Kirkurd, who died just a few months before him, but whose son Walter succeeded; Walter; David of Stobícote; John; Grizel, who married William, 7th Lord Borthwick, and later John Cairncross of Colmslie; Dorothy; Janet, who married John Cranston of Cranston, and later Robert Scott of Haining; Margaret, who probably married Robert Scott of Thirlestane; and Christian. One of his illegitimate sons was Sir Walter of Goldielands. Another daughter may have been Jean, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh and later Gavin Elliot of Stobs. In 1519/20 he entered into a marriage contract to marry his daughter Janet, (or failing her, another daughter, Christian, or any other woman he named!) to John, son of James Gledstains of Cocklaw; however, it is unclear who married Gledstains in the end. The contract also stated that if Cocklaw was inherited in the female line, then the heir should marry his son John. In 1551 he was appointed ‘tutor-dative’ to his nephew and heir Walter, son of David. But he was succeeded by his grandson, Sir Walter (so there is some confusion here). His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Bartholomew Carmichael of that Ilk; she died before 1530, after giving him his eldest 2 sons. In 1530/1 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, sister of one of his bitter enemies, and widow of George Turnbull of Bedrule. This marriage ended soon after in divorce, with no children. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to received a sum of money. His third wife was Janet, daughter of John Betoun (or Beaton) of Creich; she was the model for the ‘Ladye’ of the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ and survived her husband by 16 years. Her sister also married Sir Walter’s son Sir William (‘Whitecloak’) – ‘Bards long shall tell How Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the Lord Walter fell!’ [SWS]. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Branksome fell [SWS]. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1541/2 as the ‘well known man Walter Scot provost of Selkirk’. He is probably the same as one of the other local Walters. Walter (16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Hanyng’ in the 1526 pardon that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is there listed between William and George, tenants of Phaup, who may have been related. He was ‘in Haining’ when he witnessed documents in Selkirk in 1528 and 1529/30. He is also listed as ‘in Haining’ when part of an inquest in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the younger son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden, and who acted as ‘tutor’ to his nephew Thomas in the 1530s. In 1531 he was ‘tutor of Haining’ when his cousin John of Myres gave him his lands in Lilliesleaf. This was further confirmed in 1531/2, with Robert Turnbull (also tutor of Howden) as one of the witnesses. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Bransholme. He was ‘tutor of Haynyng’ in 1534 when his lands were described as lying to the east of Howden. Also in 1534 he promised to bind himself to Thomas Graham and John Brown. In 1535 he witnessed a couple of documents in Selkirk. When Thomas succeeded to the Haining in 1538, he requested payment of a fee as tutor. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539 and was also on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. Perhaps the same Walter in Haining occupied the Crown lands of Haining and Hyndhope in 1541. In 1542 he (along with Walter in Headshaw) is mentioned giving advice to Robert regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Roberton (16th C.) son of John of Roberton, who was mentioned several times in the 1520s. He is recorded in 1535 in a charter executed at Selkirk in which he sold Roberton and Howcleuch to his ‘brother-german’ Stephen ‘in Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) and Stephen’s son John. Also in 1535 in Selkirk he asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his part in the killing of his brother John Hunter; the circumstances of this killing are not given. In 1536 he was ‘son and heir of the deceased John Scot of Roberton’ when he received money from Michael Scott of Aikwood for the lands of ‘Hirdmenstoun’ (presumably Hermiton in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was not able to write and so signed ‘with my own hand at the pen’. He probably had no children of his own. Walter (16th C.) 2nd son of George of Borthaugh, by his 2nd wife, and younger brother of John (who had a different mother). There was a dispute in 1528 over the succession to the estates of Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdale’ (probably the place now called ‘St. Michael’s Walls’, in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father swore on his deathbed that he never had dispensation to marry his 1st wife, who was his cousin. The panel ruled in favour of his brother John, but gave him the ‘40s land of the Quhomnis, and 40s land of Wolton Greyne’, along with a 10-shilling land in ‘sum uthir peciable and profittable place’. These were probably ‘Whames’ and somewhere around ‘Wilton-burn’ perhaps. Walter (16th C.) son of John, Burgess of Selirk. In 1532/3 he was given sasine of half of his father’s land, which was one quarter of East Haining, with his mother Margaret Scott to be reserved a redemption. He may be the same Walter who held lands in East Haining in 1543.
Walter (16th C.) baker in Edinburgh. In 1541 he was tenant in ‘Kirksteid of Farmynhope’ in the Yarrow valley. This was adjacent to Dryhope. He was probably related to other local Scotts. Walter ‘Wat’ of Synton and Stiches (d.c.1561) eldest son of Robert of Stiches and Synton. His brothers were William and probably David. He was known as ‘Watty Fire-the-Braes’. He is referred to as the 9th Laird of Synton, but there appears to be much confusion with his grandfather, Walter. There is also confusion over precisely who was the first Scott of Harden, but it may have been this Walter (or his father Robert, or brother William). He is probably the ‘Walteri Scott de Styrkschaw’ whose brother William was a witness to the 1507/8 document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scotts of Whitchesters. He may be the Walter of Synton who was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor in 1509. He is probably the Walter, son of the deceased Robert, who is recorded owning a 5 merk land in Synton in 1510 (in an indenture for neighbouring lands between the Erskines and Kerrs). He transferred the lands of Harden to his brother William, according to a sasine of 1512, as confirmed in a charter of 1535 (except apparently for one acre of land at the eastern side). In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme.
In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a mar-rriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and the Gledstains. He was probably the Walter of Synton who appeared before the Lords at Edinburgh in 1524/5 to swear an oath to keep the peace in support of the Earl of Angus, who was Warden, and the Walter ‘of Synton’ who was listed on the pardon of 1526 for a large numer of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran. Additionally he was named in the letter of treason, nominally written by King James V, for his role in the Skirmish at Melrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. However, in 1526/7 he was among the local lairds given remision for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e.
Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. And there was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. Also in 1527 he witnessed the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. He was part of the arbitration panel to decide on the dispute succession of the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He was also probably the ‘Walter Scot in Sintone’ recorded in a discharge of ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9 between the Earl of Bothwell and several local Scotts; there he was holder of the lands of Boonraw and Outersiderig, as well as Alemoor. He was mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to attempt to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs, and also mentioned in 1535 in the valuation for lands of the Archbishop of St. Andrews. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvd’ and in 1530 witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. In 1531 he, along with his brother-in-law Adam and Walter Veitch were involved in a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he acted as an arbitrator for Isabel Murray in a dispute with her son Walter in Headshaw. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. He may be the Walter ‘in Sintoun’ who in 1537 was warned to remove himself and his servants from some lands belonging to Andrew Ker of Greenhead; his procurator was Thomas and another Walter was among the witnesses. He also witnessed the installation of Simon Scott as Rector of Rankilburn. He was witness to a charter of 1540 in which Simon Scott of Fenwick resigned lands of Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden. He may be the Walter ‘in Syntoun’ recorded in 1541 as tenant of half of the lands of Huntlee, as well as Whitehaugh Brae, Langhope and Dodbank (in Ettrick). In 1544 he witnessed a transaction for Sir Walter of Braux-holme and Marion Pringle. In 1547/8 he was one of the supporters of Sir Walter of Branxholme when they had a bond, along with the Kerrs, who had sided with the English at Pinkie and burned Hawick, etc. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep good order and deliver up criminals. Also in 1550 he was one of the 2 curators for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step-son of Sir Walter of Brauxholme). In 1551 he was surety for Robert Ormiston of New Hall (later of Old Melrose) and Robert’s nephew James Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1553/4 he was listed (transcribed ‘of Lyntoun’) among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1561 he was (along with Thomas of Haining and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance; his son Robert appeared in his place and promised to produce ‘Hob Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick. He married Marjorie, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland, and secondly married a Riddell (perhaps Margaret, daughter of James of that Ilk). In some early histories it is claimed that he (or his son perhaps) married a Riddell who was his father’s second wife’s younger sister. It was probably his son John who was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. His eldest son John (by his first marriage) probably predeceased him. Robert, a son to his 2nd wife, was probably the progenitor of the Scots of Whitslade and Styrches, while a 3rd son, Thomas, was probably ancestor of the Whitslade branch. His son Walter (although this could be an error for his grandson) is recorded in 1561 when he entered Sandy Fletcher for crimes against an Englishman. Scott of Satchells also suggests other sons (William of Huntly and James of Satchells), but these seem unclear. His 8 daughters were said by Scott of Satchells to have married (in order): the Laird of Black Ormiston; Langlands of that Ilk (possibly James if this was the mid-1500s); the Laird of ‘Toftburn’ (although it is unclear where this is, perhaps a Turnbull of Tofts); the Laird of ‘Ailmour’ (presumably Alemoor, although it is unclear who this could be); the Laird of Falnash’ (presumably an Elliot); the Laird of ‘Chapel-Middelmiss’ (possibly William Middlemas of Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish); a daughter who is missed out; and the youngest who firstly married Philip Scott of Kirkhope (brother of Robert of Thirlestane), secondly Walter Scott of Woll (and not William, as stated in one source, although it is still unclear who this was) and thirdly Alexander Chisholme of Parkhill (who did in fact exist in the late 16th century). He may have been referred to as ‘Auld Synton’, and is supposed to have died at the age of 90. It is suggested that he gave up the lands of Synton (although not the designation) to his eldest son John, and then lived himself at Whitslade, which he inherited through his first wife. His 2nd wife died at Whitslade in 1585. Walter (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Assindene’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1537. This was in a (poorly preserved) document in the Selkirk Protocol Books in which he was a witness for a transaction involving Katherine Scott and her sister Janet. Adam was another witness and may have been related. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded as ‘in Hassendene’ in 1564 when his son James was one of the men tried (along with Eliots of Horsleyhill and others) for the murder of David of Hassendean. Walter (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Fausyd’ (i.e. Falside) in 1537, in a document also mentioning Alan Pringle, Margaret Pringle and messenger John Cob. Walter of Styrches (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scott of Styrckschaw’ in 1528/9 when he was a witness to a discharge of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, related to several local Scotts. Walter of Synton is mentioned there, showing that they were not the same man (which is confusing). Walter (15th/16th C.) successor to Philip of Whitehaugh (and Heap). He succeeded to Wester Heap in 1532. He married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Headshaw. His sons were: William, who died unmarried; and Walter, who sold the estate to his uncle Robert of Headshaw. Walter (d.bef. 1535) owner of 3 husbandlands in Denholm. His widow Janet Scott had sasine of these land in 1535, at that time occupied by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. The ‘bailies in that part’ were William Cranston and James ‘Spuin’. Walter ‘Wat’ (d.bef. 1550) recorded as being called ‘of teviddaile’ in 1550 when his son took sasine for the lands of Colifort in the Slitrig valley. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William ‘callit Wille of Todsschawhauch’ who was a resident of Whames at the same time. He was ‘in Todschaw haucht’ when his son Adam witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Walter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Waltero Scot in Hawick’. Walter of Dryhope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when, along with Sir Walter of Birkenside (and Howpasley), they were to enter into ward in Edinburgh a man from Laidhope. Perhaps the same Walter of Dryhope was in 1599 list among other Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots, but may be the same as a contemporary Walter. Sir Walter ‘Wat’ of Goldielands (1531/2–1596) natural son of ‘Wicked Wat’, to an unknown mother. It is said that his father built the tower at Goldielands for him, but if so this must have been shortly before his murder in 1552. He led the Scotts during the minority of the heir to Buccleuch (possibly for an extended period, since there was no heir of age for more than 30 of the subsequent years). He must thus have been powerful and important locally, so it is odd that so little is known about him. He is probably the ‘Walter Scot sone naturale of umquhile Walter Scot of Broxholme Knycht’ who is listed among Scotts who appeared before the Privy Council in 1562 to promise to end their feud with the Kers. He appeared personally as leader of the Scotts when they made a bond to keep the peace with the Kers of Cessford and others in 1564. He and James Gledstains of Cocklaw presented a number of Hawick residents at a court case in 1574, possibly related to a raid. Also in that year he was one of the witnesses to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme (being transcribed as ‘of Gorlandis’ and ‘Gordelandis’). Additionally in 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. He was probably the ‘Laird’s Wat’, who was present at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. Also in 1575 he had an assurance with Lord Borthwick. In 1577 he was referred to as the effective leader of the Scotts in a letter from Walter Ker of Cessford to the Regent Morton. In 1576 he was bailie for several Borderers accused of rieving and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (he was surety for several men). He was then found liable for the fines, which, if he failed to pay, would be taken from his goods or lands. In 1579 he was Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose Having been appointed by James Douglas, Earl of Morton, who was tutor to the young Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch) when he gave possession of the lands of ‘Elestoun’ (or ‘Ilistoun’) to Robert of Haining; in 1580 he was in dispute with this same Robert, who claimed that, as Provost of Selkirk, he had appointed Robert as Depute Provost. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580, the Earl of Morton (Walter of Branxholme’s legal guardian) made a promise on his behalf for the behaviour of ‘Branxholme’s men dwelling in Teviotdaill’. In 1580 he was the Bailie of Buccleuch who raised a party to follow those who had raided the Gladstains’ farm at Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded and captured along with about 40 others, when they were set upon by a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots on their return through Liddesdale. He had to arrange to pay Lancie Armstrong, Laird of Whithaugh, for their release. But he, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council, and the attackers were all denounced as rebels. Also in 1580 he is recorded serving as Provost of Selkirk (presumably in place of the young Sir Walter of Buccleuch) when Robert of Haining complained that he had reneged on appointing him as Depute Provost; in 1581 he was recorded as Provost when a man was imprisoned in Selkirk Tolbooth. In 1580/1 he was referred to as ‘baillie, and appointit to answer for the lands and tenantis of the Laird of Bukcleuch’. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Also in 1581 he was among a list of Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1581 he promised to the King to answer for the behaviour of the men dwelling on Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s lands and in particular was also directed in 1581 to find caution for Walter of Headshaw and associates, who had failed to appear. However, that same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with his cautioners being Robert and Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw, the amount being £2000. Later Paul Doig of Coldoch was his cautioner in case he should ‘brek the assurance’ for crimes committed by the Scotts on Dand Elliot of Braidslie by Robert of Headshaw and others. Additionally in 1581 he was allied with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them to the Privy Council by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whitewaugh; he was clearly acting as chief of the Scotts at that time. He was denounced as a rebel in 1583 for non-appearance, when he was recorded as ‘chamberlain of Atrik Forrest’. He was ‘Wat Scot of Goldelandis’ among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About the same time he led the signatories on a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in about 1588. He had a ‘Band of Association’ in 1589 with about 50 men of his clan; this proscribed any Scotts from taking land from each other, transgressions going before a panel of 5 of their number, a similar rule even applying of he himself encroached upon any of his kinsmen’s possessions. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. In about 1590 he was listed among a large number of landed men in the Borders and in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk and he himself acted as cautioner for Robert of Burnfoot, Walter of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1591/2 his sons Walter, David and William were listed among 200 Scotts and others accused of stealing 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedys’ lands of Drumelzier and Drevan; it was later declared that the men were not tenants of Walter of Buccleuch, but chiefly dependent on him, in the absence of the Laird of Buccleuch, and since he had already appeared before the Privy Council, the men were ordered to pay the Tweedys for what had been taken. Also in 1591/2 he acted as surety for William Elliot of Hartsgarth. In 1592 he was instructed (along with Gideon Murray) to demolish Harden and Dryhope, because of Walter of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. In 1594 he is described as ‘cosin and deputie’ to Sir Walter of Branxholme in an indenture that he had with his English counterpart, servant of Lord Scrope. His son was also Walter and was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie; however, some have suggested that this was him, but being about the age of 64 at the time it seems improbable. He died later in the same year that the rescue of Kinmont Willie took place. He was buried in the vaults at St. Mary’s, and his tombstone was removed in 1863 for preservation in the Museum; his tombstone is headed ‘Walter Scot his Genealogie’ and he is recorded as ‘Walter Scot of Goldiandis’, son of ‘Sir Walter Scot the valiant Laird of Bvcklech yet vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh’. A second stone, cut in high relief records ‘HIS QVALITIES’, namely ‘Heir lyis bvret visdome & virthines Heir lyis bvret trevth & honestie Heir lyis bvret fridome & genetres Heir lyis bvret manheid & cheritie Heir lyis bvret lairgenes & lavtie Heir lyis bvret hap and experience Heir lyis bvret pietie & diligence Glorie be to God for althinges’. Both stones were stencil after discovery by Sir James Murray. Another stone bears his arms, with the Buccleuch arms crossed by the bar of illegitimacy. The name of his wife is not known. He was succeeded by his son Walter and had other sons including David and William. He may also have had an illegitimate son, Charles of Crumhaugh, as well as a daughter who married Robert of Glack (but this may have been a later generation). A record of 1620 mentions Robert, ‘brother natural’ to Sir Walter of Goldielands (his son), showing that he had another son, Robert – ‘The laird Wat did well indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himself . . .’ [CPM]. Walter (d.c.1553) son of David and nephew of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, to whom he was heir (although this seems confusing). His uncle was appointed as his tutor in 1551, but died the following year. Assuming there isn’t simply an error, he must have died about the same time, since his cousin, also Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd, succeeded to the Buccleuch titles. Walter (d.bef. 1555) son of Michael of Aikwood. It is claimed in one genealogy that he was the eldest son, but his brother William was recorded as their father’s heir in 1541. In 1543 he was infested by his father in his half of Kershop (on Ettrick). He was recorded in 1555 when his brother Robert of Bowhill was served heir to his half steading called ‘Westyd de Kershop’ in Ettrick. Walter (16th C.) son and heir of Robert in Howford. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between him and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who was niece of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). His own ‘gudscir’ (either grandfather or perhaps uncle) was recorded being George in Blindhaugh. It appears that Marion Dalglish was his step-mother and hence the marriage contract was with his step-sister. In 1539 he was still not old enough to marry, and it is unclear if the marriage took place. Walter of Harden (d.c.1563) possibly son of William ‘Bolt-foot’, 1st Laird of Harden. However, it is unclear if there really is an extra Walter between ‘Bolt-foot’ and ‘Auld Wat o’ Harden’. If he existed, he only lived for a couple of years beyond his father. Satchells suggests that he married a Riddell, daughter of his step-mother. His sons were Walter, ‘Auld Wat o’ Harden’ and William ‘in the Mott’. Sir Walter (1548/9–74) 10th Laird of Buccleuch, succeeded his grandfather in 1553/4, his father Sir William of Kirkurd (‘Whitecloak’) having died first. His ‘retour’ of 1553/4 as heir to his deceased grandfather Sir Walter, mentions an impediment to his inheritance on account of the enmity of the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Peebleshire towards his kinsmen and friends. In 1545/5 it is recorded in a sasine that his tutor was Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is stated in one charter as achieving his majority in 1561. He signed a bond with the Kers in 1564/5, attempting to end the family feud (it contains the names of many of his supporters and retainers of the time, including Sir Walter of Goldielands, who appeared personally); it is promised the Scotts and Kers will ‘leif in perfite amit´ e, lufe, and Cris-tiane nychtburheid’, and marriages are arranged between his sister Janet and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as his father’s sister Janet with George, son of Andrew Kerr of Faldonside. However, another feud erupted with the Elliots in 1564, perhaps sparked by the murder of David of Hassindean. This led to raids into Elliot lands in Liddesdale and counter-raids on his lands in Teviotdale, including the burning of Hawick in 1565. In one such raid he and his men slew 7 Elliots and Croziers, while some of those from Liddesdale raided the Hawick area, killing one man and stealing cattle. In 1565/6 he was made Captain of Newark Castle. He was a devoted supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, raiding England with Kerr of Ferniehirst, expecting the Regent Moray to have been assassinated. In retaliation the Earl of Sussex and Lord Scrope blew up Branxholme and laid waste the lands around Hawick. In 1568/9 he signed another contract with the Kerrs relating to the murder of his grandfather; this time Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, James Kerr of Corbet, Walter Hogg and their kin agreed to come to the church of Melrose to apologise, and the grandson of Sir Andrew was to marry Elizabeth Murray, his sister. His armorial seal of 1568 is the first to show supporters, in this case 2 bucks. In 1569 he signed the bond for suppressing thieves on the Border and in that same year was served heir to his uncle David in Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. In early 1569 he apparently (according at a case before the Lords of Council 4 years later) despoiled some of what was left of Melrose Abbey, carrying away a great deal of the ‘stanis tymmer leid irne and glas of the said kirk’; he sold it to some burgesses of Selkirk, Dame Isobel Ker of Cessford and others, but claimed he was preserving the Abbey from the English army and promised to spend the same money to repair it. Also in 1569 he was obliged to enter someone in court in Dumfries. Additionally in 1569 he was found liable for the sureties for the Elliots of Falmash, Gorrenberry and Dodburn, who had not appeared, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay. He brought a ‘letter of inhibition’ against the teinds of the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean in 1570, suggesting some local dispute. Also in 1570 he signed a bond on behalf of his kin, friends, etc., for keeping the peace on the Border. He had Branxholme Castle rebuilt in 1571. He was a principal leader in the 1571 raid on Stirung to seize the Regent Lemoxy, where he was captured and was for a while imprisoned in Castle Doune. In 1573 he was re-appointed as Captain, Constable and Keeper of Newark Castle and as Bailie and Chamberlain of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. Also in 1573 he served as surety for some Borderers and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He was responsible for paying an English ‘bill’ of £3600 Scots after Ralph Ker broke ward in England. In 1574 he was witness to a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers relating to the lands of Denholm. At a very young age (in 1567/8) he was contracted to marry Margaret, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She continued the rebuilding of Branxholme after his death, later married Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and died in 1640. His children included: Sir Walter, who became 1st Lord of Buccleuch; Margaret, who was executor of his will (and was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this would appear to be confusion with her great aunt); and Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston. He was only 25 years old when he died. His ‘testament’ describes the numbers of sheep and cattle he owned on his various farms, as well as mentioning several Hawick residents, and is an invaluable record of details of local farming and business life 4 1/2.
centuries ago. Walter (16th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument of sasine in 1569 for the lands of Crook; he is ‘Walter Scot there’, meaning he resided near Crook. It is possible he is connected with the nearly contemporary Scotts in Orchard. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1593) son of Philip. He is probably the Walter, son of Philip of Headshaw who is listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Home in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he must have been quite young at the time. He is listed as being ‘in Edschaw’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 when he declared that John Riddell of that Ilk and William Scott of Harden were his arbiters in his dispute with Elizabeth (probably an error for Isabel) Murray. He is also described as ‘in Eteschaw’ in 1533 when he was part of a panel at a Jedburgh inquest for a dispute over the lands of Longnewton. In 1535 he complained that his dispute with his stepmother Isabel Murray had not been resolved 3 years earlier; this makes it clear that he was son of Philip of Headshaw (and Philip’s first wife). In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he is recorded being ‘in Edschaw’ and occupying the lands of Hartwoodburn. He also in 1541 assigned his brother Robert one quarter of Hartwoodburn. His ‘brother german’ Robert is recorded in a Selkirk document in 1541/2. In 1542 he is mentioned giving advice to Robert (probably his brother) regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. In 1542/3 his ‘sergeant’ William Donaldson had 2 of his horses appraised in Selkirk. He witnessed a transactions for Thomas in Haining in 1543/4. He is ‘of Edschaw’ among a group of Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen in 1550 to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1561. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is recorded as of ‘Edschaw’ in a panel of 1564 to hear the case involving Scotts and Elliots accused of killing David Scott of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he is probably the ‘Guidman of Edschaw’ who was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 Robert of Thirlstane was caution for him. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. His son William was warded in 1571 and was also recorded swearing allegiance to the Crown and Regent in 1572/3, with James Langlands of that Ilk as surety. In 1573 he served as surety for several Borderers. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. Also in 1579 he was named as an executor for the children of the deceased Robert of Palace. In 1580 he signed a bond with William of Whitehaugh, assigning to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called ‘the Pleucht Tylth’, along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton. Also in 1580 he witnessed an arrangement for certain payments to be made to the children of the deceased John of Headshaw. Additionally in 1580 his cautioners John Thomson and Richard Brown (both in Headshaw) made payment for him of £30 to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw for 10 bolls of oats. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stiches. Also in 1580/1 he sold a horse to Walter in Ashkirk, but the other Walter was unable to pay and so offered to enter him into a husbandland in Ashkirk. In 1581 he was accused of leading a group who attacked 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braidlie as they rode past Headshaw, cutting off the hand of one, and seriously injuring the other. He was among a long list of Scotts summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1581, but failed to do so the first time, with Walter of Goldielands then ordered to find caution for him. Also in 1581 he and Dickson of Ormiston acted as cautioners for the Irvings of Bonshaw (and could not write his name on the document); this was discharged in 1582. In 1583/4 he and his brother William were among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. His servants John Johnston and John Thomson are also listed in a citation in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He could be the Walter ‘of Ordschaw’ who was denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and James Langlands for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle.
He is probably the Walter who married a daughter of Sir William ‘Whitecloak’ of Kirkurd. He had 2 sons: Robert, his heir; and another, possibly Walter, who was father of Robert of East Groundistone. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Bellhauch’ when he was one of 32 men to sign the 1569 bond for suppression of Border thieves. His name occurs between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Scott of Tushielaw, so he was probably local. Walter (16th C.) Hawick resident described as ‘gled Wattie Scot’ in the will of Sir Walter of Bucleuch in 1574. He was owed £18 by Sir Walter’s estate and listed along with many merchants and others. Walter of Hassendean (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He probably served as factor or similar, along with several other men whose fees were exactly the same. He may be the same as the tenant in Hassendean recorded in 1564. He is listed as ‘alias Wattie of Hassindane’ in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement involving George, son to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. Walter of Synton (d.bef. 1589) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Walter as Laird of Synton. He was recorded (along with his brothers Robert, William and James) as the ‘young Laird of Syntoune’ in 1557 when he was involved in an attack by the Scots on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes. He could be the Walter, recorded as ‘sone to Wat Scot of Syntoun’ (even although he was grandson) in 1561. Either he or his grandfather was the Walter listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scots in 1562. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. There is some uncertainty in these generations. He married Christian Riddell of that Ilk, and died without an heir. However, it appears he was succeeded by his brother George (although Scott of Satchells suggests that George was his son, which seems unlikely). His heir George is recorded as ‘in Synton’ in 1570. Walter, son of Walter of ‘Suynstoun’ was witness to a sasine in Melrose in 1574. He may be the Walter, brother of George of Synton who in 1580 had a lease of the lands of Wollaugh from Isabella Turnbull widow of John of Blindhaugh. His grandson Walter was served heir to his lands of Whitlade in 1605. Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley (d.c.1580) eldest son of Robert of Howpasley. He witnessed a charter in 1549 in which his father granted his lands of Appletreehall to the Turnbuls, also witnessed by his brother Robert. He is recorded as younger of Howpasley in 1562/3. In 1569 he was on the panel for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he appeared in Hawick before the Warden and Sir Walter of Branxholme, serving as surety for 23 tenants in Outersiderig, that they would answer to the laws of the Lord Regent. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he served as surety in 1571, 1573 and 1576 and was warded in 1571. In 1574 he was on the returns for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. Also in 1574 there was a ‘reversion’ with him for the mill of Easter Burnfoot, with William of Harden and James of Whitlade. His father appears to have died before 1567, but he did not succeed to Howpasley until 1578/9 and also held the lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire. In 1580 he and William of Tushielaw appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. He was in turn succeeded by his son Walter in 1580, although Walter did not become infeft until 1588. Another son may have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Sir Walter ‘Watt’ of Tushielaw (d.c.1618) eldest son of William of Tushielaw. In 1563/4 he and his father were ordered to replace the sheep that they had stolen from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot. He signed the bond for suppressing the Border thieves in 1569 and was witness to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574. In 1573 he is referred to as being ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ (and son of William of Tushielaw) when he was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthnikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh, as well as Littles from Midgehope; it is unclear if he was related to the later Scotts of Hartwoodmyres. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578 he was ‘younger of Tushielaw’ when was pledge for ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he later swore to the Council that he had entered into ward ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. Also in 1578/9 there was a complaint by Patrick Murray of Falahill, that he and his accomplices had illegally taken over the lands of ‘Skaddoneis’ (perhaps ‘Scaddow Rig’). Additionally, tenants in Gattonside complained that he and his supporters (including his brother James and his son Walter, as well as James, William and Dand in Selkirk) attacked the farm at Gattonside, breaking barns and stealing corn; failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He was still recorded as being ‘in Hartwoodmyries’ at that time. In 1579/80 he was accused of being involved in an ‘intrigue’ with Grizel Scott, wife of William, Lord Borthwick (and daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme); this was also claimed to be ‘incest’, suggesting that he had married another daughter of Sir Walter. In 1581 he was still ‘younger, of Tushielaw’ among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riving crimes. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. Additionally in 1581 he was ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ when along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley) he supported William of Tushielaw (his father) and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; William in Hartwoodmyres is also listed. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1584 he was a cauteriser for a number of men (from around Heriot). He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He resigned his lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1588 (presumably to grant a new charter). He is mentioned in 1589 when his servant Robert Elliot ‘in Borthuikbra’ refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Also in 1589 he and his brother James signed a bond with other Scotts to settle differences amongst themselves. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 and also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 William Stewart of Traquair acted as surety for him and he himself was surety for Philip of Dryhope. He gained Gamescleuch in 1591. In 1592 he had a charter, ratified by Parliament, for the lands of Tushielaw, including Coom Law and Gamilsheugh, making it clear that other claims on the lands were to be disallowed. He is listed in 1594 among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands; his sons Robert, James and John are also listed. In 1599 he was surety for himself and his sons Robert, James and John to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Scott of Tushielaw listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1601 he is ‘the Goodman of Tushielaw’ listed among men of an assize to decide cases brought by the March Wardens. He and his son Robert signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. In 1603 he witnessed a ‘bond of manrent’ between Francis Armstrong of Kinmont and Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1603 he complained about a gang of Armstongs raiding his farms of ‘Dudhop’, ‘Medop’ (probably Midgehope), ‘Woulschop’, Tushielaw and Kirkbank on several occasions in 1586, stealing cattle, sheep, horses and goods. In 1607 he was ‘gudman of Tushielaw’ when he was witness for a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose; his son John was also witness. In 1607 he was also paid bolls of malt by the tenants of Lessuden. Additionally in 1607 he was the first named in a long list of men charged with trying to stop James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 there is a court case involving him and his eldest son Robert with Alexander, Earl of Home over an agreement involving the lands of Cacrabank in 1597; there it is clearly stated that his wife was Elizabeth Gledstains and also that neither father nor son could write. Also in 1609 he brought an action against Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants for resetting Walter of Headshaw and others; this was related to the feud with the Scotts of Thirlestane, which had resulted in the death of Walter of Gamescleuch (brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) at the sword of his son John. In 1610 Robert of Headshaw, and Walter, fiar of Whitslade (for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) had a bond for not harming him or his sons Robert and James. Additionally Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son John had a similar bond. Also in 1610 there was a complaint against his servant Martin Johnstone, claiming that he and another man raided the farm of Nether ‘Liverhay’. In 1611 he complained that Francis Armstrong of Kinmont was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst. In 1612 the Privy Council also asked him and Sir Robert of Thirlestane to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Borders, which his son Robert also signed. In 1614 his son John had remission from the King for the death of Walter of Gamescleuch, and had his ex-communnication lifted in 1615. However, in 1616 he ran off with Sir Robert Scott of...
Thirlstane’s daughter, Grizel, marrying her at Bellingham. The Presbytery records show that the couple were to appear to confess their sin, with the Laird of Thirlstane to be absent that day. It has been suggested that he was killed a few months later by a group of Scotts (including Simon of Bonnington), but this appears to be confusion with the murder of Walter, tenant in Essenside (a younger son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden). He is recorded as still alive in 1617 and is also mentioned in a charter of 1618 when his lawful son Robert received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John Lord Hay of Yester. He married Elizabeth, daughter of a Gledstains of Cocklaw. His son Robert was ‘of Tuscellaw’ in 1619, suggesting he was deceased by then. His son and heir William is recorded in a ‘letter of inhibition’ with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1619 (but this may be an error). It is probably the Walter of Tushielaw to whom the reversion of half of Glenkerry and Midgehope were resigned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1620 (although he may have been deceased by then). It is suggested in some accounts that he was succeeded by another Walter, however he was most likely succeeded by his eldest son Robert (unless 2 generations of Walters are compounded). His other sons were: James of Boyken and Glenrath; and John of Mackersway, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch. Both James and John took part in the rescue of Kinnmont Willie. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrig’ when he witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, unless he was Walter, son and heir of the Laird at that time, George of Todrig. Walter ‘Wat’ of Eldinhope (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1576 when he relieved a surety. He appears as ‘Watt Scott of Eldinhope’. It seems likely that he is one as one of the other contemporary Walters, probably related to the Scotts of Buccleuch (who held these lands). Walter of Ashkirk (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He may be the son of Walter in Ashkirk and Margaret Falside recorded in 1539 when he and his mother are recorded acknowledging receipt of interest on his deceased father’s lands in Ashkirk and Falside from their subtenants. In 1580 he paid John in Kirkhouses redemption money for the lands of ‘Ediehauch’, ‘Ediebray’, 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. He is probably the Walter in Ashkirk who in 1580/1 declared that he was unable to pay the £20 Scots for a horse from Walter of Headshaw and is he could not pay him soon, would enter him in a husbandland in Ashkirk, at that time occupied by Richard Brown. In 1580/1 he set to John in Aikwood the ‘knaifschip and bannock’ of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years; one of the witnesses was Walter Shortreed, recorded as his brother (perhaps his brother-in-law). In 1581 the husbandland he had wadset to John in Kirkhouses was resigned, and he instead assigned to John 2 pieces of land called Salenside Croft and ‘Skakriggis’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castle-side with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1581/2 he acknowledged that he had received payment from James, son of John in Kirkhouses, giving him tack of half a husbandland (previously occupied by Adam Hislop) in Ashkirk. In 1593/4 he and Alexander of Clerkland were cautioners for John Veitch, heir apparent of Dawyck, not to harm the Tweedies. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts of Ashkirk. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Palace in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement regarding payments to the children of John of Blindhaugh. In 1581 his wife Margaret Scott, widow of William of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of Shielwood and half of Burnfoot Mill to her son William. It is unclear whether he was related to the earlier Scotts of Palace. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’, ‘Syme Scot thair’ and ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed, all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Walter (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded as ‘sonne to wmaquhell Thomas Scot in Hawick, zonuer’ in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Braughholm and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. It seems that his father was Thomas, and probably also his grandfather. Walter (16th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Ashkirk and John in Kirkhouses. Walter of Howpasley (16th C.) probably son of Sir Walter of Birken-side and grandson of Robert of Howpasley. He succeeded his father in 1580, but was probably then a minor, since he did not become ‘infeft’ until 1588, when he also succeeded to the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall (which had been ‘in the King’s hands’ for more than 7 years). He was probably the Laird of ‘Howpaslot’ listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is probably the Laird listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Gledstains, Redheugh, Braidlie, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale; however, he may have still been a minor at that time. In 1590 his cautioner was Walter of Goldielands. He was probably Laird of ‘Howpaslott’ when the ‘Roll of the Clans’ was drawn up around 1590 and the ‘Goodman of Howpaslott’ listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He may have had a brother who was at the raid to rescue Kimmont Willie in 1596. He may have been father of William and/or the husband of ‘Lady Howpasley’ who was involved in the slaughter of sheep in 1616. He is recorded in 1591 as the possessor of the lands of ‘Gallowlaw’ in the Barony of Hassendean, charged by the Baron, James Cunningham, to produce charters for these lands. He was probably succeeded by William, who may have been the last of the direct line of Scotts of Howpasley. Walter (16th C.) son of Michael of Vogrie. In 1581 he had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in ‘Cartho’. He was to receive certain lands in Stow from Thomas Pringle in Stow (grandfather of his wife-to-be). John in Kirkhouses was a witness, and possibly related. Walter of Stiches (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. Walter of Chamberlain Newton, Walter of Harden and the Laird of Synton are all listed separately, showing that he was distinct from all of them; however, it is unclear what his relationship was with other nearly contemporary Lairds. He is probably also the Walter of Stirkshaws who along with William of Hartwoodmyres was under caution in 1592, with Gideon Murray as surety. It is possible he was Walter, younger of Synton (son of George). He may also be the Walter ‘of Styrrkshawes’ who witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining in 1579 (also witnessed by Walter of Harden and Walter of Headshaw). He may also be the Walter of ‘Styrk Schawis’ whose brother Robert witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. He may be the Walter ‘in Styrrkshawis’ who in 1580 received redemption money from his ‘gude brother’ David Fairlie for a tenement in Selkirk. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with George of Synton over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundistone, with his chosen judges being William of Whitehaugh and Walter of Todrig. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, and also a separate arrangement between the pair. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Walter of ‘Stirkshawes’ (transcribed in one version as ‘Sterchehewis’) who signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds in 1602. Walter of Catslack (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to the later Scotts of Catslack, but perhaps he was father of William. In 1592 his cautioner was Archibald Douglas of ‘Stamypeth’ that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Brauxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Adam was also listed. It is possible he is the same man as the later Walter of Catslack. Walter of Synton (d.1608) eldest son of George of Synton. He is probably the Laird of Synton who in 1599 was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. His brother George became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610. His brother John was involved in a saisine with Robert of Satchells in 1609. In 1603 he was on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to leave their lands by James Cunningham, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1605 he redeemed 500 merks on these lands of Outersiderig with William Elliot of Fahlash. He is ‘Waltir Scot called ‘Old Walter’ in Synetone’ in 1608 when he was listed as part of a group of Scotts and their followers who rescued 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1610 (apparently after his death) he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hoarings lifted and penalties reduced; he is there referred to as ‘Old Wattie’. George Langlands of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His son George was served heir to his lands of Outersiderig and Scott Boonraw in 1610. He married Isobel, daughter of Douglas of Whittinghame (probably William, 3rd of Whittinghame, or perhaps Sir Archibald his son). Their children were: George, who succeeded; Anne, said to have married Capt. Gledstains of Whittle (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, who probably died unmarried; Elspeth; and Christian. His daughters are mentioned in his last testament. It may have been his widow who was summoned by the Presbytery in 1615 ‘for abusing the minister, Mr. Alex. Hog, publicly, by words and countenance, on Sabbath, betwixt the sermons, in the audience of the congregation’. She was probably also the ‘gudewife of Sintoun’ who received communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks in 1615, rather than her own church at Ashkirk, resulting in rebuke for both ministers. It is unclear what the nature of this dispute was, but presumably a doctrinal difference with her minister (Alexander Hogg).

Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Bowden, who rented Northhouse. He is recorded in 1582 as witness to a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme; other witnesses include William, son of George in Northhouse and John Gledstains of Winningtonhall. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Deephope (16th/17th C.). Said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of Blindhaugh (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably related to the neighbouring Scotts, e.g. the Woll branch, who owned the lands of Blindhaugh later. He is probably the 2nd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull who in 1544 was designated as the successor to his father’s lands of Broadlee, a part of Blindhaugh. Walter (d.bef. 1612) tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 his nephew William complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh not paying him. Walter ‘Watt’ of Gamescleuch (d.1609) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thistlestone. He may have been the brother of Robert of Thistlestone recorded in 1581 when he was witness to a saisine for the lands of Thistlestone and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. He was probably also the brother of Robert of Thistlestone included in a list of those involved in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Drye Sands. He was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 he was probably the Walter, brother of Robert of Thistlestone listed among Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. In 1602 he was among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’. He is probably the Walter of Thistlestone who in 1603 was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He may be the Walter ‘of Thistlestone’ who was in the gang of Scotts that forcibly released 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Also in 1608 he was among the relatives and friends of Sir Robert of Thistlestone who were bound not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. He was slain by John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw, an incident that may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. They had a duel on a field to the west of Yarrow Kirk, known as ‘Deuchar-swyre’. It is said that he went there as a mediator in the arranged combat between his nephew Robert, and John, son of Walter of Tushielaw. There followed much legal process before the local Presbytery and the Privy Council. John Scott’s pardon by James VI is recorded in 1614. He married Marion (or Janet), daughter of Sir Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and had an only surviving son, Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thistlestone. Simon may have been another son and his daughters were: Marion, who married Rev. Robert Martin in 1617; and Margaret. Walter of Woll (d.c.1617) first noted in 1606, he is suggested (by Keith Scott) to have been descended from the Scotts of Haining. His brother John of Ashkirk was said to have been among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded in 1608 when his brother John, and several others, attacked and maltreated some residents of Selkirk. He is there recorded as ‘Waltir Scot of Well’ and his half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Haining) is also mentioned. In 1609 he was ‘in Woll’ when he had a charter for the lands of ‘Blindhauch , . . ., Braidley, Castleshye, Leiphill, Rynnes, Rycroft, Roundhauch, Sandiehauch and Langupmedow’ in the Barony of Ashkirk. He married twice. By his first wife he had: Robert, who succeeded; and Francis. He secondly married Catherine Ormiston, and their children were: George; and Katherine. In 1617 his eldest son Robert was appointed as tutor to his younger children George and Katherine (half-siblings of Robert), by which time he was deceased. Walter of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, he was recorded in 1592 and was also known as being ‘of North Bowhill’. Also in 1592 he was ‘Wattie Scott in Bolhill’ when he was signatory for a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiels. He had brothers Robert (of the Southside of) Bowhill, William (who was at the rescue of Kinmont Willie) and James. In 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother William was also listed. He was succeeded by his eldest son Robert in 1609. Walter of Huntly (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Huntly, who was said to have been in the raid that rescued Kinmont Willie. He was part of a gang of Scots (from Bowhill, Thirlestane, Synton, etc.) who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment in Selkirk in 1608. His brother William is also mentioned. He was also upon an inquest in 1612. However, in 1616 James of Huntly is recorded (perhaps his brother), suggesting he was deceased by then. He could be the Walter ‘elder of Huntlie’ listed in a court case before the Privy Council in 1627, when a band of Scots were accused of harassing the tenant of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1599 among Scots and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was then ‘of Edieslaw’. He is transcribed being ‘of Edieslaw’ in a 1603 document when a large number of Scots and some Turnbulls and Elliots were given a summons to remove themselves from land that was claimed by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn to be wrongfully possessed. He may have been the 2nd son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw (if so he could have been father of Robert of Easter Groundis- tone). In 1609 Robert of Headshaw and a number of other men were bound not to reset him and several others while they were ‘at the horn’ for not signing an assurance not to harm Walter of Tushielaw. And later the same men were fined for resetting him and the others. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Walter of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘pretended tenants’ who James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn (and Baron of Hassendean) tried to evict in 1603. He could be the ‘Wat Scot of Whithauch’ who signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the younger son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded to the estate on the death of his unmarried older brother, William. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scots, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scots in this dispute against the Scotts of Tosh- shawhaugh and Ormiston. He sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert of Headshaw. However, he was probably still called ‘Walter Scott of Quhytehauch’ in 1627 when there was a complaint against him to the Privy Council, that he and a band of other Scots (from Headshaw, Kirk- houses and Huntly) had forcibly removed the tenant from Hartwoodburn. He apparently claimed a right to these lands, and felt compelled to take matters into his own hands, taking the farmhouse ‘all in armes, with hagbuitis and pistolettis’, and threatening to debar anyone who tried to come there; it is unclear what happened as a result of the summons against him and his compatri- ots. Also in 1627 he gave caution to the Privy Council for John Geddes, Burgess of Dumfries. It is also hard to understand how he might fit in with the genealogy given by Scott of Satchells. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Borthaugh in 1569. He signed the bond to keep the peace on the Border. Walter ‘the Hawk’ of Whitslade (d.c.1610) son of Robert. He lived in the earlier part of his life at Stirches, like his father. He was probably the first to style himself ‘of Whitslade’. His nickname was said to be ‘on account of his sharpness and activity’. He had a charter in 1575, in which he was described as son and heir of Robert, who was 2nd son of Walter of Synton. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he was listed among the supporters of the Earl of Crawford who attacked Ruthven Castle; he was also listed in a complaint made by Margaret Erskine, Lady Ruthven against Crawford and his followers in 1583. He may have been the Walter of ‘Whitslaid’ who signed the Buccleuch Band in 1589. In 1590 he was ‘of Quhilsaid or Stirkshawis’ when listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Harden, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommuning with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He was listed among 200 Scots and associates who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2. It is said that his brother Robert went on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he (probably incorrectly transcribed as

lenden’ [SWS]. Walter of Northhouse (16th/17th C.). Scott of Satchells gives him first on the list of ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. He could be the Walter, brother of ‘Will’ of Northhouse who was involved in a raid on Stobs in 1608. Satchells says he was ‘the first gentleman descended from the family’, presumably meaning he was the first Scott of Northhouse. He could be the Walter ‘callit Nothis’ appointed in 1622 to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch in administering justice in the Middle Shires. Walter of Chapelhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be half-brother to the Laird of Chisholme; it is unclear who the Laird was at that time, but Walter Chisholme married Ann, daughter of William of Chapelhill in the latter part of the 16th century, so perhaps ‘half-brother’ means brother-in-law. He may be related to James in Chapelhill, who was listed among fugitives in 1618. Sir Walter of Goldielands (d.aft. 1627) son of the ‘Laird’s Wat’, he was probably the Walter of Goldielands who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 (although some have suggested this was his elderly father). He was listed in 1591/2 as a son of Walter of Goldielands who was part of a group of 200 Scotts and others who stole 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Dreva. He is ‘younger of Goldielandis’ in 1593 when he witnessed a mar-rriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as ‘Walter Scot sone to Wat of Gaudylandis’ in a 1594 list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1599 he may be the Laird of Goldielands listed among Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1600 2 lawyers complained that he had not paid the ‘feu maills’ on the lands of ‘Stow in Woddel’ (i.e. Stow of Wedale, the old name for Stow) that he occupied; in the following year they complained that Robert Turnbull, Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, ld not registered their complaint. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who was among the 15 Border lairds who were removed from their homes in 1608 for being ‘ringleaders suspected wither of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were sent to Cupar in Fife. In 1610 he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he signed a bond at Jedburgh for keeping peace on the Border, along with several other local men. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded as the ‘Guidman of Goudelandis’ who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1617 by 2 Englishmen, who had apparently been imprisoned for 18 weeks without trial; later the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained that he had failed to pay to keep the men in prison. Additionally in 1618 William Oliver ‘in Lanburne’ (possibly Langburnshielis) complained that he had directed some men to unlawfully apprehend him; the Privy Council said that he and his accomplices should be denounced as rebels. These generations are quite uncertain (Keith Scott disagreeing with Tancred, for example), with some details confused, e.g. he did not marry Jean Riddell, since that marriage was with his son, who was also Walter. It has also been suggested that he died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter, son of his uncle Charles; however, this seems like it refers to a later generation. He must be the Sir Walter of Goldielands referred to in a 1670 court case in which his son Walter demanded copies of earlier instruments of sasine relating to Goldielands (which existed in the former Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’); in 1620 he was infefted by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in the lands of Goldielands and Westcoterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to his son Walter, retaining the ‘liferent’ for himself. His ‘brother natural’ Robert is also mentioned in 1620. He is probably the Sir Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1627 as owner of ‘the Ladyland’ near Hawick (since his son Walter was not referred to as ‘Sir’). His wife’s name is unknown, and there are also no records of other children. However, it is possible that his wife was the ‘Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’ who was recorded on a document of 1666 describing the division of the burial space in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey among various Rutherfords.

Sir Walter ‘the Bold Buccleuch’ (1565/6–1611) 11th Laird and later 1st Lord of Buccleuch, only son of Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He succeeded his father in 1574, and although he was a minor, he had special dispensation from the Regent. There was a precept of sasine for him inheriting his father’s lands that were held by Melrose Abbey, including the Monk’s Tower in Hassendean, Ringwoodfield, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Northhouse and Thirlstane, as well as the office of Bailie of Melroseland. In 1574 he also was formally served as heir to the lands of his great-uncle David and his great-grandfather Sir Walter (these being legally necessary because of inheritance during the minority of previous generations). This included the Barony of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd, as well as Lanton, Whitchesters, Rankleburn, Lempitlaw, Eillrig, Whithope, Dryden, Commonside, Girnuwood, Borthaugh, Grahamslaw and lands within the Regality of Melrose. His ‘tutor’ was his great-uncle, James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was asked to make Walter of Goldielands responsible for the behaviour of ‘Branxholme’s men dwelling in Teviotdaill’ in 1581). He became one of the most powerful barons of his time, was noted for his bravery, and is often regarded as the last of the Border rievers. He was constantly involved in attempts by the crown to keep peace on the Border, and went in and out of favour, including brief exile in France. He is recorded (presumably his agents) bringing a ‘letter of inhibition’ against Cavers Kirk for non-payment of teinds in 1577 and in 1588 he was confirmed in the ‘tack’ of the teinds of Hassendean and Cavers Parishes. In 1582 he and his accomplices were accused by the men of Bewcastle of stealing 200 cows and 300 goats and sheep. In 1582/3 he received remission from King James VI for crimes for which he had been imprisoned in Blackness (but escaped). In 1585 he had a bond with Robert of Allanhaugh, resolving a feud, partly the result of him being involved (during his minority) in the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh. Also in 1585 he raised a force of Scots to join the Earls of Angus, Mar and Bothwell (his step-father) against the Earl of Arran and James VI at Stirling Castle. In 1586 he was involved in raids into England, along with Bothwell and Maxwell. Also in 1586 he is recorded as ‘baillie principal’ of the Regality of Melrose. Additionally there was an order from the Privy Council for him and William, Lord Hay of Yester to resolve their feud and stop invading each other’s lands. In 1587 the English Warden wrote that he led a band into Redesdale with 200 men (in daylight, with his pennant and a trumpeter belonging to the Earl of Bothwell), burning the woods and killing a man. In the same year he was briefly imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle for a raid against the English (perhaps the counter-attack following Sir Cuthbert Collingwood’s raid into Teviotdale); John Murray of Blackbarony and John Carmichael of that Ilk were his sureties once he was released. Additionally in 1587 Robert of Haining acted as his cautioner, that he would appear before the Privy Council ‘and underly sic ordour as salbe imputt for the weill and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and he and his supporters (except for the Scots of Ewesdale) submitted to arbitration to settle differences with James Twedy of Drumelzier and his followers. In 1588 he had a commission to protect Selkirkshire and was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Also in 1588 the English Warden complained that he and the Lairds of Chisholme and Whitnaugh led about 100 Scotsmen on a raid into England, killing 4 men. A letter of 1589 from the King commended him for his loyalty and invited him and his followers to Edinburgh. However, in 1590/1 the English Wardens were complaining about raids that he had led into England. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. He was knighted in 1590 and in that year had an order to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainants; it was stated that he was formerly ‘Walter Scott of Branxholme’, but was ‘Sir Walter, now of Bukcleugh’, suggesting that the ‘Buccleuch’ designation formally accompanied his knighthood. John Murray of Blackbarony served as his cautioner in 1590. He received permission to travel to France to alleviate his gout in 1590, and had a letter from James VI in 1591 allowing him to stay in Edinburgh and Leith until the weather improved to allow him to sail. He would have been the Laird of Buccleuch when listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He was appointed Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591 (and reappointed in 1594), obtained a Lordship of Crichton and Liddesdale in 1595, and was Warden of the West Marches. In 1591 he signed a bond to support the King against Francis Stewart, 5th Earl of Bothwell (his stepfather), and also in that year received a pardon for ‘intercommuning’ with the Earl of Bothwell. He had a letter of protection from the King in 1591, declaring that all actions against him should be suspended and his lands protected, while he travelled to England and France. However, it also appears that he had fallen out of favour again, being stripped of his new responsibilities and effectively exiled overseas for 3 years, his cautioners for £10,000 being Sir James of Balwearie and William of Abbotshill; however, he returned after 15 months, with a letter allowing his return written by the King in late 1592. In 1591/2 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonston of that Ilk when there was a complaint that he had led 200 Scots and others to steal 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Drea. In 1593 he sided with the Laird of Johnstone against the Laird of Maxwell at Dryfesdale Sandals (and later sided with Maxwell against Johnstone). Also in 1593 he was accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England. In 1594 he had a commission (along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Robert Ker of Cessford) to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. Later that year he gained many of the titles and estates forfeited by the Earl of Bothwell and was reappointed Keeper of Liddesdale; he wrote a letter confirming his position to the English Warden Scrope in 1594, which is signed at Hawick. He is recorded in a confirming charter of 1595 as still being superior of the lands of Kirkurd in Peebleshire. Also in 1595 he had a ‘bond of manrent’ with the Beatties and another with John Veitch of Dawyck, both signed in Hawick. In 1595/6 an English letter describes how he strengthened Hermitage Castle and ‘has drawn most of the Ellots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extra-ordinarie number in house’. In 1596 Sir James of Balwearie was surety that those for whom he was responsible would ‘observe the King’s peace and redress all skaiths committed’. He acquired his nickname particularly after the rescue of ‘Kinmont Willie’ from Carlisle Castle in 1596, when he led 80 horsemen on a daring raid into England to free a reiver who had been treacherously captured. There followed much arguing, including letters between the two monarchs, with the English wanting him delivered up, and meanwhile an English force razing Liddesdale, then his force raiding into Tynedale (where 36 men were captured and hanged). After further complaints by Queen Elizabeth he surrendered at Berwick and was again briefly exiled, although he was received by Elizabeth and is said to have impressed her, she stating ‘With ten thousand such men, our brother in Scotland might shake the firmest throne of Europe’. Although considered a hero locally, Lord Scrope described him as ‘ever the chief enemy (and still is) to the quiet of the border’. In 1596 there was a complaint that ‘with his trumpeter and 500 men’ he attacked the house of Bankhead on Esk, taking prisoners as well as goods. In 1597 he served on Parliament as a minor baron. There is an indenture, signed by him at Copshawholm in 1597, to deliver 5 Scotsmen to the English Deputy Wardem. In 1597 he is also supposed to have personally led a party that rode into Tynedale on the Sabbath, burning 20 houses and killing 14 men who had taken home booty from Scotland. He signed in 1599 an agreement with the Ellots of Redheugh and Braidlie to bury their differences. Also in 1599 he was regranted his local lands, with Branxholme being erected into a Barony. As Warden, he had bonds with both the Armstrongs and the Ellots to be answerable for any complaints from England about the inhabitants of Liddesdale. In 1599 the Earl of Angus (William Douglas) wrote that he refused to enter his pledges for keeping the peace until the other Border lairds had done so. He spent several months in Paris, again for his health, with a letter of safe conduct being issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1599. Around 1600 he challenged Robert Ker of Cessford to combat; it is unclear whether either party was injured, but it could not have been serious. He was out of the country in 1602 when Robert of Haining acted as his procurator. In 1603 he was one of a large number of men issued with a ‘summons of removing’ by the Earl of Glencairn, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1604 he is recorded gaining lands in Hassendean from Robert Scott of Hassendean. On the accession of James VI to England he raised a regiment that fought under Maurice, Prince of Orange in Holland; this was probably filled with men who would formerly have been rievers in the Border country. He remained in Holland until the truce of 1609. He was elevated to a peerage in 1608 (after a Commission was struck by the King in 1606).
In 1608 he had a letter of release and remission from the Privy Council for his efforts maintaining peace on the Border. About 1610 he was involved in a dispute with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he was involved in a dispute over ownership of Haining mill with Robert, younger of Haining. Additionally, in 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace within Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1611 he was appointed a member of the Privy Council, but died that same year. He married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford, according to a contract of 1586. Their children included: Walter, the 1st Earl; Margaret, who married James, 6th Lord Ross and secondly Alexander, 6th Earl of Eglinton; Elizabeth, who married John, 2nd Lord Cranstoun; Jean (whose pension is mentioned in her brother’s testament); and possibly Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston (but she was perhaps his sister). By Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland, he had an illegitimate daughter, Jean, called ‘Holland’s Jean’. He also had an illegitimate son, John, probably the Provost of Crichton. He was the first Scott of Buccleuch whose arms carried the star above the 2 crescents. He most likely died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary’s. His testament and inventory of possessions still exist – ‘Lord of Buckcleugh into the Scots Border, Was high Lord Warden, to keep them in good order’ [CWS]. Walter (d.bef. 1620) described as ‘in Allan Mouth’ when his son Walter became a brewer’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1620. He may have been succeeded by John. He is probably the same Walter ‘in Ellenmouth’ included in a list of about 180 men given a ‘respite’ in 1594 for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1606 his ‘brother-german’ John purchased the lands of Hobsburn and Weens from Thomas Turnbull; in this document he is referred to as being ‘of Allanmouth’. It is likely he was son of William of Allanhaugh, or otherwise related to the Allanhaugh Scotts. He could be the Walter, ‘brother germane’ to Robert of Allanhaugh, who witnessed the bond of 1585 in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. Walter ‘Daad’s Watti’ (16th/17th C.) failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance, as well as that of ‘Simmy’s Hob’ in Hawick, suggesting that he was a local man. His father was presumably Andrew. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1628) son of Walter. He appears to have been a military man, and probably served in Holland. The circumstances for which he was knighted are unknown. In 1608 he was ‘younger of Quhitslaid’ when he witnessed a bond for Sir Robert of Thirlestane and was ‘fiar of Quhistslaid’ when he acted for Sir Robert in 1610 (along with Robert of Headshaw) in 2 bonds not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He probably succeeded his father about 1610 (and is easy to confuse with his father). In late 1610 he and his son Thomas (unless this was his father and brother) were bound not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates; Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as cautioner. In 1613 he was in trouble with the Presbytery for non-attendance, he ‘allegit that he haunted some kirks now and then; but that he could not come to his own kirk because his seat quilk he wont, and his fellous, to sit in was taken from him by the guidwife of Synton’; this could either have been Isobel, widow of Walter of Synton, or possibly his daughter Isabel, wife of Francis of (the new Harden branch of) Synton. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Along with Robert of Headshaw he was a cautioner for a bond of 1619 involving the Hays of Smithfield. In 1620 he had a bond with Thomas, son of Robert Turnbull, called ‘of Bedroull’. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for the lands of Ettrickhouse (essentially holding the lands in collateral for a loan). He is recorded in the period 1622–25 when his brother George was involved in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but she died without issue. He secondly married a daughter of Sir John Scott of Newburgh (and sister of the next Sir John of Newburgh). His children included: Robert, who succeeded, but died at Marston Moor; Sir Walter, who succeeded his brother and died at Inverkeithing; Thomas, the 3rd son to succeed; George, whose daughters Elizabeth and Anna were served heirs to his lands of Linton in 1670; Isobel (or Isabella), who married Francis, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in 1624; and Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’), who married Robert Scott of Girnwood. He is said to have died at an advanced age. Walter of Whitehaughbrae (d.1621) son of Thomas and probably grandson of Walter of Synton. He may have acquired Whitehaughbrae from Thomas of Todrig.
Scott

He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He died without an heir and the lands passed to Thomas of Salenside (probably his cousin’s son). His genealogy is treated extensively by John Scott of Rodono (although there may be some confusion over multiple men of the same name owning the lands). Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (1540s–c.1629), usually referred to as ‘Auld Wat o’ Harden’, since he reputedly lived to be 80. He was son and heir of William of Harden (or perhaps grandson of William if there was another Walter in between). He took part in the group of about 200 Scotts and their followers who broke into the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. He is mentioned in a 1559 charter of the lands of Harden between Alexander, Lord Hume and his father. He was also Laird of Todshaw, Mabonslaw, Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielwood. He accompanied Bucchleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and was renowned as a riever. He was descended from the Scotts of Synton and succeeded his father in 1563. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. He apparently received the lands of Gilmanscleuch after his youngest son was slain by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch in a hunting match (although this story seems confused with that of his son Walter in Essenside). However, in 1579/80 he was accused along with Elliot of Redheugh and Elliot of Hoscote of committing a raid on Coquet Water. The Elliot (then allied with the English) raided his property at Hoscote in 1580. Also in 1580 he complained to the Privy Council (along with the Countess of Bothwell and James Gledstains of Cocklaw) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. There is a contract between him and James and John Langlands in 1588 over teinds from Harden and Todshaw. In 1590 he is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Bucchleuch and Walter of Whitelade, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommunicating with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He took part with Bothwell at the ‘Falkland Raid’ in 1592, when they tried to capture the King. Because of his role in this he was denounced as a rebel and his houses at Harden and Dryhope were ordered to be destroyed. In 1592 or 1593 he helped Bothwell to plunder lands in Tweedsie, reportedly carrying off 4,000 sheep, 200 cattle, 40 horses and £2,000 in goods. In 1591/2 he was listed among a large number of Scotts who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva. He was listed along with his brother William among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branhole. Also in 1595 he was among Elliots, Nixons and others complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding raids into England. He is also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Also in 1596 he was accused of leading a raid along with Willie Elliot of Larriston and the young Laird of Whitaugh and 60 men, who took 300 head of cattle, 20 horses and goods from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkinskarre’; in another complaint the same year it is said that he headed a group of 400 men in a raid on Gilsland. In 1598 he was ‘put to the horn’ at the instigation of Sir John Ker of the Hirsel for non-payment of profits arising from Borthwicksheils, and remained officially a rebel for about a year in proud contempt of his Hienes, and in manifest defraud of the said complainer’. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1599 he was responsible (along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill) for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale), for which they received remission in 1604. In 1602 he signed the new ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds. Also in 1602 he and Gavin Eliott of Horsliehill were cautioners for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he was among a list of ‘pretended tenants’ served with a summons to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by James Cunningham. Also in 1603 he had a charter for the land of Pirntaton, near Stow. He was regularly bound over in large sums to keep the peace, threatened with outlawry, etc. Later in life he helped keep the peace, e.g. taking part in an important meeting of Lairds in Jedburgh in 1612, and signing the bond to keep the peace. In 1610 Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) stood as cautioner for him and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called of Todshawhill, and his associates; the nature of this dispute with his neighbours is not clear. There was also a feud with the Scotts of Bonnington, who held lands on the Ettrick Water; while fishing there his son Walter was killed, leading to him gaining the lands of Singlie, Ern Cleuch, Newhouse, etc., and then Lady Bonnington complaining about being harassed by him and his supporters in 1617.
He and his son William were described in 1617 as 'chalmerlanis and baillis to Waltir, Lord Scot of Bugleuche, having the chief commandement within the haill boundis of the countrey of the Forest'. A stone bearing his initials and those of his wife (and the date 1628) used to be on the bridge at Ettrickbridge, which he built there. His wife is supposed to have served him his spurs when the meat supply was dwindling. In 1576/7 he married Mary (or Marion) Scott, daughter of John (not Philip as often stated) of Dryhope; she was also called the 'Flower of Yarrow'. It is said that he agreed to provide 'horse meat and man's meat' for a year and a day, as well as the plunder from the next Michaelmas moon; there is unfortunately no evidence to support this story. In 1598 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spot-tiswoode of that Ilk (and she died about 1629). His sons were: Sir William, who succeeded; Walter in Essenside, who was killed by one of the Scots of Newhouse; Hugh in Greenhead, also called 'of Deuchar', who started the Scotts of Gala and married Jean, daughter of Sir James Pringle of Gala; Francis 'in Howfuird', who was ancestor of the Corse Scotts of Synton and married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade; and possibly George of Castlesye. He also had many daughters: Margaret ('Maggie Fendy'), who married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs ('Gibbie wi the Gow-den Gartins'); Esther, who married Elliot of Falnash (perhaps Archibald) and later George Langlands of that Ilk (although it is unclear if this matches up with what is known about the Langlands family); Janet who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade; Isobel, who married James Johnstone of Westerhall; another daughter possibly marrying Scott of Tushielaw; another daughter marrying Geddes of Kirkurd; another daughter marrying Porteous of Hawkshaw; another Margaret (only child with his 2nd wife), who married David Pringle of Galashiels and later Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun; and probably an illegitimate daughter who married Robert, son of Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill, and progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Oakwood Mill. The Museum has a porridge pot said to have belonged to him, as well as a lock and key from Old Harden House – 'Not even the Flower of Yarrow’s charms In youth, might tame his rage for arms. And still, in age, he spurn’d at rest, And still his brows the helmet press’d’ [SWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Todshawhaugh. He is listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He could be the Walter of Todshawhaugh listed in 1628 among men accused by the Earl of Buchleuch of cutting down trees on his land. He was accused along with John Currie (also from Todshawhaugh) and James Donaldson in Cavers. He could be the Walter ‘in Hawik, called of Todshawhauch’ who led a group of Scots charging Langlands and other Scots to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced; his son George is also listed there. He was also recorded as ‘in Hawk, called of Todschawhill’ in the same year when the Scots of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates; the nature of this dispute among local landowners is not clear. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Catslack. He was father of James (d.1679), who was Minister at Kirkton 1615–19. He may also have been father of William in Catslack, who served heir to the lands of Easter Moormaw in 1607 (previously belonging to the brother of his great-grandfather, John, Vicar of Hawick). In 1620 he complained about Alexander Stewart assaulting him at the house of Walter in Catslack, striking him ‘upon the face and luggis with a grite rod and with a drawn whinyer gaif him ane deep and deidlie straik and wound in the breist’, then threatened to shoot him. Additionally they claimed that Alexander, along with John (son of David Stewart in Glen) regularly harassed him with ‘hagbutis and pistolletis’; the Privy Council declared the Stewart men to be rebels. Also in 1620 he was recorded as Walter ‘in Slak’ in a complaint, along with his brother Adam and William ‘of Slak’; this was Alexander Stewart in Phaup complaining about being unfairly imprisoned. Separately, he and William complained about the Stewarts and vice versa, with him being represented by his brother Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh. Walter of Todrig (16th/17th C.) probably son of George of Todrig and grandson of the first Laird of Harden, William. He may have been the Walter ‘in Todrig’ who witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568 (when his father would still have been Laird). In 1579 he is recording paying Robert of Allanhaugh £100 Scots for the annual rent of the lands of Raes-knowe; additionally he received payment of £50 Scots from Andrew Riddell (brother of Walter of Riddell) for the annual rent of his lands of Todrig, this was with the consent of his wife Margaret Ker and her mother Elizabeth Ker (‘conjugt feuars of his lands of Todrik’). In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stirches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. In 1581 he leased the lands and steading of Shielwood from William Scott in Burnfoot. Also in 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. Additionally in 1581 he is recorded in a dispute over the sale of a horse of his in Selkirk. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581/2 he gave a sasine for half the land of Todrig ‘with tower, fortalice, houses, biggings and yards’ to Joanna, daughter of ‘Dand’ Rutherford of Grange ‘in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent’. This suggests perhaps that he or his son married this Helen Rutherford. The sasine was given with the consent of his mother, Elizabeth Ker (and hence it is unclear if she was his mother or mother-in-law). He was a signatory of the clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in a charter of 1594 renting Ferniehirst Mill and its lands from Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also said to have been in the raiding party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. In 1606 he held the lands of ‘Hardenhead’ from Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst through a ‘wadset’, and in 1610 was referred to in revocation of a contract by Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam. In 1607 he had a charter (probably a confirmation for the lands of Todrig) from James, Lord Hay of Yester and another in 1619. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced. He was claimed to have been wounded in about 1616 when the Scotts of Bonnington killed Walter in Essenside. In 1617 his 2nd son Walter was a ‘near kinsman’ of the deceased Walter in Essenside whose widow complained to the Privy Council about the Scotts of Bonnington still being at large. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his son Walter was also mentioned. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1619/20 he and his son William had a warrant for the arrest of Robert Ormiston of Old Melrose (perhaps for encroaching upon their lands). In 1620 there was a further charter for holdings in the Todrig estate, which mentions his brothers Robert and William. He is also mentioned in the Commissioners’ Court for 1623 when Thomas Hood (from Ancrum) was accused of stealing cattle belonging to him from ‘Plassadge’ in England (Plasketts perhaps?), and also Michael Birny (in Fairnilee) found guilty of stealing 30 sheep belonging to him and his associates; his son Walter is also mentioned in 1623. It is possible that some of these events relate to ‘Auld Wat’ (of Harden, Todrig, etc.). His children included: William, who was his heir and married Isabella Livingston; and Walter, who was involved with the feud between the Scotts of Harden and the Scotts of Bonnington. In about 1630 he probably sold Todrig to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ladhope. He was recorded in 1599, when the Laird of Howpasley (probably William) who was surety for him, as well as the Laird’s son John (who may have been related). He is listed being ‘of Landhoip’ and may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (c.1587–1633) 2nd Lord and 1st Earl of Buccleuch, son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold’. In 1590 he was described as ‘Walter Scot, younger’ when he rented the West Mains of Hawick from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1606 he was the ‘master of Buccleuch’ who had a feu charter of the Kirklands of Hawick (except for the Manse and Glebe) from William Fowler (Parson of Hawick), with the consent of his father, Walter, Lord of Buccleuch. In 1611 he had a letter from the Privy Council forbidding the holding of a horse race between him and the brother of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. The inventory of the estates when he succeeded in 1612 still exists. He was the first in his family for 140 years to succeed to the titles when of full age. He served extensively in Holland, but also lived for periods at Braxholme. In 1618 he was appointed by the King as a commissioner to keep law and order in Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1619 he was created Baron Scott of Whitchester and Eskdale and Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1619 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Liddesdale and the Debateable Land, as well as Eskdale (along with Robert, Lord Maxwell) for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. He purchased Synton from John Erskine, Earl of Mar in 1619. In 1621 he resigned the lands of Ringwoodfield (in upper Teviotdale) to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose (but the Scotts of Buccleuch held them again not much later). In 1621 he was at the meeting of the Scottish Parliament held in Edinburgh.
In 1622 he was part of the local Commissioners’ Court appointed to help keep the peace on the Border. Also in 1622 he was in dispute with the Marquis of Hamilton over lands formerly held by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell. Through the 1620s he continued as one of the joint English-Scottish Commissioners of the Middle Shires and was also member of the Privy Council. He had a narrow escape in his family’s feud with the Elliots in 1624. He complained about the Elliots of Redheugh oppressed his tenants (on their former lands in Liddesdale), leading him to eject them, but after the Elliots regained lands through the courts they continued to plot against him. It is said that he overstretched his estate and so entered the service of the States-General of Holland in 1627. By 1629 he was given a commission as Colonel of a company in the Netherlands and was present at the sieges of Bergen-op-Zoom and Maastricht. He was called home by a letter of King Charles I in 1631, but went back to Maastricht in 1633, after making a will in Scotland. He was still recorded as superior of the lands of Kirkurd in 1632. He married in 1616 Lady Mary Hay of Erroll, daughter of Francis, Earl of Erroll. His legitimate children were: Elizabeth (b.1621), who married John, Lord Erskine and Earl of Mar; Walter (b.1625), the eldest, who died aged 4; Francis (b.1626), Lord Scott, who succeeded; David (b.1627) of Canonbie; Jane (or Jean, b.1629), who married John, Master of Yester, who became the Marquess of Tweedale; and Mary (b.1631), who died unmarried. He also had at least 11 illegitimate children, including: Francis of Mangerton; William, also of Mangerton; John of Gorrenberry; Margaret, who married John, son of Robert Pringle of Stichill; and Janet, who married Andrew Scott of Foulshiel. He died in London, on his way home again from Holland. He was the last of the Scots of Buccleuch to be buried in the family vault at St. Mary’s Church (7 months later). His body was brought by ship from London, but driven to Norway in a storm, arriving at Leith 15 weeks later. There was a huge mediæval-style funeral procession from Branholme to St. Mary’s in June 1634 when ‘he was caried be his honorable freinds and the maist part of the whole nobilitie from the said place [Branholme] to his kirk of Hawick all on fut under a fair velvet pale and the ceremoni with the armes wes set doun by some of his freinds thaimselfs with adviser of ane painter’. His armorial bearings were the first to have the supporters as ‘two ladies richly attired’. His will and inventory still exist – ‘...And of Earl Walter, rest him, God! A braver ne’er to battle rode; And bow full many a tale he knew, Of the old warriors of Buccleuch’ [SWS], ‘Earl Walter was Lord Walter’s son, A Mars for Valour, Wisdom, and Renown, His courage durst a Lyon fear, His Frowns would terrifi’d a Boar’ [CWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as ‘the Earl’s servitor’ in 1620 when he was one of the witnesses for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch granting Goldielands to Sir Walter of Goldielands. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Mylnholm’ in 1622 when a Little was accused of stealing his sheep. This was probably the Millholm in Liddesdale, and he may have been an ancestor of the later Walter there. Walter of Howford (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1615 he married Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. He witnessed several documents in 1621. He sold Howford to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1686 it was stated that the representative of Scott of Howford was Scott of Coldhouse (hence presumably a near relation). It is possible that his widow was the ‘Marie Scott lyfrenter of Cowdhouse’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663. Walter of Midshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 when he was the first named in a list of Scotts charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His son Adam was also listed, along with Adam of Burnfoot, William, smith in Hawick, and William’s brother Adam; he may well have been related to some of these men. Adam of Burnfoot paid caution of 100 merks. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scotts of Midshiels or of Howpasley. Walter of Tushielaw (d.bef. 1643) son of Robert, from whom he succeeded in 1633. He was specifically served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, with mill, and the lands of ‘Conninglaw’ and Cacrabank. He may previously have been called ‘of Fawdshope’. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Robert (then still heir apparent to Tushielaw) when listed among Scotts and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was succeeded by his brother William in 1643, after (probably) having conveyed the estates to him in 1636. His children included: James, who was Brigadier in the Life Guards; and Robert. He appears to have granted his son Robert ‘in Fauldishoip’ his lands in 1636 (although this could be confusion with his brother William). Walter of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1619) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1573, when there was surety for him. He is listed there being ‘in Chalmerlane Newton’, along with his brother John. They were both sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot, who possessed half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton. Gavin Elliott of Bailliele (and later of Stobs) complained that they had attacked his servant on the other half of the farm. Following his non-appearance, his brother John was declared a fugitive in 1573; he and his mother were decalred fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It is unclear who their father might have been. In 1576 surety was found for him ‘not to molest’ Gavin Elliott. In 1579 his brother David purchased a tenement in Hawick from Robert Johnstone from Annandale. In 1581, along with several other Scots (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmansecleuch, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He is also recorded in 1588 when his brothers John and David were witnesses to a sasine for the Scotts of Howpasley for Midshiels and Appletreehall. He is listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. In 1592 his cautionser was John Hay of Smithfield that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He is included on a list of several Scots and others whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham) was trying to remove from their lands in 1603. His son John had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule in 1619 (registered in 1624) by which time he was deceased. William ‘of Newton’ is probably his direct descendant (perhaps his son), and possibly also ‘Syme of Newtoun in Hawick’. He may have been father of both William of Chamberlain Newton and John of Brieryyards (recorded as brothers in the 1630s). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant farmer in ‘Crayk’, i.e. Craik in about 1610, when he was listed among supporters of the Scots of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scots of Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1618 when his brother Simon in Newton was served heir to him in the lands of Easter Craik. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1610 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane served as caution for Robert of Satchells, who was bound not to harm him. Walter of Burnfoot (d.1640s) in Ale Water, probably son of William, or perhaps his brother. He was recorded in the Circuit Court records of 1623 when 2 men were found guilty of stealing a horse from him; there his lands are referred to as ‘Burnfute upon ye Wa- ter of Aill’. Margaret, wife of probably the same Walter was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James ‘Lethame’ in Hawick Parish Church, in 1616 and later on the High Street. It seems unlikely that he was the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) in 1604, since that would have been too early (and perhaps that ‘Walter’ is an error for ‘William’). However, he may have been involved in the ongoing dispute with the sons of the Earl of Bothwell, which lasted until the 1620s. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. His son Robert was served heir to him in 1641. It is unclear when he died. His name still appears in the county valuation of 1643, with the lands being valued at £400. However, he appears to have been deceased in 1632 when his son Robert was summoned (along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) to received payment for the lands of Alttrieve and Corsecleuch. Walter (d.c.1616) 2nd son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, described as ‘in Essenside’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautionser for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1614 there is a bond with his father Walter and brother William, relating to his future wife and the lands of Borthwickshielis, Alemoor and others. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth), daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield); in 1632 Elizabeth (by then remarried) denounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned lands to her son James. He was killed (according to complaints raised by his wife in 1616–17) by John Scott, brother of Simon of Bonnington, along with Simon, another brother Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane who came ‘bodin in feir of weir with lances, swordis, secreitis, plateslevies, quhingeris and utheris wappones invasive’, attacked him while he was fishing on the Ettrick, and he died 48 hours later; it is also said he was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse, suggesting that John, brother of Simon of Bonnington, was of Newhouse. In 1617 Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, complained about her family being continually harassed by the Scotts of Harden, this presumably being a continuation of the feud between these families; her complaint includes a description of the events that led to his death, stating that the Scotts of Harden were being deliberately provocative by fishing in the waters belonging to the Scotts of Bonnington. He is probably the Walter ‘of Ashinsyde’ (i.e. Essenside) recorded in 1617 when William Scott appeared at the Privy Council in his name (even although he was deceased), as well as those of several other supporters of the Scotts of Harden. Also in 1617 his widow, Elspeth Hay, complained on behalf of the Scotts of Harden that Simon Scott of Bonnington and his supporters remained ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. His widow, brothers Hugh and Francis and others involved were ordered to appear personally before the court in 1619. His widow later married William Scott of Salenside. In the period 1633–53 his daughters and heirs Jean and Margaret had an action raised against them by James, son of William of Salenside (and hence their step-brother, presumably over the inheritance of Essenside), with Sir William of Harden as their curator. These 2 daughters were served as his heirs in 1641, with him being described as the 2nd lawful son of Walter ‘senioris de Harden’. Note that Keith Scott (and others) confuses details of his death (saying he was killed by Simon of Bonnington in 1620). Walter ‘Wattie’ (d.1616) son of ‘Braidis Andro’. He was one of the 5 men involved with slaughtering Sir James Douglas’ sheep at Howpasley in 1615, at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells. He and Ingram Scott met the others at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley. They killed about 40 sheep, with about 20 more lying wounded, it is said that the sheep were slain ‘be streiking of thair heidies, and cutting thame in tua throw thair bakis’. He escaped to the North with Ingram Scott, but the pair were captured and brought to Edinburgh Tolbooth. Although they denied knowing ‘Jock the Suckler’, when they saw him they apparently said ‘Quhat now, Jok! How come thow heir – and quhairfoir ar thow wairdit in this hous?’ Their lawyer tried to argue that the relevant law only applied to horses and cattle, but the judge would have none of it. Along with Ingram and Geordie Scott he was hung in Edinburgh for the crime, with Jock essentially turning informant, but being executed later for other crimes. It appears that the trial may have been heavily stacked against them (with several of Drumlanrig’s supporters on the jury, no evidence to place them at the scene except for the informer, and a law that did not technically apply to sheep in any case). Walter (16th/17th C.) Hawick man, described as ‘at the Eist Port’, who was one of the locals accused in 1612 by the Lord Advocate of charging too much interest on loans. He was described as ‘of Eistport in Hawick’ when he was recorded as a juror in the 1622 Commissioners’ Court. Probably the same Walter ‘at the Eist-port’ was also on the ‘leet’ for the election of the Bailies in 1638. Presumably he lived near the East Port and his designation distinguished him from other contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Jock’s Wattie’ (16th/17th C.) witness to a sasine for a tenement in Hawick in 1610. The land was going to Bailie Robert, son of ‘Wat’s Jock’, who could therefore have been his brother. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts this was. Walter of Alton (d.bef. 1638) eldest son of Adam and grandson of Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1606. The ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick was probably his brother. In 1619 he witnessed a bond signed in Hawick between John, son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule. He is recorded as being ‘called of Alton’. His sons were probably Robert (‘junior of Alton’, who succeeded and signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Haick in 1638) and William (‘vocat de Alton in Hassendene’). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ in 1612. Along with Patrick Turnbull he is also listed in 1627 as the sometimes occupant of Templehall and Brewlands. Walter of Girnwood (d.c.1629) younger son of Robert, Laird of Shielswood, and brother of Robert. In 1617 he was recorded as Robert of Shielswood’s brother among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is recorded in 1622 in an action with the Scotts of Buccleuch, regarding his removal from ‘Toungrig’ and other lands in Liddesdale. He was still alive in 1628 (and recorded being of ‘Girnewood’), but died soon afterwards. His sons Robert and Walter were both minors when he died, with his brother Robert of Shielswood being appointed as their ‘tutor’ in 1629. His son Robert was served as his heir in 1636. Walter of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) said to have carried the Earl of Buccleuch’s spurs in the funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. He was probably related to the later Walter in Wauchope. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todrig. He is mentioned as part of the court case between the Scotts of Harden and Bonnington, over the death of Walter in Essenside.
in about 1616. In 1619 he was one of the people ordered to attend the court personally. He may be the Walter recorded along with William in a case in 1620 regarding the imprisonment of a man from Old Melrose. Rev. Walter (c.1588–1649) graduating from St. Andrews in 1608, he was admitted as minister of Castleton in 1612. Perhaps the same Walter, ‘M.A.’ was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1609. He may have been minister when a new church was erected; a stone built into the schoolhouse has the date 1621 and his arms and initials. He was minister in Castleton in 1618 when he complained that George Halliburton of Pinnacle had not paid him (as assignee to Gilbert Elliott of Stobbs) the sum of 2000 merks and 100 merks for expenses. He is probably the ‘Mr Walter Scot’ who is recorded as possessor of Byreholm in 1632. He was owed money from the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He witnessed a document relating to the sale of Harwood in 1637. He signed the Covenant (against episcopalianism) in Hawick in 1638. In 1649 part of Cromwell’s army (under Generals Bright and Pride) stayed several nights at Castleton Kirk on their way back to England. There they broke the seats and communion tables, took the minister’s books and lit their pipes using the parish records for the years 1612–48. There is no record of how the minister himself was treated, but he died later that same year. His brother’s son Walter Scott in Norham was served as his heir in 1649, so he presumably had no children of his own. Walter of Headshaw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Robert ‘suntyme of Heidschaw’ also signed. He could be the same Walter recorded in 1603 and 1609. He could also be related to the Walter of Whitehauche. He was ‘of Breidhauche’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He commanded a regiment of horse in the royalist army and was involved in the civil wars, probably being knighted by Charles II in 1651. In 1644 and 1646 and he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and in 1649 again for Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1645–46, 1650 and 1651. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is mentioned in 1658 in a case in the Regality of Melrose, in a lawsuit over money due for ‘three trowps horse of Captan Walter Scott’ to him, also involving Robert Ker of Faldonside, relating to 1650. He held lands at Drycleuchshiel and Redfordgreen, as well as Whitslade. He married a daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Ormiston, brother of the Earl of Traquair. His children included: Robert, baptised in 1647, who must have died in infancy; Walter, baptised in 1649 and also died in infancy; and Jean. He died at InverKeithing, fighting against Cromwell (while his brother Robert had probably died fighting on Cromwell’s side 8 years earlier). Walter (17th C.) maltman of Hawick, who was on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. He could have been related to Bailie John, who was also a maltman in the next few decades. Walter of Braidaungh and Arkleton (d.bef. 1661) 3rd son of John of Newark. He was also sometimes referred to as Walter of Harwood. It seems likely that he was a distant relative of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the detailed descent of his family is unknown. He was tenant (and probably not owner) of Broadhaugh in the upper Teviot valley. He served as local Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in the period 1630–34 and probably through at least the late 1630s, with responsibility for ‘Teviotdale-head’ and Ewesdale. He was also Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchope and Eskdalemuir. He is also recorded in 1632 in a note from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch about fixing the roof at Branxholme, where he is described as ‘in Braidaungh’. He was ‘of Breidhaungh’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1644 he was bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch for the 4 kirks of Eskdale, Ewesdale and the Debatable Land, and was given orders by the Committee of War for Roxburghshire to convey soldiers from these parishes to the Master of Cranstoun. He purchased Meikledale and Meikledale-hope from Adam Cunningham in 1643 (when he was referred to as being of Harwood) and shortly afterwards acquired Arkleton from the same man. He was ‘of Arkleton’ in 1649 when he wrote a report on the southern counties of Scotland along with William Elliott of Stobs, and in the same year when he was listed on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire and Annandale. In 1651 he is referred to as ‘of Arkiltoun’ when his son Robert ‘callit o Braidhauch’ was granted 800 merks yearly in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a contract with Adam Cunningham and the Earl of Nithsdale (as superior) relating to Meikledale, which was part of a legal case over ownership of those lands in the early 18th century. He married Agnes (or perhaps Anna), daughter of Turnbull of Minto. His son Francis succeeded to Arkleton and was also Chamberlain for the Langholm area. Another son, Robert, became Robert of Harwood. It is said he had several daughters, including one who married Maxwell of Broomholm (possibly Jean, wife of John Maxwell). Walter (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Haining and brother of Robert. He was described as being portioner of Guilan. Where these lands were is unclear. His son Lieut.-Col. Robert was the last of the members of this branch of the family recorded. Walter ‘Gray’ (17th C.) recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving skinner Andrew Deans and merchant Walter Robson. Walter ‘Wat o the Buss’ (17th C.) listed in 1642 among a large number of Borderers declared as fugitives. He was probably connected to Bush in Ewesdale and related to earlier Scotts from there. Walter of Huntly (17th C.) recorded in a case that came before Parliament in 1644. Katherine Kendell, widow of John Young, asked for him to be ejected from the lands of Hyndhope and provide her with the duties from these lands. He seems like to have been son (or perhaps younger brother) of John of Huntly, who was recorded in 1638. In an Ashkirk baptismal record of 1656 he is ‘called o huntly’, which suggests that he no longer held the lands of Huntly; it appears right after a baptism for John of Langhope, who was from a related branch of the Scotts. He married Jean Scott and their children probably included: Andrew (b.1653); Janet (b.1656); John (b.1661); and Elizabeth (b.1663). In 1661 he is ‘Mr’ (although Huntly is not mentioned explicitly) and the baptismal witnesses were William of Synton and William of Headshaw. He is the last Scott of Huntly on record. Walter of Chapel (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, with lands valued at £668 in 1643. These lands consisted of Chapel itself valued at £390, as well as £200 of ‘acres in Lilliesleaf’ and ‘Portions-croft’ valued at £78. Note the potential confusion with Scotts connected with Chapelhill near Bramholme. He was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. Walter Scott of ‘Burnside’ was involved in 1640 with Sir Walter Riddell over the lands of Chapel, so this may have been him. He was probably the Laird of Chapel who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf Parish, still paying tax on £668. Walter of Foulsheils (17th C.) son of James, and brother of Andrew. In 1647 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of ‘Fadousyed’ and ‘Nether Whitalawhous’. In 1652 his estate was inherited by his 2 daughters, Elizabeth and Jean, one of whom, Elizabeth, married James Scott of Bowhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie, and their daughter Janet was born in 1648. Walter of Bunchester, ‘Wat o the Dykes’ (d.1653). It is unclear from which branch of the Scotts he came, although there is a tradition that the Scotts of Bunchester were related to the Scotts of Harden. It is also unclear what the ‘Dykes’ in his nickname referred to, but ‘the Dykes’ near Bedrule seems likely. He is probably the Walter described as ‘of Dykis’ in 1605 when Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him not to harm Patrick Storie in Spittal-on-Rule. In 1612 he is ‘in Dykis’ in a document listing local people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans; he was among those men who appeared to answer the charges. Probably the same Walter ‘called of Dykis’ was ‘bailie in that part’ to Andrew Ker, Lord Jedburgh, for a sasine relating to Harwood in 1631. He purchased Nether Bunchester in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh); these joint owners had previously had a wadset on the property that was not redeemed. He was recorded as owner of Nether Bunchester in 1643, when it was valued at £180. His eldest son was William, Laird of Galalaw. He was succeeded by Thomas, who is suggested to have been his 2nd son, but was probably his brother; his son William (and his wife Margaret Gledstains) gave over the lands to his uncle Thomas in 1653, according to a previous family arrangement. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Shielswood. He is recorded in 1632 when he feuded part of the lands of Belses from Thomas, Lord Binning. In 1643 he was ‘in Shielswood’ when his lands of Shielswood (in Ashkirk Parish) were valued at £260, and his lands in Belses were also valued at £130. He is mentioned on an inquest in 1643 and is probably the Walter of Shielswood listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. In 1636 he married Margaret Scott (although it is unclear which branch
She came from). He had 2 sons and a daughter: Francis, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his brother; and Marian, who eventually also succeeded and married James Scott of Shawes. Walter (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Walter of Todrig, who was part of the raiding party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1629 he inherited the lands of Grange from his father William. His grandfather sold Todrig during his father’s lifetime, this being to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter of Whitslaide, thus starting a new line of Scotts of Todrig. Walter of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was surely related to earlier Scotts of Catslack, perhaps son of William in Catslack. He was probably father of John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 for the Parish of Hobkirk. He paid tax on £78 for his rental there. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he could have been father of the wright William who lived at Kirknowe in about 1700. Walter of Hyndhope (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1663 along with his brother Thomas. Walter of Dryhope (17th C.) recorded as Laird in 1669. He may have been brother of the previous Laird, Robert. He was succeeded by his brother, Philip. Walter ‘Westport’ (17th C.) resident of the Hawick, near the West Port. He was elected to the Council in 1648. He is also recorded in 1656 when he was cleared of the claim that John Scott made against him regarding a deal over 3 barrels of drink; he sold the barrels and was therefore presumably a merchant. He is recorded being ‘at the west port’ in 1663, when he was one of the owners of West Mains. Also in 1663 he was ‘merchant, Hawick, indweller at the West Port, thereof’ in a deed. He was listed among the Councillors in 1668. Presumably the same Walter is recorded in 1676 when he brought a ‘letter of homing’ against William Elliot of Philhope, with Henry Elliot of Harwood as cautioner (although part of the document is missing). He was probably Bailie in 1678 when Walter Hardie was fined for saying the ‘Westport would be hanged’. In 1679 a woman was cited for accusing his servant John Moore of theft. He was probably related to the other West Port Scotts, and may have been father of the later Walter of Westport, and possibly grandfather of Hawick’s second known Cornet, James ‘called of Westport’; James’ father Walter was already deceased in 1706. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘Westport’ (unless there are 2 generations of Walters) whose son James married Sara Gledstains in 1719. Walter of Tinnis (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the period 1631–41. In 1642 he was named by the Privy Council to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives; he was recorded there as ‘William Scot of Tinnis, curator to the Erle of Buccleuch’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Walter of Howpasley (d.c.1660) son of William of Fingland. He was brother of Robert and half-brother of Simon. When his brother died, he acquired the lands of Howpasley. After he died without issue, his sister Marion (wife of William Wilson in ‘Gulzeanflat’) was served as his heir and then Howpasley passed to Walter, son of his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Walter (d.bef. 1667) youngest son of Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. He inherited the lands of Howpasley, but died without issue and they went to his brother Sir Francis. His brother was served as his heir in 1667 (as confirmed in 1695), consistent with the claim that he died in about 1663, before his father. The lands he held included Rashiegrain, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch, as well as Howpasley. He is probably the same man as Walter of Ramsaycleuchburn. Col. Walter of Hartwoodburne (d.c.1650) probably related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh, he was also referred to as being ‘of Harlawood’, and hence is easily confused with the nearly contemporary Walter of Harwood on Teviot. He served in Parliament for Selkirkshire 1646–47 and 1648–49. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. In the correction to the will of Earl Francis in 1651, he is described as deceased when 200 merks yearly is allocated to his widow, Elizabeth Napier, and their second son, Walter. His widow Elizabeth Napier remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane and was recorded in a deed in 1673. He was a Royalist supporter who was killed at the Battle of Dunbar. It is unclear if he was related to the slightly later William of Hartwoodmyres. In 1694 Anna Helena was served heir to her father Walter, who was son of Walter of Whitehaugh; this was presumably him, with Anna Helena being his grand-daughter. Walter of Goldielands (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (and not, as some genealogies state, son of Charles, half-brother of the first Walter of Goldielands).
He was the last of the name to be acknowledged as ‘of Goldielands’ by the Scotts of Buccleuch (although there is also a record of Robert of Goldielands in 1638, and others given that designation, at least informally, later). He is hard to separate from his father, who was certainly alive in 1620, but was designated ‘Sir Walter’. In 1620 his father had a charter from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, for the lands of Goldielands and Westcote, and the same day granted Goldielands to him (retaining the liferent). Also mentioned is Jean Riddell (probably daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk), to whom he was promised in a contract of marriage, the contract involving the lands of ‘Pirntatoin’ or ‘Pirntaiton’ (presumably Pintaton on Gala Water). He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who bore the ‘pincell of black taffita’ on a lance point in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638; the name ‘R. Scott’ beside his could indicate this was his brother, son or perhaps uncle. In 1641 he witnessed a document in Hawick for the Scotts of Thirlestane. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; in 1649 he is ‘of Gawdilands and Stanesh’, suggesting a connection with Stanedge (although the Scotts appear not to have owned it for at least another half century). In 1643 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d. He is probably also the ‘W. Scott of Gowdieiands’ recorded as owner of lands in Cavers Parish valued at £400 in 1643; these lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is recorded in a county valuation of landowners in Hawick Parish in 1643 (as the 4th largest landowner) and on a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1649 he and Patrick Scott (writer in Edinburgh) were involved in a loan with James Crichton, renounced to Sir Patrick Hamilton in 1652. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £600. In 1655 he is recorded owing about £6800 to the deceased Francis, Earl of Buccleuch: this was for rental of the farms of Riccartonfoot, Prickinghaugh and Lawshill in the period 1634–47. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers Parish in 1663 and also paid more tax for lands recently acquired in Hawick Parish (from Cavers Kirk), as well as more than £500 for Goldielands itself. He was probably one of the ‘curators’ of Francis Scott of Davington, appointed in 1666. His descendants took the designation ‘of Crumhaugh’. His lands appear to have passed to Robert Scott of Clack, son of his youngest sister (or perhaps aunt), as well as Lillas, daughter of his sister Jean. However, he was succeeded by Walter of Crumhaugh, probably his cousin. He may be the Walter of Goldielands recorded in a deed of renunciation and discharge with Walter ‘in’ Goldielands in 1673. Walter (d.bef. 1671) tenant in Ladhope. In 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679 and 1680 his widow had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He is probably the ‘William’ whose widow Bessie Scott was deceased in 1683 when her son-in-law Andrew Angus (Bailie of Selkirk) was her executor. Walter (17th C.) recorded as proprietor of Allanhaugh in a transcription of the 1678 valuation rolls. However, it may be that this is confusion with ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’. If he was a Scott of Allanhaugh, it is unclear how he might have been related to previous Scotts of Allanhaugh. Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands (1631/2–1700) probably a son of Charles of Crumhaugh, who was son of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands. He succeeded his cousin Walter in 1675, inheriting several lands, although those attached directly to Goldielands passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He succeeded to Robert Scott of Glack and Lilias Scott (wife of William Knox), who were nephew and niece of Walter of Goldielands. These lands included half of Ramsaycleuch, Commonside, Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop and Langhaugh, as well as Crumhaugh. It is possible he was the Walter of Glack recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls paying £130 for lands in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1675 when he requested permission from the Hawick Bailies and Council to build a fence on top of the dyke separating his lands from those of the Common. He is Walter of Crumhaugh in 1678 when he paid land tax on £1116 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Scott ‘off Gowdieiands’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He may have been the ‘Goldielands, elder’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldielands, younger’ being his son Charles). In 1696 he resigned these lands, as well as Trinity Lands, ‘Corsback’ and others, to Charles of Crumhaugh, his elder son. He married Janet (or Jean) Glendinning and her will is recorded in 1682. His children included: Charles, who succeeded, but appears to have died before him; Walter, whose descendants later became the representatives of this branch of the family; and William, who married Isobel Gledstains in 1702. John, recorded as ‘brother of Goldielands’ in 1689 may also have been his son. Note, however, that these generations are quite murky. His memorial stone was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s Kirk around 1863 and reads: ‘Here lyes Walter Scot of Crumhaugh Who deceased 20 day of December 1700 and of age 68’. Jean, who married Walter of West Port in 1701/1, was probably his daughter. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Elspeth (married to James ‘Bleak’), who may have been a sister, with the other witness being William, doctor in Hawick, who may have been a brother or other close relative. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands, who (along with Robert of Tandlaw, who was thus probably closely related) witnessed a baptism in 1673 for Robert (perhaps his son or brother) and Bessie Miller. He also witnessed a baptism in 1678 for Walter of Harwood and 2 more in 1680 for William of Harwood and for Robert of Horsleyhill. He is Walter of Crumhaugh in 1700 when, along with his son William, he witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his son); this was just a few months before he died. Walter of Minto (17th C.) another name for Walter of Harwood. Capt. Walter of Satchells (c.1613-c.1694) writer of ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, a family history in doggerel verse, which was published in 1688, reprinted in 1786 and again in 1894. The words were said to have been dictated to school boys from Hawick. He was probably son of Jean Scott of Thirlestane and Robert Scott of Satchells, and may have been born on a farm in Eskdalemuir. He spent his youth herding cattle, then joined the Duke of Buccleuch’s regiment at age 16 (probably in 1629) and supposedly served for 57 years. He was in the army of the Swedish King from about 1631 until long after the peace of Munster in 1648. However, it appears that he was not permanently overseas and spent some time in Scotland. He is probably the Walter, heir apparent of Robert of Satchells recorded in 1653 when he had a bond to desist from harming the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1654 he had an act of caution against Robert, son of Peter Scott of ‘Cowdhome’; his signature is recorded in this document. He is probably the Walter of Satsheilles’ (although it looks like ‘falseheilles’) who paid tax on £200 in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was also owner there in the 1678 county valuation, the lands being valued at £256. It is said to have began his metrical family history at about the age of 73 (or as sometimes claimed, 88!). It was first published in Edinburgh in 1688, with a second edition in 1776, a third published in Hawick in 1786 and a reprinted edition in 1894, with extensive notes by John G. Winning. The family lost the lands of Satchells earlier in the 17th century, and so it is unclear exactly where he lived when he retired (but the impression is that it was near to the old lands). There is little documentary evidence about whether he had a family, although Dr. William Scott of Stokoe says that after returning to Scotland he married a young woman with whom he had a daughter called Gustava (after King Gustavus of Sweden, in whose army he had served). He is probably the Walter of Satchells whose wife Jean Pringle, widow of William of Glenrath, is recorded in a deed connected with a factory in 1663. The only other known work attributed to him is a ballad about the Scotts of Whitslade printed in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ – ‘Captain Walter Scot, An old Souldier and no Scholler, And one that can write not, but just the Letters of his Name’ [CWS] (often written ‘Scot’). Walter of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William, whom he succeeded as last Scott Laird of Tushielaw (but must have been still quite young at this time). He was served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, including ‘Counislaw’ in 1670. He acted as cautioner for the Commissioners of Excise in Selkirkshire in 1682. He is recorded in 1681 when his son Francis became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1686 when his daughter Jean was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. He is recorded in bonds of 1682. He may be the same ‘Laird of Tishilow’ recorded in 1700 when his brother John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh. He may also be the Walter ‘uncle to Tushilew’ who signed the marriage contract in 1678 between Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elliot of Harwood. His mother may have been Margaret Elliot and his uncle Francis Scott, who served as his cautioner in 1686. In 1688 he sold the family estate to Michael Anderson, who had married his sister. In 1689 he appeared before Parliament to give assurance that he would leave the country or live peaceably etc.; this suggests he was a supporter of the Jacobite cause, unlike his father. He may be the Scott of Tushielaw who in 1692 witnessed a sasine for Robert of Broadmeadows. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘in Boghall’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean.
Scott of Langhope in 1666. He may have been ancestor of the later Walter of Boghall. Walter of Newton (17th C.) probably son of William, for whom John of Brieryards was appointed tutor in 1638. He is probably the same Walter of Chamberlayne recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, his lands valued at £266 13s 4d; his lands in Hassendean Parish were also valued at £1378 4s 4d in 1663. He is probably also the Walter of ‘Chamberlane Newton’ recorded in 2 bonds in 1663 and the Walter of ‘Newton’ in 2 other deeds in 1663. He is also recorded in a record relating to Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the Walter of Newton recorded paying the land tax on Lairhope, valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678 and paying tax on £1182 (presumably for Newton and neighbouring lands) in Hassendean Parish. He may have been succeeded by another Francis. Walter of Woll (17th C.) had a charter of the half merk land of ‘Mounkland’ in Clari-law, from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He is described as ‘in Monkland’ in a record of major residents of Hassendean Parish in the mid-1600s. He could be a descendant of John of Monks-tower’ listed by Scott of Satchells. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Walter of Woll (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of ‘Wall’ in Ashkirk Parish. The lands were valued at £533. According to Keith Scott’s genealogy brothers Francis of Woll and James of Woll were owners at that time. It is therefore unclear how he fits into the family tree; perhaps he is another brother, who succeed between Francis and James, or else the name is an error. Walter of Stobitcote (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of lands valued at £260 in Cavers Parish; these same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of St. Leonards and Whitehaugh (d.1685) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from Andrew Hay in 1656. In 1671 he sold the estate to his nephew Walter of Headshaw (although it is unclear who this was). In 1669 he had a ‘wadset’ with William of Langhope (and his curator). He had a charter of Langhope in 1678 when he was referred to as ‘now of Langhope’. He may be the Walter of Langhope who paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. However, these lands were sold to John Scott (possibly his son) in 1688. In 1670 he was Bailie to George, Lord Ross of Halkhead and Melville for a sasine in Linlithgow and another sasine to William Scott in Manuel. He was recorded in a deed of 1673 being ‘of Saint Leonards’. He acted as Chamberlain (along with William Scott, Bailie of Dalkeith) for the Buccleuch estates in Dalkeith in 1673, and on his own for the years 1674–88. In 1675 he was cautioner for a bond by Sir John Nicholson to Walter, brother of Sir Lawrence Scott of Eyemouth. It is unclear exactly how he was or where the ‘St. Leonards’ refers to (possibilities are the lands in Ednam, Edinburgh, Lauder or Peebles). His mother appears to have been Elizabeth Napier, widow of Walter of ‘Harlawood’, who had remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane; he thus may have been the same as Walter, son of Walter of Hartwoodburn. However, it is also possible he was closely related to the Scotts of Langhope. His wife was Janet Scott (and again it is unclear to which branch she belonged, with Langhope a possibility). His children included John, who sold the estate of Langhope to Adam Scott of Bowhill in about 1692. He may also have been father of Anna Helena, who inherited her grandfather Walter’s lands of Hartwoodburn in 1694. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1694 his daughter Anna Helena (widow of Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall) was served heir to his father’s lands of Hartwoodburn. Hence it seems like his father was Laird of Hartwoodburn and Whitehaugh. He may be the son of Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn recorded in a deed in 1673. He was probably deceased by 1694. He may be the same as Walter of St. Leonard’s and Whitehaugh. Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1667, becoming Laird of Burnfoot and Burnhead, which were still referred to in the service of heirs as Nether and Over Newhall. He is probably the Walter of Burnfoot who paid the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls on £312 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Burnfoot). He is recorded in a deed of 1673 being ‘of Burnefit in Tiviot’. It is hard to separate him from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Ale. He was succeeded by his son Adam, who sold Burnhead to William Scott in Burnhead. Walter (d.c.1681) recorded as ‘merchant in Burnfoot, in Lidsdaill’ when his will was listed in 1681. The location of Burnfoot in Liddesdale is ambiguous and it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter of Burnfoot on Ale (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is hard to separate from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot
Scott Scott

Scott

on Teviot. He succeeded sometime before 1669. He was mentioned as a landowner in a record relating to Hassendean parish in 1666. He could be the Walter of Burnfoot recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, listed along with owners of lands in Wilton Parish, when he paid tax on £312. He was recorded in a deed in 1673 (separate from another for Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot), along with his son William. He (or the other Walter) was recorded in 1677 when his son Walter became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was still Laird in 1686, when he was one of those to whom Scott of Satchells dedicated an address. He gained Hartwoodmyres from Sir William Scott of Harden about 1690. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish who paid tax on 3 hearths in 1694. He was involved in financial dealings with the Scotts of Thirlstane and was involved in legal action to recover money in the 1690s. His brother Francis married Isobel Scott. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot, son and heir of Robert, who inherited Burnfoot on Teviot in 1694; however, it is possible there is another generation of Walters and Roberts represented here. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their son John was baptised in 1677. Walter (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Elliot, he was ‘of Penchrist’ in 1695 when his will was recorded. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in ‘Weimes’ (presumably Weens) in 1687 when the will of his wife Bessie Scott is recorded. He is also recorded being ‘of Weins’ in 1688. He was probably related to John, who was at Weens in 1694. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Another Walter was listed as a ‘cottar’ there at the same time. He could be the Walter ‘in Burtoch’ whose will was recorded in 1692, and probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scots associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James, Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh (d.c.1691) purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from his uncle Walter of St. Leonards (possibly the same as Walter of Harwood or Hartwoodburn). He was the representative of the Scotts of Headshaw in 1671. It is possible he was the Walter ‘of Westerheape’ recorded in a tack in 1673. He was succeeded by his son William of Whitehaugh in 1692. Other children were Robert (minister in Roberton) and Isobel (who succeeded her brother). He could be the Walter of Whitehaugh recorded in 1684 when he and Robert of Greenhill were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. Walter of Raeburn, ‘Wat Wudsperms’ (d.bef. 1688). He was 3rd son of Sir William of Harden and Agnes Murray (‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) and first of the Scotts of Raeburn. In 1661 he was served heir to his sister Janet. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He is mentioned in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and was a supporter of the suppression of the Parish. He acted as Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in Dalkeith and Luggot. He is mentioned in documents of the Regality of Melrose in 1670–74. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is recording paying tax for ‘Ilerig’ or ‘Flrig’ (presumably Eilrig) in Hawick Parish, as well as for Raeburn in St. Boswells (or Lessuden) Parish. He married Anne Isobel, daughter of William McDougall of Makerstoun (who may have been his cousin). He and his wife became Quakers (perhaps during the 1657 visit of George Fox to southern Scotland); as a result he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth and had his children removed from him by Sir William (his brother). He was moved to Jedburgh Jail, where he remained for more than 4 years. His children were: William, who succeeded to the Raeburn estates; Walter, ‘Beardie’, who was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the writer; Isabel; and Christian. Walter (17th C.) merchant of Hawick, recorded marrying Marion Armstrong in Edinburgh in 1652. It is not known how he was related to any of the other contemporary Scots. He may be the Walter, merchant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1687. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘our master stabler’ in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 200 merks yearly. He probably worked at Newark and Dalkeith, where the Earl mostly lived, but it is unclear where he came from. He could be the Walter who was owed money for a year’s fee from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1661. Walter (17th C.) probably a son of John of Brieryyards. He had a sasine in 1656 for a ‘merk land in Hassendeanbank’, which was probably Cockerheugh, which his father purchased from Thomas Turnbull in 1656. He is probably the Walter of Cockerheugh who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He may be the Walter who (along with John, probably his brother) witnessed baptisms for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687, and perhaps another for James Martin in Appletreehall in 1682. Also in 1681 he gave a disposition to John in 1681, probably assigning Cockerheugh to his brother. He is probably the ‘Walter Scott Breariyeyards’ listed on the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Walter (17th C.) said to have been eldest son of Walter, and last of the Scots of Synton, who died unmarried. Instead he was probably eldest son of George, the last of the original Synton Lairds, with his brother being George of Boonraw. Walter ‘Polesman’ (17th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in 1660 transferring land containing houses and yards to Robert Scott, son of the late James Scott, also Burgess of Hawick. His byname is written ‘Polesman’, and the meaning is uncertain (although a connection with the coble ferry is not impossible). Walter (1644–93) of Highchester and of Harden, eldest son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, he became Earl of Tarras. He was baptised by John Langands of Wilton. He was married to Mary Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, when he was just less than 14 and she was 11, apparently after he was kidnapped on his way to school. The marriage took place in secrecy at the Chapel of Wemyss, and without proclamation, which caused much debate at the time. It was dissolved by the Commissary in 1659, but ratified again when she reached the age of 12. He and his wife the Countess of Buccleuch were recorded in a tack of 1663 (although he was deceased before then). He was occasionally referred to as Earl of Buccleuch, but this title was not generally accepted. Instead, in 1660, he was created Earl of Tarras. He was married to Mary Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, when he was just less than 14 and she was 11, apparently after he was kidnapped on his way to school. The marriage took place in secrecy at the Chapel of Wemyss, and without proclamation, which caused much debate at the time. It was dissolved by the Commissary in 1659, but ratified again when she reached the age of 12. He and his wife the Countess of Buccleuch were recorded in a tack of 1663 (although he was deceased before then). He was occasionally referred to as Earl of Buccleuch, but this title was not generally accepted. Instead, in 1660, he was created Earl of Tarras, Lord Alemoor and Campcastell, for his lifetime only (this followed a custom of granting such an honour to any commoner who married a Countess; the names of the titles came from lands held by his family). However, his young bride died after only about 2 years, leading to years of dispute over his entitlements to life-rents etc.; he finally renounced his claims to Buccleuch lands only in 1678. In about 1667 he went abroad, travelling in France, Italy and the Netherlands, and keeping a diary of his voyage, which survives. On returning to Britain in 1670, he visited the court, attempting to recover some of the £4000 annuity due from his marriage contract, but to no avail (and it is said that his descendants in the schoolroom at Mertoun used to be asked to work out the compound interest on 2 centuries of arrears!). He succeeded to Harden in 1672 (although there is some confusion here), with a charter in 1677 and confirming charter in 1683. He paid the land tax on land valued at £1074 in Wilton Parish in 1678 (formerly belonging to Scott of Harden and Elliott of Stobs), as well as £600 for Borthwickshiels. His lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £850 at that time. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire, charged with raising money for the King. He substantially renovated Harden House around 1691. The initials ‘W.E.T.’ carved on a fireplace at Harden probably refer to him (‘Earl of Tarras’). He was tried for his part in the ‘Ryehouse Plot’ of 1683 (when several Scottish noblemen plotted to exclude the Duke of York from succeeding to Charles II) and support for the Duke of Monmouth (husband of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch), gave his confession and threw himself on the mercy of the King; he thereby implicated Robert Baillie of Jerviswood (who was hanged), as well as the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Polwarth. In 1684 he was called to give evidence in the trial of his uncle, Robert Baillie of Jerviswood. He was imprisoned for treason and had his estates confiscated. However, because of the ‘great benefit that did arise by his full and sincere confession’ he was rehabilitated, receiving a pardon in 1685, having his personal estate restored in 1686 and all his honours and lands restored in 1687 (including Roberton and Howcleuch Mill). He became one of the first to engage in the Revolution of 1688. He was also one of the main instigators of the petition that was successful in having Roberton Parish created in 1690, with the consequence that Hassendean Parish was suppressed. In 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He gained part (perhaps half) of the lands of Minto in 1691 from Rachel Ingles, widow of John Turnbull. In 1692 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. There is a letter from his sister Margaret in Hawick in 1693. He also survived a claim on the estates of Harden from his uncle Walter of Raeburn. He is recorded in 1694 having paid tax on 17 hearths at Harden House; he also held the estate of Borthwickshiels and his lands in (the former) Hassendean Parish at that time included Hassendean Mains. In 1677 he married his second wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Hepburne of Hume; she became Countess of Tarras and appears to have remarried to Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. They had sons: Gideon of Highchester, who succeeded; William (b.1682), who died before 1710; Walter of Whitfield, who later succeeded to Harden on the death of his nephews Walter and John; Thomas (b.1681), who died unmarried; and Francis (b.1691), who died young. Their daughters were: Helen; Elizabeth; Mary, who married a Drummond; Agnes; Ann; and Margaret, who married Thomas Gordon. The succession of Harden after his death is complicated, but it eventually went to his second son Walter. His son Thomas is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1702. His testament is recorded in 1693. Walter of Harwood, on Teviot (17th C.) eldest son of Robert and Beatrice Gledstains (and probably not closely related to the nearly contemporary Col. Walter of ‘Harwood’). He was also later known as Walter of Minto. Along with his father he is recorded in 1663 renouncing the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1669 he was served heir to his father in Glendinning and other lands in Westerkirk Parish. He was recorded in 1669 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, appointed by William, Lord Drumlanrig; there was a dispute between him and the Bailies of Hawick over whether he had the right to hold his courts in the Tolbooth. In 1671 he gave his consent for a disposition involving the lands of Hornshole between the Turnbulls of Minto and the Scotts of Brierymarshes. He registered arms in 1672. In 1672 he was Sheriff-Depute when giving sasine to Sir Alexander Don of Newton for Altonburn and other lands. In 1672 he leased Branholme Mains, Branholme Park and the ‘Steill and Henhaugh’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was recorded in several deeds in 1673. In 1673 he and his eldest son Robert purchased a large part of the Barony of Minto from John Turnbull of Minto. However, they appear to have resigned these lands, which were then sold to Walter Riddell (as confirmed in 1681). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’ (i.e. Cavers, Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes) in at least the period 1671–77. He also leased part of Todshawhaugh in 1675. It is unclear whether his nickname referred to his hair colour or something else. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter and William are recorded separately as glovers on the same list. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1677 (and was later ‘of Falnash’). He married Christian, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, the eldest son; Elizabeth, who married Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge in 1693; Walter (b.1673), baptised in Hawick; Andrew (b.1678), also baptised in Hawick; George (b.1681), also baptised in Hawick, who became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1698. The witnesses in 1678 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Horsleyhill. It is said that the family was ruined by his wife’s extravagance and that Harwood was sold off. He is probably the Walter ‘in Harwood’ whose ‘natural Daughter’ married weaver John Jolly in Hawick in 1721. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Cook and their children included: John (b.1669); William (b.1675); James (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Andrew Cook (probably related to his wife) and John Scott (perhaps related to him). Walter (17th C.) recorded as a glover on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter and William are recorded separately as glovers on the same list. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (17th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1671–77. He also leased part of Todshawhaugh in 1675. It is unclear whether his nickname referred to his hair colour or something else. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters, and could be descended from the earlier Walter of Chapelhill. Walter of Alton (17th C.) probably the Walter whose initials are recorded on the lintel of ‘Auld Alton’ house, along with those of ‘A.M.’ and the date 1675. He was married to Anna (or Emma), daughter of James Middledias portioner of Raperlaw, as recorded when the pair were issued a ‘letter of horning’ in 1671. According to the marriage contract of 1669 he was brother of Francis of Gorrernberry; hence he may not have been directly related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included: Margaret (b.1683); and Thomas (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were Adam and William Scott (who may have been relatives), and in 1684 were James Byers and Robert Davidson. He is probably the Walter of Alton who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott (to whom he may have been related). In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hasseendean Parish (presumably for Alton), as well as for Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably the same as the Walter of Alton recorded later in the 17th century, although it is possible there were 2 separate men here. He may be the ‘Scot of Alston’ recorded in 1684 among Borderers fined for their wives failing to attend parish church (i.e. for supporting Covenanters). He was probably the Walter ‘of Altone’ who in 1686 was granted by James VII a commission of the office of the Bailie of Regality of Hawick (this on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, the heritable Bailie, losing her right because of not taking ‘the test’). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the disturbance at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk. He may be the same as ‘Walter Scott of Alton in Raperlaw’. In 1690 in Edinburgh he married Helen Fisher; this was either his second marriage or there were 2 different Walters. He was probably the Laird of Alton in 1694 when ‘Altone his hous’ was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with tax paid on 6 hearths. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) recorded in a tack of 1673 being ‘of Westerheape’. This is presumably Wester Heap and hence he may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Todrig (1630s–1722) eldest son of Thomas, whom he succeeded by 1691. He was recorded as son of Thomas in a deed in 1673. He acted as one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton and was also tutor for Mark Pringle of Clifton (his father). He was probably the Walter ‘fear of Todrig’ who was recorded in 1682 as the nephew of Robert Pringle of Clifton’s testament. In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire along with Thomas (probably his father) and in 1704 he was again a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was still recorded in the discharge of a loan, along with William Elliot of Harwood in 1707. It seems likely he was the ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ who was recorded paying tax for 5 hearths at Essendine in 1694. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism for John of Synton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fairmile in 1682. He had one son and 7 daughters: Thomas, who succeeded; Jane (or ‘Jean’), who married William Elliot, 3rd Laird of Harwood by post-nuptial contract in 1700 (she is described as ‘Mrs. Scott’ and so this may have been her second marriage); Elizabeth, who married Henry Elliot of Peel, brother of William Elliot of Harwood; Nelly, who married John Elliot, another brother of William Elliot of Harwood, and secondly married Rev. William Home; Janet, who married Mr. Purdom from Hawick; Christian, who married Edinburgh solicitor George Denniston; Margaret, who married David Scott of Merrylaw; and Violet (b.1691), baptised in Ashkirk, who married in Lothian. In the 1691 baptismal record he is already ‘of Todrige’ and his wife is ‘his lady’, with witnesses Robert Scott ...(perhaps his brother) and Patrick Ker of Fairmile (his brother-in-law). Walter of Altencrofts (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, presumably connected with Alton Croft south of Hawick. He was probably different from ‘Walter of Alton’, although there may be confusion between the 2 farms. In 1678 he was ‘of Altoun crofts & wyntoun’ (or ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’) when his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110. In 1681 it was stated that ‘the sons and grandson of the deceased John Scott of Gorrenberrie, and Walter Scott of Altencrofts’ were among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He seems to have witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (for John Wilson) in 1682. In 1688 he was baptismal witness for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1689 he had a daughter Janet (with Jean Dalglish) baptised, the record labelled ‘fornicators’; the witnesses were James Graham in Altoncroft and Robert Cook. He may be the Walter of Alton Croft whose will was recorded in 1696; he was son of Robert and had a sister Marion, whose son William Wright inherited Alton Croft. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish when it included Hassendean. He married Janet Grieve and their son William was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were Robert and William, who were probably either relatives or prominent Scotts in the area. Walter (17th C.) said by Capt. Scott of Satchells to be a ‘shepherd swain’, living in 1688 when his book was published. His pedigree is given by Satchells: son of Adam, who was son of William, who was brother of Thomas in Wester Groundstone and son of Walter, who was son of Robert, who was son of Walter, the first Laird of Whitehaugh; however, there is no support for this, and it does not connect with other early recorded Lairds of Whitehaugh. Walter of Eilrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was presumably a descendant of Robert. Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1685) Hawick man, probably a merchant of some kind. Along with Walter Laing, he was a Town Councillor when the ‘Steeple Loft’ was built in St. Mary’s. In 1685 (by which time he was deceased) the pair had an agreement from the Town Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building this balcony. Bailie James (and his son Bailie Robert) may have been related to him.
It is possible that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) recorded in 1693, along with his son, also Walter. In the service of heirs for John Ker of Cavers Carre, inheriting his un-cle’s Lordship of Jeburgh, is contained a reference to annual rentals of 300 merks, corresponding to 5000 merklands of Appletreehall, pertaining to the Walter Scotts, senior and junior ‘de Chamberland-Newtoun’. He may be the same as the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1660s, and his son could be the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1730s. Walter ‘the Butterman’ (17th C.)
said to be ‘of the sort of Scotts of Robertowne’, he is recorded in the Town Book in 1694, saying he and his wife would leave the Town in connection to any theft ‘if bu the worth and value of ane horn spoon, be laid to our charge and proven. It is unclear if he dealt in butter, or if his nickname referred to something else. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan’; as well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) resident of Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Heath Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan’. As well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Walter (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town accordning to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Walter was recorded as herd in Branxholme Town in 1703 when his son John was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were James Ogilvie and John, both tenants in Branxholme. Walter (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among ‘The poor in Hawick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.
He is listed separately from the Walter in Branx-holme Town. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and John, who were also listed there. He is probably the tenant in Whitchesters recorded in the baptismal records for 1706. He is probably the Walter who (along with John) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. He married Janet Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1706), with witnesses being Alexander Thomson and Robert Scott, who were also tenants in Whitchester. Other children to couples of the same name include Margaret (b.1715), Agnes (b.1718) and John (b.1724). Walter (17th C.)
smith who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’ and is ‘called Poor’ (which appears to be a nickname). He may be related to John ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick in 1609. Walter (17th C.) sheperd at Drinkstone according to the 1694 Heath Tax records. Perhaps the same Walter at Drinkstone witnessed a baptism (for Archibald Riddell in Borthaugh) in 1704. He may be the Walter, servant to William, tenant in Drinkstone, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709, and who lived at Leaheads. Walter ‘Chief’ (17th/18th C.) listed as renter of half the farm of Overhall in 1694, with Adam leasing the other half. The pair continued to rent half of the farm in 1696 and 1698. He must have been related to this Adam, as well as to the James, who was leasing half of Overhall in 1690 and 1692 (for whose widow, Margaret, he served as cautioner).
His nickname may have given rise to the name for the ‘Chief’s Pool’ in the Teviot near there; we can only speculate about whether it might have been his favourite swimming hole or fishing spot. James ‘the Chief’, who died in 1778, may have been a descendant. Walter of Langshaw (d.c.1695) son of Francis and grandson of Patrick of Kirkstyle. Sir John of Ancrum was his uncle.
In 1690 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, ‘Calfshaw’ and ‘Lang-shaugh water’ in the Parish of Hawick. In 1695 his brother Thomas was served heir to their father’s lands of Langshaw, suggesting that he may have been deceased by then. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He is described as ‘in Wau-chope’ in 1665 when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood lands and in 1677 when he witnessed the ‘bond of provision’ for Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1688 and 1693 and witness to a bond by Dame Magdalene Nicholson (widow of Stobs) in 1690. He was recorded being ‘in Wauchope’ in a bond of 1682. There was a ‘letter of horning’ for him and Henry Elliot of Harwood by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ (Gervald perhaps) in 1695. In 1700 probably the same Walter was also witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig. He married Janet, daughter of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester, who was sister of James, writer in Jedburgh. Their sons were: Adam, tenant in Wauchope and purchaser of Stanedge; and William, later of Stanedge, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. There is no reason to believe he was directly connected with the later Scotts of Wauchope. He is probably the Scott of Wauchope commemorated on an elaborately carved through-stone once visible in Hobkirk kirkyard, erected by Thomas of Stonebed in 1741; the inscription apparently indicated that he was a relative of Scott of Buccleuch. Walter ‘Auld Wat’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1705 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for William Douglas of Bonedward. The entry appears to say ‘called old Watt’. He may have been related to Douglas’ wife Beatrix Scott. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Appletreehall in 1705 and as tenant there in 1711. His children included Walter (b.1705) and William (b.1711). He was probably related to William, who was also tenant in Appletreehall in 1711. Walter (d.1717) Beadle of Hawick Kirk. In 1708 he was the ‘Beddal’ who presented the illegitimate child of Margaret Brydon and William Scott to be baptised. He is recorded receiving his salary in the first year of the oldest existing Session financial records in 1711, but it is unknown how much earlier he had served. He was ‘Beddoll of ye parish’ in 1715 when he witnessed a posthumous baptism for a child of merchant Thomas ‘Huison’. In 1716 he was recorded as ‘beddel in Hawick’ when he witnessed the baptism of Robert ‘Old Mortality’, son of Walter Paterson of Burnflat; it seems that he might have been related to Walter Paterson’s wife Margaret Scott. He also witnessed another couple of baptisms in 1716. His son John succeeded him as Beadle at the end of 1717. He was listed as deceased and ‘sometimes Beddel’ in 1719 when his daughter Agnes married gardener Andrew ‘Colwort’ (or Collier). Walter of Nether Bonchester (1650–1733) eldest son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester. He succeeded his father as 3rd Laird in 1680, with the charter and sasine for Nether Bonchester being issued by the superior William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1681. He was witness to a sasine of 1693 for Gilbert Elliott of Stonebed. He also witnessed a sasine for Hobbsburn in 1693. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1699 he was entered as a Burgess of Hawick, with the payment being in the form of one of his best ash trees for the Town to use to rebuild the bell-house of the steeple of St. Mary’s. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included: Walter, who succeeded; James, who was a writer in Jedburgh; John, who was transported to America (and may sometimes be confused with John of Ashtrees); and Janet, who married Walter Scott, farmer in Wauchope. The Hobkirk Parish ‘mort-cloth’ is recorded being used for his burial. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wauchope in 1681, when he had a bond with Walter Lorraine in Harden, loaning him £3, signed at Hartshaughmill. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Beardie’ or ‘Bearded Wat’ (c.1653–1729) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Raeburn. Having Jacobite sympathies, it is said that his nickname came from a vow not to shave until the Stuarts were restored. It is said that he was a good classical scholar. He was listed as ‘brother to Raeburn’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He was a guardian to his nephew Walter, 3rd Laird of Raeburn. He is probably the Walter, brother of the deceased William of Raeburn who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He married Margaret, daughter of Campbell of Silvercrofts. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Baillieknowe; Robert of Sandyknowe, who was grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford; William, farmer at Easter Muirdean, near Kelso; Mary; Christian; and Margaret. Walter of West Port (b.c.1670) possibly 2nd son of Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Walter ‘westport’ recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he was the ‘Walter Scott Sone to Goldielands’ who rented the farm of Castlehill from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696. He married Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1701 (possibly a cousin, or otherwise this may be the only connection with the Crumhaugh and Goldielands Scotts). At the end of that year their son Walter was born, and he was to become the first Scott of Wauchope. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the other West Port Scotts, including Hawick’s second known Cornet, but the precise relationship is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son and heir of the deceased Walter of West Port, merchant in Hawick, who is recorded in 1716, with a bond he had in 1709 with Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) for the lands of Curriesleigh in Cavers Parish. These generations are quite uncertain; he may be the same as Walter ‘in Crumhaugh and Goldielands’, or perhaps distinct, but partly confused with him in some accounts. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son Robert was baptised in 1699, with witnesses Walter Scott and Thomas Beattie. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1703. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702 when his son James was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter in Cavers had a daughter Isabel baptised in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield and another for John Dryden, smith an Newmull. He was also tenant there (along with James) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and James, both in Nether Southfield, witnessed a baptism for another James Scott in the same place. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for James, who was also tenant in Nether Southfield. He may be the Walter who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He is probably the Walter who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Dand and James Gray from Whitleaw. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Binks in Cavers Parish in 1709 when he married Isobel Beattie. His wife was from Hawick Parish and was ‘servitrix’ to Bailie Graham. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Alton Croft in about 1710 according to evidence given in 1767 about the pasturing of livestock on Hawick Common. Walter of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scott of Mirrielaw’ when he rented part of Whithope in 1698. He was surely related to the slightly earlier William and the later Walter. He could be the Walter who was at Whithope in 1703 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was an elder of Roberton Kirk according to parish records from 1707. In 1713 he was ‘of merrila in the parish of Robertoun’ when one of his children was baptised in Hawick (suggesting that he was indeed farming at Whithope). In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain. Probably the same Walter ‘of merriela’ married Margaret Grieve and had a son Walter, who was baptised in 1713. The witnesses in 1713 were Water Grieve in Braunholme Park (perhaps related to his wife) and William Ogilvie in Craik. Walter (1670–bef. 1741) described as ‘in Crumhaugh’, and ‘in Goldielands’, he was 2nd son of Walter and Janet Glendinning. He was thus brother to Charles and uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh and Howparley (with whom he is easily confused). In 1700 he was ‘in Goldielands’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He is probably the Walter ‘in Crumhaugh’ who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism in 1705 for innkeeper William called ‘of Goldielands’ (who was probably related to him). He also witnessed baptisms in 1707 for William Henderson, younger in Flex and Glover James Scott, and in 1708 for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch (which his family probably owned at that time) and for Walter Grieve, tenant in Colterscleuch. In 1709 his servitor James Hogg got married. He may be the Walter ‘of Crumhagh’ recorded in 1710 in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands were valued at 400 merks. In 1716 he was described as ‘now in Hawick’ when he had a sasine for Curriesleigh in Cavers Parish, which he had been promised by Walter Scott of West Port (who was surely a relative, but demonstrating that they were not the same man). He was probably the Walter ‘of Crumhagh’ who in 1716 witnessed a baptism for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhagh. In 1720 he was ‘uncle to Wr Scott of Crumhau’ when he witnessed a baptism for another Walter, tenant in Newbigging. In 1721 he was ‘uncle to Crumhagh’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier (with his nephew Walter ‘of Crumhagh’ also being a witness in the same year). In 1728 he was granted a disposition by James Burn for the lands in Hawick called ‘Croftangry’. He is probably the Walter of Crumhagh who in 1734 was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to sort out the rebuilding of the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s. He is probably the Walter who in 1731 witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging and Anna Scott (his daughter). He may be the ‘Walter Scott, Crumhagh, a Councilour’ who was mentioned in 1735 as one of the keepers of the keys to the Charter Chest. He firstly married Christian, daughter of Robert Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1708, aged 34;
Some other children baptised around the same time may also be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Lynmiecleuch in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch. Walter (1682–1766) 2nd son of William, who settled at Milsington. He moved to Girnwood in 1712. He re-leased the lands of Girnwood from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1723 he married Jane, daughter of Philip Scott of Oakwood, and she died in 1776, aged 74. Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: William (b.1724), who married his cousin Elizabeth; Philip (b.1727); perhaps another son, whose name is not known: Jean (b.1732); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1734), who married her cousin William; Walter (b.1736), who succeeded as tenant with his brother Thomas; and Thomas (b.1742), co-tenant of Girnwood with his brother. Janet of ‘Greenwood’, who married Robert Elliot, tenant in Hermitage, may have been another daughter. Grisell (b.1726), daughter to Walter in Girnwood, was probably also his daughter. Walter of Woll (d.1744) eldest son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott of Harwood. His brother was Gideon, tenant in Ladhope. He was ‘younger, of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Gideon). He was ‘[younge]r of Woall’ in 1696 when he rented the farm of Whithope in the Borthwick valley from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was ‘younger of Woll’ when on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and in 1701 was ‘younger of Woll’ when he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden. In fact his father resigned the lands of Woll to him when he married in 1694. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for the lands of Ettrick Forest for at least the years 1702–14, taking over from John of Woll (presumably his father). He was ‘younger of Wooll’, bailie to the duchess of Buccleugh’ in 1704 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and was also probably the ‘younger of Well’ on the Commission for Roxburghshire in the same year along with his father John. And along with Walter Scott of Harden he gave 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1705, this forming part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. He was presumably a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was also a ‘curator’ for Alexander Scott of Syn- ton. He received Borthwickshiel and Roberton through a ‘wadset’ with Gideon Scott of Highcastle in 1705 and he was proprietor of these lands in 1720, when it is recorded that he arranged for an exchange of grazing rights for the convenience of the minister of Robertson. He was still ‘younger of Woll’ when he had a court case with Gideon of Highchester over ownership of lands, with the adjudication in 1707 ruling that Harden, Todshaw, Borthwick Mains, Robertson, Howcleuch, Alemoor belonged to him (as well as lands elsewhere). In 1711 he was one of the original members of the short-lived ‘Honest Country Club’. He was probably the Walter ‘of Waalls’ who had a bond with Walter of Whitfield and William of Thirlstane in 1715, and ‘of Wool’ in 1724–26 when the 3 were tutors of John Scott of Harden and made claims on the Harden estate. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He may have been the Walter ‘of Woall’ recorded in 1737 in a document relating to sums owed by the late Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1694 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’), daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He had 4 sons and 2 daughters: William, who succeeded and was Sheriff of Selkirkshire; Robert, baptised in 1696 (not 1676, as stated in some genealogies) and settled in Tomnemore (or Tammany), Londonderry; John (b.1702), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1711), baptised in Selkirk; Isobel; and Jean. In 1711 he was living ‘at present’ in Selkirk, where his son was baptised by the Rev. Lithgow of Ashkirk; the witnesses included Andrew Pringle, brother to the Laird of Clifton and Haining and several town officials of Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Alemoor. He was recorded there in 1711 and 1713, was at Easter Alemoor in 1716 and at Alemoor again in 1720. He was ‘younger in Almoure’ in 1713, suggesting that his father was also Walter. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Walter (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Christian (b.1716); twins Thomas and Bessie (b.1717); and Robert (b.1720). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1720 as ‘servitor to Mr Rot Cunningham’, the Minister of Hawick. This was when he witnessed 2 baptisms (along with John Scott, the Beadle) for ‘Fornicators’ and another (along with surgeon William Cunningham) for weaver John Anderson. Probably the same servant Walter (along with William, son to Rev. Cunningham) witnessed another baptism in 1720 for Walter Henderson. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1721 he married Agnes Gledstains in Robertson Parish. He could be the Walter in Milstington in 1722 when his son Archibald was baptised in Robertson. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newmill. He married Helen Rae and their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1726. The witnesses were Robert and William Thomson. He is probably the Walter who (along with Robert Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Thomson in 1731. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Wester Alemoor in 1734. His children included Helen (b.1733) and Mungo (b.1734). He could be the same as the earlier Walter at Alemoor, if this was a second marriage; otherwise he was that Walter’s son or other close relative. Walter (b.1696) eldest son of Walter ‘Beardie’, and grandson of the 1st Laird of Raeburn. He became tenant farmer at Baillieknoowe. He married Janet, daughter of surgeon Thomas Inglis. Their children were: Robert (b.c.1731); William (b.c.1732); Mary; and Janet. It is said that this branch of the family emigrated to America. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Selkirk. In 1727 he was ‘late tacksman of the mills of Selkirk’ when he had a receipt for money he gave to repair the mills of the Burgh of Selkirk. Walter (18th C.) tenant in Eldinhope in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Dickson in 1736, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto. Their children included: Richard (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); Richard (again, b.1745); James (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Newbigging. He is probably the Walter in Newbigging who witnessed baptisms in 1708 for John Wilson in Newbigging, in 1711 for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield, in 1713 for James Sanderson in Newbigging, in 1718 for John Nichol (who lived at Allanhaugh Mill), and in 1719 for weaver John Stevenson. He is recorded ‘in Newbigging’ in 1723 when he became an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was tenant in 1726–32 when James Robson was shepherd at Newbigging. He was also a Burgess of Hawick. He could be related to James, who was tenant at Newbigging a century earlier and Walter, who was there about a generation later. In 1716 he married Anne (or Anna), eldest daughter of Walter Scott, uncle to the Laird of Crumhaugh. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); and Robert (b.1731). Other children probably born to the same parents were Robert (b.1717), Christian (b.1722) and Helen (b.1723). The 1720 baptism was witnessed by Walter, uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh (his father-in-law) and James Davidson in Newbigging, the 1725 baptism by ‘Mr. Venice preacher’ and Gilbert Elliot in Wintonroig, and the 1731 baptism by another Walter Scott and John Glendinning. He may be the Walter in ‘New...’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Braxholme in 1728. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1725 ‘for making the lifting brod’ (i.e. collection plate) in the Bailies’ Loft of St. Mary’s. And in 1734 he put up the ‘brest in the bilife’s loft’. He was either a joiner, or possibly this was the contemporary Beadle of the same name. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whitegates’ in 1712 and for candlemaker George Turnbull in 1713. He was a Councillor in 1727 when he was ordered to refrain from using the ‘counsellors’ seat in the baillies’ loft, in respect of his twice breaking prison’ after being convicted ‘of a riot, and arrested’; he may also have been removed as a Councillor. It is possible that the same shoemaker Walter witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert (along with merchant George) in 1747. Probably the same shoemaker married Margaret Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in Hawick in 1704 and their children include John (b.1705). He also witnessed a baptism for carrier James Boyd in 1705. It seems likely that the same shoemaker married Margaret Davidson (from Wilton Parish) in Hawick in 1706, with children James (b.1707), Robert (b.1714), William (b.1718), Elizabeth (b.1720), John (b.1721) and Mary (b.1725). The witness in 1714 was Henry Orrock. The witnesses in 1718 were glover John Scott and shoemaker Robert Oliver and in 1725 were glover John (again) and wigmaker Robert Miles. Walter of Banchester (d.1743) son of Walter of Nether Banchester. He farmed along with his father until 1724, when they ended their partnership. He then farmed at Wauchope along with his brother-in-law Walter Scott, tenant in Wauchope. He succeeded his father as 4th Laird in 1733. In 1726 at Doorpool he married Helen, only daughter of Adam Turnbull, tenant at Doorpool; she was sister of Rev. William Turnbull, minister of Abbotrule. Their children included: Walter (b.1727), who died young of smallpox; Thomas of Banchester (b.1729), who succeeded and sold the Banchester estate; Adam (b.1731), who went to the West Indies and married Mrs. Thorpe; Margaret (1733–38); Rev. William (b.1735), minister at Abbotrule and Southdean; Agnes (b.1735), twin of William, who remained unmarried and lived at Gallahill, near Jedburgh; Janet (b.1737), who married John Rutherford, saddler in Jedburgh; Helen (b.1740), who died young; and Walter (b.1741). He was recorded in a document of 1756 (by which time he was surely deceased), between his 2nd (surviving) son Adam and Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law). His farm diary from the period 1730–43 is in the National Library of Scotland. Walter of Harden (d.1719) elder son of Gideon of Highchester and Harden. He inherited the Harden and Highchesters estates following the death of his father in 1707 (although some accounts claim he inherited the estates from his cousins). He must have been a minor when he succeeded, since the estates were run by his ‘tutors’ in the period 1710–19, their ‘sederunt books’ being in the National Archives. He continued to be referred to as ‘of Highchester’ until the death of his cousin Robert in 1710, when he succeeded to Mertoun and the rest of the family estates (becoming the 8th of Harden). He appears to have become bankrupt, resulting in the sale in early 1719 of his lands of Harden, Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw, Borthwickshiel, Rober- ton, Howcleuch, Easter and Wester Alemoor and others. On his death Harden passed to his brother John. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He is recorded in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps a relative), who also lived there. He was also at Hawick Shiel in 1705 and in 1706 when he witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawick Shiel. He and Simon Miller were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was in Hawick Shiel in 1709 when his won child was baptised. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel around 1710, along with Simon Miller; this was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He and Walter Nixon were tenants there in 1712 when they witnessed a baptism for William Hislop. He is probably the tenant called Scott mentioned in 1717 when he had ‘plohd. up an march corner hott standing upon the nortt side of said Common, opposite to the town of Nethr Southfield’. In 1718 he and Walter Nixon (both recorded as tenants in Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for Matthew Charlton. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1705); and Walter (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Gilbert Elliot in Nether
Scott

Southfield and glover John Hart and in 1709 were Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Walter (d.bef. 1738) doctor in Hawick. He is described as an ‘apothecarie in Hawick’ and ‘chirurgeon’ in some baptismal records. For example, in 1707 he witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull, ‘oye’ to Rev. James Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Sara Middleton and their children included: Hugh (b.1703); Gideon (b.1706), perhaps the druggist in Hawick; Mary (b.1710); James (b.1719); and Elizabeth (b.1723). The witnesses in 1703 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Shiel in Stobcote, in 1706 were Gideon of Falnash (who may therefore have had the child named in his honour) and Adam Elliot of Arkleton, in 1719 were John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and Thomas Shiel (‘apprentis to ye sd Walter’) and in 1723 were ‘Mr’ Charles Telfer and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. He is described as ‘surg-surgeon Walter Scott. He and his wife became apothecaries (or ‘chirurgeons’) like his father-in-law. Their wedding took place in Edinburgh, and may have been performed by an ex-Episcopalian clergyman, rather than being an elopement: the wedding was witnessed by John Scott of Hawick, who may have been a relative. He was ‘Junior Chyurg:’ in the baptismal record of 1730. His children with Sara Scott included: Philip (b.1723); William (b.1724); Walter (b.1730); and John (b.1731). The witnesses in 1730 were Bailie John Scott (probably related) and Francis Rucastle and in 1731 were John Scott and John Montgomery. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Simpson and their children included: Margaret (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1711). The witnesses in 1711 were carrier James Simpson (who may have been related to his wife) and flesher Thomas Waugh. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1715 in Ashkirk he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1716. The witnesses were John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and weaver Robert Turnbull. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Easter Parkhill in 1718 when his son William was baptised. Walter of Bewlie (17th/18th C.) several letters from his sister Helen survive in the period 1725–28. Walter of Whitfield and Harden (1682–1746) third son (and second surviving son) of Walter of Highchester and of Harden, Earl of Tarras. He served as factor for the family estates on the death of his brother Gideon in 1707. In 1713 he received a five-pound land of Bewlie as part of his marriage contract with the daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He was involved with Walter of Woll and William of Thirlestane (his future father-in-law) in a bond of 1715. He was Laird of Whitfield when he purchased the lands of Harden, Highchesters and Mabonlaw from other family members in 1720 (although he did not inherit the titles until later). There are dispositions to him in 1720/1 from Lady Mary Sharp, Lady Agnes Scott, Margaret Scott and Lady Mary Drummond, the female representatives of close branches of the family, relating to debts on Todshaw and Robertson. He was ‘of Whitfield being at present at Hardon’ in 1721. He sold Whitfield and Mervinslaw to Walter Scott, brother of William of Thirlestane in 1723. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He is referred to as ‘of Whitfield’ throughout the 1720s, but also lived at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. However, he was ‘of Heychesters’ in 1732 and 1733 when he had children baptised in Robertson Parish. He was one of the ‘tutors’ for his nephew John of Harden, and was involved in a legal battle over consequent claims on part of the Harden estate about 1724–26. The Harden titles eventually fell to him on the death of John in 1734, and he became the 10th Laird (sometimes referred to as 9th). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was the Laird at the time of the 1745 Jacobite rebellion, and was apparently a supporter who was at the Battle of Prestonpans. A story is told (recounted by John Anderson, blacksmith at Ettrickbridge) about his narrow escape from the dragoons, who tried to capture him when he returned in disguise to Oakwood, and were also in wait for him at Woll and Harden; although the story seems too detailed to be an invention, it is still hard to believe this of a man in his 60s. He supposedly was caught trying to board a ship in Newcastle, when a simple-minded tenant of his recognised him, but he ended up with only a heavy fine, resulting in the loss of Howford, Helmburn, Bailelee and other lands. He married 4 times: firstly to Agnes, daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield in 1709 (perhaps being the marriage recorded in Wilton in 1708); secondly Agnes, daughter of William Scott of Thirlestane (with whom he had a daughter, Christian, b.1721, baptised in Robertson Parish) in 1719; thirdly Anne, daughter of John Scott of Gorrenberry (to whom he had his heir, Walter) in 1724; and lastly Christian, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden in 1736. He paid for the bell of St. Mary’s to ring in 1723, presumably for his wife Agnes or a child, and paid for renting the Town ‘litter’ for his wife’s funeral in 1730 (presumably Anne). His younger children (with his 3rd wife) included: John (b.1729), who died young; William (b.1730), also died young; Francis of Beechwood (b.1732), baptised in Robertson; Jean; Helen, who married George Brown of Eliston in Edinburgh in 1756; and Ann (b.1733, or ‘Annie’), recorded in a land sale of 1790. He also provided for the daughters of his predecessor John of Harden in 1731. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1720 he was living at Orchard when he married Elspeth Laidlaw. Probably the same Walter was herd at Orchard in 1728 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers. It is possible that the same Walter was still at Orchard in 1737 when his son Robert was baptised. Walter (1692–1765) second son of William of Thirlestane and great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He became a wine merchant in Leith. His attorney was Robert Shortreed of Essenside when he had a sasine for Wauchope from the superior James, Lord Cranston in 1750; this was a ‘heritable bond’, although it is unclear who else was involved or if he was related to any of the other Scotts associated with Wauchope. He married Martha, daughter of Cunningham of Balbogie and also married a second time. His children included: Thomas, minister of Cavers; Walter (d.1765), a surgeon in the 10th Hussars; and Euphemia. Walter (18th C.) servant to John Elliot in Goldielands. He may be the ‘servant’ who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Mitchellhill (workman in Branxholme Town) and for Walter Inglis (servant in Crumhaugh). In 1725 he was living at Borought. He may be the Walter who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, who lived at Borought. He could also be the workman who in 1742 witnessed a baptism for Robert at Goldielands (who may have been related). In 1721 in Hawick he married Helen Turnbull, who was also a servant to John Elliot. Their children included: Helen (b.1722), baptised in Wilton; Janet (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Margaret (b.1727), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes ‘Huison’ (or Howison). Their children included Walter (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1727). He could also be the Walter, married to Agnes ‘Whitson’ whose child John was baptised in Wilton in 1717. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1713, 1724 and 1727. In 1727 he is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William at Wilton Burnfoot. In 1713 he married Mary Cockburn, who was from Alton, the proclamation being recorded in Wilton Parish. James (b.1722); Mary (b.1724); Helen (b.1726); George (b.1726); William (b.1728) and Bessie (b.1730). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter Scott and James Irvine and in 1727 were William Scott and Andrew Irvine. It is possible he was the Walter who was recorded witnessing several baptisms in the 1720s and 1730s, suggesting he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1721, 1724 and 1732. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1724 for the other Walter at Wiltonburn. He married Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Bessie (b.1718); Helen (again, b.1719); William (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); Helen (again, b.1727); William (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were William Scott and James Grieve, in 1724 were John and Walter Scott and in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden. Note that there appear to have been 2 contemporary men of the same name living at Wiltonburn. Walter of Howcleuch and Wauchope (1701–86) son of Walter and Christian Bennet of Chester. Some accounts have him as son of Walter of West Port and Jean, who was daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; it may be that there are two men compounded here. It seems that in 1725 he married his cousin Rachel, youngest sister of the then Laird of Crumhaugh, Walter Scott (however, there could be confusion here). He leased Commonside shortly before his marriage, and lived for most of his lived at Commonside House. He certainly married Rachel, daughter of Francis Elliot of Fenwick, and (as stated on the family gravestone at St. Mary’s) had 2 sons with her: Walter (b.c.1728) of Wauchope; and Charles (b.1728) of Howcleuch. Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728, with his mother’s name listed as Rachel Scott (and the witnesses being ‘Mr. Millar’ and John Scott), making the identity of the mother confusing. He is probably the Walter ‘at Commonside’ who witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741 and 1744 (suggesting he was Kirk Elder, responsible for the Teviothead area). In 1739 and 1744 he witnessed baptisms for fiddler Robert Whtson, whose wife was a Scott. In 1747 he was also ‘at Commonside’ when he witnessed a baptism for Charles of Crumhaugh (who was surely a relative of some sort). He became a prominent man in the district, whose advice was often sought out. Like other men in a similar position, he also acted as a money lender. In 1755 he bought Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from Rev. Simon Halliburton. He was probably the Walter of Commonside recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He is probably the Walter at Commonside who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hutton in 1762. He was ‘Senior’ of Commonside in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He bought Wauchope in 1767 at public auction (from James Cranston, 6th Lord Cranston), thus becoming the 1st Scott Laird of Wauchope. However, he did not live at these estates he had acquired, but gave them to his 2 sons, Walter and Charles. Walter inherited Wauchope, while Howcleuch went to Charles. In 1784 he retired from farming and gave over his property to his 2 sons, presumably dying not many years later. In 1785 he still paid the land tax on Howcleuch. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary’s. Walter of Raeburn (d.1707) eldest son of William of Raeburn. In 1703 he married Anne, 3rd daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Isobel; and Anne. In October 1707 he attended a dinner in Selkirk with other local landowners and got into a dispute (perhaps over the Union) with Mark, youngest son of Andrew Pringle of Crichton. They fought a duel with swords and he was killed, the location being afterwards known as Raeburn’s Meadow. His killer fled abroad, becoming a merchant in Spain and later British Consul there. Walter (18th C.) married Ann Scott in Hawick in 1716. Walter (18th C.) married Ann Scott in Cavers in 1724. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick Shiel. His wife was ‘Maray Gladstons’ and their son Robert was baptised in 1726, with witnesses James Grieve and John Scott. Perhaps the same resident in Hawick Shiel in 1728 married Margaret, daughter of ‘Dand’ Gray, tenant in Weensland; their daughter Margaret was born in 1741. Probably the same Walter in Hawick Shiel had a daughter Janet baptised in Cavers in 1732. Walter (18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas of Whitslade and brother of John. He is probably the ‘brother German to the Laird of Whiteslade’ whose child Helen ‘begoten in fornication Within ye paroch of Askirk’ was baptised in Hawick in 1716. The mother of the child was Elizabeth, daughter to carrier Robert Wilson, it was presented for baptism by tailor Walter Kay and the witnesses were John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and weaver Robert Turnbull. In 1727–29 he was involved in legal proceedings with Walter Scott of Whitfield (latter of Harden), probably over debts incurred by his brother John. In 1734 he was described as ‘late of Whitslade’ when he was accused for the 5th time of refusing to undergo penance and was excommunicated by the Synod. He must also have been related to the Dr. Robert, who lived in Hawick, possibly his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at ‘Wester P…’ (probably Parkhill) in 1733 when his daughter May was baptised. He is probably related to other Scotts who were at Parkhill. He could be the Walter who was at Milsingtonshiel in 1741 when his son Henry was baptised (and was therefore perhaps related to the earlier James at Milsingtonshiel). Walter (18th C.) wright in Hawick, youngest son of Walter, who was brother of Charles of Crumhaugh near the end of the 17th century. His mother would have been Elizabeth Scott. He is probably the wright who witnessed a baptism for Bailie James in 1730. He may be the Walter, wright in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1743 he was described as a wright when he registered a sasine for a tenement of land ‘and onstead of houses in Hawick’ to his brother Robert, these lands having been ‘dispone’d in 1730. He is perhaps the wright called Walter who witnessed a baptism (for Robert Oliver, shoemaker) in 1738, others for mason Andrew Wilson, Bailie Gideon Ruecastle, ‘messenger’ William Wilson, tailor John Turnbull and weaver Andrew Simpson in 1743. He may have been deceased in 1743 when his brother Robert gained the lands of ‘Croftangry’ from him; whether this is the same as the ‘tenement’ mentioned above is uncertain. He could be the wright called Walter recorded in the list for paying tax on 18 windows in Hawick in 1748. Walter (18th C.) brother of William of Thirlestane. In 1723 he is described as ‘in Sourhope’ when he purchased Whitfield and Mervinslaw from Walter Scott of Whitfield. Walter (b.1700) farmer at Commonside. He leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates, along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, in 1733 (taking over from the Murray family). His father had married Christine Bennet of Chesters, and he was uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer. Since there was another Walter who farmed Commonside at about the same time, some of this information may be confused. He also appears to have been confounded (e.g. by Tancred) with Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope. He could be the Walter in Commonside, married to Helen Hogg, whose daughter Rachel was baptised in Hawick in 1726; the witnesses were William Harkness and William Scott. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Bettie’ or ‘Bessie’) Scott in 1721. Their children included: Anne (b.1728); and Elspeth (b.1730). The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were Bailie Walter Purdom and Bailie Scott ‘Senior’ (who may be related). Walter of Cockerheugh (d.bef. 1743) son of John, he was a descendant of the Scotts of Brieryyards. In 1705 Isobel Waugh appeared before the Wilton Kirk Session to confess to being pregnant with his child; she sat in the place of repentance and paid a small fine, with him paying £4 Scots as a penalty. He inherited Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) from his John in 1721. The 1720 records for Wilton Parish state that 12 shillings was collected for ‘Walter Scott of cockerheugh for his proclamation’, presumably meaning his marriage. His sister married Walter Scott (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’) in 1721 (this probably being the next entry in the Wilton register, for ‘Walter Scott in Havick’). In 1724 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for James in Whitehaugh and Janet Scott (and hence may have been related to one of them). He sold Cockerheugh to the Duke of Roxburgh in 1734. However he is still ‘of Cockerheugh’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism for James, miller at Crawhill. He is described as ‘late of Cockerheugh’ in a record of 1743, involving Adam Scott and Anthony Turnbull of Knowe. Walter ‘Wyndheid’ (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed as ‘taylor in Hawick’ in the 1723 baptismal record and ‘Walter Scott Wyndhead’ in 1725. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of James Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); and Bessie (b.1726). The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and smith James Scott (who were perhaps related to him and his wife). He was probably also related to the later ‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’. He is easy to confuse with another tailor called Walter, who married Bessie Scott. Walter of Merrylaw (18th C.) perhaps son of the William who was tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 or Walter of Merrylaw who is recorded around 1700. He leased Eilrig from Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1730 and leased the lands of Craik and Whinneycleuch from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Rev. William was probably his son. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Walter (b.c.1700) ploughman in Hawick Parish. He worked at Goldielands from 1715, serving several tenants (except for 5 years) through until 1767 when he moved to Langlands. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of Hawick Common; he was said to be in his 60s and married at that time. Walter (b.c.1710) eldest son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He served in the Horse Guards. In 1732 he married Jane, only daughter and heiress of William Robson of High Stokoe, Northumberland. They had about a dozen children, those surviving being: Dr. William (b.1733) of Stokoe, who compiled a family tree of that branch, including information on the Scotts of Synton, Whitslade and Todrig; Patrick, a doctor who settled on the Isle of Man; Mary, who married John Best; and Jane, who married Paul Blakey. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Minto in 1743. Walter (18th C.) described in 1743 as ‘late Baillie Depute’. He was probably the Baron’s officer within Hawick. His wife was Agnes Paisley (or ‘Paslaw’) and their children included: Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); Thomas (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); Agnes (again, b.1738); Agnes (again, b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); Jean (again, b.1743); and James (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were writer James Weir and mason Andrew Turnbull, senior. Walter (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Gardner. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); Thomas (b.1726); Janet (b.1732); Agnes (b.1737); and John (b.1740). The witnesses in 1726 were shoemaker John Scott and candlemaker John Scott and in 1740 were glover John Scott and merchant James Sanderson. Walter (18th C.) son of Walter in Synton Mill. He is recorded in a legal disposition of 1759. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitehaugh in 1729 and at just ‘Wilton’ in 1737. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1729); Adam (b.1732); Anne (b.1734); Isabel (b.1737); Elspeth (b.1740); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife, perhaps the Laird of Whitehaugh and his brother the minister) and in 1737 were James Simpson (soon to be minister of Wilton and Thomas ‘Cayle’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnfoot in 1735 and 1737. He married Bessie Leyden in 1734 and their children included: Helen (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); Margaret (b.1740); and Jean (b.1743). The witnesses in 1735 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). Walter (18th C.) recorded at Crook in 1745 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. His wife’s surname was ‘Leaden’ (presumably Leyden). His children included: Adam (b.1745); and William (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were wright Robert Pringle and Kirk Officer John Telfer; Pringle had a child baptised on the same day, and he reciprocated as witness. The witnesses in 1747 were weavers William Roger and William Turnbull. Walter (18th C.) listed ‘in Fineshi’ (i.e. Falnash) when the paid the window tax (for 11 windows) in Hawick Parish in 1748. He may be the same as one of the other Walters (e.g. Walter of Wauchope and Howcleuch, who farmed at Commonside and married a Scott of Falnash). In 1743 he was ‘In Falnash’ when he witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to the Teviothead area). In 1744 he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter at Commonside) for fiddler Robert Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1743 as ‘Soldier’. If this is a nickname, then he may be a descendant of the earlier John ‘Young Sodger’; however, it could be his occupation. He married Elizabeth Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1743, with witnesses Kirk Officer John Telfer and shoemaker William Scott. The same couple may also have been parents of Charles (b.1741), with witnesses workman John Gledstains and Kirk Officer John Telfer; he was recorded in 1741 as tenant at Crumhaugh (and so may be related to earlier Scotts of Crumhaugh). It is possible (although unlikely that he is the same man in Newbigging, whose wife was also Elizabeth Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newbigging in Hawick Parish. He may have been related to the Walter who was at Newbigging a generation earlier. He could be the Walter, tenant in Newbigging, who was admitted as a heritable Burgess of Hawick in 1756. His wife was Elizabeth (or Betty) Scott and their children included: William (b.1756); Archibald (b.1758); Ann (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1758 were William Rae and William Mair and in 1762 were ‘student’ John Laurie and Walter Cavers. He is probably the Walter from Newbigging who witnessed baptisms for another Walter (perhaps a relative, married to Agnes Laidlaw) in 1760 and 1761. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘late in Newbigging’ whose son James died in Hawick in 1798. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Millholm in Castleton Parish. When there was a large gathering of seceders at Snaberlee in the early 1750s, he tried to claim the collection for the poor of the Parish, but the case was thrown out by Sir Gilbert Elliott in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter of Boghall (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when he witnessed a baptism for Richard (perhaps his son) and Mary Rutherford. Probably the same Walter was in Boghall in 1742 and 1748; he married Janet Dickson in 1736 and their children included Richard (b.1739), Robert (b.1742), Richard (again, b.1745), James (b.1748) and Margaret (b.1751). The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Scott (perhaps related) and George Hood. Walter (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He is one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott (probably related), recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He paid tax on 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the Bailie Walter recorded in 1755 when the costs of a meeting in his place ‘when getting the new stocks’ were 6 pence. ‘Bailie John’ was also there and possibly this was also a Scott and perhaps related. He may also have been the Bailie Walter paid for work on the ‘book-board in the tolbooth’ in 1755 and given part payment for building the Herd’s House (suggesting that this Walter may have been a builder of some sort). He married Christian Deans and their children included: James (b.1735); William (b.1738); Jean (b.1741); Jean (again, b.1744); Beatrix (b.1746); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant William Oliver and ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the deceased Bailie and skinner recorded in 1811 when his son William died. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Whitfield in 1748. He married Ann Storie in Kirkton in 1745. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1748), with witnesses being another Walter Scott and James Dryden. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Jane (or Jean) Scott and their children included: Henry (b.1757); Walter (b.1759); and Andrew, William and Mary (b.1761), baptised on the same day. The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert (merchant) and Andrew (shoemaker), who were probably related to him. Walter (d.1810) tailor, nicknamed ‘Wattie o the Wyndeheid’. He must have been related to the Walter ‘Wyndhead’ recorded earlier in the 18th century. He was probably the tailor of that name who was recorded as son of the deceased John ‘Wyndhead’ on the 1810 death register. His shop was located near the top of what became known as Walter’s Wynd (after him). The death of his daughter Margaret is recorded in the Parish register for 1805. He could be the tailor in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia; if so then he was born in the 1770s. Walter (18th C.) only son of Francis, wig-maker of Hawick. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1760. Walter ‘Black Wat’ (18th C.) Cornet in 1765. It is possible he was related to the earlier ‘Black Walter’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Robertson, who was from

Wilton Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1767); Archibald (b.1770); John (b.1772); and Thomas (b.1784). The witnesses in 1767 were Wright James (probably a relative) and shoemaker John Oliver and in 1772 were another Walter and James. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) founder of a joiner's firm on Buccleuch Street, Walter Scott & Son, established in 1750. The firm moved into the former Grammar School building around 1886. It is possible that he could be the Walter son of Hawick surgeon Walter who became a writer's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1732. He is probably the writer who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter in 1766. It seems likely that he was the same writer Walter who married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Laidlaw in 1760 and had children: Walter (b.1761); Margaret (b.1762); William (b.1765); Thomas (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1776). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1766 were baker John Osburn and weaver George Paterson. He could also be the writer Walter whose son George was a weaver listed on the ballot for men to serve in the Militia in 1797 and 1798. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Laidlaw in 1760 and their children included William (b.1760) and William (again, b.1761). The witnesses in 1760 were another Walter from Newbigging and cooper Robert Paterson and in 1761 were Walter from Newbigging (again) and William Scott. It is possible that his wife was the 'Agness Scott' spouse to Walter Do. Newbigging' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. Walter of Raeburn (18th C.) son of William, he was the 5th Laird. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Rutherfurd of Edgerston' among the voters of Roxburghshire and was also a voter in Selkirkshire. He paid the Horse Tax at Raeburn in the 1780s. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of lands in Liddesdale Parish. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his son William, junior of Raeburn). In 1772 he married Jean, 3rd daughter of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. She was the sister of his sister's husband. Their children were: William (1773–1855), who succeeded; Robert (1774–1837); Hugh of Draycott, Derby (1777–1852); Walter (d.1802); John (d.1832); and Barbara. Walter (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. In 1761 he married Catherine Turnbull (from Hawick), the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hawick Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish, with the last one in Hawick), included: Charles (b.1762); Euphan (b.1764); Robert (b.1765); John (b.1770); Helen (b.1772); Walter (b.1775); and John (b.1776). The witnesses in 1772 were John Lillico and Walter Rae and in 1773 was also writer for Walter Rae (at Whitfield). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1700s, where he took over from Thomas Wilson. There he taught a young John Leyden. However, after only a year or two he moved, apparently for a better position elsewhere and was succeeded by Andrew Scott. He was schoolmaster in 1787 when his daughter Peggy was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Walter of Harden (1724–1793) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1746. He is the 11th Laird (sometimes called the 10th) of Harden. He sold part of the Harden estates in 1751 to pay his father's debts. In 1754 he had a charter to the lands of Bawlie in Lilliesleaf. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1747–65, then serving as cashier of Excise in Scotland until his death (this excluding him from having a vote in the elections). There are documents of 1756 and 1760 in which he was promoting the idea of a twice weekly mail service between Edinburgh and Border towns. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (and is probably the 'John' of Harden in the Selkirkshire list). He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire. In 1779 he sold the liferent of his property in Belses, as well as Mabonlaw and 'Whinny park' to Charles, younger of Woll (although with feu-right to John Pringle of Clifton). In 1785 he paid the land tax on lands in Yarrow Parish, as well as Oakwood in Selkirk Parish. In about 1788 he was owner of the lands of Harden in Wilton Parish, as well as part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 he is listed as one of the voters in Roxburghshire, being described privately as being a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch in the election and having married a sister of the Earl of Marchmont, 'but has been struck out of the Earl's settlements on account of a political dispute with him'. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, although deceased by then) as owner of Harden, West Highchesters, 'Dunsbush', Mabonlaw and 'Highchesters Whinny-park' (valued at £814), as well as part of Bawlie (valued at £465 5s) and lands in Maxton (valued at £163 10s) and Smailholm Parishes (valued at £1808 10s). His 1754 marriage to Lady Diana Home Campbell (daughter of Hugh, 3rd Earl of Marchmont and Baron Polwarth) gave the Polwarth title to the Scotts of Harden. Their children were: Walter, who died young; Hugh, who succeeded; Anne (d.1819), who is recorded passing land to her mother and brother in 1797; and Diana. His widow, Lady Diana, lived at Woodside near Kelso. Portraits of him and his wife were painted in 1756. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797. Walter of Wauchope (1728–96) son of Walter in Commonside. The identity of his mother is unclear, since his baptism states that she was Rachel Scott (who is suggested to have been from the Crumhaugh Scotts), but the by the inscription in St. Mary’s Kirkyard states she was Rachel Elliot of Fenwick. He was baptised in Hawick in early 1728, although some accounts say he was born in 1726. In 1767 he purchased Wauchope and Longhaugh, the money being supplied by his father (and the arrangement being that he had to yield the properties to his father if he wanted). On the death of his father he became the 2nd Scott Laird of Wauchope. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Esnesside in 1778. In 1768 he married Elizabeth (“Betty”), daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope. His wife was known for her artistic and poetic abilities, and was the subject of a verse-epistle from Burns. It was said that he did not share many of his wife’s interests, and had ‘rather a morose temper’. She died in 1789 and he secondly married Beatrix, daughter of Gideon Scott of Priesthaugh, who died in 1807 at Priesthaugh. He farmed at Wauchope from shortly after his father purchased the estate in 1767, and took over ownership more formerly when Walter senior retired in 1784. He was recorded as owner of Wauchope in 1788, the estate being valued at £1433 6s 8d. He was taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1786–89, for having horses in the period 1786–94, for having a male servant (a footman) in 1786 and in 1792–94, and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. He was Laird of Wauchope when Burns visited in 1787. Having no children of his own, he was succeeded by his brother Charles. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary’s. Walter, W.S. (1729–99) eldest son of Robert of Sandyknowe, and descended from the Scotts of Raeburn. He became Writer to the Signet in 1755. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1758 he married Anne, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford. Their children were: Robert, John, Robert and Walter, who all died young; Robert (b.1767), a Naval Captain, who died unmarried; John (1768–1816); Sir Walter of Abbotsford; Thomas (1774–1823), who died in Canada, and whose son Walter was the only nephew of Sir Walter; Daniel (1775–1806); Anne and Jean, who died in infancy; and Anne. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wauchope. He was recorded at Tandlaw in 1758. He married Janet Grieve in 1755 and their children included: Robert (b.1758); Jean (b.1759); Helen (b.1762); Walter (b.1764); Robert (again, b.1766); William (b.1769); James (b.1771); and George (b.1773). The witnesses in 1758 were Sir Gilbert Elliott and George ‘Mercel’. Walter (18th C.) resident at Borthwickshiels when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1763 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1765 when his daughter Beatrix was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter was at Parkhead in 1767 when his daughter Kathrine was baptised. There are many other children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Walter (1736–1818) 3rd son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Thomas he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy later passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. He was recorded as farmer at Girnwood on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs at Girnwood in 1797. Walter of Newton (18th/19th C.) probably Laird of Chamberlain Newton. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism, along with Patrick, younger of Alton; this was for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott, suggesting that Janet may have been related to him. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Agnes Watson and their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Anne (b.1737); Francis (b.1739); John (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Susanna (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie John and writer James Weir. In 1767 his daughter Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth) married John Scott of Whitehaugh; she was his eldest daughter and co-heir. Perhaps he was son of the earlier Walter of Newton. George ‘brother to the laird of Newton’, who signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgell and Jean Elliot of Harwood, may have been his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 in Roberton Parish he married Margaret Nichol. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Ekron in 1765. Their children included: Isabel (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768); Alice (b.1769); and James (b.1771). The witnesses in 1766, 1768 and 1771 were merchants Andrew Scott and James Ekron, who were probably his father (or brother) and father-in-law. Based on the naming convention his parents were probably Andrew and Alice. He could be the merchant Walter who (along with merchant Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William Philip and Mary Scott in 1772. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Margaret Dryden in 1763. Their children included: James (b.1765); William (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1767). The witnesses in 1766 were wright Walter and baker William Elliot. Walter (18th C.) resident of Rober-ton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1769 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1778); Walter (again, b.1786); and Janet (b.1788). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Abbotrule. His daughter Jeanie was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1776. He may also be the Walter whose other children baptised in Southdean were Peggy (b.1773) and James (1774). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary local teachers. Capt. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1742–1809) eldest son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and Christian Anderson. He was the last of the Scotts of Crum-haugh. He was born at Midshiels and died without issue. He may be the Capt. Scott of ‘Gauldilands’ whose daughter Charlotte was ‘begotten in fornication’ with Isobel Scott in Longtown in 1766 and christened in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may also be the Walter who is recorded as tenant in Crumhaughhill in 1797, paying tax on 6 farm horses. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1769); James (again, b.1775); Robert (b.1780); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1781 were Walter Scott and Archibald Scott (who were surely related). Walter (18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1776 and 1779. His children included Robert (b.1776) and Janet (b.1779). Walter (18th C.) Church Officer in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Coldhouse in 1780. He married Isobel Gray in 1780 and their son Charles was baptised later the same year, with witnesses ‘Mr’ William Scott (perhaps the minister at Southdean) and James Scott. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘Red Watt’ in 1781 when his daughter Ann died in Hawick. He could be related to the earlier man with the same nickname, who was tenant in Chapelhill. Perhaps the same Walter married Margaret ‘Robison’ and had children Adam (b.1776) and Ann (b.1779) baptised in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) resident of Com-monside. He married Sarah Paterson and their son James was baptised in 1782, with the As-sociate Congregation as witnesses. He could be the same as one of the other Walters associated with Commonside. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Dykes in 1786 when his son John was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highch-esters in 1786 when his daughter Nelly was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident at Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William (b.1792) and John (b.1796), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, were probably also his sons. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs and 3 farm horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hood in Wilton Parish in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) surgeon in Hawick, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn. His son Thomas was described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick in 1808. Walter (18th C.) listed as footman at Waugh-ope in 1792, when he was working for Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) from Ewes, he served as schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the period 1795–99. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant in Wester Essen-side. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Subst.’ suggests that someone else served in his place. His name appears again in 1798 and in early 1799 John Cook from Lessuden acted as substitute for him. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Drinkstone. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. Walter of Merry-law (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He is pro-bably the son of Rev. William born in Southdean in 1767. It is unclear how he acquired Merrylaw, or whether he had a direct connection to the earlier Scotts of Merrylaw. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Isabel (or ‘Tibbie’) Ainslie in 1795. She died in Hawick in 1840, when he was recorded at ‘Kirk-town Coat’. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His daughter Betty died in 1808. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Boonraw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 horses. He is probably the Walter who married Janet, daughter of Robert Ormiston, tenant at Boonraw, and who emigrated to New York state in about 1825. It is possible he was the Walter recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Reid in Wilton in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Rulewater, he was a shepherd at Craik in about 1820. In 1822 at Harwoodsidefoot he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Elliot and Magdalene Thomson. They emigrated to America in 1823. Walter (18th/19th C.) owner of 2 horses at Newbigging in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He may have been a descendant of the Walter who was at Newbigging earlier in the 18th century. The elderly Catherine (nee Hume) at Newbigging in 1841 may have been his wife, with William and the younger Catherine his children. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Priesthaugh in 1785–94. He is also recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £28 1s) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Patrick Cunningham’s Lands’, valued at £10 18s 6d. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters, and perhaps related to John, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. By about 1874 his lands had been divided among Alexander Laing, Alexander Michie, James Mudie, the heirs of John Hargreaves, the Roman Catholic Church, James Kyle, the heirs of William Scott, John Fiddes Wilson, Mrs. Agnes Oliver, Walter Grieve, the heirs of Mrs. Charles Scott, John Wilson, the heirs of William Wood, Janet Brown, Mrs. Rodgie and James Oliver; this gives an indication of the extent of the lands. Walter (b.c.1780) local farmer. He married Ann Purdom in Cavers in 1813 and their children included: Mungo (b.1815), baptised in Hawick Parish; Mary (b.1817, Hawick); and John (b.1822, Cavers). In 1841 he was living at Greenbank Haugh in Robertson Parish with his children John and Mary, along with the older Isobel Purdom (probably his mother-in-law) and young Thomas Hogg. Next door was pauper Isobel (perhaps his sisiter) and his son Mungo. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded being ‘of Haggishaugh’ in about 1874 when he was owner of part of Burnflat. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Roadside’ in 1791. He married Betty Douglas, and their son Robert was baptised in 1791, with witnesses Hector and Peter Blaikie. Walter (1761–1843) born at Parkhill in Robertson Parish, he was son of William and Margaret Hobkirk. A family legend states that they are related to ‘Old Mortality’ (Robert Paiterson) through Margaret Scott at Burnflat (and this could have been Paiterson’s mother). He could be the ‘Walter Scott, Parkhill’, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He moved into Hawick and worked as a handloom weaver, living in Wilton. In 1797 he is recorded living at Lokieshedge, when one of his children was baptised ‘before the Antiburger Congregation’. In 1795 he married Elizabeth (1762–1844), daughter of John Biggar from Wilton. He was living at Dovemount (about 34 Princes Street) along with his wife and probably 2 grandchildren in 1841. Their children were: Margaret (b.1785); William (b.1788), who became a businessman in New York; Catherine (b.1789); John (b.1791); Robert (b.1793), who moved to Ohio; Margaret, ‘Peggy’ (b.1794–1867), who also moved to Ohio; Charles (b.1797); Walter (b.1799), who married Elizabeth Renwick and lived in Hawick; Sarah (b.1805); and Sarah (b.1807–88), who married Richard Purdie in Hawick. He died at Dovemount. Walter (1764–1837) 2nd son of William in Milsingtonhaugh and at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798 and 1800. He was later tenant of Girnwood. In 1798 he married Mary Wilson. Their children (baptised in Robertson) included: William (b.1793), also tenant in Girnwood, who married Ann Laidlaw; James of Allanshaws (b.1795), who succeeded his uncle William as tenant at Milston, and was also a cattle-dealer on the Crescent; Walter of Newton (b.1798), who married an Elliot of Harwood; Annie (b.1800); Thomas (b.1802), who went to America; and Henry, who farmed at Eilrig and died in Hawick. Walter of Whitehaugh (1769–1841) eldest surviving son of John of Whitehaugh. He trained as a surgeon and practised for many years. He could be the ‘Mr Walter Scott whitehaugh’ who witnessed a baptism for James Scott (perhaps a relative) and Mary Turnbull in 1793. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still ‘Junior of Whitehaugh’. He was probably the Walter of Whitehaugh who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed in 1835–41 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He was also listed among the local gentry on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his younger brother James, together with Christian Chisholme and 2 female servants. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. He is buried at Whitehaugh Aisle ‘in this spot selected by himself’. Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Redford and their children included David (b.1809) and Francis (b.1811). Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). Walter (c.1780–bef. 1851) grocer and spirit merchant of 6 Sandbed. He is probably the Walter listed as a grocer at Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and a ‘victual dealer’ in 1837. He was still on Buccleuch Street in the 1841 census. He married Isabella Anderson and their children were said to include: Margaret (b.1803), who married grocer John Hume; Charles (b.1805); greengrocer Thomas ‘Sly Tamnie’ (b.1810); Charles (b.1814), probably died young; Isabella (b.1816); and Christian (b.1818). However, they are surely the couple of the same names whose children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (b.1805), Robert (b.1808), Thomas (b.1810), Janet (b.1812), Janet (again, b.1814), Isabel (b.1816), Christian (b.1818) and Walter (b.1821). He is secondly said to have married another Isabella (Hogg), and their children were: Charles, also a spirit merchant; Jessie (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1829), probably died young; Walter (b.1831), chemist in Durham; Robert (b.1833); Mary Ann (b.1835); and Andrew (b.1839), Burgh Assessor. The recorded children of this couple, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). His widow Isabella was living at 8 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and 1861, and continued the grocer’s shop. He is probably the Walter Scott, ‘Newroad’ whose son died in 1829. He may be the ‘servant’ of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) who witnessed his will in 1808. Sir Walter of Abbostford (1771–1832) world famous writer. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Walter and Anne Rutherford, but on account of ill-health, spent much of his childhood at his grandfather’s house at Sandyknowe in the Borders, where he recuperated from polio. He was descended from ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, and learned much about Borders history and lore in his youth. He wrote a great deal of poetry and effectively established the form of the historical novel. ‘The Lay of the Last Minstrel’ is set at Branxholme, and many other books have a local flavour, if romanticised somewhat. His ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1802, with subsequent volumes and enlarged editions, first published in Kelso) was instrumental in preserving many Border ballads and establishing them as international literature (although again he is criticised for rewriting some of them himself). He helped popularise the ‘shepherd’s-check’ trousers, which assisted the development of the Borders knitwear industry. He made 7 annual trips into Liddesdale in the 1790s. He was appointed as Principal Clerk of Session in 1806, and was created a Baronet in 1820. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for the first real Scots dictionary, compiled by his friend John Jamieson. Several legal letters to him are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His authorship of the ‘Waverley’ novels remained a secret for 22 years, being revealed in 1827. Although by all accounts amiable to all classes, he was not locally popular among the ordinary Borderers, partly because he was a Sheriff and also an anti-Chartist. Around Hawick and Selkirk he was also rumoured to have helped entice the Gala men to switch sides at the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’. His carriage was reputedly stoned during the 1831 election in Jedburgh, apparently by a group of about 1,000 Hawick weavers (although some reports dispute this). With financial support from the Duke of Buccleuch, he led efforts to preserve Melrose Abbey. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He wrote the lines ‘Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The glaring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along the wild and willow’d shore’, and Hawick is further mentioned in the ‘Lay . . .’ in the lines ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round; In Hawick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night’. In 1797 he married Margaret Charlotte (who he met by chance at Gilsland, and married 4 months later), daughter of Jean Charpentier of Lyons. Their children were: Walter, 2nd Baronet (1801–47), who died without issue; Charles (1805–41), died in Tehran; Charlotte Sophia, who married John Gibson Lockhart; and Anne (d.1833). He was buried at Dryburgh Abbey and his house at Abbotsford became a museum. His court-room on Selkirk square is also a museum. The Gothic-style Scott Monument on Princes Street in Edinburgh was built 1840–44, is 200 feet 6 inches high and contains a marble statue of the writer at the base. There is also a Doric column topped by a statue in Glasgow, as well as the life size statue in Selkirk square. A celebration for his centenary birthday was held at Brunxholme, with a procession, speeches, toasts and songs. He was apparently editing the memoirs of Rev. Dr. John Young of Hawick when he was suffering some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. He went to the Mediterranean to recuperate, but returned to die at Abbotsford. Scott Crescent in Burnfoot was named after him in 1952 – ‘O Scott! with whom, in youth’s serenest prime, I wove with careless hand the fairy rhyme’ [JL], ‘Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in ‘Dryburgh Bowers’, Whose genius hallowed every spot In this dear land of ours’ [JT], ‘Like a loved ghost thy fabled flood Fleets through the dusky land; Where Scott, come home to die, has stood, My feet returning stand’ [Alg]. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Newcastle-<region>ton according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (b.c.1769) joiner in Newcastle-<region>. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories as a wright there. In 1841 he was living at about 41 North Hermitage Street. Walter (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His father-in-law Robert Anderson died in 1819. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmans Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls in 1811 he is recorded as owner of parts of Wauchope, called Common, Hauklawtongues (or Wauchope-head), Wauchope-rig and Wigg. There is a story told (in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’) of how, on the road to Hawick in 1813, he came upon an old man who had been recently attacked, and with the help of a local ploughman (William Little) tracked down the robber, who was later hanged for his crime; the report in the Scots Magazine for 1813 states that the man attacked was 101 years old, and that the attacker was sentenced to transportation for robbery. It is said that he was generally slow to make up his mind, but known for his common sense and an authority on parish business. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1828. He was nephew of Walter Dickson, merchant of Edinburgh, and so was related to the Hassendean and Hawick Dicksons. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed as ‘Independent’, and the house had 3 servants and in 1851 was listed as ‘J.P. Landed Prop.’, employing 2 labourers. Also in 1851 he examined the memorial stones of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in St. Mary’s Kirk, including that of Christian Bennet, who was his great-grandmother. He was said to be a keen supporter of the Hobkirk Baa, riding on his grey horse to encourage the ‘uppies’ side. In 1812 he married Marion, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Shorthope in Selkirkshire. Their children were: a daughter (b.1813), who probably died in infancy; Charles (1814–17); Thomas (1816–62), who succeeded and changed his surname to Macmillan-Scott; Walter (1817–44), who worked for the East India Company; Charles (1819–95), who farmed at Lintalee, and succeeded his uncle Archibald to Howcleuch; Archibald (1822–62), who died in Malta; and Anne, who also died in infancy. He died at Wauchope and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. A portrait of his wife Marion was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon. Walter ‘Wat o the Knowe’ (b.1786/7) claimed to be a descendant of Walter Scott of Goldielands, he farmed at ‘the Knowe’ (now Bowanhill) near Teviothead. His family had previously been farmers at Newbigging on the edge of Hawick Common. His sister Agnes married mason John Armstrong from Wilton Dean and he had another sister who was grandmother of William Murray, gardener at Borthwickehils. He was recorded at ‘Hendersons Knowe’ in 1841. In 1851 he was a farmer of 630 acres at Bowanhill, employing 3 labourers, and in 1861 it was 650 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was still there in 1868. His toddler ladle is in the Museum, and he is buried in the aisle of St. Mary’s (with special permission of the Duke of Buccleuch). His housekeeper’s headstone at Teviothead is curtly inscribed ‘Tibbie Bell, Wat’s housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69’. He died unmarried. Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Henderson’s Knowe on the 1841 census. He may have been related to Henry and Francis, who were labourers in the same place in 1799. Walter (b.1790/1) farmer at Wiltonburn. He is probably son of the earlier Walter from Wiltonburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 450 acres. His wife was Elizabeth and children included Margaret R., Walter, Elizabeth, Douglas, Walter D., Williamina J.N. and Ann T. Walter (b.c.1790) farm steward at Todshawhaugh according to the 1841 census. Walter (1790/1–1853) born in Cavers Parish, he became a shepherd at Singdean. He had been shepherd at Hyndlee to James Davidson, also called ‘Dandie Dinnmont’, and was a keen fox hunter. He married Elspeth ‘Eppy’ Telfer, who died in 1881, aged 80. The couple had 5 boys and 5 (surviving) girls: Walter (b.1820); Helen (b.1822), who married Andrew Amos; James (b.1824); Margaret (1826–43); Jean (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); John (b.1832); William (b.1834); Anne Elliot (b.1836); Christian E. (b.1840); and Eppy (b.c.1842). 2 of his sons were also shepherds and another was a gamekeeper. He is probably the Walter at Singdean appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of family there 1835–41. It is said that he came across a French doctor who had settled in Scotland after the Peninsula War, and from him learned the secret of a herbal plaster that could cure cancer. This cure became quite famous at the time, and people would come from all around to try the cure. One particular story concerns the apparently successful treatment of a huge tumour on the wife of a tradesman from Galashiels. His son Andrew was shepherd at Twislehope, and carried on the secret. It is possible he was the Walter born to Walter in Kirkton in 1790. He and his wife were buried in Newcastleton. Walter (b.1792/3) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 15 acres there. His son was a teacher at Hermitage and he also had a daughter Esther. He was appointed an elder of Castleton Kirk in 1832. He is listed as male head of family at Netherraw in 1835–41. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1822 he married Janet Roxburgh in Hawick. Walter of Newton (b.1798/9) 3rd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood. He is said to have married an Elliot of the Harwood branch, possibly Helen in Hawick in 1838; this seems likely to have been Helen (b.c.1794), daughter of Walter in Hermitage. His daughter Margaret Ann married Andrew Scott, who was afterwards of Newton. He is probably the cattle-dealer of that name recorded on the Crescent along with James (who would have been his brother) in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1000 acres at Satchells. In 1861 he was farming 385 acres at Newton and employing 10 people there; his wife was Helen (b.c.1797), from Newcastleton, and his nephew George Ballantyne was farm overseer. He was still recorded at Newton in an 1868 directory. His wife Helen ‘Elliot or Scott’ was recorded as owner of Newton in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Walter ‘Watty’, ‘Wattie Scott the Carrier’ (d.1857) owner of a carriers business in Hawick. His stabling and yard were at the west side of where the Liberal Club was built, 78 High Street; this was referred to as ‘Wood Yard’ in the 1841 census, and he shared the premises with another carrier, James Best. His firm carried general goods to Berwick and elsewhere. He may be the Walter listed in 1837, leaving from the Grapes for Glasgow every other Tuesday, and for Langholm every other Thursday, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. He may be the Walter listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He was also listed in 1852 going to Carlisle, Langholm and Longtown every Monday and Wednesday, Jedburgh and Kelso on Mondays and Fridays, and Selkirk, Melrose and Galashiels on Tuesdays and Fridays. His son, also Walter, was Cornet in 1859. Walter ‘Wat the Sweep’ (1799–1869) well known character in 19th century Hawick, with sooty black clothes and a huge bushy beard. He liked to recount astonishing tales of his own strength at harvesting and in the wars. He died in Hawick Poorhouse. Walter (1801–47) son of Sir Walter, he was 2nd Baronet of Abbotsford. In 1815 he played a ceremonial role in the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’, riding out with the Buccleuch banner to signal the start of the match. He died without issue. Walter (b.1812/3–92) son of Thomas and Christian. He was a joiner on Buccleuch Street (No. 4), like his father before him. He was listed as a joiner on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his sister Jean. He later married Christian (or Christina) Lillico in 1853 and their children included Thomas and William. He died at 4 Buccleuch Street. Walter (b.1814/5) coachman at Whitehaugh Cottage in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and they had a son, also Walter. Walter (1817–44) 2nd son of Walter of Wauchope and Marion Macmillan. He was a doctor with the East India Company. He died at Allahabad, Bengal. Walter (1820–84) born in Roberton Parish, son of Thomas and Agnes Leithead. He worked as a fuller in Wilton. His sister Janet married James Black. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Place and in 1861 at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Beattie (from Selkirk), who died in 1891, aged 65. Their children included: Thomas (1849–1924), tweed manufacturer, who died in Toronto; John Beattie (b.1852); and Robert (or ‘Bob’, b.1864). In the 1880s his son Thomas was living at Ellabank with his widow Mary. He was said to be 61 when he died (probably in error) and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Walter (19th C.) married Ann Best in Hawick in 1837. Walter (19th C.) son of John, his mother being a Deans. He was last of more than a century of tenants of the same family at Hummelknowes Mill. He was recorded there in 1851, as farmer of 26 acres, living with his brother John, who was miller at Hummelknowes. He left the farm in 1855, moving to Ormiston. He was farmer at Ormiston Parkhead in 1861. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: John (b.1846); William, J.P. (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Walter (b.1852). Walter (1822–1892) son of William, tenant farmer at Girnwood. He took over from his father as farmer at Girnwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded in the tenancy by his niece Hannah Davies, who purchased the property. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 600 acres at Girnwood and he was still there in 1868. Walter (b.1831) son of grocer and spirit merchant Walter, with his mother being Isabella Hogg. He was a chemist and druggist, being in Galashiels in 1859 and was at Ladhope in 1861, with his brother-in-law David Scott Park visiting. He later worked in Durham. In 1859 at Hawick Free Kirk, he married Ellen Cabourn Park. Walter (1835/6–1892) son of grocer Thomas and Mary Helm. In 1874 or 1875 he was co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s, along with William Lyle. He was described as ‘a gentleman of long practical experience in the trade, having held important positions with eminent manufacturers here for years’. They built the firm up from modest beginnings into a huge concern, largely through his efforts. He married Margaret Law (who died aged 24), with whom his children were: Walter, died young; Thomas, died aged 23; and Margaret, who married John Elliot of Selkirk. He secondly married Helen Por teous, with additional children: William P., Cornet in 1893; Robert P., killed in France in 1917; James; Isa Watson, who died young; and John P. He is recorded attending the 1891 Common Riding in a carriage along with several of Hawick’s most respected elderly gentlemen. He died at Craigview, Denholm. Walter ‘Hawick Wattie’ (1844/5–1904) born in Hawick, said to be from a good family, he was a stockingmaker by trade. He was employed in Elliot’s shop for many years, but became a homeless wanderer. He roamed around the local countryside for many years. He was said to be ‘a good-natured, humorous man, with a fund of song and anecdote’. Always seen at Border fairs, he was often the worse for drink, and well known to local Magistrates. William Pef ters immortalised him in a poem – ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock. For daily bread he jist relies On kindliness o’ country folk’ [WP], … They’re Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in’ [WE]. Walter (1845–1919) born at Synton, son of William and Mary Scott. In 1861 he was a joiner’s apprentice with Thomas Waldie in Ashkirk. He emigrated to Canada, along with his brothers George and Alexander. He married twice and had 7 children. He died in York, Ontario. Walter E. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Pil mur, who was Cornet in 1903 and one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club. Walter Purdom (1859–1934), J.P., son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was farmer at Falnhu, being bequeathed the lease frm his father. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Walter Ross ‘Wattie’ (1926–2006) son of Andrew and Bunty, who had moved to Canada, he was born in Winnipeg, but soon returned to ‘the Nitton’. He was widely stated to be the best Hawick R.F.C. player who was never capped for Scotland. He was Greens captain 1948/9 and 1952/3, won 30 sevens medals and regularly played for the South of Scotland, being renowned for his strong hand off. He spent his life in farming and was also a keen curler. An enthusiastic Common Riding supporter, he first followed during the War years, was Acting Father in 1970 and served as President of the Mosstroopers and Callants’ Clubs. He married Joey (who was a teacher at Wilton School) and had children John Ross (Honorary Provost), Terry (also Acting Father) and Jill. Warin (13th C.) listed on a panel in Kent when the goods at Chileham, belonging to the late wife of Alexander Baliol were valued. His name occurs as ‘Warin Scot’, but it is unclear if he could be related to local Scotts. William (12th/13th C.) probably son of Richard and great-grandson of Uchtred Fitz Scott. He attended the court of Alexander II, and is recorded as witness to a charter of Walter (grandson of Walter, Steward of Scotland) between 1207 and 1214. He may be the same William who witnessed charters by Walter the Steward of Cunningham. William (13th/14th C.) mentioned in 1261, when his son and heir John ‘le Escot’ was listed in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were probably in the area near Stanford, where the court was held. William (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He thus swore fealty to Edward I, along with 9 other people of the same name, although he was the only one from Roxburghshire. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main line of the Scotts of Buccleuch. One possibility is that he was a son of Sir Richard of Murthockstone (whose father was also William) who also signed the Ragman Rolls. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Scot de Inethal’ and ‘Willelmo Scot in Ethal’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were probably in the area near Stanford, where the court was held. William (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He thus swore fealty to Edward I, along with 9 other people of the same name, although he was the only one from Roxburghshire. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main line of the Scotts of Buccleuch. One possibility is that he was a son of Sir Richard of Murthockstone (whose father was also William) who also signed the Ragman Rolls. in 1404 when he gained the lands of ‘Nemplhar’ in Lanarkshire, which were resigned by his mother Janet Lockhart. William (14th/15th C.) brother of the Laird of Balwearie. In a charter of the Duke of Albany (probably about 1410), he was granted lands in Fife by his brother. William of Glack (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, information about these generations is very uncertain. William (15th C.) recorded in 1430 when he witnessed a charter for lands in Lanarkshire for Melrose Abbey. He was a Chaplain, probably with the Abbey. Perhaps the same ‘magistri Willelmi Scott’ was Master of the Hospital of St. Leonard’s near Lanark in the period 1428–31 according to the Exchequer Rolls. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. His son John was also listed, as well as Adam. It is unclear how they were related to other contemporary Scotts. William (15th C.) witness to the 1447 sasine for the sale of the Cousinlands to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is described as a presbyter and perpetual vicar of Westerkirk. The other Scotts who witnessed the document were all close relatives of Scott of Buccleuch. William (15th C.) customs officer in Arbroath in 1447 and 1450, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Manuell Macnab’ near Strathearn. Probably the same William gave the payment in 1435 for the communities of Montrose and Arbroath. He may have been ancestor of the Bailie of Montrose of the same name recorded in 1507. William (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1456 when he was repaid for an advance to John Dalrymple in Bruges. William ‘Will’ (15th C.) recorded in 1474/5 when he compounded with the King for a remission for the slaughter of ‘Johnne Crossate’. He was said to have a ‘letter of slains’ with the injured party. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Foulshiels (15th C.) probably 3rd surviving son of Sir David, mentioned in the 1471/2 marriage contract with the sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. Alternatively he could be the 4th son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (or the 2 men could be compounded). He was witness to a charter by Robert of Haining in 1476, and may be the William who (along with John) witnessed a document for David of Buccleuch relating to Kirkurd in 1475/6. He was probably deceased by 1488, since he is not mentioned in the list of heirs in the Crown charter for the Barony of Branxholme in that year. He may have married in 1472 and have died without issue. It is unclear whether he was actually ‘of Foulshiels’, or if this was confusion with the later William of Foulshiels. It is also possible that he was the same as the Rector of Southdean or the same as the uncle (who was declared a rebel) of the later Robert of Allanhaugh. He was stated to be the son of David in 1478, when he took over from his father as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. According to the Exchequer Rolls he served as Ranger until at least 1484. He held a ‘stead’ at Cacrabank for his fee; at the same time John Murray represented Yarrow ward and James Pringle the ward of Tweed. He also leased Tushielaw in 1484 and is probably the William who had the lease of Deephope in 1486. He was recorded as deceased and former Ranger in 1490, with his arrears mentioned. It is possible he is the William of Tushielaw from which Robert Elliot had remission in 1493 for stealing a horse. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘rectore de Sowdone’ (i.e. Southdean) when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Mangerton at Branxholme in 1482. He is ‘domino Willelmo Scot rectore de Sowdone’ (not as recorded in one place ‘Foudoun’) when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5 for the lands of Whitchesters being given by Sir David of Branxholme to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He also witnessed a resignation of the same lands shortly afterwards. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1491/2 he was the priest who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott, and who was to choose the priest who would say mass when he died. It is possible he was the same man as William, described as ‘decanis tevidalie’ named among other priests at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Branxholme, perhaps even a brother or cousin of Sir David. William of Goldielands (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 when his son William was allowed to ‘compone’ for rieving crimes. It seems likely that he was related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connection is not known. He is the first known Scott of Goldielands, but whether he was closely related to the later ones is not known. William (15th C.) son of William of Goldielands. At the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, he was allowed to compone for stealing 12 goats from Fastheugh and for associating with English thieves. His surety was Robert of Whitchester. William ‘Gyde’ (15th C.) recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother John, as well as other ‘traitors of Levin’, to raid the farm of Harehead. He may have been related to other Scotts with the same nickname. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, along with ‘Wantoun’ Walter Dalgleish. William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting the pair, with his surety being Walter Scott of Howpasley. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, when he was fined for non-appearance. He was listed being ‘de rone’, but it is unclear where he was. William (15th C.) recorded in 1497 when he had remission, along with ‘Johnne Scot and Johnne Scott’ for the slaughter of ‘Johnne Fischare’, fleeing to England, and other crimes. It is unknown to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. William ‘Will’ (15th/16th C.) one of the 4 men selected by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. It is possible he was the same William listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. William (15th/16th C.) son of David of Tushielaw, brother of Adam ‘King of Thieves’. He is recorded in 1502 when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with him and 2 Armstrongs (Archibald and Ninian) for their ‘Stouthreifs, Slaughters, Burnings, and other crimes’. He is probably also the William ‘in Thirlestane’ in 1502 who ‘came in the King’s Will’ for violently occupying the lands of Thirlestane, without having a lease from Patrick Crichton of Cranston-Riddell; Walter of Buccleuch served as surety. This case suggests some ongoing dispute over the lands of Thirlestane (foreshadowing what would come later). His brother John would later become Laird of Thirlestane. He may also have been related to John of Thirlestane, who is recorded earlier. William (15th/16th C.) son of James of Broadmeadows. He is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 receiving remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. His surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. In a second case he had remission for injuring Walter Scott of Tushielaw and for stealing a horse from James Arres, 44 sheep from John Lauder in Philiphaugh and 7 cows from the younger Laird of Ormiston; the surety was again John in Hassendean. In a third case he was ‘in braid medois’ when he had remission for stealing 26 cows from William Murray in Wester Hailes, with Alexander, Lord Home as his surety. John, also listed as son of James of Broadmeadows, also had remission at the same Justice-aire, and was therefore his brother. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1503 in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. Adam of Roberton presented him as as suitor for his lands (presumably of Roberton) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurred earlier but was crossed out. He is perhaps related to the Scotts of Roberton, and could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is said to have been Abbot of Melrose 1504–06, according to Scott of Rodono (although his name does not appear on lists of the Abbots, so this is unclear). William (15th/16th C.) one of the ‘bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in his father’s lands in Annandale. The others were his son Robert, along with Walter of Howpasley and Stephen. It is unclear who he was and whether he was closely related to the other appointed bailies. William of Fenwick (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. In 1502 he is probably the William ‘in fenuik’ who, along with Robert in Synton, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. He was also ‘in fenuik’ when he had remission for stealing sheep and cattle from Bowden, with his surety being Robert in Synton and for stealing sheep belonging to the Kers from the farm of Cauldshields, with his surety being Walter Scott of Headshaw. Probably the same William was tenant at Fenwick in 1510, when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh and John of Haining, suggesting he was probably closely related to some of those branches. He was also recorded as ‘de Fennyk’ in 1510 when he was a pledge for Stephen, who leased Deephope and Mount Common. He could be son of Walter of Fenwick, recorded in 1484/5, and probably related to Simon in Fenwick, who is mentioned in 1528 and 1540. William (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1510 when (along with George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh) he was surety for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who had been involved in the murder of John Murray of Falshelf. This may be the same William ‘in hawic’ who is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1502 receiving remission for the slaying of Simon Chapman; the same William is recorded in the records of the Justice-aires in Jedburgh being declared a fugitive for this same crime. He is likely to have been related to the Scott branches in Headshaw, Goldielands, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Hayning (since they are all mentioned in the same case). Probably the same William ‘in Hawik’ is among the men listed in the remission of 1526 for the attack on the Ear of Arran led by the Homes; after him are listed John, Thomas, John, Thomas, Philip and Steven, ‘brether to the said Johnne’, some of whom may be close relatives. Baille William (15th/16th C.) witnessed to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick being given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Whithope (d.1523) younger son of Sir Walter, 8th Laird of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1515 he had a charter of Whithope from James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He died without male issue and his brother Walter was his heir. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. George was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. William of Ormiston (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as the person who ‘sought instruments’ in a transaction where Philip of Headshaw assigned his lands of Hartwoodburn to his 2nd son Robert on his death. He was uncle to Robert and hence presumably brother to Philip of Headshaw. He could be the deceased ‘Wlc of O...’ recorded in 1537 in relation to the lands of Tordrig. He may be the same as William ‘in Hartwood’ who in 1536/7 accused someone of selling stolen skins. He may be the William in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a bond in 1541, involving William in Bowhill and ‘master’ Michael. He may also be the William in ‘Hartvodburn’ listed along with John in Aikwood (‘Dustyba’) and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Hilhous’ in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators (along with Robert of Howpasley, William of Harden, Walter of Synton, John of Robertson and Simon of Fenwick) to decide on the succession of Borthaugh lands. William of Foulshiels (16th C.) son of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, probably ‘Wicked Wat’; he was probably an illegitimate son, since Sir Walter’s eldest surviving son was Sir William of Kirkurd (with the same name). In 1532 he had a charter for the lands of Foulshiels (in Selkirkshire). The later John of Foulshiels was probably his son or grandson. The earlier William, son of David of Buccleuch, may not be directly related (but this is uncertain). It is possible he was the same as Sir William of Kirkurd. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Sundhope (in Yarrow) in 1533 when he witnessed a document about the murder of John Wilson, who probably also lived at Sundhope. William (15th/16th C.) uncle of William, who was son of Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1535 the younger William was given remission for associating with him, since he had been declared a rebel, as well as for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull; it is unclear how much earlier these crimes took place. He must have been brother of the earlier Robert of Allanhaugh, and hence a son of Sir David of Branxholme. It is also possible that he was the same as William of Foulshiels, or some other contemporary William. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Faldishoip’ (i.e. Fauldshope) in 1534/5 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was ‘in Feldishoup’ in 1535 when he witnessed another document in Selkirk. In 1536 he was ‘Voll Scot in Fauldishoup’ when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Robertson and Michael of Aikwood. William of Hassendean (16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd, or alternatively a grandson of James. He was heir to his brother (or uncle) John, succeeding in 1530. He is listed as being ‘in Halsyndene’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1526 among the Borderers given remission for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran (note that William, brother of Adam in Clarilaw, is listed separately, suggesting there were 2 closely related Williams at that time). In 1527 he is among the Lairds, under Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field; he is there ‘of Hassindene’. He is recorded being pardoned in 1528, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, Robert of Howpasley and William Turnbull of Minto. He may be the William who was one of the Bailies appointed in 1528 to infeft David, son of Sir Walter of Branxholme in his lands. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He resigned the lands of Falside (in Yarrow) to William, son of Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532, as ratified by Queen Margaret in 1539. Probably in 1532 (note that Fraser makes this the 19th year of the reign of James VI, which must be incorrect) he had a Precept of Chancery for keeping his lands, after having forfeited them for supporting Sir Walter at Melrose (presumably in 1526); these lands were Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Easter Hassendean and ‘Deidrig’ in the half Barony of Hassendean. He was part of an inquest panel held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1534 he purchased the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw from Gavin Elliot, the letter of reversion being sealed at Hassendean Kirk. In 1536 he granted Thomas Turnbull ‘in the Tronyhill’ lands on the east part of Eastern Hassendean. He is recorded about 1537 in a ‘letter of reversion’ by David Scott in Clari-law for the lands of the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ near Hassendean tower. In 1538 Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat had remission for stealing from him, specifically 2 letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ which were kept in his box in the house of Nicholas Rutherford in Edinburgh. He was given the lands of Falside (again) in Selkirk-shire in 1539. And it is probably the same William ‘in Hassendean’ who had a court dispute in 1540 with Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawflat, over ‘wadsets’. They were also in dispute over a 1536 marriage contract between his eldest daughter and heir (although it is unclear how this could have been, since he appears to have had sons) Elizabeth and George, heir to the same Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same William was witness to a sasine in 1551 confirming the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham: his son David is also mentioned. David probably succeeded him, while Adam of Burnfoot and Walter may have been other sons. He probably married Elizabeth, the elder daughter of George Chisholme of that Ilk. William of Alton (16th C.) recorded in Scott of Satchells’ doggerel family history. It is stated that ‘John Scot of the Monks-tower’ was ‘brother to old William Scot of Alton’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Layk’ in 1535 when he was charged with stealing cattle from Arthur Douglas and Thomas Fresall ‘in Efflesche’ (probably Effledge) and also Marion Davidson in the same place. It is unclear where ‘Layk’ might be. William (16th C.) recorded in Elindhope in 1539 when he complained in Selkirk that James Stoddart had taken violent possession of his lands of ‘est Eldinhoup’. However, Stoddart counter-claimed that he had ‘wrongfully manured and sowed my lands’. Sir William of Kirkurd, ‘Whitecloak’ (d.1552), 2nd son and eldest surviving son of ‘Wicked Wat’. He became heir after the death of his brother David, but predeceased his father. In 1532 he was granted the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire, resigned by William Scott of Hassendean; this was ratified by Margaret, Queen of Scots in 1539. In 1539 he is ‘feuar of Fausyd’ when he and his father Sir Walter had their official give notice of removal to Thomas (son of Adam) and Robert of Howpasley. In 1541 he is recorded as ‘second sone to the lard of Bukcleuch’ when he claimed tenancy of the Crown lands of ‘Hawtherne’ in Yarrow. He took part in Border expeditions with his father and was present at Pinkie in 1547. In 1549 he entered into a bond of ‘man-rent’ with Mary of Lorraine, the Queen Regent, in which he was to receive the same fees and profits received by the deceased John Melvin of Raith. Later in 1549 she granted him a pension of £100 Scots as a result of the damages he sustained defending ‘contrair oure auld inimeis off Ingland’. In 1550 he was listed as one of the 2 curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, his step-brother (i.e. son of his mother by her first husband). He married Grizel Betoun, sister to his step-mother (they were both daughters of John Betoun of Creich with different mothers); after his death she remarried Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony. His children included: Sir Walter, the 10th Laird; Janet, who married Sir Thomas Kerr of Oxnam and Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and sowed my lands’. Sir William of Kirkurd, ‘Whitecloak’ (d.1552), 2nd son and eldest surviv- ing son of ‘Wicked Wat’. He became heir after the death of his brother David, but predeceased his father. In 1532 he was granted the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire, resigned by William Scott of Hassendean; this was ratified by Margaret, Queen of Scots in 1539. In 1539 he is ‘feuar of Fausyd’ when he and his father Sir Walter had their official give notice of removal to Thomas (son of Adam) and Robert of Howpasley. In 1541 he is recorded as ‘second sone to the lard of Bukcleuch’ when he claimed tenancy of the Crown lands of ‘Hawtherne’ in Yarrow. He took part in Border expeditions with his father and was present at Pinkie in 1547. In 1549 he entered into a bond of ‘man-rent’ with Mary of Lorraine, the Queen Regent, in which he was to receive the same fees and profits received by the deceased John Melvin of Raith. Later in 1549 she granted him a pension of £100 Scots as a result of the damages he sus- tained defending ‘contrair oure auld inimeis off Ingland’. In 1550 he was listed as one of the 2 curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, his step-brother (i.e. son of his mother by her first husband). He married Grizel Betoun, sister to his step-mother (they were both daughters of John Betoun of Creich with different mothers); after his death she remarried Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony. His children included: Sir Walter, the 10th Laird; Janet, who married Sir Thomas Kerr of Oxnam and Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and secondly Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth and was buried in 1618; Elizabeth, who married John Carmichael of Meadowflat, having previously had marriage contracts with Thomas, 2nd son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as with John, grandson of Sir Andrew Ker of the Hirsell; and another daughter who married Walter Scott of Headshaw. John, recorded in 1632 as ‘brother naturall’ to Sir William Murray of Elibank was probably another son. There is an existing inven- tory of his estate when he died, which was only a few months before his father was murdered on Edinburgh High Street. William (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He is recorded as ‘junior’ (suggesting there was a senior William in Irvine) and gave in his reports with Robert, who was surely related. William ‘the Boltfoot’ of Tor-drig and Harden (d.c.1561) 2nd son of Robert of Stiches. He was renowned as a fearless horseman and for several daring deeds. His nickname derived from a lameness caused by a wound received in battle. He is probably the ‘Willelmo Scott, fratre germano Walteri Scot de Styrkschaw’ who witnessed a document in 1507/8 relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters. Originally of Todrig, near Synton, he acquired Harden in 1512, from his brother Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws, as confirmed in a 1535 charter from the Lord of Home. As well as Harden the lands included Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielwood; 1 acre at the east end still belonged to Walter, but that was also transferred according to another confirming charter of 1559 (although it is possibly 1550), in which his son Walter is named. He also had the lands of Hoscost confirmed in 1525; these were subject of a letter of ‘warrandice’ with George, Lord Home in 1535. In 1530 he swore before the widow of Stephen Lauder (who had also held lands at Todrig) that he owed Lauder no more than a merk. In 1533 he was ‘in Toddrick’ when (along with John there) he witnessed a document relating to a murder at Sundhope. He is probably the William ‘in Hardene’ who in 1532 acted as an arbitrator for Walter in Headshaw in a dispute with his mother Isabel Murray. In 1535 he was tenant in Todrig when William Lauder (then Laird of Todrig) acted to have him removed. He received the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick in 1540 (finally consigned in 1556). He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he is listed right after Walter of Synton, and his brother David (possibly ‘Lady’, tenant in Stirches) is right afterwards. 1528 he was one of the Scotts who acted as arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Elizabeth Murray. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with Adam of Burnfoot and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1550 he (and his wife Elizabeth Ker) had a sasine for estates at Todrig. Also in 1550 he is ‘in Todrig’ when, along with his son and heir Walter, he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Harden with Alexander, Lord Home. He is probably the William ‘in Harden’ who witnessed a Riddell document of 1551. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553 he and his wife were also mentioned in 2 documents of John, 4th Lord Hay of Yester. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. And in 1555/6 he is probably the William in Harden who was summoned by Alexander Lord Home to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive redemption money for Hoscoste. He married Mary, daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk (possibly Robert); she was mother of his successor, Walter, who may have been ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. However, there is dispute over these generations, some accounts placing an extra Walter (d.c.1563) between him and ‘Auld Wat’. He secondly married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (possibly a widow of Riddell of that Ilk), with whom he had at least 2 sons: Robert of Burnfoot (in Ale Water); and George of Todrig. He probably died at Todrig – ‘The Laird and Lady of Harden Betwixt them procreat was a son Called William Boltfoot of Harden – He did survive to be a man’ [CWS], ‘To tak’ the foord he ay was first, Unless the English loons were near: Plunge vassal then, plunge horse and man, Auld Boltfoot rides into the rear’ [SWS]. William (16th C.) son of Adam, who lived at Kershope on the Ettrick. In 1533 he complained that Robert of Howpalsye and Philip in Dryhope had ‘violently stolen’ goods from Kershope and he charged John Murray of Kershope with seeking restitution. He is probably the William ‘of Kershop’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1536, relating to the lands of Friarshaw. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Haining’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. He may be related to John, who was in Haining in about 1534. William (16th C.) priest mentioned in the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with several other clergymen. Since he is designated ‘Mr.’, he presumably already had his Masters degree and was a fully qualified priest. But his precise status in Hawick, relative to the other clergymen mentioned in the Charter, is unknown. William (16th C.) owner of half a participate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William, son of William Scott is also listed as having 11 participates (and could be his son). One of these men is the ‘said William’ who also held 3 participates of land on the north side of Hawick. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hartwoodmyres’ among the witness listed in 1539/40 for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; Simon, James and Roland are also listed and some may have been closely related. He is probably the Scott in Hartwoodmyness who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Fulahill. Also in 1541 he was ‘of Hartvod myris’ when he witnessed part of a marriage contract between a son of Robert of Allanhaugh and a daughter of John of Thirlestane. He could be the William recorded in 1542 when he asked Simon Shortreed (Vicar of Ashkirk) to produce ‘the evidents of his father’ and give sasine of a tenement to him. It seems he is distinct from the contemporary William in Hartwoodburn. In 1562 both he and William in Tushielaw witnessed a transaction for Robert of HowPasley (making it clear that they are different men). However, it is still possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams.

His son Thomas was also a witness in 1562. Also in 1562 he assigned to his son and heir John his steading of Gamescleuch ‘callit Eittriksyaide’, including a condition to follow the arrangements already made with Simon in Thirlestane; the witnesses included Robert of HowPasley, Adam of Wamphray, William in Tushielaw and William’s son Walter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as part of an action against Patrick Murray of Fulahill and Alexander Tait of Pirn. John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, stated that he (William) ‘inhabited and manured . . . le forest steid called Craggischank and received the benefits of the same . . . throughout a period of 12 weeks’. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Allanhaugh (16th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded as heir apparent of Robert in Allanhaugh and was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1 along with John, son of Walter of Synton; sureties were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he had remis-

He was recorded as heir apparent of Robert in Allanhaugh and was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1 along with John, son of Walter of Synton; sureties were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded his father in about 1557. In 1557 there are several renters (from Melrose Abbey) of lands in Ringwoodfield who may have been his sons, assuming he was ‘the guidman of Allanhauch’ at that time. They are: ‘Young Robert’, who rented Brugh; Simon and hauche’, who rented ‘Rigwodhat’, and was presumably either a son or brother. He was probably succeeded by his son William (or there may have been an additional Robert between). William of Aikwood (16th C.) son of Michael of Aikwood. In about 1529 he and his father gained half the lands of Bowhill from his cousin Isabel Murray. He was younger in Aikwood in 1530 on a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods; John in Aikwood was also listed. In 1540/1 he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down, with his father Michael and brothers Robert and Walter as other witnesses. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Aikwood in 1541. He may also be the William in Bowhill who in 1541 bound himself with others, including ‘master’ Michael (probably his father) and notary Ninian Brydon; William in Hartwoodburn was a witness. He was succeeded by his brother Robert. Robert’s sister Elizabeth (who would then also be his sister) had a marriage contract in 1580. William (16th C.) recorded in Catslack in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk, along with several other Scotts. He was surely related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. William (16th C.) 3rd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 he was designated as the successor to his father’s lands of Leap Hill and Langhope. Perhaps the same William was recorded as a ‘young man’ and in ‘Blyndhaucht’ in 1561 when he purchased a house and yard in Selkirk. He also witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk in 1561. Bailie William (16th C.) witness to a bond of 1546 for Elliot of Redliegh and others entering several Elliots (of Thorlieshope etc.) as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was described as ‘balye of Hawik’ and may have been the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Wylm Skott’ in 1548/9, when he was taken prisoner by the English when they burned the Laird of Buccleuch’s tower in Hawick. He thus may have been a servant of Scott of Buccleuch. William (16th C.) tenant of Whames, listed in 1549 among the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned by a group of English and Kers. He is probably related to John, who was also in Whames at that time, and another William who was there in 1580. William

John was also a witness. He was surely closely related to Nether Harden. His brother, William Buccleuch, was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was apparently a lawyer (according to Satchells). He may be the ‘Willym in the Mott’ when listed among the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was listed in 1591/2. Scott of Rodono suggests that the earlier Scotts of Todrig were descended from him. It is possible that the same William ‘in Hawick’ was involved in a precept of ‘clare constat’ and gave the associated instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas inheriting the lands of Crook from his father William in 1592; he was thus either a lawyer or Bailie. He should not be confused with William Graham, ‘William of the Mote’, a prominent Englishman of the same time, who lived at Liddel Mote. William (d.1579) probably a resident related to the later William of Glack, or perhaps even the same man. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in ‘Montbernger’ in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He acted as surety for 2 Elliots who had previously been entered before the Council. He was also listed in 1581, among a large group of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1581 he witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. He is listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1590/1 he was William ‘in Montbernger Wester’ when John Hay of Smithfield acted as his surety. He was in ‘Wester Momburngear’ in 1592 when James Lawson of ‘Carnmure’ was his surety for not resetting those who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is likely he was the same as another contemporary William. He could be the same as William of Montbenger, whose son Robert was appointed as tutor to his brother James of Newholme’s grandchildren. William ‘in Hawick’ (16th C.) referred to by Scott of Satchells as ‘William in the Mott’ when listed among the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was apparently a brother of a Walter Scott of Harden (probably ‘Auld Wat o Harden’) and was son of either Walter of Harden (who died c.1563) or of William, 1st Laird of Harden. He held lands beyond the West Port in Hawick (presumably named for proximity to the Mote), these being given to him for his service to Buccleuch (according to Satchells). He was living in 1591. He was probably the brother of Walter of Harden listed (along with his brother) among 200 Scots and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. He may be the brother of Walter of Harden listed among 200 Scots and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. Scott of Rodono suggests that the earlier Scots of Todrig were descended from him. It is possible that the same William ‘in Hawick’ was involved in a precept of ‘clare constat’ and gave the associated instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas inheriting the lands of Crook from his father William in 1592; he was thus either a lawyer or Bailie. He should not be confused with William Graham, ‘William of the Mote’, a prominent Englishman of the same time, who lived at Liddel Mote. William (d.1579) probably a resident of Edinburgh. Along with a man called Turnbull, a schoolmaster in Edinburgh, he was executed for composing ‘rhyning libels’ about the death of John Stewart, 4th Earl of Atholl. These supported the rumours that Atholl had been poisoned at Stirling by the Earl of Morton (James Douglas). They were executed at Stirling. William (16th C.) brother of Robert of Raesknoue. In 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his brother Robert was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d. bef. 1582) tenant in ‘Braidle’ (probably Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish) recorded in 1581/2 when his son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. William of De loreine ‘Cut at the Black’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. He was said to be a brother of Scott of Haining, a branch that was descended from Hassendean, and he himself was the progenitor of the Scotts of ‘Scotstarbet and Elie, now called Ardross’. William of Tushielaw (16th C.) probably son of Adam ‘King of Thieves’ (although Satchells suggests there is a Robert in an intervening generation). He could be the William listed as a son of Adam of Tushielaw in the 1526 remission for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran; the sons listed are Robert, John and William (in that order), and so it is also possible that Robert was the eldest son of Adam and that he (William) succeeded his older brother, or could alternatively have been Robert’s son (consistent with Satchells’ version). He could be the William ‘in Tussilaw’ who witnessed a transaction for Elizabeth Gledstains in Selkirk in 1533. It seems likely he is the tenant in Tushielaw and Cowanlaw recorded in 1541, who may also have occupied Mount Common (‘alias Deiphope’), as well as Cacrabank (along with his mother, who may therefore have been the widow of Adam). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was ‘in Tushielaw’ in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley. Also in 1562 he and his son Walter witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. He acted as surety for William Cranston of that Ilk in 1563, along with his son and heir apparent, Walter. Also in that year he was accused by the Queen’s Advocate of theft and reset from Robert Elliot of ‘Bellelie’. He was also fined for the non-compliance of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill for similar crimes. He and his son Walter took sheep from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot; in 1563/4 they were ordered by the Privy Council to replace the stolen sheep. In 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several men (including Scotts) of sheep-stealing and another that dealt with the murder of David of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may have married Grizel, daughter of Robert of Thirlestane (although that could be Walter, his grandson, unless there were 2 similar marriages). In 1573 his son ‘Watt in Hartwoodmyris’ was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthuikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh and he himself entered the Littles of Tushielaw Mill and others. In 1574 he witnessed a discharge between the Douglases of Cavers and the Cranstons of that Ilk. In 1580 he and Sir Walter of Birkenside appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. In 1581 he and Robert of Aikwood were the ‘byndaris’ in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain; his son Walter in Hartwoodmyres was also mentioned. He is probably the William listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Eliots and Armstrongs. In 1582 he is recorded as having witnessed the delivery of some documents by William and David (sons of Adam of Allanhaugh) to Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the ‘Scot of Tuschelaw’ listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border lairds. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; William of Midgehope (ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill); James of Hundleshope; and John, who killed the father of John Govane of Cardrono. William (16th C.) younger son of Sir John of Thirlestane. He was recorded as brother-german of Robert of Thirlestane in 1567 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Wyle of Thirlstane’ who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. He is recorded as William, son of Walter of ‘Eidshaw’ when warded in 1571. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, suggesting that he had been suspected of being a supporter of the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the ‘Williame Scott of Eidschaw’ recorded in 1571/2 when he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. Sir William of Balwearie (16th/17th C.) son of Sir William and Helen Lauder. He served as surety for the Elliots in the register of the Privy Council on two occasions in 1573. He claimed in 1573 that he had not received John Elliot of the Park, and had a bond with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He married Janet Lindsay and was succeeded by his son Sir James. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1574 when, along with James ‘in Quhistslaid’, he paid back a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot to Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside. The same year they also paid back a loan to Sir Walter of Branxholme for lands at Easter Craik and also in Ettrick. He was presumably tenant farmer of lands at Harden, perhaps related to the Scotts of Harden themselves. William (d.bef. 1580) Burgess in Selkirk. In 1580 his widow Marion Gledstains was recorded as ‘conjurc feuar’ of half a croft of land in Selkirk. Alexander Gledstains, elder, was one of the witnesses. Also in 1580 his widow Marion Gledstains was listed among those who owed money to Janet Gledstains. William of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his widow Margaret Scott resigned some liferents to their son William. His lands were probably Burnfoot on Ale, but is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot. His wife resigned her rights of lifrent in ‘Scheilliswod with half the niln called Burnefuytmilne with pertinent’ in Ashkirk, which seems to confirm that this is Burnfoot on Ale. His wife had by then remarried, to Walter in Palace. A number of cautioners were appointed, who lived at Eddenside, Burnfoot and nearby places. William of Flex (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Rough-hope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. William (16th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. In 1581/2 there was a dispute with another Bailie over whether a man had been apprehended and put in the tolbooth. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. In 1550 he had a ‘tack’ for the lands of Langhope. He was described as William in Huntly when listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1580 he was ‘in Huntlie’ when he and his brother George in Synton gave their consent for Robert, son of their deceased brother James in Whitslade, to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Robert in Aikwood (this confirms that these 3 men were brothers, and hence all sons of John, younger of Synton). Additionally in 1580 he was meant to pay certain amounts to the 5 children of the deceased John of Blindhaugh; David Fairlie took the bond to stand as cautioner for him. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He was also in Huntly in 1581 when (along with George of Synton, Walter of Goldielands, Robert of Haining and others) witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son, also William. Furthermore, in 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and William Scott in Burnfoot, with the dowry being 400 merks, while his daughter received liferent of Shielwood. And in 1581 he agreed to take Marion Scott (daughter of the deceased John in Blindhaugh) into his household (suggesting that he may have been a close relation). He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstongs. He may be the William ‘in Huntly’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589 (and was also mentioned ‘in Huntlie’ in a case involving theft of a horse by neighbours in Hutlerburn). He was listed as ‘Will Scott of Huntlie’ on the roll of landed men of Scotland in about 1590 and was on an inquest in 1592. He was probably ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly, being succeeded by Robert of Huntly, who was at the Carlisle raid in 1596. William (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘alias William with the teyth’, presumably referring either to his teeth or to a tythe. John Sinton stated that he had stolen 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning’s house that belonged to ‘[blank] Coltarte’. The instrument was witnessed at the house of William, younger Burgess of Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as son of John ‘late in Quhomes’ (i.e. Whames) 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whitheope and Robert Scott of Haining. He was probably related to (or perhaps even the same as) the William recorded as tenant in Whames in 1549. William ‘Will’ of Allanhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Robert of Allanhaugh recorded in the Register of the Privy Council for 1581. He was recorded as ‘Willie of Allanhauch’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, where he is assigned ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. He may be the ‘William Scott in Alanhaucht, now duedland in Hawk’ who was mentioned in 1581 (along with Robert of Allanhaugh) as one of the men forgiven for the murder of Hawick resident George Scott 3 years earlier. Also in 1581 he was ‘Will of Alanhaucht burgess of Hawk’ when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundlehope to her son Thomas; Robert of Raesknowe and Robert’s brother William were also witnesses. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was on an Inquest of Service in 1592. He was signatory (along with Roger Langlands of that Ilk and Allan Deans in Hawick) of a bond of 1594/5 drawn up by James Gedstains of Cocklaw and involving local Turnbulls and Elliots; he is there referred to as ‘callit of Alanehaucht’. He is assigned ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. He may have been father of Walter ‘in Allanmoutth’ and his brother John, who are recorded in the early 1600s. Either he or a brother of his was probably on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. William of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1585) son of Adam. He probably died before his father and was succeeded by his son Robert. Note that this is Burnfoot on Teviot. William of Chamberlain Newton (16th C.) listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots of Chamberlain Newton. William (16th C.) brother to ‘Scot of Hassindien’, as well as brother of Philip. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time. William ‘Reid Wullie’ (16th C.) son of Will of Colliford. He is recorded in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branhelome and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is listed as ‘William Scot, sone to Wyll of Collehrude, callit Reid Wyllie’; it is a little unclear whether the nickname referred to him or his father (who is recorded in 1550). William ‘Stand-in-the-rain’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit Stand in the Rayne’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. One can imagine how he got his nickname. William ‘Will’, ‘Minedirt’ (16th C.) recorded on a list of Borderers accused of crimes in 1586/7. His name appears as ‘Will Scott, callit Mynedirt’, with the meaning of his nickname being unclear. William (16th C.) brother of ‘Braid’s Andrew’. The pair were included in a long list of men from the Borderers who had absented themselves from court, but were given one last opportunity in 1586/7 to find cautioners. Probably the same man was ‘Willye Scott, called the Braid’s Will’ recorded in 1587/8 among Elliots and Armstrongs (probably from Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. William ‘Little William’ (16th/17th C.) resident of Selkirk recorded in 1590. He was ‘called Little Williamie’ on a list of men promising not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. ‘Little James’, Burgess in Selkirk, was also listed and perhaps related. William of Todshawhaugh (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahauge’ and among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be descended from Scott of Borthaugh. He was surely related to Adam of Todshawhaugh and his son Walter, recorded in 1594. He may be the William ‘alias callit Wille of Todschawhauch’ who was recorded as a resident of Whames in 1549; at that time Walter was tenant of Todshawhaugh, and so probably related. William of Glack (16th/17th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Glack. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1585 he was ‘of Glak’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He may be the Laird of ‘Glak’ who was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council and who was listed among several Border Scots in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. He was probably the William ‘in Clack’ stated by Scott of Satchells to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1596/7 he was ‘in Glak’ when part of the group of Scots (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked ploughmen from Peebles; they were denounced as rebels for not appearing. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with his brother James ‘in Jedwartfield’ and Arthur of Gamescleuch. In 1599 he was ‘in Glak’ when James of Bowhill was cautioner for him not to harm the provost, bailies, council and community of Peebles. Also in 1599 his brother Thomas was recorded among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branzholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He was ‘in Glak’ when among the men listed (along with Walter of Headshaw) whom Sir Robert of Thirlestane was bound not to reset in 1609. This was part of the dispute between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Probably the same William ‘of Glak’ was cautioner for his brother John of Hundlehope in 1618, promising that John would not molest the Moffats of Granton. William (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother David acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and David among 200 Scotts and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Drev. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. William (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1557 he was ‘Vil Scot of Migerhoup’ when he paid rental for Fawhope to the monks of Melrose. However, there is some confusion, since he was presumably the William ‘in Megehop, son of the deceased Wat Scott’ who occupied lands in Ettrick and Rodono in 1556. He may also have been called ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (although there is possible confusion with his son here). He was succeeded by his son William, who was at the rescue of ‘Kinmont Willie’. William ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (16th/17th C.) listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the William ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ who in 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmansecleuch, Chamberlaine Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts, perhaps including Walter in Hartwoodmyres (son of William of Tushielaw), who was also listed. In 1592 Gideon Murray of Glenpyet was surety for him ‘to answer for all attemptattis committed or to be committed by himself and those for whom he is liable’. In about 1593 he and Walter of Stirkshaws were under caution, with Gideon Murray as surety. He was also said to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was in 1599 listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was denounced as a rebel for not paying £14 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He may have been son of William of Tushielaw, and therefore the same as William of Midgehope (this is unclear, although a close connection with the Scotts of Tushielaw seems clear). He was probably succeeded by Robert. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Midgehope and grandson of William of Tushielaw. He was said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was succeeded by his son Robert, Bailie of Hawick. William of Hundlehope (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1592 when his cautioner was James Stewart of Tinnis. This was among a long list of conditions imposed by the King following the Falkland Raid. He was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602; his brother Thomas was also mentioned, as were Scotts of Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. Also in 1602 Sir John Murray of Etleton and Gideon Murray of Elibank were ordered to remove him from the lands of ‘Feithane. In 1603 he and his brother attacked the same lands again, having been declared rebels. William of Howpasley (16th/17th C.) succeeded Walter, who was probably his father. In 1595 he, along with John Rutherford of Hunthill and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘blench fens and castle-wards’; in 1599 there was a complaint about the Sheriff (James Douglas of Cavers) for not prosecuting the men. In 1599 he is probably the Scott of Howpasley who was surety for himself, his son John and Walter of Ladhope. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He is on a list of several Scotts and others who the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) tried to oust from their lands in 1603. In 1605 Alexander Scott (‘Lang Sandy’) discharged him from his obligation in the annual rent of the lands of Wark. There was a ‘horning’ of 1607 requiring him to remove from Longhauch, Ramselew, Diksone’s Reid, Howpaisley and Shawis’ by the superior of the lands, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was followed by an action in 1610 against him and James Gledstains for not paying taxes on some of the same lands. He may have been the husband of Lady Howpasley who instigated the slaughter of sheep there in 1615 (in which case he was already deceased). In 1620 the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained to the Privy Council that money was still owed for furnishing him (the deceased William) with food and drink during his several years in prison; Walter, Earl of Buccleuch and John of Synton had at that point still not paid the minimum 900 merks promised (out of an estimated total bill of 2600 merks). Howpasley is said to have passed to Robert and Walter (cousins of Patrick of Tanlawhill) and then to the Scotts of Thirlestane and later the Scotts of Crumhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘called of the Know’ in 1608. Along with his brother Robert, Bailie of Hawick, and their surety James Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, they appeared for themselves and for their brothers George and David, with a bond not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick. It is unclear what the nature of the dispute was, but the minister left 2 years later. It is also unclear whether this ‘Know’ was the one at Teviothead, in Hassendean, perhaps at the Tower Knowe, or elsewhere. There were also several Bailie Roberts around that time, and it is unclear which one this is. William (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and brother of Robert of Haining. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother of Robert of Haining witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he witnessed 2 agreements between his brother Robert of Haining and his wife, Dame Janet of Haining. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction for his brother Robert of Haining. He was listed among the members of the rescue party for Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1608 he was part of a gang of Scotts who freed 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull) from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. It is possible that he was the same as William of Deloraine, supposed to be a brother of Scott of Haining. It is also possible he was the William in Haining who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581, involving Robert of Haining. He is probably also the William in Haining who in 1581 witnessed an agreement involving the lifierent of Blindhaugh and Castle-side with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Willie Scott, man to Young Wanchop’, meaning he was probably a servant of Thomas Turnbull, younger of Wauchope. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Huntly. In 1608 he was one of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. Perhaps he was the ‘Will Scott of Huntlie’ who was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’ in 1599. Perhaps the same William ‘of Huntley’ was in 1603 among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. William (16th/17th C.) nephew of Walter, tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh had not payed him following being found guilty of charges 2 years earlier. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) elder son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Janet Scott of Headshaw. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his younger brother Walter, who sold the family lands. In 1580 he signed a bond with Walter of Headshaw, who assigned to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called ‘the Pleucht Tylth’, along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton. Walter of Stirches was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stirches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. He may be the same William of Whitehaugh recorded in 1612 and 1619, but this is unclear. William (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood. He was brother of Walter of Bowhill, as well as James and Walter. He was tenant in ‘Scotstaines’ or ‘Schostanis’ (although it is unclear where this is). Scott of Satchells lists him among those who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1596/7 as ‘in Brokhill’ when he was part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked some ploughmen of Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. In 1599 he and his brother Walter of (North) Bowhill were among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Robert, Walter and James, together with John ‘in Quholsplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). In 1602 he assisted the Scotts of Bonnittington in the eviction of the Vieties from Fechane. In 1608 when he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly took 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and John Turnbull, his half-brother) from confinement by the Selkirk Bailies; his brother James was also part of the gang. He may be the ‘tutor of Bowhill’ listed among Scotts and others accused in 1612 by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. He may be the William of Bowhill whose son Andrew was inflected in the lands of ‘Crocecaint’. He may also be the William ‘callit of Bowhill’ who in about 1618 was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest; his son Andrew was also listed. He may also be the William ‘in Bowhill’ who was pursued at the Privy Council for non-payment in 1620. William ‘Muckle Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to a bond of ‘manrent’, signed in 1595 in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branhholme. His name (unfortunate by modern standards) is given as ‘William Scot callit Mekill Willy’. Given the status of the other witnesses, it seems likely he was a prominent Scott, and hence probably the same as another William. William ‘Will’ of Northhouse (16th/17th C.) mentioned along with his brother Walter and others in 1608. A complaint was made against them by Jean Scott, widow of Gavin Elliott of Stobs and his female heirs, stating that the Scotts had taken ‘all the evidents and writs’, threatening to burn them if their demands were not met. He failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Presumably this was related to a dispute over lands, but the details are not recorded. In 1610 Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that he was attacked by him and his brother Hob in Hawick, with drawn swords, and they would have killed him if not for some of the inhabitants of the Town. He may be the William, son of the deceased George in Northhouse, who in 1582 witnessed a transaction at Branhholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harden’ in 1612 when he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. However, his name is omitted from the list of those who were charged. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Harden at that time, but it seems unlikely he was the same man as William, younger of Harden, who was already well established at that time. William (16th/17th C.) son of John of Newark. In 1618 Walter Scott of Bucceleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother James for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Fastheugh who was an associate of John of Newark. In 1618 Walter Scott of Bucceleuch was charged with apprehending him and John of Newark for their ‘unrelaxed’ horning. It is possible he is the same man as William in Fastheugh, but seems to be distinct. William of Roberton (d.1622) son of John, who was probably in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie. In 1610 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Roberton and Howcleuch. He was succeeded by his son James, last of Roberton. William of Burnfoot on Ale (d.c.1622) probably descended from the Scotts of Harden. Keith Scott suggests he was son of Robert; however, he may be the William, son of William, who in 1581 was given the liferent of his widowed mother’s lands of Shielwood and Burnfoot Mill for a payment of 350 merks and a quantity of lime. He then leased his lands of Shielwood to Walter of Todrig for a period of 5 years. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, with the dowry being 400 merks, while his wife received liferent of Shielwood. In a separate transaction he gave his future wife ‘half his mill called Burnefuyt Myln with multures, suckens and knaifships in liferent’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He was listed being ‘of Burnefute’ along with Robert ‘alias Rob Scott of Burnefute’ among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2. He was among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. He was witness to Walter Scott of Stirches as heir to his father in 1592. He was said to have been at the Rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed (‘with our handis at the pen’) a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He had a confirming charter of the lands of Burnfoot and Wester Essenside in Ale Water in 1609. He may be the William ‘called of Burnfute’ who in 1610 was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. He may be the ‘Walter’ (if the name was given incorrectly) of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond in 1604 by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) for ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ for his faithful service, to be given once Francis regained the King’s favour and returned from exile (which never happened). In 1612 the Privy Council records a complaint by the Earl’s sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick, against him and his brothers Walter and Robert, stating that ‘ather of the saidis partyis lyis at avait [await] to tak theair advantage of utheris’ and should appear before the Council. He was described as ‘in Burnfute in the Water of Aill’ when he (along with several other Scotts) signed the bond of 1612 to keep the peace on the Border. In 1617 he was ‘in Burnefute’ among several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is also mentioned in the Circuit Court records of 1622 in a bond of security for ‘Geordie Jonsoune of Eschinsyd’. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter. William of Fingland (d.c.1610) son of Robert of Thirlestane and younger brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Walter of Gamescleuch (who was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw). He may be the William of Thirlestane who is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He probably took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was included in the list of Scotts and others who the Scotts of Thirlestane and their tenants were bound not to reset in 1609; this was part of the family feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. His son Simon (possibly illegitimate) is also listed. Other children included Walter and Robert, neither of whom had male issue (but both of whom held the lands of Howpasley). In 1610 he was ordered to pay £10 for the non-appearance of his kin in relation to the assurance against the Scotts of Tushielaw. He must have died soon afterwards, since his son Simon is described as son of the ‘late William Scott, who was brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane’ later in 1610. Either he, or a closely related William, also received the lands of Merrylaw. He had 2 daughters, one of whom, ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley in 1662. William ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Branxholme’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case on the death of John Elliot ‘in Redden’ while in custody in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. William ‘Willie’ of Satchells (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Jean and Robert of Satchells. He was one of the men accused of involvement in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley in 1615. He is described as both ‘callit in Satchellis’ and ‘callit of Satscheillis’, so it is uncertain whether he was Laird or tenant. It also seems likely that he was related to Capt. Walter of Satchells (possibly his brother) and the Robert described as heir apparent to Satchells in 1622-25. He rode out from Hawick with ‘Marion’s Geordie’, meeting Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ at the foot of the Eilrig Burn, and there he was ‘muffellit’ (i.e. disguised), before they proceeded to kill or maim 60 sheep. He did not undergo trial in 1616 along with ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott and Watti and Ingram Scott, perhaps simply because he was not captured, but disappeared to ‘the North’. William (16th/17th C.) listed by Satchells as being ‘in Lies’ (i.e. Lees) among the ‘pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. The lands were referred to as ‘alias Milma’ (probably the same as Moormaw), and he was also called ‘of Catslac-Know’ and descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He is probably the same man as the William ‘in Catslak’ who in 1607 was served heir to his great-grandfather’s brother, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, in the lands of Easter Moormaw; this connects him to many others Scotts, even if the precise connections are unclear. He may be the William ‘of Slak’ who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1620 by Alexander Stewart of Phaup, apparently demanding the imprisonment of Alexander Stewart until he produced another Stewart; Andrew, surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh appeared for him to answer the complaint and caution was set for him, Walter (also in ‘Slak’), Andrew, Burgess of Edinburgh, Adam, brother to Walter, and their wives and families. Also in 1620 William in Catslack complained that Walter’s house he was attacked by the Stewarts from Phaup. The Stewarts complained that he and Walter set upon Alexander Stewart, giving him 2 wounds in his side and then harassed him daily with pistols; he made a counter claim that Stewart struck him, while Stewart complained he had been wrongfully declared a rebel for non-appearance, since he was too injured to attend. In 1621 he was ‘of Catslak’ when, along with his father-in-law Andrew of Salenside, complained that after Alexander Stewart was released from imprisonment he resumed his attacks, wounding Andrew outside...
Scott of Satchells as being brother of Thomas in Wester Groundistone. However, this is uncertain, since William, son of Walter of Whitehaugh must surely have been dead by this time, with the estate probably by then in the hands of Robert of Headshaw. He may be the William ‘callit of Quhitslaw’ (possibly mistranscribed) who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He may be the John ‘in Quhithauch’ recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when accused of hurting Gilbert Helm. William of Howford (d.bef. 1621) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably son of Robert. He is recorded as being ‘of Howfoord’ in 1607. He was succeeded by his son Walter. William of Burnhead (d.c.1640) eldest son of Robert of Burnhead (or alternatively suggested to be 3rd son of Robert of Burnfoot). He may have been tenant of Burnhead, rather than Laird. His brother Adam married Bessie Langlands, daughter of John, the minister of Wilton. He is said to have served in Holland in the Scotch Brigade, during his father’s lifetime. Douglas ‘Baronage’ states that he ‘was an officer in Holland, and served under the brave Walter Scott, Lord Buccleuch, against the Spaniards in the year 1604, when that cohort of Scots performed many glorious actions against their enemies’. He married Margaret, daughter of Nicol Cairncross of Hislop or Calfhill and had an only son and heir, Robert. William (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Will Scott in Weyms’ in Ruthwater (presumably Weens) when John Young was accused of stealing some of his sheep at the 1622 Circuit Court. He could be the William ‘dweller in Weyndis’ who witnessed the 1607 sasine for John Scott gaining the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir apparent of Walter of Todrig. However, in about 1630 his father sold the lands of Todrig to another branch of the Scotts. He may be the Walter recorded along with William in a case in 1620 regarding the imprisonment of a man from Old Melrose. He married Isabella Livingston and had a son Walter. William of Dryhope (16th/17th C.) son of Philip of Dryhope. He was recorded in 1612 when Robert Horsburgh complained to the Privy Council that he and another 10 or so men came to his house in Peebles struck him and pursued him. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Philip when listed among Scotts and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He is also recorded as ‘lawful son’ of Philip of Dryhope in a charter of 1618. He probably succeeded his father Philip, and was succeeded by Robert, possibly his son. He is recorded in a ‘letter of poinding’ in 1628, with Samuel Cockburn of Henderland as his cautioner. He was succeeded by Robert, probably his son, who was in turn succeeded by Walter, who may have also been his son (hence Robert’s younger brother), and then Philip, the last Laird, may have been his son too. William ‘Young Gillie’ (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. When produced by the Bailie before the Privy Council in Edinburgh he was charged 200 merks caution, in order to appear again if required; presumably this means he was not sent off to the wars. The caution was paid by John Short, skinner and Burgess of Edinburgh (who probably had some connection with Hawick); he is referred to there as ‘son to Robert Scott, late bailie of Hawik’, although there are several possibilities for which Robert this was. It is unclear what his nickname meant. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.c.1638) brother of John of Brieryyards. In 1638 his brother was appointed as tutor to his son Walter, by which time he was already deceased. He was probably father of the William, nephew of John Brieryyards, who is recorded in 1633 and 1637. He is presumably related to other Scotts of Chamberlain Newton.
e.g. the William recorded in 1581. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1643) son of William and nephew of John of Brieryards. In 1633 (and again in 1637) he was served heir to his father’s brother in the lands of Brieryards and ‘Braidleyis’ in the Barony of Hassendean; these were 100-shilling lands of old extent, and included a mill. He may be the Scott, ‘liferenter of Newtoun’ who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter ‘Mariota’ was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may well be the William recorded in 1581.

In 1633 (and again in 1637) he was served heir to his father’s brother in the lands of Brieryards and ‘Braidleyis’ in the Barony of Hassendean; these were 100-shilling lands of old extent, and included a mill. He may be the Scott, ‘liferenter of Newtoun’ who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter ‘Mariota’ was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may well be the William recorded in 1581.

He may be the Scott, ‘liferenter of Newtoun’ who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter ‘Mariota’ was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may well be the William recorded in 1581.

William of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1643) son of William and nephew of John of Brieryards. In 1633 (and again in 1637) he was served heir to his father’s brother in the lands of Brieryards and ‘Braidleyis’ in the Barony of Hassendean; these were 100-shilling lands of old extent, and included a mill. He may be the Scott, ‘liferenter of Newtoun’ who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter ‘Mariota’ was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may well be the William recorded in 1581.
Scott

Mercat Cross. He was elected to the Council in late 1648. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He was distinct from the Bailie at that time, who had the same name. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Margaret Riddell and in 1640 their daughter Helen was born, with George Scott and Andrew Riddell as witnesses. William (17th C.) tenant at Headshaw Mill. In 1640 he was accused by the Kirk Session of Ashkirk of carrying a sack of meal on his horse on Sunday. William of Tushielaw (d.c.1663) son of Robert and younger brother of Walter. He may have been related to the earlier William in Fauldshope. In 1624 he was ‘in Falidship’ when his son William had a sasine for Broadmeadows from the Murrays of Philiphaugh and in 1627 he was ‘in Falishope’ when his son William made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He was ‘of Fauldship’ in 1633 when he resigned the lands of Broadmeadows in favour of his son Andrew. He succeeded his brother Walter to the Lairdship of Tushielaw in 1643. He was a Burgess of Selkirk and was appointed to the Committee of War in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1648 Andrew of Broadmeadows (who may have been his son) gave a sasine to him and his son William for the lands of Broadmeadows. He was fined in 1662 after the Restoration and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He is said to have married Grizel, daughter of Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this may be confusion with his father Walter or great-grandfather William; she could possibly have been the Grizel recorded paying the land tax for Craighaugh in Dumfriesshire in 1671. His children from his first marriage were: Andrew, who purchased Broadmeadows; and Walter in Cacrabank. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Govane of Cardrino and they had one son, William of Broadmeadows. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £156. These were probably the lands of Wester Clarilaw, which were owned by William Scott of Burnhead later in the 17th century. He was surely related to that branch of the Scotts; however, Robert Scott of Burnhead is separately recorded in 1643 (as owner of Burnhead, with land having the same value). He may be the same as the later William of Clarilaw, and hence son of Robert of Burnhead. Sir William of Harden (d.1655) son of ‘Auld Wat’, he married ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, whose real name was Agnes Murray of Elibank. In the ballad version he chose to marry Meg (the ugliest of 3 daughters) as an alternative to the gallowes, after he was caught raiding her fathers sheep. His marriage contract of 1611 still exists, witnessed at Crichton, East Lothian and saying that they both bound themselves ‘be the south and treuth in thair bodys to solemniz and compleit the haly band of matrmony aither of thame with others’. He also gave her a charter of the rents of Stichill in 1611. In 1606 he received the lands of Taras. He was Sheriff of Selkirk and also held land in the counties of Dumfries, Selkirk, Berwick and Peebles. In 1610, as ‘apparent of Harden’, he acted as cautioner for George Langlands of that Ilk in a dispute with Walter in Hawick (called of Todshawhill). He is recorded in a contract for the lands of Harden and Hoscote in 1612, when he was still heir apparent of Harden. He also gained the lands of Kirkhope in the same year. He may have been the ‘William of Todrig’ recorded in a contract with Kerr of Oxnam about 1614 and another with Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh in 1616 (although these could be an error for ‘Walter’). Also in 1616 he witnessed the sale of parts of Hassendean and Horsleyhill by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1617, along with his father and several supporters, there were complaints against him by Lady Bonnington (whose husband Simon Scott was involved with the murder of his brother Walter), claiming that they had harassed and attacked her family. In 1619 he was stated to be the Lieutenant to the Captain of the Border garrison (Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam). In 1620 he complained about a debt with Walter Stewart of Kirkland. In 1620, along with his father, he had confirming charters for the Harden estates. He also had a charter for the lands of Hundlehope in Peeblesshire, with the superior being Walter Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was probably the William of Harden who had a charter for Langhope in about 1620. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmansecleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scableuch (essentially holding them in collateral for a loan). In 1625 he was appointed Sheriff Principle of Selkirk. He carried the arms of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in the funeral procession between Branholme and Hawick in 1634 and was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl's will. Also in 1634 he was one of 2 representatives of the young Earl of Buccleuch who travelled to London to hear the King’s decision in an ongoing land dispute with Francis Stewart. He was also appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis, and was one of the trustees for Mary of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1636 he received a long term ‘tack’ for Aikwood, where he may have resided; he possessed significant lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’, and he signed it himself in Hawick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Ripon in 1641. He received his knighthood in 1641 and was also in that year appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire. In 1642 he was made (or reappointed) Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament 1643–44 and 1644–46. In 1642 he was served heir to his father in his lands of Over and Nether Cliffhope, Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Wormscleuch and Abbotsike, as well as the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton and others. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’, and was appointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. In 1643 he was appointed as a Colonel of the Horses for Roxburgh and Selkirk and also appointed as a ‘commissioner for the establishment of manufacturies’. In a 1643 county valuation he was the third largest landowner in Wiltown Parish (after Buccleuch and Langlands), his lands valued at £814, and he also held lands in Hasseendean Parish valued at £600 (this being Borthwickshiel, which was later in Robertson Parish) and teinds in Lessuden Parish (for Ellistion, valued at £420). Also in 1643 he promised the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshiel to his son Gideon and his future wife Margaret Hamilton. He was also in 1643 served heir to his great-grandfather William of Harden’s lands of Hoscote (this clearly establishing him as great-grandson of the first William of Harden). In 1644 he and Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers were commended for organising tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to help repel the Royalist forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, and in 1648 and 1649 also for Roxburghshire. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1647. In 1648 he was appointed along with the Earl of Buccleuch, as well as his son (Sir William) and others to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He bought Mertoun House in around 1649, which would become the principal seat of the Scotts of Harden in the next generation; in 1649 he gave a disposition of the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig to his eldest son Sir William. He commanded the cavalry in the Teviotdale Regiment in the early 1640s, and was Lieut.-Col. in a regiment of about 1,200 men raised by Buccleuch, which fought at Philiphaugh. His support of the Royalist side led to him being fined by Cromwell in 1654. In 1611 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. They had 5 sons and at least 4 daughters: Sir William, who succeeded; Sir Gideon of Highchester, whose descendants eventually succeeded to Harden; Walter, who started the Scotts of Raeburn; James, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane; John, progenitor of the Scotts of Woll; Elizabeth (or Elspeth), who married Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead; Margaret, who married Thomas Ker of Mersington; Janet, who married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and Susannah, who married Gideon Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. He secondly (in 1633) married Margaret, daughter of William Ker of Linton, but had no further children – ‘Doon in the depths o’ the auld gray castle, Shut in alane wi’ his thoughts to wrassle, Wull Scott sat on the cauld stane fluir, And kent that his hopes o’ the morn were pur’ [WL]. William of Synton (d.1661) eldest son of Francis, the first of the Harden Syntons. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1643 and was on the Committee of War in 1648 for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire and in 1649 for Selkirkshire. The keystone of the burial enclosure of the Scotts of Synton in Ashkirk kirkyard is inscribed ‘W S 1646’, which are probably his initials. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1661 he (along with William of Headshaw) witnessed a baptism for Walter and Jean Scott. He is probably the William ‘of Sinton’ recorded in a deed in 1663 (even although deceased by then) regarding a factory. In 1647 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Scott of Headshaw. Their children included: Francis (b.1649) and William (b.1652), both of whom may have died young; John, who succeeded (and was either eldest son or 3rd and eldest surviving); Grizel; Isobel (b.1659), who married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae; and Elizabeth (b.1661). Most of these children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish. The witnesses in 1652 were Sir William (probably of Harden) and Thomas (perhaps of Whiteslade) and in 1661 were Thomas of Whiteslade and William Gledstains ‘of …’ (probably of that Ilk). His brother Francis was appointed as tutor to his eldest son John in 1662. If John was the 3rd son (as Keith Scott states), then there may have been an additional son William, recorded in 1670 as ‘brother-germaine’ to John of Synton when he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Sir William of Harden (1617–1699) son of Sir William and ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’. He was known as ‘Little Sir William’ and was referred to as being ‘of Oakwood’ during his father’s lifetime. Along with his wife Christian Boyd, he took custody of his brother Walter’s children to keep them from Quakerism. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643 and 1644 and served along with his father also for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named (along with the his father, Sir William of Harden, and the Earl of Buccleuch) on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He received the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig from his father Sir William in 1649. He was one of the Commissioners to Parliament for Selkirkshire appointed in 1649. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was one of the trustees of the Buccleuch estates during the minority of Mary in the 1650s and then for her sister Anne. He was knighted in 1660, like his father before him. As a supporter of the Covenant, he was fined £18,000 in about 1662. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was listed there as one of her curators. He is probably the Sir William who paid tax on £500 land tax for Ellrig in 1663 and also the Sir William who paid the land tax on Elliston in St. Boswell’s Parish in 1663 and 1678. His grieve is recorded in discharges over annual rents with treasurer of Selkirk in 1665 and 1667. About 1666 he was appointed one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. He received Parliamentary ratification of his lands of Borthwickshiels in 1672. In 1673 he matriculated his arms. He was also recorded in several deeds in 1673, one involving his son William. He inherited Hartwoodmyres in 1677, but sold the lands to Walter Scott of Burnfoot about 1690. He is recorded in 1673 acting as one of the commissioners to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1676 he inherited his father’s lands of Houndshope in Peeblesshire, as well as Hoscote and Hartwoodmyres. In 1677/8 he received the lands of Robertson, Howceleuch and Borthwickshiels Mains for ‘non-entry’. In 1678 he paid tax on land valued at more than £5000 in Selkirkshire (with his son responsible for more lands), as well as almost £2000 of land in Smailholm Parish. He is recorded in deeds of 1682, including in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was indicted in 1682 as a Covenanter supporter, with his wife being accused of attending conventicles. Like his nephew, the Earl of Tarras, he was imprisoned in Edinburgh. In 1683 he appeared in court again in Jedburgh, and was carried off to imprisonment in Edinburgh Castle. The proceedings against him dragged on, and he was eventually released on bail paid by Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. However, he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1684 and after the Restoration was knighted by Charles II. He was also further fined that year (along with his son and other Teviotdale Lairds). In 1686 he gave a charter to Walter, Earl of Tarras, his nephew. On 1687 he and his wife were acquitted of stealing ‘a little girl, called the Tumbling-Lassie, that danced upon the stage’, actually freeing her from what amounted to slavery. His Chamberlain was Walter Langlands in at least the period 1689–94. In 1690 he was one of the local Barons who were appointed to the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. In 1641 he married Christian, daughter of Robert, 7th Lord Boyd of Kilmarnock. His wife was served as one of the heirs to her sister Helen Boyd in 1647. His children were: Sir William, who succeeded; Robert of Iliston, who succeeded his brother; Christian, who married William Kerr of Chatto; and Margaret, who married Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. Another daughter may have been Sussanah, who married Gideon Ogilvie (but that may have been his sister). His will is recorded at Lauder Commissioners in 1699. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son Robert with Margaret Preacher was baptised (and labelled as conceived through fornication). The witnesses were Robert Deans and David Scott (who was probably a relative). William of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of Robert who was ‘Baillee and Porterier in Hawick’ according to Scott of Satchells. He was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was probably the first of his family to be referred to as Laird of Horsleyhill. He was granted Weensland, along with Shaws and Burnflat in 1653, including rights to use Hawick’s Common. He sold the Tolbooth to the town in 1657. He was listed as a member of the Town Council in 1660. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was listed as being ‘of Huseyhill’ when fined £1,200 for being a supporter of the Covenant. He is probably the William recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in Hawick and Hassendean Parishes; he paid tax on £304 for his lands of Weensland, ‘Acoth haugh’ (possibly Usuch Haugh) and Shaws, as well as £637 for Horsleyhill. He was also mentioned in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He may also have been the William Scott recorded as a Bailie in 1638, and the William who was on the Town Council in 1668. However, there are at least 2 generations here, and so it may be hard to separate them. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert (with William being the grandson). His daughter Janet married Harry Riddell in 1659. William of Headshaw (d.c.1690) eldest son of John of Headshaw and grandson of George of Synton. He is recorded in the Buccleuch archives in 1646 for the accounts of the deceased John of Headshaw. He was on the Committee for Roxburghshire in 1648 and may have been the William, ‘younger of Headshaw’ who was on the Committee for Selkirkshire in 1649. He was served heir to his father John in 1653 and had a sasine for his father’s lands of Headshaw, Dryden and others in 1655. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for his brother Robert of Langhope in Ashkirk in 1656. In 1659 he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). In 1661 he (along with William of Synton) witnessed a baptism for Walter and Jean Scott. He paid tax on £1028 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £1160 18s 4d in 1678. He resigned the lands of Headshaw and Dryden to his son John in 1686. He witnessed several documents for the Lairds of Todrig, Whitslade and Synton in the period 1688–90. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. He must have been the ‘Scot of Headshaw, elder’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, but died shortly afterwards. In 1647 in Dunfermline he married Jean Halket, sister of Sir James Halket. Their children were: John, who succeeded; William (b.1648); Elizabeth (b.1651), baptised in Ashkirk; Mary (or Marie), who married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles, and she became heiress on the death of her brother John; and Thomas (b.1656), also baptised in Ashkirk. In the 1651 Ashkirk baptismal record his wife’s surname is ‘Hackit’, with witnesses ‘Sir Walter . . .’ (perhaps Scott of Buccleuch) and ‘Sir Thomas . . .’ (perhaps Ker of Cavers Carre, who married Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfuiranne). The witnesses in 1656 were ‘Sir Thomas C . . . of . . .’ (probably Ker again) and Thomas Scott (perhaps of Whit-slade). Sir William of Clerkington (d.1656) son of Lawrence of Harperig. He was an advocate, becoming Clerk to the Privy Council and one of the Clerks of Session. In 1653 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will and serbed the same purpose for Francis, the 2nd Earl. He was served heir to his father in 1638. He was knighted by Charles I in 1641 and appointed a Lord of Session in 1649. He also served as a tutor to the young Mary, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1651 his 2nd lawful son William was one of the witnesses to corrections to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His son Lawrence was served as his heir in 1657. Sir William of Aikwood (17th C.) recorded in a Melrose Regality document of 1669, referring to an agreement over teinds going back to 1650. He could be the same as Sir William of Harden. William (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for ‘both-meall’ (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was presumably a merchant of some sort. In the same year perhaps the same William was ordered to pay £6 for the ‘liberty of the burgh’ (i.e. becoming a Burgess), ‘fourtie shilling being deduced for the buttis bigine’. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Bessie Scott. Their children included John (b.1651). William of Galalaw (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Nether Bunchester. He is recorded in a list of Hassendean landowners in 1666. He paid tax on £156 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678 in Hassendean Parish. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw. Following the death of his father Walter in 1653, he gave Nether Bunchester to his uncle Thomas, according to a previous family arrangement. His daughter Bessie married Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, according to a marriage contract of 1663. He may have been related to the much earlier David ‘of Gallowlaw’ and the somewhat later Adam of Galalaw. William of Bonnington (d.bef. 1684) recorded in 1684 when his son William became a goldsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh. His lands were Bonnington in Lothian. He was the eldest son of James of Bonnington and married Elizabeth Elliott of Stobs. He appears to have acted as a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in Dalkeith in 1661–62, when he is described as ‘fier of Bonnytoun’. He died before his father, and by then only had a single child, Margaret, who married James Cockburn. His daughter ‘Magdalena’ was served heir to his wife Elizabeth Elliott in 1662. William of Tushielaw (17th C.) probably son of Andrew, he is said to have succeeded when still a minor, most likely in the 1660s. In 1651 he was given 400 merks yearly during his lifetime in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; he is described there as ‘eldest sone to Andrew Scott of Tushilaw, our servitor’. In 1659 he was ‘yownger of Tushillaw’ when he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). He was succeeded by Walter, who was the last Laird. Although it is suggested (by Keith Scott) that Walter was his son, it seems more likely he was a younger brother. He may be the William of Tushielaw who married Margaret, daughter of Francis Scott of Synton. David and Francis, ‘brothers of the deceased … Scot of Tushellaw’ were recorded in a court case in the Regality of Melrose in 1676. This suggests he was dead by then, and these were his brothers; however, the succession around that time is complicated, and so it is possible the 2 men were his uncles.

William (17th C.) recorded as Bailie in 1678. He may be the same as William of Brieryyards. Probably the same William served as Procurator Fiscal during the 1670s. William of Coldhouse (d.c.1686) mentioned in 1666 in a record relating to Hassendean Parish. He is probably the same as ‘William of Cowdhouse and Tandlaw’ and is probably related to the later Robert of Coldhouse. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Coldhouse). It seems likely that his mother was the ‘Marie Scott, liferenter of Coudhouse’ listed in 1643. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Hartwoodmyres (17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Hartwoodmyres. In 1663 John Armstrong (possibly a factor or similar) was recording paying his land tax of more than £600 in Wilton Parish, but he is likely the ‘Hartwoodmire’ who also paid tax on £26. He was also recorded in 3 deeds in 1663. He is recorded in a list of major residents of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of those who wanted the parish suppressed. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1666 and as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1666. In 1667 he was a Commissioner of the King’s Bounty. He was also farmer at Borthwickbrae in 1670 and in 1672 was leasing the west end of Branxholme Muir (from the Scotts of Buccleuch). He appears to have been the last of the Scotts of Hartwoodmyres, but may be related to the Coldhouse Scotts. In 1677 the lands of Hartwoodmyres went to Sir William Scott of Harden. He could be the deceased William of Borthwickbrae whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £960. In 1682 ‘the aires of [William] Scott of Hartwoodmyres’ are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. His brother Robert was a shoemaker. In 1673 he was charged with striking his brother Robert, apparently because Thomas Brown had called him a ‘yallanger’, presumably this being the result of a drunken mix-up. Probably the same merchant William is on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same William as the merchant listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Possibly the same merchant William was a witness in 1700 (along with glover John) for flesher Robert Renwick and for tailor John. William (17th C.) married Isobel Porteous. In 1676 he is recorded being ‘form: in Ashkirk’ when his son John was baptised. The witnesses were William Laing and Robert Cowan. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683. William (17th C.) listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He is distinct from William of Clarilaw (who is also listed), but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill along with Adam (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Hartwoodmyres who leased part of Branxholme Muir in 1672. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘eister’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the other Williams, possibly the later William ‘eist the water’. William (d.c.1686) glover in Hawick. He is probably the William listed along with Walter as glovers in the trial of men for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair in 1673. In 1675 he was one of the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was thus likely to have been a member of the Town Council. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for William Laing and in 1685 another for carrier William Aitken. His will is recorded in 1686. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it included Hassendean. He is recorded in Clarilaw in the baptismal record of 1688. In 1680 he married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Jean (b.1681); John (b.1683); Margaret and Janet (b.1685); and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were Andrew Donald and James Douglas and in 1688 were John Armstrong and Thomas Henderson. His daughter may be the Margaret, daughter of William, who married George Fletcher in Roberton in 1718. Perhaps the same William was resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1679); Jean (b.1681); and Isobel (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were James Law and Robert Noble and in 1687 were Robert Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and John Noble. William (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is said that ‘they were taken prisoners, stripped almost naked, and treated more like beasts than human beings’; they were imprisoned in the open in Greyfriars Churchyard for months, so that transportation was initially seen as a sign of hope. William (17th C.) recorded in Newton in a baptismal record of 1683, when Hassendean was part of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Shiel and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and Janet (b.1685). The witnesses in 1683 were Robert Scott (who was probably related) and William Lamb. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (which it contained Hassendean). He married Janet Little and their children included Archibald (b.1686). The witnesses were Patrick Dodds and Archibald Little (who was surely related to his wife). Bailie William (17th C.) recorded as one of the 2 Hawick Bailies in 1692. It is unclear if he was the same man as William of Brieryards. William (17th C.) smith listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was taxed for 2 hearths. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) see William of Burnhead.
at Milsington in 1694. He was a petitioner in support of having the Whitslade lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714. He probably married a daughter of James Elliott of Stobs and Margaret Elliot of Redheugh. His children included: William, tenant in Milsington; possibly Thomas; Walter, who settled at Ginnwood; Robert, who settled at Single; and James, who was a notary in Hawick. He is buried in Ashkirk (and lived to a very old age, unless the date of his death is a mistake). William (17th C.) tenant at Salensis in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been related to the earlier William of Salensis. Perhaps he was the William who married Isobel Scott, with their son Robert baptised in Ashkirk in 1690; the witnesses were Thomas Wallace and William Dunlop. William (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was listed separately from William in Ashkirk. Perhaps he is the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may have included (although there may be 2 families here): Isabel (b.1690); Margaret (b.1691); Janet (b.1692); George (b.1694); John (b.1697); John (again, b.1699); and John (again, b.1700). Additionally William (b.1702) was child of William ‘tenant in Essinside’ and Margaret Scott; although the surname is omitted, this seems likely to be the same man. The witnesses in 1690 were Francis Redford and John Minto (both at Easter Essenside) and in 1694 were John Minto and John Stewart.

He could be the William who is recorded collecting money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He may be the resident of Kirkton Parish whose son James was baptised in Cavers in 1696. He may also be the William in Newton whose son Adam was baptised in Kirkton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at Peelbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Francis, who was tenant there. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1706 a child of his was baptised in Wilton Parish. William (17th C.) tenant in Netherraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Park in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was separate from the merchant of the same name who was also listed, but may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Baxter James Lands in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Slaidhills in 1702 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘indweller in Walls in Teviotdale’ who was factor to Thomas Turnbull of Knoxe in an undated document, probably from the early 1700s. ‘Walls’ may have been ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’. William of Raeburn (d.1699) eldest son of Walter ‘Wat Wudspurs’, he was the 2nd Laird of Raeburn and grandson of Sir William of Harden. His brother Walter was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. In 1685 and 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He claimed the Harden estates against Walter, Earl of Tarras, in a court action starting in 1691. But the estates were inherited by the Earl’s eldest son Gideon. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He contributed £300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and was succeeded by his son Walter. Other children were: John, who died unmarried; and Isabella (or Isabel), who married Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. In 1702 his widow married John Scott of Synton. William of Langhope (b.1654) son of John of Langhope, and descended from the Scotts of Synton. He succeeded on his father’s death in 1666, being served heir in 1669. He had a ‘wadset’ with Walter of St. Leonards in 1669, and lost the lands of Langhope to Walter in 1677. Margaret Scott of St. Leonards, with whom he had a disposition, may have been his mother, and it is possible that Walter was his brother. He is probably the same as William ‘in Langhope’ who was involved with decrees for the lands of Langhope with Adam Scott and others. In 1684 he was said to have helped warn Sir William, younger of Harden, that soldiers were on the way to arrest him. He is mentioned as ‘Will Scott of Langup’ in Scott of Satchells’ postcard, published in 1688. His name appears on inquests in 1686, 1693 and 1699, still using the designation ‘of Langhope’, even although he had sold the lands. He had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk in 1690 and 1691, regarding annual rents. In 1692 he was a curator for his sister-in-law Janet Scott when he requested the Burgh of Selkirk to repay a debt owed to her and his wife Isobel of £15 2s. William (b.1656) son of John ‘Westport’. He was baptised in Hawick, with an indication that the birth was the result of fornication. Probably the same William, son of John, became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. William (17th C.) recorded in 1680 as ‘Flex’ when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas and Isobel Coltart. The other witness was John in Whietyets. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Presumably he farmed or lived at the Flex. William (d.c.1690) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Falsyde and their children included: Margaret (b.1683), who married Walter Hum; and Anne, who married James, tenant in Stobicote. His wife secondly married Robert Thomson, tenant in Newmill and had at least 3 more children in the period 1694–1701. She could be the Margaret Falsyde recorded ‘eis the water’ in the 1694 Hearth Tax Roll for Hawick. William (d.c.1697) doctor in Hawick, probably son of Robert of Harwood, and hence brother of Gideon of Falnash. He is recorded as ‘brother-german’ of Walter of Harwood in 1667 when he became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He served as a Bailie in Hawick in the 1670s. Probably the same William was listed as an apothecary when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; this was for Elspeth Scott, with the other witness being Walter of Goldielands, suggesting a close family connection perhaps. He leased the ‘old Glebe land’ in Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was ‘Wm. Scott of Harwood, apothecary’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: William (b.1679); Margaret (b.1681); an unnamed child (b.1683), who presumably died: James (b.1684); Agnes (b.1685); and Francis (b.1687). He is also probably the William ‘of Harwood’ recorded in 1680 when he and his wife ‘Isobel’ Scott had their daughter Marion baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert of Glack and Walter of Goldielands. The baptism of Francis was witnessed by the Town Clerk, Walter Gledstains, and James Gledstains. He could be the William, apothecary in Hawick, whose brother Gideon was served as his heir in 1697; presumably this was because none of his children had reached maturity. William of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Jardine in Hawick Parish. The other witness was Robert, who was probably related. It is unclear how he fits into the succession of Scotts of Whitehaugh. William (17th C.) tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the ‘Walter Scott of Mirrielaw’ (if this was an error in the name) who rented part of Whithope in 1698. William (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was recorded at ‘birkhill’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Bank in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear exactly where his farm was. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hasenden Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was ‘wt the kilne’ and paid tax on 2 hearths. William (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the William in Appletreehall whose wife Janet Shiel’s will is recorded in 1687. He may be related to the later William, tenant in Appletreehall. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Scott and their children included (although there may be 2 families here): Agnes (b.1688); James (b.1694); James (again, b.1697); Ann (b.1703); Jean (b.1705); Agnes (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Isobel (b.1710). The witnesses in 1694 were John Easton and Mungo Scott (who may have been related to either him or his wife). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children included William (b.1697). Agnes (b.1698), baptised in Wilton, with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. Bessie (b.1689), Adam (b.1691) and John (b.1700), baptised in Ashkirk, to parents with the same names, may be the same family. The witnesses in 1691 were Walter Scott and Robert Pringle. The witnesses in 1697 were Robert and Adam Scott. He may be related to the William who was tenant in Wiltonburn in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Lees in 1698. His wife was Isabella Morton and their children included William (b.1698). The baptismal witnesses were Adam Morton (surely related to his wife) and Robert Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as cottar in Birkwood in 1698. He married Isobel Renwick and their children included: George (b.1691); Gilbert (b.1698); Mary (b.1703); and Bessie (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were Thomas Wallace and Robert Taylor.
William (17th/18th C.) from Wilton Parish, his son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700. The witnesses were John and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield. William of Horsleyhill (17th/18th C.) son of Robert and grandson of the previous William. He succeeded Robert, probably in the late 1680s (even although Keith Scott’s genealogy misses him out). He was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. He may be the ‘Laird of Horslihill’ who paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick in 1694. In 1696 there is a record of Francis Scott ‘brother-german to William Scott of Horsliehill’ becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He could be the Laird of Horsleyhill who was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He appears to have been succeeded by his brother Francis, and so presumably had no male heirs. William (17th/18th C.) boatman of Langlands. He owned the land on which the Grammar School was built, at the Sandbed, from 1693. He sold it to Robert Langlands of Langlands in 1701 (who was presumably a relative of the Laird). In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was listed as being ‘in Boathouse’ on the Langlands estate. In 1709 he is probably the William who appears to be ‘Boatman in Coublehaugh’ when his daughter Mary was baptised in Wilton Parish. In 1711 he was listed as ‘Boatman’ when his son William witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) probably 3rd son of Walter of Crumhaugh, and hence brother to Charles of Crumhaugh and Walter in Goldielands. In 1700 he was described as son of Walter of Crumhaugh when the 2 of them witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his brother). He was described as son of the deceased Walter of Crumhaugh in 1702 when he married Isobel Gledstains in Hawick. He could be the Hawick innkeeper ‘called William of Goldielands’ whose son Walter was baptised in 1705, with witnesses Walter in Crumhaugh (who could thus be his brother) and Michael. William of Nether Boucherston (17th/18th C.) recorded as owner of lands valued at £180 in Abbotrule Parish in 1707. ‘William’ may be an error for ‘Walter’, who was Laird at that time. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. His servant Walter had a child baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) wright who lived at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a bill for repairing Wolfelee House in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitchesters, where his recorded in 1706. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and James Falsyde. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Appletreehall in 1711 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier William who lived at Appletreehall, as well as Walter who was also a tenant at Appletreehall in 1711. William of Clarilaw and Burnhead (d.1714) eldest son of Robert, who was tenant in Burnhead. He may be the William, son of Robert and Bessie Turnbull born in Hawick in 1651. He was also known as William of Burnhead when he was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was William of Clarilaw in 1678 when he paid land tax in Hassendean Parish for £182 for Wester Clarilaw, as well as £156 for ‘the lands of Burnhead’. He is probably the William of Clarilaw recorded in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was also ‘of clarilaw’ in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. In 1691 he was leasing part of the lands of Branxholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He purchased Burnhead (the family lands) from his distant cousin Adam Scott of Burnfoot in about 1692. In 1692 he paid the teinds to the Duchess of Buccleuch for his part of the lands of Clarilaw. He was probably the Laird who paid tax on 3 hearths recorded as ‘Burnhead his hous’ in 1694. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch (in name of John Scott of Pitlochie) for the years 1681–4, for Branxholme, Wilton and Whitchester. He acted as Chamberlain to the Earl of Lothian for the period 1689–1705. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and was probably the William of Clarilaw who was a Commissioner in 1704. He is recorded in 1705 when his son John became a feltmaker’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Probably the same William of Burnhead is described in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish in about 1720. He may have lived at Clarilaw rather than Burnhead. He married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Wedderstain (or ‘Wathersone’), merchant of Dalkeith; she was one of 2 daughters who were ‘heirs-portioners’ of their father and in 1675 she granted her half of the lands in Dalkeith to John Learmonth. She may be the ‘Lady Burnhead’ for whom the funeral bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1729. Their children included: Robert, who succeeded; Eupham, who married Thomas Watson, ‘writer’ in Hawick; William (b.1682); Peter; Jean (b.1686); John (b.1688); and other daughters. One of these daughters was probably Margaret, who married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. Another daughter was probably Agnes, who married James Scott in Calfield in 1721. In 1729 the funeral bells in Hawick were also rung for ‘Burnhead’s sister’, who (since this was after his own death) could thus either have been his sister or his daughter. The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were John of Lees and Adam (who were probably both related to him) and in 1686 and 1688 were Adam and Robert (who were probably also Scotts of the Hassean area). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. In 1684 he was charged at a court in Jedburgh with not attending his parish church for 2 years and fined the equivalent of 2 years' in Jedburgh with not attending his parish church of Denholm. In 1684 he was charged at a court on land valued at more than £ for 2 years and fined the equivalent of 2 years’ rental, corresponding to £156 Scots. His sister-in-law Helen Stewart was also accused of attending conventicles. Sir William of Harden (d.1707) succeeded his father Sir William. He had been engaged in the rebellion of the Earl of Argyll. In 1684 there was an attempt to capture him, but word was gotten to him while he was curling with Riddell of Haining and others, so he escaped. He was captured later in Newcastle, but had a re-mission in 1685. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1687 when still ‘younger of Harden’. He was appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1689, serving until 1693, when his seat was declared vacant because he had not signed ‘the assurance’. In 1678 he was ‘younger of Harden’ when he acted as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. In that year he was also ‘younger’ when he paid tax on land valued at more than £2400 in Selkirkshire. And in 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, along with his father. He was still ‘younger of Harden’ in 1695 when he contributed the large amount of £2000 to the Darien ill-fated Company. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. Also in 1700 he was granted the rights as heir-male of Synton on their resignation by Archibald Scott of Boon- raw; it was stated that he was descended from the ancient family of Synton. In 1701 he had a bond with Walter Scott, younger of Woll. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. And in 1705, along with Walter Scott of Woll, he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest. In 1673 he married Jean, only daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton (and she later remarried Sir William Scott of Thirlestane). Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. His wife may have been the ‘Dame Jean Scott, lady Harden’ listed among the contributors to the Darien Scheme in 1695. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1703 he married Margaret, daughter of James Scott ‘Colifort’. Their children may include James (b.1706) and Robert (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, glover. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the lands of ‘Kirktoun’ in Kirktoun Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1719 his widow Isobel Hardie married carrier Robert Aitken. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was in Howcleuch in 1710 when his daughter Isobel was baptised and in 1712 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same William was in Harden in 1714 when his son John was baptised. William of Brieryhill (d.1718) son of Adam of Galalaw, and brother of Alexander of Galalaw. He married Jean Scott. In 1718 he was deceased when his brother Alexander presented his daughter Agnes for baptism in Hawick Parish. He is recorded being ‘of Brierie-hole’ and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Burnhead and wigmaker John Elliot (brother to Robert Elliot of Rigg). Margaret (b.1715) may also have been his child. William (b.1686) son of John ‘Cloaks’, who was also called ‘Whitegates’. The Parish records describe how ‘in ye commonriding night’ of 1707 he was ‘togerther a considerable time alone in her Mothers Stable’ with Margaret Brydon, as wit-nessed by Robert Scott ‘called Wyndhead’. He also went to her house, and finding the doors close and the family asleep, climbed in the win-dow. In 1708 the illegitimate child, John, was baptised in Hawick, by which time he had already fled the country. The witnesses in 1708 included David Miller and James Gray in Whitchesters. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘elder in Branxholmton’ in 1717 when along with John Scott (elder in Branxholme) he was appointed to collect money from Branxholme, Branxholme Town and Castlehill. He may be the William recorded in Branxholme in 1702 when he wit-nessed a baptism for John in Branxholme. Prob-ably the same William (or his son) was tenant at Branxholmton when he witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1710, 1712, 1713 and 1715. On 2 oc-casions he witnessed a baptism for John, car-rier in Branxholme Town, who may have been...
related to him (and once the other witness was John in Branxholme, who may also have been related). He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in the period 1712–17 (and was probably related to the Robert, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was still farming 1/3 of Branxholme Town in 1718. He may be the William ‘in Branxholm’, married to Margaret Scott, whose children included James (b.1703) and James (again, b.1706); the witnesses in 1706 were Andrew Ogilvie and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. It is also possible he was the William ‘son in law to John Scott tenant in Branxholme’, who married Anna Laidlaw (perhaps as his 2nd wife), whose son Robert was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. William of Thirlestane (b.1663) eldest son of James, who was brother of Sir William of Harden. He was 2nd Laird of Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the more familiar ones in the Ettrick or near Lauder), succeeding in 1687. In 1684 he married Christian Don. They had 13 children (mostly baptised in Yetholm): 4 who died young; Agnes (b.1690), who married Walter Scott of Harden; Alexander (b.1691), who became a doctor and succeeded to Thirlestane in 1729; Walter (b.1692), a wine merchant in Leith, whose son Thomas was minister at Cavers; John (b.1693); Patrick (b.1695); Christian (b.1696); Andrew (b.1697); Gideon (b.1699); and Isabel.

William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Easter Burnfoot. His daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was ‘W... in Roughheugh Mylne’ in 1709 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (1679–1744) eldest son of William, he was tenant in Milsington, like his father. He was ‘Younger in Milsintoun’ in 1733 when his oldest son was baptised in Roberton. He is probably the William ‘in Milsington’ who is mentioned in a lease from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1731 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood (who had married his cousin Jane Scott). His children were: William (b.1733), also tenant in Milsington; Thomas (b.1735); Henry (b.1736), baptised in Roberton: Walter (b.1740); Robert (b.1742), baptised in Roberton, a doctor in Lasswade; Jean; Elizabeth, who married her cousin William, son of Walter Scott in Girnwood; and Janet. William of Stonedge (d.1730s) brother of Adam, who had been tenant of Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased Stonedge and Howa farms. He was son of Walter, tenant of Wauchope. He may have been the William who was an elder of Hobkirk in the early 1700s. He was recorded as being ‘in Hopsburn’ in 1709 in a document relating to repairs to Wolfelee House and also involving the tutors of Stonedge. In 1724 his brother transferred Stonedge and Howa farms to him and 6 years later he purchased most of the rest (the eastern part) of the Stonedge estate from Gilbert Elliott. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch, appointed to cover the Liddesdale estates for the period 1714–24. He married Susanna, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshields. Their eldest daughter Margaret married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee, in Edinburgh in 1727. His son was probably Thomas, who was recorded as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1732, although he may not have succeeded his father until later. He (or his son Thomas) later sold the estate to Robert Lisle. His widow was probably the ‘Lady Standlidge’ who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1698 his son Walter was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses John Douglas and William Rae. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Cavers Parish. In 1699 he married Christian Nichol in Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was married to Elspeth Elliot and their daughter Helen was born in 1701. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for fellow tailor John Little. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Wiltonburn in 1711 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is possible he is the same man as the earlier William associated with Wiltonburn (if this was a second marriage, perhaps). William (17th/18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for weaver Robert Rodger and for merchant William Black, and in 1709 for carrier Henry Paterson. William ‘Will’ (17th/18th C.) son of William the boatman at Langlands. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for James Irvine, tenant in Wiltonburn. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Skelfhill’ in 1711 when he married Janet Aitchison in Hawick Parish. She was widow of John Scott ‘younger in Falnash’ and the wedding took place at Falnash, officiated by Rev. Bell, the minister of Cavers. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts who farmed at Skelfhill. In 1712 he was ‘tenant in Falnash’. His children with Janet...
Aitchison included: John (b.1711); and William (b.1712). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Scott in Skelfhill (who was surely related) and Robert Pringle in Caverton. William (b.1726) weaver in Hawick. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to hear an apology from fellow weaver Thomas Lunn for calling him certain unspecified names. Probably the same weaver William married Bessie Douglas and had children including Charles (b.1723), Helen (b.1725) and Thomas (b.1726). He was already deceased when his son Thomas was baptised, with witnesses weavers John Swan and John Scott (who may have been related). William (d.bef. 1721) listed as ‘sometimes in Deanburn haugh’. In 1721 he was already deceased when his daughter Bessie married workman John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servant to Alexander, Laird of Synton in 1717, when he witnessed a baptism for his master. William (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1719 as servant to William Miller, weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson, ‘servitor’ to Rev. Robert Bell of Cavers. Their children included: Francis (b.1722); James (b.1724); and Janet (b.1724). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Dryden, recorded in relation to a debt in Selkirk in 1723. This is presumably the Dryden near Ashkirk. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Sundhope in Yarrow. He was deceased in 1753 when his widow Janet Inglis (indweller in Sundhope) had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. William (18th C.) resident at Ashybank in 1723, 1724 and 1730. He married Janet Turnbull in Cavers in 1723. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Bessie (b.1724) and James (b.1730). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Douglas and their children included: Charles (b.1723); and Isabel (b.1726). William (18th C.) resident at Newton in Wilton Parish in at least 1725–1732. He married Christian Hoy and their children included: Mark (b.1720); Thomas (b.1723); John (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); Mark (again, b.1732); William (b.1734); George (b.1736); and James (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were Robert Scott (who may have been related) and Robert Storie, in 1727 were Alexander Moor and James Dryden and in 1732 were Robert Scott (again) and Robert Storie (again). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts associated with Newton. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. William (18th C.) married Katherine Halliday in Cavers Parish in 1731. William of Whitehaugh (d.1751) son of Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh. He was served heir to his father in 1692. He may be the person meant by ‘Walter [sic] Scot of Whithough’ on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. His brother Robert was minister at Roberton. The pair of them witnessed a baptism in 1721 for James in Whitehaugh (who may have been related) and another in 1727 for James Scott and Janet Scott in Borthaugh (the same couple). He also witnessed a baptism for the couple in 1724, with his brother performing the ceremony and other witnesses being James (the child’s grandfather), John (the child’s uncle) and Walter of Cockerheugh. He gave 4 silver communion cups to Wilton Kirk in 1728, including the family motto ‘Vincit Amor Patriae’. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme, younger of Stirches and in 1747 and 1748 others for the Wilton Minister, James Simpson. He paid the window tax in Wilton Parish in 1748. In 1705 he is said to have married Ann, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. However, this is more likely to have been Anne, daughter of Rev. John Rutherford and Christian Shaw (grand-daughter of Rev. John Shaw of Selkirk), who were the great-grandparents of author Sir Walter Scott; they lived in George Square in Edinburgh and Sir Walter Scott tells a story about their shaggy dog. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Isobel, and then by their 2nd cousin John. Sir William 2nd Baronet of Thirlestane (d.1725) only surviving son of Sir Francis. He became a member of the Faculty of Advocates in 1702. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Thirlestane’, as well as in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was involved in a bond with Walter of Whitfield (later of Harden) and Walter of Woll in 1715. Later the 3 were ‘tutors’ to John of Harden, and were involved in legal proceedings over their consequent claims on part of the Harden estate in 1724–26. Known as a man of great learning, he is believed to have written the words for ‘The Blythesome Bridal’ and wrote several verses in English and in Scots dialect, as well as poems in Latin (24 of which appeared in ‘Selecta Poemata’ in 1727). In 1699 he married Elizabeth Brisbane, Mistress of Napier, only surviving child of Margaret, Baroness Napier of Merchiston and John Brisbane. Their son Francis assumed the name Napier and the appellation... of Merchiston’; his great-grandson, Lord Francis Napier would live at Wilton Lodge for several years. His first wife died in 1705. In 1710 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, widow of Sir William Scott of Harden. William (d.bef. 1727) recorded as Laird of Wauchope. His daughter Margaret married William Elliot in Edinburgh in 1727. He was probably related to the Scotts who had long been tenants at Wauchope, but unrelated to the Scotts who purchased the estate later in the 18th century. William of Raeburn (b.1704) son of Walter and father of the next Walter. He was the 4th Laird of Raeburn and owner of lands in the Borthwick valley, including Eilrig, which he (or his agents) leased to John Chisholme of Stiches in 1719. He paid the window tax in Lessuden Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1743 he married Jean Elliott. They had 2 children: Walter, who succeeded; and Anne, who married Thomas, 2nd son of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. William (d.c.1755) younger son of Francis of Davington. It is said that he had tenancy of a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch, connected with the once powerful status of his Thirlestane ancestors. He farmed at Holm and then Beattock. He married Marion Veitch in 1721. Their only son was William, who farmed at Beattock and then moved to Moffat, marrying Jean Carruthers, but dying without issue. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1733 he was at ‘W: burnfoot’ (i.e. Wester Burnfoot), which was probably at the foot of Wilton Burn. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1727 for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn. He married Jean Scott in 1723, as recorded in Wilton Parish; she is probably the Jean, son of Walter Scott who married William, as recorded in Hawick 2 weeks later. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1724); Bessie (b.1727); Christian (b.1729); Margaret (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter (perhaps his wife’s father) and John (perhaps his own father), in 1727 were Walter Scott and William Elliot, in 1729 were John and Walter, in 1733 were Walter and James and in 1735 were Walter Scott and William Lamb. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1732 when an unnamed child of his was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Eilrig in 1736 when he had a child baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Wiltonburn in 1736 and Whitfield in 1743 and 1748. He married Bessie Scott in 1734 and their children (mostly baptised in wilton) included: William (b.1736); George (b.1737); William (again, b.1739); Charles (b.1741); John (b.1743); Janet (b.1746); Margaret (b.1748); and Margaret (again, b.1750), baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses in 1736 and 1727 were another William and Walter, in 1743 were William of Coldhouse and Robert Easton and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) tenant in the Flex in 1743. In that year he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Reid, who was also a tenant at the Flex. He may be related to the later tenant of the same name at the Flex. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitfield in 1744. He married Jean Paterson and their children included: Robert (b.1744); Walter (b.1748); and Jean (b.1750). The witnesses in 1744 were Alexander of Galalaw and Robert of Coldhouse (suggesting a relationship with those family branches). William (18th C.) servant ‘to the Laird of Cromoch [presumably Crumhaugh] near Hawick’ mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750 (although the entry is apparently deleted). He married Jean Clow, daughter of Henry, barber in Callander. William of Africa and Ashieburn (d.c.1733) son of Walter of Clarilaw, and probably descended from the Scotts of Burnhead. In 1733 he was succeeded in Ashieburn by Rev. James Scott. In 1788 he (or a descendant) is listed as former owner of ‘Part of Nether Ancrum, called Africa’. William (18th C.) tenant in Hislop. In 1728 in Hawick Parish he married Margaret Scott in ‘Hairgrain’. William (18th C.) wool inspector appointed by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures and stationed in Hawick from about 1729. There was a legal battle between him and the Magistrates of Hawick over his indolence and high rates, and he was replaced before 1733. William ‘the Pether’ (18th C.) packman from Deanburnhaugh. One of his daughters married shepherd David Scott (whose daughter Christina married gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford) and another daughter married George Scott (joiner at Deanburnhaugh). Rev. William (1699/1700–86) eldest son of Walter of Merrylaw. He was tutor to the family of Sir William Johnston. In 1736 he became minister of Kirkpatrick-Juxta. He married Grizel, daughter of Rev. Gabriel Gullan of Dryfesdale. His children were: Elizabeth (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); Walter of Merrylaw (b.1767); and Rev.
Gabriel, his successor. One of his daughters married a Johnstone of Corehead. William (18th C.) resident in the lands of Buccleuch in 1733 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish. William ‘the Auld Mason’ (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being shepherd Robert. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and John, shepherd at Lynniecleuch. He was a resident at Falnash Mill. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cairns and their children included Janet (b.1721); and James. The witnesses in 1762 were James Scott and James Cairns (who were probably related to him and his wife). William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Town Treasurer recorded in 1763 when money was being raised to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s Kirk. He was still Treasurer in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Meikledale (1693/4–1772) 3rd son of Robert of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also farmed at Rowanburnfoot, near Canonbie. He went into partnership with Benjamin Bell to drove cattle, being very successful for a while, but being ruined by a distemper outbreak. He purchased Meikledale in 1731, but sold it to William Laing in 1750. In 1722 he married Katherine, daughter of James Scott of Calfiede. Their children were: Capt. James of Forge in Canonbie; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Bell; Mary, who never married; Susanna, who married Gilbert Richardson; Catherine, who married John Carruthers; and William, Ann, Agnes and Helen, who probably all died young. He may also have had a son Francis, who went to the East Indies. William (18th C.) recorded in Highchesters in 1721 and 1723. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Janet (b.1721); and Alexander (b.1723). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as servant in Overhall in 1723 when he married Bessie Turnbull, who was ‘att Hawick miln’. Their children included Andrew (b.1724) and Robert (b.1727). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Easter Alemoor in 1725, 1727 and 1732 and Alemoor in 1736. In 1724 he married Bessie Riddell in Wilton, the marriage also being proclaimed in Robertson. Most of these children, baptised in Robertson Parish, were probably his: Thomas (b.1725); William (b.1727); John (b.1730); Marion (b.1732); William (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); and Marion (again, b.1740). He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Alemoor at about the same time, e.g. Gideon and Walter. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Rigg in 1729 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Stobcote in 1738 when his son James was baptised. William (18th C.) recorded as ‘younger in Sinton Mill’ in 1734 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably related to Thomas, who was in Syton Mill a little earlier. William of Coldhouse (18th C.) recorded in 1743 as a baptismal witness for William Scott in Whitfield in Wilton Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Coldhouse. It is possible the name is an error for Robert of Coldhouse, who witnessed a baptism in Wilton a few months later. William (b.1709) 2nd son of Gideon and Agnes Elliot, his grandfather being John of Woll. He was tenant farmer in Kirkhope. In 1761 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. Their children were: Gideon (1762–1841), farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells; Robert (b.1769); and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Suter. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1730, 1732, 1737 and 1741 when his children James, William, Agnes and Charles were baptised. Sir William of Ancrum (d.1769) 4th Baronet of Ancrum, son of Sir John. He was a Lieutenant, of Barrel’s Foot Regiment. He paid the window tax for Ancrum House in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He died without issue and was succeeded by his nephew John Scott Nisbet of Craigentinnie. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Cavers itself in 1737 when his daughters Ann and Katherine were baptised. He was also living in Cavers in 1741 when his son Adam was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Colterscleuch in 1753 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be related to the later William, servant at Colterscleuch. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Hobkirk in 1742, and their children may have included: William (b.1743); Mary (b.1756); and Walter (b.1761), who was a weaver in Wilton. William of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1748 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. He paid for 14 windows, but it is unclear whether this was for Hummelknowes or somewhere else. It is also if this was an error for
Scott

John, who was miller there at about this time, or if this is even a different family entirely. Robert, who paid the window tax there in 1753 was probably his son. It is possible he is the same man as William of Burnhead, who is recorded owning Hummelknowes a few decades later. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Langside in 1757 when his daughter Bettie was baptised in 1757. It could also have been his child who was baptised in 1761 (with no names recorded). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gordon and their children included: Isabel (b.1756); Helen (b.1759); Janet (b.1761); and Margaret (b.1766). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker James Chisholme and Alexander Bunyan (Kirk Officer) and in 1766 were tailor John Scott (perhaps a relative) and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1767 he married Mary Anderson, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Janet (b.1768); and Cicilia (b.1770). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included Euphan (b.1771) and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Thomas Grievie and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He was recorded as a shoemaker in 1776 and 1778, one of the earliest on record in Cavers Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1776) and Jean (b.1778). William (18th C.) probably son of John, younger of Gilmauscleuch. He sold the family property to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He could be the ‘poor miller at Ettrick bridge, a man of austere manners and great strength as well his sons’ mentioned by the Ettrick Shepherd as the representative of the family in 1806. William (1727/8–61) schoolmaster in Castleton. His gravestone depicted a man carved in relief (presumably William himself), holding a bible in one hand and a rose in the other, wearing a wig and a long buttoned coat. His wife Mary (1732/3–60) was also buried in the old kiryard. Dr. William of Stokoe (b.1733) eldest son of Walter and grandson of the last Thomas of Todrig. He settled at Stamfordham in Northumberland. He compiled a pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe (used by Keith Scott in his 1923 book), which included information on their ancestors, the Scotts of Todrig and Whitslade. In 1759 he married Martha, daughter of Rev. Edward Fenwick, Vicar of Kirkwhelpington and they had 2 surviving sons, Walter and Edward Fenwick. William of Woll (d.1785) eldest son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1744 (note that some accounts of these generations are quite confused). He was trained as an advocate and served as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He paid the window tax for Woll in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. Also in 1761 he was described as Sheriff Depute of Selkirkshire in a document regarding election of the Commissioners to Parliament. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. He is recorded as witness to an Ashkirk marriage in 1766; Charles ‘at Woll’ was also mentioned, this being his son. He is recorded as proprietor of Woll on Anslie’s 1773 map. In 1777 he had correspondence with William Ogilvie over shares of ‘the Moss’ (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection). He was taxed for having a male servant (Andrew Leggat) in 1778 and 1779. He married Jean, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows and Janet Plummer, who was a daughter of Plummer of Middlestead and Jean Kerr of Sunderland Hall. He inherited the lands of Broadmeadows through his wife, and she died in Hawick in 1797. They had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: Elizabeth (b.1741); Agnes (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Charles (b.1744), who succeeded; Isobel (b.1745); Margaret (b.1748); Janet or Jean (b.1750), his eldest surviving daughter, who married James Grievie and Rev. Benjamin Dickison; Elizabeth (b.1751); Andrew; Walter (b.1755); John of Midgehope (b.1757), father of William of Teviotbank; William (b.1759); and James (b.1760). It was said that his 5 daughters were all 6 feet high. The witnesses to the 1744 baptism were Alexander of Synton and John Sinton. A letter of his to Walter Scott of Harden from 1781 is in the National Archives. His wife ‘Mrs. Scott of Wall’ paid tax for having 2 female servants at her house in Hawick in 1786 and 1 in 1788–91. William (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Hugh (b.1740); John (b.1740); James (b.1742); Jean (b.1744); Mary (b.1744); Jean (again, b.1745); Violet (b.1756); and Wilhelmina (b.1759). The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. William of Thirlestane (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. However, this could be an error, since there was no Laird of that name at this time. William (1733–97) son of William. He was tenant in Milsington, like his father. He was recorded as owner of a saddle horse in 1785–94. Either he or his son was the William recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses, and also paid dog tax on 3 non-working horses at Milsington in the same year. He was ‘Mr. Scott in Milsingtown’ in 1771 and 1773. In 1760 he married his cousin Betty, daughter of Walter Scott in Girnwood. Their children were: William, who also farmed Milsington; Walter (b.1764), baptised in Robertson, who succeeded as tenant in Girnwood; Henry (b.1767), baptised in Robertson, who had a family and moved to America; Robert, a manufacturer in Hawick; Thomas, who went to America and drowned at sea; Jane (or Jean, b.1762), who married James Richardson (who was 1777 Cornet) in Hawick; Elizabeth, who married William Miller; Janet (b.1771), baptised in Robertson; and twin sons Robert and Thomas (b.1773), baptised in Robertson. William (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. The word ‘fornication’ was included on the register. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Burnet, who was also from the same parish. William (18th C.) resident at Parkhill near Chisholme in at least the period 1764–75. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Agnes (b.1762); James (b.1764); William (b.1766); Mary (b.1771); Janet (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). There are several marriages in Robertson at about the right time that could be his. William (18th C.) resident at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1775 when his son Alexander was baptised in Robertson Parish. Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Hawick, who owned Brieryhill. In 1776 and over the next few years he had a few cases written up in the Edinburgh journal ‘Medical Commentaries’. These related, for example, to a mason who had a wounded thigh and a servant girl who passed ‘fatty substances’. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish as being ‘of Briirihole’. In 1787 and 1788 he was a bachelor in Hawick who paid tax for having a female servant. In 1787 the death of his servant Janet Rodger is recorded. In 1788 he was listed as owner of Brieryhill in Wilton Parish, which was valued at £813 3s 10d. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip. He was listed as a surgeon when he paid the horse tax in Hawick in 1794 and 1797 and the dog tax in 1797. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he may have been a son of the earlier William of Brieryhill. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott ‘Soldier’, for merchant Andrew Scott and for carrier Walter Wilson in 1743, for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757 and (along with fellow shoemaker Andrew) for shoemaker Thomas Weens in 1765. He witnessed further baptisms in 1781 and 1784. He married Helen Gray and their children included Helen (b.1742). The witnesses in 1742 were baker Robert Scott (who may have been related) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1785, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. It is possible he was the gardener who witnessed a baptism for tailor William Turner in 1766. William (18th C.) mason in Castleton Parish. He opened up the vault at Hermitage, discovering the supposed dungeon where Ramsay was starved to death. His son William was also a mason, as well as author of ‘Border Exploits’. William (d.1794) shepherd at Priesthaughshiel. He died in the ‘Gonial Blast’ of January 1794, which killed several other shepherds in southern Scotland. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1763 and 1766 when his daughter Ann and Helen were baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be related to the earlier William who lived at Highchesters. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1771. He married Jane Scott and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Christie and their son Thomas was baptised in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Robert (b.1783). Bailie William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was ‘present Magistrate’ in a baptismal entry of 1786. He is probably the Bailie William recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 2 work horses. He married Margaret Goodfellow in Hawick in 1775. Their children included: Robert (b.1776); George (b.1778), probably the son of Bailie William selected by ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; James (b.1782); unnamed (b.1785); Robert (again, b.1786); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1776, 1778 and 1791 were ex-Bailie Andrew and shoemaker Henry (who were probably relatives) and in 1786 were ex-Bailie Andrew and shoemaker Robert. He is probably the ‘Bailia William Scott Mealmarket’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William of Burnhead (d.1795) only surviving son of Robert. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He appears to have been involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the teinds of Clarilaw and Broomlands in the 1760s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He later had a share of part of Hassendean Common when it was divided. In 1775 he wrote to Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, describing the genealogy of the Elliots. He paid tax on a male servant (a footman or groom) in the period 1778–90, and for both a gardener and coachman 1791–94. He also paid tax for having a female servant in 1785 and 1786, 2 in 1787, 1 in 1788 and 2 in 1789 and 1790. He was taxed at Burnhead for owning a carriage in the period 1788–95 and horses in 1785–94. In 1788 his lands included Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw, Pinnacle and Lees, as well as Apple-treehall Townfoot and Crawhill, all in Wilton Parish, and also Hummelknowes in Cavers Parish. He was also listed as owner of these lands in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although already deceased by then). When he died unmarried, the estate passed to his sister Margaret and then to his aunt Eupham’s son William Watson.

William (1747–1820) tenant in Parkhill. He may have been son of the earlier William, who was tenant earlier. He married Marion, daughter of James Clerk, tenant in Whit-slade, and she died in 1798, aged 68. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several related people. William (18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1787 his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish and his son William in 1791.

William (18th C.) recorded as servant to Mr. Scott of Wauchope in 1790 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1790 he married Katherine Hume. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’) Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1788); Agnes (b.1790); John (b.1792); Wilhelmina (b.1794); William (b.1798); and James (b.1800).

The baptisms were all recorded together in 1801, with John Henderson as a witness. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin’s House on 1797, along with John. He was taxed for 2 farm horses, and so was probably the senior farmer. Willie from Martinshouse was probably a descendant. He could be the William who married Janet Beattie in Ashkirk Parish in 1761 and whose son John was baptised in 1768 (with his designation perhaps reading ‘Martin house’ and the witnesses being the Associate Congregation). William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shielwood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with James. They owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Roughleenuk, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. William (1729/30–1812) tobacconist in Hawick. He is probably the tobacconist of that name who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1787–90 and 1794. His death is reported at the age of 82. He seems likely to be related to the later tobacconist of the same name. He is probably the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children included: Sarah (b.1768); Francis (b.1769); Isabel (b.1771); James (b.1773); and Isabel (again, b.1775). Francis and James may be the tobacconists of Hawick in the early 1800s. He could be the son of Francis and Jean Miller baptised in Hawick in 1727.

William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Kedzie and their children included: George (b.1773), probably the joiner in Deanburnhaugh; Walter (b.1776); John (b.1778); and Jean (b.1779). William (1749–1810) son of William, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was a shepherd and later a land steward. In 1777 he married Janet Jack in Crailing Parish; she died in 1836, aged 82. Their children included: William (b.1779); Robert (b.1781); Jane (b.1783); Janet (b.1784); Mary (b.1786), who married John Blair, emigrated to Australia after being widowed and died at ‘Haning’, Armidale, aged 93; James (1788–1855), who was a ploughman; Richard (1790–1874), who married Jane Byers; Margaret (b.1793); Catherine (b.1795); and Walter (1796/7–1812). He is variously at Nisbet, Eckford, Town-o-Rule (in 1786) and Hallrule (in 1788 and 1790) when his children were baptised. The family are buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. William ‘Keek i’ the Kirk’ (18th/19th C.) father of the landlord of the King’s Head, mentioned in the 1823 Parish Records. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Scawmill in 1797. He married Sarah Farr and their son Edward was baptised in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) contributor (from Jamaica) in about 1799 to the local fund to support the war against France. He must have been from one of the local branches of the Scotts. He could be the same as Dr. William. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Margaret Currer from Cavers Parish. He is recorded as ‘Mr’ and his bride as ‘Miss’, suggesting he was a landowner perhaps. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas was also there at that time and so presumably a close relative. Rev. William (1735–1809) 4th son of Walter of Nether Bonchester and Helen Turnbull (sister of Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule). He was younger brother of Thomas of Bonchester. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1760. He became minister at Ravingstodnale in 1762 and was translated to Abbotrule in 1764. He was the last minister of the former Parish, reading the ‘Decreet of Suppression’ in 1777 and finally moving to Southdean in 1785. He was then minister at Southdean until his death. It is said that in 1791 a ghostly rider appeared to him and 2 other ministers (or perhaps the elders) at about the same time that Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule died.

It is likely he is the ‘Mr’ William who witnessed a baptism for Walter (resident of Coldhouse) in 1780. He is recorded at Southdean on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 2 work horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Sybil, daughter of John Henderson of Lockholm, Westmorland (although her name is also given as Hewitson), and she died in 1822. Their children were: Walter (b.1767), who had 2 sons, William and John, neither of whom had male heirs; John (b.1769), who had at least 8 children, but no grandchildren; Thomas (1773), who died without offspring; Adam (b.1775), insurance broker in London, who assumed the surname ‘Scott-Elliot’ when succeeding to Arkleton through his wife: Anne Nancy (b.1771, possibly also called Dorothy), who married Mr. Reid and later Charles Baxter of Edinburgh; William; and Robert (b.1784). The witnesses in 1774 were: John (b.1774); Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule; Elizabeth (b.1782), who married David (or perhaps Robert) Henderson of Abbotrule; Jessie, who married Rev. David Scott of Newcastleton; Margaret, who drowned along with her sister and 2 of their companions while bathing in a deep pool in the Ettrick; and Isabella (b.1791), who also drowned in 1800. William (18th C.) labourer in Hawick Parish. He married Betty Philip and their children included: John (b.1774); George (b.1776); and Robert (b.1784). The witnesses in 1774 were the whole congregation and in 1784 were William Philip and mason Robert Philip (surely related to his wife). William ‘Wullie the King’ (18th/19th C.) landlord of the King’s Head. His children were ‘Andrew the King’ and ‘Nelly the King’. His wife was Janet Dickson (possibly a daughter of Nellie Dickson, a former proprietor of the same inn). He probably lived in a pended house on the High Street near the Cross Wyad, known as ‘Wullie the King’s’. He is probably the William recorded on the 1841 census as a publican at around 30 High Street – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI]. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1796 he was recorded as servant at Colterscleuch and householder at Lodgeknowe when his unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.bef. 1809) from Girnwood. The death of his daughter Lizzie is William (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Cavers Parish in 1787. recorded in Hawick in 1809. He may have been the son of Walter in Girnwood who married his cousin Elizabeth. William (d.1807) elder son of Rev. James and brother of Ebenezer, who was a surgeon in Dalkeith. He succeeded to Ashieburn in 1794, and was succeeded by his son Henry Erskine. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. William (b.c.1765) joiner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Sandbed. His wife was Christian and their children included Walter and Jane. William (b.c.1767) resident of Newcastleton, originally from England. He is recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when he was living at about 9 Langhohn Street in Newcastleton. His sons William and Francis were carters, and he also had a daughter, Agnes. William of Friarshaw (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was also owner of parts of Midlem. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scott-Douglasses of Friarshaw, and it may be that his name is an error. Dr. William (1773–1834) son of John and Elizabeth Thomson. He served as a surgeon in the sugar plantations of Barbados, being based at Content, St. Thomas on the island of Barbados. He amassed a fortune, some of which he left to his nephew John White, miller of Hawick Mill. He could be the surgeon William listed in Hawick on the subscription list to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Eliza Tucker in the West Indies, but retired to Edinburgh, although later moving to Paris. He is buried at Pere la Chaise cemetery in Paris, and a portrait of him exists, with one hand missing. William of Raeburn (1773–1855) son of Walter. In 1806 he married Susan, eldest daughter of Alexander Horsburgh. Their children were: Walter (1811–28); Alexander (1813–43); Robert, who succeeded; William Hugh; Violet; Jane; Susan Elizbeth; Barbara; Charlotte; Mary; Sarah; and Anne Rutherford. William Thomas in Milsington (1773–1829) great-grandson of William, the first Scott of Milsington. He was tenant farmer in Milsington. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1822 he complained to the Duke of Buccleuch about interference in his rights of rental of the lands of Crowbyreshaugh in the East Mains of Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1819 he married Janet, daughter of Mr. Arres, farmer at Farmington (although it is also said she was from Kirkton); she died in 1835. He died without issue, and the lease of Milsington went to his nephew James. William (1772–1846) son of Gideon and Mary Scott, he was born at Parkhead in Robertson Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Wilson, who was from Hawick; the marriage was proclaimed in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes. They had a son James (b.1797), who worked as a railway engineer in Liverpool, along with his brother William; his great-great grandson was airship pilot George Herbert Scott. He died in York. He may be the William, married to Janet Wilson, whose daughter Janet was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1806. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Castleton Parish. In the ‘Local Historians Table Book’ of 1841 it is described how more than 20 years earlier he had a run in with Robert Elliot, ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’, who lived at Byreholm. He was described as ‘an able, stout, brave borderer, who stood 6ft. 3in. high’ and had been spreading stories to harm the reputation of his diminutive neighbour. Elliot took him upstairs in his house, showed him pistols and swords and challenged him to a duel, at which he fled. If he existed at all, then he may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Woll and Sunderland Hall (1778–1820) eldest son of Charles of Woll. He was referred to as ‘younger of Woll’ during his father’s lifetime. He was so listed along with his father among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was still ‘younger of Wool’ when listed as a Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Commissioner in 1819. He trained as an Advocate and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1811. His family had inherited Sunderland Hall through marriage. He went to Canada and there in 1815 married Alicia, daughter of Richard John Uniacke of Mount Uniacke (who was Attorney-General for Cape Breton and Judge of the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia). They had 2 sons: Charles Andrew (1817–38), who inherited Woll and died in Rome; and Richard (1818–27). Sunderland Hall eventually passed to his nephew, son of Charles Balfour Scott. He became Commissioner of Customs. William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Glendinning and their children included James (b.1806). William (18th/19th C.) resident of the Flex, recorded in 1799 and 1802 baptismal records. He is also recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as ‘William Scott at Flex’. He was owner of part of the ‘particate lands’ of Hawick, which were later owned by Walter Pringle. His wife’s name is given as ‘Mrs Scott’ and their children included Helen (b.1799) and Andrew (b.1802). William (18th/19th C.) physician on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (c.1780–bef. 1851) farmer at the Greens, south of Newcastleton. He is recorded there in 1841, but must have died soon afterwards. In 1851 his wife was farmer of 7 acres at the Greens, and she was ‘Feuar’ in 1861. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Armstrong, from Canonbie. Their children included Elizabeth, Ann, William (an agricultural labourer and carter) and Mary. He is probably the carter at Greens listed among heads of households in 1835–41. William (b.1774/5) joiner in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and as a wrigh in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 5 Whitchester Street. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Wemyss and they had a son, Charles. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (d.1842) son of a mason from Lower Burnmouth in Castleton, he was educated at Teviothead. From 1810 he was master at the small school at Burnmouth, and was later a mason in Newcastleton. He made a sketch of Hermitage Castle before it was renovated in 1820. In 1806, at the desire of Lord Dalkeith, he performed some excavations at Hermitage, uncovering a paved floor and finding a large key. When the school at Burnmouth was closed during harvest time he travelled the country lettering new tombstones, and deciphering old ones. He collected historical artefacts, and was an expert on local traditions. He published ‘Border Exploits’ in Hawick in 1812 (2nd edition 1832) and also ‘ Beauties of the Border’ (1821). He was recorded as schoolmaster at Burnmouth among heads of households 1835–41. He was listed as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Burnmouth in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Isabella Veitch from the Bedrule family. He had 3 sons, one of whom, Andrew (b.1800), became a Professor at Aberdeen University, while another, Thomas, was a teacher at Beith and Kirkcaldy in Fife. He is probably the William (aged 77) who is recorded as schoolmaster at Burnmouth in 1841, living along with his wife Janet (presumably a second wife). He died after accidentally being thrown from a cart and is buried in Castleton. David Anderson wrote a poem after he died – ‘No more will be sculpture the stone for the dead, No more show the young the pure path they should tread, No more, lonely Hermitage, will he pourtray Thy clear sparkling waters and battlements grey’ [DA].

William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Lillico in Wilton in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the publican on the High Street (at about No. 30) on the 1841 census, living there with Christian, Robert, Adam and Margaret, probably all his younger siblings, and all born outside Hawick. William (b.1778/9) mason at Borthaugh Cottage. His wife was Helen, and their children included Isabella, James, John, William, Robert and Thomas. He is probably the mason recorded at Borthaugh in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. William (c.1779–1855) son of William and Euphemia Small, he was born in Traquair. He was brought up in Yarrow and Ettrick Parishes, but later was a handloom weaver in Balgonie, Markinch Parish, Fife. He married Isobell Bell, who was born in Dunbar and died in Balgonie, Fifeshire. Their children were: William (1801-48), farmer in Ashkirk Parish; John (b.1803); Margaret (b.1805); Euphemia (b.1807); James (1809–74), wood sawyer who died in Galashiels; Walter (1811–33); David (b.1813); Thomas (b.1817); Isabella (b.1819); Robert (b.1822); and Andrew (1825–97), weaver in Selkirk. He died in Selkirk. William of Teviot Bank (1782–1841), W.S., eldest son of John of Glenormiston, who was a younger son of William of Woll and Jean Balfour. He trained as a lawyer, being apprentice to William Riddell. He purchased Teviot Bank in about 1804, and became a heritor of Minto Parish. He was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1838. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He was said to be a writer on the subjects of phrenology and scriptural history. In 1808 he married Jane Jordan of Edinburgh in 1808 and they had one son, John, who succeeded. In 1816 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Dr. Andrew Duncan, Professor of Medicine of Edinburgh and had 3 further children: Dr. Andrew James (1817–84); William Charles (1820–1871); and Agnes Beatrice, who died unmarried. William (b.1788) 3rd son of Alexander and Christian Scott. His great-grandfather was John Scott of Woll. He succeeded his father as tenant of Ladhope farm in Yarrow. In 1847 he married Jean, daughter of Mr. Currie of Howford. Their children were: Alexander (b.1847) who succeede to the tenancy of Ladhope, married his cousin (once removed) Jane, daughter of Henry Scott of Gilman-scleuch, and moved to Whinfell Park near Penrith; Charles William, who became a tweed manufacturer in Galashiels; and Henrietta, who married Thomas Mitchell from Cumberland. William (1789–1867) born in Wilton, son of handloom weaver Walter and Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Biggar, who both died at Dovemount. He emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1812, and also encouraged his brother Robert and sister Margaret to move to Ohio (while his brother Walter and sister Sarah continued to live in Hawick). He eventually settled in New York, becoming a successful businessman, partner in Scott & Leggat (with his old Hawick friend William Leggat), a dry goods firm. He was a keen member of the St. Andrew’s Society in New York. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. John Philip Burkhart Roos. Their children were: Walter L., and William L., who died young;
Mary; Eliza; Sarah Gertrude; Margaret J.; Henrietta; Charlotte; and John Burkhart. He returned to Hawick in 1856. A portrait of him was painted by Seymour Guy in 1860, and his grandfather clock, from Thomas Graham's in Hawick, is still with the family. William (1792–1828) youngest son of Charles, Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch and Elizabeth Dickson. He was a Lieutenant in the 21st Madras Native Infantry and then Captain in the 42nd Madras Native Infantry. He died unmarried in India. William (b.1792/3) born in Selkirk, he was a shoemaker on the Howegate, at about No. 14. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot's 1825/6 director, as well as on the censuses for 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth, and children included Walter, Jane, Elizabeth, James and Catherine. William (b.1792/3) slater in Hawick and Wilton. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, when he was a slater at Damhead. By 1840 he was living on Melgund Place. He was a journeyman slater on O'Connell Street on the 1841 census and he was at 13 O'Connell Street (probably what was later No. 2, now demolished) as a slater. His wife was Agnes and they had a son Robert. William (b.c.1795) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a joiner on Buccleuch Street. He was probably at about No. 25 on the 1841 census. His wife was Agnes, and children included Agnes, Janet and Margaret. He may have married Janet Cook, who was a widow and innkeeper at 17 High Street. He may be the William whose heirs were recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874. William (1795–1859) clerk with Wilson's, who was known as a local poet and a strong temperance supporter. He was a friend of James Ruikbie, and had 10 of his own poems included in Ruikbie's 'Poems' (1826). He wrote some lines about the talents of his contemporary, James Hogg (of 'Teribus'). He was also a close friend of the local poet Elliot Aitchison, as well as Andrew Leyden, brother of the poet and linguist. He was a competitor in the contest for poems of the Auld Brig in 1851, and also contributed to the local press. A poem on the celebration of the Duke of Buccleuch's birthday apparently earned him a job as a clerk at the Dalkeith colliery. He later moved further away and died in Belfast. His daughter Margaret Isabella Sarah was the first wife of Sir James A.H. Murray, while another daughter, Elizabeth Jane married George Easton. William (b.c.1785) butcher of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the Hawick butcher of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He may be the William listed as a flesher in Hawick (after George, also a flesher) among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was living alone at around 60 High Street. An unnamed child of his died in 1816 and his son James died in 1823, aged 15. William (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1833). William (1800/1–1858) eldest son of Walter, he took over as tenant of Girnwood. He was already listed there in 1841, when he had 2 female servants and also 2 farm labourers also living in his house. He married Ann Laidlaw in Roberton in 1821. Their children were: Walter (b.1822), who succeeded as tenant of Girnwood; and Margaret, who married George Davies, and whose daughter Hannah purchased the property. William (1801–48) born in Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk, at several farms around Synton, working as a farm labourer, gamekeeper and Thatcher. In 1841 the family were living at Synton Lodge. In 1826 he married Mary Scott (c.1806–80), daughter of John and Helen Scott from Selkirk Parish; there are thus a lot of Scotts in this family tree! Their sons were: William (1826–78); John (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); George (b.1836); Alexander (b.1840); and Walter (b.1846), who emigrated to Canada. He died in an unfortunate way, having fallen into the mill lade near Roughheugh Mill, and being rescued, he walked home to Synton Mill on a cold October night and next day was found to the north of Groundistone Heights, having frozen to death. His widow and children were living at Dimpleknowe in 1851. He is buried in Ashkirk kirkyard. William (b.1803) son of George, he was a joiner at Deanburnhaugh, like his father before him. He was recorded as a joiner there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His retired father George was living with his family in 1861. He married Isabella Brown in 1836 and their children included: George (b.1836); William (b.1838); Barbara (b.1840); Robert (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Isabella (b.1847); Adam (b.1849); Margaret (b.1852); and Ann (b.1858). William (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. In 1832 he when accused of ‘the sin of fornication’ with Alison Crozier. At the same time John ‘in Castleton’ was accused of the same thing with Jean Crozier (perhaps her sister). William (19th C.) listed as a carrier in 1837, leaving Hawick for Langholm once a week. It is possible that he was from Langholm. William (b.c.1800) ironmonger and blacksmith on the Howlegate. He is recorded at about No. 7 in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella, from Aberlady, and their children included Joseph, George, Helen, Margaret and Isabella. His wife was Ann, and their children included Ebenezer, Louisa (who married James McMorran), John, Janet Stuart, Robert, William and Ann. Sir William of Ancrum (1803–71) 7th Baronet, son of Sir John. He succeeded his brother Sir John when still a minor, and lived at Ancrum House. He served briefly as an officer in the 2nd Life Guards. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1826, but left in 1834 when the Chairiman refused to toast the new Whig M.P. He was M.P. for Carlisle 1829–30 and for Roxburghshire 1859–70. He was unopposed in 1865, defeated Lord Schonberg Henry Kerr in 1868 and resigned in 1870. He was also a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. He served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and on the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of David Anderson of Balgay, Forfar, and she died in 1878. He was succeeded by his son Sir William Monteath, with whom the Baronetcy became extinct. His other children were: John (d.1859), Captain in the Scots Guard; Henry (or Harry) Warren (1833–89), who married Cecilia Louisa Burnaby; Arthur (1835–74), who died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Lieut.-Col. Charles Lennox Tredcroft; Harriet, married Col. Edward E. Duler, and whose daughter Irene became the 10th Baroness; and Louisa, married Sir Robert William Duff, M.P., Governor of New South Wales. William (19th C.) shepherd at Dinlees. He was recorded among heads of households in Castleton Parish in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1807/8) originally from Peeblesshire, he was blacksmith on Allars Crescent. His wife was Christian and children included Robert, Adam, Margaret and Christian. William (b.1809/10) innkeeper on Douglas Street in Newcastleton. He is probably son of Thomas, who was previously an innkeeper in the village. In 1852 he is listed as proprietor of the King’s Arm’s (which later became the Commercial Inn, and is now the Liddesdale Hotel). His wife was Anne (from Langholm), and their children included Mary and Thomas. William (b.1809–77) tobacconist at 40 High Street and later farmer at Burnhead. Unmarried, he was son of the Town Treasurer, James, who was also a tobacconist, with his mother being Elizabeth Turnbull. He was Cornet in 1832, served on the Town Council and was twice a Magistrate. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He is listed at about 40 High Street on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living with his sisters Elizabeth and Margaret. In 1851 he was employing 1 man, 1 apprentice, 5 boys and 1 girl. In 1868 he was recorded as farmer at Burnhead. William (b.1813/4) bootmaker at 3 Bourtree Place. Scott-Douglas (sko’-dug-lis) n. Sir George Henry of Springwood Park (1825–85) 4th Baronet and son of Sir John James Douglas and Hannah Charlotte Scott of Horsleyhill and Belford, as well as being the grandson of Sir George Douglas, who had been M.P. for Roxburghshire 1784–1806. His father had changed the family surname as part of the inheritance of his mother’s family lands (she was daughter of Henry Scott, last Laird of Horsleyhill). He succeeded in 1836 and became Captain of the 34th Regiment of Foot (later the Border Regiment). He sailed extensively in the Mediterranean, journals of these trips surviving. He returned to Kelso in 1853 and made extensive improvement on the Springwood estate. He retired from the army in 1857, but in 1859 became Captain of the Kelso company of volunteers, taking command in 1867. In 1866 he is listed as Major of the Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Battalion of Rifle Volunteers, as well as Convener of the Border Rifle Association. He was also Brigadier-General in the Royal Company of Archers. In about 1874 he was owner of Heiton and other lands in Roxburgh Parish. A Conservative in politics, in 1874 he defeated the Marquess of Bowmont in the election for Roxburghshire M.P., and he held the seat until 1880, when he lost by only 10 votes to Liberal Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliot. He also served as Chairman of the County Road Trustees and County Road Board and was a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He took an active part in many organisations in the Kelso area and was a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Mariquita, daughter of Don Francisco Serrano Sanchez de Pina of Gibraltar. His children included: James Henry (1853–79), Lieutenant with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, who was killed in the Zulu War; Sir George Brisbane (1856–1935), who succeeded and reverted to the surname ‘Douglas’; Francis John (1858–1934); Mary Helena (b.1861); William Sholto (b.1864); and Andrew Henry (d.1868). Sir John James of Friarshaw (1792–1836) son of Sir George Douglas, he was 3rd Baronet. He served in the 15th Hussars, fighting in the Peninsular Wars and at Waterloo. He retired in 1820 and succeeded his father in 1821. He also became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He stood as M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1826, but was defeated. He lived at Springwood Park until about 1830 after which he travelled abroad a great deal. He married Hannah Charlotte, daughter and heiress of Henry Scott of Belford (and Horsleyhill) and thus assumed the addition of ‘Scott’ to his surname. His widow remarried to William Kerr of Sunlaw. His children were: Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas, who succeeded; and 3 daughters. A portrait of his is the last work of Raeburn.

Scott-Elliott (sko’-e-li’ n. Adam (1775–1821) 4th son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean. He was an insurance broker in London and merchant in Leith. In 1807 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton. After his wife’s brother Maj. Robert Elliot died in 1810 she became sole heir, and they assumed the conjoint surname. His wife died in Edinburgh in 1816. In 1818 he became a member of the Jedforest Club. His children were: Ann (b.1809 in Hackney); William (b.1811), W.S., who succeeded to Arkleton; and Cassandra (b.1814), who married John Rutherford, W.S. George Fraser (1784–1848) youngest child of Capt. James Scott, who lived at Forge in Canonbie. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. A childhood accident left him lame, and with the nickname ‘Pinfoot’. He worked as a law clerk in London. After the death of his father’s cousin, Maj.-Gen. William Elliot of Larriston in 1803, he inherited the lands of Larriston and took the additional name of Elliot; he was just 19 when he inherited. A local rumour circulated that he was the illegitimate son of the Maj.-Gen., but this was not the case. He is probably the ‘George Elliot’ of Larriston listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He also lived at ‘Woodslie’, near Canonbie and farmed at Nether Woodhouselee. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 he was owner of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and Mill and Mill Lands thereof’, as well as Lariston Rig and Blackhope. In 1813 he became a member of the Highland Society of Scotland. He also became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813 and gave the 2nd toast at the gathering to welcome home the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in 1839.

He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a cautioner for the agent of the Leith Banking Company in Langholm in 1822, and involved in a related court case in 1830. Having inherited an estate that was already in debt, and failing in introducing a new breed of sheep, he became insolvent in 1843 and sold Lariston to James Jardine. He married Ann Marjory Runciman of Harwood and took the additional surname of Scott. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also succeeded to the life-rent of Peel on the death of his brother William. He was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of ‘Backstonlees, Blackstonelees, or Peel’, as well as Riccalton, with his name written as ‘John Scott Elliot Scott of Peel’. When he died the life-rent and existing leases went to his nephew John Elliot in Flatt. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton. Her brothers Adam, Robert and William all died in service overseas. She inherited Arkleton in 1810 and assumed the name Scott-Elliot. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, minister at Southdean. Their children were: Ann; Cassandra, who married John Rutherford; and William, who succeeded. Walter Travers of Arkleton (1895–1977) only child of William. He was the 11th Laird of Arkleton and was a Captain in the Coldstream Guards. He was Managing Director in the Bombay Company, trading goods between Britain and India. In 1945 he was elected as Labour M.P. for Accrington, serving as a Parliamentary Private Secretary to the War Office and on the Executive Committee of the National Trust. He stood down in 1948 and went back to his estate and business. He firstly married Reichselle Maria Alice, daughter of Capt. Alexander Reichstitter von Groeller, formerly of the Austro-Hungarian Navy. He secondly married Dorothy, daughter of William Nunn of Calcutta. In 1964 he sold Arkleton to Prof. Higgs of Oxford. Along with his wife Dorothy, he was murdered by his new Butler, Archibald Hall, after being drugged and driven to the Highlands. The case caused a sensation at the time. William of Arkleton (1811–1901), W.S., only son of Margaret Elliot and Adam Scott. His parents had adopted the double-barrelled surname in order to inherit the Arkleton estate. He is famous for modelling for a portrait by Sir Henry Raeburn at the age of about 4. His father died in 1821 and he succeeded to Arkleton when he reached majority. He was trained as a lawyer, became Writer to the Signet in 1833 and served as a J.P. He attended the 1839 dinner at Branxholme given in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. He had Arkleton renovated as a Scots baronial house, probably under the influence of his father-in-law. In 1848 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Edinburgh architect Lewis Alexander Wallace, and they had 7 children: William (b.1849), who succeeded; Louisa (b.1850); Isabel (b.1852), who married Edward A. Baxter of Kincaldrum; Margaret (b.1854); Lewis Alexander (b.1857), who firstly married Laura, daughter of Col. Hastings of the U.S. Army and secondly married Princess Eydua Marie, daughter of Prince Arthur Odescalchi of Szwipe, Hungary; Col. Adam (b.1860) of the Cameron Highlanders, who married Marjorie, daughter of Lewis Evans of Cornell Park; and Mary (b.1861). William of Peel (1811/2–71) 3rd son of Thomas Elliot (brother of William of Harwood) and Helen Scott (daughter of Thomas of Peel). He inherited the lands of Peel in Liddesdale from his uncle John Scott and took the additional surname of Scott (as his brother John did to inherit Riccalton). He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was listed as one of the principal landowners in Castleton Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 6098 acres at Kinnean, living with his sisters Ann Jane and Christian. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. After his death his brother John succeeded to the life-rent of Peel. William (1818–1905) eldest son of George Fraser. He was brought up to be heir of the Larriston estate, but after his father went bankrupt he entered the Customs & Excise service, eventually becoming Surveyor of Customs at Leith. After falling from his horse he was nursed by the woman he would later marry, Jessie Brown, daughter of a Renfrewshire minister. Their only son, William, died unmarried in 1948. They also had daughters Georgina, Netta (or Janet), Marion and Anne (or Annie). William of Arkleton (1849–1919) eldest son of William, and descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a merchant banker in London. He was a member of the Theosophy Society, through whom he met Charles Leadbetter. The pair claimed to have received knowledge of ancient Atlantis via ‘astral clairvoyance’. He subsequently wrote the books ‘The Story of Atlantis’ (1896) and ‘The Lost Lemuria’ (1904), in which he described the supposed development of early races of 15-foot tall Lemurians into modern humans. He matriculated arms in 1904. In 1893 he married Maude Louisa, daughter of Robert Boyle Travers of Farsid, County Cork. His only child was Walter Travers, M.P. for Accrington.

Scott Gallery (sko'-gaw-lu-ree) n. extension to Wilton Lodge Museum, built in 1975 with grants from the Scottish Arts Council, education authorities and other bodies. It houses the town’s collection of largely 19th and 20th century local artwork, and show-cases temporary exhibitions. It was named after Bailie F. Scott, who first suggested its construction back in 1906, and also partly after R.E. Scott, who was Museum curator at the time. The gallery was opened by Earl Haig of Bemersyde, with the first display being largely the former Hawick Art Club collection. During the building work sections of 5 foot thick walls from an earlier house were uncovered. This area behind Wilton Lodge was a courtyard of servants’ areas, coach-house and stables until the 1950s.

Sir Philip Trotter.

the Scotts (thu-skə’s) n. important family in the Hawick area since at least the 13th century. They gained extensive lands around Branxholme about 1440, and became more powerful as the Scotts of Buccleuch, being involved in rievings, rivalries and politics since then. Uchtred ‘Filius Scot’ seems likely to have been an ancestor, whose family are said to have come from Galloch. There are some claims that Scotstoun in Peeblesshire may have been an early family possession. But in any case, the original local home of the family was at ‘Rankilburn’ (essentially synonymous with Buccleuch and Bel- lenden) near the head of the Ale Water, later moving to Branxholme, and then Dalkeith and Bowhill. A letter of remission of 1526 lists no fewer than 60 men of this surname. The 16th century was a time of great power struggles, with feuds fought with both the Kerrs and the Elliots, as well as alliances with less powerful families, such as the Chisholmes, Dalgleishes, Gledstains and Turnbulls. There were separate Scotts in Ewesdale and Eskdale until incorporated into the local clan by Sir Walter in 1596 (although it is also stated that they descended from the Thirlestane branch). Upper Teviotdale, the Borthwick and Ale valleys were the strongholds of the family for centuries. The Dukedom of Buccleuch became one of the richest in Scotland and the main Scott seat is now at Bowhill. Several minor branches of the Buccleuch family have been important within Hawick, including Scotts of Goldielands and Allanhaugh. The Scotts of Harden have an ancient history, and are now represented by the Lords Polwarth. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were prominent Hawick townsmen for centuries, as well as Scotts of Alton, and other local branches include the Scotts of Crumhaugh, of Whitehaugh, of Goldielands, of Burnfoot, of Hassendean, of Syntons, of Todrig, of Whitslade, of Woll, etc. Around the 16th and 17th centuries there were property-owning Scotts, called ‘o the Mote’, ‘o the Toor’, etc., who were probably branches from younger sons of local Lairds. Around the 18th century there were also tradesman-class families within and around Hawick, e.g. the Mill Port Scotts, the West Port Scotts (probably related to the Crumhaugh branch), the East Port Scotts, the Scotts at the Cross, the Scotts of the Wyndheid, the Ormiston Scotts, the Scotts of Hummelknowe Mill, etc. The family motto is ‘Amo’ (I love), the arms of the Scotts of Buccleuch are a 6-pomited star and two crescent moons on a blue diagonal band (also described as ‘or, on a bend azure a mullet between two crescents of the field’) and the crest is ‘a stag rieppant, proper’. A huge amount of family history is contained in the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, which are preserved in the National Archives of Scotland, much of which was transcribed by William Fraser in 1878 – ‘He was gloved and mailed, he was booted and spurred, For a Scott must ride at the lightest word’ [WHO].

Scott’s (skots) n. gunsmith’s shop at the Sandbed in the latter part of the 19th century.

Scott’s (skots) n. popular name for 2 separate carrier’s firms in Hawick in the early 19th century, before the coming of the railway. One operated between Hawick and Glasgow and the other to Selkirk, Gala and other local towns.

Scott’s Bank (skots-bawngk) n. wooded slope on the burn between the Ettrick Water and Hynidhope farm. It is on the lands of the farm, and formerly gave its name to the local Laird, e.g. Robert Scott in the late 17th and early 18th centuries (also written ‘Scotsbank’).

Scott’s Level (skots-le-vul) n. former popular name for a flat strip of land on the Burnhead estate, which was used for training by athletes in the latter part of the 19th and earlier part of the 20th centuries. The name derives from the Scott family that farmed at Burnhead for centuries.

Scraesburgh (skræz-bu-ru) n. a hamlet between Jedburgh and Oxnam, with the remains of an ancient settlement. It was ‘Scraesburgh’ in 1314, when part of the original charter for Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Screys[burgh]’ was recorded as a juror in Roxburghshire in about 1260. At various times it was either synonymous with Hunthill or may have been essentially the same as what would later be called Kershuegh or Fernichirst. The ‘baronie de Scrayburgh’ is recorded in 1456. Once a prominent settlement, a document of 1544 records that a company of Englishmen ‘ventred vpoun the gratest towne in all Tiedale called Scraisbrugh a towne of the Lord Hunthyll’s’ where they took rich spils, a great amount of livestock and 38 prisoners. Land there was owned by the Rutherfords in the 17th century and it was purchased by William Elliot of Wells in the early years of the 18th century. In about 1788 John Rutherford of Hunthill sold part of the lands of Wester Scraesburgh to William Riddell. The term ‘Scraesbrough-peat’ was used to refer to peat brought for the moss there, and also used to refer to badly-made shoes (also written ‘Scraesburgh’ and variants; the origin is probably ‘Saw’s fort’ from the Old English name ‘Saw’ plus ‘burh’; the name first occurs in the mid-12th century as ‘Scraesburgh’).

the Secession (thu-se-se-shin) n. event in the Church of Scotland in which a group of dissenting ministers left to form their own independent church. It was caused by 2 acts of the General Assembly in 1732, principally regarding the powers of the congregation to appoint ministers. The dissent was led by Ebenezer and Ralph Erskine, who were from Berwickshire, and related to Harry Erskine, minister at Robertson. The Seceders called themselves the Associate Synod, and gathered strength until they split over whether members of their church could conscientiously take the Burgess Oath, which talked of supporting the ‘true religion at present professed within the realm’. This led to the formation of the Burgher and Anti-Burgher kirk. In about 1738 it was stated that in Hawick Parish the Seceders did not register their baptisms, this amounting to about 3 per year. The customs within the secession movement were generally stricter than in the established church, e.g. it is stated that at local weddings in the 18th century the bridal party danced back to back.

He then went to the Royal Scottiah Academy of Music in Glasgow and Trinity College of Music in London, before training as a teacher in Dundee. He held teaching positions in Kirkwall and Lockerbie, then arrived in Hawick in 1970 to be Head of Music at the High School. He was music teacher there for 27 years, until his retirement. He was organist at Trinity Kirk 1970–82, and has been heavily involved in the Amateur Operatic Society. He wrote ‘On With the Show’ (2010), for the centenary of that organisation. He was also conductor of the P.S.A. Choir and on the committee of the Saxhorn Band. He was President of Hawick Rotary Club and received a Paul Harris Fellowship in 2003. His support for and involvement in the Common Riding grew with time. From 1987 he became pianist for the 1514 Club, the Mosstroopers’ Club, the Callants’ Club, the Ex-Cornets and Ex-Acting Fathers Association. From 2002 he became pianist at the Colour Bussing. He was Mosstrooper of the Year in 2008 and was also made an honorary life membership of the Callants’ Club. He is writer of 5 modern Hawick songs: ‘Callant’s Song’; ‘Where Teviot Rins’; ‘The Queen O’ the Auld Scottish Border’; ‘Hawick Reivers’; and ‘Songs of Teviotdale’. He also published ‘Spider’s Wings – A Collection of 50 Poems’, as well as organ and choral church music. He arranged the music for the revival of ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 2000, matching the lyrics to some of Adam Grant’s other music, as well as writing 3 entirely new pieces and an overture. He acted as musical editor for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection’, providing some accompaniments to new songs and revised accompaniments to a few of the old. He also wrote the definitive guide ‘Songs of Teviotdale: A Companion to the Hawick Songs’ (2013).

Sei Croft (sì̂-kroft) n. Sea Croft, an area of marshy, planted land behind Pilmuir, part of the Newbigging farm at one point, and long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It lies on part of the boundary of the old Common. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as a small pond and its position is located on J.P. Alinson’s map of the Common in 1777. There was formerly a farmstead cottage there. Robert Fowler was there in 1743. The farmer recorded in 1797 was James Davidson (the name may be humorously applied because of the water in the area).

Seigiva (sà-gi-va) n. one of two women worshipers (the other being Rosfritha) from ‘Hahwick’ who apparently witnessed a miracle in the chapel of St. Cuthbert on the ‘Slitrith’, according to the contemporary historian Reginald of Durham.
They are said to have travelled many miles on a feast day of St. Cuthbert before Reginald wrote his book in about the 1170s, coming to the chapel, which is generally assumed to be at a site near Coggsmill. They were dismayed at the failure of the altar candle, but with their faith in St. Cuthbert, a new candle appeared in the middle of the altar ‘which diffused all around its beaming rays’ (also transcribed ‘Seigiv’ and ‘Sægifa’).

seip (sìp) v., arch. to seep, ooze, leak – ‘Losh

dissel, selkirk

'sell'; cf. the suffix -sel; it seems to be particularly prevalent in Hawick).

-sel (sel, sul) suffix -self, used to make compound personal pronouns (seen in masel, hersel, etc., as well as in other compound nouns such as glaursel, muck-sel and stoor-sel).

Selby (sel-bee) n. Ephraim (b.1801) son of Robert, he was also factor at Minto. He lived for a while at Hassendeanbank. In 1861 he is recorded living at Minto Cleuchhead, farming 375 acres and employing 13 people. He served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Mr. Selby who, along with George Pott of Dod, first suggested building a bridge and roads to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. His right to be a registered voter was questioned in the House of Commons investigation into ‘Fictitious Voters’ in 1837. He was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was still recorded as farmer at Hassendeanbank in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, servant to Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto; her diaries are in the National Library of Scotland Manuscript Collection. His children included Robert (who farmed at Hassendeanbank), Gilbert R. and William. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Selby, wife of the factor on Minto estate’, who is said to have helped the young James ‘Dictionary’ Murray to learn Italian and German. Robert (18th/19th C.) factor at Minto. His son Ephraim was also factor there, while his daughter Mary married hosier manufacturer Peter Wilson. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (b.1840/1) son of Ephraim. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 434 acres and employing 15 people at Hassendeanbank, although only 20 years old. He was present at the famous otter hunt of 1863, led by Dr. Grant of Hawick. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. Sir William (c.1556–1638) son of Sir John, he was Governor of Berwick and one of the Border Commissioners. In 1603 he was sent to deal with the Armstrongs and other Liddesdale men who were regarded as trouble-makers, burning many Border towers in the process.

the Selgovæ (thu-sel-go-vi) n., pl. ancient Celtic tribe which existed in the Borders during and after Roman occupation. Their territory consisted of the middle and upper Tweed basin and its tributaries (including the Teviot) and extended to the Solway (and was probably the origin of that name). One of their headquarters was at Newstead near Melrose, called Trimontium. The other 3 towns mentioned by Ptolemy were Carbantorigum, Uxellum and Corda, and all are unidentified. The Votadini were the tribe to the east and north, and the Novantæ to the west. However, it is unclear whether the Selgovæ were part of the Votadini or distinct. They were effectively conquered by the Romans in 79–80 C.E. (the word is though to mean ‘hunters’).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. town 11 miles north of Hawick, being the Ancient and Royal Burgh of Selkirk, built high above the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, which was the seat of the county of Selkirkshire. The town has for centuries been on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh. It was already an established mediæval town when David I established and abbey here in 1113 (although the monks soon moved to Kelso), with a castle and hunting forest following in the same century. Selkirk became a Royal Burgh perhaps in the 13th century and the Scottish Parliament met here in 1204. James V granted part of the royal forest as a common, and the town may have had the largest common in the country. The town has a mediæval plan, built around the market square, although the top part of the old town was levelled in the 1960s. It was burned by the English in 1418 and the inhabitants robbed in 1502 by Englishman Sir John Musgrave, with the help of Adam Turnbull (tenant at Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton). It was burned by the English again in 1543. A nearby massacre of Montrose’s Royalists took place by Leslie’s Covenanters in 1645. Sir Walter Scott was Sheriff here for 33 years. His statue sits in the square, and there are also memorials to Selkirk natives Mungo Park, Tom Scott and J.B. Selkirk, as well as the ‘Fletcher’ statue by Thomas Clapperton. The Pant Well monument is from 1898, although the well was in use much earlier. The old Court House dates from 1803 and has a 33 m (110 ft) spire. The County Buildings and Court House are linked on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh. Originally known for shoemaking, specialist tweed industries and latterly other light industries are now the main employers, with the mills on the low ground of the Ettrick haughs. Selkirk Common Riding is at least 400 years old, involving the Riding of the Marches as well as a commemoration of the return of ‘Fletcher’ from Flodden (another version states that Walter Brydon, the Town Clerk, was the only one surviving from the town’s 80 volunteers). Records of the ‘ryding off the comon’ go back to at least 1516/7. Ceremonies include ‘crying the burley’, bussing the Burgh Flag, fording the River Ettrick, and the ‘casting of the colours’. Part of it was filmed around 1900 by Hawick man David Gaylor. Population (1991) 5,922. J. Walter Elliot has written several books on the history of Selkirk – ‘Then up with the banner to Selkirk men’s honour, That sounded o’er Britain eight ages and more . . . ’ [JH], ‘ . . . And threaded his way through the oakwood brown To the diamond roofs of Selkirk town’ [WHO] (the origin is possibly Old English for ‘hall church’ or ‘church by the shiels’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Selkirk’; it is ‘Selechirche’ in about 1120, ‘Selkryke’ in 1415 and ‘Selerige’ in 1597 in a letter from Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. Herbert (d.1164) Tironian monk, sometimes referred to as ‘Herbert of Selkirk’. He became the 3rd Abbot of Selkirk in 1119 and persuaded the King to allow the monks to move to Kelso by 1127. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1147 and remained in that position until he died. He was thus Hawick’s bishop for about 17 years. He was Bishop around 1150 when he confirmed the gift of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugh Selechirch’ during the reign of Alexander II, when Petronella, daughter of ‘Adam Harang’ granted lands in the Borthwick, which were said to be adjacent to his house. His name may be ‘selech’ rather than ‘Selkirk’.

J.B. see James B. Broon. Rev. Matthew (c.1642–1728) graduating from Glasgow University in 1662, he was chaplain to Douglas of Bonjedward in the 1670s. He was said to have been assaulted for his support of the ‘Indulgence’ in the late 1680s. He became minister at Crichton in 1690. He married Agnes Cunningham and his children included Matthew, Robert, James, Janet, Agnes and Lawrence. William ‘Wullie Dunlop’ (1811–93) possibly Hawick’s shortest man. Born in Lauder, he lived in Gala until he was 16, but then spent most of his life in Hawick. At age 15 he developed severe joint pains, leaving him quite stunted. He worked as a seamer, and reared game cocks as a hobby. His walking stick is in the Museum.

Selkirk Abbey (sel-kurk-aw-bee) n. former abbey in Selkirk, with no visible trace remaining. It was founded around 1113 by David I, with 13 monks brought from the reformed Benedictine Order in France. It was founded in honour of St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and received a large amount of the surrounding lands. The location of the abbey itself was probably the old kirkyard of Lindean by the Battis (i.e. ‘Abbott’s Burn’). It is unlikely to have been a very substantial structure, since by 1128 the abbey was moved to Kelso. A roll of the abbots is: Radulf, 1113–17; William 1117–19; Herbert 1119–28.

Selkirk banni (sel-kurk-baw-ni) n. Selkirk bannock, a type of round fruit loaf made in Selkirk (also written ‘bannae’; cf. curny banni).

Selkirk Castle (sel-kurk-kaw-sul) n. former castle in Selkirk, probably dating to the early 12th century. It was frequently used by Scottish Kings in the 12th and 13th centuries, mostly as a royal hunting seat, but also holding occasional parliaments there. A new castle was built in 1302, including a drawbridge and portcullis. In 1304 it appears to have been captured by the Scots, but was back in English hands 2 years later, and in 1310 the English King, Edward II, stayed there for several days. After Bannockburn the office of Constable of Selkirk passed to Turnbull of Philiphaugh. From the Turnbulls it passed to the Murrays and later to families in Selkirk, who were ‘of the Auld Peel’. Its ruins are near the end of Castle Street (formerly the ‘Peel Gait’) on Peel Hill, in the grounds of the Haining, where the motte and some associated earthworks can be made out. The ‘castrum de selkirk’ is recorded in 1502, when Walter, son of Walter Scott of Heandshaw was accused of stealing a horse from there.

Selkirk Common (sel-kurk-kaw-min) n. common land of the Burgh of Selkirk, lying to the south-east of the town and containing a racecourse. There is a long history of dispute over ownership of these lands, which were once very extensive. There is a triangulation pillar there.

Selkirk Junction (sel-kurk-jung-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Selkirk Railway, between Melrose and Galashiels. That line ran from 1856 until 1951 for passengers and 1964 for freight, with stations at Abbotsford Ferry and Lindean.

Selkirk Rob (sel-kurk-rob) n. distinguishing nickname for one of the men called Robert Scott in the mid-1800s.

Selkirkshire (sel-kurk-shir, sel-kurk-shir) n. neighbouring county north-west of Roxburghshire, now part of the Scottish Borders. Parts of the Borthwick valley and areas around Ashkirk have shifted back and forth between Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire over the centuries, with some Parishes being split between both counties, or having disjoint parts in one or other county. A 2 volume history of the county was published by T. Craig Brown in 1886.

Sellar (se-lur) n. Margaret wrote ‘Denholm: a history of the village’ in 1899.

selled (seld) pp. sold – ‘...Or how Rattlin’ Rab the Ranter, And Deans’ mere, Beat the famous Black Enchanter That sell’d sae dear’[RH], ‘That shauchlin’ birkie, lang an’ thin, Seld a’ his sowl for jinglin’ tin’ [WP] (this is always ‘sold’ in English, cf. also sell; sometimes written ‘seld’ or ‘sell’d’).

Selvation Airmy see Salvation Airmy

selvedge (sel-vej) n. woven edge part of a garment, usually firmer than the rest of the material and forming a neat edge that will not unravel – ‘The set of reed 4 in the split stands opposite the porters, 8 quarters or two yards wide, independent of selvages’[BCM1881] (there are spelling variants).

Selwynslands (sel-winz-lands) n. former name for lands near Jedburgh, given by William Aitchison to John Ainslie, son of the Lord of Delphinston in 1436 (recorded as ‘Silwynislandis’). One of the witnesses was Thomas ‘Underayll, burgess of Hawyc’.

semmit (sem-mit) n. a woollen or flannel undershirt, vest – ‘Women got their husbands to work semmets and stockings as a thank-offering ...’[RJW].

semeple (sem-pul) adj., arch. simple – ‘...he brought upon himself the sport and merriment of the entire household, gentle and semple, to whom the custom of the schoolmaster was no mystery’[JAHM], ‘The Lord preserfes the sempel; I was broucht leuch, an’ he helpet me’[HSR], ‘The mischief she did wad tak ower lang to tell, Baith gentle an’ empil cam under her spell’[BM1901] (also written ‘sempel’ and ‘sempill’).

Seemples (sem-pul) n. Rev. Gabriel (1631/2–1706) son of Sir Bryce of Cathcart, he trained as a Covenanting minister. He served at Kirkpatrick-Durham in Dumriesshire until ousted in 1662. He is said to have been the first to start field conventicles. Being sought by the authorities, he hid in Yetholm and in Northumberland with Henry Hall and fled to Ireland for a while. He preached for several years at Ford and regularly crossed into Scotland to address field meetings. Lady Douglas of Cavers was accused of attending conventicles in the period 1679–82. He was captured in his sickbed at Blackcastle in 1681 and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released after a short time. After the Revolution he was minister at Jedburgh. He had 3 wives: Margaret, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Blackcastle; Alison, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk; and Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Etal. His children included: Samuel, minister of Liberton; and Janet, who married Walter Home of Bassendean.

sen (sen) v., poet. to send – ‘He sen’s the springs until the glens, whilk rin amang the hills’[HSR], ‘Sen’ thine han’ frae aboone; rede me, an’ delifer me owt o’ grit waters ...’[HSR].

sendit (sen-dee, -dii) pp. sent – ‘...whan Saul sendet, an’ thaye watchet the hous til kill him’[HSR].

Seneshiels (se-mu-shelz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Senesselchis’ in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 2 merks. Probably the same place is transcribed ‘Sisseschelis’ in a rental roll of 1541, when it was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’). The location, spelling and pronunciation are all uncertain.

Senior Bailie (seen-yur-bi-lee) n. another name for the Senior Magistrate.

Senior Magistrate (seen-yur-maw-jis-tra) n. the more senior of two officials elected to administer and enforce law in the town until 1861, also referred to as the Senior Bailie or Chief Magistrate. His house was formerly one of the main stops of the Procession on the Thursday evening of Common Riding week, and the Flag used to fly there after the morning Chase until it was bussed. After the reconstitution of the Council the position disappeared, and so the Common Riding duties... were assumed by the ‘Acting Senior Magistrate’ or Acting Father.

sennent (se-nin’) n., arch. a sinew – ‘A sprung sennent = a strained sinew’ [ECS].

sennicht (se-night) n., poet. a week, seven nights – ‘...surly merchants of the town; but gone a sennicht to Paisley, airly in April’ [DH].

the Seturdi (thu-se'-ur-di) n. Common Riding Saturday, beginning with the end of the Ball and greeting the dawn with song-singing at the Mote, and then a last dancing of the Reel in front of the Tower. There is usually a short rest before the Drums and Fifes rouse the town at 8 a.m., walking from the West Port to the Horse. At 9.30 a.m. the mounted procession proceeds to the Park, where the Principals stand in their stirrups and sing ‘Teribus’ at the end of the Avenue, before laying wreaths at the War Memorial. They then ride through the streets and are led from the Horse to the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. They then proceed to the Moor via the Duke’s Wood, the Flex, Wulliestruther, Pilmuir Rig and Pilmuir Field. The riders once again do a circuit of the race course, and the Flag is displayed as on the previous day. There are more races and events there, but shorter than on the Friday. The Cornet takes the Flag from the roof of the Committee room at 3 p.m., after which he leads his mounted supporters back to the Town Hall via Crumhaughhill, being met at the top of the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. The cavalcade then proceed along the High Street for the Handing Back ceremony at the Town Hall. The Cornet returns the Flag to the Provost ‘unsullied and unstained’, and displays it one last time from the balcony. As the Cornet lowers the Flag the Saxhorn Band play ‘the Invocation’. At the end of the tune the Cornet re-plants the Flag and the Big Four say their last farewells to it and the crowd, the Left-Hand Man and then the Acting Father being last to leave the balcony. After this the men are usually carried shoulder-high to the Tower to dance the Reel again. The ‘Greetin Denner’ has been traditionally held on the Saturday evening and the Principals usually visit the Shows, or in recent years go back to the Moor to see the live bands. It is unclear how far back the Saturday traditions go, with the first clear record being in 1744 when it was written that the Cornet was ‘to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after’. In older times the Saturday proceeded similarly to the Friday, with the Races and Games at the Haugh (with the Dinner between), but with a shorter programme. There was also a more formal Dinner on the Saturday, and the formal end of the Common Riding was the Kirking ceremony, which happened on the Sunday afterwards. The Drums and Fifes first took part in the Saturday procession from 1889. The tradition of riding the boundaries of the newly acquired Wilton Lodge estate was begun in 1890, but in 1892 was replaced with a visit to the Lodge. The Drums and Fifes and Burgh Officer were first involved in the Saturday procession from 1890.

Gilbert (18th/19th C.) mason at Craigend in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he had a contract for his son James with Elizabeth, daughter of John Hodge. If James were to die before the wedding, then another son was to marry Elizabeth Hodge. The couple were to be granted his husbandland in Langnewton, with his wife Katherine Haswell to retain liferent. The contents of the dowry were specified, and were to be paid back if there were no children produced. James (18th/19th C.) roper in Hawick. His wife Bell died in 1811. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-frame maker of the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is said that he expressed skepticism that the ‘double-decker’ design of James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’ fame) would be possible to build. James (b.1814/5) from Coldingham, he was a hand-loom weaver, living at about No. 2 Buccleuch Street and then Drumlanrig Square. His wife was Mary Ann, and their children included Robert, William, Walter, James, Isabella, John, Jane, Elizabeth and George. His wife ran a grocer’s shop according to the 1851 census, but it is his name that appears as a Teviot Square shopkeeper in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer at 1 Fore Row. John (d.bef. 1767) tenant farmer at Mackside. His only son was William (b.1749). John (b.c.1810) from England, he was a joiner in Hawick in the mid-19th century. In 1851 he was recorded on O’Connell Street as a ‘Stocking Frame Smith’ and in 1861 at No. 8 as a ‘Broker’ (possibly meaning a pawn broker, i.e. dealer in second-hand goods). His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Charles, Janet and Mary Ann. Rev. Thomas (d.1791) licensed by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1778, he became minister at Ettrick in 1781 and was translated to Hawick Parish in 1784, before moving again to Corstophine in 1789. He once fought off thieves who tried to steal the communion cups from his bedroom in the Old Manse. He is believed to have started one of the first Sunday Schools in Scotland at about the same time as Samuel Charters in Wilton (as mentioned in the British Chronicle or Union Gazette for 1786, although no names are given). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. His servant Andrew Elliot witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick in 1789. He is said to have left Hawick on account of being unable to govern the people; however, he appears to have fared little better in Corstophine, where he was ‘accus-tomed to avow, there, that he loved even a dog if it came from Hawick’. He married Alison Russell of Ashiestiel, and they had 4 children. Vivian ‘Viv’ (1935–2012) born and bred in Hawick, he was named after Cornet Vivian Grieve and lived at 4 different houses on Dickson Street. He was an apprentice at Watson’s, but became a plumber by trade. He served with the K.O.S.B. in Malaysia in the 1950s. He was a player, past President and Life Member of the Linden. He took up public singing only after a Burns Club singing competition in the late 1970s. But he soon became a fixture at the Common Riding, club dinners and wherever there was a sing-song. He re-released a CD ‘Naturally Sharp’ in 2001 and another with Drew Gibb. His regular party piece was ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, which he sang annually at the end of the Thursday morning Hut. He married Betty and had children Lorraine, Michael and Natalie – ‘Than ma freend Viv Shairp, few singers ir greater, Hei works for Grieve’s as a plumber and Slater’ [IW]. Shankend Viaduct Shankend Viaduct is a 15 arch, 597 foot long viaduct on the Waverley line, about 10 miles south of Hawick, which still stands. It was constructed as part of the extension of the railway from Hawick to Carlisle, opened in 1862. The stone was taken locally from new quarries opened up near Elliots Field (later called Fleety Cottage) and at White Hill. The main contractor was William Ritson, and it was said to have been built with much delay. It remains a striking part of the landscape.

Shaw (shaw) n. Maj. George Boyd ‘Tarry’ (1917–2004) born in Glasgow, he attended Hawick High School and then worked in Hawick’s woollen mills. He enlisted in the Scots Grey’s in 1934, and quickly became known as a brilliant horseman. He was promoted to quartermaster, then Sergeant Major. He saw active service in the Middle East, Italy, France, the Netherlands and on into Germany. After the War he was quartermaster sergeant, and helped prepare horses for the winning British team at the 1952 Olympics. He retired in 1967, having served as Regimental Sergeant Major in several overseas postings. He was also the last rough rider in the regiment, being the only man who could tame the wildest horses. He married Nancy Cressey and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Jane nee Hunter (19th/20th C.) daughter of commission agent James Hunter, she married printer William Clegg. She kept a china shop up a few steps at 5 Silver Street (which had previously been the Post Office and then Mungo Wilson’s). She later moved to 68 High Street. Joseph (19th C.) Hawick innkeeper listed on the 1837 electoral roll, and listed as a vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the Joseph listed as a weaver at about 30 High Street in 1841. Probably the same Joseph was on the subscribers’ list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Lady (17th C.) recorded at Hyn-daughhead in Southdean Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. She paid tax for having 2 hearths. It is unclear who she was. Rev. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1780–1853) youngest son of George, minister of Abbotshall, and brother of the minister of Langholm. He was born at Abbotshall in Fife. He studied at the United College in St. Andrews and was licensed to preach by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1802. In 1804 he was appointed preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ and was ordained there in 1807. In 1816 he was translated to Ewes Kirk, where he was presented by Charles, Duke of Buccleuch and became assistant and successor to John Laurie (son of the minister of Hawick). In 1818 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). He wrote an account of that parish in 1835, including a discussion of Mosspan. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of William H. Moncrieff, minister of Annan (and brother of David Moncrieff of Hawick). Their children were: George (b.1819), farmer at Duneles; Jane (b.1820); Margaret (b.1825); William (b.1827); Ann Janet (b.1831); Marion (b.1837); and Helen Mary (b.1839). T. (17th C.) probably a local heritor or perhaps a factor of the Douglasses of Cavers. He was ‘T. Shaw of Cavers’ in 1641 when he was one of the Roxburgshire men who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. His signature also appears on the existing 1638 Covenant of Minigaff (along with Douglas of Cavers). Thomas, K.C. ‘Tammy’ (1850–1937) son of a Dunfermline baker, he went to Edinburgh University and trained as a lawyer. A gifted orator, he entered politics, becoming M.P. for the Hawick Burghs in 1892, defeating Robert Fraser Watson. He won a bye-election in 1894 and held the seat until 1909. He was made was Solicitor General for Scotland and Lord Advocate of Scotland, became Lord Shaw of Dunfermline and ended as Lord Craignyile. He was also responsible for advising Andrew Carnegie on disposing of £20 million on causes within Scotland, including the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland. He was a Liberal, with strong views on home-rule, the South African War and law reform. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 on the opening of the new Public Library in Hawick. He made the presentation of Tom Scott’s ‘Return from Horns-hole’ at the 1898 Colour Bussing. He served in a judicial capacity in the House of Lords and the Privy Council until 1929, although without any obvious distinction. He also served on many commissions and public inquiries. He published two unconventional autobiographies, ‘Letters to Isabel’ (1921) and ‘The Other Bundle’ (1927), as well as legal works, biographies and 2 plays in verse. He was succeeded as 2nd Baron Craignyile by his son Alexander. Rev. William Berry ‘Willie’ (1775/6–1856) eldest son of George, minister at Abbotshall, he studied at St. Andrews University and was licensed to preach in 1799. His brother ‘Robbie’ was minister at Teviothead and then Ewes. At St. Andrews he shared a room with Thomas Chalmers, who became leader of the Free Kirk Disruption. He acted as assistant to Rev. Thomas Elliot at Cavers in 1801 and later in that

Shaw Burn (shaw-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running past Lethem to join the Jed Water. Near the head of the stream is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary ditch. The stream passes ‘Wattie’s Spindles’ and Hilly Linn. On the west side of its lower stretches are the remains of a small building on a terrace.

Shaw Craigs (shaʊkrægz) n. rocky hill on the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes, just north of Lethem. It reaches a height of 300 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. It also contains the remains of a fort and settlement, now within a clearing of the forest. It may be of early Iron Age date, with later construction phases, since it consists of different walls and ramparts, covering about 90 m by 50 m. It has also been suggested that the last period of construction may be post-Roman (also written ‘Shaw Craig’).

Shaw (shaw) pp., poet. shown – ‘...his rich-teousness he heth opinlie shawn in the sicht o’ the heethin’ [HSR];

Shaws (shaws) n. former name for lands near Hawick. It is listed among the Baron’s lands in Hawick in 1615. It is also listed in the 1627 valuation of the lands in Hawick Parish, between Weensland and ‘Trowhauch’ in the list, and hence probably somewhere in that area. It is described as ‘three lands callit the Schawis’ and ‘paying presentlie 12 bolls; estimat to 8 bolls in stok and 2 bolls in teynd annually’ (it is ‘Schawis’ in 1615).

Shaws (shaws) n. area around Shaw’s Under Loch, south of Shaw’s Hill, between the Ettrick and Ale valleys, once a farm owned by the Waughs. This may be the Shaws held by Walter Scott (along with Berrybush) in 1513. It may be the ‘Schawis’ tenanted by the Laird of Cranston in 1541, valued at £10 and ‘in rental’ £22. It is possible this was the ‘three merk land of Shaws’ granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1653. It was owned by John Ker in 1678 and by Charles Scott of Woll in 1785, and valued at £204 3s 4d. A stone cist and bones were discovered here in about 1870, at the nearby ‘Sleepy Knowe’. There are several other local places called ‘Shaws’ (it is ‘Schawis’ in 1513 and 1670).
Shaw’s Close (shaws-shal-os) n. slope just to the south-east of where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water, being essentially a south-western extension of Arnton Fell.

Shaw’s Bush (shaws-bush) n. name for a strip of plantation on the former Minto estate, south of the old church, and now forming part of the north-eastern boundary of the gold course.

Shaw’s Close (shaws-klos) n. popular name for a close off the High Street in the mid-19th century, with uncertain position. Presumably someone called Shaw once resided there.

Shawshiel Rig (shaw-sheel-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, essentially being the lower south-west part of Arnton Fell, between Newlands and the Steele. There are remains of a turf-walled building and field systems there. It was presumably once the shiel for Shaws farm.

Shaw’s Plantin (shawz-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation to the north of Spittal Tower (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shaws Under Loch (shawz-un-dur-loch) n. small body of water on the Langhope Burn, north of Hellmoor, with the upper loch nearby.

Sheafs (sheefs) n., pl. sheaves.

Sheal see sheep

Shear (sheer, shir) v., arch. to reap, cut hay – ‘Item, that na persone nor personis sheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteouslie …’ [BR1640], ‘Several parties fined for going away to sheire, and ordered to remove fra the town for ane year’ [BR1644], ‘Thaye that saw in teers, sall sheer in joy’ [HSR], ‘… guid at scheirin’’ [JAHM] (also spelled ‘scheir’, ‘sheer’, etc.).

[GT], ‘He chuse David ailsa his servent, an' tuik him frae the sheep-faulds' [HSR] (see also fauld).
sister Bridget, their mother Helen and step-father Patrick McCart. He was for a while landlord of the Irish Harp pub in Baker Street. His coffin apparently had to be taken out of the window in Baker Street, because it was too large for the stairs, and his funeral was said to be about the best attended in Hawick up until that time. He is buried in the Wellogate and his walking stick is in the Museum.

sherk (sherk) n. a shark – ‘he’s a right sherk on the pool table’ (also shairk).

sherp (sherp) adj. sharp – ‘he was aye it the sherp end o the aigiments’, ‘yer tongue’s that sherp, ee’ll cut yersel’, ‘Thy arras ar sherp in the hairt o the King’s enimies … ’[HSR], ‘Thy tung devaües mischeef: like ane sherp razor wurkin’ deceitfulie’[HSR], ‘That lean yin, strecht an’ sherp’s a knife, Let cauld ambition rule his life … ’[WP] (cf. shairp).

Sherwinlaw (sher-win-law) n. hill and place name somewhere near Jedburgh. It is ‘Schor-winglen’ in a charter for Jedburgh Abbey in the time of King David, and ‘Xernwingslawe’ in a confirming charter of Earl Henry. Later Christiana, wife of Gervase Riddell, gave a third of her lands of ‘Hernwingslawe’ to the monks of Jedburgh. ‘Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296; the same man was ‘de Sherewyndelawe’ when he had his lands restored later in 1296. It is possible that this is the same place as Shirenscleuch near Bellendean, but it is more likely it is an ancient form of Mervinslaw. Sir ‘Joceto de Scherwynlaw’ was witness to a charter relating to Kelso Abbey in about 1328 (recorded as early as the mid-12th century, the origin may be from Old English ‘sceorft’, meaning ‘steep slope’, plus ‘wynd’, or from the local dialect ‘shirrew’, meaning ‘field mouse’).

Sherwood (sher-wood) n. Andrew Godfrey Purvis (1950– ) born in Kenya, he studied violin and composition at the Royal College of Music. He became Professor of Violin at Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance. He has been principal conductor for the European Youth Summer Music, Director of the Brighton Youth Orchestra, Musical Director of the Musicians of All Saints, Director of Music and Choirs at the University of Brighton and Conductor of Somerset County Youth Orchestra. He married Mary Helen Hepburne-Scott and they live near Lilliesleaf. He wrote a piece called ‘Heart of Hawick’ to celebrate the opening of the new centre in 2008. He has also been involved in reviving pieces by local composers, particularly Francis George Scott and Sir John Blackwood McEwen.

she’s (sheez) contr. she’s, she is, ‘she’s an awfie bletter’, she has – ‘she’s the scar ti prove eet’, ‘she’s the same mother, bit a different fither’ (this second form is less common in English).

sheugh (shooeh) n., arch., poet. a ditch, trench, furrow, muddy drain – ‘… an’ heth fa’n intil the seuch whilk he maæde’[HSR], ‘Forgotten was our snaw-wreathed road, It’s hidden seughes o’ wa’ter’[VV], ‘… each seugh an heidie-hole i thir verra rigs was den for faire sodgers in fechtin’gràith’[ECS] (also written ‘sheuch’, ‘seuch’ and variants; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ii and oo).

shew (shoo, syoo) v. to sew – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this wheit-seem was shewd be hand’[ECS], ‘… Quoth she, ‘Oh get a pair o’ horns. I’ll shue them on ye, An’ make a goat o’ ye whilk conforms Ti sic a loonie’’[WP], n., arch. a sew, stitching (note these older pronunciations; also spelled ‘shue’ etc.).

shewin (shoo-win) pp., arch. shown, exhibited, displayed as proof – ‘… an Act extract be … clerk of our Judiciary, under his subscriptioun manuale, schewin and producit befor the saidis Lordis … ’[SB1500] (also written ‘schewin’).

shiel (sheel) n., arch. a temporary hut or other rough building used by shepherds – ‘Weel Nature accords wi’ the sorrow I feel, As I gaze on the site o’ my grandfather’s shiel’[DA], (also shielin; it survives in the names of many steadings and other place names, e.g. Adderstoneshie, Bellshiel, Borthwickshiel, Broadleeshiel, Burnfitshiel, Colterscleuch Shiel, Corries’ Shiel, Craikshiel, Doceleuchshiel, Emmettshiel, Foulshiel, Girnwudshiel, Greensheils, Hawick Shiel, Henlawshiel, Hoscoteshiel, Howashiel, Howcleuchshiel, Langburnshiel, Midshiels, Milshingtonshiels, Outersideshiel, Philhopeshiel, Priesthaughshiels, Riddellshiels, Ropelawshiels, Shankendshiels, Shiel Burn, Shiel Cleuch, Shiel Knowe, Shiel Rig, Shiel Sike, Shielswood, Skelfhillshiels, Soothdean Rig Shiel, Staneshiel, Syntonshiels, Templehaashiel, Todshawhillshiels, Westshiels, Whitehillshiels, Wundshiel and Wolfehopeshiel.

Shiel (sheel) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Goodfellow and their son Thomas was born in Hawick Parish in 1656. William (b.1647) is probably also his son. The James born in 1650 to Adam and Janet gooldalow may also be his son. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Christian Ballantyne. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1774, witnessed by the Associate Congregation. Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1791. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as tenants in Lustruther in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Alexander (15th C.) witness to a 1479 sasine for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn, where he is ‘Schevil’. He is probably related to David. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant somewhere in the Rule valley, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls and others for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His brother William and son John are also listed, their surname being recorded as ‘Schewill’. David in ‘Hoppiston’ and David in ‘Langrau’ are also listed. He could be the same Andrew, ‘alias Daad’, who was listed in 1502 along with David, being among Turnbulls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. He could be the same David in 'Hoppiston', recorded in the 1516 remission for many Turnbulls for assisting the traitorous Homes. The lands he farmed were in Rulewater, possibly Hobsburn. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Langraw in 1516, when he was listed among many Turnbulls for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He was probably related to the other Shiels who were listed there. David (16th C.) tenant in Fodderlee. In 1567 he was listed among men on lands under the superiority of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to crimes against Englishmen. He was probably related to the later John in Fodderlee. David (16th C.) recorded as ‘youngar in Langraw’ in 1567. He was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. David in Fodderlee was also listed and probably related. David (18th C.) listed as house servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when he was working for John Elliot. David (b.1826/7) grocer and spirit dealer on Mather’s Close on the Mather’s Close. Edward Shiel (16th/17th C.) tenant at Langhaugh in Rulewater, recorded in 1605. George (17th C.) resident of the Abbotrule area. He was a Covenantant who died in prison. George (17th C.) recorded paying tax on £52 for Langraw on the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same George in Langraw had his will recorded in 1688. Perhaps he is the ‘George Scheel’ who died in 1691 and was buried in Hobkirk Parish, his gravestone bearing a tailor’s ‘goose’ and pair of shears, indicating that he was a tailor. He is surely related to Lyle, who was at Langraw in 1643. George (18th C.) resident of Rulewater. Part of his lands (along with ‘Boston’s half of Kirk-know’) were listed among the possessions of Elliot of Wolfelee in 1788, and valued at £22 15s. George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778) and Janet (again, b.1780). The witnesses in 1774 were the whole congregation. His father James died in Hawick in 1787. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-arie held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was ‘Gilbertus schevil in bethroul’ and was fined for non-appearance of his wife, for whom he was surety (with her name not given). He was separately listed when he had remission for several crimes, including: burning Minto; being a supporter of Alexander, Duke of Albany; stealing many sheep from Minto Craigend and from several different people in Bedrule; stealing an ox from Fulton; and stealing 40 silver shillings and a stone of butter. His surety for these entries was the Laird of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was again listed being ‘in bethroule’ among a group of 8 Olivers who had remission for communing with the English. He may be the same man as ‘Gilbert Schell’ who witnessed a saisine for Wolfelee in 1469. Hector (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-arie in Jedburgh in 1502. Along with the Laird of Bedrule he had remission for stealing 9 sheep from Matthew Dodd out of Dolphinston. His surety was George Turnbull in Hallrule. Hector (d.bef. 1579) mentioned in 1579/80 as a resident of Selkirk when his son Philip witnessed a promise for ‘Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw’. Hector (17th C.) captured along with George of the Bog and presented for trial by Robert, Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches. They were accused of murdering James Paterson and William Gleghorn in Langlandhill and for raids on Peebles and Tweeddale as well as on the Captain of Edinburgh at Catslack in Ettrick Forest. He was probably executed along with George of the Bog. Hector (17th C.) son of John, tenant of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. In 1621, along with his father, he was pronounced as a rebel for cutting ‘greenwood’ in the woods of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1618 he and Jenet Sinclair (who had remarried the minister of Hobkirk, Rev. Thomas Thomson) and her son Andrew Brydon had a ‘wadset’ for the 2 acres of land in the Kirkhaugh beside Hobkirk Kirk. This was with the consent of Bessie Turnbull, who may therefore have been his wife. Hector (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Young in 1687 and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He is probably the cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included James (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1704). He could be the Hector who married Margaret Young in Roberton Parish in 1687. Hugh ‘Hog’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Holsburn, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-arie held in Jedburgh. The Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance, although his crimes were not specified; his name is given as ‘hoigis schevil’. Probably the same man was recorded as ‘hugone schewill alias hoge’ in 1502 at the Justice-arie in Jedburgh, among many men said to be guilty of the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for him failing to appear and he was declared as a fugitive. He was probably related to Andrew and David who are also listed. J. Rutherford (d.1916) bought Midshiels from Turnbull of Fenwick in 1896. He is probably the man of the same name who donated an adder killed at Hassendean to the Museum in 1863. In 1906 he (along with Miss Joan, probably his daughter) contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (16th C.) tenant in Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme’s farm at Blackgrain (in the Yarrow valley) according to his last testament of 1574. An inventory of the cattle there is provided in the testament. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Friarshaw. In the trial documents for witchcraft of Isobel Howison in 1628 there is a note to say that ‘he kennes scho wes a chairme cat’. James (d.c.1694) tenant of Southdean Mill. He was witness to the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw in Southdean Kirk in 1681. In 1691 he had a discharge woth William Currer of Whittmuir. His will is recorded in 1694. James (17th C.) farmer in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded being at Easter Burnfoot when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1682 and 1688. In 1686, along with his son John, he rented the lands of Knowe from William Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for another James in Hassendean in 1687. He was recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1694 and his son John may be the resident of Midshiels at that time. He could be the James ‘in Knowhead’ whose will is recorded in 1689. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Riddell in Roberton Parish in 1681 and another for Walter Sanderson in 1683. He married Christian Miller in Roberton in 1681 and their children included: Margaret (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); William (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The 1682 witnesses were William Beattie and James . . . and in 1688 were Thomas and Walter Sanderson. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Shiel and their children included Bessie and Isobel (b.1687). The witnesses were William Scott and James Shiel (probably the other man of the same name who was at Easter Burnfoot). James of Langraw (17th C.) witnessed a sasine for Hobburn in 1693. Also in 1693 he is the James ‘called of Tour, indweller’ at Langraw who witnessed a sasine between Gilbert Elliott of Stonedige and Sir John Pringle of Stichell. Probably the same James ‘portioner of Langraw’ was recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hobkirk Parish. He was probably related to George, recorded in Langraw in 1688. James (17th C.) resident at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1737 and 1742. His children may have included James (b.1737), John (b.1739), Mary (b.1741) and Isobel (b.1743). Perhaps the same James married Janet ‘Boll’ in Cavers in 1733. James (b.1770/1) born in Eckford Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 1,000 acres, employing 11 labourers. His wife was Helen, and their children included James, Andrew (who continued with the farm) and John (who assisted his brother). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cairns and their children included: Isabel (b.1798); Janet (b.1800); Mary (b.1803); James (b.1805); Francis (b.1807); Euphemia (b.1809); and Margaret (b.1812). James (1776–1858) weaver of West Port who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about No. 3 Loan. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: George (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809), who probably married Burgh Officer Jamie Smith; Ann (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); John (b.c.1819); James (b.1821); and David (b.c.1827), who was a grocer on Mather’s Close. He had twin sons who died in 1819. He could be the weaver of this name listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia in 1797 (with the annotation ‘Serving’); his name appears again in 1798, and later that year he was sworn into the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) horsedealer of Hawick. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the carter whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1808. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Greenbraeheads and Whitlaw. He is recorded at Greenbraeheads in 1841, along with his brothers John and Robert, and their mother Janet. He was probably son of Robert, recorded there in 1797. By 1861 he was farmer at Little Whitlaw, unmarried and living with his brother John and sister Janet. He was still recorded at Little Whitlaw in 1868. James (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Common, who died at Southdean Schoolhouse in 1868, aged 90. Their children included: Thomas (1808–56), Schoolmaster in Hobkirk; and Mary (b.1816/7), who married Neil Taylor, schoolmaster at Southdean. John (b.c.1810), who was living with Thomas and Mary at Hobkirk Schoolhouse in 1841, was probably also his son. He died at the age of 47 and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and parents. James (b.1805/6) innkeeper of the Coach & Horses at the Tower Knowe. He is listed on Silver Street in 1851 and on Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower and grocer at 30 High Street. He married Janet Stewart and their children included: Janet Cairns (b.1842); and Isabella (b.1844). James (19th C.) listed as Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races of 1873. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.1830/1) born in Oxnam Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he was farming there jointly with his uncles Andrew and John. James (d.1919) born in the West End, he became Registrar, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the Burial Ground for Wilton Parish in the latter part of the 19th century. He was the first Registrar of Wilton, following the Registration Act of 1854. His full time job was as foreman in one of the factories at Damside. In 1861 he is listed as Inspector of Poor & Registrar on Albion Place.
His later office (and probably house) was at 2 Laing Terrace. He was also later Clerk and Treasurer of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. Probably the same James was a singer at the Colour Bussing and similar events. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Andrew and Janet Helen. James (19th C.) proprietor of the West End Bar in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. He may be the Mr. Shiel who lived in the new house built at the foot of the Loan (and by the entrance to the Poorhouse) in about 1879. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of ‘tassy’, although it is unclear if this was a forename or a nickname. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded in Fodderlee in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties was recorded being ‘Dand’, Burgess of Jedburgh and William, also in Jedburgh. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot and brother of Steven. He is recorded as ‘John Shevell his man’ in a list of men accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589. He was named along with ‘Gib Elliott son to Robin’, John Noble (another servant of Robert Elliot) and other Elliots and Croziers. He was also listed along with Steven, and Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, who were complained about in 1590 for a raid into England. Probably the same ‘Jock Sheille’ is accused along with Steven in another case of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. Probably the same Jock, along with Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliots, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliots accused of having raided Gotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as ‘Jock Sheill Robin Elliott’s man’ in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven and several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsons of ‘Lynbrigges’; his name was given before Steven’s and so he was presumably the older brother. John ‘Jock’ of Kirkknoe (16th C.) recorded in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advaynent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. He was recorded as tenant in Kirkknoe when accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of Middleton Hall in 1589. He was ‘Younge Jocke Sheile of Kyrknowe’ and ‘Jock Sheile of the Kirkkenowe’ listed along with Douglastes, Laidlaws, Turnbulls and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods. He was probably an ancestor of the later Shiels of Kirkknoe. John (17th C.) tenant in Kirkknoe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1621. He and his son Hector were denounced as rebels for cutting down ‘greenwood’ on the land of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1666 he (or his direct descendant) sold half the land to John Mair of Mackside. His son was Hector. Either the same John or his father was recorded as ‘John Schewill in Kirkno’ in 1610 in an inquest for the succession to Appotside and Tythehouse. They were surely related to Walter of Kirkknoe who was recorded in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Grieve and their children included: Robert (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Murray and their children included Helen (b.1650) and Marion (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were George Helm and William Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: James Shiel (b.1656). John (17th C.) tenant in Boosmull. Along with his brother (whose first name is not given) he was declared a fugitive in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among men proclaimed as rebels for being Covenanters. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Heathar Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same John had a son Adam baptised in Cavers Parish in 1695. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Adam (b.1691) and William (b.1695). His name is recorded as ‘Sheilds’. John (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘theiker’ (i.e. thatcher) in 1704 when his son John was baptised, with witnesses gardener Patrick McLellan and weaver David Miller. Perhaps the same John was ‘workman in Hawick’ in 1706 when his daughter Bessie was baptised, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie George Martin. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for...
Smith John Scott in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. Based on the handwriting in the parish records, it seems likely he started in about 1697 and continued until around 1714. He married Margaret Shiel in Ashkirk in 1703 and their children included: William (b.1704); George (b.1706); and Dorothy and Elizabeth (b.1709). The children baptised in 1709 were ‘att one birth’, presumably meaning they were twins. John (17th/18th C.) lived at Dodheadsiels in Yarrow Parish. In 1728 his unnamed son was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear what his connection was to this parish. John (18th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1733 he married Helen Bell from Hawick. John (18th C.) farmer at Kirknowe who was a significant Hobkirk parishioner in the early 1700s. The land of Kirknowe was in possession of the Shielis from before the Reformation. The part that he held was formerly called Hob Kirkstile or just Kirkstile. He held it from at least 1718. His only daughter was Janet, who married Richard, son of John Mair. He left his lands to his grandson, John Stephenson, according to a settlement dated 1749 and ratified in 1759. John (18th C.) recorded as herd in Shaws in 1785 when he was part of a legal case in Selkirk. This could be the Shaws near Ashkirk. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Beryfell according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Janet Cairns, who was also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller at Weensland Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean, along with his older brother Andrew and nephew James. In 1861 they are jointly recorded as farmers of 250 acres, employing 14 people. John ‘Jocky’ (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist and sweet shop at the corner of the Loan and Beaconsfield Terrace. Leon (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Leonem Schavil’ when he was on the 1517 panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme. Lyle (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after Routledges and Douglasses who were probably local to the Cavers area. He was again recorded in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for his non-appearance. Lyle (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £52. His listed after George Turnbull of Langraw as ‘Lyell Scheil there’. He is surely related to who held the same lands in 1663. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident in Bedrule. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 8 sheep from Thomas Phaup in Bedrule, with the Laird of Bedrule as his surety. Robert (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener at Alston in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1711); and James (b.1715). He is probably the Robert married to Janet Smith whose daughter Jean was baptised in 1718. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. The farmers there in 1841, James, John and Robert, were probably his sons. Rutherford (b.c.1805) farmer at Ulston in Jedburgh Parish. He reported to the inquest in 1837 into election intimidation that there was an attempt to stop him voting in Hawick, and in fact he did not vote. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in Mynt’ (presumably Minto) among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliotis of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. John was also listed and so presumably a close relative. In another case he and Jock were accused of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. He was further accused in 1590, along with Jock, Will Elliot of the Steele and Jenkin Nixon of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he and John were accused in 1590, along with Elliotis, Nixons and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England, and the Steven, named along with John and several Elliotis accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as brother of Jock, who was ‘Robin Elliott’s man’ in another case of 1590, along with several Nixons, Crozieris and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsonis of ‘Lynbriggs’. Thomas (d.c.1578) recorded as ‘Thomas Schevill’ in 1578/9 when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and members of his family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for his murder. The others accused of being involved were Sir Thomas’ sons Wat and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine. He was presumably a local man, but it is not known where he was from. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Scheill’ in Wauchope in 1605 and ‘Thomas Schewill in Wauchup’ in 1612 when he was witness to a sasine. Rev. Thomas (1630/1–1708) first minister at the newly created Parish of Roberton in 1689. Probably the same ‘Mr. Thomas Shiel’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (along with Gideon Scott of Outerside) in 1687, suggesting he was already in the area at that time. He was a member of the Assemblies in 1690 and 1692. He was probably the same as the former minister at Kirkbri...

Shiel

He was listed as Hobkirk schoolmaster in Slater’s 1852 directory. After his death his widow and daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge. However, not long afterwards his sister married the schoolmaster at Chesters. Perhaps the same Thomas was schoolmaster at Cogsmill from 1829. Tibbie (1783–1878) inn-keeper in the Yarrow valley. When young she had been a servant with the Ettrick Shepherd’s mother. She married Robert Richardson, a molecatcher from Westmorland. They became tenants of a cottage near Chapelpoint, at the upper end of the Loch of the Lowes. In 1823, shortly before her husband died, she moved to the coaching inn at the bridge between St. Mary’s Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. The inn became famous as a meeting place for friends of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, including Sir William Scott and Professor John Wilson. She had all her mental faculties intact until her death, aged 95. She had a child who died in infancy, as well as 3 sons (William, who remained at the family home, the other 2 emigrating to Canada) and 3 daughters (including Mrs. Michell, Crossleugh). Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £78. He was surely related to John in Kirknowe, who was recorded earlier. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule listed in 1684 among those men proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. He may have been related to Archibald in Mackside and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Walter (19th/20th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Cavers Parish. In 1906 he was among those who contributed to the fund for renovating Kirktown Kirk. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelum Schewile’ in 1427 when he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick from his father. Presumably the same ‘William Schewyll’ was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo Schevill’ in the period 1456–60 when he was Clerk of the Court for Ettrick Forest and was assigned the farm of Kershope. William (15th/16th C.) witness in 1514 to the baronial sasine for Hawick. He is listed as ‘Willelmo Schewyll’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schevill of Fodderlie’ in 1618 when there was a bond in his name, involving Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, ‘for two bolls cherittie meal, of the met and measure of Jedburgh’. He may be the same man as the William in Hartshaugh recorded later. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schievill, indweller in Hartishaid’ (probably ‘Hartshaugh’) when he was witness to a disposition of 1630 between Francis Hamilton and Rev. William Weir. His name is transcribed ‘Williame Schewill’. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mossyd’ according to the Register of the Privy Council in 1676. His wife Agnes and daughter Bessie were among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means that they objected to having an Episcopalian minister in their parish. He was probably related to the husband of Margaret Lorraine (also listed in 1676), who was also a Shiel (perhaps Andrew). It is possible he was the same as William in Mackside. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: Helen (b.1655); and John (b.1657). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their son Hector was baptised in 1669.

William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (d.bef. 1719) described as ‘writer in Hawick’ when his son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in 1719. William (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. He was rebuked by the Session in 1716 after the minister saw him ‘coming home and holden on by a man riding behind him for drunkennes’. His ‘servitrix’ Janet Stothart married William Whillans in Hawick in 1714. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was brother of the Thomas who farmed at Todshawhaugh, and son of Rev. Thomas. In 1696 when he rented Todshawhaugh he is clearly described as son of the minister Thomas; he appears to have taken over from his brother Thomas about then (since Thomas is listed as farmer in 1694). He is recorded in 1694 when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Rulewater. He was still renting Todshawhaugh in 1698. He was rebuked by Robertson session in 1701 for allowing a ‘mock’ wedding to take place in his house on the Sabbath, between Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Esther Turnbull He could be the brother of Thomas, farmer at Todshoawhill, who is said to have married a sister of the ‘Bonny Lass o’ Branzholme’ William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Stobicote in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for apothecary Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same as the farmer at Todshaugh William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1705 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may have been his include Jean (b.1702), Margaret (b.1704), Margaret (b.1711) and John (b.1714). He may be the William recorded at West Middle in 1719 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1824 when his child with Betty Laidlaw died (also formerly spelled ‘Scheil’, ‘Scheill’, ‘Schele’, ‘Schevell’, ‘Schevill’, ‘Schewill’, ‘Sheel’, ‘Sheil’, ‘Sheill’, ‘Sheills’, ‘Shevill’, ‘Scheil’, ‘Scheill’, ‘Schele’, ‘Schevell’, ‘Schevell’, ‘Scheeff’, ‘Sheill’, ‘Shiell’, ‘Sheills’ and variants).

Shiel Burn (sheel-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Wilson’s Pile and running roughly north-west to join Boghall Burn. It is now entirely within forest. The 1857 Ordnance Survey map marks a small settlement on its banks, of which there is now no sign.

Shiel Cleugh (sheel-klooch) n. small stream in Southdean Parish, whichroft Plantation, between the sites of Slack’s Tower and Northbank Tower, and runs north to meet the Jed Water. There are lines of rig covering about 10 hectares on both sides of the cleugh, and aerial photography has revealed a possible farmstead, now buried in the forest.

Shielden Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, just south of Burnmouth farm, between the Kilm Burn and Howden Cleuch. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined cottage there. Labourer John Lamb was there in 1835 and there were Elliots there in 1841, but it was abandoned before 1851. The area formerly had a fortified house, known as Stripshieldsen (it is ‘Shelden’ in 1835 and ‘Sheldon’ in 1841).

Shielie’s (sheel-leez) n. sweetie shop at the Sandbed in the early-to-mid 20th century – ‘Across the road auld Shielie did us braw For browbees we wad ware owre there . . . ’[WL].

shielin (sheel-in) n., arch. a remote and often crude shelter built for shepherds, remote pasture lands where animals would be driven in the summer – ‘. . . as the shielins o’ Kedar, as the coortins o’ Solomon’[HSR], ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the shieling Are broucht to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’[WL] (also shiel).

Shiel Knowe (sheel-now) n. hill lying south-west of Riccarton Junction and west of Saughtree, reaching a height of 292 m.

Shiellaw (sheel-law) n. former farmstead, close to the present location of Hassendean Common farm (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

shiller-shakers (shi-lur-sha-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media (also shillin-shakers).

shillin (shi-lin) n. a pre-decimalisation coin (i.e. from before 1971), worth twelve old pence or one twentieth of a pound, and still used occasionally to mean five new pence – ‘…To send a bottle out o’ fight, Could he command a shillin’ …’ [JR]. The word is also used to indicate the strength of beer, historically indicating the duty payable per barrel – ‘A’ll hev a pint o yer aeighty shillin’. Additionally it was sometimes used as a unit of weight, representing 1/60 of a pound – ‘Item, Gowldilands, neuer payit ferme; estimat to pay 100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.’ [PR1627].

the shillin (thu-shi-lin) n., arch. also called the King’s Shilling, this was a token bounty accepted when signing up for the army – ‘Come ladies come, hear the cannons roar, Tak’ the King’s shillings an’ we’re off tae war’ [T].

Shillinlaw (shi-lin-law) n. (Shillinlaw) Andrew (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer living at Milsington in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Mary, Christian, Robert, John and Jane. George (18th C.) son of Joseph, who was miller at Legerwood. He was recorded as groom and postillion at Burnhead in 1788, when he was working for William Scott. He married Dorothy Smith and they were living at Crow Hill when their daughter Betty was baptised in 1787; the baptism was recorded in both Wilton and Earlston Parishes and the witnesses in Wilton were William Beattie and Adam Scott. By 1789 he was living at Currie in Borthwick Parish. He was later a gardener and nurseryman in Earlston, where he had several additional children, and was said to have supplied plants to Sir Walter Scott at Abbotsford.

Shiriff Depute
Shiriff Court

Shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Shiriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title 'Sheriff of Teviotdale'. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply 'Sherrifs', a title they took officially after 1971.

Shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included Archibald (b.1740) and James (b.1741).

Shiriff Depute (shi-rif-de-pewt) n. deputy appointed to assist the Sheriff in running the Sheriff Court. In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. After the abolition of heritable sheriffs, the ‘Depute’ actually held the office of Sheriff and the term ‘Sheriff Depute’ was synonymous with ‘Sheriff Principal’, with deputies known as ‘Sheriff Substitutes’.

Shiriff o Roxburgh (shi-rif-o-roks-bu-ru) n. hereditary title, synonymous with the Sheriffship of Teviotdale, and held for generations by the Douglases of Cavers. This was formally a royal appointment and the holder was the King's officer in the county. In the earliest times it may only have been a military leader connected with Roxburgh Castle, but later it became an office with administrative and judicial responsibility for the county. The first known 'vicecomite' of Roxburgh was Gospatric, mentioned in the founding charter of Selkirk Abbey. Henry Kerr was Sheriff in the 14th century, George Douglas, Earl of Angus, gained the title along with several lands in 1397 and Sir Archibald Douglas acquired the hereditary title by royal charter in 1412. A decree of 1620 abolishing heritable jurisdictions led to William Douglas of Cavers agreeing to part with the Sherifffdom and (teinds from Cavers Kirk) for the sum of £20,000 Scots. But in 1626, when only £4,000 had been paid, he refused to surrender the office, and Parliament agreed he could do so until the full amount was paid. In fact the family held on to the Sherifffdom until the final abolition of such offices in 1747. A roll of the Sherifffdom is: Gospatric, c.1125; Gervase Ridder, c.1138; Robert, son of Guy, 1147; John, son ofOrm, c.1170; Bernard of Hadden, c.1203 and 1227/8; John Maxwell, c.1214 and 1223/4–26; Adam of Bathgate, 1237/8; Nicholas de Soulis, 1246; Aymer Maxwell, c.1250; Hugh Abernethy, c.1264; Thomas Cavers, c.1265; Thomas Randolph, 1266; Hugh de Pearsby, at least 1285–6; William de Soulis, 1289/90; Walter Tonke, 1296; Sir Robert Hastings, 1296–1307 (English); Sir Ingram de Umfraville, 1302 (Scottish); Sir Robert of Mauley, at least 1305–07 (Scottish); Aymer Valence, c.1310 (English); Sir Henry Baliol, around 1328; Galfrid Mowbray, 1334 (English); Sir Alexander Ramsay, 1342; Henry Ker, 1349; John Copeland, 1350–55; Sir John Tempest, c.1360 (English); Alan Struthers, 1368 (English); Lawrence of Govane, 1373; Sir Malcolm Drummond, c.1389; Sir William Stewart, c.1390;
Shiriff o Teviotdale

George, Earl of Angus, 1397; Sir David Fleming of Biggar, 1405; Archibald Douglas of Cavers, 1412; hereditary title of the Douglasses of Cavers until 1662 when Sir William Douglas was removed for not conforming; James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch, 1669; continuing with Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1689 until Archibald Douglas gave up the right in 1774 (also called ‘Sheriff o Roxburghshire’; see also Shirraship o Teviotdale).

Shiriff o Teviotdale (shi-rif-ô-teev-yi’dail) n. office for maintaining law and order in Teviotdale, held by Sir Herbert de Maxwell, Alexander Ramsay, then Sir William Douglas, and for generations by Douglas of Cavers, starting with sir Archibald Douglas from 1412. In earlier times the title usually went along with that of Keeper of Roxburgh Castle, and hence ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’ and ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’ were synonymous. The Sheriff was responsible for raising and commanding the local militia, local defence, collecting taxes and administering justice. This title ended in 1747 when heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown. Archibald Douglas of Cavers (the 15th Laird) was the last Sheriff (see also Shiriff o Roxburghshire).

Shoorswood (shôrǔz-wood) n. John (17th/18th C.) son of John, with his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and Alexander Morrison, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. His father was already deceased in 1693. It is unclear what happened to the Barony afterwards.

Short

Shoours (shoo', shôr') n. Colin Roderick ‘Doddy’ (1942–2010) son of Pipe Major Robert, he was born and bred in Hawick. He was Head Boy at Trinity, then attended the High School and Henderson Tech. He worked for Pringles for 25 years, then started his own business, Shorts of Hawick, making tartan hose for pipe bands. He played pipes with the Boys’ Brigade and then the Hawick Pipe Band, being 2nd Pipe Major and band secretary for decades. He married Helen Greenhill and had children Karen, Kenny, Julie and Allister. James (1818–88) born in Eckford Parish, he was son of John, who farmed at Hartshaugh Mill. He was coachman at Wolfelee Glen in 1851 and coachman at Wauchope Cottage in 1861. He later moved to Jedburgh. In 1846 he married Helen (1823–1911), daughter of William Sibbald; she died in Hawick. They had 11 children, born in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes, including: John (b.1846), who died in infancy; John (b.1848) the eldest surviving son, who became head gardener at Hummers Knott, Darlington; Margaret (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852), who worked in the hosiery industry in Hawick; Mary (b.1855), who died in infancy; Helen (1853–93); William (1858–69); James (b.1860), who died in infancy; James (1863–1905), also a gardener in Yorkshire, died in Hawick; Peter (1865–1921), a telegraph linesman; and Francis (b.1868). John (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with Stephen Scott and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to Robert who is also listed as a particate-holder in 1537. Probably the same John was deceased in 1560 when his brother Thomas inherited his tenement on the north side of the High Street; this was between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612. John Elliot was claimed by Elliot’s wife to have been murdered ‘within the said Jok Schortis duelling hous’, but but in fact appears to have hanged himself with his own belt when imprisoned in St. Mary’s steeple. This suggests that he was an innkeeper. John (b.c.1775) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. He is listed as miller at Hartshaugh in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at Hartshaugh Mill in 1841, but absent by 1851. He married Margaret Davidson and their children (born in Eckford Parish) included: John (b.1808); Francis Davidson (b.1809); Euphan (b.1812); William (b.1817), who married Mary Dalgleish; James (b.1819), who married Helen Sibbald; George (b.1820), who married Rachel Scott; and Adam (b.1822). He could be the John, son of John and Isobel Thomson, born in Kelso Parish in 1779. John Dalgleish (b.1842) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and later Borthwickbraefoot. He was son of William, also farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and nephew of the John who married Margaret Davidson. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living with his siblings and widowed mother in Chesters. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Cavers, also from Rulewater. Their children included Mary Euphemia (b.1881) and John (b.1891). Robert (16th C.) owner of 1 partice of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. A piece of land lying between his land and that of John Scott to the east was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. Robert ‘Bob’, M.B.E. (??– ) originally from Thurso, he was a Pipe Major. He formed the Hawick Boys Brigade Pipe Band in 1937, leading to the Hawick Pipe Band of today. His wife was Margaret and their son Doddy continued the family piping tradition. Their other children were Robert and Angus. Robert ‘Bert’ (1935–2014) eldest of 3 piping sons of Bob, he started playing from the age of 7. He took first prizes in the Borders B.B. Championships from the age of 12 for 5 five years in a row and gave a recital on B.B.C.’s Children’s Hour when he was 12. He did National Service with the Royal Scots, where he joined the pipe band. Returning home, he took over as Pipe Major for the Hawick Pipe Band, leading them through many competitions. He taught piping at summer schools through the Scottish Amateur Music Association and was on the National Council of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association. He married Edith and had children Maureen, Aileen and Graham. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1560 when he inherited his deceased brother John’s tenement in Hawick. This was a piece of land on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. In 1674 he sold this same tenement to Robert Johnstone, from Amandale. William (b.1819) son of John, he was born in Eckford Parish. In 1851 he was a corn and meal dealer at 3 Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 his wife was a widow, farming 25 acres at Hobkirk Glebe in Chesters. In 1845 he married Mary, daughter of John Dalgleish, from Swanshiel. Their children included: John Dalgleish (b.1842); Jane; Margaret; Thomas; and Euphemia (b.1855) (formerly spelled ‘Short’, ‘Schorte’ etc.).

shortbread (shor'-breed) n. shortbread, baked item made from flour, sugar and butter – ‘A pek of flur bikin short brid and buttor to it, £1 4s’ [1690/HAST1905].

Shortbutts (shor'-buts) n. former name for lands in the territory of Sorbie (probably meaning near Sorbietrees) in Liddesdale. In the late 12th century Race Fitz Malger granted half of the land there to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1541 it is valued at 20 shillings and said to pertain to the Laird of Shortbutts. Along with Flatt it was owned by Francis Robinson in 1632 (it was is ‘Scortebuttes’ in the late 1100s, ‘Schortbutts’ in 1541 and ‘Schortbus’ in 1632).

the Shorter Catechism (thu-shor'-ur-kaw'-e-ki-zum) n. short form of the question and answer instruction manual, designed to be memorised in order to test parishioners. The short form was the one mostly used, consisting of 107 questions. It was written in the 1640s by English and Scottish clergy, and also referred to as the Westminster Shorter Catechism. Locally it was called ‘the carritch’. Examination was often carried out in the parishioners own houses by the minister, but often in order round a circle, so it was possible to memorize only a subset of the answers.

Shorthope (shor-tup) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, before reaching Kirkhope and Phawhope. In 1557 ‘Auld Hob Scot of Riskynhoup’ paid rent for the lands to Melrose Abbey. In 1609 it was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane, with tenant Andrew Scott. Robert Scott of Whitslade was served heir to his father’s lands here in 1643. It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. It was long part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Schorthope’ in 1564 and ‘Schorthoip’ in 1609; ‘Shortup’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

short-leet (shor'-lee) n. a short list – ‘A deh ken if A’ve got the job, bit A’m on the short-leet’ (this term survives, although the use of ‘leet’ itself seems to have died out).
Shortreed (shor'-reed) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in the 1526 remission given to a large number of Borders men for an attack upon the Earl of Arran; his son John is also listed. Probably the same Andrew was one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. He is probably the Andrew who owned a piece of land in Selkirk according to a document of 1530. He witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was also part of an inquest into the disputed lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. Most of the other men listed were local, and so he was probably from the family based near Ashkirk. Probably the same Andrew ‘Shortreid’ in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. In 1536 he was cited by Walter Scott (brother-german of Kerr of Sunderland Hall) for failing to produce Adam Gledstains at the market cross of Selkirk.

Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Bernard (15th C.) tenant in Essen-side. In 1494/5 he had remission for theft of sheep from the Murrays of Sundhope. Adam Scott of ‘auldinnis hop’ served as his surety.

David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to William, who was also at Burnfoot. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essen-side when he was cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He is probably related to Thomas, who was also at Essen-side, but distinct from David who was at Burnfoot. George of Essenside (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as an executor for the children of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace.

James (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1705, 1706 and 1711. He may be the James who married Margaret Shiel in 1692. He could be the James who is recorded as resident at Whitehaugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Renwick) for George Renwick in the Sandbed in 1697. James (1726–83) eldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliott, he was ‘younger of Essenside’. He acquired part of Hermiston from George Johnstone in 1758, the lands being valued at £260. He was owner of Easter Essenside in 1759, and sold the lands to Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot in 1778, with the consent of his wife Helen Currer and the trustees for his creditors: Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Robert Laidlaw, tenant in Falnash; and Walter Scott of Wauchope. He was struck off the list of freeholders of Roxburghshire in 1780, having lost his lands in the county. He married Ellen Currie (also recorded as ‘Helen Currer’) in 1754 in Ashkirk and they had a son, Thomas (b.1786). He is probably the same James ‘late of Essenside’ who was buried in old Wilton Kirkyard, his table stone stating that he died in 1783, aged 75; his wife Bella Currie was buried beside him, and died in 1808, aged 84. His wife may have been the ‘Mrs. Shortreed’ recorded as owner of ‘Nethercroft, acquired from Langlands’ according to the 1788 valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; the farm was valued at £20 and later owned by John James Scott Chisholme of Stiches. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1755); Isabel Margaret (b.1756); Margaret (b.1760); Jean (b.1762); Jean (again, b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Ann (b.1767); Nelly (b.1769); Robert (again, b.1771); Mary (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Elliotie (b.1775); Andrew (b.1776); and Willie (b.1777). John (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran’s forces. He was son of Andrew. John (17th C.) recorded being in ‘Longsintoune’ in 1679 when he had a discharge for payment with the treasurer of Selkirk. He was in ‘Langseintein’ in 1681 when he had a similar discharge. John (17th/18th C.) farmer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 in Edinburgh his daughter Agnes married William Thomson, who was ’servitor to Bartholomew Brecher, bower’.

John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: William (b.1702); an unnamed son (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Andrew (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1718 and Borthwickbrae in 1720. He probably married Mary Hislop in Robertson in 1718 and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Janet (b.1720).

John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Rigg in 1729 when he married Margaret Scott. John (18th C.) tenant in Oakwood in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same John was tenant in ‘Hainingmote’ in 1741. Robert (16th/17th C.) local tenant recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. The farm he was connected with is not transcribed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert of Essenside (b.1695) born in Wilton Parish, he became a Bailie and lawyer in...
Ashkirk Parish. He may have been son of James and Margaret Sheil. He may be the Robert ‘short-ridg’ who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. He is probably the Robert who paid the window tax at ‘woolie’ in Southdean Parish in 1748 (presumably he lived there temporarily). He acted as attorney for Walter Scott of Leith when he gained the lands of Wauchope in 1750. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1725 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill and sister of William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. His eldest son was James and another son was farmer Thomas. He may have been father of Margaret (b.c.1735) who married William Elliot of Whithaugh. His sister Agnes may have married his brother-in-law Andrew. Robert ‘Bob’ (1762–1829) born in Southdean Parish, eldest son of farmer Thomas and Ann Maria Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He became Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He had musical talent and collected local songs and legends. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him on several trips in the Liddesdale area, gathering ballads etc. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s. He represented Weens on the Hobkirk Parish heritors council in 1803. He subscribed to William Scott in Blindhaugh. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Whitehillbrae (in Kirkhope Parish) in 1580/1 when Janet Turnbull (widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh) and William Allan assigned him their lands in Blindhaugh. Walter in Selkirk was one of the witnesses and may have been related. On the same day he confessed that he owed Walter money and was having to defer payment. He was also recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Blindhaugh in 1581 when the liferent was transferred to Walter, son of the deceased John Scott in Blindhaugh. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cau- tioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. He was probably related to David, who was also at Essenside. He may be the Thomas in Woll who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Thomas (1733–98) farmer at Easter Essenside. He was son of Robert and Elizabeth, who was daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill (ancestor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee). He also farmed at Wolfelee, Hyn- dlee, Lustruther and Jedhead, being one of the most extensive farmers in the Jedforest. However, he was financially ruined following the American War, and it is said the worry from this shortened his life. He was also said to have been the last man to carry out a Border raid, this after some English thieves had carried off some of his sheep; instead of appealing to the courts he crossed the Border and brought back his livestock, like had happened in earlier centuries. In 1757 he married short-sichted

Ann Maria, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule. Their eldest son Robert was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, while their daughter Mary married William Aitchison. Thomas (18th C) resident of Southdean. His children included Mary (b.1759), Betty (b.1760), Robert (b.1762), Margaret (b.1764), William (b.1768), James (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771) and Patrick (b.1775). Thomas (18th C) tailor at Falnash. He is recorded in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Hawick Parish, with his surname given as ‘Shrotreed’. Thomas (1786–1842) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Ellen Currie. He married Isabella Armstrong in 1774. Their children were George, James, John, Robert L., William and Thomas. In 1831 he emigrated with his wife and 6 sons, settling in Guelph, Ontario. Thomas (1796–1826) eldest son of Robert, Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His great schoolfriend was Robert Lindsay Armstrong, later Director of the Mint in St. Petersburg. He was greatly interested in local history, publishing a pamphlet on the orchards of Jedburgh. He also collected Border ballads and helped Sir Walter Scott with ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He was Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He may be the Thomas listed at Falnash in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He took over from his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club in 1820, retiring in 1826 because of ill-health. He never married and died at Camberwell. Walter (16th C) recorded in 1580/1 as witness to an agreement between Walter Scott of Ashkirk and John Scott in Aikwood over Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded as brother of Walter Scott, perhaps meaning brother-in-law. He is again recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk in a further transaction of 1581. He may be the same William recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a caunterer for William Scott there. He was surely related to David, who was also at Burnfoot. He was still recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk when he witnessed a transaction for him in 1581/2 (also spelled ‘Schortred’, ‘Schortreid’, ‘Shortread’, ‘Shortreede’, ‘Short-reid’, ‘Shortridge’, etc.).

Shuttle Haa (shu-tul-haw) n. former name for a building in upper Teviotdale, presumably named because it was once the abode of weavers. Walter Richardson lived there in around 1750. John, farmer at Whitlaw in Bowden Parish. His brother John was farmer at Borthaugh. He attended Selkirk Grammar School and then leased the farms of Newton (on Slitrig) and Whitehill-brae (on the Dod Burn) from Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. He spent much of his time studying botany and the classics, and failed as a farmer, giving up his lease in 1779. Learning the publishing trade rapidly in London, he moved to Edinburgh, helping his cousin the publisher Charles Elliot in his shop. In 1780 he purchased (from Mrs. Margaret Yair) the circulating library that had belonged to Allan Ramsay, and became a bookseller and publisher on Parliament Square. A young Sir Walter Scott was a frequent visitor to his circulating library and described him as ‘a man of rough manners but of some taste and judgment, who cultivated music and poetry’. In 1785 he started to publish the ‘Edinburgh Magazine, or Literary Miscellany’ as a competitor to the ‘Scots Magazine’. He himself wrote many articles on Scottish antiquities, as well as many other topics, such as the first serious review of Robert Burns ‘Kilmarnock’ edition. He went through mixed fortunes, running a paper mill, giving up his publishing business, setting up a short-lived Edinburgh newspaper, handing over the circulating library (but later getting it back), spending some time effectively missing in London (when he wrote a book about the life of Jesus), and seeing the Edinburgh Magazine merge with the Scots Magazine. His best known work is ‘Chronicle of Scottish Poetry from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a glossary’ (1802), with the 4th and final volume being effectively a Scots dictionary. This is locally valuable for including words attributed to use in Teviotdale in his time. There is an etchings of him by John Kay, a portrait by an unknown artist (previously attributed to Raeburn) and he appears in

W. Borthwick Johnstone’s 1856 painting of Edinburgh literary characters. He died unmarried at his house on Leith Walk. James (b.1832) son of William. He was raised on a farm. In 1855 he married Agnes Hardie of Newcastleton, and the couple emigrated to Canada, settling in Bruce County. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters. He sold up his farm in 1890 and made a last visit back to Rulewater before joining several of his children to live out his days in Duluth, Minnesota. John (1714–83) eldest son of John and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Oakwood Mill. His brother was William of Pinnacle. He was tenant farmer of Whitlaw in Bowden Parish, where he paid the window tax in 1753. He married Margaret Grieve in 1743. Their children were: James (1747–1803) publisher of ‘The Edinburgh Magazine’; William of Gladswood (d.1817) merchant and ship-owner in Leith; John (b.1755), who was tenant in Borthaugh; Agnes (b.1751), who married Henry Scott, tenant in Deloraine; and Jean (d.1817), who married John Lang, Sheriff-Clerk to the Heritors, and was one of the best known people in the Rule valley in her day. She was one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk She helped George Tancred with information for his Rulewater book. In 1901 she was living at Newington, Edinburgh. Peter (1835–85) son of William and Margaret Laidlaw, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked as a mason in Hobkirk and then in Hawick. He was visiting Howahill at the time of the 1841 census. In 1858 he married Mary (1827–1912), daughter of James Nichol. Their children were: William (b.1860); Peter (b.1862); Thomas (b.1864); Elizabeth Burnett (b.1865); and Robert Nichol (b.1872), who married Mina Inglis. Robert (b.1828/9) born in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a shoemaker at about 16 Howegate, with his wife Janet being a boot-binder. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children baptised there included: William (b.1757), probably the plasterer in Hawick; Samuel (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1763); Isabel (b.1764); George (b.1766); and Agnes (b.1768). Thomas (1863–1948) born at Elffedge, son of John, who was an assistant gamekeeper there, and Margaret Best. He worked at Chatelherault, Kinmount, Croxton Park and

Fawley Court, before becoming gamekeeper at Wells estate. He later moved to Victoria, British Columbia, where he died. He married Jessie, daughter of Alexander Anderson, forester on the Kinmount estate in Dumfriesshire. William of Pinnacle (1719–98) 2nd son of John and Agnes Elliot. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. William (d.1815) plasterer in Hawick, who lived at the Sandbed. He is said to have been a descendant of the Sibbalds of Pinnacle and Whiterig and the earlier portioners of Eildon and Bowden. He was probably son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1757. He witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1792. He is listed as ‘Plaisterer’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Weir, who died in 1835. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Thomas (1784–1808); Ann (b.1786); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1787), who probably married Walter Gillies and was a widow at 56 High Street in 1851 and 1861; Peter (b.1789); Mary (b.1792); Mary (again, b.1793); William (b.1803), who became tenant on the Weens estate. The 1787 baptism was ‘before the Congregation’. He may have earlier married Katherine Grieve in Hawick in 1778. He was ‘Plaisterer Sandbed’ in 1815. Lt.-Col. William of Pinnacle and Whiterig (1771–1835), J.P., only son of John. He succeeded his grandfather William in 1798. He joined the army in about 1794, becoming Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, transferring to the 15th Foot as Lieutenant-Colonel in 1807. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. William (1803–80) son of Hawick plasterer William and Mary Weir, he was born in Wilton Parish and educated at Wilton School. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and in about 1823 moved to one of the Sclenty Hall cottages in Hobkirk, becoming a tenant farmer on the Weens estate. He then became a land measurer, in about 1840 was appointed Heritors’ Clerk and in 1846 was made Inspector of Poor and Collector for the Parish. He later became Registrar and Clerk of the School Board and ran the Hobkirk Library, being a great lover of books. He was also Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk at one time. He served as a factor for the Weens estate for a while. The 1841 census lists him as a stockingmaker at Sclenty Hall, and at 3 Weens Cottages in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Registrar of Births &c. Inspr. of Poor’ at Weens Cottages. He was Chairman at the Burns centenary celebration in Rulewater in 1859. Later in life he was postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, probably from the late 1860s, succeeding Miss Renwick. His daughter helped him as he got older, and after his death she became postmistress. In 1823 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. Their children included: Helen (b.1823), who married James Short; Mary (b.1825), who was unmarried; William (b.1827), who was a frameworker in Hawick; James (b.1832), who emigrated to Canada and died in Minnesota; Peter (b.1835–85), a mason in Hawick; Thomas (b.1839), a joiner; and Margaret (b.1845), who helped her father and then became post-mistress (also formerly written ‘Sybald’).

Sibbie Cartoosh (si-bee-kawr-toosh) n. former nickname for a woman in Hawick, presumably because she wore a cartoosh (see also cottouch).

side (sùd) n. former tower just south of Newcastleton (or Copshaw). The earliest records are in a c.1376 rental roll, for ‘Locus Willelmii de Syde’ (8 shillings) and ‘Locus Ade de Syde’ (16 shillings). It is unclear to which family these men belonged. It is possibly also the ‘Siders’ recorded as an Elliot residence in 1498. It was home of ‘Jock o the Side’ in the 16th century, probably an Armstrong who was immortalised in the ballad of the same name. ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ is listed among Liddesdale chief’s at the end of the 16th century by Monipennie and may have been Jock’s brother. ‘Sym’ and ‘Lancie’ Armstrong of ‘the Syde’ are recorded in 1601 and John ‘called of the Syd’ in 1642. William Thomas was tenant there in 1694, with William Little, Thomas Ovens and George Hewitson also listed. Adam Henderson was tenant in 1706, when 2 of his servants were rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath. William Little was there in 1707 when summoned for having a ‘penny wedding’. In a survey of 1718 it is stated that Shipshielden was also known as Side. The site may be the farmstead whose remains are on the east side of Kirk Hill, at the head of Etterton Sike, or perhaps further to the south, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. The farmstead has at least 3 buildings, a kiln-barn and several enclosures, although the remains of a tower have not been established. Another site, pointed out in the 19th century (and said to be marked by a solitary tree), is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Kirk Hill, has no traces of foundations (also spelled ‘Syde’ etc.; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Syd’ and on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Syd’).

side-be-side (sid-be-sid) adv. side-by-side – ‘…when billies fell seide-be-seide till the brac-face was traisselt’ [ECS].

sideaways see sideaways

Side Hill (sùd-hill) n. former name for a hill on the west side of the Liddel valley, near the lands of Side. It is probably the same as Kirk Hill, since it is described in the New Statistical Account in 1839 as having a square fort on top.

Siders (sùd-durz) n. nickname for William Elliot about 1500, the designation referring to his residence, which may have been ‘Side’.

sides-away (sìdz-a-wå) n., arch. former street game, similar to kick-the-can – ‘Sides-away, that was another popular thing’ [DaS].

These are denominated a pair o’ siles, Ayrs., Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘Cyle, the floor or lower part of a couple or rafter; synon. Soire, Roxb.’ [GW] (also written ‘cyle’ and ‘syle’).

the Silent Toast (thu-si-lin’-tost) n. traditional toast to the memory of James Douglas of Drumlanrig at the Cornet’s Dinner, taken in solemn silence. The origin and antiquity of this tradition is uncertain, but it is recorded at least as early as 1887.

siler (si-lur) n., arch. a strainer, particularly for milk.

sillar see siller

siller (si-lur) adj., arch. silver, made of silver, having a silvery lustre – ‘...I only scorn’d the ways Some take to catch thy sunny, siller blaze’ [JoHa], ‘Like siller munty-banks they spring ... ’ [JBS], ‘When simmer waves wi’ siller wing, On banks and bras the daisies spring ... ’ [DA], ‘The sillar saughs are in the bud, As down the glen we gang’ [JT], n. silver, money – ‘...with four 6 shilling pieces, and 12 pence, with the rest of small siller ... ’ [BR1642], ‘A party is fined for giving some of the border false, clipped, and counterfeit siller to James Badie ... ’ [JW1704], ‘Gif she be ane wa’, we wull bigg apon hir ane palece o’ siller’ [HSR], ‘...kiveret wi’ siller, an’ her feather wi’ yallo goed’ [HSR], ‘...The symbols o’ sic strength and peace That siller canna buy’ [WL], ‘We spend oor siller, and stake oor life, And syne o the gloamin’ faa’ [WL], ‘...And the siller horn a’ the Hunter’s Mune’ [DH], v., arch. to give money to – ‘A siller’t snirt makes quickest sail, To Hymen’s port’ [JoHa], ‘...Bids siller’d blockheads them despise’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘sillar’).

Sillerbithaa (si-lur-bi’-haw, -hal) n. older version of Silverbuthall, referring to the area previously called Easter Heap.

Sillerbit Hall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. this older name for Silverbuthall was adopted in 1861 for the lands purchased by Thomas Laidlaw (from Walter Wilson), and the mansion house he had built there in the period 1863–1866. The house was located roughly near the top of the present Churchill Road, with the approach from the main entrance at the top of Havelock Street. The architect was J.T. Rochead of Glasgow, and it was in the Scottish baronial style, with French elements. The house was used by Belgian refugees during WWI. It was demolished in 1946 when the council purchased the estate (being quite full of dry rot etc.). A window panel (with the Burgh crest) is preserved in the Museum. The gate lodge for the main house still exists, now numbered as 23 Havelock Street. A ‘wedge-shaped perforated hammer of rough surfaced sandstone’ found near here was donated to the Museum (see also Silverbuthall).

sillerless (si-lur-lis) adj., arch. silverless, impenecurious – ‘Then up wi’ the purse an’ the siller, The jinglin’ yellow for me; Than wed wi’ a sillerless bodie, I’d far rather want till I dee’ [JoHa].

siller Seterdi (si-lur-se’-ur-di) n., arch. the silvery seed tops of certain grasses.

siller shakers (si-lur-sha-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media.

silly (si-lee) adj., arch. poorly, weak, sickly – ‘She’s aye been a silly bairn; she’s never thriven sin she hed the mizzls’ [ECS], hapless, helpless – ‘Good; worthy; a sense peculiar to Liddesdale’ [JoJ].

silverless, impen-

silly man (si-lee-mawn) interj., arch. an expression of kindness and compassion, literally ‘poor fellow’ (noted by J. Jamieson).

Silurian shale (si-loo-ree-in-shal) n. shale formed in the third period of the Palaeozoic Era, about 405–425 million years ago. It is the dominant geology around Hawick, specifically referred to as the Hawick Group.

Silverbuthall (sil-vur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. an area at the north end of Hawick, roughly corresponding to the old estate of Easter Heip, and now containing a housing estate. The name occurs as early as 1694, although spelling varies. The lands were part of the estates of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold to James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who was Laird there in the mid-18th century. Small enclosures were separately sold to James and Walter Knox, and later acquired by Archibald Dunlop and then John Scott Chisholme. Andrew Marshall was tenant there in 1711. John Blyth was living there in 1723. George Scott in at least 1728–32, James Scott in at least 1743–48 and Robert Smith in 1791. Thomas Hall was farmer there in 1797. The house there was lived in by banker William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’), who died in 1808, when it was inherited by his nieces. The lands were valued at £80 in 1788 and 1811 (including the enclosures), when owned by James Scott. The lands were bought in about 1822 by James Scott, retired teacher from Yarrow, who died in the early 1840s. In 1841 there were 8 households living there. Small pieces of the lands were sold to Chisholme of Stiches and Robert Turnbull of Galalaw. A large part of the lands were purchased by Thomas Laidlaw in 1861, who had a new mansion built there (near the present Churchill Road), designed by J.T. Rohead, and including a lodge house (which still exists), with construction by local building firm George Tait. The house can be seen in an aerial photograph of 1933. This estate was acquired by the Council in 1945 for new housing in the north of town, with the ‘prefabs’ being constructed first, and the present day housing from the mid-1960s. It comprises Silverbuthall Road, Branxholme Road and adjoining streets (the word refers to the placement of the butts, i.e. archery targets, of Wilton Parish being sited near there, and the practice of having a silver arrow as shooting prize; it is ‘Silverboothall’ in 1797 and ‘Silverbooth’ in 1808; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Sillerbit Hall).

Silverbutha (sil-vur-bi’haw) n. another name for the mansion house called Sillerbit Haa.

Silverbuthall Lodge (sil-vur-bi’hal-luj) n. former gate lodge for the mansion at Silverbuthall. It was probably designed by J.T. Rohead (who designed the main house, which was built 1863–6), and survives at No. 23 Havelock Street, the corner with Wellfield Road. It is in a striking Scottish Baronial style, with a circular stair tower and conical-capped gatepiers. It is a grade B listed building.

Silverbuthall Road (sil-vur-bi’hal-rød) n. main road through the Silverbuthall housing scheme, with houses built in 1965.

Silver Field (sil-vur-feeld) n. local name for a piece of ground to the north of Ettleton churchyard, said to be where coins were sometimes found. It was perhaps the manse of the old kirk.

the Silver Flush (θu-sil-vur-flush) n. former name for a spring at the lower end of the area where Newcastleton was built. It was said to be named after the ‘palfrey’ of a young lady (who was to marry the Laird of Whithaugh) stopped, with its silver bells being heard from some distance (as noted in ‘ Beauties of the Border’).

the Silver Spurs (θu-sil-vur-spurz) n. annual race for married men at the Common Riding, since at least the 1840s.

Silver Street (sil-vur-stree’) n. narrow street alongside the west bank of the Slitrig. It is one of the oldest streets in Hawick, although most of the present buildings are Victorian, and the name is not recorded before 1801. Up until the latter part of the 18th century it was part of the main road through Hawick, and houses there were referred to as on ‘the King’s High Street’. It was flooded in the great Slitrig flood of 1767, when several buildings were damaged. It became more of a back street with the erection of Drumlanrig Bridge in 1776, and moreso with the demolition of the Auld Brig in 1851. The banker ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver) lived there, and presumably had his banking office there too. A sketch of ‘old court, Silver Street’ exists by T.H. Laidlaw in the late 19th century. J.P. Alison designed alterations at Nos. 2 and 3. (the origin is obscure, with some suggestion that it is a reference to ‘Auld Cash’, similarity between his name ‘Oliver’ and ‘Silver’ perhaps not being a coincidence either; however, if the name is older than that, it may relate to the silver arrow prize at the Hawick ‘butt’s’).

Sim (sim) n. arch. former short form of the Christian name Simon, popular in the 16th and 17th centuries (sometimes spelled ‘Sym’; cf. Simmie and Syme).

Sim (sim) n. George (20th C.) foreman at Innes, Henderson and later Braemar. His wife was Jessie and their children were: Shonnie; Mary Shortreed (‘Myra’), Provost of Hawick; and Vera. The family lived on Ramsay Road, Moat Crescent and lastly Burnfoot Road. He was reported in the national press for trying to break into the fever hospital to see his daughter Myra after reading her being named in a list of typhoid-related deaths.

Sime (sīm) n. James Boyd (1865–1953) son of William of Galashiels and Ellen Boyd, and brother of William Boyd. He was a manufacturer who was on the Town Council in the early years of the 20th century and lived at Dunira. He became a partner in Pringle's in 1906 and resigned in 1929. He was one of the earliest players of tennis in Hawick and also shared an early interest in cinematography with David Gaylor. He fought in WWI, but when his brother died in 1917 he became Chairman of Sime, Williamson & Co. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's. On the 1891 census he was living at Ivy Bank, Fenwick Park, with his mother and his only sister, Ellen. He married Williamina ('Mina') daughter of dyer John Turnbull. Saida (?–?) gave a gift that helped build the Youth Centre in 1970.

William Boyd (1867–1917) born in Galashiels, eldest son of William, who was partner in Sime, Sanderson & Co., Botany Mills, Galashiels. In 1889 he became partner in Sime, Williamson & Co., Weensland Mills. He lived at the Limes and then had the 'Coille' built for him. He married Margaret Elliot (sometimes incorrectly written 'Syme').

Simey (si-mee) n., poet. the Devil – 'There is ane at the Carlenrigg. Might soften the heart o' auld Simey, But gin ye want lasses that's trig, gae up the burn fa'ther to Limey' [JoHa].

simmer an wunter (si-nur-an-wun-tur) v., arch. to be long-winded, go into a subject at length, haggle – 'It serrd naething for ti stert simmeren-an-wuntereen'[ECS], 'It'll serr naething now ti stert simmeren-an-wuntereen'[ECS] (also written 'simmer-an-wunter').

Simmie (si-nee) n., arch. former pet form of the name Simm, also used as an informal name for the Devil – '...And ane and a' o' them they vow and declare, 'Twas Simmy, in shape o' a bodie'[JoHa] (cf. Sim and Syme).

Simmie’s Pottie (si-meez-po-ee) n. popular name for a block of freestone on the east side of Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably Simmie refers to the Devil.

Simmons (si-minz) n. Anne Vernona of Tushielaw (1797–1837) daughter of Philip and Vernona Estwick. She was grand-daughter of Henry Peter Simmons and Ann Kirtone and great-grand-daughter of Barbara Anderson of Tushielaw. She inherited the farms of Tushielaw and Hislop on the death of her great-uncle John Kirtone Anderson in 1816. She married Benjamin Thomas Gaskin in 1818, and had their only child (a son of the same name) after her husband’s early death. Her son took the additional surname Anderson when he inherited.

Simon (si-min) n. (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in a document of about 1206, re-establishing the church of Hassendean. There was a Precentor of Glassow with the same name recorded at about the same time (also written 'Simeon').

Simon (si-min) n. (13th C.) brewer listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as 'Symone braciatore'. He could have been related to the Rector of Lilliesleaf.

simple (sim-pul) n., arch. a herb, plant material used as an ingredient in a medicine – 'Her mother, — Scott, was great for simples (herbs), and belonged Deanburnhaugh'[JHH].

simpliciter (sim-pli-si-ter) adv., arch. simply, unconditionally – '...exonerat quit claims and simpliciter discharges the saidis two baylyeas ...'[BR1701] (a legal term).

Simpson (si-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener at Langlands House in 1788, when he was working for Thomas Elliot. He was still gardener there in 1791, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 he was gardener at Teviotbank in Minto Parish, working for David Simpson. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Overraw, along with William, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Andrew (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Scott, and whose daughter Janet was born in Hawick in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1743, with witnesses ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was married to Margaret Turnbull when their son John was baptised in 1746. Andrew (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1794 when his son John died. Dr. Andrew (20th C.) born in Kirkcaldy, he graduated in Medicine from Edinburgh University in 1923 and about 1924 took over the practice of Dr. Dixon in Hawick. He was Medical Officer for Hawick R.F.C. He was a founder President of Hawick Rotary Club and served as Chairman of the local British Legion. He retired in 1967 after being a Hawick G.P. for over 40 years. Dr. Andrew Rutherford ‘Ford’ (1932–2002) born in Hawick, son of local doctor Andrew. He was in the R.A.M.C. as part of National Service, then trained as a doctor, coming to practise with his father in Bridge Street in 1964. He served as President of the Hawick Rotary Club, team doctor and President of Hawick R.F.C., Callants’ Club President, Chairman of Douglas Haig Court Committee. He was also known as a popular reciter of Border poetry. Archibald (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as ‘archibaldi symson’. Archibald (16th C.) Reader of Glasgow Diocese who supplied Lilliesleaf parish in the period 1575–82, the last pre-Reformation preacher to preach there. His name is spelled ‘Symson’ and ‘Simsoun’. In 1575 Thomas Dun-canso was Minister (also for Bowden, Langnewton and Melrose), i.e. he had most of the living of the parishes. In 1582 he is recorded as one of 6 preachers from southern Scotland who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, then excommunicated in 1588 and threatened with death in 1590 if they did not stop their practices. This may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation. Ashley (1973– ) one of two women to publicly attempt to join Ride-outs in 1996. Bailie ?? Bailie of Hawick towards the end of the 19th century. David of Teviotbank (d.1806) son of Rev. James, minister of Wilton. He was ‘of Know’ in 1788 when mentioned as someone about to be added to the list of voters for Roxburghshire and said to be connected with Thomas Ogilvie and probably a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the election. He is recorded as ‘David Simson of Know’ when he was taxed in Minto Parish for having 2 female servants in 1789 and 1 in 1790; in 1791 he was ‘of Teviotbank’ when he was taxed for 2 female servants in Minto Parish. He also had a male servant at Knowe in 1790, 2 at Teviotbank in 1791–93 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. In the period 1792–8 he was taxed for owning a carriage and in 1789–97 for having 2 carriage or saddle horses. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is also recorded as owner of 5 farm horses. He was still at Know when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He had the house at Teviotbank designed by Robert Burn about 1791. He was listed as owner of the lands of Knowe and Knowetownhead on the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798 and 1799 (perhaps as a Justice of the Peace for the county). In 1791 he married Margaret, daughter of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. Their children included Gen. Sir James (1792–1868). His will is recorded in 1808 and his estate was granted to his widow Margaret, along with Rev. William of Edinburgh (his brother). After his death there was an ongoing dispute regarding money he claimed he was owed from the Nabob of Arcot and the Ameer ul Omrah. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. David B., F.R.C.O. (1886–1941) born in Kilmarnock and raised in Dundee. On 1920 he became the first professional organist at St. George’s Kirk, having previously been at the Parish Church of Leslie in Fife. He was also a private music teacher in Hawick, and was conductor of Hawick Choral Society in the 1920 and 30s. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David M. (b.1861) son of George, farmer at Bedrule. He studied engineering at Edinburgh University then worked in several positions, including as constructing engineer on the Edinburgh Suburban Railway. In 1887 he went to Buenos Aires, then in 1891 to Havana, where he was awarded the Spanish Order of Merit for working during the rebellion. From 1896–1906 he was chief engineer of the Buenos Aires Western Railway. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for George Scott in 1671, along with John Scott, and another for John Blake in 1673, along with Walter Purdom. Francis ‘Frank’ (1888–1964) born at 10 Trinity Street, he was son of mill foreman Thomas B. He was church organist at Newcastleton and later at Minto. He also gave music lessons in this home at 4 Earl Street. He wrote the music for ‘Teviotdale’. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George ‘Geordie’ of the Raws (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Geordie Symson in the Rawis’ when listed in 1576 among men who should not have been freed from ward. He is probably the ‘Gorth Simson’ listed in 1583 among supporters of Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded as ‘George Symson of the Raw’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He is recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. Probably the same George is listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is also recorded in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others had raped lands in England at King Water; others riding with him include Will Elliot of the Steele and Anthony Elliot of the Binks, suggesting he was from Liddesdale. He is probably the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. George (18th C.) factor to the estates of Scott of Harden in the period 1757–83. George (18th C.) son of Alexander, minister of Monymusk, he was made Honorary Burgess in 1751. George (d.c.1889) born at Oxnam Row. His father was David, while his grand-father George and great-grandfather John farmed at Bloodylaws in Oxnam Parish. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule from 1846, with his trustees continuing from 1889 until it was sold by the Eliotts to the Ushers in 1898. The farm was drained significantly during his tenure. This branch of the family often used the ‘Simson’ spelling. He married Emily Roy and their son was David M. Geraldine (1921–2010) great-great-granddaughter of Pringle’s founder Robert Pringle, she was born in Edinburgh to James Muir and Francis Pringle. She was sent to Hawick while her father recovered from injuries sustained during WWI, and raised by her maternal grandparents at Woodnorton. She attended school in Aberdeen and was a ‘land girl’ there in WWII, travelling around on horseback. With her mother she ran Fetteresso Castle as a temperance hotel; her grandfather Robert Pringle came to live with them in his last few years. She married Maurice ‘Chrystal’ Simpson, who was minister of Alford’s Tullinessle Church, and they had a daughter Maureen. The family later moved to Muchalls Castle, which they restored. She helped found the Architectural Heritage Society of Scotland and was a keen photographer of old houses. She was a long-time friend of the author Nigel Tranter. In about 2000 she returned to Hawick to present the family bible to the Museum, since she was essentially the last of the Pringle dynasty. Harold (?–?) Council employee who was Common Riding Secretary from about 1966 until Reorganisation. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Mathison and their children included: Bessie (b.1697). He may be the James ‘in ye toum of Hawick’ whose son John married Janet Ker in Hawick in 1718. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed ‘oust the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott, ‘brother to Goldilands’ in 1689. He was also witness to a baptism for shoemaker Robert Allan in 1709. He could also be the merchant who in 1709 was ‘called Latin [or something similar] Simson’ when his daughter Marion was baptised, with witnesses James Falsyde and Andrew Riddell. He may be the carrier who witnessed baptism in 1711 for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott, for smith John Scott in 1716 and for gardener James Dunn in 1719. He is probably the ‘tenant’ who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for shoemaker Patrick Hardie. Probably the same James was recorded in 1731 when he was paid for ‘lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the wither-kok in 1728’. His daughter Janet married brewer James Roger in 1724. He may be the merchant who married (assuming it was a second marriage, otherwise there are 2 generations here) Marion Stewart in 1706 and whose children included: Marion (b.1709); Caleb (b.1711); John (b.1713); Isabella (b.1716); Jean (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1721 were Bailie James Deans and tailor Robert Wilson. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living at Ormiston. His children included: John and William (b.1714); William (again, b.1715). Probably the same James was gardener in Cavers.
in 1727 and 1729 and also at Cavers in 1736 (perhaps marrying for a second time), with additional children were John (b.1727), Katherine (b.1729), William (b.1731), Helen (b.1734) and Gilbert (b.1736). James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Boa in Minto in 1721. Her father was Patrick Boa. He could be the same man as the gardener in Cavers. Rev. James (1708–71) Minister of Wilton Parish 1738–71. He was son of John, minister of Morebattle. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1737 and presented to Wilton by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch soon afterwards. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton in September 1737 and another in February 1738, suggesting he was already in the area. He was ordained at Wilton in 1738 and remained until his death. Wilton Common was divided during his time as minister, with the lands of Priestrig being reserved for the minister. In 1748 he arranged for a piece of his land (near Burnfoot Mill) to be exchanged for a piece of the Duke of Buccleuch's ‘Trinity lands', lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot. He is recorded paying the window tax at ‘the mance' in Wilton Parish in 1748. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton for John Miller in 1759. In about 1763 his rebuke of dissenters during a baptism of a child of James Scott (farmer at Boonraw), convinced Scott to leave the established church, which led to the forming of the Green Kirk in Hawick. The oldest existing Wilton communion token is from 1763, during his incumbency. In 1743 he married Anne Cranstoune, daughter of the minister of Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1743), who died young; William (b.1744), who became minister of the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh; John (again, b.1745); David (b.1747) of Know and Teviotbank;

James (b.1748), perhaps also of Teviotbank; Anne (b.1748), who died young; and Andrew (b.1751), who also died young. The witnesses in 1747 and 1748 were William Scott of Whitehaugh and John Chisholme of Stirches, and in 1751 were Kirk Elders Robert and Walter Scott. James (18th C.) BAILIE who, along with John Nixon, in 1793 presented a bible for use by subsequent Magistrates in St. Mary's Kirk. It was moved to the Old Parish in 1849 and was there for at least another half-century. He was also Bailie in the very early 1800s. Gen. Sir James (1792–1868) grandson of Rev. James Simpson, son of David Simpson of Teviotbank and Mary Eliott of Borthwickbrae.

He was educated at Edinburgh University and commissioned in the Grenadier Guards in 1811.
He served in several campaigns, being severely wounded at Quatre Bras, and promoted through the ranks as he served in Mauritius, Bengal and Sind. He went to the Crimea as a Major-General in 1851, becoming acting senior officer and was promoted to General in 1852, along with receiving the G.C.B. He handed over command soon after and retired near Bury St. Edmunds. He was awarded many honours including the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour and being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick while staying at the Tower Hotel in 1856 after visiting his cousin A.E. Lockhart at Borthwickbrae. He was said to be the tallest officer in the British Army. In 1839 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir Robert Dundas, but she died in the following year. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1674 he was fined for not allowing Bailie Purdom to take his horse to ride to Jedburgh on the Town's business. He could be the John who was married to Isobell Brown and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included John (b.1669) and Francis (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were John Scott and John Hardie. He may be the 'Jon Sym-son, skinner' recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St.

Jude's Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote.
He was listed in 1684 among many men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th/18th C.) son of James.
In 1718 he married Janet, daughter of deceased gardener Robert Ker. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. It seems likely he was son of merchant James. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for James Rodger and Janet Simpson (probably his sister). In 1728 he was witness for Robert Renwick in Sandbed. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of William Little. Their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Janet (b.1731); Janet (again, b.1737); Margaret (again, b.1737); James (b.1740); and William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver James Roger and shoemaker Patrick Hardie. John (18th C.) recorded in 1751

as 'lying at the Point of Death in all probability'.
This was in the Hawick Session records, where there was a discussion about what to do with 'the Horse belonging to the Session'. His connection with the Session is unclear. John (18th C.)
weaver in Hawick. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Leyden. John (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he was paid by the Town Council 'for a standard for salt from Jedburgh'. It is unclear what his occupation was.
John (d.1794) tailor in Hawick, son of Andrew. He could be the John (b.1746) son of Andrew and Margaret Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Dimpleskow as owner of a saddle horse on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as a farm horse in 1797. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. John (18th/19th C.) organist and precentor at Kirkton Kirk from 1895. Mary (18th C.) midwife in Hawick. In 1759 she was a witness for the baptism of a child of dyker George Sandie. It is extremely unusual for a woman to act as witness, suggesting there must have been a special reason. Robert ‘Smith’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is listed as ‘roberti symson vocatis smyt’. He was also among men who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is listed as ‘Robert Simson, callit Smyth’. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of West Riddell. A dispute with his servant Walter Stoddart from c.1823 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1825 a letter records how Walter Stoddart was hired as his servant at Hawick Fair and there are further letters about the age dispute. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton. Thomas (1833/4–98) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1916, aged 82. Their children included Andrew (1860/1–1933), who married Euphemia (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastleton, who died in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married to Euphan Laidlaw, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included John (b.1813) and Jessie (b.1819). William (b.c.1805) from Galashiels, he was a tailor in Hawick. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 29 High Street in 1841. His wife (who died before 1851) was Mary and their children included Walter, Helen, William, Robert and David. William (b.1818/9) from Kelso, he worked for James Kennedy, bookbinder. In about 1870 he started his own bookbinders and printers at 9 Oliver Place. This was continued by his sons Ebenezer and Walter as E.W. & W. Simpson, which can be seen in a photograph of 1889. The firm was later incorporated into Deans and Simpsons. William (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastleton, who died at Burgh-by-Sands. He married Margaret Oliver, who died on the Isle of Wight in 1898, aged 29.

Rev. William (1863–1946) born at Elves, Elgin, son of Charles and Margaret Edwards. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities. He was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1891, and was minister in Australia and New Zealand before returning to Scotland in 1904. He was minister at Downfield and then at Maud, before being traslated to St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married Sarah Dare (who died in 1940) and their son William Nightingale was a doctor in Stow (formerly also ‘Simson’, as well as ‘Simsoun’, ‘Simpson’, ‘Symson’, ‘Symsons’, etc.).

Simpson’s (sim-sinz) n. D. Simpson Ltd., a tobacconist’s at 60 High Street in the mid-20th century. It was an Edinburgh company, which took over from William Sharp just before WWII and continued into the 1960s. The shop had a striking red and black vitralite frontage and was also known for its blend of pipe tobacco called ‘Teviotdale’.

Simpson’s Hill (sim-sinz-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, just to the east of Inner Hill. It reaches a height of 308 m.

Sim’s Hob (simz-höb) n. nickname for Robert Scott around 1600.

Sim’s Knowe (simz-now) n. hilly area just south of Harwood House, being on the northern slope of Templehall Hill.

Simson see Simpson

sin (siu) adv. soon – ‘she sin got a chance ti prove hersel’; ‘A’ll sin tell ce’, ‘It’s mony a month sin oo last saw ye in this gate-end’ [JEDM], ‘... And sune we’ll baith come back again and ring, ring the bell’ [WE], ‘That someday sune, Hit doon – mei abuse ... ’ [JEDM], ‘Oo’ve been kens where aa sin than’ [ECS], ‘But ma trials ir sune forgotten ... ’ [IWL], sooner – ‘... Aye comes there, sune or later’ [DH] (also spelled ‘suin’, ‘sune’ etc.; also pronounced sin in earlier times, with what E.C. Smith describes as a ‘kind of medium’ value UISound).

sin (sin) prep., conj., adv., arch. since – ‘Sin’ first thy varied blending check Was by her worn ... ’ [JoHa], ‘... And sin’ they’ve aa taen their looks frae you, There’s nane that’ll come their gate to woo’ [WL] (also written ‘sin’).

since (sins) adv. ago – ‘...twae or threi month since’ [CoH] (more common than in English, where ‘long since’ is the only frequent example).

Sinclair (sing-klær) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Singlar’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn when he inherited his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. John was also a witness, and so perhaps related. Archibald (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1791–93, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as groom at Minto and in 1797 was a gardener there. Beatrix (16th C.) married William Alemoor and had children with him. She secondly married William Scott, brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. In about 1530 Walter Scott granted his brother William (along with her and her children with her first husband) half of Lilliesleaf Mill. Charles Lord Sinclair (1768–1863) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Rutherford. He succeeded to the family titles in 1776, becoming 13th Lord. He joined the Royal Scots Regiment of Foot at age 16 and in 1790 raised an independent company. He switched to the 15th Regiment of Foot and became Lieutenant-Colonel, quitting the Army in 1802, but becoming Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berwickshire Militia. In 1807 he was elected as a representative peer of Scotland then was involved with the Haddington Militia. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1802 he married Mary Agnes, daughter of James Chisholme of Stonedge. On the death of his father-in-law in 1812 he inherited the Stonedge estate. His wife died 2 years later and Their eldest son James became the 14th lord Sinclair. Their other children were: Matthew, who died aged 21; Charles, who became a Royal Navy Commander and lived at Eyemouth; and Susan. He secondly married Isabella Mary, youngest daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse in Roxburghshire and had 3 more children: John, who died aged 22; Eleanor; and Jane Elizabeth. He lived to the age of 95. Charles William Lord Sinclair (b.1831) eldest son of James, he was the 15th Lord. He was Colonel in the 57th Regiment, serving in Crimea, being present at Balaklava and Inkerman, in the Bosphorus, the Indian Mutiny and the New Zealand War, receiving several medals. He retired from the Army in 1878 and lived in Berwickshire, where he was a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant, as well as being a representative peer. Among his titles was also Laird of Stonedge in Rulewater. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1870 he married Margaret Jane Younger, daughter of James Murray of Bryanston Square, London. Their sons were Archibald James Murray and Charles Henry Murray, both of whom served in the Army, and they also had 3 daughters, Ada Jane, Margaret Helen and Georgina Violet. Charles ‘Charlie’ (19th C.) resident of Lintalee. He could be the same man as Charles, Lord Sinclair. He was instrumental in forming the new pack of Jedforest Hounds in about 1882. He served as Huntsman 1888–92. George became a Director at Pringle’s in 1947. James Lord Sinclair (1803–80) eldest son of Charles and Mary Agnes Chisholme, from whom he inherited the Stonedge estate in Rulewater. He was a heritor.
of Hobkirk Parish, and in 1836 was referred to as being ‘of Greenriver’. He was the 14th Lord Sinclair. He was Captain of the Grenadier Guards and became a Scottish representative peer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1830 he married Jane, eldest daughter of Archibald Little of Shabden Park, Surrey, and she died in 1887, aged 75. Their children were: Charles William, who succeeded; Archibald, who became a naval Commander; James Chisholme, in the Madras Civil Service; Lockhart Matthew; Mary Agnes; and Helen. James H. (Associate Minister at Selkirk, linked vice; Lockhart Matthew; Mary Agnes; and Helen. Janet (d.1667) married James Brydon and had a son Andrew. She later married Rev. Thomas Thomson, minister of Hobkirk. In 1618, along with her son Andrew and Hector Shiel of Kirknowe she had a ‘wadset’ over lands adjacent to the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk. This was registered in 1623. She was buried in Greyfriars churchyard in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded as being ‘in Mynto’ in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came the King’s Will for reasonably concealing and Stouthrief of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. This was probably a cache of English gold coins, hidden by Sinclair, but claimed by the King as treasure trove. Although said to be ‘in Minto’, the Laird of Bedrule was specifically his surety (while William Langlands acted for 2 of the others), perhaps suggesting that he was from Rulewater; the others were John Turnbull, Thomas Bell, George Turnbull and John Aitkin (with William Burn’s name also given, but scored out). Perhaps he was the same John recorded earlier in 1493 when the Sheriff of Roxburgh was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; this John was cited again at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. Possibly the same ‘John Singlar’ was on the panel that met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Possibly the same ‘Johanne Sinclair’ was witness to the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; there he is ‘Halis signifero’, i.e. standard-bearer for Hepburn of Hailes. Perhaps the same ‘Johannis sinclar in baronia de caveris’ had remission in 1502 for the murder of John Moffat, with George Turnbull of Hallrule as his surety. Thomas (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1618, he was presented as minister to Abbotrule Parish in mid-1618 and ordained there early the following year. However, he resigned before the middle of 1623, the reason being that he had ‘gone to London with the Prior of Coldingham’s children’ (presumably as their tutor). A man of the same name is recorded in a deed of 1608 as schoolmaster at Oakwood; this could be the same man or perhaps a close relative. William (19th C.) hired as a compulsory attendance officer in Hawick about 1873, following the requirements of the Education Scotland Act of 1872. He was thus the town’s first truant officer! His main job was as a stockmaking (written ‘St. Clair’, ‘Sinclare’ and ‘Sinclar’ in early times).

Singdean (sing-deen) n. farm and former ham- let between the ‘Note o the Gate’ and Saughtree. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Sougdon’ (with a value of 12 merks) on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 roll it is listed as ‘Sangdane’, with the same value, and William Elliot being the tenant. There were originally separ- ate farms of Over and Nether Singdean, which were part of the lands in upper Liddesdale held by Jedburgh Abbey. By at least 1632 the lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Adam Thomson was tenant there in 1694. The farm was included in those surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718: it covered 1770 acres, bounded by Hudshouse, Dawstonburn and farms belonging to other landowners, and with the farmhouse in the same location as the modern one. Walter Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, known for making a particular plaster that was said to cure cancer. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. Jeffrey reports that in the late 1850s a rudely carved stone cross, nearly 4 feet long, was found at a pass near here and in the possession of Mr. Stavert of Saughtree. In 1793 Sir Walter Scott passed here, and heard a coughing cow, which the judge in an earlier court case had ruled impossible. Thomas Armstrong was shepherd there in at least 1797–99 and John Oliver in 1801. Walter Scott was shepherd from at least the 1830s until his death in 1853 and his sons Andrew and James after him. The farm was part of those tenanted by John Elliot until his death in 1897. William Telfe was shepherd in at least 1898–1901. The farm was let to S.C. Gibbons in 1910 and sold by the Buccleuch Estates to James Beattie in 1920. In 1940 a lorry carrying 75 sheep left the road and plunged down the hill near here. Robert Kyle bought the farm from Andrew Beattie in 1963 and in 1967 it was purchased by Andrew Stavert Turnbull. In 1973 the land was purchased by Mr. & Mrs. Harris, who 2 years later sold it to Margaret Thompson, who left it to her daughter Stephanie in 2007. Chista and Del Dobson purchased it in 2012 and developed the ‘Alpnhaus’ chalet for use as bed and breakfast accommodation (also written ‘Singden’ and ‘Singdon’; the origin is probably Old English ‘sengan demu’, for ‘valley cleared by burning’; it first occurs unambiguously as ‘Singdane’ in 1541, is ‘Singdoun’ in 1632 and ‘Singden’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Singden in Liddisdeill’ on Pont’s map, ‘Singdenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map of Roxburghshire and ‘Singlenn’ on the Liddesdale map; it is ‘Singden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Singdon’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Singdean Burn (sing-deen-burn) n. stream in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale, rising on Fanna Hill and flowing roughly south-east to become part of the Caddrourn Burn near Singdean.

Singley

Singdean Hope (sing-deen-hop) n. former name for area near Singdean. It was reported in 1890 that a landslide here had blocked the Dawston Burn, chocking the Liddell downstream and resulting in the deaths of a large number of salmon and other fish. The name presumably applies to an upper part of the Singdean Burn.

the Singdean Plaister (th-in-sing-deen-plaes-tur) n. poultice developed by a family at Singdean, which was supposed to cure external cancers. The recipe was said to have been learned by shepherd Walter Scott (c.1790–1853) from a French doctor. It consisted of perhaps as few as 3 herbs, all (or most) of which grew commonly near Singdean and were dried in a ‘keb-hoose’ on the hillside. At one point the cure became so popular that the shepherd used to hide out when visitors came to the cottage. It was said that large sums of money were offered for the secret, but the family never divulged it. Walter Scott’s notebook is in the museum in Newcastleton, but with the critical pages torn out. The secret was passed on to Walter’s son Andrew and then to Andrew’s sons Adam and Walter. A man called John Wood from Jedburgh, who also applied curative plasters, was said to possess the same recipe, but confessed that he did not know one of the missing ingredients. By 1940 it was said that the recipe was held by Miss Mary Scott, Fernlea, Bowden and later by a descendant in Arbroath.

Singled sheep’s heid (sinjd-sheeps-heed) n., arch. formerly popular dish, made by taking a sheep’s head, burning the wool off it, and then serving it in various ways – ‘...there was a singed sheep’s-head on the table which had been ‘got up’ for next day’s dinner’ [WNK].

Singel (sing-ul) adj. single – ‘there wasni a singel Teri among them’, also used to refer to an item ordered in a fish and chip shop without chips – ‘A’l hev a fish supper an a singel haggis’ (note the lack of hard g).

Singel-end (sing-ul-end) n., arch. a one-roomed cottage – ‘The single end next door was occupied by a Mrs. Turnbull and she was the mother of the original Turnbull of Haddon & Turnbull’ [JeC] (see also yin-end).

Singit (sing-ee’, -i’) adj., arch. stunted in growth, shrivelled – ‘Let them alane, ye singit-like shurf’ [HAST1868], ‘The Hawick meaning of singeet is lean, emaciated, ill-fed’ [ECS], ‘ye singit thing’ [GW].

Singit-lookin (sing-ee’-loo-kin) adj., arch. having the appearance of being puny or shrivelled – ‘ye singit-lookin’ wasp, shurf’ [GW] (also ‘singit-like’).

Singleton (sing-gul-tin) n. A. telegraph and station agent in Newcastleton in the 1860s.

Singley (sinj-lee??) n. former farmstead at Singley Brae near Penchrise. It once formed part of Cavers estate, and is recorded being resigned by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. It is listed as part of Cavers estate in a charter of 1511. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It formed part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs in 1678 and was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (the origin is probably ‘clearing made by burning’ from the Old English ‘sengan’, to scorch, plus ‘leah’, a wood; the name is recorded as ‘Senglee’ in the 14th century, is ‘Singlic’ and ‘Synglic’ in 1511, ‘Singlees’ in 1678 and is transcribed as ‘Finglio’ in 1687).

Singley Brae (sinj-lee-brā??) n. area between Penchris and the Maidens, on the slopes of the Pike. The Catrail passes down the slope, and there are earthworks and the remains of a farmstead nearby, presumably Singley farm.

Singlie (sinj-lee-???) n. farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, roughly opposite Hyndhope, with Singliehill End a little to the west. It was Crown lands from at least 1456, being assigned to Turnbulls in the 1480s, Homes in the 1490s and the Kers of Caverton and Cessford in 1499. John Reid was tenant there in 1494/5 when accused of rievie crimes. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1502 it is recorded that 50 sheep were stolen from John Dalgleish there. In a rental roll of 1541 the tenancy was claimed by the Laird of Cessford, ‘occupiit be the kings gudis’ paying £24 yearly. The lands belonged to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1543 when they were raided by a group of English and Scotsmen, taking 1400 sheep and 2 prisoners, with 2 people killed in the process. John Lauder was there in 1579. Sir William Scott was granted the lands by John, Earl of Annandale in about 1605, although they appear to have been purchased by Simon Scott of Bonnington in 1593, confirmed in 1607. Robert Scott, son of William in Milsington gained the lease in about 1712, and his descendants farmed there until about 1879 – ‘There’s daft Jock Gray o’ Gilmanscleugh, And his descendants farmed there until about 1879 – ‘There’s daft Jock Gray o’ Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o’ the Inch; And when ye come to Singly, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG].

sinker (sing-kur) n. a shaped thin plate for depressing the loops between the needles in a knitting machine. These can be for forming loops by pushing the yarn, or for holding the already formed web while the needles make the loops.

sinner (si-nur) adv. rather, sooner – ‘A wad sinner gaun haim is stey here’, ‘...Suner a canny gowk Than pride rowed in the glaur’ [WL], ‘...A’ the rest was a waste o’ time Till the back-end o’ July, When he saw it was suner derk at nicht; ‘Oo’re get’t in!’ says Dye’ [DH] (also spelled ‘suner’ etc.).

sinsyne (sin-sin) prep., arch., poet. since then, since that time, ever since – ‘But sic a queer scene ne’er sin’ syne hae I seen. Nor afore, sin’ the day o’ my birth, man’ [JoHa], ‘...An’ he’s aye keepit it sin’ syne, – Retailing spirits, teas, an’ wine’ [RDW], ‘There hasna been a carriage at oor door nayther afore nor sin’ syne’ [WNK], ‘...excep’ this ae strange sight aw ne’er afore nor sin’ syne saw anythog supernatural’ [BCM1880], ‘The witch didna deec, as michet hae bee hoppit, But ever sinsyne her cantrips were stoppit’ [BM1901], ‘Hello callant! What heh ee eer chafits tied up for? A focker gaed inti ma lug, i herrst, an’ it’s aye been sin sinseine’ [ECS], ‘Lang years sinsyne haw passed away, and muckle joy and woe...’ [JCG], ‘The Reuch Sike... a guid name for a fiddler’s howff, I’ve ay thocht, sin syne’ [DH], ‘...And they have floochd In package tours sinsyne’ [WL] (also written ‘sin syne’, ‘sineine’, etc.).

Sinton see Synton

Sinton (sin-‘in) n. county town of San Patricio county in Texas, named after David Sinton, major shareholder of the local pasture company that gave the land. His name in turn probably comes from the estate near Ashkirk.

Sinton (sin-‘in) n. Adam (b.1819) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Isabella Scott. He worked as a grocer in Hawick, and later as a labourer. Along with mill-worker John Forsyth, he was found guilty in 1865 of stealing coins from Hawick Museum, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Waugh, blacksmith at Chesters. Their children included William, Robert and Elizabeth. His wife is recorded as a widow in 1874. Alexander (12th/13th C.) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew who was granted the lands and title by William the Lion. He witnessed several charter for Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century. There was confirmation of lands in Hownam in 1195–98, a gift of lands in Lessuden in 1199, confirmation of lands in Clifton 1201–09.
gift of several churches by King William 1204–07, a gift of Sorrowlessfield 1208–12, a dispute between Melrose Abbey and Earl of Dunbar in 1208, a charter for the lands of Fainington in about 1214, lands in Lilliesleaf 1214–40, lands in Elliston 1220–43 and a gift of Maxton in 1226. He was succeeded by another Andrew. Alexander (d.1292/3) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew, the 3rd Sheriff. He may be the Alexander who had a charter of the lands of Todrig from Aymer de Maxwell in about 1260. He may be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Alexander of Moravia in 1280. He was mentioned as Sheriff of Selkirk in 1293. His wife was Marie, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as holder of the lands. In 1296 she complained that she had been a widow for 3 years, and pleaded with the English King for her dower lands of 20 merks. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Isabella, who married Edward Keith and succeeded her brother. Andrew (12th/13th C.) appointed Sheriff of Selkirk by William the Lion. He is referred to as ‘Andrew de Synton’. On his appointment he gave up the farm associated with Roxburgh Castle; this explains why Synton estate afterwards lay within Selkirkshire, even although it was surrounded by Roxburghshire. 4 generations of his descendants were also Sheriffs (as described at an inquest in 1305). In about 1250 he witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory, where he is recorded as ‘Andrea de Sintun’. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (13th C.) son of Alexander. He was the 3rd member of the family to be Sheriff of Selkirk. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (d.c.1300) probably son of Alexander and brother of Isabella. He held the title of Sheriff of Selkirk as well as the Synton estates. In 1296 he was captured at Dunbar and sent to Fotheringay Castle as a prisoner, along with several other Scottish noblemen. In 1298 there was a command from Edward I for payment to his jailsors. However, he died in prison, and his heir was his sister Isabella (although separately suggested to have been his wife Isabel, so this is either confusion or there were 2 women with the same name). The family’s history is described in an inquisition in 1305. Andrew (b.c.1816) son of William and Isabella Scott. He was born in Jedburgh, although his mother was from the Hawick area. He lived in Ancrum and Cavers Parishes. He worked as a road contractor, probably on the Wynd in Denholm. He married Margaret Dodds in Cavers in 1841. Their children included: William (1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabella; Andrew; James (b.1856); and twins Richard Thomson and Jessy (b.1859). Bailie (18th/19th C.) said to have been the first druggist in Hawick. His premises were at 29 High Street, which became known as ‘Sinton’s Close’. Note, however, that the same property is labelled ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map. His first name is unknown, but it is possible that he is the same man as Andrew Linton. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1720. His children included: Walter (b.1709); Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); and George (b.1720). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1725). George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Alison died in 1790. Perhaps the same George was married to Margaret Beattie and had a son Thomas baptised in Wilton in 1771. George (18th/19th C.) from Leith, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1897 he purchased the grocer’s business from Mary (nee Govenlock) Brodie. Helen (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Probably the same ‘Nelly’ was cook at Midshiels in 1791. Isabella (b.c.1285) either sister or wife of the last ‘de Synton’ Sheriff of Selkirk, she was the heiress of Synton. It is possible that 2 separate women are conflated here; in 1296 Isabella, wife of Andrew of Sinton complained about her estates being seized when her husband was imprisoned at Dunbar, and pleaded for 20 merks worth of land. She was married to Edward de Kethe (or Keith), who was Sheriff of Aberdeen and son of Sir William de Keith. Together with her husband she claimed the sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in 1305. Their children were Sir William, John of Inverugie, Catherine and Janet. James (17th C.) married Janet Govenlock in Ashkirk Parish in 1663. Probably the same James was recorded in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. James (c.1730s–1802) carrier in Abbotrule. He lived at Clesslee and at Strangeburnfoot. His wife may have been Margaret. Their children included: Peter; Thomas (b.1755); Margaret; and James (b.1760). Probably he was the same James who also married Janet Oliver (from Unthank) in 1762, and whose children were: Mary; Margaret; Robert, born at Strangeburnfoot; John (b.1769) also at Strangeburnfoot; James, who married Barbara Oliver; and Elizabeth. He died at Clessleepeel. James (b.c.1772) son of James and Janet Oliver. He married Barbara Oliver. Their son was John (b.1806), born at ‘Clesleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. James (b.c.1775) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born at Southdeanmillhead. He married Margaret Wilkie. Their children included: Peter (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; and Robert (b.1813), born at Clarilaw Moor. James (18th/19th C.) weaver at Brownhills in in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1780) probably related to the other Southdean Sintons. In 1816 he married Isabella Fleming, and she died in 1867. Their children were: Robert (d.1897); and William (d.1851). He died in the 1840s, probably at Bonpedward. James (b.c.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married Mary Ann Fleming. Their children included: Robert William (b.1875), who was born at Blakedean, Morebattle; and James (b.1883), born in Bedrule Parish. James (1841–1938) of Eastfield, Joppa, where his house was called ‘Hasseedean’. He was born in Denholm, son of John (from Jedburgh) and Mary Ann Gillies. He served as groom to Daniel Mather of Hallrule. However, he later worked for Blackwood the publishers in Edinburgh. He contributed several articles to the Transactions, as well as editing some other works and bibliographies. He married Mary, daughter of Peter Bruce. Their son John (b.1867) was born in Hawick. He published Leyden’s ‘Tour in the Highlands and Western Islands’ (1903) and wrote ‘Leydeniana’ (1912). His major local contribution, however, was ‘Bibliography of works relating to, or published in Hawick’ (1908), which he stated to be ‘a work of great labour, and it has occupied my leisure time extending over a very considerable period’. This was a more focused extension to his ‘List of books relating to, or published in the Counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles’, which appeared as an appendix to Sir George Douglas’ 1899 ‘History of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles’. His Hawick biography contains information about newspapers, maps and music, as well as a thoroughly researched list of books. He died in Denholm. James (19th/20th C.) resident of Greenriver Cottage. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (b.1883) son of James and Mary Ann Fleming. He was born in Bedrule Parish. He married Rhoda Carr and his son was also James. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing 24 sheep, 3 cows and a horse from his lands in Synton, with the help of James Elliot. He was also witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskine’s land of Synton; like the other witnesses, he was probably local. He was probably the Laird in 1502 when the estate was attacked by David Scott. It seems likely that he was descended from the original Sintons of Synton. ‘(the Lady)’ and some Armstrongs, with many sheep and cattle stolen. John (16th C.) wool merchant (‘lanitor’) in Selkirk. In 1579/80 he stated in Selkirk that William Scott ‘alias William with the teyth’ stole 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning’s house. John (17th C.) recorded as a merchant in Selkirk in 1671. In 1674 he also had an account with the Burgh if Selkirk. Probably the same John was ex-Burgh Treasurer of Selkirk in 1663. John (17th C.) married Isobel Stoddart in Robertson Parish in 1679. John (17th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He was said to be a Covenanter who was taken prisoner in Redesdale, perhaps in 1683. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Cuthbertson, the marriage being recorded in Robertson in 1727. Their children included: John (b.1735); and Thomas (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Learmont. Their children were: Katherine (b.1735); Helen (b.1739), perhaps the Helen who died in Hawick in 1808, widow of John Turnbull; Walter (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1749); and William (b.1750). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Woll in 1744. John (18th C.) recorded in 1785 as servant to John Paterson, tenant in Langhope, when he was involved in a legal case in Selkirk. Helen Hunter in Philpahaugh demanded that he acknowledge he was father of her son and demanding payment. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Wester Alemmuir in 1771 and 1774 and at Bellendean in 1785. He is probably the John who married Betty Burnet in Robertson in 1769 and whose children included Isobel (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), Betty (b.1779), Christian (b.1782) and Mary (b.1785). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (1780–1856) son of William and Isobel Black. He was born in Southdean Parish. He lived at Letham and in Hobkirk Parish. He married Dorothy Eastham, who died in 1844. Their children were: William (b.1807); Richard (b.1810); James (b.1815); and George (b.1817). John (1806–54) son of James and Barbara Oliver. He was born at ‘Clesleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. In 1829 he married Alison, daughter of John Hall and Betty Briggs. Their children included: Robert (b.1831); John (b.1833); William (b.1836); and James Oliver (b.1848). They were all born in Jedburgh. He died in Argyll and was buried at Eckford. John (1810–65) son of William and Isabella Scott, who was from Hawick. He lived in Denholm. He firstly married Mary Ann Gillies and their children included: John Gillies (b.1843); and James (b.1841), who contributed local history articles. He secondly married Mary Dickson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1856), skinner in Hawick; and Mary (b.1860), who married Adam Huggan, tobacconist in Hawick. John (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh. In 1851 he was a game watcher at Woodside Cottage. He was a widower, living with his children William, Jane, James, Isabel, John and George. John Gillies (1843–1904) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Ann Gillies. In 1864 he married Isabella Wight in Maxton. Their children were: John (b.1862); Helen (1869–1948); Mary (b.1871); James (1873–1936); George (b.1878) in Hawick; William Wight (1866–95); and Francis Douglas (1882–1971). Marie (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. She was widow of Alexander, the former Sheriff of Selkirkshire. Her seal, attached to the Ragman Rolls, showed a figure of eight rays and the name ‘S’MARIE DE SINTVN’. Also in 1296 she pleaded to the English King for dower lands worth 20 merks, since she had been left a widow for 3 years. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, purchased 2 rigs of land there in 1580 and witnessed transactions in 1581. Also in 1581 he leased a tenement in Selkirk from John Hall and he may be the William in Newton recorded as witness to another transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1582. His surname is recorded as ‘Suyntoun’ in a charter of 1588 relating to lands in Selkirk in the Melrose chartulary. Given the location it seems likely he is a descendant of the family from Synton. Peter (b.1839), who was born in Midlothian. Peter (b.1808) born at Rueltownhead, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married May Scott, and their son was John (b.1859), who was born in Corsendise, Northumberland. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (b.1813) born at Clarilaw Muir, son of James and Margaret Wilkie. Their children included Robert (b.1852), who was born at Raelees in Selkirkshire. Robert (c.1817–97) born in Southdean Parish, son of James and Isabella Fleming. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: George (b.c.1845); Robert (b.1847); William (b.1856); and John (b.1866). Robert (b.1818) born in Hobbirk Parish, son of Thomas and Mary Elliot. He married Isabella Oliver, and their children included Thomas (b.1851), who was born at Lanton. Thomas (1776–1861) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson. He was born in Southdean Parish. He is probably the labourer at Burnkinford recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He married Mary Elliot. Their children included Robert (b.1818), who was born in Hobbirk Parish. He is probably the Thomas, servant in Southdean who is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Thomas (b.1856) son of John and Mary Dickson. He was a skinner in Hawick. His sister Mary married tobacconist Adam Huggan. He married Annie Scott and their children included: John (b.1878); and Walter (b.c.1886). Walter (16th/17th C.) brother of William ‘in Helialdrum Burne’. Along with his brother, Thomas Brown and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver. William (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, purchased 2 rigs of land there in 1580 and witnessed transactions in 1581. Also in 1581 he leased a tenement in Selkirk from John Hall and he may be the William in Newton recorded as witness to another transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1582. His surname is recorded as ‘Suyntoun’ in a charter of 1588 relating to lands in Selkirk in the Melrose chartulary. Given the location it seems likely he is a descendant of the family from Synton. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Helialdrum Burne’ recorded in 1618. Along with his brother Walter, Thomas Brown ‘in Thorishop’ and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver ‘in Lanyburne’ (possibly Langburnshiel). Oliver complained to the Privy Council and those responsible for his unlawful capture were declared rebels.
Sinton's Close

Langburnshiels. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Robertson Parish in 1714. He may be the William in Borthwickburn whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1714. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. William (b.1718) born in Duns, son of John and Janet Scott. He married Isabel Dunlop. His children included: James (b.1760), who was born in Ashkirk; and Thomas (b.c.1763). William (18th C.) resident at Henwood in 1764 and 1766. His children included Janet (b.1764) and William (b.1766). William (b.c.1750) probably born in Jedburgh and related to the Southdean Sintons. He married Isobel Black. Their children included: James (b.1776) and John (1780–1856), born in Southdean. William (b.1778) born in Jedburgh. He is presumably closely related to the Southdean Sintons, but the connection is unknown. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1804. Their children were: James (1805–61); William (1808–73), who lived in Denholm; John (1810–65), who also lived in Denholm; Thomas (b.1813); Andrew (c.1816–68); and Adam (b.1819). There are many descendants living in New Zealand. William (1808–73) son of William and Isabella Scott, his parents being from Jedburgh and Hawick, respectively. He lived in Denholm, probably on Canongate, where he was a farmer and road contractor. In 1851 he was reaping 50 acres and employing 2 men. His wife was Jessie Lamb and their children included: William (b.1847); Betsy (b.c.1851); and George (b.1857) (also written ‘Sintone’, ‘Sintoun’ and variants; note the possible confusion with Linton in older written records).

Sinton’s Close (sin’-inz-klös) n. former name for a close at 29 High Street, demolished in 1875 when the property was rebuilt. It was named after a wealthy Bailie who had been the first druggist in town. Afterwards Armstrong the printer began selling drugs there; then a Mr. Wilson started up the same kind of business there.
sir (sir) n., arch. title of a knight, designation formerly given to a priest who had not graduated as master of arts.
sirple (sir-pul) v., arch. to sip slowly – ‘Athens’ Senate chose the mountain: Ours prefer the running fountain, Sirpling down the shining cheerer, Sinding their ideas clearer’ [JH], n. a sip – ‘We-iceleike, A juist tuik a too – a sirple ti sein’d oot ma mooth’ [ECS].
sirse (sirs) interj., n., arch. exclamation of surprise, weariness or annoyance, literally ‘preserve us’ – ‘The Lord be praised for a’ his mercies, Nae mair we’re grainin’ whows or sirses’ [JoHa].
the Sir Walter Scott (thin-sir-wawl’-ur-sko’) n. name for one of mail coaches on the Edinburgh to Carlisle route in the early-to-mid 1800s. It was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, leaving daily for both Carlisle and Edinburgh (which must be an error) at 1.30 p.m., except Sundays. This must have been named after the writer while he was still alive, proceeding the naming of the Waverley route by several decades. The coach service started about 1825, and later the main coaches were called ‘the Engineer’ and ‘the Favourite’.
siskie (sis-kee) n., poet. uncertain meaning, perhaps a bird – ‘…Can make oor speerits blythe an’ friskie; In ilka head Wit languid sits, like caged siskie, Sin’ Davie’s dead’ [JoHa] (perhaps of nonce usage).

sittin up (si’-in-up) n., arch. a wake, former tradition of keeping watch over a corpse. Locally this used to take place from 8 p.m. on the day after death, the corpse being covered by a white sheet, and candles placed at the head of the coffin.

Sivvieha (si-vee-haw) n. another common abbreviation for Silverburghall, particularly referring to the housing estate.

the Six Airch Brig (θu-siks-ārch-brig) n. popular name for the Slitrig Viaduct, out beyond Lynnwood. It was built in 1860 as part of the line from Hawick to Carlisle, and demolished in 1982 (partly because of the danger of people throwing things from it). An early photograph shows the bridge being constructed. A set of steps was built here around 2009, allowing walkers to connect between the road and the former railway line. Whins have rapidly taken over this area. Because of the prominence of the viaduct when entering Hawick from the south, it became widely known as 'the town with the six-arch bridge'.

skaddaw (ska-da) n., poet. a shadow – 'I satt doun anudder his skaddaw wi' girt delicht …'[HSR], ‘The hills wer kiveret wi’ the skaddaw o’t an’ the bouchers o’wer like the guidlie cedars’ [HSR] (also written ‘scadawd’).

Skagrigs (skag-rigs) n. name for a piece of land in Ashkirk. In 1581 it is recorded along with Salenside Croft when assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses, having previously been occupied by Richard Brown and George Easton (it is ‘Skakriggis’ in 1581).

skail (skāl) v., poet. to spill, disperse ‘…My fu quaiach skailin still’ [WL], v., arch. to spill out, break up after a meeting, disperse, scatter, spread – ‘Nae company e’er greend to skail, If John was by: Alas! that sic a man was frail, And born to die’ [CPM], ‘No sooner was the benediction pronounced than the ‘kirk skailed’ …’ [V&M], ‘He told of the two old ladies who were ‘skailing’ after a service’ [AMA], ‘…the announcement being made …for the scaling of the school and the feed of the inmates, ‘Denner’s ready, maister’ [RJR], ‘…when the mills war skailin an the mill-yins war toavin hymn after ther simmer-etemoin’s yokeen’ [ECS], ‘…een as the flaam o the waather-skeail skailis afored the cluds thre thre owreecissen lift’ [ECS] (spelling varies, including ‘scale’, ‘skail’, etc.).

Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch with about 600 Scotts, Ellsots and supporters from Liddesdale and Annandale tried to wrest the young King James V (supposedly at the King’s request) from the control of the Earl of Angus and his local allies the Kers and the Homes. Scott failed in this attempt and lost 84 men in the struggle (including John of Ashkirk), while Andrew Ker of Cessford was also killed at ‘Turn Again’ (possibly by an Elliott of Stobs, although this predates their ownership of the estate). This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers, which lasted for decades. After the battle James Elliot was hanged for treason. In 1527 a number of local lairds had remission for muster-ing their supporters at this battle, specifically Sir Walter Scott of Branchholme, John Cranston of that Ilk, James Hoppringle, Walter Scott in Syn- ton, Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Robert Scott in Howpasley, William Scott of Hassindean, John Scott of Borthaugh, Philip Scott in Headshaw, William Turnbull of Minto, Robert Turnbull in Hallrule, John Scott of the Walls, Simon Scott of Fenwick and Master Michael Scott. The battle is also known as the ‘Battle of Darnick’ and the ‘Battle of Melrose’. The Waverley Castle Hotel, the first concrete building in Scotland, was built on the site (also known as ‘Skirmish Hill’). Another nearby hill, known as ‘the Charge Law’ was where Buccleuch gathered his men for the attack, while ‘Turn Again’ is a small eminence where Scott’s men rallied and Andrew Ker was killed. This event is said to have been marked by a standing stone, which still exists.

skybald (ski-buld) n., arch. a rogue, contemptible person, ragamuffin – ‘Some tore by his spalds, and some pulled by his neck, Till the caribald skybald was riven to wreck’ [JTe], ‘... a schauclhin, husslin-shoodert skeibult wui a toozy, taaty heed’ [ECS] (spelling varies; in 1718 Adam Scott, tenant of Woll, was reported in 1718 for calling the elders of Ashkirk Parish ‘skybalds’).
skyte see skite
Slacer (slā-sur) n. John (18th C.) recorded in Lochburnfoot in 1748 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Cavers Parish. His surname is otherwise unknown locally, and so it may have been written in error. William (18th C.) from Southdean. In 1863 he married Betty Inglis, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included William (b.1775), baptised in Southdean (also written ‘Slazier’).
slack (slawk) n., poet. a pass, hollow, gap, saddle in a hill ridge – ‘Red Ringan sped and the spearman led up Goranbury slack; Aye, many a wight unmatch’d in fight, Who never more came back’ [JL], ‘And up the slackis of the morning cloud, Aneath the links of light’ [JTe], a bog, morass, particularly used in liddesdale – ‘The fell and the woodland, each summit and slack, Smiled on us, and said – ‘We will welcome you back’’ [DA] (preserved in ‘Deep Slack’, ‘Mitchell’s Slack’, ‘the Paddock Slack’ and other place names).
Slack see Slack’s Toor
Slack (slawk) n. former name for lands near Borthwickbrae and Howcleuch. In 1581 ‘Borthuikbray and Slak’ were together assessed for tax at £10, while ‘Slak et Westsyde de Howcleugh’ were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae.

Slack (slawk) n. James (b.1781/2) from Lockerbie, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 1 Langholm Street, and by 1851 he was a pauper lodging on South Liddel Street. His wife was Jenny. Rev. John Watson (d.2003) minister of Ashkirk, linked with Selkirk Lawson Memorial. He served from 1983 until 1986.

slack course (slawk-kōrs) n. a course of knitting made with looser loops than normal, e.g. for linking.

slack handfi (slawk-hawnd-fi) n. an amount of something, such as sweets, that fits into a loose palm – ‘Gie iz a slack handfih o Hawick Baas’.

Slackhills (slawk-hilz) n. farm recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Kedzie was farmer there, with 2 horses working on the farm. Given that this occurs in the list between Teindside and Commonside, it is possibly an error for Slaidhills.

Slacks (slawks) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. There are still remains of the peel tower to be seen there, as well as signs of several other buildings, enclosures and agricultural development. Immediately to the south of the tower are the grass-covered footings of another pele (perhaps earlier). The farmstead and its enclosures was probably just to the south-east of the tower. Further to the south and west are extensive rig lines, partly erased by cultivation. A field to the north-west shows an old turf boundary and south of the peel is an old turf-walled enclosure, as well as several apparenty phases of boundary and enclosure banks. The lands were valued at 44 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. In 1541 Thomas and John were tenants of part valued at 22s, with Charles tenant of the remaining part valued at 11s. John Oliver was a tenant in 1544. William Oliver was recorded there in 1583. George, William and John Oliver are recorded as tenant farmers in ‘Slacks’ in 1669. Margaret Oliver was there in 1684. The 1694 Hearth Tax Return lists 3 hearths at ‘Slacks’. But the settlement seems to have disappeared in the 18th century (also written ‘Slacks’ with no apostrophe; it is ‘Slakis’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Slakkis’ in 1541, ‘Slakis’ in 1544, ‘the Slakkis’ in 1571/2, ‘Slakes’ in 1583 and ‘Slaxes’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Slack’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the south side of the river, roughly opposite where Southdean Mill lies, but is absent from 18th century maps).

Slack’s Toor (slawks-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th century tower in Southdean Parish, located near the head of a stream off the Jed Water, to the north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. The peel tower had 3 floors, with a plan 12 m by 7.5 m (a little longer than other local towers). The gables are still standing. There are also signs of 3 buildings immediately to the north and 3 more to the south-east, as well as an earlier tower to the east, all part of an archaeological survey in 1991. The area around the tower shows signs of a complex settlement. Just south-east of the tower are the remains of a farmstead, with some enclosures, presumably the farm of Slacks.

slae (slā) n., arch. sloe, blackthorn, wild plum, Prunus spinosa – ‘Twae een she had as slack as slaes, An’ like twae diamonds glacin”, An’ gaed sae neat aye in her claes, Gart a’ the lads rin dancin’’ [JR], ‘The slae maun be frostit ere pleasant to eat; The rose maun be pu’d frae the prickly brier’ [JoHa], ‘…Where first I pou’d the rapse and slae, On the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘We’ve demned’ aneath the blooming slaes, And row’d amang the ferns’ [JT], ‘Where oft in boyhood’s happy days I gathered nits and slaes’ [GD], ‘…And echoed sternly back by Whitlaw braes – Renowned alike for ba irns, and nuts, and slaes’ [WNK].

Slaidhills see Slaidhills

Slaidhills (slād-hilz) n. farmstead above Teindside, sometimes called the singular ‘Slaidhill’ and also formerly known as ‘Slatchhill’ and ‘Slatehills’. An earlier name for essentially the same area is ‘Almondslands’. The lands were part of the estate of Teindside and Harwood owned by the Abernethy family from the late 14th to late 15th centuries. The lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1580 when there was a raid by Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 12 cows and oxen and ‘left ane of hir servandis lyand for deid’. Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is ‘Almonslandis alias Slaidhills’ when listed among the Baron of Hawick’s properties in 1615. It is probably the ‘Steadhills’ listed (along with Teindside, Harwood and Carlinpool) among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of ‘exterioribus et interioribus de Slaidhills’ and in 1683 the next Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in the same lands. William Elliot was tenant in ‘outer slaidhills’ in 1694. William Waugh was tenant there in 1699, with William Oliver, William Waugh and John Waugh recorded in 1701. William Scott was recorded there in 1702 and Thomas Pott in 1704. Alexander Hutton was tenant in 1707, with Thomas Rae as shepherd. James Miller was a weaver there in 1717. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch Outer Slaidhill and Inner Slaidhill are listed separately: Outer Slaidhill consisted of 366 acres, bounded by Brauxholme Moor, Hott, Inner Slaidhill, Commonside, Woodburn and Chisholme; and Inner Slaidhill lay to the south and was not a Buccleuch property. Robert Elliot was tenant in at least 1740–43. Patrick Hume was also tenant in 1743, with Adam Hogg also living there. Christopher Grieve was there in about 1822. Robert Grieve was shepherd there in 1851, and weaver James Lamb also lived there. About 350 yards north-east of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort on a rocky knoll. The inner area is about 205 ft by 105 ft oriented east-west, with an entrance on the north side. There are 2 other forts on Teindside Hill just to the south (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘slaed hyll’, meaning ‘the hill with the hollow in it’, referring to the shape of the hill to the east of the farm, with the 2 apparent summits probably also explaining the sometimes plural form; the name occurs as ‘Sleidhills’ in 1494, ‘Slaidhills’ in 1581, ‘Slaidhill’ in 1585, ‘Slaidhills’ in 1634, ‘Sledhills’, ‘Slaidhillies’ in 1664, ‘Sledhill’s in 1693, ‘Slatchills’ in 1701, ‘Slethills’ in 1702, ‘Sletheils’ in 1740, ‘Slethehills’ in 1743 and ‘Sleathil’ in the 1851 census; it is ‘Slaidhills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slatchills’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Slaidhills Moss (släd-hilz-mos) n. marshy region to the north of Slaidhills farmstead, in the headwaters of Vales Burn. It is printed as ‘Slatchill Moss’ in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’, when he is describing the course of the Catrail.

Slatehillmoss (slá-hil-mos) n. former name for an area near the head of the Teindside Burn and Vales Burn, north of the farmstead now marked ‘Slaidhill’ on the Ordnance Survey map. It is effectively part of Commonside Moor, adjacent to Teindside Moss, and has part of the Catrail running through it, as well as a nearby fort (see also Slaidhills: ‘moss’ refers to moorland).

Slate Hoose (slá-hoos) n. name of a house in Weensland in the mid-19th century??.

slater (sla-ur) n. a wood louse, pill bug, Oniscus (also skletter; note, this term is obscure outside Scotland; the origin is probably because of often being found under slates).

Slater’s Directory (slá-urz-dl-rek-tu-ree) n. directory of people and businesses, more formally known as Slater’s Royal National Commercial Directory. It was published in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893, and was essentially a continuation of Pigot’s earlier directories. The volumes containing Roxburghshire are valuable as lists of businesses in Hawick, as well as Denholm, Newcastleton and some other villages. The publisher, I. Slater, was based in Manchester. Note that the information was not always up to date, and typically appears to have been current a year or so before.

slite (slīt) n., arch. to rip up, slit, undo sewing, n., arch. a ripping of a sewn article (also written ‘sleit’; the past tense is slait and the past participle slitten).

slither (slī-thər) n., arch. a slide, sliding movement (cf. scladder and slider).

Slitrick see Slitrick

Slitridge (sli'-rij) n. former name and spelling for Slitrig, used in the 17th and 18th centuries. ‘The water of Slittridge is recorded in a 1687 sasine and it is ‘Slitridge Water’ on Wood’s 1824 map.

the Slitrig (thu-sli'-reeg, -rig, -reek, -rik) n. Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the ‘Auld Brig’. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. The river rises in several headwaters, Fosh Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and being joined by Langside Burn where the Slitrig proper starts. After that it is joined by: Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby’s Sike; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Snaile Burn – ‘...Where Slitrig dances doon the glen’ [JT], ‘...And the Slitrig aye filling wi’ rain’ [FH], ‘Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature’s charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK] (the origin is uncertain, ‘rith’ being Old English for ‘stream’, with the first element perhaps related to ‘slite’, a narrow opening, or ‘sliant’ to split, or even possibly ‘slitter’; it is first mentioned as ‘Sliitrith’ in Reginald of Durham’s book on St. Cuthbert, where it is suggested that the name comes from the river abounding with fish, and although the connection with any words relating to an abundance of fish seems obscure, it is possible it is ‘slīht’, meaning animals for slaughter; there are a variety of earlier spellings, e.g. ‘Slyltryk’ in 1433, ‘sliitrirk’ in 1493 and 1502, ‘Slitryk’ in 1532 and ‘Slitrik’ in 1547/8; it is still ‘Slidderick’ in 1795, ‘Slitrigge’ in 1821 and ‘Slitrige’ in 1839; it is ‘Slittrick R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slittrik’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Slitrig Bank (sli'-reeg-bawngk) n. house occupied by shoemaker Peter Wilson in the late 18th century, now being 1 Slitrig Bank. It was probably built a little before 1800. It was the headquarters for the Napoleonic prisoners-of-war, and partitions in the cellar may related to this use. The house is shown in a painting of about 1813; this painting exists in a photograph, but the original is lost. The current house is 2-storeys with an attic, in a rectangular plan, built of whinstone rubble and with sandstone dressings. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Bank (sli'-reeg-bawngk) n. short street between St. Mary’s and the Slitrig. It was named after the house of the same name, which is now 1 Slitrig Bank. The rest of the street was developed in the period 1850–55. A house there (probably the same No. 1) was the headquarters for the French prisoners of war in the period 1812–14, later the residence of George Scott the builder.

Slitrig Brig (sli'-reeg-brig) n. Slitrig Bridge, the name originally given to the main bridge over the Slitrig, built in 1776–77, and later named Drumlanrig Bridge. The masons may have been John Haldane of Gala and James Wood of Hawick, both of whom were made Honorary Burgesses in 1776. The name is recorded as an address in Pigot’s 1837 directory, presumably referring to houses around Silver Street or the Tower Knowe. The same name is also sometimes used for the bridge over the Slitrig at the bottom of the Kirk Wynd, more properly called the Slitrig Crescent Bridge. It may be that the ‘Auld Brig’ was also once known by this name – ‘On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn . . . ’ [DN].

Slitrig Cauld (sli'-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lynwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill lade, ‘the Back Dam’ (not to be confused with Lynwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Chaipel see St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel

Slitrig Cottage (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 census for the house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill

lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (slì’-reeg-kre-sin’) n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name ‘the Crescent’. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first ‘suburbs’ of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert’s Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, the main mill on Slitrig Crescent, also known as Turnbull the Dyers.

Slitrig Crescent Brig (slì’-reeg-kre-sin’-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. The present structure was built in 1864, replacing a footbridge (shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), which in turn replaced an earlier iron footbridge destroyed in the 1846 flood. It is said to have been built in only 10 days. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the ‘wire bridge’ was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. The footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer’s accounts as ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’. The present structure is a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark. It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including ‘the Kirkwynd Brig’. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (slì’-reeg-dawm) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick, also known as the Back Dam. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. Originally it was relatively short, but in the mid-19th century it was extended to join what was called Lynnwood Dam or Nixon’s Dam. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills, Whiskyhouse Mill, and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyewerks. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Wulliestruther Loch to flow into the Slitrig. Several footbridges across the lade gave access to businesses and houses from the main road (the 1857 Ordnance Survey map shows at least half a dozen). Some of the first baptisms of the Brethren were performed in its waters. Much of the lade was covered over with concrete slabs in the mid-1960s. An explosion in the tunnel under Lynnwood Road (near the entrance to Lynnwood House) in the mid-1960s, caused by a build-up of natural methane, led to an understanding that unused tunnels needed to be filled. The lade was almost entirely filled in in the early 1970s when new housing was constructed in the area. The course of the dam is shown clearly on Wood’s 1824 map.

He is probably the Adam, son of shoemaker John and Helen Aitkin, born in 1758. His name is recorded as ‘Smeal’ in about 1810 when his wife Jean Phillips died. Their son John was baptised in 1786, with witnesses Walter Aitkin and William Phillip. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (b.c.1780) joiner on Bourtree Place, his premises located behind No. 8. This is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Probably the same man was listed as a wright on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and still listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was recorded being at ‘Eastend’ on the 1841 census, with Adam Scott as his apprentice. At one point he owned the entire property from 6 to 16 Bourtree Place and all the way back to the railway line. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Redford. Their children included: Margaret, who married weaver Charles Scott; and Alison (b.1806), baptised in the East Bank Kirk, who married roper William Munro. He could be the Adam born in Jedburgh in 1779. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was granted a half husbandland and a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His father was also granted land at the same time. They were presumably residents of the village of Lilliesleaf at that time. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Lylisle’ witnessed a transaction for William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf in 1580. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His wife was Agnes, and their children included John, Margaret and George. He secondly married Janet, and had step-daughter Janet Brown, as well as children Robert W., James D. and Mary. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1741), William (b.1742) and Elizabeth (b.1748). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded at Linthill in 1789 when his son Robert was baptised. James (19th C.) purchaser of the farm of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. This was sometime before 1837. He was a nurseryman and seedsman. He was probably succeeded by William. James (19th C.) farm steward at Timpendean in the mid-to-late 1800s, working for Mr. Elliot Boag. He married Margaret, daughter of William Oliver, hind at Langraw. James (1828–1905) from Jedburgh, brother of printer John. He became a banker with the National Bank in Kelso, opening the branch in Earlston. He then moved to the Commercial Bank, working in Earlston, Galashiels, then Kirkcaldy, and eventually becoming Secretary of the head office of the Commercial Bank in Edinburgh. He was strongly connected with Rulewater, meeting his wife Margaret Boa there, and being a keen angler of the Rule and Jed Waters. He wrote verse under the pen-name ‘Matthew Gotterson’ and under this name published the poem ‘The Callant’ in the Scotsman in 1889 (reprinted in ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ in 1892); this was used as the anthem for the Callants’ Club, the third verse being put to music by Addie Inglis in the late 1940s, and the words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology. A version of the ballad ‘Little Jock Elliot’ was written under this pen-name. He also wrote extensively on angling topics and was a President of the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He wrote an extensive article on the Catrail in 1880, having tried to trace it course for several days accompanied by Mr. Craig-Brown and Mr. Elliot of Hollybush, as well as local farmers and shepherds. He was also a keen Volunteer, being an officer of the Border Battalion and Secretary of the Border Rifle Association. Additionally, he was involved as treasurer or secretary of the agricultural societies in Selkirkshire as well as the Landward School Board. His wife died later the same year he did. John (16th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He could be the son of Thomas, who received a half husbandland in Lilliesleaf from his father in 1581/2. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem from his father in 1581/2. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem and his wife Helen, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he given the couple a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple their half husbandland in Midlem for 1787–88.

John (17th C.) merchant in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was listed right before him. John (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to other Smails living there. Perhaps the same wright John was listed among Covenanters in about 1684. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Walter Aitkin. He married Helen Aitkin and their children included: George (b.1743); James (b.1744); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1758); and Adam (b.1761). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitkin (perhaps related to his wife) and shoemaker Robert Wilson, and in 1758 were James Oliver and Walter Aitkin. John (18th C.) married Agnes Graham in Wilton in 1758. in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (b.1785/6) born at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was a carrier in St. Boswells. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart between Lilliesleaf, St. Boswells and Kelso. His wife was Esther and their children included Thomas and Jane. Margaret ‘Meg’ (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area, wife of Mungo Young. In the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison, she gave evidence that about 9 years earlier Howison came to her sick child ‘and said he had gotten a blast of ill wind betwene tuo furres [furrows] and shee spake some words over him and he wes better within twenty four houres’.

Martin (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is listed as ‘Martine Smail’. Robert (b.1798/9) born in Ancrum, he was a farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. His brother John also helped run the farm. In 1851 they were farming 41 acres and employing 1 labourer. Another brother, William, also lived on the farm. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in a document of 1561/2, agreeing that Thomas Young, his brother-in-law, should occupy some lands in Lilliesleaf during his mother’s life. His mother was Elizabeth (‘Bessie’) Riddell, presumably related in some way to the Riddells of that ilk. His sister was Margaret. Probably the same Thomas in 1563 leased for 19 years a tenement from his neighbour Thomas Gray. He was to pay 20 shillings twice a year, along with ‘ane pek to the boll’ of grain, and if he built a kiln there, then Gray would provide him with beams for its construction. The witnesses in 1563 were ‘Berte’ Riddell, James Leithead and Robert Hastie, who may also have been from Lilliesleaf. In 1564 he witnessed a marriage contract for John Johnstone, tenant in Hermiston. Probably the same Thomas in Lilliesleaf is recorded in 1581/2 when Walter Turnbull in Belses took over his debt with Richard Wilson in Howford. In 1581/2 he resigned his half husbandland in Lilliesleaf in favour of his eldest son John and arranged a marriage contract between John and Janet, daughe of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem and his wife Helen Clark received quarter of a steading of William Middlemas. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–88. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1786 he was ‘of Catch’ at Raperlaw. His surname was given as ‘Smeal’ in 1788, when he was recorded as owner of Catshawhill. He was still at Raperlaw in 1797. He is probably the William ‘Smaill’ recorded as possessor of the land of ‘Kains-muir park’ in 1780. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although the information came from earlier) he was listed as owner of Catshawhill and part of Raperlaw. He may have been father of James of Catshawhill recorded later. Probably the same William at Raperlaw subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Probably the same William of Catshawhill served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His name was recorded as William ‘Sonnieal of Catshawll’ in the 1819 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish, he married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Stuart. Their children included: Margaret (b.1801); and Elizabeth (b.1803). name given, may also have been his children. William (d.1838) from Lilliesleaf. In 1790 he married Janet Thomson and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessy’, b.1803), who married Andrew Buckham; Alexander (b.1805); and Robert (b.1810), who probably married Ellen Ramage. Helen (b.1797) and William (b.1798), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in his children. In 1823 he married Mary Hunter (from Ayrshire) and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessy’, b.1803), who married Andrew Buckham; Alexander (b.1805); and Robert (b.1810), who probably married Ellen Ramage. Helen (b.1797) and William (b.1798), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in his children. William (1879) prominent citizen in the area of Edwardsburgh, Ontario, along with his brother Robert and nephew Andrew. He was said to be from the Jedburgh area, but was probably son of William and Janet Thomson, who came from Lilliesleaf, emigrating in 1820. In about 1823 he married Mary Hunter (from Ayrshire) and their children included Robert, Andrew, Thomas, John, Alex and Ann. He served as ‘Reeve’ of Edwardsburgh and county councillor and was an organiser of the Reform movement, which laid the foundations for the Liberal Party of Canada. His farm was called Glen Smail (formerly written ‘Smaill’, ‘Smaile’, ‘Small’, ‘Smeal’, ‘Smaill’ and ‘Smyle’).

Smailcleugh (smāl-klooch) n. former house about 3 miles south of Jedburgh in Southdean Parish. It was near the foot of the Smail Cleuch, on the opposite side of the Jed Water from Ferniehirst Mill. The farm was in the 17th century the residence of the famed Ringan Oliver, who was said to have lived in a tower there. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 19th century (also written ‘Smailcleuch’).

Smale see Smail

Smale Burn (smāl-burn??) n. stream now running underground from the Nipkowes to Haggisaa, with the original course being over the Vertish, and on to the Slitrig. The name was in use from at least as early as the 15th century. The springs that feed it provided an early town water supply (1797–1865), conveyed in lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘small’; the name occurs in 1433 as ‘Smaleburne’ and is ‘Smale Burn’ in 1448).

Smailholm (smā-lum) n. village north-west of Kelso, with Smailholm Tower, the 18th century Smailholm House and a church dating back to the 13th century, last rebuilt in the 19th. Robert Ker of Altonburn had a charter of the lands in 1404 and Robert Pringle had a charter probably not many years later. The lands were held by Lord Cranston in 1502. In 1544 it was railed by men of Tynedale and Redesdale, taking 600 cattle, 100 horses and 100 prisoners. Also the name of the surrounding Parish of northern Roxburghshire, bounded by Kelso and Makerstoun, as well as Berwickshire. According to one story, St. Cuthbert was born in the nearby village of Wanragham, which has entirely disappeared. It is said that it was the first parish to divide its common land, starting a trend that would sweep across Border parishes, including Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, etc. ‘Book of the Bazaar, On Smailholm Men, Smailholm Parish and Smailholm Church’ (1896) was written by William Lamb Sime (the origin is probably Old English ‘smael ham’, meaning ‘the narrow village’; the name first appears in 1160).

Smailholm (smā-lum) n. Henry (d.bef. 1364) admitted as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1354, with his name written ‘Smallham’. He served until his death.

Smailholm Toor (smā-lum-toor, -tow-ur) n. 5-storey 15th century peel tower on an isolated crag near Smailholm village, about 6 miles west of Kelso, renovated in the 1980s and now housing a museum. It may have originally been built by the Kerrs for the eldest son of Ferniehirst. The existing tower was probably built by the Pringles. It was the subject of many raids in the 16th century, and was sold to the Scotts of Harden in 1645. It is sometimes also called ‘Sandyknowe’ from the farm and hillock on which it stands. Sir Walter Scott regarded it as very inspirational in his youth – ‘These crags, that mountain tower, which charmed my fancy’s waking hour … Methought grim features, seemed with scars, Glared through the window’s rusty bars’ [SWS], ‘At Smailholm’s Tower, Scott’s youthful hours Were nursed in song and story’ [RF].

smairg (smāрг) adj., v. to bedaub, besmear – ‘…for thaye smairg inequitie apon me, an’ in wrath thaye hæte me’ [HSR], ‘…an a smairggin rowk feiles ilkka thing’ [ECS], to smear sheep with a tarry mixture to protect the fleece against vermin.

smart (smārt) adj., v. smart (also the more common smert).

Small (smaw, smawl) n. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew Robson in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). William (18th C.) leased the lands of Boghall (presumably in Wilton) from Scott of Harden in 1749 for 11 years. William (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Barnhills in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Belses Mill recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799 (it is possible this is the same as Small).

small-pox (smaw-, smal-poks) n. contagious viral disease, which was a major source of death across Europe until well into the 19th century. It was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it often left victims scarred or blind. Hawick was hit by a particularly fatal outbreak in 1821. Immunisation was introduced in the early 19th century, but taken up in a patchy way, and largely among the wealthier classes; its historical effectiveness is still a matter of debate, but ultimately it led to eradication of the disease.

smally (sma-lee) adj., arch. small, meagre, under-sized – ‘Smaallie (adj.) = delicately framed (applied especially to a child of frail physique)’ [ECS], ‘A smally bairn’ [GW] (also written ‘smallie’; diminutive of smaa).

Smaska Hill (smaw-sha-hil) n. hill to the east of Blawearie at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, reaching a height of 335 m. It contains a Bronze Age burial cairn, about 500 m yards east-north-east of the summit, measuring about 10 m in diameter and about 0.4 m high. There are also several others in the vicinity. On the north side of the hill there is a ‘droveway sign-wall’, a section of drystone dyke to indicate the direction for droving, or perhaps as a warning to drovers.

smat (smat) pp., poet. smote – ‘Behald he smat the rok, that the waters rashet owt …’ [HSR], ‘An’ smat a’ the first-born in Egypt …’ [HSR].

smatter (sma’ur) n., pl., arch. small pieces, smithereens – ‘Hei broke it inti smatters’ [GW], v., arch. to break into small pieces – ‘The pane he smattered wi’ a pelt’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heeds o’ leviathan intil flenders …’ [HSR].

Smeaton (smeec-in) n. John (b.1827/8) born in Dunfermline, he was Governor of Hawick Combination Poorhouse during the 1861 census. He presented some items from Borneo to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Matron and Harriet Smeaton (probably his sister) also worked there.

smeddum (sme-dum) n., poet. spirit, mettle, common sense, resourcefulness, strength – ‘The smeddum o’ your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi’ your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses’ [JR], ‘…And pits sic smeddum in my step’ [WL] (from Old English).

smeeg (smeeg) n., arch. a kiss (noted by J. Jamieson).

smert (smer) adj. smart, clever – ‘deh try ti be smert’, ‘Let cleverality, moockreef folk that are unco smert …’ [ECS], well-dressed, stylish, attractive – ‘ee’re lookin awfi smert the day’, ‘Hei’s a smert keind o fallih, thon’ [ECS], ‘Weel, aa aet a lorry-driver, As smert as ee could se …’ [DH], ‘Hei’s a big smert felli mind’ [JC], ‘She’s a smert lookin lassie, no like her mother’, brisk, quick – ‘An so, efter a smert hurl, oo clattert inti Hawick High Street duist on the chaap o six …’ [ECS], v. to smart – ‘ma backside’s still smertin’, ‘…And lashed oor smertin’ cheeks’ [WL] (cf. the less common smart).

Smellie (sme-lee) n. James (19th C.) teacher at Ashkirk in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish.
Smert

Smert (smer’) n. (Smart) Alexander (b.1815/6) born in Stow, he was a baker in Hawick. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 39 High Street and in 1861 at 2 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included Alexander William, Agnes, Jane and George. Rev. William (1775/6–1837) from Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, he was ‘probationer’ at Castleton Burgher Kirk following the resignation of Fletcher in 1801. He was said to have done much to inspire confidence in the waning congregation and helped to secure a site for the new church in Newcastleton village. However, he remained only a short time, because in 1802 he was called to Paisley. He died suddenly while returning from a meeting of the Presbytery there. A volume of his sermons was published by his son Rev. William of Linlithgow.

smerter (smer-tur) adj. smarter – ‘...Like panoramic views were cast, still better an’ still smerter’ [VW].

smiddle see smiddy

Smiddielands (smi-dee-lawnz) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, adjacent to Newton. They were included in the lands inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1637.

smiddies (smi-deez) n. blacksmith’s workshops. These used to be common and crucial parts of everyday life in Hawick and surrounding area. Local ones included Peter Clark’s at the Sandbed, Rob Young’s of the Back Raw, and 3 in the Fore Raw (including James Bowie and Tom Ferguson), as well as others in the Croon Close, Brougham Place (Murray in the basement of No. 7), Melgund Place (No. 5) and Albion Place. In the mid-19th century there must have been around a dozen in Hawick. Those of the surrounding countryside included Ashkirk (Kirkhouses), Bockerstone Bridge, Borthaugh Wudfit, Borthwickbrae Burnfit, Cauldmill, Chisholme, Denholm (two), Flex, Forkins (or Unthank), Hassendean, Headshaw, Heap, Hobkirk (Blacklee), Kirkhouses, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Newmill, (Bedrule) Newton, Park (Copshaw), Stirches, Stobs, Teviothead (Bowanhill) and Todshawaugh. The business in the Crown Close (Telfer’s) survived until the late 1970s, and Hook’s on Union Street even more recently. As well as shoeing horses and dealing with other metalwork jobs, through much of the 18th and 19th centuries they were also responsible for performing medical procedures like tooth extractions and bleedings for various ailments. Adam smiddy (smi-dee) n. a smithy, blacksmith’s workshop – ‘He took the horses next to Boa’s smiddy to get their shoes taken off’ [RM], ‘And in winter we wad gather round the bleezin’ smiddy hearth ...’ [JT], a frame-smith’s or mechanical workshop in a mill (also spelled ‘smiddie’).

the Smiddy (thu-smi-dee) n. former blacksmith’s in Ashkirk, now a pub and restaurant.

smiddy-end (smi-dee-end) n., arch. gable wall of a blacksmith’s – ‘A dandert aboot amang the auld byres an smiddle-ends’ [ECS], ‘Oh, the Auld Smiddy end, where in youth’s happy day A merry band o’ bairnies wad gather at their play’ [JT].

smirn (smirn) n., arch. a smug, officious person. syn. with Pliskie [JoJ].

smirr (smir) n., poet. drizzle, light rain – ‘A smirr o’ rain was fa’in’ That buid to spoil the day’ [WL], ‘There cam’ a blast wi’ smirr o’ snaw As Tam cam’ amblin’ hame’ [WFC], v., arch. to drizzle (the origin is unknown).

smit (smi’) v., arch. to infect, contaminate.

smitch (smich) n., poet. Thou art a’ fair, my loefer, ther is nae smitch in thee’ [HSR].

Smith (smith) n. Adam (17th C.) listed as a smith on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eis the water’. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Alan (1917–2013) born at South Shields, he was R.A.F. pilot who fought alongside Douglas Bader and was awarded the D.F.C. He was later an industrialist, being a strong Tory supporter and becoming a friend of Margaret Thatcher. He ran Dawson International from the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Alan (1917–2013) born at South Shields, he was R.A.F. pilot who fought alongside Douglas Bader and was awarded the D.F.C. He was later an industrialist, being a strong Tory supporter and becoming a friend of Margaret Thatcher. He ran Dawson International from 1970. He was Chief Guest at the 1986 Common Riding. With the demise of Pringle’s following soon afterwards, he was among the executives blamed for the downfall of Hawick’s knitwear industry. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for John Hunter, who also lived at Appletreehall. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1766, and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: James (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); John (b.1772); Susanna he established a reputation as a zoologist and much of his leisure time studying natural history, customs of the Xhosa tribes in 1824. Spending beyond the frontier, resulting in a description of the was sent on several missions to visit tribes be-learned much about the indigenous peoples and was there for 16 years, also being associated with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps. He was district surgeon with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape

1820 as a medical assistant to the 72nd Regiment, received his M.D. in 1819. He went to the Cape in 1825. In 1834 he led probably the first scientific expedition into the interior, where he also negotiated treaties, as well as exploring the Oori, Marigua and Limpopo rivers, returning after 18 months. About 5,000 specimens, 500 drawings and 1800 artefacts were brought back. In 1836 he met a young Charles Darwin when the Beagle stopped at the Cape, showing Darwin rock formations and giving him some rock samples. He returned to Britain in 1837, being promoted to the rank of surgeon and based at Fort Pitt, Chatham. A grant was appropriated to publish his 5 volume ‘Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa’ (1838–47), which he wrote with no personal remuneration. He identified and named many animals, particularly reptiles and birds. He described more species of South African birds than anyone before or since and Gekko smithii (a gecko), Lepidodophyina smithii (a lizard) and Pangshura smithii (a freshwater turtle) are all named after him. He was also first to formally describe the largest living shark, the whale shark, as well as to properly distinguish the genus of the great white shark and to name it ‘Carcharodon’ (so that the species was sometimes called ‘Carcharodon smithii’ as a result). Ill health prevented him publishing the expedition journal, but much of the information appeared elsewhere (and his diaries from 1834–36 were finally published in 1939–40). He continued to be promoted, becoming Principal Medical Officer at Chatham, then Deputy Inspector of Hospitals in London, and by 1853 he was Director General of the Army and Ordnance Medical Department. During the Crimean War he was personally attacked for being responsible for the state of medical care for British troops, with Florence Nightingale calling him the ‘smoke-dried Andrew Smith’. However, his conduct was vindicated after inquiries by several parliamentary committees. He retired in 1858, when he was made a K.C.B. He received numerous other honorary titles and awards, including being Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, the Zoological Society and of the Royal Society. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1838 on a visit back to Hawick. He also received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and Trinity College, Dublin. He retired from his post in 1858 and was then knighted. In 1844 he married his housekeeper, Ellen Henderson (c.1802–64), and converted to her Roman Catholic faith. After the death of his wife and then his sister, he lost interest in African exploration and scientific writing and went into decline. He died at his home at 16 Alexander Square, London and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. There are at least 2 known portraits of him. A plaque (on the right-hand side of the road past Southfield) marks the site of the cottage in which he was born (actually on the opposite side of the road). Annie Henderson nee Cowan (b.1861) daughter of Elliot Cowan and Jeanie Hunter. She was well known locally as a singer, for example, singing ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’ at the 1889 Colour Bussing. She was mother of William, James and Elliot and married to Cornet John, with whom she moved to the Manchester area in the 1890s. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society in 1935, providing valuable information about 19th century Hawick language and place names. It was said that she insisted on her family speaking Hawick dialect at home in Manchester and their house was a haven for other Teries in Lancashire. Her son Elliot referred to her as ‘a leal and competent guardian of the vernacular’, and explicitly highlighted her influence in developing his fascination with the dialect of Hawick. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (b.1782) son of Thomas and Mary Scott ‘The Flooer o Rankleburn’. It is said that as a young man in charge of carts in Berwick, he was press-ganged into joining the crew of a man-of-war. He returned to Rulewater a few years later and married Mary Turnbull (whose sister Ellen has married his brother Peter). One of their sons was found dead at the bottom of a cliff at Edgerston, while a daughter married Robert Taylor. Along with the rest of his family he emigrated to America. Charles (19th C.) grocer on the High Street. He is listed as grocer, spirit dealer and victual dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was Cornet in 1840. He appears to have left the town shortly afterwards. Mysteriously he appears to have fathered an unnamed child who died in 1840. Rev. David (b.1892) educated in Dunfermline and at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach by Dunfermline Presbytery and was assistant minister in Dumfries. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1921. However, he was translated to Inverkeithing the following year, and later went to Ceres. He married Anna Clarke. David Nicholson ‘Kel’ (20th C.) driving instructor in Hawick. His nickname came from the fact that he grew up in Kelso. He was well known as Clerk to the Course at the Common riding Races for many years, with many stories told of his droll humour heard over the loud-speaker system at the Moor. Elliot Cowan (1891–1917) native of Hawick, whose father, grandfather and great-great-grandfather had been Cornet. His father was John and his mother Annie Cowan. He was a student at Manchester Municipal High School and worked as an accountant. Well read in all forms of literature, he had a particular interest in Scottish writing and the vernacular of Hawick. In 1914 he wrote what is probably the best example of Hawick dialect prose ‘Mang Howes an’ Knowes: a Day’s Dander’ Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’. This when he was only 23 years old, and after having spent most of his life in the Manchester area, where his family moved. It was published in 1925, with illustrations by his brother, James Dryden. He also contributed the dialect dictionary and discussion ‘Braid Haack’ to the Transactions, as well as publishing ‘To Dee and Don: recollection and rumination’ (reprinted from the Hawick Express) in 1912. He was also a lover of music, from high opera to old Scottish songs. Never being in robust health, it was said that he was disappointed not to be able to enlist like his 2 brothers. He lived at 61 Carlton Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. He died at the age of only 25 and is buried in the Wellogate. George, A.R.C.O. (19th/20th C.) organist at St. Cuthbert’s in the early 20th century. He gave organ lessons to Adie Ingle. Gilbert (18th C.) house servant at Stirches in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stirches. Hamish D. (1946/7–) jeweller at Bourtree Place, well known for incorporating local elements into his designs. He was educated at Burnfoot and Hawick High. He worked with Lyle & Scott and was then a fencer on motorways, then worked in his father Alex’s jewellery shop at 45 High Street, which in 1970 became his own business at 17 High Street. The premises moved to 47 High Street then in 1991 to Eastbank House on Bourtree Place (with members of the Linden being enlisted to move the heavy safe). He was Hawick Business Forum Chairman in the 1980s. He has designed badges and chains of office for several of the local clubs. He also makes badges for Jedburgh, Lauder and Duns festival principals. The ‘Teribus Clock’ has been a feature of his shop since 1996 (constructed by him, Tosh Scott and other local tradesmen). He and Tosh Scott also provided a new clock for the Town Hall balcony. In 2012 he created a Hawick version of the olympic torch. He married Sylvia and had children Janie and Graham. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. James (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, in the Hassendean part. He witnessed a baptism in Hassendean for William Lamb in 1687. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1679 and their children included: Walter (b.1679); Janet (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1688). He is probably the resident in Westerhouses recorded in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It seems likely that he and his wife are related to the Walter Armstrong who married Isobel Smith in Roberton in 1686. James (1680/1–1743) blacksmith at Longtown. He had at least 3 children who died young: Archibald (b.1722/3); Mary (b.1725/6); and Agnes (b.1725/6). He was buried in old Wilton Cemetery. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Ashybank in 1709 when he married Helen Turner. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘Heap burnfoot’ in 1725. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Aitken and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); Agnes (b.1723); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were James and Robert Easton. It is possible he was the same as the blacksmith at Longtown. He is surely related to John, who was blacksmith at Stirches and recorded at Heapburn at about the same time. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Lees and their children included James (b.1766). James (18th C.) married Jean Davidson in 1775. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Elliot in 1793. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Appletreehall. He substituted to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the James who married Margaret Oliver in 1800. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in 1809. James (1785–1855) born in Oxnam, son of John. He was blacksmith in Hawick at 5 Melgund Place, and before that at Cauldmill. He may have been a grandson of John, blacksmith at Heap. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as blacksmith and mill-wright on Melgund Place along with William (presumably his son). In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Melgund Place. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Kennedy and she died in 1872, aged 86. Their children included: John (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; William (b.1807), born in Melrose Parish; James (1809–37); Janet (1811–70); Isabel (1813–29); Robert (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Margaret, teacher; Charles Kennedy (b.1822); Alexander (b.1824), who was blacksmith at Appletreehall; Joan (1824/5–82), who married shoemaker William Burnet; Thomas Young (b.1827), watchmaker, who emigrated to Australia; Gilbert (b.1830); and Jessie. Most of their children were born in Cavers Parish, with Thomas recorded at Cauldmill. He is buried in old Wilton Kirkyard. A story is told of how a stranger sought shelter from the rain in Cauldmill Smiddy in the early 1820s, and after he quoted some lines of poetry the visitor confessed that he was the author, William Knox, whereupon he was invited in for a meal and conversation. James (b.1805/6) stocking-maker, who was one of the 5 men tried for mobbing and assault during the 1837 election in Hawick. He was the only one found not guilty; this was largely because of a technicality, with the indictment saying he chased one of the men into the house of Jean Turnbull (nee Rid dell), while it was actually the house of her son George. James (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He was probably the first Session Clerk of the new church, serving until 1855. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Mary (b.1822). James ‘Jamie’ (b.1805/6) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a grocer on the Howegate and then Burgh Officer and Halberdier in Hawick from about 1860. He was the Burgh Officer for a while along with ‘Tam-a-Linkin’, then with Michael Wintrup. He was noted as a wit. He also looked after the town’s poor house for many years. It is said that he was well liked in the town, and that even the beggars respected him. He married Margaret Shiel, and their children included: Agnes (b.1831), who married house painter James Smith (probably no relation); William (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Catherine (b.1838). He lived at 4 Loan according to the 1861 census.
James (b.1810/1) farmer at Templehall and proprietor of Harwood Sawmill. He was at Harwood Mill in 1841 and listed there in 1861 as farmer of 1000 acres, employing 3 labourers. He was still recorded as farmer at Harwood Mill in 1868. His wife was Betty and their children included Thomas, Mina, Betty, William, James and Peter. The Jane Smith (aged about 70) living with him in 1841 was probably his mother. He was probably the ‘Jamie Smith of Harwood Mill’ listed among local ‘Hard-riding Dick’s’ in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865); he was said to be a keen fox-hunter. James (b.1823/4) painter, son of whip and thong maker John. He was a grandson of James ‘Deacon’ Dryden, father of John and grandfather of Elliot Cowan. He was Cornet in 1772. He moved to Manchester in 1872. He was Mr. James (b.1717) son of Howegate grocer and Burgh Officer James Smith. Their children were: Margaret Shiell (b.1850), who married Allan Watt; Elizabeth (b.1851); Hannah; John (b.1856); Jemima Catherine (b.1863); Ann; Agnes Ellior (b.1869); Agnes Ellior (again, b.1870); and Helen (b.1873). The family lived at 8 Howegate, then 3 Green Wynd, and then 4 Loan, where they kept a ‘house of refuge’. After his wife’s death he lived at 1 Silver Street and lastly 19 Howegate. He was still alive in 1901. James Turnbull (d.1905) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Smith. In 1900 he married Margaret Murray (b.1875), who was from Galashiels. Their children were Peggie, Mary and Thomas James (born after his father’s death). He died following a bad fall from his bicycle at ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. His wife was later keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. James Dryden ‘Jamie’ (c.1881–1966) son of John and Annie Cowan, and older brother of Elliot Cowan. He was named after his great-great-grandfather ‘Deacon Dryden’, who was Cornet in 1772. He moved to Manchester with the rest of his family when he was young. He became a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects and was employed by a brewer’s in Manchester for many years. After retiring he moved back to Hawick, where he and his wife settled at 11 Backdamgate. He was a keen student of Hawick’s dialect and became known as a local historian, who was often consulted. He was also a rugby enthusiast, acting as correspondent for Manchester papers, for both Rugby Union and Rugby League. He provided the illustrations for ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. He accompanied his mother to Gallipoli in 1926, as part of an organised family memorial trip, and wrote about it for the Hawick Express; they were able to walk on the battlefield where his brother William had fallen, and he made a sketch while they were there. He was a member of the Archaeological Society Committee and contributed an article to the Transactions in 1958. He acted as Bard for Lodge 111, and was also a member of the Callants’ Club. He also was donor of the J.D. Smith bequest, which benefited several local causes. He was described as a ‘small and dapper figure’. He married his cousin Jane Hunter Scott. He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. Jenny nee Ferguson (1908–74) born in Stirling, she trained as a teacher in Dundee, being qualified as a primary teacher with a specialisation in music. She first taught in Yetholm, then moved to Manchester, after marrying local baker Robert T. The couple moved to Hawick in the late 1930s, where her husband established his bakery business on Bridge Street. She taught at Drumlanrig 1964–71, and while there wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! for the Cornet’, to words written by her Primary 5 class. She also wrote a song ‘The Jewel in the Crown’ for the 1970 Burnfoot song competition. In 1971 she remarried, becoming Mrs. Dorward. She died at the Cottage Hospital and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (16th C.) doctor recorded in 1581/2 being in Riddell and also in Lilliesleaf. He witnessed the marriage contract between Helen, daughter of Alexander Gledstains and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs), as well as an instrument of sasine between Alexander Gledstains (Burgess of Selkirk) and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs to Gavin Eliott). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably: James (b.1714); Margaret (b.1715); John (b.1717) and William (b.1719). John (18th C.) blacksmith in Stitches.
Smith

living at ‘Heap foord’ in 1744 and at ‘Heapburn’ in 1747. In the records for the division of Wilton Common in the 1760s he is referred to as ‘John Smith, smith in Heip, on the lands of Stirkshaws’. In 1735 he married Margaret Dryden (1712/3–51) in Wilton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1736), who died aged 7; Margaret (b.1739); John (b.1739), who died young; Alexander (b.1741); Isobel (b.1744); and Elspeth (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were John Lockie and John Scott, in 1744 were James Dryden (probably related to his wife) and Walter Scott and in 1747 were James Dryden (again) and Thomas Laidlaw. He seems likely to have been closely related to James, who was also at Heapburn about the same time. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was ‘Cicil Spinnie’ (or ‘Spindie’). Their children included: James (b.1751), George (b.1752), James (b.1754) and Agnes (b.1756). Helen (b.1758), an unnamed son (b.1760), Margaret (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1767) may also be his children. John of Spittal (18th C.) made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. John (18th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1790. John (18th C.) resident at Scaw Mill in Wilton Parish, when he paid the cart tax in 1791. It is possible he was the same as the Stirches blacksmith. John (d.1794) blacksmith at Heap. He must have been son of the previous blacksmith John (or else he was the same man and quite old when he died). He may have been father or grandfather of James, the blacksmith at Cauldmill and at Melgund Place, Hawick. He died at Cavers and is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. Isabel, who died in 1807, aged 27, was buried along with him, and so probably a daughter. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Chain (or ‘Chine’ or ‘Shien’) in Hawick in 1757 and had children: Christian (b.1758); James (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); William (b.1766, probably ‘Wull the Cutler’); and John (b.1768). He was listed as a weaver in the 1764 baptism, when the witnesses were clothiers Gavin and Thomas Turnbull, and also in 1766 when the whole congregation were witnesses. The witnesses in 1768 were fellow weavers Francis Cairns and Robert Chisholme. The death of his son Robert is recorded in 1798, his daughter Christian in 1800 and his wife Betty Chain in 1799. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in at least the period 1793–97, when he was working for George Douglas. He was recorded in Cavers in 1792. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isobel (b.1790), Christian (b.1792) and John (b.1794). John (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Newcastleton. He is probably the resident of the village recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1817 his inn was used as the meeting place for creditors of a bankrupt merchant in Newcastleton. He was listed as proprietor of a public house in Newcastleton on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was probably the John, innkeeper in Newcastleton, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the carter of that name recorded as male head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. John (b.1773/4) from England, he was a shoemaker on the Mid Raw in 1841. Jane and John, who lived with him were probably his children. John (d.1811) weaver in Hawick, son of Walter. John (b.1794/5) whip and thong maker on the Howegate. He lived at 8 Howegate, being there in 1841 and 1851, and was at 3 Brougham Place by 1861. He married Elizabeth Dryden (b.c.1801). Their children included: Christian (b.1820/1); James (b.1823/4), who was Cornet in 1846; Helen (b.1826/7); and Walter (b.1835), who was a shoemaker. He could be the John who was born to John in Cavers Parish in 1794, but he was also related to William, ‘Wull the Cutler’. His sister Jenny is said to have gone to Flodden in about 1820 and returned with green twigs to adorn the Cornet’s followers in the procession to the Games. John (19th C.) gamekeeper for the Earl of Minto. A story is told in the 1881 Border Counties’ Magazine of how he kept a pet fox on a chain; it would deliberately scatter barley within reach so that it could catch a hen when it got close enough. John (b.1810/1) born in Edinburgh, he was a baker in Denholm. His shop was probably on Main Street. He married Margaret Eckford and their children included Helen, William, John and Catherine J. John (1827–69) of Darnick (near Melrose). Last major head of the family architects and builders business, John & Thomas Smith. They were responsible for many of the finest Victorian buildings around Melrose, as well as the North Brig in Hawick, the Wallace Statue at Dryburgh and the Hermitage Water Bridge. He was commissioned to make a survey of the Auld Brig of Hawick before it was demolished in 1851. He was also an early photographer, who took photographs of Queen Victoria’s visit in 1867. He added an east wing to Darnick Tower. His sister Mary married John Elliot of Binks. The Smith Memorial Hall was built in Darnick in his memory. John (19th C.) one of the first professional cricketers in town, playing for the Wilton team in the late 1850s. John (1856–1904) son of Cornet James and sister of Margaret, the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet in 1881, with his own father as Acting Father. He also served as Acting Father in 1886 (2 years after his own father served in this role). He married Annie Cowan, and their sons were: James Dryden; William, who died at Gallipoli; and Elliot Cowan, who wrote ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. A plumber by trade, he moved with his family to Old Trafford, Manchester in the 1980s. There he became the first Chairman of the Hawick Exiles’ Club. Dying at a young age, he was buried in Hawick, being the first Cornet’s coffin to be draped with the Burgh Standard. Rev. John (1859–1928) born at Haddington, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1888. He was minister at Denholm Free Kirk from 1892 until his death. In 1908 he helped compile the notes of Rev. Duncan Stewart into the book ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale and Neighbouring Districts’. He married Agnes Hume. His daughter was a geography teacher at the High School in the 1950s and the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet at Charlotte Chapel in Edinburgh, he became Pastor of Hawick Baptist Church in about 2018.

Rev. Martin trained as a Pastor at Charlotte Chapel in Edinburgh, he became Pastor of Hawick Baptist Church in about 2018.

Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Patricius Smyth’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably also local.

Peter (18th/19th C.) brother of Thomas (tenant of Hartshaugh Mill), he was factor to Elliot of Wolfelee. He was resident in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 and 1790 when he had children baptised. He was also tenant of Kirknowe in 1797, when he owned 2 horses. In 1807 he bought the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile (part of Kirknowe) and farmed there. He married and had at least 7 children: Peter (b.1788), who married Helen Scott; Isobel (b.1789); Betty (b.1790); Jane; Margaret (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); and Walter (possibly b.1802) who emigrated to America. James (b.1793) was probably also his child. Peter (b.1780) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankleburn’. He farmed at Harwood Mill. He was probably the Peter at ‘Harrot’ who subscribed to 6 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Ellen Turnbull, whose sister Mary married his brother Archibald. They had a large family, including: Thomas (b.1801); Walter (b.1803); Peter (b.1804); Archibald (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808), who married J. Blake; Mary; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mark (b.1815), who died at Lanton; Turnbull (1816–79), farm steward, who died at Hawick; Nelly (b.1818), who married W. Elliot; and Isobel (1821–1898), who died in Hawick. He is said to have been very strict in all things relating to religion. Peter (b.1788) eldest son of Peter, he was factor for James Elliot of Wolfelee in the early 1800s and lived at Kirknowe. In 1823 he married Helen Scott, one of the Scotts of Woodhouse and related to the Turnbulls who farmed at Spittal. Their children were: Isobel or Isabella (1824–49), who married Robert, son of Robert Stewart, farmer at Hawthornside; Peter (b.1827), who married Isobel Oliver; Betty (b.1830); John (b.1832); and Agnes Scott (b.1835). Peter (1804–86) son of Peter, who was the eldest son of Thomas. He became farmer at Harwood Mill, where he was born. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Parkhead in Roberton Parish, in 1851 was at Hunthill and in 1861 he was farm steward at Greenriver. His cousin Mary married Robert Purdom of Hawick. He himself married Elizabeth ‘Betty’ Ronaldson Dunlop in Coldstream. Their children were: Mary (b.c.1839); Peter (b.1841), who died at Jarrow-on-Tyne; Helen Turnbull (‘Ellen’, b.1843), who married A. Telfer; Williamina (or Mina, b.1847), who married Sandbed baker John Young (and was mother-in-law of J.E.D. Murray); and Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1852), who emigrated to Queensland. There is a story told of him encountering a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) when riding past Mackside Demnings. He was active until a few years before his death, which occurred at Swanshiel. Peter (b.1825/6) toll-bar keeper at Deanbrae in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter, Dorothy. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably a tenant of Douglas of Cavers. He may be related to the two Thomases who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) Hawick Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a resident of Whitfield in 1751 and 1769. He was also farmer in Newton, in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Pott, resident of Borthaugh, in 1751. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Alison Irvine (or ‘Irvine’) in 1748, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Ancrum Parishes. Their children included: John (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); James (b.1755); Janet (b.1758); Nelly (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); and Thomas (again, b.1769). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. The witnesses in 1769 were James Scott (probably the farmer at Boonraw, who was also an Anti-Burgher) and Walter Irvine (who was surely related to his wife), the baptism carried out by Mr. Arnot, who had previously been connected with the Green Kirk in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was tenant of ‘House and yard’, with rent of 10s. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Silverbuthall in 1791. He married Isobel Ormiston and their children included: Esther (b.1791); and Robert (b.1794). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish, possibly the same place as ‘Swinestiel’. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 as owner of 2 horses. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenantancy Book in 1799. Robert (b.1837/8) dyestaine dyker in the Hawick area around the 1860s. In the 1861 census he was in Wilton Parish, married to Mary and with daughter Janet. Robert Tait (d.1958) baker and rugby player. He played prop and was capped 7 times for Scotland in 1929 and 1930. He married Jenny Ferguson, who wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! For the Cornet’. Spending some time in Manchester, in the late 1930s he returned to Hawick and took over the bakery business of W. & R. Johnstone on Bridge Street. Ronald ‘Ron’ High School Geography teacher who was Assistant Headteacher 1984–2002. He has been heavily involved in Hawick R.F.C., co-editing ‘The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick rugby’ (1998) and also ‘Glimpses of Green’ (2002). He has been a Scottish Borders Councillor and from 2011 until 2013 served as Hawick’s Honorary Provost. He was Rotary Club President from 2020. Thomas (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. They may have been related to Robert, who was also named. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Murray and William Smith. Thomas (17th/18th C.) born at Wells in Rulewater. He was described in 1717 as ‘now keeper of ane puppie pleay’ (perhaps a dog entertainment of some kind) when he was fined for assault in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. Thomas (1757–1827) brother of Peter, it is unclear where the previous generation came from. He was tenant at Hartshaugh Mill when his children were baptised in 1785 and 1788. He was listed as miller on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was owner of 2 horses. He is still listed as miller of Hartshaugh Mill recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Their children were: Peter (b.1780), who married Ellen Turnbull of Harwood Mill; Patrick (b.1781); Robert; Archibald (b.1782), who later emigrated to America; Thomas (b.1784); Andrew (b.1785); Isobel (b.1787); Walter (b.1788), who may have died young; Betty (b.1790); Margaret (b.1791), who married William Crozier; Mary (b.1793), who married Robert Purdom of Hawick in 1817; and Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1795), who married John Dalgleish. He secondly married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Oliver in Southdean Parish in 1807. Their children were: Oliver (b.1809), who married Helen Waters and emigrated to America; James (b.1810), who married Elizabeth Henderson; Mina, who married W. Telfer, farmer at Roundabouts; Elizabeth, who died in 1864, and may have been the same as Betty; William, who emigrated to New Zealand; and another Oliver, who may have been a twin of William and died young. He is probably the ‘T.
Thomas. (18th/19th C.) from England, in 1789 he married Margaret Paterson in Roberton Parish. Their son Thomas (b.1790) was baptised in Roberton. Thomas, (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1795). Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Heronhaa near Southfield. In 1797 he married ‘Grizzle’ (or Grizel) Tait, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Wilton Parishes. They had 5 children: Sir Andrew (1797–1872), army surgeon and famous zoologist; Joan (b.1800); Barbara (b.1802); James (b.1804); and Agnes Anne (b.1807). All their children were baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may be the Thomas whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. Rev. Thomas (1828–1901) born at Powfoot in Dumfriesshire, son of John and Marion Murray. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Annan Presbytery. He was ordained as minister of Ewes Kirk 1853 and remained there until his death. In 1856 he married Margaret, daughter of William Sutherland Fraser, jeweller in Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes (1857–1913), who married Alexander Simson from Melrose; and Marion (b.1860), who married James Calder, doctor in Jamaica. Thomas (b.1827/8) born in Cavers Parish, son of blacksmith James. He was a watchmaker on the Howegate (near the top of the east side), listed in the 1851 census and in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1837) son of James and Elizabeth Henderson, and grandson of miller Thomas. He is recorded as a keen follower of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He was tenant farmer at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He married a distant cousin, Mary Smith. Their children were: James Turnbull; Elizabeth: Thomas, who emigrated to Canada; and Peter Smith, who farmed at Coldtown. Thomas Aird (b.1854) son of William and Isabella Aird, who was sister of Thomas Aird. He was brought up at Bridgehaugh near Selkirk. He became tenant farmer at Kirkton and Bedrule, remaining at Bedrule 1898–1921. He was a keen hunter and said to be a heavy man, requiring specially bred horses. He had at least 3 children, Isabel, Jessie and William (who all followed the Jedforest Hunt when young). Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) tenant farmer at Tythehouse. He was a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hunt. His eldest son was James. Thomas (b.c.1870) son of John James, who was born in Malta, and Isabella Morrison. Although born in County Durham, he grew up in Hawick, where his father was a hand-loom weaver and later publican. He also worked as a spirit merchant in Hawick. In 1901 he married Margaret, daughter of James Blaikie. Their son John James was born in Wilton in 1902. About 1907 he emigrated to Rainy River, Ontario, his wife coming later. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th/20th C.) local bowler, who also laid out at least 30 greens, including the one for Wilton Bowling Club. Turnbull (1816–79) son of Peter and grandson of the first known Thomas of Rulewater. He was a farm steward, who died in Hawick. Walter (d.bef. 1811) weaver in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the son of John and Betty ‘Shien’ born in Hawick Parish in 1762. He may also be the Walter who married Helen Gibson in Hawick in 1789 and had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick. His son John, also a weaver, died in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Walter (b.1787/8) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Scaw Mill near the Dean. He may have been son of John, who was previously at Scaw Mill. He was recorded as miller there in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was farmer there on the 1841 census, married to Janet and with daughter Mary. He was still alive in 1861. Thomas, who was living at Scaw Mill Stable in 1841 may have been his son. Walter (b.1792/3) thong maker of the High Street, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1841 he was at Miller’s Close. His wife was Janet and their children included Helen and Isabella. His mother may have been Helen. He was a widower by 1851. Walter (d.1840) weaver in Hawick. William (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving John Geddes in Branxholme. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion ‘Hellin’ and their children included: George (b.1656); and Agnes (b.1660). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1690. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1721, 1723, 1726 and 1729. He may be the William who got married in Kirkton in 1712 (with no wife’s name given). His children may have included Margaret (b.1713), Marion (b.1715), George (b.1721), John (b.1723), Helen (b.1726), Euphan (b.1729), Bessie (b.1731) and Jane (b.1735). Perhaps the same William was recorded at Denholm in 1715. William ‘Wull the Cutler’ (1766–c.1833) son of John and Betty ‘Chine’ and was related to the Hawick family that produced 2 Cornets in the 19th century. He was a wright by trade, making the first ‘spinning jennies’ in Hawick. He was known as a very snappy dresser in the late 18th century, and was particularly vain about his hair. He apparently took the first taste of the ‘Auld Brig gin’ (a keg of water) in the joke perpetrated on the exciseman by Wat Inglis. He took up fishing late in life. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘cutler & basket maker’ on the High Street. He was nephew of Catherine Cheyne, who was long-time domestic servant of the Gledstains of Hilliesland; from her he gained possession of the ‘Gledstane Bible’, which he passed on to merchant Andrew Irvine. There is a portrait of him by Adam Brown - ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson’s creed is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’ [HI].

William (b.c.1785) born in Oxnam Parish, son of John. He was probably brother of James, blacksmith in Denholm, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is also listed in 1835 as a joint proprietor in Denholm with William Barrie, hosier. He probably lived on Westside. His wife was Elizabeth Anandale, and their children included Catherine and Margaret. He may be the William, at Hayknowe, whose model plough (for which he won a premium at Kelso in 1848) was presented to the Museum in 1857. William (19th C.) perhaps born on the English side of the Border, he married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. Their children were: James; Joan; William; Helen (b.1829), who married William Stewart in Hawthornside; Thomas (b.1831); Anne (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). His sister Mary married William Redpath, who worked at Weens.

William (19th C.) blacksmith of Hawick, probably son of James. He is listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint tenant along with James. In Pigot’s 1837 directory ‘Jas. & Wm. Smith’ are listed as blacksmiths on Melgund Place. He does not appear on the censuses of 1841–61, but is listed in Rutherford’s 1866 directory as blacksmith on Melgund Place. William (b.1803/4) from Stow, he was a mason living at Commonside Bankhead in 1841 and ‘Bowanhillbridge’ in 1851. His wife was Isabel and their children included Bridget, William, Alexander, Adam and Helen. William (b.1822/3) from England, he was listed as ‘Railway Gaffer’ in Newcastleton in 1861. He was on South Hermitage Street, lodging with carter Francis Scott. He is probably the Bill Smith who was in charge of bringing the first locomotive engine by road from Carlisle: the engine bogged down in mud and toppled a number of times, falling on him and killing him. William (19th C.) farmer at Learmouth, Cornhill. In the 1860s he was a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. Rev. William Grierson (d.1870) born in Edinburgh, eldest son of James. He was educated at Glasgow University and ordained minister of Fintry in 1840. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert John, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1861. He married Hannah Grierson of Bridgenorth, who died in 1891. They had a son Alfred William, who died young. He wrote a description of Fintry Parish. Rev. William (b.1840) born in Oldhamstocks, son of David and Ann Thompson. He graduated M.A. from the University of Edinburgh in 1868. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1870–77. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1877. William Walter (1852–1942) born in Hawick, son of gamekeeper Thomas and Ellen Robson. He worked as gardener in various English country houses and emigrated to New Zealand in about 1875. He continued to work as a gardener. He held the view that many native species would be driven extinct by the effects of colonisation and so began to collect native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. In 1903 he was appointed to the commission charged with putting the Scenery Conservation Act into effect. He was later appointed curator of Pukekura Park, New Plymouth. It appears he was not easy to work with, holding down positions typically for only a few years at a time. However, he remained a sought-out authority on New Zealand natural history until his death, at New Plymouth, in his 90th year. He married Mary Foreman and had at least 7 children. Rev. William (1855–91) born in St. Fergus, Peterhead, son of a blacksmith. He studied at the Free Church College in Aberdeen and was ordained by the English Presbyterian Church in Scarborough. He then assisted at several churches, included Roberton. He came to Wolfelee Free Kirk to help while Rev. William Russell was ill in 1890. He was then inducted in 1891 (although some of the congregation objected that he was not himself in good enough health to take on the full task). He collapsed in the middle of his second sermon.
as minister and died about a month later, leaving a widow and young child. He married Agnes Shewan Kerr and their only child was John Kerr (b.1890). William (1893/4–1915) son of John and Annie Cowan, brother of Elliot and James. He became a calico designer in Manchester, but enlisted with the Territorials in Hawick, becoming a Corporal in the 1/4th K.O.S.B. He was killed at Gallipoli in the disastrous offensive of 12th July 1915. His name is recorded on the Helles Memorial (formerly written ‘Smycht’ and other variants).

Smith an Telford’s (smith-an-tel-furdz) n. hosiery factory on Lothian Street. It consists of several parts of different height, built over a period of time in the early 20th century. One section has a mansard roof, a ‘modern movement’ roof, and there are windows on the curved corner where Lothian Street meets Allars Bank. Recently the building was used by Douglas, and then by an antique dealers.

S.M.T. (es-en-tee) n. Scottish Motor Traction Company, which took over the main Hawick coach routes from Border Motor Transport about 1930, and ran bus service for about 50 years. They acquired the Borders-based company Brooke and Amos in 1926 and later Adam Graham and the Border Motor Transport Co. As well as the Edinburgh to Carlisle service, they ran bus lines around Hawick, as well as transporting mill workers. The firm became Scottish Omnibuses in 1949 and the local fleet was known as Eastern Scottish. The colours of the bus fleet were a distinctive green, later becoming green and cream. After de-regulation of bus services, the name of the operator (and the quality of service) changed several times, e.g. to Lowland Scottish and First. The offices were in Oliver Place and the main bus depot was in Dovecot Street, which closed in the 1980s.

smuggling (snu-glin, -gu-lin) n. smuggling, the trade in goods without paying duties. This was rampant in the Hawick area in the 17th and 18th centuries and on into the 19th. Before the Union, the difference in duties meant that salt, skins and malt were smuggled into England, and wool smuggled into Scotland. In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a brisk local business in smuggling whisky south of the Border, because of the large difference in duties. This was particularly after the increase on whisky duty in 1799. The favourite source of goods locally was from Capt. Daniel Fleury, who would land his boat at Boulmer in Northumberland, from where ‘Boomer-men’ would secretly carry goods over the Border. There was also a vigorous trade in black market salt, again encouraged by increased taxation. Smugglers were pursued by the excise officers. In the 18th century there was a collector, 2 supervisors and 18 officers in Teviotdale, and by the 19th century there were 28 mounted Revenue Officers employed in Roxburghshire. In 1836 the minister of Hobkirk records that ‘smuggling and illicit distilling are not now practised’.

Snaberlee (snā-bur-lee) n. area just to the east of where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel, marked as ‘Snaberlee Rig’ on modern Ordnance Survey maps. There was formerly a small thatched cottage at Snaberlee Brae, inhabited by a lone woman until the late 19th century. In the early 1750s this was the site of open air sermons as part of the Secession movement in this parish. The farm was acquired by William Manderson from the Laird of Whithaugh and in 1811 valued at £23 8s (the origin of the name is probably from the Old Norse personal name ‘Snæbjorn’; it occurs as ‘Snæbjorn’ on Blaeu’s 1662 map and is ‘Snæberly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Sunaberlie’ in 1665, ‘Snaberlie’ in 1666 and ‘Snaberly’ in 1811).

the Snoot Kirk

the Snoot Kirk (thu-snoo’-kirk) n. small former church in the Borthwick valley, built shortly after the Disruption of 1843 as Roberton Free Church, also known as Roberton United Presbyterian Kirk. The dissenting congregation first held meetings in the joiner’s yard at Deanburn- hagh, before being given the ground at Parkhill- hagh by John Chisholme, with the church being built very quickly. It was reached from the main road via a footbridge. By 1852 the declining rural population meant that the church was reduced to a preaching station; it picked up again later, but always had a struggling existence. It switched from Selkirk Presbytery to Jedburgh Presbytery in 1880. The building was renovated in 1908/9, when a vestry was also built. It continued to be used as a church until 1927, and the congregation formally merged with Roberton Kirk in 1930. The land reverted to the Chisholme estate and was gifted to the Scottish Youth Hostel Association by Mr. Bruce of Chisholme in 1935. It was then used by the Youth Hostel Association, particularly as a pony trekking centre. The building succumbed to dry rot in the mid-1990s. A roll of the ministers is: John Dow 1845–52; James Logan around 1860: Thomas W. Paterson 1889–1900: Alexander Cameron 1906–11; David Brunton 1912–25.

the Snuffin’ (thu-snu-fin) n. ceremony taking place at the Kirkstile, near the site of the western end of the Auld Brig, early on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. Snuff is dispensed to the waiting crowd, harkening back to an old social custom of passing round the snuff box during some convenient halt in any proceedings. There is also a more fanciful story told that when the band returned from Hornshole in 1514 they found an old man partaking of snuff on the Auld Brig (long before tobacco came to the old world!). Formerly the ceremony took place on the Thursday evening on the Auld Brig, and was simply a private habit indulged in by the Burgh Officers and band members. It slowly became an accepted part of the traditions. After the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851 it was discontinued for several years, but subsequently restarted through the efforts of William Norman Kennedy, who provided a horn mull. The Thursday evening ceremony ceased in the 1870s. In 1881 the ceremony is recorded involving ‘many hundreds’. The ceremony was again revived by the Ceremonial Committee in 1887, when the sons of W.N. Kennedy undertook to again be at the Snuffing with their father’s horn mull. George O. Murray also provided a horn mull in 1889, or possibly just the snuff. Since those days the Snuffing has grown in popularity, was extended to the Friday morning, and now is restricted to the Friday morning only. The original horn mull is still in use. Since 1921 the song-singer has been in charge of distributing loose snuff from the horn, in a melee at the Kirkstile, protected by two bodyguards! This happens when the Drums and Fifes reach the site of the Auld Brig, shortly after 6 a.m. After the Song Singer reaches the Tower Knowe he throws small packets of snuff down from a window to the people below; these packets are highly sought after, even although the taking of snuff is now a thing of the past. It is traditional for the crowds to disperse to nearby hostelries for rum and milk refreshments afterwards. There is a short film clip showing the Snuffing of 1905 and others in 1929, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – ‘It was mebbe a melee ootside bit in the shop itsel was leike the snuffin at the Commin Ridin!’ [HEX1966], ‘At Snuffin’ when ee hear the drum Efter ee’ved milk an rum Want ti laugh, want ti greet, Want ti be nible on eer feet’ [MB], ‘A had never ever seen the Snuffin ceremony until the first time that A turned up’ [HD].

Somervel see Somerville

Somerville (su-mur-vil) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He married Janet Anderson in 1811 and their children include: William (b.1813); and James (b.1816). The 1813 baptism was witnessed by James Somerville, Nanny Thomson and Nanny Mein. Euphemia née Eckford (d.1928) daughter of Hawick grocer John Eckford, she married George, who was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. She lived in Denholm and bequeathed money, which was used to purchase property, including buildings around the arch on Sunnyside, where she had lived. It was hoped that rental would maintain the Somerville Trust, which supplied a nurse for Denholm, but eventually the moneys dwindled and the properties were sold. Hugh (17th/18th C.) ‘agent’ who witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1721. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Walter, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw had remission for resetting him in his crimes. Mary née Fairfax (1780–1872) daughter of Sir William Fairfax (one of Nelson’s Captains), she was born in the Manse at Jedburgh, home of her mother’s sister Martha Charters and Rev. Thomas Somerville. In 1804 she married a naval officer, Samuel Greig (Russian Consul for Britain, whose father had been the man who had brought Hobkirk’s Adam Armstrong to Russia), who was a distant cousin; he died 3 years later. She was in Jedburgh on the evening of the False Alarm of 1804. She had a telescope made by James Veitch of Inchbonny, was well acquainted with Sir David Brewster and also got to know Sir Walter Scott. In 1812 she secondly married her cousin William Somerville (1771–1860), eldest son of Dr. Thos., who was physician to Chelsea Hospital. Despite only 1 year of formal education, she educated herself at the family’s Burntisland home and became a mathematician and science writer. In fact she has the distinction of being the first person to whom the word ‘scientist’ was applied, in 1834 in a review of her book ‘On the Connexion of the Physical Sciences’. She translated and annotated Laplace’s work, hypothesized a planet perturbing the orbit of Uranus (which led to the discovery of Neptune), and wrote a popular school geography textbook. She was elected to the Royal Astronomical Society and received many other honours. She spent most of the time from 1838 living in Italy. She was a great supporter of women’s education, and Somerville College, Oxford was named after her. She also has an asteroid and lunar crater named in her honour. A history of her life was written by her daughter Martha. She is buried in Naples. Her children were: Woronzow Grieg (1805–65), a barrister; William George Grieg (1806–14); Margaret Farquhar Somerville (1813–23); Thomas Somerville (1814–15); Martha Charters Somerville (1815–79); and Mary Charlotte Somerville (1817–75).

Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in ye Midle’ in 1623, when Thomas Hood in Ancrum was accused of stealing 2 cows 7 years earlier from him. This was from lands at ‘Plassadge’ in England, the cattle belonging to him and Walter Scott of Todrig. It is unclear if he was tenant in Middle in Cavers Parish or elsewhere. Rev. Thomas S. (d.bef. 1710) minister of Cavers. He was son of James, who was second son of Sir James of Cambusnethan. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1666. He was presented to Cavers in 1674 and ordained there in the following year. It is recorded that the Presbytery had to swear him in at the ‘kirk-stile’, since the church and churchyard were locked up and no keys were to be had from the house of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. The Presbytery were also met by a number of women in the churchyard bearing stones, which they threatened to throw, and called them ‘soul murderers and the devil’s servants’. Given the Covenanting support in Cavers Parish, it is clear that the new Episcopalian minister was not popular! In 1689 he refused to pray for William and Mary and read the Proclamation of the Estates (i.e. refused to embrace the return to Presbyterianism), but he may have continued as minister until 1693 (precisely what the arrangement was is unclear, since there was great confusion after the Revolution). He then moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach (probably in his own lodgings) to some adherents of Episcopalianism and the exiled James II. This group included members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Baptisms are recorded by him in Hawick in 1694 and 1697. He was listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sumervail’, living on the west-side of Hawick, on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is said to have ministered in Hawick along with Francis Scott, ousted minister of Haseendean, and a meeting house was opened at the Kirkwynd (or Playlaw) after the passing of the Act of Toleration in 1712 (but he must already have been dead by then). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands until about 1700. He married Miss Burnside and their son William was minister of Hawick (i.e., trained as a Presbyterian, despite he himself remaining true to his Episcopalian principles), while their daughter Dorothea married William Hadden, one of the masters of Edinburgh High School in 1710, and they had one other daughter. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1741–1830) historian, born in Hawick, son of Rev. William. He was orphaned at about age 17 and educated in Hawick, Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. One of his close early friends was Samuel Charters, who would become minister at Wilton (and whose cousin he would marry). He was for a while tutor of the young Lord Minto. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1764 and presented to Minto Parish in late 1766 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, becoming minister there early the following year. He was presented to Jedburgh in 1773, translated there the following year, and this is where he spent the rest of his life. He was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s. He obtained a doctorate from St. Andrews University in 1789 and became one of his Majesty’s Chaplains for Scotland in 1793. He was arrested while visiting the House of Commons about 1798, being mistaken for the accomplice of a notorious swindler. In 1798 he was offered the Chair of Church History at Edinburgh University, but declined, and had a yearly pension from 1800. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He wrote several political and historical books, including ‘Candid Thought on American Independence’ (1780), ‘The History of Political Transactions and of Parties from the Restoration of King Charles II to the Death of King William III’ (1792), ‘Observations on the Constitution and State of Britain’ (1793), ‘The Effects of the French Revolution with respect to the interests of humanity, liberty, religion, and morality’ (1793) and ‘The History of Great Britain, during the Reign of Queen Anne’ (1798), as well as several sermons published in Kelso, Hawick and Edinburgh. He also wrote descriptions of Jedburgh and Ancrum for the Statistical Accounts. His posthumously published book ‘My own life and times 1741–1814’ (1861) contains some valuable anecdotes relating to Hawick in the latter 18th century, and describes some aspects of everyday life in the neighbourhood in those times. He married Martha Charters (daughter of Samuel, Solicitor of Customs for Scotland), who died in 1809 and they had 3 sons: William, Inspector of Military Hospitals, and second husband of his cousin Mary Somerville the mathematician; Samuel, solicitor; and James Burges, who died young. They also had 4 daughters: Christian, who married Walter Riddell of Friar’s Glen, 3rd son of Patrick Riddell of Muselee; Janet (or Jenny), who married Joseph Pringle of Ferney Green, Consul General at Medeira, and secondly Lieut.-Gen. Henry Elliot of Rosebank (son of Capt. Robert, brother of the Laird of Harwood); Margaret (d.1843); and Martha, who married William Rutherford, solicitor of Jedburgh. His wife is said to have been a clever woman, who took great care with the education of her children, who were taught by David Brewster (later Sir David). When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest serving minister, in his 90th year. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Sir William (12th/13th C.) son of William of Carnwath. It is said that during the reign of William the Lion he slew a fearful monster, which was terrorising the district of Linton: the place was known as Wormington, and the event is commemorated in a carved stone in wall of the parish church. He was ‘Willelmo de Sumerville’ when he witnessed the granting of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. In 1174 he had the lands conferred on him by the King. He also became Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as the Chief Falconer to the King. Rev. William (1691–1757) son of Thomas, the minister of Cavers, he was minister of Hawick Parish 1731–57, and father of Dr. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1707, became a tutor for the family of Alexander, Lord Elibank, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Duns in 1719. He thereafter spent time in the household of James, Lord Somerville (presumably a relative), managing his business affairs. He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1731 and ordained early the following year. In 1735 he was involved with the Duke of Buccleuch in the sale of land within Dalkeith. He wrote an account of the Parish sometime before 1743 (perhaps in 1738), this being one of the earliest descriptions with any detail. There he mentions an examination he made of the Buccleuch vault under St. Mary’s in 1738; his transcription of stones there was eventually published in James Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’. He is listed at the Manse in 1748, when he paid the window tax in Hawick Parish. In 1733 he married Janet, only daughter of John Grierson, minister of South Queensferry (their post-nuptial contract is in the National Archives); she was said to be a great beauty. Their children included: Agnes (b.1735); James (b.1740), who may have died young; Thomas (b.1741), who became minister at Jedburgh; Jean (b.1742), who probably also died young; William (b.1744), who probably also did not survive; Janet (b.1745); and Helen. The witness in 1741 was schoolmaster James Anderson and the witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (the Bailies at the time). His first wife died in 1749 and in 1753 he secondly married again Isobel (or Isabella) Scott of Whitehaugh, described as ‘a maiden-gentlewoman of about 80’, and she died in 1759. He is probably the ‘Mr. Somervell’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although probably deceased before then). It has sometimes been claimed that he was the original of the ‘little round fat oily man of God’ of James Thomson’s ‘Castle of Indolence’, but others insist that the model was instead an English clergyman, Rev. Patrick Murdock. William (1771–1860) son of Dr. Thomas and Martha Charters, he was born at Minto. He trained as a surgeon and entered the army, travelling on expeditions to the Cape of Good Hope. He also travelled on a Mediterranean expedition against Napoleon and to Canada, where he was inspector-general of hospitals in Scotland and in 1816 had to move to London as a member of the army medical board. In 1806 he married Miss Rutherford of Knowesouth, but she died 2 years later. In 1812 he secondly married his cousin Mary, daughter of Adm. Fairfax, and widow of Samuel Grieg; she is known worldwide as one of the first female mathematicians. It is said that after his marriage he gave up his own ambitions to support his wife’s scientific career. In 1818 he was involved in a legal case over inheritance of Knowesouth, claiming that his first wife’s uncle, a lawyer in Jedburgh, had defrauded him out of liferent on the estate. He became seriously ill in 1838, so that his family wintered abroad and from then on lived mainly on the continent. He died in his 89th year in Florence and is buried in the Protestant cemetery there. William (c.1800–49) shoemaker who lived at Miller’s Close on the High Street. He married Isabella (1807–89), eldest daughter of James Murray, and hence he was uncle of Sir J.A.H. Their children included John, Christian, Jean and James. He may have been born in Kelso, son of William and Mary Weatherhead (also spelled ‘Somervel’, ‘Somervell’, ‘Sumerval’, ‘Summervale’, etc. in early records).

also known as Burnfoot Haugh. Early plans and other documents are in the National Archives.

soor-dook (soor-dook) n., arch. buttermilk or yoghurt (once a popular drink).

soor-faced (soor-fas’d) adj. sour-faced – ‘he’s a sour-faced auld ginv’.

Soorhope (soo-rup) n. Sourhope, farm near the Bowmont Water in the upper part of Morebattle Parish. In the 18th century it was farmed by a brother of William Scott of Thirlstane (the origin is probably ‘the valley of sour pasture’ and the name first occurs in 1544).

soor-kit (soor-ki’) n., arch. a dish of clotted cream (noted by J. Leyden).

soor ploom (soor-ploom) n. a boiled sweet, usually green and with a very acid taste, traditionally made in both Galashiels and Peebles.

sooth (sooth) n., adj. adv. south – ‘Ti the sooth, ayowrt the sweire, stuide Black Law …’ [ECS], ‘…Lookin sooth owre God’s ain country Frae the Vertish Hill’ [IW], ‘Auld Scotland we love thee, the North, East and West, But we live in the South, so we like it the best’ [JCa], ‘…Where since the thunderin engines raced Far sooth to London toun’ [WL], ‘And come I frae sooth or nor-ward, My rest sall but be the same In the dear auld toun in the hollow – For the dear auld toun is hame!’ [WL].

the Sooth (thu-sooth) n. formerly, the South of Scotland district Rugby Union team, which existed through most of the 20th century, and is effectively replaced by ‘the Borders’ team.

Sooth Berryfell (sooth-be-ree-fel) n. another name for the main farm at Berryfell.

Sooth Bright Street (sooth-briet’-stree)’ n. South Bright Street, a street in the West End off Bright Street. The houses were built in 1927, but after restoration work in 1973 they were found to be unsafe and were demolished in 1975. The street was named after statesman and social reformer John Bright.

Sooth Croft Park (sooth-kroft-pawrk) n. Southcroft Park, former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was valued at £73 3s 6d in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still so listed in 1811.

Soothdean (sooth-deen, soo-, sow-din) n. Southdean, hamlet on the A6088 towards the Carter Bar, on the banks of the Jed, formerly written ‘Souden’ and variants. Formerly part of Jed Forest, the name ‘Soothdean’ is fairly synonymous with Chesters, although perhaps more often applied to the upper part of the district. It is also the name of the associated Parish, which extends to Wolfelee and also contains the former Free Church there. The original church dates back to at least the 13th century and was a meeting place for Scottish leaders before Otterburn. A replacement church was built about 1690 and the current one in 1876. The village itself was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and again in 1544. Jock Oliver was recorded living there in 1544. In 1669 the farm of that name was tenanted by James Oliver, David Oliver and Thomas Oliver. William Oliver and David Baptie were there in 1694. James Baptie was tenant there in 1799. An old outhouse in the area was called Peden’s Barn and connected with Covenanters. The settlement has been on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since long before the modern road was developed (around the 1820s). There are many nearby archaeological remains, including hill-forts, settlements and ruined peel towers. Several Bronze Age artefacts found nearby are in Jedburgh Museum, including a flat axe, part of a rapier blade, and a socketed axe. Other items from the area include a greenstone axe, a whinstone hammer-head and 3 small whorls of polished green stone. The Statistical Account of 1794 notes that the region contained several ancient cairns, one of which was found to contain bones, and nearly all of which had been robbed for stones. ‘Souden Kirk: a Border shrine’ was published by John R. Spence in 1951 (the origin is probably a corrupted version of ‘Souden’, the original pronunciation, which may be from the Old English ‘suth dun’, meaning simply ‘the southern hill’ or may be related to Old Welsh for a hill-fort; the name first occurs as ‘Soudon’ in 1275 and has various related forms, including Sudhden in 1291/2, ‘Soudon’ in 1404, ‘Sowdon’ in 1455, ‘Sowdone’ in 1484/5, ‘sowdene’ in 1488/9, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1491/2, ‘Sodaune’ in 1538, ‘Sodene’ in 1539, transcribed as ‘Fowden’ in 1544, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1559, ‘Suddoun’ in 1575, ‘Suddum’ in 1586, ‘Sudan’ in 1638, ‘Suddon’ in 1689 and ‘Souden’ in 1701; ‘Soudan K.’ is marked on Mor- den’s 1687 map of Scotland and ‘K. of Soudann’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Soothdean (sooth-deen) n. region in the hills to the east of Colterscleuch, containing Southdean Rigg (which reaches 354 m) and Southdean Burn (which joins Northhouse Burn). There was also formerly a farmstead here. The lands were once part of Ringwoodfield (marked ‘Sudarig’ on Soothdean Kirk (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-kirk) n. church in Southdean Parish. The original church was first mentioned as early as the 1260s. ‘Ade de Osberneston’ was appointed cleric there by the English King in 1291/2. Adam, the Parson, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It was in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, but it is not known when it was dedicated. The patronage was held by the Douglases, passing to Scott of Branxholme in 1528, reverting to the Crown in about 1537 and recovered by the Earl of Angus in 1542/3. The church consisted of a west tower and a nave, probably of 13th century, together with a chancel, probably added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier chancel). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have revealed information that was important for the skirmish at Newcastle and the battle at Otterburn. The ruins of this original ‘Souden Kirk’ stands just below the level of the main A6088 road, about a mile after Chesters. A commemorative plaque was erected there after excavations by the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1910. At the same time part of the tower was roofed over to hold some of the unearthed stonework, and the site was dedicated as a memorial to the Battle of Otterburn; repair work was carried out on the tower in 2015. A carved super-altar (of sandstone, about 23 cm by 18 cm), probably from the 15th century, was moved to the new church. This original church was abandoned in 1688 when the roof collapsed (on a Sunday, but fortunately after the congregation had left). A second church was built in 1689/90, whose roofless walls stand in the graveyard of the grounds of the new (1876) church near Chesters. This building had no ceiling and it is said that the pauper’s coffin was stored in the rafters, in plain view of the congregation. The new church contains a memorial window to James Thompson, author of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’. The new churchyard is displaced from the church, up on Chesters Brae. The Manse for the Kirk is located to the east of Whiteburn farmstead; it was built in 1795, on the site of the former building; this was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The glebe lands extended to 40 acres. The patronage was held by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme from 1528, then the Earl of Angus from 1542/3. The benefice of the Rectory was held by Douglas of Bonjedward from 1566. The church was linked with Edgerston 1660–73, linked with Hobbkirk in 1773, united formally with Hobbkirk in 1888 and then linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1888–97. It became part of the wider area of Ruberslaw in 2004 (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule and Hobbkirk). The oldest communion token is heart-shaped and made of lead. A roll of the ministers of the church is: Galfrid, Vicar in 1260; Adam of Osberton from 1291/2; Adam, Parson in 1296; Thomas Forest, Rector in 1404; Robert Penwen, from 1424 until at least 1455; John Inglis, Rector in 1471; William Scott, Rector from at least 1482–1491/2; Richard, Parson in 1526/7; Hugh Douglas, Rector at least 1558/9–63; Walter Lyle, Exhorter in 1567; John Douglas, Reader 1574–87; Andrew Clayhills, Minister in 1575; John Scott, Reader 1579–82; William Douglas 1585; Andrew Douglas 1599–1605; George Douglas 1607–08; James Logan, presented 1608; William Weir 1610–26; James Fisher 1626–35; John Davidson 1635–66; John Dargavel 1667–70; George Baptie 1670–88; Thomas Rutherford 1689; Samuel Johnstone 1690–99; Thomas Thomson 1700–16; Thomas Leck, presented 1716; John Inglis 1718–43; John Oliver 1736–55; Robert Muirhead 1756–84; William Scott 1785–1809; John Richmond 1810–47; John Mair 1847–1902; George Henry Donald 1902–06; John R. Spence 1907–50; John Roberts 1951–65; George Urquhart 1966–72; Stephen Goodbrand 1973–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–97 (it is marked ‘Soudan K.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Soothdean Law (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-law) n. Southdean Law, hill near Southdean and also formerly the name of a farm there. In 1669 the tenants were Andrew Douglas and Robert Laidlaw. The hill is on the left hand side of the A6088. It reaches a height of 300 m and contains a fort and settlement, as well as having a triangulation pillar, all on the western peak. The fort consists of a pear-shaped enclosure around the summit, about 50 m by 30 m, and is probably from the early Iron Age (perhaps the first millennium B.C.E.). There is an annex to the Battle of Otterburn. The ruins of this original church were added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier church). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have revealed information that was important for the skirmish at Newcastle and the battle at Otterburn. Soothdean Mill contain evidence of a field-system and rig lines, some running right up to the boundaries of the fort, and hence probably of a similar age. There are also the remains of an old building and enclosure to the north-west, in the direction of Slack’s Tower. 2 Bronze Age socketed axes were found near here, but their location is unknown (it is ‘Sudenlaw’ and ‘Souden Law’ in 1669).

Soothdean Mill (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-mill) n. former corn mill in Southdean Parish, situated on a lade off the Jed Water, just to the east of Chesters village. It was valued at £5 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, 1539 and 1541. Patrick, Janet and Marion Oliver were joint tenants there in 1541, with William and Marion (probably also Oliver, but surname not given) renting one third of the farm. James Shiel was tenant there in the 1680s and 90s. It is referred to in 1738 by the Duke of Douglas’s factor, shortly after it had burned down. Walter Riddell was tenant there in 1797 and Robert Riddell was there in 1799. George Bell was miller and farmer there in 1866. ‘Southdeanmillehead’ is recorded in the late 18th century. There is still a farm in the same location, with evidence of its former use as a corn mill and a saw mill (it is ‘molendini de Sowden’ in 1538, ‘molendini de Sowdesign in 1539, ‘Soden-mylene’ and ‘molendini de Soden’ in 1541, ‘suden milne’ in 1681 and ‘Suden Mylne in 1694’).

Soothdean Parish (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-pa-reesh) n. Southdean Parish, lying along the upper banks of the Jed, crossed by the A6088 road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It is also sometimes referred to as Chesters Parish. The Parish is about 12 miles by 7 miles in size, and is bounded by Jedburgh, Oxnam, Castleton, Hobkirke and part of Northumberland. It was formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was a Rectory of Glasgow, taxed at £5 6s 4d in 1275 and £3 8s in 1376. In early times it was called ‘Suden’, and pronounced that way until fairly recently. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at £5500. In 1678 the lands had the same value, split between the Marquess of Douglas and Gilbert Elliott of Wolflee. It received part of the former Abbotrule Parish in 1777 (including the area having the former church), with a small part moved from Hobkirk in 1793. However, a northern section (bordering on Bedrule, including Gatehousecote and Ruletownhead) was later transferred to Hobkirk Parish. There were 45 men listed there between the ages of 19 and 30 in 1799. It was valued at about £6500 in 1811. Some of the Cheviots are in the Parish, and the highest hills are Carter Fell, Carlintooth Fell, Peel Fell and Wolfelee Hill. Chesters is the main settlement, although it really only grew in the 19th century. The Parish contains a great many ancient forts, remains of peel towers, etc. There are Parish Council books for 1851–1930 in the Borders Archive and the Parish records date back to 1696. In 1834 there were in the Parish: 4 heritors; 20 larger and 18 smaller tenants; about 17,000 sheep; and one ‘alehouse’ at the Carter Bar. The register of births begins in 1696 (with a gap 1700–37 and also in the 1740s) and marriages and deaths in 1736 (but also with gaps); registration was irregular for births, but fairly complete for the proclamation of banns (it is ‘Soudon Parich’ in 1694).

Soothdeanrig (soo-, sooth-deen-rig) n. Southdeanrig, former farmstead near Northhouse, lying on part of Southdean Rig, between the Cromrig and Southdean Burns, south of the Teviot. The lands were included in a set leased by Walter Scott of Brauxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 and stated to be in the Lairdship of ‘Ringwoodfield’. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Southcothrig’ (along with ‘Vestcotrig’ and ‘Bobburg’) where the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson is recorded in 1540. ‘The gud-man of Syntoun and Arche Elliot of Thirlshoup’ (probably Walter Scott of Synton and Archibald Elliot of Thorlshope) rented these lands, along with Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey in 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Satchells (his father or grandfather probably) received the lands of ‘Southinrig’ for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was recorded as part of the land of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. William Clerk was there in 1708. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties, at that point covering 1017 acres and bounded by Northhouse, Phaup, Binks, Bowanhill and Còlterscleuch. James Griew was recorded there in at least 1723–35 and William Main in 1724–29. In 1744 the lands were leased by Thomas Elliot, farmer at Harwood. William Elliot was there in 1748–53, James Griew was tenant in 1751 and Walter Elliot was there in 1757. Gideon Scott was there in 1785 and John Turnbull was herd 1785–97. An enclosed area on the north-east side contained a building and sheepfold, shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Sowdinryg’ in 1500, ‘Sowdenrig’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Soudenrig’in 1621, ‘Sudenrig’ in 1634, ‘Soudenrig’ in 1660, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1661, ‘Suddenring’ in 1663, ‘Suddenrigg’ in 1693, ‘Suddenridge’ in 1708 and ‘Soothdean rigg’ in 1723: it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sudargi’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Sowdenrig’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Southdeanrigg’; see also Soothinrig.

Soothdean Rig (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, lying to the south of the main A6088, being essentially the northern shoulder of Charlie’s Knowe. The area is rich in archaeological remains, around the Carter Burn, as well as further north to Jordan Sike. In particular there are apparent remains of buildings within enclosures.

Soothdean Rig Shiel (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig-sheel) n. shepherd’s cottage on Southdean Rig. Francis Dickson and his son Francis, were shepherds there through much of the 19th century.

Soothdean Schuil (sooth-deen-skil) n. former school in Southdean Parish. It may have been established in the early 17th century. Thomas Turnbull was schoolmaster in 1620 and George Weir in 1622. There were more than 70 pupils in the 1830s. Thomas Armstrong was schoolmaster there from 1825 and his son Richmond Armstrong from 1837. School Board minute books are in the Borders Archive for the period 1873–1919.

Soothfield (sooth-feeld) n. Southfield, farm about 4 miles south of Hawick, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It was previously split into ‘Nether Soothfield’ and ‘Over Soothfield’, and these farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. The name is also used for the general area around the farm. The marshy area just to the north was once dammed and labelled as ‘Mill Dam’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. James Glendinning was a tenant here in 1684 when he was listed among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Adam Laidlaw was there in 1711. Grieves farmed here from at least the 1750s until 1988, when the lease was given up by Walter; this is probably the longest tenancy by a single family of any farm of the Buccleuch Estates. William Clerk was a servant there in 1797. There are several forts, carins and ancient settlements in the vicinity. Several flint and chert implements found in the area around the farm are in the Museum, and some others may be in the National Museum of Antiquities. A spearhead found near here is probably still in the Museum’s collection, and has been classified as Middle Bronze Age. (marked as ‘N. Southfield’ and O. Southfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and also marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland; the name presumably just means ‘the south field’, but it may suggest that it was once part of Hawick Common; there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

Soothfield Gate (sooth-feeld-gā) n. Southfield Gate, former farm, long ruined, near the road end just beyond the Caa Knowe, just after the turn-off for Southfield farm and shortly before the road reaches the Gate Burn at the Troutlawford. The name is also used to refer to the road to Southfield, and hence to the far end of the Common and the Caa Knowe – ‘...And syne, with them, by Southfield Gate, I pray I’ll hear the Burgess-Roll and answer to my name’[JYH] (also written ‘Southfieldgate’; it is marked ‘Southfieldgate ruins of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Sooth Hermitage Street (sooth-her-mi’-eej-stree’) n. South Hermitage Street, part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the south of Douglas Square.

Soothinrig (soo-thin-rig) n. former name for lands at Southdean Rig, being more recently part of the estates of the Duke of Buccleuch and part of Coltersdeuch farm. They were once held by an ancestor of Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells, and given for his services to the Duke (see also Soothdeanrig).

the Sooth Kirk (thn-sooth-kirk) n. name formerly used in Newcastleton for the United Presbyterian Church after it united with the Church of Scotland in 1929. The name was used to distinguish it from the ‘Park Kirk’.

Sooth Liddle Street (sooth-li-dul-stree’) n. South Liddle Street, being the southern extension of North Liddle Street and Mid Liddle Street.

Sooth Port (sooth-pōr) n. South Port, being the gate from town leading south up the Cross Wynd until the mid-18th century. The gate was probably situated a little way up the Wynd, and was once the beginning of the road towards Newcastle. It was recorded being ‘taken down’ in 1732, and may have been more fully removed in 1762 along with the Mercat Cross. A plaque was placed on the Town Hall near the original location by the Callants’ Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the ‘Cross Wynd Port’ or ‘Cross Port’).

Soothron (sooth-rin) n., adj., arch. people from the south, i.e. the English – ‘...for at that period such was the thirst of Southron revenge that things both sacred and civil met with the same treatment’ [WaD], ‘And the fierce rievers swam the currents o’er In hot pursuit of flying Southron foe’ [GWe], ‘... Where pricking and spurring are rife, And the bluid boils up like a sea; But Southrons gand doon i’ the strife! And wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] adj., arch. southern – ‘Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days’ [ECS].

Sooth Synton (sooth-sin’-in) n. former name for the main farm of Synton (or Sinton), to distinguish it from ‘North Synton’ on the opposite side of the Ale valley. It was long the property of the Scotts. The house there was rebuilt in the 18th century and demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. James Scott from South Synton Mill was minister at Ashkirk in the late 1500s (marked with this name on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeni’s 1654 map).

soothwards (sooth-wurdz) adv. southwards – ‘... And, galloping doon the glen, Aye soothwards they disappear; They are riding their raids again For their ain or their neighbour’s gear’ [TK].

the Sootie Kittlin (thu-soo’-ee-kit-lin) n. nickname in use in the 19th century, presumably (somehow) related to a sooty kitten – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumna Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI].

Sooty Knowe (soo’ee-now) n. small hill just south-east of Southfield. It once contained a cairn, marked on the 1926 Ordnance Survey map, but subsequently obliterated by cultivation and quarrying.

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. farm on a side road just south of Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, once the site of a corn mill. It was confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. ‘Dauid Armstrang de Sourby’ witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. The lands were occupied by the Armstrongs into the 17th century. It was valued at £250 in 1671. John Armstrong is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm in 1672 and 1673 and there was a 1685 gravestone for John Armstrong of Sorbie in Ewes Kirkyard. Sorbie was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when it covered 329 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Glendivan, Howgill, Middle and Over Wrae, Staplegordon, lands of the Laird of Rennaldburn and Burnfoot in Westerkirk. Thomas Armstrong leased the farm in 1735. William Borthwick was there in at least 1785–90, Mrs. Borthwick in 1794 and Alexander Borthwick in 1797. Robert Hardie was farmer in 1841 and D. Hardie in 1868. Henry Scott Riddell was born here in a shepherd’s cottage which stood in the plantation near the bridge. A plaque on the bridge commemorates the site. ‘Sorbie Haas’ was the former name used for the road from the Ewes valley to Westerkirk (the same name occurs elsewhere in Scotland and Northern England; it is ‘Sourbi’ in 1462 and ‘Sourby’ in 1456; it is ‘Sourby’ on Blaeni’s 1654 map and ‘Sorby’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Sorbie Hass (sor-bee-hass) n. name used for the road winding between Sorbie and Staplegordon. This was the main route through the lower Ewes valley to the Langholm area until Langholm became a separate parish in 1703. There was an old hawthorn tree at the junction of this road with the main Ewes road, which grew until sometime in the 19th century. It was said to be used as a meeting spot by the monks of Melrose (also written ‘Haas’, the word comes from Old Norse for a pass; the road is labelled on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Sorbie (sor-bee-hass) n. former name for lands in Lid-desdale, near to Sorbiethreis. In the late 1100s Race Fitz Malger granted the whole ‘shaw’ there, and 1 acre next to the shaw, with pasture for 40 cows and their calves, 2 bulls, 10 oxen and 2 horses. This was together with half of the land of Shortbutts, which was also in the territory of Sorbie. The farm of Abbotshaws may recall this early land transfer (it was ‘Sourebi’ in the late 12th century).

Sorbiethreis (sor-bee-triz) n. Sorbiethreis, farm about 3 miles south of Newcastleton. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it extended to 1492 acres and included the farmsteads of High Mangerton, Catheugh and ‘Demmebeck’. It was bounded by the Kershope Burn, Flatt, Mangerton, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Kershope, with the farmhouse clearly shown and a wood of old trees around the Fouty Sike. In 1541 it is listed along with Ragarth and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to eprtain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in 1694. A shepherd here perished during the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. John Amos was a tailor there in 1797. William Armstrong was there in 1841 and 1851; he was killed by the minister of Walton (being mistaken for an intruder), and is buried in Ettleton cemetery. The present farmhouse was built by the Buccleuch Estates and is run as a bed and breakfast. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork on the farm. This is probably the site where ramparts were once removed, revealing paved area on the south side, with some burned material. In 2001 it had the dubious distinction of recording the first Scottish Borders case of foot and mouth disease – ‘A wailing sigh is borne upon the breeze, Athwart the shatter’d pines of Sorbietrees’ [HNo], ‘To Sorbietrees and Larriston, Wi’ news that Wull was deid, And craws micht leeve in peace at last Fre Flatt to Tweeden-heid …’ [DH] (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse ‘saurr’ and Old English ‘treow’, meaning ‘trees at the muddy farm’; it first appears as ‘Sourby’ in 1456, but could be the ‘Southby’ recorded in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale; it is ‘Sorbe et Sorbetrees’ in 1541, ‘Sorbilltrees’ in 1694 and ‘Sorbytrees’ in 1797, 1839 and 1851; it is ‘Sorbi’trees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

sorner (sōr-nur) n., arch. someone who lives off their neighbours, a scrounger – ‘…the country suffered sadly from bands of thieves, and sorters fleeing from labour and living in plenty upon the fruit of other men’s labour’ [WNK]; ‘The land was simply swarming with beggars and sorters, the latter of whom extorted food or help by terrifying the dwellers in lonely farms and cottages’ [JJV].

Sorrowlessfield (so-rō-les-field) n. farm near Earlston. It is traditionally said to have been the only neighbouring farm to which anyone returned from Flodden, but it is actually known to have belonged to a Will Sorules in the 12th century. It was part of the lands owned by Melrose Abbey. Several flint arrow-heads and other implements have been found nearby, and a decorated spindle whorl from there is in the Museum (it is ‘Sorrowlesfield’ in about 1564 and ‘Sorlersfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Southern Uplands (thu-su-thurn-up-lindz) n. range of hills near the Border, generally west of Hawick. It is sandwiched between the Southern Uplands Boundary Fault to the north and the Cheviot hills of England to the south, reaching heights of 800 m and including the Southern Upland Way. The range is dominated by Ordovician and Silurian sedimentary rocks and includes the Carsphairn, Cheviot, Ettrick, Lammermuir, Lowther, Moffat, Moorfoot, Roxburgh and Tweedsmuir Hills – ‘Fold upon fold before me, the uplands stretch afar; A land so rich in romance, and song of love and war’ [WL].

the Southern Upland Way (thu-su-thurn-up-lind-wä) n. long distance walking route, opened in 1984, running from Portpatrick to Cockburnspath. It is 212 miles (340 km) in length, being the longest of Scotland’s long distance footpaths, and comes nearest to Hawick around Yair. It is sometimes jokingly referred to as the ‘Southern Upwards Way’.

the South Fencibles Regiment (thu-sowth-fen-si-bulz-re-jee-min’) n. voluntary force set up Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1778, being embodied at Edinburgh. The Duke recruited from throughout the Scottish Borders. He is recorded being in Castleton on hiring day, for example. The regiment was disbanded at Dalkeith in 1783.

Soutra Aisle (soo-tra-I-yul) n. site of the Soutra mediæval hospital, where a section of the Roman road Dere Street is also preserved. It is located off the A68 between Jedburgh and Dalkeith, the Aisle itself being a private burial vault for the Pringles, dated 1686 and built in part of the for-building materials in the early 19th century. Ex-cavations at Soutra have provided a wealth of ev-idence relating to mediæval medicine, including over 300 identified plant species. The hospital was run with the granting of 300 estates, including a small-holding in Hawick, ‘Soutra Croft’. This is almost certainly the area that became known as the Trinity lands at the eastern end of town. The endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written ‘Soltre’ and variants).

Soutrailands (soo-tra-lawndz) n. another name for Trinitylands, the part of Hawick given to Soutra Hospital. In 1507 they are referred to as ‘vulgariter vocatas ly Soltrelanidys’ and in 1578 as ‘Sowtre landis in Hawik’.

Spalding (spawl-, spee-din) n. Charles ‘Chair-lie Speedy’ (19th C.) manager and elder in Al-lars Kirk in the late 1800s. He could be the son of George and Agnes Stewart (born in Hawick in 1846, and who died in 1903) or the son of Robert and Jean (born in about 1837). Charles (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaigin, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. George (b.1818/9) plasterer in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was at 8 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included: Agnes (b.c.1841); Charles (b.c.1845); Ellen (b.c.1847); and Jemima (b.c.1850), Thomas (b.c.1853); Robert (b.c.1855); and Isabella (b.c.1860). James (19th C.) professional runner from Hawick. He recorded many wins in the period 1863–78. In one Common Riding Games, he won the 300 yards, 500 yards and half-mile races. He also won races in Mid-dlesbrough, Bolton and Burnley. He is probably the son of William and Margaret born in 1845/6. John (1838–1918) son of William and Margaret Scott. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. He married Catherine Michie in 1863; she was daughter of Robert Michie and Christina Gillis. They emigrated to Canada, sett-ling in Galt, where they were friends with fellow Teri Robert Murray. Their children were Chris-tine, Helen, James, Catherine Wilkie and Mary. Robert (18th C.) resident in Harwood Mill. In the baptismal records his surname is recorded as ‘Speedy’ in 1790 and ‘Speeden’ in other years. This makes it clear that he was ‘Spalding’ and probably an ancestor of the family nicknamed ‘Speedy’ in Hawick in the 19th century. His children included: George (b.1790), Charles (b.1792), Jean (b.1792), Janet (b.1792) and Jean (again, b.1795). Robert (b.1810/1) frameworker in Haw-ick. In 1841 he was at ‘Head of Silver St’ and in 1851 was on ‘Kirkstyle Place’. By 1861 he was on Dovemont St. in Wilton. He married Jane Rob-son in Hawick in 1834. Their children included: Charles (b.c.1837); William (b.c.1840); and Is-abella (b.c.1842). Robert (1855–1934) younger son of George and Agnes Stewart. He married Agnes Revel in 1876. He could be the ‘Robbie Speedy’ mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’. William (b.1812/3) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Back Row, in 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and was in Mather’s Close in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children were: John (b.c.1839); Helen (b.c.1840); Charles (b.1841), who married Agnes Stevenson; Mary (b.c.1843); Robert (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1846); and Robert (b.c.1853). He is probably the William who emigrated (with his family) to Guelph, Ontario and worked as a weaver in the factory of McCrae & Armstrong; while John Inglis was working there, he led the men to stop the ma-chines and sing ‘Teribus’ at the factory during the Commonwealth Riding of 1876.

the Spetchman’s Haugh

the Spetchman’s Haugh (thu-spech-minz-hawch) n. full name for the Spetch, being the flat land in the Park, on the south bank of the Teviot adjacent to the Laurie Bridge. The area was used in the period 1812–14 for morning roll call of the French prisoners of war in Hawick. The name is old, but not officially recorded until recently, hence its origin is obscure. It may have been pronounced as ‘spetchin’ in a transcript from 1764 (although willows are a prominent riverside feature near there, there is no evidence to support suggestions that it comes from an old Scots word for ‘willow’, and it seems more likely to derive from a personal name like ‘Spetch’ which means a leather patch or a cobbler in some dialects).

the Spetchman’s Sang (thu-spech-minz-sawng) n. poem written by David Hill, with the refrain ‘A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’. Music was written for it by Scocha in 2001.

Spetchmond Haugh (spech-mund-hawch) n. a variant on the old name for the Spetch.

spewin (spew-in) adj. extremely bad-tempered – ‘spewin o ill-naitur’.

the Spider Hoose (thu-spl-dur-hoos) n. name for an outbuilding at Branxholme. Tradition says that it was either named after one of the Duke of Buccleuch’s favourite horses, or after a story connected with Wullie Craw climbing up to its rafters. It is recorded as ‘Spider’s House’ in the Ordnance Survey Name Book and map of 1859, to the west of the castle ruins.

spier see speir

Spiers (speerz) n. Rev. George pastor of Hawick Baptist Church around the 1950s. He was also minister at Shotts in Glasgow.

spile (spil, spi-ul) v., arch. to spoil – ‘...for breach of Sabbath by gutting herring in the evening thereof, qch he ingeniously acknowledged, thinking they would spile if lying unguitted until ye Monday’ [PR1712].

spill (spil) v., arch. to spoil, damage, ruin something – ‘...and gif any wobstar spillies, and makes not sufficient work after tryell, under the pane of £10 to the Bailies, and satisfaction to the party owner thereof’ [BR1657].

Spinnie Bank (spi-nee-bawngk) n. area on the west side of the Liddel Water just north of Langhaugh, passed through by Spinnie Sike.

Spinnie Sike (spi-nee) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water near Netherraw. There are the remains of 2 stock enclosures and sheep stall to the south of the stream. There was once a blacksmith’s shop at ‘Spinniesbank-End’.

spinnel (spi-nul) n., arch. a spindle.

spinniers (spin-nee-urz) n., pl., arch. a woman’s cap with long lappets, a pinner – ‘...Aw’ll leave her ma eye-holes To be a squintin'-glass To set her spinniers streight, For they often stake aglei’ [JSB].

Spinniesbank (spi-nee-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map just to the north of Langhaugh, and must have been located on Spinnie Sike.

spinnin (spi-nin) n. the industry of spinning yarn in Hawick grew up in the early 18th century and became fully established in the 1750s. Women would spin on the ‘muckle wheel’ and the yarn was carried on horseback to places such as Kendall, Boroughbridge (Yorkshire) and Stirling. The spinning wheel held a prominent place in households into the early 19th century, a wheel being the main gift for a new bride. The two main types were the ‘little wheel’ and the ‘meikle (or muckle) wheel’, an example of the former from Crumhaughhill being in the Museum. In 1733 a spinning school was opened in Hawick and in 1734 a spinning mistress was hired from England to take charge of the school, with some funding from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures. The first factor for the school was Robert Howison, and the instigation for founding it came from Douglas of Cavers, as well as Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, John Chisholme of Stirches and some other local gentlemen. Weaving appears to have been added about 1736. The industry really took off when machinery was first introduced around 1798. In about 1850 it was estimated that yarn-spinning supplied about 1300 looms in Hawick.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-ji-ne) n. a spinning machine that allowed multiple spindles to be turned using a single wheel, invented by James Hargreaves in Lancashire in 1764, and named after his daughter. It was in use in Hawick from the late 18th century until the mid-19th. In 1816 there were as many as 100 hand spinning jennies in the town. It was eventually replaced by the ‘spinning mule’, invented by Samuel Crompton; with the invention of an automated version in 1825 it was soon in wide use in Hawick’s spinning mills.

and threaded through the pipe-stem (cf. jenny-spinner).

spinnle (spi-nul) n. a spindle – ‘And the yarins whussle throwe the hacks Frae spinnle heavy banks’ [WL].

the Spion Kop (thu-spl-in-kop) n. former drinking club based on the Loan from about 1890 (named after the mountain in Natal, which was the scene of a defeat of the British by the Boers in 1900, and Dutch for ‘Look-out Hill’).

spitefi (spi-fi) adj. spiteful – ‘...Her mither’s choice, to be fair to the lass, For a spitefu’ dame was Herodias’ [WL] (also written ‘spitefu’).

spite o (spit-o) prep., arch. in spite of – ‘...To drive care awa, spite o’ frost, wund, an’ snaw, The young fellows roond gatherth there, man’ [JoHa], ‘Yet spite o’ their smortin’ an’ snuffin’ ’...’ [JoHa], ‘...Her mither’s choice, to Yet, spite o’ needle, yarn an’ clout, His waulit hair was keekin’ out’ [RDW].

spither (spi-thur) n., poet. empty speech, frothy talk – ‘...Or some auld aunt’s loquacious swither O’ with and glee’, ‘Wha valu’d not your college spither, A rigmarie’ [JR] (this word is obscure).

Spittal (spi-ul) n. fishing village south of Berwick that became a seaside resort town in the 19th century – ‘Thae browt ’im a mount for heiz got the smittal Juist half the size o’a donkey at Spittal’ [MB]. Also a local name for Spittal-on-Rule and other former hospitals, e.g. Smailholm Spittal.

Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Brig (spi-ul-brig) n. bridge at Spittal-on-Rule, carrying the A698 across the Rule Water. The original bridge was built in 1748 by the Douglases of Cavers and stands just to the north of the modern bridge.

Spittalflatt (spi-ul-flaw) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Spittalflatt’ in 1541. It is stated to be valued at 6 merks and at that time vacant, but formerly tenanted along with the lands of Flatt. It is presumably adjacent to Flatt. The connection is to a hospital is unclear, but just to the north is Abbotshaws.

Spittal Haugh (spi-ul-hawch) n. former farm near Spittal-on-Rule. It was a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate.

Spittal Mill (spi-ul-mil) n. corn mill of the 17th century in Spittal-on-Rule, and name of the associated farm. The old Teind Barn there was presumably connected with the mill. James Scott was miller there in 1694. In the 18th century the lands of Spittal-on-Rule were separated between the Murays, Veitches and Bunyans, with the Veitches being tenants of the mill lands. John Veitch is recorded as tenant in 1792–97, Mark Turnbull in 1837, James Turnbull in 1852 and James Ingles in the 1860s.

Spittal-on-Rule (spi-ul-on-rool) n. former village in the easternmost part of Cavers Parish, near the confluence of the Teviot and the Rule, between Denholm and Bedrule, off the A698. Rich in history, it is now little more than a farm. A leper hospital was probably founded there before 1425, with an attached chapel, possibly dedicated to St. Mary. The location of the chapel may have been the same as the later teind barn, or very close. In the chapel in 1425/6 there was a meeting of Turnbulls, Scotts and others to investigate the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto (since lepers were legally forbidden from holding lands). John Davidson in Minto was recorded in 1493 having stolen 100 ells of woollen cloth from there. George Thomson was recorded there in 1502 (when he had 2 pigs stolen) and John Scott was also recorded there in the same year. The patronage of the church there was granted to James Douglas of Cavers in 1508 and the ‘advocation and gift of the kirk of Spitalull’ was listed among the rights inherited by the Barons of Cavers in 1509. The small graveyard was still used in the 18th century, and the vestiges of a former orchard were still clear in the early 20th century. At the nearby ‘Dead Haugh’ the Turnbulls are supposed to have begged the King’s forgiveness (with ropes around their necks) in 1494, instead every tenth man being hanged. The town was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, probably destroying the hospital and chapel. However, the ‘advocation of the church’ was still mentioned in the 1558 Douglas of Cavers charter. In 1554 an acre of land ‘in terris hospitalis de Rowle, super lie Harparhill’ was granted to Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, along with the advowson of the chapel of St. Mary at Caerlenrig (perhaps suggesting a connection between the chapel at Caerlenrig and the one associated with the leper hospital at Spittal). The Mains of Spittal-on-Rule was sold by William Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of Primside in 1563. The lands were farmed by Patrick Storie in 1605 and Richard Brown in 1610. Robert and John Wright were tenants there in 1642. John Lindsay was tenant there in 1684 when declared as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. 9 people were listed...
Spittal Plantin

there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam Leyden was there in 1721, Alexander Gowk in 1726, John Bunyan in 1727–30, John Veitch in 1727, James Bunyan in 1728, William Veitch in 1729–30 and William Douglas in 1733–44. John Fairbairn was there in 1781 and Thomas Rutherford was a servant in 1799. There were 3 tenants in the 18th century, the Murrays, Veitches and Bunnys, but the 3 holdings were combined in 1807. Thomas Bunyan was there in 1795. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone is recorded as tenant in 1797. Robert Middlemas was a servant there in 1797 and George Veitch in 1799. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and 1851, James Turnbull in 1861 and William G. Turnbull in 1868. It was purchased by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter from Mrs. Palmer-Douglas in 1913. The farm was a major local supplier of Leicester rams in the 19th century. Several ruins can still be found here, including the Teind Barn, once the oldest building in the parish, and an ancient stone grave, found in a small knoll near the modern farmhouse. The 1863 Ordnance Survey Survey map shows the location of the site of the chapel and old graveyard. The Kirkyard (or ‘Leper’?) Well was said to possess healing powers, and the last Denholm witch was buried here. The hospital that gave its name to the location was possibly for lepers and maintained by monks from one of the nearby abbeys. A road bridge crosses the Rule Water nearby, with the adjacent arch of an older structure. The village was the location for a toll on the road between Denholm and Jedburgh; the Toll House at the road bend has had its windows bricked up and painted over with ‘false’ windows. Often locally called just ‘Spittal’ (and spelled various ways in the past, such as ‘Spittle’ and ‘Spittalrule’; the origin of the name is ‘hospital by the river Rule’, with ‘spital’ being a Middle Scots word for a hospital, usually connected with a monastery; there are many places in Scotland and northern England that are also called ‘Spittal’ for the same reason; the name first occurs as ‘spittale de roull’ in 1493, then ‘villa de spittale’ in 1502, ‘Spittale’ in 1508, ‘Spitail’ in 1509, ‘Ecclesia de Spittale’ in 1511, ‘Rewle Spittel’ in 1545, ‘the Spytyll, Roull’ in 1548/9, ‘Spittalroul’ in 1558, ‘Syppall of Roule’ in 1563, ‘Spitttoull’ in 1576/7, ‘Rowll Spittell’ in 1605, ‘Rowlesspitell’ in 1610, ‘Rowellspitell’ in 1619 and ‘Spitell’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Spittell’).

Spittal Plantin (spi’-ul-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation near Spittal-on-Rule. It is unclear whether this referred to a wood near Spittal Ford, by the Teviot, or a wood by the Rule. The linen weavers of the Denholm area used to soak their lint near here.

Spittalrule see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Toll (spi’-ul-tol) n. former toll-house at Spittal-on Rule, on the corner of the A698, with the road to the north-west formerly leading to the ford. The building is well known for its pretend painted windows. It is also known as ‘The Lucky House’.

Spittaltoon (spi’-ul-toon) n. lost place name in Liddesdale, once part of the lands of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Speteltou’ and worth 4 pounds in a rental roll of c.1376.

Spittal Toor (spi’-ul-toor) n. Spittal Tower, modern farmhouse on the site of a former fortified house, west of Bedrule, up the Tower Burn from Spittal-on-Rule. The former farm, often just called ‘Tour’, was owned by Turnbells in the 16th century. Gavin Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ was recorded in 1551 and James Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ in 1579/80. It was valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663. The ‘Mains of Tour’ (perhaps the same as the Mains of Spittal) was valued at £560 in 1643 and at that time owned by Douglas of Boredward. By 1678 the former lands of Turnbull of Toor were then in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. The farm was tenanted by the Murrays in the 18th century, ancestors of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. John Murray was a gardener living there in 1715. [blank] Clerk was there in 1742 and Robert Cavers in 1778. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone, younger, was recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Charles Scott was a servant there in the same year. Robert Bain was a servant there in 1799. Robert Barrie was farmer there in 1851 and 1861. It was combined into a larger farm with Spittal-on-Rule in the 19th century (it was ‘touris of Roulwode’ in 1622 and ‘Tower’ in 1715; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map simply as ‘Tour’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Tour’).

spitter (spi’-ur) n., arch. a light shower of rain or snow, small drops, hence drivel – ‘Wha valud not your college spither’ [JR], v., arch. to rain lightly (also written ‘spithier’).

spittery (spi’-u-, spi-tu-ree) adj., arch. consisting of small, driving particles (said of snow), sputtering (said of a fire).

Spottiswood (spots-wud) n. Alicia Anne (1810–1900) eldest daughter of John of Spottiswood, near Lauder. In 1836 she married Lord John Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 2nd son of Charles, 4th Duke of Buccleuch, who left her a widow in 1860. In 1870 she succeeded her brother as heir to the family estate and adopted the surname Scott-Spottiswood. She was said to have had a large collection of antiquities and to have endeavoured to save many of the ruins of Border peels. She wrote poetry and is famous for composing the tune for ‘Annie Laurie’ as well as other songs. David of that Ilk (d.c.1550) son of William and Elizabeth Hoppringle. He was probably the ‘Spottiswod of that ilk’ who was listed in 1549 among the associates of Ker of Cessford who were accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding and burning his farms at Goldielands and on the Borthwick. He married Katherine Pringle and Jane Brounfield of Hardacres. He was succeeded by his son Ninian. James (15th C.) rector of the church of Rankilburn, listed in 1453 on a roll of bachelors entered at the newly founded University of Glasgow. He is ‘rector ecclesiae de Rankelburn’. James of that Ilk (15th C.) son of Henry. He married a daughter of Sir Adam Johnstone of that Ilk. He was succeeded by William, who died at Flodden. He, as well as his sons James and Adam and brother George, are recorded at the Justice-aire held inLauder in 1493. John (16th C.) recorded in 1558 as a rector of the church of Hawick, along with John Sandilands. This is probably the same man who was appointed as minister of Calder in 1560, son of William of Spottiswood (who was killed at Flodden). This John (1510–85) graduated from Glasgow University in 1536, went to London, returned to Scotland in 1643, became a Reformer and was appointed Superintendent of Lothian; he married Beatrix, daughter of Patrick Crichton of Lugton and Gilmerston and had children: John, who succeeded as minister of mid-Calder; James, Bishop of Clogher in Ireland; William; Rachel, who married James Tennent of Linhouse; and Judith. John (1565–1639) son of John, who was minister of Calder, and grandson of William of that Ilk, who was killed at Flodden. He went to Glasgow University at age 12 or 13, graduated in 1581, and became a favourite churchman of James VI. He was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1603 and translated to St. Andrews in 1615. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since he granted a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw, Crawfordne and Clews in 1606 and another to John Turnbull for the lands of Barnhills in 1607. He was Moderator at the Assembly that abolished the presbytery. He later became Prime of Scotland and Lord Chancellor of Scotland. He crowned Charles I at Holyrood in 1633. He objected to the Covenant, escaped to England, was deposed and died in London, being buried in Westminster Abbey. He married Rachel, daughter of David Lindsay, Bishop of Ross. His children were: Anne; Sir John; and Sir Robert. Rev. Robert (c.1634–1696) graduating from Glasgow University in 1654, he became minister at Temple in 1663 and was translated to Crichton in 1676. He was deprived in 1681 for not taking the Test. However, he was translated to Abbotrule in 1687, but may only have been minister there for a very short time. He seems to have been a Presbyterian minister, who survived through the Episcopalian years past the Revolution. His wife’s name is not recorded, but their children included: Jean; Alexander, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1677; Robert, who also became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, in 1681; and Elizabeth, who was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1696 (spelled ‘Spotswood’ and variants).

Spoutburn Park (spow'-burn-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779, 1788 and 1811 along with Coach Park, with a joint value of £43 14s 6d. In 1780 it was recorded being on the western boundary of Lillielaw Park; this suggests that the stream passing through Minto Glen may have been known as Spout Burn.

Spoutgills (spow'-gilz) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish marked on Stobie’s 1770 maps, with ‘Spoutgillfoot’ just to the north. It is on a stream to the south of the Tweed Burn, perhaps corresponding to the modern Jordan Sike, in which case it would be essentially the same as Blinkbonny. John Armstrong died there in 1756 and is buried at Teviothead. Thomas Beat tie lived there with his family in the 1770s and 80s.

Spout Sike (spow'-sik) n. small stream that runs in a roughly westerly direction to join Dawson Burn just to the north of Saughtree.

Springbank (spring-bawngk) n. house at the foot of Dickson Street, built in the early part of the 19th century. It was the home of 2 generations of hosery manufacturer Alexander Laings. It took its name from a spring coming down from a former pond in Dickson Street.

Springbank Clinic (spring-bawngk-kli-neck) n. former centre for infant health, based at Springbank House, next to the Haig Maternity Home on Princes Street. The house was acquired in 1921 as a child welfare centre and home for the ‘Jubilee’ district nurses, with the clinic built as a 2-storey addition in 1929/30. Over the years it was used for many community health purposes, e.g. family planning, well-woman services and various voluntary groups. Its last such use was as offices for the Borders Health Board. It was empty after 1989 and sold in the mid-1990s as private housing.

sprot (spro’) n., arch. the withered stump of a plant – ‘Sprot, The end of a grain, or branch blown from a growing tree, in consequence of high winds, Roxb.’ [JoJ], a chip, wood shaving (see also spreit).

Sprot (spro’) n. Edward William of Drygrange (1846–98) younger surviving son of Mark. He presented a bell to Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98), Frances (1808–1902) brother of Mark of Riddell. In 1883 she gave money to built 6 cottages for ‘friendless and deserving widows or daughters of clergymen, and other ladies who had formerly been in better circumstances’. John (18th C.) recorded at Woll on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at ‘New Woll’ in 1794. It is unclear if he was connected with the later Sprots of Riddell. John (1775–1817) son of James and Frances Blair, descended from merchants in Edinburgh. He lived at King’s Road. Clapham Park, London. He made his fortune in the East India Company and provided for his 2 sons (who may have been minors when he died). In 1801 he married his cousin Mary, daughter of Banjamin Yule of Wheatfield. Their children (baptised in Holborn, Clapham and Streatham) included: Mark (1802–81), who became owner of Riddell; James (b.1804), who (with an amusing coincidence of names) bought the Spott estate near Dunbar; Marion (b.1805); Janet (b.1809); Mary (1811–46), who married Sir William Maxwell; and Caroline Isabella (1817–57), who married Capt. William Fordyce Blair. It is unclear whether he purchased Riddell before his death, or whether that was done by his executors on behalf of his son Mark. Col. John (1830–1907) son of Mark. He was educated in England and Germany and entered the 83rd Regiment as ensign in 1848. He served in Ireland and then for many years in India, where he was also put in charge of public works, directing the building of a road. He was Lieutenant during the Indian Mutiny of 1858. He returned to Britain in 1860, being in charge of the depot at Chatham and serving again in Ireland and in Gibraltar. He took leave from the army spending 18 months touring Europe, but then resumed duties as Major of the 91st Highlanders. He was then appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Scotland. He is said to have been the first person to recognise the potential military uses for the bicycle. He retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1885, having succeeded to the Riddell estate in 1883. Despite reaching a higher rank, he is often referred to as ‘Colonel’, this being from his position as honorary colonel of Princess Louise’s Argyll and Southern Highlanders. He extended the main farmhouse at Riddell in 1898. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1885. In 1869 he married Georgina Mary, daughter of H.E. Surtees of Redworth Hall and The Grove, county Durham. In 1878 he secondly married Cecilia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. W.B. Doveton of Corston. In 1886 he thirdly married Charlotte Gertrude, daughter of W.T. Cole of Boscastle, Cornwall (whose mother was Anne Rutherford, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Lessuden and cousin of Sir Walter Scott). His children included: Cecilia Mary Dorothea (1880–1964), who married Patrick Keith Murray; John Mark Francis (1881–1946); Col. Alexander William Ramsay (b.1883); Cecil George; Edward Walter Hearle (1887–1975); Gertrude Gladys Violet (1888–1966); and Jack Hugh Stewart (b.1894). He wrote ‘History of the family of Sprot and the ancient mansion and estate of Riddell’. He also wrote several military pamphlets. Maj. John Mark Francis ‘Mark’ of Muselee and Riddell (1881–1946) son of Lt.-Gen. John. He gained the rank of Major in the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (or ‘Greys’). He presented his regiment with the Sprot Cup in 1906 for an annual steeple chase race. He was President of the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society. He served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Meloria, daughter of Sir John Adam Hay. His eldest son was John, who succeeded. Their daughter Cecilia Doriel married Sir William Whitelaw and became Viscountess Whitelaw. Maj. John ‘Jock’ (1910–2010) of Riddell, born at old Riddell House. His sister was the Viscountess Whitelaw. He was educated in Buckinghamshire and Kent and joined the British Linen Bank in Edinburgh, later working for the International Paint and Compositions Company in London. He served with the Territorial Army and during WWII was a lieutenant at Drem Airfield, an intelligence officer in St. Boswells, a captain in charge of Italian prisoners of war in Galashiels and then was with special forces in India. He was stationed in Galashiels when Riddell House burned down in 1943. After the War he modernised the Riddell estate, developing the woodland in particular. He also served on Roxburghshire County Council. He was on the Royal Company of Archers and was an elder of Lilliesleaf Kirk. He also chaired the National Farmers’ Union in Selkirkshire, the Co-operative Forestry Society and the Scottish Woodland Owners’ Association. He was awarded the M.B.E. for his role as Vice-Chairman of the Electricity Consultative Council for the South of Scotland. He became interested in the history and the history of the Riddell estate. He moved to Clerklands in 1987. He lived to his 100th year and was buried at Lilliesleaf. An autobiography was published on his 98th birthday. The estate was transferred to his nephew Andrew Grant. Mark (1802–83) eldest son of John and Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield, he was born in London, in the same house as Benjamin Disraeli. His father spent time in India and made his fortune in London. His great uncle Mark, was a financier.

who was involved with founding the London Stock Exchange. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. His father died in 1817, and inheriting a fortune, he planned to enter the army (with an ensign’s commission purchased for him in the 90th Regiment of Foot). The Riddell estate was purchased in 1823, while he was still a minor. He was listed as proprietor in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1826 he built an estate office there, which is now the main farmhouse. He had the lands drained and planted and built several farmhouses at that time. Letters relating to an agreement he had over the march dykes at Riddell are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1848 he was appointed as a Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and he also served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. In 1851 he was farmer of 1705 acres, employing 12 men and 26 women and had 9 servants living with his family in Riddell House. He was listed at Riddell in Slater’s 1852 directory. In about 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of the Barony of Riddell, as well as Friarshaw, Newhouse and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish; he also held some of Midlem, the white freestone used for much of the building of the Kers. A quarry in that region provided the superiority of lands in Ashkirk and Bowden Parishes, as well as Lilliesleaf. In 1829 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Shewell of Sutton Park, Surrey. His sons were: John (1830–1907), who succeeded; Capt. Mark George (1832–59), who died at school in Ealing aged 13; and Edward William (1846–98) of Drygrange.

S.S. Mary an David

S.S. Mary an David (sintz-má-ree-an-dá-vid) n. Roman Catholic Chapel at 15 Buccleuch Street. This was the first Catholic church in Hawick since the Reformation, made necessary largely by the arrival of Irish workers, who had been meeting informally through the 1820s and 1830s. Fr. William Wallace of Traquair worked to build the church and purchased land in 1841. This plot (later designated 15 Buccleuch Street) was bought from William Wilson, between the Subscription Rooms and the meeting house of the Society of Friends. The land formerly held several 2-storey buildings, which were demolished. The foundation stone was laid in June 1843 (amid inclement weather), officiated by Fr. Wallace himself, flanked by the 2 Bailies. It was opened by Bishop Gillis the following year, with several other priests in attendance, as well as Earl and Lady Traquair and the choir of St. Mary’s. It original seated 400, the furnishings, altar and pulpit being given by the Earl of Traquair. When erected it was the only Catholic church between Edinburgh and Carlisle. A house for the priest was built in 1850/1 on the property immediately to the south and the associated school was started in 1854 (later with a separate building behind the Chapel on Buccleuch Terrace). A side aisle on the south was constructed in 1879, increasing the seatings by about a factor of 2. The Statue of the Sacred Heart was unveiled in 1913 and a War Memorial in 2020. The adjoining property (built as the Subscription Rooms) was purchased in the 1920s, and opened by Archbishop McDonald as the new Halls in 1930. The ornamental facade was removed in 1967 when renovations extended the front by a few feet. For much of the 20th century there was an assistant in Hawick, as well as the Priest. The Scottish Catholic Archives have records covering the period 1793–1939 and there are marriage and birth records from 1847 in the National Archives. The roll of the priesthood is: James Monaghan 1846–47; Patrick Taggart 1847–87; Patrick Shivers 1887–92; John Stevenson Lyle 1892–1912; George H. Bennett 1912–18; Thomas Watt 1918–24; Edward Mellon 1924–30; Dominic Hart 1930–38; Daniel Kelly 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1942–47; James K. Birnie 1947–56; Peter Higgins 1956–86; Michael Sloan 1986–?; Jeremy Bath 2003–2008; Michael John Galbraith 2008–. A roll of the assistants is: Andrew J. Cameron 1936–38; James G. Harold 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1941–42; Eric Gordon 1942–45; Thomas Watt 1945–46; Thomas Engelson 1946–47; Charles Brodie 1947–50; Eric Barber 1950–55; Liam O’Maloney 1955–56; John F. Stainton (stään’-in) n. Alexander ‘Elec the Bellman’ (1853/4–1926) son of Samuel, he was Hawick’s last Bellman, effectively acting as Town Crier. He lived on Dickson Street or perhaps 10 Wilton Crescent. He may be the same Alexander who was Precentor at the East Bank Kirk. He was celebrated in a poem by William Peffers – ‘A wee bit earnest, faithfu’ man, Far sma’er than his voice. Ye’d wonder how he can contain Sic devastatin’ noise’ [WP]. He can also be seen in a portrait by ‘Elliot’. A photograph of him used to hang in the staircase at Arthurl Armstrong’s store. He also appears in a film clip at the Vertish Hill Sports in 1909/10, wearing a distinctive ‘yauchting-style’ hat. Private Thomas R. Stainton (1896/7–17) of the Black Watch was probably his son. James (b.1800/1) from England, he was a nail maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 8 O’Connell Street and in 1861 was a ‘Nailmaker Master’ at 2 Melgund Place, employing 1 man. His 1st wife died in 1840 and his 2nd wife was Janet, from Kirkton. Their children included Elizabeth. A story is told of how a stranger sought shelter from the rain in his smiddy on Melgund Place around the early 1820s, and after he quoted some lines of poetry the visitor confessed that he was the author, William Knox, whereupon he was entertained inside the house. Robert (c.1825–90) born in Hawick, son of music teacher James, he apparently left Scotland in 1850 after an argument with his father. He became a preacher, living for a while in Chester and travelling around the north of England. He married Elizabeth Warburton and later Eliza Hayton Davis, and his sons were Robert Kirk and James H. Following a famous court case in 1867, in which several Union men were convicted of bombings and other ‘rattening’ crimes, he interceded to try to get one of the men his old job back. He is buried at Huddersfield. Samuel ‘Sam’ (1820/21–1894) a native of Berwick, he went to Nottingham to learn the stocking-making trade, then moved to Hawick, where he was Sunday School Teacher, Organist and Precentor at Wilton Church from 1855. In that same year he led the formation of the Saxhorn Band, for which he was the first bandmaster. His regular job was a woollen frameworker. He was living at 12 O’Connell Street (probably formerly No. 4) in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. He married Sarah Sales and their children included: James; John; Robert; Alexander (‘Elec the Bellman’); Ann (b.1856); Agnes (b.1858); Elizabeth (b.1860); Sarah (b.1862); Sarah Elizabeth (b.1864); George Frederick Handel (b.1867); and Charlotte (b.1869) (written ‘Stenten’ and variants).

Stalker (stā-kur) n. Rev. James (d.1816) son of John of Edinkillie, he graduated from King’s College, Aberdeen in 1777. His brother Donald was schoolmaster at Rothiemurchus. He was licensed by Chanonry Presbytery in 1784 and in 1785 was ordained as assistant minister at Fort George. Here he was Chaplain to the Royal Forces, leading to some service that earned the gratitude of his Patron, William, Duke of Roxburghe (then Lord Bellenden). He was also made a Burgess of the Burgh of Nairn in 1793. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by the Duke of Roxburghe in 1804 and admitted there the following year. However, this was against the wishes of some of the Lilliesleaf parishioners, who wanted the previous incumbent’s son John Campbell as their minister. This disagreement led to about 70 families seceding to form a Relief congregation, which built the secession church in the village. Despite a rocky start, he stayed at Lilliesleaf until his death, and remained unmarried. A letter to his brother describes in detail the circumstances of his presentation to Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He died at the Manse.

standart (stan-dur', -durt) n., adj., arch. standard – ‘... by plurality of votes Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash, was elected to carry the standart’ [BR1722].

Standhill (stawnd-hil) n. site for sidings on the Waverley Line, just north of Hassendean, in An crum Parish. The farm (or at least its 2 parts) was once owned by the Kers. David Murray was recorded there in 1494/5, when sheep, cattle, horses and other goods were pillaged from there, as well as the farm being burned. George Turnbull of Standhill is recorded in 1553/4. John Hodge was there in 1580. Hector Turnbull had a charter of ‘feu farm’ of the ‘2½ lands’ of Standhill in 1610 and it was held by the Turnbills of Knowe, as recorded in 1631 and in 1660 and existing in the National Archives. John Turnbull ‘in Standhill’ had his lands valued at £120 in 1643; he is also recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. It appears to have passed to the Riddells about 1664. However, Turnbull of Standhill is supposed to have been the leader of the Covenanter supporters who besieged and broke into Drumlanrig’s Tower in 1679. It later formed part of the estates of the Elliot’s of Minto; there are deeds among the Minto papers dating from 1610 to 1806. ‘Captain Turnbull’ paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. In 1779 it is recorded that the lands were owned by ‘Mrs Turnbull and Mrs Stenhouse’ and in 1788 by Capt. Stenhouse. John Amos was farmer there in 1794–97. The Minto estates sold it in 1951 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was ‘standhill’ in 1494/5).

stand oot (stawnd-doot) n., arch. a strike. Hawick’s first one recorded was in 1817 – ‘Hawick had hitherto been free of stikes, or ‘stand oots’, as they were called’ [RM].

stand oot (stawnd-doot) n., poet. to be in opposition, rebel – ‘... Nae stoutlier stude out for their laird, Nor did the lads o’ Liddesdale’ [CPM].

St. Andrew (sin’-awn-droo) n. patron saint of Scotland, who was crucified on a diagonal cross in Patras, some of his bones later finding their way to Scotland. The saltire was adopted as the flag of Scotland, according to legend because it appeared against the blue sky when King Angus prayed to St. Andrew during a battle in 832 C.E. It is reputedly the oldest national flag in Europe. The same saltire has made its way onto the Hawick flag.

St. Andrew’s Convent (sin’-awn-drooz-kon-vin’) n. name of the former convent and nursing home at Stirches House.

St. Andrew’s Kirk (sin’-awn-drooz-kirk) n. St. Andrew’s Church, founded as a branch of the Free Church in 1866, to serve the north end of town and also Wilton. Originally called ‘Wilton Free Kirk’, it was founded largely through the efforts of Thomas Laidlaw and George Hobkirk, with the first organisational meeting taking place in Peter Laidlaw’s warehouse in March 1866. The congregation started with 115 members from Hawick Free Kirk, first meeting in the Exchange Hall until the church was built on North Bridge Street in 1868/9, and then named St. Andrew’s. Its gothic-style design was by Glasgow-based architect J.T. Rochead, and it had a spire reaching a height of 103 feet. It was constructed by local building firm George Tait. The church could hold 900 people, and below it was a hall that could accommodate about 200 for Sunday School and other activities. The church manse was built off Weensland Road in 1890. A church organ was added in 1904 and in 1911 there were major alterations (designed by J.P. Alison), with the addition of a church hall. A serious fire in 1922 resulted in major repairs and a closure of 18 months, during which time the congregation joined St. John’s. The church was demolished in 1959/60, with congregation becoming part of Trinity Church. The site was used as a petrol station and later a car wash. A roll of the ministers is: Duncan Stewart 1868–1908; William Farquharson 1908–14; James A. T. Kennedy 1915–21; John Mowat 1922–30; George Sutherland 1930–40; Neil D. Craig 1941–46; John S. Miller 1954–59.

St. Andrew’s Nursin Haim (sin’-awn-drooz-nur-sin-häm) n. private nursing home in Stirches, located in the old home of John Blenk horn. It cares for about 50 elderly patients, is run by Augustinian Sisters and has its own chapel. It is also known as ‘Stirches Hoose’ and ‘the Con vent’.

St. Andrew’s Place (sin’-awn-drooz-plis) n. street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow’s street map.

Stanefield (stān-feeld) n. area around the Stonefield Place housing scheme, and the former Stonefield Mill, between Liddesdale Road and the old railway line.

Stanefield Centre (stān-feeld-sen’-ur) n. club for old people living in the area around the Stonefield housing development, converted from a building on the old brewery site. It has more recently been used as a nursery.

Stanefield Cottage (stān-feeld-ko’-eej) n. former house attached at the north end of the Rockvale block on Lynnwood Road, reached over the mill lade by a foot bridge. The block was also referred to as ‘Stonefield Cottages’ and perhaps also ‘Slitrig Cottages’.

Stanefield Mill (stān-feeld-mill) n. factory on the eastern side of Lynnwood Road, demolished in 1973. It originally received water power via the Slitrig Dam. It was purchased by William Elliot in 1850. It was occupied by Laing & Irving in the mid-19th century, then Noble & Richardson for a few years (from about 1871), and later Grieve & Laidlaw and J. & R. Macnee, becoming a spinnning factory around the 1920s. A painting showing the mill was painted by J.F. Pollocj in about 1890 and is in the Museum (also written as ‘Mills’).

Stanefield Place (stān-feeld-plis) n. Stonefield Place, housing aimed at elder people, built on the sites of the former Buccleuch Nurseries and Stonefield Mill in 1971–73. A footpath leads there to the old railway line. The housing underwent extensive redevelopment in 2015/6.

Stanegarthside (stān-garth-sid, -garth-) n. mansion house above the banks of the Liddel Water on the English side. It was originally built as a tower house perhaps around the 13th century, with wings added in 1682. It was long the seat of the Forsters. William Glendinning was at Nether Stanegarthside in 1778 – ‘What map of the Border Country would be complete without Bewcastle, and Stanegirthside, where the Captain of Bewcastle lived?’ [DH].

Stanhelm (stān-hōm) n. former farmstead in the Upper Teviot valley. It was part of the larger set of lands called Ringwoodfield when leased from Melrose Abbey by the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. It is probably the land called ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ which ‘Sym Scot of Fernili and Arche Elliot of Gorunberry’ rented from Melrose Abbey in about 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows it as ‘Stonyhelme’ south of Southdeanrig on the ‘Cairtann’ Burn. The precise location is uncertain, but a connection with Staney Hill, just east of Southdean Rig, seems likely.

the Stane o Destiny (thlu-stān-ō-des-ti-nee) n. stone on which Kings of Scotland were historically crowned at Scone, which was removed and taken to Westminster by Edward I in 1296, to be fitted into a chair used to crown subsequent English sovereigns. Although just a rather unremarkable oblong of locally-mined sandstone, the object was held to have mystical properties, with legends claiming it came from ancient Ireland or even the Middle East. In 1950 a group of 4 Scottish students removed the stone from the Abbey and ‘repatriated’ it to Scotland. With major Border crossings closed the group smuggled the stone by car up the A7 and there is a rumour that it spent the night in Hawick (perhaps in Bob and Nessie Oliver’s shop on Drumlanrig Square) on its way north. Certainly one of those responsible, Alan Stuart, had a granny who lived in Hawick at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

Stane Pirrie (stän-pi-ree) adj. daft, feather-brained – ‘Stane pirrie (for daft) derived, I think from Pirrie’s stone ginger in Hawick’ [HAST1958] (probably influenced by the adjective pirry, with a play on the name of the manufacturer Alex Pirrie).

Stanesden Burn (stänz-din-burn) n. former name for a stream near Hermitage Castle. It is mentioned in a description of the lands of ‘Merchlinee’ granted to monks of Kelso, which formed the site of the original hermitage. The description mentions a ford crossing the Hermitage Water where this stream joined. It has been suggested that it is the same as what is now called the Roughley Burn.

Stanesheil (stän-sheel) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to the Staneshiel Burn. This is probably the ‘Stanesheldes’ and ‘Stanesheld’ where John Nixon and Jenkin Nixon were in 1544. It was ‘Stanny sheile’ and ‘Stain sheile’ in 1590 and ‘Stanesheale’ in 1595 when Hob Elliot was there. John Crozier was also recorded at ‘Staneshiele’ in 1590.

Stanesheil Burn (stän-sheel-burn) n. stream in the upper Liddel valley. It rises near Bloodbush Edge and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water between Dinlabyre and Steeleroad-end. There are remains of cottages at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’. A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Stanehilburnfoot’ where labourer Walter Hislop was living in 1835.

Stane-tir’t (stän-tīr’t) adj., arch. indolent, very tired.

Staney (stä-nee) adj. stoney – ‘Whan thair juudges ar overthrown in stanie pieces . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . an the gray waas o Fatlips keekeet oot thre threien the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS], ‘A flock mattress wi’ muckle lumps That felt like staney rocks’ [AY] (also written ‘stanie’).

the Staney Brae (thü-stä-nee-brä) n. alleyway from Allars Bank to Allars Crescent, with houses being part of Allars Bank. It was formerly part of Backdamgate, and presumably named for its roughness. An anvil at the bottom marks the site of the old blacksmiths.

Staney Cleuch (stä-nee-klooçh) n. small stream that rises to the north of Skelhill farm and joins the Allan Water. There are signs of cord rig around it.

Staneyford Moss (stä-nee-förd-mós) n. Stonyford Moss, boggy area on the former Synton estate, located to the left of the A7 just before Synton Loch. It was one of 4 boggy areas drained by the Laird of Synton around 1800, and described as covering 40 acres. During the drainage, old oaks and red deer antlers were uncovered. There are traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the south. It seems likely (although perhaps on the wrong side of the Ale Water) that this is the ‘Staniford’ listed in about 1170 in a charter describing the perambulation of the pasture lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk.

Staneygill (stä-nee-gil) n. lands in Liddesdale, to the north of Whisgills. In a rental roll of c.1376 ‘Stanygill’ was valued at 5 shillings. In a 1541 roll ‘Stanygill’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), and valued at 5 shillings. In 1632 it is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as well as among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Stanygill Rig lies to the east of Tannis Hill, with the Stanygill Burn running roughly southwards to meet the Tannis Burn near Redmoss. Where Black grain and Dow Sike join the Stanygill Burn is a sheepfold built over the remains of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. Jeffrey suggested this was ‘Puddingburn Ha’, but that seems more likely to be much further north, near Paddington Sike. The remains of the tower here are about 7 m by 5 m, with the east wall missing entirely. Further upstream, on the west bank, is a platform suggestive of the location of an illicit still (it is ‘Stanny-gill’ and ‘Stanygill’ in 1632; ‘Stainygill’ is marked on Blaen’s c.1654 map).

Staneyhaugh (stä-nee-hawçh) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water (it is ‘Stanyhalch’ around 1376; it could be connected with Staneshiel).

Staney Hill (stä-nee-hił) n. hill to the south-west of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 335 m. It may be related to the lands of ‘Stane-holm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but ‘Staney Hill’ today).

Staney Meadi (stä-nee-me-di) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Stoney Meadow’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.
Staney Stewart (stā-nee-stew-ur’) n. dyke builder in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’. His first name is unknown, but one possibility is Andrew Stewart, and agricultural labourer living at Crow Byres in 1841, about the time the song was written – ‘And as for Stoney Stewart, He’s often scarce o’ stanes, And for to mend his aulf fail dykes Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’. [JSB].

stang (stawng) n., arch. a sting, wound, stab or pain made by a sting – ‘Her words nae stang was cairry’ [WL].

Stanger (stān-jur) n. Tony (1967/8– ) rugby winger, he attended Wilton an Hawick High and played for the school teams, as well as the Wanderers and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. while still in high school in 1985/6. He later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Grenoble and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner. He also played for the British Lions in 1997. He married Bid and settled in New Zealand, running a company that helps to develop coaching skills – ‘Come and tell me, Tony Stanger, have your feet returned to earth? Was it for this magic moment that your mother gave you birth? When you looped halfway to Heaven, did you hear the mighty roar, As fifty thousand voices were all willing you to score’ [TD].

Stanishope (sta-nis-hōp) n. farmstead in Cavers parish, to the north of the Maidens, reached via a track from Shankend. The Catrail passes near here. It is probably the ‘Scaenushope’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in a charter of 1511. There are further deeds from 1614, 1624 and 1625 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. It was owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was listed among the lands of Elliot of Stobs in 1678. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Elliot of Stobs in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. William Little was shepherd there in 1861 and R. Elliot was there in 1868. The area is under forestation and an extensive area around the former steading are now sometimes called ‘Stenishope forestry plantation’ (also written ‘Staneshope’, ‘Stenishope’ and ‘Stennishope’ on the Ordnance Survey map; the origin is probably from Old English ‘stan hus hop’, ‘the valley with the stone house’; the name first occurs as ‘Stanishhope’ in the mid-14th century, is ‘Stanishop’ in 1511, ‘Staineyshope’ in 1678 and is transcribed ‘Stoniehome’ in 1687 and ‘Stainhope’ in 1698).

stank (stawngk) n., arch. a pond, swampy pool, ditch ‘Alang by the dead water stank, Jock Fenwick I met on the lea, But his saddle was toom in a clank, An’ wha daur medle wi’ me?’ [T] (from French; see also midden-stank).

Stan Reid's (stan-reedz) n. popular venue for dances in the pre-WWII years, located in the Drill Hall, and organised by Stan Reid. For the next few years dances were organised by the Territorial Army, but still referred to as ‘Stan Reid’s’.

Stansfield (stanz-feeld) n. Sir James (d.1687) receiver general for the Scotts of Buccleuch from 1673, taking over the position from Patrick Scott of Langshaw. He was a Colonel in the Parliamentary army. He was murdered near Haddington by his son Philip, apparently because he disinherited him. The curious story involves the body apparently bleeding at the son’s touch, this being considered as a divine sign of his guilt, and after the son was hanged his tongue was cut out for cursing his father, his hand cut off for patricide and his severed head put on public display. William (20th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1947 he was the last ‘ploughman’ recorded in baptismal entries in the parish. This was only 2 years after the first record of a ‘tractor man’.

stap (stawp) v., arch. to stop up (a hole), block, stuff, choke, fill up – ‘Drawe owt alsua the speer, an’ stap the waye agayne thame that persikute me …’ [HSR], ‘…thaye ar like the deef eardart that stappis hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Hawick does not use ti stap for to stop except in the expression ti stap up = to choke up or to cram’ [ECS], ‘The brander’s stappeet up!’ [ECS], ‘…An’ stap, a dish in ilka haund, Wi’ brede ye scarce could see’ [WFC], ‘So …I’m weel-weshed, then stapped wi’ ingin, And yits and liver, lites and a’ thing …’ [DH], ‘Then he staps his pipe Wi’ bacca rank. Its gaen aa ti staps’ [ECS].

Staplegordon (stä-pul-gor-din) n. village a few miles north of Langholm and name for the surrounding parish. The settlement was formerly of greater importance and was once a burgh in its own right. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament in 1672. It was united with Wauchope in 1702 and its name changed to Langholm Parish (it is ‘Stabilgortoun’ in 1324 and ‘Stablegorden’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

He was Chief Guest at the Common Riding in 2003 and guest of honour at the 2012 Hawick Olympics celebration. He was awarded the M.B.E. in 1989 and the O.B.E. in 2000.

starkin (stawr-kin) adj., arch. rapid — ‘A starkin’ pace’ [GW].

starlight special (star-l'-spe-shul) n. night train that sometimes passed through Hawick station.

starnie (stawr-nee) n., poet. a star — ‘When no’ a starnie lent its light To cheer my lonely way’ [JT], ‘…And sweetly the starnies a’ blink through the blue’ [JT], ‘I saw the wee starnies beginning to sparkle, Aboon Christen-berry I saw the moon spie…’ [DA] (cf. ster and stern).

the Star o’ Robbie Burns (thu-stawr-o-ro-bee-burnz) n. song written in 1879 by James Thomson, with music by James Booth (an English-born accompanist, based in Glasgow). It seems likely that Thomson met Booth when the latter was musical director for a performer at the Exchange Hall in 1873. The song was first sung at the Hawick Burns Club by Thomas Strathearn on the 120th anniversary of Burns’ birth, in Graham’s Hotel (later the Holland House). It was also popularised by the tenor singer J.M. Hamilton. The song was soon taken up by Burns admirers worldwide. It is typically the only song performed at Burns suppers that was not written by the Bard himself (sometimes also pronounced raw-bee).

start an o’er loup (star-in-ør-lowp) n., arch. the limited right of livestock to startle and leap over a boundary into neighbouring lands — ‘…did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and eoloup …’ [C&L1767], ‘The tenants of his Grace, whose farms lay contiguous to the town-common, had been in the practice of taking start and o’er loup with their cattle on the burgh muir’ [RW] (see also owerloup).

the Station (thu-stå-shin) n. Hawick Railway Station, built when the Edinburgh line was opened in 1849 and reconstructed in 1862 with the opening of the Carlisle line. The original station was about 80 m west of the newer one, and was then used as a goods depot. An extra platform and subway were constructed for the 1914 Highland Show. The Station area also had extensive goods yards and sidings, and the offices of coal merchants. The last train left on 5th January 1969, with the track lifted 2 years later, and the buildings demolished in 1975. The site eventually saw the opening of the Leisure Centre in 1982. There is little remaining to indicate a station was ever there, although part of the original platform is incorporated into the footpath to Burnfoot. The name is still occasionally used to describe this area, or more commonly to refer to the pub across the street, which is one of the few tangible reminders of Hawick’s railway past.

the Station Brig (thu-stå-shin-brig) n. popular name for the bridge across the Teviot, officially called North Bridge – ‘When ee stood there on the Station Brig Just lookin’ at the waitter There was naething mair excitin’ And naething else wad maitter’ [AY].

Station Buildins (stå-shin-bil-dinz) n. block of houses between Commercial Road and Laing Terrace, previously part of Dovemount Place, but renamed in 1890, and now being ‘Station Buildings, Dovemount Place’. It is 4 storeys high, with shops on the bottom and ornamental dormers. The much more plain lower block on the corner of Commercial Road was added later (this may be the block designed for Alan Watt by J.P. Allison in 1894). In its early days the name ‘Station Buildings’ was displayed prominently at the top. Businesses here include James Byrdon, grocers, and Kearney the chemists.

the Station Hotel (thu-stå-shin-hō-tel) n. hotel and pub on Dovemount Place, opposite Hawick’s former railway station. Also popularly known as ‘the Station’ or ‘the Station Bar’. The building was constructed in 1871, with Scots Renaissance and Baronial features, and is Grade C listed. The signal box by the station had the ability to ring a bell there to warn passengers in the bar that a train was leaving in 5 minutes.

station-maister (stå-shin-muas-tur) n. a station-master — ‘…where the station-maister has verra obviously juist laird doon his howe and put on his official coat and hat when he heard the signal wires gurrin’ [DH].
Station Road

the Station Viaduct (tha-stä-shin-vI-adukt) n. main railway bridge crossing the Teviot just south of the Station, having 6 arches. The last train crossed it on 18th April 1971, when lifting track. The viaduct was blown up (twice!) in September 1975. The base of one of the pillars is still visible in the river (also called 'Teviot Viaduct' or just 'the Viaduct').

statute (sta'-ew') v., arch. to decree, enact – ‘...the two present baylyeas, and town counsel being conceived, did statut and enact unanimously nemine contradicente ... ’ [BR1694], ‘...the said Baylyes and town Counsell did statut and ordaine that the said Robert Hardie ...should carie the said colour ... ’ [BR1706], pp., arch. decreed, enacted – ‘The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit schone ... ’ [BR1643], ‘It was statut, enacted, and ordained that noe person ...should ...transport or cary any other colour, pencell, or standard ... ’ [BR1707] (also spelled 'statut').

statutory labour (sta-tew-tu-ree-lä-bur) n. a system by which labouring classes were required to undertake public works up to a certain number of days a year. It was particularly used for the upkeep of roads, following Acts of 1617, 1661 and 1669. In later years there was some compensation for the work done. The system was abolished in 1845 and replaced by land assessment to pay for hired labour. But this would be a regular burden on local men in the late 17th, entire 18th and early 19th centuries.

staucher (staw-chur) v., poet. to stagger, stumble about – ‘She chased auld Winter frae the lea Ti staucher hame ti Greenland ... ’ [WP], ‘Gin wi’ your faith set firm aboon, Ye staucher on alane ... ’ [WL] (also spelled 'stacher').

staun (stawn) v. to stand – ‘Thy rough and ready weapon’s name sae blunt, ‘Twill staun’ a rattle ‘gainst their cuttl’t gullies’ [JoHa], ‘Sae weel we trow that’s no’ begun, Will gar us turn or staun’ aghast, man’ [JoHa], ‘...beald, he stan’s ahint our wa’ ’ [HSR], ‘...But mansions stan split doon the middle, now – On Sunnyhill’ [DH], ‘Hei was staun’in at his back door, ca’in them blots on the landscape ... ’ [DH], n. a stand – ‘There’s pethers and potters, and gingerread stan’s, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans ... ’ [DA] (also spelled 'stan').

stave (stäv) v. to sprain, wrench, benumb – ‘A staved ma pinkie when the baa dunted off eet’, ‘Staived thoom = a sprained thumb (a painful strain caused by the end of the thumb coming into violent contact with a hard body)’ [ECS], n. an injury caused by a sprain or twist – ‘it’s no broken, it’s juist a stave’ (also written ‘staive’).

stave (stäv) v., arch. to walk aimlessly (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

stavel (stä-vul) v., arch. to stagger, stumble (also written ‘staivel’).

Staven (stä-vin) n. John (16th C.) listed in the Admiralty Court Book in 1557 as ‘Johnne Staven in Hawick’ when he purchased a tenement in Jedburgh from advocate John Moscrop. The land was on the Canongate, and he paid £20. It is unclear if his surname has been transcribed correctly; it could be ‘Steven’ or ‘Staiver’, for example.

Stavert (stä-vur’) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included William (b.1635) and John (b.1640). Adam of Hoscote (1750–1827) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He bought the portion of Hoscote that his brother George had inherited from their uncle, George Pott, and also bought the other portion from his cousin John Grieve. He is probably the Adam recorded at Tordrig on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls and 1791–97 at Hoscote. In 1793 he paid the land tax at Philogar in Hownam. He is recorded at Hoscote on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was confirmed in the lands of Hoscote by Hugh Scott of Harden in 1801. He paid the land tax at Hoscote in 1802. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819 (although his name was transcribed as ‘Stewart’). He was owner of Cunzier-ton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as Outerside in Robertson Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was the Laird of recorded when he borrowed money from William Elliot of Harwood in 1824 and still Laird in 1825.
He married Anne, daughter of John Brownell of Breck, Recorder of the Isle of Man. Their only child was Hannah, who married Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. In 1797 he secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh; she is recorded as a widow in 1851, living with her brother James Scott at Whitehaugh, and she died in 1855, aged 83. Their children were: Thomas (1798–1847), who succeeded; Margaret (1801–65), who also later succeeded to Hoscote; Elizabeth (b.1805–1862), who married Richard Bryn; and John (1807–59), who succeeded his brother Thomas. When he died his trustees included Walter Scott, George Pott and James Pott. His gravestone in Robertson Cemetery appears to say that he died at the age of 84. Lieut.-Col. Adam William (1939– ) current holder of the ‘Stavert of Hoscote’ title. He was educated at Stowe and Sandhurst. He married Shuna Nancy McNab and has family. Andrew (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included Elliot (b.1838). Andrew (1809–91) son of Robert, he was a farmer at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 1500 acres and employing 13 labourers. He was also there on the 1861 census and still there in 1868. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1836 and their children included: Ann (b.1834); Robert (1838–99), who moved to England; Francis (b.1840); Mary (b.1842); William (1843–91), died in Cheshire; Thomas (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); Helen (b.1849); Andrew Graham (b.1851); and Jessie Elliot (b.1854). His brother Robert (a discharged soldier) was also living with them. He died at Dykecroft. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Foster and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Henderson. Archibald (b.1806/7) tenant farmer in Saughtree. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed as joint tenant along with his brother Robert (residing in Manchester). The lands were assigned to them by their father with the consent of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1851 he was farmer of about 3,000 acres of ‘mountain-land’, employing 4 labourers; in 1861 it was 3,200 acres and employing on average 8 labourers. He lived with his sister Janet. In the early 1860s, at this suggestion, Oliver’s Auction Mart in Hawick added the sale of lambs. He is probably the Mr. Stavert of Saughtree who donated a red deer to the Museum in 1863. He was still recorded at Saughtree in 1868. Archibald of Hoscote (b.1828) eldest surviving son of William and Marion Park. He became Laird of Hoscote in 1857, succeeding his aunt Margaret, his uncles having already died. He also owned lands in Oxnam and How-nam parishes, and had a house in Edinburgh at 34 Palmerston Place. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 (incorrectly as ‘Andrew’) as owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as (correctly as Archibald) Outerside. In 1857 he married Rosina, daughter of William Hope, and she died in 1897. Their children were: William James (b.1858), Rector of Burnsall, Yorkshire and Chaplain to the Earl of Craven; Thomas Hope (b.1859), Major in the Leinster Regiment; Herbert John (b.1861) accountant in Edinburgh; Archibald Arthur (b.1864) with the Priory of South Queensferry, Linlithgow; Francis Edward Vose (b.1870); and a daughter. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) listed at Florida in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. This was probably the farm of that name in Liddesdale. It is unclear how she was related to other Stavers. Elizabeth ‘Lizzy’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1815 when her child died. Dr. Elliot (1810–85) son of Thomas and Janet Armstrong, he was born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish. His forename came from his maternal grandmother, Margaret Elliot. He graduated in medicine from Edinburgh University in 1834 and became a doctor in Preston, Lancashire, where he was also a councillor. In 1837 he married Margaret Jenkinson and they had children Elizabeth, Thomas and Margaret. He secondly married Ann Eliza Whitehead. He died at Saughtree and his surviving daughter Margaret was an executor. Elliot (19th C.) farmer in northern Liddesdale. He was donator to Hawick Museum of the 2 stone cross pieces which were found near the Abbey Sike in the mid-19th century. The first was about 4 feet long, in the shape of a sword handle, and found about 1850 near the ‘Abbey’. The second was a rounded head with a cross on each side, found by shepherd John Chisholm in the Abbey Sike in 1880. He could be the Elliot (b.1838), son of Andrew, baptised in Castleton. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitlefield in 1730. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1730 for William Harkness in Stouslie, Robert Scott in Tandlaw and James Turnbull in Appletreehall. He married Jean Elliot in 1729 and their children included: George (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Bessie (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1730 were Robert Scott and William Harkness (in the same year he was witness, along with Robert Scott, for William Harkness). George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1737). George (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He married Betty (or ‘Eliza) Neil in Roberton in 1750 and their children included: Mary (b.1758); Thomas (b.1760); and Betty (b.1766), who probably married Henry Turnbull. George (18th C.) married Ann Roger in 1775, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter is listed alongside him, and so presumably his brother or son. George (18th C.) married Jane Gledstains in Hawick in 1782. George (1756–1807) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He inherited part of Hoscote from his uncle George Pott. He was a surgeon in the Royal Navy. He is probably the George who owned Outersiderig in 1788. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Brownell, sister of his brother Adam’s first wife. Their children were: Thomas (b.1787), Deputy-Lieutenant in Selkirkshire; and William (b.1792), who married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. He died in Liverpool. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Earlside. His will is recorded in 1682. He must have been related to William, who is recorded at Earlside in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded in Todshaw in 1720, 1723, 1725 and 1726. He married Marion Wilson in Roberton in 1718. Their children included: Thomas (b.1720); John (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Thomas (again, b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1738 he married Helen Veitch from Cavers Parish. Margaret (b.1740), baptised in Cavers, was probably thei child. Perhaps the same John had children to a previous marriage, Agnes (b.1732) and Jean (b.1734). John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1769. Her daughter Elizabeth was baptised at ‘Todshaw hillshiel’ in Roberton Parish in 1771. She may have been the Betty who married John Henderson in Cavers in 1791 and probably John Turnbull in Wilton and died in 1831 at West Port. He is probably related to the earlier John recorded at Todshaw. John of Hoscote (1807–59) born in Roberton Parish, son of Adam. He was Laird of Hoscote after Thomas, his older brother. He served as Justice of the Peace. In the 1850s he was living at Burngrove. He married Elizabeth Bridget Watson, who died in 1868, aged 48. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth Bruce, who was a widow. Margaret (1801–65) elder daughter of Adam Stavert with his wife Agnes Scott. In 1851 she was living with her mother and uncle, James Scott of Whitehaugh. She inherited the estate of Hoscote after the death of her brothers Thomas and John. She married her cousin, Thomas Stavert, and died without children. Hoscote was inherited by her nephew Archibald. Ralph Alan (d.1978) inherited Hoscote in 1932. During WWII he was posted to India, where he worked as an engineer. He married Pearl Gallagher and she died in 1985. The iron gates, removed during the war, were replaced after his death, as a memorial to him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) early member of this local family. He is listed at Earlside along with William on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is also recorded in 1695 at Earlside (or ‘Earlwood’). His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: Janet (b.1695); Robert (b.1701); Isobel (b.1705); and Thomas (b.1709). Robert of Earlside (18th C.). First of the local lairds (rather than tenants) of this family, he may have been the son of Robert born in 1701. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes in 1737 and Ashybank in 1745. His children included: Isabel (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Jane (b.1745); and William (b.1747). Perhaps the same Robert, married to Henrietta Black, had several children baptised in Cavers, including Thomas (b.1750), Walter (b.1752), Janet (b.1753) and Elizabeth (b.1756). Robert (18th C.) farmer at Effledge according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He was probably son of Thomas, farmer at Saughtree. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Pott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1780), who farmed at Saughtree; Robert (b.1781); and Helen (b.1783). He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert (b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included William (b.1684) and Marion (b.1692). The witnesses in 1684 were John Purcell and William Purdom.
Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son John was baptised in 1705. Thomas (b.1697) son of William, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Marion Williamson and whose son William was baptised in Galashiels Parish in 1723. Thomas (1709–93) son of Robert. He occupied the farm of Coliforthill, it is said this was a reward for military service rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the Horse Tax at Coliforthill in 1785–97. Although supposed to have died in 1793, he is probably the Thomas recorded at Coliforthill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1744 he married Elizabeth (or Betty, d.1793), daughter of Adam Pott of Hoscote; his wife’s sister Jean married Walter Grieve at the same time in Roberton. They had a large family, including: George (b.1756), who inherited part of Hoscote; Adam (b.1750), baptised in Cavers, who was later Laird of Hoscote; Betty (b.1752), Jean (b.1758) and Janet, none of whom reached adulthood; and Robert, who married Helen Pott. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Betty (b.1745) and unnamed child (b.1746) were baptised in Kirkton. He may also be the Thomas whose children Margaret (b.1748), William (b.1754) and Thomas (b.1761) were baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Broadlee in 1753, 1762 and 1763. His children were probably John (b.1747), Isabel (b.1750), Margaret (b.1753), George (b.1756), William (b.1759) and Mary (b.1760), George (again, b.1762) and Janet (b.1763). It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, farmer at Coliforthill. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1756. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1767. Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas listed there on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as dying ‘in consequence of a fall from his horse in hunting’. His son Robert probably took over as farmer of Saughtree. Thomas (d.bef. 1810) resident of Robertson Parish. He may have been the son of Thomas (who lived at Broadlee), baptised in Roberton in 1756. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Kidd in Roberton in 1777; her death is recorded in Hawick in 1810, by which time he was already deceased. He was recorded at Harden Burnfoot in 1781 and 1784. His children included: Margaret (b.1778); Thomas (b.1779); Marion (b.1781); and John (b.1784). Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He married Margaret Dodds, who died in 1811. Their children included Thomas (b.1801), baptised in Kirkton. Thomas (1779–1831) son of Robert and Helen Pott. He was farmer at Saughtree. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Armstrong, probably daughter of Archibald Armstrong, farmer at Sorbietrees. Their children were: Robert (b.1802); James (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Thomas (b.1808); Elliot (b.1810), who was a doctor in Preston; Helen (or Ellen, b.1812), who married John Murray and died at Wolfelee farm; Janet (b.1814); Agnes (b.1816); and John Armstrong (b.1824). He may be the Stavert of Saughtree who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. Thomas, J.P. (b.1787) elder son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Margaret. Thomas (1791–1869) born in Hawick Parish, son of Robert. Both his parents died when he was 8. He moved to Ettrick at the age of 14, where he was one of the men employed to haul building materials for Thomas Boston’s memorial. In 1820 he married Margaret Boa, and they had their first child, Catherine in Scotland. In 1821 the family emigrated to Prince Edward Island (Canada), where he was one of the pioneer settlers. They had several children who went on to be farmers on Prince Edward Island. Thomas of Hoscote (1798–1847) elder son of Adam. He was born at Hoscote, and lived in the house until he died, unmarried. The family were Lairds of Earlsdie and then Hoscote from about 1695 until 1900. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Hoscote. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was involved with financial deals with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1830s. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as ‘Proprietor’ at Hoscote in 1841, living with 5 servants. He was succeeded by his brother John. Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the framework knitter, married to Euphemia who lived on the Loan and was born in about 1805; his wife was Euphemia Bramwell.
and their children included Margaret (b.1835), Thomas (b.1837) and Jamima (b.1839). Walter (17th C.) mentioned in 1655 when Robert Ruecastle was ordered by the Hawick Bailies to pay him ‘four merkis, borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and 7s. Scots for a leg of mutton’. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, along with George, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Walter recorded at Nether Tofts in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. William (17th C.) recorded in 1684, along with his wife Jean, signing a petition to the Laird of Cavers against having to pay a year’s rent towards the fine exacted for the release of the good Lady Cavers. He is the first local man of this family on record, although they may have been retainers of Douglas of Cavers since the time of Otterburn. He may be the William listed at Earlside along with Robert on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is surely related to James in Earlside, whose will is recorded in 1682. He may be the William whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1697. William (17th/18th C.) married Malie Stoddart in Hawick Parish in 1707. William (18th/19th C.) draper and grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the 70 year old William recorded on Main Street in 1841. William (18th/19th C.) stockmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (b.1792) younger son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. Their eldest surviving son Archibald became proprietor of Hoscote after the death of their distant cousin Margaret (who was also the wife of his uncle Thomas). William James (19th/20th C.) proprietor of Hoscote. He wrote an introduction to ‘The Annals of a Border Club’ in 1898 (formerly written ‘Stavart’, ‘Stewart’, etc.).

Staw (stāw) n., arch., poet. a surfeit, feeling of nausea, pest, nuisance, boredom – ‘A’v gotten a fair staw at it’ [GW], ‘Siecar the slow, slow fingers rub, Straikin without staw, Smoothin his name on the wa’ [DH], a nuisance, bore, v., arch. to satiate, become full, fill, sicken, tire – ‘...whan ma lugs are staaed o throapply blethers’ [ECS], ‘Howt! Staward (staw-urd) n. Henry (14th C.) traditionally said to be the ancestor of the Stavert family. He may be the Stavert who carried the pennon of the young Laird of Cavers (Archibald Douglas) at Otterburn. The story is also told of how his helmet was so dented at the Battle that he had to have it fixed by a blacksmith on the way back to Scotland. The Stawards (or Staverts) are traditionally retainers of the hereditary Sheriffs of Roxburghshire.

Stawed (stawd) pp., adj., arch. sated, surfeited, full of drink, tired of something, wearied – ‘A’m staw’d o’ kail every day’ [GW], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS] (also written ‘staaed’; cf. seek-staaed).

Stawn (stawn) pp., poet. stolen – ‘...For lang might thou in Cumberland dwelt, Ere the laird’s Jock had stawn frae thee. Fals &c:’ [CPM].

Stay (stā) n., poet. a help, support – ‘Becaus thou hest been my staye, therfor in the skaddaw o’ they wings wull I rejoyce’ [HSR].

St. Boisel (sin’-boi-zul) n. (d.c.664) Abbot of Melrose Abbey and teacher of St. Cuthbert. Almost all that is known about him comes from Bede. He was a Northumbrian, trained at Lindisfarne by St. Aidan. He is supposed to have had prophetic powers, predicting his own death in a plague. He was buried at Melrose. Relics relating to him were taken to Durham, and parts of a shrine dedicated to him can be seen in Jedburgh Abbey Museum. His day was once celebrated on 23rd February. The town of St. Boswells was effectively named after him.

St. Boswells (sin’-bo-zulz) n. formal name for the town known as Bosells.

St. Bullion’s Day (sin’-bu-lee-inz-dā) n., arch. St. Swithin’s Day, 15th July (from St. Martin of Bullion, whose feast day was 4th July, which became 15th July in the new calendar).

St. Clair see Sinclair

St. Cuthbert (sin’-kuth-bur’) n. (c.638–87) 7th century bishop, born in the Borders, possibly on Leader Water. He was Prior at the old Melrose Abbey in the early 660s, and this was one of the resting places for his body (although he was buried at Holy Island). He was called a saint because his body was said to have been miraculously preserved 11 years after his death (and also said to be still uncorrupted when examined at the time of the Reformation!). He is traditionally supposed to have lived for a time near the location of St. Mary’s in Hawick, founding a church there and spreading Christianity throughout Teviotdale and beyond. A description of miracles described in a 12th century account of his life (by Reginald of Durham) contains one of the earliest mentions of Hawick. It also refers to a chapel dedicated to him, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and which was associated with several apparently miraculous stories. This may be the same place referred to by Bede as a place where St. Cuthbert took shelter, and miraculously found a loaf of bread, when travelling from Carlisle to Melrose. His remains were removed from Lindisfarne by his followers and moved from place to place, finally coming to rest at Durham Cathedral, where they are to this day, along with several relics associated with him. In the Middle Ages both 20th March and 4th September were celebrated as his saints day.

St. Cuthbert’s (sin’-kuth-burts) n. popular name for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel (sin’-kuth-burts-chá-pul) n. chapel on the Slitrig dedicated to St. Cuthbert, noted in the 12th century by Reginald of Durham and believed to have been at a site near Cogsmill. The chapel is supposed to have been founded in 687 (the year the saint died) and already ruined by the 12th century. Stories were related by Reginald in about the 1170s, as told to him by Dolfinus, Pastor of Cavers. The miracles include: a crowd celebrating his saint’s day being protected from a snowstorm, even although the chapel was roofless; 2 women from Hawick, Sægifa and Rosfritha, whose candle went out, but another one appeared; a woman (Dolfinus’ mother) was cured of swelling, after being an invalid for 17 years; a flock of sheep belonging to a poor widow from Cavers Parish was protected from wolves in the churchyard; a woman from Raperlaw, who was crippled from birth, was cured; and Hugh Flamang from Yorkshire, fled to Teviotdale, spending the night in the chapel, where moss from the stone basin prevented his enemies from recognising him. There is now no sign of the building, although the location has been associated with an apparently levelled shelf at Cogsmill, measuring 49 yards by 31 yards, with the probable graveyard surrounded by an earthen bank and covered with trees. This lies about 400 feet south of Adderstoneshiel farmhouse, and the stand of trees was planted to mark the site in about 1830. The area was once locally referred to as ‘the Chaipel Park’. Excavations in the late 19th century uncovered 2 carved globe-shaped stone finials, which were added as gateposts to the farm garden. It is suggested these date from the 17th century, although there is also a record of some much older stonework being unearthed earlier. The associated graveyard must have been used for centuries, but there were already no existing stones there by the mid-19th century. Note that there have also been suggestions that the site of the chapel may have been near Penchrise (presumably an erroneous interpretation of the name) or near Hummeldowes (because of the adjacent Priestcrown).

St. Cuthbert’s Court (sin’-kuth-burts-kör’) n. housing built on Slitrig Crescent opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church in 1984, previously occupied by James Melrose & Sons engineers. It was essentially rebuilt from a wing of the former brewery.

St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club (sin’-kuth-burts-ki-ki’-klub) n. cricket club formed in 1862 for the pupils of St. Cuthbert’s School and junior members of the Church choir. They played on the Brewery Haugh and had George Peterson and Ben Tillotson as professionals at various times. Nicknamed ‘the Saints’, it was the last club to survive, other than Hawick & Wilton, folding in 1889.

St. Cuthbert’s Fitbaa Club (sin’-kuth-burts-fi’-baw-klub) n. rugby club associated with St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club in the late 19th century. It was formed in 1877, with William Laidlaw as Captain for the first 2 seasons. They played against the separate ‘Hawick’ and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ teams, and won the whole Borders championship one year. The club folded in 1892.

St. Cuthbert’s Haugh (sin’-kuth-burts-hawf) n. another name for the Brewery Haugh.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk (sin’-kuth-burts-kirk) n. St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church. The foundation stone was laid in 1857, after the 5th Duke of Buccleuch gifted the land between Slitrig Crescent and the river and paid for the building. The design was by Sir George Gilbert Scott (responsible for the resoration of several English Cathedrals, as well as the Episcopal Cathedral in Edinburgh and the Foreign Office in London), with John Herbst and Galashiels the main builders and Melrose’s supplying the iron work. The church was opened in 1858, and gave the first permanent home to a congregation that traces its roots back to the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. In Hawick it is sometimes referred to as ‘the English Kirk’. For a long time it started its services half an hour later than the other churches. It was named after the local St. Cuthbert, who is said to have had a chapel nearby. There is a stained-glass window showing him as a bishop holding the head of King Oswald of Northumbria in his hand (apparently representing the fact that the Abbot of Melrose was the King’s Confessor, thus holding his conscience). There is also an 1889 memorial window to the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, showing him presenting a model of the building to the Bishop of Glasgow, and 2 memorial windows for the Scott-Watson family of Burnhead, as well as a War memorial window, unveiled in 1921. The nave had 4 bays and there is a bell-cot over the chancel arch. The reredos by J. Oldrid Scott (son of the main architect) was added in 1905. At that time the niche in the apse became the site for a statue of St. Cuthbert holding the head of Oswald of Northumbria, like in the window design. The chancel screen is by Sir Robert Lorimer, and was added in 1908, at the same time that a vestry was built (designed by Lorimer and John Fraser Matthew). The vestry contains the original communion table, lent to the congregation in 1847 by Isaac and Johanna Edmondson. A plaque in the church commemorates to 2 Grieves of Brantholme Park who were killed on board naval vessels before WWI. The nearby Church Hall was formerly part of the brewery (and was converted around 1980 and is now 2 houses). The church possesses its own Episcopal Cemetery, and the adjacent Rectory has been converted into houses. The church building is currently listed category B. A centenary history was written in 1958 by Hector McBean Hart. Records for the church and school covering 1847–1944 are in the National Archives. The roll of ministers (sometimes called Rectors) of the Church is: Robert Campbell 1847–54; John Rose Dakers 1854–82; Douglas Powell Ware 1882–92; James W.T. Hart 1892–1903; Edward T.S. Reid 1903–10; Alexander L. Ross, assistant 1904–09; Alexander J. Hay 1911–55; Philip Crosfield 1955–60; Edward Robertson 1960–69; Maurice Sunter 1969–70; Aidan Michael Burn-Murdoch 1970–77; Humphrey Lopdell-Bradshaw 1977–88; Jonathan Willans 1988–91; Stuart Maxwell Paterson 1992–96; Simon Cake 1999–2001; – ‘It was Christmas times, and the Christmas chimes from St. Cuthbert’s steeple rung; And the holly-green on the wall was seen, And the Christmas hymn was sung’ [JT].

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk Club (sin’-kuth-burts-kirk-klub) n. St. Cuthbert’s Church Club, a local musical society of the late 19th century.

St. Cuthbert’s Schuil (sin’-kuth-burts-skil) n. Episcopal school near to St. Cuthbert’s Church on Slitrig Crescent. The school was for pupils of Episcopalian families, and like the church was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was built in 1850–52 and had a house for the schoolmaster attached. The building was also used for a few years for church services. Previous to the erection of the purpose-built school there had been an Episcopal school on the Mid Raw around 1846 and another (per perhaps the same one) in the ballroom on Half-Moon Close, starting in 1847 or 1848. The new school was situated on the opposite side of Lynnwood Road, beyond Stonefield Mill and was reached via a footbridge across Slitrig Dam. The school was often known locally as ‘the English Schuil’. Pupils over the age of 12 were transferred to the High School in 1928, and it became St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. It was closed in 1956, and the pupils incorporated into the renamed Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. The school and adjacent schoolhouse were demolished in 1972. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1935–56 are in the National Archives. The register for 1934–56 and log books for 1941–56 are in the Borders Archive. A list of schoolmasters (perhaps not all of them being Head teacher, and some of them for only a short period) is: Mr. Ellis; Mr. King; Mr. Craven; Jacob Jay 1861–93; Mr. Bountvie; Mr. Beaton; James Turnbull; Walter Inglis; David Gillis 1894–1915; Mr. Lumsden; Mr. Cormack 1945–48; and Mr. Walker.

St. Cuthbert’s Terrace (sin’-kuth-burts-te-ris) n. private housing built behind St. Cuthbert’s Court, off Slitrig Crescent, in 1985.

St. Cuthbert’s Way (sin’-kuth-burts-wá) n. 62 mile (100 km) hiking trail from Melrose to Lindisfarne (Holy Island), named after the 7th century saint who began at Melrose Abbey and was buried on Holy Island. It was established in 1996.

the Steadin Pump (thu-ste-din-pump) n. former water source behind the Congregational Church, also known as ‘Bourtree Well’.

Steadman (sted-min) n. George (b.1844/5) legendary wrestler from Whitehaven. He won the all-weights wrestling tournament at Hawick Common Riding Games for many years in succession in the 1880s. He started competitive wrestling in 1862 and still won at the Grassmere Games at age 51. He also took the prize in the Liverpool Road (London) contest 31 years running. He was about 275 pounds and 5 foot 11 inches, and often won other events, such as hurdles and ‘neatest costume’.

steal-bonnets (steel-bonitz) n., arch. a game whose aim is to steal the hats from the opposing team, the same as steal-wads).

steal-thief (steel-theef) n., arch. a thief.

steal-wads (steel-wawdz) n., arch. a game similar to ‘Scotch and English’ in which each of 2 sides tries to steal the others bonnets from opposite sides of a playing field (also called ‘steal-bonnets’; here ‘wad’ is a pledge; J. Jamieson notes this as a Teviotdale phrase).

the Steam (thin-stemm) n. old-fashioned public laundry, situated at the old Baths in Bath Street. It was built in the early 1930’s and stopped operating in 1982. For 50 years it was a regular meeting (and gossiping) point for Hawick families.

steamin (stee-min) adj. very drunki, totally inebriated (short form of a phrase like ‘steaming with drink’, although also suggested to be associated with the steamboats on the Clyde).

stech (steck) n., arch. a grunt, pant, deep breath as a result of exertion, stifled groan from carrying a heavy load – ‘Wei war off – wui a yerk an a duish an a stech an a ‘Parp!’ [ECS], v., arch., poet. to pant with exertion – ‘He cam stechin’ poet.

steeikit (stee-kee', -ki') adj., pp., arch. gored – ‘The nowt steeikit ’im’[GW], ‘Dinna gang nerr you reed bull; ei steekeet a callant’[ECS] (also stickit).

steel (steel) n., arch. a handle for a barrow or plough – ‘What are you going to do with that?’ asked the doctor. ‘I’m just gaun to mak’ a barrow steel’. ‘Aye, aye, a shaft to-day and a wheel to-morrow’, was the doctor’s observations’[BP], a stall for an injured finger (also written ‘stiel’; noted by J. Jamieson).
Steel (steel) n., arch. a steep bank, spur of a ridge – ‘My dog run it down on the steele, – not in hunting season, but no matter’ [JTe] (used in place names, particularly in the Borders, e.g., ‘Ashiestiel’, ‘Leapstee’, ‘the Steel’ and ‘Steele Knowe’).

Steel (steel) n. Lord David Martin Scott (1938– ) born in Kirkcaldy, son of a minister, he became M.P. for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles from 1965, at age 26, and was known as ‘Boy David’. He remained Hawick’s M.P. until the boundary changes saw him move to Tweeddale, Ettrick & Lauderdale in 1983. However, in 1970 he only won by 550 votes. He was Liberal Party leader from 1976, including the period of the ‘Lib-Lab pact’ and the SDP-Liberal Alliance, resigning in 1987. He was knighted in 1990 and became Lord Steel of Aikwood in 1997 when he retired after 32 years in Westminster. He then became the M.S.P. for the Lothians and first Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament 1999-2003. He rode to Mosspaul and followed the Cornet on the Friday in 1965 and was Common Riding Chief Guest in the Millenium year. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John witness in 1510/1 to a letter of acquittance by George Scott of Whames and Borthaugh, written in Edinburgh. He is recorded as ‘Johanne Steyll’. Judith Mary ‘Judy’ nee MacGregor, M.B.E. (1940– ) born in dollar, she studied law at Edinburgh University, where she met her husband, David. The couple married in 1962. She has published poetry, plays and other writings. In 1987 she founded the Rowan Tree Theatre Company in the Borders, and in 2011 was awarded the M.B.E. for services to theatre in the Borders. She championed the renovation of Aikwood Tower (including wood recycled from the pews of Hawick Parish Church), later housing a museum to her idol, James Hogg, ‘the Ettrick Shepherd’. In 2007 her play ‘The Journey of Jeannie Deans’ was the first production to be staged in the new Heart of Hawick auditorium. She has 3 children, Graeme, Catriona Judith and Rosan, and an adopted son, Billy. The couple retired to live in Selkirk. Rev. Robert (1826–1920) born in Saltcoats, he attended the Evangelical Union Hall in Kilmarnock. In 1866 he came to Newcastle upon Tyne to be minister of the Congregational Church there, and remained until 1875. After that he was minister at Dalmellington and Galston in Ayrshire. During the 1851 census he was a lodger in Newcastleupon-Tyne, listed as ‘Independent Minister’, and so he had an association with the village long before 1866. Sir Samuel Strang of Philiphaugh (1882–1961) son of William Strang, who succeeded at Philiphaugh. He stood unsuccessfully as an M.P. for Selkirk and Peebles in 1910 and served with the Lothians and Border Horse in WWI. He was an M.P. in Kent for a decade, was later President of the Scottish Unionist Association and was created a Baronet in 1938. He served with the Forestry Commission 1932–49 and was in charge of timber in Scotland in WWII. He was a County Councillor for Selkirkshire, Lord Lieutenant for that county 1948–56 and an Ensign in the Royal Company of Archers. He was also a member of the Archaeological Society.

the Steel (the-steel) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, north of Swanstead Hill and south of Branxholme Wester Loch, reaching a height of 326 m. It may be associated with the lands of ‘Steyll’ mentioned in the 1420 charter for half of the lands of Branxholme (probably from the old English for steep).

The Steel Bonnets (the-steel-bo-nits) n. book by George MacDonald Fraser, full title ‘The Steel Bonnets: The Story of the Anglo-Scottish Border Reivers’, it was written in 1971. Fraser was known as a writer of swash-buckling historical fiction. His background makes this book both grippingly written and over-romanticised.

Steele (steel) n. Andrew (1811–82) local poet, born in Coldstream. He spent a few years in the parish school, worked as an agricultural labourer and was then apprenticed as a shoemaker, moving to Galashiels. He published his first poem in the Kelso Chronicle and sometime thereafter published a volume of his poems. He moved to Hawick about 1869 and published a second edition of his book in 1871. In later life he sold tea for a wholesale grocer. He was also a great dog lover, writing a poem to his dog Nailer. His longer verses are derivative of well-known English poets, but his Borders poetry is more valuable. He died at 14 Dickson Street and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (19th C.) factor of the Minto estate, recorded in 1885.

the Steele (the-steel) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, associated with the modern Steele Road. The specific place marked on maps is the ridge of land just to the north-west of the road junction at Steele Road, between the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. ‘Willaim Nisoun in the Stele’ is recorded in 1516, ‘Barte Nixson of Stelle’, as well as Archie, Thomas and Alexander in 1544, and Will Elliot of the Steele in 1583 and 1599.
In 1584 Harry and Archie Nixon ‘of the Steill’ were among men who signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John Elliot was there in 1590 when complained about for a raid into England. Additionally the lands of ‘Stellis within the Dyk’ are recorded in 1541, when it was tenanted by Nixons; it is unclear if these are the same lands or not. Francie Beattie was there in 1623. Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of Nether and Over Steele, and was combined with Brighouse, ‘Ingrasswall’, ‘Guelbeck’ and Cleuchhead. Together they covered 706 acres and were bounded by Taylormacleuchhead, Dimlaby, Bygate and Shaw, with the farmhouse being marked near the modern location of Cleuchhead and another farmhouse to the north, perhaps around Shawshiel Rig. The ‘Steele Road’ is the name given to the road that crosses here, linking the Liddel and Hermitage valleys (also written ‘the Steel’; it is ‘Stell’ and ‘Stelle’ in 1544, ‘the Steill’ in 1586, ‘Stell’ in 1694 and ‘Steill’ in 1718; the same word occurs in other place names, such as ‘Aishiesteel’, and means the spur of a hill, with the same Old English root giving us the word ‘stile’; see also Steele Road).

Steele Knowe (steel-now) n. hill in Southdean Parish, on the left side of the A6088 after the hamlet of Southdean. It reaches a height of 273 m. To the north-east is an old stock enclosure with turf walls, as well as 4 small cairns. To the north is another enclosure, with a bank and ditch. On the south-west slopes are the remains of 2 turf huts. On a terrace on the west side are the remains of 3 round-ended buildings, one of which is 26.5 m long and divided into 3 parts (and may have been a combination of byre and domestic uses). There are also other enclosures and banks in this area between the hill and Jordan Sike, some cut through by a gas pipeline. To the south of the hill there is a roughly 3 km boundary bank, which runs all the way from Jordan Sike to the east, to finish south of Lethem (also written ‘Steel Knowe’).

Steele Plantin (steel-plawn-tin) n. plantation in Liddesdale, running along the north side of the Steele road (i.e. the road connecting Steele Road station with the B6399).

Steele Road (steel-rød) n. small station on the Waverley Line, between Riccarton and Newcastleton, now a house. The station was opened in 1862 and closed in 1869 along with the rest of the railway. The name used until 1900 was Netherhope. There was a signal-box south of the station, which has been demolished. The place name ‘Steele’ long precedes the railway, with Nether and Over Steele being farmed by the Elliots and the Croziers from at least the 16th century and surviving into the 20th century. ‘Steele Road’ is the name of the road that crosses ‘the Steele’, and the station took its name from that. Several large enclosures have been identified to the west from aerial photography, as well as 2 areas of rig-and-furrow to the east (sometimes ‘Steel Road’; it is ‘the Steile’ and ‘the Steill’ in the 1580s; it is marked as ‘O. Steell’ and ‘N. Steell’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Steele Road-end (steel-rød-end) n. shepherd’s cottage on the B6357, south of Larriston, marked the end of the road over ‘the Steele’. It is situated where the way to the hamlet (and ex-station) of Steele Road meets the main road. It may also have been called ‘Riccarton roadend’. This could be the ‘Road End’ where William Elliot was recorded in 1868.

stell (stell) n. a stall, enclosure, shelter for sheep or cattle, usually composed of a dry-stane dyke and often circular, with an opening on one side, away from the prevailing wind – ‘. . . and numerous stells have been erected for the shelter of the stock’ [RJAW], ‘They were with great difficulty brought to a ‘stell’ (a feeding-place for sheep in winter) . . .’ [RB], ‘Sheep drains, sheep stells, and March fences have been done much . . .’ [WA], ‘. . . Threa yowes i’ the stells in the warm July days’ [DH], ‘. . . Scarce farm or stall or shearing-stance But echoed with some jibe at France’ [WHO] (see also stells and sheep-stell; these are given other names elsewhere, with ‘stell’ being particularly prevalent in the south of Scotland).

stells (stelz) n. sheep enclosures. These are usually circular and often about 50 yards in circumference and five feet high, although they vary in size. The entrances are on the leeside of the prevailing wind, and are usually built wider at the top than the bottom. The stone came by sled from nearby quarries. There are thousands of them across the Borders and there is a claim that the basic design originated in Hawick.

Stells (stelz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Stellis, within the Dyk’. It is valued at 31 shillings and tenanted by Nixons. The lands of ‘Litlesteill’ may have been nearby; they were valued in 1541 at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (it is also possible this was related to Steele Road or the Steel).

stend (stend) v., poet. to leap, spring, bound – ‘The spring that ilk ane lik’d he kend; Auld wives at sixty wad stend . . .’ [CPM].

Stenhouse (sten-hoos) n. (Stenhouse) John (b.1812/3) born in Holmes, near Melrose, he was a grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory (when he was also a toy dealer). His shop was at about No. 51. His wife was Catherine and their children included Elizabeth, Helen, Jessie and John. John (b.1812/3) born in Stow, he was a carrier in Bowden. In 1852 he is recorded running a weekly service between Hawick and Lilliesleaf, Midlem or Bowden, leaving from the Coach & Horses on Saturdays. His wife was Agnes P., and their children included Janet, John, Joan and Helen. Neil ‘Stenny’ (1980/1– ) educated at Drumlanrig and Hawick High Schools. Originally a scrum-half for the High School, Hawick Albion, the P.S.A. and the Linden. From the age of 17 he was playing for Hawick R.F.C. and at 18 was playing sevens in a Scottish side. He later moved to stand-off and turned out regularly for the Greens, being part of the 2002 Cup-winning side. He then made over 100 appearances for Nottingham before retiring from the game at age 27 and works as a teacher in Nottingham. His wife is Laura and their children are Gillie and Quinn.

Steven (stev-vin) n. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1623 as schoolmaster at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. William, who was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1630, may have been related to him. Alexander (19th/20th C.) proprietor of the ‘Berwick News’ and ‘Berwick Journal’. He married Mary, daughter of David McBurnie Watson. He gave 3 bursaries to the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, in memory of ‘Ada Carr Steven’, ‘Mary Watson Steven’ and ‘Esther Watson Steven’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1702) and Beatrie (b.1704). Robert (16th/17th C.) notary for a bond between Robert Turnbull, tenant in Bedrule, and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. He was also notary in 1618 for a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. In 1619 he was notary public in Raperlaw when accused of being among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who took hay from Huntliehill. As one of the few men who appeared personally, he was not declared as a rebels (also written ‘Stevin’).

Stevens (stev-vinz) n. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) housekeeper at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. She was presumably wife of Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) valet at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. He is probably the Thomas from Cavers whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797.

Stevenson (stev-vin-sin) n. Agnes ‘Nancy’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of John of Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish, and sister of Nel and Maizie, whom she lived with. She kept an unlicensed driking establishment at her cottage, apparently buying a whisky jug from Douglas Laidlaw in Hawick, to give her whisky an appearance of quality. She was visited by the exciseman one day and thereafter fined, although let off lightly because James Elliot of Wolfelee was on the bench. However, when caught again and fined more severely she gave up her illicit business. She was the last surviving member of her family and lived her last days at the old blacksmith’s house at Forkins. Alexander (d.1724) shepherd at ‘Wadiespinnells’, presumably near Lethem in Southdean Parish. His will is in the Douglas of Cavers papers. Andrew (1795–1871) younger son of George. Like his father he was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, taking over after the death of his brother John in 1823. He sold the cottage and blacksmith’s shop at Hob Kirk Kirkstile to James Elliot of Wolfelee. It was said that he could neither read nor write, his education at the parish school having been hampered by a speech impediment. In 1861 he was listed as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, along with his grand-nephew Thomas Rutherford. Rutherford took over as smith at Bonchester after his death. Andrew (19th C.) Hawick carrier. He may have been the Andrew born in 1832, son of James and Marion Douglas. His cousin Elizabeth Stevenson married Thomas Huggan. Andrew (b.1905/6) Hawick man who worked for Turnbull the Dyers, where his father was Foreman. He moved to Langholm in the 1930s to work for Arthur Bell and started his own dyeing business in 1946, called the Langholm Dyeing Company. His sons David and Neil joined the family firm, which evolved into Edinburgh Woollen Mill. Ann (18th C.) servant at Wells in 1791, when she worked for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald (18th C.) merchant of Peebles, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1736. Archibald Forrester (1811–47) son of Rev. David of Wilton. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was recorded as a surgeon in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a surgeon at the Sandbed (possibly Bridge House) in 1841. In 1835 he married Mary Moodie in Lilliesleaf Parish. They had children: Jessie (b.1839); Jessie (again, b.1843); Alexander (b.1845); and James (b.1845), twin of Alexander. He died the year of a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Rev. Charles Findlater (1831–1905) son of Rev. David of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was ordained at Stobhill in 1860 and was Minister of Barry from 1866. He died unmarried. It seems likely that he was named after Rev. Charles Findlater, minister of Linton and Newlands, who died in 1828. Rev. David (1784–1851) born in Glasgow, son of David and Jean Renton, he was educated at Glasgow University. He became schoolmaster at West Linton in 1810 and was licensed by Peebles in 1817. He was presented to Wilton by Walter Francis, Duke of Bucleuch in late 1825, taking up his new position in 1826, where he remained until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Christian Taylor, daughter of a Lasswade farmer and they had many children, including: William (1810–57), who became a merchant and died in the U.S.A.; Archibald Forrester (1811–47), a surgeon in Hawick; Jane (1813–43), who married James Farish of Montreal; Alexander (1815–41), also a surgeon; Thomas (1817–78), who worked with H.M. Customs; James (1819–44), a merchant; Catherine, who died in infancy; Anne (1821–91); Christian Buchanan (1823–87); Robert Dundas (1827–58), another surgeon; Catherine Forrester (1829–37); Charles Findlater (1831–1905), who became minister of Barry; and Ellen (1833–52). He published ‘Two Sermons preached on the death of Rev. James Strachan’ (1840) and ‘Sermons on important subjects, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1841) and also wrote a description of Wilton Parish for the New Statistical Account of 1845. David, C.B.E. (1941– ) son of Andrew, he was born in the Haig Maternity Home, even although his family lived in Langholm by then. His grandfather had been foreman-dyer at Turnbulls of Hawick. He attended school in Langholm, then Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University, before qualifying as a chartered accountant. He was a champion pole-vaulter, breaking Borders and Scottish records on 10 occasions; his first open competition in the pole vault was at the Hawick Common Riding Games. He represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in 1962, 1966 and 1970, and Britain in the 1964 Olympics. He joined the family dyeing business in 1967. In order to promote the 1970 Commonwealth Games tartan he (and his brother Neil) started Edinburgh Woollen Mill. This grew into a retail company, expanding outlets, and using Heather Mills in Selkirk for producing cloth. He sold the company in 1996 and later concentrated on his firm Ashleybank Investments. He also became a racehorse owner, having several winners. Additionally he sponsored Borders show-jumper Ian Stark. He was made C.B.E. in 1988 for business achievements. He was Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire for 20 years and was made Honorary Freeman of Dumfries and Galloway in 2012. He has been involved in several charities, such as the Robertson Trust and Scottish Sports Aid, championed the redevelopment of Langholm’s Buccleuch Centre and was founder chairman of the Langholm Initiative. He was the Hawick Common Riding Chief Guest in 2017. His wife Alix is a former international long-jumper and hockey player. They have 2 daughters, Karen and Lynne. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. George (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outtersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Peter, who was also listed. George (d.beft. 1759) son of John. He was blacksmith at ‘Hobkirksyle’, recorded in 1735. He married a daughter of John Shiel of Hobkirk Kirkstile. Their children included: Charles (b.1732); John (b.1735); Betty (b.1738), who married gardener Adam Kersel in 1759; James (b.1740), who probably died young; Jean (b.1743), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann (b.1746), who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755). George (b.1760) son of John of Hobkirk Kirkstile, and probably grandson of the elder George. He worked in the blacksmith’s shop with his father. He may be the George who was lived at Bonchester Bridgend according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Laidlaw. Their children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Jane (or Jenny, b.1787), who married Robert Amos; Betty (b.1789); John (1791–1823); Andrew (b.1795); Agnes, who married Alex Baptie; and Janet (b.1787). He appears to have changed the spelling of the family surname from ‘Stephenson’ to ‘Stevenson’. George Drummond ‘Stevie’ (1933–2012) played for Hawick P.S.A., Linden and the Greens in the period 1951–67. He was capped 24 times for Scotland, scoring a try against England in his debut match in 1956. He was also referred to as ‘Back-door Stevie’ because of the number of times he was called into the Scotland squad at the last minute. A career highlight was a solo try scored for the Scottish District when they defeated South Africa at Mansfield Park in the 1960s. He played at centre and wing, and at 6 feet 2 inches was tall for a back. Serving an engineering apprenticeship in Hawick, he then did National Service, worked for Bibby’s the farm suppliers and became a sales representative for Ballantine’s Whisky (although ironically he was a teetotaller), settling in Currie. His married Jessie and had children Fiona and Mark. Gilbert (b.c.1770s) evant at Birneyknowe according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Helen (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Her name is given after James Scott, with Adam Scott being the tenant, and hence she may have been related to one or both of them. Helen ‘Nel’ (b.1771) daughter of John, Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile and sister of Nancy and Maizie, with whom she lived. She married a Murray, but they separated and she apparently hated to be called ‘Mrs. Murray’. She made a living by spinning yarn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: John (b.1702); William (b.1703); and John (again, b.1707). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. In 1708 he was described as ‘in Harwood’ tenant to arcleton’. He married Jean Thomson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1705); James (b.1707); John (b.1708); Bessie (b.1710); and Margaret (b.1710). The witnesses in 1705 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield, in 1707 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Francis Gledstains in Braidhaugh and in 1708 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill. James (18th C.) married Jane (or Jean) Scott in Cavers Parish in 1754. His wife died in 1814, aged 87. Their children included: Jane (1754–97), who married Thomas Grieve and died at Muselee; John (1759/60–87), who died at Alderybar; and James (1760/1–85), who also died at Alderybar. James (18th C.) married Ann Dryden in Hobkirk Parish in 1766. He may be the James whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk in 1770. James (1805–89) educated in Jedburgh, he entered the office of Roxburghshire Procurator-Fiscal Shortreed, and was appointed to that position himself in 1827 when he became of age. He served for the astonishing period of 60 years, latterly assisted by his son. He was also Clerk of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a clerk in Jedburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. There are letters to him preserved in the Walter Mason Collection from the 1820s. He was honorary secretary and later full member of the Jedforest Club. He was an ardent Tory, but took no part in local politics. He married Charlotte, daughter of William Graham, doctor in Jedburgh and secondly married a daughter of Rev. William Aston Shute. His eldest son James Charles took over most of his county duties. John (16th C.) priest at the Kirk of the Lowes. He was Listed as ‘vicar pensioner of the Forrest kirk’ in 1574 when he was still owed for previous years in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Learmonth and their son Robert was baptised in 1634. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Gilbert was baptised in 1704. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the same John was baptismal witness in 1708 (along with weaver John Richardson) for weaver David Reid, in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) for James Scott ‘Laird’, in 1721 (along with weaver Adam Scott) for merchant William Black and in 1725 (along with weaver George Wight) for weaver Robert Wight. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Scott called ‘Laird’. Their children included: Janet (b.1717); Thomas (b.1719); John (b.1720); John (again, b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1719 were wright John Pringle and Walter Scott in Newbigging, and in 1720 were weavers James Scott and Thomas Greenshields. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary ‘Milleken’ and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1719. John (18th C.) early member of the Stevensons of Rulewater, first recorded in 1729 when he made use of the Hobkirk ‘mort cloath’ for a family burial. They were living at Singdean at that time. His mother died in 1733. His son was George, who was blacksmith at Hobkirkstile. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howe cleuch in 1716 and 1721. His children probably included: John (b.1716); Margaret (b.1721); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) recorded getting married in Kirkton in 1751, with no wife’s name given. John (18th C.) son of George, he was Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile, which he inherited from his grandfather John Shiel. He was also portioner of Kirknowe. He lived in a cottage at Singdean. He sold Hobkirkstile in 1779. He may have been the John who married Agnes Douglas in 1758. George (b.1760) was probably also his son, as well as possibly John (b.1765). Janet (b.1759) may have been his daughter, as well as Betty, whose daughter Betty Beattie married blacksmith Tom Rutherford. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son John was baptised in 1785 (or perhaps 1775). The witnesses were Archibald Elliot and John Smith. John (b.c.1770s) wright in Hawick. He is recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. John (d.1823) elder son of George and brother of Andrew. He took over from his father as blacksmith at Boul cher Bridge. After his death he was succeeded in the business by his brother Andrew. He may be the John whose children, baptised in Hob Kirk Parish, included Betty (b.1770), Helen (b.1771), Jean (b.1773), Douglas (b.1776), Agnes (b.1778), Maizie (b.1781) and William (b.1783). He may be the ‘J.’ who married Nelly Rodger in Hob kirk in 1769. John (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Renwick in Roberton in 1819. Rev. John (1846–1929) born in Eccles, Berwickshire, son of John, the schoolmaster there. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1865, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1869 and was ordained as assistant and successor to Rev. Archibald Craig of Bedrule in 1875. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1891. He married Christina Laing of Denholmhill, and she died in 1891. He secondly married Christina Gowanlock Turnbull (daughter of John Turnbull, farmer at Priestrig), and she died in 1961 at the age of 94. His children were: Margaret Scott, who married Thomas William Brockie; Mary Farmer (d.1918), who married John B. Forsyth; and John, who was a Captain in the R.A.M.C. He demitted his charge in 1923, died at Bonchester Bridge and is buried at Bedrule, where there is a memorial plaque inside the church. John Briggs (1849–1931) son of Thomas P., he was born in Hawick. He went to Brownsea Island, Poole and then to Bournemouth in 1887, where he became Parks Superintendent, retiring in 1919. His children included Thomas, John, Charles, Harry and Hugh. He is probably the John Briggs recorded as proprietor of Com monside in about 1900. Margaret (19th C.) resident of the West Port area. In 1832 she is one of the Hawick people who contracted cholera, but recovered. Mary ‘Maizie’ (18th/19th C.) youngest daughter of John who lived at Hobkirk Kirkstile with her sisters Nel and Nancy. She had a natural son called Robert Wilson, who worked on the plantations at Wolfelee. In later life she was the cleaner at Hobkirk Church. But she used the cushions from the ‘Lairds’ Lofts’ as a bed for lodgers during the week, and was dismissed when this was discovered. Michael (d.1789) first landlord of the Tower Inn, from about 1771. In that year it is recorded that Bailie Hardie was reimbursed by the Council ‘for a bottle of wine (Stevenson’s), at attending His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’, suggesting that he was already running the inn by then. He was brought from Yorkshire specifically to be inn-keeper and was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1773. In 1773 the Council recorded that they met ‘in Michael Stevenson’s’ to petition an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs to the Auld Brig. He is recorded as inn-keeper there in 1778 and 1780. He was taxed for having 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1785–1789 and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. In 1785 he was taxed for employing James ‘Stevenson’ (who was presumably therefore unrelated) as a waiter, as well as an unnamed waiter in 1787. ‘Mrs. Stevenson’ was taxed for carriages in the year 1789/90 and for having a female servant in 1789, suggesting that he was deceased by then. In 1798 the death is recorded in Hawick of ‘Mrs. Stevenson spouse of Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. He was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who subscribed to ‘Pait Stevinsone’ right after George. Peter (18th C.) said to have been a neighbour in 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). His son Robert with Isobel Turnbull was baptised in Hawick in 1797, with witnesses Rev. W. Knox (although hard to read) and merchant George Waldie. Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in Wilton in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19–72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane.

Patrick (16th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Robert (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert Grieve and William Elliot. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howes stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Stevinsone’ right after George. Peter (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. His wife was Mary Pledger; and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Christian (b.1702). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Reid and their children included: Jean (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); John (b.1760); Jane (b.1762); Betty (b.1767); and Thomas (b.1771). The witnesses in 1762 were shoemaker John Scott and tobacconist James Scott. Robert (19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. His infant child’s death is recorded in 1840, with his wife Christian Scott dying 2 days later. Sandy (??–2002) local solicitor, born in Kelso. He came to Hawick in 1963, was Acting Father in 1973 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee 1977–87 and again for part of 2001. Thomas (17th/18th C.) said to have come from Hummelknoves and become tenant at Little Whitlaw, where he kept more than a hundred sheep on the Town’s Common. However, the ‘Town Herd of Hawick hounded, scattered, and destroyed said Thomas Stevenson’s sheep, till he was obliged to make sale of what was left, and gave up his farm’; this is according to evidence given by John Douglas in 1767. Thomas (18th/19th C.) winder of ‘pirns’ for stocking-makers. He lived near the West Port. He had a son, also Thomas, whose wife Margaret was one of the people who contracted cholera in early 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). His son Robert with Isobel Turnbull was baptised in Hawick in 1797, with witnesses Rev. W. Knox (although hard to read) and merchant George Waldie. Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in Wilton in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19–72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (b.1860), who both died young; Agnes, who married mason James Turnbull; William Laidlaw, woollen merchant; John Briggs, who moved to England; Thomas, postman and proprietor of the Douglas Hotel; and Beatrix (b.1857). His other children included: Walter (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married...
Janet Oliver. Their children included: William (b.1768); Walter (b.1768); Gilbert (b.1770); and Katharine (b.1779). The witnesses to William’s baptism in 1768 were Gilbert Oliver (probably his father-in-law) and Francis Aitkin. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 his daughter with Ann Howison died. Walter Laidlaw (19th C.) partner with Alexander Innes in the woollen merchants firm Innes, Stevenson & Co. He retired in 1892, after which the firm continued with F.E.H. Chambers as a new partner. William (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811 and valued at £3 13s 2d. William (1729/30–1807) tenant farmer at Langbushiel. He is recorded as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He also paid tax on 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French) in 1803. It was said that his ‘sound knowledge, singular abilities, and successful improvements, as a store-farmer, have been seldom equalled’. He could be the William who married Isabel Vass in Hob Kirk in 1773 and whose unnamed child was baptised in Hob Kirk in that same year. William (b.c.1785) tanner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Agnes, Isabel, Jane, Thomas, Margaret and Williamina. His widow appears to be living at Kirkstyle in 1851. William Laidlaw (1845/6–93) worked for Laing & Irving, eventually becoming a partner in Irving, Groerson & Stevenson. He left this partnership to go into business with A.K. Innes as Innes, Stevenson & Co, retiring only about a year before his death. He built the villa Dunira. He married Susan Yule, who died in 1872, aged 26. Their only child was Bella, who married Maj. James Rodger (formerly spelled ‘Stevinsone’ etc., and interchangeable with ‘Stephenson’ before the mid-18th century).

He was a supporter of his uncle, the Regent Albany. He married Isobel, Countess of Mar, daughter of William Douglas, Earl of Mar. Through her he inherited titles, including part of the Barony of Cavers and the Forest of Jedburgh, as recorded in a document of 1405. He was appointed Admiral of the Realm of Scotland about 1420. He had only one (illegitimate) son, Sir Thomas, who pre-deceased him. Alexander (c.1454–85) 1st Duke of Albany, 2nd son of King James II. He was Warden of the Western Marches from 1475. He also held the positions of Lord High Admiral, Governor of Berwick, and Lieutenant of the Kingdom. He was imprisoned after being suspected of plotting against his brother James III, but escaped and made pacts with Edward IV of England. He also offered to give Ewesdale and other parts of the Borders to England. After being sentenced to death in Scotland he fled to France, where he died in a tournament accident. His titles were inherited by John, son of his 2nd wife. Several men from the Borders were much later (in 1493) given remission at Jedburgh for having been among his supporters, including Ralph Ainslie, Thomas Brown in Minto, Robert Dalgleish in Howden, George Davidson in Raperlaw, John Graham & James of Newton, Adam Kirkton in Crailing Mill, Patrick Mow, Thomas Riddell brother of Riddell of that Ilk, Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule, George Turnbull of Bedrule, John Turnbull in Bedrule, Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote and John Waugh (possibly in Hawick). Sir Alexander of Dalswinton and Garlies (d.c.1500) son of Sir William of Minto. In 1458/9 he and his wife Elizabeth had a charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle. His family held lands locally, including Howplesley, which he resigned about 1468, when he was still ‘younger’; these may have previously belonged to an elder brother, Andrew, who must have died first. Another brother was Sir Thomas of Minto to whom he gave consent in 1476 to his father’s grant of the lands of Minto. In the same year he also resigned to his brother the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle, also with the consent of his wife, Elizabeth, reserving for themselves a 20 merk land there. In 1477 he had a charter for the lands of Dalswinton, with the permission of his son, witnessed by his brother Thomas of Minto. He served as Scottish Ambassador to England in 1485 and fought at Sauchieburn in 1488. He is probably the Alexander mentioned in 1501 when it is stated that sasine had been given to him for half of the market rights in Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 3 years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, who was killed at Flodden. His other children included: Agnes, who married John, 3rd Lord Maxwell; John; Archibald, Parson of Kirkmaho; and Janet, who married Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1513) son of Sir Alexander and Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of the Laird of Cavers. He married Elizabeth Kennedy, probably a daughter of Kennedy of Blairquhan. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander, and was said to have also had 16 daughters, each of whom married a laird of distinction. He was killed at Flodden. Sir Alexander of Garlies (c.1508–c.93) son of Alexander who was killed at Flodden. He was the 4th of Garlies, and was a minor under his uncle Archibald, parson of Kirkmaho. He was captured at Solway Moss in 1542 and his son was held as hostage in his place. Also in 1542 he erected his lands into the Baronies of Dalswinton and Garlies. The Dalswinton Barony included the family’s half merkland in Minto, and patronage of the Rectory there. He was a Commissioner for Wigtownshire in the 1550s and sat in Parliament in 1560 and 1565. He acted as ambassador to Henry VIII in 1572. He was still alive in 1593, but died soon afterwards. He firstly married Katherine, daughter of Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. He secondly married Margaret Dunbar and thirdly married Catherine, daughter of his cousin Walter Stewart of Barcyle. His children were: Sir Alexander, who died before him, with his son Sir Alexander succeeding; John; Margaret; Anthony; Robert; William; and Helen. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1597) 5th of Garlies, grandson of Sir Alexander, the previous Laird, his father (also Sir Alexander) dying before his grandfather. His mother was Katherine, 2nd daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He inherited many lands, including the small piece of land and rights within Minto. He was knighted in 1590 and sat in Parliament in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also a Commissioner for resetting. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. His brother John was mentioned later. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Tynneis’ witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh in 1580. Alexander (17th/18th C.) dyker in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Margaret (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker Robert Allan. Alexander (b.c.1770s) hosier in Hawick. He was recorded as a stockingmaker in Hawick in the 1799 ballot for the Militia. His unnamed child died in 1811. He could be the Alexander who married Margaret Scott and had children Ebenezer (b.1805), Betty (b.1808), David (b.1810) and David (again, b.1812), baptised in Wilton. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Stevenson in Cavers 1809. Alexander (b.c.1820) servant at Cavers House in 1841. Allan (19th C.) from Barra in Invernesshire, he was a quarryman in Hawick. He married Agnes Ekron in 1857 and their children included: Angus (b.c.1857); Anne E. (b.1862); and Elizabeth (b.1871). His wife may have been daughter of Andrew Ekron, with her mother’s name being Elizabeth. Andrew (d.c.1460) eldest son of Sir William of Dalswinton, brother of Alexander and Thomas of Minto. In 1458/9 he had a crown charter of the lands of Minto, Howpasley, Longnewton, as well as lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and Wigton. However, he probably died soon after, since his brother Alexander resigned the lands in about 1468 and later succeeded to Dalswinton and Garlies. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as servant to the Laird of Riddell in 1596. He was accused of crimes by Englishman Nicholas Forster in the previous year. Andrew of Ochiltree (c.1560–1628/9) son of Andrew, Master of Ochiltree, he was the 3rd Lord. He served as Lieutenant and Warden of the West Marches in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also General of Edinburgh Castle. He settled in Northern Ireland at Castle Stuart. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1732 and 1737. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull and Elspeth Douglas, residents of Midshiels and in 1733 another for William Turnbull, also living at Midshiels. He married Marion Huntly in Wilton in 1731 and their children included: Janet (b.1732); Robert (b.1734); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (again, b.1739). The witnesses in 1732 were James Scott and John Thomson and in 1737 were John Pringle and Robert Turnbull. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Langlands’ in 1744 and 1748. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: Agnes (b.1742); James (b.1744); George (b.1746); James (again, b.1748); Ann (b.1750); Andrew (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1755). The witnesses in 1742 were James Douglas (perhaps related to his wife) and James Dryden, in 1744 were William Scott and what looks like James Dryden and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Andrew (18th C.) married Jean Wright in 1761, both from Wilton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Crozier. Their children (born in Lilliesleaf, but baptised in Linton) included: Peggy (b.1787); and Robert (b.1790). Andrew, J.P. (19th C.) owner of the farm of Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1870s. In about 1874 he is recorded owning the share of Lilliesleaf Common (and its teinds) that formerly pertained to the lands of Bewlie Hill, as well as Hermiston. Archibald (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of James of Tinnis. In 1608 he was among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald of ‘Dephiope’ or his sons. Archibald (19th/20th C.) gardener at Wells estate. He had a brother who worked on the Maxpowlle estate and sisters who lived in Melrose. In 1882 at Bedrule Schoolhouse, he married Frances, daughter of schoolmaster William MacNeill. After Wells estate was sold off he moved to West Linton. The couple’s only child was William MacNeill. Bell (18th/19th C.) spinner from Glasgow. It is said that when the first spinning jenny arrived in Hawick, for operation at the Tower Knowe Mill, one of the strongest workers was given the task of operating it, but gave up, claiming that no one could stand to run it. The employers, Waldie & Pringle, then called for an experienced operator from Glasgow, to show the workers how it could be done easily. This was probably around the early 1820s. Charles (b.1618) son of Francis and grandson of the last Earl of Bothwell. He was born at Tranent. There are papers relating to his lands of Wilton, Liddesdale and others in 1647 and 1648. He fought at the Battle of Worcester. He died unmarried, bringing an end to the local connection of the Hepburns and Stewarts. Charles 6th Duke of Lennox and 3rd Duke of Richmond (1639–72) son of George, 9th Seigneur d’Aubigny and grandson of Esme, 3rd Duke of Lennox. On the death of his cousin Esme he inherited the Lennox and Richmond titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. As Duke of Lennox he paid a small amount in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Ashkirk. However, it is unclear if he played any role in local affairs. He served as hereditary Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He drowned at Elsinore on a trip as ambassador to persuade Denmark to join a war on the Dutch. Although he married 3 times (the third time to Frances Teresa Stewart, mistress of his cousin Charles II), he died without issue. Charles (d.1744) 4th Earl of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother William, his other brother George having died before him. He was the last of his family to be Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Burdened with his grandfather’s debts, he sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford in 1687. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale and was succeeded by his sons Charles and then John. Charles Edward ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’ or ‘the Young Pretender’ (1720–88) son of James Francis and grandson of King James VII. In 1745 he attempted to capture the throne for his father, from George, landing in Scotland, gaining the support of an army of Highlanders and marching into England, where they met defeat. After being on the run for several months in Scotland he was able to flee to France and died an old man in Rome. Although there seems to have little local support for him at the time, part of his army passed near Hawick in 1745, and many tales grew up around events said to have happened at that time. Charles (19th/20th C.) local writer, who used the pseudonym ‘Karl Brown’. He who wrote a poem about the Sclaterford skirmish and may be the ‘Carl Brown’ who wrote ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is also the author of the novel ‘Andrew Macpherson: a tale of the Borders’ (1905), which was serialised in the Hawick Express. This tells the story of the minister of the fictitious Roselea (a thinly disguised Lilliesleaf) and his love affairs, with some of the action taking place in South Africa. David (18th C.) merchant of Hawick who married Ann Fordyce of Aberdeen in Edinburgh in 1776. David member of...
Stewart

the Archaekological Society and font of knowledge on Hawick and the nearby rural areas. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. His daughter is Norma. Rev. Duncan (1841–1908) from Dumblane, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He became the first minister of St. Andrew’s Free Church, being called there in 1867 (despite originally having the intention of doing missionary work in Africa), inducted in 1868 and remaining for about 40 years. He was assisted for the first year by John Tainsh. His sister also helped him with some activities associated with his church. He was said to have ‘the appearance of a jolly farmer of some twelve stones’ and to possess a powerful voice. He was also described as ‘a Puritan of the truest type’. He was involved with the temperance movement and the National Bible Society and locally with the Cottage Hospital and with Stobs. He also researched into Teviotdale connections with the Covenanters, for example publicising the besieging of Drumlanrig’s Tower. He had deep sympathy with those persecuted in the times of the Covenanters, lectured on this widely and was preparing a book on the topic when he died. His widow and Rev. John Smith of Denholm put together his posthumous work ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale and neighbouring districts’ (1908). In 1890 he married Mary J.S. Mitchell, daughter of the minister of Cluny and they had a son, John Livingstone (1894–1971).

Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Denholm. In about 1684 she was accused of attending conventicles. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. An account of hers to Thomas Inglis for soap, muslin and lace from 1797.

Esmé 5th Duke of Lennox (1649–1660) son of James, 1st Duke of Richmond. His father died in 1655 and he was served heir to the family properties and titles. This included the Barony of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. He went into exile to France with his mother and died of smallpox. His titles passed to his cousin Charles. Francis 5th Earl of Bothwell (1563–1611) nephew of James Hepburn, the 4th Earl. His father was John, Commendator of Coldingham, being an illegitimate son of James V (hence he was first cousin of James VI) and his mother was Lady Janet Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, the 3rd Earl. He was a powerful force in late 16th century Scotland. He was lay Commendator of Kelso Abbey, and held many baronies and estates, including Wilton, granted in a charter of 1568. Patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick was confirmed to him in 1581 and 1585 by James VI. In 1586, instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border), conferred responsibilities on him to make bonds with leaders in Liddesdale and set up court in either Jedburgh or Hawick. Also in 1586 he released several lands in Liddesdale to Ellists. A charter of 1587 confers on him the forfeited titles of his uncle, the 4th Earl, including Keeper of Liddesdale and Hermitage. In November 1587 (according to an English letter) he rode to Branholme and Hawick, there meeting with leaders from Liddesdale; although he publicly reminded them of the justice on the Border, his stepson Scott of Buccleuch carried out a raid around Bawcastle using his trumpet and standard. In 1589 there was a charge to him and Alexander, Lord Home, to keep peace with each other during the King’s absence. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 he escaped from prison in Edinburgh and there was a ‘band’ between the main noblemen of the Borders to lay aside their quarrels in order to capture him. He led several attempts to capture King James VI, including the ‘Falkland Raid’ of 1592, which involved about 300 horsemen from the Borders. This led to him losing all his titles, including Keeper of Hermitage, as well as his estates, to Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch (his stepson). A ‘summons of treason’ of 1592 lists him and his wife, along with many men (including some from the Borders) who were his supporters. Eventually forced to flee abroad, he died in Italy. There is a bond of 1604 in which he promises ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ to his servant Walter Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) when he was restored to the King’s favour and his former privileges; this never happened, with the Privy Council recording a complaint between his sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick against William Scott of Burnfoot and his brothers Walter and Robert, and furthermore his son and heir Francis was still trying to recover the lands in the 1620s. He married Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme and Buccleuch; she was also denounced as a rebel following the Falkland Raid. His daughter Elizabeth married James, Master of Cranstoun (and their daughter married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs). Another daughter Jean married Robert Elliot of Redlengh. A son John was Commendator of Coldingham, and another, Harry, held lands in Teviotdale. His seal showed a ‘bend’ in the 1st and 4th quarters, and a rose and 2 lions in the 2nd and 3rd, together with a surnaut, a lion rampant, an anchor and a shield bearing ‘F.S.’ He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who mixes up father and son – ‘King James the Fifth his bastard Son Was of as much regard, He married Buckleugh’s Relict He being but a Laird’ [CWS].

Francis (1584–1639) eldest son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was rehabilitated in 1614, a few years after his father’s death. But he did not get back the bulk of the lands that had gone to the Earl of Home and the Lords of Roxburghe and Buccleuch. King Charles interceded to try to resolve differences between him and the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh.

George (b.c.1785) stocking-maker (17th C.) farmer at Rulewood. His barn and yard are mentioned as part of the land dispute between Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Groundistone in 1729. He married Isabel, daughter of William Harkness in 1727, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1729, with witnesses James Scott and Robert Riddell. George (c.1715–93) Professor of Humanity (i.e. Latin) at Edinburgh University for more than 30 years from 1741. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He bought the estate of Midlem Mill in 1773, but must have already held Selkirkshire property before that. He was granted livery of Shielwood by Elliot of Minto (probably as part of the common practice of adding supporters to the county voter’s roll); he renounced this right in 1779, when it was given to Rev. Simon Haliburton. His son Gilbert was a historian and reviewer. George (b.c.1795) tenant of the quarry at Bedrule Mill in the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and they has a son William. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch over the teinds of the lands of ‘Kalrige, Commounsyyde and Mylnesingtoun’; the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. Hercules of Whitelaw (d.1595) son of John Stewart, Lord Darnley and brother of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was said to have owned Whitlaw near Hawick, but this is more likely to have been one of the numerous areas of a similar name elsewhere (near Bowden, Morebattle and in Lothian). In 1590 he and Francis, Earl of Bothwell were cautioners for Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Martin Elliot of Braidley. A ‘summons of treason’ listed him in 1592 and in 1593/4 he was denounced a rebel, along with others who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. He was hanged in Edinburgh. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Sir Alexander of Bonkill. She married Donald, Earl of Mar. They had 2 children: Thomas, who succeeded as Earl of Mar, and also inherited Cavers, but died childless; and Margaret, who became Countess of Mar in her own right, and was the ancestor of the Earls of Douglas. Donald was Regent of Scotland for a few months, but was killed at the Battle of Dupplin Moor in 1332, 3 years after his uncle, Robert the Bruce. She secondly married Geoffrey Murray, but divorced him soon afterwards. She thirdly married William Carswell, who was Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She claimed the sheriffship of Roxburghshire and the custody of Selkirk Forest as a hereditary right; this was looked into by Edward III in 1334 and led to the appointment of her husband by the English (then in control of the Borders) in 1347. She appears to have been deceased in 1348 when her husband William Carswell was granted her rights and lands in Scotland until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. She may have also married Alexander Balliol, Laird of Cavers. Note that a later Isabella, Countress of Mar, was her grand-daughter. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Janet Halliwell for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. She could be the Isabel born in Hawick in 1560 to Francis and Helen Muir. James (name of 6 Kings of Scotland, see under James.) James (d.1513) 1st of Traquair, 2nd (and illegitimate) son of James Earl of Buchan, his mother being Margaret Murray. In 1507/8 he was the first witness to the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scots of Whitchesters. Sometime before 1505 he married Katherine, grand-daughter of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He is said to have taken her away from her family and compelled her to marry him. She is said to have failed to inherit any of the Rutherford lands because of this marriage being to a kinsman. However, their son would later become Laird of Wells, after the death of her sister Helen. They had a son William (who succeeded and married Christina, daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester), and another son James, as well as a daughter Mary and another daughter who may have married Archibald, 6th Earl of Douglas. His widow complained about her treatment at his hands and the fact that she had lost her share of the inheritance to her sister; the result was that Rutherford and Wells went to her grandson Sir John of Traquair. He was killed at Flodden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to the tenant there, Philip, or to Helen who was listed after him. James (d.1557) eldest illegitimate son of James V. His half-siblings included Mary (Queen of Scots), James (Earl of Moray, later Regent), Robert (Prior of Whithorn), Robert (Earl of Orkney), Adam (Prior of Charter House) and John (Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham). He was the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso 1534/5–57, one of the last before the Reformation, and probably lived in the Commendator’s House. He gave the ‘Monk’s Tower’ at Hassendean to Walter Scott of Branholme in 1546/7 and granted a charter of Cockerheugh to William Turnbull in 1556. His seal is in the National Museum of Scotland. James (c.1531–70) an illegitimate son of James V, his mother being Margaret Erskine. He was also known as ‘the Regent Moray’ and sometimes ‘the Earl of Mar’. He became chief advisor to his half-sister Mary Queen of Scots on her return to Scotland in 1561, and was one of the leaders of the Scottish Reformation. In 1561 (or 1562) he commanded an expedition against freebooting Borderers. This included surrounding Hawick on market day to surprise people reselling stolen goods. 53 men were captured and 18 of them drowned in the Siltrig, ‘for lack of trees and halters’, while another 6 were hanged later in Edinburgh. In 1567 he repeated the exercise on Hallowe’en, attended by Lords Morton, Howe and Lindsay and their followers. In preparation for their visit, Hawick was among towns who were charged to ‘have in reddines bakin breid, browin aill, hors meit, mannis meit and uther neidfull ludgeing and provisoun’. They then captured 34 thieves, including 22 Elliots and 6 Croziers, having 11 of them immediately hanged and 7 drowned in Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that the hangings happened on 2 beams laid across the Auld Brig. 10 of these men were held in Edinburgh Tolbooth and we have a record of their names (5 were called Robert Elliot!). He may also have revisited Hawick in 1569, and certainly in that year led an assault on Liddesdale, blowing up the tower of Mangerton, burning Whithaugh, etc. There was an order from the Privy Council for a large number of men (from all over southern Scotland) to muster in Hawick to meet him on 8th October (moved by 2 days to coincide with the full Moon), ‘weill bodon in feir of weir, with xx dayis victuallis and provisoun’, in order to subdue the ‘rebellious subjects’ of the Middle and West Marches. He was Regent from 1567, but fell from favour after failing in a bid to seize the crown from Mary. He was assassinated in Linlithgow by his old rivals the Hamiltons. He was succeeded by his daughter Elizabeth, who married her kinsman James Stewart. James of Bothwellhaugh (16th C.) in 1581 he received the Earldom of Arran from James Hamilton, who was considered insane, but these titles were restored to Hamilton in 1586. In 1584 he was appointed Lord Warden General of all the Marches, but this only lasted 1 or 2 years. James of Tannis (16th C.) ally of Scott of Thirlestane. His home was presumably Tannis in the Yarrow valley. In 1592 he had caution ‘to behave himself loyally’ and ‘not come within ten miles of the King’s presence’; he was also cautioned for several others, including William Scott in Hundleshope and his brothers Robert and David. He was listed in 1592 among those summoned for treason and William Stewart of Traquair was ordered to demolish his ‘place and houses of Tynneis’ because of his involvement in the Falkland Raid. His sons included Alexander, John and Archibald. James of Wells (16th C.) recorded in 1592 when he complained to the Privy Council about Turnbulls attacking his lands of Wells. Specifically, John, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule, threatened and menaced his servant James Newlands when he was ploughing. He may be the same as another Stewart. James of Shillinglaw (d.1607) 6th of the Barony of Traquair and also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He succeeded his father William in 1605, his 3 elder brothers all having died without issue. As well as inheriting several lands, he had the right of patronage of Bedrule Kirk. However, he only enjoyed his position for a couple of years before dying and being succeeded by his grandson, Sir John, the 1st Earl. He married Catherine Kerr and their children were John (whose son succeeded), Robert of Shillinglaw, William, Margaret, Janet (who married John Veitch of Dawyck), Gelis, Walter, Isobel and Mary. James of Nether Horsburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Shillinglaw. In 1634 he was served heir to his father’s lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. He was separately served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Roulwood’, ‘Majorwellis et Westlies’, extending to a 6-pound land of old extent, lying in the Barony of ‘Hareis’ by annexation. James (17th C.) described as a cordiner when he was a witness at a trial of Hawick Magistrates Court in 1642. He was deceased in 1666 when his son Walter gave evidence for a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk. He could be the John, married to Manie Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included John (b.1643), Walter (b.1646) and an unnamed son (b.1648). Probably the same James witnessed baptisms in 1648 for George Hope and for James Lunn. James 4th Duke of Lennox, 1st Duke of Richmond (1612–55) eldest son of Esme and Katherine Clifton. He was a key Royalist supporter in the Civil War and is buried in Westminster Abbey. Among his many titles and properties were the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, being granted these by Charles I in 1641. In 1643 he is listed as holder of feu duties for Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £18 5s. He still held superiority over Barnhills in 1653. He was succeeded by his young son Esme. James (17th C.) recorded as resident of a parish in Clydesdale. He married Margaret Hutchison. Their twins Susanna and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses William Scott of Brieryyars and John Scott of Whitehaugh. James Francis Edward ‘the Old Pretender’ (1688–1766) son of King James VII (or II), he was forced to move to France when he was an infant and his father was ousted from the throne for being a Catholic. He this became the de facto leader of the ‘Jacobite’ movement. He led the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715, and escaped back to France when the attempt to take over from George I failed. In October of 1715 about 200 horsemen past through Hawick and proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’. About 2 weeks later the Highlander army camped at Hawick Moor. There are many stories told relating to what happened during those few weeks. His son Charles, ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’, also led an unsuccessful revolt 30 years later. James (17th C.) resident of Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Falnash. His children included: Janet (b.1701); and James (b.1703). Margaret (b.1691) and David (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may have also been his children. The witnesses in 1703 were John Scott in Falnash and Robert Riddell, miller in Falnash. Sir James of Colntess (1713–80) also referred to as 2nd Bart of Goodtrees. He was eldest son of Sir James and Anne Dalrymple. He married Frances, daughter of James, Earl of Wemyss and was succeeded by his son, also Sir James. This branch of the family often spelled their name ‘Steuart’. He owned the Chisholme estate in the mid-18th century, being involved in a dispute with John Elliot of Borthwickbrae over Braxholme Muir in the period 1743–60 and with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763–67. James (18th/19th C.) listed as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stonedge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation ‘Serving’ suggests that he was already serving, with his name appearing again in 1798. James (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the ‘Mr. Stewart’ marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 24 High Street or the other one at about No. 55. He could be the merchant of that name whose child died in 1805. James (b.1815) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He excelled at wrestling and jumping and took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. At the 1840 Common Riding Games he won prizes for wrestling, the standing and running hop-step-and-leaf and the hitch-and-kick. He married Margaret (1827–1901), daughter of William of Netherwells (who had the distinction of being born after her father’s death in a riding accident). Their children were Robert (who was born at Town-o’-Rule and married Elizabeth Forster), William Glass, Alexander, Pene-lope and Mary. James (19th C.) from Wilton Dean. His children included Mary Ann (who married George Richardson), Margaret (who married James Hood) and James (who worked for the Manchester Guardian and was proprietor of ‘Gas World’). Rev. James (1821–86) born in Stirling, 2nd son of David and Janet Galloway. He was educated in Stirling and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery, became assistant at Largs and was first ordained as minister at St. Mary’s, Dumfries in 1849. He was translated to Wilton Parish Church in 1851 and remained until his death. During his ministry the present Wilton Church was built, Mansfield Glebe and Old Manse were acquired by the town, and Wilton Hill and Stewartfield were feued for building purposes. East and West Stewart Place are named after him. A large cross in his memory stands near the main entrance to Wilton Church. He married Isabella, daughter of James Reid of Wellfield. Their children were Elizabeth White-man, Isabella Reid, David Charles, James Reid, Catherine, John and Eleanora. He published ‘Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal’ (Hawick, 1877) and ‘Last Sermon preached in Wilton Church, 12th Sept. 1886’ (Hawick, 1886). His funeral sermon was given by Dr. John Mair and published in 1886. James (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was schoolmaster at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1861. Jean (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She was probably from the west side. She could have been related to the dyker John, who was also listed. Jeanie (b.1820/1) born in Ettrick Bridgend. As a girl she worked at Catslack Burn and there met the Ettrick Shepherd on several occasions, sometimes acting as waitress when her master entertained the poet. She described him as a ‘muckle jolly-looking fellow, singin’ his ain songs and making grand speeches, wearing aye a shepherd’s tartan plaid tied aneath his oxter’. In later life she lived at No. 8 Melgund Place. She could be the Jean, daughter of Charles and ‘Tibby Fraiter’, who was baptised in Yarrow Parish in 1823. Sir John (d.1419) son of Sir William of Jedworth and Minto. He was referred to as being ‘of Teviotdale or Jedworth’ and also became the 1st of Garlies. In 1406–09 he had an annuity from the customs of Edinburgh. In 1396 he married Marion, the only daughter (and heiress) of Sir Walter of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Minto. His wife resigned the Barony of Dalswinton in 1420 (when he was presumably deceased) to be granted to Sir Herbert Maxwell. His widow married Sir John Forester of Corstorphine in 1422. Sir John of Minto (d.bef. 1512) son of Sir Thomas, who had given up the lands in Minto, even although the family kept the designation. In 1477 he was the eldest son of Sir Thomas when he witnessed a charter for his father and mother. He also served as Provost of Glasgow. He is mentioned as being ‘now Marshall’ and son of Thomas in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, in relation to superiority of Minto. In 1502/3 he and his wife had a charter for the lands and Barony of Minto, as well as other lands. He witnessed a couple of charters in Edinburgh in 1508. He married Janet Fleming and was succeeded by Robert (who married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’). He is sometimes said to have died at Flodden. John (c.1484–1536) son of Alexander, Duke of Albany and nephew of King James III. He inherited the titles of Duke of Albany and Earl of March from his father. He acted as Regent during the minority of his cousin’s son, James V. In 1516 he granted a new infeftment of Minto, Branxholme to Sir Walter Scott. Ousted from power in 1524, he spent most of the rest of his life in France. John of Traquair (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Bedrule in 1562. He probably succeeded from William Kerr, but was himself succeeded by Sir John Douglas (however, this may simply have been because of disputes over the patronage). He could have been the same as Sir John, 4th Laird of Traquair. Sir John of Minto (d.1583) son of Robert. He came from the family that had previously been Barons of Minto, and continued to use the designation. He still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, which was inherited by his grandson Walter in 1614. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. In 1556 he renounced his 3-pound land in Langnewton (called ‘Stuart Lands’) to Sir William Douglas of Lochleven. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared James as King in place of Mary in 1567. He served as surety for Borderers in 1573. He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his son Matthew, who was also Provost of Glasgow. His seal bore a horizontal band surmounted by a ‘bend engrailed’ and a cinquefoil on the left.

He may be the ‘Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the Comptroller’ recorded in relation to a case in Glasgow in 1566/7. Sir John (d.1591) 2nd son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, who died in 1548. In 1559 he settled the family disputes over succession, signing confirmation with his cousin Richard Rutherford of the lands of Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was knighted in 1565. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Bruxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1581 it was confirmed that he had the ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’, including the patronage etc., which had belonged to Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Traquair (c.1600–59) son of John. He succeeded to the Barony of Traquair from his grandfather James, 6th of Traquair, being served heir in 1606. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater, and probably the Earl who purchased adjoining lands from John, Lord Balfour. In 1619 he complained (through his tutor, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw) that a group of Turnbulls had cut down a large quantity of timber and removing hay from his lands at Huntliehill and further complained to the Privy Council that the Turnbulls of Bedrule were still at large, despite being denounced as rebels in 1615 and 1616 for not removing themselves from Huntliehill. He was apparently a favourite in the court of Charles I and was made an Earl in 1633. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £210 £10s in Cavers Parish, £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish (these both being for the Wells estate) and £108 for lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish, as well as the teinds of Bedrule, duties in Roxburgh and a large fraction of lands in Maxton Parish. His lands included Fastcastle, where 2 residents were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’ (suggesting that he himself was a dissenter). He married Catherine, daughter of David Carnegie, Earl of Southesk. Their children were John (2nd Earl), Margaret (who married James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry), Elizabeth Stewart (who married Patrick Murray, 2nd Lord of Elibank), Catherine and Magdalene. John (1622–66) 2nd Earl of Traquair and also Laird of Wells, eldest son of the 1st Earl. He served with the Marquess of Montrose and then the Duke of Hamilton. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes in 1663. He married Henrietta Gordon, daughter of George, 2nd Marquess of Huntly and second Anne, daughter of George Setton, 3rd Earl of Winton. Their children included William (3rd Earl), George, Charles (4th Earl), John, Elizabeth, Isabel and Lucy. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1661 for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He married Janet Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1651); George (b.1653); and Margaret (again, b.1656). Isobel (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were William Laidlaw and Robert Paterson and in 1656 were William Donaldson and Thomas Currie. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1658) and James (b.1661). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Jean (b.1649); Marion (b.1651); and Jean (again, b.1653). The witnesses in 1651 were John Scott and James Lidell. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Cavers’ in the 1684 list of those who were declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. He may be the John whose wife Elizabeth Turnbull was also reported for attending conventicles. John (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.c.1696) Burgh Officer for many years in the latter part of the 17th century. Following his death, Alex Scott was appointed in his place. He was probably the ‘John Stuart’ who witnessed baptisms in 1685, 1687, 1688 and 1689, being ‘officer’ in one record, and was probably the man of that name listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a weaver who married Marion Scott and had children: twins Janet and Jane (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); James (b.1684); Jane (b.1686); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Purdom and Mr. Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk, suggesting that he may indeed have been the Burgh Officer), and in 1688 were Mr. Walter Gledstains and ‘litster’ George Young. He may have been related to the John Stewart who was a Burgh Officer in about 1740. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘calliario’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The meaning of the description is unclear, but might suggest that he was a shoemaker perhaps (or he could be the same man as the Burgh Officer). John (17th C.) dyker listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. It is unclear whether he lived in the town or outside. He is probably the John ‘dyker to Ireland’ listed among the ‘Deficients in Hawick Parich’ in 1694; he may have worked as a dyer for Thomas Ireland. Perhaps the same dyker John was recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hawick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the John who in 1694 witnessed baptisms for John Williamson, for James Rutherford and for William Scott. John (17th C.) listed as a merchant on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1652. He could also be the John who was married to Grizel Thomson, and whose son John was born in 1680. Sir John of Minto (d.1697) probably nephew of Sir Ludovic. He was the last in the long line of Stewarts of Minto, who were prominent citizens in Glasgow in the 16th and 17th centuries and held the Barony of Minto. The family interest in Minto had probably been lost either by his uncle or grandfather Sir Walter, although he was still referred to being ‘of Minto’. He died on the outward voyage of the Unicorn as part of the Darien Scheme. Rev. John (d.bef. 1706) minister of Wilton. He studied at St. Leonard’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1670. He became minister of Wilton in 1683, the first Presbyterian since before the Reformation. There is an existing letter referring to him in 1683, following a complaint from the Archbishop of Glasgow that John Langlands had not preached for several Sundays; the precise nature of his appointment is unclear. He was also presented to Borthwick in 1688 (the delay suggesting there was argument over the extra duties and stipend). However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for William and Mary (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopalianism). In 1706 his widow Margaret Forbes, is recorded receiving money from the Session of Arngask Parish, on the recommendation of Jedburgh Presbytery. John (17th/18th C.) ‘workman’ in Hawick. In 1709 he married Margaret Hislop, both of them being from the Town of Hawick. Their children included Walter (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His son Thomas was born in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in Hawick in 1723. Probably the same John was recorded in the Town Treasurers’s book receiving payments in 1731 and 1732. He was probably a Burgh Officer, and is likely to be the same John recorded as Burgh Officer around 1743 along with Francis Turnbull; after the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, complained the to the Magistrates about neighbouring tenants keeping their livestock on the Common, the pair were ordered to bring in these animals, and managed to bring several black cattle to the West Port. He was probably related to the Burgh officer of the same name who died about 1698. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. Sir John of Allanbank (1714–96) from the Berwickshire family, he was Sheriff of that county. He became an Advocate in 1737 and was appointed Solicitor of the Stamp Duties in 1767. He is listed as being life-renter of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigend and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigend Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given liferent of parts of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot as a tactic to increase his support among the voters of Roxburghshire. There is no evidence that he had any other local connection. He married Margaret Agnes Smith and was succeeded by his son, Sir John. Rev. William Brown was chaplain to his family before becoming minister of Bedrule. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He married Catharine Hall and their children included: William (b.1786); and Douglas (b.1788). The witnesses in 1786 were butcher Andrew Waugh and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller and in 1788 were wigmaker Francis McKenzie and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784).

John Govan of Hermiston (d.c.1861) lived at Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the mid-19th century. He became a member of the Peeblesshire Society in 1827. In 1835 he was involved in a dispute over closing off an old drove road on his property at Hermiston. In 1851 he was listed as a landed proprietor at Cotfield, farming 97 acres. He was listed at Cotfield in Slater’s 1852 directory and was still at Cotfield on the 1861 census, living with his nephew Peter and 3 servants. By 1874 he was owner of the lands of Bewlie Moor. His wife was Anna and her ‘Lady’s Companion’ was Maria Mackintosh from Kensington, who appears to have been listed at Cotfield in a directory of 1868. He is buried in his family enclosure in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.c.1820) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers and was described as ‘a very tall and powerful man and whom no one dared tackle’. He married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch. John Thomson (1830/1–71) stockingmaker of 1 Loan. He later worked as a carrier. He married Jane Paterson in 1852. Their children included James, John, Agnes and another John (who all died in infancy) and Jane (who died aged 18). John (b.1830/1) farmer at Hermiston in 1861. He was probably son of the previous John. He married Agnes Marshall. Rev. John (1865–1930) born in Fife-Keith, son of John Macpherson and Elizabeth Wright. He was educated in Aberdeen, graduated M.A. in 1887 and B.D. in 1890, and was licensed by the Presbytery there the same year. He became assistant at St. Clement’s Parish (Aberdeen) and then at Selkirk before becoming minister of Kirkton in 1892, where he remained until his death. In about 1900 he complained about the state of Kirkton Manse and the money he had personally spent to renovate and redecorate it. He acted as Chaplain for Stobs Military Camp 1903–12; despite this, he complained in several letters around 1921 that the Army had not paid the teinds from Stobs. His surname was usually written ‘Stuart’. John Livingstone ‘Jock’ (1894–1971) born in Hawick, only son of Rev. Duncan of St. Andrews Kirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the Royal Dick Veterinary College. In WWI he served in the Scottish Horse and the Argyll & Southern Highlanders. He played flanker for Scotland’s Rugby team in 1921. He served in the Colonial Veterinary Service 1923–9 and became a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Director of the Veterinary Service of the Gold Coast (later Ghana) 1930–48. He wrote ‘The Cattle of the Gold Coast’ (1956). He was a large man, who was said to require 2 tubes in each wheel of his bicycle and to have once run over a lion! He is buried at Limpopo, South Africa. Maj. John Ross (1918–2015) from Loganswell in Renfrewshire, he moved to the Borders with his mother, who was a teacher at Yetholm and then Denholm. He worked as a tailor, but joined the Army Reserves in 1939. He was a survivor of Dunkirk and was them commissioned with the K.O.S.B., serving in India and Burma, and retiring with the rank of Major. He then became a tailor in North Berwick and ran a guest house there. He joined the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1981, serving on the Committee and as Syllabus Secretary. He wrote ‘Borderers in Battle’, which describes the Burma campaign of the K.O.S.B. Rev. John T. ex-army chaplain who was minister of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1978–84. Katherine (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. She was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in Hornside was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from her, specifically 6 ‘chattels’. In 1494/5 the same Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, including stealing 6 cows and oxen and 2 bullocks from her in Minto. Kathleen W. nee Scott (1928/9– ) growing up at Milsington, she married Sandy and later moved to Aberdeenshire. Her son James continued to own Milsington. She was a founder member of the Borders Family History Society and helped organise the first Hawick High School reunion in 1980. She wrote ‘An Historical Record of Borthwick Wa’s Burial Ground’ (1987), ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Robertson’ (1991), ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) and ‘History of the Scotts of Milsington’ (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998). Ludovic (1574–1624) 2nd Duke of Lennox and was directed by the King to deal with the Armstrongs of Whitaugh and Roan. He gave a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw and Easter Essenside, probably in 1593 (although transcribed as 1553); he must have been Baron of Ashkirk then. In 1594 he resigned into the hands of the King (for later infeftment) the Earldom of Bothwell, including his Lordships and Baronies, such as Liddesdale, Longnewton, Wilton and Chamberlain Newton, lands of Teinside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool and Alemoor and patronage of the Kirk of Hawick. In 1603 he had a charter for the lands and baronies formerly belonging to the Archbishop of Glasgow, which included the Baronies of Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf and Ancrum. He married 3 times. He was buried in Westminster Abbey and was succeeded by his brother Esmé. Sir Ludovic of Minto (17th C.) son of Sir Walter. He is recorded in several deeds in 1663. He was involved in disputes with his father and also an unsuccessful investment in lands in Ireland. In 1670 he sold the Barony of Minto to the Marchioness Dowager of Montrose, Isabella Douglas. He married Elizabeth Cunningham, daughter of the 8th Earl of Glencairn, but they divorced in 1668. There were no children from the marriage and he was probably succeeded by a nephew, Sir John. Margaret (b.c.1775) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when she was living as a widow at the Sandbed. Her children included Mary, Margaret, Wilson, Beatrice and Margaret. Margaret (19th C.) daughter of Robert, farmer at Hawthornsides. She was known as an attractive girl with a charming personality. She married civil engineer William Blood of Cranagher, and their children were Blindon (who became Gen. Sir Blindon, K.C.B.), Bagot, Robert and Margaret. Mary see Mary Queen o Scots Matthew (1516–71) 4th Earl of Lennox, son of John, 3rd Earl. He was assigned the rentals of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. After his death in 1575/6 there were complaints to the Privy Council on behalf of 2 Burgesse of Edinburgh and a large number of Borderers regarding payment of the ‘mails’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Sir Matthew of Minto (d.1610) son of John. His family still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, although it is unclear if they played any direct role in the district. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Colquhou and had a son, Robert.

He witnessed a charter for the Duke of Lennox in 1594. Matthew of Barnhills (d.c.1796) son of Rev. Walter, minister of Ashkirk. He was served as heir to his father in 1750, but was not infefted in the lands of Barnhills until 1780. He had a ‘decret of excambion’ with Robert Bennet in 1775. In 1780 he appears to have sold Barnhills to Cornelius Elliot and bought it back the following year. In 1780 he had a sasine for the lands of Wester Barnhills ‘in fee’ (with Alexander Alison holding them ‘in liferent’). He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. His sisters Mary, Helen and Isabel inherited the lands in 1796. Robert 1st Duke of Albany (c.1340–1420) 3rd and illegitimate son of King Robert II, brother of ‘John’ who became King Robert III. He functioned as Regent during his father’s infancy, and also after his brother’s death during the minority of his nephew James I. He was thus involved in internal power struggles in Scotland, as well as in leading military expeditions into England. This included indirect involvement in the ‘Siege of Cocklaw’ in 1403. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, his son Murdoch was exchanged with Henry Percy, and he besieged Roxburgh Castle in 1417. Andrew ‘de Hawick’ served as his Secretary from 1406. He married firstly Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith, and secondly Harriet, daughter of Sir William Keith. His children were: Murdoch, who became the 2nd Duke of Albany and was beheaded; Isabel, who married Alexander Leslie, Earl of Ross and Walter Haliburton of Dirleton; Margaret, who married Sir John Swinton; Marjory, who married Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochov; Elizabeth, who married Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld; Joan, who married Robert Stewart, Lord of Lorn; Beatrice, who married James, 7th Earl of Douglas; a daughter who married an Abernethy of Salton; John, Chamberlain of Scotland, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas; Andrew; Robert; and (a second) Elizabeth, who married Malcolm Fleming of Biggar.

Robert of Traquair (d.1548) eldest son of William. In 1547/8 he is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his brother John. Sir Robert of Minto (d.1553) son of Sir John. In 1529 King James V granted him and his wife the Barony and lands of Minto. In 1533 he was appointed as his representative by William, son of the deceased John Turnbull. William Turnbull offered
version relating to Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. He was Provost of Glasgow 1526–36. He married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. His children included John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), Agnes (who married John Wallace, 1st of Auchans and Dundyonald) and Elizabeth (who married John Maxwell of Calderwood). Sir Robert of Shillinglaw (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of James of Traquair. His lands of Shillinglaw lay close to Traquair in Peeblesshire. However, he also had charters in 1614 and 1617 for the Barony of Horsburgh and lands elsewhere, probably including lands in Cavers Parish. In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Tweeddale. He served as tutor to his nephew John, who became the 1st Earl of Traquair; he was tutor in 1619 when there were 2 cases brought against the Turnbulls for cutting down timber at Huntliehill and for removing hay from there. He was a member of the Commission for the Middle Shires around 1618. In 1634 his son James of Nether Horsburgh was served as his heir. Robert (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Mary ‘Malkye’ (Mackie) in Roberton Parish in 1684 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1685) and Robert (b.1687), baptised in Roberton; and William (b.1694) and George (b.1698), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1687 were George Scott (probably the one associated with Easter Groundistone) and Thomas Cowan. The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott and John Glendinning, and this is the earliest existing entry in the Wilton Parish records. He is probably the James recorded at Easter Groundistone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) servant of Francis Coltart in Woodburn (in the Borthwick valley). He is recorded in 1729 in the Roberton session books, having an altercation with William Bell, farmer at Broadlee. Robert (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig from 1763. It is possible that the same man was ‘Mr Robert Stuart, schoolmaster, Wilton’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (‘Peggie’) Collier and their children included: Andrew (b.1773); Agnes (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); Robert (b.1779); James (b.1781); and Charters (b.1786). The witnesses in 1776 were the Associate Congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. He married Janet Cunningham and their children included: Janet (b.1772); Mary (b.1775); Mary (again, b.1777); and Anne (b.1784). The witnesses in 1775 were James Knox (probably the gardener at Damside) and John Lorraine. Robert (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as servant to Robert Pringle in Allars. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at ‘Back of the Woods’ in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at this house near Crawbyres. Robert (b.c.1790) son of Alexander and Mary Colquhoun. The origins of the family probably lies in the north, perhaps related to the Stewarts of Appin who lost their lands after supporting the 1715 and 1745 rebellions. He was tenant of Hawthornside farm 1834–47. He then rented a farmhouse for another couple of years, but then left the district. He had a sister, Mary, and a brother, Alexander, who died young. He married Margaret Burnet and their children were: Alexander (b.c.1815), who died unmarried; Margaret (b.c.1825), who married William Blood of Cranagher, and whose son was Sir Bindon Blood; Robert (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Smith, daughter of the factor of Wolfelee and secondly married Esther Hudson; John (b.c.1820), who married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch; Annie, who married John Wallace; Thomas (b.1816/7), who married Annie Donkin of Newcastle; Mary (b.c.1825), who married Daniel McPherson; and William Colquhoun (b.1828/9), who married Helen Smith. His sons James, Robert and John were prominent for the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa; however, the youngest son, William, was considered the best runner in the Borders in his day. Sir Thomas of Minto (d.1500) son of Sir William of Garlies. His brother Alexander married Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers and at one point held the lands of Howpasley. The family clearly had a local connection, including land in Minto Parish. His great-grandfather was Sir William of Jedworth, whose mother was a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He became Provost of Glasgow. In 1476 he had a charter of a third of the lands in the Barony of Minto, as well as superiority over the whole of the Barony, which had been resigned by his father, Sir William (and with the consent of his older brother Alexander). He had a further charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle in 1476, resigned by his brother and attached to the Barony of Minto. In 1477 he and his wife had a charter for lands in Renfrew. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1486. In 1488 he was granted a fee by the Crown, for his service as Marshal. He also had a lease of the lands of ‘Dunrod and Fintelauch’ for his fee, and continued in this position until at least 1492. In 1490 he granted the lands of Nether Crairling called ‘Stewartlandis’, which had been annexed to Minto, to Bartholomew Rutherford. In 1491/2 he resigned the lands of Sunlaws, which were granted to Robert Ramsay and his wife Agnes Haitlie. He married Isabel, daughter of Walter Stewart of Arthurlie. Their children were Sir John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), William (who became Bishop of Aberdeen and High Treasurers of Scotland), Archibald, Agnes, Marion (married Adam Maxwell of Southbar), Margaret, James, Nicolas, Robert and John. The family kept the ‘of Minto’ designation for several generations (including 5 Provosts of Glasgow), though they appear to have had no continuing local presence. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Thomas (b.c.1800) publican on the Loan.
He is recorded as vintner at the Nag’s Head in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living with his wife Elizabeth at about the first house on the Loan. Walter (12th C.) see Walter Fitz Alan.
Sir Walter (1293–1327) son of James, who he succeeded as 6th High Steward of Scotland. He was knighted after Bannockburn. In about 1320 he was ‘Walteri Senescalli Scotie’ when he was granted lands in Roxburghshire that had been forfeited by Sir John de Soulis and others. This included Eckford, Nisbet, Langnewton, Maxton and Caverton. He was Governor of Berwick, commanding there when there was a siege by the English in 1319. He was a signatory of the Declareration of Arbroath in 1320. Also in 1320 he wittnessed the charter of the Lordship of Jedburgh to Sir James Douglas. He married Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce; she died possibly after a fall from a horse, with their son John (who became King Robert II) said by some to have been born by Caserian section. He had earlier married Alice, daughter of Sir John Erskine of that Ilk, and later married Isabel, sister of Sir John Graham of Abercorn. He had a son, Sir John, who died without issue. He also had a daughter who married Sir William Graham of Kincardine, and another daughter, Egidia, who married Sir James Lindsay of Crawford, secondly married Sir Hew Eglintoun and thirdly married Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. Walter (16th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto in 1542 and 1544. He was probably a member of the Stewarts of Minto family. Sir Walter of Minto (d.1640s) son of Sir Matthew. In 1606 he was involved in some kind of fight with a group supporting Sir George El-phinstone in Glasgow, being held in Dumbarton Castle for a while. In 1614 he was served heir to his grandfather Sir John in 3/3 of the superiority of the Barony of Minto (as well as lands in Morebattle). Apart from the title, he had no direct local connection and lived in Glasgow, being Bailie to the Regality there (but not Provost, like several of his ancestors). He was also keeper of Dumbarton Castle. In 1641 he was a representative for Clydesdale to meet with the King. He mar-rried Christian Crawford in 1598/9. Their daughter Mrs. Lilias Stewart was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1663. The family fortunes dwindled at this time and he had to mortgage his property in Easter and Wester Craigs in Glasgow, which was sold off by his son, Sir Ludovic. He may also be the Stewart who sold off the family interest in the Barony of Minto. Sir Ludovic was succeeded between Sir John, who was even more impoverished (it is said he was a pauper who was sent barefoot to Edinburgh to beg a favour from one of his rich Stewart relatives) and died on a voyage out to the colony at Darien. Walter (17th C.) mentioned in one of the first existing entries in the Town book of 1638 as an officer of the Town (along with James Kinnaird). They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. Walter (17th C.) son of cordner James. In 1666 he was a witness to the fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could be the Walter baptised in Hawick in 1646, son of James and Manie Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733); Janet (b.1735); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1741); and Mary (b.1745). Rev. Walter (1706–62) son of Bailie Matthew Stewart in Newton of Mearns, he was baptised in Canongate, Edinburgh. He studied at the Universities of Edinburgh and Leiden and was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1731 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1748 and again in 1753. In 1742 he was recorded in Selkirk as ‘minister of the Gospel at Ashkirk for victual supplied for the poor’. He also bought (from John Mackenzie of Devin) the land at Barnhills in 1749 and hence is sometimes described as ‘of Barnhill’ (or ‘Barn-hills’). He was thus designated among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1750 in Edinburgh he married Mrs. Mary Duncanson.
(who died in 1793) of Garshake. Their children included: Mary (b.1751); Matthew (1752–82) of Barnhills; Helen (1754–1815); Margaret, who died in infancy; James (b.1756), died young; and Isabel (b.1759, or Isabella). Matthew inherited the lands of Barnhills from him and after Matthew’s death they passed to Mary, Helen and Isabel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He was at Greenbank in 1780 and Stiches in 1792. He married Betty Miller in Roberton in 1774. Their children included: Betty (b.1780); Janet (b.1782); and Walter (b.1792). Isobel (b.1776) and Marion (b.1778), baptised in Roberton, with no mother’s name listed, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1792 were Gilbert Smith and Thomas Ferguson (both servants of Chisholm of that Ilk, suggesting that he also worked for the laird of Stiches). Sir William of Jedworth (d.1402) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Darnley and Crookston or perhaps son of Sir John of Jedworth, his mother being a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He was probably grandson (or other descendant) of ‘John Senescal de Jedwith’ who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was also known as ‘of Teviotdale’. He may have been an ally of the English until 1384 when Teviotdale was recaptured for Scotland, then fighting on the Scottish side and being rewarded by Robert II with lands in Roxburghshire. He received money from the French to support the war against England in 1385 and was present at Otterburn in 1388. He was knighted around this time and in the 1390s served as auditor of the exchequer, as well as commissioner at march days. He was additionally appointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, although the extent of the appointment is not known. In the period 1390–1402 he acted as Clerk of Audit according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1390 he was granted lands within Minto by John Turnbull (‘Out with the sword’), who was his uncle. This was confirmed by Robert II in 1390/1, and included the patronage of the church, which had been resigned by George Abernethy. He was thus probably the first of the Stewarts to own lands in Minto. He was probably the Sir William who witnessed a Lindsay charter for Stouslie and Groundistone about 1390. An undated charter of Robert III (probably around 1400) grants him 1/3 of the lands of Minto. In the late 1390s he accompanied Archibald Douglas (later 4th Earl of Douglas) in an attack on the English-held Roxburgh Castle. He witnessed charters for the Earl of Douglas in 1400 and 1402. He led an unsuccessful raid into Northumberland in 1400 and was at the battle of Homildon Hill in 1402. There he was captured, tried and executed at the instigation of Sir Henry Percy, his body being quartered and displayed on the gates of York. He married Isabel, who was widow of Sir Richard Oliver, although her maiden name is unknown. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, 1st of Garlies, and had at least one other son. His widow Elizabeth remarried to Walter of Bickerton and received some of the customs duties of Edinburgh and Linlithgow in the period 1407–20. Sir William of Dalswinton (15th C.) son of Sir John, 1st of Garlies. In 1429 he succeeded to the Barony of Minto, but this was disputed by Walter Turnbull. As a result it seems that the barony was split, so that his family held the half barony. He was knighted by James III in about 1443 and sat in Parliament in 1467. He married more than once, with his last wife being Euphame Graham. His children included: Andrew, his heir, who predeceased him; Sir Alexander of Garlies, who fought at Sauchieburn and married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Sir Thomas, who succeeded to Minto; and Walter of Tonderghie. William of Traquair (16th C.) son of James. In 1526 he was listed in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran’s forces. His brother James was also listed. He became heir to the lands of Rutherford and Wells through his aunt Helen Rutherford. In 1533/4 he was involved in a bond in Selkirk with Patrick Murray of Falahill. In 1538 he had a regranting of his lands of Traquair. In 1541 he is recorded as occupier of Garlawcleuch, Blackhouse and Douglas Craig in Yarrow; he may also be the William who was occupier of Berrybush and half of Plaup in Ettrick. Also in 1541 he was involved in a dispute with the Dicksons of Ormiston. He married married Christina, 2nd daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; John, who succeeded Robert; William, who succeeded John; James, who succeeded William; Margaret, who married James Murray of Falahill and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward; and a daughter who married William Sinclair of Blans. William (16th C.) holder of a particiate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Sir William (d.1605) 5th Laird of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother Sir John, also inheriting the lands of Wells in Rulewater. In 1567 he was listed as brother-german of Sir John of Traquair when he witnessed the wedding contract for Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was a 'gentleman of the bed-chamber' of James VI and was made Governor of Dumbarton Castle in 1582. In 1592 he was surety for George Douglas of Bonjedward and Andrew Douglas of Timpendedean. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594 and in the same year was appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1602 he complained about 'reif' committed on him by James Scott of Whithopei and in 1603 was in dispute with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his chamberlains over taxation. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James of Shillinglaw. William (16th/17th C.) servant of James Douglas of Cavers. In 1612 he, along with William Douglas of Whitriggs and his brother Robert, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he, along with John, witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Marion Henderson and whose son John was baptised in 1661, with witnesses John and Robert Henderson. Alternatively he could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Agnes Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and James Dunlop. William (b.1657) 3rd Earl of Traquair, son of John, 2nd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1666. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Charles. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the weaver in Heap who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Cairns in Wilton in 1711. William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1690. He married ‘Mals’ Hastie and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John and James Stewart (who were surely related). William (1695–1760) tenant farmer in Gillfoot. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Elliot in 1720. Their children included Robert (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). He may be the William ‘Steward’ who witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for George Langlands of that Ilk in 1724. He also witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident of Tandlaw, in 1729. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1770 and 1780. He married Margaret Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Helen (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); and George (b.1771). Probably the same William secondly married Jean Scott in 1777, with children: George (b.1778); and James (b.1780). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid. The baptism in 1780 was performed by Rev. John Young (meaning that he was a member of the Green Kirk), with witnesses James Scott and George Turnbull. William Colquhoun (b.1828/9) youngest son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. He was known as one of the best runners in the Borders and was unbeaten over about 30 races. On one occasion he was dancing and playing the fiddle at Billerwell until 2 a.m., set out an hour later to meet his brother in Newcastle, arriving at 4 p.m., and then won a sprint race that his brother had put him up to. He ran against Willie Scott from Martinshouse, in a specially arranged match over half a mile near Stobs, and won. He married Helen, daughter of William Smith in 1853 and moved to Newcastle (also spelled ‘Stuart’), ‘Stuert’ etc. and in earlier times interchangeable with ‘Stuart’ as well as ‘Steward’).

Steyll n. former name for lands near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter when half of the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description is of ‘the lands and houses of Steyll, and the half of the broad meadow towards the lands of Steyll . . . on the west side of the Syke’; the exact location is uncertain. Somewhere around Branxholme Town seems feasible, but a location much further west, near the hill called ‘The Steel’, is also possible (also written ‘Steyl’ in 1420).

steys n., pl. stays, a corset, girdle – ‘...sellin a thing frae household goods ti back-lacin steys’ [IWL].

St. George’s Kirk n. church in St. George’s Lane, built in 1843–44 after the Disruption as the Free or Protesting Church. The land was purchased by the new congregation from James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. The original building was designed by Andrew Thomson of Glasgow and John Smith of Darnick. Several articles were placed in the foundation stone (and could not be found when the church was rebuilt). A manse was built on Wilton Path in 1846, designed by Smith of Darnick. The church was known as ‘Hawick Free Kirk’ for more than 50 years. It changed its name to ‘St. George’s United Free Church’ in 1900 (after the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches); the reasons for the choice of the new name are uncertain. After purchase of the house and grounds of ‘Ellabank’ next door the church was rebuilt in 1913–16 using Doddington stone, but with parts of the original walls and a lintel inserted from the old building. The austere Gothic design is by architect J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building. An adjoining hall was built a few years later. It was re-named simply ‘St. George’s Church’ in 1929 (after the union of the United Free Church and the Church of Scotland). It contains an east-end window, commemorating the 1929 reunion (possibly the only such window in Scotland), by Lilian J. Pocock of London. The organ was added in 1920 in memory of Bessie Scott (a gift of Peter Scott & Co.). A separate West End ‘Free’ congregation had been established in 1855, and after that church closed in 1956, St. George’s was renamed ‘St. George’s West’. Since 1988 it has been known as Teviot Parish Church, with links to Robertson Parish. Kirk Session records for 1842–82 and 1900–14 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministers is: John Aikman Wallace 1843–70; William H. Gaulter, assistant 1859–64; John MacGregor 1865–73; M.P. Johnstone 1873–79; W.A.P. Johnman 1880–1923; Donald G. Ross 1911–35 (assistant until 1923); C. Sydney Finch 1936–1967; Thomas N. Hood 1967–82; Neil Combe 1984–.

Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Stintieknowe (stin-tee-now) n. small farm steadying out beyond Stitches, near Dykeneuk Loch, and also known variously as Stinty-Knowes, Stinty Knowe etc. Walter Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century. In 1841 there were 2 households there, one the Curries and the other housing a variety of people. In 1851 Thomas Smith and family were in one house and the Campbell brothers in the other. In 1861 labourer William Thomson and family were at the cottage with James Gledstains and family at ‘Stintyknowes Far House’. The hill there was originally the ‘stenting knowe’, where Wilton Common was stented, prior to its division in 1764. In other words this site was essentially the Wilton equivalent of the Caa Knowe – ‘Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair plesasant Now oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o’ ee a pheasant’ [AY] (also written ‘Stintie Knowe’, ‘Stintyknows’, ‘Stinty Knowes’, etc.).

Stintin Burn (stin-tin-burn) n. former name for the stream in Wilton, also known as the Stitches Burn, which rises near Stintieknowe and flows through Stitches.

Stinty Knowes (stin-tee-nowz) n. another name for Stintieknowe.

stipeet see stipit

stipen (sti-pin) n., arch. a stipend – ‘...aw see they’re payin’ ye yer steipin’ afore the sermon’s dune’ [WNK].

stipit (sti-pee, -pi’) adj. stupid – ‘hei was knocked stipit in the tackle’, ‘div ee hink A’m stipit?’; ‘ee er stipit?’; ‘Deh be si stipit ... Hei’s been at a denner an’ disni want tae spill oor whisky!’ [JC0] (also spelled ‘stuiptit’, ‘stipeet’, ‘stippit’, etc.).

Stirches (stin-cheez) n. area to the north of Silverbuthall, reached via Dickson Street. The name is now mainly identified with the council housing scheme, was developed after the property was purchased in 1971, with building commencing in 1973. The housing comprising a series of streets bounded by Stirches Road and Guthrie Drive, and contains a primary school, but no businesses. The main road to Selkirk and the north once went through here. The name goes back at least to the 16th century, and was formerly ‘Stirkshaw’ or ‘Stirkshaws’. ‘Watt Scott of Stirkshawis’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1500. There were sons of the Scotts of Synton (or Whitslade) there in the 16th and 17th centuries, who sold it to the Chisholmes around 1660. About that time Thomas Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £214 for the land there. William Chisholme was owner in 1678 and it was still recorded with the same value in 1788 and 1811. William Cavers was living there in 1682 and William Telfer in 1683. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 when that parish was suppressed and that part allocated to Wilton. In 1694 tax was paid on 4 hearths for ‘Stirkshaws’ his house’, and Janet Lamb was listed among the poor. James Ormiston was there in 1721, Walter Lorraine in 1724–29, John Blyth in 1728 and William Lamb in 1729. Walter Stewart was living there in 1792 and Richard and William Turnbull were wrights there in 1797. The estate was bought by James Farrar Blenkhorn in 1898, who was already renting the house. The house was redesigned and eventually passed to the Sisters of St. Augustine, and used as a private nursing home. The estate was sold off in parts, following Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922. The lower area was developed as the Stirches housing estate in the mid-1970s – ‘Coming in by Stirches hill, I saw auld Hawick a dreaming still’ [IJ], ‘Wi’ haltin’ step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills ower ... ’ [WFC], ‘A gentle walk up the Stirches road Then, when ee look around Ee think wi’ awe this is hame And it feels like hallowed ground’ [AY] (the name occurs regularly from 1481 until the early 18th century as ‘Stirkshaw’, ‘Stirkshawis’, ‘Stirkshaws’, ‘Styrkschaw’ and similar spellings; the modern ‘Stirches’ is first recorded in 1713, but it is still ‘Stirkshaw’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728; it is ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1500, ‘Stirkshaw’ in 1501/2, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1502, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1504/5, ‘Stirkshaw’ in 1505, ‘Stokscawis’ in 1512, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1579, ‘Styrk Schaw’ in 1579/80, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1580/1, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1590, 1592 and 1599, ‘Stercehewis’ in 1602, ‘Stirkshawes’ in 1694, ‘Stirkshaws’ in 1678, ‘Stirchaus’ in 1682, ‘Stirkshaws’ in 1708 and ‘Stirthces’ in 1720; the origin is clearly from Old English ‘styre’ plus ‘sceaga’ or Scots ‘shaw’, meaning a wooded area with young bullocks).

Stirches Band (stin-cheez-bawnd) n. popular name for the military band of the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps at the end of the 19th century, whose Captain was John Scott Chisholme of Stirches.

Stirches Brick Works (stin-cheez-brik-wurks) n. works set up by Capt. Chisholme of Stirches, which produced bricks, tiles and pottery between about 1850 and 1870, mainly used in local building projects. The original idea had been to establish a pottery works, until it was found that the local clay was unsuitable. The works were abandoned when the price of transportation and coal became too expensive. The buildings were used by the shepherd when the estate was purchased by Blenkhorn in 1890. Some ruined remains can be seen on the right of the road leading from the Convent to Stouslie.

Stirches Burn (stir-cheez-burn) n. stream that rises perhaps near Priestrig and flows through Stirches and then partially underground to become the Howden Burn.

Stirches Croft (stir-cheez-croft) n. former farm on Stirches estate, where?.

Stirches Hoose (stir-cheez-hoos) n. Stirches House, an extensive mansion above Stirches housing scheme. A previously existing house was the residence of the Chisholms for about 200 years, being built on top of a mediæval tower in the mid-17th century by Walter Chisholm. The original tower was square (perhaps similar to Goldielands) and had a protecting courtyard wall. It was built by Scott of Whitlade, after he became Laird in the late 15th century. Above the doorway was a Latin inscription ‘Christus Rex Regum qui non dormitat in ævum proteat hanc ædem nec non sine crimini plebem 1503’ (‘Christ the King of Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this house and the people guiltless of crime’); a copy is still above the door of the present house (an extra ‘b’ on the end of ‘crimini’ suggests it is an imperfect copy). The lower floor had a vaulted ceiling, with the upper floors reached via a staircase in the roughly 6 foot thick walls. The second level held a public room about 30 feet by 18 feet, with a fireplace at each end, and there were sleeping rooms above. The upper stories were demolished in about 1666, with new accommodations built on either side and the south front added to the house. The initials ‘W.C. M.B. 1666’ were carved above one of the windows (Walter Chisholme and his wife Margaret Balderstone), this panel now in Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this home farm for Stirches).

Stirches Mains (stir-cheez-mañz) n. farm in the Stirches area, to the left of the road just after the Convent. The farmer there recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls was Mrs. Scott. Alexander Scott was also recorded as tenant in 1797. In the early 19th century was James Bunyan and in 1841 was Walter Knox – ‘Owre the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches doun; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toun?’ [WL] (presumably once the home farm for Stirches).

Stirches Mains Hill (stir-cheez-mañz-nil) n. name sometimes given to the hill near Stirches Mains, reaching a height of 266 m.

Stirches Quarry (stir-cheez-kwa-ree) n. former quarry on the opposite side of the road from Stirches Mains.

Stirches Road (stir-cheez-roed) n. the main road from Dickson Street to Stirches House, and also once the main road to Selkirk and points north. It now provides access to much of the Stirches housing estate.

Stirches Schuil (stir-cheez-skil) n. primary school in the Stirches housing scheme, built in 1976 on Roxburghie Drive. It’s characteristic feature is a forest of pyramidal roof lights.

stirk (stirk) n., arch. a young bovine animal after weaning, generally those kept for slaughter rather than breeding, usually referring to bullocks or steers, but also sometimes heifers – ‘…also from James Wardlaw, in Riccarton, was bought for 23s ‘an ox stirk of the guidwife’s at the mill’ [JaT], ‘Transform’d may I be to a stirk, If bonny Meggy’s wanton smirk …’ [JR], ‘His time is up, he comes a hornless sirk – For faith! his sca’p’s sae soft that horns won’t grow on’t’ [JoHa], ‘…Sure he’d hae the heart o’ a stirk, Could look without love on sic beauty’ [JoHa], ‘…I know not if the stirks grew tired before the stars were set’ [WHO], ‘…And whiles I feel like tethered Stirkcleuch Height

stirk Stuck here amang it a’'[WL] (also sometimes ‘stark’; from Old English; the word occurs in several local placenames, e.g. ‘Stirches’).

Stirkcleuch Height (stir-klooch-li’) n. hill that is the north-eastern spur of the Pike, between Penchrise Pen and the Maidens. It reaches a height of 443 m. Further to the north-east is Burnt Craig.

stirkie (stir-kee) n., arch. diminutive form for a young bovine animal – ‘Each ’eer, as Januar’ – end returns, Ilk yow and stirkie waefu’ murns …’[DH].

Stirk-rigg (stirk-rig) n. small hill about 1 km north of Bedrule farm, reaching only about 160 m in height. Just to the west of the summit are the remains of a circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter, probably a settlement. It was said (in the New Statistical Account) to have been removed by cultivation in the 18th century, but is still visible in aerial photographs. This was the former site of a farm, which was incorporated into the farm of Newton, with all signs of the farmhouse disappearing. ‘Stirkrog’ and ‘Stirkrig-hill’ were listed as part of Newton according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also ‘Stirkrigg’).

Stirkschaw (stirk-shawz) n. early name for Stirches, after the stirks which grazed there. It changed to ‘Stirches’ in the early 18th century. The Chisholms were Lairds of Stirkschaw for about 250 years (also ‘Stirkschaw’, ‘Stirkschaws’, ‘Stirkschaw’, etc.; incorrectly written ‘Strikshaws’ by Keith Scott).

Stirkschielhope (stirk-sheil-hop) n. former farm in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Styrkschielhope’ in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 8 merks and listed under ‘Foresta’ (which seems to have been the northern part, including the Hermitage valley). It is recorded as ‘Streichelhope’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, and still valued at 8 merks; the tenants were Robert Elliot in Ramsiegill, John of the Hill, Adam Elliot of Lees, ‘Old’ Robert Elliot of Ramsiegill, John Elliot and John’s son James called ‘Nelis Jok’. It could be related to ‘Stitchel’ near Riccarton.

Stirk Sike (stirk-sik) n. small stream that joins the west side of Dawston Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is between Watch Sike and March Sike and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Stirling (stir-ling) n. Benjamin (b.1805/6) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Pau-per (formerly Tinsmith); Deaf & Dumb’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James ‘Jim’ (1924/5–) from Cumnock, he volunteered for the Royal Navy at the age of 18. He was a telegraphist and then served on minesweepers. He was on a ship the cleared mines for the D-Day landings and later his ship was sunk and the crew spent hours in the water before being rescued. After the war he joined the police, serving in Duns, Coldstream, Yetholm, Jedburgh and Hawick. He retired as a sergeant. He is Hawick’s last surviving link with D-Day. Peter (b.1812/3) from Newtown, he was a tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1851. His wife was Agnes. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, who paid the 1785 cart tax there and is also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is surely related to James, who is also listed in 1797. He was an innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Junior Carter’ at West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He is probably son of the older carter of the same name.

stishie (sti-shee) n., poet. bustle, uproar – ‘When the stishie has smoored oot my rest …’[WL] (cf. strooshie).

stitch (stich) n., arch. a furrow or drill of potatoes, turnips, etc. (see also tatti-stitch).

stitcher (sti-chur) n. a worker who stitches final trimmings (e.g. ribbons or pockets) on garments in the knitwear industry, using a sewing machine, this traditionally being a woman’s job.

Stitchel Hill (sti-chul-hil) n. hill just to the north-east of Riccarton junction, rising to 318 m. There was formerly a fortified house near here (it is ‘Stitchelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stritcher-hils’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Stitchelhill (sti-chul-hil) n. farmstead in northern Castleton Parish, near the hill of the same name. It could be related to the lands of ‘Styrkschielhope’ listed in northern Liddesdale in a rental roll c.1376 and ‘Streichelhope’ recorded in a rental roll of 1541. ‘Willie’s Airchie’ Elliot ‘of Strychill hill’ is recorded in 1590. In 1632 it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and listed as ‘Struchell hilly’ (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it was combined with Laidlawhope and Whiptrope, and extended to 1990 acres, bounded by Laws, Dawstonburn, Millburnholm and Roughley. The lands were rented by John Laing from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1841 census, with 7 quarrymen working there. George Scott and family were living there in 1861 (it is ‘Stichelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stichillhill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Stivety (sti-thee) n., arch. an anvil – ‘…While block and stivety rang wi’ our daffin’ an’ our mirth’ [JT].

Stiven (sti-vin) n. Rev. David Sime (d.1886) son of David Russell and Jeannie Sime, he was born near Dundee, where he was school Dux. He served with the Royal Scots, was awarded the Military Cross and returned to Britain wounded (with a missing leg, and an obituary having been written about him after being reported killed in action). He graduated from St. Andrews in 1919 and received his B.D. there in 1922, having a special interest in Hebrew and Biblical Criticism. He spent some time in Jerusalem, then became assistant at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh before being appointed as minister of Teviothead Kirk in 1925. He was translated to Gilcomiston, Aberdeen in 1929 and Inveresk in 1937. He was minister of Iona Parish 1958–66 and received a Doctorate of Divinity. He married Margaret (‘Peggy’) McIntosh in 1923 and they had several children (his surname is sometimes given as ‘Steven’).

Stiver (stI-vur) n., arch. a small coin, something of little value – ‘…A single stiver would I give? never! Though he fell at my very door’ [JoHa], ‘Nixt race when it came oot an’ won, Hed no a stiver tae pit on’ [MB] (from an old Dutch coin).

Stivet (sti-vi) n., arch. a stupid or obstinate person – ‘He’s an auld stivet!’ [GW].

St. James’ Fair (sin’-jäm-zeez-far) n. traditional fair held near Kelso, formerly on 5th August, and now in September. Its origins go back to the days when Roxburgh was a town, and the traditional location at Friar’s Holm, where the Teviot meets the Tweed, is near the site of the old castle. It was probably for a long time the biggest fair in Roxburghshire.

St. James’ Flid (sin’-jäm-zeez-flid) n. name sometimes given to the flood of 9th August 1806, so called because it happened just a few days after St. James’ Fair. It was particularly devastating in Rulewater, with much property at Bonchester Bridgend being swept away. Sir Walter Scott described how the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. It also took away the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm.

St. James’ Hall (sin’-jäm-zeez-hal) n. the Masonic Hall on Union Street, formerly used as a dance venue.

St. John’s Kirk (sin’-jónz-kirk) n. the former St. John’s Church on Oliver Crescent. It was built as an additional Hawick church in 1878–80, largely by donations from Rev. John Thomson and his wife (who had inherited a large sum). The builder was Alexander Ferguson. It had the town’s tallest steeple at 32 m or over 100 feet, and an adjacent church hall was also constructed in 1885. It also had magnificent stained glass windows by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle. It received its official status as a ‘quoad sacra’ parish by Decret of the Court of Teinds in mid-1881. The church survived for about 80 years, but in 1958 the congregation merged with those of St. Andrew’s and East Bank to form the new Trinity Kirk. The church itself was sold and partially demolished in 1960, but re-opened as Arthur Armstrong’s department store in 1962, later becoming Almstrong’s. The steeple was removed and some of the stained glass (by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle) was rescued by R.E. Scott and the Brothers of Charity, a monastic order from Gattonside, where they were installed. The buildings are now listed on the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland and although approval was given for conversion into accommodation units, no work has been done. A roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1881–89; Alexander Thomson 1889–94; William Brown 1894–1902; Robert Dickson 1902–05; William Lindsay 1906–13; Arthur Dunnett 1913–20; Walter Carter 1920–29; ??; William Wood 1958–59.

St. Jude’s Fair (sin’-joodz-far) n. name used for a fair held at Hawick in the 17th century, specifically mentioned in 1673. In that year the Baron (the Earl of Queensberry) complained to the Privy Council that the Bailies and others in Hawick stopped his officers from ‘riding the fair’ (i.e. collecting duties); this was probably part of a feud between the 2 parties over the use of the Common. It was also known as the ‘St. Simon and St. Jude Fair’. St. Jude’s feast day was 28th October, which was only a week or so before the date of Hawick’s Winter Fair in the 18th century. Hence it seems likely that this was an alternative name for the Winter Fair, perhaps with the date being moved at some point and hence the association with St. Jude being dropped.

St. Leeonard’s see St. Leonards
St. Leonard (sin'-le-nurdy) n. Christian saint, believed to have been a 6th century hermit, although his historical existence is not certain. He became one of the most popular saints in Western Europe in the late middle ages. He is Patron of pregnant women, captives and prisoners of war, based on a version of his life from the 11th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. He is supposed to have created an Abbey at Noblac (now St.-Leonard) in France, where he is buried. His cult spread through Europe, with at least 177 British churches dedicated to him, including the hospitals of that name in Peebles, Edinburgh and Alnwick, as well as a smaller one at Ednam. There was additionally a nunnery named after him in Berwick and a hill and mill in Lauder. Shrines dedicated to him were associated with the curing of leprosy, as well as the freeing of captives and the safe delivery of children. It is unclear when and for what reason his name became attatched to parts of Hawick Common. He is now regarded as patron saint of the Hut.

St. Leonards (sin'-le-nurdy, sin'-lee-nurdy) n. general name for the farm and neighbouring area lying on the Common at the top of the Vertish. The tenant of the farm plays host to the Cornet and his supporters during the Chases before the Common Riding, and officially serves the curds and cream breakfast on the Friday. It is traditional that the Flag is displayed outside the farmhouse during the Thursday and Friday morning Huts. The Hut is effectively a barn at the farm, which replaced a temporary marquee in 1924. The singing of ‘Teribus’ outside the farmhouse after the Friday morning ‘Hut’ was started in 1890. The tenant was Thomas Reid in the late 19th century. A stone axe found near there is in the Museum. It is unclear when the name was attached to the farm; it is labelled ‘Hawick Townhead’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map – ‘And lang may St. Leonard’s retain the power To feast the sterlling Teri; And lang may the flag Owre a cornet wag, And lang may we a’ be cheery’ [JEDM], ‘In front of old St. Leonard’s now the throng With one accord assemble, old and young All share the duties that to them belong – Again the Common Riding Song is sung’ [JCG] (named after Christian Saint Leonard, the reasons for which, and era being unknown; also written ‘St. Leonard’s’).

St. Leonard’s Handicap (sin'-le-nurdy-hawn-dee-kawp) n. former race taking place at the Common Riding. It is recorded in 1875 on the Saturday, being run over 1½ miles.

St. Leonard’s Moor (sin'-le-nurdy-moor, -mair) n. another name for Hawick Moor – ‘…Then in the breast alike of rich and poor There rises up a sense of joy refined, As on they journey to St. Leonard’s Moor’ [JCG].

St. Leonard’s Moss (sin'-le-nurdy-mos) n. another name used generally for Hawick Moss, for the marshy land behind St. Leonard’s farm or more specifically applied to the boggy land near to the north of Pilmuir Rig farm, in the middle of the Dipper Field. It is marked near Pilmuir Rig on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. In 1713 the Council granted the right to ‘cast bakes’ anywhere on the mosses of the Common, except for here, Winnenington Moss or Whitchesters Moss. Burgesses were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733.

St. Leonard’s Park (sin'-le-nurdy-pawrk) n. race-course at the Mair, opened in 1854, and used exclusively for the Common Riding races since 1855. It is one of the highest race courses in Britain, and also used for a few ‘flapping’ meetings every year. The paddock was extended in 1889 and offices erected in 1894.

St. Leonard’s Vaults (sin'-le-nurdy-vaults) n. former name for the Ewe & Lamb pub in the late 19th century, at the Sandbed/Orrock Place (also sometimes ‘St. Leonard’s Spirit Vaults’ and ‘the St. Leonard’s Bar’).

the St. Leonard’s Stakes (thu-sin'-le-nurdy-stäiks) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least 1887. It was at one time a ‘selling stakes’, with the winner to be sold for 50 sovereigns. The 1888 race was declared void after the leading horse slowed before the post to allow the second horse to win, while another horse had jockeys of different weight switched.

St. Leonard’s Well (sin'-le-nurdy-wel) n. spring just to the south of St. Leonard’s Moss, between Pilmuir farm and Pilwnair farmstead. It seems possible that this was the first local place to be associated with the saint, with the farm name following later. It may be the same as ‘Lurgie’s Well’ (if that was not nearer to St. Leonard’s farm).

St. Malachy (sin'-maw-la-chee) n. (1094–1148) Archbishop of Armagh, baptised ‘Maelmhaedhoc O’ Morgair’, who was the first Irishman to be canonised, and is known for his vision of the identity of the last 112 Popes. In 1139 he journeyed to Rome via Scotland, England and France. The chaplainry of ‘Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm’ was mentioned...
St. Margaret

in 1500 as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield excepted from the lease to Walter Scott of Branxholme. This may have been the early chapel near Northhouse.

St. Margaret (sin'-mawr-grit') n. (d.1093) born in Hungary, her family fled William the Conqueror, were shipwrecked off Scotland, and then befriended by King Malcolm, who married her in 1070. She was brother of Edgar Ætheling, and daughter of the exiled English Prince Edward. Probably because of her family's influence, the Scottish King made many incursions into Northumbria. She had 6 sons and 2 daughters. She died a few days after her husband and son were killed at Alnwick Castle. She was canonised in 1251 and her feast day was 10th June (recently moved to 16th November). Another St. Margaret of Antioch was an early Christian martyr, and there are also other saints of the same name.

St. Margaret's an Wulton Sooth (sin'-mawr-gritz-an-wul'-in-sooth) n. former church near the top of Commercial Road (No. 34), built in 1894 to plans drawn up jointly by J.P. Alison and J. Chalmers of Glasgow. This replaced a temporary iron structure, and used red sandstone from Langtown Quarries. Originally called Wilton South Church, it was built for a new congregation established by the United Presbyterian Church in 1888. Wilton South merged with St. Margaret's Church in 1940 and was linked to the charge of St. George's West and Roberton churches in 1984. The building fell into disrepair towards the end of the 20th century, and the last service was in 1987. The congregation merged with that of St. George's and the building was demolished in 2001.

St. Margaret's Convent (sin'-mawr-gritz-kon-vin') n. convent in the West End, built 1910–12, for sisters belonging to the ‘Third Order’ of St. Dominic (being free to engage in pastoral work outside the convent), the first of its kind in Scotland. They originally came from Stone in Staffordshire. The first 4 sisters arrived in Hawick in 1909 (to a rather mixed welcome), setting up temporarily at 14 Buccleuch Street, opposite the Catholic Church. They included Sister Mary Antoninus, Sister Margaret Mary and Sister Theresa Margaret. A resident chaplin followed in 1912. They took immediate charge of the Guilds associated with S.S. Mary & David's, as well as teaching at the school. They also formed a Women's section of the Sacred Heart Confraternity. They moved to Myreslawgreen in 1912, the foundation stone having been laid there the previous year. A hall there was used as the Church Hall for S.S. Mary & David's until the new halls were opened on Buccleuch Street in 1930. The building is believed to be the last in Hawick built using the red sandstone from Denholm Quarries, with architect Reginald Fairlie from Edinburgh. From 1934 the sisters ran the St. Margaret’s Home hospice, which was built on the grounds of the Convent. The Hall was demolished in 1970, with Myreslawcourt built on part of the site. The last nuns left the town in 1987, with the Convent building being taken over as part of the old-age Home. Chaplains at the Convent included: Michael A. Payne 1936–43; William Grant 1948–60; and Thomas Kelly 1961–63.

St. Margaret’s Drive (sin'-mawr-gritz-driv) n. dead-end road off Bright Street, formerly being on the grounds of St. Margaret's Convent. It was named in 1990.

St. Margaret’s Home (sin'-mawr-gritz-hom) n. residential facility for the sick and aged, off Myreslaw Green. It was developed on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent from 1934, with considerable extensions being made since. It was opened by Archbishop McDonald and was founded as a ‘Home for Incurables’, with accommodation for 45 patients. In 1987 the nuns left the town, and the Home was taken over by a voluntary committee. Since 1999 it has been run privately.

St. Margaret’s Kirk (sin'-mawr-gritz-kirk) n. church on Wellington Road in Wilton, originally called Wellington Church. It was built in 1886 to house a congregation that had followed Rev. J.A. Birrell out of Hawick Parish Church following some internal disagreements. It was erected as a separate parish by a Decree of the Court of Teinds in 1896. In 1940 the congregation merged with Wilton South to become St. Margaret’s and Wilton South, with the abandoned building being used for commercial purposes until demolished in 1975. New housing was built on the site in 1977. A roll of the ministry is: William Miller 1886–98; Charles Brownlie 1898–1904; William McCullough 1905–35;

St. Margaret’s Schuil (sin'-mawr-gritz-skil) n. Roman Catholic primary school, originally established in 1854 by Fr. Taggart, with the financial assistance of Fr. Wallace of Traquair. This provided education for the children of Catholics within the community, originally mostly Irish workers who came to Hawick to work in the hosiery industry. Within a couple of years of its establishment it had 50 pupils enrolled. A new
St. Mary's Kirk

St. Mary's Kirk (sin'-mā-reez-kirk) n. St. Mary's Church, occupying an eminence above the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot. The existence of a church in Hawick is first recorded in 1183, and it was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214 by Adam, Bishop of Caithness (as recorded in the Chronicle of Melrose Abbey, ‘Dedicata est ecclesia Sanctae Mariae de Hawic a domino A. Episcopo Cathenensi iiij, Kal. Junii’, i.e. ‘the Church of St. Mary of Hawick was dedicated by Lord Adam, Bishop of Caithness, May 29’). The original was probably at least as early as the coming of the Normans to the area, and may have been much earlier and Saxon. It contained ornate stonework (a few pieces of which survive in the Museum, including pillars surmounted by capitals and also a pattern of carved foliage, which was probably painted). The original may have been roofed with red flagstones. It was reslated and repaired in 1670. For centuries the church bell was rung to mark the passing of a resident of the Parish. Tradition says that a bell and clock were brought from Melrose Abbey when it was suppressed. The bell broke in 1693 and was melted and recast the following year (the Council enacting that it was only to be rung for deaths in those families that had contributed to the cost). In 1717 the charge for non-Burgesses was 2 shillings Scots (6 shillings for those outside the Burgh). The clock is recorded as early as 1701, when mention is made of it being broken for the last 12 years! In 1718 the Council asked for contributions for providing a new clock, and it was repaired in 1747, with new dial-plates made on the west and east sides; it was repaired again in 1761 at great expense, a clockmaker being brought in from Redpath for the purpose and a stent being raised to pay for it. The current clock dates from only 1873. The old steeple may have been turretted with a flat roof and a belfry at one of the corners; this ‘bell-house’ was rebuilt in 1723, since its ashlar work was in danger of falling. In 1729 it is recorded that the bell was rung daily at 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.; by the early 19th century the times were 5.30 a.m. and 8 p.m. Stone stairs were built up to the steeple loft around 1714, and the ladder to the steeple was mended in 1727. The bell was also taken down (and presumably replaced) and the steeple mended in 1747. The main floor of the church was still not fitted with seats in 1718, when the Session records describe a dispute over space for stools. Already in 1723 there were calls for an extension to accommodate the congregation, with the Minister expressing his disappointment in 1724 at failing to convince the Session to act. In 1733 there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to repair and extend the church. It was largely demolished in 1763, apparently being too solid to bring down easily. The church was rebuilt in 1763/4, in a much more plain style and a new bell was obtained at that time (at a cost of £50, weighing 560 pounds and made by Lester & Pack of Whitechapel); the cost was £497 (exclusive of the bell), the money coming from the heritors, the Trustees of Alexander Orrock, the weavers incorporation, the rural tenantry (who carted the materials) and the Burgh (who supplied the bell). Some of the original stone was... used, but all previous ornamentation was hidden. The T-shaped plan used the long wall for gathering the congregation around both the communion table and pulpit, which was the common design after the Reformation. The steeple was also rebuilt at that time, John Purves, wright in Kelso, being the main contractor. The upper gallery of the kirk was then reserved for members of the incorporation of Weavers, with the front row kept for the Magistrates. Most of the other seats were reserved for heritors, farmers and members of the session, with very few for the ordinary townspeople (who had to stand). In 1826 it is recorded that some people were paying 6 shillings (presumably annually) for the use of a seat, and there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch for a larger church (which could seat 700 for a population of around 5000). Internal renovations were carried out around 1863 by mason’s Marshall & Ballantyne and joiner’s Scott & Wright. This work revealed the memorial stones of Walter Scott of Goldielands and some later family members (concealed under wood on the west-side of the aisle, where a furnace was installed), as well as some carved stonework from the earlier church. Severely damaged in a fire of 1880, it was substantially renovated in 1882/3 by the Edinburgh firm Wardrop & Reid, essentially as a replica of the one that burned down. The main changes were the addition of 2 circular windows in the gables as well as dormer windows, a move of the entrance from the south to the north side, and the building of 2 internal staircases instead of 3. The 18th century tower survived the fire, and is built in rubble of 5 stages, being topped with an ogival slated roof and a wrought-iron weather vane. There has been some dispute over the ownership of the tower, with the Town Council regarding itself as the owners in the 19th century (and being responsible for its upkeep, as well as that of the clock contained within it); however, the legal status of such ownership was not established. The Kirk had its exterior refurbished in 1973, when floodlights were also installed to illuminate it on special occasions. It is currently a Category B listed building. The church contains the Buccleuch Vault, resting place of many of the earliest Scots of Buccleuch, which has been sealed since the 1763 re-building. The church yard has been in use since at least the 13th century, and was in earlier times used for many civic functions, e.g. for the election of bailies. The permission to erect ‘through-stones’ appears only to have been given in 1712, following an Act of 1708. Although a proposal for enclosing the kirkyard was made in 1723, the surrounding wall was only built in 1811, and repaired in 1857. The churchyard was closed to burials in 1864. The iron gates were added in 1937 to mark the 400th anniversary of the granting of the 1537 Charter, and in 1973 the churchyard was extensively landscaped and tidied up. The 700th anniversary of its consecration in 1914 attracted an estimated crowd of 4,000. It was used for a while as a Red Cross Military Hospital in WWI. Before the Reformation (i.e. the late 16th century) St. Mary’s was, of course, Catholic, like other churches in Scotland. It was part of the Archdiocese of Glasgow, and in 1447/8 was made a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell. Patronage of the church was vested in the Baron of Hawick for most of history, but given to the Earls of Bothwell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The church became insufficient for Hawick’s population in the later part of the 18th century, when other churches began to be set up. It was the Parish Church until 1844 (when the Old Parish Church was built), becoming a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860, and reverting to the main parish church again in 1987. Also in 1987 the interior was refurbished. After it was separated from ‘Old Parish’ the new Manse was off the Braid Road. From 1997 it was linked to the churches of Cavers and Kirkton. Kirk Session records exist from 1700. The oldest recorded communion token bear the mark ‘M.A.K.’ for ‘Master Alexander Kynneir’. Other existing tokens date from 1843 and 1860. A ‘gaufré’, or utensil for baking sacramental wafers, exists, and may be pre-Reformation. The National Archives contain records relating to the quoad sacra parish dating from 1833. A roll of the meenisters while it was the Parish Kirk is given elsewhere. The subsequent roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1860–79; Stewart Burns 1880–1925; Eric Raff 1926–27; William Simpson 1927–33; Walter Calderwood 1933–53; J.P. Wilson 1959–66; Duncan Clark 1976–83??; David Burt 1996–98; William Taylor 1998–??; Marina D. Brown 2010– Alastair Cook ??. – ‘While, as up yonder Sacred Mount I looke; On which the temple that’s situat on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by’ [RRC], ‘Hark! the bell of old St. Mary Finds us armed alert and wary’ [RSC], ‘I sei the Slitrig whirlin’ doon, and I hear St. Mary’s clock’ [JEDM], ‘Where stands St. Mary’s pointing to the sky, Encircled round its walls in peaceful rest And with the dust of ages intrepressed The St. Mary’s Knot (sin’m-à-reez-no’) n., arch. a knot tied triply, so that it is hard to undo – ‘He has tied them a’ wi’ St. Mary Knot, A’ these horse but barely three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (the note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ suggests that the line refers to ham-stringing a horse, but this is inconsistent with the following verses).

St. Mary’s Loch (sin’m-à-reez-loch) n. loch lying in the central southern uplands, about halfway between Hawick and Moffat. It is the largest body of water in the Borders, about 4 miles long, 7½ miles in circumference and 30 fathoms deep in places. It has the smaller Loch o the Lowes at its head. There was a dispute over right to the Loch between Lord Napier and Scott of Rodono in the mid-19th century. It is famous for its picturesque views and as the haunt of the Ettrick Shepherd – ‘Long, long ago, ere the Yarrow wound Or the rainclouds filled St. Mary’s, Long, long ago, when on Ettrick ground The only folk were the fairies’ [WHO].

St. Mary’s Place (sin’m-à-reez-plis) n. name adopted by the Council in 1946 for what was formerly Old Churchyard or Auld Kirkyaird. The house at the corner with the Kirk Wynd, No. 1 St. Mary’s Place and 31 Drumlanrig Square was designed in 1891 by J.P. Alison and built for Miss Lamb; it is a grade C listed building. Most of the other houses in the street are quite old.

St. Mary’s Schuil (sin’m-à-reez-skil) n. St. Mary’s Infant School, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in the latter part of the 19th century. The buildings were at the top of Brougham Place, behind Trinity Church. It was set up through the efforts of Rev. John Thomson as the Parish School for St. Mary’s, and hence was also called ‘St. Mary’s Quoad Sacra School’. The first master was William Murray, who had been running a private school at 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) since 1850. When the new school opened Murray marched all his students there in a body. The school became connected with the government so it could have student teachers, and after the passing of the Education Act it became the responsibility of the new School Board. A wooden building was built to house the infant department. Eventually the school became specialised as an infant department, with the older primary pupils attending Trinity. It closed in 1967, the pupils being split among the neighbouring schools. The main building was later used by a knitwear firm before being converted into 2 houses, with the outbuildings demolished. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1852–1951 are in the National Archives. The Borders Archive holds registers for 1898–1967 and log books for 1874–1967.

St. Mary’s Shiel (sin’m-à-reez-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Sant-Marie Scheillis’, and there being no tenant at that time. The location is unknown, but the name suggests it could have been associated with Hermitage Chapel.

St. Mary’s Steps (sin’m-à-reez-stepz) n. common name for the main staircase leading to St. Mary’s Kirk from the Kirkstile. There are 33 steps in all.

St. Mary’s Well (sin’m-à-reez-wel) n. spring on the north-north-west side of Ruberslaw. It was probably a ‘holy well’, i.e. at one point having some religious significance. A former spring near Hawthorns of Ashkirk about 1250; he is there ‘Johanne de Sancto Micaele’. He was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitecrooks and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of ‘Ylistoun’ (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Branxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews about the 1190s. His name is given as ‘Danui de sco michaele’. John was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of ‘Ylistoun’ (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Branxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews. David is also listed and so probably his son or brother. It seems likely he is descended from Walter, who is mentioned a generation earlier. John (13th C.) witness in 1249 to a charter granted by Agnes ‘de Illifistun’ (i.e. Elliston) to Dryburgh Abbey. He may well have been related to this Agnes. He is probably the same Sir John who witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk about 1250; he is there ‘Johanne de Sancto Micaele’. Sir John (13th/14th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Sire Johan de Seint Michel del Comte de Rokesburgh’. Presumably the same man is listed separately as ‘Dominus Johannes de Seint Michel, miles’. His seal consists of an oval showing St. Michael slaying the dragon and a man with a hawk on his wrist, together with the name ‘SJOHANIS DE SCO
MICHAELI'. He probably held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere in the county. Another ‘Johan’ is also listed, presumably his son, along with ‘Renaud de Seint Michel, clerk’ (i.e. Reginald), possibly another son. In 1311 he is listed among Scotsmen whose lands had been taken by Edward II, but were now returned (specifically his lands of ‘Heveside’) because they ‘came to his peace’. This is said to be an old Cumberland family and may be the same family who are recorded holding lands at Reban, Kildare in Ireland around 1300. John (13th C.) son of John of St. Michael. In 1278/9 he was accused of slaying Richard Bullock at ‘Cambok’, in a group along with 3 others. He was stated to be already dead, and so not declared an outlaw. Hence he cannot have been the later John, son of Sir John. John (13th/14th C.) probably son of Sir John. He was ‘Johan de Seint Michael’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. John (d.1451/2) holder of the lands of Whitchesters in the Barony of Hawick. He was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam and was ‘Johannem de Samichell’ in 1426 when on the inquest for the inheritance of Eilrig by Walter Scott of Rankiburn. He was probably the John of St. Michael who was witness to the 1435 charter where lands of Branxholme and others in the Barony of Hawick were transferred from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He also witnessed a document for Swithin of that Ilk in 1432. In 1447 he witnessed a decree about James, Earl of Douglas being older than his twin Archibald; he was recorded being ‘de Quitester’. He was succeeded by his son John. John of St. Michael (15th C.), son of John. He was probably the last of his family to hold local lands. He is probably the ‘Johanne de Sancto Michaeli junioire’ who witnessed a charter between Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. A ‘retour’ of 1452 confirms to him the lands of ‘Qwitchester’, on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1455 John of Langlands attested in a notorised document (made at St. Mary’s Kirkyard) that he had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters. In 1455 King James II granted Whitchesters to David Scott, heir to Buccleuch for services to the King, the lands having been forfeited by ‘John of St. Michael, traitor’ (probably his father). In 1456 there was a further notorial instrument attesting that he had inherited Whitchesters from his father; by this time his is described as ‘quondam Johanni de Sancti Michaele, filio quondam Johannis de Sancto Michaele’, suggesting that he was also deceased. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455. Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as ‘Roberto de Sancto Michaelae’, and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. His son ‘Elmeras’ is recorded in about 1240. Walter (12th C.) referred to in a charter sometime in the period 1163 to 1183. Henry Lovel granted the Priory of St. Andrews 2 oxgangs of land in Branxholme, which was half of the lands formerly held by him (also written ‘de St. Michael’; it is possible there is a connection with the Carmichaels).

St. Mungo’s Day (sin’-mung-göz-dá) n. Saint’s feast day celebrated on 13th January, the anniversary of the death of St. Mungo in the year 613. He was Bishop of Glasgow and sometimes credited as founding the city. His day was celebrated before the Reformation and still referred to in the 1622 records of the local Commissioners’ Court. Also sometimes known as St. Kentigern, his image is included on the Founder’s Window of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Ninian’s Road (sin’-ni-nee-zród) n. street in the Terraces, named in 1931. The name was suggested by J.P. Alison, after St. Ninian (who died in 432), since he was one of the people to whom Trinity Church in Edinburgh was dedicated, this being connected to the Trinity lands in Hawick, near which the street was built.

St. Ninian’s Well (sin’-ni-nee-inz-wel) n. former name for a spring on the Woll estate at Ashkirk. It is about 220 m to the west-south-west of the Parish Kirk, on a steep slope. This is one of a large number of sites throughout Scotland connected in name with this early Scottish Christian missionary. Ashkirk Kirk, which lies to the north-east of the spring, was originally dedicated to this saint. It has been suggested that the spring could have been so-named because it was used for baptisms.

stob (stob) n., arch. a stake, fence post – ‘…Of drystone dykes or fence stobs And far the eye can see’ [WL], ‘Compared wi’ a nibbie, a walkin’-stick’s nea better than a palin’-stob’ [DH], a coarse nail (the first meaning is probably the origin for ‘Stobs’ and ‘Stobi Hill’, while the second may apply to ‘Stobicote’.

Stob Cleuch (stō-b-klooghy) n. small stream that rises on Stob-cleuch Edge and runs eastwards to join the Gorrenberry Burn.

Stobedge Wud (stō-ej-wud) n. plantation to the north of Minto Crags. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Stobedge planting dyke’ formed part of the western boundary of Crigend and Minto Mill farms. An unrelated farmstead called ‘Stobedge’ was in Ancrum Parish and once part of the Chesters estate.

Stob Fell (stō-fel) n. hill in the upper Hermitage valley, north of Billhope. It reaches a height of 518 m.

Stobicote (stō-bee-ko’) n. farm between Southfield and Old Northhouse. The lands were leased to Walter Scott of Branxholme by the Abbot of Melrose in 1500 along with other lands in the ‘Lordship of Ryngwoodfield’. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. The first owner may have been David Scott, son of ‘Wicked Wat’. In about 1557 it was rented from Melrose Abbey by Simon and John Scott, sons of the Laird of Allanhaugh: it was valued at £6 at that time. It was listed as ‘Stobbit, Coitbrugh’ in 1634, ‘Stobbit, Coitbrugh’ in 1653, similarly in 1661 and ‘Stobit- coat-burgh’ in 1663 (i.e. merged with Brugh in the transcription), when still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was valued at £260 in 1643. In 1684 tenants James Glendinning and John Simpson were declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. 7 people were recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James Scott ‘Drover’ was tenant there in at least the period 1712–29. John Elliot was living there in 1716–22. Thomas Davidson was there in 1716. James Jackson in 1717 and William Telfer in 1720–23. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of the combined farms of Over and Nether Stobicote, covering 694 acres, bounded by Allan Water, Brugh, Doecluch, Northhouse and Braidhaugh. William Edmondson was there in 1727. James Jackson and John Elliot in 1728. Walter Henderson in 1729 and William Scott in 1738. It was also the birthplace in 1765 of Gideon Scott, millwright. William Wilson was there in 1772. James Anderson was farmer there between at least 1763 and 1797. In 1788 the lands were valued at £260, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Hobkirk and family lived there in 1841. The route for the Moss paul ride-out passes near here (also known as ‘Stobiescot’, ‘Stobicote’ etc., and is ‘Stobicote’ on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Stobycot’ in 1500, transcribed ‘Stobbe-Tait’ in 1540, ‘Stobecoit’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Stobitcote’ in 1643, ‘Stobbitcote’ in 1660, transcribed ‘Stobat- cate’ in 1684, ‘Stobitcatt’ in 1694, ‘Stobbitcatt’ in 1712 and 1716, ‘Stobitcott’ in 1717 and 1723, ‘Stobitcoats’ in 1718, ‘Stobit Cott’ in 1724, ‘Sto- bitcatt’ in 1718 and ‘Stobitcatt’ in 1799; it ap- peared as ‘Stobycott’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, while Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Stobitcot’; the name probably means ‘cottage made with nails’).

Stobie Cote see Stobicote

Stobie Cleuch (stō-bee-klooghy) n. small stream joining the Hermitage Water from the west near Leaugh Cottage, just north of Redhugh. On the lower banks of the stream there are the remains of 4 circular turf stells.

Stobie’s map (stō-bee-map) n. map of Rox- burghshire prepared by Matthew Stobie and published in 1770. Although this map is useful, it was prepared for the gentry and hence began the insidious process of anglicising our local place names.

Stobi Hill (stō-bee-hill) n. hill in the Ale valley, between Whitslaid farm and Todrig farm, with Whitslaid Hill being the southern spur. There is a linear earthwork, an old field-bank, running from the hollow between this hill and Whitslaid Hill north towards Todrig (it is marked ‘Stobiehill on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Stobi Meadi (stō-bee-me-di) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf granted by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century and recorded as ‘Stobiemede’.

Stobitcote see Stobicote

Stobo (stō-bō) n. John (17th C.) traveller from Kelso. In 1659 the Hawick Council decreed that the would not ‘trouble nor molest our market, in buying either butter or cheese before the bell ring for that effect’ [BR1659].

Stobs (stōbz) n. estate and former hamlet about 4 miles south of Hawick, along the Slitrig. In the 19th century it had about half a dozen homes, as well as a post office, blacksmith’s shop and joiners (mostly in a long row of cottages), although there is now little trace of these buildings. It was also a station on the Waverley Line, converted into a house after the 1969 closure of the railway, with extensive sidings linking it with the military Stobs

The estate is heavily wooded, with sitka spruce and other conifers dominating. The name is recorded in the early 14th century, and gave rise to a surname. Thomas Cranston was granted the barony of Stobs by David II, sometime previous to 1370. A grant sometime before 1375 has Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, granting parts of Cavers to Thomas Cranston, with his lands of Stobs being excepted. In 1458/9 the lands were among those held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1509/10 it was part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers since the time of King David. In 1544 the lands were owned by Clement Crozier, and then passed to the Gledstains family. The superiority of the lands of Stobs was held by the Cranstons as part of the Lordship of Denholm according to a discharge of 1574. Gavin Gledstains inherited the ands from his deceased brother George in 1580. They were sold before 1584 to Gavin Elliot of Baillielie, who then became the first Elliott of Stobs. On his death they were inherited briefly by his surviving daughters and a grand-daughter, but sold in 1607 to ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’, who took full possession of it in 1614 (with the superior at that time being Sir John Cranston of that Ilk). In 1608 it was attacked by William Scott of Northhouse and a party armed with ‘swords, gauntlets and plate-sleeves’ threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted; 2 years later the same William and his brother Robert Scott attacked Gilbert Elliott of Stobs on the streets of Hawick. Beginning with this Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins’, the estate became the seat of the Elliott family for many generations. The superiors of the lands were the Lords Cranston in the 17th century. In 1678 it (along with Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Harwood Burn and William’s Rig) was valued at £1633 6s 8d, and owned by the Elliots of Stobs. In 1694 ‘The place & office houses’ of Stobs was taxed for 13 hearths, while ‘Stobs his cooks wife’ was taxed for a hearth in Hawick. John Henderson was recorded living there in at least 1726–30 and Andrew Lillico in 1736–41. Sir Gilbert Elliott paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748 and 15 in 1753. In 1788 (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) it was valued at £1633 6s 8d, with the teinds having been purchased from Douglas of Cavers and valued at £400. The estate was sold to the War Office in 1902, apparently partly because the terrain resembled the South African veldt. Over the next 5 decades it was used extensively as an army training camp and also prisoner of war camp. It was broken up and sold after WWII. A memorial stone cross was erected after WWI. A plan of the estate from 1779 is in the National Archives (also spelled ‘Stobbs’, ‘Stob’, ‘Stobbis’, ‘Stobbes’, etc.; the name is recorded in 1309 as ‘Stobbis’ and in 1370 as ‘stobbis’, perhaps in error, with ‘the Stobbis’ appearing in 1458/9, ‘Stobis’ in 1509/10, ‘Stobbis’ in 1511, ‘the Stobbis’ in 1586 and 1592 and ‘Stobbs’ in 1643; the modern spelling dates to at least Gordon’s c. 1650 map, but is ‘Stobbs’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it may be from the Gaelic, Old Norse or Old English for ‘stakes’ or ‘stumps’, perhaps meaning that it was a place marked by tree stumps).

Stobs (stōbz) n. David (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. His steading was valued at 12s 6d. His surname is recorded as ‘Stobbs’.

Stobs Camp (stōbz-kawmp) n. army camp, about 4 miles south of Hawick, established in 1903 as a summer training ground, with the officers stationed in Stobs Castle. The camp was based at the former estate of Stobs, including adjoining farms, covering about 10,000 acres. A small gauge railway track went from the Waverley Line right up to the camp, this tramway being dismantled when the camp expanded during WWII. Used initially by volunteer units as a summer training ground, it saw increased use around the time of the two World Wars and grew to be so large that it was referred to as ‘the Scottish Aldershot’. At its peak in 1915 there may have been as many as 15,000 men stationed there. After WWI the camp wound down, with many of the huts being sold off. It was also used as a prisoner of war camp, with about 6,000 German troops interred there in WWI, and a small number in WWII. After the war it was used for the repatriation of Polish troops, and then reverted to use as a summer training camp until it closed in 1956 and was sold in 1959. Horst Rossberg wrote his recollections as a prisoner of war in the 1991 Transactions. Some concrete foundations survive, along with steps and terracing, showing the location of many more. The training ground stretched all the way to Penchrise Pen. A small cemetery, just inside the camp, was used to bury the 36 prisoners of war and 6 internees who died in the camp, the bodies being reinterred in 1962; the memorial was rebuilt in 2018. 2 interpretation boards were installed in 2020.

Stobs Castle (stōbz-kaw-sul) n. family seat of the Elliots, destroyed in a fire in 1712, resulting in the loss of many of the family’s early documents. A tradition is that people from Hawick were blamed for setting the fire. The original tower stood in a plantation about 400 yards south-east of the present structure, but there are no remains to be seen (it is marked as the site on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). A new mansion was built on the same site in 1719, but in 1764 it also burned down. It was said to be ‘a twae storey heigh thack-house’ [WaD]. It is said that many of the foundation stones were removed from the old castle in 1797. William Bulman was recorded as a servant there in 1799. The house was rebuilt by Sir William Elliot from around 1793, as a gothic-style residence. After that it was always referred to as ‘Stobs Castle’ rather than ‘Stobs Hoose’. The builder was John Laing of Hawick, and the architect was Robert Adam, this being his last castle. It narrowly escaped burning down again in 1824, being saved by the actions of the servants. There were also later Victorian alterations, around 1865, probably by James Anderson Hamilton. A carved family coat of arms hangs over the north entrance. 50 High Street has a freestone cornice salvaged from the Castle at the beginning of the 19th century. Manufacturer Thomas Lindsay Watson lived there briefly around 1892, when it hosted a demonstration of perhaps 6,000 people in support of the Liberal Unionists. When the estate was sold to the War Office in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach also survives, along with the Grecian-style gateway to the approach road. And along the track south of the house is the stable block.

the Stobs Castle Stakes (thu-stobs-kaw-sul-stäks) n. race run over 2 miles on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

Stobs Ceemetry (stobs-see-mi’-ree) n. small cemetery situated just inside Stobs Camp, south of the former station. This was where 36 prisoners of war and 6 civilian internees were buried. A memorial was built from stones carried up from the Slitrig by Mr. Oliver, farmer at Winningtonrig. The names of those buried there were recorded along with an inscription: ‘To our comrades who died far away from their country’. The site was maintained by locals until 1962, when the bodies were reinterred at Cammock Chase German Military Cemetery in Staffordshire. A few remains of the memorial can still be seen today.

Stobs Cottage (stobs-ko’-ree) n. former name for a cottage on the Stobs estate. The estate manager lived there in the 1860s.

Stobs Crater (stobs-krä’-ur) n. crater on Mars, named after the area of Stobs in 1976. It is roughly 12 km in size, and situated at about 5° S, 321.6° E.

Stobsden (stobs-den) n. former name for a place in Cavers Parish, presumably close to Stobs. It could be the same as Stobs Wudfit. John Learmonth was a farm servant there in 1799.

Stobs Hoose (stobs-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Stobs Castle, particularly before the baronial style mansion was built in the late 18th century. The estate was owned from the late 16th century by the Eliotts of Stobs, who built a fortified house there, which was destroyed in 1712. The new house was built in 1719, but was largely replaced by 1800. There were also additions around 1865.

Stobsiado (stob-see-ad) n. newspaper produced by German prisoners of war at Stobs during WWI, with 26 issues being produced in the period 1915–19. At first it was produced by civilian internees, but by late 1916 (when the civilians were moved to the Isle of Man) it was continued by the military prisoners. It contained advertisements, news, poetry, puzzles and short stories About 4,000 copies of each issue were printed (by Scott & Paterson in Hawick). The name means ‘news from Stobs’ in German, but is a play on the popular 18th-century epic poem ‘Jobsiade’. Despite censorship and other restrictions, the publication contains remarkable creativity and humour.

Stobsie HD (stob-shaw-hil) n. hill just to the west of Headshaw. It reaches a height of 298 m and may correspond to the ‘Stobsie HD’ recorded in a description of boundaries in Headshaw in 1780.

Stobsie Hill (stob-sid-hil) n. former name for a hill on the farm of Dryden. It is recorded as ‘Stobside Hill’ in 1780 and probably corresponds to the modern Stobshill.

Stobs Limery (stobs-li-mu-ree) n. name used for the lime works at Limekilnhedge. It started production in the 1790s and ran into the latter part of the 19th century.

Stobs Lodge (stobs-loj) n. former lodge house at Woodfoot, near the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle, on the west side of the Slitrig. In the early 1900s it was let in the summer to a family called Nixon.

Stobs Loch (stobs-loch) n. another name for Barnes Loch.

Stobs Sidins

Stobs Sidins (stōbz-sī-dīnz) n. railway sidings built for Stobs Military Camp at Acreknowe farm. This made a connection to the Stobs Camp internal tramway via a transfer platform. The tramway connected various parts of the camp at different times, e.g. it once ran to the rifle range on Pencriss Pen, and also to the ‘Meldrum Destructor’ (i.e. incinerator).

Stobs Station (stōbz-stāshin) n. former railway station at Stobs, once much used by the military. It was originally called Barnes, but renamed almost right away to Stobs. It had an ‘up’ platform (to London) and a ‘down’ platform (to Edinburgh) as well as a bay platform on the west side. The station building was built in a baronial style. Just south of the station was the cemetery for prisoners of war and internees.

Stobs Wudfit (stōbz-wud-fīt) n. former set of cottages near Stobs, also called just Wudfit.

stock (stok) n., arch. the stalk of a plant, particularly of the cabbage family – ‘...admitted that she ‘went to the Roan Garden on the Sabbath day, and did there cut three or four stocks of green kale’ [JaT].

stock (stok) n., arch. the rental on a leased farm in additional to the teinds, this being in kind or its monetary equivalent, the amount of crops produced in addition to the tithe – ‘This is estimated to pay communis annis [in average years], fyve scoir and 12 bolls in stok, and 28 bolls in teynd’ [PR1627], ‘Rentall of the Dutches of Buccleuches ferme Lands of the baronie of Branxholme woltoun and whytchester sett stock and teind att Hawick’ [Buc1690].

stocken (sto-keen) n. stocking – ‘...an spurred hes time teh the stockenmakin trade wi Peter Lairdhe ower in Wultin Grove’ [BW1978].

Stockcleugh Edge (stok-klooch-ej) n. slope on the border with Dumfriesshire, being the southern part of Tamond Heights (it appears to be marked ‘Slack Cleugh Edge’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Stock Grain (stok-grān) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Stock Hill, joining Ladshaw Sike and Gavel Sike to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Stock Hill (stok-hiil) n. hill lying between the headwaters of the Teviot and Borthwick valleys on the border with Dumfries and Galloway, reaching a height of 477 m (1563 ft) and having a triangulation pillar. It was at the western corner of Hawick Parish once Robertson separated off.

stockin soles (sto-kin-sōlz) n., pl. the wearing socks of without shoes – ‘...hei sits be the fire in his stickin soles’ [IWL] (note that in standard English the phrase is ‘stockinged feet’ or sometimes ‘stocking feet’).

stock-in-tred (stok-in-tred) n., arch. stock-in-trade – ‘The commercial kind are pait o’ the stock-in-tred o’ maist bacca-shops ...’ [DH].

stockit (sto-ki’, -kee’) adj., pp. stocked – ‘Then up wi’ the purse an’ the siller, A weel-stockit maiden for me’ [JoHa], ‘My father was laird o’ a weel stockit mailin’’ [JT].

stocks (stoks) n., pl. long, white neckcloth worn as part of formal riding gear, popular in the 19th century. It was first adopted by the Principals at the 1928 Common Riding.

the stocks (thu-stoks) n. wooden boards with semi-circles cut into them, placed together to hold people as a form of public punishment. Hawick’s stocks were next to the Mercat Cross. A new set is recorded being purchased in 1755. In 1787 the ‘stocks, wood and iron work, and lock’ were mended. They were in regular use until the end of the 18th century, and are preserved in the Museum (in fact the wood crumbled and was replaced with a replica, using the original ironwork around 1898). People were sentenced by the Bailies to spend up to several days in the stocks for relatively minor crimes, including theft and assault. Usually the feet were secured, but sometimes also the arms. The last use was for an elderly female offender in November 1800 – ‘...and sal lie aucht days in the stockis, and stand with ane paper with the theft written upon their forehead at the mercat-crosse, upon the mercat day’ [BR1640], ‘...the bayleye fynes and onlaws him in fyftie pound Scotts, and ordaines him to go to the stockis immediately, and yrin to continue during the sd. regall bayleye his will and pleasure’ [BR1693] (see also the juggs).

Stockwell (stok-wel) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant of Hawick butcher Andrew Wilson. In 1815 he was found not guilty of assaulting Janet Ogilvie (or Orrock). It is stated that both were married people. He appears to have been married to Elizabeth Rae and had a daughter Isabella in Kelso in 1812. He was probably son of Thomas and Margaret Fairbairn, born in Kelso in 1789.

Stockwell Orphanage (stok-wel-or-ř-neej) n. orphanage in London, established in 1867 for boys and in 1879 for girls. In the 1880s Hawick had a circulating library, based at 2 Dovecote Street, to raise money for the orphanage.

stockyard (stok-yərd) n. a stockyard, area where livestock is kept on a farm, typically close to a slaughterhouse – ‘...and convey the chests containin the plate ti Caverton Mill where it was buried in the stockyaird where it lay until the danger was passed’ [IWL].

Stoddart (st-dur’) n. Andrew (19th C.) married Helen Little in Roberton Parish in 1831. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with John and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. David (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arthurton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus David Stodhirde’ is listed there with a value of 23 shillings and 4 pence. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as ‘gudewife of Greatlaw’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. Her lands there were valued at £104. She was presumably widow of the former owner of Greatlaws and may have been connected with the Riddell family. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Bessie Paterson in 1724. Their son Walter was baptised in 1725. He may be the Francis whose death at Stouslie is recorded in Wilton Parish in 1738. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and John, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. James (17th C.) listed at Flex among ‘The poor in Hawick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who married Grizell Elliot and whose daughter Malie (b.1674) was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (17th C.) married Janet Brydon in Ashkirk Parish in 1653. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Ann Dalgleish. Their daughter ‘An’ was baptised in 1701. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Stoddart in Wilton Parish in 1712. James (18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1726 and 1727. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1726) and Walter (again, b.1727). He is probably the James who married Isabel Nichol in Cavers Parish in 1725. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Armstrong and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were wright James Roger and merchant John Scott. James (19th C.) mason of Deanburnhaugh. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Joanne Stodhird’ in the 1447 sa-sine for the Cousinlands, purchased by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The witnesses are Scotts, except for the last 2, who are this man and Patrick Turnbull; it is possible that they were the Hawick Bailies at that time. John (16th C.) described as ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobilman to the lard of Lang-lands’ in 1576. This was in a pledge made for him (and George Elliot) to the Privy Council by Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was listed in 1578/9 among Borderers deemed to have continued in thieving and hence declared as fugitives. He was stated to have been ‘enterit’ and ‘deliverit in the sheref of Roxburch his han-dis’. In 1586/7 he was ‘cobleman at Hawick’ when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Perhaps the same man (or else his son) was ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobileman at Hawick’ when listed among those declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. What happened to him is not recorded, but it seems likely he would have been hanged or fled the area. His existence shows that there was a man employed to ferry people across the Coble Pool from at least the last part of the 16th century. John (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. John (18th C.) married Margaret Stuart in Hawick Parish in 1720. John (18th C.) recorded in ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ in 1764, 1766 and 1772 when 3 of his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Mary Anderson in Robertson Parish in 1762. Probably the same John was father of Isabel (b.1764), Betty (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), Jean (b.1770) and Margaret (b.1772). Kenneth (1964– ) born in Hawick, he qualified as a music teacher then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of ‘Australian Hairdresser of the Year’ in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at the Flex. He married Jean Little and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1674. The witnesses were William Henderson (also in Flex) and Walter Martin. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at the Flex, probably related to the earlier Robert who was there. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson ‘younger in Flex’. His son Francis was baptised in 1704, with witnesses William Henderson (also in the Flex) and Andrew Riddell (in Goldielands). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Little in Hawick Parish in 1726. Robert (d.1759) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw, probably in 1756. Their children included: John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759), baptised after he had already died. The witnesses in 1759 were John Turnbull and Patrick Maxwell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1729, Tandlaw in 1732 and Burnfoot in 1737. He married Elspeth Turnbull and their children included James (b.1727), Margaret (b.1729), Thomas (b.1732) and James (again, b.1737). The witnesses in 1729 were William Grieve and John Scott, in 1732 were John and James Dryden and in 1737 were James Blyth and Walter Scott. Thomas (1828–1905) born in Roxburgh, he attended school in Hawick, being apprenticed as a joiner at 16. He joined the army at 20 and left for Australia in 1853. In the Ballarat area (near Melbourne) he worked as a miner, becoming a speculator and director of many mining companies. By 1880 he was a wealthy man, purchasing statues, and inspiring a local zeal that has led to Ballarat being called the ‘City of Statues’. His bust sits in the local Town Hall. He is recorded subscribing to Hawick Common Riding in the 1880s Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was herd at Harwood in 1711. He married Jean Scott in 1709, the marriage being recorded in Wilton Parish. Their children included Isobella (b.1711) and Margaret (b.1713). The witnesses in 1711 were Gideon Scott of Falmash and Ballie Walter Elliot. Perhaps the same Walter had children Christian (b.1707) and Walter (b.1710) baptised in Robertson Parish. He may therefore be the same man as the Walter recorded at Meadowshaw in 1710. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver at Ashieburn in Ancrum Parish, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Robert Simpson at West Riddell in about 1823. He may be the Walter who married Jessie Hogg in Robertson Parish in 1842. She is probably the widow Janet (from Ashkirk Parish, with surname ‘Hogg’ scored out on the census) was in 1851 living at Whitecleuch (in Robertson Parish) with children Walter (b.c.1845), Adam (b.c.1847) and unnamed (b.1851). Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Baxter in Lilliesleaf in 1845. William (17th/18th C.) married Janet Mercer in Hawick Parish in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘servant to David Gray tenant in Weensland’. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724. He married Helen Wilson (also from Hawick) in 1719 and their children included: Archibald (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); and Janet (b.1724), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1720 were David Gray in Weensland and merchant John Johnston. The witnesses in 1724 were Walter and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) ‘casaer’ (i.e. road-layer) in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘Casaer in Flex’ when he married Marion, daughter of tailor Walter Gledstains. Their children included: John (b.1723); Bessie (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); and Jean (b.1730). Robert (b.1720), with the mother’s name given as Agnes Gledstains, was probably also his son. The witnesses in 1730 were Will Stoddart (surely related) and John Telfer. He may be the William who (along with Archibald Paterson, perhaps also the cassayer at the Flex) witnessed a baptism for William Cathrae in 1728. William (19th C.) woolsorter who was Cornet in 1873. He acted as Right-Hand man again in 1875, since the previous year’s Cornet was unable to attend. William ‘Willie’ (20th C.) mill worker in Hawick. He spent some time working in Canada as a teenager and served in WWI. In 1937 he became Hawick’s only Communist Town Councillor, but within a few months joined the Labour Party. He was involved in setting up the Hawick Workers’ Mill, which supplied woollen goods to anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as well as helping provide jobs for unemployed millworkers in Hawick (formerly spelled ‘Stodart’, ‘Stodder’, ‘Stodert’, ‘Stodherd’, ‘Stoherd’ and other variants; also Stothat).

stog (stóg v., arch. to walk heavily, stride sturdily, stumpy – ‘By the policies o Ancrum Hoose ...A staogteagon on the shadet seide’ [ECS]. ‘ stog (stóg v., arch. to stab, pierce, jab – ‘I have stogd myself in the leg’ [HAST1922].

stoggit (stó-gée’, -gi’) pp., poet. stabbed, thrust – ‘Thou hest stogget sair t me, that I micht fa’...’ [HSR].

Stoghill (stóg-hil) n. former name for lands near Commonsidie in upper Tevioldale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonside, Northcroft and Hillend were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch. It is unclear if the name is a variant of something more familiar.

stoi (stói, stoit) n., poet. a clumsy person – ‘Auld stoi’, said Mrs. Blearie, sharp. Then quickly she calmed doon ...’ [WFC], arch. a bounce by a ball.

stoiter (stol-tur) v., arch. to stagger, stumble – ‘Making a low bow, he wheeled about, and ‘stoitered’ away as fast as his feet could carry him’ [JTe], ‘The step may stoiter, the eyne be dim ... ’ [WL], ‘... But byways for the likes o’ me Al- though the step may stoiter’ [WL] (cf. the more common stotter).

Stonedge (sten-leej, stō-nēj) n. farm west of Wolfelee above Howahill, once part of one of the main estates of Hobkir Parkish, also formerly known as ‘Stanlidge’. It was also once a barony in its own right. It is probably the seat of John ‘de Stonelge’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and is ‘de Stonelgeshe’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. The lands were bestowed on David Home of Wedderburn by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1464. It could be the ‘Stanleche’ in Et- trick Forest, whose ‘grassum’ was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1477 (although this could be confusion with Crown lands of the same name in Stirlingshire). James Turnbull was recorded there in 1586/7 and in 1590. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1600. The size and ownership of parts of lands referred to as ‘Stonedge’ are complicated. The Earl of Angus sold off his superiority of these and other Rulewater lands to Sir William Cranston in 1605. The estate is recorded belonging to Hector Turnbull in at least 1603–09, part sold to Gibbie Eliott of Stobs in 1609 and part still owned by Andrew Turnbull in 1610. Andrew and Cuthbert ‘McDowall’ were there in 1616. It was sold by William, Earl of Lothian to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers in 1647, but given back the following year. Then in 1651 it was sold by William, Lord Cranstoum to William Eliott of Stobs (tradition says that Cranston did this to secure them against being forfeited before his joined attempts to rescue Charles I). In 1671 the lands of Over and Nether Wolfelee, Stonedge, Unthank, Howa, Sneep, Hobsburn and Little Gledstains were separated off from those of Stobs to become the new estate of Stonedge; this was disposed to Thomas, the eldest son of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes Scott, John Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, who later pur- chased the eastern part and became the new Laird of Stonedge. Along with Howa, Scott’s part was valued at £676 14s 8d, with Elliot of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £766 14s 8d. In 1766 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwickbrae, while the western part was valued at £842 6s. Adam Scott’s son Thomas sold his lands to Robert Lisle. Part (including Unthank) was also sold to Elliot of Wolfelee. In about 1788 it was listed as being disjoined from the Stobs estate and valued at £1300 in total, Ell- iot of Wolfelee holding lands in Stonedge valued at £112 5s 7d, while Robert Lisle’s part was valued at £1187 14s 5d, and Cornelius Elliot of Wolflee also owned small parts valued (along with Un- thank) at £110 17s 2d. Lisle sold his lands in 1793 to James Chisholme before the previous pur- chase had really been completed. Robert Smith was living there in 1799. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Robert Lisle and valued at about £1200. It passed through marriage to the Sinclairs, being owned by Lord Sinclair by about 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer there. James Stewart was shepherd there in 1797. Lands formerly in Stonedge (includ- ing Unthank) were listed among the proper- ties of Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee in 1811, valued at £112 5s 7d. The farm was tenanted by Thorburns through much of the 19th century and by the Barrie family into the 20th century. The original house was a strong tower situated on a rocky ledge, said to be surrounded by a very thick wall. All sign of this was already gone by the 19th century, although it is said that Mr. Bar- rie (who lived at Harden) picked up the old key to the peel and passed it on to the Marquis of Lothian. It was stated in the 19th century that there is a stone circle near here, in the direc- tion towards Shankend, although if it existed it is now lost (many spelling variants exist in ear- lier documents, including ‘Steinleath’; it is ‘Stain- letche’ in 1562, ‘Stenlieche’ in 1567, ‘Stanliege’ in 1586/7, ‘Stonyleache’ and ‘Stonyletche’ in 1590, ‘Stanyleche’ in 1595, ‘Stanyleg’, ‘Stanylege’ and ‘Stanileghe’ in 1601, ‘Stanieche’ and ‘Stainieloche’ in 1603, ‘Stanylege’ in 1604, ‘Stanyledge’ and ‘Steneledrig’ in 1606, ‘Stennylege’ and ‘Stanie- che’ in 1607, ‘Staenleche’ and ‘Stenletch’ in 1609, ‘Staniege’ in 1611, ‘Stanylege’ in 1612 and 1615, ‘Stanilege’ in 1616, ‘Stenniledge’ in 1618, ‘Stanilege’ in 1647, ‘Stailedge’ in 1648, ‘Sten- niledge’ in 1677, ‘Stennilodge’ in 1682, ‘Sten- neledge’ in 1692, ‘Stenmillege’ in 1694, ‘Stanelge’ in 1704 and ‘Standlidge’ in 1748; it is marked as ‘Stennaleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that the l has persisted in the local pronunciation despite the official spelling, and that the pronunciation is never stän-; the meaning is probably ‘stane leche’, meaning ‘stony stream’.

Stonedge (sten-leej, stô-nej) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Stonesleige’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Although his name has also been transcribed as ‘Scouenesleghi’, the more modern transcription makes the connection with the lands in Hobkirk Parish clear. His seal bore a ‘cabossed’ stag’s head with a cross between the antlers and the name ‘S’… OHIS DE STYKS’Y?’. William of Yetholm had a similar seal. He is ‘de Stonesleige’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton.

Stonedge Hill (stô-nej-hill) n. hill lying to the south-west of Stonedge farm, reaching a height of 369 m. On its western side is a linear earthwork, some 330 m in length, probably an agricultural boundary, now obscured by the forestry plantation. Near the top of the hill there was previously a cairn, probably quite ancient, but now obliterated by forestry ploughing.

the Store (thu-stör) n. Hawick Cooperative Store, which opened in 1839 as 'the Chartist Store' with a small shop in Silver Street. It grew into a set of around half a dozen general stores, 5 butchers, a baker's shop (from 1851), shoe shop (1859), coal branch (1865), drapery (1873), carting (1874), van service to the country (1884) and penny savings bank (1887). The firm also ran its own stocking-makers at the old Tabernacle building in the years 1874–81. The stableyards and dairy were built on Orchard Terrace in 1891 (designed by J.P. Alison). The main shop, usually the one referred to as 'the Store', stretched from Tannage Close to Baker Street and from the High Street to Teviot Crescent. It contained many departments, including clothing, electrical, shoes, furniture, toys, ladies hairdressing and a tea room. This main building was constructed in 1885 at 65, 67, 69 and 71 High Street, with the surviving upper level frontage at 65–67 designed by local architect Michael Brodie in a French Renaissance style, with the first and second floor windows having arched heads, each with a different carving; this is a category B listed building. This was Hawick's biggest department store, with smaller shops elsewhere in town. There was a relatively large grocer's shop in Noble Place and others at the Sandbed, Drumlanrig Square, Myreslawgreen and Ladylaw Place, as well as the complex on Elm Grove (which contained a grocer's and a butcher's). Shoppers collected stamps that could be redeemed for goods, and departments within the 'Store' communicated via characteristic pneumatic tubes. The main shop closed in 1987, with the property sold off to several developers. The Co-op at Burnfoot remains, however; it was Hawick's first purpose-built self-service grocer. A history was published in 1889 – 'There er peis, peis, Thit come up ti yer kneis, In the Store, There are peis, peis, This come up ti yer kneis, In the Hawick Co-operative Store!' [T], '. . . waitin eer turn at the Store'[ECS], 'In Hawick in days lang syne When the world and luz were younger Oo dune oor messages at the Store A still can mind ma number'[IWL].

the Store Dairy (thu-stör-dä-ree) n. building and yard on Orchard Terrace and Elm Grove, constructed for use by Hawick Cooperative Society. It was built in 1891, designed by ??, and used to run the Store's dairy operations through most of the 20th century. The buildings were converted into Elm Court housing.

the Store Field (thu-stör-feeld) n. field once grazed by the Hawick Co-op cows, situated behind Wester Braid Road, near the Miller's Knowes. The Co-op employees used to organise an annual sports day and picnic there, as a sort of forerunner to the Vertish Hill Sports – 'The picnic up at the Store Field The whole o' Hawick was there' [AY].

the Store van (thu-stör-vawn) n. van that used to sell grocery items around the town. The vans started as a country delivery service in 1884 and continued into the latter part of the 20th century – ‘... wi' a biscuit in my hand Fresh frae the lang mysterious spicy drawer O' the Store van’ [DH].

Storff Burn (storf-burn) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join Great Warrington Sike, before eventually running into Larriston Burn.

Storff Sike (storf-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on Larriston Fells and is joined by Little Warrington Sike. Note that it dist-tinct from Storff Burn, which lies further south.

storfully (stör-fu-lee) adv., arch. excitably, in an agitated way – ‘... and then if she carries on storfully, as she's amaist shure to do, throw half-a-dozen o' plates or sae doon i' the floor
...’ [HAST1868] (cf. stoor and stour).

Storie (stö-ree) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Chester-house in Rulewater. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Adam (17th/18th C.) knight in Denholm. His children included: Marion (b.1723); Robert (b.1728); and Marion (b.1730). Andrew ‘Dand’ (15th/16th
C.) resident of Newcastile. In 1502 Robert Rule (from the same place) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, with the pair fined for non-appearace at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Ann (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 6 Allars Bank in the mid-1900s.

Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as ‘Cuthbert Storey of Hawicke’ in a presentment where 13 sheep were stolen from him. This is Hawick in Northumberland. David (b.1809/10) born in Morebattle, he was an agricultural labourer.
In 1841 he was at Howcleuchshiel, in 1851 at Clarilaw in Bowden and in 1861 was shepherd at Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He mar-rried Janet Lunn in 1833. Their children included: Margaret (b.1834); Elizabeth (b.1836); Euphemia (b.1839); William (b.1841); Fanny (b.1844); Janet (b.c.1848); Joan (b.c.1849); Mary (b.c.1851); Ellen (b.c.1854); Robina (b.c.1855); and David (b.c.1857). Gideon (18th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, he was recorded at Roughheugh in Wilton in 1735. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1731); and Elspeth (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie (who was surely related). Harry (?–?) Common Riding Song Singer 1950s??–1972. He was ill for a while and Bert Armstrong filled in for a few years, but he returned again as the official singer. Apparently there were some complaints about his over-lecticulating! Helen (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-ai in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for her non-appearace.
She was listed again in 1494/5. Other people who were not entered by the Sheriff were fairly local (but she is one of the only women). James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William.
James (16th C.) servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs and Jean Scott. In 1573 he was placed on their recently purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. However, he was attacked by Walter and John Scott (sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot in Chamberlain Newton), who possessed the other half of the farm. They ‘crewellie set upon him, hurt and woundit him in sindrie partis of his body, and left him for deid; of the quhilkis hurt as yit he is in danger of his lyfe’. It is unknown whether or not he survived.
James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Heath Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He may be the James ‘in Spittle’ whose will was recorded in 1681 (if he made a testament long before he died), or else they were father and son. Either he or a near relative was probably the ‘Laird Storie’ whose lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish were valued at £18 in 1643, 1663 and 1678. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘undermiller att ...’ (probably Newmill) in 1700.
His children included: William (b.1693); Bessie (b.1698); and Anna (b.1700). The witnesses in 1698 were Robert Thomson and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were James Craw and James Dryden, smyth at Newmill. James (d.bef. 1741) from Ancrum Parish. In 1718 he married Jean Ben-et, who was from Bedrule Parish. In 1741 his widow gave money to the poor in Ancrum Parish, owing from her husband. James (d.1797) from Rulewater, he died at Robert Biggar’s Inn in Hawick in 1797. He could be the James who mar-rried Elizabeth Henderson in Bedrule in 1755, and his wife could be the widow of that name who died later the same year in Silver Street. James (18th/19th C.) weaver recorded in Barnhills in 1799. James (19th C.) local man known for his poetry. He competed in the ‘Auld Brig’ competition and published ‘Poems on several subjects’ (1837). He was said to be a repository of local stories relating to the Covenanters. He could be the labourer, born at Southdean in about 1780, who was recorded at about 71 High Street in 1841 and on Brougham Place in 1851. John (15th C.) received a boll of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Johanni Storis’. John (16th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Roods’ on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John was also tenant there and so presumably related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Cavers in Wilton in 1720 and their children included: Christian (b.1723); and John (b.1726). He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1725 and 1732 for William Scott in Newton and in 1735 for Gideon in Roughheugh. Robert (b.1805) joiner at Branxholme Woodfoot. His wife was Betty and their children included Jean, Thomas, Margaret, Robert, Janet and George. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a groom who lived at Falmash. His wife was Janet Middlemas, and already dead by 1861. His children included Helen, George and Robert, and he had a nephew, William Easton. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Thomas Scott in Branxholme and John Scott in Spittal were convicted of a crimes against him. They came ‘across him in villa de spittale Inter aqueduct de dammys’. Thomas (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Roucastle’ in 1632 when his widow Bessie Craik feued lands in Ruecastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe (along with William Armstrong) recorded on the 1684 list of men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is surely descended from the ‘Laird Storie’ who in 1643 owned the same piece of land, which later became part of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He owned part of the old lands of Ruecastle, as recorded in 1788, with value £18 (plus teinds). Probably the same Thomas was recorded paying the Land Tax for part of Ruecastle in 1811. Thomas (b.1793/4) blacksmith in Newcastleton, at about 40 South Hermitage Street. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet, and their children included William, Walter, Helen, Matthew, Nichol and Janet. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1551 as then occupier of an acre of arable land in the lands of Spittal-on-Rule, specifically on ‘lie Harparhill’ (whose location is unknown), which was granted by the Baron of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrernberry. He witnessed the associated notorial instrument and letter of revision, along with 2 men called Alexander ‘Wreth’, one of whom was a miller. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Weynis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. William (17th C.) resident of Denholm. He and his wife Marion Beattie were accused of attending conventicles, probably in about 1684. William (17th C.) listed at Wadesshill among the poor of Southish parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799 (also formerly spelled ‘Storey’, ‘Storrie’, ‘Story’ and ‘Storry’).

Storiesteed (stō-ree-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, listed before Byrehelm, and so presumably somewhere near Castleton. It appears as ‘Storeistead alias Gudelland’, with a value of 5 shillings and tenanted by Christopher Armstrong.

storm (stōrm) v., arch. to beset or cover with snow or otherwise deprive livestock of pasture – ‘The term ‘being stormed’ was originally used to express the want of food suffered by sheep when the ground was covered with snow’ [RB].

storm-staad (stōrm-stawd) adj., arch. delayed because of a storm – ‘Storm-staad (stawd) = starom-stayed; delayed by stormy weather whilst on a journey or errand’ [ECS] (see also staa).

storrey (stō-ree) n. J.B.S. (??-??) writer of the local poem ‘A Sonnet’.

Storrie (stō-ree) n. Arthur B. (19th/20th C.) captain of the Hawick rugby team that beat Gala away in 1893 to take the Border championship.

Stot (sto’), v. to bounce, rebound – ‘wull ee stop stottin yer baa off ma waa’, ‘Item ane stot of twa yeir auld or thairby price 30s’ [SPB1579], ‘...And the star beame stotted out of the way, When it saw the ryders come’ [JTe], ‘The rain hed been fair stottin at Jethart an it wasneh muckle

Stothart (sto-dur’) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1741. David (1773–1841) son of James and Jean Little, he was born in Langholm and was a resident of Deanburnhaugh. He married Christian Jackson, from Canonbie, who died at Doecluch in 1851, aged 70. Their children included: James (1804–60); Christian (1805–82), who probably married William Gledstains; Jane (1807–41), who died at Deanburnhaugh; Joseph (1809–80), a mason at Deanburnhaugh; Henry (1814–90); William (1815–78); David (1819–89), also a mason; Mary (1822–95); and Thomas (1828–95). They are buried at Borthwick Waas. In 1841 his wife and children Jane, Joseph and David were living at Deanburnhaugh. David (1819–89) son of David and Christian Jackson. He was born in Robertson Parish. In 1861 he was a mason living in Ayton. Later the family moved to Hawick, living on North Bridge Street. In 1847 he married Mary Orkney (1825–99), who was from Ayton and died in Hawick. Their children included: David (1848–1921), a joiner; James (1850–1909), who was killed by a train; John (1852–89), who died by suicide; Elizabeth ‘Lizzie’ Pringle (1855–84), who married James Swan Wood and had a daughter Agnes who married revolutionary socialist John Maclean; George (b.1857), George (again, b.1862) and Mary Jane (b.1862), who all died in infancy; Joseph (1864–1933), a saddler and bootmaker; and Mary Alice Jackson (1868–1925), who married James Orr and died of self-inflicted ‘irritant poisoning’. David (b.1851) son of Joseph, he was born at Deanburnhaugh. He worked as a dyker and mason, living in Wilton and Hawick. He is recorded in prison in Jedburgh and Dumfries in 1868, 1869, 1876 and 1881. David Orkney Smith ‘D.O.’ (1900–72) son of Joseph. He was a shopkeeper at 6 High Street, where his father was a saddler and bootmaker. After he took over the shop he branched out into sporting goods, fishing tackle and toys. He took on Len Elliot as a partner and later passed the business to him. He was also involved with local operatic productions. His cousin was Herbert Stothart, Hollywood musical director who won as Oscar for ‘The Wizard of Oz’. James (1850–1909) son of David and Mary Orkney, he was born in Ayton. By the time of the 1881 census he was living in Hawick. He was co-owner of Stothart & Rutherford, bootmakers of Hawick. He was associated with the Total Abstinence Society in Hawick, serving as its President and was politically identified with Socialist causes. He was said to have taken a great interest in the welfare of the youth of the Town. He lived at 8 Orchard Terrace, where his niece Agnes Wood acted as his housekeeper for a few years from about 1901. He was killed by throwing himself in front of a passing express train at Bishopbriggs Station in Lanarkshire. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Janet (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who is recorded in 1725 being added to the poor list and receiving a badge allowing her to go begging. She may have been the Janet born to William and Bessie Elliot in Hawick in 1685. John (19th C.) married Betty Cowan in Castleton Parish in 1837. Joseph (1809–80) born in Langholm, son of David and Christian Jackson. He was a mason at Deanburnhaugh, being recorded there in the 1841 and 1851 censuses (in 1841 with his mother, along with David probably his brother). In 1861 was living at Wilton Dean. He married Janet Hudson in Robertson in 1832 and their children included: Jane (b.1842); Margaret and Adam (b.1844); Christian (b.1847); and David (b.1851), who was a dyker. Joseph (1864–1933) son of David and Mary Orkney. He was a saddler at 6 High Street, taking over in the 1880s from George Davies, who had been saddler there before him. He was also a bootmaker and passed the business on to his son David Orkney. He was involved with the Temperance Society in Hawick. He lived at 15 Lockhart Place. He married Janet Dick Smith (1866–1945) and their children included: David Orkney Smith (1900–72); and James Dunlop (1906–61). The family are buried in Wilton Cemetery (also spelled ‘Stothert’; see also Stoddart).

Stothart’s (sto-ddarts) n. D.O. Stothart, sports goods, fishing tackle and toy shop at 6 High Street through most of the 20th century. The shop was a butcher’s run by George Davies in the mid-19th century. It was then taken over as a saddler’s by James Thomson, then by Robert and Thomas Hall and then by George Davies (junior). Joseph Stothart took over in the 1880s, continuing the saddler’s business and eventually it passed to his son David, who moved out of saddlery into sports equipment, fishing tackle and toys. Len Elliot took over the business in 1971 and it closed for good in 1989, when compulsorily purchased as part of the renovations for the Tower.

stotter (sto-ur) n. something that is an exceptional example of its kind, particularly used of an attractive person – ‘ee’re a wee stotter’.

stotter (sto-ur) v. to stagger, stumble, totter – ‘hei was stotterin hame as yaisual’, ‘...with a sort of nervous excitement which made it stotter’ [HSR], ‘Thaye reel bak-an-forward, an’ stotter stourie (stow-, stoo-ree) adj., poet. dusty – ‘May flowers did bloom, the skies were clear, The roads were dry an’ stourie’ [JoHa], active, restless, excitable (said of a young child) – ‘Cuddle doon ye stoorie loon – Ye wee croodlin’ doo’ [JT] (see also stoorie).

Stouslie (stooz-lee) n. farm and cottages out beyond Stichers, reached by the left hand track at the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The Lindsays held these lands as Barons of Chamberlain Newton from the time of David II (late 14th century). There were Turnbuls here in the late 1400s, when the lands were a Lairdship. John Turnbull from the Bothwick was granted the lands by John, Lord Lindsay, having previously been held by William Lindsay of ‘Garmilton’, and Turnbull resigned them back to Lord Lindsay in 1468. Thomas ‘Trumbul’ of Stouslie was witness to a sasine in 1488. George Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and Walter Turnbull in 1494/5. In 1494/5 Thomas and Adam Grahamslaw from Newton ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 60 sheep from here; these belonged to Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, but were also said to pertain to the King. There were Scots living here in the 1500s. In 1506 ‘Stously and the five merk lands of Grundiston were valued at £5 Scots, in time of peace at six merks, and were held of the Earl of Bothwell as baron of the barony of Chamberlain-newton for one penny blench’. In the 16th century it was still part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, with superior being the Earls of Bothwell and then the Lords of Home. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott in Stowslie’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Bucceuch. In 1643 it was valued at £67 3s 4d, along with Boonraw (‘but disjoined’) and recorded as ‘Stouglie [probably a transcription error for ‘Stoulzie’], or Stouslie, formerly in Hassendean Parish’. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Bucceuch by the end of the 17th century. Mary Gledstains was liferenter of this farm and another (probably Boonraw) in 1643; she was probably widow of George Scott of Boonraw. Archibald Scott was liferenter there in about 1663, when he paid tax on £91 for the land. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Boonraw. John Henderson was living there in 1682. It was leased by George Scott of Boonraw and continued by his heirs in 1692. In 1690 the lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed. David Gray was recorded there in 1694. William Henderson was there in 1706. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scots of Bucceuch, when it consisted of 101 acres, bounded by Boonraw, Heap, Wilton Common and Coldhouse. Thomas Stoddart was there in 1729, William Harkness in 1730, Adam Harkness in 1732 and William Nichol in 1735–37. Francis Stoddart died there in 1738 and Robert Scott in 1750. William Stewart was there in 1770–80. By 1788 it had been disjoined from Boonraw and was valued at £67 3s 4d. William Stewart was recorded there in 1770. The Cala Burn was the western boundary of the farm, with the farmhouse on the burns eastern side. One of the cottages was formerly a school administered by Wilton Parish. The ‘Town Dump is nearby – ‘...His stag-hounds still in the leash are led, As he turns his eye to the StowhOUSElae’ [BCM1880], ‘Owre the fiddle screw!’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Stoslie’, ‘Stouslea’, etc.; the origin of the name is possibly ‘Stuf’s wood’ from the rare Old English personal name ‘Stuf’, plus ‘leah’, a wood, or perhaps from the Old English ‘styybb’, a tree stump; the name first appears as ‘Stowisle’ in about 1390; it is also ‘Stowisle’ in 1468, ‘Stowisle’ in 1488, ‘stowisle’ in 1493 and 1494/5, ‘stowisle’ in 1494/5, ‘stowisle’ in 1502, ‘Stowisle’ in 1525, ‘Stowisle’ in 1551, ‘Stousie’ in 1552, ‘Stowisle’ in 1643 and 1663, ‘Stousie’ in 1678, ‘Stoudley’ in 1692, ‘Stousie’ in 1729, ‘Stousie’ in 1737, ‘stousie’ in 1750 and it is still ‘Stousie’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Stously’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Stowlsee’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey).

Stripshelden (strip-sheel-din) n. lands recorded in about 1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale. They were associated with the estate of Mangerton, recorded as ‘Strypscheden’ and valued at 23 shillings. On the 1541 rental roll it is ‘Schiperscheden’, when it is valued at 20 shillings and tenanted by Henry and David Nixon. It is transcribed as ‘Sheipshelden’ in 1632 when possessed by Robert Pringle; it may have been part of the lands of the Lairds of Dinlabyre. William Elliot was tenant there in 1694. It is marked ‘Stapshelden’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, on the east side of the Liddel Water from Riccarton, and marked ‘Shipshelden’ on Stobie’s 1770 map. It is ‘Sheldon’ on the 1841 census. On the 1863 Ordnance Survey map it is marked near the head of the Shileden Sike, which is south of Burnmouth farm (it is ‘Sheipshelden’ in 1694).

Struthers (stru-thurz) n. Alan (14th C.) from the Northumberland family, he became Lord of Lyham through marriage. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1368. The lands he held included the Hawick in Northumberland. In about 1370 he was ‘Alano de le Strother’ when he witnessed a grant by John Neville of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. His children included Alan (contemporary of Chaucer at Cambridge), Henry, William (married a daughter of the Mayor of Newcastle) and Joan. Sir Thomas (d.1395) probably son of Henry, who was Sheriff of Northumberland. He was likely to be the Sir Thomas ‘of Strother’ whose charters are included in the collection of David Laing (although that does not match with a death in 1395). He was appointed custodian of Jedburgh Castle in 1394. He was reputedly an English champion, who was marauding around the Scottish Borders, bragging that he would take on any Scotsman. The challenge was met by Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) at Rulehaugh, witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland.

Struthers was killed in single combat it is said. Other accounts describe how Inglis’ force had attempted to breach the Castle walls and after being repelled when the English soldiers returned from the town, he challenged Inglis to single combat for breaking the truce (also written ‘Strother’ etc.).

Strynds (strindz) n. former lands in the Rule valley, near Westerhouses, later known as ‘Strange’. This was home of a prominent branch of the Oliver family in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. Robert Oliver from there, along with 7 other Olivers and a Shiel, had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. Several members of the same family had remission for thefts and other crimes in 1502 in a number of cases. Later in 1502 4 Olivers from here were all found guilty of rieving crimes and probably hanged. This branch was said to never have been heard of again, although it was supposedly related to the later Olivers of Lustruther. The lands were valued along with Westerhouses at £6 5s, according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 (and the comptroller was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for that year), as well as 1539. Edward Oliver was there in 1541, when the rent was 15 shillings. There were still Olivers there in the late 17th century (also ‘the Strynds’; it is written ‘le Stryndis’ in 1494/5, ‘Stryndis’ and ‘Stryndes’ in 1502,
St. Stephen’s Chaipel

the Subscription Academy (θυ-sub-skrip-shin-aw-ka-du-née) n. another name for Hawick Academy. There was a school run out of the Subscription Rooms from about 1830, sometimes referred to as the Subscription School. It was renamed ‘the Subscription Academy’ in 1857 when J.A.H. Murray was invited to be headmaster (at age 17!). Not long after the school moved along Buccleuch Street to the former Quaker meeting house, and was then called ‘Hawick Academy’. It ran until 1865, after Murray had left for London. The ‘Subscription School’ meanwhile carried on with James C. Mudie as headmaster. Sometimes called ‘Hawick High School’, this ran until about 1874, when Mudie left town. Meanwhile Mudie’s assistant, James Brand, had left to start his own school in Union Street, which eventually became the senior part of the High School (the confusion and interconnection between the several Buccleuch Street schools makes some accounts very muddled!).

the Subscription Rooms (θυ-sub-skrip-shin-roomz) n. building erected on Buccleuch Street in 1821 from public subscriptions, and used as an institute for the arts, as a library and as a public meeting place. The location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. The foundation stone was laid with full Masonic honours, with a speech by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson and a special verse by James Ruickbie. For the next few decades it was a popular venue for lectures, ‘magic lantern’ shows, concerts and related social gatherings. It was also used as the location for a private Academy, taught by Mr. Mr. Mudie, who used it to run his private school, called ‘Hawick High School’, which was later taught by Mr. Brand, who moved to Union Street. It was also used for a while as the premises for the ‘West-end Academy’, taught by Mr. Brodie. In the 1890s it was purchased by James Bonsor’s hosiery mill which used it until the 1920s. It was then purchased by the Catholic church and converted (largely through voluntary work) to become the Halls for S.S. Mary & David’s Chapel next door. Until only a few years ago it had a frontage ornamented with a portico supported by 4 Grecian pillars. It was renovated in the early years of the 21st century and saw temporary use again as a school in 2006, housing pupils following the fire in Denholm – ‘This house a public building is design’d To gratify the curious mind; Subservient to the parson and the player, By turns a theatre, and a house of prayer’ [JR].

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. former farmstead on the Sundhope Burn, above Whitropefoot. It was valued at £8 merks according to a rental roll of c.1376 and still 8 merks on the 1541 roll, when ‘Leoni Elwald’ and his brothers were tenants. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least 1613. Robert ‘Houiton’ and Adam ‘Houitone’ are listed there in 1694, as well as George Nichol. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 1654 acres, bounded by Stitchelhill, Millburnholm and lands held by the Laird of Gorrenberry and others. At that time the farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branxholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. John Anderson was farmer there in 1785. James Jackson was shepherd there in 1797, James Elliot in the early 1800s, Walter Anderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alva in 1802, when valued at about £500 (including Hollandrig and ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’). There are waterfalls on the burn there. 5 flints found nearby are in Hawick Museum. North of the farmstead, towards Sundhope Rig, there is a linear earthwork, about 130 m long – ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH] (it first appears as ‘Sondhayp’ in c.1376, is ‘Sondhope’ in 1510, ‘Sandhop’ in 1516, ‘Soundhop’ in 1541 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1613; the stream is marked ‘Soundhoup’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and the farm is ‘Sandhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, where the burn of the same name meets the Yarrow from the south, just to the west of Yarrow Feus. It was a Crown property from about 1456, with the lease to the Laird of Almoor being given up in 1488, when it was let to ‘Robert domino Lile’ in 1488. Then it was let half to William Murray and half to Roger Murray from at least 1490 until 1499. In 1493 Alexander, brother of Robert Scott of Whames, was accused of stealing livestock from there, and John Waugh also stole a large number of sheep from the Murrays. In 1494/5 Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme) was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1512 it was feued to Gavin Murray. In 1541 William Scott was tenant there, paying £14, while William and James Murray also appear to have occupied it, paying £24. William Scott was tenant there in the first half of the 18th century. There were Andersons and Laidlaws there in the 19th century.
Sundi Schuil

It was said to be the site of the slaying of Scott of Harden’s younger son, Scott of Gilmanscleuch – ‘But, low, low down, on Sundhop broom, My brother Harden spyd; And, with a stern and furious look, He up to him did ride’ [ES]; ‘Ere all is done, our blood may soak Our Scottish houms, and leave a stain – A stain like that on Sundup’s cloak, Which never will wash out again’ [ES] (it is ‘Sundhop’ in 1456 and 1468, ‘Sondhoip’ in 1490, ‘Sundhop’ in 1496, ‘Sondhop’ and ‘Sondhoip’ in 1499 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1541).

Sundhope Burn (sun-dup-burn) n. stream in Castleton Parish. It rises on Sundhope Rig and Greatmoor and flows roughly southwards to join the Whitrope Burn near Whitropefoot.

Sundhope Faas (sun-dup-fawz) n. waterfall on the Sundhope Burn, near where it meets the Whitrope Burn on the Newcastleton road, about 12 miles south of Hawick. It has been a favourite picnic spot. It is also known as the Laird’s Linn.

Sundi (sun-di) n. Sunday. Formerly there were strict rules about what behaviour was deemed suitable for the Sabbath. Work of any sort was banned, and there are fines frequently recorded in the parish records for transactions such as pulling vegetables. Certainly non-attendance at church was considered disreputable until fairly recent times, and regular non-attendance was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was considered an offence (also spelled ‘Sundih’ etc.).

sundials (sun-di-ulz) n., pl. devices that use the shadow of a gnomon, cast by the Sun, to tell the time of day. These were common ornamentation on buildings or in gardens around the 17th and 18th centuries. The Museum has 3 local specimens, which have been saved from demolitions, labelled: ‘17 WK 48’; ‘1823’, from Dickson Street; and ‘BC BT 1756’. There was also one from Francis Gledstains of Whittle, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Lilliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mens) n., arch. ‘ti gie yin’s claes Sundi-mense’ is to attend church in one’s new clothes on the first Sunday after one gets them (also kirk-mense).

Sundi Schuil (sun-di-skil) n. Sunday School, i.e. religious instruction for school children taking place on Sundays. Hawick already had 2 such institutions in 1786 and was among the first to establish them in Scotland. The first was probably introduced by Rev. Charters of Wilton, followed shortly afterwards by Rev. Sharp of Hawick (however, it is sometimes also stated that William Crawford of Wilton introduced the first Sunday School in the 1730s). Around 1817 the town became well-known in the Borders for very popular Sunday Schools, which had been set up by Rev. James Henderson of the East-End Burgher congregation. David Russell of the Relief Kirk also set one up at about the same time. These early examples often lasted for many hours, but were about the only chance to learn reading, which many local children benefited from. Henderson’s Sunday School is sometimes said to have been the first in Scotland, and although this is clearly not correct, it may have been an early example of an ambitious educational programme on Sundays (rather than a shorter event aimed at children). Sunday Schools have continued in most of the town’s churches down to the present time – ‘Sunday Schule picnics then Horse and cairt ti Harden Glen . . . ’ [IWL].

sung (sung) adj., pp., arch. singed – ‘. . . Brunt brouw in the sun and near sung’ [WL].

Sun Hope (sun-hop) n. small stream that rises on Sunhope Hass, Bye Hill and Little Tudhope Hill on the Roxburghshire border with Dumfriesshire and forms some of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

Sunlaws (sun-lawz) n. settlement on the Teviot south of Kelso, containing the Jacobean-style mansion called Sunlaws House Hotel (or Roxburgh House Hotel), with adjacent golf course, an abandoned Mill and nearby caves. As part of the English invasion of 1544 there was ‘a town called Synlawes, whereat divers bastel houses were destroyed, eight Scots taken, and 60 oxen brought away’, with at least 6 men killed in attempting to pursue the raiders. The estate of Sunlaws was home of the Kerrs of Chatto and Sunlaws. The house burned down in 1720 (the origin is probably ‘the look-out hill’; it is ‘Sunlaes’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

sunlicht (sun-light) n., arch. sunlight – ‘Sunlicht at last, and the dancin’ day, and a quick eyed lass to see’ [JYH], ‘Oh, laddie! when sunlicht at last, and the dancin’ day, and a quick rowth o’ callants in her train And sunlicht in her hair’ [WL].

Sunnybank (su-nee-bawngk) n. cottage in Wilton Parish, just north of Tandlaw. Walter Blake, thatcher, lived there in 1841, as well as farm worker Richard Turnbull and his family.
Walter Scott was there in at least 1835–41, Henry Paterson in 1851 and William Scott in 1861.

Sunnyfield (su-nee-feed) n. bungalow on Sunnyhill Road, built in 1955.

Sunnyhill (su-nee-hil) n. area between Wilton and the Dean, consisting of Sunnyhill Road and surrounding region, containing mainly larger houses. The name was earlier also applied to the Rosalice Brae area. It was named apparently for its aspect with respect to the Sun. The area was feued in the latter part of the 19th century under the supervision of John Guthrie. Langlands was the first house about 1878, followed quickly by Deanfield, Kilmeny and Westwood – ‘Here the tree-clad slopes rise upward From the water’s sparkling rill, Where Clematis and Laburnum deck the homes on Sunnyhill’ [WL], ‘…in the days afore the nouveau riche manufacturers became upwardly mobile in mair ways than yin and built their mansions on Sunnyhill’ [IWL].

Sutherland (su-thur-lind) n. Alexander (b.1798) stockmaking in Wilton Dean, son of Mark. In 1841 he was living on Burn Row and by 1851 his widow was there with 2 of their children. He married Mary Kerr in 1814 and their children included: Mark (b.1814); Margaret (b.1816); Ann (b.1818); James (b.1821); Janet; Helen; Isabella; Mary; and Walter. Alexander (b.1850) son of Walter, he worked in the hosiery industry. The family lived at Maxwell Street, Wellinton Street, Myreslawgreen and Beaconsfield Terrace. In 1900 he became proprietor of the Imperial Hotel on Oliver Place. He married his cousin Isabella Riddell in 1880 and their children included: James (or ‘Jimmy’), who was Cornet in 1901; Isabella (b.1881); Mary; Thomas; Alexander; Walter (1890–1918), Hawick and Scotland rugby player; and John (1892–93), who died of whooping cough. He may be the Alexander, married to Janet Maben, whose daughter Christina was born in Wilton in 1891. David (19th/20th C.) married Jane Murray. Their children, born in Hawick, included: David (b.1891). Donald (19th C.) married Agnes Marshall in Wilton Parish in 1867. George (19th C.) married Sarah Laird. Their children, born in Hawick, included: James (b.1874). Rev. George (20th C.) minister of St. Andrew’s Kirk 1930–40. James ‘Jimmy’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander and brother of rugby player Walter. He was Cornet in 1901. He led his supporters on the first ride-out to Moss paul and J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father. James (b.1820/1) frameworker in the Dean, son of Alexander. In 1841 he was living on Burn Row, in 1851 at No. 6 there and in 1861 probably in the same place. He married Isabella Cairns in 1845 and their children included Isabella, Mary, Jessie, Alexander and Helen (b.1857). John (19th C.) married Isabella Simpson in Hawick in 1864. Mark (18th C.) stockmaking in Hawick. He married Margaret Flemington and their children included: Margaret (b.1787); Joanna (b.1789); Ann (b.1793); and Alexander (b.1798). The witnesses in 1787 were shoemaker Robert Elliot and workman Thomas Thomson and in 1789 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and farmer William Scott. Probably the same Mark married Janet Crow in Hawick in 1800. Norman J. (b.c.1890) son of Galashiels monumental mason George P. He ran the Hawick office of the family firm, with premises on Bridge Street. He was District Commissioner of the Boy Scouts. In his honour the local Scouts pipe band adopted the Sutherland tartan in 1953. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Pratt. Their son David was born in Wilton in 1881. Rory (1992– ) born in Melrose, he was educated at Trinity and the High School. He represented the Borders and Scotland in the back row of youth teams, but switched to playing loose-head prop with Hawick R.F.C. Afterwards he played for Biggar and Gala and then professionally for Edinburgh from 2014. He was first capped for Scotland in 2016 and was named to the British Lions squad in 2021. Walter Kerr (1838/9–1902) born in Wilton, son of Alexander, he worked in the hosiery trade. In 1861 he was a ‘Finisher of Hosiery’ at 12 Back Row. He was also listed as a warehouseman and frame knitter. He married Ann, daughter of Thomas Scott and Ademine Bellom, and she died in 1902. Their children included: Alexander (b.1859); Adelina (or ‘Adeline’, 1861–1919); Thomas Scott (b.1863); Elizabeth Fiddes (b.1865), who married John Scott in 1888; Mary (b.1865); James (b.1871); Adam (b.1873); Ann Scott (b.1875); and Helen Leithead (b.1878). Walter Riddell ‘Wattie’ or ‘Suddie’ (1890–1918) youngest son of Alexander and Isabella of the Imperial Hotel. He was educated at Teviot Grove Academy. He was a member of the Teviotdale Harriers, being Border Champion over 100 and 220 yards, and was part of the team that won the 1 mile relay at the Common Riding Games of 1910. He also won the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association 220 yards title and represented Scotland. He played wing for Hawick R.F.C. from the age of 17, his first game being against Gala. He excelled at Sevens, being part of the 1912 team that won all 5 Border tournaments. He went on to become Captain of Hawick. He played for Scotland from the age of 18, his first cap being Willie Kyle’s last, and went on to be capped 13 times. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the Lothian and Border Horse, transferring to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and later to the Seaforth Highlanders, where he became 2nd Lieutenant. He was killed by a stray shell in October 1918, in the last days of the War. Afterwards his position on the Scotland team was taken by Eric Liddle – ‘...Or swerve like a Sutherland down the line to a rattling Mansfield score’ [JYH] (also formerly ‘Southerland’).

suthfastnes (suth-fast-nis) n., arch. truth, true state of affairs – ‘For that yt ys neidfull and merytabelle to ber wytnes to the suthfastnes ...’ [SB1431].

Sutter (su'-ur) n. William (17th/18th C.) ‘packeman traveller’ recorded in Hawick in 1707. He was rebuked for being in the house of Richard Lethem at the time of Sunday serice, ‘with one pair of leather breaches and some harness under his oukster’.

Suttie (su-tee, su’ee) n. Dr. Alastair (1938–2001) born in Enniskillen, he grew up in Moray, where his father was a vet. He qualified in Medicine at Aberdeen University in 1961. He came to Hawick after holding various posts in the north of Scotland. He joined Bill Cameron as a general practitioner in 1964, and remained in practice in Hawick until he retired in 1998. During that time he ran a training practice, and helped to develop the Health Centre. He wrote the ‘History of Haig Maternity Hospital’ (1999) and made a photographic study of bridges over the Teviot. Married to Gillian, their daughter Alison worked for the Liberal Democratic Party. Alison Mary (1968– ) daughter of Dr. Alastair, she attended Hawick High School, and then read French and Russian at Heriot-Watt University. After graduation she worked in Russia and then for the European Parliament. In the period 2006–10 she was Head of the Liberal Democrat Leader’s Office and was the party’s Campaign Manager in 2010, as well as being coordinator of their negotiating team after the 2010 election results produced a hung parliament. She then became a Special Adviser to Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg. In 2013 she was created a life peer as Baroness Suttie of Hawick. Euphemia see Eppy Sootie.

Swamp Field (swawmp-feed) n. name for the field on the Common just to the south of the racecourse.

Swan (swawn) n. Elizabeth ’Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as merchant among those contributing to the new Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She was also on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ’eist the water’ in 1694. She seems likely to have been a shopkeeper (or similar) on the High Street. She could be the daughter of George and Margaret Bridges born in Hawick in 1642 or the daughter of Mungo and Helen Bridges born in 1672. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Margaret Bridges. Their son John was born in 1643. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Rebecca Scott. Their children included: Jean (b.1735); John (b.1737); and Rebecca (b.1741), who was the 2nd wife of Bailie John Hardie. The witnesses in 1737 were merchant James Sanderson and writer Thomas Watson and in 1741 were Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tudhope. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 for weaver John Thorburn, in 1764 for John Hardie and his daughter Rebecca and in 1768 for mason William Ekon and Betty Dobie. He could be the George Swan who witnessed a baptism for Francis Cairns in 1783. Is-abel (b.c.1760) listed as a shopkeeper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. By 1841 she was a pauper, living around Eastgate. James (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant at 29 (later 27) High Street. He emigrated with his family to Detroit, where his son Andrew was involved with the Detroit Gas Company and his son James was a successful lawyer. John (16th C.) listed in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He may have been related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott. Their children born in Hawick Parish included: Jane (b.1676); Mungo (b.1682); and Helen (b.1685). In 1676 he was listed being ‘in Cavers’ (suggesting he lived in the Teviothead area perhaps), with witnesses William and Mungo (who were surely close relatives). He may be the same as John ‘Elder’. John (17th C.) listed as ‘Elder’ in 1694 among those ‘uest the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. The younger John was also listed, suggesting that they were father and son. The pair were also weavers ‘younger’ and ‘elder’ recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was ‘elder’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly. John ‘Nuckle’ (18th C.) Hawick weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must have been separate from the elder and younger weavers who were also listed. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the Hawick weavers. In 1697 there was a case before the Magistrates dealing with Robert Tinlin, a young weaver, who had insulted him publicly, and refused to pay a fine imposed by the incorporation of weavers. He was still quartermaster in 1716 (along with the same Robert Tinlin) when he and other complained about people who were not part of the incorporated trades taking their seats in St. Mary’s Kirk. He may be the ‘John Suan younger’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax and the ‘younger’ weaver listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the John who (along with Mungo) witnessed a baptism for weaver William in 1700. He was probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for gardener Robert Roger in 1701, workman Archibald Elliot and shoemaker William Halliwell in 1704, and shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1725. He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill. He is probably one of the 2 John Swans who in 1709 witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘att ye port’. He was one of the ‘two John Swans’ (possibly ‘Black John’ and ‘White John’ or father and son) who was a Hawick elder recorded as one of the men asked in 1711 to ‘perlustrate’ the town to look for people still drinking after 8 ‘clock at night. In 1718 he (or the other John) was among those charged by the Session with trying to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham. There was a John Swan whose son John was born in Hawick in 1693 and another in 1696. John ‘Black John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, with a nickname to distinguish him from ‘White John’. One of them was probably the quartermaster of the weavers. He married Elspeth Clerk and their children included: Mary (b.1700); George (b.1702); Mary (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); and Elspeth (b.1707). In 1700 and 1704 he was entered in the baptismal register as ‘distinctionis causa called black John’. The witnesses in 1700 were weaver John Lunn and James Scott Laird’, in 1704 were James Scott Doctor and John Scott Laird’, in 1706 were Andrew Clerk and another John Swan, and in 1707 were weaver James Lunn and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the John who was witness for a baptism for John Lunn in 1705. John ‘White John’ (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1701 he is recorded being ‘distinctionis cuasa called white John’. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for a different John in 1706. He married Janet Allan and their children included: Mungo (b.1701); and Mary (b.1703). This suggests that he may have been son of Mungo. The witnesses in 1701 were Mungo (perhaps his brother) and weaver Thomas Turnbull (possibly his brother-in-law). Other children of either this or the other John are: William (b.1692); John (b.1693); Jean (b.1695); John (again, b.1696); and Janet (b.1706). Mungo (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Briggs, who was probably daughter of William and Bessie Brown. In 1665 (although this date may an error, e.g. for 1685) his son-in-law, Thomas Turnbull, was accused of throwing his wife (Helen) down some stairs when she attempted to visit her sick daughter. The families are probably inter-related through George and Margaret ‘Bridges’ who are recorded having children in the 1640s. His children included: Helen (b.1657); and Bessie (b.1672). He is probably the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for John (who could have been his brother) in 1676 and 1680 2 others (along with William, who was surely therefore also related) for William Bridges. It seems likely he was father of ‘White John’. Mungo (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Jean Briggs in 1702. Their children included Jean (b.1702). Other probably children, with no mother’s name given are Thomas (b.1705), William (b.1708) and Mungo (b.1710). The witnesses in 1708 were Michael Bridges and James Scott, Laird. His wife probably secondly married weaver Robert Wight in 1715, suggesting he was deceased by then. He is probably the Mungo who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for weaver William in 1700, (along with Thomas Turnbull) for weaver John Lunn in 1701, for James Beattie in 1704 and for Town Herd William Palmer in 1707. Richard (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1483 relating to lands in Hassendean, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He was also a witness in 1484 to a sasine relating to lands in the town of Hawick. William (d.bef. 1694) weaver in Hawick. In 1689 he witnessed baptisms for fellow weavers William Brown and James Lunn. His widow ‘Joan Bennet’ was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the William recorded as ‘Wm Suan Elder’ in the 1694 list (but likely drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier) among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the William, son of George and Margaret Bridges who was born in Hawick in 1635. He married Helen (or Jane) Bennet, and their children included: Thomas (b.1669); George (b.1672); Margaret (b.1673); Mungo (b.1677); Jane (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Purdom and William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Bridges and Andrew Dodd in 1673, Thomas Lunn in 1675, John in Cavers in 1676 (with Mungo being the other witness, suggesting that all 3 were closely related), Patrick Bridges, William Bridges (along with Mungo again), Francis Scott plus Isobel Bridges in 1678 and Andrew Jardine in 1684. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for William Bridges (again), Francis Scott, James Lunn, John Scott (of Cavers) and Margaret Scott and Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges. He may also be the William who (along with Patrick Bridges) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for Adam Lamb. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Suan, younger’ in 1687 among a group of men fined for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He could be the same as the weaver of the same name. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must be different from the William whose widow is also recorded on the same list, but could be their son. He may be the William who married Margaret Paisley and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1692), Walter (b.1698), Agnes (b.1700), William (again, b.1703) and Mungo (b.1706); the witnesses in 1696 were Henry Orrock and John Hart and in 1700 were weavers John and Mungo Swan. He is probably the William who witnessed baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1698, for weaver James Jolly (along with John, perhaps his brother) in 1700 and for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill (also along with John). He is probably the weaver of that name who was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in the records of the Presbytery of Melrose in 1726 when Christian Bunzie confessed that she had ‘seen him playing at the kails in her father’s garden’. He was a single, unmarried man, land-lord of the house wherein Henry Gibson’s relict lives’. His name is written ‘Swain’ and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683 or the William born in Hawick to another William in 1703. Perhaps the same William married Jean Stewart and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1731, with witnesses John Elliot and John Scott. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. His wife was Janet Swan and their children included Jean (b.1806) and Samuel (b.1808), baptised at Liddelbank (written ‘Suan’, ‘Suane’, ‘Swane’ and variants).

the Swan (thu-swawn) n. former hostelry on Main Street in Denholm. It is recorded in 1852, when Thomas Field was proprietor. A meeting of 100 Total Abstinence supporters took place there the same year ‘in Mr. Field’s large room’.

swank (swangk) adj., arch. agile, lithe, smart, well set-up – ‘...But when he swang the tawse I didna craw sae prood!’ [WL].

the Swan Inn (thu-swawn-in) n. former public house on the Howegate, when??.

swang (swang) pp. swung – ‘...But when he swang the tawse I didna craw sae prood!’ [WL].
Swansheil (swan-sheel) n. farm just to the west of Hob Kirk, situated on the north side of the Blackhall Burn. The farmhouse now called Nether Swansheil. The lands were formerly split into Easter and Wester Swansheils, which were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were valued at £1 6s. 8d. The Abbey’s tenants were Robert Turnbull as tenant in 1567 and James Turnbull in 1580. In 1643 Adam Turnbull ‘of Swansheil’ owned land valued at £66 13s 4d, and another (or the same) Adam Turnbull ‘of Swansheil’ had lands valued at £32 10s. In 1678 the Easter and Wester parts were valued at £66 13s 4d and £33 6s 8d, respectively. The lands (or perhaps just superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. James Turnbull was portioner there in 1684. Wester Swansheil was owned (along with Hartshaugh earlier) by the same branch of the Turnbull family for about 300 years until 1778. John Donaldson was tenant in 1797. Earthworks from some ancient settlement were still visible a century ago.

Swansheil Cleuch (swan-sheel-klooch) n. name for the steep lower section of the Blackhall Burn, to the south-west of Hob Kirk Manse.

Swanson (swan-sin) n. Andrew (16th C.) ploughman at Riddell. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. James (18th C.) said to be from Wilton Dean, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784. He is recorded there in 1785, working for Michael Stevenson, and named again in 1788. In 1790 he was working as a ‘drawer’ for vintner Robert Armstrong and was recorded as a waiter for Robert Armstrong in 1797. He was apparently very familiar with the customers of the hotel, of all ranks. One of his favourite phrases was ‘Stick by cauld whisky, but never drink toddy, when ye’re gaun a journey’. It is said that he was at some point dismissed by Armstrong, but reappointed after the Duke of Buccleuch interceded on his behalf. He had several children including: James, who became a ship’s surgeon; and a daughter, who married weaver Tom Lunn. His wife Jean died in 1795. James (1779/80–1803) son of James, who was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was apprenticed to Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick. In 1797 he was experimenting with concoctions and left a bowl on the window-sill, which was drunk by his niece, who unfortunately died. He left Hawick in 1798 to be a surgeon on a slave ship, sailing on 3 voyages. In 1802 or 1803 he was given command of ‘the Prudence’, which sailed to the Upper Guinea coast, returning to Liverpool with half his crew, a number of slaves, and also Tom Jenkins, who he brought to Hawick after a few weeks. It is said that attempts by the young African to say his (Swanson’s) name sounded to the sailors like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then what they called him. He died in the Tower Hotel a few days after returning to Hawick, perhaps either from a lingering disease or from delirium tremens. He died at the age of 23 (coincidentally the day before Sir Walter Scott and the Wordsworths stayed in the Tower Hotel). He left behind an illegitimate son, who is probably the James, born to James and Betty Cairns in Hawick in 1797 (she may have been the Betty born in Wilton to Thomas Cairns in 1779). Note that a version of his life is told as part of the novel ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’; this fictionalised accounts bears only passing resemblance to reality, but perhaps...

the part about him being found wandering round and round in a field and then collapsing may be true. James (1797–1856) son of James and Betty Cairns. His father trained as a surgeon and became Captain of a slaving ship, returning to Hawick with Tom Jenkins, but promptly dying. He and Tom were raised by his father’s sister and her husband Tom Lunn, who lived at Shuttlehaa in Teviothead. He must therefore have been the closest thing that Jenkins had to a brother. He worked as a shepherd for James Scott of Allanshaw and then moved to Salisbury Craig in Edinburgh. He is recorded as a shepherd at Queen’s Park in 1841 and on St. Leonard’s St., Edinburgh in 1851. In May 1820 he married Sophia Glendinning (c.1802–70), the marriage being recorded in both Cavers and Ettrick Parishes; it is tempting to imagine that Tom Jenkins attended this wedding on his last trip back to Scotland before he left Britain for good. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); John (b.c.1827); Sophia (b.c.1829), who married Andrew Gunn in Edinburgh in 1851; Mary (b.c.1830), who probably had a child Sophia in 1862; Christina (b.c.1832), who probably died young; Walter (b.1833), who married Barbara Kay; Isabella (b.1835), who married James Reekie; and Adam (b.1837), who married Isabella Barrie. Their last 4 children were baptised in Cannongate Parish. He died in Carnegie Street Edinburgh. William (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter (probably after being captured at Bothwell Bridge), and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys which killed about 200 men. Most of the survivors were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica and New Jersey. William (b.c.1780) recorded as miller of Doveshaugh Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census he was miller at Bedrule Mill. William (19th C.) recorded as labourer at Dovemount in 1835 (also formerly written ‘Swanston’, ‘Swanstone’, ‘Swanseastown’, etc.).

Swansteed Hill (swan-steed-hil) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, in the headwaters of the Teindside Burn, north-west of the steading of Slaidhills. It reaches a height of 333 m.

1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time they were valued at £4 6s 8d. In 1557 Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst complained to the Queen that a force led by the Laird of Bedrule had terrorised the tenant, Adam Kirkton; this was presumably part of land dispute. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £400 (along with Old Jedburgh and ‘Standalane’); the Earl of Lothian owned the teinds. There were 10 separate households listed there on the Heath-

Tax Rolls of 1694. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788. John Goodfellow was there in 1797. Richard Davidson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There was formerly a toll-bar there. In about 1833 a horn was found here, containing silver coins from the reign of James I of Scotland and around 1845 a set of 300–400 silver coins were ploughed up on the farm, these being from the reigns of Henry VIII and Queen Mary. There is a linear earthwork to the west of the farm, which runs about a mile and is probably an old agricultural boundary (also written ‘Swinney’ and ‘Swynny’, it is ‘Swynny’ in Swinsteid (swi-née-moor) n. moorland area between Bonchester and Jedburgh, around the B6357, near the hamlet of Swinnie and Swinnee Plantation. An area called Swinnie Dyke Nook was once the supposed haunting ground of a 'bogle' (the origin of the name is possibly from Old Norse 'svithningr', meaning 'the place cleared by burning' and first occurs as 'Swylmy' in 1528).

Swinnie Moor (swi-nee-moor) n. moorland south of Oxnam village, the area once being the seat of the Kers of Swinside. In 1468 Patrick and William Douglas were tenants there. Brothers Adam, Robert, Henry, Simon and George Douglas were recorded there in 1502, as well as separately brothers James, Adam and 2 Johns. Andrew Rutherford had sasine for these lands in 1506. In 1579/80 and 1586/7 George Johns. Andrew Rutherford had sasine for these lands in 1675. The Hearth Tax records list 13 householders on the estate in 1694. Alexander Lindsay paid tax on 31 windows there in 1748, while William Elliot paid tax for 10 windows. John Smith was there in 1797 (it is probably 'Swinsteins' in 1574, 'Swinteis' in 1576, 'Swynsteids' in 1581, 'Swynsteid' in 1610, 'Over and Nether Swynsteid' in 1657, 'Swynsteide Ovir et Nethir' in 1670 and 'Over and Nether Swynstead' in 1681).

Swinstead (swi-in, swi-tin) n. village in Berwickshire on the Leet Water, set out around the green with its 18th century cross. It is the original home of the Swinton family, who claim the oldest charters of any family in Scotland. Swinton House was built around 1800 to replace an earlier house destroyed by fire and also has a tower-shaped dovecote, still occupied by pigeons. The surrounding Parish absorbed the parish of Simprin in 1761, where Thomas Boston was minister. The Wheatsheaf Hotel has won awards for its restaurant.

Swinton (swi-in, swi-tin) n. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Margaret Douglas, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Isabella (b.1823); Thomas (b.1825); Anne (b.1829); John (b.1832); Charles (b.1835); James (b.1839); and William (b.1839). John (1832–c.1913) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. He also helped secure a Cornet in 1856, when the man elected by the Council refused to accept. He celebrated the Common Riding along with other exiles in 1858 in Galt, Canada. He also acted as starter for the Common Riding Races. He remained on the Ceremonial Committee from 1887–95. In 1861 he married Elizabeth ('Betsy') Scott. Their children included Charles, Margaret, Ann and Elizabeth. Marion (18th C.) housemaid at Woll in 1791, when she was working for Charles Scott.

Swinto’s (swi-inz) n. James Swinton & Co., Hawick-based building contractors, with premises in Noble Place.

\textbf{swoof} (\textit{swroof}) \textit{v., poet.} to swoosh, make a whiswing sound – ‘…when they heard sitch a swoofing an’ skraiking i’ the firmament’ \cite{JTe}.

\textbf{Sword} (\textit{sord}) \textit{n.} Andrew (17th C.) Hawick’s first schoolmaster on record, according to deeds of about 1592 and also in 1616. Perhaps the same Andrew was also Hawick’s second recorded Town Clerk, from about 1620 until some time in the 1630s. He was also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1627 (for the Hawick Parish valuation). \textbf{James} (1786/7–bef. 1861) born in Stichill Parish, he was a master carpenter at Brieryshaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and they had children Jessie, James and Helen. His wife was a widow and ‘Fund Holder’ in 1861. \textbf{John} (17th C.) witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. It seems likely he was closely related to Andrew, who was notary for the document. \textbf{John} (18th/19th C.) resident of Hazelhaugh in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. \textbf{John} (b.c.1779) shepherd from Selkirkshire. He he was living at Ettrick House in 1841 and 1851. In 1801 at Gamescleuch he married Janet, daughter of Walter Lunn and Betty Turnbull, who lived at Colterscleuch. His children were born at Eilrig, Nether Dalgleish and Ettrick House. In 1861 his widow was living with their daughter Margaret Anderson at Easter Alemoor, where she died a year later. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1802–82), who married Adam Beattie, and died in Annan, Ontario; John (1807–79), who married Jean Colthard and died at Easter Alemoor; Margaret (b.1804), who married James Anderson, farmer at Easter Alemoor; Walter (b.1810), who married Bella Hislop; James (b.1812), who married Helen Rieve; Janet (1813–19); William (b.1814), who married Isabella Hardie; and Robert (1821–84), who married Margaret Nichol and died in Annan, Ontario. \textbf{Thomas} (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1743 as ‘Officer’, meaning that he was either Burgh Officer or Kirk Officer (probably the former). He was paid one shilling for guiding a troop of dragoons from Hawick to Langholm in 1740. He is also recorded in the Kirk Session records being paid ‘for sumnonding the Parish’ about the same time. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman William Noble. Probably the same Thomas is recorded in 1756 when the Council paid 1 shilling for his ‘sentence money’. He is probably the Thomas, married to Margaret Brown, whose children included John (b.1737) and Thomas (b.1739). Thomas (b.1813/4) born in Southdean Parish, he was shepherd at Tythehouse in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included John and David B.D. (also spelled ‘Sowrd’ and ‘Sword’).

Sym (sim) n. Rev. Arthur Pollok (1862–1946) born in Greenbank, near Edinburgh, son of William and Mary Thomson Pitcairn. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1881 and his B.D. in 1884. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that same year and became assistant minister at St. George’s Parish in Edinburgh. He was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1888. In the period 1895–99 he was examiner for degrees at Edinburgh University. He was Secretary of the Ministers’ Pension Fund Committee in 1907 and Clerk of the Presbytery in 1916. In 1900 he married Caroline Georgina, daughter of William Simson of the Bank of Scotland, and she died in 1938. He was awarded a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1924. He demitted his charge at Lilliesleaf in 1928. He was also Convenor of the Committee on Admissions of Ministers of other Churches 1921–46 and Convenor of Committee on Proposed Scheme for Superannuation of Ministers 1933–37. He wrote the book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ in 1913. His religious writings included ‘Sermon on Temperance’ (1890), ‘St. Paul’s Last Letter’ (1900), ‘A Border Synod’ (published in Hawick, 1902), ‘Suggestions for a Pension Scheme’ (Hawick, 1906), ‘Studies in the Period of Elijah and Elisha’ (1915), ‘The Twenty-Third Psalm: an Anthology of Metrical Versions’ (1923), ‘Marriage in Scotland’ (1933, 1936, 1940, 1942, 1949). He also contributed to Hastings’ ‘Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels’, was editor of ‘The Church of Scotland Year Book’ 1914–20 and edited Mair’s ‘Digest of Church Laws’ (1923).

Syntone (sin-tin, sin’in) n. area just before Ashkirk, including several farms, formerly a large estate and separate barony, forming a disjoint part of Selkirkshire. The land was owned by the ‘de Sinton’ family for at least 4 generations. In the reign of William the Lion, Andrew de Sinton was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk, and gave up some lands in Roxburghshire, hence explaining why the estate became part of Selkirkshire. In the early 13th century the lands were described as marching with those of Lilliesleaf. In 1296 Marie de Sinton (probably widow of Alexander) signed the Ragman Rolls. In 1305 the lands were inherited by the ‘de Keith’ family through marriage to Isabella de Sinton. By the late 1400s the Barony was held by the Erskines, with some lands possessed by the Scots in the 15th century, and with the Scots being more or less permanent tenants from at least 1509. In 1494 the lands were valued at 40 merks, but in times of peace were worth £20; they were held for payment of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. The Barony may at one point have included the lands of Whit-slade and Dalglsh, while part, owned by the Veitches, was annexed to the Barony of Dawyck. In 1502 the estate was attacked by David Scott ‘in Stirkchaswis’ (i.e. Stiches) and some Arm-strongs, as well as Adam Turnbull of Hornshole, when many sheep and cattle were stolen. In 1510 the Baron, Lord Robert Erskine, and his son Sir John Erskine, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primsle Loch and Andrew Kerr of Fer-niehirst. Details are complicated, but basically for 400 ‘merks’ the Kerrs were sold a 20 merk land in Synton Mains (adjacent to the 5 merk land of Walter Scott), and another piece of land of equivalent value within Synton, together with the option to take over the Scott lands after a few years. In 1537 Gilbert Ker had sasine for a 20 merk land in ‘South Syntoun’. The lands were also raided in 1562, according to a decree made for Sir John Kerr of Ferneihirst. The Laird of ‘Syntoun’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. The Barony was granted to Walter, Earl of Bucleuch in 1621. George Scott, said to be 14th Laird of Synton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1627. The Lairdship was revived by Sir William’s younger brother Francis. At some early time the lands were split into South and North Synton (on opposite sides of the Ale Water), as well as Synton Mill, Synton Parkhead and Syntoushiel farms. The main estate was South Synton, with North Synton owned by the Veitches from at least 1407 until 1641, when it was sold to Francis Scott of South Synton. The estate passed from Sir John Edmondston of that Ilk to John, Earl of Mar in 1593, and was bought outright by the Scotts of Bucleuch in 1619. The Barony and lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Bucleuch in 1653, 1661, 1663, including ‘the toure, fortalice, manor-place, housis, bigingis, yairdis, mylnes, mylnelandis, multoris, and seqellis thairof’. The estate was valued at £946 in about 1663. George Turnbull was living there in 1698, and James Veitch was a servant there at the same time. Thomas Bournhill was gardener there in 1717. In 1785 and 1803 the lands of Synton and Synton Mill were valued at £1600. George Helm was a servant there in 1797. The arms of the original Scotts of Syenton have 2
Syntoncorses (sin-in-kör-seez) n. farmstead between Synton and Synton Mains. About 140 m to the east are the remains of a ‘burnt mound’, at least 3 m in diameter. Robert Scott was shepherd there in 1851.

Synton Cottage (sin-in-ko'ej) n. cottage that is to the west of Synton farm. About 160 m to the north are the remains of a farmstead, with a building, 2 enclosures and traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 190 m to the north-east are the remains of a plantation bank.

Synton Hoose (sin-in-hoos) n. former house on the estate at Synton. It was rebuilt in about 1775 by Alexander Scott of Synton, probably on the site of the earlier house. It was located where modern maps mark ‘Synton’, although it was abandoned after WWII, demolished in around 1970 and there is now little sign of where it was. The stables are inscribed with the date 1777, and it seems likely the main house was rebuilt at this time. Reset within the walls were 2 stones from the older house, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOWN AND MARGARET EDMESTOWN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR[heir] T(0 WALTER SCOT)?...’ The inscribed stones disappeared along with the house, although some tiles and bricks were discovered on the site in 2013 and were incorporated into new buildings there.

Synton Loch (sin-in-loch) n. small lake to the left of the A7 before coming to the main Synton area. It covers about 6 acres and is stocked for fishing. It is what is left of the much larger area of Synton Moss, which was largely drained in the 18th and 19th centuries. To the southwest some bones of an aurochs was discovered there in 1979. On a ridge about 300 m to the south lie the remains of a settlement, trapezoidal in shape, about 75 m by 65 m, with entrance near the east corner. It contains 2 sets of banks and inside are what might be 4 hut platforms. An Iron Age sword, as well as shards of pottery, found there are in the Royal Museum of Scotland. These suggest earlier occupation of the site.

Synton Mains (sin-in-mãnz) n. farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. In 1609 Walter Veitch was served as heir to his grandfather in the lands of North Synton, including ‘lie Maynes’ there. John Scott was servant there in 1709. Charles Scott was tenant in 1786. John Paterson junior was living at ‘Sinton Northmains’ in 1797. There are quarries nearby, used in the 18th and 19th centuries for dry-stane dykes. More recently there has been a driving range there (presumably once the home farm for Synton; it is ‘the Many’s of Syntoun’ in 1510 and ‘Sintownmill’ in 1755; is marked ‘Mains’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Mill (sin-in-nil) n. farm and former corn mill on the south side of the Ale Water north of Synton. Isobel Scott was there in 1635, according to a court case at Ashkirk Session, with Thomas Nichol and Andrew Nichol also mentioned as tenants. Tax was paid for 6 hearths there in 1694. Andrew Fletcher was miller there in at least 1689–98. Robert Foster was miller there in 1703 and William Henderson in 1715. William Tait was cottar there in 1717 and Thomas Scott was there in 1719. John Redford was there in at least 1755–65. John Rutherford was tenant there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm. Adam Neil was miller there in 1851 (also written ‘Syntonmill’, it is ‘Sintoun Milne’ in 1689 and ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Sintoun Mill’ on Blaue’s 1654 map and ‘Sintown Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Moss (sin-in-mos) n. land near Synton farm on the high ground just before Ashkirk. It was formerly a fairly extensive lake, but drained in the late 18th and early 19th centuries to obtain marl and peat. The remaining part is now called Synton Loch. Bones of several large extinct mammals were found there in the 19th century, including the skull of an aurochs ‘bos primigenius’, donated by Henry Ewen in 1857. The skull and several other bones from a prehistoric aurochs were discovered there in 1979, sent to Hawick Museum and later moved to Durham University.

Synton Mossend (sin’-in-mos-end) n. farmstead at the northern end of the Synton Moss area, to the left of the A7 before Ashkirk. It may have been alternatively known as Syntonshiel or Ashkirkshiel. The name is also applied to Synton Loch. There are remains of a settlement in the woods to the south. A stone found on the farm had cup and ring markings and was moved to Whinfield Sawmills Yard in Selkirk before 1967. A horde of Roman coins was discovered there in 2011, consisting of 228 coins produced under 11 separate emperors, now displayed in the Trinomiwm Museum. A cutting by the A7 near gives a good opportunity to view folding of the Silurian strata – ‘Past Ashkirk the exile feels that hame is nearly in sight Synton Mossend is left behind and it’s a climb tae the heights’ [GM] (see also Ashkirkshiel).

Synton Parkheid (sin’-in-pawrk-heed) n. Synton Parkhead, farm on the road to Synton, off to the right of the A7. It is known locally as simply ‘Parkheid’. William Inglis was there in 1581. Thomas Lockie was a wright there in 1715. The lodge house to the north was probably from the late 18th or early 19th century, but has been demolished. The farm there is now known as the Shepherd’s House. A bronze sundial in the garden there, on a modern pedestal, is inscribed ‘SEIZE THE PRESENT MOMENT THE EVENING HOUR IS NIGH’, and ‘1705 / THOMAS GRICE’. A Bronze Age spearhead found there is in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow, a cup and ring marked stone was discovered there in about 1960 and in 2017 an enamelled cooper-alloy strap-fastener from the Iron Age (it is ‘Parkheid in Synton’) in 1851.

Syntonshiel (sin’-in-sheel) n. former farmstead in the south part of Synton estate. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map between the main road and Synton Loch, corresponding roughly to the position of Synton Mossend.

syre (si’-ur) n., arch. an open drain, ditch, gutter.
’t (t) contr. enclitic, common after many specific words, e.g. ‘in’t’, ‘is’t’, ‘was’t’, etc., also used in a redundant sense with an extra ‘eet’ – ‘A thocht A wad send Tum’t eet [ECS] (see also ‘d).

the Tabernacle (thu-taw-bur-naw-kul) n. building on the Kirk Wynd built in 1805 for the Independent Church, and used by its congregation until about 1813. It was a plain building of 3 storeys, plus an attic. It saw additional use by the new Relief Church for a few months in 1810/11. The building was also used for dances, theatrical performances, etc. It later had many uses, being a carrier’s warehouse, hosiery mill (by the Co-operative Society 1874–81 and Peter Scott’s 1881–93), wool store and corn merchants. It became a billiard saloon in the early 20th century and was finally demolished in 1976 when the area was remodelled.

Taddei (taw-deez) n. cafe run by the Taddei family (brothers Ernie, Jimmie and Guido), located on North Bridge Street since before WWII. Ernesto Taddei turned it into Hawick's premier billiard's venue after the War, with 7 tables upstairs and 6 downstairs. It converted to a bingo hall by the early 1970s, with an adjoining shop. The family also ran a chip shop on Oliver Place and the Cadora Cafe on the High Street, run by Jimmy and Guido. The family once sponsored a football team, which played in black – ‘O’o’ve hed the Taddeis, lassies and laddies, And in the Howegate oo hed Gusto …’ [IWL].

Taddei (taw-dee) n. Antonio Alonizio (1881–1957) son of Virgilio and Maria Celesta Macari, he was born in Marmande, France. He lived in Hawick and was father of the Taddei brothers, who ran several business in the Town. He married Loreta Bambina Forte, who died in 1963. His sons were: Augusto (1905–35), who died in a car crash in Lanark; Olimpio or ‘Jimmy’ (1907–88); Ernesto Taddei (1910–92) 3rd son of Antonio, he was born in Marmande, France. He lived in Hawick and was father of the Taddei brothers, who ran several business in the Town. He married Clementina Borza and they had 3 daughters. He died in Kelso.

Taddei’s (taw-deez) n. cafe run by the Taddei family (brothers Ernie, Jimmie and Guido), located on North Bridge Street since before WWII. Ernesto Taddei turned it into Hawick’s premier billiard’s venue after the War, with 7 tables upstairs and 6 downstairs. It converted to a bingo hall by the early 1970s, with an adjoining shop. The family also ran a chip shop on Oliver Place and the Cadora Cafe on the High Street, run by Jimmy and Guido. The family once sponsored a football team, which played in black – ‘O’o’ve hed the Taddeis, lassies and laddies, And in the Howegate oo hed Gusto …’ [IWL].

Taggart (taw-gur”) n. Fr. Patrick (1809–95) born in County Tyrone, Ireland, he was ordained about 1846. He served in Dunfries and Edinburgh before becoming priest in Hawick in 1847, remaining for almost 50 years. Originally he ministered to Catholics in St. Boswells, Jedburgh, Kelso and Galashiels, as well as in Hawick. He was finally relieved of the responsibilities of Galashiels in 1853. He opened a Catholic school in Hawick in 1854. He also ran an evening school, since many of his pupils worked during the day. He had a house built for him in 1851, after living in the vestry for 2 years! He was known for regularly going walks with Rev. Dr. MacRae, and in general for being on good terms with the local protestant ministers. His services were used several times to try to quell riots that broke out during the building of the railway line, at St. Boswells and Shankend. It is also said that he helped get hosiery orders from the Admiralty directed towards Hawick firms in a time of very slack business. He later had a small cottage built behind the chapel to serve as his retirement home. In 1890 he was made a Domestic Prelate, with the title of Monsignor. He was buried in a vault at S.S. Mary & David’s and a stained glass window was erected in his memory.

taggit (taw-gē’, -gi’) pp., poet. tagged – 'Her little tail wi’ white was taggit, Which often she in kindness waggit' [JR].

Taiblet (tāb-li”) n. a tablet, a sweet confection in general – ‘Note... taiblet denotes the sugary or candy variety’ [ECS], ‘Thus coakih-nit taiblet = cocoanut candy’ [ECS], a particular confection like a hard fudge, made from condensed milk, sugar and butter (see also tablet).

Though he can scarcely hougel’ [JoHa], to detain, tarry – ‘...it didna molest them farther than it taiglet on about the buchte’ [LHTB], ‘...thou art my helpe an’ deliverer; mak’ nae taigglin, O my God’ [HSR], ‘I taigletna, but mæde hæste til keepe thy commandements’ [HSR].

tail (tāl) n., arch. a small portion of land attached to a larger piece, like a tail, especially a piece of lower ground or far end of the land. The word occurs in the 1609 service of heirs for James, son of Hawick minister William Auchmowty – ‘Annuo redditu 10 m. de turre lie toure cum cauda lie tail ejusdem’, presumably a piece of land attached to fields farmed by a tenant at the Tower in Hawick (with ‘cauda’ meaning ‘tail’, and so it was ‘with tail called the Tail’).

the Tail (thū-tāl) n. former name for a piece of additional land farmed along with the tenancy of the Tower in Hawick (recorded in 1609).

the Tail Burn (thū-tāl-burn) n. stream connecting Loch Skeen with the Grey Mare’s Tail – ‘The Tail Burn from the marshland leaps madcap down the brae, While Skene reflects in splendour, the late sun’s blinding ray’ [WL].

tailit (tā-lee’, li’)) adj. tailed, having a tail – ‘...having apprehendit ane forr meir, qhuyt mainet and qhuyt tailiet ...’ [BR1641].

Tailleycleuch (tā-lee-clooch) n. fortified house marked on Blaen’s 1654 map, roughly near the modern Steelroad-end. The stream there is marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. There is no sign of where the house may have been. A circular enclosure near there, and close to the railway line, was excavated in 1977; it is about 40 m in diameter, and seems to be a prehistoric settlement with later occupation, probably unrelated to the tower-house. It may be associated with the ‘Tailside’ recorded in 1632, which was probably close to there.

Taillyaird (tāl-yārd) n. name for former lands within Crook, i.e. near the Kirkton Burn in Cavers Parish. It is recorded in 1581 as a ‘hortulo herbario vulgo vocat tailzard’, i.e. a small herb garden commonly called Taillyard, on the west side of the lands of Crook (note that the transcription of the name is unclear; ‘Tail’ probably refers to a small piece of land attached to a larger area).

tailors (tā-lurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were probably incorporated towards the end of the 17th century. In 1679 their quartermasters were fined for ‘making an act not to work out of their own houses’. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1734 the Council allowed a petition from them ‘to convene at six o’clock to their work, and leave at eight o’clock at night’. The first female dressmaker in Hawick was in about 1793, with dresses before this period being made by the tailors.

Tailer’s Slack (tā-lurz-slawk) n. short stream in Liddesdale, running into Greenshiel Sike, which becomes part of Ryedale Burn.

Tails Day (tālz-dā) n. former tradition on the day after ‘Huntye Gowk’, i.e. 2nd April, in which children (particularly at school) would try to pin paper tails on unsuspecting victims (this survived until around WWII).

Tailside (tāl-sid) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Fairside and Cleuchside. It may be associated with the modern Taylor’s Cleuch and the fortified house of ‘Tailleycleuch’.

tailzie (tāl-yee) n., arch. term in Scots law, an entailment, whereby the legal succession of an estate is restricted to designated heirs – ‘Free the gates ye thowless bailies! Leave for once your wads and tailzies!’ [RSC], poet. a covenant – ‘Til sic as keepe his taylye, an’ til thae that beær in mind his commandements til do thame’ [HSR].

Tait (tä) n. Adam (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Adam (17th C.) resident of Shielwood in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll amongst ‘ye poor’. Alexander (d.aft. 1595) recorded as ‘Vicar-pensioner and Reader’ at Traquair 1567–80. He was then deprived, living afterwards at St. Bride’s Kirk, Traquair. He became minister of Bedrule in 1585, but was ordered to demit this in 1591. He is mentioned as still living in 1595. Alexander (1782–1851) youngest son of miller George and Agnes Scott. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot Mill and his widow was living there in 1851. He died at Burnfoot in the 44th year of his service there. He married Margaret Younger, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included William and Margaret. They are buried in Wilton. Andrew (1778–1861) originally from Lauder, son of Andrew and Ann, he was a stockingmaker of the Green Wynd. He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk. There is a record of him being granted money by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1817 for a broad frame, after he had demonstrated that he had discovered how to make down tippets and muffens on the frame. He managed to make white feathered muffens, but when taste changed to coloured muffens, he was unable to get the feathers to dye properly. He was living on the Back Row in 1832, adjacent to where there were cholera victims. He is recorded as a widower living with the Kyle family on the Green Wynd in 1841 and 1851. Archibald (b.1705) farmer near Borthaugh. He was father of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He is said to have lived into his late 90s, have married twice and had 19 children. He may be the tenant in Whitehillbrae whose wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1760, with her funeral recorded in Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Archibald (b.1741) and George (b.1743), both baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Archibald (d.1824) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. He is probably the Archibald, son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull, who was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1741. He married Isabella Geddes, who died in 1822, aged 84. In her death record he is listed as ‘Egglar’, meaning a pedlar who collected eggs from outlying farms to sell at markets. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1777), who married carrier James Paterson; and William (b.1782), who was a carrier. His children were baptised in Hawick and Wilton Parishes; he was at Fenwick in 1777 and Borthaugh in 1782. The 1782 baptism was witnessed by George Tait (probably his brother) and Margaret Cowan; in an adjacent baptismal entry he was witness for George. He was probably son of the earlier Archibald and brother of George, tenant at Borthaugh Mill. He may be the Archibald who was charged with theft in Hawick in 1776. Archibald (1820–79) son of William and Elizabeth Forsyth. He was proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb Hotel in Melrose. He married Elizabeth Naylor. He died in Hawick. David (19th C.) shepherd near Addestoneshiel. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an otter that had been shot on Adrestoneshiel Moss. He is probably the ‘D. Tait’ recorded at Adderstonelee in 1868. Ernest E., O.B.E., J.P. (?) accountant in Pringle’s, he was President of the Callants’ Club in 1966. He became Secretary at Pringle’s in 1939, taking over from James Watherston. In 1947 he was made a Director of Pringle’s. George of Pirn (15th C.) listed on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He is recorded as being ‘of the Pren’, his lands being in Tweeddale (near Stow). The David ‘de pryn’ recorded in the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 is probably his son (and his son George is recorded in 1498). It is said that the Taits of Pirn died out in the male line and were continued by a daughter who married Horsburgh of that Ilk; they may be the oldest known Taits. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when James Gray in Fawhope had remission for stealing livestock from his farms of ‘pyrne’ (i.e., Pirn), Gatehope, Seathope and Innerleithen. He was probably son of the previous George of Pirn. Gray had also been accused of killing Anthony (16th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet ‘Caidyea’ (i.e. Kedie) in 1654. Their children included: William (b.1656); John (b.1658); Isobel (b.1659); and John (b.1661). The witnesses in 1656 were Thomas Vogan and John Fraitet. George (d.c.1693) tenant in ‘Newtoun’ in 1689 when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newton this may have been (in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk). George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may have witnessed a baptism in 1691 (but it is hard to read). George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Robertson itself in 1731 and at Highchesters in 1742. Children baptised in Robertson who are probably his include Margaret (b.1731), Isabel (b.1738), Helen (b.1742), John (b.1748) and James (b.1754). George (1743–1812) son of Archibald, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, being the last miller there. He married Agnes Scott, who died in 1812, aged 70. Their children included: John; Isabel (b.1773); Archibald (b.1776); George (b.1778), builder in Hawick; William (b.1780); and Alexander (1782–1851). The 1782 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. George (1778–1853) son of George, who was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was listed as a mason at Borthaugh in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. He became a builder in Hawick, whose son (also a mason) had the same name. He served on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’ as a representative of the hammermen; he was certainly there as early as 1827. He lived on the Punch Bowl Close at 27 High Street, owning the property there; his son George later rebuilt the front, while another son James ran a druggist in one of the 2 front shops and had a school in the back. He is probably the George listed as a builder on the Fore Row on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in 1837. ‘Geo. Tait & Sons’ is listed on Punch Bowl Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is at Punch Bowl Close with his son James (druggist), with his other son George next door. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1818, aged 38. Their children included: Margaret (b.1804); John (b.1808), also a builder; George (b.1812), who continued with his builder’s business; and James (b.1815). A portrait of him exists. The family (including 3 children who died in infancy) are buried in St. Mary’s. George (1812–97) son of builder George. He was also a mason and the 3rd George in a row in this family (his grandfather being miller at Borthaugh). Like his father before him, he was a member of the ‘Eternal Coonsul’, representing the hammermen for several years from 1846. The Tait builders (including his father and brother John) between them erected many of the Town’s buildings, including much of North Bridge Street and a large number of local mansions, including Silverbuthall, Mayfield, East Bank Meeting House, St. Andrew’s Church and Orrock Place Church. In 1841 he is recorded on Punch Bowl Close, listed at 76 High Street in 1851 and 1861, and still there in 1875. He rebuilt the front of the property that had been owned by his father; however, the building was later demolished (along with the one next door) to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. He was a nearly life-long member (and later an Elder) of Orrock Kirk. He donated some fossils to the Museum in 1863. He was described as having ‘a fine portly form’ and was latterly very deaf. In 1836 he married Beatrice Wilson, who died in 1862, aged 51. Their children included: Margaret (b.1838/9), who married James Turnbull of Galalaw; Beatrice (b.1839), who died in infancy; Beatrice (again, b.1845), who died young; George (b.1847), also died young; and Elizabeth (b.1851/2), who married Alexander Welsh from Coldstream. George (b.1829/30) son of grocer John. He was listed as a shoemaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1851 census he was living with his parents on Wilton Kirkstyle and listed as ‘Deaf & Dumb’. Gilbert (b.1803/4) gamekeeper at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included Christian and William. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Andrew (b.1689). James (d.1815) tenant farmer at Ellrig. He is recorded there on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He is recorded as ‘Mr James Tait’ at Eilrig in 1798 when his daughter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1795, the marriage being recorded in both Roberton and Ettrick Parishes. Their children included: Janet (b.1798); Helen (b.1803); Henry (b.1806); and Georgine (b.1816). His death is recorded in Hawick in 1815, with the words ‘Died suddenly’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Helen Leithhead from Hawick Parish. James (b.1805/6) coal agent in Denholm. His wife was Helen. James (1815–63) son of builder George, he was a chemist at 27 High Street in the mid-19th century. He also had a school in the back premises. He was said to be a ‘cripple and walked very lame’. He married Catherine Anderson, from Jedburgh. James (19th C.) editor of the Kelso Chronicle. He wrote the 2 volume study ‘Two Centuries of Border Church Life: with Biographies of Leading Men and Sketches of the Social Conditions of the People’ (1889, 1891). It principally contains details of churches associated with Kelso Presbytery, encompassing several areas around Hawick, including Lilliesleaf and Liddesdale. He also edited Walter Riddell Carré’s work ‘Border Memories, or, Sketches of Prominent men and women of the Border’ (1876) and ‘Wilson’s Tales of the Borders’ (1881, 1884). James (19th C.) local artist. His painting ‘Hawick Common Riding Procession at Tower Knowe 1890’ is in the Museum collection. He is probably also the James who painted a portrait of Provost George Wilson and possibly a picture of Minto Pond. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in the towne of Halroule’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) piper, named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, among 15 other ‘idle and masterless men’ as fit to be sent to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Henderson and their children included George (b.1691), John (b.1693), unnamed (b.1694), Margaret (b.1697), James (b.1699), Agnes (b.1703), and Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were William Easton and James Veitch. John (d.bef. 1721) gardener listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Probably the same John was resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1715 he was fined ‘for breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Dutchess of B. at the Woillegate’. He was described as the deceased ‘some times gardner’ in 1721 when his daughter Isobel married fleshers Robert Hardie in Hawick. The later gardener John was surely related to him. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Adderstonehill. In 1719 his servant Bessie Anderson got married in Hawick and in 1720 his ‘servitor’ John Scott had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish, perhaps son of the earlier gardener John. He was ‘gardner att ye Cross wynd’ in 1716. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in 1730. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter to Adam Armstrong in Barnes. Their children included: Isobel (b.1719); Beatrice (b.1721); Agnes (b.1723); John (b.1726); Bessie (b.1729); and Jean (b.1739). William (b.1732), with the mother’s name given as ‘Margaret’ Armstrong, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1719 were wright Francis Gledstaines and carrier William Miller, in 1723 were smith John Scott and James Chisholme ‘Laird’, and in 1726 were Bailie Martin and ‘Dand’ Gray. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1724 he married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish. He could be the John ‘Teat’ recorded at Borthwickshiel in 1725 when his son John was baptised and the John ‘Tat’ recorded in 1735 at Girnwood when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ornston in 1727. His children included: William (b.1725); and Helen (b.1727). John (18th C.) tenant farmer in Fenwick in about the 1750s, when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was said to have ‘came and drunk with Bailie Ker’ in order to solve a dispute with the Town Herd over the use of the Common. John (18th C.) recorded at Winnington Rig on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1768/9–1812) road contractor who died at Abbotrule Lodge. His wife Elizabeth Bell died in Edinburgh in 1851, aged 82. Their youngest son Adam (born in Southdean Parish) died in Edinburgh, aged 30. The family were recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. John (1771–1851) son of George, he was born at Borthaugh Mill. In 1794 he married Agnes, daughter of Gilbert Amos, and she died in 1815. The marriage was against the wishes of her family, and so she was carried off from Adderstonelee at midnight! He then moved to Cavers, where he served as a forester on Cavers estate. Their children included: Gilbert (d.c.1819); George (1796–1856); John (1799–1863); James (1803–70); Peter (b.1805); and Margaret (b.1812). In 1819 he emigrated to New York state with 5 children, settling in Oxbow on the Oswegatchie River. His grandson James D. Taitt wrote a history of Oxbow area families. John (b.c.1770s) recorded as servant at Branxholme Park on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Welsh and their children included Archibald (b.1800), Helen (b.1803) and John (b.1805). These were all entered at the same time in the register, with witnesses being George Helm and John Scoon. John (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. John (b.1791/2) stone-cutter in Denholm, where he was a registered voter in the 1860s. In 1861 he lived at around the Canongate. John (b.1801/2) from Watten in Caithness, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Kirkstyle and he was listed as a shopkeeper at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at Melburn Cottage in Wilton. His wife was Christina, and their children included George (shoemaker), Jessie, Magnus Sandison, Christina, John, Robert, William, Elizabeth and Georgina. John (b.1808) son of builder George, he was a mason on the Cross Wynd. Like his father and brother George, he sat on the ‘Eternal Council’, representing the hammermen from 1848. He and his brother built a good fraction of North Bridge Street, as well as several large mansions in the Hawick area. In 1851 he is listed as a builder, with 2 partners, employing 12 people, and residing at about 13 Cross Wynd. His wife was Agnes Reid from Langholm, and their children included Margaret, Isabella, Agnes, John, Helen, George and James. John (b.1829) son of carrier William, who died when he was young. He probably served in the army during the Crimean War. In 1863 in Wilton Parish he married Helen, daughter of mason Walter Cranston; she died in 1913. He was at that time described as a frameworker and Chelsea Pensioner and the witnesses were Archibald Brown and Agnes Cranston. Their children included: William Walter (b.1865); and Walter (b.1866). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middlemas) in 1860. John G. (b.1830/1) head gardener at Cavers. In 1861 he was living at ‘Cavers Garden’, which was presumably the gardener’s house on the estate. Rev. ?? (17th/18th C.) chaplain at Thorliveshope. He was one of the local clergymen who gave sermons in Hawick in 1721 when Rev. Cunningham was ill. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Honeyburn. In 1684 he was among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. He is listed separately from Robert in Hagburn. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hagburn (in Rulewater). William (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Crozier, who was from Minto Parish. William (1782–1832) son of Archibald and Isabel Geddes, he was baptised at Borthaugh in Wilton Parish. He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Dumfries and Annan, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was listed as a carrier in the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the carrier William who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of William Forsyth, in Wilton Parish in 1813 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1812), who married James Daykins; Isabella (b.1814), who married John Lawrie; Elizabeth (b.1816), who married Peter Blair, miller at Hundalee and emigrated to Australia; Matilda (1818–1900), who married George Aitken in Linton and died in Edinburgh; Archibald (b.1820), who married Elizabeth Naylor and was proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in Melrose; Catherine (1823–64), who married farm steward Andrew Walker of Linton Parish; Williamina (1826–31); John (b.1829), who married Helen Cranston; and William (b.c.1831), confectioner. His wife died 2 days after him, leaving 8 children as orphans. In 1833 his former premises in the east end of Hawick were advertised for sale, including ‘dwellings-house, offices, garden, and pertinents’, with the house being built within the previous 20 years. William (b.c.1784) born in Hownam, son of David and Janet (or Jessie) Armstrong. He moved to Hyndlee as a shepherd and spent most of his working life at Wauchope Walls (also known as ‘Langhaughwalls’ or ‘the Waas’). He was recorded there in 1861 and 1868. He also acted as carrier between Hawick and Jedburgh and the Wauchope area. Along with his wife Rachel and daughter Rachel, he was a member of the original congregation of Wolfeleet Free Kirk. He married Rachel Riddell in 1805. Their children were David (who married Mary Paterson), Betsy (who emigrated to America), Janet (who married T. Waugh), Mary (who married A. Elliot), Margaret (who married labourer Christopher Shakedon), Agnes Douglas (who emigrated to America), Rachel, Isabel (who married Will Bell), Helen (born at Hislop), Jane and James. William (b.1802/3) from Bowden, he was a baker on the Cross Wynd. On Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a baker on the High Street. He was at about 4 Cross Wynd in 1841. He later lived on Backdamgate and Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Kerr, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Jessie, who married John Davidson; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Robert. William (19th C.) married Anne Hood in Wilton Parish in 1847. William (c.1831–1913) youngest son of carrier William, who died shortly after he was born. In 1861 he was a frame-worker, living at 11 Teviot Crescent. He was later a confectioner in Hawick. In 1853 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Bell. Their children included William (greengrocer), Jane and Margaret. He died at 1 Glebe View. William (b.1836/7–1914) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is probably the shepherd at Langburnshiels whose daughter was mother of Peter Jardine, forester at Wolfeleet. He married Thomasina Nichol in 1860 and she who died in 1889, aged 52. Their children included: Thomas (b.1863); Walter Nichol (b.1866); James (b.1867); William (b.1871); John (b.1873); and Isabel Grey (1892/3–1914). He died in Hawick and is buried at Ettleton. William (19th C.) son of William, he was a greengrocer. He was at 72 High Street in 1875. William (19th C.) farmer at Pin in Liddesdale in 1868. Tamshielhaugh (tawm-sheel-hawch) n. former farmstead in a remote part of Southdean Parish, on the Black Burn near Tamshiel Rig. The modern name for the area is ‘the Burns’. William Scott was tenant there in the mid-19th century. His daughter Isabella married racehorse trainer James Waugh.

Tamshiel Rig (tawm-sheel-rig) n. hill above the Black Burn, south of Southdean, reaching a height of 280 m, being the northern shoulder of Green Law to the south. It contains an Iron Age hill-fort, settlement and field system, remains of which were partially destroyed by forestry ploughing and planting in the 1950s. The site consists of a nearly circular fort of about 85 m diameter, together with a smaller (and presumably later) settlement built on the fort, as well as an extensive field system in the surrounding area. Parts of ‘beehive querns’ found there are in the National Museum of Antiquities. The area also features in Iain Biggs multi-media book ‘Between Carterhaugh and Tamshiel Rig: a borderline episode’ (2004).

Tancred (tawng-kred) n. George (1831–1914) eldest son of George Cleghorn of Weens. He was born and raised at Weens, then educated in Edinburgh and at Leamington. When rowing on the Thames as a boy, he mangled his hand and lost part of a thumb. He joined the East India Company at age 19 and became an ensign in the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry, caught an almost fatal illness and was sent to Simla to recover. He then moved to Kashmir, when he became ill again with dysentery and returned to England in 1853. There he joined the West York Militia, purchased a commission with the 17th Lancers, and was transferred to the Scots Greys, where he became Captain, spending time in various parts of England and also Ireland. He retired from the army in 1866. He was a keen shooter, bragging that over a year he (and some friends) killed about 1000 patridges, 400 pheasants and 60 grouse. He succeeded his father in 1855, and was known as ‘Cleghorn of Weens’ for 30 years. However, he assumed the name and arms of Tancred in 1885 following the death of Charles Tancred of Arden Hall, Yorkshire, according to the conditions of succession to his estate. He substantially improved the house at Weens in the early years of the 20th century. He took possession of the key of Gibraltar which had been taken from the Rock by Lord Heathfield, who was born at Wells. He was a member of the Roxburghshire County Council, Chairman of Hobkirk Parish Council, Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as the North Riding of Yorkshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1862. He was also a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. He wrote ‘Historical Record of Medals and Honorary Distinctions’ (1891), ‘The Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’ (1899) and ‘Rulewater and its People: an Account of the Valley of the Rule and its Inhabitants’ (1907, reprinted in facsimile 1992). This last book is an extremely valuable account of the histories of families the Rule valley (and neighbouring areas), particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, and including ordinary people as well as the landed gentry. And the Jedforest Club book is actually an excuse for him to present the histories of a large fraction of the local landowning families. He was said to be working on another book when he died, ‘Old Border Lairds and their Tenants’; it is not clear how far he had progressed and no manuscript survives. In 1862 he married Mary Anne Hay (who died in 1914), 3rd daughter of Col. Thomas Lumsden, from Aberdeenshire. They had 11 children: George Harry Lumsden (1863–1935), who served in South Africa, married Sarah Ann Gillespie and died in New Zealand; James Charles (b.1864), who was a Royal Navy Commander and married Cecile Margaret, only daughter of Walter Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope; Thomas Angus (b.1867), Major in the Royal Artillery; Richard Fairfax (b.1875), moved to Queensland; Edward Meynell (b.1877), also Queensland; John Yule (b.1879), with the Indian Staff Corps; Walter Cecil (b.1885), born at Weens, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy; Mary Norcliffe; Katherine Wray (b.1869), born at Weens, who married Alexander Ormiston Curle, W.S.; Frances Madeline (b.1871), also born at Weens; and Edith Dalton (1873–90). A plaque in his memory was erected on the wall of Weens House in 1981 (also known as ‘George Cleghorn’ and ‘Captain Cleghorn’).

Tandlaw (tawnd-law) n. farm just out past the ‘Fower Road Ends’, with a small loch nearby, Tandlaw Moss. It appears to have been part of the estate of Robert Scott of Alton in 1643. Robert Scott of Tandlaw paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. It was contained within Hassendean Parish until 1690 when it fell within the new Wilton Parish boundaries. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1702 and mason William Gibson in 1708. Another Robert Scott was there in at least 1729–30, Thomas Stoddart in 1732, Walter Scott in 1758 and Adam Armstrong in 1791. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleighen is recorded as owner in 1788 (continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £40 and recorded as ‘Tanlaw, or Tandlaw’. In 1851 it consisted of 200 acres. Robert Symonton was farmer there in 1797 and Adam Nichol in 1841 and 1851 (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw’; it is ‘Tandla’ in 1673, ‘Tanndlaw’ in 1682, ‘Tanlida’ in 1702 and ‘Tanlaw or Tandlaw’ in 1813; not to be confused with ‘Tanlaw Naze’ near Teviothead or ‘Tanlawhill’ etc. near Eskdalemuir).

Tandlaw Moss (tawnd-law-mos) n. marshy area and small loch to the west of Tandlaw farm. It is the source of the Boonraw Burn (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw Moss’).

the tane (thin-tan) n., arch. the one, that one, especially in the phrase ‘neither the tane nor the tother’, ‘...Waltir Scot of Branxhelm, knicht, on the tane part, and James Gledstanis ...on the tuddyr part’ [SB1519], ‘...did they believe the Bible, ye micht as weel hae askit, for the tane just deserves as weel to be believed in as the tither’ [EM1820], ‘...wan A kennit feine naether the tain nor the tother cood be the richt oor ...’ [ECS], also used elliptically for the whole of the phrase – ‘Hei’s uncih lang i comin, A unk!’

Tanlaw Naze (tan-law-nâz) n. hill between Falnash and Caerlenrig, reaching a height of 310 m. The former farmstead near there was called ‘Tanlawense’ (and variant) in earlier documents. Will and George Turnbull are recorded there in 1503. Along with the lands of Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was confirmed by James IV in a 1511 charter to Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Keitigern Dalgleish. Along with Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald in 1647. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690 (the name probably derives from Scots ‘tandil’, meaning a bonfire, and Middle English ‘nese’ for a projecting nose of land; it is ‘tandilines’ in 1503, ‘Tandilines’ in 1511 and 1647, ‘Tandilaneis’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Tabdbanerse’ in 1690).

Tannage Close (taw-naj-klôs) n. passageway off the middle of the west side of the High Street, between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanning pits at the bottom of the close, with the business carried out by John & Walter Wilson from 1800. In the early 1800s it was called Ewen’s Court, then was known as Moncrieff’s Close until Tannage Close was adopted about 1857 (although the 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows the bottom part called Tannage Close, with the upper part labelled Moncrieff’s Close). The Moncrieff family used to live on the east side of the close. The name ‘Guthrie’s Close’ has also been used (from the plumber and slater’s business on the west side). It was once an area of over-crowded housing, with re-development happening between the two world wars. A plaque was placed there in 2011 marking the nearby location of the workplace of Jimmie Guthrie.

tanner (taw-nur) n., arch. a sixpenny coin, sixpence – ‘Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a tanner . . . ’ [AY]. ‘Thrippences, tanners, bobs, florins, The odd halfcroon Come floatin’ doon’ [DH].

the Tanner’s Pool (thu-taw-nurz-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot near the foot of Tannage Close, which was used for tanning. The base of the old Mercat Cross was once located here (and the iron ring in it used for securing skins), but removed when Teviot Road was built.

tannin (taw-nin) n. the act of converting hides into leather by soaking in an infusion of barks containing tannic acid. The tanning of leather and dressing of sheepskins was formerly an important trade in Hawick. Tanners would usually have open tanning vessels, producing a strong smell in the vicinity. Mactaggarts skinworks was a related modern business that successfully operated through much of the 20th century. The name ‘Tannage Close’ is one of the few remnants of this occupation.

Tantledie (tawnt-le-dee??) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

tap (tap) n., arch. top, summit, a spinning top – ‘I watche, an’ am ane sparra alan’ upon the houn’tap’ [HSR], ‘Let thame be as the gersse upon the hox-taps . . . ’ [HSR], ‘A rountree bus’ oot’er the tap o’t . . . ’ [JBS], ‘. . . and three to be in ambush at the tap o’ the plantin’ at Denholm Hill Quarry’ [BCM1881], ‘The wee birds sit on the tap o’ the sheafs, An’ twitter an’ sing i’ the mornin’ licht’ [FGS], ‘. . . Frae the tap o’ her heid tae her feet’ [WAP], a distaff-full of flax, ‘ti take yin’s tap in yin’s lap’ is to pack up before departing, particularly after marrying (from the former custom of spinning flax at a neighbour’s house) – ‘For the bride has her tap in her lap, And the bridegroom his tail in his riggin’ [ES] (not now particularly Hawick pronunciation; cf. top).

taper off (tâ-pur-of) v., arch. to sum up a person in a disparaging manner, verbally tear to shreds – ‘The expression is often used of two persons ‘scandalising’ a third person. Thae twae’s studditten bletherin an oor thegither; A’ll baet ee some puir sowl’s geetin taipert off’ [ECS] (also ‘taiper’).

tappit (taw-pee’, -pi’) pp., adj., arch. topped, crested, tufted – ‘A bet on the subject was made between the two parties to the extent of a tappit hen’ [HAST1868].
taretathers

The area above the Braid Road, named after the former Boozieburn Rifle Range on the northern slope. It is also known as ‘Target Hill’ or ‘Target Hills’, and was formerly ‘Moss Hill’. The area includes Target Pond and the disused Black Quarries, and was recently the site of a greyhound racing track – ‘The summer sun shines as I sit in the silence Looking doon on ma hame frae the Target Hill’s crest, Weel-kent the streets and familiar the places Of this old mill town that I’ll aye like the best’ [IWL].

Tarras

The farm was listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section labelled ‘Forest’. ‘The Laird’s Rowie’ (i.e. Roland) Armstrong was recorded dwelling at ‘Tarryasside’ (tait) in 1583. The lands there passed to William Scott (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) in 1606 and later his descendant became the first and only Earl of Tarras. The lands and Barony of Tarras were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch; the bounds of the lands at that time are describe therein. It was valued at £1100 in 1671 – ‘Was ne’er ane droon’d in Tarras, Nor yet in doot, For ere the heid can win doon, The harns are oot’ [T], ‘From mountains wrapt in purple shroudsm The Tarras pours her murky floods’ [WSB], ‘And sae, as the crying gangs up i’ the Border Bi Tarras and Hermitage, Ettrick and Yill … ’ [DH] (it is ‘Tarras’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Taylor

Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed after Simon Armstrong of Calfield and his servant in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. He could be the ‘Andro Taillour’ listed ‘in Schortbartholme’ among Liddesdale and Eskdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing in a court in Hawick in 1605. Archibald ‘Archie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Zairdhous’ in Liddesdale. Since this is listed by other farms near Newcastleton, it could be that Yethouse is meant.

Charles (19th C.) teacher, who was one of the three people who met in 1877 to plan the Hawick Golf Club. He was also part of the first committee and later Club Captain. In 1879 he won the medal (presented by Robert Fraser Watson) at the first golf championship played in Hawick. He was conductor of the Hawick Choral Union in at least the 1870s. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for a child of Thomas Barrie. His children included Helen (b.1704) and David (b.1707). The baptism in 1704 was witnessed by weavers John Taylor (surely related) and David Miller. In 1711 he was a weaver at Roughheugh when his son Walter was baptised in Wilton Parish. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms in 1724 for John Scott from Brieryhill and John Miller from Roughheugh. David (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshawhill in 1756 and 1762. His children included John (b.1754), William (b.1756), Isobel (b.1759) and Walter (b.1762). Agnes (b.1748 and Thomas (b.1749), baptised in Minto, may also have been his children. David (19th/20th C.) joiner at Damfoot, Newmill. He was responsible for the original wooden Lawson Bridge, as well as the ‘Joogly Brig’. Douglas (1823–87) son of John. He was an apprentice joiner with James Rutherford at Bonchester, and his first job was to remove the thatch from the 3 ‘Sclenty houses’ in 1839. He was then a joiner on the Weens estate at Bonchester Bridge. He was the first in the area to erect wire fences, and developed a business supplying these. Henry Anderson worked for him in the late 1870s. In 1882 his joiner’s business was taken over by Walter Turnbull. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), daughter of John Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge. They had several children, including Walter. He died at Wilton Hill in Hawick and was buried at Hob Kirk. Edmond (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘ewmund talv’. James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for aggressions in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. George (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. Their son George was baptised in 1605, with witnesses Robert Taylor and William Hislop (who were surely related to the couple). James (15th C.) had a sasine for a merk land in ‘Betheruill’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1473. It is unclear how long he held lands in Rulewater. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Betty Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1761; Margaret (again, b.1763); and Peter (b.1766). The 1766 witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and John ‘Kerswell’. James (18th/19th C.) fined in Cavers Parish in 1792 for an ‘irregular marriage’.

James (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a spinner in Hawick. In 1842 he married Elizabeth Best, who was from Bedrule. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); John (b.1845/6); Catherine (b.1848/9); Agnes A.J. (b.1854/5); and Elizabeth Jane Boston (b.1856). They were living at about 62 High Street in 1851. In 1861 his widow had remarried to grocer William Brown and the family were living on the Mid Raw. Janet (b.1780/1) born in Hawick Parish, she was recorded as ‘independent’ at Highend in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. She was listed there as farmer’s widow in 1851 and 1861 and was still recorded there in 1868. She had a daughter Margaret. John (16th C.) tenant in Alemoor. He is recorded in 1573 when he was to be entered at Edinburgh Tolbooth by David of Ailmure. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John Brown and William Allan. John (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. John (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for David, who was probably his son or brother. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1725 and 1726 he was at Roberton Burnfoot and in 1729, 1733 and 1736 he was at Mains. His children included: David (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); Helen (b.1729); Walter (b.1731); Bessie (again, b.1733); James (b.1736); Helen (again, b.1741); and Marion (b.1746). John (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Rulewater. In 1771 he married Betty Amos and had a son, also John, later that year. John (b.1770s) tenant farmer at Unthank, brother of Walter. He may be the John who was recorded as tenant at Blackcleughmouth in 1797. He married Elizabeth Renwick of Forkins. In 1800 they had a daughter called Betty (who married Douglas Lillico), followed by a son, John. They then moved to Swan-shiel, where they had sons Robert (farm steward at Wauchope, before emigrating to America) and Walter (who married Margaret Gow). In later life he moved to Blacklee farm with his eldest son John (where they were in 1841). A few years after his death the farmhouse at Blacklee was allowed to fall to ruin. John (18th/19th C.) living at Blackcleughmouth in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was ‘junior’ and hence presumably son of John who was tenant at the same place. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Joshua Joseph Henry (1831–1910) composer of music for ‘The Banner Blue’. Born in the Huddersfield area, he came to Hawick in 1884 to work as a worsted designer with the tweed manufacturers Blenkorn & Richardson’s, and later became their mill manager. Musically talented, before coming to Hawick he wrote wrote several short choral anthems, including ‘Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion’, ‘Come, Ye Children’ and ‘Rend Your Hearts’, as well as a full Church of England Service. While in Hawick he wrote a new ‘Te Deum’, performed in Wilton Church in 1891, as well as his last anthem ‘If, With All Your Hearts’. He was honorary organist at Wilton for about a year, after it installed a pipe organ in 1886. He was said to be ‘a modest, retiring man’. He died at 2 Wilton Hill and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Neil (b.1812/3) from Dunoon in Argyll, he was schoolmaster at Chesters, Southdean Parish around the 1840s to 1860s. He is listed as master of Southdean Parish School in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Shiel, who was sister of Thomas, schoolmaster at Hobkirk, and they had a son Malcolm T.S. He is recorded in 1866 as Registrar, Session Clerk and Inspector of Poor and still Inspector of Poor for the Parish in 1868. He also acted as postmaster for Chesters. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aires in 1494/5. Peter (b.1766) son of James and Betty Turnbull. He was a mason in Hawick. He lived at 19 Howe-gate in 1841 and 1851. He was probably the Peter who was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in about 1798. Richard ‘Dick’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as ‘Dyk Talzour’ and he may have been from Ewesdale. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. His surety was Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. He was convicted for intercommuning with Adam and Thomas Turnbull, who had been declared rebels for the slaughter of Patrick Hepburn. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with John Scott of Wyndheid, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. He was presumably a merchant or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1691 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Isobel Renwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1706. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Brown and their children included Janet (b.1722). In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for John Easton in Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the Robert, son of John, born in 1703 in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Tobaccoist’ when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant James Douglas; this may be one of the earliest recorded instances of this word being used as an occupation. He was involved in a court case in 1748, in which he had taken £29 from his aunt Jean Taylor, getting Robert Tudhope to pretend to have borrowed it, but in fact he used it to pay a bill to merchant Thomas Turnbull; there he was stated to be a ‘writer’ (but that may be in error); he was stated to be a tobaccoist in the related case brought by Turnbull against Tudhope. He is stated to be a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull (from Hawick Shiels) in 1745. He married Margaret Douglas (proclaimed in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and their children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant James Douglas (surely related to his wife) and gardener Robert Turnbull, and in 1745 were Walter Turnbull from Hawick Shiels (whose own baptism he had witnessed on the same day) and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska. Robert M. ‘Rob’ (20th C.) published ‘Teviot Reaches’ in 1951, containing sketches and etchings around the Teviot. Ronald ‘Ron’ (?)– headmaster at Burnfoot Primary School who wrote the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding’, with the help of the Callants’ Club in 1983. He was unfortunately to later become Headmaster at Dunblane Primary School and witness the terrible aftermath of the shootings in 1996. He returned to Hawick as Common Riding Chief Guest in 1997. Thomas (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside being inherited by Hector Lorraine. He was probably local, like the other witnesses. Thomas (b.1829/30) born in Holywood, Dumfriesshire, he was a surgeon in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. His wife was Mary Ann and their children included John T.E., James Joseph and Mary. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Talzour Baron de Hassindene’ in 1493. He is otherwise unknown as Baron there, so perhaps the translation should be ‘of the Barony’. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for ‘communing with the English’, the Laird of Buccleuch serving as his surety. It is unclear how he might have been related to any other Taylors. Walter Noble (17th C.) tenant at Effledge who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for being a Covenantter. Walter (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1733 when he married Bessie Blyth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Janet Nichols in 1758. He was at Whihope in 1761. His children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (1761). Walter (b.1809) born at Swanshiel, he was a younger son of John, who had farmed at Unthank. He worked on the farm at Hawahill, becoming tenant there. In 1849 he was listed on the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was still there in the 1860s, being listed as a widower in 1861. In 1834 he married Margaret Gow (whose mother was Margaret Barry). She was said to be a very beautiful woman, who died in childbirth in 1848. Their children were: John, who worked on the farm at Hawahill; Isabella; George, who emigrated to New Zealand; Thomas, who lived at Hawahill and died there from blood-poisoning, caused by an axe cut; William, who went to Australia, but returned to Howahill; Margaret; and Walter. Walter (18th/19th C.) brother of John. He farmed at Higendl in Rulewater. His children were John (b.1805), Agnes (b.1806) and Betty (b.1809). Walter (19th/20th C.) son of William, with his mother being a daughter of Dr. Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. William (17th C.) tenant in Groundistone. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. William (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed as ‘Wm Tylzer’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he is the William, son of James and Bessie Scott, born in Hawick in 1644. He could be the William, married to Isobel Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick were Bessie (b.1674), Elspeth (b.1677), Helen (b.1680), Marion (b.1682), Taylorcleuchheid

Janet (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1687); the 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter Purdom and William Haswell, the 1682 baptism by Walter Purdom and Andrew Hart and the 1685 baptism by Walter Paisley and James Gray. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was at Todshawhill in 1781. He married Betty Laidlaw in Robertson in 1778 and their children included: James (b.1781); Janet (b.1788); and Betty (b.1792). He is probably the son of David (who lived at Todshawhill) baptised in Robertson in 1756. William (b.c.1780) from England, he was a farmer at Neustead in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Anne. He could be the William recorded as a labourer at Appletreehall in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1821) son of Walter (although which one is unclear), he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer living at Howahill Cottage (while Walter was farmer at Howahill itself). He married Mary Crozier in 1847. Their children included: Margaret; Janet; and Walter. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk and was a trustee. William (b.1840s) son of Walter and Margaret Gow. He went to Australia in his early life, but returned to the family farm at Howahill. He was a County Councillor for Hobkirk Parish. In 1886 he married a daughter of Dr. Pringle in Dundee and they had 5 children. William (1847/8–1916) from the Newhouses family, he was farmer at Ashbybank. He was also a cattle dealer in Hawick and owned 10 Teviot Crescent. He married Barbara, daughter of blacksmith James Murray, and she died in 1911, aged 62. Their children included: George B. (d.1917), killed at Mahiwa, British East Africa; Christian R. (d.1926); William (d.1954); James (d.1955); Isabella Murray (d.1955); Eliza Litster (d.1958); Robert (d.1959) The family are buried in Denholm. Rev. William minister of St. Mary’s, Cavers and Kirkton 1899–2004 (formerly ‘Tailyeour’, ‘Tailzeour’, ‘Talzor’, ‘Tylear’, ‘Tyler’ and variants).

Taylorcleuchheid (tā-hur-klooch-heed) n. Taylorcleuchhead, former farm in Liddesdale, situated around the stream marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It consisted of 217 acres, bounded by Riccarton, Cleuchhead, lands held by the Laird of Dinalabyre and Roughley. The farmhouse was shown on the west side of a stream, possibly Todshaw Sike, and this could be the place where post-mediæval remains were discovered in 1977. This could be the ‘Taylor Gate’ where labourer William Potts was living in 1797 (see also Taylor’s Cleuch).

Taylor’s Cleuch (tā-hurz-klooch) n. stream that runs roughly eastward to join the Liddel Water south of Larriston. There are remains of an enclosure between here and the old railway line. It was partly excavated in 1977 before being surrounded by forest. It appears to be prehistoric with later occupation. There are also some mediæval and post-mediæval remains a little to the east by Todshaw Sike. It may have been called ‘Tailorcleuchside’ or Taylorcleuchheid.

Tayot (tā-yot, -yot) n. occasional spelling meant to denote the former pronunciation of ‘Teviot’.

TD9 (tee-dee-nū) n. postcode district for Hawick. ‘TD’ is the area designation for Teviotdale, with ‘TD9’ being the district including Hawick, which is divided into sectors 0, 7, 8 and 9. The postcode system was introduced in 1966.

teicup (ti-kup) n. a teacup.
tei leafs (tei-leeds) n., pl. tea leaves.
teind barn (tind-bawrn) n., arch. a barn used for storing the grain that was collected as a ‘teind’, called a ‘tythe-barn’ in England. The ruins of the old example in Spittal-on-Rule can still be seen.

the Teind Barn (thin-tind-bawrn) n. ruined building in Spittal-on-Rule. It was still thatched until the early 1900s, and was said by Tancred to be the oldest building in the parish.

the Teind Court (thin-tind-kôr) n. court set up after the Reformation, to deal with the value and sale of teinds, and the adequate provision for local ministers. It was a court within the Court of Session, set up to decide on matters of valuation of teinds, stipends for ministers, etc. After 1707 its powers passed to the Court of Session.

teiender an thirder (tind-dur-an-thir-dur) n., arch. a person who occupies arable land at a rent equal to 2/5th of the produce (1 tenth and another 3 tenths) – ‘...the damage done to the corn at Whitlaw was comprised, and that Patrick Scott and John Gladstains paid the damage to the teinder and the thirder out of their own pocket ...’ [C&L].

Teindside (tind-, teind-sid) n. farm on the A7 south of Newmill, as well as the name for the general area, also referred to as ‘Teinside’. The lands were owned by a branch of the Abernethy family from at least the late 14th century, passing from Sir William to his older brother James in 1393; they were at that time described as lying in the Barony of Hawick, with Archibald, Earl of Douglas as superior. The Abernethys sold the lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1494. In 1446/7 Oswald Abernethy appeared before William, Earl of Douglas at Newark and publicly asserted that his only superior of these lands was the Baron of Hawick. The lands were recorded belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenanydry’ by the Baron of Hawick. However, in 1572 they were included among those held ‘in property’ by the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The Scotts of Buccleuch held lands there since at least the early 1500s, although Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is listed among the property of the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1594 and 1615. In 1627 they were listed as a ‘25 merk land’ producing ‘500 merks in stok, and to 100 merks in teynd’. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653 and 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. James Grieve was tenant there in 1709. In 1724 Gideon Elliot purchased the lands from his brother Robert. James Scott was living there in 1731. Thomas Watson owned the lands in the early 18th century and sold them to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1750. There were Murrays living there in the mid-1700s to early 1800s. Thomas Barrie was there in 1788. By 1788 it was valued at £426 13s 4d and still the same in 1811, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. Gideon Scott was there in 1797 and David Murray in 1799. Robert Elliot was farmer in 1841 and Robert Govenlock in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort on the Slaidhill, which lies above, near the source of the Teinside Burn, and 2 more on Teindside Hill. Ancient burial cists were found there in 1869, with an excavation carried out by Dr. Brydon and Lord Rosehall. And there are signs of ‘cord rig’ cultivation there also (also spelled ‘Tynside’, ‘Teinside’, etc., and possibly formerly pronounced tind-; the origin is possibly Old Welsh ‘din’ and Old English ‘side’, meaning ‘the slope by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Theynyside’ in 1393, is ‘Tenside’ in 1446/7, ‘Teynside’ in 1494, ‘tynysde’ in 1502, ‘Teneside’ in 1511, ‘Tenside’ in 1528/9, ‘Tenesyde’ and ‘Teneside’ in 1572, ‘Teyndsye’ in 1595, ‘Teynsye’ in 1627, ‘Tyneside’ in 1634, ‘Tynesyd’ in 1653 and 1663, ‘Teyndsyd’ in 1661, ‘Teanside’ in 1731 and ‘Tein-side’ in 1839; it is ‘Teensydhall’ on both Blaeu’s 1654 map and Gordon’s c. 1650 map).
Teindside Brig

Teindside Brig (teind-sid-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot just after Teindside. It was built as part of the development of the toll road, which became the A7, perhaps around 1762. At the same time as it was built the road was improved from the bridge to Teindside farm, past the Horse Pool. A new bridge was built around the 1930s. A farm adjacent to the bridge was formerly known by the same name and also called 'Teindsidebrae'. Walter Hogg was living there in 1779–84 and William Gledstains in 1784. Alexander Miller was tenant there in 1797, when it is 'Teindside Bridge'. William Lamb was Taylor at 'Teindside Bridgend' in 1790. Hugh Johnstone and John Cairns and families lived there in 1841 and 1851 (it is 'Teinside bridgend' in 1781 and 'Tiendsidebrigend' in 1783).

Teindside Burn (tind-sid-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot (from roughly the northwest) near Teindside. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail. The lands there are listed along with Teinside among the lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands there were purchased by the Scotts of Buccleuch about 1660. As it runs down from Slaidhills there is a waterfall in a ravine. A little further down there was once a cottage, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Walter Hogg was farmer there in 1797, when Andrew Elliot was also there (it is 'Tynessydburne' in 1615, 'Teyndsideburne' in the mid-17th century, 'Teindsideburn' about 1755 and 'Teindsideburn' in 1797; 'Teindburnfoot' is marked on Stobie’s map of 1770).

Teindside Hill (tind-sid-hil) n. hill lying on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, north of Teindside Lodge. It contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, almost obliterated by cultivation. The one near the summit probably measured about 120m by 65m, while the one to the south sits on a rocky knoll, measuring about 60m by 20m, with a deep ditch on the north side. There were local excavations there by Mr. Govenlock in 1873, finding a ‘hut eight feet square’. There is a further fort just to the north-west near Slaidhill. Additionally, there is a modern cairn, called ‘Bert’s Cairn’, with an inscribed stone.

Teindside Ludge (tind-sid-luj, -loj) n. house in Teviothead, also known as Commonsdie Cottage, situated on the side road to Commonside. It was once a farmhouse on the Buccleuch estate. Recently and part of the house has been let out for holiday accommodation. Just inside the entrance gate is a turf-covered cairn about 15m in diameter.

Teindsideslope (tind-sid-slop) n. former farmstead near Teindside. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls John Irvine is recorded as farmer there, with 3 working horses. Alexander Johnson was there in 1799. David Cairns and Robert Walker lived there in 1841 and Constable Michael Oliver in 1851 (also written as 'Teindsloope'; it is ‘Tiendsidesloap’ in 1797).

teind yaird (tind-yar-d-) n., arch. a yard used to store the produce collected as tithes – 'Item, to James Scott, servant, for keeping of the teynd yaird of Hawik, bigging the dykes thereof, and heiding the stakys the samyn the said year, eightine pundys' [SB1633].

Teiwi (tee-vee) n. earliest known form of ‘Teviot’, recorded around the year 600.

Telfer (tel-fur, tal-fur) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Grainfoot. He is recorded in 1797 among men of Castleton Parish balloted for serving in the Militia. Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lilloco (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts in 1861. Andrew (b.1808/9) from Hownam he was a shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. His wife was Mina and their children included John, Helen and Anne. Andrew Hunter Cowan (1845–1916) born at Lethem in Southdean Parish, son of shepherd William. It is said that he was the first to be baptised in the Presbyterian tradition in Wolfelee Free Kirk and was thus named ‘Cowan’ after the minister. He attended school in Chesters and at the age of 16 apprenticed to joiner Gilbert Amos there. In 1867 or 1868 he moved to Edinburgh, where he became Chair of the Trades Council, being involved in the large demonstration organised after the failure of the Franchise Bill in 1884. He was then on the School Board and became a City Councillor in 1889, being regarded as the first working-class man to hold such a position in Edinburgh. As Convenor of the Plans and Works Committee, he was involved with the merging of Portobello with Edinburgh, with improvement in the fire brigade and with city control of street lighting. Also on the Library Committee, he helped establish a free library in Edinburgh. In 1899 he became a Bailie and was also a Justice of the Peace. He was actively involved in the Edinburgh Borderers Club. His wife was Elizabeth and they had 6 children. Archibald (18th C.) married Christian Liddell in Wilton in 1729. Rev. Charles (1693–1731) minister of Hawick Parish 1723–31. He was the son of an Edinburgh Magistrate, also Charles, who was Captain of the Trained Band. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1712, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1719 (after reluctantly signing the Confession of Faith) and came to Hawick in 1721 as an assistant to Robert Cunningham. He helped lead sermons in Hawick while the minister was in ill-health. He was presented as the new Minister by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch at the end of 1722 and ordained early the following year (after the Hawick elders petitioned the Presbytery ‘for putting a quick end of Mr Talefer’s tryals’). He is said to have borrowed heavily from Shaftsbury’s ‘Characteristics’ and other essays for his sermons, and to have had an ascetic temper and a high opinion of himself. He witnessed baptisms in 1723 for surgeon Walter Scott in 1724 for workman Robert ‘Huison’, in 1725 for merchant Thomas Thomson, for William Cathrae in Closses and for merchant Andrew Turnbull, and in 1728 for Thomas Turnbull (it was unusual for the serving minister to be a witness). In 1724 he complained about drunkenness at the Common Riding and in 1725 he proposed that 2 members of the Kirk Session should inspect ‘the families on this town who give ale or brandie, either at the outgoing or incoming of the horsemen and footmen’. But, surprisingly, he reported afterwards that ‘he was well pleased with the deportment and behaviour of those who were at the riding of the Common’. He is recorded preaching before the Lord High Commissioner in 1730 and was called before the Committee on Overshores the next day ‘for certain comparisons which he had used’, but the objections were dropped without censure. He married Katherine Elliot of Arkleton (widow of David Laing of Westerkirk) in 1727 in Hawick, and she lived until at least 1746. They had a daughter Christian Ann baptised in Hawick in 1730, with witnesses Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and ‘Mr Cunninghame’ (probably Patrick). Christian Lillico (1835–1909) daughter of James, Schoolmaster at Saughtree. She ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, also known as the ‘Brig End Schuil’. She was teacher there in at least the 1860s. Confusingly, she was known as ‘Catherine’, as well as ‘Christina’. She died in Newcastleton. Christina (b.1796/7) tollhouse keeper at the Townhead Toll in Newcastleton. She was a widow in 1861, with daughter Elspeth and grand-daughter Christina. David (b.1824/5) son of John, he was farmer at Braithanhugh in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 500 acres there, employing 4 labourers. David (1945/6–2010) from Hawick, he joined Aberdeen Journals in 1973, becoming motoring correspondent, business correspondent, industrial correspondent and business editor. He was then editor of North of Scotland Publications, before returning to the position of business reporter. He married Moira and had children Ross, Robbie, Colin and Lesley. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (b.1828/9) born in Hawick Parish, she was daughter of Jane, who was teacher at the girls’ school set up in Cavers in the mid-19th century. By 1861 she was the main teacher at Cavers Cottages, with Margaret Grierson as assistant teacher. George (16th C.) recorded in Dodhead in 1579 when he made an agreement with John Lauder in Singlie to exchange their lands at the end of a year. He promised, along with Adam Scott of Bonnington, to pay Lauder for tack of a quarter of the ‘rowne’. There is surely a connection with the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o the Fair Dodhead’. George (17th C.) tenant near Adderstoneshiel listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenant. He could be the George ‘Telfoord’ listed as shepherd at Addeerstoneshiel among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) herd at Nether Southfield. He married Mary Thomason and their daughter Euphan was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Ekron in 1758. George (18th/19th C.) master of the English School in Hawick until 1822. George (1797–) joined Hawick Boxing Club along with his childhood friend Colin Bain, when they were 11, later joining Hawick Royal Albert Boxing Club in 1998. He had more than 200 amateur fights, boxing for Scotland, with a highlight being winning the Scottish Welterweight Championship in Hawick Town Hall. He had 9 professional bouts in 2003–05, winning 7 and losing 2. James (16th C.) tenant in Huntly and servant to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1579. There was a complaint that the neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn had taken his horse, claiming that it had crossed the march dyke and was pasturing on Hutlerburn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ash Kirk Parish, son of William in North Synton. He married Bessie ‘Hutsone’ and their son William was baptised in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1705. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. His children included Agnes (b.1704) and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Adam and William Scott. He could be the James who married Bessie ‘Hutson’ in Ash Kirk in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: Jean (b.1716); and Isobel (b.1722). Perhaps the same James had a son William baptised in 1718 (with his wife’s name recorded as ‘Jean’). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1716 when he married Jane Stewart and at Deanhead in 1722. His children included: Jenet (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). James (18th C.) recorded in Chapelhill in 1726 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the James who married Isobel Bell in Roberton in 1718. James (18th C.) recorded being in Southdean Parish in 1747 when his marriage to Anne Maxwell was announced in Melrose Parish, with John Young as cautioner. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1761 he married Isabel Howison from Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Dinlabyre. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. James (d.1824) dyker whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1797/8) from Langholm, he was an inn-keeper in Newcastleton. In the 1850s he was proprietor of the Buccleuch Arms on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Mary. In 1852 his name was given as ‘Telford’. James (1800–62) son of shepherd John and Isabella Taylor, with his step-mother being Anne Davidson, he was referred to as ‘the poetic schoolmaster of Saughtree’ in Liddesdale. He was born in Southdean Parish, although the census records of 1851 and 1861 state he was born in Oxnam Parish. He had 2 aunts who lived in a cottage near Battlingburn in Southdean Parish, and a story is told of one of them seeing a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) the night the other one died. He was first employed as a shepherd, but then became a teacher to the children of shepherds in the Jedhead area. He was a great admirer of the James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’, who he got to know in his youth and who inspired and encouraged him to write poetry. In about 1824 he was stopped from attending a trial in Jedburgh by the Burgh Officer there, ‘Lang Eaby’ (or ‘Ebey’), and in revenge he wrote a satirical ballad ‘The Fearfu’ Hinderend of Lang Eaby’. This became popular locally, and it is said that Sir Walter Scott enjoyed reading it; he was also said to be concerned that the poem was potentially libellous and so picked out a hiding place to flee to if any suspicious person approached his dwelling. He was self-taught, becoming schoolmaster in Castleton in 1827 and was at Saughtree from 1834 until he died. He was listed at Saughtree among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was referred to as ‘the poetic schoolmaster’, since he wrote several ballads, including a long one ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’ about an encounter between a shepherdsness and a fairy. A version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’ was transcribed by him from an old woman called Kitty Hall (who lived at Fairloans... near the head of the Kale). He published poems in the Newcastle Magazine (as well as a series of articles called ‘Literary Gossip’) and also in the Tyne Mercury, among other places. His first book was ‘Border Ballads and other Miscellaneous Poems’ (1824), which was dedicated to the Ettrick Shepherd; although it contains language that is rather pastoral (i.e. flowery), nevertheless it contains many dialect words that were probably common at the time and would otherwise be unrecorded. This collection contains his best-known poem, ‘The Gloomyne Buchte’, as well as ‘Auld Ringan’, about Ninian Oliver from Smailcleugh-foot. ‘The Gloomyne Buchte’ was published on its own in 1843 and was additionally contained within Vol II of the ‘Local Historian’s Table-book’ in 1844. He also contributed to Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’. Additionally, he wrote a novel ‘Barbara Gray, or the Widow’s Daughter: A Narrative of Humble Life’ (1835). This was incorporated into an extensive volume of stories and verse ‘Tales and Ballads’ (1862), dedicated to the Duke of Northumberland (including a substantially revised ‘Auld Ringan’); at the end there is a statement about another book, ‘Border Gatherings’, being in preparation, but this never appeared. It is said that he never earned more than £20 per year, and so must have struggled to raise a family. His house was a simple ‘but and ben’, with the ‘but’ being where his family stayed, and the ‘ben’ being the schoolroom. It was described how he would sometimes tell his class ‘in a quiet, conversational way, and in the pure Border doric, of what he had been reading’, including treating them to ‘a captivating lecture on the tales and traditions of our Borderland’. He was a great friend of Robert White of Newcastle, who wrote about the history of Northumberland and the Border. He is probably the ‘schoolmaster, likewise a poet’ mentioned being antagonistic to John Halliday publishing his own verses in 1847. He married Janet Beattie (1818–89) daughter of Robert Cook in 1844. He left to become the Scottish Rugby Union’s Director of Rugby. Jane nee Bunyan (b.1805) daughter of Thomas, was born in Cavers Parith, where she married James in 1827. By 1841 she was a widow, working as a dressmaker at West Middle. By 1851 she was teacher at a school for girls in Cavers. Her daughter Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) and Jemima assisted at the school, with another relative Catherine Rutherford also being an assistant teacher. She was presumably dead by 1861, when Elizabeth was the main teacher at the school. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cook and their son Robert was baptised in 1685. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robson and their son John was baptised in 1688. Helen (b.1693) and Margaret (b.1694) may also have been his children, although no mother’s name is recorded. John (17th C.) resident of Peelbrae listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the John ‘Talefert’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme) in 1740. Perhaps the same John, ‘Coater’ at Branxholme, although no mother’s name is recorded. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John, ‘Coater’ at Branxholme, witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme) in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bettie Muir and their children included: Mary (b.1727); Jean (b.1730); and Janet (b.1732). Charles (b.1735), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. John (18th C.) Beadle at Hawick Kirk in the 1740s. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms for flesher Robert Wilson in 1730, for William Helm and for George Oliver in 1731 and for Robert Riddell in 1733. He is recorded as ‘Officer’ or ‘Kirk Officer’ when he witnessed further baptisms in 1737, 1738, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745 and 1747. He may also be the John who witnessed other baptisms in 1738 and 1746. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1742), James (b.1743), James (again, b.1744), Jean (b.1745), Margaret (b.1747), Robert (b.1747), Margaret (b.1751), John (b.1753) and Margaret (b.1755). There may be 2 families here. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merrylaw in 1755. He married Helen Learmonth and their son William was baptised in 1755. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1757. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1761. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son George was baptised in 1766. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1771. John (18th C.) shepherd at Braidlie on Hermitage Water in about 1750. He married Agnes Main and was recorded at Braidlie in 1777 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Castleton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1766 when his son George was baptised. He may be the John who married Janet Pringle in Roberton in 1765. His name is written ‘Telford’, although he is probably related to the earlier Telfers who were at Howpasley. John (18th C.) listed along with Thomas as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuers of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) tenant in Hassendean listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gillbraehead in 1868. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Stothart in Hawick Parish in 1718. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 and 1760 for shoemaker John Oliver and in 1766 for wright Gideon Easton. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1778 for ex-Bailie Andrew.
Scott. He may be the Robert who was paid by the Council in 1755 for the use of his horse ‘to Kelso, pressed by Bailie Turnbull, with a shouldier [soldier] and his wife’. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in Hawick in 1797. He may be the same man as the blacksmith. Robert (18th/19th C.) herd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (b.1803/4) clogger living on North Hemitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851 and 1861. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son, John. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1696. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1696); and Walter (b.1699). The witnesses in 1696 were Adam Scott and William Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was a workman at Blackcleuch when his daughter Mary was baptised, with witnesses John Scott ‘Uncle John’ and Walter Elliot in Commonbrae. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1733. His children included William (b.1731) and Helen (b.1733). Thomas (18th C.) listed along with John as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) sheepherd at Northbank in Southdean Parish.  In 1797 and 1799 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. Thomas (18th/19th C.) sheepherd at Rouchope in 1799 according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He is probably distinct from the sheepherd at Northbank. Thomas (b.c.1770s) wright at Bitchlaw recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Walter (17th C.) shepherd in Ormiston listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Telfoord’, but he was surely related to other Telfers living nearby. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, who was living at Galalaw in 1748. He married Janet Telfer in Cavers in 1740. Their children included: Jean (b.1748); and John (b.1750). The witnesses in 1748 were Walter Scott and George Lamb. Walter (1800–57) born in Hawick, 2nd son of William. He trained as a silk merchant in Edinburgh and spent 2 years in Jamaica settling an uncle’s estate before training as a doctor in Edinburgh. In 1824 he emigrated to Stamford (Niagara Falls), Upper Canada. He established a medical practice at Niagara and moved to Toronto in 1835 and sat on several medical bodies. He became Superintendent of the Provincial Lunatic Asylum in 1845, but was dismissed in 1848 over charges that he vigorously denied. He then returned to private practice. He married Euphemia Denham and they had 1 daughter. Walter (b.1827/8) son of John, he was farmer at Braithwaugh near Bonchester in 1868. He was brother of David, who was farmer at Braithwaugh before him. William (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. Along with Thomas Pott (also in Howpasley) and several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. He could be the William in Stirches whose son William was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1683; the witnesses were George Scott and James Halliwell. William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded in 1698 when his son James had a child baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. Thomas (1757–1834) son of a shepherds, born at Glendinning on the Meggat Water, in Westerkirk Parish, not far from Langholm. His father died the year he was born and he later carved his father’s gravestone in Westerkirk Kirkyard. He became an engineer who was famous for road, canal and bridge construction, including the Menai Suspension Bridge in Wales. He worked on the Langholm Bridge over the Esk as an apprentice stonemason, and gave a bequest to keep the Westerkirk Library going in Bentpath and another to establish a library in Langholm. He was one of the first to suggest a Borders railway line, specifically a horse-drawn railway running from Berwick to Glasgow. He also published a poem ‘Eskdale’, which was printed in Hawick in the ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. Locally he was sometimes known as ‘Laughing Tom’. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William (b.1810/1) from Langholm, he was recorded as steward at Todshawhill in Robertson Parish in 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Mina. William (19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as teacher at Castleton. It is unclear who he was or where exactly the school was located. It is possible this was an error for James Telfer. William Pattison (1836–1922) son of William Pattison and Elizabeth Murray. He was born in Newcastleton and educated in Dumfriesshire and then in Ontario, Canada. He worked as a stone-cutter and a teacher, later becoming a banker. He was elected a member of the Canadian House of Commons for Grey North in 1904, but was defeated in 1908. His son, William Pattison, Junior, was also a Canadian Member of Parliament (formerly spelled ‘Tailford’, ‘Tailfourd’, ‘Talliefer’, ’Tyffoord’, etc., and once probably the same as Telfer).

Telio’s (tee-lee-oż) n. cafe, chip shop, and ice-cream shop run by Telio Gonnella (apparently he was named after the village the family come from) in the mid-20th century on Dickson Street. There was another shop for a while on Green Terrace, and Telio also ran the hut near the top of the Loan as a fish and chip shop.

Temperance Hall (tem-pu-rins-hal, tem-prins-haw) n. former meeting hall at 6 Croft Road, the site now occupied by the Salvation Army Citadel. It was constructed in 1879 and initially run by Miss Thomson, a daughter of the local minister. In about 1900 it was converted into a picture house, ‘The Theatre’.

Temperance Hotels (tem-pu-rins-hō-tel) n. alcohol-free hotels, which were popular in the latter 19th century, some lasting until WWII. In Hawick the Douglas Temperance Hotel was situated on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now, Gibson’s was on Bridge Street, Inglis’s on Teviotside Terrace, Pringle’s on Union Street, and the Washington Hotel at the ‘Coffin End’. The Bucleuch and Victoria Hotels were also temperance for a time, and there were others, such as Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel.

the Temperance Movement (thu-tem-pu-rins-moov-min’) n. a social trend to recognise the evils of alcohol, which flourished towards the end of the 19th century, and died out between the Wars. The British Association for the Promotion of Temperance was formed in 1835 and, supported by some of the churches, it led to organised signing of teetotal declarations and the setting up of rigorously teetotal establishments. Locally the first such organisation was started in 1832, but still allowed the drinking of beers. The Hawick Total Abstinence Society was founded in 1838, with members pledging to avoid all intoxicating beverages. They lasted into the early 20th century, and had a popular annual soirée. There were also the Temperance Hotels (some lasting until WWII), the Temperance Burns Club, and even Temperance tents up the Muir. In 1920 a referendum to have alcohol banned in Hawick was opposed by a majority – ‘Ye’ve been the cause o’ muckle wae, O’ meikle saith and scorn; I’ll sign the pledge this very day! Fareweel, John Barleycorn!’ [JT].

Tempest (tem-pist) n. Sir John of Hertford (d.bef. 1379) son of Sir John of Bracewell, and younger brother of the next Sir John of Bracewell. His brother Peter married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. He was English Sheriff of Roxburgh and Berwick, as well as Governor of the Castles of Berwick, Roxburgh and Scarborough in the period 1351–75. He married 3 times. Sir Thomas (c.1476–1543/4) son of Robert of Holmside, he served in many positions in the north of England. He was in joint charge, along with Sir William Bulmer, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523. This raid led to his knighthood. His daughter Anne married Sir Ralph Bulmer. He was one of the English commissioners for negotiating peace with Scotland in 1528.

tempit (tem-pee’, -pi’) pp., poet. tempted – ‘Whan your faethers tempt me, pruvet me, an’ saw my wark’ [HSR].

the Templar’s Hall (thu-tem-plurz-hal, -haw) n. former name for the hall of the L.O.G.T. – ‘... We laurned oor bible in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wilson’s Mill’ [WL].

Temple (tem-pul) n. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. His son William was baptised in Minto in 1773. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Alexander (b.1774), Violet (b.1781) and Temple Croft

Helen (b.1775). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James (b.1779) and Nelly (b.1782). James (c.1770s–bef. 1841) recorded as a wright in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was a joiner of the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census his wife Helen Oliver and 5 children were living at about 33 High Street, with his sons carrying on the cabinet-maker’s business. His children included: Helen (b.1805); James (b.1807); Robert (b.1810); Janet (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); Marion (b.1815); John (b.1817); Margaret (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married May Halden and their son James was baptised in 1816. James (b.1807/8) son of James. He was listed as a High Street joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a master joiner and cabinet-maker, employing 7 men, at about 55 High Street. In 1847 he married Jane Turnbull, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Margaret (b.1848), Robert (b.1850), Helen (b.1852) and William Turnbull (b.1854). R. (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1722 for a ‘jist to the steeple’. He was thus probably a wright or joiner in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Whitriggs in 1737. His children included: James (b.1733); and David (b.1737). Perhaps the same Robert had children William (b.1724), Isabel (b.1726) and Janet (b.1728) baptised in Jedburgh and a son Robert (b.1731) baptised in Ancrum. Robert (1771/2–1827) surgeon in Newcastle. He subscribed to (to 2 copies of) William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Elliot (1777/8–c.1858). She is recorded in 1841 as ‘Ind’ at about 2 South Hermitage Street; in 1851 she was listed as a grocer, maiden name Elliot, living with her widowed daughter Kitty Scott (nee Temple) and granddaughter Helen Scott. His daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) married Matthew Scott in 1836 and secondly married James Crosby in 1851. He was recorded as a surgeon at Nether Stone in Newcastleton Parish at the end of the 18th century, when he had children baptised there. His children included: Helen (b.1797), who married and moved to Canada; and Janet (b.1799), also known as ‘Jessie’, who married (probably a Robinson) in Newcastleton. He was buried at Ettilton. Thomas (b.1805/6) born in Minto Parish, he was toll-keeper at Spittal. He was recorded at Spittal Bar in 1851 and in 1861 was a miller living at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Jane and their children included Alison, Betsy, William, Andrew, Thomas and James. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Hillend in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799.

Temple Croft (tem-pul-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was among lands whose liferent was held by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779. It was listed in 1779 and 1811, along with ‘Notman-shot’, with a joint value of £76 16s 8d (it was ‘Templecrofts’ in 1780).

Templehaa (tem-pul-haw, -hal) n. Templehall, farm east of Harwood, near Wauchope. David Crozier ‘at the Tempilhall’ is recorded among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5 and 1500, although whether this was the same place is uncertain. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Wauchopebank at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. There is a 1567 charter of the lands, together with Brewlands, granted by James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 there was an action by Jean and Beatrice, daughters of the deceased Walter Turnbull of Wauchope, to remove their mother Marion Lorraine and several Turnbulls from their lands of Templehall and Brewlands. They later passed to George Turnbull of Wauchope, then to Sir James Douglas of Mordington in 1627 and later to the Earl of Lothian. The Earl of Lothian paid tax on £300 for his lands there in about 1663. It was listed as a 4-pound land in 1678, when inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule. At about that time it must have been valued at £229 15s 4d (based on Kerr of Abbotrules other lands). Adam Murray was tenant there in 1694. The farm then passed from William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751 and then immediately to Henry Elliot of Harwood. In 1788 the farm was listed among those owned by William Elliot of Harwood and valued at £229 15s 4d. In 1794 and 1797 the tenants were John and Thomas Clerk. William Hastie was a servant there in 1797 and Henry Johnstone and James Dodds in 1799. In about 1811 it was still part of the Harwood estate and valued at £262 10s. John Elliot was there in the early part of the 19th century and James Smith was farmer there in the 1860s. It is also the name of a hill to the south-west, between the Lurgies Burn and the Wauchope Burn. Just north-west of the farm are the remains of a settlement, with the most visible feature being a 75-m long crescent-shaped ridge. On the slope to the south are the remains of an ancient cairn. There is also a place of the same name near Lilliesleaf that is suggested to have had connections with the Knight’s Templar, with a ‘Temple’ near St. Boswells perhaps having a similar origin (it is ‘Templihall’ in 1538, 1539 and 1604 and ‘Timpilhall’ in 1683; it is marked ‘Templi halt’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templehaa Common (tem-pul-haw-ko-min) n. Templehall Common, the commonty associated with the neighbouring lands, with uncertain history. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1719, and in 1734 it was arranged by James, Lord Craigmoun and William Kerr of Abbotrule. At that point it was possessed by the tenants of Wauchope and Templehall. It could be the same place marked ‘Wauchope Common’ on the modern Ordnance Survey map, to the east of Templehall Hill.

Templehaashiel (tem-pul-haw-shiel) n. Templehallshiel, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, on the western banks of the Wauchope Burn, near Templehall Hill. William Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 18th century, Alexander Lillico shortly before 1788 and John Elliot lived there in the 1810s (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templelands (tem-pul-lawndz) n. Former lands in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Tempyllandys’ in the c.1376 rental roll. They were part of the lands owned by the church, but their precise location is uncertain (there is a place of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

the Temple o the Muses (thu-tem-pul-ö-thu-new-zeez) n. Monument in the form of a classical Greek pavilion, erected in 1817 by David Erskine as a memorial to the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’ fame). It is situated on Bass Hill beside the Tweed, and near to Erskine’s house at Dryburgh. It contains a bust of Thomson, and the original statue of Apollo having long since disappeared a new statue by Siobhan O’Hehir replaced it.

tenand (te-nand) n., arch. A tenant – ‘... and to becum tennand to me and thain of the sammy’ [SB1470].

tenandry (te-nandree) n., arch. Land that is leased from a superior, the condition of being a tenant, tenancy – ‘... tennandry of lande if Hendenword with the pertinentis lyande within the soyleze of Borthwicshellis ...’ [DoR1445], ‘... with tenenttis, tennandrijis and service of frie tenenttis of the samyn, with the pertinentis, lland within the baronie of Branhxhelme ...’ [SB1569].

tendid (ten-dee’, -di’) pp. Tended – ‘The hills where he herdit are Bonnie and Green. The hirsel he tendit is white i’ the glen’ [JoHa].

tenement (te-ne-min’) n., arch. A piece of land in a town held under some form of tenure and often built upon – ‘... upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ... ’ [JW1558], ‘... befor ane of the bailllies of the burcht of Hawik and their purelie and semplice resigne the said tenement of land’ [PR1571].

Tennant (te-nin’) n. Hugh (19th C.) married Mary Halliday in Hawick in 1840. Rev. Joseph (c.1575–c.1633) from Listoenschiel, he was son of John of Cairms, Mid-Calder. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595, was licensed in 1598 and ordained at Traquair in 1599. He was translated to Bedrule in 1601/2. He added responsibility for Abbotrule in 1605, when he is recorded being presented to the parsonage and vicarage on the death of Alexander Crichton. He appears to have been translated back to Bedrule again in 1608/9 and the reality appears to be that he held both benefices simultaneously for about 15 years. In 1616 he had a bond with Robert Turnbull in Bedrule. He witnessed a bond for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1623 (also said by Tancred to have been witnessed by Thomas Tennant in Ruecastle, but this may be an error for Thomas Turnbull). He appears to have been deprived in about 1621, when Abbotrule was again disjoined from Bedrule. He is still recorded as a resident in Bedrule in mid-1632 (leasing ‘Roullis land’). He died before the end of 1633 (probably unmarried), when his brother John of Cairns became heir to a tenement in Edinburgh and land at ‘Listoenschellis’. Katharine see Katharine Elliot (also spelled ‘Tennent’).

Tennant’s Map (te-nints-map) n. map of Roxburghshire published in 1840 and surveyed by N. Tennant. It was the most detailed map of the county before the Ordnance Survey. This can also refer to Walter Tennant’s ‘Plan of the Town of Hawick and Environs’, which was published in 1850.

and again is the best record of the layout of Hawick streets and buildings before the large-scale Ordnance Survey maps.

tennis (te-nis) n. raquet ball game traditionally played by people in white outfits near Langlands Bridge. The game was played informally in the mid-19th century, with later tournaments on the cricket field. Early enthusiasts included J.R. Carmichael, J.B. Sime, G.C. Glenny, C.J. Glenny, James Barrie, George Murray Wilson, Elliot Oliver, George Grier, James Locke, and T. Lindsay Watson. A club was formed in the 1880s, and cinder courts laid down at the site below the cottage hospital. The club wound up in 1893, with many of the members having switched allegiance to golf, and the courts were abandoned. George Heron Wilson gifted the courts beside the cricket field to the High School in the 1920s, and the courts in Wilton Lodge Park were built much more recently.

tent (ten', tent) n., arch. heed, attention, care – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint!’ (inscription at 25 High Street), ‘I said, I wull tak tent til my wayes …’[HSR], ‘Hear the richt, O Lord; tent weel my crye’[HSR], ‘A planteet masel i the machine, takin tent no ti crack ma cantel as A claim in’[ECS], ‘…only take tent! aw was as sober as aw am enow’[BCM1880], v. to tend, attend, watch over – ‘Then Jeanie McFadzean, wha tented the weans, Sae blooming and lovely, but yet in her teens’[JoHa], ‘Where tenting ewes is a’ the trade, The brawest dress the tartan plaid’[DA] (from Middle English).

tenter (ten-tur) n., arch. a frame for stretching cloth, specifically rails with hooks set up outside to dry and evenly stretch cloth after fulling. Large tracts of land around the centre of Hawick were once used for this purpose, e.g. the Commercial Road, Laing Terrace and Rosalee areas, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map – ‘The tenter grounds of Messrs. Laidlaw & Sons were almost all swept away …’[BM1997], ‘…with its tenter-field for the drying of blankets scoured at the Under Damside …’[WAPJ] (this gave rise to the phrase ‘on tenterhooks’).

tentif (ten-tif) adj., poet. heedful, attentive – ‘…let thine eär be tentfu’ til the voyce o’ my supplicationes’[HSR];

Tentifutie see Tentyfit

tenty (ten-ee, ten-tee) adj., arch. heedful, attentive, careful – ‘I mankind’s ways hae marked weel, Wi’ tentie, watchfu’ e’e’[JoHa], ‘An’ Cupid sly, wi’ tentie aim, Pops in some’s heart an arrow’[JoHa], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me; Weel ye like to get a hoble On yer auld grandfather’s knee’[TCh], ‘Oh, cruel death! how could ye slay The tentie herd, sae auld and grey …’[TCh] (also written ‘tentie’).

Tentyfit (ten-tee-fit) n. Tentyfoot, the local name for an old tower at Branxholme. It is the only remaining part of the former courtyard of walls and buildings around the Castle, the fragment now standing being about 15 feet high. It is a grade A listed building (also spelled ‘Tentifutie’ and variants).

ter (ter) n. tar – ‘ee’ve got ter aa over yer new breeks’, ‘…and in summer, whan the smiths art weir an the pluiffin ter fros up atween the causa-stanes’[ECS], note that the English phrase ‘tarred with the same brush’ more often involved a stick in Scotland – ‘…the sister. who was ‘tarred with the same stick’ …soon severd the troublesome foot from her leg’[EM1820].

terce (ters) n., arch. the right of a widow to one third of the rents of her husband’s property, this right being by default until 1681. A document of 1553/4 shows a dispute over the right of ‘terce’ between Janet Ker, 2nd (and divorced) wife of the late Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch and his grandson, the new Sir Walter.

Teri (tee-ree) n. someone from Hawick – ‘Then rally, Teries, yin and a’, Let this year be the best o’ a’ ’[RH], ‘Hark again the stirring strains! Rouse ye Teries from your slumber’s’[RH], ‘…They’ll wish that they had ne’er been born Or else been born a Teri’[JT], ‘…For Teries the wide world over Ar Teries evermore’[TK], ‘There’s a welcome and a greeting from the Teri in the street, And a gladness in the knowledge that old Hawick’s hard to beat’[WFC] (also occasionally written ‘Teerie’; deriving from an abbreviation of the ancient Hawick slogan; the plural is Teries).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) interj. short form of the Hawick slogan and battle-cry, ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘O Teribus! thy magic spell, Thy sons shall own where’e’er they dwell!’[RH], ‘…And while the strains of Teribus float on the air Within each breast the life-blood proudly runs’[JCG], ‘…For it still sticks close to us In the town of Teri-bus. Rally round, rally round, rally round’[AW], ‘The ‘Callants’ of Hawick gathered And joined with the hastening throng; And spontaneous The rousing Teri-bus Rang out as they marched along’[TK], ‘Cry aloud, ‘Teribus’, conquering terror’[IWS] (various spellings exist).
Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. the main Common Riding song, written by James Hogg in 1819, to a tune that is surely much older and effectively replacing the slightly earlier words of Arthur Balbirnie. It was originally called ‘The Colour’, and is distinguished from Hogg’s other main song ‘Flodden Field’, which has the same chorus (and is about the events of 1513, rather than 1514). The words were reprinted in 1824, 1829 and 1836, with several changes. The melody bears some similarity with tunes derived from Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music (e.g. ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ and the essentially identical tune called ‘Brave Wully Forster’ that exists in a 1694 manuscript, as well as the beginning of a piece of music attributed to Praetorius, but believed to have been originally by Caroubel around 1600). However, it is unclear whether this gives any hint as to its age or origin. The version played by the Drums and Fifes also has several variations compared with the tune that is sung. An older version of the tune survives (on a manuscript page in the Museum), and said to be the one played by Walter Ballantyne, town piper in 1777; it is a variant of the better known tune, seeming more like a pipe tune, and perhaps fitting the words to Balbirnie’s song better. Hogg’s words were first published in Kelso (partly because of the two satirical verses); it is sometimes also referred to as ‘The New Common Riding Song’, to distinguish it from Balbirnie’s song (the ‘Auld Sang’) of perhaps a generation earlier, which had the same tune. Hogg’s words were clearly influenced by Balbirnie’s (although perhaps they were both using phrases from even older lyrics). A version preceding Balbirnie’s c.1800 verses had as the chorus ‘T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common’, but none of the rest survives. It may be that the song was also once called ‘Drumlanrig’s March’. Hogg’s words are not entirely historically accurate, but that has not dampened their popularity. There were at one time suggestions for ‘improving’ the words to make them more factually correct, but this never caught on (it is unclear who wrote these improved words in the latter part of the 19th century, but they are now lost). Hogg’s full version contains 24 verses, although only a subset of 14 of them are commonly sung, and 2 of the more controversial verses were not printed along with the rest until significantly later. There are also 2 additional verses attributed to Hogg that are never included: one referring to Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’; and the other commemorating the tricentenary of 1814. A shorter 5 verse version of the song is sung at each Ride-out by the ‘Big 4’, after they have mounted for the ride back to Hawick, as well as on other occasions, such as at the Overseas Night on the Wednesday and in the Avenue on the Saturday; these verses begin ‘Scotland felt...’, ‘After Flodden...’, ‘Down they threw...’, ‘Magistrates...’ and ‘Peace by thy portion...’. It is sung at St. Leonard’s after the Thursday night Chase, and in the same place after the Thursday and Friday morning Chases of Common Riding Week. Its singing also marks the end of the Colour Bussing on the Thursday. At the ‘Sang Singin’ on the Friday (after the return from the Mair) the Sang Singer sings the complete version. The verse beginning ‘Annual since our flag’s been carried...’ is used for toasts to the Cornet, ‘High the trump of fame did raise them’ for the Right- and Left-Hand Men (only relatively recently) and ‘Magistrates be faithful trustees...’ for the Acting Father. The Drums and Fifes also play the tune numerous times, such as when the Cornet is presented the letter on Pickin Night, on the site of the Auld Brig on the night of the Orderin o the Curds an Cream, at the Kirk Wynd at the start of proceedings on the Friday, as the official party march from the top of the Mill Path to the Song Singing, and on the Saturday when the mounted procession passes them at Drumlanrig Place, and at the Handing-Back ceremony – ‘Teerie buss and teerie heather, Aye the ewe lap o’er the heather’ [JR], ‘...Sings ‘Teribus’ wi’ right goodwill On pyramid or steeple’ [MG], ‘A’ man, if ye was to play ony other tune enow but ‘Teribus’, the toon o’ Hawick wad wise’ [RM].

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. pipe march (in 2/4 time and D Major), which is similar, although quite distinct from the traditional Hawick song. The tune is very similar to ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ (otherwise known as ‘In and out the dusty bluebells’), much moreso than the familiar Hawick song. Although it is a standard of many pipe tune compilations, it is not generally known to be associated with Hawick, although the name surely means there is some connection. It is unclear when it was first published, and hence it is possible that both it and the ‘Auld Sang’ derive from the same basic tune sometime pre-1800. However, the first definite appearance is in the ‘Scots Guards’ collection of 1954, and so it is also possible that this was merely a personal version from an unknown piper of the early 20th century, or simply an error in the naming of the tune. Note that some web-sites and published discussions erroneously assume this is exactly the same as the Common Riding tune. To further confuse matters there is an earlier version of the tune for the song ‘Teribus’ known, this being in 4/4 time and being a variant of the modern melody, but again with only a passing similarity to this pipe tune.

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. Sir John (14th C.) listed as ‘Johe de Teribus’ when he witnessed a charter confirming the church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1384. He also witnessed a document relating to the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch in about 1360. It is presumably a coincidence that his name is similar to Hawick’s slogan.

the Teri Bus (thu-tee-ree-bus) n. name of a mini-bus used for transporting old folk in Hawick.

the Teribus Arms (thu-tee-ree-bus-armz) n. public house in the Fore Raw in the mid-19th century, opening around 1840. The early proprietor was Michael Wintrup. A glass gin bottle labelled ‘Teribus Arms’ is in the Museum.

the Teribus Altar (thu-tee-ree-bus-awl-tur) n. Roman altar stone at Chesters Museum on Hadrian’s Wall. It appears to contain the word ‘TERIBVS’, and since it has been labelled with a reference to the ‘old gods’, some Teries have suggested that it relates to the Hawick slogan. However, when it is realised that ‘-ibus’ is a common Latin ending, other, more mundane explanations suggest themselves. Most likely the part visible reads together as ‘DIBVS VI-TERIBVS’, meaning ‘to the gods named Viteri’ (or alternatively the broken stone contains only part of an inscription), since there are many other examples of similar words on other altar stones.

the Teribus Clock (thu-tee-ree-bus-klok) n. unique ornamental clock outside Hamish Smith’s jeweller’s shop at the Horse since 1996. It was designed and constructed locally by Hamish Smith, Tosh Scott and other tradesmen. It features 3 horses with riders in Common Riding regalia, which appear every quarter hour, while the chimes play ‘Teribus’.

teribus.com (tee-ree-bus-do’-kom) n. web-site dedicated to all things Hawick, set up by Cameron Reith in 2001.

the Teribus Spitfire (thu-tee-ree-bus-sp'i-fr) n. presentation Spitfire fighter aircraft, funded from £5,325 raised by townspeople during ‘Spitfire Week’ in August 1940. It was probably a Mark I Spitfire, identity number R7128, and possibly struck down on 8th July 1941.

Teribus ye Teri-Odin (tee-ree-bu-see-tee-ree-o-din) interj. the Hawick slogan, whose origin is lost in the mists of time. A popular theory is that it derives from the Anglian ‘Tyr haeb us, ye Tyr ye Odin’ meaning ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’. However, there is no evidence that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and moreover, the period in which the area around Hawick was under the dominance of the Anglians of Northumbria (and hence speaking a version of Anglo-Saxon) but before it was Christianised (and hence not worshipping Anglo-Saxon gods) was quite short. This theory appears to have first been suggested by Jamieson around 1825, and was accepted by Sir James Murray. However, it is not supported by normal phonological development either (where one would have started with the Old English forms ‘Tiw’ and ‘Wōdan’ and these could not have conceivably developed into the Old Norse forms for the gods). Another idea is that the slogan derives from the Celtic ‘Tir a buidh’s, tir a dion’ meaning ‘Land of Victory, Land of Defence’. This is perhaps more likely, since Hawick people spoke a version of ancient Northumbrian (related to other ‘Brythonic’ languages, like modern Welsh) until perhaps the 8th century. A third, and least romantic theory is that the phrase is essentially a set of nonsense syllables used to sing along to the song (analogous perhaps to ‘Hey tutti tatie’, the former name for the tune used by Burns for ‘Scots Wha Hae’, said to have been the march used by Robert the Bruce’s men at Bannockburn). However, it should be stressed that all of these ideas are based on guesswork, and the truth could be something else entirely. In any case it appears that Hawick’s slogan is quite ancient, perhaps over 1,000 years old, and it is intriguing that it has survived through the Reformation and other political and social changes. Its survival is even more curious when one realises that, although familiar to everyone from Hawick, no one knows its meaning! – ‘Teribus ye Teriodin! By our sires who fell at Flodden, Muster swift and rouse the river! Strike for Hawick, and Hawick for ever’ [RSC], ‘Hawick heart’s shall e’er be proud. ‘Teribus y Teriodin! Sing the slogan long and loud’ [IWS] (the spelling is entirely subjective).

Teridom (tee-ree-dum) n. the state of being a Teri, the area around Hawick – ‘He burns to clasp the callant’s hand That’s come from some far distant land, Aince mair in Teridom to stand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS].

Teries (tee-reez) n., pl. plural of Teri – ‘Hail! Hail to the Teries, True, dauntless and cheerie
the Teri-Optimists

Terie-ess (tee-ree-es) n. word sometimes used to refer to female Teries (e.g. by George Luff when referring to his waitresses at the 1899 Common Riding dinner.

the Teri-hub (thu-tee-ree-hub) n. Hawick-based email news-group, set up by Graham Peacock in 1999, providing information and entertainment for Teries at home and abroad. It grew out of the old Hawick News web-site list, which was one of the first Hawick-based web-sites. It later moved to being a Yahoo group (also written ‘Teri Hub’).

Teriland (tee-ree-land) n., poet. the area around Hawick – ‘There was a priest in Teriland, An’ had he leeved lang synge He’d been a brave Crusader, An’ gaen to Palestine’[FL].

Teri Oden (tee-ree-o-din) n. another variant of part of the Hawick slogan – ‘Unfold the Teri Oden flag, To kiss the breeze o’ Summer . . .’[JT].

Teriodin (tee-ree-o-din) n. the second half of the Hawick town slogan – ‘Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’[JT], ‘They ha’e nae Teri-Odin flag . . .’[JT], ‘Teri Odin’s strain entrancing Through the air triumphant soared . . .’[TK], ‘Though names be forgotten, as time passes by, Teri-Odin for ever – united the cry’[WFC].

the Teri-Optimists (thu-tee-ree-op-ti-mists) n. theatrical group who performed songs, dances and sketches in the Town Hall in the 1930s. Prominent members included Bay Armstrong, Eileen Bannerman, Cameron Conn, Jimmy Glenny and Ian MacTaggart.

the Teri Stakes (thu-tee-ree-stäks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, held on the Saturday, but dropped in 1979.

term-days (term-, te-rum-däz) n., pl. the four days on which rents and other payments were traditionally due in Scotland, also known as quarter days. These days were once very prominent in the yearly calendar, particularly those in May and November; servants were hired by the year or half-year and leases by the year or longer, almost always on those days. The names, as well as the dates, were different in Scotland than in England. Called Candelmas, Whitsun, Lammas and Martinmas, they were originally on 2nd February, 26th May, 1st August and 11th November, respectively. However, Whitsun moved to 15th May when the Gregorian Calendar was formally adopted in 1752. But in 1886 the term days for hiring and renewing domestic and agricultural workers was changed in Scotland to 28th February, 28th May, 28th August and 28th November, and this was confirmed by an Act of 1990. Until well into the 20th century it was common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers moving from one farm to another on 28th May.

termigant (ter-mi-gin’) n., arch. a violent, quarrelsome person – ‘Termigants have been rife in this same month . . .’[RM].

Term Thursdi (term-thurz-di) n. popular name for the first Thursday after Martinmas term, in November. It was formerly an important day in Hawick, which was treated as a fair day by the country residents. It was a day for settling accounts in Town, and for preparing for the Winter. The ‘ma’irt (usually a fattened sheep) would be bought for the Winter’s meat supply and there would be a general ly festive atmosphere. The practice stopped towards the end of the 19th century.

the Terraces (thu-te-ri-seez) n. popular name for streets in the Wellogate, largely built through the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company starting in 1866 and continuing to roughly the end of the 19th century. The land was petitioned for from the Duke of Buccleuch, partly as a result of the 1849 cholera epidemic. The grid-like layout gives little concession to the contours of the land.

terrier (te-ree-ur) n. nickname for a Territorial Army soldier. The T.A. headquarters is on Union Street.

terrification (te-ri-fee-ka-shin) n., poet. act of terrifying, state of terror – ‘. . . wad meak the vera chafts to fo’ abreed, wuv doonright terrification’[JTe].

terrin (ter-in) n. the act of applying tar, particularly to sheep. This was formerly a common practice locally, used to prevent infection in cuts and for identifying the sheep from a distance. However, the benefits were never entirely clear and it became less common by the mid-19th century as the preference for white woollens grew.

the Territorial Kirk (thu-te-ri-tö-ree-uk-kirk) n. name used in the early days of West Port Kirk.

Terrona (te-ro-mu) n. farm in Ewesdale, off the left-hand side of the A7 a couple of miles before Langholm. There are multiple spellings in older records. It was a 5-merk land when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of...
Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it covered 457 acres and was bounded by Cooms, Whitsbiels, Arkin, Nether Wrae and Flask. James Little was there in 1797. James Paterson was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient walled settlement to the southeast of the farmhouse (there are many spelling variants; it is ‘Torronna’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Toroun’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Tareona’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tersy-versy (ter-see-ver-see) adj., arch. topsy-turvy, in a confused state.
tertan (ter'-in) n., tartan, a distinctive pattern of coloured lines and bands for cloth, traditionally worn in the Highlands, with specific designs attached to clans, often spuriously. Hawick District Corporate tartan was launched in 1996, with a dress version in addition. There is no indication that locals historically wore tartan clothing – ‘There’s the spot where we were lyin’ Rowed within your tartan plaid!’ [JT].

the Test (thu-test) n., one of a number of oaths of allegiance introduced, particularly in the 17th century, to differentiate between Protestants and Catholics in England or adherence to Presbyterianism versus Episcopaliam in Scotland. The most important ‘test’ was probably that of the Test Act of 1681, which enforced Episcopacy and attempted to suppress the Covenanters. In Hawick in that year it seems that the Bailies and Council subscribed to a specific text, stating that no one should ‘enter into covenants or leagues, or to convocate, convene, or assemble in any council, conventions, or assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of state, civil or ecclesistical, without His Majesty’s special command’. The tailors and weavers took the Test in 1684.

testamentar (tes-ta-men-tar) adj., arch. pertaining to a testament, nominated in a will, especially in the phrase ‘testament testamentar’, meaning a testament in which the details are specified by the person whose testament it is – ‘The testament testamentar, and inventar of the gudis, geir, soumes of money, and dettis pertaining to vmquhile Walter Scot of Branxholme …’ [SB1574].
testificate (tes-ti-fee-ki’) n., arch. a testimonial, solemn declaration, evidence, specifically a document issued by a Kirk Session for someone moving to a new parish, describing whether they were married or unmarried and whether or not they were free of scandal; the requirement to produce such a document was prescribed in an Act of Assembly of 1648 – ‘…by reason of our being vagrant and vagabond persons wanting testificatts …’ [BR], ‘To a man that had a testificate’ [PR], ‘…and the beadle was further ordered to make inquiry anent the rest of the testificates’ [PR1713].
testit, testis, testa (tes-ti’, -ta’) adj., arch. testate, mentioned as part of a will – ‘…nor pursue … but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court, except for testat geir, under the pane of £5, toties quoties’ [BR1640], ‘Freemen prohibited from instituting prosecution for debts in any other than the Bailie Court, except testat goods’ [JW1701] (also spelled ‘testat’).
tethert (te-thur) pp., arch. tethered – ‘…and that none kippe any in the day fra the 15th of April till harvest, except they be tetherit, under the lyik pane’ [BR1640], ‘…The cranies stand oot at the Port o’ Leith Whaur the boats lie triggly tethert’ [WL].
tethery-methery (te-thu-ree-me-thu-ree) n., an untidy mess, confused state (noted as ‘tetherie-metherie’ by E.C. Smith: related to the children’s counting rhyme, see eendy-teendy).
teučh (tewch) adj., arch. tough – ‘They’re teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ [JAHM], ‘…thin Than a robin’s leg And twice as teuch’ [DH], ‘Glooms and glints, sudden flashes of gold across the fields – teuch and smooth on grass …’ [DH] (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging i and oo). teučent, teuch (tewch-en’, ins., poet.) toughened – ‘The teughent bow o’ toil’s unstrung, Soft ease comes laughing gay, O’ [JoHa].
teučtrer, teuchter (chooch-tur) n., ins., mildly derogatory lowland name for a Highlander.
Teueot (tee-ee-i’) n., another early spelling of ‘Teviot’ (e.g. on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland).
Teuioś (tee-ee-i’) n., early form of ‘Teviot’, recorded in 1160 (the pronunciation of the time is of course unknown, but it seems that the v sound may have come later).
Tevidalenses (te-vee-da-len-seez) n., former name for Tevidale, used around the 15th and 16th centuries.
the Teviot (thu-tee-vee-i’ , -teev-yi’) n. major river running through Hawick, having its source at Teviot Stone and joining the Tweed 37 miles later. Its main tributaries are the Borthwick, Slitrig, Rule, Ale, Jed and Kale Waters. Other minor watercourses joining it include: Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike; Giddens Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Falsnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Nest Burn; Weens Sike; Teindside Burn; Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; the Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Howden Burn; Boonaw Burn; Kirkton Burn; Hassendean Burn; Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Grinding Burn; Ale Water; Oxnam Water and Kale Water. The river has always played a significant role in the life of Hawick. In the town it used to be crossed by a ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, or by boat at the Coble, until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. The river was harnessed (and much polluted) by manufacturers in the 19th century. The river is prone to flooding, some historical floods being very dramatic. It also has the potential to dry up almost entirely in hot summers, and also sometimes in the winter (as in January 1748, March 1785, January 1787, winter of 1803/4 and November 1838), presumably due to blockage by ice. Some stone artefacts found around the river in Hawick are in the Museum – ‘...And Teviot’s banks, where flowers of fairy blow, – Couldst thou with cold unraptur’d eye survey, Nor wake to bardish notes the bosom-thrilling lay?’ [JL], ‘Ali! when shall I by Teviot’s stream The haunts of youth again explore? And muse in melancholy dream On days that shall return no more?’ [JL], ‘O swiftly gae speed the berry-brown steed That drinks o’ the Teviot clear’ [JL], ‘Where nature’s lavish hand profuse has strew’d Luxuriant beauties. Here the Teviot winds Her easy course, meand’ring round the vales’ [JR], ‘Far better loved young Lilias fair than tales of love to hear, To seek unseen her simple bower By Teviot’s waters clear’ [JTe], ‘There’s ae auld toon by Teviot’s side, That’s famed in days o’ yore’ [JT], ‘There’s a toon, by hills surrounded, stands by bonnie Teviot’s side’ [TC], ‘River of dreams, you are dear to us ever, Dear where the broad haughs invite you to Tweed; Dear where the willows dip low to your crowning Songs that you murmur through valley and mead’ [WL], ‘The Teviot babbles on its way: The clash of steel has passed away’ [IWS] (origin uncertain, although the name is very old, possibly Celtic, and perhaps even older, with a suggestion that it is derived from the Sanskrit root ‘tavāś’, perhaps meaning ‘surging’, which curiously may also be the same root as for the Tweed; it seems that the pre-Celtic hydronym gained the Cumbric suffix ‘ed’, probably later than the 8th century; it is ‘Teuiet’ in charters around 1200, ‘aque de Teuyoth’ in 1279, ‘aqua de Teveot’ in 1420, ‘Thevit’ in 1547/8 and ‘Teveot’ in 1579, with other spellings including ‘Teviott’, ‘Teiot’, etc.; it is ‘Tiot fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, and ‘Teat fl.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Teviot (teev-yi’) n. Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was ‘of the Hillhous’, and his lands were probably the Hillhouse near Newcastle-on-Tyne. The other men named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Alexander Bell ‘Crat Bell’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’.

Teviobank (teevee-i’-bawngk) n. merchant ship, built in 1938 by J. Readhead & Sons Ltd, for the Bank Line (Andrew Weir Shipping & Trading Co. Ltd.) and sold off to a company registered in Panama in 1955. It may have been used to lay mines during WWII.

Teviot Bank (teevee-i’-bawngk) n. villa overlooking the north banks of the Teviot, about a mile before Denholm. A house was built there about 1791 for David Simpson, designed by Robert Burn. In 1799 Joseph Elliot was a coachman there and James Walker was a footman. The house was rebuilt in 1833 with designs by William Burn (son of the previous architect). There was also a stable building to the west and a walled garden with gardener’s cottage to the east. It was the residence of William Scott, grandson of William Scott of Woll, then J.S. Heron-Maxwell, followed by Edward Heron-Maxwell. To the north are cropmarks, indicating a possible ancient enclosure (sometimes written ‘Teviotbank’; possibly also known earlier as ‘The Knowes’).

Teviobank Gairdens (teevee-i’-bawngkar-din) n. street in Denholm off the north end of Canongate.

Teviot Brig (teevee-i’-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot, connecting the Sandbed with Wilton, built 1738–1741 with stone from Spittal quarry. This was the first bridge over the Teviot at Hawick, and it meant that traffic from the north no longer had to ford the river at Walter’s Wynd, or travel all the way down-river to Ancrum. There had been some debate about whether to put it at the Sandbed or the foot of Walter’s Wynd, the question being resolved by a group of local landowners. There was also a great deal of trouble raising the money (£450 total cost) and paying off the original bond (£250 from the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners), this being probably the largest municipal project undertaken by the town. The bridge was completed when ‘the kistone was perfected and close’ on 29th July 1741, but the debt took about 20 years to clear; this is despite other towns being asked to contribute (e.g. Glasgow contributed £5). During construction the animals used to transport materials were pastured on the Common Haugh and Myreslaw-green (with no other animals allowed there during that time). The original bridge was too narrow for carts to pass in the middle (sometimes causing arguments), and was very steep on each side. The piers were strengthened around 1751 (along with drains being added) and after many other repairs it was removed in 1865 and replaced with a less steep and contracted bridge. The architect was Andrew Wilson and the builder was John Marshall. During excavations for the new bridge the trunk of an oak tree was found embedded in the gravel, presumably left there in some long ago flood. The original bridge can be seen in paintings of 1800, 1808 and 1812. The new bridge has 3 arches and was designed by A. Wilson. The bridge was also popularly known as ‘the Haugh Brig’ and has subsequently become known as the Albert Bridge, possibly because of an error in the Ordnance Survey map of 1898. The name ‘Teviot Brig’ is also used for other bridges across the river, including the one built at Denholm in 1864.

Teviot Brig Road (tee-vee-i’-brig-röd) n. name sometimes used for Albert Road, or the street between the Sandbed and the Teviot Bridge (i.e. Orrock Place).

Teviot Court (tee-vee-i’-kör’) n. sheltered housing development built by Eildon Housing Association in 1989–91 on the Tannage Close property previously belonging to the Co-operative Store.

Teviot Crescent (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’) n. street between the High Street and the river, originally part of the Common, with lands feued after the Division of 1777, and the Wee Haugh being the sole remaining piece of public land. The area was used as nurseries by Dickson’s. The houses were built around 1832 as skilled, middle-class workers’ residences, and are now listed for preservation. They are 2 storeys, but most have attic extensions with dormer windows. The street was obviously named after the river. William Laidlaw & Sons had their Teviot Crescent Mills here. A mill lade used to run from Laidlaw’s Cauld along the side of Teviot Crescent and through the Mills. It was filled in in 1914. The Drums and Fifes walk along this street as part of their march around the old tolls on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Teviot Crescent Mills (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’-milz) n. hosiery and tweed factory built by William Laidlaw in 1834 on Teviot Crescent, to the north of the Little Haugh, and later extended. The suitability of the site (owing to the drop in the Teviot) was first suggested by millwright Gideon Scott. The factory was once very large, extending along the Teviot from the Little Haugh until almost the foot of Dovecote Street. The footpath along the riverside was popularly known as ‘the Back o the Mill’ or ‘Chinnie’s’. The factory was also referred to as ‘Laidlaw’s’. It was demolished in about 1908 and the site cleared. The open dam was filled in around 1914, with the southern part later becoming a car park. The site of the mill was used as a garage (later a supermarket) and also contained the Henderson Technical College (now houses).

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. the valley of the Teviot, in which Hawick is nestled. The word is sometimes synonymous with Roxburghshire, i.e. extending beyond the boundaries of the river valley itself. It was also the name used for the local arch-deaconry in early church organisation. This area was part of the Diocese of Durham in the 11th century, but was transferred to the See of Glasgow by the end of the 12th century. The region was occupied by the English in the 14th century, being recovered in 1383/4 — ‘My native stream, my native vale, And you green meads of Teviotdale ...’ [JL], ‘When morn’s first rays fall quivering on the strand, Then is the time to stretch the daring hand, And snatch it from the bending poplar pale, The magic harp of ancient Teviotdale’ [JL], ‘And for the world I wadna’ leave My Bonnie Teviotdale’ [JoHa], ‘Young Mary was the lovliest lass In all green Teviotdale: Her cheek outvied the budding rose, Her breath the rosy gale’ [JTe], ‘Oh, Teviotdale! loved land of song, What memories to thee belong’ [JCG], ‘... Where nature’s voices join to speak In praise of glorious Teviotdale’ [RHL], ‘O sing me songs of Teviotdale That tell an old familiar tale’ [IWS] (called ‘Teuidalia’ by the Romans; it was ‘Teuedalia’ about 1117, ‘Theuidall’ around 1147, ‘Thevi-etedalia’ about 1165, ‘Tevietedale’ in about 1170, Teviotdale

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. song with words by Robert H. Laidlaw and music by Frank Simpson. The words were published in the Hawick Express in 1934 and reprinted in 1950 when the music had been written. It was first sung publicly at the Glasgow Hawick Association’s Common Riding Night, the singer being Mrs. Margaret Turnbull (a niece of Francis George Scott). The original key of D major was later lowered to B flat major. It has no chorus, and is probably a little too complex to be sung regularly.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. blend of pipe tobacco sold by D. Simpson Ltd., from about the War years until the 1960s.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. blended whisky, formerly labelled and sold by John Turnbull of Hawick.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. Thomas (16th C.) Englishman, who was tenant in Ingram and had a local surname. He was recorded in 1590 as ‘Thomas Tevidiale’ when it is claimed that he was wounded by a group of Scottish raiders, specifically Burns, Youngs and others.

Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-am-ece-ur-bi-see-kul-khub) n. earliest known cycling organisation in Hawick, also known as Teviotdale Cycling Club. It was formed before 1881, when the Hawick Bicycle Club (to become the Hawick Cycling Club) was formed, and some competitive events were held between them in the 1880s. The club ceased to be active in about 1889.

Teviotdale Bakery (tee-vee-i’-däl-bäh-ku-ree) n. former bakery at 2 Princes Street. It was run by Martin P. Baillie, father of singer Isobel.

the Teviotdale Club (thii-tee-vee-i’-däl-khub) n. former social club near the foot of Beaconsfield Terrace, also known as ‘Hawick Billiard Club’. The building was constructed in 1877, and has had many subsequent uses, including as a milliners, the office for Bonson’s factory and the Jehovah’s Witnesses Kingdom Hall.

Teviotdale Crescent (tee-vee-i’-däl-kre-sin) n. ??.

Teviotdale Cyclin Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-si-klin-khub) n. alternative name for Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i’-däl-dä-ree) n. former dairy at 49 North Bridge Street, next to the Buccleuch Memorial. The buildings were designed in about 1899 by J.P. Alison as a symmetrical, 2-storied, 3-bay block in red sandstone, with Dutch influence in the detailing. The company was set up in the late 19th century and continued in the 1930s as ‘Honeyburn and Teviotdale Dairy Company’ by Andrew Haddon and his son Andrew. Other partners were Jimmy Taddei and Mr. Collier the grocer. The company delivered certified (i.e. Brucellosis and T.B. free) milk to the local region. It was later owned by the Burcup Dairy Company. It finally folded in 1982, with the building surviving (with monogrammed gable still visible) as a shop, although the bottling plant at the back was demolished.

Teviotdale Farmers’ Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-fer-nurz-khub) n. organisation formed in 1859 to be a forum for discussion and to represent the interests of local farmers. The first President was William Aitchison from 1859–73, with James Oliver being secretary from 1859–1905. It used to meet in a room in the Tower Hotel, where portraits of several ex-Presidents hung through much of the 19th century. It grew out of the Agricultural society for the west of Teviotdale, formed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835 (although both existed together for several decades). The Oliver family were Honorary Secretaries for the Club 1859–1994. The regular meeting time has been Thursday nights during the winter months. The club is still going strong.

Teviotdaleheid (tee-vee-i’-däl-heed) n. name formerly used for the upper Teviot valley, particularly to refer to the Buccleuch estates there in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was once included in the lands formerly known as Ringwoodfield. It is referred to in 1551 as part of the bounds described when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Justiciar of Liddesdale (it is already ‘Teviotdaleheid’ in 1551 and ‘Teviotdaillheid’ in 1633).
Teviotdale Harriers

Teviotdale Harriers (tee-vee-i-’dail-he-ree-urz) n. Teviotdale Harriers, the local amateur running club. Following a cross-country run by 9 local men, who met at Deanfield, the club was formed in 1889 as a by several local merchants and professionals. The 12 founders were John R. Turnbull, Findlay Purdom, George Heron Wilson, John Purdom, Douglas Oliver, Robert Blair, James Blair, Harold Evers, Robert Anderson, Charles McLaren Purdom, Willie Laing and Robert Laing. The first Captain, Vice-Captain and Secretary/Treasurer were John R. Purdom, George H. Wilson and Charles M. Purdom, respectively. It is said to be the third oldest in Scotland in continual existence. The inclusion of track competitions came a few years after the club started. The club’s Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and a Ladies’ Section in 1930. Clubrooms were built on Bath Street in 1956, and moved to the former Citizens Advice Bureau at 1 Towerdyneside in 2006. A history, ‘The First Hundred’ was written by John L. Colman in 1989.

Teviotdale Hockey Club (tee-vee-i-’dail-ho-kee-klub) n. mixed hockey team existing before WWI, based in Hawick. The 4 Laing brothers all played for the team.

Teviotdale Leisure Centre (tee-vee-i-’dail-lei-shur-sen-’ur) n. official name for the Leisure Centre, also known as ‘T.L.C.’.

Teviotdale Ludge (tee-vee-i-’dail-luj, -loj) n. house in Commonside, just past Newmill, built in 1934 as a shooting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been for many years run as a hotel, Teviotdale Lodge Country House. It has also been the site of Common Riding Ride-outs.

Teviotdale Ludge (tee-vee-i-’dail-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Lodge 10417. Sometimes known as ‘the Buffs’, this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It folded in 1990.

Teviotdale Mills (tee-vee-i-’dail-milz) n. former factory at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road, being the main premises of Scoon & Hood, previously Scoon & Barrie. It was built in 1877 (or perhaps earlier) by Greenwood, Watt & Co., and sold to Scoon & Barrie in 1888. J.P. Alison designed a new yarn store there. It was later Scoon & Hood’s until about 1930. It may also have been owned by Innes & Henderson. The building more recently became a garage, with Croall Bryson.

the Teviotdale Regiment (thu-tee-vee-i-’dail-re-jifluz) n. foot regiment formed by Sir William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian, in 1639, after the signing of the National Covenant. It was one of the armies raised to protect Scotland against Charles I, and also referred to as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’ (Buccleuch commanded a Tweeddale regiment, Hume a regiment from the Merse, etc.). The Regiment probably consisted of about 500 men, many of whom must have been local. They were part of the Covenanters force that crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640, capturing Newcastle. The Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed in 1642 and sent to Ireland. About 1642 Lords Lothian, Buccleuch and Cranston were made Colonels of foot of a combined force, with Sir William Scott of Harden commanding the horse. They returned from Ireland in 1644, but mutinied for lack of pay in 1645 and then suffered huge losses at the Battle of Auldearn. The Regiment continued to exist for about the next 40 years.

the Teviotdale Rifles (thu-tee-vee-i-’dail-ri-filz) n. alternative name for the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers, also known as the Border Rifles.

Teviotex (tee-vee-o-teks) n. textile company based at 15 Commercial Road, weaving country tweeds and luxury cloths at Lovat Mill.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vee-i-’grov-aw-kas-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as ‘Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. The Science and Art classes were held in the Buccleuch Memorial, and James Brand was the Rector. The secondary school transferred back to Buccleuch Street in the early 20th century. School Inspectors’ Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives.

Teviothaugh (tee-vee-i-hawf) n. farm near Denholm, on the north side of the Teviots, just beyond the north end of Denholm and to the south of Minto. It was once part of the Minto estate. Nailer John Oliver was living there in 1815. Christopher Hislop was farmer there in 1841. It was farmed by James Young in the 1860s and by the Miller family in the late 19th century, until the 1920s.
Teviothead

(tee-vee-i’-heed, teeve-yi’-heed) n.
The village, about 9 miles south of Hawick, which is spread out along the A7, and was formerly called Caerlenrig. Prior to the opening of the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike, there was an alternative route from Langholm to Selkirk (skirting past Hawick) which diverged at Teviothead and crossed to the Borthwick valley. The area was for many years the home of Henry Scott Riddell, with a plaque on his cottage there, his memorial cairn overlooking the area, and his burial place in the churchyard. The Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig existed there from early times. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ there, for the outlying members of Hawick Parish from the early 18th century. The parish itself was formed in 1850 out of parts of Hawick and Cavers, and extends to the Dumfriesshire boundary. Prior to this time the area was generally known as Caerlenrig. The area was famous for the 1530 capture and hanging of Johnnie Armstrong and his men. His grave and commemorative plaque are there. The village long had its own primary school, but it was closed in 2004. It also had its own library from at least the 1830s. A stone war memorial (designed by J.P. Alsion) was erected after WWI – ‘There is no man of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviothead to Tyne’ [WHO], ‘At Teviothead there stand three stones, If ever you’re that way, Take time to seek them out And read the words they have to say. One man was called to fight a fight And one to win a race And one to write a special song To mark his time and place’ [IWL] (the place name appears as ‘Teviotheid’ in 1623 and is used regularly from the 1660s).

Teviothead Cottage (tee-vee-i’-heed-ko’-eej) n.
The home of Henry Scott Riddell at Teviothead, built for him about 1840 by the Duke of Buccleuch, and also known as Dryden Cottage, Caerlenrig Manse and Dryden Burnfoot. It still exists and has a commemorative plaque. About 100 yards to the east there were 2 ancient cairns that were excavated in 1869, an iron spearhead being found, which is now in Hawick Museum. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an additional ruined building that is now gone.

Teviotheid Haa (tee-vee-i’-heed-haw) n.
Teviothead Hall, village hall in Teviothead, used for various community events.

Teviotheid Kirk (tee-vee-i’-heed-kirk) n.
Church in Teviothead Parish. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig lies within the old churchyard, and contains an ancient stone, as well as the burial site of Johnnie Armstrong, with the memorial stone of 1897. ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume was recorded witnessing baptisms in the area in 1713 and 1714, suggesting he was acting as preacher there. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ near there around 1715, as part of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, built on the Thornyhaugh by Fahnash, with regular services commencing in about 1721. A collection was made in Hawick Parish to raise money to repair the masonry of the meeting house in 1722. A petition of 1725, signed by about 100 locals, requested the Duchess of Buccleuch to supply an allowance for a preacher. In the 1752 Hawick Parish records the church is referred to as ‘Meeting House at Thorny Hall’. A new building constructed on the other side of the stream in 1799 (later converted into the village school). The Parish was created in 1850 from the more distant parts of Hawick and Cavers, repaired in about 1821 when a new preacher was installed. The church was built in 1855/6, and designed by Mr. Cowan, the Duke of Buccleuch’s Clerk of Works. It is a plain rectangular building of whinstone, with freestone edges and buttresses. Some alterations were designed by J.P. Alison around 1900. The church was linked with Hawick Old Parish 1972–89 and with Wilton from 1989. It celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2005, with the present Duke of Buccleuch in attendance. A communion token exists from 1854, oval in shape. A roll of the ministry is: Thomas Hume, at least 1713–14; David Graham, from 1714; John Chisholme, from 1720; John Laurie 1738–c.45; Andrew Walker 1745–50; Robert Rutherford 1750–56; Patrick Kerr, from 1757; James Erskine 1763–64; John Riccarton 1764–65; Charles Paton, from 1780; James Sanson 1785–c.88; Thomas Dyce 1792–c.1804; Robert Shaw 1804–16; Joseph Thomson 1817–19; Gavin Turnbull 1821–c.31; John Dobbie, about 1831; Henry Scott Riddell, 1832–42; William Lamb 1834–44; Daniel MacNee, from 1847; James Duncan 1850–53; Robert Young 1854–84; Robert F. Colvin 1884–87; Archibald H. Dinwoodie 1887–1919; Arthur H. Dunnett 1920–24; David S. Steven 1925–29; James Livingston 1929–40; James Hill 1940–63; Robert McConnell 1966–72; David L. Teviotheid Library (tee-vee-i’-heed-II-bruree) n.
Former library in Teviothead Parish, also called the Caerlenrig Chapel Library. It was probably established in the early 1800s and mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839.
Teviothead Parish

Teviothead Parish (tee-vee-i'-heid-pæ-reeesh)

n. Teviothead Parish, formed in 1850 from the outlying parts of Hawick and Cavers parishes, centred on the village of the same name. It is bounded on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the other sides by the parishes of Roberton, Hawick, Cavers and Castleton. There was a chapel at Caerlenrig from early times and a 'Chapel of Ease' here from long before the Parish was created. Parish records exist from 1824.

Teviotheid Schuil (tee-vee-i'-heid-skil)

n. primary school in Teviothead, which taught pupils up to the end of Primary 5. There was informal teaching there earlier, but the teacher’s salary was not established until 1803. Mr. Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ (brother of Hawick schoolmaster Christopher) was master there in the early 1800s. When the Presbytery refused to allow Tom Jenkins to take over as teacher, the smiddy was converted for his use (about 1815–18), with him having as many as 45 pupils and the official school just 4. The parish-appointed schoolmaster at that time was a Mr. Elliot. When Jenkins left, the new schoolmaster for the district was Simon Little, who was there until at least 1861. It was referred to as a ‘side-parochial school’ in 1839 and was run by Hawick and Cavers Parishes together. There were more than 30 pupils in the 1830s. The school closed in 2004, with the pupils being transferred to Drumlannig.

Teviot Kirk (tee-vee-i'-kirk)

n. Teviot Parish Church, being a new name for St. George’s, adopted in 1888, and having links with Roberton.

Teviot Lodge (tee-vee-i'-loj), (luj)

n. house that stood on the eastern part of the site of the present High School until shortly after WWII. It was built for the Dickson family, Miss Dickson being owner in 1824 and William Dickson living there in the mid-19th century. It was later the home of Col. William Scott Elliot. It was the first house in Hawick with electric lighting, installed by William Elliot (with the assistance of William Melrose), using 2 copper wires in porcelain insulators, running all the way from his factory at Tower Mill (across the roofs of houses, etc.). An ingenious mechanism allowed Elliot to operate a sluice at the mill so that the lights went off when he was ready for bed. And it was also arranged for signals to be sent by morse code between the house to the mill. A billiard room was added to designs by J.P. Alison in 1890. The daughters of Col. Elliot gifted the house and grounds to the school in 1933. It was used for a while as a nursery, and as the headquarters of the Women’s Voluntary Services Organisation during WWII, while the gardens became part of the ‘dig for victory campaign’ and the riverside lawn was used for games. The house was demolished in the 1950s to make way for the High School science buildings and gymnasium, built around 1960. Wood’s 1824 map shows its location and the layout of the grounds. A bungalow built at the corner of the site in the 1970s was given the same name.

Teviot Mill (tee-vee-i'-mil)

n. hosiery factory in Weensland, built by Walter Wilson in the 1850s, on a piece of ground that had formerly belonged to John Oliver & Sons. The premises of Walter Wilson & Sons there made hosiery and tweeds. It was later associated with Sime, Williamson & Co. and Kenway & Co. Part of the mill was used for a while as barracks during WWI (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Teviot Pairish (tee-vee-i'-pæ-reeesh)

n. Teviot Parish Church, being the name used for what was St. George’s Church, with a connection to Roberton.

Teviot Place (tee-vee-i'-plis)

n. street name used in the mid-19th century, presumably the same as one of the other similarly named streets.

Teviot Raw (tee-vee-i'-raw)

n. Teviot Row, street alongside the river in the Weensland area, previously named simply ‘Weensland’, renamed when houses were constructed in 1872 and demolished when considered unsafe in 1968.

Teviot Road (tee-vee-i'-rød)

n. road along the Teviot, parallel to the High Street, leading from Teviot Crescent to the foot of the Mill Port. The houses were developed from 1824, and on Wood’s map of that year it is labelled ‘New Projected Street’. Previous to that it was a roughly 3 foot wide cobbledstone path, close to the water level, which was dangerous in high water, and connected the foot of Walter’s Wynd with the Round Close. In the 1830s there was a proposal to build a High Street bypass along the riverside here, together with a bridge to the Sandbed, linking with the New Road, but this never transpired. During the construction of Pringle’s Rodono Mills in the 1950s and 1960s there was extensive demolition of old buildings and closes around the bottom of the Round Close, with replacement by the path and steps. After Rodono was demolished the ground was cleared in 1980, part being grassed over and part being used as a car park. The Health Centre was built there in 1989.

Teviotside (tee-vee-i'-sid)

*n. poetic name for the banks of the Teviot – ‘As I came in by Teviotside, And by the Braes of Branxholm, There Teviotside Foundry

I spied a bonny lass; She was both neat and handsome’ [CPM], ‘By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’ [AB], ‘No place could be so dear to me As Bonnie Teviotside’ [RHL], ‘No pen or brush can e’er describe The beauty of the Teviotside’ [JCa], ‘A love ti walke be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide’ [IWL]

Teviotside Foundry (tee-vee-i’-foon-dree) n. former premises of James Melrose & Sons on the east side of Commercial Road, adjacent to the Victoria Laundry.

Teviotside House (tee-vee-i’-sūd-hoos) n. former private school at 1 Teviotside Terrace (then a corner house on North Bridge Street), run by Mrs. Dumbreck from 1865 until the 1870s. It was a school for girls, but also took in small boys, one of them being Sir Thomas Henderson. It was continued by her daughters, Euphemia and Katherine, and perhaps also by the Misses Mitchell into the 1880s.

Teviotside Road (tee-vee-i’-sūd-rōd) n. name used for the south side of Commercial Road before it was officially named in 1884.

Teviotside Terrace (tee-vee-i’-sūd-te-ris) n. short one-sided street off North Bridge Street, being the back of some houses on Dovecote Street, built around 1875. The Dumbrecks had a school for girls here on the corner from about 1865, called ‘Teviotside House’, which was presumably the origin of the name (with the street not actually very close to the Teviot).

Teviot Square (tee-vee-i’-skwār) n. former name for the Sandbed, or the western or central parts, in use between about 1847–57 (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory). The name had been officially changed by the Council, but was never very popular – ‘...An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Teviot Stane (tee-vee-i’-stān) n. source of the Teviot, reached by walking about 2½ miles over the moorland from where the road ends at Merrylaw farm. It was once the extremity of Cavers Parish, before being transferred to Teviothead in 1850. An inscribed boulder was erected there by the Callants’ Club in 1931 – ‘...And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-stone to Eskdale moor’ [SWS], ‘Does your memory, Teviot, wake, To your birth by Teviot Stone’ [RSC], ‘Near to the stream that with pellucid wave, From Teviot stone flows to the Tweed’s fair breast ...’ [JCG], ‘And Tei’ot Stane pinpointed wi a dab o’ jeely ...’ [DH], ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘Teviotstane’; it is marked ‘Tiot-stane’ on Gordon’s map c. 1650 and ‘Tiot stain’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Teviot Tweed (tee-vee-i’-tweed) n. tweed merchants located at 17 High Street (or equivalently the Round Close) around 1906 (the name seems like an oxymoron).

Teviot Viaduct (tee-vee-i’-vI-a-dukt) n. another name for the Station Viaduct.

tew (tew) v., arch. to toughen leather, to toughen or shrivel in cooking, to tire, wear out – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, bit limber an lither’ [ECS].

tewd (tewd) pp., adj., arch. shrivelled, toughened, worn out – ‘...whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd and rizzert’ [ECS], ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, bit limber an lither’ [ECS].

the Text Hoose (thu-tekst-hoos) n. building at 3 Main Street, Denholm, bearing the inscriptions ‘All was others all will be others’ and ‘Tak tent in time ere time be tint’, just like houses on Hawick High Street. The house was apparently originally built in the 18th century by Thomas Turnbull, as one of 5 houses constructed for his 5 sons. It was demolished in 1910 and rebuilt by Dr. John Haddon, with the texts inspired by the ones in Hawick.

textiles (tek-stilz) n., pl. the industry that has been the mainstay in Hawick for more than 300 years. It began with hand knitting, while frame knitting was introduced around 1680, carpet weaving from the early 1750s and hosiery became commercialised by John Hardie in 1771. In 1728 the Board of Manufactures set up a person in Hawick (as well as 9 other towns), to sort, staple and wash coarse, tanned wool. In 1777 there were stated to be about 65 looms in the Town, manufacturing a range of linen and woollen products, and by 1820 Hawick had about half of Scotland’s frames. Cloth manufacturing began in about 1787. By the early 19th century there was also manufacturing of blankets and gloves. The first cloth to be made in Hawick was a coarse blue variety, which was sent to Leeds for finishing. Tweed grew to prominence from the 1830s, becoming the main sort of locally produced cloth. The focus shifted from stockings to woollen underwear in the latter half of the 19th century and to women’s knitwear and sportswear in the 20th century.

thiefs (theefz) n., pl. thieves (an example of the use of a different plural form in Hawick).

the Thief’s Hole (thu-theefs-hōl) n. name used to describe Hawick jail, which was a room in the old tollbooth, partly below ground level. Part of Jedburgh Jail formerly had the same name (also known as the Rogues’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Thief’s Hole Sike (theefs-hōl-sik) n. stream that rises to the west of Barnes Loch and joins the Gate Burn just before it crosses the road at the Trouthlawford (the origin of the name is unclear; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Thief’s Road (thu-theefs-rōd) n. popular name for an ancient hill track, part of which leads from Dod farm over to Hermitage Castle and was used by Mary Queen of Scots when she visited Boswell. It was also the name for the road leading across Woll Rig, perhaps a continuation of the same trail. Note that ‘the Maiden’s Way’ may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scartit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also called the ‘Thief Road’: it may be the ‘Thewesrode’ mentioned in an English document of 1255 listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots).

Thief’s Sike (theefs-sik) n. stream that rises on Thiefsike Head, to the south of Hermitage Castle, and flows near Hartsgharth to join the Hermitage Water. On the west bank there is a turf building with a knocking-stone. On the eastern side there are the remains of a township, containing about 10 buildings, along with field systems and rig lines. This is probably the settlement of ‘Brocol’ shown on Blaeu’s c.1654 atlas, which was abandoned by the early 17th century. A little higher up are the remains of shieling huts, as well as cairns and cultivation terraces (also written ‘Thief Sike’).

thieftously (theef-tis-lee) adv., arch. thievously, clandestinely, by stealth – ‘…and theiefrousie sealing and away taking out of her house …’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personne schir medowis, balking, or hanyit gers thieftousie …’ [BR1640] (also theftously).

thief (thift) n., arch. theft – ‘…or that committs greitere thift, sal be banyshit the town, and lose thir freedom for ever’ [BR1640], ‘…that the said Bailie Ruecastle was guitie of Sacriledge, Thift, and with most opprobrious speeches and names …’ [PR1718].

Thilestane (thil-stān) n. former lands listed in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693. It is listed among the lands in upper Teviotdale that were once part of the Lordship of Ringwoodfield, hence presumably this is not ‘Thirlestane’.

th’l (thīl) contr. they’ll, they will (note pronunciation).

th’lve (thī-lv) contr. they’llve, they will have.

thin (thin) pron., arch. them (noted by E.C. Smith: thaim and thum are more common).

thimble (thim-bl) n., arch. a thimble, i.e. a thimble used to run a shell game – ‘A fiddler is here, and a thimble is there, Wi’ mut-men and spice-men at Copshawholm Fair’ [DA].

thimble (thim-bl) n. a thimble (probably the more common local form; see also thummble).

Thimmel Haa (thim-mel-haw) n. former name for a building in Hawick, also known as ‘Tummel Haa’ (noted by G. Watson).

thimmelfi (thim-mel-fi) n. a thimbleful – ‘No, no, just a thimbelfu’. It manna gaun tae ma heid or Aw’ll no’ can tell ma story’ [JEDM].

thin (thin) conj., prep. than – ‘she’s a faster rinner thin am er’, ‘yer een er bigger thin yer belly’, … when ee wax lyrical ti yer less thin fortunate Gala pals’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘than’, as in English; cf. then).

thing (thing) n., arch. amount, quantity, extent – ‘I understand little thing can be brought against you o’ this day’s mischief’ [RW], sort, kind (almost used as a suffix) – ‘I’ve some mair paper, but it’s no sic guid thing as that’ [JAHM], ‘Wad ye like some black ink, or some blue thing?’ [JAHM], ‘Mask iz a pickl new thing’ [ECS], ‘The broon thing’s mair use as the yallih’ [ECS], pl. matters, duties, etc. – ‘Ee’ll findd ee’ve other thing adae’ [ECS] (these senses not common in English; also hing).

thingubeed (thing-a-beed) n. a thingumabob, someone or something temporarily forgotten (thingubby and hingummy are also used, as well as the English ‘thingummy.’

thingubby (thing-u-bee) n. something whose name is not known or forgotten, a thingummy, thingumajig, whatsis – ‘A hink what’s ‘ei’s name din eet, thingubby, frae up the Loan’, ‘Thing-a-bee, thing-a-beet, thing-a-meet, etc., is a substitute for the name of a person or thing unknown or temporally forgotten. Cf. Gen. Scottish thingumobob, thingiment, etc.; English thingummy’ [ECS], ‘As ee get older ee yaise that a lot mair, thingubby, thingubby, thingubby!’ [ME] adj. whatchamacallit, descriptive word which temporarily cannot be recalled – ‘it was aa thingubby, ee ken?’ (also written ‘thing-a-bee’; perhaps used more frequently than ‘thingummy’ when referring to a person rather than a thing).

Thinside Hill (thin-side-hil) n. hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the north of Hartsgharth. There are many enclosures and some springs marked there.

thir (thīr) pron. there – ‘thirs’ only the twae o oo left’, ‘thir must be somethin guid aboot Gala, shairly?’ (something closer to the standard English pronunciation is used for the adv., adj. and interj. forms).

thir (thīr) pron., arch. these – ‘…before yir witnesses, John Scot Balzie, Robert Denis, surgeneour, George Scot, James Morlaw, and Robert Nilhag’ [JW1558], ‘When ‘thir’ is used absolutely without a noun following, it generally becomes ‘thirs’; ‘Thirs is meyne’ [JAHM], ‘Boonjeddart, Hundlie, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last’ [CPM], ‘Thirs is mine, thae’s yours, but whae’s aucht thon yins?’ [GW], common in Thirlage

The legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘Be it kend til al men be thir present lettris, me David Scot of the Bukcluch …’ [SB1470], ‘…before thir witnes, Thomas Glendywyn, Alexander Scot …’ [SB1510/1], ‘…befoir thir witnessis, …Walter Scot of Goredandis, Walter Scot of Tuscelaw, and Jolne Watson, with vtheris diverse’ [SB1574], ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estamit to pay nyne scoir bolls in stok …’ [PR1627], ‘I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me be thir presents …’ [BR1701], ‘We by thir presents binds and obeisses us and our successors in the office of baylyearie and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke …’ [HAST1902], adj., arch. these – ‘Quo Johnie, I'd rather in England die, Ere thir sax sheep gae t' Liddesdale wi' me’ [CPM], ‘…thir braes hed seen unco sichts’ [ECS], ‘The wund and the rain’s been roarin’ Thir twae nichts …’ [DH], used specifically for foods – ‘…to which a collective significance is attached by the prefixing of a plural demonstrative or other adjective, as thir kail (= these kale)’ [ECS] (sometimes plural; there is more common).

Thirat (thi-raw) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French Napoleonic prisoner of war located in Hawick. He painted ‘View of St. Mary’s’ (1813) among other local scenes (unclear whether this is ‘Monsieur’ or his first initial).

Thirder see teinder an thirder

Thirl (thi-rul) v., arch. to bind in servitude, to be bound or under obligation – ‘they were thirled ti the mill, meanin they hed ti git their corn ground there’, ‘Langsyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thirled to ane, an’ a within The legal boond …’ [FL].

Thirl (thi-rul) v., n., arch. thrill.

Thillage (thir-leej) n., arch. the state of being thirled, usually applied by rule of the landowner to his tenants. It was part of the feudal structure which tied a farmer to a particular mill – ‘…whereby these Baillies created a sort of thillage that drew all the drinking to their own houses’ [C&L1780].

Thirlestane (thi-rol-stān) n. ruined tower and surrounding area in the Ettrick valley, a mile or so north-east of the village of Ettrick. It was once the seat of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who became the Lords Napier of Merchiston and Ettrick, which included the Lord Napier who once resided at Wilton Lodge. They gained the lands in the early 1500s from the Laird of Cranston-Riddell, although there is a John Scott of Thirlestane mentioned in 1483 (when he became Baron of the half barony of Wilton). There is a record in 1493 of cattle and horses being stolen from Thirlestain Mains. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey; in 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Braucharome was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Northhouse for his fee. This continued in the inheritance of the lands and titles of his grandfather by Walter Scott in 1553/4 (and at that time the lands were jointly valued with Northhouse at £20 Scots), as well as his grandson Sir Walter in 1564 and the next Sir Walter in 1574. These lands were raided by a group of 160 Armbrongs in 1543. The precedence of the Thirlestane branch of the Scotts and ownership of the lands has a complex (and debated) history through the 17th century; the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ was used by 3 separate families (one probably for the lands of the same name west of Yetholm). Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these lands from the Commandator of Melrose in about 1620 and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653 and 1661, when held (perhaps just the superiority) by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The Laird of Thirlestane’s lands in Selkirkshire were valued at more than £3000 in 1678. The L-plan tower stood on the left-bank of the Thirlestane Burn, north-west of the later farmhouse. The tower was burned by the English in 1544, although rebuilt. It contains a lintel stone with the initials ‘R. S. M. C.’ for Robert Scott and Margaret Cranston. The nearby house was built by the Napiers, partly using stones from the tower; however, it was demolished in the 1960s to avoid death duties. The estate passed to George Walker in the late 18th century and then to Richard Brack. It should not be confused with the castle near Lauder of the same name, or the area near Yetholm – ‘Proud she looked round, applause to claim – Then lightened Thirlestane’s eye of flame; His bugle Watt of Harden blew, Pensils and penmons wide were flung, To Heav’n the Border slogan rung, ‘Saint Mary for the young Buccleuch!’ [SWS], ‘Wher Ettrick wandirs down a plain, With lofty hills belay’t, The staitly towirs of Thirlestane With wundir hee surveyt’ [ES] (also written ‘Thirslane’; ‘Thyrlesstan maior’ stream and ‘Thyrlesstangate’ are recorded in a charter around 1236; it is ‘Thirlstane’ in 1524, ‘Thyrlstane’ in 1533, ‘Thirslane’ in 1550 and 1553/4, ‘Thirlstane’ in 1557, ‘Thirlstane’ in 1564, ‘Thyrlstane’ in 1599, ‘Thirlestaine’ in 1661, ‘Thirlestoun’ and ‘Thirlestoune’ in 1670, ‘Thirlestaine’ in 1690 and ‘Thirlestoune’ in 1695; it is marked ‘Thirlstaine’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Thirlestaine’ on the 1718 Bucteuch survey; the origin is presumably a reference to the ‘mill-stone’ to which tenants were ‘thirled’, the lade there was still visible in the late 19th century.

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. Thirlestane Castle, a turretted edifice of red sandstone, near Lauder, overlooking the Leader Water. The central section was built about 1590, then rebuilt in the 17th century and enhanced around 1840. It was the seat of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, and is now owned by a charitable trust and open to the public (the only connection with ‘Thirlestane’ in the Ettrick valley was the origin of the name).

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. farm near Yetholm, just to the north of Yetholm Loch. In 1661 the lands here were purchased from Sir Andrew Ker by James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. James Scott was thus the first Laird of Thirlestane in Berwickshire, who are not directly related to the Scotts of Thirlestane in the Ettrick valley. James’ son William Scott was the 2nd Laird. It was said that a member of this family was a physician and distinguished chemist to Charles II, whose laboratory here was called the Warlock Room. William Scott-Kerr sold the lands and the house was demolished in the early 19th century.

Thirlwall (thi-rul-wal) n. John ‘the elder’ (14th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley and ‘Grenhowe’ (possibly Greenholm) in Liddesdale in 1365, when Edward III bestowed protection on his tenants there. The suggestion is that he had acquired lands that had once been part of the Comyn holdings in southern Scotland. His seat was at Thirlwall Castle in Northumbria, near the eastern end of Hadrian’s Wall.

the Thirteen Drifty Days (thu-ther-teen-drif-tee-dāz) n. popular name for a great snowstorm of early 1674 in which the snow fell continuously for 13 days. In the higher parts of southern Scotland whole flocks of sheep were lost, as related by the Ettrick Shepherd. It is said that many shepherds made walls from piles up the dead sheep in order to give some shelter to the living. As much as 90/Scotland perished. The winter weather began in January, and never really let up until the end of March, with the 13 days themselves beginning on 20th February (although there is some confusion over the dates). The Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch obtained a special licence in 1675 to import 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland.

this (this) adj. this, in distinction to ‘next’ (for example, on a Saturday, ‘this Mondi’ would be in 2 days, while ‘next Mondi’ would be 9 days away).

this day … (this-dā) pron., arch. phrases such as ‘this day ten days’ mean ‘10 days from today’ – ‘The minister told us that God willing he intended to administer the Sacrament of ye Supper of our Lord this day twenty dayes, being the thirs Sabbath of October . . .’ [PR1720].

this afternin (thi-sel-tur-nin) n., adv. this afternoon – ‘where er oo gaun this afternin?’ (treated as though it is ‘the sefternin’ in analogy with ‘the night’, ‘the day’, ‘the morn’, etc.; sometimes shortened to the sef).

This is no my ain Hoose (this-iz-nō-nīl-ān-hoos) n. tune that is in the repertoire of the Drums and Fifes, and sometimes played on picking night. The tune is also known as ‘Colonel David Stewart of Garth’s Reel’ and is played as a strathspey reel throughout Scotland. It is recorded from at least the early 18th century and Bonnie Prince Charlie is supposed to have danced to it before the Battle of Prestonpans (also called ‘Oh! This is no my ain Hoose’).

thistledoon (thi-sul-doon) n. thistledown, a soft fluffy yarn used for luxury knitwear garments, called after the silky down or pappus inside the head of a thistle – ‘. . . An’ oor cashmerees an’ angoras An’ oor thistledoon lambswoo’’ [WL], ‘. . . Her step as licht as the thistle-doon, Wi’ easy grace she gaed dancin’ roun’’ [WL].

Thistlesike (thi-sul-sik) n. farm in Liddesdale, just south of Mangerton, on the opposite bank of the Liddel. It is on the Trysting Sike, and with the forest there known as Thistlesike Plantation. It is probably associated with the place known as ‘Sisselscheillis’ on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Alexander Armstrong.

thit (thi, thit) pron. that – ‘it was efter that thit aa moved ti Hawick’, ‘. . . thit there’s nae where else on earth it that moment, they wud rither thochtish (thocht-teesh) adj., arch. thoughtful.

thochtless (thocht-lis) adj., poet. thoughtless – ‘The thochtless heart, the careless fit, An’ hurts the chaps that has nae wit ...’ [FL].
thochtlessly (thocht-lis-lee) adv., poet. thoughtlessly – ‘Maist folk are apt to keep in shoals, An’ thoughtlessly sail wi’ the stream ...’ [FL].
thokit (tho-koe’, -ki’) pp., poet. panted, breathed heavily with exertion – ‘His toothless gans they fell abreide, He thockyt and he blew’ [JTe].

Thoftcotys (thoft-kots) n. former place name in the Borthwick valley, occurring in a document of 1410, when the Regent Albany conferred lands there and at ‘Borthwic’ on Sir William of Borthwick, on their resignation by Robert Scott. The lands are suggested to be at Hosocate, perhaps being an earlier version of the name, or just part of those lands (the name may be a rare local example of the Middle English root ‘toft’, meaning a homestead, unless it is the same as the earlier

Yrostitcotis; it seems likely that this was a variant of Hosocate, with the transcription of the ‘s’ for ‘f’.

thole (thól) v., arch. to endure, tolerate, suffer, undergo, bear – ‘...His beating heart could hardly thole, For thinking on her beauty’ [JR], ‘And O, for blessings, never thresse, If ye wadna the brydle thole ...’ [JTe], For she’ll ride ye post to the clutye deil, And he to the reikye hole’ [JTe], ‘Tis love, and beauty, and the glass, Makes life-time worth the tholin’’ [JoHa], ‘Then where’s the rain we canna thole ...’ [JoHa], ‘Though hard to thole, there’s yet a hole, We aye get creepin’ out’ [DA], ‘I couldna’ thole the cauld hearth stane That doorway that is not’ [JEDM], ‘Tho’ hard tae thole, they seldom last, That’s ae guid thing about them!’ [IJ], ‘...he sall nevir thole the rich-teous til be muvet’ [HSR], ‘...while I thole thy terrers I am distraucht’ [HSR], ‘...Thinks little o’ the friendless form Maun thole the Winter’s cauld’ [JT], ‘...And set it in the sun to dry – The waiting o’t he scarce could thole’ [WFC], ‘He’d better hae tholed wi’ a half toom wame ...’ [WL], ‘Nor can I thole their snack-bar wit, Their bowlers and their brillaintine ...’ [DH], ‘...and that she’ll juist hev to thole, and hope it wadna be smit’al’ [DH], to allow, suffer – ‘Jesus answirin’ said untiill him, Thole it til be sae now’ [HSR] (from Old English).

tholit (thó-lec’,-li”) pp., arch. endured – ‘Because for thy sak’ I hae tholit reproch: shaeme heth kiveret my fece’ [HSR], ‘He tholit nae man til do thame wrang ...’ [HSR].

Thom (tóm, tom) n. James (d.1874) Superintendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archæological Society, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer Corps and helped found the Lodge St. James. He was appointed as Curator of the Society’s Museum collection in June 1957. Also in 1857 he read a paper at the Archeological Society on ‘the Noachian Deluge’ and donated a collection of coins. In 1861 he donated a large axe-head, found at Northhouse, to the Museum.

Thomas of Wilton see de Wilton

Thomas the Rhymer (to-mis-th-mur) n. (c.1210–c.1290) Thomas Learmonth, Laird of Erclidhume (an old name for Earlston). Although he certainly existed, little detail is known of his life, which has been heavily romanticised. He Thomline (tom-lin) n. Alexander (1781–1827) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Jean Smith. He was a slater and glazier on the Cross Wynd, listed there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Janet Crawford and their children included: William (d.1806); Robert (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); William (again, b.1811); and Alexander (b.1812). His wife could be the widow ‘Tomline’ recorded keeping lodgings on the Cross Wynd according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. Alexander ‘Alex’ (19th C.) first Treasurer of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Andrew (b.1792/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. On the 1841 census he was living on Underdamside with ‘Tibby’, who was probably his mother. George (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register. James (19th C.) inspector of the poor in Hawick in the late 1800s. He also served as a student teacher in St. Mary’s School. He was also Registrar in Hawick in the early years of the 20th century. John (18th C.) woollen manufacturer of Hawick, in partnership with William. Since his name is given first he was presumably the older brother. They are described in David Loch’s 1778 book on Scottish trade as ‘dyers and clothiers’ who ‘have considerable business at present, and they have a brother in Glasgow instructing as to the making of cloths fit for that market, and how to use woad in dyeing of blues & c.’ There are records of help given to them in 1779 by the Board of Trade for Manufactures, instructing them how to use a woad vat. In 1780 he and William were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. The company operated as dyers and finishers in the old Roughheugh waulk mill until they sold it to the Inkle Company in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a sasine that still exists. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh’ in Wilton Parish, valued at £22 6s., and another piece of Roughheugh valued at £9. He and William were still recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. The family had been known as ‘Thomline of that Ilk’ and had long resided in Wilton, with their main residence near ‘the Nitton’. However, all trace of the family and its original home had disappeared by the 20th century. He is probably the John who married Mary Ekron in Wilton in 1772 and whose children included: Isabel (b.1773); Andrew (b.1775); James (b.1776); Jean (b.1778); John (b.1784); Andrew (again, b.1786); and William (b.1788). His wife was probably daughter of James Ekron and Isobel Betty Richardson. John (b.1849) Hawick stockmaker who was presumably related to the old Wilton family. He is probably the John recorded on the 1841 census at the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children John and George. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810. He married Helen Scott and their son George was baptised in Hawick in 1825 Thomas (b.c.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard, on Silver Street in 1851 and by 1861 was at 48 Loan. His wife was Isobel and children included Jean (or Janet), James, Alexander, Robert, John, Ralph, Christian and James (again). Walter (b.c.1770) dyer in Wilton. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hinshelwood (or ‘Hanselwood’). In 1841 he was living at Underdamside with his wife Betty. Their children included: Jane (b.1793); and Nancy (b.1807). He is probably the ‘Walter Tomlin’ whose child died in Hawick in 1798. In 1851 his widow Betty and son William were living on Underdamside with the family of John Peacock, his son-in-law. William (18th C.) partner with John in an early wool dying business at the Waulk Mill in Wilton. He was probably younger brother of John. In 1780 he and John were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. He and John were recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1766. Their children included: Agnes (b.1767); Jean (b.1769);
Thomson

Andrew (b.1770); and Walter (b.1771). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled ‘Thomlin’, ‘Thomlins’, ‘Tomlin’, ‘Tomlins’, etc.).

Thompson (tom-sin) n. John Riddle (19th C.) married Jessie T., daughter of Walter Wilson and Isabella Richardson. He had sons Robert Riddle (b.1860) and Walter Wilson (b.1862). Mark Hawick-born power lifter. He won the British Weightlifting Association Bench Press Championship in the 110kg division in 2005. Robert Riddle (19th C.) son of John Riddle and Jessie Wilson. He was a baker and later insurance inspector in Hawick. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of baker Robert Young, and they had children Aggie Lamb Dryden, Jessie W., Walter W., Robert Young, Elizabeth Margaret and Thomas Dryden (who died in 1917 and is commemorated on the Mikra Memorial). He secondly married Annie, daughter of Joseph Smith, gas manager. Richard (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish. He is referred to as being at Woodfoot in 1808 when his sister Janet died. Thomas ‘Tommy’, ‘Tufty’ Cornet of 1955. He rode on the Friday in his jubilee year. William Lindsay (19th/20th C.) from Allan Glen’s School in Glasgow, he became High School Rector in 1908, and remained in the position until 1919 (see also Thompson).

Thomson (tom-, tam-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a resident of ‘est grange’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Thomas Clommell in Minto was charged with stealing a pig from him. He probably lived at Grange in Ancrum Parish. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Singdean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Rev. Adam (1813–74) born in Coldstream, he was son of Dr. Adam, minister there, who was instrumental in abolishing the monopoly on publication of the bible in Scotland. In 1833 he became assistant and successor of Rev. Henderson at the East Bank Church in Hawick, having also been called to Dunoon. He was recorded living at the East Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He suffered from ill-health, spending 6 month periods in Europe in both 1852 and 1856. However, he remained as minister for 28 years, resigning in 1860 and leaving for Sydney, Australia the following year. There he became the first Moderator of the General Assembly of New South Wales. Before his departure there was a special soiree was held, attended by almost all the local ministers. He was there presented with an illuminated address bearing the Burgh Seal, signed by the Magistrates and about 800 others, as well as other gifts, including a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica from J.A.H. Murray on behalf of the citizens of Hawick. For the last 2 years of his life he was Principal of St. Andrew’s College in Sydney. He published several sermons while minister in Hawick, including ‘A pastoral memorial; discourses . . .’ (1860). His sister Elizabeth married John Wilson, manufacturer of Ladylaw, while another sister, Isabella, married Army Paymaster James M. Green and has a memorial obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery. He married Helen Ritchie Wilson (1819–53), daughter of hosiery manufacturer Peter. Their children were Adam, Mary (who married James Hogg) and Helen (who married James Fell). He later remarried. A memoir ‘Life and Ministry of Rev. Adam Thomson, D.D.’ was written by his son-in-law Rev. P. Landrith. A portrait of him exists. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and is also recorded there in the early 1700s. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant in Whitchesters (as well as Robert Scott, the other witness). He was attested to be tenant in about 1710 in the evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. William Wilson was his servitor in 1712 when rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. He witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1713. He is probably the Alexander, married to Marion Armstrong, whose children born in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1683) and John (b.1685). He was deceased in 1719 and ‘sometimes tenant in Whitchesters’ when his daughter Agnes married John Scott (tenant in Hawick). Alexander (d.bef. 1777) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Cathrae, who died in Hawick in 1777. Rev. Alexander McIn-roy (d.1897) licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1888, he was assistant at St. Clement’s in Dundee and then ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick in 1889. He resigned his position in 1894. Allan (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 document, where a number of people were accused of over-charging interest on loans. Andrew (b.1716/7) workman of Hawick, chosen as one of the 6 representative Burgesses in 1767 to define the boundaries of the Common. He may be the Andrew, son of John, born in Wilton Parish in 1715. He could be the Andrew who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leithhead and Marjory Thomson. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Riddell (who died in Hawick in 1781), with their daughter Betty baptised in 1758. Andrew (18th C.) cottar at Ashkirk Mill. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1745); and James (b.1749). Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1763/4) farmer at Bewlie, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also had 6 farm horses in 1797 and paid the dog tax at Bewlie in the same year. He was probably the Andrew recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1787 when his marriage to Christian Usher was announced in Melrose Parish, with Andrew ‘Heiton’ as cautions; she was daughter of John Usher of Toftfield. He was at Bewlie on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded as deceased in 1828 in a letter from James Usher, writer in Edinburgh, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection; this was either an error, or referred to his father perhaps. He was at Bewlie in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. In 1851 he was a retired farmer at Bewlie Mains, where his son John was farmer. His children probably included: Robert (b.1788); John (b.1789); Janet (b.1794); Thomas (b.1796); Betsy (b.1798); James (b.1800); William (b.1803); and Andrew (b.1806). Andrew (b.c.1780) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when he was living in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side of Main Street. He was there with his children Helen, George, Esther and Andrew. He married Jean Harvey and their children included: Helen (b.1810); George (b.1817); and Andrew (b.1826), who farmed at Billerwell. He may be the Andrew recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799; he was son to the tenant of Chapel (presumably George) and ‘Lame of one of his thumbs’. Andrew (1788/9–bef. 1861) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a road surveyor in Evesdale. He was living at Brieryshaw in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Mary Riddell; she was a widow in 1851, and listed as ‘Fund Holder’ in 1861. Andrew (19th C.) architect who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Andrew was involved with the building of St. George’s Church in Hawick. Andrew (b.1826) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of Andrew and Jean Harvey. He was tenant of Billerwell farm for about 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. He was at Billerwell in 1861 as farmer of 300 acres, employing 5 people. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Jane, Andrew and Mina. He had a brother George and a sister Helen. He may be the Andrew who married Janet Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1851. Andrew (b.1834/5) son of shepherd Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became shepherd at Wigg on Wauchope farm. Like his father he was a strong supporter of Wolfelee Free Kirk. His children included: William, who was also a shepherd at Wigg; and Marianne. His wife died in 1904. Andrew (19th C.) framesmith at Robert Ewen’s factory, who left for Nottingham. He was a popular local singer. He is probably the Andrew listed as a millwright journeyman at Melgund Place in 1841, with wife Agnes and children Walter and Elizabeth. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Wells in 1785, when she was working for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) listed in 1576 as a servant of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. There was a promise to him, as well as Martin Crozier in Bedrule, and Martin’s son Martin, should all refrain from theft. However, they were all declared rebels in 1578/9. Archibald (18th C.) married Christian Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1729. Archibald (18th C.) foreman at Dickson’s Hassendeamburn nurseries around 1770. Benjamin (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1729 he witnessed baptisms for miller John Henderson, John Scott and Adam Kersel. Rev. Charles (1795–1871) born in Dalserf in 1795, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick in 1821 to be assistant for Rev. James Arkle of Hawick Parish. There appears to have been some dispute with the Duke of Buccleuch about his appointment, and he did not become Arkle’s successor. He was ordained at North Shields in 1823 and became minister of Wick in 1840, then went to the Free Church at the Disruption of 1843, serving at Wick until his retirement. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1825 in Hawick he married Janet, daughter of merchant Francis Ballantyne, and had 11 children. He visited Hawick in 1837, during the contested election, and gave evidence at the later investigation. He was mentioned in a poem by David Waters, suggesting he was locally an unpopular anti-Reform minister, and also claiming that involvement in vote rigging was the reason he failed to get support from the local aristocracy for a living – ‘...Or, maybe for a daintie kirk, As did his Reverend Frien’ o’ Shielis. – (Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, roguery and cunnin’ ...’)[RDW]. It was also said that by marrying the daughter of Ballantyne, he took some of the spoils that had been fraudulently extracted from Ballantyne’s former partner, ‘Auld Cash’ – ‘A black robed son of light – yclep’d a priest, Removed a load of guilt from off his breast, He wed his daughter and then shared the spoil Which half-way went to save Francisco’s soul’[RDW]. David (16th C.) recorded in North Synton in 1581/2. George Caverhill in Whitehaughbrae resigned to him a tenement in Selkirk. David L, son of Rev. Lyndsay, he was educated at Hawick High School. He then attended Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities. He is an evolutionary and environmental biologist and is Associate Professor at the University of Hong Kong. Douglas (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 64 High Street in the mid-1900s. Elizabeth (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when she was allowed to ‘compound’ for resetting ‘Joiffe Glenquhin’ (possible Geoffrey Glenholm), who had been involved in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. She is referred to as ‘in Corrisheuch’, which may be Corrie Sike in upper Teviotdale. However, it is unclear where she came from or how she may have been related to other Thomsons. She is recorded as ‘Besse Thomson’ in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick parishioner who died in the early 1700s. She left a ‘mortification’ to help the poor. The Session decided to enter her name in gilt letters on a big black board in the church, as a way of encouraging other donations; unfortunately this project used up all the money she had left! Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) baker in Newcastle upon Tyne according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. She could be the Betty Thomson (or Little) who was a widow at about 17 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1800) baker on the Fore Raw, recorded on the 1841 census. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 2 pigs stolen from him there, by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it included Hassendean. The baptism of his daughter Bessie is recorded in Robertson in 1680, ‘begotten in fornication with Isobell henderson’; the witnesses were Robert and James Thomson (presumably close relatives, perhaps his brothers). He married Isobel Turnbull in Robertson in 1684 and had children including Isobel (b.1685) and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and James. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. George of Fodderlee (18th C.) husband of Margaret Kerr, from whom he probably inherited the half lands of Fodderlee. In 1788 (and continued in 1811) he is recorded as owner of the lands of Easter Fodderlee, valued at £80. His son was Robert. George (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1776. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1791, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Perhaps the same George was also listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in the same year. He was still a servants at Weens in 1792. In 1794 he was a house servant at Larriston, still working for William Oliver. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapel in the 1787–1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Liliesleaf Parish. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He is probably the tenant in Chapel whose son Andrew is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. George (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Cavers Knowes in 1841. In 1851 he was a gardener in Wilton, living at Wilton Kirk Style. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. His wife was Isabella (from Robertson) and their children included Helen, George, Walter, Margaret, Isabella and Elizabeth. Dr. George William (b.1818) son of Thomas and Anna Drummond from Midlothian. He was brother of Wyville Smith Thomson, who was minister at Cardross, Dunbartonshire. He became a doctor in Hawick with practice on the High Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a druggist on ‘Market pl’ and as part of the partnership of ‘Graham & Thomson’, physicians on Buccleuch Street. However, in 1861 he is recorded living at 10 Buccleuch Street. In 1841 he married Margaret Lang from Dumfriesshire. His children included:
Thomson

George William; Margaret Cadenhead, who married William Scott Elliot; Walter Gowdie; John Lang; Thomas Drummond; Anna Drummond, who married John Turnbull Laing; Emma M.; and Wyville Smyth. He lived at 10 Buccleuch Street and at Northville, Bridge Street. George (b.1820/1) from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newhouses in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his brother Andrew and sister Helen. George (19th C.) married Margaret Beck in Wilton in 1853. George (19th C.) left Hawick in about 1869 and later became Provost in Johnstone in Renfrewshire. He was Provost there 1893–99. In 1897 he gifted to the Town an ornamental fountain, which was sited in Drumlanrig Square, to be replaced about 1910 with the more elaborate Brown Fountain. He attended the 1899 Common Riding, but was reported being in ill health later that year. Gideon (b.1684) son of Robert. In 1707 he and his father were witnesses for a baptism for James Renwick, under-miller at Newmill. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) laundress maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel ‘Tibbie Tamson’ (d.1790) resident of Selkirk, said to be of weak intellect. She was accused of stealing yarn and hanged herself. According to local custom suicides could not be buried in consecrated ground, so her coffin was dragged to a place ‘where 3 lairds’ lands meet’, specifically the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Bowhill and the Burgh of Selkirk, just to the north of Selkirk on Foulshiels Hill. She was interred there, with a rough gravestone placed there later to mark the spot. At Selkirk Common Riding a wreath is placed on her grave, which was marked with a plaque in 1990. There are similarities with the story of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ in Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ amongst other things. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed

William Gray and Robert Graham and in 1868 were Robert and George (who were probably related). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, who witnessed a baptism for Robert in 1687 and who witnessed another for Andrew Leyden in 1683. He is probably one of the Jameses recorded at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Weensland in 1704. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their children included: David (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk; and Alexander (b.1704), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1704 were David Miller and Walter Paisley. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Scott in Bedrule in 1715. James (18th C.) married Jean Phaup in Minto in 1722. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ashybank in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Ann (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, was probably also his child. James (18th C.) tenant at Midshiels. His daughter Christian married nursery-man Archibald Dickson. He could be the James who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard Turnbull, resident of Midshiels. James (1700–48) poet born at Ednam. He grew up at Southdean, 3rd son of Thomas, who was Minister there (and who apparently died during an exorcism at Wolfelee). He should not be confused with his more famous Hawick namesake! He attended Jedburgh Grammar School and had a Presbytery Bursary in Arts and Divinity at Edinburgh University 1715–24; he was ‘Lowland Bursar’ for Hawick Parish for the last 4 of these years. He was patronised by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto, among other men, and spent some vacations at Minto. He also held lands at Wideopen, near Morebattle, inherited via his mother. He moved to London in about 1725. He wrote the words for ‘Rule Britannia’ and the epic poem ‘The Seasons' (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ amongst other things. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed (1752–1831) was a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He retired to Richmond, Surrey, where he is buried. The armchair in which he composed the ‘Castle of Indolence’ (being high-backed and made of beechwood, with a burn on one arm where it is said a candle fell while he was absorbed in his writing) was acquired by Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, factor at Wells; Elliott insisted that Burns sit in the chair during his brief visit to Wells House in 1787. A large hawthorn bush in a garden in Southdean was long regarded as being associated with the poet. There is a memorial obelisk to him overlooking Ednam, another memorial (‘Temple of the Muses’) on the Bass Hill of Dryburgh, erected by David Stuart Erskine, and a memorial window at Southdean Kirk. Erskine organised a memorial celebration to which Burns was invited but sent lines of apology. There was also a bicentenary celebration at Ednam in 1900 – ‘So long, sweet poet of the year, Shall bloom that wreath to which thy Thomson has lent a crown’ [JTe]. A bi-centenary celebration with speeches etc. was held at Southdean Kirk in 1900 and a more extensive celebration in Ednam – ‘To thee, fair Jed! A holier wreath is due, Who gav’st thy Thomson all thy scenes to view, Bad’st forms of beauty on his vision roll, And mould to harmony his ducile soul’ [JL], ‘And Ednam’s Bard, whose moral strain, I ween, Shall run coeval with the tide of time, While love and taste and genius shall the soul sublime’ [JTe]. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhill-shiel in 1721 and 1726. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: ‘Maury’ (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included Christian (b.1718), William (b.1721), Walter (b.1723) and Margaret (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Deans and their children included: Jane (b.1793), James (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Janet (b.1799), all baptised in Roberton; and Mary (b.1802), John (b.1803), Edward Aitchison (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), William (b.1808), Christian Aitchison (b.1810) and Edward (b.1811), all born in Ewes. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Aitchison in Wilton in 1796. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Noble in Wilton in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Stobs. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. The entry is annotated with ‘deserted’, suggesting that he fled in order not to serve. His name still appears on the list in 1798, but among those who failed to appear or failed to produce substitutes; William Johnstone, farmer at Tower, was balloted in his place. A reward of 1 guinea was then offered for his apprehension. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant in the 18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1764. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Bettie (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (b.1764). James (18th C.) tenant farmer at Nether Ancrum. In 1778 he had a sasine for the lands of Fodderlee, following a disposition by Robert of Fodderlee, who must have been a near relative. In 1784 East Fodderlee was sold to William Riddell, and along with Riddell he granted a disposition for the lands to John Thomson; this may have been the John born to a James Thomson in Minto Parish in 1783. He was surely related to George, who was recorded as owner of East Fodderlee in 1788 (unless there is an error in forenames). James (1752–1831) born in Hawick. In 1785 he emigrated to the Niagara district of what was then called Upper Canada. There he married Margaret Emerick and they had 10 children; this included David, who rose to the rank of Major in the Canadian militia, a founding member of the Grand River Navigation Company and owner of several mills and Canadian Member of Parliament. He and his sons built their brick house, baking the bricks themselves. He was described as ‘a stern old Presbyterian’. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Paterson and their children included Robert (b.1771). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1778. He married Janet Shiel and their son Duncan was baptised in 1778. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Outerside in 1793, in 1794 was ‘late in Broadlee’ and in 1798 was at Unthank in Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Graham in 1792 and their children included: Jane (b.1793), James (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Janet (b.1799), all baptised in Roberton; and Mary (b.1802), John (b.1803), Edward Aitchison (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), William (b.1808), Christian Aitchison (b.1810) and Edward (b.1811), all born in Ewes. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Aitchison in Wilton in 1796. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Noble in Wilton in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Stobs. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. The entry is annotated with ‘deserted’, suggesting that he fled in order not to serve. His name still appears on the list in 1798, but among those who failed to appear or failed to produce substitutes; William Johnstone, farmer at Tower, was balloted in his place. A reward of 1 guinea was then offered for his apprehension. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant in the 18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1764. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Bettie (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (b.1764).
Thomson

Thomson

son of William, tenant in Raperlaw and Netherraw. He is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Lilliesleaf Parish in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Teindside, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. James (b.1776/7) born at Over Huntly, son of James and Mary Stirling. He was surveyor of roads on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the ‘Mr. Thomson’ whose land is marked on the left side of the Loan, just before the Moat, on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a road-surveyor on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the James from Hawick, recorded in a document related to the Haremoss Toll, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in Selkirk. In 1841 he was living on the Loan with his wife Rachel and children Robert, William, Mary and Rachel. He was still living on the Loan in 1851, as a retired surveyor. He married Rachel Wilkie from Midlem and their children (all born in Ashkirk Parish) included: Andrew (b.1800); John (b.1804); Robert (b.1806), grocer; Janet (b.1808); William (b.1810), hosier; Mary (b.1814); Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (b.1781) born in Minto Parish, son of James. He was a forester in Castleton Parish, living at Sandholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a ‘Woodforester’ at Sandholm in 1835–41. He married Margaret Common. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1816), who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘Pingle’ on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He probably lived at Pingle south of Langholm, but it could have been Pinglehole. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Wilkie and their children included: Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (18th/19th C.) servant at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835. He married Janet Jackson, but they were rebuked for ‘antenuptial fornication’ in 1832. James (b.c.1805) born at Appletreehall. He was a joiner in Jedburgh. His wife was Jane and their children included Mary Ann, John, Elizabeth, Isabella, James and Thomasina. James ‘Jimmy’ or ‘Jamie Tamson’ (1827–1888) poet andsong-writer, born in Bowden. He had a maternal uncle, Dr. Wilkie of Innerleithen, who was an archeologist and friend of Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg, and Dr. Jamieson. He was also a cousin of poet Thomas Aird. He had a sister who became Mrs. Drummond of Tranent. He herded cows in the Eildons, where he got to know the poet Andrew Scott. From age 16 he served an apprenticeship as a wood-turner and cabinet-maker in Selkirk. He worked there for a while, before moving to Hawick, where he spent more than 30 years. His first compositions appeared in the Dumfries Herald. He was writer of ‘Up wi’ the banner’, ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Hawick Volunteers’ and ‘The Star o’ Robbie Burns’, as well as poems such as ‘The Auld Mid Raw’, ‘The Mither Tongue’, ‘The Wee Croodlin’ Doo’ and ‘Hairst’, many contained in his book ‘Doric Lays & Lyrics’ (1870). ‘Our Robin’ was one of his first poems, being published in the late 1850s, with his ‘Hogmanay’ sung at the New Year of 1860 at the Ewan’s Mill gathering. A great admirer of Burns, he helped found the Burns Club in Hawick; it is said that Burns’ ‘Kilmarnock Edition’ was his constant companion while he was a herdsman. He was Masonic Provincial Grand Bard for Peebles and Selkirk, as well as Bard for Lodge 424. He was said to have lived in the auld Mid Raw and later at 54 High Street, where a commemorative plaque was erected in 1995. In the 1861 census he is listed on Wilton Terrace, living with a housekeeper Mary Riddell, and her children Mary and Catherine, as well as their children together, John and Helen. In poor health in later life, he moved back to Bowden in 1886, but returned to Hawick a few months later and was supported by his Masonic brethren. In 1887 he presented ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ to the Cornet, this being only about a year and a half before his death. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where Lodge 424 erected a memorial obelisk. A wooden cup he made from material salvaged from the Mid Raw is in the Museum. The Hawick Burns Club unveiled his portrait at their clubrooms in 1924. In 2005 the new bridge across the Teviot was named after him, and an adjacent statue (by Bill Landles) unveiled in 2006. James (d.1939) son of John, farmer at Synton Mains. He became a saddler of George Davies, with Robert and Thomas Hall taking over from him. His brothers William and John were both farmers. He was secretary of the...
Border Oddfellows for 30 years and was for many years Session Clerk for East Bank Church. Janet (b.c.1790) confectioner at the Sandbed. In Pigot’s 1837 directory she is listed as a baker and confectioner on the High Street. She was recorded at about No. 12 Sandbed on the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine for the Erskines in their lands of Siston in 1508, where he is ‘John Thomesoun’. Judging by the other witnesses, he may have been local. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. He was recorded in Headshaw in 1580 when he and Richard Brown acted as cautioners for Walter Scott of Headshaw to make payment to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbuls of Bedrule. John (16th/17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Caverhill and their children included James (b.1649). John (17th C.) recorded in Penchrise in 1684 when his son, also John, was on a list of Covenanters fugitives. John (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mabinslaw’ on a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He probably farmed at Mabonlaw. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Flatt when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear if this was the Flatt in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Whillans and their children included James (b.1674), Isobel (b.1684) and Bessie (b.1687). The baptism of Bessie was witnessed by Stephen Greenshields and Michael Turnbull. John (17th C.) tenant in Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1722 and Wester Burnfoot in 1731. He married Mary (b.1711) farmer at Wester Essenside. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He is probably the John who married Mary Gray and whose children included: Andrew (b.1724); William (b.1726); James (b.1728); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who probably took over the farm of Wester Essenside; Jane (b.1765); James (b.1768); Thomas (b.1774); and Mary (b.1776). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Boyd in 1789. Their children included: Andrew (b.1759); Margaret (b.1760); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who also was recorded as owner of 2 horses according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He is probably the John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Boyd in 1789. Their children included: Thomas (b.1792); and John (b.1794). The 1792 baptism was carried out ‘In presence of the Congregation’ and the 1794 baptism witnessed ‘by the Burgher Congregation. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Robertson Parish. In 1795 he is recorded at Greenbank. He married Helen Chisholme in Robertson in 1794 and their children included: William (b.1795). John (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same carrier was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Deanbrae, recorded as owner of 4 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. John

(18th/19th C.) possibly son of James, who owned Fodderlee and farmed at Nether Ancrum. He was granted a disposition for East Fodderlee in 1784 and in 1802 sold the lands to Thomas Gregson, farmer at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm, in the Rule valley. After the Teviot flood swept away much of Hassendean churchyard (where his ancestors were buried) he moved the tombstone to Billerwell. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Chisholme in Wilton in 1798. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Janet and Jean (b.1803); and Cicely (b.1806). John (18th/19th C.) married Mary Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dunlop and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their son John was born in 1814, with witness appearing to be Jane Scott. John (18th/19th C.) farmer in the Hawick area. He married Agnes Lambert and their children included: Maria (b.1847); John (b.1848), who was a mason; and Thomas (b.1851). John (b.1789) son of Andrew, who farmed at Bewlie. He himself is recorded in 1851 at Bewlie Mains, farming 1035 acres and employing 35 labourers. He was unmarried at that time and living with his retired father and sister Betsy. John (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Preston in 1828 and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Violet (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1834). John (19th C.) married Jane Little in Southdean Parish in 1833. John (19th C.) married Margaret Latimer in Wilton in 1843. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Laidlaw and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1854. Rev. John (1823–1889) born in Over-Roxburgh and married Margaret Shiel. He was educated at Ancrum School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1854 and became assistant minister at Selkirk. He was ordained as minister of St. Mary’s after it had become a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860. He lived at 9 Buccleuch Street and later built Rosalee when his wife inherited a small fortune. He also owned Allanshaws in Kelso. Together they founded St. John’s Church in 1880, and he formally became its first minister in 1881 (having resigned his position at St. Mary’s in 1879). He was Chaplain to the Cornet several times in the 1880s and supported the Common Riding at a time when many of the other local ministers railed against it. His acceptance of an invitation to the Cornet’s Breakfast in 1887 was the start of that event becoming a formal part of the proceedings, and his reciprocation to invite the supporters to his church the following Sunday was the beginning of the ‘Kirkin’. The lands that he purchased included some parts of what had previously been Roughheugh (and owned by Walter Scott). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1877. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of James Scott of Allanshaws and Mary Brown. Mrs. Thomson also paid for the new iron pump at the Verter Well (she later married William Ludovic Mair, Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire, and died in 1891). Their children were Margaret Shiel (who married Robert Grier-Laidlaw of Hazelwood, Hawick), and 5 others who died young. He wrote several books including ‘Address to Ploughmen’ (also called ‘Address on the Evils of the Bondage System’, published in Hawick, 1866), ‘The art of weaving spiritualised’ (Hawick, 1869 and 1874), ‘Voices from the Plough’ (Hawick, 1869), ‘History of Peter Plough’ (Hawick, 1872), ‘Life and times of William Thomson’ (1875 and 1879), ‘Alexander Hope: a Hawick story’ (1878, perhaps with a 2nd part in 1879), ‘The Life of James Scott of Allanshaws’ (1879), ‘The Art of Ploughing Spiritualised’, plus at least one other sermon and ‘Speeches delivered on Different Occasions’ (Hawick, 1882). Although ‘Alexander Hope’ was a work of fiction (with a strong moralistic message, particularly against the evils of drink), it contains several local anecdotes that are still of interest. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Greensidehall and later Sinton Mains. He was brother of saddler James and farmer William. His son John was Secretary of the Oddfellows. John (19th/20th C.) commerical traveller of Hawick, he served as Session Clerk for St. George’s Kirk 1915–24. Rev. John Archibald Glover (b.1883) son of John Cornwallis, minister in Edinburgh and Anne Dundas Glover. His brother was James C. He was born in Sanhvar, Dumfriesshire and educated at George Watson’s College, Glasgow Academy and Glasgow University. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1906, became an assistant at St. Andrew’s in Edinburgh, and in 1910 was ordained at Wallacetown, Ayr. He moved to the Tron Kirk, Edinburgh, in 1916 and served with the R.A. Chaplains' Department 1917–18. He became minister of Hawick Parish in 1925. He also stepped in as 'interim-moderator' for St. George's Kirk when it was without a minister in 1936/7. He wrote 'Roll of the Parish Ministry of Hawick, A.D. 1183–1929' (1936), which he had made into a fine manuscript volume, preserved in the church. He married Ethel Maud Richardson and they had a son Aiden (b.1911). Rev. Joseph (1791–2–65) son of John, the Town Clerk of Jedburgh. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1814 and appointed preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviot-head) 'chapel-of-ease' in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. In 1823 he married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1838–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and then moved to Hawick in 1972 as Minister of Trinity Kirk. He became a well-known and active member of the local community, growing to love its traditions and institutions. He acted as Callants' Club Chaplain and was also involved with the Probus Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2008 and retired that year after 36 years of service. Despite being advised to move away from his charge in order to enjoy a peaceful retirement, he insisted on staying on in Hawick. He married Brenda Shanks and their children are Stuart, David and Helen. Lisa (1997–) attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools and then Edinburgh University. She played for Melrose Ladies, Edinburgh University, French side Lille Metropole and D.M.P. Durham Sharks. She turned professional in 2016. She made her international debut against England in 2016 and was Scottish team Captain for the 2018/9 season. She has been capped 35 times for Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being 'i dêñu', which is probably an abbreviation for 'in dennum', i.e. he lived in Denholm. Richard (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He married Martha Norval and their children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1760). His wife was probably recorded in 1787 when 'Martha Novels Grandchild' died in Hawick. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1778 he married Euphan Cairns and their children included: James (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); John (b.1783); and Archibald (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were 'The Associate Congregation'. Richard (18th/19th C.) recorded at Woodfoot in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot. He is probably the Richard whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1815. Robert (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside 'Newtown'. His barn and yard are recorded in 1562 in the document dealing with the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. Robert (d.c.1606) minister of Ratho who was presented as minister of Castleton Parish at the end of 1604. He may have held both at the same time, but not for long, since he was dead within less than 2 years. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dobie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1646. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). Along with James he witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, and along with George he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. It seems likely that he was father or brother of both George and James. He also witnessed a baptism for John Hope in 1681 and Andrew Leyden in 1683. He married Margaret Gray in Roberton Parish in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680); Dand (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). He was probably also the Robert recorded in Burnfoot in 1697 when his son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1687 were James (perhaps his brother) and Thomas Caldwell. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam Scott of Burnfoot and James White. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel mentioned in 1679 when Robert Wright was fined for destroying a load of peat that he had cut, and he himself was fined for ‘ane ryott committ upon the said Robert Wright’. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.bef. 1720) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Dickson. Their son George was born in 1687, with Gideon Scott of Outerside and Rev. Thomas Shiel as witnesses (suggesting he was from the countryside to the south of Hawick). His children included: Helen (b.1675); Gideon (b.1684); Isobel (b.1685), who married Robert Nichol in Hawick in 1720; and George (b.1687). In 1707 he and his son Gideon witnessed a baptism for James Renwick, undermiller at Newmill.

This suggests he may be the same man as the tenant in Castlehill and Newmill. Robert (1668/9-1740) tenant in Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott, who died in 1739, aged 73 years. He may have had a son William (also tenant in Greens), whose wife Isabella Armstrong died in 1748, aged 40. They are buried in Etterton. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at Castlehill (near Newmill) in 1690. He is listed as ‘Rot. Thomsone officer’, but it is unclear what ‘officer’ meant. He is probably the same Robert listed as tenant at Newmill on Teviot on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where he was ‘wt tuo kilns’ and paid tax for 4 hearths. He was in ‘Newmilne’ in 1696 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Storey in 1698 and for smith John Dryden in 1700. He was also in Newmill when he witnessed baptisms in 1700 for William Bell in Whitchesters and Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1701 for smith John Dryden (whose wife was a Thomson), in 1702 for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, in 1704 for Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1705 twice (one at Branxholmington), in 1706 for Robert Henderson, in 1707 for Walter Wilson again and for Walter Craw in Branxholme Town, in 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town, for William Allan (in ‘Park’) and for James Scott in Stobicote (husband of his step-daughter), and in 1713 for John Riddell in Branxholme Town. Given all the baptisms that he witnessed, it is likely he was a Kirk Elder, acting for the Newmill area. He was recorded in Newmill in 1709 when his ‘servitor’ John Nichol had a child baptised. Probably the same Robert was in Newmill in 1723 when (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden and in 1726 other baptisms (also along with William) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill. In 1729 he and William also witnessed a baptism for Robert Goodfellow. In 1731 he witnessed a further baptism for William (who was also at Newmill). He may have been ancestor of the later Robert at Newmill on Slitrig (although maybe that is just a coincidence). He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Falsyde, and whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1694), Walter (b.1698) and Robert (b.1701). The witnesses in 1698 were John Dryden and Thomas Elliot. He is probably the Robert ‘in New milne’ whose step-daughters included: Margaret Scott, who married Walter Hume in 1707; and Anne Scott, who married James Scott (tenant in Stobicote) in 1712. It seems likely that his wife Margaret Falsyde was widow of William Scott, and that he took her children into his family. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Burnfoot in 1697. He married a Gray and their children included Robert (b.1697). He may be the Robert whose son Robert was baptised in 1712. He may be the Robert in Appletreehall who had a legal process against James Laing, maltman of Selkirk in 1723. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish who married Anna Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1701); and William (b.1704). Robert (18th C.) ex-Bailie in 1738 when he was involved with the construction of the Teviot Bridge. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as an Elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters Mill in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733). He may be the Robert who in 1773 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scoon and Rachel Riddell and in 1776 witnessed another baptism for miller John Scott and Betty Thomson (who was probably related). Robert (18th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm in the Rule valley. His family came originally from the Hassendean area. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. When he died (in the late 1700s) he left around £1200 to a distant relative called Boog, who spent it all within about a year. Robert (18th C.) only son of George and Margaret Kerr. In 1757 he had a sasine for the half lands of Foderlee. He married Mary Dick. She and her her son George had a sasine for the ‘liferent’ of Foderlee in 1764. However, he had another sasine for these lands in 1766, along with Isobel Kerr. She was presumably either a second wife, or a relative of his mother. In 1778 the lands went to James, who may have been another son. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at New Mill on Slitrig, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He is probably related to the Robert recorded there in 1712. He was at ‘Newmiln’ in 1789 when his daughter Magdaline was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) footman at Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Nelly (b.1808). Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1809), William (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813) and Jeany (b.1815). Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer’s and spirit merchant’s shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (19th C.) married Agnes Hall in Wilton in 1828. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as ‘Skyehead’ and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert ‘Bob’ (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of shepherd Robert Hume. His children were: Adam, assistant gardener at Wolfelee, who married Martha Dalgleish; Robert, gardener at Hunthill, who married Margaret Eunson; James, blacksmith at Wark-on-Tweed, who married Euphemia Hope; George, footman at Kippilaw House; John, grocer; William, tailor; Charles, gardener; Helen; and Janet. Thomas (15th C.) recorded ‘in quithalch braa’ in 1494/5. He contributed ‘1 nag’ to the itinerant court held in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk’s next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepool and finally to Slamannan. Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinneil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 (although there were also calls from Newcastleton and Morebattle) and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning (or a ‘ball of fire’) while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain). He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In 1693 he married Beatrix Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendean, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725. Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700–48), well known as a poet, author of ‘The Seasons’; Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh’s New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thomson, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. His house in Ednam was converted into the schoolhouse. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867. Thomson (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was rebuked by the Hawick Session for this ‘irregular marriage’, which took place in England. Their daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1725, with witnesses Rev. Charles Telfer and weaver James Roger. Perhaps the same Thomas also married Mary Elliot and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dryden in 1718 and their children included: Robert (b.1719); and Adam (b.1722). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Deanbre in 1726. His children included Janet (b.1724) and James (b.1726). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He is probably the Thomas who married Marion Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1728. He was recorded at Denholm in 1729 and 1730 (when he was a herd). His children included Bessie (b.1729), Helen (b.1730) and Adam (b.1734). He is probably also father of some of these children baptised in Cavers Parish (with the others being part of the other Thomas; family): Helen (b.1728); Alison (b.1732); George (b.1732); and an unnamed child (b.1739). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1732. He married Mary Elliot and their son John was baptised in 1732, with witnesses George Bell and George Home. His surname is written ‘Thomason’. Thomas (18th C.) married Margaret Kersel in Minto in 1736. Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isabel Hardie and their children included: Peter (b.1756); Isabel (b.1759); Agnes (b.1762); and Robert (b.1764). The witnesses in 1759 were flesher Robert Hardie and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Coltart and their children included James (b.1765), Walter (b.1766) and Agnes (b.1768). He may be the workman who witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland in 1787. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Oliver and their son Thomas was baptised in 1773. He may be the deceased Thomas whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1781. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1787. He married Margaret Elliot in 1785 and they had an unnamed son in 1787. Thomas (b.c.1770s) mason in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as apprentice to mason John Laing when he was on the ballot for the Militia. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815; in that record the word ‘Slorage’ or ‘Slorige’ appears after his name. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) members of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1821). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (19th C.) married Robina Hay in Wilton in 1824. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1842 and their children included Janet (b.1844). Walter (17th C.) married Helen Grieve in Roberton in 1681. Their son James was baptised in 1685. Walter (18th C.) married Helen ‘Mader’ in Bedrule in 1751. Their son George was baptised in Cavers in 1755. William (b.1753) and Janet (b.1760), also baptised in Cavers (with no mother’s name given) were probably also their children. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Dunlop in Wilton in 1779. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Janet (b.1780), Thomas (b.1784) and Thomas (b.1785). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Horsburgh and their children included William (b.1787). Walter (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish and their children included: Margaret (b.1790); Mary (b.1793); John (b.1795); Agnes (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); Rabina (b.1802); and Walter (b.1809). Walter (19th C.) married Beatrice Scott in Roberton in 1849. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William (b.1852) and Henry (b.1853). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Dunlop and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Walter (surely related) and John Wilson. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

William (17th/18th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was listed as servitor to Gideon Scott of Falnash. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included William (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1707). The witnesses in 1702 were smith John Dryden and Robert Riddell, miller at Newmill. He is probably the William ‘older’ in Newmill, who (along with William ‘younger’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith John Dryden in 1705; Dryden’s wife was Isobel, who may have been his daughter. He could be the William who married Agnes Cook and whose children included James (b.1680); the witnesses in 1680 were William Wilson and William Paisley. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in the Hawick Session records of 1722, when he was asked to summon a person to the Court of the Baron Depute. He was probably a Burgh Officer of the time, but may instead have been a Kirk officer. William (18th C.) resident of Newmill in Hawick Parish. He was probably son (or grandson) of Robert, tenant in Newmill. In 1733 he is recorded being at ‘New Miln’ and ‘at New miln’ in Hawick Parish in 1740. He may be the William ‘younger’, who (along with William ‘elder’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. He was ‘in Newmiln’ in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town, William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He is probably the William who (along with Robert, both in Newmill) witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden in 1723. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1726 (along with Robert) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill, and another (along with Robert) for Robert Goodfellow in 1729. His servant Robert Deans witnessed a baptism in 1742 for William Anderson in Raesknowe; this was the same day as the baptism of one of his own children in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in Roberton. Probably the same William in Newmill secondly married Isobel Scott (with whom he had children baptised in 1738 and 1740), with her name being recorded as ‘Margaret’ in 1742. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1729); Nichol (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733), Katherine (b.1735); Janet (b.1738); Helen (b.1740); and Margaret (again, b.1742). All the baptisms were recorded in Hawick, except the first Margaret, who was baptised in Roberton Parish. Janet (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his daughter. The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Scott and Robert Thomson, in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, and in 1742 were his servant Robert Deans and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Doecleuch in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1750. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Lockie in 1762 and their children included Jean (b.1774) and John (b.1777). William (d.bef. 1791) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Scott and she died in 1791. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horsepark, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) stockmaker in Hawick. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott and Betty (who may have been his daughter or sister). William (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servant to Capt. Douglas of Cavers’ in 1784. He was listed as footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791–73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the ‘William Thomson, Jun. Cavers’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included: Tibby (b.1778); Nelly (b.1784); William (b.1787); and George (b.1788). Additional children, also baptised in Cavers, may include: Walter (b.1779); and James (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1799 his son James was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Lilliesleaf Parish; he is listed as ‘Tenant Repperlaw Netherrow’. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Knox (or perhaps
Thomson’s Cave

King) and their children included John (b.1813), David (b.1815), Isobel (b.1817), Ann (b.1819) and George (b.1822). He may be the William whose child died in Hawick in 1824. William (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1826 he and Robert Dryden were put in charge of the Parish mort-safes. William (b.1799/1800) from Selkirk, he was a tailor on Allars Crescent. He was listed there in the 1851 census (when he employed 3 men) and in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was at 1 Manse Lane. His wife was Isabella and their children included Agnes, Margaret, William, Andrew, Ann and Jemima. William (b.1810) manufacturer of hosiery on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a son of surveyor James, and was living at about 27 Loan with his parents and siblings in 1841. William (b.1790/1) stone dyker living at Longhaugh on Hermitage Water in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Thomas, Jane (whose married name was Scott), Margaret and Janet. William (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Helen Dickson and their children included: Sarah (b.1830), baptised the following year; and Helen (b.1833). William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Laing in Wilton in 1840. William L. (c.1820–bef. 1861) stone dyker, born in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Stouslie Schoolhouse. He married Elizabeth Anderson in 1845. Their children included Mary (b.1845/6), William L. (b.1847/8) and James (b.1849/50) and Isabella (b.1851/2). In 1861 his widow and children were living at Orchard Cottage. William (19th C.) married Jane Brodie in Wilton in 1854. William (19th C.) mason in Denholm in the 1860s. He was a registered voter at that time. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Hummanknowes and later Coliforthill. William Lindsay (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1908–19. William ‘Bill’ or ‘Jimpy’ (1936–) worked in various mills in Hawick, and long involved with the British Legion, he was Common Riding Secretary 2001–05 (formerly spelled ‘Thomason’, ‘Thomsoun’, ‘Thompson’, ‘Thomson’, ‘Thomsonne’, ‘Thomsoun’, ‘Thomsoune’, etc.; also pronounced as in ‘Tamsun’ or ‘Thamson’).

Thomson’s Cave (tom-sinz-kāv) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. This is said to have been a popular haunt of for the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well (tha-tom-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription ‘Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria’s record reign, 1897 . . . It’s yer ain; protect it’. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

thon (thon, thon) pron. that, those, you, yonder – ‘This is mine, that’s yours, but whae’s aucht thon?’[JAHM], ‘Yiddie’s a bleith fallih, bit A dinna leike thon Jock yin!’[ECS], ‘And thon’s jist the stert. What about the audience boggles?’[JuH], adv., adj. those – ‘What’s the name o thon close it the Croon Hotel?’, ‘But still, up thon weary brae, Onward aa blundert . . .’[DH] (this form is peculiarly local, while yon appears in other British dialects; also sometimes thine): it is used to indicate more distant objects than ‘this’, while yon corresponds more often with ‘that’.

thonder (tho-on-duhr) adv., adj., pron. yonder, over there – ‘if ee’r lookin for yer fither hei’s ower thonder’, ‘Thonder was the monument A jaloozed ti be the Lilliard’s Edge Memorial’[ECS], ‘Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder’[DH], ‘Away up thonder abune the Wusp . . . at Westminster . . .’[DH].

thone (thoon) adv., adj., pron. that, those – ‘A fair likeet Nardini’s ice cream. Was thone no the best?’[We] (also thon).

thoom (thoom) n. a thumb – ‘hei’s aa fingers an thooms’, ‘A ken ma thoom’s beelin, ’cause it’s putt, puttn (throb, throbbing)’[ECS], ‘. . . Wi’ tea, an’ crackers no’ the size O’ even ane’s thoom nail’[WFC] (also spelled ‘thoomb’ or ‘thoum’).

thoom-seat (thoom-seat) n., arch. a stall or covering for an injured thumb.

thoosand (thoo-zind) n. a thousand – ‘Thoosands, gude kens how mony, to the breeder, An’ hauf as muckle for a cock to tread her’[JoHa], ‘. . . Mair worth than an estate a thoosand miles square’[JoHa], ‘. . . but A’d a thoosand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’[JEDM], ‘Ten thoosand hands were raised on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’[WP], ‘A thoosand buttercups waited to confirm Yin’s likin’ for butter . . .’[DH], ‘What sacrifice To gie

trowe their test’ [IWL], ‘Remeandering, Eddleston Witter, twae thoosand an thirteen’ [JuH] (cf. thoosant).

thoosant (thoo-sin, tho-zint) n. thousand (also spelled ‘thousant’ and ‘thoosint’; used interchangeably with thoozand).

thoot (thoo, thoot) prep., poet. without – ‘…An’, holy beacons, glow ‘thoot flaw or wane’ [JoHa], ‘Nought but the vera rims o' men,
'Thoot saul or spunk – a glazent den’ [JoHa].

Thor (thor) n. Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hoggs’s song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – ‘The spirit still lies on the Border side – The spirit of Thor and Odin’ [JB], ‘With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn’ [JBSS].

Thorbrand (thor-brawnd) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summoning him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam who married El-speth Stevenson and whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. He is probably also the wright who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson. George (17th C.) son of wright James. He was witness to the document describing his father’s work on the ‘steiple-loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as ‘my sone wryter thereof’. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Thronbrand in Wilton’ in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branzholme and Bucleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbrands. Bailie
James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 when Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for theiking’ between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that ‘the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir’; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Also in 1673 he was witness to baptisms for John Chalmers, Thomas Cowan and James Newbie. In 1683 wright Francis Gledstains was fined for attacking him and for stealing 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the wright who was late ‘baylea in Havicke’ when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. This was the ‘Steeple (or Middle) Loft’ in St. Mary’s in 1684. He was married to ‘Jeane Wetch’ (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the ‘Bai-lyea Thorburne’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as ‘wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailife Purdem pay’d him, is all he gote for placing about the palling raill about Mr Elliott’s grave stone, £12’. He may be the John who was listed as ‘student’ in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Elliot in Whitchesters. Robert (16th C.) witness to an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. Simon Routledge was ‘in Cruik’, while he described as being ‘there’, presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Volle Thurbrand’ (formerly ‘Thronbrand’ and ‘Thorburn’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).

Thorburn (thor-burn) n. Adam (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Janet Miller is recorded in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His property may be the ‘Thorburn’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798 and another who died in 1811 (where he is recorded as ‘Berwick Carrier’). He is probably the Adam who married Janet Paterson and whose children included: Agnes (b.1796); John (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); Catherine (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); George (b.1805); William (b.1807); and James (b.1815). The witnesses in 1796 and 1797 were Robert Tinlin and Michael Anderson. Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick as recorded in a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may also be the David from ‘Brounmoorhight’ recorded in another letter. He married Sarah Thomson and their son David was baptised in Hawick in 1790. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirk in 1707. George (18th C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedge. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedge after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew; who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at over age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or are being confounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jeannie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastleton; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastleton, operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedge in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.c.1828); William (b.c.1840); Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgleish. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedge. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1950/1– ) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He was founder and Managing Director of Global Horticulture Limited. He was speaker at the 2005 Callants’ Club dinner and Chief Guest of the 2009 Common Riding. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. James (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas of Cavers. James (19th C.) local schoolmaster of whom a portrait exists. James (b.1824) born in Hobkirk Parish.
son of John. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Probationer M.A. of U P Church’ when visiting the house of John Governlock in Ewesdale. He may be related to Rev. John, who was also from Hobkirk. Janet (18th/19th C.) daughter of George, farmer at Stonedge. She married William Little, farmer at Salenside. She is said (by J.H. Haining) to have ‘lived to be 99, got second sight and a third set of teeth, although they decayed very quickly’. She has a brother Andrew who also lived to 99, and another brother George, who lived beyond 80. Jean (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same person was a female servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791. Jock (1926/7– ) came to Hawick as a refugee in 1939. He worked as foreman at the Walled Gardens and had a long association with boxing in Hawick. He married Teri Jean Cumming. They had sons George and John. the couple celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2019. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Moss and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bulloch in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); and Elizabeth (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were mason Andrew Turnbull ‘junior’ and weaver George Swan. John (d.1794) carrier. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish. He was ‘killed by his own cart at Drydon’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797. He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge. John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprietor’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabella Hall in Hawick in 1791. John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd minister of St. Paul’s Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dunning. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Elizabeth. John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with his elderly father. He married Margaret Rae (from England) and their children included Agnes, Susan Wright (b.1854), John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846. John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman. In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenside Cottage. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Andrew and Jessie. John son of Jock and younger brother of George. He works for the Bill McLaren Foundation and has been Secretary of both Hawick R.F.C. and the 1514 Club. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarsshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Headshaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew. Robert (18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick.
Thorlieshope

He married Elizabeth Rae and their children included Thomas (b.1740), Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1743). He could be the Robert who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Agnes (b.1789) and John (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. His daughter Nelly died in 1800. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is unclear. Thomas (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). He paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse. Robert (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer resident of Hawick. He paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787-88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedge, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedge Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedge helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barnman’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died unmarried. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Wooplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Walter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Christian Ballantyne, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Adam (b.1766); William (b.1768); Janet (b.1771); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne, in 1766 were Robert and Adam Thorburn (who were surely related) and in 1771 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or Marion) Ekron and their children included: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); and Elizabeth (b.1770). He is probably the Walter from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1780 and 1785. His children included: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1784); and Walter (b.1785). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Buccleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Haggan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). Walter (b.1822/3) resident of Roberton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Harden in 1841, was living with his mother Janet Lockie at Borthwickbrae Haugh in 1851 and was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1861. He married Beatrix Scott from Newcastleton. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William, Henry, James, Janet and Marion. Walter ‘Wat’ (19th/20th C.) Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band from about 1882. He was also known as an accomplished soloist.

Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time after WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Elliot and their children included: Violet Hardie (b.1798), baptised in Ashkirk, who married Hawick seedsman John Turnbull; and Walter (b.1801), baptised in Selkirk. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howegate. He was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Ballantyne who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and their son Walter was baptised later the same year. The witnesses were weaver Robert Renwick (probably related to his wife) and tobacconist William Brown. He may also have married Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosiery manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielhaugh, near Duns (also written ‘Thorburn’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand).

Thorlieshope (thör-leez-höp) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Elliots. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is ‘Thorleshope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. ‘Robert Elwald’ was Laird in 1488 and ‘Johne Elwald in Thorleshope’ is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Lairds through the 16th century. It is probably the ‘Thornyshope’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 4 merks and with Robert Elliot as tenant. The house of ‘Thrleshope’ belonging to ‘Arche Elwode’ was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same
Thorlieshope Burnfoot

‘Arche Ellot of Thirlishoup’ rented Southdeanrig and Cadcleuch from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called ‘Hob of Thorlieshope’ was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Hawick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorlieshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braiddie branch in 1583, while John ‘of Thorlesope’ signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behalf of the Elliots of Thorlieshope. Adam ‘Rakkis’ was recorded there in 1611. The lands were already owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613. It could be the ‘Thorishop’ where Thomas Brown was recorded in 1618. John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mangerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse (‘Bluidy Clavers’) wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at ‘Thorlishopes hous’ in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and William Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. William Nichol was steward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was owned by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (perhaps the tower) was once described as being a ruined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms ‘DME’ and ‘WEAC’ (surely related to William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage). This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th century. A flint arrowhead was found in the garden in 1882, but subsequently lost. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Deadwater, was once regarded as having healing properties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th century. Thorlieshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A ‘decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished’ from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for ‘Charlieshope’ in ‘Guy Mannering’ (the name probably means ‘valley with the thorny clearing’; it is ‘Thorleshope’ in 1488, ‘thornlawishop’ in 1494/5, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1498, ‘Thorleshop’ in 1500 and 1516, ‘Thirleshope’, ‘Thorleshope’ and ‘Thorlishopp’ in 1541, ‘Thorlyshop’ and ‘Thorlyshope’ in 1546, transcribed as ‘Thorlishowp’ in 1547, ‘Thorlishoip’ and ‘Thorlishop’ in 1569, ‘Thornesope’ in 1583, transcribed ‘Thorwisoip’ in 1587/8, ‘Thorliship’ in 1594, ‘Thorlesop’ in 1595, ‘Thirleshoppe’ in 1613, ‘Thoirleishoip’ in 1623, ‘Chorlesoip’ in 1646, ‘Thorlishopp’ in 1648, ‘thorliship’ in 1678, ‘Thorlishope’ in 1690, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1692, ‘Thorlishop’ in 1704 and ‘Thorlishoip’ in 1811; it is ‘Thorlisope’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey and ‘Thorlishope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thorlieshope Burnfoot (thör-leez-höp-burn-fi’) n. former steading in Castleton Parish, near where Thorlieshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labourer David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thorlieshope Heights (thör-leez-höp-hîts) n. general name for hilly area to the east of Thorlieshope farm, south of Thorlieshope Pike. A triangulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foulmire Heights.

Thorlieshope Pike (thör-leez-höp-pik) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thorlieshope is located to the west, and Thorlieshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

thorn (thörn) n., arch. the hawthorn tree (used in place names, e.g. Thorniewhats, Thornybank and Thornyhaugh).

Thornebogg (thör-nee-bög) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Martin Crozier, however, the exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Thornhill (thörn-hîl) n. town in Dunfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Castle. This is where the Baron’s Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were accustomed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Michaelmas Court on account of the poor state of their crops.

Thornewhat (thör-nee-whats) n. farm just to the east of Hollows (Gilnockie) between Langholm and Canonbie, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The Scotts of Bucleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Thornyquhat’ in 1579, ‘Thornytheait’ in 1583, ‘Thornyquhättie’, ‘Thornyquhätt’ and ‘Torniquhatt’ in 1585, ‘Thorniquhat’ in 1623 and...
‘Thorniequhatis’ in 1663; it is marked as ‘Thorniewhat’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map; note that it should not be confused with ‘Thornhyaugh’ near Falnash).

Thornton (thörn-in) n. former name for piece of land on the farm of Braidhaugh near Hobkirk, probably near to the Rule Water and ‘Thornton Pool’ (also ‘Thorntonpoun’).

Thornton (thörn-in) n. Lewis Henry Jenkins (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1853 he married Elizabeth, daughter of stockmaker Peter Fraser.

Thornton Pool (thörn-in-pool) n. deep pool in the Rule Water near the farm of Braidhaugh. The name was still in use in the early 20th century.

Thornwud Avenue (thörn-wud-aw-vi-new) n. Thornwood Avenue, a street in Weensland, named for its proximity to the former Thornwood House and constructed in 1976.

Thornwud Hoose (thörn-wud-hoos) n. mansion built by James Oliver in 1870, which eventually became the Mansfield House Hotel. The name probably derived from being ‘on a bleak hill side covered with whins and thorns’, according to a contemporary newspaper report. The original design, in a Greek Revival style (with Italian elements), was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rochead in 1867. The house was sold to Lt.-Col. Mudie in 1936 and by the 1950s it had become a hotel (see also Mansfield Hoose).

Thornwud Park (thörn-wud-pawrk) n. Thornwood Park, a street in Weensland, part of Daykins Drive. The whole street was called Daykins Drive when built in 1982, but this name was favoured by many residents and later made official. It derives from the proximity to Thornwood House.

Thornybank (thörn-nee-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, probably located between the lands of Harwood and Fairmielees. This could be the same as ‘Thornydykes’, where Robert French is recorded in 1603 (‘Thorniebankis’ in 1562).

Thornycleugh (thörn-nee-klooch) n. former farmstead to the west of Bellendean and south of Redfordgreen, in the far corner of what was once Roberton Parish. William Little ‘in thornychuch’ is recorded in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bellendean Burn. The stream called ‘Thornycleuch Burn’ is curiously on the other side of the B711, flowing into Clearburn Loch.

Thornyhaugh (thör-née-hawch, -haw) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The ‘Chapel of Ease’ for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by Robert Scott in 1738 and Robert Laidlaw was there in 1741. John Hume was there in 1781–85 and was tenant in 1797. Peter Hume was there in 1795. (it is ‘Thornihauh’ in 1738 and 1741 and ‘Thornyhall’ in 1781 and 1785; also written ‘Thorny Hall’ and ‘Thorniehall’, perhaps erroneously).

Thorterdykes (thör'-ur-, thor-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely overlapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdykeback and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced ‘Whirter Dykes’ in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built. The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thorter dikes’; its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thör'-ur-diks-róed-hoos) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.

Thorter Rig (thör'-ur-rig) n. ridge just south of Crooked Loch in the headwaters of the Ale.

Thorter Villa (thör'-vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdykes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud (thör'-ur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (marked on Blaen’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thursdi (thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled ‘Thursdii’; cf. the older Thursday).

the Thursdi (thu-thursdi) n. common name for the Thursday before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbussed) flag for the first time. After the ‘Hut’ there is a ceremonial singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse at St. Leonard’s and a ride around the racecourse at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer’s Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at the Horse monument and the Cornet’s Walk. The evening is the first time that the ‘Big Threi’ wear their traditional Cornet’s uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Minister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inn where the participants would dine on the Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments after returning from the Thursday morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after ‘the Hut’ and then proceeded round by Wilton. In the years 1900–04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursday morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-mòr-neen-chàs) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursday morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Backdamgate, but at 6 m. the Cornet now has the (unbussed) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Father takes the Flag at the top of the Nipknowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse while the Cornet and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farmhouse and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Tibbie Shiel’s Inn (ti-bee-sheelz-in) n. hotel and pub between St. Mary’s Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. It was run by Tibbie Shiel (1783–1878, Isabella Richardson before her husband died) in the early-to-mid 19th century. It was a meeting point for the Ettrick Shepherd and other writers, and is still run as a hostelry. Michael Robson wrote ‘Tibbie Shiel’ (1986) – ‘The Ettrick bard, James Hogg, a happy chiel, Could sing a sang and tell a story weel. In Tibbie Shiel’s, with other bards he met, But all are gone, their suns for ever set’ [TCh].

Tibbie Tantry (ti-bee-tan-tree) n. local character of the early 19th century, a neighbour of Robbie Clingy (the nickname is possibly related to transtie).

Tibbie Tamson (ti-bee-tam-sin) n. nickname for Isabella Thomson.

Tibbie the Brotch (ti-bee-thu-broích) n. nickname of a woman from the West-end in the early part of the 19th century. She was presumably thin, and her nickname distinguished her from other Isabells or Elizabeths, such as ‘Tibbie o the Green’. She led a group of women who organised themselves to taunt the members of the ‘royalist’ party at the 1809 Common Riding, including pelting Capt. Campbell with dung.

Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage (ti-bee-thu-fid-hurz-ko’-eej) n. former low thatched cottage on the Mill Path, near the railway bridge, which stood on the boundary of the Burgh property, and on the roof of which the Song Singing ceremony took place until 1859. The house was demolished in 1860 to make room for the railway, with the Song Singing taken place amid the ruins of the house in 1860 and thereafter on a platform constructed nearby (and shifted to the opposite side of the road in the 1960s) – ‘Song Singin’ akin tae stance on cliff. Took place on Tibbie the Fiddler’s rif, This was the last time for sic doin’s Nixt year was held mid Tibbie’s ruins’ [MB] (also sometimes spelled ‘Tibby’; who this individual was seems now unknown, and slightly mysterious, given that Tibbie is a woman’s name and female fiddlers could not have been common then).

Tib the Virgin (tib-thu-vir-jin) n. nickname for someone in Hawick in the mid-19th century. Presumably the nickname had positive connotations and was not meant ironically – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum Hardies danders over the knawe’ [HI].

tike-tired (tik-tírd) adj., arch. dog-tired.

the Tile Ford (thu-til-förd) n. former ford across the Hermitage Water near the Castle. It is referred to in a charter of about 1200 for the lands of 'Merchlinlee'.

till (til) prep., arch. to, up to, towards, as far as, until (used more generally than in standard English, where it usually only refers to time) – 'Be it kend til al men...’ [SB1470], ‘...as ze wil answer tyl ws apoun the executioun of zour office’ [SB1500], ‘...that none should come in till the said loft till once the persons that use ane right...be once settled in their seats’ [BR1710], 'How puir she was, what he's dune for, and what he has gien till her'[JoHa], 'If hei brings the bit lassie on till the city...’ [JEDM], ‘...They'll come up till his kuei'[JSB], 'My beloefet has gane doun intil his gairden til the beds o' spices, til feed in the gairdens...’ [HSR], 'But it is guid for me til draw neær til God...’ [HSTR], 'Hei was sweerin' at the men till work' [GW] (see also till').

the Till (thu-tıl) n. river in Northumberland, which runs into the Tweed. It is deep and was hard to ford in former times. The crossing was important during the Battle of Flodden. It is also somewhat unusual in having 2 names, the upper part being called the Breamish – 'Says Tweed to Till 'What cars ye rin so still?' Says Till to Tweed 'Though ye rin wi speed And I rin slaw, For ae man that ye droon I droon twa' ’[T], her mither's throat, it's cheerfu' music still, Haa socht a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmurin' Till' [JYH], 'Then the dreadful roar of battle Echo'd from the distant hill, While the life blood flow'd so freely That it dy’d the sluggish Till' [JAHB], 'The minstrel climbed the sacred mound And gazing easterward where the Till To Tweed his deviou pathway wound Through woods that fringed that fatal hill' [WHO].

Tillilee (ti-le-lee) n. former name for the farm at Peelbrae. It was owned by the Elliots of Redheugh before 1497/8, when it is recorded as 'Tellile', along with 'Caldcluch', in the Douglas of Cavers papers. There was a 'retour of inquest' held at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of these lands by Robert 'Elwalde', grandson of the former Robert. It may also have been written 'Tilloly', and the name was mostly lost in the 17th century, although it may be related to the Tinlee Stone. It was still recorded in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands had a boundary with Dod, passing along the Dod Burn and then the Rowantree dyke to the boundary with Priesthaugh, the line being partly marked with stones (it is 'Tillilee' in 1511, 'Tillilee' in 1687 and transcribed 'Tilbie' in 1698).
Tillieleehope (ti-lee-lee-up) n. alternative name for the steading of Peelbrae, recorded as ‘Tillieleehope’ in 1660.

Tillotson (ti-lit-sin) n. Ben (19th C.) local cricketer serving as professional for the Wilton team from 1857 and with Hawick and Wilton through the 1860s.

till’t (till, til’) contr., arch. to it – ‘Ma principle is ready money for cobblin’, an’ aw’ll stick till’t’ [WNK], ‘I hae swurn, an’ wull stan’ till’ t . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . .it is hie, I canna atteen till’t’ [HSR], ‘Some, pointing to the machine, would exclame – “see till’t!” disna that beat a’’ [HAST1868], ‘There’s nae end till’t’ [ECS], ‘Div ce taik shoo-gir till’t?’ [ECS], ‘Hei’ll need nae mair till’t’ [ECS], ‘. . . born and bred till’t, Wi a Common Riding in the verra blude-stream . . .’ [DH], also used elliptically for a verb of motion or labour – ‘It’s a case o hei till’t an shui till’t’ [ECS] (cf. ti’d and till).

till yince (till-yins) adv., arch. until at length, until some condition has been met – ‘. . . that none should enter intil the said loft, till once the persons that use ane right and proeritic to the said loft be once settled’ [BR1716].

tillysow (ti-lee-sow) n., arch. a small lodging-house or commercial inn built by a landowner to accommodate the servants of his guests at their own expense – ‘He would say he would have a board placed before his house, with the announcement, ‘No Tillysow kept here’’ [JW].

the Tima Witter (thi-ti-nur-wi’-ur) n. small river that rises near the border with Dumfries & Galloway and flows about 6 miles roughly north to join the Ettrick Water at Ramseyeuch – ‘Then a murmuer wakes in the heath and fern, And the fairies gather, unseen of men, Riding up from the Rankleburn And troopong down from the Teema Glen’ [WHO] (it is ‘Tymeye’ in 1235/6 and ‘Temay’ in 1415; ‘Timo B.’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Timbersidemill (tim-bur-sid-nil) n. former name for Scawmill, a cottage in the north of the old part of Wilton Dean. It was once a corn mill, distinct from Dean Mill. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls records ‘Thomas Miller and John Bue wt an kline betuxit thm’ there; Andrew ‘Andisone’ was also recorded there, among the poor of Wilton Parish. Francis Scott was there in 1697. John Cairns was there in 1721 and James Scott in at least 1721–27. John Turnbull was there in at least 1743–7. John Scott was recorded as farmer there in 1797 (it was ‘Timbersydemilline’ and ‘timbersidemilline’ in 1694, ‘Timersydemill’ and ‘Timbersyde mihn’ in 1721, ‘Timbersyde mihn’ in 1727, ‘Timersdydemill’ in 1743, ‘Timber Syd mill’ in 1747 and ‘Timbersidemilh’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

time (tim, tim) n. time, a specific time such as for eating or feeding livestock – ‘It’s horse-time, cow-time’ [GW] (note the pronunciation with the soft i in phrases such as ‘tei time’ or ‘yon time’; also sometimes spelled ‘teime’ to emphasize the pronunciation).

time about (tim-a-boo’) adv. alternately, by turns, turn and turn about – ‘. . .Sure, time about is but fair play, His Highness syne maun now obey’ [RDW], ‘As oon canna get away threh the shoop thegither, oo’ve duest aye ti taik oor hoal-idays teime about’ [ECS] (cf. the more common turn about).

Timp•deane (tim-pen-deen) n. ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglases. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is surrounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglases, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. The Laird of Timpendean was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpeandean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been liferented in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower.

The tower is about 29ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the meriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘din pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tynype-den’ in 1499/1500, is ‘Tynmpyndane’ and ‘Tynmpanedene’ in 1504, ‘Tympenden’ in 1540, ‘Tympinton’ in 1545, ‘Tympindeine’ in 1551, ‘Tympyndane’ in 1557, ‘Tympeden’ in 1584/5, ‘Tympenden’ in 1590 and 1610, ‘Tempindene’ in 1600, ‘Temppandeine’ in 1655, ‘Timpediein’ in 1680, ‘Timpingdein’ in 1714, and ‘Timpintine’ in 1739; it is ‘Timpinein’ on Blaen’s 1654 map; it is written ‘Timpentown’ in 1858).

Tindall (tin-dal) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branzholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Tyndale’.

tine (tin) v., arch., poet. to lose, mislay, forget – ‘Farewell, he cry’d, I maun gae o’er the hill, But I will see ye soon, or tyne my skill’ [CPM], ‘Come on, come on’, cried Lucky Skrae, And dinna tyne the waye’ [JTe], ‘If ye tyne heart ye tyne a’’ [JTe], ‘…Or find a midge ’mang dockens tyned, An’ darkness fa’in’ ’ [JoHa], ‘I gat ane frae the priest, nor is it tyn’d yet, Sae lang time syne, guidfaith! I dinna mid o’t’ [JoHa], ‘Their love for thee they never tine Thou bonnie Border toon’ [RH], ‘The mither tongue, what Scottish heart Its memory wad tine? The lightsome days o’ happy years, The blinks o’ langsyne’ [JT] (also written ‘tyne’).

tink (tink) n., ins. short for ‘tinker’, a somewhat derogatory name for a Traveller, someone who moves from place to place doing casual work and buying and selling things – ‘the right gypsies were fine, it was they tinks that aye left a mess ahiint them’, more generally a mischievous child (see also gypsy).

Tinkers’ Knowe (ting-kurz-now) n. hill on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, between the Teindside and Back Burns and east of Commonside Moor. It reaches a height of 301 m. tinkler  (tingk-lur) n. "arch." a tinker, metalworker, itinerant peddlar – ‘And on 4th July of the same year a tinkler is fined for giving ‘insolent and irreverent language to the two present bayleys . . .’’ [DMW].

the Tinkler  (thu-tink-lur) n. "arch." nickname for John Scott, tenant in Harwood in the latter part of the 16th century.

the Tinlee Stane  (thu-tin-lee-stān) n. the Tinlee Stone, near Peelbraehope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Catrail. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

Tinlin  (tin-līn) n. supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Hornshole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

Tinlin  (tin-līn) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the westside of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Broun and their children were: Robert; Thomas (b.1677); George (b.1679); Agnes (b.1682); and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’: as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy (probably including the unnamed baptism in 1684). The witnesses in 1684 were George Young and William Purdom. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675 and another for William Bryson in 1680. John (c.1775–1844) son of Robert. He was William Wilson’s first apprentice in 1790. He may be the same John who was recorded as being a constable in 1801. He later lived in the Fore Row. He was there in 1841, with his sister Ann, and recorded as a woollen hose sorter. Perhaps the same stockingsmaker John was listed on the men balloted to serve in the Militia in 1797; in 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Birneyknowe. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Joyce née Cavers, known locally for her beautiful singing voice, making ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ her own. She has served as President of Wilton Dean Women’s Institute and Chair of Hawick Saxhorn Band, and has been involved with the Bright Eyed Daughters. In 2015 she became the first woman to propose one of the main toasts at the Common Riding Dinner. She sings ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) and ‘Soft Lowland Tongue of the Borders’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Robert (1672–aft. 1725) eldest son of John and Agnes Broun. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1702, 1704 and 1705 he witnessed baptisms for his brother Thomas. In 1697 he was fined by the Magistrates for publicly insulting John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, resisting the payment of a fine to the incorporation, and refusing to go to the Tolbooth. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for Janet Bruntfield (wife of Walter Laing). In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Stewart, dyker in Hawick. He was later quartermaster of the weavers himself along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). In 1721 he was recorded as a weaver when he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver Andrew Jardine. He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Purdom (surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother) and carrier John Aitken. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also Beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim ‘hae dune’. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with ‘Hawick for ever and independent’ (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a ‘blackneb’. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) ‘Tinlin & Hardie’ paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for ‘watching the town after fire’. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the ‘yule fees’. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1791 in a letter preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for Adam Thorburn and in 1797 another for James Mein. He also witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1804 and 1811. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – ‘Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw likely his sister) and John Grierson. Tinnisburn roll of 1541, with rental of £50. In 1551 the lands were inherited by Alexander, Lord Home from his father, George, Lord Home and in 1564/5 there was a decree by the Lords of Council that those inhabiting the lands remove themselves, namely the Stewarts and Pringles, as well as their tenants. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries; there was a letter of reversion between the Pringles and Homes regarding these lands in about 1606. Thomas Scott ‘callit of West Tynneis’ was in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1617. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there in 1653 and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century (also written ‘Tinneis’, ‘Tynnes’, ‘tynnis’, ‘Tynnes’ and variants, as well as ‘Tunnies’, ‘Tynnes’, etc.; the origin may be the Cumbric ‘din’ for ‘fort’ or ‘refuge’).

Tinnisburn (ti-nis-burn) n. former lands in Liddesdale. ‘Over and Neather Yyneisburne’ are listed among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 (it is ‘Tenissburn’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561., is ‘Tyneisburne’ in 1580, ‘Tyneisburne’ in 1599 and ‘Tynnesburne’ in 1605).

Tinnis Burn (ti-nis-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows roughly south-east to join the Liddel near Burnmouth (it is ‘Tunnies burn’ in 1718).

Tinnis Burn see Tinnis Witter

Tinnisburnfit (ti-nis-burn-fi’) n. former farmstead in lower Castleton Parish, on the north side of the Tinnis Burn, where it meets the Liddel Water (it is marked ‘Tinnisburnfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnisburnheid (ti-nis-burn-heed) n. former farm in Liddesdale, presumably on the Tinnis Water. It is ‘Tynnesburnheid’ in 1632 when listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale.

Tinnis Hill (ti-nis-hil) n. hill south-west of Newcastleton, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway. It reaches a height of 404 m, has a triangulation pillar and some remains of ancient cairns, sheepfolds and terraces. A wooden bowl found there, possibly neolithic, is in the Museum. There are cairns and standing stones to the south of the hill. The lands there were formerly a farm, valued at 6 pounds in 1541, and vacant at that time. There is another Tinnis on the Yarrow (including Tinnis Farm and Old Tinnis), another in Southdean Parish, east of Chesters (with an ancient settlement) and one more (with an ancient castle), near Drumelzier, between Peebles and Biggar – ‘High Tinnis is crested with flame as of yore, And flings its broad glare down the Solway’s red tide’ [Fi] (it is ‘Tynneshill’ in 1541; it is ‘Tinnise hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is also marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnis Hill (ti-nis-hil) n. another name for Hoodie’s Hill in Southdean Parish. The fort on the east side is so recorded in the R.C.A.H.M.S. listings, and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Tinnis Witter (ti-nis-wi’-ur) n. Tinnis Water, also known as Tinnis Burn, stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Tinnis Hill and meets the Liddel near Kershope. It is said to have once been heavily wooded and ‘the residence of freebooters’ – ‘Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now’ [WL] (it is ‘Tinns-burne’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map; the origin may be the same as ‘Tinnis’ in Selkirkshire, namely the Cumbric ‘din’, meaning ‘fort’).

Tinniswood (ti-nis-wood) n. T. (19th/20th C.) composer of the piano tunes ‘Cornet’s Lancers’ and ‘Cornet’s Schottische’. He also organised a local orchestra in the early 20th century.

Tinniswud (ti-nis-wud) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Temaswd’ in the c.1376 rental roll of the area. They were there valued at 9 merks. ‘Tynneswoodgrene’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. It must have been somewhere on the Tinnis Burn, but the precise location is unknown.

tint (tin’) adj., pp., arch. lost, mislaid, forgotten – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ [inscription at 25 High Street, and at the Text House in Denholm], ‘...and they could come to nae other conclusion, than that it had tint its companion’ [LHTB], ‘For Sense she now has drawn the cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some hae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astrayle like ane tint sheep ...’ [HSR], ‘...And ’mid the darkness o’ the night, I tint the path amang the heather’ [JT], ‘It maun hae been the bit o’ mint Ye left there on the chair, That brocht the sicht o’ scenes lang tint, An’ simmer days nae mair’ [EBC], ‘...Fu’ weel we ken they tint their sense, Believing Gled-stane’s stories ...’ [JCG], ‘A quiet village hoose tint o’ a’ steer ...’ [WL] (cf. time).

toantyith (tōn’-ee-, tōn-tee-ith) n. twentieth (cf. the more common toontyith).
toasts (tōstst) n., pl. these form an important part of many Common Riding functions. By tradition the Cornet’s Toast is the verse of ‘Teribbus’ that starts ‘‘Annual since, our Flag’s been carried …’’, that of the Acting Father is ‘Magistrates! Be faithful trustees …’, while the Right- and Left-hand men get ‘They are Jolly Good Fellows’. The toast to the memory of Drumlanrig is always pledged in solemn silence. Other toasts might include ‘the Provost’, ‘the Council’, ‘the Lasses’, ‘Absent Teries’ and ‘Safe Oot, Safe In’. Dinners typically end with ‘Cornet’s Up’.
tobacci (to-baw-ki) n. tobacco, plants of the genus Nicotiana, brought back from the New World from the 16th century and prepared for smoking or taking as snuff, originally believed to have remarkable medicinal properties. Like elsewhere in Europe, social customs were to change utterly with the arrival of these dried leaves. The first record in Hawick is in 1652. There were attempts to grow it in the Borders from about 1778, with successful farms near Melrose and Kelso, but the business was scuttled by changes to agricultural laws – ‘Persewit be John Scott, merchant, for payment to him of £6 10s. worth of tobacci pypis, broken be him in carrying of thame out of Edinburgh’ [BR1652] (also bacci).
tocher (to-chur) n., arch. a dowry, marriage portion – ‘…five hundred merkis for the marriage and toich of James of Douglas, my sone and apperand are, wyth Jonet, the dochter of the said Daid …’ [SB1470], ‘…the said Waltyr Scot, knicht, payand the toqhir to the said James …’ [SB1519], ‘…for, if she canna reckon kith an’ kin, an’ bring a heavy tocher, she can boast of a tight shape, a lily skin, an’ a heart filled wi’ the fear o’ God’ [JTe], ‘…That tell the tocher o’ a leal Scots lass, The oot-gleam o’ a heart that’s true’ [WL].
tocher-gude (to-chur-good) n., arch. money given as a dowry – ‘Item, to the Laird of Johnestoun for the rest of his tocher gude, ane thousand and foure hundredth merkis. Item, to the Laird of Phairnyhirst for the rest of his tocher-gude, and thousand pundis’ [SB1574].
tocherless (to-chur-lis) adj., arch. without a dowry – ‘But, alack! an’ a day! her charms were laid, For Bess o’ the Brae was a tocherless maid’ [JoHa], ‘…A tocherless lassie, baith friendless an’ poor’ [JT].

Tod (tōd) n. Thomas of Drygrange (1726–1800), W.S., son of Archibald, writer in Edinburgh. His family were from Melrose. He was an advocate, who was one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He was on the roll of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was recorded as life-renter of the lands of Langnewton Mill, as well as lands in Newstead. He was also recorded in 1811 as owner of the feu-dues from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. By 1875 these duties were among the possessions of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Langhope in Ashkirk Parish. He finished editing the 1837 description of that parish for the New Statistical Account, since the minister, Rev. Hamilton, died before publication. He also wrote ‘The obligation of civil rulers to establish the means of religious knowledge and instruction: deduced from the universal moral government of God’ (1836) and an essay describing a device for compressing peat into fuel, published in the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society in 1832 (see also Tod).

Todcleuch see Todscleuch
Todd (tod) n. David (1930/1– ) from Fife he was a policeman in Hawick and retired to Burntisland. He is known for his matchstick models, including one of Trinity Kirk, where he became an Elder in 1973. Francis (1857/8–1910) came to Hawick in 1889 as choirmaster at St. Andrew’s Church, remaining for 15 years. He conducted the Hawick Select Choir and others throughout the Borders and was also a music teacher. Gladys Ruth (1901–2002) born in Hawick, she became a school teacher, returning to town in 1925. She spent 30 years at Drumlanrig School and then 4 years at Wilton, retiring in 1959. Always known as ‘Miss Todd’, she was fondly remembered by ex-pupils. A supporter of the Border Music Festival and lover of the Hawick songs, she lived to celebrate her 100th birthday. James (19th C.) station-master at Stobs in the 1860s. Nichol (19th/20th C.) resident of Ormiston Lodge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. His surname is recorded as ‘Tode’. Sir William (d.bef. 1564) associated with Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in November 1557. It is feasible that this is a transcription error for ‘Ker’, who was a clergyman there soon afterwards; however, it seems that he resigned in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His ‘tack’ of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule that they had rights to the parish teinds (formerly spelled ‘Tod’ and ‘Tode’).

toddie (to-dee) n., arch. a round scone, savoury pancake – ‘They now maun drap their teas and toddies, An’ wheaten bread’ [JoHa].

toddie scone (to-dee-skōn) n., arch. a small, round scone – ‘...an old lady called Porter stayed in the bottom flat and sold pies and toddie scones’ [JRa] (see also scone and toddie).

toddle (to-dul) v. to walk with unsteady steps, walk jauntily, totter – ‘Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle’ [JFr]. ‘The bales o’ guid humour, the bags o’ love fare, The smiles an’ the smirkings that toddle it there’ [JoHa]. ‘Some playfu’ toddlin’ sweet wee bairn’: Some lovely youth, or maiden dear...’ [AD]. ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me...’ [TCh]. ‘A toddlin’ troot, and a toddlin’ troot, And a wee bit bonnie toddlin’ troot: If ye search a’ the water aboot, Ye’ll no’ fin’ siccan a toddlin’ troot’ [T].

Todds (todz) n. William (18th C.). In 1693 his children Thomas, Robert, Archibald and Oliver had a decree against Adam Scott of Bowhill and William Scott in Langhope. He was probably a tenant on Langhope (near Ashkirk).

Todholes (tod-hōlz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todholis’ in c.1376, with rental valued at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Todellis’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, valued at 5 shillings and with Christopher Armstrong as tenant; given the position on the roll, its location is somewhere near Mangerton (the origin could be ‘fox hollows’).

Todholeside (tod-hōl-sīd) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standestanerig’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).

Todhunter Grain (tod-hun’t-grān) n. stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinnis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain, As I fancy I see him on the Todhunter-grain’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1851 it was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the ‘Todha’ near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).
Todlaw Wells

Todlaw Wells
(tod-law-welz)  n.  plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

Todrick

Todrig
(tod-rig, tod-rig, -rij)  n.  farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Laudir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Laird from there was convicted of reset, communing with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the superiority of the lands to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. John Hay granted the lands to Stephen Laird in about 1512; it was then in the Barony of Olivercastle through annexation. William Laird inherited the Lairdship as heir of Stephen and in 1535 he announced that his tenant William Scott should be ejected from the lands. Katherine Gray had the right in 1538 to remove the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig was cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focis’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). Thomas Cowan was gardener there in 1709. John Hendry was living there in 1710. The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Robert Brown was living there in 1787–89. The estate was valued at £576 in 1785 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1862 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjoining farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one with the date ‘1698’, the other having the initials ‘G P’ (probably for George Pott), together with a lozenge and inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’. A mill is marked nearby, on the opposite side of the Todrig Burn, on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A bronze tripod pot (probably dating from around 1500) found there in 1956 is in the Royal Museum of Scotland. There is a farm of the same name south of Greenlaw, and another east of Eccles. One of these places (or more than one perhaps) gave rise to the surname ‘Todrick’. The arms of Scott of Todrig bore a star and 2 crescents and the family motto was ‘Pro aris et focis’ (for home and hearth) – ‘First came Todrig, Then came Woll, Last came Whitslaid, The Chief of the Water Ail’ [CWS] (the name occurs as ‘ Todholerig’ in a charter of the late 12th century; the house is marked as ‘Todrigg’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Todrig’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Todrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; also formerly spelled ‘Todrick’, ‘Todrik’, ‘Toderick’, etc., it was ‘Todderig’ in about 1250, ‘Todryk’ in 1535, ‘Todyrk’ in 1540, ‘Todyrye’ in 1638, ‘Toodrig’ in 1644, ‘Toodrigge’ in 1678 and 1682, ‘Todrig’ in 1694 and 1710, ‘Todridge’ in 1720, ‘Todrig’ in 1761 and ‘Todridge’ in 1785 and 1787; whether the origin is ‘fox ridge’, or something else, is unknown).

Todrig
(tod-rig)  n.  Alexander (15th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled ‘Todrick’, and he may have had a connection to the local estate. Archibald (15th C.) described as ‘of Todrick’ when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same ‘Archibaldus Todryk’ who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibaldus Todrick’ who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibaldus Todrick’, Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. David (16th C.) son of Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He is recorded as witness to several documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–44. In 1536/7 he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Stephen Wilkinson. In 1542 he was listed as ‘serjeant’ and in 1543 he complained about a transaction with Simon Fairley. He was witness to a transaction in 1544. David (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He may be the David recorded in 1561 in Selkirk when he made an agreement with Robert Robson ‘in Hauyk’. A tenement formerly pertaining to him is recorded in Selkirk in 1579 and he was a Burgess in 1580 when he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a dispute between Bailies in Selkirk. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as ‘Todrik’ in 1552. John (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled ‘Todrick’. Robert (d.bef. 1537) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1527. In 1528 and 1534 he witnessed documents in Selkirk, along with his son David. Also in 1528 and 1534 he was recorded as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was a ‘special tenant’ in the 20 shillingland of East Haining, wadset to John Scott, Burgess of Selkirk. He was deceased in 1536/7 when his son an heir David succeeded to his lands and money in Selkirk. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘Thomas Todrik, serjeand’ in an Edinburgh document of 1548. Perhaps the same Thomas was a traveller when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1551. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Tothrik’ in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as ‘of Todrig’ in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as ‘Willelm’ Todryk’) in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled ‘Todrick’ and ‘Tothrik’) in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King’s cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Todrig Burn (tod-rig-burn) n. stream that flows to the east out of Shaws Loch and past Todrig, before joining the Ale Water (it is ‘Todrigg-burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Mill (tod-rig-mil) n. former mill near Todrig farm. William Riddell was miller there in 1617. It is possible that he was the miller of ‘Todrig mylne’ who was said to have killed Robert, only son of Simon Scott of Bonnington, leading to the retaliatory murder of Walter, 3rd son of Walter Scott of Harden in 1616. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 and John Glendinning in 1781 (it is ‘Todrig Mylne’ in 1617, ‘Todrigg Myln’ in 1763 and ‘Todrigg Myln’ in 1781; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Shank (tod-rig-shawngk) n. former name for a place, presumably close to Todrig. It is ‘Todrik Schank’ in 1581 when it was the location where an agreement was signed by Walter Scott of Goldielands, Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, John Scot of Robertson and William Dalgleish in Crookston, relating to a dispute between Adam Scott in Bonnington and Robert Scott of Haining.

Todscluch (todz-kloech) n. former fortified house in the Liddel valley, near the present Steeleroad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as ‘Todcleuche alias Todcleucheside’ in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at ‘Todchueghside’ in 1797 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Todcleughside’ appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘Toddiscleshyde’ is recorded in 1659 and is ‘Todcleughside’ in 1694; the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated ‘Todcleuch’ near Canonbie).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawhaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the ‘haugh’ was added to the nearby farm later. In any case ‘Todshaw’ is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Turnbull, Isobel Renwick, John Turnbull, Janet Turnbull, Walter Fairgrieve, William Henderson, Sarah Rule, Michael Renwick, John Aitchison, Janet Scott, Mark Coltart, Janet Paterson, William Grierson, Mungo Brand, Isobel Shortreed, Marion Scott, Marion Brand and Grisel Hall. It was included at Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithope Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Robertson Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents there in 1694. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Miller was there in 1703, Walter Scott in 1710–15, John Jackson in 1711, William...

Helm in 1720, John Stavert in 1720–26, Patrick Blaikie in 1722 and John Scott in 1725. It was sold by William Scott of Thirlestane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763–67, George Coltart in 1767 and Walter Armstrong in 1789. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map (while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268 m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleugh joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288 m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm. These were the lands held by the Todshaws, described as paying ‘6 bolls in stok, 1 boll half boll in tenyd, 3 lb. in vicarage’. Walter Scott from Todshawhaugh was recorded in 1628 when he was accused of cutting down some of Scott of Buccleuch’s trees on his park there. There were 11 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Gledstains, Agnes Rule, James Scott, Andrew Cook, Agnes Davidson, Helen Wilson, Margaret Scott, Helen Robson, Walter Hogg, Isobel Scott and Lilias Armstrong. In 1650 John Renwick and ‘Pail’ Murray were tenants. Walter Cavers was there in 1680. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. Rev. Thomas Shiel and John Cuthbertson were tenants in 1672 and 1673, Thomas Shiel himself in 1675 and Thomas Shiel and Walter Scott in 1677. The minister was also recorded as tenant of the farm in 1690–93 and with his son Thomas also there in 1692. Robert Langlands appears to also have been tenant here in 1686. The householders recorded there in 1694 were Thomas Shiel, Thomas Turnbull, Robert Murray and Thomas Stavert, with Agnes Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. William Shiel (also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. James Grieve was recorded there in 1716–23. James Brydon in 1725 and Robert Govenlock in 1727. It was also the site of a blacksmiths in the 18th and 19th centuries. James Grieve was tenant there in the early 18th century (from about 1712) and Walter Grieve (of Branxholme) farmed there in the late 18th century, until he died in 1800. The farm was then sold by William Scott of Thirlestane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Todshaw Haugh Leased to Robert Scott of Singlie. Walter Armstrong was living there in 1800. In 1841 Walter Scott was farm steward there and the residents at the cottages were Turnbulls and Millers. The flat land on the south side of the Borthwick there is known as Todshaw Haugh, and the hill to the west is Todshawhaugh Hill (also spelled 'Todshawhauche', etc., it first appears as 'Todgishalch' in 1426, is 'Todschawhauch' in 1446, 'Togehawh' in 1484/5, 'Todschawhauchl' in 1486, 'Todshawhauch' in 1490, 'Todscharhauchauch' in 1492, 'Todscharhauchauch' in 1549, 'Todscharhauchauch' in 1580/1, 1591 and 1594, 'Todscharhauchauchit' in 1581, 'Todscharhauchauch' in 1627, 'Todscharhauache' in 1628, 'Todscharhauchauch' in 1648, 'Todshaw-hauch' in 1678, 'Todscharhauchauch' in 1692, 'Toitchahau' in 1694, 'Todshawhauch' in 1721 and 'Toodziehauch' in 1757; it is 'Todscharhauchauch' on a 1650 parish map, appears to be marked simply 'Hauch' on Blaen's 1654 map.

Todshaw Hill

Todshaw Haugh (tod-shaw-haufen, -hawg) n. flat land on the south side of the Borthwick Water, just to the east of Todshawhill farm.

Todshawhaugh Hill (tod-shaw-hauft-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Harden Bridge, and to the south-west of Todshawhaugh farm. There are remains of a hill-fort and earthworks on the northern spur. The nearly circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter has been almost obliterated by ploughing on the eastern side. The ditch of the ridge -fort appears to connect with this and runs for about 20 m to the south-west, with traces of a rampart along its inner side. A little further south is a peak called Ladies' Seat, which is a little higher.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil, -hee-hil) n. hill above Chapelhill and Todshawhill farms, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (southern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The fort is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitcastle Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name north of Aleemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, between Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean, just to the east of Mabonlaw farm. It reaches a height of 268 m, and can be easily confused with another hill of the same name near Chapelhill farm, on the southern side of the valley.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2½ miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a local branch of the Scotts. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. Philip Scott is recorded as tenant in 1549. Andrew Scott of ‘Totchahill, from the family of Robertoun’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It is described in a 1627 valuation as paying ‘21 bolls stock and tyme; estimat to pay in stock 12 bolls, parsonage 3 bolls, 3 lbs. vicarage’. The Land Tax Rolls of 1643 lists the value of the farm at £133 6s 8d, owned by John Scott of Todshawhill. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Agnes Scott, Euphan Haliburton, Helen Haliburton, Joan Scott, Agnes Scott, John Renwick, Isabel Kedie, Robert Renwick, John Renwick, Bessie Hendry, Robert Scott and Margaret Turnbull. Adam and William Scott were tenants from 1632 until about 1671. James Nichol was listed as a tenant in 1671 and Ninian Elliot in 1672 and 1673. James Carruthers was also recorded as tenant in 1673. Walter Scott of Harwood was leasing the farm in 1677. It was part of Hawick Parish until becoming part of the new Parish of Roberthin in 1689/90. In 1691 it was leased to William Ogilvie and in 1693 to Todshawhillshiel

James Moffat, William Nichol and Robert Anderson. In 1694 the householders listed there were William Ogilvie, William Young (ploughman), Robert Blaik (shepherd) and James Scott, with Robert Scott listed there among the ‘poor’. William Ogilvie was tenant again in 1696 and Capt. Francis Scott in 1697. Thomas Shiel was tenant there from at least 1699, when he had the farmhouse rebuilt on a more convenient site at about that time. 2 houses were built, each 42 feet long, one having 2 stone chimneys and 8 windows; it is unclear if anything survives from this time. This is probably the ‘Todschill’ where William Pott is recorded in 1702. John Douglas was living there in at least 1711–18 and James Leithead in 1722. Thomas Shiel was still recorded as tenant in 1735. It was tenanted by several generations of the Scoon family, starting with John in about 1748, with Robert being the last Scoon tenant, who emigrated to the U.S.A. in about 1842 after defaulting on the lease. The farm was then amalgamated with Chapelhill. David Taylor was living there in 1762, James Scott in 1765 and 1771, James Crow in 1766, Andrew Henderson in 1771 and William Taylor in 1781. Robert Scoon is recorded as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1841 the residents of the cottages there were the Hogg and the Grahams – ‘The three Scotts o’ Commonside, The Tamsons o’ the Mill, There’s Ogilvy o’ Branxholm, And Scoon o’ Todgiehill’ [DJG] (also sometimes incorrectly ‘Todshawmill’; it appears as ‘Todschawillis’ in 1435, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1446, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1549, ‘Todschahill’ in 1627, ‘Todshaw-hill’ in 1771 and ‘Toddyhill alias Todschawhill’ in 1660, ‘Toitchahill’ in 1694, ‘Todgahill’ in 1791 and ‘Todghiehill’ in 1856; it is ‘Todshahill’ on a 1650 parish map, marked ‘Todshahill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is presumably related to the fox; note there is a farm of the same name in Eskdalemuir Parish).

Todshawhillshiel (tod-shaw-hil-sheel) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Todshawhill. William Lawson was recorded there in 1716, James Thomson in 1721–26, John Stavert in the 1770s and Robert Riddell in 1788–90. William Scoon and Robert Riddell were there in the 1780s and George Michie was shepherd there in 1799 (it is ‘Todshang Hillshiel’ in 1771).

Todshawkip (tod-shaw-kip) n. former name for lands near Todshaw. Robert White was recorded there in 1721 when a child of his was baptised in Robertson Parish.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream behind Highchesters Hill. It rises near Muckle Knowe, runs around Todshaw Hill and joins Wilton Burn.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor’s Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of mediæval and post-mediæval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called ‘Todscleuchside’).

Tod Sike (tod-sik) n. small stream that rises on Cockplay Hill and joins the Twislehope Burn just to the west of Twislehope farm.

Todsteed (tod-steed) n. Todstead, former farm in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todistede’ and with a value of 4 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It is unclear where this was located.

toft (toft) n., arch. a homestead, farmstead and attached land (the word survives in the names of several farms, e.g. Tofts, Toftfield, Toftholm and Kirkton Tofts).

toft an croft (toft-in-kroft) n., arch. an entire holding, land and buildings – ‘...to enter the said Walter in Eidschaw to his husbandland with onset, toft and croft and pertinents’ [SPB1581].

Toftfield (toft-field) n. former name of an estate near Melrose, adjacent to Abbotsford. It was purchased by John Usher in 1753, then held by his son James and grandson John. In 1819 it was bought from the Ushers by Sir Walter Scott, who changed the name to Huntlyburn and improved the simple two storey house there. It seems that it was formerly called ‘Tylehouse’, perhaps related to tile manufacturing for Melrose Abbey (the 1574 will of Gibbie Hatley of Gattonside refers to a ‘Faften field’ which may be the same place).

Toftholm (toft-hoom) n. farm in the Hermitage valley, opposite Shaws. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Tofts, covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. Andrew Crozier was there in 1623. James Crozier was tenant in 1694 and William Crozier was also listed there. Thomas Pott was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Adam Scott was shepherd there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A sandstone axe-hammer found near here is in Hawick Museum. On the edge of a terrace just to the south-west there is an ancient enclosure and further south-west, on a small terrace, are the remains of a farmstead, named ‘Upper Row’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is also a field system and rig lines there (marked as ‘Toftoome’) on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Toftsholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map; also called ‘Toftsholm’, it is ‘Taftsholme’ in 1694; this is probably from ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land beside a river; see also Toftsholm Sike).

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Toftes’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in tofts’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbulls ‘of Tofts’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Tofts’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Tofts’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘topt’; it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Toftes’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘SINGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘STROBERTI D’TOFTIS’. William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo de Toftys’ in 1363 when he was Rector of ‘magna Caerus’. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier ‘of Tofts’ family.

the Tofts (thu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftsholm. It is probably the ‘Tofts’ recorded as being in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Toftsholm into a farm covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tofts-hill) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial photography has a slo shown 2 rectangular enclosures, some field banks and some rig lines to the south west of there.

Toftsholm Sike (tofts-hööm-sik) n. small stream that rises at Thiefsike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftsholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Toftsholm).

Tofts Knowes (tofts-nowz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-ge-dur) adv., arch. together – ‘…were outlawed for being found togedder by the church censers, after the ten hour bell was rung’ [BR1702], ‘…the present Baylyeas, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, haveing convened and called togidder the towne Counsell …’ [BR1706]

toilets (toi-litz) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howe-gate, the Cross Wynd and Museum. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 ‘necessary’ and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Towerydyeside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tō-jō) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tōk-lee) n. Albert Victor ‘Vic’ (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croall, Bryson. He was an all-round sportsman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committee member of the Archæological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing ‘The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies’ (2004), which was completed by his daughters Anna and Jill, with the help of Jules Horne. A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

the Tolbooth (thu-tōl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick’s former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a ‘humble and primitive erection’ with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including ‘bigging of thair tolbuith’. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, ‘set out to the south corner of Horslichills House’ (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house ‘or under tolbooth’ should be leased. A stair-case was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-lined. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping ‘wild beasts’ in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word ‘Tolbooth’ was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – ‘The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof …’ [BR1638], ‘Item, whatsoever person that shall be committed in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or one of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘Walter Scott … bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith …’ [BR] (also spelled ‘Tollbooth’ and ‘Tolbuith’).

tolerat (to-le-ri’) pp., arch. tolerated – ‘…was ordered to bring a testimonie from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirkton, failing which he would not be tolerate to stay in ye toun’ [PR1717].

the Toleration (thu-to-le-rā-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll (tōl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a ‘turnpike bar’. There were toll bars every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers. Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or ‘Auld Wester Toll’), Easter Toll, Dovemount Toll (or ‘North Toll’) and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written ‘toll bar’).

toll-house (tōl-hoose) n., arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing examples include those at the Wester Toll, Greenbank (Robertson), Colterscleuch, Fiddleton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

the Toll House (thu-tōl-hoose) n. name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road.

tolls (tōlz) n., pl. one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads. In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade’s roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1750. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6–8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Moss toll road, which is now part of the A7. This was established by a special Act of 1764, published in 1770. There were also acts to regulate maintenance of local roads under the statutory Labour system. The highway toll acts were repealed in 1807, but already astonishing progress had been made locally. As well as toll-bars across the main roads, there were also tolls at the entrances to towns, Hawick having 4 of these at one point. They were: the Wester Toll (on the New Road, outside the present High School); the Loan Toll (in the middle of the Loan, for the old road South); the Easter Toll (on Bourtree Place near the old Con Club); and Dovemount Toll (at Dovemount on the road to Edinburgh). Plaques mark their positions. There were additional tolls at other times, e.g. across the Teviot Bridge by the Common Haugh, and another at Crumhaugh.

Tolm (tōm) n. former place name in Liddesdale. On the 1863 Ordnance Survey map a small plantation in the middle of ‘The Steel’ is marked ‘Tolm Tourick’ (presumably meaning a little tower). Perhaps this was the claimed site of the former tower-house of Steele.

tomati (to-ma’i) n. a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’, You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’’.

tombolo (tōm-bô-lo) n. former name for bingo, in use around the 1950s.

tombstone (toom-stān) n. a tombstone – ‘…but also named on the family tombstone in Dums Kirkya’ird’ [IWL].

tome (tōm) v., arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘ti toam taffie’ [ECS] (also written ‘toam’; cf. taw).

Tommes (tōmz) n. Alan ‘Toomba’ (?– ) rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastle area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6 ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomsclotsteed (tōm-sko’i-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomsclotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hallrule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of High Tofts to Douglas of Cavers as a way of protecting him from any attempts by Elliott of Stobs to force him off his land (as he had done to Turnbull of Denesyde). The field still survives, just east of the Dean Burn, to the left of the A6088 a little before Hawthornside.

the Toon Book (thu-toon-book) n. the official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records. The first such book that still exists was begun by Gilbert Watt on 1st October 1638 and was continued by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681. Many other books followed, listing the official business of the Town, including details of cases before the Magistrates’ Court, etc. They are crucial pieces of early historical information about events and people in Hawick, as well as the language – ‘…quhillik premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toune-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641].

toon clerk (toon-clerk) n. town clerk, an official appointed as secretary to a town council, keeping records and performing administrative duties – ‘Item, whatsoever personnes gevis unrevrent language to the bailies, minister or towne-clerk, sal pay £10 efter tryal …’ [BR1640], ‘…for calling Gilbert Watt, Toun-Clerk, ane suckler, and for other injurious words’ [BR1650].

the Toon Clerk (thu-toon-klerek) n. the Town Clerk of Hawick. Originally he was appointed by the citizens to keep the town records and to perform other legal duties. He was chosen by the Burgess every 2 years, the only official to be elected rather than appointed by the Council. The first recorded one was ‘Hew Cooling’ or ‘Cowstoun’ in a single Privy Council document of 1612, and then Andrew Sword is recorded in 1630. The earliest existing ‘Town Book’, recorded by the Town Clerk, has its first entries in 1638. The Gladstains and Purdom families gave many decades of service to this office. The Town Clerk used to lead the march around the Burgh boundaries when the riders returned from Riding the Common. It was said in 1711 that he was ‘now and then in custom to get ane burgess complimented over to him’ (i.e. had his income supplemented by the occasional burgess fee). In 1720 he was awarded 10 shillings yearly for pen, paper and ink. The first full time appointment was not until 1937, and the position was dissolved along with Reorganisation in the Toon Council (\textit{thu-toon-koon-sul}) \textit{n.} Hawick’s Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quartermasters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called ‘the Eternal Council’. The newer Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government Reorganisation, when power was removed from the burghs and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

the Toonfit Kirk (\textit{thu-toon-fi’-kirk}) \textit{n.} the Townfoot Church in Newcastleton, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Burgher congregation, which would become the United Presbyterian Kirk.

the Toon Guaird (\textit{thu-toon-gárd}) \textit{n.} another name for the Watch.

the Toon Hall (\textit{thu-toon-hall}) \textit{n.} the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. This itself replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884–86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. The tower contains a clock, with 4 faces and bells ringing the quarter hours; the roof includes 2 separate weather- vanes. The complex contains the Council offices, the old Council Chambers, the former Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. The back part (off the Cross Wynd) was once the police house, while the basement has the old police cells and was set up for use as a nuclear shelter. The building is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building. Outside is a datum level of 352.9 ft elevation marked and another plaque commemorates the former site of the South Port – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’ [AB], ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonheid (\textit{thu-toon-heed}) \textit{n.} Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and Toonheid

John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’ in 1601 and ‘Tounhead’ in 1692 and 1694; it is ‘Toone head’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

the Toonheid Port (thu-toon-heed-pôr’) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (thu-toon-heed-tôl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the privilege of setting up a drinks tent on the Moor at the Common Riding. He may have lived at St. Leonard’s farm during some periods and in the cottage at Hawickmoor at others. In 1733 it is recorded that a herd was selected for horses pasturing on the Common, which was presumably a different person than the main Herd. In 1755 the building of a ‘herd’s house’ is recorded, this presumably being somewhere on the Common. In the following year 1 shilling was ‘given the herd when his child was almost burnt to death’, and so there was perhaps a fire in the house. It is unclear when the first Herd was appointed. Those filling the appointment included: William Palmer (recorded in 1707); Adam Hobkirk (recorded in 1713); Walter Scott ‘Crooked Wat’ (early 18th C.); Mungo Armstrong (c.1720-c.44); James Armstrong (recorded in 1740); Robert Hobkirk (c.1752–c.57); James Wilson (late 18th C.); William Elliot (from at least 1800); Andrew Ormiston (until 1853); and James Cairns (from about 1853) – ‘About the year seventeen hundred and ten, Walter Scot was Town Herd of Hawick’ [C&L], ‘...the pond was scythed for thatch every year in the auld days be the toon herd whae bade at St. Leonards ...’ [IWL] (also ‘Toon Hird’).

the Toon Hoose (thu-toon-hooos) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s previous Town Hall, also sometimes called the ‘Council House’. It was built around 1781 on the site of the old Tolbooth, and was an unpretentious building with a tall steeple and an outside staircase. It had a thatched roof and was ‘of a homely description, the rafters, visible from beneath, giving it the appearance of a common barn’. It incorporated a bell (at a cost of £24, 14s.), to complement the one at St. Mary’s in order to call the curfew. Part of it was rented out for dancing lessons, singing lessons and lectures in the late part of the 18th century. One of the 6 wells fed from the Scildder Springs stood beside it from 1797. In one of the last vestiges of feudalism the weight house on the ground floor was owned by a tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch (‘tacksman of his Grace’s customs); the Duke contributed £100 to the cost of the building, plus half the cost of paving the streets at the time. There were considerable additions to the steeple in 1806 and a clock was inserted in 1809. The top of the steeple also held a weather cock. The door in the steeple at the first floor level, with its projecting ledge, was known as the ‘Oyes door’ and was used for the reading of proclamations. The ground floor on the Cross Wynd side had open arches, which were closed at night with iron gates. This was the location for meal and butter markets. The Council Chambers were upstairs. There is a single surviving photograph from about 1880. The building was demolished in 1884 to make way for the new Town Hall.

the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li’-ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying ‘stent nor lott’. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer’s Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ô-rool) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bonchester Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are is now no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1535 there is a record of ‘Thome Turnbull et Andree alias Daid Turnbull’ who were tenants there. This could be the ‘towne in Tevedall caulyd Andree alias Dauid Turnbull’ who were tenants in 1542. The ‘town’ was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562 as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhill on the east and those of Hawthornside.
and Hoilhouse on the west. It is probably where Jock Tait ‘in the town of Halroule’ was recorded in 1586/7. ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century. Thomas Rule was there in 1788. In 1805 it was sold off by Sir William Elliot to John Wilson of Hallrule, and at that time was also referred to as being the east part of ‘Over or Outer Halrule’. William Mabon was farmer in the 1860s. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The cottage on the north side of the farm was known as ‘North Town-o’-Rule’, referred to by locals as ‘Drythropple’, and renamed ‘Heathfield’ for a while. An old well there (built in circular form) was called ‘Dobie’ or ‘Dubbie’, and probably corresponds to the well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun’s reflection off ‘Cloon Craig’ on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Toun o’ Roull’ and variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is ‘villa de Rowle’ in 1535 and ‘Toun of Roull’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Tou of Roull’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Toon-o-Rule Burn (toon-o-rol-burn) n.

Toon-o-Rule Burn, stream, running to the north-west of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and joining the Hallrule Burn.

Toon Piper (toon-pi-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word ‘piper’ was also synonymous with ‘fifer’ in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both ‘pyper’ in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’ and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick’s piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town’s piper was fined for playing through the town after the fair; it is recorded that he played the ‘great pipe’, which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703 the town’s ‘officers, pyper, and drummers’ were to be paid for ‘coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702’ and were also allowed ‘to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly; this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, ‘Jafra the Piper’, is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called ‘Fouller’ was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John ‘Meader’ (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantyne in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved ‘that the piper shall not be any longer continued’, and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as ‘late piper Hawick’ when his daughter died in 1810; however, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’. John Halliday wrote a poem ‘Davie’s Dead’, published in 1847, which appears to be about a piper. The Common Riding Procession of 1894 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fifes ‘and the pipers’. ‘Hawick Pipe Band’ traces its roots to 1937 – ‘The town’s piper, for his nicht revelling, on going on the fair nicht playing with the great pipe thro the hail toun, is fined £100 Scots’ [BR1700], ‘...the pyper is only allowed four pounds Scots to buy him ane coatt’ [BR1713].

Toonrig (toon-rig) n. former fortified house on the Hermitage Water, on the north bank of the valley just east of Gorrenberry (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Tounrig’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Tounrig’).

toonsfolk (toonz-fik) n., pl. townsfolk, townspeople – ‘No’ sae lang syne a guid wheen o’ the toonsfolk didna’ hesitate tae condemn the annual festival wi’ a’ the inventives they could command’ [BW1939], ‘...lei confirmed the toonsfolks’ right ti yaise the Common land and gave thum ...‘land for tillage peats and pasture’’ [IWl].

toon’s officer

toon’s officer (toonz-o-fee-sur) n., arch. an officer of a burgh – ‘...and James Olifer, town officer, playing before him’ [PR1718], ‘Rob Tinlin whae was the toon’s officer an the pairish beadle’ [HEx1965] (see Burgh Officer).

the Toon’s Purse (thu-toonz-purs) n. former prize race at the Common Riding. It was the opening event of the 1834–36 Friday Races.

the Toon Steel-yard (thu-toon-steel-yard) n. former steel-yard in Hawick, located on the High Street. It is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, when James Kennedy was ‘collector’.

the Toon Subscription Purse (thu-toon-sub-skrip-shin-purs) n. race run at the Common Riding in at least the 1840s to 1860s. It took place on the Friday on the Moor in many years, but in some years there was a race with this title on both days. Presumably the prize money was raised by subscription in Hawick.

the Toon Treasurer (thu-toon-tre-shoo-rur) n. former position on the Council, charged with gathering the money from Burgesses and others.

The first record of the election of a person to this office in in 1655. The position was later named Burgh Chamberlain. The Treasurer kept records of the financial transactions of the Burgh, which provide valuable information about what went on in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries. In 1739 the amounts started to be written in sterling rather than in Scots money. The Treasurer was elected annually on the same day as the Bailies, i.e. the 2nd Friday in October. Extracts from the Town Treasurer’s books in the period 1721–1805 are given in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’ (1858). People who have held the office include: John Scott, around 1734; William Scott, at least 1763–69; William Wilson, early 1800s; Walter Wilson, early 1800s; James Scott, early 1800s; James Oliver, 1820s; James D. Kenney, mid-1800s; John Murray, 1880s; A.S. Lawson, late 1800s; Adam Laing, early 1900s; George Gass, early 1900s.

toonty (too’-ee, toon’-ee, toon-tee) n. twenty – ‘if ee’re no in bed be the time A coont ti toonty ...’. ‘Look ... Oowe yonder, D’ye see him? Teh, toonty pund, I’m shair. Fish rinnin, fish rin-nin Enough and to spare!’ [DH], ‘...an oot o’ the toonty-fower entered the winner was Dick Wricht threel Langtoon’ [BW1974], ‘Last night A hed a dream. And wi’ this A end ma ditty, It was toonty year frae now, Hawick hed been renamed Safe-way City’ [IWL], ‘Teribus is an amazing piece o wurk, toonty fower versus o pure poetical genius ... ’ [IHS] (cf. the rarer toanty).

toor (toor) n. a tower – ‘Grey are the stanes o’ Drumlanrig’s toor o’ the Border’ [IWS], v. to tower – ‘There, at the yeh hand, tooered the threeple Eeldons ...’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘toore’, ‘toore’, ‘toiner’ and ‘tour’).

the Toor (thu-toor) n. popular name for Drumlanrig’s Toor, for centuries the most imposing building and de facto geographical centre of Hawick. The word is also used generally for this area of Hawick (also spelled ‘Too’er’ etc.).

Toor (toor) n. former name for Spittal Toor (also written ‘Tour’; also see Tower).

Toor Brig (toor-brig) n. occasional name used for the Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig near the Tower Knowe.

the Toor Burn (thu-toor-burn) n. stream that runs from above Spittal Tower to join the Rule Water at Spittal-on-Rule.

the Toor Close (thu-toor-klös) n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig’s Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that ‘trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture’ were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets’ Board.

Toordykeside see Toor Dykeside

Toor Dykeside (toor-dik-sid, tow-ur-dik-sid) n. Tower Dykeside, short street linking Slitrig Crescent with the Tower Knowe. The name derives from the wall which once encircled the Tower on the south side. It is a relatively new street, since the Tower is believed to have sloped down to the Slitrig perhaps as recently as the 18th century. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are all parts of the former Tower Hotel, which is grade B listed. The wall along by the Slitrig was mostly swept away in the flood of 1846 – ‘And though the matin bells have not yet rung Their usual peal unto the world wide, Alert with joyous life both old and young Their steps are wending to the Tower Dykeside’ [JCG] (sometimes ‘the’ Tower Dykeside, occasionally one word, and also formerly ‘Toor-gateside’; it is ‘Tower Dyke side’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Toorgateside (toor-gā’-sid) n. former name for Tower Dykeside. Before the wall was built the ground at the foot of the Tower sloped into ...
the Toor Hotel

the Toor Hotel (tu-toor-hō-tel) n. Drumlanrig's Tower, during the days it was used as a hotel, also known as ‘the Tower Inn’. This phase of the building's history started in 1773, and continued until 1981. The landlords used to farm fields at the Wellogate, with an onestead in Bourtree Place (which became the Con Club site). The ballroom inside was used for dances, theatrical performances and other social functions in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

tooree (too-re) n. a bobble on a woollen hat, or the hat itself, particularly a knitted dome-shaped cap.

Toor Mill

Toor Mill (tuor-mil) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.

the Toor Knowe Brig (tu-toor-now-brig) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.

The Toor Knowe (tu-toor-now) n. area in front of Drumlanrig's Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its northern side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the ‘deuil tree’ upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as ‘Kedie’s Buildin’, but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get a long the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mei wi’ e’er blethers’ [JEDM].

the Toor Knowe Brig (tu-toor-now-brig) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.

Toor Mill (toor-mil) n. Tower Mill, built over the Slitrig approximately where the ‘Auld Brig’ once stood. It was constructed on the site of an earlier mill by William Elliot & Sons in 1852. The building is 3½ stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. There was strong disagreement about whether to demolish or renovate the building, but it was saved by the Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative in 1998. With funding from the European Union rural development funding, Scottish Borders Council and the Scottish Arts Council, it was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

Toor Mill Dam (toor-nil-dam) n. Tower Mill Dam, name sometimes used for one of two short mill lades in the centre of Hawick. One fed Tower Mill from the Slitrig, with the cauld being at the foot of Slitrig Crescent. The other was effectively an extension of the Back Dam, running under the Tower Knowe to power the original Hawick Mill on the Mill Port.

Toronto (to-ron-to) n. largest city in Canada, in the province of Ontario. Many exiled Teries have settled in the area. In 1921 a number of them gathered at the home of James H. Ross and organised a Common Riding celebration of their own. It took place on 1st July (Canada Day) in High Park, with W. Matherston (who had lost a leg at Flanders) as Cornet and C. Ingles and W. Corbett as Right- and Left-Hand men, respectively. There was a replica flag, which was bussed, pipe music, a ‘smuffin’, Hawick songs, (non-alcoholic) beverages, races, a speech by Alex Craighead (from Galashiels), and all in over 30°C temperatures. Matthew Leydon probably served as Cornet in 1925. In 1926 the Cornet at High Park was Telfer Anderson Huggan, and the replica 1514 flag was bussed by Edith Whillans. In 1927 the Cornet was James Miller and the Lass was Annie Steele.

n. area on the Gala Water to the south of Stow, for long an important seat of the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Nearby are the ancient ‘Our Lady’s Well’ as well as the remains of a chapel.

Torwoodlee (tor-wood-lee) n. Georgian house north-west of Galashiels, built near to some older ruins, which were home to the Pringles. The tower dates from 1601 and replaces the one that was sacked in 1568. This was an attack by John Elliot of Copshaw and perhaps as many as 300 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Beatties and Grahams, when the master of the house (George Pringle) was murdered and a huge amount of loot stolen, including silverware and 17 horses. In the latter part of the 15th century the lease of the farm was granted to the Ranger of Tweed Ward for his fee. It was supposedly home of the Pringle who married Mary Scott in the ballad of that name. The house was used as a temporary refuge in 1681, by Covenanters the Earl of Argyll and John Scott (ousted minister of Hawick) on their escape from imprisonment. There are efforts underway to stabilize the crumbling structure. There is a golf course on the estate. A bridge nearby was built in 1808 and the modern house in 1783. The remains of Torwoodlee Broch (not to be confused with Torwood Broch, near Falkirk), perhaps 2,000 years old, is also nearby; it is similar to
