related. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Fletcher in 1718, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Kirkton Parishes. John (b.1730) and William (b.1733), baptised in Cavers, may have been his children. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for tailor James Scott and Janet Falsyde (who was probably related to him) in 1719 (also written ‘Faesyde’, ‘Faside’, ‘Faside’, ‘Fausyde’, ‘Fawsyde’, etc.).

fang (fang) n., arch. plunder, burden, n., poet. to catch, acquire – ‘When guarded by this fourfold fence, Auld Nick can never fang us; Nor Bonapart’ e’er drive us hence, Nor villains mint to wrang us’ [JR], ‘But if the warl’ be like to wrang ye, Its frowns will fear, its smiles will fang ye’ [JR].

Fang (fang) n. Douglas (??–) son of Kenneth, one of the Fang Brothers who purchased Pringle of Scotland from Dawson International in 2000. He was Hong Kong Industrialist of the Year 2002. He was named C.E.O. of Pringle’s in 2005, replacing Kim Winser. In 2008 he announced that production would cease in Scotland. Kenneth (??–) born in Shanghai, he is Chairman of Fang Brothers Knitting Limited. His company bought Pringle of Scotland in 2000, with promises of new investment and job security. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 1990 and an O.B.E. in 1997.

fankit (fang-kree’, -ki’) adj., pp. entangled, in a twisted mess – ‘...Brave Parcy rais’d his fankit sword And fell’d the foremost to the ground’ [LHTB].

Fanna Bog (faw-na-bog) n. high, boggy area to the west of the Note o the Gate. Singdean Burn rises here.

Fanna Hill (faw-na-hil) n. hill to the west of the Note o the Gate, reaching a height of 514 m (1643 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. It is one of the highest hills in Hobkirk Parish (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map; a region to the south is labelled ‘Muckle Fanna’ on the 1718 map).

Fanner (faw-nur) n., arch. a machine used to create wind for winnowing chaff – ‘The winnowing machine, or corn fanner, from the best information, made its first appearance in Hawick’ [RRG].

Fanns (fawnz) n. farmstead near the Fanns Burn, north of Langhope and Todrig and west of Ashkirk. It is located just to the west of where the Fanns Burn meets Blindhaugh Burn. Robert Riddell was recorded there in 1661. James Brown was a mealmaker there in 1747. Another Robert Riddell was herd there in 1762. Note that there is a farm of the same name in Yarrow Parish, farmed by Andersons in the 19th century (also spelled ‘Fans’; it is ‘the fans’ in 1661; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

fareweel (far-weel) n., interj., arch. farewell – ‘Fareweel to Teviot’s flowery vales, My heart is unco wae tae lea’ thee’ [JS], ‘Fareweel, John Barleycorn, fareweel! Nae mair your scorn I’ll dree’ [JT], ‘Hail guid freends, fareweel an’ thenk ye, I’ve been gled to grip your hand’ [WL].

Farley (faw-ryl) n., arch. a large slice, quarter, fardel – ‘Syne a farle o cake frae my mither he got, And she ca’ed him a brave little mannie’ [JT].

Farquhar (far-kur) n. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Oliver and their children included: George (b.1776); Robert (n.1778); Peter (b.1781); unnamed (b.1784); and James (b.1789). His name was written ‘Fraquar’ in 1789. The witnesses in 1789 were Robert Oliver of Burniflat and baker James Oliver (who was surely related to his wife). James (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same as the tobacconist listed living with (presumably) his brother Peter in 1841. He could also be the James on the Cross Wynd, listed as an insurance agent for the United Kingdom company in 1852 (although probably deceased by then). Peter (b.1781) son of James and Margaret Oliver, he was born in Hawick. He was a stock-} stockingmaker William Beck. Their children included: Margaret (b.1810); Isobel (b.1812); Elizabeth (b.1814); Catherine (b.1816); and James (b.1823).

Farquharson (far-kur-sin) n. Rev. William (19th/20th C.) minister of St. Andrew’s Church 1908–14. He was one of the members of the committee that formed Hawick’s first scout troop in 1909. After Hawick he became minister of St. Philip’s Church in Portobello.

farrest (far-rest) adj., arch. farthest, most distant – ‘The dun and the grey kept farrest away, But Paterson’s meir she came foremaist’ [JP] (cf. the more common farthest and ferrest).

Farthin Raw (far-thin-raw) n. Farthing Row, formerly a popular name for a group of houses off Wilton Place (the origin is probably the Old English or Norse for a land measure).

fash (fash) v. to worry, trouble, bother, annoy – ‘dinni fash is’, ‘This far, sir, I hauie tain the haldnes till fashke zou vith . . .’ [SB1584], ‘Some row thee in among their cash, Some gi’e themsell’s a hantla fash’ [JR], ‘Gear gatherers get aft a thowe’ [ECS], ‘Yer yammerin’ fash, an feck-thee . . .’ [DH], ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll be hard fashed For the want o’ weet’ ’ [WL], n. trouble, fuss, bother – ‘Fit ti gar aa the trauhles an the fashies gang leike the snaw off the deike in a thowe’ [ECS], ‘. . .Yer yammerin’ fash, an feckless prose Can only be a pest in’t’ [WP] (from French).

fashies (faw-sheez) adj., arch. troublesome, annoying, tricky – ‘Fleis an midges . . .kittle craters (mae ways as yin) an fasheez ti middle wui’ [ECS] (a variant of fashious; spelling varies).

fashion (faw-shin) v. to shape a garment by narrowing and widening on a knitting machine.

fashionin (faw-shi-nin) n. narrowing and widening while knitting, to shape the final garment.

fashionit (faw-shin-ce’, -i’) pp., poet. fashioned – ‘. . .an’ in thy buik a’ my membirs were writ, whilk on an’ on wer fashanet, whan as yit ther was nane o’ thame’ [HSR].

fashious (faw-shis) adj., arch. troublesome, peevish, fastidious – ‘. . .Poets an’ pippers wear the wale O’ seats and lasses, An’ a’ allow they never fail In being fashious’ [JoHa], ‘And there’s mony a less pleasant and mair fashious way o’ spendin’ a caller wunter efternume . . .’ [DH], ‘. . .bit oo was-nen sae fashious then, an it was only yince a eer onyway’ [BW1961] (see also Fashies).

Faskenn (faw-kiin) n. tower house marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map near the Whitburn Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It could be related to Flasket Sike, which is in the same area, or may be a transcription error.

Fasson (faw-sin) n. Lieut. Francis Anthony Blair ‘Anthony’ or ‘Tony’ (1913–42) born at Lan- ton in Bedrule Parish and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School, he joined the Royal Navy. Along with Colin Grazier, he volunteered to swim out naked to a damaged U-Boat in the Mediter- ranean, after the crew had been captured. They recovered several documents and pieces of equipment, passing them to someone else in a small boat, before the submarine sank, drowning him and Grazier. The recovered items included the ‘M4 Enigma Machine’ and codebook, which were passed to Bletchley Park, where the cipher was cracked, and probably thousands of lives saved as a result. He was posthumously awarded the George Cross ‘for outstanding bravery and steadfast devotion to duty in the face of danger’. There is a plaque honouring his memory in Bedrule Kirk.

Fast (fawst) n. ancient fortification in Bedrule Parish, later indentified with the farm of ‘Fastcastle’.

Fast Castle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. stronghold dramatically perched on the coast between St. Abb’s and Cockburnspath. It has existed since the 14th century, long possessed by the Homes, and notorious during the reign of Logan of Restalrig. An old lock from the Castle was presented to the Hawick Archæological Society in 1856.

Fastcastle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. former farm in the Rule valley, on the west side of the river, near the bridge to Bedrule Mill. It became part of the extensive estate of Wells and was probably adjacent to Doveshaugh. In 1644 John and Thomas Young from there were cited by the minister for not signing the Covenant; at that time it was owned by the Earl of Traquair. Robert Turnbull was there in 1715 and Adam Craig in 1717. John Riddell was there in 1791. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. An ancient fortification at ‘Fast’ was possibly an outwork of Bedrule Castle, which lay about 500 m to the south-east. It is just by the roadside, on a natural rise, built up into a motte-like structure, with a rampart on the summit enclosing an area about 35 m by 25 m. Just to the north-west there are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation in aerial photographs (it is written ‘Falsecastle’ in 1715 and 1717; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

fast days (fawst-dëiz) n., pl., arch. an old church custom of fasting on particular Sundays, with preparatory services on the preceding Saturday and thanksgiving services on the following Monday. This was particularly prevalent before the annual Communion service, before which there would be a Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 (long) church services. This custom died out locally towards the end of the 19th century. Official fast days in Hawick were the 2 Wednesdays before the last Sunday of June and before the second Sunday of December. Earlier than the 19th century the June days were closer to harvest time. Other neighbouring areas had different days, but typically on Wednesdays or Thursdays (although in Castleton it was the Friday before the 2nd Sundays of June and November). There were also other days officially prescribed for fasting, sometimes by Act of the General Assembly, e.g. for prayers ‘for King George and his royal family’ in 1715, with several other examples yearly in the Parish records – ‘...ye durst not crook ye’re mooth tae whistle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whistle or sing or anything ye like on a Sabbath day’ [WiS].

Fasteneven (faws-ten-ee-vin) n. another name for _Fastern’s E’en_ – ‘Of holidays throughout the year, There’s nane that raises sic a steer As Fasteneven ...’ [JoHo].

Fastern’s E’en (faws-turnz-ee-in) n., arch. old name for Shrove Tuesday, or the day before fasting starts at Lent. Festivals of different sorts were held in many Scottish towns, including handball games, sometimes referred to as ‘Fastern’s E’en Baa’. In Hawick the Baa game was held on the previous day, in earlier years on the following Monday, and before about 1780 on Fastern’s Eve itself. In the 2 or 3 weeks leading up to the event there would be fights between gangs of youths from the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ sides of town – ‘...shall keep the same assurance till Fasternes eve next to come ...’ [CBP1584], ‘At Fasten’s E’en, when ba’s are played, I’ll look for ane that is nae here ...’ [TCh].

Fastheugh (fawst-hewch) n. former lands on the southern side of the Yarrow valley, with Fastheugh Hill rising above. The lands were owned by the Crown in the latter part of the 15th century. William Donaldson was there in 1493 when he had 12 goats stolen by William, son of William Scott of Goldielands. In 1494/5 James Ker was tenant there when sheep were stolen by Adam Howison in Commonside. John Clerk was also living there at the same time when his goods were plundered. In 1502 John Murray of Falahill’s farm there was raided by Turnbulls. And in 1535 a raid on these lands was among the crimes for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused; at that time they were held by Lancelot Ker. Lands there were granted to James, son of James Pringle of Tynnes in 1540. George Ker was tenant there in 1541, paying £30 yearly; he was probably George of Gateshaw, son and heir of Lancelot Ker, who was ‘now living in Fastheucht’ in 1544. The lands were part of the Buccleuch estates in 1663 and when surveyed in 1718 (it appears on Blaecu’s c.1654 map as ‘Fastheuch’; it is ‘Fastheuch’ in 1456).

Fasthill Plantin (fawst-hil-plan-tin) n. plantation near Synton, just to the south of Synton Parkhead (it is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

fat (fawt) n., arch. a vat, wooden tub – ‘Two females are convicted of stealing great quantities of ale, sometimes turned, sometimes working in the fatt ...’ [BR1697].

fatefi (fäť-fi) adj. fateful – ‘...But then yin fatefih day, A retail giant came oor way, And it wasni long afore, They’d ta’en owre yon Presto store’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘fatefihi’).

Fathill Plantin (fawst-hil-plawn-in) n. plantation on the Chisholme estate, to the north-west of Parkhill and to the west of Churton Burn. There is a possible old enclosure there.

Fatlips Castle (fätlips-kaw-sul) n. tower built in the 16th century, perched on Minto Crags, and sometimes also called Minto Tower. It is 9 m, 3 stories high, with a vaulted basement and parapet walk. Built by the Turnbulls, it passed to the Elliots in 1705, and is now the property of the Minto estate. It was restored in 1857 and then renovated in 1897/8 (to designs by Sir Robert Lorimer) as a shooting lodge and private museum. The collection on display included an early, large breech-loading gun (possibly the one taken from Sebastopol by Col. Sir Gilbert Elliot), a muzzle-loading cannon (taken by Adm. Elliot from the French off the Isle of Man in 1760) and a third cannon (that belonged to the mutineers of the Bounty was recovered from deep water off Pitcairn Island by Capt. Russell Elliot). At that time there was a carriage drive approaching it from the west. Since the 1960s it was sadly neglected and became vandalised. However, a grass-roots campaign, supported by the Minto estate, resulted in funds being secured from public and private funds, and a renovation was completed in 2013.

A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from here to Barnhills Castle. The origin of the name is uncertain, but one idea is that it derives from the look of Turnbull of Barnhills; there are other stories, including that of a goat on the Dunion, which warned of the approaching English, or that gentlemen were traditionally allowed to kiss one of the ladies on entering – ‘... an the gray waas o Fatlimps keeket oot threth atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS] (it is sometimes stated that it was also known as ‘Catslick’, but that may be an error; note that there is another Fatlimps Castle near Symington in South Lanarkshire, and a couple of others elsewhere, marked on old maps).

Fauch Grain (fauch-gr=au) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Wetherhorn Hill and joins Chapel Grain.

Fauchwin Sike (fauch-win-sik) n. small stream in the the Hermitage valley. It rises on Guile Hass and joins the Carewoodrig Burn.

faugh (fauch) adj., arch. fallow, n., arch. fallow ground – ‘He plew’d the faugh’ [GW] (also written ‘fauch’).

Faughill (faw-hil) n. farm and hamlet just west of Bowden (the name may derive from Old English for ‘variegated hill’, is also spelled ‘Faughhill’ and is recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map).

faughish (faw-gish) adj., arch. plush, having faded colours – ‘...just as it begoud to get faughish derk’ [LHTB].

fauld (fawld) n. to fold – ‘did ee fauld up they claes yit?’, ‘Paid James Wintrope for folding brods in Bailies’ loft, 1 14 0’ [BR1735].

‘These tait o’ gowden hair, Aboon thy faulded eye’ [HSR], ‘Aside the sparkling jewels put, thy silken robes gae fauld ...’ [TCh], ‘The bonnie wee flowers fauld their leaves in the gloamin’ ...’ [JT], ‘...And robin faulds his ragged pipes, Reckons his arles and airts awa’ [DH], ‘In ovre the Firth a clean wind draws And the fauldin’ plaid is gethered ...’ [FL], n. a fold (also written ‘fald’).

fauld (fawld) n. an enclosure for livestock, sheepfold, pen – ‘When the sheep are in the fauld, and the ky at hame, And a’ the world to sleep are gane ...’ [CPM], ‘...one year there was a dyke on one side of a fauld, built within the edge of the Common’ [C&L1767], ‘...nar he-gaits owt o’ thy falds’ [HSR], ‘I’ve suffered cauld in Auld Nick’s fauld. In nichts o’ drookin’ rain I’ve seen it ...’ [TD], ‘You are the hills that my hert kens weel, Hame for the weary, rest for the auld, Braid and high as the Aprile sky, Blue on the tops and green i’ the fauld’ [JBU], ‘The last sheep cryin’ thrее the fauld, The afterglow duist turnin’ cauld ...’ [DH], group of people bound together by common beliefs, congregation – ‘To where the Faither’s fauld at last ...’ [WL].

fauldit (fawl-dur) n. a folder, person in the knitwear industry who folds finished garments, usually attaching the hanging tag and placing the garment in its bag for presentation.

fauldit (fawl-dee, -di) pp., adj. folded – ‘They think if they’re only fauldit up In the empty husk o’ a creed ...’ [FL].

Faulds Cottage (fawldz-ko’-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Buccleuch.

Fauldshope (fawldz-hüp) n. farm south-west of Selkirk, over the Ettrick from Oakwood. A ruined keep here was once the home of the Hogs, including Will Hogg called ‘the Wild Boar o Fauldshope’ and several wives who were reputed to be witches. One ‘Lucky Hogg’ is supposed to have turned Michael Scot into a hare. The Hogs held Fauldshope under the Scotts of Harden for centuries and are commemorated in James Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. William Scott was there in 1535. Andrew, son of William Scott ‘in Faldishope’ gained the lands of Broadmeadows in 1624. It was rented by the Earl of Traquair in 1633. Adam Scott was there in 1722 and William Dalgleish in 1797 – ‘Young Wattie o’ Harden has crossed the Yarrow, Wi’ mony a hardy an’ desperate man; The Hoggs and the Brydens have brought him to dare you, For the Wild Boar of Fauldshope he strides in the van’ [ES] (note that it is easily confused with ‘Phaup’ near the head of the Ettrick; marked as ‘O. Falshoop’ and ‘N. Falshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is probably the ‘Fauldshop’ recorded in 1456 and is ‘Feldishoup’ in 1535).

fault (fawl) n., arch. a misdemeanour, offence – ‘...by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous out-rages ...’ [BR1706] (cf. the more common faute).

fause (faws) adj., poet., arch. false – ‘Behold, the setting sun that gilds the skies! Fawcett (faw-si’) n. Richard owner of Wolfelee when it was run as a hotel.

Faw Hill (faw-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, just to the north-east of Ruletownhead, reaching a height of 331 m (1,086 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. On the eastern slopes, towards the farm of Ashtrees, there are the remains of an ancient settlement, perhaps of the Iron Age, but now almost levelled by cultivation (the name probably comes from the Scots ‘faw’, meaning variegated in colour).

Fawhope see Phaup

Fawhope Knowe (fawp-now) n. hill in Liddesdale, just to the south-east of Riccarton Junction, reaching a height of 294 m. Fawhopeknie Sike rises to the north and passes there to join the Riccarton Burn. John Crozier is listed as shepherd at ‘Phaupknow’ in 1797. There were 4 farms there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (also sometimes ‘Phaup Knowe’: a farmstead there is marked ‘as Fapknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it could be related to the places listed as ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillis’ in earlier documents).

Fawhopeknie Sike (fawp-now-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on the slopes of Saughtree Fell and runs southwards, to the east of Riccarton Junction, passing Fawhope Knowe and through Catscleuch Culvert, to join Riccarton Burn.

Fawlawn (faw-law) n. George (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hawic’ at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He had remission for stealing a ‘dacre’ of (i.e. 10) hides from James Braidfoot out of ‘le bog de Selkirk’. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George of Wells (16th C.) surety for John in Littledean in 1502. He is also recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. He is also listed as ‘George Fawlo of Wallis’ in 1530 among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He may have been Laird of Wells east of Jedburgh. James of Spittal (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘James Falay’ in 1700 among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in 1502, as surety for his wife Janet Rutherford, and was fined for her non-appearance. Later in 1502 he had remission for being part of the slaughter of David Henryson in Maxton Kirk and for stealing from Muirhouselaw in the company of Thomas Grahamslaw; his surety was George of Wells. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for involvement in the seizing of 3 Henrions from Muirhouselaw, delivering them to Englishmen, to be held for ransom, for stealing livestock from them and for associating with Herbert Pringle; his surety was Walter Haliburton. Perhaps the same

John was granted a charter for ‘Easter Fawlaw’ in 1510, along with the office of the East Ward of Roxburghshire. In 1512 he had a charter for Softlaw. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Philip Faula’ when Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was convicted of the ‘forethought felony’ done to him on St. Mary’s Day while riding to Branxholme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear what malice was done to him, and whether he was connected with the later local priest Thomas. He must be the same ‘Philip Faulo’ who had 4 horses stolen from him and his neighbours at ‘Quhitchester-holme’ by associates of John Dalgleish around 1510. Thomas (16th C.) priest mentioned in the Charter of 1537, with 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street. He is designated both ‘Sir’ and ‘Mr.’, making it unclear whether he held merely a Bachelor or a full Masters degree in the priesthood. Since several other clergymen are also mentioned, it is unclear what his status was within St. Mary’s Kirk of the time. A possibly related William Fawlaw also possessed a particate of land on the north side of the street. William of Kirkton (14th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ if 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He was certainly a Roxburghshire Laird, but it is unclear whether this was the Kirkton near Hawick. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (d.bef. 1560s) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. The land ‘callit William Fallawisclois’ to the east of Nether Billerwell is mentioned in 1562 (also spelled ‘Fawlaw’, ‘Faulo’, ‘Fawlo’, ‘Fowlaw’, etc.).

the Feast o the Assumption (thu-feest-ø-thu-aw-sum-shin) n. Feast of the Assumption of Mary, a Catholic celebration of the assumption of the body of the mother of Christ into heaven, which supposedly happened several days after she was entombed. This is celebrated on 15th August, and prior to the Reformation would have been an important day in the Hawick calendar, particularly because of the Parish Church being dedicated to St. Mary. The ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick in 1450 states that it is held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for the payment of an arrow at Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. The Charter of 1511 indicates that the Barons of Hawick are to be paid an arrow ‘in blenche-ferme’ on this day. Similarly, in the 15th century, Scott was to pay a silver penny to Inglis at St. Mary’s on this day for the lands of Branxholme.

Felton (fel-in) n. James (18th C.) footman at Minto Stobs in 1797, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto. Sir William (d.1358) 1st of Edlingham, known as ‘de Felton’. He was from a prominent English family and was Sheriff of Northumberland. When Roxburghshire was occupied by the English in 1334 he was appointed Sheriff of Roxburghshire and Constable of Roxburgh Castle by Edward III. His name appears on 4 charters, preserved in the chartulary of Roxburgh Castle by Edward III. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was a labourer on a list of male heads of households, being at Whitrope in 1835, Bygate in 1836-38, and Upperraw in 1840 and 1841. Sir William was thre in 1771. The farm was still valued at $200 in 1788 (and still held by him in 1678. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is shown that a small part of the farm lay on the northern side of the Teviot. There were Elliot lairds there in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. John Scott was ‘coater’ there in 1723. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century. John Scott was `coater’ there in 1723. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century.

fell (fel) v. to strike down, slaughter, beat, thrash, ‘ti fell tweae dogs wi yin bane’ is literally ‘to beat two dogs with one bone’ and the same as the English ‘to kill two birds with one stone’ – ‘So e se A thocht A nicht fell tweae dogs wui yeh bane ...’ [ECS].

Fenwick (fen-ek) n. house and area on the Teviot opposite Branholme Park and just down from the Muir. Walter Scott of Fenwick was witness to a document for Whitchesters in 1456 and others in 1484/5 and 1488. William Scott of Fenwick was recorded in 1502, was on an inquest panel in 1509 and gave a pledge for another Scott in 1510. ‘The ditch of Fenwick’ formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. It is listed as part of the Barony of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, among those lands held by the Baron ‘in tenandry’. Later it became part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1627 it was described as a ‘neuer payit ferme’, i.e. a farm that had never been rented to a tenant, and ‘estimate to pay 8 bolls in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, and vicarage 3 lbs’. In 1643 these are probably the lands of Robert Scott of ‘Cloak’ valued at £100 and still held by him in 1678. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is shown that a small part of the farm lay on the northern side of the Teviot. There were Elliot lairds there in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. John Scott was ‘coater’ there in 1723. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century.
of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map. David Lees was farmer there in 1861, when it was composed of 140 acres. In 1895 the farm was gained by the Scotts of Buccleuch, being exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. The farmhouse dates from the late 17th century, but has been extensively renovated. It is a 2 storey structure of harled rubble. The entrance has a lintel bearing the initials ‘R S’ (presumably ‘Robert Scott’) and ‘M T’ and the date 1687; a shield above has been suggested to be the arms of Myrton of Cambo, ancestors of Kerr of Cavers Carre, although this seems hard to understand. The house is a grade B listed building – ‘… Falnash, and Commonside; inform Fenwick, and Gouldiland, With Ha’ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command’ [WSB] (earlier spelled ‘Fynnyk’ and other variants; the origin is probably Old English ‘fen wie’, meaning ‘the dwelling by the fen’; the name appears at least as early as 1456, when it is ‘Fenwyk’, it is ‘Fenvik’ in 1484, ‘Fenwik’ in 1484/5 and 1488, ‘fenuik’ and ‘fynvik’ in 1502, ‘Fenwyk’ in 1509, ‘Fynwik’ and ‘Fennyk’ in 1510, ‘Fennyk’ in 1511, ‘Fynnik’ in 1526, ‘Fenyk’ in 1530, ‘Fenvik’ in 1540, ‘Fynnik’ in 1561, 1572, 1594 and 1615, ‘Fynwik’ in 1562, ‘Phenik’ in 1627 and ‘Fenikk’ in 1729; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Fennik’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Fennik’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Fenick’).

Fenwick (fen-ek) n. Francis P. ‘Frank’ (b.1855) son of John, proprietor of the Tower Inn, he was born in Hawick. He was farmer at Northhouse and was a guest at some Common Riding functions in the 1880s. He became proprietor of the Tower Hotel and was Acting Father in 1893. He was also a starter at the Common Riding Races. In 1901 he was a retired farmer at Barnes. He may have later lived at Harts-garth. His wife was Mary A., and their children included John B. and David B. James (19th C.) landlord of the Tower Hotel in the mid-19th century. He was on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and probably first President. This is probably confusion with John. John (17th C.) son and heir of Randall. In 1652 he gave a lease of lands to his sister Catherine, including ‘Hawicke’ in the parish of Kirkharle (i.e. the one in Northumberland). John (b.c.1808) born at Auchtergaven in Perthshire. He was proprietor of the Tower Hotel in the middle part of the 19th century, with William Crozier as his head hostler. He is recorded providing the dinner for the Magistrates’ party at the Common Riding of 1840.

He was there in 1841, with his wife Helen (probably Stewart). He was listed as innkeeper at the Tower in Slater’s 1852 directory. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He helped with the last ceremonial run of the coach from Hawick to the south in 1862. In 1849 he married Janet Crone or Bawden and was listed with her at the Tower Hotel in 1851. Their children included Sophia Agnes and Francis Peter (who became proprietor later). John (1803/4–74) farmer at Northhouse. His elder brother was Peter. He was recorded at Northhouse in 1868. He married twice, his second wife being Janet Crone, who died in 1888, aged 73. He is probably the same as the coach driver above, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Randall (d.bef. 1652) recorded as ‘of Hawicke’ in grants of 1624 and 1626 from the Swinburne (Capheaton) Estate Records. His wife was Katharine. He may have been son-in-law of Edward Gray of Hawick (by coincidence). His son and heir was John and a daughter was Catherine. This is presumably the ‘Hawick’ in Northumberland. Sir Roger of Wallington (d.1544) commander of part of the English force under Lord Dacre in 1513. He led 300 men who burnt the town of Lanton near Jedburgh.

Fenwick Burn (fen-ek-burn) n. stream that flows to meet the Teviot near Fenwick.

Fenwick Loan (fen-ek-loun) n. former name for the road running from Haysike over to Whitchesters. The name was referred to in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – ‘The east down that Syke into Weatland Burn and the dykes of Alton Crofts, and so on to Fenwick Loan head, where the march turns south by hillocks up the west side of the head of the Loan …’ [C&L1767].

Fenwick Park (fen-ek-pawrk) n. name given in 1890 to an area of large houses, reached from Weensland Road up Manuel’s Brae. Some of the houses had been there perhaps a century before. This included St. John’s, which had been known as Ivybank, St. John’s Manse (previously ‘The Birks’) and Elmbank, or ‘The Elms’. New building occurred in the few years after 1962 to make the modern housing development of Fenwick Park. The name derives from Fenwick on Teviot, specifically referring to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick who owned land there.

Fenzlehope (fenz-lupa) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, where Thomas Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797. It could be related to the earlier records of ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillis’, but note that ‘Phaupknow’ is listed separately on the 1797 fer

Horse Tax Rolls (it is possible it is the same as Failziehope).

Ferguson (fer-gee-sin) n. Agnes (19th C.) one of the 4 operators, at Dicksons & Laings, of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick in 1830. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge. In 1760 he married Janet Margaret Hope from Blackcleughmouth, the proclamations being recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: Alexander (b.1761); Mary (b.1763); Adam (b.1768); Isabel (b.1772); and Betty (b.1773) Their children were all baptised in Wilton Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Martha Easton in 1762 and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); William (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); Helen (b.1770); John (b.1774); Andrew (b.1777); James (b.1779); James (again, b.1780); and Jean (b.1781), who married George Rae. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1787 he married Isobel Hart, who was from Wilton Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Middle, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 6 horses. He could be the same Ferguson who farmed at Denholmhill, opening up the first quarry there. His wife was probably Helen, innkeeper in Denholm, and they had children Alexander, Margaret and Janet. Alexander (b.1812/3) innkeeper in Denholm in the 1860s. He was born at West Middle, and so probably son of Alexander. His premises were probably on Eastgate. In 1861 he was living with his widowed mother, Helen. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Hummelknowes in 1781. His children included: Thomas (b.1781); Agnes (b.1783); George (b.1786); Alexander (b.1788); John (b.1794). Christina (1844–1939) daughter of mason James, she was born in Denholm. In the 1851 census the family was living near Sunnyside, and her name was listed as ‘Catherine’. She emigrated to the Melbourne area with her parents in 1855. In 1879 she married John Band, but they had no children. She named her house on Princess Street in Melbourne ‘Roxburgh’, after her home country. After her husband’s death she lived with her sister Agnes, and she was buried in Meblourne General Cemetery. Helen (b.c.1785) innkeeper and spirit dealer in Denholm. She was born at Linhope. She was probably married to Alexander, farmer at West Middle. In 1837 she was recorded as a widow, and 1841 she was living around Eastgate with her children Alexander, Margaret and Janet. She is recorded as vintner and grocer in 1852. James (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. James (b.1800/1) listed as a mason journeyman in Denholm in 1841 and a mason around Sunnyside in 1851. The family emigrated to Australia in 1855. He married Anne Laing in 1828 and she died in Melbourne in 1881. Their children included: Thomas (b.1829); Betty (b.1832), probably died young; an unnamed child (b.1834); Betsy (b.1836); Walter (b.1838); Alexander (b.1841); Christina (b.1844), also perhaps known as Catherine, probably died young; Anne (b.1846); Agnes (b.1849), who married William Laidlaw in Melbourne; and Mary (b.1852). Their children were christened in the Free Kirk of Jedburgh. He died of dysentery in Australia. James ‘Jamie’ (d.c.1861) character who worked at Mossparl most of his life, first as a ‘post-boy’, then as a ‘strapper’. He was only once allowed to take the reins of the coach, but overturned it near Langholm. He was a widower by the time of the 1861 census and died a few months later. Rev. John (c.1655–1737) ordained as minister of Roberton in 1696, after several years of appeals to the Presbytery for preachers to be supplied. For part of 1697 he helped with vacancies in Angus and Mearns and received calls from Aberbrothock and Montrose, which the Presbytery refused. There then followed some debate in which the Commission for the Assembly blamed the Presbytery for not declaring the parish vacant. He was finally translated to Aberbrothock (i.e. Arbroath) in 1699, despite a petition to the General Assembly from his parishioners. It is said that he had the old Abbey Church there destroyed, in order to build himself a tomb. He married firstly Margaret MacDougall and secondly Bethia Brand. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded atOrmiston Mains in 1779, 1780, 1782, 1784, 1786 and 1788 and as farmer at Harwood in 1796. He married Agnes Grierson and their children included: William (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780); twins Robert and Thomas (b.1782); Alexander (b.1784); Nelly (b.1786); Andrew (b.1788); Isabel (b.1790); Mary (b.1792); and John (b.1796). The entries of his children’s baptisms appear to have been added later to the Cavers records (perhaps indicating that he belonged to a non-established church). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791, when he was at Kippielaw. He was also recorded at Greensidehall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at ‘Newharrot’ (i.e. New Harwood), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. John Mein (b.1839) son of James and Jean Mein, he was born in Selkirk. He was Cornet in 1861, the first from Wilton after it merged with Hawick. He was a waiter at the Railway Hotel in Princes Street. He was step-son of the hotel-keepers George and Jane Burns, and was half-brother of Cornet Andrew Burns. He can be seen in an early photograph of 1862, as Right-hand Man to Cornet Richardson. Robert (1953–98) born and educated in Hawick, son of Tom and Jessie Ferguson. He studied geography at Edinburgh University and then town planning at Heriot-Watt. He joined the City of Glasgow Council and was later head of policy development with C.O.S.L.A. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Denholm in 1786 when his son Alexander was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) groom and house servant at Stirches in 1791, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was still at Stirches in 1794 and 1797, when he was servant and gamekeeper. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stirches. Thomas ‘Tami’ (b.1772) labourer who brought up a large family in the ‘Saut Haa’. He was listed at Pathhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He was one of two men chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton after the suggestion by Bailie Fraser. In 1841 he is recorded at Wilton Pathhead, with his wife Isobel, daughter Jane and son William. Thomas (b.c.1814) tailor at about 8 Howegate. His wife was Jane, and their children included Isabella and Nancy. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) blacksmith at 24 Drumlannrig Square in the mid-1800s. The property was owned by the Dinwiddies. There was also a blacksmith’s next door at No. 22. Thomas (1832/3–1907) joiner and fencing contractor of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Clark, who died in 1925 (and who was related to Sir J.A.H. Murray). Their children were Jane and Elizabeth (who died young), plus James (commercial traveller of Leeds), Jane Aleine and Margaret Isabella (who both moved to New Zealand) and Agnes Burns (who married James Caldwell and also moved to New Zealand). William (18th C.) tenant in Trowmill. He was there in at least 1787–88. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Alexander (b.1787); Janet (b.1788); George (b.1790); and William (b.1792). William (b.c.1770) spinner who lived at the Sandbed. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included William and Helen.

Ferniehirst (fer-nie-hurst) n. lands and tower just south of Jedburgh, built in the 1470s by Sir Thomas Kerr following his marriage to Margaret Kerr of Kerskeugh. The tower there is sometimes referred to as ‘Ferniehirst Castle’. The land was valued (along with Limekilnwood) in 1538 at £4 6s 8d. It was stormed by Dacre’s men in 1523, recaptured by Sir John Kerr and his men in 1549, when they butchered all the French garrison. It was destroyed soon afterwards by James VI and rebuilt in 1598. Disused in the 18th century, it was repaired in the 19th and used as a youth hostel from about 1935-85. In 1988 it was restored again by the Lord Lothian, and is now a Kerr family home, also containing the Kerr Museum. It is said to be haunted by the ‘Green Lady’. The castle features in Jedburgh’s Callants’ Festival — ‘Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehirst, lulled by the crowning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Ferniehust’, as well as variants such as ‘Furnyhirst’, ‘Farnoerhert’, ‘Farniyhirst’, ‘Farnyherst’, ‘Farniehirst’, ‘Phariniehirst’, ‘Phairniehirst’, ‘Phainyhirst’, ‘Pharnoerhert’, ‘Pharniyhirst’, ‘Pharniyhirst’, ‘Pharnyherst’ etc.; the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘fearnig hyrst’ meaning ‘the ferny wood’; it first appears in 1493 as ‘Fainryhirst’; there is a place of the same name in Caddonfoot and Stow Parish).

feucht (fewcht) pp., arch. fought (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ü and oo; cf. focht).

Feu-Rule (few-ool) n., arch. former barony within Rulewater, once stretching the entire breadth of Hobkirk. It was also sometimes referred to as the Barony of Hallrule. The lands were formerly part of the Barony of Cavers and later became a barony on its own. The existence of this barony probably explains why there was never any barony of ‘Hobkirk’. The entire barony was once ‘thirled’ to Hallrule Mill. In 1453 there was a letter of reversion of the lands from Andrew Ker of Altonburn to Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam. In 1479 they were still held by the Kers of Cessford when Margaret Ker renounced all rights to her uncle Walter. In 1495 the superiority was granted by James IV to Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. About that time the lands consisted of Town o’ Rule, Hallrule, Hallrule Mill, Deanside, Appotside and Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish, along with Holm, Middle and Hangingside in the Parishes of Cavers and Kirkton. In 1499 half the lands were re-signed by Sir William Colville in favour of Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing, but the ‘reversion’ of the lands was granted by Elizabeth, Lady Pedmont (Sir William Colville’s daughter) to her son-in-law Robert Colville of Cleish in 1541; however, the Colvilles appear not to have repaid the long-standing debt. In 1509/10 the lands were listed among the holdings of Douglas of Cavers, dating back to the time of King David; however, this may have explicitly meant Hallrule and it is called ‘Fewhawroull’ in 1511, when the ‘mill thereof’ is also mentioned. It was owned by Lord Herries of Terregles and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst jointly, then in 1562 there was a ‘decret of division’ of the lands between Agnes (4th Lady Herries) and Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 it was in the hands of the King through forfeiture by Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, although he held it again from 1581. In 1629 the superiority was transferred to Sir Andrew Kerr of Jedburgh from his deceased son, but then passed to Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth in 1632 and William, Earl of Lothian in 1649. The bulk of the lands were owned by Lord Balmerino in 1643, valued at more than £4800 and by Elliott of Stobs in 1678, when Stonedge and Fairnielees had been disjoined and the value was roughly halved. The
the Fever Hospital

The Fever Hospital (thu-fee-vur-hos-pi’-nl) n. hospital built at Burnfoot, off Burnfoot Road, as an isolation hospital for victims of infectious disease, particularly scarlet fever. Formally called the Hawick and District Joint Fever Hospital, or the Hawick and District Infectious Diseases Hospital. It was funded jointly by the Town and County, but saw little use. The hospital was designed by Alexander Inglis and built around 1902. It had 24 beds and also had an adjoining wooden smallpox hospital. The name ‘Fever Hospital’ was also sometimes used as an alternative name for the Anderson Sanatorium, built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howardburn in the last few years of the 19th century. The former Fever Hospital became an annex of Burnfoot Primary School in the 1960s and was converted into a Social Work Outreach Centre in the 1990s.

fiar (fee-ur) n., arch. someone who holds a property in fee, i.e. a person holding the lands in which someone else possesses the life rent, hence usually the son of a Laird who is already effectively running the estate (a Scots law term, also spelled ‘fear’; see also feer and feuar).

Fiars Court (fee-urz-kör’) n. body that set prices for different kinds of grain in a county, typically each February. In Roxburghshire it was presided over by the Sheriff-Depute (also sometimes feers court).

Fidd (fid) n. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as footman at Chisholme in 1797, when he was working for William Chisholme. His name may be a transcription error for some other surname.

Fiddes (fi-dis) n. David (18th/19th C.) recorded as joint proprietor of Roughheugh Mill along with Walter Chisholme, on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he and his son John were proprietors there. He was still miller there on the 1841 census. He was probably from Makerstoun. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Miller. Their children included: John (b.1802), later also miller at Roughheugh; David (b.1805/6), also a miller, some of whose family emigrated to Australia; George (b.1808), who was a skinner; and Thomas (b.1820/1). David (b.1805/6) son of David, he was junior miller at Roughheugh Mill and also a baker. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 at Damside and in 1840 and 1841 at Roughheugh. He married Esther Turnbull in 1826. Their children included: Mary (1827–1921), who married Thomas Henderson and died near Hepburn, Australia; David (1828–1908), who died in Mortlake, Australia; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1831); James (b.1836); and Jane (b.1841). James ‘Jim’ (19th C.) one of the first Hawick natives (along with Dandy Henderson) to play cricket in the 1840s, after returning from spending some time in England. John (1745/6–1832) resident at Wells. In 1786 and 1788 he is recorded as a wright in Doveshaughbraehead. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Scott, gardener at Wells, and she died in 1824, aged 75. Their children included: Margaret (b.1784), who married Thomas Wilson; Mary (b.1786); Janet (b.1788), who married manufacturer David Laing; and Ann Dashwood (b.1793), who died in infancy. He died in Jedburgh and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John (b.1802) from Makerstoun, son of David and Elizabeth Miller. He was a ‘miller tacksman’ (i.e. tenant) at Roughheugh Mill at the time of the 1841 census and ‘flour miller’ there in 1851. He was listed as miller at Roughheugh Mill in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Cathrae and they had children Agnes, Betsy and Jessie. John (b.1826/7) baker at 3 High Street in 1861. His wife was Anna and their children included Robert, Elizabeth, Mary, Anna and John. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) kitchen maid at Know in Minto Parish in 1789 when she was working for David Simpson. Her name appears as ‘Fides’. Robert (17th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He married Bessie Tait and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Ashkirk in 1691. The witnesses were George Tait and John Fiddes (who were surely related to his wife and him). Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1808) son of miller David. He was a grocer and spirit dealer at 50 High St. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Ann Fiddes in 1847. Their children included Betsy and David. William (b.1802/3) from Makerstoun, he was a baker in Hawick. He was probably son of David, miller at Roughheugh. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton in 1840. He was living at about 11 High Street in 1841 and at 10 Back-damgate in 1851 and 1861. His children included David, Betty and Isabel. He secondly married Helen and their had further children Robert, William, Catherine, Helen and George (also written ‘Fiddis’).

the Fiddle Inn (thu-fi-dul-in) n. former hostelry at 7 Loan in the mid-19th century – ‘But the wummin body had better gaun ferther on. The Fiddle Inn’s mair for the likes o’ her’ [JEDM].

fiddlers (f-dul-urz) n., pl. players of folk music on the violin. There is a long tradition of such players in the country areas around Hawick. The Town Treasurers’ book for 1755 states that 2 fiddlers were paid ‘for attending the bailies’ and in 1757 a fiddler was paid for ‘playing before the bailies and justices of the peace proclaiming Geo. III’. Specific examples include: Christopher Irving, ‘Kick-ma-leerie’ (17th C.); William Whaton (17th/18th C.); John Howison (18th C.); Robert Whitson in 1744; ‘Tibbie the Fiddler’ (c.18th C.); John Pringle (d.c.1810); ‘Blinnd Wullie’ Purves (1752–1832); Robert Rutherford (1776/7–1843); John ‘Soapy’ Ballentyne (1802/3–1859); ‘Blinnd Wull’ Oliver (1818–71); Tom Hughes (1907–86), Bob Hobkirk (1921–2002).

Fiddleton (f-dul-in, -dul-tin) n. lands around the modern Fiddleton Toll by the A7 in Ewesdale. They were possessed by the Lindsays of Wauchope in the 15th century, with the Homes as superior, then was owned by Simon Armstrong (along with other lands in Ewesdale) in the early 16th century, and was later that century occupied by the Elliots. Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton was accused of murder in 1606. The superiority of the lands (and others in Ewesdale) was held by the Homes, forfeited about 1516, but recovered by George, Lord Home, certainly by 1535. John Elliot is recorded there in 1569. William Elliot of ‘Fidilton’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with several other Elliots of Ewesdale. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. For a while the lands were split into ‘Nether Fiddleton’ and ‘Over Fiddleton’. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with Unthank and consisted of 1843 acres, bounded by Twislehope, Mosspeebles, Tarra, Arkleton, Eweslees and Blackhall. The farmhouse shown in 1718 was further south that Unthank, near Fiddleton Brae. There are also two old settlements to the west of the A7 near Fiddleton Bankend Cottage. A cist was excavated at Camp Knowes near here and found to contain human bones, flints and stone artefacts (the name occurs as ‘Fediltoun’ in 1506, ‘Fiddiltoun’ in 1509/10, ‘Fiddaltoun’ in 1525, ‘Fiddiltoun’ in 1535 and 1569, ‘Fiddeltoone’ in 1606, ‘Fiddleton’ in 1608, ‘Fiddiltown’ around 1610, ‘Fiddeltoone’ in 1622 and ‘Fiddeltoone’ in 1663; it is ‘Fiddiltoun’ on Gordon’s map of c. 1650, while ‘O. Fiddelton’ and ‘N. Fiddelton’ are on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Fiddleton Toll (f-dul-tin-tól) n. cottage on the A7 beyond Moss Paul, which was a former tollhouse. It is located at the road junction with the side-road to Hermitage Castle. All those present washed the bride’s feet, and there were often pranks involving soot etc.

Fitz Alan (fītz-aw-lin) n. Edmund 9th Earl of Arundel (1285–1326) son of Richard, 8th Earl. He took part on the war against Scotland in 1306 and was appointed Warden of the English Marches in 1316. He organised an expedition against Scotland in 1317 and part of his force was ambushed by Sir James Douglas’ men at Lintalee. He went in and out of favour with the English King and was eventually executed. However, his estates were restored to his eldest son Richard. Hawise (13th C.) daughter of Alexander, 4th High Steward of Scotland and sister of Sir James, 5th High Steward, she was heiress of Old Roxburgh. She married John de Souils, and so became Lady Liddesdale. Her daughter Muriel married Sir Richard Lovel. Walter (b.bef. 1115–77) first High Steward of Scotland under David I. He helped encourage Norman families to settle in Scotland. He owned large amounts of land in western Scotland, but also Birchenside on the Leader Water in Berwickshire and Hassendean in Teviotdale. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In the late 1160s he was witness to the confirmation of the gifts of lands to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1166 he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. After his death there was a document confirming the lands he had given to the monks of Paisley Priory, including a ploughgate in Hassendean (called Huntlaw). He married Eschina de Molle, heiress of Molle (or Mow) and Huntlaw. Their son was Alan, 2nd High Steward. The Stewardship was thereafter hereditary and led to the Stewart Kings several generations later. His seal shows a knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield and with the words ‘SIGILL. WALTERI FILII ALANI’ (also written ‘Fitzalan’).

Uchtred (12th C.) first known ancestor of the noble Scotts, with some indication that his family came from Galloway, and that they had held the barony of Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. Although, there is no definite information about his parentage or earlier ancestors, his designation as ‘son of Scot’ distinguished him from others of the same name. He lived during the reigns of Alexander I and David I. Around 1116 he witnessed an inquest made by David (then Prince of Cumbria) regarding the foundation of the church at Glasgow, and also witnessed the foundation charter for the monastery at Selkirk (where he was ‘Uchtredo filio Scot’). He was among the courtiers of King David I. About 1145 he witnessed the charter of King David’s son Henry to the church of Melrose. His son was probably Richard. The Dukes of Buccleuch and many other local branches of the Scotts can trace themselves directly back to him (also written ‘Uchtred Filius Scot’, i.e. the son of Scot).

five-an- (fīv-an) adj., arch. five minutes after, as in phrases such as ‘five-an-twenty past’ — ‘Blenkie’s...thy had a five-an-twenty past yin whussle, an' it went at five-an-twenty past’ [DaS].

five ell o wund (fīv-el-o-wund,-a) adv., arch. very quickly, at great speed, like lightning — ‘No that lang, aether — it was nea teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leik five ell o wund’ [ECS], ‘...Syne we wad scamper off, five ell a wund, To be the first to grab her han’ [WL] (also written ‘five ell a wund’, ‘five ells o blue wund’ and other variants).
Five O’clock

Five O’clock (fiv-ô-klok) n. former peculiar local nickname – ‘Dan Narry and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HII].

fivver (fî-vur) n., arch. fever (sometimes ‘the fivver’).

fizz (fiz) n. used in the phrase ‘ti hev a face like fizz’, i.e. to look angry or dour, to scowl (cf. phiiz).

fizzlen (fiz-lin) n., arch. essence, pith, vitality, force.

fizzleness (fiz-lin-lis) adj., arch. lacking spirit, sapless, lethargic (also fizzle).

fizzless (fiz-lis) adj., arch. lacking in pith or substance, ineffectual – ‘Thae coals o’ fun are fizzless embers, Sin Davies dead’ [JoHa] (also fizzleness).

flach (flawch) v., arch. to shake, tremble – ‘Their legs flauchen like the jams of a waulkmill’ [HAST1875] (also written ‘flauch’; cf. flaff).

flacht (flacht) n., poet. a burst, gust of wind – ‘The snaw is flein’ by in flauchts’ [JAHM], ‘A flaucht cam doon the lum’ [GW], a flash – ‘Why blazes you beacon, with flame flaring high – Why mixes its flaughts with the clouds of the sky?’ [JoHa], ‘But mark ye the fire-flauchts that stream on the sky! Like red flashing flags on the brow of the night’ [Fi], ‘…An’ mirth, and fun, and flaughts o’ wit, Were flashin’ roun’ an’ roun’’ [JT] (also ‘flacht’ and ‘flaught’).

flachter (flawch-tur) v., arch. to flutter, flapp, n. a fluttering, flicker – ‘…would in a moment consume them, with a ‘flachter o’ brunstane’’ [EM1820] (cf. flaffer).

flachter (flawch-tur) v., arch. to cut turf, a cutter of turf (from medæval English ‘flagge’).

flachter-spade (flawch-tur-spâd) n., arch. a two-handed, long-shafted, sharp spade used for cutting sods or peats – ‘And four spademens with flauchter spades to go along with them …’ [BR1755] (also ‘flachter’ and other variants).

the Flachter Spade (thî-flawch-tur-spâd) n. name given to the ceremonial spade used for the ‘cutting of the sod’ at the Common Riding. Ian Cook has carried the spade for over 40 years. In 2001 and 2020, with the Common Riding cancelled, the spade was still used to cut the sod, and also dipped in Teviot in lieu of the Flag (also written ‘the Flachter Spade’).

flachts (flawchts) n., pl., arch. instruments used in preparing wool (noted by Jamieson).

flae (flä) n., arch. a flea – ‘At Corstorphine A roared an leuch than A saw the monkeys lookin yin another for flaes’ [ECS], ‘The flae’s luppen away’ [ECS].

flaffer (flaw-fur) v., arch. to flap, flutter.

flag (flawg) n., arch. a piece of turf, sod. the Flag

the Flag (thî-flawg) n. Hawick’s colour, standard, pennon, pennant, or pensil, also known as ‘the Banner Blue’. It is meant to be a copy of the original flag captured at Hornshole, which is believed to have originally belonged to a group of English soldiers attached to the Priory of Hexham. The oldest surviving flag dates from 1707, sometimes called ‘the Union Flag’, since it contains the date 1707 (but the connection with the Union of the Kingdoms is probably just a coincidence) and is in the Museum; it was ordered by Bailie Ruecastle at a cost of £10 14 shillings, and was ready for the end of May that year. It was a replacement for a much older flag, which was so decrepit in 1706 that the Cornet-Elect refused to carry it, causing near riots. The result was that the Bailies took the responsibility of carrying the Flag that year, while the young men of the town appointed their own unofficial Cornet (whose name is not recorded) to carry another Colour. The Hawick flag is ‘A Banner Azure with Saltire Or’ with the date 1514 also in gold, and should be pennon-shaped (with the date read correctly when held like a lance). The vertical line may have simply hidden a seam. The letters ‘HC’ (for ‘Hawick Colour’ or ‘Hawick Common’ or perhaps even ‘Hawick Callants’, no one is entirely sure) were probably added later, perhaps to the original after its capture. The 1707 flag, of much lighter material than later version, was probably not the first replacement (although some have suggested that it might have been). A flag from around the end of the 18th century still had the correct colours, but with ‘1514’ in red and the cross in yellow; this was repeated for the replacement of 1832. A new flag made in 1865, and carried by the Cornet in the procession for the opening of the Allan Water supply and the opening of the Carlisle railway, was mistakenly given a red (or crimson) cross, and was square-shaped (‘…They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue’ [JEDM]). New flags were purchased in 1865, 1877 and 1892, still with the wrong colours. The error was probably made around 1850 (or 1845 and again around 1855 if 2 flags were purchased between 1832 and 1865), presumably because of indifference by the Town Council and citizens to the details of the ceremonial side. At the end of the 19th century it was established (by Craig & Laing, although the yellow colour had been suggested a few years earlier by J.E.D. Murray) that the flag should be pennon-shaped and with a golden cross, and this was implemented for the new flag of 1903, with subsequent copies retaining this design. The old coloured Flag was last used at the Thursday morning Chase of 1903 (and can be seen outside the Town Hall in an 1893 painting by Frank Wood). A replica flag was made by the ladies at Pringle’s and sent to the K.O.S.B. troops in Germany during WWII, then returned with the names of places where local men had fell embroidered on it. Flags of schools and guilds were also carried in earlier Common Ridings, but since the mid-18th century only the Town’s Colour has been allowed. In 1851 the Flag was stolen when flying at the Tower Hotel overnight, but recovered a week later in Silver Street. Until 1861 the flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s (sometimes the Junior Magistrate’s) house until it was bussed on the Thursday evening. After that year this happened at an inn selected by the Cornet, until the Colour Bussing was moved to the Town Hall in 1887. Now the unbussed Flag first appears at the Thursday morning Chase and is bussed on the Thursday evening, after being displayed from the Town Hall balcony all day. After being bussed inside the Town Hall it is waved from the balcony and left on display there. On the Friday the Cornet carries it at the Chase, then the Acting Father takes it to St. Leonard’s, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse. It is then taken by the Cornet on the Ride around the Marches. After the Cutting of the Sod it is carried by the Acting Father, and handed again to the Cornet at the gate from pilmuir Field onto the Mair. The Cornet rides proudly round the course with the Flag and later it is displayed from the roof of the committee room. Leaving the Mair, it is dipped in the Teviot and is returned to the Council Chambers for the night. On the Saturday it again goes to the Mair, and is returned on the Saturday afternoon at the Handing Back ceremony. The Flag was loaned to Hexham Abbey for the procession for the consecration of a new nave in 1908, with a copy presented to the Abbey by the Callants’ Club in 1914 and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 (the one last carried by the Cornet in 1971); this now hangs in the abbey’s north nave, with the 1914 copy returned to Hawick. There was a new flag in 1972, which was used until 1991. The flag was bussed by the Queen at a special Golden Jubilee ceremony in Melrose in 2002. It is rarely brought out except at the Common Riding, but formerly was used in local processions, e.g. at the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865 (when a new Flag was provided) and the Dod Burn water supply in 1882. The Flag is also draped over the coffins of ex-Cornets, the practice beginning with James Smith in 1904. A practice flag (green, with the words ‘Aye Defend’ in yellow, donated by the Mosstroopers’ Club) is used by the Cornet and the Acting Father at the Mair after the Wednesday morning Chase. A new flag was provided in 2014 – ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us, Hail to the brave hearts that bear it along’ [JT], ‘Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again!’ [JEDM], ‘...And blue as my wee lad’s wondering eye Watching the Flag go fluttering by’ [JYH], ‘The flag is our emblem, an’ stands for a’ that we cherish an’ haud dear’ [BW1939], ‘The flag for which oor fither died At Hornshole be Teviotside’ [IWL].

flaik (fläik) n., arch. a piece of frame-work, frame – ‘...for ane ryott with each other, and the said Janet Holywell in ane provocation for taking of her stand, ane flaik being laid there before’ [BR1676], a hurdle used as a barricade or gate – ‘...my faither sprang ower the bucht flaik to be near the lasses’ [LHTB].

flain (fläin) n., poet. an arrow – ‘The swallow-tail frae teckles flew, Five hundred flain into the flight ...’ [CPM].

flaip (fläp) n., arch. a flop, thud, a clean or unbroken fall – ‘I’ve gotten mony flaips an’ fa’s’ [JoHa], a dull, heavy sound caused by a fall.

flair (fläir) n. floor – ‘hey, there’s nae coat hooks on a flair!’, ‘...tell her no ti weer her best evenin dress ti the Ball because the Toon Hall flair wad be awf dirty’ [IWL], ‘Ye scrubbed the flair until it shone’ [IJ], ‘Ma auldest sisters washed the close, The other yin’s dune the flair’ [AY] (see fluir for the earlier pronunciation).

Flake Hill (fläik-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, opposite the farm of Eilrig. It reaches a height of 318 m.

flam (flam) n., arch. a flame, flare, glare – ‘Thon burnin’ Zeppelin made a grand flam i’ the lift’ [GW], ‘...e’en as the flam o the weather-gleam skails afore’d the cluds thrre the owreciissen lift’ [ECS].
flaneerin

(\textit{flawn-ee-rin}) n., arch. fancy-work, embroidery, decorative trimming.

\textbf{flang} (\textit{flawng}) pp., arch. flung, did fling – ‘Salome flang like a wanton, free, A hunt, the flash o’ her withchin’ ee’ [WL] kicked out the legs, danced – ‘… an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie’ [ECS] (also written ‘flaang’; this is the past tense, while the past participle is usually ‘flung’).

\textbf{flanker} (\textit{flang-kur}) n. one of the 2 wing forwards in rugby, playing at numbers 6 and 7, and forming part of the back row in scrums.

\textbf{flankit} (\textit{flang-ke’, -ki’}) pp., arch. flanked – ‘An’ by ill fortune’s forces flankit, I will be laith, To quat the muse, while ae auld blanket, Can hap us baith’ [JR].

\textbf{flannen} (\textit{fla-nen, neen}) n., adj., arch. flannel – ‘Ma flaaneen serk’s aa up ma back an ’s hard as buckram’ [ECS], ‘A can mind when tredsman wore Flannen serks wi a navy blue stripe’ [DH] (also written ‘flaaneen’ and variants).

\textbf{flapper} (\textit{flaw-pur}) n. one who owns or trains horses for ‘flapping’ meetings, also a horse that races at such meetings.

\textbf{flappin} (\textit{flaw-pin}) n. amateur horse-racing in the Borders, not under the Jockey Club or National Hunt rules. The word has been used elsewhere in Britain (and also for greyhound racing), but the Borderers have been the most enthusiastic supporters of unofficial racing. The main locations are at Hawick Moor, Langholm and Selkirk (at the Rig). Those at Hawick Moor that are not associated with the Common Riding are organised by ‘Hawick Horse’. There were also races on Flatt farm near Newcastleton until the early years of the 21st century. There were formerly meetings across much of Scotland, although support waned in most places, with the last meeting in the Aberdeen area around the 1990s. The only other place in Scotland to now have such race meetings is Irvine. Among places known to have meetings in the past are Insch (Aberdeenshire), the Black Isle, Bogside, Lanark, Canonbie, Dumfriesshire (near Newton Stewart) and Galashiels (once). Historically, flapping has a reputation as a hot-bed of swindlers and ruffians, and the exclusive Jockey Club still gives a ‘warning off’ penalty for participants. The Common Riding of 1946 was the first flapping meeting to be held in Scotland. The Tradesmen’s Handicap, run on Common Riding Friday is the flappers equivalent of the Derby – ‘… daein a pickle flappin tae on his Uncle Elec’s Nell’ [IWL], ‘… Till hei got intae flappin’, racin’, no under orders’ [MB] (the origin and antiquity of the word is uncertain, but there is a claim it comes from an old slang word for a loose woman; however, it seems more likely it is related to ‘flap’, recorded as ‘a sudden happening’ in Aberdeenshire).

\textbf{flappit} (\textit{flaw-pi’, -pee’}) pp., flapped – ‘He crawed and flappit ower the dyke, An’ roosed the bees ayont the bike’ [WFC].

\textbf{Flask} (\textit{flawsk}) n. former lands on the east side of the Eves valley, between Hoghill and Terrona. Flask Wood is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It was also formerly called ‘Flashholme’, although in some periods the 2 names may have referred to distinct neighbouring lands. Along with Howgill and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert Maxwell in 1619. Archibald Armstrong ‘in Flashholme’ is recorded in 1607. It may be the ‘Flocksteid alias Flasket’ possessed by John Scott ‘balie in Liddisail’ recorded in 1632. Both Flask and Flashholme are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was ‘Flash alias Flashholme’ when the superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. There were Armstrongs there in the 17th century. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 540 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Howgill, Nether Wrae and Terrona. It is also stated that ‘the water hath done it much damage by altering its course’. John Anderson was there in 1783. Robert Beattie, James Johnston and their families lived there in 1841 (it is ‘Flashkhome’ on Blaue’s 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

\textbf{Flaskwud} (\textit{flawsk-wud}) n. Flaskwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, listed as vacant at that time. A document of 1529/30 states that Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvod’ is to be brought in to answer crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. It was probably the ‘Flashkett’ included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The farm was presumably on the Flasket Sike, off the Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale.

\textbf{flat} (\textit{fla’}) n. a storey in a mill, or an area defined for specific factory production, e.g. ‘the flat (fla) n., arch. a cow-plat, cake of cow dung (Jamieson says this is ‘apparently from its flat form’).

flate (fla) pp., arch. scolded, chided (also ‘flaet’; this is the past tense of flyte, noted by E.C. Smith, but also see fleet; the past participle is flitten).

flatlins (fla-linz) adv., poet. flatly, at full length – ‘Ane other thro’ the breeks him bare, While flatlins to the grund he fell ...’ [CPM].

Flatt (flaw, flat) n. farm just north of Kershopefoot, on the Scottish side of the Border. It is already ‘Flatt’ in 1541 when valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. ‘Young Sinn’ was recorded as residing there in 1583. Will Elliot ‘called Blakheid’ had 4 cows stolen from the lands there in about 1610. Lancie Armstrong of Flat was recorded in 1611. It was possessed by Francis Robson in 1632. Elspeth Scott was tenant there in 1694, and paid tax on 3 hearths. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, extending to 442 acres, bounded by the Kershope Burn, Liddel Water and Sorbie-trees; the map shows the house in the same place as today’s farmhouse and some old trees corresponding to the modern Sorbiholm Strip. Henry Elliot paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748. Elligits were tenants in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. Henry Elliot was there in at least the period 1785–91. John Elliot was farmer there in 1797 and another John in the 1860s. There was a mill pond to the east. A mineral spring on the farm was once considered to have healing properties, and is marked ‘Stinking Well (Chalybeate)’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The farm was used for ‘flapping’ race meetings in the latter part of the 20th century. It is also a former name for lands to the east of Smallholm Crags (also ‘The Flatt’, it is ‘the Flates’ in 1583; it is ‘Flett’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Flat’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

flauch see flach

flauchter see flachter

flaught see flacht

flaw (flaw) n., arch. a piece of ground used for drying peats – ‘A flaw o’ peats, the spot of ground occupied by an individual, on the edge of a moss, on which his peats are spread for being dried, in the summer season’ [JoJ], a quantity of peats (also flowe).

Fleck (flek) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He paid the Horse Tax at ‘over Chesterhall’ in 1797; this was probably a temporary name for Over Bonchester. His children included: Betty (b.1789); and James (b.1791).

Flecks see the Flex

fleece (flees) n., arch. a supply of stock, a flock or company of people, humorous term for an outfit of clothes – ‘A’ve bocht a new fleece o warm claes for the winter months’ [ECS].

the Fleece see the Fleece Inn

Fleece Close (flees-klös) n. passageway at 6 High Street, named after the Fleece Inn, the ballroom of which it led to. In the mid-19th century there was the sign of a golden fleece at the entrance.

the Fleece Inn (thu-flees-in) n. inn formerly at 6 High Street, also known as ‘the Golden Fleece’. It was reached by the long passageway there, behind what was for a long time Davies the saddler’s. The attached ballroom was further up the close, with access from an outside staircase (seen in an old sketch). In the middle of the 19th century it was used for many purposes, including weddings, dances, theatrical performances and concerts in the winter, as well as ‘Blind Wull’s’ dance classes. At one point there were 3 separate dance instructors using the ballroom. It was a popular place for raffles to raise money for distressed workers. There were performances of all kinds there, including the exhibition of a supposed mermaid and performances by Borders clown Billy Purves. One of the last performances there was a recital of selections from Shakespeare by a father and daughter. It was also used for many years for the monthly business meetings of Allars Kirk, with the upper room (No. 5) used for this purpose known jokingly as ‘the Manse’. Thomas Easton ran a school here for a while and in 1838 it was the location for the meeting that organised the opening of the Chartist Store (i.e. the Co-op). George Hunter was the proprietor in 1825 and 1837, Margaret Best is listed there in 1852, then James Hay, followed by James Scott, with the last tenant being town bellman Samuel Lawrence. The licence was reduced from that of a hotel to a public house in 1871 and lost altogether in 1875 for a ‘breach of certificate’. There are 2 sketches made by T.H. Laidlaw in 1899. The ballroom was demolished in 1948 – ‘Jock Buckingham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags ...’[WE].

fleech (fleech) v., poet. to cajole, coax, beseech, flatter – ‘But what are a’ their fleeching tales to me? Colin I loo, but them I downa see’ [CPM], ‘An’ that in nae most awfu’ gracious manner; I’m plainly bluit – nor kens the way to fleech’ [JoHa], ‘I’ve fleeched a’ an’ foughten a’ in vain – Jock disna seem to care; I’ve thrashed him o’er and o’er again Until my airm was sair’ [JT].

fleect (flee’ v., poet.) to flook, to flow, flood – ‘...blaw apon my gairden that its spices may fleect owt’ [HSR], ‘Where the weet comes frae the flowe, And fleects, ye mind, on yon bit lea’ [HSR], arch. to be awash with water – ‘...and boggy ground on the other which fleects water all the winter season’ [GT].

Fleety Wud (flee’-ee-wud) n. wood on the east side of the Slistrig, to the south of North Berriyfell farm. The cottage there is Fleety Cottage or Fleety Haugh, formerly called Ellitoiffeld (the name presumably relates to propensity for flooding in the area).

fleeg (fleg) v., arch. to frighten, scare, drive away by scaring – ‘...But stuff my wame wi’ guid kail brose, To fleeg the caul’ Syne strutting in guid plaidin’ hose, I look fu’ baull’ [JR], ‘...An’ scripture anathema’s gather, To fleeg the faithless’ [JR], to fling (as a horse, from a fright), n. a fright, scare – ‘An’ if ye meet wi’ Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleeg ...’ [JR], ‘...She threw doon a guinea, and thought it weel waired, For he, to her ailment, had given a fleeg’ [TCh].

flegggar (fleg-gur) n., arch., poet. someone who flinches, one who frightens – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu’ flegggars’ [AB], a horse that is prone to flinging off its rider (the meaning of Agnes Douglas’ line may possibly instead be ‘an exaggerator, liar’ just to be ‘scarer’).

flei (fli) n. a fly, any general flying insect – ‘is that flei a cleg or jist a hoose-flei?’, ‘shut yer mooth or the fleis’ll get in’, ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mauky fleis ...’ [DH], v. to fly – ‘she’s gliffed stiff ti flei’, ‘But hei took iz roond the Haugh – Oh, how the time did flei!’ [DH], ‘...it’s sixteen eer sin oor Queen an Prince Philip last veseiteet the toon. How time fleis’ [BW1978] (also spelled ‘fley’; see also hoose-flei, mauky-flei and shairny-flei).

flei ceemetry (fli-seec-ree’-ree) n. humorous term for fly paper – ‘They came to a horri-ible, fascinating end on revolting ‘fley cremetery’ ...’ [BB], humorous term for a fruit slice made of pastry and currits.

fleich (flich) v., poet. to cajolet, flatter – ‘...wi’ fleichin’ lipps, an’ wi’ ane duuble hairt do thaye speik’ [HSR].

Fleming (fle-min) n. Sir David of Biggar (d.1405/6) eldest son of Sir Malcolm. He distin-guished himself at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. Being in royal favour he gained sev-eral properties and titles, including being (briefly) given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh by King Robert III on being forfeited by the Earl of Douglas in 1405. In 1404 he was a Commissioner for negotiating a truce with En gland. In 1405 he was one of those ensuring (un-successful, for he was captured by the English) the safe passage of Prince James of Scotland by ship to France, to escape the plotings of the Dou-glasses. However, the Royal force was met at Long Hermiston Moor and he was killed there by James Douglas of Balveny, son of Archibald Earl of Dou-glas. As a result Cavers (and the Sheriffdom) returned to Douglas hands, and later Douglas of Balveny became the 7th Earl of Douglas. He married Jean, daughter of Sir David Barclay of Brechin and secondly married Isabel, heiress of Monycabow. He had a daughter Marrion (who married William Maule of Panmure) and 2 sons, Sir Malcolm and David. He was ancestor of the Earls of Wigtown. Hugh (12th C.) landowner at Malton in Yorkshire. He is recorded in Reginald of Durham’s collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, probably written in the 1170s. He was said to have fled Malton due to the incursions of the army of William the Lion, and sought refuge in the chapel of St. Cuthbert in the Slistrig valley. A vision of the saint told him to take moss from the stone basin that was outside the chapel and place some under his hood. He was thereby able to pass his enemies undetected and return to Malton. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. His surname appears to be ‘Fleming’. He is probably the James ‘Fleemin’, married to Agnes ‘Putrie’, whose children born in Hawick included William (b.1685), Margaret (b.1687) and Isobel (b.1692). John (14th C.) chaplain at Hawick in the mid-1300s. He may be the same as ‘John de Hawick’ mentioned in 1356. All that is really known about him is recorded in an action brought against him by John Leche, secretary of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1363, asking for confirmation that he held the Hawick benefice ‘although John Fleming, a younger man than himself and not a priest, held the Church and contested it, saying the patronage belonged to him’.

John (18th/19th C.) cabinet-maker in Castleton listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. He is listed as a joiner among heads of households in 1835. He was listed as a wright in Newcastle upon Tyne in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He does not occur on the 1841 census. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Roan, near Newcastleton. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Ruecastle. He was taxed in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Robert (b.c.1810) tailor who lived on Kiryard in 1841. He was there along with shoemaker Walter, probably his brother, as well as Elizabeth, probably their mother, and children Janet and James. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as a teacher on Melgund Place in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is probably the young schoolmaster called William who was residing in Kelso in 1841. He died in about 1846.

Flemington ( fle-ing-tin ) n. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cauldmill in 1720, 1723 and 1731 and Deanbrae in 1738. He married Ann Turnbull in 1720 and their children included: Margaret (b.1721); Thomas (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Robert (again, b.1728); Archibald (b.1731); and Margaret (b.1738). His name is sometimes written ‘Flemington’; it is a rare surname in the area.

fenders ( fen-durz ) n., pl., poet. splinters, fragments – ‘...thou salt basch thame inti fenders like ane patters vesshel’ [HSR], ‘Thou didst smatter the heeds o’ leviathan intil fenders ...’ [HSR].

the Flesh Mercat ( thu-flesh-mer-ki ) n., arch. a former name for a market held in Hawick to sell meat. In 1755 it is recorded that ‘The Flesh Mercate’ was finished at the cost of £20, suggesting there was a building constructed especially for this purpose. It is specifically recorded that a ‘cross-tree’ was put up there in 1755 and there was a ‘roup’ for it that year (presumably it was rented by butchers). However, in 1762 the Council resolved to ‘take down the Flesh Market and Cross’, and to dispose of the stones and timber; this suggests that it may have been located close to the foot of the Cross Wynd.

flesh ( flesh ) n., arch. a general term for butcher meat – ‘A made a faiasable mael oot o pie-soop, ...caald flesh, picklt ingans ...’ [ECS], ‘...for aw’ve the pot on the day, an’ aw henna the flesh in yet’ [JTu].

flesher ( fle-shur ) n., arch. a butcher. There were formerly strict laws attached to the treatment of meat, which the Town Council enforced, e.g. in 1713 a flesher was fined for bringing a carcase into the Town that had already died in the country. In Hawick the ‘fleshers’ were one of the 7 incorporated trades, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They obtained their ‘Seal of Cause’ in 1720, when there were 7 of them, but had ceased to exist by the end of the 19th century. In Selkirk the ‘Fleshers’, a remnant of the former trade incorporation there, are still an active group with their own reception etc. during the Common Riding. The amount of business done locally was at a fairly low level until the latter part of the 18th century. Cutting the hamstrings of escaped cattle in the public street was one of the barbaric practices of the 18th century mentioned by Robert Wilson. An 1860 photograph (of George Davies’ shop) shows the once common sight (before being banned in 1862) of carcases hanging up outside the shop – ‘Item, to Adam Lidderdale, flescheour in Hawik, for flesche to the place, twentie pundis’ [SB1574], ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, spouse to Cuthbert Henderson, fleshour, being accused ...’ [BR1638], ‘Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ...’ [BR1640], ‘The fleshers are ordained by the council not to sell skins until they shall first be exposed in the market place ...’ [BR1663], ‘The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, fleshers, shoemakers, and baxters’ [RRG], ‘...Past fletcher, webster, hind’ [DH] (also sometimes ‘fletcher’; several spelling variants exist, such as ‘fleshour’).

fleshers are ordained by the council not to sell skins until they shall first be exposed in the market place ...’ [BR1663], ‘The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, fleshers, shoemakers, and baxters’ [RRG], ‘...Past fletcher, webster, hind’ [DH] (also sometimes ‘fletcher’; several spelling variants exist, such as ‘fleshour’).
Fletcher (flec) pp., arch. scolded, chided – ‘The tongues o’ wives wha never flet, The picture o’ a mither’s pet’ [JoHa] (cf. flate).

Fletcher (fle-chur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included William (b.1689). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwickshiels in 1718, 1722 and 1724. He may have married Margaret Tait in 1715. His children included: Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1720); James (b.1722); and Adam (b.1724). He was surely related to William who was at Borthwickshiels about the same time. Alexander (b.1883/4) saddler in Newcastleton, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 48 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and about the same time. James Rutherford and for William Palmer. Also he became the first minister of the Newcastle-Burgher Kirk in 1762. He was one of 6 students who entered the divinity hall in 1758, only 2 of whom became ministers. His appointment to Castleton came after a long delay, caused by difficulty in finding a suitable man. He was said to were valued at £12. He is probably related to the George who was recorded in Bedrule Parish in 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate and is probably related to James and John, who are also listed. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he (along with William) witnessed a baptism for John and Isabel Brydon. He married Agnes Veitch and their children included James (b.1705). George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Turn near Stobs. He was there in the 1750s when his servant Robert Thomson got into a violent altercation with the Hawick Town Herd over his flock being hounded off the Common. He could be the George, son of James, born in Bedrule Parish in 1730. James (16th C.) recorded in Huntly in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement between the tenants in Dodhead and Singlie. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Reid, whose surname is written ‘Red’. Their children included: William (b.1670); Thomas (b.1672); James (b.1675); and Helen (b.1676). James Haining states that ‘in some notes of James Wilson, Town Clerk, appears a famous Fletcher m. to Isobel Reid or Rae’, but it is unclear what was famous about him. He is probably the James, son of Thomas, born in Ashkirk in 1644. James (17th C.) tenant in Beldedean. Along with several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. His name is given as ‘Flesher’. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His name is recorded as ‘Fletcher’. His wife was Janet Scott and they had a son George (b.1662). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included William (b.1693) and George (b.1698). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He may have been son of the earlier James. His children included Mary (b.1726), Margaret (b.1728) and George (b.1730). Andrew (b.1732) and William (b.1735), baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may also have been his children. Rev. James (1725/6-1803) from Dalkeith, he became the first minister of the Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1762. He was one of 6 students who entered the divinity hall in 1758, only 2 of whom became ministers. His appointment to Castleton came after a long delay, caused by difficulty in finding a suitable man. He was said to be skilled at optics and keen on astronomy, and a friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny. He is also said to have built a ‘wooden horse’ which he used to get around the Parish; it is unclear whether or not this was an early predecessor of the bicycle. There were also stories of how he had second sight and predicted things about the next 3 ministers of the parish. He was said to be a man of singularly primitive manners and was not a successful minister, being a strict disciplinarian and having an off-putting manner. A new Kirk was built around 1773, but it was said that the congregation was in decline by 1793. Around this time there was also the establishment of Newcastle, dramatically altering the parish. A complaint was made to the Selkirk Presbytery in 1801 that he was preaching against accepted doctrine, which led to discussions of his dismissal, during which he announced his resignation; he had apparently come to a new but unorthodox understanding of the Trinity, and written of this in a preface to an edition of Dr. Watts on ‘The Sonship of Christ’. He moved back to Dalkeith and shortly before his death published ‘The orthodox scheme freed from the remains of Arianism . . .’, largely a commentary on the works of Rev. Isaac Watts. He married Christian Beattie in 1769 and had a daughter, also Christian (d.1835). The family are buried in Castleton churchyard John (15th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Isobel Brydon and their son George in 1519, except for ‘liferent’. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1561 when Robert, son of Walter Scott of Synton, promised to produce him at the next truce day at Coldstream. This was to answer the charge that he stole 3 horses from Steven Simpson in Berwick. He is recorded as ‘Hob Flescheour’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as tenant in Huntly. He married Agnes Renaldson and their children included Andrew (b.1706), William (b.1708), Andrew (again, b.1717) and Andrew (again, b.1723). The 1717 baptism took place in the Manse ‘there being Examination that day’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscote in 1710. He probably married Bessie Scott in Roberton in 1708. His children included: Isobel (b.1710); and Helen (b.1714). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herd in 1796. His children included William (b.1794) and James (b.1796). Thomas (d.c.1747) inherited the lands of Ruecastle from his father Robert in the 5th year of the King’s reign (i.e. either 1441 or 1464), 8 years after his father’s death. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Robert, from whom he inherited the lands of Ruecastle. In 1497 he retained Ruecastle after having them held ‘in wadset’ to Janet Moscrop. He gave the lands to his son George in 1519, except for ‘liferent’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son Walter was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were George (presumably a relative) and Robert Mathieson. Thomas (d.1680) from Bedrule parish, where he has one of the earliest surviving gravestones. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet

He married Margaret Scott, and their children included Margaret (b.1726). John (18th/19th C.) saddler in Hawick with Andrew Atcheson. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia. Peter (18th/19th C.) weaver in the West-end. Along with Robert Leithead, he walked to Selkirk to secure the services of the drummer and fifer there for the ‘rebel’ party during the 1809 Common Riding. He is probably the Peter who had a child John with Jane Paterson in Wilton in 1794. The death of his illegitimate grandchild was recorded in 1816. Robert (15th C.) owner of the lands of Ruecastle. He had a sasine for the lands according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1471, with his name given as ‘Roberto Flesware’. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Robert (d.c.1492) son of Thomas. He inherited the lands of Ruecastle (in Bedrule) in 1470/1. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1561 when Robert, son of Walter Scott of Synton, promised to produce him at the next truce day at Coldstream. This was to answer the charge that he stole 3 horses from Steven Simpson in Berwick. He is recorded as ‘Hob Flescheour’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as tenant in Huntly. He married Agnes Renaldson and their children included Andrew (b.1706), William (b.1708), Andrew (again, b.1717) and Andrew (again, b.1723). Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet
the Flex

Kedie in 1692 and their children included William (b.1696) and Janet (b.1698). William (15th C.) tenant in ‘le crug’, which could be ‘Crook’ near Hawick. His name is given as ‘William fle-giar’ when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after 4 Routledges who are connected with the lands of Trows near Crook. He was also called in 1494/5 and again failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the William who (along with George) witnessed a baptism for John in 1690. He is proba- bly the William who in 1694 (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbert- son and Isobel (who was surely related). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1727 and 1729. He may have married Isobel Smail in Roberton in 1722. His children included: Walter (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Andrew (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). He may have been brother of Adam who was at Borthwickshiels at the same time (formerly spelled ‘Flechar’, ‘Fleggear’, ‘Flegiar’, ‘Fleigar’, ‘Fleschar’, etc.).

The Fletcher (thu-fle-chur) n. reputedly the sole survivor of Selkirk’s men, who returned from Fodden with an English flag and cast it down. The ‘Casting of the Colours’ is the ceremonial re-enactment of this at Selkirk Common Riding every year. Whether there is any veracity to the story is unclear, and there is a contradictory version involving a Town Clerk called Brydon.

Flewn (*flou*n*) pp. flewn – ‘she’s never been abroad or flown nowhere’, ‘It has flown away’ [GW], ‘The nest’s flown’ (= young ones have taken wing) [GW] (cf. the older flown).

The Flex (thu-fleks) n. farm on the northern side of the road between St. Leonard’s and the Slit- rig, and a name for that general area. The name is old, with a ‘Richard de Flex’ of Roxburghshire signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Alexander of Flex witnessing a charter in 1357/8. Alexander Gledstains held the lands in the early 15th century, with a confirming charter in 1458, but had to yield them to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1464/5 following a case before the Justiciary South of the Forth. William Douglas had a sasine for these lands (along with Kirkton Mains) immediately following; this was done at the ‘principale messuagium’, i.e. main dwelling. In the charter for the Barony of Hawick in 1511 these lands were listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’. James Scott of Flex is recorded in 1556. The lands were among those inherited by James Douglas in 1572 along with the Barony of Hawick and listed among the property of the Baron in 1594. In a land valuation of 1627 it is listed as ‘estimat to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bulls, vicarage 5 lbs’. A charter for the land was given to John Gledstains in 1653, when it was described as ‘extending to five merks, old extent’, and it was probably the main residence for the Gledstains of Whitlaw. It was still valued at 5 merks (of old extent) when inherited by Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw in 1672. John Stoddart was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. William Lillico was herd there in 1700. Walter Martin was there in at least 1700-02. William Henderson was smith there in at least 1702-09 and Francis was also smith in at least 1702-04. John Davidson was tenant there in 1718 and Archibald Paterson in 1716-19. William Hill was a weaver there in 1720. John Thomson was there in 1726. John Irvine was tenant in 1741, with John Cavers and John Goodfellow also there. James Reid and William Scott were there in 1743. Robert Boyd purchased the farm in 1751 and in 1753 march stones were laid out along the burnside to mark the boundary with the Common. John Laing lived there in the late 18th century, and William Eliott Lockhart in the late 19th. By 1788 the lands of Flex had been disjoined from those of Whitlaw, were valued at £144 10s 9d and were owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae; it had the same value and owner in 1811. William Scott was there from at least 1799 and was also recorded ‘at Flex’ in 1811. Henry Scott Riddell also lived here for several years, walking 9 miles to preach at Teviothead. In about 1874 it was recorded being owned by Allan Eliott Lockhart. The Cornet and followers come back to Hawick this way after the ‘Orderin o the Curds an Cream’. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from the farmhouse to Goldielands Tower. J.P. Alison designed a house (or alterations perhaps) in 1896. An oval-shaped hollowed stone found there in the Museum – ‘To Flex and Wullie- struther, St. Leeonards, Haggisha’, And Hawick there from at least 1799 and was also recorded ‘at Flex’ in 1811. flicht (flicht) n., arch., poet. flight – ‘...The gems that whirl in crazy flicht Maun end in draiglin’ lifeless mud’ [WP].

flicht (flicht) n., arch. a flake (of soot or snow), a small speck (e.g. in porridge or other food), a mote of dust – ‘...where yin braiths God’s air clear an no suddit wu suitty flicht’ [ECS] (also flicher and flichter).

Flicht (flich) n. former name for an area in Liddesdale, south-east of Castleton, close to the Border. It is now marked by ‘Flight’s Moss’ on the Ordnance Survey map, although the area around the farm ‘The Flatt’ near Kershopefoot may also be meant. It is recorded as ‘Flygh’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 20 shillings. The farm of ‘Hie ichtlycht’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 3 pounds and tenanted by Martin Nixon. Matthew and John Nixon were there in 1544. The eastern part was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691), having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsghart. John Wilson was tenant there in 1694 and James Lamb also a resident. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirndean and Clintwood. Robert Robertson was shepherd there in 1797. It is marked on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland as ‘Flightes cha’, and on other roughly contemporary maps as ‘Flightes cast’, suggesting there was confusion over whether there was a chapel or a castle there. It is probably the ‘Flygh superior’ listed as a 36-shilling land. The remains of a farmstead are located near the head of the Boghall Burn. The New Statistical Account mentions 2 ‘camps’ on the farm, one round and the other square (it is ‘Flightes’ in 1541, ‘Fleght’ in 1544 and ‘Flight’ in 1694; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘East Flicht’ and ‘West Flicht’, with ‘Flicht’s Fell’ above, while it is still marked on other roughly contemporary maps as ‘Flightes cha’, and on other roughly contemporary maps as ‘Flightes cast’, suggesting there was confusion over whether there was a chapel or a castle there. flichter (flich-tur) v., arch., poet. to flutter, to fly about lightly (as snow) – ‘He little ken’d my heart was flight’ring fain. My winsome lad! O gin ye war my ain!’ [CPM], ‘...an the flichterin burdies dubbelt an dookeet’ [ECS], ‘The broun leaves flichterid crinklin’ Wi’ the first soft flecks o’ snaw’ [WL].

flichty (flich-tee) adj., arch. flighty – ‘...proving yet again that it’s no’ the weemen-folk that’s flichty!’ [DH].
flid (flid) n. A flood – ‘...And calm’st the raging, roaring fluid, When dashing wild’ [RDW], ‘The neist big flude ’ill show them fun’ [WNK], ‘...shurelie in the fludes o’ grit waters thaye salna cum nie untill him’ [HSR], ‘Oo’ve a hist’ry thrae the Fluid Oo’ve a Moat where Druids stuid’ [TK], ‘Through fire and fluid the real auld gutter bluid Aye circled round the auld green Moat’ [TK] (also spelled ‘fluid’ and ‘flude’ and probably formerly pronounced flid).

fliddin (flid-din) n. A flooding – ‘The fluidin’s gey had aa the watergate lang, – I’ve a fine pair o’ towels, as cheap as they’re strang!’ [WL].

the Flid Merk (thu-flid-merk) n. Name sometimes used for the plaque at Towerdykeside, marking the level of the Slitrig flood of 1846. The level was marked annually by James Smith, cornet that year, and a painter to trade. The plaque was placed there by him and his friends in 1902, with the inscription ‘Flood Mark July 1846’.

flids (flidz) n., pl. The Teviot floods every few years, with significant floods in 1796, 1806, 1846, 1926, 1938, 1948, 1953, 1955, 1963, 1977, 2005 (twice, the October one being the worst in living memory), 2015 (with 600 people being evacuated from their homes), 2020, etc. A record of 1782 notes damage to the bridges along the Mosspaul to Haremoss Turnpike (essentially the A7). Dramatic floods at Minto are reported in 1783 and 1789, and a torrential rain-storm in 1806. The flood of November 1938 swept away the Victoria Bridge and the Mansfield Bridge. The Slitrig can also rise rapidly, and perhaps even more dramatically. The most famous such event being the Great Flid of August 1767, when the river rapidly rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, sweeping away many houses, as well as the old Corn Mill, and drowning 2 people. The Teviot flood of 1796 carried away part of the burial ground at Hassendean. Sir Walter Scott describes the flood of 1806, when the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. This flood also devastated Rulewater, particularly at Broughton Brigend. The 1806 flood was also bad around Denholm, sweeping away the bridge over the Dean Burn, and removing the remains of the burial ground at Hassendean. The flood of 29th July 1846 swept away Slitrig Crescent footbridge and its level is marked by a brass plaque in Tow erdykeside about 1.5 m (5 feet) above pavement level. This flood followed a tremendous thunder storm starting between 7 and 8 o’clock, with the water level rising steadily, the town bells being rung at midnight, and the level peaking at 14 feet above normal shortly afterwards. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Lynwood Cauld and 2 bridges over the Slitrig were swept away. Walls, cauldars, carts, trees, cattle, etc. were carried off. Silver Street became part of the river, water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port and water flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal and Hobburn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley (with Whitrope Toll House and stable washed away), Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere, with a rider drowning while returning from Langholm Common Riding. A stone in Newcastleton commemorates the flood there, where water poured down the main street. In 1862 part of the Haugh flooded overnight on the Friday of the Common Riding, making conditions extremely wet for the Saturday races and games. The year 1948 also saw a major flood throughout the Borders, about which there is a book, ‘The Great Borders Flood of 1948’ by Lawson Wood. The Teviot’s highest flow rate (since recording began in 1963) was 142.4 m$^3$/s on 17th February 1997. The floods of early 2020 washed away part of Bridge House and devastated Newcastleton – ‘On Hawick burst the flood’s resistless sway, Plough’d the paved streets, and tore the walls away, Floated high roofs, from whelming fabricks torn; While pillar’d arches down the wave were borne’ [JL].

finders (fin-durz) n., pl., poet. Splinters, smitherens – ‘...The next chain’d dore that they came at, They gard it a’ in finders flee. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘...he sall saufe the childer o’ the needle, an’ sall brik in finders the oppresser’ [HSR].

fling (fling) v., arch. To kick up the heels, dance, caper. n. A dance, act of kicking.

Flintoff (fin-tof) n. Butler (18th C.) Dance-master, who must have travelled around the Borders towns. In 1785 he is ‘Mr Flintiff (teacher of dancing)’ who paid the Hawick Council for renting the Town House for 2 months. In 1769 in Oxnam Parish he married Ann Rutherford and they had children John, Walter, Mary, Archibald, Susanna and Thomas Winterup.

fliird (flird) n., arch. a flimsy and poor piece of fancy dress, anything insubstantial – ‘A thin fliird’ [JoJ], pl., poet. vanities, vain finery – ‘Let manly worth doff the flyrds of folly’ [HSR] (also written ‘fryrd’).

fliird (flird) v., poet. to flirt, move about restlessly (use by James Ruickbie).

fliisk (flisk) v., arch., poet. to frolic, caper, frisk – ‘There, often seen in other days, The fairies flisked a thousand ways . . .’ [AD], n., arch. a caper, fick, whisk.

fliit (flii, fliit) v. to move house, remove from one place to another, change one’s dwelling place – ‘. . . did wairme him . . . to fliit and remove fra the haill foirsidis landis . . .’ [SB1624], ‘He must not sell any of the straw, hay or dung from the farm and his servants must fliit on the agreed date’ [SPB1773], ‘Oo’ll beide i this hoose ti Whussenday, an than oo’l fliit’ [ECS], ‘. . . But they cam’ and condemned it, and garrerd mei fliit’ [DH], ‘There’s flittings east, there’s flitting west, Their rents are raised anew’ [WH], ‘. . . And she shortly after flitted Frae the Vertish Hill’ [WIL].

fliiten (fliitin) pp., arch. scolded, chided (past participle of fliye, noted by E.C. Smith).

fliittin (flii-in) n. a house removal, formerly applied to the moving of farm workers at Whitsuntide – ‘. . . the spinning wheel . . . was an indispensible top-piece to the bride’s home-going flittin’ [JAHM], ‘There’s flittings east, there’s flittings west, Their rents are rais’d anew . . .’ [WH], ‘A sei there’s a flittin next door’, ‘At the flit o the brae a flitten was gaun on’ [ECS], float-whey (flo-whā) n., arch. a dish made by boiling whey, particularly from ewe’s milk – ‘Flo’t whaye, a common dish in the pastoral districts of Scotland, formed by boiling the whey after it is expressed from the cheese curds, with a little meal and milk, when a species of very soft curd floats at the top’ [JL].

flocks (*flok*s) n., arch. waste wool or cotton used for stuffing mattresses and furniture – ‘Lift the tyke, that’s filled wi’ flocks . . .’ [IJ].

Flodden (flo-din) n. battle of 9th September 1513, the Scots being led by King James IV, and Henry VIII’s English by Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey. The motivation was to divert some of the English troops away from their French campaign. However, the battle was disastrous for the Scots, with Surrey bringing his forces in behind them, making retreat back to Scotland nearly impossible once things started to go badly. The battle commenced about 4 p.m. and went on into the night. Eventually James was dead, along with 1 archbishop, 4 abbots, 12 earls, 17 lairds, perhaps 400 knights and as many as 10,000 others. Borderers under Huntly and Hume played a significant role and suffered huge losses. Sir William Douglas and most of the Hawick men were also killed. One exception was John Chisholme, who returned with the family pennon, although his brother was killed. In the wake of Flodden the Borders was left with almost no defence against the ravages of Surrey and Dacre – ‘Sons of heroes slain at Flodden! Met to ride and trace our common’ [JH], ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Oden! On the bloody field of Flodden . . .’ [JH], ‘Green Flodden! on thy blood-stain’d head Descend no rain nor vernal dew; But still thou charnel of the dead, May whitening bones they surface strew!’ [JL], ‘. . . I knew I had stayed from Flodden, and I wish that I were dead’ [RSC], ‘When our life looks at its Floddens, where cherished dreams lie low, And big, brave hopes, like burghers dead, are smitten by the foe’ [JYH]. Among the noblemen and land-owners with local connections who were slain at the battle are: William, Lord Borthwick (possibly); Robert, son of Robert Chisholme of that Ilk; George Douglas, Master of Angus; Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig; Robert Elliot of Redheugh; Robert Erskine of Synton, Earl of Mar; John Hay, 2nd Lord Yester; Adam Hepburn, 2nd Earl of Bothwell; Sir David Home of Wedderburn; John Murray of Blackbarony; Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean (possibly); John Scott of Haining; Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley; James Stewart of Traquair; and John Stewart of Minto (perhaps).

Flodden Field (flo-din-feeld) n. site of the Battle of Flodden, west of the River Till, near Branxton (not Flodden), about 6 miles from Coldingham, in Northumberland. Many of those killed were buried at St. Paul’s church in Branxton. A large memorial cross was erected at the battle site in 1910 – ‘At Flodden field our fathers fought it . . .’ [AB], ‘With dauntless hearts, unknown to yield; In slow procession round the pile Of heaving corpses moves each shadowy file, And chaunts in solemn strain the dirge of Flodden field’ [JL], ‘O Flodden Field, O Flodden Field, Ma heart is wae for thee’ [JEDM], ‘To him whose patriot pride is stirred By memories of the past revealed, Though long resigned to fox and bird What spot so sad as Flodden Field! [WHO], ‘From those who fought on Flodden Field we shall not turn away’ [DJ].

Flodden Field (flo-din-field) n. verses written by James Hogg in 1819, along with the song ‘the Colour’, both having the identical ‘Teribus’ chorus. ‘Flodden Field’ consists of 15 verses about the Battle of Flodden, and it thus effectively forms the first part of the Hornshole-inspired song. However, it has been seldom sung, in comparison to the familiar ‘Teribus’. The first edition was published in Kelso, and the 2nd by Robert Armstrong in 1824, with several changes. The 3rd was also printed by Armstrong in 1829, but does not bear Hogg’s name, while the 4th was printed by John Elder in 1836, and another by Kennedy’s in 1837, the last before Hogg’s death. The first 3 editions are all quite rare, and there may be no existing copy of the 1st. The song was revived for the 2013 Flodden quincentenary, sung by Michael Aitken.

the Flodden Memorial (thu-flo-din-me-moe-re-ul) n. memorial on Flodden Field, erected in 1910. The Flodden Memorial Committee, representing both sides of the Border, was chaired by Sir George Douglas. The monument consists of a celtic cross of grey Aberdeen granite, 12 feet 6 inches high on a rough-hewn granite and concrete cairn. The inscription reads simply ‘Flodden 1513. To the brave of both nations. Erected 1910’. It is located on Piper’s Hill near Branxton.

floer (floor) n. a flower – ‘And they may tell o’ valleys fair Bedeck’d wi’ gorgeous flo’ers’ [JEDM], ‘Gie me the heather floer . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘But ye canna see a’ that list o flo’ers on the photograph, says I’ [DH], ‘. . . For he’ll find naeither sae leal and true As the floer o aa the glen’ [WL], ‘On Flodden’s field oor flo’ers they died . . . ’ [IWS], v. to flower, arch. to sew trimming into muslin or other cloth (also spelled ‘flo’er’, ‘floor’ and ‘flouer’).

floored (flo-urd) adj., arch. scabby, losing wool (of sheep) – ‘Flower’d, flour’d, adj. A term applied to sheep, when they begin to become scabby, and to lose their wool, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

The Flooers o the Forest (thu-floo-urz-oo-thu-fo-rist, -flow-) n. ancient song whose words exist in 3 separate versions, written by Mrs. Patrick Cockburn (Alison Rutherford), Jean Elliot (of Minto) and Mrs. John Hunter. The tune is recorded in the early 17th century and may not originally have had words. It is also unclear whether the song originally had a connection with the battle of Flodden. Jean Elliot’s version of the words made the song a lament for the death of James IV and other Scotsmen at Flodden. It was published anonymously, and only identified with Elliot later. In Selkirk this version is known as ‘the Liltin’, and the tune is played after the Casting of the Colours. Alison Cockburn’s lyrics appear to be about a financial crisis, and were probably written earlier than Elliot’s (although not published until 1765). The song was immensely popular in the 19th century, being regularly sung in Hawick at the Colour Bussing and similar events. The tune is played internationally at funerals and remembrance ceremonies, where it is often referred to simply as ‘the Lament’ – ‘I’ve heard the liiting, at the yowe-milking, Lasses a-liiting before dawn o’ day: But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning: ‘The Flowers of the Forest are a’ weede away’” [T].

the Flooer o Yarrow (thu-floor-oo-yaw-rh, -flow-) n. nickname for Mary Scott, popularised in a ballad of the same name. She was from Dryhope Tower and married Walter Scott of Harden about 1576. She was mother of 6 sons and at least 4 daughters. It is also said that she raised another boy who was found in the spoil from a Cumberland raid (like ‘Whaup o the Rede), and grew to be a poet, composing some of the Border ballads – ‘Tis Yarrow’s fairest flower, who through the gloom Looks wistful for her lover’s dancing plume’ [JL], ‘. . . Among them aa there was none to narrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Flooer o Yarrow’’ [WL].

floery (floo-ree, floo-oo-ree) adj. flowery – ‘And yonder is the Lover’s Lane And Lynnwood’s flo’ry braes’ [GD], ‘Fornent iz, athort the fer seide o Teiot’s flooery vale . . . ’ [ECS], ‘Now a’ain no yin for floorey talk, Or prone ti airs n’ graces. A’ll no pretend ti suffer fools, A’ say it ti their faces’ [IHS/GoM].

floery (flooo-ree) n., arch. the ace of spades – ‘Flowerie, fleurie, s. The ace of spades, Teviotd.; perhaps from the ornaments which appear on this card’ [JoJ].

floorish (flo-ree-sh) v. to flourish, blossom, n. a flourish, blossom, particularly of the apple or hawthorn – ‘...the praisic scents o field an foggeege, fluoreesh an floorer!’ [ECS] (also written ‘flureesh').

Floors (florz??) n. former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish on what became the B6357, between Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Floors Castle (florz-kaw-sul) n. castle near Kelso, built by John, 1st Duke of Roxburgh, between 1718 and 1740. It was designed by William Adam, and extended around 1839 by William Playfair. It is the home of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburgh, and the largest inhabited house in Scotland. It includes collections of art, porcelain, taxidermy and tapestries. James II was killed here when a cannon exploded in 1460, and it was ‘Greystoke’ in the Tarzan film of 1984. The entire estate is enclosed by a continuous high wall, with a few lodge houses, and contains terraced woodland and open parkland (also formerly ‘Fleurs'; a few lodge houses, and contains terraced woodland and open parkland (also formerly ‘Fleurs'; the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘floor’ or ‘ground’ and first appears as ‘le fluris' in 1516).

floory docken (floo-ree-do-kin) n. arch. goosefoot, Chenopodium Bonus Henricus or Chenopodium album (named for the apparently powdery leaves).

Florence (flo-rin) n. (d.1210) nobleman and cleric, known as ‘Florentius', he was son of the Count of Holland, and also nephew of both King Malcolm IV and William I. He became Bishop of Glasgow in 1202, but resigned in 1207 before he was consecrated. He was also Chancellor of Scotland. He died in Zeeland. His seal bore the figure of a young man seated at a lectern with a book, with a rod of office in one hand, and the words ‘SIGIL. FLOREN'TH GLAS|GUEN|

Florida (flo-ri-da) n. farm in Liddesdale, situated just before Old Castleton on the B6357. Between the house and the river lies an earthwork, possibly a homestead of mediæval date, which lies partially in woods and has been partly eroded by the river. The old house of Dykeraw lay somewhere to the east in what is now forest. John Turnbull and family were there in at least 1840-68. William Hislop was there in 1841 and John Scott and his family in 1851.

Floss Burn (floss-burn) n. stream joining the Leap Burn to form the Lang Burn near Langburnshields, which then becomes the Slitrig. It is joined by Kiln Sike below Robert's Linn and had several other waterfalls on burns that join it from the east. It marks the start (or end) of the Catrail ('floss' is an old Scots word for boggy ground).

Fodderlee (fo-dur-lee) n. farms and general area on the east side of the Rule valley between Hallrule and Billerwell. David Shiel was tenant there in 1567. The lands there were acquired by Adam French from Jedburgh Abbey in 1569 and were split into the East and West farms in the 17th century. In 1643 Helen Turnbull held lands there valued at £80 and James Turnbull £180. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the land tax on £100 was paid by Mark Turnbull and on £80 by ‘the widow in fotherlie’. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Kerr of Fodderlee was first recorded in 1685, and appears to have owned half of the lands. Mark Turnbull was tenant in the late 1600s. John Turnbull, John Kerr and George Scott were recorded as tenants there in 1694. The east lands passed to Robert Kerr’s daughter Mary (who also married a Kerr) and then grandson Andrew. In 1757 it passed to Robert Thomson, whose mother was Margaret Kerr. Andrew Oliver, ‘Fodderlee-birks’, is recorded in 1784. ‘Fodderlee, Fodderlee-bank head, and Fodderlee-birks’ are recorded in 1795 as parts of Hobkirk that are closer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk; these same lands were among those moved to Hobkirk when Abbotrule was suppressed. James Davidson was tenant there in 1797. The modern map shows Old Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee, this last being closest to where the Fodderlee Burn joins the Rule Water. A report in 1836 describes how a cairn was removed near there ‘near to a place where tradition says a battle had been fought’ (it is ‘Fodderlie’ in 1567, ‘Foderly’ in 1587 and 1588, ‘Fodderlie’ in 1643, ‘Fotherlie’ 1670, ‘fetherlie’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Foderlae’ in 1680, ‘Fotherlie’ in 1690, 1694 and 1707 and ‘Fatherlie’ in 1797; it is marked as just ‘Fodderlie’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaen’s 1654 map; also written Fotherlie, see also Auld Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee).

Fodderlee-birks (fo-dur-lee-birks) n. former farm near Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map near the site of the present Wester Fodderlee. Andrew Oliver was recorded there in 1784.

Fodderlee Burn (fo-dur-lee-burn) n. stream flowing into the Rule Water from the south, past Abbotrule. A memorial plaque by the road marks the site of the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between a large English raiding party and some local forces in 1513 (also spelled ‘Fodderlie’ etc.; the origin is probably simply ‘the fodder meadow’).

fog (fog) n., arch. moss, particularly as used for thatching or for packing between slates – ‘Item for leading the slates . . . Item for fogg gathering and carrying’ [PR1713], ‘. . . shall not be allowed either fog or fuel, neither to cast, win, or lead peats, turfs, or divots, or lead clay or mortar out of the Common . . . ’ [ JW1719]. The fog or moss, which grows on the edge of the spring, and is sprinkled with the water, is about eight inches high’ [RAB] (also written ‘fogg’).

foggage (fo-gee) n., arch. winter grazing, the second growth after the hay has been cut – ‘They are supported during the winter by the foggage and coarse hay . . . ’ [RAB], ‘. . . then the lambs were put to the charge of the Town Herd of Hawick . . . and continued on the muir until the stubble foggage’ [C&L1767], ‘. . . a body can find the praicious scents o’ field an foggage’ [ECS] (also ‘fogg’).

fold (fold) adj., arch. made of turf, earthen – ‘. . . there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fewick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless’ [C&L1767] (probably an anglicised version of fail).

Folepuil (föl-pul) n. former lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and listed under the ‘Forest’ section. They are valued at 40 pence. Their location is unknown (this could be a transcription error, although it is unclear for what). It could be the same place listed as ‘Fopillis’ in the 1541 roll, when it was valued at 2 shillings, but vacant. It was possibly related to Fawhope Knowe.

folk (fök) n. people, mankind, inhabitants, one’s family – ‘Some folk think a’ other folk gowks . . . ’ [FL], ‘Ee canna pass keind – it belangs eer foak, man!’ [ECS], ‘. . . an griffin auld folk an barns, baith’ [ECS]. The population in 1851 was about 9000. Hawick’s present population is around 16,000, and the recorded peak was in 1891, with a total of 19,204 people – ‘But I like auld Hawick, and her folks I like, Her men and maidens free’ [FH], ‘Hear me, ye Folk o’ Teviotdale, I’m here ti tell nae flatterin’ tale’ [WP] (sometimes written ‘foak’; cf. the older fouk and the poetic foak).

Foomie Broon (foon-ce-broon) n. proprietor of a general store at the corner of Wilton Path and Wellington Streetin the early-to-mid 20th century. It was well known for being a place where everything from a haircut to a gramophone record could be purchased (including mouldy sweets, hence the name). The shop window also contained hand-written epithets such as ‘you are doomed’ and ‘the end of the world is at hand’
– ‘It’s an awfu’ lot mair than fifty year But aw’ll never forget ‘Foosty Broon’’ [AY].

foosty see foostie

foot an mouth (foot-an-mowth) n. an acute, highly contagious viral disease of cloven-hoofed animals, which caused a major agricultural disaster in Britain in 1967 and even worse one in 2001.
This led to the cancellation of the Common Riding that year, although about 400 people walked round the Common in November, led by the previous year’s Cornet (note that ‘fit an mooth’ is rarely used).

to the touch (also foozy).

Fopillis (fo-pilz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed on the 1541 rental roll. The entry comes between Howden and Dawson, suggesting the location is in the upper part of the valley. The lands were valued at 2 shillings and were vacant at that time. It is possible this is the same as ‘Folepul’ listed on the c.1376 rental roll and possibly related to Fawhope Knowe.

Forbes (fürbz) n. Archibald (19th/20th C.) son of John, he took over the running of the nurseries business in 1909 and was also President of the Hawick Horticultural Society. Sir Arthur (1623–95) 1st Earl of Granard, son of Sir Arthur of Castle Forbes in Ireland. He commanded a Royalist Scottish force in the 1650s. In December 1653 he came down from the north with 80–100 men and with Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto as prisoner, and stopped at Borthwickbrae. Pursued by an English Commonwealth force, they were easy to follow in the snow and there was a skirmish at Philip in the upper Borthwick valley. The English were victorious, but Forbes managed to escape, apparently recuperating in a cottage near Glasgow. He later fought for the loyalist cause in the north in 1654, and was captured at Glenlyon. He returned to Ireland, was made Earl and joined the cause of William III. He is buried in Sligo. John (1841/2–1909) proprietor of the Buccleuch Nurseries on Slitrig Crescent. Born in Aberfeldy, Perthshire, he came to Hawick in 1867 as gardener at Wilton Lodge for David Pringle, later becoming tenant of the gardens. He started up his own business in 1870 at the Dovemount Nurseries, then after about ten years moved into larger premises on Slitrig Crescent, the land granted by the Duke of Buccleuch. Named the Buccleuch Nurseries, they became famous throughout Britain, and were a prominent sight from the railway. The gardens received a royal warrant and the name was changed to the Royal Nurseries in 1907. It then became a private limited company in 1908. He won many awards for his floral displays. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 3 years, and long involved with the running of St. Andrew’s Church. Lillias Magdalen nee Scott (1918–2013) daughter of composer Francis George Scott, she was born in Glasgow. She was known as a singer, and published poetry over about a 75 year period, some of it in Scots. An autobiographical collection, ‘View from the Bench: My Life in Poetry’, appeared in 2011. She firstly married composer Erik Chisholm, and after his death married clarinettist John Forbes.

Forbes’ Nursery (förbz-nur-sur-ee, förb-zeez-nur-sur-ee) n. another name for the Buccleuch Nurseries.
Fordyce (for-dis) n. Elizabeth Fordyce ‘Lizzie’ (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at the corner of Trinity Street and Earl Street in the mid-20th century. Rev. Robert (1836–93) born in Unst in the Shetland Isles. He studied at Edinburgh University, after working in business and saving so he could study. Licensed in 1868, he served as a probationer at several places before coming to Hawick in 1872, as second minister of West Port Free Church; he served until his death. He also helped fill the vacancy at St. George’s 1879–80. In 1874 he married Mary, daughter of blacksmith Thomas Ker and she died in Edinburgh in 1901. Their children were: Mary Ker (b.1875); Bruce (1876–82); Margaret Suneva (1878–1966), who died in Worthing; Euphemia Ker (1882–1969), also died in Worthing; and Thomas Ker (b.1884).

forebree (for-bree) n., poet. forehead, temple – ‘…thy forebrees ar like ane piece o’ ane pumgranate withyn thy loks’ [HSR].

fore-breist (for-brest) n., arch. the front of anything, particularly the front row of the gallery in a church (noted by E.C. Smith; also front-breist).

fore-end (for-end) n., arch. first part, front portion, opposite of back-end – ‘…ane hundreth ponds Scotts out of the fore-end of the eighteinpences gathered for the militia money in 1685 …’ [BR1685], ‘…and that of the forend of the stent imposed upon the town for that and other ends’ [BR1701] (also written ‘fore end’).

foregain (for-gain) prep., poet. against – ‘Take my advice, forgain the bluebag gentry, Thae hangie cravers o’ thy crispie bounty’ [JoHa].

foremaist (for-mäst) adj., adv., arch. foremost, first, highest ranked, most importantly – ‘…But Paiterson’s meir she came foremaist’ [JP].

Foreman see Forman

forenamit (for-nä-mit) pp., arch. forenamed, previously mentioned – ‘Witnesses to the subscription of ye fornamit persones valuors of the said lands …’ [PR1627], ‘…in exerceing the said office to my vtheres forrnameit freindes and overseeres …’ [SB1633] (there are spelling variants).

forenicht (for-nicht) n., poet. evening, time between twilight and bed-time – ‘Sae it seemed that the least the lad could dae Was to lift a wheen kye in the forenicht gray’ [WL].

forenin (for-nin) n. morning, forenoon, period between dawn and noon, or sometimes more specifically the late morning – ‘what er ee daein this forenin?, ‘…so he was in a bad tuin a’ foremien’ [DH] (also written ‘foremien’; often distinguished from mornin, which is earlier).

forepairt (for-pär) n., arch. the earlier portion of a period of time (noted by E.C. Smith). the Foreraw see the Fore Raw the Fore Raw (thu-for-raw) n. row of pended tenements that stood on the south-east side (i.e. left hand side on the way up the hilly) of what is now Drumlanrig Square. The entrance to William Lockie’s Mill was there. It also once held the Teribus Arms and the West-end Mission (it is ‘Front row’ in Pigot’s 1837 directory; presumably it was ‘Fore’ relative to St. Mary’s Kirk, with the Back Row being further away).

Fore Raw (for-raw) n. Fore Row, name used for a row of houses in Wilton Dean on the 1841 census. By 1851 it was known as ‘Front Row’, and was numbered from 1 to 6. This referred to a block of houses on the north side of the Dean Road, where it meets the Overhall Road. The name distinguished it from Burn Row, which was
lower down, and Upper Row, which was up the small track above the green. The names were probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

foresait (för-sä’t) n., arch. the front seating area, front part of a pew or gallery ‘...anent ye precedence in ye samen in ye foresait of ye loft att the head thereof’ [PR1715].

Forest (fo-rist) n., arch. a preserve, a tract of land, often bare and hilly, upon which deer were traditionally hunted ‘...‘Trees’, retorted the gillie; ‘wha ever heard o’ trees in a forest?’’ [RB] (note, the former use of this word did not imply trees!).

Forest (fo-rist) n. Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick woman who ran an inn in the late 1600s and early 1700s. She was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. She was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1702 she was fined for allowing people to be drinking in her house after 10 o’clock at night. Her name is written ‘Jeane Forrest’ and ‘Jane Forrest’.

forestair (för-stär) n., arch. an outside staircase at the front of a building - A conspicuous feature of many of the dwellings was the ‘out’ or ‘forestairs’ projecting onto the streets’ [V&M]. Many of the examples on the High Street were removed around 1781 when the streets were paved, and more were removed by order of the road trustees, with the Council paying more than £50 to have the work done. One of last sets in Hawick was removed in 1884 when the old Town Hall was demolished. Perhaps the last example is in St. Mary’s Place - ‘Paid expense of fore stairs, taken away by order of trustees, 55 18 l’ [BR1792] (also ootstair).

forestall (för-stawl) v., arch. to buy goods before they reach market in order to resell them at a higher price – ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bolis of beir from the Lady Newtoune, and ane from Gladstanes’ [1699], ‘Four Hawick fishers are fined £40 Scots each for forestalling the sheep market, by buying of sheep and lambs, and instantly, for gain, reselling them to the butchers of Jedburgh’ [BR1700].

foresailer (för-staw-lur) n., arch. someone who profits by buying up goods before they get to market in order to increase the price and resell them – ‘Various persons are fined ‘for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers’ [JW1699].

the Forest Club (thu-fo-rist-klub) n. dining and coursing club, based around Selkirk, also sometimes known as the ‘Ettrick Forest Club’. It was established in 1788 by 13 lairds of the Ettrick Forest, modelled on similar clubs in Edinburgh. Members met once a month (outside winter) in the County Hotel, Selkirk. Coursing was introduced in 1794 and lasted for 60 years. Sir Walter Scott (of Abbotsford) was a member. Michaela Reid wrote a history of the club in 2000.

Forester (fo-rees-tur) n. Alan (16th C.) tenant of ‘Syskett’ in 1514. This was probably in the far south of Roxburghshire and he was probably related to the Foresters who possessed neighbouring lands. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Ryleknowe, near the southern tip of Roxburghshire. Probably the same Andrew was also tenant of ‘Avirholme’ along with Lancelot. He was probably related to Simon, who was tenant of the nearby Burnfoot. Henry (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1788-94 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1510 list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes. His name appears as ‘Forestare’. In 1515/6 he was recorded in another remission to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and others, where he is listed as ‘in Grenehauce’. This could be Greenhaugh in Northumberland, but seems more likely to be Greena in Liddesdale. In 1516 he was also part of the remission given to William Elliot of Larriston and his associates. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Glasgow 1409-14 and is recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418. John (16th C.) record in 1532 as ‘Johny Forestare’. He is listed along with Sym (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Shake Buckler’ (16th C.) listed among the Liddesdale men denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is givn as ‘John Forrestare, called Schaiik-buklar’. His servant Ninian Gray is also listed, so he must have been a man of fair substance. John (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Greenhaughshaw. It seems reasonable to assume he was related to James in Greenhaugh (his son perhaps), and that he was related to the tenants of nearby farms with the same surname, namely the Foresters

Alan, Andrew, Lancelot, Simon and William. John (17th C.) resident at Hudhousie in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Stanegearthside (17th/18th C.) nephew of Nicholas, from whom he inherited ‘Greina, Purriven and Burnmemouth’ in Liddesdale in 1693. Lancelot (16th C.) joint tenant of ‘Avrholme’, along with Andrew, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert of Stanegearthside (d.1598) buried at Stapeldordon Church in Cumbria. He may be the Forster of Stanegearthside who killed William Armstrong near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Symme Forestar’. He is listed along with Johnnie (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Ellots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalglish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1450. He could have been from the Torwood or perhaps Corystone branches of that family. He resigned Cavers in 1467, with the Pope issuing an edict for the appointment of the new priest, previous appointments (including presumably his) being made by the monks of Melrose. William (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Bennetholm. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (16th C.) tenant of Burnfoot (on the Tinnis Water) in southern Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (16th C.) joint tenant of ‘Avrholme’, along with Andrew, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1450. He could have been from the Torwood or perhaps Corystone branches of that family. the Foresters (tho-fo-reez-turz) n. a mutual aid society, once very active in Hawick. The Ancient Order of Foresters has its origins in the 18th century, and was established in its modern form in 1834. The Hawick Foresters’ court was once very important as a form of insurance for workmen. The organisation used to turn out in local parades. The Roll of Honour of local members who fell in the wars was formerly in Orrock Church Halls and is now in the Museum.

the Foresters’ Hall (tho-fo-reez-turz-hal) n. hall on O’Connell Street, run by the Hawick branch of the Foresters, occupying the lower floor beneath the British Legion, formerly being part of Johnstone’s tea rooms. It was used for dance lessons, prayer meetings and other social functions, and closed around 1992.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. farm south of Hobkirk, near where the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns meet to form the Rule Water, on the west side of the bridge. It was also formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. There was once a blacksmith’s there, and in the 17th century there was an inn at this location, in use until the early 19th century; its remains lie among trees on the east side of the bridge, near the entrance lodge to Wolfelee. It was formerly on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle, until the new road was built via Bonchester Bridge in about the 1820s; this was also part of a drove road. There was also a local police station there in the latter part of the 19th century. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Stonedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. Walter Amos was wright there in the late 18th century (also called ‘the Forkins’ and sometimes written ‘Forkings’; it was ‘Forkens’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is probably from the division in the river, rather than the road, but there are no early records of the name).

the Forkins (tha-for-kinz) n. name used for the area where the Hermitage Water meets the Liddel Water in Liddesdale.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. former farmstead in the upper Borthwick valley. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, near where the Howpawley Burn joins, close to where the modern turns towards Craik.

forlane (for-län) pp., poet. forgotten, set aside – ‘The Lord redeims the saul o’ his servants; an’ ‘nan e’ thame that trust in him sail be forlaine’ [HSR].

Forman (for-min) n. Sir John of Davine (d.bef. 1516) son of Nicholas. His brother Andrew held the Archbishopric and Primacy of Scotland, and was said to be one of the instigators for the Battle of Flodden. In 1502 he and his brother were granted the ward of the lands of Rutherford by James IV and he was one of the ‘tutors’ appointed to Helen, heiress of Rutherford. He was Sergeant Porter to James IV, and was knighted in 1503. In fact he married Helen Rutherford, who inherited the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston after the death of her brother Richard. Along with his wife, he was infefted in these lands by the King in 1505 and 1506. In 1504 he (when referred to as ‘of Ruthirfurde’) was pardoned for being an accessory to the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. The lands of Rutherford, Wells and others were confirmed to him and his wife by James IV in 1511. He was one of the few Scots taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He probably had a daughter who married William Gourlay of Kincaig. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 and 1702 for tailor Walter Riddell (both along with baxter John ‘Weelands’). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Michael Scot. In 1706 he married Margaret ‘Weelands’, who was also from Hawick Parish. and their son John was baptised in 1707. It is recorded in 1711 that the ‘half Ducatoon and twenty shillings Scots piece’ that he ‘pawnded’ to guarantee his marriage had not been claimed and so was given to the poor fund. It is unclear whether this donation was simply the intent, or whether something happened to the couple in the intervening years. They had a son John in 1707.

Nicholas (d.1478/9) succeeded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the death of Patrick Hume in 1478. However, he died within only a few months, before he could be confirmed. Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Patrick (b.1702; Agnes (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were glover John Scott and Patrick Angus. Robert (19th/20th C.). His wife funded the Forman Hall in Roberton, dedicated to his father. Archibald of Huntlaw (who rented Huntlaw to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and Walter Scott of Ancrum, probably relating to a debt or disputed teneint). He was one of the 55 ministers who signed the ‘Liberties of the Kirk’ protest to Parliament in 1617 and gave £20 towards building the library at the University of Glasgow in 1636. In 1626 there is a ‘letter of deliverance’ against him in favour of Thomas Turnbull of Quhitchester to be haldin of the said William ... foroutyn ony langer delay ...

Forman Hall
Rev. Alexander of Huntlaw (d.c.1658) minister at Hassendean. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1603 and was ordained at Kailzie in 1613, then translated to Hassendean later in the same year. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1615 for ‘receiving the gudwife of Sintoun to the communion, notwithstanding he understood she was ane contemner both of her awin min. (Mr Alex. Hog, Ashkirk) and of the Word out of his mouth’ (whether this was an indication of religious dissent or a purely personal matter is unclear). He was one of the 55 ministers who signed the ‘Liberties of the Kirk’ protest to Parliament in 1617 and gave £20 towards building the library at the University of Glasgow in 1636. In 1626 there is a ‘letter of deliverance’ against him in favour of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and Walter Scott of Ancrum, probably relating to a debt or disputed teneint. In 1633 he was owed £333 6s 8d for his stipend in the inventory of the deceased Earl of B Buccleuch, as well as £9 12s for the communion. In 1649 he was ‘invaded with a drawn sword’ by one of his parishioners, Robert Hislop. In 1655 (although this date may be an error) his son was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. He appears to have continued as minister at Hassendean until 1658 and died before 1665, when the Presbytery met to decide what payment was due to his son. He was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), among owners of lands that were then in Hassendean Parish, when he paid for lands valued at £66 13s 4d; this was Huntlaw, which remained with his family for another couple of generations. He married Margaret Clerk and their children included William of Huntlaw, and Alexander, who became minister at Kirkton. In 1665 his son William was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. Archibald of Huntlaw (who rented Huntlaw to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1703) was probably his grandson and Agnes, who married George Minto, was his great-granddaughter.
Rev. Alexander (c.1622–83) son of Alexander, minister at Hassendean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and became minister at Kirkton in 1664. He remained minister there until his death, and sat on the local (Jedburgh Presbytery) at least in 1666. He is recorded in 1665 repaying the money owed by William Forrest (possibly his brother) to Walter Clerk. He paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d for Huntlaw in 1678. His ‘insight and plenishing, with librarie, and ab- ulziments of bodie’ were estimated to be about £200. He married Anna Douglas (d.1681), whose will is recorded in 1682. Their children were: Archibald; Richard; William (became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691); Margaret (married James Mirrielies in Edinburgh in 1702); and Anna. His will is recorded in 1683. James (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as ‘forssett’ (which could feasibly be another surname, such as Forsyth). Julie (1968–) lawn and indoor bowler from Hawick, who took up bowls from a young age, and won the Teviotdale Indoor Ladies Singles 10 times between 1990 and 2007. Outdoors she won the Scottish Triples in 1997, the British Isles Triples in 1998 and the Scottish Pairs in 1998. But she has excelled mostly indoors. She won the Scottish Indoor Pairs in 1992, 1994 and 2008, the Triples in 1993 and 2010, and the Singles in 2001, 2003, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2013, 2019 and 2020. She was also Scottish Masters champion 3 years in a row, 2001–2003, and British Isles Singles champion in 2004, 2010, 2011 and 2019. She represented Scotland in the 1998 Commonwealth Games. She won the Mixed Pairs World Championship in 2002 2003 and 2013 and the World Indoor Singles title in 2004, 2010, 2013 and 2014. She was named Senior Sports Personality of the Year by Roxburgh Sports Council in 2004 and presented with a silver quaich at a special ceremony in the Town Hall the same year. She was also voted Hawick’s Citizen of the Year in 2004. In 2007 she was inducted into the Scottish Borders Hall of Fame and is an Honorary Life Member of the Scottish Indoor Bowling Association. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as being ‘de Foresta’ in 1404 when he witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey. He was licentiate in decrees and Rector of the Parish of Southdean. Walter Torrie ‘Wattie’ (1880–1917) born in Kelso, son of a fishing tackle maker. He was a gifted sportsman, playing rugby and being ambidextrous at cricket. He moved from Kelso R.F.C. to Hawick R.F.C. and was first capped for Scotland along with Hawick’s Willie Kyle in 1903. He was full-back for Scotland for a couple of years until he broke his collar bone in a Hawick versus Gala match. During WWI he served at Gallipoli, was awarded the Military Cross, and was promoted to Major. He died leading his men in an attack during the Second Battle of Gaza. William of Huntlaw (17th C.) son of Rev. Alexander, minister at Hassendean. In 1665 he was served heir to his father’s 10-shilling land of Huntlaw in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded as ‘in Huntlaw’ in a record of 1666 listing landowners in Hassendean Parish (sometimes spelled ‘Fforest’ in earlier records).

Forrester-Paton (fo-ris-tur-pa’in) n. Rev.
Colin (1918–2004) born in Alloa, nephew of Ernest, an Indian missionary. He was educated in Moffat, Norfolk, Oxford University and London University. Ordained by the United Free Presbytery in 1944, he left for missionary work in Ghana. There he was involved with literature and translation, as well as ecumenical work. Both he and his wife became heavily involved in the Christian Council of Ghana. They returned to Britain in 1972 and the following year he became an associate minister in Hawick, connected with Wilton and Burnfoot. He retired in 1983, but was appointed Chaplain to the Queen in 1981 and Extra Chaplain to the Queen in Scotland in 1988. He married Jean Lorimer Crichton Miller in 1943 and they raised 3 children while in Ghana.

forrit-owre (for-‘i-ow-ur) adv., arch. with a forward stoop – ‘Hei walks forrit-owre’ [GW].

forritsome (for-‘i-sum) adj., forward, bold – ‘In fact,’ said he, ‘we’ve a wey o’ dealin’ Wi’ forritsome callants that come here stealin’’’’ [WL].

forsaid (for-sed) pp., adj., arch. aforesaid, previously mentioned – ‘...with power to the said Robert Scott oy and air forsaid, his airis and assignais foirsaidis ...’ [SB1569], ‘The said day the bayleyas forsaid and ton counsell did approve of ane little hand Bell ...’ [BR1694] (also written ‘foresaid’, ‘foirsaid’, etc.).

Forster (for-stur) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 among the men accused by the Countess of Bothwell of raiding her lands at Eilrig. He is described as ‘Andro Forster, callit Craikcrop, banest Englishman’, and was an accomplice of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He could be related to the ‘Andro Forster’ who was recorded in 1541, accused of being involved in raids into England in which men were killed. George (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document relating to the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Like the others, he was probably from Liddesdale. Sir John (d.1602) younger son of Thomas of Adderstone. He became Constable of Bamburgh Castle and later held lands around Alnwick. He was part of an English force that sacked southern Scotland in 1557 and was Warden of the English Middle March by 1559/60. He was Deputy Governor of Berwick and also Deputy Warden of the East Marches in 1563. He escorted Mary Queen of Scots to Berwick. He was also Keeper of Tynedale and Redesdale. He and George Heron of Chipchase supported the Regent Moray on attacks on Liddesdale in 1569. He accompanied Sussex and Hunsdon on the raid into Teviotdale in 1570, when the Hawick folk burned the thatch themselves; he personally led the ‘horsmen too burne the townes and vyllages adjoynynge’ He was the Warden of the Middle March during the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 (with his name being recorded as ‘Sir George Foster’ in the ballad), when he was taken prisoner and held for a few days in Dalkeith. There are several letters from him in 1576 to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale, William Douglas of Bonjedward. He was still English Warden in 1584 when he and Lord Scrope led a raiding force of 7,000 men that invaded Liddesdale, taking the tower at Larriston and capturing 18 prisoners. After harrying the valley, he received a bond of assurance from the chiefs of Liddesdale (who spoke for most of the Elliots, Armstrongs and others). In 1595/6 he got the heads of several families to sign a bond of assurance to try to end the feuds existing between 25 English families and ‘the Ellotes, Armestrongs, Crosers, Nixsons, Nobles, Larences, Hendersons, Batyssons, Sympsons and Lyttles’ in Scotland. It is said that he was challenged by a laird of Rulewater to a jousting match, which took place at the ‘Justin Haugh’; he was badly injured and laid under a bush to recover, this field being known as ‘Foster’s Bush’, He married Jane Radclyffe, heiress of Blanchland. He had several daughters and was succeeded by his (probably illegitimate) son Nicholas. Robert ‘Hob’s Robin’ (16th C.) English fugitive from Bewcastle who fled to the Scottish side. He was described in a letter from Thomas Wharton in 1541, along with Adam, as ‘grete offenders agaynst Inglishmen and Scotishmen’. In 1542 his men burned ‘the Cassilhill, Reyhilles in West Tevedall’, stealing livestock and taking 2 prisoners; this may be one of the nearby Castlehills, although it is unclear where ‘Reyhilles’ may have been. A few days later his men burned ‘Cromokhilles’ in West Teviotdale, which is surely Crumhaughhill. Their father ‘Hob’ was warded in Cockermouth Castle in 1541, but the Captain of Carlisle Castle would not take him. Roland (16th C.) probably a brother of Sir John. He was one of the assistants to the English Warden and served as Captain of Wark Castle. In 1565 he wrote to Bedford, describing the ambush of the Scots by the Elliots at Ewes Doors. He is probably the ‘Rowie Forster’ recorded in 1569, when Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton, Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lanie Armstrong of Whithaugh gave assurances to him ‘that thai sail mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’ (see also Foster).

Forster’s Buss (for-sturz-bus) n. former name for a field between Bonchester Bridge and Bochester Hill, a little above the flat ground once known as ‘Jeistins’-haugh’. The name is said to have been because this is where an Englishman, Forster, was killed in combat.

forsuik (for-sik, -stik) pp., arch. forsook (this was the past tense form, while the past participle was more usually ‘forsaken’).

the Forty Fits  (thu-for-ee-fits) n. popular name for the track leading from Calaburn farm to Whitehaughmoor etc., off the road north of Whitehaugh. A continuation of this road leads towards Shielswood Loch. It is marked ‘drove road’ on the Ordnance Survey map, and may well have been such, although the nearby drove road of which we have a description passed more directly from Whitehaugh to the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The name probably derives from the dykes on either side being about 40 feet apart.

the Forty Thiefs o Redfordgreen  (thu-for-ee-theefz-ô-red-furd-green) n. popular name around the 1830s for a group of ‘faggot voters’ arranged by local Tories to swamp the local elections.

Foulbrae (fowl-brā) n. former name for lands in Roberton Parish. Gavin Dryden was living there in 1723. The location is unknown. Perhaps the same location is where labourer James Hall was living in 1800 when he had a child baptised in Cavers Parish.

Fouledge (fowl-din) n. Matthew (18th C.) in-comer to Hawick around 1733, when he was asked by the Council to produce testimonials from his former residence, Jedburgh. Having failed to produce them by 1738 he was banished from Hawick along with his wife and family. A ‘Matthew Fowlden’ was born at Stobo in Peeblesshire in 1674 and could be related (possibly the same as ‘Fulton’).

Fouledge Park (fowl-din-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1779 (and 1811) ‘Fouledge Park, and one north of it’ was valued at £45 10s 11d.

Fouledge Sike (fowl-din-sık) n. stream that rises near Fouledge runs past Alderybar and joins the Southdean Burn, to run into the Northhouse Burn and then the Teviot (G. Watson suggests that the name is ‘foul leche’, meaning ‘smelly ditch’).

Foulshiels (fowl-shīls) n. high ground on the Border, roughly between Saugh-tree and Kielder. It reaches a height of 396 m, is the site of a triangulation pillar, and is the source of the Larriston Burn.

Foul Mooth (fowl-mooth) n. nickname for Robert Robson.

the Foul Raid (thu-fowl-rād) n. popular name for the failed attempt by a Scots army under Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, to take Roxburgh and Berwick from the English in 1416. Hearing of a large English force, the Scots retreated ignominiously. In retaliation the English army attacked Teviotdale and Liddesdale, including the burning of Hawick, Jedburgh and Selkirk.

Foulshiels (fowl-shīls) n. former hamlet west of Selkirk along the Yarrow, opposite Newark Castle. It was once a seat of the Scotts, and now a farm. Mungo Park was born here in 1771. An ornamental piece of grate found in the ruins there was donated to the Museum in 1900 (it is ‘Foulshiel’s’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Foulsheils’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Foulshiels (fowl-shīls) n. farm about 2 miles north of Newcastle, to the right off the B6399, above Redheugh. A bridle path once connected this with the upper Hermitage valley, via Harstgarth Fell and Twislehope. It was formerly split into Nether and Over Foulshiels. South of the farmstead, on a terrace on the slopes of Foulshiels Rig are the remains of a settlement. And on a ridge just to the west is another ruined building, along with field-banks, and extensive boundary banks and signs of cultivation along the Well Sike. About 470 yards (420 m) north of the present farmstead is the probably site of the tower-house.

settled there and complained in about 1620 that about 100 Elliots had raided the farm, removing all the hay and fodder. Hob Foster was associated with the farm there in 1623 when he was farm was owned by the Bishop of Caithness in 1632. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1694.

was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1729 acres and was bounded by Roan, Tarra, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote and the Hermitage Water. James Elliot was shepherd there in 1835 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘ful’

the Fountain (thu-fown’-in, -foon’-in) n. ornamental fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, in front of the Museum. It was installed as a result of
1896 and erected in the following year. Unlike the Brown Fountain and the MacNee Fountain, it does not usually have the name ‘Davidson’ attached to it, but is commonly referred to as simply ‘the Fountain’. The main cast-iron part of the fountain came from McDowell, Steven & Co., Milton Ironworks in Glasgow. It was painted silver through most of the 20th century and has decorations including dolphins and turtles. During renovations it was discovered that the original colour
was probably blue and gold, and it was returned to this condition in 2018.

vey map), with 2 enclosures, remains of a farmstead, boundary dykes and ‘lazy-beds’. The tower is about 12 m by 8.5 m and has been robbed of stone. Its location is probably the ‘Foulschelmoore’ in a rental record of 1541 and possibly the Nether Foulshiels mapped by Pont. In 1541 it was valued at 6 shillings and at that time the lease was vacant. ‘Johne Forster, younger’ is recorded as proprietor in 1581, William Foster in 1584 and Gib Foster in 1590. Archibald Elliot was harmful effects on the residents (mentioned by Tancred, it is also written ‘the Ffoull Well’).

Foulwud (fowl-wud) n. Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376.
‘Foulwod superior’ and ‘Foulwod inferior’ were both valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Ovir Foulwod’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and ‘Nethir Foulwod’ to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). The lands of ‘Fowlwoodis’ are also listed separately, but with no additional information. ‘Foulwoodles’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and ‘Fawhead alias Foulwod’ among possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Nether Foulwood became the modern Gillside. The stream to the west is Foulwood Sike (it is marked on Blaue’s c.1654 map; ‘Ouerfoulwod’ and ‘Netherfoulwood’ are recorded in 1541).

Foulwud Sike (fowl-wud-sik) n. Foulwood Sike, stream in southern Liddesdale, rising on Sufficient Hill and running roughly eastwards to join the Liddel near Gillside.

foumart (fow-mar’) n., poet. the pole-cat, Mustela putorius – ‘The waizle dunne frae the auld grey cairn, The theiffe foumart came nighe’ [JTe], an offensive person or object – ‘...in case it had played the foumart wi him durin’ the forenoon ...’ [DH] (also written ‘foumart’).

[Wl] (also spelled ‘foonert’; cf. foondert).

the Fountain (thu-fown’-in, -foon’-in) n. ornamental fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, in front
1896 and erected in the following year. Unlike the Brown Fountain and the MacNee Fountain,
it does not usually have the name ‘Davidson’ attached to it, but is commonly referred to as simply ‘the Fountain’. The main cast-iron part of the fountain came from McDowell, Steven & Co., Milton Ironworks in Glasgow. It was painted silver
through most of the 20th century and has decorations including dolphins and turtles. During renovations it was discovered that the original colour
was probably blue and gold, and it was returned
to this condition in 2018.

Fountainhall (fown’-in-hal) n. village on the A7 towards Edinburgh and former station on the Waverley Line, at the junction with the Lauder Light Railway.

the Fountainheid (thu-fown’-in-heed) n. former name for an area near the Vertish, perhaps related to the spring there.
Fountainhead Plantin

Fountainhead Plantin (fown)-in-heed-plawn-in) n. wood at the Vertish, across from Woodend cottage.

fousome (fow-sum) adj., poet. having fullness, well-supplied – ‘To end this jargonaic clatter, An’ mak’ it somewhat fousome matter …’[JoHa].

tout (fowt) n., arch. a spoilt child, especially a fussy one – ‘Mam’s-fout, a spoiled child, Teviotd.’[JoJ], ‘A mammie’s or mother’s fout’[GW].

foutsome (fowt-sum) adj., arch. forward, interfering, officious – ‘A foutsome little brat’[GW] (noted by J. Jamieson).

Fouty Sike (fow-tee-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, running westwards to join the Liddel near the cottage of Clerkleap. The wood near its foot is known as Foutysike Wood and is shown as old trees on both sides of the stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties.

fow (fow) adj., arch. full, sated – ‘And O, my friend! wi’ me he’ll share a heart, As fow o’ kindness, as its free o’ art’[CPM], ‘…for it’s ill speakin’ atween a fow man and a fastin’[ECS] (Scottish proverb), ‘An what A’d ti haud-sae, A Wasna boass, { if the truith be telld, A fowteer (fow-ur-teen) n. fourteen, arch. a fourteen-shilling piece – ‘There was left in a bag within the box …, ane old fourteen, two seven shilling pieces, two old three shilling pieces …’[PR1712] (used only sparingly compared with ‘fourteen’; see also fourteen).

fowie (fow-ee) adj., arch. comfortably independent – ‘Possessing a comfortable independence, Roxb. It is never used like Bene, as a term of respect; but always in such connection as to suggest a different idea; as ‘He’s a fowie body’, expl. as equivalent to ‘an old hunks’. It is derived from Fow, full’[JoJ].

Fowler (fow-hur) n. Auntie (d.1781) recorded in Hawick’s death records as ‘old Auntie Fowler’. It is unclear what her full name might have been. Isobel (17th C.) listed at Slacks among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Her surname is recorded as ‘fouller’. John (d.1795) tailor in Hawick, son of Robert. He died in Hawick. John, F.E.I.S. (b.1844) taught in Hawick for more than 40 years. Born in Ross-shire, he came to Hawick as Headmaster at the West Port Free Church School, transferring to Drumlanrig in 1872. Probably the same Fowler, of Longview, made a sketch of the ‘Chamberlain’s Hoose’ about 1870. He married Elizabeth Sinton in 1872 and she died in 1920. Their children included William, Elizabeth, Robert, Annie, John, Margaret (a teacher in Kerikeri, New Zealand), James and George (who may have married Margaret Hamilton and moved to Brooks, Alberta). John (19th C.) first Secretary of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1652), Helen (b.1654) and an unnamed child (b.1655). The witnesses in 1652 were William (surely a relative) and Hector Paisley. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Fouller’ when he was paid to be Hawick’s Town Piper in 1721. He probably took over from James Oliver and continued until about 1732. His name may also have been written ‘Fouler’. Perhaps the same Robert ‘in Sea Croft’ married Margaret Elliot and had children Elizabeth (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1745); the witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Cavers and shoemaker John Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) forester to the Duke of Buccleuch at least in the period 1798–1807. He worked at Hassendean Common and probably elsewhere.

Thomas (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of John Langlands of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Walter (17th C.) named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hassendean (officially Roberton Parish) in 1683 for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull. Rev. William (c.1560–1612) poet and scholar who was Parson of Hawick in the reign of King James VI. He was son of William, a merchant of Edinburgh, with his mother possibly being Janet Fokart. His sister Anne married Sir John Drummond. He graduated from St. Leonard’s College, St. Andrews in 1573/4 and received his M.A. in 1578. He then studied in Europe, but apparently suffered at the hands of some Catholic Scotsmen and returned to Britain, acting as a spy to the Duke of Lennox in London in 1583–84. He was appointed Rector of Hawick in 1585, being presented by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He apparently received 2/3 of the salary, while the Reader (and actual minister), William Auchmowtie received the other 1/3. In 1587/8 he assigned the ‘tack’ of Hawick Kirk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for 5 years. He was still described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ when he was witness to a 1595 land document of Walter Scott of Branxholme. And later in 1595 when he witnessed another document of Sir Walter’s, he is described as ‘secretary to the Queen’. He accompanied Sir Peter Young to Denmark in 1589 to take part in the negotiations of the marriage of James VI with the Princess Anne. He became Master of Requests and Secretary-Depute to Queen Anne in 1589, and later her Secretary. He must have been at Holyroodhouse during much of this time; there is no reason to believe he ever visited Hawick, and he probably ceased to be Rector in 1601. However, there are papers of the period 1602–07 relating to an action with the feuars and others over payment of the Parish teinds. In 1606 he gave a feu charter to Walter, son of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, for the Kirklands of Hawick, except for the Manse and Glebe. And in 1608 he is still described as ‘parson of Hawick’ in a ‘tack’ whereby Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank received the teinds of Hawick Kirk. In 1603 he accompanied the Queen to London and never returned. He was apparently known as a great anagram maker. He wrote ‘An Answer to the Calumnious Letter and Erroneous Propositions of an Apostat named M. Jo. Hammiltoun’ (1581), dedicated to Francis, Earl of Bothwell, as well as a commendatory sonnet for James VI’s ‘Essayes of A Prentise’ (1584). His better known poetic works were published posthumously by his nephew, the poet William Drummond of Hawthornden, namely ‘The Tarantula of Love’ and a translation of Patrarch’s ‘Triumphs of the most famous Poet, Mr. Francis Petrakre, translated out of Italian into English’ (published 1587), he refers to himself as ‘P. of Hauicke’. Several other pieces exist in manuscript form, including an almost complete translation of Machiavelli’s ‘Prince’, as well as some unfinished verses, anagrams and scrolls of official letters in French, Italian and Latin. Some of these manuscripts are still in Edinburgh University library. He married (although his wife’s name is unknown) and had 4 surviving children, with his eldest son, Ludovic being recorded as portioner of Restalrig. After his death he was succeeded as minister of Hawick by Thomas Abernethy. William (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for Robert in Hawick in 1652. William (18th Fowlerawe (fowlur-raw) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Wenerston’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Fowlerslands (fowlurz-lawnds) n. former place name in Cavers, probably near Denholm. There was a confirming charter for these lands ‘in Dennum’ to Thomas Cranston in about 1380. It was among the lands held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in 1458/9. It was referred to in 1483 as ‘Foulersland’ in 1512, as well as part of Denholm Mains. It was listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. It was regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512 (where it is referred to as being ‘near the town of Dennom’), and listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10. In 1636 it was referred to as ‘the land called the foul-leris lands’ when passed from John, Lord Cranston to his nephew William Cranston. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was then described as lands in Denholm (it is ‘Foullerysland’ in c.1380, ‘Fowlaris landis’ in 1458/9, ‘Fowlaris lands’ in 1511, ‘Fowlersland’ in 1512, ‘Foullars lands’ in 1574 and ‘Foxterleaves’ in 1687 and ‘Foullerlands’ in 1698).

Fowlertoun (fowlur-toun) n. Alexander (d.c.1423) cleric who was a servant of the captive James I. He held some rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, probably in succession to John Lyon. His surname is written ‘de Fouler-toun’.

Fowls (fowlz) n. Rev. David (17th C.) presented to Bedrule Parish by Lord Stewart of Traquair in 1633 and ordained there the same year. However, he was translated to Oxnam (probably a more valuable living) in 1634. He was deposed in 1639 for contempt of the Acts of the General Assembly. He thereafter lived in England, abandoning his 7 children. But in 1662 he petitioned Parliament along with his son John, claiming he had been deprived simply for refusing to sign the Covenant, and was then given a stipend. He appears to have spent much of the intervening time in England and was described being in Paddington, Middlesex in 1663. He married and had 7 children, including James (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648) and John. James (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott (also written ‘Foulis’ and other variants).

sic a fraith o’ scab As ca’d halt to my feet’[DH].

Fraoner (frä-tur) n. John (17th C.) married Bessie (or Isobel) Wood in Ashkirk Parish in 1646.
Their children included: Robert (b.1650); James (b.1652); William (b.1655); and John (b.1659).
Probably the same John witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1652 for Robert Brown and another in 1656 for George Tait. John (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (17th C.) resident of ‘ye wood’ in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was listed right after the householders at Gatehousecote, but it is unclear where precisely his house was.
John (18th C.) weaver in Denholm. He married Margaret Smith and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1747); Heel (b.1750); Helen (b.1753); and John (b.1755).
Richard (17th/18th C.) hired as schoolmaster in Castleton Parish in 1707. He was probably previously schoolmaster at Westruther, from 1691.
William (16th C.) listed in 1540 among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he and 2 others had to make public repentance for playing at ‘nineholes’ (i.e. nine men’s morris) on Sunday. His name is probobly written ‘Frater’. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1777. His children included Ann (b.1777) and Margaret (b.1788). (also formerly written ‘ffrater’ and ‘Frater’, this could be a variant of ‘Fraser’).

frame (främi) n. a knitting frame, formerly a hand-knitting machine built into a wooden frame, but in the modern era being a machine making many garment bodies or sleeves at once –

which the knitting frame were housed (see flat).

frame-worker (främ-wur-kur) n. a person who works the knitting frames in a mill, traditionally a male job – ‘Aw yon frame workers and knitters Shaded frae the sun bleezin’ doon . . . ’[AY].

Franksden (fra-mis-din) n. John (d.1418) appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Boniface IX in 1391. This was as a result of a dispute in the church at the time, since Matthew de Glendonwyn was already Bishop. He was never recognised within Scotland.

France (frawns) n. country in Europe, across the English channel from England. The Lovels and many other Norman families originated in northern France. The ‘Auld Alliance’ between France and Scotland started formally in 1295 and united the two countries against their common foe, England (although the details of the alliance over the centuries are extremely complex). A treaty of 1512 made all citizens of Scotland cit-zens of France and vice versa. The alliance ef-effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise, the wife of James V, in 1560. Britain formally declared wr on France in 1756 (as part of the Seven Years War), the event being marked by drinking (as recorded in the Town books). The French Revolution had a dramatic polarising effect on Britain in the latter years of the 18th century. In Hawick there was a meeting of pro-war, anti-reform supporters in 1792, chaired by Lord Napier, leading to the following years being excessively political, with animosity and suspicion between the 2 groups. The ‘loyalist’ pro-war group consisted mainly of wealthier men, while the ‘reformist’, anti-war group was mainly from the working classes. There were several specific incidents, such as 2 reformist publicans being denied licenses by the local J.Ps. Sympathisers of the Revolution were referred to as ‘black-nebs’.

There were official illuminations in Hawick following the victory in the Battle of the Nile in 1798. There was a great enlisting into volunteer army units, prompted by a concern about French invasion, culminating locally in the ‘False Alarim’ of 1804. During the Napoleonic Wars there were French prisoners of war in Hawick. Huge numbers of local men fell in France during WWI and again during WWII, many still lying in unmarked graves. Hawick became twinned with the French town of Bailléul in 1973.

France (frængs) n. James (18th/19th C.) Supervisor of Excise in Hawick recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

the Franchise Agitation (þn-fræng-člz-aw-ji-tä-shin) n. name generally given to a series of political demonstrations during the summer and autumn of 1884, demanding equally voting rights for a much larger fraction of working men, particular in rural districts. In Hawick there was a march of approximately 6000 people along the High Street, the procession being 2½ miles long, with 10 bands, along with many flags and banners. Several banners are preserved in the Museum, particularly from Dicksons and Laings. The Representation of the People Act (also known as the Third Reform Act), introduced by William Gladstone, was passed at the end of 1884.

Francis Hole (fræng-sis-hōl) n. popular name for a pool in the Teviot, to the east of Denholm (mentioned by James Murray in 1863).

Francis’ Well (fræng-si-seez-wel) n. spring at the left-hand side of the main A7 just after Newton, to the north of Hawick. The origin of the name is uncertain, but could be related to St. Francis if connected with the nearby ‘Hallywell Hill’, which has its own ‘Hally Well’. John Cavers was farmer at the steading there in 1797, when it is recorded as ‘Franciswell’.

Frankie’s (fræng-kee) n. Frankie’s the Inn Place, bar at 14 Bourtree Place.

Frankie o the Stobs (fræng-kee-ō-thu-stōbz) n. nickname for Sir Francis Eliott.

Frank Place (frængk-plis) n. street near Loch Park that had tenements constructed on it in 1881 and demolished in 1977. The location was the southern end of Lothian and Garfield Streets, directly opposite the top end of Allars Bank. It was named for Frank Hogg, who lived near there at the time of his death.

Frank Place Brig (frængk-plis-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge over the railway at the top of Allars Bank and adjacent to the former Frank Place, also sometimes called the Wellogate Brig.

Frank Scott Court (frængk-skō’-kōr) n. sheltered housing development off Buccleuch Street, built 2001/2 and named after ex-Provost Frank Scott. The bell from the Old Parish Church is displayed at the front of the building, having been cast at the Whitechapel Foundry in 1841.

Fraser (fræ-zur) n. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th/15th C.) resigned his lands in Ewesdale sometime before 1426, when they were granted to Simon Little. This included Meikledale, Kirkton, Sorbie, etc. David ‘Dacie’ (1949/50–) local boxer, coached by Jock Thorburn. He had 80 victories from around 100 bouts, including 3 schoolboy championships and 2 at youth level. He represented Scotland in an international tournament at the age of 16. After injury and disappointment he chose not to follow the professional route, but instead coached with Hawick Amateur Boxing Club. He also set up his own club, based at the Royal Albert for several years from 1994. George Hardie (1823–81) second son of Bailie Robert Fraser and great-grandson of Bailie John Hardie. He was a draper by trade, succeeding his father in ‘John Hislop & Co.’, 51 High Street. First elected to the Council in 1853, he was twice a Magistrate, as well as a J.P., and continued on the reconstituted Council, for North High Street Ward. He was made Provost in 1868, serving until 1871. He was a Whig Liberal in politics. He was a member of the first School Board and of the Parochial Board. He also led the resignations from the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers and became Lieutenant in the 5th Roxburgh (Hawick Volunteer Corps), thereafter being involved in the argument between the two corps, which led to his dismissal and the disbanding of the 5th Roxburgh. The song ‘Hawick Volunteers’ was composed and first sung for him in 1860. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and said to have had a fine tenor voice. He was also a leading light in the Masons, and involved in the formation of the Lodge St. James. In addition he was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He was living at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1875. On his retiral he was presented with an inscribed tea set, later became landlord of the Imperial Hotel, and was buried in St. Mary’s (note, his name is also sometimes ‘Hardie’). George, J.P. (d.1962) came to Hawick as Excise Officer in 1936. He served for 18 years on the Town Council starting in 1940 and was Provost 1945–58. He gave his name to Fraser Avenue. He died at his home in Edinburgh. George Watson reporter who covered rugby for the Hawick Express. Ian Acting Father in 1994 and Common-Riding Committee Secretary since 2017. Jack (20th C.) well-known local ‘fixer-upper’. Brought up in Cavers, he worked as a joiner in Mansfield most of his life, and was famous for renovating old cars and bikes. He also rescued and restored the whistle from Blenkie’s mill and the Willie Leggat statue. He was an elder at Cavers Kirk. John (17th/18th C.) preacher at Hassendean Kirk the last 2 Sundays before it was demolished. He went on to become the minister at Glencorse in 1691, and was transferred to Aness in 1695. There is an assignation against him in 1692 from Thomas Shiels (minister at Roberton), claiming the stipend of Hassendean to which he believed he had the right. John (18th/19th C.) baker and flour dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Lesley daughter of Ian and Nancy. She studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. She has worked as a local photographer who produced ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’ along with Judith Murray in 2009. Her imaging and photography company is ‘ILF Imaging’, known for its extensive coverage of the Common Riding, as well as providing general photographic services. She designed the junior Mosstroopers’ Club tie in 1995. She has been Treasurer of the Common Riding Committee since 2017. She proposed the toast to the Common Riding at the 2018 Dinner. Mrs. ?? (d.1840) midwife in Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1840. Bailie Robert (b.c.1795) father of Provost George Hardie and a draper by trade. His premises were at 7 Teviot Crescent. He is recorded as a merchant on Teviot Crescent on the electoral roll of 1832 and the censuses of 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). He was a good friend of William Laidlaw. Although his family joined the Free Kirk after the Disruption, he remained a staunch ‘Auld Kirker’. He was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common Riding Races. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’; he swapped a liferent in Roxburghshire with one in Selkirkshire belonging to William Muir. In 1847 he was given the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. His wife was Rebecca and their children included John H., Margaret, George and Rebecca. A portrait exists of him. Sir Simon of Olivercastle (d.c.1291) from Peeblesshire, son of Sir Simon. He held extensive lands in Scotland, and was Keeper of Ettrick Forest, as well as Sheriff of Traquair and Peebles. In about the 1280s he was witness to a resignation of lands by Richard of Rule. In 1291 King Edward I ordered him to deliver harts to the Bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow. His son, also Sir Simon, led the Scots to victory at the Battle of Roslin in 1303, refused to swear fealty to Edward, fought with Robert the Bruce, was captured by the English and was executed in London. Simon Lord Lovat (c.1667–1747) Chief of the Fraser Clan, he was famous for his belligerent nature and for changing allegiance, being a supporter of the House of Hanover in 1715 and of the Stuarts in 1745. He supposedly passed through Hawick along with the Jacobite army in 1745. There is a story told about a local man who acted as a guide and met him, later becoming a barber in Newcastle, and slitling the throat of one of the men who testified against Lovat. Defeated at Culloden, he was beheaded at the Tower of London, the last man to be executed in this way in Britain (also spelled ‘Frazer’).

fratch (frawch) v., poet. to argue, wrangle – ‘My curse light on the awkward sot, Who ... breeds a fratch about his shot’ [JR].

fray (fraw) n., poet. a fight, skirmish, conflict, brawl – ‘As her sons were ever foremost In the foray and the fray’ [TC], warning of an attack – And when he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out be-spak auld Gibby Elliot – ‘Whae’s this that brings the fraye to me?’ ”[T], ‘While o’er my mind come thoughts of former days When ruthless feuds and fierce and bloody frays ... Free Church Lane (free-church-làn) n. popular name for St. George’s Lane, running from Buccleuch Street to the Teviot and named after what was Hawick Free Church. At one time it was also known as Johnman’s Opening. It was the scene of a murder in 1861. After Teviot Lodge was taken over it became the eastern boundary of the High School grounds. The Post Office sorting office has been there since 1972 (also called ‘Free Kirk Lane’).

freedom (free-dum) n., arch. liberty to engage in the rights of a member of a community, especially a burgh – ‘Item, whatsoever person committis the said theft ... sal be banyishit the town, and lose their freedom for ever’ [BR1640], the boundaries within which the laws of a burgh apply – ‘Inpr. whatsoever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick ...’ [BR1640].

the Free Gairdener (thu-free-gär-di-nurz) n. the British Order of Ancient Free Gardeners, a friendly society with Lodge No. 3465 operating in Hawick from the 1880s until the early 20th century. Dr. Barrie was the first and most enthusiastic member. There were 2 separate branches at one point, ‘Flower of the Border’, Hawick, No. 146 Border District, and ‘Lily of the Border’, Hawick, No. 6 Border District. There was also briefly a junior branch ‘The Flowerbud of the Border’ (Juvenile), No. 23 Border District. The National Archives have some of their records.

the Free Kirk (thu-free-kirk) n. the Free Church, established after the Disruption in 1843, when hundreds of Church of Scotland ministers left to form the Free Protesting Church. In Hawick Rev. John Wallace left as minister of the Parish Church along with about 600 of the congregation of 800. They met originally in the East Bank Meeting House, then built their own church in 1844. The site was purchased from Mr. Anderson, with Mr. Nixon of Lynnwood laying the foundation stone. This became St. George’s Church, which was long afterwards known as the Free Church or Free Kirk, and is now renamed Teviot Church. A second congregation started meeting in the West-end in 1855, leading to the construction of the West Port Kirk in 1866. Another Free Church congregation, St. Andrew’s, was founded in 1866, with the church itself constructed in 1868, to serve the northern part of town. There was also a Free Kirk started about the same time in the Borthwick (the Snoot), another in Denholm in 1844 and one at Wolfelee about 1849.

the Free Kirk Manse (thu-free-kirk-mans) n. manse for St. George’s Church, built on Wilton path in 1846. The land had previously been a garden belonging to Francis Ballantyne. The house was designed by Smith of Darnick and can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It was occupied continuously by the Free Kirk minister until Rev. Johnman died in 1923, then sold the following year. The junior minister had lived at Broomieknowe, and this house was gifted by Sir Thomas Henderson in 1925 to become the new Manse. This house may have been the ‘U.P. Manse’ and ‘Wilton Manse’ recorded on Ordnance Survey maps, which was demolished about 1969.

Free Lance (free-lawns) n. pseudonym for Isabella Anderson Gray.

the Free Library (thu-free-li-bru-ree) n. an early name in use for the Library.

freeman (free-mun) n. another name for a Burgess – ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s eldest son and heir that is to be admitted freeman and Burgess, his father being in life, sall pay forty shillings with the wyne and pertinents’ [BR1640].

Freeman (free-mun) n. Patrick (17th/18th C.) charged in 1701 with going over the Border into England to get married. He is recorded giving evidence that the Burgh Officer was the first person to arrest him (i.e. that it was not done on the authority of any other court). Walter (18th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. He was engaged by the Council in 1747 to fix and upkeep the clock on St. Mary’s, with an annual salary of £1 5s. This included providing iron work for a dial-plate on the west side and alterations to the dial-plate on the east side. He is also recorded making 420 communion tokens and a stamp for Hawick Parish Kirk in 1751. In 1752 he was paid the remains of his salary for upkeep of the clock for a year. He may be the same as the Walter who led the ‘Patriots’ (or was at least related to him). He married Margaret Falside and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1758; the witnesses were William Dyce and Walter Ruecastle. He is probably the ‘Walter Freemans, Watchmaker’, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. Walter (18th C.) leader of a secession movement in Hawick Kirk. He also led the ‘Patriots’, a group of 205 Burgesses and others who took the Town Council to court 1778–81, claiming they had improperly managed the Common on behalf of the Burgessess and questioning their authority. They particularly complained about the Bailies, stating that they were ‘generally a set of poor low men’ and that ‘he that drunk most in the Bailies’ house had most interest in the decision’. In 1778 he and James Dryden were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed (he is probably the one described as being ‘in bad health’ at the time). The Court of Session ruled in favour of the Magistrates and Council, but the outcome also led to the Council being fixed at 31 members. He was probably the same watchmaker Walter, whose daughter Isobel married John Clark in Edinburgh in 1780. He may be the Walter, married to Margaret Falside, whose daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He is probably the Walter who was recorded renting the ‘mortcloth’ in Hawick in 1773 and also in 1774 for his ‘goadsister’.

Dr. William (1751/2–1821) surgeon and liberal politics leader in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century. He was said to be a ‘blackneb’ and had a portrait of Napoleon in his house. He was an early friend of Robert Wilson, apparently influencing his political and religious views; it was said that ‘Dr. Freeman had made Rob Wilson a’ but the soul’. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1789–97. He is probably the William who married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1788. He seems likely to be related to Walter, perhaps his son. He was buried at St. Mary’s, his gravestone reading ‘A man of sterling honour, integrity, and benevolence. A warm friend and affectionate Relative. His talents as a professional man were of the highest order and were ever at the service of the poor’ (also written ‘Freman’).

freendly society (freend-lee-su-sl-i’-ee) n. a benefit society, organised for mutual assistance among workers. The Hawick Friendly Society was the first such organisation in town, forming about 1790. A second organisation formed about 1810, but both were dissolved by their members some time before 1840. The Foresters became important from the mid-19th century, with the Free Gardeners formed in the 1880s, and Trades Unions also appearing in the late 19th century to fill a similar need.

freendship (freend-ship) n. friendship – ‘Teri-Bus is now a charm That keeps heart an’ freendship warm For auld Hawick’[TK], ‘And ye’ll fin’ the warnth o’ freendship Down the lang years still the same’[WL].

croonely (freend-lee) adj. friendly – ‘A ray o’ the sunlight seems aye breakin’ owre her, And blythe is her banter, baith frien’ly and free’[WL] (also freendly).

Freestane Cleuch (free-stën-clooch) n. small stream that flows into the Lurgie Burn in the western part of Hobkirk Parish. Near the confluence are the foundations of former walls or enclosures, probably once a farmstead.

French (french) n. Adam (d.c.1578) 8th Laird of Thornydikes in Berwickshire. He was son of Robert and Anne Home and grandson of Adam (who in 1502 was on the panel for Sir David Home of Wedderburn inheriting some of his father’s lands around Lauder). He was a minor at the death of his father and had a charter from Thornydikes in 1555/6. He was involved in a contract relating to lands in Gordon in 1563 and in 1567 he had an action involving lands at ‘Pet-cokkis’. In 1569 he acquired from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh Abbey, the lands of Uston, Nether Crailing, Auld Jedburgh, Rueycastle, Abbotrule, ‘Bowatsyde’, Grange, Fodderlee, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaug, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Belses, Ancrum and others. This was for the sum of 30 hundred merks. In 1574/5 he was involved in a dispute over teinds in the Parish of Gordon. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Hoppringle of Blindlee, and she died in 1582. His children were: Robert, who succeeded; James, executor of his mother’s will, who led an action against the Abbot of Jedburgh in 1583; and John, tutor of Thornydikes after his brother James died; Alexander, who was mixed up with the Earl of Bothwell; Thomas, who was in the King’s service; Margaret; Christine; Jonet; and Eupham. Adam of Thornydikes (1599–1617) only son of Robert, he was 10th Laird of Thornydikes. He was also Laird of Abbotrule and other lands that had been purchased by his grandfather from Jedburgh Abbey. His uncle John was appointed as his tutor in 1604. It is said that at the age of 14 he was attending school in Haddington when he was kidnapped from the care of his guardian Sir John Home, by William Home of Hardiesmull, John Cranston of Moriston and Sir Patrick Chirnside of East Nisbet, taken to Berwick and married to Sir Patrick’s daughter, Jane. This led to a trial before the Supreme Court of Scotland. However, the King finally allowed the marriage, but he died before there were any children. His 3 sisters, Jean, Alison and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1625. George (16th C.) 4th son of Adam, 6th Laird of Thornydikes. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. James (d.c.1604) 2nd son of Adam and Margaret Hoppringle. He acted as executor for his mother. In 1583 he instituted proceedings against the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1588 his brother-in-law John Baillie of St. John’s Kirk had a letter of reversion relating to lands in Gordon in 1563 and in 1567 he had an action involving lands at ‘Pet-cokkis’. In 1569 he acquired from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh Abbey, the lands of Uston, Nether Crailing, Auld Jedburgh, Rueycastle, Abbotrule, ‘Bowatsyde’, Grange, Fodderlee, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaug, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Belses, Ancrum and others. This was for the sum of 30 hundred merks. In 1574/5 he was involved in a dispute over teinds in the Parish of Gordon. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Hoppringle of Blindlee, and she died in 1582. His children were: Robert, who succeeded; James, executor of his mother’s will, who led an action against the Abbot of Jedburgh in 1583; and John, tutor of Thornydikes after his brother James died; Alexander, who was mixed up with the Earl of Bothwell; Thomas, who was in the King’s service; Margaret; Christine; Jonet; and Eupham.
Margaret Pringle, he was 9th Laird of Thornydykes and 2nd of Abbotrule. In 1582/3 he and his mother had an action against a number of men for spoliation of their lands of Jordanhill and East Gordon. He was part of a feud that resulted in the death of Ninian Spottiswood in 1588. In 1589 he married Margaret, said to be only daughter and heiress of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule (who pre-deceased his father), with her mother being Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes; she died in 1593, leaving no children. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of Mark Home of Hardiesmill. Their children were: Adam, who succeeded; Jean, who married John, brother of William, Lord Cranston; Alison, who married Thomas Cranston of Huntlywood and secondly William Marjoribanks of Stainerig; and Margaret, who married Robert Brownfield of Todrig in Berwickshire. His brother John was appointed tutor to his son Adam in 1604.

fri *(fri, fre, frä) prep. from – ‘where div ee come fri?’, ‘…A day frie Hawick’s a day wasted!’ [DH], ‘…freck ma hame upon the rock’ [JEDM], ‘…And keep oor dear hames frae disorders’ [WS], ‘I’ll sing the test a Callant tries When far freac hame and weary’ [RH], ‘…An’ at his voice the deid folk leapt Frae oot their graves’ [WP], also sometimes meaning ‘of’ – ‘hei deid fri a hert attack’, conj. from the time that – ‘Frac she cam in, her tongue never devauldit’ [GW] (the pronunciation varies, and can often be between the examples given; also spelled ‘frae’; cf. the less common fra and the older threah).

Friarshaw (fri-ur-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly between Riddell and Lilliesleaf. It was the seat of a branch of the Douglasses, descended from the Cavers line. In 1563 William Gourlay warned George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from a husband-land there belonging to Andrew Douglas. William Douglas (d.1575) was probably the first Laird of these lands, followed by Andrew. It was valued at £5 12s 6d in 1592. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. James Shiel was there in 1628. It was valued at £285 13s 4d in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (including feu-duty of £13 6s 8d to the Earl of Haddington). It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the feu duties were valued at £13 6s 8d, and held by the Earl of Haddington. Walter Riddell of Friarshaw is recorded in 1695. There were Turnbuls there in the late 18th century. In 1788 it was owned by Rev. William Campbell. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists the owner as William Scott of Friarshaw, with a value of £286 (plus £60 in teinds). There were Scott-Douglas owners in the 19th century, but by the 1870s it was part of the estate of the Sprots of Riddell. It was called ‘Jerusalem’ by the locals, and was once monastic property. Another farm to the north-west is called Friarshawmuir – ‘We’d cross the brig and thread the wood, And climb to Friarshaw, Where we can see the Minto Hills And rugged Ruberslaw’ [FL] (the name probably comes from Middle and Old English ‘fre sceagga’, meaning ‘friar’s wood’; it first appears in 1563 as ‘Freirschawe’ and continues with similar spelling for the next century, being ‘Frerrasch’ in 1581, ‘Friershawe’ and ‘friershaw’ in 1678 and ‘Frier-shaw’ in 1695; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Freershaw’.

fricht (fricht) n., arch. a fright – ‘...an’

ane fricht til mine acquaintance; thame that did see me owthbye fiede frae me’ [HSR], ‘I was ane reproch amang a’ mine enemie ... an’ ane fricht til mine acquaintance’ [HSR], ‘Bairnies wi’ it get sic frichts, There’s no ane that sleeps soon’ ... ’[TCh], ‘...Advisin’ Jimmie not ti dee Wi’ useless fricht’ [WP], v. to frighten ‘...eneuch to fricht the verra whoops frae their haunts’ [BM1907].

frichtfi (fricht-fi, -fi) adj., arch. frightful – ‘There’s whilsts a wee thing that wags uncontrolled, And causes a frichtfu’ skaith ... ’ [WFC] (spelled ‘frightful’ etc.).

fri’d (frid, fred) contr. from it – ‘the trouble wi Gala is, oo’re no fer enough fri’d’, ‘A was guy fer fri’d it the time’, ‘The water that cam’ frae’d was caller and clear ... ’ [JCG] (see also thril’d).

Fridi (fri-di) n. Friday (also spelled ‘Fridih’; note the pronunciation with i rather than I).

the Fridi (thu-fri-di) n. Common Riding Friday, being the Friday after the first Monday in June and the main day in the traditional celebrations, lasting almost a full 24 hours for the principals. The earliest it can be is 5th June and the latest is 11th June. It starts with the Drums & Fifes assembling at 6 a.m. in the Kirkwynd, traditionally playing ‘Teribus’ and ‘John Paiterson’s Mare Rides Foremaist’. It proceeds with the Snuffing and the Cornet’s Breakfast, with the Drums and Fifes continuing on a route round the old parts of the Town. The Cornet then gets the Flag and walks with it to the Tower, where the ‘Auld Sang’ is sung. The Procession of the officials’ motorcade plus riders then starts, going through Wilton then along the High Street and up the Loan for the Chase. The married riders go to the front as usual, this being the only time anyone rides past the Flag. After the Chase up the Nip Knowes the Acting Father takes the Flag to St. Leonard’s, where the main ‘Hut’ takes place. Here the curds and cream are served, which were ordered on the Thursday of the previous week. After the Hut, the mounted procession proceeds round part of the Common for the actual Riding of the Marches, with the Cornet performing the Cutting of the Sod. They then make their way to the Mair, with the Flag being placed on the roof of the committee room during the Races, and the Cornet being presented with a race-crop. After the events at the Moor, the riders proceed via Crumhaughhill and Myreslawgreen, where they receive refreshments. The Principals then go to the Coble Pool for the Dipping of the Flag, then the Song Singing, before returning the Flag to the Town Hall for the night. Then there is the Cornet’s Dinner and finally the Ball, ending with the climb to the summit of the Mote at dawn. Before 1752 it was fixed as the last Friday in May, but since then (largely because of the 11 day shift to the Gregorian calendar) it has been in June. In the early 19th century the Magistrates and returned left town at 10 a.m. and then the cavalcade returned to town after the Races, 3-abreast, led by the Town Clerk and the band. They would then march the Burgh boundaries and adjourn to the Town Hall for dinner. The modern schedule was essentially set down in the 1880s.

Frissell (fri-sel) n. Andrew (16th C.) son of the Laird of Overton and brother of William. Along with his brother he was accused of being involved in 2 raids on English farms in 1589. David (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators of Thomas Armstrong of Magenton in 1482 when Magerton passed to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Daud Fressell’. Jean (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Fresell de Vuer-tone’ (probably Overton) when he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inhering the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He may be the Laird of Overton fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John of Overton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of the lower Borthwick valley belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Patrick (15th

C.) recorded as ‘senior in Smallholm’ in 1494/5 when he was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as part of the inquest for ruling on the inheritance of the Baron of Cavers and Sheriffs of Roxburghshire by James Douglas. In 1517 he was ‘Robertum Fresal de Bun-toune’ when he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at ‘Efflesche’, i.e. Effledge in Cavers Parish. In 1535 along with Arthur Douglas he had 13 cows and oxen stolen, with William Scott ‘in Layk’ being accused. They are described as ‘common thieves of Liddesdale. He is probably related to the previous Robert. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Fresal’ in 1424 when he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick for settling claims to lands on Hownam. Most of the other men were Teviotdale Lairds. William of Overton (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he and his brother Andrew were named along with Rutherford’s, accused of a raid into England. They were both also among a group of Teviotdale men accused of riving from Woodburn in 1589, and were there said to be ‘sons to the Laird of Overton’ (formerly ‘Fresal’, ‘Fresale’, ‘Fresel’, ‘Fressell’, etc.; note that the name may have been an early variant of Fraser).

frit (fri) n. fruit – ‘For aw haie hed a taste o’ the frit o’ knowledge trei . . . ’ [MB] (also spelled ‘fruit’ in analogy with other ‘ui’ words, even when pronounced with an i).

frizzle (fr-zul) n., arch. the steel used to make a spark from a flint – ‘The donations to the Mu-seum during the month comprised the following: 6 frisels, Border district . . . ’ [HAST1900] (there are spelling variants).

Frogden (frog-din) n. village south of Kelso on the back road to Linton, in the former Linton Parish. A stone circle near there was called ‘the Tryste’ and used as a place of muster during the days of Border warfare. William Dawson, who farmed there, was a leading introducer of modern farming methods to the Borders in the late 18th century, particularly turnip husbandry (also written ‘Frogleane’; the name derives from Old English ‘throc’, being a peice of wood attached to a ploughshare; it first occurs as ‘Throodean’ in 1550 and has its modern form by the 17th century).

Fulton (ful’, fool’-in-) n. lands between Bedrule and Fodderlee, once the site of a small village. There is a ruined 15th century pele tower there. Adam Turnbull is recorded there in 1390. John Turnbull of ‘Foulton’ took part in 1426 in the inquiry into the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto. Thomas and Roland Turnbull were recorded there in 1493 and Cock Turnbull, William White and Robert White in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull was tenant there in 1501 and George Russell in 1502. In 1502 some Olivers were allowed to compone for stealing 100 of the Laird of Bedrule’s sheep from there at different times. In 1516 James V granted remission to several Turnbuls, including Adam, George and Andrew in Fulton. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. It was the home of Margaret Home of Cowdenknowes in the 1570s, before her marriage to William Turnbull of Bedrule, and then was a Turnbull stronghold. In the 1580s it was the seat of Walter, heir apparent of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. A letter of 1602 from William Turnbull to his father-in-law Thomas Ker of Cavers describes how he took possession of the lands and lists the tenants there at that time. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused several Turnbuls of stealing wood from his lands at Huntlehill, and this included Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas. In 1623 Andrew Paterson, tenant there, was accused of stealing an ox and a cow, but found not guilty. The Kers were granted the lands in 1623, along with other Turnbull possessions (probably on default of loans). It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £440. William Turnbull was there in 1690 and George White was tenant in 1694. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. William Elliot of Wells bought the lands from the Cavers-Carre family in 1801. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. A Roman coin, specifically a denarius of Augustus, was found to the west of the tower. Further to the south-east is a possible ancient enclosure (the name occurs in 1296 as ‘Fougheltona’, is ‘Foulton’ in 1390, ‘Foulton’ in about 1390, ‘Foulton’ in 1426, ‘foul’toun’ in 1493, ‘foalm’toun’ in 1494/5, ‘Fowltoun’ in 1501, ‘foul’toun’ in 1502, ‘Foulton’ in 1516, ‘Folton’ in 1545, ‘Foulton’ in 1583/4, ‘Foul’toun’ in 1643 and 1678, ‘Faltoun’ in 1684, ‘ffoul’toun’ in 1690 and ‘Foutiln’ in 1694; it is still marked as ‘Foulton’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Foulton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘fugol tun’, meaning ‘bird farm’).

Fulton (fool’-in) n. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Skelfhill in 1736, when his son Robert was baptised. He is probably related to his contemporary John. James (18th/19th C.) stocking needle maker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1715. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Denholm in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1736); William (b.1740); and Janet (b.1747). Perhaps the same John was married to Janet Hogg and had an unnamed child baptised in Cavers in 1751. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps son of John. He was living in Denholm in 1777 and Denholm Dean in 1779 and 1783. His children included: John (b.1768); Janet (b.1770); Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); Alexander (b.1783); Margaret (b.1786); James (b.1789). William (1794–1875) first (and possibly only) Governor of Hawick Jail. He was born in Jedburgh, son of John and Rachel Watson. He was wounded in Holland in the 1st (Foot) Regiment, being struck in the face and chest by a bullet, and being pensioned out of the army. He was then a roadman at Castleweary for about 25 years (where he is recorded in 1841), before becoming farmer at Mertin’s House (recorded in 1851). He is said to have been ruined as a farmer on account of his stackyard being burned down 2 or 3 years in a row, and was succeeded at Martin’s House by the Knoxes. He then became Governor of Hawick Jail (on Allars Bank), but it is said that his wife did not enjoy the situation and he instead became a forester at Eldon Hall, farmed at Mertoun House and moved to Denholm. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cairns and Elizabeth Louisa Thorburn, and she died at Martin’s House in 1859, aged 63. His children were: John (1815–1903), who emigrated to Ontario, Canada; Elizabeth (1818–1904), who died in Appleby; James (1820–86), born at Alton, died in Manitoba; Mary (b.1824), who married Walter Riddell and live in Hawick; Anne (1827–1909), who married John Scott and lived at Castleweary; William Scott (1831–91), a banker in Appleby. He died at 4 O’Connell Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Fulton Toor (ful’, fool’-in-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined peel tower dating from the 16th century, about 1½ miles south of the village of Bedrule, on the side road between Bedrule and Fodderlee.

It was long a stronghold of the Turnbuls. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Tradition holds that the last occupant of the tower was a strong Turnbull who was overcame by the Kers of Ferniehirst, pouncing upon him while he was singing to his infant child on his knee: ‘Little wat ye wha’s coming, Jock and Tam and a’ s coming’. The remains of the tower are one storey high and surrounded by turf covered foundations of out-buildings. The dimensions are about 7 m by 9 m, and oblong in plan, with a circular stair-tower on the east. The walls of the tower were repaired around 1880 to preserve the ruin.

the Fyre Station

Hawick’s initial fire station was in part of the old Town House. The Council first resolved to purchase a fire engine in 1809, and it arrived from London in 1812. Prior to that the Burgh had a few leather buckets, a couple of ladders and several iron hooks on poles for dealing with burning thatch. The new ‘engine’ consisted of a carriage on a swivel, several lengths of pipe and many leather bags for carrying water. A force of about 50 volunteers was established in 1814, but at first were only paid with ale! The engine was adapted several times an additional one purchased in 1847. By the late 1800s the engine was pulled by 3 horses yoked together; pictures exist from this period, as well as a short film of about 1900. The engine acquired in 1894 was a Merryweather Greenwich Gem, pulled by horses until a motorised engine replaced them in 1918; a second engine was purchased in 1931. The first uniforms were simply white jackets. The uniform issued in 1882 consisted of a blue coat, white linen trousers and helmet. Hawick’s first actual fire station was at Slitrig Hall, 2–6 Old Manse Lane (at the end of Slitrig Bank), where the blocked up arched entrance with roundel windows above can still be seen. This building was constructed in 1857. This station served the town through most of the 19th century and into the early 20th. A specially built Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road, designed by Alex Ingles and completed in 1914. The Hawick Fire Brigade became part of the National Fire Service in 1941. A full time brigade started in 1963, along with the purchase of a new engine. The new building on Wilton Hill was opened in 1971, now being part of the Lothian and Borders Fire Brigade. The old Commercial Road station became part of the Town yards, but being largely derelict was demolished in 2002. The local brigade became part of the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service in 2013.

Gadd (gawd) n. Job (1786–1869) English-born stocking-maker of the mid-19th century. He was born in Derbyshire, son of Thomas and Ann Follows. He came to Hawick some time in the 1830s, moving from Shepshed, Leicestershire. He was fond of giving speeches, and for a time was known as ‘the Dumb Precentor’ because he took over the Precentor’s seat in the Parish Church when the Precentor occupied a seat in the choir, even although he never himself sang a note. The family were living on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, at about 62 High Street in 1851 and at 1 Teviot Place in 1861. He married Catherine Foreman (1789–1850) in 1810. Their children, baptised in Shepshed, included: Ann (1812–28); Sarah (b.1815), who married Thomas Beresford in Leicestershire; Job (b.1817), also a stocking-maker in Hawick; Mary (b.1820), who married Alexander Mitchell in Melrose in 1841; Catherine (b.1823), who married John Gordon in Kelso in 1844; Martha (b.1825), who married stocking-maker James Harkness in Hawick in 1851; Jane (b.1827); Ann (again, b.c.1830), who married Peter Butler in Hawick in 1849 and died in Molong, New South Wales; and James (b.c.1832). He appears to have secondly married Margaret Halliday (from Lochmaben) in Hawick in 1854. Job (b.1817) son of Job, he was a stockingmaker like his father. He was born in Leicestershire and moved to Hawick as a child. He married Jane...
Scott in Hawick in 1842 and their children included Job (b.1843/4) and Elizabeth (b.1844/5). In 1856 he secondly married Ann Pringle, and with her had further children Robert (b.1857), Catherine (b.1861) and James (b.1863). The family were living at 12 Sandbed in 1861 (also written ‘Gad’ and ‘Geddi’). Gadreni (gaw-de-nee) n. an ancient tribe that lived south of the Forth, including present-day Lothian and Tweeddale, according to Roman geographers. The central town is supposed to have been near Jedburgh, but has also fancifully been suggested to have been nearer to Hawick (e.g. at Chapelhill). gadger (gaw-jur) n., arch. a gauger, exciseeman – ‘. . . at the instance of Alexander Buchan, surveyor, gadger of the ale within the town of Hawick . . .’ [JW1713] (also gauger).

Past Sprot we gaed, and Nixon, Stitt, Lockup, Summers, Swan . . .’ [Dh], ‘. . . And watch’t the thorns drive deep as swords, And laught – and gaed her way’ [Dh], ‘A dizen hands gae up And mine amang them tae . . .’ [Wl], ‘I searched a’ Tweed’s fair smilin’ vale. I hunted lovely Teviotdale. I even gaed as far as Kale . . .’ [Wp] (sometimes written ‘gade’; this is the past tense form, while gane is the past participle).

gaed awa (gâd-a-waw) pp., adj., arch. died, dead, departed – ‘On the Sabbath before his death I got a message from him in homely phrase ‘that he would like to have a crack with me before he gaed awa’’ [Has1949].
gaein (gâ-in) n., arch. going, act of leaving – ‘Thaye hae seen thy gaeings, O God; een the gaeings o’ my God, my King, in the sanctuarie’ [Hsr], . . . presser me fre the violent man, wha hae determinet til owthermaw my gaein’s’ [Hsr].

Gaelic (gaw-, gâ-lik) n. language of northern Scotland, widespread until the middle of the 18th century, but never reaching as far south as Hawick. Nevertheless there are a number of local words of Gaelic influence. It is a Celtic language related to Irish Gaelic, Breton and Welsh, the latter being closest to the form of Northumbrian Celtic (also known as Brythonic) which was once spoken in the Borders. Gaelic (gâ-leek) n. unintelligible jargon, ‘Greek’ – ‘That’s Gaelic (ti me), = I don’t understand what you mean (or say)’ [Gw] (also Gallic).
gaein (gân) pp., arch. done – ‘A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A’d gaen wui’d’ [Ecs], ‘Oo’ve gaen wui the whole o thon bannih’ [Ecs].
gae owre

(it is unclear whether this is from the verb ‘gaun’ or the verb ‘gie’).

gae owre (gä-owr) v., poct. to be beyond, refrain – ‘Gae owre frae angir, an’ forsak wrath; wurpna thysel’ in onie ways til do ill’ [HSR].

gaes (gäz) v., arch., poct. goes – ‘...that goe downt sweitlie, garrin’ the lipps o’ thae that ar thoughtless, giddy (noted by J. Jamieson).

Gairder

Gair (gär) n. former farmstead in the Borthwick valley, mentioned in records from the mid-17th century. It lay in the part of Robertson that was previously in Hawick Parish, on the south side of the valley, probably near Todshawhaugh. John Pringle was recorded there in 1755 and Robert Scott in 1769 (probably related to the Scots for a strip of green on a hillside; it is ‘Gare’ in 1769).

Gair (gär) n. farm by the Tima Water in the Ettrick Forest. The house was built around 1760. Andrew Laidlaw was tenant there in the mid-18th century and Walter Laidlaw later in the 18th century.

gairden (gär-din, -deen) n. a garden – ‘Ane gairden fenest in is my tittle, my spuuse...’ [HSR], ‘My! Sic a floors ee heh in eer gairdeen’ [ECS], ‘...and the blackies whusslin owre a’ the braes and gairdens!’ [DH], ‘somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairty in the gairdens at Princes St.’ [JCo], ‘...That it ended in ablow the swing In the gairden at Wudend’ [IWL], v. to garden (also sometimes ‘gairdeen’).

gairdener (gär-din-nur) n. a gardener – ‘...she’s still an active gairdener, though now approachin 90’ [IWL] (also written ‘gairdner’).

gairdener’s gonial (gär-di-nurz-go-nee-ul) n., arch. a gardener’s apprentice (cf. gonial).

Gairdener’s Haughs (gär-di-nurz-hawchs) n. Gardener’s Haughs, a former name for the Playing Fields off Buccleuch Road. This is recorded in a boundary dispute of the late 18th century between Elliot of Langlands and the Duke of Buccleuch (also written ‘Gardnerershawthg’).

gairdinen (gär-de-nin) n. gardening – ‘Hab says it’s a game played against the wather, the same as gairdinen...’ [DH].

Gairden Knowe Park (gär-din-now-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Garden Know Park’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

gairden rake (gär-din-, -deen-räk) n. a garden rake – ‘Examples of raik, rake, to rake, to rake, etc.: – Gairdeen-raik, muck-raik, beier-raik’ [ECS].

Gairdner (gär-d-nur) n. (Gardner) George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the George, son of James, baptised in Hawick.
in 1716. His wife was Mary Porteous (or ‘Partis’) and their children included: Walter (b.1742); James (b.1743); Janet (b.1744); George (b.1746); Andrew (b.1756); Mary (b.1758); Isabel (b.1762); and Margaret (b.1765). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie William Tudhope and mason Andrew Turnbull, in 1744 were glover John Scott and merchant William Oliver, and in 1762 were tanner John Elliot and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae and Margaret Gardner (perhaps his sister) and another in 1760 for shoemaker James Porteous. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott and his wife Janet Porteous (who may have been his sister-in-law). He may be the shoemaker of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1786 for fellow shoemaker John Wiens. Gideon (d.1702) gardener in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott, along with miller James Paterson. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: James (b.1686). Probably the same Gideon later married Margaret Paterson (unless there is an error in surnames and there was only one wife). Their children included: Margaret (b.1700), who in 1719 married William Turnbull, weaver near the Westport; and Isobel (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant George Martin and glover John Harrt. The baptism in 1702 was posthumous, with James Paterson, the child’s uncle, making ‘faith for her education’; the witnesses included Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Scott ‘Ormiston’. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for merchant John Johnston in Hawick and in 1723 for workman James Dickson. In 1713 he married Isobel Renwick. Their children included: John (b.1714); George (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); and Mary (b.1722). In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Johnston in Hawick. The witnesses in 1718 were Thomas Hardie and David Miller. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1733 and 1736 (along with John) for Robert Renwick, who lived at the Sandbed. John (17th C.) resident of ‘oest the water’ (i.e. west of the Slitrig) on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the gardener who witnessed baptisms for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1699, George Andrew (servant to Douglas of Cavers), Robert (Lord) Oliver in 1704 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1706. It is probably the John who, along with William (perhaps his brother or son) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He may be the John who was fined £10 in 1691 because he tried to run away down the Tolbooth stairs when cited by the Bailies. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, probably the second son of John who got married in 1716. In 1718 he was ‘in Sandbed’ when he and flesher Robert Renwick (also at the Sandbed) witnessed a baptism for innkeeper Adam Richardson. He may also be the John ‘Gardner’ (apparently written as ‘Glendinnen’ in one record) who witnessed a baptism in 1718 for flesher George Renwick. He was living at the Sandbed in 1721. In 1736 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for Robert Renwick, who also lived at the Sandbed. He married Isobel Wilson (or ‘Wilkinson’) in 1716; he was recorded as 2nd son to John in Wilton Parish and she was servant to Mr. James Innes. Their children included: John (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1717), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1719), Janet (b.1721) and Isobel (b.1723), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1721 were another John and William Gardner (who were surely relatives). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1725. He appears to be distinct from the John who was married to Isobel Wilkie and lived at the Sandbed at the same time (and whose child’s baptism he witnessed in 1721). He married Mary Simpson in 1721, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John Waldie (19th/20th C.) farm steward for the Earl of Minto at Hassendeanbank. In 1892 he married Helen Dickson, daughter of William Elliot and Christina Pow. His son Andrew (born before their marriage) took over as farm steward after him. The other children emigrated and were William, Christina Elliot, John, Betsy Waldie, Mary Helen McCreadie and James (‘Jim’). Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children, born in Wilton, included: William (b.1697); and Agnes (b.1699), who married gardener Walter Scott in 1722. The witnesses in 1697 were John and Robert Scott. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a gardener among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the William, married to Agnes Scott, whose son Robert was born in Wilton in 1697. He is probably the gardener who witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine, younger, in 1703, 1711 and 1713. In 1703 he also witnessed a baptism for fellow gardener John Vair. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702. Their children included Agnes (b.1705), William who married Agnes Aitkin in August of 1710. Their children included: Margaret (b.1711); William (b.1713); and John (b.1716). He is probably the merchant William who was elected as Cornet in 1710; if so he cannot be the William who married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702, but could be the William who married Agnes Aitkin in August of 1710.

Their children included: Margaret (b.1711); William (b.1713); and John (b.1716). He is probably the William, merchant of Hawick recorded in 1721 when his servant Thomas Weddell was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath (spelled ‘Gardiner’, ‘Gardner’, ‘Garner’ and variants).

Gairie Gill (gā-ree-gil) n. stream that rises fairly close to the Nine Stane Rig and runs south to join the Roughley Burn.

gairten (gār-ten, -teen) n., arch. a garter.

gairtens (gār-tens) n., pl., arch. ribbon-grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also lady’s gairtens).

gait (gāt) n., arch. a goat – ‘...they hair is als ane flok o’ gaits, that kythe frae Muunt Gildad’ [HSR], ...nár he-gaits owt o’ thy falds’ [HSR].

gait (gāt) v., arch. to set up corn sheaves on their ends to dry.

gait-berry (gāt-be-ree) n., arch. the berry of the bramble (noted as an ‘old name’ by J. Jamieson).

gaiter (gā’-ur) n., arch. a sheaf of corn set up to dry, with the tops tied together and with their bottoms spread out (also gaitin).

gaiter-trei (gā’-ur-trī) n., arch. the bramble bush – ‘Gaiter-tree, An old name given to the bramble, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

gaitin (gā-in) n., arch. the act of setting up corn sheaves to dry, a single sheaf of corn, tied near the head and spread out at the foot to dry more quickly, a stack of corn set up in this way (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. gaiter).

gaive (gāv) v., arch. to stare in a stupid, vacant or idle manner.

gaivel (gā-val) n., arch. a gable – ‘Item, whatsoever person that mindes to big ane house, he sall haif half gewill of his nichbour’s rowmes, for the whilk he sall haif libertie to big and lay to his gewill’ [BR1640] ‘... the gavel to be built with stone and lime, with three stone chimneys in the south end ...’ [JVV], ‘... at the ‘gavel’ of the houses belonging to Mrs. Inglis and Mrs. Gladstanes’ [WAPJ] (also written ‘gavel’; formerly ‘gewill’ and variants).

gaivie (gā-vi) n., arch. someone who stares stupidly.

Gala (gaw-hu, gaw-le, gaw-li) n. Galashiels, the traditional rival town of Hawick. It is built in the narrow valley of the Gala Water near the confluence with the Tweed on the A7 and a former station on the Waverley Line. It was known as a producer of a kind of coarse grey (or sometimes blue) cloth in the 17th and 18th centuries, and there were early waulk mills there, used by weavers throughout the district. The town developed along with the textile industry, and the Scottish College of Textiles is here, part of Heriot-Watt University since 1998. The Braw Lad’s Gathering in June celebrates the town’s 1599 charter and was established as long ago as 1930. It includes a ride to the Raid Stane, where supposedly some English soldiers were killed while picking plums in 1337, an event also commemorated on the town’s coat of arms. The betrothal of Margaret Tudor to James IV occurred at the Market Cross in 1503. The lands were owned by the Crown in the early 16th century. If the town has a jewel it is Old Gala House, with parts dating from 1583. Now a museum, it was the former home of the Lairds of Galashiels, who were first Pringles and then Scotts. The Scotts of Gala burial aisle dates from 1636, although both the original church and the gothic replacement were demolished. New Gala House was home to ‘St. Trinian’s’ School during WWII, but was also demolished. The ‘Hunters'
Galabrae

Haa’ was an old peel tower that stood till the late 18th century, while the town’s Tolbooth was demolished in 1880. The Cornmill Fountain is a converted mill lade. The ‘Border Reiver’ equestrian statue is by Thomas Clapperton, a Gala native, outside the 1867 Burgh Chambers, which have an imposing clock tower by Robert Lorimer (added 1924–27). The main road from Hawick to Edinburgh only went through Gala from 1818, previously being via Fairnilee and Clovenfords. The town did not become a municipal burgh until 1864, although it had possessed burgh of barony status since 1599. The origin of the rivalry with Hawick is a mystery, but dates back at least to the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when the Gala men switched sides. Population (1991) 13,753.

It is said that if Gala didn’t exist, then Hawick and Selkirk folk would have invented it in order to have something to agree on – ‘ ’Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belong them’ [JT], ’... The Hawick team tae play fewer games And oo’ve picked twae Gala reserves’ [AY] (note that the pronunciation of the final vowel sound can vary, and hence it is colloquially spelled ‘Gali’ etc.; the meaning of the name is ‘huts on the Gala Water’; Terries often talk about going ‘ower ti Gala’ rather than using another preposition; it is ‘Galowaschelis’ in 1456, ‘Galloschelis’ in 1512 1525 and 1549, ‘Galloscheilis’ in 1574, ‘Gallasscheilis’ in 1633 and ‘Gallowschelis’ in 1651).

Galabrae (gaw-lu-brä) n. home of Peter Laidlaw in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This may either be ‘Galalaw Braefit’ or one of the houses at Howdenburn.

Gala Law (gaw-lu-law) n. hill on the northern outskirts of Hawick, 221 m high, with a white concrete triangulation point, and also he name for the surrounding area. Foxhounds used to meet there in the mid-19th century. The hillside was set on fire to commemorate victory in the Crimean war in 1856 and took decades to recover – ‘For I like auld Hawick Wi’ a’ her kindly folk Frae Galalaw tae Haggisha’ And auld St. Mary’s Clock’ [RMC], ‘Gala Law ablaze wi’ colour Wi’ golden broom and whins ... ’ [AY] (the origin is possibly from Old English for ‘gallows hill’, like the similar names near Biggar, Kelso and Gullane, and certainly having no connection with Galashiel; it seems an unlikely place for a public gallows to be situated, although it is possible that it served this purpose in the old Barony of Chamberlain Newton).

Galalaw (gaw-lu-law) n. farm above Guthrie Drive, on the slopes of Gala Law. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least 1494 until 1762. In 1494 James Scott of Kerkurd granted the lands to his son David (later of Hassendean); at that time it was valued at 6 merks annually, and was held for the annual payment of 3 silver pennies at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. David was further recorded in 1507/8 and 1510. John Scott of Hassendean owned the lands in 1528/9. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’ to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk. James Reunick was tenant there in 1628. It is probably the land (valued at £156) owned by a Scott (first name not recorded) lifrenter of Newton in 1643. William Scott of Galalaw paid tax on £156 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1681. The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until being assigned to Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid on 5 hearths in 1694 for ‘Gallalaw his hous and cottars’. William Turnbull was there in 1697, Robert Elliot in 1704, John Easton in 1723, Walter Veitch in 1724, John Scott in 1746, Adam Laidlaw in 1747 and Thomas Scott in 1751. Alexander Scott of Galalaw is recorded in 1718. Alexander and Robert Pott were owners in 1788. James Aitkin is recorded there in 1797, when he owned 3 horses. The lands (or at least part of the lands) were owned by William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ when he died in 1808; in his will they were described as ‘the six merks lands of Galalaw ... lying within the old parish of Hassendean now annexed to the Parish of Wilton, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Shire of Roxburgh. Robert Pott was recorded as owner in 1811, when it was valued at £156. Robert Turnbull was owner from at least 1821 and later sold a small part to Chisholme of Stiches. In 1851 Robert Turnbull farmed 150 acres there and James Elliot farmed 250 acres. The hill has been taken over by whins and has a triangulation pillar on top (it is ‘Gallowlaw’ in 1494, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1501, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1507/8 and 1510, ‘Gallowlaw’ in 1511 and 1581, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1528/9, ‘Gallalaw’ in 1663 and 1681, ‘Gallow Law’ and ‘Gallalaw’ in 1690, ‘Gallalaw’ in 1718 and 1770, ‘Golaw’ in 1786 and ‘Gallawlaw’ in 1821: the origin may related to ‘gallows’, as for similarly named places elsewhere, although there is no known connection to hangings).

Galalaw Braefit (gaw-lu-law-brä-fi) n. former farmstead at the foot of Galalaw hill, possibly also the same as ‘Galabrae’. James Turnbull was there in 1841.

Gallipoli (gaw-li-po-lee) n. Turkish peninsula that was the site of a disastrous military campaign of 1915. The 1st Battalion K.O.S.B. were there from the beginning, late April 1915, with the 1/4th K.O.S.B. (Territorials) arriving in June. Many local soldiers of the 1/4th K.O.S.B. were involved in a particular offensive on 12th July; with the benefit of hindsight it is clear that many strategic mistakes were made, in particular the instructions to take the 3rd Turkish trench led to confusion when the trench turned out not to exist, and the soldiers were caught in fire from all sides when they overshot and then tried to turn back. More than 80 men from Hawick and district lost their lives on that day, most remaining under the fields where they fell. The whole campaign was a disaster, with the peninsula with over 120 local men buried or lost there. The peninsula was evacuated by January 1916 after the futility of the whole military campaign became clear to the commanders. A memorial wreath has been laid at the Horse by the Callants Club (first in 1916, then annually from 1930) ‘In remembrance of the Hawick Territorials of the 1/4th Kings Own Scottish Borderers who fell bravely charging the Turkish trenches, Gallipoli, 12th July 1915. The ancient spirit of our fathers hath not gone.’ A commemoration at the War Memorial was later added to the events to mark that day. In 1926 several locals were able to travel to visit the place where their loved ones had fallen, and a marble plaque from the town was installed at the Helles Memorial. In 1933 the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association was formed, based in Hawick and holding an annual dinner on 12th July. The Callants’ Club raised money to send 6 veterans back for the 50th anniversary; a special memorial service was held in Trinity Church and 2 cypress trees, grown from Gallipoli seeds were planted at either side of the War Memorial (although they succumbed to the Scottish winter). In 1974 the Callants’ Club took over the financial responsibility of the 12th July commemoration and an oak tree was planted to replace the cedars. The last Comrade died in 1992, and thereafter the Callants’ Club have continued to lay wreaths at the Horse and the War Memorial. To mark the centenary, a group of 20 Teries visited the peninsula, marking the resting places of all known local men there. ‘A tear dims my eye as I view the memorial, Head bowed, I remember how callants like me Laid down their lives to ensure us our freedom And lie now at Ypres and Gallipoli’ [IWL].

gallivant (ga-li-van’t) v. to go about idly (particularly noted in Teviotdale by J. Jamieson, suggesting the local usage may be more common than in standard English).

Galloway (ga-lô-wâ) n. Rev. Alexander (1847–1926) born in Tillicoultry, son of William and Isabella Dawson. He received his B.D. from Edinburgh University in 1872, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that year and became assistant at Bowden, Lasswade and St. Mary’s, Partick. In 1876 he became minister at Milton of Balgonie and was admitted as assistant and successor to Minto Kirk in 1878, taking over from Rev. J.P. Macmorland in 1893. He was Lecturer on Church Music to the Divinity Students of the Scottish Universities 1912–14. In 1885 he married Margaret Rankin, daughter of William Smith, minister of Douglas. Their children were: William G., merchant in Japan, died in New York 1936; Isabella Dawson; Elizabeth Eleanor; and Alexander, Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B., later Instructor at Camberley Staff College. He was one of the compilers of the ‘Scottish Hymnal’ (1885), ‘The Scottish Anthem Book’ (1892), ‘The Church Hymnary’ (1898) and the ‘Scottish Mission Hymnbook’ (1912), as well as helping with ‘Hymns, Ancient and Modern’ (1889). Sir Alexander (1895–1977) born at Minto manse, youngest child of Rev. Alexander. He was educated on the Isle of Man, and volunteered when war broke out in 1914, joining the Cameronians, then seeing active service with the K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, being one of the last to leave the Peninsula. He received the M.C. in 1918. He remained in the army after WWI, eventually becoming an instructor at Camberley Staff College, then commanding the 1st Cameronians and the Staff College at Haifa. He served as chief staff officer for the 8th Army in Egypt. He then had a series of posts, including after WWII being Commander-in-Chief of British forces in Austria. He was knighted in 1949, retired in 1950 and died at Norham, Northumberland. He married Dorothy Hadden, daughter of Frank Haden White from Northumberland, and they had 3 sons. William (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of William Galloway & Sons. He had a boiler-house and dyeworks built on Commercial Road in 1888. This lay opposite the Victoria Laundry and was later occupied by Renwick’s. His firm only occupied this building for about 5 years.

the Gallops (thu-gaw-lups) n. name for relatively new houses near Hassendeanbank. They were built on the pond for the former water wheel, which was filled in in the 1970s. The name comes from the popular name for some nearby fields.

galloway (ga-lô-wâ) n. a small, study breed of horse, originally from Galloway, often used as a pack animal – ‘...a party of Tynedale men passed the window in tattered clothes, driving lean gal lowsies laden with coals’ [WSB].

the Galloway Road (thu-ga-lô-wâ-röd) n. former name for the road used for carrying coal from the Kielder area to Hawick, i.e. the ‘Note o the Gate’ or B6357. The name came from the Galloway ponies that were used to make the trips.

Gall Sike (gawl-sík) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising to the south of Dykecrofts farm and running roughly north-west to join Whithaugh Burn. The origonal house on Hillhouse farm appears to be shown on this stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands.
gallus

galore (ga-lór) n., poet. plenty, superabundance – ‘An’ he gaf thame galore for thair greed ...’ [HSR].

Galoshins (ga-lô-shinz) n. traditional folk play, common in many parts of Scotland, a variant of the ‘resurrection’ drama found in many parts of Britain (e.g. in England, where it is an example of a ‘mummers play’). The words of the play were passed down orally, and involve a hero called ‘Galoshin’, sometimes St. George, a doctor, and other characters. The height of popularity may have been the mid-19th century. It was typically performed for money by groups of ‘guisers’, usually young boys, visiting inns or private houses. Its timing was connected with either Halloween or Hogmanay (like other ‘guising’). It may be that this is the longest surviving example of a richer tradition dating back to Medieval times. It is unclear how prevalent this play was in the Hawick area, but there are still some recollections in the early 21st century, from families connected to Bowden and Bonchester.

galt (gawlt) n., arch. a castrated boar (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word, but perhaps in error).

Galt (gawlt) n. former name for a town in Ontario, Canada, which was a common destination for Hawick emigrants in the 19th century. Settlement in an area along the Grand River was promoted by William Dickson, who sold lots to predominantly Scottish settlers. The town was originally called Shade’s Mill and was renamed Galt in 1825, after John Galt, Scottish novelist and Commissioner of the Canada Company. The town grew as an agricultural hub, with industry developing from the 1830s and the town becoming known as ‘the Manchester of Canada’. Originally the largest town in the area, it was eventually eclipsed by Berlin, which was later renamed Kitchener. The city of Galt continued to exist as a separate entity until 1973, when it became part of the new city of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo. Many street names in the area reveal the early Scottish influence. Local families with connections to this area include Aitkin, Amos, Cavers, Dryden, Kersel, Lamb, Lee (including James Paris Lee), Murray, Scott and Spalding.

game (gâm) n., arch. sport, amusement – ‘... none did resort to his house for game but such as were of a good age’ [PR1724].

game (gâm) adj., arch. lame – ‘A game leg, a leg hurt by accident, so as to make the person lame, Roxb.; also Northumb.’ [JoJ] (compare the English ‘gamy’).

Gamel (ga-mêl) n. clerk of the 12th century, during the reign of David I. With the permission of his sons Osulf and Ughtred, he granted the lands of ‘Caverum’ to Jedburgh Abbey probably around 1138. This gift was confirmed in charters by Earl Henry and by King William (in the period 1165–70), and reconfirmed in 1229. This was probably part of the Barony of Cavers (although Cavers Carre is a possibility).

the Games (thu-gâmz) n. the Common Riding Games, held at Volunteer Park, also sometimes called ‘the Sports’. Amateur games, now long abandoned, were held on the Friday, with professional games on the Saturday, now moved to the Sunday. Until the early 19th century the Games were entirely amateur, with professional sportsmen only appearing later. In earlier times there was less of a distinction between the Games and the Races. In the 19th century there were Games on the Friday afternoon (after the Dinner) and on the Saturday morning, which were held at the Common Haugh, and included sprints and middle-distance running, hurdles, walking, jumping of several varieties, quoiting, shot-putt, wrestling, Highland dancing and costume contests. There were also special races for boys and for old men. Professional cycling races were a feature in the very late 1800s. They were held on the Saturday morning at the Haugh from about 1855–67 and moved to the afternoon in 1868. The ‘Shows’ would also accompany the Games on the Haugh, and this must have been true from early times. The Games were moved to the Volunteer in 1893. The Amateur and Professional Games were switched back and forth between the Friday and Saturday in the early 20th century. The Amateur Games ending up on the Friday by 1913 and were discontinued in 1961. The Cornet stopped attending the Saturday Games from 1964. It became a tradition for the ‘Big Fower’ to engage in a pillow-fight balanced on a beam, and for this to take place at the Games. The Games were held on the Saturday before Common Riding week in 2005.

Gamescleuch (gâmz-klooch) n. ruined 16th century tower near Ettrick village, on the opposite side of the valley to Thirlstane. It is said to have been built for Simon Scott (2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane, who may have been poisoned by his step-mother on the eve of his wedding. The lands there were also referred to as Thornhill and Ettrickside and were formerly referred to as a steading of Mount Common. They were once Crown property, in the King’s hands in the 1480s, but granted to Adam Scott in 1490 ‘without grassum owing to its sterility’, and again in 1492. They were again assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. William Scott in Sundhope was tenant in 1541, paying £14. William Scott in Hartwoodmyres assigned his steading there (‘callit Ettrikysde’) to his son John, acknowledging an arrangement already made with Simon Scott in Thirlestane; the superior at that time was William Cranstoun of that Ilk. They were held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1573, but shortly afterwards passed to the Scotts of Tushielaw and then back again, following a ‘decret arbitrall’ by Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1603. Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch was Laird in the 1590s. The dispute over these lands grew into a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches. The murder of Walter Scott of Gamescleuch by John Scott of Tushielaw in 1609 may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. The lands were also known as ‘Thorniehill’, and in 1621 and 1667 were described having an ‘outset called Etriksyde’. James Easton was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in Roberton. James and Thomas Dodds were there in 1784 and James Tod in 1791. It seems that an exchange of land was made in about 1812 with the farm of Annellshope. There is now a caravan site there – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirstone, Gemsleigh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to fight, Of Thirlstone, Gemscleugh, and Newburgh fair, As jist speakin’ about them nae further gane than turned not until ye Monday nixt …’[PR1720], ‘But now, alas! the days are gane, Aye, fled ne’er to return again’[JoJ], ‘Have gane to the Fare of Selkirk and re- dines by his guids and geir in harvest gane ane yeir …’[BR1642], ‘John Scott, Beddel, havin’ gane to the Fare of Selkirk …and returned not until ye Monday nixt …’[PR1720], ‘Ilk ane o’ thame is gane bak …’[HSR], ‘Is his mercie for- aye cleen gane?’[HSR], ‘And what is gane forgot’[JEDM], ‘Just a snatched kiss and a heart’nin’ smile, and the echoing hooves are gane’[JYH], ‘The green gress o’ The Bleach, now gane’[DH], ‘But I’ve nae luve round me forgot’[JEDM], ‘Just a snatched kiss and a heart’nin’ smile, and the echoing hooves are gane’[JYH], ‘The green gress o’ The Bleach, now gane’[DH], ‘But I’ve nae luve round me to cling, For my sweet lassie’s gane’[WE], ‘The street’s gane sudden blank, The last char wad- dles in black wuds, wi gameys near’[DH] (also written ‘gamey’).

gamie (gà-mee) n. a gamekeeper – ‘The feel o mushrooms; broilin a gumpit troot; Pheesane ploys in black wuds, wi gameys near’[DH] (also written ‘gamey’).

gammonts (gaw-monts) n., pl., arch. the feet of an animal, particular the pig (also ‘gammons’; noted by J. Jamieson).

gamp (gawmp) n., arch. mouth, throat – ‘Shut eer gamp!’[GW], v., arch. to gape, eat voraciously, swallow greedily, gulp – ‘Gaump. Expl. ‘to sup very greedily, as if in danger of swallowing the spoon’, Roxburgh’[JoJ], ‘Gamp it doon’[GW] (also written ‘gaump’).

gamphrel (gawn-frul) n., arch., poet. a foolish person – ‘Heigh me! is thus the gamfrel gane? What will they yet come to O’[HSR] (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word; cf. gomeril).

gampy (gawmp-pee) adj., arch. gaping, wide open, excessively roomy – ‘Oors is sic a gampy kirk it’s no easy ti heat or fill’[GW], ‘What a different shapes …Jethart Casle saw …Did the deed-raap sound throw its gampy ends, A wunder, i the nicht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-foy?’[ECS].

Garfield Street (gar-fiild-stree') n. housing south-east of the High Street, built in 1882. The houses were demolished in 1977 to make way for a car park, with only part of a factory remaining. Note that on the west side of the street the addresses of the bottom houses were Lothian Street, while the upstairs ones were Garfield Street. Named after U.S. President James Garfield, assassinated in 1881.

Garland (gawr-lind) n. David (b.c.1815) Hawick character of the mid-1800s. He married Mary Haig in Hawick in 1837. He worked as a stocking-maker, living at Kirkton in 1841 and appears to be deceased 10 years later, when his family lived at the Loan. His children included David, Janet and Agnes – ‘Kingly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI].

Garlawcleuch (gar-law-klooch) n. former name for lands near Blackhouse in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands leased along with Blackhouse from at least 1456 until 1502. The lease was held by James Alemooor of that Ilk in 1479, James Oliver and his son in 1488, then Robert, Lord Lyle and then again the family of Alemooor of that Ilk. Patrick Alemooor was recorded there in 1494/5. The land was feued by David Pringle to James Stewart of Traquair in 1512. William Stewart was tenant in 1541 (spelled ‘Gairlacleuch’, ‘Garlacleuch’, ‘Garlacleuch’, ‘Garlawcleuch’, ‘Garleuchcleuch’, ‘Garriochcluch’, etc.).

the Garrison (thu-gaw-ree-sin) n. popular name for a former tenement at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. ‘Hab o’ Hawick’ was supposed to have lived there in the 16th century. It was a 3 storey building, pended on the ground floor and with a corner turnpike stair. It was demolished in about 1799, and was apparently so well built that it had to be undermined and fell into a mass that blocked the street. The site was rebuilt in 1801 and was later the location for a printer’s, a post office, a library and a shop.

garron-nail (gawr-in-nil) n., arch. a large nail – ‘… with eighteen garron nails for sarking and slating the house of Woelie’ [GT] (from Old Scots ‘garron’, a beam).

Garthside (gawrth-sid) n. farm just to the east of Denholm. An ancient burial cist was discovered near here in 1902 (perhaps just across the A698), consisting of several red freestone slabs containing a few pieces of bone.

gas (gas) n. Hawick’s gas lighting first appeared on the High Street in 1831, being the first among Border towns (and replacing the 60 oil lamps of 1813). The lighting ceremony was celebrated with a banquet. Electric lighting arrived in the early 20th century and one of the last lamps (from Elm Grove) is preserved in the Museum. Hawick Gaslight Company started in 1830 on part of the old Under Haugh (now Commercial Road), moving to Mansfield Road around 1882. In the early years the company was run by a manager with...

a single assistant. The manager’s house was formerly at the other side of the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. The company also had a showroom at 66 High Street. Nationalised as part of Scottish Gas in 1948, the main works were dismantled in 1968 after conversion from coal gas to natural gas in 1964. The town was converted around 1970, with new pipes etc., to use the North Sea supply. However, the gasometers on Mansfield Road continued to be used as holders for the high pressure gas delivered from Granton in the Lothians.

Gascoin (gas-koin) n. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Wilton Lodge in 1791–93, when he was working for Lord Napier. Gaylor (gā-lur) n. David (1846/7–1924) from the Dunbar area, he came to Hawick as a young man to learn the watchmaking trade with Mr. Gowans and Mr. Rutherford. He then went briefly to Bishop Auckland before returning to Hawick in 1875 to set up his own watchmaker’s and jeweller’s business. This was originally based at 14 Howegate, moving to 59 High Street about 1877, where he worked for 47 years. He was an early photographer around Hawick and would put on shows in the Exchange Hall and elsewhere, with his son William assisting, and his niece Dorothy providing piano accompaniment. The showing of local slideshows was continued by his son William and lasted until the 1950s; his early ‘magic lantern slides’ collection is still in the Museum. His Border Kinematograph business (with partner local manufacturer Sime) made films in the period 1899–1903 and they at one point considered buying the ‘Wee Thea’, but wound up due to lack of financing. Their films represent the earliest moving images of Hawick Common Riding and other local events, and are only a few years later than the first known films in Scotland. He was for a long time a Deacon in the Congregational Kirk and is said to have identified with the ‘Psychic Movement’ in later life. He married Jeanie (or Jane), daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and she died in 1919, aged 70. Their children were: David William, who became a Congregational minister at the East E.U. Church in Greenock; Elizabeth S., also known as ‘Bessie’; William Pow, who followed his father as an optician; and Margaret Jean, who married Andrew Dalgleish and had 2 sons who were Galashiels builders. Gemmels ( ge-nulz) n. Andrew (d.1793) wandering beggar known across all of the Borders, particularly in rural areas. He was the original for ‘Edie Ochiltree’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Antiquary’. He was a soldier in his youth and was a popular teller of stories (claiming to have fought at Culloden). He travelled around on his own horse, usually sleeping in an outhouse. He wore a blue gown, broad bonnet and strong iron-soled shoes and carried a walking stick about as tall as himself. He was also a great player of draughts. It was said that he had a nephew who farmed in Ayrshire and grew rich on the profits from his begging. His gravestone in Roxburgh cemetery is inscribed ‘Behold the end o’ it – The body of the gentleman beggar ANDREW GEMMELS alias EDIE OCHILTREE was interred here who died at Roxburgh Newtown in 1793 aged 106. Erected by W THOMSON farmer Over Roxburgh 1849’. General Knowledge ( je-nu-nul-no-leej) n. nickname for a boy called Moodie who was from Denholm and born in the early 1820s. the General’s Toor (thu-je-nu-rulz-toor) n. tower on the Riddell estate, built on an old motte, surrounded by deep ditches. It is hollow, with a spiral staircase and parapet, and its height is 81 feet 9 inches. It was erected in 1885 by Maj.-Gen. John Sprot, built by John Herbertson of Galashiels. It was constructed in memory of Sprot’s father Mark, who died in 1883 at age 81 years and 9 months! There is also a local story about the sons only getting the land if they built a foot onto the tower for each year the old man survived.

the Generous Donor (thu-je-nu-ris-dō-nur) n. name used poetically for Sir James Douglas, who granted the Charter of 1537. It is sometimes also applied to his father Sir William Douglas, in whose baronial charter of 1511 Hawick is created a Burgh of Barony (although in fact the original ‘donor’ was probably one of their 15th century ancestors).

Geo. & Jas. Oliver (jörj-an-jämz-o-lee-ur) n. firm of solicitors of long standing in the town. It grew out of the partnership of John Oliver and John Elliot, set up around 1791. The firm was established as ‘John & George Oliver, writers and bank agents’ in 1829 after John Elliot moved to Jedburgh. It was a partnership between Hawick’s Town Clerk John Oliver and his eldest son. When John died in 1849 a younger son James came into the partnership. Their original offices were at 11 Buccleuch Street in part of what became Pesco’s. In 1852 the firm are listed as writers on Buccleuch Street, as well as insurance agents for the British Guarantee and for North British. From about 1852 (although there is some confusion over this date) they were then in the upstairs offices of the Commercial Building at 4 Tower Knowe, and remained there until moving to 13 High Street in 1986. Latterly the firm has also been an estate agents. Their register of sasines for 1779–1840 is in the National Archives.

George. It was a stocking-shop, with the building later becoming part of Melrose’s engineering works.

George (jörr) n. name of 4 British Kings, George I (1660–1727) King from 1714, first of the house of Hanover. He was nominated as King by Queen Anne, under political pressure to bypass James Stewart. In 1714 the Council and Burgesses of Hawick had to swear an oath of allegiance to the new King. In opposition to his rule the Jacobite rebellion occurred in 1715, although with little support in the Borders. The King spent much of his life in Hanover, and never learned to speak much English – ‘Your Geordie was a German laird, That used to delve his ain kail yard!’ [T]. George II (1683–1760) King from 1727, son of George I. George III (1738–1820) King from 1760, grandson of George II. He initially took an active role in government (losing America for example). However, he had a nervous breakdown, suffered from the hereditary disease porphyria, and was declared insane in 1810. His domestic life was uncharacteristically tranquil, with his devoted wife Charlotte Sophia. It is recorded that a fiddler was paid for playing before the Bailies and Justices of the Peace in Hawick when he was proclaimed as King in 1760 and further money was paid for liquor at his accession to the throne in 1761. Hawick officials used to regularly celebrate his June 4th birthday with the ‘King’s Rantin’. Half-pennies of his reign were often counterfeit, merchants in Jedburgh refusing to accept them, leading to a legal battle in 1785, which went all the way to the Lords. George IV (1762–1830) King from 1820. He was appointed as Regent in 1811, with his father being unfit to rule. In Hawick there was a festive meeting to mark the occasion, with Bailie James Oliver proposing the toast ‘The Mucking o’ Geordie’s lyre’. In 1822 he became the first reigning monarch to visit Scotland since 1650. He stayed for 2 weeks at Dalkeith House as a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch. In Edinburgh, George IV Bridge was named after him. Obsese and unpopular, it was hoped his visit would calm the rising Radical movement in Scotland. The event was partly organised by Sir Walter Scott, and led to an upsurge in the use of tartan for formal occasions. He has been portrayed by Rupert Everett, Peter Ustinov and Hugh Laurie. George V King of Hanover (1819–78) son of Ernest Augustus, born 3 days after his cousin, Queen Victoria. His full name was George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, and like other members of his family, was usually considered to have no surname. He became blind in a childhood accident. He acceded to the Hanoverian throne in 1851, when he also became the 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He escaped to Austria when Hanover was annexed by Prussia in 1866. He married Princess Marie Alexandrina, daughter of Joseph, Duke of Saxe-Altenburg. He had one son, Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who became the 3rd and last Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He spent most of his last years in Paris, where he died. George VI (1865–1936) King from 1911. For his coronation celebrations in Hawick there was a procession from the Town Hall to the Old Parish Church, and then a parade up to the Mote for a ceremony in which the Duke of Buccleuch handed over that land to the town. George VII (1895–1952) King from 1936. He made a ‘secret’ visit to Hawick in 1943 to inspect the troops and returned in 1947 with Queen Elizabeth (the Queen Mother) and other members of the Royal Family, including the future Queen. His coronation in 1937 was marked in Hawick with a great parade of bands and floats, some of which exists on film. Trees were also planted in the Park, and a miniature silver spade used on this occasion (presented to Provost Fisher’s wife) is in the Museum.

Gib (gib) n. short form of Gilbert.

Gibb (gib) n. David Scobie, M.B.E. (1933–2007) born in Hawick, he was an apprentice at Braemar before doing National Service in the Air Force. He was later a traveller for Braemar before joining accountants John J. Welch & Co. in 1976, where he remained until retirement. He was well known locally as a singer, with a strong bass voice. He sung regularly at the Common Riding, particularly ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’, ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ and ‘Clinty’. He was a founder member of the Hawick Music Club, and heavily involved with the Hawick Amateur Operatic Society and P.S.A. Choir. He also sung with Carlisle’s Abbey Singers and the Border Television Choir. A committed churchman, he was Elder and Treasurer of Trinity Church. He received the M.B.E. for service to entertainment in 2002. He added music to James Y. Hunter’s poem ‘Hawick Lasses’ in about 2001 and sings the song on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’.

Gibson (gib-sûn) n. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (19th C.) Hawick man, famous for his angling skills, for whom the song ‘Lean Yeddie Gibson’ was written after his death while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s. He is buried in the old Kirkyard. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in the Flex in Hawick in 1726. John (1774–1814) born in Ayr. He was a soldier with the 94th Regiment of Foot. Posted to Hawick in 1795 (probably related to the French prisoners of war), he married Janet, daughter of Hawick butcher Gideon Renwick. Posted elsewhere, the couple returned to Hawick around 1802 and he worked as a naijer. He then re-enlisted, deserted, was press ganged into the navy, jumped ship, worked in Langholm and Kelso, and was acquitted for desertion. He was back in Hawick by 1810, and the family had 11 children. He is recorded as a naijer in 1810 when 2 of his unnamed children died. In late 1813 he murdered his wife at their home in the Mill Port, apparently accusing her 12th child of being fathered by a Frenchman, and of poisoning him. He was the last person to be hung in Hawick, the event taking place in the Haugh; this was unusual, and may in fact never have previously happened in the Town. He wrote ‘Some particulars of the life of John Gibson’ while awaiting execution. It is basically a screed on the evils of drink. Perhaps the only child to survive was Gideon, who was a witness to the murder, but at 10 years old too young to give evidence. John, W.S. (19th C.) solicitor who was an agent for the Buccleuch estates, in at least the period 1822–78. He was originally called ‘younger’. He was present at Branxholme at the banquet held in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. Miss (19th C.) teacher at the girl’s school at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. She could be inspiration for the poem ‘The Flower of Rule’ by Robert Allan. Rev. Mungo (c.1660–1735/6) graduating from Glasgow University in the early 1690s, he was ordained as minister of Abbot-rule Parish in 1698. He was translated to San-quhar in 1713, and remained there until his death (brought on by a stroke suffered in the pulpit). He had 2 sons, George and William, and 1 daughter, Janet. Robert (d.1810) stocking-maker in Hawick, son of Walter. His unnamed child died in in 1970. His Lass was Vivienne Young (sister of the 1963 Lass) and his Acting Father was Wattie Scott. Walter (18th C.) mason in Hawick. His son died in 1798. He may be the Walter who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1755. He could be the Walter, son of mason William, born in Wilton in 1723. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1766 he married Janet Laidlaw, who was from Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Armstrong and their son Walter was baptised in 1778. William (18th C.) mason in Wilton. He was at Tandlaw in 1708. He got married in 1707, his wife’s name not being recorded. However, his wife was later listed as Helen Roger. His children included: Robert (b.1708); Margaret (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Agnes (b.1719); Walter (b.1723);
and William (b.1725). William (d.1798) mason in Hawick, son of Walter. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798. He is probably the Wiltum born to Walter and Janet Miller in Wilton in 1723. Gideon’s (gib-sinz) n. temperance hotel of the early 20th century situated on North Bridge Street. It became the Kings Hotel sometime after WWII.

Gid (gid) n. short form of Gideon.
Giddenscleuch (gi-dinz-klooch) n. Gideonscleuch, farmstead near the of the side road from Teviothead, just before Merrylaw. The stream Giddens Cleuch joins the Teviot just there. 4 archaeological features, perhaps hut bases, were found on a broad terrace about 600 m south-west of the farm. The lands were listed in the early 16th century as part of those held by John Gled-stains of Cocklaw and that Ilk. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It was ‘Guiddinscle-uch’ among lands owned by the Elliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers
when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron (i.e. superior of these lands) in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch (along with Corriesike and Langbyre) when sold by William Elliott of Stobs to a group of Eliliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. They were among lands inerited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. John Thomson was there in 1724, David Scott in 1727, [blank] Moor’ in 1741 and John Scott in 1749. There were Armstrongs there in 1841 (the name means ‘the ravine belonging to Gideon’; it first appeared as ‘Guiddyniscleuch’ in 1509/10, is ‘Guddisclucht’ in 1519/20, ‘Guiddin-scleuch’ in the early 17th century, and later is ‘Guiddinscleugh’, transcribed ‘Gudduscleuch’ in 1620, ‘Gandiniscleuch’ in 1687, ‘Guiddinscleuch’ in 1692, ‘Gidinscleugh’ in 1694, ‘Gudinscleugh’ in 1698 and ‘giddens Cleugh’ in 1724; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Guddiscleuch’; there is presumably a connection with a local family that used Gideon as a first name, e.g. the Scotts of Harden).
Gideon Scott & Sons (gi-dee-in-skoe’insonz) n. Hawick millwrights, set up by Gideon Scott in the latter part of the 18th century. The premises were on the Cross Wynd. Gideon’s sons Gilbert and James were also millwrights. The firm’s assets were sequestered in 1842.

Gigson’s Flat (gie-sin-z-flaw) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as being vacant in the Gilboa Wud

1541 rental roll, where it is ‘Gigonis Flatt’ or perhaps ‘Gibisonisflatt’. The location is uncertain, but it is listed after Kilgarth.

Gilboa Wud (gil-bou-wud) n. name given to a large plantation to the north-east of Ruberslaw (the origin of the name is unclear, but it is may not be very old; it is marked ‘Gilbo Wood’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Gilchrist (gil-krist, -kr st) n. Rev. John (d.1746) from Dumfriesshire, he was son of Mungo in Holm of Dalgarno. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1713 and ordained there in early 1714, succeeding James Borland. In 1716 he was recorded in a ‘Lybell’ in Selkirk, against John and Andrew Riddell. He was a substitute preacher in Hawick in 1721, when the minister was ill. He dissented from the Act of Assembly of 1740 which deposed 8 succeeding ministers. He remained at Bedrule until his death, and was succeeded by George Dickson. His only daughter married John Cranston the minister of Ancrum.

the Gilded Chamber (thu-gil-deed-chamb-le) n. a series of get togethers taking place initially in a golden decorated room at the Greotel bar in 1966, which grew into an annual event. The event later moved to the Volunteer. It is a sing-song for men only, and traditionally accompanied by potted-meat sandwiches.

Gildhouse (gild-hows) n. former name for lands near the Ettrick valley, probably associated with the later farm of Gildiesgreen, between Hellmoor Loch and Upper Shaws Loch. They were formerly Crown lands, split into the Weststead, Middlestead and Eaststead. In 1479 Thomas Scott had remission for a fine for these lands. David, son of Walter Scott in Headshaw leased part of the lands in 1486. John Cranston of that Ilk leased part of the lands in 1492. Robert Scott of Stiches was leasing the Weststead in 1501, when that was referred to as ‘alias Dodbank’. In 1502 the eastern part was said to be known as Bailielee and was leasing the Weststead in 1501, when that was part of the lands in 1492. Robert Scott of Stirches lands in 1486. John Cranston of that Ilk leased the people listed before him were from the Hawick area.

Gildshaw (gild-shaw) n. lands in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. They are recorded as ‘Gildschaw’ in a rental roll of 1376, with a value of 6 shillings and 8 pence.

Giles (gilz) n. Rev. Alexander (1825–1915) born in Kennethmont, Aberdeenshire, son of farmer John, he was educated at Aberdeen University and New College, Edinburgh. He was minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk 1866–97. In 1878 he married Cecilia, daughter of John Dudgeon from Kensington-gate. He secondly married Catherine Macnaughton, daughter of Rev. Alexander Grierson. His children included: John dudgeon (1880–1940), a medical superintendent, who was killed in an air raid: and Alexander Falconer (1881–1963), a historian. He died in Edinburgh.

gill (gil) n. a unit of measurement equal to one quarter of a pint or about 142 millilitres for Imperial measures. Note that Scots gills were at one time about one third greater in quantity. Scottish bars generally served spirits in shots of one fifth of a gill, but some used one quarter. A metric measure of 25 millilitres is now more common. A ‘Hawick Gill’ was once a term for half an imperial pint – ‘Till gills intae half mutchkins turned, Half mutchkins intae bottles, An’ mair the wit an’ fancy burned The mair we wat oor throttles [WV], ‘To bide man, I had man, Though sair against my will, For fear that, owre dear that, I might buy the wedding gill’ [JoHa], ‘When I look back on time that’s past, On siller spent sae ill, I mourn that I, to mend the worst, Took aye anither gill’ [DA], ‘A gill inside his seark and a glint on his powe, Nín-nid-noddin’, and the merry fit tappin’ … ’[DH].

Gillan (gi-liu) n. Rev. James (c.1629–68) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1650, he became Minister at Cavers in 1657 or perhaps 1658. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy, and forced to leave the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He moved to Edinburgh, and then out to Currie for his health (and because outed ministers were then banned from the city). However, one night in 1668 he was seized by a group of soldiers, who claimed to be searching for the person... who had tried to assassinate Bishop Sharp (actually James Mitchell, after whom Mitchell’s Slack was named). They forced him to run back to Edinburgh at midnight and stand outside waiting for the West Port to open, after which he was imprisoned. The next day he was taken before the Privy Council, but dismissed by them when they realised the mistake. He died 2 days later, probably as a result of the harsh treatment he had received. His name was usually spelled ‘Gillon’. His sister Elizabeth married William Forrest of Norserk. It is unclear whether he was related to the later ministers of St. Boswells and Hawick, but he was unmarried. He may be buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Rev. Robert (1761–1824) born in St. Boswells, son of Robert who was minister there. He was educated at St. Mary’s College and Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained at Ettrick in 1787, where he was presented by Lord Napier. He was translated to Hawick in 1789, being presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. However, there is an existing letter from the Magistrates and Town Council to the Duke of Buccleuch, protesting the appointment, so he was presumably not a popular choice. Despite this, he remained until 1800, when he was accused of an irregularity of some sort and demitted his charge, moving to Edinburgh. Nevertheless, he remained one of the Orrock Trustees. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1790–97. There is a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. In 1793 he wrote an account of the town for the Old Statistical Account of Scotland, which contains valuable tidbits of information (including details of the beginnings of manufacturing in the town). He also wrote several books, including ‘An abridgement of acts of General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland from the year 1638 to 1802 inclusive’ (1803) printed in Hawick, ‘A short view of modern astronomy, for the use of schools and private classes’ (1814) and ‘A compendium of ancient and modern geography’ (1823). He also edited ‘The Scottish pulpit, a collection of sermons’ (1823). In 1798 he married Mannie (or Marion), daughter of William Campbell, minister of Lilliesleaf, and she died in 1845 at the age of 63. Their son Robert was born in Hawick and became an eminent minister of Inchinnan, Glasgow. Their other children were William, Margaret, Joseph (possibly the ‘Joseph Gillon, Esq. Edinr.’ who subscribed to Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808), Alexander Murray, Cauvin and Agnes Faquharson. Rev. Dr. Robert (1799–1879) born in Hawick, son of minister Robert. He studied at Edinburgh High School and University, was licensed in Selkirk in 1829 and ordained in Stamfordham, Northumberland in 1830. He was then minister at South Shiels, Holytown (Lanarkshire), Wishaw, Abbotshall (Fife) and then St. John’s (Glasgow) for 14 years. When a thunderstorm broke out during a fiery sermon he preached at Hawick during his early days, it is said that one parishioner remarked ‘Yon was grand scenery for Dr Gillan’s sermon’. He was active in social and political movements in Glasgow and was conferred with a doctorate of divinity by Glasgow University in 1853. He moved to the small parish church of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire in 1861, but continued to lecture broadly. He was presented with his portrait in 1870 and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1873. He published many of his sermons, including ‘A General Fast Sermon’ (1832) and ‘The Decalogue’ (1856). In 1833 he married Anne, daughter of George Green, minister at Carmunnock. She died in 1847 and he secondly married Laura, daughter of John Buttery of Woodville. His son George Green was chaplain in the East India Company. He died in Inchinnan Manse (also written ‘Gillon’).

Gillbeck (gil-bek) n. possible name for a farmstead in Liddesdale. It is transcribed as ‘Gillbeck’ in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it was combined with Nether Beck. In 1799 Gillside and Demainholm. It was formerly ‘Geilbraehead’. This was where the minister of the Castleton Burgher Kirk lived in the 1760s to the end of the 18th century, and where their first meeting house was built. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1821 and James Armstrong in 1841. Thomas Chapman was carter there in 1861 and Richard Telfer was there in 1868 (it is marked as ‘Guilbraehead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Geilbraehead’ in 1799).

Gillbraeheid (gil-brä-heed) n. Gillbraehead, farmstead in Liddesdale, of the B6357 between Gillside and Demainholm. It was formerly ‘Geilbraehead’. This was where the minister of the Castleton Burgher Kirk lived in the 1760s to the end of the 18th century, and where their first meeting house was built. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1821 and James Armstrong in 1841. Thomas Chapman was carter there in 1861 and Richard Telfer was there in 1868 (it is marked as ‘Guilbraehead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Geelbraehead’ in 1799).

Gillespie (gi-les-pee) n. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when she confessed to pulling the hair out of the head of Walter Lorraine. She was also accused of harassing another man at about the same time. She may be the Marion, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick in 1639. Robert (17th C.)
Brian (1957) son of George, Gillies (1805/6) born in Sicily, he was a clothes and furniture merchant in Hawick, at 8 Howegate. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a ‘broker’. In 1861 he was at 2 Howegate, listed as a clothier employing 11 men and 3 women. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children: Sarah; James; Robert; Charles; and John. In the 1841 census he is a pedlar at about No. 18 Howgate.
gillore (gi-lör) n., arch. galore, plenty, wealth (noted by J. Jamieson).
gill-maw (gil-maw) n., arch. a gourmand of coarse manners, guzzler — ‘...as a greedy gillmaw’, one who is not nice in his taste, but devours by wholesale, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also gull-maw and gollimer).

Gillon (gi-lin) n. Fr. Thomas (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1918–24. He was said to have been quiet, but well-respected in the Town. He moved to Linlithgow. His time as priest saw the introduction of the 1918 Education Act and the return of the survivors from the War (see also Gillan).

Gillshaw (gil-shaw) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Gilschaw et Burnhous’. It is unclear where these lands were, but possibly related to ‘Gillfoot’, ‘Gillhead’, etc.

Gillside (gil-sid) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the west bank of the river to the south of Mangerston. A carved stone found over the fireplace in the old cottage there is described in ‘Chronicle of the Armstrongs’. The area was formerly known as Nether Foulwood, and the stream to the west is still called Foulwood Sike. William Dalgleish lived there in the 1830s and 40s. The name may also be related to the lands of ‘Side’, which are marked to the west on Stobie’s 1770 map (probably the ‘Geelside’ where William Elliot and family lived in the early 1800s).

Gill Sike (gil-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises near Snaberlee Rig and runs roughly westwards to join the Hermitage Water near Leaugh.

Gillsteed (gil-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Gillesteede’, with a value of 2 shillings. This could be the dale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Gillesthaugh.

Gill-stowp (gil-stowp) n., arch. a tankard of about a ‘gill’ capacity — ‘The yill-cup, the gillede’, with a value of 2 shillings. This could be the same place as ‘Gillside’ or ‘Gillshaw’.

Gilmanscleuch (gil-munz-klooch) n. hamlet in the Ettrick valley, just north of the farms of Deloraine, and near where the Gilmanscleuch Burn meets the Ettrick. The farm was once a Crown property, from at least the 1456. It was assigned to James and Roger Alemoor in 1484, Steven Lockhart in 1486, Patrick Home of Fastcastle and Robert Lyle in 1490, Alexander, Lord Home in 1492, George Home in 1501 and Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. John Scott in Thirlestane claimed the tenancy there in 1541. A tower here was once home of a branch of the Scotts, with the land passing from the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch to Walter Scott of Harden in the late 16th century, when ‘Auld Wat’s’ youngest son (possibly John) was slain in a hunting match. He apparently said that the lands were worth a dead son. The lands (or perhaps the superiority) were later sold by John Scott of Harden to Anne, Duches of Buccleuch and passed to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch along with other lands in the Lordship of Ettrick Forest in 1735. The Scotts of Gilmanscleuch started with James in at least 1589, with William being the last in the early-to-mid 18th century. When Francis Scott inherited the lands from his father John in 1686 the lands were valued at £20 6s 8d (‘feudi-firmæ’). Adam Scott was tenant in 1737 and James Borthwick was a cottar there in 1752. James Scott was there in 1797. In 1802 it was valued at £67, when part of the Buccleuch estates. Adam and James Scott were joint tenants in the 1820s and 1830s. ‘Daft Jock Gray’ came from there; he was a singing beggar in the early 1800s. Henry Scott was farmer in the 1860s — ‘There’s Daft Jock Grey o’ Gilmanscleuch, And Davie o’ the Inch, And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG], ‘Warn Wat o’ Harden, and his sons, Wi’ them will Borthwick water ride; Warn Gaudilands, and Allanhaugh, And Gilmanscleugh, and Commonside’ [T]. In Gilmanscleuch, beneath the heuch, My fathers lang did dwell; Ay formost, under bauld Buccleuch, A foreign fae to quell’ [ES] (the origin is probably from ‘Gilmisson’s ravine’; also formerly written ‘Gilmerscleugh’ etc., it was ‘Gilmyischuche’ in 1456, ‘Gilynnischleuch’ in 1467, ‘Gilmyneischleuch’ in 1468, ‘Gilmyschleuch’ in 1477, ‘Gilynnyschleuch’ in 1484, 1488, 1501, 1502 and 1510, ‘Gylmyneischleuch’ in 1541, ‘Gilmynnyischleucht’ in 1558, ‘Gylminnyschleucht’ in 1581 and 1585, ‘Gilmesschleuch’ in 1609, ‘Gilmis-schleuch’ in 1644, ‘Gilmeschleuch’ in 1647, ‘Gilmenschleugh’ in 1656 ‘Gilmenschleuch’ in the late 1660s, ‘Gilmenschleugh’ in 1678, ‘Gilmenschleugh’ in 1690 and ‘Gillmenschuch’ in 1693; it is ‘Gilmenschuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

gilmockie (gil-no-kee) n. tower of the Arm-

Gilpin Horner (gil-pin-hor-nur) n. character of Scottish legend, said to be an evil goblin. He was the basis for the gothic page in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and said to be the inspiration for the whole work, when the future Lady of Buccleuch urged Scott to write a poem based on him.

gilravage (gil-raw-veej) v., arch. to create an uproar – ‘Gilravage... To raise a tumult, or to make much noise, Roxb. To rove about; to be unsteady; to act hastily and without consideration, Roxb.’ [JoJ], n., arch., poet. noisy merry-making, uproar – ‘Wi’ hynicritikil mokirs in thair gilravages, thaye naschet apon me wi’ their teeth’ [HSR], a disturbance, state of confusion – ‘Gilravage, Gilravitch, ...confusion, conjoined with destruction; as that of a sow, &c., destroying a garden, by rooting up the plants, Roxburgh’ [JoJ].

renberry. William Armstrong was tenant in 1694, with John Elliot also residing there. It was sur-viewed in 1718, along with other Scott of Bucucleich properties, when it was combined with Dinlees, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscote's lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The lands there were rented by William Elliot of Tarras from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. There is possibly an association with 'Chingills' or 'Gingills', although they were near Mangerton and in Ewesdale, respectively (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and is 'Ginglanwalls on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is 'Ginglenwalls' in 1694, 'Gingenwalls' in 1722 and 'Ginglanwalls' in 1736).

ginnele (gi-nul) v., arch. to catch trout (or other fish) by tickling (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. the

gird (gird) n. a wooden or iron hoop from a barrel or other wooden construction – 'Paid for girds to ye litter . . . 0 18 0' [BR1732], a hoop used as a children's toy when guided with a metal rod – 'gie's a go o eir gird', 'Oo'd aye hev a gird When the Store got in grapes' [??], 'Often as a boy I trundled my 'gird' past the Cross Keys Inn . . . ' [AL], 'At fower o'clock we'd oot wi' top or gird . . .' [WL], '. . .yur mother wad say 'away alang ti the Store' an ee wad take yur gir wu'ee' [BA] v., arch. to play with a hoop.

girdle (girdul) n., arch. a girdle – 'ane pot coffer' [DMW1681], 'That chairkin' throtle, make one's teeth tingle { `That chairkin'

skeelie gars iz girl' [GW], 'A duist hyit jarigin things, an that menseless road-injin fair garrd mei girrl!'

John Riddell of that Ilk in 1669 (also written 'Gin-gles' and variants; it is 'Gyngillis' in 1573).
The Girl I Left Behind Me

The Girl I Left Behind Me (\textit{thu-gi-rul-I-left-bee-lünd-née}) \textit{n.} tune that the Drums and Fifes play at certain times, popularised in the 1949 John Ford/John Wayne film ‘She Wore a Yellow Ribbon’. The song is known by many different names and is claimed to have either Irish or English origins. It is known to have been played by military drum and fife bands in the early 1800s and dates back to at least the late 18th century. It is one of the tunes specifically played on the Saturday, when the band march the Cornet and mounted supporters down the Loan.

girn (\textit{girn}) \textit{v.} to show the teeth in pain or effort, grimace, distort the face, complain peevishly, grumble, whine, cry – ‘stop yer girnin, wull ee?’ ‘John, whan he play’d, ne’er threw his face, Like a’ the giring piper race’ [CPM], ‘…And nickering, girnit with their muckle-rake teeth, Uncouthsome to the view’ [JTe], ‘I’m no acquaintance wi’ mealy pows; I was brought up wi’ tups and ewes, High up amang the heather cowes, Where winter girns’ [JR], ‘The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And giepit wi’ girning joye’ [JTe], ‘…Juist gang an’ look ye girnin’ fools, And see the big anes splashin’’’ [TCh], ‘…whan the grewsome gaishener ov a geizart, i the girnin Daith’s Heed . . .’ [ECS], ‘It girned at the red, and grat at the blue – But it gied a joyfu’ cry, And grup ahau’d o’ the green yin . . .’ [DH], n. a snarl, whine, whimper, grimace, distortion of the face – ‘The wall o’ the chanter’s a bairn’s penny blether, The girn o’ the drones is a lood bellin’ coo . . .’ [WL], a peevish fault-finding, person who is always complaining – ‘deh be sic a girn’.

girn (\textit{girn}) \textit{v.}, arch. to ensnare, catch in a trap – ‘The Lord is kennet bie the judgemints that he deth; the wicket is girnet in the wark o’ his ain han’s’ [HSR], ‘A met twae awfih sairious-on chiels, rale leike as ther seam was ti girn the bits o moppies skiltin aboot’ [ECS], \textit{n.}, poet. a snare, trap, girn – ‘If in my yard again I find them, By Mahomet, I swear I’ll pind them: Or catch them in a net or girn, Tills I find out the boost or birn’ [JR], ‘Thaye alsua that seik efter my liffe laye girns for me . . .’ [HSR], ‘Our saul læs moued aff as ane burd frae the girn o’ the fowlis; the girn is brokin, an’ we ar fairlie free’ [HSR].

girnel (\textit{gir-nul}) \textit{n.}, arch. a storage place for grain, garner – ‘Item, the said vmquhile Walter had, the tyme of his deceis in his girnals of Hassindane, the haill teindis of Hassindane and Kavers . . .’ [SB1574], ‘Item mair, in his girnale of Hawik, collectit be Johne Watson, of the crope and zeir of God foirsaid, fiftie-thrie bollis and fve pekxis mele . . .’ [SB1574], ‘That our girnalls may be fu’, affurdin’ a’ kinkind o’ provendir . . .’ [HSR] (also written ‘gernel’, ‘girnal’, ‘girnale’, etc.).

Girnside Bog (\textit{girn-süd-bog}) \textit{n.} former name for Greenside Moss, a formerly marshy part of the Common. This name was used in the 1788 Council records when the area was largely drained.

Girnside Hill (\textit{girn-süd-hil}) \textit{n.} hill on the north side of the Todrig Burn, between Wester and Easter Essenside, reaching a height of 266 m. Just north of the hill is Old Essenside, possible site of a former village, and on the southern slopes are the remains of a settlement.

Girnwud (\textit{girn-wud}), -wood \textit{n.} Girnwood, a farm at the end of the road through Deanburnhaugh in the Borthwick valley. The estate here was formerly connected with ‘Lyne’, so that ‘Girnwood and the Lyne’ was its name in the earliest records. It was formerly included within the Parish of Hassendale, transferring to the new Roberton Parish in 1689/90. The lands passed from Walter Dalglish ‘of Greenwood’ to Adam Turnbull in 1439. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne leased the lands to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1488, but keeping 1 acre in the north parts of both Greenwood and Lyne for himself. Alexander, 2nd Lord Home was granted these lands in 1492/3, after being resigned by Sir Thomas Turnbull. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home succeeded to these and other lands in 1506. William, son of William Turnbull of Minto sold the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532/3. In 1535 George, Lord Home regained the lands through royal revocation of the previous charter. The lands were held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the late 16th century, and were stated in 1574 to be in the Barony of Minto; they were at that time valued at £10 and held of the King by service of ward and relief. The Scotts of Girnwood were tenants for about 200 years. James Chisholme of Girnwood is recorded in 1605. The lands of ‘Grenwode et Lyne’ were inherited in 1634 by Francis Earl of Buccleuch from his father, then passed to his daughters Mary and Anne, and ‘Girnwood and the Lyne with thair pertinentis’ were listed among the possessions of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in her 1663 marriage contract. There were ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Clerk, John Govenlock, Marion Stoddart, Isobel Nivison, Bessie Renwick, Margaret Brown, Robert Hislop, Margaret Laidlaw and Janet Hislop. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. Adam Elliot was tenant in 1688. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1694, and James Aitchison was also a resident at that time. Francis Beattie and James Aitchison were there in 1703, Thomas Chisholme in at least 1710–16 and Robert Scott and John Laurie in at least 1716–18. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 603 acres (with 100 acres of ‘corn land meadow and pasture’), bounded by Outersiderig, Henwoodie common and Hoscote. Walter Scott was there in 1726. John Tait was there in 1735 and Henry Paterson in 1742. The tenant reported flood damage to the crops there in 1745. Robert Mitchellhill was there in 1757 and Andrew Goodfellow in 1766. Walter Scott is recorded there in 1797 and was tenant until his death in 1818. James Glendinning was shepherd there in 1808. Another Walter Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. Provost William Scott Nichol farmed there for a time, and there are memorial cairns there for him and his brother. The western-most section of the Catrail is near here, with part to the north now planted over, and reaching towards a tributary of the Dean Burn, while a long shallow section is also visible to the south; however, there have been debates about precisely which sections might have been part of the Catrail, and which might have been later boundary ditches. There is also another similar linear earthwork above the farm to the west, on the southern slopes of Girnwood Hill. There is a waterfall to the west of the farm, on Girnwood Linn, this probably being the associated place referred to in old documents as ‘the Lyne’. Just to the north east is a small unnamed loch, with enclosures nearby, while Girnwood Loch lies much further, behind Girnwood Hill (formerly spelled ‘Girnwoode’ and other variants, it first appeared as ‘Grenwode’ in 1315, becoming ‘Grenewoord’ in 1439, ‘Grenwod’ in 1488, ‘Grenewoord’ in 1493, ‘Grenewod’ in 1535, ‘Grenewod et Lyn’ in 1574, ‘Grinwood’ in 1636, ‘Greinwood et Linn’ in 1661 and ‘Girnwood’ in 1710; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Girnwoode’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Girnwoode’, is ‘Girnwood’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is bizarrely shown twice on Roy’s c.1750 map; the origin is Old English ‘grene wudu’, meaning ‘the green wood’).

Girnwud Linn (girn-wud-lin) n. steep gorge on part of the Hoscote Burn to the west of the farm of Girnwood. It also contains a waterfall. It is probably the place referred to from early times as ‘the Lyne’. On the north side of the stream, near the bottom of the gorge is a roughly semi-circular earthwork, consisting of a ditch with a bank on each side. It measures about 75 m by 50 m, there is an entrance at the south-east end and it is best preserved at the north-west end. The interior has been ploughed and so there is no trace of any building foundations. There is a linear earthwork extending from here to more than half-way to Girnwood farm, the eastern end being the best preserved. The same earthwork may also have crossed the Linn, and extend towards Black Sike to the west. It has been suggested to have been related to the Catrail, but is clearly a less substantial boundary line.

Girnwud Loch (girn-wud-loch) n. small loch north-west of Girnwood farm, draining into the Hoscote Burn. North of here are remains of a linear earthwork, consisting of a bank and ditch, and stretching about 170 yards along a dyke to a point near the Ale Water; however, it has been destroyed by forestry plantation. This earthwork may have helped fuel the notion that the Catrail continued beyond Girnwood (it is marked, but not named, on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

girny (gir-nee) adj. complaining, peevish, cankerous, whiny – ‘And bonny scab, bairn-high, Whiter than whey, On a girny simmer’s day Wi’ a tear in its ei’ [DH], ‘Mother I think had no cash and Mary Ritchie had a severe girny old father’ [JeC].

gir (gir) n., arch. a hoop used as a child’s toy – ‘...it was customary in carrying a couple of stoupes to use a ‘girr’ or hoop ...’ [V&amp;M], ‘They cauna play at cat and bat, And a’ their girds are hid the noo’ [WFC] (a variant of gird).

girsel (gir-sul) n. gristle – ‘A ca’ chowe this girsel’, v., arch. to become hard with frost – ‘The ground is said to girsle, when it is crisped with hoar frost’ [JL] (also written ‘girsle’; this is an example of metathesis).

Glack (glawk) n. former name used for a local branch of the Scotts, apparently the same as Clack, closely related to the Scotts of Fenwick. The seat was ‘Glack’ in Peeblesshire, but the family also owned Fenwick and Highchesters in the mid-to-late 17th century – ‘…Then he married a wife according to his mind, And betwixt them twa they did procreate Headshaw, Askirk, Sinton, and Glack’ [CWS], ‘Oh! the laird of Glack, he must not be omitted, Though he sold the land of Goldieland long e’er he got it’ [CWS] (perhaps from Gaelic ‘glaic’, a hollow; there are several Glacks elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Glak’ in 1581 and 1585, ‘Glaic’ in 1597 and ‘Glak’ and ‘Glake’ in 1609).

Glausur (glow-sur) n. Beat Swiss linguist, with a particular interest in regional British dialects. He visited Hawick during his researches in 1970, received his Ph.D. from the University of Basel in 1972, and published ‘The Scottish-English Linguistic Border’ in 1974. He states that dialect of the Hawick area is ‘the most unadulterated language in the whole of Europe’. He became Professor of English Linguistics at the University of Heidelberg. A reference to him appeared in ‘The Broons’ cartoon strip.

glebe (gleeb) n., arch. a piece of land to which the minister of a parish had rights – ‘James Scott redar foresaid ... to the foresaid parochie kirk of Askirk and ... and gaif to him full write and actuall possession and institution of the said personage and vicarage mass gleib and kirkland of the said parochekirk’ [SPB1580], ‘...many portions of the new allotments on the glebe lands are infested with it’ [JAHM] (also gleib).

Glebe (gleeb) n. former name for lands in Southdean Parish. John ’Boe’ (i.e. Bowie) was there in 1776. It may have been the former glebe lands of Abbotrule Kirk.

The Glebe (thu-gleeb) n. popular name for Glebe Mills, or for any of the pieces of land that were once owned by the parish church, particularly the Auld Glebe in the West End – ‘Oo speak aboot the weather Then as time gauns on Oo find oor speakin’ aboot the Glebe Where oo played at the fit o’ the Loan’ [AY].

Glebeheid (gleeb-heed) n. land at the head of the glebe lands in Roberton, to the east of the manse. A couple of separate buildings are marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Glebe Mills (gleeb-mills) n. knitwear factory built on a piece of land on the south of the Teviot, which was originally part of the endowment for Wilton Parish Church. First constructed in 1873 by Richardson, Noble & Co. (which company had previously operated out of Stonefield Mill), it was much extended by other companies, including Pringle’s, who are the current owners. Pringle’s purchased the factory in 1962 and started men’s knitwear production there a year later. It was extended in 1968. The gatehouse was designed by J.P. Alison.

Glebe Mill Street (gleeb-mill-streec) n. street along the south side of the Teviot, built in 1877 beside Glebe Mills, on land previously belonging to Wilton Church.

Gledsnest (gledz-nest) n. farmstead adjacent to Colterscleuch, formerly in Cavers Parish, now in Teviothead. It was locally known as ‘the Nest’. John Grieve and family lived there from at least the 1820s to 40s. John Hume was farmer there in the 1860s. It is run as a bed and breakfast guest house (presumably related to gled, although also suggested to have obtained the name from being build by a Gledstains).

Gled’s Nest (gledz-nest) n. area at the head of March Sike, in the headwaters of Northope Burn. Now deep within Craik Forest, it is on the edge of Roxburghshire.

the Gledstain Porch (thu-gled-stin-pörch) n. burial aisle of the Gledstains family, forming the southern transept of Cavers Old Kirk. It is referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of 1524, and was probably even older. This once important family had lost almost all its estates and influence by the mid-18th century and the heritors had the aisle demolished.
Probably the same Alexander is recorded as witness to a sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, along with Matthew and Cuthbert; he is listed between the Chaplain and Notary, so perhaps he held some official role. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess who witnessed transactions several times in Selkirk in the period 1531–41. He was on an inquest there in 1536/7. In 1540 he bought a tenement in Selkirk from Alexander Lauder and his wife Marion Hay and resolved a dispute with them in 1544. In 1541 he resigned a tenement in favour of his wife Katherine Fairley and in 1543/4 he and Fairley ‘his kinsman’ made a bond of payment. In 1542 and 1543 he received payment for bolls of barley. In 1561 he promised to pay back the £10 Scots he had borrowed from his son and heir, John. In 1562 he assigned a tenement to George Halliwell. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess in Selkirk, who was probably related to the earlier Alexander. He was ‘elder’ in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving Marion, widow of William Scott, Burgess of Selkirk and another involving Scott of Haining and Scott of Goldielands. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk of that name who in 1580 gave up an annual rent in Selkirk in favour of John Scott in Whithope. Also in 1580 he was ‘elder burgess’ when, with the consent of his wife Katherine Turnbull, he gave a tenement in Selkirk to his daughter and heir Helen. Furthermore, in 1580 he was executor for the will and inventory of Janet, who may have been widow of a man called Dunn; he was left 56 shillings, while his daughters Helen and Margaret were left £6 and £4, respectively. It seems like he was a close relative of Janet, such as her brother. In 1581 his daughter Helen is recorded receiving redemption money from him and he also resigned a tenement to Helen and her husband Thomas Dobie. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. Also in 1581 he was among those chosen to make a ‘stent roll’ in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he and his daughter Helen declared that they had received money from several people, including from the testament of ‘Dony Gledstanim’. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Helen and Gavin ‘Gledstanim late of Stobbis’ (who sold Stobs to Gavin Elliot); the couple were to receive his tenement in Selkirk (although he reserved the liferent for him and his wife), while the groom would bring 400 merks. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as ‘younger’ in Selkirk in 1579 and as ‘younger burgess’ in 1580 and 1580/1. He may have been son or other near relative of the earlier Alexander. Andrew (15th C.) listed as ‘And. de Gledstane’ in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed on the ‘retour of inquest’ performed at Cavers in 1497/8 for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. John of Winningtonhall is also listed and so possibly a close relative. Ann (c.1780–1850) daughter of John, the Town Clerk. Her and her sister Christian were served heir to their father in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809. However, in 1811 she was probably the ‘Miss Gladstanes’ listed along with ‘Mrs. Richardson’ as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. With her sister, she later lodged with Wintrup the tailor in an old house where the Orrock Church was built. They were known locally as ‘the last of the Gledstanes’. Her sister was said to have died unmarried, although some accounts say she married Richardson (so perhaps there was another sister). She herself married John Scott, ‘Jock the Turk’. In about 1874 her family’s former lands (presumably on the High Street) were listed belonging to ‘Feuars of Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes’ Lands’. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald of Gledstanim’ in the 1500 appraisal of the lands of Whithope. It is unclear how he was related to the other Gledstanes. Probably the same Archibald was on the panel of ‘retour’ in 1517 for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Bransonholme. He may be the son of John, who was nephew of John of that Ilk and Cocklaw, mentioned in connection with a raid on the lands of Cademuir and Hundleshope in 1518. Archibald of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) resident of Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is recorded as ‘Mr Archibald Gledstanes’ (presumably an error for ‘Gledstanes’) and he was taxed on 3 hearths. The ‘Mr’ is probably just suggesting that he was a landowner, rather than being a a preacher or teacher. Probably the same ‘Mr’ Archibald was witness to a baptism for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1671 and in 1685 when he (along with James of that Ilk) witnessed a baptism for John of Hillslesland. He was again ‘Mr’ in 1696 and 1697 when he leased the farm of Northhouse from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was also in Northhouse when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1698. He was still ‘Mr’ and ‘of whitla’ when he (along with James Gray... in Whitlaw) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Anderson in 1706. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500, along with George and William, to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. Christian (d.1816) daughter of Town Clerk John. Her and her sister Ann were served heir to their father in 1808 (their brother James presumably dying before that). Some accounts say that she died unmarried, but she appears to have married manufacturer Walter Richardson. In 1811 she was probably the ‘Mrs. Richardson’ listed along with ‘Miss Glestanes’ as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick.

Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Gledstains’ when he was witness to a Cranston family sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. David (15th C.) received 3 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He may be the same ‘Dauid Gledstanis’ who witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1500. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. She was recorded in 1532 as mother of Andrew Brydon, when her son agreed to pay her, with the money related to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps as laird of the associated land). Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk, and mother of Mark Ker. In 1534 she donated her liferent of a tenement and orchard in Selkirk to the chapel there. She also produced a charter for her lands ‘of Wr.’ in Huddleshope before ‘bailie James Gledstanis and lord superior of the same’; this may have been James of that Ilk, who was perhaps her brother or father. The witnesses included Richard and John, who were probably also relatives. Probably the same Elizabeth in 1537 promised to follow her letter of assignation to Robert Turnbull regarding wards, reliefs and non-entry of Philiphaugh. Lient. Francis (d.1645) father of Walter the Town Clerk, and brother of Capt. James. At age 21 (or perhaps 29) he was killed at the Battle of Aulderne, near Nairn, fighting for the Covenanters army alongside Douglas of Cavers and nine other local gentlemen. He married Margaret Stewart, and his son Walter Francis was born in Hawick in 1642.

Francis of Whitlaw (17th C.) probably directly related to John of Whitlaw who died in about 1672. He may have been son of an earlier John. He is easy to confuse with the Francis of Whitlaw (son of John) who was born in 1643. He may be the ‘francis Gledstaines’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He managed the Cavers estates when ‘the Good Lady Cavers’ was in prison for her covenanting principles. He served as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton in 1657–59, taking over from his father, who was certainly dead by 1660 (according to a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1661 it is recorded that he owed about £3500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Hassendean and elsewhere, where he and his late father had been Chamberlain. In 1671 he was Bailie of the Regality of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig when there was a court of Regality held in Hawick. Francis of Whitlaw (b.1643) son of John, with his mother possibly being Anna Scott. He was also referred to as being ‘of Flex’. It is unclear how he was related to the Francis who was recorded in the previous few decades. In 1672 he was served heir to his father John of Whitlaw in the lands of the Flex (perhaps suggesting that there is more than one generation here). He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hawick Parish in 1678 for £266 13s 4d. He may be the same Francis of Whitlaw who was recorded several times in the 1690s and until about 1704. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes ‘Wiggam’ and their daughter Isobell was born in 1670. It is possible he is the Francis ‘servitor to Falnesh’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson (younger in Castlehill) in 1709. Francis of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier Francis of Whitlaw. In 1692 he leased the farm of Meikle Whitlaw (which he held for service for his lifetime) as well as Little Whitlaw. He is recorded providing timber for repairing the town Tolbooth in 1692, as well as timber ‘for mounting of the steeple where the bell hings’; this was valued at £40, making him the first name among the subscribers of the new bell, listed on the enactment of the Council in 1694. Also in 1692 he made a proposal to the Town Council that he be allowed to enclose part of his land, but also including ‘a little brae upon our syd of the march betwixt him and us’; he would plant trees there, with the agreement that the Town receive half of the timber, when it was ready to chop down. He seems likely to be the local Gledstains who was taxed for 5 hearths at his house in 1694. His brother may have been Archibald, and although it is unclear if he had any children, it is possible that James and John may have been his sons. He witnessed baptisms for tenants at the Flex in 1700 and 1702, for apothecary Walter.
Scott in 1703 and for gardeners (for Gideon Scott in Fenwick) Walter Paterson in 1704. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, on a list of Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and may be the Francis of Whitlaw who was still a Commissioner in 1704. It is possible he was the Francis in Braidhaugh, servant to the Laird of Fahnash, who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1707 (for James Stevenson, tenant in Harwood and for the tenant and shepherd in Slaidhills). Scott of Satchells dedicated a chapter of his history to him. A sundial belonging to him was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection; it bore the initials ‘F.G.’, the motto ‘Fide et Virtute’ and the date 1693. Francis (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1683 he was fined for attacking Bailie Thorbrand and for ‘violentlie taking 4 dukes [presumably ducks] on the street, which the bayleyea had first caught’. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Andrew Angus. He was listed as a wright among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Francis on the east side of Hawick, who appears on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was fined by the Kirk Session for being found drinking in a public house after 10 o’clock; however, he ‘protested yt. he was not in drinke’. He could be the Francis in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for carrier William Rae (along with smith John Scott).

He witnessed further baptisms in 1712 for Bailie James Burn and for William Sanderson, in 1716 for smith John Scott, in 1718 (along with smith John Scott) for weaver Walter White and in 1719 for gardener John Tait. He married Marion Scott and their children included: William (b.1678); Christian (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); Helen (b.1684); John (b.1686); and James (b.1689). Witnesses to the 1680 baptism were Mr. John Purdom and tailor Walter Gledstains, in 1682 were ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ (probably the Town Clerk, suggesting that they were related), shoemaker Thomas Turnbull and John Riddell and in 1684 were Walter again and ‘student’ William. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1723 he married Helen Allan, whose surname is given as ‘Allan or Bridges’. Their children included: Margaret (b.1725); and John (b.1728). He could be the Francis, son of John and Margaret Harkness, born in 1685. He could be the Francis, innkeeper, who was a Bailie in the 1730s and 1740s and who in 1723 witnessed a baptism for weaver John Weens. He was one of the ‘present Bailies’ in 1742 (along with Robert Boyd) when he witnessed baptisms for Rev. William Somerville and for merchant John Ruecastle. Francis (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Skelfhill in 1745 when his daughter ‘Kathren’ was baptised. It is possible he was the same as one of the other Francises. Francis (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who was Cornet in 1744. He may be the Francis, son of Thomas and Bessie Sanderson, born in Hawick in 1718. It was stated in the Town Book that he was ‘to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after’, this being perhaps the first indication of events taking place on Common Riding Saturday. He is probably the merchant Francis who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for druggist Gideon Scott, in 1742 for gardener Alexander Donald and in 1745 for James Riddell (at Menslaws). He was listed as a merchant in the baptismal record for one of his children in 1746. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children baptised in Hawick included Thomas (b.1746) and Sarah (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant Gideon Scott and ex-Bailie Robert Howison and in 1747 were merchants Gideon Scott and Charles Tudhope. Gavin of Stobs (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He is also recorded in 1580 when he sold the lands of Stobs (for 400 merks) to Gavin Eliott, who became the first Eliott Laird there. In 1581 there was a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for him in inherit the lands of Stobs from his brother George; this was witnessed by Gavin Elliot of Baillielie (to whom he sold Stobs) and other Eliotts, as well as 2 tenants in Swinstead. In 1581/2 he was ‘late of Stobbis’ (suggesting that the sale of the land to Gavin Eliott had already happened) when there was a marriage contract between him and Helen, daughter of Alexander, Burgess in Selkirk. The couple were to be given a tenement in Selkirk by Alexander, while he was to bring 400 merks as part of the arrangement. It is possible that he was related in some way to the Gledstains of Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded in 1484/5 as a witness to Walter Ker of Cessford assigning Dolphinston to his son Mark. It is unclear how he was related to other members of the family. Probably the same George (along with William and Bartholomew) was witness to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton in 1500. He could be related to the George who had sasines for Craig in Dumfriesshire in 1458 and 1459. He may be the ‘Gorgoni de Gledstanys’ who leased Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1471. George (15th/16th C.) obtained a sasine for the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire in 1503, this being granted by Ninian Glendinning. It is unclear which lands are referred to here. In 1510 he witnessed a charter for this same Ninian Glendinning, for lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh. He may be the ‘George Gladstanes’ listed in 1526 as a brother of Adam Scott in Clarilaw and William Scott, when a large number of Borderers had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; this would suggest he was a step-brother or brother-in-law (i.e. he married a daughter of James of Kirkurd). He may be the George who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. George (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from another George, but right before Walter, who is probably related. George of Stobs (d. bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his brother Gavin received sasine for his lands of Stobs. It is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains. George of Dod (17th C.) possibly son of Walter. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. In 1643 he is recorded paying tax for lands valued at £180 in Cavers Parish; these appear to have been Dod and Hunthill, which were disjoined before 1707. He may be the Laird of Dod whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £700, and whose mother was listed as life-renter of lands in Kirkton Parish, valued at £200. He is recorded as heir to Walter of Dod in 1649 when he was infefted in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William, Earl of Lothian. He may have been father of Mary who married George Scott of Synton. He may have been father of Abraham of Hunthill, who was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in 1676. Gorgon (d.1456) probably a son of the Laird of Gledstains. He was described as ‘Gorgon de Gledstanys of Hundwellishop’, and must have held the family lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. After his death the property passed into the King’s ward. He was mentioned in relation to the lands in a later charter of 1471. Herbert ‘de Gladstone’ (13th/14th C.), the earliest recorded Gladstone, from the county of Lanark, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore an 8-leaved flower and the name ‘SHERB D’GLEDSTAN’. He probably gained the family lands in the Parish of Liberton, about 4 miles north of Biggar. His exact descendants are uncertain, but were known to be in Roxburghshire in 1336. It is likely that he received his Lanarkshire lands from the Douglases, because of the close connection between the families for many subsequent generations; this may also have been the origin of the move to lands in Roxburghshire. The name Herbert occurred many times later in the Dumfriesshire and Peeblesshire branches. Herbert (15th C.) rendered the accounts of Annandale in the Exchequer Rolls for 1455. He is referred to as ‘eodem’, i.e. ‘of that Ilk’ in 1456 when he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell. He was probably the Bailie of Dumfries, whose great-grandson Mark was served heir in 1610 (as well as to the lands of his son, also Mark). James (d. bef. 1437) 6th of that Ilk, son of William, and younger brother of John and Thomas (although this is uncertain). He was witness to a charter along with his brother Thomas in 1404 (regarding the rights of Melrose Abbey for the benefits of Cavers Parish), and resided at Cocklaw in Cavers Parish. He was the owner of the tower during the famous siege of Cocklaw (i.e. Ormiston) by the Percys in 1403. Also in 1403 he was probably the ‘James of Gladstanis’ appointed as bailie of the regality of Sprouston for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1413 he is recorded as holding the position of Bailie to the 4th Earl of Douglas, in the Regality of Sprouston, and possibly also in the Barony of Cavers (like his forefathers held for their Douglas superiors). In 1424 he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick for lands in Hownam. He married Janet Murray, who was involved in a law-suit against the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1437 over ownership of East Mains. The next generation is uncertain, but his grandson was probably John of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He must also have been related to Alexander who lost the lands of Flex and ‘Kirkton Mains’ to the Baron in another court case of 1464/5. James of Cocklaw (d. bef. 1544) son of John. In 1519 he entered into a marriage contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, to marry his son and heir John to one of Sir Walter’s daughters, or failing that any other woman Sir Walter selected; this involved a promise to give lands in Peeblesshire and Cavers to the couple, with Sir Walter promising to try to preserve the lands of Cocklaw intact in future. The Peeblesshire lands were in the barony of Hundleshope and the Cavers lands were ‘Guddiscacht, Vnishop, Binkiks and Langbittis’. He may be the James described as ‘lord superior of the same’ in 1533 when Elizabeth (wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk) produced a charter for her lands in Hundleshope. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was said to have been in possession of Cocklaw in 1534, when a fresh seal was added to the deed granting Hundleshope to John Turnbull, hence confirming him in those lands. Although the family no longer had the lands of Gledstanes in Lanarkshire, they were still called ‘of that Ilk’, and Arthurshiel, a neighbouring property was still owned by a branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son John, who is recorded as his heir in a dispute in 1544 with Robert Scott in Howford. James of Cocklaw (1547-c.1615) son of John. He was 12th of that Ilk. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the James of Cocklaw who signed the bond uniting against the Liddesdale thieves in 1569. In 1569 he gave surety for Archibald Elliot of Corriesike (along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who was surety for other Elliots) and was found liable when he failed to appear, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay the £1000. Along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he gave security for the appearance of a number of Hawick residents (Allan Deans, John Scott, son to Philip’s Jock, and Johnnie Cavers) in a court case in Edinburgh in 1571, possibly connected with a raid. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571, had ‘surety in relief’ in 1571 and 1574 and served as surety in 1576. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and the Regent (and not to assist Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst), with his surety being William Ker of Caverton. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. In 1574 he served as surety for a large number of Borderers, specifically residents of Hummelknowes, Coliforthill and Adderstoneshie; he was found liable to pay 5000 for not removing the thieves (who were mostly Croziers). In 1574 he was on the returns for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his father Sir Walter Scott. He was the ‘little Gladstane, good in need’ who led the local contingent at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. The land near Bonchester known as ‘Little Gledstains’ may be connected with him in some way. He was a prominent Borderer of his time, his name being mentioned 32 times in the Register of the Privy Council, in connection with either Roxburghshire or Peeblesshire. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains who was on the defence side in the trial of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in 1577/8. In the 1570s he was one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee, as well as George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’, and John Stoddart, ‘cobilman to the Lard of Langlandis’. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was declared liable for the fines associated with the pledges made in 1576. Also in 1578/9 he was cautioner for Robin Elliot of Redheuch, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1580 he, Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council about Muckle Whitlaw being raided; they raised the fray, following the thieves to England. However, on their return through Liddesdale they were attacked by a band of Armstrongs and Elliots near Whitaugh. He was probably in the party that rode off to follow the raiders, and his brother Walter was killed. One of his farms was raided by Elliots and Armstrongs in 1580, as well as the farm tenanted by John Gledstains at Whitlaw. Also in 1580 he complained (along with the Countess of Bothwell and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George Scott of Synton and Walter Scott of Stiches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whitaugh; they were all charged to appear before the Privy Council with assurances for their supporters. He was a cautioner (although with Robert and Mungo, Burgessess of Edinburgh) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for his tenant Thomas Burnet and others in his 3 husbandlands in Hundleshope, that John Scott there would not harm them. He was the Laird of Gledstains who gave assurances in 1584 for himself and other Gledstains, with the Elliot chiefs standing as assurance. He was probably the Laird of ‘Gledstanis’ listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’ and is also probably the ‘James Gledstains’ who was witness in 1595 to the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1594/5 he made a bond that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Eliott of Stobs or William Eliott of Horsleyhill; this was signed at Hawick. In 1605 he was in court with the family of Thomas Peebles, Burgess of Peebles, who was murdered in 1561, with the family still seeking satisfaction; his sureties were John of Winningtonnairg and John Rutherford, Bailie of Jedburgh. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Seal no less than 32 times, in connection with both Roxburghshire and Peebleshire. He was regularly fined (e.g. in 1608 along with Horsburgh of that Ilk and Halden of that Ilk, binding them to keep the peace), imprisoned and denounced as a troublemaker, although he lived to a reasonably old age. In 1610 he and William Scott of Howpasley had an action against them by James Douglas of Drumlanrig for not paying taxes on their lands of ‘Ramseclewis, Howpasley and Schawis’, and on his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping peace in the Borders. In 1614 he resigned his lands of ‘Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun’ and land at the east end of Peebles to his son James, younger, and his wife; this suggests he was quite old by then. He was succeeded by his son James (who was succeeded after only a few years by Walter). His daughter Margaret married David, son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope according to a marriage contract of 1593 (not 1567 as in one record). Another daughter Lilias married Richard Rutherford ‘Dickon Draw-the Sword’, who led the Jedburgh contingent at the Raid of the Reidswire. He may also be the James of Cocklaw whose daughter Barbara married John, younger son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. James of Cocklaw (c.1584–c.1620) son of James, he was the 13th of that Ilk. He led a similar life to that of his father, committing theft, murder, etc. However, he was Laird of Cocklaw for only a few years. In 1606 he was ‘appeirand of Coklaw’ when he served as cautioner for Thomas Turnbull (younger of Wauchope) who was accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood. He was still ‘apparent of Cocklaw’ in 1608 when he appeared for Archibald Douglas and others, swearing not to harm anyone in Peebles. In 1614 he was granted the lands of ‘Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun’ which had been resigned by his father James, elder, together with his wife Beatrice Ker. In 1616 he (or perhaps his father) was on the jury for the trial of the ruffians hired by Jean Scott of Satchells and Lady Scott of Howpasley to mutilate the sheep and cattle belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1618 he was said to be son and heir of James, and former owner of the lands of Hundleshope and others in Peebleshire, when John Scott had a charter from James VI. He was probably the James who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1620s. He married Beatrix Ker in about 1607, and hence Beatrix, who married James Grieve of Commonside, may have been his daughter. He was succeeded by Walter of Cocklaw and may have also had sons Robert and James. In 1620 Beatrix Ker (presumably his widow by then) and her 3 sons William, Robert and James, led an assault on the old lands near Peebles that the family had disputed for generations. Bailie James (16th/17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick recorded in 1627, along with Robert Scott. They were the Town’s Bailies when 16 men from Hawick were listed as being ‘idle and masterless’ and appropriate for sending to the wars in Germany. When the men were not produced he said that ‘he had not power, force nor friendship within the town of Hawick to apprehend the persons abonewritten or to exhibite thame’; it is unclear exactly what that meant (since it also states that the other Bailie did have ‘both power and friendship within the town’). He is probably the James who acted as witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. Capt. James (d.1645) grandfather of Walter the Town Clerk, he must have been a near relative of the Lairds of Cocklaw. He was part of Sir William Douglas’ Covenanter force, and was killed at the Battle of Aulderne along with his brother Francis. James (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He married Marion Tudhope about 1668 and her will is recorded in 1682. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane...
Forrest and their children included: Alexander (b.1670); and Gavin (b.1673). Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Councillor and Magistrate in the 1660s and Magistrate in the 1670s. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be the ‘Baylyea Gladstaines’ recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He is probably the ‘late baylyea’ in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the ‘Bailieyea Gladstaines’ who paid tax on 2 hearths in the east-side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James, married to Isobel ‘Whillance’ (i.e. Whillans), whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1673); Isobell (b.1675); John (b.1677); James (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). Probably Rachel (b.1683), with the mother’s name given as ‘Helen Whillance’ was also his daughter. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688 and another for John Aitchison in 1682. He was ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. James (17th C.) of Hummelknowes. Recorded in a letter to Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1692. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laing in 1700. James (b.1701), Janet (b.1703), Euphan (b.1706) and Bessie (b.1710) could have been his children. For the 1703 baptism he was recorded being in Whitehaugh and the witnesses were James Gray in Whitlaw and Francis Henderson in Flex. James (d.bef. 1734) 16th of that Ilk and Laird of Cocklaw, probably son of William. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his Scott history to him in 1686. He registered arms in the period 1672–78. He was probably the Laird in 1678 who paid the land tax on £1240 in Cavers Parish. His brother John became a tailor’s apprentice in 1681. He may be the Gladstains of ‘Ormistoun’ who was among the local lairds who were taken off to Edinburgh Castle as supporters of the Covenanters in 1683. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He (along with ‘Mr Archibald’) witnessed a baptism in 1685 for John of Hilliesland. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for doctor William Scott in Hawick in 1687, along with ‘Town Clerk Walter’. He was ‘of Cocklaw’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. He was certainly still living in 1707, when he is recorded as gaining permission to cart divots off the Common. However, a Robert ‘of that Ilk’ is recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704, so the succession is unclear around this time. He supposedly died unmarried, perhaps shortly before 1734 when his property was divided among his heirs; however, it is possible he died earlier and was succeeded by Robert (perhaps a younger brother). Cocklaw passed to Janet Gladstains, who was either his daughter or perhaps the daughter of Robert. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. The witnesses were John of Whitlaw (who was probably related) and ex-Bailie James Scott. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Dodburn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (b.1731), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he is the same man as the blacksmith in Hawick in the 1720s. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. In 1735 he was paid by the Council ‘for making ye coulter’ (presumably for using on the Common). He married Janet Moscrop and their children included: Bessie (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. He could be the James, son of Walter and Janet Scott, baptised in Hawick in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1715), Isabel (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1722). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was son of Walter and in 1718 married Marion Gladstains, daughter of another Walter. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hobkirk and had a daughter Margaret (b.1728). The witnesses appear to have been John Scott and John Paterson. James (18th C.) outdoor servant working on the Wells estate in about 1730. He is mentioned in the estate book of factor Archibald Jerdan, described as a sort of handy-man. James (18th C.) possibly brother of Bailie Gladstains, they were together given responsibility about 1740 for collecting subscriptions ‘west the water’ for paying for the Teviot Bridge. He could be the James described as a tailor in Hawick in 1735. He may be the tailor James who witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier in Hawick in 1718. He may be the James (along with another John) who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1573. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in 1753. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Bulloch and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1759. James (d. bef. 1808) only surviving son of Town Clerk John. He owned the property at 80 High Street that was later the Liberal Club. However, he did not long outlive his father, since his sisters Christian and Ann were served heirs to their father in 1808 and sold the property in 1809. He could be the James, son of John and Ann Weir baptised in Hawick in 1766. James (b.c.1795) farm labourer and gamekeeper who lived at Branxholme Town and later at Stintyknowe. He was probably related to the earlier Gledstains who were at Chapelhill. His wife was Barbara and their children included Betty, Agnes and Margaret. In 1861 he was ‘Formerly Gamekeeper’ at ‘Stintyknows Fair House’. Janet nee Murray (15th C.) wife of James of that Ilk. In 1437, after the death of her husband, she was involved in a dispute with the Baron of Hawick, Sir William Douglas, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick; Douglas won the dispute. Janet (16th C.) owner of 1 ½ partcates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. She may have been widow of a local Gledstains. Janet (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when her will and inventory was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books, ‘made by her own mouth in her own house’. She was ‘alias Done’, suggesting that she may have been a widow, with her husband being a Mr. Down or Dunn. Her executors were Alexander, elder Burgess of Selkirk (who may have been a close relation, such as a brother) and William Currer. The list is given of those who owed money to her, and those to whom she owed money (including Katherine Scott, widow of Ninian Scott and Marion Gledstains, widow of William Scott). She left money to Margaret, wif of Thomas Dunn (who were surely related to either her or her husband), her son-in-law Thomas Brydon, her executor William Currer and Alexander, and Alexander’s daughters Helen and Margaret. Janet (d.1737) probably the daughter of James, the 16th of that Ilk (although he is also said to have died unmarried, but perhaps this is confused and he merely died with no male heirs); however, she is also said to have been daughter of Robert of that Ilk. She died unmarried and in 1738 the lands of Dod were divided among her ‘heirs-portioners’, who were John of Whitlaw, Robert Rutherford and Robert’s wife Esther, sister of Robert of that Ilk (and hence presumably her aunt). Cocklaw was eventually sold in about 1741. John (d.1412) 5th Gladstains of that Ilk, eldest son of William and Margaret Turnbull. His mother transferred her properties to him when William died, some time in the reign of Robert III (probably the late 1390s). This included Hundlehope in Peeblesshire and Roberton in Selkirkshire. This was the start of the family of Gladstains of that Ilk moving their centre of activity to Roxburghshire. He was probably succeeded by his brother James, or possibly by Thomas and then James. John (15th C.) possibly 7th of that Ilk. However, the information is uncertain, partly because of the decline of the Earls of Douglas, their overlords. He was referred to as ‘Johanni de Gladstany de eisdem’ in 1456 in the Exchequer Rolls for Peeblesshire. On the fall of the House of Douglas, Gladstanes in Lanarkshire had been forfeited to the Crown, and was granted to the Earl of Angus in 1457. However, John also held Hundlehope (in Peeblesshire) in 1482. Around this time the Dumfriesshire branch of the family separated off. In 1463 he witnessed a retour for the 5th Earl of Angus ‘Bell the Cat’. He is probably the John Gladstains who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for inflicting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. He was probably the John of Cocklaw who was witness to a 1483 document dealing with Denholm Mains. He may have been the ‘John Gestanis’ who witnessed a 1487 sasine for the lands of Boonraw and the ‘Johannem Gledstanis’ who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1484/5 there is a record of a dispute between the Burgh of Peebles and him (together with Thomas Lowes of Manor) over lands at Cademuir; the decree that he and Lowes refrain from encroaching on Peebles Common was ratified by James IV in 1505/6. However, there was a further complaint that he sent ‘he send his houshald men and servandis, and cruelly dang and hurt thair hirdis and servandis that were kepand thair corne and gudis within thair said propri landis, and left twa of thame liand on the feild for deid’, after which he sent his nephew and son, with 26 of their accomplices to drive the people off their own lands. In 1492 there was a decree from the Privy Council against him, as well as William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, to pay to John Rutherford of Hundalee the 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas Rutherford. He may be the Laird of Gledstains who was surety for John Young in Deanbrae in 1494/5. Either he or the next generation would have been the Laird of Gledstains who was fined at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 for failure to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshie. John of Winningtonhall (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Wyndetounhall’ in 1463 when he acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire for the sasine infefting David Scott in the Barony of Branxholme. He is as ‘of Wyndytounhall’ when witness to a document of 1483 dealing with Denholm Mains. John of Cocklaw was also a signatory, so he was probably a relative, possibly even his son. In 1484/5 he was ‘Gledstanis of Wyndetounhall’ when he was first witness to the transfer of the lands of Whitcheaters to Robert (of Allanhaugh), son of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the John ‘Gledstanis’ who was one of the witnesses for a sasine of lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2. He may be the John ‘gledstanys’ who acted as surety for the sons of Matthew in Hassendean in 1494/5. In 1497/8 he was on the panel at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of Tilliclee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; he is there ‘of Winditonhaw’. He may be the John recorded in 1502 when 40 geese were stoeln from him from out of ‘aquam de teviot’ by Adam Grahamlaw. He was probably an ancestor of the later John of Winningtonhall. John (1482–1518) 8th of that Ilk and Cocklaw, probably the grandson of James who suffered the famous Siege of Cocklaw. He still appears to have owned lands in Peeblesshire; in 1509 he leased lands at Cademuir to John Murray. In 1509 he was also on the ‘retour de inquest’ (listed first, in fact) for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. He is named in a Douglas of Cavers document in 1509/10, verifying their lands and Barony, except for the lands held by him, as shown by a charter of David II (although it is unclear whether this also refers to the Gledstains lands). He allied himself with the Scotts of Braxholme and Buccleuch. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his father’s barony of Braxholme. His lands at that time included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch. He was apparently quite unscrupulous, trying to gain possession of part of the common lands of Cademuir (adjacent to Hundleshope), and being involved in a raid there in 1518. He was succeeded by his nephew John, who was mentioned in connection with the 1518 raid. John of Cocklaw (d.1519) nephew of John, the 8th Laird. He was the 9th Gledstains of that Ilk, although only for a year. He was probably already an old man in 1518 when there was a raid, involving him and his son Archibald, on the common lands of Peebles. It is described that the Laird of Gledstains sent forth ‘John of Gledstanes his nevoy and apperand air, Archibald Gledstanes, his sone, and others to the number of twenty-six men’. He was succeeded by his son James, who contracted in 1519 to marry his son John to a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1517 his daughter Helen was infefted in ‘liferent’ of the lands of ‘Langhawcht’ in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. He may be the John of that Ilk whose widow Margaret ‘Jardane’ is recorded in 1542 requesting from the Court of Session that Lord Somerville pay her the rents on the lands of Libberton (in Lanarkshire). John of Craigs and Over Kelwood (16th C.) probably son of Thomas, who held Over Kelwood in Dunfriesshire. He was confusingly referred to as being ‘of that Ilk and Craigs’, even although there were others ‘of that Ilk’ in Roxburghshire at the same time. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1525, married Margaret Jardine and was still alive in 1537. He was probably succeeded by his brother Matthew. John (d.1574) probably a son of Gledstains of that Ilk, but his parentage is not known. He held the lands of ‘Quothquan’, which extended to 26 acres of the former larger estate of Gledstains in Lanarkshire. He attended St. Andrews University 1505–8, then studied in France. In 1534 he became an advocate, appointed ‘Advocatus Pauperum’ and was a Lord of Sessions from 1542. He was also Procurator of Judges, Member of the Privy Council and became Doctor of Laws. He was recorded in Edinburgh in 1550, on a panel ruling for the Privy Council. His property was inherited by his nephew, also John, who was Ormond Pursuivant for Scotland. John (1519–64) 11th of that Ilk, son of James. He probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (Janet or Christian), to whom he had been betrothed by a marriage contract of 1519/20 (which must have been shortly after he was born). This demonstrates the close links between the Scott and Gledstains.
families at this time. In 1537/8 there was an assurance by several Croziers that they would not harm him, his friends or servants, with Elliots acting as cautioners. In 1542 he had a cause for the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He was recorded in 1544 as heir of the deceased James of Cocklaw in a dispute with Robert Scott in Haword; he complained that Robert Scott and his tutor William Scott had made an arrangement for 6 1/2 husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed him 200 merks in redemption money. Philip was a witness, and hence may have been related. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. He is mentioned in connection with exploits of the Scotts after 1553. In 1553/4 he was ‘de Coklaw’ when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting from his grandfather. He was charged with the murder of Thomas Peebles and William Bell at ‘Kaidmuir’ near Peebles in 1561, probably a continuation of the claim on those lands made by his family for generations; his name is given as ‘Jhone Gledstanis of Coklaw’. Although the trial was deferred indefinitely, his son James was pursued for damages by the descendants of the victims. Also in 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563/4 he gave the tenancy of lands in Hundleshope (in Peeblesshire) to 2 men after they renounced their former ‘kindenes’ agreement. Also in 1563/4 he promised to enter 3 Elliots and 2 Croziers for crimes against an Englishman, with Sir William Cranston as his surety. He is probably the ‘Lard of Coklaw’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he ‘and his barnis’ are described as supporters of Buccleuch in the bond signed between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his son James, ‘little Gledstane’. His other sons were: William of Cocklaw; Walter, killed by raiders from Liddesdale; and (probably) John of Whitlaw. A document of 1561 (for the rental of Corrie Sike) states that his son and heir apparent was John, which appears to contradict other information (and is perhaps an error, unless there were 2 confounded generations here). John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpaseley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He was son and heir of Selkirk Burgess Alexander in 1561 when his father promised to pay him back for the £10 Scots he had borrowed. John of Whitlaw (16th C.) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk. He was the founder of the Whitlaw and Flex branch of the family. He is mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as being left something unspecified. In 1580 he is recorded as ‘servand’ to the Countess of Bothwell, owner of Whitlaw, when the farm was raided by a group of Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 100 sheep. He was in the party that followed the raiders, and one of his brothers was killed in a skirmish. John of Winningtonhall (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Rough-hope and Philip from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving lands in Langnewton; his servant John Elliot was also a witness. In 1582 he witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme. He is probably the John ‘of Wydeton hall’ in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name appearing alongside other local Gledstains. Probably the same John ‘of Woudintoun Hall’ was witness to a marriage contract between the Gledstains of Cocklaw and the Turnbuls of Wauchope in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1605 (presumably for the purposes of a new infeftment), and is there styled ‘Joanni Gledstanis de Windintounhall’. He is named as surety for James of Cocklaw and that Ilk in a trial of 1605 (relating to reparations for John of Cocklaw’s murder of Thomas Peebles in 1561). His location is there recorded as ‘Wyndtounhall’ and ‘Wyndington Haugh’. In 1607 he was chancellor of the ‘assyse’ which found George Henderson in Wintonning to be not guilty of chopping down trees belonging to Robert Elliot of Redhaugh. It seems likely that he was a close relative of James of that Ilk and related to the John of the same place a century earlier. John of Whitlaw (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter. He stood in for his father as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Hassendean and Wilton Parishes in the period 1641–47 and was Chamberlain in his own right by 1647–48. He remained Chamberlain until at least 1656, and in the last couple of years also acted for Eckford, Hawick and Clarilaw. He was the Chamberlain who gave an account of the personal property and debts of Earl Francis Scott of Buccleuch when he died in 1651. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1652.
for Robert Scott of Harwood and Beatrix Gledstains (probably a relative). He was granted the lands of Flex by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry in 1653. He is probably the John of Whitlaw recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when £133 6s 8d was paid for Flex in Hawick Parish and £266 13s 4d paid for Whitlaw; he also paid the teind of Eckford on behalf of the Countess of Buccleuch. He married Anna Scott (probably daughter of Walter Scott of Synton) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1639); Walter (b.1640); Francis (b.1643), who succeeded; an unnamed son (b.1645); and Helen (b.1646). His son Francis was served as his heir in the lands of Flex in 1672. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included: John (b.1670); James (b.1672); John (again, b.1678); and Jane (b.1679). John of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax on land valued at £66 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He was surely related to Walter of Hilliesland, who paid the land tax in 1643 and 1663 (perhaps he was son of Walter). He may have been father of the John admitted as a Burgess in 1692 and an ancestor of the Town Clerks who owned Hilliesland. He was recorded being ‘hillhousland’ in 1685 when one of his children was baptised. He married Margaret Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1676), James (b.1677), Thomas (b.1679); Archibald (b.1681), John (b.1683), Francis (b.1685) and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were ‘Mr Archibald’ (surely a relative) and James of that Ilk. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel (or Bessie) Liddell and their children included Jane (b.1682) and William (b.1685). John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was listed separately from the carrier. It is possible he was the same as the Hilliesland Laird. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and paid tax on 2 hearths according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His son was William. In 1717 he and his son and daughter-in-law were all rebuked by the Session for fighting with one another on the street. He is probably the John ‘at the East Port’, who, along with his son William, were in 1700 ‘found guilty of stealing peats and strae, are sentenced to stand at the crosse for a season, and be banished the town’. They stole 3 loads of peat from Galalaw and oat straw from the stack yard of Rev. Cunningham; this was said to be ‘out of his extreme necessity’, probably related to the great famine that spread over the country at that time. John of Hilliesland (17th/18th C.) admitted as a Burgess of Hilliesland in 1692. He may have been son of the earlier John of Hilliesland (if not the same man) and perhaps father of the later John of Hilliesland; he was surely related to the Town Clerks of Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobell Burn and their children included William (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Jean, daughter of Adam Glendinning and their children included John (b.1718). John of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.). It is unclear how he was related to earlier Gledstains of Whitlaw. He witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex in 1709. He was recorded as being a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. He witnessed further baptisms in 1718 for John Davidson (tenant in Flex), with the other witness being his brother William, and in 1719 for Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. His brother James became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1719. He is probably the same man as John of Flex who was recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands of ‘Flex and Meikle and Little Whitlaw’ were valued at 400 merks. He probably succeeded Francis of Whitlaw, but it is unclear if he was his son or brother. He was probably succeeded by the next (and last) John of Whitlaw. John (d.1754) tenant of ‘Hilliesland Walls’ and presumably related to the ‘Town Clerks’ family. He witnessed a sasine made by Town Clerk Walter in 1728. He was described as being ‘of Hilliesland’ when admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1733 (and was presumably a descendant of the John of Hilliesland who became a Burgess in 1692). He may be the John who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. He may have been the last Laird of Hilliesland to live there, and was probably the Laird who was described (in 1767) as having earlier driven his herd to Hawick Common, down the Iver Burn. John of Whitlaw (c.1710–bef. 183) one of the last of the family to own land locally. He may have been son of the previous John of Whitlaw. In 1738 he was one of ‘heirs-portioners’ of Janet, daughter of Robert of that Ilk and Cocklaw, when she died unmarried; he thus received part of the lands of Dod that Janet had still possessed. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was stated to be tenant of Whitlaw in the 1750s.
when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He witnessed a baptism in 1759 for tailor James (possibly a relative). He was interested in genealogy and prepared a pedigree of the Scotts of Synton (through whom he was related on his mother’s side), Whitslade, etc. in 1769; this was used as the basis for much of the booklet on the pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe, Todrig, etc., which was printed privately in 1783 (by which time he had deceased). He was witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1764. He was said to have been an officer under Prince Charles and remained a Jacobite sympathiser (as described by Robert Wilson). He went about on crutches in later life, and blamed his rheumatism on the house of Hanover! He was also known for having a large feast every Christmas. His daughter Mira was baptised in 1753, by Episcopal Minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, making it clear that the family continued to follow that particular faith; the witnesses were Dr. Robert Scott of Whitslade, as well as John and James Gledstains from Hawick (who were probably his brothers, cousins, or other near relatives). The name of his wife is unknown, and it is not clear what happened to Mira, or whether he had other children. John (d.1781) has his death recorded in Hawick. He is listed as ‘Elder in the Green meeting’, presumably meaning the Green Kirk. It is not impossible he was the same man as John of Whitlaw. John (1724-83) son of the second Walter, writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick. He was recorded as a writer in 1762 and 1765 when he witnessed baptisms for baker Robert Scott. He was Town Clerk from about 1763 until 1783, with a short gap in 1768-70 (precise dates uncertain), when he was deprived of office for being a Jacobite supporter and refusing to take the oath of government (although Robert Wilson’s account of this is confused). He was assisted by Thomas Win- trope for several years, perhaps until 1768. He was also tenant of Meikle and Little Whitlaws, and had the farms as aliment from the Duke of Buccleuch (although this could be confusion with his namesake, John of Whitlaw). He kept a public house in town (like his predecessors as Town Clerk), where it was said that most of Hawick’s civic business was carried out. He was apparently liked to avoid litigation and was fond of resolving disputes by inviting both parties to his house in the evening to discuss things amicably. He wrote a detailed account of the great flood of 1767. In 1767 he one of the representatives of Hawick at the perambulation of the Common made as part of the court case for its division. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Ann Weir, who died in 1805; she was probably daughter of the earlier Town Clerk James Weir, born in 1738. Their children included: Walter (b.1765); James (b.1766), who owned 80 High Street; William (b.1768); Christian, who married manufacturer Walter Richardson Elizabeth (b.1776); and Ann (b.1781), who may have married John ‘the Turk’ Scott. The witnesses to the 1768 baptism were writer James Weir (probably his brother-in-law) and Schoolmaster James Inglis and in 1776 were surgeon James Wilson and Schoolmaster James Inglis. He appears to have been the last male of the direct family of Gledstains in Teviotdale. His 2 daughters were served as heiresses to him in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809 (so his sons must have been deceased by then); they are probably the ‘Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes’ listed in 1811 as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his nephew, John Inglis. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Beattie in 1770. They had a daughter Joanna baptised in Wilton in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Katherine Riddell in 1775. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Matthew (15th C.) witness to a sasine of the Cranstons of that Ilk for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Matthew and Cuthbert were also witnesses. Perhaps the same ‘Matho Gledstane’ was witness to a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers, in 1500. Matthew of Over Kelwood (d.bef. 1541) probably son of Thomas and brother of John. He lived in Dumfriesshire and was referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’, even though the Roxburghshire branch were probably the superior line. He married Elizabeth Livingstone and their daughter Mirabella married a relative, Herbert of Dundee. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1536 and was still alive in 1539. His grandson Walter was also referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’. Mira (b.1753) daughter of John of Whitlaw. There is an entry in the Hawick Parish Kirk baptismal records that she was baptised by Episcopal minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, with witnesses Robert Scott of Whitlade, and John and James Gledstains (who were probably uncles or other close relatives). This was one of the few pieces of evidence that there was a continuing Episcopal Kirk in Hawick through the 18th century. Patrick (14th C.) juror in Roxburghshire in 1336, who swore fealty to Edward III in 1346 following the Battle of Durham (Neville’s Cross). He may have been a son of Herbert. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-naire held in Jedburgh. He was ‘Patricius gledstanius in oiklaw’; he must surely have been related to the Gledstains of Cocklaw and that ilk, although appears to have been a tenant rather than a laird. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for multiple thefts: 12 cows from John Anderson; 58 sheep from William Knight; 120 score sheep from James Sinclair and Robert Knight; 80 sheep from James Crays; 100 sheep and 50 cows from Hartshaw; plundering from the tenants of Glengelt; and stealing horses and other things from Robert Walderston, William Allan, John Hutchison and their neighbours. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. Patrick (15th C.) tenant in Hummelkowes, recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-naire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the theft of 4 sheep from Yairi, with James Pringle of Smailholm as his surety. It seems that he was a different man from Patrick in Cocklaw. Philip (16th C.) witness in Selkirk to a document involving a dispute between John of Cocklaw and Robert Scott in Howford. Robert (15th C.) on the ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownan. Probably the same Robert ‘de Gledstanis’ was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that ilk, when he infefted Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Grahamslaw in 1439. And he appeared as witness along with Crichton and others on a charter by Archibald, Earl of Douglas to the Kers of Altonburn in 1439. Probably the same Robert witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing in 1443. Probably the same man is ‘Roberto Gledstaniys de le Crag’ in 1446 when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; his lairdship was probably Craigs in Dumfriesshire. He is probably the same ‘Roberto de Gledstaniis’ (an esquire) in 1452 when he is the first witness listed on the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1454/5 he is ‘Robert of Gledstanys’ when he witnessed a document for Ker of Altonburn. And in 1463/4 he was ‘Roberto de Gledstaniys’ among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Glendstaniys’ when he witnessed a charter of 1468 dealing with the Scotts of Buccleuch and lands of Lempitlaw. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertum Gledstanis’ in 1484 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. Robert (15th/16th C.) described as being from Annan when he witnessed a charter at Caerlaverock in 1492/3. Probably the same Robert is described as ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. shield-bearer) when he witnessed a charter for John, Lord Maxwell, in 1505. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘pr Todschahauch’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was proprietor of Todshawhaugh in a 1650 list of communicants of the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Agnes Rule, with their daughter Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1639. In 1648 he was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire (along with Walter of Cocklaw and John of Whitlaw, who must have been closely related). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Scott in 1652. Either he or a son of the same name was listed in 1686 as tenant of the lands of Whames in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their children included: Walter (b.1688); and Agnes (b.1691). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. Robert (17th C.) tailor in Raesknowe. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Margaret (b.1693) and Margaret (again, b.1700). In the 1700 record his wife’s forename is given as Janet and the witnesses are David Graham and John Armstrong, tenants in Raesknowe. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was listed as ‘ane hyred servant in hawick’ in 1700. He married Janet Brown and their children (although the mother’s name is not always give) probably included: Anna (b.1690); Walter (b.1693); Robert (b.1696); John (b.1700); and Janet (b.1703). The witnesses in 1693 were John Stuart and John Black and in 1700 were weaver Thomas Turnbull and ‘officer’ James Lethem. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded (twice) being given money from the Session poor box. Robert (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘of that ilk’ in 1704 as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704 he petitioned the Bailies of Hawick to let him ‘cast divots in the Common of Havicke’; this was to thatch his stable at Hummelkowes. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Cocklaw at the time was James; but perhaps he was a brother of James, and hence son of William. Probably the same Robert of that Ilk married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1706 (and she secondly married John Scott of Gorrenberry in 1716, so he was presumably dead by then). He may be the Gledstains in Hummelknowes recorded in an account for Elizabeth, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch.

Robert (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, as recorded in 1708. He married Janet Brown, and their children included: John (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Robert (b.1705), who lived in Robertson Parish; Marion (b.1708); and Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and weaver Andrew Brown (probably his wife’s father or brother) and in 1708 were merchant Robert Robson and flesher Walter Anderson.

Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Isobel Hobkirk in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1721 he married Marion ‘Lun or Douglas’ (suggesting his wife had previously been married). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1742 and Harden Burnfoot in 1753. His children (assuming these are all the same father Robert) included Magdalen (b.1742), Thomas (b.1747), Thomas (again, b.1747), Kathrine (b.1753) and Robert (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1780 and she died in 1805. Robert (b.c.1763) perhaps son of William, resident of Chapelhill. He married Mary Scott in Wilton Parish in 1788. This means he was probably different from the Robert who married Jean Scott 8 years earlier. Their children included: Peggy (b.1789); William (b.1792); and James (b.1794). When Peggy was baptised the family were at Overhall. The 1792 and 1794 baptisms were recorded in Hawick with witnesses the ‘Associate Congregation’. Perhaps the same Robert was a 78 year old agricultural labourer living with the Anderson family at Whitehaugh Cottages in 1841. Robert (b.1812) eldest son of William. He married Mina Nichol. In 1840 he and his wife emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1535 when he witnessed a bond between Mark Ker in Kippiefield, John Scott in Thistlestone and others. In 1539 he witnessed another transaction for Elizabeth, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William and brother of John and James. He may have owned the lands of Flex. He acquired Roberton (in Selkirkshire) from his mother in 1412, confirmed by a charter of James I in 1430. It is possible he is the same Thomas ‘Gledstains’ appointed (along with Stephen Scott and others) as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Probably the same Thomas had a charter from the Duke of Albany (around 1410) for the lands of ‘Withnyhope’ in Selkirkshire. He could be the same Thomas who witnessed a confirmation of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1404. His wife was Margaret and he was succeeded by their son Alexander. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret Colville relating to lands in Oxnam. It is unclear how he was related to other Roxburghshire Gledstains. He could be the Thomas who had a charter for ‘Overkeldvod’ (in Dumfriesshire) in 1509, and hence was probably a son of Herbert, Rector of Dornoch. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1706 he married Bessie Sanderson and their children included Janet (b.1707), Bessie (b.1716) and Francis (b.1718). John (b.1710) and Janet (b.1712) were probably also his children (but with no mother’s name recorded). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and George Martin. He could be the son of John and Margaret Harkness who was born in 1679. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1723 and 1725. His children, baptised in Cavers, included Bessie (b.1717), William (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and Walter (b.1725). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1816. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Miller and their son John was baptised in 1872. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Isabella Fox, daughter of Gilbert Amos, who was joiner at Chesters. He died in an accident at Southdean sawmill. Walter (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1470 relating to the lands of Graumswal and the Scots of Buccleuch. The same Walter may have witnessed a Buccleuch document of 1464/5 relating to Ladyurd, and hence be from the Peebles area. Probably the same Walter also witnessed a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scots of Buccleuch in 1475/6. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He comes right after George in the list, suggesting they were related. Walter (d.1580) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk, he was brother of James of Cocklaw. He may be the same ‘Walter Gledstanes’ (location not given) who is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being owed about £13 ‘for his fie’ (he may thus have acted as some kind of factor or chamberlain, as his descendants did). He was killed by men of Liddesdale, led by Lancie Armstrong, when a party of Scotts and Gledstains followed those who had raided Meikle Whitlaw, but were ambushed on their way back home through Liddesdale (probably the morning after the raid on Whitlaw). After complaints to the Privy Council none of those implicated in the ambush appeared, and hence they were declared rebels. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Haining’ in 1608 when he was part of a group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill. James Gledstains was also listed. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as holding, along with Walter Scott of Buccleuch, the Trinitylands in Hawick. He may be the same Walter of Dod who was recorded in the 1640s. He (or perhaps his son) may have been Laird of Dod in 1643 when he held the lands of Adderstoneshiel, with his mother having the liferent of Adderstonelee. He may be the Walter of Dod whose daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Littleheugh. Walter of Whitlaw (d.c.1643) part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was also part of the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, of sheep stealing. He is recorded as a ‘personne of assyse’ in the local Circuit Court of 1622. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trininitylands. He was also recorded in a county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £266 13s 4d. He also appears as Chamberlain (or Factor) to the Earl of Buccleuch in existing records of rents and teinds for the period 1631–40 for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes, also including Denholm. He was probably ill by the next year when his son John stood in for him, and was deceased by the time of the 1642–43 accounts. In one document he is transcribed as ‘Walter Gledstones in Whitehall’, presumably an error. He may be the Walter of Whitlaw who is listed by Scott of Satchells as being one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), who was a close cousin to the Scotts and was given the lands of Whitlaw for this service; however, this may have been an earlier generation. He is probably the Walter of Whitlaw whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott, Laird of Galalaw. Walter (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Blackburn in Liddesdale in 1632. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wood and their children included Marion (b.1640) and Agnes (b.1641). Walter of Cocklaw (17th C.) probably the son of James, as recorded in 1648. He may have had brothers William, Robert and James. He was likely the ‘Laird of Gledstains’ who witnessed a family baptism in 1642, and hence was 14th of that Ilk. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains whose lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £1240 in 1643; this consisted of the farms of Hummelknowes, Ormiston and Orchard. He was ‘of Coklaw’ in 1648 when listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. It is possible he was the Walter of Cocklaw who was recorded as superior of the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1620 when they were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden. He may have been succeeded by a son (or brother), William, who is recorded in 1663. Walter of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish (with the spelling ‘of Halysland’). His lands were worth £66 13s 4d. per year. He is presumably different from Walter of Whitlaw, who was listed separately in 1643. However, it is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains, but he may have been father of John of Hilliesland who paid the land tax in 1678. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son and heir George was infefted in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William Earl of Lothian. He is probably the same Walter of Dod who married Agnes Douglas of Cavers, and whose son Walter was minister at New Abbey. His grandson Abraham was served heir to his lands of Hunthill in 1676. Walter of Flex (17th C.). He married Esther, daughter of Richard Rutherford of Littleheugh and granddaughter of John Rutherford of Capehope. His wife’s mother may have been Eupham, daughter of William Gledstains. It is unclear how he was related to other Gledstains of Flex. Rev. Walter (1624–60) son of Walter of Dod and Agnes Douglas of Cavers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and in 1650 became minister at New Abbey, Kirkcudbright. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of John Crichton of Crawfordston, who was widow of William Lawrie in Ingliston. His children included James and Agnes. His widow married James Mair, minister of Troqueer. His gravestone had the following lines (in Latin): ‘Q. Wherefore lies the Gladstone Hidden by the dark stone? A. The bosom of the earth Conceals the gem of gold’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Marion (b.1639), John (b.1643) and Bessie (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Lauder and their children included Helen (b.1646) and Jean (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1676 he and James Liddell were involved in checking the weights used by other traders in Town. He could be the same man as the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1680 (suggesting that they were related). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter Francis of Hilliesland (1642–1718) son of Lieut. Francis and Margaret Stewart, he was born in Hawick, about 3 years before his father was killed. He was Town Clerk 1673–1696, and after a 1 year gap again in c.1696–1710, then sharing the position with his son Walter until his death in 1718. He was Town Clerk on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for George Young and Janet Purdom, and for John Stewart. He may be the Walter ‘in Hawicke’ who is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He is probably the ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ who witnessed baptisms for George Deans in 1673, for wright Francis in 1682 and for schoolmaster John Purdom in 1685. He is probably one of the 2 men of his name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in hawick in 1671. He may also be the Gledstains whose letter to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1683 told of the imprisonment of several local lairds for trumped up charges relating to supporting the Covenanters. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. In 1701 he was cited at the Kirk Session for being drunk at a burial and ‘using expressions savouring of blasphemy in his drunkenness’; he acknowledged his guilt and being reported again in 1702 promised to endeavour to remain sober. He was ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704 and for his son Walter in 1708. He also witnessed baptisms in 1709 for schoolmaster John Purdom and for Robert Porteous. Either he or his son was witness for a baptism in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hilliesland. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at 100 merks. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1711 and 1718. He was listed as ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; the other witness was James, who was probably a close relative, and may have been James of that Ilk. He was listed in the same way when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stewart and another for tailor Walter (his namesake and probably relative) in 1688. He was also ‘Mr walter Gledstaines’ when he paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick, ‘eist the water’, in 1694; this suggests he had quite a substantial house. In 1707 ‘the town clerk’s wyf’ (presumably his wife) was ordered by the Council to be paid back for expenses incurred at the Queen's birthday in 1706. He translated Rev. Cunningham's ‘Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick' (possibly the earliest verse about Hawick) from the Latin. The ancient family bible, now in the Museum, appears to have been largely inscribed by him. He may also have been the Town Clerk who entertained a party of Jacobite officers while their army was encamped in Hawick in 1715 (although Robert Wilson ascribes this to a later Town Clerk in 1745). In 1704 he also provided what was probably the first translation of the 1537 Charter, appearing in print in Wilson's ‘History of Hawick' in 1825. He was married to Margaret Sinclair in Calder. Apart from Walter, their surviving children were William (b.1674) and Agnes (b.1677). Other children baptised in Hawick who could be his were Francis (b.1672), Gideon (b.1678) and Margaret (b.1681). Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1690s. Probably the same wright is recorded as in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be one of the 2 men of this name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. His wife was Janet Scott and their children probably included Agnes (b.1672), Margaret (b.1673), Janet (b.1676) and Marion (b.1678). However, a tailor of the same name was also married a Janet Scott and had children about the same time. The witnesses in 1676 were John Aitkin and James Deans and in 1678 were William Haswell and James Gledstains (who was surely related). Probably the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1697. Perhaps the same wright is listed on the Hearth

Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as portioner of Samieston in Jedburgh Parish. This land was formerly owned by Moir of Otterburn, but sold to the Duke of Roxburghe. It was listed as ‘Lands in Samieston, formerly Walter Gladstain’s £233 6s 8d’ in 1788. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other family members. Walter (d.bef. 1719) tailor in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was also listed as a tailor among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Note the possible confusion with ‘William’, who was a tailor in Hawick at about the same time and also the contemporary wright of the same name (whose wife also had the same name!). He also witnessed baptisms for weaver Walter Greenshields in Branxholme Town in 1703 and for John Davidson and Jean Gledstains in the Flex in the 1716. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses ‘Mr Walter’ (presumably his namesake the Town Clerk) and Bailie James Deans. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child, with witnesses Francis (probably also a relative) and Thomas Bridges. His daughter Marion married William Stoddart (‘Casaer in Flexs’) in 1719. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, more specifically probably the Hassendean part. He may be the Walter, married to Janet Scott, whose son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1681, with witnesses John Hope and Charles Wood. He is probably the Walter who witnessed Roberton (or Hassendean) baptisms for James Scott in 1680, Robert and Marion Scott in 1683 and Adam Sanderson in 1684. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included: John (b.1695). He may be the same man who later married Helen Sanderson. Walter ‘Walter Alison’ (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1709 he was recorded as ‘distinctionis causa called Walt: Alison’ (to distinguish him from the Town Clerk of the same name, among others); however, it is unclear what this name may have referred to. He may have been related to Thomas, who married Bessie Sanderson. In 1703 he married Helen Sanderson (who was also from Hawick Parish). Their children included: William (b.1703); John (b.1706); Isobel (b.1709); Robert (b.1713); and Walter (b.1716). John (b.1708) and John (again, b.1711) were probably also their children. The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie James Deans and carrier Robert Aitken and in 1709 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle. Walter junior of Hilliesland (d.1739) son of Walter who was Town Clerk. He was recorded being ‘of Hilliseland’ (i.e. Hilliesland) in 1707 and 1708, even although his father was still alive at that point. He himself was Town Clerk from 1710 probably until his death. However, it appears that James Weir was also acting as Town Clerk for the last few years. It was said that he was a strong supporter of the Town Herd in stopping encroachment on the Common, but that ‘since his death there was never one to support the Herd, and the Common had been ten times worse used than it was before’. He is probably the Walter of Hilliesland who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1704. He was Town Clerk when he witnessed baptisms for smith James Beattie in 1719 and for William Hill, weaver in the Flex in 1720. He may have had an inn (like other Town officials in those days); it is recorded in 1724 that £5 8s. Scots was ‘spent in the clerk’s, being the King’s birth-day’. He married Agnes (or Anna) Elliott from Langholm in 1706. Their children included: Janet (b.1707); Bessie (b.1708); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1707 were ‘Mr Walter’ (presumably his father) and Thomas Laik in Billerwell (perhaps the minister in Southdean) and in 1708 were ‘Mr Walter’ (again) and Baille Robert Ruecastle. He secondly married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’ or ‘Bettie’), daughter of Hawick tailor John Scott, in an ‘irregular marriage’ of 1720 (his name being incorrectly given as ‘William Gladstains, town clerk’ in the Session records); this marriage was carried out by ‘James Macubine’, possibly an Episcopal minister. He also witnessed an irregular marriage himself in Hawick in 1724. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his son John (1724–83). His other children included: Agnes (b.1721); Walter (b.1722); Joanna (b.1726), who married James Inglis; William (again, b.1728); and James. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Sinton, who was also from Robertson. Walter (1817–82) 2nd son of farm worker William. In 1840, along with his parents and siblings, he emigrated to Canada, settling on the banks of the Nith River in southern Ontario. He first made chairs at the Nithsvale Chair Factory, and was then responsible for the construction of the nearby Stanley Street Church and Gledstains

Knox Church. He ran a general store in Ayr Ontario for many years. In 1869 the family moved to a farm near Gentry, Missouri. In 1847 he married Jane, daughter of Alexander Easton and Jeannie Kyle, who had emigrated from Castleton; she died in 1914. Their children were Jane, William R., Eliza, Alexander, Jeannie Kyle, George E., Anna M., Walter and Mary. They are buried at Knox Cemetery, near Gentry. Walter (b.1817/8) frameworker who lived at 7 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Mary and Agnes. He is probably the Walter ‘Gledstains’ whose recollections of James Hogg informed Robert Murray’s 1863 article. William (14th C.) recorded in 1346 along with Patrick when they paid homage to King Edward after the Battle of Neville’s Cross. He was described as being of ‘Mintowe’, suggesting that he was associated with Minto in Teviotdale. It is possible that he was the same as Sir William of that Ilk. Sir William (d.c.1365) probably the grandson of Herbert, and hence 3rd of that Ilk. In 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh; his name also appears on 4 confirming charters. He also witnessed a deed of 1357/8 for the lands of Altonburn. He became a follower of the Earl of Douglas. He accompanied the Earl to France in 1356 and was made a Knight at the Battle of Poitiers. He was later imprisoned in the Tower of London for 16 months, being released in 1358. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas. In 1359 he is ‘William of Gladstays’ when he witnessed an Athole charter. There is a letter of protection of 1360 from William, 1st Earl of Douglas, referring to Sir William as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers and charging him to protect the lands of the Abbot and Convent of Melrose within the Barony (specifically Ringwood). This is the first record of a connection between the Douglasses and the Gledstains of that Ilk, which would last for several generations. At about the same time he witnessed a confirmation of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. In about 1360 he witnessed a charter for lands in Lauderdale and was also recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as a watcher of wool on the marches. In 1363 he was one of a number of Scotsmen given safe conduct into England by King Edward (probably related to a ransom). His son was probably William, and their names appear frequently in local charters between 1357 and 1388. Sir William (d.c.1400) son of William according to a charter of 1365, when he was granted his father’s land of ‘Wodgrenytyn, Wynkiston and Acolmfelde’ in Peeblesshire. He is probably the William who witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh in 1390. He obtained lands near Peebles from David II, and is referred to in 1396 as ‘of Gledstanes and Cocklaw’. This ‘Cocklaw’ is believed to have been in Lanarkshire, and gave its name to the tower built later near Hawick. In 1396 Sir William Inglis was granted the Barony of Manor, except for the lands there that he possessed. He married Margaret Turnbull (said to be daughter and heiress of John Turnbull), acquiring other lands near Peebles (specifically Hundlehope), as well as in Selkirk and at Roberton. His sons were John, Thomas and James. In 1430 Margaret resigned her lands of Robertson to her son Thomas. William (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Although no other designation is given for him, he must have been an important local laird at the time, probably connected with Cocklaw. William (15th C.) one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus in 1489 to infest Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands. The others were William Ker of Mersington, Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and William Elliot of Gorrenberry. His relationship to other Gledstains is unclear. He may be the William who in 1500, along with Bartholomew and George, witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. William of Arturshiel (d.bef. 1565) possibly a younger son of James of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He appears to have been the first Laird of Arthursiel in Peeblesshire, and ancestor of Prime Minister W.E. Gladstone. William (16th C.) son of John of Cocklaw, who is recorded in a document of 1576. He may be the William who was a Bailie in Hawick in 1574 when Thomas Short sold a tenement in Hawick to Robert Johnstone. It is possible that he is the ‘William of Fleecks’ who signed the 1584 bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name being listed along with other local Gledstains. William of Dod (16th C.). In 1627 his daughter Euphiam married John Rutherford of Capehope. This could be an error for ‘Walter of Dod’. William (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (or perhaps his younger brother), he was 15th of that Ilk. He is recorded as a baptismal witness in 1642 and is also probably the William ‘of...’ who witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton in 1661. He was recorded as Laird in 1663, when he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1663 he also had sheep stolen from his land by John and Walter Glendinning. He was further recorded as Laird of Gledstains in 1663 when he paid Land Tax for £1240 for property in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William owned teinds and lands (valued at £130) in Makerstoun Parish in 1643, 1663 and 1678. He was succeeded by James, presumably his son. He was probably also the ‘deceased Gladstains of that Ilk’ whose daughter Margaret married William Murray in Edinburgh in 1693, the ceremony being carried out by John Langlands, former minister at Hawick. He may have married Elizabeth Wishart or Margaret Riddell. It is possible that Robert (mentioned as being ‘of that Ilk’ in 1704) was a younger son, and that he was also father of Esther, who married Robert, son of James Rutherford, surgeon in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Stewart and their son William was baptised in 1671. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Wishart and their children included: Isobel (b.1671); William (b.1673); and Margaret (b.1676). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1673). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Gledstains and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1685. William (1674–1703) son of Walter the Town Clerk. He left Hawick at 15, eventually working as overseer in a Barbados plantation, where he died. He may be the William, ‘student’, who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1682 and 1684 (for Francis, perhaps an uncle or other relative). William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the William listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He witnessed baptisms for tailor James Turnbull in 1705 and 1709 and for merchant Michael Scott in 1709. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor Alexander Hislop) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Douglas in 1698. In 1719 his daughter Sara married James, son to Walter Scott, ‘Westport’. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism for this same couple. William (17th/18th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is separately listed from the tailor, and so presumably was a different man of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Porteous in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Whitlaw, as recorded in the 1707 baptism of his daughter. He married Marion Henderson and their children included Margaret (b.1707) and Robert (b.1712). The witnesses in 1707 were James Gray in Whitlaw and Bailie George Martin and in 1712 were Walter Elliot and Walter Graham (probably the Bailies). He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Haliburton and their son John was baptised in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘workman’ in 1708 and 1721, ‘workman in ye toun of Hawick’ in 1714 and ‘workman in whitala’ in 1709. He married Bessie Scott (who was also from Hawick Parish) in 1703. Their children included: John (b.1706); William (b.1708); Walter and Janet (b.1709); Helen (b.1712); Helen (again, b.1714); and William (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel, in 1709 were Dan and James Gray in Whitlaw, in 1714 were Bailies James Deans and James Scott and in 1721 were weavers David and John Miller. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included Jean (b.1709) and Robert (b.1712). He may be the same William whose wife was Mary Wilson and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Agnes (b.1718); William (b.1720); and James (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) son of Hawick carrier John. In 1713 he was cited in the Session book for excessive drunkenness, the minister having ‘found him vomiting in his drunkenness in ye Churchyard’. He apparently acknowledged his faults on his knees and promised to live temporarily thereafter. But the following year he was back before the Session ‘rebuked for his frequent drinking and wasting his father’s substance by Ryoting and reveling’ and was further threatened with imprisonment by the Magistrates. This is one of the earliest records of a habitual drunkard in Hawick! In 1717 he was rebuked for openly fighting in the street with his wife and father, and told that if he did not refrain from drunkenness he would be sent to the Bailie, who would then send him to the Circuit Court for harsher punishment. In 1714 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Purves. Their children included: John (b.1717); Jean (b.1718); Euphan (b.1721); and Helen (b.1724). Marion (b.1715) may also have been his daughter. William (17th/18th C.) brother of John, who was Laird of Whilit. In 1718 he and his brother were witnesses for a baptism for John Davidson, tenant  in Flex. William (17th/18th C.) described as being ‘of Kirklands’ in 1721 when his daughter Jean married gardener Robert Ker in Hawick. His lands could have been Kirklands in Wilton Parish, or one of the other local places of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as witness in Hawick in 1719 when his daughter Sara had a child with her husband James Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brockie in 1726. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Mary Baldie and their children included: John (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); Mary (b.1739); Helen (b.1741); and William (b.1743). The witness in 1743 was smith Thomas Huntly. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Wilson and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1743. William (18th C.) ploughman at Braidlie on Hermitage Water, recorded in 1750. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Nichol in 1754 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. William (18th C.) married Janet Lillico in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Catherine Riddell in Hawick Parish in 1759. He was living at Chapelhill when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762 and 1763. His children included: Henrietta (b.1761); James (b.1762); Robert (b.1763), probably the Robert who married Mary Scott in 1788; and an unnamed daughter (b.1769). The witnesses in 1761 were gardener James Kyle and shoemaker William Riddell (probably related to his wife). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Riddell in 1773. Their children included: Robert (b.1774); John (b.1777); Betty (b.1781); and Jane (b.1784). William (18th C.) recorded at Teindside Bridge-end in 1784. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Walter (b.1784); and James (b.1787). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Nichol and their children included: William (b.1774); and Thomas (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) listed as innkeeper in Hawick in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. It is unclear where his inn might have been. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Hoscoteshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harwood. He is listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 working horses. William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area, son of Robert and Mary Scott. He married Elizabeth Davidson. Their children included: Robert (b.1812), married Mina Nichol; Mary (or Marion, b.1814), who married William Paterson; Walter (b.1817), married Jane Easton; James (b.1821), married Jennie Edgar; Margaret (b.1825), married Robert Hall; Catherine (b.1827), married a Mr. Rose; and William (b.1830), married Helen Pringle. The baptisms were in Robertson Parish, when he was at Vales for the first 2 and at Parkhillhaugh for the next 3. In 1840 the family emigrated to Canada, settling at Nithvale, across the River Nith from Ayr, Ontario (note that the spelling varies in older records, including ‘Gladstain’, ‘Gladstaines’, ‘Gladstains’, ‘Gladstones’, ‘Gladstanes’, ‘Gladstaniis’, ‘Gladston’, ‘Gladstone’, ‘Gladstons’, ‘Gladstoun’, ‘Gladstanes’, ‘Gladstain’, ‘Gladstaines’, ‘Gladstainis’, ‘Gladstanes’, ‘Gladstanys’, ‘Gledstain’, ‘Gledstaines’, ‘Gledstains’, ‘Gleddistanys’, ‘Gledstanis’, ‘Gledstanys’, ‘Gledstainy’, ‘Gledstaines’, ‘Gledstainys’, ‘Gledstines’, ‘Gleddstanes’, ‘Gleddstaneys’, ‘Gledstanes’, ‘Gledstanes’, ‘Gledstanes’, ‘Gledstaneys’, ‘Gledstaines’, ‘Gledstainys’, ‘Gledstines’, ‘Gledstanes’, ‘Gledstaneys’, etc.).
connected directly to the Gledstains of that Ilk and Cocklaw, was the Gledstains of Whithlaw and later Hilliesland. They provided Town Clerks to Hawick for about 110 years with only minor interruptions (1673–1783). The family also provided Cornets in 1714 and 1744. The Cocklaw estate included Orchard and Hummeldowes, and the family held it until 1734, when the last Gledstains of the Ilk died. The burial aisle of the Gledstains of Cocklaw was pulled down by the heritors sometime in the 18th century. Branches of the family also held lands at Dodd, Coliforthill and Adderstone Shiel. They farmed at the Flex and elsewhere, and had property at 80 High Street, as well as a town house in the Mid Raw. The local Gledstains lost much of their lands in the 18th century, and then the name died out, but descendants undoubtedly remain in Hawick. Another branch, of Craigs and Kelwood in Dumfriesshire, also died out in the male line. Meanwhile the Arthurshiels branch flourished and produced William Ewart Gladstone, who became Prime Minister. The family aisle in old Cavers church was abandoned, but was located where a set of steps leading to the gallery was built. The family motto is ‘Fide et virtue’ (with faith and valour), which was engraved on a sundial belonging to Francis of Whitleshiel, bearing the date 1693. The original arms graved on a sundial belonging to Francis of Whitet of virtue’ (with faith and valour), which was en-

the Gledstane Bible

old family bible in the Museum, once belonging to Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick. It is a ‘Beza’ Bible, Geneva edition, dated 1601. It contains many handwritten entries relating to this once important local family. The bible came into the hands of Catherine Cheyne, a servant of the family, then passed to her nephew, William Smith (cutlet in Hawick), then to Andrew Irvine (merchant in Hawick), who presented it to the Burgh. James Wilson described it in 1858 and J.A.H. Murray transcribed many of the entries in 1878.

Gledstone’s Lands (gled-stinz-lawndz) n. former name for a small piece of land near Hunthill and Lanton. The lands appear to have been held by George Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1466. They formed the dowry of Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, when she married Richard Rutherford in the latter part of the 16th century. It was ‘Gladstanis-part de Langtoun’ in 1510 when Ninian Glendinning had a charter for the Barony of Scraesburgh. In 1536/7 the ‘ten merkland of old extent lying in the town and territory of Langtoun called Gledstanes landis’ when listed as the exception to the lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh infested to John Rutherford of Hunthill by Ninian Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1685 the succession to the Rutherfords of Hunthill estates included the Barony of ‘Scraisburg alias Hunthill, exceptis 10 mercatis terrarum, antiqui extentus, vocatis Gledstanes Lands’. It seems likely that this was the same piece of land later called Hunthill and owned by the Gledstains of Dod.

Gledstone’s (gled-stinz) n. Gladstone’s mill at No. 10 Union Street, being adjacent to the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street. The site had been James Brand’s ‘New Academy’ in the mid-19th century. The mill closed in the late 1970s and was converted to a warehouse, used by N.G. Thomson. It was then converted to Blondettes bar, but was demolished after the concrete house on the corner burned down.

And the horses fade as they faced the glen, And the shadows gather the Harden men’ [WHO] (the word is much more common further north in Scotland, and locally is used almost exclusively for Harden Glen, with ‘cleuch’ used commonly instead).

Glen (glen) n. Rev. Alexander (1726–1805) son of James, minister of Dirleton, he studied at Edinburgh University and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1749. He became minister at Kirkton in 1751, but was translated to Galashiels in 1757. He then became minister of Dirleton (like his father) in 1769. He married Ann Blackadder (who died in 1830) and their children were James (who became a Church of England minister), Katherine, Elizabeth, Barbara (who married John Wilson in Edinburgh), John, Alexander (who became a solicitor), Nisbet (who became a naval commander), Ann and Walter. Jean (18th C.) last person to stand in the pillory at the Mercat Cross. She lived in Needle Street. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Grisel ‘Person’ and their son James was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Simon and Robert Nichol.

glence (glesns) n., v., arch. glance – ‘. . . like a wawkin’ stick, wi’ a big turned heed that the mune glenced on’ [BCM1880].

Glendinning see Glendonwyn

Glendinning (gleen-di-ini) n. Adam Fitzhugh of Glendowyn (13th/14th C.) probably the first of the family to use the designation ‘of Glendowyn’ or Glendinning. He was an important man during the reign of Alexander III. He had a charter around 1286 from John Macgill for lands in Clifton and Morebattle. He may have married Agnews, daughter of Sir John Towers. He was succeeded by his son Adam, Adam of Glendowyn (13th/14th C.) probably a descendant of the Glendinning

Fitzhugh family. He held many lands under the superiority of the house of Douglas. He had a discharge of 1313 from Archibald, Lord of Galloway, for all his past feu-duties. In 1320 he had a charter from King Robert for part of the duties from Roxburgh Castle. In 1325 he was confirmed in the lands of ‘Fallhope’ in Roxburghshire, these possibly being ‘Phaup’. He may have married a daughter of Wauchope of that ilk and was succeeded by another Adam. Adam of that ilk (d.1363). He held lands in Ewesdale and elsewhere, with the Earl of Douglas being his superior. These generations are confused, and it is unclear how many separate Adams there were. He may be the Sir Adam who married Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John of Lothian and sister of Sir James of Dalkeith (although accounts differ, and she may have been wife of a different Adam). He is probably the ‘Ade Glendoning’ (also transcribed as ‘Glentoun’) who forfeited lands in the town of Roxburgh, which were granted to Henry Ashkirk in about 1362. His children included: Sir Adam, who succeeded; Sir Simon, who died at the Battle of Otterburn; Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow; Thomas; a daughter who married a de Mundaville; and another daughter who married Thomas de Moffat. Sir Adam (d.c.1397) son of Adam and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John Douglas of Lothian. His grandfather was probably Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn, who first adopted the ‘of Glendonwyn’ appellation, and his brother Matthew was Bishop of Glasgow. However, these early generations are unclear. In a rental roll c.1376 (among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton) he is ‘Domino Ade de Glendonwyn’ and listed as holding the lands of ‘Eskdale Mur’ and ‘Le Baly’. About 1380 he witnessed a charter for Henry of Swinton. He is recorded as ‘de Glendonwin’ in 1389, in a charter confirming the lands of Wauchope to Alexander of Wauchope. He acted as general receiver for the Earl of Douglas’ rents. In 1385 he received a charter for the feu-duties of Scarborough. He was an envoy to the English court and also travelled to Picardy in France. He obtained charters for many lands, including ‘Easter Fawhope’ (probably ‘Phaup’, either in Ettrickdale or near Mosspaun) and Brecallow in Dumfriesshire. In 1390 he was a witness of the confirmation of the lands of Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. A 1391 charter of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, dated at Glendonwyn, describes how the Earl was mortifying certain lands in the Barony of Hawick in order to found a chapel in Westerkirk, and directing him to arrange this. He may have married Margaret Douglas, but this could be confusion with an earlier generation. He was married to Wauchope’s daughter Margaret and was to succeeded to the lands if there were no other heirs; this appears to have happened. His children probably included: John, who died at Homildon Hill; Sir Simon, who married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas; William; Adam; Matthew; and Robert, in Amandale. Adam (15th C.) received a cow in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Ade Glendonwyn’. Mark and Margaret were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included William (b.1686). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hume and their children included John (b.1682). Adam (17th C.) listed at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls, although his name is crossed out and he is then listed among the ‘deficient’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Groundstone in 1698. He married Margaret Preacher in Ashkirk in 1696 and their children included: John (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1699). The witnesses in 1698 were George Scott and Thomas Preacher (surely related to his wife). He may be the Adam whose daughter Jean married John Gledstains in Hawick in 1717. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1718. His children included: Bessie (b.1704); John and William (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). Helen (b.1707), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) possibly the son of William, born in Roberton in 1734. In 1765 he is recorded as shepherd at Mains in Liddesdale. He married Agnes Crozier. He had 4 sons: the eldest, William (who married Mary Elliot), being a shepherd; and the youngest, Adam (b.1762, who married Elizabeth Crook), a soldier. Adam ‘Slow Adam’ (d.1808) carter in Hawick. He married Isabel Roger, who died just 3 weeks after him. They had a daughter, Margaret (1770–75), who is buried at Borthwick Waas. Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Glendinning shown as owner of lands on the south side of the west-end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (even although deceased by then). Esther, who married John Rieve in Howcleuch, may have been his sister (since she is buried next to his daughter). Adam (1762–1851) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier, born in Castleton. He was a soldier, although it is not known which regiment he originally served in (but it may have been the Scots Greys). It is said that he served all over Europe, although family tradition also says that he never served abroad. In 1805 he wasCornet with the Royal Wagon Train, becoming Lieutenant to the 9th Royal Veterinary Battalion in 1806. He was in the party for Lord Nelson’s funeral. He retired on full pay to settle back in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 5 Langholm Street and listed as ‘Lieut. Army R. Vet. Bat. H.P.’ His wife was Elizabeth and their children included: Thomas, who served in Canada with the Royal Wagon Train; Mary (b.1804), who married John Grieve of Branxholme Braes; and Isobel (1805–92), who married James Inglis. It is possible that he was the servant at Harden and Myredykes in Castleton Parish, listed among heads of households in 1835–41. Adam (1802–68) eldest son of shepherd William and Mary Elliot. He was born at Cauldronfoot in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Potholm in 1841 and at Tweedenhead in 1851 and 1861. He married Margaret Robson (from Ewes) and they had 6 sons and 7 daughters. It is said that all of his sons became shepherds, including the eldest, Adam, whose 4 sons were all shepherds in the Jed and Rule valleys. Their children included: Helen (1829–1915), who married Walter Kitchen; William (1831–1911), who married Anne Kyle and died at Gatehousecote; Peter (1833–1904), who emigrated to Canada, worked as a miner and is buried in Ross Bay Cemetery, Victoria; Adam (1836–1920), who emigrated to Victoria, Canada; Mary (b.1838), who had a daughter, Margaret; Margaret (b.1838), who lived at Shankend; Janet (1840–78), who married James Temple Robson; John (1842–1907), who died at Westshiels; Ninian (c.1844–98), a shepherd in Northumberland; Agnes (1846–90), who died in Oregon, U.S.A.; Walter (1849–1928); Isabella (b.1851); and Elizabeth (b.1852), who married George Rutherford. He died at Tweedhead. Adam (1806–1865) son of John and Margaret Hatlie, he was baptised in Castleton Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he was a soap manufacturer. He married Agnes, daughter of William Glendinning and Mary Elliot. Their children were: Mary, John, William, Mary, Robert, Adam, James and Randle. Adam (1855–1935) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Colterscleuch and elsewhere. He married Eliza (1855–1941), daughter of James Scott and Janet Cavers. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. They had a daughter Janet (b.1879). Alexander of that Ilk and Parton (d.1616) son of John. In 1562 he inherited the lands in Liddesdale that had belonged to his grandfather Ninian, according to a document from James, Earl of Bothwell. He was a witness to a bond of caution in 1585. He married Alison, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Troquhane and secondly Nicola, daughter of Robert Herries of Mabie. His children included: John, who pre-deceased him; Robert, who succeeded; Simon, who died young; and William, who predeceased his father and had descendants who went to Ireland. Andrew (b.1800) probably son of Walter and Elizabeth Park, he was born at Glendinning, Westerkirk. He became shepherd at Craikhope where he is recorded in 1851. In 1837 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Anderson, who was for 50 years shepherd at Glendinning. Their children were: Andrew, who emigrated to New Zealand, where he called his farm ‘Glendearg’; Thomas, who was in the county police; and William, shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir, whose son Andrew was shepherd at Ruletownhead. Andrew (b.c.1815) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir, and grandson of Andrew, who was shepherd at Craikhope. He became shepherd at Ruletownhead, and had 3 brothers who were also shepherds. Archibald of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622 when he was cautioner for his brother Andrew. He also appeared, along with John Graham of ‘Thicksyd’, as caution for ‘Lancie Glendinning, now in Dryff’ (formerly tenant in Logan), as well as ‘Hob and Andro Glendonnings in Logane’ (also in Riddings and Hudshouse, respectively). Archibald (17th C.) resident at ‘Julian’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to John, who was also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Glendinning and their children included: George (b.1689), born in Ashkirk Parish; and John (b.1702), born in Hawick Parish. Archibald (19th C.) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1838–41. Bartholomew (d.c.1503) eldest son of John of Glendonwyn and Parton. He was witness to Alexander Home becoming Bailie of the Lordship of Eskdale in 1495. He witnessed a charter for

Gordon of Lochinvar in 1501. He and his brother Simon were killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope when he was discharging his duties as Sheriff by attempting to arrange for one third of the lands of Wauchope to go to the widow of Lindsay’s father. Lindsay was executed for this crime in 1505. He probably died about the same time as his father, and his brother Ninian succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. David (1860–1942) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Hawthornside and elsewhere. In 1883 he married Margaret Martin (1863–1934) from Canonbie; she died at Lurgiescleuch. Their children were: Matthew Martin (1883–1967), who also worked as a shepherd and married Agnes Skilling; Annie (1885–1964), who married John Easton; William (b.1886), who died in infancy; Elizabeth Agnes (1888–1983); William (again, 1891–1975), who married Mary Jane Easton; Robert (1893–1934); Adam (1896–1976); Margaret Jane (b.1899); and David Martin (b.1903). Ellen (17th/18th C.) said to be an elderly member of the Newcastleton Burgher congregation in about the 1810s. She was the last hold-out for the practice of reading each line before singing psalms in church. When the change arrived, she claimed she had gotten the better of the Session by not joining in, but reading and singing the lines later at home. George (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull in 1709 and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Andrew Davidson in Newbigging and Thomas Davidson (perhaps the man recorded at Stobicote in 1716). George (18th C.) married Isobel Lillico in Kirkton in 1733. George (18th/19th C.) carrier at Hummelenowes. He is recorded in a list of men volunteering in 1803 to fight against the French. He could be the George who was living at Lower Calaburn in 1841, aged about 65, and listed as ‘Independent’. Henry (18th C.) hired at Braidsie (on Hermitage) in 1750, probably as an assistant shepherd. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Burgh, in Cavers parish’ in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive among many others for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was presumably tenant at Brugh and probably related to shepherd John, who was recorded at Brugh in 1694. He may be the ‘John in Brough’ whose will is recorded in 1684 (although the first name is incorrect, the match of the dates is probably not a coincidence). James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Southfield’ in 1684 on a long list of men declared as rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’.

James (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for being Covenanters. He was listed separately from James in Southfield and James in Brugh. James (17th C.) shepherd at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in Wilton in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as herd at Hawick Shiel in 1703. His children included Christian (b.1703), with baptismal witnesses Bailies George Martin and Robert Wright. Margaret (b.1701) was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Birneyknoke in 1716. He probably married Bessie Glendinning in Cavers in 1711 and had children Ann (b.1713), Isabel (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and James (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. His son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlennenig) in 1720. James (b.c.1704) farm worker, born at Whitchesters, probably son of John. He lived there for 41 years and later moved to Hawick. In 1761 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He could be the James who married Bessie Rule (or ‘Rowl’) in Hawick in 1721, both of them being described as ‘in whitchesters’; their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Janet (b.1724), James (b.1727), John (b.1731), Robert (b.1735, Betty (b.1737) and Walter (b.1743). The witnesses in 1731 were William ‘Willieson’ and John Hobkirk and in 1743 were the ‘whole congregation’. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for James Dodds (in Whitchesters) and Jean Glendinning (perhaps his daughter) in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Bowanhill in 1729 when he married Jane Turnbull. James (18th C.) resident at Broadleeshiel in 1729 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Jardine and their son James was baptised in 1776. James (18th C.) resident at Outsidershieil in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Laidlaw and their children included: Betty (b.1757); Margaret (b.1761); and Adam (b.1766). The witnesses in 1766 were Charles Rutherford and John.
Richardson. Elizabeth (b.1760), with mother’s name given as ‘Margaret’ Laidlaw, was probably also his child. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. Adam is probably the son of wright James who died in Hawick in 1787. He could be the son of James and Bessie Rule baptised in Hawick in 1727. James (1749/50–1823) married Margaret Brydon, who died in 1839, aged 83. She may have been daughter of William Brydon, born in Ettrick in 1756. His wife died at Gair (probably the one on Timna Water) and he died at Glendinning. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. He could be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton in 1748. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1769 he married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). He may be the James, junior, whose unnamed child died in 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at ‘Caldendridge’ (probably Caerlaverock) in 1772 when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. Perhaps he was the same man as James in Hawick Parish (if Robert was baptised twice). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Headshaw Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1775/6) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a tailor in Newcastle upon Tyne. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 South Hermitage Street. He married Esther Kyle and they had children William (also a tailor), Margaret and Esther. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Girnwood. In 1808 his child was baptised at Deanburnhaugh. He married Margaret Scott and their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: John (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Robert (b.1813); and James (b.1815), baptised in Lyne and Megget Parish. James (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir. His grandfather Andrew had been shepherd at Craikhope, where he also worked as shepherd. James (19th/20th C.) law clerk in Hawick who was Cornet in 1909 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee in 1925. He served for many years as Master of Ceremonies for the Common Riding. He was also Callants’ Club President in 1934 and Club Treasurer for 20 years. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1503) son of Sir Simon. He possessed large amounts of land, including Glendinning, Clifton, Scraesburgh, Breccaw, Wauchope, Westerkirk and Langholm. He is probably the Laird of Glendinning who was fined in 1494/5 for non-appearance at the Justice-
Glendinning

Winton. His children included: George, who married Elizabeth Glendinning of Gilston, but pre-deceased his father; James, who succeeded his father, but died soon afterwards without children; William who died unmarried soon after his elder brother; and Robert, who succeeded. By this time the family was focussed on their estate at Parton and all local connections appear to have been severed. John ‘Sowtail’ (17th C.) recorded in the Hawick Burgh Records in 1644. His wife, ‘Jenet Scott, alleged witche’, had William Elliot in Harwood, acting as her cautioner, promise that she would appear before the Justice-General or the Bailies of the Regality of Dumfries. John (17th C.) along with Walter (probably a brother or son) he was charged with stealing sheep from the Laird of Gledstains in 1663. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1671); John (b.1674); and Helen (b.1678). The witnesses in 1678 were Robert Hardie and Robert Cowan. John (1665/6-1748) resident at Lodgellig in Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1755, aged 81. John (17th C.) shepherd in Brugh listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was declared a fugitive in 1684. John (17th C.) resident at ‘Julian’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to Archibald, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) tenant at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficient’ of the Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitcesters in 1704 and 1723. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitcesters. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitcesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging in 1731. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His wife’s name was also Glendinning (although no forename is recorded for her) and they married in 1753. Their children included: William (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed son (b.1759); Helen (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also his son. The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. John (1747-1819) born in Cavers Parish, son of Robert. He was a shepherd, who died at Comonbrae and is buried at Teviothead. In 1783 and 1786 he is recorded at Caerlenrig Righead. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: Margaret (1867-1909), daughter of Mary Glendinning Jackson, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd at Wellhaugh in Northumberland and in Robertson Parish. He married Margaret (1867-1909), daughter of Mary Glendinning (the father’s name unknown), and grand-daughter of shepherd Adam. Their children were: Helen (b.1891); William (b.1895); Mary (b.1897); Margaret (b.1901); John (b.1902); and Walter (b.1905). Margaret (15th C.) bequeathed a cow in the last will of Sir David Scott of Braxholme in Whitchesters and Robert Rodger. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitcesters. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitcesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging in 1731. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His wife’s name was also Glendinning (although no forename is recorded for her) and they married in 1753. Their children included: William (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed son (b.1759); Helen (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also his son. The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. John (1747-1819) born in Cavers Parish, son of Robert. He was a shepherd, who died at Comonbrae and is buried at Teviothead. In 1783 and 1786 he is recorded at Caerlenrig Righead. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitcesters. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitcesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723 and another for Robert Scott, weaver in Hawick Shiel. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie in 1731. He married Helen Scott in 1701 and their children included James (b.1704) and Esther (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in 1491/2. She is recorded as ‘Margarete Glendownyn’ and Adam and Mark are also listed. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as liferenter of Stouslie and another farm (probably Boonraw) in Hassendean Parish, valued at £291. She was probably the ‘Mary’ of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) who married George of Synton and Boonraw. She was probably also the ‘Lyfrenter of Boonraw’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. It is unclear when she died, but her son George Scott of Boonraw was owner of the same lands in 1678. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Outerside, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mark (15th C.) received a cow and 2 bolls of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Marco de Glendownyn’ and Adam and Margaret are also named. Matthew (d.1408) 2nd son of Adam de Glendownyn of Glendownyn. His mother was grand-niece of Sir William Douglas, ‘the Flower of Chivalry’ and his brother Sir Simon was killed at Otterburn. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from 1376, which was void by the death of John Ganon. At this time he was said to also hold a Canonry of Glasgow, with the expectation of a Prebend. He was appointed Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII in 1387, succeeding Walter Wardlaw, and serving until his death. He also served as ambassador to England. In 1401 he introduced a new tax in the Diocese of Glasgow. He died at his manor of Lochwood near Glasgow. Note that there was dispute in the church at the time, with an alternative Bishop (John de Framysden) appointed by Pope Boniface IX in 1391, but never recognised in Scotland. Matthew (14th/15th C.) recorded as ‘Matheo de Glendownyn’ when he witnessed the 1420 charter for the half barony of Branxholme, passing from the Inglis’s to the Scotts. Ninian of Glendownyn and Parton (d.1541) son of John of Parton. He succeeded after his brothers Bartholomew and Simon were murdered by John Lindsay of Wauchope. In 1503 he granted a precept of sasine for George Gledstains in the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire. He was confirmed in the Barony of Scraesburgh in 1510, and other lands in Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire in the following years. In 1528 he resigned Clifton and Scraesburgh to the King, in favour of himself and his wife. In 1530 he was superior of Scraesburgh, when John Rutherford resigned his lands into his hands, and then he regranted them. He married Janet, daughter of Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum, and possibly also Katherine, daughter of John Maxwell, Lord of Caerlaverock. He was succeeded by his son John. He had another son Simon, who was reduced to poverty by 1554, with his son John and wife Janet Dunbar, ‘lady of liferent of Partoun’, agreed to provide for him by turns. Ninian (1806–84) son of William and Mary Elliot, he was born at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Plashettes in Northumberland. In 1836–38 he was listed as shepherd at Willowbog, England, among heads of households in Castleton Parish. In 1840 and 1841 he was at Kidd’s Linn. In 1827 he married Margaret Little (1797–1841) in Westerkirk and their children were Helen (b.1827), William (b.1828), Mary (b.1830), John (b.1831), Janet (b.1833), Mina (b.1835), John (again, b.1837) and Agnes (b.1840). He secondly married Mina Turnbull (1810–93) and their children were Isabella (b.1847), Agnes (b.1847), Margaret (b.1848), Joan (b.1850), Adam (b.1853) and Robert (b.1856). He died in Bellingham. Ninian (1855–1911) son of shepherd William, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd in Northumberland. In 1879 he married Hannah Robson, daughter of Richard Brown and their children were Richard Brown, William and Annie Brown. Peter (1863–1956) son of William and Ann Kyle. He was a shepherd, like his father and brothers. He was at Wormscleuch in 1881. Richard (15th/16th C.) Sheriff in Edinburgh who confirmed in 1505/6 the summons served to George, Master of Angus for payment to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for breaking their marriage agreement. He is recorded as ‘Richard Glendunwyn’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings. Robert of that Ilk and Parton (b.1585) son of Alexander. He became heir in 1606 after his older half-brother died. He had extensive lands in Ewesdale and Eskdale. He married Margaret, daughter of William Maxwell, Lord of Terregles and was succeeded by his son John. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 as tenant in ‘Logane’ and also Hudhouse. Archibald in Fiddletoun and John Graham in Thickside acted as cautioners for him, Lancie in Dryff and Andrew in Riddings. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Deans. Robert (19th C.) recorded as ‘residenter’ in Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1835, on a list of male heads of families. Scott (b.1806/7) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Boghall. He was listed among heads of households as a mason of Sir Adam of Glenndonwyn. He was younger

of Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow. In

being resigned by Thomas Baliol. He died at the Battle of Otterburn in 1368. In 1378-1437 he was one of the witnesses to the peace treaty with Henry VI of England, and he also guaranteed peace several times in the 1450s. He had a

and another charter of lands in Kirkudbright in 1458. He witnessed a charter for James II in 1451

fries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the creation of the Barony of Kilmours for Alexander Cunningham, while on an expedition into England

left by James II. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls for Roxburghshire. In 1456 he witnessed a charter for Robert,

Lord Maxwell and in 1458/9 had a charter for the Barony of Parton in Kirkcudbrightshire. He also served as Bailie of Eskdale in the late 1450s. In 1459 he was one of the witnesses to the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, made in Perth. By 1464 he was designated 'of Parton' when he was again a guarantor of a treaty with England. In 1465, as Lord of the Barony of Scraesburgh, he granted the west half of Scraesburgh and all of Hunthill to Robert Rutherford of Chatto and his wife Margaret. He married Agnes Hepburn and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Alexander Lindsay, Earl of Crawford. He may also have married Marjory Johnstone. His children included: Simon, who pre-

probably progenitor of the Drumrask branch; Archibald; Matthew, who held the lands of Whitslade, Glenkirk, etc.; and Margaret, who married

Robert Rutherford of Chatto. Simon (15th C.)

listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased

James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings.

He may be the same Simon who produced a remission (along with William Grahamslaw) at the Justice-aien in Jedburgh in 1493. Simon of Meg-dale and Dalgiegh (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as

'crownar' (i.e. Coroner) of Eskdale. He acknowl-

dged that he had received payment for Dalgiegh

tion) from his tenant John Scott of Thirlestane.

He was probably son of John of Dalgiegh. Simon

(16th C.) resident of Selkirk. In 1579/70 it was stated by John Synton that William Scott 'alias

in Shaws and stole 5 sheep belonging to ['[blank]

Diocese. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Glendynwyn’ when he witnessed a letter of acquittance for George Scott of Whames in 1510/1. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Glendynnyng in Harrot’ (i.e. Harwood) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son John was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were 2 William Scotts. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscotesheil in 1756 and Outersidesheil in 1763 and 1766. He married Jean Heatlie in Roberton in 1747. His children included James (b.1748), Andrew (b.1750), Margaret (b.1752), Janet (b.1754), Thomas (b.1756), Walter (b.1759), Isobel (b.1761), Jean (b.1763), Agnes (b.1766) and Christian (b.1768). Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded at Outersidesheil on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (1751/2–1831) shepherd at Blackcleugh. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Helm in 1802. In 1786 he married Mary Weir (d.1848). Their children included: Mary (b.1787); Robert (b.1789), who died aged 19; William (b.1795); Christian (1798–1881), who married Jessie Purdon; and Betty (b.1800). The witnesses in 1800 were Mr. George Pott and Thomas Elliot. He is buried at Teviothead. Thomas (b.1795) son of Adam, who came from near Newcastleton. His father served in the Royal Wagon Train, and obtained for him a cornetcy in the same corps when he was 18. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. He became Lieutenant, and was transferred to the 40th Regiment, serving in Canada. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew and Jane Anderson. His father was shepherd at Craikhope, where he was born. He became a member of the county police force. Thomas (b.1853) son of shepherd William, he was born at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He worked as a shepherd at various farms in Northumberland. In 1877 in Ewes he married Nicholas (1858–1930), daughter of William Murray and Agnes Bell. Their children were Ellen, William, Thomas and John James. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son James was baptised in 1669. Walter (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was listed right after him and so surely related. Walter (18th C.) married Janet Irvine in Hawick Parish in 1707. Walter (18th C.) married Catherine Corbet in Hawick Parish in 1710. their daughter Jean was baptised in 1712. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Goldielands in 1712. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included Jean (b.1732). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Lunn and their children included: Helen (b.1772); and James (b.1773). The witnesses in 1772 were James (surely related to him) and William Elliot. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (b.c.1785) roadman and labourer living at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–1841. His wife was Elizabeth. Walter (1849–1928) son of Adam, he was born at Tweedhead in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd like his father and several brothers. He lived in Northumberland, Langholm, Southdean, etc. In 1885 he married Jane (b.1859), daughter of James Turnbull and Margaret Ewart. He died at Hobkirk Manse Cottage. Their children were: Margaret (b.1885); Adam (1887–1917), who served with the K.O.S.B. and died in Israel; and James (b.1889), who died in infancy. William (14th/15th C.) Subdean of Glasgow in 1413/4. He was probably related to the noble Glendinnings. William (14th/15th C.) witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow in about 1465. He must have been associated with the Diocese, and was probably the William, Rector of Crawfordjohn, who witnessed other records about the same time. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded being ‘called Lord in the Cruikis’ among men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas. William (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, probably related to Walter who was also listed there. William (17th C.) resident at Blackhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William ‘Will’ (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In 1778 he was at Nether Stanegeathside. He married Agnes (or ‘Aggie’) Johnson and their children included: James (b.1776); William (b.1778); Robert (b.1780); and William (b.1783). William (1760–1840) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier and brother of Lieut. Adam. He was shepherd at Thorlieshope and lived at Cauldronfoot. He then moved to Cooms in Tarras Water and died at Tweedhead. He was at Cooms in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He married Mary, daughter of Ninian Elliot and Janet Douglas. Their children include: Janet (1801–94), who married John Armstrong and died at Hermitage Cottage; Adam Glendivan

(1802–68), who married Margaret Robson and died at Tweedenthed; Agnes (1804–88), who married Adam Glendinning and died in Liverpool; Ninian (1806–84), who married Mina Turnbull; and William (1810–37), who married Judith Armstrong. William (b.c.1780) road contractor living at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. His wife was Elspeth and their children included John and Andrew, who were both masons. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Toftholm. He was recorded as a head of household for the first (and only) time in 1836. William (b.1809/10) son of William, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, like his father. He was recorded in 1841 and 1851 at about 10 South Hermitage Street. He was absent from the 1861 census. William (1830–1911) eldest son of Adam and Margaret Robson, he was born at Boghall in Liddesdale. He worked as a shepherd, like his father and many other family members before him. He married Anne (1830–1918), daughter of David Kyle, farmer at Broadlee in the Borthwick. Their children, born at Boghall, Wormsleuch and elsewhere in the Parish were: Adam (1855–1935), shepherd at Colterscleuch; David (b.1857), who died in infancy; David (1860–1942), shepherd at Hawthornside; William (b.1862), shepherd at Hundalee in Jedwater; Peter (1864–1956), shepherd at Wormsleuch and Gatehousecote; and Margaret (1867–1939). He died at Gatehousecote and his wife at Cleughhead, Southdean, and they are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (b.1862) son of William and Ann Kyle. Like many of his family members before him, he worked as a shepherd. He lived in Castleton, Morebattle and Southdean Parishes. In 1897 he married Agnes (b.1871), daughter of William Hardie. Their children were: Hardie Bain (1900–54); William (b.1902); Margaret (b.1905); and Ann Kyle (1909–32), who married Robert Cromarty (formerly ‘Glendonwyn’ and variants, such as ‘Glendennan’, ‘Glendevin’, ‘Glendinen’, ‘Glendinenn’, ‘Glendining’, ‘Glendinnyn’, ‘Glendinwin’, ‘Glendinwyn’, ‘Glendinewyng’, ‘Glendinegyn’, ‘Glendonwynyn’, ‘Glendonwyne’, ‘Glendonwyng’, ‘Glendunynyn’, ‘Glendunynyn’, ‘Glendunynyn’, ‘Glendowynyn’, ‘Glendencynyn’). Glendivans (glen-diy-vin) n. former lands in Ewesdale, near where the Glendivan Burn meets the Ewes Water. Along with Flask and Howgill it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is probably the ‘Glendorane’ (likely a transcription error) and ‘Glendovan’ listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 368 acres, bounded by Howgill, Sorbie, Kirkton and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. The map shows farmhouses on both sides of the burn, some parts of the farm on the other side of the Ewes Water and a small area of the farm owned by the Laird of Arkleton. John Irving and Robert Armstrong were there in 1797. William Irvine was farmer there in 1841, his son John taking over later. There were also Eastons living there in 1841. A little further up the burn from the farmhouse are remains of 2 settlements (not to be confused with Glendonwyn). Glendonwyn (glen-don-win) n. old form of Glendinning, the family name coming from lands in the upper Meggat valley. There was formerly a tower there, with remains still visible in the mid-19th century, on the south side of the Poldovich Burn, a few hundred metres south of the modern farmhouse. There was once an antimony mine here. There are several nearby earthworks and enclosures. In 1669 Walter, son of Robert Scott of Harwood, was served heir to his father’s 7½ merkland of ‘Glendoning’ in the Parish of Westerkirk (it is ‘Glendinning’ on Blaue’s 1654 map). Glendouglas (glen-dug-lis) n. lands in the Jed valley, off the A68 south of Jedburgh, at the northern extremity of Southdean Parish. The big house was once home of the factor for the Home family. There was formerly a private school there, which eventually became a state primary school and closed in 2005 (also written ‘Glen Douglas’). Glenhowe (glen-how) n. knitwear manufacturers at Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in the 20th century.

Glenkerry

Glenkerry (glen-ke-ree) n. farm on the Timna Water, where it is joined by the Glenkerry Burn, on the B709 south of Ettrick village. In 1415 the lands were swapped for those of Bellendale, between Scott of Buccleuch and the monks of Melrose. The lands are specifically referred to as ‘Wynzehope called Glenkery, west of the water of Temay’. Scott of Tushielaw paid rental to Melrose

New Zealand in the late 1960s, where she married her husband died in 1963 and she emigrated to Innes in 1931, married him the following year.

Glennie (gle-nee) n. George (19th C.) resident engineer of the Hawick branch of the North British Railway, living in Melrose. In 1849 he was charged, along with an Edinburgh contractor, with culpable homicide in the deaths of 8 railway workers who died when the Roxburgh viaduct collapsed.

Glenny (gle-nee) n. Arthur Philip (1904–67) eldest son of Charles James. He took flying lessons, like his brother Charles James. The pair partnered with Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson to manufacturer the ‘Henderson-Glenny Gad-fly’, but eventually he withdrew his financial support in the project. The plane was designed by K.N. Pearson and manufactured at Byfleet, Surrey in 1929. Charles James (1871–1961) second son of James. He was born at Deanfield in Hawick. He worked with the family firm of Wilson & Glenny, and for many years was Managing Director, retiring in 1936. He was known as a tennis player, recorded 1891–1908. He was Border Champion on more than one occasion, won the Scottish Northern Championship in 1894 and was runner-up in the Scottish Championship in 1904. He married Ilfra Showell and they had 4 children: Elsie Ilfra Muriel (1899–1989); Arthur Philip (1904–67); James Esme (1905–80), who was Cornet; and Eileen Ilfra Wilson. He died on his 90th birthday. Elizabeth nee Pringle (20th C.) daughter of John Douglas Pringle and Susan Roberts. She was Cornet’s Lass to Riddell Innes in 1931, married him the following year. They moved to London to work for Pringle’s, but her husband died in 1963 and she emigrated to New Zealand in the late 1960s, where she married Jim Glenny (who died in 1983) in 1970.

George Crosfield (b.1878) youngest son of James and Georgina Waterhouse. He trained as a lawyer, and practiced for a while in Carlisle, in partnership with a Mr. Mawson. He later emigrated to New Zealand, where he became a successful sheep farmer. He married Catherine Anne (‘Cathy’) Pringle, daughter of Walter. Their children were James Douglas, Mary Catherine and Margaret. James (1836–1914) partner in Wilson & Glenny’s, who gave the Town its Public Baths in 1912. He was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire, only son of John and Katherine Wilson. Like his parents he was a Quaker. He was the last private owner of the corn mill and farm of Lethenty in Aberdeenshire. In 1865 he moved to Blackburn in Lancashire, where he went into business as a cotton spinner, with his cousin, John William Cruickshank. Health problems forced him to sell his business and move abroad for the winter of 1873. He returned to England, to start a cement business in Chester. He was consequently briefly in a partnership with London concrete pioneer Charles Drake (who was responsible for the Congregational Manse), although the business, based at Thorlleshope, folded in 1875. But also in 1875 he was invited to become a partner in a tweed business with his uncle George Wilson and 2 cousins, Charles John and George Murray Wilson; thus was born Wilsons & Glenny. In 1891 it became a limited company under the name Wilson & Glenny, Ltd. In 1867 he married Georgina Waterhouse (1844–1923). They had 4 children: John (1868–1919), who worked for the family firm; Charles James (b.1871), who was for a long time Director at Wilson & Glenny; Elizabeth (1875–90), who died while still at school; and George Crosfield (b.1878), who became a lawyer and moved to New Zealand. He had the house at Bucklands extended in the latter part of the 19th century and died there. James Esme ‘Jimmy’ (1905–80) son of Charles James. He was educated at St. Bees in Cumbria. He was Cornet in 1927 and lived at Deanfield. An early car enthusiast, his 1926 Delage still exists. He also flew aeroplanes, first taking lessons just months after being Cornet. Along with his brother Arthur and Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson they developed a low-cost nonoplane called the ‘Henderson-Glenny Gadfly’, but only 3 were ever built. He flew from Cramlington to Hawick in 1930 in a de Havilland DH60 Moth, with repairs in Hawick being carried out by Jimmie Guthrie. Also in 1930 he survived a crash after engine failure at R.A.F. Turnhouse in Edinburgh, his fellow crewman being killed. He

Glenmac

Glenmac (glen-mak) n. knitwear company with a factory up the Cross Wynd and another part on Teviot Road, which had been Walter Wilson’s. The factories closed in the 1980s when taken over by Dawson International. A smaller cashmere-based factory remained at Burnfoot, associated with Barrie, but carrying on the Glenmac brand.

Glenstone owned the lands in 1802 (it is ‘Glenkery’ in 1235/6 and 1415, ‘Glenkeyrie’ in 1564 and ‘Glencarie’ in 1620; ‘Glencyr’ and ‘Glencirry’ are both marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Abbey for these lands in 1557 and the half-land there was still held by Scott of Tushielaw in 1620, when the reversion was resigned to him by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. The lands were part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. Robert Grieve was there in 1724 when he married Jean Black from Hawick Parish. John Rutherford of Edgerstone owned the lands in 1802 (it is ‘Glenkerry’ in 1235/6 and 1415, ‘Glenkeyrie’ in 1564 and ‘Glencarie’ in 1620; ‘Glencyr’ and ‘Glencirry’ are both marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

had a small aircraft hangar built at Groundistone Heights and later moved to Ravenslea on Sunnyhill Road. He served in R.A.F. during WWII and afterwards worked for British South American Airways. He married in 1936 and died at his home in Portugal. John (1799–1844) from Kinmuck, Aberdeenshire, son of James and Elizabeth Wigham. The family can be traced back to John, who was born in 1641 at Mill of Colihill (also Aberdeenshire). In 1833 he married Katherine, daughter of William Wilson, Hawick manufacturer, and must have been a regular visitor to Hawick. Their children were: Elizabeth (1835–45); James (1836–1914), who became partner in Wilson & Glenny’s; and Mary Ann (1838–1917), who married John Charles Wilson. John (1868–1919) eldest son of James. After leaving school he entered the family firm of Wilson & Glenny. However, he retired from the business while still quite young. He married Helen Borthwick and their children were: Barbara (b.1899); Katherine (b.1903); Phyllis Mary (b.1905); and Evelyn Georgina Wilson. Mary Ann (1838–1917) sister of manufacturer James, and son of John and Katherine Wilson, she was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire. She married Charles John Wilson, partner of her brother. Her children included Hawick Provost George Heron Wilson. She died at Deanfield.

Glenpyet (glen-pI-i’) n. former name for lands in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands in the late 15th century, split into 3 steadings, the middle one being leased to Thomas Dickson of Ormiston in 1479. In the 1480s they were leased by Robert Lauder, William Inglis and Thomas Dickson. The Middlestead of Glenpyet was referred to as ‘Wallacehill’ in 1486. They were still Crown lands in 1502 when half was held by David Inglis. They were feued by the Murrays in the early and late 16th century. In 1541 they were valued at £24. They belonged to the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the 16th century. They are recorded as ‘Glenpoyt’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme, when James Brewhouse was tenant. Sir Walter owed ‘males’ for these lands to his half-brother Gideon Murray. Christian Gray, widow of James Brewhouse was removed as tenant in 1581. ‘Jedion Murray of Glenpint’ is among the 180 or so followers of Sir James Johnstone who had a ‘respite’ in 1594 for their role at Dryfe Sands the year before; he is the same man later referred to as Sir Gideon of Elibank (it is ‘Glenpoyte’ in 1456, ‘Glenpiot’ in 1468, ‘Glenpoite’ in 1479 and 1489, ‘Glenpot’ in 1541, ‘Glenpoit’ in 1575/6, ‘Glenpoyt’ in 1581 and ‘Glenpoytte’ in 1594).

Glenrauchan (glen-raw-chiu) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. Archie Scott from there was declared a fugitive in 1606. It was listed among the lands in the Lordship confirmed to Alexander Earl of Home in about 1610. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may correspond to the modern Glenrigh (it is ‘Glenrauchane’ in 1506 and 1509/10, ‘Glenrauchan’ in about 1610 and ‘Glenrichen’ in 1663; it is probably the ‘Glegachan’ marked near Eweslees on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

glent (glen’, glent) v., arch. to glint, gleam – ‘Twas but a sternie glentin’ On a pool that night’[JoHa], ‘Nae star was glentin’ i’ the lift; The North sent forth a blendin’ drift’[RDW], ‘Yonder’s David wi’ his een glentin’ like brass tackets in his heid’[RMi], to glance sidelong, squint – ‘An’ whyles ne’er a word he can find out to say, For glentin’ and glimin’ at Meggie M’Givelry’[JoHa], ‘...he whus’les on the dowgs, glentin’ a’ the time his restless eye roound him, syne at the ferns’[BCM1881], pp., poet. gleamed, glinted – ‘His face was like a burning coal, His eyn, like candles glent’[JTe], n., arch. a glance – ‘A glent o’ his eie’[GW], a glint, gleam – ‘The glent o’ siller’[GW].

Glenvoran (glen-vô-rin) n. former lands within Ewesdale, between Eweslees and Fiddleton. The lands held the special feudal status of ‘free ten-andrie’ and may have been connected with the lands at ‘Ewes Doors’. There was once a fortified house there, with ‘Hobbie of Glenvor’ marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map and also marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map just north of Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. It was among a set of lands in the Ewes valley that were transferred from Simon Armstrong to George, Lord Home in 1525. This was confirmed when the King revoked a set of charters relating to lands of the Homes in 1535, including this and several other parts of Ewesdale. ‘Hobbe of Glenvorane’, an Elliot, is also recorded. ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoron’ is recorded in 1579. Probably the same Archie Elliot ‘of Glenworren’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens; his name was first among the Elliots of Ewesdale, suggesting some prominence of Glenvoran at that time. Robert Elliot from there was declared a fugitive in 1606. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may have been near the modern cottage of Fiddleton Bankend where sometime around 1900 a ‘piece of very substantial masonry’ was found while digging a little to the west. There was formerly a mill there (also written ‘Glenvorane’, ‘Glenvoren’, etc.; it is ‘Glenvorane’ in 1506 and 1535 and ‘Glenvorrane’ about 1610; it is ‘Glenvorann’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Glesci

Glesci (glez-ki) n. a variant of Glesgi – ‘Well, Aw got back ti the auld country right enough after a favourable passage and landed in Glesgae’ [JEDM], ‘Some ministers in Glesca thouht it was a ‘subtle peril’. Hab can hardly wait’ [DH] (also spelled ‘Glesca’ and ‘Glescae”).

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. Glasgow, Scotland’s largest city, approximately 80 miles from Hawick. Population (1991) 602,954. Hawick, and the rest of Peebleshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire belonged to the Episcopal Church Diocese of Glasgow from sometime around 1100 until transferred to Edinburgh in 1888. For a long time Teviotdale was one of the rural deaneries of the Diocese. In the 1960s Hawick (like many other towns) made an agreement to build housing for families from the Glasgow area, to solve a problem with the over-expansion of Glasgow, known as the ‘Overspill Programme’ – ‘Next hail thee, Glasgow! Three times hail! To ourish mays’t thou never fail, But ever nobly cock thy crest As the metropolis of the West’ [AS] (also spelled ‘Glesgae’; see also Glesci; Teries often speak about going ‘throwe ti Glesgi’).

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. (Glasgow) John (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys, which killed about 200 men. William (17th C.) presumably related to John, he was also a banished Covenanters who escaped from the 1679 shipwreck. However, most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey.

Godfrey (god-free) n. Valentine (1800–74) born in Leicestershire, son of Valentine and Sussanah Rawson. He was an early stocking-machine needle maker, and taught both his sons the trade. He moved to Hawick in the late 1830s. He is recorded in 1841 living at about 25 High Street and was at about 4 Walter’s Wynd in 1851. He is listed as a needle-maker on Walter’s Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Eleanor Austin. Their children included: James (b.1820/1), who married Janet Slater; Susan (b.1824/5), who married Rober Oliver; Jane (b.c.1826), who married Thomas Swinton; Valentine (b.1827); and Sarah A. (b.1832/3). Valentine ‘Val’ (1827–1911) English stockingmaker, born in St. Margaret’s, Leicestershire, son of Valentine. He was an experienced maker of needles for hand-frames, learning the trade from his father. He came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of the main men who introduced cricket to the Town. He was listed as ‘Valentine, jun.’ as a needle-maker on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Hope in Hawick in 1847, and she died in 1913, aged 87. The couple celebrated a golden wedding anniversary. Their children included: Elspeth (b.c.1850); Thomas (b.c.1854); Allan (b.c.1856); and Sarah (1857–1941), who married Bailie Andrew Landles. 4 of their children died in infancy. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

the Gododdin (thu-go-do-din) n. tribe who inhabited the south-eastern part of Scotland during the Roman and post-Roman period, with capital at Edinburgh, and who spoke Brythonic. They were previously known as the Votadini and the Romans also referred to them as the Gadeni. A commemoration of one of their battles (Caltraeth) exists in the epic poem ‘Y Gododdin’. Hawick was probably included in their area, although the boundaries are very uncertain.

Goldie (gö-die) n. David (17th C.) joint tenant with James Mitchelson of the farms of Ettleton and Millholm in 1632. His name was spelled ‘Goudie’. Elliot singer born in Hawick. He studied at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, and has sung with the Scottish Opera Chorus, as well as compering several tatoos. He first performed in Hawick Common Riding festivities in 1984. He is the singer of ‘Songs of Teviotdale’ and ‘Callant’s Song’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Tviotdale in Song and Poetry’.

Goldielands (gol-dee-liidz) n. farm with tower, set in a prominent position overlooking the confluence of the Borthwick with the Teviot. The lands were possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch since 1446, when they exchanged half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands with Inglis of Manor for some in Lanarkshire. William, son of William Scott of Goldielands was recorded in 1493 and George Scott in Goldielands in 1510. The ‘ditch of Goldielands’ formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. In late 1548 the ‘manis of the landis of Goldland’ are among those that were raided and burned by a group of Kers, Englishmen and others, complained about in a summons by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; 200 ‘thraves’ of barley, along with corn cattle and other goods were lost. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch: at that time it consisted of 254 acres, bounded by Crumhaugh, Hawick Common, Alton Croft, Fenwick and the River Teviot, and with a small part on the north side of the Teviot. The Scotts of Goldielands were an offshoot of the Scotts of Branxholme, who were important in the Hawick area for several generations. The tower was probably built mostly in the 16th century, and is now a ruin on the farm. Probably its most famous resident was the first Laird, Walter Scott ‘the Laird’s Wat’, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire and whose son Walter was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596; his tombstone is preserved in the Museum, and was part of a family vault located below the steeple in the northern aisle of the present St. Mary’s Kirk (later used as the furnace chamber). Tradition says that the last Laird was hanged from his own gateway for stealing cattle; however, there is no evidence of this. Walter Scott of Goldielands lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1643. The family history in the 17th century is murky, but we are helped through the existence of a complaint made in 1672, preserved in the Melrose Regality records. The Scotts of Goldielands eventually failed to have a male heir, and their lands were inherited by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, except for the estate of Goldielands itself, which returned to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1627 the farm is described as a ‘neuer payit ferme’ (i.e. never having been rented to a tenant), estimated to pay ‘100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.’ It has been a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch since the mid-1600s. William Lyne was a tenant there in 1642. There were Elliots living there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Andrew Riddell was there in at least 1702–08. John Elliot was tenant there in 1713. In 1706 the title Baron of Goldielands was created (among others) for Henry, son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. A plantation to the west of the tower is probably quite old, and is shown clearly on the 1718 drawing. John Elliot was still recorded there in 1742. In 1788 the estate of Scott of Goldielands was recorded as having been valued at £400, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch—‘He pass’d the Peel of Goldiland, And cross’d old Borthwick’s roaring strand’ [SWS], ‘Does the blaze rise on Goldielands?’ Walter of Bransholm grasps his brand, And calls upon his gallant band—‘For Hawick ride’ . . . ’[WiS], ‘But to the story that’s afloat, I’ll tell it while ’tis green: Near Goldielands, within the wood, A heidless man was seen’ [TCh], ‘O, I maun gang doon by Gowdlands To’er, Where the Teviot wails i’ the wintry rain . . . ’[FGS], ‘Ever more dear were the echoes are ringing Out through the green glades by Goldielands’ wall: Where the sheep bleat to the sound of your going, In the lush pastures by fair Branxholm hall’ [WL], ‘And bursting ranks of doves rise heavenward From Goldielands’ high tow’ring stone’ [IWS] (also spelled variously ‘Gaudilands’, ‘Goldiland’, ‘Goldilands’, ‘Goudielands’, ‘Gowdilands’, ‘Gowdilands’, etc.; the name first appears in the mid-15th century, being ‘Goldilandis’ in 1435 and ‘Goldylandis’ in 1446 and 1493; it is ‘Goldelandis’ in 1510, ‘Goldland’ in 1549, ‘Gordelandis’, ‘Gorlandis’ and ‘Goldielands’ in 1574, ‘Goldielands’ in 1574 and 1575, ‘Gowdilands’ in 1577, ‘Goldielands’ in 1574, 1580 and 1581, ‘Goldelande’ in 1579, ‘Goldelandis’ in 1583/4, ‘Gaudielands’ in 1586, ‘Goldielandis’ in 1593 and ‘Gaudylandis’ in 1594, and from 1596 tends to begin with the Scots ‘Gowd’ rather than ‘Gold’, e.g. ‘Goudilandis’ in 1592, ‘Gouldielandis’ in 1610, ‘Gowdilands’ and ‘Goudilands’ in 1627, ‘Gowdilands’ in 1643, ‘Gowdilands’ in 1646, ‘Goidielands’ in 1648, ‘Gawdilands’ in 1649, ‘Gaudilands’ in 1650, ‘Gowdilaw’ in 1655, ‘Gowdilands’ in 1673, ‘Gowdileans’ in 1682, ‘Goudilians’ in 1690 and ‘Gouldians’ in 1698; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Gaudielands’, Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Gaudylandis’, de Witt’s c. 1680 map as ‘Gaudylandis’ and Roy’s c. 1750 map as ‘Gold Lands’; the origin might be either from yellow flowers once growing there, perhaps from the richness of the soil or from the Old English personal name ‘Golda’; there is no reason to believe the Victorian view that it was once the residence of the ‘Goldie’ family).

Goldielands Cottage (göl-dee-lindz-ko'-ej) n. cottage on the farm of Goldielands. There were Armstrongs there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Goldielands Toor (göl-dee-lindz-toor) n. tower on the farm of Goldielands. It is a typical 16th century peel tower, built in a useful location as a watch-tower to protect Branxholme. The tower is approximately 10 × 7 m, with 5 stories, and formerly had a parapet walkway. In lay-out and construction, it is similar to Burnhead Tower, and was the model for Westburnflat Tower in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Black Dwarf’. There is a view in Grose’s ‘Antiquities of Scotlant’ from 1789, showing the tower in good condition and with an adjacent barmkin, although the details may not be factually accurate; it shows a walled enclosure with the large tower (along with a couple of small outbuildings) in the south-west corner, and another tower in the south-east corner. There is now no evidence of the wall, although a mound may the Gonial Blast (thū-gō-nee-ul-blawst) n. severe snowstorm in southern Scotland in early 1794, described by the Ettrick Shepherd (although there is some confusion over whether this is 1794 or 1795). Thousands of sheep were killed, particularly in Eskdale, but also in many other areas. Around 20 shepherds also perished, including William Scott at Priesthaughshiel and one at Sorbietrees. There is also a detailed description by Rev. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, including the progression of the weather from 23rd January onwards, with the fatal day being the 25th; he lists shepherds who perished in neighbouring parishes, and tallies the dead sheep in Eskdalemuir to over 4,000 (the name derives from gonial; also spelled ‘Goniel’).

Gonnella (go-ne-lu) n. Giaccondo ‘George’ (19th/20th C.) from Barga in Lucca Province, Tuscany, Italy. He lived at 6 Dickson Street and ran Telio’s chip shop. His wife was Mary and their children were: Anna Leah, who married Andrew Wilkinson; and Giovanni ‘Jock’, who married Olive Graham. He died while on a return visit to Barga.

He married Christian Stoddart and their children included: Agnes (b.1800); Ann (b.1802); Walter (b.1805); Jess (b.1808); James (b.1812); and Robert (b.1816). The first 4 children were baptised in Lilliesleaf and the later 2 in Ashkirk. George (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Betty Marton and their children included: Catherine (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and George (b.1836). Rev. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he became minister of Newarhill Church, in the Anti-burgher Presbytery of Hamilton, in 1891. George Lamont (1951–) local songwriter and musician, great-grandson of John Cumming. Born in Hawick and brought up at the Prefabs, he works as a gas engineer. He is the front man for the ‘G.L.G. band’, and was previously in the bands ‘Nemesis’ and ‘Bogard’. An acoustic guitar player, he is also a member of the Tennessee Songwriter’s Association. He wrote the songs ‘Hawick Stands Alone’, and ‘We Are the Heart of Hawick’. Gideon (18th/19th C.) originally from Roberton Parish, he is recorded living at Greenbank in 1793 and Whithope in 1795 and 1798. He married Betty Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1790. Their children included: Andrew (b.1792); Jane (b.1795), who married John Elliot; James (b.1798); and Gideon (b.1801). Hugh (1767–1847) prominent baker in Hawick. He was son of Archibald and Elizabeth Irvine. His baker’s shop was at the bottom corner of the Howegate (No. 1, on the Silver Street corner). He also milled flour for a while at Trow Mill and farmed at Greensidehall and Broomiebrae. He was said to be known for his intellect and conversation, and was a keen attendant of Wilton Kirk. He remarked about the new minister (Rev. Stevenson) ‘Oh, he has plenty o’ guid rough stuff in him, and when he comes to a difficulty he dashes in a trowelfu’ o’ lime, and goes on again’. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In Ashkirk Parish in 1793 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth or Euphemia or ‘Epie’), daughter of John Scott. Their children were: John (1798–1869), Cornet, Bailie and grocer; William (1806–90), baker; Alexander, miller at Trow Mill; Betty and Hugh (d.1805), who died in infancy; Archibald (d.1811); and Andrew (d.1811). Hugh (b.1838/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, eldest son of Alexander. He was farmer at Trow Mill. He is listed there in 1861 (at the age of 22) as mill master, farmer of 50 acres and employer of 7 people. He was living with his brothers Alexander, William and Archibald and his sister Elspeth. He was there later in the 1860s, but must have emigrated, since he died in Argentina, and his brother Alexander took over at Trow Mill. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Wright and their children included: Margaret (b.1680). James (17th C.) resident of ‘Dodburne in Kirkton Paroch’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Efflidge in 1710. He was surely related to the earlier James from Dodburn. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Janet (b.1708) and James (b.1710). James (18th C.) servant in Goldlands when he married Janet Hogg in Wilton in 1728, the declarations also being made in Hawick Parish. Their son George was born in Hawick in 1731. James (18th C.) farmer at Bedrule according to the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls. Bailie James (18th/19th C.) son of Robert and brother of Robert and John. He was a joiner in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1810s and served as Senior Bailie in 1821; thereafter he was always known as ‘Bailie Goodfellow’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was chairman of the meeting when Lord Brougham visited Hawick in 1833. His niece Agnes (daughter of Robert) married Walter Haddon. He married Magdalene (or Margaret) Scott. Their children included: Margaret (1792–1826), who married George Buckham; and Agnes (b.1796), who married Thomas Young, but died aged 20. The witnesses in 1792 and 1796 were the whole congregation. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Hobart and their children included Walter (b.1805) and Jess (a son, b.1808). James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) wright on the Back Row, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map in about the middle of the right side of Drumlanrig Square. He could be the same man as the Bailie. James (19th C.) living at Muirhouslaw in 1841 and in Lilliesleaf in 1851 and 1861. In 1861 he was described as ‘Agricultural Labourer and Grocer’. He married Jessie, daughter of John Fairgrieve, carrier from Selkirk. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) included: George (b.1839); Elizabeth (b.1842); John (b.1845); Christina (b.1849); Helen (b.1851); Janet (b.c.1855); and James (b.c.1859). James (b.1834/5) born in Edinburgh, he was a ‘Woollen Cloth Finisher’ on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife was Isabella from Stow and their children included Elizabeth, Mary, Isabella and George. Janet (19th C.) listed as a milliner or dressmaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (17th C.) shepherd at Milngavine according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Southfield. He was fined in 1677 for ‘abusseing of the marches of Hawicke marching betuixt John Hardie and him’. He rented half the farm of Over Southfield from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96. He was also tenant farmer at Over Southfield, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in 1696 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for James Story. He and his son William were joint tenants of Southfield around 1710 (as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767). He was listed as being at ‘Southside’ [probably a transcription error] in 1713 when he witnessed a birth at Branholmstown. Also in 1713 he and his son William ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was farm servant there). He married Margaret Cook in 1713; he was said to have taken a wife when he was 90 years old, and this may have been that time. He was deceased by 1721 when his widow married tailor William Oliver; they were both at ‘Over Southfield’. He... could be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie and Helen Goodfellow (presumably a relative) in Hawick in 1673. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1754); and Jean (b.1756). John (18th C.) married Christian Cavers in Wilton Parish in 1730. He may be the John whose daughter Christian was baptised in Kirkton in 1735. He could be the John at the Flex, who (along with John Cavers) witnessed a baptism for John Irvine (tenant at the Flex) in 1741. He may also be the John who along with Archibald, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. He could also be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. John (b.1756) wright in Hawick, probably son of Robert and Margaret Scott. In 1782 he married Janet Deans, daughter of fisher George Deans. Their children included: Agnes (1784–1872), who married Walter Haddon, father of Andrew Haddon of Honeymburn; and Robert (b.1786). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Jardine and their children included: Helen (b.1809); and Andrew (b.1811). Bailie John (1798–1869) son of baker Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He was Cornet in 1822 and was also a Magistrate in Hawick. He had a grocer’s and candlemaker’s business at 1 Buccleuch Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the merchant in Hawick listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory at the Sandbed, in 1837 on Buccleuch Street and in Slater’s 1852 directory (as a ‘tallow chandler’) on Teviot Square. He is probably the Mr. Goodfellow whose property is marked there on Wood’s 1824 map. He opened the first public baths and wash-house in Hawick, by the river-side, where Orrock Church was later built. In 1837 he was involved in a dispute with the ‘Trades and Operatives’ over expenses for the celebration (i.e. the drinks bill) and parade for the proclamation of the new Queen. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as proprietor of the Public Baths at Teviot Square and also listed there as insurance agent for Scottish Provident. He ran the grocer’s until 1857, when it had ceased to be successful and he emigrated to New Zealand. He married Margaret, daughter of John Mercer and Euphemia Scott, and she died in 1838. Their children were: Euphemia (b.1828), who emigrated to New Zealand with her father; Archibald (b.1830), who died young; Margaret (b.1832), who married Walter Hume and later emigrated to New Zealand; Jane (b.1835), who died young; and John (b.1838), who also emigrated with his father. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1808/9) born in Jedburgh, in 1860 he was living at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish. His wife was Beatrice from Hawick. Their children included: Thomas, Oliver, James, Peter, Robert and William. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Ann Swanstone and their children included Jean (b.1844). John (1825–1900) son of Robert and Elizabeth Kedzie. He emigrated to Canada, where he was a pioneer in Inmisfil Township, Ontario. He married Margaret Cross and secondly Esther McCullough. John Cumming (1834–1917) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Helen Cumming. The family spent some time in Glasgow but moved to Hawick when he was young. He became a publisher at 63 High Street. He was an early member and regular contributor to the Archaeological Society, and a keen temperance supporter. He gave a speech at the 1891 Colour Bussing, including some Common Riding reminiscences. He wrote a memoir of his early life about 1901, which was published in the 1997 Transactions. He also wrote historical articles for the Border Magazine. He married Martha Hain in 1865 and Andrew Hain was their son. He wrote ‘Border Biography’ (1890, based on articles from the ‘Hawick News’), ‘Occasional Poems and Verses’ (1893) and ‘Hawick’s Annual Festival and Other Verses’ (1911), as well as producing the ‘Illustrated Guide to Hawick and Vicinity’ (1898) and the updated edition ‘Goodfellow’s Guide to Hawick’ (1914). He also wrote several short booklets on local history, specifically ‘Hawick myths: No. 1 Gawyn Douglas’ (1983), ‘Hawick and Gavin Douglas’ (1987), ‘Reminiscences of the Hawick Archaeological Society’ (1891), ‘Satchells (A Review) and the Riddell Monument’ (1894), ‘The Common Riding’ (1894), ‘The Bibliography of Hawick’ (1896) and ‘John Casper Leyden: An Historical Retrospective – Explanatory and Critical’ (1903). In addition he published pamphlets on wider topics, namely ‘The Early History of Scotland, from an Archiological Point of View’ (1881), ‘The Archaeology of Books’ (1882), ‘The Egyptian Question’ (1882), ‘The Present Aspects and Position of the Radical Movement’ (1883) and ‘The Social Life of the People, Politically Considered’ (1892). John (1842–1912) son of Alexander Scott, tenant at Trow Mill.
He was born in Hawick and emigrated to Victoria, Canada, then moved to Seattle. He married Florence Agassiz and they had 11 children. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included John (b.1637), Marion (b.1640), James (b.1643), Bessie (b.1645), Janet (b.1650) and Robert (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were John Scott and William Nichol. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Beattie and their children included William (b.1729). Other children (baptised in Hawick) who could be his include Bessie and an unnamed son (b.1719). Robert (1715–79) son of William. He married Margaret Scott (1721/2–87). Their children included: Agnes (1748/9–66); John (1756–86), who married Janet Deans in 1782; Robert (b.1759); and James, joiner and Bailie in Hawick. The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation. His son and James, joiner and Bailie in Hawick. The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation. His wife may be the ‘Widow Goodfellow’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760; she is probably also the ‘Widow Goodfellow spouse to Decd. Robert’ whose death is recorded in 1787. They are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Kedzie in 1768. John (d.1809), son of the deceased Robert, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. Robert (18th C.) farm-worker at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1789 he was recorded at Kirklands. He could be the son of Robert and Margaret Scott baptised in Hawick in 1759; however, based on family names it seems likely his father was James, perhaps from the Bowden area. He married Helen Leis (or Lies) in Selkirk in 1782. Their offspring probably included these children baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish: James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); William (1787–1848), who died in North Mongan, Upper Canada; John (b.1789); Robert (c.1791–1866), who emigrated to Quebec in about 1821; Andrew (c.1794–1852), who married Isobel Young and emigrated to Canada, along with his family and mother; Helen (b.1795), who married John Turnbull; and George (b.1800). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jenny Biggar and their children included Elizabeth (b.1802). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Dodds and their children included Margaret (b.1807). Robert (1790–1880) born at Merrylaw, son of William and Rachel Easton. He farmed at Merrylaw, Gilliestongues and Crosbie (near Stow). He later worked on estates in Devonshire, Argyllshire and Midlothian and was Land Steward at Inch Estates, Liberton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kedie (or Kedzie) of Hawick. They had 6 children: Isabella, who married Andrew Forgie and lived at Newbattle Abbey; Rachel; William, who married Mary Whitaker and farmed in North Wales; Margaret Elliot; John, who emigrated to Innisfil, Canada in 1844; and Archibald, who died in infancy. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Grace, and their children included Adam C., Janet, Joshua, Robert, Jane and Elliot. Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1842) and George (b.1845). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. Most of his children were born in Midlothian. He married Isabella Renwick, who was from Forkins in Rulewater. He was probably a gentleman’s servant, and spent the latter part of his life at Penrith. His son Andrew was forester around Jedburgh. This branch of the family is not directly connected with the Hawick family of J.C. Goodfellow etc. He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, who was born in Robertson Parish in 1785. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Isobel Renwick (from Jedburgh) and their children included: Andrew (b.1807); James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811), who married Thomas Lunn; and Oliver (b.1813). He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. Thomas (c.1790–1849) miller at Roughheugh Corn Mill. He was listed as miller there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is also described as tacksman (i.e. tenant) there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included: Mary; Robert; Jane; Janet; and Elizabeth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Denholm in 1773 and 1775. His children included Margaret (b.1773) and Archibald (b.1775). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Pott and their children included Marion (b.1636), Isobel (b.1639), Janet (b.1642), Janet (again, b.1646) and John (b.1650). William (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch in Phaup on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th/18th C.) servant to Francis Scott, miller at Wester Burnfoot, he lived at Leaheads in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1707 (and having lately come to the area) when he was called to report to the Kirk Session. He was also at Leaheads in 1708 and in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton, probably included: John (b.1708); William (b.1711); and Archibald (b.1713). Perhaps the same William had a second marriage in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife’s name recorded). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield along with his father John in about 1710. This was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and his father John ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was their farm servant). He is probably the William who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He may be the William who married Helen (or Bessie) Gledstain in 1711, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Probably the same William married Agnes Wright and is recorded in Hilliesland in 1719. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, probably included John (b.1714), Robert (b.1715), Marie (b.1716), James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1719). The witnesses in 1719 were merchant William Dickson and gardener James Falsyde. William (1692/3–1740) son of Archibald, who came from Cumberland to Teviothead, with his mother being a Scott. He was tenant farmer at Adderstonelee. He also had half the farm of Bowanhill, Teviothead, with Archibald Elliot having the other half. He married Isobel Scott (1697–1773) at Skelfhill (listed in Cavers Parish records); she is recorded releasing the lands of Bowanhill in 1744. Their children were: Archibald; Andrew, who died at sea; Isabel; John, wine merchant in London and later Berwick; Robert, whose son William emigrated to Ontario; Hugh, who died young; and William, farmer at Merrylaw. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Boghall in 1727 and Heap in 1733. He married Agnes Wight. Their children included: Agnes (b.1727); Bessie (b.1728); Esther (b.1731); Robert (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1727 were Robert and Francis Scott and in 1733 were Robert Easton and Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Hummelknowes. His children included: John (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); William (b.1767); Christian (b.1769); Betty (b.1771); Jean (b.1778); Nelly (b.1778); and Margaret (b.1781). He is separate from William, tenant in Merrylaw (but may have been related to him). William (1738–1821) son of William and Isobel Scott. He was tenant at Merrylaw for about 50 years. He is recorded there in at least 1788–90. He was also at Merrylaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1773 he married Rachel (1747–1809), daughter of John Easton, from the Damside family in Hawick. Their children were: Euphan, or ‘Euphy’, who went to London and married John Smith; Elspeth (b.1778); Isabel (b.1778), who married Adam Scott in Westerkirk; Rachel (b.1780), who married Thomas Proudfoot, shepherd at Headshaw; William (b.1782), stockmaker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1784), who married shepherd William Helm; John (b.1788), who died young; and Robert (b.1790), who married Elizabeth Kedzie. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (1782–1849) son of William, farmer at Merrylaw and Rachel Easton. He was a stockmaker in Wilton, listed at Damside among heads of households in 1840. He was on Lower Damside on the 1841 census. He married Helen Cumming in Jedburgh in 1830. Their children were: William, who married Isabella Amour Own and was Schoolmaster in Haddington; John Cumming, bookseller and local historian; Rachel Easton, who married John B. Miles; and Jessie, who died young. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Jessy (b.1808), John (b.1809) and Thomas (b.1811). William (b.1799/1800) born in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer, in 1851 was a ‘Roadmaker’ and in 1861 was farmer, all at Curcarwood in Yarrow. His wife was Isabella and their children included Mary, Janet, Andrew, John, James, George and William. William (1806–1890) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He took over his father’s bakery business. He was listed as a baker at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1837 he is recorded on the electoral roll as tenant of lands of James Douglas of Cavers. He was also listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In 1839 he decided to emigrate to Australia, but a delay in his ship’s passage led him to enroll as a colonist of Port Nicholson (to become Wellington) in New Zealand. He travelled to Adelaide, spent time in Melbourne and finally made his way to Wellington, returning to Australia to bring his family in 1840 and purchasing land in Auckland in 1841. There he opened a bakery and flour mill. He later purchased land in Otara, where an oak tree he planted in 1850 is still standing). He married Ann, daughter of John Scott and she died in 1882.
ried Samuel C. Baird; Ann (b.1838), who married William Macky; Hugh; John; Euphemia, who married David Scott Robertson; Margaret, who died in infancy; Jane, also died in infancy; William, who died in Oakland, California; Thomas; and James Alexander. He and his wife are buried at St. John's Presbyterian Church Cemetery in Papatoetoe, Auckland. William (19th C.) lived at Kirkhope and Dodhead in Ettrick Parish. He was probably son of William and Isabel. He married Margaret Forest and their children included: John (1891–1917), who was killed in action in France; and 2 daughters who lived at 16 Wellogate Place, Hawick, one of them married to a Tucker (also written ‘Goodfalla’, ‘Goodfalo’, ‘Goodfelow’, ‘Goodfellow’, ‘Goodfelw’, ‘Goodfel’ and variants; note never locally pronounced gid-fe-l’).

the Good Samaritans (/thumb-saw-ma-ri’- inz) n. abstinence group which seceded from the Good Templars in Hawick, objecting to paying money into central coffers. They lasted for many years in the latter part of the 19th century.

at break of day, The hill fox, free of fear, doth play’ [JoHa].

Gordon (gor-din) n. town and parish on the western side of Berwickshire. There was once a branch line of the Berwickshire Railway here. The

Gordon (gor-din) n. Alexander (d.1575) brother of George, 4th Earl of Huntly, and nephew of James IV. He was a servant of the Queen Dowager, Mary of Guise and spent some time in France. In 1549 he sent a detailed report of the capture of Ferniehirst Castle by the English from the French. He was Postulate of Caithness and then appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550. But in the following year the see was re-signed to the Pope, following a request from the Scottish Crown. Hence he was Hawick’s Archbishop for about a year. He was then pensioned and given the title of Archbishop of Athens, later becoming Archbishop of the Isles and then of Galloway. He became a Protestant. In 1566 he preached at the wedding of the Earl of Bothwell and his niece, Jean Gordon, and in 1567 he signed the bond agreeing to the marriage of Bothwell with Mary Queen of Scots. Rev. Alexander (d.1785) son of Alexander of Blairtown, he was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen 1748–52. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1768, was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1774 and ordained there the following year. In 1758 he married Joan Perrie (or Pirrie), who died in 1793. They had no surviving children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. The death of his child is recorded in 1815. Rev. Charles (c.1656–1710) from Aberdeenshire, brother of John, the Provost of Aberdeen. He graduated from Aberdeen University in 1676 and became minister at Campvere in 1686. He returned to Scotland to answer calls to Dumfries and Dalmeny, the latter of which he took up in 1691. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish at the end of 1694 and became minister there the following year. He was offered the Chair of Divinity at Aberdeen University in 1697/8, and the Assembly suggested to translate him in 1698, but he refused to accept it. He was described as ‘a learned and holy man of uncommon integrity’. In 1690 he married Rosina Campbell, daughter of the minister of Dumfries. Their surviving children included 2 sons, George and James, and a daughter, Christian. They had children in Edinburgh, including George (b.1691). Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Alexander (b.1697); Rosina (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700); Margaret (b.1701); Daniel (b.1702); Janet (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); John (b.1705); James (b.1707); and Anne (b.1708). Charles (18th C.) house servant at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. Eric (20th C.) assistant priest at S.S. Mary & David’s from 1942, having previously been at Portobello. Rev. James Drummond (1870–1944) son of Rev. William and Helen Drummond. He graduated M.A. from Aberdeen University in 1891, B.D. in 1894 and B.Sc. in 1895, when he was licensed to preach. He was assistant at St. Machar’s, Aberdeen, then at Errol. He became Acting-Chaplain to the forces at Aldershot in 1900 and was then Chaplain with His Majesty’s Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment, becoming Senior Chaplain in Bengal in 1921. He was translated to become minister at Bedrule in 1923 and remained until his death. He married Annie Sutherland Gunn (who died in 1955, aged 82), and their children were Nannie Drummond, William Lindsay Drummond, John Gunn Drummond and James Forrest Drummond. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (18th C.) house servant at Branholme in 1794, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. John (18th/19th C.) Sheriff-officer and constable of Hawick. He is mentioned in the murder case in 1814 which resulted in Hawick’s last hanging. He could be the Sergeant John who was living at Howdenburn in 1841, at about age 80, and described as ‘Army H.P.’ His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Gordon spouse to Sergt. Gordon’ who died in Hawick in 1811. John (b.1806/7) sawyer who lived at Howdenburn. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1861 his occupation was listed as ‘Colporter’. His wife was Ann and their children included Margaret, Thomas and John. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) assistant to Rev. John MacRae at Hawick Parish Church towards the end of his ministry (around 1890). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He married Alison, sister of J.E.D. Murray. He became a minister in Aberdeen and retired to Edinburh. Rev. John (b.1878) son of John, the minister of Glasserton and Margaret Bryce. He also had 2 maternal uncles who were ministers. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1902. He was licensed by Wig-town Presbytery in 1905, was assistant at Galston and then ordained as minister of Hobkirk in 1907. He detriment his charge in 1919, later becoming a teacher in North Berwick and obtaining a Ph.D. at Edinburgh University in 1928. He then became minister at Channelkirk in 1927, was translated to Kirkinner in 1931 and retired for a second time in 1943. He married Mary Jane Turnbull in 1923. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as ‘Patricius Gordon’ when he was listed as a tenant, along with Hector and David Turnbull, of the lands of Appletreehall. Ross (1941–) born in Croft Road, he has long been a Common Riding supporter. He went to his first Ride-out in 1959, completing more than 400, including following 51 times consecutively to Mosspaull, as well as attending more than 150 huts. He was President of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1985. He married Jean, daughter of ex-Cornet Bill Brydon and sister of ex-Cornet Rob Brydon. Their children are Ally and Kirsty. Rev. Thomas (1844–1917) son of the minister of Twynholm, he was educated at the University of Glasgow, graduating M.A. in 1864. He was assistant minister at Bothwell, Scone, Twynholm, Balmagbie and Fenwick. He served as minister at the ‘mission’ church at Saughtree 1877–86. Afterwards he was assistant at Edgerston, where he was minister from 1892. He married Adelaide Dobie. He wrote ‘The Scottish Reformation Movement in the Sixteenth Century’ (1883) and ‘Creed and Civilisation – their Alliance in the Experience of History’ (1905).

Walter (?–??) watchman at Innes-Henderson in the early part of the 20th century. He was well-known for his pieces of babble, e.g. ‘A liner burnt ti the grund in mid-ocean’, ‘A’m brikkin up ma iron bedstead for fire-wud’ and ‘When the man’s deid, he’ll be made for life’.

the Gordon Airms (thu-gor-din-ärmz) n. hostelry west of Yarrow, at the crossroads where the B709 road from Ettrick meets the A708 Yarrow road. Sir Walter Scott last met the Ettrick Shepherd here in 1830, and it is now run as a hotel. George Turnbull was the proprietor in the early 19th century, followed by John Leigh and then James Douglas.

gore (gor) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise, used as a mild oath – ‘By (the) gore!’ or My gore’ [GW] (euphemism for ‘God’).

gore (gor) n. a textile frame formerly used to make fully-fashioned ladies silk underwear, also known by the epithets ‘papper’ or ‘bosomer’ (the word is used elsewhere to mean a triangular or tapering piece of material inserted to shape a garment).

Gorrenberry (go-rin-bu-ree) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, home to a branch of the Elliots in the 15th and 16th century and the Scotts in the 17th and 18th. It is recorded as a 10 merk land in a rental list of c.1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. It has been suggested that this branch was one of the ‘twelve great families’ of Elliots who moved to Liddesdale in the early 14th century. The earliest recorded Laird is ‘Willelmo Elwald de goranberry’ in 1484, and in 1489 he was ‘Willelmo elwad de gounberry’. The connection between this early Laird and other Elliots is not known. However, the lands appear to then passed to the Elliots of Redheugh. In 1541 Archibald Elliot, 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh was designated ‘of Gorrenberrie’ (and was later Laird of Falnash), and the lands were then valued at 10 merks. Archibald’s son William was also Laird, and the last Elliot Laird on record was another William in 1613. The lands then passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch, with John, illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch being given the lands in 1629. John Scott held the lands in 1643, when they were valued at £1600; they still had the same value in 1678 and 1707. A payment for the ringing of the bells of Hawick Kirk for ‘Gorenberie’s boril’ is recorded in 1722. The lands were sold by John Scott of Gorrenberry to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1600 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Laidlaw was farmer there in 1792–97. Michael Anderson was farmer there in the 1820s to 40s, James Anderson was shepherd in 1835 and David Anderson farmer in 1851. William Hislop was farmer in 1868. The motto of the Gorrenberry Scotts was ‘Sperandum’. There was once a tower here, but its precise location is unknown. According to Jeffrey this earlier house was located to the west of the present farm, closer to Bught Shank; however, the rectangular mound there may have been a farmstead. Tradition connects the place with a brownie, called ‘the Cowie’, and John Leyden also invented the beauty ‘May of Goranberry’ – ‘O May she came, and May she gaed, By Goranberry tower; And who was it but cruel Lord Soulis That carried her from her bower?’ [JL] (also spelled ‘Gorranberry’, ‘Gorrenberie’, ‘Gorerberrie’, ‘Gorberrie’, ‘Gorrinberrie’, ‘Gorinberrie’, ‘Goringberrie’, etc.; it first occurs as ‘Goranberie’ in about 1376, etc.; it first occurs as ‘Garanbery’ in 1484, ‘gouinbery’ in 1489, ‘Gorranberry’ in 1541, ‘Gorranberry’ in 1548, ‘Gorinbery’, ‘Gorynberie’ and ‘Gorinbery’ in 1554, ‘Gorumbery’ in 1557, 1567 and 1569, ‘Gorrumberry’ and ‘Gorrumberry’ in 1569, ‘Gorumberry’ in 1573 and 1575, ‘Gorinberrie’ in 1580, ‘Gorrumberry’ Gorrenberry Cottage

Gorrenberry Cottage (go-rin-bu-ree-ko'-eej) n. cottage by the main road to the west of Gorrenberry farm. Labourer John Armstrong lived there in 1851.

Gorrie (go-ree) n. William (1744/5–1816) resident of Robertson Parish. He died at Woodburn and is buried at Borthwick Waas along with Mar-ident of Roberton Parish. He died at Woodburn and family lived there in 1851.

Gospatric (gos-pat-rik) n. (11th/12th C.) first known Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and perhaps the first known person holding such an office anywhere in Scotland. He may have been son of Uhtred, who was son of Ulfkill. He owned the lands of Nether Crailing and his grant of the Chapel of Crailing was confirmed in about 1150 (probably after he was deceased). He was also listed as Sheriff when he gave a ploughgate of land in Crailing around the foundation of Jedburgh Abbey, as confirmed in later charters. He is mentioned in the charter for the foundation of Selkirk Abbey around 1120, when he was ‘Cospatrico vicecomite’. He also witnessed a grant to Durham Cathedral around 1126 and witnessed another grant to the church attached to Roxburgh Castle about the same time. There were several other contemporary men of the same forename, and it is not known to what later family they may have been related. One suggestion is that he is the same as Gospatric of Swinton, brother of Colban. Given that he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire, he was probably related to John, son of Orm, who held the same office later in the 12th century.

got (go', gō') pp. had, especially as a teacher or similar - ‘A got Ned for Maths’, got called, was named – ‘hei aye got ‘Faggy' when hei was younger'.

gotten (go'-in, go-tin) pp. got – ‘...or thance A micht never heh gotten off the bit aa day’ [ECS] (this participle form is more common than in standard English).

Gotterson (go-tur-sin, go-'ur-sin) n. George (16th C.) listed among associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court case of 1541. There were also 2 Johns listed, who were probably related to him. John (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. They were probably related to George, who was also listed. John (17th C.) listed at Old Jedburgh among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Matthew writer of ‘The Callant’, this probably being James Smail from Jedburgh, and not a pen-name for J.E.D. Murray as once suggested. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Robertson and Ashkirk areas. He could be the Thomas, son of William, baptised in Robertson in 1713. He married Agnes Murray. Their children included: William (b.1746), baptised in Robertson; and Thomas (b.1748), baptised in Ashkirk. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He married Violet Laidlaw. Their son William was born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1800 and baptised in Maxton. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1710. His surname is recorded in 1710 and 1713 as ‘Guthrison’. His children included: Agnes (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); James (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1713). William ‘Wullie’ (b.c.1770) well-known Hawick character of the early 19th century. He farmed near Crumhaughhill, the area sometimes known as Gotterson’s Knowes. He also kept an inn (or perhaps an ‘innerie’) in the ‘Back Raw’. This was a cluster of buildings with a cess pool in the middle that he referred to as the ‘silver lake’. Once when he refused to accepted a new tenant on the grounds that there were bugs in his furniture, the Bailie asked him if them were no bugs already at his inn and he replied ‘Aw dinna mean to say anything of the kind. Aw’ve ower mony already, and aw dinna want ony mair!’. He was known for his skill at curying horses and cows and volunteered as a driver in the local Militia in 1803. He was mentioned in a story told about beggar John Brown, occurring about 1820. He was a farmer living alone on the Back Row on the 1841 census; Mary, who lived next door, was about the right age to be his daughter. He married Janet Irvine in 1794, the marriages being recorded in both Bedrule and Ancrum Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Mary (b.1795); and Thomas (b.1797). When asked why he turned up to his wife’s funeral in blue, rather than the traditional black, he replied ‘Aw got her in blue and aw’ll pairt wi’r in blue’. His ‘Sunday ootsteeks’ were donated to the Museum collection in 1863. ‘Weel pairt wi’r in blue’. His ‘Sunday ootsteeks’ were black, he replied ‘Aw got her in blue and aw’ll pairt wi’r in blue’. His ‘Sunday ootsteeks’ were donated to the Museum collection in 1863 – ‘Weel pairt wi’r in blue’. His ‘Sunday ootsteeks’ were black, he replied ‘Aw got her in blue and aw’ll pairt wi’r in blue’. His ‘Sunday ootsteeks’ were donated to the Museum collection in 1863 – ‘Weel pairt wi’r in blue’.

Gotterson’s Innery (go’-ur-sinz-i-ru-ree) n. inn kept by Wullie Gotterson in the Back Row, where the Stag’s Head is now. Martin Dechan grew up there.

Gotterson’s Knowes (go’-ur-sinz-nowz) n. former name for the area around a small farm on the summit by Crumhaughhill, farmed by Wullie Gotterson, and containing the Watch Knowe.

Gourlay (goo-lee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 paying homage to Edward I of England. His location is only given as Roxburghshire. However, he (along with Alan de Gourlay) served on a jury in 1303/4 to decide on the succession to Sir Thomas Chartres, Baron of Wilton. So it seems reasonable to suppose that he held lands fairly locally. Other men of the same surname who also paid homage to Edward I in 1296 were from Edinburgh, Berwickshire and Forfarshire. He could be the ‘Ede Gurlay’ whose lands of Rutherford and Maxton were granted by Robert the Bruce to John de Lindsay in 1321. Rev. Adam (1800–81) born at Chesters, near Ancrum, son of James and Margaret Redford. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1825. He became assistant minister at Bedrule and at Lilliesleaf. In 1842 he was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by James Henry Robert, Duke of Roxburgh. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1843 and Clerk of the Synod in 1853. In Slater’s 1852 directory his name appears as ‘Gourlay’. He married Margaret Campbell Baxter (1813–1900), daughter of his predecessor. Their children were: James (1836–99), insurance clerk; Anne Campbell (1837–85), married George Alexander, farmer; David Baxter (1839–1913), farmer; Margaret Redford (1846–1925); Maria Nicolina (1848–93); Adamina Hariat (1852–1924); Adam (1854–88), banker; and Jane Charles Russell Currie (b.1856), married Walter Robert Brodie. Alan (13th/14th C.) served along with Adam on the jury to decide on who inherited the Barony of Wilton in 1303/4. He is recorded as ‘Alain de Gourlay’ and was likely related to Adam. He is probably the man transcribed as ‘Aleyn Gurnay’ on the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where his seal shows a squirrel feeding within two interlaced squares, with the name ‘S’ALANI GORLEY’. Archibald (14th C.) father of John, who was served heir to the lands of Rulewood in 1387. Since John, son of Henry had been granted the lands in 1380, as confirmed in 1390, there may be confusion with dates. These charters are held by the Stewarts of Traquair.

Arnulf (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Denholm Mains in 1465/6, when he is recorded as ‘Arnulf Gurlay’. He is probably the ‘Arnald Gorlay’ who was part of an action (along with several other Border lairds) registered with Parliament by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the ‘Arnou’ who married Katherine, the daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis, and hence inherited lands near Branxholme. John of Rulewood was probably his son or grandson. David B. (b.1838/9) farmer at Bewlie Hill. He was listed there in 1861, farming 184 acres and employing 8 people. He was there with his brother James. He was also recorded there in a directory of 1868. Henry (14th C.) granted the lands of Rulewood to his son John in 1380. In 1390 the grant was confirmed by Malcolm of Drummond, Lord of Mar and Garioch, who was Baron of Cavers. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Gurlaw’ when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick in 1484. John was also on the panel. John (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the instrument of sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He was also on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He must have been related to the later John of Rulewood and Arnulf. John (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. James was also on the panel. He may be the same as John of Rulewood. John of Rulewood (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of ‘Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branxholme. He was named on an inquest in 1497/8 (as John Gourlay of Roulwood) and was probably also the John on the inquest for succession to the Home lands in 1506. He is probably the ‘Jhon Gowrlay’ who was among the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. In 1508 he was ‘Johannem Gourlay in Roullwoide’ on the panel for Adam Hepburne inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was also the John ‘Gourlaw’ who was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509. In 1509 he was granted the lands of Rulewood by William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He was already deceased in 1521 when the lands passed to his son John. He was probably son or grandson of Arnulf. John (16th C.) son of John of Rulewood. He is recorded in a sasine of 1521 granted by Walter Scott of Branxholme, for the ‘6 merkland of Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branxholme. These lands had passed to the family through ‘Arnou Gourlau’ who married Katherine, daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis. In 1525 he was served heir to the lands of Rulewood. In 1528 he was probably the John listed among supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus who were called to appear before the King. He is also ‘John Gourlaw of Roulwood’ in 1533 when part of an inquest at Jedburgh. He may be the John of Rulewood who had a contract with William Turnbull in Hassendeanbank in 1540 (probably not 1640 as recorded in one source). Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. William (14th C.) granted ‘10 merks of lands’ in Chamberlain Newton (probably Groundistone) by William Lindsay of the Byres. The charter is undated, but probably around 1390. William (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as official representing Andrew Douglas of Friarshaw. He warned George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from Andrew’s lands in Cavers (formerly spelled ‘Gorlay’, ‘Gourlau’, ‘Gourlaw’, ‘Gurlaw’, ‘Gurlay’ and other variants). Gourlay Bog (goor-lee-bog) n. former name for lands in Bedrule. In the c.1795 Old Statistical Account it is recorded that there was ‘a small common near the church called Gourlay Bog, on which the minister of Bedrule was also in use to pasture’. The common was divided some time in the 18th century. It was ‘Gourlaybog’ in 1801, when listed as part of the estates (valued at £14) bought by William Elliot of Wells (presumably related to a former owner called Gourlay). Goushill (gows-hil) n. area between Todrig Burn and Blindhaugh Burn, to the north of Todrig farm (it is amrked on Ainslie’s 1773 map). goust see gowst Gousto’s see Gusto’s Govan (go-vin) n. Joseph (18th C.) recorded as ‘indweller in Hawick’ in 1751 when he had a libel case for non-payment of a bill in Selkirk. However, there was also a complaint against him in 1751 by William Hall from Selkirk, claiming that he had been beaten in his own house and had his furniture damaged by him. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Dunn and whose children (baptised in Hawick), included: Mary (b.1756); and Joseph (b.1759). Joseph (d.bei. 1816) resident of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Laidlaw in 1771 and their daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick in 1772. The witnesses were John Hume and John Grieve. His wife Govenlock

Gove

Govenlock (17th C.) local man, referred to as ‘in Hoitt’ in 1641 when he claimed a white mare that he had found on his lands. Probably the same Adam was witness in 1651 to a baptism in Hawick Parish. He married Manie Beattie and their son Adam was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Sinton and John Gray. Adam (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Northhouse. He was recorded paying tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Adam (b.c.1780) son of James and Isabella Cumming, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Branxholme Park in 1841. He married Sally Sharp in 1841; Francis (b.1808), also a mason; Isabella (b.1810); William (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Walter (b.1825). Francis (1808–86) son of Francis. He was a mason living at Howleuchshiel in 1841 and at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Agnes, daughter of John Lunn; she died in 1890, aged 83. Their children (born at Howleuchshiel) were: Isabella (b.1842–64); and Francis (1843–64). The family are buried in Robertson Cemetery. George (b.c.1813) mail-coach driver living at the Plough Inn in 1841. George (d.1916) son of farmer Andrew, he was born in Poland. In 1891 he was farmer at Whitehaugh Moor, living with his sister Robina and in 1911 he was at Gala Rigg with sisters Robina and Alice. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1711, 1713, 1716, 1718 and 1720, Borthwickshiel in 1714 and Easter Alemoor in 1715. His children probably included: Christian (b.1703); William (b.1705); Andrew (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); Walter (b.1711); Walter (again, b.1713); Walter (again, b.1714); Thomas (b.1715); John (b.1716); Elspeth (b.1716); Helen (b.1718); and Isobel (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) married an unnamed woman in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isabel Cumming and their children included Francis (b.1781). His wife died in 1809. James (1754–1819) born in Robertson Parish, son of Andrew. He was tenant in Calaburn. His children included Adam (1775/6–1847), who died at Childknow. They are buried in Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Sutherland who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably related to the local Govenlocks. James ‘Jamie’ (b.c.1820) son of Robert, he also worked as one of the mail-coach drivers in the mid-1800s. In 1843 he was listed as a ‘Horse keeper’ when he gave evidence regarding the overturning of the coach ‘Defiant’. He was a lodger at the Crown Inn for the 1851 census. He married Minnie (or Elizabeth) Beattie, and their children were Thomas (who married Christina Shankie) and Margaret (who married Thomas McVitie). Hugh ‘Hughie the Graeme’ (16th C.) subject of a Border ballad, it is unclear if he was a historical figure or not. The story is that the Bishop of Carlisle seduced Graeme’s wife, and so he carried out a raid in which he stole the Bishop’s finest mare, was then captured by Lord Scroope and hanged at Carlisle Castle. There are several different versions – ‘Here Johnie Armstrong, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’ [T]. Hutchin ‘Richie’s Hutchin’ (16th/17th C.) Englishman who was declared an outlaw for the murder of Thomas Graham (son of ‘Richie’s Will’) and John ‘Orfeur’ around the end of the 16th century. He was also indicted in England for helping Scott of Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 from Carlisle Castle (being ‘the third man that entered the same’), as well as for theft and raiding (particularly during the ‘Ill Week’) and for speaking against the Queen and King. His brothers William (‘Mickle Will’), George (‘Richie’s Geordie’), William (alias ‘Carlisle’) and Richard (alias ‘Lenox’) were also convicted. In about 1605 he obtained remission for helping in the capture of ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ Armstrong. There are also mentions of ‘Young Hutchin’ around 1606, who may have been his son. He is probably the ‘Hutchon Grame’ listed in a letter from Captain Musgrave in 1583, listing his children as Andrew, Robbie, Arthur and Richie. James (17th C.) footman to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. James (1612–50) Marquess of Montrose. He was a leader of the Covenanters forces after 1639, leading the army (including the Teviotdale Regiment) which invaded England and captured Newcastle in 1640. He opposed the Solemn League and Covenant and became the main leader of Royalist forces in Scotland from 1644, including at the Battle of Anlsearn, where several local Gladstains and Douglasses fell. However, his men were massacred at Philiphaugh in 1645. He fled to Norway, but was later made Captain-General of Scotland by Charles II. Landing in the Orkneys in 1650 he raised a small army, but was betrayed and handed over to the Covenanters. He was hanged in Edinburgh, his head fixed on a spike and his body quartered and distributed among the Scottish cities. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included: Helen (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); and Christian (b.1686). In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook. In 1689 he was recorded ‘in Altoncrofts’ when he (along with Robert Cook) witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for Walter Scott of Altoncroft. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1706. The marriage was proclaimed in Wilton in July and in Cavers in August. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737. He married Bessie Lamb and their children included: Helen (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); and Christian (b.1686). In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook. In 1689 he was recorded ‘in Altoncrofts’ when he (along with Robert Cook) witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for Walter Scott of Altoncroft. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1706. The marriage was proclaimed in Wilton in July and in Cavers in August. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737. He married Bessie Lamb and their children included Walter (b.1737) and John (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were John and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Falnash. His wife was Jane Graham and their children included Mary (b.1757) and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation. Sir James R.G. of Netherby (1792–1861) eldest son of Sir James, the first Baronet of Netherby Hall in Cumberland. He served as 1st Lord of the Admiralty. He was M.P. for several different parts of England, including Carlisle 1826–29 and East Cumberland 1830–37. He switched from being a Whig to a Tory in 1835. In 1838 he proposed a motion in the House of Commons to disqualify Hawick from being a polling station for future elections after the Radicals had been harassing Tory supporters at elections. The motion was defeated by only 22 votes. He was present at the banquet held at Branxholme in 1839 in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. James (1838–97) son of coal-agent William and Janet Turnbull. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. However, he also started his own small hosiery manufacturers ‘James Graham & Son’ (according to his obituary). In 1866 he married Ann Little, daughter of James Kennedy. Their children included: Elizabeth Patterson (b.1866); William (b.1868); James Kennedy (b.1870); Janet (b.1871); Walter Warwick (b.1872); and John (b.1874). James (19th C.) farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there in 1868. He won cattle prizes in agricultural shows. His daughter Ann Twentyman married Dr. David Somerville Doughty in 1891. James E. ‘Jimmie’ Cornet in 1933, worked as a dyer. He assisted Bill Brydon as Left-Hand Man again after WWII. Jane ‘Jean’ (b.1785) grocer on Broughton Place in 1841 and the Round Close in 1851. Her children included: John (b.1807/8), a frameworker, born in Hawick; Thomas (b.1815), a watchmaker, born in England; and Elizabeth (b.1816/7), also born in England. She could be the Jean listed as a grocer on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear who her husband was. Jean Cunninghame (??–) Lady Polwarth, who wrote ‘Sailor’s daughter: 1928–1946’ (1993). Sir John of Abercorn (d.c.1337) said to have been granted the Soulis family lands in Liddesdale around the time of Robert the Bruce. He had a son, also Sir John, who died without issue. His heiress (perhaps Mary, Margaret or Elizabeth) may have married Sir William Douglas, the Knight of Liddesdale, to whom Liddesdale passed. However, this is all unclear. John (15th/16th C.) probably from Liddesdale. In 1497 he was one of the witnesses for a document dealing with the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He could be he John, brother of Matthew who was listed in the Exchequer Rolls among men of the area around Hawick who were fined in 1501. That John was brother of Matthew in Howpasley, who was surety for himself at the Justice-aire in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance. John (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Cranston to his mother Janet Beaton, who was wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Johanne the Grahame’. Probably the same John witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) son of Rob. In 1594/5 he was offered as a pledge for William of Larriston, but was deemed to ‘not worth the sum’. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whithaugh Mill in 1642 he is on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminals, theves and resseters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. John of Claverhouse (1648–89) soldier, from a family who were staunchly loyal to the throne. He was ‘Bonnie Dundee’ to those who considered him a hero and ‘Bluidy Clavers’ to his detractors; his reputation has certainly been coloured by propaganda. The song ‘Bonnie Dundee’ was popularised by Sir Walter Scott. He served in France and Holland, returning to Scotland in 1677, where he rose through the ranks, eventually becoming a member of the Privy Council. He was employed by Charles II to enforce episcopacy upon Scotland, and to persecute the Covenanters, being given special powers as head of a military commission to seek out conventicles. One of the first such expeditions was to Galashiels in 1679, where a field meeting was held by Thomas Wilkie perhaps (although there are several men of similar name) deposed minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1681 he passed through Hawick, Selkirk, Buccleuch, Craik and Wolfeuchhead with his dragoons, in search of conventicles. George Deans refused to take him to Galashiels, defying the Bailies. His troop mustered in Hawick in 1685 and he wrote a letter from Thorlishhope in the same year. Later he was made Viscount Dundee and became a Jacobite supporter, and raised the standard of James in the north. He married Jean Cochrane, from a Presbyterian family. He was killed at the Battle of Killiecrankie. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, son of merchant Walter. He is probably the John born to Walter and Janet Briggs in 1688. He was among the group of young men who were fined in 1706 for being involved in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year, including carrying their own flag and defying the Bailies. He and James Scott (‘of Westport’) were briefly imprisoned and then fined, with his father Walter, as well as Francis Elliot, acting as their cautioners. In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Porteous. Also in 1709 he married Helen ‘Culbertson in Salt-John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1704 he was witness to a baptism for Robert Tushope, who also lived at Raesknowe. He was there in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He could be the same John as the later tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was recorded as a merchant in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat. In 1720 after not appearing on 3 occasions at Hawick Kirk for some sin, he was threatened with excommunication. Eventually he ‘satisfied in sackcloth’ 11 times before he was ‘received into the society of the kirk as a lively member thereof’. It is possible he is the son of merchant Walter, who was part of the rebel party at the Common Riding of 1706. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He is probably the John who in 1725 witnessed a baptism for William Riddell. He married Margaret Helm in 1724; she was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Christian (b.1725); and David (b.1728). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by John Scott in Over Southfield and Andrew Turnbull in Drydenburn; on the same day he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull. He may be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Philhope in 1774 and Broadlee in 1785 and 1793. He may be son of the Thomas recorded at Philhope a generation or so earlier. He married Jane Gray in Robertson in 1773 and their children included: Thomas (b.1774), perhaps the man recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794; Janet (b.1783); John (b.1785); and an unnamed child (b.1793). John (18th/19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club (so recorded in 1812). He may have been related to (or feasibly the same as) the later proprietor of the Holland House. John (b.c.1770) innkeeper and spirit dealer at Dovemount. He is thus recorded in 1841, when he was living with Anne (probably his daughter) and another Anne (probably his grand-daughter). His inn was one of the earliest buildings in the Dovemount area. John (b.1785/6) from Langholm, he was a clockmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed at about 17 High Street, and in 1851 and 1861 was at No. 29. In 1842 he was in jail in Dumfries. He was listed as a clockmaker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory; note that there was also a separate ‘Jonathan’ who was a clockmaker in Hawick at the same time. His wife was Margaret. He had grand-daughters Margaret Taggart and Margaret Bell. He may be the ‘Mr. Graham, clockmaker’, who donated coins to the Museum in 1857. John (b.1792/3) from England, he was a grocer and meal-dealer in Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1851 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street, and he was recorded on a directory of 1852. He may be the same John who ran a weekly cart to Brampton and another to Hawick (returning from the Bull & Butcher in Hawick on Thursdays). His wife was Jane and their children included Richard and Jane. John (b.1831) proprietor of ‘Graham’s Hotel’ at 6 Back Row from 1869. He was son of coal agent William and Janet Turnbull. The family were at 8 Back Row in 1871 and 1881. In 1852 he married Helen Riddle (b.1831). Their children included: Isabella Richardson Riddle (b.1852); William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853), who married Margaret Govenlock; John (b.1855), who moved to Dublin as a coach painter; George Turnbull (b.1857), who died young; James Melrose (b.1868); Walter (1860–64); Thomas (b.1862), who married Isabella Haldane and joined the Black Watch; Martin (b.1864); Helen (or ‘Nellie’, b.1865), married John Murray; Agnes (b.1867), who died young; Walter (again, b.1868), who emigrated to America; George Turnbull (b.1869), also emigrated to America; Mary Christie (b.1872); Agnes Martin (b.1873); and Jessie Isabella (b.1875). John (b.1837/8) youngest son of John, farmer at Hol lows Mill near Canonbie. The family had been farmers and millers on the Esk and Liddel since the time of Mary Queen of Scots. He probably moved to Hawick to apprentice as a draper, and in about 1860/1 with his brother John he founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London. After 1875 (the Collie Failure) he became traveller on the Continent for Wilsons & Glennys. Retiring in 1892, he lived at Huntingstile, Grasmere, and then in France, where he died at Mentone. He married Jane Murray Wilson, daughter of Hawick Provost George Wilson and his brother.
Graham

Simon married his wife’s cousin, Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1868); Elizabeth Richardson Dickson (b.1870); Katherine Glenny (b.1871); Madge (b.1875); Michael George (b.1879); and Jean (d.1936), who married artist Frank Bramley. John Hart (19th/20th C.) undertaker in Hawick. He was partner in the firm J. & A. Graham, which also hired out cars and charbancs, based at 20 Drumlanrig Square. The firm was dissolved when he retired in 1914, with Adam continuing.

John ‘Jock the Dog’ (??–) larger than life Hawick man, known for tales of his huge appetite. He has worked in the mills. Jonathan (b.1802/3) from Langholm, he was a master watch and clockmaker at about 32 High Street. Note that there was another clockmaker called ‘John’ in Hawick at the same time. They are both listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included Thomas and Jane. Joseph (b.c.1790) tailor living at Ryeleahead, at the southern end of Castleton Parish, in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Robert, Ann and Jane. Mandy (??–) one of two women who attempted to join Ride-outs in 1996. Matthew (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpsley. His brother John was recorded at the Justice-aires in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearance. Probably the same John was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined, with his brother John’s name appearing after his. Matthew (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh in 1502; he was stated to have once been in Bransholme and now in Hislop, was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. It seems unlikely that he was the same man as Matthew in Howpsley (whose brother was recorded at the Justice-aire shortly after him). Matthew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Nelly Oliver and they had a son Matthew (b.1783). He may be the Matthew who was a subscriber to Caw’s `Poetical Museum’ (1784). Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Town’. He was probably from the west side. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1489, signed at the monastery of Paisley. Robert (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Roberton for James Thomson in 1680 and for both Robert Scott and Thomas Graham in 1681. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Raesknowe. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Craw in Branxholme Town. He may be the Robert, son of David, baptised in 1675. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Lees in 1729. In 1735 he witnessed a baptism for James Dryden, resident of Clarilaw. In 1726 he married Jean Henderson, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included William (b.1727), Agnes (b.1729), Robert (b.1737) and Alison (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were John Scott and John Dryden. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Simpson and their children included Margaret (b.1779) and Robert (b.1780). Robert (b.1801/2) joiner on the Cross Wynd. In 1841 he was living there, but had moved to 1 High Street by 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Thomas, Isabella, Margaret, William, Alexander and Janet. Robert (b.1814/5) carter living at 69 High Street in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean (who married William McDougall), Elizabeth, Thomas, John Robert, George and James. Robert M. (b.1880) born in Hawick, he moved to Edinburgh in about 1898, where he was a tailor. An accident in his youth prevented him from achieving his sporting ambitions, although he remained an enthusiastic supporter of sports, particularly rugby. Simon Dickson (b.1833) from Canonbie, son of farmer John and Elizabeth Dickson. He moved to Hawick to become an apprentice with draper Walter Armstrong at the Tower Knowe. Walter was his brother-in-law, having married Mary Graham in Hawick. Along with William Wood he formed the drapers firm Wood, Graham & Co., Tower Knowe. Then in 1860/1 he and his brother John founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, London. He married Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. She was a cousin of his brother John’s wife, Jane Murray Wilson. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianæ’. Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter signed at ‘Wester Torban’ in 1450, relating to lands in the Edinburgh area. Perhaps the same Thomas was a Bailie of Linlithgow in a charter of 1487. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Phillhopehill in 1742 and Phillhope in 1762. He married Elspeth Reid in 1742, his children, baptised in Roberton, included Janet (b.1743), Thomas (b.1751), Andrew (b.1758) and Elspeth (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Elspeth. He married Isabel Little and their children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773); Thomas (b.1780); and Robert (b.1783). His earlier children were baptised in Langholm, but in 1783 he was at Fiddleton Bar. The witnesses in 1783 were Gavin Elliot and Charles Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Knox and their children included Margaret (b.1781). The witnesses were Thomas Knox and Robert Graham, who were probably related to him and his wife. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Broadlee in Roberton Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, son of John, who was baptised in 1774. Thomas (b.1779/80) from Canonbie, he was farmer at Harden. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was there farming 500 acres and employing 7 people. He married Margaret Scott in 1829. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Borthwick Mains. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton Parish in 1751. He could be the Thomas recorded at Branholme on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Maryport, England, son of John and Mary. He was a watchmaker on Brougham Place and then at 16 High Street. He was listed as a clockmaker and engraver on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he was living at Brougham Place with grocer Jane Graham, possibly his mother (if the name was wrong). He was at about 16 High Street in 1851 and appears on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Isabella Wilson in 1848 and they had a son John. He may be the ‘Tammy Graham’ mentioned in these lines – ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’[HI]. A portrait of him exists. Thomas (1861/2–1935) son of John, he was proprietor of the Holland House, like his father. He served for 25 years in the Black Watch and was killed in a motobike accident at Clarilaw. His wife was Isabella. His sons James Haldane (d.1918), John and Thomas all served in WWI in the Black Watch. Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant who was a Bailie in the 1690s, and also recorded as Bailie (or ex-Bailie) in 1701, 1702, 1703, 1706, 1708 and 1709. He appears to have served as some kind of treasurer in 1701, after already being a Bailie. He is probably the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and may be the Walter resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the Bailie Graham who was charged by the Council to appear before the ‘commissioners of unfree traders’ to complain about the sum levied on Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto and for merchant William Elliot, in 1701 for fellow merchant and Bailie, George Martin, for others in 1702, for Bailie George Martin in 1706, for John Laidlaw (servant at Harwood) and Bailie George Martin in 1708 and for weaver William Hill in 1709. His ‘servitrix’ Isobel Beattie got married in 1709. He is probably the Walter who in 1712 (along with Walter Elliot) witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains. In 1706 his son John was among the young men fined for the disturbances at the Common Riding that year; he was there described as a merchant and ex-Bailie and acted as cautions for the accused men. This John was probably the son of Walter and Janet Briggs born in Hawick in 1688, meaning that his wife would have been Janet Briggs. Perhaps the same Walter, merchant, is recorded as being a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1706, by right of his father Archibald, merchant, being a Burgess there. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. Probably the same Walter is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He may also be the Bailie Graham whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Huggan of Hawick in an ‘irregular marriage’ in Longtown. He is likely to be the Bailie Graham who was an elder of the Kirk, appointed in 1717 for collecting monies ‘westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’, suggesting that he lived around this area; he was similarly appointed in 1722. In the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch he is stated to be owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 2 acres and 12 perches. A great falling out with Bailie Ruecastle (one of the sitting Magistrates) in 1718 had to be resolved by the intervention of the Session and the Minister; he was at that time a councillor, and is said to have accused Ruecastle of ‘Sacriledge, Thift’ and other transgressions, the nature of which are unclear. He witnessed baptisms for weaver James Weens in 1730, for thatcher Gideon Scott in 1740 and for carrier George Richardson in 1741. He married Janet Bridges (or Briggs) and their children included John, Margaret (b.1692), Janet (b.1695), Graham Archibald (b.1701), Jean (b.1702), Anna (b.1705) and Walter (b.1707). His wife’s name is recorded in 1702 as ‘Bessie’. The witnesses in 1702 were Bailie George Martin and innkeeper Francis Elliot, and in 1705 were Bailie George Martin and baker John Whillans. Janet, who married Walter Tuthope in Hawick in 1722, may have been his daughter. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He probably married Margaret Lockie in Cavers in 1708. His children included Helen (b.1708), Margaret (b.1710), William (b.1712), James (b.1714) and Walter (b.1716). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Effedge. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Malie (b.1718) and Mary (b.1720). Dr. Walter (1762–1829) Hawick doctor of the early 1800s, born in Arthuret, Cumberland, son of Walter and Mary Johnson. He may have had a brother, Andrew, who was a doctor in Dalkeith. His premises were in Buccleuch Street. In about 1799 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. He was probably the Dr. Graham with whom Sir Andrew Smith served an apprenticeship. He was one of the doctors called in the trial for the murder case of 1814, resulting in Hawick’s last hanging. He is recorded as Walter ‘sen.’ at Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and his house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. A portrait of him exists. He married Margaret Scott in Westerkirk in 1787, and their children (born in Arthuret, Cumberland) were: Mary (b.1790); Walter (b.1792), who was also a doctor in Hawick; and James (d.1799), who died in Hawick. Dr. Walter (c.1792–1858) son of Walter and Margaret Scott, he was born in Arthuret, Cumberland, and became a doctor in Hawick, like his father. His premises were on Buccleuch Street, probably at No. 10. He is recorded as Walter ‘jun. M.D.’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and his house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a physician on Buccleuch Street. He gave evidence in 1844 regarding the poor laws in Scotland, describing how diseases could spread unchecked in the Town’s poorest lodging houses, where itinerant workers stayed. In Slater’s 1852 directory ‘Graham & Thompson’ are listed as physicians on Buccleuch Street; he must therefore have been in partnership with George William Thomson. In 1857 he donated copper coins to the Museum. Later in life he lived at Borthaugh. In 1831 in Kelso he married Alison Brown, who was from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: Walter (b.1832); Margaret Moffat (b.1834); Mary Elizabeth (b.1842), who married William Rodgie; and William Brown (b.1843). By 1861 his widow was living at Borthaugh along with her sisters Janet Brown and Margaret Scott, as well as 3 of their children. He died at Borthaugh. An obituary was written by Dr. John Douglas. William ‘William of the Mote’ (16th C.) prominent member of the family who lived at ‘the Mote’, otherwise known as Liddel Strength, on the English side near where the Liddel joins the Esk. He should not be confused with William Scott of the Mote in Hawick. He is ‘William of the Mote’ in a letter by Lord Scrope in 1601, accusing him of resetting some of those responsible for killing Sir John Carmichael. William ‘Richie’s Will’ (16th C.) 2nd son of Richard of Netherby. He is mentioned by Lord Scrope in 1595/6, when Scott of Buccleuch was said to have been on a raid with him. In 1596 he complained about a raid on his lands by the Lairds of Edgerton and Bedrule, with 20 men stealing 24 horses and £100 of goods. In 1594/5 it is written that ‘Hobbie of the Belsies turned man’ to Richies Will’ and was to be entered to trial by the Wardens. He was also said to have been among Englishmen who (along with several other Grahams) met with Scott of Buccleuch before the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He first married a daughter of Armstrong of Mangerton and secondly married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 15th of Redheugh. He had at least 9 sons. In 1605 ‘Ritchie’s Hutchin’ was found guilty of his son Thomas. Rev. William (d.aft. 1638) graduated from the University of St. Andrews in 1611. He is recorded as minister at Ewes Kirk from 1627. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1705. His children probably included William (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He is recorded as a ‘Day labourer’ in 1746. He married Isobel Nichol and their children included: Margaret (b.1741); and Margaret (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1741 were Mr. Alexander Lithgow and writer Andrew Haliburton and in 1746 were merchant Robert Oliver and John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Euphan Redford and their children included: Ann (b.1754); and Janet (b.1758). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwickshields, recorded on the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse.
He also paid the dog tax at Borthwickshields in 1797. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He could be the ‘Mr William Graham’ from Roberton Parish who in Roberton in 1791 married Agnes Turnbull, from Minto Parish. Agnes (b.1792), baptised in Roberton, was probably their daughter. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Rigfoot in Ewesdale. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Holstaine who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘ History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Grahams. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Harden in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he had just left for America. William (b.1795/6) from England, he was farmer at Lawston in southern Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was recorded as head of his household in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 500 acres and employing 8 labourers. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Thomas, Elizabeth, Robert, John, William, Christopher, James and Ann. William (b.1809) born at Fairnleyhaugh (or Fairnilehaugh) near Yair in Selkirkshire, he was a coal agent in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Howgate working as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at ‘ Leafy House’ (probably Ivy House) on Weensland Road and working as a mason’s labourer. He was recorded as ‘ Carman ’ (i.e. coach-driver) in 1861, when he was living on Weensland Road. In 1829 in Stow he married Janet, daughter of Hawick shoemaker James Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1829), who married John Combe; John (b.1831), who was proprietor of ‘ Graham’s Hotel ’ in Hawick; Agnes (or Ann, b.1835), who married Robert Halliday; James (b.1838), who married Ann Little Kennedy; Janet Turnbull (b.1841), who married baker William McCallum; and Helen (b.1844), who married Robert Jardine. He could be the William, son of John and Ann Dixon, born in Selkirkshire in 1803. Sgt. William (19th C.) veteran soldier who served in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He probably lived in Hawick. He can be seen in an early photograph, in the uniform of the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers. William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853) eldest son of John and Helen Riddle. In 1875 he married Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, descendant of James Ruickbie. Their son William Nichol was Cornet in 1902. The family lived at 14 Howgate. William Nichol (b.1881) Cornet in 1902 and one of the founder members of the Callants' Club. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and worked as a plumber. His father was William Turnbull Riddle and his mother was Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, great-grand-daughter of poet James Ruickbie (also spelled ‘ Graeme ’ and formerly ‘ Ghrame ’, ‘Ghrame’, ‘Grahm’, ‘Grame’, ‘Grayme’, etc.).

the Grahams (thin-græmz, græ-umz) n. family with origins in Midlothian, with a cadet branch moving to Eskdale in the late 14th century and becoming a large clan in northern Cumbria. They were a powerful force in that area, holding at least 13 towers, until the early 17th century when they were targeted by the Earl of Cumberland and others in an attempt to pacify the Borders. They were a scourge of the English wardens, with a reputation for riding with the Scots when it suited them. 150 of the family were rounded up in about 1605 and mostly executed or deported to Ireland or to fight in the wars in Holland. The clan motto is ‘ Ne oublie ’ (forget not) and the crest shows a falcon killing a stork – ‘ For it’s hey the Graems! and Ho the Graems! The gallant Graeans are a’ frien’s to me: And if I had them a’ here this night, Ane foot o’ ground I never wad flee!’ [T] (also spelled ‘ Graeme ’ and other variants).

Graham’s Close (græ-umz-klös) n. former name for a passageway near the foot of the Howgate. The name was used in the 18th century. Immediately below here is where a large hole opened up during the great flood of 1767.

Graham’s Hotel (græ-umz-ho-tel) n. hostel run by John Graham from 1869 at 6 Back Row. It was where the inaugural meeting of the Hawick Burns Club took place in 1878. In 1885 it was renamed Holland House.

Grahamslaw (græ-umz-law) n. area to the north-east of Eckford, the hill there containing 9 caves. The lands were owned by the family of Grahamslaw of that Ilk, with ‘ Johan de Grimmeslawe ’ signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and Christian ‘Grymislaw’ resigning the lands into the hands of the King in 1429. The Barony was long held by the Crichtons of that Ilk. The lands were granted by William Crichton of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1436/7, with a ‘ precept ’ in 1439, and are described as ‘ 8 husband-lands ’ in 1528/9 when still owned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. A separate ‘ 6 husband-lands ’ called ‘ Portaris Landis ’ or ‘ Porterlandis ’ are also mentioned as a Scott possession in 1517, 1553/4, 1574, 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1454 an ‘ instrument ’ dealing with ‘ Burrell lands ’ in Eckford...
Grahamslaw

(witnessed in John Waugh’s tenement in Hawick) describes how Robert ‘of Grimslaw’ was the former laird. A precept of sasine in 1500 grants the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme. The former estate there contains a beehive-shaped dovecote (the origin is probably ‘Grim’s hill’, combining the Old English ‘hlaw’ with Old Norse ‘Grimr’, where this was a nickname for Odin, perhaps relating to the caves; the name appears as ‘Grymislaw’ in 1429, ‘Grymyslaw’ in 1500, ‘Grimmslaw’ and ‘Grymmislaw’ in 1574 and ‘Greameslaw’ in 1663).

Grahamslaw (grā-umz-, grimz-law) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) had sasine for the lands of Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1504, with his name given as ‘Ade Grenislaw’. Probably the same Adam was a member of the panel for deciding on the inherittance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; his surname is given there as ‘Grymislaw’. He may have been father of the later Adam of Newton. It is possible he is the Adam, brother of Thomas (heir of John of Newton) who came in the King’s will in 1494/5 for the theft of 60 sheep from Stouslie. He was already deceased in 1530/1 when his widow Agnes Davidson received money from their cousin Ralph Davidson for a third of ‘Chames’ within the Lordship of Minto. James was granted the non-entry of ‘Chames’ in 1531, by William Turnbull of Minto. Adam of Newton (16th C.) probably the Adam, son of the Laird of Little Newton, who had remission for crimes in 1502. This was for the theft of a cow from Craigend, sheep and geese from Rutherford of Longnewton, geese from John Gledstains, pigs from Spittal, sheaves of barley from George Rutherford, grain from Menslaws and for common theft before his previous 1488 remission. He was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V in 1530 to keep better order. He resigned his lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) to the King in 1531, then gained a crown charter to the lands, along with his wife in the same year. He married Janet Rutherford and was succeeded by his son John. He is also mentioned in a sasine of 1585 (by which time he was deceased). Andrew (15th/16th C.) probably related to Thomas, the 2 being named in a case involving David Oliver ‘in Stryndis’ in 1502. Oliver was charged with resetting them, as well as assisting them in raiding farms. His surname is given as ‘grymislaw’. Christian of that Ilk (14th/15th C.) resigned the lands of Grahamslaw in a letter of 1429, as recorded in an ‘instrument of transumpt’ requested by Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1445. Her name is written ‘Cristiane de Grimislaw’. Henry ‘Harry’ of Little Newton (d.bef. 1606) recorded in 1606 when his sons William and George were held by the Hawick Balies for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hall-rule. They were then transferred to Edinburgh Tolbooth at the direction of the Lords of the Privy Council, and there was a complaint that the family of the murdered man wanted to ruin them and keep them in prison forever, rather than prosecute them. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘Camys’ (probably Minto Kames) in 1502 when Archibald Douglas in Effledge had remission for stealing barley from him. Additionally both Archibald and William Douglas in Effledge had remission for stealing 48 sheep from him. John was also recorded in ‘Camys’ in 1502 and surely related, as was probably the later James of the same place. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 when he was granted the non-entry of the 10 merkland of ‘Chames’ by William Turnbull of Minto and his son William. These are the same lands that Adam formerly held (with his widow Agnes Davidson recorded receiving money for the lands in 1530/1); it seems likely that Adam was therefore a close relation. John of Newton (15th/16th C.) witness to the ‘retour’ for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiels in 1471. He was also a member of the panel for Walter Scott inheriting Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. In 1493 he had remission for being with Alexander, former Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 Thomas, brother of Lord Cranston, had remission for the (unspecified) crime done to him at Denholm. He is recorded in 1498 along with Adam, when he had remission for commuting with ‘the traitouris if Levin, Ruthirfurdis, and Turnebullis’. In 1500 he was one of the men selected to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to the administration of some fines in Roxburghshire. He may be the ‘Johannem Grimyslaw’ who in 1482 was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendeine. His son Thomas was listed in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. John (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘the Place of Camys’, probably Minto Kames. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 5 horses from his farm, with the help of some rebel Turnbuls. James was also recorded in ‘Camys’ in 1502 and surely related. John of Newton (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Adam. He could be the John who had a sasine for Newton in 1541/2. He could be the ‘Johnne Grymislaw’ who signed the bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He also swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with William Ker of Caverton as his surety. In 1586 he sold Newton to Robert Kerr of Ancrum (later Newton), who married his daughter Helen. He is probably the ‘Johne Grimslaw of Litill Newton’ who was among the men accused of helping the English raid lands belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branhelme in 1548. He could be the same ‘Johnne Grameslaw of Litill Newton’ whose 6 sons William, James, Robert, John, Andrew and Thomas were killed by a group of Turnbuls from Stanedge, Barhills and Minto, the trial being in 1604. John (d.c.1601) probably son of John of Newton. Along with his brothers William, James, Andrew, Robert and Thomas, all servants of Thomas Ker of Craulinghall, they were killed by a group of Turnbuls and Davisons from the Minto area. In 1610 a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend the accused, since they had still not found caution for the crimes. His sister, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton (who had married Robert Kerr), was mentioned as one of the pursuers in the case, as well as Robert Kerr of Newton ‘as sister’s son’. Robert (14th/15th C.) laird of the ‘Burrell lands’ in Eckford Parish, as described in a document of 1454 signed in John Waugh’s tenement in Hawick. He was succeeded by his only daughter Helen, who married Simon Burrell and was succeeded by their only daughter Janet, whose John Burrell resigned the lands in 1448. He may be the ‘Roberto grynlaw’ listed in a document for lands in Morebattle in 1445. Thomas of Newton (15th C.) member of the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He was thus a prominent Roxburghshire landowner of the time and is listed as ‘Thomas Grymslaw of Newton’. Thomas (15th C.) son and heir of John of Newton. In 1492/3 he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Thomas of Newton, ‘Junior’, who was surety for William Falside in Ancrum at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘Junior dominus de newton’ when he and his brother Adam came in the King’s will for stealing 60 sheep from Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, from the lands of Stouslie; these sheep appeared to belong to the King. His goods were escheated and his sureties were John Rutherford of Edgeston and Ralph Ker. Thomas (15th/16th C.) accomplice of David Oliver ‘in Stryndis’ (probably Strange in Rulewater), recorded in a remission Oliver had in 1502. Along with Andrew he was involved in ‘theftuous deeds’ and was already ‘at the horn’. Perhaps this same Thomas was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him and the Rutherfords, as well as when John Fawlaw in Liddlehad remission for associating with him. He was also listed along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Scott as rebels who Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with. He may be the same man as the son of John of Newton. Walter (17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Tushielaw in a deed of 1629. William (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshies and Harden Wood in 1471. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassetendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Probably the same William had remission (along with Simon Glendinning) in 1493 for common theft happening before the time of his current remission. He is recorded as being ‘at the kirk of Hassindene’ in 1493 when he had remission for helping some men of Tynedale to steal cattle, sheep, horses and goods from Minto; Walter Scott of Howpasley served as surety for him. In 1494 he was ‘William Grymslaw’ when he was a witness for the transfer of lands in the Barony of Hassetendean (formerly spelled ‘Grymslaw’, ‘Grinslaw’, ‘Grinyslaw’, ‘Grymislaw’, ‘Grymmyslaw’, etc.).

graloch (grā-loch) v., poet. to disembowel – ‘. . . And the soreichspurtled slaisterbags Wad graith my guts!’ [DH].

gramarie (graw-ma-ree) n., poet. witchcraft, magic – ‘Until he did his ain men see, With witches’ hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Soulis’ gramarye; Then shoulder-high for glee he lap’ [JL], ‘Dark was the vaulted room of gramarye, To which the wizard led the gallant knight’ [SWS] (there are spelling variants).

gramercy (graw-mer-see) interj., poet. thanks – ‘Now Dickie has feld fair Johnie Armstrong, Fala, &c. The prettiest man in the south countrie. Gramercy, then can Dickie say, I had but twa horse thou has made me three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (from the French).
the Grammar Schuil (thu-graw-nur-skil) n. Hawick Grammar School, founded in 1710, following a meeting of the Parish Heritors organised by Rev. Alexander Orrock, and bolstered through the Orrock Bequest of 1711 (hence the confusion about the date of its foundation). There was probably a school from about the time of the Reformation, but it may not have had a continuous existence. Andrew Sword was recorded as school-master in c.1592 and in 1616, William Hay in 1606 and Adam Scott in 1622. In the Parish valuation of 1627 it is stated that there 'is no provision for ane schole, bot thair is verie great necessitie for a schole'. James Carmure was recorded as school-master in 1631. However, it is unclear how well supported education was in the town through the rest of the 17th century and before there had long been calls to establish such a school. The Burgesses were taxed in 1710 (probably for the first time), to support this school and its master. It existed alongside the Parish School (often called the English School), which was for elementary education, with lessons in English. The Grammar School was a secondary school for the wealthier classes, which to begin with would have charged fees and had lessons in Latin. The first schoolmaster was James Innes. It is unclear where the school started, since the land at Orrock Place was obtained (from Andrew Rodger) only about 1724. At that time it contained 2 ruined houses, plus sheds and a yard. The school seems to have been rebuilt from these buildings soon after 1724. But a new building was completed on the site in 1732, constructed by John Turnbull, mason, and Walter Scott, wright. This building was damaged in the 1767 flood. The school used the Town Hall as overflow from 1821, and the schoolhouse in Orrock Place was abandoned in some years as being too small. By 1825 the school was run by a Rector with 2 assistants. The school was rebuilt in 1825–26, designed by Smith of Darnick, when it was merged (actually a joint master was appointed in 1824) with the Parish School to become the United Schools. In 1839 it was written that the subjects taught were reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, mathematics, Latin, Greek and French. A new room was added to the school in 1846, but then it still only contained 4 rooms. It was then in use until Buccleuch School (now Hawick High School) was built in 1860. The old building became the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, but was given to the Archaeological Society as a Museum from 1862–86. Thereafter it was sold as a joiners workshop (Walter Scott & Son), and then became Chisholme Antiques, etc. It still exists beside the old Orrock Church, with high-silled windows suggesting its earlier function. The head boy of the school used to carry its flag during the Common Riding, the practice ending in 1777; the 1744 flag is preserved in the Museum.

grand (grawnd) adj. great, fine, splendid – ‘that’s a grand hat ce’ve on’, ‘Now there’s a new coat feenished! Is it no grand?’ [JEDM], ‘...a grocer body gaun eis yirrints, gien iz the weel-wurn hail: ‘It’s a grand-day!’’ [ECS], ‘...A gaed an got masel cleaned an spruisht wui a grand swaibble o waeter’ [ECS], ‘There was na graun new blouses every other Setturday, an’ white gloves for whust pairties’ [HEx1919], ‘...eis no only a grand singer but a nice laddie tae’ [MB], ‘The fremmit freends ye neebor there Are neebor-like and grand’ [WL].

grand-dowter (grawn-dow-tur) n. a granddaughter – ‘Ma great-grandfather’s sister was mairedd ti Robbie Burns’s granddowter’s husband’s brother which makes mei a tremendous close relation ti oor National Bard’ [IWL].

grander (grawn-duur) adj. finer, more splendid – ‘Though there may be grander toons Still a Teri hert aye turns Tae the Teviot and the bonnie Border burns’ [RMc].

grandest (grawn-dist) adj. greatest, finest – ‘that’s the grandest hing’, ‘Man it’s the grandest place aw’ve ever seen And no a bit like Hawick’[AY], ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the town’[WL], ‘For in yon Bridge Street queue A got the grandest blether, Wi’ freends likes Robbie Knox And Henry’s fither’ [IWL].

grandfather (grawn-fith-tur) n. grandfather – ‘Gie me a guid-gaun grandfaither clock’[DH], ‘...Pop’s grandfather George and his brother Billy were Cornets’ [IWL] (also written ‘grandfaither’).

the Grand Mairch (thu-grawnd-märch) n. traditional march at the Common Riding Ball, led off by the Cornet and his Lass.

Grange (grän) n. area just to the west of Chesters, south-east of Ancrum. ‘Chesters’ Grange’ and ‘Grange Banks’ are shown on today’s Ordnance Survey maps. Perhaps the lands were formerly separated into east and west; if so Adam Thomson was recorded at the east part in 1494/5. Lands there valued at about £1460 were owned by Rev. William Bennet in 1643, Grange (grænj) n. former name for lands in Ringwoodfield, somewhere near Northhouse or Teviothead. Around 1557 Simon Scott of ‘Fernili’ and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented these lands, along with Bowanhill, from the monks of Melrose. The name is recorded as ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ and the value was £4. In 1564 it was recorded simply as ‘Grange’. It is possible that this was a grange of the Abbey, located perhaps near Staney Hill. This could be the Grange in Castleton Parish listed in 1797 when John Turnbull was there.

Grange (grænj) n. Robert (13th/14th C.) referred to as ‘de la Grange’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His lands could have been the Grange near Ancrum, or possibly the one at Abbotrule. He was on a jury an inquest for the inheritance of Wilton and other lands of William de Chartres in 1303/4.

the Grange (θu-grænj) n. former farm in the Barony of Abbotrule, just to the north of the main house. The lands transferred to Southdean Parish and later to Hobkirk Parish. Thomas Rutherford was recorded there in 1494/5. It was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh in 1509 and later passed to the Kers. ‘Dand’ Rutherford of Grange was recorded in 1581/2. In 1629 Walter Scott, son of William, who was son of Walter of Todrig, was served heir to the lands; they were at that time described as ‘a 32 shilling land of old extent’. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by Bessie and Anna, daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as also having a mill. Rev. James Ker, minister of Abbotrule, was also Laird of Grange in the mid-to-late 17th century; he preached a field conventicle in the house in 1679, with about 500 people listening from the lawn outside. In 1680 it was listed among lands whose superiority was held by the Kerrs of Abbotrule. In 1707 ‘Grange’s lands’ were held by ‘Airs of R. Watson’ and valued at £396; it must have therefore been included in a large set of farms at that time. Grange afterwards formed part of the farm of Ruletownhead. In 1788 the farm was owned by Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at £396. Part was listed in 1811 being owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, formerly possessed by John Elliot, and valued at about £34. Alexander Wight was farmer there in 1797. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £43 (it is ‘Grayng’ in 1581/2; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and was ‘Grange’ in 1670 and 1680).

Grant (grawn, gravnt) n. Adam (1859–1938) composer of the music for several Hawick songs and compiler of others. Born in St. Andrews, he spent his early years in Edinburgh, and at the age of 12 was apprenticed as an organ builder and pianist. He came to Hawick at 19 to be organist at St. Cuthbert’s. He moved to St. John’s in 1991 and remained there until 1936, serving the same church for 45 years. He also set himself up as a piano tutor and tuner and in 1882 opened a shop (which he shared with 3 other businesses at No. 2 High Street), selling sheet music. He moved to larger premises at 10 North Bridge Street in 1885, and lived above the shop. This became the main musical business in Hawick, selling instruments as well as music (and later gramophone records), and acting as a booking agent, as well as publisher of local music. He was official Common-Riding accompanist for more than 40 years (at least 1896 until 1937), and Callants’ Club accompanist for over 30 years. He also wrote non-Hawick music, sometimes under the name ‘Rosenberg’. He also helped James Sinton with the musical part of his Hawick-related bibliography. His music shop finally closed in 1933. He was also a keen Volunteer, served as Captain of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and was a member of the Archaeological Society and Golf Club. A member of Lodge St. John 111, he was Grand Organist to the Provincial Grand Chapter of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. His musical output included composition or significant arrangement of ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’, ‘Hawick’, ‘Oor Ain Auld Toon’, ‘The Anvil Crew’, ‘Clinty’s Song’, ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’, ‘Meda’s Song’, ‘Invocation’ and ‘The Wail of Flodden’. He also provided arrangement and acted as publisher for many others. His most serious piece of piano music was ‘The Braxholme Waltz’ and he also wrote music for plays in collaboration with J.E.D. Murray, specifically ‘The Witch o’ The Wisp Hill’, ‘The Caddie’s Ghost’, ‘Kirsty o’ Cocklaw Castle’, ‘Turning Back the Clock’ and ‘The Gutterbludes’, as well as the Quater-Centenary Pageant. He probably contributed more than anyone else to Hawick’s musical heritage, his publication of compilations of local songs perhaps being his lasting legacy, since this saved many songs and popularised others. He married Bessie Briggs Hall and their son Adam R. carried on the family business. His daughter Agnes Wight Hall (‘Nan’) died in 1912, aged 25. There is a commemorative plaque for him at 2 High Street, the site of his first music shop, designed by Willie Landles, and unveiled in 1999. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, and since he lived to a good age and fell on hard times, there were apparently only 35 mourners at his funeral; however, traffic was stopped on the High Street at the unveiling of the plaque.

Adam Rutherford (1883–1952) son of Adam, he carried on the family music business. In 1948 he arranged the music for ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’, piecing together the music from his memory and some notes left by his father and Tom Ker. He also resurrected Ker’s song ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’ in 1949. He was organist at Southdean Kirk and then Bedrule Kirk. He also ran a dance orchestra. He married into the Wallace family who farmed at Roundabouts and they moved to Hillview, Southdean. He worked in the music shop until it closed in 1938. Afterwards he continued to be accompanist at Common Riding and other events in Hawick. He took ill suddenly when attending a Glasgow Hawick Association meeting and died a few days later.

Andrew Farmer, descendant of the Sprots. In 2015 he presented a talk to the Archaeological Society on the history of the Riddell estate. Derrick (17th/18th C.) Hawick born and bred, he worked in the knitwear industry, and was known for his abilities on the rugby field. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 16. He went on to gain 14 caps and to play for the Lions, then coach for Hawick, the South and Scotland. George (17th/18th C.) factor to Douglas of Cavers in the early-to-mid 18th century. Probably the same George was the Duke of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest, Hassendean, Burnfoot and Melrose at least in the period 1748–56. He was factor for Scott of Harden 1734–55 and was also factor to Francis Scott of Gorrenberry when Adderstone was purchased in 1750. George (18th/19th C.) surgeon in the Royal Navy. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and must have had a local connection. George (18th C.) factor of Cavers estate. He was appointed Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire by Archibald Douglas in 1742. He may be the ‘Mr. Grant’, factor to Douglas of Cavers, recorded in the Hawick Session book of 1723. John Alexander William (1886–1959) born in Inverness, he was an architect in Edinburgh. His firm, J.A.W. Grant, continued after his death. They were responsible for much of the local authority housing developments in Hawick, including Burnfoot, Howdenbank and Silverbuthall. John (18th C.) factor to Archibald Douglas of Cavers, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751 (presumably related to George). He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752).

Dr. John (1823–76) from Knockando in Moray, he was a 5th generation descendant of Patrick, 2nd son of James, Laird of Grant. He served as a doctor in Hawick, and was listed as a physician on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was listed as a general practitioner, living at about 21 High Street, with an ‘M.D.’s Messenger’ and a servant. For most of his time in Hawick he lived at the top of Walter’s Wynd, 47 High Street. He was listed there in 1861, with his housekeeper and stable boy. He was well known for keeping otter hounds, horses and other animals in the back of the property in the mid-19th century. The Border Magazine of 1904 contains a grizzly account of ‘A Day on Teviot with the Otter Hounds’ which he led in 1863, with his dogs (‘Caledonia’, ‘Royal’, ‘Ringwood’ and ‘Pibroch’) chasing an otter from Burnfoot to Spittal, and his young hound ‘Bobby’ being brought in to dispatch the otter. Another account published in 1904 described a hunt on the Ale Water, when he succeeded in a long-held ambition to personally capture an otter alive, but not without being seriously bitten. John (19th C.) worked at Wells sawmill around the 1850s. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Ashkirkmieln’ in 1714 when his son James became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Thomas (18th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in 1793, when he was working for David Simpson. Rev. William (1811–53) born in Jedburgh, son of Lewis of the Auchernack family, and Isabella Veitch of Inchbony. His father was a saddler in Jedburgh and his sister Isabella married James Guthrie, Hawick plumber and Slater. He was educated at George Watson’s Hospital and Edinburgh University and became a schoolmaster at Minto, probably in the 1820s. Under his direction it is said that the school achieved a very high reputation, with several boarders coming there from outside the Parish. He was still recorded as master at Minto in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained as assistant at Cavers in May 1840, taking over as minister from James Strachan only a month or so later. He was then minister of Cavers until his death. He remained with the establishment after the Disruption, although part of his congregation left to form the Denholm Free Kirk in the autumn of 1843. In his day the Sunday service started at noon (to allow the country folk to see to their animals before setting out), lasted for 2 hours, with a break and then another 2 hours. Like all ministers of the time, he was known for rebuking the congregation. In later life he had a long white beard. In 1840 he married Jane, daughter of James Dickson of Mauricewood. Their son William (1849–1911) became a wealthy timber merchant in Leith (and was Master of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh 1905–07), and his this William’s son also became minister of Cavers. Their other children were: Isabella (1841–1904), who married the minister of Coltness; Lewis (b.1842), who died young; Lewis (1844–1916), Kirkcaldy engineer; Jane Dickson (1846–1924), who married Robert Michael Ballantyne, children’s author; and James (1849–1911), who became a doctor and died in Tasmania. His name is recorded on the family gravestone in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Rev. William Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1883–1971) minister of Cavers 1924–54, before it merged with Kirkton. He was the son of William and Eliza Mary Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas), and grandson of Rev. William Grant who had been minister of Cavers himself. He was educated at George Watson’s College and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1905. He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1908 and became assistant at St. Bernard’s in Edinburgh. He was then minister at Edrom and of the ‘Second Charge’ of St. Andrew’s from 1916. In 1918 he was Chaplain to the Forces serving in Salonika. In 1924 he was translated to Cavers Parish. He married Evelyn Maud Mary Urquhart in 1914 and they had one son, Alan (1916–2010).

grap (grawp) pp., arch. gripped – ‘But she ...roared and grat, an’ grat ma airms’ [HAST1868], ‘...She grap at it, muttering, I should hae had mair, But yet I will tak’ it at Copshawholm Fair’ [AD] (also written ‘graap’; this is the past tense form, while gruppen is the past participle).

grape (gräp) v., poet. to grope – ‘...And be-like they grapen whaur they couldna see, And the nits were sweir to faa’ [WL] (also spelled ‘graip’; cf. grep).

the Grapes (thu-gräps) n. the Grapes Inn, previously at 16 Buccleuch Street, which was the main centre in Hawick for the carrying trade, before the coming of the railway. It once had a private well, which others were sometimes allowed to use. The inn was erected by a carrier named John Hargreaves, after he acquired the property in 1820. John Beck was the proprietor in 1825, Robert Hobkirk in 1837 and Margaret Best in 1855. Most of the buildings have been greatly altered, but a turretted staircase and workshop survive.

Grapes Close (gräps-klöös) n. also known as Grapes Inn Close, the pend between 16 and 18 Buccleuch Street, named after the Grapes Inn, which once occupied that area. The name continued in use long after the inn itself closed. The Drums and Fifes march out to here on the Thursday night, since it is close to the site of one of the town’s tolls. It is also on the route of the Cornet’s Walk.

Grapes Hotel (gräps-hö-tel) n. hotel in Newcastleton at 16 Douglas Square, also known as the Grapes Inn and just ‘the Grapes’. Jane Kyle was proprietress there on Pigot’s 1825 directory and still in 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory. John Elliot was inn-keeper in the 1860s.

grat (gra, grat) pp., arch. cried, wept – ‘But Willie was stricken over the head, And thro’ the knapsack the sword has gane: And Harden grat for very rage, Whan Willie on the grund lay slane’ [T], ‘But she ...roared and grat, an’ grab ma airms’ [HAST1868], ‘When I grat an’ chestenet my saul wi’ fastin’ ...’ [HSR], ‘Bie the rivirs o’ Babylon, ther we sate doun: yis we grat whan we rememberit Zion’ [HSR], ‘... she fair grat when she saw a volunteer part from his sweet-heart’ [RM], ‘It girned at the red, and grat at the blue ...’ [DH] (also written ‘graip’; this is a past tense form, cf. the more common gret and the past participle grutten).

And a’ ma life A will That A bide here in the toon that lies ablow the Vertish Hill’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘gratefi’ and gratefu’).

the Gravelly Haugh (thu-graw-vu-lee-hawch) n. former descriptive name for an area on the south side of the Slitrig near Lynnwood, where the old Common boundary briefly crossed to the other side of the river. This could be what was meant in an entry from the Parish Records of the early 18th century – ‘To a poore lad’s cofine yt dyed in the Gravell, £2’.

the Graves (thu-grá-veez) n. popular name for old Wilton Kirk cemetery.

gravit (grav-vi’) n., arch. a scarf, especially a warm woollen one – ‘pit yer gravit on’, ‘...Till they’ve a’ gotten gravats made oot o’ gude rope’ [UB] (also spelled ‘gravat’; accent on the 2nd syllable).

graw (graw) v. to grow – ‘Gala graws on ee after a while, a bit like cancer’, ‘...for which yin year heid’ ti graw a beard ...’ [IWL] (cf. the more common growe).

gray (grá) n., arch. an arithmetic book (so-called from the book written by James Gray, schoolmaster in Peebles, which was heavily used in schools in the 19th century).

Gray (grá) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with George Gray and Thomas Allan. He was probably related to George, as well as to William, who leased another part of Raperlaw. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘fraiter’ (perhaps Fraser) and their son John was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Andrew Scott and John (who was probably related). Andrew (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His is probably an ancestor of the later Andrew who owned lands in Lilliesleaf. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. In 1680 when he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Muir, along with Walter Paisley. He married Isobel Ormiston in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1780), baptised in Hawick; and Bessie (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1688), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and George Ormiston (perhaps brothers to his wife). He may be the same man as the later Dand in Weensland, or else perhaps his father. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw and later tenant in Weensland. Note that his forename is sometimes transcribed as ‘David’ rather than ‘Dand’. He must have been closely related to James, who was in Whitlaw at the same time. He was tenant in Whitlaw in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for James Colwort, also in Whitlaw. He was recorded in Whitlaw in 1706 along with James (presumably his father or brother) when they witnessed a baptism for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw. He was also in Whitlaw in 1708 when one of his children was baptised in Hawick, in 1709 when he witnessed baptisms for Adam Scott in Kirkton, for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with James), in 1711 for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’, and in 1713 for James Craw in Branzholme Town. He was listed as an Elder in 1713. He was recorded as tenant at Weensland in 1718 and also in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was also tenant in Weensland in 1719 when his servant William Stoddart got married. He was also so labelled in 1725 when he witnessed baptisms for carrier Thomas Porteous, for William Hislop and for tenant Robert Scott. In 1726 he witnessed baptisms for carrier John Tait and for Robert Nichol in Weensland. He was described as tenant in Weensland in 1728 when his daughter Margaret married Walter Scott from Hawick-shiel. He married Janet Buckham (or ‘Buchan’, from Bedrule Parish) in Hawick in 1706 and their children included: Margaret (b.1708); James (b.1710); John (b.1712); Francis (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); George (b.1718); Mary (b.1721); and Janet (b.1723). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldie lands, and gardener James Falsayde, in 1718 was ‘Mr’ James Innes and in 1721 were Bailies Walter Purdom and James Scott. He was in Weensland in 1720 when (along with merchant John Johnston) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He may be the Dand who witnessed a baptism for James in Whitlaw in 1728 and another (the same day).
for John Anderson. He could be the Dand whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott in 1728. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1764 when he was paid for ‘the wind-pointer, fen, and hands, in church steeple’. He was presumably a clockmaker or other merchant. Perhaps the same Andrew in Cavers Parish married Helen Glendinning in Hawick Parish in 1762 and had a daughter Helen (b.1770). He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Welsh in 1797. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf (valued at £86 13s 4d). He could be the Andrew from whom the Riddells of that Ilk purchased the lands of ‘Hoglair-burn’ in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to the 1813 Tax Rolls. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew from Lilliesleaf. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1788 in Cavers he married Christian Hunter. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Andrew (19th C.) noted local jumper from Hawick, also associated with the early years of Hawick Baa. He won the running hop-step-and-leap at the St. Ronan’s Games in 1830. At the Saturday Games of the 1834 Common Riding he won the ‘running high leap’ and the ‘hop, step and leap’, bringing to 23 his total of local prizes. He is probably the handloom weaver of that name living with the Crosier family at about 30 Loan in 1841. Andrew (b.1784/5) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was probably the Andrew who is recorded as owner of ‘Hungry-hills, Four Rigs and Tenement and Yard in Lilliesleaf’ according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and as a ‘Landed Proprietor (of 7 acres)’ on Main Street in 1851. His wife was Jean from Greta. Their children included: James; Catherinе; and Isabella (b.1831), who wrote poetry under the pseudonym ‘Free Lance’. Charles (18th/19th C.) first (and only) minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick. He arrived in November 1805, having previously been a stone mason, and being trained by the Hal dane’s in Edinburgh. After only a few years he apparently became more of a convert to baptist views than much of his congregation, leading to the entire church folding by 1813. He left Hawick, since there were not enough baptist followers to support him at that time. David (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. David (17th C.) resident at Stoulsie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Dand see Andrew Gray. ‘Dand’. Duncan (15th C.) witness to Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453, where he is described as an esquire. Presumably the same Duncan ‘Graye’ was also witness to a charter of William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, in which James was also a witness. Francis (18th C.) resident of Weensland. He married Isobel Douglas and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1759); an unnamed child (b.1761); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard and ‘student’ John Laurie, and in 1762 were John Laurie (again) and George Gray (who was probably related). Francis ‘Frank’ (1839–1922) from Yeadon in Yorkshire, where he was bandmaster from the age of 17. He came to Hawick in 1860 with his brother Barnabas, to work as a weaver. In 1861 they were lodging at 21 High Street. He was made bandmaster for the local detachment of the Border Rifles, and remained in this position for 43 years. Since the volunteers had no instruments, he travelled to Edinburgh with Capt. Chisholme of Stiches to purchase them. He can be seen in an early photograph and is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery. George (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with Andrew Gray and Thomas Allan. He was probably related to Andrew, as well as to William, who leased another part of Raperlaw. George (17th C.) recorded as being in ‘Rupertlaw’ (probably Raperlaw, but possibly Ruberslaw) in 1684 when his sevrvant George Young was listed as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (18th C.) resident of Weensland. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Weensland (who was surely related). He is recorded being in ‘Wiensland’ in 1764 when his son’s baptism was witnessed by gardener James Scott and Walter Scott (probably related to his wife). He was also listed being in Weensland in 1766 when baptismal witnesses were Adam Scott and William Elliot. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: Margaret (b.1758); David (b.1759); John (b.1762); James (b.1764); Esther (b.1766); George (b.1769); and Francis (b.1771). He could be the miller who in 1757 witnessed a baptism for miller Alexander Heatley. George (18th C.) recorded in Wiltonburn in 1794 when he was in dispute with Basil Wood (in Dangerfield) according to a document in Selkirk. George (d.1808) merchant in Hawick, son of James, who was from Ashieburn. He was listed as a merchant on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He died in Gray

Hawick. George (19th C.) resident of ‘Peanhousies’, i.e. Burnhead Cottages, in 1857, when he donated coins to the Archeological Society. He was surely related to William, who was listed as a lambswool stocking maker at ‘Parkhouses’ on the 1851 and 1861 censuses. George (1914/15–1991) born in Hawick, he started work with Walter Wilson’s and was a ‘Bevin Boy’ during WWII. He then worked on the railway before becoming a personnel officer with Turner & Rutherford.

He was a member of the Labour Party, was on the Town Council 1955–61 and served as a Bailie. He was also a keen amateur dramatist and singer.

Gilbert (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. The death of his daughter Janet is recorded in 1810.

Cardinal Gordon Joseph (1910–93), born in Leith, son of mechanical engineer Francis William. He was ordained as a priest in Edinburgh in 1935, then assisted his uncle, who was priest at St. Andrews, while taking a degree there. In 1941 he was appointed priest of S.S. Mary & David’s in Hawick, and remained there until 1947. One of his tasks was to put together the centenary booklet. During the War years he also served nearby German and Italian prisoners of war. He was surely related to William, who was listed and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas (15th C.) local man recorded in 1432 when he witnessed the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Also listed was John, who was surely related.

He may be the same James who witnessed a charter for William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, along with Duncan, who may have been related. And he is probably the James listed as deputy to Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1455. James (17th C.) son of William. In 1676 he was ‘of Lislie’ (probably Lilliesleaf) when he and his mother Isobel Turnbull had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. His brother John is recorded in 1678. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray and their children included: Dand (b.1676); Helen (b.1679); and Marion (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Walter Paisley and William Taylor. In 1685 he witnessed a baptism for William Taylor. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the James, married to Bessie Dunlop, whose children included Agnes (b.1688), Eupham (b.1689), Robert (b.1691), William (b.1693), Janet (b.1696), Walter (b.1701), Janet (again, b.1703) and an unnamed son (b.1707). The witnesses in 1690 were William (probably his father or brother) and James Henderson. In 1691 he (and James Dunlop) witnessed a baptism for William Dunlop. Probably the same James was listed among those collecting money for the Parish in 1724. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism in 1687. He was recorded as tenant in Whitlaw in 1703, 1706, 1707, 1709 and 1713. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Gledstains in Whitehaugh, in 1704 for Robert Cairns (tailor in Whitlaw), in 1706 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw (along with Dand, presumably his son or brother) and for weaver Thomas Anderson, in 1707 for weaver Andrew Jardine and William Gledstains, workman in Whitlaw, in 1708 for Thomas Penman and James Borthwick, in 1709 for William Lillico (herd at the Flex), for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with Dand), and in 1713 for James Crow in Branxholme Town (when he was listed as an Elder). Probably the same James was in Whitchesters in 1708 when he witnessed another baptism. In 1717 (along with John Scott, candlemaker) he was appointed to collect monies from ‘Whitla, Whittalahaugh, Flexes, and Burnflat’, and in 1718 he was described as ‘in Whitta' and already quite aged. He must have been closely related to Dand, who was also in Whitlaw. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitlaw. In Hawick in 1727 he married Helen Eliott, daughter of Walter in Brugh. Their children included: James (b.1728); and an unnamed son (b.1730). It seems likely he was son (or grandson) of the earlier James, who was elder.
of Hawick Kirk and related to David who was in Whitlaw in 1702. The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were David Gray and John Scott. James (18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Lamb and their children included: Agnes (b.1745), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1765), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1765 were Walter Scott and William Robertson. He may be the James Grae who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of the Allars area. He was already deceased in 1805 when the death of his son James is recorded. James ‘Jamie’ (b.c.1793) Hawick man who was born crippled. He famously told a story about meeting the lame Sir Walter Scott at the head of the Loan as a boy. He could be the weaver ‘James Grey’ recorded at about 41 Loan on the 1841 census. James (d.bef. 1808) from Ashieburn. The death of his son, merchant George, is recorded in Hawick in 1808. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. John (15th C.) recorded as one of the ‘nobles’ on the witness list for the 1432 sasine for William Douglas being given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire. It took place at Cavers house and the other men were all local. He must have been related to James Gray, who is also listed. John ‘Wi Yin Ei’ (16th C.) servant to the young Laird of Mangerton. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carniesleaf. In 1642 he married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. Their children included: Thomas (b.1735), John (b.1739) and Margaret (b.1717). John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Paterson and their children included Thomas (b.1735), John (b.1739) and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the weaver of that name who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included: Thomas (b.1771). John (18th C.) listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He could be the John who married Agnes Scott (from Hawick) in Robertson Parish in 1789 and was living at Harden in 1793. Their children included Thomas (b.1790), John (b.1792) and James (b.1793). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn Epps, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ashkirk Bridgend, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Heuchhouse in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Mr. Gray of Castleton who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. John ‘Daft Jock’, ‘Jock the Ladle’ (1776/7–1837) wandering beggar and simpleton, who travelled around Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire in the early-to-mid 1800s. A native of Ettrick, he later moved to Selkirk with his packman father, Johnnie. He was also referred to as ‘Daft Jock Gray of Gilmascleuch’. His nickname ‘the Ladle’ came from a version of ‘And he played upon a ladle ...’ that he used to sing, along with a ladle as prop. He was also known for imitating ministers and for bawdy songs. He would make up his own songs by throwing together rhymes from elsewhere. He usually wore knee-breeches, bright red garters,

The Katherine, wife of Herbert Maxwell, recorded in 1540, related to the lands of Haining. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1720 being made to stand ‘upon the usual place of repentance in sackcloth’ in St. Mary’s Kirk for 7 Sundays. This was for ‘her sin of drunkenness and baseness’. Peter (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Peter from Wilton who married Jane Leithead in Robertson in 1790. Their daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1802. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1722 and their children included Agnes (b.1723), James (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1729). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Helen Gray and William Redford, respectively, who had children a little earlier in Ashkirk Parish.

Robert (19th/20th C.) baker at 10 High Street around the 1890s. Thomas (16th C.) probably from Liddesdale, he was listed in 1535 among a number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and taking prisoners from Craik. Ninian Gray, servant to John Forester ‘Shake Buckler’ is also listed, and so may have been a relative. Thomas (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He held a tenement there from the Bishop of Glasgow and in 1563 leased it to his neighbour Thomas Smail for 19 years.

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Alison Riddell and their children included: Agnes (b.1680); Walter (b.1681); Christian (b.1684); Agnes (again, b.1688); and Agnes (again, b.1690). The witnesses in 1681 were Walter Riddell (probably related to his wife) and Alexander . . . (perhaps Riddell) and in 1688 were Walter Riddell and Robert Hume. He is probably the Thomas Gray who witnessed baptisms in Robertson Parish for Robert Scott in 1681 and for Rev. Francis Scott in 1684 and 1688. Thomas of Townhead (17th C.) had an ‘instrument’ brought against him, along with Rev. Francis Scott in 1689, by 2 of the Hassendean heritors. This suggests that he was associated with Hassendean Kirk and also refused to give up Episcopalianism. He may be the same Thomas who has an ‘instrument’ in his favour in 1675 ‘on the appearance of his wife, Bessie Scott, within the parish Kirk of Hassindene’. He paid the land tax on £214 for lands previous held by Scott of Alton and ‘Now called Know Townhead’ in 1678. In 1692 he ‘peyed formerly for the viccorage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead’. He was recorded at enormous buttons and a tall hat. He is mentioned in William Chambers ‘Memoir of Robert Chambers’. One of his songs was a popular one with the chorus ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM], with a different version in the Chambers book, with chorus ‘And the laddie he’s but young, And the laddie he’s but young, And Robbie Scott ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [DJG]. He would mimic the older local preachers and was sometimes disruptive during services. He was also known for singing bawdy songs. He also sang rhyming couplets of Wullie Craw’s, and verses attributed to him refer to people and places around Wilton and Hassendean, as well as other places. He was said to be the inspiration for ‘Davie Gallatley’ in Sir Walter Scott’s novel ‘Waverley’. A portrait of him was painted by William Snellie Watson. He is said to have been very attached to his father, and took to bed after his father’s death, dying within a week. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Collier in 1796. Their children included: James (b.1796); Jane (b.1802); and Christian (b.1802). The witnesses in 1796 were the whole Associate Congregation. John (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His son Andrew died in 1805. John (b.1790/1) born in Crailing, he was a carrier and grocer in Holbkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at ‘North Town O’ Rule’, which is the cottage known locally as ‘Drythropple’. His neighbour was the poet John Halliday. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Eliza and Agnes. John ‘Jock’ (1812–83) born in Wilton, he lived in the West-end and was known as a cheerful simpleton. He stayed at the Corner of the Green Wynd and the Loan with his sister Lizzie and her husband James Anderson, and helped his brother-in-law with his dairy. He was a common sight on the streets, driving a donkey cart and having a pet starling. He later became bald, apparently as the result of a hair tonic, and is buried in the Wellogate – ‘Jock, the cddie’s tail’s off’ [RM]. John Y. (19th/20th C.) left money to establish the John Y. Gray Prize Fund at the High School. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when she had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed and placed her own livestock there. This was done legally in front of Thomas Scott in Toddrig and others. In 1540 she was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Toddrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. She may be the same woman as Katherine Lauder recorded in 1538. She may also be Hassendean Townhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls there is a record of ‘Thomas Gray of Alton’s Lands, now called Know Townhead’: it is unclear where his lands of Alton were. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Crackuooll’ (or Cracknooll’) in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the Thomas, married to Helen Scott, who was recorded as a weaver at Shielswoodhaugh in 1709; their children included John (b.1705), Helen (b.1707) and Robert (b.1709). Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for the Parish, suggesting he was a Kirk Elder. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he witnessed (along with Thomas Huntly) a baptism for John Little. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isabel Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1758). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation and in 1758 were Walter Wilson and Francis Paterson. Thomas (18th/19th C.) first definitely known proprietor of the Mosspaul Inn. He is thus recorded on an 1803 list of members of the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was probably landlord at Mosspaul until 1816. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, who wrote a poem about the improvements that had been carried out at the hotel – ‘Tam, the storm baith loud and fierce is, Ever since I left Mosspaul, Yet accept my two-three verses, Now I’m in a tift tae scrawl’ [JR]. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with William Redford. This was specifically the quarter belonging to George Turnbull. He was probably related to Andrew and George, who leased other parts. William (d.bef. 1676) recorded in 1676 being ‘of Lissie’ (probably Lilliesleaf) when his widow Isobel Turnbull had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. This was probably for some annual rent, with his son James also recorded in the same year. His son John is also recorded in 1678. William (17th C.) resident at Castleside near Branxholme according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 he was recorded as the Duchess of Buccleuch’s tenant of the farm of Castleside. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Murray in 1671. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Thomson in 1680. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Clarilaw in 1738. He is probably the William who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton, who lived at Clarilaw. He married Grisel Nixon and their children included Bessie (b.1727), Margaret (b.1730), Helen (b.1732), Andrew (b.1735) and Patrick (b.1738). The witnesses in 1738 were James Dryden and William Anderson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Scott in 1745 and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); Helen, Isabel and Margaret (b.1765); and Isabel (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Harden in 1787. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Smith and their children included: Thomas (b.1779) and John (b.1781), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1787) and James (b.1791), baptised in Robertson. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Craggs in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Craggs in 1797. William (b.1796/7) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Ormiston in the 1860s, having previously lived in Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farmer of 210 acres at Ormiston and employing 7 people. His wife was Marion and their children included John, Janet, Violet, Christina and Marion (sometimes written ‘Grey’).

Gray Coat (grā-kō) n. hill south of Dodburn Filters and to the east of Priesthaugh. It contains the remains of several different homesteads and earthworks and its southern slopes are crossed by the Cattrail. To the north-east of the summit is an ancient cairn, about 6 m in diameter, but surrounded by 3 grass-covered banks; it is said to resemble the Round of Tivla (in the Shetlands), and probably a Bronze Age burial mound. The homestead is on the northern slopes, measuring 47 m by 37 m, perhaps defined by a twin palisade and with a house about 50 m diameter house inside. There are signs of cord rig on the northern and southern sides of the summit, as well as the souther-eastern slopes. Close to the summit are the remains of a settlement surrounded by a wall about 105 m by 60 m, with entrances in the south-west and north-east. The interior contains evidence of at least 8 houses. On the south-eastern side, beside the grassy track, are the remains of a small pele-house, possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig. The pele-house was 8 m by 4 m, with some rybats discovered in an excavation. To the south-east and north-west of these ruins are the foundations of 2 other buildings.

Gray Hill (grā-hil) n. hill above Old North-house, reaching a height of 317 m and with a triangulation pillar on top. There are 2 ancient settlements on its slopes, as well as a portion of the Catrail on the other side of the road. On the far eastern slopes there is an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

graylin (grā-lin) n. grayling, Thymallus thymalus, a fish with a small mouth and large dorsal fin, introduced locally from the south of England to a pond at Monteviot in the 1850s, and accidentally released after a flood.

greap (greep) v., poet. to grope – ‘But gin they saw him when they trow he’s sleepin’, They’d fin’ him fou, an’, for ye ken what, greapin’ [JoHa] (cf. grape).

the Great Bell (thu-grā-bel) n. term used to refer to the new bell of St. Mary’s, recast in 1694 after ‘it was rent, anno 1693, and was of new founded’. A subscription was taken around the Parish, and an Act of the Bailies and Council was passed stipulating that only the families of those who had contributed (at least 12 shillings) were entitled to use the bell to announce burials, with the same restriction applying to the hand or ‘Deed’ bell. These ‘Havers of the Bell’ still had to pay a small fee for its use, however. The list contains 180 names, including some identifying information (occupations, nicknames, etc.), and hence is an invaluable record of Hawick’s wealthier citizens at the end of the 17th century. In 1718 the Bailie Depute contributed ‘as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell’, meaning it got a new ‘axle-tree’ to swing on. In 1723 it was ordained that anyone who contributed to the rebuilding of the bellhouse should have the same rights as those listed in 1694. The bell was taken down (and presumably replaced again) in 1747 when work was done on the steeple. Repairs to the old bell contributed to the Town’s debts mentioned in 1612. The bell was replaced by a new one in 1763, when the Kirk was rebuilt. The new bell weighed 360 pounds and the exchange was arranged through ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull in London.

the Great Flid (thu-grā′-flid) n. popular name for the flood of the Slitrig in 1767, also known as ‘Hawick Flood’. This occurred on 5th August 1767, beginning about 4 p.m., and lasting until after 6 p.m. There was no great rainfall in Hawick and the flood only affected the Slitrig, with the Teviot above Hawick being easily fordable that day. The Slitrig rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, as many as 15 houses were swept away, along with the Corn Mill, the garden wall of the Manse and the Parish school room. The smaller arch (at the east end) and part of the northern parapet of the Auld Brig were also swept away, and from there 2 men, trapped by the rushing waters, were carried off and drowned. Mrs. Aitkin narrowly escaped by crawling over a ladder laid between upper windows across the waters rushing down Silver Street, before the house was carried away. Four people trying to save belongings from Eckron’s house were swept down to the Sandbed and rescued there. Two other men were rescued after climbing on top of the kiln. A servant girl waded into her master’s house to rescue the £300 in gold that he had there, only to be carried away, and she narrowly escaped drowning, being cast onto a green downriver, still clutching the bag of money. It is also said that the flood carried off most of the records of the Town’s incorporated trades. The waters poured up the Backdamgate and filled the closes along both sides of the High Street as far as the Cross Wynd. Part of the Tower was undermined and in danger of falling. The flood was probably exacerbated by the arches of the Auld Brig becoming blocked with debris. There is a tradition that it started when a shepherd threw a stone into a loch at Winburgh Hill, disturbing the fairy folk! It is also stated to have been started by ‘the fall of a Water-spout’ (whatever that means!). The Hawick minister, Rev. Laurie gathered some parishioners together in the kirkyard to pray during the flood, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters; although apparently the flood had already much receded by then. Another incident later recounted is that a baby was carried off in its cradle, but rescued without injury; similarly, it is said that a bedstead was carried off with a cat on it, which landed safely on a sandbank in the Common Haugh. It is also said that a Hawick shoemaker, who was several miles further down the Teviot and, unaware of the flood, noticed a board on the river bank, and discovered it was its own shop sign and that James Aitkin, returning from Kelso, noticed some of his own merchandise washed up on the haugh at Menslaws. There are several accounts of the events in Hawick that day, the most detailed being by Town Clerk John Gledstains. The loss of property was estimated to be £4000 (see also fids).

Greathill (grā'-hil) n. former name for a farm in Jedforest. It was described as 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In the rental roll of 1541 the tenant was Archibald Oliver, paying 25s (it is `Greithill’ in 1538 and ‘Greithil’ in 1541).

Greatlaws (grā'-laws) n. place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, south of Clerklands and close to a hill-top. The tenants there in 1562 were Walter Veitch, John Henderson, John Kedie and William Thorbrand. William Riddell was there in 1595/6. It was part of the lands whose superiority was inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father in 1636. ‘Bessie Stoddart, a wife of Greatlaws’ was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £104. It passed from Riddells of Greatlaws to ministers of the name Duncanson through marriage. Andrew Duncanson paid £104 for the land tax there in 1663 and 1678. It was probably among lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitlsade) in 1670. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. In 1788 it was owned by Sir John Riddell. William Laidlaw was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Sir John Buchanan Riddell in 1813 and valued at £287. Hedger Peter Stoddart and his family were there in 1851 and 1861 (it is ‘Grett Law’ in 1562, ‘Greitlaw’ in 1595/6, ‘Gratlawes’ in 1630, ‘Greitlawes’ in 1636 and 1669 and ‘Greatlawes’ in 1670; it is marked ‘Greeklawes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but with the modern spelling on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Great Legs (grā'-legz) n. nickname of Adam Laidlaw and also Robert Elliot.

Greatmoor (grā'-moor) n. hill about 10 miles south of Hawick, between the Maidens and Caudercleuch and reaching 599 m (1,964 ft). It is marked on the Ordnance Survey maps as ‘Greatmoor Hill’. The summit contains a large man-made cairn as well as a triangulation pillar – ‘Was there never a maid on Ettrick side Who waved to her love on his last long ride? Came never a steed over Greatmoor moss With the corpse of his rider bound across?’ [WHO], ‘...Then Greatmoor and Windburgh against a purple sky’ [WHO], ‘Penchrise and Gritmuir, Ruberslaw, dark wi waist-high heather, And the slant, green, edge o’ the Cairter Bar’ [DH]. Also the name of another hill just west of Skelhill Pen, reaching a height of 481 m (formerly written ‘Gritmuir’; it is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Gritt moore’, a little further south of its real location and is ‘Greatmoor Hill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Great Riot (thu-grā'-rI-i’) n. popular name for a public disturbance at the Boswells Fair of 1849. A young shepherd was killed by a railway navvy, and the suspect escaped from the police. The dragoons were called in, finding someone (probably innocent) to hang for the murder.

great teind (grā'-tīnd) n., arch. the tithe due from grain – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scor 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 libs of vicarage’ [PR1627].

the Great War (thu-grā'-wawr) n. The First World War, WWI, in which there were almost 1,000,000 dead on the Allied side, with over 3,000,000 casualties. Around 1,000 local men lost their lives between 1914 and 1918, i.e. about one for each day of the war. The K.O.S.B. were involved in the Gallipoli campaign of 1915, and there were more than 120 men of Hawick and district died (over half on a single day). For Hawick it was a time when the Stobs army camp was a significant part of local life. Soldiers were billeted in Hawick, and trained in several open spaces around the town. Women were employed on knitting frames, a job previously reserved for men, and many tweed manufacturers turned to filling military orders. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1914–18, with the Council resolving to do nothing while the war continued. However, J.E.D. Murray rode the marches on his own, and the Common Riding of 1919 was a special occasion. In 1918 the Common Riding Weekend was used for Red Cross benefit events and the Vertish Hill Sports were held on the Saturday. 19th July 1919 was declared ‘Peace Day’ with bonfires lit around Britain. The Vertish Hill Sports were held on that day, with about 2,800 children each being given a bag of cakes. On 30th August that year there was a ‘Welcome Home’ parade in Hawick, starting at the Drill Hall and continuing to the Volunteer Park, where there was a fete and sports day. The Hawick War Memorial was erected in 1921 next to the Museum, and there are other memorials in many of the local villages. A book ‘Hawick and the Great War, A Pictorial Record’ was published in 1919 and a history, ‘All These Fine Fellows’, was written by Derek Robertson in 1999.

Great Warrington Sike (grē’ai-waw-ri’n-in-sik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then runs into Larriston Burn. There is a boundary bank and old enclosures near where it joins Storff Sike. Little Warrington Sike is to the north.

greazy spot (gree-zee-spot) adj. greasy – ‘A’m away ti a greazy spot’ (i.e. very hot and sweaty; note the pronunciation).
greazy-binnder (gree-zee-bin-dur) n. properly called a linker, a worker in the knitwear industry who joined up the fronts and backs (across the shoulders) and sleeves of garments before they were washed (note the pronunciation).

Greazy Lizzy’s (gree-zee-li-zeez) n. nickname sometimes used for the chip shop otherwise known as Telio’s.

gree (gree) n., poet. honour, prize, good will, rank, superiority, pre-eminence – ‘If, in a land that aye was free, And o’er a stream that bears the gree . . . ’[AD], ‘. . . gif I dinna gie the gree til Jerusalem abone my joye’[HSR], ‘. . . she bears the gree, the Queen o’ a’ the Border’[JT], ‘There are the Taits o’ Caberston, The Taits o’ Holylee, The ladies o’ the Juniper Bank, They carry a’ the gree’[DJG] (from Old French; see also bear the gree).

’gree (gree) v., arch. to agree – ‘Shame speed a’ your jesting, my lord, quo’ Dickie, Fala, &c. For nae sic jesting grees wi’ me’[CPM], ‘. . . Whilk dang puir Yeddie’s head agee, Till drank he tum-milt, An’, as oor sacred authors gree, Life’s gar- dian bummilt’[JoHa], ‘. . . my advice t’ye is take a bottle o’ yill an’ gree; and as a Bailie o’ this guid town and Brugh, ye’se hae my countenance and help’[RW], ‘Ye see ma faither and me canna gree about the fishin’ . . . ’[WNK] (also written ‘gree’; cf. grei).

Green (green) n. a grassy area attached to a house or group of houses – ‘take they claes oot ti the dryin green’.

green (green) v., arch., poet. to desire, yearn – ‘Nae company e’er green’d to skail, If John was by; Alas! that sic a man was frail, And born to die’[CPM], ‘Alas! that day I’ll ne’er forget, Was sure sae fear’d, and then sae fain; They came there, justice for to get, That ne’er will grein to come again’[CPM], ‘Young first-time communi-cants, A’ greenin’, grainin’, to be saunts’[JoHa] (there are spelling variants).

greenit (gree-nee, -ni) pp., poet. desired, lusted – ‘But greinet excessivlie in the wuldirniss, an’ tempet God in the desart’[HSR].

Green (green) n. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Buccleuch according to the 1794-97 Horse Tax Rolls.

the Green (thu-green) n. name used to refer to Myreslawgreen – ‘Aw was born at the ‘Green’ and she was brocht up at the Kirkstyle’[JEDM].

the Green (thu-green) n. former short form for the Green Kirk – ‘. . . the East-bank assemblage was inferior to that of the Green, both as regards the number of adherents and means at their disposal . . . ’[WNK].

Greena (green-uh) n. former fortified house in the lower Liddel valley, south of Greena Hill, southwest of Kershope. It is located on the west side of the Liddel Water, roughly opposite the remains of Stonehouse Tower. From the remains it probably measured about 10 m by 7 m, and there is also evidence for 2 adjacent buildings in an enclosure. The name was probably ‘Greenhaugh’ in earlier times. It is probably the lands owned by Richard ‘de Grenehou’ recorded in an English record of 1281/2. James in Greenhaugh is mentioned in 1510 and 1515/6. In 1541 the lands of Greenhaughshaw were valued at 30 shillings and tenanted by John Forester. ‘Will o Greena’ was a well-known resident, possibly an Armstrong, who was killed in a duel with Foster of Stanegarth-side, the site said to be marked with a stone. Will Foster of Greena is recorded in 1583 (and could be the same man). John Foster, son of ‘Meikle Rowe of Greenhawghe’ is recorded in 1583. A map dated 1590 shows a tower of ‘Lard o’ Jockes Greine’ near the confluence of the Tinnis Burn with the Liddel Water. There could have been two separate farms of Over Greena and Nether Greena. Robbie Armstrong and James ‘Dittone’ were there in 1623, as well as Abie Foster. It is probably the ‘Porterleyne Greina’ possessed by Archibald Douglas in 1632; he was some kind of servant of William, Earl of Angus, and his lands were inherited by his daughter Margaret in 1634. William, brother to the deceased James Foster in Greena is listed as a wanted thief in 1642. Also in 1642 John Douglas of Gervald was granted the lands of ‘Greina’ and others. Sir William Douglas of Cavers was owner in 1643 when the lands were valued at £420. ‘Harie forrester’ paid the land tax (on £420) there in 1678. The residents there in 1694 were James Steel, James Robison, John Oliver, 2 James Armstrongs, ‘Arck’ Armstrong, John Armstrong and John Hall. In 1707 the lands were owned by Forrester of Stanegarthside and by Oliver of Dinlabyre by the 1780s. The farm was valued at £420 in 1788 and in 1811, when owned by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Labourer George Turnbull and his family lived there in 1841. Robert Jardine of Liddelbank paid the land tax there in 1874, with his home being on part of the former lands there (it is ‘Grenehauche’ in 1515/6, ‘Grenehauchsaw’ in 1541, ‘Greinay’ and ‘Greanay’ in 1623, ‘grinach’ in 1678 and ‘Grinna’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Grene-hag’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land, while ‘N. Grina’ and ‘O. Grina’ are marked ‘N. Grina’ and ‘k-hil’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and it is ‘Grenea’ on Sto-bie’s 1770 map).

Greena Hill (green-u-hil) n. hill in the southern part of Castleside Parish, just west of Dinwoodie and the B6357. It reaches a height of 222 m and its summit has an 11 m diameter cairn, with a triangulation pillar on top. To the north-east is a quarry, as well as a disused lime kiln, and 2 further lime kilns by the Tinley Cleuch. To the south-west, by the Muir Burn, are the remains of a lime quarry, 2 lime kilns and another building. There are also several sheepfolds, as well as boundary banks and traces of rig lines all round the hill.

Greenbank (green-bawngk) n. another name for Greenbank Toll or the farmstead that was there before the tollhouse was built. John Ballantyne was living there in 1766, Walter Cavers in 1767–71, John Hume in 1773, Charles Wilson in 1779, Walter Stewart in 1780, George Turnbull in 1781, John Muir in 1785–88, John Thomson was living there in 1795 and Walter Murray and James Scott in 1798. Adam Nichol was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Goodfellow was there in 1800. George Paterson was farmer there in the 1840s and 1850s (also sometimes ‘Greenbanks’; it is on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Greenbankhaugh (green-bawngk-hawch) n. former name for a cottage to the south of the lower Borthwick road, next to the turn-off for the Snoot. Walter Scott and family were there in 1841, when it was ‘Greenbanks haugh’.

Greenbank Hill (green-bawngk-hil) n. hill to the north-west of Greenbank and east of Alemoor Loch. It reaches a height of 336 m and there are signs of cord rig on its slopes.

Greenbank Plantin (green-bawngk-plawn’-in) n. plantation just to the east of Greenbank Toll.

Greenbank Toll (green-bawngk-tol) n. former toll house at the sharp bend in the B711 about a mile west of Robertson. It was built in 1826 as an annex to the existing farmhouse when the new B711 was developed as a toll road. The small hatch for operating the tollbar can still be seen. A pond behind (to the north of) the house fed a former threshing mill and sawmill there. It is marked on the map as ‘Greenbank’ and was known locally as ‘Greenbanks’. The farm was once part of the Borthwickbrae estate. With a plantation about 300 m to the west is a circular mound, about 22 m in diameter, which may be a burial cairn.

Greenbraehead (green-brä-heedz) n. Greenbraeheads, a farm in the Slitrig valley just south of Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge, or via a track off the top of Wellogate Brae. Robert Shiel and John Cairns were tenants there in 1797. James, John and Robert Shiel were farmers there in 1841. While Greenbraehead (in older times Priestcrown) To meet Crowbyres send the signal down’ [WNK].

Green Burn (green-burn) n. stream to the west of Newcastleton, behind Kirk Hill. It runs south, joining Black Grain and flowing into the Tinnis Burn. The old farmstead of Greenburn lies along its banks, as well as grouse butts and old sheepfolds nearby. To the east are the remains of 2 huts.

the Green Cafe (thu-green-kaw-fee) n. cafe that stood at 80 High Street, at the bottom of Broughton Place, leading to the nickname for that street. It was established in 1838, and existed until around 1999. Latterly it has been painted red, and was for a while a confectioner’s shop.

the Green Cafe Brae (thu-green-kaw-fee-brä) n. popular name for Broughton Place, also known as ‘the Cafe Brae’.

the Green Cafe Brig (thu-green-kaw-fee-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge across the former railway at the top of Broughton Place.

He graduated from St. Andrews in 1840 and was ordained to Garelochhead in 1844. The following year he was translated to Roberton Parish, where he was minister until his death. In 1851 nd 1861 he was recorded at the Roberton Manse, living with his mother Christiana and sister Margaret, as well as 3 servants. He married Isabella, daughter of Horatius Blair of Glasgow, and she died in 1907. He wrote ‘Sermon on the Death of Allan Elliott Lockhart of Borthwickbrae’ (published in Hawick, 1878).

Greenholm (green-hoem) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Hermitage valley near Snaberlee, opposite Redheugh. South Greenholm is marked on today’s Ordnance Survey map, with North Greenholm gone. Aerial photography has shown rig lines and an enclosure to the northeast. It should not be confused with the lands of ‘Greena’ further to the south (where the Tinnis Burn meets the Liddel Water). It may be the ‘Grenhowe’ recorded in 1365 when Edward III bestowed protection on John Thirlwall and his tenants there and in Roughley, and also the ‘Grenew’, valued at 20 merks, in Liddesdale recorded in a rental list for Douglas of Morton in the 1370s. It was owned by Elliot of Redheugh in at least the late 15th and early 16th centuries. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. ‘Gulenflatt & Greeholme’ is listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Francis Elliot, Arthur Beattie and Archibald Armstrong recorded there. It was owned by William Mandonson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and valued (along with Leaugh) at £136 15s 8d. Walter Elliot was farmer there in 1840. William Dodd of Greenholm lived in Newcastle on the 1860s and John Routledge was farmer there in 1868 (marked ‘Greenhoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be ‘Greenholles’ in 1612, ‘grenehoolis’ in 1938. William Dodd of Greenholm lived in Newcastle on the 1860s and John Routledge was farmer there in 1868 (marked ‘Greenhoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be ‘Greenholles’ in 1612, ‘grenehoolis’ in the Green Kirk (thu-green-kirk) n. popular name for the Hawick secession church at Myreslawgreen, also known as the West End Meeting House. It was established by the Anti-Burgher congregation after they had feued a piece of ground in Myreslawgreen in 1765 or 1766. Its roots went back to 1741, from which time several secessionists from in and around Hawick had attended the congregation at Midlem, and the minister there preached every third Sunday at Hutleburn farm near Ettrickbridge. This continued until the Hawick congregation was established in 1763, led by James Scott, farmer at Boonraw. The manse was not built until 1768. The church later became the West United Secession Church, after the breach in the Associate Synod had been healed, and was also described as the United Presbyterian Chapel. The first building of 1763 was replaced in 1823 (and a stone plaque bearing that date still survives). It was plain and unassuming and ceased to be used as a church in the 1870s, becoming a Masonic Hall until about 1923. It was also used for dances in the 1930s and the War years, when it was affectionately known as ‘the Rabble’. Afterwards it became a saleroom run by Bert Leishman and was finally demolished in 1969 and is now the site of Myreslaw Court. The congregation meanwhile moved to Orrock Church, which was built 1872/4 (probably on ‘particrate’ lands once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver). The Museum has 2 old collection laddies from the church and a communion token exists from 1768, as well as a communion cup and flagon inscribed ‘United Associate Church, Hawick, 1769’. A roll of the ministry is: Dr. John Young 1767–1806; Andrew Rodgie 1807–60; James Parlane 1857–69; Thomas Cockburn 1869– (the name derives from Myreslawgreen rather than being any reference to colour).

Greenknowe Toor (green-now-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th tower just west of Gordon, between Earlston and Greenlaw. The area was originally home of the Gordons, with the L-shaped tower built in 1581 by the Setons and later sold to the Pringles. It has a famous clock-wise spiral staircase to give advantage to defenders.

Greenland Hill (green-lind-hil) n. site of a suicidal advance during the Battle of Arras in May 1917. 6th Battalion K.O.S.B. managed to advance, but were cut off. Few made it back alive

Green Lane (green-lā)n. street behind the old Parish Church location, above Buccleuch Street, named after the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace) which it leads off.

Greenlaw (green-law) n. town on the Blackadder Water, built in the 17th century and functioning as the county town of Berwickshire for 207 years until 1903. The Market Cross and Kirk are the oldest structures, with Hume Castle nearby. The last public hanging in Scotland took place here in 1834. The town contains the restored New Palace Theatre, home of the National Institute for Theatre Organ Studies, and the old Town Hall, built in a Greek Revivalist style in 1829. A polished jade axe-head found near here in about 1840 is a rare example of this type of neolithic artefact in Scotland. ‘An Old Berwickshire Town: History of the Town and Parish of Greenlaw, From the Earliest Times to the Present Day’ (1905) was written by Robert Gibson. Population (1991) 589 (the origin of the name is simply ‘green mound’).

Greenlaw (green-law) n. John (14th/15th C.) attendant of James Glesdstone of Cocklaw (Ormston) who is said to have defied the Percys when they besieged the tower in 1403. He declared that he would give up the tower if not relieved by 1st August. But before then, the English army had already moved south towards Shrewsbury. He is depicted as the owner of the castle in Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’. John (16th C.) presented to Wilton Kirk in 1549, following the death of Peter Langlands (also written ‘Grenelaw’, ‘Grenelaw’, etc.).

Green Law (green-law) n. hill in the southern part of Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 368 m. It is north of the much higher Carlin Tooth, and now lies within Wauchope Forest. The ridge to the north-east is called Tamshiel Rig, and has the remains of an Iron Age fort. To the north-west, near what was called Coblaw Plantation are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an enclosure and foundations of 2 buildings. The site has been mutilated by forestry activity. To the west of this settlement was an old cairn, about 10 m across, now destroyed by a forestry road.

green meat (green-me’i)n., arch. vegetables in general, green ones in particular – ‘...in Scotland the tyranny of the kail-pot has so firm a hold on the national stomach, that our countrymen can scarcely understand any ‘green meat’ which will not submit to the all-receiving domestic crucible’ [JAHM].

Greenriver (gree-ri-vur) n. house and lands just west of Bonchester, formerly called Hobsburn and recently reverted to the original name. The 3-storey T-plan house was built about 1770, probably incorporating an older house of the early 1600s. The house was the main mansion of the Stonedge estate in the 18th century. It was renamed by James Chisholme after his Jamaican plantation in about 1793. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 3 horses. The Elliot family lived there in the 19th century. Robert Kerr Elliot is said to have left in a hurry in 1835 (when his father died) after being told by a builder that the house was unsafe; it still stands to this day. After that it was let out as rooms, and tenanted by Henry Elliot in the mid-1800s. The farm was tenanted by James Armstrong around 1900 (it is ‘Green River’ in 1797).

Greens (greenz) n. farm just south of Newcastleton and north of Mangerton, on the same side of the Liddel. It is probably the ‘Grenys’ listed as a 3-shilling land in c.1376 rentals around Mangerton among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 it was valued at 10 shillings, with tenant Thomas Armstrong, ‘the Bul’. ‘Abie’ Armstrong from there was hung for murdering a blind man on Ancrum Bridge in 1623. Andrew Crozier ‘Jeans Andro’ was also there in 1623. It was possessed by Jock and Ninian Armstrong in 1632. In 1667 Walter Lorraine was tenant there, and also Walter Lorraine (possibly son of the previous Walter) in 1682. Hugh Beattie was tenant in 1682. In 1694 William Armstrong was tenant, with Simon Armstrong also listed there. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 164 acres, bounded by a common to the east, Tweeden Burn to the south, the Liddel Water to the west and the lands of the Laird of Whitaugh to the north. The farm also had 22 acres of land on the other side of the Liddel. It is probably the ‘Grenys’ farm just south of Newcastleton and north of Mangerton, on the same side of the Liddel. the Greens

Greenshields (green-sheeldz) n. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Henry, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included Christian (b.1703). Steven (17th/18th C.) quarter-master of the weavers in Hawick in 1693. In that year John Hardie was fined for pushing him out of his seat in the balcony of St. Mary’s Kirk, as well as pulling at his bonnet. Along with James (who was surely a relative) he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1685 for John Scott and Jane Bell. He also witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in Hawick in 1687. He is probably the Steven recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including James, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He was listed as a weaver among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell rolls in 1693/4. In 1694 he was ‘Steivan Greinsheils’ among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He is probably the Steven, son of Thomas and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1647. He is probably the Steven, married to Bessie Bridges, whose son Thomas was born in 1683, and perhaps also the Steven, married to a Rule, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1687. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Smith and their children included: William (b.1640). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their children included Robert (b.1643); Steven (b.1647); and George (b.1651). Walter was one of the witnesses in 1647, and surely related. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the son of Steven who was born in 1683. He is recorded as ‘Greenshells’ in 1714 when he (with John Swan as cautioner) pleaded with the Session to allow his weak child to be baptised, although he and his wife were ‘under scandal’. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms for weaver James Scott and (with weaver James Scott) for weaver John Stevenson. He married Janet Scott and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Robert (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were shoemakers John Scott and William Riddell. Perhaps the same weaver Thomas also married Bessie Telfer (from Hobkirk Parish) in Hawick in 1724. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Elliot and their children included Isobel (b.1646); and Robert (b.1649). William (b.1652) may also have been his son. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: John (b.1653); Bessie (b.1655); and Janet (b.1657). Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in America. Robert (17th C.) resident in Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written as ‘Greensields’ and he is listed ‘with an kilne’, suggesting he was an artisan of some sort. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for weaver Walter in Brauxholme Town and in 1705 for weaver Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Henry and whose child Christian was baptised in 1703. Robert (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1702 he married Margaret Henry, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included Christian (b.1703).

Greenwud, Watt & Co.

(b.c.1844) manufacturer who resided at Howlands. He was Acting Father in 1891. He married Euphemia Cranston. Their eldest daughter Mary married Dr. George Bannerman. Another daughter, Jessie, married William Oliver of Thornwood. Robert (1811–86) born in England, probably son of Luke and Betty of Rochdale. He was a textile designer and manufacturer in Hawick, partner in Greenwood, Watt & Co., with factory at Howland Mills. He came to Hawick in about 1833 (perhaps after making the acquaintance of John Wilson, who went to the Rochdale area to learn the trade of flannel weaving), later setting up his own business at Weensland Mill. He was said to be one of the first people to introduce power-looms to the mills of Hawick. He was also the first to use looms with ‘rising boxes’ (it is said that he solved one of the mechanical difficulties through the inspiration of a dream). In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded on the census as a woollen power-loom weaver, living at Weensland Mill Houses. He married Mary McBurnie, who was born in Cavers Parish. They had 9 children, including: Ann; Janet, who was mother of composer Francis George Scott; Elizabeth; Mary, who married Andrew Hall; Luke, tweed manufacturer; Grace; Jane Maria, mother of painter William Johnstone; Isabella (b.1855); and Robert Thomas (b.1858), draper. Robert (19th/20th C.) commission agent in Hawick. He lived at Roach Villa. He married a Furness (whose brother Robert Furness married Margaret, daughter of George Scott, mill furnisher).

Greenwud, Watt & Co. (green-wud, waw'-in-kō) n. Messrs. Greenwood, Watt & Co., tweed manufacturers. This partnership built Teviotdale Mills (Commercial Road) in 1877 and extended to build Howlands Mill on Victoria Road in the early 1880s. They moved out of Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and suffered during the manufacturing decline in the 1910s, eventually selling Howlands Mill to Sime, Williamson & Co. and hence there is later confusion about whether Beaconsfield Terrace or Morrison Place is the ‘Green Wynd’ – ‘There’s just ae road to Heaven, and that’s up the Green Wynd’ [JD].

Greenwynd Fit (green-wind-fi’) n. former name for the bottom of the Green Wynd, corresponding roughly to the modern Buccleuch Place. The name is used on the 1841 census.
