Annandale, and was with Robert Scott, younger of Haining, when he attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608; James, a merchant in Edinburgh; Isabel, who married John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness; Margaret, who married Ralph Kerr of Primside and Greenhead; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott of Haining; and Jean, who married John Scott of Tushielaw. Sir Patrick of Lainshaw (16th/17th C.) represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1617. His Lairdship was later called Langshaw. It is possible he was the same man as Sir Patrick of Elibank. Sir Patrick of Elibank (d.1649) son of Sir Gideon. He was served as heir to his father in 1621. He was Keeper of Caerlaverock Castle. He was involved in a feud with James Cranston in about 1610. In 1621 he succeeded to his father’s lands of Langshaw in Melrose Parish. He was also involved in lands by the Commander of Melrose in about 1621. In 1622 he was involved in a ‘wadset’ with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, over the lands of Blackgrain in the Lordship of Ettrick. He married no less than 5 times. He was M.P. for Haddington Constabulary 1628–33 and 1640–41. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia and then elevated to the peerage as Lord Elibank. He was succeeded in 1650 by his son Patrick, 2nd Lord Elibank. Sir Patrick of Deuchar (1625/6–89) son of James, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Falahill, with his mother being Bertha Maule, of the Panmure family. His brothers were Sir James of Skirling and Sir Robert of Priestfield. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1665, 1667 and 1669–74. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663 and as a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He is probably the Patrick who had a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over Common land in 1665. He paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678 and is recorded representing Henry Hislop in a discharge in 1684 with the Bailie of Selkirk. He may have married Euphan, daughter of James Baird. Patrick of Cherrytrees (18th C.) eldest son of James of Cherrytrees. He was admitted as an Advocate in 1751 and was Sheriff of Roxburghshire from 1769. He served as Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in 1780 and was on the roll of electors for the county. He was probably succeeded by George of Cherrytrees, who owned the lands in Yetholm Parish in 1788. Richard (b.1818/9) farmer and innkeeper in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Douglas Square, farming 40 acres. In the 1860s he was listed as proprietor of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square (perhaps at the same location). His wife was Jane and their children included Mary, Robert and Jane. Sir Robert of Priestfield (d.1672) 2nd son of James of Skirling and grandson of Patrick of Falahill. He was brother of Sir Patrick of Deuchar and Sir James of Skirling. He was Lord Provost of Edinburgh and represented Edinburgh in Parliament. He acquired the lands of Cameron, Priestfield and Melgum in Forfarshire. He also held 2 tenements in Hawick, which were inherited by his son Alexander in 1672; it is not clear where these pieces of land were located. He firstly married Helen, daughter of Alexander Hay of Kenneth, and secondly married Jean, daughter of John Dickson of Hartree. His children included: James, who died young; Alexander, who succeeded him; John (b.1656); Robert; William (1662–1703); and James (again, b.1669). Robert (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1718 and 1721. He may be the Robert who married Bessie Learmonth in Roberton in 1714. His children probably included: James (b.1715); William (b.1718); Robert (b.1721); and Margaret (b.1723). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ormiston in 1755. He married Elspeth Grieve and their children included John (b.1752) and Walter (b.1755). William (b.1756) and August (b.1765), also baptised in Cavers, were probably his children. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps related to the earlier Robert in Ormiston. He was recorded at Sunnyside in 1795. Probably the same Robert was farmer at Ormiston Mains, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. His children included Mary (b.1795) and Walter (b.1798). He may be the Robert who married Betty Pott and whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Robert (b.1805) and Adam (b.1806). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton, who lived at Pathead and then Toftsholm. He was probably the smith in Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was one of the first feuars to commence building in Newcastleton. He married twice, his 2nd wife being Marion Crozier. Their children were: John (b.c.1777), who was a blacksmith: Marion (b.1781), who married mason John Nichol; Robert (1784–1859), who married Nellie Scott; Margaret (1788–1882), who married Robert Mitchellhill, and emigrated to Galt, Ontario; and Jane (b.1790), who probably died young. His first wife may have been Margaret Nichol, who died at Millholm in 1774, aged 31, and is buried at Ettleton. Robert (b.1780s) father of plumber John (who was father of J.E.D.) and James. He married Alison Erskine Scott. Robert (1784–1859) nail-maker in Newcastle. Listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 47 North Hermitage Street. He was probably son of Robert and Marion Crozier. He married Helen (or ‘Nellie’) Scott, who died in 1874, aged 83. Their children included: Robert (1813/4–56); Marion (b.1816): Archibald (1817–44); John; James; Thomas (1827/8–47); and Jean (1831/2–51). They are mostly buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included Richardson (b.1812). Robert (18th/19th C.) baker in Newcastle. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He does not appear in the 1841 census. Robert (b.c.1810) foreman at Weensland Mills. He was living there in 1841, along with Jessie, probably his wife. Robert (b.1821/2) shepherd at Old Castleton in 1851 and 1861. He is still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Rachel, and their children included Janet, Marion and Jane. Robert (1831–1901) born in Hawick, son of weaver William and Helen Biggar, and cousin of Sir James A.H.’s father. He worked in the hosiery trade with William Watson & Sons, taking over Peter Laidlaw’s business at Wilton Grove for a few years in the 1870s. He was a founder member and President of the Archaeological Society (with only his distant cousin Sir James outliving him), major contributor to the Transactions and served as Museum Curator. He was also President of the Temperance Burns Club. He emigrated to Canada in 1882, living mainly in Galt, and returned to Hawick in 1892. He became a contributor to the local press, where he sometimes wrote under the pen-name ‘B.O.B.’, giving us ‘The Reckoning’ for example. However, he was a strong advocate for total abstinence. He was a Councillor 1868/9, supporter of the allotments, the Working Men’s Building Society and the Co-operative Society. He wrote several books of local interest, including ‘The Gypsies of the Borders’ (1875), ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’ (1881, 1889, 1897) and ‘Hawick Characters’ (1901), both of which ran to several editions (both were originally published in serial form in the local press, with ‘Hawick Characters’ collecting many articles originally written by others). His ‘History of Hawick, from Earliest Times to 1832’ (1901) is a treasure-trove of anecdotable information. It was followed by ‘History of Hawick, from 1832’ issued by the publisher in 1902 from notes that he left. He also wrote ‘The Gypsies of the Border’ (1875). He lived at Allars Crescent in the latter part of his life. In 1853 he married Agnes, daughter of George ‘Pie’ Olivers, who died in 1901, aged 72; when they married he was living in Brougham Place. Their sons were William (a merchant in Aberdeen) and George Oliver (a doctor in Wisconsin). A memorial stone was erected in the Wellogate Cemetery by his friends and members of the Archeological Society, containing the motto ‘Leal to the Border’. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Wood in 1897, in the Museum. Robert (19th C.) son of John. He was a carpenter at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish. In 1868 he married Margaret Jackson, from Crookholm, Canonbie. Their children were John (chemist and druggist), James (also a carpenter, died age 27) and Margaret (who married Thomas Smith). Robert (b.1835) son of John and Isabella Howison. He was a frameworker in Hawick, living at 50 High Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Hunter, who was from Earlston. His children included James (b.1860), who became a baker in Edinburgh. Robert (b.1856) elder brother of J.E.D. He was a commercial traveller in London and had eight children. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Trow Knowes. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Roger (d.1330) son of Archibald, he is one of the earliest known ancestors of the local Murrays. He was recorded as being ‘de Moravia’. In 1321 he was granted the lands of Fala by James, Lord Douglas. The Murrays of Falahill, Philiphaugh and Blackbarony are all descended from him. Roger (15th/16th C.) leased half the lands of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley in the period 1487–99. The other half went to William, who was his brother. The pair appear to have had their farm raided several times, e.g. by Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme), who was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from Sundhope. He leased half of Windydoors in 1502 as well as half of Sundhope with Thomas (who was surely another relative). Possibly the same Roger was ‘in old age, deprived of strength’ whose land had been ‘despoiled by thieves’ who in 1532/3 sold his Selkirk tenement and rigs to his younger son James. Sarah (1744–1811) of Kensington, who wrote a travel guide ‘A companion, and useful guide to the beauties of Scotland . . . ’ published in 1799. She visited Hawick in 1785, her short account including the following: ‘Some young lads passing through the churchyard at Hawick whilst I was in it, with dogs and some strange looking things on their backs, I inquired what they were going to do with them, but their language to me was as Arabic. On my shaking my head as a token of not understanding them, they began screaming in the highest note of their voices, taking me, I suppose, for a deaf woman: and at last we separated, laughing at our inability of understanding each other’. Sir Thomas of Bothwell (d.1361) son of Sir Andrew. The identity of his mother seems to be unknown. He succeeded to his father’s estates after the death of his elder brother John. In 1351 he was a hostage in England, in place of David II. He returned to Scotland in 1352 and was knighted by the following year. He was involved in negotiations for the release of David, and was involved with the Treaty of Berwick in 1357. He appears to have returned as a prisoner to England in 1358, and although he may have returned to Scotland again, he was back a prisoner in London in 1359. He married Joan (or Joanna) Moray, daughter of Sir Maurice of Strathearn, who had been Baron of Hawick. He was granted the Barony (along with that of Sprouston) in a 1358 charter of David II. However, this may have been a re-granting, since it seems likely he gained the Barony through marriage to the daughter of the previous Baron. He was described in 1358 as ‘panitario nostro Scocie’ (i.e. pantler of Scotland). He probably died of the plague in London. Although it is often stated that his widow later married Archibald, Earl of Douglas, it seems more likely that Douglas married his daughter (and heiress), who was also called Joan. Through her the Barony of Hawick passed to the Douglasses. Thomas (16th C.) recorded ‘in Newhall’ in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. He was probably tenant at Newhall on the Ale Water. He is probably the Thomas, son of William of Newhall recorded in 1498. Thomas of Bowhill (d.bef. 1539) recorded in 1536/7 when Patrick of Philiphaugh complained on his behalf about others farming at Easter Bowhill. It was stated that he had occupied those lands for 40 years. He is also recorded in 1539 in the Selkirk Protocol Books when his widow Christian Murray sold her part of North Bowhill to Robert Ker, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son and heir had a dispute over the lands of South Bowhill. He was probably related to James of Bowhill, who died at Flodden and whose daughter Isobel gave the southern half of Bowhill to Michael Scott of Aikwood (probably her uncle) around 1529. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. In 1761 he married Margaret Riddell, who was from Hawick. Their children included: Thomas (b.1762); Walter (b.1762); Gideon (b.1765); John (b.1765); George (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1771). Thomas (1754–1834) son of David and Elizabeth. He was farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish, perhaps taking over from his brother John. He was recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was still farmer there in the 1830s. He married Janet Inglis, who was from Millholm, with her maternal grandparents being Brydons from Ettrick; she died in 1852, aged 84. They had many children, including 7 daughters who grew to adulthood and all married: Jean (b.1783), married Rev. John Law of the Newcastleton Burgher Kirk; Agnes (b.1784), who married Walter Armstrong, ‘the auld merchant’ in Newcastleton; Elizabeth (b.1788), who died young; David (1791/2–1815), who was very tall; Elizabeth (again, 1794–1845), who married Peter Oliver; James (b.1792), who also farmed at Whisgills; Mary (b.1804), who married Robert Elliot in Hermitage; Thomas (b.1796); Julie (b.c.1799); John (b.1803), who died young; and John (again, b.1806), who also died young. One of his daughters agreed to marriage after dreaming about her dress being snagged by her husband-to-be as he was angling. Margaret (1799/1800–61), who married shepherd John Scott, may also have been his daughter. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery (and the dates on the headstone do not all match the birth years from the parish records). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Borthwickbrae. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (b.1794/5) labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Roberton Glebefoot, described in 1851 as a ‘Road Contractor’. His wife was Margaret and their children included: Beatrice, Jessie, Walter, William, Robert and Thomas. He was probably the son of William baptised in Roberton in 1794. Thomas (d.1842) labourer at Upperraw and Whiteknowe. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. Thomas, LL.D. (1792–1872) of Edinburgh, was made an Honorary Burgess in 1836 after delivering a series of lectures in the town on ‘the Science of Political Economy’. He wrote several books on varied subjects. Thomas (1806/7–58) son of James, who farmed at Whisgills. He was tenant farmer at Burnmouth. Thomas (1811–73) father of Sir James A.H. Born in Denholm, he had a clothiers business in Hawick. His father was James (descended from the Murrays of Spittal Tower), and his mother Christina Winthrop (whose father was a ‘writer’ in Hawick). He became a journeyman tailor, travelling the north of England and witnessing the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway in 1829. He eventually returned in 1835 and settled in Denholm, since Hawick had too many tailors at the time. However, he moved into Hawick in 1858, his house and business being at 6 Bourtree Place. He was for a while a member of the old Town Council. In 1835 he married Mary (1803–88), 6th child of Hawick linen manufacturer Charles Scott. They had 5 children, all born in Denholm: James (1837–1915), lexicographer extraordinaire; Charles, who died young; Alexander Davidson, newspaper editor; Charles Oliver, engraver; and Margaret Scott, who married Alfred Marshall, and later lived with her mother at 10 Wellogate Place. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Kirkdean in Castleton Parish in 1868. Walter (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1691 having a daughter Margaret baptised, with no mother’s name given. The witnesses were John and Andrew Riddell. Walter (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (1693/4–1719) buried at Borthwick Waas. His gravestone is adjacent to that of James and others associated with Teindside. Walter (18th C.) farmer who was replaced by Abraham Armstrong as tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1796. This was probably at Shankend farm. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Borthwick Mains in 1792 and 1795 and at Greenbank in 1798. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1791 and their children included: James (b.1793); Margaret (b.1795); and Thomas (b.1798). Walter (b.c.1795) stockmaker, giving his name, for a time, to Murray Place, although he only owned property in the area from 1814 for less than two years. He inherited 66 High Street (and the area behind 66 and 68, which became Murray Place) from a relative William Turnbull, tailor, in 1814, and sold it to Robert Leyden in 1816. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Margaret. Walter (b.c.1800) mason on the Kirk Wynd in 1841. His wife was Euphemia, and they also has a daughter called Euphemia.
resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1786. William ‘Wullie on the Wundi Sole’ (d.bef. 1805) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Todd in Hawick in 1794. His nickname ‘Willie on the windowsole’ is recorded when his child died in 1787 and when his wife died in 1805. It seems likely that what is meant is the modern ‘window-sill’, but it is still unclear why he might have had this nickname. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Scaurnook in 1786, 1788 and 1794. He may be the William who married Beatrix Scott in Roberton in 1786. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: James (b.1786); Walter (b.1788); Beatrix (b.1790); Robert (b.1792); and twins Thomas and William (b.1794). William (1771/2–1833) schoolmaster in Canonbie, who died in Langholm. He married Helen Byers, who died in 1866, aged 70. Their sons Andrew, John and William were teachers in Hawick. Their other children were Fanny (who died aged 95), John (teacher at Caverton Mill, near Kelso), Thomas (who also married a Helen Byers), James and Janet. William (b.1787/8) from Brownmuir in Selkirkshire, he was teacher at a school in Lilliesleaf. He ran his own school (separate from the Parochial School), which was probably on the Loan in the village. His was probably the ‘adventure school’ described in the New Statistical Account (1840) as teaching ‘English reading, writing, and arithmetic, the latter only tolerably well, the former two in the most vulgar manner’. It went on to say that the ‘teacher has no education superior to a common labourer, and refuses to apply for further education’; if not strictly accurate, this suggests strong disagreement with the minister, who probably wrote the account. He was recorded as teacher at Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his brothers Alexander and Walter. In 1861 he was on Main Street with his brother Alexander and his family. William (1789–1872) 3rd son of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and later a merchant. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close off the High Street, in 1851 was on Brougham Place and in 1861 he was a grocer and china merchant at 75 High Street. In 1822 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Biggar, and she died in 1871, aged 77. Their children were: Andrew (1823–82), who married Isabella Brown; Jane (b.c.1825), who married John Marchbank; Elizabeth (b.1827), who married Andrew Smith of Dalketh; Agnes (b.c.1830); Robert (b.c.1832); Isabella (b.c.1834), who married James Lambert and kept a wash-house; Helen (b.c.1836), who married Andrew Lambert; and William (b.c.1839), who married Margaret Anderson and later Mary Ann Hope. William (b.1792/3) from Traquair, he was a famer at Haughhead in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 8 acres and in 1861 he was at ‘Nook Haugh’ farming 10 acres. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Philia Olver and their children included Mary and Philia. His sister-in-law Janet Oliver (from Ashkirk) was living with the family in 1861. William (1794–1875) son of William and Beatrix Scott, he was born in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Scaurnook with his mother. In 1851 and 1861 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter and son-in-law at Scaurnook. His first wife (according to the gravestone) may have been Helen Grieve, who died in 1822, aged 20. He had sons William (d.1819), who died in infancy, and James (d.1841), who died in an accident at the age of 5. His daughter Helen married carrier John Elliot. He died at Scaurend and was buried in Roberton Cemetery. William (b.1802/3) from Castleton, he was a joine in Teviothead. He married Betty Young. Their children included: John (b.1829); Elizabeth (b.1831); Thomas (1835–68), who died in an accident in Manchester; Douglas (b.1839); and James (b.1843). He is buried at Teviothead. William (c.1805–bef. 1851) woollen spinner in Hawick. He was living on the Loan in 1841 and his widow was there in 1851. He married Agnes Stevenson and their children included George, Thomas, Adam, William, Agnes and Robert. William (b.1812/3) shepherd at Blackcleugh, Teviothead Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his wife Janet and children Thomas, Andrew, George, William, Margaret, Walter and Elizabeth. Dr. William (1813/4–65) surgeon in Newcastleton, brother of Margaret, Jane and Agnes. He was listed as a surgeon on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He collected antiquities from the district, having the last hand-cuffs used in the village, as well as the supposed key from Mangerton Tower and a brass mortar-gun from Hermitage. He presented Liddesdale fossils and other items to the Hawick Archaeological Society. He was listed as a surgeon in Newcastleton in the 1850s when he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale. When it was decided that the Liddesdale route would be taken for the railway, he rode his gig to the head of the Liddel with flags flying, to announce the good news to the district. In 1861
he was at about 48 South Hermitage Street, and listed as a surgeon, but blind. In 1843 he married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Scott, a Newcastle-on-Tyne innkeeper. Their children included Isabel, Elizabeth Janet and Mary. Isabel and Mary emigrated to Elmhira, Illinois. He is buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (b.1814/15) tailor on the High Street. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street with his wife Margaret and daughter, also Margaret. In 1851 he was a widower in a lodging house on Walter’s Wynd. William (1831/2–1906) Hawick teacher for over 50 years. Son of William, he was born at Broomieknowe, Canonbie. He came to Hawick in 1850, to help run the school started by his brother Andrew at the top of Baker Street, and continued by his other brother John. The school had moved to the old East Bank Kirk, then to the foot of the close at 9 High Street and then to 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place). He was hired as a teacher at St. Mary’s School in 1864 and became the first Headmaster at Trinity in 1876. He was also on the Town Council for 5 years and served as Session Clerk for St. Mary’s. When he retired in 1903 he built Carradoyne in Fenwick Park, where he died. He married Janet Murray, eldest sister of J.P. John (and probably his second cousin). Their children included: William, who worked at the Commercial Bank in Hawick, moved to England and retired to Langholm; John, an architect in Liverpool; David (who was assistant to Dr. James Brydon in the Sandbed; and Elizabeth Carruthers, who married Rev. Stewart Burns. William (19th C.) married Jane Dodd Hobkirk in Hawick in 1858. William (1838/9–1916) youngest son of William and brother of poet and historian Robert. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Anderson and she died in 1877, aged 33. Their children were William (printer in Costa Rica), Isabella (who married August Louis Rye from Detroit), Andrew (a chemist in Costa Rica who married twice) and 3 children who died young. He later remarried to Mary Ann Hope. He was said to be a striking personality (in contrast to his brother Robert), with a tall stature and a long flowing beard in later years. In 1908 he was elected librarian of the St. Andrew’s Society of Detroit. Soon after he returned to Hawick and became an active member of the Archeological Society, being joint secretary in 1910 and 1911 and writing some articles. William (b.1855) eldest son of local historian Robert. He became a merchant in Aberdeen. He married Georgina Scott and later Catherine Hosie. His children were Margaret, Agnes Oliver, Jane Stewart, Helen Georgina, Janet Brown and Robert. William (19th/20th C.) gardener at Borthwickshields. His grandmother was a sister of Walter Scott (‘Wat o the Knowe’). He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (d.1915) son of William and Margaret Anderson, he was descended from the Spittal Tower Murrays and was nephew of local historian Robert. He became a printer in Costa Rica and married Agnes MacNair. His younger brother Andrew was a chemist in Costa Rica and married his sister-in-law Margaret MacNair (in earliest times interchangeable with ‘Moray’, and became ‘Moravia’, ‘Moravie’, etc. when written in Latin; other spellings include ‘Murra’ and ‘Murry’).

Murray Place (mu-ri-plis) n. lost street name, being the area behind 66 and 68 High Street, named after Walter Murray, stockingmaker who was there for only about 2 years from 1814. The new houses there were built in the early 1860s and for a few years referred to as Albert Place, but Murray Place by the 1868/9 Valuation roll. The name was dropped altogether in 1968 as it became simply the lower part of O’Connell Street.

Murray Place (mu-ri-plis) n. street in Denholm, between Douglas Drive and the Ashloaning, where 10 new houses were built in the 1950s.

the Murrays (thu-mu-riiz) n. Scottish family, probably all originating from an ancient line connected with the area of Moray or Moravia in the north-east of Scotland. The most important Lairdship locally was that of the Murrays of Falahill and Philiphaugh, descended from Archibald, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In the 16th century these Murrays were involved in many feuds, as well as in the struggles against the English. There were long Murrays in Rulewater and in Hawick there were several important families (most of which are directly related), which gave us lexicographer Sir James A.H. Murray, local historian Robert Murray, songwriter J.E.D. Murray and others.

Murray-Stavert

Murray-Stavert (mu-ri-stä-vur’) n. Archibald Stavert (19th/20th C.) lived at Saughtree and later Stanegarthside. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire.

Murray’s Temperance Hotel (mu-ri-tem-pu-rins-hô-tel) n. teetotal establishment at 15 High Street in the late 19th century.

murt (mur’) n., arch. the skin of a sheep that has died naturally – ‘Ane murt lamb skin [is stated to be hardly worth two shillings Scots]’ [BR1700], ‘Murt, A lamb-skin before castration-time, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (also ‘mort’).

murther (mu-thur) n., arch., poet. murder – ‘...but when he heard ane crying murther he straight way went up to make riddance and to allay tumult’ [PR1716], ‘Thaye sley the widaw an’ the fretem, an’ murther the faetherliss’ [HSR] (older version of the word murderer).

Muselee (mewz-, -müz-, müz-lee) n. farm across the Borthwick river from Deanburnhaugh, below Broadlee. It was in Hawick Parish until 1689/90 when Robertson was formed. The Muselee Burn joins the Borthwick here, and the 276 m Muselee Hill is above. A narrow lane between 2 dykes to the left of the house is part of an old drove road, with cattle passing from the west through here and over to Teviothead and on to English markets. Alexander Scott ‘in Mouslaw’, recorded in 1501, could have been tenant here. Adam Murray is recorded there in 1502. ‘Archibald Elliott in Muselit, undir the Laird of Cheisholme’ is recorded in 1586/7 and he was ‘of Mouslie’ in 1598/9. The lands were owned by a branch of the Riddells from at least 1618 and passed to the niece of Charles Riddell of Muselee in 1849 when he died unmarried. In 1627 it was valued along with Woodburn as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. Archibald Elliot of Muselie, ‘a common a notorious thief and fugitive’ was tried in 1628. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Laidlaw, Malie Wilson, Robert Laidlaw and James Laidlaw. John Riddell paid the land tax on £100 in Hawick Parish in 1663 and 1678 (probably for Muselee, which was in Hawick Parish at that time). George Heatley was there in at least 1732-34 and Andrew Main in 1741. By 1788 (and still continued in 1811) the owner was Charles Riddell and the value was unchanged. John Scott was living there in 1792 and Thomas Grieve is recorded as farmer there in 1797. About the same time John Laidlaw was shepherd there. William Aitkin was farmer there in 1841. Robert Brown was farmer in the 1860s Capt. George Hutton Riddell was the owner in about 1874. (also formerly spelled ‘Mooslie’, ‘Muislie’, ‘Muselie’, ‘Muslie’, ‘Musla’ and variants; it is ‘muselee’ in 1502, ‘Muselit’ in 1586/7, ‘Mouslie’ in 1598/9, ‘Mouslie’ in 1616, ‘Mewslie’ in 1628, ‘Museley’ in 1653, ‘Muislie’ in 1663, ‘Muslie’ in 1682, ‘Moosilie’ in 1690, ‘Muslie’ in 1678 and 1695, ‘Musely’ in 1719, ‘Mewslie’ in 1761, ‘Muisly’ in 1732, ‘Mooselee’ in 1797 and ‘Muslie’ in 1841; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Mooselle’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Musley’ and is absent from Stobie’s 1770 map and Ainslie’s 1821 map; the name may be from Old English ‘mos-leah’ meaning ‘fodder lea’).

Muselee Burn (mewz-lee-burn) n. stream that runs into the Borthwick Water roughly from the south-east, joining near Muselee. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail, with a section of the linear earthwork ending near the stream, about 300 m north of Broadlee Loch. It then runs in a south-easterly direction to connect with the headwaters of the Teindside Burn.

Muselee Hill (mewz-lee-hil) n. hill to the south-east of Muselee farm in the Borthwick valley, reaching a height of 276 m. A linear earthwork runs for about 500 m from Muselee Burn to the east, across the southern slopes of this hill, ending in the headwaters of the Wood Burn. It is presumably an old agricultural boundary.

Muselee Drive (mewz-lee-driv) n. short street in Lilliesleaf, running to the north at the west side of the village, usually written ‘Muselie Drive’.

Muselee Sike (mewz-lee-sik) n. small stream on the south side of the Borthwick valley, between Muselee and Woodburn. It is distinct from Muselee Burn, which lies to the west.

the Museum (thu-mew-zee-um) n. Hawick’s museum is located in Wilton Lodge, it houses a permanent display of knitwear and hosiery history, as well as other local artefacts, paintings, natural history and archæology. Many more items of local interest are in storage than can be displayed at one time. It grew out of the collection of the Archæological Society, which first opened to the public in premises at the east end of the High Street in 1858. It can be seen upstairs in the property of Milligan’s (site of the Liberal Club) in an 1858 photo. A steady stream of artefacts were donated to the Society over its first few decades, and were on public display initially only for a few hours on Saturday evenings. There was a catalogue published for the 1866 exhibition given in connection with the Archæological Society. The collection moved to the old Grammar
Musgrave

School building and then the Buccleuch Memorial, where at least one photograph exists showing the collection packed into the available space. In 1906 it was offered to the Town Council, under the condition that Wilton Lodge be converted into use as a Museum. This followed in 1910, when it was opened by the Duke of Buccleuch (who was given an ornate golden key to mark the occasion, and was the first person to sign the visitor's book). J.P. Alison drew up the original plans for converting the house into a museum. Extensive renovations were carried out in 1959 to showcase the local exhibits, and in 1975 the Scott Gallery extension was added. In 1984 the Museum became the headquarters for the Roxburgh District Museums Service. In early 2007 a new lift was added and other renovations carried out. In 2017 the trust 'Live Borders' took over the running of the Museum.

Musgrave (muːzˈɡraɪv) n. Sir John (c.1450–c.1515) Englishman who was important on the Marches around 1500. In 1502 Adam Turnbull 'in Hornishole, now in Chalmerlane-Newtoune' had a remission for several crimes, including 'the treasonable inbringing' of him to the 'Burning of Selkirk and Hereschip, and Stouthreif of goods therein'. He was probably son of Sir Thomas and younger brother of Sir Richard. He was knighted after the Battle of Stoke Field. He was Sheriff of Cumberland from 1489 and Constable of Bewcastle (along with his son Thomas) from 1493. He married Joan, daughter of John Crackenthorpe and secondly Margaret (or Dorothy), sister of John Dudley. He may also be the same Sir John whose wife was an inspiration for some of William Dunbar's poetry. Sir John of Bewcastle (16th C.) son of Sir William and an unknown mistress. He was also known as 'Jack a Musgrave' and was leader of English raiding parties, serving as Captain of Bewcastle. In 1541 he complained that his houses had been burned by Liddesdale men. In 1542 he and 40 men 'brent a towne in Tevedall caulyd Rowle', which was presumably on the Rule Water, perhaps Town-o-Rule. He took part in the battle of Solway Moss at the end of 1542. He led a force that intercepted a raiding party of Liddesdale men near Hexham in 1542/3. However, he was accused of ransoming Scottish prisoners. He married Jane Chamber and Agnes Thirlwall and his children included Adam, Ingram, Thomas, Richard and Lancelot. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Simon, who was Captain of the English garrison at Bewcastle. He was younger brother of Christopher. In 1583 he sent a letter to Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor in which he lists the chief Eliots and Armstrongs of Liddesdale. He acted as Captain of Bewcastle once his father was too old. In 1596 he attempted a retaliatory raid on the Armstrongs of Hollows, but was ambushed on the way home by John Armstrong of Langholm, Will Armstrong of Kinmont and others. They delivered him to Scott of Branxholme and he was returned after paying ransom. These events could have been inspiration for part of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid'. In 1602 he fought a duel with Lancelot Carleton, after he had been accused of offering to give up Bewcastle to the King of Scotland. He married Ursula, daughter of Sir Richard Carnaby, and secondly married a Scottish woman. There were complaints from English Commissioners in 1606 that 'he matched one of his base daughters with that bloodie and theevish clanne of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh in Liddesdale' and that the sons of Sandy's Ringan were known to frequent his house.

Musket (muːʃɪt) n. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as being 'of Holpaslat' in 1499 when he was on the inquest for Richard Rutherford of that Ilk being served heir to his grandfather. Several of the other witnesses were local men, and so it is possible that this was 'Howpasley'. Rev. William (d.1678) minister of Slains from 1635, he was translated to Hassendean Parish in 1664, presumably becoming the first Episcoplain minister. However, this was during the time of dispute about dissolving the parish, parts of the fabric having already been removed to Robertson. There was a disagreement with the Presbytery over the allocation of a glebe for him, resolved in his favour in 1668. He remained at Hassendean until his death. Several letters from him to Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester are in the National Archives. He married Christian, daughter of William Hay, minister of Crimond. He had a large family and no personal estate, so his son William (apparently lame in his right hand) was given a bursary by the Presbytery in 1670 and a younger son also given it in 1674. This younger son, or another altogether was Gilbert, who became minister of Cumbernauld. He additionally had at least one daughter, Margaret. There was also a Henry Musket, minister at Bowden about 20 years earlier who may have been related (spelled ‘Musshit’, ‘Muschet’ and variants).

Musicer (muːˈziːkər) n., arch. a musician.

Muslin Kail (muːzˈlɪn ˈkæl) n., arch. soup made without any of the richer ingredients –

musni’ve (mu-sni-u, -niv) contr. mustn’t’ve, must not have.

Musselburgh (mu-sul-bu-ru) n. town in the Lothians, about 6 miles east of Edinburgh. Created a burgh of barony in the early 14th century, it was originally called Eskmouth and nicknamed ‘the Honest Toun’, supposedly after the Regent, Lord Randolph, took shelter there and no one gave away his place of concealment to the English. It is well known to Hawick folk for having a Common Riding, held in late July. The principals are the Honest Lad and Lass, and are elected by open vote of the ‘Honest Toun’s Association’. The festival really began in 1936, building on the ancient riding of the marches ceremony and partly inspired by Hawick Common Riding. The main song is ‘Come all ye Honest Lads and Lasses’. Population (1991) 20,630 – ‘For Musselburgh was a Burgh, When Edinburgh was nane, And Musselburgh will be a Burgh, When Edinburgh’s gane’. mussen (mu-siin) contr. must not (not common; used interrogatively; cf. musni).

mutch (much) n., arch. a linen or muslin cap, often starched, once worn by older women – ‘And couthie, kindly, auld grand dames Had on their bravest mutches …’ [TCh], ‘…after the two women had torn each other’s mutch …’ [JTu] (from Mediaeval Dutch).

Mutch (much) n. James Whillans (19th/20th C.) boot and shoemaker, who was a tenant on the Weens estate from 1884. He was born at Ancrum House Lodge, his father being gardener to Sir William Scott, and his mother Christina Whillans. His wife ran a small grocer’s shop. In 1877 he married Agnes Jessie (b.1857), 3rd daughter of Andrew Davidson, from Burnfoot near Hawick. They had a son James (b.1885) and a daughter of James Whillans and Agnes Jessie Davidson. He was born at Weens Cottages and educated at Hobkirk School. He served his apprenticeship with Pesco’s and worked there.

mutchkin (much-kin) n., arch. Scots unit of liquid measure equal to 4 gills or 2 choppins or quarter of a Scots pint, equivalent to about 3/4 imperial pints or 0.9 U.S. pints or 0.42 litres – ‘...Mary Sanderson, her half-peeke ane mutchkin short’ [BR1676], ‘Sent to the steiple head a mutchkin of brandie …0 0 7’ [BR1747], ‘They quickly for a mutchkin cry, As they’ve nae time for stopping’ [JoHa], ‘...I’ll e’en take a seat, and a mutchkin I’ll be – Hurrah for the maister! quo Donald M’Gec’ [JoHa], ‘...Till gills intae half mutchkins turned, Half mutchkins intae bottles …’ [VW], ‘A mutchkin gless and some bits o’ delf Ye’d grue to set on the kitchen shelf’ [WL] (from Dutch via Middle English).

Mutter-Howie (mu-tur-how-ee) n. Mutter, Howie & Co., coal business of the late 19th and early 20th centuries, based in Edinburgh. The local representative ran a haulage business out of the Station, carrying virtually anything around Hawick using Clydesdale horses and a wagon. Their yard was off what would become Mansfield Gardens. The word was also used to refer to horses of a sort fit for pulling coal wagons – ‘...The Mutter-Howie horses There’s lots o’ other names’ [AY], ‘...Then the Mutter Howie man Takes eet tae the station’ [AY], ‘And ca’d them for a dirty clairt Frae Muter Howey’s Horse and cairt …’ [DH].

the Mutual Assurance Company (mu-tur-hoo-shoo-ruh-lee-kum-pi-nee) n. the South of Scotland Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd., also known as the South of Scotland Woollen Manufacturers Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd., was set up by local manufacturers in the early 20th century. Peter Scott was an early Director. The Museum has ledgers and other papers from the period 1938–1952.

Mutual Improvement Association

(muew-choo-ul-im-proov-min’-aw-sō-see-ə-skhin) n. former society in rural areas where members exchanged information on learned subjects. The first such society was formed in Aberdeenshire in 1846 and the movement became widespread during the second half of the 19th century, but eventually came to an end in 1962. There was a Hawick branch from at least 1858, with activity peaking probably in the 1870s – ‘It might be a surprise, but doubtless, also, a satisfaction, to the members of the Mutual Improvement Society …’ [RJR] (also ‘Mutual Instruction Society’).
muzz (muz) v., arch. to bemuse, dumbfound, stupify – ‘The sun ... thraevent an efter-heat ... fit tae muzz folk’ [ECS].

my gock (ml-gok) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise (also by gock).

mype (mI-p) v., arch. to speak a great deal, to be very diligent – ‘A mypin’ bodie’ [JoJ].

myre (mI-r) n. a marsh, bog (note the pronunciation).

Myredykes (mI-r-diIks) n. former farm in Castleton Parish on the road to Kielder, at the head of the Liddel. It is ‘Myredyks’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1623. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it covered 306 acres and was bounded by Peel, the Border, Hudshouse and Thorsliehope; the farmhouse appears to be shown on the east bank of the Peel Burn rather than the west. William Elliot farmed there in the late 18th century. Thomas Elliot, Archibald Scott and their families lived there in 1851 and Thomas Murray’s family in 1861. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. The property is now under forest.

Myre-quarter (mIr-kwur-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. In 1580/1 they were wadset by ‘Dand’ Davidson to Walter Turnbull of Bewlie for an annual rent of 5 bolls of grain; they were at that time a ‘5 poundland’. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew. In 1874 it was part of the estate of Belses owned by Sir George Douglas of Springwood Park (it is ‘Myre quarter’ in 1580/1 and ‘Myre Quarter’ in 1678).

Myres (mIrz) n. former name for lands in Lillielave. In 1528 John Scott ‘in Myrris or Vest Manes in Lillescleff’ received payment for 3 pieces of land, summing to £40. In 1531 John Scott ‘of Myrris’ assigned to his cousin Walter Scott, tutor of Haining, these lands, which he rented from the Archbishop of Glasgow. This was confirmed in 1530/1, where John’s lands were described as ‘that fourth part of the lands of Myris with pertiments lying on the west of the place of Myris’, Walter to pay John £14. In 1595/6 Walter Rid dell of that Ilk held the lands of ‘West-Maynis alias Dunstone or Myris’, suggesting this was the same place as West Mains and Dunstone.

Myreslaw Court (mIrz-lu-kor) n. sheltered housing complex built at Myreslaw Green in 1973, adjacent to St. Margaret’s Home. It is on the site of the former ‘Green Kirk’ (later used concerts, church events and as a warehouse) and also the house where the Cornet traditionally stopped for a stirrup cup on the way down from the Mair. It was the first purpose-built sheltered housing unit in Scotland, and used as a model by other local authorities (also written as one word).

Myreslawgreen see Myreslaw Green

Myreslaw Green (mIrz-lu-green, mIs-lu-green) n. part of the town Common in the West End. In 1740 it was used to pasture animals employed on building the Teviot Brig, and the Council ordered that no turf should be cut from there. It was first feued in part in 1766, for the Anti-Burgher meeting house and manse, and not immediately affected by the Division of 1777. Originally a pasture with only one building (the Green Kirk built in 1767), it was developed over the subsequent few decades. The area once included what is now Drumlanrig Place to Myreslawgreen and formed the western boundary of the Burgh.

The ‘common vennel at Myreslawgreen’ referred to in the 1537 charter probably ran from Morrison Place to Coble Pool Lane (now on the High School grounds). When this area is reached by the riders coming back from the Moor on the Friday of the Common Riding, they are served refreshments, or ‘a guid cauld calker’, a tradition possibly begun by ‘Roddie o the Green’. This was continued for about 70 years in the 20th century by the Misses McCallum. ‘Myreslaw Green’ appeared as a street name from at least 1824, and is now mainly used to the single street, which was originally part of Green Wynd. But it is also used more generally to mean that broad area of the West End surrounding the former green, including many streets named after leading Liberal reformers of Victorian times. The street used... to contain the West-end branch of the Co-op, as well as Slattery’s and Harry Scott’s grocer’s shops (the word itself is a mixture of Old English and Norse meaning ‘green swamp’ or ‘marshy grassland’; there are many earlier spellings; it is marked ‘Myres Law Green’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

the Myreslawgreen Mairches (thu-mi-slu-green-nær-cheez) n. name formerly used for the boundaries ridden by the Common Riding cavalcade around the Myreslawgreen area, on their return from the Moor.

nacket (naw-ki’-ee) n., arch. a small cake, particularly made for children – ‘[On] Hansel Monday …each scholar received a glass of toddy and a nacket’ [HAST1909], a snack carried by workers and taken around 10 or 3, a small snack generally (also nocket; uncertain origin).

nacket (naw-ki’-) n., arch. a small or insignificant person.

Nackets (naw-kits) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI] (also written ‘Knacketts’, it is unclear whether this refers to the small cake or the alternative meaning of a small person, deriving from the Old French for ball-boy in tennis).

nack (naw-koe) adj., arch. suffering from the nacks – ‘He wheezes like a naukie hen’ [JoJ].

nää (nää) adj., adv. no, not any, not at all – ‘it’s nae guid’, ‘there’s nae mair for yow’, ‘hei’s nae for me’ [BR1640], ‘… and that nae webster receive nae wark frae any person that has wrought wark with other websters, and has not payit them therfor … ’ [BR1640], ‘My Lord said, “Habby say nae mair, But to the court with me repair”’ [JR], ‘I said nae wars – the wars o’ life We daily wage in endless strife’ [JoHa], ‘O smile, my dear lassie, and greet the waves, it waives the rules!’ [IWL], ‘Sadly Britain nae longer rules the waves, it waives the rules!’ [IWL], ‘It matters nae how lang they lay … ’ [RDW], ‘They ha’e nae Common, pasture, peats, They’ve nei- ther grants nor charters’ [JT], ‘There’s nae toon amang them a’ Can wi’ oor toon compare’ [TC], ‘For Hawick lads nae love I hae, But here’s to Hawick’s bonnie lasses!’ [GWe], ‘Nae vestige o’ worry can ony Yin trace . . . ’ [WAP], also sometimes used for ‘any’ rather than ‘not any’ – ‘Cried, ‘Peggy, ha’ye nae paper? gies a piece’ [JoHa], interj., arch. used for emphasis at the ends of phrases – ‘= E. ‘now’, added for emphasis at the end of sentences or phrases: ‘Ee maunna gang away, nae!’ [GW] (never used to express denial, where nut or na are common; see also naw, neh, nih and now ni).

naeb’dy (nā-bi’ ) n. no place, nowhere – ‘they bade in the middle o naebit‘ (also written ‘nae bit’).

Napier

Napier (nä-pur, -pee-ur) n. Andrew (18th C.) mason of Hawick Parish. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Richardson. He married Margaret Graham and they had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1739. His other children included: John (b.1744); and Jean (b.1745). He may be the son of John baptised in Hawick in 1710. He could be the Andrew whose sister Janet died in Hawick in 1778. Basil (1877–1900) eldest son of Mark and grandson of Lord Napier. He was Lieutenant with the 34th Battalion, Imperial Yeomanry. He died during the South African War and is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial.

Francis (1705–73) 6th Lord Napier of Merchiston and 3rd Baronet of Thirlestane. He was only son of Sir William Scott of Thirlestane and Elizabeth Brisbane, Mistress of Napier. He changed his name from Scott to Napier when he inherited his mother’s titles. He married Henrietta, daughter of Charles Hope, Earl of Hopetoun and secondly Henrietta Maria, daughter of George Johnston of Dublin. His children were: William, who succeeded; Charles of Merchiston Hall; Lieut.-Col. Francis of the Marines; John, who died unmarried; Mark; George; James, who died young; Patrick, Naval Captain; James John; Stewart; Henrietta, who married William, 12th Lord Ross; Hester, who married Alexander Johnson of Carnsalloch; and Mary, who also died young. Francis (1758–1823) of Thirlestane, 7th Baron Napier, 8th Lord Merchiston, often referred to as ‘Lord Francis Napier’. He was only son of William and grandson of Francis Scott. His family were descendants of the Scotts of Thirlestane (in Ettrick), who were in turn cadets of the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was an army officer who surrendered to Gen. Gates at Saratoga in 1777. Returning to Britain he continued in the Army, laid the foundation stone for Edinburgh University’s ‘Old College’ in 1789, was confirmed to the University’s ‘Old College’ in 1789, was confirmed to the House of Lords in 1790, became Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and was also Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. In 1784 he married Maria Margaret, eldest daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Clavering. Thirlestane House (in the Ettrick valley) being too small, around 1790 he moved his home to Langlands, renaming the house Wilton Lodge. He paid tax on 5 female servants at Wilton Lodge in 1789 and 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as 5 male servants in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Wilton Lodge in the period 1789–95 and horses in the period 1789–94. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He had some local involvement in politics, being the head of the group promoting war against France in those years, and chairing an influential anti-reform meeting in Hawick in 1792. In 1793 he headed the pro-war side of a public meeting held in Hawick to discuss the possibility of war with France. In 1797 he was recorded as owner of 2 work horses and 3 carriage or saddle horses at Wilton Lodge on the Horse Tax Rolls; he also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. In about 1799 he was among the local men who contributed money to support the war against France. He was noted locally for his dress style. He still owned Thirlestane and other lands in Ettrick and Yarrow Parishes in 1802. He sold Wilton Lodge again in 1805; however, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is still listed as owner of the ‘Half Barony of Wilton, called Langlands’, excluding most of Roughheugh, Silverbuthall, Howlands and Dovemount, but including Calaburn. There are several surviving letters from him in the Walter Mason Collection from the period 1815–23. He was involved with setting up the Pastoral Society of Selkirkshire. He had 9 children, 6 of whom were born at Wilton Lodge. His children included: Maria Margaret (b.1785), who married Rev. Orfeur William Kilvington of Hatfield; William John (b.1786), who succeeded; Charlotte (b.1788), who died in infancy; Anne (b.1789), born at Wilton Lodge, who married Sir Thomas Gibson-Carmichael; Sophia (1791–1829), who was born at Wilton Lodge and died unmarried; Francis (b.1793), who must have died young; Charles (b.1794), whose descendants took the surname Napier-Clavering; Rev. Henry Alfred (b.1796); and Caroline (b.1798), who married Nevile Reid. The witnesses in 1791 were Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, Thomas Elliot Ogilvie of Chesters, Gilbert Chisholme of Stiches and Dr. James Wilson, surgeon in Hawick – ‘There is Lord Napier o’ the Lodge, And Gawin in the Hall, And Mr. Charters o’ Wilton Manse, Preaches lectures to us all’ [DJG]. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. His name is written ‘Neper’ in 1705 and 1706 when he witnessed baptisms (sometimes for fellow masons). In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for fellow mason Peter Mitchell and also for ‘younger’ carrier William Aitken. He is ‘Naper’ when he witnessed baptisms for William Aitken in 1710 and for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1713. He also witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1716 for cooper John Turnbull. He was recorded as ‘merchant’ in his child’s baptismal record of 1718. He married Mary Graham in Hawick in 1705 and their children included Anna (b.1706), Walter (b.1707), Janet (b.1708), Andrew (b.1710), Isobell (b.1712), Agnes (b.1713), Margaret (b.1716), Agnes (again, b.1718), Katherine (b.1720), James (b.1723) and John (b.1729). The witnesses in 1718 were gardener Walter Turnbull and Beadle John Scott. Mark Francis (1852–1919) 3rd son of Sir Francis, 10th Lord Baron Napier of Merchiston and 1st Baron of Ettrick (and Viceroy of India), and great-grandson of the Lord Napier who stayed at Wilton Lodge. He stood unsuccessfully against Unionist Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliot in the 1886 Roxburghshire election, but defeated him to become Liberal M.P. in 1892. He was defeated in the 1895 election by the Conservative Earl of Dalkeith. In 1878 he married Emily Jones. Their children were: Basil, killed in action in South Africa; Claude Inverness; and Philip Henry. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1694); and John (b.1696). The witnesses in 1696 were William and John Cavers. William (d.1775) 7th Baron Napier, eldest son of Francis. He was a Liet.-Col. in the Army and Deputy-Adjutant General of the forces in Scotland. He married Mainie, daughter of Charles, 8th Lord Cathcart and was succeeded by his only son Francis (also formerly spelled ‘Naper’, ‘Neper’ and ‘Naprie’).

Ness (nes) n. Rev. David (1863–1935) born in East Wemyss, he graduated M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1885 and was licensed to preach by Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1889. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1889–92 and then assisted at Thornwood, Bothwell. He was ordained as assistant and successor at Whiteinch in 1894 and moved to Savoch in 1928.

Nessie (ne-see) n. aquatic monster supposed to live in Loch Ness, although there has never been convincing evidence. However, its cousin Wullie really does live in Wulliestruther.
the Nest (thu-nest) n. former name for Glednesset adjacent to Colterscleuch.
neth (neth) prep., poet. beneath, below – ‘...But oot yont neth the mune’s licht At the coortin’ thrang ...’ [WL].
nether (ne-thur) adj. under, lower, particularly lower-situated of 2 houses or farms (now particularly in place names, e.g. Nethrrow, Nether Bonchester, Netherhall, Nether Kirk and Nether Tofts).
Nether Ancrum (ne-thur-awng-krum) n. former name for what is now the village of Ancrum, with ‘Over Ancrum’ being across the river. The lands were held by ‘David Ancrum’ and a set of feuars in 1643 and valued at £944. It was later owned by Ogilvie of Chesters. In 1788 it was split between 8 separate owners, as well as ‘Fèwars of Nether Ancrum’ (it is ‘Nether Ankrum’ in 1548/9).
Nether Belses (ne-thur-bel-seez) n. Nether Belses, former name for part of Belses.
Nether Bonchester (ne-thur-bon-ches-tur) n. former farm, just below where the modern Bonchester farm is located, over the bridge at the base of Bonchester Hill. John Turnbull (called ‘Case’) was tenant there in 1494/5. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased from Jedburgh Abbey by Adam French, and is listed ‘with the woddis of the samin’. In 1587 it was again ‘with woods’, along with Over Bonchester, among the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh. Mark Turnbull was there in 1590/1 and still tenant in 1606. In 1617 Mark’s widow Margaret Rutherford stated that his family ‘held the rowme of Nethir Bonchester past memory of man, as kindlie tennentis and possessouris to the Abbotis of Jedburgh’. It was purchased by Walter Scott in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop (Burgess of Jedburgh). It was then owned by a branch of the Scotts until sold by his great-grandson in the mid-1700s. It was valued at £180 Scots in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (although there seem to be errors in some records). Thomas Scott, brother of Walter, became the 2nd Scott Laird in 1653. Thomas was succeeded by his son Walter Scott in 1680, and he was recorded as Laird there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 it was owned by William Scott and valued at £180. In 1733 Walter Scott was succeeded by his son, also Walter. He was in turn succeeded by his son Thomas who sold the farm to William Oliver of Weens and Dinlabyre in 1779. Wright John Rule was there in 1788. In 1788 it was still valued at £180. The farm was sold along with Weens to Robert Nutter Campbell in 1793, and in 1796 he sold them to Adm. Thomas Pringle. Francis Renwick was tenant there in 1797. By 1811 the farm (or part of it) was owned by Thomas Cleghorn and valued at £31 4s 8d. The farm had a nursery garden that once supplied trees to other properties in the area. The old house was in a hollow below the present farmhouse’s garden. It was a simple 2-storey building, taken down in the 1780s and part of it still standing around the 1830s. The doors and parts of the flooring were re-used on a cottage at Bridge-end (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Nethir Bonechestir’ in 1494/5, ‘nethir Bunchester’ in 1569, ‘Neddir Bonechest’ in 1581, ‘Nether Bonchester’ in 1590/1, ‘Nether Binstcher’ in 1603, ‘Nether bonchester’ in 1678, ‘netherboonchester’ in 1694, ‘Nether Boonchester’ in 1761, ‘Netherboonchester’ in 1788 and ‘Nether Boonster’ in 1797).
Netherby (ne-thur-bee) n. village just over the Border into Cumbria, off the A7. Held by the Grahams in rieving days, Netherby Hall was built around an older tower in the mid-18th century – ‘So boldly he enter’d the Netherby Hall, Among bride’s-men, and kinsmen, and brothers and all’ [SWS].
Nethercroft (ne-thur-kroft) n. another name for Northcroft, recorded in the 19th century. There may have been some confusion with Netherhall.
Nether Croft (ne-thur-kroft) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley somewhere near Dryden, Teindside, etc. The name is recorded as ‘Neither Croft’ in 1686 among the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch then occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside.
Nether Dykeraw (ne-thur-dik-raw) n. former farmstead near Dykeraw in Southdean Parish. James, Michael, John, Adam and Robert Oliver were tenants there in 1541, paying 2s yearly. David Oliver was there in 1694. James Hargrave was shepherd there in 1797 (it is ‘Nethir Dykraw’ in 1541 and ‘nether dykra’ in 1694).
Nether Ewes (ne-thur-yooz) n. former name for the lower part of Ewesdale, served by the Nether Kirk.
Netherfields (ne-thur-feeldz) n. former name for part of the lands of Foulshiel in Liddesdale. The farm was tenanted for the Scotts of Buccleuch by John Scott in Newark, but there was a dispute with the local Elliots. A gang of about 100, including the Elliots of Redheugh, Hartsgarth, etc., searched for the farm workers there, but not finding them there, took away ‘12 dargs of hay woone for winter fodder’.

Nether Foulwud (ne-thur-fowl-wud) n. Former name for lands near Galalaw. It is unclear if this was part of the main farm, or a name for an adjacent farm. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands there to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk and recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books (it is ‘Neder Gallow’ in 1534).

Nether Galalaw (ne-thur-ga-law) n. Former name for lands near Galalaw. It is unclear if this was part of the main farm, or a name for an adjacent farm. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands there to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk and recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books (it is ‘Neder Gallow’ in 1534).

Netherhaa (ne-thur-haw, -hal) n. Former farm near Galalaw. It is unclear if this was part of the main farm, or a name for an adjacent farm. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands there to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk and recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books (it is ‘Neder Gallow’ in 1534).

Netherhaa Burn (ne-thur-haw-burn) n. Another name for the Wilton Burn at the south end of the Park.

Nether Harden (ne-thur-hawr-din) n. Former farm near Harden. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, covering 420 acres, bounded by Potterlamport, lands owned by the Laird of Whitaugh and the farms of Cocklaik and Dykeraw. The farmhouse was shown on the south side of the Harden Burn, where there is nothing on modern maps.

Nether Harwud (ne-thur-har-wud) n. Former name for lands near Harwood on Teviot. It was listed among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Over Harwood’ (it is ‘Nether Harewod’ in 1511, ‘Nethir Harwood’ in 1572, ‘Nethair Harwood’ in 1594 and ‘Nathir Harwood’ in 1615).

Nether Hawthornside (ne-thur-ha-thorn-sid) n. Former farm near Hawthornside, called ‘Deneside’ in earlier times. It is described as being on the left-hand side going up Hawthornside Brae (which would confusingly place it on the other side of Hawthornside than the Dean Burn). It once contained some of the best land now incorporated into Hawthornside, and the Lairds were Turnbulls for several generations.

Nether Kirk (ne-thur-kirk) n. Former common name for the church in the Ewes valley next to the A7 between Arkleton and Sorbie, in an area once called ‘Kirkton’. It is distinguished from the ‘Ower Kirk o Ewes’, which is a few miles further up the valley near Uthank, and served the lower part of the valley, referred to as ‘Nether Ewes’. The original church was dedicated to St. Cuthbert and attached to Melrose Abbey. There are many records relating to incumbents of the church from the end of the 13th century. ‘Robert fy Rauf persone del Eglisse de Seint Cuthbert de Ewystesdale’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The right of patronage passed from Robert Graham to George Douglas, Earl of Angus, n 1456. Roger Kirkpatrick was Rector there in 1556. The patronage of the Kirk was long held by the Maxwells. The position of the church, as well as the minister’s house and glebe, were shown on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was a relatively rudimentary structure, with a thatched roof; an entry in the session records describes how a young couple had to pay penance in the Kirk and also had to gather heather for the roof. A new church was built on the site of the old in 1866/7. The graveyard contains many old tombstones of the local families of Aitchison, Armstrong, Beattie, Borthwick, Jackson, Little, Rutherford and Scott. The family gravestone of the Malcolms of Burnfoot records the names of 3 of the 4 Knights of Eskdale, and the western side contains the burial place of the Scott-Elliots.
Nether Larriston

Nether Larriston (ne-thur-law-ree-stin) n. Former tower-house at Larriston, situated near the modern farmhouse. It is unclear exactly where it was located. It is marked as ‘Nether Laristone’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (it is ‘Nather Larestounis’ in about 1624).

Nether Mains of Hassendean see Hassendean Mains

Nether Newhaa (ne-thur-new-haw) n. Nether Newhall, an older name for Burnfoot, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Newhall; it was held of the superior for the token fee of a silver penny at the Feast of Pentecost. In 1494 James Scott granted ‘le Nethir Manes de Newhall’ to his son David, along with Galalaw; this was explicitly the west part, above the common road, valued at 3 merks. ‘Over et Nather Newhalls’ are still referred to when the lands were inherited in 1585 and similarly in 1667. The lands were sold by Adam of Burnfoot and Gavin Plummer to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712, when they are described as ‘Nether Newhall, otherwise called Burnfoot, with the milne, milne lands, multures, sucken, knaveship and sequels thereof within the paroch of Hassendean, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. Over Newhall was probably the same as Burnhead (it is ‘Nethir Newhall’ in 1494, ‘Nethir Newhall’ in 1532, ‘Nether Newhalls’ in 1609 and ‘Nether Newhales’ in 1667).

Netherraw (ne-thu-raw) n. Farm and hamlet between Minto and Lilliesleaf. William Thomson was farmer there in 1797 when it is ‘Netherrow’. James Henderson was there in the 1860s. William Cranston was farmer there in the early 20th century.

Netherraw (ne-thu-raw) n. Farm on the Hermitage Water, by the B6399, near the junction with the road from Steele Road. The house must have been there from at least the 16th century, and was distinguished from ‘Over’ or ‘Upper Raw’. This could be ‘the Raws’ where George Simpson is recorded as a subordinate of Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 16th century. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Neirland’ in 1632, when possessed by Francis Beattie. William Scott was tenant in 1694 and Adam Armstrong was also recorded there. George ‘Hotson’ was tenant in the early 1700s. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 141 acres, bounded by Toffholm, the Hermitage Water, lands of the Laird of Hoscote and Over Raw. The farmhouse at that time was roughly in the same location as the modern building and the farm is described as ‘indifferent good land much dammified with the water’. David Jackson was farmer there in 1797, Walter Scott in 1835, Matthew Elliot in 1851 and Walter Scott in 1861. It was a home of the Elliot until the last farmer, Matthew Elliot died in 1877, when the old buildings were demolished. Some of the land was planted, becoming the Nether Raw Plantation, and the rest was attached to Harts-garth farm. The current house is modern (‘Rha’ is marked near there on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Raa’ on Visscher’s 1689 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows both ‘N. Ra’ and ‘O. raa’ and Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Upperra’ and ‘Netherraw’; it is ‘Netherraw’ in 1663 and ‘Netherrow’ in 1797).

Netherraw Cottages (ne-thu-raw-ko’-ee-jeez) n. Houses by the side of the road between Netherraw and Longhaugh. There was a blacksmith’s marked here on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map.

Nether Riccarton see Riccarton

Nether Soothfield (ne-thur-sooth-feeld) n. Previously the lower farm at Southfield, now the site of the main farm. It lay just outside the old boundaries of the Common. The land was long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and was contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 145 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Hawickshiel, Stobicote and Over Southfield. It was mentioned in a Hawick Parish evaluation in 1627, and then said to be ‘of that same nature’ as ‘Upper Southfield’. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1628 and John Elliot of Brugh was recorded as tenant in at least the period 1690–1704. Gilbert Elliot was there in at least 1700–04. Walter and James Scott were tenants in at least 1709–18. Walter and James Scotts were there in 1713. John Elliot was cooper there in 1726. George Telfer was herd there in 1740 (it was ‘Neathersouthfield’ in 1628, ‘Nether Southfield’ in 1690 and ‘nether southfield’ in 1694).

Nether Steele (ne-thur-steele) n. Former name for part of the farm of the Steele.

Nether Tofts (ne-thur-tofts) n. Farm near Kirkton, north-east of Upper Tofts. It was once part of the Cavers estate. Its lands are on the lower slopes of Ruberslaw. Adam Turnbull was...
Nether Wheel (nether-wheel) n. former lands near the Wheel Kirk in upper Liddesdale. It is listed as ‘Nether Wheill’, along with ‘Kirk Wheeland’ and other lands in Liddesdale owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 (see the Wheel Kirk).

Nether Whisgills (nether-whis-gills) n. former name for part of the lands of Whisgills. William Oliver was there in 1694. The farm was surveyed for the Duchesses of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 528 acres. It was bounded by the Muir Burn, Upper Millstead, Reidmoss, Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead, Shipshields and Gillfoot.

Nether Whitlaw (nether-whi’law) n. farm to the south of Lindean village, a couple of miles north-west of Selkirk, adjacent to Over Whitlaw. It should not be confused with the farm of Whitlaw just south of Hawick. It was owned by the Kers of Faldonside in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. There were Porteous there in the 19th century.

Nether Woollee (nether-woo-lee) n. former name for part of the lands of ‘Woollee’ (or Wolfelee) in use from the 15th to 18th centuries (it is ‘Nether Wolfe’ in 1479 and 1515, ‘Nether Woulee’ in 1522, ‘Nether Woulie’ in 1525 and ‘Natherwolley’ in 1627).

Netherwud (nether-wud) n. Netherwood, a large house on Sunnyhill, on the private drive that is a continuation of Roadhead. It was built in the 19th century for the Laings, being home to Thomas and his family. J.P. Alison was responsible for alterations in the early years of the 20th century. It may have been used as a boys’ home at the end of WWII and is now split into flats.

Neville (ne-vel) n. Sir John (c.1341–88) 3rd Lord of Raby, son of Ralph. He was probably joint Warden of the English West and East Marches 1380–88, along with the Percys. He married Maud Percy and was succeeded by Henry, who became the 1st Earl of Westmorland. He died before his father, although his son Ralph became 2nd Earl of Westmorland. Sir John (1387–1420) son of Ralph, 1st Earl of Westmorland, and half-brother of Richard, 1st Earl of Salisbury. He was Warden of the English West Marches for a few years until his death. Ralph (c.1291–1367) 2nd Baron Neville de Raby, son of Ralph. He was Joint Warden General of the English Marches (along with Henry, 2nd Baron Percy) from 1334. He was probably the ‘Sir Randolph’ who was in possession of the Castle and manor of Hermitage shortly after the Battle of Durham in 1346, resigning them to Edward III about 1352. In 1354 he, along with Henry Percy, was appointed as a commissioner to deal with Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Douglas, former Keeper of Hermitage. He married Alice, daughter of Sir Hugh de Audley and was succeeded by his son Sir John. He also had a son who was Archbishop of York and daughters who married into the Clifford, Dacre, Percy and Scrope families. His youngest daughter Margaret married Henry Percy and was mother of ‘Rotspur’.

Ralph (c.1364–1425) 1st Earl of Westmorland, son of John and Maud Percy. He was probably Warden of the English West Marches along with Thomas de Clifford from about 1388. He married his cousin Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Stafford (with whom he had 9 children) and then
Neville’s Cross

Joan Beaufort, daughter of the 1st Duke of Lancaster (with whom he had another 14 children. He is the inspiration for the character ‘Westmorland’ in Shakespeare’s ‘Henry V’, and it has even been claimed that his great-great-grandson wrote Shakespeare’s plays. Richard (1400–60) 5th Earl of Salisbury, eldest son of Ralph, Earl of Westmorland. About 1420 he became Warden of the English West March (succeeding his eldest half-brother John). He remained Warden until 1424, when he was involved in negotiations for the release of James I. About 1433 he was again Warden of the West Marches, also took over the East Marches and Captaincy of Berwick in 1434, but resigned in the next year. His family had regular conflicts with the Percy’s and supported Richard, Duke of York (his brother-in-law). He married Alice Montacute, heiress of the Earl of Salisbury. He was succeeded by his son Richard, ‘the Kingmaker’. He was captured after the Battle of Wakefield and beheaded. Richard ‘the Kingmaker’ (1428–71) Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, eldest son of Richard, the 5th Earl. He was a great Yorkist supporter in the Wars of the Roses. He was Warden of the English East Marches from about 1453, perhaps along with his father initially (since he must only have been 15!). In 1464 his forces burned Jedburgh. He helped Edward IV to gain the English Crown, but later switched his allegiance to put Henry VI back on the throne. He was killed by Edward IV’s forces at the Battle of Barnet.

Neville’s Cross (ne-valz-kros) n. battle of 1346, in which the Scottish army under King David were routed at Durham by a smaller English army under York, Percy and Neville. On their way south the Scottish army recaptured Liddel Castle. Durham was attacked as a diversionary tactic to help the French. A relic of St. Cuthbert’s is supposed to have helped the English victory and King David II was captured while fleeing. The Scots division under Sir William Douglas suffered particularly disastrously. Sir Michael Scott of Rankilburn and Maurice Murray (then Baron of Hawick) were killed there, while Robert Chisholme of Chisholme and Sir William Douglas (Knight of Liddesdale), as well as the King and about 50 other Barons, were taken prisoner. Afterwards the English army took possession of the Border territory and Hermitage and Roxburgh Castles surrendered, with several locals swearing (temporary) fealty to the English King. The name of the battle derives from the stone cross erected by Lord Neville in commemoration (destroyed in 1589). It is also known as the Battle of Durham.

neyv (ne-vee) n., arch. a nephew – ‘The uncle turned red, and the nevy turned blue, Then they looked at each other, these good men and true’ [JCG].

Nevysintonsteed (ne-vee-sin’-in-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Nevtsintounsteid’. It is unclear where these lands were or what the name meant (although the ‘nevy’ part may refer to a nephew).

new (new) adv. newly, recently, just – ‘The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave . . . [ECS] (more common than in standard English; see also i the new).

Newall (new-al) n. Broughton (b.1818/9) born in Hawick, he was a frame-worker. In 1851 he lived around the Crown Close and in 1861 on Factory Close. He married Mary Whillans (sister of ‘Kinly Stick’) and their children included Mary, Agnes, Margaret, Robert, Richard, Jane and James. He is probably the ‘Auld Broughton’ mentioned in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. Richard (1850–1918) son of Broughton and Mary Whillans. The family lived at Orrock Place when he was young. He was ‘boatswain Newall, who was up aloft’ in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’. Ironically he drowned in the Teviot, where he must have cavorted as a youth. Robert (b.1788/9) from St. Michael’s in Dumfriesshire, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howagate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was at about 12 Howagate in 1841. His public house is mentioned as existing during the cholera outbreak of 1832. By 1851 he was a frame-worker living at the Village. His wife was Agnes and their children included: Robert; Thomas, who married Margaret Kersall; and Margaret, who married William Gemmell. Thomas (b.1813/4) from Dumfries, son of Robert. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 23 Loan. In 1852 he married Margaret Kersel (also written ‘Newell’).

New Appletreehaa (new-aw-, -ä-pul-tree-haw, -hawl) n. New Appletreehall, name used for an area near to Appletreehall in the late 18th century. It is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when the residents there who owned work horses were John Reid, James Scott and James Crawford.

Newark Castle (new-urk-kaw-sul) n. ruin west of Selkirk, on a mound above the Yarrow, now within the estate of Bowhill. It was formerly called ‘Cathmurlie’ and had adjacent lands called ‘Old Wark’. The existing tower was built in 1423 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and was used as a residence of the Earls until about 1446. It passed to the crown as the royal hunting seat of Ettrick Forest in 1455. John Murray was custodian in the late 15th century and Scott of Buccleuch was appointed Captain and Keeper in 1542. Several nearby farms were given by the Crown to the keeper of the castle. It was taken in a siege by Lord Grey (with the support of the Kers) in 1547, with 4 of Sir Walter Scott’s servants and a woman being slain. Sir Walter Scott was appointed Captain and Keeper of the Castle in 1565/6. Over 100 of the Philibeghaugh prisoners were slaughtered in its courtyard in 1645, and Cromwell’s troops occupied it in 1650 after the Battle of Dunbar. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. For a while it was the home of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch, and is in Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. But it was unroofed during the minority of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and preserved from decay during the time of Walter, the 5th Duke – ‘He pass’d where Newark’s stately tower Looks out from Yarrow’s birchen bower’ [SWS], ‘…And sudden he saw at his shoulder stand The walls of Newark, grey towered and grand’ [WHO] (it is ‘Neuwerk’ in 1446/7 and ‘the Castell of Newwerk’ in 1547/8; it is marked ‘Cast. of Newoork’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newbattle (new-baw’-ul) n. Roger (13th C.) recorded in a charter of Walter of Riddell as owner of neighbouring lands in Lilliesleaf.

Newbattle Viaduct (new-baw’-ul-vi-a-dukt) n. longest viaduct on the Waverley Line, over the River South Esk, near the town of Newbattle, having 22 arches and being almost one third of a mile long (also known as ‘Lothanbridge’).

Newbie (new-bee) n. James (15th/16th C.) local clerk and priest. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1500. He was vicar there in 1501/2 when he was notary for a document relating to the lands of Feu-Rule. He is probably the same priest of Glasgow Diocese who was notary for the 1512 sasine transferring Harden from Walter Scott to his brother William. He also notarised the 1514 sasine of the Barony of Hawick, where he is recorded as ‘Jacobus Newbe, presbiter Glasguensis diocesis’. In 1523 he was notary for a document relating to the lands of the Trows. Either the same or a different ‘Jacobo Newby’ was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550. He may also be the ‘James Nwby, messinger’, who was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552 along with James Douglas of Cavers and several Kers; according to the indictment when the group were crossing the Rule he said to the people there ‘Hard ze ony tythennis of the Lard of Buklucht; he is put in vard, and will never cumme furth’.

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Scott. Their son Samuel was baptised in 1635. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Turnbull. Their children included Thomas (b.1654) and James (b.1655). James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in Hawick. He gave evidence in 1681 at the trial of Covenanters, relating to the attack on Drumlanrig’s Tower. In 1682 he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home, portioner of Home, one of the Covenanters leaders who besieged Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was also listed as ‘officer to the sheriff’ among contributors to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the James recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’; he was probably from the west side. Presumably the same James was described as ‘portioner of Hawick’ in an Edinburg marriage record of 1719, when his daughter Helen married Alexander Thomson, merchant in Edinburgh. He may be the James who was born in Hawick in 1655, with parents James and Agnes Turnbull. He is probably the James who married Margaret Gillespie, whose children included Robert (b.1671), with the witnesses being Mr. John Purdom and James Thorbrand. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Lunn in Hawick Parish in 1675, another for James Baptie in 1678 and one more for John Scott in Barn Knowe in 1680. Samuel (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for ‘both-meall’ (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Probably the same Samuel was fined in 1676 for assaulting masons Andrew Turnbull and Andrew Wilson and ‘for casting downe the mason work at his own hand without ane complaint first made to the bailies thereof’; presumably he did not approve of the building work that they were doing for him! He is probably the Samuel born in 1635 to James and Isobell Scott. He could also be the Samuel who married Bessie Wilson and had a son Samuel in 1676. Thomas (d.1602) Reader at Hassendean Kirk 1576–80. He was presented to the vicarage of the Parish on the demitting of Newbiggin

Thomas Weston in October 1576 and is recorded demitting this in 1595. Hence it appears he held part of the benefice of the Parish for at least 15 years after he was Reader there. Another record states that John Madder (or Mather) was presented to Hassendean on his death in 1602, so he may have held some of the benefice even longer. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction for Robert Scott of Alton, done at the Monk’s Tower. In 1582, along with Sir Thomas Ker (of Roxburgh Parish), Archibald Simson (of Lilliesleaf), John Scott (of Southdean), James Scott (of Ashkirk) and John McClellan (of Kirkandrews) were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. Then they were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing with the offence (which is unspecified, but may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation) and in 1590 ordered never to abuse the sacraments under pain of death. They were made to stand for 2 hours at the Market Cross of Edinburgh with a paper on their foreheads proclaiming their crime. Samuel (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 he was found guilty of assaulting merchant William Elliot, cutting him ‘with ane sword in ye head’ and for ‘strycking and wounding of him in his face with ane bridle’.

He may be the Samuel who was born in Hawick in 1635, son of James and Isobell Scott. He is probably the Samuel who was married to Bessie Wilson, with son Samuel born in 1676. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he witnessed the financial document relating to the building of the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He is described there as ‘servant’, although it is unclear what this means (also formerly written ‘Neubie’, ‘Newby’, ‘Newbe’ and ‘Nwby’).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Newbigging, former farmstead that lay between Whitchesters and Southfield, bordering on the Common. It was later the shepherd’s cottage for Whitchesters. The location can still be clearly made out, directly to the south of Whitchesters farm and east of the hill-fort. It was mentioned among the farms burned by the English in 1533. It was long a tenanted farm belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. James Scott was tenant there in 1627. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, and at that time consisted of 111 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Hawick Common, Over Southfield and Raesknowe. In at least the period 1690-98 the farm was leased to Robert Scott, James Davidson and Margaret Davidson. The householders listed in 1694 were Robert Scott, James Davidson and John Hogg (weaver), with Margaret Davidson and James Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. James Davidson was still tenant in at least 1702–18. Weaver William Hood was living there in 1704. Walter Scott was joint tenant there in at least 1708–36. John Wilson was tailor there in 1708. Robert Scott was tenant in about 1710 and Andrew Davidson was also there. In 1711 John Wilson was tailor there and Robert Davidson was also living there. James Davidson was there in 1720. Walter Scott was there in about the 1750s and 1760s. Walter Scott and John Rutherford farmed here in 1797 and William Scott was labourer there in 1841. It is said that residents of the farm were formerly weavers. Its buildings were already shown as ruined on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is a spring near the old farmstead and the remains of a fort on the hill to the west. The fort must once have been quite extensive, measuring perhaps 90 m by 135 m, but has been partly obliterated due to ploughing, except on the steeper south and south-east sides. Its defences consist of 3 banks of piled rubble and there may be signs of 2 scooped huts on the knoll, which has been heavily quarried. There are also Newbiggings in Oxnam Parish and near Lauder, and several others elsewhere in Scotland (it must have been a ‘new biggin’ at some point; it is ‘Newbiggyns’ in 1533 and ‘Neubigging’, ‘neubiging’ in 1694 and ‘Newbegging’ in 1718; it appears as ‘Newbrug’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘New Beggen’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Newbigging, a farm that lay between Horsleyhill and Knowtownhead, once part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean. In the 1550s there was a dispute over these lands between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill by his first wife and those by his second wife. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. It may be the Newbigging listed as part of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. Like much of the area, it became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The disused quarry of that name is still marked on Ordnance Survey maps (the farm is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and may have been incorrectly transcribed ‘Howbigging’ in 1690).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. house at No. 9 Lockhart Place, which is a grade C listed building.
Newbiggin

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. (Newbigging) Helen (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanters fugitives.

Sir William (1782–1852) surgeon in Edinburgh, based at 18 St. Andrew’s Square. He gave evidence at the trial of Burke and Hare and became President of the Royal College of Surgeons. In 1825 he subscribed to 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, and so it is possible he had some connection with the town. William ‘Willie’, took over as landlord of the Moss保罗 Inn in 1962.

Newbiggin Burn (new-bi-gin-burn) n. stream rising near the old Newbigging farm and flowing roughly south-west to join the Allan Water (marked ‘Newbigging Hope’ and ‘North Burn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the New Brig (thin-new-brig) n. original name for the North Bridge, built in 1832. It was usually referred to as the ‘Station Brig’ after the railway was completed in 1849.

Newburgh (new-bu-ru) n. farm in the upper Ettrick valley, once home of the Scotts of Newburgh – ‘Gae warn the ladys of Thirlstone, Genselaugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB].

new-calfit (new-kaw-fee) adj., arch. having just calved – ‘...nyne new calfit ky, with thair followaris, price of the pece ourheid, five pundis’ [SB1574].

Newcastle (new-kaw-sul) n. city in the northeast of England, approximately 62 miles southeast of Hawick, reached via the Carter Bar and A68. The city was the site of the interchange between Douglas and Percy that led to the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. It was also captured in 1640 by Montrose’s Covenanters army, which included the Teviotdale Regiment under the Earl of Lothian. It was occupied for about a year, during which time there is a record in the Hawick Town Book of James Scott, former Bailie gathering contributions for the soldiers there. It was occupied again 1644–47, when Buccleuch was involved in the siege. Several Newcastle merchants (probably coal merchants) were made Honorary Burgessess of Hawick in the 18th century. The city was once connected to Hawick by rail via the Riccarton-Hexham line. The old road towards Newcastle was, until the 1830s, up the Cross Wynd and over the hills, via Ormiston, Birneyknowe and Blackcleugh; part of this can still be traced through the open country. Until the early 1800s the road through Rulewater went from Hawthornside to Forkins, via Highend, and then up Blacklee Brae to join the modern road towards Chesters – ‘To Newcastell when that they came, The Douglas cry’d on hyght: ‘Harry Percy, an thou bidest within, Come to the field, and fight!’ ’ [T] (note the accent on the first syllable).

Newcastleton (new-kaw-sul’-in) n. village 20 miles south-west of Hawick in the southern corner of Roxburghshire. It was effectively a replacement for the older settlement of Castleton, which lies further up the Liddel. The site was formerly the farms of Copshaw and the flat land was said to have been used for ‘Horse coursing’, with crowds from both sides of the Border coming to watch the races. This planned village was founded in 1793 by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and laid out according to the design of Mr. Keir of Whitehaugh. The lay-out is a series of cross-streets around 3 main squares. Its main purpose was as a handloom weaving centre, close to the Border and on the Liddel Water. The first settler was said to be from the Hermitage area and lived in a turf hut while the village was being built. Many early residents were weavers, other tradesmen and retired shepherds. Clog-making was also prominent, and the wearing of clogs in the village was common for much longer than elsewhere. Leases of holdings were originally for 99 years, with each householder responsible for erecting their own house. Each feuar also had 2 acres of land attached (later extended to 4 acres per 2 storey house and 2 acres for cottages), as well as a garden of 1/8 acre, and the right to graze a cow on the hill. The management was by 3 elected bailies, one retiring each year. The 99 year leases led to much dispute in 1892 and subsequent improvements to the village. Most householders chose to convert their holdings into fees for purchase and feu-duty. The church (later St. John’s) was built in 1782 (before the new village), with additions in 1891, but only became the parish church in the 1950s. There was a separate Free Kirk, built in 1853 on Langholm Street, a Secession (later United Presbyterian) Kirk built 1801–04 at the Townfoot (now the Heritage Centre) and an Evangelical Union Kirk built in 1850 on South Hermitage Street (and now a private dwelling). There was a subscription library already by 1839. There has always been a school here, but secondary school pupils have been bussed to Hawick since 1962 (and before that some of them took the train). A memorial statue of a K.O.S.B. soldier was erected after WWI. The village has the Liddesdale Heritage Centre, a local history museum. There was a weekly market starting in about 1837 and 2 annual fairs for the selling of sheep. The village formerly hosted 3 hiring days, when servants were hired in the area, and much activity took place, these being in April, May and November. The Holm Show is the annual fair in August, popularised in the song ‘Copshawholm Fair’, and has been running since 1893, while the Newcastleton Traditional Music Festival in July has been running since 1970. The Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 list the owners of horses in the village as James Oliver, James Aitchison, John Beattie, Robert Thomson, James Elliot, Thomas Mathieson, Thomas Dodgson, William Kyle, William Little, John Smith, Andrew Rutherford, Mary Murray, George Dalgleish, Robert Murray, William Beattie, George Scott, John Leyden, Charles Grieve, William Winlaw, James Fell and Thomas Hall. The official name of the village was originally just ‘Castleton’, but the modern name appeared by the early 1800s. The village is also known as ‘Copshaw’, ‘Copshawholm’ or ‘the Holm’. William Hall wrote ‘Newcastleton: A Border Village’ (1905). Population (1991) 813 – ‘Newcastleton was the last o’ the battles And the curtain began tae descend . . . ’ (it is ‘New Castleton’ in 1797, with the first recorded appearance as one word being in the Kelso Mail of 1808).

Newcastleton Burgher Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-bur-gur-kirk) n. church established in Castleton Parish in the 1750s, originally called the Liddesdale Burgher Kirk or Copshawholm Kirk. Its origin lay in the secession movement of the time, which locally came to a head with the unpopular appointment of Simon Haliburton as Castleton Parish Minister. Their first meeting was under the ‘venerable oak’ near Snaberlee. The Edinburgh Anti-Burgher Presbytery was petitioned in 1751 and provided an occasional preacher, then the Edinburgh Burgher Presbytery was approached in 1753. Early preachers included John Brown (later at Haddington) and Archibald Hall (later Torphichen). A building was constructed on the banks of the Liddel at Geilbraehead about then. It was made of rubble with a thatched roof and earth floor. James Wylie was called, but declined, William Ronaldson also ended up elsewhere, and the apparently rebellious James Mitchell was also found wanting. So the first minister was James Fletcher, and not until 1762. Although a remarkable man, he was not a successful minister and the congregation was in decline by the 1790s. However, the name was changed to the Associate Kirk of Newcastleton in 1804, with a new building erected in the village there 1801–4. This was the first church built in the new village and usually referred to as the ‘Toonfit Kirk’, since the site was a former garden at the foot of the village. A Manse was also built at this time. A harmonium was donated to the church in the mid-1800s by Mrs. Tod, daughter of Rev. John Law. After the Secession churches merged it became known as Newcastleton United Presbyterian Kirk. However, further dissent led to the formation of the Free Church in Newcastleton, as well as the Congregational Church. It was renovated along with the Manse in 1875. With the merge of the secession churches with the Church of Scotland in 1929 the church became locally known as ‘the South Church’ (to distinguish it from ‘the Park Church’ and ‘Castleton Church’). From 1930 the charge was combined with that of the Park Church. A roll of the ministry is: James Fletcher 1762–1801; William Smart, ‘probationer’ 1802; Walter Dunlop 1804–10; John Law 1812–28; John Black 1829–79; James Snadden 1880–c.1929; George Lithgow Wilson 1930–40.

Newcastleton Congregational Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-kong-gree-ga-shu-naul-kirk) n. church established in Castleton Parish in 1849 by people seceding from the United Presbyterian congregation. In 1850 they erected a building on South Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. It is sometimes referred to as ‘Newcastleton South’ or the ‘Sooth Kirk’. By 1870 they had joined the Evangelical Union and in 1929 merged with with the South Church (formerly the U.P. congregation), thereafter using the South Church building and manse. The National Archives have records for the period 1854–1934. A partial roll of the ministry is: William Davidson Black 1850–51; Supply ministers 1851–66; Robert Steel 1866–75; A. Turnbull 1876–77; Supplies again 1877–82; Peter Andrew 1882–83; George Davies 1883–86; William Paterson 1888–90; John Whitson 1890–91; R. Hunter Craig 1891–95; Supplies 1895–99; James W. Gillies 1899–1905; George A.E. Walker 1908–12; Charles Derry 1916–23; James Anderson 1923–26; Alexander R. Sparke 1939–42; John H. Carlin from 1942; William Kitching 1953–58; Idris J. Vaughan 1965–71; . . . .

Newcastleton Free Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-free-kirk) n. Free Church in Newcastleton, founded in 1850. Unlike other Free Churches, this was started following a dispute in the United

Hope was there and ‘Newharrot’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with John Ferguson as tenant and owner of 4 horses. It was also ‘Newharrot’ in 1821 when William Crozier was there.

New Heidshaw (new-heed-shaw) n. farm just outside Ashkirk village, on the Woll Rig road, and on the opposite side of the Headshaw Burn from Headshaw itself. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1709. George Kyle was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘newheadshaw’ in 1790; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

the new hew (thu-new-hew) n., arch. the appearance of newness, fresh look – ‘...composed of ee plus oo – a combination twice noted in our expression ‘the new hew’ (= the appearance of newness)’ [ECS], ‘The new hew’s off that wax-claith aareddies; it’s aa raateet wui tha taectacks on eer shuin’ [ECS] (note the pronunciation with the diphthongal ee-oo).

Newhouse (new-hooz) n. Newhouse, former lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, once home of a branch of the Riddell family. Thomas Knox, George Knox and James Hill were there in 1694. Walter Riddell ‘of Newhous’ is also recorded separately, paying tax on 4 hearths, as well as having a gardener there. Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse paid the land tax there in 1811, when it was valued at £486. It was sold by Chatto and his son John to Mark Sprot of Riddell. There is still a farm there (it is ‘Newhous’ in 1694).

Newhouse (new-hooz) n. Newhouse, former farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, just to the west of Ettrickbridge. This may be where Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, was in 1617 when she complained that a group of supporters of Walter Scott of Harden undermined the walls of the house, causing it to fall. The hill ‘Newhouse Kip’ is marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map (labelled as ‘Newhouses’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newhooses (new-hoo-seez, -how-seez) n. Newhouses, farm just east of Newton (‘the Nitton’). The modern farmhouse probably occupies the site of new houses built there in the 17th century, probably to replace Alton. The Taylor family were long farmers there. William Potts and his family lived there in 1841 and George Thomson farmed 156 acres there in 1851. There is an ancient earthwork about 200 m to the north-west of the farm. It lies on a ridge and consists of a bank and ditch enclosing an area about 30 m by 40 m, best preserved on the south-west and with a road through the middle (the name first appears in the 1690s).

Newlands (new-lindz) n. farm and surrounding area on the road between Hassendean and Lilliesleaf, adjacent to Huntlaw. It was inherited by Ralph ‘de Neulandis’ from his deceased father William in 1440. It was formerly in Hassendean parish, but moved to Minto in 1690. Walter Davidson was tenant there in 1632 when he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning. David Scott in Newlands is recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Belses. It was farmed by Davids- sons in most of the 17th century. David Davidson of Newlands paid tax on £200 of land in 1663. The Marquess of Douglas paid the land tax on £80 there in 1678. Andrew Lamb was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. William Halliwell was there in 1694. By 1788 it was owned by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. Thomas Laidlaw was farmer there in 1797 and William Nichol in the mid-19th century. It was vlaued at £80 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A drove road used to pass near here. It may also have been referred to as ‘Howlands’.

Newlands (new-lindz) n. farm on the eastern side of the Hermitage valley, roughly opposite Netherraw. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it was combined with Shaws (to the north), the farms together covering 245 acres, bounded by Roughley, Cleuchhead, Toftholm, Nether Raw and Millburnholm and including some land on the west side of the river; the farmhouse at that time is shown much further away from the river than the modern one and there are woods also shown, including young alders, between the farmhouses. George F. Armstrong was gamekeeper there in 1851 and Hugh Johnstone in the 1860s. It was turned into a shooting lodge in the early 20th century. Newlands Plantation is just to the east.

Newlands (new-lindz) n. James (16th C.) servant of James Stewart of Wells. In 1592 his master complained that while ploughing at Wells, he was attacked by John, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule, who ‘boisted [threatened] and minessed [menaced] him and shoirit him for his lyffe, and cheisit him fra the said pleuch’, later threatening to burn his crops and oxen and thereby Newlands Burn (new-lindz-burn) n. stream that rises near Hassendean Common, running past Huntlaw and Newlands farms to join the Huntlaw Burn.

New Licht (new-licht) adj., arch. relating to the more liberal faction within the Scottish Presbyterian Church, particularly among the Secessionists, those from the Burgher and Anti-Burgher sides combining into the United Secession Church in 1820 – ‘They thought to give the Deil a fricht Wi’ haudin up the torch ‘New Licht’. . .’ [DA].

New Mains (new-mänz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. William Douglas was there in 1716.

New Mill (new-mil) n. farm a few miles south of Hawick on the Slitrig, once the site of a corn-mill on the river. It is sometimes called ‘Newmills on Slitrig’ to distinguish it from Newmills on Teviot. There is a ford here, which was once used as part of a drove road. William Turnbull was miller in 1666. Lancelot Aitchison was tenant in 1694. Hugh Elliot was smith there in 1672. William Whillans was there in 1729. Robert Thomson was there in the 1780s. Robert Thomson and Thomas Borthwick were there in 1797. James Reid was miller in 1841. The weir for the mill was damaged in the 1846 flood. Charles Mitchell was farmer in 1852, Thomas Turnbull in the 1850s and 60s, John Richardson in the late 19th century, Robert Turnbull around 1900, followed by his son Walter Turnbull. The Curds and Cream (meaning the former name for ‘Newmill Cottages’ or ‘Railway Cottages’ (sometimes referred to as ‘Newmill Damfit’ or ‘Railway Cottages’ (sometimes ‘Newmills’; it is ‘Newmilne of Slitrig’ in 1666, ‘Newmilne’ in 1694 and ‘Newmiln’ in 1797).

Newmill Haa (new-mil-haw) n. village hall in Newmill-on-Teviot.

Newmill on Slitrig (new-mil-on-sli’-reg) n. name sometimes used for New Mill to distinguish it from Newmills on Teviot.

Newmill Schuil (new-mil-skil) n. former small school in Newmill. It was established by the heritors of Hawick Parish in 1804. There were 40 pupils there in 1837. David Laiddlaw was schoolmaster from 1837.

the New Road (thu-new-röd) n. despite not being new for almost 200 hundred years, the name is still in use! It was built in 1815 and fully opened in 1816 as the new turnpike road from the Sandbed to Goldielands and on to Carlisle or the Borthwick, alongside the Teviot. It replaced the old road that went via the Loan, the Lumbuck and Martinshouse. The toll bar (Wester Toll) was situated outside the present High School. To provide access from the Sandbed, some houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished. The first part, along which houses were built, was named Buccleuch Street in 1815, while the remaining part within the town boundaries was named Buccleuch Road in 1905 – ‘How mich I come to the auld toon Sall I the New Road spurn, And glint the taps o’ the lang lums Frae the brow o’ Howdenburn?’ [WL].

The New Statistical Account (the New Statistical Account of Scotland), published 1834–45 as a follow-up to the original (sometimes called ‘Old’) ‘Statistical Account of Scotland’ (1791–92). It was a description of each parish in the nation, largely written by the local ministers, but also drawing upon the knowledge of schoolmasters and doctors. Roxburghshire is covered in the 3rd volume, with the entries mostly written in 1834–7 and published in 1841. It represents a valuable snapshot at that period, as well as providing many anecdotal pieces of information that are not otherwise recorded.

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, just to the east of Newton. An old quarry and a well are marked just to the north on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. William Taylor was farmer there in 1841 and William Pringle in 1851.

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. village about a mile east of Melrose, which is the site of a large Roman fort, also called Trimontium, and houses the Trimontium Museum. An iron meteorite was found here in 1827 (sometimes ‘Newsteads’; the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘the new place’ and is first recorded about 1540).

Newton (new’-, ni’-in) n. farm on the A7 on the Heights just to the north of Hawick, usually known as the Nitton. This is essentially the same place known as ‘Chamberlain Newton’ from early times. The ‘Chamberlain’ probably comes from Walter Berkeley, an owner in the late 12th century who was Chamberlain of Scotland to William the Lion. The ‘new’ part of the name thus comes from even earlier than this! The grant of the lands to Berkeley by William the Lion was some time in the period 1173–82. The lands later passed to the Grundy family, who probably gave their name to Groundistone. Robert Grundy ‘de Neuton’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. There were Scotts of Newton recorded in the 16th to 18th centuries. Cottars living there in 1694 were Hector Shiel, John Taylor and Janet Brown. William Lamb was living there in 1688. Thomas Nichol was recorded there in 1721, William Scott in 1727, John Scott in 1733 and Walter of Newton in 1738. Robert Smith was farmer there in the 1760s. George Haliburton is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The owner recorded in 1811 was William Irvine, when it was valued at £238. John Oliver was a retired farmer there in 1841 and Janet Irvine farmed 383 acres there in 1851. Walter Scott was farmer in the 1860s (the name probably derives from Old English ‘niw tun’, meaning ‘the new farm’; it was ‘Neutun’ in the 1170s, and was also sometimes ‘Neutoun’, ‘Newtoun’ or ‘Newtone’; see also Chamberlain Newton).

Newton (new’-, ni’-in) n. former farm in the Slitrig valley just to the west of Stobs. Newton Cottage is still marked on the Ordnance Surveys map. Newton Hill to the south-west has some settlements on it. In 1622 the lands of Over and Nether Swinstead were among those sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; they were described as ‘commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newton’, suggesting that Newton was once part of Swinstead. James Best, John Hislop and Adam Hislop were there in 1694. William Scott and John Beattie and George Pott were there in the early 1700s. For a few years until 1779 it was farmed (along with Whitehillbrae) by James Sibbald, who later became a publisher in Edinburgh. In 1779 it was valued (along with Whitehillbrae) at £455 7s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Elliott of Stobs estate. John Riddell was farmer there in at least 1786–89 and George Riddell was also there in 1787. William Cochrane was farmer there in 1797. The owner recorded in 1811 was William Irvine, when it was valued at £238. John Oliver was a retired farmer there in 1841 and Janet Irvine farmed 383 acres there in 1851. Walter Scott was farmer in the 1860s (the name probably derives from Old English ‘niw tun’, meaning ‘the new farm’; it was ‘Neutun’ in the 1170s, and was also sometimes ‘Neutoun’, ‘Newtoun’ or ‘Newtone’; see also Chamberlain Newton).

Newton (new’-, ni’-in) n. hamlet and farm on the right bank of the Teviot, on the A698 about midway between Denholm and Cleikum Inn, part of the Parish of Bedrule. It was referred to as the ‘ten pound’ land in the 16th century when owned by Grahamslaw of Newton. Adam Grahamslaw had sasine for the lands in 1504. Adam Grahamslaw of Newton had a charter for the lands in 1531 and John Grahamslaw sold them to Robert Kerr of Ancrum and Woodhead (who married his daughter Helen) in 1586. The ‘procuratory of resignation’ of 1531 records the names of the 16 tenants on the lands at that time. It was listed among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. There was a feud between the Grahamslaws of Little Newton and Turnbuls in Rulewater in the early years of the 17th century. This resulted in the 1601 death of 6 Grahamslaw brothers, probably all sons of John Grahamslaw of Newton. The farm at that time belonged to Robert Kerr and his wife Helen Grahamslaw, sister of the murdered men. The Kerrs of Newton held the lands through the 17th century. When inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1639 the mill was described as recently built and the lands were valued at 12 pounds, 6 shillings and 4 pence. The Laird of Newton’s lands, including the mill, were valued at £853 6s 8d in 1643, 1663 and 1678. The farms of the Laird of Newton featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century. The neighbouring farm of Stirkigg was incorporated into it, around the end of the 18th century. Adam Chisholme of Newton is recorded in 1690. John Borthwick was tenant there until about 1698. Mrs. Helen Chisholme is recorded paying the tax for 17 windows there in 1748 and Dr. Andrew Wilson was taxed for 16 windows in 1753. The farm was bought by Thomas Elliot Ogilvie in about the mid-1780s and sold by William Ogilvie of Chesters to Thomas Scott of Peel in 1833. Peter Brown was tenant there in the late 18th century. There were no signs of the former peel house by the end of the 18th century, although ‘beautiful avenues of venerable trees’ remained. The farm once had a corn or threshing mill, which at the end of the 18th century was ‘scarcely discernible’ because of floods. There was later a saw mill there, powered through a mill pond to the south. The mansion house was demolished sometime before 1845 and a new house built. The Robson-Scott family lived here from the mid-19th century and it was inherited from them by a cousin, Robert Lang. The farm was sold in 1982, with the 1100 acres being broken up. The former tower house here is marked by a stony mound in a field between the main part of Newton farm and the A698. A ‘perforated stone macehead’ found here is in Hawick Museum, as well as 2 other worked stones, one hemispherical and one conical, and also a 13th century bronze skillet, which was ploughed up in 1964. The Laird of these lands (probably Kerr) is referred to in a version of the ballad ‘Raid of the Redeswire’ – ‘Gude Ederstane was not to lack, Wi’ Kirkton, Newton, noblemen’ (the name derives simply from the Old English for ‘new farm’; it is ‘Newton’ in 1531, ‘Nutone’ in 1548/9, ‘Newton de Badralle’ in 1586, ‘Nuttoun’ in 1642 and ‘Newton’ in 1643; it is ‘Neutoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newton (new’-in) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum de Newtoune’ in 1426 when he was on the inquest for inheritance of the lands of Elirg, along with many other local men. In 1429/30 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. Probably the same man was among the witnesses for the transfer of Heap from the Langlands’ to the Scotts, carried out at St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1431. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Vicar of Hawick, listed as first witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He was recorded there as ‘Alexandro Newton vicario de Hawik’, immediately followed by ‘Roberto Luderdall cappellano’. So he was clearly the ‘Vicar’ (presumably meaning he held the vicarge teinds), with ‘Luderdaill’ being an additional Chaplain of some sort. He was probably replaced by William Cunningham, recorded as Parson in 1519/20. Archibald of that Ilk (15th C.) Sheriff-Depute of Selkirkshire. He was on a ‘retour’ panel in 1446/7 for Ker of Altonburn. He was also a member of the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. He was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1455 in relation to the Barony of Cessford. In 1463 he was ‘Archibald of Newton of Dalcobe’ when he retourred Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. He was also a member of the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5; he is recorded there as ‘Archibald Newton of that ilke’. Fenwick (19th C.) draper from Falstone in Northumberland, in business with his brother Robert. He sold his wares from a travelling cart, being a frequent visitor to Liddesdale before the era of the motor car. He can be seen as an old man with his horse and cart in a photograph from 1890. George (d.c.1500) probably tenant at Synton. He was killed along with George Cavers during a raid on Synton, when 180 cows, 20 horses and other goods were stolen by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, tenant in Stirches.
Scott had a remission for these crimes in 1502. James (15th C.) Rector of Bedrule, recorded in 1468 in a document for the Homes of that Ik. He is also recorded as Rector of ‘Bothrule’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1479 in connection with an altar to St. Kentigern (or St. Mungo) dedicated in Jedburgh Kirk (i.e. the Abbey) to which he allowed ‘10 merks’ from annual rent of 2 tenements in Jedburgh. Presumably the same man was witness to a document in 1478 outlining rights of David Scott of Branhólme within Selkirk; he is referred to there as ‘dean of Tevadale’. Probably the same man is also recorded as Dean of Teviotdale in 1488/9 in a document where the priest of Hassendean renounces fees to the Abbot of Melrose. He was still Rector of Bedrule and ‘commissario Thevidalie’ in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. James of Dalcoif (15th/16th C.) probably son of Archibald, who he succeeded in 1481. He is referred to as ‘of Dalcoif’ in 1487 when he sold the lands of Boonraw to Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1494 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine; he was listed as ‘Jacobum Newtoun de Dawcofe’. In 1503 he presented John Wilson as suitor for his lands of Cessford Mains at the Justice-aire. In 1504/5 probably the same James ‘of Dalcoif’ had a letter of ‘procuratory’ to his superior, Patrick Earl of Bothwell, to sell the lands of Boonraw from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlemas to Robert Scott of Stirches. In 1505 he was mentioned as former owner of Boonraw in a charter to Robert Scott of Stirches. He was probably succeeded by another James of Dalcoif. The family also owned lands at Newton in Lauderdale. James (15th/16th C.) apparently tenant of Synton when Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was accused of stealing 200 cows and 80 horses there in 1502. He also acted as surety for Turnbull in his remission for several crimes. He could have been the same man as James of Dalcoif. Janet (15th/16th C.) wife of Adam Ker in ‘St. Helen’s Shaw’. In 1537 she had the tenants of James Ker of Mersington and others removed from her lands of Dalcoif, Newton and Cessford Mains. She is also recorded in 1539/40 as ‘lady of Dalcoif’ (i.e. Dalcoif). Along with her (presumably second) husband Adam Ker, she had to give up the non-entries of lands in Town Yetholm to Gilbert Ker of Primside and his mother Marion Pringle. As heiress of Dalcoif (in Berwickshire) she inherited the lands in 1539 and resigned them to her son Thomas Ker in 1543. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘frater vicarius de Selkirk’, i.e. brother of the Vicar of Selkirk. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire (formerly spelled ‘Newtoun’, ‘Newtoune’, etc.).

Newton Don (new’-in-don) n. mansion near Nenthorn, north-west of Kelso, built 1817–20 by Robert Smirke in neo-classical style for Sir Alexander Don, 6th Baronet. The original landscaping and furnishings were quite elaborate. The estate was much diminished to pay off Sir Alexander’s debts and the rest sold in 1847 to Charles Balfour. The estate was connected with the Norman family of Morville, then Newtons, Hepburns, Kers and others, before being acquired by Alexander Don in the mid-17th century, the name then changing to Newton Don.

Newtongrange (new’-in-grainj) n. coal-mining town on the A7 towards Edinburgh, and former station on the Waverley Line.

Newtonhaugh (new’-in-hawch) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, presumably a flat piece of land between Newton and the Teviot. It is recorded in 1666 that Thomas Rutherford was served heir to these lands, which had belonged to his father, John of Knowesouth.

Newton Hill (new’-in-hil) n. small hill between Stobs and Barnes Loch, being the north-eastern spur of White Knowe. There are the remains of two ancient settlements there. The western one measured about 100 m by 50 m and contains signs of at least 11 hut circles. However, it has been disturbed when the ground was used for military training. The eastern site is about 60 m by 40 m and is a fortified settlement, with some interior hut circles, and is still quite well preserved. There are also 2 linear earthworks crossing near the summit, from south-east to north-west. Alexander Michie first described these, suggesting a boundary connection with Gibby’s Cleuch; it is unclear how old they are, or whether they represent separate phases of construction over an extended period.

Newton Hill (new’-in-hil) n. small hill near the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. It was also the name for a piece of land that was part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Newton Mains (new-tin-mâinz) n. former farmstead adjacent to Newton farm in Wilton Parish. William Elliot and his family lived there in 1841, while the Lintons were there in 1851 (also written ‘Newtonmains’).
Newton Mill (new-tin-mil) n. former mill in Bedrule Parish, associated with the lands of Newton. This was once a corn mill, which at the end of the 18th century was ‘scarcely discernible’ because of floods. It was later the location for a saw mill, powered through a mill pond to the south. The mill was among the lands held by the Laird of Newton in 1643, valued at £133 6s 8d and was owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters in 1788.

Newton Moor (new-tin-moor) n. former name for the moor near Newton in Bedrule Parish. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

Newton Muir (new-tin-mewr) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably on Groundstone Heights. Agricultural labourer Thomas Hume and family were there in 1841, and it was abandoned in the 1850s.

Newton Pond (new-tin-pond) n. pond to the south of Newton farm in Bedrule Parish. It was formerly used to drive a threshing mill on the farm. Another pond to the southwest is labelled ‘Newton Pond’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and is now ‘Monks Pond’ on maps. There was once a tradition that it was originally built as a fish pond by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The 1837 article in the New Statistical Account suggests it was fed by the Lady’s Well, but this seems to be confounding the pond with the Ladies’ Well much further down the Ruecastle Burn, near Knowesouth.

Newton Toor (new'-in-toor) n. former tower near Ruecastle in Bedrule parish, burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. This is presumably an early version of the house at Newton.

Newton Wud (new-in-wud) n. name for wood near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Newtoon (new-toon) n. another name for Newtown St. Boswells.

Newtown Mill (new-town-mil) n. name for Newmill in the 16th century (also ‘Newtonne Milne’ and other variants; this may be the ‘Newtoun’ marked on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, although that geography is confused and the one above Stobs may also be meant).

Newtown St. Boswells (new-town-sin’-bo-zulz) n. town situated on the Bowden Burn, and dating from at least 1654 (so not so new!). It really developed as a railway town on the Waverley Line and as a market centre close to St. Boswells’ Green. The modern Roxburghshire County Council offices were built here in 1966–68. From 1975–1996 this was the administrative centre for the Borders Regional Council, and is now the centre for the Scottish Borders Council. Population (1991) 1,108.

New Westgate Haa (new-west-gā'-haw) n. house in Denholm, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at the north end of the Canongate.

New Woll (new-wol) n. farm south-west of the original Woll. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, and so has been ‘new’ for a while now. The house is part of the golf course, and is rentable as self-catering accommodation. Francis Scott was tenant there in 1731, William Fowler was there in 1788 and John Sprot was there at the end of the 18th century (it is ‘New Wool’ in 1731 and ‘New-wool’ in 1788).

the New Yairds (thin-new-yärzdz) n. name used in Denholm for the plots of lands feu’d around the Green after being augmented in 1836. These comprised the original 8 3/4 acres of the ‘auld yairds’, plus the new approximately 6 acres, split among 60 people. Some feus were subdivided, and 2 were appropriated for the school and schoolmaster’s house and to the road to Hassendean.

New Year (new-yeer) n. a sum of money given to children at the New Year, or a drink offered to a visitor at the beginning of the year – ‘...But this time aw’ll shake ee quite rigid Aw wad like ma New Year tae be tei’ [AY] (cf. the older the New Eer and also cf. common ridin).

next efter (next-ef-tur) adv., arch. next in time, next in order – ‘...within the terme of a zere next efter folowand that it be made knawin ...’ [SB1470].

neycht see nicht
neyr (när) adj., arch. near, especially applied to kinship – ‘The said Arche Armstrong is my neyr cowsein, and my wyfis brother sone’ [SB1587] (cf. ner).

nez (nez) n., poet. the nose – ‘But aye he helde his face asyde; And aye his nez did squeeze . . .’ [JTe] (used jocularly).

Ng (ing) n. Irene from Singapore, in 2015 she moved to Hassendeanburn with her husband Gordon Berry. She worked as a journalist and was a member of the Singapore Parliament. She wrote ‘The Singapore Lion’. Her Japanese garden at Hassendeanburn was featured on the BBC programme ‘Gardeners’ World’.

-ni (ni, nu, na) adv. not, generally as part of a contraction, such as ‘canni’, ‘hevni’, ‘wunni’ (this is -nae in much of the rest of Scotland, and sometimes spelled that way locally, even when the ni pronunciation is usually meant; H.S. Riddell uses ‘-na’.

nibbie (ni-bee) n., arch. a walking stick or shepherd’s crook, usually made from a natural branch – ‘Gin I get hand o’ my nibbie, I’d reesle your riggin for ye’ [JoJ], ‘Ane wi’ his nibbie cleeks a lass, An’ makes her o’erlins tum’le’ [JoHa], ‘Two or three shepherds had to leave their places and use their nibbies unmercifully …’ [RJR], ‘… an’ the auld brute struck the puir naturel wi’ his nibbie, and sic a crack’ [JEDM], ‘A’ve ma bigcoat an ma nibbie an a guid perr o tacketty shuin, so it mae rain at, for ochts A care!’ [ECS], ‘…marching in front of the Saxhorn Band, waving his ‘nibbie’ like a pipe-major’ [JTu], ‘… and I’d nothing to do but grab a nibbie or loup on a bike and see them for myself’ [DH].

nibbie-stick (ni-bee-stik) n., arch. a walking stick, particularly one with a hooked head, a shepherd’s crook – ‘I’ll rax me doun my nibbie stick …’ [WL], ‘Now, a nibbie-stick’s no’ juist another name for a walkin’-stick …’ [DH], ‘A kind o ice hockey yaisin nibbie sticks was also played’ [IW].

nibble (ni-bul) v., arch. to fidget, fiddle with the fingers, n., arch. a bargain, stroke of luck – ‘…an A gien um a thripny-bit. Sic a nibble for um!’ [ECS], ‘Look sic a nibble A’ve gotten!’ [ECS].

nobody (nib-dee, ni-bo-dee) n. nobody – ‘nobody kens where they er ony mair’ (note that the ‘o’ tends not to be pronounced; cf. naebody).

nichtour (nich-boor) n., arch. neighbour, fellow townsman – ‘…either in his nichtour’s corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings …’ [BR1640], ‘… with power to his said nichtour that aught the ground whereupon it standis, to cast downe the said dyck, and tak it away’ [BR1640].

Nichol (ni-kul, ni-kol) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was most likely the ‘Ade nichol in dennum’ who was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been closely related to James in Denholm, who was also recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. Probably the same Adam was one of the bailies appointed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1512 in order to give sasine of the lands of Denholm to William Cranston; his name appears to be given as ‘Ade Nicholo’. Adam (d.1626) resident of Cavers Parish. A headstone in the old kirkyard commemorates the death of him and his wife Margaret Smith on the same day. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same resident of Denholm married Janet Turnbull in 1708. Their children included probably half of these: John (b.1708); Margaret (b.1708); Margaret (b.1710); James (b.1711); Bessie (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Adam (b.1714); Andrew (b.1716); John (b.1716); William (b.1717); Adam (b.1719); Jane (b.1719); John (b.1721); Isabel (b.1724). Adam (18th C.) prehaps son of the earlier Adam. He was resident in Denholm in 1741 and 1742. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1741); and Robert (b.1742). Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1793. He married Jane Scoon in Robertson in 1792 and their children included James (b.1793) and Beatrix (b.1796). Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse at Greenbank in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Adam (b.1769/70) farmer at Tandlaw in Wilton Parish. He was already a widower by 1841. In 1851 he was farming 200 acres, with the farm being run by his son John. Adam (b.1800) born in Newcastle, he lived in Robertson Parish. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and a shepherd at Milston Shankfoot in 1851 and 1861. He married Betty Graham (from Cumberland) and their children included: Helen; Walter; Thomas; Andrew; Jane; James; and Robert. Adam (1818/19–70) mason in Newcastle, son of John. His wife was Jessie Rutherford, who died in 1891, aged 71. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam (b.1825/6–78) son of Robert and Isabella Glendinning, he was born in Castleton Parish. He lived at Dryden with his parents and was shepherd at Pin glehole in 1861. He married Esther, daughter of William Hardie and Violet Douglas. Their children included: Violet (1859–1931), who married farmer William Steele; Isabella (1861–78); Christian (1864–89); Margaret (1865–1930), who married Michael Anderson Grieve; Elizabeth (1868–1937), who worked as a nurse; and Robert (1869–1937), draper who moved to Fulham. Agnes (17th C.) tenant at Binks in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (18th C.) resident at Threephead in 1775 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) cooper who was listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Robson, and she died in 1787. Their children included: James (b.1777); Margaret (b.1773), baptised in Wilton; James (again, b.1785); and Jane (b.1785). He may also be the Alexander who married Margaret Gledstains in 1788. His son Walter died in 1801. He is probably also the cooper at Crumhaugh Hill whose wife died in 1824. Alexander Grieve (19th/20th C.) resident of Teviothead. In 1885 he married Agnes Purdom Scott, daughter of Robert Scott and Mary Purdom. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Synton Mill, at the same time as Thomas. They are mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Denholm. In 1684 he was charged at a court in Jedburgh with not attending his parish church for a year and fined a year’s rental, corresponding to £78 Scots. Andrew (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Thomas Thomson. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in Blackhall. In 1758 he was among parishioners in Hobkirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Trow Knowes. He had a house built at Myreslawgreen in about 1879. Charles (b.1818/9) from Perth, he was a plasterer in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed on Wilton Path. In 1851 he is recorded as a master plasterer on Ladylaw Place, employing 8 men. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella and Christian. Christopher (19th/20th C.) grocery assistant in Hawick who was known for his efforts at poetry, much of it privately published in pamphlet form. He has been described as Hawick’s answer to William McGonagal. An example of his verse is: ‘We started off for Edinburgh By the twenty-past-ten train: When we got into the city It was pouring down with rain’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (d.1787) housekeeper for merchant William Oliver (i.e. ‘Auld Cash’). She died in Hawick. Elizabeth (18th C.) cook at Branholme in 1785, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Francis (18th C.) resident of Abbtrule Parish in 1724 when he married Margaret Wilson in Roberton Parish. Isobel (b.1726), baptised in Hobkirk Parish, may have been their daughter. Francis (18th C.) resident of Harwood Mill. His son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. He could be the Francis who married Margaret Rae in 1732 and whose other children included Thomas (b.1740). He may be the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Wilson. Francis (b.1775) labourer at Tweedbank. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. Francis (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Telfer and their children included: Thomas (b.1800); Adam (b.1803); James (b.1805); Agnes (b.1807); Helen (b.1809); and Betty (b.1812). Francis (d.1868) carter in Liddesdale, probably son of John and Mary Ogilvie. He sold his goods in a roup to pay passage for him and his family to emigrate to Canada in 1833. They sailed to New York on the Annawan, then on to Westminster Township (now London, Ontario). He married Janet Nichol (1793–1866) and their children included Elizabeth (1821–23), John (1823–1910), Thomas (b.c.1825), Francis (1827–1907), Mary (1830–64), Jane (b.c.1832), Adam (1834–1920) and William (b.c.1837). He is buried in the family cemetery at Dingman Creek, Ontario. George (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 as the King’s shepherd in Bellendean. He was paid £3 6s 8d for 5 bolls of grain. George (16th C.) recorded in the will of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, when he was tenant farmer at Bellendean. He could be related to Simon and William who farmed at Buccleuch. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1648 his daughter Helen was baptised, who was conceived in fornication with Agnes ‘Junck’. The witnesses were Thomas and James. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Hislop. Their children included William (b.1650) and Jean (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were John Clerk and Adam Hislop (probably a relative of his wife). George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Elliot and their son James was baptised in 1671. George (17th C.) resident at Sundhope in 1765 in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the George, married to Bessie Elliot, whose children born in Hawick Parish included: James (b.1671); Bessie (b.1673); and William (b.1681). George (1655/6–1841) tenant farmer at Phillhope, probably son of John, tenant in Craik. In 1841 he was recorded there with his wife, 4 children, a labourer and 2 female servants. In 1820 (late in life) he married Ann Burnet, who died in 1879, aged 79. Their children included: John (1820–70), who died at

Philhope; Isabella (b.1822); James (b.1823); and William (1826–1902), also died at Philhope. He is buried in Borthwick Waas and may have been son of John (1717/8–92), who is in the adjacent burial plot. George ‘Geordie’ (d.1874) resident of the Rule valley. He carried the post from Bunchester to Chesters, but gave up in 1873 due to ill-health. He died at the Causeyfoot. Helen (17th/18th C.) resident of Greenholm in Castleton Parish. In 1699 she was reported to the Session for blasphemy, specifically saying ‘the Lord had broken His promise’ for giving them such a bad harvest; she had to ‘stand in sackcloth one day publicly upon the place of repentance’. Ian ‘Moose’, Cornet in 1984, he has also been 1514 Club President. His son Ross was Cornet in 2012. J. (18th/19th C.) hosier in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in denu’, which probably meant Denholm. He may have been related to Adam, who was also listed in 1493. He was also cited at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He may have been closely related to Adam in Denholm, who was also recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Hislop. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 40 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry. He may be related to Patrick, who was at Lairhope at the same time. He was absolved of the crime, after denying it on oath. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1651); and James (b.1656). William (b.1653), son of James and Helen ‘Paterson’ was probably a child of the same couple. The witnesses in 1651 were William Anderson and Simon Nichol (who were probably related to him and his wife) and in 1656 were Walter and Robert Nichol. James (17th C.) leased the farm of Todshawhill in 1671. He may be the witness (along with Robert) for a baptism for James Richardson at Howcleuch in 1683. Perhaps the same James was resident of Broadhaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) living at Easter Essenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Turn in Kirkton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1720. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chapel- hill in 1732. His unnamed child was baptised in 1732. Other children included William (b.1730), Agnes (b.1734) and James (b.1735). He may be the James who married Margaret in 1729. James (1715/6–76) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1776, aged 45. Their children included Elizabeth Mary (d.1776), Robert (d.1782) and Archibald (d.1779). He and his wife died at Shaws and are buried in Castleton. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Margaret Beattie and their children included: James (b.1766); James ‘Pistols’ (d.1778) married Margaret Scott, who died in Hawick in 1778. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Jane (b.1736); Mary (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1743). He died in 1778, a few months before his wife, with his nickname given in the Parish record. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Martha Hislop (or ‘Hazelhop’) and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1762. The witnesses were Robert Laidlaw in Falnash and James ‘Collur’. James (18th C.) recorded at Outerside in 1762 when his son John was baptised and at Outerside in 1765 when his son George was baptised. He is probably different from the James recorded at Chapelhill in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded at Chapelhill in 1764 and 1765 when his son John and daughter Jean were baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the James recorded at Higheasters in 1772 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the James (d.1792) commemorated at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he is recorded living at Branxholme Woodfoot. He married Helen Turnbull in 1760. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Mary (b.1761); James (b.1763); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Andrew Turner. Perhaps the same James was listed at Muirsind in Wilton Parish in 1791 when he paid the Cart Tax. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He married Christian Hart and their children included: Betty (b.1767), baptised in Wilton; and James (b.1772) and Janet (b.1775), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1772 were James Murray and James Hart. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Elizabeth Renwick in 1787. James (1791–1875) born in Lilliesleaf, son of John. He was an agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his family at Borthwickshiels Lodge, and in 1861 they were living at 4 Orrock Place. He married Elizabeth (1794–1881), daughter of John Cavers and Elizabeth Hislop; she died at

Craik. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Jane (b.1820–63), who married William Renwick and died in Hawick; Christian (b.1822); Joan (b.1824); John (b.1827); Barbara Pott (b.1829); Walter (b.1831); Williamina (or ‘Mina’, b.1833), who married George Nichol; and Jemima (b.1836). He died at ‘Wheathaugh’ and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) baker of Hawick, recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. James (d. bef. 1841) resident of Castleton Parish. His widow and son Adam were living at about 14 North Hermitage Street in 184. He married Janet Wells and their children included: Jean (b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); John (b.1812); James (b.1813); David (b.1816); Francis (b.1818); Helen (b.1820); Adam (b.1822); and Sarah (b.1826). James (1787/8–1866) carter in Newcastleton. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 26 Langholm Street. He ran a cart to Langholm twice a week in the 1850s. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Burnet from Hawick, who died in 1861, aged 73. Their children included: John (1809/10–16); William (1812–43), who married Janet Mitchellhill; James (1814–83), who married Jane Murray; Minnie (b.1816); John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on 1709 were Walter Nixon, tenant in Hawick Shiel and merchant Walter Oliver. It is possible he is the same John who was later at Allanhaugh Mill. He was living at Lairhope in 1705, and was herd-erter was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear why the baptism did not happen in Hawick, but 3 other baptisms of people from Branxholme Town happened on the same day. He may be the John who married Bessie Wilson in Hawick in 1708 and their children included: Robert (b.1709); and James (b.1710). The witnesses in 1709 were Walter Nixon, tenant in Hawick Shiel and merchant Walter Oliver. It is possible he is the same John who was later at Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Lairhope in 1705 and was herd there in 1711. He married Esther Armstrong in Hawick in 1704 and their children included: Robert (b.1705), Janet (b.1705) and Thomas (b.1714). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married firstly Jean Michie (d.1838) and secondly Margaret Scott (d.1870). He died at the age of 75 and was buried in St. Mary’s kirkyard. James ‘Jamie’ (d.1903) devoted supporter of the Saxhorn Band for almost 40 years. Although he had no musical ability himself he carried the music chest, which he described as playing the ‘Tin Box’. He worked for over 30 years in Elliot’s stocking-shop – ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI]. Janetus (19th C.) carter in Castleton. In 1832 he acknowledged that he was father of Betty Paisley’s child. His forename seems unusual. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘John Nicoll in Craikhoip’ in 1622 and 1623 when he was caution for Will Elliott in Huntlaw. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Either he is listed twice or there were 2 men with the same name at that time. John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He must surely related to Robert, who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Alemoor in 1712 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children who could be his include James (b.1705), Janet (b.1705) and Thomas (b.1714). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1709 he was servant to Robert Thomson in Newmill. He married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1708 and their children included: Robert (b.1709); and James (b.1710). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Nixon, tenant in Hawick Shiel and merchant Walter Oliver. It is possible he is the same John who was later at Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Lairhope in 1705 and was herd there in 1711. He married Esther Armstrong in Hawick in 1704 and their children included: Robert (b.1705), Janet (b.1705) and James (b.1711). The witnesses in 1711 were ‘the two James Grieves tenants in Commonside’ (and hence the child may have been named after them). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Branxholme Town in 1717 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is unclear why the baptism did not happen in Hawick, but 3 other baptisms of people from Branxholme Town happened on the same day. He may be the John who married Bessie Wilson in Hawick in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1717 and 1727. His children included Janet (b.1717) and Andrew (b.1727). Perhaps the same John was at Mabonlaw in 1723. He may be the John in Eilrig who in 1716 in Hawick Parish married Blench, daughter of James Scott, herd in Falnash. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Commonbrae in 1720. He married Janet Nichol and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1720); Janet (b.1724). The witnesses were John Chisholme, preacher at Caerlenrig and Robert Scott, tenant in Falnash. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was recorded in 1718 as both ‘workman in Allanhaugh mln’ and ‘servant in Newbigging’, when one of his children was baptised in Hawick. He may be the John whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included William (b.1716) and Walter (b.1718). The witnesses in 1718 were James Davidson and Walter Scott, both tenants in Newbigging. His son William was created a Burgess of Hawick in 1737, suggesting that this may be William (b.1716) and Walter (b.1718) the John whose children baptised in Hawick. He may be the John whose children baptised in Hawick who was resident at Priesthaugh in 1726 and 1728. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, include: Janet (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). Perhaps the same John was in Brugh in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th C.) servant in Hawick. Along with ex-Bailie Walter Graham he witnessed a baptism for carrier George Richardson in Hawick in 1741. He may have been a servant of Bailie Graham. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1735 when his son John was baptised. John (1717/8–92) tenant in Craik. He married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1815, aged 88. Their children included: William (1759/60–1807), 2nd son; John (1762–87), 3rd son; twins Betty and Margaret (b.1764); George (b.1766), probably the farmer at Philhope; and Margaret (again, b.1768). He could be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1781. His daughter Elizabeth may have married Adam Scott (from Ettrick) in 1795. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish who married Margaret Inglis. Their children included: Margaret (b.1761); and John (b.1764). Mary (b.1763), with no mother’s name given, may also be his child. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Mary Dickson in 1761 and their son John was born in 1762. He may be the same man as the father of George (b.1764), who lived at Broadlee. He was clearly separate from the contemporary John who lived at Craik. John (18th C.) barber and candlemaker in Hawick. In 1756 he married Mary Turnbull and she died in Hawick in 1787. Their children included: Robert (b.1757); and Michael (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by Bailie Robert Howison and tobacconist William (who was surely a relation). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish who married Elspeth Little. Their children included: Mary (b.1769); Elspeth (b.1772); and Janet (b.1774); and John (b.1783). Perhaps the same John, married to ‘Elizabeth Riddle’ had children Margaret (b.1779) and Elizabeth (b.1781). John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. It is said that when coming back to Hawick from Kelso with a neighbour, they decided to have a race to reach the toll-bar at Spittal-on-Rule. His horse could not take the bend and leaped over the parapet of the Rule Water bridge there. However, since the river was in flood they both escaped injury and he was rescued by the miller, to continue on his journey later the same day. An inscription ‘J.N. and his Horse’s leap’ was carved on the bridge. John (18th C.) married Grizel Graham in Castleton Parish in 1765. Their children included: Catherine (b.1766); and Janet (b.1769). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1768 his child John with Elizabeth Noble was baptised, the couple being labelled as ‘Fornicators’ and the witnesses being shoemaker Robert Elliot and smith Robert Young. John (1746/7–1819) weaver in Newcastleton. He married Mary Ogilvie, who died in 1795, aged 45. Their children included: Alexander, who died aged 12; John Little, who died in infancy; John (1790/1–1817); and Walter (1798/9–1818). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Francis (d.1868), who emigrated to Canada, may also have been his son. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Jackson and their children included: Janet (b.1784); David (b.1788); William (b.1790); Robert (b.1792); James (b.1795); John (b.1797); Helen (b.1799); Isabel (b.1802); and Betty (b.1806). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Thomson and their children included: James (b.1793); Robert (b.1795); Archibald (b.1797); Mary (*b.1800); John (b.1802); Andrew (b.1804); and Walter (b.1806). John (1762–1839) son of John, he was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was shepherd at Broadmeadows. In 1792 he was living at Meadshaw. In Roberton Parish in 1790 he married Janet Brydon, who was from Ettrick Parish; she died in 1798, aged 30. Their children included: Isobel (b.1791); and John (b.1792). He died at Todshawhill and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and mother Mary Dixon (1731/2–1807). He is probably the John, son of John, baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. John (1764/5–1842) tenant at ‘Carretrigg’ (i.e. Carewoodrig). He married Jane Jardine, who died at Eweshopelee in 1851, aged 70. Their children included: Walter (1804/5–30); and Elizabeth (1812/3–28). They are buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of John and Margaret Ingles, who are buried alongside his family. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Anderson and their children included: Margaret (b.1790); Jean (b.1792); William (b.1794); and Janet (b.1797). John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Woodburn Mill in Roberton Parish, when he owned 2 horses. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: James (1791–1875), farm worker in Roberton Parish; an unnamed daughter (b.1792); and Christian (b.1794). He is probably the John (1761/2–1828), tenant in Whinfield, who is buried at Borthwick Waas (adjacent to James, who was hence likely to be his son). He could be the John son of Walter and Betty Stoddart baptised in Hawick in 1761. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Woodburn Mill, when he owned 2 horses. He was living at Woodburn in 1800. He married Janet Cessford and their children included: John (b.1796); Betty (b.1798); William (b.1800); George (b.1802); and Janet (b.1805). John (b.c.1765) from England, he was a boot and shoe maker in Newcastleton. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was living with labourer Walter (probably his son) in the village. He may be the John who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821.

John (1775/6–1867) from Kirkandrews, he was a mason in Newcastleton. He is recorded by Pigot in 1825/6 and 1837 as a Newcastleton mason, as well as in Slater’s 1852 directory. He and William Crozier were the masons who worked on the Holm Bridge. In at least 1841–61 he was on North Hermitage Street. He married Marion Murray, who died in 1868, aged 87. Their children included: Mary (b.1804); Nancy (b.1808); Robert (b.1810); Jean (b.1812); John (1814–78), who married Mary Dodd; James; Adam (1818–70) mason in Newcastleton; Thomas; and Margaret. He is buried at Ettleton along with some of his family. John (18th/19th C.) carter in Castleton Parish. He was listed as ‘John, jun. carter, Castleton’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821; this suggests that his father was also John. He may be closely related to James, who was also a carter in Newcastleton at about the same time. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: Mary (b.1804); Alexander (b.1808); Jean (b.1810); and Nattley (b.1811). John (b.1792/3) born in Roberton Parish, he was shepherd at Billhope in Castleton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was shepherd at Blackhall in Ewesdale and he was listed as a cadger and carrier at Raesknowe in 1861. He married Margaret Hobkirk, who was born in Ashkirk Parish. His children included: John (1818–83), baptised in Roberton; and Thomas (1826/7–46). His 2 sons are buried in Borthwick Waas. John (1801/2–89) feuar in Newcastleton Townfoot. In 1861 he was living at about 34 South Hermitage Street. He was probably the John who was on the Border Union Railway Committee for Newcastleton in the 1850s, and recorded as Newcastleton Town Clerk in the 1860s. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1879, aged 71. Their children included: Janet (b.1829); Helen (b.1831); Jane (b.1833); Margaret (b.1835); Mary (b.1839); Elizabeth D. (b.1842); John (1845–1904), who died at Leeds; Agnes (b.1847); and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’, 1850/1–1926), who married a Tait and is buried at Ponteland. He and his wife kept a family register for the period 1802–54. John Pringle (1804–59) born at Hunity Hill, near Brechin, eldest of 7 children of John, farmer from Northumberland, and Jane Forbes from Aberdeen. He studied Mathematics and Physics at King’s College, Aberdeen, trained as a minister at St. Mary’s College (St. Andrews), but then turned to education. His first teaching job was at Duns. He came to Hawick in the early 1820s to teach in a school for practical education. He was master of the English (i.e. Parish) School from 1821 until the end of 1823. Here he was apparently inspired to follow an interest in astronomy by millwright Gideon Scott, and they watched a transit of Mercury in a garden at Allars Bank (probably in 1832, so he must have returned to Hawick specially for the event). He left Hawick, becoming editor of the ‘Fife Herald’, Headmaster of Cupar...

Academy and Rector of Montrose Academy, before becoming Regius Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University in 1836. He was listed in Cupar in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He regularly gave lectures on astronomy, chemistry and geology. In 1831 he married Jane Tullis (1809–50), daughter of a Cupar printer. Their eldest child John, became a Professor and writer and their youngest, Agnes, married William Jack, Professor of Mathematics at Glasgow. In 1853 he secondly married the prominent anti-slavery campaigner and reformer Elizabeth Pease, against the objections of her friends and Quaker family. He was a lifelong radical in politics, arguing for universal education. He was asked to stand as a Liberal candidate for Glasgow, and the Hungarian patriot Louis Kosuth stayed with him when he toured Britain. Although he published only 2 scientific papers (both on the Moon), he lectured extensively and published many popular books. He wrote the influential ‘Views of the architecture of the heavens: in a series of letters to a lady’ (1839) and ‘Cyclopædia of the Physical Sciences’ (1857), among other works. He was an inspiring teacher and gave popular public lectures, even travelling to the U.S.A., where he apparently influenced Edgar Allen Poe. He also returned to Hawick to give a popular lecture on Astronomy and was effusive in his praise for his former friend and inspiration, Gideon Scott. He popularised the ‘nebular hypothesis’ for the formation of the Solar System in books such as ‘Phenomena and order of the solar system’ (1838), and was the first to suggest a photographic study of sunspots. He is buried in the Grange cemetery, Edinburgh. There is a commemorative window to him at Bute Hall in Glasgow. John (b.1805/6) born in Roberton Parish, son of Adam, he was farmer at Tandlaw. In 1841 he was helping his father at Tandlaw. In 1851 he was tenant at Tandlaw, farming 200 acres and employing 5 people. He was unmarried, but living with a housekeeper and 2 servants. Perhaps the same John was farmer at Coldhouse, listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. John (b.1814/5) mason in Newcastle, son of John. In 1861 he was living on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Mary and their children included James, Margaret, John and Marion. He may be the John who married Mary Dodd in 1854. John (b.1815/6) born in Ewesdale, he was shepherd at Ewesleeshope. His wife was Mary and their children included John. In 1851 he was also living with his mother Jane. John (1818–83) baptised in Roberton Parish, son of John who was shepherd at Billhope. In 1841 he was living with his parents at Billhope. In 1851 he was shepherd at Priesthaughshiel (and recorded being born in Ashkirk Parish). In 1861 he was shepherd at Braidhaugh south of Hawick. In 1841 he married Mary Stavert (the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Castleton Parishes), who died in Hawick in 1888, aged 67. Their children included Christina, Margaret, Marion, Thomas, Janet, Isabella, Thomas (again, b.1856), Eliza (b.1858) and Mina (b.1862). He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. John (b.1819/20) born in Roberton Parish, son of George. In 1861 he was farmer at Philhope, farming about 1900 acres and employing 4 people. He was unmarried at that time, living with his mother Ann and 3 servants. John (b.c.1820) carter and farmer in Newcastleton. In 1851 and 1861 he was living on Montague Street. In 1850 he married Helen (or Ellen) Ogilvie from Hawick. Their children included Mark, James, John and Margaret. John (19th C.) married Janet Elliot, their daughter Margaret being baptised in Castleton Parish in 1847. John (19th C.) married Janet Oliver in Castleton Parish in 1841. John (1827–81) born in Hawick, son of William. He started as a journeyman warehouseman, becoming a master skinner and tanner. He ran what was probably the town’s most successful tanning and wool merchants, succeeding to the business of Andrew Ewen in Slitrig Crescent. In 1851 he was living with his mother at 56 High Street; he may have been partner in what is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘Nichael & Scott’, tanners and skinners of Punch Bowl Close. In 1861 he was at 1 Slitrig crescent and listed as a Skinner employing 12 people. He was also a farmer. He entered the Council in 1867 for Slitrig Ward and was elected a Magistrate in 1869, then became Provost 1871–74. During his Provostship Commercial Road was developed and there was the stockmaker’s strike of 1872/3. He was presented with some inscribed silver plate on his retirement, and returned to the Council in 1878/9. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, chairing the Race Committee, and being a Steward at the Races. He was also Chairman of the first School Board of Hawick, as well as being a local curler and bowler. He married Janet W. Scott (one of the ‘Whack’ Scotts), who died in 1855, aged 24. He later married Annie, daughter of butcher George Davies. Their children were William Scott (who became Provost), John, Margaret Scott (who married solicitor James Barrie),

In 1718 he married Janet also have been his child. Robert Blanch Borthwick in 1703, both being from Hawick Parish. James (b.1714) may have cut down '2 grite geist [joist] treis' from his lands of Gorrenberry. He may be related to James, who was at Hislop at the same time. He was ordered by the Privy Council to pay the Laird of Bucqueuch £10. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1634 as schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf. He is the first teacher on record there. It is possible that the same Patrick was witness in 1651 in Ashkirk Parish. Patrick (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford in Phaup was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and John Fletcher. Robert (d.1699) resident of the Teviothead area whose gravestone is there. His wife Bessie died in 1701. The names of James Nichol and Marian Scott, also engraved on the same stone, are probably his parents (assuming that they survived him).

Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John, who was also listed as a cottar there, was surely a relative. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Blanch Borthwick in 1703, both being from Hawick Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Outerside in 1712 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (b.1714) may also have been his child. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Weensland. In 1718 he married Janet Paterson in Wilton and their children included: William (b.1719), baptised in Wilton; and Francis (b.1722), John (b.1724) and Isabel (b.1726), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1726 were Henry Orrock and Dand Gray. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Bowanhill in 1726 when one of his children was baptised.Probably the same Robert was tenant in Bowanhill in 1720 when he married Isobel, daughter to the deceased Robert Thomson. Their children likely included Robert (b.1724), James (b.1726) and James (again, b.1732). Robert (1774/5–1852) born in Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Deanburnhaugh. He married Catherine (or ‘Ketty’) Wilson (1781/2–1853). Their children included: Jane (b.1806); and Robert (b.1809). He and his wife were recorded at Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851 (by which time he was a ‘Pauper’). They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Philhope according to the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 1 farm horse and 1 saddle horse at Philhope in 1797. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Ovenshank in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821.

Robert (b.c.1790) stocking maker in Denholm recorded on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living around the Canongate. He had children Andrew, Catherine, William, Jean, Nanny, Robert, Helen and Mary. Robert (1793/4–1854) from Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd at Dryden. He is recorded at Dryden in 1841 and 1851. He married Isabella Glendinning (1788/9–1852). Their children included Adam, Janet and George. His family are buried at Teviothead. Robert (b.c.1810) carter in Newcastle. The family were at about 30 North Hermitage Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Betty and their children included: Jane; Mary; Jessie; Helen; John; Betty; Agnes; Walter; Margaret; and Rubina. Robert ‘Bobby the Drummer’ (1832/3–1920) son of Elliot, he was a weaver in Newcastle, like his father. In early life he also worked as a drover, and knew the old roads well, from the Highlands to the Midlands. His nickname came from playing drums in the village band. In 1861 the family were living at about 23 South Hermitage Street. He was the last person in Newcastle to work the hand-loom, which he had in the back of his house at 12 South Hermitage Street; he wove his last plaid in 1913. Robert (b.1831/2) hosier in Denholm in the 1860s. In 1861 he was listed at about Sunnyside as a ‘wool frame knitter’. His wife was Christian and their children included Agnes and Betsy. Robert J. 'Bert' (??–??) founder of R.J. Nichol coach business in 1932. His children were: Bert, who continued the family business; Jessie; and Effie, who died young after an accident. Robert ‘Bert’ (1921–2008) son of Bert, he was born in Lothian Street. He was known as a swimmer in his youth and had a life-long love of rugby, particularly the Linden (which he captained); he also played a few games for Hawick R.F.C. He volunteered for the R.A.F. in WWII, returning to run his father’s business until 1990, driving coaches to rural areas around Hawick, as well as trips further afield. For decades the firm brought schoolchildren from outlying villages to Hawick High School. He married Jean Douglas. In 1955 tragedy struck, when 2 of their children, Robert and Sheena drowned in the Cauld. He also had children Douglas and Dorothy. Ronald Andrew ‘Ronnie’ (1960–2015) rugby player and leader of the Drums and Fifes. Son of Bill and Lydia and brother of Phil, Ian and Lindsay, he was educated at Wilton and Hawick High School and worked as a plasterer and builder. A keen rugby player at school, he went on to play prop forward over 200 times for the Linden and was a regular for the Greens in the 1980s and 1990s, playing 180 games. He also represented the South of Scotland and was capped for the Scotland ‘B’ team in 1985. A great supporter of the Common Riding, he was a member of the Drums and Fifes for 39 years, including being leader for 20 years. He also served as Chairman of the Common Riding Committee 2007–10, as well as President of the Callants’ Club and 1514 Club. He married Lynn Frost in 1981 and they had a son, also Ronnie. Known affectionately as ‘Big Ronnie’, the nickname applied to the size of his heart as much as to the stature of the man himself. A tree and ornamental tree-guard were unveiled in his memory of the man himself. A tree and ornamental tree-guard were unveiled in his memory on the Kirkwynd in 2016. Simon (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Bucleuch in 1574, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. William was also listed as tenant there, and they were probably both related to George, who was tenant at Bellendean. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) tenant of ‘Fairnyleis’ recorded in 1623. Michael Birnie in the same place was found guilty of stealing 30 sheep from there, belonging to him and his son William, along with Walter Scott of Todrig and his son Walter Scott. It is unclear if these lands were Fernielees in Rulewater, or somewhere else. Simon (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when he witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk for William Glen and for James (perhaps a relative). Simon (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1721 and Highchesters in 1725. His children, baptised in Robert, included: Francis (b.1721); and Francis (again, b.1725). Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Synton Mill. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635, when Isobel Scott (also in Synton Mill) complained about Margaret Tulie calling her a witch and a thief. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed a baptism in 1660 for James Scott (with the other witness being John Scott of Langhope). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Telfer and their children included William (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were John Scott in Ormiston and John Aitken. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Peelbraehope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. and whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1650. He might also be the Walter who married Helen ‘Bleck’ and had children Jean (b.1661) and Francis (b.1662). The witnesses in 1661 were George Walker and James Vogan. Walter (17th C.) resident at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (18th C.) resident in Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1718 and 1721. Probably the same Walter was at Eilrig in 1732 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Children, baptised in Roberton, who may be his include William (b.1715), Walter (b.1718), Margaret (b.1719), Agnes (b.1721) and Walter (b.1723). Janet (b.1744), Mary (b.1746), John (b.1748) and Robert (b.1750) may be the children of a later marriage or another Walter. Walter (18th C.) resident in Earlside in 1726 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers. Walter (18th C.) resident in Ormiston in 1730 and Deanbrae in 1733. Other children (baptised in Cavers) may have included Magdalen (b.1730), Margaret (b.1733), Mary (b.1735), Walter (b.1738), William (b.1740), John (b.1743), Adam (b.1745) and Alexander (b.1747). Walter (18th C.) resident in Todrig Mill in 1763 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1819. Their children included: Margaret (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Jane (b.1772); Jane (again, b.1775); Margaret (again, b.1776); Betty (b.1777); an unnamed son (b.1779); Joan (b.1780); Mary (b.1783); and John (b.1783). He may have been witness to a baptism in 1783 for Francis Cairns. Dr. Walter (1785–1858) son of William, he was born in Castleton Parish. His father was one of the first feuers to build in Newcastleton. He was the first mathematics teacher at Edinburgh High School. He is described by Thomas Carlyle, and in a letter from his sister Jane Carlyle. Walter (1816/7–84) shepherd in Robertson Parish, born in Castleton. In 1871 he was shepherd at Broadlee. In 1840 he married Janet, daughter of John Muir (or Moore), who died at Branxholme Braes in 1888, aged 83. Their children included: Janet (1841/2–52), who died at Tushielaw; Robert (b.1843); John (1844/5–52), who also died at Tushielaw; and Walter (1847–1878), who died at Broaddie. In 1841 he was living at Debnurnhaugh with his wife and father-in-law and in 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd at Crookwell in Ettrick Parish. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. Walter (b.1830/1) carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 4 Orrock Place with his wife Mary and daughter Jessie. William (16th C.) tenant at Bucleuch, listed in the last testament of Sir Walter of Branholme in 1574, along with Simon also in Bucleuch, as well as George in Bellendean. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Carritridge’ (probably Carewoodrig). Along with William Elliot (also in ‘Carritridge’) and several other men from the upper Borthwick and Teviotdale, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Nixon in Hawick Parish in 1678. William (17th C.) herd in Boonraw, recorded when one of his children was baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Brown, and their children included: Bessie and Agnes (b.1679); Thomas (b.1680); and Margaret (b.1682). The witnesses in 1682 were Walter Scott and Walter Sanderson. He himself witnessed a baptism for Robert Storie in Robertson parish in 1686. Perhaps the same William leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Bucleuch in 1693. Either he or a later William in Boonraw married Janet ‘Whirk’ and had a daughter Janet baptised in Wilton in 1696; the witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Ormiston. William (17th C.) resident of North Synthon in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th C.) resident of Easter Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Brighouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Graham. William (18th C.) shepherd at Teindside in 1740. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1740). He is probably the William who married Janet Scott in Wilton Parish in 1730. William (b.1742) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1740 were Walter Scott at Commonside and Thomas Elliot at Harwood. William (18th C.) son of John, tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1737. He could be the William born in Hawick Parish in 1716. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1742. The witnesses were carrier James Wilson and shoemaker Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) merchant who purchased 23 High Street from Robert Scott in 1753, and is probably responsible for the ‘All Was Others …’ plaque. He could be the William, tobacconist, who was Cornet in 1748. He is probably the tobacco merchant William who witnessed a baptism for John in 1757. He could be the William who married Janet Blaikie in Wilton Parish in 1756 and had children (baptised in Hawick), including: William (b.1758); James (b.1761); and Janet (b.1764). The witnesses in 1761 were Hector Blaikie (surely related to his wife) and John Knox and in 1764 were ‘Mr John Laurie student’ and Alexander Bunyan, officer (suggesting either that he was strongly involved with the Kirk, or that he could not find other witnesses). He could be the William who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1760. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1763 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Langside in 1769. His children included Jean (b.1769), Nelly (b.1778), James (b.1784), Thomas (b.1784) and Margaret (b.1786). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philliopeshiel in 1780 when his daughter Mary was baptised. William (18th C.) recorded as a carrier in 1767 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Thomas Waugh. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.c.1795) part of a Hawick family popularly known as ‘Ern pistols’. Originally a baker (or perhaps a tailor), he became bankrupt at the end of the 18th century and moved to London as a journeyman. It is said that when delivering bread there, a wealthy lady was struck by him, started up conversation, and offered to pay for a commission for him in the Navy. He is also said to have returned to Hawick on one occasion, when people marvelled at how he looked in uniform, and to have died later at the Nile. It is said that he was uncle of William Nichol, who was ‘Willie Brewed a Peck o’ Maut’ in the song by Burns. It is possible he was the ‘Pistols’ whose daughter Manie died in Hawick in 1800. William ‘Sweet William’ (d.1798) Hawick man whose death is recorded in the Parish register. Note that a separate William, husband of Isabel Brown, was recorded dying in the same month. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Brown in 1781 and she died in 1798. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at ‘Gib snose’ (in Wilton) on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William is listed at Pathhead when he paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791. He is probably the William, recorded at ‘Roadside’ in 1791, who married Janet Elliot and had children Janet (b.1787) and William (b.1791). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was one of the first feuars to build in Newcastleton. He married Mary Murray. He married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’) Davidson Nichol in 1873 and she died in 1898, aged 56. He secondly married Elizabeth Jane Scott, who died in 1955, aged 87. Their children included William (1874–8). They are buried at Etterleton. William Scott (1876–1932) oldest son of Provost John, he had early business training with Laing & Barrie, solicitors, then he worked in the offices of the Edinburgh Town Clerk. He also farmed at Acreknowe and Winnington Rig and later Girnwood in the Borthwick valley (which he inherited from his aunt Hannah Davies). He was secretary of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, involved in other agricultural activities and a Liberal in politics. He was councillor for Wilton Ward from 1923, and Provost 1928–31. He fought the changes brought about by the Local Government Bill of 1929, but then became Vice-Convenor of Roxburghshire County Council. He was also a keen Common Riding supporter, being Chairman of the General and Ceremonial Committees. In 1923 he married Marie Morris of London. He resigned from public life for health reasons, and died in an Edinburgh nursing home, his ashes being buried at Girnwood (formerly spelled ‘Nicall’, ‘Nicoll’, ‘Nicoll’, ‘Nichole’, ‘Nicol’, ‘Nicoile’, ‘Nicol’, ‘Nicol’, ‘Nicholl’, ‘Nickel’, ‘Nicklell’, ‘Nickoll’, ‘Nycholl’, etc.).

nicknames (nik-namz) n., pl. familiar names, sometimes shortened forms, and often descriptive in some way. At early times the only name would be what we would recognise today as a nickname, and many of these would give rise to later Christian names and surnames. However, later nicknames became almost a necessity, since so many people had the same surnames and Christian names. In 1839 the Hawick minister remarked on the particular local habit of ‘distinguishing individuals by other than the names that properly belong to them’, pointing out how the same names run in families, how the common usage of such nicknames sometimes meant that the real name might be unknown to their neighbours, and also pointing out that the names were even used in the register of deaths. William Norman Kennedy described the local propensity for nicknames in 1863: ‘some of these names exhibit internal evidence of a personal peculiarity or defect, some arose from indulgence in a particular vice or the manifestation of a rare virtue, some from a social trait or a habitual phraseology … some were named after birds of evil omen, as well as forest animals of fierce and implacable nature. Some had an appellation descriptive of bodily agility or inferring a mental qualification … some being humorous, some sensual, and others indecent. On the other hand, many of these nicknames were titular, and took their rise from the place of abode of the party named’. There are nicknames recorded very early in the area around Hawick, including: ‘Daft John’ in 1491/2; ‘Casy’, ‘Gaberlunzie’, ‘Gyde’ and ‘Tassy’ in 1493; ‘Blind John’, ‘Case’, ‘Corvis’, ‘Crack-spear’, ‘King’, ‘Siders’, ‘Slitrig’, ‘Smith’ and ‘Young Rider’ in 1494/5; ‘Crackspare’, ‘the King’ and ‘Young Rider’ in 1500; ‘Bellit Robin’, ‘Blue John’, ‘Ginkin’, ‘the Lady’, ‘Nae Guid Priest’, ‘Park’, ‘Priest’, ‘Taburner’, ‘Valance’ and ‘Wait-schod’ in 1502; ‘Bellit Andrew’, ‘Casys’, ‘Gy’ and ‘Lang John’ in 1503; ‘the Prince’ in 1510; ‘Blackhead’, ‘Braid Christopher’, ‘Geordie Go Wi Him’, ‘Laird’, ‘Lang Roger’, ‘the Lawyer’, ‘Little Roger’, ‘Merchant’, ‘Nelly’s Jock’, ‘Reid Andro’, ‘the Sheriff’ and ‘White Sark’ in 1541; ‘Helen’s Hob’ and ‘Hob’s John’ in 1561; ‘Elder Will’ in 1561/2; ‘Wait Aboot Um’ and ‘the Clerk’ in 1562; ‘Airchie Keen’, ‘Airchie’s Will’, ‘Blue Tom’, ‘Clement’s Hob’, ‘the Floor’, ‘Isone’s Robin’, ‘Mirk Hob’ and ‘Vicar’s Rob’ in 1567; ‘Airchie Fyre the Braes’, ‘Airchie’s Hob’, ‘Airchie’s Will’, ‘Airchie the Piat’, ‘Cock’s Clein’, ‘the Cowdais’, ‘David Carlin’, ‘Elder Will the Tod’, ‘the Feid’, ‘Gavin’s Jock’, ‘Gret Legs’, ‘Grey Will’, ‘Hob Mirk’, ‘Hob the Lady’, ‘John the Braid’ ‘the Laird’s Jock’, ‘Mark’s Andro’, ‘Martin’s Gib’, ‘Meggat’s Ade’, ‘Mungo’s Arthur’, ‘Ninian’s Geordie’, and ‘Wester James’ in 1705; ‘Skail the Mercat’ and ‘Heidhooze’ in 1706; ‘Duke Aitken’ and ‘Black Walter’ in 1707; ‘Young Whitegates’ in 1720; ‘the Crocodile’, ‘Little Auld Nanny’ and ‘My Lord Minto’ in 1776; ‘Black Andrew’, ‘Blinn Jean’, ‘the Chief’ and ‘Pistols’ in 1778; ‘Meldrum’ and ‘Rough Jock’ in 1787; ‘Helen and the Cuddy’ in 1800; ‘Wullie on the Wundi Sole’ and ‘Kill Drys’ in 1805; ‘Garlic Jock’ in 1806; ‘Craft’ and ‘Peggy Cheap’ in 1811; and ‘Forfar’ and ‘Pawkie’ in 1815. Such names were once much more common than today, and a huge number of 19th century examples are collected in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’.

It is important to realise that nicknames were typically employed with no offence meant or taken, and that they would most often be used to refer to a person in conversation, rather than to their face. Nicknames appear to be more common for males, but many local females examples are known. Many such names are handed down in families, often through the oldest son. Some of the names still in use today go back for several generations, and some may be even older.

nickstick (nik-stik) n., arch. a tally, specifically ‘ti loss yin’s nickstick’ is to lose count or miscalculate something, especially the time of a birth – ‘Nickstick bodie, one who proceeds exactly according to rule; as if he has had one to dine with him, he will not ask again without having a return taken, and that they would most often be used to refer to a person in conversation, rather than to their face. Nicknames appear to be more common for males, but many local females examples are known.

and 4 feet, respectively) while the others are broken into stumps. The layout is slightly oval, measuring 23 feet by 21 feet. It is believed to be early Bronze Age. It was possibly the location for the ballad ‘Barthram’s Dirge’ and is also by tradition where Lord Soulis was boiled alive in lead. On the south side of the ridge, half a mile from the stone circle, are the remains of a settlement, composed of 2 enclosures. Note there is also a ‘Nine Stane Rig’ in the Lammermuirs – ‘They shot him dead at the Nine-Stane Rig, Beside the Headless Cross, And they left him lying in his blood. Upon the moor and moss’ [T], ‘They bore him down with lances bright, But never a wound or scar had he; With hempen bands they bound him tight. Both hands and feet on the Nine-stane lee’ [JL], ‘The Nine-stanes, his kimmers, Can snirk at his game, But Cauldcleuch and Gritmuir Think black-burnan shame’ [DH] (it is marked ‘Nine Stones’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there are several places named ‘Nine Stones’ elsewhere in Scotland and England).

the 95 Bus (thu-ni-n’ee-ee-bus) n. the number of the Edinburgh to Carlisle bus service, which provides Hawick’s main public transport link with nearby cities. The number may have been chosen because it is approximately the distance between the 2 cities. The service has more recently been called the ‘X95’.

Nine-well Park (nin-wel-pawrk) n. field south of the Stonedge farmhouse in the Rule valley. It was so-called because it contains nine separate springs, which were said to never fail.

Ninian Hawick (nin-ee-in-hoik) n. a musical group based in Minneapolis, presumably near the township of Hawick, featuring John Crozier and friends. They have released one EP titled ‘Steep Steps’, in 1998, including the single ‘Scottish Rite Temple Stomp’ (apparently pronounced almost like it looks, ‘hoik’).

Nisbet

Nisbet in 1545. There is little sign of the former parish church. Samuel Rutherford, Professor of Divinity was born here in 1600 (also written ‘Nes-bit’ and other variants; the origin of the name is probably from Middle English ‘nesbit’, meaning ‘the nose bit’, after the local topography; it first occurs about 1150 as ‘Nesbet’; note that Nisbet House is near Duns).

Nisbet (niz-hi’) n. Henry (b.1833) son of William and Margaret Young. He was listed as a tailor when he joined the Royal Artillery in 1852. He became a Chelsea Pensioner in 1873. James (1785–1854) religious publisher of London, who was father-in-law of Rev. W.A. Wallace. He was a native of Kelso, and one of the principal subscribers to the erection of Kelso North Church. His publishing company, James Nisbet & Co. published most of the books of R.M. Ballantyne, who was related to the Ballantynes of Kelso. He gave 2 flagons, 8 communion cups, 4 plates and a baptismal basin to the new Free Kirk in Hawick. The cups were in continual use until 1924 and the basin was later set in a carved font. John of Nisbetfield (17th/18th C.) lawyer, who was married to Agnes Riddell, and thus assumed the lands of Bewlie. He and John Riddell of Muselee were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1707. He and his wife gave Bewlie (or perhaps half of it) to Walter Scott of Whitfield in 1713, since he had married their only daughter Agnes. Half of Bewlie was leased by him to Thomas Riddell in 1716. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cogsmill in Kirkton Parish. His children included Ann (b.1721), Robert (b.1723), Janet (b.1726) and James (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) herd in Headshaw. He is probably the William who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He could be the same William who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Carthagha Baa in 1815, and whose recollections formed part of Robert Murray’s 1863 article on James Hogg. William (1819–75) farmer from Sprouston, who moved to Hawick to become a butcher. He was one of the first Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from 1848. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a flesher on Teviot Square. In 1851 he was already at 1 Buccleuch Street, listed as a master butcher, employing 2 men. 1 Buccleuch Street was at that time was 2 separate shops. He moved to 2 Howegate in 1864. He married Agnes Story (whose sister was mother of Walter Easton of the ‘Jedburgh Gazette’), who died in 1883, aged 57. They had 3 sons, including William (b.1850, who succeeded to the butcher’s business) and Robert. They also had 4 daughters, including Isabella Douglas (b.1848, who was the first wife of J.J. Vernon) and Margaret T. He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. His wife died in Edinburgh in 1883. William (1850–1916) son of William, he followed his father into the butcher’s business at 2 Howegate. He married Elizabeth, eldest child of farmer Walter Henderson. Their children were: Margaret Henderson, a teacher at St. Mary’s Infant School; and William, a hosiery traveller in London (formerly written ‘Nizbet’).

the Nitton (thu-nî-in) n. Newton, a farm at the Heights, just north of Hawick. It may have belonged to ‘Robert Grundi de Neuton’ in the late 13th century and was later referred to as ‘Chamberlain Newton’. The original name came from it being granted to Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain to William the Lion in the late 12th century. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until that was suppressed in 1690. It was still listed as ‘Newton, or Chamberlain Newton’ in 1788 and 1811. There have been Scotts at the farm for many generations (sometimes spelled ‘Ni’ton’ and other variants; the name first occurs as ‘Cham-birlayne neutone’ in 1259, as ‘Neuton’ in the late 13th century, and commonly as ‘Chamberlain Newton’ until the 17th century).

Nitton Muir (ni-in-mewr) n. former farmstead near Newton, precise location uncertain, but presumably near the main road by the summit. The Hume family were living there in 1841. It was abandoned around the 1850s – ‘She, weared, wan the Nutton Muir, When, lo! she spied afore her, A great white glaist was stahin’ there, Joost ready to devour her’ [JoHa].

Niven (ni-vin) n. George (b.1792/3) from Liberton, he was a tanner in Hawick. He was liv- ing at about 2 Backdamgate in 1841, but in 1851 was with his nephew Walter Scott in Langholm. He was probably the first person in Hawick to receive a full baptism according to the new evangelical principles of what would become the Baptist Kirk. The baptism was performed by Rev. James Blair in the mill lade off Slintrig Crescent in 1844. His wife was Margaret and their children included Nivet (ni-vi’) n. Henry (19th C.) married Helen Dryden in 1852. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Helen (b.1855); Elizabeth (b.1869); and George (b.1871). He could be the ostler from Hawick who was living in Selkirk in 1851. Henry ‘Harry’, M.B.E. (??–?) born in Hawick, he worked in the knitwear industry, then at the Henderson Tech., becoming Principal in 1975 and was awarded the M.B.E. in 1979. He was also involved with the Archeological Society, Harriers, Camera Club and other local societies (also written ‘Evitt’).

Nivison (ni-vee-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1765 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Leyden in Hawick. Rev. Alexander (1786–1861) 3rd son of Abraham, minister of Middlebie, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1811. He became for a time a teacher of oriental languages, and had the opportunity to become a Chaplain in Calcutta, but preferred to stay at home, and so switched positions with James Brown. Thus he was presented to Roberton Parish in mid-1825 and ordained there in 1826. He was recorded at the Manse on the 1841 census, when his brothers Richard and William (both also ministers) were staying with him. He demitted in 1844, when he decided to give up being a minister, and he died in Edinburgh. He married Christina Thomson (d.1849) of Montrose and their children were: Elizabeth Broun (1826–1911), who married Dr. James Ogilvie, minister, and he died in Edinburgh. He

Nixon (nik-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) probably name of ‘Eddy of Larestonburne’, who is listed along with John in 1590. The and other Nixons were named in a complaint them by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid made on his livestock in 1588. Agnes (18th C.) recorded in a disposition given in 1767 as being one of the cottars of Hawick Shiel who were responsible for making ‘bakes’ on the Common, in violation of the orders of the Hawick Town Council. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Brighous’ in 1516 when a number of Nixons and other men of Liddesdale received remisison for their crimes. He may have been related to Henry in Larriston, William in Flicht and William in Steel. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as one of the tenants of Brighouse, along with 2 Williams, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He could be the same man as Alexander ‘of Stelle’ who is recorded (right after William, younger of Brighouse) on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their support to the English King. Alexander (16th C.) recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed right after Quentin ‘of Lawrellstane’, and was probably Robert and William. Sally Cornet’s Groom since 1983 (with a gap), performing these important duties for 34 Cornets. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Byreholm in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835.

Nixon also related to George, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Ekkie Nixsson in Dyk’ in 1611, among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) mentioned in an English letter of 1542 as ‘Dond Nyxsson, Scottes man afore sent to Edinburgh’ from whom news came of events in Scotland. It is unclear how he was related to other Nixons. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘Dand Nixsoun of Kewly’. He is listed along with many Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale who complained to the Privy Council about crimes committed by the Scots and their allies. His lands were probably those of Killoley, near Dinlabyre, and he was likely related to Hob, who was recorded being from there in 1590. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Dande Nixson’ at Brighouse, right after Ringan in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger and George, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in the proceedings for the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, has remission for several crimes, including bringing in him and Robert (suggesting they were closely related) to take part in raids, perhaps on Whitleawhouse. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded at the Steele in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He may be related to other Nixons at the Steele in 1544, Barth, Archie, Thomas and Alexander. He may be the ‘Archie Nixson’ who, along with Ninian Armstrong, had a bond in 1548 to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of the Steele (16th C.) signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens in 1584, his name appearing along with Harry of the Steele and Edward of Dinlabyre. His name is recorded as ‘Arche Nixson of the Steill’. Archibald ‘Cowfowl’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Arche Nixson Cowfowl’ in 1590 when, along with Elliots of the Steele and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was also named in a second accusation of 1590 along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Clement Nixon ‘Clash’ and others. Also in 1590 he was listed along with several Elliots and Shielis, who in 1590 were accused of attacking the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Additionally he was named in 1590 along with Clement ‘the Clash’, as well as Elliots, Shielis and others who were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them. He could be the ‘Arche Nickson’ recorded in 1590, accused of being on a raid of Elliots, Nixons and others who raided into England in 1588. He was recorded in 1595 when the Lord of Gilsland complained about raids into England; he is listed there as ‘Arch Nicksoun alias Cowfowl’e’, but it is unclear what his nickname might have meant. John of Larristonburn and Clement ‘the Clash’ are also listed and hence perhaps related. It is possible that he is the same man as Airchie of the Steele. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Little Park in Castle-ton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Bartholomew (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He may be the same Bartholomew who was tenant of ‘Stellis within the Dyk’, listed first, along with Thomas and Jeffrey. He may also be the same Bartholomew who was tenant of ‘Littlestelli’ in the 1541 rental roll. He was ‘Barte Nixson of Stelle’ in 1544 when listed among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII, and was probably related to the other Nixons listed there, namely Archie, Thomas and Alexander. ‘Wille Nixon Barte son’, also listed in 1544 may have been his son. Charles (18th/19th C.) son of Hawick manufacturer John. He was a solicitor in Notting-ham and then Leeds. In 1849 he served as one of the executors for the estate of his brother John. Clement ‘Clem’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Clemme Nixsoun in the Esscheis’ in the register of the Privy Council in 1581. He was a servant and dependant of Robert Elliot of Redhengh, and had been taken prisoner by Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh, because Elliot had refused to make him answerable to the Warden for various crimes. In 1581/2 he was ‘Clemme Nixsoun, callit of the Hye Asches’ when accused of leading a band who stole 6 cows from a farm at Huntly; his son John was also listed, and he is said to have sold one cow to a merchant from Jedburgh called Milligan, who confessed, and they were declared rebels. In 1587/8 he is ‘Clemme of Hie Asshis’ when his son John is recorded being held in ward (by the Laird of Anstruther) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he ‘eshaipit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. It is unclear where ‘the Ashes’ was. Perhaps the same ‘Clem’ was recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. Clement ‘the Clash’ (16th/17th C.) servant of William Elliot of Larriston. In 1590 he was named along with Archibald ‘Cowfowle’, as well as Elliots, Shiefs, and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall; his nickname is recorded there as ‘Cleshe’. He was further accused in 1590 among Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’; he is there ‘Clemye Nixon the Clashe’. Also in 1590 he was ‘Clemye Nixon “the Clashe”’ on a list of Elliots, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. In 1595 he was among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on ‘Haslegyll’; he is there recorded as ‘Clemett Nyxson alias the Clauser’. John, ‘Gleed Larriston’ was also listed as a servant of the Laird of Larriston, and so they may have been related. In 1595 he was also complained about for two other raids, along with Archie ‘alias Cowfowle’, John of Larristonburn, Jenkin and others. There is a further record of a complaint by the English against ‘Clemny the clasher’ in 1597. His nickname may have referred to being a gossip. Clement ‘Clem the Croon’ (16th C.) listed among Border chiefs by Monipennie in his compilation published about 1594 (but compiled earlier). His name is given as ‘Cleme Nixson, called the Crune’ and in 1578 and 1580 as ‘Clemme of the Crune’. His son Quentin is recorded in the 1570s and 1580s being a pledge held in ward to suppress lawlessness on the Border. Edward (16th C.) listed along with George as tenant of ‘the Dyke’ in Liddesdale in 1541. Both he and George are also recorded on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave their support to the English Crown in 1544. Edward of Dinlabyre (17th C.) listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is recorded as ‘Eduarde Nixson, Laird of Dunlybys’, with his caution being John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Warden, his name appearing along with Harry and Archie of the Steele. Fergus (16th C.) recorded at the Dykes in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name is given as ‘Fargate Nixson’ (and ‘Fergus’ seems the most likely forename). ‘Fargaises Willie of Kirkleheade’ is named among men accused of rieving in 1592 (with no surname listed); given the rareness of the name, this could be his son. Probably the same ‘Fergus Nykson’ was listed along with ‘Hob’ and others in 1541, when accused of raiding Gilsland and killing Engishman Dandy Wigholm. Gavin (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was also cited for not appearing at another court in Peebles later in 1605. He was ‘in Burnefute’, which was probably the place in Eskdale. Gavin (17th C.) tenant in Grystanetheaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Geoffrey (16th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was listed as ‘gofredi nykson’, and John was right before him. George (16th C.) recorded first on a list of Nixon tenants of Killoley on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. The others were John, Clement and Andrew, who may have been related. He could be the same man as ‘Georg Nixon of Larestane’ listed first among Nixon in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. George (16th C.) listed along with Edward as tenant of ‘the Dyke’ in Liddesdale in 1541. He may be the same as the tenant of the lands of Killoley. Both he and Edward are also recorded in 1564, swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. George (16th C.) recorded at Brighouse in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger and Ringan and Dandy, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots who were complained about by the English Warden in 1590 regarding a raid in 1588. His son Henry was also listed. He could be the ‘Geordie Nixo of the Larestone burne’ listed along with ‘Hob’ of Killoley, Hob’s brother Jenkin, John (servant to Martin Elliot), as well as Croziers and Shiefs accused in 1590 of stealing from the tenants of ‘Lynbrigges’. Given this list, it seems unlikely he is the same man as ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’, father of Hob and Jenkin. George ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded at Killoley in 1588 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on his livestock. His son ‘Jenkin’ is also listed; and since Jenkin was brother of ‘Hob’, then he was also father of Robert of Killoley. He is probably descended from the George associated with Killoley in the 1540s. He is recorded in 1590 among a group of Elliots and others accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. Probably the same man was in 1590/1 ‘George Nikson, son of Will of Callyly’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council; this means that his father was Will. He is the ‘yll drowned Georde’ and ‘halfe drowned Geord’ recorded in 1595 along with Jenkin and other
Nixon

Nixons, Elliots and others when there were complaints made about raids into England. He may be the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Hector (16th C.) listed as ‘Ec-Actor’ of ‘Lawrellstane’ (probably Larriston) in 1544 when his son John swore allegiance to the English King. Several other men were also listed at Larriston, and so probably related, including George, Quentin and Jeffrey. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Henry Nicsoun in Larishop’ in a document of 1500 listing men who gave pledges to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. This may have been Lairhope near Teviothead. Golfrid and Edward are also listed there, so they may be his brothers or sons. Perhaps the same Henry, son of John, is also recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Henry ‘Crackspear’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. There he is listed as ‘henrici nykson craksper’. He is also listed among a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is recorded as ‘Henry Nicsoun, Crakspere’, separate from Henry ‘in Larishop’. He may be the same ‘Henry Niksone’ and ‘Nixsone’ listed in 1510 in the Register of the Privy Seal among men associated with Robert Elliot of Redheugh, required to come before the King to promise to keep order, and then obtaining a respite for their crimes. William ‘Nixson’ is also listed there. Henry (15th/16th C.) named in a respite of 1515/6 along with Robert Elliot of Redheugh, William Elliot of Larriston, James Forester in Greenhaugh, Adam Crozier and others. He is also recorded as ‘in Larestanys’ in 1516 when he had a respite from the Privy Council for all of his crimes; also listed were several other men, including William ‘in Flycht’ and William ‘in Stele’, another Henry and Alexander ‘in the Brighous’. The respite applied to all other Nixons, except Robert and William, ‘brether sister sound to Johne Elwald’. It is likely that most of these men were closely related. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Henrys. Henry (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, along with William, as tenant of ‘Kylsfurd’ (i.e. Kilford). This William could be ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’ who is recorded in 1563, suggesting that he might be William’s father. Another Henry (or the same one) is listed as tenant of Stripshelden, along with David. Henry ‘Harry’ of Howden (16th C.) recorded in the 1581 Register of the Privy Seal. His name appears with several Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale who were accusing the Scots of various crimes. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Henrys. He is probably related to the earlier William of Howden. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1584 as ‘Herrie Nixson’ who was ‘of the Steill’, along with Airchie. The pair signed an assurance with the English Wardens, along with Edward of Dinlabyre, to whom they were presumably related. Henry ‘George’s Harry’ (16th C.) listed as one of 3 Nixons among the Border chiefs compiled by Monipennie sometime before 1594. He is recorded as ‘Georgis Harie Nixson’. Probably the same ‘Henrie Nickson sonne to Geordy’ was recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Wardens in 1590 regarding a raid in 1588: he is there ‘Henrie Nickson sonne to Geordy’. He may be the Henry who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1597 when there was a complaint against him, along with Robert Elliot of Thorlieshope, Hob Armstrong and Alexander Armstrong, for a raid on ‘Ellinghamerigge’ in England. He was referred to as being ‘of Killforde’, but Scott of Buccleuch argued ‘that there is not such a persone’ (although there was a man of that name at Kilford 5 decades earlier). He may have got off for giving the wrong name or address! Jeffrey (16th C.) tenant of ‘Stellis’, along with Bartholomew and Thomas, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He is listed in 1544 as ‘Jeffaray’, brother of Thomas ‘of Stell’, on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Jeffrey (16th C.) recorded at ‘Lawrellstedde’ (probably Larriston) in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Quentin, John and Hector, who were also listed at Larriston. Jenkin (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave assurances to the English King. He was recorded as ‘Jenkyne Nixson of Stanesheld’ (i.e. Staneshiel) and was probably related to John, who was also listed in the same place. He may be the English fugitive Jenkin recorded being reset by ‘Reid’ Simon Armstrong. Jenkin (16th C.) son of George of Killoley and brother of Robert. He is mentioned in a complaint in 1590 about a raid into England made by Nixons and Elliots in 1588. Probably the same ‘Ginkyne’ was accused in 1590 (along with Elliots and Shiels) of stealing from Roland Walker. In 1590 he was listed along with his brother ‘Hob’ of Killoley along with other Nixons, Croziers and Shiels, accused of stealing from the Wilkinson of ‘Lynnebrigges’. He is recorded being ‘of Kelleley’ and was presumably related to the earlier Nixons from there. The other Nixons named in 1590 were his brother Hob and Geordie of Larriston Burn. He is probably the Jenkin recorded in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. Probably the same ‘Jenken Nyckson son to George’ was listed in 1595 among Nixons, Elliots and others complained about for raids into England. In one raid he is listed along with George ‘yll drowned Georde’, who may have been related and in another he and John are both ‘of Larestoun’. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same John’s son Henry was also listed. John (16th C.) son of Matthew, ‘callid ’no good clarke’’. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) tenant of ‘Hessedale’ according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Perhaps the same John was joint tenant of Heuchhousehill in 1541. John (16th C.) recorded at Killoley in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘John Nyxson of Kellel’, and was probably related to William, who is also recorded at the same place. He is probably the John recorded at Killoley in a rental roll of 1541. John (16th C.) recorded at Flicht in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to Matthew and ‘Perswill’, who were also there in 1544. John (16th C.) resident at ‘Staneshelde’ (i.e. Stanshield) recorded in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave assurances to the English King. He was probably related to Jenkin, who was also listed in the same place. John (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as being ‘of Coulegeyte’, which could have been Claygate. John (16th C.) listed in a 1544 bond of support for the English King, signed by Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others. His name is given as ‘John Nixson of Lawrellstanes, Ector sone’, and hence presumably Hector was his father. John (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘Johnne Niksoun, callit Halyden’, although the meaning of the nickname is unclear. He must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh John (16th C.) son of Clem ‘callit of the Hye Asches’. In 1581/2 the pair were among men accused of stealing cattle from a farm at Huntly; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. In 1587/8 he was recorded being warded with the Laird of Anstruther; however, he escaped and his pledge was ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He is recorded as ‘laird of the Highe eshes’ and also ‘of the Higheshies’ in 1595, listed along with his brother (who is unnamed) among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. He is probably the John ‘of Eshes’ who was demanded by the English Commissioners as one of the hostages to be taken as a pledge for other Liddesdale men in 1597. He was further ‘of the Eshes’ in 1597 among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. John (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in Dodburne’ among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (16th C.) recorded being of Kilford in 1590 when there was a complaint that he and some Elliots had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle from people on the English side in 1588. He may be the John recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, accused of a raid into England. John of Larriston Burn (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Nyckson of Larriston burne’ as a raider into England in 1589/90. He is listed in 1590/1 being ‘of Layrestenburne’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He is recorded being ‘of Laiest burne’ in Monipenie’s list of Border chiefs published around 1594 (but probably compiled several years earlier). He and ‘Eddy of Larestonburne’ are also recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint against them by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid made on his livestock in 1588. He was ‘of Lareston’ in 1590 among a group of Elliots and others accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. In 1595 he was ‘alias Larestoneburn, guyde and purpose maker’ and ‘of Lareston bre’ when complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding 2 raids into England. He could be the John ‘in Larestoun’ who was convicted and executed in Jedburgh in 1611. John ‘Gleed Larriston’ (16th/17th C.) servant of William Elliot of Larriston. His nickname is recorded as ‘gleed Lareston’. In 1595 he was among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on ‘Haslegyll’. Clement ‘the Clash’ was also a servant of the Laird of Larriston, and so they may have been related; the pair were each accused of raids on England in 1597. He may also be the John accused of 2 further raids in 1595, one with ‘yll drowned Georde’ and another with Jenkin of Larriston. He may have been the same as one of the nearly contemporary Johns associated with Larriston. His nickname presumably referred to a squint. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Riccarton. In 1611 John Moscrop, Burgess of Jedburgh, acted as cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Burnmouth. In 1624 Adie and Will Usher were convicted of stealing his sheep. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lawshill in 1623. Rowie Foster stole sheep from ‘Callshielis’ owned by him and Gavin Elliot ‘callit of ye Schawis’. John (17th C.) tenant at Larriston Rig in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Bailie John (c.1757–1812) Bailie and manufacturer. He came to Hawick in 1774, being an apprentice with William Irvine, linen draper. In 1779 he was recorded as Irvine’s apprentice when the pair witnessed a baptism in Cavers Parish. He was one of the first large-scale hosiery employers, taking over from John Hardie around 1780. The original partnership was with William Irvine, George Noble and Thomas Sanson, but Sanson left the same year, and a few years later he was the sole partner. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1786 it is recorded that he was running 8 frames, and started manufacturing ribbed stockings, and in 1795 he already had 12 frames. The firm spun the yarn as well as knitting the hosiery. His premises were on the High Street, where the Victoria Hotel was later built; he lived on the top flat, with the spinning jennies and warehouse below. Around 1793, along with Bailie Simpson, he presented the bible that used to sit at the end of the Magistrates’ row in St. Mary’s Kirk (and moved to the Old Parish). He is probably the merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was recorded as a manufacturer in Hawick on the 1790–91 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He paid the dog tax in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the locals contributing money for the war with France. He was involved in the years 1799–1803 with a court case against merchant Walter Lunn, who was declared bankrupt. He started the early construction phase of what became Lynnwood Mills around 1803 or 1804, and there carding and spinning were carried out. In 1811 he was an Ensign in the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. In Hawick in 1782 he married Mary, daughter of William Grieve, tenant of Southfield. Their children included: John (b.1783); Mary (1784–88); William (1785–1871), who succeeded to the hosiery firm; Joseph (1790–1842); Charles, solicitor in Nottingham and Leeds; and an unnamed daughter. The witnesses in 1783 and 1784 were Bailie John Elliot and Robert Grieve (perhaps his wife’s brother). He is probably the John whose eldest daughter Agnes married Robert Jardine in Hawick in 1811. John (1783–1848) eldest son of manufacturer John. He was also a manufacturer in Hawick, being a partner in the firm of Nixon & McKie. He was listed in London when he subscribed for 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He died in Nottingham and his inventory from 1849 is preserved, with his estate valued at £2300, his brother Charles and William Elliot acting as executors. Joseph (1790–1842) younger son of manufacturer John. He was a partner with his brother William. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he was living on Walter’s Wynd with John (probably his son) and a female servant. When he died his brother was left as sole partner in the family firm. Rev. J.W. (19th/20th C.) Rector of Wetheral, Carlisle, who was appointed to help out with St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick during the vacancy in 1910–11. Martin (16th C.) possessor of ‘Hiefflycht’ (i.e. High Flicht) in 1541. He was probably related to other local Nixons. Matthew ‘Nae Guid Clerk’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1541 when his son John was listed among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His name is given as ‘Matho, callid ‘no good clarke’’, but it is unclear exactly what this meant (however, compare ‘Nae Guid Priest’, which was a nickname for an earlier Oliver). He may be the same as one of the other Matthews. Matthew (16th C.) tenant of Hightrees Cleuch according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He may have been related to John, who leased the neighbouring lands of ‘Heseldale’. He is probably the ‘Mathewe Nixson of Hetherelewes’ listed in 1544, among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Matthew (16th C.) recorded at Flicht in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to John and ‘Perswill’ who were also there in 1544. ‘Pate Nixson Mathewe son’, also listed in 1544 may have been his son, as well as William, Pate’s brother. Mrs.

?? (19th C.) local lady who left a bequest called ‘Mrs. Nixon’s Bounty Fund’, to be distributed to poor women in Hawick and Wilton. It was administered by the ministers of Hawick and St. George’s and the Provost of Hawick, and still had a value of £2300 in 1939. She was presumably the wife of one of the local manufacturers. Ninian ‘Rignon’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Renyon Nyxson of Brigehows’ in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger, George and Dandy, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. Probably the same Ninian witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Pate Nixson Mathew son’ and could have been son of Matthew of Hightreescleuch. His brother William is also listed in 1544. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) son of Quentin, he is recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name was given as ‘Patte Nixson of the same, Qwinten sone’. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. Patrick (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1702. Percival (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as ‘Perswill Nixson, Fleght’ on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who gave their support to the English Crown. He was probably related to John and Matthew, who were also listed at Flight in 1544. Quentin (16th C.) recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name was given as ‘Qwinten Nixson of Lawrellstane’. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. His son Pate is also listed. Quentin (16th C.) son of ‘Clemmie the Crwne’ or ‘Clemme the Crune’. He was held by George Buchanan of the Ilk, on a pledge of good behaviour to the King and released by 1578, but promised to meet again with other pledges in order to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumfarton Castle and later that year stated to be warded in Edinburgh Castle. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Christie son of Quentin was recorded in 1585 in a long list of men of Dumfriesshire receiving remission for past crimes. Quentin ‘the Doo’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as servant to William Elliot of Hartsgarth. He was listed among a group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there. Not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. Robert (15th C.) recorded in the proceedings for the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, has remission for several crimes, including bringing in him and Archibald (suggesting they were closely related) to take part in raids. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed along with William as ‘brother, sister sons to Johne Elwald’ in 1516. They are given as exceptions to the Nixons who had remission for their crimes, suggesting that what ever they were accused of was more serious. It is unclear which John Elliot was their uncle. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Fergus and others accused of raiding Gilsland and killing Englishman Dandy Wigholm. It is unclear where he came from. Robert ‘Hob’ of Killoley (16th C.) brother of Jenkin and probably son of George, ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’. He was named in 1590 among several Nixons, Croziers, Shiels and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsonsons of ‘Lynbrigges’. He is recorded being ‘of Kelleley’ and was presumably related to the earlier Nixons from there. The other Nixons named in 1590 were his brother Jenkin and Geordie of Larriston Burn (who was therefore presumably distinct from his father). Robert ‘Scabbit Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from ‘Rosie’ and her tenants of Mangerton. He was acquitted of the first cited theft, but found guilty of the second and ordered to be hanged. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Doddburn. He married Janet Ridell and their children included Janet (b.1705) and Gideon (b.1723). The witnesses in 1705 were William Henderson in the Flex and Walter Grieve in Branxholme Park. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Stobico in 1720. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brighousecleuchhead in 1622 when he promised to appear before the Justice Court to answer charges against him. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of ‘Stellis’ in Liddesdale in 1541, along with Bartholomew and Jeffrey, who were presumably related. He is also listed in 1544, along with his brother Jeffrey, plus ‘Barte’ and ‘Arche’, among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Thomas (16th C.) recorded at the Dyke in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. ‘Fargathe Nixon’ was also listed there, and so presumably a close relative. Walter (17th/18th C.) Elder of Hawick Kirk who lived at Hawick Shiel. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawick Shiel in 1706. He was listed as tenant in Hawick Shiel when he witnessed baptisms for William Gledstains, for James Borthwick and for Robert Tudhope (servant to Falnoise) in 1708 and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, for John Nichol in Newmill in 1709, for John Turnbull (herd in Whitchesters) in 1710 and for William Hislop, his servant in Hawick Shiel. In 1716 he (and Simon Miller, also at Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for James Borthwick, shepherd at Hawick Shiel. In 1717 he was appointed to collect monies from ‘Hawicksheils, the two Southfields, Allan Haugh milhe, Newbigging, and Raes-knowves’, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was still an elder the following year. He witnessed baptisms in 1718 (along with Walter Scott, both recorded as tenants in Hawick Shiel) for Matthew Crotton, in 1720 for William Hill (weaver at the Flex), in 1721 for 2 men called John Scott in Hawickshiel, as well as William Hislop, in 1723 and 1725 for Robert Scott in Hawick Shiel and also in 1725 for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill and blacksmith James Gledstains. He may be the Walter who married Janet Riddell and whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1708. William (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to a c.1376 rental roll. The list includes ‘Locus Willelmi Nycson’, valued at 21 shillings. William (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Flycht’ in 1516 when he received remission for his crimes from the Privy Council, along with several other Nixons and others. It seems likely he was related to Henry in Larriston, William in the Steel and Alexander in the Brighouse. William (15th/16th C.) listed ‘in the Stele’ in 1516 among Nixons and other Liddesdale men who received remission for their crimes from the Privy Council. William (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as ‘brother, sister sons to Johne Elwald’ in 1516 when several Nixons, except for them, were given respite for their crimes. It is unclear which John Elliot was their uncle. William (16th C.) name of 2 separate men who, along with Alexander, were tenants of Brighouse in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He is also ‘William Nixson of Brighows’ in 1544 when he was on a list of Scotsmen who gave their support to the English Crown; William, younger (presumably his son) was also listed, as well as George, Ringan and Dandy. William (16th C.) recorded at Howden in Liddesdale in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. William (16th C.) listed at Dinlabyre in 1544 among Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who gave their support to the English Crown. William (16th C.) son of William of Brighouse. He was recorded as ‘William Nixon younger of Brighows’ in 1544 along a list of Nixons, Croziers, Olivers and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His father William was also listed there. William ‘Willye’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Wille Nixon Barte son’ and could have been son of Bartholomew of the Steele. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who swore allegiance to the English Crown. He was listed as brother of ‘Pate’, who was son of Mathewe, possibly of Hightreescleuch. William ‘Clement’s Will’ (16th C.) presumably son of Clement, he was known as a thief. In 1557 a bond was signed between Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, George Rutherford of Grange, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Jillerwell to capture him and present him at the ‘airn yetts’ of Ferniehirst. There is another bond of 1557 (where he is ‘Clemattis Will’) among several Armstrongs to present him at Ferniehirst. And a third bond by Hector Armstrong and others (including Archibald of the Steel) to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1556 on the back of which is a bond by Hector Lorraine of Harwood to present ‘Will Nyksone, called Gymmerhom’, who could be the same man. William ‘Grey Will’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’. In 1563 Gavin Elliot of Ramsigill and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring him in. He could be the William who was listed after Henry as being tenant of Kilford in 1541. Either he or a different William is also listed as tenant of Howden. He could be the same ‘Gray Wil’ listed among Border chiefs (along with Johnne of the Park) in Monipennie’s c.1594.
William (16th C.) listed as ‘alias Kneates, of Highessches’ in 1597 among 5 Scotsmen delivered to the English Deputy Warden by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch at Copshawholm. It is unclear where ‘Highessches’ might have been. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town in 1691, when there were 5 tenants recorded there. He was recorded as tenant in Castlehill in 1692. He could be the William, married to Janet Scott, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1678, along with an unnamed son in 1673. The witnesses in 1678 were John Ker and William Nichol. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Martin in the Flex in 1700 and probably the William recorded in Stobicoe in 1707 who witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Thomas in Newmill) for Walter Wilson in Castlehill. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) clerk with manufacturer John; however, it is unclear if he was related. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia. William (1785–1871) hosiery manufacturer, son of John and Mary Grieve. Born in Hawick, he moved to Nottingham, from where he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1806, after sending a new silk Cornet’s Sash (it is possible that up until then the Cornets simply wore their best clothes, with no formal uniform). Returning to Hawick he worked in Nixon’s and was himself elected as Cornet in 1813. He used to ride a white horse known popularly as ‘Nixon’s mare’. He also acted as paymaster for the prisoners of war who were in Hawick 1812–14. The main manufacturing premises were at 52 High Street (marked on Wood’s 1824 map), before Lynnwood Mill was built. The firm was still listed as ‘John Nixon & Sons’ in Pigot’s 1837 directory, even although his father had died in 1812; it manufactured woollen as well as hosiery. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He laid the foundation stone for the Free Church, was one of its first Trustees as well as serving as a deacon. He later built Lynnwood House (where he is recorded in 1841) and was generally active in public life. In 1851 he is recorded as master woolspinner, employing 115 people. In the 1860s he served as Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jane, daughter of John Elliot of Binks in 1814, and she died in 1877; the couple had no children. The marriage certificate of 1849 shows his wife’s name to be Jane Elliot Graham (so it is unclear if this was a 2nd wife). He was in partnership for a while with Joseph, his brother. Later he was the sole proprietor of the firm of Nixon’s and restricted himself to the preparation of yarn, with hosiery passing to the form of Nixon & McKie. A portrait of him exists. He donated 2 Adam Brown portraits to the Museum. He was involved in the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ and later with the development of a carrier on a broad frame, which led to a lowering of prices and wages. Hence, through the 1820s he was unpopular among the local stocking-makers, his effigy being carried through the town at one point, with an accompanying song – ‘O, but ye’re a loon, Willie! O, but ye’re a loon! Ye brought the Shirra in a chaise To pull our wages doon’ [T] (formerly written ‘Nexsone’, ‘Nickson’, ‘Nicksone’, ‘Nicon’, ‘Nixsoun’, ‘Niksoun’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nixsoun’, ‘Nixyne’, ‘Nyckson’, ‘Nyksome’, ‘Nyksone’, ‘Nyksoun’, ‘Nyxson’, ‘Nyxson’, etc.).

Nixon’s (nik-sinz) n. Messrs. John Nixon & Sons, stocking-makers, with their main mill at Lynnwood, built in the early 1800s. The weir built to divert water into the mill lade at Lynnwood was usually referred to as ‘Nixon’s Caul’d’. John Nixon started as a hosiery manufacturer in 1780, spinning as well as knitting. The firm introduced more advanced hosiery machinery to Hawick in 1805. John Nixon died in 1812 and the firm was then run by his sons William and Joseph. Improvements to production in the early 1820s led to a lowering of wages for workers, which was an important part of the ‘:ang Stand Oot’ strike of 1822/3. William and Joseph Nixon were the partners in 1829, when they were given a grant from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for spinning machinery. In 1837 the firm was listed on the High Street, still as ‘John Nixon & Sons’; this was probably where the Victoria Hotel was later located. In 1842 Joseph Nixon died and his brother William was left as sole partner. He then went into partnership with William McKie, and the company was called Nixon & McKie; it was listed as such on Walter’s Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. The Lynnwood factory was sold to Thomas Laidlaw in 1864. They also built the factory on Walter’s Wynd that was bought by Pringle’s in 1869 and renamed Rodono.

Nixon’s Brig (nik-sinz-brig) n. former name for a small, wooden footbridge near Nixon’s Mill at Lynnwood. It was washed away in the flood of 1846, part of it ending up lodged between the Tower Hotel and waulk mills and another part washed up on the Tower Knowe.
Nixon’s Cauld

Nixon’s Cauld (nik-sinz-kawld) n. name sometimes used for Lynnwud Cauld.

Nixon’s Mare (nik-sinz-mär) n. white mare called Molly, which was owned by William Nixon, manufacturer, who was Cornet in 1813. The horse was loaned to a few subsequent Cornets, and is seen in a portrait by Adam Brown.

nixt (nıkst) adj., adv. next – ‘The said day the Bayleyes and Counsell appoynted the Common to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June’ [BR1705], ‘…thereof they appoynted their meeting to be on Thursday nixt, the first day of May’ [PR1711], ‘…should be put out of ye toum and not to reside therein till Whitunday nixt’ [PR1715] (note the pronunciation, even when spelled ‘next’; a colloquial difference with standard English is that, e.g. if this is Saturday, then ‘nixt Mondy’ is 9 days away, while this ‘Mondy’ is in 2 days; cf. the less common neext and older neist).

no (no) adv. not – ‘he’s no is smert is hei thinks hei is’, ‘it’s no fair’, ‘no a bit o’d’, ‘no bad, considerin’, ‘they’ll no be lang in comin’, ‘…The crimson current no congeal’d Wi frozen age’ [JR], ‘…yet we’ll no mind – The tide may turn, we’ll no’ despair’ [JoHa], ‘Because ye think that yer a gentleman and I think that yer no’ [RM], ‘Aw’m no’ in the tid for sermons …’ [RM], ‘It’s no’ in steeds, it’s no’ in speeds, It’s something in the heart abiding’ [RH], ‘…sic a bleezer as it was, wui no a whuff o wund’ [ECS], ‘A axt um if this was the Haaick Motor, an whither it was gaun back ti Haaick that nicht or no’ [ECS], ‘A job is valued for the time it takes, now. No’ the work that’s put intill’t’ [DH], ‘…Waxcloth, no carpet, on the hair, Doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IWL].

no bad (nō-bawd) adj. quite good, excellent – ‘yon taillet’s no bad, isen eet?’ , ‘…which is no bad, but a long way tae catch up on Andra Ballowntyne’ [CT].

Noble (nō-bul) n. Alexander (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere in Anerton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus Ellie Nobill’ is listed there with a value of 6 shillings. Andrew (b.c.1810) hostler, recorded at about 21 High Street in 1841. By 1851 he was widowed and a frame-worker, living on Walter’s Wynd and in 1861 he was a railway labourer at 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Betty, Mary, John, Helen and Joan. Arthur (1864–95) son of Robert Noble, who gave his name to Arthur Street. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the George, son of William and Margaret Pringle, born in Hawick in 1740. He married Jane Scott and their children included William (b.1771), Agnes (b.1775) and Walter (b.1777). His wife ‘Jean’ died in Hawick in 1778. Henry (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Priesthaughshiel in 1781 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hawick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the James, married to Janet Murray, whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish included Walter (b.1682) and probably Helen (b.1684). James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it still contained Hassendean. He was recorded in Parkhill in 1687 when his son James was baptised, with witnesses John Noble (surely a close relative) and Robert Learmonth. He may be the James who married Jean Thomson in Robertson Parish in 1687. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwickshiels in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1728 he was in Robertson itself and in 1735 at Borthwickbrae. He married Isobel Ker in Robertson in 1727. Their children included: Agnes (b.1728); Walter (b.1730); twins Isobel and Janet (b.1733); and Mary (b.1735). He was living at Chisholme in 1733. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Ker and their son James was baptised in 1744. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Mervinslaw in 1751. He married Marion Young and their son Adam was baptised in 1751, with witnesses Robert Scott and Walter Irvine. Rev. James (1836–1883) born in Perthshire, son of Rev. James and Margaret Crow. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed to preach by Perth Presbytery in 1859 and became assistant at St. Stephen’s in Edinburgh in 1861. However, later that year he was translated to be minister of Castleton Parish. He served as Chaplain to the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1879 he attended the celebration for his colleague Rev. John Black of the Associate Kirk in Newcastleton. He died unmarried. James (1851/2–81) son of Andrew, contractor in Coldsteam. He drowned in Hawick, and is buried in the family plot in Lennel. John (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot.

named along with 'Gib Elliott son to Robin' and John Shiel (another servant of Robert), as well as Eliots and Croziers, when they were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall. He was further listed in 1590, along with Nixons, Croziers and Shiels, accused of stealing from the tenants of 'Lynbrigges'; he is there 'Martin Elliott's man', but it seems that the same person is meant. He may be the John who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. John (16th C.) tenant in Hens-ler's Knowe. He was recorded in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter a further listed in 1590, along with Nixons, Croziers and Shiels, accused of stealing from the tenants of 'Lynbrigges'; he is there 'Martin Elliott's man', but it seems that the same person is meant. He may be the John who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. John (16th C.) tenant in Hens-ler's Knowe. He was recorded in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter

Robert Parkhead in 1620 (and hence was not hanged by the house of Bewcastell) according to a 1583 letter of Thomas Musgrave. He could be the Robert Noble who died on his farm at Parkhead in 1620 (and hence was not hanged at Carlisle). Robert (17th C.) tailor in Ef-pledge. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Robert (1839–1919) of Wellfield and later Heronhill and Borthwickbrae, he was from Big- gar, coming to Hawick as a warehouseman and traveller for Dicksons & Laings. He became a junior partner in Richardson, Noble & Co. (established 1871), which built Glebe Mills in 1877. He founded Robert Noble & Co. in 1880 after Robert Richardson died. He was active in public life through being a J.P., President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and being associated with the School Board, the Cottage Hospital, the Gas Company, the Teviotdale Dairy and the Constitutional Club. He bought Borthwickbrae from William Elliott Lockhart about 1884. About 1895 he gave land around Borthwick Waas Cemetery for a shrubbery, and kept it up at his expense (along with the Grieve sisters). He married Isabella Armstrong in 1860, and their children included Arthur. The Trinity area adjacent to Glebe Mills was developed largely through his efforts, and Noble Place is named after him. He also left money for the Hawick Technical College. Robert (19th/20th C.) from Hawick, he attended St. Andrews Kirk. He was a home missiona-ry in Glasgow (at Finneston) and London (Clapham Road). Walter (17th C.) among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was tenant in Ef-pledge and listed as 'Taylor in Effedge' in one account. However, it is possible this was confusion with Robert, tailor in Effedge. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th/18th C.) living at Castleside in 1710 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Walter who married Isobel Cuthbertson and whose son Robert was baptised in Ashkirk in 1706. William (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. William (18th C.) workman in Hav-wick. He married Margaret Pringle and their children included: Janet (b.1738); George (b.1740); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitken and 'Officer' Thomas Sword. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1772. His children included John (b.1772). William (18th C.) gardener at Burnhead in 1793, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for John Lor- raine in 1754 (formerly 'Nobill', 'Nouble', 'Noble' and variants). Noble Place (nò-bul-plis) n. street in the Trinity area near the Glebe Mills, built around 1885 and named after Robert Noble. It was essentially built to provide convenient accommoda-tion for workers at Glebe Mills.
Noble’s (nō-bulz) n. knitwear firm of Robert Noble & Co., founded in 1872 and at Glebe Mills from 1877. The company dwindled after WWII, but survived until 1962, when it merged with other companies (Walter Thorburn of Peebles and George Roberts of Selkirk), with Glebe Mills being taken over by Pringle’s. However, even the new merged company only lasted a few years. Papers relating to the firm exist, covering the period 1879–1959.

Noctes Hawickianaë (nok-teez-hlk-ce-an-à) n. book published at the end of 1859, containing caricatures and sketches describing the adventures of a theatrical troupe who spent 9 days performing in the Subscription Rooms in Hawick a few weeks earlier. The sub-title was ‘Ye Drama on ye Borders. Being ye feates and adventures of a dramatic company, what they did, and how they met them, and exhibiting ye effects in modern Athens of a very distant explosion, and who were affected thereby, illustrated in upwards of one hundred humorous sketches, embracing portraits of ye Dramatis Personæ, from photographs by Treuffit Brothers, and veritable likenesses of other parties from Nature’. The pseudonymous authors were Charles K. Tynte and Austin Burns. The illustrations were actually by Keeley Halswelle (with the assistance of Burns Bryson). The book is now rather rare. It contains a couple of sketches of Hawick streets in 1856, as well as a view including Goldielands Tower and caricatures of a few Hawick residents of the time. W.E. Wilson gave a lecture on the book in 1917.

noddle-araid (nö-dul-ar-àd) adv., arch. head foremost (noted by J. Jamieson).

nogly (nög-le) adj., poet. knobbly, knob-like – ‘And he has kyssed her paunchy cheeke, And syne her nogly chinne’ [JTe].

No Kiddin (no-ki-dìn) n. popular music band based in Hawick in the late 1970s. They consisted of Kenneth Stoddart (keyboards and synthesiser), Stevie Turnbull (lead/rhythm guitar), Paul Desport (lead singer), Jim Inglis (bass guitar) and Derek Lunn (drums).

nolt (nölt, nöl’) n., pl., arch. cattle – ‘Item, whatsoever person or personages that has their hors, meiris, or nolt of any sort, out of ane house in Hawick …’ [BR1640], ‘…the great inconvenience that follows by Burgesses who live not in the town, their putting horse, nolt and sheep to the Common …’ [BR1720], ‘…had no right, title, interest, claim of right, property, or possession to the said Commonty, nor privilege of pasturing yronup with horse, nolt, or other cattle …’ [BR1734], ‘…at riding the Common tearly the riders were in use to hound and drive out of the Common all the horse, nolt, and sheep belonging to the tenants on the confines of the Common …’ [C&L1767], a bullock, single head of cattle – ‘A cow £22; a nolt £7’ [BR1638] (cf. nowt).

Nolt-lair (nöl̊l-lār) n. former lands in Liddesdale, adjacent to Yethouse. It is written as ‘Noltlaires’ in 1632, among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, and including Hightrees, Burnmouth, Dawstonburn and Prickinghaugh. It is probably the ‘Noltlawis’ recorded in 1611 when Hob, son to Jamie Henderson there, was listed for non-appearance in court at Jedburgh. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties, it was ‘Noutilaires’ and combined with Yethouse to cover 70 acres.

Nolt-lair (nöl̊l-lār) n. lands that were part of Lilliesleaf Common. Along with Stotfield, it was...

Nook Haugh (nook-hawch) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish. It was listed in the 1841 and 1861 censuses and was probably the same as Haughheid.

noomer (noo-mur) n., v., arch. number (also nummer).

noost (noost) n., arch. the action of a horse’s teeth in grinding its food, v. to chew food, particularly said of a horse (noted by J. Jamieson).

noozle (noo-zul) v., arch. to press, squeeze (noted by J. Jamieson; also nuizzle).

nor (nor) conj., arch. nor (used in various forms where modern English would have ‘or’ or other words) – ‘I, myn aieris nor assignais, nor nane vthir in myn nor thair namis, sal nor may in any time ask, raise nor clame ony mair of the said nyne hundreth merkis ...’ [SB1470], than (usually after comparisons) – ‘...and gif it be mair nor £20, and within £40, thirteen shillings and four pennies ...’ [BR1640], ‘...that no personne sall bruk the office of bailliarie longer nor the space of twa years together ...’ [BR1648], ‘...aw daursay John yer congregation’s better t’ye nor a hantel aw could name ...’ [WK], ‘...howe muckle bet- tir is thy loeie nor wyne!’ [HSR], ‘Thou art fairer nor the childer o’ men ...’ [HSR], ‘Nae mair nor newspapers!’ [DH].

Norbank see Northbank

Norham Castle (no-rom-kaw-sul) n. castle just over the Tweed in Northumberland, near the village of Norham. It began as a timber con-struction in 1121 by Bishop Flambard, and was developed as a stone keep in the late 12th century. However, it was involved in many national incidents, and was a garrison of the March War-den, although it was too strong to be affected by Border raids. The smaller ‘Ramgan Roll’ was signed there in 1291 and the Scots suffered a de-feat nearby in 1348. It was ruined soon after the Reformation – ‘...And at Norham Castle he cried ’I stand A Neville at last in Northumber-land!’’ [WHO].

norie (no-ree) n., arch. a whim, fancy – ‘That might be deemed nae norie’ [HSR] (also written ‘norrie’).

no right (no-ri') adj. not entirely sane, mentally unsound, unbalanced, unhinged – ‘she’s oot o Dingleton, but she’s no right yit’ (a euphemism, sometimes extended to ‘no right in the head’).

norlan (nor-lin) adj., arch. northland, originating in the North – ‘But the norlan’ wind comes laden Wi’ bitin’ frost an snow! Oh weary, weary Winter, I wish ye were awa!’ [JT], ‘An’ that’s as true as I’m a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater’ [JoHa], ‘Oh cease they mane, thou norlan’ wind, And o’ thy wailin’ let me be’ [TDa].

Norman (nor-min) n. James (20th C.) owner of the Station Hotel 1933–51. He sold Langbalk to the Henderson brothers. His daughter Jean married James Aitkin Henderson, who became Provost.

Normand (nor-mund) n. John (13th/14th C.) first man listed on the inquisition of 1303/4 into the inheritance of William Charteris’ half barony of Wilton. Most of the men are clearly local, and the inquest was held at Roxburgh. His name is written ‘Normaund’. He also swore fealty to Ed-ward I in 1296 as ‘Normaunt’, with a seal showing a lion rampant on a 6-leaved flower and the legend ‘S’IOH’...BVRGES’ DE BERWT’, although he was from Roxburghshire.

Norris (no-ris) n. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1780 and 1781. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Jean (b.1780); and Margaret (b.1781).

Northbank (nor-, north-bawngk) n. former farmstead and ruined 16th century peel tower in Southdean Parish. It is located between Steele Knowe and White Hill, to the east of the hamlets of Cheseters and Southdean. The tower is about 5 m by 4 m and is ruined down to a single storey. Adjacent to the tower is an enclosure 23 m square, and there are signs of 2 other turf-walled buildings to the south-west; these are probably the remains of an earlier standing. The previous name for the farm may have been ‘the Banks’. There are modern sheep-shelters there. The surrounding area has old rig lines, covering at least 22 hectares, enclosed by boundary banks and ditches. The more recent farmstead is about 500 m west of the ruined peel tower. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. ‘Belle’, Thomas and ‘Bennetc’ Laidlaw were tenants there in 1541, paying 22s yearly. The tenant of the farm there in 1669 was ‘Lancellot Laidlie’. Robert Laidlaw and George Oliver, each with one hearth, are recorded there in 1694, as well as ‘Culbert whilands’ (it is already ‘Northbank’ in 1538, and is ‘Norbank’ in 1609 and ‘Norbanck’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Norbanck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but it not marked on Roy’s or Stobie’s 18th century maps).

North Berryfell (north-be-ree-fel) n. farmstead on the east side of the Slitrig and more than a kilometre from Berryfell farm (which is sometimes called ‘South Berryfell’ to distinguish it). William Oliver was there in 1841. James Brunton was farmer in the 1860s, A. Jackson in 1868 and then Drydens until at least the early 1900s. The farmer there in 1872, Mr. Dryden, uncovered an ancient cairn, where pieces of pottery were found, as well as the top stone of a quern nearby. The farmhouse is now a ruin.

North Bridge Street (north-brij-stree’) n. road leading to North Bridge, connecting the High Street (or Oliver Place) with Dovemount Place. Before the road was developed the general area had been in use as nurseries by Dickson’s. The name appeared around 1832, with the first house built in 1845. The southern end is just the opposite side of the street from Oliver Place. The middle section used to contain the houses and surgeries of many of the town’s doctors. No. 16 and 39 were designed by J.P. Alison in 1895, as well as a hotel on the street at about the same time. The northern end was built largely in 1899–1900, with Nos. 41–49 designed by J.P. Alison. The Art Nouveau inspired Nos. 43 (J.E.D. Murray’s studio) and 45 (Alison’s own house and office) are particularly noteworthy. Nos. 2, 4, 6 and 41 are grade C listed buildings, while 43, 45, 47 and 49 are grade B (also sometimes referred to as ‘Bridge Street’; named because it is the road to the North Bridge).

North Bridge Street Mill (north-brij-stree’mill) n. former woollen mill situated to the south of the Teviot near North Bridge Stree. It is recorded in 1872, but it is unclear precisely where it was.

North Brig (north-brig) n. North Bridge, being the bridge over the Teviot at the end of North Bridge Street, built in 1832 by John & Thomas Smith of Darnick. It was originally called the New Bridge, to distinguish it from the Teviot Bridge in the west part of the town, and was funded by the Turnpike Trustees, since it allowed for a much easier route to the North. In 1882 it needed to be widened, the corrugated iron parapets being removed and the pavement width added to each arch. This work was carried out by Scott & Thomson’s. Originally it had 4 arches, with 2 allowing carts to pass at the riverside. These were filled in when the river banks were later built up to street level. Stone steps also once led up from the water-side to Bridge Street near the present Library (shown on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map), and another set by the railway, while a steep brae led from near the Buccleuch Memorial to the haugh where Duke Street was later built. In 2000 the bridge was closed to road traffic when the Waverley Bridge was opened to carry the main south-bound A7. It is a grade C listed building (called ‘the New Brig’ until the railway arrived in 1849, then more often referred to as ‘the Station Brig’).

North British Railway (north-bri’eesh-räl-wi) n. company that built the railway line south from Edinburgh, reaching Hawick in 1849, and then succeeded, amid bitter political rivalry, to extend the line to Carlisle, completing what would be known as the Waverley Line in 1862.

North Burn (north-burn) n. stream flowing into the Allan Water from the north-east. It rises on Chester Knowe near the former farmstead of Northcote Street

Newbigging and flows roughly south-west. It is also sometimes known as Newbiggin Burn.

Northcote Street (north-ko'-stree’) n. street between Dovecot Street and Laidlaw Terrace, built around 1884 and named after Sir Stafford Henry Northcote (1818–87), who was Chancellor of the Exchequer and Foreign Secretary (the fact that it is north of Dovecot Street can’t be a coincidence though!). The former joinery sheds of Archie Aimers on the south side were replaced in the 1980s by a small grassy area for the use of parents and small children.

Northcroft (north-kroft) n. former name for a farm lying between Stirches House and the Heap Hills. William Rutherford was recorded there in 1752. It was once part of the Langlands estate, but sold off around 1780. In 1788 it was valued at £20 and owned by Mrs. Shortreed, and she was still listed as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. James Black was farmer there in 1841 and the owner by about 1874 was John James Scott Chisholme. It was sometimes referred to as ‘Nethercroft’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Northcroft (north-kroft) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, above Commonside on Blaue’s 1654 map. It may be the place of that name referred to in a 1581 complaint when Ellliots there were molested by Scotts and others. It was part of the lands associated with Commonside that were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1591 when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. It was leased to Gilbert Elliot (now of Kirkton) again in 1603, when it was described as a 20-shilling land (it is ‘Norcroft’ in 1603).

North Croft Park (north-kroft-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It is listed in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield House’, valued at £52 2s 9d.

the North Crofts (thu-north-krofts) n. former name for an area of Denholm, corresponding to roughly the part later developed as Riverside Drive. It is said that in about 1860 Mr. Laidlaw was digging there when he came upon several stone cists containing human skeletons (also sometimes ‘North Croft’).

North Greenholm (north-green-hoom) n. former farmstead to the north of the main farm of Greenholm in Liddesdale. It is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, just east of Leahauha Cottage.

North Hermitage Street (north-her-mi’-eej-stree’) n. part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the north of Douglas Square. The British Legion Hall is at No. 3.

Northhouse (north-hoos) n. Northhouse, farm off the A7 between Newmill and Teviothead, near where the main road crosses the Teviot. The nearby side road goes up the Northhouse Burn to Old Northhouse (which is also referred to as just Northhouse). This was once part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. It was formerly home of a local branch of the Scotts and became part of the Buccleuch estates. John Scott was tenant there in 1498 and had 20 cows stolen by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510. In 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Braznholme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Thirlestane for his fee. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. Archibald Elliot of Fahnash was recorded being there in 1547. In 1553/4 the lands were still held in fee (along with Thirlestane) for the office of bailiery; they were together valued at £20 Scots at that time. William Scott of Bowden rented lands there from Melrose Abbey in about 1557 for £5. The lands are listed among those inherited by Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Scott of Satchells lists Walter of Northhouse as the first of the 24 ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’, and says he was the first Scott of Northhouse. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1607. ‘Will’ Scott of Northhouse was declared a rebel in 1608 after failing to answer to charges that he had raided Stobs, stealing the writs and charters for ransom. Another tenant, Archibald Scott is recorded in 1619. It was still listed as part of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. 5 people were listed there in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 7 hearths being recorded. Archibald Gledstains was tenant there in at least 1696–98 (he was recorded as ‘Mr’, suggesting he may have been the teacher or similar). Thomas Scott was living there in 1702. It was included in the survey of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it covered 1678 acres and was bounded by the River Teviot, Braidhaugh, Doecleuch, Skelfhill, Phaup and Southdeanrig. William Coltart was there in 1726. Thomas Elliot was renting the farm in the period 1745–48 and Robert Miller in 1747. Walter Irvine lived there around the 1760s. In at least the period 1791–97 the tenant was Thomas Scott. John Fenwick farmed there in the 1860s. In the early 20th century there were Amoses there.
Northhoose Brig

There was once a suggestion to divert the Hawick-Carlisle railway from there to Wilton Lodge. An ancient axe-head (perhaps bronze) found there was donated to the Museum in 1861, but subsequently disappeared (see also Auld Northhoose; the origin of the name is surely literal, and is also sometimes ‘Northhouses’; it appears from about 1500 as ‘Northous’, is ‘Northhouss’ in 1498, ‘northyous’ in 1502, ‘Norththous’ in 1524, ‘Northous’ in 1540, ‘Northows’ in 1547, ‘Northhouss’ in 1553/4, ‘Northous’ in 1557, 1561, 1619 and 1663 and ‘Northhouss’ in 1660 and 1661; it is already ‘Northhouse’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Northhoose Brig (north-hoos-brig) n. road bridge over the Teviot on the A7, near where the Northhouse Burn joins the River.

Northhoose Burn (north-hoos-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south, near Northhouse. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Cattrail.

Northhoose Chaipel (north-hoos-chā-pul) n. former chapel at Old Northhouse. Its location is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, although there are now no physical signs of it. It is said that there were burials in the attached graveyard until 1792, and several stones have been subsequently unearthed in the area. The graveyard is marked in 1863 on both sides of the stream, which is called the Chapel Burn. The chapel may have served the upper Teviotdale area before the chapel was built at Caerlenrig.

Northhoose Cottages (north-hoos-kō'-ee’jeez) n., pl. cottages at Northhouse, where the side road to the Allan Water (south from the A7) crosses the Northhouse Burn. A building that is no longer there is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Northhoosehaugh (north-hoos-hawch) n. former name for the flat ground by the Northhouse Burn, probably at ‘Auld Northhouse’, where the small church was built. There was once a farmstead, near where the Cattrail crossed the burn. James Miller was there in 1772.

North Liddle Street (north-li-dul-streec’) n. street in Newcastle on the west bank of the Liddel (or Liddle) Water.

North Ludge see Minto North Ludge

Northhope Burn (north-thup-burn) n. stream that rises north of Craik Cross Hill, in a set of sikes called March Sike, Corse Grain, Rashie Grain and Laird’s Cleuch Sike, and becomes one of the streams feeding the head of the Borthwick Water.

Northhope Haugh (nor-thup-hawch) n. farmstead in flat ground by the Northhope Burn, just to the west of Howpasley, in the upper Borthwick valley. About 250 m to the east are the remains of a large enclosure, with 2 smaller enclosures within it. And about 60 m to the south-west are another 2 small circular enclosures. The age of these features is not known. This was probably the farm of ‘Noirhop’ listed along with Craikhope in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish; together they were estimated at ‘100 lb., varicage 16 lb’. It was also listed along with Craikhope on a map of the Borthwick in 1650, having 8 ‘communicants’ between them.

North Port (north-pōr’) n. former entrance to the town at the top of Walter’s Wynd, between 47 and 49 High Street. This was the start of the road towards the North from the old town. A plaque was placed at 51 High Street by the Callants’ Club in 1964.

North Stewart Place (north-stew-ur’-plis) n. original name for the street joining East and West Stewart Places, which were all named after Rev. James Stewart and part of the area popularly known as Stewartfield. It is now part of East Stewart Place.

North Synton (north-sin’-in) n. farm to the east of Ashkirk, but on the north side of the Ale valley, distinct from the other Synton (or Sinton) farms on the south side. It may have been part of the same estate as South Synton in early times, but is separate from at least as early as 1407. In that year Archibald, Earl of Douglas, granted the lands to Barnaby Veitch of Dawyck. Alexander Veitch was recorded as owner in 1502. David Thomson was there in 1581/2. In 1601 it was described as having a ‘tower and fortalice’ and being an annexed part of the Barony of Dawyck. It was held by the Veitch family until 1641, when largely sold to Francis Scott of South Synton, except for Clerklands. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton, with the west side valued at £208 and the east side valued at £338. It was fully annexed to South Synton again in 1675. The ‘laird of North sintoun’ (who appears to have been Rev. Robert Cunningham) paid the land tax there on £600 in 1678; at the same time Francis Scott of Synton was the owner of Essenside, valued at £365. Francis Cunningham of North Synton is recorded in 1690 and his sister Maria was served as heir to his 50-shilling land there in 1691. Dr. Gideon Elliot (son of the tenant in Borthwick-shiel) became Laird through marriage to Margaret Cunningham in 1691. The main house was taxed for having 7 hearths in 1694, and there were 9 people further assessed for having a hearth (William and George Easton, George Scott, George Tait, James and John Veitch, Thomas Cochran and William Nichol), as well as 8 poor people (Bessie Murray, Isobel Turnbull, Isobel Dryden, Jean Foster, Jean Elliot, John Fraiter, Janet Veitch and Margaret Dunlop). Thomas Aitchison was a cottar there in 1698, when William Telfer was also living there. Robert Scott was a cottar there in 1719. Robert Hunter was tenant in 1737. Charles Scott lived there in the 1790s. James King was farmer there in 1797. The value was the same in 1707, £600. It was listed being owned by John Pringle of Clifton in 1788 (and still recorded this way in 1811), when valued along with Birkwood at £600. In the 1830s the lands were owned by Robert Pringle of Clifton. Andrew Riddell was farmer there in the 1860s, followed by John Riddell. The farmhouse was remodelled in the late 18th century, but contains parts of a 16th century building (the oblong part oriented east-west). The north-west extension and porch are modern. The house is 3 storeys on the south, but 2 on the north. The oldest part may have been built for James Veitch, who succeeded to the lands in 1536. The vaulted basement is still well preserved. There is also a ‘bun-shaped quern’ beside the east gable and a carved sandstone block built into the south gable. About 200 m north-west of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort, visible in aerial photographs. About 450 m to the north-west are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 600 m north is an old enclosure, with nearby rig lines. And just south of the road, a little to the east of the farm, are signs of another settlement (its approximate location is marked as ‘Sin'toun’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and as ‘North Sinnont’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Northswentoun’ in 1475, ‘Northsintoun’ in 1497, ‘Northsintone’ in 1525, ‘Norcht Synton’ in 1531, ‘North Syntoune’ in 1609 and 1691 and ‘Northsintone’ in 1704.

North Toon-o-Rule (north-toon-ō-rool) n. North Town-o’-Rule, name for a cottage at the north side of Town-o’-Rule farm, the same as the cottage known locally as Drythropple and renamed Heathfield for a while. This is where the poet John Halliday was living in 1851, as well as carrier John Gray and his family.

the North Tyne (thu-north-tin) n. river that rises near Kielder Water, being one of the major river valleys of the English Middle March and joining the South Tyne near Hexham – ‘Then seeking the south that held his shrine, Heard the low hills echo ‘To Tyne! To Tyne!’’ [WHO].

Northumbria (nor-thum-bree-a) n. ancient Kingdom of north-eastern England, also including parts of southern Scotland for centuries, and now the general name given to the English northeast. The kingdom was established around the year 600, including Bernicia (roughly from the Forth to the Tees) and Deira (roughly the Tees to the Humber). The name derived from being north of the Humber. Hawick would have been part of the Kingdom of Northumbria until the Battle of Carham in 1018.

Northumbrian (nor-thum-bree-in) adj. relating to present-day Northumberland or ancient Northumbria, n. the language spoken in Northumbria. This was originally one of Brythonic or ‘p-Celtic’ languages, most closely related to Old Welsh. In periods after about the 6th or 7th century the word is used to describe the early form of Anglian spoken throughout the Kingdom of Northumbria and that developed into Scots and in particular the Hawick dialect. Essentially the same form of p-Celtic is sometimes called ‘Cumbric’.

Northville (north-vil) n. private house at 25 North Bridge Street, which later became the Kings Hotel. The property behind it on Union Street was once the site of Teviot Grove Academy. The house was for a few years the home of the Blenkhorns.

North Witterside Road (north-wi’ur-süd-röd) n. name sometimes used for Commercial Road before the mid-19th century.

Norville (nor-vil) n. John (17th/18th C.) wig-maker from Greyfriars Parish in Edinburgh. In 1714 he produced a testimonial to Hawick Session from his previous parish attesting that he had made ‘his publick repentance for his scandal’ and could baptise his child. Alas in 1714 he was witness in Hawick to a baptism for Robert Miles. His son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1716 (also written ‘Norvell’).

Norwud (nor-wud) n. Norwood, house on Sunnhill, built for mill owner Peter Scott in 1904. It was designed by J.P. Alison in an Arts & Crafts style, with multiple gables and a castellated tower. It has an entrance porch and a first-floor balcony at the rear. Fashion parades from Pesco’s used to take place on the lawns of the terraced garden. The Scott family stayed there until 1964, and latterly it has been the home of the Paterson-Browns. It is a grade B listed building. The name is also used more generally for the area around Norwood itself. The ‘Norwood Trophy’ was gifted by Peter Scott and competed for among local bowling clubs.

the Norwud Trophy (\textit{thu-nor-wud-trö-fee}) \textit{n.} local bowling trophy, donated by manufacturer Peter Scott and named after his residence. It was presented after the earlier Beechwood Trophy was won outright by the Buccleuch Bowling Club in 1912.

nosey wundi (\textit{nō-zee-wun-di}) \textit{n.} an ‘inquisitive glass’, an angled mirror mounted outside a window to allow a view along the street without leaning out. Also referred to as ‘keekin’ or ‘peepin’ glasses. They were introduced by John Guthrie around 1898, when he made one for his house at 61 High Street, after seeing similar devices on buildings in narrow streets on the continent. They soon began to appear all over Hawick, and even spread to some neighbouring towns. Although they existed to a lesser extent elsewhere, they were peculiarly popular locally. Since the height of their popularity they have disappeared one by one. A census of 1989 revealed a total of 51 in Hawick, distributed amongst the Loan, Buccleuch Street, the Sandbed, Silver Street, the Howegate, Kirkstyle, the High Street, Oliver Place, Bourtree Place, Bourtree Terrace, Bridge Street, Croft Road, Laidlaw Terrace, Dovemount Place, and Princes Street.

nurseries (nur-su-reez) n. Hawick was once famous for its plant nurseries, which supplied a range plants to a wide area. A record of 1675 mentions the ‘plant market’ in Hawick. The first large-scale nursery was established at Hassendean by the Dicksons in 1728 and moved to Hawick in 1766 (as well as having premises near Dumfries, Edinburgh and Perth), supplying trees and shrubs to roughly half of the plantations in Scotland. The nurseries were at the east end of town, including land stretching from Oliver Crescent to DoVECote Street and also around Union Street and later extending to near where the Buccleuch Hotel is now. Dickson’s also had nursery land around Dickson Street and Wellfield, which became Dovemount Nurseries in the latter part of the 19th century. The firm of Dickson & Turnbull also used the Wester Nurseries, where the Playing Fields are now, including land later occupied by the cricket field, Parish Church and bowling greens. Many of these areas are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Forbes Nurseries (also known as the Buccleuch Nurseries) operated near Stonefield from 1879–1968 and were extremely well known in their day, being once a large employer in the town. When they closed it ended a long chapter of Hawick being prominent as a nursery centre, with perhaps the Walled Gardens and success in ‘Britain in Bloom’ being the remaining vestiges.

the Nursery Hoose (th-nur-su-re-hoos) n. former cottage at Bonchester Bridge. It lay on the east side of the Rule Water, opposite the farm of Langraw. It was also known as Bonchester Haughhead. The name came from the 2 acres of land there, which Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester set aside for growing young trees. George Adamson lived there around 1800. The farm there was tenanted by the Turnbulls in the 19th century. Sometime in the latter part of the 19th century the cottage was pulled down to build an addition to the blacksmith’s house near the Bridge (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

oak leaves (ök-leevz) n., pl. symbolic adornment worn at certain times during the Common Riding, fancifully imagined to harken back to Druidic times. After the Cornet’s Breakfast on the Friday morning sprigs of oak leaves are given to the guests and worn for the remainder of the day. The Drums and Fifes wear them prominently in their hats. Before the mid-19th century, the Cornet and his guests used to march to the Haugh after the dinner to dance the Reel, each bearing an oak twig on his hat and breast. The wearing of ‘chaplets of oak . . . by the young men’ was reported to be an old custom by James Wilson in 1850. The practice of wearing oak leaves discontinued after 1855, but was revived in 1886, and has been a part of the Common Riding ever since. The origin is mysterious, and there are many theories, from pagan symbolism to a relationship with trees near Hornshole – ‘What means that youthful band so gay, With oaken boughs in trim array, With frequent shout, and loud hurray, Drum, fife, and fiddle?’ [WiS], ‘. . . An’ wear an oak leaf in ma coat, An’ join in the sang’ [LJ], ‘Ne’er picked a callant that was prooder Tae weer oaken leaf on shoorder’ [MB].

the Oak Trei (thù-ök-tri) n. well-known former landmark on the New Road, near the entrance to the Volunteer car par. Although it marked no boundary, nor had specific historical significance, it was a familiar sight for generations, and a popular turning point for walks along the New Road, particularly before the Park was acquired. It was said to have been the last of a long line of trees that ran over the hill in a southerly direction, perhaps starting near the Howegate. The tree was cut down in 1984 following storm damage, and a replacement planted in the adjoining sports ground – ‘. . . Till the auld Oak Tree rocks to our glee, for I really believe – don’t you? – It would like to be the Cornet’[JYH].

the Oak Trei (thu-äk-tri) n. the Oak Tree, a public house on the north side of Buccleuch Street, also referred to as ‘the Oak’ (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map). This building was later the entrance to Elliot’s skinnery.

The Observer (thu-ob-ser-vur) n. early, but short-lived periodical, based in the Scottish Borders. I started in 1835 and only ran to a handful of issues. The editor was Alexander Jeffrey, and it was printed by James Bryan, Jedburgh.

obtemper (ob-tem-pur) v., arch. to obey, comply with, fulfil an injunction – ‘We oblige ourselves to obtemper and fulfil the same ...’[BR], ‘...he would cause delate him to the circuit ensuing, if he walked not more submissively and obtempering of ye laws both of God and man’[PR1716], ‘...at least while he obtemper the act above specified allowing him three days to remove ...’[BR1738] (Scots Law term).

occasion (ö-kä-shin) n. a circumstance, opportunity, pretext, cause, inducement – ‘...compaered Mr Lithgo, officer of ye excyse, and confessed that he was occasion of ane meeting in Thomas Hugan’s house’[PR1716].

the Occasion (thu-ö-kä-shin) n. former popular name for the celebration of Holy Communion in local churches, an important event in the community calendar. In Hawick it took place about the harvest season until the beginning of the 19th century, when complaints by farmers had it moved to the last Sunday in June. The Wednesday before Communion was Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 services. There was also a service on the Saturday, being the day of preparation, and often 2 more services on the following Monday. The Communion itself was on the Sunday and typically lasted from 8 a.m. until about 6 p.m., with a short break for rest and refreshments, and 4 or 5 different ministers officiating. The length of the services declined through the 19th century.

och (och) interj. expression of surprise, disgust, regret or resignation, sometimes preceded by ‘tut’ – ‘och, A’ve hed enough o this’, ‘tut, och yowe an yer stippet ideas’, ‘och it’s juist a wee scratch’, also used as a general preface to any remark – ‘och, A suppose si’, ‘och saufe me for thy mercie’s sak’[HSR], ‘Och howe gret is thy guidniss ...’[HSR], ‘Och, d’ye think I’m an Irishman, D’ye think I’m an Irishman’[JEDM], ‘Och, Robert, lad ...just days syne I was gi’en A pickle Smith’s fifteen-er Glenlivet ...’[DH].

Ochiltree (ö-chil-tree) n. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Wchtltir’ when he was witness to the 1452 sasine for William Douglas of Drumlanrig being regranted the Barony of Hawick. This was signed in Hawick by a number of local men, the list also including Robert, who must have been related. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1452 sasine for the Barony of Hawick, where he is ‘Roberto Wchtiltre’ and his name appears among a list of 4 Burgesses of Hawick. He must have been closely related to James who is also listed.

ochon (och-ən) interj., poet. emphatic version of ‘och’ – ‘Ochon! e’er Scotlan’ murs’d the chiel, That e’er should spae her lost to freedom’ [JoHa], ‘I was happy an’ healthy, an’ stoot, yauld, an’ bang; Ochon for the weary beginning o’t’ [JoHa].

ocht (ocht) v., arch. to own, pp. owned, possessed of (and usually following the verb ‘to be’) – ‘Quheae’ll bey awcht them (or aa them) a hunder yeir aifter thys?’ [JAHM], ‘At yeh shop-door a motor stuid, an forrit A gaed to finnd oot whae was ocht eet’ [ECS], ‘Whae’s ocht this? = whose is this’ [ECS] (cf. awe, awnd, aucht, ownd; note the use of the past participle form to mean ‘is possessed of’ rather than ‘possesses’, switching the subject and object compared with English).

ocht (ocht) pp., arch. ought, should – ‘Moo indeed, ye drucken auld thief that ocht tae be ashamed o’ yersel’ [JEDM] (also ochut).

ochts (ochtss) pron., arch. anything, aught – ‘Next A speerd if A cood geet ochts ti eat, – if there was a mael o meat ti be bocht’ [ECS], ‘Game for ochts, A smuived steevely on about therty yards ahint um’ [ECS], ‘Hei mae be deed for ochts A ken’ [ECS].

O’Connell Street (ō-ko-nul-stree) n. built around 1837 and named after Irish statesman and reformer Donald O’Connell (1775–1847). A pended house known as the Rambler’s was demolished to make the gap in the south side of the High Street. The street has always had a kink in the middle. In the mid-20th century, No. 7 was J. Pollock, grocers, while Mrs. Mather’s was at the corner with Murray Place. In 1968 Murray Place was incorporated into the street. The upper part of the south side was demolished after WWII, with further buildings being replaced by a garden and car park in 1972. It is home to a medical centre, previously the Congregational Church, and a fitness centre, which was previously the local British Legion branch. The Drums and Fifes march up here and over to Brougham Place on ‘the NIcht Afore the Morn’.

the October Tryst (thu-ok-tō-bur-trist, -trist) n. former cattle and horse market, happening on the third Tuesday in October from 1780. It was well known as a market for Highland kyloes and held around the foot of the Vertish Hill or Thortherykes. By the latter part of the 19th century it had become only a horse market.

Od (ōd) interj., arch. emphatic version of God, used as a mild oath – ‘Od! there’s some fowk has a face for anything’ [JoHa], ‘Od, what a struggle lang they’ve had – But opposition brightens trade’ [JoHa].

o’d (ōd, od) contr. of it, often treated as a single word – ‘Ah’m seek o’d’, ‘A’ll hev nane o’d’, ‘there’s nae need o’d’, ‘the worst o’d aye es . . .’, ‘ee deh ken the hauf o’d’, ‘A’m gettin’ aboot sick o’d, this Canadian wunter’s a couched’ [JEDM], ‘The Borderers lang syne geh theirsels an awfth leife o’d’ [ECS], ‘It’s oot o sicht; oo cana sei ocht o’d’ [ECS], ‘…bit it disneh say whuther the punters or the bookies cam oot o’d best’ [BW1974], ‘…but his mother talked um o’d and insted hei became a painter and decorator’ [IW], ‘…there’s a wee medicinal refreshment at the end o’d . . .’ [CT], ‘…Aw can kindeh mind o’d still’ [RM] (cf. the less common o’t).

the Oddfellihs (thu-od-fe-liz) n. the Scottish Order of Oddfellows Loyal Border League, a mutual aid society. A local branch, Lodge ‘Loyal Border’, No. 5 Waverley District existed in Hawick in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They met in the Buccleuch Hotel for a while, and the insurance money would be collected weekly from the house of each member. Another lodge was started in Denholm in 1843 and named after John Leyden.

Oddfellihs’ Haa (od-fe-liz-haw) n. Oddfellows’ Hall, also known as the Oddfellows Arms. It was a public house at the foot of O’Connell Street, on the east side (Murray Place for a while) in the mid-19th century. The proprietor in the earlier years was Thomas Scott. The building became the Central Tea Rooms and later the Legion.

odds (odz) n., arch. difference, disparity – ‘A didka ken a grain o odds o’d for aa A hedna seem’t thregh kens-whan’ [ECS] (often followed by the preposition ‘o’ meaning ‘in’ here; see also what’s the odds).
Oddy (o-dee) n. Arthur taken on as trainee manager at Hawick knitwear manufacturers Pringle’s in 1924. Along with William Mac- taggart, who joined a year later, the pair became Directors in 1932 and Managing Directors a year later, managing the firm through the mid-20th century. He resigned in 1945, leaving Mactaggart as sole Managing Director.

the Odeon (thu-o-dee-in) n. name for the Exchange Buildings when it became part of the Odeon cinema chain in the mid-20th century.

Ode to Hawick (od-too-hIk) n. title of probably the first known example of a poem written to celebrate Hawick, penned by Rev. Robert Cunningham in 1710.

Odin (odin) n. supreme Norse deity, god of wisdom, art, culture and the dead, traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin! On the bloody field of Flodden’ [JH], ‘The Common-Riding is at hand, That festival sae great and grand, And ower Auld Hawick waves Odin’s wand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS] (although the myth persists, there is no historical evidence to believe that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and the connection between Hawick and Thor and Odin may well be traced to the Victorian attempts to decipher the ‘Teribus’ slogan, perhaps inspired by Hogg’s rhyming of ‘Odin’ with ‘Flodden’).

o’ee (oi) contr. of you – ‘wull the per o’ee carry this?’ (pronounced as a single diphthong and treated like one word).

of (of, ov) prep., arch. by, via – ‘...ilk ane that refuses under the pane of £4 Scots, to be paid to the Bailies of fine for their refusal’ [BR1657] (see also o).

of coorse (ov-koors) adv. of course – ‘Of course, there wad be ma ain shadow, but that wad be on ma richt hand side’ [BCM1880], ‘I was of coorse, dumfounded, never counting on sic a possibility...’ [BCM1881], ‘...But of coorse Hei was aye bothert Wi’ his back’ [DH] (see also coorse).

offecial (o-fee-shul) n. an official, adj. official – ‘Since their yin and only offecial drink on the Friday mornin is a sma’ tot o rum wi’ milk added...’ [CT].

offen (o-fin) adv. often, frequently – ‘oo we’ there offen’, ‘hei offen follied the Cornet’, ‘it’s no offen ee’re wrang, bit ee’re right agin!’ , ‘...whan A’m seek-staaed o the... preididh blusterereen that a body offen hes ti thole’ [ECS], ‘...Hei’s of’en shod ma clutes’ [JSB], ‘...Yet I doubtna’ that of’en they think o’ the name...’ [JCG], ‘...be gittin the visitin principals up ti sing their songs, or mair offen – their song, or even mair offen – their verse!’ [IHS] (sometimes pronounced with no second vowel sound; also spelled ‘of’en’ or ‘often’ as in English).

offendit (o-fen-di’, -di’) pp., adj. offended – ‘...sal pay £10 to the bailies, by satisfaction to the partie offendit, and sal lie acht days in the stockis...’ [BR1640], ‘...and it appeared to be offendit, for it left the house and gaed away down the burn side’ [LHTB], ‘Ye tell him that he’s looking weel, His soul is fair offendit...’ [WP].

offerit (o-fee-ree’, -ri’) pp., adj. offered – ‘...gif ony persone or personis allegis or acclames ony rycht of the said tenement of land offerit to the said baillie to fynd caution...’ [SPB1579].

offi (o-fi) prep. off of, from off, usually used where ‘of’ would be sufficient in standard English – ‘A’ll no tell ee again ti git offi there’, also used where ‘from’ would be standard English – ‘whae did ee git that offi?’ (see also off).

office-hoose (o-fees-hoos) n., arch. an out-house, workshop, outbuilding in which manual work is carried out – ‘...liberty to cast, win, and carry off from Hawick Muir divots for covering part of the office houses at Branksholm...’ [BR1765].

officer (o-fee-sur) n. an official of the Burgh, Court, Church, Presbytery, etc., whose duties include keeping order at meetings and delivering messages – Item, whatsomer person that sal deforce the officer in execution of his office...’ [BR1640], ‘The toon officers to wait upon ye Queer door during ye Service’ [PR1718], ‘...the presbytery officer, after threes oyesses, ordered all persons...to give in their reasons...why Mr Cunningham may not be admitted and thi day fixed minister of the parish of Hawick’ [PR1712], ‘They were overtaken by the Presbytery officer on horseback, who was a character in his way. He was wont to be called in, after the ordinary Presbytery dinners, to have a glass of beer, and drink the healths of members all round, address- ing them by their Latin names, and the clerk as ‘Brother officer’ [RJRK].

off-luif (oof-lif, -loof) adv., arch. off-hand, at once, straightforward, on the spur of the moment, extempore – ‘His head an’ heart’s as soft as unclea’d gravly, An’ her’s, jermuint by his off-loof patter, Gaes topsy-turvy, ne’er a whit its better’[JoHa], ‘Jethart Castle! A body was need ti ken’d off leike as Wattie Laidlaw kennd eet, for ti tell owre, off-luif, aa its dambrod-checket story’[ECS], ‘Off-luif, ei made twae wrang shots for ti tell owre, off-luif, aa its dambrod-checket story’[ECS], ‘also written ‘offluif’ and ‘off-loof’).

off o (oof-o) adv. off of, from – ‘take yer elbis off o the table’ ‘pookin ‘cheese-an-breed’ off o the hedges ti nattle a’[ECS], ‘Gie’s a sheeve ooff that laif’[ECS], used especially to denote familial relationship – ‘she was off o that kind’[CoH] (also ‘off-o’, ‘off o’, ‘off-ov’, etc., cf. offi).

off-pit (oof-pi) n., arch. an excuse, pretext for delay, diversion – ‘It was duist an offpit! A ken ‘im owre weel!’[GW], a makeshift, hasty meal – ‘...seu Ancrum, an getet a chack o something ti ither as an off-pit!’[ECS], a procrastinator, v., arch. to put off, delay – ‘...A’d ti turn away for aa aa ma offpitteen an daidleel’en’[ECS], adj., arch. temporary, makeshift.

off-takin (oof-ta-kin) adj., arch. mocking, sneering, sharp-tongued, hurtful of feelings (noted by E.C. Smith).

off the bit (oof-thu-bi) adv. off the place, moving – ‘...or thance A micht never lieh gotten off the bit aa day’[ECS] (see bit).

of’t (oft) contr. of it – ‘The leader of the train got oft, A crackit croon to claw’[JT] (also spelled ‘oft’).

Ogill (o-gul) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Ogil’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. ‘Joh. Ogil’ witnessed charters for Adam Hepburne of Craigs in Edinburgh in 1501 and 1506 and could be the same man or related.

Ogilvie (o-gul-vee, -bee) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1656 for Archibald Stewart and in 1661 for Patrick Redford, for John Tudhope, for James E... (along with John Tudhope) and for William Stewart. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Branxholme. His wife Jean Chisholm’s will is recorded in 1684. The fact that he was at Branxholme suggests a connection between this family and the Scotts of Buccleuch a generation earlier than when there were Ogilvie Chamberlains. He may have been brother of William and perhaps Gideon. He was also surely related to Andrew and James, who were tenants in Branxholme farms in the 1690s. He witnessed a baptism for James Baptie in 1678 and another for Patrick Scoon in 1685. Adam of Hartwoodmyres (17th/18th C.) only son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1708 he was ‘younger’ when he was listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Selkirkshire. He was probably the ‘younger of Hartwoodmyres’ who was one of the original members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. In 1708 he married Jean Erskine of Dryburgh, and she died at an advanced age in 1761. Their children included: Margaret (b.1709), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1732; Elizabeth (b.1711); William of Hartwoodmyres (b.1712); James (b.1714), who may have died young; Katherine (b.1718), born in Hawick Parish, who married Walter Grieve, tenant at Branxholm Park; and Isabel (b.1720). He may be the unnamed son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull born in Hawick Parish in 1684. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Ogilvie’ of Hartwoodmyres, who in 1757 witnessed a baptism for Katherine Ogilvie (her daughter) and Walter Grieve. Adam of Hartwoodmyres (1745/6-1809) son of William and Elizabeth Elliot. He may also have been referred to as ‘of Chesters’. He was an advocate and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1775. He helped form the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. He served as an executor for Henry Elliot of Peel, who died in 1780. He paid the land tax on about £460 for Hartwoodmyres in 1785. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Ogilvie

Buccleuch, taking over from William (his father) in 1787. He was living at Branxholme in 1785–88 when he paid a tax for 2 female servants, increasing to 3 in 1789 and 1790 and 2 again in 1791. He also paid tax on 2 male servants at Branxholme from at least 1785, and 1 in 1788–94. He was recorded at Branxholme on the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5 and 1797/8, as well as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and for having 4 carriage or saddle horses. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, where his vote is described as ‘partle a liferent vote from Cornelius Elliot, W.S., his brother-in-law’; if this is true then there has been confusion over the identity of his wife. He was also recorded as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Branxholme in 1785–97, when he had up to 4 horses. In around 1802 he paid about £460 in land tax on Hartwoodmyres. He was listed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1805. He was a trustee for the estate of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’. In 1806 he consulted with the Council about the appointment of Hawick’s next schoolmaster. He married Anne Renata, daughter of Gavin Elliot of Midlem Mill in 1787; they had a large family. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He appears to have served as Chamberlain until around 1808, after which his trustees are referred to, suggesting he died around then. He died at Branxholme.

Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Greens in Liddesdale. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, along with ‘L., mason’ (probably ‘Little’), to whom he was surely related. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He may have been son of James (who was also a resident of Branxholme). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for William Oliver, ‘servitor’ in Todshawhaugh. He married Isobel Halliday in Hawick in 1707. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1708, with witnesses William Elliot in the Sandbed and Henry Orrock. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish, recorded in a legal document in 1721. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Douglas and their children included: Isobel (b.1735); and William (b.1737). Alexander (1715/6–71) resident of the Greens in Castleton Parish. His wife was Elizabeth Little, who died in 1793, aged 56. Their children included William (1768/9–1818), who died at Greens. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Andrew of Newlands (17th/18th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the same Andrew whose servant Andrew Lamb was listed among Covenanters in 1684. In 1696 and 1697 he leased a third of the farm of Branxholme Mains. James, who also leased a third, must have been a close relative, and he was surely also related to Adam, recorded in 1705. How these Ogilvies were related to the later Chamberlains at Branxholme is unclear; however, it is possible he is son of James, who was also a householder in Branxholme (and died in 1706). Probably the same Andrew witnessed baptisms in 1704 for William Scott in Branxholme, in 1708 for James Scott ‘Laird’ and in 1713 for Thomas Anderson in Branxholme Town. He was also recorded in 1719 in a declaration regarding the commonty between Wauchope and Templehall. In 1719 he was in Branxholme when his servant William Hume got married to Helen Govenlock (servant to William, also at Branxholme). He was father of William, and the pair witnessed a baptism for John Cavers (herd in Branxholme) in 1711. He also witnessed some of the births of the children of William Ogilvie in Hawick, presumably his son. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in Hawick in 1730. It is unclear if his lands of Newlands were those in Lilliesleaf or Castleton. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in 1754 when the Town Council paid for cords to bind him, as well as paying for him to be watched. He was presumably imprisoned for some crime. Rev. Andrew (1731–1805) son of William and Martha Laing, who were from Hawick. He was the 14th child, his father being tenant at Broadhaugh. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Langholm in 1758 and ordained by the Dissenting Church of Newcastle at the Groatmarker Meeting-house. He became minister at Linton in 1781. He married Agnes Lomax from Newcastle in 1767 and she died in 1808. Their children were: Eleanor; Jane; Margaret; William; Joseph; and John. He wrote about the Parish of Linton for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. David of Brieryards (1726–c.83) probably son of William. He paid the window tax for Brieryards in 1748. His daughter Martha married Thomas Turnbull in 1757 and he witnessed baptisms for the couple in 1758 and 1759. He was added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was involved in a court case against Capt. John Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the Ogilvie of ‘Bririeywards’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Brieryards passed to the Turnbulls (through his daughter) in 1783, suggesting that he was deceased by then. George (d.1807) listed as ‘Messenger’ in Hawick on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His death is recorded in the Scots Magazine, where he is also ‘messenger’, presumably meaning he was some kind of agent, possibly a ‘messenger-at-arms’, a lawyer appointed to execute summonses. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1794 for James Scott and Isabel Hogg. He was probably the George who was married to Margaret Learmonth and who had several children born in Hawick: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1781); John (b.1783); Alexander (b.1785); Michael (b.1788); Mary (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and George (b.1794). Gideon (17th C.) one of the earliest known members of this Roxburghshire family. In 1656 he married Susannah Scott of Harden (probably daughter of Sir William Scott). Their son William was the first Laird of Hartwoodmyres. Henry (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as proprietor of Hartwoodmyres. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. James (d.1706) indweller in Branxholme. In 1694 he was recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 and 1697 he leased a third of the farm of Branxholme Mains. Andrew, who also leased a third, must have been a close relative (perhaps his son) and he was surely also related to Adam, recorded in Branxholme in 1684. He is probably the James who (along with Francis Scott in Branxholme) witnessed a baptism for Walter Chisholme in 1684. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for a Grieve in 1698. In 1700 James Scott in Stobicote was fined for ‘forestalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from his servant and then selling it to a butcher. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott (also in Branxholme), for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and for James Laidlaw (in Branxholme Town). He was recorded as tenant in Branxholme (along with John Scott) when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, herd in Branxholme ‘Town’. In 1704 he was ‘tenant in Branocholm’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson. He received the lands of Hoscote ‘in liferent’ in 1705 from William Scott of Harden. He married Jane Elliot and their son was William, possibly the William born in Hawick around 1670. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1701, including one for Bailie Walter Elliot. His daughter Jane died in 1701 (when he gave money to the Parish). Other children were Adam, Andrew (probably the resident of Branxholme) and Alexander. He is probably the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh in at least the period 1690–98. James (18th C.) saddler in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John (b.1794/5) born in Cavers Parish, he was farmer at Cooms in Ewes Parish. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Jane Common and their children included Janet, Margaret, William, John, Adam, Robert and Sibella. Rev. John H. (19th/20th C.) minister of Lilliesleaf Free Kirk 1926–28, probably its last years. Little (1793/4–1862) stone mason at the Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Jane Little, who died in 1879, aged 81. Their children included: Margaret (1819/20–40); Jane or Janet (1825/6–46); Elizabeth (1826/7–47); Mary (b.c.1827); William (1828/9–1900); Rabina (b.c.1839); Margaret (again, 1842/3–81); and Joan Black (1845/6–1913). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, and was probably son of Adam from there, who also subscribed. Michael (18th/19th C.) local whip-maker. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Murray. His sons were John and Andrew, who died in infancy. He could be the spinner Michael whose child died in Hawick in 1815. Mr. ?? of Teindrside (18th C.). Recorded as ‘Mr Ogilbie of Tiendside’ in 1729 when he rented the Hawick ‘litter’ for a funeral. He may have been William or one of the other local Ogilvies. Robert (17th C.) witness in 1632 for the reversion document for Harwood by Edward Lorraine. Robert (18th C.) overseer for the early spinning company set up in Hawick by a group of local gentlemen. He was in this position for only a couple of years from about 1741. He could be the Robert who in 1720 married Jean, daughter of Robert Ruecastle. He may be the Robert who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Broadhaugh (and others), recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–94. He was also owner of 5 farm horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Hartwood. In 1705 he acted as factor for the young Margaret, daughter of the deceased John Scott of Synton. He may have been son of the 1st Laird of Hartwoodmyres and younger brother of Adam. Thomas Elliot ‘Tom’ of Chesters (1751–1831) 2nd son of William of Hartwoodmyres and Elizabeth Elliot, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He joined the Madras civil service at the age of 19, becoming paymaster at Vellore, which was under siege in the early 1780s. He retired in 1786 and bought Crailling, then sold it the next year so he could purchase Chesters from the Bennet family. There he had a mansion designed by local architect William Elliot, the construction being completed in 1790. While it was being built he lived at Gala House. In 1788 he owned Chesters and associated lands (valued at £965 2s 3d), Lanton Mill and associated lands (valued at £93 9s 5d), as well as the farm of Newton (valued at £853 6s 8d) on the opposite side of the Tievot from Chesters, plus associated teinds. In 1788 he was mentioned as about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He was at Chesters in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. In 1791 he also witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. He was taxed for owning a carriage in the 1780s and 90s and had 5 female and 4 male servants at Gala House in 1788 and 2 female servants in 1789. By 1790 he was at Chesters, and he had 7 or 8 servants there until at least 1797. He also paid tax for having 4 horses at Chesters in the period 1790–97. He was additionally taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He paid the land tax at Chesters and Lanton in 1811, as well as for lands around Newton in Bedrule Parish valued at about £850. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, both times along with his son William. He joined the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry and served as Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. He is listed as proprietor of Chesters on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a friend of the writer Sir Walter Scott. In 1782 he married Hannah (1753–1833), 2nd daughter of Robert Dashwood and widow of Dr. Pasley. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1783); William (b.1785), Chamberlain to Bucleuch; Adam (1792–1872), who married Letitia Keys Spence; George, who died young; Margaret (b.1795); and Jane, who married Donald Horne of Stirkoke. He may be the Thomas ‘Esq’ for whom a child’s baptism appears to be recorded in Hawick in 1786, but crossed out. One of his daughters was probably the inspiration for the tune ‘Miss Ogilvie of Chesters Waltz’, published around 1810. Thomas Elliot of Chesters (1821–1896) eldest son of William and Alexina Falconer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Hope, only daughter of Henry Reeve. His widow took possession of the estate after his death. William (17th C.) married to Elspeth Turnbull. Their unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1684. William of Hartwoodmyres (d.1716) son of Gideon and Susannah Scott of Harden. He was progenitor of the Chesters branch of the family. He could be the William who had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk in 1683 and 1684. He is probably the William who leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1691 and who was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, paying tax on 2 hearths. He was in Todshawhill in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. He was again listed as tenant of Todshawhill in 1696. He purchased Hartwoodmyres in 1694 and in 1705 bought Brieryards from the Scotts. In 1695 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. He is probably the Laird of Hartwoodmyres who witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme of Stiches in 1708. He also witnessed a baptism in 1709 for Francis Scott of Newton. He married Elizabeth Turnbull of Tofts and had one son, Adam. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Craik, where he is recorded in at least the period 1713–27. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott of Merrylaw. His children, baptised in Roberston Parish, probably included: Andrew (b.1714); Edward (b.1716); William (b.1716); Alexander (b.1717); Robert (b.1720); Adam (b.1721); an unnamed child (b.1726); and William (again, b.1727). William (c.1670–1755) possibly son of James and Jane Elliot. He was tenant farmer at Broadhaugh. In 1715 he married Martha Laing (c.1680–1735); she was daughter of Bailie William Laing. Most of their children were baptised in Hawick. Their children included: James (b.1716); William (b.1718), probably father of the farmer at Broadhaugh and Whitrope; Jean (b.1720); Walter (b.1721); Janet (b.c.1722), who married John Potts in Castleton; Adam (b.1724); Edward (b.c.1725) died young; David (b.1726) of Brieryards; Robert (b.c.1727); Alexander (b.c.1728); Martha (1728/9–1825), who married Thomas Turnbull in Hawick and died aged 96; Betsy (c.1730–52); Andrew (b.1731), minister at Linton; and Margaret (b.1735). The witnesses in 1718 were William Laing, ‘lait Bailie of Hawick’ (probably his father-in-law) and John Watson, Clerk (to the Regality). It is possible he is the same man as William of Hoscoate. William of Hoscoate (18th C.) probably son of Andrew. The pair witnessed a baptism for John Cavers, herd in Branxholme, in 1711 and for Thomas Anderson in Branxholme Town in 1713. In 1718 he is recorded in a baptism being ‘of Dolieridge [perhaps Deloraine], tenant in Branxholm’. In 1718 he was in Branxholme when his servant William Mitchell-hill was married. In 1719 he was in Branxholme when his servants Helen Govenlock married William Hunie (servant to Andrew, also at Branxholme) and Margaret Grieve married Walter Bowie. He was one of the Commissioners appointed to oversee the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. He is probably the William ‘in Branxholm of Hahoep’ (this being indecipherable, and possible Hoscote is meant) recorded renting from the Duke of Buccleuch in Cavers Parish in 1723; he also rented Meadshaw that same year. In 1731 he obtained the tenancy of Whitchesters from Robert Scott of Falnash. In 1735 he leased Branxholme Park and part of Branxholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also rented Branxholme Park and other properties in 1737. He was one of 4 men to propose building a still-house and brewery in 1738, for which Robert Elliot of Fenwick was leased land by the Duke of Buccleuch the following year; this may have become Hawick’s first distillery and brewery on Sltitrig Crescent. He witnessed baptisms in 1738 for a daughter of Town Clerk James Weir and for merchant Andrew Riddell. There is a document of 1739 regarding a dispute between him and Walter Scott of Harden over the lands of Hoscote. His daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1728. He may be the same man as the William recorded at Craik in at least 1714–17. It is possible he is the same William as the tenant in Broad-haugh. William of Hartwoodmyres (b.1712) son of Adam and Jean Erskine. In 1741 he was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh. He was Bailie to the Regality of Jedforest and attached baronies, i.e. appointed as factor to the Duke of Douglas for properties in the Southdean area, as well as elsewhere. He is probably the William recorded in Selkirk in receipts ‘for supply’ in 1742 and ‘for burgh cess’ in 1745 and in a discharge of 1744. In 1745 he was visited by members of Prince Charlie’s army on their way to England, and forced to pay a ‘tax’. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch from at least 1756 until about 1786, when he was replaced by Adam (probably his son). He acted as Chamberlain for Melrose, Ettrick Forest, Has-sendean and Burnfoot. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for his brother-in-law Walter Grieve, tenant in Branxholme Park. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He appears to have resided at Branxholme from about 1767, the first Chamberlain to do so. In 1777 he had correspondence with William Scott of Woll over shares of the Moss (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection). In 1778 and 1779 he paid tax for having a male servant at Branxholme. In 1745 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot (who bought Wolfelee). Their children were: Adam (d.1809), also Chamberlain, who died at Branxholme; Thomas Elliot (b.1751); William, who served with the Royal Navy and died in Antigua; and probably Jane (1758–1802), who married Maj. Gen. William Balfour. There are portraits of him and his wife. He (or another William) may also have married a daughter of John Laing of Westerkirk. William (b.1777) younger son of William, Chamberlain at Branxholme. He entered the Royal Navy in 1775 and died of fever in Antigua. William (1768/9–1818) probably son of Alexander and Elizabeth Little. He was farmer at Greens in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. His children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1796/7–1870), who married Peter Hope; and probably Little (1793/4–1862), stonemason. William ‘Willie’ (1785–1876), J.P., Laird of Chesters, eldest son of Thomas Elliot and Hannah Dashwood. He was born in India, educated at Edinburgh High School, and then trained as an advocate (although he never practised). He became 2nd Lieutenant in the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry in 1803 (although he missed the ‘False Alarm’, being in Edinburgh at college). He was still ‘junior of Chesters’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. Before he succeeded to Chesters he lived at Ettrickbank, where it said that Burke and Hare would stop by in 1818 with fresh fish on their wagon (which would later convey a corpse back to Edinburgh). He succeeded to Chesters in 1831 and sold the farm of Newton to Thomas Scott of Peel in 1833. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at least 1836–76 (replacing Major Riddell of Muselee), dealing with business around Hawick, as well as Teviothead, Jedburgh, Selkirk, Eckford and St. Boswells. He thus continued the tradition of his uncle and grandfather. He was the Chamberlain who was living at Branxholme around 1840 when the castle was renovated. A letter from him protesting about the content of Rev. J.A. Wallace’s sermon in Hawick in 1841 is in the National Archives, as well as further letters relating to the siting of the Free Kirk. He was recorded at Branxholme in the 1841

William George, Frank and Alexina. He died at Chesters (d.1830) said to be brother of Andrew, minister of Linton, and related to the Chesters family. He was probably actually nephew of Rev. Andrew and hence grandson of William, tenant at Broadhaugh. He is probably the William who farmed at Broadhaugh himself. ‘Mr Wm. Ogilvie, Broadhaugh’ is listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (18th/19th C.) possibly son of Robert, who was farmer at Broadhaugh in 1797. He farmed at Whitrope as well as Broadhaugh. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1825 he married Janet Byers, who died in 1888, aged 84. Their son was William Robert (b.1827). William Robert (b.1827) son of William and Janet Byers. He farmed at Broadhaugh and Whitrope. He was listed at Broadhaugh in 1866. On the 1851 census he employed 20 labourers, and they had 2 household servants. William Henry ‘Will’ (1869–1963) poet, who wrote many popular Border poems, including ‘The Road to Roberton’, ‘The Raiders’, ‘Ho! For the Blades of Harden’ and ‘The Barefoot Maid’. He was born at Holefield farm near Kelso, where his father George was a reasonably well-off tenant farmer, 3 past generations of his family having served as Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was the eldest boy in a family of 8 and was educated at Kelso Grammar School by a governess, at Prep School in Yorkshire, and at Fettes College. He spent 1889–1901 in Australia working as a drover and breaker of wild horses, and there his poems of the outback life are well-known. He worked at Belalie Station in Queensland and Maroupe Station in South Australia and became a friend of Harry ‘Breaker’ Morant. He briefly lived in America (with an appointment to the Department of Agricultural Literature in State College, Iowa), and returned to Britain in 1905. He later became a journalist in Edinburgh and was Chair of Agricultural Journalism at Iowa University for 2 years. He returned to the Borders and married Madge Scott-Anderson of Ettrickshaws in 1908. They raised their son and daughter at Bowden and then moved to Kirklea in Ashkirk, where he spent the rest of his life. He visited Hawick often, for example as Callants’ Club guest in 1910. He was also a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He wrote for various newspapers and magazines as well as publishing 16 books of verse and 4 volumes of prose, and was appointed official Bard to the Buccleuch Hunt. ‘My Life in the Open’ (1908) is an early autobiography, while ‘Whaup O’ the Rede’ (1909) is an epic poem of over 100 pages, and ‘The Land We Love’ (1910) is a collection. Many of his local poems collected in ‘The Border Poems of Will H. Ogilvie’ (1959, 1993). His ashes were scattered on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’. Scocha set his poem ‘The Land We Love’ to music in 2004, and used it as the title for their second album. A cairn was erected in his honour in 1993 on the road between Ashkirk and Roberton, with a memorial plaque (sculpted by Bill Landles) and a replica at Bourke in Australia. After being vandalised, a replacement plaque will be placed at Harden. 2019 marked his 150th anniversary, with an exhibition in the Museum, publication of a reproduction version of ‘Whaup o’ the Rede’, the unveiling of the new cairn and a memorial service in Ashkirk Kirk – ‘Your cairn looks down on Ale Water’s vale and the bonny Linns to Hawk’s Nest, Whitslade and Blawearie where the hill road rins’ [GM] (formerly written ‘Ogilvy’, etc. and sometimes ‘Ogilbie’ or ‘Ogilby’).

the Ogilvie Cairn (thu-ô-gul-vee-kärn) n. memorial cairn erected on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’ in 1993, with the top sculpted by Bill Landles, depicting an opened book. In 2009 an adjacent stone seat was erected in memory of the founder members of the Will H. Ogilvie committee. The bronze was stolen in 2016.

O Grade (ô-gräd) n. Ordinary Grade, the basic level of the Scottish Certificate of Education in one of a number of subjects, generally taken in the 4th year of High School, and effectively replaced in 1986 with the Standard Grade. Also used to denote a pass in a particular subject – ‘hei hed O

Oily Tam (o-lee-tawm) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

o’th (oith) n., arch. an oath – ‘...the foresaid witnesses deponents upon their conscience and the oith that they have made’ [Ash1635].

Old see Auld

Old (òld) n. Rev. Thomas (1682/3–1737) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1705, he became Chaplain to Archibald Douglas of Cavers.
He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1715 and was ordained at Legerwood in 1717.
He married Margaret, daughter of John Fullarton of Auchenhay and their only child was Jane, who married Alexander Fall.

Old Mill Town (old-mill-town) n. also sometimes known as ‘Auld Mill Toon’, a song about Hawick, written by David Finnie in 2001. It ap-ppeared on the 2002 CD of his band ‘3D’. It has been sung by Finnie and Debbie Lyons at Common Riding functions regularly since. Originally scored for guitar, it was arranged for piano by Ian Seeley. Although clearly about our Town, the word ‘Hawick’ does not appear in the lyrics. The words appear in the 2009 re-edition of the song book.

Old Mortality (old-mor-ta-li’-ee) n. nickname for Robert Paterson.

the Old Statistical Account (the-old-statis-tec-kul-a-kownt) n. published as ‘The Statistical Account of Scotland’ in 1791–92, it became known as the ‘Old’ or (sometimes ‘First’) ‘Statistical Account’ after the appearance of the ‘New Statistical Account’ in 1834–45. The work was the result of questionnaires sent by Sir John Sinclair of Ulbster to over 900 parish ministers, with 160 questions covering geography, population, agriculture, industry and other topics. The individual parish reports, written by the local ministers, offer an invaluable (although clearly biased) picture of Scotland before the changes wrought by the Industrial Revolution. A ‘Third Statistical Account’ was started in the 1950s, with Roxburghshire being the last volume, published

Oldsteson (old-ste-sin) n. former farmstead, probably in the upper Jed valley near Roughlee.
The tenants there in 1669 were Cuthbert, William and James Robson and David Hall.
(17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Robert Laidlaw. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Adam (d.1808) gardener in the ‘East end of the Town’. He died in Hawick. Adam (1774/5–1848) farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Hall, who was from Bowden and died in 1856, aged 65. Their children included: Adam (b.1803); Andrew (c.1810–92); Anne (d.1899), who married Thomas Turnbull; Mary (b.c.1820); and Thomas (b.c.1822). His children were mostly born in Jedburgh Parish. His wife was a widow at Chapel (recorded aged 77) on the 1851 census for Lilliesleaf. He and his wife are buried in the graveyard at Jedburgh Abbey. Adam (1803–77) eldest son of Adam, farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was a gardener in Jedburgh. He married Elizabeth Cumming. Their children Adam, Thomas and William emigrated to Australia. Adam (1825/6–86) born in Langholm Parish, son of Robert and Elizabeth Little. He was a joiner on North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. He was probably the Adam who was an elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. He married Marion Murray. He worked as coachman for several people in Berwickshire and around Kelso, before moving to Weens around 1900. He married Helen Hunter and had 3 sons. Adam (19th/20th C.) resident of Deanbrae. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Agnes (17th C.) blacksmith at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. She was probably related to other Olivers listed there, namely 2 Johns and 2 Thomases. Agnes (b.1780/1) born in Ettrick Parish, she was a widow who lived at 12 Buccleuch Street. It is unclear who her husband was, but clearly a prominent local man, since she is listed as ‘Ind.’ and ‘House Propriettess’ in the censuses. She was already a widow on the 1841 census and lived until at least 90, since she was still on Buccleuch Street in 1871. In Slater’s 1852 directory she is listed among the local gentry. In about 1874 she was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th C.) recorded in 1502. George Douglas, Master of Angus, was fined for failure to prove the arrest of his son Thomas, called ‘Waitschool’. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in part of Westerhouses in 1541. The tenants in the larger part of the farm were Nicholas and Margaret. Alexander (16th C.) recorded at Westerhouses among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. He is probably a descendant of the earlier Alexander in Westerhouses. Alexander (18th/19th C.) listed as secretary of the Conservative Reading Room in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Alexander (b.1804) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of John and Anne Niel. He was a miller in the Hawick area. He was at Hallrule in 1841 and Synton Mill in 1851. By 1861 he was toll-keeper at Ashkirk Toll Bar, and was then a widower. He married Jane Scott (from Selkirk) in Hobkirk Parish in 1831 and their children included: Agnes (b.c.1832); John (b.c.1834); Robert (b.c.1836); James (b.1838); Adam (b.1839); William (b.1843); Alexander (b.1845), who probably died in infancy; and Walter (b.1848). Rev. Alexander (b.1827) born at Jedhead, Southdean Parish, son of Thomas and Jane Baptie. He was educated at Mowhaugh School in Bowmont valley, at Yarrow School and at Edinburgh and Glasgow Universities, where he won multiple prizes. In 1854 he became assistant minister of the East U.P. Kirk in Galashiels, moving to Regent Place Church, Glasgow in 1865. He was associated with the Temperance movement and the Liberation Society and published many articles and books. He received a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1888 and was Moderator of the U.P. Synod in 1894. Andrew (16th C.) tenant at Kilnsyke according to a 1541 rental roll of Jeddeforest. Andrew (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in 1541, along with Patrick, Gilbert and John. Perhaps the same ‘Dand’ in Whiteside was pledge for his son and brothers in 1571. He was also one of the leaders of the Olivers for whom the Turnbull and Rutherford chiefs served as pledges in the same year. He was surely related to David, who was recorded as tenant at Whiteside in 1571/2, along with his unnamed brother. His name appears again in 1572/3, along with Olivers and others from Southdean, with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston as cautioners. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) recorded in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is named as ‘Dande Ollyver of Hyndrawghthede’, which was presumably Hyndhaughhead. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) listed at Falside among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544.
His name is listed right after Ringan in the same place, and hence they are surely related. Andrew 'Dand', 'the Lover' (16th C.) listed among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The others mentioned were local Scotts, as well as a Laidlaw, a Sharp, a Rutherford and a Hall. His son 'Eddie' (which probable means 'Adie', i.e. Adam) was also on the list in 1590. It is unclear how they were related to other Olivers. Andrew 'Lang Andro' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 along with Hob of 'Heidfauldus' when they refused to pay tithes to the Minister of Jedburgh. Andrew 'Dan' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Clarilee in 1610 when Adam Robson was found guilty of stealing a cow from him. Andrew (16th/17th C.) called 'of Thorterwood' in Jedforest. He was deceased in 1657 when his grandson inherited his lands in Jedburgh. Andrew 'Dand' (17th C.) lived with his son Thomas at West Falside in Southdean Parish about 1640. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Sheepdykes according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Andrew (17th C.) grandson of Andrew 'called of Thorterwode'. He inherited his grandfather's lands in Jedburgh in 1657, ratified by the Earl of Lothian in 1677. Andrew (17th C.) cordiner in Darnick near Melrose. He is recorded in the proceedings of the Melrose Regality Court in 1660. Given the shoemaking trade, there is a possible connection with the Olivers in Hawick. Andrew (17th C.) tenant of Bairnkine. In 1684 his son Andrew was among those listed as fugitives for being a Covenanters. Andrew (either him or his son), along with Richard and Robert, also in Bairnkine (and perhaps also his sons) were listed among those who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684. He was recorded at 'barnkin' in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. He was also listed at Bairnkine on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Slacks in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, when he possessed 3 hearths. Andrew 'Dand' (17th C.) resident at Roughlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (17th C.) 'cottar' at Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew 'Dand' (17th C.) recorded along with Steven as a tenant at Falside on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, when they paid tax on 2 hearths. There was a separate Steven also listed, as well as John, plus Thomas and his sons; presumably some of these Oliverse were closely related. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident at Swinnie. His wife Janet Learmonth (1691/2–1736) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotsrule Kirkyard, along with Isabel (d.1756), possibly his daughter. Andrew 'Dand' (18th C.) tenant at Falside in Southdean Parish around 1740, along with Thomas and William. He may be the same Andrew who was tenant at Alton and Adderstoucheil with William (possibly his brother) in the 1760s. He may be the 'Dand' who had the following children christened in Southdean parish: Janet in 1739; unnamed in 1741; and Agnes in 1744. He may be related to the earlier Dand who was recorded at Falside. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in 'Rigg' in Cavers Parish when he paid the window tax in 1748. He was probably at Caerlenrig. However, it is unclear how he was related to other Olivers. Andrew (18th C.) tenant at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. He farmed there after about 1757, when Unthank was sold by Thomas Scott to William Elliot of Wolfelee. Andrew (18th C.) listed at 'Foderlee-birks' in the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew (b.c.1765) farmer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish. His wife was Elizabeth. He was an Elder in the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He and his wife travelled there for services in a 'noddy'. His children included Elizabeth and Janet. He may be the Andrew recorded at Doorpool in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.c.1770) cooper at Kirk Style in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Ann. Andrew (d.1811) from Jedburgh, he was the keeper of the Carter Bar Toll. His death is recorded in Hawick. Andrew (18th/19th C.) licensed grocer at 4 High Street. He married Elizabeth (b.1774), 6th child of Walter Purdom. Their children included: Agnes (b.1806); and Andrew (b.1808), a tobacconist at 42 High Street. He may be the ‘Oliver’ whose premises are shown at about No. 42 on Wood’s 1824 map. Andrew (18th/19th C.) eldest son of William of Langraw. As a boy he was taught by James Sanson (archetype for ‘Dominie Sampson’). He was a successful wool stapler and cloth manufacturer in Huddersfield. He inherited Langraw in 1812, having to pay off some debts. It is said that when the Hare Cairn was dismantled he sent the carved cist slab to Abbotford. He was listed as Andrew of Langraw in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1803 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Thomas Scott, who farmed at Woollee; she was a first cousin of the writer Sir Walter Scott. He was succeeded by his son
William. Andrew ‘Rolly’ (1793–1857) auctioneer and lawyer, father of James, and founder of Andrew Oliver & Son when he came to Hawick in 1817. He was son of James and Isabel Elliot, born at Marlefield Hope, Eckford. He had a brother William, who was a grain-works managed in Berwick and another brother George, who was a baker in London. He was an apprentice solicitor in Kelso, then worked in Annan, before moving to Hawick. He characteristically always wore a tall, white, felt hat, with a broad, black band. He started the auction mart system in 1847, probably the first of its kind in Britain. He became a member of the Hawick Curling Club in 1819 and was Clerk of the club for many years. He was described as a ‘writer’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a writer and ‘messenger’ on the High Street. His premises at that time were probably one of the 3 places on the High Street marked ‘Oliver’ on Wood’s 1824 map. There are several letters to him from the 1820s preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as an auctioneer on the Sandbed, as well as a ‘Messenger at Arms’ and writer. In 1852 he was listed at Bridge House as a messenger at arms and ‘Andrew Oliver & Son’ are listed as writers. He was at the Sandbed in 1841 (probably already in Bridge House) and listed as a writer and auctioneer. By 1851 he was explicitly at Bridge House. In 1852 his company is listed as coal agents at the Station for the Marquis of Lothian’s coal fields, as well as insurance agents for Sun. In Coldstream he married Catherine Brown, who died in 1867, aged 72. Their children included: Jane (b.1815); and James (b.1817), also a local lawyer, accountant and auctioneer. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Andrew (b.1806/7) from Kirkton, he was a mason at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Burnhead Cottages) in Wilton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Howdenburn in Wilton Parish in 1835 and at ‘Pityhouses’ in 1840. His wife was Isabella Glendinning and their children included Isabella, James, Margaret, William and Andrew. Andrew (b.1808) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Purdom. He was a tobacconist at 42 High Street. In 1841 he was living there with his mother and sister Margaret. His sister was his housekeeper in 1851, when he was employing 5 people. Andrew (b.1807/8) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was son of Adam and Mary Hall. Like his father he was farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 150 acres and employing 5 people. He and his brother Thomas were the ‘Messrs Oliver’ recorded at Chapel in 1868. They were unmarried and lived with their sister Mary. Andrew (19th C.) schoolmaster at Cogsmill and Denholm. His grandmother was a Cranston, sister of Andrew Murray’s wife. He was at Cogsmill around the 1880s. Andrew Rutherford (1855–1918) eldest son of James. He became partner in Andrew Oliver & Son, Auctioneers and Live Stock Salesmen in 1888. He was a respected figure in local agricultural circles, being Honorary Secretary of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society and of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club for many years. He was also a supporter of the Common Riding and patron of racing, hunting and other sports. He lived at Thornwood, died there and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. A memorial clock to him overlooked the principal ring in the Auction Mart. He became a director of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. in 1909. Oliver Park was named after him. Andrew (1856–1938) 2nd son of Robert and Violet Rodger, he was born at Dinlabyre in Castleton Parish. He became an apprentice blacksmith in Greenlaw, spent some time in Ireland and then was blacksmith at Allanton, Berwickshire for almost 50 years. Andrew (1885/6–1937) died at Falside and is buried in Southdean cemetery. Anne (b.1811/12) from Langholm, she was son of John, tailor in Newcastle. In 1861 she was recorded as ‘feuar’ at about 15 Hermitage Street, living alone. She may be the Anne who was juvenile librarian in the Parish in the 1860s. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as tenant of half of the lands of ‘Greithill’ in Jedforest in 1541. Archibald of Bush (d.1843) 2nd son of William of Dinlabyre. He is probably the Archibald, son of William, who became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1799. He joined the 4th Bengal Native Infantry. By 1815 he was made Captain, then became deputy paymaster at Benares and retired at the rank of Major. He possessed Bush (also called ‘Overton Bush’) near to Edgerston. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1826. He married Anne, daughter of Col. John Anderson. They had no children and Bush eventually went to his nephew William, son of his brother John. There are portraits of him and his wife by Sir John Watson Gordon. Archibald (b.c.1790) son of James, he was born in Bedrule Parish and was tenant farmer at Denholm Mill. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was tenant of Denholm Mill According to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at Denholm Mill, but was deceased by 1851. He married Ann Laing and she died in 1857. Their children included: James (b.1820); Agnes (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Helen (b.1825); Ann (b.1827); Alison (b.1829); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.1831); Joanne (b.1833); and John Laing (b.1836). Several of his daughters worked in Hawick as milliners and dressmakers. He was surely related to John, who was also at Denholm Mill in 1825. Arthur (1927/8–2006) worked at Craik Forest, then as a hand-knitter at Deambrae Mill. He was a keen walker and angler, as well as Common Riding supporter. A stalwart of the Teviotdale Harriers, he joined in 1947, served as President, and in 200 received a trophy for 50 years as a running member. He was well known throughout the Town for his generous spirit. He married Lillian and had children John, Andrew, Margaret and Susan. Barton (b.1835) son of Castleton shepherd George. He may also have been called ‘Angus Barton’, after the local minister. In 1861 he was an agricultural labourer at Bainknine in Southdean Parish and he later farmed at the Dodlins. He married Jessie Murray and their children included Catherine (b.1860), George (b.1862), William (b.1864), James (b.1866), Adam (b.1869), Betsy (b.1871, who married John Mable), Margaret (b.1873), Jessie (b.1876), Jane (b.1879) and David (b.1880). Charles (16th C.) tenant at Slacks in 1541, paying 11 shillings yearly. Thomas and John were tenants in the other part of Slacks. His name is recorded as ‘Carolo Olivere’. Charles son of Robert, he followed his father by working at Lyle & Scott’s, eventually becoming Managing Director. He arranged a partnership with Christian Dior in 1954. He was a Captain during WWI, being awarded the Military Cross. He married Maise, daughter of baker Thomas Brydon. He lived at Bucklands. Christian (17th C.) listed ‘in Lustruther’ among people declared to be rebels for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684. It is unclear if this was a man or a woman. David (d.c.1170) recorded as ‘Oliardi’, he was King David’s godson. He was probably of Norman descent, and had brothers who remained in England. If related to other Olivers (and not the Oliphants), then he is probably the first known ancestor of that family. He served with King Stephen’s army at Winchester in 1141, against his godfather. But when King David escaped he helped him return to Scotland, for which he was granted lands at Smallholm and Craeling, as well as the Barony of Bothwill. Around 1150 he witnessed the grant of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. He granted the tithe of Craeling Mill to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey about 1162, and he also made grants to Dryburgh and Soutra. In 1165 he was Justiciar of Lothian (perhaps the first on record), meaning he exerted authority from the Tweed to the Firth of Forth. He may have married a daughter of Berengar Engaine, who previously held Craeling. He had 5 sons, David (who succeeded), William, Walter, Philip and Fulco (or ‘Fulk’, Parson of Smalholm). David (d.c.1190s) succeeded his father David ‘Oliardi’ (although these generations are confused). He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who married a daughter of the Earl of Strathearn and succeeded his father; and David, who married Johannah, heiress of Calder. Thus both sons moved further North, where the name was softened to ‘Oliphant’. David (13th C.) son of Walter, from whom he inherited lands in Roxburghshire at Crailing and Smalholm. He is recorded along with Walter in a charter of Soutra Hospital in 1273. He married Devorguille (whose surname is not given), but died without an heir. Their Border lands went to his sister, who had married Walter of Moray. His wife could be the ‘Dervorgulla Olyfart’ who was involved in a lawsuit with Dervorgulla de Bialol in 1289. David (d.c.1502) resident of Strynds. He was probably son of Gilbert, and appears to be a different man that David ‘Nae Guid Priest’, who also lived in the same place at the same time. He is recorded in 1502 along with Robert ‘in strynidis’ producing a remission for stealing a total of 101 sheep from William Ker at ‘Dernewik-mure’, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his surety. He was also allowed to pay a fine for his part in stealing sheep from ‘Jedworthe, Rowcastell, Langtoune, and Bethroull’; this was along with Robert and John (brother of Ingram). Also that year he was allowed to pay a fine for a further theft (of a long, detailed list of items) from Martin Wood in Whitfield, this being along with ‘Long John’ and ‘Little John’, again with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his surety. Additionally in 1502, along with John son of Gilbert ‘in kilclewis’ he was allowed to compone for stealing 19 sheep and a cow from Maton and six sheep from Muirhousesaw; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was his surety. Probably the same David, brother of John son of Gilbert, in Strange, was also recorded in 1502 when they were allowed to compone for stealing a horse and a pot from Ednam. After failing to ‘fynde sufficient souerties’ he was sentenced to hanging in 1502, along with Robert, Martin and Matthew, all from Strynds (they may have been his uncle and cousins). All 4 were subsequently captured, and assuming the execution took place, this marks the demise of this once powerful riving branch of the Olivers. David ‘Nae Guid Priest’ (15th/16th C.) resident of Strynds, which was near Westerhouses in the Rule valley, later called Strange. In 1502 he had remission for being involved in a series of raids, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst serving as surety, this included: stealing 12 oxen and cows from Sir David Hone at Lammermuir; associating with rebels Thomas and Andrew Grahamslaw; stealing a horse from John Douglas in Jedburgh; stealing 3 horses from a farm at Nisbet; and stealing 20 sheep from George Douglas in Trows. He is recorded there as ‘Dauid oliver in le stryndis, vocatis david na gud preist’, but it is unclear how he got this odd nickname. He was recorded further in 1502 as ‘na gude clerk’ when he and John ‘in le stryndis’ were allowed to compone for crimes committed against Gilbert Lamb at Jedburgh, including seriously wounding him; Andrew Kerr was surety. Additionally in 1502 along with Ingram and John in Strange, he had remission for stealing oxen from Ancrum, as well as sheep, a cow and other items from Maxton. In 1505 Robert Oliver, ‘Rob with the Dog’ was given remission for previously intercommuning with him and John ‘Cadger’; his nickname is there recorded as ‘Na-gude-Preist’. David of ‘Hyndhewche’ (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as the ‘taker’ of John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was presumably an officer of the Warden, and based at Hyndhaugh in Southdean Parish. Probably the same man is listed as tenant of ‘Hynhanchheid’, i.e. Hindhaughhead in Monipennie’s list of the Border Clans published in about 1594 (but probably from earlier). In 1583 William Fenwick of Wallington (near Otterburn) complained that he and 200 others raided his farm, taking cattle, horses and 16 prisoners; this appears to have been a raid into England to recover cattle and other goods stolen from them earlier. David (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 as tenant in Whiteside, when John Rutherford of Hunthill was surety for him and his brother. Although his brother’s name is not given, this may be ‘Dand’, who was also recorded in Whiteside at about the same time. David (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. David (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Southdean in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James and Thomas, who were also listed as tenants there. David (17th C.) resident of Nether Dykeraw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. David (17th/18th C.) one of the Olivers of Falside in Southdean Parish, who left there in 1747. He may be the same man as the David recorded at Falside in 1669, or alternatively was a descendant of his. He was tenant farmer at Abbotrule Townfoot. He may have been father of some of Thomas, Dand and William, who were tenants at Falside around 1740. David (b.1829–bef. 1909) labourer in Newcastleton, son of George and Elspeth Murray. He worked as a railway surfaceman. He was at 37 South Hermitage Street in 1861. In 1853 he married Margaret Pott (b.1833) in Hobkirk Parish; she was daughter of Robert Pott and Mary Armstrong. Their children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included: Mary (b.1853); George (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); James (b.1860); Andrew (b.1862); John (b.1864); James (b.1867); and Margaret (b.1873). David Councillor in Newcastleton, representing the village on the County Council in the mid-20th century. He lived on South Hermitage Street. He acted as first Chairman of the village hall committee. David (1937/8– ) born in Eastbourne, lived for a few years in Selkirk, coming to Hawick at the age of 10. He attended Drumlanrig and the High School, was an apprentice painter for the Store, did National Service in the Royal Scots Greys and later worked for Pringle’s. In 1967 he set up his own painting and decorating business, eventually retiring in 2001. In 1960 he married Betty, who was from Falkirk. The couple have been active in the Salvation Army and he was also President of the local Rotary Club. They couple’s children are Kay, Gail and David; they celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2020. Douglas (1871–1961) of Hassendenbank, son of James Oliver and Jane Rutherford. He attended Mill Hill School (where James Murray had taught) and served in the Army during WWI. He entered the family Auctioneering business in 1887 and was sole proprietor by 1918. He was also Secretary of the Curling Club. He was Chairman of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank and Chairman of the managers of the Cottage Hospital. He served in the Boer War. In 1904 he married Sybil Brown from Galashiels and their children were: Florence Murray (b.c.1905); Muriel Rutherford (b.c.1907); Elsie Margery (b.c.1910); and James Kenneth Murray (‘Ken’, 1914–99). Ebenezer (b.1718) son of James, the Cavers schoolmaster, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was the 3rd generation of his family to be schoolmaster in Cavers and he also served as Session Clerk. In 1759 his salary was 180–200 merks. In 1773 he is recorded augmenting his income through a market garden at East Cavers. He was married to Janet Brown, and their children included: John (b.1750); and James (b.1753). In 1762 he had a child born called James. It is possible that his son John was the schoolmaster in Castleton whose son Ebenezer was born in 1778. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) recorded as watch and clockmaker in Denholm, on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Ebenezer married to Betty Scott, whose children (born in Cavers Parish) included: John (b.1802), probably a weaver in Hawick with an eldest son also called Ebenezer; James (b.1804); Betty (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809); Thomas (b.1811); and Ebenezer (b.1814). He was surely descended from the earlier schoolmaster. Ebenezer (19th C.) Secretary of the Denholm Horticultural Society in the 1860s. Edward (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in Jedforest’, although no more specific designation is given. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance, along with other Olivers. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gorge Ollyver of Whitside’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. ‘Jake’ and ‘Patte’ Oliver were also listed as being at Whitside, and hence probably related. George (16th C.) tenant in ‘Clarely’ listed along with 2 other Oliver chiefs in Monipennie’s list published around 1594 (but probably from earlier). This was the farm of Clarelee, lying roughly between Hyndhaughhead and Roughlee. George (16th C.) recorded in Chesters in 1571, when he was one of the 3 main leaders of the Olivers for whom Sir Thomas Turnbull, John Turnbull of Minto, Richard Rutherford of Edgerston and John Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, served as pledges. He was listed again in 1572/3 along with other Olivers, as well as William Kirkton of Stewartfield, with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston as their cautioners; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. George (17th C.) recorded in 1669 as tenant in ‘Slacks’, along with William, who was surely a close relative. John was also listed as tenant there. He witnessed the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw at Southdean Kirk in 1681. George (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in ‘Townhead’ (near Chesters) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. George (d.c.1685) tenant in Swinnie when his will was recorded in 1685. He was surely related to Thomas, who was at Swinnie at the same time. George (17th C.) brother of Thomas of Ashtrees. In 1691 he wounded Robert Rutherford, Minister of Ancrum, following an attempt to disrupt the service there. This was presumably still fall-out from the days of persecution of the Covenanters. George (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Strange in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He was surely related to John who was also listed there in 1694, as well as James recorded there in 1689. George (17th C.) recorded at Woodhouse on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. George (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1699, along with shoemaker Robert (presumably a relative, perhaps his brother), he witnessed a baptism for cooper John Turnball. He was shoemaker in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for cook James Wright. He married Jean ‘Betie’ (i.e. Beattie). Their children included: Janet (b.1701); Isobel (b.1701); Margaret (b.1703); Grizel (b.1705); and Agnes (b.1708). The witnesses in 1703 included Robert and in 1705 were carrier John ‘Atkin’ and Henry Orrock. Bessie (b.1696) may also have been his daughter. It is unclear how he was related to the later shoemaker George. He could be the George who witnessed baptisms for the other George in 1726, 1728 and 1731. He is probably the George ‘Senior Shoemaker’ who witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Kay in 1739. George (18th C.) Hawick shoemaker, said to be from the Dykeraw Oliver family, he may have been son of Robert and Agnes Atkins (or Atkin). He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert (and Bessie Blackhall) in Hawick in 1730. He is described as ‘senior’ in 1740, so he probably had a son George at that time. In 1721 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of John Aitkin. Their children included: Robert (b.1722); John (b.1724); Agnes (or Annie, b.1726), who married George Douglas, from the Timpendean branch; George (b.1728); James (b.1729); Margaret (b.1731); William (b.1733); Isobel (b.1736); Walter (b.1738); and Bessy (b.1745). The witnesses in 1726 were George and Robert Oliver, in 1728 were George and Walter (presumably near relatives), in 1731 were George (again) and John Telfer (perhaps the Beadle), and in 1745 were weaver Andrew Jardine and mason Adam Turnbull. In 1725, along with cooper John Aitkin (perhaps his father-in-law), he witnessed a birth for miller John Henderson. He is probably the shoemaker George who witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert in 1757 and 1765, suggesting that this Robert (of Burnflat) was his son. He may also be the George who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John in 1757. He may be the George recorded in 1788 as owner of Burnflat (although that may indicate that he had purchased the land earlier, and may well have been deceased by then). George (c.1770–1837) son of William and Jean Nichol, he was born at Blinkbonny. He worked as a shepherd in Castle- ton Parish, but emigrated to the U.S.A. (with his whole family, except for the eldest son George) and died at Mishawaka, Indiana only a couple of years later. He married Elizabeth Irving and their children included: George (b.1803); John (b.1807); Andrew (b.1809); Jane Grey (b.1810); Dorothy Irwin (b.1815); Robert (b.1817); William Irving (b.1821); and James (b.1825), who became famous for improving the plough. George (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Dykeraw. He owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. He also paid the dog tax at Dykeraw in the same year. George (18th/19th C.) flesher in New- castleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1836. He was surely related to Francis, also a butcher in Newcastleon. George (b.c.1795) mason in Hawick. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. In 1835 he was at Dovemount, at Stellhouse in 1840 (the address changed to ‘Toll Bar Hawick’) and at the Toll Bar in 1841. He was living at the Western Toll Bar on the 1841 census, with wife Mina and children William, Isabel, Margaret and James. George ‘Pie Oliver’ or ‘Pies’ (c.1800–47) baker on the Howegate, at about No. 19. He may have been son of William ‘Little Cash’. His wife made pies at 19 Howegate, which presumably gave the nickname for the family. He married Janet or ‘Nannie’ Brown (from Selkirk), who died in 1881, aged 87. Their children included: William (b.1822); Thomas (b.1824); Catherine; Agnes (c.1828–1901), who married Robert Murray; Janet; George; and Robert. The three brothers who were stockingmakers, George, ‘Jock the Hoist’ and William, may have been his sons. He may have been related to James, who was an earlier baker in Hawick. His wife was working as a washer-woman on the Back Row in 1851. It is also unclear whether he could be the George ‘of Burnflat’ who was recorded as a heritor in 1854 (after his death); he seems likely to be the George recorded as owner of Burnflat on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. George (1803–72) eldest surviving son of Town Clerk John. He was Cornet in 1824. He trained as a lawyer, and in 1831 went into partnership with his father as a ‘writer’ and bank agent. In 1837 he is listed along with his father as agent for the Commercial Bank. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street and was there in 1851, recorded as ‘Procurator in Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire’. The firm was thus ‘John and George Oliver’, but became ‘Geo. & Jas. Oliver’ on the death of John in 1849, when his younger brother became a partner. He was local agent for the Duke of Buccleuch, as well as being political agent for the Conservative Party in Hawick and Liddesdale. He was mentioned as one of the local ‘fictitious voters’ in an investigation of 1837 (along with John and Robert Anderson they bought property in Selkirkshire, apparently in order to gain the ability to vote there). He had a prominent role in the Hawick to Carlisle railway extension. He was probably the George ‘of Burnflat’ who was recorded as a heritor in 1854; he seems likely to be the George recorded as owner of Burnflat on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (his son John inheriting these lands from him). He became tenant at Borthaugh in 1860. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also one of the Orrock Trustees and served as Chairman of the Parochial Board for Kirkton Parish. He married Margaret, daughter of John Lindsay of Almeriecloss (Forfarshire) at Arbroath in 1843. Their children were: Margaret Spink (b.1844); Jane (b.1846); Mary (b.1848), who married Surg.-Gen. Peter Stephenson Turnbull, descendant of the Bedrule Turnbulls; John (b.1850), also a Hawick lawyer; Jane (b.1852); Christian (b.1854), who married David Turnbull of Fenwick and Brieryards; George Lindsay (b.1857), farmer, who spent time in New Zealand; and James Lindsay (b.1860), who also spent time in New Zealand with his brother. A portrait of him exists. His wife’s portrait, by Atkinson Horsburgh, is in the Museum, painted in 1883. George (b.1803) son of Liddesdale shepherd George and Elizabeth Irving. His brother James was the manufacturer of ‘Oliver’s Chilled Plough’ in South Bend, Indiana. He was the only one of his brothers not to emigrate to America. He was shepherd at Gatehousecote and elsewhere. He married Elspeth Murray. Their children included: William (b.1827), who became steward at Gatehousecote; David (b.1829), who lived at the family home in Newcastleton; Elizabeth (b.1831), who married Adam Crozier; James Binnie (b.1834), who probably died young; and Barton (b.1835), who farmed at ‘the Dodlins’ near Hawick. George (c.1820–1900) son of John and Agnes Rutherford. He was born in Scotland, probably near Hawick. He moved to the Galt, Ontario area with his father and family. He married Elizabeth Turnbull (d.1868) and their children included John, James, Andrew, William, Thomas, Elizabeth, George, Agnes, Agnes (again) and Robert. Most of his family moved to Carberry, Manitoba, being among the first settlers there. George (19th/20th C.) farmer at Trow Knowes. He was an Elder of Kirkton Kirk. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. George Lindsay (b.1857) son of Hawick lawyer George. He went to New Zealand and bought property there with his brother James. However, he returned to farm at Whitehaugh (near Newcastleton) and later lived in Hawick. George Currie Stenhouse (1900–73) born in Glasgow, from a Borders branch of the Oliver family. His family moved to Hawick and in the 1920s he decided to emigrate to Canada. He worked as a herdsman in New Liskeard, Ontario, but travelled extensively while looking for work. On a return trip to Hawick he met Anne Murray (1895–1977) and she followed him back to Canada where they were married in 1931. The couple returned to Hawick in 1936. Gilbert (15th C.) father of Robert, James and William. His sons were separately fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, for non-appearance to answer for unspecified crimes. He could be the same Gilbert who (along with John ‘benkis’) had 2 cows stolen by Philip Waugh in Jedburgh, with Waugh having remission in 1494/5. Perhaps the same Gilbert is mentioned in 1502 when his son John in ‘stryndis’ had remission for stealing a horse and a sword from Smailholm. He may also be the Gilbert recorded in 1502, along with James Rutherford and a man called ‘Wobstar’, when Thomas Rutherford in the Grange had remission for resetting them and their stolen livestock. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in Jedforest in 1541, along with Patrick, Andrew and John. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant at Hindhaughhead in 1541 along with his mother Margaret. They paid 25 shillings yearly. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant at Over Dykeraw in 1541. He was probably related to other nearby Olivers, e.g. the tenants at Nether Dykeraw. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th C.) recorded in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is named as ‘Gybe Ollyver of the Dykis’. His lands may have been the Dykes in Bedrule, or perhaps more likely is Dykeraw in Southdean (given the family connection and forename). Gilbert (17th/18th C.) farmer at Dykeraw, recorded in a list of tenants in Jedforest in 1669. He was probably son of Robert, also listed there. He married a Douglas and their son was James, baptised in Southdean Parish in 1694. He was ancestor of George and James of the Hawick legal firm. Gilbert (18th C.) recorded as ‘farmer in Hawick’ who was deceased in 1754 when his daughter Ann married Andrew Ford in Edinburgh (or this may have been the Ann, daughter of Gilbert and Janet Turnbull, born in Hawick in 1738). He may have been born in Jedburgh Parish in 1712. Gilbert (18th C.) workman and carrier in Hawick Parish. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Stevenson and Janet Oliver (probably his daughter). He is also probably the carrier Gilbert who witnessed a baptism for Francis Aitkin and Anne Oliver (likely his daughter) in Hawick in 1766. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Anne (b.1738); Janet (b.1741); Helen (b.1744); Robert (b.1746). The 1741 baptism was witnessed by merchant John Ruecastle and ‘Officer’ John Telfer and the 1746 one by Bailie Robert Scott and merchant William Oliver. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is listed right after Thomas, who may be a relation. Helen nee Elliot (18th C.) only child of William Elliot of Myredykes. In 1797 she married ironmonger James Oliver in Hawick. Her first children were born in Hawick, and then the family moved to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, where her husband became tenant farmer. A story is recounted of how when she was married she brought a collie dog from Myredykes, and every sheep clipping season the animal would disappear from Hawick for a few days, since it had set off to help round up the sheep. In 1851 she was recorded as an ‘Annuitant’ living at Alemoor Cottage with her unmarried daughters Rachel, Eliza and Isabella, as well as 2 servants. Helen (b.1825) from Cavers Parish, son of Archibald. She was the eldest of 4 sisters who were living at about 61 High Street in 1851 and working as milliners and dressmakers. She was listed with her sister Ann in Slater’s 1852 directory. Henry (d.bef. 1596) tenant in ‘Hyndmureheid’ (probably Hyndhaughhead). He was killed by Thomas Kerr of Crailhead and his servants Andrew Hogg and George Gardner, who were denounced as rebels in 1596. There was a complaint in 1599 that James Douglas, Sheriff of Cavers had allowed them to remain at their dwelling place. He is further recorded in 1601 as the deceased ‘Henrie Olypher’, who had been killed by Thomas Ker and his servant George ‘Gladner’; this pair were later killed by a group of Turnbulls and others in Jedburgh. Henry (b.1806) agricultural labourer and shepherd in Southdean Parish, son of William, who was hind to the Laird of Langraw. In 1841 he was at Abbotrule farm and was farm steward at West Fodderlee in 1851 and 1861. In 1840 in Southdean he married Isabella Renwick from Morebattle; she died at Burnflat in 1895, aged 87. Their children were: Isabella (b.1841), who married Thomas Welsh; Robert (b.1843), a marine engineer who was lost at sea; Helen (b.1846); and Helen (again, b.1851). Ingram (15th C.) recorded as ‘chairleis’ in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His residence could be associated with Charlie’s Hill or Charlie’s Knowe in Southdean Parish. He may be the same Ingram against whom premeditated crimes were committed in Jedburgh by William Kirkton in Kirkton, according to the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He could be the Ingram for whom George Douglas Master of Angus was fined for failing to arrest (along with Thomas ‘Waitschod’ and James) in 1502. Ingram (15th/16th C.) son of Robert in Strange and brother of John. In 1494/5 he was listed among 8 Olivers and a Shiel when they had remission for communing with the English. He could be the same man as Ingram in ‘chairleis’. In 1502 George Douglas, Master of Angus was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Also in 1502, along with his brother John, and David ‘Nae Guid Preist’, he had remission for stealing oxen from Ancrum, as well as sheep, a cow and other items from Maxton; he was there recorded being ‘in le stryndis’ and his surety was Mark Ker of Dolkington. Additionally in 1502 his brother John was allowed to compone for stealing 2 oxen from Jedburgh with him, as well as other thefts (without him). Ingram (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown. ‘Ingrem Olferis barne and zaird’ (i.e. ‘barn and yard’) are listed in the 1562 Baronal dispute over lands in Feu-Rule, being assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. Presumably the same ‘Ingra’ was listed as ‘man and servand’ of Thomas Turnbull of Harwoodtown (brother of David Turnbull of Watchope) in 1567, when his master was ordered to present him to answer charges related to raids into England. Isabel (b.c.1800) grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was at about 30 High Street, living with woolorser Walter Wilson, who may have been a relative. Isobel (17th C.) listed at Dykeraw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls James (15th C.) assigned the lease of the Crown lands of Garlawcleuch in the Yarrow valley in 1489 along with his son John. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Olivers. James (15th C.) son of Gilbert. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His brother Robert was also fined at the same time, as well as Matthew son of Geoffrey, Robert brother of Matthew and Martin brother of Robert. William, son of Gilbert, was also fined, and probably his brother too. He was also recorded in 1494/5 among 8 Olivers and a Shiel (connected with Strange) who had remission for communing with the English; he was there stated to be brother of Robert, who was son of Gilbert, and also brother of William. He could be the James for whom George Douglas Master of Angus was fined for failing to arrest (along with Thomas 'Waitschold' and Ingram) in 1502. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘burgess’ (presumably of Jedburgh, or else a nickname) at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Along with Robert in Lustruther, Robert (nephew of David) and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw, he had a remission for a raid on ‘Keshop’, which resulted in the slaughter of Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’; his surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. It seems likely he was related to the Olivers of Stryndis. James (15th/6th C.) son of Gilbert in ‘stryndis’. In 1502 he and his brother John had remission for a series of crimes: stealing an ox from Ancrum; stealing 2 cows from Jedburgh; and treason. His surety was Robert Douglas, uncle of the Laird of Bonjedward. Also in 1502, along with brothers Matthew and Martin, he was allowed to compone for stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Rucastle, Lanton and Bedrule; his surety was again Robert Douglas. James ‘the Prince’ (15th/16th C.) resident of Swinnie recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus was his surety. He failed to appear at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh and was to be fined at the next court. The same man was charged at the 1510 Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh. His crimes included theft of sheep from various people. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541, along with William, Margaret and William alias ‘Merchant’. His steadings was valued at 25s. James (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Marion Young and Robert Young. It seems likely that they were related somehow. They paid 22 shillings yearly. James (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with Michael, John, Adam and Robert. His name was given first, suggesting that he was the senior family member. James (16th C.) admitted as ‘perpetual vicar’ of Castleton in 1559. It is unclear how long he remained. James (d.1573) recorded as ‘somtyme seruandis to Blak Ormistoune’ when he was convicted and hanged along with William Donald. Their crimes included stealing livestock and burning the corn of Sir Andrew Kerr. It is unclear if he had direct local connections. James (17th C.) monk at Jedburgh Abbey in the period 1542–81. He held the title of Prior of Canonbie in the 1570s, but probably continued to reside in Jedburgh. He is recorded in 1573 as ‘Dene James Oliver Pryour of Cannaby’ in a case before the Privy Council regarding some lands in Canonbie. It is unclear where he came from. James (17th C.) schoolmaster in Cavers Parish. He is said to have accompanied the ‘Guid Ledy Cavers’ to conventicles on Ruberslaw and at Hagburn. His son James took over as schoolmaster at Cavers. He is also said to have kept a personal narrative of his experiences attending secret Covenanters sermon and escaping from the dragoons, stories that were passed down in his family for several generations. His son James was schoolmaster after him. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Souden’ i.e. Southdean in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Hyndhaughhead in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Ashtrees. He is recorded in 1684 when his son Thomas was listed as a Covenantant fugitive. He himself refused to take the oath and was banished to Jamaica. He is also said to have paid ‘paid to Meldrum 100 merks, also to Graden 30 rex dollars, also at a Circuit Court in Jedburgh 14 rex dollars, at another time £4 sterling; and the notwithstanding all other losses troopers were quartered on him.’ James (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Stryndis’ (i.e. Strange) in 1689 when he complained that the Parish Minister had not read out the Articles of Estate or prayed for William and Mary. He was probably related to George and James who were recorded at Strange in 1694. James (17th C.) cottar at Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Over Dykeraw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Cavers Parish, son of James, who had been schoolmaster before him. It was said that he was a very strict and pious man. He would spend an hour each evening in the old church, reading scriptures by candle-light. It is said that a visiting Englishman saw him in the church one night, reading by candlelight in his red nightcap and thought he had seen the Devil. He gave his sons names from the Bible: Ebenezer, who succeeded as schoolmaster; Samuel (b.1702), who became schoolmaster in Hobkirk Parish; and Nathaniel. Douglas of Cavers ordered that he be buried in the church, ‘for a man who had haunted it so much when alive deserved to sleep his last slumber under its roof’. He was presumably Session Clerk for Cavers, as well as Schoolmaster, and responsible for the entries in the Parish register. He probably taught his son to write, since essentially the same hand can be seen in the baptismal records from at least the 1690s until the 1760s. James ‘Jafra the Piper’ (17th/18th C.) formerly resident of Kirkton Parish, he was in Hawick in the early 1700s. His nickname was also given as ‘Jafray’. In 1717 he was summoned to Hawick Kirk Session for abusing William Riddell on the street, and asked to supply testimonials from his former parish. Later that year he was called to task again for ‘a relapse in drunkenness and rambling in ye streets occasioning the school boys to follow after him through the toun’. And later that year, after not presenting the requested testimonials was given a final ultimatum, after which he would be handed to the Magistrates. It seems that they did not continue in ‘extruding him out of ye toun’ at this time. He was probably the same James, ‘toun officer’ who was rebuked in 1719 for playing (presumably the pipes) in front of William Whaton, who rode through the town ‘in a military posture’ for some kind of bet; he stated he was ‘urged and pressed by the scholars to play before William’. In 1719 he was again rebuked ‘for his indecent carriage in his drunkenness’, specifically for ‘rambling in his drunkenness and troubling the minister in his chamber’, again being given a last chance to reform his behaviour. He married Agnes Telfer in England (presumably a quick wedding) in 1720. This ‘irregular marriage on the English side’ may have been the last straw, since the Session then went over the records of his past mis-deeds and sent a ‘memorial’ to the Magistrates adding that ‘if they concurred not with ye Session the minister would make address to another judge to extrude him and to divest him of his service through the toun’. He appears to have been Hawick’s Town Piper for at least 1717–20 and was replaced by Robert Fowler about 1721. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ashybank in 1709, 1716 and 1718. His children included Elizabeth (b.1709), Thomas (b.1716) and Agnes (b.1718). The later tenant in Ashybank, with the same name, was perhaps related. James (b.1694) son of Gilbert, and probably grandson of Robert, farmer at Dykeraw. He was born in Southdean Parish and was a carrier, later becoming tenant farmer at Earlside. He married Bessie Douglas in 1722 and their children were: James (b.c.1723), who died in infancy; and Isabella (b.c.1725), who married James Learmonth in Bedrule. In 1729 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of James Douglas of the Trows, who owned (or had the tenancy of perhaps) the farm of Earlside. He was by then in Hawick Parish, where he was recorded as ‘workman’; in 1743 and 1746 he was listed as a carrier in Hawick, and he presumably took over the farm at Earlside shortly afterwards. He may be the carrier James who in Hawick in 1757 witnessed baptisms for wheelwright James Aitkin and Mary Oliver (probably a relative), as well as for gardener Alexander Donald. He is probably the James, senior, who witnessed baptisms in 1767, as well as in 1771 for merchant John (his son) and in 1772 for merchant James (also his son). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for wheelwright James Aitkin and Mary (perhaps his daughter) in 1772. He may be the ‘James Oliver, sen. merchant’ in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), along with his son James. With Margaret Douglas he had 5 sons and 4 daughters, all baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Betsy (b.1730); James (b.1732), ironmonger in Hawick; Mary (b.1734); Agnes (b.1738); Christian (1738–1804); John (b.1740), merchant in Hawick; Robert (b.1743), who probably became a surgeon in North Berwick; and Gideon (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were shoemaker Robert (who may therefore have been a relative) and maltman John Moss and in 1746 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and carrier John Scott. James (18th C.). Married to Agnes Telfer, their son Robert was born in Hawick in 1724. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was tenant in Ashybank in 1755. He married Isabel Walker and their children included Elspeth (b.1751), Betty (b.1753) and Isabel (b.1755). Other children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who may be his, included John (b.1745), Helen (b.1746), James (b.1747) and John (b.1757). He may be a descendant of the earlier James at Ashybank. James (1732–1820) 2nd son of James of Earlside and Margaret Douglas. It is said that when Prince Charlie’s army passed through Hawick in 1745 his father sent him into the country with his horse for safety. He was Cornet in 1764. He had an ironmonger’s business near ‘the Cross’ in Hawick and became tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch’s farm at Crumhaugh Hill. In 1767 and 1777 he was witness for baptisms for merchant John (his brother). He is probably the merchant who in 1779 (although the date is uncertain) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert (perhaps a relative) and Helen Scott. He is recorded as a merchant in 1781 and is probably the James who paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was Bailie several times in the period 1790–1810. He married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: James (b.1766); Robert (b.c.1769); John (b.1770), who became a lawyer and Town Clerk; William (b.1772); Christian (b.c.1773), who may have married John Sibbald in Edinburgh in 1792; Thomas (b.1775); Margaret (b.1777); and Mary (b.1781), who probably married Bailie Thomas Turnbull. For the 1766 baptism he was recorded as a merchant and the witnesses were John and Francis Elliot (his wife’s brothers). In 1772 the witnesses were Francis Elliot (again) and James senior (probably his father) and in 1777 were the whole congregation. He could be the James whose child was buried in Hawick in 1772. He is buried at St. Mary’s. Note that there is some confusion in that another James was born to his parents in 1740, which is assumed to be an error for John. James (18th C.) tenant at Ashybank, probably son of the previous James who was there. He was recorded at Ashybank in 1778 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. He was also recorded at Haughhead when several of his children’s baptisms were later recorded together, specifically Isabel (or ‘Tibby’, b.1784), Jean (b.1786) and John (b.1789) were probably also his children. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Rough-hope in 1785 when his son William was baptised. He is probably the James who married Isabel Scott and had other children, mostly baptised in Robertson Parish, namely: Isabel (b.1783); Nelly (b.1790); John (b.1792); and James (b.1799), baptised in Ashkirk. James (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: John (b.1780); James (b.1784); Peggy (b.1786); Archibald (b.1789); George (b.1792); and Robert (b.1795). His death (in his 89th year) is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine. James (18th C.) tanner who was Cornet in 1784. He was recorded at Hermiston in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (1765–1840s) baker in Hawick, son of Robert and Isabel ‘Kenmur’. He was Cornet in 1784. It was said that he continued to carry pistols at the Common riding, although it had been decreed to discontinue the practice the previous year. However, when his brother-in-law William Wilson was Cornet in 1786, the pistols were finally abandoned. He is probably the baker James who (along with Robert of Burnflat, his father) witnessed a baptism in 1789 for James Fairquhar and Margaret (perhaps his sister). He is probably the baker (and Bailie) called Oliver who was one of the first members of the Curling Club in 1803. He helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was listed in the 1808 will of William (‘Auld Cash’) as his second cousin. He was probably the James appointed Chief Magistrate of Hawick in 1818. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, when he is listed as being ‘of Burnflat’. In 1789 he married Ann, daughter of Walter Wilson, but they had no family, and she died in 1809. Probably the same baker James married Elizabeth Purdom.

Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Isobel (b.1820), who became Mrs. McIntosh; Robert William (1822–49), also a baker; Agnes (b.1823), who married blacksmith James Bowie; and William James (b.1824), also a baker. The family were living at about 43 High Street in 1841, and his wife was a widow there in 1851 (and listed as ‘landed proprietor’). In 1809 he was recorded being ‘in Birselton’. He is probably the James who was also referred to as being ‘of Burnflat’; this is how he is listed among the major landowners of Hawick Parish in 1839. According to James Wilson he described Burnflat as ‘ane nourice fee’ (i.e. the wages given to a wet-nurse, although it is unclear what that meant). James (18th/19th C.) from Westshiels in Southdean Parish. He married Jane Bruce, who was from Jedburgh. Their son William was baptised in Byrness in 1812. James (18th/19th C.) Treasurer of the Burgh of Hawick recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the same James who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. He may also be the James who is recorded on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of property at the east end of Langlands Road and also along the east side of Roadhead. James (1801–80) son of James, he also became tenant at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He was listed on the 1834 electoral roll as a joint proprietor. He was one of the Tory supporters who received ‘Tully’s Mill’ at the 1837 election. He apparently withstood the mob longer than anyone else, getting loose 3 times before finally being thrown into the Slitrig (4 men were later found guilty of rioting). However, he later wrote to Bailie Wilson, thanking him for the loan of some clothes, and stating that he ‘felt only a little stiff, and that he was a few slight bruises’. He was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as tenant there, farming about 1200 acres and employing 4 labourers. He farmed at How- pasley from 1858, was farming 3800 acres there, and employed 9 people; he was still recorded there in 1868. In 1842 he married Dorothea (or Dorothy, d.1891), daughter of William Moffat, farmer at Garwald, Eskdalemuir. His children included: James (b.1844); William Moffat (1846–1910), the eldest surviving son; Jane (1848–1918); Helen Elliot (b.1850); John (b.1852); and Thomas (b.1854). His younger sons went abroad. James (b.1804/5) stockmaking in Denholm, probably on Eastgate. In the 1860s he was listed as a stock-making in Denholm, suggesting he had his own business. His wife was ‘Barbary’ and their children included George and Barbara. There is an obelisk to their memory at Borthwick Waas. James (1814–1900) 4th surviving son of Hawick lawyer and Town Clerk John. He trained as a lawyer himself and was partner in the firm of George & James Oliver with his older brother. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street with his father and siblings, and was described as a clerk. He could be the James who was ‘sub-distributor’ in the stamp office on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was living at Teviot Lodge in 1861. In the mid-1800s he was recorded as owner of parts of Roughheugh that had previously belonged to John and William Thomline, Adam and George Easton and James Hart. He had Mayfield House built on land that he inherited from his father. He was a Town Councillor, serving as Chairman of Wilton Parochial Board, Wilton Landward School Board and Wilton Heritors’ Committee. In 1852 he married Thomasina Pott (1830–80), sister of Gideon Pott of Knowesouth and daughter of George and Jane Elliot. Their children were: Elliot (b.1854), who was a partner with Geo. & Jas. Oliver for a while, but retired and left the district; Jane Pott (b.1858), who married John Elliot of Binks; Christian Watson (b.1860), buried at Ainzahatta, Spain; James John (b.1864), partner in the legal firm; Elizabeth Murray (b.1866), also buried at Ainzahatta; as well as George (b.1860), Mary Georgina (b.1866) and Thomas (b.1868), who all died young. He retired about 1893 and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Papers from roughly 1895–1919 are in the Borders Archive. James Rutherford (1817–1905) Auctioneer and Livestock Salesman of Bridge House and later Thornwood, only son of Andrew. He trained as a lawyer, and then joined his father’s auctioneering business. He was a leading figure in the town in Victorian times, being a Town Councillor, Magistrate, J.P. (from 1888), Chairman of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Governor of Hawick Savings Bank (1890–94), Secretary and Treasurer of the West Teviotal Agricultural Society (1842–1905), founder member, Honorary Secretary and Treasurer of the Teviotaldale Farmers’ Club (1859–1905), President of the Border Burghs’ Conservative Association (1878–92), President of the Archaeological Society (1883–88). He was also a member of the Curling Club from 1844, being Secretary for several years, and the first Secretary of the Hawick Bowling Club. He was also Senior Magistrate 1857–58, resigning during the dispute over the railway line. He offered a site on Bridge Street for the new Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Church, but the congregation declined the offer at the time. He is said to have formed the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club after being blackballed from joining the other one (presumably the Agricultural society, formed earlier by Douglas of Cavers). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. He had the splendid Thornwood House built and is believed to have been owner of the first car in Hawick (a photograph shows him with a chauffeur and another man-servant in the grounds of Thornwood). Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place are named after him; his monogram ‘IRO’ is above 2 of the dormer windows at No. 3 Oliver Place, and the carved head above the entrance may be his likeness. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of the parts of Weensland and the ‘particulate’ lands of Hawick that had previously been held by James Dickson, as well as part of Roughheugh (earlier owned by James Knox). In 1849 he married Jane Rutherford (1828–55), daughter of builder Robert, and she died of typhus fever (after having 3 children). He secondly married his first wife’s niece, also Jane Rutherford (‘Mrs. Oliver’, the local historian), and they had 7 further children. His family included: Jane (1850–1910), who married Robert Inch; Andrew (b.1853), who died in infancy; Andrew Rutherford (b.1855), daughter of builder Robert; and another man named Gilbert; William James, who died in infancy; Dorothy Moffat, who married William Baxter and their children included: Agnes (b.1855), who was born in Hawick and taught for 40 years at the Penguin State School; and Dorothy Moffat, who married William Baxter and another man named Gilbert; William James, who married Nora Estelle Brown; and Jana E., who married Robert Waterfall from Sheffield; Blanche Ada (b.1868), who married Dr. Drummond from Liverpool; William (1869–1919), a solicitor; and Douglas (b.1871). At least one portrait of him exists. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

James (b.1819/20) farmer at Denholm Mill, son of Archibald. He is recorded there in 1851, and was miller on a directory of 1852. He married Mary Hall and their children included Archibald. James (1823–1908) born in Newcastle, son of shepherd George and Elizabeth Irving. In 1835 he emigrated to New York with 2 other brothers, to join their brother John, while the last brother, George, stayed in Liddesdale. They moved to a farm in Lagrange County, Indiana, where his father died in 1837 (the ‘sick year’). The family moved to Mishawaka and he attended school, but had to leave to support his mother and siblings. He first worked as a ditch-digger, then a cooper, before starting in a grist mill then an iron company. He eventually went into business for himself, making ploughs. He hit upon a novel manufacturing process and patented a ‘chilled steel plough’ (where the cooling method made the cutting surface superior). The Oliver Chilled Plow Works became one of the largest in the U.S.A., and was a standard tool of pioneer farmers. At its height the company employed 2000 people and the factory covered 27 acres of covered space, making 200,000 ploughs a year. He was a great benefactor of the town of South Bend, building a hotel (called the Oliver Hotel) and an opera house. The town presented him with a gold cup inscribed with the word ‘Copshawholm’, which his son used as the name for his new house there in 1900. He married Susan Doty in 1844, and she died in 1902. They had 2 children, Joseph (who carried on the business) and Josephine (who married the secretary of the company). When he died his fortune was nearly £15,000,000, making him one of the richest ever Borderers at that time. James (b.1824) son of James, who was a baker in Hawick. He worked as a journeyman baker. He was recorded in Hawick in 1855, but may then have moved to Langholm. He married Mary Murray, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Alexander (c.1854–1934), born in Langholm, who emigrated to Tasmania and taught for 40 years at the Penguin State School; Agnes (b.1855), who was born in Hawick and married George King; Jack; Ralpha; and Frank.

James Walter (b.1840) born in Wilton Parish, son of George and Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’) Telfer. The family emigrated to Canada in 1844 and he eventually became a surgeon in Niagara Falls. James (b.1844) son of James and Dorothy Moffat, he was born in Robertson Parish. He married Martha Pollard and their children included: Dorothy Moffat, who married William Baxter and another man named Gilbert; William James, who married Nora Estelle Brown; and Jana E., who married Roberton Parish. Members of the family lived later in Western Australia. Rev. James (1845–1918) born in Teviothead, son of John and Helen Sibbald. He was educated at Newmill and then at Hawick Grammar School. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1863 and spent 2 years as an assistant teacher to Anthony Dodds at Bucceuch School (being succeeded by J.A.H. Murray). He was assistant minister at Selkirk and Bedrule and then at Nelston before being ordained as minister at Tweedmouth in 1870 and moving to St. James’, Portobello in 1880. He was President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and represented them at the 1906 Jubilee celebration for the Hawick Archaeological Society. He was said to be a great orator. He married Elizabeth Young of Howford. James (d.bef. 1917) from Newcastleton, he was an apprentice draper in Hawick. He was said to have had a lifelong interest in Hawick and in dramatics. James Lindsay (1860–93) youngest son of Hawick lawyer George. He bought some property in New Zealand with his brother George Lindsay. However, he suffered from ill-health and returned to Scotland. He married Agnes Ellen (‘Nellie’), daughter of Peter Pennycook of New Hall. He took over running the farm at Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn) for his ill mother-in-law’s brother Henry Elliot. He hunted regularly with the Jedforest Hunt, although he eventually lost the use of one arm. He had one son, Harry. He died at Greenriver and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. His wife and mother-in-law moved to Scarborough after his death. James John (b.1864) younger son of lawyer James, he worked in the family firm of Geo. & Jas. Oliver. In 1914, on the death of his cousin John Oliver of Lynnwood, he became senior partner in the firm. He also lived at Mayfield after his father died. He was a keen member of the Teviotdale Cycling Club and the Hawick Golf Club (where he was Captain for 2 years and Treasurer for 10 years). He was a founder member of the Border Club, and the last surviving original member. He was also Chairman of the Hawick Constitutional Club. He served as a Lay Elector, Church Warden and Treasurer (for over 50 years) for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. During WWI he was a Special Constable and became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire in 1930. He retired at the age of 82, owing to failing eyesight. In 1894 he married Robina Pennycook Scott and their children were Edith Agnes Scott (‘Nancy’, who married Harry Usher of Courthill), Thomasina (who married Victor Henry Wells-Cole), James Scott (also W.S.) and Tommy Scott. He is buried at St. Cuthbert’s. James Scott, W.S. (20th C.) son of James John, he was also a partner in Geo. & Jas. Oliver. He is probably the James S. whose diary describes his time as an A.R.P. Warden during WWII. James Kenneth Murray, O.B.E., ‘Ken’ (1914–99) auctioneer and successful horsetrainer who lived at Hassendeanbank. He was the son of Douglas and great-grandson of Andrew. As an amateur jockey he won many races, including the Scottish Grand National of 1950 on ‘Sanvina’. As a trainer he had nearly 1,000 winners, including 5 Scottish Grand National winners, and in 3 separate seasons he had 56 winners. He is also the only trainer to have had a horse come second 3 times in the Grand National, ‘Wynburgh’. He was founding Chairman of the National Trainers Federation and was largely responsible for the renaissance of the Doncaster Bloodstock Horse Sales. He was also sometimes known as the ‘Benign Bishop’ after one of his horses (or perhaps the other way around). He gave a speech at the Friday Hut in 1992. He married Joan Innes and they had children Susan (who married William Forster) and Douglas Stuart. He secondly married Rhona Wilkinson. A biography ‘The Benign Bishop’ (1994) was written by Dan Buglass. Jane see Helen Christina Easson Rees. Janet (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541, along with Patrick and Marion. Janet (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with Robert. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 8s 4d. Her name is given first, suggesting she was mother or older sister of Robert. Several other Olivers were tenants of 3 other parts of Lustruther. Janet (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Wool’ on a list of people who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684 and were declared rebels. It is unclear whether ‘Wool’ was Woll, or Wells or somewhere else around Jedforest. Jean ‘Jeannie Ma Lord’ (d.1819) said to be a descendant of ‘Hab o’ Hawick’ and cousin of ‘Clinty’. Although married, it is said that she retained her maiden name through strength of character and that her married name was Riddell or Turnbull. She was also known as ‘Jane’. She was well educated and her kitchen on Silver Street was a meeting place for the local literati. She wrote an account of the flood of 1767. In the 1837 election a Tory-supporter named Robert Paterson took refuge under the bed of her house (or former house) and was dragged out by the mob. She was known as a strong-willed eccentric, and her nickname came from her word being law among her circle of acquaintances. Stories are also told about how she was ‘fond of Dress and used to give considerable orders to the Drapers of the town’. She had a son called ‘Daft Robbie’, Dr. Oliver of the Navy. Despite the story that her maiden name was Oliver, her death record records her as ‘Jeany Scott spouse to deceased Robert Oliver – Jeany my Lord’; hence she may have been the Jean Scott who married Shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1756. Her nickname may therefore be related to the ‘Lord’ nickname that some of the Olivers had. Jeremiah (b.1735) son of Thomas and Janet Middlemas. He was born in Southdean Parish, but lived most of his life in Crailing. He married Margaret Leadhouse and their children were: Stephen (1782–58), tailor; Robert (b.1784); Robert (again, b.1785); Andrew (b.1787); Richard (b.1788); and Agnes (b.1795).

Some of his descendants emigrated to New Zealand. John (13th C.) merchant in Berwick, recorded in 1260. He is one of the earliest known Olivers in the Borders. John (15th C.) recorded as master of works for a bridge in Dumfries in 1460 and again in 1465. It is unclear how he was related to other Olivers. John (15th/16th C.) son of Robert in Strange and brother of Ingram. In 1494/5 he was listed among 8 Olivers and a Shiel when they had remission for communing with the English. He was also described in 1502 as brother of Ingram when he was allowed to pay a fine, along with Robert and David, ‘in Stryndis’, for being involved with several raids around Jedburgh, Roucecaste, Lanton and Bedrule. He and Robert (perhaps the same Robert who was his father) specifically stole 6 oxen and cows from Philip Ormiston at Maxton; Mark Ker of Dolphinston was surety for him. Additionally in 1502, along with his brother Ingram and David ‘Nae Guidd Priest’, he had remission for stealing oxen from Ancrum, as well as sheep, a cow and other items from Maxton; Mark Ker of Dolphinston served as his surety. He was probably ‘Long John Oliver’ (‘longus’ in Latin), who, along with ‘Little John Oliver’ and David in Stryndis was also allowed to pay a fine for stealing a list (long and detailed) of goods from Martin Wood in Whitfield in 1502, with Mark Ker of Dolphinston as his surety. Furthermore, in 1502 he was also charged with: stealing 2 oxen from Adam Moscrop in Jedburgh, along with his brother Ingram; stealing a horse and 4 oxen from Thomas Pringle in Smailholm; stealing a horse from John Cranston in Crailing; stealing 2 horses and some sheep from George Davidson in Raperlaw; and stealing a horse and goods from Bongate in Jedburgh. Once again Mark Ker was his surety. Finally in 1502, along with another John and John’s brother David, all from Strange, he was allowed to compone for stealing a horse from Ednam. Also in 1502 he Martin and Matthew componed for stealing 2 cows and more than 100 sheep from the Laird of Bedrule at Bedrule and Fulton; again Mark Ker was his surety. John (15th/16th C.) son of Gilbert in ‘stryndis’. In 1502 he and his brother James had remission for a series of crimes: stealing an ox from Ancrum; stealing 2 cows from Jedburgh; and treason. His surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Also in 1502 he is recorded as son of Gilbert in ‘stryndis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse and a sword from Smailholm; his surety was again Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Additionally, along with his brother David and another John, all from Strange, he was allowed to compone in 1502 for stealing a horse from Ednam. Furthermore, in 1502, he was recorded as son of Gilbert ‘in kileclewis’ when he was allowed to compone, along with David for stealing 19 sheep and a cow from Maxton and six sheep from Muirhouselaw; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was his surety. He was also recorded in 1502 as son of Gilbert when, along with Martin in Strange, he was allowed to compone for stealing a cow from Bedrule; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was again the surety. He was also recorded as son of Gilbert in 1502 when he was allowed to compone, along with his brother David, for stealing a horse and a pot from Ednam. He was recorded further in 1502 being ‘in le stryndis’ when, along with David, he was allowed to compone for crimes commited against Gilbert Lamb at Jedburgh, including seriously wounding him; Andrew Kerr was surety. He is probably the same man as ‘Little John’ (‘parva’ in Latin) who had remission in 1502, along with ‘Long John’ and David, for stealing goods from Martin Wood in Whitfield; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was his surety, suggesting he was the same John. John ‘Cadger’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1505 when ‘Rob with the Dog’ had remission for intercommuning with him and David ‘Nae Guidd Priest’. He is there said to be ‘called Cageare’, John (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rontrehil’ (probably Rowantreehill) in 1541 along with Robert, paying 11 shillings. Several other Olivers (John, Margaret, Adam and Robert ‘the schireff’) were tenants in the other parts of the farm and may be related. John (16th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Rowntrehil’ along with Marion and Adam, paying 22 shillings yearly. This is separate from the John who was in ‘Rontrehil’ with Robert. John ‘Blackheid’ (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, listed separately from another John and several other Olivers. He was tenant of part of Lustruther valued at 8s 4d. John (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with Katherine and Marion, who were probably his daughters or sisters. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 25s, while several other Olivers were tenants of 3 smaller parts of Lustruther. John (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in 1541 in Jedforest, along with Patrick, Gilbert and Andrew. Probably the same man was recorded as ‘Jake Ollyver of Whitside’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. George and ‘Patte’ Oliver were also listed as being at Whiteside, and hence probably related. John (16th C.) tenant in Harelawcleuch in 1541 along with Richard Oliver and Patrick Laidlaw. John (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the lands was valued at 25s. Other tenants there included Ninian, Walter, ‘Little’ Roger, ‘Lang’ Roger and Robert, called ‘Laird’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joke Ollyver of Lustrodder younger’ in 1544, when he was among Olivers and others who gave assurance to the English Crown. William, Hob and Ringan were also listed at Lustruther and so were probably related. John (16th C.) tenant at Slacks in 1541, along with Thomas, who was probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Charles renting the other part of Slacks. He was also recorded as being ‘of Slaks’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. John (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, Michael, Adam and Robert. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. He is recorded as ‘Joke Ollyver of Cresters’, which is probably a transcription error for Chesters. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded at ‘Fowden’ (probably ‘Sowden’) in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. John (16th C.) recorded being from Bedrule when he was cited to appear before the Privy Council in 1566. He is probably the priest from Bedrule listed among several Borders clerics ordered to appear before the Lords of Secret Council in 1569; he was there recorded as ‘Maister Johnne Oliver in Bedroule’. He was presumably a pre-Reformation priest who was cited for not giving up the old ways. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘John Olibpe in Tempilhall’ when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater in 1604. He was also one of the people who were directed by a court action to leave Templehall and Brewlands in 1605, this being brought by George Turnbull, acting as ‘tutor’ to Jean and Beatrix Turnbull. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with Simon Robson in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. John (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is probably the John in Bank whose wife’s will, Grizel Hall, was recorded in 1685. John (17th C.) recorded as smith near Chesters (Southdean) in a list of tenants of Jedforest in 1669. He is probably related to the Thomas who was recorded as smith at Chesters at 1694 and could be one of the 2 men called John who were also listed as residents at Chesters in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Rodes’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this was exactly, but it is listed right after Whiteside. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Highlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John (17th C.) tenant in ‘Slacks’, listed on the 1669 rental roll of Jedburgh Forest. George and William were also tenants at the same time. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Fowler and their children included: Agnes (b.1678); and Bessie (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Adam and William Brown. John (d.1679) from Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married ‘Jenet Bo’ (presumably Janet Boa). Their son William was born in Hawick in 1674. John (17th C.) tenant in Falside. In 1679 he served as surety for his brother Thomas, ‘servitor of the Marquis of Douglas’, who was a Covenanter supporter. Perhaps the same John was recorded as tenant on the 1694 Horse Tax Rolls along with Steven. John (17th C.) listed ‘in Wadiespindles’ among people declared rebels in 1684 for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Blackleemouth when his will was recorded in 1685. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He is probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Jardine, younger, in 1708. John (17th C.) appears to be recorded as ‘Stand the Lan’ (or perhaps ‘Lau’) in the Hearth Tax records for the area of Jedburgh in 1694. It is unclear if this was a nickname or a location of some sort. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Strange in 1689, when he headed a list of Southdean parishioners who complained that their minister had failed to pray for William and Mary, resident of Strange in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He was surely related to George who was also recorded there. John (17th C.) resident of ‘hoa cleugh-fit’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. This entry comes just before Waterside, and so was presumably in the Jedforest area. John of Dinlabyre (17th/18th C.) 1st Oliver Laird, he was descended from the Olivers of Lustruither. He may be the tenant recorded at Lustruither and Hyndlee in 1694, when he paid tax on 6 hearths (so he was an important farmer in the area at that time). He probably purchased the Dinlabyre estate from the Elliots in about 1698. He is described as ‘elder’ of Dinlabyre in 1719 when he purchased the lands of Larriston from Robert Elliot. His eldest son was William, who succeeded to Dinlabyre, and married Mary, daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk. His 2nd daughter Mary married John, son of William Chisholme of that Ilk (and therefore he had a son-in-law and a brother-in-law who were brother and sister!). It is unclear how he was related to the Olivers of Southdean and neighbouring areas. John (d.1739) last of the Olivers of Ashtrees. The lands passed to his only child Helen, and her husband, John Scott. John (1684/5–1750) tenant farmer at Stonedge. He married Helen ‘Andrum’, who died in 1762, aged 71 (or possibly 76). Along with their daughter Euphen, they were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotrule Kirk. John of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1775) only son of William and Mary Chisholme. He may have been Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as Procurator-Fiscal. He also owned the lands of Over and Nether Larriston and others in Liddesdale. In 1748, along with his father, he gifted sacramental cups to Castleton Kirk. He is probably the ‘Jo. Olipher’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish for both Haggiehaugh and Dinlabyre House. In 1734 he married Violet, eldest daughter of Thomas Douglas, who was brother of Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his eldest son William (b.1738); he may have had other sons, but their names are not known. His daughter Jean married Samuel Mitchelson, W.S., in 1753. His wife may be the ‘Lady Dinlabyre’ recorded in a hire of the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. John (18th C.) referred to as ‘senior’ in an account of the 1767 flood. He and shoemaker Thomas Waugh ‘got to the top of the kiln’, but then needed people to throw ropes to save them. He may be one of the 3 shoemakers of that name who had children in the 1760s, perhaps the one who lived at ‘Bridge end’; however, he could be a John from an earlier generation. Rev. John (1707–1755) youngest son of Thomas, tenant in Southdean Mill. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1733, and became assistant minister at Southdean in 1736. In 1743 he took over as minister of Southdean on the death of his predecessor John Inglis. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Southdean Parish in 1748. His wife, Isobel Hall (daughter of Edward of Whitelee in Redesdale) died in London in 1774. Their children were Elizabeth, Thomas, Janet and Edward. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Susan Hope and their children included: George (b.1756); Margaret (b.1757); Susan (b.1760); and William (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were smith Robert Telfer and George (who was probably a relative), in 1761 were Bailie James Scott and gardener Thomas Miller. It is unclear how he was related to other shoemaking Olivers, however the other shoemaker John was witness to a baptism for him in 1760, along with blacksmith Robert Telfer. Given the names, he may have been the son of shoemaker George, born in 1724, with the other John being his cousin. It is probably the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms (along with merchant Andrew Scott) for merchant William Veitch in 1757, 1759 and 1765 and for merchant Andrew Scott (along with William Veitch) in 1758 and 1762. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers Knowes in 1745 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. John (18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He may be the son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall who was born in Hawick in 1734. He married Isabel Scott in 1756. Their children included: Agnes; Robert (b.1762), tailor in Hawick, probably ‘Clinty’; Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (1764–1838), who died in Peebles; Agnes (again, b.1766); Alison (b.1768); Andrew (b.1770); and William (b.1775). His son William was named as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’; William’s brother was stated to be tailor Robert, who may have been ‘Clinty’. In fact he was probably a full cousin of ‘Auld Cash’. In 1760 he was witness to a baptism for another shoemaker of the same name, who may have been his cousin. Either he or one of the other shoemakers called John was witness for shoemaker James Brown in 1766. He is probably the shoemaker at ‘Bridge end’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. He may also be the John ‘senior’ who narrowly escaped from his house during the flood of 1767. John (b.1735) son of Walter and Margaret Turnbull, he was born in Hawick and was a shoemaker. He married Helen Currer in Hawick in 1763; she was living in Hawick Parish, but born in Bedrule Parish, daughter of James. Their children included: Helen (b.1764); Margaret (b.1766); Jane (b.1768), who married James, son of George and Agnes

Oliver

Douglas (who were related to the Timpendean Douglases); and Agnes (b.1772). The witnesses in 1766 were James Currer (probably his father-in-law) and Robert Oliver (presumably a relative, but there were several contemporary men of this name) and in 1772 were James Elliot of Ormiston and surgeon Robert Erskine. James Haining suggests that he secondly married Agnes Ekron, but that is probably confusion with a different John (b.1740). John (b.1740) son of James, farmer at Earlsie and Margaret Douglas, who came from the Trows family. He was a merchant in Hawick. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Alexander Lockie in 1772. In 1766 he married Agnes (1748–80), daughter of merchant James Ekron and Isobel Richardson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1767), who died young; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1771–1844), who married linen merchant Charles Scott, and not George Hall from Duns, as some Hall of Philadelphia family histories have suggested; James (b.1773); James (again, b.1775); Agnes (d.1775), who also died young; Isabel (again, b.1777); and William (b.1779), died in infancy. James Oliver Senior and ‘J. Oliver Jr.’ (probably his father and brother) were witnesses to the baptism of his first child, and seem likely to have been his father and brother. James Oliver ‘Senior’ (probably his father) and merchant James Ekron (his father-in-law) were witnesses in 1771, William Scott, merchant, and James Aitkin were witnesses in 1773, while J. Oliver, merchant and T. Aitkin were witnesses in 1777. His wife Agnes’ had a book of the catechism that survived as a family heirloom.

John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Moss (also from Hawick) in 1761. Their children included: Helen (b.1762), who married Isabel Moss (also from Hawick) in 1761. John (b.1740) said to have been son of William and Isabella Stewart. He lived in Wilton Parish for at least at the time when his children were baptised (e.g. at Muirfield in 1791), and was later at Essendis. He married Margaret Douglas in Castleton Parish in 1770. Their children included: Helen (b.1775); John (b.1777); Francis (b.1779); Isabel (b.1782); William (b.1785); Robert (b.1787), who emigrated to Pictou County, Nova Scotia; Henry (b.1791), who emigrated with his brother Robert; and Margaret (b.1789). John (18th/19th C.) listed at Stobs Castle in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Denholm Mill. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been father of Archibald, who was also at Denholm Mill in 1825. John (1770–1849) 2nd son of James, ironmonger and Cornet, he was grandfather of J.J. Oliver of Mayfield. He became a lawyer and set up in partnership with John Elliot about 1791. He is recorded in documents in Selkirk, perserved in the Walter Mason Collection, in 1807, 1810, 1813, 1814 and 1815. Oliver & Elliot were appointed agents for the Commercial Bank in 1820 (or shortly afterwards), and were listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory on Buccleuch Street. His house at 5 Buccleuch Street is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He is probably also the ‘J. Oliver Esq.’ who is shown on Wood’s map as owner of land around where Mayfield Park was built. He served as Hawick’s Town Clerk 1810–41, being originally appointed jointly with James Inglis (he was recorded as already Town Clerk in 1808 when his son James died). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He arranged for the first Burgh Seal in 1817 (and in fact paid for the small version of the seal himself), which led to the design for the Town’s Coat of Arms. He was also one of the founding members of the Hawick Curling Club. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In 1827 Oliver & Elliot were involved with a case in Selkirk regarding ‘Dowager Lady’s Elliot’s 4 wheel carriage’. For a while he was in partnership with his sons (at least William and Thomas) as woolen manufacturers; together with William Wilson & Sons they purchased Weensland Corn Mill in about 1836 and had Weendland Mill built there. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as agent of the Commercial Bank and also for North British Insurance, along with his son George; he is also listed as a writer on Buccleuch Street, with ‘John & George’ being listed separately as writers and ‘justice of peace clerks’. He was living on Buccleuch Street (at about No. 11) in 1841, with his children William, James, Thomas and Mary. On his retirement he was presented with a silver punch bowl by the Burgh. He married Jean (or Jane), daughter of George Fairley, merchant of Greenlaw. Their children were: James (1802–08), who died young; George (b.1803), also a lawyer; John (b.1805), farmer at Caerlenrig and Whitropefoot; Jane (b.1807), who married William Aitcheson of Linhope; Christian (b.1809), who married Liverpool merchant William Watson; Margaret (b.1810), who married Dr. Harrison of the East India Company; Mary (b.1812); William (b.1813), farmer at Hallrule and Barnes; James (b.1814) also a lawyer, who had Mayfield House built; and Thomas Fairley (b.1816), farmer at West Fortune, Haddington. He is buried at St. Mary’s. A portrait of him exists. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Anne Niel in Ashkirk Parish in 1800 (with his wife’s name given as ‘Agnes’). Their children included: Isabel (b.1801), who married John White of Midshiels; Janet (b.1802), who married Francis Napier Scott; Alexander (b.1804), miller and later keeper of Ashkirk Tollbar; Jane (b.1806); and James (b.1809). His widow could be the 80 year old pauper of the same name (born in Minto Parish) living with Barbara Scott in Denholm in 1851 (and who had a son Alexander in Minto in 1800). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 5 horses at that time. John (c.1786–1847) from the Hawick area. He emigrated to Canada. He married Agnes Rutherford and their children were: Janet (c.1817–47); George (c.1820–1900), who died in Carberry, Manitoba; and Andrew (c.1827–50), who died in New Orleans. He and his wife died in Galt, Ontario. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick man known locally as a musician, probably on the fiddle (noted as such by W.N. Kennedy in 1863, with no additional information given). John (1781–1857) born in Bedrule Parish, son of James. He was miller of Hawick Mill. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and was farmer and miller on the Crescent in the 1841 census. He was also recorded as a nail-maker at Hawick Mill in the 1837 directory and a nail-maker on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at Hawick Mill House and recorded as farmer of 50 acres and nail-maker, employing 6 men. He was living with his sister-in-law Margaret Scott and nephew Robert Renwick. He was still listed as miller at Hawick Mill in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (b.c.1785) shoemaker at 4 Cross Wynd, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Margaret. It is unclear how he might have been related to other shoemaking Olivers. John (1789/90–bef. 1861) tailor in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 15 North Hermitage Street. His daughter Anne was still living there in 1861. He could be the John who was recorded as subscription librarian in Newcastle in 1852. John (18th/19th C.) nailer at Teviothaugh. He was recorded in 1815 among Denholm men accused of ‘mobbing and defacing water bailiffs’, but acquitted. John (b.c.1790) miller at Haughhead in Hawick Parish. He is listed there in 1841, along with his wife Alison; this could be Alison Turnbull, who married a John in Kirkton Parish in 1809. John (c.1800–bef. 51) framework knitter. He came from the same family as Mary, who married Walter Grieve. He was recorded on the Loan (around No. 6) in 1841. He married Margaret Purves, who was from Bedrule. Their children were: Margaret (b.c.1826); John (b.1828), who moved to Vancouver; Robert (1831–1906), who emigrated to South Australia; Helen (b.1834); Martha (b.1836); Isabella or Elizabeth (b.1838); and Janet (b.1840). By 1851 his wife was a widow at No. 6 Loan, and she was still there in 1861, working as a ‘Mangle Keeper’. John (b.1805) 2nd surviving son of Hawick Town Clerk John. He farmed at Caerlenrig and Whitropefoot. He was named in 1837 along with his brother George, and Robert Anderson (also a lawyer in Hawick) among Tories who had jointly purchased land in Selkirkshire for the purposes of voting there. He was recorded at Caerlenrig in 1861, farming 80 arable acres and 600 acres of pasture and employing 5 people. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Rigg’ in 1868. He married Helen Sibbald and they had 4 sons and 2 daughters, John (b.1843), James (b.1845), Alex...
George (b.1847), Jane (b.1849), Agnes (b.1852) and John. John (1809/10–70) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf. He married Jane Young, who died at Dryden in 1893, aged 74. They are buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.1843) son of farmer John and grandson of the Hawick Town Clerk of the same name who founded the family law firm. He resided at Lynwood House. He became the senior partner in Geo. & Jas. Oliver. He married Euphemia, daughter of John Johnstone of Crailing Hall. Their daughters were Helen Sibbald, Mary Beatrice Simson and Elizabeth Rutherford. He was a prominent agriculturalist, being tenant of Whiterope and President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He was also Vice-President of the Sacred Harmonic Society in the 1880s. John (b.1850) eldest son of lawyer George. He succeeded his father as partner in the firm of ‘writers and bank agents’, ‘Geo. & Jas. Oliver’. He also became tenant in Borthaugh after his father’s death. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Burnflat, which had previously belonged to George. He represented Wilton Parish on the County Council for 9 years. He was an enthusiastic promoter of the Border Club. He is probably the John of Borthaugh who composed ‘March Militaire: The Border Mounted Volunteers’. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He married Edith Mary, daughter of Thomas Cobb of Kent (a family that can trace its ancestry back to the time of Edward II). Their children were: Mary Lindsay, a musician, who moved to Moline, Illinois; George Lindsay, a Captain in the West India Regiment; John Lindsay, who served in the Boer War and moved to Salisbury, Rhodesia; Thomas Lindsay, an engineer with the Chicago and Rock Island Railway Company, who died of typhoid in Moline in 1905; James Lindsay, who followed his brother to the U.S.A. as an engineer; Faulconer Lindsay, who became a farmer in New Zealand; Gordon Lindsay, who also went to Chicago to work for the railway; and Edith Margaret Lindsay. The entire family had the middle name ‘Lindsay’, in memory of his mother and to distinguish this branch of the family. John (19th/20th C.) eldest son of hosiery manager Robert. He trained as an architect, working for Alex Inglis. In WWI he was with the R.A.M.C. and received the Military Medal. He was later an architect in South Africa. John A.L., partner in the firm of Geo. & Jas. Oliver, the 5th generation of Hawick lawyers. He started practising in about 1977. Katherine (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with John and Marion. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 25s, while several other Oilers were tenants of 3 smaller parts of Lustruther. Ken see James Kenneth Murray. Leo (13th C.) recorded as ‘Lionus Oliver de Thordon’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was also listed in Coquetdale as a fugitive. His lands were in England, but, nevertheless, he is an early example of this surname. Richard, son of Thomas, is also listed in 1279 and possibly related. Lyle (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee in 1544, when he was among Olivers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘Lyonell Olyver of Rowghleis’. Lyle (17th C.) tenant in Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed along with Thomas ‘minor’, who may have been related. Margaret (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541, along with her son William. Their steadings was valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants at Mervinslaw included James and William alias ‘Merchant’. Margaret (16th C.) tenant in Hindhaughhead in 1541 along with her son Gilbert. They paid 25 shillings yearly. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant in Wylie’s Hill in 1541, along with Margaret Wylie, paying 25s yearly. Another part of the farm was tenant by (presumably a different) Margaret, paying 12s 6d yearly. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant in the larger part of Westerhouses in 1541, along with Nicholas. Alexander was tenant of 1/3 of the farm. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when she was fined by the Magistrates for calling Isabell Scott ‘witchesgait, and saying that she devoured her awine child’. Margaret (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Slack’ in 1684 on a list of people who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance and were declared rebels. She was among a relatively small number of women who were prosecuted for being Covenanters. Margaret (18th C.) servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when she was working for John Elliot. Margaret (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Mary in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. Margaret (b.1778/9) grocer at Chesters in 1841 and 1851. She was born in Crailing Parish and was widow, probably of one of the local Olivers. Marion (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541 along with Patrick and Janet. Her name is listed as ‘Mariote Olivere’ (which is probably ‘Marion’, but could also be ‘Mary’). Marion (16th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Rowntrehill’ in 1541 along with John and Adam, paying 11 shillings. Several other Olivers (John, Robert and Robert ‘the of Fawside', with Ringan and Dandy Oliver also in 1544. His name was given as 'Matyn Ollyver (15th C.)' son of Geoffrey. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for non-appearance. Other Olivers who were fined at the same time were Robert and James son of Gilbert, Matthew son of Geoffrey and Robert brother of Matthew. It is unclear how he might have been related to these other Olivers, or who his brother Robert was. However, probably the same Martin was recorded in 1494/5 as brother of Matthew (although it is possible that what is meant is brother of Robert in Strange), when a group of 8 Olivers and a Shiel had remission for communing with the English. In 1502, along with his brother Matthew and James son of Gilbert, he was allowed to compone for stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Rucastle, Lanton and Bedrule; his surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Probably the same Martin in Strange was allowed to compone in 1502, along with John son of Gilbert, for stealing a cow from Bedrule; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was again the surety. Further in 1502 he was allowed to compone, along with Martin (both in Strange) for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from George Russell in Fulton. Also in 1502 he Martin and John compone for stealing 2 cows and more than 100 sheep from the Laird of Bedrule at Bedrule and Fulton; Andrew Kerr was again his surety. He is likely to be the Matthew recorded in 1502 who was sentence to hanging in Jedburgh, along with Robert, David and Martin, all residing at Strynds (near Abbotrule); the judgement was on account of failure to find sureties. A note in the records of the Justice-aire adds that the men were delivered to the Sheriff, so presumably the sentence was carried out. Matthew (16th C.) miller at Langnewton Mill. In 1590 he was among a list of men who complained about an attack by Robert and James, brothers of Andrew Ker of Newhall, and their accomplies. Michael (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, John, Adam and Robert. Michael (b.1820s) farmer at the Flex in 1841. His wife was Helen and they had a daughter Helen. Michael (b.1816/7) born at Whitlaw, he was Constable in Teviothead Parish. He lived at Teinds Slope in 1851, but by 1861 he had moved to Melrose. His wife was Mina and they had children Williamina and William. Michael ‘the Toff’, full back for Hawick Royal Albert. His nickname came from how he conducted himself on the pitch. He first played for the Legion and was signed by the Albert at the age of 18, remaining for 12 seasons. He was part of the team that won the East of Scotland League Championship in 1973/4. He later played for Kelso United and Hawick Waverley. Mrs. James Rutherford (1839–1914), born Jane Rutherford, she was the second wife of James and step-mother of Andrew R. The couple had 7 children together. She had a strong interest in local history, writing 'Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch' (1887) and 'Border Sketches' (1904), as well as articles for the Transactions. She was usually referred to as simply ‘Mrs. Oliver of Thornwood’. She also had short stories published in Chambers Journal. She was involved in Conservative politics, being and active member of the Primrose League. Her portrait is in the Museum, by an artist. Rose League. Her portrait is in the Museum, by an artist. She was an active member of the Primrose League. Her portrait is in the Museum, by an artist. She was a Guest at the Common Riding of 1902. In 1903 she unveiled the plaque on the Sclaterford Monument in 1901. She was Guest at the Common Riding of 1902. In 1903 she unveiled the plaque on the Sclaterford Bridge. She was an active member of the Primrose League. Her portrait is in the Museum, by an unknown artist. Murray (19th C.) elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. Nellie ‘Nell o the Bar’ (19th C.) wife of Kit Paterson (descendant of ‘Pawkie’). The ‘bar’ presumably refers to the Loan Toll-bar, near where they lived. Nichol ‘Ower-the-cleuch’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as ‘Nichol Olipheir, cal-lit Ouer the Cleuch’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Nicholas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was the representative of John Rutherford of Hundalee to ‘give suit’ for Rutherford’s lands of Grubet at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. Nicholas (16th C.) joint tenant in the larger part of Westerhouses in 1541, along with Margaret. Alexander was tenant of 1/3 of the farm. Ninian (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541, with his part of the lands valued at 25s. Tenants of the other parts included John, Walter, ‘Little ’ Roger, ‘Lang’ Roger and Robert, called ‘Laird’. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Ranyon Ollyver’ in the same place as William of ‘Myrleslawe’ in 1544, when he was among a list of Scotsmen swearing allegiance to the English King. They may have been based at Mervinslaw. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) listed at Falside among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. His name is listed as ‘Ranyon Ollyver of Fawsid’. ‘Dandy Ol-lyver of the same’ is also listed and hence surely related. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded at Lustruther among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. Other men at the same place were William, Hob and Jock, younger. Ninian (17th C.) resident of Woodhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.1736) farmer at Smalicleughfoot in Jedwater, near to Ferniehirst Mill. His name is also written ‘Ringam’. He was famed as one the most important of the local Olivers in his day, holding a position of trust by the Baron of Ferniehirst and being known for his great strength. Many stories of his feats were current in Jedforest into the 19th century. One tale involves the liberation for 2 friends from Newcastle Jail. Another involves him shooting the dogs of some hunters who rode through his corn (this being amplified in James Telfer’s poem ‘Auld Ringan’); they were said to have reported him to the King, leading to his arrest by royal warrant. A different version says that he was a Covenanter, who fought at Drumclog and Bothwell Bridge, then supposedly slew a Highlander champion in single combat, went into hiding and joined the Cameronians at Dunkeld. Later came to blows in a dispute with the young Marquess of Lothian, ending up imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. After the Revolution he is said to have returned to his farm and attended the Cameronian Chapel at Denholm. His tale is described by Sir Walter Scott, in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’, in the ballad by James Telfer (published in 1824 and revised for the 1852 edition), in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’ in 1907 and in ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale’ in 1908. The extent to which any of the details are true is completely unclear, although Abraham Oliver is recorded as resident at Smalicleughfoot in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, and could have been a close relative – ‘Auld Ringan sat i’ the Smalicleugh Tower, Even at his ain hearth-stane; And his mind did roam on youthful deeds, Of days that now were gane’ [JTe]. He is also said to have died in jail in Edinburgh and to be buried in Greyfriars Churchyard. His ‘Andrea Ferrara’ sword was kept by the inventor James Veitch, whose great-grandmother was his sister; it was later owned by the Veitches of Inchbonny. He had a son, Robert. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.1736) tailor in Falside. In 1698 his twin sons Stephen and Andrew were baptised in Southdean Parish, Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1538 being made ‘chamberlain’ responsible by the Crown for collecting the rentals in Jedforest. He was ‘Sir’ (or ‘domino’), probably meaning that he was a priest rather than a knight. He was allowed rents from 40 shillings worth of land. It is unclear how he was related to other Olivers. Patrick (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rouchchesteris’ in Jedforest according to a rental roll of 1541. It is unclear where this farm was, but probably near Strange and Southdean Mill, where he may have been related to other Olivers. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in Southdean Mill in 1541, along with Janet and Marion. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in Jedforest in 1541, along with Gilbert, Andrew and John. His name was listed first and so he may have been the senior family member. He is also recorded as ‘Patte Ollyver of Whiteside’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. ‘Jake’ and ‘Gorge’ Oliver were also listed as being at Whiteside in 1544, and hence probably related. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) first man listed among the Olivers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. He was listed as ‘Patte Ollyver of the Bushe’, his lands probably being Bush near Bonchester. Patrick (17th C.) resident at Has sendean recorded in 1684 among the men declared as rebels for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He may be the Partick who married Bessie Scott and whose children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Isobel (b.1681), with witnesses William Scott and John Armstrong. Patrick (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. 2 men with this same name were listed along with other Olivers, and a Common and a Laidlaw. Patrick (1720/1–79) died at Bridgehouse in Castleton Parish. His wife Margaret Beattie died in 1793, aged 60. He is probably an ancestor of James and Peter, who were merchants in Newcastle. He and his wife are buried at Ettleton. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Westshiels in Southdean Parish. He had 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in the same year. He may also have been known as Peter. His children included: Patrick (b.1783); and James (b.1785). Other children may have been Mary (b.c.1779), Margaret (b.1785), Andrew (b.1786), Thomas (b.1786) and Isabel (b.1788). Peter (16th C.) described as ‘sontymes receipt with’ (i.e. reset with) George Ker of Primside Mill when he was accused by the English Warden of stealing sheep from him in 1589. Peter (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He lived for a while at Hyndlee and was shepherd to ‘Brockalaw’ (i.e. on nearby Brockie Law). A story is told by his son Robert, recounted in ‘The local historian’s table book’ (1844) of how he encountered one of the fairy folk. Peter (1783–1861) son of Patrick, tenant at Westshiels in Southdean Parish. He married Mary Fowler and their children John (1826–1917) and Robert (b.1827) were born in Edinburgh. He died at Cannonmills, Edinburgh. Peter (1789/90–1845) son of James and Jane Armstrong, he was born at Burnmouth in Castleton Parish. He was a merchant in Newcastle, but was declared bankrupt in 1817, with Walter Armstrong of Burnmouth appointed as trustee. He is ‘P. Oliver’, merchant in Castleton, in the subscriber list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 (ordering 2 copies). He married Elizabeth Murray, who died in 1864, aged 75; she was probably daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis. Their children included: James (1812/3–31); Jeanie (1813/4–35); David (1817–18); Janet (1819–28); Thomas (1820/1–41); David (again, b.1823); John (1825/6–33); Alexander (1830–31); Janet (again, 1833–34); and James (b.1837). Most of their children died young, in either Edinburgh or at Whisgills. Philip (16th C.) recorded among a list of the occupiers of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Richard (13th C.) listed in the 1279 assize roll for Northumberland. He appears there as ‘Ricardio filio Thomae Oliver’, and so his father was Thomas. He seems to have been connected with the lands of St. Paul, probably in Coquetdale. He may be related to the Leo who also appears in the same roll. Probably the same ‘Richardum Oliver’ is listed on a panel deciding on the lands held by the Earl of Dunbar in Northumberland in 1290. Richard (16th C.) tenant in Harelawcleuch in 1541 along with John Oliver and Patrick Laidlaw. Richard (17th C.) listed as resident of Bairnike along with Andrew and Robert in 1684 when they were declared fugitives for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. They were surely all related. If he managed to escape persecution then he may be the Richard who was given the rank of Lieutenant in the Roxburghshire Fencibles after the Revolution. Richard (17th C.) cottar at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (13th C.) listed in a 1288 receipt for the fee of Alexander, son of the Earl of Dunbar, made at Berwick. He was recorded as ‘Robertus Oliuer’ Burgess of Berwick in 1291 as part of the Ragman Rolls. Also in 1291/2 he had 2 letters of safe-conduct, and was there described as a merchant of Berwick. In a court case in 1293 (where a man stole money from Newcastle) he is referred to as Constable of Berwick Castle. Robert (14th C.) recorded as ‘Olyver’ in 1387 when he witnessed a document for Sir Thomas Strother in Newcastle. He is one of the earliest known Olivers who may have a local connection. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘le stryndis’ (i.e. Strange) recorded at the Justiceaire held in Jedburgh. His name headed a list of 8 Olivers and a Shiel who had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. The others listed were his sons Ingram and John, as well as Matthew, Martin (‘his brother’, although it is unclear if this means Martin’s brother or his), Robert son of Gilbert (who was therefore clearly a different man), James and William (‘his brothers’, probably meaning Robert’s brothers, i.e. other sons of Gilbert) and Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule. It is possible he is the same Robert as the son of Geoffreay. He was also recorded as ‘in Stryndis’ in 1502 when, along with David, he had a remission for stealing 101 sheep from William Ker at ‘Dernewik-mure’; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety. Also that same year he was allowed to ‘compound’ (i.e. pay a fine) for several other crimes, including stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Lanton and Bedrule, stealing 7 oxen and cows from Philip Orniston in Maxton, killing John Moffat, stealing 33 cows, 200 sheep, 4 horses and goods from ‘Robert Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelshop’, killing Robert Brig, and for ‘Treason of old and new’. Some of these crimes were carried out along with John (brother of Ingram) and David. He is probably the Robert who was allowed to compone in 1502 for stealing sheep from Jedburgh and cows from Selykirk; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as his surety. Additionally he is probably the Robert who was mentioned as a colluder with Matthew in bringing in a gang of Nixons who stole a horse from Andrew Ker in Corbet. He is probably the Robert who was sentenced to be hanged later in 1502 (along with David, Martin and Matthew) for failure to ‘fynde sufficient souerties for satisfactione of parteis’. These 4 were either brothers or a mixture of 2 generations (more likely if this was the same David). Robert (15th C.) son of Gilbert. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justiceaire in Jedburgh. His brother James was also fined at the same time, as well as Matthew son of Geoffrey, Robert brother of Matthew and Martin brother of Robert; William, son of Gilbert, was also fined, and was probably his brother too. In 1494/5 he was listed (again as son of Gilbert) among 8 Olivers (including Robert in ‘Stryndis’) and a Shiel who had remission for the crime of communing with the English. Robert (15th C.) brother of Matthew. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justiceaire in Jedburgh. Matthew son of Geoffrey (who may be the same Matthew who was his brother) was also fined at the same time, as well as James and Robert sons of Gilbert, and Martin brother of Robert. The same Robert, brother of Matthew, was also recorded in 1493 when his charges of common theft and delivery of stolen goods (after the date of his previous remission) were suspended. Robert (d.bef. 1502) murdered by a large group of Turnbulls and others. The perpetrators were all fined in 1502 for failure to appear to answer to the charge. The 23 named men were (in the order they appear in the records) George Turnbull in Weens, John Turnbull in Gatehousecote, Andrew Turnbull in Gatehousecote, William Turnbull in Gatehousecote, Lawrence son of William Turnbull in Bonchester, David and Andrew Shiel, Hugh Shiel, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Andrew Turnbull in Bedrule, William Turnbull brother of the Laird of Bedrule, John Turnbull ‘Blew John’, Andrew Turnbull, Alan Davidson ‘Taburner’, John Turnbull in Ruecastle, John Turnbull in Jedburgh, John Turnbull in Wells, Adam Turnbull in Wells, Ninian Turnbull, David Turnbull in Bonchester, Patrick Turnbull, Philip Turnbull and William Turnbull in Bonchester. There is no information given about the circumstances of his death, e.g. why so many people could be held responsible for his murder (and it seems that many of them must have been pardoned later). It is possible that 3 men named Bowden from Jedburgh, who failed to appear later in the 1502 court to answer for the cruel slaughter of Robert, could also be other murderers of his. It seems likely he was closely related to the Olivers of Strynds. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘brother’s son of David’ (although which brother is unclear), along with Robert in Lustruther, James ‘Burgess’ and Robert Waugh. They had remission for stealing cattle and goods from ‘kelshop’ and for killing Robert Brig and Adam Bairnsfather; Ralph Ker of Primside Loch was surety. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lustruther. He was listed in 1502 along with Robert ‘brother’s son of David’, James Oliver ‘burgess’ and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw, when they had a remission for their crimes. This included stealing 200 sheep, 29 cows, 4 horses and other goods from John and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelshop’, as well as killing Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’; his surety was Ralph Ker of...

Primside Loch. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in Swinnie in 1502. George Douglas, Master of Angus, was fined for failing to enter him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Robert ‘Rob wi the Dog’ (15th/16th C.) recorded receiving remission in 1505 for intercommuning with rebels David ‘Na-gude Preist’ and John ‘Cageare’. His nickname was given as ‘Rob with ye dog’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rotrohill’ (probably Rowantreehill) in 1541 along with John Oliver. Another Robert, nicknamed ‘the Sheriff’, was tenant in another part of the same lands. Robert ‘the Sheriff’ (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rotrohill’ in Jedforest in 1541, paying 11 shillings. His is recorded as ‘alias the schireiff’. Other Oliv- ers (Richard, John, another John, Marion and Adam) rented the other parts of the farm of Rowantreehill. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with John Oliver. Another Robert, nicknamed ‘the Sher-iff’, was tenant in another part of the same lands. Robert ‘the Sheriff’ (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rotrohill’ in Jedforest in 1541, paying 11 shillings. His is recorded as ‘alias the schiereiff’. Other Oliv- ers (Richard, John, another John, Marion and Adam) rented the other parts of the farm of Rowantreehill. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with William (‘the Lawyer’) along with Marion (his mother). Their part of the lands were valued at 8s 6d. Other tenants there were 3 Johns (one called ‘Blackhead’), Katherine and another Marion. Robert ‘Laird’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His lands were valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants there included Ninian, Walter, ‘Little’ Roger, Robert, Alexander, John and ‘Lang’ Roger. His name is given as ‘Roberto Oliver, alias Larde’. He may have been an ancestor of the Oliverson in Hawick called ‘Lord’ in later generations. Robert (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, Michael, John and Adam. Robert (16th C.) tenant in part of Wylie’s Hill in Jedforest in 1541. The other tenants were 2 Margaret Oliv- ers and Margaret Wylie. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobe Ollyver of Lustrodder’ in 1544, when he was among Oliverson and others who gave assurance to the English Crown. William, Jock, younger and Ringan, were also listed at Lustruther, and so were probably related. They were probably all descended from the earlier Robert in Lustruther. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. He was listed as ‘Hobr Olvyver of Eshetres’. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as being at the same place as ‘William Ollyver of Myrenslawe’, which (17th C.) tenant farmer at Dykeraw and ancestor of the Hawick lawyers. He may have been born in Hawick Parish in 1643 (son of Walter and Agnes Paisley), but there are several contemporary men of the same name. He was recorded on a list of rents for the Jedforest area in 1669. Gilbert, also listed at Dykeraw, was probably his son. In 1670 he married Isabel Hair (b.1646 in Melrose) also listed at Dykeraw, was probably his son. In list of rents for the Jedforest area in 1669. Gilbert, rary men of the same name. He was recorded on a tor of the Hawick lawyers. He may have been (17th C.) tenant farmer at Dykeraw and ancester Isobel was baptised in 1708. He may also be the Robert who, along with his wife, purchased

to his wife); the other 1704 witness was gardener

John Gardner. The 1706 witnesses were Bailie George Martin and gardener John Gardner and in 1708 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Hardie. In 1723 there is mention in the Town Book of the Burgess money for ‘William Olifer, brother to Lord Olifer’, and this may have referred to his sons Robert and William. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Jedburgh Parish. In 1713 he married Agnes Bennet (probably from the Ben-ets of Chesters) in Ancrum Parish. Robert c.1699–1764) shoemaker in Hawick, probably son

Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Mervinslaw when his will was recorded in 1685. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bank. In 1684 he and Bessie (probably his wife, but perhaps his sister) refused to take the Oath of Allegiance and were declared rebels.

Robert (17th C.) listed as resident of Bairnk-line along with Andrew and Richard in 1684 when they were declared fugitives for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. They were surely all related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Slacks in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Robert (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th C.)
recorded at Bank on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls.

Robert ‘Lord Oliver’ (17th/18th C.) probably son of shoemaker Robert, he is listed as ‘cordiner’ on the 1693/4 list of contributors to the town bell.

He and his father are probably the 2 Roberts, residents of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the shoemaker Robert, who (along with shoemaker George, presumably a relative) witnessed a baptism in 1699 for cooper John Turnbull. He is probably the ‘Robert Olifer called Lord’ whose son John was baptised in 1704 and whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1708. He may also be the Robert who, along with his wife, purchased a tenement in Hawick in 1713. He is probably the shoemaker Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1718 for fellow shoemaker Walter Scott. He married Agnes Atkins (or Aitkin) about 1696.
Their children included: William (b.1701); John (b.1704); and Isobel (b.1708). Other probable children of his were: Robert (b.c.1699), who was also a shoemaker and married Bessie Blackhall; and George, also a shoemaker. A baptismal witness in 1701 was carrier William Aitken, who was probably related to his wife and a witness in 1704 was carrier John Aitkin (presumably also related
Blackhall (his father-in-law) and George Oliver (surely a relative), in 1742 were merchant James Douglas and gardener Robert Turnbull and in 1744 were John Blackhall again and George again. His son Robert carried on the family shoe-making business, and was probably born before the other children. He was related to merchant William, ‘Auld Cash’, perhaps his uncle, and therefore brother of William, father of ‘Auld Cash’. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Oliver, tenant in Earlside and another for William ‘junior merchant’ (probably his brother). He is probably the Robert ‘Senior’ who (along with merchant William) witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson and Catherine Oliver (his daughter). Robert (18th C.) recording being paid in 1751, along with Robert Easton and their workmen, for work on the new Teviot Brig. This was explicitly for ‘helping the far pillar of the bridgem and 12 drains’. He was presumably a mason or similar tradesman. Robert (1732/3–89) son of Thomas, tenant farmer at Chesters. He was farmer at Langburnshields. He was one of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He was recorded at Langburnshields on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1786–90, being succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1763 in Hobkirk Parish he married Margaret (1737/8–1823), daughter of Andrew Curror (or perhaps ‘Currie’). Their children included: Isabella (1774/5–81); Agnes (1777/8–83); and Thomas, tenant in Liliesleaf. Robert of Burnflat (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was owner of the lands of Burnflat in 1767 when the Duke of Buccleuch brought the first case proposing division of the Common. He was also listed as one of the neighbouring land-owners who gained from the Division of Hawick Common in 1777. He received a little over 10 Scots acres of what had previously been the Town’s land. He also appears to have held the land near Myreslawgreen called Birsleton. He is probably the Robert of Burnflat who (along with baker James, his son) witnessed a baptism for James Farquhar and Margaret (perhaps his daughter). He married Isabel Kenmure and their children included: William (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Peter (b.1762); Agnes (b.1763); James (b.1765), baker in Hawick, who was also ‘of Burnflat’; and Isabel (b.1767). The witnesses in 1757 were shoemaker George and tobacconist Francis Scott, in 1759 were baxter Walter Ruecastle and weaver George Turnbull and in 1765 were George Oliver and George Deans, junior. His son James was listed as a ‘second cousin’ in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’. He may have himself been a full cousin of ‘Auld Cash’. It is unclear who his parents were, but one possibility is George and Margaret Aitkin; shoemaker George was a witness to the 1757 baptism (along with tobacconist Francis Scott), supporting this idea. Robert (c.1730–1803) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd, son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall. He is easily confused with at least one other contemporary shoemaker of the same name. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1756. Their children included: Robert (b.1757); William (b.1760); Agnes (b.1764); and Elizabeth (b.1766). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by shoemakers Robert Oliver (presumably his father) and William Scott (perhaps his father-in-law). William Scott also witnessed the 1766 baptism, along with John Oliver (perhaps his brother). His wife may have later been known as ‘Jeanie My Lord’. His son William may be the surgeon in Middleton, Teesdale, England who died in 1816, aged 56. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John in 1766. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he is recorded at Brieryyards. He married Isabel ‘Brokie’ or ‘Brackie’ in 1760 and their children included: John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1764); Barbara (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); Isabel (again, b.1770); Samuel (b.1772); Agnes (b.1774); and Margaret (b.1779). The witnesses in 1770 were Robert Easton and Walter Oliver. Dr. Robert (1743–1823) son of James and Margaret Douglas. He was a surgeon in North Berwick. He married a Miss Russell and they had a family of 3 daughters (Margaret, Mary and Isabella) and 1 son (who was in the Navy and received a grant of land in Canada). Robert (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, probably related to other shoemaking Olivers. In 1776 he married Helen Scott in Hawick (the parish record stating ‘Almost forgot that Robert Oliver and Helen Scott both of this Parish . . .’). Their children included: Margaret (b.1779, probably); Mary (b.1782); John (b.1783); William (b.1785), hind at Langraw, who emigrated to the U.S.; Helen (b.1785); Janet (b.1786); and Jane (b.1787). The witnesses in 1779 were tanner John Elliot and merchant James (probably a relative), and in 1786 were ex-Bailie John Elliot and shoemaker Thomas Wallace. Robert (18th/19th C.) another of the shoe-making family. In 1788 (and still listed in 1811) he is recorded owning part of Roughheugh (acquired from Langlands of that Ilk), valued at £16 11s 8d, as well as part of the ‘partic平安 lands’ in Hawick; his Hawick lands were later divided between Alex Graham of Berwick, the heirs of William Elliot and the West U.P. Congregation. He could be the Robert ‘junior, shoemaker’ who witnessed a baptism in 1790 for James Rae and (along with James Rae) witnessed a baptism in 1791 for bookbinder Walter Elder. He could be the Robert who is marked on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of land off Damside, and also to the north of Roadhead. His daughter Jean married James Edgar. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Knowesouth, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bridgehouse in Castle- ton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Milsingtonhaugh. Robert ‘Clinty’ or ‘Robbie Clinty’ (1772–1847) tailor and town councillor, getting this nickname from his old family house, Clinthead, which stood on a rock at the Auld Brig. He was a descendant of ‘Hab o Hawick’, several generations of Olivers having lived in that area. He was apprenticed to William Sanderson, tailor, later became the quarter-master of the tailors on the Council and was elected a Town Councillor in 1804. He was known to be emphatic in expressing his opinions. He is listed as a tailor on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, but must have retired before the 1837 directory. In his old age he moved from Clinthead. He is listed living on the Kirkwynd (in the same house as the Hardie family) in the 1841 census. He was immortalised in the words of the song by J.E.D. Murray. He may be the tailor Robert, who is mentioned as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William ‘Auld Cash’; if so he was son of shoemaker John. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean. In ‘The local historian’s table book’ (1844) he is said to have lived at ‘Southdean in Jedburgh, and died about a dozen years ago’. He recounted a story of his father Peter encountering a fairy at Hyndlee. Dr. Robert ‘Daft Robbie’ (d.1828) of the Navy, son of Robert and ‘Jeanie My Lord’. He may have been the Robert born in 1757. He was said to have been educated in Edinburgh. He was ‘sun-struck’ in India and returned to Hawick to lead a retired life. It is said that he spent much of his time among the rocks of the Slitrig below their Silver Street home, playing with the children there – ‘The pebble stanes – Daft Robbie’s joy Was aye to aid them in sick ploy, And by the hand, stay feet sae sma’. ‘Amang the rocks when like to fa!’ [AD]. Robert (b.1787–1871) son of John and Margaret Douglas. He lived for a while with his father at Essenside, where his son John was baptised. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Hardie and Elizabeth Hunter. Their children included: Isabel (b.1812), who must have died young; John (b.1813); Isabel (b.1814), who settled in California and married a man from Vermont; Margaret (b.1816); George Hardy (b.1818); James Douglas (b.1820), who also went to California, but returned to Westville; Agnes (b.1822); Helen (b.1824), who married John Archibald Hamilton in California; William (1826–61), who went out to California, was one of the first men to drive cattle through the Sierra Nevada and was killed by Indians at Shelter Cove; and Mary (b.1830). In 1813 he, his wife and infant child emigrated to Canada, along with his brother Henry. They settled in Pictou County, Nova Scotia. Robert (b.c.1790) farmer at Heap, recorded in 1841. He was born in Kirkton Parish. In 1851 he was a shepherd living on Wilton Place. His wife was Betty. Robert William (b.1822) son of James and Elizabeth Purdom, he became a baker on the High Street. He was one of the first Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from 1848. He was listed as a High Street baker in Slater’s 1852 directory and in 1851 was at 6 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Eliza, William and Margaret. Robert (b.1822/3) mason in Denholm. He may be the young apprentice who was recorded at the quarry at Bedrule in 1841. In 1851 he was probably living on Canongate and in 1861 probably on Sunnyside. He married Mary Mack and their children included: Mary (b.1847); Betsy (b.1849); Janet (b.1851); Robert (b.1854); John (b.1857); Margaret (b.1859); James (b.1862); and George (b.1865). Robert (1826/7–61) born at Bridgehouse, son of John, he was a shepherd in Castle- ton, Kirkton Parishes and Ashikirk Parishes. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Dinlabyre, living with his parents and described as a wid- ower. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Whitehill- brae. In 1856 in Castleton Parish, he secondly married Violet Rodger, who was born at Delorainburn. Their children included: John Rodger (b.1855); born at Boghall; Andrew (b.1856), born at Dinlabyre, who was blacksmith at Allanton; Jane (b.1858), born at ‘Howkshall’, Teviothead;
Margaret (b.1860), born at Whitehillbrae; Robert Elliot (b.1864), born in Ashkirk; Violet (b.1866), born in Ashkirk; and Ann (b.1870). Robert (1827/8–1902) son of John and Ann Aitken. He worked with Lyle & Scott for about 38 years, being secretary and becoming a Director. He married Lizzie, daughter of James Davidson, and she died in 1942. Their children were John (architect in South Africa), Capt. Charles, James, George, William and Robert. He lived at Wellogate Villa and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1831–1906) son of John and Margaret. He grew up in Hawick, where he worked as a skinner in 1851. He married Jane Hobkirk in Hawick in 1853 and the following year they sailed for Australia with their infant daughter Margaret. They settled in Wasleys in South Australia and had many other children. His grandson Harry Gordon Oliver was an engineer in charge of several projects on the River Murray. Robert (1857/8–1910) grocer in Newcastle upon Tyne. He married Elizabeth Jane Gordon, who died in 1935, aged 72. Their children included: Emily (1896/7–1910); and James (1893/4–1914). They are buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of David and born in Hobkirk Parish. Robert Don (1895–1980) son of Col. William James of Lochside, his ancestors came from Hownam. He served in the Royal Navy, retiring as Vice-Admiral. Afterwards he was appointed Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. Roger ‘Little Roger’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in Southdean Parish in 1541. His part of the lands was valued at 8s 4d. Other tenants there included Robert (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian, John, Walter and another Roger (called ‘Lang Roger’). Roger ‘Lang Roger’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541, listed separately from ‘Little Roger’. His lands were valued at 25s. Samuel ‘Sam’ (b.1702) son of James, who was schoolmaster in Cavers, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He became schoolmaster of Hobkirk Parish in 1726. He also served as Clerk for the Parish. In 1745 he was at Forkins smiddy watching the passage of the Jacobite army when they pressed him into service as their guide up the Rule valley and through Liddesdale. It is said that at their main camp he ran into the Laird of Gorrenberry who escorted him past the Prince and they doffed their hats at each other; this tale was told in the Rule valley long afterwards. He resigned as schoolmaster in 1750. In 1729 he married Betsy, daughter of John Scott of Weens. Samuel (18th C.) born in Wilton Parish. He was a resident of Minto Parish in 1774 when he married Isabel Miller. His children included: Helen (b.1780), baptised in Wilton Parish; and Samuel (b.1789), who was a mason in Yarrow in 1841 and in Selkirk in 1851. He could also be the Samuel whose children baptised in Hobkirk Parish included James (b.1775) and John (b.1778). He could be the Samuel, son of James, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1749 and may have been related to the Hobkirk schoolmaster. Samuel (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Isobel Moscrop in 1805. Their children included: Agnes (b.1807); Robert (b.1807); and Isobel (b.1812). Samuel (b.1789) son of Samuel. He was a mason in Selkirkshire. In 1841 he was at Curcarwood in Yarrow and in 1851 was in Selkirk. He married Isabel Miller in Ettrick in 1814 (she seems to have had the same name as his mother). He is probably the Samuel recorded in a letter about work done at Ettrick Church in 1825. His children included: Samuel (b.1816), who was a mason like his father, married Margaret Rutherford in Melrose, emigrated to the U.S.A. and had 2 sons who fought in the American Civil War; William (b.1818); James (b.1820); Helen (b.1822); John (b.1824); Isabel (b.1826); Janet (b.1828); Robert (b.1830); and David (b.1833). Samuel (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1829 he married Betty, daughter of John Scott. Samuel (18th/19th C.) younger son of William of Dinlabyre. He spent most of his life as a farmer, at Whitehill and elsewhere. He was described as ‘a clever, witty, well-read man, who could converse on most subjects’. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1830. He may be the Samuel who was at Mertoun near Dryburgh in 1841. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) recorded in 1566 when the Lords of Secret Council made John Rutherford of Hunthill act as surety for him. He probably held lands in Jedforest. Steven (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when his daughter was among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically her ‘quarter of ane pound wanted twa drop, and her twa unce wanted ane drop’. His daughter must have been a trader at the market in Hawick, but it is unclear where they were from. Steven (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. There were several other Oliver’s there, David, Thomas and 2 Patrick, to whom he may have been related, with his name appearing first. Probably he was the same as one of the 2 Stevens who were listed as tenants at Falside on the 1694 Horse Tax Rolls, one of them along with Dand; there was also a John and Thomas and his sons recorded.
there at the same time. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. He is recorded as ‘Thome Oliver de Swyne’, which is probably Swinnie. Thomas ‘Watschod’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. George Douglas, Master of Angus, was fined for failure to prove his arrest (as well as that of Ingram and James). He was ‘sandis sone’ (presumably ‘Sandy’s son’) and called ‘watschod’; his nickname may refer to ‘watschod’, a kind of cloth, which was often blue. Thomas (16th C.) stated to have been killed around 1540 at Abbotrule, along with ‘Will Kowman’. This was the result of a raid led by James Routledge of Todhills in Cumbria, which was complained about by the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at Slacks in 1541, along with John, who was probably his brother or son. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Charles renting the other part of Slacks. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being of Lustruther in 1583/4 when William Fenwick of Wallington (near Otterburn) complained that he and around 200 others raided his farm, taking cattle, horses and 16 prisoners. This appears to have been a raid into England to recover cattle and other goods stolen from them earlier. It is clear that he was one of the main Oliver leaders at that time. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Olipher’ resident of Harwood when he was one of the witnesses to a Rulewater sasine of 1631. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘Thomas Olipher, cordiner’ when he was fined in 1642 for using irreverent language to the Bailies. Probably a different Thomas, ‘traveller’ was in 1642 sentenced to 8 days in the stocks for drawing his sword at one of the Bailies and refusing to go to the Town prison. He was fined and sentenced to 8 days in the stocks. It seems likely he was a different man from Thomas, ‘cordiner’, who was also recorded in the Town Book in 1642. He was also ‘traveller’ in 1652 when he was found to be not liable for the claim made against him by merchant John Scott, for tobacco pipes, ‘hott waters’, powder, sugar and other goods that he ‘brak, drownet, and lossit’ on the way from Edinburgh to Hawick. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Hill (probably near Rouchhirst) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Mervinslaw, recorded in a rental roll of 1669. There were several other tenants there at the same time. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. William was also there and so presumably closely related. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as tenant in Whiteside. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was listed as ‘handie’, presumably meaning that he was a tradesman of some sort. There were several other Olivers there at the same time. He may be the Thomas, ‘servitor of the Marquis of Douglas’ who was a Covenanter supporter, with his brother John, tenant in Falside, standing as surety for him in 1679, that he would return to prison if so ordered. He could be the Thomas ‘in Jedforest’ who is on a list of men refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684. He could be the Thomas who was recorded at Falside with his sons in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Braehead in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) listed as a tenant in ‘Pouhach’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest (i.e., Southdean Parish). Thomas (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Dykeraw in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Both Thomas ‘elder’ and ‘younger’ are listed there, as well as several other Olivers. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Southdean in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James and David were also listed there, and so probably close relatives. He could be the Thomas ‘called Burne, in Fuddon’ (assuming this is an error for ‘Suddon’) whose will is recorded in 1687. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Dyk’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Jedforest who was imprisoned in 1679 for being a Covenanter. He may have been taken prisoner after the Battle of Bothwell Brig. He gave a bond that he would not rise up in arms again and was released. It is possible that he was the Thomas of Southdean who complained that the Parish Minister had not read out the Articles of Estate or prayed for William and Mary in 1689. It is also possible that this was the Thomas, tenant at Southdean Mill, whose son John became minister at Southdean. Thomas (17th C.) son of James in ‘Ash-trees’, i.e. the farm in the Jed valley. He was listed in 1684 among many people who were declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. However, he appears to have escaped persecution, since Thomas of Ashtrees was given the rank of Ensign in the Roxburghshire Fencibles after the Revolution. His brother George is recorded in 1691. Thomas (d.c.1685) tenant in Swinnie when his will was recorded in 1685. He is surely related to George, who was at Swinnie at the same time. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed at Swinnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1688 when he complained of being assaulted in Hawick High Street when ‘bringing in heather for use of the said towne’. This was presumably for fuel. He could have been one of the contemporary Oliver dies of Southdean. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Southdean Parish who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the same as one of the earlier Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Wadeshill in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) names of 2 men who were resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. One was described as ‘kill’ (perhaps suggesting a kiln) and the other was ‘knou’. Thomas (17th C.) blacksmith at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He is probably related to John who was smith there in 1669. Perhaps he is the related to Thomas the smith in Hawick. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He is listed separately from the smith. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Cassford in 1696, the marriage being recorded in Cavers. Thomas (1688/9–1754) tenant at Chesters. He is probably related to some of the Ollivers who were recorded at Chesters on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He married Jane Gillrie (1691/2–1768) and their children included Robert (1732/3–89), tenant at Langburnshiel. His family were buried in Oxnam. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Hawick Town Herd William Palmer in 1707. In 1712 he was ‘smith att ye westport of Hawick’. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included: Isobel (b.1701); Margaret (b.1703); John (b.1709); and Janet (b.1712). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailie Robert Brown and carrier Andrew Clerk. Thomas (18th C.) tenant at Falside in Southdean Parish around 1740, along with ‘Dand’ and William. Thomas (b.c.1715) born in Southdean Parish. In 1732 he moved to Crailing. He married Janet Middlemas in Crailing in 1739. Their children included: Jeremiah (b.1735), born in Southdean; Isabel (b.1740), baptised in Nisbet; Robert (b.1743), also born in Nisbet. Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Margaret Weir and they had a daughter, Anne (b.1743). Helen (b.1740) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1743 were weaver William Turnbull and cooper James Scott. Thomas (18th C.) tenant at ‘Glestains’ (i.e. Gledstains). In 1758 he was among parishioners in Hobkirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Weensmoor in 1774. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1774. Other children may have been Barbara (b.1771), Nelly (b.1772) and Alison (b.1775). Thomas (18th C.) footman and gardener at Orchard in 1785, when he was working for William Dickson. Probably the same Thomas was coachman at Cavers in 1794. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1795 he married Margaret Stewart, who was also from Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gilbert was listed after him and so possibly related. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Southdean rhymer of this name who penned these lines on the death of Rev. William Scott – ‘I saw him from the kirk descent, And in five hours his life did end’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Birneyknowe, on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was recorded as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as tenant at Shankend on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Byreholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a carter at Byreholm among heads of households in 1836 and 1838. He could be the same Thomas as the farmer at Castleton. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Kirkton, on the Horse Tax.
Oliver

Rolls of 1797. James is listed after him and so possibly related. He was also listed at Kirkton on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jean, daughter of John Whillans and Mary Swan. Their children included: Mary (b.1806); and William (b.1815). Lieut. Thomas (18th/19th C.) of the Royal Navy, was made an Honorary Burgess in 1803. He is probably the ‘Captain Thomas Oliver of the Royal Navy my second cousin’ mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’. He could be the Royal Navy Lieut. of that name who distinguished himself at Havana in 1805 during the Napoleonic Wars. He was probably grandson of shoemaker Robert, and perhaps son of Thomas (b.1742) or one of his brothers. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf, son of Robert, who was farmer at Langburnshiel. He was recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1791–94 at Langburnshiel. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ironmonger on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Thomas (b.1812/3) gamekeeper at Larriston Rigg in 1841. His wife was Jenny and their children included Turnbull, Bella and Francis. He may be the same Thomas as the gamekeeper in Bedrule Parish. Thomas S. (b.1812/3) gamekeeper at Woodend Cottage in Bedrule, and then stocking-maker in Denholm, probably on Sunny-side. His wife was Janet and they had children Ebenezer, Joseph, Isabella, William, Francis and Thomas. Thomas (b.1817/8) younger son of lawyer John. In the 1841 census he is listed as a woollen manufacturer, along with his brother William. He was probably part of the short-lived firm of John Oliver & Sons. He was later a farmer at West Fortune, Haddington. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.c.1870) born in Hawick, he worked as a shepherd with his father, later entering William Watson’s, where he learned about tweed manufacture and design. He became a teacher of power-loom weaving in Galashiels, Hawick and Selkirk. He received a D.Sc. from Edinburgh and was Principal and Professor of Textile Technology in the Scottish Woollen Technical College in Galashiels. Just before the War he toured Austrailia and New Zealand. He published at least 3 books on textiles: ‘Weaving problems’ (1909); ‘Phase in the rise of Scotch tweed technique’ (1911); and ‘Wool technology and regional geography’ (1931). He was also an enthusiastic lay preacher in the Brethren, publishing and contributing to ‘Scripture Quarterly’ during WWII. Walter (d.1242) son of David ‘Olifard’, or perhaps an earlier Walter. He is probably the ‘Walt’o olifard’ who witnessed a charter between Gervase Avenel and Melrose Abbey in 1214. He was Justiciar of Lothian under Alexander II from 1220 until his death. He granted the church of Smalholm to Coldingham Abbey. In 1221 he was witness to the dowry charter for Joan of England, who married Alexander, King of Scotland (lands that included Hassendean). He was Justiciar in 1230 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret, the King’s sister and also in 1237 in a document from the English King. He was mentioned (as ‘Walterum Olifard iusticiarium Laudonie’) in a charter of lands to Soutra Hospital in about 1230. He also witnessed another charter relating to Inverness in the reign of King William. He married Christian, daughter of the Earl of Strathearn and inherited lands in Perthshire. He had a son David. The pair are mentioned in a charter of Soutra Hospital, granted by Walter Murray (‘de Moravia’) in 1273. He was succeeded by his grand-daughter Joanna, who married Walter of Moravia (or Murray). In this way the Barony of Bothwell came into possession of the Murrays, who would later also hold the Barony of Hawick. Walter (16th C.) tenant in Falside in Southdean Parish in 1541. His small piece of the farm was valued at 4s 2d. Other tenant there included with Robert (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian, Roger (called ‘Little Roger’), John and Roger (called ‘Lang Roger’). Walter (17th C.) another of the shoemaking family. He was involved in a church dispute in 1666 and was the father of Robert. This may be the same Walter who married Agnes Paisley (or ‘Paslay’) and whose children (born in Hawick Parish) included: James (b.1640); Robert (b.1643); Janet (b.1645); John (b.1649); and Helen (b.1652). However, if he was father of Robert ‘Lord Olifer’, then his children must have been born earlier. The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were Robert Oliver and James Paisley (probably fathers or brothers of the parents). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the Walter in Hawick (married, aged 40) who gave evidence in 1681 at the trial of Covenanters. In 1685 he was fined for refusing to ride with a prisoner to Jedburgh when asked by the Bailie to do so, and also ‘for his contumacious language given to the sd baylyea att yt time’. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Walter listed ‘eist
Oliver

the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the Walter who gave evidence against Turnbull of Standhill in a trial of Covenanters in 1680. He is recorded as a merchant when he witnessed baptisms for tailor Alexander Hislop in 1700, for John Scott, smith in Hawick, in 1704, for shoemaker Robert Gardner in 1703, for merchant William Douglas in 1706, for John Nichol (servant in Newmill) in 1709, for skinner Robert Deans in 1710 and for cooper Alexander Weens in 1711. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Simson. Their children included: James (b.1673); and William (b.1676). The witnesses in 1676 were John Deans and James Deans. He could be the same as the merchant of Hawick mentioned in the next couple of decades. It is possible that his sons James and William were the ‘students’ who acted as witness for the baptism of an illegitimate child of Thomas Henderson and Margaret Douglas in Hawick in 1689. Walter (b.1706) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Agnes Aitkin. His brothers included shoemaker Robert and merchant William. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1730. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733); John (b.1735), shoemaker, who married Helen Currer; and Helen (b.1738). Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1712 being asked to ‘perlustrate the town to see who were drinking in ale houses after 8 at night’. Walter (b.c.1809) cooper in Newcastle, listed among heads of households in 1835–41 and in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 27 Montague Street. His wife was Mary and their children included Walter, Janet, Jean and Betty. William (15th C.) son of Gilbert. At the 1493 Justice-aire he was fined for non-appearance. If his father was the same Gilbert, then he also had brothers James and Robert (also mentioned in 1493). He was also recorded in 1494/5 among 8 Olivers and a Shiel (connected with Strange) who had remission for communing with the English; he was there stated to be brother of Robert, who was son of Gilbert, and also brother of John. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who had fled to England and were being sought by the English Wardens. He is recorded as being called ‘Fargus’, and his son ‘Jok’ is also listed. William (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541, along his mother Margaret. Their steading was valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants at Mervinslaw included James and another William, nicknamed ‘Merchant’. William ‘Merchant’ (16th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw in 1541, whose steading was valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants at Mervinslaw included William, Margaret and James. William (16th C.) tenant in Bank, recorded in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He held half of the farm. William ‘the Lawyer’ (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with his mother Marion, 2 Johns (one called ‘Blackhead’), James. He is recorded as ‘William Ollyver of Lustrodder’ in 1544, when he was among Olivers and others who gave assurance to the English Crown. Hob, Jock, younger and Ringan were also listed at Lustruther and so were probably related. He may be the same as the William recorded as tenant there in 1562. And either he or perhaps his son was in Lustruther in 1571 when he was one of the 3 main leaders of the Olivers for whom Sir Thomas Turnbull, John Turnbull of Minto, Richard Rutherford of Edgerston and John Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, served as pledges. Additionally he gave his pledge at a court in Leith, for the Olivers in Dykeraw, Falside, Westerhouses, ‘the Burne’, Slacks, Mervinslaw and the Bank, as well as for other men of Southdean; his cautioners were William Douglas of Bonjedward and Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Ollyver of Myrleslawe’ in 1544, when he was among a list of Scotsmen swearing allegiance to the English King. ‘Ranyon Ollyver of the same’ is also listed, and so presumably a brother or son. Their lands may have been Mervinslaw. William (16th C.) recorded on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘William Ollyver of Mervinslawe’, which is probably ‘Mervinslaw’. This could be a repeated entry for William of ‘Myrleslawe’. ‘Robert Ollyver of the same’ is also listed. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant farmer at Lustruther, who along with Gavin, tenant at West Houses (probably a Southdean relative) had a bond of 1562 to enter Robert Robson ‘Foul Mouth’ to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also recorded in 1571 giving bonds for Olivers and others in Dykeraw, Westerhouses, Falside, the Burn and Slacks. He is probably the William whose farmed was transcribed ‘Anstruder’ in 1572/3, when he was listed along with other Olivers and William Kirkton of Stewartfield, with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston as their cautioners; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He is probably the William in Lustruth who Thomas Laidlaw in Haugh was accused of resetting in 1589. Probably the same ‘Will in Lustruth’ is recorded in Monipennie’s List of Border Clans of about 1594. He was indicted for a raid in 1589. William (16th C.) recorded in 1583/4 being of Slacks when William Fenwick of Wallington (near Otterburn) complained that he and about 200 others RAIDED his farm, taking cattle, horses and 16 prisoners. This appears to have been a raid into England to recover cattle and other goods stolen from them earlier. He was probably an important leader among the Olivers at that time. William of Bairnikie (d.1605) sentenced to execution in Jedburgh in 1605. Nothing else is known about him. William (16th/17th C.) tenant of the Earl of Angus in ‘Lanyburne’, which could be Langburnshiel. In 1618 he complained that William Sinton ‘in Helialdrum Burne’, Walter Sinton his brother, Thomas Brown ‘in Thorishop’ and others unlawfully apprehended him at the direction of Walter Scott of Goldielands. William (17th C.) tenant at Lustruther (in Southdean Parish) in 1669. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Thomas, to whom he was surely related. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Chesters in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. There were 2 men of the same name listed there. William (17th C.) recorded as tenants in Slacks along with George and John in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Probably one of them is the William listed as tenant in ‘Soudon’ and ‘Suden’ (i.e. Southdean farm) in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the William ‘in Shaks’ (if this is an error for ‘Slaks’) whose will is recorded in 1688. William (17th C.) tenant in Nether Whisgills in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (b.1674) born in Hawick, son of John and ‘Jenet Bo’. William (b.1676) son of Walter and ‘Jenet Symson’, he was born in Hawick. He could be the merchant recorded in the early years of the 18th century. William (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick, mentioned from 1702. His sister Margaret was married to Bailie Robert Hardie. In 1702 he married Christian Hart (both from Hawick Parish), with Hardie and his wife being rebuked for creating a disturbance; his father-in-law, John Hart was also rebuked by the session for their ‘penny-bridal’. It is possible he is the William born in Hawick in 1676, son of Robert. It seems likely he was related to Walter, who was a merchant in Hawick at the same time. He witnessed baptisms for Anthony Haig in 1706, for Bailie Robert Hardie and Margaret Oliver (his sister) in 1709, for shoemaker Robert Allan in 1714, for tailor Robert Chisholme in 1718, for smith James Beattie in 1719 and for weaver James Roger in 1725. He is probably the William Oliver who was among men ordered to walk around the Town in 1712 to see who were drinking in ale-houses after 8 o’clock. Probably the same merchant William was rebuked by the Session in 1716 for being involved in late night drunkenness and a fight with Thomas Huggan. He acknowledged that ‘he was att the brawl and was sensible of his fault, and that he could not give an account who first began it’. He may have been grandfather of ‘Auld Cash’, and if so, then his son was also William; however, it seems more likely that shoemaker Robert was the grandfather of ‘Auld Cash’, and probably closely related to him, perhaps his brother. His children with Christian Hart included Janet (b.1705), with baptismal witnesses Bailie George Martin and gardener James Falsyde. It is unclear if he had any other surviving children. It is possible that he lived to an old age and that is why his nephew William was ‘younger merchant’ into the 1740s. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He was married to Elspeth Hislop. Their son Andrew was born in 1701, with Andrew Waugh in Slaidhills being one of the witnesses. William (17th/18th C.) ‘servitor’ in Todshawhill. In 1705 his daughter Janet was baptised with witnesses Robert Cook and Alexander Ogilvie in Branxholme. William of Dlnalbyre (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John. He succeeded his father in the lands of ‘Dunliebyre, Easterfligt, Hiashes, and Burnfoot; also Over and Nether Larriston, Heartsgarth, and Langhaugh’. He and his son John donated silver communion cups to Castleton Kirk in 1748. In 1708 he married Mary, daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk (while his sister Mary married his wife’s brother John!). His children were: John, who succeeded; and Mary, who married John Scott of Synton. William (18th C.) tailor in Over Southfield. He is probably the tailor who witnessed a baptism in 1738 for John Scott, tenant in Hawick Shiel, and Bessie Goodfellow. In 1721 he married Margaret Cook, who was widow of John Goodfellow. Their children born in Hawick included: Bessie (b.1722); and Margaret (b.1724). William (b.1701) merchant in Hawick, son of shoemaker Robert and Agnes Atkins. It seems likely he was father of ‘Auld Cash’. He was probably the William, whose brother ‘Lord

Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767, during court proceedings for the division of the Common. In 1782 his daughter Isabel died, and he is listed as ‘workman’; this could be the Isabel born to William and Barbara ‘Binnie’ in 1761. He may be the same William who married Barbara Burnet (whose name is also written ‘Birnie’) and whose children included: Isabel (b.1761); William (b.1765); Robert (b.1767); Thomas (b.1770); John (b.1772); and Thomas (again, b.1778). The witnesses in 1761 were and William and Thomas Birnie (perhaps his father-in-law and brother-in-law), in 1767 were the whole congregation and in 1772 were Thomas Burnet and William Laidlaw. He is probably the workman whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1782. William ‘Auld Soorhope’ (18th C.) one of the last people to be buried in the old churchyard at Southdean. It is said that his funeral was very well attended. William of Langraw (1731/2–1812) from the family who had farmed at Falside in Southdean Parish. He may be the son of William who was a tenant at Falside in the 1740s, along with ‘Dand’ and Thomas (possibly his uncles). He and Andrew farmed at Alton from 1762 and then Adderstoneshiel from 1765. He then had several short leases elsewhere, including Burgrange in Northumberland. In 1801 he purchased the farm of Langraw and settled down there, retaining several other leases. In 1803 he contributed to a local subscription for the defence of the country (from the French). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, and in 1819 (when he may have already been deceased) both he and his son Andrew were listed. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish. He is said to have been quite wealthy, but lost much of his fortune backing ‘bills for needy and unscrupulous persons’. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of Langraw and part of Shiel’s Lands and Kirknowe. In 1764 he married Margaret Stavert, said to be a descendant of the man who carried the Douglas banner at Otterburn; she died in 1820, aged 80. He was buried along with his wife in Southdean Kirkyard. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Andrew, while a younger son, William, rented Otterstonelee in North Tyne (unless this is confusion with Adderstonelee). He could have been father of some of these children baptised in Southdean Parish: William (b.1761); Andrew (b.1762); Andrew (again, b.1763); John (b.1764); Nelly (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); and

William (again, b.1770). William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Janet Oliver, who was from Wilton. Children baptised in Southdean who could be his include: Andrew (b.1762); Andrew (b.1763); John (b.1764); Nelly (b.1766); and Thomas (b.1768). William ‘Auld Cash’ (c.1738–1808) one of the foremost merchants in Hawick, and Cornet in 1758. He may be the William born in Hawick in 1737 to William and Margaret Croser. He traded in many different things in the district around Hawick, and was said to be the third William in a family line of merchants (although his precise relationship to earlier Olivers is unclear). He also acted as a private banker throughout the Borders, hence his nickname. In 1782, 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1790 he witnessed the baptisms of the children of Dr. Robert Douglas and Margaret Aitchison (who was his niece). He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) as well as John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the merchant William whose housekeeper Betty Nichol died in Hawick in 1787. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. In 1787–91 he paid tax for having a female servant and was probably the merchant recorded on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. From 1791 he acted as Hawick’s first bank agent, for the Bank of Scotland. His main premises were at the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now located, and his warehouses were in Silver Street, where his family had owned property for generations. He also owned buildings on the High Street and in Wilton Parish. Additionally he owned land at Dovemount, Silverbuthall and Galalaw. He was known to be generous in local affairs, e.g. in helping fund the addition to Old Wilton Church. It has also been suggested that Silver Street got its name because he stayed there. He also had a wine cellar under the road by Drumlanrig Bridge. He is probably the William of Galalaw listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (many years after his death). He remained unmarried all his life, and his will lists his nearest relatives as: his niece Margaret Aitchison and her children Robert (surgeon), John (also surgeon), Agnes and Mary Douglas; his nephews Robert (or the Royal Navy) and Andrew (saddler) Aitchison; and his second cousins Thomas Oliver (of the Navy), William Oliver (surgeon in Middleton), James Oliver (baker), William Oliver (location unknown), Robert Oliver (tailor, possibly ‘Clinty’) and Walter Wilson (wright). When he died, it is said that everyone was surprised to find that his estate did not appear to meet his debts, even although the sale of his property raised over £19,000 (with £5,000 coming from goods, furniture and stock, without including property); suspicion fell upon his young assistant ‘Franky’ Ballantyne, and there was even a poem published about how his ghost haunted Ballantyne, called ‘The Twa Frien’s or the Ghost of Coffer-Ha’. In his will he is described being ‘of Galalaw’ (suggesting he was living there, rather than at Silverbuthall in his later years). His will was witnessed by his ‘servants’ James Miller and Walter Scott (who are probably the men of those names who were later grocers in Hawick). The trustees named in his will were Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, James Grieve in Branxholme Park, James Grieve in Branxholme Braes and Thomas Usher. His home at Silverbuthall was sold to James Scott, retired teacher of Yarrow. His nieces Agnes and Catherine married Bailie Walter Purdom and ‘Haunless Wat’, respectively. His death is recorded in Hawick, where it was stated that his father was also William – ‘Wi’ banker Cash, a daintie carl, Wha was owre guid for sic a warl’ [RDW]. William (18th C.) Cornet in 1768, listed as being at the Kirkwynd. He may be the son of shoemaker Robert born in 1738. He may be the son of shoemaker Robert who gave a discharge in 1768 for his father’s bonds with people in Selkirk (his father being deceased by then). William of Dinlabyre (1738–1830) son of John, he became Sheriff of Roxburghshire. It is said that he needed to live closer to the court in Jedburgh, and hence swapped some of his Liddesdale lands for ones in Rulewater. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1773 he sold Hartsgarth and Langhaugh to William Sharp. At the same time he bought the lands of Weens from William Sharp and built the new house there in 1775. He also bought Nether Bunchester from Thomas Scott in 1779. In 1777 he had a ‘decreet arbitral’ between Henry Elliot of Harwood and George Rutherford. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 and Selkirkshire in 1788. He sold Over and Nether Larriston and Blackhope to Col. William Elliot in 1786; it was said that in fact his wife made the sale when he was absent and he ‘expressed much surprise and no little displeasure at what had taken place’. Nevertheless he added the sale of Larriston Rig (or Haggiehaugh) to Elliot in 1790. He was apparently a good friend of the Hobkirk schoolmaster William Armstrong.
In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire (and a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch). In the county valuation of 1788 he was recorded as owner of Weens and Nether Boucher, valued at £380, as well as Dinlabyre, Greena and Blackhope (although he had probably sold them by then) in Castleton Parish, valued at £1020. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid tax in Hobkirk Parish for having 3 male servants in the period 1778–92 and 2 in 1793, as well as for 1 female servant in 1785–87, 4 in 1788 and 1 in 1789–91. He was taxed for having 3–5 carriage horses in Hobkirk Parish (being recorded as ‘of Dinlabyre at Weens’) in 1785–92. He is probably the William listed paying tax at Wolfelee in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He was ‘of Dinlabyre at Larriston’ on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls for Castleton Parish. In 1794 he was taxed for 2 male servants at ‘Laurstoun’ in Castleton Parish and in 1797 was at Liddel Bank with 3 servants, 4 work horses and 4 carriage horses. He was also taxed for having a carriage in the period 1785–95, being ‘of Dinlabyre’ until the year 1791/2, when he was ‘of Weens’, and then being at ‘Lawston’ in 1794/5 and Liddel Bank 1797/8. He was at Dawston in 1797 when taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He made a report on the state of the roads in Castleton Parish for the Duke of Buccleuch in 1793. He was also said to have been responsible for most of the road improvements in Rulewater and Liddesdale in his time, including building Boucher Bridge and laying out the new route to Newcastle via the that bridge. In 1793 he sold Weens (and Nether Boucher) to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie and bought Liddel Bank, where he lived for a while. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 10 horses. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburgshire in 1805 (and also in 1819, when he may have already deceased). He was owner of Dinlabyre and Greena according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He is probably the William who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is also the William, ‘esq. of Dinlabyre’ listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his later years he was fond of writing doggerel verses, e.g. about his sheriff-substitute Robert Shortreed. He was said to have ‘spent a good estate foolishly, and died a poor man’. He married Jane, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ellenor Elliot of Minto. Their children included: William (b.1781), eldest, who inherited Edgerston and took the name William Oliver Rutherford; Archibald, became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1799, but later joined the East India Company; Samuel, farmer at Whitehill; John, married Margaret, daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, and succeeded to Overton Bush; Eleanor, eldest daughter, married Edinburgh surgeon James Russell; Violet, married David Richardson of the East India Company and drowned with her husband on the way to India; Elizabeth, married Dr. Henry Young; Jean, married Maj. Malcolm of the Royal Marines; and Agnes, who married Archibald Little of London (on the same day as her sister Jean). The deaths of his sons John and William are both recorded in 1782. William (18th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His children were baptised at Blinkbonny and Castleton Mains. He married Jean Nichol. Their children included: George (b.1771), who probably died young; Jean (b.1774); and George (1781–1837), who emigrated to America, and whose son became a well-known plough manufacturer. William (18th C.) farmer in Over Cassock and then Howpasley. He is recorded in 1769 in correspondence with John Scott in ‘Hopesrigg’. In 1772 he was at Howpasley when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was probably the William who married Janet Scott in 1771 and who also had a son William (b.1776). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in the same year. William (d.1808) from Hawick, he was a baker in London. He returned to Hawick in his later years and lived at Kerk-wyndfoot. He coincidentally died within a couple of months of ‘Auld Cash’, who was probably a distant cousin. It is possible he was the William born in Hawick in 1738, son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall. He is probably the baker William whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1809, with his address given as ‘Hawick, Northumberland’ (probably in error). William (1760–1818) surgeon in Middleton. He is mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’ as his second cousin. It seems likely that he was actually son of one of the full cousins of ‘Auld Cash’. He could be the William born to Robert of Burnflat in 1757, but seems more likely to be the William son of shoemaker Robert born in 1760. He married Mary Hodgson in 1796 in Gainford, Durham and died in Middleton in 1816, aged 56. His children were

Robert Hodgson, George (also a surgeon), William, Ralph and Jean. William (b.c.1770) son of shoemaker John and brother of tailor Robert. He was mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’, as a second cousin; however, although he was left a small share of the estate, it was stated that it was not known if he was alive or dead, or whether he had any issue. William ‘Little Cash’ (1772/3–1840) merchant in Hawick. He may also have been an innkeeper. It is unclear how he was related to ‘Auld Cash’ (who died unmarried), but perhaps he was a nephew, or may not have been directly related at all (with the nickname given humorously perhaps). He was recorded as a merchant at his daughter’s baptism in 1797. It is possible he was the William ‘Junr. Mercht.’ who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797; she died in 1809. In 1796 he married Catherine, daughter of draper George Turnbull and Betty Wilson. Their children included: Betty or Bess (1797–1848), who died in Eyemouth; Robert (1798/9–1825); and George ‘Pies’, baker in Hawick. Witnesses in 1797 were Thomas and Andrew Oliver, who were probably relatives. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, along with his wife Margaret (who died at the age of 72), a daughter who died in infancy, and his son Robert. He could be the William of Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is described as ‘little cash’ in 1806 when the death of his daughter Margaret is recorded. William (b.1785) son of Robert and Helen Scott, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was hind at Langraw in Hobkirk Parish and some of his family emigrated to the U.S. In 1841 he was agricultural labourer at Scaur Nook and in 1851 was farm steward at Langraw Scaur (the same place). His wife was Helen and she was already dead by 1851. Their children included: Henry (b.1806), who married Isabella Renwick; and Mary (b.1814); Margaret (b.c.1819), who married James Smail, farm steward at Timpendean; Agnes (or Nancy, b.c.1822), who married Oliver Lough; Andrew (b.c.1825); and Violet (b.c.1830). He could be the William, married to Helen Mason, who had children William (b.1815), Thomas (b.1817) and Agnes (b.1820) baptised in Cavers Parish. Later in life his sons William and Andrew, and son-in-law Oliver Lough, convinced him to accompany them to America. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their daughter Jean (1812/3–55) married butcher John Wallace. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Bellshiels, probably in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William ‘Will o the Bents’ (b.1800/1) son of ‘Tammy Clarilee’. In 1841 he was recorded as a mason at Bents near Chesters and in 1851 was a ‘Stone-Dyke-Builder’ there. His wife was Mary and their children included: Isobel, who married Peter Smith of the Rule valley Smiths; Thomas (b.c.1833); Elizabeth (b.c.1835); James (b.c.1837); Helen (b.c.1840); and George (b.c.1842). He emigrated to Australia along with his daughter and son-in-law, perhaps around the early 1850s. He had ‘Poems’ published in 1824. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Govenlock and their children included: John (b.1823); Beatrice (b.1824); William (b.1827); Walter (b.1828); Mary (b.1830); and Janet (b.1832). Since there is no trace of the family in the 1841 census, he is probably the William who emigrated to Galt, Ontario, buying a farm in Beverley in about 1834 (family history says that he came from Innerleithen, but perhaps that was incorrect or just a temporary stay). He may also have had a son Robert. William of Langraw (1804–78) eldest son of Andrew of Langraw in the Rule valley. His mother Jane Scott was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. He was born in Huddersfield, but moved to Langraw as an infant, being educated in Jedburgh and Edinburgh University. After graduating, he worked in the office of the Hawick Town Clerk (John Oliver) for a while. It is said that he inherited a musical ear from his mother (Jean Scott, cousin of the writer Sir Walter) and to have a delicate constitution and retiring nature. He made a collection of Border tunes, working them out on a miniature violin as he travelled around the country (many coming from a shepherd called Hutton at Peel in Liddesdale). Some of this collection found its way into Wood’s ‘Songs of Scotland’, and the materials were deposited in the Antiquarian Museum in Newcastle. In 1837 he travelled to America, returning over a year later. He became a great authority on local geology, history and folklore. Friend of Sir Walter Elliot, he acted as factor to Wolfelee from 1855, when Sir Walter succeeded to the estate. He was also a keen hunter with the rifle, and took an active part in parish affairs. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He passed on the local tradition that the Cheviot sheep breed owes its origin to the ‘Thirteen Drifty Days’. In 1861 he is recorded at Langraw as a landed proprietor and farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 labourers. He wrote ‘Eight Months in Illinois’ (1843), but William Oliver and Dora M. ). He is buried in the Grange Cemetery there. A. He was involved with the Hawick Archæological Society. Late in life he married Mary Jane Mills from Ponteland in Northumberland. When his health began to fail he sold Langraw and moved into Edinburgh with his family of 2 sons and 2 daughters (including William and Andrew and his daughter Agnes and son-in-law Oliver Lough. William (b.1811/2) born in Yetholm Parish, he was a tailor in Denholm and was Treasurer of the Denholm Horticultural Society. He married Margaret Bell and their children included Jane, Janet, Thomas, William, Adam and Andrew. William (b.1812/3) from Jedburgh, he was shephered at ‘Harwoodskefoot’ in 1851. His wife was Mary (from Hawick Parish) and their children included James, Robert, Jane and Janet. His widow was still living in the same place in 1861. William (b.1814) son of Town Clerk John, brother of lawyers George and James. He was recorded on the 1841 census as a woolen manufacturer along with his brother Thomas. The pair are probably the William and Thomas recorded as proprietors of Dean Mill in Pigot’s 1837 directory, manufacturing both woollen and hosiery. In about 1836 the firm of John Oliver & Sons, along with William Wilson & Sons, purchased Weensland Corn Mill, and erected the new Weensland Mill. He was tenant farmer at Hallrule and later at Barnes (where he is recorded in the 1860s). In 1847 John Halliday published ‘Verses to William Oliver, Esq., Hallrule House’ about his friendship. In 1857 his wife gave 6 silver coins and a Roman coin to the Museum collection. In 1861 he was farmer of 750 acres at barnes, employing 5 people. He married Margaret Phillips. Their children were John and Henrietta. William (b.1816/7) joiner at Cauldmill. His wife was Janet, and their children included Barbara, William, Helen, Betsy and Agnes. In 1851 his mother Helen, from Ashkirk Parish, was living with him. William ‘Blinnd Wall’ (1818–71) noted local fiddler, born at Tandlaw, son of Adam and Agnes Anderson. He lost his sight to a game cock at the age of 5, and also lost his father early. He learned the violin from Johnnie Oliver, and played regularly at weddings and social functions. Tales were also told of his prowess as an angler and poacher and as a maker of nets. On one occasion he was caught poaching, but gave his captors the slip, escaping to Edinburgh, where he worked for a while. He also ran a dance class at the Fleece Inn ballroom. In 1841 he is recorded as an itinerant musician, residing at Damside with his mother Agnes and sisters May and Agnes, in 1851 he was a visitor on the Fore Row (with Mary Grieve, his sister) and in 1861 was ‘Musician; Blind’ at 11 Fore Raw. He firstly married Agnes Henderson in 1845 and shortly before his death secondly married Catherine Ballantyne. He died at 11 Fore Raw. He is sometimes regarded as the last of Hawick’s blind celebrities. William Elliot (b.1819) born in Roberton Parish, son of James, farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He emigrated to Australia, settling at Nanango Station (which covered 195 square miles) in Queensland in about 1842. In fact he probably named the area Nanango, after the aboriginal word for the nearby waterhole. Fellow Borderer John Borthwick settled at the adjacent Tarong, and together the district became known as South Burnett. He probably stayed in Australia for less than a decade, but returned to Scotland. In 1851 he was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot living with his brother James, and listed as ‘Lately from Australia’. He later lived on Mull. He married Christina C. Campbell and their children were Mary Salmons, Helen Elliot, Donald C., Jane B. and William. William (19thc.) listed as a High Street baker in Slater’s 1852 directory. William ‘Will’ (b.1827) son of Castleton shepherd George, he was brother of David and Barton. He was farm steward at Gatehousecote and later at Hyndlee farm. He was listed as farm steward at Langraw Scour in 1851 and Gatehousecote.
Oliver Castle
Cottages in 1861. He married Margaret Rutherford in 1853 and their children included: Margaret J. (b.1852); James (b.1855); Janet (1856–1923), who married James Crosbie and emigrated to New Zealand; Euphemia (b.1861) and George (b.1864). He died in Hawick, aged 88. William (b.1828/9) smith at Bedrule. He was married to Margaret and their children included Walter, Thomas and William. William Moffat (1846–91) eldest surviving son of James and Dorothea Moffat. He succeeded as tenant of Howpasley on the death of his father. He was one of the original members of the Border Rifles and having held the rank of sergeant for 10 years, was permitted to formally retain that rank when the troop disbanded. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1873. He was also President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club in the 1880s. After retiring he moved to Langraw House. Later he and his sister (probably Jane, both unmarried) stayed at Whitriggs House. William (1869–1919) son of James and Jane Rutherford. He was a solicitor and lived at Woodburgh near Cauldmill. He died in a freak accident, falling out of the door of the express train from London, near Nuneaton. He married Jessie, daughter of Luke Greenwood, and off Oliver Crescent, the first part being a continuation of the High Street. In fact 83 and 85 High Street may have originally been built as 1 and 2 Oliver Place. It was built around 1875–8 and named after James Oliver, who funded the construction. This area marked the eastern limit of the town lands granted in the Charter. No. 3 has a particularly ornate design, with the carved stone head above the entrance perhaps being the likeness of James Oliver, and his monogram being on 2 of the dormers, which also feature animal forms. Nos. 3, 4, 12 and 13 are grade C listed.

Oliver Castle (o-lee-vur-kaw-sul) n. former castle near Tweedsmuir in Peeblesshire, which gave its name to the surrounding barony. The name of the castle has no connection with the Oliver family of the Jedforest area, although it may be related to the name ‘Olfurd’ and has been suggested to come from a corruption of ‘Holy ford’. The lands were owned by the Frasers since Norman times, passing to the Hays by marriage in the early 14th century. The Hays of Yester also came to be owners of the lands of Todrig in Ashkirk Parish and, somewhat confusingly, these lands were annexed to the Barony of Oliver Castle, probably in the early 16th century, with the Hays holding the superiority.

Oliver Crescent (o-lee-vur-kre-sin’) n. street built on the most easterly portion of the lands originally granted by Douglas, built in 1875 and named after James Oliver. The area was at one time known as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’. St. John’s Church was once here, converted to Arthur Armstrong’s Department Store in 1962. The corner with Croft Road used to have John Millar’s grocery shop. The composer Francis George Scott was born at No. 6. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 20 and 22 in 1898.

Oliver Park (o-lee-vur-pawrk) n. council housing scheme developed off Weensland Road in 1922, the first of its kind in the town. It was named after Andrew Rutherford Oliver of Thornwood.

Oliver Place (o-lee-vur-plis) n. opposite side of the street from Bridge Street and Bourtree Place and off Oliver Crescent, the first part being a continuation of the High Street. In fact 83 and 85 High Street may have originally been built as 1 and 2 Oliver Place. It was built around 1875–8 and named after James Oliver, who funded the construction. This area marked the eastern limit of the town lands granted in the Charter. No. 3 has a particularly ornate design, with the carved stone head above the entrance perhaps being the likeness of James Oliver, and his monogram being on 2 of the dormers, which also feature animal forms. Nos. 3, 4, 12 and 13 are grade C listed.

Oliver-Rutherford (o-lee-vur-rur-fur) n. Archibald John of Dinlabyre (b.1821) 2nd surviving son of William Oliver of Edgerston and Dinlabyre. He joined the 93rd Highlanders, transferred to the 70th Regiment and retired as a Major. He succeeded to his father’s lands of Dinlabyre. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was succeeded by his son Archibald Rawlinson. Archibald Rawlinson (b.1866) succeeded his father to Dinlabyre. He was a mariner, who was retired by 1897. In that year he married Ellen Scott Elliot, daughter Walter Elliot, farmer at Hermitage. William see William Oliver Rutherford. William Alexander of Edgerston (1818–88) eldest surviving son of William Oliver of Dinlabyre and Agnes Chatto, he was born at Knowesouth. His father had inherited Edgerston from his grandmother and took the addition of Rutherford to his surname. He served for a few years in the Militia, reaching the rank of Major. He was a keen hunter, starting his own pack of harriers in 1845, but giving up after an accident meant he could not mount a horse. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He did not succeed his father to Edgerston until 1879, when he was 61. In 1862 he married his cousin Margaret Jane, daughter of Edward Young (whose father married a sister of William Oliver Rutherford, Sheriff of Roxburghshire) and Elizabeth, who was daughter of J. Browne Roberts; Elizabeth’s sisters Katherine Jane and Margaret Amelia married brothers Thomas Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope and Charles Scott of Langlee. His children were: William Edward (b.1863), who succeeded; Archibald Aymer (b.1867); and Neta Isabella. He secondly married Mary Anne, daughter of W.H. Brakespear from Oxfordshire. They had 2 children: Malcolm; and Agnes. William Edward of Edgerston (1863–1931) eldest son of William Alexander. He also served in the Militia for several years. He succeeded his father to Edgerston in 1888, but sold the estate in 1915 (to Frederick Scott Oliver, who was not related) and emigrated to Kenya. In 1891 he married Nancy, youngest daughter of Gideon Pott of Dod. At the same time Mr. Pott’s eldest daughter was also married in the same church (to Isaac Bayley).

the Olivers (thu-o-lee-vurz) n. local family, for centuries concentrated in a triangle formed by Hawick, Jedburgh and the Carter Bar. Tradition asserts that they were once connected closely with the Frasers, or alternatively that they were descended from a West Country family or came from Spain (there is no evidence for the reality of any of these stories however). The early history is also confused by the existence of the surname Oliphant in Scotland. It is unclear exactly when the surname appeared in the Borders, or from where the family in the Jedforest and Southdean areas in the late 13th century. There have been at least 13 Cornets called Oliver – ‘For the Olivers stout, of Jed-forest, Lang counted them their stay, But now, he bow’d upon his staff, And his auld thin locks were gray’ [JTe].

Oman (ō-min) n. George (b.1838/9–94) born in Wick, he trained as a photographer in Edinburgh, and came to Hawick in 1867 following his marriage. In 1868 he started to work with photographer William Scott. Their business, Scott & Oman, took over William Beattie’s photography business at 4 Mill Port (although Beattie had previously been at 11 Back Row). From 1875 he also ran a tobacconist’s shop at 3 High Street. However, he left Hawick soon afterwards and is listed on the 1881 and 1891 censuses as a photographer on Caledonian Crescent in Edinburgh. He married Mary Ann Rutherford, who had been a domestic servant in Rose Street, Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes McMorran (b.c.1868), who died of burns, aged 2 years; Isabella (b.c.1871), born in Hawick; Jemima (b.c.1873), also born in Hawick; Mary Ann (b.c.1875), also born in Hawick; Nathaniel (b.1877), who died in infancy; Margaret Miller (b.1879); Hannah Turner (b.1881); Georgina Francis (b.1884); Kate Andrewina Gibson (b.1887).

Oor Ain Auld Toon (oor-än-awld-toon) n. song written by Thomas Caldwell, with music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1903 Colour Bussing by John Bell, and dedicated to all Hawick Callants in exile. Because of this, as well as the evocative words and rousing chorus, it is almost always sung at the Overseas Night.

oor ain yins (oor-än-yinz) n. close members of one’s family – ‘Oor ain yins is sometimes used to distinguish one’s immediate family or one’s immediate household from those of one’s kindred less nearly related’ [ECS].
Oor Lady Land

Oor Lady Land (oor-lee-dee-lawnd) n. Our Lady Land, name of a piece of land in the former Hassendean Parish, referred to in a charter of about 1537. The Mains of ‘Capitrig’ was bounded by the Grinding Burn on the East and this place on the west. The land may have been associated with Hassendean Burn or otherwise dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It may have been the same as the lands later called ‘Over Hassendean’. This was sold to Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch by Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1738; the disposition of 1739 to John, Duke of Roxburghe refers to it as ‘three acres of land called the Ladylands of Hassendeanbank’. This is the ‘Hassendean Lady Lands, now belonging to the Dukes of Buccleuch and Roxburghe’, which had once been part of the Barony of Cavers, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Oor Bonnie Border Toon n. song written by Robert Hunter with music by Francis George Scott. Scott was responding to a request of the Hawick News for a tune to fit the words that it published in 1897. However, it was not published until 1902, and first sung at the Colour Bussing of that year by James Sutherland. It was then not sung again at the Colour Bussing until after WWII, although it is now much more popular. Some people have noticed a resemblance of the tune to ‘The Maple Leaf Forever’, but any similarity is only passing. Certainly Scott’s music is original, and indeed the accompaniment is fairly challenging for the pianist. For the 1957 song book Scott agreed to drop the original 4-bar interlude between the verses and a coda at the end (but would allow no other changes). The introduction is now played between each verse, although the Saxhorn Band version still includes the original interlude.

Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum (oor-aw-gawn-ti-de-num) n. children’s song, often sung while bouncing a child on the knees, with the knees being opened to let the child fall on the last word – ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum, ti Denum, ti Denum, oo’re aa gaun ti Denum, on Sandy Fussy’s cairt’ [T]. The tune is the same as ‘Keel Row’ (also known as ‘The cat’s got the measles’). Some children in Denholm used to sing ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum schuil in Jimmy Welch’s bus’ with the addition of ‘The wheel came off, the axle broke, oh what an awfi joke!’ so there may once have been several variants. The song is mentioned in Mang what an awfi joke! ([ECS]) (see also Sandy Fussy’s cairt).

Oor Bonnie Border Toon (oor-bo-ne-bor-dur-toon) n. song written by Robert Hunter with music by Francis George Scott. Orchard (u-or-churd) n. Orchard farm and mansion house, situated at the end of the Braid Road, just outside Hawick. The mansion is Georgian, dating from around 1800. It contains a sunken entrance and stepped entrance porch and the interior has much of the original plasterwork, although there were extensive alterations in the 19th century. The old stables bear an armorial panel with the symbols of the Scotts and the Douglases. Nearby ‘Old Orchard’ are restored early 19th century cottages. The earliest reference to the modern name of these lands is when ‘John Scot in Orchart, elder and younger’ witnessed a document for the nearby lands of Crook in 1529/30. In 1541 it was burned by the English along with Ormiston, with the cattle taken and 3 men killed. The land was also known as ‘Gyislandis’ in 1511 and ‘Gayslands’ in 1675, so it must have once belonged to someone called Guy, perhaps Guy of Denholm. The land was part of the ‘Cocklaw’ estate, held by the Gledstains of that Ilk through the 16th and 17th centuries. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls there were 8 householders listed there. John Smith and James Gledstains were living there in 1715, Adam Henderson in 1717, Robert Black and Walter Scott in 1720, William Black in 1723–33. Walter Scott (perhaps the same one) was herd there in 1728, Walter Taylor and James Cairns were there in 1733–44 and William Kinnaird and Walter Scott and James Laidlaw in 1737. It is said that in about 1734 it passed to a Mr. Dickson, but that seems to be an error. In fact it went to Archibald Crombie, Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire, who was a relative of the Gledstains of some sort. In 1744 he sold it to Robert Howison, Bailie in Hawick, and on his death it passed to his grandson, William Dickson. Robert Cairns was there in 1749–57 and William Leithead in 1749. William Paterson was there in 1777, Robert Biggar in 1782, George Cairns in 1786, James Scott was labourer there in 1789 and Andrew Pringle was there in 1796. After William Black in 1723–33. Walter Scott (perhaps the same one) was herd there in 1728, Walter Taylor and James Cairns were there in 1733–44 and William Kinnaird and Walter Scott and James Laidlaw in 1737. It is said that in about 1734 it passed to a Mr. Dickson, but that seems to be an error. In fact it went to Archibald Crombie, Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire, who was a relative of the Gledstains of some sort. In 1744 he sold it to Robert Howison, Bailie in Hawick, and on his death it passed to his grandson, William Dickson. Robert Cairns was there in 1749–57 and William Leithead in 1749. William Paterson was there in 1777, Robert Biggar in 1782, George Cairns in 1786, James Scott was labourer there in 1789 and Andrew Pringle was there in 1796. After William Dickson’s death in 1788 it was probably inherited by his uncle, Robert Scott; he was recorded there in 1811, when it was valued at £310. Sometime after Scott died in 1813 it was purchased by the Douglases of Cavers. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae was living there in 1792. In 1797 the farmers there were Andrew Pringle, plus George and Walter Stavert, with the owner Robert Scott living at Orchard Cottage. In the 1860s it was owned by Douglas of Cavers, and occupied by manufacturer Walter Wilson. By the late 19th century it was possessed by William Scott, with the last connection with the Douglases of Cavers severed in about 1925 (also sometimes ‘the Orchard’; once spelled and pronounced ‘Worchart’ and variants, and still ‘Orchyard’ in the mid-19th century; the name changed from ‘Gyislandis’, i.e. ‘the lands belonging to Guy’, possibly of Denum, to its present name in the 17th century; it is ‘Orchart’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Orchyard’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Orchard Road (or-churd-rôd) n. name sometimes used for the back road from the Miller’s Knowes passing Orchard farm, a popular walking spot – ‘... There’s peace alang the Orchard way, An’ doon in Denholm’s bower’ [WFC].

Orchard Street (or-churd-stree’ n. short street off Orchard Terrace, named in 1899, previously being part of Glebe Place (from 1888) and then of Glebe View (from 1892).

Orchard Terrace (or-churd-te-ris) n. street at the back of the Terraces, opened as a public road around 1895, although the first house (No. 2) was erected in 1882. There are many villa-type residences on the higher side. The name derives from its proximity to the road to Orchard.

Orchart (or-chur’, -churt) n. an orchard (also worchard).

Ordain (or-dàn) v., arch. to appoint to an office, nominate for duty – ‘[They did] ordain John Hardie ... and John Tudhope ... two ordinary sworn burleymen’ [BR1688].

Ordainit (or-dàn-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. ordained, nominated, appointed – ‘... it was ordainit at the command of the General and company that three baggage horses were to go to the armie out of the town’ [BR1644].

Ordery (or-der-lee) adv., arch. duly, properly, according to normal procedure – ‘... which day was orderlie keeped by virtue of a proclamation emitted by ye General Assembly’ [PR1722].

Ordinance (or-di-nins) n., arch. a prescribed religious observance, attendance at church – ‘John Armstrong and John Crozier subsequently appeared to answer a charge of ‘travelling upon the Lord’s day, and absenting themselves from ordinations’’ [JaT].

Ordinar (or-di-nur) adj., arch. ordinary – ‘... are altogether frustrated and disappointed of the ordinar free and gratuitous contributions of their Christian and charitable neighbours ...’ [BT1699], ‘... was not proclaimed at the kirke of Hawick which is not only knowne to be his ordinar residence ...’ [BR1712], ‘... an’ then for the Law – his ordinar’ hunting grundi’ [BCM1881], ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundils) a turbulent woare as the

Ordinary

Ord (ôrd) n. Alexander (15th C.) resident of Minto, whose surname is recorded as ‘Urde’. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of 2 cows and 13 sheep from him. He was probably related to Maragret, who is recorded in Minto in 1502. John (18th/19th C.) plasterer in Hawick, listed on Teviot Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Margaret (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend, recorded in 1502, when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had reimbursement for leading a raid on the farms there. She had 2 cows stolen from her farm. Her surname is recorded as ‘Urd’.

Ord the Equestrian (ôrd-thu-ee-kwe-stree-in) n. popular performer at local Common Ridings and fairs in the mid-19th century. He was also known as ‘Ord the Circusman’, putting on open-air performances in the Haugh. He was born in Longformacus Parish, where his father was minister, and although destined for the ministry himself, he instead became a showman. His speciality was tricks involving horses, including jumping over up to 16 of them, and riding half a dozen at once. He used to ride standing on a bare-backed steed and impersonate characters, financed by the sale of lottery tickets for prizes. He is buried in Biggar old churchyard.

Orderin the Curds an Cream (or-de-rin-thu-kurdz-an-kreem) n. another name for the Thursday night Chase, when the Cornet formally orders curds and cream from a neighbouring farm (now St. Leonard’s) for the Friday morning of Common Riding week. This takes place on the Thursday preceding Common Riding week and is the first official ride of the ceremonies. It has happened since at least the 1840s, but only became officially part of the Common Riding ceremonies (i.e. under the aegis of the Ceremonial Committee) in 1888. Jed Murray performed the official ordering duties for almost 30 years, often with an original poem. The evening begins at 6 p.m. when the drums and fifes lead the Cornet and supporters around the Tower Knowe and up the Loan, finishing at the site of the Auld Brig. The riders proceed up to the Nipknowes, with the married men going first, headed by the Acting Father. This evening also has the first ‘Hut’, with the Cornet and Acting Father both giving speeches, and the Acting Father being presented with his badge. After the publican has agreed to supply the curds and cream, the Hut wins up and there is the singing of all 14 verses of ‘Teribus’ at the farmhouse.

the Ordnance Airms (thu-ord-nins-ar-mz) n. former hostelry at 12 (and perhaps also later 31) High Street. It was also popularly known as ‘the Cannon Inn’. For a long time the landlord was James Kennedy, a local veteran of Waterloo (and so presumably he named it); this was in the first half of the 19th century. The Harrow Inn was adjacent, both buildings being demolished to make way for the Royal Bank about 1857.

the Ordnance Survey (thu-ord-nins-sur-vä) n. national mapping agency, which grew out of efforts to map Scotland in the 18th century. The first 25 inch maps of Hawick were published in 1863, with the survey being carried out in 1858. The ‘name book’ from this survey carries additional useful information about place names, including descriptions, spelling variations and the local authorities who were consulted.

oringer (o-rin-jur) n., arch. an orange, orange tree – ‘Oringers and limons [costing £1/16/0. the 2 dozen in February 1681, and the former in May £1/10/0. a dozen’ [HAST1905].

Orm (ôrm) n. (12th C.) son of Eilaf. He was named after Orm, son of Ketel, husband of Gunnilda, his father’s aunt. He was probably the man who gave his name to Ormiston at the confluence of the Kale and Teviot. In about 1145 he witnessed the charter of David I to Melrose Abbey. Sometime before 1152 he was witness to a charter concerning a gift of the church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. In the 1150s he witnessed a transaction between Robert Avenel and Melrose Abbey. In about 1155 he and his son John (of Hownam) witnessed a charter granting the church of Old Roxburgh to the Diocese of Glasgow. In about 1158 he witnessed a gift of Sawtry (in Huntingdonshire) to Warden Abbey by King Malcolm. In 1159/60 he witnessed a confirmation of the rights. of Kelso Abbey by King Malcolm. Sometime before 1165 he granted land in 'the other Crailing' to Jedburgh Abbey. He also probably possessed the lands of Hownam, which were later owned by his son. He was succeeded by his son John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh. His great-grandson William was the first to be styled 'of Ormiston'.

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. farm and former estate about 2 miles east of Hawick, in the Parish of Cavers. This was the site of Cocklaw Castle, where the 'Siege of Cocklaw' took place in 1403. However, the name occurs separately from 'Cocklaw' even as early as the 16th century, and so it is unclear if the names were precisely synonymous. In 1541 it was burned by the English along with Orchard, with the cattle taken and 3 men killed. John Scott in Ormiston is recorded in 1589 and Adam Scott in 1592. There were other Scotts there in the 17th century. It was owned by the Gledstains of that Ilk in 1643. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls there were 8 separate householders listed there, while 'Baiyea Scott ormston' paid tax on 2 hearths in Hawick. James Rutherford was tenant there in the early 18th century. John Leithead was there in 1702, Thomas Miller in 1709, James Scott, James Simpson and Adam Huntly in at least 1715–23, John Leithead in 1716, Thomas Scott in 1718, William Turnbull in 1720, James Stoddart in 1726–27, Thomas Reid in 1726–37, Robert Henderson and John Tait in 1727, Robert Elliot in 1727–29, William Laird in 1727–37, Walter Hogg and John Main in 1728, Thomas Hobkirk in 1730, George Scott in 1733, Walter Reid in 1735–42, James Shiell in 1737–41 and James Douglas and Adam Hart in 1737. The ruins of the tower were obliterated by the present farmhouse, which was built around 1747 by carpenter manufacturer Walter Elliot. William Lundie was a tailor there in 1753. James Rathie was there in 1781, James Hutton in 1784 and William Allan in 1788–90. The Elliots lived here in the 18th century, but Thomas Curerr 'of Ormston' inherited it through marriage to Helen Elliot. Curerr was owner in 1788, when it was valued at £675 15s 4d. He is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. William Allan lived there in 1788. The Wilson family owned it in the 19th century. Hawick's first Provost, George Wilson was born there, as well as Victoria Cross awardee John Daykins. James Black was miller there in 1841. William Gray and Andrew Black were farmers in the 1860s. Charles Wilson is recorded in the house in 1868. ‘Mrs. Margaret F. McDonald or Muir’ was listed as owner in about 1874. Until about 1830 the main route from Hawick to the Newcastle area used to pass here on the way to Birnneyknowe. In 1878 an old jug (now in the Museum) was found in a garden there, containing some 15th century silver coins. A 3-legged bronze cauldron, possibly 14th century, was also found there and is in the Museum (formerly spelled and pronounced 'Wormston' and variants; the origin is probably 'Orm's farm', from the Old Scandinavian personal name Orm, but may have been transplanted from another place of the same name; the name first occurs as 'Ormistoun' in 1509/10, 'Ormistoune' in 1535, 'Ormestoun' in 1592, 'Ormston' in 1680, 'Ormestowne' in 1683, 'Ormstone' in 1694, 'Ormstown' in 1702, 1708, 1726 and 1737 and 'Ormstone' in 1761; it is 'Ormstoun' on Blaeu's 1654 map; note there are several other places in Scotland of the same name, e.g. the place on Kale Water, in Berwickshire and in East Lothian).

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. farm and house in Eckford Parish, on the north bank of the Teviot, opposite where the Kale joins. The lands were probably those of 'Creling villae Orme filii Gilsap' mentioned in the c.1147 charter to Jedburgh Abbey. The lairdship was held by Orm's descendants, who took 'Ormston' as their designation and held the lands, which became a barony, until the late 16th century when James, 'Black Ormston', was executed. It then passed to the Kers of Cessford and then the Earls of Roxburghe. In 1654 it was sold by William, Earl of Roxburghe to John Scott of Langshaw, who sold it in 1658 to Kerr of Chatto. Some time before 1678 it was purchased from Kerr of Chatto by Elliot of Wells. In 1718 it was acquired by William Elliot of Wells and was still held by an Elliot in 1788. It then passed to William Mein and later the Marquess of Lothian. A tower and village here were burned by Hertford's men in 1545 (the origin is probably 'Orm's farm', from the Old Norse personal name Ormr and the Old English 'tun'; the name first appears as 'Hormiston' in the early 13th century and it is 'Ormistoun' on Blaeu's 1654 map).
owner of part of Weensland, valued at £41, and at that time belonging to William Dickson of Orchard. In 1766 he firstly married Agnes Turnbull, but she died shortly afterwards. In 1767 he secondly married Esther Douglas. Their children were: Robert (b.1769), tenant farmer at Drinkstone; Isabel (b.1770), twin of Isabel, who died young; Janet (b.1773), William (b.1774) and George (b.1776), who all died in infancy; William (again, 1778–1859), a farm servant, who died unmarried, possibly the William living at Dykeneu in 1841; and Adam (b.1780), who also died young. He also appears to have thirdly married Nelly Scott in 1877 and fourthly Isabel Scott in 1796. With his 4th wife he had 5 further children, including George (b.1799) and Janet (1803–76). It is possible that his widow was the Isabella who was listed as ‘Ind.’ in the 1841 census, and living at Greensidehall Cottage, aged about 55. The 1780 baptism was carried out by Rev. Williamson (meaning that he was a member of the East Bank Kirk), with witnesses James Ekron and William Robertson. Adam (1820–65) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Drinkstone, and Helen Hall. He worked as an agricultural labourer and then as a mason’s labourer. In 1843 he married Elizabeth Storrie (1823–84) and they had sons: Robert (1846–1919), who married Isabella Clyde; and Thomas (b.1850/1). He secondly married Betsy Douglas and they had a daughter, Betsy (b.1859). He was living with his mother and other extended family members in 1851 and was at 3 Round Close in 1861. He ended his life by hanging himself. Adam (1827–96) eldest son of George and Anne Lockie and grandson of Adam, tenant in Drinkstone. In 1861 he was miller and farmer at Rutherford Mill in Maxton Parish. In 1853 he married Margaret Henderson (1828–1915). They had 5 daughters (including Betsy and Anne) and 3 sons, George, Adam and William. Sir Alan (d.c.1289) probably descendant (and perhaps son) of William. He witnessed many charters in about the 1270s and 80s. For example he witnessed a resignation of lands to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Rule for lands in Hownham, where he is ‘Alano de Hormiston’. He held lands in Pencaitland in East Lothian, mentioned in the 1260s and 70s. His wife was Alice, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there were several others of the same name at a similar time, e.g. Henry and John, who also swore fealty in 1296. It seems likely he was a direct ancestor of most of today’s Ormiston's. Andrew of that Ilk (d.1495) eldest son of George. He gained the Barony of Ormiston in 1464, as well as the lands of ‘Symonstoun’ and ‘Grymslaw’. He was a member of the panel of 1464/5 ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Cavers, where he is ‘Andrew Ormestoune of that ilk’. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was witness to a sasine of the Cranstons for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, where he is described as ‘of Ormiston’. He also witnessed several other charters in the 1460s to 1480s. In 1472 he resigned his lands of Ormiston so that they could be granted to his son Robert. In 1476 an action was brought against him and several others by John, Lord Somerville, relating to the lands of Blacklaw in Linton Parish, with the inquest including Ainsles, Kerrs, Douglases, Pringles, Mathers, Gorlays, Turnbulls and Dalgleshies. In 1481 his brother Nicholas had a charter for lands in the Barony of Broxfield. In 1483/4 he was mentioned in a law-suit involving Thomas Oliphant and William of Abernethy, 2nd Lord Saltoun. In 1485/6 he witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen. In 1486 he is recorded as a crown tenant in ‘Hairtherne’ in Yarrow. In 1490 he had to pay Thomas Stewart of Minto for the rental of Sunlaws. In 1492 he is mentioned as a creditor in the will of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird of Ormiston fined for non-presence at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He was mentioned again in a decree relating to Sunlaws in 1494. He married Joneta de Cranston and had children: Robert, who succeeded; George, who served as a gunner, and was tutor to his nephew George; and Margaret, who married John Falow of that Ilk. Andrew (b.1731) eldest son of Robert, grandson of Andrew, blacksmith at Bondward, and direct descendant of James of that Ilk, ‘Black Ormiston’. He married Jean Turnbull in Kelso in 1760. Their children, all but the first born in Hob Kirk Parish, included: John (b.1769), who lived in Hobkirk; and 3 Williams (b.1763, 1773, 1775). Andrew (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Muns land, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the Andrew who married Marion Oliver in Hobkirk in 1768. Andrew (1747–1837) miller at Timbersidemill, he later moved to Sillerbuthall and Lockieshedge. He was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick. Andrew (c.1794–1853) born in Cavers Parish, he was one of the last Hawick Town Herds. In 1841 he was at ‘Hawick Muir House’ and at ‘Herd’s House’ in 1851;
these may have been names for St. Leonard's. He married Sarah Wilson in Wilton Parish in 1816. Their children included Janet, Sarah, Agnes and Adam. Andrew (1820–96) youngest son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. In 1861 he was a labourer living at Bedrule Lodge. In 1848 he married Mary Hymers (perhaps Aimers). They had 2 daughters and 4 sons, including: John (d.1919), who died at Inveresk; Edward (d.1890), who moved to West Derby; Andrew; George (b.1860), who lived at Bedrule. Archibald (1746–1805) born in Wilton Parish, eldest son of John and Isobel Scott. He became a gardener and later moved to Melrose. He is probably the Archibald listed as owner of ‘Howlands Inclosure’ in 1788, and still recorded that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (when he was already deceased), with the same lands later being owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Graham and Mrs. Agnes Bowie. In Hawick in 1774 he married Betty Scott, who was from Goldielands. Their children included: John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (again, b.1781), Sergeant in the Royal Marines; Walter (b.c.1785); Betty (again, b.1787); Archibald (b.1793), emigrated to America. Archibald (b.1793) youngest son of Archibald and Betty Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart from Eckford Parish, and they had one child, Archibald, who was a shoemaker. He emigrated to America, and it is unclear what happened to him. Archibald (b.1813–94) born in Melrose Parish, only son of Archibald and Isabel Hart. He was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s directory in 1837 and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on the south side of Main Street. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Turnbull in Lilliesleaf in 1836, and she died in 1882. Their children included: Agnes (b.1837); William (b.1838); John (b.1840), who married Mary Baptie; Isabella (b.1842); Robert (b.1846); Helen (b.1851); James Russell (b.1854); Archibald (b.1856); and Mary (b.1858). He died in Ancrum. Archibald (1861–1909) eldest son of John and Mary Baptie. He became a violin teacher in Edinburgh. David (b.1776) son of John and Betty Laidlaw, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a draper on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. ‘David & Son’ was listed as a Howegate draper in 1837, as well as a manufacturer of hosiery and tailor; the same firm was still listed on the Howegate in 1852. In 1841 he was at about No. 21 Howegate. He married Joan (or ‘Johanna’) Halliburton, who died in 1854. Their children were: an unnamed child (d.1808); John (b.1809), draper in Hawick; Elizabeth (b.1816); Joan (b.1820); and another child who died in infancy. George of that Ilk (15th C.) son of James. In 1439 he was a witness to the retour of Douglas of Bonjedward and in 1437 he was on an inquest along with his father for the Kers of Altonburn. He purchased lands at Makerstoun in 1451 and was granted his father’s Barony of Ormiston in 1452. His recorded sons were: Andrew, who succeeded; James;Nicholas; and Bartholomew. George (15th/16th C.) younger son of Andrew of that Ilk and brother of Robert. He appears to have been in charge of the estate of Ormiston in 1497 when there was a legal case about ejecting tenants from Ormiston Mill. He served as tutor to his brother’s son George, who would succeed to Ormiston. He served as one of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell’s bailies appointed for giving Walter Scott of Branzholme the lands of Grahamshaw in 1500. Both he and his nephew George appeared on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. He appears as a ‘gunner’ on H.M.S. Margaret in 1513 (the year of Flodden) and received payments as a gunner until 1544. In 1546 he was recorded receiving a pension. It is unclear if he had any family. George of that Ilk (d.c.1542) son of Robert and Elizabeth Rutherford. His uncle George served as his tutor. He inherited Ormiston and Samieston in 1509, presumably meaning that he reached majority then. He was a member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. He obtained lands in Maxton Parish in 1510. In 1530 he was among Border Lairds who gave security for their behaviour. He and his son George were involved with the lands of Fairnington, through a deal with Partick Hepburn of Bolton in 1538. He was at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542, where he was captured and died soon afterwards. He married Elizabeth Rutherford, who was related to his mother, also Elizabeth Rutherford. As a result his son and heir James had to go through a process of legitimisation in 1515. His children included: Sir James, ‘the Black Laird’, who succeeded; George, who served as a quartermaster in the Scottish Court; and Andrew (d.1574), who was a Colonel of the Scots army in Holland and was killed in a duel. George (17th C.) probably younger son of Walter and grandson of James ‘the Black Laird’. He may have been referred as ‘in Heidschaw’. He witnessed events in Jedburgh Parish in 1644 and 1648 and a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650. In 1637 in Ashkirk Parish he married ‘Jonet Tennent’. James had to go through a process of legitimisation in 1515. His children included: Sir James, ‘the Black Laird’, who succeeded; George, who served as a quartermaster in the Scottish Court; and Andrew (d.1574), who was a Colonel of the Scots army in Holland and was killed in a duel. George (17th C.) probably younger son of Walter and grandson of James ‘the Black Laird’. He may have been referred as ‘in Heidschaw’. He witnessed events in Jedburgh Parish in 1644 and 1648 and a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650. In 1637 in Ashkirk Parish he married ‘Jonet Tennent’.
Ormiston

They had 3 known children: a daughter (b.1639); Robert, tenant at Boonraw; and George, who married Isobel Brown. The family also lived in Roberton Parish. George (17th C.) son of John, tenant in Ormiston Mains (although it is unclear if this is the one near Hawick). He is listed in 1684 for being a Covenantant fugitive. George (17th C.) younger son of George and Janet Tennant. His brother Robert was tenant in Boonraw. He was recorded living at Boonraw in 1688. He married ‘Issobell Broume’ in 1686 and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish, but actually the old Hassendean Parish) included: Bessie (b.1686); and twins Margaret and Janet (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert (probably his brother) and Robert Storie. He is probably the George who (along with Robert) witnessed baptism for Robert Storie in Roberton Parish in 1684, for George Hill in 1687 and for Dand Gray and Isobel Ormiston (perhaps their sister) in 1688. George (1748–1815) born in Wilton Parish, son of Robert, tenant at Boonraw, with his mother being Bessie Scott. He became a miller in the parish of Stow. In 1774 in Hawick he married Agnes Fairbairn, but they had no children and she died in 1816. In 1779 in Stow he married Margaret Boyd and they had 4 sons and 6 daughters, including James (b.1794), who was a carter in Stow and then moved to Dalkeith. George (d.1815) baker in Hawick. He could be the local man who contributed £2 2s to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. Probably the same George was recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. It is possible he was the same as George who was miller in Stow, if he moved back to Hawick and became a baker. George (b.1799) youngest son of Adam, who was tenant in Drinkstone, his mother being Isabel Scott. In 1826 he married Anne Lockie in Roberton Parish. Their children (all baptised in Wilton) were: Adam (1827–96), a miller and farmer; William (b.1828), who died young; Margaret (1830–92), who married Alexander Logan; and Robert (1832–74), farm manager. Both he and his wife were probably deceased by 1841, when the 3 surviving children were living at Groundistone, with mole-catcher Robert Taylor and his wife. George (1801–74) eldest son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. He was born in Bedrule Parish (although the census claims Southdean or Chesters), and lived for a while in the Parish. He became a farm steward. In 1851 he was a labourer living at Dykesmuir in Cavers and in 1861 he was steward at Hallburn farm in Morebattle Parish. In 1823 he married Jessie King. Their children included: John (b.1825); Margaret (1827–78), who married Andrew McDougall; Elizabeth (b.1829); Agnes (1831–92), who married Robert Robertson; James (b.1833); Janet or Jessie (1835–1908), who married Andrew Fox; Isabella (b.1837), died in infancy; William (b.1839), also died in infancy; George (b.1841), also died young; and Robert. Their children were baptised in the Jedburgh Free Kirk. He died in Melrose. George ‘Dod’ (20th C.) son of Walter and Mary Begbie. He was a butcher in Hawick. He was the first post-war Acting Father in 1946. He married Catherine Whetlace and had children Helen, Mary, Walter and Kay. Hugh (b.1773) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Boonraw, and Jean Buckham. He was born in Wilton Parish. Like his 2 brothers, he emigrated to America, eventually settling in Canada. He married Sarah Carter in England. Hugh (1816–79) 4th son of James and Mary Walker. He was born at Drinkstone. At about 2 years old he went with his family to ‘Scotch Settlement’ in New York state. After working on the family farm near Ox Bow, he became a blacksmith. He fought in the Civil War, participating in several battles in 1864 and 1865. He married Mamie Barnes and they had 9 children. James of that Ilk (15th C.) probably succeeded Robert de Ormiston. He was likely to be descended from the first Orm. He may be the James who took part in the demolition of Jedburgh Castle in 1409. He was on an assize in 1425 for Bemersyde and an inquest for Caverton in 1429/30, when he was James ‘of Ormystoun’. In 1432 he was witness to a confirming charter involving Andrew Rule, Lord of Primsde and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. Along with his son George he was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. He was described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a document of 1448 where Stephen Scott of Castlelaw gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford Parish; this is the first noted instance of the name ‘Ormiston of that Ilk’. In 1452 he resigned his lands to be created into the Barony of Ormiston and re-granted to his son George. James of that Ilk ‘the Black Laird’ (c.1522–73) son of George and grandson of Robert. He was referred to as ‘Black Ormiston’ on account of his dark complexion and to distinguish him from his contemporary, John Cockburn of Ormiston (in East Lothian). He held the Barony of Ormiston on Kale Water, as well as Gowansland in Maxton. In 1547, after the Battle of Pinkie, he was among men who swore allegiance to the King of England, but renounced this in 1549. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford that Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained had helped the English in raiding and burning his farms in the lower Borthwick valley. He was on an assize in 1550 for lands granted to William Rutherford of Langnewton. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for him was his brother Andrew. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1554 he was surety for Rutherfords not to molest Walter Ker of Cessford; this was the first mention of what became a feud between him and the Kers. Also in 1554 he was on the inquest for Walter Scott of Branxholme succeeding as heir to his grandfather. He is listed in 1557 as part of the group of 200 local Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston, as part of some feud. In 1559 he acted as a Bailie to Lord Bothwell. In 1560 he was involved in communications between Scotland, England and France, on behalf of the Regent, Earl of Arran. Also in 1560 he and John Rutherford of the Knowe were warded for a disturbance during the court held at Jedburgh. In 1561 he was accused of resetting some English cattle. In 1561 he and Scott of Headshaw communicated a letter assurance between Scotts and Kers. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft; and he later incurred a penalty for failing to deliver thieves to the Privy Council. In 1562 he was ordered to vacate the Earl of Bothwell's lands at Ancrum. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he is recorded among the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in the contract between the Scotts and the Kers. The same contract also mentions a 'particulare deidlie feid' with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for which James Langlands of that Ilk and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee acted as his special 'umpires'; this was over the lands of Nether Ancrum and the murder of a servant of Cessford's. Also in 1564 he was among 35 local men who were ordered to assist the Warden of the West Marches, who was Ker of Cessford. He and his uncle Robert of Old Melrose entered into an obligation with the Spottiswoods in 1565. Until 1567 he served as Bailie of the lands of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk for the Earl of Bothwell. In 1567 he was one of the men (along with his uncle 'Hob' Ormiston) accused of treason for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell and was said to be involved in the murder of Darnley. He was knighted in 1567, around the time that Bothwell married Mary, Queen of Scots. However, later that year he was among supporters of Bothwell who were declared fugitives. He was ordered to vacate Ormiston and Nether Ancrum, as well as his wife's lands of Herdminstoum. He was said to be in a group of Liddesdale thieves who raided Alnwick and was present at the Battle of Langside. In 1568 he and his uncle Robert were said to be hiding with Elliot of Whithaugh in Liddesdale. In 1569 he gave refuge to the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland after they fled to Liddesdale following an unsuccessful rebellion in the north of England; he was said to have been met by Martin Elliot of Brairdlie in Liddesdale and forced to stop shielding the English rebels. In 1571/2 he was listed as having been declared as a rebel, along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He seems to have been hiding out for the next 3 years and was finally captured by Sir John Carmichael at Halkwood, when the Earl of Morton was holding a Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was executed for treason in Edinburgh in 1573, and afterwards the Barony of Ormiston passed to the Kers of Cessford. He is recorded as 'Blak Ormestoune' in 1573 when 2 of his former servants were hanged for stealing livestock and burning Andrew Kerr's corn. His first wife may have been the eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. His second wife was Margaret, widow of John Sinclair of 'Hirdmestoun' (or Herdmanston). His son and heir was Walter, who married 'Geizel' (probably Grizel) Rutherford and Janet Turnbull. He also had a son, Andrew, with his 1st wife, and had no further children with his 2nd wife. Some of his descendants were tenants at Boonraw. He is already dead by 1576 when Andrew Commendator of Jedburgh was tried for associating with him after he was denounced as a rebel. James (1684–1746) son of Robert and Margaret Hill, and brother of John. He was born in Robertson Parish and his family were tenants at Boonraw. He was tenant farmer in Easter Burnfoot, Stiches and Boonraw. In 1721 he was living at Borthaugh and in 1724 at Boonraw. He is probably the James who in 1733 witnessed a baptism for Robert (probably his brother), also resident at Boonraw. He married Barbara (or ‘Baby’) Scott in Wilton in 1713; she was from Tandlaw. Their children were: Jean (b.1714), who died unmarried, aged 21; Robert (b.1716), who moved to Yorkshire; John (b.1717); James (b.1719), who married Jean Dunlop and stayed in Wilton; George (b.1721); John (again, b.1724), also moved to Yorkshire; Walter (b.1727); and Samuel (b.1731), also went to Yorkshire. The witnesses in 1721 were John Scott and William Graham, in 1724 were John Huntly and Gideon Turnbull and in 1727 were John (probably his brother) and Robert Scott. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Boonraw in 1729. James (1719–54) 3rd son of James and Barbara Scott. He was born in Wilton, where he lived and died. In Ashkirk Parish in 1724 he married Jean Dunlap. Their children included: Jean (b.1743); Barbara (b.1746); Robert (b.1748); Barbara (again, b.1750); and Walter (b.1752). James (1775–1840) youngest child of Robert and Jean Buchan. He lived for a while at the Rink, later at Drinkstone and then at Galashiels. He married Mary Walker in 1800. The family moved to America in 1819, settling in Rossie, New York. He and his wife were among the first members of the Presbyterian Church at Ox Bow. Their children were: Mary (1802–47), who married William Markwick; Robert (1803–54), farmer in Wilna; James (1805–65), lived in Gouverneur; Adam (1807–88), pioneer in Wilna; William (1809–72), blacksmith and soldier in the Civil War, who died at Carthage; George (b.1814), who died in infancy; Hugh (1816–79), blacksmith; Jennett (1819–55), who married Thomas MacRobie; George (1821–96), died at Ox Bow; and Thomas (1823–90), who went to California. James (b.1778) elder son of Walter and Betty Irwin, he was born in Wilton Parish. He farmed at Boonraw. In 1799 he married Janet Reid. Their children included: Walter (b.1800); Robert (b.1803), who was a mason in Bedrule and later a builder in Dalkeith; Janet (b.1805–76), who married John Fox; William (b.1807), who married Jessie Burton; and Betty (b.1810). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his eldest son Walter and his daughters. Janet (b.1802/3) recorded in 1861 as a ‘Land Proprietor’ at Dykeneuk Cottage. She was unmarried. She could be the daughter of James and Janet Reid. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Ornstooue’ in 1482 when he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hasseanean. John (17th C.) tenant in Ormiston Mains (although it is unclear if this is the one near Hawick). He is recorded in 1684 when his son George was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. John (1682–1729) farmer at Boonraw, son of Robert and Margaret Hill. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for James in Boonraw (his brother) in 1727. In 1712 in Wilton Parish he married Margaret Aitkin, who died in 1726. Their children included: Robert (b.1715), also tenant in Boonraw; John (b.1717); John (again, b.1719), who lived at Wester Howlands and Damside; James (b.1722); (b.1724); Margaret (b.1726); and another daughter. John (1719–75) 3rd son of John, tenant in Boonraw and Margaret Aitkin. He was described as being of Wester Howlands and Damside. He first married ‘Jean Edaem’ and they had a son John (b.1742), who died in infancy. In 1745 he secondly married Isobel Scott, who was from Ewes. Their children included: Archibald (b.1746), a gardener, who moved to Melrose; John (b.1748), tailor in Hawick; Walter (b.1750); Jean (b.1754); Walter (b.1756); and Margaret (b.1761). John (b.1748) 2nd surviving son of John and Isobel Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish and became a tailor in Hawick. In 1767 he married Betty Laidlaw, from Cavers Parish, the marriage being proclaimed in Hawick. Their children were: Catherine (b.1774); David (b.1776), who was a tailor and merchant; and Betty (b.1779). John (1754–89) born in Wilton Parish, 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Boonraw, and Bessie Scott. In 1777 in Edinburgh he married Helen Russell and they had a son, Robert. He worked as a wright in Stow and died in Hawick. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible he was the same as the son of Robert, who was a wright in Stow or the wright in Cauldmill. John (b.1769) son of Andrew, he was born and lived in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons: Andrew (b.1797), who emigrated; and James (b.1798), who was a farmer in Surrey. John (b.1781) eldest surviving son of gardener Archibald. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became a Sergeant in the Royal Marines, serving in the 75th Foot Regiment and being discharged at age 30. He was served heir to his father in 1813. John (b.c.1770) eldest son of George and Margaret Yule or Laing. He was descended from the Gattonside branch and hence from William of Westerhouses. He lived in Bedrule. In 1841 he was a labourer at Billerwell Lodge, and in 1851 his widow and one of his daughters (Isabel, stated to be ‘Pauper (Imbecile)’ were still there. He married Elizabeth Oliver, who died in Bedrule in 1860, aged 81.

Their children included: George (1801–74); Isabel (1805–1870); Margaret (1811–85), who married John Brunton; Elizabeth (1812–91), who married Thomas Cranston; Robert (1815–99); and Andrew (1820–96), labourer in Bedrule. John (b.1809) eldest son of tailor David and Joanna Haliburton. He was a draper in Hawick, taking over the business from his father at 21 Howegate. He is recorded there in 1851. His wife was Janet from Newington. John (b.1836/7) born in Cavers Parish. He was Station Master at Belses. He is recorded there in 1861, with his aunt, Agnes Ormiston. John (b.1840) son of Archibald, shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Baptie in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was listed as a shoemaker, living with his mother-in-law and family at Spittal-on-Rule. He later moved to Ancrum. They had children: Archibald (b.1861), music teacher in Edinburgh; Robert Baptie (b.1863); John (b.1865); Agnes (b.1870); Mary Thomasina (b.1872); and Thomas (b.1874). Robert of that ilk (d.bef. 1505) elder son of Andrew and Janet Cranstoun. He succeeded to the estate according to a grant made by his father in 1471/2. He married Elizabeth Rutherford and had 3 sons: George, who succeeded; William of Westerhouses; and Robert of Old Melrose. His widow secondly married Alexander Haitlie of Muirdean. Robert of Old Melrose (d.c.1570) 3rd son of Robert of that ilk and Elizabeth Rutherford. He served as a quartermaster for James V. He was described as ‘of New Hall’ in 1551 when he served as surety for his nephew James (‘Black Ormiston’) with Walter Scott of Sinton. He is said to have shown a 2-headed calf to the Queen Mother, Mary of Guise. In 1564 he resigned Old Melrose to his son John, reserving liferent for himself. He also held lands at Sauchtonhall and Blainslie. In 1567 he was convicted of complicity in the murder of Darnley, although it was unclear that he was really involved. He died soon afterwards and was succeeded by John. Robert (d.1719) tenant farmer at Boonraw, son of George and great-grandson of ‘the Black Laird’. He married Marion (or Margaret) Hill in about 1681. Their children (baptised in Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassedean) included: John (b.1682), who was tenant in Boonraw after him; James (b.1684), who married Barbara Scott; and Helen (b.1687). Additionally their son Robert was baptised in Wilton in 1696. The witnesses in 1684 were Robert Storie and William Hill (who may have been his wife’s father). The witnesses in 1696 were William and John Lamb. He is probably the Robert who (along with Robert Storie) witnessed a baptism for George (likely his brother) in 1688. Additionally, he is probably the Robert who (along with George) witnessed a baptism for Robert Storie in Robertson Parish in 1684, one for William Pott in 1687 and another for Dand Gray and Isobel Ormiston (perhaps their sister) in 1688. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Storie) for William Nichol in Boonraw. In 1706 he paid for the use of the Wilton mortcloth (meaning that a family member died). Robert (1696–1740) 3rd son of Robert and Marion Hill. He was a farmer in Wilton Parish (although it is unclear where exactly), living at Boonraw in 1733. In 1732 he married Helen (or Ellen) Leyden and she died in 1743. Their children included: Helen (b.1733); John (b.1736), who died young; and Adam (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 and 1738 were James (who was probably his brother) and John Lamb. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Boonraw in 1729. Robert (1714–76) son of John and Margaret Aitkin. He also farmed at Boonraw. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, resident of Boonraw and in 1764 (with Walter) for a different John Scott in Boonraw, as well as for William Lockie. In 1744 he married Bessie Scott, who died in 1757. Their children were: James (b.1746); George (b.1748), who lived in Edinburgh and died a bachelor, with his estate divided among his siblings; Elizabeth (b.1752), probably died young; John (b.1754); Anne (b.1756); and Elizabeth (b.1760). He appears (unless this is another Robert) to have secondly married Jean Buckham and had children: Janet (b.1765), who married Walter Scott and emigrated to America; Robert (b.1767), who emigrated to America; Elizabeth (b.1770), who married a Hobkirk and emigrated to Rossie, New York; Hugh (b.1773); and James (b.1775). The witnesses in 1746 were George and James Scott (perhaps related to his wife) and in 1770 were Archibald Elliot and Adam Ormiston (perhaps his brother). In 1770 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for Robert Cowan and another for James Turnbull. He may be the Robert still recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Boonraw; Walter was listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. Robert (b.1716) eldest son of James and Barbara Scott. He was born in Ashkirk Parish. He moved to Yorkshire, where he married and had a son, whose surname was written ‘Ormston’. Robert (b.1767) son of Robert and Jean Buckham, he was born in Wilton.
Ormiston Parish. He lived at Mount Hooly, near Abbotsford and had children baptised in Minto and Jedburgh parishes. In 1793 he married Isabella Bell from Ancrum. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); Jean (b.1796); Robert (b.1807); Thomas (b.1814); and Hugh (b.1814). At the age of about 50 he moved with his family to America, settling in the ‘Scotch Settlement’ in St. Lawrence County, New York. Robert (1769–bef. 1841) eldest son of Adam and Esther Douglas. He was tenant farmer at Drinkstone, probably taking over from his father. In 1817 he was part of a law-suit brought by John Allan over a bill that his father had been caution for in 1802. In 1819 he married Helen Hall in Wilton Parish. They had 4 sons: William (b.1818), a warehouseman; Adam (b.1820–65); Robert (b.1821); and Thomas (b.1823). In 1841 his widow was living at Dowemount along with their 4 sons and in 1851 on Wilton Place with Adam and Thomas.

Robert (1803–91) born in Wilton Parish, son of James and Janet Reid. He was a mason at Bedrule Manse Cottage in 1841. He had moved to Edinburgh by 1851 and later became a builder in Dalkeith. He married Janet Forsythe from Coldingham, and their children were: Ebenezer Forsyth (1828–1926); Margaret (1830–1911); James (b.1832); unnamed child (b.c.1834); Robert (1837–1909); Elizabeth (b.1841–58); and Andrew (1850–1911). His children were born in Coldingham, Wilton, Bedrule and Hobkirk.

Robert (1815–99) 2nd son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. He was probably born in South dean. He became a hedger in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Billerwell Lodge. His married Elspeth or Euphemia Wood (1823–90). Their children included: Ann (1843–1924), who married William Wylie; John (1845–1911), who died at Hawick; George (1847–1910), who moved to Rothbury, Northumberland; James (1849–98); Elizabeth (b.1851), who married Andrew Wed dell; William Andrew (b.1853), who died young; Janet Wood or Jessie (1855–1933); Thomas Shiel (1858–1931), who married Janet Weatherston and moved to Coldstream; Robert (1860–84), who married Betty H. Davidson and Isabella Dal gleish; and Helen Wood (1864–1934), who died in Hawick. Robert (b.1818/9) coal clerk at Under Damside in 1841. He was living with his wife Margaret (who was from Lilliesleaf), daughter Ann J. and cousin David Scott (from Traquair). Robert (1832–74) 3rd son of George and Anne Lockie. He was born at Drinkstone, where his family were tenants. In 1861 he is listed as groom at graden in Linton Parish and was later a farm manager. In 1860 he married Margaret Wood (1834–1903) and they had 4 sons: George (1861–1938), who emigrated to Vancouver; William (1863–1904), who married Margaret Pringle; Adam (b.1865), who worked for the South African Post Office in Transvaal; and John (1866–1948), who married Marion Laing Frazer and worked for the Buc cleuch Estates. Samuel (b.1731) youngest son of James and Barbara Scott, he was born in Wilton Parish. Along with his brothers Robert and John, he moved to Yorkshire. In 1755 at Great Ayton he married Elizabeth Hoof. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters. The family name became spelled Ormston. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of James ‘the Black Laird’, with his mother probably being a Scott. His father was his tutor in 1564 when he was sued by the former tenants in Ancrum Mill. In 1603 he and his wife had a charter of the Templelands of Grahamslaw. He was still alive in 1628 and living then at Grahamslaw in Eckfor Parish. He married Grizel, daughter of John Rutherford, ‘Cock o Hunthill’, and secondly married Janet Turnbull. His children included: William, who mortgaged the Templelands and had at least 4 sons; Andrew, who is recorded in Jedburgh in the mid-17th century, with 4 sons; George, who married Janet Tennant and was ancestor of the tenants at Boonraw; and Robert, who was apprenticed in Edinburgh in 1628. Walter (1752–1818) son of James and Jean Dunlop. He farmed in Wilton Parish. He was listed as farmer at Boonraw in 1797, along with Robert, and also Walter Scott. He married Betty Irvine (or Irwin) in Wilton Parish in 1776. Their children included: James (b.1778) and William (b.1779), who emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (b.1783/4) 4th son (and 2nd surviving) of Archibald, gardener in Wilton and then Melrose, his mother being Betty Scott from Goldielands. In about 1804 he founded the firm of Ormiston and Renwick, seedsmen in Melrose. In 1814 he married Agnes Brown, who died in 1846. They had 3 sons and a daughter, with the eldest son, Archibald (b.1815) carrying on the seed business. A grandson, Charles Walter, died in Melrose, bequeathing money to found the Ormiston Institute and a public park. William (13th C.) younger son of William of Hownam and Llandes and brother of John of Landlees. He was great-grandson of the first Orm, after whom Ormiston on Kale Water was named. In about 1240 he witnessed a gift of the Church of Dalmeny from Roger de Moubray.
to Jedburgh Abbey and another undated charter for the same Roger de Moubray. He served as a juror in 1245. He was probably under the command of Patrick, 5th Earl of Dunbar, and was listed under his name in the pledge made around 1244. He was probably succeeded by Alan. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Makerstoun in 1502. Along with Thomas McDougall, in the same place, he was absent from 2 indictments given at Jedburgh, although the crimes are not recorded. William (16th C.) 2nd son of Robert of that Ilk and Elizabeth Rutherford. He was the first of the Ormistons of Westhouses near Melrose, and the Gattoside branch of the family. He was brother of Robert of Old Melrose and uncle of James of that Ilk, ‘Black Ormiston’. He appears in many records from 1539 and is sometimes referred to as ‘William with the heid’. He was implicated in the machinations following the murder of Darnley and banishment of the Earl of Bothwell, but was ultimately pardoned. William Douglas of Bonjedward was security for him in 1569. He married Katherine Nesbit and their sons Robert and James had to be legitimised because of the parents were related. William (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf. He paid tax on £104 for his part of Cringles. William (1779–1864) son of Walter and Betty Irwin and great-grandson of Robert. His elder brother James farmed at Boonraw. He married Jane Graham in 1801 and emigrated to America a year later, settling near Bovina, Delaware County, New York. He had 2 sons and 5 daughters. William (b.1807) 3rd son of James and Janet Reid. He may have been born in Southdean Parish. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1835, being then at Lawrie’s Den, and gardener at Hawick in 1840. In the 1841 census he was at Harwood as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was listed as a gardener at West Nisbet farm in Crailing Parish. He married Jessie Burton. Their children included: John (b.1834); Walter (b.c.1836); Elizabeth (b.c.1838); Helen (b.c.1840); George Henry (b.1842); Isabella (b.1843); James (b.1845); Mary; and Jessie. His children were born in Wilton, Hawick, Hobbirkirk, Southdean, Ancrum and Crailing Parishes. William (1818–64) eldest son of Robert, farmer at Drinkstone, and Helen Hall. He worked as a warehouseman. He married Jane Watson (from Annan), and they appear to have had no children. They are listed and on Walter’s Wynd in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861 (formerly written ‘Ormeston’, ‘Ormistoun’, ‘Ormistone’, ‘Ormistoun’, ‘Ormistoun’, ‘Ormstone’, and variants).

Ormiston Lochend see Lochend

Ormiston Lodge (or-mee-stin-loj) n. small building located at the crossroads just to the south of Ormiston House. Nichol Todd was there in the early 1900s.

Ormiston Mains (or-mee-stin-mainz) n. former name for a farm to the east of Ormiston, on the old Hawick to Newcastle road, now called Sunnyside. John Ormiston was there in 1684. John Ferguson was there in at least 1779–88. The farmer there in 1797 was Robert Murray (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Ormstonmains’ in 1797).

Ormiston Parkheid (or-mee-stin-pawrk-heed) n. former farm a little to the north-west of the main Ormiston farm. Francis Aitkin was there in 1779. There were Turnbulls there in the 1850s and Walter Scott was farmer in 1861. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and still appears on modern maps.

orpie-leaf (orp-pee-leaf) n., arch. orpine, live-forever, a flowering plant of the genus Sedum, having fleshy leaves and often growing on old walls (also wurpie).

orpit (orp-pee, -pi’) pp., poet. discontented, peevish – ‘What ails the orpit doyetr stycke’, The kerlyn loudly said’ [JTe].

Orr (or, or) n. Dr. James (1844–1913) born in Glasgow, son of engineer Robert and Montgomery Hunter. He became an apprentice bookbinder before training for the ministry, earning an M.A. from Glasgow University in 1870 and a B.D. in 1872. He was a probationer in Irvine before becoming minister of East Bank Church in 1874. Known as a Liberal, he campaigned for reducing liquor licences. In 1879 he helped draft the United Presbyterian declaration statement against total endorsement of Calvanism. He obtained a Doctorate of Divinity (by examination) from Glasgow in 1885. He was particularly outspoken in opposition to the Common Riding in the 1880s and 1890s. He was Chairman of Hawick School Board. In 1891 he was then elected Chair of Church History in the United Presbyterian College, Edinburgh and later Chair of Systematic Theology and Apologetics in the United Free College, Glasgow. He lectured in America in 1895 and 1897. He was a joint convener of the United Presbyterian union (with the Free Church) committee in 1896. In 1874 he married Hannah Fraser, daughter of James Gibb. He published many theological works, including ‘The Christian View of God and the World’ (1893), ‘The Ritschlian Theology... and Evangelical Faith’ (1897), ‘Neglected Factors in the Study of the Early Progress of Christianity’ (1889), ‘The Progress of Dogma’ (1901), ‘The Problem of the Old Testament’ (1905) and ‘Revelation and Inspiration’ (1910). In his last years he was general editor of the ‘International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia’ (1915). He was a regular contributor to the London Quarterly Review and other magazines, and helped edit several magazines of the United Church. He died in Glasgow and is buried in Cathcart cemetery there.

James (19th C.) became postmaster in Hawick in 1879. He married Euphemia Hamilton. His adopted daughter Ethel married Robert Richardson. Thomas (b.1827/8) from Airdrie, he was farmer at West Riddell. He was there in 1861, farming 230 acres and employing 2 people. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Mary.

Orrock (o-ruk, o-reek) n. Rev. Alexander (1652–1711) first minister of Hawick Parish after the Revolution of 1688, serving from 1691 until his death. He was the son of Alexander of Fife, and Elizabeth, sister of Sir John Wemyss of Bogie. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1668. How he spent the next 19 years is unknown, but he was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1687. In 1688, while he was minister in Dundee, he was removed for some statements (perhaps misinterpreted) he had made about the King, and imprisoned for a while. During that time he was known as a staunch opponent of Episcopacy, and along with his friend Alexander Hamilton of Kinkel, was imprisoned on more than one occasion. He was called to St. Andrews after the Revolution, in 1690, but rejected by the Synod there and so came to Hawick the following year. He was a member of the Assembly in 1692. In 1694 he was also called to Peebles, but after much discussion this was overruled by the Assembly. He also declined calls to Kelso (in 1701/2) and Muthill. In 1705, along with 2 local colleagues (Robert Cunningham of Wilton and Robert Bell of Cavers), he protested Acts passed by certain Synods, but not being a member of the Assembly they were removed, causing a major scene, with a reconciliation only affected after the King’s advisors intervened. He is said to have been both rigid in discipline and extensive in charity. An example of his strict discipline occurred when he made the Town Magistrates wait until they had asked pardon of the Kirk Session on their uncovered knees, for some preceived offence against decency. He called a meeting of the Parish heritors in 1710 to stent themselves to pay the salary of the schoolmaster, this being essentially the founding of the Grammar school. The ‘Orrock Bequest’ was signed by him shortly before his death in 1711. He left 9,000 merks for the school (paying the salary for the schoolmaster and to teach poor children for free), as well as 1600 merks for the needy poor, and his extensive library for the parishioners. Some of the volumes from this library were deposited with the National Library of Scotland in 1980. From his funds, the Orrock Bursary was competed for by local schoolchildren every 3 years until well into the 20th century. As a result of this benevolence the area around the Grammar School was named after him. He died unmarried. A memorial tablet was erected outside the church after his death, with a marble copy in the vestibule of the Old Parish Church (which incorrectly says he was a minister for 22 years and gives the date of his death 8 days late); it bears the likeness of his head, which is a very rare example of statuary from this period of Hawick’s history. The heritors of the Parish gave money for his tombstone to be replaced in 1766. He also gave 4 inscribed silver communion cups to the Church in the 1790s and a silver baptismal basin made from melting his silver spoons after his death, all of which are inscribed ‘Ecclesiæ Havicensi’ and the relevant date. In addition, a commemorative tablet was placed at the High School in 1932 by the Callants’ Club. His only published work is ‘Address to the General Assembly, 1705, against the Tyrannical Imposition of the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale’. Hector Heatley (d.1862) 2nd son of Edinburgh surgeon-dentist James, he trained as an architect. He designed the Leyden Monument, which was built in Denholm in 1861. His only other known structures are railway stations at Lartington, Appleby East and Kirkby East. He married Janet Reid and they had 1 son and 1 daughter. He died at the age of 31, before being able to establish himself. Henry (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick, presumably a relative of Rev. Alexander, perhaps his nephew (since he was said to have died unmarried). He was recorded in 1694 owing 8 pounds for his Burgess fee. He witnessed baptisms for William Swan and John Aitkin in 1698, for smith James Scott, for weaver John Jolly, for Walter Wilson, younger in Castlehill, for tailor Alexander Hislop, for Walter Riddel in Allanhaugh Mill and for Walter Purdom in 1700, for James Laidlaw in Branholme Town.
in 1702 (along with tailor Alexander Hislop), for Merchant Walter Weens in 1704, for shoemaker George Oliver, carrier Robert Scott (in Branxholme), tailor James Cowan in 1705, for gardener James Dunn in 1707, for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708, for tailor Walter Riddell in 1709, for herd John Turnbull in 1710, for Thomas Anderson in Branxholme Town and for carrier Walter Deans in 1713, for shoemaker Walter Scott in 1714, for gardener Walter Paterson in 1715 and for several people in 1726. He seems to have served as a kind of general-purpose baptismal witness for baptisms. He was recorded as a tailor in 1702 and 1709. He was ‘servitor to our late minister’ recorded in the Kirk Session records of 1711. He was also Treasurer for Hawick Parish Session in the 1720s and was made an elder of the Kirk in 1723. In 1725 he witnessed baptisms for maltman John Moss and for Thomas Wilkie. In 1727 he was recorded as possessor of the weigh-house, which was on the ground floor of the Tolbooth. He married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1706 and their children included Henry (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailies Walter Elliot and Robert Ruecastle. Janet nee Ogilvie (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick, mentioned in a court case of 1815, when Henry Stockwell (servant to a Hawick butcher) was found not guilty of assaulting her ‘with intent to ravish’. Her name is given as ‘Janet Ogilvie, or Orrock’. She was probably daughter of George Ogilvie and Margaret Learmond, born in Hawick in 1780. She married Adam and had a daughter Jean in Kelso in 1811 (also sometimes spelled ‘Orrok’).

_Orrock Kirk Mutual Improvement Society_ (o-ruk-kirk-mew-choo-ul-im-proov-min-su-sIi-ee)

_n. former organisation associated with Orrock Church, operating around 1900._

*Orrock Kirk*_ (o-ruk-kirk, o-reek-kirk)

_n. church built in Orrock Place in 1874 as the new premises for the ‘Green Kirk’ First Secession Church congregation. It was built right down to the riverside, which is unusual in Hawick. The masons were the local firm of George Tait. The site had formerly held a public wash-house. The church united with St. Mary’s in 1951. The building became renamed ‘Orrock Halls’ after the church closed, and continued to be used for church functions. However, from around 1990 it has been used as a knitwear factory showroom and adjacent tea-room._

_n. name adopted for Orrock Church after it closed in 1951. It became associated with St. Mary’s Church. It was used for church events (including discos) long after the church itself closed. It was partly converted for business use by Murray Brothers in 1990, and has also housed a cafe at basement level. It is a grade C listed building._

_n. house on the left of Stirches Road, formerly a church manse??._

*Orrock Kirk*_ (o-reek-kirk)

_n. street between the Sandbed and the Albert Bridge, known by that name since the end of the 17th century, after Rev. Alexander Orrock. It was the site of the old Grammar School, a carpet factory and later the Orrock Church. The street is essentially the western part of the Sandbed and was named around 1840. Originally the name was used for the western side, which was separated from the other side of the Sandbed by the central block of houses (later removed). The name ‘Teviot Brig Road’ was also used. This general area was a detached portion of Wilton Parish until moved by the Boundary Commission in 1890. A gap site of Wilton. The Bequest was administered by appointed trustees for the next century and a half. They contributed to the rebuilding of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1763. The bequest was transferred to the School Board and turned into a bursary fund in 1886. It was then transferred to the County in 1908, but still used for Hawick High School bursaries. A separate part of the bequest was the use of his library of ancient theological books for each subsequent minister; this collection remained in a cupboard in the vestry until transferred to the National Library of Scotland in 1980._

Orrock Place Kirk

was built up by the council in 1960 between the Ewe and Lamb and the old Grammar School.

Orrock Place Kirk (o-ruk-plis-kirk) n. another name for Orrock Kirk.

Orrock o’t (or-thann) conj., arch. otherwise, else – ‘Pit eer penny i eer breek poothch, or than ee’ll loss’t’ [ECS], adv. until then, ere then – ‘It’s a lang teime or than’ [ECS] (also ‘or then’, ‘or thence’, ‘or thance’).

Osborne (oz-born) n. Rev. James (d.1711) educated at Glasgow University, he is sometimes said to have been an ousted minister of Cavers Parish who held secret sermons during the Covenanting days. He was actually a private chaplain to the Douglas family, working as tutor to the children of Sir William Douglas. He was said to have given conventicles locally in the 1670s. Douglas was summoned in 1676 to answer the charge of illegally having a chaplain without a licence from the Bishop, and both men were ‘put to the horn as outlaws’. He survived until the Revolution and was ordained as minister at Kilmarnock in 1688. In 1697 he was appointed professor of Divinity at Marischal College. It was said afterwards that he returned to Cavers several times to preach. His children included: William, also a minister; James; and Alexander.

Osburn (oz-burn) n. John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. In 1755 he married Isabel Turnbull. Their children included: John (b.1757); Elizabeth (b.1759); Christian (b.1760); Martha (b.1762); Elizabeth (again, b.1764); Joanna (b.1766); Martha (again, b.1771); and John (again, b.1772). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole conregation, in 1764 were Bailies Turnbull ‘older and younger’, in 1766 were Bailie Turnbull Senior and Bailie Turnbull Junior, in 1771 were Bailie Turnbull of [probably Fenwick] and another Bailie and in 1772 were Bailie Turnbull of Fenwick and James Turnbull. In 1762 and 1766 he himself witnessed baptisms for wright Walter Scott (this is presumably a variant of Osborne).

Osna (oz-na) n. poetic name for the Oxnam Witter – ‘Sweet Osn’a stream, by thin-lev’d birch o’erlung, No more should roll her modest waves unsung’ [JL].

Ossian (o-she-in) n. legendary bard who lived in either Scotland or Ireland around the 3rd century, supposedly blind and the son of Fingal ‘…Who sing the strains That Ossian sung, Your courage ne’er was tame, You will fight for Scotland’s glory, you will die to shield her fame’ [JoHa], – ‘Give me the hills where Ossian lies And Cola’s Minsrel sang’ [HSR].

Ostler (oz-lur) n., arch. an innkeeper – ‘Summoned Isobel Cranston, the ostler, for selling aill after sunset …’ [Ash1642].

Oswald (oz-wald) n. (604–642) King of Bernicia from about 635, when he defeated Cadwalla, until he was killed at the battle of Maserfrith. He was son of Æthelfrith of Bernicia and Acha of Deira and would have been Hawick’s King. He was the first Bernician ruler to accept Christianity and is also known as ‘St. Oswald’. The Hawick area probably made the main conversion to Christianity during his reign. St. Cuthbert’s Church contains a statue of the Saint holding the head of Oswald in his left hand. His head is supposed to have been buried along with St. Cuthbert at Lindisfarne for safety, and thereafter it became a symbol of the Saint.

Oswulf (oz-wulf) n. (12th C.) son of Uchtred, he was listed as a witness to the grant of King David to Melrose Abbey in about 1145. He granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the reign of King Malcolm. This was probably sometime between 1153 and 1165. The grant was with the consent of his son, also Uchtred, and also Uchtred’s son Uchtred, with a confirmation in the period 1165–68. It is unclear to what family these men belonged or why they previously held these Teviothead lands; however, the family names are similar to relatives of Gospatric, Earl of Northumbria and also of Dunbar: a later Gospatrick also witnessed the confirming charter in about 1166. He was mentioned in a charter of the 1360s confirming Ringwoodfield to Melrose Abbey, with his name there being ‘Osuilo de Rengwude’.

O’t (o’t, o’t) contr. of it – ‘ee made a guid job o’t’, ‘There was an auld wife had a wee pickle
o that ilk adj. relating to a particular family, especially a landed family that took its name from the original estate (cf. ilk).

others pron., pl., arch. each other, one another (often paired with ‘aither’) – ‘...Robert Deans, late bailie, and Robert Scott ...being accused ...for bluding aither of them uthers ...’ [BR1640] (also written ‘uthers’; cf. ither and other).

otherways adv., arch. otherwise – ‘...and thsi much ye may shew hor Grace from me, if ye finde a sesonable opportunitie of doing it, otherways lett it alone’ [SB1670].

o’ti contr. onto – ‘pit that o’ti the table, wull ee?’, ‘hei got o’ti his horse again’ (cf. onti).

o’t’s contr. of it is – ‘...A pound to a penny ye canna ootdraw’t, Though the soon o’t’s in Day, E, an’ L’ [JoHa].

otter (o’-ur) n., arch. the barb of a fish-hook.

Otterburn n. village in Redesdale, where the Otter Burn meets the River Rede, site of the 1388 Battle of Otterburn, the details of which were recorded in a 14th century Latin poem and later romanticised in a ballad. A group of Scots (specifically James Douglas, the Earl of Moray and the Earl of Buchan) met at Southdean Kirk to plan an unofficial invasion of England. They taunted Percy at Newcastle, taking his standard, but on the way back were surprised by the English force at Otterburn. They fought in the moonlight, the Scots winning, Douglas being mortally wounded. But because he hid his condition from his men it is said that ‘a dead man won the field’. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, were killed on both sides. The Scots also captured Henry Percy (‘Hotspur’) and Sir Ralph Percy. The Scots version is told in ‘the Ballad of Otterburn’ (sometimes called ‘The Lammes tide’) and the English version in ‘Chevy Chase’. The ruins of Southdean Church were dedicated as a memorial to the Battle in 1910. The battle site itself is marked by a monument in a small wooded area off the main road. Some relics, said to be from the battle, were long preserved at Cavers House. Tradition says that the Douglas banner was carried by a Stavert – ‘The deed was done at the Otterbourne About the breaking of the day; Earl Douglas was buried at the braken bush, And the Percy led captive away’ [T], ‘In vain! – his standard’s sink! – his squadrions yield; – His bowmen fly: – a dead man gains the field’ [JL].

Otterhole Sike n. stream in the upper Borthwick valley, to the north-east of Craik village. It flows southwards to join the Dirthope Burn, which then flows into the Borthwick Water. On the west side are the remains of an ancient earthwork, about 64 m by 43 m, formed by an earthen bank with an outer ditch. It has been mutilated by forestry trenches.

otterhound n. otterhound, a large hound with a shaggy coat, bred for otter hunting in the early 19th century. The practice was justified to protect fishing, and involved men following the hounds on foot and horseback. The most famous local proponent of the sport was Hawick’s Dr. John Grant, who lived at the top of Walter’s Wynd. The Border Magazine of 1904 describes a particular hunt which he led in 1863, in which his dogs tracked an otter from Burnfoot down the Teviot as far as Spittal-on-Rule, where it was killed. The practice achieved its height of popularity in the early 20th century, and was declared illegal in the 1970s, when otters became protected.

ought (ought) pp., poet. ought, should – ‘Oucht else they wanna tolerate, Nae maitter if it’s richt or wrang . . .’ [FL], ‘. . .And ye micht coont human affection cheap, But ye ought to ken there’s a hairst to reap’ [WL] (cf. the more common ocht).

ouk (ook) n., poet. week – ‘But since that time, he’s never anes been here, An’ it’s sax ouks:– nae wonder than I fear’ [CPM], ‘. . .That ere I tak’ the ‘Leister’ prices A single ouk, I’ll gang an’ girn, an’ mak’ grimaces, Wi’ Jamie Cook’ [WiD].

Outerside (ow-, oo-tur-sid) n. farmstead in the Borthwick valley, roughly opposite Phillhope, and reached by a track on the right-hand side of the road after Hosocote. These may be the lands of ‘Ughtredshaghe’ which were granted by Margaret, mother of Henry Lovel, to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation around 1140 (as confirmed in about 1170). It was probably the ‘Ochturhyud’ recorded as granted to Marion Comyn, widow of John de Langlands in 1363. The lands of ‘Uchterseatmylne’ are listed among those granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400; this suggests that there was once a mill there. These were probably the lands of ‘Jacobo de Wchtersyde’ who witnessed a sasine at Milsington in 1453. The lands were owned by Walter Scott of Synton in the early 16th century and Sir Walter of Howapasley in the later 16th century. A bond of 1569, signed in Hawick, lists all of the tenants there, namely ‘Thomas Broun, Jokke Howatsone, Hobbe Broun, Dand Huntar, Alexander Armeastrong, Will Pairman, Cristie Pairman, Hob Jaksoun, Watt Litill, Jok Hall, Watt Runseman, Jak Reid, Jokke Scot, Eling Dun, Will Greif, Thome Greif, Johe Gledstanis, George Stevinsone, Pait Stevinsone, Pait Reid, Johnne Glendonyng, Alexander Mylne, Will Turnbull’. Walter Scott of Synton inherited the lands from his father Walter Scott of Synton in 1610. ‘Rowie’ Scott ‘in Vttersyde’ is recorded in 1616. Liferent was granted to Margaret Maxwell when she married William Elliot, younger of Falnash, in 1635. Margaret Haswell (perhaps the same Margaret), liferenter there, was one of the main landowners in Wilton Parish in 1643, her lands being valued at £360. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Nichol, Janet Clerk, Francis Nichol, William Pott, Margaret Nichol, Margaret ‘Randie’, Rebecca Hislop, John Renwick, Walter Scott, Bessie Hislop, William Scott, Margaret Hislop, Mungo Dalgleish and Isabel Armstrong. Gavin Elliot of Outersiderig paid land tax in Wilton Parish on lands valued at £360. Gideon Scott of Outerside witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. In 1689 Gideon of Outerside gained other lands, and became known thereafter as Gideon of Falnash. 10 separate households were listed there in 1694. It was part of Wilton Parish before Roberton was formed in 1689/90. The lands were leased by James Scott of Shielswood in 1692. In 1701 the Laird’s seats in Roberton Kirk are recorded being the 3 feet to the east of the little door. James Dalgleish was recorded there in 1710, William Armstrong and Robert Scott in 1711, Robert Nichol in 1712, Thomas Helm in 1713, John Murray in 1715–17, James Grieve in 1718, John Scott and James Scott in 1720 and Adam Dalgleish in 1725–27. Adam Pott (probably the same as Adam of Hosocote) was recorded as Laird there among Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. James Nichol was there in 1762–65 and James Dalgleish in 1763–66. It belonged to George Stavert (incorrectly transcribed ‘Stewart’ in one record) in the valuation of Robertson Parish of 1788, when it is listed as ‘Outerside, or Outersiderig, formerly in Wilton’, with a value of £360. John Henderson was living there in 1788 and James Thomson in 1793. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, ‘Outerside, or Outerside-rig’ had the same value and was owned by Adam Stavert of Hosocate. Farm labourer Alexander Armstrong and his family were there in 1841. By about 1874 it was listed as owned by Archibald Stavert. Outerside Rig is the hill above, reaching 264 m and containing a fort and cairn (formerly spelled ‘Utterside’ etc., it is probably ‘Ughtredshaghe’ or ‘Ughtredesxaghe’ in c.1140 and 1170, ‘Ochturhyud’ in 1363, ‘Uchterseatmylne’ in c.1400, ‘Wchtersyde’ in 1453, ‘Vttersyde’ in 1616, ‘outersyde rige’ in 1678, ‘Uttersyde’ in 1688, ‘Outerside’ in 1692 and 1694, ‘outerside’ in 1710, ‘utterside’ in 1712, ‘Outersiderige’ in 1718, ‘Outersyd’ in 1733, ‘Outterside’ in 1761 and ‘Utterside’ in 1762 and 1788; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Utersyde’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Outersyde’: based on the earliest spellings the origin seems likely to be ‘Uchtred’s haugh’.

Outerside (oo-tur-sid) n. James (15th C.) witness in 1453 to a sasine exchanging the lands of Milsington with those of Wester Heap, between the Langlands and Scott families. He is recorded as ‘Jacobo de Wchtersyde’, and it seems likely his lands were those of Outerside, just up the Borthwick from Milsington.

Outerside Rig (ow-tur-sid-rig) n. elongated hill above Outerside, reaching a height of 264m and containing a fort. The name was also formerly used for the farm at Outerside. The hill contains the remains of a hill-fort at the east of the ridge, possibly dating from the early Iron Age. Much obliterated by cultivation, it consists of inner and outer ramparts and a ditch. In the inside may be signs of a hut circle, while just outside is a possible enclosure (spelled ‘Uttersydriigg’ and variants in early documents; it is ‘Outersidrige’ in 1528/9, ‘Outarsyderige’ in 1610, ‘Utersiderigg’ in 1643 and ‘Outtersiderige’ in 1718).

Outersidrige (oo-tur-sid-ryg) n. former steading high above Outerside. On Ainslie’s 1773 map it is marked on the south side of the Hoscote Burn near Girnwood Linn. David Scott was there in 1737. Thomas Glendinning was there in 1763–66, James Glendinning in 1775, Thomas Broad in 1781 and Thomas Glendinning in 1797 (it is ‘Utterside shiel’ in 1763 and ‘Uttersidrige’ in 1775, 1780 and 1797).

the Outlaw Murray (tho-ow-law-mu-ri, -oo-) n. fanciful story about a leader of the Murays in Ettrick Forest, popularised in the ballad of the same name, and having some basis in historical fact. Murray refused to pay homage to the King, but eventually gave in after being appointed Sheriff of Ettrick Forest. This probably referred to John Murray of Fulahill (nephew of the Rector of Hawick), in the latter part of the 15th century.

ouwn (own) v., arch. to own, confess, admit – ‘...for A’ll ouwn A was dry again ... ’[ECS] (cf. own).

oux (owks) n., poet. an ox – ‘Thus thay changet thair glorie intil the lykeniss o’ ane oux that eets gers’[HSR].

Ovens (o-vinz) n. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘James Owen in Birk hill’ in 1684 when, along with many others, he was declared a rebel for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He may be an ancestor of the Hawick blacksmith. James (b.1818) from Selkirk, son of Thomas and Isabella Murdock. He was a blacksmith in Hawick in the 1800s, with an appropriate name. He lived at the Round Close in 1841, the Backdamgate in 1851 and 3 Silver Street in 1861. In 1840 he married Helen Pow, a daughter of William, blacksmith at Borthaugh Woodfoot. Their children included: Mary (b.c.1841); Elizabeth (b.c.1844); Helen (b.c.1847); John (b.1855), also a blacksmith; William Pow (b.1858) and James (b.1861). He was an elder with the Relief Kirk. John (b.1855) son of James and Helen Pow. He was a blacksmith in Hawick, like his father. He was at 5 Howegate in 1881, 3 Buccleuch Street in 1891 and 11 Sandbed in 1901. He married Helen Wright, from Lockerbie, and they had a daughter Jane A. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

Ovenshank (o-vin-shawngk) n. small farm in Liddesdale, just north of the Liddel, to the west of the site of Liddel Castle. It is probably the place recorded as ‘Vnsthank’ in the 1541 rental roll, listed between ‘Coklaik’ and ‘Powis’; it was vacant at that time. Robert Nichol was there in 1821. James Wilson lived there in 1841, with his son Andrew there in 1861 and there were also 3 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is marked on Stobie’s c.1770 map; it has been suggested that the name has a similar origin to ‘Unthank’).

Overchester (ö-vur-ches-tur) n. lands that were tenanted by Turnbulls in 1516 when several members of that family were identified as being there when they had remission for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. It appears that Mark Turnbull was the main tenant, along with his brother Archibald, and son Mark younger, as well as Richard, David, William, John, Andrew, Andrew’s son Thomas, and Ninian. It is unclear where this place was, perhaps part of Chesters in Southdean.

overgave (ö-vur-gäv) pp., arch. gave up, relinquished – ‘Compeared the haill Council, and voluntarily of their awin free will renuncit and overgave their quarterings of the soldiers to the town’s use ... ’[BR1644].

Overhaa (ō-vur-haw) n. Overhall, farm just behind Wilton Dean. The name dates back to at least the 16th century. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Wilton-burn) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in 'liferent' to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1601 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colnshie. The farm was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. There were 10 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Scott, William Scott, Margaret Turnbull, Marion Martin, Margaret Langlands, Isobel Swan, Janet Scott, Walter Scott, Adam Scott and Marion Henderson. James and Adam Scott each leased half the farm in 1690 and 1692 and were recorded as householders there in around 1694. In at least the period 1694–98 the farm was leased half by Walter Scott, 'Chief', and half by Adam Scott. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; it extended to 120 acres and was bounded by Langlands, the River Teviot, Borthaugh and Brieryhill. The farmhouse is shown near the foot of the Wilton Burn on the western side. William Scott was a servant there in 1723. Adam Easton was there in 1723–25, Robert Ballantyne in 1724 and John Clerk in 1752. Andrew and Thomas Easton were farmers there in 1797, with 2 work horses each. Joiner Adam Riddell lived there around 1840. Adam Easton was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 62 acres. A doll’s house, originating here in about 1880, is in the Museum. A hill there was used as a track for motor-cycle events in the first half of the 20th century. The Overhaa house, originating here in around 1880, is in the Museum. A hill there was used as a track for motor-cycle events in the first half of the 20th century (also referred to as ‘Overhaa’; it is written ‘Vuerhall’ in 1569, ‘Ovirhall’ in 1586 and ‘Over hahall’ in 1690). It is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Ovirhall’ and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘O. Hall’.

Overhaa Crescent (ō-vur-haw- kre-sin’) n. cul-de-sac in Wilton Dean, built in 1971 and named after the nearby farm.

Overhaa Road (ō-vur-haw- rōd) n. main road west through Wilton Dean, named after the nearby farm. New housing was built there in 1970. The wooded hill above this road contains an oval earthwork, about 90 m by 50 m, consisting of a single rampart. Its situation does not appear very defensive, so it has not been classified as a fort. The interior and parts of the rampart have been destroyed by quarrying. There are also remains of a probable homestead on a shelf below the summit. This measures 33 m by 27 m, with no internal features and an entrance in the northeast.

the Overseas Night (thu-ō-vur-seez-ni) n. properly called the Civic Reception for Returned Teries, an evening of entertainment for exiled Teries, taking place in the Town Hall on the Wednesday of Common Riding week. It was inaugurated in 1936. It is an event reserved for distant visitors and their guests. The Cornet, Cornet’s Lass, Acting Mother and Acting Father greet the visitors and the Honorary Provost gives a speech summarising the highlights of the year for the Town. There then follows a schedule of songs and recitations. The names of the ‘Exiles’ are read and each of them stand to be recognised. The Maids of Honour serve refreshments and the evening ends with ‘Teribus’ and ‘Cornet’s Up’ (also sometimes called ‘the Exile’s Night’).

Over Tofts (ō-vur-tofts) n. name used for Upper Tofts in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Overton (ō-vur-tiin) n. late 16th century ruined tower near Camptown, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh, burnt by Hertford’s men in 1545. There were Elliots there in the 18th century. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in the late 18th century. The farm of ‘Overton Bush’ is recorded since at least the late 18th century and is still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps (the origin of the name is probably simply ‘the upper farm’ in Old English and first occurs in the late 16th century).

Ovid (ō-vid) n. Adam (11th/12th C.) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow. He was brother of Laurence of Thornton, who was Archdeacon of St. Andrews, and his name occurs as a witness in St.
Andrews documents from about 1203. His surname may be derived from his taste in reading. He was ‘Master’, meaning he held a Masters degree. He was recorded as the parson of Hob Kirk in 1220. His name is also given as ‘Ada Onidius’.

O’w (ow) contr. of us – ‘the baith o’w’, ‘that’ll be the end o’w’ (note sometimes pronounced as the two syllable u-oo or o-oo, but other times shortened to ow).

Owcht (owcht) pres. part., arch. owns – ‘Whae’s owcht this’[GW] (cf. awe, aucht and ocht).

Owen (ō-in) n. James (17th C.) resident of Birkhill in Southdean. He is listed in 1684 among many Covenanter fugitives.

Ower (ow-ur) prep. over – ‘juist gaun over the brig an turn left’, ‘pass eet over here’, ‘A’m gaun over ti Selkirk’, ‘And they flew oure sea, and the few oure land, Oure mountain, holt, and town . . . .’[JTe], ‘The case is common a’ the world owre . . . .’[JoHa], ‘Rowlin owre an owre’[ECS], ‘For lo, the wuntir is bye, the rains ar owre’[HSR], ‘Ower mountains, ower muirland, ower the baith o’w’, ‘that’ll be owre the end o’w’[HSR], ‘Thou wad tak the owrance o’ aa, And fin’ nae tawse for their pains’[WL] (also written ‘owrance’).

Ower Ancrum (ow-ur-awng-krum) n. Over Ancrum, name of the former settlement on the north side of the Ale Water. It is distinguished from Nether Ancrum, on the south side, which became the modern village of Ancrum. The ‘Ower’ part was burned around the time of the battle of Ancrum Moor, which took place nearby, and never really recovered (it is ‘Ower Ancrumber’ in 1548/9; it is ‘O: Ancrum’ on Pont’s map of c.1590 and is still recorded as ‘Upper Ancrum’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ower Bonchester (ow-ur-bon-ches-tur) n. Over Bonchester, former farm near Bonchester, also referred to as ‘Upper Bonchester’. In 1569 it was one of a set of lands acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1587 still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh when Alexander Lord Home inherited the superiority. In 1588 it is listed as being ‘with woods’. It is possible that it corresponds to the remains of the farmstead on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill, near the head of Rob’s Cleuch, some of the stones from which are built into nearby dykes (it is ‘over Bunchester’ in 1569 and ‘Over Bunchester’ in 1588).

Ower Boonraw (ow-ur-boon-raw) n. Over Boonraw, former name for a farmstead near the main Bonrow. It may correspond to the location of West Boonraw, which lies a little uphill from East Boonraw. Robert Storie was there in 1688.

Ower-by (ow-ur-by) adv., prep., arch. over the way, across to, towards, along – ‘Dauvit had dwalt i’ the Mid Raw And plied wi’ his cairrier cairt Jinglin’ raig’lar ilk a week Owre-bye the Copshaw airt’[DH].

owerhang (ow-ur-lawng) v., arch. to overhang – ‘As springs that gutter doon the hills, Atween overhangin’ fern and heather, To join their life wi’ other rills, And wimple on as yin thegit-her’ [JEDM] (also owerheng).

Ower Hallrule (ow-ur-haw-rool) n. Over Hallrule, former name for part of the farm of Hallrule, also called Outer Hallrule, in distinction to Inner Hallrule. It may also have been another name for Toon-o-Rule. In 1779 ‘Over-Hallrule’ was valued at £832 12s 5d. On the 1811 Land Tax Rolls ‘part of Town-o’-Rule, or Over or Outer Hallrule’ is described.

Ower Harwud (ow-ur-har-wud) n. Over Harwood, former name for lands at Harwood on Teviot. It is unclear if the name referred to the whole of the later estate of Harwood, or just part of it. It was among the lands exchanged in 1446 with Lanarkshire lands between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; one quarter of the lands were included in this swap, with the owner of the other 3 quarters being unknown. In 1462 it was given as part of security for a loan, along with Dryden and Commonside, by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan. The loan was fully paid by Robert Scott of ‘Dogehauch’ in 1477. It is listed among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Nether Harwood’ (it is ‘Overhawmid’ in 1446, ‘Vuer Harwed’ in 1462, ‘Vuer Herwod’ in 1508/9, ‘Vuir Harwod’ and ‘Uvire-Harwod’ in 1511, ‘Ovir Harwod’ and ‘Ouir Harwod’ in 1572, ‘Owir Harwoid’ in 1594 and just ‘Over Harwood’ in 1615).

Ower Hassendean (ow-ur-haw-sin-deen) n. Over Hassendean, former farm in Hassendean, also once called ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’. It is among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Robert Scott owned the lands in 1574. Adam Turnbull, ‘Reid Adie’ was tenant there in 1576, when there was a promise that he would abstain from theft. 6 acres of land here were inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers (see also Oor Lady Land; it is ‘Over-hessington’ in 1545, ‘Over Hassindane’ in 1574, ‘Ovir Hassindane’ in 1576 and transcribed ‘Overassenden’).

Overheard (ow-ur-herd) pp. overheard – ‘...forever owre-heard at their scandalous crack by Auld Dunbar ahint the hedge ...’ [DH].

Ower Soothfield (ow-ur-sooth-feild) n. Over Southfield, the upper farm at Southfield, lying further up Chester Knowe than Nether Southfield. It lay just beyond the old boundaries of the Common. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 157 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Nether Southfield and Newbigging. It has had a long ruined farmhouse, and is marked ‘site of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. This land was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch for a long time and was once part of the Barony of Whitchesters. Simon Scott was tenant there in 1581, and other residents there were ‘Watt Scott’ and ‘Syme Scott’. In 1627 it is described paying ‘in stok and teynd 15 bolls; estimat in stok to 8, in parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 3 lbs’. It was leased jointly to father and son called Robert Scott, with the other half to John Goodfellow in at least the period 1690–96. John Goodfellow and Robert Scott were there in 1694, with William Dalgleish listed there among ‘the poor’. Gilbert Elliot rented the farm in 1698. Robert Tudhope was shepherd there in 1709. John Goodfellow and his son William were tenants in about 1713, William Martin in 1720 and William Hislop and William Turnbull in 1725. It is probably the ‘Upper’ Southfield where James Douglas is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is ‘Oversouthfield’ in 1581, ‘Oversouthfield’ in 1690 and ‘over southfield’ in 1694).

the Paddlin Pool (thu-pawd-lin-pool) n. shallow pool for children’s play in the summer. In Hawick this referred to either the one where the former Bandstand was located in the centre of the park, in the late 1960s to early 1970s, or the one built at the southern end of the Spetch in the early 1970s, neither of which lasted very many years.

the Paddock (thu-pawd-duk) n. fenced area at the Moor where the horses are gathered and paraded before each race. There are existing paddock tickets dating back to at least 1877. In 1889 it was extended and had iron railings erected, and the offices for the Stewards and other officials was built in 1894. Turnstiles were rented in 1910 from Melrose R.F.C., and 4 new turnstiles purchased in 1911. A well was discovered there in 1915 and the Paddock was extended in 1923. The main buildings were gutted by fire in 1957 and renovated afterwards. For much of the 20th century there was a separate charge for gaining entry to the Paddock. Within the Paddock the Cornet displays the Flag from the Committee Room roof during his time at the Mair.

the Paddock Slack (thu-pawd-duk-slack) n. hill-pass on the B709 road linking the Yarrow and Quair valleys, reaching a height of 357 m (1,170 ft).

Paddy Barrat (paw-dee-baw-ri’) n. Hawick resident of the mid-1900s. This may have been labourer Patrick Barret (h.c.1799), who came to Hawick from Ireland and lived on the Back Row (in 1851) and on the Mill Path (in 1861) – ‘Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gang up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

the Pageant (thu-paw-jin’) n. Hawick Quater-Centenary Historical Pageant, held at the Volunteer Park on the evenings of Tuesday June 2nd and Wednesday June 3rd 1914. Provost Melrose was Chairman of the organising Committee, and J.E.D. Murray was Pageant-Master, writing and orchestrating much of the Pageant itself. Tom Ker, J.G. Winning and Mrs. Winning helped with some of the writing, and the music was provided by Adam Grant. The song ‘Invocation’ was written to close the ceremony, which also gave us ‘The Wail of Flodden’. The content consisted of 9 episodes and a final procession: Prelude; The Romans and the Druids; Visit of Sir William Wallace to Langlands; Old Hawick of 1513; The Wall of Flodden; Callants leave for Hornshole; Return from Hornshole; Hab o’ Hawick; and Mary Queen of Scots en route to Hermitage. The procession involved most of the historical characters and also the ‘Queen of the Borderland’.

Pagton Burn (pawg-tin-burn) n. stream that runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig Water between New Mill and Wudfit Brig. To the south of the stream is an enclosure, measuring about 40 m by 30 m, with an entrance on the north-east side, and the interior being heart-shaped. Its age and purpose are not known.

paide (pā-dul) n. a paddle, hoe, long-handled tool of various sorts – ‘The lad that howes the Lum-Back neeps Richt cheerily he plies his paide’ [DH], ‘Hardie came oot wi’ a shairny paide, Knocked the Cornet off his saidle’ [T], ‘...tied a piece of cord to a paide shank and gave chase’ [RM], v. to use a hoe or paddle – ‘...until a circle six feet in diameter was ‘paidled’ quite bare round the place where they lay’ [RB].

Painsioners o Buccleuch (pān-shi-nurz-ō-bu-kloo) n. list of ‘four-and-twenty gentlemen’ who were kept at the call of Scott of Buccleuch, according to Sir Walter Scott of Satchells, roughly. Each of these men received ‘rooms’ (i.e. small estates) for their service, some in earlier times, although the list probably relates to roughly the period 1580–1620. Some details may be incorrect, and some of the men are not otherwise recorded, but since they would have been known by Satchells’ father, then it is almost a first-hand account. The list is: Walter Scott of Northhouse; Robert Scott of Allanhaugh; David Scott of Stobicote; David Scott of Raesknow; Robert Scott of Glack; William Scott in Hawick, called ‘William in the Mott’; John Scott of Monk’s Tower; Robert Scott of Easter Groundistle; James Scott of Alton Croft; Thomas Scott in Wester Groundistle; John Scott in Drinkstone; William Scott in Lees, ‘alias Wilma’, called ‘of Catslack-know’; Robert Scott in Clarilaw; William Scott of Todshawhaugh; Andrew Scott of Todshawhill; John Scott of Stouslie; Scott of Whames; Scott of Castlehill; Walter Scott of Chapelhill; Robert Scott of Howford; Robert Scott of Satchells; Robert Scott of Langhope; William Scott, ‘called Cut-at-the-black’; and Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw (the only one not of the surname ‘Scott’).

paip see pape

pair (pār, per) adj. poor, pitiable – ‘puir wee lamb’, ‘Syne rich and puir maun seek the Muir’ [RH], ‘I may be auld, I may be puir ...’ [DH], ‘You puir wee thing! To think that high abune us a’ You sit your lane ...’ [WFC], ‘Clubs an pubs for puir chiels That need the noise and bustle’ [WL] (also written puir, q.v., although this is no longer the local pronunciation).

the pair (θu-pār, -per) n. poor people. The Parish was responsible for its own poor people, but attitudes varied about providing assistance for beggars from elsewhere. The destitute tended to be naturally cared for during times of plenty, but struggled through leaner periods. Charges for hiring the ‘mort-cloth’ were used to help the poor, as well as fines imposed on transgressors in the Parish. An Act of the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire of 1725 required the poor to be listed, and those able to beg were issued with a special badge (which had to be returned when the needful period was deemed to be over). In the 18th century it was the custom in Hawick for the destitute to go begging on Saturdays. An ‘account of the poor’s account’ is mentioned in the Town Treasurer’s book for 1746. The first mention of ‘the poor’s stent’ on the inhabitants of Hawick was in 1749 (perhaps amounting to 1/4 of the total, the rest presumably raised by the Kirk Session). A list of the poor was drawn up in 1771. In 1784 it was resolved not to levy the poor rate according to means, but just according rental values. This arrangement lasted for 60 years, with these burghal fees latterly corresponding to 1/3 of the assessment for the whole Parish. In 1789 the assessment was 11 pence for each pound of rental value, increasing to 1s. 6d. in 1798, 2s. 4d. in 1801 (a year of famine) and then 21 d. by 1814. Before about 1790 (perhaps around 1770) all the poor, as well as fines imposed on transgressors in the Parish. An Act of the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire of 1725 required the poor to be listed, and those able to beg were issued with a special badge (which had to be returned when the needful period was deemed to be over). Before about 1790 (perhaps around 1770) all the poor of Hawick Parish were buried in the same coffin, which had a false bottom. The Hawick Parochial Board was set up to administer support for the poor in 1845. The Combination Poorhouse (covering 11 parishes) was built off what would become Drumlanrig Square in 1856 – ‘...But, oh! the rich can never ken The hardships o’ the puir’ [TCh].

pairest (pä-rist) adj. poorest – ‘hei was the pairest o the pair’.

the Pairhouse (thu-pär-hoos) n. the Combination Poorhouse, which became Drumlanrig Hospital. The old name was still used long after it had ceased to be a poor-house. Governors include: William Drysdale (1850s); John Smeaton (1860s); Adam Grierson (1870s and 80s); James Scott (late 19th C.); Richard Telford (until 1892); and James Fleming Boyd (early 20th C.).

pairish (pä-reesh) n. a parish. Parishes were originally developed as part of the feudal system, with nobles and knights who received grants of land in the 10th and 11th centuries setting up churches and tithing themselves and their tenants to support a minister. The boundaries were thus determined by the extent of these collective lands, explaining why they often had detached portions. The parish churches were deprived of much of their income during the age of the great monasteries. Parish boundaries were altered over the centuries, often in response to population changes, but they typically retain some vestige of their origins – ‘Rob Tinlin whae was the toon’s officer an the pairish beadle’ [HEx1965], ‘...Hawick had lost naething be allowin the pairish o’ Wultin teh provide a Cornet for the first time!’ [BW1974], ‘Weel, the pairish yird’s...’ [DH] (cf. the older parishin).

Pairish (pä-reesh) n. James (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull.

the Pairish (thu-pär-reesh) n., arch. euphemism for the Poorhouse – ‘...it meant Jethart Jail for themselves and ‘the parish’ for their dependents’ [JTu].

the Pairish (thu-pär-reesh) n. popular name for Hawick Old Parish Church (when it wasn’t ‘old’).

the Pairish Council (thu-pär-reesh-koon-sul) n. former organisation dealing with health and social matters. It replaced the Parochial Board in 1894, and was in turn replaced by County Council responsibilities around 1929. Their meetings took place on the third floor of the Town Hall and they had offices at 12 Allars Crescent.

Pairish Halls (pä-reesh-halz) n. the Halls of the Old Parish Church, on the corner of Buccleuch Street and Buccleuch Place. Built in 1885, the land was previously used as a garden. It is a grade C listed building.

the Pairish Kirk (thu-pär-reesh-kirk) n. another name for the Auld Pairish Kirk or formerly for St. Mary’s – ‘The Parish Church of Hawick stands on a considerable eminence ... but alas! the fabric, with the old spire attached to it, is more like a farmer’s granary or barn, with a huge steam chimney stuck upon it, then a temple of devotion ...’ [RW], ‘...Pairish Kirk is hooses now Folk irni the same somehow’ [IWL].

pairk (pärk) n. a park, enclosed field – ‘...telled the coorse o oon Teviot, wumplin bye a pairk an bussy dean’ [ECS], ‘Yince upon a lang time ago, when wast end pairk was flatter ...’ [MB] (see park and cf. perk).

the Pairk (thu-pärk) n. popular name for Wilton Lodge Park – ‘...but for sic a monument as th’ commiteei hae decided on, aw’m thinkin’ th’ Pairk wad bei th’ place for it!’ [BW].

Pairky-Aathing’s (pär-kee-aw-thingz) n. shop, which was also known as ‘J. Lynch’, or ‘Miss Lynch’s’, at 19 High Street, near the Round Close. It closed in 1989.

pairliment (pär-li-min) n. parliament.

pairs (pär-rulz) n., arch. paralysis, palsy (also perils).

pairlt (pä-rul’) adj., arch. affected by palsy, paralysed, having uncontrolled tremors – ‘Ther chafts war ditherin an bevverin leike as thay war pairlt’ [ECS] (also written ‘pairl’t’; cf. perl).

pairly (pär-kee) adj. poorly, not well – ‘she’s been awfì pairly, ee ken’, adv. in poverty, wretchedly, poct. feebly, softly – ‘Young Branxholm peeped, and puirly spake, O sic a death is no for me!’ [JL].

Pairman (pär-nam) n. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Christie, who was also listed. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersideig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Cristie’ right after Will.

pairpul (pär-pul) n., arch. a thin wooden partition, especially to divide the back shop from the front – ‘...his maxim with every opponent being, after the fashion of the archer, his namesake, to ‘nail him to de pairpul’ [JW] (also written ‘pairple’: cf. perpall).

the Pair Roll (thu-pär-ról) n. list of people in a parish who are eligible for poor relief. The first mention of ‘the poor’s stent’ on the inhabitants of Hawick was in 1749. In 1772 the assessment for the poor amounted to £224 – ‘The said Willaim Paterson... depones he... has been on the Poor...
Pair’s Hooses

Roll for several years past and gets a weekly supply of tuppence’ [BR1767] (see also the pair).

Pair’s Hooses (pärz-hoo-sees) n. Poor’s Houses, former cottages in Ewesdale, near to the Kirk and to Brierleyshaw. They seem to be the same houses listed as ‘Kirkstyle’ on the 1841 and 1861 censuses. They are listed on the 1851 census, with 5 households living there.

pairt (pär’t) n. a part – ‘what pairt o’ nut’ did ee no understand?’ ‘The ronnes that follows are for ye most pairt far distant fra the kirk, some 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 mylles, the most pairt has either no corne, or very litill’ [PR1627], ‘...the possessors of the lands of Flex hath hitherto reaped the greatest pairt of the profit of the said peice of ground’ [BR1692], ‘...As pairtin frae oor ain ane ‘neath the auld aik tree’ [JoHa], ‘Belfast, thou desirist truth in the inwaid pairts...’ [HSR], ‘...sall gaun intil the lower pairts o’ the virth’ [HSR], ‘In the fore pairt of June, when the heather’s in bloom, They wad like to be back the yirth’ [HSR], ‘...in their ain Border toon’ [WR], ‘In things o’ doo the heather’s in bloom, They wad like to be back the yirth’ [HSR], ‘...his enjoyment was tempered somewhat what be the fact that Mrs. Fair and Miss Lookup were among the walkin pairty’ [IW], ‘A’ve seen politicians come and gaun frae aw pairties...’ [IHS], a person – ‘...sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings...by the skaithe to the pairtie lesed’ [BR1640].

Paisley (páz-lee) n. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hawick Town’. Alexander (16th C.) holder of a particrate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William, who is also listed. He is mentioned in 1532 when the tenement to the east of his on the north side of the High Street was sold by William Walker to John Morlaw; this tenement bordered on the Slitrig, and hence was at the Tower Knowe. Charles (1794–1838) wright of Hawick, listed at Roadhead in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Trustee of the Relief Kirk. He was probably the joiner in Wilton, who married Helen Michie; his widow Helen was living at Wilton Roadhead in 1841, along with children William, Jessie, Robert, Charles, John and James. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) wife of John Scott, ‘Wyndheid’. In 1712, when she was a widow, she was rebuked by the Kirk Session for harassing her neighbours, and threatened with imprisonment if her behaviour continued. Francis (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott and Ann ‘Doeg’ in 1758 and another for Robert Rutherford in 1767. In 1772 he and wright Robert (who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for George Balmer. He is probably the Francis whose wife Jean Purcel died in Hawick in 1787. He may also be the Francis who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. Francis (b.1790/1) joiner and Helen Robert Fowler in 1652. Probably the Hector who witnessed a baptism for an unnamed son baptised in Hawick in 1687. He is Hector, married to Isobel Turnbull, who had an ‘item records that ‘2282’.

His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella, John, Francis, Margaret, Thomas and Alexander. Hector (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’. He may be the Hector, married to Isobel Turnbull, who had an unnamed son baptised in Hawick in 1687. He is probably the Hector who witnessed a baptism for Robert Fowler in 1652. Helen (17th C.) probably the daughter of John and Helen Elson born in Hawick in 1650. In 1687 she had a sasine for the lower part of a house in the west end of Hawick. Her husband was Robert Turnbull, who was a weaver. Helen nee Michie (b.c.1790) widow of a joiner in Wilton. She married Charles in Wilton in 1818. In 1841 she is listed as running the joiners business at Roadhead (i.e. Langlands Road). Her children included Joan (b.1821), William (b.1823), Janet or Jessie (b.1825), Robert (b.1826), Charles (b.1830), John (b.1832) and James (b.1833). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Agnes Deans. Their children included William (b.1638). He may be the James who in 1640 witnessed a baptism for Agnes Paisley and Walter Oliver (suggesting then that Agnes was his sister) and another for Robert Gillespie and Marion Stoddart. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Janet Scott. Their children included: Alexander (b.1644); and John (b.1646). James (18th/19th C.) joiner and cabinet-maker on Damside, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably related to Francis, who was a joiner on the High Street at the same time. Janet (b.c.1790) listed as a school-mistress on the 1841 census. She was living on the Round Close with Agnes, probably her daughter, a milliner. By 1851 she was listed as a woolen seamer, still on the Round Close. It is possible she was the Janet who in 1808, 1810 and 1812 witnessed baptisms for Andrew Turnbull and Margaret Hislop (probably in one of the secession churches). John (16th C.) resident of Hawick. He was listed in 1579 among those owed money by James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. The item records that ‘£30 quhairof thair is alsmekill of barkit [i.e. tanned] ledder unwrocht as extendis to £15’. This suggests he was a tanner or leather associated with leather. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Janet Routledge. Their children included: Bessie (b.1642); John (b.1644); Robert (b.1646); Walter (b.1647); and Janet (b.1650). He is probably the John recorded in 1665 when Bessie Douglas was accused of insulting the Bailie and saying that his yard ‘was not truelie marched’. Patrick (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when he was imprisoned in the Hawick Tolbooth ‘for abusing of the market and keeping of the honest men from selling of their shoes’. He was presumably a shoemaker and may be the same man as the cordner who contributed to the Hawick bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded as a cordner among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Robert, resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the Robert listed among people (presumably living near St. Mary’s) who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry. They asked for him to bring out the cripple who lodged at his house, pretending to be ‘fairie spirrits’. He married Grizel Johnstone and their children included: Anna (b.1700); and Robert (b.1703). The witnesses in 1700 were weaver Robert Turnbull and ‘officer’ James Lethem. Robert (18th C.) wright of Hawick. In 1734 he was tasked with rebuilding the Bailie’s seat in the balcony of St. Mary’s after it had been removed on the orders of the Chamberlain of Buccleuch. Perhaps the same wright Robert along with wright James (who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for George Balmer. Thomas (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for George Balmer in 1776. Thomas (19th C.) joiner in the Hawick area. In 1863 he presented some coins to the Museum. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Renwick and their son Walter was baptised in 1679. He was probably miller at Weensland Mill who along with his son Walter witnessed a baptism in 1705. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms in 1680 (along with Dand Gray) for Alexander Muir, in 1685 for William Taylor and in 1704 for James Thomson in Weensland. He and his son are probably the 2 Walters in Weensland who witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White in 1710. It seems likely he is also the Walter who (along with John Muir) witnessed the baptism in Roberston Parish of a ‘bastard child’ of Adam Scott.

of Burnfoot in 1686. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Weensland Mill, probably son of Walter. He was recorded as ‘younger at Weensland milne’ in 1704. He and his father Walter were the ‘milners at Weensland milne’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Armstrong in Weensland in 1705. He and his father are probably the 2 Walters in Weensland who witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White in 1710. He was ‘milner’ in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White. He married Jean Swan (who was also from Hawick Parish) in 1703 and their children included: Agnes (b.1704); Walter (b.1705); Jean (b.1707); Francis (b.1710); and Elizabeth (b.1712). The witnesses in 1704 were weavers William and John Swan. Walter (b.c.1700) from Langholm, he lived in Castleton Parish. In 1722 he married Margaret Davison Dalgliesh. Their children (mainly in Langholm) included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Christian (b.1736); Christian (again, b.1737); Elizabeth Alexandra (b.1741), who married John Grieve; and Euphan (b.1744). Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Margaret Scott died in Hawick in 1795. Walter (b.1825/6) ironmonger on the High Street. In 1861 he was living at No. 21, employing 1 man and 2 boys. He had the house at 43 High Street rebuilt (formerly occupied by ‘Robbie the Cow’). A ‘stone pig’ from his company is in the Museum, labelled ‘W. Paisley & Son, Ironmongers, Hawick’. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Jane Josephine and Mary Elizabeth (who married Robert Elliot, famer in Hermitage). Their children (born mainly in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. William (b.c.1795) from Innerleithen. He was a dyer who lived on the Fore Raw in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Joan, John, Helen and Charles. William (b.1822/3) son of Charles. He was listed as a joiner at Roadhead in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living at Roadhead with his mother Helen and siblings Charles, John, James and Isabella. (also formerly written ‘Paislaw’, ‘Pasla’, ‘Paslau’, ‘Paslaw’, ‘Pasley’, ‘Paysley’, ‘Payslair’, ‘Paysley’, etc.).

te the Town Hall in the mid-20th century – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for our tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock books, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies . . . ’ [IWL].

pait (pāt) pp., arch. paid – ‘. . . to be pait to me be the saide Androu Kere or his facturis or subtenantis at twa termez of the yere . . . ’ [DoR1445], ‘. . . to be pait to the said William, his aieris, executouris or assignais in the parroche kirk of Hawic . . . ’ [SB1470], ‘. . . and mak the saidis Jhon and Ninian to be fullie content and pait thairof . . . ’ [SB1500], ‘. . . to be pait to them in case the horse come nocht back again, or be lost’ [BR1644].

Paiterson (pā'-zən, paw'-ər-sin) n. (Paterson) Adam (16th C.) holder of 2½ particulate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Rev. Adam McCaul (19th/20th C.) licentiate at Saughtree Kirk from 1903. He retired to Edinburgh in 1910. Alexander (17th C.) tenant farmer at Castlehill and ‘Holme’ in 1671, leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Rev. Alexander (19th C.) from Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from the University there in 1869. He was nephew of Rev. Dr. Paterson of Kirkwall. He was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf Burgher Kirk in 1875 and remained until 1896. His time saw a new church opened in 1891. He left for Edinburgh for family reasons, residing at Portobello. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Fulton in Bedrule Parish. In 1623 he was accused of stealing an ox and a cow from a woman in Newton, Glendale (Northumberland).
He was recorded as ‘Andro Patersonne in Foul- toume’ and found not guilty by the court at Jed- burgh. Andrew (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1786, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as a communicant at Borthwickshiel in 1650. He was there along with Helen ‘Haire’ (probably Hair, his wife), as well as Margaret (listed right after him and his wife), William and Robert, who were probably also related. He had 2 children with Helen Hair, baptised in Hawick Parish: Margaret (b.1652); and Robert (b.1654). He also had another child with Helen Allan (with the witnesses suggesting she was the same woman as Helen Hair), Walter (b.1656). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Scott and James Allan, in 1654 were Robert and William (surely close relatives and perhaps the men who were also recorded at Borthwickshiel in 1650) and in 1656 were Robert (again) and Adam Govenlock. Archibald (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Allan. Their son Walter was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Robert (perhaps his father or brother) and Adam Govenlock. Archibald (17th/18th C.) road-maker in Hawick. He was probably related to Walter of Burnflat. He was likely to be ‘Paterson the casseylayer’ from the Council Records in 1704. He is a ‘cassar in Hawick’ in 1707 in an agreement to ‘lay the Cassa in Selkirk’ in 1707. In 1708 he was paid in Selkirk ‘for setting the town’s part of the causey between Robert Scott of Scott’s Bank and Elisabeth Elliot relict of deceased John Turnbull’. He is recorded as a ‘Casier’ in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for James Hobkirk, who had the same job at Burnflat. In 1709 he was ‘Casier’ when he wit- nessed (along with John Gledstains of Whittlelaw) a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex, suggesting that he lived in that area. He was ‘casaer’ in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for Henry (tenant in Hawick) and in 1715 when he witnessed a baptism for gardener Walter. He is recorded as a ‘casier’ when he married Helen Paterson, also from Hawick, in 1706. Their children included: William (b.1707); Francis (b.1710); Isobell (b.1712); Agnes (b.1714); John (b.1716); and Helen (b.1723). Archibald (17th/18th C.) ten- ant in the Flex. He was recorded as a ‘widow, tenant in Flexs’ in 1716 when he married Mary, daughter of James Rutherford, tenant in Ormis- ton. Their children included: Francis (b.1717); James (b.1719); John (b.1720); Isobell (b.1722); Robert (b.1725); and Mary (b.1728). Based on the names, he may have been a son of Francis (also tenant in the Flex) and Isabel Renwick. The witnesses in 1719 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and miller Robert Elliot. Given the family forenames, it is possible that he was ancestor of the ‘Pawkie’ Patersons. He may have earlier (in 1714) married Bessie Davidson. It is tempting to think that he could be the same man as the ‘cassayer’ who lived near the Flex, except that that Archibald had children with Helen Paterson in 1707–1716 and again in 1723 (unless this was an error). Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ha- wick Parish who married Jean Shiel. Their son William was baptised in 1731. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Betty Irvine in 1735. Their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738. Archibald (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Hawick in 1767. It is un- clear how he might have been related to other Patersons. Archibald (d.1799) recorded in the death register in Hawick as ‘Auld Archie Pat-erson Uncle to William Patterson’. It is un- clear which Archibald (and William) this refers to. Archibald ‘Pawkie’ (d.1815) Hawick man who farmed at Silverbuthall and lived at West Port. He was father of Robert ‘Pawkie Patier- son’ (of the song), and was probably the son of James ‘Ilka Thursdi’ who was baptised in 1744. In 1781 he was recorded as a merchant; however, it seems likely he was the ‘cadger’ of that name who was Cornet in 1771. He is probably the car- rier in Hawick who in Selkirk in 1790 complained about non-payment of a bill by John Dunlop. He is probably the Hawick resident who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791 and who owned a horse ac- cording to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1775 he married Isabel Turnbull and she died in 1816; she may have been the daughter of Robert Turnbul and Isobel Kedie who was born in 1740. His chil- dren included: Helen (1775–1855), who married Tom Harkness; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1777); James (b.1780), also nicknamed ‘Pawkie’; Robert (1781–1851), immortalised in the song; and Jane (c.1785–1839), who married M. Cabourne and secondly George Milligan. He was said to have had 2 daughters who were involved with French prisoners of war (so there may have been an- other in addition to Jane). He may be the Archi- bald whose wife’s mother was buried in Hawick in 1771. Ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle was witness to the 1775 and 1777 baptisms, and also Walter Henderson in 1775 and merchant James Dickson in 1777. In 1777 he was a witness (along with Walter Ruecastle) for a baptism for James Dick- son. The witnesses in 1780 were ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle and merchant George Turnbull, while in 1781 they were ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle and William Turnbull (probably a relative of his wife). His death is recorded in Hawick as ‘West Port Called Pauky’. Archibald (b.1783) stockmaking of Kirkton Parish, son of Robert. He was recorded at Horselee in 1841 and Southfieldgate in 1851. He married Agnes Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1833); George (b.1835); and James (b.c.1838). Agnes and George were baptised in Robertson Parish. Archibald (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott and their daughters Betty and Janet were baptised in 1825. Archibald (1800–1840) eldest son of James ‘Pawkie’. He was a stockmaker in Hawick. He married Agnes Donaldson in 1834; after his death she secondly married George Rob- in Hawick. He married Agnes Chalmers and secondly married Adam Brown ‘Young Headhouse’ in 1719. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1758 he hired the Hawick mortcloth. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In both 1762 and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for wright Walter Scott. He could be the George who married Iso- bell Tudhope and whose children included: Henry (b.1759); George (b.1761); Robert (b.1763); and John (b.1767). George (b.1794/5) from Fogo in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Greenbank. In the 1841 census his wife (recorded being born in Nova Scotia) and children were there, but he was visiting Borthwickbrae House at the time. He was at Greenbank in 1851 as farmer of 600 acres, employing 3 people. His children included: Eliza (b.c.1828); George (b.c.1830); and John (b.c.1840). George (1801–73) native of Stichill, near Kelso, son of John and Isabel Tait. He was a shoemaker to trade. He learned to play the fife in the Berwickshire Militia. He played in the Drums and Fifes at 46 Common Ridings. He is recorded as a shoemaker journeyman at the Sandbed in 1841, a shoemaker on the Mid Row in 1851 and at 3 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Scott and they had children: Isabel (b.c.1830); John (b.c.1833); Jane (or Jeanie, b.1834); Margaret (b.1837); George (b.1839); Andrew (b.1841); Bar- bara (b.1841); Eliza (b.1848); and Thomas (b.c.1849). George (b.c.1815) baker of 53 (or perhaps 55) High Street, son of baker William. He was listed as a baker and confectioner of the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He married both Elizabeth and Isabella, daughters of grocer Thomas Liddell. His daughter Margaret Davidson carried on the baker’s business until she married Andrew Graham (tweed traveller). Her cousin Thomas L. Brydon then took over, later succeeded by Thomas Scott. Helen (b.1775) daughter of Archibald and sister of Robert ‘Pawkie’. She married labourer Tam Harkness. It is unclear if she was ‘Nellie Harkness’ or if that was her daughter. Henry (17th/18th C.) servant to the Laird of Falnash when he married Bessie Scott in Hawick in 1700. He was probably related to Walter, who was a gardener for Gideon Scott of Falnash. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom, in 1702 when his son John was baptised, in 1707 when his daughter was baptised and he witnessed a baptism for fellow-carrier William Aitken, younger, in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Rodger and in a 1709 baptism for his own child. In 1711 and 1713 he was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed baptisms for Walter of Burnflat, who was probably also a relative. In 1714 he was recorded as ‘tenant in Hawick’. In 1700 he married Bessie Scott and their children included: John (b.1702); John (again, b.1704); Agnes (b.1707); George (b.1709); Henry (b.1711); Mary (b.1716); George (again, b.1718); and Robert (b.1722). Walter (b.1714), with mother’s name give as ‘Helen Scott’ was probably also their child. The witnesses in 1707 were carrier William Aitken, younger, and John Scott ‘Souldier’, younger, in 1709 were cooper John Turnbull and gardener William Scott, in 1711 were carrier William Aitken, younger, and cooper Walter Scott and in 1714 were Walter of Burnflat and Archibald ‘Casaer’. He may have been related to William, whose father was gardener and shepherd for Scott of Falnash around the second decade of the 18th century. Henry (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Girnwood in 1742. He married Agnes ‘Ballainy’ in Roberton in 1740. His children included: Mary (b.1742); Jean (b.1745); Walter (b.1748); and Henry (b.1751). Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Alison Oliver and their children included: Janet (b.1787); Alison (b.1788); George (b.1790); Adam (b.1792); Henry (b.1797); and Robert (b.1799). He could be the weaver in Hawick whose child’s death is recorded in 1799. Henry (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Roberton Parish in 1799. Henry (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer at Pin in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41 and was also Precentor in Castleton Kirk from at least 1841. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, Christian, Mary, John and Henry. Henry ‘Harry o Burnheid’ (d.1850s) a barman to trade, he used to spend time sitting near a well at Burnhead, popularly named ‘Harry’s Well’. Known as an odd character who used to collect bits of cord and liked to read difficult passages from the bible. A water-colour portrait of him by Adam Brown is in the Museum. It is possible he was the Henry who married Margaret Hobkirk (from Roberton) in 1799. Henry (1820/1–87) son of John, he was an auctioneer in Hawick. His premises were at 61 High Street. An attendee of the East Bank Kirk, he was apparently the only one to continue standing during prayers and sit during singing, long after the practice was reversed. He married Ann Armstrong, and their children were: John, ironmonger; Alexander, bookmaker; and Robert, also bookmaker. He is buried in the Wellogate. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Runciman and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1636. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick. He was recorded as ‘miller’ in a baptismal record of 1689 and as ‘under miller’ in Hawick in 1694 when he still had to pay part of his Burgess money. He witnessed baptisms in 1701 for Adam Scott and Janet Paterson (probably his daughter or sister) and in 1702 for flesher John Tudhope. He was ‘milner’ in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Deans. Probably the same James ‘milner’ witnessed a baptism for fellow miller Robert Deans in Hawick in 1705. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for fellow miller Walter Riddell. In 1708 he and Walter Riddell were ‘undermillers’ when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott wright at Millport and was ‘undermiller in Hawick’ in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell (also undermiller in Hawick). He may be the James, brother of Margaret, who in 1702 acted as witness to the baptism of his niece, baptised posthumously to Gideon Gardner. He married Margaret Wright and their children included: Isobel (b.1687); Margaret (b.1689); and Isobel (again, b.1702). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Scott and John Scott. James ‘Duke’ (17th/18th
Paiterson

C. ) recorded in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Manuel in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (d.1782) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record is labelled ‘ilka Thursday’, which was presumably his nickname (suggesting he may have been a carrier, and hence related to the later carrier of the same name). It is possible he was the James, son of Archibald, born in Hawick in 1719. He may be the James, married to Helen Ruecastle (probably the same as Helen Paterson in some baptismal records), who was probably daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle. Their children included: Archibald (b.1744), probably ‘Pawkie’; John (b.1747); Mary (b.1757); Christian (b.1759); William (b.1761), possibly the resident of Silverbuthall; and James (b.1766). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and William Scoon, servant to Rev. William Somerville; fellow carrier John Tudhope had a child baptised on the same day. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter Ruecastle in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Ross (probably in 1756) and their children included: Marion (b.1759); Betty (b.1761); Henry (b.1767); and Janet (b.1769). James (d.1778) carpet weaver who died in Hawick. He may be the James who married Ann Scott in 1774, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Southdean Parishes. Alternatively he may be the James who married Ann Coats, with children Andrew (b.1772) and Janet (b.1775) baptised in Hawick. James ‘Pawkie’ (1780–1858) son of Archibald and Isabella Turnbull. He was brother of Robert, the subject of the song. In his younger days he was an agricultural servant, being at Adderstonelee in 1799 (when he got married). Later he was a carrier and small-scale farmer in Hawick. He is listed as ‘Pauky’ in the 1808 and 1810 death records of his infant sons, both called William. In 1837 he was running a cart service to Dumfries, Annan and Langholm every Monday. He may also be the grocer on the Loan listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 9 Loan with his wife and young joiner John Ingles (who was probably his grandson), with his son Christopher living at the same address. In 1851 he was listed on the Loan as farmer of 9 acres. In 1799 in Kirkton Parish he married Margaret (1777–1855), daughter of Archibald Tait and sister of carrier William Tait. Their children were: Archibald (1799–1840); Isabella (1800/1–52), who married John Ingles; Jean (1802/3–63), who married Thomas Sanderson in Melrose; William (d.1808) and William (again, d.1810), who died in infancy: James (b.1809/10); Robert (b.1811/2); and Christopher (b.1814/5). He died at 11 Loan. James (b.c.1785) shepherd at Cawfaulds in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1840, with his address changed from Alton to ‘Calf-folds’. His wife was Violet and their children included Margaret and Elizabeth. He may be the widower living at Easter Lilliesleaf in 1851. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Terrona in the Ewes valley. His wife was Margaret and their children included Agnes, James, William, John and Alexander. James (1805/6–54) son of William. He was a farm labourer who lived at Raesknowe. He married Mary Glendinning and their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1836. He was at Raesknowe in 1851, with his son and his mother and was still there in 1851, described as a widower. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Hall and their son John was baptised in 1842. James (b.1820/1) from Ewes, he was farmer at Chapelhill in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 950 acres and employing 7 people. He also had a governness and 5 domestic servants. His wife was Jessie and their children included Violet, George, John T., James, William and Margaret B. James (19th C.) cattle salesman in Hawick. He had a villa erected for him on Wilton Hill in about 1880. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he was accused by the Kirk Session of setting up stouks of corn on the Sabbath. He is probably the John whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included Thomas (b.1633) and Mungo (b.1636). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Dunlop, with their daughter Janet baptised in 1650. Probably the same John was later married to Helen Morrison, with further children (baptised in Ashkirk): Thomas (b.1656); John (b.1660); and Frances (b.1662). The witnesses in 1656 were Walter and William Dunlop. His wife’s name was recorded as ‘Issbell’ in 1660. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Parkhill when his will was recorded in 1683. It is unclear if this was the local Parkhill or another one in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk. John (1632–1708) youngest son of John, Bishop of Ross, he studied in Aberdeen and St. Andrews and then taught at St. Leonard’s College. He succeeded his father at Ellon in 1660, then became minister at the Tron Kirk and later the High Kirk, before becoming Bishop of Galloway in 1674, and then Bishop of Edinburgh in 1679. In 1687 he was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow, as successor to Alexander Cairncross. He was thus the last Archbishop of Glasgow, with Bishops being continued later by the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic Churches. He was disliked by many for his hard line on religious intolerance. At the Revolution he sided with James II and was deprived when Episcopacy was abolished in 1691. Afterwards the spent several years in England, but returned to Edinburgh by 1702 and petitioned for allowances to be made for relief of poor clergymen (including apparently himself). He died in Edinburgh and was buried at Holyrood. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Craw, Their unnamed son was baptised in 1673. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1709 he married Margaret Goodfellow in Kirkton Parish. John (18th C.) tenant in Langhope in 1785 when his servant was involved in a legal case in Selkirk. John (b.c.1800) shoemaker who lived on the Kirkwyynd in 1841. His wife was Isabel and their children included Walter and William. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1822. Bailie John (1803–1873) born where the Store was later located, son of a country weaver, he started in that trade himself, then became a warper with William Watson’s. He was apparently the first man in Hawick to warp tartans and shawls, and the first to send pieces of woven cloth to London in about 1830. He was a trustee of the firm, and managed it until his sons Robert F. and Thomas L. were old enough to take over in 1864. He was also on the Town Council and was a Magistrate during the 1850s. In the 1850s he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as manager of W. Watson & Sons. He had the honour of presenting the harp to Henry Scott Riddell manager of W. Watson & Sons. He had the honour of having the building at 72 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Edinburgh. James Sinton, in his Hawick-related bibliography of 1908, thanks him for the use of ‘some of the rarer volumes in his library, which contains one of the finest collections of Hawick-printed books extant’. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (20th C.) actuary with the Hawick Savings Bank, he also acted as Treasurer for St. George’s Kirk from 1935. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 178 Weensland Road in the mid-1900s. Michael (16th/17th C.) said to have owned the lands at ‘Haggishaa’ in the distant past (as recounted by Robert Wilson). If real, he was presumably an ancestor of Robert ‘Old Mortality’. He is said to have been a generous host and a great benefactor of St. Mary’s. On one occasion he apparently entertained those associated with Hawick Kirk, serving a 3 foot diameter haggis, the pin of which was used as a spoke to mend Hawick Mill and the skin used for the Town drum. This is connected with the name ‘Haggishaa’, and there is probably no truth to the story other than the family connection with the land there. It is suggested that a version of the story was told to Robert Burns by his friend Gavin Turnbull (whose family was from Hawick), inspiring the lines ‘Your pin wad help to mend a mill In time o’ need’. Mungo (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Raey (1944/5– ) born in Hawick and educated in Denholm, he has been a lifelong farm-worker. He spent 25 years at Newton farm and then worked at Deanfoot farm. In 2020 he was noted for having brought in his 60th harvest. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident of ‘lang-cluch’ recorded in 1502. This may have been the farm of similar name on the Allan Water. Along with John Winthrope and James ‘aronyk’, he had 60 sheep stolen by Patrick Scott in Harwoodhill. His surname was written ‘patonesone’. Robert (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ash Kirk in 1651.
for John Stewart. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism in 1656 for Archibald, who was surely a close relative. Also in 1656 he and William (probably another relative) witnessed a baptism for George Heatley and Janet Allan. Probably along with the same William he witnessed a baptism in 1654 for Archibald and Helen Heatley. It seems likely that he, William and Archibald are all recorded as ‘communicants’ at Borthwickshiels in 1650. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill when the will of his wife Margaret Turnbull was recorded in 1685. It is unclear if this was the Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on another one. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘indweller in Falahill at Reaperlaw’ in 1689 when he had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. He presumably lived at Raperlaw. It is possible he is the Robert whose widow Isobel Wright had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1792 (dealt with by Stephen Turnbull in Minto Cleuch). Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Clerk and their son William was baptised in 1691. The witnesses were James Neil and John Robson. Robert (17th C.) resident at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert ‘Old Mortality’ (1715/6–1801) born at Burnflat (although there are other claims that he was born at Closeburn, but his family were from Hawick and he was certainly christened and grew up there), son of Walter and Margaret Scott (also known as Helen). The year of his birth is uncertain, although his christening record is clear (and there was also a brother of the same name born in 1713, who presumably died in infancy). The baptismal witnesses were Walter Scott (Beadle in Hawick, who may have been related to his mother) and gardener Walter (who may have been cousin or other relative of his father). He moved to Dumfriesshire at age 13, where he was apprenticed as a stonemason, joining his brother Francis at Cornockle Quarry, near Templand. In 1743 or 1744 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Gray, gardener to Sir John Jardine; she was cook-maid to the owner of the quarry, Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick. He then leased a quarry at Gatelawbrig from the Duke of Queensberry, and become a stone-mason and quarrier. His house was plundered by retreating Jacobites in 1745, and he was taken prisoner. Already a pronounced Cameronian, he became obsessed with placing tombstones over the graves of Covenantant martyrs, and was thus given his nickname. He often travelled for work and in 1758 he left his wife and children for the next 10 years, although when his son Walter went off to find him in 1759, he joined his father as a stone-cutter. Walter was the 2nd son, and his own eldest son, Nathaniel (hence grandson of ‘Old Mortality’), was minister at Galashields. His other children were John (who became a sailor and emigrated to America), Robert junior, Margaret and Janet. He returned to his family at Gatelawbrig in 1768, and they moved to Balmacellan in Kirkcudbright. His wife worked there as a teacher to support the family, while he travelled the country on his pony, erecting and cleaning stones. She died in 1785 (aged 59), and a plaque in Balmacellan marks where they lived. He met Walter Scott in 1793 in a graveyard in north-east Scotland. This meeting was fictionalised in the opening chapter of Scott’s ‘The Tale of Old Mortality’ (1816), and helped inspire the novel. He died on the high road near Lockerbie, collapsing next to his pony at Bankend in Caerlaverock, and not recovering. The precise date of his death and place of his burial are uncertain. A memorial tombstone was erected by Scott’s publisher in 1869 at Bankend of Caerlaverock Churchyard. There are 3 copies of a statue of him by John Currie (two of which also include his pony), which are in Balmacellan, at Dumfries Observatory Museum and at Newton Stewart Museum. There is another statue of him in Laurel Hill Cemetery in Philadelphia. A plaque marked his birthplace in Hawick, erected in 1897, but the dilapidated cottage at ‘Hagishaa’ was demolished following a fire in 1991 (the plaques are now in storage). In addition the Museum holds a pair of his spectacles. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Robert Miller. Robert (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, with Walter Scott from Newbigging as the other witness. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Fairnbaire in Hawick in 1775 and their children included: Walter (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); George (b.1780); Archibald (b.1783); Robert (again, b.1788); and James (b.1791), who appears to have died in 1820. George and Archibald were baptised in Kirkton Parish and the rest in Hawick. Note that according to the baptismal records there were 7 sons and no daughters. Robert ‘Pawkie’ (1781–1858) local man, immortalised in the words of the humorous song by ‘Soapy’ Ballantyne. His father Archibald had farmed land at Sillerbithaa (and was also ‘Pawky’), with his mother being Isabel Turnbull. He lived at 9 Loan and his descendants farmed fields near there. He had 4 sisters: Nellie, who married Tam Harkness, and whose daughter Hannah married Charles Gray Laidlaw; Jane, who had a child to a prisoner called Cabourne, this daughter marrying toy merchant and grocer David S. Park, and secondly married George Milligan and was the mother of Provost Milligan; and another who married a French prisoner of war, who is traditionally said to have been a Bonaparte (although this is hardly credible), returning to France where he obtained a divorce and remarried. He was recorded on the 1841 and 1851 censuses at about 9 Loan and farmed 16 acres. He was unmarried in 1851, but in 1855 married Helen Leithead (b.c.1825) in Hawick and they had children John (b.1853) and Archibald (b.1855). In 1861 his widow and 2 sons were still living at 9 Loan. He was buried in Witton Kirk Yard. Robert (b.1781/2) born in Witton Parish, he was a soldier and agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was an Army Pensioner at Wauchope and in 1851 was listed as both Chelsea Pensioner and labourer. He married Mary Turnbull in Hobkirk Parish in 1821. His widow was still living at Wauchope Cottages in 1861. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Witton Parish. He was listed in 1835 as a gardener living at Roadside. Robert (19th C.) described being ‘in Broadlee’ in Castleton Parish in 1832 when he was charged with ‘the sin of fornication’ with Helen Thomson. Robert (19th C.) Hawick resident who lived at West Port. He was one of the Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the radical mob near the Tower Knowe at the 1837 election. He escaped into the house of Walter Turnbull, but was found hiding under the bed. It was said that his unpopularity arose from his having switched his political allegiance. On his way down to the inquiry in London, he is supposed to have said on the ship ‘there’s naethin but a fir deal atween us an eternity’, and asked the Captain to sail close to the edge – ‘He’s been away this month an’ mair, At Lon’on Town, a witness there, Wi’ Tully, Paterson, and Kennedy, An scores of ither[s] that are ready . . . ’[RDW]. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Pawkie’. Robert (b.1823/4) born in Witton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He was living at Hassendeanbank in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Elizabeth, Christina, James and John. Robert Telfer ‘Moose’ (1866–1907) son of Henry and Ann Armstrong. He was a ‘turf commission agent’ (i.e. bookie) who moved to Leeds. His nickname came from a discoloured patch on his cheek. He was a member of St. Cuthbert’s choir while in Hawick, and was a well known singer, at Colour Bussings and other events. He was the first singer of the songs ‘Up wi’ the Banner’, ‘Hawick’ and ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’. He was in fact the first singer of ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ at the Colour Bussing of 1887, when it was sung to the tune of ‘Hail to the Chief’, and he also debuted the new tune at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He is buried in the Wellogate. Rev. Stuart Maxwell ‘Max’ (1937–2015) born in Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, he was educated at Kelham College and Lichfield Theological College and was ordained in 1960. He was with churches in Derbyshire before coming to Hawick as Priest-in-Charge of St. Cuthbert’s in 1992. He was Rector from 1995. He also spent some time working for the Guardian and Observer newspapers. His wife was Margaret. He retired to Inverurie. Thomas (15th C.) listed as ‘Thomas Patonsoun’ among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. Probably the same ‘Thome Patanson’ is listed among many Rutherfords and others who had their fines compunded in 1501 by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Kedie and their children included: Janet (b.1723); and William (b.1726). Rev. Thomas W. (19th/20th C.) minister at Roberton Free Kirk (‘the Snoot Kirk’) 1889–1900. Walter of Burnflat (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1689 when his daughter was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Elliot and the witnesses were Patricke Briggs and James Elliot (perhaps related to his wife). He was presumably either father of Walter (and hence grandfather of ‘Old Mortality’) or this was the same man as Walter, and he had an earlier marriage. Walter (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He was gardener for Gideon Scott of Falnash for 18 years, living at Fenwick and also farming Fenwick, Alton Croft and part of Goldielands. In 1704 he was recorded as ‘Gardener in Fenwick’ and in 1707 as ‘gardener in Fenwick’. In 1715 he was ‘gardener to Mr Robert Cunningham our Minister’. In 1716 he witnessed the baptism of Robert ‘Old Mortality’, son of Walter of Burnflat (who may thus have been his cousin or other relative). His children (perhaps from a first marriage) included: William (b.1694/5), who married Isobel Sliman in 1727. He married Helen Marshall and their children included:

Walter (b.1701), who married Isabell Glendinning in 1726; Gideon (b.1704), presumably named after his employer; John (b.1707); and Archibald (b.1715). The witnesses in 1704 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Francis Gledstains of Whittlaw, in 1707 were Gideon Scott of Falnash (again) and Bailie James Deans and in 1715 were Archibald ‘casaer in Flexs’ and Henry Orrock. Note that he was having children in Hawick Parish at the same time as Walter of Burnflat (to whom he was probably related), making it easy to confuse them. Walter of Burnflat (17th/18th C.) father of Robert, ‘Old Mortality’. He acquired Burnflat from his own father in 1688. He could be the Walter in Burnflat who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1687. He is recorded being ‘of Burnflat’ in baptismal records of 1700, 1706, 1708 and 1711. His lands in the Parish of Hawick were valued at £40 Scots in 1710. He was recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1711. In 1713 he made a request to the Bailies and Council that the boundary between his land at Burnflat and the Common be marked out; it is stated that there were ‘seventeen march stones set along the march’. He is probably the Walter, Laird of Burnflat, who is mentioned in 1767 among those giving evidence regarding the former use of the Common; he held ‘a quarter of land in Hawick’ and kept more than 100 sheep, supported by pasturing them on the Common. He married Margaret (also sometimes known as Helen) Scott and they had at least 6 children, with perhaps only Bessie, Francis and Robert surviving to adulthood. Their children included: Bessie (b.c.1698), who married John Ruecastle; Helen (b.1700); John (b.1703); Francis (b.1706); Walter (b.1708); John (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Robert (again, b.1716). There is no baptismal record for Bessie, but in her 1719 marriage record her father is clearly Walter of Burnflat. The baptismal witnesses in 1700 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and William Henderson in Flex, in 1706 were William Henderon in Flex and Bailie George Martin, in 1711 were carrier Henry (probably a relative) and merchant John Graham, in 1713 were John Scott (‘souldier’; possibly related to his wife) and Henry Paterson, and in 1716 were Walter Scott ‘beddel in Hawick’ (possibly related to his wife) and gardener Walter Paterson (perhaps a cousin or similar relative). He is probably the Walter ‘of Burnflat’ who witnessed a baptism in 1725 (for William Stoddart), along with ‘Robert Paterson there’ (who may have been a brother, since his son Robert would have been too young to be a witness). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Marion (b.1703). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, son of gardener Walter. In 1726 he married Isobel Glendinning and their children included Walter (b.1728). He could be the Walter, son of Walter, baptised in Hawick in 1695. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Telford and their children included Margaret (b.1732) and William (b.1732). He could be the deceased Walter whose son William died in Hawick in 1782. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1735). Walter (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His wife was Janet Brown and their unnamed son was baptised in 1747. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1780. He married Nelly Laidlaw and their children included Janet (b.1780), with his wife acting as sponsor for the baptism in Robertson; this suggests that his wife was from Robertson, but he was not. Walter (b.1817/8) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 10 acres at ‘Hankimshaugh’, which was another name for Hummelknowe. He married Mary Amos and their children included Mary, William, Walter, Isabella, Ann and John. William (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Cruik’ when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet ‘Faire’ and their children included: Margaret (b.1636); Robert (b.1639); and Marion (b.1641). William (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Allan and their children included: Robert (b.1656); and Bessie (b.1673). In 1656 he and Robert (surely a close relative) witnessed a baptism for George Heatley and Janet Allan (who may have been his sister-in-law). Probably along with the same Robert he witnessed a baptism in 1654 for Archibald and Helen Heatley. It seems likely that he, William and Archibald are all recorded as ‘communicants’ at Bothwickshiel in 1650. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Ruecastle and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1671. William (17th C.) referred to as ‘in Hawick’ in 1681 when he rented Hawick Mill from the Duchess of Bucleuch. He was Hawick’s miller for at least 1682–87. He could be the William who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the merchant

William died in 1829. He was probably resident of Silverbuthall. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1781. His children included: Adam (b.1767) and Agnes (b.1777). In 1777 he was living at Orchard. His children included: William (b.1769); and Janet (b.1771).

Paiterson

William was baptised in 1705. William (b.1694/5) son of Walter, he was a gardener and Burgess of Hawick. His father was gardener to Gideon Scott of Falnash for 18 years, living at Fenwick, and also acting as shepherd for the farms of Fenwick and half of Goldielands and Alton Croft. He gave evidence in the court case regarding the Common in 1767, having himself acted as cattle herd for Scott of Falnash's animals for 10 years; he was at that time described as married and on the poor roll of Hawick. In 1727 in Hawick he married Isobel, daughter of John Sliman. Their children included: Walter (b.1728); John (b.1739); and Archibald (b.1743). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1763. The witnesses in 1743 were saddler Francis Ruecastle and merchant John Cavers. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1705. William (b.1694/5) son of Walter, he was a gardener and Burgess of Hawick. His father was gardener to Gideon Scott of Falnash for 18 years, living at Fenwick, and also acting as shepherd for the farms of Fenwick and half of Goldielands and Alton Croft. He gave evidence in the court case regarding the Common in 1767, having himself acted as cattle herd for Scott of Falnash's animals for 10 years; he was at that time described as married and on the poor roll of Hawick. In 1727 in Hawick he married Isobel, daughter of John Sliman. Their children included: Walter (b.1728); John (b.1739); and Archibald (b.1743). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1763. The witnesses in 1743 were saddler Francis Ruecastle and merchant John Cavers. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1705. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1731 when his son William was baptised. William (18th C.) said by James Wilson to have been nephew of Robert 'Old Mortality' though not appearing in court, the accusations including attacking 'the Tower and Castle of Hawick'. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet 'Heutsone' and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1753. He was possibly son of James, born in 1761. William (1769/70–1837) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Armstrong in Hawick in 1798; she died in Hawick in 1856, aged 85. In 1841 and 1851 his widow was living with their son James at Raesknowe. His children included James (1805/6–54) and Margaret (1803/4–18). He died at Brauxholme Braes and is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (1799/1800–1875) who is noticed on the reverse of the same gravestone, was probably also his son. William (b.c.1780) baker and Bailie in the 1820s and 30s. His shop was on the High Street, around No. 62, and he was also a tenant farmer of Winnington Rig. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick, and one of the first elders. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He presided at the 1832 Reform Bill celebrations and made the often quoted statement 'It was luz and Mainchester that carried the Reform Bill' [T]. He was listed as a High Street baker on Pigot's 1837 directory and was there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He married Agnes Rutherford and their children included: Robert (b.1803); William (b.1804); Walter (b.1806); Helen (b.1808); Isabella (b.1811); Agnes (b.1813); George (b.1815), also a baker; Susan (b.1817); and John (b.1821). An unnamed child of his died in 1811. William (1799/1800–1875) labourer living at Newmill Damfoot. He was probably son of William and Helen Armstrong. He married Ann Elliot, who died in 1855, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth; John (b.1830); Adam; and Simon. He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. William (b.1804/5) farm steward at Stouslie. In 1835 he was listed as a labourer at Leaheads, with the entry changed to be farm servant at Stouslie in 1840, and he was farm steward at Stouslie by 1841. He married Isabella Deans and their children included: Isabella (b.1827), baptised in Kirkton; Agnes (b.1830), baptised in Wilton, who married Daniel Fisher; and Margaret (b.1840), also baptised in Wilton. William (19th C.) member of Hawick Free Kirk. He married Elizabeth Howison and their son William was baptised in 1836. Rev. William (1846–1932) born in Glasgow, he was educated at Glasgow University and Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall. He became evangelical preacher at Hindpool Road, Barrow-in-Furness 1874–78. He was then at Adelphi Chapel, Hackney Road, Middlesex. In 1888 he moved to Newcastle Congregational Church, where he remained for about 2 years. He was then at Forfar. Rev. William (1840–1906) from Torthorwald in Dumfriesshire, he was educated at the University of Edinburgh. He became licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1866–70. He was the first person to minister to the congregation there. He is recorded residing at Ovenshank in 1868. He was minister at Ancrum and Longniewton 1870–1906. He married Susan Crow Noble and their children were William, Margaret Crow, Dr. Norman and James (formerly spelled ‘Patersone’, ‘Patersonne’, ‘Patersoun’, ‘Patterson’, ‘Petersoun’, etc., as well as sometimes ‘Patonsone’).

Paiterson-Broon (piˈər-sɛn-broʊn, pawˈ-ər-sɛn-broʊn) n. (Paterson-Brown) Dr. June, C.B.E., nee Garden (1932–2009) born and bred in Edinburgh, her father was Wing Cmdr. Thomas Garden. She studied medicine at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1955. In 1957 she married Peter and the couple moved to Hawick. She worked as a medical officer in the Hawick Family Planning and Well Woman Clinics and did much to promote family planning in the Borders, at a time when the topic was an extremely sensitive one. She was long involved with the Girl Guide movement, becoming Hawick District Commissioner, Roxburghshire County Commissioner, Scottish Chief Commissioner and finally Chief Commissioner for the U.K. and Commonwealth. In 1989 she was given the highest award in Guiding, the Silver Fish, in recognition of her 30 years of service. She also chaired or served on many committees involving children, youth and education. She was made Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburgh, her father was Consulting Surgeon at the Royal Infirmary. He was educated at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1955. He moved to Hawick in 1957 as a G.P., arriving in the midst of a flu epidemic. He continued in practice in Hawick until he retired in 1991. He became Medical Officer for the Roxburgh Branch of the Red Cross, Director of the Children’s Hospice, Vice-President of R.E.A.C.T., and Honorary Medical Advisor of the Red Cross in Scotland. His first aid booklet ‘A Matter of Life or Death’ (1975, 1980) sold hundreds of thousands of copies.

Paiterson Gairdens (piˈər-sɛn-gaər-dinz) n. Paterson Gardens, a street built at Burnflat near the Vertish Hill. The houses were erected in 2006 and named after ‘Old Mortality’ whose dilapidated birthplace was demolished to make room for the new buildings. Some stones from the old building were built into the pillars at the entrance to the new housing area and plaques describing the connection to Old Mortality were unveiled there in 2016.

Paiterson’s Haa (piˈər-sɛn-sən-ho) n. Paterson’s Hall, former farmstead in the Borthwick valley. It is marked on the south bank of the Borthwick Water, north of Eilrig.

paitrick (pətˈrɪk) n., arch. a partridge – ‘Ye maun kins a’ may take yer rest, Ye paitreiks needna leave yer nest’ [JH]. ‘An ilka hare an’ paitrick killer, War fin’d an’ bilked o’ their siller’ [JR].

pajamis (paˈʒɑːmɪs) n., pl. pyjamas. pake (pək) n., arch. a disreputable person, especially a woman, usually with a qualifying adjective – ‘A cow is called an ‘auld pake’; a niggardly woman, a ‘hard pake’’ [JoJ].

Palais Waas (pəlˈɛs-wəz) n. popular name for an area in Ashkirk Glebe, about 250 yards south of Ashkirk Kirk, now within the golf course. This was the site of ruins, which were still visible in the late 18th century and may have been the ancient palace of the Bishops of Glasgow. Alexander Scott ‘called of Paliss’ is recorded in Selkirk documents in the period 1532–35; he was son of David Scott, Vicar of Ashkirk, who may have previously held these lands. Robert Scott ‘of Paleis’ was deceased in 1579 when his widow Isabel Donald’s inventory was recorded. Walter Scott was there in 1580. An agreement was witnessed for the Scotts of Blindhaugh there in 1581. ‘Johnne Scott of the Palice’, servitor of George Scott of Synton is recorded in 1587, suggesting the place name (but presumably no longer the palace) existed at that time. There is now no evidence of any structure in this location (it is ‘Paleis Wallis’ in 1580).

the Palais (θəˈpæ-ləs) n. popular name for the ‘Palais de Danse’, part of the Odeon theatre complex, off the arcade. It was a popular dance venue in the 1940s and 50s – ‘Ee’d Stan Reid’s and the Palais anaw . . .’ [AY].

Palais de Danse (pəlˈɛs-diˈdəwns) n. official name of the Palais.

pale (pæl) n., arch. a pall, mortcloth – ‘The minister acquainted the elders that he had received a pale from Mr Elliot, merchant in London . . .’ [1720], ‘. . .my promise of sending you a velvlat pale for the benefit of the poor of Hawick paroch’ [PR1720] (also spelled ‘pail’).
Palmer-Douglas

Palmer-Douglas (paw-mur-dug-lis) n. Archibald (1880–1947) elder son of Mary and Edward. He was the heir of Cavers, but pre-deceased his mother. He unveiled the Deanbrae War Memorial in 1920. During his time the Cavers estate was reduced by about half, with farms at Denholm and Spittal being sold off. He lived at Lidgard. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1920 he married Mary Kuehn. His children were: James Malcolm (1922–2013), who succeeded; Angela Mary (b.1924); and John Aidan (b.1929). In 1947 his wife and children gifted 2 silver communion plates to Cavers Kirk in his neomony. Capt. Edward, J.P., D.L. (1836–1933) originally from Sussex, he was youngest son of Rev. George Palmer of Sullington in Sussex. He served with the Riffe Brigade. In 1879 he married Mary Malcolm who became heiress of Cavers and so he changed his surname. He devoted efforts to improving the Cavers estate, which had been neglected for several generations. This included partly rebuilding the mansion house. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1883, formed the Jedforest Hounds in 1884 and was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He served as Master of the Jedforest Hounds until 1885. He rode in the 1891 Common Riding. He also gave the small piece of ground for the Hornshole Monument. He served as J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy Lieutenant and a County Councillor. He had a son, Archibald (b.1880) who pre-deceased his mother and another son, Malcolm (b.1882). James Malcolm (1922–2013) son of Archibald and grandson of Mary and Edward, the first Palmer-Douglasses. When he inherited the Cavers estate it consisted of about 5,000 acres. Not a good estate manager, the family moved into Midgard and removed the roof from Cavers House to save tax in the 1950s. The family then moved to the Eskdalemuir area. He sold off the last 90 acres of the Cavers estate in 1975. He then moved to Caithness, but later took up the cause to preserve Cavers Kirk. He had 3 wives, having children Helen and

pan loaf (pawn-löf) n. type of bread, distinguished from a ‘plain loaf’ by having crust all round, often referred to as a ‘pan’.

pan-loaf (pawn-löf) adj. having a posh accent, so called because ‘pan loafs’ were traditionally more expensive than ‘plain loafs’ – ‘Is ei gaun ti dae the speech in Hawick or wull ei be pan-loaf?’, ‘...memories of a local businesswoman ... whose expertise at switching on and off a ‘pan loaf’ accent was truly unsurpassed’ [HPa2020].

pant (pawn’, pant) n., arch. a well, trough, public fountain (the ornamental well in Selkirk Market Place is still called the ‘Pant Well’).

Panter (pawn-tur) n. George (15th/16th C.) appears to have been appointed Rector of Minto in 1512. He was probably related to Alexander Panter, Vicar of Carstairs at about the same time.

Panion (pawn-tin) n. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1742 he was ‘Officer of Excise’ and in 1745 was recorded as ‘Officer’. He witnessed a baptism for mason David Laing in 1742. He married Agnes Chatto and their children included: Agnes (b.1737); Patrick (b.1740); Thomas (b.1742); George (b.1743); twins George and Anne (b.1745); and Agnes (b.1747). The witnesses in 1742 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and

present Bailie Robert Boyd and in 1745 Robert Howison was witness to the baptism.

the Pant Well (thin-pawn-wel) n., arch. former water supply at the baker’s shop (No. 25) corner of the south side of the Howegate, by the old entrance to St. Mary’s Church. It was constructed by piping spring water from further outside Town (perhaps the Sellder Springs), at the instigation of the Council in 1783. It was a freestone construction with a covering. It is probably the ‘West Pant-Well of Hawick’ mentioned in a court case of 1829 (‘pant’ suggests a roof or covering, as in the later ‘Pant Well’ of Selkirk’s Market Square).

papa (paw-pi) n. grandfather – ‘A bet ma papa’s aulder is yours’, ‘ma ded’s ded’s ma papa, an so’s ma mam’s ded’.
pape (pap) n., arch. a pip, dried fruit stone, particularly from a cherry, formerly used in children’s games – ‘...the dyed yins was worth mair is the ordinary papes’ [BA], ‘One game, much in favour in autumn with sporting blades, was races with ‘papes’’ [HAST1908], ‘As in the boyish days when he [J.E.D. Murray] carved the monogram of the hero of the occasion on the ‘dyed papes’ (cherry stones) ... ’ [HAd], ‘Black shoogir-waeter, a paeip a sook’ [ECS], pl. a game formerly played by boys using dried cherry stones (also written ‘paip’ and ‘paep’).
Pape (pap) n., arch. Pope – ‘...the said yeir, month, day, hour, and place that is, Indiction and Pape before specificit’ [JW1558] (obviously more common in Hawick before the Reformation, as in this 1558 sasine; the last such Pope was Paul IV, 1555–59).
pape-a-go (pā-pu-gō) n., arch. a summer and autumn children’s game in which cherry stones were used as tokens in paying for turns at various funfair-type games – ‘oo’re playin pape-a-go’, ‘An’ the fee for a keek Was, of course, pape-a-go’ [??], ‘Pape a Go, as I remember it, was a seasonal amusement like tops or boods...’ The standard unit was one pip (pronounced ‘pape’) ... and the customary chant of all stall-holders and promoters of side-shows was ‘A pape a go! A pape a go! Every time you do it, a pape and another go!’ [Scotsman, 1955].

the paper train (thin-pā-pur-trān) n. popular name for the express train from Edinburgh Waverley, carrying the evening sports editions of the Saturday newspapers (the ‘pink’ and ‘green’ papers). It typically left at 5.54 p.m. and reached Hawick around 7.20 p.m. – ‘At easter time oor eggs oo’d dye Oo heard the paper train gaun bye...’ [IWL].
pap-o-the-hass (pawp-ō-thu-haws) n., arch. the uvula – ‘...an ma paap-o-the-hass is yookin ti let oot some richt, guid, braid Hanick’ [ECS], erroneously applied to the Adam’s apple, a natural feature suggestive of a nipple, particularly in the place name in Southdean Parish (there are alternative spellings).
papper (paw-pur) n. epithet for a frame in a textile factory used to make fashioned ladies underwear, also called a gore.
pappin (paw-pin) n., arch. pap, pulpy mash, paste used by weavers for dressings their webs.
paraphrases (paw-ru-frā-zeec) n., pl., arch. collection of metrical versions of passages from the Bible adopted in 1781, intended to be sung, and usually printed at the end of the Scottish Bible – ‘A still stronger dislike was felt in some districts of the country to the introduction of the paraphrases in public worship’ [RJR].

Paris (paw-ris) n. Lawrence (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Tidhope in 1757. Perhaps the same Lawrence in 1775 had an account with the Burgh of Selkirk for lighting and cleaning lamps; there are men of the same name recorded in Selkirk having children with Jean Angus in the period 1778–81 and with Janet Riddell 1768–74. He is probably the ‘Laurence’, husband of ‘Peggy Cheap’, whose son of the same name died in Hawick in 1811.

parishin (paw-ri-shi) n., arch. a parish, body of parishioners – ‘Ane treyll and valuatioun maid of the lands within the parochine of Hawik ... ’ [PR1627], ‘...ye have payid for burning of the witches our parochin thinkis our high seth and in respect ye have payid the same’ [SPB1629], ‘...and then to come down before the parochine and ask for her forgiveness for that slander’ [Ash1635], ‘The whilk day being appointed for the admission of Mr Henry Elliot to the function of the ministrie, at the parochin kirke of Bedroule ... ’ [Bed1640], ‘The upper end of the parishine of Hassendean’ [BR1658], ‘The particular valuatiouns of the particular rowmes of ye said parochine’ [BR] (there are many spelling variants, e.g. ‘parochin’; cf. the older paroche and the more recent parish).

Paris press (paw-ris-pres) n. a machine in the knitwear industry used to steam-blast and vacuum-dry garments on an adjustable metal body, replacing the use of the ‘boardin-hoose’ – ‘A work on the Paris press’, ‘How interesting, do you commute weekly?’

Park (pawrk) n. local name occasionally used for Branxholme Park, e.g. in baptismal records of 1708 and 1712.

Park (pawrk) n. former tower on the east bank of the Hermitage Water, somewhere near Redheugh in Liddesdale, once a stronghold of the Ellicots. The precise location is uncertain, but a recent claim (apparently through dowsing!) puts it just opposite Redheugh farm. It is probably the ‘Parkis de Casteltoun’ listed in the Liddesdale rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 4 merks.

Sym Elliott of the Park’ is recorded in 1586. It was later distinguished from the more important lands of ‘Copshaw Park’ through the designation ‘Little Park’; it thus appears in the 1694 Hearth Tax records, with William Scott as tenant. The farm stead was combined with the farm of Powisholm on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; there it is shown as an enclosed piece of land and house near the Hermitage Water, a bit to the south-east of Redheugh (it is marked on Gordon’s map c. 1650, as ‘Park’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Little Park’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it must be related to a former hunting or agricultural enclosure; note that it is easily confused with the other ‘Park’ further south, close to the modern Newcastleton; see also Little Park).

Park (pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, close to the modern Newcastleton, also known as ‘Copshaw Park’. It is easily confused with lands of the same name, also called ‘Castleton Park’, which lay to the north, on the Hermitage Water. The original location has probably been obliterated by Newcastleton village, but on modern maps Park Hill, reaching a height of 258 m lies to the west of the village. In the rental roll of 1541 it is valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Simon Elliot. ‘Ryche Elliott of the Park’ was recorded in 1548. ‘Jock o the Park’, also known as ‘Little Jock Elliot’, subject of a Border ballad, was said to be the man who wounded the Earl of Bothwell in 1566, causing Mary Queen of Scots to take her famous ride to Hermitage Castle. His tower may have stood where Newcastleton railway station was built. ‘Rowie’ or ‘Robin’ of the Park is recorded in 1578 and 1581. ‘Sym Elliott of the Park’, ‘James Rowe in the Park’ and ‘Archibald Elliott of the Park’ are further recorded in 1581. Archie, ‘Scot’s Hob’s Jock’ and ‘Rowie’s John’ of the Park are listed in 1584. ‘Young Archie of the Park’ occurs in 1599, James Scott possessed ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632 and ‘Rollie, called Park’ is recorded in the 1660s. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1694, and John Scoon also had his blacksmith’s there at that time. This is probably the Park where John Elliot was recorded as farmer in 1786–92 – ‘Ma kinsmen are true, an’ brawlie, At glint o’ an enemy, Round Park’s auld Turrets they rally, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] (also called ‘the Park’, it is ‘Park’ in 1541 and ‘Parke’ in 1583; it is recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Copshaw and Copshaw Park).

Park (pawrk, pärk) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Oulveleugh head’ in 1737 and Wolfcleuchhead in 1741. He is probably related to William, who was at Wolfcleuchhead later. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1737); James (b.1738); Janet (b.1740); Ann (b.1741); and John (b.1745). Andrew (b.1815) son of shepherd William, he was born in Inverness-shire, one of 13 children, and grew up in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was a ‘Wool Carder’, living at ‘Upper Lynnwood’ (probably Lynnwood Cottages). He was also said to have worked as a foreman in a large woollen mill, was a great reader, naturalist and inventor. In 1857 he presented to the Museum some buckles worn by Mungo Park on his first journey to Africa (suggesting he was a relative). The Archeological Society also purchased from him a stuffed golden eagle. He became a factory superintendent in Hawick before emigrating to Andes, Delaware County, New York in 1857 with his wife and eight of their children. In 1849 he married Sophia Milligan (1819–79) and they had 11 children, 9 born in Hawick: George (b.1839); William R. (b.1841); Jane (b.1843), who married Charles.

Thomas (b.1845), minister at Allegheny City, Pennsylvania; Janet (b.1847), who married Charles Wheeler; David Henry (b.1856); Andrew (1852–1910); Isabella (b.1854), who married Dr. Stroud of Ontario; Sophia Ann (b.1856), who married J.R. Gordon; Ellen (b.1859), who married James Page; and Margaret Ann (b.1866), who married R. Darr. David (18th C.) tenant farmer at East Bucleuch until about 1800. He could be the tenant in ‘Dum Fedlain’ who in 1793 was in dispute with William Pringle, formerly shepherd at ‘Dum Fedlain at Howpasley’ regarding the loss of 10 sheep. It is unclear what ‘Dum Fedlain’ may refer to. David Scott (b.1806/7) brother of Andrew and son of shepherd William and Janet Main from Inverness. He was born at Abertarff, near Inverness, but grew up in Hawick. The family were probably related to Mungo the explorer. He was a grocer and spirit dealer, as well as draper and toy merchant at 19 High Street. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a grocer, flint glass dealer, toy dealer and draper on the High Street. He was one of the first deacons at Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. His wife Isabella was a daughter of a French prisoner of war called Cabourne, and a sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson; she died in 1866. His children included: Helen (b.1831), who married Walter Scott; William (1833–97), who was unmarried and a draper’s assistant; Janet Georgina (1835–1905), who married Thomas Morton; John Scott Douglas (1837–1906) also a draper; Jane Maria Paterson Blake (1839–1904), who died in Hawick; Isabella (b.1842), probably young; David Scott (1844–1924), who died in Devon; Agnes Isabella Jardine (b.1848), who married Draper John Forbes; and Robert Andrew Scott (1851–1903), who died in Sunderland. David Henry (1850–1910) born in Hawick, son of Andrew and Sophia Milligan (sister of Robert Milligan). The family emigrated to America in 1857, where he ran a farm implements business with his brother and then moved into real estate, finally becoming a prominent citizen in the community of Carroll in Iowa. He helped build the town there, and was instrumental in erecting the town’s Masonic temple. He married Edith C. Vette and had 3 daughters. Hercules (16th/17th C.) one of a number of men fined in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He is referred to as ‘alias callit Will the Bastart’, and some of his accomplices included Armstrongs of Kinmont. James (b.1813/4) from Morebattle, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. His business was on Main Street. His wife was Margaret, from Bowden Parish. Their children included Agnes, Thomas, James and Mary. John E. (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was Cornet in 1825. Also in 1825 he was listed as a grocer on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. John (19th/20th C.) worker at Pesco’s and rugby player with Hawick R.F.C. He played as a forward for the Greens in 1904/5 and was Club President 1935–38. Joseph (b.1808/9) born at Clintmains in Berwickshire, he was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he was on the south side of Main Street and employed 2 men. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Thomas, Walter, Robert, James, Adam, David, Elizabeth and John. Mary (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Thomas Brydon as owner of 2 horses at Hoscosethiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Mungo (1771–1806) famous African explorer, born at Foulshiels, near Selkirk, the 7th child of a tenant farmer, also Mungo. At one time he tried to set up as a medical practitioner in Hawick, but apparently found it more taxing than darkest Africa. He apprenticed to a surgeon in Selkirk, then went to Africa in 1795, returning again in 1805, when he drowned at Boussa on an ill-fated expedition to find the source of the the Niger. There is a statue of him in Selkirk, and the ruins of his cottage still exist. An ornament from the grate out of the house where he was born is in the Museum. And buckles worn by him on his first African journey were donated to the Museum in 1857. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was at Craikhope. His sons Andrew and Archibald were baptised in 1728. Thomas (19th C.) farmer at Little Cote, Cavers Parish. He was one of the Tory supporters victimised at the ‘Tully’s Mill’ election riot of 1837. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew, he was born in Hawick, moved to America at age 13 and worked on a farm, before becoming a minister at Walton, New York. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1728, ‘M...’ in 1732 and Redfordgreen in 1734. His children included: William (b.1728); Agnes (b.1730); Margaret (b.1732); and Janet (b.1734). Walter (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (18th C.) Park

resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1725, Craik in 1726 and Wolfcleuchhead in 1734 and 1737. His children included:
an unnamed child (b.1725); Margaret (b.1726);
Mary (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); and Jean (b.1739). William (d.1809) resident of Wolfcleuchhead. He is probably related to Andrew, who was at Wolfcleuchhead earlier. He was recorded there in 1763, 1764, 1765 and 1767. He married Ann Harkness in Robertson in 1762 and their children included Isobel (b.1763), Helen (b.1764), Isobel (again, b.1766), William (b.1767), John (b.1769), Helen (b.1764), Janet (b.1771), John (b.1773), Mary (b.1775) and James (b.1779). In 1763 and 1767 he is recorded as ‘younger’, suggesting he was son of another William. His wife is probably the ‘Isobel’ Harkness whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Rae in 1790. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, where he was ‘from olfcleuch head’. William (c.1780–1844) shepherd, born in Inverness, he came to Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1798 he married Janet Main.
Their children included: John (b.c.1801); James (b.c.1803); David Scott (b.c.1805), merchant in Hawick; Andrew (b.1806), who must have died young; Thomas (b.1808); Robert (b.1811); Andrew (b.1815), who married Sophia Milligan and emigrated to the U.S.; William (b.c.1820); Jane or Janet (b.c.1826); and several other daughters.
Most of the family returned to the Highlands, but David and Andrew remained. William (b.1788) born at Crooks in Westerkirk Parish, son of William, who was killed in Grenada. He worked from an early age as a cow-herd, later becoming ‘mininger’s man’ to Rev. Dr. Brown of Eskdalemuir.
He later rented the farm of Holmains in Dalton Parish, and spent more time contributing poetry to newspapers. He became editor of the Dumfries and Galloway Standard, but died shortly afterwards. He published ‘The Vale of the Esk and Other Poems’ (1833). William (19th C.) hair-dresser who was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887. He was also a Bailie, and acted as judge for the Cornet’s Races. He was first appointed to the Race Committee in 1879 and later became its Chairman. His father was toy merchant David S. William (1833–97) son of David S. and Isabell Cabourne. He was a draper who succeeded Anthony Dodds as Registrar for Hawick in the 1880s. His office was at 19 High Street. William (b.c.1837) son of James and Ann and brother of frame-worker Thomas. He is listed as ‘Disability: Imbcill’ at 26 Loan in the 1861 census, and is probably the ‘Wullie Pairk’ mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’. William (19th/20th C.) bank manager. He married Agnes, daughter of farmer James Henderson. William (1909–82) O.B.E., son of John, who was a director at Peter Scott’s.
He was educated at Hawick High School, before going to university and then joining the staff of the National Library of Scotland. He eventually became Keeper of Manuscripts there. He remained a keen Common Riding supporter, being a member of the Mosstroopers’ Club as well as serving as President of the Callants’ Club in 1956.
In 1954 he wrote the book ‘The First Fifty Years of the Hawick Callants’ Club, A Short History’.
He married May, 2nd daughter of Robert Wilson from Braemar Knitwear. He was once described as ‘the amiably eccentric William Park, who for all his broad literary cultivation and scholarly insight was the least productive of curators’.

Park (pwrk) n. nickname for a former riever. He is recorded in 1502 as ‘vocatis park’, but his actual name is not given. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Pee-bleshire.

park (pawrk) n. a field, agricultural enclosure, ‘inby’ land on a hill farm, a hunting enclosure –
‘If Simon wishes to use the wester part or hill for a sheep park he must enclose the same with a stone fence and the park thereafter not to be ploughed’ [SPB1773], ‘The parks are ribbed wi’ meltin’ snaw And the hills are derk wi’ rain’ [DH] (see also pairk and perk; the word is used in one of these older meanings in several local place names, e.g. Branxholme Park, Hermitage Park, Park, Cottage Park and specific fields).

the Park (thu-pawrk) n. Wilton Lodge Park, consisting of 107 acres (43 hectares) around the banks of the Teviot at the southern end of Hawick. The house and estate were caslled Lang-lands until 1790. The grounds contain walls, the Museum, the Walled Gardens, sports fields, and recreational facilities. The land was pur-bought for £14,000 by the Town Council in 1889, and was fortunately left as a park, to be enjoyed by generations of Teries. A map of the estate was drawn up in 1890. Several structures in the Park, including the gate lodge and war memorials are grade C listed buildings. A major regeneration project in 2015–18 (paid for by the Heritage Lottery Fund) saw a new bandstand erected, the Laurie and henderson Shelters renovated, the Walled Gardens renewed, a new gallery in the Museum opened, an additional footbridge and new cafe constructed, the playground modernised, the fountain restored and the gates replaced – ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide Doon throw the Park at eventide In Hawick ma Border hame’ [IWL].

Park Brig (pawrk-brig) n. Park Bridge, also known as South Bridge, on the Riddell estate. It is a category B listed structure, constructed in the late 18th century.

Park Cottage (pawrk-ko’-eej) n. former name for a cottage in Wilton, probably on Langlands Road near the foot of Rosalee Brae. The Davison family were there in 1841.

Parkdaill (pawrk-dal) n. area of private housing between the main road and the Teviot, just south of Hawick, named in 1923 for its proximity to Wilton Lodge Park. It was once the site of one of the main fords across the Teviot, connecting to a lane (still preserved) which went up the hill to join the main road near Longbaulk. On a wooded knoll opposite Parkdaill is the site of a 14th century longhouse and byre which were excavated in 1965.

the Park Dyke (thu-pawrk-dik) n. former name for a small stream or ditch forming part of the boundary of Templehall and Brewlands, described in a document of 1567 (written ‘the parkdyik’ in 1567 and ‘the park dike’ in 1604).

Parker (pawrk-cur) n. Jane (19th C.) one of the 4 operators of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. Roger (19th C.) gamekeeper at Stobs Castle about 1875, when he ‘winged’ a buzzard on the estate. He was also gamekeeper on the Branhomle estate. He married Margaret Beatson in Hawick in 1863. Their children included: Margaret (b.1867), who married James Aitkin Henderson; Mary (b.1869); and Elizabeth (b.1872).

Park Grove (pawrk-gröv) n. road of private houses near Wilton Dean, built in the 1990s on part of the former allotments.

Parkhead (pawrk-heed) n. local name used for Synton Parkhead, as marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Note that there are several other places of the same name.

Parkhead (pawrk-heed) n. area at the top of the Borthwickbrae estate, now marked by Parkhead Plantation. It was ‘Borthbrae parkhead’ in 1757 when Robert Hutton was living there. Andrew Davidson was there in 1763 and Walter Scott in 1767 (it is ‘Park Heads’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Borthwickbrae Parkhead).

Parkhead (pawrk-heed) n. name used locally for Ormiston Parkhead.

Parkhead (pawrk-heed) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. The name was still recorded in the late 17th century.

Parkhill (pawrk-, perk-hill) n. farm between Chisholme and the Snoot. It is reached either via Chisholme House or by a grassy track leading up from near the Snoot Kirk. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘100 lb., vicarage 20 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Lairhope. It was valued at £200 in 1643, when owned by Walter Chisholme. There were 16 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Chisholme, Margaret Scott, Walter Chisholme, Thomas Dodds, Marion Scott, Janet ‘Birrone’, Patrick Murray, Margaret Harper, Margaret Murray, Bessie Wilson ‘Ed.’, Bessie Wilson ‘Younger’, Robert Chisholme, Jean Chisholme, William Chisholme, Steven Rule and Janet Shiel. James Noble was living there in 1687. Along with much of neighbouring area it was transferred from Hawick Parish to Robertson in 1689/90. Around this time it was separately East and West Parkhill. The lands were held by the Chisholmes from at least the early 15th century until the 19th; presumably younger sons of the Laird of Chisholme were at one time given the lands, followed by their descendants. In 1649 Robert Chisholme in Chisholme Mill inherited the eastern lands from his father William, who is described as ‘portioner of Parkhill’. John Hume and John Allan were recorded there in 1711, Walter Hume in 1713, John Nichol and Robert Cosser in 1717, Adam Hobkirk in 1721, Walter Turnbull in 1721–34, Robert Scott in 1723, John Watson in 1725, John Turnbull in 1725–28, John Gowans and John Nichol in 1727, Robert Govenlock in 1734–42 and James Laidlaw in 1736. John Miller Park Hill (park-il) n. hill to the west of Newcastleton, reaching a height of 258 m, and connecting with Bedda Hill to the north. The area is rich in archaeological evidence, with 4 groups of buildings within enclosures on the eastern side, an enclosure near the summit and boundary banks all around. However, some of this has been obliterated by the golf course landscaping.

Parkhillhaugh (park-hil-hau) n. flat land around the Borthwick north of Parkhill farm. William Gledstains was living there with his family in the 1820s. John Elliot and his family were living there in 1841 and 1851. The Snoot Kirk was built there in the 1840s.

the Parkhill Loft (thu-park-hil-loft) n. former loft in the old St. Mary’s Kirk, erected by Chisholme of Parkhill when that estate was within Hawick Parish, i.e. before 1689. It is possible that this became known by a different name after Roberton Parish was created. This gallery was replaced in the new church, built around 1763.

parsonage (par-so-neej-tund) n., arch. a major title, originally payable to the parson (rather than local vicar), also referred to as the ‘parsonage teind’. In the 14th and 15th centuries it would have been common for ‘alien rectors’ to take this major part of the ‘benefice’ as a special favour, while the actual ecclesiastical and pastoral duties were carried out by someone receiving only the ‘vicarage teind’ – ‘Item, the Flex, estimate to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 5 lbs.’ [PR1627].

Parson’s Hole (pawr-sinz-hoil) n. area to the east of Ashkirk village, where the track to Synton Mains crosses the Tathyhole Silke. It is said that a minister was once thrown into a pit here by the congregation.

particulate (par-ti-ki’) n., arch. a parcel of land, specifically a lot in a burgh. The area was typically equal to 1/4 acre or a Scots rood, corresponding to 13,690 square feet. However, in a town the lands were sometimes divided into lots that were around 20 feet across at the main street and extended back considerably; this was approximately the case in Hawick. According to the 1537 charter, holders of land in Hawick had to annually give 5 pennies to the Baron, in 2 installments at Whitsunday and Martinmas, for each particulate. It was traditionally said that the owners had to perform this duty in person until the Baron grew tired of being bothered and so at some point relieved them of the need to make future payments.

The Land Tax Rolls of 1663 list ‘The Particats of Hawick’ being valued at £97 16s 8d (and just £97 in 1678). It was stated (in a legal opinion regarding tenure in Hawick) that there were approximately 124 particates in 1667. The ‘particat men’ were explicitly excused from attending the Baron’s Michaelmas Head Court in 1670 because of the bad state of the crops. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish it is recorded that apart from the major landowners, the Proprietors of Particats in Hawick’ had land valued at £97. At the time of the Division of the Common, there were approximately 170 proprietors of particats in the Town. Parts of the ‘Particot Lands of Hawick’ are still referred to in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls – ‘The said Pew was allocat to Robert Deanes, partick man of the lands of Hawick’ [PR1715], ‘If the particate men, mentioned in the Charter, had a right of property in the Common, and, as the suspenders allege, the whole property, it would have been most unjust to have authorised a lease of any part of it, without allowing them at least a share in the rents’ [JW] (the word corresponds to the Latin ‘particata’, related to ‘pertica’, meaning a measuring rod, a ‘perch’, or the area of land measured with it; the word appears to have been used more commonly in the Hawick area than elsewhere).

particular (par-ti-ku-lur) adj. particular – ‘Aw ken the wee bit acknowledgement was meant for me in particular case . . . ’ [BW1978] (note that the 3rd syllable has a u sound, rather than the English yoo).

Pasche (pawshi) n., arch. Easter, Passion. This was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet around the 16th century, specifically the 2nd Tuesday after Easter (recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622).

Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname may be a transcription error for something else.

Passchendaele (pa-shen-dal) n. ridge near Ypres in Belgium, scene of an atrocious battle ordered by Douglas Haig in the Autumn of 1917. Perhaps as many as 250,000 Allied men were lost, including around 70 locals, who have no known graves – ‘On the road to Passchendaele On the road to Passchendaele Where the brave will live forever On the road to Passchendaele’ [AIB].

Passelow (pas-lo) n. Abbot (16th C.) commander of a group of soldiers, armed with ‘hag-buts’, which were quartered in Hawick in 1549, while Buccleuch had horsemen garrisoned at Peebles and Selkirk. This is mentioned in a letter of Sir Thomas Holcroft to Somerset (also spelled ‘Passelew’, ‘Pashley’, etc.; it is uncertain who this was, and what effect the garrisoned troops had on the Town).

Passenger (paw-sin-jur) n., arch. a passer-by, wayfarer – ‘Robt. Hod, passenger, was fyned, outlawed, and ammerciatt …for his disorderly mairrage with Margiitt Armstrong …’ [BR1689].

Pass fri (paws-fri) v., arch. to set aside, dispense with, renounce, give up – ‘Upon which report the Session resolved to pass from their summonds and intended process against her’ [PR1724], ‘Walter Turnbull, English Schoolmaster in Hawick, was sworn and admitted heritable burgess of this Town).’

Passin bell (paw-sin-bel) n., arch. tolling of church bells formerly carried out during the passing of a funeral procession to the grave. In Hawick this was done at St. Mary’s, usually by the town bellman. Burgesses and some others had the right to request this service for a certain fee. In 1694 it was stipulated that only those who had contributed to the cost of the new bell were entitled to use it for funerals. In 1717 the cost was 2 shillings for non-Burgesses in Hawick and 6 shillings for those who lived outside the Burgh.

Passit (paw-see, -si) pp., arch. passed – ‘For in thy wraith a’ our dayes ar passet awa …’ [HSR].

Paton (pā-z-in) n. Charles (1752/3–1818) teacher of a school in Callander, he was licensed to preach by Deer Presbytery in 1779. The following year he became preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ and stayed until about 1785 (when James Sanson took over). He became minister at Ettrick in 1791 and remained there until he died (of a stroke). His native tongue was Gaalic, and it is said that he was never a very popular preacher, since he still had to translate his thoughts into English. Maj. James of Crailing (b.1831) son of John, his mother being an Elliot. He was educated in Edinburgh and rode on the last journey of the coach ‘Chevy Chase’ back to the Borders. He joined the Kings Own regiment in 1850 and retired from the army in 1871, having been decorated for service in the Crimean War and India. Back home he was a Major in the Border Rifle volunteers and later commander. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded his father to the Crailing estate in 1889. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, served on the county council and was also Deputy Lieutenant. In 1863 he married the eldest daughter of J.C. Lamb of Ryton and his eldest son was John. Maj. John William Joseph, M.B.E. (1924–2020) born in Hawick to Archibald and Isabella Graham, he was one of 7 children, growing up in Drumlanrig Square. The family moved to Glasgow when he was still a child and he lied about his age to join the army in 1940. He had a distinguished career in the military, extending over 30 years, starting as one of the first members of the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers. He took part in the D-Day landings and was on a ship bound for the far east when the war ended. Afterwards he worked briefly in Selkirk, but then re-enlisted, serving in several places overseas. He became a Sergeant-Major at the age of 26, was commissioned in 1963, became a Captain in 1964 and retired in 1975 with the rank of Major. After retiring he worked as a volunteer at Fyvie Castle in Aberdeenshire. In 2009 he received the M.B.E. for services to heritage in Scotland. Walter (b.1817/8) from Crailing, he was a baker at 23 High Street. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Ann and they had a daughter Beatrix. He was probably deceased by 1861, when his wife and children were living with his wife’s cousin Jane Grieve at the Crown Inn. Walter (19th C.) innkeeper at 78 High Street in 1875.

Patonhaugh (pā-z-in-hawch) n. former farm in Southdean Parish, just over on the south side of the Jed Water to the south of Edgerston Rig (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Patrick (pa-reek) n. Alexander Bonthorn (1858/9–1937) manager at tweed manufacturers Robert Noble & Co. He married Margaret, daughter of commission agent James Hunter, and she died in 1933, aged 75. Their children were Alexander (minister), James (of New York), and Lieut. John Bonthorn (of the K.O.S.B., killed at Gallipoli). His wife was one of those from Hawick who travelled to visit Gallipoli in 1926. Alexander (1887/8–1941) eldest son of Alexander Bonthorn. He was educated at Durham University and spent almost 20 years as Chaplain to H.M. Forces in India. He was then Episcopalminister at Newton Ferrers, Plymouth, where he died.

Patrick Cunningham’s Lands (pa-reek-ku-ning-humz-lawndz) n. former name for lands within Hawick Parish. They were formerly held by the Parish Minister, but must have been given heritably, since they were later held by his descendants. The lands may have originally been given to Rev. Robert Cunningham by Scott of Buccleuch, and then passed to his son Patrick (1636–c.1706), who was a Burgess of Hawick, becoming minister at Kirkton; he was often referred to as ‘Mr.’, a designation which was also applied to the lands. Rev. Robert Cunningham (c.1668–1722) was probably a son of Patrick, and held the positions of minister in Wilton and then in Hawick. Another Patrick, recorded owning some of the same lands in Hawick, may have been his son. It was stated in 1767 that part of the lands were then partly in the hands of Bailie Turnbull. They were still referred to as ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when several parts were valued at more than £75, including one piece called ‘Allers Garden’ (which was presumably near Allars Bank). The lands may not have been contiguous pieces, and at least some of them lay within the East Mains of Hawick. Based on who owned some of the lands later, it included part of what was developed as Buccleuch Street.

Patrick of Albania (pa-reek-av-awl-hae-ne-a) n. Parson of Kirkton, recorded as witness to Hawick’s first known sasine in 1453. ‘Albania’ may be Albany perhaps. A ‘Patrick McNawany, parson of Kirkton’ was witness to a charter of Archibald Earl Douglas in 1438; it is possible this was the same man, although there are other Kirktons in Scotland.
the Patriotic Memorial

the Patriots (\textit{thu-pá\textasciitilde{}ree-its}) \textit{n.} name used by a group of townspeople, led by Walter Freeman, who objected to the way that the Common was managed by the Council and Bailies, and in particular the agreement made to give away one third of the land. The supporters of Freeman were 205 in number, mostly Burgesses without property. They organised themselves to oppose all actions regarding the Common in the late 1770s, including letting a small part (to clear the Town’s legal debts); they appointed their own Town Herd, to pasture all of the Common, including the part recently let. At an organisational meeting Freeman declared himself to be Chief Magistrate, whereupon he was imprisoned. The group also threatened the Bailies and Councillors, as well as the party who came to actually divide the Common in 1777. In 1778 they took the Council and Bailies to court, claiming they had failed to properly manage the business of the Town. The decision of the Court of Session also fixed the number of members of the Council at 31.

\textit{patten} (paw\textasciitilde{}in, pa-ten) \textit{n.}, arch. a wooden clog worn to raise the feet out of mud, particularly a wooden sole with an iron frame, which tied on to a shoe – ‘The ladies had in wet weather to walk with pattens, there being neither cabs nor carriages . . .’ [RM]. the Pavilion (θu-pu-vi-lín) n. the Pavilion and Variety Theatre, former picture house in Hawick, popularly known as the Piv.

pawkie (paw-kee) adj., arch. having a down-to-earth humorous outlook, roguish, waggish, wily, sly, crafty, resourceful, shrewd, knowing – ‘In vain – her blink an’ smirkin’ smile, Her pawkie joke, and sleekie wile’ [JoHa], ‘A’ the warplings, an’ wurblings, an’ queer pawkie trade, That slides on the way o’ a man wi’ a maid’ [JoHa], ‘Many a pawky trick he played upon the men of the law by field and river’ [RM], ‘Syne wi’ cootin’ and coaxin’, sae pawky and slee...’ [JT], ‘Willie was shy, and Willlie was pawky, Willlie was tall, and Willlie was gawk’y’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘pawky’ and ‘pauky’).

Pawkie Paiterson (paw-kee-pā-tur-sin, pi’-ur-sin) n. song with words generally attributed to John Ballantyne (although it has also been suggested that it was written by Dr. John Douglas). He basically adapted a traditional Northumberland song, ‘Robin Spraggon’s Old Grey Mare’, into Hawick dialect and with local characters. The original words related to the district of Felton in Northumberland, and in 1888 were said to have been written more than a century before. The antiquity of the tune is unknown, but it has much in common with Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music; although the words of the song clearly derive from ‘Robin Spraggon’s Old Grey Mare’, the tune bears little resemblance (and similarly for its antecedent ‘Hey! boys, up go we!’ published in 1646). This makes the Hawick song quite unique compared with its Northumbrian inspiration. It was recorded being sung at the first ceremonial Colour Bussing of 1887 (by William Wilson), but is certainly much older. The characters mentioned in the song place it around the 1830s or 1840s. The words were not formally written down until long after it had become a favourite, and so there are versions that differ in minor details. An early version appears in Frank Hogg’s Transactions article in 1873, somewhat different words for some verses appear in the Border Magazine in 1896 and another version is in the collection ‘Vagabond Songs’ (1904); these differences suggest that the song was often sung extemporaneously. The tune is one of those played by the Drums and Fifes during the Common Riding and is one of the few Hawick songs in compound time. The song has been a staple of Colour Bussings since the end of the 19th century.

Pawkie Paiterson (paw-kee-pi’-ur-sin) n. general nickname for male members of local Paiterson families. The name probably predates the song. There was certainly a real ‘Pawkie Paiterson’, Robert Paterson, who lived in the late 18th and early 19th centuries about whom the words of the song were written. His descendants lived near the foot of the Loan and farmed at the Loanhead. It is unclear whether Nellie Harkness was his sister or his niece. However, Hawick parish records show that Robert’s father Archibald and his brother James, were both also called ‘Pawkie’. It may be that earlier generations also had this same nickname. Another thing that is unclear is which shade of meaning of ‘pawkie’ was attributed to an early member of this family.

P-Celtic (pee-kel-tik) n. ancient language spe-ken throughout Britain before Anglo-Saxon took over. It is distinguished from ‘q-Celtic’, which includes Scots Gaelic, which was never spoken in the Borders. There were probably 4 main dialects, Cornish, Welsh, Cumbrian and Pictish, with Cumbrian (also sometimes called Northum-bian) being the version spoken around Hawick and in the whole kingdom of Bernicia. Several local place names have probable p-Celtic roots, including names containing ‘pen’ or ‘caer’. Many river names may also be from this era, if not even earlier. There is a possibility that the Hawick slogan ‘Teribus’ comes from a Cumbrian phrase.
Peacefi (peez-fi) adj. peaceful – ‘A peacefu’ an contented mind – The greatest gift that puir mankind . . .’ [WP].
The Peace Medal (thu-pees-me-dul) n. meda-

Peacock (pee-kok) n. James (18th/19th C.) hatter in London. He subscribed to Robert Wil-son’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection of some sort. James T. local businessman who was Callants’ Club President. It is partly thanks to him that the script for Jed Murray’s ‘The Gutterbludes’ survived. John (16th C.) servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes.
He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with Robert Kirkton and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. His name is written ‘Johanne Pekok’. John (b.1801/2) weaver from England. In 1841 he was living on Un-derdamside in Wilton, with his wife Nancy and children Thomas, Walter and William. In 1851 he was still on Underdamside with his 3 sons, as well as his niece Jane McLaughlan, mother-in-law Betty Thomline and brother-in-law William Thomline. He was still living at Underdamside in 1861, with his son Walter and 3 boarders.
He is probably the ‘Bill Peacock’ listed among men who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. Joseph (18th/19th C.) painter in Hawick. He was a member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is listed as a painter on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Jane (or Jean) Miller in 1798;
she was also from Hawick, daughter of James Miller and Christian Wintrope, and died in 1815.
Their children included: William (b.1799); Christian (b.1801); Joseph (b.1803); James (b.1805); Alexander (b.1806); Walter (b.1808); Margaret (b.1809); Thomas (b.1812); and Jane (b.1815).
The baptisms were entered together into the Hawick Parish records together, suggesting the family were part of one of the secession churches. The witnesses in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808 were writer Thomas Miller (his wife’s brother) and merchant James Elliot. The 1803 baptism was before the ‘Congregation at Paisley’. Peter Labour politician, educated at Hawick High School. He was a Councillor in the Highlands from 1982, has been M.S.P. for Highlands and Islands since 1999
lic Services. W.T. former Archaeological Soci-

Peden (pee-du) n. Rev. Alexander (1626–86) born in Ayrshire, he became an outlawed Covenanter, preaching in secret for 10 years before being captured, imprisoned on the Bass Rock for 4 years, then sentenced to banishment. In 1678 he was sentenced to be sold as a slave in the plantations of Virginia; when they arrived at Gravesend all the men (including several locals) were released when their intended jailor could not be found; there were several local men on the same ship. He made it back to Scotland, but still being a fugitive, he lived for a while in Ireland, before returning to Scotland in his final year. There are ‘Peden’s Pulpits’ all over the Scottish moorland, including on Ruberslaw. In addition Denholm Dean once had a ‘Peden’s Thorn’ and a ‘Peden’s Vale’, there was another thorn tree associated with Peden at Earlside (close to Cogsmill) and there is a ‘Peden’s Cleuch’ south of Southdean and an old outhouse there was called ‘Peden’s Barn’. Additionally he is meant to have preached at ‘Peden’s Haugh’ near Langside. On the slopes of Ruberslaw during a conventicle he is supposed to have said ‘O Lord, lap the skirts of thy cloak over puir auld Sandy’, bringing down a mist that allowed escape from the dragoons – ‘That Peden preached often here It has been heard of far and near, And some can yet point out the stone Which he did lay his bible on’ [JaSt], ‘Still on her hillsides round the guarded word Cower noble Peden’s persecuted band: E’en yet, discerning eyes by Melrose see, Becowled, a faithful brother, sombre stand’ [WL]. George (1913–64) son of Walter A. He was a butcher in Hawick. He was a regular singer of his father’s song, ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’. He was Acting Father to Chuck Whullans in 1948. George Mitchell (1944/5– ) son of George and Ella. He was educated at Hawick High School and worked for Barrie Knitwear, later becoming Chairman of Bannatynes and Chairman of the Scottish Cashmere Association. He was Cornet in 1967, and celebrated his Jubilee year in 2017, along with his Acting Father and Mother, Chuck and Nan Whullans (probably the first time this has been achieved). His daughter Laura-Jayne was Cornet’s Lass in 2009. John ‘Jock’ (1913–84) son of Walter A. His recorded rendition of his father’s song ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’ saved it for posterity. Thomas (19th C.) President of the Hawick Co-operative Society in the 1870s. Thomas (19th C.) from Hawick, he was a missionary within Britain, being stationed in Cardiff. His son Michael was a member of the Hawick Home Mission. Walter Armstrong (1863–1954) born in Galashiel, but from a Hawick family, he worked as a butcher in Hawick. He was a keen horseman and cyclist. He was a member of Lodge St. James 424 and Buccleuch Bowling Club, as well as an elder of East Bank Church. He wrote ‘The Lassie That Works In the Peden's Barn

Mill’ and would sing it regularly. Exactly when it was written, and whether it was influenced by any other songs, remains unknown. He had sons George and Jock, both of whom also sang his song at local events.

Peden’s Barn (pee-dinz-bawrn) n. former name for a barn in Southdean Parish. It is said that the Covenanter Alexander Peden came there in disguise, asking about work, and being set to threshing in the barn, only for the farmer to discover the same man preaching at a nearby conventicle on the Sunday.

Peden’s Haugh (pee-dinz-hawch) n. putative name for an area near Langside in the upper Slitrig valley, where Alexander Peden is said to have preached several times.

Peden’s Pulpit (pee-dinz-pool-pi’) n. natural rocky chasm near the summit of Ruberslaw, used for clandestine sevices of the Covenanters, possibly including Peden. It is said that you can still see where he laid his bible, and a large flat boulder there was used as the communion table. It is a narrow cleft in the rocks, on the south-west side of the summit. A carved hollow in a nearby rock, of unknown original purpose, is said to have been used by the Covenanters for baptisms – ‘…Plewed rigs an planteens … an Peden’s Poo-pit buin maist’ [ECS], ‘Look back on majestic Ruberslaw The ghost o’ covenantin’ men Lookin’ doon frae Peden’s Pulpit That’s high above the fen’ [AY].

Peden’s Stane (pee-dinz-stän) n. large stone in an area of moorland between the Hermitage Water and Roan Fell, near the head of one of the streams that makes up Ralton Burn. It is on land belonging to Foulshiels farm. The rock is about 21/2 feet high and inscribed with ‘For Auld Lang Syne AD 1824’ to commemorate a place where it is said that Alexander Peden preached.

Peden’s Vale (pee-dinz-val) n. former name for a deep glen in Denholm Dean Burn, said to be flower-clad in summer. It is about 400 yards below the ruined cottage. It was used for secret Covenanters’ sermons, and according to tradition (and J.A.H. Murray) Peden himself once hid there.

the Pedlar’s Field (thu-pedlurz-feeld) n. cornfield situated where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (in the middle of the north side of what is now Princes Street). The entrance gate was called ‘the Pether’s Yett’.

Peebles (pee-bulz) n. town built in the Tweed valley on the Eddleston Water. It is one of Scotland’s royal and ancient burghs, becoming a Royal Burgh in 1367. It was formerly the county town of Peeblesshire, and headquarters for Tweeddale District Council. There has been a bridge across the Tweed there since at least 1470. The town was destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545 and again in 1547. It once had a defensive wall around the old town, on the right bank of the Eddleston. It was a major centre for brewing and wool production, but now focuses on tourism. St. Mungo’s Well there is supposed to be connected with a 6th century visit. Peebles Castle, built by David I, was long a royal residence, but a ruin by the end of the 17th century, and nothing of it now remains. However, the visible ruins of the Cross Kirk include part of a 13th century friary; this was the burial place of the chiefs of the Scotts until the end of the 15th century. Peebles Hotel Hydro, built 1878–81, and rebuilt 1905–07 after a fire, is a dominating feature. The Mercat Cross contains part of the 17th century original. The Town House dates from 1753, and Chambers’ Institution, built mainly in 1859, has long served as a cultural centre. Peebles Beltane Week at the end of June (focussed on the Saturday closest to Midsummer) was begun in 1897, reinstating the Riding of the Marches and linking it with the ancient Beltane Fair. It includes a ceremony at Neidpath Castle (with ceremonial Wardsens of the Cross Kirk and of Neidpath Castle) and the dancing of the Cornet’s Reel in the High Street. The Cornet and Beltane Queen use accoutrements dating from the 1920s Population (1991) 7,056 (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh for ‘temporary huts’).

Peebles (pee-bulz) n. James of that Ilk (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum de Paiblis’ in 1437 when he was one of 2 ‘procurators’ for Alexander of Weens (probably Weensland) into the hands of the Baron of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens (probably Weensland) into the hands of the Baron of Hawick.

Peedlum (peed-lum) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the late 19th century – ‘Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gang up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

peel (peel) n. a pill – ‘er ee on peels then?’ (sometimes spelled ‘piel’).

peel (peel) n. a keep, small fortified tower, particularly one constructed near the Scotland/England Border around the 16th century – ‘Invidious rust corrodes the bloody steel; Dark and dismantled lies each ancient peel’ [JL], ‘The ruined Tower and Border peel, Beneath the moon’s cold rays Seem once again astir with life
As in the bygone days’ [JCG] (from Old French; also written ‘pele’; the word is used in several place names, e.g. Peel, Peelbrae, Peel Burn, Peel Fell and Peel Knowe).

Peel (peel) n., poet. to skin, injure the skin – ‘He’ll fight the field though heads are peeled’ [MG] (see also peelin their wands).

The house there is a Scottish baronial mansion built in 1909 for a Leith seed merchant. There are several other places around the Borders with the same (or similar) names, including a former seat of the Elliots in upper Liddesdale. Essentially the same lands were called ‘Hairtherne’ in 1533 when first acquired by Walter Scott of Branxholme and it is ‘Peill and Hatherne’ in 1718 when surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties.

Peel (peel) n. former tower on the Peel Burn in the upper Liddel valley, close to the Border, just to the west of Peel Fell. It was once a site of some importance, being next to the Wheel Causeway, formerly the only toad in the neighbourhood. It is now marked only as ‘Hairtherne’ on the Ordnance Survey maps, but also gave its name to the stream and nearby hill. Also referred to as Baxtonlees, the lands were owned by several branches of the Elliot family in the 17th and 18th centuries. ‘Peil’ was listed among the lands in upper Liddesdale that were once held by Jedburgh Abbey. In 1659 it was sold by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside. John Elliot was there according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. The tenant there in 1694 was Francis Beattie. In 1710 it was passed to John Elliot’s only son John, but since he failed to survive his father it then passed 1/2 each to John’s daughters Elizabeth, Christian, Jean and Margaret, and the last 1/2 to his 3 grandchildren! In the 1730s they all sold it to Henry Elliot, a cousin, son of Henry of Harwood. Henry Elliot paid tax on 10 windows there in 1748. His son Henry sold it again later in the 18th century. Thomas Scott bought it from Lord Douglas in 1807. It later passed to William Scott-Elliott and then his brother John Scott-Elliott. In the 19th century there was a shepherd there called Hutton (probably Robert), from whom William Oliver of Langraw collected many Border ballads. John Riddell was farmer there in 1868 (it was ‘Peall’ in 1694, ‘Pill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and also ‘Pill’ in the 1748 Window Tax Roll).

peel-an-eat (peel-an-ee) n., arch. a potato boiled in its jacket – ‘When supper comes, instead of better meat, He feeds on potatoes, peel and eat’ [JR], adj. said of potatoes boiled in their jackets, also applied to a delicate or sickly person (noted by E.C. Smith).

Peel-an-Eat (peel-an-ee)’ n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

Peelbrae (peel-brá) n. former farm, presumably lying below Peelbraehope and near to the ‘Peel Brae’, which is south-east of Priesthaugh, and on the slopes of ‘Muckle Knowe’. The remains of a peel tower there explains the name. Before 1498 the lands were owned by the Elliots of Redheugh and referred to as ‘Tillielee’ or ‘Tilloly’. They were probably owned (or leased) by Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Redheugh served as cautioner for the residents of the lands there in 1574. There were Wigholms there in the early 17th century. It formed part of the extensive Buccleuch lands of Ringwoodfield in a 1660 document, where it is also said to be called ‘Tillieleehope’. William Scott, John Dalgleish and John Telfer were listed there in 1694. The farm was joined to that of Priesthaugh in 1707 and was rented from the Buccleuch Estates by Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill in 1741. The farm was surveyed in 1718 and a plan exists. At that time it consisted of 175 acres and was bounded by Dodburn, Priesthaugh and Brough. William Elliot was recorded there in 1727 (it is ‘Peilbra’ and ‘Peilbray’ in 1574, ‘Peilbrae’ in 1612 and 1660, ‘Peilbrea’ in 1694 and 1727 and ‘Peilbrae’ in 1741; the element ‘peil’ could refer to a ditch, namely the Catrail).

Peel Brae (peel-brá) n. slope on the west side of Muckle Knowe, lying on the east side of the Priesthaugh Burn. The name is surely related to the former lands of Peelbrae, and perhaps to the pele-house, which is to the north-east. There is a cairn there.

Peelbraehope (peel-brá-hóp) n. former farmstead up in the hills east of Priesthaugh, in the headwaters of the Penchrise Burn. There is now nothing left of the house, but a cairn marks the spot, with a plaque commemorating its long habitation by the Elliots, and stating that it was once an important meeting point on the drove road from Teviotdale to Liddesdale. Thomas Nichol was tenant in ‘Pealbraehopehead’ in 1694. There was a dispute between Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and Ann, Duches of Buccleuch, resulting in the boundary with Penchrise being fixed in 1718. This is described in the survey of Buccleuch estates carried out in that year, when it consisted of 965 acres and was bounded by Priesthaugh and Peel Burn

Dodd on the west and lands owned by Elliott of Stobs to the south, east and north. Sir Gilbert leased the lands from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. The Nichol family were there in the 19th century and J. Armstrong was recorded there in 1868. In the late 19th century it was home of a family of Elliots, with 22 children born to 2 mothers; about 200 descendants recently gathered in New Zealand. The farmstead was evacuated in 1943 when it became part of the firing range for Stobs Camp. The Tinlee Stone is just to the south and a section of the Catrail (the part nearest to Hawick) passes to the north – ‘The soft breeze blawn owre Peelbraehope Seems murmurnin ‘Amen!’’ [WL] (also written ‘Peelbrae Hope’, it is ‘Peilbraehope’ in 1718).

Peel Burn (peel-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running roughly east, past the ruins of Mervinslaw Tower, to meet the Jed Water. There is an area of rig lines to the south.

Peel Fell (peel-fell) n. hill on the Border, southeast of Singdean, reaching a height of 602 m, the highest peak for many miles around.

Peel Hospital (peel-hos-pi-ul) n. hospital near Galashiels, serving the Borders for several decades, and being the main hospital for the Hawick area from after WWII to the 1980s. The estate was purchased by Lord Craigmile in 1939 to build a hospital on, but it became a military one first, consisting of several Nissen huts. Always inadequate, and awkward to get to, eventually a new hospital (the B.G.H.) was constructed at Huntlyburn in the late 1980s.

pell (pel) n., arch. sour milk left in a churn after making butter, buttermilk, specifically in the phrase ‘as soor as pell’, meaning very sour.
pellet (pe-li) n., arch. a sheepskin, usually shorn of its wool, a pelt – ‘What heaps our hearts wi’ heavy wae, An’ wi’ saut drappin’s drouks our pellit’ [JoHa] (also written ‘pelit’; noted by J. Jamieson and G. Watson; see also pett).
pen (pen) n., arch. a hill, particularly a pointed conical one – ‘He lorded it wide o’er the Pen o’ Skelhll’ [HSR] (from the early Cumbric word, being the p-Celtic version of ‘ben’; it occurs in place names, e.g. Penchris Pe and Ettrick Pen, as well as sometimes Skelfhill Pen, the lost placename Penangushope and probably also in Penielheugh).
Penango see Pennango
Penangushope (pen-awng-gis-hop) n. narrow valley through which the Mossopaul Burn flows, a surviving variant of the lost area name Penango. The lands (along with Cauldcleuch) were granted by William, 1st Earl of Douglas, to the monks of Melrose Abbey about 1358, for masses to be said for Sir William Douglas of Lothian and confirmed in 1381. Sir Alexander de Penangushope was witness to a charter of the lands of Lag, Dumfries in the period 1405–12. The lands of ’Penangushope’ were included in some leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500, lying within the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield. Robert Elliot (’Young Robin’) probably held the lands in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented them from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time they were valued at £5. They are still recorded as part of Ringwoodfield in 1621, 1634, 1653, 1660 and 1661, although referred to as ’also called Skelshill (presumably ’Skelhill’ is meant)’ in 1660. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1663. The name may not have occurred after the end of the 17th century (it is ’penangushope’ and ’penangushope’ in about 1358, ’Penangushop’ in 1557, ’Penangushope’ in 1564, ’Penangushope’ in 1574, ’Pennangushope’ in 1621, ’Penangus’ in 1634, ’Pennangushope’ in 1653, ’Pamangoishope’ in 1663 and ’Pamangushope’ in 1693; it is marked as ’Panangus hoap’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map).
Penangushope (pen-awng-gis-hop) n. Sir Alexander (14th/15th C.) witness to a charter of the lands of Lag, Dumfries in the period 1405–12. William (14th C.) collector of contributions of the constabulary of Edinburgh according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360 and 1369. His name is written ’de Penangishop’. He may be related to the William ’de Penango’ recorded in 1332 (this surname surely comes from the region in southern Roxburghshire; see also \textit{Pennango}).

\textbf{pence (pens, \textit{ms}) n.} pence – ‘that’s fower pence hapenny in auld money’ (note sometimes pronounced with no beginning consonant, and a swallowed vowel, ‘\textit{ms}').

\textbf{pencell (pen-sul) n., arch.} a small flag, pennon, alternative spelling of ‘pensil’. This is the first recorded word for the Flag in the Burgh Records of 17th May 1703 – ‘The said day the Common ry-deing was ordained to be upon Fryday, the twenty eight of May, iiM, viJC. and thrice yeares, James Scott, called Laird, was voted to cary the pencell’ [BR1703], ‘… the person or persons that was statut and ordained to carry the towne pencill or Colour the day before being Fryday, the last of May … ’[BR1706], ‘… and George Deanes, merchant, was the first that caried the new pencell, standard or colour … ’ [BR1707] (also spelled ‘pencull’, etc.).

\textbf{Penchrise (pen-kri\textsuperscript{s}) n.} farm south of Hawick, reached from there by a rough track. Traditionally the lands are said to have held an ancient chapel, although there is no evidence to support this (and it probably comes from a confusion over the name). The name is also used for the prominent hill ‘Penchrise Pen’, which is nearby. It was part of the lands resigned by Thomas de Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. In 1464/5 Thomas Turnbull of Penchrise was witness to a local sasine. These were probably the lands tenanted by William Douglas ‘in Pencress’ who was appointed as a Sheriff of Roxburghshire in order to give sasine to Adam Hepburn for the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. It is listed among the lands within the Barony of Cavers in 1511. James Douglas of Cavers and his wife Elizabeth Murray had a charter for the lands in 1512, and there is another Douglas of Cavers deed in 1525. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Mirk Hob’ Elliot. Robert Elliot, ‘Mirk Hob’ was also recorded as tenant in 1576. Peter Elliot was there in 1586/7. Robert Henderson was there in 1618. William Elliot was there in 1680. It was ‘Penchryst’ owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It was included in the lands of the Eliotts of Stobs according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. John Thomson was there in 1684 when his son John was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. It appears to have been among lands inherited by Sir William Elliot from his father in 1692. William Elliot tenant there in 1694. The lands were acquired by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs from Robert Elliot in the early 18th century and after a dispute with the Buccleuch estates the boundary with Peelbrae-hope was fixed in 1718. James Reid was there in 1709, John Elliot in 1728–30, Robert Clerk in 1729 and John Mitchellhill in 1734. Gideon Scott was farmer there in at least 1785–97. In 1841 Alexander Burnet, Henry Scott and their families were living there. A. Linton was recorded there in a directory of 1868. The area around the farm was used for military training between the world wars, with a rifle firing range just to the north-west of the farm buildings – ‘… But the auld gudewife of Penchrise Cam’ in wi’ a shouder o’ mutton’ [ES] (a rare local survival of the old Brythonic or p-Celtic ‘pen’, the name may be ‘pen crys’, meaning ‘the hill with the girdle’, perhaps referring to the Iron Age fortifications, although this origin of ‘chrisre’ is not at all certain; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pencress’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Pencerest’; it is ‘pencrerys’ in 1368, ‘Pencyryste’ in 1464/5, ‘Pentris’ and ‘Pencryste’ in 1511, ‘Pencerise’ in 1512, ‘Penceryste’ in 1574, ‘Pencyryste’ in 1576, ‘Pencyrstye’ in 1586/7, transcribed ‘Pensryste’ in 1618, ‘Penchriest’ in 1684, ‘Penchryst’ in 1687, transcribed ‘Penchoyst’ in 1692, ‘Pencryste’ in 1694, ‘Penchrist’ in 1695, ‘Penchriest’ in 1709, ‘Pencyryst’ in 1718, ‘Penchress’ in 1729 and ‘Pencerest’ in 1839).

\textbf{Penchrise Burn (pen-kri\textsuperscript{s}-burn) n.} stream rising near the Pike and running to the east of Penchrise Pen to join the Slitrig. There is an earth and stone banked enclosure and other banks on a sloping shelf above the Burn, on the eastern side, near Burnt Craig Wood; this could be related to military operations at Stobs Camp. To the west, on the eastern slopes of Penchrise Pen are the remains of a settlement. Further south, also on the west side of the stream are the remains of a homestead, about 25 m in diameter, with a probably hut platform inside, with an entrance on the west and probable old trackway leading to it. Graptolites have been found in the rocks here.

pend (pen-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. vaulted, arched – ‘...Aeath the pendit arches O’ the auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

pendit hoose (pen-dee’-hoos) n., arch. a 2 storey house with a vaulted lower floor. In former times ‘pended buildings’ were the common mode of defensive construction, with the upper floors being reached using a ladder via a hole in the ceiling of the arch below. This construction was partly for protection and partly so the animals could be housed on the bottom floor. The walls were originally several feet thick. Outside stairs projecting into the street were added to most of them in the 17th and 18th centuries. The back of 51 High Street is the last example of such a fortified house in Hawick, with No. 53 being the last one on the front of the street (rebuilt at the end of the 19th century). There were formerly a great number in Hawick, situated all along the High Street and Howegate, but most were replaced during the 18th and 19th centuries.

pen-fauld (pen-fawld) n., arch. the yard near a farmer’s house used for holding his cattle (noted by J. Jamieson).

Penicuik (pe-nee-kook) n. town between Peebles and Edinburgh. It has a ‘Hunter and Lass’ celebration in late May, which began in 1936 and is modelled on the traditional Border Common Ridings. Population about 18,000.

Peniel Heugh (pi-nul-hew) n. officially called the Waterloo Monument, it is a striking local landmark, being the tallest man-made feature in the Borders. It is perched on 237 m (791 ft) Peniel Heugh Hill, north of Jedburgh, which also hosts an ancient British fort. It was built for the Marquess of Lothian to celebrate Wellington’s victory. It is a circular tower, 48 m (150 ft) high, which can be reached via a side road near Monteviot House, although there is currently no public access to the interior. The first architect was William Burn, but the original construction collapsed in 1816 when it was about 3/4 completed (this is sometimes ascribed to a small earthquake). The new design was by Archibald Elliot (also responsible for Jethart Castle Jail) and was completed 1817–24. It was popularly known as ‘Wellington’s Pillar’ around the time it was built. A wooden gallery at the top was added in 1867 to mark Queen Victoria’s visit to the Borders. The trees planted around the hill were reputedly supposed to represent the armies at Waterloo, but there is unfortunately no truth to this. There is also a triangulation pillar on the summit of the hill. There is a booklet by Garret O’Brien.

pendite (pen-di-kul) n., arch. a subsidiary piece of land – ‘...land of Norcroft, with the pairitis, pendicles, and pertinentis of the samyn ...’ [SB1603].
Pennango

– ‘Duist a hip-step-an-a-lowp, an A cam on o another kenspeckle landmerk – Peinleuch’ [ECS] (the origin of the name is possibly the Old Welsh ‘pen’ and Old English ‘hyll hoh’, meaning tautologically ‘hill hill height’; the biblical ‘Peniel’, pronounced entirely differently, may have influenced the spelling that appears on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘the hill callit Paynelheucht or Downalldisknow’ in 1581, which may suggest that the first element was never ‘pen’; the name appears as ‘Painchelhill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Pennango see Penniel Heugh

Penman (pen-mun) n. Dr. (19th C.) doctor in Hawick. He was surgeon to the Mechanics’ Friendly Society. His practice was taken over by Dr. Lorraine in about 1889. George (1921–2000) writer for the Hawick News, contributing the ‘Rambler’ column as well as covering sport. He worked in Pesco’s, finishing as Sales Director, played for Hawick both at rugby and cricket, was President of Hawick R.F.C. 1975–77, and was also Callants’ Club President and Chairman of the Community Council. John (d.c.1688) tenant in Winnington Rig in 1688 when his will was recorded. There was a notary in the Jedburgh area noted in 1631 (who also had a son called John), who might possibly be the same man. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1704); and Henry (b.1706). Thomas (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He was recorded in Whitchesters in 1708. He married Agnes Aitken and his children included Isobel (b.1708), James (b.1710) and Thomas (b.1712). The witnesses in 1708 were James gray in Whitlaw and francis Henderson in Flex. Rev. William (c.1602–68) educated at Edinburgh, he became minister of Morebattle in 1634. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Sturgeon of Torrorie.

Pennanshaa (pen-munz-haw) n. Pennanshail, former farmstead roughly between Harden and Borthwickshiel, lying on the Pennanshaa Burn. Michael Anderson lived at ‘pennans-hall’ in 1773 and 1775. William Black was there in 1793 (the origin of the name is unknown, but could relate to an early resident called Penman).

Pennanshaa Burn (pen-munz-haw-burn) n. stream rising north of Borthwickshiel and running into Harden Burn. The farm of Pennanshaa was located there in the 18th century.

Pennango (pen-awng-go) n. former name for lands around Mosspaul, surviving as ‘Penangushope’ for the valley through which the Mosspaul Burn flows. The name is included in a description of the boundaries of Ringwood when it was granted to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. The land was gifted to the monks of Melrose by William Earl of Douglas in the 14th century. The name also appears as an occasional surname, e.g. in 1552 ‘Sym Pennango’ was paid by the Court to deliver letters to the Laird of Buccleuch, and in the 1577 Edinburgh Burgess roll ‘Andro Penango’ became a Burgess by right of being servant to the Lord Provost (also spelled ‘Penango’ etc. and cf. Penangushope; another example of the ancient p-Celtic root ‘pen’, this perhaps meaning ‘marshy hill’ or ‘uninhabited hill’; the name is mentioned around 1200, and a small valley ‘Penangushope’ occurs in many 14th–17th century documents; it was stated as being pronounced by shepherds as ‘Glinpineagle’ or ‘Glenpenanga’ in notes for the Ordnance Survey in the 1850s; it has recently been fancifully connected with ‘Aigned’, the site of a purported battle involving King Arthur, but there is no evidence for this).

Pennango (pen-awng-go) n. David ‘Davie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having led about 10 Scotsmen on a raid on ‘Brome’ in Gilsland, where the wife of Andrew Routledge was killed. Gyrie (d.bef. 1536) recorded in an account of events in Scotland in 1536. There was ‘ane singular fechting betuix the Johnstounis on the ane pairt, twa Moffettis and Gyrie Panago on the vther pairt’ in the presence of James V; this was perhaps a late case of judicial ordeal by battle. He was killed, along with a Moffat and a Johnstone. It is unclear if ‘Gyrie’ is short for something. Hugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in about 1600 in documents relating to a feud between the Earl of Cassilis and the Laird of Bargany. His name is recorded as ‘Hew Pennandgow’. Hugh (17th C.) witnessed a bond by Lord Mauchline in 1655. His name is written ‘Huge Pennanno’. In an inventory for John Muir of Park in Ayrshire (dated 1685, but probably referring to about 1652) he was ‘Hugh Pennango in Broadlay’. Perhaps the same Hugh was recorded in a case involving the Duchess of Lauderdale in 1685. James (16th C.) recorded in 1532 when he had the gift of all the goods of James Symontoun in ‘Lekclyok’.

Pennango Burn (pen-awng-go-burn) n. former name for lands around Mosspaul, surviving as ‘Penangushope’ for the valley through which the Mosspaul Burn flows. The name is included in a description of the boundaries of Ringwood when it was granted to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. The land was gifted to the monks of Melrose by William Earl of Douglas in the 14th century. The name also appears as an occasional surname, e.g. in 1552 ‘Sym Pennango’ was paid by the Court to deliver letters to the Laird of Buccleuch, and in the 1577 Edinburgh Burgess roll ‘Andro Penango’ became a Burgess by right of being servant to the Lord Provost (also spelled ‘Penango’ etc. and cf. Penangushope; another example of the ancient p-Celtic root ‘pen’, this perhaps meaning ‘marshy hill’ or ‘uninhabited hill’; the name is mentioned around 1200, and a small valley ‘Penangushope’ occurs in many 14th–17th century documents; it was stated as being pronounced by shepherds as ‘Glinpineagle’ or ‘Glenpenanga’ in notes for the Ordnance Survey in the 1850s; it has recently been fancifully connected with ‘Aigned’, the site of a purported battle involving King Arthur, but there is no evidence for this). son James became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was presumably tenant of the mill at Cockburnspath. Simon (16th C.) servant of the Earl of Angus and vassal of the Barony of Douglas. He was servant to the Earl of Angus when he defended Tantallon Castle when it was besieged by James V in 1528. In 1531 he was a member of the royal household and in 1533 received the gift of the ward and marriage of John Carmichael. He was given livery from the King in 1535 and had a gift of the non-entries of part of the lands of ‘Auchincors and Corsyncon’ in Ayrshire in 1535/6. In 1537 he was in ward and his goods were poinded by royal officers, so he had clearly fallen out of favour. In 1538 he was sent from Edinburgh Castle to Tantallon, and in 1540 was back in Edinburgh Castle. He returned to favour with the King later in 1540 and was granted lands in the Barony of Douglas. He may also be the ‘Symiune Pennango’ who was recorded as Captain of Coldingham in 1543. William (14th C.) recorded in 1332 as licenciate in arts and illegitimate son of a married man. He was given dispensation to be ordained and to hold a benefice; however, it is unclear if that happened.

William (16th C.) tenant in Easter Whitfield. He witnessed as precept by the Commendator of Coldingham in 1557. He may be the same William who was granted the lands of Middle Blantagart (in the Barony of Douglas) in 1539, and was surely related to Simon, who held these lands earlier (this surname is surely related to the place in Roxburghshire and was prevalent in Ayrshire, although now extinct; see also Penangushope).

the Pennant (tu-pe-nil) n. another name for the Flag – ‘Nor will their prowess be forgot/While Pennant is on high, For Callants still are ready yet/To serve it well – or die’ [WFC].

penned (pend) pp., adj., poet. arched, vauled – ‘It surely has been penn’d in night, For there’s moon madness i’ the clatter’ [JoHa] (see also pend).

pennies each (pe-nee-ceech) interj., arch. call of a hawker for items that cost one penny each – ‘Where actually ‘a penny each’ was meant, vendors at Hawick Common-Riding games were to be heard calling: ‘Programmes for the games, pennies each!’’ [ECS].

pennil (pe-nil) n., arch. a pennil – ‘... carried the same along the haill common, and through the haill town, deriding, mocking, Scoffing and laughing at the old pennil and bearers and carriers thereof’ [BR1706], ‘The new pennel, standard or colour ... ’ [BR1707] (also written ‘pennel’; an alternative to pensil).

the Pennon Way (thu-pe-nil-wai) n. public footpath stretching 270 miles from Kirk Yetholm in the Borders to Edale in the Peak District (or the other way round). Although called after the Pennies, it also traverses about half of the Cheviots. It is regarded as one of the most challenging long-distance walks in Britain. The closest part to Hawick is the stretch (on the wrong side of the Border) between Windy Gyle and Byrness.

the Pennon (tu-pe-nil) n. a term used to refer to the Flag – ‘We’ll lift our spears of service, where’er our feet may roam, To the Vision of the Pennon on the dear old hills of home’ [JYH], ‘The Cornets, God bless them, all Gentlemen, true, They still guard the Pennon and new life imbue’ [WFC].

penny-bridal (pee-nei-br-dui) n., arch. a wedding ceremony in which the guests contribute a small amount of money towards the entertainment, with any surplus going to the bride and groom – ‘John Hart being cited to compear before the session for making a pennybryddall at his daughter Christian’s marriage ... ’ [BR1703].

Pennycook (pee-nei-kook) n. Alexander (b.c.1835) son of John and Jane, who were from Lanark. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was responsible for the murder of William Ainslie in Free Church Lane, with young William Moore also involved. Peter (b.c.1810) farmer at Highchesters Mill in 1841. He was living there with his siblings Barbara and Robert. He was probably from Dundee and in 1851 was living in Peebles with his sister Barbara, who had married Selkirk innkeeper Walter Brydon. Peter (b.1832) born at Rawflat. He farmed at Newhall in Bowden Parish. He is probably the Peter of Bewlie who served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In the 1860s he resided at Hallrule house. In about 1874 he is recorded being ‘of Bewlie Hill’ when he was owner of lands in Bewlie that had formerly been owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He also held lands in Bowden Parish, including Midlem Mill. In 1855 he married Robina, daughter of Henry Elliot, farmer at Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). They had one daughter, Agnes Ellen, who married James Lindsay, son of George Oliver, solicitor in Hawick. William, J.P. (19th/20th C.) one of the main people involved with the time capsule inserted into the Horse Monument in 1914 and uncovered in 2003. He was probably the same W.M. who was in the first pair to win the Pow Cup in 1905. He lived at 10 Beaconsfield Terrace.

the penny end (θu-pe-nee-end) n. popular name for primary 1 at some schools, or the part of the school where they were taught (such as Buccleuch School and Wilton School, where the first three years were separated).

Pennymuir (*pe-*nee-meir) n. site of Roman marching camps on Dere Street, just a few miles from the Border, near the head of the Kale Water, about 15 miles east of Hawick. Dere Street can be followed from there to Whitten Edge (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘pen y muir’, meaning ‘the hill of the wall’; the name occurs at least as early as 1637, and is often written ‘Pennymoor’).

penny-stane (*pe-*nee-stān) n., arch. a game, similar to quoits, played with a flat, round ‘pennystone’ – ‘[One profanes the Lord’s day by] game-ing at the bob and penny stane’ [HAST1904] (recorded about 1695).

Pen Sike (*pen-sik) n. small stream that rises between Penchrise Pen and White Hill, running to the south to join the Penchrise Burn. At its head there is a linear earthwork crossing White Hill, which is probably an agricultural boundary.
There are also the remains of a settlement in its headwaters, on the south-west slope of Penchrise Pen. It appears that it corresponds to the stream formerly known as Langleuch.

Pen Sike (*pen-sik) n. small stream that rises just to the north of Skelfhill Pen and runs in an easterly direction to join the Skelfhill Burn.

pensil (*pen-sil) n., arch. a pennon, banner, standard, especially used for the flag carried in the Hawick Common Riding in the 1700s – ‘The person elected cornet having declined to carry the pennil [sic], or colour, caused ane great disturbance, confusion, and mutiny amongst the otherwise civil inhabitants’ [BR], ‘See their pensil floating o’er them! See them drive the kye before them’ [RSC]
(from Old French, diminutive of ‘penon’).

Penstemon Alice Hindley (*pen-*sti-*min-aw-*liis-hind-lee) n. large-leaved, perennial variety of penstemon, introduced by Forbes’ Nurseries in 1931, and one of the oldest hybrids in cultivation today. It is a popular plant and was given the Royal Horticultural Society Award of Garden Merit.

pentr (pen-tur) n., poet. a painter – ‘Ay, pen-ter lad, throw to the wund . . .' [JBS] (not particcularly Hawick pronunciation).

Penton (*pen-tōn) n. station on the Waverley Line just south of the Border. The nearby ‘Pen-ton Linns’ are a picturesque series of waterfalls on the Liddel Water (which marks the Border here), and is also an area of special geological interest.
The bridge there was built in 1812, with one of the contractors drowning when removing the wooden supports from the arch – ‘Go with me to Penton Grove, bonnie lassie O, Through its mazie walks we’ll rove, bonnie lassie O, Where the Liddel waters rin, With their wild resounding din, As they flow out o’er the Linn, bonnie lassie O’ [DA].

penult (pen-ult) adj., arch. penultimate, last but one – ‘. . . writtin at Hawik the penult day of Januar’ [RBA1561].

Penwen (*pen-win) n. Robert (15th C.) received the Rectory of ‘Sowdon’, i.e. Southdean Parish in 1424, having been given Holy Trinity in Berwick upon Tweed, but obtaining Southdean ‘by colllection’ first. He is recorded as Rector in 1443 when he was assigned the canonry and prebend of ‘Capyt alias Balderen’ in Dunkeld. He also held the perpetual vicarage of Closeburn and some tithes from Morton. He was further recorded in as Rector in 1444 when he witnessed a charter for the Kers of Altonburn. He could be the same Robert ‘Pennwen’, Clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow, who, in 1447, was granted a canonry of Glasgow, which was the gift of Thomas ‘Perawen’ (presumably a close relative); however, this was blocked when he was found to to be the illegitimate son of a priest, a fact that was dismissed by the new Pope in 1461. This Robert at that time already held the perpetual vicarage of Calder. In 1455 he was master ‘Roberto pendven’ Rector of ‘sow-don’ as adjudicator for a dispute over teinds in Morebattle; ‘Master Thomas Pendven’, Rector of seven weeks after Easter. It was formerly used as one of the days for paying rents and legal fees, and was later referred to as Whitsunday.

the Pentecostal (θu-pen-tu-kos-tul) n. popular name for a Pentecostal congregation (whose members seek to be filled with the Holy Spirit, like the Apostles at Pentecost). They originally met in a Mission Hall on Beaconsfield Terrace before WWI, and in a wooden hut at the bottom of Laidlaw Terrace in the mid-20th century. It was also referred to as ‘the Apostolic’, and held big meetings for children during the War years. The site was also where the Evergreen Hall was later built.

Pentecost (*pen-*tu-kost) n. festival celebrating the descent of the Holy Spirit after the Ascension, ‘Kermachquho’ (probably Kirkmahoe) was mentioned in the same document and hence possibly his brother (and ‘John Pendven’, Vicar of Sprouston recorded in 1475 was surely another relative). He was Robert ‘Rendven’ when recorded as still Rector of ‘Sowdon’ in 1455 (also spelled ‘Pendven’, ‘Pvenen’ and variants).

peppercurns (pe-pur-kurnz) n., arch. a small device for grinding pepper – ‘Peppercurns. A simple machine for grinding pepper, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

peppoch (pe-poeh) n., arch. a collection of cherry stones – ‘Peppoch. The store of cherry-stones from which the peels are supplied; called also Feedow, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also ‘paipoich’).

per (per) n. a pair – ‘...wui a face aa coaleeoom, an a per r o' hullie bi ti Ruberslaw, an there the perr stand, shoooder ti shoooder’ [ECS], ‘...and in this class is the common usage perr o horse (= pair of horses)’ [ECS], ‘When the Royal per arrived Aw ge’id a wee bit wave teh the Duike’ [BW1978], ‘...the biggest per o feet in the band is size 11 1/2 ...’ [CT], ‘...the per’s honeymoon destination wasni near si exotic’ [IWL], ‘...An a per o’ glaury breeks’ [RM], ‘And afore lang, the per o them were tirlin away ...’ [DH] (sometimes written ‘perr’; see also the pair).

perceeeze (per-seez) adj., arch. precise (in HNe1954); also percise.

Percehay (pers-ha) n. Walter (d.1289) described as ‘Walter Pershay’ in a charter of around 1283-85. This involved inspection of the earlier charter of 1260 in which Tarvit was granted by William Avenel (to whom John of Wilton was feudator) to Thomas Wallace. He was the son and heir of Joanna of Wilton, who was probably the heiress of Sir John de Wilton. According to Scottish accounts, he had a role in the murder of the young Earl Duncan of Fife, and was executed by Andrew of Moray of Petty. The Percehay family were from the area of Ryton in North Yorkshire, and after his death is only heard of in Yorkshire. However, in family histories his parents are given as Robert de Percehay and Joan de Vesey. That this is the same name as the Baroness of Wilton recorded in the early years of the 14th century is surely not a coincidence. Perhaps Joan de Wilton was the same woman as Joan de Vesey (if she married twice), or perhaps there were 2 generations here. English records suggest Walter died in 1346, married Agnes and was succeeded by William; but that seems likely to be a son or even grandson, given the dates.

percise (per-sis) adj., arch. precise – ‘...He’d look perceise, and smile and play as suited best: But Death has laid him in the clay, – Well may he rest’ [CPM] (percise).

Percy (per-see) n. Henry (1300–52) 2nd Baron Percy, son of Henry de Percy, the 1st Baron Percy of Alnwick. In 1327 he was created Lord Warden General of the English Marches. From 1334 he was joint Warden with Ralph, 4th Lord Neville. That year he was given lands by Edward III which had formerly belonged to Douglas. This included the town and castle of Jedburgh, Jedforest and Hassendean; this may have led to the rivalry between Percy and Douglas generations later. These lands were recovered by Sir William Douglas about 1338, but retaken by the English in 1346 and his Jedburgh lands were confirmed to him in 1352. He married Idonia Clifford, daughter of Robert de Clifford, Earl of Surrey, who had been the previous Warden. He was succeeded by his son Henry, 3rd Lord of Alnwick. Henry (1320–68) 3rd Baron Percy, eldest son of Henry the 2nd Lord. He served as Lord Warden General of the English Marches from 1352. In 1354 he, along with Ralph Neville, was appointed as a commissioner to deal with Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Douglas, former Keeper of Hermitage. In 1356 he had the town and forest of Jedburgh conferred on him by Edward III, the grant included the town of Hassendean. He married Mary Plantagenet, and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry (1342–1408) 4th Baron Percy and 1st Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry, the 3rd Lord of Alnwick. Like his father and grandfather he served as Lord Warden General of the English Marches, from about 1366/7, serving until at least 1375. He fought in the Hundred Years War and was Warden of the Marches. The entire territory of Teviotdale was bestowed upon him in 1403. He had been a supporter of Henry of Lancaster (later Henry IV), but revolted against him in 1403. These machinations included the siege of Cocklaw Tower (Orniston) along with his son ‘Hotspur’ and their men in May of that year. After Hotspur’s death and his own capture at Shrewsbury he continued plotting against the English King, leading an attack from the North, which led to his death at Bramham Moor. He married Margaret, daughter of Ralph, Lord Neville of Raby. Sir Henry ‘Hotspur’ (1364–1403) son of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland. The Percys were a powerful family based at Alnwick, who laid claim to the throne of England.
in the early 15th century. He was English Warden of the West and East Marches along with his father, and then solely from 1384. His nickname is said to have been given to him by the Scots as a tribute to his readiness to attack. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, but later ransomed. In 1403 he besieged Cocklaw Tower, which has been identified with Ormiston. Henry IV refused to give help, and this was the excuse for the Percy’s to launch their direct attack on the English throne, leading to the death of Hotspur at the Battle of Shrewsbury. He features in Shakespeare’s ‘Henry IV’. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edmund Mortimer, 3rd Earl of March. They had 2 children: Henry, who became Earl of Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married John, Lord Clifford, and secondly Ralph Neville. – ‘Sir Harry Percy came to the walls The Scottish host for to see, Sayd, ‘An thou hast brent Northumberland, Full sore it mueth me’’ [T]. Henry (1421–61) 3rd Earl of Northumberland, son of the 2nd Earl, who was Constable of England and Warden of the East March. He was first cousin of Edward IV. He was made Lord Warden General of the Marches in 1439. He was killed leading the Lancastrian side at the Battle of Towton. He married Eleanor, daughter of Lord Poyning and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry (1449–89) 4th Earl of Northumberland, son of the 3rd Earl. He was one of the few Percy’s to take the Yorkist side in the Wars of the Roses. John Neville was given the Northumberland title for a while, and it was only restored in 1473. He was later suspected of treason in the death of Richard III. In 1485 he was made Warden of the English Middle and East Marches. He was killed by rioters protesting high taxation. He married Maud Herbert, daughter of Lord Poynings and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry Algernon (1478–1527) 5th Earl of Northumberland. He was Warden of the East Marches from 1503, but apparently preferred the life of the court to that of Border warfare. He was in France during Flodden, although his two brothers fought there. In 1522 he was made a member of the Council of the North, and served as Lord Warden General of the Marches 1523–25. He married Catherine Spencer and was succeeded by yet another Henry. Henry Algernon (1502–37) 6th Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry Algernon and Catherine Spencer. He was a suitor of Anne Boleyn in their youth, but sat on the jury that convicted her of adultery in 1536. He served as Warden of the English East and Middle Marches 1527–37. In 1533 he led a force through the Borders that burned Branxholme, as well as Whitchesters, ‘Whitchesterholme’, Whittalaw and Newbigging, among other places. He was apparently quite profligate and eventually had to sell much of the family estates. He was forced to marry an older woman, Mary Talbot, who left him no direct heirs. Henry (1532–85) 7th Earl of Northumberland, brother of the 7th Earl. He was also engaged for many years in Border warfare. After being imprisoned for the third time he was found shot in the Tower of London. Thomas Earl of Worcester (c.1344–1403) younger brother of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland. He fought with distinction in France. He was granted Jedburgh town, castle and forest by his brother, Earl of Northumberland in 1397. He assisted his nephew Henry ‘Hotspur’ in the rebellion against Henry IV and was beheaded after the Battle of Shrewsbury. Sir Thomas (c.1504–37) 2nd son of Henry, 5th Earl and brother of the 6th Earl. In 1536 he was made Warden of the English Middle March, possibly along with his father. He was executed for his role in the ‘Pilgrimage of Grace’ (a Catholic uprising in the North of England). He married Eleanor Harbottle and their son Thomas was the 7th Earl of Northumberland. Thomas (1528–72) 7th Earl of Northumberland, nephew of the 6th Earl, he was Lord of Alnwick Castle. In 1557 he was appointed Warden of the English East and Middle Marches, and engaged in Scottish expeditions for many years, resigning in 1560. He was involved in a rising of Northern England in support of Mary Queen of Scots, and had to hide out in Liddesdale in 1569. He was said to have been betrayed by Hector Graham of Harlaw (a Border outlaw), captured by Martin Elliot’s men and handed over to the Regent Moray, spending the night in Hawick on their way north. He was sold back to Elizabeth I, handed over to Hunsdon at Berwick and later beheaded at York. He married Anne, daughter of Henry Somerset, 2nd Earl of Worcester. She was said to have been robbed by Liddesdale men while passing through the area to visit her husband in Scotland; a ring found at ‘Blakeburn’ (at least 2 centuries ago) was suggested to have been hers. She later went into exile in Europe, but maintained contact with other English Catholic exiles.

Percy’s Gauntlets (per-seez-gawnt-litz) n. trophy long held at Cavers House, captured from Percy Hotspur a few days before the battle of Otterburn. These are small gloves, richly embroidered with pearls and silver, and bearing a lion.
device. Clearly too small for Percy himself, they must have been a lady’s favour, presented to him before going to battle, and Percy’s desire to recover them may have contributed to the severity of the battle. These relics were previously sometimes referred to as ‘Percy’s Penmon’, under the mistaken belief that this was a banner, rather than gauntlets.

Pesco’s (pes-kōz) n. Peter Scott’s, founded in 1878, with their main factory on Buccleuch Street, originally the partnership Adamson & Scott, between Peter Scott and his uncle Peter Adamson. The company started in part of Peter Laidlaw’s old factory at Wilton Grove, was based in the Tabernacle from 1881–93, and moved to Buccleuch Street in 1893, acquiring the former premises of the Commercial Bank. Scott split from Adamson in 1884, when the firm’s title was changed to Peter Scott & Co. The now familiar factory on Buccleuch Street was built in stages and largely completed by 1913, with the classical-style block to the west added in 1923 (designed by J.P. Alison). Behind the front section there are several other buildings, including knitting sheds and a boiler house. The factory retains its octagonal chimney (the only one in the Borders with its original top cornice). There was also another mill on Wilton Path (adjacent to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’, specialising in sports coats) and one on Commercial Road (specialising in hosiery, opened in 1916) in the early 20th century. They were the first firm to guarantee against shrinkage of underwear at the turn of the 20th century. The Hawick factory was devoted to production for the troops during WWI, and supplied the inflated Shackleton expedition of 1914. In 1914 it was described as the biggest firm of its kind in Scotland, employing 800 people. Later it moved from hosiery into knitwear and sportswear. The Commercial Road buildings were used as a billet in 1939 and in 1945 the canteen was opened in the main factory. The Wilton Path factory closed in 1954. A nursery for employees ran until 1958. 16–18 Howegate was sold in 1956. A factory was built in Kelso in 1961 and another at Chirnside in 1974 (sold in 1981). The Queen and Prince Philip visit during the company’s centenary year in 1978. The ‘Peter Scott’ signature is the main company logo, along with the deer image. The official trademark was ‘Pesco’ from 1931 until relatively recently, and that has always been the popular name in Hawick. The firm went into arbitration in 2010, but was temporarily saved by English firm Gloverall. In 2016 the factory ceased production for good and part was demolished in 2020. The ‘Pesco Quotation Book’ (1916) was sold to raise money for the war effort, and after WWI ‘A Souvenir of Peace’ was published. The company has given several notable gifts to the town, including an early motor ambulance and fire-fighting equipment.

the Pesh (thu-pesh) n. headmaster at the High School – ‘Mr. Low was the Pesh it that time’ (derived from the nickname ‘le Pêche’ of Rector Watters, so-called because of his complexion; see also Rectors).

the Pest (thu-pest) n., arch. pestilence, epidemic disease, particular the Plague (see the Black Daith).

pestellet (pest-u-let) n., poet. a small pistol – ‘...But we had pestellets anew, And shot amang them as we might’[CPM].

pet (pe’) n. a favourite – ‘she was the teacher’s pet, an a right sook’.

pet (pe’) n. a huff, fit of pique, bout of petulance, particularly in the phrase ‘ti take the pet’ – ‘hei taen the pet when hei wusni picked first’, ‘she’s in the pet the day’.

Peter Scott’s (pee’-ur-skots) n. Peter Scott & Co., better known as Pesco’s, which was its official trademark until relatively recently.

peth (peth) n., arch. a path, a steep road – ‘...an’ whatsaevir passes throwe the peths o’ the sees[HSR], ‘Haud up my gaeings in thy peths, that my fitsteps skyldena[HSR] (the usual local meaning has no implication of being a narrow footpath, as in the English word).

the Peth (thu-peth) n. Wilton Path, the road leading up the hill, continuing on from Albert Road as part of the old road to Edinburgh. It was also known as ‘Roughheugh Path’ until the late 19th century. It was once very built-up, with a row of houses at the top known as the ‘Path-heid’, and a factory block next to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’. In the mid-20th century it contained a chip shop, the Store bakers, a wine shop and ‘Foosty Broon’s’. Houses, shops and a knitwear factory were demolished in 1972/73,

pether (pe-thur) n., arch. a peddler, packman, travelling merchant – ‘Assozizies George Makwetie fra the claim perswit be John Scott, pether, for a half dozen o’ butes, mae or fewer, alget taken awa fr’s crame in Hawick’[BR1655], ‘The Muse cry’d, ‘Jamie, mind the pether, That bears the pack . . .’’[JR], ‘There’s pethers and potters, and gingergread stan’s, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans . . .’ [DA] (also written ‘pethar’ and ‘pethir’; cf. pedder).

the Pether (thu-pe-thur) n. nickname for anyone who worked as a packman or peddler, particularly in the 18th century, e.g. William Scott from Deanburnhaugh.

Pether Hill (pe-thur-hil) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century, presumably a peddler called Hill – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’[HI].

the Pether’s Yett (thu-pe-thurz-ye’) n. former name for a gate which gave entry to ‘the Pedlar’s Field’, a field in which corn grew in the summer, being the first of the open fields on the land north of what is now Princes Street, where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (from ‘the Peddlar’s Gate’).

Pethheid (peth-heed) n. Pathhead, a former name for the area at the top of Wilton Place, particularly the row of houses that stood on the north side of what became Princes Street (near where the Balmoral Bar is located), as marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map. This block of houses is already marked on the 1810 sketch of Wilton. In 1841 the name appears also to have been used to the houses to the west, on Langlands Road. Note that the place gave its name to ‘Path Head School’, near Winnipeg, Manitoba (also sometimes ‘Pathheid’).

pett (pet, pe’) n., arch. a sheepskin with the wool removed (noted by J. Jamieson; see also pellet).

petted lip (pe’-c-ed-, pe’-ee’, pe-teed-lip) n. a bottom lip stuck out in a sulk, particularly by a child – ‘she put on a right petted lip when she heard she couldna gaun’, ‘deh trip ower yer petted lip’, ‘ee could hing monkeys off that petted lip’ (cf. pettit).

Pettie (pe-tee) n. Rev. Robert Douglas He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1927, but stayed for only a year before moving to Creish.

pettie-point (pe-tee-point’) n., arch. a type of stitch, perhaps similar to what was used in tapestry work – ‘Pettie-point, A particular sort of sewing stitch, Roxb.’[JoJ].

Pettigrew (pe’-ee-gro’) n. John, M.B.E. (b.1882) born in Wellington Street, he became Joint Managing Director of Peter Scott’s. He was a member of the Angling Club and the Masons, and also wrote some works on the woollen trade. He married Esther Scott (b.1874), who was niece of Walter Scott, co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed a sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme. He is listed as ‘domino Roberto Pettigrew’, suggesting he was associated with a church. It is unclear if he was local, like most people in the will.

pettit (pe’-ee’, pe-tee’) adj. petulant, peevish (also written ‘petteet’; noted by E.C. Smith; see also petted lip).

petit-taes (pe-tee-t’=az) n., pl., arch. the feet of pigs (noted by J. Jamieson).

peuchle (peuchle) v., arch. to work ineffectively – ‘That peuchlin’ body never wuns off the bit’[GW], to cough feebly, splutter wheezily (in [HNe1954]), n., arch. a short cough (also written ‘peughle’).

peuther (peuthur) v., arch. to canvass for votes – ‘. . .that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’[BR1756], ‘. . .it for ever should be a stated rule, that no man should thereafter pether for the Magistracy’[BR1763] (also written ‘pewther’ and ‘pouther’; see also powder).

powder (powd ur) adj., arch. pewter – ‘The puder plate qch contained ye water for baptizing of Children was bartered for a Chappin stoup’[PR1711] (also written ‘puder’, etc.).

pewl (pewl, puil) v., arch. to work feebly, struggle faintly – ‘. . .To haul again the inept imple-ments That mauled the body of exhausted earth For yet another puling puny harvest’[DH], ‘Little I thought when we brought thee here A puling babe in its swaddling gear . . .’[WHO], to stifle a cough, to drizzle – ‘It’s pewlin’ an’ raint’[GW], to fall feebly or softly in small lumps (said of snow) – ‘Pewil, Pewl, Peughle on, Used to denote the falling of snow in small particles, without continuation, during a severe frost, Teviotd.' [JoJ], ‘Snaus join the squall, wi’ pu’lin’, pirlin’, An’ drifts, as ’round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’’ [JoHa], ‘It’s pewlin’ on’ [GW], n., arch. a thin curl of smoke, wisp – ‘A pewl o reek fuffelt abuin the ‘It’s pewlin’ on’ [GW], drifts, as ‘round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’ ‘ [JoHa], ‘Snaws join the squal, wi’ pu’lin’, pirlin’, An’ (fawp) n. area near the head of the Et-trick Water, also written ‘Phawhope’. Nether and Over Phaup are separate farmsteads, the latter being a ‘bothy’ on the Southern Upland Way. Earlier the lands were split into Easter and Wester ‘Falwishope’. These were the lands of Sir John Turnbull ‘of Falshope’, whose daughter married George Scott of Synton about the early 15th century. Sir Thomas Turnbull held lands here in the latter part of the 15th century. They were Crown lands, assigned to John, son of Thomas Turnbull in 1483–87, then George Home of Ay-ton in 1488 and his son John in 1490, and then with John’s consent assigned to John Turnbull. In 1494/5 the farm is mentioned as a place that was pillaged for sheep and in turn the residents there were charged with rieving. In 1501 they were half let to Ralph Ker and the other half to the wife of Sir Thomas Turnbull and Ralph Ker still held half the lease in 1502. James Gray was resident there in 1502 when he had remis-sion for stealing livestock. This is probably where William and George Scott are recorded in 1526. In 1541 half the lands were occupied by Andrew Ker of Greenhead and the other half by William Stewart. Will Scott of Midgehope paid rental for these lands to Melrose Abbey in 1557 and Robert Scott of Tushielaw in about 1620. John Wilson was in the Wester part in 1580. Alexander Stewart from there was in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1617. It is said that the farm was without a tenant or any stock for 20 years after the ter-rible winter storm of 1674. Francis Scott ‘of fawhope’ paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. James Scott ‘of Phaup’ is recorded in records of Melrose in 1682. Will Laird ‘of Phawhope’ gave the version of ‘Auld Maitland’ published in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’. The Ballantynes were Lairds in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is easily confused with the farm between Castlewear and Mossopaul of the same name, as well as Fauldshope further down the Ettrick near Aikwood (spelled ‘Phawhope’ and variants; ‘Fauhope’ and ‘Fawhope’ are recorded in 1456; it is ‘Faulishope’ in 1468, ‘Fawlishope’ in 1471, ‘Faulishope’ in 1478 and 1488, ‘Fawlishoip’ in 1487, ‘Faulishope’ in 1490, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1494, ‘Faulishop’ and ‘Fawlishope’ in 1501, ‘Fawlishope’ in 1502, ‘Faulishope’ in 1526, ‘Faldishope’ in 1541, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1589 and ‘Faulhoip’ in 1620; ‘Faup’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Phaup

Phaup

Phaup (fawp) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Fauhope’ when he was on a jury in 1304 to decide on the privileges of Robert the Bruce (when he was still just Earl of Carrick). The jurors were all from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire and hence it seems likely his lands were one of the local places of that name. Andrew (17th C.) notary in Melrose. He is recorded in many documents relating to the Regality of Melrose in the 1650s and 60s. His name presumably derives from the lands in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. Andrew (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassendean’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was written ‘Faup’. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her name is written ‘Faup’. She could be the ‘Bessie Phaup’, married to William Wright, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1685. Elizabeth (b.1815/6) resident of Bedrule. In 1502 Robert Shiel had remission for stealing 8 sheep (15th/16th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1502 Robert Shiel had remission for stealing 8 sheep from him. William (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Langtoun’ (probably Lanton). His will is recorded in 1688 and that of his wife Margaret Mather in 1686 (also written ‘Fawhope’ and ‘Phawp’).

Phaup Burn (fawp-burn) n. stream that joins the Frostlie Burn, roughly from the east, near Castlemeartry. The farmstead of Phaup is along its banks (marked ‘Faupp B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Phawhope see Phaup

pheesant (fee-zin) n. a pheasant – ‘...There isna a walk mair pleasant Now oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o’ ee a pheasant’ [AY], ‘The feel o mushrooms; broilin a gumpit troot; Pheesane ploys in black wuds, wi gameys near’ [DH].

Phenzhopehaugh (fee-nup-hawf, -hawch) n. isolated farmstead situated about 2km up the R ankle Burn from the farms of Buccleuch. This was probably the site of the original manor for the Barony of Rankilburn. Phenzhopehaugh Burn meets the R ankle Burn from the west there, and above to the south-west is Phenzhopehaugh Hill, which reaches 382 m. There is a motte on an area of level ground to the north of the confluence; it is about 40 m by 25 m and about 2.5 m high, surrounded by a ditch, which has a causway across it on the south-west side. This may have been the first residence of the Scotts of Rankilburn (with Sir Richard Scott of Rankilburn, who swore fealty to Edward II in 1296, probably holding these lands), before they moved their headquarters to Buccleuch. About 60 m south of the motte is a large circular enclosure, probably much more recent in age (it is not marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; the stream is ‘Finhopelake’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map and incorrectly a lake is labelled ‘Findhopelake’ near there on Mitchell’s 1851 map).

the Philadelphia Stakes (thi-fi-lu-del-fee-a-ståks) n. race run as part of the Cornet’s Races on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century. The prize-money was presumably raised by exiles from the Philadelphia area.

Philhope (fi-lup) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, and the name for the area around it, particularly the flat region by the river, which has long been a popular picnic spot. In 1530 Christian Inglis, with the consent of her husband Thomas, sold part of the lands to William Brydon, Vicar of Auld Roxburgh for £16. John Hope and John Hall were recorded as the King’s shepherd’s here and in Broadlee, being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. William Davidson and Patrick Nichole were recorded there (probably as tenants) in 1579. There were Elliot’s there from at least the 16th century, Martin Elliot of Braiddie gaining lands from John Turnbull in 1579 and having a charter of 1591, at which time it lay within the Barony of Hawick and was annexed to Selkirkshire. This was afterwards to go to his son Simon and was ratified by Act of Parliament in 1592. In the early 1600s Simon’s only child Grizel inherited and married John, son of Robert Elliot of Falnash. The lands were listed (along with Eilrig) as a ‘pendicle’ of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were estimated to pay 200 merks, vicarage 20 lb.’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. In 1631 John Turnbull of Howden was served as heir to his father Mark’s lands there. However, the main farm was in the hands of the Crown for 37 years, until granted to Robert Elliot of Falnash in 1628; Robert’s son John would marry the heiress, Grizzell Elliot. It remained with the Elliotics through most of the 17th century. Adam Elliot of Philhope was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Archibald Elliot, Maly Nichol, Helen Elliot, Maly Elliot, Elizabeth Hislop, Maly Scott, Janet ‘Cheislye’, Grizel Pearson, John Hamilton, William Glen, Robert Scott and William Baptie. It was owned by William
Philhope Brig

Elliot of Philhope in 1678 when valued at £216. William and Robert Chisholme (of Stirches) purchased it in 1684. In 1694 tax was paid on 6 hearths for ‘Phillipp & milne’. Thos also listed there were William Elliot (probably the Laird), John Renwick, Robert Chisholme, Robert Riddell and Adam ‘Junct’. Robert Veitch was living there in at least 1715–17 and Walter Haliburton in 1721. William Pringle was living there in 1737, Thomas Graham in 1762 and John Cavers ton in 1774. The teinds were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and the stock was valued at £400, with the land tax paid by William Chisholme of Chisholme. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Broadlee at £216. It became part of the Buccleuch estates around the early 19th century and in the latter part of the 19th century was purchased by Richardson-Dickson. The farmer recorded there on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls was Robert Nichol. James Turnbull was tenant in 1799. In 1811 William Chisholme paid the land tax on £400 there, while the teinds were valued at £60 in 1802 and held by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Nichol was farmer there in 1841. John Nichol was there in the 1860s. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90, and in earlier times was part of Selkirkshire. An area roughly opposite Meadshaw was the site of a skirmish in December 1653, between (Scottish) Royalist forces and (English) Commonwealth forces. About 80–100 mean under Sir Arthur Forbes, and with Maj. Irvine as second-in-command, had captured Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto. Coming down from the north, they stopped at Borthwickbrae, and intended to head over towards Eskdalemuir. An English force, part of Twisleton’s Regiment under Capt. Hart, were in pursuit. The Scots were easy to follow in the snow and made a stand at Philhope, where 4 Royals were slain and 16 taken prisoner, with only 1 Englishman slain and 17 wounded. The prisoner Kerr was freed, but wounded through the thigh by an English trooper. The English concentrated on rounding up the horses, allowing most of the Scots to escape, including Forbes. This was probably the last battle to take place near Hawick. There are remains of some enclosures near the farm, age uncertain (also formerly spelled ‘Philip’ and variants; it is ‘Philhop’ in 1530, ‘Filop’ in 1540, ‘Phillop’ in 1592, ‘Phillip’ in 1627 and 1631, ‘Fillip’ in 1643, ‘Phillip’ in 1646, ‘Phillip’ in 1649, ‘Phillip’ in 1651, ‘Philip’ in 1678 and 1686, ‘Philop’ in 1715 and 1717 and ‘Philip’ in 1785, 1788 and 1797; it is ‘Philope’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Phillippe’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Philop’ on Stobie’s 1770 map: the origin is possibly Old English ‘ful hop’, meaning ‘the dirty valley’).

Philhope Brig (fi-lup-brig) n. bridge across the Borthwick near Philhope farm, leading to the former farm of Outerside. This site has often in recent times been chosen for Common Riding Ride-outs. The haugh there has been a favourite place for Hawick folk to come for picnics. The area was popularized in the Scocha song ‘Dusty Road frae Philhope Brig ti Hame’, released in 2017 with an accompanying video.

Philhope Burn (fi-lup-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the south-east near Philhope farm.

Philhope Loch (fi-lup-loch) n. man-made loch in the headwaters of the Philhope Burn. On the Roughhope Burn (rather than the Philhope Burn), the name was attached to it much later. It was constructed in 1844 following a drought which brought Hawick’s woollen mills to a standstill. The work was arranged by the 3 main manufacturers at the time, William Wilson & Sons, William Watson & Sons and Dicksons & Laings. Construction was completed by 1846 on the dam here, as well as at the nearby Broadlee Loch. It is said that the sluice gate used to be opened in order to raise to Borthwick and then the Teviot, to help with the water-powered mills in Hawick. There was a suggestion around 1880 of using the Loch as a water supply for Hawick, but the decision was taken to develop the Allan Water works instead. Eventually the reservoir ceased to be used for its original purpose, and for a while it was used for fishing. When the embankment began to leak in the 1970s it was drained and abandoned.

Philhope Mill (fi-lup-mill) n. former farmstead near Philhope, presumably by the side of the Borthwick. It was part of Hawick Parish until 1690. Walter Miller was there in 1709 (also written ‘Philip Mill’, it is ‘Philop milne’ in 1709; it is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Philhopeshiel (fi-lup-sheel) n. former steading on the Philhopeshiel Burn, about half-way between Eilrig and Lairhope. John Laidlaw and William Pringle were there in 1726, John Welch in 1727, James Armstrong in 1732–35, Thomas Graham in 1743, John Jackson in 1763, Robert Scott in 1765, John Graham in 1774, William Nichol in 1781 and Adam Pringle and Andrew Geddes in...
1789. It was still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but has now disappeared, although there is still an adjacent sheepfold (it is ‘Philopshiel’ in 1726 and 1732, ‘Philopsheils’ in 1727 and ‘Philipshiel’ in 1774).

Philopshiel Burn (f-lup-sheel-burn) n. stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Rashy Hill, and runs in a roughly northerly direction to join the Eildrig Burn and hence the Borthwick Water.

Philip see Philhope

Philip (f-lip) n. Andrew (1782–1822) son of William and Mary Scott. He was a mason, like his father. He owned property on Slitrig Crescent, around No. 5, marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His surname was listed as ‘Philips’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the Andrew ‘Philip’s’ who married Henrietta Nichol, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1810); Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812); George (b.1815); William (again, b.1816); and Margaret (b.1817). He died in Hawick. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: William (b.1746); Elizabth (b.1748); Janet (b.1750); Jane (b.1753); John (b.1755); Isabel (b.1759); and Robert (b.1760). Perhaps the same George was previously married to Janet Lockie and had a son Patrick baptised in Ashkirk in 1744. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Bonjedburgh. He was recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus, failed to present him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Robert (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He was probably the son of George, baptised in Ashkirk in 1760. In 1784 he (along with William) witnessed a baptism for labourer William Scott and Betty (perhaps his sister). William (d.bef. 1822) mason in Hawick. He was probably son of George and Janet Walker, born in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1784 he (along with mason Robert) witnessed a baptism for labourer William Scott and Betty (perhaps his sister). In 1786 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Smail and Jane (who was probably his sister). He married Mary Scott, who was probably daughter of ‘Black Andrew’. They had children: Alice (b.1770); George (b.1772); Walter (b.1776); Janet (b.1779); Andrew (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); Andrew (again, b.1782), also a mason; William (b.1785); Peter (b.1792); and Peter (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1772 were merchants Andrew and Walter Scott (probably related to his wife), in 1777 were merchant Andrew Scott and Andrew Turnbull and in 1792 were Dr. William Scott and plasterer William Sibbald. His unnamed child died in 1798 (also written ‘Philip’).

Philophaugh (f-lip-hawf, -hawch) n. riverside plain just west of Selkirk, now the location for the town’s rugby and cricket fields. It was the site of the Battle of 1645 which ended the Earl of Montrose’s attempts to secure political control of Scotland, thereby ensuring the defeat of Charles I’s cause. Montrose’s men were surprised under cover of fog by the superior Covenant forces under David Leslie, to which the locals were sympathetic at the time; troops from Teviotdale must surely have fought in Leslie’s army. Montrose fled, but most of his troops and the 300 accompanying women and children were massacred by Covenanting zealots. Lands there were granted to William Turnbull in 1313 and there were still Turnbills on part of the land until the early 17th century. However, the Murrays held the western part from the 15th century. It was valued at almost £4000 in 1678. A Jacobean mansion stood here, remodelled in the 1870s and demolished to make way for a 1964 house. The Covenanters’ Monument is a stone pyramid on the grounds. A song about the battle was recorded by Scocha in 2004 – ‘On Philophaugh the fray began, At Harehead wood it ended; The Scots out o’er the Graemes they ran; Sae merrily they bended’ [T] (it is ‘Fulhopehalche’ in 1317, ‘Philopauche’ and ‘Philophauch’ in 1504, ‘Philopauche’ in 1509 and ‘Philophauch’ in 1558; the origin of the name is probably the same as for Philhope).

Philip’s Jok (f-lipz-jok) n. nickname of Johnnie Scott in the 16th century (written ‘Philips’ in the court documents).

Philogar (f-lö-gur) n. hill and former lands in the Hownam Parish. The lands were connected with the Douglasses of Cavers in the 16th and 17th centuries.

phiz (fiz) n., poet. a face – ‘Pops oot a snoot like some much-made-o’ tabby, Cries ‘Order, order’, wi’ a phiz sae grave?’ [JoHa], ‘Red anger mounted on her phiz, She proves hersel’ a ranter’ [JoHa].

photi (fö-i) n. photograph – ‘Derek Lunn taen the photis’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘photæ’ and ‘photih’).

physeecian (f-zee-shin) n., arch. a physician.

piani (pee-an-i) n. a piano – ‘...wi Adam Grant and Adie Ingles playin a piano duet ‘Auld Hawick My Dreams’ in the background’ [IWL], ‘...n’ pibroch

 casually remarked ‘Aye son, A should dae, A wrote eet!’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘pianin’ and ‘pianae’).

pibroch (pee-brohd) n., poet. traditional theme and variations played on the bagpipes – ‘When Boreas cauld, blew his pibroch fu’ bauld, And swaw showers fu’ thickly flew pirlin’’ [JoHa], ‘The battle march borne from afar is a summons, The pibroch a plaint to the lost days awa’’ [WL].

pick (pik) v., arch. to peck, ‘pick at a thing’ means to understand it – ‘Ti pick up a thing is to apprehend it, to notice or understand it’ [ECS], n., arch. a peck, e.g. from a bird, a fit of spleen, offence, grudge, disliking – ‘She took a pick at ‘in’ [GW] (see also take a pick at).

pick (pik) v., arch. to bring forth prematurely, to cast – ‘Our Gawsie lately picket foal’ [JoHo], ‘Crummie’s pick’t ‘er cauf’ [GW].

pick (pik) n., poet. pitch, bitumen – ‘Tho’ dark the night as pick and tar, I’ll lead ye o’er yon hills fu’ hie; And bring ye a’ in safety back, If you’ll be true, and follow me. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

pick at (pik-aw’) v., arch. to understand something, form a dislike of someone or something – ‘Ti taik a pick at a person (or thing) = to form a dislike, to take resentment at’ [ECS].

pickeet see pickit

picker (pi-kur) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who picks out ‘bobbles’ and foreign matter in garments (usually with tweezers), this being often carried out by older women. Formerly the word was used for someone whose job was to cut loose threads from the web.

the Pickin (thu-pi-kiin) n. official selection of the new Cornet, taking place on the Wednesday night after the first Tuesday in May (since Town Council meetings always used to be on Tuesdays). The ceremony used to take place on the Tuesday night immediately after the Council meeting to elect the Cornet, but at some point was shifted to the following night. The Provost’s Council, with recommendation of the two previous standard bearers, choose a young man to be the new Cornet. The Burgh Officer (the 2 modern halberdiers taking it in turns), accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, carries the official letter to the Cornet-Elect’s house, setting off at 7p.m. When the band walk north they play ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and when they turn to the south they play ‘Rumblin Brig’, then they play ‘Teribus’ as the letter is handed over. In the house are gathered the Cornet’s family and friends. The new Cornet goes outside to greet the crowd and there is a strive. The Halberdier is then given the acknowledgement and rewarded with a new shilling. The Officer and band return to the Town Hall, where ‘Teribus’ is again played as the reply is handed in. There is meanwhile a procession on foot by the Cornet’s party through the older parts of town, specifically visiting the site of the Toll farthest from the Cornet’s house, and ending at the Town Hall, with a short singing. After the Procession there is the congratulatory Smoker and the Lasses Association dinner (when the new Lass and Acting Mother are presented with their badges). Formerly the parade would have stopped at the houses of the Minister, the Senior Bailie and several inns. The new Cornet’s Tie is only revealed in a shop window after the Pickin. The practice of the Drums and Fifes escorting the Burgh Officer on Picking Night stopped for many years, but was revived in 1887.

the Pick Inn (thu-pik-in) n. former hostelry at the Mid Row in the mid-19th century.

Pickin Night (pi-kiin-ni) n. name used to refer to the night of the Pickin, being the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in May.

pickin-stick (pi-kin-stik) n., arch. in knitting machines the part that knocks the shuttle to insert the weft threads – ‘The pickin-stick gangs whuppin on, The shuttle scuds throwe a’’ [WL].

pickit (pi-kee’, -ki’) pp. picked – ‘she was pickit tig the Cornet his praisent’, ‘In 1854 yet anither Geordie Broon was picket for Cornet …’ [BW1979].

pickle (pi-kul) n. a small amount, bit, portion – ‘juist gie’s a wee pickle’, ‘it’s a pickle ower hot’, ‘A made a faisable mael oot o peisoop (a pickle grand thing, ‘at war they!)’ [ECS], adj. a few, small amount of – ‘there’s a pickle ingins left in the cupboard’, ‘Then oot a pickle woo’ Tam draws, And preens’t unto his bonnet’ [JoHa], ‘…An’ wee to the rock an’ the wee pickle tow, May blessings aye light on the spinning o’t’ [JoHa], ‘…the spinning wheel, adorned with blue ribbon, and with a ‘pickle tow’ on the rock or distaff …’ [JAHM], ‘Sae ilka bodie’s pickel gear Was lodg’d wi’ him without a fear’ [RDW], ‘The Ushers o’ Courthill, They’re a’ sae kind to me, Whiles they send me tatties And whiles
the Picts

(a pickel): The Picts, or Pictish people, were an ancient Celtic-speaking group who inhabited parts of what is now Scotland, Ireland, and Northern England. They are known for their distinctive art and culture, and are often associated with the early Christian missions to Britain.

pickle (pi-kul) v., arch. to nibble, particularly used in the phrase ‘ti pickle oot o yin’s ain pock' meaning pickled – ‘A made a faisable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caald flesh, picklt ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS] (also written ‘picklt’).

pickelt (pi-kul, -kult) adj. pickled – ‘A made a faisable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caald flesh, picklt ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS] (also written ‘picklt’).

pick-maw (pik-maw) n., arch. the black-headed gull, Larus ridibundus – ‘... ti gar yin that’s duist a peike at eis meat turn that ei can heck leike a pick-maw’ [ECS] (also ‘pick-sea-maw’ and variants; cf. maw; the name survives in ‘the Picmaw Moss’).

Pick Maw Hill (pik-maw-hil) n. former name for a field in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably to the south of the village. It is described (in the ‘New Statistical Account of Scotland’) in about 1834 as an area formerly frequented by gulls, whose eggs were then much sought after by the villagers.

the Pickmaw Moss see the Picmaw Moss

the Pickmaw Moss the Picmaw Moss (thu-pik-maw-mos) n. boggy area near Kirkton Hill, formerly known as Buckstruther, and being essentially the same as the area now also called Adderstonelee Moss (also spelled ‘Pickmaw’).

the Picts (thu-pikts) n., pl. people of northern Scotland, of uncertain origin, who remained unconquered by the Romans. The chronicler Gildas says that in the 5th century they penetrated southwards as far as Hadrian’s wall. If so, they may have had some influence on the Hawick area, and may have spoken a Brythonic (‘p-Celtic’) language, in common with early Teries. However, there is no evidence to support connections that were once believed to exist with the Borthwick Mains stone, the Catrail and the Mote. In 685 the Bernician (including the Hawick area) King Egfrith was defeated at ‘Nech tansmere’ in Fife when attacking into Pictland. Exactly who the Picts were is unclear, but by about 900 they had disappeared as a separate people and become part of the ‘Scots’. It was said by Boece that they made a liquor from heather flowers, the process being lost with them. Leyden tells of a version of this story popular in Teviotdale, with the last Pictish warrior refusing to divulge the secret – ‘...And frequent wake the wild inspired lay, On Teviot’s hills, beneath the Pictish sway’ [JL] (probably from the Latin for ‘painted’).

the Picts-work Ditch see the Pict’s Work Dyke

the Pict’s Work Dyke (thu-pikts-wurk-dik) n. an older popular name for the Catrail. It is also specifically used to refer to a section of linear earthwork stretching between Linglie (near Selkirk) to Mosilee (near Galashiels), first mentioned as early as 1723, but probably not directly connected to the Catrail (also ‘the Picts-work Ditch’ and similar).

pictur (pik-tur) n. a picture – ‘go’an hing that pictur up for is’, ‘... That picter’s deed, and this is leevin’’ [JBS], ‘A mairecht eend ti the Gazetter Office, an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds’ [ECS], ‘...bye auld Hornshole, – a picter o gray an green ...’[ECS], v. to picture – ‘... O’ giff they could feel like us, When we pictur’d the getherin’ foons ...’ [WL], ‘... in an effort tae picter tae theirel’s the toon in the hollow o’ the hills’ [BW1939] (also spelled ‘picer’).

pictur-hoose (pik-tur-hoos) n. a picture-house, cinema, especially the ‘Kings’, ‘Piv’ or ‘Wee Thea’ in the hey-day of the cinema in Hawick – ‘The attendances at the picter-hooses hev proved that ...’ [BW1939].

the pictures (thu-pik-turz) n. the pictures, cinema – ‘oo aye went ti the pictures on Seturdi mornins’, ‘Skinny Malinky long legs, umbrella feet, Went to the pictures and couldni finnd a seat’, ‘Maist folk ken when the word ‘picters’ is mentioned that it refers tae the cinema’ [BW1938].

piddle (p-dul) v., arch. to walk with quick short steps (noted by J. Jamieson).

piecer (pee-sur) n., arch. someone (often a child) formerly employed in the spinning industry to gather and reattach broken threads or specifically to join the ‘cardings’ by feeding them onto the ‘creeping cloth’ of the ‘slubbing’ frame. They usually joined the ‘rovings’ at the back of the ‘billy frame’, and the required repeated action would often make their fingers bleed. More recently the term meant someone who made their pay by piece work rather than by the hour – ‘...unconscious of his identity, he remarked to the foreman: ‘That’s the kind of piecer to keep’’ [JHH], ‘...as her son Rob and I were piecers together’ [JTu].

piecin machine (pee-sin-nu-sheen) n. a machine that replaced the work of the piecers and the ‘slubbing billy’, joining together the pieces coming off the carding machines. It was introduced in Hawick by Melrose’s about 1844, and probably invented by James Melrose.

Piehill (pI-hil) n. former name for a farm, perhaps in Cavers Parish. John Douglas, tenant in Cavers, but called ‘of Piehill’ is recorded in a ‘letter of reduction’ of 1630, brought by William Bennet. Alexander Chisholme of Piehill is referred to in a ‘respite’ for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell in 1593 (but this could have been an error for ‘Parkhill’).

piel see peel (pill)

Pie Oliver (pI-o-lee-vur) n. nickname for members of a particular branch of the Oliver family. This could be the same as the ‘Pies Oliver’ recorded in the ‘Hawick Immortals’ poem – ‘Wullie the Paide, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

piet see pyet

the Pietsnest (thu-piits-, pl-its-nest) n. former shepherd’s cottage on Hyndlee farm. William Turnbull lived there in the early-to-mid 19th century (referring to the magpie, ‘piet’ or ‘pyet’).

pig (pig) n., arch. an earthenware vessel, a hot water bottle – ‘For an A pat a warm pig i the bed, it was midnicht or A cam a-heat’ [ECS], ‘...their honey run into ‘pigs’ bought for the purpose, and covered with leather’ [AOC].

piggie-bank (pi-gee-bawngk) n. an earthenware vessel in which coins are saved – ‘The boy admitted entering a house in Beaconsfield Terrace in March and stealing 13s from a piggy-bank’ [HEx1965] (cf. pig).

Pigot’s (pi-gits) n. J. Pigot & Co., publishing company that produced useful directories in the early 19th century. The 1826/7 ‘New Commercial Directory of Scotland’ (compiled about a year earlier) and 1837 ‘National Commercial Directory of Scotland’ are particularly useful for tracking down people, businesses etc. in Hawick and neighbouring areas before the censuses began. These directories were continued by Slater’s Royal National Commercial Directory, which came out with local content in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893.

pike (pik) n., arch. a pick, spike, prong – ‘...Till a reid hette pyke the master gatte, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe] (also written ‘pyke’).

pike (pik) n., arch. a peaked stack of hay, erected temporarily in a field, a haystack, a sharp pointed hill n., arch. to make a haystack (from Mediæval English; essentially the same word is used locally in the names of some peaked hills).

the Pike (thu-pik) n. hill about 10 km due south of Hawick, between Penchrise and the Maidens. It reaches 463 m. The Catrail crosses near the summit. Alexander Gordon refers to it as ‘Carriage Hill’ (the same name is used for a feature on the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley and for a hill on the south side of the Tima valley).

the Pike (thu-pik) n. hill that is essentially the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley (note the confusion with the hill a couple of miles to the west).

Pike Fell (pik-fed) n. hill on the eastern side of the upper Slitrig valley, near Shankend. It reaches a height of 400 m and has a triangulation pillar. Its south-easterly spur is called simply ‘The Pike’.

Pike Fell (pik-fed) n. hill on the border of Roxburghshire and Dumfrieshire, at the head of the Routing Burn, and hence effectively the start of the Hermitage valley. It reaches a height of 499 m.

Pike Hill (pik-hiel) n. hill between the upper Borthwick and Teviot valleys, east of Howpawesly Hope, reaching a height of 419 m.

Pikensteed (pi-kin-steed) n. possible name for former lands in Liddesdale, transcribed as ‘Piknesteid’ on the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 14 shillings, and with no tenant. The location is uncertain. It is possible that it is the same as ‘Piperstede’ recorded in c.1376.
piker

(p̩-kur) n., arch. a person who makes haystacks.

Pike Sike (p̩=k-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Thorliveshope Height and running roughly north-west to the Thorliveshope Burn.

Pikethaw Hill (p̩-k-thaw-hil) n. high hill on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the south of the pass at Ewes Doors. It reaches a height of 564 m and has a substantial cairn on its summit. It is essentially friesshire, just to the south of the pass at Ewes the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dum-roughly north-west to the Thorlieshope Burn. It has been suggested that a volcanic dyke stretches from here to Skelfhill Pen (also written ‘Pikethow’, it appears as ‘Pikethon’ in a Transactions article of 1875).

pikit see pykit

the pillar (th̩-pi-lur) n., arch. raised platform in a church on which penitents had to appear at prescribed times, equivalent in function to the repentance stool. In St. Mary’s this was probably located along the same wall as the pulpit, surrounded by a rail and reached by a small ladder. The one in Wilton also required a ladder – ‘...they had to appear on a small raised platform, sometimes termed ‘the pillar’, and at other times ‘the stool of repentance’, which occupied a conspicuous place in the church’ [JJV].

Pilmuir (pi-l-mur) n. farm near Wulliestruther and Hawick Moor, also known as the Muir Farm. It is part of the Common feued to the farmer, being set up as a 250 acre farm and leased to John Wilson in 1787, with rent going to the Common Good. Part of the farm was used for Common Riding races before 1854. George Hart was farm steward there in 1861 and James Stein recorded as farmer there in 1868. ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilmuir’ was painted by J.E.D. Murray in 1889. The riding of the marches at Pilmuir resumed as part of the Thursday morning events from 1900, with the entire Common being encircled in the ride. It was also the location of the partaking of Curds and Cream (and hence ‘the Hut’) at the Chases in the years 1882 and 1901–11. A piece of worked flint found there is in the Museum (the origin is possibly from Old Welsh for ‘bog or pond’ plus ‘muir’ or Old English ‘peel’ for a stockade, thus meaning an enclosed moor).

Pilmuir Rig (pi-l-mur-rig) n. hill above Pilmuir farm, also used as the name of the small farm to the south of the main farm of Pilmuir. This farm was first let to Thomas Scott in 1778, after the Division of the Common. The name is also applied to the surrounding part of Hawick Common. On maps it specifically applies to the high ground to the south-east of Pilmuir farm. The area was used for the morning race meetings of the Common Riding from 1822–53 – ‘...And round Pilmuir-rig we’ll canter, Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamper’ [AB], ‘Pilmuir Rig and Everha’, Scawmill and Stirches Mains; Drinkstone, Tandlaw and Boonraw Wi’ a’ their burns and lanes’ [WL].

the Pilmuir Stakes (th̩-pi-l-mur-st̩aks) n. race during the Common Riding, at one time for the Cornet’s Father and his supporters. It was started at least as early as the 1880s.

Pilmuir Sike (pi-l-mur-sik) n. former ditch near the Flex, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It is not clear exactly where it was, even based on the 1767 description of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison. James Wilson describes it as lying ‘at the head of Flex inclosures’ (also written ‘Syke’).

Pilstown (pi-l-town) n. said to have been the commander of some English persecuting regiment that passed through Hawick in 1716; however, it is unclear who he was. The Council charged the Burgesses to help transport their baggage to Lauder, and townspeople were also meant to provide billets for the soldiers. Some citizens of Hawick refused to provide for the men or to help carry their baggage, being then fined or imprisoned – ‘A party is fined for disobeying the bailies anent the quartering and billets given for the said Pilstown’s Regiment last week’ [JW], ‘Or wi’ the serfs o’ Pilstown rin, For Hawick has had mae Habs than ane’ [AD].

Pimpo Anderson (pi-m-o-an-du-r-sin) n. nickname in the mid-to-late 20th century.

pin (pi-n) n., arch. a wooden or bone knitting needle (also peen).

pin (pi-n) n., arch. amount of linen that will go through a mangle at one time – ‘The mangle-wife chairged a penny for three pins’ [GW], a quantity of thread – ‘To find what ‘rule’ is wanted to beam any warp, multiply the porters on the yard by 40, and divide by the number of threads in the pin’ [BCM1881] (also peen).

pin (pi-n) v., arch. to strike with a missile, pelt, beat, drub, to nab, collar, entrap.

pin (pi-n) n., poet. mood, frame of mind, particularly in the phrase ‘a merry pin’ – ‘And he took her round the scraggye necke, Alle in a merry pinne ... ’ [JTe].
Pin

Pin (pin) n. former farmstead close to the Border in southern Castleton Parish, to the east of Kershopefoot. Labourer Henry Paterson was there in the 1830s. Robert Beattie was shepherd there in 1851 and William Tait was there in 1868 (also written ‘Pinn’; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pinch (pinch) n., poet. an iron bar with a pointed end, a crowbar – ‘With vengeance keen, and heavy oath, To burst the door they try’d; And gavelock, pinch, and sledge hammer, With might and main they pled’ [JTe].

Pind (pind) v., arch. to impound – ‘If in my yard again I find them, By Mahomet, I swear I’ll pind them; Or catch them in a net or ginn, Till I find out the boost or birn’ [JR].

Pindin (pin-din) n., arch. constipation.

Pindit (pin-dec’, -i’) pp., adj., arch. constipated.

Pine (pin) n., arch. a disease of sheep or cows – ‘The sheep for miles round are a’ deid i’ the pine, The horses an’ kye, too, are a’ gaun to the divilry’ [JoHa] (now known to be due to mineral deficiency).

Pines Burn (pinz-burn) n. small stream that rises on Pike Fell and runs roughly to the northeast to become part of the Harwood Burn.

Pingle (ping-ul) n., arch. a small pan – ‘threethree eggs…Were boiling in the pingle’ [HSR].

Pingle (ping-ul) v., arch. to toil, struggle, work in a trifling way or work industriously and with difficulty – ‘…many an industrious housewife was able, by hard ‘pingling’ to augment a husband’s scanty wage’ [JTu], ‘Ti pingle = to labour with assiduity (cf. Wilson’s ‘Tales’) ; to strive; work hard (cf. Ransay’s).’ Often applied to the toiling of a seamstress, pinglin an sheww-in’[ECS], applied specifically to snow whirling about, as if struggling to reach the ground, to tingle – ‘Far better had I em’d an’ miss’d. I only hurt my pinglin’ fist…’ [WP].

Pinglehole (ping-ul-hól) n. former farm just south of Saughtree off the B6357 by the Liddel Water, now being just a couple of cottages. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 339 acres, bounded by Saughtree, Burnmouth, Riccarton and ‘Leys’. It also shared a small strip of common land with Saughtree and the farmhouse was in roughly the location of the modern cottages. William Elliot was there in 1694. Pinglehole Sike joins the Liddel Water near there. Robert Armstrong was shepherd there in 1797. There were Hislops and Grieves there in 1841 (shown on Pont’s 1609 map as a tower-house, ‘Pingillholls’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pingillholls’, on de Wit’s c. 1680 map as ‘Pingillholls’ and is ‘Pingleholes’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is probably the place marked ‘Hole’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it was ‘Pingilhollis’ in 1662, ‘Pingellholls’ in 1694 and appears to be ‘Pringlehole’ in 1797; the origin may be either ‘enclosure in the hollow’ or ‘valley of toil’).

Pinglehole Sike (ping-ul-hól-sık) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Shiel Knowe and running roughly southwards to join the Liddel Water downstream from Saughtree.

Pinglin aboot (ping-lin) adj., arch. swirling about (of snow), but not quite lying on the ground (see pingle).

Pinion (pin-yin) n., arch. a pivot.

Pinker Cleuch (ping-kur-klooch) n. small stream that passes the farm of Sunnyside and joins the Kirkton Burn (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pinkie (ping-kee) n. little finger – ‘A staved ma pinkie on that hannle’, any small thing (from Dutch; also spelled ‘pinky’).

Pinkie (ping-kee) n. battle site by the Esk near Musselburgh, also called Pinkie Cleugh. Here in 1547 the Scots under Hamilton Earl of Arran, were defeated by the English under Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset (who had been the Earl of Hertford). Somerset had come to seize the infant Mary, who was instead spirited away to France. The huge losses of the Scots led to this day being known as ‘Black Sunday’. It was the last engagement of the two national armies. Many local men must have been involved, and the dead included George Home, Laird of Woflelee. Walter Scott of Branxholm and Buccleuch led part of the Scots force, while the Kers switched sides and supported the English (it is written as ‘Pynkyne Feild’ in 1547/8).

Pinkie Burn (ping-kee-burn) n. stream that runs past Falside farm and joins the Jed Water.

Pinnacle

was owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the 17th century. In 1643 these lands in Ancrum Parish are recorded as ‘Morrishall, his lands in Belses called Pinnacle’, valued at £766 13s 4d; however, it is unclear what ‘Morrishall’ refers to. It was owned by George Wauchope in 1678 and valued at £500. A small part seemed to have also been included among the lands of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1678, valued at £42. It was part of the Lordship of Belses held by Henry Douglas of Friarshaw in the latter part of the 17th century. In 1788 part of it was listed among the properties of William Scott of Burnhead and valued at £42, while the main part was valued at £500 and owned by William Sibbald. John Park was there in 1797, Roderick McKenzie in 1852 and William Thomas in 1868. There is a square-shaped dove-cote there (it is ‘Pennyke’ in 1581, ‘Pinnakill’ in 1608, ‘Pendicle’ in 1621, ‘Pinekill’ and ‘Peachkill’ in 1678, ‘Penickhill’ in 1684 and ‘Penickhill’ in 1788: this is probably the ‘Pendickle’ on Pont’s 1590s manuscript and ‘Pendickill’ marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Pinnacle (pi-nu-kul) n. former name for lands near Clarilaw, to the north of Hawick. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describe it as ‘Penick-hill or Pinnacle’, partly owned (along with Wester Clarilaw) by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead. It may be the same place as Pinnacle near Belses.

pinner (pi-nur) n., arch. a woman’s close-fitting cap with 2 long flaps – ‘[A person is convicted of stealing] ane laced pinner from the spouse of Richard Myles, pipiriwigg maker’ [BR1697].

pinnin (pi-nil) n., arch. a beating, drubbing (noted by E.C. Smith).

pinshers (pin-shurz) n., pl., arch. pinchers.

pipe-an-dottle (pip-an-dō-tul) n., arch. a large ripe acorn still on its stalk – ‘But for borrowed beauty oot o’ a bottle – I wadna gie ye a pipey dottle!’ [WL] (also written ‘pipey dottle’ etc.).

pipe-an-kivver (pip-an-ki-vur) n., arch. an acorn still in its case, a variant of pipe-an-dottle.

Pipe Hill (pip-hil)n. hill above Pipewellheugh, the steep banking off Buccleuch Road on the way out of Hawick.

Pipeloch (pip-loch) n. fanciful name for the source of the Pipewell spring – ‘It minds me of those youthful days When we went hand in hand, To sport upon the Pipeloch braes, A blythesome little band’ [VW], ‘And a’ my heart’s thirst slocken in the Pipeloch clear and cool’ [JYH].

piper (pi-pur) n. a person who plays the pipes, usually meaning the bagpipes, although possibly other instruments such as the Northumbrian pipes can be meant – ‘Lament him, ilk a piper chiel, Wha makes auld Scotia’s bagpipe squeel’ [JoHa] (see also pipers and Toon Piper).

Piper Burn (pi-pur-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising in Harden Moss and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel approximately opposite Powisholm farm.

piper-faced (pi-pur-fäsd) adj., arch. pale-faced (from the former belief that playing pipes was harmful for the lungs).

pipers (pi-purz) n., pl. people who play the pipes. In 1627, 2 ‘pipers’, John Tait and John Laing, were among the ‘idle and masterless’ men listed by the Bailies of Hawick as being fit for military service. In 1632 the Lord of Buccleuch made a payment ‘to three English pipers at Brauxholm’. In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Baron of Regality only use the Town’s own drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’. William Turnbull was elected as Town Piper in 1674 ‘and directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. James Turnbull (d.1686) was piper to Abbotrule Parish. The ‘town’s officer, piper, and drummer’ were each allowed money for new coats in 1702, suggesting that at this time the piper was a separate position. William Turnbull was recorded as a piper in Hawick in 1702 and 1706. In 1704 it is recorded that funds were needed for ‘pipers shoes’. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordained that the Town would not give an allowance to the piper, but ‘what people shall give him out of their own pockets’ (see also Toon Piper).

Piper’s Knowe (pi-purz-now) n. northeastern spur of Greenbank Hill in the Borthwick valley.

Pipersteed (pi-pur-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Piperstede’ in a rental roll of c.1376, and valued at 4 shillings. It was part of the area known as ‘Ludne’, which made up part of the western side of the Liddel valley, so it was probably situated somewhere to the northwest of the present-day Newcastleton (it is possibly the same as ‘Piknested’ recorded in 1541).

the pipes (thu-pipes) n. the bagpipes or Border pipes. In Hawick it seems that the traditional instrument was the bagpipes in the 18th century.
with the Town Piper being hired until about the turn of the 19th century, when he was effectively replaced with fifers. However, it is uncertain if there were fifers earlier than this, and it is also unclear when the town started to have a piper – 'she yaised ti play jist the chanter, bit now she’s moved on ti the pipes' (see also Toon Piper).

Pipe-staple (pip-staw-pul) n., arch. a clay pipe stem, pipe shank – I’ll go to such a place, though it should rain auld wives and pipe-staples' [JoJ], ‘We got dirty bletters at the Killin’-house and blew them up wi’ pipe-staples for fitbas’ [HAST1958], hence any small thing (also pipe-stopple and ‘pipe-stopplit’ or ‘peip-stopplet’; J. Jamieson notes that ‘stappick’ was a synonym in Roxburghshire, see stipple).

Pipe-stopple (pip-sto-pul) n., arch. a clay pipe stem (a variant of pipe-staple).

Pipe-stopple legs (pip-sto-pul-legz) n., pl., arch. extremely thin legs on a person or animal.

The Pipe Well (thu-pip-wel) n. spring at Pipewellhaugh, fitted with an iron pipe and trough, which supplied water for travellers along the New Road.

Pipewellhaugh (pi-pul-, pi-wel-hew, hewch) n. steep wooded bank on the other side of the main road from Langlands Bridge, in the middle of which a stream supplied the Pipe Well. The name has also been used to describe the area around the well. Before the main highway was directed that way in 1815, it presumably just had a smaller-scale track. A dry-stone wall was built along the New Road there in the late 19th century, using stones from the Mid Row. The wall was entirely rebuilt in the mid-1990s. A strong garlic smell in the area is due to the abundance of Ramsons Allium ursinum, i.e. wild garlic. There were also lands in Jedburgh called by the same name in the 17th century. From a verse written around the time of the disputed 1809 Common Riding it seems clear that a senior member of the Town Council lived near here at that time – ‘Trace the source of all your troubles Where the Pipe’heugh fountain bubbles; There a groggy club are lolling, While the Sabbath bells are tolling’ [JH]. ‘It is exceedingly abundant in woods and shady banks such as Pipe-well-heugh’ [JAHM].

ing locations: Bowden Road; Burnfoot School; Denholm Loaning; Hislop Gardens; Leaburn
the Playin Fields

the Playin Fields (θu-θlain-feeldz) n. name sometimes given to the part of the Park on the south side of the river, off Buccleuch Road, used for playing various sports. Roughly the same area has also been known as Corseflat and the Gardener’s Haughs. It was at one time a nursery, then known as Wester Nurseries, and then was allotments. A petition of 1859 asked the Duke of Buccleuch to keep this trip of land for recreational use. It was gifted to the town in 1931 by later Duke, after he had passed through Hawick during the Vertish Hill children’s procession. It was hence also known as the Buccleuch Playing Fields, is about 5 acres, and effectively forms an addition to the Park. An all-weather sports ground was built there in 2005, adjacent to the Volunteer pitch, and also referred to as Volunteer Park.

the Playlaw (θu-θlaw) n. name for the area around the Mid Raw (now Drumlanrig Square), in use in the 16th–18th centuries – ‘Bailie Graham and Thomas Bridges [were ordered to collect] westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’ [PR1717] (origin possibly a form of ‘plea-law’ indicating a judicial use in the past; also spelled ‘Plalaw’, ‘Play-la’ and other variants).

Plummer (plu-mur) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Chamberlain to the Earl of Roxburgh in Selkirk records around 1660. Andrew of Middlestead (17th/18th C.) farmer in Selkirkshire. In 1678 he paid the land tax on part of Lindean in Selkirk Parish, as well as lands in Midlem (in Bowden Parish) and had a discharge for annual rents in Selkirk (with another in 1780). Also in 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 for Selkirkshire and in 1690 for Selkirkshire along with William, probably a son. In 1711 he was one of the founders of the ‘Honest Country Club’. His son Gavin became a Burgess of Edinburgh, and his grandson Andrew became one of the first Professors of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1726, while a later Andrew of Middlestead was another enthusiast of the Border ballad whose death allowed Sir Walter Scott to become Sheriff-depute of Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his son William, who married Jane, daughter of William Ker of Sunderland Hall. Dr. Andrew of Sunderland Hall (1697–1756) son of Gavin, he was born in Edinburgh. He married his cousin Marjorie, who was daughter of William of Middlestead and Jean, daughter of William Ker of Sunderland Hall. He studied in Edinburgh and Leyden, graduating M.D. in 1722 and becoming one of the founders of the medical school at Edinburgh University. He was Professor of Chemistry 1726–55. He was known for his thesis called ‘de Phthisi Pulmonalia Cattarrhe erta’, as well as for ‘Plummer’s pills’, a preparation of calomel, antimony sulphide and guaiacum, which was widely used to treat syphilis. He inherited Sunderland Hall through his mother. He was recorded in a discharge with the Town Treasurer of Selkirk in 1743 and others with the Burgh in 1746 and 1747. Andrew of Middlestead (1748–99) Sheriff of Selkirkshire, preceding Sir Walter Scott in this office. He was also known as an antiquarian. He owned Sunderland and Sunderlandhall as well as Middlestead. He paid the land tax in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Selkirkshire. He had 4 horses according to the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane, sister of Gavin Elliot of Midlem. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Gavin, a merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret, who married Andrew Waugh and whose grand-daughter married Charles Scott of Woll. He appears to have also married Mary, daughter of Pringle of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1839. Gavin (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew of Middlestead. He was a merchant in Edinburgh, also serving as Treasurer to the Town Council there. Perhaps the same Gavin had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1709. Along with Adam Scott of Burnfoot he sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. He married Elizabeth Clerk. Their son Andrew was elected one of the first Professors of Medicine in Edinburgh in 1726. William of Middlestead and Sunderland Hall (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew. He married Jean, daughter of William Ker of Sunderland Hall. poachin (pö-chin) n. the act of taking fish or game illegally. This has a long history locally. ‘Kinly Stick’ (George Hunter) and ‘Heather Jock’ (John Mitchell) were well-known local poachers in the mid-19th century. A large gang of poachers operated in the Borthwick valley in the early 19th century, with a reputation for even roasting whole sheep on their days-long forays; the local lairds and authorities formed a ‘posse’ which rounded up 20 of these men in 1832. The appointment of a constable in Hawick in about 1832 led to a domination of the practice. Views on the legality of taking salmon from local rivers have historically differed between various segments of the population. Skills with the ‘cleek’ and ‘geg’ have been carefully passed on for generations in some families.
anonymous poems that may be by local writers. However, most of the selections are pastoral verse, such as by Ramsay, and other well-known writers of the day included Ferguson, Smollet and Thomson. Several variants appear to have been published, including some substituting the poem ‘Modern Chastity’ for ‘Acrostic by a young girl in Hawick’. The subscription list is also interesting, since out of 158 names listed (including 9 women), most are from Hawick and district, and so it gives insight into the supporters of literature and local traditions in the 1780s.

He was reported to the Session in 1725 when he required assistance ‘in regard of his numerous years and want of sight’. It was said that his elder son George was in a good financial position to support him, while his other son was not. His wife was Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1680), baptised in Robertson Parish; Thomas (b.1684); George (b.1688), who married Janet Harkness; and probably Marion (b.1693). His sons were probably the Hawick carriers of the early 18th century. The witnesses in 1680 were George and William Scott (who were probably related to his wife), in 1684 and 1688 were Thomas Bridges and Michael Turnbull. He witnessed a baptism in 1689 for James Lethem.

Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, probably related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. In 1724 he married Helen Simpson, who probably related to his wife), in 1684 and 1688 were Thomas Bridges and Michael Turnbull. He witnessed a baptism in 1689 for James Lethem. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, probably related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. In 1724 he married Helen Simpson, who was also from Hawick. Andrew (d.1794) flesher in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for tobaccoist William Sadler. Probably the same man is recorded with surname 'Pertos' in 1751 when he paid the Hawick Town Council for renting the 'teach [probably 'low'] prison' (perhaps for the purposes of selling meat, but this is unclear). He died in Hawick Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) butcher in Hawick. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as owner of part of Weensland, which had been purchased from Robert Scott. David (16th/17th C.) listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His was listed among Turnbuls of Rulewater and was probably also from there. Francis (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. George (d.c.1684) tenant in Abbotsrue. His will is recorded in 1684. George (b.1688) youngest son of shoemaker Andrew and Helen Scott, he was a carrier in Hawick. He was probably brother of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick at the same time. In 1716 he married Janet, daughter of William Harkness, tenant in Borthaugh. Their children included: Mary (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Ann (b.1727); Bessie (b.1725); and James (b.1732). The 1720 baptism was witnessed by the 2 merchants Robert Robson, the 1725 baptism by Andrew and William Ogilvie and the 1727 one by Bailie Martin and Francis Ruecastle. George (1836-91) born in Greenlaw, he was a hatter and manufacturer of Waverley Mills. He was a member of the Archeological Society from 1869. He had the house Viewforth built for him in 1878. He married Sarah Matilda Ward Dowdy (1844-1922) and their children included: William Roland (b.1868); George (b.1870); and Robert Williamson (b.1881). George Shields (1870-1961) son of a hatter and manufacturer. His hatter's and hosier's shop was at 57 High Street. He was an early prominent member of the Hawick Cycling Club. He married Annie Rachel Humphries. He died in Dunoon. Isobel (17th/18th C.) wife of William Taylor. She was recorded in the Hawick Session records of 1721 being rebuked for her drunken behaviour in the Kirk. James (d.c.1681) tenant in 'Minto' hill when his will was recorded in 1681. Perhaps the same James was owner of a piece of land in Lanton, according to the 1678 valuation roll. James (17th C.) tenant in Abbotsrule according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1758 he married Margaret Brown (who is also referred to as being 'Or Scott', suggesting she was married earlier). Their children included: Margaret (b.1759); George (b.1760); and Janet (b.1762). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were shoemaker George Gardner and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. He may be the James recorded in 1800 (along with his brother John) when his aunt Agnes Scott died. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as 'Portuis'. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son Robert with Margaret Scott was baptised. The child was born illegitimately and the witnesses were Adam Scott and Walter Robson. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Perhaps the same John was recorded in Lanton in 1663. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth 'Shiftie' and their children included John (b.1731), with witnesses John Turnbull and John Scott. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'laurencii portews'. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Peebleshire. Lawrence (18th C.) overseer of the Turnpike roads in Hawick, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1767. Margaret (d.c.1687) tenant in Ruecastle when her will was recorded in 1687. Patrick of Hawkshaw (d.1738) eldest son of John and Mary Ramsay, and descendant of the riever of the same name. In 1678 he became a Burgess of Peebles. He contributed £1100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He held a bond with Henry and William Elliot of Howwood in 1696, and raised an action against them for non-payment in the following year. In 1681
he married Mary, daughter of William Scott of Headshaw. She became an heiress on the death of her brother John, and so he gained lands of the Headshaw family in 1691 (making her husband confusingly ‘of Headshaw’ as well as Hawkshaw). He was involved in several ‘wadsets’ and in 1707 transferred all his remaining lands to his daughter Henrietta and her husband Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. He had another daughter Elizabeth, who married Alexander Williamson of Chapelhill. He died without a male heir. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for merchant Michael Scott in 1712. In 1715 he was fined ‘for swearing by the name of God extrajudicially in ane lawful fenced court, when not required thereto. He could be the Robert who married Anna Porteous in Hawick in 1705, with child Isobel (b.1706). Probably the same Robert secondly married Esther Turnbull in 1708, and had children: Anna (b.1709); Isobel (b.1711); Helen (b.1713); James (b.1716); Janet (b.1718), who married weaver Charles Scott; Esther (b.1720); and Robert (b.1722). The witnesses in 1709 were Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland and merchant John Graham, in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and baker William Hodge, and in 1713 were weaver Robert Turnbull and Bailie Robert Hardie. Robert Williamson (1881–1976) born in Wilton, son of manufacturer George. He was a missionary in China before WWII, along with his wife, Bessie Lucille Huntamer. She later wrote the book ‘Uncle: The Story of Robert W. Porteous’ about their time in China. He died in Olympia, Washington, U.S.A. Roland (17th C.) resident at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) Edinburgh ‘writer’ who leased the lands of Minto Craigend in 1686. Thomas (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was recorded in 1718 being rebuked for having a horse race with John Turnbull on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. He could have been the Thomas, son of Andrew and Helen Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1684. He married Agnes Gibson in Hawick in 1714. Their children included: Andrew (b.1717); Robert (b.1720); George (b.1722); Thomas (b.1724); Agnes (b.1725). He may have been brother of carrier George, who lived in Hawick at the same time. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Borthuikbra’ in 1573 when he was presented for trial in Edinburgh by ‘Wat Scott in Hartwoodmyres’, son of William Scott of Tushielaw. He was probably tenant of Borthwickbrae. William (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Stennilodge, Abbotroul’ when his will was recorded in 1682. He was presumably farmer at Stonedge (formerly spelled ‘Partis’, ‘Porteous’, ‘Portice’, ‘Portous’, ‘Portows’, ‘Portuis’, ‘Portus’, ‘Portwise’ and variants).

Porteous Croft (pôr-shis-kroft) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1580 the 6 acres in the town of Lilliesleaf that were leased for £24 a year by John Donaldson from William Middlemes are referred to as ‘Portus Croft Heid’. In 1643 the lands was rated at £78. In 1788 they were part of the lands owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. In 1811 they were was among lands owned by William Riddell of Camieston, later passing to William Currie of Linthill.

porter (pôr-'ur) n., arch. a part of the weave, consisting of 20 spaces through which the warp threads are passed, the number of these per unit length determining the density of the weave – ‘In order to find the number of slips to warp any length of web, multiply the number of porters in width by the ells in length, and divide by 72’ [BCM1881].

porter (pôr-'ur) n., arch. someone in charge of a gate, particularly applied in former times to the resident of Ewes Doors, perhaps a sobriquet for the keeper of a changehouse at the pass there, with Ninian the Porter recorded as tenant of Ewes Doors in 1567 – ‘Item, to the porter of Ewisdyer for the rest of a price of ane horse, xij £ x s.’ [SB1574].

Porter (pôr-'ur) n. Alexander (19th C.) Superintendent of Police and Chief Constable in Hawick from about 1863. He was later Chief Constable for the county, based in Jedburgh.

Porterfield (pôr-'ur-feeld) n. John (d.1604) briefly served as Archbishop of Glasgow during troubled times. Son of John, 1st Laird of Duchal, he was minister of Dumbarton, then Kilmarnock and Ardrossan. He was nominated somewhat mysteriously in 1571, after the position was forfeited by James Beaton. He was the first post-Reformation appointee, who was Archbishop in name only. However, a commission immediately investigated his appropriateness and it is unclear that he was ever consecrated. He later served as minister at several parishes, settling in Ayr in 1580.

Porthieid (pôr-'heed) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between the Ports

Winningtonhall and Horselee, although the location is unknown.

the Ports (θu-πorts) n. gates to Hawick, which could be closed to defend the Town. Hawick once consisted of basically a single street (the High Street, continued by Silver Street and the Howe-gate) and no bridge access across the Teviot. There were 4 roads leading out of town in different directions, with gates that would be locked at night. These were the North Port (on Walters Wynd, which led to the river ford), East Port (roughly opposite Baker Street), South Port (at the Cross Wynd), and West Port (at the foot of the Loan). Plaques to mark their former positions were placed by the Callants’ Club in 1964. As well as these major ports, there were also at least 3 minor gates, located at the Mill Port, the Round Close and the Howe Gate/Silver Street junction. It is unclear when these ports were first constructed, but possibly shortly after Hawick became a Burgh in the 15th century. The ports were removed following the Turnpike Road Act of 1750, which allowed for the improvement of roads using income from tolls.

Porty (pör-’ee) n., arch. short form for Portobello, once a popular seaside resort for Hawick folk to visit by train, with its promenade pier, artificial wave pool and other attractions – ‘Aw wis juist a lad at Wulton skuil Juist a wee bit fella When ma mother broke the news ‘Oor gaun tae Portabella’ ‘[AY].

Postie’s Pool (pōs-teez-pool) n. popular name for a pool in the Ale Water to the west of Lil-liesleaf village, near the sports field. The name is said to refer to a local postman who drowned here.

postmaister (pōs-mās-tur) n. postmaster, someone in charge of a post office. In 1747 Andrew Turnbull is recorded as ‘Town Post’, although it is unclear what responsibilities he had. Hawick’s first actual postmaster was John Elliot, a tanner, who gave his services freely in 1767. He was followed by Mr. Turnbull, the schoolmaster, appointed by the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was found unsuitable. Then Elliot was re-appointed against his will! He stated that he was often away from home as one excuse, but was told that he was the only suitable person and so the public would just have to wait if he was away. James Inglis (schoolmaster and later Town Clerk) was postmaster in 1772, and at some later point the office was taken by Miss Inglis (probably James’ sister), who must have been one of the country’s first post-mistresses. Robert Armstrong took over in 1809 and held the position till his death in 1852. The position was then held by Francis Deans, George Deans, James Orr, H. Little and James M. Sampson, taking us up to the early 20th century – ‘But ... whae’s postmaister on Post Office Knowe, Sae fer frae the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].

the Post Office (θu-πōst-o-fees) n. Hawick General Post Office was for a century on North Bridge Street, at the corner of Croft Road. It was built in 1892 on ground that had been J.E.D. Murray’s studio, and allotments before that. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the foundation stone was ceremoniously laid by Mrs. Oliver (her husband having owned the land). A 2-storey addition was also designed by Alison in 1904. It was much altered over the years, with the sorting office moving to St. George’s Lane in 1972 and the Post Office vacating the premises entirely in 1993. The building later contained ‘Stampers’ bar and an Indian restaurant, and then the Con Club. Meanwhile the main Post Office moved to Safeway, which itself closed in 2004, leaving the Sandbed branch as the main one in the town. The earliest mention of local mail is from about 1760 when letters would come once a month from Jedburgh and be laid out in an open stall for collection. In 1766 the Council records show them paying a man explicitly to take a letter to Edinburgh. The origin of the organised mail service lies with Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, who (in 1767) started an experimental post thrice a week to and from Berwick and Edinburgh, with John Elliot the first part-time postmaster (note that Walter Scott of Harden had also pushed for twice weekly service from Edinburgh to Peebles, Selkirk and Hawick in the 1750s). A post office was established shortly afterwards through the efforts of the Duke of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain Robert Scott. James Inglis was recorded as post-master in 1772 when he and Bailie Hardie were paid by the Council ‘for post letters, &c’; postage from Edinburgh at that time appears to have been 2d. Before the establishment of a post office the letters were exposed at a stall on market days, or on the flat tombstones of the kirk yard after Sunday services. The route from London was to Edinburgh via Coldstream, and then via Dunbar and Berwick, and then by pony to Kelso and on to Hawick. There was a theft of mail bags near Kelso in 1800. Miss Inglis (Joanna) was postmistress until 1809, when Robert Armstrong took over. The first mail-coach (on the Carlisle-Hawick-Edinburgh route) started in 1807, so that not all mail had to come from Berwick and Kelso. The situation changed utterly with the coming of the penny post in 1840. The location marked on Wood’s 1824 map was the corner of Silver Street and the Howegate. The Post Office moved from the foot of the Howegate to the High Street in about 1860 and then to North Bridge Street in 1892. By the late 19th century there were also receiving stations on Wilton Path and Dovemount. Several sub-post offices later existed throughout the town, including at 7 Sandbed, Dovemount Place, Wilton Dean Burnfoot, the top of Trinity Steps and at Safeway (closed 2004). Now only the Burnfoot and Sandbed branches survive – ‘But they’ve ta’en oor Post Office away. That hez been there for mony a day, They didni care what Hawick folk felt, Doon the river oo’ve been sellt’ [IWL].

Post Office Knowe (pòst-o-fees-now) n. hill on the Border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the north of Craik Cross Hill. The name is mysterious – ‘Whae named yon hill-top ‘Post Office Knowe’, Fer frae the haunts o’ men, Ootbye Craik Cross abune Borthwick-heid? I’d fairly like tae ken’ [DH].

the Postrel (thu-pos-trul) n. name sometimes given to the doggerel verse ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells and first published in 1688.

post-seek (pòst-seek) a., arch. bedridden – ‘Post-sick, Expl. ‘bedrid’, Roxb. Often used; but whether the meaning be the same with that of the phrase, Postit with sickness, is doubtful’ [JoJ].

Potburn (po’-burn) n. former farm adjacent to the Southern Upland Way, between Ettrick Pen and Pot Law. It was purchased by James Pott, W.S., in 1831. He was son of Gideon Pott of Dod (also written ‘Pottburn’).

potch (poch) v., arch. to trample soft ground into mud – ‘...when the Magistrates and other persons at the Common-Riding potched the ground he had plowed’ [C&L1767].

pot-hole (po’-hól) n., arch. a deep hole or pool in a river.

pot-shakins (po’-shā-kinz) n. pot scrapings, the last to come out, last of a litter – ‘The pot-shakins o a big West End famaily Jock came efter his threi brothers and six sisters’ [IWL].

the Pot Sike (thu-po’-sik) n. small stream in the upper part of the farm of Milsington. It flows roughly southwards to join the Dean Burn. There is a local tradition that there may be buried treasure there, and hence a suggestion that this may have been where the bronze Roman leg was found in 1820 (also written ‘Pot Syke’; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pott (po’, pot) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Dickson and their children included Bessie (b.1645). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included John (b.1669). Probably the same Adam, with wife Janet Riddell, was father of Janet (b.1679). Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in Kirkton Parish where he was married in 1714 (with no wife’s name given). Probably the same Adam married Helen ‘Kinarie’ in Kirkton Parish in 1717. His children baptised there included Adam (b.1717). It seems that he was separate from his contemporary who farmed at Wolfelee and Shankend. Adam of Hoscote (1690/1–1770) probably eldest son of George. He was tenant farmer at Wolfelee around 1715, moving to Shankend, where he was recorded in 1725 and 1727. He purchased the lands of Hoscote from the Homes in about 1723, starting his family’s association with that estate. He was recorded at Shankend in 1729. He seems likely to be the Adam of ‘Outterside’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and was ‘of Hoscatt’ listed along with his son George among the Commissioners of Selkirkshire. He married Betty Elliot (1686/7–1752). His children included: George (1712–70), who succeeded; a daughter (1716/7–1774) who is only marked on the gravestone as ‘Mrs. Elliot’; Elizabeth (d.1783), who married Thomas Stavert, tenant at Coliforthill; William (b.1725); Jean (or Janet, 1727–77), who married Walter Grieve, farmer at Airswood, and whose son John Grieve co-inherited Hoscote with George Stavert; William (again, 1729–75), baptised in Cavers; and Janet (1730/1–57). The marriages of his daughters Elizabeth and Jean were at the same time in 1744 in Roberton Parish. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Learmonth in Roberton Parish in 1754 (and recorded as ‘Helen Learmond’ in Kirkton Parish). Their children included James (b.1765) and Adam (b.1768). He is probably also the father of John (b.1757), baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the Adam who witnessed a baptism for John Pott and Margaret Shiel in Wilton in 1747. Alexander of Borthwickshiel (d.1796), probably related to the Potts of Todrig, he was a surgeon in the West Indies. In 1788 he and Robert (possibly his son) are recorded as owners of Borthwickshiel, valued at £600. They were also recorded in 1788 as owners of land valued at £156, which had earlier been owned by William Scott of Galalaw (and was presumably Galalaw itself). His connection with Galalaw suggests that he was related to George of Todrig (possibly his father), who had married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw earlier in the 18th century. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for Roberton Parish in 1789–92. Although he died one year earlier, he is still recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Borthwickshiel in 1797. He was still listed as owner of Borthwickshiel on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (with George of Todrig listed as owner later in the 19th century). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1796, when he was recorded as a bachelor of Roberton, Selkirkshire. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1793/4–1859) younger son of Gideon of Dod, born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Burnfoot in the Ewes valley. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was at Burnfoot in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 2600 acres, employing 10 people. In 1823 he married Appalina Hogarth (who was born in 1796 in Channelkirk). Their children included: Mary; Elizabeth; Apalina Christina Hogarth, who married Robert Laidlaw Turnbull, one of the Turnbulls of Merrylaw; and probably Gideon (d.1913), who emigrated to Queensland. Andrew (17th C.) weaver living at ‘Todscleughside’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (1759/60–1844) son of Robert and Margaret. He was a resident of Castleton Parish and is probably the shepherd at Tweedenhead recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He married Betty Armstrong (1758/9–1820) and they had a son Robert (1801–75). The family are buried in Castleton. Arthur David Ripley (1862–1901) eldest son of Gen. David of Todrig and Borthwickshiel. He served with the K.O.S.B., being appointed Lieutenant in 1886 and Captain in 1894. He volunteered for active service along with his battalion in 1900 and was Staff Officer to the Commandant of Schweizer Reneke. He died of an abscess of the liver and is buried at Kimberley, South Africa. A memorial stone was erected in Roberton Cemetery. Gen. David of Todrig (1812–81) son of George and Katherine Reid and younger brother of George. He served in India during a rebellion in 1833 and during the Sutlej campaign, where he commanded the 47th Bengal Native Infantry. He received commendation for his command in Pegu Burnah in 1854 and for commanding the 47th Regiment during the rebellion in China in 1858–59. He became a General in 1877 and was awarded the Companion of the Bath. He owned the lands of Whitslade and Borthwickshiel, among other local holdings. He married Mary Anne, daughter of Col. Ripley, and she died in 1870. Their children were: Capt. Arthur David Ripley, who died in the Boer War in 1901; Emily Louisa, who married Capt. Sydenham J. Lambert; Anne Sophia, who married Lieut. Reginald C. Hadrow; Lucy Ada; Eliza Davidson; and Constantine (d.1875). In 1876 he secondly married Anna Frances, daughter of A. Boyle from Dublin, and she died in 1878.

They had a son, Henry Percy, as well as daughters. He himself died at Borthwickshiel. Edward Helme (1880–1968) son of Col. William of Knowesouth, he achieved the rank of Lt. Col. He married Louise Medora Hermione Vannec and had a daughter, Hermione. George (1650/1–1720) perhaps the oldest local Pott with known connections to the Todrig and Hosocate family. He has one of the earliest tombstones in Borthwick Waas, which appears to say that he was ‘of Whillhill brae’ (probably Whitelhillbrae on the Dod Burn). He is said to have married an Elliot and had 14 children, probably including: Adam (1690/1–1770) of Hosocate; possibly John of Caerlenrig (1692/3–1772), but this could have been his nephew; Robert (c.1696–1711); George of Todrig (1699/1700–81); and James of Dod (1701/2–65). He was therefore the progenitor of the Potts of Caerlenrig, Dod, Hosocate and Todrig. He is surely the same man as the tenant in Whitehillbrae and Newton, whose children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mungo (b.1708); John (b.1708); Janet (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1712). The name of his wife is not recorded. George of Todrig (1699/1700–81) son of George who died in 1720. He is recorded in 1762 when Christian, widow of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, was involved with him in a court case to recover money owed to her husband. He was listed along with his son George among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw about 1754 (although possibly the George and Elizabeth Scott who were married in Robertson Parish in 1738); she died in 1755, aged 42. He purchased the lands of Caerlenrig from Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and secondly married Robert’s daughter Margaret (however, this could be confusion with other Potts). Altogether he had 2 daughters and 6 sons. His eldest son George (1739/40–81) succeeded to Todrig, while his son John (by his first marriage) succeeded to Caerlenrig (but again this could be confusion with other family branches). It is also possible that Alexander of Borthwickshiel was another son. He is probably the George of Todrig recorded as liferenter of lands in Headshaw in about 1788 (although deceased by then). George of Hosocate (1712–c.80) son of Adam of Hosocate.

He inherited the Hosocate estate on the death of his father (perhaps in 1770). He was a witness to the will of Robert Grieve in Deanburnhaugh. He was ‘younger of Hoscott’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He died unmarried, probably around 1780, and bequeathed the estate to his nephews George Stavert (son of his sister Elizabeth) and John Grieve (son of his sister Jean). In 1783 there was a sasine in favour of his sisters, the only surviving children of Adam: Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Stavert in Coliforthill; and Jean, wife of Walter Grieve in Airswood. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Adam (b.1743), Betty (b.1750) and George (b.1775). He is probably related to George of Whitehillbrae, who had children baptised in Kirkton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Mary (b.1768); and Betty (b.1770). He may be the same man as the George whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish at about the same time. George (18th C.) married Betty Stavert in Roberton Parish in 1766. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Tait in 1782. George of Todrig (1739/40–81) son of George and Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw. He was listed as ‘younger of Todrige’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He was still ‘younger’ in 1779 when Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto gave him liferent of much of Headshaw; this was part of Elliot’s plan to stack the Roxburghshire voters’ roll with his supporters. He is recorded paying the land tax on Todrig in 1785 and 1802 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He was also recorded as owner of the lands in Firth in 1788. Note that he is easily confused with his contemporary George of ‘Rig’ (meaning Caerlenrig). In 1778 he married Barbara, daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth and Dorothea Chisholme; she later married Thomas Knox, was mother of the poet William Knox and died in 1821, aged 68. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) were: George (b.1779), who probably died young; George (b.1780), who succeeded; and Barbara (b.1782), who married Charles Erskine of Shieldfield. The family gravestone at Borthwick Waas states that he died in 1781, just a month or so after his father; he was certainly deceased in 1806 when his daughter Barbara got married. The Mary who married William Aitchison (who later owned Brieryhill) may also have been his daughter. He may have been the same as the heir of Borthwickshiel who was killed by a fall from his horse near Howdenburn. George of Caerlenrig (1722/3–1815) son of John of Caerlenrig and Mary Scott. He is probably the ‘Pott of Ridge’ (no forename given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was George ‘of Ridge’ when listed along with John (probably his father) witnessing a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falmash in 1764. He owned the farm of Caerlenrig in 1788, valued at £366. He is recorded being ‘of Ridge’ on the 1785–86 Horse Tax Rolls for Cavers Parish, listed along with his son in 1787 and then alone again in 1788–92. He is ‘George Pott Esqr. Rigg’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also ‘Esqr. Rig’ in 1797 when he was taxed for having a dog. He may be the George ‘of Clanduchrig’ (perhaps intended to be Caerlenrig) listed in 1788 among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. He is probably the ‘Mr’ George who in 1800 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Glendinning, shepherd at Blackcleugh. He was listed as owner of Caerlenrig in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Note that he is easy to confuse with his contemporary George of Todrig. According to the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery he married three times: firstly Isabella Currie (1753/4–72), who had the same name as his step-mother, and hence was a niece of his step-mother; secondly Jane Little (1736/7–1775); and thirdly Margaret Elliot (1737/8–1821). He was listed as ‘in Colindrick’ when his wife and another family member were buried in Hawick in 1772. He was succeeded in Caerlenrig by his son John (1765/6–1830) and also had a son Robert who died in childhood. He appears to have lived to the age of 92. George (18th/19th C.) married Agnes White in Hawick in 1796. They were described as both of Hawick (18th/19th C.) married Agnes White in Hawick and hence was a niece of his step-mother; secondly Margaret Elliot (1737/8–1821). He was listed as ‘in Colindrick’ when his wife and another family member were buried in Hawick in 1772. He was succeeded in Caerlenrig by his son John (1765/6–1830) and also had a son Robert who died in childhood. He appears to have lived to the age of 92. George (18th/19th C.) married Agnes White in Hawick in 1796. They were described as both of Hawick Parish. George of Todrig (1780–1862) son of George and Barbara Turnbull. He was Convenor of Selkirkshire, as well as Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant in that county. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was probably the George of Todrig (separately listed from George of ‘Rig’) among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of land at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish, as well as Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. He was listed as owner of Borthwickshields in about 1874 (after he was deceased). A carved panel on a farm building at Todrig probably relates to him; it has the initials ‘G P’ at the top, a lozenge in the centre, and the inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’ at the bottom. He was listed with another George (probably of Caerlenrig) his father, even as Commissioners of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1819. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor’ at Borthwickshields. In 1807 he married Katherine, daughter of David Reid, commissioner of customs she died in 1833. Their children were: Jane Stephen (1808–88); Barbara (b.1810), who married James Erskine of Shielfield, probably her cousin; Eliza Davidson (1815–64); George (b.1811), Major in the Bengal Army; David (b.1812), General in the Bengal Army; and Stephen (b.1813), with the Bengal Engineers. His adult daughters Jane, Barbara and Eliza were living at Borthwickshields House in 1841. He died at Borthwickshields and is buried in Robertson Cemetery. George of Dod (1790–1862) born at Penchrise, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott. He was the 3rd Pott Laird of Dod. He was educated at Jedburgh, Yarrow and Edinburgh University (probably the George recorded in medicine there in 1809). He was Lieutenant in the Roxburghshire Militia from about 1811 and became a Captain of the Roxburgh yeomanry cavalry in 1817. He went through a protracted legal battle with Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs (also junior captain in his regiment) over the deal their fathers had made over the lease of Penchrise. He eventually lost the case in the House of Lords. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. About 1828 he rented Crawhill farm (now Bucklands) and lived there until he bought Knowesouth (from William Oliver Rutherford) in 1838. He was listed as resident of Crawhill in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was ‘Proprietor’ at Knowesouth and in 1851 was ‘Landed Proprietor, Justice of the Peace’ at Knowesouth, farming 112 acres and employing 5 labourers. He also ran the farm of Rucastle. About 1854 he sold the farm of Riskenhope (by St. Mary’s Loch) to John Scott, W.S. From cousins at Skelfhill he obtained an old copper pot, 19 1/2 inches deep, said by tradition to be the cauldron in which Lord Soulis was boiled at the Nine Stane Rig! He gifted this relic to the Duke of Buccleuch. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He often told the story about meeting an old man, James Bunyan, herding his cow, and on asking him who was the worst farmer in the county was told ‘Weel, sir I think it is just yersel’. Along with Mr. Selby (factor to the Earl of Minto) he had the idea to build a bridge and roads to connect Haseisdenean station with Denholm (this being later implemented). In 1823 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of William Elliot, architect; she died in Edinburgh in 1864, aged 64. Their children were: Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (b.c.1826); Esther (b.1829); Thomasina (b.1830), who married lawyer James Oliver; Gideon (1823/4–1905), who farmed at Knowesouth; William (b.1833), officer in the 89th Regiment; Janet (d.1912); and Ann. He died at Knowesouth and the family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. George, J.P. of Todrig and Borthwickshiels (1811–77) son of George and Katherine Reid, and brother of Gen. David. He served with the Bengal Army, reaching at least the rank of Major (and was listed as Colonel on his memorial stone). He was recorded as ‘George Pott, Esq. of Borthwickshiels’ among landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He gave the land for the new Kirk at Robertson in 1862. In 1840 he married Julia, youngest daughter of Rev. Robert-Sparke Hutchings and she died in 1872. Their children included: George (1843–46); Constantine; George (again, 1847–54); Katherine (1850–55); and Robert Constantine (1851–75), his only surviving son, who was a Lieutenant in the 76th Regiment. He is buried at Robertson, along with other members of his family. George (18th/9th C.) name of 2 men listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. One was at Wilton Lodge and the other at Crawhill. Neither of them are listed by 1840. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1852 he married Jane Bell. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1855 he married Isabella Foster. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Murray and their children included George (b.1859), Jane (b.1866), William (b.1867), William (again, b.1868) and James (b.1870). George (1842–98) younger son of James of Potburn and Jane Brown, and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. He succeeded his brother to the lands of Potburn and for some years lived at Lintalee. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1870. He moved to 55 Albany Street Edinburgh, and died. He married and had a family, probably being succeeded by James Gideon. George (19th/20th C.) brother of James Gideon. He succeeded to Potburn, but lived in New Zealand. Gideon of Dod (1757–1812) son of James and Jean Scott. He was a successful tenant sheep-farmer at Penchrise, apparently being let the farm by Sir William Elliott of Stobs at a reduced rate because he had lent some money towards the building of Stobs Castle. He was brother of Isabella (who married Thomas Usher of Courthill). A document of 1784 shows him clearing the debts of William Elliot (son of Capt. Robert) before he succeeded to Harwood. He also bought the farm of Riskenhope (formerly part of Rodono) from Hay of Duns Castle. He was granted a 77 year lease of Penchrise and Langside in 1794 (this being challenged when the son of the granter brought a court case against his son George). He is probably the Pott of Penchrise who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded at Penchrise on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1797, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He paid the land tax at Dod in 1811. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Pott of Todrig, and she died at ‘Warebank’ (probably Weirbank in Melrose) in 1840, aged 84. Their children (at least 4 of whom were baptised in Cavers Parish) included: James (1784–85), eldest son; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1785–1855), eldest daughter, who died at ‘Warebank’; Jean (1787–88); George (b.1790), who farmed Penchrise; James (again, b.1792), who became a lawyer; Alexander, who farmed at Burnfoot on Ewes; another daughter; and Thomasina (‘Tomy’, 1797–1866), youngest daughter, who also died at Warebank. He is buried along with other family members at Borthwick Waas. Gideon of Dod and Knowesouth (1823/4–1905) eldest son of George and Jane Elliot, born at Penchrise. He was educated at Canonbie, the Grange School in Sunderland and Edinburgh University. He acquired parts of Ruecastle from Thomas Rutherford and William Oliver Rutherford of Edgerston. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He also acted as collector of county rates in 1848 and for several years afterwards (still being so recorded in 1866). He turned down an offer to be agent of the British Linen Company in Jedburgh. Along with Edward Heron Maxwell he implemented the building of a bridge and road (by public subscription) to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He also arranged a collection to give a gift to the Duke of Buccleuch for appreciation of locally keeping fox hounds at his own expense (this being 2 candelabra). He entered the new volunteer cavalry as a private and later became a Lieutenant. He was an expert shot, winning the officers’ challenge cup of the Border battalion outright after 3 victories in a row, and placing well in several national competitions. He was a successful sheep-farmer and took pupils at Knowesouth for agricultural training. He was recorded at Knowesouth in a directory of 1868 and paid the land tax there in 1874. His sister Thomasina married James Oliver, lawyer of Mayfield House. He married Janet Hunter (also known as Janet Lean Hunter Hunter, 1826/7–1912), from Crawford, Lanarkshire, who died in Jedburgh. Their children included: Gideon (1862–1904), an engineer, who predeceased him, dying in Glasgow; Grace Murray (b.1863); William (b.1865), the only surviving son; and Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1871). In 1891 his younger daughter Agnes married William Edward Oliver-Rutherford, and at the same time his elder daughter Grace Jane married Isaac Fenton Bayley (of Halls, Dunbar). Henry Percy (19th/20th C.) son of Gen. David of Todrig. He served in the military, being with the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers and in 1904 became a Lieutenant with the 5th Light Infantry, advancing to Captain in 1908 and temporary Major in 1915. His daughter Ruth Barbara (1910–61) married Ernest Keatting and is buried in Roberton Cemetery. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as owner of Caverton when he was fined for failing to appear at the Justice-aire. He later presented Nicholas Brown to give suit for his lands in Caverton. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Cauldmill in 1709. His children included Walter (b.1696), Marion (b.1705), Jane (b.1707) and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son John was baptised in 1716. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1721. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1721), with witnesses George Bell and William Turnbull. Probably the same James, also at Borthaugh, married to ‘Agnes’ Scott was father of Agnes (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were ‘G.B.’ and William Turnbull. James (18th C.) farmer who, along with 2 brothers, rented much of Harwood from William Elliot about 1730. He may have been the son of William born in Cavers Parish in 1702 or could have been the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Skelfhill in 1738 and 1748. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1738), Thomas (b.1741), Elizabeth (b.1744) and Mary (b.1748). It is possible he is the same as James of Dod. James of Dod (1701/2–65) farmer at Penchrise and Langside. He was one of 14 children and possibly youngest son of George (who died in 1720). He married Jean, daughter of Gideon Scott of Woll, and she died in 1767, aged 48. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isabell, who married Thomas Usher of Courthill; George (b.1744), their eldest son, who died aged 4; Elizabeth (1756/7–83), 3rd daughter; and Gideon (1757–1802), 2nd son, who succeeded to Dod and farmed at Penchrise. He may be the James who had unnamed sons baptised in Cavers Parish in 1744, 1750 and 1757. He died at Penchrise and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1751. He is probably related to the James who was at Borthaugh a generation earlier. In 1744 he married Bessie Palmer, the marriage proclaimed in Roberton and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1746), William (b.1748) and Isabel (b.1751). Probably the same James was father of Ann (b.1755), who was baptised in Roberton (and may be the Ann who married shoemaker George Shiel). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert Smith and James Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in that parish in 1753. Perhaps the same James is recorded marrying another Agnes Scott in 1767 (that marriage also being recorded in Hawick). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included Betty (b.1762). It is possible he is the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Nichol and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: Janet (b.1761); Agnes (b.1761), who married Robert Young; and James (b.1764). James of Potburn (1792–1852) from the Penchrise family, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott, he was born in Cavers Parish. He trained as a lawyer, becoming W.S. in 1818. He was one of the trustees for the late Adam Stavert of Hoscote in 1828, along with one of the Georges. He bought the lands of Potburn, Selkirkshire in 1831. He may be the James recorded in a letter of 1836 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1838 he was listed as a writer in Edinburgh when he witnessed a document in Hawick (relating to the Dicksons) and a letter from the same year is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He married Jane, 2nd daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat in 1839. His children included James Gideon and George. His firm could be the ‘Messrs. Pott & Macmillan’ recorded in documents of 1814 in the Walter Mason Collection. James (b.1839/40) son of Martin. He married Agnes Lamb in 1860 and their children (baptised in Hawick or Wilton) included Mary (b.1860), Martin (b.1863), Walter (b.1865), Jane (b.1867), Martin (again, b.1867), Margaret (b.1869), and William (b.1874). In 1861 he was living with his father at Upper Hope Park. James Gideon of Potburn (1840–65) eldest son of James of Potburn and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. In 1859 he obtained a commission as Cornet in the 11th Hussars. He was described as a ‘delicate, handsome-looking man’, but of poor health. He had to retire from the army and died at the age of 25. His brother George succeeded to Potburn. James Gideon (d.1915) from the local family, probably son of George of Potburn. He died in Salonika on active service with the Lothian and Borders Light Horse. His brother George succeeded. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Wilson and their children included William (b.1639). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Huggan and their children included Bessie (b.1646). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Johnston and their children included William (b.1655). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son William was baptised in 1674. Perhaps the same John was father of Agnes (b.1692). John (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of ‘Dodburne in Kinkton Parich’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Poott’. Perhaps the same John in Winningtonrig had a child John baptised in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Miller in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and his children included Margaret (b.1713) and Isobell (b.1716). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkin Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1726); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included George (b.1724), Robert (b.1725) and Margaret (b.1726). He may be the John who got married in Kirkton Parish in 1721 (wife’s name not given). John (1692/3–1772) succeeded to the lands of Caerlenrig from his father George (however, it is also possible he was a nephew of George). He and George ‘of Ridge’ (probably his son) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falnash in 1764. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls ‘in Rigg’ in 1789–91 (even although deceased by then). He married Mary Scott, who died in 1730, aged 34. He secondly married Isabella Currie, and she died in 1763, aged 50. His children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1721/2–43), his oldest daughter; and George (1722/3–1815), who succeeded to Caerlenrig. He could be the John whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Marion (b.1758) and Margaret (b.1759). It is also possible that he is the same man as John from Kirkton Parish, whose son George was baptised in 1724. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several family members. John (18th C.) recorded as ‘Workman’, probably in the Teviothead area. He married Margaret (or Marion) Craw in 1730, both of them being from Cavers Parish. Their son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738, with Walter Scott at Commonsie one of the witnesses. He could be the John in Colterscleuch whose daughter Mary (b.1732) was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (b.1734), also baptised in Cavers, was probably his son. John (18th C.) tailor who lived in Wilton Parish. He was living at Langlands in 1747 and 1751. He married Margaret Shiel in 1739 and their children included: James (b.1740); Robert (b.1741); Janet (b.1744); Ann (b.1747); and Isabel (b.1751). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and Adam Shiel (who was probably related to his wife) and in 1751 were Robert and Walter Scott. His wife’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret ‘Batety’ and their children included Helen (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably also the carrier whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1745, with witnesses shoemakers John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) married in Kirkton Parish in 1754, with no wife’s name recorded. John (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig 1762–63. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Clerk in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761), Betty (b.1766), Betty (again, b.1773) and William (b.1776). The witnesses in 1766 were merchants John Hardie and Adam Leyden and in 1776 were the whole congregation. Note that at about the same time John Clerk was married to Margaret Pott, and so the couples may have been related. John (18th C.) married Janet Ogilvie in Castleton Parish in 1769. John (18th C.) mason from Hawick, who carried out much of the repair work after the 1767 flood, rebuilding the small arch of the Auld Brig and the wall of the Manse. He died a few years later, following an accident that occurred on the completion of the Hornshole worked as a wool spinner. He was living at Malt Martin, he was born in Wilton Parish, where he Martin is probably the son of Martin and Betty Gray their daughter Marion was baptised in 1804. He married Margaret Scott and british (b.1779).

He is probably the John whose wife Peggy Turnbull died in 1795, the couple being married (declared in Wilton and Hawick Parishes) in 1786. He is probably also the stockingmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784).

He married Mabel Nichol and their children included Robert (b.1792), Mabel (b.1794), James (b.1796), John (b.1798), Betty (b.1800) and Jean
(b.1802). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton
Parish. He married Betty Robson. Their children included Helen (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Elliot (b.1811). John of Rig (1765/6–1830) son of George and Isabella Currie, he held the lands of Caerlenrig. He is probably the ‘& Son of Rig’ recorded along with George on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Mr Pott, junior, Caerlenrig’ on the subscription list for John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded being from ‘Rigg’ in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791 regarding a lost almanac. He is probable the John ‘Potts’, ‘Esq. Caerlenrig’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beautiful of the Border’ in 1821. He became a member of the Wisp Club in about 1827. He married Christian Aitchison, who died at Macksdie in 1842, aged 82. He is buried along with his father, grandfather and other family members in Borthwick Waas. There are documents relating to his family, covering the period 1743–1845, in the Borders Archive. Martiin (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1754. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton
Parish. He married Betty Robson. Their children included Andrew (b.1762), William (b.1765) and Walter (b.1765). John (b.1756), baptised in Castleton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he was the Robert who owned Demainholm (along with Matthew Little) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He mar-rried Betty Scott, and their children included Jane (b.1760) and John (b.1761). Robert (18th C.)
house and stable boy at Burnhead in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the Robert who married Margaret ‘Robinson’ in Hawick Parish in 1787. Capt. Robert of Galalaw (d.1803) recorded in Robertson Parish on the Land Tax Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1802.

Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1788 along with Alexander, as joint owner of land valued at £156, which was presumably Galalaw, as well as Borthwickshiel, valued at £600. He was also recorded as owner of Galalaw on the county valuation and on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although already deceased by then). It seems likely that he was son of Alexander of Borthwickshiel and grandson of George of Todrig. He died at Borthwickshiel. Robert (d.1816) recorded as ‘old Tailor and Packman Midraw’ when his death was registered in Hawick. He could be the pedlar Robert who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. Robert (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded as a carter among male heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. He was an agricultural labourer and carter on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living on North Hermitage Street. He was listed as a farmer in 1861. He married Mary Armstrong (b.1811), who was from Canonbie. Their children included: Betty (b.1832); Margaret (b.1833), who married David Oliver; Andrew (b.1836); John (b.1838); Christopher (b.1840); Jane (b.1842); William (b.1845); Walter (b.1847), who moved to Glasgow; James (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852); and Robert (b.1855). The couple were rebuked for ‘antenuptial Fornication’ in 1832. The 1841 record says ‘to America and dead’, but that must be an error. Col. Stephen (1813–85) son of Col. William Helme of Surrey.

potted meat (po-ˈtəd-mēt, -ˈet-ˈ) n. dish made from boiled meat and bones, which sets into a jelly when cooled – ‘We aa killed pigs aboot that time an made the potted meat. An you got the potted meat potted heid’ [TH] (also spelled ‘pottit’ etc.).

Potterlamport (po-tər-ləm-pərt) n. name of a former tower, recorded on Sandison’s c.1590 map, roughly near where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel. It was recorded in a rental list in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton in about 1376, being worth 34 shillings. It could be the ‘Porter-landes’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was listed in 1632 among the Liddesdale lands of Sandy Armstrong. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1694. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it is shown as a farm of 550 acres, bounded by Nether Harden, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Hillhouse. It also shared a common of 37 acres with the farm of Hillhouse and another of 24 acres with the Laird of Whithaugh’s tenant. It could potentially be the same place as Puddinburn, or else was merely a smaller house nearby. A small stream on the east side of the Liddel Water, between Castleton and Whithaugh is called Pouterlampert Sike and a farmstead is marked there on the 1862–3 Ordnance Survey map. A section of bike trail in the area has also been named ‘Pouter Lampert’ (it is ‘Pouterlampert’ in about 1376, ‘Powterlapmpert’ in 1583, ‘Porterlampet’ in 1632, ‘Poertolampet’ in 1694 and ‘Porterlempet’ and ‘Porterlampit’ in 1718; the origin could be Celtic ‘polter’ meaning an upland stream, ‘lann’ meaning open land and ‘pert’, meaning ‘bush’).

George (1793–1851) born in Oxnam Parish, son of Thomas and Andrea Petrie. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Several letters to him from the 1820s are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is also recorded as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and also writer in Hawick in the 1828 Edinburgh Almanack. He lived on Buccleuch Street, and was also listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He served as solicitor with the Sheriff Court in Hawick, being sometimes described as Procurator Fiscal. He is listed as a joint proprietor on the 1833 electoral roll of Hawick, acquiring a house in Hawick from Robert Heckford of Kelso; Thomas (writer in Edinburgh) and Andrew Petrie (stationer in Edinburgh) are also mentioned, possibly his brother and brother-in-law. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as agent for Scottish Union insurance. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1838 (relating to the Dicksons), with James Pott, W.S. also a witness (even although he was presumably not related). In 1851 he is a solicitor of the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court, living on Buccleuch Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory (published just after his death) the firm of Potts & Carmichael is listed as writers and notaries on Buccleuch Street; he must have briefly been in partnership with the much younger James Carmichael. He married Janet Anderson in 1837, and she died in 1898, aged 84. Their children included: George, who died in infancy; and Andrew (1838–95), who took over the farm of his uncle John Henderson at Lewenshope, in the Yarrow valley, and married Jessie Mitchell. There is an obelisk to his memory in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. James (1737/8–1817) Sheriff Clerk for Roxburghshire. He is so recorded in 1780 and in 1799 was recorded as Clerk to the Lieutenancy of Roxburghshire. He may have been son of Thomas. He lived in Jedburgh. He paid tax on a male servant in Jedburgh from 1778 through the 1780s. In 1785–91 he was a writer in Jedburgh when he paid tax for having a female servant. He was writer in Jedburgh in 1785–89 and Sheriff Clerk from 1790–95. In 1851 he was a writer in Jedburgh from 1778 through the 1780s. the Prefabs (thu-pre-fawbz) n. prefabricated houses, constructed because of a housing urgency and lack of building materials after WWII. The first 90 of them were erected at Silverbethall in 1945–47, with about 160 build over the following years. They were of the ‘Arcon’ and ‘Uniseco’ type. The last were demolished in the early 1960’s. Other ‘prefabs’ were constructed at the top of the Loan, and one such house still stands on the left at the top of the Loan – ‘oo yist ti bide up it the prefabs’, ‘The toon will look gey changed an’ a’, Nae doot it’s tae the guid, Wi’ ‘Prefabs’ up at Sillerbut ha’, An’ ‘Permanents’ at Linwude’ [IJ].

Prefort (pra-for) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war in Hawick. He painted a view of the town in 1813 from the Millers Knowes, which is a valuable early representation, including details such as the telegraph house on Crumhaugh-hill, where the beacon was. His view formed the basis of a painting by Frank Wood in 1895.

prejudge (pre-juj) v., arch. to harm, work to the prejudice of – ‘...and appoints Baylyea Burne ...to goe upon Saturday first about eleven o’clock and sight that the marches of the said dyke are not prejudged’ [BR1675].

premonition (pre-mo-ni-shin) n., arch. prior notice, particularly legal notification of a fixed period during which an obligation is to be carried out – ‘...Thomas Hardie, merchand, to carie the said Colour the forsaid day, and had formerly called and caused thair officers to give him tymous advertisement upon eight dayes preceeding premonition and advertisement for that effect ...’ [BR1706].

Prendergast (pren-dur-gawst) n. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus, failed to enter him in the court in Jedburgh. A little later his case was suspended. George (16th C.) tenant in Hallrule. He is recorded in 1581 as ‘Prendergast’ when he was among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Probably the same George ‘Prendergast’ was witness to the 1607 sasine for John Scott gaining the lands of Hobbsburn and Weens. Janet (17th C.) ‘cot-tar’ at Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. His name is recorded as ‘Prendergast’. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. John (17th C.) shepherd at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His surname is written ‘Plendergaist’. Ralph (17th C.) cottar at Abbotrule according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Ralf Plendergaist’ and he was taxed ‘for abatreull for himself and cottar’. He is probably the ‘Ralph Prendergast’ who was the last tacksman at Ruletownhead Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Hawick Parish Records receiving a collection after his house near Stobs burned down in 1703. Mary ‘Plenderghest’, wife of Robert Stevenson in Hawick Shiel (recorded in 1702) was probably related to him. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was described as a herd in Essenside in 1698. He married Janet Clerk and their children included Bessie (b.1698) and Christian (b.1698). William (d.1333) Englishman who fought against the Scots in the later years if the 13th century and was in charge of Jedburgh Castle when the Scots tried to retake it after Bannockburn. He surrendered Jedburgh Castle to the Scots in about 1317, switched allegiance and was killed at the Battle of Halidon Hill fighting against the English. He held lands at Cornhill-on-Tweed (also written ‘Plendergaist’, ‘Plendergast’, ‘Prendergaist’ and variants).

prent (pren’t, prent) v., poet., arch. to print – ‘I hid behind a slab o’ granite, Wi’ God kens a’ what prentit on it’ [WP], n., arch. a print, a printed piece of cloth, n., pl., arch. old pieces or patterns of printed cloth.

prentice (pren-tis, pren’is) n., arch. an apprentice in a trade, the period of training typically being 6 years, although for some trades somewhat shorter or longer periods were the norm – ‘...the Grammar School Colour shall ride next the Town Standard, the English School Colour next, and the Prentice Colour last ...’ [BR1747], ‘...and that the said prentice shall be bound prentice for four yeirs tymne and space ...’ [BR], ‘...that he would not allow boyes and prentices to resort to his house for gameing att ye Cards’ [PR1724], ‘I’m gaun to be married to-morrow, But no to the prentice lad’ [JoHa], ‘He cam’ to be the prentice callant, (He’d got some schoolin’ an’ had talent)’ [RDW] (see also apprentice).

presbyter (prez-bi-tur) n., arch. an elder in the early Episcopal Church or later in the Presbyterian Church, a minister or elder who sits on the Presbytery.

the Presbyterian Kirk (thu-prez-bi-tee-rec-in-kirk) n. the established Church of Scotland, which is governed by local bodies of elders and not by bishops, and has a doctrine based on Calvinism. Its popularity rose through the mid-16th century, and it was effectively introduced by Parliament as the established church of Scotland in 1560.

Presbytery (prez-bi-tu-ree) n. a body formed of ministers and one elder representative of each church, which governs an area within the Presbyterian Church – ‘Fahnash and Walter Elliot attended the brethren of ye Presbyterie convened at Jedbro in order to see whereunto the call to Mr. Cunningham would tend . . .’ [PR1712] (from Ancient Greek).

Present (pre-zin’) n., arch. a document, especially in the phrase ‘this present’ or ‘these presents’ – ‘Whereupon they did nominate and appoint . . .’ [PR1718].

Presents *(pre-zints’) v., arch. present, particularly in the legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me thir presents . . .’ [BR1701], ‘We by thir presents binds and obleisses us and our successors in the office of balyearie and toune counsell of the said brugh of Hawicke . . .’ [HAST1902].

Present Bailles *(pre-zin’-bâ-leez) n., pl., arch. phrase occurring often in the Town’s records, meaning the sitting Bailies, as opposed to any ‘late bailles’.

Preses *(pre-zeez) n., arch. a chairman, person presiding over a meeting, spokesperson – ‘He has also filled the position of preses of the congregaation’ [JE].

Presfen (pres-fin) n. William (b.c.1305) probably born in Middleton, Northumberland. He was English Constable of Jedburgh Castle 1334–5. In 1335 his men were involved in an ambush of the Scots under Sir William Douglas, in which Douglas’ brother James was killed and John Randolphs, Earl Moray taken prisoner (also written Prestoune of Hawyc [HAST1902]).

Press *(pres) v., arch. to attack, beset, compel, take forcibly – ‘. . . personating themselves to be officers, they forced John Tomsone to ryse naked out of his bed, threatening to press him and take him away with them’ [BR1706].

Presser (pre-sur) n. a term in the hosiery trade for part of a machine which closes the barbs of the needles so that the loops of yarn can pass over them.

Presteegious *(pres-teej-yis) adj. prestigious.

Presto’s *(pres-toz) n. supermarket built on the site of the former Mactaggart’s skinworks at the corner of Albert Road and Victoria Road in 1977. It was the first large supermarket to be opened in Hawick, was a part of the Allied Suppliers business and was converted to a Safeway in the late 1980s – ‘Throve time incomers came, Like Fazal Din and Gusto, And then ow’re at the Haugh, There came a bit ca’d Presto’ [IWL].

Preston *(pres-tin) n. Rev. David (b.1875) born at Caldercruix in Lanarkshire, son of George and Janet Shanks. He graduated from Glasgow University and was licensed by Hamilton Presbytery in 1899. He became assistant minister at Greyfriars, Dumfries and then was ordained at Eves in 1901. In 1903 he married Ella Margaret, daughter of James McKillop from Stirlingshire. Their children included: Douglas George (b.1904); Jessie Eleanor Doris (b.1907); and Kathleen Angus (b.1910). Dr. ?? (16th C.) listed as ‘Doctor Prestoun’, when he was the forst man listed as witnes to the final ‘latterwill’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. This was witnessed in Hawick, so he may have been a local man. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included Margaret (b.1795), John (15th C.) Parson in Hawick in 1481, ‘John Prestoune of Haywyc . . . bachelor in decrees and perpetual vicar of Dunlop’. Nothing else seems to be known about him. John (b.1814/5) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Wester Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 198 acres and employing 5 labourers. He was a widower by then, living with his mother Ann and son Robert. Rev. Thomas minister at Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1989–1992. Rev. William (17th C.) possible minister at Hassendean in 1638 when the National Convenant was signed in Hawick. The name was apparently hard to transcribe, and the minister at that time was Alexander Forrest, so this may be an error.

Pretnsic *(pre-ten-seek) adj., poet. pretentious – ‘Aye, there ye’ll find ane o’ yer clan, A social,
Prickinghaugh

Pretoria Day (pre-tō-ree-a-dā) n. commemoration of the taking of Pretoria from the Boers on 5th June 1900. That day coincided with the Tuesday of the Common Riding, and there was a huge parade in the evening in Hawick.

Price (pris) n. William M. (19th/20th C.) resident of Minto. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk.

prices (pri-seez) n., pl., arch. the average price, in phrases such as ‘tawe, three or mony prices’ – ‘A’ things is twae prices or dooble dear in thae times’ [GW], ‘The kye brought mony prices at the fair’ [JL] (see also monie prices).

pricker (pri-kur) n., arch., poet. a fast rider, one who spurs on a horse – ‘Jock Ridley ance gaily rode doon To lift my ain horse frace the lea – A riever o’ Tynedale renown, A Ker-handed pricker was he’ [T], ‘The hunters scoured again the field, The red pricker did stay. And for to kill the poor ausd man. His weapons did assay’ [JTe].

prickie (pri-kee) n., arch. a small jab with a sharp object, the point of a pin.

prickie an jockie (pri-kee-in-jo-kee) n., arch. a children’s game played with pins, described as ‘similar to Odds or Evens, Teviotd. Prickie dea .... That proud, prideful – ‘...That pridefu’ priest o’ oft pedantic prose’ [JoHa], ‘...But dinna be pridefu’, but grateful’ To ken ye’ve been keepit frae wrang’ [FL], ‘...whan A’m seek-staaed o the ...preidfih bluis-treen that a body offen hes ti thole’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘pridefu’).

priest (preest) n., arch. an urge to defecate without effect – ‘A great priest, a strong but ineffec-tual inclination to go to stool, a tenesmus, Roxb.; in other counties a ‘prais’’ [JoJ].

Priestcroon (preest-croon) n. Priestcrown, former name for Greenbraechead. The origin of the name is obscure, although James Wilson has suggested a link with the chapel dedicated to St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley – ‘...While Greenbraechead (in older times Priestcrown) To meet Crowbyres send the signal down’ [WNK] (e.g. on Stobie’s 1770 map and the 1897 Ordnance Survey map).

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. farm in the upper Allan valley, at the southernmost point of the loop in the road from Southfield through to Northhouse. There was once a school here, and a ford was long an alternative to the bridge across the Allan Water nearby. This was the location for the charter signed by James V giving Armstrong’s lands to Maxwell after the hanging of Johnnie Armstrong at Caerlenrig (although it is possible this was another place of the same name, the proximity to Caerlenrig and the King’s recorded itinerary makes this likely). The lands here were formerly part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield and in 1501 Robert Elliot of Redheugh inherited them from his grandfather, with Melrose Abbey holding the superiority. ‘Gret Johnnie Elliot’ was there in about 1510. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented the lands from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. In 1569 it was part of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill, with the tenant then being ‘Jokke Elliot’. In 1574 the tenants ‘Law’s Jock’ Elliot, Alexander ‘Mill’ Elliot and ‘Law’s Tom’ Elliot were among men who Robert Elliot of Redheugh had been ordered by the Privy Council to remove from his lands. Simon Wilson is recorded there in 1623. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Thomas Lauder, as well as shepherds James Grieve and William Grieve were recorded there in 1694. John Wilson was shepherd there in 1716. Gideon Scott was there in at least 1753–57 and William Grieve in 1761. It is described in the 1718 survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1864 acres and was bounded by Peilbrae, Dod, Peelbraehope, Braidlie, Langside and...
Priesthaugh

Skelfhill. Robert Hall was living there in 1724 and John Scott and John Nichol in 1726–28. Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill leased it from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. Gideon Scott was farmer there in the latter part of the 18th century. Walter Scott was farmer there in 1785–97 and there were Scotts there in 1821 and around 1860. There were also Hardies in the mid-19th century. About 15 acres of corn there was silted up in the flood of 1846. A spring that lay to the south was once supposed to have healing powers (according to a Presbytery record of 1614). There has been a suggestion that there was once a chapel here (marked in a field to the north of the farm on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), but there is no evidence for this. Between the farmhouse and Priesthaugh Cottages is an earthwork, on the east side of the burn, measuring about 70 m by 45 m, but washed away on the western side. A cache of gold coins was found on the farm in the late 1700s, later in the possession of Mr. Elliot of Redheugh, and a few years before that a box containing about 120 silver coins were found on the farm. The stuffed 2-headed lamb in the Museum was from here. In nearby remote glens there are several plantations, called Scar Plantation, Pyat Skie Plantation, Brae Plantation, Garden Plantation, Heather Wood and Craw Wood. There have been Ride-outs to this farm – ‘...Until I turn’d at Priesthaugh Scrogg, And shot their horses in the bog’ [SWS] (the origin is likely to be simply the Old English ‘preost halli’, meaning ‘the priest’s haugh’, although there is no obvious connection with church lands; the name first appears in 1500 as ‘Prysthauch’, is ‘Preistishauche’ in 1530, ‘Priestishauke’ in 1533, ‘Preisthauch’ in 1557, 1564, 1569, 1621, 1623, 1660, 1663 and 1693, ‘Priestishauke’ in 1634, ‘Preisthauch’ in 1661 and ‘Priesthaugh’ in 1694; it is ‘Priesthauch’ on Blauen’s 1654 map as well as de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland).

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. Archibald

‘Archie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill who is listed in a bond of 1569 signed in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Arche Preisthauch’, and ‘Jok’ is also listed. The tenant of Priesthaugh (‘Jock Elliot’) is separately listed, but presumably the surname derived from that farm in earlier generations. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as a tenant of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill in 1569, along with Archibald, who was surely a close relative. His name is given as ‘Jok Preisthauch’.

Priesthaugh Burn (prees-tuf-burn) n. stream that meets the Skelfhill Burn near Priesthaugh farm, to form the Allan Water. The boggy region at the head of the burn is the Queen’s Mire.

Priesthaugh Cottages (prees-tuf-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages just south of Priesthaugh farm.

Priesthaugh-hill (prees-tuf-hil) n. steadying where the Cauld Cleuch meets the main part of the Priesthaugh Burn, far to the south of Priesthaugh farm. It appears to be in a different position from Priesthaughshiel, which is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map further up the burn; however, this may just be an inaccuracy in the map. It is listed in the Ordnance Survey Name Book c.1858, with one of the authorities being William Armstrong, who was shepherd there at that time.

Priesthaughshiel (prees-tuf-sheel) n. former steadying in the upper part of the Priesthaugh Burn, possibly the same as Priesthaugh-hill.

Priesthaugh Swire (prees-tuf-swIr) n. flat land at the head of the Priesthaugh Burn, probably similar to the Queen’s Mire – ‘Ride by the gate at Priesthaughswire, And warn the Currors o’ the Lee; As ye cum down the Hermitage Slack, Warn doughty Willie o’ Gorrinberry’ [T].

Priesthaugh Well (prees-tuf-wel) n. spring near Priesthaugh farm. It probably lay to the south of the present farmhouse, but its exact position cannot now be ascertained because the two springs on the western side of Gray Coat have been piped to provide water to Priesthaugh farm and Priesthaugh Cottages. It was said that this well possessed healing properties and a 1614 record of Jedburgh Presbytery said that people went there for relief ‘by charm of priest and miracle’. The name is surely connected with the ridge to the south of Priesthaugh, which is called ‘Holywell Rig’.

Priesthill (preest-hil) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, to the east of Newcastle and further up the Whithaugh Burn from Whithaugh. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map near the feature labelled ‘Priesthill Know’ on modern maps. James Riddell was there in 1777.

Priest Hill (preest-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, north-east of Newcastle, on the southern side of the valley. It reaches a height of 205 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. On the northeast slopes is an ancient earthwork consisting of an enclosure about 240 ft by 170 ft, with a double
Priesthill Burn

Bank and significant ditch. It is similar to the structure on nearby Kirk Hill.

Priesthill Burn (preest-hil-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that rises on the northern slopes of Stell Knowe, running roughly westwards to become part of Whithaugh Burn.

Priesthill Knowe (preest-hil-burn) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just to the east of Little Whithaugh, to the east of Newcastleton.

Prieston (prees-tin) n. farm just north of Midlem in Bowden Parish, the land having once been the property of Kelso Abbey. Andrew Douglas was there in 1628. In 1678 the South part was owned by William Douglas and the North part by Robert Kerr. It later became property of the Scotts of Harden, sold in about 1912 (the origin of the name is the Old English ‘preost tun’, meaning ‘priest’s farm’; it first occurs as ‘Prestowne’ in 1567 and ‘Prestoune’ in 1586).

Priestrig (preest-rit) n. farmstead between Stouslie and Stintyknowe. This land was apparently set aside for the use of the minister of Wilton after Wilton Common was divided in 1764. John Scott was living there in 1790. The farmstead was also sometimes known as Wilton Common (e.g. in the 1861 census). Thomas Scott was farmer there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. The outlying parish school situated at Stouslie was also sometimes known as ‘Priestrig Schuil’ – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’ [DJG] (sometimes spelled ‘Priestrigg’ or ‘Priesthill’; the ‘rig’ presumably refers to a strip of ploughland).

the Priest’s Grave (thu-preests-grav) n. popular name for an extremely old gravestone in Cavers Auld Kirkyard. It was peculiar for being arranged in a direction perpendicular to the others, had a flat top, and contained the date (believed to be spurious) 1517 in the bottom corner. It lay near the east gate, but it is unclear whether it still survives. Several stories were attached to it (as recounted by Sir James Murray), e.g. a connection with the Knights Templar, or someone who wanted to be first out of the churchyard at the resurrection.

prieve (preev) n., arch. to prove, make a trial of

- ‘Dinna prieve your prattiks on me’ [JoJ].

prig (prig) v., poet. to haggle, bargain – ‘…the landlord had the assurance to charge two-pence for my bed, and I could not prig him a half-penny down’ [JR], ‘An’ after priggin doon its price, A bargain forthwith made: Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’ [FL].

prignickie (prig-ni-tee) adj., arch. fastidious (noted by J. Jamieson).

primp (primp) v. to act haughtily or conceitedly

- ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din . . . ‘[DH], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun . . .’ [DH], n., arch. a haughty or conceited woman.

primp-ma-dye (primp-mu-dil) n. arch. a haughty and affected woman (in [HNe1954]).

Primrose (prim-röz) n. Gilbert (c.1535–1616) prominent Scottish surgeon. He was Serjeant Surgeon to King James VI and was Deacon of the Incorporation of Surgeons and Barbers of Edinburgh. His brass mortar (engraved ‘GILBERT PRIMROS CHIRURGJEN 1569’) was found in a field near Hawick and held by the Hawick Museum until presented to Lord Rosebury (a direct descendant) in about 1899. The original is in the National Museum of Scotland, with a replica at Surgeon’s Hall. Rev. James B. minister at Kirkton 1951–1955 and Robertson 1955–60. He ran a missionary in India for over 30 years.

Primrose Cottages (prim-röz-ko’-ee-jeez) n. two isolated cottages, formerly for railway workers, to the west of the Waverley Line shortly after Stobs. The plantation just to the north is Primrose Wood.

Primside (prim-sid) n. farm between Morebattle and Yetholm, in Morebattle Parish. There is an adjacent loch (also called Yetholm Loch) and hill of the same name. The lands are also known as ‘Primsidloch’. They were owned by a branch of the Rule family until passed to the Kers around 1430, with the final charter of 1439 granting Andrew Ker of Altonburn the 4 parts resigned by the co-heiresses of the late Andrew Rule. Ralph Ker of ‘Prymsydloch’ was involved with an indenture for lands in the Barony of Synton in 1510. Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule from Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1563. It was among farms burned by the English in 1542 (the origin is probably from the p-Celtic ‘pren wynn’, meaning ‘white wood’ and the Old English ‘set’ for house; it is first recorded as ‘Prenwensete’ around 1200; it is ‘Promset’ in 1391, ‘Primsidloch’ in 1429/30, ‘Prymsydlouch’ in 1526, ‘Prymsydloch’ in 1560 and ‘Prymsydloch’ in 1564/5).

primsie (prim-zee) adj., poet. precise, diminutive of prim – ‘…Wi’ dimpl’t rosy cheek, sae primsie, yet sae free’ [WFC].
Prince

Prince (prins) n. nickname for James Oliver in 1502 and 1510.

Prince Charles (prins-chaw-rulz) n. (1948– ) eldest son of Queen Elizabeth, he is Prince of Wales. He visited Hawick in 2019.

Prince Leopold (prins-lee-u-pold) n. of the Belgians (1790–1865), full name His Royal Highness Leopold George Frederick, Prince of Saxe-Coburg. He visited Britain in 1815 and the following year married Charlotte, daughter of George IV, was created Duke of Kendal and made a General in the British Army. He became King of Belgium in 1831, and also was made an Honorary Burgess as he passed through Hawick in 1819, his carriage being pulled through town by several Teres, and Bet Young composing a commemorative poem – ‘His Royal Highness landed here On the seventeenth of September; Our flags displayed, the bells did ring, As thousands will remember’ [BY].

prince’s feathers *(prin-sez-fe-th urz) n., pl., arch. the common self-heal, Prunella vulgaris.

the Prince’s Knowe (thu-prin-seez-now) n. former name for a rising piece of ground near Boucher Hill, where Prince Charlie is said to have encamped when his force marched through the area.

Princess Anne (prin-ses-awn) n. (1950– ) the Princess Royal, as President of the British Knitting and Clothing Export Council she has visited Hawick several times. She was at Glebe Mills in 1988. In 1993 she officially opened the major modernisations carried out at the High School.

Princess Christian (prin-ses-kris-tyin) n. (1846–1923) Helena, third daughter of Queen Victoria, who married Prince Christian of Schleswig Holstein Sonderburg Augustenburg in 1866. She came to Hawick to open the Hummelknowes Bridge in 1869.

Princess Christian’s Brig (prin-ses-kristyinz-brig) n. name once used for the Hummelknowes Bridge over the Slitrig.

Princes Street *(prin-ses-stree’, -seez-) n. main street through Wilton. Originally it referred only to the row of houses on the south side of the eastern end, which was built in 1871. The street was significantly altered and renumbered in the early 1970s, with the incorporation of Wilton Place, Albion Place, Ladylaw Place and part of Wilton Crescent – ‘Somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairty in the gairdins at Princes St.’ [JCo] (named after members of the Royal family).

the Principals (thu-prin-si-pulz) n. the main participants during the Common Riding, usually referring to the Cornet and Right- and Left-Hand Men, with sometimes also the Acting Father included. The first known photograph of the Principals was taken in 1857. The stabling of their horses was first undertaken by the Council in 1929. More recently stables have been provided at the top of the Mill Path. Latterly the term has been used to include the main female principals.

Pringle *(prin-gil) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Mary Hislop and their unamed son was baptised in Robertson in 1780. He was at Howpasley in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Perhaps the same Adam secondly married Margaret Henderson in Robertson in 1789 and was recorded at Philhopesyle in that year. This couple’s children included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), Andrew (b.1793), Jeany (b.1795), Elizabeth (b.1797), Robert (b.1799), Margaret (b.1801) and Isabel (b.1805). He could be the Adam, son of William, baptised in Robertson in 1759. Adam (1799–1886) son of Robert and Janet Burnet. He was a shepherd at Howpasley and in the Ettrick valley. He was recorded at Old Howpsley in 1841 and 1851 and was at Over Dalgleish in 1861. In 1827 in Robertson he married Janet (1805–65), daughter of Adam Scott and Elizabeth Nichol. Their children included: Janet B. (b.1828/9); Elizabeth (b.1830, or ‘Betty’), who married John Nicholson; Robert (b.1833); Adam Scott (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); William (b.1838); Helen (b.1840); John (b.1843); Thomas (b.1844); and Gideon Scott (1846–1922), shepherd. He died at Over Dalgleish. Adam (1818–84) toll-keeper at the Townfoot Toll-bar in Newcastleton in 1861. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Shankfoot, and he also worked as a labourer. In 1844 he married Mary, daughter of Newcastleton joiner John Cavers. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th C.) son of Robert of Smailholm. He served as a squire of the Douglases, along with his brother George, e.g. the pair witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. Along with George he was on an assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425. In 1456 he was on the panel made by George Douglas, Earl of Angus, which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn, who had been accused of assisting the English. He may be the Alexander ‘Pringill’ who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468. Alexander of Torsonce (d.bef. 1530) early member of the family from the lands near Stow. In 1526 he was ‘Alexander Hoppringill, in Torsonce’ when he was cited for involvement in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’ and the death of Ker of Cessford. His sons John, James, George and Adam and his ‘sister son’ James are also mentioned, along with George Chisholme of that Ilk and 8 others, who were probably all on the side of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It seems that he was not convicted of any wrongdoing. He could be the Alexander ‘Hopprising’ who served as attorney for the Homes of Wedderburn in sasines of 1506 and 1510. Alexander of Whytbank (1632/3–89) only lawful son of James of Whytbank. He was served heir to his father in 1667. He and his wife were supporters of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner for raising money for Cromwell in Scotland in 1655 and became a J.P. for the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk. In 1662 he was still ‘younger’ when he was fined £3,000 and given a pardon by the King. In 1683 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He married Anna, daughter of James of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1680. He secondly married Anne, sister of James Murray of Philiphaugh; after her death she married Robert Rutherford of Bowland. He had no children, and succession went to John, grandson of his uncle George of Balnunuo. Alexander of Whytbank (1701–73) only son of John. In 1744 he was granted the teinds of lands in Stow (including Hoppringill) following the abolition of Episcopacy. However, he was forced to sell Yair. In 1759 he inherited lands in Hillsap from Janet Cairncross. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. In 1739 he married Susanna, daughter of Sir John Rutherford of that Ilk and Edgerston, and they had a son named John, who succeeded; Alexander, who succeeded his brother; Patrick, surgeon with the East India Company; William, who was in the navy; Elizabeth, Eleanor, Susanna and Cairncross-Mary, who all died unmarried; Christian, who married Robert Pasley; Joanna, who married Alexander Hay; and Charlotte, who married Thomas Payne. Alexander of Whytbank and Yair (1747–1827) born at Yair, 2nd son of Alexander and Susanna Rutherford of Edgerston. He entered the service of the East India Company in 1766, but retired before 1790, having succeeded his brother John and making his fortune. He paid the land tax for Whytbank and other lands in 1785. He bought back the Yair estate from the Duke of Buccleuch and built a new mansion there. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage and horses in the 1780s and 90s, for having dogs in 1797, and for having a female servant in 1788, 2 in 1789, 1 in 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as a male servant in 1788, 2 in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry Cavalry (volunteers) for several years until they were disbanded in 1802 and was also Vice-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He was apparently visiting the Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire (Lord Napier) at Wilton Lodge on the day of the False Alarm, the 2 riding off together to Selkirk after the butler coolly announced ‘My lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon’s blazing’. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he was recorded paying tax at ‘Whitebank, Bashawmill and Thornhole’, as well as Yair and Mill. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1812 he became Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He and his son Alexander were listed as Commissioners of Selkirkshire in 1819. He was recorded at Yair in 1825 in relation to a ballot for men to serve in the militia. He was listed as proprietor of Yair in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was recorded in letters of 1826 requesting records for the Selkirkshire Yeomanry. In 1789 he married Mary, daughter of Sir Alexander Dick of Prestonfield. Their children were: Alexander (b.1791), who succeeded and was a friend of Sir Walter Scott; John Alexander (b.1792), lawyer with the Bengal Civil Service, whose poetic contributions were printed privately as ‘Remains of John Alexander Pringle, Esq.’ (1841); William Alexander (b.1793), also with the Bengal Civil Service; Mary Agnes (b.1794), unmarried; Susanna (b.1795), who married R.S. Moncrieff, younger of Fossaway; Jane (b.1797), unmarried; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married C.M. Christie of Durie; and Charlotte (b.1799); Margaret Janet (b.1801), who married barrister William Elmsley; Robert Keith (b.1802), with the East India Company; and David (b.1806), also with the Bengal Civil Service, who later purchased Wilton Lodge. He and his sons were well known to Sir Walter Scott, and are referred to in the introduction to Canto II of ‘Marmion’. Alexander ‘Sandy’ of Whytbank (1791–1857), J.P., eldest son of Alexander of Whytbank. He was present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and also Lord of the Treasury for Scotland. He was probably also Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry, like his father before him (with letters related to this in the Walter Mason Collection). He was a Conservative in politics. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1830–32 and 1835–46, being defeated by Pringle of Clifton in 1832. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1835. He attended the 1839 banquet held at Braxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He was a friend of Sir Water Scott, accompanying him and Scott of Gala to the field of Waterloo not long after the battle. He married his cousin, Agnes Joanna, 2nd daughter of Sir William Dick of Prestonfield. He had one son, Alexander (b.1837), who succeeded to Whytbank and Yair. Rev. Alexander David (1828–1908) only son of David of Wilton Lodge. He was minister at Blakeney, Gloucestershire. He married Mary Louisa, daughter of Rev. Charles Mackenzie. Their children were: Charles David; Henry Arthur; John Archibald; Fanny Christina; Henrietta Louisa; Isabella Margaret; Amy Cecilia; and Katherine Helen. Alexander of Whytbank (1837–1898) only son of Alexander. In 1870 he married his cousin Mary-Ar ruthnout, daughter of Robert Keith Pringle. He had no children, and the estates of Whytbank and Yair went to his widow’s brother William, who sold Yair. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1876–1962) Burns Club Treasurer for 37 years. He also held all other offices at the club and the Pringle Hall was named in his honour. Andrew ‘Dand’ of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1585/6) son of John, he was 8th Laird of Smailholm. In 1566 he had a grant of the lands of Galashiels and Mossielea. He signed the General Band against thieves in 1571. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Braxhol me as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1575 he was the first of the Hoppringles listed to appear to answer the feud with the Elliots. In 1574 he was 'Andro Hoppringle of Gal lowsheillis' when summoned to appear before the Council with other Border Lairds. He married Mariota (or Marion), daughter of John, 5th Lord Borthwick. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Robert of Howlatstown; and Isabella, who married George Pringle of Blindlee. There is a life-size effigy of him over his tomb at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow married Robert Pringle, tutor of Blindlee and thirdly married John Home. Rev. Andrew (1616/7–89) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1635, he was 'on the exercise' (i.e. assistant) at Kirkcaldy in 1639, became Chaplain to the Earl of Angus, and may also have been an assistant in the Pres bytery of Selkirk. He became minister at Kirkton in 1646. There was some dispute with the parishioners though, since the heritors had to be ordered to pay him his teinds soon afterwards. Then in 1649 he was presented to Castleton, being admitted there the following year. In 1662 he witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood. He was one of the few conformist local ministers who were not ousted in the early 1660s, in other words he accepted Episcopacy. He was recorded in a bond in 1673. He married Janet Scott in 1648. Their children included Jean, who married John Buchanan of that Ilk, and Elizabeth, who married Colin Campbell of Car whin. Andrew of Clifton (17th/18th C.) also described as ‘in Haining’. He was the 2nd son of Mark of Clifton and succeeded his brother Mark in 1685. He was apprenticed to a merchant in Edinburgh in 1642. In 1685 he was involved in a court case involving his niece Janet, who had apparently been promised to a Lieutenant in the King’s Guard, but instead had eloped with her 13-year-old cousin Andrew Pringle and married over the Border. In 1689 he was appointed a Commissioner for ordering the Militia and was a Commissioner of Supply 1689–1704. He invested in the Darien Scheme. In 1699 he purchased the remains of Linton from Henry Ker and his son Andrew. In 1701 he purchased from Andrew Riddell the lands of Haining, for his 2nd son, John. In 1711 he was one of the founder members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ along with John of Haining, who was probably his son. He may be the Andrew who was Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Ettrick Forest parishes 1715–17. In 1685 he married Violet, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and sister of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. Their children included: Robert, who succeeded; John of Haining; Mark of Crichton, who was British Consul in Spain; Barbara, who married James Nasmyth of Dawyck; Jean, who married Thomas Douglas of Cavers; Margaret (d.1749), who died unmarried; and Christian (d.1753), who also died unmarried. Andrew Lord Alemoor (d.1776) eldest son of John of the Haining. He let his brother John succeed to the Haining. He became an advocate in 1740, 10 years later becoming Sheriff.
Pringle

Pringle of Wigtonshire and then Selkirkshire. He became Senator of the College of Justice, Solicitor-General for Scotland and Judge of the Court of Session. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was raised to the bench as Lord Alemoor, since he had acquired that property. His lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £466 18s 4d. He was said by Dr. Somerville to be the most admired speaker at the Scottish Bar in the middle of the 18th century. He married his cousin Violante, daughter of Mark Pringle, British Consul in Spain; however, she died in 1753, leaving no children. He died at his home of Hawkhill near Edinburgh.

His lands went to his brother John of Haining. A marble bust of him is in the Court of Session. He was recorded as a Commissioner for General for Scotland and Judge of the Court of Session. He was also recorded there as owner of 5 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Additionally he was taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He may have married Alexander Gow. His children included: Anthony (b.1796); Margaret Ann (b.1798); James Hall (b.1801); Cicely (b.1803); and Isabella (b.1805).

Angelique Lucille (1846–1920) born in Hawick, daughter of Thomas Kedie and Lucille Kennedy. At age 17 she went to India as a hostess to her uncle, who was governor of Calcutta. She also apparently crossed the Sahara desert by camel. She was a nurse at St. Thomas’s, London, starting in 1868, moving to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary in 1872 (where she became Matron) and returning to St. Thomas’s in 1887 as Matron. However, she resigned in 1890, when she converted to Catholicism. Afterwards she travelled the world advising on nursing issue. She was the founder of the Training School for Nurses at the Royal Infirmary, and sometimes credited with establishing the modern method of hospital nursing. She was a personal friend and devotee of Florence Nightingale, who called her ‘Pearl’ and ‘Little Sister’. Her letters are in the British Museum. There is a memorial brass tablet in the chapel of the Royal Infirmary. Ann (18th/19th C.) grocer and draper on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She could be the same shopkeeper listed at West Port on the 1841 census, probably married to Robert and with daughter Margaret. Archibald of Whytbank (17th/18th C.) became a Burgess of Hawick in 1724, presumably this being Honorary. This may be an error for Alexander. David of Smallholm and Pilmuir (d.1480) son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Robert in the 1470s. However, he is recorded as being of Smallholm or of Pilmuir several times through the 1440s, 50s and 60s. Along with his brothers George and Alexander he accompanied William, Earl of Douglas to the Papal Jubilee in Rome in 1450. In 1457 he attached his seal to an indenture by George, Earl of Angus, appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest, since Ker did not have a seal of his own. He served as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed in the 1460s. In 1463 he was on the panel of tour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. In 1464/5 he was one of the witnesses to the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1468 he had a charter for the lands of Pilmuir. In 1471 he was a witness at Borthwickshiel the indentment of Walter, son and heir of Andrew Ker of Cessford. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. He may be the David ‘junior’ who in 1478 had his fine remitted for killing deer at his wedding. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Dishington of Ardross. In their old house in Galashiels there was said to be this inscription – ‘Elspeth Dishington Built me. In syn lye not: The things thou canst not get, Desyre not’. His children included: James, who succeeded; Adam of St. John’s Chapel; and Thomas of Wrangholm (recorded as a witness in about the 1490s). David of Tinnis (d.1512) natural son of James of Smallholm, and brother of David of Smallholm, being sometimes called ‘senior’ in distinction. He was tenant of the lands of Tinnis or Tynnes in the Yarrow valley. He was Ranger of the Ward and later made Receiver of the whole Forest. He was witness in 1484/5 to a sasine for lands at Mangerton to Walter Scott of Braugholme; James Pringle was also a witness, along with several other local men. He leased the lands of Torwoodlee and Toftness in 1486, along with his wife Mariota. He may be the David who is recorded along with William on a document relating to Ruecaster in 1491. He may be the same ‘David Hoppringill in Tynnes’ who was one of the ‘Sheriffs of Roxburgh in that part’ in a charter of 1494 for lands in Hassendean and the same ‘in le Tynnes’ who was one of 4 men who held lands in Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. In 1494/5 he served as surety for men called Mark from Tinnis. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as Coroner for Tweeddale at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk; he was fined for not producing Archibald Ormiston. He was recorded several times around 1500 in the Exchequer Rolls in regard to lands in Yarrow and as ranger of the Ward of Tweed. In 1501 he was recorded entering William Tait in Edinburgh for a set of crimes. In 1502 he leased the lands of Galashiels, Blindlee and Mossieleee. Also in 1502 he was fined at the Justice-aire for failing to enter Richard Davidson in Primside and additionally was surety for David in Ern Cleuch and Roger in Trilipknow. He also served as surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1505. In 1508 ‘David Hoppringill in Tennes’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddlesdale, and is probably the same David who witnessed the associated sasine. He was re-assigned Tinnis in 1509. In 1509 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alermo, witnessed charters for Colville of Ochiltree and was mentioned in a charter for William, son of James of Smallholm. And in 1510 David ‘of Tynnes’ is recorded having 5 horses stolen from him by Thomas Dalgleish in Braithwaugh. He also had oxen stolen from him at ‘Bochill’ (possibly ‘Bowhill’). In 1512 he gave his consent to a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest being granted to the Commendator of Kelso. He may have married Mariota Murray of Philiphaugh. David of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1535) eldest son of James and brother of William of Torwoodlee. He was sometimes called ‘junior’, to distinguish him from David of Tinnis. In 1507-10 he leased the crown lands of Galashiels, Mossieleee and Blindlee. In 1510 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest as well as for rentals in Lauderdale. Also in 1510 he was among Pringles and others convicted of cutting down part of Ettrick Forest. He lost brothers, a son and a brother-in-law at Flodden. In 1519 he was among the large group of Borderers who rode against the Earl of Arran and in 1526 in the group that tried to free the boy King from the Douglases near Melrose (at Pringle’s Bridge). He signed a bond in 1525 to support the Earl of Angus as Warden of the Marches. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill, along with James and George. He is recorded in documents in the ‘Selkirk Protocol Books’ in 1527, mentioning John as his heir. In 1532 he resigned his lands of Caverhill into the hands of their superior. He is probably the David who witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey in 1534. Through marriage he gained Woodhouse in Peeblesshire and Whytbank and Redhead in Selkirkshire. He was married twice, his first wife being Marion and his second Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Lundie. His children were: David, who died at Flodden; John, who succeeded; James of Woodhouse and Whytbank; William; Agnes; Christian, who married John Rutherd of Hunthill; Janet, who married George Brown of Coalston; and Margaret. In 1529 he appointed his wife, Margaret, and first-born son with her, James, as executors, with his moveable goods to go to his 4 daughters. In 1541 his widow Margaret Clunie and son James claimed tenancy of Reidhead farm in Tweeddale. David of Smallholm (d.1513) eldest son of David of Galashiels and Smallholm. His brothers included John of Galashiels and James of Whytbank. He was killed at Flodden. David (d.bef. 1623) eldest son of Sir James of Galashiels. He married Margaret, daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, while she was still a minor. He died shortly afterwards (and before his father), with his widow having a marriage contract with Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun in 1623. David (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Braxonholme. He was probably a factor or chamberlain or held some similar position. David of Torquhan (19th C.) owner of lands on Gala Water that had traditionally belonged to the Pringles. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee for about 17 years in the later 1800s. One of his children was Col. Hall-Grant (b.1876). Maj. David of Carriber (1790–1876) eldest son of John of Carriber and Mary Walker. He was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He served with the 7th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry and retired with the rank of Major in 1835. He was probably the Maj. Potts who was at Hawick in 1837 for the election (at which there was so much trouble from the crowd). He had one brother who died in India, and another who was Robert, farmer at Bairnkine, Southdean. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1830. He left Carriber to his nephew, John. David (1806–89) of Wilton Lodge, which he inherited through marrying James Anderson’s daughter, Mary. He was son of Alexander of Whytbank and Mary Dick, and younger brother of Alexander of Yair. He was born at Yair, youngest of 11 children, and educated in Selkirk and then in England, at Durham Grammar School and Haileyburgh College. He trained as a lawyer and in 1824 started service with the East India Company, surviving the fire on his ship ‘The Kent’, on which about 100 people perished. He worked as a magistrate in several locations. Returning to Britain for 3 years in 1839, he stayed at Friarshaugh near Melrose. He was then judge at Purneau and left India for the last time in 1851 with a pension and the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Bengal Infantry. He settled in Hawick after marrying the heiress of Wilton Lodge estate. He was responsible for the extensive remodelling of Wilton Lodge in 1859, including the monogrammed letters ‘DMP’ and biblical quotations; he was quite religious, being filled, it is said, with ‘the love of country, the love of letters, the love of God’. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was recorded at Wilton Lodge in a directory of 1868. A keen horseman, he can be seen on horseback at the stables of Wilton Lodge in a photo, probably in the 1880s. He became known locally as a philanthropist. He was Chairman or Governor of at least three Hawick savings banks, including Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Co., Ltd. (1864–89), Hawick Savings Bank (1865–89) and Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd. (1876–89). He was also Chairman of Wilton Parochial Board and of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as being on the county Prison Board. He was a Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. After his death the Town purchased Wilton Lodge from his trustees, and the present house is much as it was when he lived there. In 1827 he married Frances, daughter of Alexander Tod of Alderston, and she died in 1856 at Pau. In 1858 he secondly married Mary, heiress of James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. His children were: Rev. Alexander David; Amy Elizabeth, who married Rev. H.C. Ripley; and Frances Jane, who married James Christie and secondly Theobold von Fischer. His boot jack is in the Museum. David (b.1839) younger son of James Hall and Jane Hogarth. He farmed at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included: Hall G.; Frances E. and Dorothy M. Douglas Francis (18th C.) Sheriff-Depute for Roxburghshire. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. George (d.c.1459) son of Robert of Pilnuir and Smailholm. In 1427 he was part of the inquest for William being served heir to his father Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick; there he is ‘Georgeum de Hoppryngile’. Along with his brother Alexander he was a squire for the Earl of Douglas. He is recorded as ‘George Hoppryngile’, attorney to Archibald, Earl of Douglas (or possibly Alexander Murray, since the transcription is ambiguous) in 1428/9. The document was the ‘instrument of sasine’ for the Barony of Hawick being served to William, son of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he is probably the George ‘Hoppryngile’ who was on the ‘retrou’ panel for the lands of Caverton. He witnessed (along with his brother Alexander) a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. In 1437 he was one of 2 ‘procurators’ for Alexander of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the Baron of Hawick. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teinds and Harwood. His name appears several times in connection with the Douglases through to the 1450s. He was the first Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He is probably the George of ‘Hoppringill’ who was on the panel in 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English to burn lands around Jedburgh. Either he or an earlier George was ‘scutiferus’ in a document for Melrose Abbey in 1415. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484 at the Mote. His name is recorded as ‘Georgio de Pringylle’. It is unclear which branch of the family he belonged to. Possibly the same ‘Georgio Pringyll’ witnessed another document for the Douglases of Drumlanrig in 1501, relating to the lands of Lairs. George of Torwoodlee (1505–68) son of William, the first Laird, who was killed at Flodden. In 1526 he was among the large number of Borderers pardoned for their march (along with the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) against the Earl of Arran. In 1534 he brought a case against a woman in Selkirk for theft. In 1535 he was involved in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk and in 1540 had a dispute over sheep on his lands. In 1541 he was tenant of Caddonlee in Tweed, as well as claiming Torwoodlee. He is probably the ‘George Hoppringle’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he witnessed a document with other Pringles (in the Selkirk Protocol Books). In 1548 he was ‘found surety’ for the crime of helping ‘our ancient enemies of England’. He was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Edinburgh in 1552, accused of providing

2 horses to aid the escape of the Laird of Cessford. He was himself murdered by Elliots and others, perhaps led by Martin Elliot of Braidslie. In 1564 he was ‘Guidman of Torwoodlie’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He is recorded in 1607 as ‘George Hoppringill of Torwoodlie’ at the trial for his murder. The action was brought by his grandsons George, James and David, against John Elliot of Copshaw; it is unclear why there was such a lengthy delay, but in 1570 a ‘day of law’ to decide the matter ended in a fight with many injuries and the Privy Council summoned representatives of the Pringles and Elliots in 1575 to settle the feud. The other men named, ‘Martin’s Hob’ and ‘the Laird’s Jock’, were presumably already dead by the time of the 1607 trial. The claim was that he was killed in a raid on Torwoodlee by about 300 men ‘of the haill Clannis of the Airmestrangis, Ellotes, Batiesones, Grahames and remanent Clannis’, who grabbed him out of his bed and took him to ‘Skaldeneise’ where they killed him, after ransacking his estate. He married Margaret Crichton of Cranston Riddell and had 10 children, including William, who succeeded. George of Torwoodlee (d.1637) 4th Laird, son of William. He signed a bond among Border Lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He is recorded in 1607 as ‘George Hoppringill of Torwoodlie’ at the trial for his murder. He married Margaret Crichton of Cranston Riddell and had 10 children, including William, who succeeded. George of Torwoodlee (d.1637) 4th Laird, son of William. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. In 1607 he and his brothers James and David brought an action against John Elliot of Copshaw and others for the murder of his grandfather. He inherited a quarter of the lands of Clifton in 1610. He was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. He was an M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1617 and 1621 and became Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1624. He is recorded in records of the Regality of Melrose in the 1620s. He married Margaret, daughter of James Pringle of Whytbank and secondarily married Elizabeth Richardson of Smeaton. He was succeeded by his son James, who was also M.P. George of Torwoodlee (d.1689) 6th Laird, son of James. In 1654 he had sasine of lands in Lilliesleaf. In 1662 he was fined and pardoned by the King. He was an active Royalist and resister of Episcopalanism. He owned lands in Maxton Parish in 1678. He helped the Earl of Argyll escape from Scotland in 1681; the Earl was accompanied from Edinburgh to Torwoodlee by Rev. John Scott, minister of Hawick. He then lived in concealment and in 1684 fled to Holland to escape capture (along with Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth), whereupon his 16 year old son was imprisoned and threatened with torture unless he divulged who had given the warning to him. He was involved in a disastrous uprising in 1685, but again managed to flee. His estates were then confiscated, but they were restored at the Revolution. He was made M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1689, but died a few months later (probably before receiving full reward for his efforts in the previous decade). In 1654 he married Janet Brodie of Lethen. His children were: James, who succeeded; Janet; Anna, who married Alexander Don of Rutherglen; Sophia, who married her cousin James Pringle of Greenknowe; and Jean. George Turnbull (b.1810) youngest son of Robert and Ann Buckingham. He was a gardener (and perhaps butler with a local family), but later became a licensed grocer at 12 Back Row (later Francis Henderson’s). In the 1834 electoral roll he was listed along with his brothers Robert and James, as joint proprietors in a house. He was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Wallace, from St. Boswells. Their children (baptised in Minto Parish) included: Robert (b.1836); Hannah Dickson (b.1837); Annabella Buckingham (b.1839); Euphemia (b.1841); and George (b.1843). One of his daughters carried on his business, until she married Thomas Charters, after which the business was taken over by John Henderson. George (b.1829/30) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ekron. George (1843/4–81) son of Hawick merchant George Turnbull. He was apprenticed to a Selkirk engineer and in 1866 left to work for an oil merchant’s in Bradford. Later setting up business with a Mr. Cunningham, he settled in Manchester in 1874. However, he died after contracting diphtheria from one of his children, at the age of 37. He wrote some poetry and was a friend of J.C. Goodfellow, who wrote a verse on his death. His wife was Lydia Mary, who died in Middlesborough in 1930, aged 85. He was buried in the Wellogate. Gideon (1846–1922) son of Adam and Janet Scott, he was born in Roberton Parish. He was a shepherd. In 1827 he married Agnes, daughter of William Walker in Rowantree Toll Bar. Their children included William Walker (1871–1947). He lived in Gal- loway and died in Pinwherry, Ayrshire. James (d.1495) eldest son of David of Pilmuir and Smail- holm. Like his father he acted as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He held this office from at least 1447, with the lease of ‘Redeheede’ and Blindlee as his fee. He was on the panel in 1484 where James Douglas was served heir to his father in the Barony of Hawick. He was also the first listed witness to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Walter Scott of Branxholme and the lands of Mangerton. In 1488 he had a 19 year lease from the King for the lands of Blindlee, Galashiels and Mosslee. In 1493 George Turnbull of Bedrule, David Waugh from Bedrule and weaver William White had remission for stealing cattle from his farm at Pilmuir. He is probably the James of Smailholm who acted as surety for Patrick Gledstains in Hummelnknowes in 1494/5. David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing from his farm of Pilmuir in 1494/5. He married Elisabeth (also known as Isobel), daughter of Patrick Murray of Philphaugha. His children were: David, who succeeded; William, 1st Laird of Torwoodlee, who died at Flodden; Alexander, 1st Laird of Trinly-knowe, who also died at Flodden; John, 1st Laird of Blindlee, also died at Flodden; Isabella, who married David Home of Wedderburn, who died at Flodden; and an illegitimate son, David of ‘Tynnes’ (or Tinnis). James of Tinnis (d.1546) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He was probably the James who was among the men pardoned in 1527 for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is probably also the James who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. He may be the James who held a tenement in Selkirk according to a document in 1528. In 1529 King James V granted him (and his wife, Sibilla Carmichael) the lands of ‘Tynnes’ and in 1529/30 Gilbert Chisholme granted sasine to him and his wife. He witnessed a document for David of Galashiels and Smailholm in 1529 (and was there stated to be his brother). In 1530 he was recorded as a witness in Selkirk to proceedings taken against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk. He was probably the James who in 1532 acted as an arbitrator for Isabel Murray in a dispute with her son Walter Scott in Headshaw. In 1535 his ‘first born son’ James gave notice of ejection of his father’s tenants from Buckholm. In 1541 he was recorded holding the lands of ‘Tynnes’ in feu, as well as being tenant in ‘Drichuachschele’ in Ettrick. He was captured at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542, and not released for 3 years. He was mentioned in 1542 in reference to tenants in a dispute with Alexander of Craigleith. In 1546 he was part of the bond of peace signed between the Scotts, Turnbulls, Cranstons, Kers, etc. He married Sibella Carnichael. He was succeeded by his son James, and also had a daughter, Margaret. David ‘second son of James Hoppringill’ recorded in 1543 could also be his son. James of Woodhouse and Whytbank (d.1563) son of David and Margaret. Lundie. He succeeded to Whytbank in 1510, and the family’s Peeblesshire estates on the death of his father. He is said to have accompanied James V to Solway Moss in 1542 and was taken prisoner, but this may have been a different James (of Buckham). In 1547 he witnessed a document with other Pringles (in the Selkirk Protocol Books). He married Margaret Ker of Linton; she later married Sir David Home of Wedderburn, died in 1580 and was buried at Melrose Abbey. Their children were: Robert, who predeceased him; James, who succeeded to Whytbank; George, tenant of Netherton; Alexander; William; John; David, possibly the ‘pothe-car’ who witnessed a discharge in 1580; Marion, who married George of Blindlee and secondly married William Home of Bassendean. James of Torsonce and that Ilk (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. In 1581/2 he and his wife Elizabeth Edmondson had sasine for an annual rent in ‘Bowschank’. He is probably the ‘Hoppringill of Torsonce’ listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. He is probably the James of that Ilk who served as surety for James of Smailholm in 1597. James of Whytbank (d.c.1625) son of James and Margaret Kerr. He was a strong Royalist supporter, as a result of which he lost his Peeblesshire estates. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He could also be the ‘James Hoppringill’ listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter, being owed ‘for his tie’. In 1575 he was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He was one of the Border Lairds summoned in 1583/4 to give assurances for keeping peace on the Border and in 1591 was one of the Lairds who had to promise to serve the Wardens and pursue the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was cautioned for a bond for some Homes not to harm each other. He was on the 1601 jury following the Kerr and Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. Both he and his son James signed another bond among Border Lairds in 1602, to keep the peace. He married Marion, daughter of Andrew Murray of Blackbarony and secondly Juliane, daughter of Sir David Home of Wedderburn. His children included: James, who predeceased him (c.1616), but whose son James succeeded; Robert, who was probably the ‘Robert Hoppringle, son to the gudeman of Quyhtebank’ who was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth for being part of the ‘Royal High School Riot’ of 1595; and Margaret, who married John Pringle of that Ilk. His son James succeeded to his lands of ‘Reidheid’ in 1607. James (d.c.1616) son of James of Whytbank. In 1596 he was cautioner for John Home of Cowdenknowes. He and his father signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He predeceased his father and his son James succeeded to Whytbank. Sir James of Galashiels (d.1635) son of James, who was the only son of Andrew Hoppringle of Smailholm and Galashiels (although some accounts have only one James). During his minority his ‘tutors’ were Walter Riddell of that Ilk (and later his son Andrew), Robert Pringle of Langshaw and John Pringle of Buckholm. He was James of Smailholm in 1597 when James of that Ilk served as his surety. He was imprisoned following firing of pistols in a feud with George of Blindlee in 1598 and in that year Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk were cautioners for him not to carry hagbuts, while he was cautioner for Alexander Horsburgh not to harm a Burgess of Edinburgh. Galashiels was created as a free burgh of barony for him in 1599. In 1603 he was a surety for Thomas Ker of Cavers. He became a Commissioner for Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He had a charter of ‘Sellarhauche’ from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1621 and 1630 and became Sheriff-Principal in 1622. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. He may have married a daughter of Ker of Linton (possibly Jean, daughter of George). His children were: David, who married Margaret, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, and died before him; James, who married Jean, daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet; John, last of Smailholm, who died without issue; George, Sheriff-Depute of Selkirkshire, who also died before his father; Jean, who became heir and married Hugh Scott of Deuchar, son of ‘Auld Wat’, and who thereby became the first Scott of Gala; Isobel, who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and 2 other daughters who married ministers. James of Whytbank (1598/4–1667) son of James and Christian, daughter of William Lundin of that Ilk. He succeeded his grandfather in 1622, his father having already died. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1628–33 and was a Commissioner of Defence for the county in 1643 and Commissioner of War in 1648. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply in 1661 and a Justice of the peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was known as a great loyalist and was fined by Parliament in 1646. He added Yair to the family estates and also became the male representative of the Pringles of Galashiels and Smailholm (on the extinction of the male line of Pringle of Gala). He married Sophia Schoneir, who was a maid of honour to Anne of Denmark. His only son was Alexander, and he also had an illegitimate son, William. James of Torwoodlee (d.1657) son of George. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1641 and 1645 and was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1646. In 1654 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Corslie within Ettrick Forest and ‘Cockslandis’ in the village of Lilliesleaf. In 1620 he married Jean, daughter of Sir Richard Cockburn of Clerkington. In 1628 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir Lewis Craig of Riccarton. His son George was also an M.P. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms in 1689 for John Veitch and in 1691 for Robert Veitch and for James Scott. In 1694, along with William Brown, he witnessed a baptism for William Tait. James of Torwoodlee (1665–1735) son of George. He was imprisoned in 1684 and threatened with torture if he did not tell them who helped his father flee to Holland. In 1689 after the Revolution he was made an officer in the cavalry corps of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. His father died in 1689, in 1690 all of the family estates were restored to him and in 1694 he was served heir to his father. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1693–1702. He contributed the large sum of £1300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1714 he was appointed Captain of a company of cavalry raised to organise defence against the forces of the ‘Pretender’. In 1690 he married Isabel, eldest daughter of Sir John Hall of Dunglas. His children were: George, who succeeded, but died unmarried; John, who died at sea; James of Bowland, who was a principal Clerk of Session, and whose son James succeeded his uncle; Katherine, who married Sir Robert Pringle of Stichill; Janet; Sophia, who married Adam Fairmout of Greenhill; Marion, who married John S. Ker of Litteledean; Isabel; Margaret; and Ann. Sir James of Stichill (1726–1809) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Pringle. He was ‘junior’ when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1761–79 and succeeded as Baronet in 1779. In 1780 he was added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire. He was Commander of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was said that ‘it is likely he will be averse to vote, as he will not like the oath’. He was taxed for owning carriages and horses, and for having several male and female servants in the 1780s and 1790s. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Norman MacLeod of that Ilk. His children included: Mary, who married George Baillie of Jerviswood; Robert, who married his cousin and pre-deceased his father; Eliza, who married Archibald Todd of Drygrange; Sir John, who also married a cousin, and succeeded to Stichill; and Sir Norman, who succeeded his brother. James of Bowland and Torwoodlee (1758/9–1840) only son of James and grandson of James of Torwoodlee, who was M.P. for Selkirkshire. He was educated in Cambridge and Leyden, and studied for the bar, but never practised. He succeeded to his uncle’s lands of Torwoodlee, sold his father’s lands of Bowland and also acquired Buckholm and Williamaith from other Pringles. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as being ‘rich’ and probably siding with Rutherford of Edgerston in the election. He owned Buckham, Williamaith and Ladhopemuir. He was also listed as a voter in Selkirkshire and brother-in-law of the Sheriff of Selkirkshire, Andrew Plummer. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was additionally listed along with his son (James junior) as Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He paid tax for having male and female servants in the period 1785–97, for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98 and for horses and dogs in 1797. He raised the Selkirkshire Corps of Border Yeomanry in 1797 and was their Captain at the time of the False Alarm in 1804. He was also present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Convener of Selkirkshire for more than 50 years and was proposed as Vice-Lieutenant of the county in 1827. In 1782 he married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Charles Tod of Drygrange. Their children were: James, Vice-Admiral and successor; Charles, who died young; George, who married Ann Stewart; Alexander, who was lost in a wreck; and Frances, only daughter, who died in Edinburgh. James of Torwoodlee (1783–1859) son of James. He joined the Navy in 1797 and retired as a Rear-Admiral in 1846. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He became Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1820 and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He succeeded his father in 1840 and also succeeded to his brother’s lands of Trinilyknoe. He was succeeded by his son Commander James Thomas. His other children were: Capt. Charles; George; Elizabeth Mason; Frances; Mary; and Jane. James (18th/19th C) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Ann Murray, who was from Roberton. Their children included: Walter (b.1834); and John (b.1835). James (b.1796) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was cousin to the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, and had a brother who was also Robert. He was a stocksmaker and warehouseman in Hawick. In 1841 the family were living at ‘Greenwind foot’, in 1851 at 12 O’Connell Street (probably the modern No. 4) and in 1861 at 7 O’Connell Street. He married Beatrice Scott, who was from Deamburnhaugh, daughter of old Peggy Anderson; she was said to be ‘great for simples (herbs)’. Their children included: Margaret, who must have died young; Helen (b.1836); Elizabeth Miller (b.1838), who married mill furnish; George Scott; Robert (b.1839); Isabella (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); John (b.1845); and Margaret (again, b.1848). James Hall (1801–74) born in Hawick Parish. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee, recorded in the 1860s. He was also recorded as farmer at Cleithaugh in 1868. He married Jane Mary Hogarth (1803–50). Their children were: George Hogarth (1830–72), a surgeon in Sydney, Australia, who died at sea; Andrew; David, who farmed at Cleithaugh; John Martin; Richard Simples (herbs). Their children included: Margaret, who must have died young; Helen (b.1836); Elizabeth Miller (b.1838), who married mill furnish; George Scott; Robert (b.1839); Isabella (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); John (b.1845); and Margaret (again, b.1848). James Thomas of Torwoodlee (1832–1902) son of Vice-Adm. James. He retired from the Royal Navy with the rank of Commander. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He also founded Torwoodlee Golf Club. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1862 he married Annie Parminter, only daughter of Col. James Lewis Black, who was wounded at Waterloo. He was succeeded by James-Lewis. James butcher at 56 High Street, continuing the business started by his great-grandfather in 1902. He has received multiple Scottish Craft Butcher awards and other prizes for his speciality sausages, black puddings and Scotch pies. Janet (b.c.1790) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street. sons Thomas and Robert. She is probably Janet Kedie, who married John, who was proprietor of a public house on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was located at about 7 High Street in 1841. She could be the Janet who was an unmarried seamstress at about 25 High Street in 1851. J.B. see John Balfour Jean (18th/19th C.) member of the local family, perhaps a daughter of the Robert recorded in the family bible. Before 1798 she owned the bottom part of 8 Fore Row (now 22 Drumlanrig Square). John of that Ilk and Torsonce (d.c.1555) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He may be the ‘Jok a Pringill’ accused by the English in 1543 of leading raids, along with the Laird of Mow. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, including Goldielands and elsewhere. His children included: Thomas, who succeeded; Michael; James ‘in the Bow’; Archibald of Torquhan; Elizabeth, Prioress of Coldstream; and Margaret, who married Clement Mauchan of Pilton, Cramond. John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1566) son of David. He succeeded his father about 1535, his older brother David having died at Flodden. He may be the John ‘in Reidheid’ (essentially the same as Whytbank) who was one of the large number of Borderers listed along with Walter Scott of Branxholme for rising up against the Earl of Arran, for which they had remission in 1526; his brother Robert was also listed, along with 7 other Pringles. In 1541 he was recorded occupying the lands of ‘Galloshelis’. The rentals from his farms in Lauder are listed in 1542 and he was involved in a dispute involving the teinds in Lauder in 1545. In 1547 he witnessed a document with other Pringles (in the Selkirk Protocol Books). He was among the men accused in 1549 of helping the Kers and English attack the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; the other Pringles on the list were John of Torsance and Robert of Overcleuch. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Galloshelis’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Gordon of Stichell and Lochinvar; after his death she remarried to John Hoppringle of Wrangholm. His children were: Andrew, who succeeded; David of Bardarroch; James; Isabella, who married William Gordon of Crauchlaw; Margaret, who married Andrew Rutherford of Hundalee; and other daughters who married Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, a Borthwick and an Inglis. John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1650) 3rd son of Sir James. He was the last in the male line of the Pringles of Smailholm, being served heir to his father’s lands in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of ‘Smailholm-craigs’. In 1645 the lands of Smailholm were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden, these lands having been in Pringle hands since at least 1459. In 1645 he was probably the John ‘sometime of Smailholm’ who was part of an armed gang of about 100 men who attacked farms and harassed tenants in the Parish of Stow, belonging to Robert of Blindlee and John Haliburton, younger of Muirhouselaw. After his death the representative of that family became James Pringle of Whytbank. John (17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Stichill. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buchleuch. Their children included: Sir Robert, who succeeded his grandfather to Stichill; Walter of Graycrook; Katherine; Francis of Rowston; John; James; William; and Elizabeth. It is possible he was father of Jean, who married Thomas Scott of Todrig. John (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off Deerness in the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge and subsequent imprisonment under harsh conditions. Sir John of Stichill (1662–1721) son of Sir Robert. He contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1688 he married Magdelen, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Gilbert, in the Dragoons; Walter, who was an advocate and Sheriff of Roxburghshire; Margaret, who married Sir James Hall of Dunglass; Katherine, who married William Hamilton of Bangour; Sir Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, who succeeded his brother, and was President of the Royal Society. His wife died in 1739 and is buried at Stichill. John of Whytbank (1678–1702) son of John, minister of Fogo, and grandson of George of Balmungo. In 1689 (while still a minor) he succeeded Alexander of Whytbank, who was his father’s cousin; he was further served as heir in 1695. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1698. In 1699 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24. John of Haining (1673/4–1754) 2nd son of Andrew of Clifton and Violet Rutherford. He became an advocate in 1698 and purchased the Haining in 1702. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire, i.e. an M.P. in the last Scottish Parliament. He then served that county as M.P. until 1729. However, he was unpopular within Selkirk itself because of his support of the Duke of Douglas’ rights within that burgh. In 1711 he was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’. He was a Keeper of the Signet for Scotland in 1711. He became Lord of Session in 1729, taking the title Lord Haining. He married Ann, eldest daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh. He had 3 3 sons and 3 daughters: Andrew, who became Lord Alemoor; John, who inherited the Haining; Robert, who became a doctor; Anne, who married Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee; and Helen (d.1808) and Violet (d.1821), who died unmarried. John (17th/18th C.) wright who became a Hawick Burgess in 1704. He was described as ‘in the Haugh of the Galawater’ and was stated in the marriage record as being from Stow Parish. He was probably the same wright who was selected by the minister and heritors in 1713 to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. And also the John who was one of the men who valued Andrew Rodger’s house for the Kirk Session in the early 1700s. He witnessed baptisms for Jasper Richardson in 1713 and for weaver John Stevenson in 1719. In 1716 he was ‘wright in Hawick’. In 1721 his servant Robert Robison married Isobel Rae in Branholntown. Also in 1721 he was witness for baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and ‘Tenent in Hawick’ David Wilson. Either he or his son was paid in 1732 for fixing the hands of St. Mary’s clock. In 1704 he married Janet Thomson, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1707), who married tobacconist James Scott; Janet (b.1709), who must have died young; John (1709), gardener; William (b.1711); Walter (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); George (b.1718); Janet (again, 1721); Mary, who married William Scott of Langholm; Betty, 2nd wife of baker John Kedie; and Jean. The witnesses in 1707 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1709 were wright Walter Hardie and carrier David Minto, in 1711 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and shoemaker John Scott, and in 1716 were merchant Francis Elliot and carrier David Minto. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1732); and Jean (b.1730). In 1733 he was at Howcleuch. John (b.1709) son of wright John and Janet Thomson. He became a Burgess in 1733, when he was described as ‘gardener in Borthwick, now in Hawick’. He was witness to a baptism in 1746, along with Thomas Kedie. He may be the gardener John whose daughter Betty was the 2nd wife of baker John Kedie. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Francis (b.1751); Margaret (b.1754); Janet (b.1759); William (b.1761); Mary (b.1763); George (b.1766); and James (b.1768). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Adam Dryden. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Laidlaw from Hawick Parish. He may be the John whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1763. John (18th C.) resident at Howpasley when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1761 and 1763. Probably the same John was resident at Gair in 1775 when another child was baptised. He was probably father of John (b.1761), Mary (b.1763), Margaret (b.1769), Agnes (b.1775) and an unnamed daughter (b.1778). John of Crichton (d.1782) eldest son of Mark of Crichton. He was forced to part with his lands, this being suggested to be the inspiration for the line ‘I’ve seen the smiling of Fortune beguiling’ in his sister-in-law’s song ‘Flowers of the Forest’. In 1752 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee and was succeeded by Mark, who was of Fairnilee, Haining and Clifton. John of Haining and Clifton (d.1792) 2nd son of John of Haining. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1765–84. He was a merchant in Madeira and having made a fortune there, and Haining being in financial difficulties, he purchased the estate on the death of his father in 1754 (instead of his brother Lord Alemoor). He also succeeded to Clifton in 1780 on the death of his cousin Robert Pringle. He was listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. Sometime before 1779 he had feu-rights to lands in Bewlie and in the Barony of Harden from Walter Scott of Harden. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants from 1778, increasing to 5 or 6 in 1787–92, and 3 or 4 female servants in 1785–91. He paid the land tax at Easter Alemoor in 1785. He was also taxed for owning a carriage and up to 6 horses in the period 1785–92. He was listed as owner of North Synton (including Birkwood) in 1788 (and still recorded this way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £600. He also owned Clifton and other lands in Morebattle Parish and most of the lands in Linton Parish. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his grand-nephew Mark. He also provided for his reputed natural son John, who was a lawyer with the East India Company. John of Whytbank (1744–90) eldest son of Alexander. He is said to have been a Lieutenant in the 36th Regiment of Foot and served on the staff of Gen. Murray in Canada, where he died. Actually he was a Lieutenant in the 84th Regiment, serving under Gen. Haldimand as Governor of Canada. He served through until the termination of the American War in 1783. He was succeeded by his brother Alexander around 1790. John (c.1770–c.1810) local fiddler and composer of music. James Wilson (writing in 1858) suggests that he was grandson and pupil of John Howison, while W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) says he was half-brother of Howison. He became a more accomplished violin player than his older relative, whose abilities were famed throughout the Border. He was selected by Lord Minto to lead his band when he was Governor General of India (which must have been in the period 1807–14), and died in Calcutta, probably unmarried. He also collected and published some local reels, strathspeys and jigs in the early 1800s, some of which he wrote himself. These are collected in 2 volumes, and include parts suitable for violin with piano accompaniment. Those published in 1801 are dedicated to ‘Miss Elliot’ (presumably of Minto) and the second volume (probably 1802) dedicated to Lady Scott of Ancrum and available from his lodgings at 16 Rose Street, Edinburgh. He probably lived in the capital as a dancing master. Tunes attributed to him include ‘Lady Ann Hope’, ‘The Miller of Drone’ and ‘Miss Walker’s Strathspey’. There are well over 100 tunes in these 2 volumes, including ‘Fertish Hill’, ‘Hawick Lasses, a Reel’, ‘Hawick, a Strathspey’, ‘Ruberlaw’, ‘Minto House’, several named after members of the Minto Elliots or local Scotts, ‘The Ettrick Shepherd’, ‘Betty Howison’s Favourite’, ‘Teviot Banks’, ‘Wilton Lodge, a Strathspey’ and the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby'. He probably married Janet (d.1843), daughter of Thomas Kedie, baker. They had 6 children, including: Elizabeth (b.1820); Thomas Kedie (b.1822); Walter Oliver (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). He is probably the John, married to Mary Oliver, whose son Walter Oliver was born in Hawick in 1813. He is also probably the hosier John whose twin’s deaths are recorded in Hawick in 1816. John (1795/6–1843) shepherd at Milsington. In 1841 he was living at Milsingtonshiel. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children (mostly baptised in Ettrick Parish) included William (b.c.1825); James (who died in 1841, aged 14); Francis (b.1829); Adam (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); Jean (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Mary. His wife died at Broadlee in 1866, aged 74. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John Balfour (1815–85) Dumfries man who travelled around painting portraits, signing them ‘J.B. Pringle’. He probably married Grace Ballantrae in Edinburgh in 1846. His wife was Grace Haswell when their son John Haswell (b.1848) and daughter Julia Mary (b.1853) were born in Hawick. He was the painter of ‘Hawick from Wilton Lodge 1850’, now in the Museum, painted from around the Violet Woods. He also painted a view of the Auld Brig from near the foot of the Mill Port in 1847, as well as a view of Hawick and Wilton from the Mote in about the same year. He later gained some fame as a painter of maritime portraits. John (b.1825/6) grocer at about 6 Doncaster Street in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He is listed as a shepherd there in 1861. His wife was Grace and their children included daughter Eliot and son Robert. John Douglas (1877–1939) born in Hawick, son of manufacturer Walter Pringle and Mary Douglas. He joined the family firm at an early age, becoming a partner in 1897 (along with his half-brother Robert). He retired from Pringle’s in 1918 (or 1919/9), moving to the south of England for his health. He married Muriel Martin in 1907 and their children were Elizabeth Douglas (who married Dr. F.Y. Henderson of London and John Martin Douglas (who married Celia Carroll and became a successful journalist). John Martin Douglas (1912–99) son of John Douglas and Muriel Martin, he was born in Hawick. He graduated from Lincoln College, Oxford in 1934 and started a career in journalism. He was sub-editor of the Guardian, served in WWII with the K.O.S.B., was Director of Foreign Affairs at the Times (1948–52), then became editor of the Sydney Morning Herald (1952–57), Deputy Editor of the Observer (1957–62), Editor of the Canberra Times (1964–65) and editor of the Sydney Morning Herald again (1965–70). He wrote the controversial best-selling book ‘Australian Accent’ (1958), as well as ‘Australian Painting Today’ (1963) and ‘On Second Thoughts’ (1971). He married Celia Carroll in 1936 and she died in 1997. Margaret Graham ‘Peggy’ née Irvine (1908–2008) born in Carlisle and raised near Langholm. She married master butcher Robert and they had 4 children: Gladys; Margaret; Jean; and Robert. Long connected with the Hawick Common Riding, she was Acting-Mother in 1947, and had a son and grandson who were Cornet. She lived to see her telegram from the Queen and had 27 great-grandchildren. Margaret Violet see Margaret Violet Douglas. Mark of Clifton (d.1644) said to have been a servitor of Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. He surely came from one of the local branches of Pringles, but it is not known which one. In 1619 he purchased part of Clifton, which had been previously held by the Pringles of Torwoodlee and in 1623 he had confirmed to him lands in Easter Clifton from the Pringles of Hownam. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. William Bennet of Ancrum. Through his wife he became connected with the families of Eliott of Stobs and Douglas of Cavers. Their children included: Robert, who succeeded; Andrew, a merchant’s apprentice in Edinbgurgh, who later succeeded his nephew; and Janet, who married Thomas Scott of Todrig. Mark of Clifton (d.1685) only son of Robert of Clifton. He succeeded his father in 1683, but died unmarried only a couple of years later. His tutors included his uncle Andrew and Walter Scott, younger of Todrig. He was succeeded by his uncle Andrew. Mark of Crichton (d.1761) youngest son of Andrew of Clifton and brother of Robert of Clifton and John of Haining. In 1707 he attended a dinner in Selkirk with other local landowners and got into a dispute (perhaps over the Union) with Walter, eldest son of William Scott of Raeburn. They fought a duel with swords and Scott was killed, the location being afterwards known as Raeburn’s Meadow. He then fled abroad, becoming a merchant in Spain and later British Consul there. In 1737 he purchased Crichton, returned to Britain in 1758 and lived in London. He firstly married Miss Strachan of Thornton and secondly married Veronica Rennie. He was succeeded by his son John and had a daughter Violante, who married her cousin Andrew Pringle, Lord Alemoor. Mark of Fairnilee and Clifton (1733/4–1812) son of John of Crichton and Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Ruthford of Fairnilee. He was trained for the bar and became an Advocate in 1777, but did not practice long. He was appointed deputy Judge Advocate and Clerk of the Courts Martial of Scotland. He paid the Land Tax for Fairnilee and Rink in 1785. He succeeded to Fairnilee in 1786 on the death of his maternal grandfather and Haining and Clifton on the death of his grand-uncle John in 1792. He started building a new mansion at the Haining in 1794. He paid the carriage and horse taxes for Haining in the years 1794 and 1797, and the dog tax in 1797, as well as being taxed for 4–6 male servants in Selkirk Parish 1793–97. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1786–1802. He was also listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was appointed Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest for life. In 1802 he paid the land tax on Easter Alemoor, as well as Haining, Hartwoodburn and Howden. He was

‘of Clifton’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when already deceased). He was ‘of Haining’ when writing about the poor laws in Selkirk in 1806. In 1795 he married Anne Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Chalmers. His children included: John, who succeeded to Haining and was M.P. for the Selkirk Burghs; the last Pringle of Haining; Robert of Fairmile, M.P. for Selkirkshire, who was the last Pringle of Haining; and Margaret Violet, who married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1812 and he died at Bath. Mistress (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She may be the widow of some local Pringle. Paul Henry (1922–84) born in Hawick of Presbyterian parents, he approached Father Gordon Gray just before WWII, and was accepted into the Roman Catholic church while a prisoner of war in Italy. He returned to Hawick after the War, worked on the railways and entered Nunraw as a monk in 1954. Robert of Hoppingle (13th C.) earliest known ancestor of this family. He is recorded as a witness to a Soutra charter in the reign of Alexander III, probably around 1270. His name was written ‘de Hoppryngil’. Another man, ‘Elys de Obrinkel’ signed the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and could easily have been his son. Robert of Whit-sun and Pilmuir (d.1424) one of the earliest local Pringles. He acted as armour-bear for James, Earl of Douglas at Otterburn in 1388. He then served the next 2 Earls of Douglas and was killed at the Battle of Verneuil in France. In 1408 he had a charter of Pilmuir in Lauderdale. About the same time he was also probably granted the lands of Smalholm and had a tower built there at Sandyknowe. About 1413 he witnessed a charter for the Homes of Wedderburn and another for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1414. He is probably the ‘Robt of hophpringyll’ who witnessed an indenture for Melrose Abbey in 1418. He may be the Robert ‘de Pringil’ who witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. His children included: Robert, who succeeded; George, Squire of Douglas; Alexander, also Squire of Douglas; and David, who succeeded his brother Robert. Robert of Smalholm and Pilmuir (d.bef. 1480) son of Robert. He is probably responsible for the bridge across the Teviot near Melrose (described by Sir Walter Scott in ‘The Monastery’) with the inscription ‘I, Robert Pringill of Pilmore steed, Gave a hundred nobles of goud sae reid, To big my brigg upon the Tweed’. He appears to have succeeded his brother George as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed from about 1460, and was succeeded in that post by William Douglas de Cluny of Traquair in 1470. In 1459 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Wrangham’ and Smallholm. He witnessed an instrument in 1474 (for the Homes of Wedderburn), but was succeeded by his brother David shortly afterwards. Robert (16th/17th C.) Bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 Simon Armstrong, called of Tweedden, appeared at the Justiciary Court as caution for him. It is unclear what his crimes were or how he was related to other Pringes. Robert of Stichell (b.c.1581–1649) descendant of William of Whitton and son of George of Craigleith. He was 2nd son of George of Newhall and was progenitor of the Stichill branch and Laird of Bartingbush. He trained as a lawyer, becoming Writer to the Signet. He acquire Stichell in 1628. He was Commissioner of War for Roxburghshire and Berwickshire. He also served as Clerk to Gideon Murray of Elibank and Chamberlain to the Earl of Buccleuch (for the Debateable Land in the 1630s). A letter exists from him to Earl Walter Scott, describing the flight and capture of several Armstrongs. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1638, serving as effectively one of the Roxburghshire M.Ps. until 1641. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He could have been the servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank who had a bond in 1619 with Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’. He purchased Stichill in 1628, and also bought Dinlabyre, Larriston and Howden in Liddesdale in 1632, as well as Templehall in Berwickshire. He was recorded as possessor of the lands of Larriston, Howden and Stripshielden in the early 17th century. His lands in Castleton Parish (probably part of Dinlabyre) were valued at £60 in 1643 (but the same lands were owned by Scott of Bucceleuch by 1678). He was also recorded as owner of lands in Stitchill Parish in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire, still in 1649. He married Katherine Hamilton, who came from the Silverton family. Their children included: John, who married Margaret, illegitimate daughter of the 1st Earl of Bucceleuch, but predeceased his father; Walter of Greenknowe; an unnamed daughter, who married a Ker of Graden; Anna, who married Sir James Home of Eccles; and Christina, who married Hugh Wallace of Craigie. He was succeeded by John's son Sir Robert. Robert of Clifton (d.1683) son of Mark. He was served heir to his father in 1644. He was on the Commission of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He was originally designated as 'of Easter Clifton'. He increased his lands in Clifton in 1656, 1663 and 1679 and received a royal charter for the whole of Clifton in 1681. In 1662 he was on a commission to try 8 witches in Bowden Parish and was also on a commission appointed to apprehend thieves on the Border. He served as a J.P. in Roxburghshire from 1663. In 1674 he acquired part of Linton from Henry Ker. In 1676 he was on a commission regarding the division of Selkirk of Linton from Henry Ker. In 1679 and received a royal charter for the whole of Clifton (d.1683) son of Mark. He was served heir in 1644. He was on the commission regarding the division of Selkirk Common. In 1678 he paid £1642 on land tax in Linton Parish. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Walter Murray of Livingston and sister of Patrick, Lord Elibank. Their children included: Mark, who succeeded; Janet, who married her cousin Andrew Pringle; and Margaret (d.1683). In his testament he appointed tutors and advisors to his son, namely his brother Andrew, nephew Walter Scott, 'fear of Todrig', Sir William Bennet of Grubet, Thomas Scott of Todrig and Thomas' son William. Sir Robert of Stichill (17th C.) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1651. He is listed owing money to the deceased Countess of Buccleuch in 1661. He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and as one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1681, thus serving as M.P. for the county. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1683. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Hope, Lord Craighall. They had 19 children, including: Sir John, 2nd Baronet; Sir Walter, Lord Newhall; Robert Pringle, Secretary-at-War; and Thomas, W.S., Clerk of the Privy Council and Deputy-Keeper of the Signet, father of Lord Edgefield. Robert (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuroll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1691 for William Scott and Agnes Scott and for James Rutherord. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Caverton in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Sanderson, tenant in Falnash. Probably the same Robert paid the hearth tax on 4 hearths at Caverton Mill in the 1690s. Robert of Clifton (d.1754) eldest son of Andrew of Clifton and brother of John of Haining. In 1723 he and his brother John had sasine of an annual rent of £1000 for lands in the Barony of Cavers. He firstly married his cousin, Janet Pringle, and their children were: Robert, his only son and heir; Elizabeth, who married Robert, 4th son of William Elliot of Harwood; Margaret (d.1771), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Barbara (d.1780), who died unmarried in Edinburgh. At about the age of 50 he secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of George Rutherford of Fairnington; this was apparently done to the surprise of his children. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Baldy and their children included Betty (b.1737). Robert (18th C.) possibly half-brother of Thomas. He is also recorded in the ancient Hawick family bible. He may be the Robert who married Janet Porteous, and whose children born in Hawick included Thomas (b.1743), Helen (b.1746) and Ann (b.1756). He could be the dyer in Hawick who witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Bunyan in 1743, along with his servant (showing that he was a man of means) George Campbell. Robert (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1742 for mason David Laing, and in 1745 for carrier Walter Scott (with Scott reciprocating on the same day). He married Margaret Wilson and their children included John (b.1745) and John (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were shoemaker Thomas Scott and Beadle John Telfer. Robert of Clifton (d.1778) only son of Robert of Clifton to whom he was served as heir in 1755. In 1760 he made an entail of his lands to his heirs, failing which the sons of his uncle Lord Haining, then the heirs of Mark of Crichton and his eldest sister, Mrs. Elliot of Harwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his cousin John Pringle, 2nd son of Lord Haining. Robert (d.1793) served as Captain of the Royal Engineers and Lieutenant Colonel in the Army. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of John Pringle of Clifton’ among the voters of Roxburghshire (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He supervised the construction of new defences around St. John’s, Newfoundland in the 1770s and instigated the Newfoundland Volunteers in about 1778 and the Newfoundland Regiment in 1780. He returned to Europe in 1783 and was chief engineer at Gibraltar 1785–88. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in 1792 and died in Grenada. He married Miss Balneavis. His will is in the National Archives. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included John (b.1778). In 1778 he is described as a Superintendent of Excise and the witnesses were Robert Pringle (perhaps his father) and writer William Wilson. He could be the ‘Mr. Pringle’ who was schoolmaster at the east-end of the Kirkyard and also master of excise in Hawick. Robert (1750/1–1820) possibly son of Robert (recorded in the family bible). He was a nursery gardener in Hawick, probably with Dickson’s. He married Ann Buckham (1771–1820) and their children were: William (b.1794), framesmith; James (b.1796), stockmaker; Jean (or Jane, b.1799), married Francis Bell; Robert (b.1801), framework knitter, who married Elizabeth Foyer; and George Turnbull (b.1810), gardener and then licensed grocer at 12 Back Row.

In the 1834 electoral roll his sons George T., Robert and James were listed as joint proprietors of the house he had left them. This is marked ‘Ro. Pringle’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert (1765–1835) son of William and Jean Robson. He was a shepherd at Bellendean in 1788 and was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. In Roberton in 1788 he married Janet (b.1765–1804), daughter of Thomas Burnett; she died at Wolfeuchhead. Their children included: William (b.1788); Margaret (b.1790); James (b.1793); John (b.1795); Jane (b.1797); Adam (1799–1886), who was a shepherd at Over Dalgleish; and an unnamed son (b.1801). He died at Milston. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Lunn and their children included John (b.1803), Elizabeth (b.1805) and James (b.1807). Robert (d.bef. 1809) resident of Hawick. He was already deceased in 1809 when the death of his son Thomas is recorded. His nickname appears to be ‘old Washman’, but it is unclear what this meant. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Buckham and their children included: Thomas (b.1803); and James (b.1805). He could be the John whose stockmaker son James is recorded dying in 1824. Robert of Clifton and Haining (d.1842) younger son of Mark. He served in the 7th Hussars. He succeeded his brother John to the Clifton and Haining titles in 1831 after John died in a carriage accident when returning from Headshaw Loch. He resided at the Haining (in Selkirk), where he died 11 years later, and was the last Pringle of Clifton. His lands included North Synton in Ashkirk Parish. He was also listed among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. In 1826 he was recorded complaining about a poacher. He was a Liberal in politics and reputedly well-liked in the local community. He defeated Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in the Selkirkshire election of 1832, by 9 votes. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1832–34 and was defeated again by Pringle of Whytbank in the 1835 election. He died unmarried and was the last male Pringle of Haining. His distant cousin Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood succeeded to the Clifton estates, while Haining passed to his sister Margaret Violet, who had married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and Midshiel. Robert (1795–1859) founder of the manufacturers, born in Hawick, son of Walter. He joined Dicksons & Laings in 1810 as an apprentice stockmaker. He entered into a partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson in 1815, which later separated, his part eventually becoming Pringle’s of Scotland. The firm was based at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent 1815–19. In 1819 he carried on the business on his own in new premises on the Cross Wynd, where the company remained for about 50 years. It was listed as a manufacturer of hosiery there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. It was known as Robert Pringle & Son for many years, later becoming Pringle of Scotland and being run by the family until his grandson Robert retired in 1940. He was said to be a man of strong individuality and great energy in developing his business. He was on the old Town Council, as well as being a Police Commissioner and on the Parochial Board. He was a member of Hawick Kirk Session and was a Liberal in politics. He was living at 61 High Street in 1841 and had moved to Bridge Street by 1851, when he is listed as employer of 82 men and 8 women. In 1823 he married Charlotte Paterson, and she died in 1873, aged 69. They had 11 children including Walter, who carried on the business. Their other children were: Charlotte (b.1824), who became Mrs. Dykes; Walter (b.1826); Ann (b.1827), who married Peter Williamson; William (b.1829), who became a grocer; Catherine Elizabeth ‘Kate’ (b.1831), who married Mr. Hoy; Beatrice (b.1833), who became Mrs. Peters; Margaret (‘Etta’, b.1834), who married Dr. Robert Munro; Robert (b.1836), who became a doctor; Jessie (b.1839); Henry Turnbull (b.1840); Ann; and Esther Scott (b.1844). A portrait exists of him with his wife. He died at 18 Buccleuch Street and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (b.1801) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and by 1861 was listed at No. 13. He married Elizabeth Foyer and their children...
included: Anne, who married a Gad and then a Kerr; Elizabeth; James; Robert; and George. Robert Bailie (1806–78) son of John and Mary Walker, he was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He was farmer at Bairnkin in Southdean Parish. His brother was Maj. David of Carriber. In 1838 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat; she died in 1886. Their children included: Margaret; John, farmer at Nisbet, who succeeded to his uncle’s lands at Carriber; Robert Brown; David; Mary; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Southdean kirkyard. Robert (1837–1903) son of manufacturer Robert, he became a doctor. He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. Robert (1862–1953) grandson of manufacturer Robert and son of Walter. In 1878 he became an apprentice in the firm his grandfather had founded. He had the villa Woodnorton (originally Craigmore) built for him in Sunnyhill. By 1885 he was a partner, and after the death of his father in 1895. He refocussed the family knitwear business on retail as well as wholesale and ran it until he retired in 1940. In 1887 he married Edith Villiers Price (1866–1944), daughter of Joseph, a successful railway engineer (although also said to have been a soap and candlemaker from Clapham Common), and younger sister of Mrs. Patrick Anderson Laing of Balcar. Their children were: Francis Mary Edith, who married James Chrystal Muir, son of a Glasgow minister; Walter Gerald, who died in WWI. In memory of his only son he incorporated the firm as Robert Pringle & Son Ltd. in 1922. In his old age he moved to live with his grand-daughter Geraldine Simpson at Fetteresso Castle near Stonehaven. Robert butcher in Hawick, son of Robert, who was Acting Father in 1947. He was Cornet in 1965, with his Lass being Catherine Peden (later Johnson). He married Anna Dickey (whose brother Norman was Cornet in 1961) and their son Robert was Cornet in 1994. He was Acting Father in 1989 and Jubilee Cornet in 2015. Robert ‘Robbie’ son of Robert, he was Cornet in 1994 (with his father being Cornet in 1965). He married his Lass, Lorna Stoneyberg. His Picking Night unusually took place at Cavers. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had a horse and 4 cows stolen from him at Smailholm by the Olivers of Strange. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Pringles associated with Smailholm. Thomas of Torsonce and that Ilk (d.1566) son of John of Hoppringle. In 1564/5 he was named (along with David Spottiswood of that Ilk) as one of the cautioners of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in his feud with James Ormiston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by James. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as factor to the Crumhaugh estate in 1716. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1716 when his servant John Henderson had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear who he was or where he lived. He could be the Thomas in Cavers who witnessed a baptism for ‘Wester’ James Grieve in Commonside in 1705. Thomas (b.1720s) perhaps the earliest known Pringle of the knitwear family, he was grandfather of Robert and father of Walter, merchant in Hawick. It is unclear who his own parents were. He lived in the Sandbed area and was possibly a merchant. He was the owner of the family bible that was washed away in the great flood of 1767, but recovered near Kelso. He is believed to have died in a snowstorm. He may have had a half-brother Robert. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for gardener John Turnbull in 1766. His son Walter was born in 1748. Adm. Thomas (d.1804) of the Royal Navy. Son of Walter, who was a prosperous West Indian plantation owner, and grandson of Thomas, W.S. of the Stichill branch. He served during the American War of Independence, as well as in the Napoleonic Wars. He purchased the lands of Weens in 1796 from Robert Nutter Campbell and they were sold by his trustees (to Thomas Cleghorn) after his death. He was listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in 1797 and was listed on the Carriage Tax Rolls at Weens in 1797/8. He also paid tax there in 1797 for having 4 male servants, when he was ‘Colonel Pringle’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His son John, a tailor, died in 1805. He may be the Thomas who married Betty Douglas in 1767, and whose children included: Robert (b.1770); James (b.1771); John (b.1773); Robert (again, b.1775); Walter (b.1777); Janet (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1781). The witnesses in 1779 were the whole congregation. He is probably the ‘Newcastle carrier’ who was already deceased when his son Robert died in 1809. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 3 work horses. Thomas (b.c.1790) dyer in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he was listed as a ‘Dyer J. Wool’ on Dovemount. His wife was Beatr ix and their children included Beatr ix, William, Thomas, Peter and Janet. Thomas (1789–1834) poet and abolitionist, known as ‘the father of South African poetry’. Son of Teviotdale farmer Robert, he was born in Linton Parish about 4 miles south of Kelso, with his mother being Beatrice Scott from Langholm. He was crippled in infancy and suffered from lameness all his life. He was educated at Edinburgh University. He published his first poetry collection in 1817, with poems such as ‘The Scenes of Teviotdale’ popular locally. He was also the first editor of the ‘Edinburgh Monthly Magazine’, which would become Blackwood’s Magazine. He also edited ‘The Liberal Star’ and ‘Constable’s Monthly Magazine’ and worked at Register House. He befriended Sir Walter Scott, who helped him secure free passage in a resettlement programme to South Africa. In 1820 he emigrated to Grahamstown, moving to Cape Town, where he founded a school and a newspaper, but was forced to leave in 1826 because of his fight against slavery and his promotion of free speech. His sister Jessie married Hawick man William Ainslie, and he visited family in Hawick several times, after one occasion writing the poem ‘The Emigrant’s Farewell’. The Museum has (or at least had) an original letter of his. Back in London, he worked for the Committee of the Anti-Slavery Society for his last 7 years. He encouraged former slave Mary Prince to write her autobiography. He published ‘African Sketches’ and books of verse, such as ‘Ephemera’. He died from tuberculosis at the age of 45. He was buried in Bunhill Fields, but in 1970 his remains were re-interred in South Africa. Thomas Kedie (b.1822) son of merchant John and Ann Kedie. He was listed as a grocer on Market Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1844 he married Lucille Kennedy, sister of William Norman Kennedy and half-sister of bookseller J.D. Kennedy. Their children were: Angelique Lucile (b.1846), who became a nurse; Janet Kedie (b.1848); Elizabeth Hamer (b.1850); John Douglas (b.1852); James Robert (b.1854); Douglas; Jessie, who married James Lindsay; Maggie; and Robert. Walter (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the Roughheugh Waulk Mill in the early 1700s. In 1713 the Bailies heard a case of assault brought against his servitor John Kerr. He is referred to in the Hawick Session records of 1723 as ‘Walker, Roughheugh’, when he was employer of William Hood, and paid his fine for adultery. Given the name, occupation and location, it is not inconceivable that he was an ancestor of the manufacturing Pringles. He is probably the Walter, who married Helen ‘Ourd’, and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Elspeth (b.1714); William (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); and Henry (b.1720). Walter (b.1748) son of Thomas and father of manufacturer Robert. He was a merchant in the Sandbed. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the tailor who was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller in 1781. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. In 1773 he married Betty Heiton (or Hutton), who came from an old Darnick family. Their wedding proclamation is recorded in Melrose, with Andrew Riddell as cautioner. They had 7 children, including: Betty (b.1775); Robert (b.1776), who must have died young; John (b.1778), a merchant; Robert (1780–82); James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); and Walter (b.1787). In 1793 he secondly married Ann Scott (related to the Brieryyards Scotts) and had at least 5 more children: Beatrice (b.1794), who died in infancy; Robert (b.1795), who founded Pringle of Scotland; Jennie or Janet (1797–1858); Andrew (b.1799); and James. Walter (1826–1895) eldest son of Robert. He began as an apprentice in his father’s Cross Wynd factory in 1842, and when he was finished in 1846, the firm was renamed ‘Robert Pringle & Son’. He eventually ran the family hosiery business, further developing it after the death of his father, the founder. In the 1850s he developed the ‘intarsia’ of producing Argyle-style sock patterns. In 1868 he moved the main premises to Walter’s Wynd. He was a Town Councillor for many years and also served as a Magistrate. In politics he was a staunch Liberal. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He gifted communion silverware to the Parish Church. In 1860 he married Mary Sutton and she died in 1870, aged 35. They had 3 children: John Clement, who died in infancy; Robert, who succeeded to the family business; and Mary Charlotte (b.1864), who married William Charles Johnston. He later married Mary, daughter of Dr. John Douglas, and she died in 1915, aged 72. The children by his second marriage were: Jane Aitchison, who married T.J. Finlay; Catherine Ann (‘Cathy’), who married George Crosfield Glenny; and John Douglas, who married Marie Anne Martin, and became a partner in the family firm. He lived at Langlands in Sunnyhill, which he had built for him, starting a trend for other manufacturers to build villas nearby. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the ‘particate lands’ of Hawick, which had earlier been owned by William Scott ‘at Flex’.
He is said to not have been of very strong constitution. Along with several other members of the family, he is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Walter Gerald (1893–1917) only son of Robert Pringle, the last member of the family to run the famous knitwear company. He was home-schooled by a tutor and started his apprenticeship in 1910, being groomed to eventually take over the firm when war broke out. In his youth he was a member of the Boy Scouts. Before WWI he was Captain of the Hawick Motor Cycling Club (riding with Jimmie Guthrie, his cousin Joe Laing and others). He enlisted into the Lothian and Border Horse in 1915 and served as a motorcycle dispatch rider. After returning to Britain to obtain his commission, he became 2nd Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. and was killed at Passchendaele. There is a plaque to his memory in Wilton Church, with a representation of him by sculptor Newbury Abbot Trent. William (15th C.) probably son of David. He was Constable of Cessford Castle and appointed the 1st Range of the Ward of Tweed.
He could have been the ‘Wil Pringill’ who was on the 1464/5 panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was Constable of Cessford Castle when he witnessed a sasine for Cessford in 1467. He is probably the William who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468 and another for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk in 1468. It seems likely he is the William mentioned in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the William who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484. He may be the William who was recorded along with David on a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491. Also in 1491 he was ‘Wil. Hoppringill de Cessfurd’ when he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. He was probably succeeded by his son Andrew. William (d.1513) younger son of James of Smailholm. His mother was Isabella Muray of Falahill. He had a tack for Caddonlee in 1488 and another along with his son George for Torwoodlee in 1509. In 1509 he also held one quarter of Clifton. He was a witness to the sasine of Queen Margaret of England for lands in Ettrick Forest. He had sons: George, who succceeded; and David, whose son George was a tutor of Torwoodlee in 1581. He was killed at Flod-dden. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch.
It is unclear where he was from, although he is listed along with men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. His name is recorded as ‘Ville Hop-pringill’. William of Torwoodlee (d.1581) son of George. In 1571 he subscribed to the General Band to rise against Kerr of Ferniehirst and the thieves of Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1575 he was directed to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He married Agnes (or Alison), daughter of James Heriot of Trabrown in 1571 and was succeeded by his son George. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he married Mary Hutchison, the marriage being proclaimed in Roberton, but taking place at Eskdalemuir. He is probably the William who was at Howpasley in 1721 and 1723, Phillopeshiel in 1726 and Phil-lope in 1732 and 1737. His children included:
Jean (b.1721); Helen (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726);
an unnamed child (b.1728); William (b.1730); an unnamed son (b.1732); John (b.1734); and Janet (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1761, 1765 and 1767. He may have been brother to John, who was also living at Howpasley. He is probably the William who married Jean Robson in Roberton in 1758. His children probably included Adam (b.1759), William (b.1761), Robert (b.1765) and John (b.1767). He could be the William ‘in Shaws former herd of Dum Fedlain in Howpasley’ who was accused by David Park in 1793 of ‘losing ten sheep without explanation’; it is unclear what ‘Dum Fedlain’ may refer to. William (d.1811) tenant farmer at Hislop. He had 2 sons by his first marriage, Adam and Robert. His second wife was Elizabeth Wilson, this perhaps being the marriage with ‘B. Wilson’ (probably Betty) taking place in Roberton in 1789. After his death, t here was a court case involving a pre-nuptial contract, the argument hinging on whether it was legal for her to have had her hand led to sign something when she could neither write her name nor read the contents. William (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Bedrule and Fulton until 1826, being succeeded by Mr. Haliburton and then shortly afterwards by Robert Brodie. He is recorded at Bedrule in 1797, when he owned 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He opened a quarry on his farm at Bedrule, and started a lineworks, from which he also supplied some neighbouring farms. He could be the William, marr i ed to Hannah, whose son Robert was baptised in 1801 in Byrness. William (b.1790/1) born in Roberton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Phaup in Cavers Parish in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Phaup. His wife was Jean (from Dumfriesshire) and their children included Janet, Adam, David, Andrew, James and Margaret. William (b.1791/2) shepherd at Woolhope in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was shepherd at ‘Stinchelburnfoot’. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Isabella, William, James and Adam. William (b.c.1793) frame-smith of the Back Row, listed there in 1841. His son was Alexander. He is listed along with labourer Robert as a joint-tenant in the 1837 electoral roll. Another household on the Back Row in 1841, consisting of Robert, William (also a frame-smith) and James, could be his father, son and grandson. William (b.1805/6) originally from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newstead in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 20 acres, employing 1 girl. In 1836 he married Janet, daughter of Thomas Cranston and Agnes Smail. Their children included Jessie. William (b.c.1810) mason at Billingburn near Chesters in the 1841 census. In 1851 he was still living in his father’s house on Bridge Stree. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, George, Margaret and Jane. William (b.1829) son of Robert and Charlotte Paterson. He set up a grocery business in Hawick. William Elliot (b.1833) son of William and Janet Crozier, he was born in Castleton Parish. His father was shepherd at Woolhope. He was a shepherd, being listed at Toftsholm in 1861. He married Christina Douglas Elliot (daughter of James Elliot and Helen Douglas), and she is listed as ‘Christopher’ on one census transcript. Their children were: William (b.1858), who moved to the Durham area; James Elliot (b.1859), also moved to Durham; Walter Douglas Elliot (b.1864), who died young; and Helen Douglas (b.1869), who married Thomas Hall and lived in Northumberland (formerly spelled ‘Pringil’, ‘Pringle’, ‘Pringill’, ‘Pringyl’, ‘Pringyle’, ‘Pringyll’, ‘Pringil’, ‘Pryngill’ and variants, and synonymously as ‘Hoppringle’, ‘Hoppringill’, etc. in earlier centuries).

the Pringle Bible (thu-pring-ul-bi-bul) n. old family bible of the local Pringle family. It was apparently found on the banks of the Tweed near Kelso following the Hawick flood of 1767! The book was later returned to the family. It bears the inscription: ‘Who ough this book if ye would knowe I will show you by letters 2, the first is T, a letter bright, the 2 is P in all men’s sight, and if you chance should to read amiss look underneath and there it is – Thomas Pringle’. Pringle’s (ing-ulz) n. Pringle of Scotland, founded as a hosiery firm by Robert Pringle in 1815, in partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson, at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent. Pringle went on his own from 1819, moving to the Cross Wynd (opposite Allars Kirk) and manufacturing underwear from 1827, with the introduction of the ‘broad frame’. The name was changed to ‘Robert Pringle & Son’, when Walter completed his apprenticeship in 1846. The ‘Intarsia’ method of producing Argyle-patterned socks was introduced in the 1850s. The firm purchased John Nixon & Sons mill on Walter’s Wynd in 1868 (or 1869), renaming it ‘Rodono’. Robert Pringle (grandson of the founder) was made a partner in 1885. The company then started to focus on retail as well as wholesale. The firm first made spun silk underwear (and in colour) in 1892, and introduced seamless gore for ladies underwear in 1895. About 1905 it became one of the first firms to introduce knitted outerwear. Douglas Pringle joined his brother Robert as a partner in 1897, and J. Boyd Sime became another partner in 1906. The knitted coat department was started in 1910. Herbert Benyon Johnstone joined in 1919. In 1922 it became incorporated as a private company, Robert Pringle & Son Ltd. Pure silk stockings (‘Prinseta’) were started in 1927. Sime resigned in 1929, with John Turnbull

Pringle Hall (thu-pring-ul-hal) n. extension added to the Burns Club in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, club treasurer for 37 years. Pringle-Pattison (pring-ul-paw’-ee-sin) n. Andrew Seth (1856–1931) son of Smith Kinnmont Seth and Margaret Little. He was educated at Edinburgh University and in Germany. In 1880 he was appointed assistant to the Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in Edinburgh and became Balfour Professor of Philosophy himself in 1883. He moved to Cardiff before returning to Scotland in 1887 to be Professor of Logic, Rhetoric and Metaphysics at St. Andrews University, then was Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh University 1891–1919. In 1898 he changed his surname in order to inherit the titles of Pringle of Haining from Margaret Violet Pringle, wife of Archibald Douglas of Adderstone, to whom he was distantly related. He married Eva, daughter of Albrecht Stropp; they had 2 daughters and 3 sons. He died at the Haining and is buried in Morningside Cemetery.
The Pringle’s Story

becoming Managing Director. ‘Rodono splash-proof’ silk stockings and ‘Slimfit’ underwear were being made from 1931. Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart became joint Directors in 1932 and became Managing Directors following Turnbull’s resignation a year later. In 1933 cashmere was added, and designer Otto Weisz joined in 1934, becoming a Director in 1937. He was responsible for the name ‘twinset’ and for making the style the company’s own from the mid-1940s. A.G. Chaston was also made a Director in 1934 and George Mitchell in 1937. The lion rampant first appeared on garment labels in 1934. In 1940 the ladies’ blouse department started in Hawick, ‘Pringle Johnston Imports’ was formed to handle the U.S. market, and Robert Pringle retired that same year. The firm manufactured utility outerwear for the forces in WWII, and stopped making underwear in 1965. A 5 year lease was taken on Weensland Mill in 1946 and the Kelso factory opened, with the Berwick factory following 2 years later. The blouse department closed in 1950, but the Burnfoot factory opened and Rodono Mill was extended 3 times in the 1950s. Automatic rob transfer was introduced in 1955, with intarsia and men’s outerwear starting about the same time. It received the Royal Warrant from the Queen Mother in 1948, was appointed to the Queen in 1956 and received the Queen’s Award to Industry for Export Achievement in 1965 (further awards followed in 1970, 1979 and 1983). The name was changed to ‘Pringle of Scotland Ltd.’ in 1958 and became a public company in 1960. The underwear department finally closed in 1961. The company purchased Glebe Mills in 1962 and started making men’s knitwear there a year later. They sponsored a professional golf tournament in 1964 and signed a deal with golfer Nick Faldo in 1981 (ending in 2001), with the Faldo Collection of leisurewear launched in 1983. The name was changed to ‘Pringle of Scotland and the Hawick Knitwear Story’ (2006) was written by Hugh Barty-King – ‘He’s a Pringle-ite since he left schill and plenty o support he’ll get frae the mill’ [GM].

The Pringle’s Story (thu-pring-ul-stö-ree) n. 1948 film, being a documentary about Pringle’s.

Pringle’s Temperance Hotel (pring-ulz-tem-prins-hö-tel) n. one of the last temperance hotels in Hawick, situated on Union Street in the early 20th century. This may be the same as the house on the corner at 32 North Bridge Street, later Gladstone’s factory.

Pringle Street (pring-ul-stree’) n. lost street name, originally given to the west part of Wellington Road, built around 1877 and named after David Pringle, but discarded in 1892.

prinkel (pring-kul) v., arch., poet. to prickle, tingle, have goosebumps – ‘... An’ mony bats flew silent roon’ My prinklin’ heid’ [WP], n., arch. a tingling sensation, prickles (usually plural).

prinkelt (pring-kul’, -kult) pp., arch., poet. prickled, tingle’d – ‘My love was ardent aye an’ warm – I’m wae when e’er I think o’t – When laid upon his manly arm wi’ joy my bosom prink’lt’ [JoHa].

prinkly (pring-ku-lee) adj., arch. prickly, tingly – ‘A prinkly feeling’ [GW].

Printer’s Close (prin’urz-klös) n. close off Silver Street, near the foot of the Howegate. It is unclear who the printer was.

the Printer’s Well (thu-prin’urz-wel) n. former public water supply at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. It was originally on the opposite side of the street beside John Waldy’s House, and hence also sometimes known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. It was part of the town’s water supply, and tended to be used when the wells further up went dry (also written as ‘Printers’').

prising (prɪ-zing) n., arch. an appraisal, assigning of a value – ‘...that passit upon the prising of the saidis landis’ [SB1500].

prisoners o war (pri-zi-nurz-ə-wawr) n., pl. prisoners of various wars have been a common sight in and around Hawick. During the Napoleonic wars, 1812–14, about 120 French, German and Polish officers were sent to Hawick and allowed to move about freely with certain restrictions (the privates were largely kept in Penicuik, and there were also officers in Selkirk). William Nixon acted as paymaster for them and their headquarters was at Slitrig Bank, but they were boarded in private houses throughout Hawick. There was also a base across the river on Slitrig Crescent, in what was once the Red Cross building. Several officers stayed in the old house at 44 High Street, as seen in a painting of the time. They were allowed to walk within 1 mile of the Tower Knowe in any direction, and met every morning at the Spetch for roll call. Some of them (including M. Prefont) painted local landscapes, which still exist, and some created other items that are now in the Museum, such as a carved ivory guillotine, a carved snuff-box and a home-made pair of men’s body stays. In late 1813 Francois Senebien wrote (in French) to the Duke of Buccleuch, asking for help in being freed on compassionate and health grounds. In any case, all of these prisoners were released in June 1814 after the allied troops took Paris, with the men boarding ship at Leith. It is said that the presence of all the well-dressed French officers changed the sense of fashion in the Town. One of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson’s sisters married a prisoner (traditionally said to be a Bonaparte!), while another sister (Jane) had a child to one, named Cabourne. Additionally, Ann Ekron lived with an ensign called Adam Bellom, having a daughter Adelina, and Lieut. Frederick Diener had a son Frederick William Diener with Hawick woman Wilhelmina Paisley. In 1816 the deaths of ‘Nelly Jardine and Frenchmans Bastard Child’ are recorded in Hawick. A century later there were as many as 6,000 German prisoners of war based at Stobs in WWI, living in 200 wooden huts below Wimington Rig farm. They were mainly civilian detainees in the first few months of the War, and it became purely a military camp at the end. Prisoners included the crews of the battleships ‘Gneisenau’, ‘Leipzig’, ‘Torpedo’ and ‘Blúcher’. Conditions in the camp seem to have been among the best in Britain. Prisoners worked on local farms and built a sewage works for the Camp. The last prisoners were released in early 1919. The Museum has a model ship and a ship in a bottle from this period, and also copies of the newspaper produced by the Germans, ‘Stobsiade’. 45 prisoners were buried in the Camp cemetery, with their remains transferred to Cannock Chase Cemetery in 1962. During WWII there were a small number of Polish and German prisoners located at Stobs. There were about 30 prisoners there towards the end of the War, staying until January 1947, although with minimum security in the last months. German and Italian prisoners were also located in Nissen huts where the Police Station and Katharine Elliot Centre were later built.

the Probus Club (θu-prō-bis-klub) n. local club for retired professional businessmen, which meets every second Thursday morning for a talk and refreshments. Local clubs are connected with the international Probus organisation (founded 1966), but run autonomously, while being supported by the local Rotary club. The Hawick Club was formed in 1976.

the Procession (θu-pro-se-shin) n. any of the parades associated with the Common Riding, particularly the parade of bands, officials and horses along the High Street on the Friday morning. At the end of the 19th century the route was from the Tower to the Sandbed, then up Wilton Path, Princes Street, Bridge Street, Union Street, then a pause while the Cornet and followers went to the Bogleiebarns, after which it proceeded along the High Street and up the Howegate and Loan to the Chase. The Procession is preceded by the walk from the Town Hall after the Cornet has picked up the Flag, with the other Principals, Provost, Bailies and guests walking in procession to the Tower for the singing of the Auld Sang. The Procession includes cars (carriages in former times) containing Councillors and Committee Members, plus the Cornet and mounted supporters and the bands. The modern event starts at 8.45 a.m., with the Halberdiers leading the Provost’s motorcade, with the Lasses’ car in the rear. Then comes the Drums and Fifes leading the Cornet and Principals (who emerge from the Tower pend), with the mounted supporters falling in behind, in the order of ex-Cornets, then ex-Acting Fathers, then visiting principals, then the rest. The route goes via the Sandbed, up the Proclamation

Wilton Path, along Princes Street to Dovemount, then back along Bridge Street. At the Horse the Saxhorn Band join, and lead the Procession up the Loan.

the Proclamation (θu-pro-klə-ma-sheen) n. the official announcement made on the Thursday by the Burgh Officer charging the Burgesses to ride the marches. Once this would have been made at the Mercat Cross, and later from the ‘Oyes door’ in the old Town House, but now it is done from the Town Hall Balcony immediately after the Colour Bussing. The Saxhorn Band provide the fanfare for the Big Fower and the Halberdier appearing outside the Town Hall, this being the first time the townsfolk have seen the bussed Flag. The text of the announcement is: ‘These are to give advertisements to all burgesses within the Burgh and Town of Hawick, and burgesses outwith the same, that the Provost, Bailies and Council are to ride the marches of the Commonty of Hawick upon Friday the … day of June instant as hath ever been usual. Therefore warning all the said burgesses to attend that day in their best apparel to the end aforesaid’. The text is essentially unchanged since being recorded in 1733. Afterwards the Cornet waves the Flag and it is left on display. The Lasses and Maids of Honour then usually appear from the balconies and the bands and halberdiers lead the Cornet and his followers in the Cornet’s Walk. A second Proclamation is made at the Mill Path on the Friday afternoon, stating that the marches have been duly ridden: ‘For as much as the Provost, Bailies and Council of the burgh of Hawick, with the burgesses of the said burgh, have this day ridden the marches of the Commonty of Hawick, as has been in use yearly since time immemorial, without interruption or molestation of any sort; therefore, if any nobleman, gentleman, or others, having lands lying contiguous or adjacent to the said Commonty, shall find themselves leized or prejudiced in any sort by this day’s marching, they are hereby required to state their objections thereto to the Provost, Bailies and Council of the said burgh within forty days from this date otherwise they shall be held to have acquiesced in the said marching’. The Proclamations were properly incorporated into the Common Riding ceremonies in 1900. In the early 2000s they were replaced with versions using the Hawick vernacular. Before the Division of the Common a proclamation was made at the Mercat Cross on Common Riding Friday, stating which parts of the Common were to be used for cutting turf etc. in the coming year.

Proctor (prok-tur) n. Rev. James (1826–60) probably born at Dalkeith. He started as an apprentice tailor, then switched to carpentry. He also became a strong advocate for Teetotalism, joining the British League of Junior Abstainers. He attended Edinburgh University and became a missionary under Rev. William Reid of Edinburgh. His health prevented him from completing the arduous course with the United Presbyterians, so he entered the Congregational Church. He was inducted to Hawick Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in 1857, but resigned the following year due to ill-health (and perhaps partly because of disputes among the congregation about remaining out of the Congregational Union, with which he had been involved). He became minister at Hamilton Congregational Church, but again his health cut this appointment short. He married Janet Chisholm and they had 1 child, but she died giving birth to a second. He wrote ‘A Crack about the Drink; or, a Poetical Dialogue between a Total Abstainer and a Moderate Drinker’ (1949). He also wrote poetry and hymns.

provost (prü-vöst) n. Scottish version of mayor, being chief magistrate, chairman of the town council and civic head (from Old English).

the Provost (th tú-pro-vüst) n. Hawick’s first Provost was George Wilson in 1861 after the council was reconstituted following the Police and Improvement Act of that year. The normal term of office is 3 years. After Reorganisation in 1975, it was decided to continue to appoint a local Councillor to perform the ceremonial role. The title used was Ex-Provost, while the old Provost (Atkinson) continued, then the new incumbent was named Honorary Provost. The duties of the current Honorary Provost include chairing the Provost’s Council, acting as civic head during the Common Riding, selecting the Common Riding Chief Guest and representing Hawick as civic head at Common Ridings and similar ceremonies in neighbouring towns. The following is the full list: George Wilson 1861–68; George Hardie Fraser 1868–71; John Nichol 1871–74; Edward Wilson 1874–75; Robert Even 1875–78; Robert Fraser Watson 1878–87; Robert Milligan 1887–90; George Hogg 1890–93; Walter Scott Barrie 1893–96; Robert Mitchell 1896–1902; John Melrose 1902–19; George Heron Wilson 1919–22; James Renwick 1922–28; William Scott Nichol 1928–31; David Fraser 1931–38; J.A.C. the Provost’s Breakfast (th tú-pro-vist-brest-fist) n. ceremonial breakfast taking place traditionally in the Town Hall on the Friday morning of the Common Riding, and including the Magistrates, Councilors and other invited guests. The event was inaugurated by Provost Watson in 1885 at his home at Wilton Bank, and held in the Council Chambers from 1888. Unlike most other events, speeches are prohibited. The Cornet and his guests breakfast separately, formerly in the Tower Inn.

the Provost’s Chain (th tú-pro-vist-chán) n. chain of office of the Hawick Provost, first worn by Provost Melrose in 1906 along with the ceremonial robe. It was purchased through public subscription, initiated by the Callants’ Club. The design is in the ‘renaissance’ style, in 15 carat gold, weighing about 30 ounces. It consists of 30 parts linked together, 14 of which are shields for the names of Provosts, 8 are thistles with the motto
the Provost’s Council

‘Nemo me impune lacesset’ and the last 8 are circular wreaths of oak leaves bearing an ornamental ‘H’ and mural coronets with the sword and scales of justice. The monogram of the Provost forms the back link of the collar, while the badge of the Callant’s Club in enamel forms the front link. The badge that hangs from the chain measures 4½ by 3 inches and is an enamel version of the Burgh Arms. The design and manufacture were by Brock & Son, goldsmiths of Edinburgh. The Chain was in regular use until 1974, when it disappeared during the Common Riding Ball. Worth an estimated £7,000 at the time, its disappearance was a great mystery. The Callants’ Club presented a replacement chain in 1979. However, the original was sent anonymously to the Provost in 2002.

the Provost’s Council (thu-pro-vists-koon-sul) n. Hawick Honorary Provost’s Council, a group consisting of a number of local councillors with sepecific duties during the Common Riding. This body officially invite a young man to be Cornet each year, and its main objective is to fulfil Hawick’s civic functions and ceremonies. It was formerly a sub-committee of the Town Council, but after Reorganisation became an honorary body, consisting of the regional (8 members) and community councillors (4 members) from the Hawick wards, who elect the Honorary Provost and 4 Honorary Bailies from among themselves.

the Provost’s Lamp (thu-pro-vists-lawmp) n. an ornamental lamp which used to be mounted outside the Provost’s house during his term of office, and at one time would be alight as a sign that he was at home. The first Provost who had the lamp was Robert Fraser Watson in 1882. Since Reorganisation it has been kept inside the Town Hall. Flags were also flown outside the Provost’s house since at least 1888.

the Provost’s Room (thu-pro-vists-room) n. an upstairs chamber in the Town Hall, formerly used by the Provost and containing a complete set of photographs of Hawick’s Provosts.

the Provost’s Tent (thu-pro-vists-ten’) n. refreshment tent in the centre of the racecourse at the Mair, where the Provost and councillors entertain their guests, a tradition started by Provost Renwick in the 1920s.

Prowett (pro-w-i’) n. William (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick. He who was involved in 1830 with an improvement whereby old frames could be made wider for producing shirts and undergarments rather than just hosiery. He was listed as a framesmith on O’Connell Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on O’Connell Street (labelled ‘Provats’s backhouse) with his wife Mary and children Mary, John and Ann. By 1851 his wife was a widow, listed as a lodging house keeper. William (b.1821/2) born in Traqueer, Kirkcudbright, he was son of William and continued his father’s framesmith business. In 1851 he was at 2 O’Connell Street (perhaps the modern No. 11). His wife was Sarah Anne and their children included Mary Jane, William Henry and John Dodd.

prowsie (prow-see) adj., arch. particular in dress or in work (also ‘prossie’; noted by J. Jamieson).

the Pru (thu-proo) n. popular short form for the Prudential Life Assurance Company, in Hawick referring to the building by the ‘coffin end’ at the Horse. Although the insurance company moved out in the 1970s, the balcony still contains the word ‘Prudential’ carved in stone.

the P.S.A. (thu-pee-es-a) n. organisation formed locally in 1910 to provide activities for the male youth of Hawick. The idea started in the Midlands of England in 1875, to provide non-denominational Sunday afternoon meetings to encourage young men away from public houses, the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ brotherhood. A P.S.A. club started in Hawick in the 1890s, but that floundered and it was more firmly established in 1910. This was partly instigated by Hawick’s Rev. William Ainslie, making inquiries about the Birmingham-based movement. Originally the Hawick club had a connection with the Congregational Kirk, but soon became an autonomous organisation. The club organised indoor games and other activities for young men. In particular it has a ‘semi-junior’ rugby team, for 16 to 18 year olds, founded in 1919 by D. Paterson, D. Stavert and Bailie A.J. Hislop. This makes them the oldest semi-junior rugby team in Scotland. The male voice choir was formed in 1932, with first conductor being William Elliot and first accompanist Robert Little. The clubrooms were on Teviot Crescent, providing indoor games facilities for boys from the age of 12. It was run by volunteers, basically providing a boys ‘youth club’, before local authorities thought about such things. The clubrooms had 7 billiard tables, carpet bowls and table tennis. The club also had a cricket team, a drama group and an orchestra at one time, and held an annual New Year’s bowling tournament. When the clubrooms closed in 1961 the building was acquired by Barrie’s knitwear and later demolished to make way for a supermarket. The rugby team and choir survive to this day (the choir being the only remaining P.S.A. choir in Britain). They were the first local junior rugby team to have their own pitch, acquiring some waste ground at Burnfoot in 1958, and building facilities there in 1960. The team is nicknamed ‘the Peeskees’, and plays in navy blue shirts with a gold hoop and navy socks with gold tops. Highlights include winning the Scottish Youth Championship in 1986/87 and again in 2003/04. In 2016 the rugby team effectively merged with the Wanderers, with the teams training together and swapping roles as ‘A’ and ‘B’ teams in alternating years. Minute books and team photographs exist from 1919, and a booklet ‘Memories of a Great Club’ was printed for the 75th anniversary in 1994.

the P.S.A. Choir (thu-pee-es-ə-kwIr) n. male-voice choir associated with the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ club. The choir was set up in 1932. The first conductor was William Elliot and the first accompanist was Robert Little (both men being organists in the Congregational Kirk). Later conductors included Bert Hutchison, Albert Budge, Eric Whitehead, W.R. Smith, Jeff Panes, John Leishman, Basil Deane, Ian Seeley, Susan Booth, Isaac MacRae and Ann Witherington. Accompanists have included Robert Little, Adam Ingles, A. Whitelaw, Agnes Young, Peggy Hunter, Nan Ellis, Brian Bonsor, Betty Scott, George Duthie and Linden Warburton. The choir has performed over the years with the Hawick Drama Club, Hawick Orchestral Society and the Saxhorn Band. During the war they performed concerts to raise money for the Red Cross. They have sung with many special guests, including Dame Isobel Baillie. They hold an annual dinner in November.

pubs (pubz) n., pl. public houses, establishments where alcoholic beverages are served. Hawick has had (at least) its fair share of these over the years, and they have formed a central part of the social and political life of the town. In earlier times there were many licensed establishments in some back room, known only by the name of the proprietor. In the year 1838/9 the number of licenses granted to inn-keepers, grocers and others in Hawick Parish was 53, with the vast majority undoubtedly in the Town itself. An incomplete list, including some popular names as well as official names, but excluding hotels and private clubs, is: the Albion Bar; the Athole Bar; the Balmoral; Barclay’s; the Black Bull; Blondette’s; the Blue Anchor; the Blue Bell; Bogart’s; the Bridge Bar; the Britannia Airms; the British Public Hoose; the Buck Inn; the Bull & Butcher; Burnfit Roadhoose; the Burns Inn; Callaghan’s; the Cannon Inn; Clinty’s; the Coach and Horses; the Commercial Inn; the Cross Keys; Dalton’s; Diesel’s; the Douglas Airms; the Drop Inn; the Drumlanrig Bar; the Ewe an Lamb; the Exchange; the Ex-Pat; the Fiddle Inn; the Fleece Inn; Frankie’s; Gentie’s; the Glencairn Bar; the Golden Fleece; the Grapes; the Gretel; the Half-Moon Hotel; the Hare an Hoonds; the Harrow Inn; the High Level; Holland House; the Imperial; the Inn Place; the Irish Harp; Jock Reid’s; the Kazba, the King’s Heid; the Mansfield Bar; the Mayfield Bar; the Melgund; the Monkeys; the Nag’s Heid; the No. 10; the Oak Trei; the Office; the Ordnance Airms; the Pick Inn; the Plough Inn; the Punch Bowl; the Queen’s Heid; the Railway Hotel; Robbie’s; the Royal; the Royal Oak; the Salmon Inn; Scrumz; the Somewhere Else; the Stag’s Heid; Stampers; the Station; St. Leonard’s Vaults; the Swan Inn; the Teribus Airms; Thorndykes; the Trinity Bar; the Trough Inn; the Union Inn; the Waverley; the West End Bar; the White Hart; the White Swan; the Walton Bar – ‘The pubs are bad – but clubs are worse, the people all did cry, Suppress the clubs, they’re worse than pubs, they sell drink on the sly’[JCG].

Pud (pud) n. common male nickname, e.g. in the Miller and Arnott families.

puddin (pu-din, pu-dn, poo-din) n. sausage meat pudding, e.g. ‘white puddin’ – ‘They’ll hae oor puddens oot by turns, We’ll get oor paiks! A’ ower-the-heid o’ Rabbie Burns, Yon king o’ raiks!’[DH], ‘For puddins black and white, Which were a sheer delight, Even the nuns came up fri St. Margaret’s Home’ [IWL].

Puddinburn (pu-din-burn) n. Puddingburn, a former tower and settlement off the Hermitage Water in Castleton Parish, perhaps close to the modern Puddington Sike. It could be the earthwork near the confluence of Puddington Sike with the Hermitage Water. It may be the ‘Pantoedene’ listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 8 shillings and with tenant William Elliot. An English letter of 1584 mentions ‘the Armstronges of Tinnes alias Puddyborne’; this makes it clear that at that time the Armstrongs of Tinnis and of Puddingburn were one and the same; this may suggest that Puddingburn was close to (or another name for) the Tinnis Burn, and not near Puddington Sike at all, or else simply that the Armstrongs of Tinnis also had a seat at Puddingburn. ‘Sim of Puddinge burne’ is mentioned in an English letter of 1600. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Podotoun’ among the possessions of Francis Beattie in 1632. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. This was once a stronghold of the Armstrongs and mentioned in the ballad ‘Dick o the Cow’. A note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) records that the farm was then on the lands of Reidmoss (even though that lies far to the south), with the old farmhouse converted into a sheepfold – ‘Then Dickie’s come on for Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. E’en as fast as he might drie. – Now Dickie’s come on for Pudding-burn, Where there were thirty Armstrongs and three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM]. The poem also contains a reference to a habit of the Armstrongs that you would get no dinner if you failed to come when first summoned – ‘Then it was the use of Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. And the house of Mangerton, all haill, These that came na at the first ca’ They got nae mair meat t’ the neist meal’ [CPM] (labelled ‘Paddiden’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is possible it is the ‘Potterlamport’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and it is ‘Paddiden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Puddington Sike).

puddle (pu-dul) v., arch. to muddle along, mess about, work ones feet up and down – ‘…How still the puddlin’ feetie lie, the buffy hands at rest!’ [JT].

Puffin Billy (pu-fin-bi-lee) n. nickname given to the first locomotive that was brought to Liddesdale in advance of the opening of the railway. It was said to be as big as a traction engine and with a 6-foot high chimney. It was an enormous struggle to bring it from Carlisle by road, with many mishaps along the way, including the death of the man in charge of the operation, Bill Smith, when it fell on top of him. It was brought to a location near Saughtree School where it was used as a sawmill for the railway works, and then taken by means of a temporary rail line from near the junction of the Caldron Burn and the Liddel to join the Border Counties Railway, where it was used in the construction project.

Purcell  (pur-sel) n. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. Her lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £15. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1707 for weaver James Jolly, in 1708 for Andrew Richardson and Isobel Purcel (who was probably related to him), in 1711 and 1718 for weaver David Reid, and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the James born in 1678 to John and Cathering Scott. He was on the short-list for candidates to be Cornet in 1712 and was Cornet in 1713. In 1713 he was described as a wright who was one of the tradesmen chosen by the minister and heritors of Hawick to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He may have witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1731. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for George Richardson (probably his nephew). He may be the same James who was born in 1678 to John and Catherine Scott. He gave a house to James Richardson, son of his nephew George, who gave evidence regarding the Common in 1767. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a wright among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Catherine Scott, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670), Elspeth (b.1672) and James (b.1678). He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Stavert in 1684 and for weaver Andrew Dodds in 1689. Patrick recorded in 1567, along with Hector Turnbull ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as other Turnbulls and Olivers from the same place. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. His name is given as ‘Part Pursell’ (spelled ‘Pursel’, ‘Pursell’ and ‘Pursil’).

Purdie  (pur-dee) n. Richard (1805–70) originally from England, he was baker in Hawick who was an elder in the Relief Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead and working as a weaver. But by 1851 he was a baker at No. 3 Loan. He was listed as a baker on the Loan in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of weaver Walter Scott, and sister of William Scott, who became a successful businessman in New York. They appear to have had no surviving children. William (18th C.) resident at Todshaw. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included James (b.1763), Walter (b.1765) and Mary (b.1767).

Purdom  (pur-dum) n. Alexander (d.c.1788) son of Bailie Walter. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Meiron (or Marion) Scott of Boghall in 1725; her father was Richard Scott. Their children included: Christian (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); Richard (b.1731), probably the merchant in Hawick; John (b.1734); Margaret; and William (b.1741). The witnesses in 1741 were ‘late Bailie’ Walter (his father) and merchant William Oliver. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Alexander, son of William, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 and who was elected cornet in 1797. He is recorded as Bailie in 1824. He is probably the son of shoemaker William who was born in 1771. He was recorded as a shoemaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same man.
was the shoemaker who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the ‘A. Purdom’ who owned property at about 48 High Street (and next to Robert’s property at 46) on Wood’s 1824 map. One of his children was buried in 1829. Alexander (19th C.) son of joiner Richard, he married Margaret (or Marion) Hunter in Hawick in 1850 and they emigrated to Canada. Their sons Thomas and Alexander established a legal firm of Purdom & Purdom in London, Ontario, and they had 2 other sons, Richard and John. Archibald (1762/3–1849) mason in Newcastle. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (as ‘Purdon’, which must be an error). He was recorded as a head of household in Newcastle in 1835. In the 1841 census he was living in the village with his children Isobel (or Isobel, 1804/5–83) and Gideon. He married Margaret Miller, who died in 1820, aged 44. His son Gideon erected a memorial to him and his wife in Ettrick Cemetery. Arthur (1819/20–63) son of Robert, labourer in Castleton. He was a Sergeant in the 9th Lancers, serving in the Punjab and through the Indian Mutiny. He retired in the position of Quartermaster-sergeant. In 1861 he was living with his parents at Longhaugh Cottage and listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. Charles McLaren, J.P. (1864–1928) son of Thomas. He became a joint agent of the National Bank of Scotland. Crystall (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Cristale Purdoun’ along with ‘John Purdoun’ in a ‘respite’ of 1516 to William Elliot of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots, together with a large number of other men bound to them. David (15th C.) landowner in the Liddesdale area, who held the lands of ‘Dalman’, ‘Bluntwood’ and ‘the Crouke’. In 1476 these lands were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may have been ancestor of the local Purdons. Findlay (1867–1913) son of Town Clerk Thomas. He was a farmer at Tushielaw and at Borthaugh. He was one of the founding members of the Teviotdale Harriers in 1889. He died in Vancouver and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Wauchs. His name was given as ‘Jamy Purdome’. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdons. James (17th C.) proprietor of Milsington recorded in the 1650 list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley. He may have been married to Margaret Nichol and had sons Robert (b.1640) and James (b.1643). The baptism in 1640 was witnessed by Robert Scoon and Adam Laidlaw. In 1652 there is an account with the Buccleuch papers of the losses and damages he had sustained ‘by the English army since Martinmas 1650’; this was probably Cromwell’s army. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Purdoun’ in a ‘respite’ in the Register of the Privy Seal given to Robert of Larristons and a large number of his kin and associates. ‘Cristal Purdoun’ is also listed. John (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving livestock eating someone’s grain. He may well have been the father or grandfather of the schoolmaster. John (1642/3–c.1725) schoolmaster in Hawick in the latter part of the 17th century and early 18th. He took over in 1669, following Mr. Chisholme, who briefly held the position after Walter Martin; he was thus perhaps the third of Hawick’s Parish Schoolmasters. He remained in the position for 54 years and finally retired in 1723 at the age of 80. For most of this time he taught in St. Mary’s Kirk itself, with the graveyard as the school playground. He also served as reader in the kirk, as well as Session Clerk (writing the entries in the parish records in a beautiful hand). He was already referred to as ‘Mr’ in 1673, 1675, 1676 and 1680 when he witnessed baptisms for James Newbie, John Elliot of Brugh, William Moscrop and William Laing. He was apparently injured during the siege of Drumlanrig Tower by the Covenanting army in 1679. He witnessed a baptism for George Young and Janet Purdom (perhaps his sister) in 1680. He was ‘Mr John Purdon’ in 1682 when he witnessed a couple of baptisms (one along with Walter) and in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for mason David Rutherford and in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Hardie. Also in 1689 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for Thomas (who was therefore presumably a close relative). In 1694 he was listed as ‘Mr John Purdim’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly in 1700.
It is possible that he had an influence (in the pro-Covenanter direction) on the young Robert Paterson (‘Old Mortality’). For about the last 12 years he taught in the Parish School at the same time as the Grammar School existed, although he had a diminished salary, and complained that he was ‘deprived both of learning humanity (i.e. Latin) and of ye ordinary salarie (having no salarie alloact to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord’s day, forenoon and afternoon, and being clerk to ye session’). A further complaint was that even apart from the Grammar School, there were others teaching privately in the Town; this came to a head in 1713, when he had the Session proclaim that no one else ‘should in ye future teach farther than ye Psalm-Book’. There were regular entries in the Session Records of small payments to him for teaching poor children. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Simon Mark. In 1722 he was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for surgeon Walter Scott. He is probably the person referred to as ‘Jo Purdom’ in the 1723 Session records. In 1724 he was allowed £6 Scots for the rent of a house for the rest of his life (which proved not to be very long); the entry’s tone suggests that he was still serving as Session Clerk at that time. It may be that the last entry in the 1711–25 book marks the end of his time; certainly the entries in 1726 are in a different hand. He is likely the John (recorded in the baptismal register as ‘Mr’, suggesting a position of importance in the Town) who married Margaret Scott and had children: Walter (b.1678); Janet (b.1680); Margaret (b.1680), who probably died young; James (b.1683); Margaret (again, b.1685), who married tailor Thomas Wilkie in 1720; and Elizabeth (b.1687), who may have married merchant William Chisholm. The 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter (probably the Bailie), suggesting he was a brother or other close relative and the 1685 baptism by Bailie William Laing and ‘Mr’ Walter Gledstains (presumably the Town Clerk). He appears to have married a second time, with children (to ‘Mr’ John, making it clear this was him) including Walter (b.1700), Marion (b.1705) and Anna (b.1709), with no mother named. The witnesses in 1700 were ‘late Bailie’ William Laing and James Falsyde and in 1709 were Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and Walter Elliot, Bailie Depute of the Regality of Hawick.

John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Little and their children included John (b.1760). John (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside along with William (possibly his brother). He was listed as manufacturer at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 (but not listed in 1840). The manufacturing business lasted until about 1837. He was listed along with William as a joint proprietor on the 1837 electoral roll. He may be the John who was married to Joan (or Jean) Douglas and had children Elizabeth, Euphemia, William, John, Agnes, Mary and Joan in the period 1816–32; Joan lived with her children at Damside in 1841.

John (b.1821/2) son of John and Joan Douglas. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on Wilton Path, helped by his mother and his sister Euphemia. He was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. He is listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861, probably near the south end of the east side. In 1857 he donated to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox, found in Wulliestruther Moss.

John Ritchie, O.B.E., J.P. (1862–1935) 4th son of Thomas, he was Depute Town Clerk in 1888, joint Town Clerk with his brother Robert from 1912, and then on his own 1924–36. He was honorary recruiting officer in WWI, Secretary of the War Memorial Committee, as well a Chairman of the War Pensions Committee, for which service he received the O.B.E. in 1920. He was also Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. In his younger days he was a keen member of the Volunteers and interested in sports, particularly golf and hiking. He married Annie Hume Turnbull (1865–1916), daughter of dyer Alexander Turnbull and Janet Armstrong Hume. Their only son was Capt. Thomas Laurence. Margaret (18th C.) recorded in Hwick in 1684 when her unnamed child was baptised. No father’s name was given, and it is unclear if this was an error or the father was deceased or the child born illegitimately. The witnesses were William (probably a close relative) and George Young. Richard (b.1731) tailor and merchant in Hawick, son of Alexander and Marion Scott. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Chisholme. In 1779 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for William (who may have been a relative). He married Jane Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1761); Alexander (b.1762); Marion (b.1764); John (b.1766); Margaret (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1768); Marion (again, b.1772); Thomas (b.1773); Marion (again, b.1774); and Richard (b.1775). The witnesses in 1761 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were John Scott (presumably related to his wife, perhaps his father-in-law) and Thomas William, in 1764 were John Scott (again) and William (probably his brother), in 1766 were John Scott and Walter (probably another relative), in 1772 were James Scott (perhaps related to his wife) and Alexander (probably his father) and in 1773 were John Scott (again) and Thomas Wilkie (again). He was deceased in 1805 when the deaths of his daughters Marion and Agnes are recorded. Richard (1776–1841) joiner of Kirkstile. He was son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was listed on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 his address was given as ‘Kirk Sytlefoot’. His wife was Isobella Elliot (c.1790–1845). His children were: Richard, joiner and lay preacher; John, shoemaker; Alexander, who emigrated to Canada; Jane; and Agnes. One of his children was buried in Hawick in 1829. Richard (1817/8–77) joiner on Kirkstyle, like his father. He was also known as a lay preacher. He was listed as a joiner on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was an early member of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, who gave many teetotalism speeches around the area. He played an active part in the local Good Templar movement in the mid-19th century. He was one of the first Deacons in the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848, was one of the first Trustees and the 2nd Secretary and 2nd Treasurer, and was the leading elder in the 1860s. He married Margaret Elliot in 1848 and their children included: Isabella, who married George Winstrup; Richard; Elizabeth; and Mary. Some of his correspondence and diaries are in the Borders Archive. Robert (d.c.1686) tenant at ‘Cartarburnfoot’ when his will was recorded in 1686. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Grieve and their children were: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1674). Bailie Robert (1777–1862) son of Walter and Agnes Oliver, he was a farmer and resident at 46 High Street. He appears to have been selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia in 1799. He was Cornet in 1799. He was Cornet in 1803, and later became a Magistrate. His father and paternal grandfather had both been Bailie Walter, innkeepers in Hawick and ‘Hilliesland Lairds’, keeping cows in fields up past the Wellogate and selling milk in the town (and a pond beyond Hilliesland was popularly called ‘Purdom’s Pond’ until fairly recent times). When Cornet, he was said to have been thrown from his horse near Hagishaa and taken into a house there to recover. As a result the route out to the Moor was changed to go along the now familiar Nipknowed road. He was the last of the family to hold the orchards and lands near the foot of what became Croft Road. He is shown on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of fields and trees around Mart Street and North Bridge Street, as well as the property at 46 High Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a High Street farmer in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1851 he was listed as a retired farmer. In 1817 in Hobkirk Parish he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith and Mary Scott (‘the Flower of Rankleburn’). Their children included: Walter, farmer; Thomas, Town Clerk; Mary, who married Robert Scott, farmer of Kinninghall and later Falnash; Agnes; Alexander; Robert; and several children who did not long survive. A daughter of his died in Hawick in 1840. A portrait of him exists. At the time of his death was the oldest living Cornet, Burgess and Magistrate. Robert (1792–1861) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was at Bygate in 1841 and Longhaugh in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes (1792–1880), daughter of William Beattie; she died at Hillside, Hawick. Their children included: Robert, who died in infancy; John (b.1817); Arthur (1818/9–63), who was Quartermaster-sergeant in the 9th Lancers; Laidlaw; William (1821/2–99), who died at St. Leonard’s Cottage; Isabella (1823/4–36); Robert (again, b.1831); Agnes (b.1834), who married William Laidlaw; and perhaps a second Isabella. The family are mostly buried in Ettleton Kirkyard. Robert (1846–1924) eldest son of Thomas, he attended Wilton School and went on to become a local solicitor and banker. He was Depute Town Clerk in 1868 and served as Town Clerk 1886–1924. He turned down the chance of carrying the Flag at the Nipknoves in 1891, stating that he felt the official connection between the Town Clerk and the Common Riding had ceased about 50 years earlier. He gave a speech at the first public Colour-Bussing concert of 1894, thus being a predecessor of the Chief Guest. He was instrumental in founding the Golf Club in 1877, placing the notice asking for interested parties to meet in his office. He was the first Secretary and Treasurer of the club and also became Club Captain. In addition he was Secretary of the School of Art and of the Cottage Hospital. He was the main trustee for the estate of James Farrar Blenkhorn. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. In 1873 he married Helen Emma ‘Nellie’ Leman, daughter of a doctor in Ballarat, Victoria (and she died in 1924). Their children were: Thomas (b.c.1874), who moved to New Zealand; Henry Leman (b.1879), who was a traveller with William Watson & Sons; Robert Leman (1884/5–1917), also known as ‘Robin’, who died in WWI; Angus, who worked as a tea planter; Emma Mabel, who married Capt. Walter Francis Cochrane, Galo manufacturer, was mother of the epepidemiologist Archibald (‘Archie’) Leman Cochrane, and secondly married John Locke, Royal Navy engineer; and Elizabeth Neish, who married Rear-Adm. G. Pirie Thomson. He lived at Westwood, which was built for him about 1880. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. Robert Leman ‘Robin’ (1883/4–1917) son of Robert. He served in WWI with the 11th Battalion Royal Scots and was killed at Kemmel Hill. He is buried at Faubourg d’Amiens Cemetery, Arras. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Purdoun in Brumesheilbrig’. He was listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. Thomas (17th C.) ‘litster’ who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the Thomas listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Margaret Bell and their son Walter was born in 1689, with another John (with no mother given) born in 1693. The witnesses in 1689 were Walter and schoolmaster John (who were both surely related). Thomas (1820–86) 2nd son of Robert, he was an accountant and agent for the National Bank of Scotland, and head of a legal business. He was a Councillor from 1854. He served as the last Junior Magistrate of Hawick in 1861 on the old ‘eternal’ council, and was heavily involved in putting the ‘Police Act’ into operation. He was elected to the new council for South High Street Ward that same year and became Senior Magistrate. He was then Town Clerk from 1862 (succeeding from James Wilson) until his death in 1886. He was an Assessor for the county of Roxburghshire. He also acted as secretary for the Border Union Railway committee in their contest with the Caledonian Company for the Hawick to Carlisle line. He was known as a powerful public speaker and was also an occasional lay preacher. He served as one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational Kirk, from 1848. In 1845 he married Elizabeth Wilson Neish (daughter of a Dundee manufacturer), and she died in 1859, aged 38. Their children included: Robert, of Westwood, who succeeded as Town Clerk; Hannah (or Anna) Maria, who died in 1887; William Neish, who died aged 23; Thomas Edie; and Mary Smith (d.1932), who married Algernon Fielden Ramsden of Worksop. He secondly married Hannah (1827–98), daughter of Peter Findlay and brother of John Ritchie Findlay, proprietor of the Scotsman newspaper. Their children were: John Ritchie, also Town Clerk; Charles McLaren, banker; Walter Alexander, electrical engineer of Australia, who married his cousin Mary Smith Purdom; Edward, who died young; Findlay, farmer of Borthaugh, who died in Vancouver; Elizabeth Findlay, who married Dr. George Wade of Melrose and moved to Tasmania; and Arthur Muirhouse, who died in infancy. He died at Croydon and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall, painted by Frank Watson Wood. Thomas Edie (1853–1942) 3rd son of Town Clerk Thomas. He became a doctor and died in Croydon. His children were Robert Ramsden, Ethel Mary, Lillian Frances, William Percy, Elizabeth Winnifred, Arthur, Constance Hannah, Harold Neish, Elsie, Reginalds, Gwendo-line Mary and Irene Margaret. Capt. Thomas Laurence (1892–1927) only son of Town Clerk John Ritchie. He was a squadron leader in the Royal Air Force during WWI and was awarded the Military Cross for having ‘shown the most exceptional gallantry and daring in engaging enemy aircraft’. His only daughter Dorothy Hume married Percival Charles Edward Wilkinson of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Walter (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Marr. Their children included: John (b.1648); William (b.1651); and Thomas (b.1654). He may be the Walter who was elected to the Council in 1648. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptism in 1654 for Robert Turnbull and for John Scott. He could also be the Walter who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1708) recorded as Magistrate in 1668, 1674 and probably later. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. In 1674 he was Bailie when William Hall drew his sword at him and threatened to shoot him. Also in 1674 someone was fined for disobedience to the Magistrates for not giving him his horse to ride to Jedburgh to deal with the Town’s affairs. He was probably the ‘Baylyea Purdome’ (and likely an ex-Bailie at that point) recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was ‘late bayleyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/94. In 1694 he is listed as ‘Bailyea Purdim’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He had lands at the eastern end of the town boundaries. This land had formerly belonged to the Laird of Horsleyhill and was on the eastern boundary of what became Dickson’s nursery-ground (i.e. just west of Oliver Place). He could have been the Walter who was married to Christian Tait and had children: Margaret (b.1671); Walter (b.1673); William (b.1674); Robert (b.1676); Bessie (b.1677); Jane (b.1679); and William (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Scott and Alexander Hislop. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Hardie in 1676. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for John Blake and Andrew Jardine in 1673 and William Taylor and William Swan in 1680. He could also be the Walter who witnessed the baptism of one of schoolmaster John’s children in 1687 (suggesting they were brothers perhaps), another couple in 1682 (one along with John) and one in 1688 (for merchant John Scott). Bailie Walter R. (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was an inn-keeper in Hawick and also held the orchards and lands at the eastern end of Town. He may have been the Walter born to Walter and Christian Tait in 1673. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Robert Tinlin and Christian Purdom (perhaps his sister). In 1708 he was fined for causing a disturbance in St. Mary’s by insisting on sitting in his father’s former seat, although the Council had resolved that the right to sit there was held by the current Bailies; along with Robert Scott (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in the jail. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, heir in Commonside and was probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for weaver Walter Douglas and for candlemaker John Scott. He was probably the Bailie Purdom who witnessed baptisms in 1725 for Thomas Hardie and in 1726 for merchant William Chisholme and Elizabeth Purdom (surely related to him). He was also a Bailie himself, mentioned in the period 1722 to 1737. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptism for Adam Kersel and for Adam Scott in 1731. In 1715 he was given custody of one of the keys to the Charter Chest (and so was presumably on the Council). In 1717 he was already an elder, recorded as one of the people to collect money from the East part of the Town. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and also in that year was appointed to try to collect money for a new Kirk clock. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. In 1722 he was a senior elder involved in appointing the new minister. And in 1722 he was elected as Session Treasurer. In 1727 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of William Ekron and in 1728 witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Scott. He may be the Mr. Purdom of Hawick who married Margaret, 4th daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. His children included: Walter, who probably died unmarried; and Alexander, who married Meiron Scott of Boghall in 1725. He may also have been the Walter listed as a ‘Dragoon’ in 1700 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses carrier Henry Paterson, Henry Orrock and flesher Robert Smith. James (b.1719), born in Hawick with no mother’s name given may also be his child. In 1728 he was ‘late Bailie’ and husband of Janet Scott, when their daughter Jean was baptised: the witnesses were William Oliver and Alexander ‘…’ (possibly Purdom, i.e. his son). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet McVittie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobel Scott in 1716 and their son William was born in 1724. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Walter (b.1724). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1722 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott. Their children included Jean (b.1728). Bailie Walter (1728–1807) eldest son of Alexander. He was a Bailie several times in the period 1780–1800. In 1764, along with Robert Oliver (probably his father-in-law), he was witness for a baptism for Walter Wilson and Catherine Oliver (his sister-in-law). He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for Richard Scott in 1757, with the other witness being Walter Scott of Boghall (related to his mother), and another for Richard (his brother) in 1766. In 1779 he and Richard witnessed a baptism for William (their brother). He is probably the ‘Bailie Purdom’ recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, listed right after shoemaker William. He may be the Walter listed among local men who contributed generously to the war effort (with France) around 1799. In 1763 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was sister of ‘Haunless Wat’s wife, and niece of ‘Auld Cash’ (this probably being the father of the more familiar ‘Auld Cash’). Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1763); Marion Purdom’s

(b.1765); Alexander (b.1767); Robert (b.1770), who died young; Richard (b.1773), joiner; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, again, b.1774), who married Andrew Oliver; Robert (b.1777), farmer; and Walter (b.1779), tobacconist. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1774 were merchant Walter Wison and William . . . . He may be the Walter whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1782. Walter (18th C.) known as ‘The Muckle Laird’. In the baptismal record of 1765 he is ‘Senior’. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms for miller John Scott in 1776 and 1778. In 1758 he married Robina (or ‘Ra-bini’) Scott, who was related to the local family of millers, probably the daughter of miller James Scott born in 1735. Their children included: Janet (b.1759); Walter (b.1760); James (b.1761); Thomas (b.1763); James (again, b.1765); Robert (b.1765, twin of James); Margaret (b.1767); Jane (b.1769); and Elizabeth (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1759 and 1760 baptisms were miller James Scott (probably his wife’s father) and merchant Thomas Wilkie (whose wife was a Purdom). The witnesses in 1765 were merchant Thomas Wilkie and wright James Scott. It is possible that he was the son of Walter and Janet Elliot born in Hawick in 1724. Walter (b.1779) younger son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was a tobacconist at 1 High Street and also became a Bailie himself. He is listed as a tobacconist on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living at 46 High Street in 1841 (with his brother Robert’s family). He died unmarried. Walter (b.1818) eldest son of Robert. He was a farmer at Easter Wooden, Eckford. In 1844 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter John Grieve; she died in 1847. In 1850 he secondly married Isabella Turnbull (b.1830) from Jedburgh. Their children were: Robert (b.1852), spectacle-maker of Sutton Coldfield; James; Agnes; Mary Smith, who married her cousin Walter Alexander; Walter; and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1860). One of his daughters became Mrs. Dunn. Walter (19th C.) farmer at Orniston. He was one of the first Trustees of St. George’s Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jean Stewart and their children included: Janet (b.1653); and John (b.1655). He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for William Ruecastle in 1671 and for Margaret (perhaps his daughter) in 1684. He could be the William who was charged in 1685 with ‘breach of waird and several abuses committ agt. the baylyea’.

William mentioned in the Burgh Records in 1686 when 2 new marchers of the boundaries within the town were appointed; he was stated to have been a former marcher, along with John Hardie and William Paisley. He witnessed a baptism for Alexander Young and Marion Stewart (probably a relative of his wife) in 1682; the other witness was George Young (married to Janet Purdom, who may thus have been his son-in-law), and probably another for Andrew Cook. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Stewart (perhaps related to his wife) and another for a Mr. Reid. In 1684 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Stavert and John Tinlin. William (1741–1818) son of Alexander and Marion Scott. He was a shoemaker recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the William who in 1778 witnessed a baptism for George Deans, junior. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, 1746–1818), daughter of Alexander Donald. Their children included: Agnes (b.1769); Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1774); Walter (b.1776); Marion (b.1779); and Betty (b.1782). The witnesses in 1779 were Walter and Richard (probably his brothers). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for merchant Richard (probably his brother) in 1764. William (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside, along with John. Their business lasted until about 1837, when it was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the elector called Purdom who was said to have died in consequence of the injuries he received when attacked at the 1835 election in Hawick. William (1821/2–99) son of Robert, who was a labourer in Castleton Parish. He married Kitty Elliot (1819–99) and they had a daughter, Mary Murray. He, his wife and daughter Mary all died at St. Leonard’s Cottage and are marked on a gravestone in Ettleton Kirkyard (formerly spelled ‘Purdem’, ‘Purdim’, ‘Purdome’, ‘Purholm’, ‘Purdholme’ and other variants).

Purves (pur-vis) n. James (1798/9–1878) cabinet-maker of Hawick, born in Dalkeith. He was listed as a joiner on the Mid Row in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Janet Cunningham, who died in 1875, aged 79. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan (which could be the same location). His children included Eliza (who married William Elliot), Margaret, Jenimna, James and Marion. Johnstone (19th C.) shopkeeper on the Front Row, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as witness to the bond of assurance for the Turnbulls in 1595. He is referred to as ‘Rauff Purces in Minto'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Helen married William, son of carrier John Gledstains. William (16th C.) apothecary mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. William 'Blinnd Wullie' (1752–1832) son of John and Margaret, he was born in Newcastle and was blind from birth. He became known as an itinerant singer and fiddler, his favourite song being ‘Buy Broom Busoms’, which he claimed to have written (but probably just adapted). His characteristic cry of thanks was ‘God blish the king – God blish the King; never sheed him – never sheed him; poor shoul – poor shoul!’ Although based in Newcastle he travelled widely, and was a regular visitor at the Fleece Inn in Hawick. He presented the landlord there, George Hunter, with a snuff box ‘in deep appreciation of his friendship'. William ‘Billy’ (1784–1853) from Auchendinny in Midlothian, he grew up in Newcastle and was once the most famous clown and showman in the Borders. He regularly toured around the south of Scotland and north of England, putting on all kinds of shows, including conjouring, ventrilooquism, freak-shows, small circuses and plays. He acted, sang local ballads, played the bagpipes, danced and told jokes. In Hawick he stayed at the Fleece Inn, where he performed in the ballroom for 3 nights and moved into the larger Town Hall for another 3 nights; the landlord of the Fleece Inn, George Hunter, waived his bill, and Purves purchased a silver-mounted snuff-box for him. On another occasion he performed in a theatre in Hawick where Albert Mills was later built. He was buried in Hartlepool. Dr. William Brown (1799–1852) from Edinburgh, he married Margaret (1798–1855), daughter of John Laidlaw, who was from Weens. He contracted a disease related to his work, which killed both him and his wife. Their children were: John, who died young; Alexander, W.S., who was a lawyer in Edinburgh and purchased an estate in Peeblesshire; and Dr. William Laidlaw (1842–1917), daughter of John Laidlaw, who was from Weens. He contracted a disease related to his work, which killed both him and his wife. Their children were: John, who died young; Alexander, W.S., who was a lawyer in Edinburgh and purchased an estate in Peeblesshire; and Dr. William Laidlaw (1842–1917), who was an ear surgeon and golfing pioneer. After his death, his 2 sons were raised by their maiden aunts Jane and Euphemia Laidlaw. William (1814/5–1902) born in Melrose, he was a whip-maker on the High Street. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835, when he was at Duns; by 1840 he was listed living in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and in Slater's 1852 directory. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841 (perhaps near No. 5), and around 12-14 in 1851, when he was employing 4 men. In 1861 he was at 1 High Street, listed as a whipmaker, grocer and fruiterer. He was described as 'of a simple, happy disposition naturally'. He is said to have given up most of his activities to pursue a spiritual calling, including singing religious songs. He married Christian Douglas, who died in 1875, aged 62. Their children included Isabella Scott, who married James Gowans and an unnamed son who died in 1840.

Sir William, C.B.E., D.S.O. (1931–) son of a tenant farmer, he was born in Kelso, but from 1932–42 the family lived in Bedrule, where his mother was a teacher. He worked as a banker, working largely in the far east, becoming Chairman and C.E.O. of The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. On returning to the U.K. he was involved in overseeing the transition of Hong Kong to Chinese control. He was on the committee of the Scottish Rugby Union, became a Trustee of the National Museums of Scotland and was Vice President of the National Trust for Scotland. He (also 'Purvis').

Purvinen (pur-vi-nin) n. former name for lands in southern Liddesdale, perhaps where Heugh Head is marked on modern maps, on the south side of the Tinnis Burn. In the rental roll of 1541 it is 'Purvenen', when leased, along with Whisgills and 'Vtnomound', to Bartholomew and Ninian Armstrong. In 1634 the 40-shilling lands of 'Purvenen' were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. In 1642 John of Gervald (2nd son of Sir William of Cavers) was granted lands of Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greena) and 'Purvinen' in Liddesdale 'in fee', with his father having the 'liferent'. John Forester of Stane-garthside inherited the lands of 'Greina, Purviven and Burnenmouth' from his uncle Nicholas in 1693 (it is 'Peruieen' on Blaeu's c.1654 map; the origin or meaning of the name are obscure).

Push (push) v. to push – 'Yea day at least he'll miss the jostle, The fecht and push' [RH], pushes – 'If hei push his legs weel in them: : : : miss the jostle, The fecht and push' [JSB] (note pronunciation with u rather than oo).

Puslinch Lake (poos-lin-læk) n. lake near the township of Puslinch, between Cambridge and Guelph in Ontario, Canada. It was the location for the first Guelph/Galt area celebration of Hawick Common Riding. This was organised by Thomas Scott (Cornet in 1887, after his return to Hawick) and other exiles in the area in 1883. William Armstrong, tweed Merchant from Bridge Street was the first Cornet, with Thomas Scott the first general secretary. The event became an annual one, but it is unclear how long it lasted.

Pyat Knowe (pl-i’-now) n. hill to the south-east of Dod, with the Pyatknowe Sike rising on it. There was formerly a farmstead here, where John Henderson was living in 1787. A shelf on the north side contains the remains of a fairly well-defined settlement, about 75 m by 45 m. The interior contains 2 courts, as well as 2 circular depressions, although these are probably quarry pits. There is also a second probable settlement nearer to the summit, this being oval in shape, about 65 m by 40 m, with an entrance at the west side. The Catrail crosses to the south of the hill, connecting to Barry Sike (it is ‘Pyetknow’ in 1787).

Pyatknowe Sike (pl-i’-now-sik) n. small stream that joins the Dod Burn near the Pyat Sike Plantation, south-east of the farmstead of Dod. There are several linear earthworks in the area, crossing part of White Hill to the north-east. Although it has been suggested that some of these may be connected with the Catrail, or with the nearby fort and settlement, there is no evidence for these claims. The fort lies to the north of where the Sike meets the Dod Burn. It measures about 60 m by 45 m and is almost entirely covered by a later settlement. To the south of the Sike, on Pyat Knowe are the remains of 2 more settlements.

the Pyat’s Nest (thu-pl-its-nest) n. former name for Pyat Knowe, the hill south-west of Penchrise Pen, crossed by the Catrail, and containing the remains of a settlement (it is ‘the Pyot’s Nest’ in 1880).

Quakers (kwā-kurz) n. religious group, more properly known as the Society of Friends, which reached its peak of membership in the late 17th century. It was influential in Britain in the 18th and 19th centuries through the adherence of many manufacturing families. In Hawick interest began when William Wilson visited a meeting in Glasgow in August 1797, leading to his membership in 1802, followed by many in the Wilson and Watson families. There were also significant visits by prominent Friends, such as prison reformer Elizabeth Fry, with at least 20 Public Meetings being held in Hawick. The group met in William Wilson’s house from 1802 until a Meeting house was built on Buccleuch Street from 1821, with the first Meeting there in 1823. This was a plain building (a sketch of which exists), set back from the street, to the west of the Roman Catholic Chapel. Its location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, and it is listed among places of worship in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1839 the meeting house was described as being attended by only 2 families. The building ceased to be used for this purpose in 1844, after which it was used as a temporary hospital for the 1849 cholera epidemic and as James Murray’s ‘Hawick Academy’. It was demolished in 1866. In an ecclesiastical survey of Scotland in 1815 there were only 5 meeting places in the country, Glasgow, Hawick, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Kinmuck – ‘...Frae a man that is nae Quaker’ [AB].

Quaker’s Close (kwā-kurz-klōs) n. mid-19th century popular name for the close at 13 High Street, once the residence of manufacturer William Wilson, who was a Quaker. Also known as Wilson’s Close, it was a private passageway that extended much of the way down to the river.

Quarrelhaa

Quarrelhaa (kwa-rul-haw) n. name for 2 former cottages on the edge of the Harwood-on-Teviot lands, near the stream separating the farm from Chapelhill. They had already disappeared by the mid-19th century, although tailor John Elliot and family is still recorded there in 1841 and 1851. It is said that they were built to check on encroachments of livestock between the farms, and hence the name (although there is also a disused quarry nearby).

Quarry (kwa-ree) n. Andrew (18th C.) from Bowden Parish, in 1787 he married Agnes Hood, who was from Hawick Parish. They had at least 3 children in Bowden.

Quarry Rig (kwa-ree-rig) n. ridge just to the south of the upper part of the Ale Water, being the north-east spur of Deep Slack. A linear earthwork here extended for about 400 m, joining the head of the Hoscote Burn with the Ale Water. Although suggested (by Lynn) to be part of the Catrail, it is probably of more recent and less significant origin. It has now been obliterated by forestry.

quarry-skeelie (kwa-ree-skee-lee) n., arch. a slate-pencil composed of a piece of soft stone of the sort found in quarries.

quarter (kwar'-ur) n., arch. fourth part of a unit of volume or weight – ’For five quarters of cheese £3, 16s.’ [BR1638], ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEx1921], fourth part of land, perhaps referring locally to a quarter of a ‘particate’ – ‘... one Walter Paterson, laird of Burnflat, and tenant of a quarter land in Hawick ...’ [C&L1767].

quarter days (kwar'-ur-diaz) n. four days formerly regarded as ending a quarter of the year. This was when rents and other payments became due. In Scotland they were traditionally Candlemas, Whitsunday, Lammas and Martinmas.

quarter-maister (kwar'-ur-mais-tur) n. a quarter-master, an officer in an incorporated trade, responsible for collecting dues and looking after business affairs. In Hawick this was specifically the name given to the 2 representatives of the 5 (later 7) incorporated trades. They were added to the Town Council in 1739 and remained on it until the council was reorganised in 1861. In 1749 the Council decreed that they should be elected annually before Michaelmas. In 1781 it was formalised that they should be elected on the day before (i.e. Thursday) the election of the Bailies in October. They were also known as ‘deacons of trade’ or just ‘deacons’ – ‘The quarter-masters of the weaver trade complain upon two of their craft, that, ... appealed against a fine, for disobedience to the trade, of four groats to the bailies, and eight pence to the quarter-masters ...’ [JW1676], ‘Complaines John Swan and Robert Tinline the two quartermasters of the trade of weavers within the toune for themselves and in name and behalf of the corporation thereof’ [PR1716].

Quartersides (kwar'-ur-sidz) n. former name for a small piece of land in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 it was valued at £50, along with Ryechester, when owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. It was recorded in the county valuation of 1788 being owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 having been purchased by Sir John Buchanan Riddell.

Queen’s Drive

Queen’s Drive (kweenz-driv) n. long U-shaped road, part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the visit by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in 1947. It was apparently originally to be called ‘Elizabeth Drive’.

the Queen’s Heid (thu-kweenz-heed) n. the Queen’s Head, a pub at the corner of the High Street and the Cross Wynd, address 32 High Street. The original building exists on a photograph from 1868. The building was rebuilt in 1886, when the proprietor was Robert Young and a projecting bowed corner was added later. It can also be seen in a photograph of 1903. Rugby trophies won by the Wanderers are on display here. The Labour Party used to meet in the upstairs rooms, and this is where Hawick Royal Albert was formed in 1946. The building is listed grade B.

the Queen’s Mire (thu-kweenz-mir) n. a boggy area between the Priesthaugh and Braedlie Burns, so called because of Mary Queen of Scots 40 mile ride via there from Jedburgh to Hermitage to visit Bothwell. For many generations afterwards people could point out the spot where her horse was said to have become stuck. She is also supposed to have lost her pocket watch on the ride, this being found about 250 years later by a shepherd. Based on Blueau’s map of 1654 (itself based on decades earlier manuscripts) it may have formerly been called ‘Mosspatrick’.

queer (kweer) adj., arch. entertaining, amusing, humorous – ‘…They get some queer story frae Eppy M’Gee [JT], very great, considerable, particularly in the phrase ‘queer lot’ – ‘There must be a queer lot o’ money in th’ world yet – notwithstanding short time and bad trade’ [HEX1921].

queer (kweer) n., arch. choir, the part of a church east of the nave, particularly referring to part of a pre-Reformation building. The gallery in St. Mary’s has this name, this being the area with bench seating, some of which was rented annually to the highest bidder – ‘Acompt of the money requisite for helping and pointing the kirk and queer of Hawick’ [PR1713], ‘…had possessed the place near to John Elliot’s seat in the queer …’ [PR1715], ‘For avoiding confusion, the communicants are to go out at the Queer door’ [PR1718] (also spelled ‘queir’, ‘quire’, etc.; in the pre-1763 Hawick Kirk this part was separated by the chancel arch).

Quin (kwin) n. Roger (1850–1925) Border poet and wanderer, described as ‘the homeless poet’. His grandfather was described as a travelling tinker from Ireland, who married an aunt of Esther Faa-Blyths, Queen of the Gypsies. It is said that as a boy he was allowed to hold the skull of Robert Burns when he was reintered along with his eldest son. He wrote ‘Borderland and Other Poems’ (1910, 1933) and ‘Midnight in Yarrow and Other Poems’ (1918). A plaque near Galashiels reads ‘Here Roger Quin author of the Borderland gazed on Scotland’s Eden’, and there is a street in that town named after him.

Quinn (kwin) n. Edward ‘Eddie’ (1898–1982) well-known local accordion player, born in Berwickshire, he worked as a farm labourer at Carterhaugh for much of his life and retired to Eckford. He made two 78 r.p.m. recordings, released in 1929 and 1930. ‘Quinn’s Band’ was popular at dance venues throughout the Borders in the 1930s and 1940s.

the Quins (thu-kwinz, -kwunz) n. Hawick Harlequins, a ‘junior’ rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. Their clubrooms are at 6 Baker Street and their matches are played at Wilton Lodge Park. Their strip consists of a black, blue and gold hooped shirt and black socks. The name originally derived from the motley collection of shirts that they wore. They were the first local rugby team to play in Wales, in 1950. One of their highlight was playing in the Scottish Bowl final at Murrayfield in 2002. The unofficial club theme song is ‘The Mighty Quin(s)’. ‘The first 50 years: Hawick Harlequins R.F.C.’ was written by G.W. Fraser.
the Quintinshill Rail Disaster

the Quintinshill Rail Disaster (thu-kwi-n'zin-hil-rål-dee-zaw-stur) n. tragedy of May 1915 on the Caledonian line, just north of Gretna Green. A packed troop train ran into a stationary local train, and an express ran into the wreckage. A total of 227 people were killed, making it Britain’s worst ever rail disaster. At least 3 men with a Hawick connection died.

quoad sacra (kwō-ad-sak-ru) n. ecclesiastical term for a church which is not the main parish church, but used for the convenience of some of the parishioners. This was the term applied to St. Mary’s after the Old Parish was built.

the Quoitin Club (thu-kwoi’-in-klub) n. the Buccleuch Quoiting Club, a sporting organisation, with the game consisting of metal hoops or horseshoes being thrown at a metal stake. It was popular in the late 19th century, with pitches on Buccleuch Street, adjacent to the Buccleuch Bowling Club green. The club fell apart around WWII through lack of support, and the pitches were converted into the Henderson Garden. There was also another Club in the Mansfield area for a while, and in addition the game was played in Denholm.

the Quoitin Haugh (thu-kwoi’-in-hawf) n. popular name for the grassy banks of the Teviot between the Teviot Bridge and old suspension bridge in Denholm. Quoits were played here during the latter part of the 19th century until WWI. The field was also used for other sporting events, and also for church services in the summer. At the Denhom Ride-out the horses are usually held there.

quoits (kwoits) n., pl. game in which curved iron projectiles are thrown at a stake in the ground in order to try to encircle it, also known as ‘horseshoes’. The game was popular in Hawick from the late 19th century until the 1930s, with a pitch on Buccleuch Street. There was also an area in Denholm used for the same purpose and a field next to Roberton Kirk used in the early 20th century.

quot (kwot) n., arch. the portion of a dead person’s estate payable for confirmation of the testament – ‘To be deuidit in thrie pairtis the deidis pairt is, iiijs lxv iiijs. Quharof the quot is, xxiiij £ vs.’ [SB1574].

quut (kwu’) v. to quit, leave, pp. quitted, quit, left (sometimes written ‘quwut’; cf. the alternative past tense quot and the past participle forms quitten and quuten).

the Rabble (thu-raw-bul) n. affectionate name for the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myrselaw-green that was used for weekend dancing during the 1930s and 1940s, patronised mainly by Westenders after the pubs closed.

the Rabble Meetin (thu-raw-bul-mee-tin) n. name used to refer to the public meeting of 1887 which elected the new Common Riding Ceremonial Committee.

the Race Ball (räs-bal) n. former name for the Ball, used until the 1880s, with the earlier name being the ‘Cornet’s Dance’.

the Race Committee (thu-räs-ko-mi’-ee) n. Committee responsible for organising the Common Riding race meetings, formed probably in the early 19th century, and originally having more influence than the Ceremonial Committee (which was only formally established in 1887). In 1865

they took over from the Cornet the task of collecting race funds, which in 1883 was replaced by an entrance charge for the Muir. The Provost usually served as the President, with the Secretary also being Clerk of the Course. In 1908 it became a sub-committee of the main Common Riding Committee.

the Race Course (\textit{thu-rās-kōrs}) \textit{n.} popular name for the horse-racing track at St. Leonard's Park.

Race Course Park (\textit{rās-kōrs-pawrk}) \textit{n.} name for a field to the north of St. Leonard's Park racecourse, between the enclosures known as 'Bailie's Hill' and 'Nipknowes Field'.

the Racerigg (\textit{thu-rās-rig}) \textit{n.} former name, used in the 18th century, for part of the Common. The precise location is unknown, but it may have been where races were once held near Pilmuir Rig. It was stated in 1767 that it marked the southern end of the region of the Common where the Town Herd would typically use for the Hawick livestock (also written 'Racerg')

the Races (\textit{thu-rā-seez}) \textit{n.} a race meeting has long been associated with the Common Riding, now being an intrinsic part of the Friday and Saturday festivities. The first explicit record of the races is in 1723, but they were probably happening much earlier. There were prizes from early times, some provided by the Town, e.g. in 1723 a 'saddle exposed to be run for in May last' is described, in 1725 the Council gave £2 'for this year's plate' and in 1727 'the cup for the race' is recorded. Early races may have been held at the Deidhaugh, but the first known location was at the Vertish, ending in 1819. For the next two years they were on a field behind the Vertish Hill, then moved to Pilmuir Rig in 1822 and remained there until 1853. These were the Friday morning races, which had no accompanying family entertainments. In the early 19th century they started at 11 a.m., with the crowds returning to Hawick for dinner (early in those days), before the afternoon races at the Haugh, which started at 5 p.m. They took place, along with the afternoon races and games, on the Common Haugh itself in 1854. The afternoon's events at the Haugh started with a 3-lap race by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. Sports and other amusements also used to continue on the Haugh on the Saturday. Both the Upper and Under Houghs were used, with movable fences between them. In 1854 the Haugh was used for the last time (in the afternoon only), and the new race-course at St. Leonard's used for the first time (in the morning only). From 1855 all the races have been held at St. Leonard's, with Saturday races started in 1868. In 1856 there was a steeplechase for the first time. There were also foot races held at the Moor until 1863. In the latter part of the 19th century the Saturday was considered to be 'ladies day' (after the Ascot tradition), with the women of the town dressing up in their finery. Until 1865 most of the funds for the races and the games were collected by the Cornet and the Right-Hand man. Thereafter official collectors were appointed, with admission to the Moor introduced in 1883, and racecards first issued in 1889. The Races were last held under Jockey Club rules in 1876, and with the disbanding of the British Racing Club in 1895, the Races were then held under local rules. The Races were first filmed in 1900.

rack (\textit{rawk}) \textit{n.}, arch. a stretch, a shallow wide ford, especially where the person crossing has to take a slanting course – 'They led him thro' the Liddel-rack, And also thro' the Carlisle sands' [T], 'Rack. A very shallow ford, of considerable breadth, Teviotdale' [JoJ], a cart-wheel rut, capacity for expansion, elasticity, \textit{v.}, \textit{arch.} to wrench, sprain, overstrain – 'Hae mercy, Sirs, your wit – don't rack it. rack see wrack Rackesse (\textit{ra-kes}) \textit{n.} Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Adame Rakkis in Thorleshopte' in 1611 when he was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He may have been related to the Armstrongs nicknamed 'Rakkes' (and spelling variants) at about the same time. George 'Geordie of the Hillhouse' (17th C.) thief from Liddesdale who is recorded in the 17th century. In about 1645 he, along with Lancie Armstrong of Catheigh and others, stole about 80 cows and oxen from England, and on the way back to Liddesdale returned the few animals belonging to a poor English minister, after he agreed to take snuff with them. It is unclear if his surname is a mis-transcription of a more familiar name.

Robert ‘Hobbie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1633 as ‘Hobby Rackes’. His shepherd Archie Armstrong ‘called Hollas, who duelltt in the Mearburnheid’ was captured for having a stolen cow in his possession (it is unclear if this corresponds to a more familiar surname).

rakkit (raw-kee, -ki’) pp., adj., arch. wrenched, sprained, twisted – ‘Or ease their bosoms rakkit sair, Wi’ disappointment ill to bear’[RDW], ‘A’ve gaen an rackeet masul wui raxin owre fer owre’[ECS].

rack-peon (rawk-peon) n., arch. a rack-stick, pin for tightening a rope by twisting.

dad (rawd) adj., arch. afraid, apprehensive – ‘I’se raad he’ll toorfel’ (said at Newcastleton, c.1860)’[GW], ‘...E’en let him pop, I’m little rad I founder, Though excommunication grace the ban’[JoHa], ‘In lith an’ limb we’re soon’ an’ hale, Sae troth we’re little ra’d o’ smoorin’’[JoHa] (also written ‘raad’).

Rad (rawd) n., arch. popular term for a Radical in the early-to-mid 19th century – ‘One of the ‘Rads’ told the writer that once a tail came off in his hands ...’[RM].

Radcliffe (rawd-kliif) n. Sir Cuthbert of Dilston (d.1545) son of Sir Edward. He was Sheriff of Cumberland, like his father. He also served as Deputy Warden of the English Middle Marches 1540–3 and Captain of Berwick 1544–5. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Haddon Rig in 1542. He was described as ‘a wise man well learned and well minded to justice but no adventurer to the field’. He married Margaret, daughter of Lord Clifford and was succeeded by his son Sir George. Sir John (c.1480–1527) from Crosthwaite in Cumbria. He was an English commander of part of the force that raided the Borders under Lord Dacre in 1513. His detachment of 500 men buried ‘the town of Dyker’, which was probably Dykeraw in Southdean Parish, explicitly ‘thei layed corne and straw to the dore and burnit it both rofe and flore and so smoked them out’. They then burned Southdean and Lustruther towns, taking prisoners and goods.

Thomas 3rd Earl of Sussex (c.1525–1583) also Viscount Fitzwalter and Lord of Egremont and Burnell. He was Lord Deputy of Ireland and became Lord Chamberlain under Elizabeth. His mother was Elizabeth Howard, sister of the Surrey who fought at Flodden. He was President of the ‘Council in the North’ 1568–72, suppressing a revolt of northern English earls. He then led part of the English force that invaded across the Border in 1570, along with Lord Hunsdon. They were responsible for the razing of many towns and buildings, including Hawick on April 18th and Branxholme the following day, this requiring gunpowder. Apparently (according to Stowe’s Chronicle) the Hawick people unchached their houses, burned it in the streets and fled, leaving nothing for the English army. There is a tradition (recounted by Robert Wilson) that the townspeople attacked enemy patrols into the night, but there is no evidence to support this. His force also destroyed the Kerr strongholds of Ferniehirst and Crailing, while simultaneously Scrope’s men laid waste to the Scottish West March. As many as 300 villages and about 50 towers were destroyed.

rade (räd) pp., arch. rode – ‘They rade the proper place about: But the laid he was the wiser man, For he had left nae gear without’[CPM], ‘An’ after prigging doon its price, A bargain forthwith made; Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’[FL], ‘...an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid’[ECS], ‘We rade a’ nicht i’ the dark, And swam the Eden in flude ...’[TK], ‘The day they rade the mairches The wather was its best ...’[WL] (also written ‘raed’ and ‘raid’; the past participle is ‘ridden’ as in English).

radeness (räd-nis) n., poet. fear, fright – ‘An’ he saith untill them, Why are ye fu’ o’ radniss, O ye o’ little faith?’[HSR].

rag (raj) n. a crazy or irrational person, rage adj. crazy, wild, mad, furious, randy (probably from Romany).

raggy (ra-jee) adj. Randy, sexually aroused, lewd.

radio (räd-dee-ō) n. a new-fangled invention whereby sounds carried by modulated electromagnetic waves can be transmitted over a wide area and received in people’s homes. It arrived properly in Hawick in the 1930s, and Reid’s Relay helped Teries improve their reception. The 1934 Colour Bussing was broadcast by the BBC, and selected items from the 1937 Common Riding were also recorded and broadcast later. Local radio programming arrived in the 1980s.

Radio Borders (räd-dee-ō-bör-durz) n. local independent radio station, operating out of Tweedbank, set up in 1989.
Radio Tweed (rā-dee-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. set up in 1985 to serve Hawick Cottage Hospital, it ran until 1989.

Radio Roxburgh (rā-dee-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. part of BBC radio Scotland, with a small amount of local programming at certain times of day. It began operating in 1983.

Radolphus (raw-dol-fis) n. (11th/12th C.) Rector of Hawick church who witnessed a charter of Laurence Avenel in the period 1260–68 (may be spelled ‘Rodolphus’ or written ‘Radulph’; the modern version is ‘Ralph’).

rae (rå n., poet. a roe deer – ‘My beloefet is like ane rae or ane yung hart...’ [HSR]).

Rae (rå n. Agnes (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is recorded as ‘Ree’. Agnes (d.1795) recorded as a midwife in the Hawick register of deaths. She could also be the person recorded when ‘Agness Rea’s Mother’ died in 1781. Andrew (16th C.) rented part of Standhill to John Turnbull of Knowe in 1659. This name is possibly an error for ‘Ker’. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Rigg (i.e. Caerlenrig) in 1730 when his son William was baptised. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servitor to Harwood’ when his daughter Jean was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who might be his included ‘Nanse’ (b.1741), Thomas (b.1744) and Helen (b.1746). Davie (1972–) professional sprinter. He moved to Hawick at about the age of 8 and became involved with the Teviotdale Harriers, but switched to sprinting, becoming part of the Billie Edgar school and later training with Alan Scott. He won the British Youth Sprint Championships in 1989 and 1990 and in 1999 won the British 90 m, 100 m, 110 m and 200 m championships. He also won 3 Hawick Games sprints. He took up coaching in 2008.

Gilbert (18th/19th C.) carter at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Hector (c.1683–1639) received his degree from Edinburgh University in 1603 and became minister at Nisbet in 1608. He was translated to Hownam in 1609 and signed the National Covenant in 1638, probably in Hawick. Hugh (14th C.) cleric connected with Cavers Parish in 1387 (and written ‘Raa’). In 1389 Henry Wardlaw was given the vicarage of Cavers, void after he obtained the church of Stractaven. He was also referred to as subdean of Glasgow. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Branxholme, signed in Edinbrugh in 1500. His name was recorded as ‘Jacobob Raa’. Probably the same ‘Jacobus ra’ was recorded in 1502 when he was presented by the Lord of Buccleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his ‘suitor’ for the lands of Eckford. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Jacobob Raa eius servuo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Bessie (b.1716); Maddie (b.1719); James (b.1721); and Helen (b.1725). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); and James (b.1777), baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He could be the James, son of Walter and Margaret Gardener, baptised in Hawick in 1743. It is also possible that his children (with no mother’s name given): Robert (b.1768), baptised in Cavers; Elizabeth (b.1769), baptised in Bedrule; John (b.1771), baptised in Bedrule; Jean (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1774), baptised in Bedrule; and Jean (again, b.1779), baptised in Cavers. The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Walter Rae (perhaps his father). James (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the James, son of William and Rachel Scott who was born in Hawick in 1764. His son William (a stockingmaker) died in 1838. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Crozier in 1790 and their children included: Janet (b.1790); Rachel (b.1795); Margaret (b.1797); John (b.1800); and William (b.1802). The witnesses in 1790 were shoemaker Robert Oliver, junior, and William Park. He could be the James who (along with Robert Oliver) in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Elder. James (b.1777/8) born in Maxton Parish, he was a labourer in Cavers Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Westside with his wife Betty Henry and children Margaret (b.1834/5) and Agnes (b.1837/8). In 1847 the Kirk Session agreed to give him and... his wife 4 shillings per week on the condition that they gave up their right to their house (which had belonged to his father-in-law). that James (20th C.) plumber in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1923. This year is often referred to as the ‘Plumber’s Year’ because of the torrential rain, which blew away the shelter at St. Leonard’s. Janet ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ (d. 1758) elderly wife of the owner of the Salt Hall, who cut her throat in the eastern attic of the Salt Hall in 1758 (or perhaps 68), causing uproar when she was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. With the minister away, the authorites allowed the burial there, against some popular feeling. On the following morning the coffin fell upon her husband when he opened the Saut Haa door. the coffin was reburied, but appeared again the next day. It was then temporarily buried at the most northerly point of Wilton Common, until the minister returned and insisted on burial back in the churchyard. Her final burial place was in the area reserved for unchristened babies in the churchyard. There are similarities with the story of Tibbie Tamson in Selkirk. Jean (1731/2–1838) resident of Dellowraine, who reached the age of 106. During ‘the forty-five’ she helped at Branxholme to hide cattle and household goods from the Highlanders. She was a great-great-grandmother, and there were 5 generations alive at once. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their son Walter was baptised in 1654. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as ‘creepie in ye toun’ in a baptismal record. He was also described in 1723 as ‘creepie in this toun’ when money was given for a coffin for his child. He married Helen ‘Furgrie’ and their children included: Elizabeth (b. 1708); Helen (b. 1711); and Jean (b. 1714). The witnesses in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and James Falsyde and in 1714 were ‘customer’ Andrew Scott and ‘officer’ Alexander Young. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Lymiecleuch in 1731 when his son Thomas was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Rober-tonton Parish. He was in Bothwickbrae Parkhead in 1780. His children included Anna (b. 1776) and William (b. 1780). He was surely related to Thomas, who lived in the same place. John ‘Jock’ (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. A story is told of Rev. Charters of Wilton finding him up his fruit tree – ‘What are you doing there, John?’ ‘Naething ava’, sir’. ‘Strange man, John, all that trouble for nothing’ [BP]. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (b.c. 1780) carter in Hawick. He was at the Kirkwynd in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children William, James, Douglas, John, Walter and Isabell. He probably lived at 6 Kirk Wynd. Walter, a shoemaker who lived next door, was probably his brother. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a poulterer on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same John is a ‘salt and egg dealer’ at the Kirkgate in 1837. John (b. 1803/4) born in Cavers Parish, he was a stockling needle maker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the Howgate in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived on the Kirkwynd in 1841, with his wife Catherine, on the Mid Raw in 1851 and was boarding on O’Connell Street in 1861. His wife was daughter of Arthur Balbirnie, writer of ‘The Auld Sang’. He had a daughter who died in 1838. John (b. 1805/6) carpenter and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He was on the Crescent in 1841, in the Village in 1851 and on Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Elizabeth Miller in Wilton in 1832 and their children included Thomas, John, Mary N., William N. and Walter. John (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as an earthenware dealer on the High Street. There is a separate listing for a High Street greengrocer of the same name. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (19th C.) one of 5 men tried for rioting and assault at the 1837 election in Hawick. He was found guilty and ‘put to the horn’. John (b. 1825/6) wool spinner in Hawick, born in Wilton. In 1861 he was living at 11 Back Row. He married Elizabeth Ann Ekron in 1847 and their children included: John (b.c. 1847); Margaret (b.c. 1848); Jemima (b.c. 1854); Mary (b. 1856); Helen (b. 1858); James (b. 1860); and Janet (b. 1865). John (1897/8–1975) born in Hawick, he was a plumber. He was Cornet in 1923 and later lived at Towerburn. His year was known as one of the wettest ever, with jokes made about his occupation. He married his Cornet’s Lass Isabella ‘Bella’ Neish Elder (who died in 1989, aged 87). John ‘Jock’ (20th C.) pipe major of the Scout Band in the years 1960–62. He once had the honour of being Solo Piper at the Edin-burgh Tattoo. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Mr. ?? (18th C.) owner of a large tract of land stretching between where Havelock Street and Dovecote Street now are. The land was ultimately divided, part becoming Dovemount, and being the site of the well that supplied much of Wilton for more than a century. Robert (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1790) gardener at Dovemount. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John and Isabella.

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1639). Thomas (17th/18th C.) gardener at Dovemount. He was also listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41.

Robert (b.c.1790) gardener at Dovemount. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and children included James, John and Isabella. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1639). Thomas (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Slaidhills. His son Alexander was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1707. He could be the Thomas whose daughter Margaret married James, son of Walter Scott in Hawick in 1717. Thomas (18th C.) resident at Milinston. He was probably the Thomas at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1774 when his son Thomas was baptised. It seems likely that these were all his children (baptised in Roberton Parish, with no mother’s name given): John (b.1762); Margaret (b.1763); James (b.1765); Betty (b.1767); Jean (b.1771); and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1780 for James Knox. He married Janet Murray in 1775 and their children included Thomas (b.1775) and James (b.1779). Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Mary Scott in 1775 and their children included: Andrew (b.1778); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1778 were Joseph Goven and Mungo Armstrong. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1772, 1775 and 1778. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Jean (b.1772); Janet (b.1773); Agnes (b.1775); and Gilbert (b.1778). Thomas (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785, when his name is recorded as ‘Rhea’. He also paid in 1787 and 1791. He was a carter in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who married Janet Gledstains in Hawick in 1799. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Aitchison in Hawick Parish in 1797. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Scott in 1792. Thomas (18th/19th C.) charged with sheep-stealing from Phaup in 1818. He was caught because of selling the skins in Hawick and jailed in Jedburgh. He was probably hanged. Thomas Ian (1926–89) educated partly at Hawick High School, he studied history at St. Andrews University and eventually became keeper of manuscripts at the National Library of Scotland. He wrote ‘The Administration of the Scottish Frontier 1513–1603’ (1966), ‘Scotland at the time of Shakespeare’ (1965), edited ‘The union of 1707 its impact on Scotland’ (1974), co-edited ‘The Burgh Court book of Selkirk, 1503–45’ (1960). He also wrote several other articles, including some for the Transactions and was a member of the Archaeological Society. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Harvey and their children included: Robert (b.1689). Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Margaret Gardner and their children included James (b.1740), William (b.1741), James (again, b.1743), an unnamed child (b.1745), George (b.1758) and Agnes (b.1762). The 1743 baptism was witnessed by shoemaker John Scott and merchant William Rid-dell, and the 1758 one by shoemaker George Gardner and William Veitch. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick. He was fined and imprisoned in Dumfries in 1760 for attacking Leonard Fleming, an excise officer. When his sentence was done he was to be set on the pillory at Dum-fries with a label on his breast reading ‘I stand here for having been guilty of committing a most atrocious battery upon the person of an excise-officer when in the exercise of his duty’. He could be the same man as the Hawick tailor. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Whitfield in 1772. He married Ann Walker in Ashkirk in 1770 and their children included: Gilbert (b.1770), baptised in Ashkirk; William (b.1773), baptised in Wilton; James (b.1775), baptised in Selkirk; Adam (b.1777), baptised in Selkirk; Anne (b.1780), baptised in Selkirk; John (b.1786), baptised in Yarrow; and Jane (b.1789), baptised in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1772 were Walter Scott and James Robson. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. Walter (b.c.1785) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd. In 1841 he is recorded at about No. 6 and in 1851 is on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Mary and children included Thomas, Robert, Andrew and Margaret. He was surely related to John, the carter who lived next door. Walter town street sweeper, who came 2nd in the 2004 Citizen of the Year vote and joint 3rd in 2005. William (d.1367) Precentor of the Diocese of Glasgow, he was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1338, following the death of John Wishart. He was consecrated in 1339 and remained Bishop until his death. He thus had authority over Teviotdale. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow belonging to him stolen from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His name is given as ‘Willehmo raix’; however, it is possible he is the same man recorded as William ‘rany’ in 1493. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stoddart and their children included John (b.1648) William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1703, who was also from Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) carrier of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Hasswell in 1707 and their children included: James (b.1707); Marion (b.1708); William (b.1711); John (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Walter (b.1716); William (b.1719); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1711 were Francis Gledstains and smith John Scott and in 1713 were merchants Robert Robson and William Craig.

William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jane (b.1757), Marion (b.1759) and James (b.1764). William (19th C.) married Mary Ann Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1826. Their children born in Roxburghshire were: Jean (b.1831); Janet (b.1832); and John (b.1834). In 1835 they emigrated to the Montreal area, following the Dryden family a year earlier. They then moved to North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. 7 other children were born in Canada. William (b.1812/3) painter on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 48 High Street, with his wife Mary. They had a daughter Isabella S. The death of his aunt Agnes Rae is recorded in Hawick in 1838. William (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was shepherd at Roucecastle in 1851. His wife was Helen (from Oxnam) and their children included Isabella, Jane, George, Walter and John (formerly spelled ‘Ray’, ‘Re’, ‘Rea’, etc.).

Raeburnfit  (rā-burn-fi’) n. site of a small Roman fort in Dumfries & Galloway, where the Rae Burn joins the White Esk, a few miles north of Eskdalemuir. It marks the end of the Roman road from the upper Borthwick valley via Craik Cross. There may have been an extension of this road over Groundistone Height to Harelaw and towards Newstead.

Raegill Bogs  (rā-gil-bogz) n., pl. marshy area to the south of Hermitage Castle, just by Toftsholm Sike. There is an example of a ‘burnt mound’ there, as well as the remains of 4 shieling-huts and an area of enclosed rig.

Rae-knowe  (rā-now) n. risen ground on which the farmhouse of Nether Bonchester stood, near the present-day Bonchester farmhouse.

Raesknowe  (rās-now) n. farm on the Allan Water, behind Newmill, on the opposite (east) side of the Allan Water from Allanhaugh tower. It was a home of the Scotts in the 16th century, and afterwards a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1579 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh sold the annual rent of the land for £100 from Walter Scott of Todrig. In a 1627 valuation it is described as paying ‘presentlie in stok and teynd 26 bolls; estimat in stok to 14, and 3 in parsonage, 4 lbs. in vicarage’. David Scott of Raesknowe, related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, is listed as one of the ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’ by Scott of Satchells. It is shown in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 231 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Newbigging, the Allan Water and the Teviot, and with Reasknowe Mill being a separate farm at its south end. The former small tower there was already in ruins by 1663. In the period 1690–96 the farm was jointly leased by Walter Bell, John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1698 it was leased by John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1694 the householders listed there were Walter Bell, David Graham, John Armstrong and George Wilson (shepherd). Robert Gledstains was also recorded there in 1700. John Armstrong was still there in 1706. Robert Graham was there in 1708. John Graham was tenant there in about 1710 and William Reid in 1719. In the 18th century the area was a small thriving hamlet, which had a schoolmaster appointed in 1723 to teach the poor children of the neighbourhood. William Anderson was there in 1742. Archibald Douglas was farmer there in 1797. A bronze jug was dug up there around 1835, having 3 feet, a handle and a spout, probably mediaeval (also called ‘Raesknowes’; it is ‘Raiknowis’ in an undated 16th century document, ‘Reahousknow’ in 1579 and 1582, ‘Raisknow’ in 1627, ‘Raeknow’ in 1640, ‘Raeknow’ in 1641, ‘Raeknowes’ in 1690, ‘Rae-know’ in 1692, ‘Reasknow’ in 1694, ‘Raes Knoll’ in 1704, ‘Raes-knowes’ in 1717, ‘Raesknowes’ in 1718, ‘Roseknow’ in 1797 and ‘Raes Knowe’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Reesknow’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but incorrectly placed in the middle of Hawick Moor; the name may related to roe deer).

Raesknowe Mill  (rās-now-mill) n. former corn mill on the Allan Water, north of the farm of Raeson Park

Raesknowe, an alternative name for Allanhaugh Mill. It is shown in 1718 as a separate farm to Raesknowe, consisting of 14 acres on the haugh opposite to where the Rumpy Sike meets the Allan, with the mill itself at the east side, near where the foot of the North Burn. The mill lade appears on the map, starting near Lochburnfoot and running along the east side of the Allan, to join again after the mill (it is Raesknowes milne in 1718).

Raeson Park (rā-sin-pawrk) n. street off the right of Stirches Road, built in 1928 and named after builders John Rae & Son, Victoria Road.

Raff (rawf) n. Rev. Eric Maitland Kirk (1892–1927) son of William Watson of Melbourne and Victoria Black, and grandson of William of Woodlee, Forres. He was educated in Melbourne, graduating in 1915 and being ordained there the following year. He was then at Efate Island, New Hebrides Mission until 1923 and came to Scotland the following year, becoming assistant at St. Michael’s, Dumfries and then was appointed to Rosyth. He became minister at St. Mary’s in March 1926, but died at Bournemouth only a year later. He married Ruth, daughter of John Baird.

Raffle (raw-ful) n., arch. a lottery, in the 19th century specifically an event organised to raise money for people in ill-health or who were emigrating etc., prizes being won by dice throws.

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bash) n., arch. a ragamuffin, good-for-nothing – ‘He was nothing but a liar and a reprobrate, and a Jacobite villain and knave, and ... a ragabast [sic]’ [Ash1712], adj. very poor, destitute – ‘Rag-a-buss, A designation given to those who are very poor, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘rag-a-buss’, ‘ragabash’, etc.).

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bus) n. nickname of an itinerant around the early years of the 19th century. He engaged Wull Slush in a steelchase on foot at the Common Riding one year (when held at the Vertish), the race degenerating into a fight.

Ragarth (ra-garth) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located on the Kershope burn and attached to the estates of Mangerton. They are recorded as being worth 7 shillings and 6 pence in a rental list c.1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1541 ‘Ragarth, Sorbe, Sorbetrees’ was part of the property of the Laird of Meriumont, valued at 10 merks, and separately ‘half of Regarth’ was also listed, with a value of 5 merks. It is ‘Raegeirth’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, on the north side of the Kershope Burn, east of Kershope (it is possible it is related to Raeegill Knowes, close to Kershope Bridge).

Ragarthshaw (ra-garth-shaw) n. former farm in Liddesdale, in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ according to a c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 6 shillings. It was presumably near the main farm of Ragarth (recorded as ‘Ragartschaw’).

Raggit (raw-gi’, -gee’) adj. ragged – ‘I doot the sight nae pleasure can thee gie: My raggit breeks, bedaub’d wi’ dirt an’ soil’ [JoHa], ‘O! raggit poverty! o’ rascals chief, How many waes thou brings to mortal man!’[JoHa], ‘A raggit cout a race has won, And sae might little Jock’ [JT].

the Raggit Schuil (thu-raw-gi’-skil, -gee’-skil) n. former name for Drumlanrig School applied by those from elsewhere in the town. The name was also used for the Mission School of Allars Kirk, which was on Allars Crescent in the 1870s, with Mr. Robert Grieve sometimes acting as teacher.

Raggle (raw-gul) n. a groove cut in wood or stone to enable another piece to fit into it.

the Ragman Rolls (thu-rawg-min-rölz) n., pl. list of names of those Scots swearing allegiance to Edward I of England. The smaller roll was signed at Norham in 1291, and the larger one at Berwick in 1296, after Edward was victorious at the Battle of Dunbar. There were more than 1,500 names of Scottish landowners, clergymen and Burgesses, making this a valuable historical record. The attachment of seals also gives a unique insight into the heraldry of the time. The communities of Jedburgh and Roxburgh were among burghs that paid homage. The roll includes the following local men, (a sub-set of those described as ‘of Roxburgh County’ unless otherwise stated): Adam, Parson of Fouldone or Souldone (probably ‘Souldon’); Emme de Almure (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Roger de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Aliaundre de Bailliol (or ‘Bailiol’ or ‘Bailiol’ of Cavers); William de Bradeleye (possibly Braidlie on Hermitage); Thomas de Chartres; William de Chartres; John de Chesolm (from Berwickshire); Richard de Cheselhem; John Comyn de Badenach (senior and junior, Barons of Bedrule); Johan de Conewethe (Parson of Ancrum); James de Crak (in Selkirkshire, possibly Craik); Simon de Cresseuelle (possibly Cresswell in Hassendean Parish); Robert de Dene (Parson of Witon); Gwy de Denum (Denholm); Randulf de Derum (possibly an error for ‘Denum’); Philip de Dryden; Johan de Ethereston (possible Aderstone); William de Fausythe (possibly in Southdean Parish); Richard de Flex; Herbert de Gledestan (of Lanarkshire, direct ancestor of the local family); Adam de Gourlay; Robert Grundi de Neuton (who possibly gave his name to Grundistone); Alyn Gurnay (possibly ‘Gourlay’); Johan de [ECS], ‘But raither wud wait till oor back’s oot o’ sicht . . . ’ [WFC] (also written ‘raither’; used emphatically, but usually meant as the more common rither, even if spelled this way in sympathy with the rest of Scotland).

Raither (rā-thīr) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His surname is given as ‘Raither’ and ‘Raitter’. He married Isobel Watson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1693), William (b.1694) and William (b.1697). In 1697 his wife’s surname is given as ‘Watson’. The witnesses in 1694 were John Watson and John Minto (possibly a variant of Rathie).

raivel (rā-veul) v. to ravel, entangle, become confused.

rake see raik

Ralph’s Acre (rawlf-s-ā-kur) n. lands adjacent to Trinitylands, mentioned in the rental returns for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. This could be the same place referred to as ‘Blaikie’s Acre’ in the 16th century.

Ralph-tree Grain (rawlf-tree-grān) n. small stream in Liddesdale which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows into Todhunter Grain and then the Tinnis Burn. An old sheepfold shows that shepherds worked in even as remote a place.

Ralton (rawl-tīn) n. former lands in Liddesdale, to the south-west of Redheugh. Modern maps show the farm of Raltonsdie on the Ralton Burn. George Armstrong was recorded there in 1502 and Ingram Armstrong in 1535, along with Robert and Archibald Armstrong. In 1541 the lands were valued at 3 pounds and 7 shillings, with tenants Robert, Ninian and Thomas Armstrong. Ingram Armstrong there is recorded in a 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire and related areas, along with John alias Ralton. This is probably the ‘Rouraltonholme’ possessed by John Scott in 1632 and also the ‘Ratounholme’ listed among the lands of Kerr of Ancrum on the same document. Rig lines have been seen to the north-west of Raltonsdie, and there is also an old boundary bank there (it is ‘raltoun’ in 1502, ‘Raitloun’ in 1535, ‘Raltoun’ in 1541 and ‘Raltoun’ and ‘Reltoun’ in 1585).

Ralton Burn (rawl-tīn-burn) n. stream that rises near Roan Fell and Millstone Edge, on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire and gather’s several other streams before passing Raltonsie farm, joining the Ryedale Burn and running into the Liddel Water between Sandholm and Newcastleton. The area has the remains of several farmsteads, as well as boundary banks, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds. Near the head of the westernmost feeder stream are a couple of shepherd’s cairns (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Raltonsie (rawl-tīn-sīd) n. cottage on the Ralton Burn to the north of Newcastleton.

the Rampart (θu-rawm-pur’) n. area around St. Mary’s Churchyard and Old Manse Lane, distinguished by the high wall there. This features as the location for the third scene in ‘The gutterbludes’ – ‘. . . Nannie, an auld freend, will be roud the Ramparts at the chap o’ six, he has guid news tae tell you . . . ’ [JEDM] (also ‘The Ramparts’ and ‘Rampart Place’).

Rampart Place (rawm-pur’-pis) n. name used for Old Manse Lane in use in the mid 1800s.

Rampslogill see Ramsiegill

Rampy Sike (rawm-pee-si) n. small stream that runs roughly north-east to joint the Allan Water near Allanhaugh Bank. There is a small, roughly oval-shaped enclosure there, of indistinct enough form that it is hard to guess its age. On the haugh opposite where the sike joins the Allan Water was formerly the site of Raesknowe Mill.

ram-race (ram-ras) n., arch. a short burst of speed, like a ram uses in charging, a headlong rush – ‘He took a ram-race and smashed open the door’ [HAST1868], an impetuous progression, anything done at unreasonable speed – ‘Howt! They sang that chorus fer owre quick. They made a perfect raam-race o’d’ [ECS], ‘It was a Day’s Dander A wanteet, an no a raam-race duist’ [ECS], ‘The band [=choir] made a perfec’ ram-race o’ the chorus’ [GW].

ram reel (ram-reel) n., arch. a reel danced by men only (cf. bul-reel).

Ramsay (rawm-zee) n. Sir Alexander of Dalhousie (d.c.1342). He fought at Borough Muir, was involved with the capture of Leuchars castle and relieved the siege of Dunbar Castle. He harassed the English in the Borders, often with a relatively small force, and was made Warden of the East March in 1340. He was known as a paragon of chivalry, being a champion on the jousting field. At Easter 1342 he captured Roxburgh Castle from the English and was rewarded by David II with the Keepership of Roxburgh Castle, and the Sheriffdom of Teviotdale that usually went along with it. Sir William Douglas, who was already Sheriff of Teviotdale, was outraged at this and had Ramsay captured while holding court at St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick a few months later (there is some uncertainty about whether it was 20th or 21st June). Several of his followers were slain and he himself was wounded and imprisoned in the dungeons of Hermitage Castle, where he starved to death. He is said to have survived for 17 days by eating grain that fell through from the granary above. In the 1790s a local mason apparently broke into Hermitage vaults, finding human bones, as well as a bridle, saddle and sword; it was said that these were the remains of Ramsay. The bit that was found was presented by Sir Walter Scott to the Earl of Dalhousie, Ramsay’s direct descendant. Ramsay Road in Hawick was named after him in 1933. Allan see James Dalgleish. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule. His wife Margaret Scott died in 1723, aged 65, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Rev. Andrew Mitchell (1809–69) from Tollcross in Glasgow, he became the 4th minister of the Relief (Allars) Church in 1833. He was the first President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, leading to some dispute over the use of Allars Kirk for meetings. He also allowed his church to be used for Revival meetings, against the wishes of many in his congregation. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed on the Crescent. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street. He resigned in 1846, and left Hawick, with a large crowd seeing him off at the Tower Knowe. He moved to Australia to became Minister of Collins Street Church in Melbourne. In about 1850, along with 3 others, he formed the United Presbyterian Church of Victoria. He married Isabella Milne and their son Robert was a politician and lawyer in Australia. An early photograph of him exists. Sir George of Dalhousie (d.c.1629) son of James of Cockpen, he was 2nd Lord Ramsay of Melrose. He gained the lands and title in 1618 from his relative John, Viscount Haddington and Lord Ramsay of Barns. He is recorded in 1613 collecting the vicarage teinds from Thomas of Turnbull of Knowe. This suggests that he already had patronage of Haddsean Kirk at that time. He became Earl of Holderness and sold the lands of Melrose to Sir Thomas Hamilton. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas, and was succeeded by his son William, who became Earl of Dalhousie. James (18th C.) recorded being in Liliesleaf Parish in 1806 when his marriage to Barbara Morton announced in Melrose Parish. John (c.1580–1618) Viscount of Haddington, Earl of Holderness. He was son Robert of Wyliecleuch. In 1609 he was granted the lands and income from Melrose Abbey, becoming Lord Melrose. This included the Kirks of Cavers and Haddsean. The grant was at least partly because of the help he had given the King in the Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600. In 1618 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his relative Sir George of Dalhousie. John (18th C.) Hawick resident who was among the many men listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (18th C.) surveyor of coals, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1755. He was probably not from Hawick, but it is unclear where he was from or what his connection with Hawick was. In 1757 there is a record of 5 shillings ‘Spent with Mr Ramsay the coalmann (coal-viewer)’, this being related to ‘the petition for the coals’ that the Town Clerk had sent. It is unclear exactly what this was about, but he is also recorded being paid 10 shillings and 5 pence in the same year. John M. (b.1885) uncle of Jessie MacDonald, he grew up in Denholm, served in WWI, was a postman for the Stobs area and lived at Orchard Terrace in later life. He wrote an account of Denholm in the years around 1900 for the Transactions. Robert (1842–82) son of Rev. Andrew Mitchell, who was minister of Al-lars Kirk. He was born in Hawick, but the family emigrated to Australia when he was about 5 (one of his siblings dying on the voyage). He studied law at Melbourne University, became a solicitor and became involved in politics as secretary for a committee trying to abolish state funding of religion. He served as a member of the legislative assembly of Victoria from 1870, being heavily involved in education and the separation of church and state. He was also partially responsible for the police actions that led to the capture of the Ned Kelly gang. He married Isabella Catherine, daughter of Robert Urquhart. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was buried in Melbourne general cemetery. William (d.c.1695) tenant in Bedrule Mill. He married Margaret Turnbull. In 1695 he and his wife left 500 merks for the poor of the Baron of Bedrule, with the family of Cavers Carre as trustees. He is probably the William recorded in Bedrule Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William ‘Wull Slush’ (d.c.1830) known as a vagrant and drunkard. Although not born in Hawick, he travelled around upper Teviot-dale for the period roughly 1790–1830. He was said to have been from either Carluke in Clydesdale or brought up at Heriot’s Hospital in Edinburgh. Not known for his beauty, he was described as being ‘as unprepossessing in his looks as it is possible to conceive, and his raiment was in classic keeping with his countenance’. He claimed to have a sister who was far uglier than himself. He had a squint, with one eyelid almost covering his eye, and a lower lip that drooped noticeably. He also lost the use of his legs through frostbite, and afterwards went about on a donkey. A story is told of how he once stood in for the driver of the cart between Edinburgh and Hawick, but was so drunk from stopping at every inn that by the time he reached Dovemount he mistook the gable of Wilton Kirk for another possible watering hole. He spent much of his time in the Black Bull, or sleeping it off in Hawick Mill. One year, when the Common Riding races were at the Vertish, he came across another beggar, called Ragabuss, and the pair race for tuppence in a steeplechase on foot, which degenerated into a fight. He once insulted Blind Wullie Craw (as recounted by William Norman Kennedy), who immediately threw off the lines ‘O! Hush, hush, Wull Slush, Wull Slush, The Ostler o’ Black Bull, As lazy a loon as what’s i’ the toon, And his head’s like a weel picked skull’. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, and an article by William Norman Kennedy in the first Archæological Society Transactions. William (b.1802/3) born in Sprouston Parish. In 1851 he was a proprie-tor of 94 acres at Calaburn in Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth (who married brickmaker William Taylor) and Christian. William (b.1851) born at Ar-madale, West Lothian, he was the last preacher at the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, which closed in the 1920s. He also served as an elder in the United Free Church there. He was ‘colporteur’ for the Religious Tract Society as well as School Attendance Officer. He married Christian Wilson in 1872. Their children were Peter (who married Helen Stoddart in Hawick), Christina, George Wilson, James, Jane, John, William and Jessie (who married Thomas Ramage in Hawick). Ramsaycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead above Merrylaw, reached by the side road from Teviothead, and lying just north of Rashiegrain and the source of the Teviot. The areas of Ramsaygrain West and Ramsaygrain East lie to either side. In the 1511 charter for the Baron of Hawick the lands were listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’. The lands were included in the list of property of the Baron of Hawick (Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1572 and 1594. Douglas of Drumlanrig has a ‘horning’ in 1607 against William Scott of Gledstains to remove from these and other lands, followed by a further action in 1610 for Scott and James Gledstains of that Ilk owing him taxes. Robert Grieve was tenant in 1609. 6 cattle were stolen from the Laird of Falnash there in 1621. Half of the lands there were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. John Bell was recorded ‘in Rams Alec leuchburn’ in 1678. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. James Anderson was tenant in at least 1699–1720 and William Anderson in 1704. By 1707 it was valued along with Hislop at £549 4s. The lands were owned by Michael Anderson of Tushielaw and Hislop in the early 18th century. Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw was owner in 1788. John Armstrong is recorded as farmer at ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ in 1797. William Riddell (brother of Henry Scott Riddell) was tenant there in the mid-19th century. In 1811 the lands of ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ were valued along with Hislop at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersons of Tushielaw. This area was part of the western extremity of Hawick Parish until Teviothead was formed in 1850. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building at Ramsaycleuchburn (the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘hramsa cloh’, meaning ‘the ravine of the wild garlic’, although the terran does not seem very suitable; it is easily confused with Ramseycleuch in the Ettrick valley; it appears in 1511 as ‘Ramsy clewch’ and ‘Ramsecleuch’ are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. ‘William Elwald in Ramsigill’ is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1510 and on a rental roll of 1541. ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsigill’ is among men the King ordered to be apprehended in 1532. Robert in Ramsigill and ‘Old’ Robert of Ramsigill are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. ‘Gavin o Ramsigill’ was one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick by the Regent Moray in 1567. ‘Gavin’s Jock’ from there was recorded in 1574 and 1582/3. ‘Ill Rob of Ramsigill’ was convicted for theft in 1580/1. Jock Elliot of Ramsigill is listed in 1583 as one of the Elliots of Burnhead. Hob and Rowie Elliot ‘of Ramsigill’ signed a bond for the behaviour of all the Elliots of Ramsigill in 1584, along with Airchie of the Hill and Will’s Hob. And a number of Elliots from there were named in a bond of 1587. Hob and Gavin separately accused the English of raids on their lands there in the 1580s. The man who hanged himself when imprisoned in Hawick steeple in 1612 may also have been from this family branch (it is marked ‘Rampshigill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map). Ramsay Road (rawm-zee-rød) n. street behind Moat Park, built in 1933 and extended in 1969. The housing overlooking the ‘Scer’ is sometimes known as the ‘Haggis Haa’ scheme. Named after Sir Alexander Ramsay – ‘For haddock, plaice and cod, They came fright Ramsay Road .’ [IWL] (since it is beside the old highway where he made his last fateful journey). Ramseycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, near the village of Ettrick. It was formerly owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane. John Scott of Thirlestane had a ‘tack’ from Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1535 and Robert Scott of ‘Schastaine’ in 1557. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter in about 1620, and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. A ‘penderce’ called ‘Tima-hauchs’ is also mentioned at that time. Adam Scott was there in the 1780s and George Grieve in the 1860s (it probably has the same origin as Ramsaycleuch, with which it is easily confused; it is ‘Ramseclewis’ in 1535, ‘Ramsecleuch’ in 1557, ‘Ramsecleuch’ in 1564, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1568, ‘Ramsieclewis’ in 1573, ‘Rampseclouch’ in 1577, ‘Ramsicleuch’ in about 1622 and ‘Ramsiclewis’ in 1641; ‘Rampshycleuch’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map). Ramsiegill (rawm-zee-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but it was in the hills somewhere to the west of Riccarton. It is listed as ‘Rampysgill’ in about 1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section called ‘Ermyldome’, and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. ‘William Elwald in Ramsigill’ is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1510 and on a rental roll of 1541. ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsigill’ is among men the King ordered to be apprehended in 1532. Robert in Ramsigill and ‘Old’ Robert of Ramsigill are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. ‘Gavin o Ramsigill’ was one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick by the Regent Moray in 1567. ‘Gavin’s Jock’ from there was recorded in 1574 and 1582/3. ‘Ill Rob of Ramsigill’ was convicted for theft in 1580/1. Jock Elliot of Ramsigill is listed in 1583 as one of the Elliots of Burnhead. Hob and Rowie Elliot ‘of Ramsigill’ signed a bond for the behaviour of all the Elliots of Ramsigill in 1584, along with Airchie of the Hill and Will’s Hob. And a number of Elliots from there were named in a bond of 1587. Hob and Gavin separately accused the English of raids on their lands there in the 1580s. The man who hanged himself when imprisoned in Hawick steeple in 1612 may also have been from this family branch (it is marked ‘Rampshigill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the hills to the east of Roughley Burn, between ‘Erniton’ and ‘Lires’; it is ‘Ramsigill’ in 1510, ‘Ramsigill’ in 1541, ‘Ramseygill’ and ‘Ramseygill’ in 1563, ‘Ramsygill’ in 1569, ‘Ramsygill’ in 1580/1, ‘Ramsygill’ in 1581 and ‘Ramsgill’ in 1583; the origin may be similar to that of ‘Ramsaycleuch’, i.e. related to the Old English for ‘wild garlic’; there is also a ‘Ramsgill’ in North Yorkshire).

ramstam (rawm-stawn) adj., arch., poet. hap-hazard, rash, heedless, unceremonious – ‘Hei’d little need be hen-her-tect that hed ti beer the ram-stam onfaa ... ’ [ECS], ‘My strength was renewed, but the haugh was plewed, And I made but a ram-stam rin ... ’ [WaD], ‘He wasna blate, he was rale ram-stam, He’d swallowed a wee thing mair than a dram’ [WL], n., poet. haphazardness, chaos – ‘And roun and roun the warld may spin Wi’ its ram-stam and steer ... ’ [WL].

ramstougar (rawm-stoo-gar) adj., arch. rough (in various senses), coarse (of cloth), characterising a particularly masculine woman, vulgar, heedless, harebrained, rowdy, quarrelsome (all of these meanings noted by J. Jamieson).

rand (rawnd) n., arch. a narrow strip, a streak of a different colour in cloth, a streak of discoloration in anything imperfectly cleaned or dried (noted by J. Jamieson).

randan (rawn-dan) n., arch. spree, particularly in the phrase ‘on the randan’, meaning being involved in a wild celebration (noted by E.C. Smith).

randit (ran-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. streaked, striped, dyed a variegated colour – ‘Randit, ill-wuishen claes’ [GW], ‘Randit tweeds, bread, butter’ [GW], ‘Ma froak hesna dyed weil at aa; it’s awfullies randeet’ [ECS], ‘That wummans claes ir no haaf seindeet; they’re hinging oot i the gairdeen aa randeet’ [ECS].

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. (d.c.1185) son of Dungal (of Stranith, or Nithsdale), and brother of Duvenald (or Donald), Duncan and Gillespie (or Gillepatric), he was Lord of Stranith or Nithsdale. He married Bethoc, who was probably connected with the Barony of Bedrule, and he may have gained lands there through marrying her. His wife may have been a daughter of Fergus, Earl of Galloway and Princess Joan of England. However, both their histories seem sometimes mixed up with others. Not long after the founding of Jedburgh Abbey (perhaps around 1150) the couple granted a carrucate of land (60 acres) in Rucastle to Jedburgh Abbey, confirmed later by William the Lion. He also granted lands in Dumfries to Kelso Abbey and is recorded in transactions related to other lands in Dumfriesshire. His name appears as witness to several charters in the early 12th century. His son and heir was Thomas, who succeeded; and Sir Nicholas, who was taken prisoner at Dunbar in 1296 and probably died in the Tower of London. Both he and his wife were buried on the same day at Melrose Abbey. Sir Thomas (d.bef. 1306) son of Thomas and descendant of Randolph, Lord of Stranith. The family held lands in Bedrule, although there is no record of a direct connection in his time. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded as such when witness to a document for Kelso Abbey in 1266 and served until at least 1269. He was Chamberlain of Scotland in about 1269–78. He was present at the Convention of Brigham in 1289/90 and when John Balliol paid homage to Edward I in 1292 and in 1294 he accompanied the English King to France. He married Isabel, who was probably half-sister of King Robert the Bruce. His son Sir Thomas became 1st Earl of Moray and signed the Declaration of Arbroath. He also had a daughter Isabel, who married William Murray, ancestors of the Earls of Annandale.

randy (rawn-dee) adj., arch., poet. wild, disorderly, disreputable, aggressively rude – ‘...strictly discharging all her Majesty’s leidges within ye shyre to resett Gipsies, Vagabonds, Randie beggars, and idle persons ... ’ [PR1711], ‘Now randie Tibbie takes the road, Wi’ a’ her neebour wretches’ [JoHa], ‘Cam’ ye straight alang the toon, Or doon the randy raw? Ha’e ye seen a truant loon Playin’ at the ba’’ [JT], ‘The inn was thrang wi’ singin, The randy clash rang high ... ’ [WL], n., arch. a scolding woman, a mischievous girl – ‘... That, faith, the randie’s grown sae rude, Rae careless, fearless, haughty, proud ... ’ [JoHa], ‘What! Luck, here too! thou paintit twa-faced randy, Squirting thy humbug i’ my vera lug?’ [JoHa] (also written ‘randie’).

range (räñj) v., arch. to search, probe, rummage – ‘A’ll mebbies finnd eet if A range the kist’ [ECS], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS], ‘A’ve ranged a’ the drawers, an’ canna find it’ [GW], to agitate water, especially to scare fish from hiding places, to rake the ashes from between the bars of a grate so that the air can circulate – ‘Taik the poker an’ range the bars o the feier’ [ECS].

ranger (ran-jur) n., arch. a pot scrubber, particularly one made of a tied bunch of heather.

Rankilburn (rawng-kul-burn) n. older spelling for the valley of the Rankle Burn, also known as Buccleuch. The precise boundaries of the lands are not known, but certainly larger than the lands later known as Buccleuch. This was once a separate parish, which was merged with Yarrow in 1621, but then disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick in 1650. It appears that in 1236 the lands belonged to Nigel de Heris, the King’s forester. The land probably passed to the Scotts some time shortly after 1249, perhaps as part of the appointment as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. Sir Richard Scott was the first known Laird of Rankilburn in the late 13th century. The first residence was probably on the motte at Phenzhopehaugh, later moving to ‘Buccleuch Castle’. There was also a chapel on the Rankle Burn, the cemetery of which was the final resting place for many early generations of the Scotts of Buccleuch. When the lands were inherited in 1492 they were said to be then waste, but normally valued at £20. They were still listed separately from Buccleuch in the family lands inherited in 1517 and 1553/4 and the lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. – ‘Of Ettrick’s-hue he took a view, Than to the left hand did turn, Where he did see that Forrest hie, Which then was called Rankilburn’ [CWS] (it is ‘Rankilburne’ in 1415, 1463, 1484 and about 1580, ‘Rankylburne’ in 1415 and 1491/2, ‘Rankilburn’ in 1491/2, ‘Rankilburn’ and ‘Rankylburne’ in 1517 and ‘Rankilburne’ in 1528, 1537, 1574 and 1634; it is marked ‘Rankilburn’ and ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ in Blaeu’s 1654 maps and mis-transcribed as ‘Rankisburn’ on Moll’s 1745 map).

Rankilburn Chaiple (rawng-kul-burn-chapel) n. former chapel near the old seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn. It was also known as ‘Buccleuch Kirk’. The chapel was situated at the confluence of the Rankle Burn and the Kirk Burn, about 5 miles up from the Ettrick, with Kirk Hill and Priest Sike to the east. When it was established is unclear, but possibly around the 12th century when the motte was built at Rankilburn (later called Phenzhopehaugh); it was certainly already in existence by 1415, since in that year the tithes for Bellendean were transferred to it (when the Scotts of Rankilburn swapped Bellendean for the lands of Glenkerry with the monks of Melrose Abbey). It is marked ‘Rankilburn K.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and ‘Ruins of Buccleugh Kirk’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; today there is a semi-circular sheepfold enclosing much of the site, which has been planted with coniferous trees. The turf-covered footings of the former chapel can still just be made out, these being modest in size, about 10 m by 5 m, to the southwest of the D-shaped sheepfold (or perhaps shelter for cattle drovers). The wall at the east end has been robbed (probably to help construct the small rectangular shed in the corner of the sheepfold), and there is an earthen bank between these remains and the Kirk Burn. Together with another low bank inside the sheepfold, these may be former boundaries for the kirkyard. A survey in 2011 found no evidence of further enclosures that had been suggested in earlier descriptions (including a different location for the church in the north-east corner of the sheepfold report in 1962). Scott of Satchells says that 9 Lairds of Buccleuch were buried there, perhaps starting after David and ending with the permanent move to Branxholme. There is a tradition that the last Scott burial was within 3 yards of the east door of the church. It is stated that the chapel was already ruined by 1566. There was a legend of a blue marble font (in which generations of Scotts had been baptised) being buried among the ruins, but no such relic has been found. Satchells says that around 1585 a young Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Robert Scott of Thirlestane found ancient tombstones buried there, bearing the arms of Buccleuch, along with some other sculpted stones. In 1801 the site was visited by a party including Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, but they found nothing of any significance. William Scott (from Burnmouth) stated in 1821 that ‘frequently human bones are washed away by the encroaching of the stream’. An open-air Cameronian communion service was held near here in 1844, attended by hundreds of people. The Ordnance Survey name book in 1858 states that ‘the marks where houses seem to have stood are still visible on the Burn Side’, but if there was once a hamlet there, there is no apparent evidence today. There was an excavation around 1877, but little was discovered. The rector in 1453 was...
Rankilburn Pairish

James Spottiswood, and the reader in 1491/2 was John Scott. David Scott of Buccleuch left money for the church when he died in 1491/2. Following the ruin of their nearby manor, the Scotts abandoned the area for their new seat at Branxholme, and the church probably fell into disuse at that time. In 1537 Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk invested Simon Scott in the benefices of Rector ‘by touching the kirk door, the font, the altar, the chalice, the books and ornaments’ of the kirk there. In 1574 John Scott, minister of Ashkirk had oversight there. After the Reformation the parish was united with Yarrow and then Ettrick and was not considered large enough to require a reader (it was ‘ecclesiae de Rankilburn’ in 1453 and ‘Rankilburn’ in a Church of Scotland document of 1586).

Rankilburn Pairish (rawng-kul-burn-pä-resh) n. former small parish, sometimes referred to as Buccleuch, consisting of the land between the Rankle Burn and the Tima Water. Its establishment is unclear, but it certainly existed before 1415. In the early 17th century it was united with Yarrow, but in 1650 it was annexed instead to Ettrick. At that point it consisted essentially of the lands of Deephope, Mount Common, Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Anneshope, East Buccleuch, West Buccleuch, Tushielaw, Cacrabank, Cacrabank and Crosslee.

rankit (rawng-kee’, -ki’) pp., adj. ranked, lined, set in rows – ‘But tho’ I get my hurdies whankit, An’ wi’ the hare-brain’d core be rankit …’ [JR], ‘The yoke-a-tulie rankit up, And doon the Loan like fire’ [JT], ‘Door an dochtly, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter’s Wardens o the Mairches’ [ECS].

the Ranelle Burn (thu-rang-kul-burn) n. stream that rises and flows roughly north to meet the Ettrick at Cacrabank, near Tushielaw. The valley of the Ranelle Burn is synonymous with the Buccleuch area, and was the original family seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn or Buccleuch. There is a ballad called ‘The Maid of the Ranelle Burn’ (it is marked ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Rankill B.’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Rankgle Burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Rankilburn).

Ranelle-trei (ra-nul-tri) n., arch. a beam, or branch-striped tree, forming the roof-tree of a house – ‘And oure the auld man’s rigging back She laid her rannel-tree shanke’ [JTE].

rashackle (ran-shaw-kul) v., poet. to ransack, search thoroughly – ‘I’ll ranshekel the hale house till I find it’ [JoJ] ‘And when they cam to the fair Dodhead, Right hastily they clam the peel; They loosed the kye out, ane and a’, And ranshackled the house right weel’ [T] (also written ‘ranshekel’; cf. ramshaickle).

rant (rawn’) v., arch. to romp, roister, indulge in boisterous fun, sing or play a lively tune – ‘The rantin’ sangs, the leeberal drams …’ [RM].

rantie (rawn-tee) adj., poet. frolicsome, boisterous – ‘We’ve rowthie baith o’ brose an’ kail, Whilk mak’s us chuffie, sleek, and rantie’ [JoHa].

Ranks Meadowhole (rangks-ne-di-hól) n. former name for a pool which would sometimes form in the meadow to the South of ‘the Birns’ of Chapelhill.

rap (rawp) v., arch. to fall rapidly (said of tear-drops) – ‘…Our tears come rapping down in spates, Since thou art gone’ [CPM].

rap (rawp) v. to knock on a door (more common than ‘knock’); cf. chap; noted by E.C. Smith.

rape (rąp) adv., poet. quickly, rapidly – ‘Then rude and rape a bairnie scream’d’ [JR].

Raper (ră-pur) n. Robert (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when his will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. Given that the name is otherwise unknown, this may be a transcription error, but otherwise he may have been a servant of Lord Minto.

Raperlaw (ră-pur-law) n. farm roughly between Minto and Lilliesleaf villages. The lands there were a possession of Jedburgh Abbey from its founding in the 12th century until the Reformation. Humphrey of Raperlaw is recorded as a witness in about 1201. Reginald of Durham, in his collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, recounts a tale of a woman from here, crippled from birth, who was cured after spending the night at Cuthbert’s chapel on the Slitrig (probably at Cogsmill). Matthew Lamb was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5, as well as George and James Davidson. George Davidson had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him there before 1502. In 1564 George Turnbull’s quarter was leased to William Gray and William Redford, Henry […] son’s quarter together with John Middlemas’ half to Andrew Gray, George Gray and Thomas Allan. The ‘lands and town of Raperlaw’ were part of the lands sold to Adam French in 1567 and still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Hob Turnbull was there in 1579. James Turnbull was ‘called of Rapirlaw’ in 1619. The lands there were inherited by William Middlemas of Chapel from his father, also William, in 1622; it appears that at that time it was part of the Barony of Raperlaw. The farm was feued by Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning to Turnbulls and Davidsons in 1632. William Wood was tenant there in 1634. In the 1643 county valuation, the owners of lands recorded there were James Middlemas of Raperlaw (valued at £416), Walter Turnbull (valued at £100 10s), Adam Turnbull (valued at £104), Andrew Davidson (valued at £65), William Turnbull (valued at £104) and David Davidson (valued at £195). Lands there (or perhaps the superiorty) were owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the later 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Walter Scott of Alton owned lands there valued at £416 in 1678, as well as James Middlemas (£134 18s 6d), Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (£104), Andrew Davidson (£65), Robert Elliot in ‘Wyliespeel’ (£104) and John Douglas (£195). Some of these parts were later known as Greenhouse and Catshawhill. Thomas Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter, along with George Young, a servant to George Gray, who was also a tenant there. Robert Paterson was there in 1689. James Runciman was blacksmith there in 1694, with other householders at that time being William Chisholme, Walter Middlemas, James Middlemas, John Gray, John Riddell, John Robson and James Scott (and John Turnbull among the ‘deficients’). It may have been sold by the Scotts of Alton to the Horsburghs of that Ilk about 1710. ‘Scott of Alton’s Lands in Raperlaw’ are referred to in 1788 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £416 and listed under Lord Minto (the origin is probably Old English ‘rapera hlaw’, meaning ‘rope-maker’s hill’; it first appears as ‘Raperlaw’ in about 1150, then ‘Raperlaw’ or ‘Rapeslawe’ in about the 1170s, ‘Raperell’ and ‘Rapereslaw’ in about 1200, and has its modern spelling from 1315; it is transcribed as ‘Raperlaw’ in 1502, ‘Ryperlave’ in 1548/9, ‘Rapirlaw’ in 1619, ‘Raperlaw’ in 1622, ‘Reaperhall’ and ‘Reaperlaw’ in 1670, ‘reper law’ and ‘Reaperlaw’ in 1678, 1684 and 1689, ‘Repertslaw’ in 1684 and ‘Roperlaw’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Reaperlaw’).

Raperlaw (rä-pur-law) n. Humphrey (12th/13th C.) listed in the period 1200-02 as witness to the grant of lands near Maxton to Melrose Abbey. His name is listed as ‘Unfr’ de Raperell’. Also in about 1200 he was granted lands at Coldingham, when he is listed ‘Unfride de Rapereslaw’.

rappit (ra-pee’, -pi’) pp. rapped, knocked struck – ‘I rappit lang, then rappit strang, But answer I gat nane’ [WaD].

rap up (rawp-up) v., arch. to rouse by knocking, knock up – ‘But Wull pled for them to rap up Geordie Oliver, of the Wester Toll Bar …’[RM].

ra-ra-rae (r-ra-rä) n., arch. gout weed, Åegopodium Podagraria, a tall plant with tiny white flowers, formerly used by children in Hawick to adorn themselves with on the eve of the Hiring Fair, marching and chanting ‘Ra-ra-rae, the nicht afore the Fair! The drum’s i’ the Walligate, the pipes’ i’ the air. Silk an saiten, Goold an’ naiteen; Tig! – for the morn’s the Fair Day!’[GW].

rase (râz) pp. did rise, rose – ‘he rase in time ti hear the Drums an Fifes stertin’, ‘He raise, and rax’d him whar he stude And bade him match there’ [WL] (also written ‘raise’; this is the past tense of ryse, while the past participle is ‘risen’, as in English).

Rashiegrain (raw-shee-grân) n. farmstead near the head of the Teviot, beyond Merrylaw. The lands there formed part of the estate of the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Wormscoleuch and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in tymd 20 lb’. It could be the ‘Rashlie’ listed among lands around Teviothead that were part of the Barony of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. John Scott was there in 1702. By 1707 it was valued along with Commonbrae at £261 19s 4d. Andrew Anderson was Laird in 1708 when he served as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. Thomas Little was tenant there in 1740. An unspecified matter of discipline occurring there came to the Hawick Session’s notice in 1752. William Anderson was owner in 1761. The farm was purchased in 1771 by Bailie Thomas Turnbull, along with other neighbouring properties. In 1788 it was owned by William Turnbull of Rashiegrain. In 1811 it was still valued (with Commonbrae) at about £262. The Hope family were living there in 1841. A receipt relating to the poor rates from there in 1875 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. ‘Rashiegrain Height’ is an area south of there, by Pikethaw Hill, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotsnane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (spelled ‘Rashy-grain’ etc. in older records, it is ‘Raschegran’e in 1627, ‘Raschiegren’ in 1674, ‘Raschegrain’ in 1675, transcribed ‘Rasheglen’ in 1695 and ‘Rashlie’ in 1698, and ‘Rashigrain’ in 1708; ‘rashie’ means covered in rushes and ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for a branch of a stream).

Their children were: Esther (b.1844), who married James Douglas Turnbull; Helen (b.1847), who married Henry Campbell from Ayrshire; Hannah Wilhelmmina (b.1849); Adam James (b.1856); and Bella (b.1859). He died in Australia. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Winthrope and their children included: Janet (b.1771); William (b.1773); George (b.1779); and George (again, b.1784). He could be the Robert, son of William, born in Lilliesleaf in 1740. Robert (d.1811) brother of James, farmer at Kaimend. He could be the same as the Robert of Lilliesleaf Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1738); Robert (b.1740); an unnamed son (b.1742); and Agnes (b.1746). William (1777–1851) elder son of James. He was a farmer, born in Cavers Parish, who moved to the Jedburgh area. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Wilson, baker in Hawick. Their children were: James (b.1803), who lived near Duns; Walter (b.1805), tenant farmer at Thicksid; Margaret (b.1807), who married Thomas Waddell; Isabella (b.1811); Janet (b.1814); and William (b.1816), a shepherd near Duns. He died at Thicksid, Jedburgh. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection (also written ‘Rathy’).

Rattlin Roarin Willie (raw’-lin-ro-rin-wil-lee) n. song popularised by Burns, which is supposedly local, being about events that happened to William Henderson of Priesthaugh in 1627. Willie, a local ballad-maker and brawler, slew ‘Robert Rule’ somewhere near Allanhaugh. Burns heavily edited it and added a third stanza in praise of his friend William Dunbar, which has disguised its origin. But Sir Walter Scott added 4 further verses about Willie’s capture by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and ‘young Fahnash’ (probably Archibald Elliot). The Presbytery records show that William Elliot was wanted for the murder of William Henderson in 1627, surely the basis for the song. The tune also has various versions, existing as the air of the song, as well as for both the pipes and the fiddle. Whether the origin was with Willie himself or someone else is unknown – ‘Rob Roole he handled rude And Willie left Newmill’s banks Red-wat wi’ Robin’s blude’ [T].

Rauchle (raw-kul) adj., poet. bold, impetuous – ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld He’ll find her yet the same in war – A raucle, ready-haundit kimmer’ [JoHa], ‘Rauche gulls daily re-anoint Enthroned King Edward . . . ’ [DH] (also written ‘rau- cle’).

Raufson (rowf-son) n. John (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermilton’ (i.e. somewhere around Annerton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Terra Johannis Raufson’ is listed there with a value of 16 shillings.

rave (räv) pp., arch. tore, rived – ‘...and for having fallen upon the said Baillie and rugged and raved the hair off his head’ [BR1694], ‘...How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH] (also written ‘raive’; this is the past tense of rive, which can also be ‘rived’; cf. the past participles reen and ‘riven’ as in English).

Ravenburn (rä-vin-burn) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Hyndlee, situated to the east of the Note o’ the Gate, now deep within Wauchope Forest. It appears to be ‘Reavinburne’ in 1694, when there was a hearth listed there, among the farms of the Laird of Harwood. The shepherd there in the mid-1800s was Walter Cavers. The stream there is the Raven or ‘Reaven’ Burn, which forms part of the headwaters of the Jed.

Ravenswud Junction (rä-vinz-wud-jungk-shin) n. Ravenswood Junction, a junction of the Waverley Line with the Berwickshire Railway, between Newtown St. Boswells and Melrose, near the Leaderfoot Viaduct. The line connected Hawick with Greenlaw, Duns and Chirnside and ran between Newtown St. Boswells and Melrose, near the Leaderfoot Viaduct. The line connected Hawick with Greenlaw, Duns and Chirnside and ran from 1856 until part was washed away in a flood in 1948. The name came from the nearby house, built in the 1820s on the estate formerly known as Old Melrose.

raw (raw) n. a row – ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeter’s coorse feine, – merkeet wui raws on raws o treis’ [ECS], ‘Fowr in a raw = four abreast’ [ECS], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘They gaed twae in a raw’ (= two abreast)’ [GW], ‘Auld names, lost days forgotten, raw giblich’ [JEDM], ‘In that Kirk-yard, in mony a raw, Hae mouldered hearts without a flaw ...’ [AD], ‘At poverty Row (adv. phr.) = on the verge of destitution’ [ECS].

Raw (raw) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jake Rawe Martyn Crossers servaunite’ in 1544, when he was among a large number of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is possible that the Martin Crozier was the one who resided at Earlside, but it is possible another Martin is meant. Thomas (19th C.) merchant and commission agent in Hawick. His estate was sequestered in 1885. He was a member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880.

Rawflat (raw-fla’) n. farm between Old Belses and Bloomfield in the southern part of Ancrum Parish. In 1502 Bartholomew Turnbull was tenant and Thomas Turnbull in 1540. It was recorded being in the Barony of Primside in 1579 when Walter Turnbull yielded some of the crops and income from his half of the lands in order to repay a debt to Allan Deans from Hawick. Walter Turnbull was Laird there when ordered to vacate the lands in 1581. However, later in 1581 he was murdered by a band of other Turnbuls, and then his wife ‘and hir puir bairnes’ were harassed by Turnbuls firing their weapons at the farm. ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ was a tenant in 1601 and Walter Turnbull was ‘younger of Raflet’ in 1603. It is also recorded in a criminal case relating to 1612, when it was owned by the Davidsons and farmed by William Rutherford. The lands were sold by Walter Turnbull to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623, and at that point were still in the Barony of Belses. Some time after that they were included in Ancrum Parish. It was inherited by Robert Bennet from his father Ragwell in 1670. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the later 17th century. John Wilkie, younger, was there in 1685. They were given to Rev. Joseph Leck of Yetholm in 1739 and passed from John Edmund Elliot to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1788 the lands were valued at £500 and owned by ‘Miss Ainslie’. It may once have been referred to as ‘Milton’ (it is ‘Rowflat’ in 1502, ‘Rawflat’ in 1538, ‘Raflet’ in 1603, ‘Raflett’ in 1612 and 1632, ‘Raeflat’ in 1617 and transcribed ‘Reuflat’ in 1678 and ‘Ranflat’ in 1684; this is probably the fortified house marked on Blaen’s 1654 map as ‘Raflett’, although a little too far south).

reader (ree-dir) n. a lay preacher who assists the Minister in Church. In earlier centuries the term referred to someone appointed to read the scriptures instead of the ordained priest or minister. In many post-Reformation churches there was a minister in charge of several parishes and a separate reader for each parish, often having been Catholic priests, and allowed to continue to preach, but barred from administering the sacraments; such appointments stopped following an Act of the General Assembly of 1581. The office of reader was officially abolished after the adoption of the Westminster Directory in 1645, but nevertheless continued in practice. The term later came to be used to refer to the Precentor. In Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries the Reader (who was usually the schoolmaster and Session Clerk) would read the scripture aloud for the congregation for up to an hour before the regular service began, and also during the interval in the lengthy services.

readiest (ree-dee-ist) n., arch. most ready for use, most immediately available as currency – ‘. . . agree that a new colour, standard, or pencell, should be bought . . . and to that effect to uplift and take the readiest burgess money’ [BR1707].

the Readin Room (thu-ree-dir-room) n. name formerly used for any one of a number of places where newspapers etc. could be read for a fee. There was one on Denholm Main Street in the late 19th century.

the Read Roads (thu-read-rōdz) n. name sometimes given to the former road passing from upper Teviotdale into Ewesdale. The road is mentioned in a travel account of 1629. It was the principal road from Carlisle to Hawick before about 1765 when the turnpike was opened. All traffic would have been on foot or horseback. Many miles of the old hollowed out tracks can be seen on the hillside around Linhope and Moss paul.

A good stretch is visible looking back from Linhope as the track stretches over part of Lightning Hill towards Phaup, close to the route that the Moss paul Ride-out usually takes. There is also a suggestion that it may have partly followed the course of a road built by the Romans, connecting the Lower Esk with Teviotdale, via Eweslees, Ewes Doors and Caerlenrig. Another (or related) road has been traced over the pass from Ewes Doors, via Haggis Side and Corbie Shank.

ream (ream) v., arch., poet. to froth, overflow, cream, form cream – ‘A reamin’ horn the board to grace’ [JR], ‘...And fill wi furthy glee A reamin’ cup, That I may drink A blythe New Year to thee’ [JT].

rectors (rekturz) n., pl. Headmasters of Hawick High School. The term was also used in its clerical in Hawick before the Reformation, and also for the incumbent of St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church. The educational term is synonymous with (but perhaps more respectful than) ‘The Pesh’. In Hawick the title was first used in the Grammar School, and then in the ‘United Schools’ when it merged with the Parish School, and thereafter in the Buccluch School and High School. A full list is: James Innes 1710–18; Robert Chisholme 1718–21; James Anderson 1722–46; William Dyce 1746–73; George Lamb 1773–88; Thomas Barrie 1788–98; James Kirk 1798–1818; James Murray 1818–53; Anthony Dodds 1853–90; William Pitcairn 1890–95; James Brand 1896–1906; William Lyndsay Thompson 1908–1919; A.M. Redeswire Redeswire (reed-swIr) n. marshy area at the head of the Rede, being formerly a pass through the Cheviots, near to the Carter Bar. And when they reach’d the Redeswire high, Soft beam’d the rising sun; Bit formless shadows seem’d to fly Along the muir-land dum’ [JL], ‘All the magical names were on my map – Eildon, Carterhaugh, Caerlenrig, Rediswire …’ [DH] (see the Raid o the Redeswire and Reid Swire).

Redford (red-furd) n. former name for an area near the modern Redfordgreen. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, mentioned many times in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1448, and consisting of 3 steadings. In 1459 they were let to David Scott. In 1480 they were granted to the Laird of Cranston. In 1486 the 3 steadings were leased again to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch, ‘without grassum on account of their waste condition’. It was leased by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1499 it was occupied by Robert Scott in 1499, when let to Patrick Home (the King’s Comptroller), on the refusal of Robert Scott. It was still Crown property in 1502 and in 1510 the 3 steadings of ‘Hyndhop, Dricleuchschell, et Redefurdegrene’ were feued to Alexander, Lord Home (it is ‘Redefurde’ in 1459 and 1480, ‘Redfurde’ and ‘Reidfurd’ in 1490, ‘Reidefurde’ in 1492, ‘Redefurd’ in 1499 and ‘Reidefurde’ in 1502).

Redford (red-furd) n. Alan (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains. Andrew (18th/19th C.) father of Andrew, farmer at Hermiston. He was probably the Andrew recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and earlier owned by James (probably his father). He is probably the resident of Lilliesleaf listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He married Isabel Stewart and their children included: James (b.1768); Andrew (b.1778). He may be the Andrew whose son James was baptised in 1763. Andrew (b.1778) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of Andrew and Isabel Stuart. He was tenant farmer for John G. Stewart of Hermiston. He is probably the Andrew who is recorded owning part of Davidson’s lands of Greenhouse in 1811, with his heirs being listed in 1874. He was at Hermiston in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 450 acres at Hermiston, employing 8 labourers. His wife was Isabella Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1805), who probably died young; John (b.1806/7); James (b.1809), farmer; Charles (b.1813), also died young; Andrew (again, b.1815); George (b.1817); Charles (again, b.1822); Jessie (b.1826/7), who married Walter Govenlock; Margaret; and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In the 1851 census he and his wife were recorded at the Maxwellheugh Tollbar House. He married Janet Grieve and their children included: James (b.1830), also a tailor; and William (b.c.1832), a draper. His widow was in Kelso in 1861, visiting her sister Jane Weatherstone. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Francis (17th C.) resi- dent at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. In 1690 in Ashkirk Parish he witnessed bap- tisms for William Scott and for John Murray and Margaret Redford. He is probably the Francis who married Bessie ‘Allion’ in 1699 and whose son William (b.1699) was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. He may also be the Francis who earlier married Isobel Chisholme in 1688 and whose children included Jean (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk, with witnesses William Scott and John (surely a relative). George (b.1817) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Isabella Scott. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1861 and was unmarried. James (16th C.) recorded being in Hassendeanburn in 1579 when he and his daugh- ter Margaret sold a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf to John. The price was 20 merks, a cow and a stone of wool. John was surely a rela- tive, but the relationship is not recorded in the transaction (which took place in Selkirk). He may be the Redford recorded as witness to a sasine for William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf in 1580/1. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1637) and Bessie (b.1638). His name is listed as ‘Reidfur’ and ‘Readfurt’. James (17th C.) married Bessie Pat-erson in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. Perhaps Marg- aret (b.1646) was his daughter. James (17th C.) married Margaret Dodds in Roberton Parish in 1686. His wife was from Bedrule Parish. Their son William was born in 1688. In 1686 (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Roberton Parish. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. Redfordgreen (d.bef. 1494) recorded in a case at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Nicholas and John, sons of Matthew Turnbull in Hassendean, had remission for his murder. It is not recorded where he was from. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, in 1483, relating to lands in Hassendean. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with William Gray. This was specifically the quarter belonging to George Turnbull. William (16th/17th C.) witness in 1607 to a sasine whereby John Scott gained possession of the lands of Holsburn and Weens. His surname is recorded as ‘Reidfurd’. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Wester Lilliesleaf. He gave evidence at the 1628 trial for witchcraft of Isobel Howison, stating that in the previous year, he had a sick cow and his mother sent for Howison, who cured the cow with a charm, but Howison herself fell ill. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘How’ ‘Houie’ or ‘Hoy’ in 1652. Their children included James (b.1657) and John (b.1661). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Dunclop and their children included Robert (b.1661). William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hassendeanbank when his will was recorded in 1688. His name is written as ‘Reidfoord’. He could be the William ‘Reedfoord’ recorded as a witness to baptisms in Roberton in 1680 (although crossed out) and 1681. In 1686 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Roberton Parish. William (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He probably lived near Hassendean Mains. He could be the same as the tenant of Hassendeanbank. William (17th C.) married Bessie ‘Vogan’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1688). He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at Essenside in 1702 and was tenant in Easter Essen in 1709 and 1717. He married Helen Gray and their children included: James (b.1702); Elizabeth and Margaret (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); John (b.1713); Magdalen (b.1714); and Elizabeth (again, b.1717). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Margaret Redford and Robert Gray, respectively, who had children a little later in Ashkirk Parish. He may be the William who, along with John, collected money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (b.1699) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of Francis. He married Janet Tait in 1726. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1724 as a collector of money for the Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands valued at £10 that had much earlier belonged to Alexander Hood. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 it is recorded that William Riddell of Camieston owned ‘William Redford’s Lands in Lilliesleaf, formerly Hood’s Lands’, which had been acquired by Edgar Hunter. William (b.1831/2) son of tailor Andrew and brother of James. He worked as a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He married Helen Robson and their children included Andrew and Jane (also written ‘Readfurt’, ‘Reedfoord’, ‘Redfoord’, ‘Reidfoord’, ‘Reidford’, ‘Reidforde’, ‘Reidfiurd’, ‘Reidfurde’, ‘Ridfoord’, ‘Rieford’, ‘Rudfoord’, etc.).

Redfordgreen (red-furd-green) n. area off the B711 between Alemoor and Buccleuch. The farms of East and West Redfordgreen are here, and it was also once the site of a country school. The farms formerly belonged to the Parish of Yetholm. The area was once owned by the Crown and split into 3 steadings of Redford, feuded by Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 it was ‘occupyit be the kingis gudis’, paying rental of £15 13s 4d. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitlade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1711–24, John Anderson and Robert Inglis in 1723 and Walter Park in 1734. Adam Scott was tenant at East Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel in 1716. The teinds were valued at £28 13s 4d in 1785 and 1802. It was valued, along with Drycleuchshiel at £169 6s 8d in 1785 when held by James Lauder of Carolside and in 1802 when held by Capt. Venner. Henry Thomas Rutherford was owner in the early 19th century and David Scott was tenant at about that time. The term ‘the forty thieves of Redfordgreen’ was used around the 1830s to refer to ‘faggot’ (i.e. artificial) voters after it was purchased by the Buccleuch estates – ‘By Borthwick Wa’s and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch … ’ [WHO], ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikimm, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Liliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (it is ‘Redefurdegrein’ in 1510, ‘Reidfurdegrein’ in 1541, ‘Reidfurdegrein’ in 1621, ‘Reidfurdegrein’ in 1633, ‘Readfurdf-grein’ in 1655, ‘Redfurgreen’ in 1693, ‘Reidfordgreen’ in 1711, ‘Riedfourdgreen’ in 1723 and ‘Reidfourdgreen’ in 1724; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Redford).

Redfordgreen Schuil (red-furd-green-skil) n. former country school on the moors at Redfordgreen. The building was in Selkirkshire, but also served some of the remote parts of Roberton Parish. The school operated from 1885–1955. A grassy mound is still visible in the field, and a small cairn was placed there in recent years. A book ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) was written by Kathleen W. Stewart. The Borders Archive holds the school admission book for 1885–1935 and log books for 1885–1955.

Redpath (red-, reed-path) n. village between St. Boswells and Earlston, still having its planned form around a single south-facing main street.

Redpath (red-, reed-path, -peth) n. Adam (1776–1823) hedger at Weens estate. He started there in 1805. He had a sister Margaret. He married Jane Cook, who died in 1841, aged 67 (who was said to be insane in later life). Their children included: William (b.c.1804), forester at Weens; John (b.c.1805), who lived for a while at Bonchester Bridgend; Betty (b.1809), spend most of her life as a servant at Weens; George (b.1811); Helen (b.1813), married Robert Smith and lived at the Sclenty, Blacklee and Denholm; Adam (b.1817), who died in infancy; and Margaret, a housemaid at Weens, who married a Yorkshireman and moved to Aldborough. He died at Sclenty Hall. After his early death his 2 sons William and John together took over his job for a while, with William eventually taking over himself. Many of the family are buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Adam (b.1838) son of William and Mary Smith. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. Later he was in Noble’s factory in Hawick. Anne, R.S.A., O.B.E. (1895–1965) born in Galashiels, 2nd daughter of Thomas Brown, a textile designer, and Agnes Milne. Her family moved to Hawick when she was 6 years old, after her father was offered the job of head of design at Glebe Mills. She attended Hawick High School in the period 1901–13 and then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art (concurrently with teacher training at Moray House). Graduating in 1918, she won a scholarship to visit Europe. She returned to France in 1920 with her husband (an architect who worked with the Imperial War Graves Commission), and they lived there until 1934. Her first exhibition was in 1921, and she also decorated family furniture with flowers and birds, which would later feature in her still life paintings. In 1934 her husband’s millionaire employer lost his fortune and the family returned to Britain, and she and her sons to Hawick and her husband to a job in London. She lived at 52 Orchard Terrace and on Beaconsfield Terrace. She was also President of Hawick Art Club. In this period she painted many landscapes around Hawick, and exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy. She became best known for her vividly colourful still lifes, replete with familiar household objects, often in disconcerting combinations, with ‘The Indian Rug’ and ‘Still Life with Orange Chair’ perhaps best exemplifying her unique style. She soon became one of Scotland’s best known artists. She was President of the Scottish Society of Women Artists 1944–47 and in 1952 was the first female painter to be elected to the Royal Scottish Academy. Further trips to the continent inspired a change in style and she produced distinctive Mediterranean landscapes. She became an O.B.E. in 1955 and was also granted an honorary degree from Edinburgh University. In public she was known for her extravagant hats and designer clothes. Her self-portraits are in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum. She later moved to Edinburgh. She suffered several heart attacks in later life, but continued to develop her artistic output, her last phase focusing on paintings of church interiors in Lisbon and Venice. In 1929 she married James Beattie Michie at Teviothead Kirk. She died following a fall at her home, 7 London Street, Edinburgh and was cremated. Books on her include ‘Anne Redpath 1895–1965, her life and work’ (1996) by Patrick Bourne, ‘Anne Redpath’ (1974) by George Bruce and ‘Anne Redpath, 1895–1965’ (1996) by Philip Long. David (b.1814/5) from Eccles, he was farm steward at Galalaw in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Janet, George and Robert. James (18th C.) gardener at Stobs. His surname is recorded as ‘Rippeth’ in the baptismal records for his children in Cavers Parish. His children included: James (b.1725); Helen (b.1727); Janet (b.1729); and an unnamed child (b.1734).

James L., O.B.E., served as President of the Callants’ Club in 1981, ??, John (b.c.1805) son of Adam and younger brother of William. He worked as a labourer in the Bonchester Bridge area, living for a while at Bridgend. He was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. Margaret (b.c.1785) sister of hedger Adam. In 1841 she was living at Sclynty Hall and listed as ‘Independent’. Also there were Jane (perhaps her mother) and the younger Elizabeth and Margaret. Neil (d.1888) from Hawick, he served in the Gordon Highlanders during WWI and was one of the last surviving holders of the 14–15 Star. He later became a strong pacifist and leading member of the local Labour Party. However, during WWII he served as a Lieutenant in the Home Guard. He worked as a foreman at Braemar. An enthusiastic supporter of athletics, he became Secretary of the Scottish Games Association. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (19th C.) land steward of Bonchester Bridge who was an elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. Thomas Kinmont ‘Kim’ (1925–2018) born in Aberdeen, son of William, he was nephew of artist Anne. He was educated at Hawick High School and partly raised by his aunt Anne, particularly after the death of his mother when he was 14. He graduated from Edinburgh College of Art in 1948. He served with the Royal Corps of Signals in WWII and trained as a teacher at Moray House. He was a secondary school art teacher for 35 years, starting in Galashiels. Several exhibitions were held of his art, which was strongly influenced by his aunt. His work can be viewed in several galleries, including the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. He was a member of the New Scottish Group and the Scottish Society of Artists. He married 3 times and had sons Tom and Adam. William (18th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1771. William (c.1805–86) born in Earlston, son of hedger Adam, he was forester at Weens. When his father died young in 1823, he and his brother John took over the job on one man’s wages, but after a couple of years he took over entirely. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed as a hedger at Weens, and in 1861 was a forrester there. He continued to work for the Cleghorns and Tancreds of Weens for his whole working life. He was made an Elder of the Kirk in 1838. He was said to have a dour temper and not to be liked by everyone. He spent some time in an asylum, later living with his daughter Mary in Denholm. He married Mary Smith, who died in 1869, aged 57; her brother was William Smith who married Mary Laidlaw from Weensmoor. Their children included: Ann (b.1833), who worked for a while as a laundry maid at Weens, later living in Denholm, died unmarried; Jane (1835–74); Adam (b.1838), servant at Weens and worked for Noble’s in Hawick; Mary, in service at Weens, married Mr. Dodds; Thomas, gardener at Bleenherhasset, Aspatria; and Elizabeth (b.1846), moved to Yorkshire. He died in Denholm at the age of 82 and is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (??–??) High School mathematician of the mid-20th century, nicknamed ‘Ghandi’.

reel (reel) n. a moderately fast dance for a group of dancers in couples, or the music for such a dance, often in quadruple time.

the Reel (thu-reel) n. another name for the Bull Reel, particularly as danced by the Cornet, Principals and ex-Cornets shortly before midnight during the Ball. It is not danced by the other participants, who just watch the proceedings. It is started with the Cornet presenting his sash for his Lass to wear, and the men putting on white gloves. The Principles start the Reel, with the ex-Cornets joining in order of their year of office. The dance is also repeated in front of the Tower on the return from the Moat after dawn, but this time only by the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men. It is also danced in front of the Tower after the Handing-Back on the Saturday. Before 1855, when there were Races held at the Haugh, the Cornet and his followers would dance the Reel at the Haugh after the Dinner on the Friday, and this was repeated after the Dinner was resurrected in 1886. They would dance in the middle of the gymnastic track and this would signal the start of the Games. The Reel was first danced at the Ball (by the ex-Cornets) only in 1891. The origin of the Reel is uncertain.

reffet (re-fe’) pp., poet. rieved, plundered, ravished – ‘Thou hest reffet awa my hait …’ [HSR].

the Reform Bill (thu-ree-form-bil) n. parliamentary bill introduced by Prime Minister Earl Grey in April 1831, being possibly the first voluntary scheme of government reform. After much political wrangling it finally passed in June 1832 and became the Reform Act. In 1812 the entire county of Roxburghshire had only 143 voters (up from 105 in 1788), of which a mere 2 or 3 were in Hawick. Hawick people were much involved in the political discussion, with several pro-Reform resolutions being made at public meetings, some of which were passed on to Parliament or the King. A holiday was declared when news reached Hawick of the Bill’s initial passing by the Commons in 1831. Trades and societies paraded the streets and bonfires were lit at the Tower Knowe and the Cross. Parliament was then dissolved and new elections called the day after the Hawick May Fair, when a contingent of about 1,000 Hawick men marched to Jedburgh. Defeat of the Bill in the House of Lords led to near revolution around Britain, including in Hawick. Final passage of the Bill was cause for perhaps the largest celebratory parade Hawick has known, in August 1832, organised by a special Reform Committee. The day started with 10 drummers and fifers parading through the town at 6 a.m. and 9 a.m. Bells were rung, the Flag was displayed from the Town Hall, and the flags of the trades and societies hung along the High Street. The crowd was estimated at 10–12,000, and the parade itself, starting at 1 p.m., consisted of over 1200 people in 16 separate sections, accompanied by 3 bands. This included the local landed (Whig) gentry, the Cornet, Magistrates and Council, Tradesmen’s guilds and Freemasons. The parade ended at the Sandbed, where the participants were met by smartly-dressed women and girls bearing flowers. 1,146 people then dined in the open air on the Upper Haugh, catered by 8 of the Town’s hotels. The Chief Magistrate was in the Chair, and other guests included Capt. George Elliot, Sir William F. Elliot, James Elliot of Wolfelee and George Cleghorn of Weens. There were also speeches by Robert Wilson and Rev. James Henderson. There was then a further march back to the Tower Knowe, and celebrations continued in various inns. As a result of the Bill the County had 1316 voters, and Hawick itself had 300 voters added to its electoral roll. However, a Commons Select Committee investigated abuses of the Bill through ‘fictitious voters’ being added, specifically joint proprietors of property arranged between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. At the election of 1835 there was a procession of voters and supporters from Hobkirk, Kirkton and Cavers marching into Hawick, accompanied by bands and banners. When it became clear that Lord Scott (the Tory candidate) was going to win, the crowds became quite unruly and the Riot Act was read, with a troop of the Scots Greys being called. The Reform Act of 1868 gave the vote to all male householders, and at that time the Hawick Burghs constituency was formed – ‘Huz and Mainchester carried the Reform Bill’ [T].

v., n. a young person sent to a rural area from a city to protect them from air raids etc., particularly during World War II, also sometimes referred to as an ‘evacuee’. In Hawick they were usually children from the Edinburgh area. There were also Belgian refugees at Silverbuthall during WWI; they arrived about 1915, and most of them returned to Belgium in 1919.

regard (ree-gard) v., n. regard – ‘...and on-lawed, conforme to the acts of the towne, in regard of their owne confessions ... ’ [BR1679], ‘No sermon, in regard Mr Douglass who was appointed by ye Persbyterie was labouring under a fever’ [PR1712], ‘...who was most sharplie rebuked in regard both that he is a magistrate in this towne and one of ye number of ye Elders’ [PR1716], ‘Daurin the whummlin flude without regard For ocht, bar riinn fish, this side o Hell’ [DH], ‘Wi sma regard For Hawick toon And even less For Maggie Broom ... ’ [DH], ‘...an’ was enlightened on the possession as regards the Common-Ridin’ ’ [BW1939].

Regal Bailie (ree-gul-ba-lee) n. also called a Bailie of Regality, title sometimes used for the representative of the Lord whose lands included a burgh, with certain administrative and legal powers in that burgh, including collection of rents, taxes at fairs, etc. The Douglases of Drumlanrig appointed a local man to hold this position up until they relinquished the Barony in about 1670. In Hawick this was for a long time the Chamberlain of the Scots of Buccleuch. The office was held by the Duchess of Buccleuch until she failed to take the test legislated by Parliament for Charles II. So in 1686 the office was granted to Walter Scott of Alton. Hawick’s Regal Bailie remained a powerful local figure until the abolishing of regalities by Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act of 1747 – ‘Gedeon Scott of Falnash, regal bailie to the Duchess of Buccleuch ...’ [BR1699] (see also Bailie o Regality and Baron Depute).

regency (ree-ga-nee) n. an administrative and legal area, typically larger than a barony, and usually given by the Crown. The jurisdiction of a regality superceded that of the Sheriff of the County. The Lord of the Regality had a distinct court, with its own clerk and officers, overseen by a Bailie of Regality. There were formerly 7 such jurisdictions in Roxburghshire, namely Glasgow (the former lands of that Bishopric), Hawick, Reginald (re-ji-nuld) n. of Cavers (13th C.) recorded in 1259 as witness to an agreement between Sir Hugh Abernethy and Sir William Douglas, signed in Edinburgh. His name is given as ‘Reginald Cauers’. It is unclear whether he was from Cavers or was perhaps a cleric associated with Cavers Kirk.

region (ree-ji-n) n. one of nine units into which Scottish local government was split following Reorganisation in 1974. Each region was divided into separate ‘districts’, Hawick being in the Borders Region until further reorganisation in 1995.

Regional Council (ree-ji-nil-koon-sul) n. the higher level of local council between May 1975 and April 1996. Hawick’s council being that of the Borders Region with headquarters in Newtown St. Boswells. Regional councils were responsible for education, social services, roads and transport. Both District and Regional Councils were replaced by unitary authorities in 1996, Hawick lying within the juristiction of the Scottish Borders Council.

the Registrar’s (thu-re-jeo-strawrz) n. Registrar’s office, where civil weddings took place. From 1974–97 it was located at 12 High Street, which is now a grade B listed building. Latterly the office has been within the Town Hall. The first Registrar in Hawick was schoolmaster Anthony Dodds 1854–87, following the Registration Act of 1854. James Shiel was appointed as the first Registrar of Wilton about the same time. Both of these men would operate out of their own homes, on Allars Crescent and Laing Terrace, respectively.

was still at Acreknowe in 1851. He married Margaret Aitkin and their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Elizabeth Frances (b.1824); William (b.1825); Gilbert Aitkin (b.1827); Walter (b.1833); Margaret (b.1836); James (b.1838); and Elizabeth Frances (b.1842). William ‘Wull Reid’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Redde servauntae to John Crosser’, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. Many of the relevant Croizers were connected with the Slitrig valley at that time. It is possible his name was ‘Reddy’ or some other variant. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hummelknowes. In 1709 he married Isobel Leyden, the marriage being recorded in Cavers Parish. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for William Helm in 1731. He married Helen Armstrong and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1721). The witnesses in 1719 were Beadle John Scott and William Hislop. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whithope in 1757, 1763 and 1773 and 1775. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Margaret (b.1755), Isobel (b.1757), Agnes (b.1759), John (b.1761), Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1773) and an unnamed daughter (b.1775). William (18th C.) recorded at Acreknowe in 1788 when his son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish and in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. He is probably the William who married ‘Angus’ Cavers in Kirkton Parish. In 1790, he was a journeyman mason at Workington, employed 6 farm labourers. William J.S. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘Drumlanrig and the Charter’ for the 1938 Transactions (formerly written ‘Red’, ‘Reed’, ‘Rid’, etc.).

Reid Acre Brae (reed-ăr-kur-brâ) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

the Reid Book (thu-reed-book) n. name sometimes given to the handbook-sized set of words for the most popular Hawick songs, published in 1957 along with ‘The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection’. Carried around and dog-eared over 3 decades it was replaced by the ‘Blue Book’ in 1978 and then the ‘Green Book’ in 2001.

reid-cap (reed-kawp) n., arch. a cruel, mischievous spirit with long teeth, said to inhabit old towers – ‘Redcap is a popular appellation of that class of spirits which haunts old castles. Every ruined tower in the south of Scotland is supposed to have an inhabitant of this species’ [JL] (cf. Robin Redcap).

Reidcleuch Edge (reed-klooeh ej) n. Reidcleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is Red Sike.

reid-coat (reed-kō) n., arch. the scarlet ladybird. Local children used to pick it up and throw it in the air singing ‘reed-coat, reed-coat, fly away, An’ make the morn a sunny day!’ [GW].
reid-hand

(reed-hawnd) adj., arch. a legal term from the 15th and 16th centuries, meaning caught in the act of a crime, used throughout Scotland. This led to the present use of the phrase ‘caught red-handed’, which was adapted into English, especially after being popularised in Sir Walter Scott’s novels.

reid-keel (reed-keel) n., arch. ruddle, red pigment – ‘Ruddle is ‘reid keel’, plumbago is ‘black keel’ [JAHM].

Reidheugh (reed-, red-hewch) n. Redheugh, ancient seat of the Elliot family, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. Scott of Satchells suggests that the Elliots received Redheugh from Robert the Bruce in about 1320. The name first occurs in a rental roll of Liddesdale in about 1376 (worth 15 shillings, ‘per forincecum seruicium reddendo x s’). An Elliot of Redheugh is referred to around 1400. There is also a story, apparently from a manuscript of the Blackadder family, of an Elliot of Redheugh called ‘Chiefman of the South’, who was killed in battle along with his 3 sons, but had a daughter Mary who married Cuthbert Blackadder of that Ilk and had a son who was alive in 1447. However, the first definitive record of this being the family seat is when ‘Robert elwald of ye Redheuch’ is mentioned in 1476. A precept for the lands is recorded in 1489, although the date of the original charter is unknown. Robert, the 17th chief lived mainly at the new Larriston house, so Redheugh became less prominent. That Robert failed to have a male heir and the lands went to his daughter Margaret, who married a son of Elliott of Stobs, whose descendants were the Elliots of Larriston. Thomas Armstrong is recorded as possessor of the lands in 1632. The farm itself was valued at £96 11s in 1678, when disjoined from the former estate of Elliott of Larriston. Robert of Larriston went bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, but they were repurchased by William Elliot (descendant of the Fahash branch) in about 1730 for his 2nd son, Robert. Around this time the present house and barn were built, with the north and east sides of the farmhouse perhaps incorporating earlier walls. The farm was still valued at £96 11s in the 1788 county valuation and 1811 Land Tax Rolls. The farm suffered greatly in the flood of 1846. Robert’s grandson Robert died in 1915 and in 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold the farm to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Thomas Scott sold it to Sir Gilbert Elliott, 10th Baronet of Stobs in 1946. The farm has been modernised, with a small loch created by damming the Rede Burn. A clan museum is also situated there. The precise location of the original tower is uncertain, with locals pointing out one site in the 19th century (recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858) to the south near the railway viaduct, another just to the east of there, where there are some foundations and a third to the west of the farmhouse, where there is an enclosure where a plaque has been placed marking this as the ‘Site of Redheugh Tower’ (although there is no real evidence for this). On the opposite side of the Hermitage Water there is another site claimed to be home of ‘Jock of the Park’. And north-west of the farmhouse there is an area of rig lines and field systems (also spelled ‘Redheuch’ and sometimes erroneously ‘Redhauh’). The origin of the name is probably just ‘red height’, i.e. the height above the Rede Burn; it is ‘Redeheugh’ in about 1376 and is recorded regularly from at least 1476; it was ‘Redheuch’ in 1489, ‘redeheuch’ in 1502, ‘Redheucht’ in 1508, ‘Redheuche’ in 1510 and 1515/6, ‘Redheuch’ in 1526, ‘the Redhwych’ in 1546, ‘the Reidhewcht’ in 1547 and 1548, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1550, ‘Reidhuch’ in 1557, ‘Reideuch’ in 1561, ‘Riedheucht’ in 1563, ‘Ridhewacht’ in the 1570s, ‘Ridheuch’ in 1573, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1574 and 1591, ‘Ridheuch’t in about 1580, ‘Reidhewch’ and ‘Readhewghe’ in 1584, ‘Reidhewch’ in 1581, 1583/4 and 1584/5, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1602, ‘Reidheuche’ in 1607, ‘Reideleuch’ in 1608, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1613, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1619, ‘Ridheuch’ in 1624, ‘Reidheuce’ in 1632 and ‘Reedheugh’ in 1694; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Reedheuch’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ridheuch’ and is ‘Redeheuch’ by the time of Stobie’s 1770 map.

the Reid Lion (thu-reed-II-in) n. the Red Lion Inn, at the Sandbed in the early 19th century, with proprietor Robert Scott. Also a nickname in use for someone in the early 19th century.

Redmoss (reed-mos) n. Redmoss, farmstead in Liddesdale, just north of Whisgills, on the Tinnis Burn. It was at one time part of the farm of Flatt. It is probably the ‘Redemoss’ listed in about 1376 (in the charters of Douglas of Morton) as a 12-shilling land. In 1541 it was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and valued at 30 pence. Other lands of the same name are also listed in 1541 as being vacant. It is stated (in a note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784) that the former farm of Puddingburn was on its lands. Thomas Wilson possessed these lands, along with Over and Nether Whisgills, in 1632. It is described in 1718 in a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, when along with Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead and Side it consisted of 2390 acres. William Anderson died there in 1781. Thomas Telfer was shepherd there in 1797. There were Turnbulls there in the mid-19th century and Adam Scott was farmer in 1868. David Anderson wrote a song about the old tree his grandfather had planted there. There are remains of other buildings on the Tinnis Burn to the north-west, as well as old rig lines and boundary banks in the area (it is 'Reidmoss' and 'Reidmos' in 1541 and 'Ridmos' in 1632; it marked 'Redmoss' on Stobie's 1770 map).

reid-ribbon (reed-ri-bin) adj., arch. bloodshot (of the eyes), having heavily inflamed eye-lids – 'Reed-ribbon-oon = bloodshot eyes, especially when the lids are inflamed' [ECS].

Reidsmuir Plantin (reedz-mewr-plawn'-in) n. Redsmuir Plantation, small wood between Tythehouse and Harwood, on the south side of the Harwood Burn.

Reid's Relay (reedz-reec-lā) n. radio and television cable company, which helped provide Terries with decent signals in the middle of the 20th century. This included some council houses that were refused permission to erect aerials in the 1960s. In the 1930s the firm of George Reid Radio received the BBC signal on a 75 ft aerial, off Croft Road, behind their North Bridge Street premises, and relayed the signal around town by means of cables. The sets to receive the signals required no electrical power, and gave much better reception than a radio set. When TV arrived in the 1950s Reid's installed a TV receiving mast above the Wellgate, and most Hawick households rented their sets and cable connections from Reid's, although another local firm (Lawrence's) competed. The end for the company came with the erection of new masts at Ashkirk, and the booster on the Miller's Knowes.

Reid Swire (reed-swIr) n. former name for the hill on the Border, essentially synonymous with the Carter Bar. This is where the River Rede rises, and was the location of the fray of 1575 – 'On July seventh, the truth to say, At the Red-Swire the tryst was set: Our Wardens they affix'd the day, And as they promis'd, sae they met' [CPM] (see also Redeswire).

reid-wud (reed-wud) adj., arch. excessively angry, insane – 'The copper-nosed Kers, the towzy Turnbulls, and the red-wudd Ridderfords' [ES], '... His wee ambitious heart maist like to burst Wi' red-wud rage ...' [JoHa], 'Here am I sittin' doon to write, Red-wud wi' spleen, pang fu' o' spite' [JoHa], working at top speed – 'Ee're aither reed-wud or stane-tired' [GW] (from Old English).

reik (reek) v., arch. to fit out, rig – '... and de-bursed be the town of Hawick in reiking out of the soldiers, in maintenance and arms ...' [BR1644], to get ready for marriage – 'A' reekin' ready for a wife an' kirk. O, for a parish, what he would bestow on't' [JoHa], 'She was grand reekit oot for the kirk' [GW] (also written 'reek').

Reinle (rin-ul) n. Dr. Karl E.T. (b.c.1865) from Lucerne, Switzerland, he graduated from Basel University. He came to Hawick in 1894 and was organist at the Old Parish Church until 1901, when Adam Colledge took over. He was also a private music teacher of piano and voice. He was a close friend of Adam Grant, Dr. Barrie and J.E.D. Murray. He was still in Hawick in 1905, but what happened to him after that is unclear.

Renbourn (ren-börn) n. John (1944–2015) English guitarist and songwriter, probably best known for his work with folk group Pentangle. Late in life he moved to the Snoot, where he died.

renshel (ren-shel) v., arch. to beat with a stick – ‘To renshel beasts wi’ a rung, when not taking the right road’ [JoJ], n. a tall, thin person or object – ‘He’s naething but a lang renshel’ [JoJ].

Rennaldburn (re-uld-burn) n. former lands to the east of Eskdalemuir. It was once a seat of a branch of the Scotts. The later farmhouse there is said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice – ‘Warn Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free. To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee’ [WSB] (spelled variously ‘Renaldburn’, ‘Renalburn’, etc.; there are lands with a similar name in Jedburgh Parish).

Rennie (re-nee) n. John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880 and Treasurer of the Chapel Building Fund. He was still Treasurer in the 1890s. William (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmo rany’. An ox was stolen from him, from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. He could be the same man recorded as 1494/5 as ‘raix’ for what seems like the same crime.

Rennison (ren-nil-sin) n. Richard (b.1803/4) born in Bedrule Parish. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, either as Liddesdale carrier or candlemaker (the other surely being his father). In 1851 he was a ‘Pensioner’ on the Back Row. In 1851 he was ‘Chelsea Pensioner; Blind’ and a lodger on O’Connel Street. In 1826 he married Isobel Annison. His wife was Isabel, and his children included Margaret, Isabel, Richard, Barbara, Elspeth and William. Richard (b.1763/4) listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. 2 men of the same name were recorded, one a Liddesdale carrier, the other a candlemaker; they were surely father and son. In 1841 he was a pauper living with blacksmith William Bowie on the Mid Row (also ‘Ronaldson’ and variants).

Renny Watson Trophy (thu-re-nee-wat-sin-tró-fee) n. trophy competed for annually at Hawick Golf Club, named after Sir William Renny Watson.

Renwick (re-neck) n. Alexander (1780–1800) son of shoemaker Robert. His death is recorded in Hawick. Alexander (18th/19th C.) draper and stocking manufacturer on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Allan (19th C.) hosier manufacturer of the early 1800s, operating on the High Street. Andrew (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Benjamin ‘Benjie’ (b.1800) son of James, he was born at Appotside. He was a mole-catcher in Hobkirk Parish and apparently very popular in the district. He helped with shooting parties, and was also said to be a poacher. Charles (b.c.1802) son of Francis and Mary Jordon and probably grandson of Francis and Margaret Rae. He may have been related to the Renwicks of Blackleemouth. He lived in Hobkirk Parish and married Margaret Hislop. Their children were Mary (married Alexander Davie), Isabella (married Adam Rutherford) and Robert (married Isabella Scott). David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1725. He is probably the Renwick who witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, resident of Borthaugh, in 1694. He may be the George, married to Margaret Wright, whose children included: Robert (b.1670); Margaret (b.1674); Janet (b.1676); and Isobel (b.1678). He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for Robert Wright in 1671. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living on the Sandbed in 1697 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Renwick (who was probably related) and James Shortreed. George (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. He may have been descended from the earlier George. He was probably the flesher who was among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances of the Common Riding of 1706. He was on the short-list for candidates for Cornet in 1710 and 1712 and was elected in 1712. In 1712 he and Robert (also a flesher) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Hardie and in 1714 another for smith Thomas Huntly. He witnessed baptisms for John Ekron in 1718 and 1721. Also in 1721 he witnessed a baptism for William Wright and Christian Renwick (perhaps his daughter), along with flesher Robert. In 1720 (along with Robert, also a flesher), he witnessed a baptism for fellow flesher John Little. He married Janet Purdom in Hawick in 1714 and their children included John (b.1715), Margaret (b.1716), Michael (b.1718), Helen (b.1719), George (b.1720), Margaret (again, b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). The witnesses in 1716 were John Watson (Clerk of the Regality) and merchant John Little and in 1718 were John Gardner and ‘maltman’ John Hardie. George (18th C.) weaver in Denholm, recorded in 1726 and 1731. He is recorded there in 1841, with his wife and daughter Elizabeth. His wife was Agnes Ewart (1867/8–1843). He is buried at Teviothead. Gideon (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He is probably the Gideon, son of William and Margaret Boyd, who married Kath- erine Miller in 1771, and whose children included: Jane (b.1771); an unnamed child (b.1772); Janet (b.1775); William (b.1778); Gideon (b.1781); and Catherine (b.c.1785), who married William Richardson and emigrated to Canada. In 1784, along with shoemaker William, he witnessed a baptism for James Mossman an Janet Renwick (who may have been his sister). His daughter
Renwick

Janet married John Gibson, and was murdered by him in 1813. Gilbert (15th C.) listed as ‘Gilbert Ranwyk’ in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme. His progeny were bequeathed 20 shillings. He could be the Gilbert listed as a rebel in 1502, along with Thomas Grahamslaw and Thomas Scott, rebels involved in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Humphrey (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wmfrao de Ranwyk’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Robert is listed after him, so presumably his son or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Isabella (b.1826/7) from Inveresk, she was a milliner and dressmaker in Hawick. She was listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was at about 7 Buccleuch Street with her younger sister Elizabeth. James (18th/19th C.) mole-catcher who lived at Howashiels. His children William (b.1789) and Janet (b.1792) both died young, but he moved to Appotside where another William (b.1794) and Janet (b.1796, mother of tailor James Grieve) were born, as well as Benjamin (b.1800, also a mole-catcher). He is probably the James living at Midburn in 1790 when his son George was baptised. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick in the early 1800s. James (1843–1910) born in Robertson, son of William and Jane Nichol. He was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He conducted business in Dumfries for a while, returning to Hawick in 1888 to found James Renwick & Co., Ltd, hosiery manufacturers of Commercial Road. He may also have had Mansfield Mills built (or extended) on Mansfield Road. He was associated with the temperance movement and East Bank Church. In 1869 he married Jeanie Laing (1843–1927), who was grand-daughter of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He had 4 surviving sons, 2 of whom (James and Robert Hogg) continued in the hosiery business. His 7 sons were: William (1870–c.82); Adam (1872–c.84); James (b.1874), who died in infancy; James (b.1875), who followed him into hosiery manufacturing; Robert Hogg (1877–1949), also a hosiery manufacturer; George; and William (b.1833). He died at Wilton Hill. James (b.1875) son of James and Jane Laing. He was a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He was educated in Dumfries and at Teviot Grove, then worked in the family hosiery firm, becoming a partner. He represented Teviot Ward on the Town Council for 22 years from 1906, was elected Magistrate and was Provost 1922–28. His Provostship saw the High Street paved with setts, completion of the expansion of the sewage works, and the building of Moat Crescent and Renwick Terrace, the latter being named after him. He was also Chairman of the committee that built the first council houses at Oliver Park. A keen Common Riding supporter, his son James junior was Cornet while he was Provost, and he started the tradition of the Provost’s Tent. He opened ‘the Hut’ in the year that his son was Cornet. He was Chairman of the Unionist Association for many years, as well as a Callants’ Club President and was an elder of the East Bank Church. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop on 1909 and was one of the first 2 scoutmasters in Hawick. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. He married Miss Lefevre of Canterbury in 1902. They lived at Fernbank on Wilton Hill. James (20th C.) son of Provost James. He worked for the family knitwear business and moved to London to represent the firm there. His son Geoffrey was a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, who was murdered by a fellow soldier while serving in Germany. James 'Jim' (1953–) Hawick rugby player, at Centre, a born West-Ender and electricity linesman by trade. Richard (c.1769–1839) son of Robert. He became a Thatcher like his brother Moses. He was Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk. He married Janet Parker from Northumberland, and they lived at Mosshouses. Their children were: Robert, who died in Rulewater aged 73; George, who lived in Edinburgh; Thomas, who married Margaret Tefter; Mabel, who married Robert Henderson and emigrated to Canada; and Betty, who married John Baptie and later in life lived in Denholm. Richard (1850–1915) born at Town-o-Rule, only son of Thomas and grand son of Richard. He was a foreman sur faceman on the railway. He lived at Hassendean and in Denholm, and was heavily involved in the Kirk there. He married Margaret Turnbull, also from Rulewater, and she died in 1922, aged 71. Their children were William, gardener at Holyrood; Richard, who worked for the North British Railway; Thomas, also worked for the railway; John, a joiner in Winnipeg, Canada; James, in the Hawick Post Office; Robert, an engineer; Peter, who worked in Denholm; George; Lizzie; Jessie, who married John Phillips; and Maggie. He was killed while on duty near Hassendean Station during a snowstorm, and there is a memorial stone to his memory in Denholm cemetery. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto de Ranwyk’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milngton. Humphrey ‘de Ranwyk’ is also listed before him, so presumably his father or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at ‘Hill’, which must have been somewhere in Rulewater. His wife ‘Marjory Sorry’ (1701/2–62) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’. In 1712 he and George (also a flesher) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Hardie. In 1720 (along with George, also a flesher), he witnessed a baptism for fellow flesher John Little and in 1721, along with flesher George he witnessed a baptism for William Wright and Christian Renwick (who was surely related to him). He could be the Robert, son of George, born in Hawick in 1670. His children baptised in Hawick included George (b.1700) and William (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John Scott, merchant William Scott and cooper John Turnbull. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724, 1728, 1733 and 1736. The death of his son Alexander was recorded in 1800. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Lairhope in 1786. He married Janet Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1786, with witnesses ‘Congregation of the Chapel’ (probably meaning those who attended the chapel at Caerlenrig). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1790 and 1792 he witnessed baptisms for James Renwick and Mary Renwick (one of whom he was surely related to). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Hawick in 1793. Robert (18th C.) listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.1809) Hawick resident who was father of David, John and Thomas, according to his death record. He is probably the Thomas who married Janet Laurie in Ashkirk in 1761 and had children: David (b.1762); Thomas (b.1765); John (b.1767); John (again, b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); and Thomas (again, b.1774). Robert (d.beft. 1790) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Tudhope in Hawick Parish in 1766 and she died in 1790. Their children included William (b.1767) and Helen (b.1771). He may be the same man as one of the other Roberts. Robert (19th C.) born in West Linton, he worked at Hawick Mill. He was there in 1841 and 1851, when his uncle John Oliver was the miller. He wrote a letter about the flood of 1846, which survives as a useful eyewitness account. Robert (b.1839) born at Town-o-Rule, son of Charles and Margaret Hislop. He married Isabella Scott and their children included Robert. Robert (b.c.1865) son of Robert and Isabella Scott. He lived at Langraw Scaur in Hobkirk Parish and was tenant at Weens Nursery. Robert Hogg (1877–1949) son of James and Jane Laing, born on Allars Crescent. He was brother of Provost Renwick and a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, author of ‘Teribus’. He was educated in Dumfries and then Hawick. He worked with Aitken the drapers and then joined his father’s hosiery firm, later becoming Director. He was keen on golf, gardening and music. He was organist at St. Andrew’s Kirk for more than 25 years (until an injury to his hands prevented him from playing). He was instrumental in organising the Border Music Festival, being President, Chairman and Secretary, and reviving it after WWII. He was President of the Callants’ Club, President of the Rotary Club, a member of Lodge 111 and member of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association. He was a Special Constable during both World Wars. In 1919 he married Margaret D. was a teacher (formerly spelled ‘Ranick’, ‘Renick’, ‘Rennick’, ‘Rennie’, etc.).
Renwick’s

Renwick’s (re-neeks) n. hosiery manufacturers of James Renwick & Co. Their main premises were on the west side of Commercial Road from 1914, this being built in 1888 for William Galloway & Sons. They later moved to a factory near the top of Mansfield Road, called Mansfield Mills, which closed in 1992. This later became Jaeger, and was more recently converted into flats. A book of knitting patterns from the 1920s was saved by Gerry Graham, featured in the ‘Antiques Roadshow’ in 2020.

Renwick Terrace (re-neek-te-ris) n. street off Rosebank Road at the top of the Loan, built in 1928 and named after Provost James Renwick.

Reorganisation (ree-or-gi-I-za-shin) n. name usually given to the major shake-up of local government in 1974, following the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1973. This abolished town and county councils, replacing them with ‘districts’ and ‘regions’. It was sometimes jokingly referred to as ‘Disorganisation’. This system in turn was overhauled in 1995/6 in favour of a single-tier system, which lumps Hawick governance in with other Border towns in the Scottish Borders Council.

repentance (re-pen’-ins) n., arch. the act of penitence, public atonement for transgressions before a congregation. For centuries, until into the 1800s public atonement was a major part of community life in Hawick. Infringements liable to this punishment included adultery, ‘irregular’ marriages and other crimes. In the early 1700s the penitent would stand at the Kirk door in sackcloth for an hour before the third bell was rung, then after the congregation and minister had entered, they would be led into the Kirk to the ‘stool of repentance’ or ‘pillar’, standing bare-headed through the sermon and thereafter berated publicly. Sometimes the Session required this process to be repeated for many Sundays in a row. These practices ended in about 1800 – ‘...and was ordered to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days ...’[PR1715].

repine (ree-pin) v., arch., poet. to complain, show discontent – ‘...ye must beare it patientlie and without repyning’[SB1670], ‘When Souls thought on his merry men now, A woefull wight was he; Says – Vengeance is mine, and I will not repine But Branhholm’s heir shall die’[JL] (also written ‘repyne’).

repone (ree-poun) v., arch. to reply, answer, to reinstate, restore – ‘...Andrew Jerdan...desired that seeing others had possessed the place, where his wife...had a stool the space of a year...she might be reponed to the place’[PR1715] (in older legal documents).

repreif (ree-preef) n., poet. reproof – ‘Thus was I as ane man that heersna, an’ in whose mooth ar nae repreifs’[HSR].

repute (ree-pew) pp., arch. reputed, considered – ‘...the said Laird of Gladstaines, will be holden and reput as ane piece of singular kyndness done to him ...’[BR1704], particularly in the phrase ‘habit and reput’ or ‘held and repute’ – ‘...unless the said strangers or incomers be notourly held and repute at the time of setting ...’[BR1736].

requirit (ree-kwi-ri’, -ree’) pp., adj., arch. required – ‘Item, that the hale websters within the Bruch of Hawick and freedom thereof, convene and meet together at ilk time they sal be requirit be the craftsmen ...’[BR1640].

resave (ree-sav) v., arch. to receive, take formal possession of, take receipt of – ‘...sal ressaue the said David, or his sone and appering are, temand or tennandis to me and myn aieris of the sammyn landis ...’[SB1470], ‘I, George Scot of the Quhammys, grantis me till haue resauit fra Johne Myre ...’[SB1510/1], ‘Forsamekill as ye sall ressaif Arche Armstrang, my freind ...’[SB1587], ‘Resaved for the mortcloath from archbald Eliot £1’[Wil1705] (there are spelling variants).

Reservoir Park (re-zur-vwar-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common lying to the north-west of Acreknowe Reservoir.

the Restoration (the Return) n. popular name for the period in Scottish history when Charles II was restored onto the British throne after the defeat of the Crounells. This marked the revival of the Scottish Parliament, but also an escalation of persecution of the Covenanters in the ‘Killing Times’. The term applies both to the event of 1660 itself, as well as to the entire period between then and the ‘Glorious Revolution’ of 1688.

resurrectionist (resurrectionist) n., arch. a grave-rober or body-snatcher, particularly in the early 19th century. There was a scare throughout Scotland in the 1820s, following the celebrated cases of Burke and Hare and others. Two Berwickshire doctors were arrested in 1820. In Hawick an association of householders was formed for watching the cemeteries. Small houses were built at the entrances of both Hawick and Wilton churchyards, with 3 men on watch each night, patrolling every 15 minutes. No graves in the town were desecrated, although there were plenty of rumours and practical jokes.

Return from Hornshole

Return from Hornshole see Return to Hawick

Return from Hornshole (ree-turn-from-hørznz-hól) n. song written by Alan Brydon. It was first performed at the 1514 Club’s ‘Hawick Sings’ concert in 2011 by his daughter Cheryl. Ian Seeley provided a piano accompaniment, which is somewhat complicated and even he describes as ‘a specialist, or art, song’.

Return to Hawick (ree-turn-too-hIk) n. painting by Tom Scott, full title ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’, completed in 1898. It is also sometimes referred to as ‘Return from Hornshole’. The painting was commissioned by the Town and 260 high quality lithographic copies were made, along with other copies later. The original is in the Museum, held by the Hawick Common Good Fund. It was formally presented at the 1898 Colour Bussing by Thomas Shaw M.P. People from Bowden acted as models, with Mr. Cockburn of Kippilaw carrying the flag. Other identified people are Harry Puttillo as the old man with the pack, Madge Dalgleish as the fair-haired girl beside the youth, ‘Pa’ Hume the old man with the pack, Betty Revel, and Bettie Jamieson as the pretty maids in the rear.

Revel (re-vul) n. Elizabeth ‘Bet’ (19th C.) maker of sweets, including ‘rock bools’, living at the eastern end of the north side of the High Street in the latter part of the 19th century. She may have been the Eliza born in 1837, daughter of Archibald, or one of several other possibilities (the family lived in both Hawick and Wilton) – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a’; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’[HI]. Francis (b.1779/80) from England, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. He lived at about 77 High Street in 1841 and 1851, along with his wife Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’). They had a son Hendry and a grand-daughter Eliza. Their son Francis died in Hawick in 1840. Francis (1843/4–81) probably a cousin of ‘Bet’. He married Sarah Ann Campbell, who died in 1916, aged 74. Their children were Archibald, Agnes and Francis (who died in infancy). He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery. William (b.1807/8) from Jedburgh. He was a tailor at about 62 High Street according to the 1841 census and at No. 23 in 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Francis, William, Mary, Jane, Betsy and John Dacker (also written ‘Revell’).

revellin (re-ve-li) n., arch. an occasion of making merry, instance during which people revel – ‘Whereas there have been formerlie several enormities, debates and revellings committed at ye ridinge of ye marches of ye Common belonging to this toun ...’[PR1725].

the Revolution (thu-re-vo-loo-shin) n. religious and political change in Britain in 1688 and 1689, leading to the removal of James II, a Catholic, and his replacement by William I (of Orange) and his wife Mary II, both Protestants. It is sometimes known as ‘the Glorious Revolution’ or ‘the Bloodless Revolution’. It also led to the throwing out of the episcopalian system and the setting up of the Reformed, Established, Presbyterian Church of Scotland in 1690. As a result of these changes there was a dearth of Presbyterian ministers, which left Hawick Parish vacant for about 2 years, while Wilton, Cavers and Hobkirk were vacant for 5 years. Formerly Episcopalian ministers who refused to ‘pray for William and Mary’ were denied their livings. In the 33 parishes in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Selkirk and Kelso, only 3 ministers (at Kirkton, Abbotrule and Ancrum) obeyed the order, the others being ejected. This included John Langleys of Wilton, Thomas Somerville of Cavers and John Liddle of Hobkirk. The Scottish Episcopalian Church took a long time to re-establish itself. These events also affected Scottish history for the next several decades, with Stuart sympathisers, Jacobites, staging uprisings in the Highlands.

Riccarton

Riccarton (ri-kul-tin) n. farm high up on the Oxnam Water. This is probably the place referred to in a charter to the Riddells of that Ilk in the mid-12th century. 2 men from here (Adam ‘de Rukelton’ and Adam ‘de Rykeldon’, possibly the same name twice) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The farm belonged to Lord Jedburgh in the 17th century and the Marquis of Lothian in the 18th century (not to be confused with ‘Riccarton’, although the origin of the name may be similar, here probably being ‘Ricela’s hill’ from the Old English personal name plus ‘tun’ for ‘hill’; the name is first recorded as ‘Richeldoun’ in 1150).

Riccalton see Riccarton

Riccaltoun see Riccarton

Riccartoun (ri-kar-in, -kar-tin) n. town around the station on the Waverley Line, about half way to Newcastle, being a junction with the line linking to Hexham. Before the railway it had no settlement, but it developed into a small village with as many as 120 residents. The main housing consisted of 2 terraces of housing and 4 semi-detached cottages. It had its own school and a branch of the Hawick Co-op. The farm of the same name is about 1 1/2 miles down the Riccarton Burn on the main road, and has the remains of the old peel tower located further up the burn. The tower measures about 13 m by 9 m, now partly covered with a sheepfold, and with 2 rectangular platforms to the north, which were probably other buildings. A stone disc, probably found near here, is in Hawick Museum. The present farm was formerly marked as ‘Nether Riccartoun’, with ‘Over Riccartoun’ at the ruined tower (but still about a mile from the railway village). The lands here are recorded as being worth 7 shillings in a rental list of about 1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 they were valued at 40 shillings andtenant by Elliot and Croziers. Will Crozier was there in 1590. Adam Beattie was tenant in 1694. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, covering 852 acres, bounded by Pinglehole, the Liddel Water, Taylorcleuchhead, Roughlee and Laws. The farmhouse at that time is shown fairly close the modern farm buildings. James Wardlaw was there in 1748 and Ninian Elliot in 1778. The Grieves of Branxholme Park farmed there in the late 18th century and in 1800 it was leased to surgeon Charles Maxwell (son-in-law of Jardine of Thorlieshope). After that Jardines were the tenants. Walter Jackson was there in 1821 and Charles Jardine in at least the 1850s and 60s. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers

Rib tops (rib-tops) n., pl., arch. ribbed part at the top of a sock or other item of hosiery (noted by E.C. Smith).
on the 1861 census. The Riccarton-Hexham line closed in 1956, and the village was abandoned after the Waverley Line closed in 1969. Very little remains to suggest the former size of the community. Synonymous with ‘the middle of nowhere’, no road served the area until 1963 when a forest track was opened. A book ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ was written by Kit Milligan in 1994. Graptolites and other fossils have been found in the rocks of the area – ‘Now Riccarton, to some folk, is just a godless plot o railway lines, a limbo for locomotives, clappit doon without regard for the comfort o man nor beast on the top o a bare hill’ [DH]

(Riccarton) (ri-kar’-in, -kar-tin, -kal-) n. Rev. John (d.1800) only son of Robert. He was licensed by the Presbyterian Classis in Northumberland in 1749 and ordained in 1755 as minister of South Shields. He was then Chaplain at the ‘chapel-of-ease’ in Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) from some time in 1764 or perhaps early 1765. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in mid-1765 and became minister there at the end of that year. He farmed the lands of Unthank for some time. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–87. In 1799 there are documents relating to the value of the teinds for the lands of Harwood, suggesting a dispute between him and Sir William Elliott of Stobs on the one hand, and William Elliott of Harwood on the other. In 1780 he married Helen Irvine (or Irving, who died in 1827) and their children were: Janet, who died aged 23; Robert; Ann; William; Patrick; John, who was also a minister; James Thomas, who died aged 22; and Adam Alexander (d.1826), the last surviving son, who died in Jamaica. He wrote an account of Hobkirk Parish for ‘Sinclair’s Statistical Account’ and edited and published the works of his father in 1771–72. Rev. Robert (1691–1769) minister of Hobkirk for 44 years. Born at Earlshaugh in Jedburgh Parish, when his mother was said to be 50. His surname is also sometimes written ‘Riccalton’. He spent his early years at Venchin near Yetholm and was said to be able to read the bible before he was 5, and was later educated at Jedburgh Grammar School and Edinburgh University. However, he never attended Divinity Hall, having to return to run the farm after his father’s death. Nevertheless, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1717, called to Merton in 1718, but instead became assistant at Bowden. He was ordained at Hobkirk in 1725 and remained there until his death. He was described as a man of uncommon penetration and good taste who was an original, independent, and acute reasoner’. He is ‘Mr. Robt. Rickeltoun the mance’ who paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He had a discharge from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1752. He had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1759. He was an early friend of poet James Thomson, and his own poem ‘A Winter’s Day’ (first published in 1726) inspired Thomson’s famous ‘Seasons’. He wrote ‘A Sober Enquiry Into the Grounds of the Present Differences in the Church of Scotland’ (1723), which related to the contemporary ‘Marrow controversy’. Other publications on theological topics include ‘The Politick Disputant’ (1722), ‘Letters to a Friend’ in the ‘Edinburgh Christian Instructor’, ‘An Enquiry into the Spirit and Tendency of on Theron and Aspasio …’ (published anonymously, 1762), ‘Dissertation on the Conduct of the Sanhedrim, and Advice offered by Gamaliel’ (1769) and his collected works, which were published in 3 volumes in 1771/2. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Palacehill, and she died in 1764. Their children included: Jean (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1731), who married William Armstrong, schoolmaster in Hobkirk (and was mother of Hawick’s postmaster Robert Armstrong and Maj.-Gen. Adam Armstrong); John, who succeeded as minister of the Parish; Anne; Helen, who married James Murray, minister of Hallstone in Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Irvine, schoolmaster in Wilton. Some biographical notes on him were written by Rev. Thomas Somerville of Jedburgh. He was described as having ‘a large fund of originality rather than a highly cultivated understanding’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Rikylton’ in 1454 when he attached his seal to a bond for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also the last listed member of the ‘retour of service’ to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibale Douglas in 1464/5; his name is given there as ‘Thomas of Riklintoune’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘Riklyntone of that ilk’ (also written ‘Riccalton’, ‘Riccalton’, ‘Rickleton’ and variants).

Riccarton Burn (ri-kar’-in-klooch) n. stream that rises near Riccarton Junction and flows southwards to join the Liddel Water near Riccarton farm.

Riccarton Cleuch (ri-kar’-in-klooch) n. former name for lands near Riccarton. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale they are valued at 40 shillings, with Croizers as tenants. ‘Richardtoncleuch’ was the nickname of Andrew (‘Dandy’) Crozier, who was one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1586 it was referred to as a ‘fourth schilling land’ when partly occupied by Simon Elliot and released to the Elliots by Francis, Earl of Bothwell (it is ‘Ricarton Cleuche’ in 1541 and ‘Ricartoun Cleucht’ in 1586).

Riccarton Cottages (ri-kar’-in-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages near the farm of Riccarton in Liddesdale. They are situated on the east side of the B6357. Road contractor Adam Moor and his family lived there in 1861.

Riccartonfit (ri-kar’-in-fi’) n. Riccartonfoot, former farm in the Riccarton area. In 1624 Adam Usher and his son Will were convicted of stealing sheep from there, among other crimes; the tenants were Archie Henderson and John Robison. It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1670 (it is ‘Riccartonfoote’ in 1655 and ‘Riccartonfoot’ in 1670).

Riccarton Hope (ri-kar’-in-hop) n. small stream that runs roughly eastwards to the south of Bell Hill to join the Riccarton Burn.

Riccarton Junction (ri-kar’-in-jungk-shin) n. station on the Waverley Line (Border Union Railway) at the junction with the Hexham line (Border Counties Railway), also known as Riccarton, although that name had formerly applied to the peel tower and farm more than a mile further down the Riccarton Burn. The station building (now demolished) included the Cooperative store and village pub. As well as the station there were also 2 signal-boxes (also demolished), an engine shed, turntable and several nearby footbridges, as well as major culverts along the line. It was opened in 1862 as simply ‘Riccarton Station’, with the ‘Junction’ being added by the North British Railway in 1905. It closed in 1969. Only the remains of the platforms and footings of the stationmaster’s house survive.

Riccartonlee (ri-kar’-in-lee) n. former name for lands near Riccarton, recorded in 1541 as ‘Riccartounlie’, with a value of 5 shillings, and at that time vacant.

Riccarton Mill (ri-kar’-in-nil) n. farmstead on the Liddel Water, to the east of the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. There was presumably once a corn mill there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1797 and his son James was listed there on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (incorrectly as ‘Bickerton Mill’). Another James Armstrong was there in 1852. It was said that at least one person had drowned in the mill lade. It was a public house up until around the 1870s. It is the spot to which Dandy Dimmont directs Harry Bertram in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’ – ‘But ye can come over the night as far as Riccarton, where there is a public; or if ye like to stop at Jockey Grieve’s at the Heuch’ [SWS] (it is ‘Rickertownmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Rickarton Mill’ in 1821).

Riccarton Schuil (ri-kar’-in-skil) n. former school in Riccarton Junction. It closed in 1963, the same year as the Beeching Report. The remaining children travelled by train to Newcastle-on-Tyne. It is marked ‘Riccarton Bar’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house still exists.

Riccarton Sike (ri-kar’-in-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, south of Saughtree. It rises on Yarrow Knowe and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water. Note that it is on the south side of the valley, while Riccarton itself is on the north.

Riccarton Toll (ri-kar’-in-tōl) n. former toll house on the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. Christian Armstrong was toll-keeper there in 1851. It is marked ‘Riccarton Bar’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house still exists.

Rice (ris) n., arch. a branch, stick – ‘He travelled with two long sticks – ‘rices’ they were called’ [RM], twigs collectively, brushwood – ‘The calculation of the stake and rice stands thus: Rice at 1s. per cart, 3d. per rood; stakes, eight to the rood, 6d. . . .‘ [RJE], . . . a cart filled with the small branches of the ash-tree, with the leaves on, – ‘ash rice’, as he described the material to me’ [RB] (also spelled ‘rise’ or ‘ryce’, and sometimes plural).

Richardson

Scotts of Thirlestane. She went to India to stay with her uncle Lord Harris, and there married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson of the East India Company Marine. She returned to Scotland after the death of her husband and lived at Forge, near Canonbie. She was locally known as a writer, and was a friend of the Carlyles. She wrote 'Adonia: A Desultory Story' (1801) and 'Poems' (1828). Frasier (19th C.) acted as Halberdier in the latter part of the 19th century, for many years along with Thomas Cook. There is an early photograph of him with his halberd. In 1875 it is reported that he appeared in the 'much disputed new suit!' (also spelled 'Frasier'). Gavin Gala man who wrote 'For King and Country and the Scottish Borderers' (1887), an account of the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, and 'After Gallipoli' (1992), an account of their activities in the rest of WWI. He has been a regular speaker at the Archaeological Society. George 'the Blue Laird' (b.1705/6) of the West End. He is probably the George, Burgess and 'Indweller in Hawick' who gave evidence at the court case in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. He was at that time stated to be a widower and staying in part of a house rent free from his son James, given by his uncle James Purcell. He lived in Hawick all his life, except when he was in service as a boy and 'has been at the Common-Riding of Hawick every year since he could ride a horse'. His daughter Christian died in 1803, by which time he was already deceased. James, who was also called 'the Blue Laird' was perhaps his son. He may be the George, son of Andrew, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the carrier (also recorded as a 'workman') George who married Betty Shiel and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1734); John (b.1741); James (b.1743); and James (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were late Bailie Walter Graham and servant John Nichol and in 1747 were mason Andrew Napier and wright James Purcell (his uncle). George (b.c.1785) recorded as 'independent' on the 1841 census. His land behind the Back Row is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He was perhaps son of James and grandson of George (both of whom were called 'the Blue Laird'). George (1793–1871) son of William and Margaret Laing, he was born in Minto or Yarrow Parish. He is recorded as an agricultural labourer at Wester Parkhill in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 he was at Deanburnhaugh with his son-in-law. Minto Parish and lived at Hummelknowe Mill when young and later at Parkhill. He married Elizabeth Burton, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1824, aged 30. Their children included: Margaret (1816/7–1894), who married roadman William Robson and died at 13 Dakers Place; William (1817/8–1825); and Helen (1820/1–42). In 1825 (recorded in Wilton and Robertson Parishes) he secondly married Elizabeth Henry, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1846, aged 64. He died at Deanburnhaugh and was buried at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Henry (b.1801) son of James, who was Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott, from the Milsington Scotts. He was a farmer, living at 37 Loan, recorded as farmer of 15 acres in 1861. He rented several fields from the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Beatrix (or Beatrice) Miller, and their children included: William, who emigrated to Australia in the 1850s; Margaret; Henry (b.1830), who also emigrated to Australia; Robert, who also went to Australia; James (b.1836/7), who was Cornet in 1862; and Walter. James (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town. He is recorded holding part of the lease there in 1675 and 1677; in 1677 he was renting along with his mother (whose name is not given). He is surely related to the John senior and John younger, who were tenants in 1671 (perhaps his father and brother). He could be the James, married to Catherine Turnbull (or Rule) whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1671. James (17th C.) resident at Howcleuch in Robertson Parish. He is recorded there in 1683 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He was 'weadua', i.e. widower, so his wife must have died in childbirth. The witnesses were James and Robert Nichol. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1712 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He is listed as 'Tenant' in 1725 when he (along with mason Andrew Turnbull, whose wife was also an Aitken) witnessed a baptism for John Hardie and Isobel Aitken. He is probably the James who married Bessie, daughter of William Aitkin in 1715 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish include: Bessie (b.1716); Agnes (b.1717); Mary (b.1719); Isobel (b.1721), who probably married merchant James Ekron; Helen (b.1723); Patrick (b.1726); and Elizabeth (b.1731). His daughter is probably the Isobel who married merchant James Ekron. He is probably the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for cooper Alexander Weens in 1713 and recorded as ‘tenant’ when he witnessed another baptism for Alexander Weens in 1721. James (b.c.1753) son of William, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He had a brother John and sister Elizabeth, who married William Wilson. He was Cornet in 1777 and known as ‘Auld Jamie’ in later life. He waved the Flag over the new bridge when it was opened in his year as Cornet. Along with William (either his father or brother), he ran the firm of wool merchants and manufacturers based at ‘Whisky Hooes’. The firm manufactured carpets for a while, and also dealt in salt, tar and whisky; it went into bankruptcy around 1812–21. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for merchant George Gray, and could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Young. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1791–97 when he paid the Horse Tax. In 1796 he was recorded as ‘Wool Staper’ (i.e. trader in wool). He contributed, with William, to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He first married a Brydon, but they had no issue. Secondly, in Robertson Parish in 1790, he married Jane (b.1762), daughter of William Scott, tenant of Milsington. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: William (b.1791); John; Walter (b.1792), stockmaker; Betty (b.1794), who probably died young; James (b.1796), of Salthall; Isabella, who married baker Walter Wilson; Henry (b.1801), farmer on the Loan; Thomas (b.1806), carrier and coal agent; and James’ (again, b.1808). The witnesses in 1792 were William and Walter Richardson (probably his father and brother) and in 1796 were William (presumably his father) and hosier William Wilson. He could be the James of Walter’s Wynd whose wife died in 1822, aged 59.

James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendean-bank. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James ‘the Blue Laird’ (d.1824) probably son of George, who also had the same nickname. He was probably a minor land-owner, like the ‘Hilliesland Lairds’. He is probably the James, son of George, who received a house (with a yard behind it) from George’s uncle James Purcell. This is probably the land belonging to George marked behind the Back Row on Wood’s 1824 map, adjacent to George Richardson’s land (who may have been his son). He married Elizabeth (‘Lizzy’) Nimmo (or ‘Nimo’) and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1768). He may be the James whose son George died in 1776 and whose unnamed child died in 1795. James (b.1767) farmer in Hawick, son of John and Isobel Scott. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1787 and she died in 1818. Their children included Andrew (b.c.1791), who was also a farmer. James ‘Lang Jaynie’ or ‘Jaynie o Sauthaa’ (b.1796) presumably a tall individual, who lived with his family at Salt Hall. He was son of James, Cornet in 1777, and a nephew of Elizabeth Richardson, who married manufacturer William Wilson. He worked as a warehouseman in a wool factory. He is recorded at Salt Hall in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Helen Ballantyne, sister of ‘Wat the Drummer’. Their children included: James; Jane; Margaret; Isabella, who married John Edgar; Helen; Walter; John; William; Thomas; and Elizabeth. James (b.1800/1–32) from Hawick, brother of spinner John. He served with the 78 Regiment, the Ross-shire Buffs from the age of 17. He died in Colombo, Sri Lanka. James (b.1808/9) from Smailholm, he was a shuttlemaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Slitrig Crescent and employing 2 men. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is described as a cooper and shuttle-maker on the ‘Front row’, as well as being listed as a ‘turner’. His wife was Isabella (from England) and their children included Betsy, Peter, Thomas, Isabella, Helen, David and Margaret. James (b.1813/4) grocer and tea-dealer at 73 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Andrew, James, George, Margaret, Francis, Janet and William. James (b.1836/7) son of farmer Henry, he was a stone mason, and also farmed fields up the Loan, succeeding his father. He was Cornet in 1862. He can be seen in what is the second earliest known Common Riding photograph, standing with a group of his supporters, with a top hat and full beard. He had daughters Wilhelmina B. and Beatrice Miller. James (b.1847/8) son of James and Margaret Fairgrieve. In 1883 he married Sarah, daughter of Henry Shaw. James (b.1851) son of Walter and Mary Murray. He worked as a wool-sorter and served as Beadle for Hawick Parish Church. He had a son Robert, who married Ethel, adopted daughter of postmaster James Orr. James M. ‘Jimmy the Printer’ (d.2001) founder of Richardson & Son printer’s business in Dovemount Place. He coined the phrase ‘a day oot o Hawick’s a fortnight wasted’. Jamie son of Murray and grandson of Jimmy. He was Cornet in 2009. Janet (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Jasper (17th/18th C.) weaver of Hawick. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1703, 1706 and 1708 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew (surely a relative); in 1703 the other witness was Thomas (also a weaver). In 1709 he and John (surely also a relative) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1706 he married Margaret Briggs (probably from the weaving family) and their children included: Bessie (b.1707); Thomas (b.1709); Michael (b.1710); George (b.1713); Frederick (b.1713); and John (b.1715). The witnesses in 1709 were Michael Briggs and merchant Francis Elliot, in 1713 were Andrew (surely a relative) and John Pringle, and in 1715 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and wright James Purcell. John (16th C.) saddler mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574, when he was still owed money from the Laird of Buccleuch. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. John (17th C.) ‘maltman’ who was listed as a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1628–33, responsible for part of the rents of Branxholme and Wilton. In the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is ‘John Ritchiesone, maltman to my Lord Bukcleuch’ and owed the Earl some rental money. John (17th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who served as Town Clerk in 1638, and probably for a few years before. He is recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1637. He is recorded as ‘John Ritchartsonne, clerk’ in one of the first entries in the earliest existing Town Book in 1638. He is also there listed as a notary, along with Gilbert Watt, on the short-list for next Town Clerk (with Watt being selected). He was listed as ‘notar publick’ at the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He was ‘notar’ when elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the same as ‘John Ritchisone, officiar and clerk in the defunctes baroune courtes’ who was owed his yearly fee in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. John (17th C.) listed as ‘John Ritchiesone elder’ in 1671, when, along with his son John, he leased part of the farm of Branxholme Town. It seems likely that James, who was farming at Branxholme Town in 1675 and 1677, was another son. It is possible he was the John, married to Helen Routledge, whose daughter Bessie was born in Hawick Parish in 1654. He is probably the John who in 1673 witnessed (along with Patrick Scoon) a baptism for James Martin (who could have been his son-in-law). John (17th C.) son of John, he was listed as ‘younger’ in 1671 when he was tenant of part of Branxholme Town. He is probably the John who was married to Bessie Hope, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Bessie (b.1670) and John (b.1673). The Hopes were also tenants at Branxholme Town. John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Cavers Parish in 1703. John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Bell in Bedrule Parish in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for Andrew (who was surely related to him) and for weaver David Reid and in 1709 for merchant Walter Bryson. He is probably the John who along with Jasper (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism for weavers Andrew Jardine in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1721. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1723 he and Agnes Waddell had a son John baptised in Hawick. They were labelled ‘Fornicators’ and the witnesses were glover James Waddell (surely related to Agnes) and Beatle John Scott. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isobel Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1769); and William (again, b.1772). The witnesses in 1764 were James Scott and James Glendinning and in 1772 were David Laing and James Glendinning. He may be the John who in 1761 witnessed a baptism for Charles Rutherford and Janet Richardson (perhaps his sister). He may also be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in Hawick in 1766. His wife died in Hawick in 1790. John (18th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Isabel was baptised in 1790. John (b.1756) son of William of the Whisky Houses mill. His brother James was Cornet in 1777 and his sister Elizabeth married manufacturer William Wilson. He is described in a Wilson history as ‘John Richardson, father of John the elder’. He may be the Hawick resident John recorded as John (1788/9–1874) spinner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row. He married Esther Robson, who died in 1830, aged 44. Their children included: William (1808/9–71), tailor and clothier, who died at Blackburn, Lancashire; Isabella (1814–54), who died at Doon in Canada; Andrew (b.c.1815); John (b.1817), who died in infancy; John (again, c.1821–88); Esther (b.c.1826); Agnes (1825/6–1906); and Robert (1828–77). His family are buried at St. Mary’s. John (1799–1869) son of Walter, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. His mother was Christian Gledstains, daughter of the Town Clerk. He was owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was a hosiery worker who was living at Ladylaw Cottage in Wilton in 1851. By 1861 he was at Wellington Street. He married Helen Anderson (who died in 1871, aged 70) and their children included: Walter (b.1824), hosiery warehouseman; James (b.1825); William (b.1827), hosiery manager; John (b.1829), who probably died young; George Wilson (b.1830), wool merchant; Elizabeth (b.1833); and Archibald (b.1837). He was cousin of James, who lived at the nearby Salt Hall at the same time. John (19th C.) inn-keeper of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square in Newcastle upon Tyne. He was listed as proprietor in 1852, but must have been absent for the 1851 census, when his wife was inn-keeper. He married Elizabeth, from Newcastleton. Their children included Margaret, Diana, Jane, John and Helen. John (1826–95) son of Andrew and Margaret Pollock. He was a china merchant in Hawick. He had a house built on the Kirkwynd in about 1879. His shop, ‘Richardson’s China Warehouse’ was at No. 8 Kirkwynd and can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (with his wife standing outside). In 1851 he was a woollen slubber living on the Loan and in 1861 was at 12 Back Row. In 1857 he was recorded as ‘Manager of a Wool Factory’ and living at 12 Loan. In 1848 he married Harriet (1827–1910) daughter of Robert Miller. They had at least 12 children, including: Andrew (c.1850–57); Robert (b.1855); Catherine; Elizabeth; Andrew (again, b.1860); Harriet (b.1862); Margaret (b.1862); Margaret (again, b.1865); and Joan (b.1867). John (1819/20–88) mill manager of William Laidlaw & Sons. He lived at Dickson Street. He married Elizabeth Henderson, who died in 1907, aged 84. Their children included Isabella, James and Robert W. (who all died young) and John (who died at Parramatta, Australia). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (b.1839) son of Thomas and grandson of James, wool merchant. He worked as a spinner, and then farmed at Newmill-on-Slitrig. He married Betsy, sister of James Elliot of Flex. His sons James and John farmed at Hummelknowes. Bailie John, J.P. (d.1918) heavily involved in religious and temperance matters in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of George Barclay. Their children were George (who died in infancy), James (headmaster of Preston Street School in Edinburgh), Janet (who married James Edgar) and Mary. John (1859–1892) son of Robert, he took over from his father as partner in Noble & Richardson in 1877, then became partner in Messrs. Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. in Galashiels in 1880, originally operating at Abbots Mill in Galashiels and opening Eastfield Mills in Hawick in 1883. His partner John Farrar Blenkhorn was married to his sister, while their first manager was his cousin George Hunter. He was also Lieutenant in the local Border Rifles (volunteers). He married Lizzie Maxwell (daughter of the proprietor of the Maxwell Hotel in Gala), and none of their children survived to adulthood. The family lived at 19 Buccleuch Street (Welch’s). Suffering from ill health, he travelled to warmer climates (Australia, New Zealand and South Africa) for his last 4 years, dying of influenza at Berbeton, Transvaal. Margaret (18th/19th C.) dressmaker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Mark (1966/7– ) brought up in Hawick, he attended Burnfoot, Trinity and the High School. He was an apprentice butcher at Miller’s, then worked as a nursing assistant at Dingleton Hospital, later moving into property development. In 2016 he co-founded Group S.R.S., which provides home care and support services throughout Scotland. Murray local printer of Dovemount Place. He was one of the founders of the Border Horse Racing Association in 1972 and a keen ‘flapping’ rider and organiser. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as ‘guid broder’ (i.e. brother-in-law) of Hector Turnbull in Belses. The pair, along with Hector’s son Dand, were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton. They were denounced as rebels. Presumably he was married to a sister of Hector Turnbull, tenant in Belses. In 1586/7 he is ‘Pait Richesoun’, brother-in-law to ‘Ekkie in Belses’, when listed among Border criminals who were given one more chance to find sureties. Bailie Patrick (d.bef. 1707) Hawick Magistrate recorded in 1694 and 1703. He owned a tenement to the south of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He was ‘present baylea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). In 1694 it is recorded that he settled his account ‘for all that he has paid for the town’s use, for great bell, little bell, steeple, and tolbuith, and all other things, being £38 : 19 : 6 Scots’. He is probably the ‘Patrick Ritchisone’ who is listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he and Robert Hardie petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the ‘freedom of trade’ tax. He witnessed baptisms for weaver David Miller in 1700, for Bailie 2475.

George Martin in 1702, for flesher John Tudhope in 1702, for workman Robert Henderson in 1703, for Burgh Officer Alexander Scott, for merchant William Dickson, for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for ‘Walter Scott herd’ in 1704 and for Bailie George Martin and for Anthony Haig in 1706. He also witnessed several baptisms in 1705, and could be the Patrick who witnessed a baptism in 1687. His wife was Bessie Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1686); John (b.1688), who became a printer’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1706; and Elizabeth (b.1692), who married tailor Robert Chisholme in 1716. He is referred to as deceased in 1707 when expenses incurred earlier, during his Bailieship, were discussed by the Council. Richard (16th C.) recorded as ‘master Richart Richartsoun’ in 1530 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott and Janet Ker. His name appears just before the Vicar of Hawick. Richard (b.1809/10) from Kelso, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Jane and their children included William, Isabella, Mary and George. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Annandale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. He received some of the benefits of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale from 1552. However, this overlapped with John Hepburn, so it is unclear who was really in the office. He resigned in 1565. He was also referred to as Dean of Teviotdale in 1552. Robert (17th C.) leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1690, with Thomas Briggs as cautioner. He was listed at Branxholme Town among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (1828–1877) son of John and Esther Robinson (whose memorial stone can still be seen at St. Mary’s). He became a clerk with Andrew Oliver, auctioner’s, and was also assistant to Robert Armstrong in the Post Office. He then became head cashier with a firm in London (Scott, Bell & Co.), moved to Liverpool for a few years (working for Leech, Harrison Forwood), and was then sent abroad for business. In 1870, after about a year in India, he returned to Hawick because of failing health. He then went into partnership with Robert Noble, forming Richardson, Noble and Co., at Stonefield Mills, moving to Glebe Mills in 1873. The partnership was suggested by his brother-in-law John Hunter; they met for the second time in Hunter’s house, trying to conclude their business agreement quickly because both had another engagement that night, only to discover that they were both being admitted as members of Masonic Lodge 111. However, he died after only a few years in business in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of William Lawrie and half sister of William Fredrick Diener. He secondly married Jessica, daughter of Andrew Irvine of the Savings Bank. His children were: Minnie, who married John Farrar Blenkhorn; John, partner in Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co.; Ettie Isabella; William Fredrick; and Margaret Lawrie. The family were living at Wilton Hill when he died at only 48. He is buried in the Wellogate. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1703 he (along with Jasper, also a weaver) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew. The 3 men were presumably all related. Thomas (b.1806) younger son of James, who was Cornet in 1777. He was a carrier and coal agent in Hawick. He was listed as a ‘Carrier’s Porter’ on the Mid Raw in the 1841 census. He may be the grocer on the Howegate listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a carter at 14 Howegate in 1861. He later stayed at Fiddle Inn (7 Loan). He married Agnes Park and their children included: James (b.1834); William (b.1836); John (b.1839), farmer at Newnill-on-Slitrig; and Agnes (b.1842), who became Mrs. Oliver of the Railway Hotel in Jedburgh, and later Mrs. Lamb of the Waverley Hotel in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was the same man as the manufacturer, who would only have been about 18 when the book was published. Walter (1766–c.1808) son of William and Isabel Henderson. He was also manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He is probably the Walter recorded in Hawick as owner of 2 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the manufacturer who paid the horse tax in the same year. In 1794 he married Christian, daughter of Town Clerk John Gladstains, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Ann (b.1794); Isabel (b.1796); William (b.1797), who went to London and became a merchant in Glasgow; John (1799–1869); James (b.1801), a hatter in Liverpool; and Elizabeth (b.1802). The witnesses in 1794 were William (his father) and Walter Laidlaw. After his death, in 1815, the mill was sold to Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. Walter (1824–88) son of John, he was a hosiery warehouseman. He lived at Waverley Cottages. In 1847 he firstly married Mary Murray, and their children were: John (b.1848), father of James of the Salvation Army; James (b.1851), wool-sorter and Beadle at Hawick Parish Church; Mary (b.1855); Walter...

(b.1857); and Walter (b.1859). He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Henderson, dairyman. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Howcleuch in 1734 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1741 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant John Cavers. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Anderson and their children included George (b.1738) and William (b.1740). Adam (b.1736) was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1740 were fleshers William Renwick and Thomas Waugh. William (18th C.) wool merchant and manufacturer at Whisky Houses, said to he Hawick’s first woollen manufacturer. His brother James was his partner, as well as being Cornet. He was recorded as a carrier in 1761. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for smith Robert Young in 1762. In 1787 he was granted land and a waterfall at the top of Slitrig Crescent by the Duke of Buccleuch. He then had the Whisky House Mill built for him in 1788 for the manufacture of cloth. This factory represented one of the important early steps in Hawick’s tweed industry. He made a kind of blue cloth, and travelled to Leeds to learn the techniques for finishing his cloth. He later manufactured ‘duffle’ for women’s petticoats, as well as carpets. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He witnessed a baptism for his son Walter in 1794. He is probably the William listed as ‘Merchant’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 5 work horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He witnessed a baptism for his son James in 1796 (when recorded as ‘Wool Stapler’ (i.e. a trader in wool). He may be the member of Hawick Curling Club listed in 1812. He is sometimes confused with his son Walter. In 1752 he married Isabel Henderson (from the farming family at 53 High Street, probably daughter of Robert), and she died in 1778. Their children were: James (b.c.1753), who was Cornet in 1777; John (b.1756); Peter Patrick (b.1759), who had no issue; Elizabeth (b.1761), who probably died young; Walter (b.1766), who took over as manufacturer at Whisky Houses; Betty (1772–1815), the eldest surviving daughter, who married manufacturer William Wilson: Robert (1776–1781); and William (d.1808), merchant in Hawick. The witnesses in 1761 were carrier James Scott and blacksmith Robert Young (who had also married a Henderson), in 1766 were James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law) and Robert Young (again) and in 1772 were John Aitkin and Robert Chisholme. William (d.1808) Hawick merchant, son of manufacturer William. He married Isabella (1771–1807), daughter of James Dickson of Alton. Their son William inherited Alton after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, and took the additional name of Dickson. He may be the Richardson whose property is marked around 51 and 55 High Street. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whithope in 1808. He married Margaret Laing and their children included: Robert (b.1804): Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (1774/5–1840) resident of Hummelknowe Mill. In Minto Parish in 1793 he married Margaret Laing and she died in 1831, aged 65. In 1833 he emigrated to Canada, where died. A commemorative stone was erected in Borthwick Waas Cemetery by their son Robert of Oxford County, Canada West. Their children included: George (b.1793); John (b.1795); Alexander (b.1797); Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hill Place Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. William (1797–1877) son of Walter and Christian Gledstains, he was born in Hawick. He is said to have gone to London, but became a merchant in Glasgow, variously listed in the census reports as a ‘Drysalter’, ‘General Merchant’, ‘Wine Merchant’ and ‘Iron Merchant’. He may be the ‘William Richardson, Jun.’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Eliza Muirhead in 1823 and had children Walter, George, Jane, William and Christina Gladstone. William (b.c.1805) from the Morebattle area, he was a joiner in Hawick. He was living on the Round Close in 1841 and at 4 Backdamgate by 1851. He was listed as a joiner and a wheelwright on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed as a joiner and cartwright, employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Kelso. In 1846 all of the wood from his yard at the foot of the Crescent was carried away in the flood. Their children included Euphemia, James (also a joiner), Elizabeth, Margaret and Euphemia (again). William (1827–90) Son of John. He was hosiery manager at Walter Wilson & Sons on Allars Crescent. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer Robison (whip and thong maker), and she died in 1905, aged 79. They had a son, John (who died in South Africa) and a

Richardtoncleucht (ri-churd-tin-kloocht) n. nickname of Andrew (‘Dandy’) Crozier, one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. His name presumably came from Riccarton Cleuch in Liddesdale, or perhaps Richard’s Cleuch near Overton Bush in the Jed valley (see Riccarton Cleuch).

Richmond (rich-mind) n. James (1834–1923) son of Rev. John, he was born in Southdean. He studied at St. Andrews University 1849–51. In 1851 he emigrated to Australia, becoming a leading sheep breeder in New South Wales. He died in 1887, aged 89) in 1825. Their children were: Isabella Georgine; Margaret Cunningham; James, who became a sheep-farmer near Dunblane and in Australia; John, died young; George Mitchell, army Lieutenant in India, killed in action near Peshawar; and Catherine, died in Edinburgh. He married Catherine Mitchell (who died in 1887, aged 89) in 1825. Their children were: Isabella Georgine; Margaret Cunningham; James, who became a sheep-farmer near Dunblane and in Australia; John, died young; George Mitchell, army Lieutenant in India, killed in action near Peshawar; and Catherine, died an infant. His grave in Wellogate Cemetery is marked with an obilisk (formerly spelled ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richardson’, ‘Richartson’, ‘Richartson’, ‘Richartson’, ‘Richiesone’, ‘Richison’, ‘Ritchardsone’, ‘Ritchartsonne’, ‘Ritchieson’ and ‘Ritchiesone’).

Riddell (ri-dul) n. hamlet about 8 miles north of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, on the Ale Water, off the B6400. The surrounding area is the old estate of Riddell, formerly a barony, which is now well wooded, and contains the ruins of the main mansion (incorporating the older peel tower) as well as a more modern tower, built nearby on the site of a mediæval motte and bailey. It was the home of the Riddells of Riddell from probably the reign of David I (the mid-12th century, when it was referred to as ‘Wester-Lilliesleaf’) until they were effectively ruined following the death of Sir John in 1819, and it was sold to the Sprots in 1823. The short version of the story of the loss of the family home is that in the late 18th century Sir John changed the course of the river in order to improve the view, and became bankrupt in the process. In the early 13th century part of the ‘demesne’ lands were stated to be below ‘Harekamb’. The farm was burned in a raid by Turnbulls in about 1502, in which perhaps 480 sheep were stolen, along with 2 cows and goods, and a horse killed. The Laird of Riddell was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. The main lands were referred to as ‘Riddell Mains’ in 1643 and valued at £910, part of an estate of £1654. In 1675 there was a garrison of soldiers there, to watch out for local gatherings of Covenanters. By 1678 the estate’s value was £1765. Tax was paid on 11 hearths on the estate in 1694, with John Winthrope, William Archibald and Alexander Kennedy being recorded there. Robert Arres was recorded as tenant there in 1789. Riddell House was an extensive mansion, destroyed by fire in 1943, although the remains can still be seen. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. There are 2 lodge houses for the estate, called ‘East Lodge’ and ‘West Lodge’. The estate also contains stables, a deer larder, two 18th century bridges and other old buildings. There was formerly a chapel on the estate. The mausoleum of the Sprot family lies within woodlands on the estate. The current farmhouse was built by Mark Sprot in 1826 as an estate office and extended in 1898; it contains a Sprot armorial panel, as well as some stones in the garden from the earlier mansion. A ridge about 700 m east of the present farm contains a roughly oval fort (about 100 m by 50 m in size) with double ditches. Another fort, about 400 m northwest of the old house, above Riddellbank Wood, was revealed in aerial photography. A stone cist was unearthed near Willowbog Plantation on the estate around 1920 and reconstructed in the kitchen garden, although it has now disappeared. Court rolls for the barony court for 1698–1712 are in the National Archives – ‘...To ancient Riddel’s fair domain, Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from lakes did raving come; Each wave was creased with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed’ [SWS] (the origin is probably Old English ‘rydde dæl’, meaning ‘valley cleared of trees’, the name being transplanted by the ‘de Rydde’ family, who held extensive lands in England; it is ‘Redill’ in 1435, ‘Redale’ in 1436/7, ‘Reddal’ in 1479/80 and ‘Riddale’ in 1502 and 1534; it appears on Frederik de Wit’s map of c. 1680 and is labelled ‘Riddell or W. Lilsly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Riddell (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddle) Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Ridal’ in an English document of 1279 involving an inquest into lands in Ireland. Adam (16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He was part of an inquest into ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533 (in which his nephew George also took part). Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1781. He married Isobel Learmonth in Roberton in 1774. His children included Jane (b.1776) and Nelly (b.1781). Adam (b.1782) born in Kirkton Parish, son of George, he was a joiner at Overhall Cottages in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed there at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Robert, Janet, Georgina and Jessy, as well as an adopted daughter Isabella Aitchison. Agnes (17th C.) widow of Hawick merchant James Brydon, who is listed on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. She is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. She may have been a shopkeeper of some sort on the High Street. Her children with James Brydon included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). Agnes (d.bef. 1741) daughter of Henry and brother of William, portioner in Bewlie. She inherited the lands of Bewlie from her brother in 1695, specifically the 5-pound land of Bewlie and half of one of the cottage-lands in Lilliesleaf. She is described as 'portioner' of Bewley' in 1699. She married John Nisbet, W.S. of Nisbetfield and their daughter Agnes married Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden). In 1723 her heir is recorded as her cousin, Francis Riddell, brewer in Prestonpans. Christian and Jean Riddell (and their husbands) are recorded as her heirs in 1741. Agnes (b.1810/1) wife of Lilliesleaf joiner William. She was listed as a midwife in the 1851 census. She was a widow living at about 61 High Street, with her children Janet, Rachel and James. She may be the dressmaker of the same name listed on the Howegate in Slater's 1852 directory. Alan (13th C.) recorded in about 1240 as witness to a charter for lands of Prendergast, among the documents of Coldingham Priory. He witnessed another gift of land in Coldingham in the period 1248–60. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Alexander (17th C.) Miller at Newmill (on Teviot) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. He may be the Alexander, married to Isobel Little, whose daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1672. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1698 as ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Andrew (16th C.) witness to a sasine in 1559 for land in Wilton. This was attached to a sasine with Robert Riddell mentioned, so it is likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Possibly the same man is described as ‘Andrew Riddill of that ilk’ when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Rule Water in 1568. Perhaps the same Andrew was brother to Walter of that Ilk in 1579 when he was loaned £50 to Walter Scott of Todrig, receiving the annual rent of the lands in the form of meal and malt. His brother Robert was also mentioned about the same time. Probably the same Andrew, brother of Walter of that Ilk witnessed a transaction for Walter Scott of Todrig in 1581/2. Andrew (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of James Langlands of that Ilk. He was recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Andrew of that Ilk (1549/50–1632) son of Walter, with his mother probably being Agnes Ramsay. He was heir apparent Andrew of Walter in 1581 when he received sasine (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk; William in Lilliesleaf was one of the witnesses. In 1581 he witnessed a bond of caution for Eliots, when he was listed as son and heir of Walter of that Ilk. In the 1580s he was a ‘tutor’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smalholm, to whom he was related through his paternal grandmother. In 1590 he was ‘apparent of that Ilk’ when he served as cautioner for Andrew Ker of Newhall. In 1590/1 he was recorded as a curator for James Pringle of Smalholm. He was served heir to his father in 1592 and obtained a charter in 1595/6 from the Commendator of Glasgow, as heir to his father Walter (making it unclear if Walter was still alive at that time). In 1592 Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk (who was married to his sister Janet) served as his cautioner in a bond of loyal behaviour. He served as cautioner for Pringles in 1598. He was the first to acquire the Haining estate from the Scotts (perhaps about 1627). He is recorded in a bond of 1600 for lands in Lilliesleaf and also in 1600 was on the ‘retrou’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1602 he signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was also named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire.

swearing not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. His cautioner was James, merchant in Edinburgh, who was probably a relative. He himself acted as cautioner cautioner for his son John in the same case. In 1611 he was commended by King James VI for his industry as convenor of the Justices of Roxburghshire. In 1617 he was appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was at the Convention of the Estates in 1617. In 1618 the Douglasses of Friarshaw complained about verbal and physical attacks by him and his associated Andrew of Lilliesleaf and Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill; in particular they claimed that he threatened the life of George Douglas of Friarshaw at Lilliesleaf Kirk. In about 1620 he had a charter for half the lands of ‘Cringillis’ from the Commendator of Melrose, and another charter for Allanshaw, ‘Woplaw’ and the west part of ‘Langlie’ from James Cairncross of Colmeslie. In 1620 he acted as bailie for Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, in a charter he granted to Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands; at the same time his daughter Jean was contracted in marriage to Walter, son of Sir Walter of Goldielands. He was probably the Laird of Riddell who represented Roxburghshire in the convention of 1617 and in Parliament in 1621. He also sat as one of the Lords of Secret Council in 1622 (and probably other years). In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing 4 cows and an ox from his lands, and sheep from his lands of Whitton. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft; for the case of one of them, Isobel ‘Howetsone’, several letters exist from him to officials in Selkirk. Also in 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire, his son John also being listed there as ‘fiar’. Also in 1628 he wrote to the Bailies of Selkirk about casting divot’s on their common. He purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from William, son of Martin Elliot and Agnes Lorraine (as confirmed in a service to Walter of that Ilk in 1702). He was ‘of Haining’ in documents from the early 1600s relating to transactions with Andrew Scott of Wemyss. He was referred to as Baron of Riddell, and apparently refused to accept a baronetcy. He may be the Andrew of that Ilk recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over casting divots, in an undated document. He married a Pringle of Galashiels, who was either his first or second cousin. He was succeeded by his son Sir John (for whom there is a marriage contract in 1600 with the daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston). He later married Violet, daughter of William Douglas of Pumpherston. His other children were: William of Muselee, who started that branch of the family in the Borthwick valley; James of Maybole (possible ancestor of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell); Walter (or perhaps Robert) of Hartside; Andrew of Haining, who inherited that estate; Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Edgerston and/or Archibald Porteous, minister of Oxnam and was recorded in a deed of corroboration in 1673; Isabel, who married Robert Kerr, brother of Thomas of Cavers Carre; and Jean (1600–60), who remained unmarried, and is buried at Jedburgh Abbey. Other daughters may have married Walter Scott of Goldielands (although this may be an error for the marriage contract between his daughter Jean and Scott of Goldielands, which perhaps was never fulfilled) and John Bailie (ancestor of the Bailies of Mellerstain). In 1642 his widow Violet Douglas complained to the Privy Council about an attack on her tenants at Hartside. He is buried in the family aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard (where until fairly recently the inscription was quite legible), alongside his 2nd wife Violet. Andrew of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill when there were complaints made against them by the Douglasses of Friarshaw. It was specifically claimed that they put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglasses and also that he and Simon removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas’ farmers. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Andrew of Haining (1605/6–41) son of Andrew of that Ilk and his 2nd wife Violet Douglas. He is recorded as Andrew of Haining (along with David of Haining) in 1634 in a document preserved in Selkirk. He was served heir to his father in 1636. He was said to be a ‘favourite son’ of his father. Along with his father and mother, he has one of the earliest legible panels in the Riddell aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. The initials ‘I.S.’ accompany his, probably those of his wife, who was Jean Stewart of Traquair (after his death his widow married Sir William Douglas of Kelhead). He was probably the ‘Andro Riddell’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1638 he was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He was appointed Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire (or ‘the forest’) 1639–41. He married Agnes of Fawside and their children included: John of Haining, who succeeded; Violet, who was the 3rd wife of Sir Robert Dalzell of Glenae; and Walter, recorded in a deed in 1673. He is buried in the Riddell Aisle at Lilliesleaf, with the inscription ‘whose life was short and good’. Andrew (17th C.) described as ‘now indweller in Over Quitton’ in 1652 when he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas of Knowe. He was probably related to the Riddells of Riddell and Whitton. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid for the ‘fewary of Lilsle’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. Probably the same Andrew was portioner of Lilliesleaf in 1678 when he served as tutor to John, son of the deceased William Gray in Lilliesleaf; in 1683 and 1684 he is described as uncle to this same John Gray (perhaps meaning that his wife was a Gray) in other discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk, and then had the discharge in his own right (presumably meaning he had inherited the lands). It is unclear how he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. He may be the Andrew who died in 1701 and whose headstone is in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. Andrew (17th C.) son of Walter, who was brother of John of Haining. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); and Robert (b.1671). Andrew (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Little-Cavers’ among men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed right after John, to whom he was presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Walter Miller in 1690 and another (along with John) in 1691 for Walter Murray (also in Dryden). He and John witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedie in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Bessie Dodds and had children in Ashkirk, including: Marion (b.1687); John (b.1690); Thomas (b.1693); and Andrew (b.1699). The witnesses in 1690 were John (probably a relative) and Thomas Kedie (who was also at Dryden). Andrew (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. Andrew (d.c.1698) recorded being ‘of Newhous’ in 1698 in a list of wills registered with the Commissariat of Peebles. This was probably the Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the Andrew, who was resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew of Haining (17th/18th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1696, this including 2 cottage-lands at Lilliesleaf Mill as well as the Haining and other lands in Selkirkshire. In 1701 he (or perhaps his sister Madgalene) sold Haining to Andrew Pringle of Clifton. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Goldielands. In 1702 he was recorded as ‘Sub-tenant in Goldilands’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant in Alton Croft. He also witnessed baptisms in 1703 for William Wilson in Fenwick, in 1704 for Robert Stoddart (tenant in the Flex) and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for Walter Wilson, for William Douglas of Bonjedward and for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1706 for William Scott in Brauxholme and for Robert Rutherford, in 1708 for William Gledstains, for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger and for Dand Gray in Whitalw, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Walter Scott in Goldielands, in 1713 for John Elliot, tenant in Goldielands and in 1716 and 1718 for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh, and in 1718 for weaver William Crozier. He was also recorded at Goldielands when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Henderson in 1706, blacksmith George Scott in 1707, Walter Scot in Crumhaugh, Thomas Turnbull (herd in Southfield) in 1708 and William Scott (tenant in Whitchesters), for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and merchant William Black in 1711. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711 and in 1718. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1738. He married Marion Watson and their children included: William (b.1735); James (b.1737); Anne (b.1738); Agnes (b.1740); Helen (b.1743); and Andrew (b.1745). The witnesses in 1738 were William Ogilvie in Hoscote and John Scott ‘late Bailie’ and in 1743 were ex-Bailie John Scott and writer Thomas Winthrope. Andrew (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. Some children who could be his are Madgalene (b.1738), George (b.1741), Janet (b.1744), Andrew (b.1748), Madgalene (b.1754), Robert (b.1756), George (b.1760) and Janet (b.1766). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jean Telfer and their son Walter was baptised in 1770. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Thomas (b.1771); and Margaret (b.1772). Andrew (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf. His son George was baptised in 1789. Other children who may be his include Andrew (b.1784), Andrew (b.1785), James (b.1787), Jean (b.1794) and Magdalene (b.1799). Probably the same Andrew is recorded in Lilliesleaf in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. An account of his to Thomas Inglis from 1794–96 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. Andrew (b.1796/7) from Selkirk, he was farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in 1851 farming 450 acres, employing 10 labourers and in 1861, as farmer of 400 acres, employing 9 men. He was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Agnes, John (who took over the farm), Jane, George and Janet. Rev. Archibald (1635–1708) 3rd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell, and brother of Sir John, 3rd Baronet. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and followed Covenanter principles. He became minister at Kippen near Stirling in about 1670. However, these were turbulent times and he came to be persecuted as a preacher of field conventicles. Orders for his arrest were issued in 1674 and he fled from Kippen, but preached secretly in various places. In 1678 he was one of 5 ministers who preached for 3 days in a field at East Nisbet for over 3000 people. He was said to have taken part in conventicles locally and like his brother William, he was eventually imprisoned for his Covenanting principles. He was outlawed in 1679, after the confrontation at Bothwell Bridge. In 1680 he was captured by Col. Henry Ker of Graden, a prominent Jacobite and his brother James Ker; this was while returning from Moffat Well with Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was imprisoned in Jedburgh, after his watch, sword and money were taken from him. He was then taken to Edinburgh Tolbooth, and examined 3 separate times, although nothing could be found to connect him with the Battle of Bothwell Brig. Nevertheless, he refused to take the oath, and so after 9 months was moved to the Bass Rock, spending 3 years there. In 1681 he was allowed to visit his dying mother at Riddell House and was only finally released on condition of sailing to the plantations in America, his wife dying on the disastrous journey on the ‘Henry & Francis’. He served as minister at Woodbridge in New Jersey (for fellow Scots) for about 3 years, returning to Scotland after the Revolution. However, the ship he was on, bound for Scotland, was seized by the French, and he was held prisoner (along with his 6 year old son) in deplorable conditions in a French dungeon for 2½ years before being exchanged for 2 Catholic priests. He was minister of Wemys from 1691, Kirkcaldy from 1697 and Trinity College (Edinburgh) from 1702. His first wife was Helen, daughter of Rev. Henry Aitkenhead of North Berwick and his 2nd wife was Jean Ker. His children included: Capt. Walter (d.1738), who retook his ship ‘the Phoebe’ from the French, acquired the Barony of Granton and was probably the son who was captive in France with his father; Dr. John (d.1740), an Edinburgh physician; Janet, who married James, son of Sir James Dundas; and Sarah, who married Rev. John Currie of Oldhamstocks. His sister Alison, married Gabriel Semple, who was another well known field preacher. He was buried at Old Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Nichol and their children included James (b.1684). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthaugh. His daughter Isobel was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1704, with witnesses Walter Scott in Drinkstone and William Henderson. He is probably either the Archibald who married Katherine Kirkwood in Wilton in 1702 or the Archibald who married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1703. He was probably related to William, who was recorded at Borthaugh in 1707. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Brauxholme Town, who moved to Roberton Parish. In 1723 James Crow (perhaps his former employer) pleaded with Hawick Session to provide support for him, since he ‘hath none to help him in his distressed condition and indigence save his son of 17 years who is servant in Shielwood’. He is probably the same Archibald listed as resident of Castleside (near Brauxholme) on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Lamb. Their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1703. Robert (b.1706) was probably also his child. Sir Auskittel of Riddell (d.c.1180) 2nd Laird. He was probably son of Gospatic of Brawby and brother of Walter and Robert. However, other accounts suggest he was son of Philip and brother of Gervase, Walter and Ralph. A bull of Pope Adrian IV in 1156 records him as brother and heir to Walter of Riddell in the lands of ‘Witnss, Lilisclive, Breahebe, et cetera’ (Whitton in Hownam Parish, Lilliesleaf and Brawby in Yorkshire). A papal bull from the next Pope also confirmed these lands, and refers to his son and heir as Walter. Hence he was also either brother or nephew... of Gervase. In 1159 he witnessed a charter of confirmation granted to the monks of Kelso by Malcolm IV. There was also an agreement between him and Uchtred, priest of Lilliesleaf, confirmed by Pope Alexander III in about 1160. In about 1208 Robert of Barnoldby confirmed his grant of Whiton (in Hownam Parish) to Melrose Abbey; these lands were granted for his soul, as well as those of Patrick and his son Walter. He married either Ascemia de Stonegrave or Elean, daughter of Robert de Morville (or perhaps both). His name is written ‘Askitil’, ‘Anskettil’, ‘Ansketin’, ‘Octel’, etc., and this forename does not appear to have used again in the family. The next generation appears to be confused, with different charters stating that Patrick and William were both sons. It seems likely that his children included Walter, William, Patrick, Eda and Maud. Another son may have been Ralph, but this is less clear. He may also have had a daughter Adeliza, who married ‘Henricus de Haga’, one of the early Haigs of Bemersyde. Borthwick (b.1800/1) 2nd son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott, he was born in Teviotdale. He was farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish. He was a player of the bagpipes, and known as ‘Riddell the Piper’. He was said to be the best player of the small pipes in the Borders. He played at the wedding of a son of the Duke of Buccleuch and when a daughter of the Earl of Minto married Lord John Russell. There is a record of him being at a celebration (for the return of a Teri from America) in the Fleece Inn in the late 1840s at which he sang ‘Clean pease strae’. He published at least one poem and there is a tune called ‘Borthwick Riddell’s Hornpipe’. He was at Dryden in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 60 arable acres and 300 acres of hill land. He was already a widower by 1851. Maj. Charles of Muselie (1759–1849) eldest surviving son of Patrick and Margaret Balfour. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the ‘Charles Riddle in Sinton a Batchelor’ who was taxed for having a female servant in 1786 and ‘Charles Riddal in Sinton’ taxed for both male and female servants in 1787–93; he thus must have lived at Synton for a while. He was also at Synton on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of Muselee in 1788 (when it was in Roberton Parish, valued at £100), as well as part of Bewlie (valued at £330), lands that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf (valued at £106 13s 4d), Ryecheuster and Quartersides (purchased from Hunter of Linthill, valued at £50) and teinds in Lilliesleaf (valued at £95 1s 2d). He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and was then described as being ‘Once in Buccleugh’s Fencibles. A brother a Writer. Moderate estate. A batchelor’. In 1793 he received some lands in Dryburgh from Henry Erskine of Sheffield. He was Major (or perhaps Colonel) in the local militia. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and was listed as owner of Muselee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Sometime before 1813 he sold some lands in Lilliesleaf Parish (including Ryecheuster Quartersides) to Sir John Buchanan Riddell of that Ilk, but still held onto the main lands of Bewlie there. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, dealing with rents in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Peebleshire and Eskdale, in the period 1808–36; he was then replaced by William Ogilvie. During some of that period he lived at Branxholme, and was present at the banquet held in the Duke of Buccleuch’s honour in 1839. He was a member of the Forest Club. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823 and in 1825 subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In 1830 he chaired the meeting of the freeholders of Roxburghshire at which Henry Francis Scott, younger of Harden was re-elected as M.P. He was listed among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He lived to be about 90 (although there is some uncertainty over his birth date) and died unmarried. Muselee was inherited by his niece. Gen. Charles James Buchanan (1817–1903) 3rd son of Sir John Buchanan, he was baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was educated at Eton and in private schools, then in 1832 entered the Royal Military Academy in Woolwich. He joined the Royal Artillery, serving in Quebec and Jamaica before being invalided home. He grew interested in terrestrial magnetism and meteorology and became Director of an observatory in Toronto (from 1840), then Assistant Superintendent of the Ordnance Magnetic Observatory at the Royal Military Repository in Woolwich (from about 1842). He was elected as a Fellow of the Royal Society and published ‘Magnetical Instructions for the Use of Portable Instruments Adapted for Magnetical Surveys and Portable Observatories’ (1844). He then served as Deputy Quartermaster-General in the Crimean War and served during the Indian Rebellion of 1857/8 and commanded the siege artillery during the capture of Lucknow. He achieved the rank of Major-General, was mentioned 3 times in dispatches and was appointed C.B. He married Mary, daughter of Field-Marshal Sir Hew Dalrymple Ross and they had a daughter. He died at Chudleigh, Devonshire and is buried there. A portrait of him was painted in 1877 by an unknown artist. David (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and `Clerklandes'. Elizabeth `Bessie' (16th/17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1628 she gave evidence regarding the trial of Isobel Howison for witchcraft. She stated that she fetched Howison to see the child of Andrew Riddell, but she `wold not come bot bade looke weill to the bairne and thairafter the bairne dyed schortlie'. Elizabeth `Bessie' (16th/17th C.) married Janet Miller (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus and head of the main English family branch. He is mentioned with reference to the conflicts between England and France, and probably still had connections with Scotland. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His sons probably included Geoffrey, Sir Hugh and Sir Nicholas. Geoffrey (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus, whom he succeeded in 1288 to the Barony of Blaye in England. He also possessed Wittering, as well as Cranston in Scotland, and probably other lands. He has been identified as `Gaufred de Riddell', he was a younger son of Sir William of Bondington. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Geoffrey (13th C.) son and heir of John, with his mother being `Hauwysia', according to a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire. His wife was `Mabila' who has sasine of the lands of `Belyn' and `Olerun'. He may be the same as one of the other Geoffs. Geoffrey (d.1288) eldest son of Galfridus and head of the main English family branch. He is mentioned with reference to the conflicts between England and France, and probably still had connections with Scotland. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His sons probably included Geoffrey, Sir Hugh and Sir Nicholas. Geoffrey (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus, whom he succeeded in 1288 to the Barony of Blaye in England. He also possessed Wittering, as well as Cranston in Scotland, and probably other lands. He is listed as `Galfridus Ridell' in a 1297 mandate to restore lands to Scotsmen who had sworn fealty to King Edward. He had a daughter, Alicia, but the family estates went to his brother Sir Hugh. Geoffrey of Riddell (d.c.1325) possibly son of Sir William and brother of William, whom he succeeded as 8th of that Ilk, although these generations are uncertain. He was also known as ‘Galfridus’, a family name that connects him with his Norman ancestors. He was probably succeeded by his son Sir William, while Sir Robert and Richard may also have been his sons. He may have had a daughter who married John Ainslie of Dohlionston. He may be the same ‘Geoffry Ridel’ recorded in 1297 when his lands in both England and Scotland were restored by Edward I because he was in that King’s service abroad; in 1298 the same man was recorded as valet of Simon Fraser, when they were both with Edward in Flanders. He made gifts to Kelso and Melrose Abbeys during the reign of Alexander III. Sir Geoffrey (d.1346) son of Sir Hugh, head of the main English line. He was Baron of Montclare and Lord of Wittering and Cranston. He fought against Robert the Bruce, and lost his Scottish possessions afterwards. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Hugh, who petitioned to have his Scottish lands returned, but this was unsuccessful. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 receiving the Clerkship of Lilliesleaf Kirk from the Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding the deceased Thomas Riddell. Note that the Clerk at that time was like the assistant priest. He was listed as a scholar and was no doubt a younger son of the Laird of Riddell. In 1522 he was succeeded by John, son of John Riddell of that Ilk. George of that Ilk (16th C.) son of John, he was succeeded by Walter, who was either his son or his nephew. It may be that he was acting as Laird during the dotage of his father, but this is unclear. He could be the George who witnessed a document for the dispute between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533 when he was heir apparent to his father. In 1535 he was son and heir of John of that Ilk when he presented a precept of sasine for lands in Purveshill; his wife was there stated to be Elizabeth Ker. He may have been the George who was ‘Bailie in that part’, along with William, according to a document of 1535 relating to Harden (into which family at least one of his aunts had married). It is possible he pre-deceased his father, but in any case the next in succession was Walter (but it is unclear if he was his son or other male relative). George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. George (16th C.) recorded in 1579 being in ‘wester Eschiside’ (presumably Essenside) when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. This was for the sale of a piece of land in Lilliesleaf by James Redford in Hassendeauburn. George (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Riddale in Lillisle’ in 1580 in a marriage contract for his daughter Isabel. She was to marry George Rutherford in Bewlie, with the agreement that if no heirs were produced and George died first, then she was to have half of his possessions and get the ‘toquergud’ back (consisting of 3 draught oxen, 3 cows with calves, 20 sheep and 20 merks). The witnesses were his son John, Robert in Clerklands, John in Lilliesleaf Mill and James Henderson in Lilliesleaf. George (17th C.) resident of Rober- ton Parish. He married Janet Phaup in 1679 and their son William was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were James Shiel and James Sanderson. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for William Todshaw in 1686. George (d.c.1688) tenant in Lustruther when his will was recorded in 1688. George (18th C.) recorded at Newton in Kirkton Parish when his daughter Peggy was baptised in 1787. He was surely related to John, who was farmer there at the same time. George (d.bef. 1809) resident of Howahill. His son Robert (a wright) died in Hawick parish in 1809. He may be the George who married Margaret Hobkirk in Hobkirk Parish in 1769. George William nee Hutton (1807–71) son of George Hutton of Carlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford. He was a banker of Newmarket-on-Trent and Magistrate for Notts, Carlton-on-Trent. In 1835 he married Mary, who was heiress of Muselee, being daughter of Walter and niece of Maj. Charles. He assumed the additional surname of ‘Riddell’ in order to inherit the lands through his wife. These lands included Whitfield in Wilton Parish. After Mary died, he secondly married Hannah-Elizabeth, widow of J.O. Lambert, and thethirdly married Janetta-Gouville Bromhead, Baroness. He was succeeded by his son, also George William, and had another son, Edward Mitford. The surname in these couple of generations is often hyphenated as ‘Hutton-Riddell’. Capt. George William Hutton (1836–1915) son of George William Hutton, who had married Mary Riddell, the niece and heiress of Charles of Muselee. He thus inherited the Muselee lands and may later have lived there. He was educated at Rugby and was a Captain in the 16th Lancers. He sold the Dryburgh estate, as well as Bewlie and Bewlie Moor. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of Todshaw and vase (11th/12th C.) one of the earliest Scottish family members, likely moving north along with other supporters of King David I. His name was recorded as ‘Gervasis’ or ‘Geraisus’. He was probably son of Philip, and surely from the Norman ‘de Rydale’ family who held lands in England. He witnessed a charter of David I in 1116.

He was made High Sheriff of Roxburgh about the same time, the earliest known in that office. He is recorded as Sheriff in a charter of 1138/9 and witnessed several other charters for King David in the early 1140s. He may have married Christian de Soulis, who was a donor to Jedburgh Abbey, giving a third part of the village of ‘Henwingeslawe’ (possibly Mervinslaw). He and his brother Radulf (or Ralph) gave the church of Abbotrule to Jedburgh Abbey (although it is also suggested that this was Abbotsley in Huntingdonshire). A son Hugh is said to have been the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston Riddell (although the origin of that branch is a matter of debate). His son (or possibly brother) Walter was granted a charter of the lands of Lilliesleaf. He may have had other children, including ‘Jordanus’ and Adeliza (who married Henry ‘de Haga’, 3rd Laird of Be-

William, Marion and Agnes (whose ‘tutor’ was Walter Riddell, younger of Riccalton). In 1686 Agnes married John Nisbet, lawyer in Edinburgh; she was later heir to her brother William. Rev. Henry Scott (1789–1862) son of Henry, merchant in Glasgow. He was a contemporary of the author of ‘Scotland Yet’ and so sometimes confused with him. He originally trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to James Thomson and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1811. He resigned his Commission in 1825 and retrained as a minister, being licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1829, ordained at Longformacus in 1830 and translated to Duns in 1843. In 1818 he married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Gilchrist of Edinburgh. In 1831 he secondly married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of John Home of Stirkoke in Caithness. Rev. Henry Scott (1798–1870) minister and song-writer. He was born at Sorbie in Ewesdale (there is some confusion over the year of his birth), his parents Robert Riddell and Agnes Scott, being from Teviotdale. His father was a shepherd, who moved from Sorbie to Langshawburn in Eskdalemuir (when he was a child), later moving to Capplefoot (Hoddam Parish) then De-loraine in Selkirkshire. He had brothers who later lived at Dryden, near Selkirk, and Brookside in East Lothian (this elder brother moving to Ram-saycleuchburn). He was educated in short stints at Davington, Robertson and Newmill and heard James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’ singing in his house when he was a child. At about age 15 he became shepherd at Deloraine, 2 years later moving to Todrig, where he got to know William Knox. After his father died, when he was 18, he resolved to study for the ministry, and so attended Big-gar School and later Edinburgh University (and St. Andrews for a year), eventually being licensed by Biggar Presbytery in 1830. It was at Biggar that he became to be known as a poet, publish-ging ‘The Crook and Plaid’, and several articles for ‘The Clydesdale Magazine’. Before finishing with university he published ‘The Songs of the Ark’, which represents his longest poetic work on a single theme. He moved to live with his brother at Ramsaycleuchburn (near Teviothead) in 1831. After the local minister died, he was appointed as preacher at Caerlenrig Chapel of Ease (i.e. Teviothead Church) in 1832 (or perhaps 1833). He stayed at the Flex in his early years, walking 9 miles to church, and writing several songs there, including ‘The Hames of Our Ain Folk’. The Duke of Buccleuch later built him a cottage at Teviothead, where he remained for the rest of his life (and where he died). He was listed at Caerlenrig in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1839 he helped with the description of Cavers Parish, written by Rev. Strachan for the New Statistical Account. In 1841 he suffered what would now be called a nervous breakdown, and spent more than 3 years in the Crichton Royal Institution at Dumfries (he was missing for the 1841 census). He then returned to Teviothead, but did not resume his full ministerial duties, with other preachers taking over some of his duties until the first minister of the newly created Teviothead Parish was appointed in 1850. In 1844 he published a doctrinal volume, and in 1847 he published a volume of collected verse, as well as an extensive essay on the Ettrick Shepherd (with a later article for the Archeological Transactions. Many of his poems, written at Teviothead, were first published in the Hawick Advertiser. In later years he became involved with the Border Counties Association, became interested in local archæological excavations and wrote about Cavers Parish for the Sinclair’s ‘Statistical Account of Scotland’. He took part in several events in Hawick, including the Burns Centenary, laying the foundation stone of the Old Parish Church, giving lectures, and awarding the prizes for the Auld Brig poetry competition. He was also Bard for the St. John’s Masonic Lodge of Hawick, and his masonic brethren visit Teviothead annually to remember him. He was presented with a harp (inspired by the lines of ‘Scotland Yet’) by Bailie Paterson in 1859 (and this is now in the Museum). William Scott also presented Mrs. Riddell with an oil painting of her husband (perhaps the portrait by John A. Horsburgh, which is in the Museum). Another portrait (by Lancelot Watson in 1889) hangs in the Museum, which also has his home-made compass and caliper set, as well as his shepherd’s crook. He was still recorded at Teviothead Cottage in a directory of 1868. His attempts at biblical translation into Lowland Scots (printed privately for Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte) were an early philological influence on James Murray. He was writer of the words for ‘Scotland Yet’, probably Scotland’s most popular song of the latter half of the 19th century, and considered by many as the national anthem of its day (and recorded by Scocha in 2004). His publications include ‘Stanzas on the Death of Lord Byron’ (1825), ‘Songs of the Ark; with other poems’ (1832), ‘The Christian Politician; or the Right Way of Thinking’ (1844), ‘Poems, Songs and Miscellaneous Pieces’ (1847), ‘St. Matthew translated into Lowland Scotch’ (1856), ‘Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch’ (1857), ‘The Song of Solomon in Lowland Scotch’ (1858), ‘The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell’ (2 volumes, 1871) and ‘Scotland Yet and Other Verses’ (1898). His translations of biblical passages into ‘Lowland Scotch’ are interesting for the wealth of dialect words that they contain; however, with little precedent to build on, the translations are a strange mixture of genuine Borders vernacular, words taken from earlier Scots works and oddly spelled English. In all, he composed over 200 songs, with manuscripts unpublished at his death including ‘Malcolm of Wharden’, ‘Melvina of Eller’ and ‘The Dutiful Daughter’, this last being a play in 5 acts. In addition he published an article on ‘Store-Farming in the South of Scotland’ and another on ‘Foot-rot in Sheep’. In 1833 he married Eliza (1796–1875), daughter of William Clark, merchant in Biggar. Their children were: Walter Francis Montagu Douglas (1834–77), obviously named after his patron, who worked for the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank; William Brown Clark (1836–56), who was a poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20; and Robert H. (c.1840–87), who was a sheep-farmer in Australia; His own death came fairly suddenly, his last letter being an apology for being unable to attend the meeting of the Border Counties Association held in Hawick 2 days before he died. A 50 ft (13 m) high conical memorial cairn on the slopes of Dryden Fell above Teviothead is visible from the A7, erected in 1874, repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999. A plaque was placed at Sorbie by the Callants’ Club in 1928. He died at Dryden Cottage, which also has a commemorative plaque – ‘…Her own loved Teviot, ripple, onwards clear. She prayed with zeal – the listening gods gave ear, And sent a hand to set her hill-harp free. Who was the minstrel? Riddell, it was thee’ [JoHa], ‘Henry Riddell is a name Puir auld Hawick micht fairly claim, ‘Scotland Yet’, a nation’s pride Was inspired by scenes that bide ’Mang the hills o’ Teviotside, Rich auld Hawick’ [TK], ‘A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale, The wimpled waters seem to mourn the Bard of Teviotdale’ [JT]. Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89) 4th son of Sir John Buchanan. He was born posthumously, like his father. He worked with the Indian Service, rising to the rank of General and served as Post Office Director for India. He was awarded the Star of India. Hugh (12th/13th C.) possibly the 2nd son of Sir Auskittel and brother of Walter. He is recorded as ‘Hug Ridel’ during the reign of William I, when he was witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow, regarding lands in Ashkirk Parish. He was ‘Hugone Ridel’ when he witnessed another charter of William I and one for the church of ‘inchethor’. He was probably the Hugh who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King William, after he was captured at Alnwick in 1174. He donated the church of Cranston to Kelso Abbey in about 1190, and is stated by some accounts to be the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston-Riddell. Probably the same ‘Hugone ridal’ witnessed an earlier charter in the reign of King Malcolm and one from about 1151 for the Church of Brinkburne. Hugh of Wittering (d.bef. 1233) owner of lands in Northamptonshire. He is recorded receiving sasine of ‘Witteringa’ in 1188. His widow Sibilla was involved in land claims in 1233 and 1254. His son and heir was probably Richard, who was recorded being ‘in the power of the King of Scotland’ in 1233. He could be the ‘Hugh Ridel’ who witnessed a document (around 1206–14) for Earl David (later King of Scotland), regarding lands gifted to a church in London. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in 1236 when William Avenel made a claim against him for fees from lands in ‘Mideltun’. It is unclear where this was, or how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is listed as ‘Dominus Hugo Rydel, miles’. He is probably the 2nd son of Geoffrey, who succeeded to the estates of the main branch of the English Riddells on the death of his brother, also Geoffrey. He also held the lands of Cranston in Scotland. It appears that for staying too long in Scotland, King Edward II took away his lands of Wittering and gave them to his son Geoffrey. However, he had other lands in Northumberland, obtained from his kinsman Sir William. He is probably the ‘Master Hugh de Rydale’ who is recorded in a Northumberland document of 1270. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Huwe Rydel’ in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. From Edinburgh, his entry is separate from ‘Dominus Hugo’. But he could be the same man as the entry for ‘Hughie Rydel, tenant le Roi, du Comte de Edeneburgh’. His seal consists of ‘a pile in base and a chief’ with the name ‘S'HVGONIS RYEDEL’. Hugh (13th/14th C.) holder of the manor of ‘Wytering’ (i.e. Wittering) in Northamptonshire. He granted it to his son and heir Geoffrey in 1296, but was dispossessed in 1296 as a supported of John Baliol, when he was ‘in Scotland’. He could be the Hugh who was recorded in Berwick in 1296. In 1315 he was ‘Rydel, sometime lord of Wytering’ when his grant to his son was confirmed by Edward II. He is surely the same as one of the Hughes who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was probably the Hugh son of Richard recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. He may have been grandson of the Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in document relating to ‘Wyterine’ in Northamptonshire in 1233 and 1254. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Huch de Rydal’ when he was involved in a raid on a house in Berwick in 1296. Probably the same Hugh was recorded in 1310/1 when his wife Mary Conyn asked for support for her and her family at Berwick. Sir Hugh (d.1363) son of Geoffrey, from whom he inherited the family lands of Montclare, Wittering and others in Northamptonshire. He petitioned to recover the Scottish lands of Cranston lost by his father. He died without issue, whereupon his lands were inherited by Sir Nicholas, whose grandfather Sir Nicholas was his grandfather’s brother. After that the representative of this main family line was Sir John, who did briefly recover Cranston, but must have sold or list it shortly afterwards. At this point the senior branch of the family in Scotland became the Riddells of that Ilk, based in Lilliesleaf. Hugh (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1534 as ‘sir Hugh Riddali’. He was presumably a cleric of some sort. Isobel (17th C.) daughter of James, portioner of Lilliesleaf and wife of Adam Haig in Belses. In 1656 she was served heir to her father in his 16-shilling land within Lilliealeaf. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. James of that Ilk (d.c.1510) probably grandson of Quentin or perhaps Mungo, or perhaps son of Mungo and grandson of Quentin. He also had a brother, Thomas. His ancestry can be traced back to ‘Geraisus de Rydale’, who married Christiana de Soulis in the early 12th century; but from this point on the genealogy is much more secure. He was one of the first of the family to be referred to as ‘of that Ilk’, although the lands near Lilliesleaf were in the family for many previous generations. In 1471 he inherited the lands of ‘Qhittounis’ (i.e. ‘Whitton’ near Morebattle) and ‘Westerlillisclef’ (i.e. Wester Lilliesleaf). He is probably the ‘James Riddale’ who was witness to a Cranston sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6 and the ‘James Riddale’ who witnessed the ‘re-tour’ for the Kers and the lands of Borthwicksiels in 1471. In 1477/8 he made an arrangement with John Waugh, over the lands of ‘Unerquhitone’, clearing debts with William Pringle; James kept Under Whitten, while John received lease of a ‘husbandland’ of land in ‘Esterleeselef’. In 1478/9 Margaret Murray resigned her lands of ‘Unirquhitone’ to him. And in 1478 he is referred to as ‘of that Ilk’ when he leased ‘Plewolande’ in ‘Ovirquyttoun’ to John Davidson in return for borrowing money. He also witnessed a charter to David, son of David Scott of Buccleuch for lands in Selkirk in 1478. In 1479 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Cessford. In 1483 he is recorded as ‘Riddale of Quhittowne’ when witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. An instrument of resignation of 1485 is recorded for the lands of ‘Unerquhitone’ with the Davids-sons. He also witnessed a sasine in 1487 for the lands of Boonraw. In 1489, along with Walter Ker of Cessford, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He was recorded as Laird of Riddell and Whittton in 1493 and in that same year was the Laird fined for non-presence at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with Gilbert ‘Hoigson’ acting as his suitor. In 1494 he was ‘Jacobum Riddale de Quhittoun’ on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Lindsay. His children were: John, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1585), who married Walter Scott of Synt-\on or perhaps Walter of Harden; and Christian, who also appears to have married Walter Scott of Harden. It also seems that there was a slightly earlier marriage between a widow of Riddell (said to have been a Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably Elizabeth) and a Scott of Harden; these marriages between Riddells and Scotts of Harden could be conflated. James (16th C.) younger son of John of that Ilk. A document in the Selkirk Protocol Books records how in 1545 he gave 30 shillings of land within Lilliesleaf. James (16th C.) tenant in Max-\ton or perhaps Walter of Harden; and Christian, who also appears to have married Walter Scott of Harden. It also seems that there was a slightly earlier marriage between a widow of Riddell (said to have been a Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably Elizabeth) and a Scott of Harden; these marriages between Riddells and Scotts of Harden could be conflated. James (16th C.) younger son of John of that Ilk. A document in the Selkirk Protocol Books records how in 1545 he gave 30 shillings of land and half the houses of ‘le ester place’ (perhaps Easter Lilliesleaf) to his wife Janet Ker. The witnesses included George Ker of Gate-\shaw (probably related to his wife) and Walter (heir apparent to John of that Ilk). James (16th C.) recorded in Clerklands in 1563 when his son Robert witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. This was for William Davidson and made by Walter of that Ilk, who was probably a relative. James (16th C.) tenant in Max-\ton. In 1580 it is recorded that he had borrowed money from John in Newton Mill, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife Janet Ormiston and son Patrick, he gave sasine of half of St. Boswell’s Mill to John. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Wal-\ter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. On the same day in 1580 he also delivered £40 in redemption money to Robert, brother of Walter of that Ilk. The sasine was witnessed before David in St. Boswell’s and William in Max-\ton. James of Maybole (17th C.) 3rd son of An-\rew of that Ilk. It is unclear if his lands were at Maybole in Dumfriesshire or somewhere else. It has been suggested that he might have been ancestor of Robert, father of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. James (d.bef. 1656) portioner of Lil-\liesleaf. In 1656 his daughter and heir Isobel, wife of Adam Haig in Belses, inherited his 16-shilling land within Lilliesleaf. James (17th C.) probably son of Walter, portioner of Bawlie, who resided at Appotside in the Rule valley. He was witness to discharges of H Gib' Kirk teinds in 1659 and in 1660, when he was described as ‘of Harwood’ (presumably ‘Harwood’). In another document he signed as ‘son lawfull to Ellspethe Haistie in Harwood’. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Mar-\garet (b.1646) and Bessie (b.1648). In 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th C.) shepherd at ‘Bosathill’ (i.e. Bowset Hill) in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. He was ‘deficient’ in paying the tax, and his entry reads ‘to Inglend’. James (17th C.) resident of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. In 1694 his widow Bessie Scott was leasing a third of the farm of Wiltonburn; she may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wilto-\nburn in 1694. In 1734 there is a record of the fu-\neral of Bessie, who may have been his daughter (or wife). James (17th C.) recorded near Lar-\riston on the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was recorded having a kiln. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Heath Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn when he got married in 1718 (with no wife’s name listed). James (18th C.) wright at Branxholme Park. He was there according to a Roberton baptism in 1737. In 1740 he was at ‘Park’ when he witnessed a Hawick baptism for William Brown and Helen Riddell (who may have been related to him). His chil-\dren included Walter (b.1737), baptised in Robert-\ton. His unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1740, with witnesses herd James Armstrong and John Brown. It is possible that he was the James who married Isobel Dryden in Roberton in 1732. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1727 and 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1734. In 1726 he married Isobel Williamson, who was from Stow. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included some of (with the rest likely being children of the wright at Branxholme Park): Thomas (b.1727); William (b.1729); Robert (b.1731); Helen (b.1733); Nelie (b.1734), although this baptismal entry appears to be crossed out; Margaret (b.1734); James (b.1735). James (18th C.) recorded at Menslaws in 1746 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Laidlaw. The witnesses were mason Andrew Wilson and merchant Francis Gledstains. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Elliot and was at Priesthill in 1777 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Col. James (d.1804) son of Sir Walter. He served in the army in Holland. He was entered onto the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780, when listed as a Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1788 he was listed with the same rank and ‘In the service of Holland’ among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir John Scott of Ancrum (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was later factor of the Riddell estates. He could be the James who is recorded owning half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Liddesdale. It is said that the family lived on the banks of the Liddel for many generations, and were related to the other Roxburghshire branches. His children were: James (b.1781), who emigrated to Canada; Henry; William; and Thomas. If the birthdate of the elder son is confused, then he could be the James who married Janet Elliot and whose children James (b.1791) and Henry (b.1794) are recorded in Castleton. Sir James Buchanan (1765–84) 8th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his brother Sir Walter. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, but drowned while swimming in the River Brunswick at age 19 after being Baronet for only a few months. He was succeeded by his brother Sir John Buchanan. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Leaheds in Wilton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. James (b.1781) son of Liddesdale shepherd James. If his birth date was really 1791, then he could be the son of James and Janet Elliot recorded in Castleton Parish. He joined the army and lived in Berwickshire. He married Isabella, daughter of George Hogg (and army officer) and Margaret Van Buren (from Hackensack, New Jersey). He was living at Ednam in 1835 when he emigrated to Canada with his family. His children included: James Van Buren, who died young; George Hogg, who also died young; and Dr. Alexander Dow (b.1824), who became a doctor in Compton, Quebec. James Scott (1780/1–1835) resident of Castleton Parish. He died at Larriston Rigg and was buried in Castleton. His children Isabella (1809/10–37) and John (d.1837) died of smallpox on board the Cornubria on the coast of New Brunswick. James (19th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Hobkirk Parish in 1826. James (b.1807/8–bef. 61) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer at Lochburnfoot in 1851. He married Jane (or Jean, b.1809), daughter of Castleton shepherd James Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Eliza (1833–81), who married Andrew Stark; Christian (b.1835); William (b.1839); Mary (b.1842); James (b.1845), who married Jessie Scott; and Jane (b.1855). His wife was a widow living at Calaburn in 1861. James (b.1836) son of John Lamb and Agnes Riddell, he was born at Timpendean. He was a grocer, butcher and farmer in the Morebattle area and later moved to Newcastle-in-Tynedale. In 1867 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Cavers, carter in Newcastle. Their children were Adam, Violet Turnbull, Agnes Isabella, Elizabeth Jane, Margaret and Robina Cavers. James (b.1839/40) son of John and Lillias McAlister. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Wallace and Helen Waugh. James (b.1845) son of James and Jean Elliot, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was a ploughman in Lilliesleaf and later a carter in Edinburgh. In Cavers Parish in 1866 he married Jessie (1844–99), daughter of James Scott and Agnes Bell. Their children were Agnes Giles (b.1867), James (b.1869), Jane (b.1871), Robert (b.1874), Janet (b.1874), Elizabeth (b.1880) and William (b.1886). Janet (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Jean ‘Jeannie Ma Lord’ (18th/19th C.) married name of Jean Oliver. Jean (1600–60) daughter of Andrew of that Ilk. She died unmarried and was buried in Jedburgh Abbey, with the inscription ‘Here lies a religious and virtuous gentlewoman, Jean Riddell, daughter of Sir Andrew Riddell of that ilk, …’. Jean (b.c.1655) eldest daughter of Walter of Minto. She married Sir Robert Laurie, 1st Baronet of Maxwelton. They had 3 sons and 4...

William Riddell

Riddell

daughters, one of whom, Annie, was famed for her beauty. William Douglas of Fingland composed the verses ‘Annie Laurie’ in her honour in about 1700 (but failed to woo her, since she married Ferguson of Craiglarroch). John (d. before 1235) recorded in a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire, involving his wife’s dowry lands in ‘Hadecoct’. His wife was ‘Hauwysia’ and his son and heir was Geoffrey. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem de Ridel’ in the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. This was regarding a piece of land in Denton on the Tyne, which had also belonged to his father John. ‘Ela, uxor Johannis de Rydale’ is also recorded separately, and so either his wife or wife of another John. In the same records ‘Walterus de Chendal’ is accused of striking his servant, who was also called ‘Johannem de Ridal’. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother ‘Hawysia de Newen De Ridal’. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother ‘Hawysia de Newenham’ and her lands in ‘Rodewood’. John of Ayton (13th C.) recorded as witness to several charters involving the lands of Renton and Ayton in Berwickshire in about 1280. It is unclear how he was related to other early Riddells. John (15th C.) resident of lands in Lauder, recorded in 2 charters of 1501. John of that Ilk (d.c.1545) son of James. In 1502 he was ‘junior of that Ilk’ when listed along with Douglasses and others from the Jedburgh area as people guilty of (and with remission for) attacking Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. In 1503 he had sasine for the lands of Whitton and Wester Liliesleaf. In 1507/8 he was a witness to the document for Scott of Whitchester relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the ‘Larde of Riddale’ who was on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was a witness in 1529 to the indenture to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. He may also be the John who in 1529/30 witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvod’. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Isabel Murray. He granted part of the land at Lilliesleaf to Patrick Earl Bothwell in 1534. Also in 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he was witness to a charter of George, Lord Hume, confirming the lands of Harden to William Scott of Harden, and was also witness to Simon Scott of Fingland resigning Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden in 1540. In 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He may be the Riddell of that Ilk who married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (who later married William Scott of Harden and Todrig). He was possibly succeeded by his son George or his grandson Walter, but these generations are unclear. Documents of 1533 and 1535 list George as his heir apparent, while in 1545 (according to the Selkirk Protocol Book) his heir was then Walter (who must have been either his younger son, or son of George, and hence his grandson). His younger son James (who married Janet Ker) is also recorded in 1545. In 1551 the lands of Bewlie went to William, brother of his heir Walter; it is unclear whether he was already deceased at this time. Other possible children included John and William. In 1579 at Riddell his son Walter witnessed a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig, with his son Robert also a witness; the same day another son of his, Andrew, made an arrangement with Walter Scott of Todrig, with Andrew’s wife Margaret Ker, and her mother Elizabeth Ker, also mentioned. John (16th C.) son of John of that Ilk. In 1522 he succeeded George Riddell (probably his uncle or other near relative) as Clerk of Lilliesleaf Parish. This means he was acting as assistant Priest, or at least held a small benefice for this position. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 being formerly in Ashkirk Mill when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) tenant in Newton Mill. In 1580 it is recorded James in Maxton had borrowed money from him, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife and son, James gave him sasine of half of St. Boswell’s Mill. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. He was in Newton when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He may be the John in Dryburgh Mill recorded in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Elizabeth and Thomas Cochrane, who was also in Newton. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Mill in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. John (16th C.) son of George in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he witnessed the marriage contract for his sister Isabel. Sir John 1st Baronet of Riddell (d.1636) eldest son of Andrew of that Ilk. In 1602 his father resigned lands in Lilliesleaf to him. In 1611 he was cautioner for Robert Davidson in ‘Fallawis’ and for Andrew Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1610 he and his father had a bond not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. In 1616 he had an inhibition from the Lords of Council regarding lands in Howman. In 1617 he and his father were appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was still ‘apparent of that Ilk’ in 1619 when he complained about a dispute in Morebattle Kirk. He was a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was still ‘appeirand of yat ilk’, and was voted as ‘chancellor’ of the assize. He was probably the ‘Riddell, appeirand of that Ilk’ who was appointed as a new Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. In 1623–24 he was involved in a court case over teninds for the lands of Over Whiton. In 1624 he was foreman of a jury in Edinburgh for a Liddesdale cattle-stealing case. In 1628 he was ‘apparent of that Ilk’ when charged to be part of a local Commission to hold courts. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628, with his lands erected into a barony and regality of New Riddell (comprising 16,000 acres on the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). Also in 1628 he was one of the major landowners of Roxburghshire who convened to elect M.P.s., his name recorded as ‘Jhone Riddell fear of that Ilk’, his father still being the Laird of Riddell. These proceedings were quite protracted, and he even refused to serve when selected. In 1660 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston and Blackbarony; the husbands of her sisters included the Earl of Ancrum, Patrick Murray of Phgliphaugh and Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Sir Walter, who became Governor of Desborough or Doesburgh in Holland; Thomas; and Ann, who married Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir James Anstruther, widow of James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose Abbey; they had one daughter, who married David Barclay of Colerne. One of his daughters may have married John Scott of Gorrenberry. John of Muselee (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s, also holding the lands of Bewlie. He was son of William and Bessie Ainslie and grandson of Andrew of that Ilk, and was served heir to his father in 1653. He was recorded paying £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663; he may also be the John who paid tax on £52 in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Cringles. In 1665 his tenant John Dodds made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over the boundaries between them. He had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1653 and 1662. He was also recorded in 4 deeds in 1663. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. Also in 1678 he paid the land tax on Muselee in Hawick Parish and on part of Bewlie (formerly owned by the Turnbuls) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He appears to have married Elizabeth Haliburton in 1639 and only a few years later married Grezil, daughter of Rev. P. Schew. His children included William (who probably died young) and Patrick (who succeeded). He also had 3 daughters. John (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed along with Andrew, to whom he was presumably related. In 1691 he and Andrew witnessed a baptism for Walter Murray, who also lived at Dryden. He and Andrew witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedie in 1694. In 1698 he is recorded as ‘Elder in Dryden’. He married Janet Matheson and their children included Jean (b.1698). John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. He may be the same John in Headshaw Mill who was also listed among ‘ye poor’. He may be the John who (along with James Kennedy, who lived at Ashkirk Mill) witnessed a baptism for William Donald in 1690. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John 3rd Baronet of Riddell (d.1700) son of Sir Walter. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Blue-beard’ because he had 4 wives. He was served heir to his father (and grandfather Sir John) in 1669, including several lands in Lilliesleaf Parish and elsewhere. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Morebattle and Hownam Parishes, as well as tax on land valued at £1765 in Lilliesleaf Parish (having sold Riddell Mill, but purchased lands from the feuars of Lilliesleaf). In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was apparently a zealous Covenanter, being imprisoned (in the Tolbooth of Haddington) for his principles, and probably also for supporting his brother, Rev. Archibald. In 1684 he was fined the most of any Roxburghshire heritor, the huge sum of £52,000. However, he received a remission from the King in 1687. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was also appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. an M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1690 and served until his death. He married Agnes, daughter of Gideon Scott of Highcester and another son, Alexander. John len, who married Robert Kerr of Cavers Carre, Margaret. He may also have had a daughter He-

William (d.1700), who died without children; and Henry, eldest son of Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean; Walter, who succeeded; Christian, who married a year before his death). His children were: Sir Rosehill, formerly Miss Hepburn (this only about and daughter. And lastly the widow of Watt of Ton of that Ilk, with whom he had another son and daughter. He thirdly Margaret Swin-

Morrison of Preston Grange; they had a son and daughter together. He witnessed a baptism for Wright Francis Gledstains in 1694. He may be the John who married Helen, daughter of Sir Alexander Dickson, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1679), Robert (b.1681), Helen (b.1684) and Walter (b.1686). John of Haining (d.1696) son of Andrew of Haining and grandson of the first Riddell (of Riddell) to hold the Haining estate. He was served heir to his father in 1643. He was recorded in the county valuation in 1643, his part of Bewlie being valued at £390. In 1659 there was a dispute with Selkirk Common and there was a ‘bond of inhibition’ with the Burgh. In 1671 he made an agreement for setting up a stud of horses for the King’s use. He was recorded in deeds in 1673 (with his brother Walter also mentioned). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. His grand-daughter Magdalene married David Erskine of Dun and sold the estate to the Pringles. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, who was served as his heir in 1696. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for three hearths, since he was ‘wt tuo kilns’. This suggests he was a miller or some other kind of tradesman. He was probably related to Walter, who was at Whithope Mill in at least 1714–29. John of Muselee (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Patrick and Maria Elliot. He is recorded in a document of 1710 involving an exchange of the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish with John Nisbet. In 1707 he and John Nisbet were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1715 and 1716 he witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton. In 1706 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Walter Riddell from Lilliesleaf, who was tenant farmer at North Synton. Their children were: Patrick (b.1707), who succeeded; Walter (b.1709); Andrew; William (b.1713), who moved to Berwick, where he became a successful merchant; Barbara (b.1715); John (b.1717); Alexander (b.1719), baptised at North Synton; James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Thomas (b.1724), who was also a merchant in Berwick; and an unnamed daughter. He is probably the John ‘of Mewsle’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Minto Mill, probably related to the local Lairds. He is recorded in 1701 when his son Patrick became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Salenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1710. Perhaps the same James was at Borthaugh in 1712 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Anna (b.1701), baptised in Robertson, may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a servant in Commonside in 1708. He married Janet Young and their children included: Robert (b.1708); an unnamed child (b.1719); Walter (b.1722); Janet (b.1726). The witnesses in 1708 were James Grieve and Walter Purdom in Commonside. John (17th/18th C.) recorded living in Bramsholme Town in 1713. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Robert Thomson and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) miller, probably at Newmill. In 1724 he was witness to a Hawick Parish baptism there. He may be the John who married Mary Scott and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1724) and Walter (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson (perhaps the tenants at Newmill). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 and Harden in 1733 and 1736. His children included Agnes (b.1731), Henry (b.1733) and Margaret (b.1736). John (18th C.) tenant in Whithope Mill. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. He was surely related to Walter, who was there in the 1710s and Walter who was there in the 1770s. John (d.bef. 1747) eldest son of Sir Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He was an advocate and said to be highly accomplished. He died before his father, so that his younger brother (also Sir Walter) succeeded to Riddell. He is probably the John, younger of Riddell, who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. Sir John (d.1768) 6th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding from his father Walter, his elder brother Walter having died first. He was a merchant in Curaçao, returning on his father Walter's death. He was "of that Ilk junior" in 1761 when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1762 he married Jane Buchanan, daughter and heiress of James Buchanan from Sundon, Bedfordshire; he granted her a bond of provision for lands in Riddell in 1768, and she died in 1798. In 1772 he succeeded to the Buchanan estates on the death of his wife's brother. He died at Hamstead in Middlesex, after being Baronet for only about 3 years, leaving a young family. His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Sir James Buchanan, who succeeded his brother; and Sir John Buchanan, born posthumously, who also succeeded to Riddell. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1768. After his death his wife, referred to as Dame Jane Riddell, still held rights over part of the estate. She must have been the Lady Riddell who was recorded in 1794 paying the tax for having 4 male servants at Riddell. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife was Jean Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); Janet (b.1755); William (b.1757); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Winthrope and their children included John (b.1771), Mary (b.1774), George (b.1776), Margaret (b.1780) and William (b.1783). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Stoddart in Wilton Parish in 1770 and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1774). John (18th C.) farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–89. His daughter Maragret was born in 1786 and son John in 1787. John (18th C.) resident in Catslack in 1794 when he was recorded in Selkirk in a dispute over non-payment of a bill. John (b.1758) son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He was a gardener and also sexton (but it is not clear for which church). In 1780 he married Peggy Parris and they had 12 children: Ann (b.1784), who died young; Isabella (b.1786), who also died young; Janet (b.1788), who married Michael Dryden; Francis (b.1792), who married Euphemia Scott, drove a mail coach for about 19 years, and died in Northumberland; Isabella (b.1795), died young; James (b.1797), who married Janet Rae and worked as a coachman; Adam (b.1798), who married Martha Leatherhead and moved to Edinburgh; John (b.1801), who was killed in a threshing mill at the age of 19; Jean (b.1804), who married John Watson from Selkirk; Katherine (b.1806), who married weaver John Fairgreaves and emigrated to Bridgeton, Maine; John (again, b.1809), who worked as a coachman and married Barbara Hall; Mary (b.1810), who died young. He may be the John recorded in Hawick in 1791 in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. John (18th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1791 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Jean (b.1793), Agnes (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Anne (b.1800). Sir John Buchanan (1768–1819) 9th Baronet of Riddell, youngest son of John the 6th Baronet, being born posthumously. He succeeded from his 2 elder brothers. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Riddell estate, as well as Cringles and Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish and Whitton in Hownam Parish. He was said to be a man of elegant, but stiff manners, and who was a benefactor of the working classes. He was known as a keen agriculturalist with ambitious ideas, some of which led to the ruin rather than improvement of the Riddell estate. More than 300 acres of trees were planted during his time as Laird, 3 gate lodges were built and 2 new approaches to the estate. Both he and Lady Riddell (presumably his mother) were listed in the
He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, Grahamslaw and then became collector of taxes. He farmed at Timpendean, later moved to Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, and was awarded the Star of India. He still owned the lands of Over Whitton and others in Hownam Parish according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811; he also owned the lands of Bank, Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, Hoglaw-burn and parts of other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was a major heritor of Ashkirk Parish, as recorded in a complaint of 1814 about payment for work done on the Manse. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. Sir Walter Scott stated that he ‘bored everybody to death’. In 1805 he married Frances, daughter of Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, and she died in 1868, aged 90. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf) were: Frances Jane (b.1806), born in Edinburgh; Harriet (b.1807), born at Riddell House; Emily (1808–81), who married John Adams; Walter Buchanan (1810–92), who succeeded; Jane (b.1812); Rev. John Charles Buchanan (1814–79), Rector of Harrietshan in Kent, whose son John Walter succeeded later; Charlotte Mary (1816–69); Gen. Charles James (1817–1903), who served with the Royal Artillery; and Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89), who was born posthumously, like his father, worked with the Indian Service, and was awarded the Star of India. John (1766–1840) 5th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was involved with the founding of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He farmed at Timpendean, later moved to Grahamslaw and then became collector of taxes. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811; he was listed as ‘J. Riddell, Esq. Timpendean. He died unmarried in Jedburgh. John (c.1780–1851) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Wauchope. He spent 37 years as shepherd at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish) and then rented the farm of Berryhall next to Abbotsford. In 1841 he was at Clarilaw with his wife and daughter Betty. His wife was Margaret Turnbull (1777–1862) from Hawick, and they must have married when he was quite young (although not in 1791, as sometimes suggested). Their children included: Walter (1800–81), who married Margaret Baxter, and was a farm labourer in Bowden and later at Philiphaugh; Margaret (1802–94), who married stone mason Walter Ballantyne of St. Boswells; James (1804–1902), shepherd at Girrick, near Kelso; Robert (1807–67), who married Elizabeth Dickson and emigrated to Canada; William (1809–c.77), shepherd at Muselee, who emigrated to Australia; John (1812–76), who married Margaret Grieve and died at Faldonside; Elizabeth (b.1814), who died at about the age of 30; Jane (b.1817), who married Andrew Scott and died in Hawick; and Turnbull (c.1823–91), who married Helen Clarkson. Many member of the family are buried at Bowden. John (1785–1862) son of Henry of Little Govan and Anne Glassford, he was descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, where he specialised in peerage cases and was known as an antiquarian and genealogist. He died unmarried in Edinburgh. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Whillans in Cavers Parish in 1789. John (b.1790/1) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eastfield in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 180 acres and employing 2 labourers. His wife was Agnes and their children included Archibald, Isabella, John and Thomas. John (d.1843) joiner in Lilliesleaf, eldest son of William. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Turnbull. His children included: William (b.1816), who was also a joiner; Jean (b.1819); and Mary, who had a baby the same day that her father died. John Carre (1809–79) 3rd son of Thomas of Camieston. He was born at Linthill. He was educated in Edinburgh and in 1839 emigrated to Australia with his cousin Thomas Ferrier Hamilton. The land that the pair purchased (between Melbourne and Bendigo) was called Riddells Creek. He became a member of the Victorian Legislative Council and then the Victorian Legislative Assembly. Rev. John Charles Buchanan (b.1814) 2nd son of Sir John Buchanan, 9th Baronet. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge and was a Fellow of Eton College. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge and was a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. He was educated at Oxford University and was a Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. He was educated at Cambridge University and was a Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge. He was educated at Oxford University and was a Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. He was educated at Cambridge University and was a Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. He was educated at Oxford University and was a Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. He was educated at Cambridge University and was a Fellow of Peterhouse College, Cambridge. He was educated at Oxford University and was a Fellow of New College, Oxford. He was educated at Cambridge University and was a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. He was educated at Oxford University and was a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. He was educated at Cambridge University and was a Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.
of All Souls’ College. He became Rector of Harri-etsham in Kent and was Honorary Canon of Canterbury. He was heir presumptive to the Barony, since his elder brother Walter Buchanan had no children. He had 8 children of his own, and his son John Walter succeeded. John (b.1832/3) son of Andrew. He took over as tenant farmer at North Syon. He is recorded there in the 1860s, and was also a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish.
John (19th C.) farmer at Peel in Liddlesdale in 1868. John (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, in Cavers Parish, in the 1860s. Sir John Walter Buchanan (1849–1924) 11th Baronet of Ridddell, son of Rev. John Charles, he succeeded his uncle, Sir Walter to the Baronetcy of Nova Scotia. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became a barrister. He served as High Sheriff of Northumberland. In 1874 he married Sarah Isabel, youngest daughter of Robert Wharton. He was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan, who married Rachel Beatrice Lyttel-13th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father when only 5 months old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, being 2nd Lieutenant in the King’s Royal Rifle Corps and then qualifying as a chartered accountant. He served as Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales 1985–90 and Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland 2000–09. He was also on many other boards and committees and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1969 he married Sarah, daughter of Baron Richardson of Duntisbourne and they had 3 sons, including Walter John Buchanan, who succeeded. Sir Jordan (12th C.) probably a son of Sir Auskittel.
Although he appears to be directly descended from the Riddells of Riddell, it is unclear how he was related to other Riddells in the north of England.
He was most likely named after Jordannus de Fleming, who could have been his uncle. He witessed a grant to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1160, and another grant of lands in Berwickshire and Roxburghshire to Walter, son of Alan the Steward in 1161/2. He witnessed a confirmation of donations to Dunfermline Abbey in about 1166 and another charter of lands in the Lothians and Fife at about the same time. He was also witess in 1173/4 for lands in Angus. Probably the same man was Sheriff in Northumberland, with estates at Tilmouth in Durham. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Walter. Margaret (d.c.1631) sister of William of Greatlaws. She married Andrew Duncanson, minister at St. Boswell’s. In 1630 she was served heir to her brother’s lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish, but died soon afterwards. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded in connection with money Sir Gilbert Elliott gave to the Hawick Kirk Session for keeping her in Wilton, suggesting she was supposed to be resident in Hawick Parish. Another record refers to he as ‘being mad’. Mary (17th/18th C.) also known as Margaret, she married John Scoon, who farmed at Branxholme Town. In 1705 she was renting part of Branxholme Town, with her cautioner being Walter (probably her brother or other close relative). She was still renting part in 1708 and is recorded along with her son (whose name is not given), leasing part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1711 and 1712. By 1714 she was renting part of the farm with Robert Scoon, making it clear that this was her son. The pair were in arrears until at least 1718 and in 1719 she was replaced as tenant by Walter Scoon. Mary (1809– 52) only daughter of Walter, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Muselee. Her mother was a daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. In 1835 she mar-rried George William Hutton, who was a banker at Newark (son of George Hutton of Chorlton-Trent and Frances Mitford of Mitford Castle).
Their son was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell, who succeeded to the Muselee estates on the death of her uncle Charles in about 1849. They had another son, Edward Mitford Hutton Riddell.
Matthew (13th C.) recorded as ‘Matheo Rydel’ when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Aytton. This was sometime in the period 1247–60.
A Matthew from the previous century was Abbot of Peterburgh. Michael (14th C.) witness to a charter of Adam de Roule for the lands of Alton-burn in about 1354. He is recorded as ‘Michael de Rydale’, and was probably part of the Riddles of that Ilk. Mungo (d.1471) recorded as ‘Mungo de Redale’ in 1436/7, when Richard ‘de Lylliscleu’ resigned the lands of Liliesleaf to him as his superior. In 1435 he is ‘Mungo de Redoll’ when he gained lands in the Regality of Sprouston from ‘Marioun Wedale’, widow of John; he held his court at ‘Westirlellyscleff’ (i.e. ‘Wester Liliesleaf’). He may have been succeeded by his grandson (or son) James. However, his relationship with the nearly contemporary Quentin is unclear. One possibility is that he was Quentin’s son (and therefore James’ father), and that they were both referred to as ‘of Riddell’ for several years;
another possibility is that they were brothers, and shared the lands of Riddell and Whitton in some way. If he was James’ father, then he also had a son called Thomas, who was James’ brother. Mungo (16th C.) described as ‘Sir Mungo Riddelle, chaplain’ when he was witness to a document in 1556 relating to the lands of Nether Harden. Given that all the other witnesses were fairly local it is reasonable to assume he was attached to one of the nearby churches, say Wilton or Ashkirk. His name occurs after that of Walter of that Ilk, who may therefore have been his father or brother. Mungo (16th C.) recorded in Lessudene in 1581/2 when he witnessed 2 transactions in Selkirk. Perhaps the same Mungo was recorded in the same year in a marriage contract for his sister Marion with his step-sister Janet Kyle. Sir Patrick of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 4th Laird, son of Auskettel (although some sources suggest he was son of Walter). He made donations to Melrose Abbey, including lands at Lillesleaf and Whitton. In 1208/9 he confirmed the granting of lands at Whitton to Melrose Abbey, which had originally been granted by Auskittel (probably his father). In 1454 James II confirmed his grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey, his name being given as ‘Patricius de Ridale’ and the land being ‘ywittuna’. He married Christiana de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’) of Alnwick, one of whose relatives (possibly her father) married Margaret, an illegitimate daughter of William the Lion. He was succeeded by his son Walter. It is sometimes claimed that another son was William, who married Matilda Corbet, but he actually seems to have been a brother. Another son may have been Gaufred. His seal bore a lion ‘passant’, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIGILLUM PATRICII DE RIDALA’. Patrick of Riddell (15th C.) recorded in 1438 when he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. It is unclear how he might be related to other Riddells of that Ilk, particularly Mungo and Quentin, who were Lairds at about the same time. Patrick (d.bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when George Haliburton in Dryburgh entered his son William into his lands in Merton. It seems likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Patrick of Muselee (d.1698) son of John of Muselee and Grizel Sclew, he was probably the 3rd Riddell of Muselee. He was the 2nd son, but succeeded to Muselee and Bewlie, since his older brother William had died first. He leased Roberton from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 9 years. He was on the Commission of Supply for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the ‘muslie Elder’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1681 in Robertson Parish he married Maria (or Mary) Elliot; she was from Beechwood, daughter of Thomas of Bewlie and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and hence related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Their children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Helen (b.1682); John (b.1683); Margaret (b.1684); Thomas (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas and William Elliot (perhaps his father-in-law and brother-in-law) and in 1686 were William Elliot and Robert Scott. He was succeeded by his son John, while his grandson William was ancestor of the Riddells of Berwick. In 1697 a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, and he himself was buried there in 1698. His name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708, although he was deceased by then and so his son John is probably meant. Patrick of Muselee (1707–72) son of John of Muselee. He was probably the Patrick ‘of Newslie’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Patrick who paid the window tax on Headshaw in 1748 and on ‘Adzhall’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1753. In 1752 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, daughter of Charles Ballfour of Broadmeadows. Their children included: John (b.1754), who died young; Charles (b.1756), also died young; Walter (1758–1809), who was a lawyer; William (b.1759); Charles (b.1759), who succeeded; Thomas (1761–1849), with the East India Company; John (1766–1840), who farmed at Timpendale; and one daughter. It is unclear if he was born in 1707 or 1709. Peter (13th C.) recorded as valet of Sir Henry de Pinkeny in a 1298 roll of war horses used on Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He is recorded as ‘Peter de Ridale’. Possibly the same ‘Petrum de Rydale’ is recorded along with his brothers Thomas and Robert in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. Philip (11th/12th C.) possibly ancestor of the local Riddells. He was probably son of Galfridus (otherwise known as Geoffrey), who accompanied William the Conqueror, gaining large English estates. He was probably brother of Hugh, who gained extensive lands in Northamptonshire, as well as Cranston in Midlothian. It is likely he was father of Gervasius, who received lands in Roxburghshire from David I. Other sons were probably Walter, Auskittel and Ralph. Philip (13th C.) Burgess of Berwick. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital, which is undated, but probably shortly before 1270. He was recorded as a merchant in Berwick in 1276 and burgess there in 1277, 1281 and 1283. He was Mayor of Berwick in 1291, as recorded in one of the Ragman Rolls. It is unclear whether he was the family chief at the time, but he is referred to as ‘Philippum de Redale’. He was also recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1292, and in 1293 had a letter of safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of a grant to the hospital there. He was also on a jury in Berwick in 1302 and may be the ‘Philippum de Rydale’ on the 1276 assize roll of Northumberland. Quentin of Riddell (15th C.) first of the family to be designated ‘of that Ilk’. His name is also written ‘Quentin’, and this was a new forename for the Riddell family. He may have been son of Sir William, but this is unclear; most family histories leave room for at least one other generation around this time. In 1418 he was ‘quentino de redale’ when witnessing a document for Melrose Abbey. He was in possession of Riddell in 1421 when an inquisition was held. He was also recorded as ‘Quintin Liddale of that ilk’ as part of panel to decide on Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was succeeded by his son, whose name is unknown, and then by his grandson James. His relationship with Mungo is unclear (and confusing, since he appears to be almost contemporary). He probably had a daughter who married John Scott of Synton. Ralph (12th C.) witnessed to several documents in about the last couple of decades of the 12th century, particularly lands in Lilliesleaf and Whiton involving Melrose Abbey. The earliest of these is probably the settlement between the Abbey and Uhtred of Grubet in 1181–86 and the latest was a confirmation of lands resigned to Patrick of Riddell, which was after 1214. His name is usually recorded as ‘de Ridale’ or variants, and in a 1454 confirmation of the 12th century grant of Whiton to Melrose Abbey he is listed as ‘Radulfo de Ridale’. He was also witness to a charter between Ranulphi de Soulis and Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s. Probably the same Ralph was the perambulator of lands on the Kale Water granted by Uhtred of Grubet to Melrose Abbey in the period 1181–86. He appears to have been brother of Gervase, and hence a son of Philip. Richard of Wittering (13th C.) owner of lands in Northampton, who was surely closely related to the Border Riddells. He was recorded in a record of Henry III in 1241/2. It seems likely that his father was Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in a document relating to ‘Wyterine’ in Northamptonshire in 1254. His son Hugh was recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. Richard (14th C.) possibly a younger son of Geoffrey of Riddell, and hence brother of Sir William and Sir Robert. However, precisely how he was related to earlier and later Riddels of that Ilk is unknown. There is no record of a wife or family. He witnessed 2 charters to Ker of Altonburn in 1357/8 and 1358. Note that an earlier Richard was recorded about the 1230s, associated with Preston in East Lothian. Robert (13th C.) witness in about 1250, along with William, for a charter of Lempitlaw to Soutra Hospital. His name is recorded as ‘Roberto Redale’. Also in 1254/5 he was recorded in a charter for the lands of Mow and in about the 1250s witnessed a gift of lands in Berwick. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Cumberland in 1271/2. Perhaps the same Robert was witness in 1279–86 to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. The phrase ‘Curia de Sprowyston’ comes after his name, although it is unclear if he was the ‘curate’ of Sprouston, or some unnamed person. He was probably brother or son of William. Sir Robert of Riddell (14th C.) probably related to the nearly contemporary Richard of Riddell, but the succession in these generations is very uncertain. It is possible that he was a younger son of Geoffrey, succeeding after his brother Sir William. However, it may be that he was never Laird himself. He witnessed a charter of lands in Mow granted to Kelso Abbey. He also acted as a cautioner of the Laird of Mowe who was a hostage in England. Robert (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, in 1559 he was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden. He was Bailie of the Barony of Wilton. He may also be the Robert who received part of his father’s lands at Minto. It is possible he was the ‘Berte’ who witnessed a transaction between Thomas Gray and Thomas Smail regarding a tenement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Also in 1563 he is recorded as brother of Walter of that Ilk when he witnessed a transaction for finding a wife for William Davidson. He may have been son of Walter.
and Mariotta Pringle (although these generations are not clear). Perhaps the same Robert, brother to Walter of that ilk was witness in 1579 to a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig; he was also witness to another transaction involving his brother Andrew, with their mother Elizabeth Ker also mentioned. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother to Walter of that ilk when he was involved in a transaction for land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he was at Riddell to witness an agreement between James in Maxton and John in Newton Mill. Robert (16th C.) son of James in Clerklands. In 1563 he witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf, for William Davidson, made by Walter of that ilk. He was probably the Robert in Clerklands who in 1580 witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded at the Fanns in Ashkirk Parish in 1661. He married Janet Bell and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Bell (probably related to his wife) and William (probably his own relative). Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Newbigging when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newbigging this was. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably tenant in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, with James Davidson (probably also Newbigging) as the other witness. He may be the Robert who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for Walter in Hawick in 1684, and another for William Bell and Marion Riddell. Robert (17th C.) married Janet Sanderson in Roberton Parish in 1683. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. He could be the Robert who married Janet Sanderson and whose children included: Janet (b.1684); and Robert (b.1686). Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. Robert (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret ‘S.’ in Minto Parish in 1705. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Newmill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) and at Allanhaugh Mill in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Tudhope in Raesknowe. It is possible that the same Robert was miller at Falnash in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart, smith at Falnash. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1716, 1718 and 1722. He is probably the Robert who married Bessie Sinton in Robertson in 1707. His children probably included Christian (b.1708), John (b.1709), Isobel (b.1716), Agnes (b.1718), Walter (b.1720) Robert (b.1722) and James (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1717, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He was recorded living at the Sandbed in 1718 and 1736. He married Margaret Oliver in 1718, the marriage being recorded in Hawick (and perhaps also Wilton, but with no wife’s name given). Their children included: Andrew (b.1719); Bettie (b.1720); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1733); and John (b.1736). The witnesses in 1719 were Robert Scott ‘Crawship’ and John Turnbull ‘cuper older’, in 1720 were James Purcell and Robert Roger, and in 1736 were William Riddell (surely a relative) and Thomas ‘Gillas’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at East Burnfoot in 1721 and 1729. He married Isobel Riddell (probably in 1718, although no wife’s name is recorded) and their children included: Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); John (b.1723); Walter (b.1729); and George and William (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were another Robert Riddell and Alexander Moore, and in 1729 were George Stewart and James Scott. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for George Stewart in Groundistone. He was probably related to Walter, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lang in Minto Parish in 1731. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish recorded ‘at Park’ in 1744. He married Bessy Lawson and their children included: Jean (b.1733); John (b.1735); William (b.1737); Bessy (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1733 were John Telfer and James Beattie and in 1744 were shoemakers John and Thomas Scott. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Whitehaugh Mill. He took out a one year lease on Highchesters Mill in 1743. He may be related to the Robert who was later at Todshawhillshiel. Rev. Robert (c.1710–60) 6th and youngest son of Sir Walter, the 4th Baronet of Riddell and Mary Watt of Rosehill. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1732, was presented to Lilliesleaf by Robert, Duke of Roxburghie in 1737 and ordained that year. He remained as minister there until his death. In 1748 he paid the window tax for ‘the mance’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is said that he was sometimes interrupted in his sermons by his father, who was very fastidious about points of scripture. In 1755 he married a distant cousin of the Granton Riddells, Esther, daughter of Dr. John Riddell (and she died in 1803). They had no children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Miller and their children included Janet (b.1758). Probably the same Robert was herd at Fanns in 1762 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. Robert (18th C.) married Jean Stevenson in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. Robert (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Jean Arthur is recorded in 1781. Robert (18th C.) married Jane Thomson in Hawick in 1775. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1786 and Todshawhillshiel in 1788 and 1790. His children included William (b.1786), John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branxholme. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirknoe in 1790 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. His other children probably included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), William (again, b.1794), John (again, b.1796), Adam (b.1798), William (again, b.1798), Betty (b.1800), George (b.1802), Janet (b.1804), an unnamed son (b.1806), Betty (again, b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). Robert (18th C.) married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. Robert (d.1809) wright, son of George, who lived at Howahill. He is probably related to the Robert in Hobkirk Kirknoe recorded about the same time. He have been the Robert, son of George born in Hobkirk Parish in 1771. He married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, as well as the death of his son James in 1808 and his wife Mary Gledstains in 1810. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Jean Turnbull in Southdean in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) said to have been a native of Teviotdale, he was father of Rev. Henry Scott. He was described as ‘a man of strong though uneducated mind’. He was shepherd for a long time at Langshawburn, where he was visited by Walter Scott, Pulteney Malcolm and James Hogg. He was shepherd at Sorbie (in Ewesdale) when his famous son was born. While there it is said that he planted some saplings on a hillside above Wrae, saying that he wished to live long enough for his coffin to be made from the wood of the mature trees. He then moved to Capplefoot, on the Water of Milk. While there he hired a teacher to instruct his children. Later he returned to the Ettrick to work for Scott of Deloraine, who he had been with in his younger days. He married Agnes Scott, who was also from Teviotdale. They had 6 sons and a daughter: William; Borthwick (b.1794), who farmed at Dryden, Ashkirk, and was remembered as a piper; Henry Scott (1798–1870), minister at Teviothead and song-writer; Robert (1800–67), who emigrated to America and died in Rockton, Canada; Alexander Hay, who farmed in Cumberland; Walter (d.1834), who died unmarried; and Mary, who married a Jones. Robert (1800–67) born in Teviotdale, he was 4th son of shepherd Robert and brother of Rev. Henry Scott. He farmed in Cumberland for a while and then emigrated to America. He married Margaret Johnston in 1819, the marriage being recorded in Roberton Parish. They had 10 children, including Nancy, Euphemia, Benjamin, Thomas, Robert, Ann and Walter. He died in Rockton, Ontario. Robert (b.1839/40) son of farm labourer Walter, and descended from Hobkirk shepherds. He apprenticed as a blacksmith with Thomas Kedzie in Selkirk, but also worked in Hawick. He then worked in Edinburgh, Stirling and Glasgow before emigrating to America in 1864. He spent time in Michigan, Canada and Minnesota, returned to Scotland and then went back to Canada in 1870. In 1872 he started his own wrought-iron fencing business in Chatham, Ontario. He married a Miss Tocher and had 5 children. Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Andrew of Lilliesleaf when there were complaints made against them by the Douglases of Friarshaw. His name appears as ‘Sym Riddell of Lillislie Myyne’. It was specifically claimed that the Riddells put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglases and also that he and Andrew of Lilliesleaf removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas’ farmers. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Rev. Simon (1677–1743) probably descended from a branch of the Riddells of that Ilk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1695, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1699 and ordained at Tyron Church in 1701. In 1715 he marched to Stirling with some of his parishioners in defence of the King and the Protestant cause and in 1740 he was one of the 15 ministers who dissented against the resolution to depose the 8 Seceeding ministers. He married Annie Riddell, who was heiress of the lands of Newhouse near Lilliesleaf. Their only son Walter married Annie Riddell, heiress of Glenriddell. Steven (16th C.) recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569. He was listed along with James Langlands as heralds in Roxburghshire, ‘Ane of the Wardane Officinariis to be maid Messinger’. It seems likely he was from the Riddells of that Ilk. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as brother of Geoffrey in the period 1165–1204. He witnessed his brother’s charter for 2 o związ of lands in Primside. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Rydell’ in the 1330s when he was witness to a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh and preserved in the cartulary of Dryburgh. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Riddells. He could be the Thomas who forfeited the lands of ‘Fynlawys’ in the Barony of Oxnam, which were granted to William Stewart of Jedward during the reign of Robert II. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of James of that Ilk. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany during the time of revolt, as well as for stealing sheep. His surety was his brother, the Laird of Riddell. Thomas (d.c.1514) listed as deceased in 1514, when he was succeeded in the position of Clek of Lilliesleaf by George Riddell. He was probably a member of the family of Riddell of that Ilk, holding the benefice of assistant priest in the Parish. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of William in Lilliesleaf. In 1592 he was signatory to a caution for lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. In 1593 he was the ‘Mr. Riddell of Camiestoun’ who purchased the Kirkland of Bewlie from the Duke of Roxburgh. He may be the ‘Thomas who paid the window tax at ‘Ferningtonou’ in Roxburgh Parish in 1748. In 1740 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of daughter of Rev. William Hunter, minister of Lilliesleaf. His children were: Walter (b.1742), who died young; Margaret (1744–71), who died unmarried; Eleanor (1745–1815), also unmarried; William (b.1746), who succeeded to Camieston and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; Thomas (1748–56); and Robert (1750–93), who served with the East India Company and perished on the ‘Duchess of Athole’, being in temporary command when fire broke out, and refusing to abandon his ship. Capt. Thomas (18th C.) son of Walter of that Ilk. He was with the Honorable East India Company, being Captain of the Adm. Pocock 1762–71. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1818). Thomas (1761–1802) 4th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He joined the East India Company, rose to the rank of Major and died in India. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Jane Govenlock, who was from Hawick Parish. Thomas of Camieston (1777–1826) eldest son of William of Camieston. He qualified as Writer to the Signet in 1805, but never followed this profession. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father) when still younger of Camieston. In 1805 he married Jane, daughter of William Ferrier, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Gen. William (1805–75); Walter of Cavers Carre (1807–74); John Carre (1809–80), who emigrated to Australia, where he was a member of the Parliament of Victoria; Capt. Thomas (1810–54) of the Bengal Infantry; Lillias Wallace (b.1812), married Ross Watt and emigrated to Victoria; Robert (1813–39), who died in India; Elizabeth Carre (1816–44), who died unmarried; Georgina Vereker (b.1818), who married Malcolm McNeil Rind; and Jane Ann (d.1859), who married Elijah Imprey. Thomas (d.1843) 2nd son of Lilliesleaf. He was a thatcher. He married Rachel Stirling and their children included William (b.1803), who was a joiner. Thomas (1815–62) born in Lilliesleaf, son of Isabella, with the father’s name unknown. He emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working in the mills. He married Sarah S. Henderson and their children were James, Walter and David. He drowned after falling overboard.

from a steamer between Fall River and New York. Thomas (b.1818/9) stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1861 he was listed on Main Street. In the 1860s he is in a trade directory as a stocking-maker, suggesting he ran his own business. He married Janet Dow and their children included Thomas, John, Robert S., James and George. Walter (d.1150s) described as ‘de Riddale, of Whitton’ when he received a charter of half of ‘Eschetho’ (i.e. ‘Eschetho’, probably the same as Lintobank) and ‘Lillesclive’ (Lilliesleaf) from David I sometime in the period 1124–53. This is recorded in a ‘transumpt’ of 1506 (i.e. a legal copy of the frail document was made in Jedburgh at that time). He may thus have been the first Baron of Riddell and Whittton. He was probably a close relative of Gervase, who witnessed some charters along with him; he may have been brother of Gervase (or perhaps his son), and hence a son of Philip. He is further recorded as ‘Waltero de ridalis’ and similar in several surviving charters he witnessed in the reign of David for St. Andrews Priory and other religious houses. A bull from Pope Adrian IV in 1156 confirms his brother and heir Auskittel in several lands. This suggests he died without any sons. However, he is known to have married Ethride de Percy, sister of the Lord of Oxenhalm. Walter of Riddell (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Auskittel. A Bull of Pope Alexander III (sometime before 1181) confirms him in the lands of ‘Lillescleve’, half of ‘Langetun’, ‘Witun’ and ‘Brahbei’ (Brawby in Yorkshire), which his father and forebears held of the church of Hexham. He married Guynoldu, daughter of the Earl Gospatric. They had at least 2 sons: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; and Ralph, said to have been progenitor of the Northumberland branch of Riddells. Walter (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Jordan, perhaps the first generation of the Riddells of the Newcastle area. He succeeded his father in the lands of Tilmouth in Durham and the Lordship of Whickham. He was Sheriff of Northumberland and was succeeded by Sir William. Walter of Riddell (13th C.) 5th Laird, son of Sir Patrick and Margaret de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’). He confirmed his father’s donations to Melrose Abbey, and gave other benefactions to both Melrose and Kelso. The gift to Melrose Abbey was part of Lilliesleaf and made some time before 1253; this charter also mentions land he had previously granted to Alexander, brother of Henry of Ashkirk. He married a daughter of Hugh de Gifford. He had 2 sons, Sir William (who succeeded) and Patrick. His seal bore an eagle with wings elevated, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIG[ILL. WA]LTERI DE RI[DA]LE’. Walter (16th C.) younger of Riddell, son of John. He died before his father, and the title was inherited by his son Walter. However, these generations are confused, and it is also possible that his brother George inherited, or was at least the effective Laird during the minority of his son Walter. His wife’s name is said to have been Jane. If he was father of Walter of that Ilk who was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579, then he also had sons Andrew and Robert. Walter of that Ilk (d.c.1580?) probably son of Walter, he succeeded to the Lairdship from his grandfather John. George, who also appears to have been acting as Laird before him, was either his father or uncle. He may the ‘lard of Ryddell’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He was witness to a charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden in 1556 and is also mentioned in 1559 when his brother Robert was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden (although it is possible this is 1550). In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1563 he was ‘wadset’ lands at ‘Hungrie Hills’ and near the Kirk of Lilliesleaf by William Midlemas. Also in 1563 he offered 2 potential wives to William Davidson, who held lands of his in ward and relief; witnesses included his brother Robert, as well as Robert, son of James in Clerklands. He is probably the ‘Lard of Riddell’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Bothwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He served as surety for the Elliots in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He was on an assize in 1577. He is probably the Walter of that Ilk whose brothers Andrew and Robert are recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579. In 1543 he married Mariotta (or Marion), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smalholm. He was probably succeeded by another Walter, and also had sons Robert and William (who witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, by which time his son was Laird). His seal bore a chevron between 3 ears of rye and the words ‘S’ VALTERI RIDDEL’, while his wife’s had 3 shells on a ‘bend sinister’ and the words ‘S’ MARION HOPPRINGIL’. Walter of that Ilk (d.bef. 1592) son of Walter. He is probably the Walter who in 1581 witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. Also in 1581 his heir apparent Andrew received sasine (in the name of his daughter Janet, Andrew’s sister) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He was listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court James Davidson in Whitton. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council and in 1590 was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. John Ramsay of Dalhousie was cautious for him in 1590. Note that these generations of Walters seem confused in some family histories. He married Agnes, daughter of George Ramsay of Dalhousie, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He probably also had 2 daughters, one of whom married Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre and Nether Howden. His wife may have been the Lady Riddell whose conduct was singled out when the Presbyterians complained to the King about continuing supporters of Catholicism. He and his son Andrew were ‘tutors’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. His son Andrew and brother William both witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, while he was Laird. In 1595/6 (suggesting he was alive then, but perhaps just confirming an earlier grant) there is a charter for the Barony of Lilliesleaf in which he is granted thr 31/2 husbandlands of Lilliesleaf, called ‘West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris’ and 6 husbandlands and 2 cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf, with Lilliesleaf Mill; his son Andrew and brother William are also listed. Walter (d.bef. 1642) referred to in 1600 as ‘fiar of that Ilk’, along with his wife Agnes, when they received the lands of Bewlie. He may have been a son of the Laird of Riddell, or else descended from the earlier Riddells who had farmed at Bewlie. He is probably the Walter referred to in 1642 when his son William gave Bewlie to his brother Walter. Walter (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He was mentioned in the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison. It was stated that Sandy ‘Hines’ wife said that Howison had given medicine to his wife and received nothing for it. Walter of Woodhouse (16th/17th C.) appeared at the Privy Council in 1616 to represent William Allan and himself in a complaint against the Douglases of Friarsshaw. He was probably also the Walter of ‘Ridhouse’ (assuming this was a transcription error) who, along with the Laird of Riddell, had had their tenants oppressed by the Douglases. He was also a member of the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623 and was voted as Chancellor of the panel. It is unclear where ‘Wodhouse’ was and he may be the same as one of the other Walters. Sir Walter 2nd Baronet of Riddell (d.c.1669) son of Sir John. He was knighted by Charles I during his father’s lifetime. In 1632 there is a discharge to him from Violet Douglas, widow of Andrew of that Ilk and their 1st and 2nd sons Andrew of Haining and Robert of Hartside. He was served heir to his father in 1636; this included Lintobank, Boosmill, Easter Clerklands, Greatlaws and West Lilliesleaf (called ‘Murieknow’), as well as Over and Nether Whitton. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1628–1633, and he also represented Roxburghshire 1646–47 and 1650. In 1640 he had a contract with Walter Scott of Burnside concerning Chapel and other lands in Lilliesleaf. He was a supporter of the Covenant. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1643 his estate of Riddell (consisting of Mains of Riddell, Bank, Clerklands, Riddell Mill and Lilliesleaf Mill), valued at £1654; he was also owner of part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish (valued at £273), as well as of Whitton in Morebattle Parish (valued at £1600). In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he probably the ‘W. Riddell’ among local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £6,600 (the second largest amount in Roxburghshire). He is recorded in a charter of 1659 involving his daughter-in-law Agnes Scott and lands in Whitton. He paid tax for his rentals in Hownam (£3382) and Lilliesleaf (£1629) in about 1663. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of William Rigg of Aithernie in Fife, said to be a very pious woman and aunt of Katherine Rigg, ‘the Good Lady Cavers’; this may have been in 1630. Their children were: Sir John, who succeeded; William of Friarshaw, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope.
and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell; Archibald, Covenanting preacher, who married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton; Thomas, who may have married Agnes Scott and died childless; Andrew; Agnes, who married James Scott, brother of Sir William of Harden in 1659; Sarah, who married Patrick Hepburn of Sneaton in 1656; and Alison, who married Rev. Gabriel Semple of Jedburgh (once a preacher of field conventicles). Note there are conflicting accounts of his children, particularly the daughters. His son Sir John was served as his heir in 1669. His wife's will is recorded at the Commissariat of Peebles in 1682. Walter of Belses (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to the Riddells of Riddell and of Minto. He may have been the same Walter who was given the lands of Belses by his brother William (son of Walter) in 1642; if so he was described as ‘in Longhauche’. He was also possibly the ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. He may be the same Walter as the ‘portioner of Lilliesleaf’ who in 1643 held ‘20 soums’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26. He was also involved in a ‘wadset’ over lands at Fernieeles and Templehall (in the Rule valley) with William Earl of Lothian in 1649; Sir Walter of that Ilk is also mentioned, and so was clearly distinct. He extended the loan to the Earl in 1652, when he was described as ‘now indweller in Appotsyde’. In the 1652 marriage contract of Margaret Riddell and Robert Elliot, he is described as uncle of Margaret and brother of William, deceased portioner of Bewlie. He also witnessed a contract of ‘wadset’ for the Lorraines of Appotside in 1654, also signed by his eldest son ‘Harie’ (i.e. Henry), as well as further contracts in 1656. He was mentioned in discharges of 1655 for uplifting the teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse and in further discharges of 1657 and 1658; he acted as ‘bailie in that part’ for Elliot of Harwood and was tenant at Appotside. In 1656 he witnessed the ratification of William Elliot of Harwood in his Rulewater lands and another sasine relating to Harwood was witnessed by his sons Henry and Walter. His sons William and Henry witnessed separate documents 1659, and all 3 sons witnessed a document relating to Appotside in 1656. He is probably also the Walter who rented land from John Turnbull of Firth in 1645. He may be the Walter recorded as portioner in 1678 when he ownedlands in Bewlie and also for the ‘heritors’ of Raperlaw, amounting to £273, as well as Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £407 15s); however, that seems more likely to be the next generation. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, and younger brother of William. He is recorded as ‘in Langhauche’ and ‘bailie in that part to the said Williame Ellot’ when he was witness in 1637 for Elliot of the Binks purchasing Harwood. The Langhaugh may have been the one in Liddesdale or in Hobkirk (probably the latter). In one of the 1637 documents he is transcribed as ‘Liddell’. He also witnessed other agreements relating to vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1638 and 1648, and a discharge to him and others for the teinds in 1649. In 1642 he was ‘in Longhauche’ when his brother disposed to him his five-pound land in Bewlie and half a cotland in the Barony of Lilliesleaf. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Murray. Their son Robert was baptised in 1650. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Chisholm. Their son Robert was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Robert and Andrew Chisholme (who were surely related to his wife). Walter of Minto (c.1620–c.84) writer (i.e. solicitor) in Edinburgh. He was probably 2nd son of son of William of Newhouse and grandson of William of Muselee (although these generations are confused). He purchased part of the Minto estate from John Turnbull of Minto in 1676 (confirmed in 1681). He leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ to William Mather of Lanton in 1683. Also in 1683 has a disposition for Minto to his son-in-law Thomas Rutherford. There was a dispute among his children over the inheritance, but eventually Minto passed to Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1687 and not long afterwards sold to the Elliots. He married Catharine Nisbet in 1652 in Edinburgh, and secondly married Isabel Riddell. His children were: James (d.1687), who died young; Jean, who married Robert Laurie in Edinburgh, and was the mother of the Annie Laurie who inspired the song; Susanna, who married Thomas, brother of John Rutherford of Edgerston; Catharine, who probably died young; Grizel (b.bef. 1687), who was to have succeeded if she married a Riddell; John, who may also have died young; Elizabeth, who married James Dallas in Edinburgh; and Agnes. His daughters cleared all their interests in Minto in the 1690s. Walter (d.bef. 1673) son of Andrew of Haining and brother of John of Haining. He married Christian Hunter, who is recorded along with their son Andrew in a deed of 1673. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1686 he married Margaret Ker in Wilton. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray and Alison Riddell (probably a relative) in 1688. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of John ‘in Beirhope’. He is probably the Walter, ‘portioner of Beulie’ who witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. He was ‘portioner’ of Beulie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, with land valued at £273. He (or a descendant) received part of the lands of Beulie in 1687. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scoon and their children included: Robert (b.1674); an unnamed child (b.1677); another unnamed child (b.1679); Bessie (b.1681); and Helen (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and William, who were surely related to him. Walter of Newhouse (b.1645/6). In 1689 he was named among the officers of the local Militia, charged with defending the kingdom. Along with William Turnbull of Sharplaw he was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanters who travelling between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean and brought to Lilliesleaf Moor; there they were released, but immediately taken prisoner at gunpoint by Thomas Turnbull of Standhill and others, who took their horses and held him until the preaching was over. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. He is probably the Walter of Newhouse who married Christian Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1684. In 1693 his uncle John Reid granted him a tenement in Selkirk. He was ‘Walter ridell of Neuhous’ in 1694 when he paid tax on 4 hearths in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear if he is the same man as Walter (b.c.1620) of Newhouse who appears to have died in the 1680s. His daughter may have been Annie, who married Rev. Simon. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter ‘Dusty Fit’ (d.bef. 1723) miller of Allanhaugh Mill in the years around 1700. He may have been related to the later tenant at Southdean Mill. He was listed at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was taxed for 3 hearths because he was ‘wt tuo kilns’, suggesting that he was the miller there at that time. Probably the same Walter rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1690–98. He was at Allanhaugh Mill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He may be the Walter who acted as cautioner for Margaret in 1705, when she leased part of Braxholme Town farm. He is probably the miller at Allanhaugh Mill called ‘Dustyfit’ who was there around 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1708 he and James Paterson were ‘undermillers’ when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott Wright at Millport. He is probably the ‘undermiller in Hawick’ when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Elliot, ‘tacksman of ye mill’ and James Paterson, ‘undermiller in ye sd town’. In 1711 he was still undermiller in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Aitkin, other undermiller at Hawick (with miller Walter Elliot as the other witness). His children included Anna (b.1700), with baptismal witnesses Henry Orrock and William Riddell (who was surely related). Bessie who married another Walter Miller (at Philhope Mill) in 1709 was his daughter. He was recorded as deceased and ‘sometimes in Allan-haugh mill’ when his daughter Mary married William Helm in 1723. William, who was tenant at Allanhaugh Mill and became a Burgess in 1729, was probably his son. Margaret, who married John Scoon, may have been a daughter of his (since his name appears as a witness to one of their children’s baptisms). It is possible that 2 different generations of miller are compounded here. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Margaret, who was also listed there. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Graham and their daughter Anna was baptised in 1700. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Wright and their son Walter was baptised in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller at Philhope Mill, as recorded in 1709. He married Bessie Riddell, daughter to Walter, miller at Allanhaugh Mill in Hawick in 1709. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. Walter (17th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Isobel (b.1707); Bessie (b.1709); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie Walter Elliot and miller James Paterson. He may be related to other millers of the same surname. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Murray and their daughter Alison was baptised in 1711. Walter of Newhouse (d.1742) apprenticed to John Wilkie, he became Writer to the Signet in 1742. He married Jean Pringle. It is unclear how he was related to the other Riddells of Newhouse. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed... among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693.4. He is probably the same Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He married Marion Liddell and their children included James (b.1687), Jean (b.1699), William (b.1702) and Helen (b.1703). The witnesses in both 1699 and 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant John Forman and in 1709 were baker John Whillans and Henry Orrock. Probably the same tailor Walter secondly married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1704. Walter of Friarshaw (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Walter (17th/18th C.) from the Lilliesleaf branch of the family. He was tenant farmer at North Sinton. In 1706 his eldest daughter Margaret married John of Muselee. Sir Walter of that Ilk (d.1747) 4th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father Sir John in 1700. In 1695 he would have been the ‘younger’ of Riddell who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also ‘younger of that Ilk’ in 1695 when he contributed £400 to the Darien Scheme. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1700 he was recorded in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. In 1706 he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest; this presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. In 1727–28 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington in a land dispute. In 1692 he married Margaret, daughter of Watt of Rosehill; she was a daughter of his step-mother. His children were: John, an advocate who pre-deceased him; Sir Walter, who did succeed; Thomas of Camieston, whose son William married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; William, who moved to Bermuda; Robert, minister of Lilliesleaf; Ann (or perhaps Jane or Eleanor), who married John Carre of Cavers; Sarah, who married John Forest; and Christian, who died young. He is said to have been very pious and somewhat eccentric, for example on occasion interrupting his son Robert’s sermons, saying ‘Robert, that won’t do!’, and he refused to stop people coming onto his land, saying ‘The Earth is the Lord’s!’ James may have been another son, who moved to Ireland, was knighted, and wrote his name ‘Riddall’. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope Mill in at least the period 1714–29. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1714); Marion (b.1717); Anna (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Walter (again, b.1729). He is easy to confuse with another Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time; he is probably the one who married Helen Scott in Robertson in 1712. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw. His daughter Marion was baptised at the end of 1717 in Robertson Parish; this was 9 months after another Marion was baptised, daughter of Walter in Whithope Mill (so it is fairly clear that this was a different man). He could be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert and Andrew. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, who may have been his, included: Margaret (b.1712); Walter (b.1720); and Walter (again, b.1725). He is probably the Walter who married Margaret Simpson in Robertson in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthaugh in 1723 and 1724. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in Borthaugh. In 1719 he married Mary Storie. Their children included: Robert and William (b.1720); twins Gideon and Andrew (b.1723); Walter (b.1724); Isobel (b.1727); Margaret (b.1729); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were George Bell and Tom (or similar) Turnbull, in 1724 were Walter and John Scott and in 1729 were James Scott and Robert Cowan. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at East Burnfoot in 1725. He is probably the William who in 1735 witnessed a baptism for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Margaret Waugh in 1724 and their children included Robert (b.1725), Janet (b.1727), James (b.1730) and Bessie (b.1732). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He was probably related to Robert, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. The funeral of Janet in Burnfoot Mill was recorded in 1750 and may have been his daughter. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Hornshole in 1737. He married Margaret Riddell and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737, with witnesses Robert Scott and John Sinton. Sir Walter of that Ilk (1695–1765) 5th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guild-brother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He was recorded as a merchant in Eyemouth in 1727 when listed (along with his brother John) among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, and was father of Gen. Henry James Riddell, Commander of the forces in Scotland; and Andrew. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Alton in 1738. In 1737 he married Agnes Wilson and their children included: John (b.1738); and Janet (b.1740). The witnesses in 1738 were Andrew... and John Kersel. Walter of Newhouse and Glenriddell (d.1788) son of Rev. Simon. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Annie, daughter and heiress of Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, a very distant cousin. He thereby became Laird of Glenriddell in Dumfriesshire. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He may be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother's name given) included: Robert (b.1775); John (b.1778); Betty (b.1780); Rachel (b.1783); Janet (again, b.1785); Mary (b.1788); and James (b.1791). The witnesses in 1785 and 1788 were the whole congregation and in 1791 were Archibald Elliot from Bowanhill and John (probably a close relative). Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope for about 50 years. He was shepherd there according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His son John was shepherd at Clarilaw. He could be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother's name given) included: Robert (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1783); John (b.1784); William (b.1788); and James (b.1796). Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Southdean Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Walter (b.c.1785) 3rd son of William, he was a joiner in Lilliesleaf like his father. He was recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living with Elizabeth, probably his daughter. His sons included: William, who married Margaret Lambert and emigrated to Philadelphia; and Walter, who also emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (1798–1863) son of Hawick shoemaker William and Jean Goodfellow. He worked as a spinner in Wilton. In 1835 he was listed at Dove Mount amount heads of households in Wilton Kirk, and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as living in Hawick. On the 1841 census he was on O'Connell Street and in 1851 was on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Andrew, Thomas, Jean, Janet and John. Walter (1800–81) eldest son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer near Hawick and then at Philiphaugh.
In 1841 he was living at Eastfield in Bowden, in 1851 at Philiphaugh Cottages and in 1861 at Old Broadmeadows. He married Margaret Baxter and their children included John, Mary, James, Margaret, Robert and Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. Walter see Walter Riddell Carre. Sir Walter Buchanan (1810–92) eldest son of Sir John Buchanan, who died when he was young. He was born at Riddell House, and educated at Eton and Oxford. Although he became the 10th Baronet in 1819, the family sold the Riddell estate in 1823. However, he did succeed to the smaller estate of Hepple in Northumberland. He was called to the bar at Lincoln’s Inn in 1834. He was Magistrate and Chief Steward in Northumberland and Judge in North Staffordshire, as well as serving as an M.P. He gave a lot of help to Rev. G.T. Ridlon, in his compilation of a family history, published in 1884. He married Alicia Ann, youngest daughter of William Ripley in 1850, but they had no children. He was succeeded by his nephew Sir John Walter Buchanan, son of Rev. John Charles. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (1834–77) eldest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He worked with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. He married Agnes, daughter of David Arnot, minister of St. Giles. He was obviously named after his father’s patron. He died in Edinburgh. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan (1879–1934) son of John Walter Buchanan, he was 12th Baronet of Riddell. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became Principal of Hertford College there. He was also Chairman of the University Grants Committee. In 1919 he married Rachel, daughter of Cahrles Lyttelton, 8th Viscount Cobham. They had 8 children, and he was succeeded by Sir John, who was an infant at the time. Sir Walter John Buchanan (1974–2001) 14th Baronet of Riddell, son of Sir John Charles Buchanan. He has been Managing Director of the companies Cluff Geothermal Limited and Lilliesleaf Limited. His son Finlay John (b.2001) is heir apparent. William (12th C.) witness to documents for ‘Morgrundus’ Count of Mar, relating to St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘Willelmo de ridal’. This was probably around the 1170s. He may be the younger son of Galfridus/Geoffrey who was Lord of Farringdon in Northamptonshire and Primside and Glengarnock in Scotland, who served in the court of William I and died in 1214. William (12th/13th C.) son of Ausketill and brother of Patrick. In some genealogies he is stated to be a son of Patrick, but this appears to be incorrect. He married Matilda Corbet, to whom he granted several pieces of land in dowry. He received part of the lands of Whitton, although he had no heirs, so all these lands reverted to the head of the family later. His wife is recorded yielding up lands to her Lord, Patrick of Riddell in the early 1200s; her son seems to have been Alexander Seton, and so presumably she secondly married a Seton. He may be the same as the son of Ansketill (recorded as Walter) who had a papal letter of protection in about 1170. This mentions that the same family still held lands at Brawby in Yorkshire. Sir William of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 6th Laird, son of Walter and grandson of Patrick. He is said to have been knighted at a young age by Alexander II. He married Isabella, daughter of William, Parson of Hownam. In the early years of the 13th century his wife Isabella gave a piece of land in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This charter mentions several family members, proving 4 successive descents. However, the heir of Sir William is uncertain, as are the next few generations. He may have been succeeded by another William. He is probably the ‘domino Willelmo de Redale’ who witnessed a charter of lands in Lempitlaw to Soutra around 1250; ‘domino Roberto Redale’ was also listed, so presumably his son or brother. William (13th C.) listed among the jurors at Corbridge in Northumberland in 1256 as ‘Willelmuus de Ridal’. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the same as the ‘Willelmo Redale’ who witnessed a charter for the lands of Lempitlaw in about 1250. Sir William (13th C.) listed in the period 1279–86 when he was witness to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. He also witnessed the previous grant of the same lands by John de Vescy and its confirmation. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. William (13th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rydale’, a Burgess of Inverkeithing. There are 3 other entries for men of the same surname, all called Hugh. Sir William (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1301 when there was an arrangement to swap him (as an English supporter of Edward I) for 2 Scottish prisoners. In 1305 there was a warrant of Edward I to pay him for assisting Robert Hastings at Roxburgh Castle. And in 1306 there was a letter asking for his protection (as well as others) from the Chancellor of England, since he was helping keep down Edward’s enemies in Scotland.
He may be the same man as Sir William of Tillmouth and Twizel (son of Walter), who was appointed Sheriff of Northumberland in 1314 and was one of the custodians of Norham Castle; his children included William (who succeeded) and Hugh. William (d.1328) son of Sir William of Tillmouth, who held lands in the Durham area. He was Constable of Norham Castle and High Sheriff of Northumberland, and played a role in the managing of the Marches for King Edward II. Part of his lands was held by his brother Hugh, whose descendants were later Sheriffs and Mayors of Newcastle. His lands were eventually inherited by his 3 daughters, Isabella, Constantine and Joan. This branch of family usually spelt their name ‘Ridell’. William (13th/14th C.) possibly son of William and hence 7th Riddell of that Ilk. However, this period in the genealogy is difficult to follow, and there may well be additional generations, since some accounts suggest impossibly long lifespans. He probably died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Geoffrey. Sir William (14th C.) possibly eldest son of Geoffrey and brother of Sir Robert and Richard. However, these generations are quite confused. He may have been knighted by David II and died in the reign of Robert II. He was probably father of Quentin or Mungo (or both). William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Ridile’ in 1498/9 when he witnessed a charter in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same ‘Willelm Riddale’ had an escheat in Lanark recorded in 1501. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William (16th C.) described in a sasine of 1535 (relating to Harden) as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with George. He was probably a son of the Laird of Riddell (although which one is unclear). William (16th C.) probably a younger son of John of that Ilk. He is described in a document of 1551 receiving the lands of Bewlie from John of that Ilk and his heir Walter, who was his brother. He may be the brother of the Laird of Riddell who witnessed a transaction in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1564. William of Bewlie (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, and probably son of the previous Walter. However, it seems hard to separate different Williams and Walters around this time. He may be the William who warranted the lands in Lillieleaf that William Middlemas leased to John Donaldson in 1580. He witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. He was ‘in Lyllisle’ in 1581 when he witnessed a sasine for Andrew, heir apparent of Walter of that Ilk (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He may be the same William ‘in Lillisle’ who was involved in an action with William Middlemas in 1589. He could be the William ‘in Lillesleie’ whose son Thomas was signatory in 1592 to a caution for James Scott of Whithope, signed at Cavers Carre. In 1595/6 he was brother of Walter of that Ilk when he had confirmed to him the ‘5 pound lands of Bewlie and the half cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf’. William (16th C.) probably the name of William ‘Rydlie’ who was accused in 1590 of rieving crimes along with Martin’s Archib Elliot and Hob of Bowholm Elliot. He may also be the ‘William Rydlie of Hawcuppe’ accused of rieving in 1590, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Nixons, Shielis and others: it is unclear where ‘Hawcuppe’ may have been. William (d.c.1630) recorded being granted the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of the deceased George and his lands were ‘6 husbandlands’. He may have been son of George of that Ilk who is recorded several decades earlier. His sister Margaret, wife of Rev. Andrew Duncanson, was served heir to his lands in 1630. William (16th/17th C.) miller at Todrig Mill. In 1617 there was a complaint by Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, that he was responsible for the death of her only son. He was said to have been encouraged regularly by Walter Scott of Harden to harass her family; this was presumably part of a family feud connected with the death of Walter Scott’s son Walter. In fact Mary Scott claimed that he was with the Scotts of Harden, fishing on the Etrick on the lands of Scott of Bonnington, when the younger Walter was killed in a fracas. He was later part of a group of Scotts of Harden and their supporters who drove her off the land of Newhouse. William of Muselee (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of that Ilk, with his mother being a Pringle. He received the lands of Newhouse (in Lilliesleaf) as his inheritance. He also had a charter of Muselee in 1618. He married Bessie Ainslie. Their sons may have been John of Muselee and William of Newhouse (although these generations are confused). Helen, a direct descendant, married William Crawford, minister of Wilton, in 1716. William (d.bef. 1652) son of Walter. He is probably the William ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he gave his five-pound land of Bewlie and half a cotland to his brother Walter in Langhaugh. He married Helen Scott. In 1652 there is a marriage contract of his eldest daughter Margaret with Robert, 2nd son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. William of Newhouse (17th C.) probably younger son of William of Muselee. His 2nd son was Walter, who purchased the Minto estate. William of Bewlie (d.c.1695) son and heir of Henry. He was confirmed in the lands of Bewlie in 1669 and in 1670 gave part of the lands to his mother, Janet Scott. His sister Agnes succeeded to his lands in 1695 and married John Nisbet of Nisbettfield. He is probably the resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John, 1st Baronet of Riddell and brother of Walter, 2nd Baronet. He was knighted by Charles I and served in the army in the Netherlands, being appointed Governor of ‘Desborough’ (probably Dobsburgh). He married Wendelina de Bercham (or perhaps Buchan) in 1654. He had sons Walter and William, who moved to New Jersey, and other sons, Richard and John Frederick. His daughter Anne Catherine married Nicholas, son of Francis Bowyer and became heiress to her brother John Frederick (in 1677) and sister Margaret. William of Friarshaw (d.c.1693) 2nd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell. He acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Dumfriesshire and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell. He was an advocate, perhaps being the William, writer in Edinburgh, who was deputed by others to subscribe to the Darien Scheme in 1696. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope. Their son Walter was the first of the Riddells of Glenriddell (formerly Gilmerston) in Dumfriesshire. Walter was served as his heir in 1693. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included: Thomas (b.1694) and William (b.1697), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1706), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1697 were William Scott and John Turnbull and in 1706 were John Scott ‘whitegates’ and John Scott ‘younger Soger’. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of George. He may have been the William, son of George and Janet Phaup who was baptised in Roberton in 1681. He was living at Appletreehall in 1722. He witnessed a baptism for John Thomson (in Drinkstone) in 1722. He married Isobel Morrisson in 1707 and their children included: Janet (b.1716); William (b.1717); John (b.1720); and Mary (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were John Thomson and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) living at Borthaugh in 1707 according to the Roberton Parish records. His wife Isobel had acted as midwife for the wife of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were smith Robert Miller and Thomas Scott in Brieryhill. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1713 and 1719 he witnessed baptisms for gardener James Dunn. He married Agnes Nichol in 1704. Their children included: Margaret (b.1705); John (b.1708); Agnes (b.1717); William (b.1719); and Helen (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were gardeners James Dunn and James Falsyde. Walter (b.1700), John (b.1706), Francis (b.1710), Janet (b.1712), Andrew (b.1713), Janet (b.1715), Robert (b.1715) and Janet (b.1717), baptised in Hawick Parish, could also be his children (although there may be 2 families here). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Armstrong in 1704. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he married Margaret, daughter of David Minto and their children included: David (b.1714); Margaret (b.1719); and an unnamed son (b.1721). William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘fornicator’ in 1725 when his son James with Euphan Telfer was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were another William (perhaps a cousin or other relative) and John Graham. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Greenshiels in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott). In 1717 he was abused in the street by ‘Jafra the Piper’. He married Magdalene Deans and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1738); Henry (b.1739); and Isobel (b.1741). The witnesses in 1738 were shoemaker Robert Minto and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was probably son or brother of Walter, ‘Dustyfit’. In 1729 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick and referred to as ‘late in Allanhaughmilne’. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1700. He is one of 2 Williams in Allanhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for John Scott, millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for tailor Walter Rae and another in 1745 for wright James Roger. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752); this was along with Charles Tudhope, who also witnessed the same baptism in 1745. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1761 for William Gledstains and Katherine Riddell (perhaps a relative). It is possible he was the William who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. William (18th C.) resident of Woodfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Elliot and their children included Mary (b.1756) and James (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Patrick Scott and George Hart. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1766 when his son John was baptised. He may be the William who married Mary Thomson in Roberton in 1753. His children were probably Robert (b.1753) and John (b.1766). He may be the William who in 1771 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. He could be the William from 'Newmills' recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. William (d.1788) described in 'Doddsley's Annual Register' as dying at Selkirk at the incredible age of 116. He was said to have been a smuggler in his early life, and a great lover of brandy. He was also meant to have been a heavy drinker, who went through binges lasting several days. He married 3 times, the last being when he was 95. It is unclear how he was related to other local Riddells. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Affleck and their children included Margaret (b.1769), John (b.1772), Barbara (b.1775) and Anne (b.1780). William (18th C.) 4th son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He emigrated to the West Indies, settling in Bermuda, where he was a merchant. He married Dinah Darrel and their children included John, Margaret, Robert, William, Sarah and Elizabeth. One of his descendants wrote a medical thesis. It is thought that this branch died out after only a few generations. William, W.S. of Camieston (1746–1829) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded since his older brother had died young. He was educated in Edinburgh and trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Thomas Cockburn and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1770. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was listed in 1788 as owner of 5 acres in ‘Amayy’ in Melrose and Camieston in Linneston Parish, as well as £390 of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He may be the William of George Square, Edinburgh, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He acquired the farm of Union Hall (also known as Linthill) in Lilliesleaf Parish, from his mother’s family, the Hunters; however, in 1822 he sold it to William Currie, along with lands in Chapel, ‘Mr. Scott’s Acres in Lilliesleaf’ and Porteous Croft’ (according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He also sold parts of Bewlie, which were later owned by Thomas A. Riddell Carre. He was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire in 1788 and was further listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1810. In 1776 he married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Thomas (1779–1825), who succeeded; John (1779–1814), who served with the East India Company and died on the way home; Jane (1781–1845), who died unmarried; Adm. Robert (1782–1860), a decorated naval officer, who succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre and took the additional surname ‘Carre’; Elizabeth (1785–1846), also unmarried; and Margaret (1787–1843), also died unmarried. William (18th C.) wright of Hawick, recorded in 1792 when his daughter Helen married Robert Boa in Edinburgh. He could be the same as the William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick in 1794 when his daughter Isobel married David Simpson in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) joiner in Lilliesleaf. He was said to be a descendant of the Riddells of Riddell. He married Margaret Hervey and their children were: John, who was a joiner; Thomas, a thatcher; Walter, who married Batsy Young; Mary, who married Glasgow merchant Thomas Cochran; and Margaret, who married tailor James Walker. William (d.1800) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths. He was listed as father of Martha and Mary, so the rest of his family were presumably deceased by then. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Hermitage, born in Roxburghshire, and said to be a direct descendant of the Riddells of that Ilk. He married Catherine Brydon and they had 9 children: William (b.1801), who married Jessie Watson and emigrated to Canada; John; James; Thomas, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada and married twice; Janet; Wilhelmina; Mary, also moved to Canada; Anne, emigrated to Canada and married Hugh Smith; married Robert Craig and emigrated to Canada. William (d.1827) shoemaker of Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier William. He married Jean Goodfellow in 1796, and she died in 1839. Their children included wool-spinner Walter (1798–1863). William (1798–1867) eldest son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott. He was shepherd at Bellendean at the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when he played for the Yarrow side, being known as one of the best runners in the district; he would have hailed a ball had he not been pursued by a farmer on horseback. He and Henry Scott farmed together at Ramsaycleuch. He married Elizabeth Milne (1799/1800–53) in 1831. His wife is recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1841 with 5 children. He was still recorded in a directory of 1868 as farmer at Ramsaycleuchburn. Their children (all of who were born at Ramsaycleuchburn except the first) included: Margaret (b.1831); Robert Borthwick (1833–62), who died unmarried; William Milne (1835–1913), who farmed at Ramsaycleuchburn after his father and died at Bucklands Cottage; James Scott (b.1837), who moved to Cumberland; Jessie (b.1839), who married William Easton; Agnes Scott (b.1842), who married Thomas Irving of Langholm; and Rachel (b.1844–52). Most of the family are buried at Teviothead. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (18th/19th C.) sheriff officer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first (and perhaps only) time in 1838. Maj.-Gen. William of Camieston (1805–75) eldest son of Thomas of Camieston and descendant of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. His brother was Walter of Cavers Carre. He entered the East India Company’s military service in 1823, joining the 2nd Battalion of the 30th Native Infantry, rising through the ranks until achieving command of the regiment. He commanded the 30th Regiment of European Infantry during the Indian Mutiny, and was involved in many other important campaigns. He received several medals and retired from service in 1861, returning to live at Camieston. Afterwards he played an active role in the activities of the 3rd Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteer Corps. He was also Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. His father Thomas had married a sister of Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill; after Col. Hunter’s death his father succeeded to the estate of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, but it was sold before he succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Capt. John Wilkie, and she died in 1905, aged 85. They had 9 children, and he was succeeded by his only surviving son, William. He was buried at Bowden. William (1801–83) son of William and Catherine Brydon, he was born at Hermitage. He married Jessie, daughter of John and Euphemia Watson, from Oxnam Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1831 and was a farmer in Beverley, Ontario. His children were William, John, Euphemia and James. William (b.1803) son of Thomas and Rachel Stirling. He was a joiner in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a wright. He married Agnes Deans in 1832 and their children included: Thomas, a carpenter who emigrated to America; James, also a carpenter; Janet; Walter, a baker; and Rachel. He was deceased by 1851, when his wife and 3 children were living in Hawick. William (b.1816) carpenter in Lilliesleaf, son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull and grandson of joiner William. In 1841 he was a journeyman, living with Elizabeth, who was probably his mother. In 1851 he is listed on the south side of Main Street. He married Esther Thomson in 1843 and their children were: Jane (b.1844), who married James Hogg; John (b.1846); Betsy (b.1849); Andrew (b.1852); George (b.1854); Walter (b.1856); and Ellen (b.1858). William Brown Clark (1835–56) youngest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He was born at the Flex. He attended John Watson’s Institution in Edinburgh, and then went to the University there. He was described as a student and poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20. His poem ‘The Lament to Wallace’ appeared in some collections of Scottish verse (formerly spelled ‘Reddail’, ‘Reddall’, ‘Reddale’, ‘Riddell’, ‘Riddele’, ‘Riddale’, ‘Riddall’, ‘Riddl’, ‘Riddel’, ‘Riddaile’, ‘Rydal’, ‘Rydal’, ‘Rydale’, ‘Rydell’, etc.).

Riddell-Buchanan (ri-dul-bew-ka-nin) n. compound surname adopted by some generations of the Riddells of that Ilk, after they inherited Buchanan estates through marriage in 1772. Its use was abandoned by more recent generations, who reverted to the use of ‘Riddell’, with ‘Buchanan’ as an additional middle name (see Riddell).

Riddell Carre (ri-dul-kar, -kar) n. Adm. Robert (1782–1860) 3rd son of William Riddell of Camieston and Elizabeth Kerr, daughter of John of Cavers Carre. He was a Captain in the Royal Navy, entering in 1796 and being present at several battles, including Copenhagen and Algiers. He eventually had the rank of Admiral. He succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate following the death of his uncle Alexander in 1817, and his mother in 1828. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Walter. Thomas (1831–1905) son of Walter. He succeeded to Cavers Carre on the death of his father in 1874.
he was listed as owner of lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Colonel in the 4th Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers and served with the East India Company. He was also a Captain in the Ayrshire and Wigtownshire Militia. He was a Justice of the Peace, was on the county council for Lilliesleaf and was Chairman of Bowden Parish Council. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1865 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alfred T. Fellows from near Nottingham; her brother was the archaeologist Sir Charles Fellows. He was succeeded by his son Ralph Gervase, and also had daughters Elizabeth Olive Geva and Grizel Geva.

Walter (1807–74) 2nd son of Thomas Riddell of Camieston, and descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was born in Edinburgh and educated there. He worked as a merchant at East India House in London for 20 years. In 1848 he retired to Hertfordshire and in 1860 he succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre after the death of his uncle Robert. He then took the additional surname ‘Carre’. He moved back to Scotland in 1869. He was a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He devoted much of his time to researching the families and characters of the Borders. He contributed to local newspapers, as well as ‘Notes and Queries’, and was in demand as a popular lecturer. A collection of his writings was published after his death, ‘Border Memories; or, Sketches of Prominent Men and Women of the Border’ (1876), edited by James Tait of the Kelso Chronicle. In 1830 he married Elizabeth Riddell MacLauchlan, only surviving child of Lieut.-Col. Lauchlan MacLauchlan. He secondly married Mary Falconer, daughter of William Currie of Linthill. His son Capt. Thomas Alexander succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate. He was buried at Bowden.

Riddell Chaipel (ri-dul-châ-pul) n. former chapel said to have stood on the lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, later called Riddell. The location was supposed to be near the old ash tree not far from the gate leading from the Easter Lodge to the mansion house, a little south of the site of the old tower. The field in which the ruins were located was known as ‘Chapel Park’. There is a report of 2 stone coffins being unearthed from the foundations around 1850, one containing a pot with ashes and pieces of armour, and the other containing bones of gigantic size.

Riddell Hoose (ri-dul-hoos) n. former mansion house on the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish. It replaced an earlier house, which in turn replaced the castle, which probably dates to Norman times. The original tower-house was probably constructed around the 14th century, enlarged in the 16th century and again in the 17th, making a long southerly front of 2 storeys. A third Storey was added in the 18th century, along with a north-west wing, with a north-east wing added in the 19th century. Tax was paid on 47 windows there in 1748. It was largely destroyed by fire in 1943, although it exists in photographs and drawings. The estate office, built in 1826, is now the main house of the estate, with lintels marking its construction and renovation in 1898 and the arms of the Sprots built into a gable (see also Riddell Toor).

Riddell Mains (ri-dul-mânz) n. former name for the main lands in Lilliesleaf Parish held by the Riddells of that Ilk. In 1643 it was valued at £910, being the bulk of the property of the Laird at that time. It was still listed in the same way in 1788, when owned by Sir John Riddell. It was probably equivalent to what was later just called ‘Riddell’.

Riddell Mill (ri-dul-mîl) n. former corn mill on the Riddell estate, on the opposite side of the main farm. It was water powered and fed by a small lade that is now covered. The mill building survives, although all fittings have been removed and it is now in use as a barn. Situated in a bend in the Ale Water, at the foot of Dunstane Height, it was formerly also known as Dunstane Mill. In 1643 the ‘Town Mill and Mill thereof’ was valued at £247, among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk. However, it was sold before 1678, with value of £167. Thomas Lawrie was there in 1785. It was recorded as ‘Lands of Townmill, and mill thereof’ as part of the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788. John Haldane was miller there in 1841, James Haldane in the 1850s and Alexander Lauder in the 1860s. The name was also used for a water-powered saw-mill, built on the Riddell estate in the early 19th century.

the Riddells (thu-ri-dulz) n. family of Riddell of that Ilk, who gained lands at Riddell, in Lilliesleaf parish around the middle of the 12th century and were granted a baronetcy in 1628. About 1823 the estate was sold to the Sprots. For several centuries the family were buried at Lilliesleaf. The family has a Norman origin and received the lands of Ryedale in Yorkshire, being given the designation ‘de Ridel’ for several generations. Tradition (encouraged by Sir Walter Scott) told of stone coffins at Riddell bearing the dates 797 and 937. However, there is no reason to believe that the family’s origins can be traced back quite so far. The early history of the family is confused by the contemporary use of the same name by different men, with early Christian names including William, Geoffrey (or Galfridus) and Hugh. The history is further complicated by the family’s habit of calling their lands after themselves (rather than the other way around), and it seems clear that the Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish was not the original family home. The name occurs in England at the time of William the Conqueror, when lands were granted in Northumbria, following the Battle of Hastings. Another branch of the family appears to have remained on the continent, settling in Italy in the 11th century. Meanwhile the English family moved to Scotland along with David I, Gervase being the first Scotsman. The lands they were granted near Lilliesleaf appear to have been named after their former designation. The arms of Riddell of that Ilk shows 3 ears of corn (or rye) and a red chevron. The family motto is ‘I hope to share’ and the crest shows a greyhound (formerly spelled ‘Ridel’, etc., and interchangeable with ‘Riddle’).

Riddells Creek (ri-dulz-kreek) n. small town in the state of Victoria, Australia, located between the cities of Melbourne and Bendigo. It was named by John Carre Riddell, who was born near Lilliesleaf.

Riddellshiel (ri-dul-sheel) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Clerklands. The woods to the north are called Riddellshiel Plantation, and a small lake to the west is Riddellshiel Moss.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddellstead, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Riddale Steid’ on the 1541 rental roll. It is there said to be hereditary property of the Laird of Glendinning, held of the Lord of Liddesdale.

Riddell Toor (ri-dul-toor, -tow-ur) n. former peel tower on the Riddell estate. The name is also used for the more modern tower built nearby, referred to as the General’s Toor. The first fortified house on these lands was probably built shortly after the Riddell family acquired the lands in the 12th century. But the existing structure is probably from the 14th century, and was only revealed after the mansion burned down in 1943. The surviving walls are in the south-west corner. There is also evidence of 16th century stonework. The tower was probably converted into a mansion house in the 17th century, making a long southern front of 2 storeys, with a 3rd floor added in the 18th century, along with further wings in the 18th and 19th centuries. The ruins are now among mature woodland to the north-east of the main farmhouse.

riddler (ri-dur) n., arch. someone who acts to separate combatants – ‘...and that he was the Riddler who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan’ [PR1716].

Riddle (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddell) George John (1830–1920) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was a tailor and clothier and cousin of John, also a tailor in Hawick. His sister Helen married John Graham of ‘Graham’s Hotel’. He married Margaret, daughter of William Clark and Jane Murray, and she died in 1921, aged 91; she was a cousin of the father of Sir James A.H. Murray. The couple celebrated their golden wedding in 1900, when they had 5 sons, 2 daughters and 19 grandchildren, and they lived to see their 70th wedding anniversary. Their children were: John, fishmonger, who married Helen Elliot; William, joiner in Birkenhead, who married Jean Roberts; Andrew C., engineer on the Aberdeen steamships, who emigrated to Australia and married Georgina Johnstone; James, stockmaking merchant, who married Mary Elliot; Thomas, a tailor, who married Margaret Dalgleish; George, Co-op store manager in Newcastle-on-Tyne; Jane, who married hosiery manager Robert Hamilton; Robert, bank clerk in South Africa; Anne, hosiery worker; George J., Secretary of the Universities Club, Edinburgh, who married Lily Mackenzie; Isabella, ‘Bella’; William, chemist, who married Hilda Evans; Elliot, with the Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto; Jean, who married accountant Percy Howard of Langholm; and Alexander Westwater, a chemist. Helen ‘Ellen’ (b.c.1813) born in Hawick, daughter of tailor Walter. She was proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 24 High Street, who also kept boarders. She started by selling 2d mutton pies at weekends, the business being carried on by her niece (of the same name) as a confectioner’s, and later by other family members. It was popularly known as ‘Ellen Riddle’s’ for about a century. She is recorded as a High Street grocer on the 1851 census, living... with her brothers Francis and Walter, and nieces Helen and Isabella. Probably the same Helen is recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory as an earth-eware and glass dealer on the High Street, as well as a grocer. In 1861 she was recorded as a ‘wool framework trimmer’ at 24 High Street, living with her niece Ellen and 3 boarders. Helen (b.1845/6–1914) daughter of tailor John and Margaret Armstrong. She was niece of the earlier Helen, from whom she took over the grocer’s and pie shop at 24 High Street. Already in 1851 she was living with her aunt Helen (and uncles Francis and Walter), as well as her younger sister Isabella, at 24 High Street (a few houses along from her parents and siblings). She was still living with her aunt in 1861 and in 1871 she was ‘Pie-Baker’ and head of household, living with her sister Mary Ann and brother Frank. James Haining describes her in the 1930s as maker of ‘celebrated pies still remembered’. In the latter part of the 19th century the back of the shop was also used as a meeting place for debating societies and other groups. J. (18th/19th C.) clogger in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver in Hawick. He was a tailor in Hawick at 12 Howegate. He is listed as a tailor on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Howegate in 1837. He is also listed as a Howegate tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory, with his son John listed as a tailor on the High Street. He was still on the Howegate on the 1861 census, and was listed as a tailor and grocer. He married Isabella Richardson. Their children included: John (b.1819), also a tailor; William (b.1821); James (b.1822); Isabella (b.1824), who married wool merchant James Melrose; Thomas (b.1826); Agnes (b.1828; George John (b.1830); Helen (b.1831); and Catherine (b.1839), who married wool-spinner Walter Scott. John (b.1811/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor on Walter’s Wynd in the 1851 census. He was thus one of 3 contemporary Hawick tailor’s with the same name! His wife was Ellen and their children included Isabella and John. John (b.1819) son of Howegate tailor John, he was a tailor on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 28 High Street, a master tailor employing 3 men; in 1861 he was listed as a tailor and clothier at 24 High Street. He married Margaret (perhaps also called ‘Mary’) Armstrong in 1843; she was sister of ironmonger John Armstrong and died in 1888, aged 66. Their children included: Helen (b.c.1846), who grew up with her aunt Helen and took over the pie-making business; Isabella (b.c.1848); Walter (b.c.1850); Mary Ann (b.c.1853), who married William C. Simpson and continued pie-making; Francis (b.1855); Margaret (1857–96), who married joiner George Gall; Lancelot Armstrong (b.1859); Agnes (b.1862); and John Armstrong (b.1865). John (b.c.1820) shoemaker at 8 Howegate. His wife was Maria, and their children included: Thomas; Frederick; and Cecilia. He could be the John who donated a model of Hermitage Castle to the Museum in 1863. John Turnbull (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-1800s, nicknamed ‘Tip-madaisy’. Mary Ann (1852/3–1931) daughter of tailor John. She married William C. Simpson. She continued the confectionary side of the business run by her sister and aunt (both called Ellen Riddle) at 24 High Street. Walter (1789–1849) son of William, he was born in Selkirk. He became a tailor of Hawick and was a trustee of the Relief Kirk. He is listed as a tailor on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may have been related to John, who was also a Hawick tailor at about the same time. In 1841 he is listed at about 23 High Street. He married Isobel Kedzie, whose family came from Slaidhills, and she died in 1838, aged 51. Their children were: Helen, who was a grocer (of pie fame); William (b.1822/3), a tailor, who emigrated to London, Ontario; Francis, joiner; Walter, blacksmith; and Isabel. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Tait and their children included: John (b.1728); and John (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1728 appear to be John Scott and John Paterson. William (b.1822/3) son of tailor Walter. He married Wilson Stuart in Hawick in 1846. He emigrated to Canada, and settled in London, Ontario. William (19th/20th C.) joiner, with business where the Burgh yard was later located. He was a Councillor and J.P. and was for a long time Session Clerk and elder of Allars Kirk. He was probably descended from tailor Walter. ride (ríd) v., arch. to fix boundaries, especially by perambulation, pp., arch. be ridden – ‘The said day the Baylyeas and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June . . . ’ [BR1703], ‘...did appoynt and ordaine the Common to ryd upon Fryday come eight days, being the twenty-sixth of May instant and current [BR1710] (also written ‘rydl’ and ‘ryde’, the word was used to describe the circuit of the itinerant High Court of the Judiciary in the 15th century, and was used in the context of boundary marking in Selkirk in the early 16th century; from Middle English; note the confusion with the word ‘ride’ meaning to go on horseback, which may have been confounded with this word in references to the ‘common riding’; note that the past participle use transposes the usual object into a subject, cf. belong).

ride (рид) v., arch. to ford a river on horseback, be fordable – ‘But when the land-sergeant the water saw, It winna ride my lads, quo’ he . . . ’[CPM].

ride oot see Ride-out

Ride-out (рид-оот) n. Ride-out, an organised visit to one of a number of local villages or farms on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the weeks between the Picking of the Cornet and the start of the Common Riding. They are essentially practices for the big weekend, and are not part of the official Common Riding, being organised by the Cornet. The first Ride-out seems to have been held in 1891 (with Andrew Haddon as Cornet and J.E.D. Murray as Right-Hand Man) and was an outing to Lilliesleaf by 5 consecutive Cornets, followed 2 weeks later by another ride-out via Braxholme, Northhouse, Skelfhill and Priesthaugh to St. Leonard’s. The first Ride-out to Mosspaul was in 1901, James Sutherland’s year. The Tuesday Ride-outs were originally held so that shop-workers and others could attend on half-day closing, with the mill-workers being able to attend on Saturdays. Women have been officially allowed on most Ride-outs since 1997. They extend over either 5 or 6 weeks, depending on when the Picking is. The venues are chosen each year by the Cornet (with advice from the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father). The first Ride-out has been to Bonchester since about the last war. The premier event is the ride to Mosspaul, which is 2 weeks before the Common Riding. After the last Saturday Ride-out, the Principals stop off at Hornshole. There are sometimes special one-off rides because of the place of residence of the new Cornet. Locations have included Bonchester, Cavers, Cogsmill, Denholm, Ettrickbridge, Harden House, Hermitage, Lilliesleaf, Mosspaul, Newmill, Philhope Bridge, Robertson, Skelfhill, Southfield, Teindside, Teviotdale Lodge, Teviothead, West Buccleuch and Wolfelee. Each ride-out starts with a muster in Allars Crescent, leaving from Backdamgate. The Right-Hand Man acts as front marshal and the Left-Hand Man as back marshal. There are usually lots of cars packed with picnics which go to meet the riders at the appointed location. There is usually a sing-song in the village hall or similar, and before leaving the ‘Big Power’ sing 5 verses of ‘Teribus’ while mounted. On returning to town, the Principals dismount at the Backdamgate and usually carry children on their shoulders round to the steps of the Tower where there is a strive and more song singing. A junior ride-out (for primary school pupils) was started in 2010 – ‘oo yaise the sorta ‘no the ful shillin’ kinda general English . . . ’twae horses short o a rideoot’, that wud be a Hawick yin’[IWL] (the usualy plural is ‘Ride-outs’, although ‘Rides-oot’ might be more correct English).

ride the fair (рид-фэйр) v., arhc. to open a fair by riding in procession. Magistrates from Jedburgh rode the market at the Winter Fair in the early 18th century and had to be rescued from the crowd by the Hawick Magistrates! Similarly the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to ride the fair one year and had to be rescued from the Bailies, with some resulting injuries – ‘[The Burgh Magistrates proceeded to] ryde the fair’ [BR1672] (also ridin the fair: note that this meaning of ‘ride’ always referred to being on horseback, unlike in common riding).

ridin (ридин) n. the Riding of the Marches, or Common Riding, the annual marking of a town’s boundaries, traditionally on horse-back – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoune . . . ’[BR1645] (note that the original meaning may have had nothing to do with horses, see ride).

the Ridin o the Mairches (тид-ди-диин-э-маирчес) n. the central part of Hawick Common Riding, performed by the Cornet and his followers on the Friday of Common Riding week. The riders mount at St. Leonard’s (after the Chase) and proceed to the furthest point of the Common, via Wulliestruther and Acreknowe (the Cornet passes along the Hawick side, the others free to choose), for the ceremonial ‘Cutting of the Sod’. The cavalcade proceeds to the Moor for the Races, then rides via Crumhaughhill to Myrselawgreen. The Principals next perform the Dipping of the Flag at the Coble Pool. Afterwards the whole party goes to the Millpath for the proclamation that the marches have been ridden and the Song-singing. Before the Division of the Common in 1777 the entire Common boundary would be marched, and many marker turfs or stones positioned, as well as neighbouring sheep and cattle driven off. Sometimes this would be done on foot over the few days before the ceremonial riding. The ceremony is believed to have taken place since at least the 16th century, but could be even older. The Council used to appoint 12 Burleymen to assist the Bailies in riding the marches, the appointment being a courtesy one after the Division, and the last appointments being made in 1854. Footmen as well as horsemen are recorded as part of the procession in 1725. The practice of riding armed with pistols was officially discontinued in 1784. In the years 1900–04 and 1921 it was switched to the Thursday morning and in 1910–13 it was moved to the Saturday. J.E.D. Murray carried it on himself during WWI and Chap Landles led the unofficial rides during WWII, while in 2001 there was an organised walk round the marches in November (see also the Common Ridin).

ridin the mairches (ri-din-thuh-mahr-cheez) n. ceremonial marking of the boundaries of a town Common. Scottish towns with this tradition include, Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar, as well as the towns of the Borders.

Ridley (rid-lee) n. John (b.1794/5) civil engineer from England. He was living at Thorlieshope in 1861, but probably only there temporarily for hunting. His wife was Mary. Nicholas ‘Nick’ (1929–1993) Baron of Liddesdale, born in Northumberland, he was educated at Eton and Oxford University. He became an M.P. in 1959, held several appointments under Edward Heath and then became a great supporter of Margaret Thatcher. He was Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (in the years before the Falklands War), Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Secretary of State for Transport (authoring the Ridley Report on how the Conservatives would deal with the Unions), Secretary of State for the Environment (where he popularised the phrase ‘NIMBY’, but reduced public funding for environmental protection) and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (which he was forced to resign after likening Helmut Kohl to Adolf Hitler). He was also responsible for introducing the ‘Poll Tax’. In 1992 he was created a life peer, choosing the title ‘Baron Ridley of Liddesdale’, despite objections from Scottish politicians. His puppet image on ‘Spitting Image’ always had a cigarette in its mouth, and he died of lung cancer shortly after being elevated to the Lords.

riever (ree-ver) n. a plunderer, robber, marauder, freebooter – ‘They deem you the children of rievers, Unkempt, as of old, and rude: Still bound to vie with friend or foe, In keen and narrow feud’ [FH], ‘When thou sawist ane reyf-far, than thou becamist airt an’ pairt wi’ him . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid’ [ECS], ‘. . . The nag of the reiver was well nigh spent, With a dragging hoof and his nose to the bent’ [WHO], ‘And when reivers rode and mosstroopers trod To victory or defeat On their reiving raids through the glens and glades Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK], ‘A haunted land, where stalks the

Right-Haund Man (rɪ'-hawnd-mawn) n. Right-Hand Man during the Common Riding, being the previous year’s Cornet. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet, and provides assistance to the new Cornet. He rides with the Cornet during many of the ceremonial events, wearing the same green coat etc. He acts as front marshal during the Ride-outs. Occasionally someone has served twice as Right-Hand Man, such as William Stoddart in 1875, and W. Lockie Thorburn after WWII. Mr. Lunn stood in as Left-Hand Man during the Common Riding. ‘The Cornet and his two men’ are referred to in 1809, there is a photographic portrait of the 1857 Cornet and his 2 supporters, and a painting of 1846 showing the ‘Big Threi’ crossing the Teviot.

display much white’ [ECS].

Ringlees Knowe (ring-leez-now) n. area on the eastern slopes of Berryfell Hill, between the Slitrig and Rule valleys, just north of Finnerelles Sike. There are the remains of a small settlement here, about 50 m by 35 m, partly destroyed by quarrying. To the south is a 0 8 m-high stone,
which has been set up, probably as a marker.

ring-tails (ring-talz) n., pl., arch. arrears in rent, odd pieces of business left when a firm is wound up, left-overs, remnants – ‘Ring-tails, Small remnants of an thing: as, in relation to drink, it is said, ‘Tak aff your ring-tails, and brew again’, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. parish and market town in Hampshire, with the same name as lands to the south of Hawick. Ringwood is recorded as early as the 10th century, with a grant by King Edgar to the Church of Abingdon. Just before the Norman Conquest it was held by Tostig, who was Earl of Northumbria, and brother of King Harold. Given Tostig’s connection to Northumbria, and the fact that he held extensive lands elsewhere, there is a possibility that the Teviotdale Ringwood was named after the English one by either him or some other common landowner.
The origin of the name is suggested to be ‘rima
wuda’, meaning ‘border wood’.

Ringwud (ring-wud) n. another name for Ringwudfield.

Ringwudfield (ring-wud-feeld) n. Ringwoodfield, area on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley, formerly in Cavers Parish. It was long a property of Melrose Abbey, described as lying upon the ‘Alwent (Allan) and Teviot’ and given to the monks by Osulf during the reign of Malcolm IV (mid-12th century). The boundaries of the lands are briefly described, but most of the names are now unfamiliar – ‘Blachapol’, ‘Bolli-and ‘Blackaburne’. The grant was remade by Philip de Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland just a few years later. It was confirmed by Uchtred, son of Osulf (and his son Uchtred) in about 1166.
In about 1358 the specific lands of Penan-gushope and Caldcleuch, within this barony, were granted to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas. There were further confirmations in the reigns of Alexander II and David II. It is recorded as ‘Ringwood’ in 1360 when Sir William, Earl of Douglas, charged Sir William of Gledstains, his Baillie of the Barony of Cavers, to defend the Abbot and Convent of Melrose as lords of the lands there. The Abbey presumably held the lands throughout the 15th century, and David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were made bailies in 1484. In a document of 1500 it is referred to as ‘the lordship of Ryngwodfield’.
It contained (at least) the lands and steadings of ‘Ryngwodchat, Stobycolt, the Burghe, Prsythach, Cauldcluch, Standholm, Penangushop, Sowdinryg and the Bowenhyl’ (now mostly familial places), which were leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500. His son, Sir Walter, was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, in 1519 and reappointed in 1524. In the Eschequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick

and Rodono); it seems likely that this was because Scott of Buccleuch had temporarily forfeited the lands to the Crown. In 1540 the ‘fernes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £52 6d; in addition the King’s shepherds were paid for various amounts of grain in the lands of ‘Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn’, ‘lie Burgh’ and ‘Vestcotrig et Southcothrig et Bolburg’ (with transcription errors). The ‘lands of Ringwoodfield and the office of bailiery of Melroseland’ are recorded in the Scott return of 1553/4; the lands were then valued at £52 Scots. In 1558 the Prior of Melrose complained about Walter Scott of Branxholme possessing the lands ‘in Ringwoodfield’ and the bailiary of other lands of the Abbey. In about 1564 the lands were valued at £3 6s 8d, and included Brugh, Stobicote, Ringwoodhaugh, Bowanhill, Grange, Priesthaugh, Penangushope, ‘Woisterrie’ [probably Westcoterig], Northhouse, Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch; Sir Walter Scott inherited them from his grandfather at this time. Sir Walter Scott (the ‘Bold Buccleuch’) inherited the lands from his father in 1574. In 1621 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose, when it is listed as Cauldcleuch, Northhouse, ‘Crawshope’, Stobicote, Brugh, Soothdeanrig, ‘Coliburn’, Westcoterig, ‘Rowanhill’ [probably Bowanhill], Priesthaugh and Penangushope. In 1660 the lands are recorded being put in ‘wadset’ to pay the fine imposed by Cromwell on Scott of Buccleuch; it was still technically in the Lordship of Melrose and consisted of Cauldcleuch, Priesthaugh, Northhouse, ‘Coliburne’, Stobicote, Doecleuch, Soothdeanrig, Brugh, Fairny-side, Peelbrae, Penangushope, Langleuchside, Phaup, Linhope and Frostylee. In the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch it appears to no longer be a Lordship, but it heads a list of farms that were mostly formerly contained within it and now referred to as lying within the Lordship of Melrose, namely ‘Ringwoodfield, Caaldeleuch, Northous, Thirlestane, Braidhauch, Crowishope, Stobit-coat-burgh, Suddrimg, Coatburne, Westcotrig, Bowanhill, Presithauch, and Pannangoshope’; essentially the same list occurs in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch. It is recorded again in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693 (transcribed ‘Ringwoodfield’); it is then within the Lordship of Melrose. The name does not occur after the 17th century, but is crudely the same as ‘Teviotdale-head’, as used by the Buccleuch estates. It seems likely that if there was a tower house it was on the land of ‘Ryngwoodchat’, which may be an error for ‘Ringwoodhaugh’. This probably corresponded with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken ‘Ringwoode fell’ for the farms of Berryfell, and ‘Ringwood Hatt’ for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is ‘ringwude’ in the 1160s, ‘Ringwde’ in about 1170, ‘Ryngwoodefelde’ in c.1358, ‘Rengwude’ and ‘Rengwodfeld’ in c.1360s, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1500, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1519, ‘Rynwodfeld’ and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1524, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1538, ‘Ringwodfeld’ and ‘Rinwodfeld’ in 1553/4, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1557, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1564, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1574, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1634 and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwudhaugh (ring-wud-hawch) n. Ringwoodhaugh, probable name for a steading near Ringwood Hill, recorded as ‘Ryngwodchat’ in 1500. In 1557 it was ‘Ringwodhat’ when Adam Scott of Allanhaugh paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is ‘Ringwoodhau’ which may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh. It may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh.

Ringwud Hill (ring-wud-hil) n. Ringwood Hill, hill which lies directly south of Newmill and above Broadhaugh farm, reaching a height of 247 m. Its name is surely connected with the ancient lands of ‘Ringwood’ or ‘Ringwoodfield’ in upper Teviotdale, once owned by Melrose Abbey; it was valued for the farms of Berryfell, and ‘Ringwood Hatt’, which may correspond with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken ‘Ringwoode fell’ for the farms of Berryfell, and ‘Ringwood Hatt’ for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is ‘ringwude’ in the 1160s, ‘Ringwde’ in about 1170, ‘Ryngwoodefelde’ in c.1358, ‘Rengwude’ and ‘Rengwodfeld’ in c.1360s, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1500, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1519, ‘Rynwodfeld’ and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1524, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1538, ‘Ringwodfeld’ and ‘Rinwodfeld’ in 1553/4, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1557, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1564, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1574, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1634 and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

rin-im-ower (rin-im-ow-ur) n., arch. a children’s game resembling ‘King’s Covenanter’, involving trying to capture opponents as they cross a street, with the captive replacing the captor (noted by J. Jamieson; elsewhere called ‘Willie Wastle’, ‘Tom Tiddler’s Ground’, etc.).

Rink Ferm (ringk-ferrn) n. Rink farm, near the confluence of the Tweed and the Ettrick. It is the site of a pre-historic settlement, sometimes called ‘Rink Camp’. This was also where the Hawick Farmers’ Club instigated an annual sheep market in October 1779, which became one of the biggest in the South of Scotland. The land here belonged to the Laird of Edgerston.

riplin-kaim (rip-lin-kām) n., arch. a comb formerly used for separating flax seeds from the stalk – ‘This was done by means of a ‘ripping comb’ – a piece of board generally about 3 feet long, fixed to the ground, in which a number of iron teeth were thickly and perpendicularly fastened; through these the lint was drawn by handfuls till the seed was all separated’ [JAHM].

riptur (rip-tur) v., n., arch. rupture – ‘Ne’er in oor days, nor in ony’s before. Was seen siccan ripture o’ riot and revelry’ [JoHa] (also written ‘rupture’).

rise see ryse

rispylaw (ris-pee-law) n. former fortified house and farm on the Hermitage Water, roughly where the modern Braedlie farm is located, and near to an old drove road. The hill just above Braedlie is ‘Rispy-Law’. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is described as ‘A farm than no man doth know ye mrices of’ (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Rispilaw’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rispylaw’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Rispelaw’; probably from ‘rispie’, meaning ‘long, coarse grass’).

Ritchie (ri-chee) n. Rev. John (1669/90–1744) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1697, he was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1701 and became minister of Minto Parish in 1703. He remained as minister until his death, although he had 2 separate assistants in the 1740s. He was one of the men appointed to examine Hawick’s new candidate for Schoolmaster in 1718, and preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Barbara Ainslie (daughter of Rev. James and cousin of Rev. Walter), who died in 1715, aged 45 (also written ‘Richie’).

rither (ri-thur) adv. rather – ‘where wud ee rither gaun yer holidays, Spittal or Whitley Bay?’, ‘what’s gaun on, or rither, what’s no gaun on?’, ‘There’s naewhere A wad rither be . . . ’ [IWL], other – ‘rither is Hawick, where wud ee like ti bide?’ (cf. the locally less common raithe).

Ritson (rit-sin) n. Chris Cornet in 2013. In September of his year, he carried the Borderers (Flodden quincentenary) Flag as it toured Border towns. William (1811–95) born in County Durham to a Methodist family, he became a railway contractor and was one of the main men behind the construction of the Border Union Railway. He is particularly remembered for being in charge of the construction of the Shankend Viaduct and Whitrope Tunnel. He lived at Woodley Field near Hexham.

Riversdale Mills (ri-vurzd-milz) n. 19th century hosiery factory on Mansfield Square, between Eastfield Mills and the railway. It was constructed around 1888 for William Kedie & Co., which was then essentially an offshoot of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. It was sold to Innes, Chambers & Co. around 1909. It was later the main site for Lockie’s, and more recently Monk Cotton (also sometimes erroneously referred to as ‘Riverside Mills’, perhaps because of similarly named mills in Selkirk and Jedburgh).

Riverside (ri-vur-sid) n. street in Denholm, off the Minto Road, also called ‘Riverside Drive’, with construction beginning in the 1930s and being completed after WWII. The land here was originally the North Crofts, given by Douglas of Cavers in 1862 for allotments.

Riverside Caravan Park (ri-vur-sid-ka-ru-vawn-pawrk, -ki-ra-) n. caravan park between Hawick and Denholm, adjacent to Hornshole, established in the 1960s and much expanded in recent years. There is a footbridge across the Teviot near there (note the older pronunciation of ‘caravan’ with accent on the 2nd syllable).

Road End (röd-end) n. former placename near Newcastleton, possible the same as Steelerroad-end. William Elliot was recorded there in a directory of 1868.

Roadheid (röd-heed) n. Roadhead, road leading up from the Cauld, previously known as ‘Blakie’s Brae’. The name was formerly applied to the top of that road, e.g. to the houses at Norwood that are above Roadhead, and on some old maps (e.g. the 1859 and 1890 Ordnance Survey maps) is marked at Langlands Road. Hence there is some confusion about whether the name applies to the whole of that road, or just the top part. It was adopted as a street name around 1890. There was once a draw well (possibly Hawick’s only one) situated there. The road is shown in a photograph dating from about 1885. William Dalgleish is recorded there in 1791 (the name derives from being at the head of what was previously described as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’).

Roadheid Brae (röd-heed-brä) n. Roadhead Brae, another name for Roadheid.

Roadheid Cottage (röd-heed-ko’-eej) n. former small cottage at Roadhead, which bore the date 1765 on a door lintel and survived until at least the late 19th century.

Roadside (röd-síd) n. place name used in Wilton in the 19th century, apparently referring to part of the modern Princes Street, perhaps corresponding to Ladylaw Road. It may at some times have been used as an alternative name for Roadhead: however, in the 1790s both names were used at the same time and hence they were different. Walter Scott and William Nichol were recorded there in 1791 and Hector Blaikie in 1797.

the Road Trustees (thu-röd-trüs-teez) n., pl. body set up following the Turnpike Acts of the late 18th century. They were responsible for raising money through tolls and spending it to improve roads, bridges etc. (as well as to pay off any subscribers). This led to a huge improvement in the quality of local roads. The also contributed to the construction of many new local bridges from the 1770s onwards.

Roan (rön) n. farm to the west of the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, on the Ryedale Burn. There was formerly a tower here, possibly on a mound in front of the modern farmhouse. The tower still existed in the early 18th century, although there is now no sign of it. Simon Armstrong, younger of Whithaugh was there in 1592/3; marked ‘Renn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and is on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Roan Fell (rön-fell) n. high ground near the head of the Hermitage Water, between Millstone Edge and Hartsgarth Fell. It lies on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and reaches a height of 568 m – ‘See! they have gained the Roanfell’s heathery crest, Not in a line, but hound to hound abreast’ [HNo] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).

roar (rör) v. to cry loudly, bawl – ‘hei wasni juist greetin when they got bate, hei was roarin’, ‘But she . . .roared and grat, an’ grap ma airm’ [HAST1868], ‘What’s she roarin and greetin at?’ [ECS], ‘When they sortit the middie oat at last, The lassies grat and roared . . .’ [DH].

the roarin game (thu-rö-rin-gäm) n. sobriquet for curling, played on various ponds around Hawick from the earliest years of the 19th century and dying out in the early 20th.

Roarin Willie (rö-rin-wi-lee) n. nickname for William Campbell.

roast (róst) n., poet. a roost, particularly in the phrase ‘rule the roast’ – ‘. . .as this House of Representatives must evidently continue to ‘rule the roast’’ [RW].

roastit (rös-tee’, rös-ti’) pp., adj. roasted, uncomfortably hot – ‘A’m roastit in this muckle jersey’.

roasty (rös-tee) adj., arch. rusty.

Rob (rob) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Robert.

Robb (rób, rob) n. William Cuthbert
(20th C.) High School English teacher (nicknamed ‘Pongo Robb’), author of several educational books in the 1930s to 50s. He also wrote the ‘Touchstone’ column in the Hawick Express, years??.

Robbie Barrell (ro-bee-baw-rul) n. nickname for Robert Scott, one of the many of the same name in the mid-1800s.

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dil) n. nickname for a supporter of Hawick Rugby Football Club – ‘And though players come and players go, Wi my last braith I’ll prophesy – They may fade away, when they’ve had their day, But there’ll aye be a Robbie Dye!’ [DH] (the name is recorded at least as early as the 1950s, and based on some early supporter, although popularised in the mythic poem by Davod Hill).
Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. poem by David Hill, first published in the Hawick Express in 1957 under the pseudonym ‘HAB’. It is included on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006), recited by Bert Armstrong.

the Robbie Dyes (thu-ro-bee-dlz) n. nickname for Hawick R.F.C., derived from the popular name of an early fanatical supporter of the Club.

Robbie Hunter’s Well (ro-bee-hun’-urz-wel) n. popular name for a former public pump well, situated against the side of a house at the foot of the Back Raw.

Robbie’s (ro-beez) n. modern bar and diner at 8 High Street, run by Robbie Watt. In 2004 it became the Tower Inn.

Robbie Scare a Hair (ro-bee-skär-a-här) n. nickname for auctioneer Robert Scott (presumably because of his lack of hair).

Robbie Scott (ro-bee-skot’) n. name occurring in a version of a song by Jock Gray, probably from the early 19th century – ‘And the laddie he’s but young, And the laddie he’s but young, And Robbie Scott ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [DJG] (note that in another version the name is ‘Rob Rodgers’, so this may be simply an error).

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-thu-kow) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s bainth Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunumeran danders ower the knowe’ [HI].

Robert (ro-burr) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Robert I (1274–1329) known as ‘Robert the Bruce’, he was great-grandson of David I, he was King of Scotland 1306–1329. He refused to meet the English on even ground, and achieved immortal fame for leading the 1314 defeat of the English at Bannockburn, which made Scotland a sovereign nation. He granted part of Branxholme to Walter Comyn and the rest to Henry Baliol in 1307, and split the Barony of Wilton between Gilbert Maxwell and Henry Wardlaw at about the same time. He also granted part of Kirkborthwick to William Barbour, and moved it from Roxburghshire to Selkirkshire. He visited Jedburgh at least once late in his life, granting a charter there in 1329. His heart was supposedly returned from the Crusades by Sir James Douglas and reputedly buried under the chancel’s east window at Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him – ‘…Repeats the tles of old heroic times, While Bruce and Wallace consercrate the rhymes’ [JL].

Robert II (1316–90) called ‘the Steward’, he was the only son of Walter, the 5th High Steward of Scotland and Marjorie daughter of Robert I. He played a strong role in the government of Scotland under his younger uncle David II, being Regent along with John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. He was one of the Scots leaders at Halidon Hill, and escaped from the Battle of Neville’s Cross. Imprisoned for rebellion against David, he eventually succeeded to the throne in 1371 after David’s death. Confusion over the legality of his marriage with Elizabeth Mure later led to disputes among his descendants. Robert III (c.1340–1406) King from 1390. He was the son of Robert II by his mistress Elizabeth Mure, later legitimised by marriage. He was disabled by being kicked by a horse. Born John, he changed his name on assuming the throne. The kingdom was effectively ruled by his brother Robert, Earl of Fife and later Duke of Albany. He married Annabella Drummond. His son David, Duke of Rothesay became lieutenant of the kingdom, but died mysteriously at Falkland Palace in 1402. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, James I.

Robert (ro-burr) n. (12th C.) son of Guy, he witnessed a document as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1147. This was confirmation of a gift to Coldingham Priory that Gospatrick, brother of Dolphin, had given to Edrom and Nisbet; his name is given as ‘Roberto filio Widonis’. The same Robert also witnessed other documents relating to lands in Scotland, the last being in about 1170. This included renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him in the period 1165–68 and a papal document referring to his gift to Newbattle Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear if he was part of some well known family.

Robert (ro-burr) n. (10th/11th C.) carpenter of Hassende, who witnessed a charter in about the 1220s. He is recorded as ‘Roberto carpentario’.

Robert (ro-burr) n. (13th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Robert fiz Rauf persone del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Eywtesdale’. He was thus presumably son of Ralph and served as Parson of the Nether Kirk of Ewes.

Robert Hill (ro-burr-hil) n. hill shown being near the source of the Slitrig and Rule Waters on Gordon’s map c. 1650, between the ‘Maidens papes Hills’ and ‘Wriggs Hill’ (probably Wigg Knowe). It is unclear which hill this would be, since there is no similar modern name of any significant nearby hills. Perhaps Wyndburgh Hill (the highest in the area) is meant, or its southern ridge, being composed of Outer Knowe Head, Crow Knowe and Kih Knowe, suggesting a connection with ‘Robert’s Linn’ below. This is probably the ‘Robertis hill’ mentioned in the 1562 document describing disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule; this was adjacent to the lands of Wyndburgh Hope. It may be the ‘Roberthill’ that was among lands sold in 1607 by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It is also probably the place mentioned by Scott of Satchells in relationship to the Scotts of Thistlestone – ‘John’s son, Robert, was a warden in his time, The fight of Robert’s hill he did gain; He for his king and country did maintain the truth; He married Scot, daughter to the laird of Buccleugh’ [CWS].

Robert Noble’s (ro-bur̩-nō-balz) n. former tweed mill, usually known as Noble’s.

Robert of Heap (ro-bur̩-ō-heep) n. holder of the lands of Heap (or ‘Hepe’) before about 1431, as mentioned in a grant transferring the lands from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

Roberton (ro-bur̩-in) n. village about 6 miles west of Hawick along the Borthwick, centre for the surrounding parish. As a place name it has existed since at least the 14th century. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott in the 14th century (as recorded in 1410), and it is possible they were named after him. Sir William Gledstains acquired the lands in the last years of the 14th century and the Gledstains of that Ilk retained the lands through the 15th century. John Scott of ‘Weltoun’ and ‘Valis’ acquired the lands in 1502 and later in the 16th century there was a celebrated faster called John Scott who came from the area (and possibly the same family). James Scott, last of Robertson sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1627. There were 9 ‘communicants’ recorded living there in 1650, namely John Hunen, Margaret Walker, Patrick Hunen, Robert Hunen, Walter Telfer, Margaret Wilson, Malie Brown and Besse Scott. The Parish was formed in 1689 out of parts of the surrounding parishes and after much dispute. In 1694 there were 7 hearths recorded there. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. Robert Scott was recorded as a resident in 1743. The teinds of Robertson, Howculeuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Adam Scott of Galalaw (in 1785) and Robert Pott of Galalaw (in 1802) paid the Land Tax of £100. The present church, built in 1863/4, replaces a 17th century building, which stood behind the present Manse. This church was built in a time of religious and political upheaval in Scotland, before the new parish of Robertson was created. The church is built on what appears to be a former settlement, which may have been the ‘Robert’s Town’ from which the village takes its name. The farm there was part of the detached section of Hassendeane Parish until 1690. The present village contains the Forman Hall, designed by J.P. Alison about 1922, and used for community events, as well as a stone pillar War Memorial. The police station there closed in 1931, but the small primary school remains. ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Robertson’ was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and ‘Roberton: the making of a parish’ by George O. Wood in 1992 – ‘Tell Ashkir, and Satchels, Borthfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Robertson, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the name first appears in a charter of Robert III, probably in the late 1390s, it is ‘Robertistoun’ in 1430 and is usually spelled ‘Robertoun’ or ‘Robertoune’ until the late 17th century, with Scott of Satchell’s writing ‘Robert-toun’ in 1688, ‘Robert-toun’ in 1710 and ‘Robertown’ still recorded in 1743; it is marked ‘Roberton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Robertoun’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map, as well as Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin is simply ‘Robert’s farm’, possibly referring to Robert Scott, mentioned in 1410 as a former owner).

Roberton (ro-bur̩-in) n. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Applethorpehall in 1840. He was at Applethorpehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Robert’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigirg in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Jamie local character of unknown age whose portrait is in the Museum.

Roberton Burnfit (ro-bur̩-in-burn-fit) n. former farm just near Robertson, which was part of Roberton Kirk

Hassendean Parish until 1689. It was mentioned in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. It was distinct from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, a mile or so up the valley. John Gowans was there in 1720, John Taylor in at least 1725–26. William Lawson and John Gowans were there in 1743, Thomas Govenlock in 1752, Walter Scott in 1763–65, David Scott in 1767–74, Adam Robson in 1775 and Adam Ridell in 1781 (it is ‘Robertown burnfoot’ in 1772).

Roberton Cleuch (ro-bur'-in-klooch) n. name given to the deep wooded part of the Glen Burn, just to the north of the B711 through the village.

Roberton Cleuchfit (ro-bur'-in-klooh-fi') n. former piece of land near Roberton. It is possibly the same as ‘Roberton Burnfit’ or could be the land on which the house known as ‘Cleuchfoot’ was built. It is described (perhaps in the 17th century) as a ‘pendicle of Robertoun’, once owned by Walter Scott of Woll and then by Alexander Scott of Galalaw.

Roberton Free Kirk (ro-bur'-in-free-kirk) n. original official name for the Snoot Kirk.

Roberton Glebefit (ro-bur'-in-gleeb-fi') n. name for houses in Roberton at the foot of the Glebe road. Margaret Laidlaw was a grocer there in 1841, and Thomas Murray and family were also living there.

Roberton Kirk (ro-bur'-in-kirk) n. church in Roberton village. The present church dates from 1863/4, designed in Gothic style by David Rhind. It is a rectangular building with small buttresses and a porch, with the bell hung over the gable. It has 2 memorial stained-glass windows and a war memorial in the grounds. The earlier church stood at the top of Manse Brae, where the cemetery is still located (and was marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was built in 1658/9 following complaints by Borthwick residents of the lack of a nearby church, which led to decades of dispute with Hassendean. A stone dated 1650 is built into the cemetery wall. It is recorded being repaired in 1721 and thatched in 1738 and 1769, but the thatch replaced with slates in 1770. Flagstones were first laid on the church floor about 1789. The old graveyard is part of the modern one, and is the burial place of Chisholmes of Chisholme, Lockharts of Cleighorn and Potts of Todrig and Borthwickshields. This replaced the earlier cemetery at Borthwick Waas, while the church replaced Kirk Borthwick, which formerly stood opposite that cemetery. The church bell has an inscription reading ‘For the Tolbuith of Melros – 1649’ and the initials of John, Earl of Haddington. It may have been brought from Hassendean (along with the new roof) in 1690, and may also have spent some time in the river near Hornshole (according to tradition). The oldest surviving communion token is small and made of lead, bearing the inscription ‘R.K.’ and the date 1705. The history of the earlier church, the formation of the Parish of Roberton in 1690, and the suppression of the Parish of Hassendean is complicated, and mixed up with national (as well as local) politics. In the early years the glebe and manse were far from ideal; a new glebe was arranged in 1721. The Manse was repaired in 1827 and it is stated in 1834 that the glebe consisted of 16 acres, and crossed the county boundary, so that the Minister could vote in both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. An ornate piece of stonework (a scroll capital), unearthed in an adjacent field in 1963 (and now in the Museum), may come from Hassendean Kirk. Note that a separate Free Kirk congregation was set up after the Disruption of 1843, this being known as ‘the Snoot Kirk’ and used until 1927, with the congregation merging with that of the main church in 1930. Roberton church was linked with Teviothead 1966–72, then linked with St. Margaret’s and Wilton South 1972–83. It became formally united with St. George’s West in 1984, which was renamed Teviot Parish in 1996. A roll of the ministry is: John Colt, from c.1663; Thomas Shiel 1689–c.93; John Ferguson 1696–99; Robert Scott 1700–1727; Henry Erskine 1728–73; James Erskine 1774–86; James Hay 1786–1825; William Berry Shaw, assistant 1801–12; Alexander Nivison 1826–44; Charles Kinneir Greenhill 1845–86; Mercer Hall 1887–1927; Æneas E. McNess 1894–1929; Cyrus M. Mortimer 1930–54; James B. Primrose 1955–60; Samuel Weir 1960–65; Robert McConnell 1966–83; Neil R. Combe 1984–.

Roberton Moss (ro-bur'-in-mos) n. boggy area to north of Roberton village. The filter works for Alemoor were built there.

Roberton Pairish (ro-bur'-in-pa-reesh) n. parish around Roberton village and the Borthwick valley, created in 1689 from parts of the neighbouring parishes, including Hawick, Wilton and disjoint parts of Hassendean, including the area immediately around the village itself. Todshaw and neighbouring farms came from Hawick Parish, with Milsington, Girnwood and other farms coming from Hassendean, and Harden, Highchesters formerly being in Wilton. This followed about 3 decades of dispute, with Roberton Kirk being built in 1659, during confusion over the secession of Scott of Buccleuch (who owned much of Hassendean), but then material from the new Kirk being removed to repair Hassendean, following a decision in favour of Hassendean in 1666. The Revolution of 1688/9 and the restoration of Presbyterianism saw a successful petition to create Roberton as a Parish. The moving of the old church roof from Hassendean to Roberton in 1690 incited violence from the parishioners of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The Parish was about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, bounded by Ettrick, Yarrow, Ashkirk, Selkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Cavers and Eskdalemuir. The Parish long had part (about half) within Selkirkshire, but it was moved entirely into Roxburghshire in 1891. Parish registers go back to 1680, but the early ones are fairly incomplete, and the first part is really for Hassendean. An early Parish records is of £38 being stolen from the poor box in the unoccupied Manse in 1700. The first meeting to assess the Parish poor was in 1740. The records have significant gaps in the 1740s, 1750s and 1760s. Note that there is a separate parish of the same name in Lanarkshire, which sometimes causes confusion.

Roberton Place (ro-bur'-in-plis) n. private housing built in 1970 at the top of the West End, off Longbaulk Road, and named after the village of Roberton.

Robertson Schuil (ro-bur'-in-skil) n. school in Roberton village. It was noted at the General Assembly in 1724 that all parishes in the Presbytery had schools except for Roberton and Ettrick. The first record of a teacher being appointed was in 1765, and a new schoolhouse was built in 1790. In 1834 it was reported that ‘one-third of the parish is so situated that the children cannot attend’, since they are ‘at a distance of five and eight miles’. This situation was probably the reason for the establishment of small schools at Howpasley and Redfordgreen. A new schoolhouse was finished in about 1835. In 1836 it is recorded that there were 60 pupils in attendance. The present school building was erected in 1875 and long served as the local primary school, with several attempts to close it, and closure finally coming in 2010. The Borders Archive has School Board minutes for 1873–1919. The schoolmaster’s house in the 1830s contained 5 rooms, including kitchen. Robert Miller was schoolmaster in at least the period 1798–1800 and Robert Miller until 1822. Andrew Hogg was master there in the 1820s, until about the mid-1830s, and Thomas Anderson from 1833 until the 1860s.

Robert Paterson Place (ro-bur'-pi'-ur-sin-plis) n. Robert Paterson Place, housing development at Burnflat, built in 2006 and named after the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’, who was born there.

Roberts (ro-burts) n. Rev. John minister of Southdean Kirk 1951–65. His time as minister included the period when Southdean first became linked with Edgerston.

Robert’s Hill see Robert Hill

Robert’s Linn (ro-burts-lin) n. waterfalls off the Slitrig, where the Newcastleton road crosses a deep ravine. This area is famous for jasper, which was used to make the first Burgh Seal for example, and also for fossils. Further up the stream can be seen signs of the former lime-workings that gave their name to the Limekilnedge. The Catrall ends here, leading to speculation that the falls had some special significance for our early ancestors. The area is also sometimes known as ‘the Linns’.

The high bridge there was rebuilt in 1903 using girders salvaged from the Tay Bridge disaster. A story circulated that it was bombed by a Zeppelin during WWI, but this was unsubstantiated. The bridge collapsed and was rebuilt as an embankment in 1982. There was once a farmstead in the area, where Robert Elliot and family were living in 1794 – ‘Ca’in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o’ Robert’s Linn . . . ’[DH] (also written ‘Roberts Linn’; the stream may be the one marked ‘The Ryillyn B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, suggesting either an error or a different origin for the name; it is ‘Robertsline’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Robertson (ro-burt-sin) n. Alastair S., M.B.E., elder son of Nichol. He served as an apprentice designer with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., then worked with Munrospun in Galashiels, before joining Walker, Caledon, tweed manufacturers of Belfast, where he became Managing Director. He was a keen rugby player for Hawick junior teams, and also in Northern Ireland and served in the Royal Navy during WWII. He married Mairi Charlton from Ireland. Alexander (b.c.1779) cooper in Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Roberton’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was...
Robertson

Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1795/6) born at Makerstoun, he was blacksmith at Minto. He was recorded there in the electoral roll of 1837 and was still there in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jane T., Thomas, Margaret, Alexander and James. Alexander (b.1801/2) gamekeeper at Commonside in 1851 and 1861. He was living at Commonside Cottage since before 1841. In 1834 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Govenlock, innkeeper at Mossopaul. Their children included James, Robert, Alexander, John, Margaret and William. Andrew (d.bef. 1808) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Jackson, who died in 1808. Their children included: Andrew (b.1763); Barbara (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Elizabeth (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Andrew (again, b.1773) Derek (1965–) born in Hawick, grandson of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He is an ambulance paramedic, working in Hawick but living in Newcastleton. He wrote The Men Who Marched Away – Liddesdale and the Great War’ (1992) and ‘All These Fine Fellows: Hawick and District and the Great War 1914–1918’ (1999). Rev. Edward Macallan (b.1928) educated at Aberdeen and Oxford Universities, he became an Episcopalian minister. He was at Bristol and Swindon before coming to Hawick, where he was Rector at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk 1960–69. He left to take up a Scholarship at Queen’s College, Brimingham, moving to Alloa, where he worked as a teacher, before taking charge of Bathgate 1978–82, moving to Strathtay in 1982, Auchterarder in 1990 and retiring in 1993. Eric ‘Pinner’ (??–?) son of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He has been Captain of Hawick Golf Club and British one-armed golf champion (having lost an arm in an accident at Hawick Station). He is father of Margaret and Dawn. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Deanbrae in 1722 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Cavers Parish. Jessie (19th C.) from Kelso, she came to Hawick to assist in the shop of George Turnbull, the draper at 14 High Street. John (18th/19th C.) grocer who was Cornet in 1899, with his uncle James A. Henderson as his Acting Father. He was Cornet the year of the earliest film clips of the Common Riding, this being a hot and sunny weekend. He was also a member of the Teviotdale Harriers. He served as Acting Father to Francis A. Henderson in 1922. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Flight in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (1830–97) son of the shepherd at Brahnholme, he was assistant teacher in a school run on Episcopal principles, taught by Rev. Campbell in Hawick High Street around 1850. He went to South Africa as a missionary, being transferred to Zululand (once a separate country) in 1860, where he founded the first mission of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This was at Kwa Magwaza, the mission being later destroyed in the civil disturbances. He lived and worked with the Zulu people for many years, gaining the native name ‘Unzimela’. He also (anonymously) compiled and published ‘Zulu Izaga, that is proverbs, or out-of-the-way sayings of the Zulus; collected, translated, and interpreted, by a Zulu missionary’ in Durban in 1880. Around 1891 he moved to Tahlwati where he founded a mission using his wagon, and where a church was later built in his memory. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702. He married Jean

Turnbull in Cavers 1700. His children probably included: Thomas (b.1700); Ann (b.1702); Margaret (b.1704); and Alexander (b.1718). William (17th C.) servant of Robert Grierson from Clarilaw. In 1684 he was listed among local men listed as being fugitives because of attending field conventicles. It is unclear whether this is the Clarilaw near Hassendean or the one in Bowden Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Ann (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); William (b.1724); and Hugh (b.1725). Perhaps the same William married Margaret Taylor in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Binks in 1755. Perhaps the same William was a wright in Cavers in 1757. He married Jane Beattie and their children included: William (b.1755); Elizabeth (b.1757); William (again, b.1758); and John (b.1763). William (1720–97) from Dunfermline, he was brought to Hawick by local interests in 1752 to start carpet manufacturing and was entered as a Burgess in 1756. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others, renewing the partnership ten years later. The Hawick Carpet Company lasted until 1806. In 1763 he was rewarded with £40 from the Board of Trustess for manufactures for mechanical inventions (a new kind of ‘throw mills’ and a machine for teasing wool) improving carpet manufacturing. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in Hawick in 1765. In 1770 he was the first feuar, from the Langestates Estate, of the lands of Roughheugh, where Rosalee Brae now is; he is still listed as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and still recorded that way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (even although he was deceased by then). In a description of Hawick’s trade in about 1777 it is stated that his company had 14 looms weaving carpets. He purchased part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Christopher Atkinson in 1777. He may be the William who witnessed a baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780, performed by Rev. Williamson (of the East Bank Kirk). In 1789 and 1790 he paid tax in Hawick for having a female servant. He is listed as a carpet manufacturer on the 1787–90 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Mr Robertson who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1795 and probably the manufacturer William who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was a trustee of the East Bank Meeting House, and at one point complained about the meagre allowance allowed for boarding visiting preachers. He appears to have had a son, also William, with whom he is probably sometimes confounded. He may be the weaver William (some of the birth entries being written ‘Robson’) married to Jane (or ‘Jean’) French, whose children included Isobel (b.1756), William (b.1760), John (b.1761) and Ann (b.1763); Jean French died in Hawick in 1782. William (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. William (18th C.) quarter-master of the Scots Greys, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. William (18th/19th C.) son of William, the instigator of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He may be the William, son of William and Jean French born in Hawick in 1760. It is possible that he was the W. Robertson, carpet manufacturer’ recorded as Cornet in 1778. He is ‘Mr William Robertson, jun. Hawick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. In 1789 he married Janet, daughter of William Griever, farmer at Southfield. Their children included: Mary (b.1790); Jane (b.1794); and William (b.1795). He may also have been the William whose son John died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the deceased William ‘Robison’, ‘Carpetweaver’, whose son William’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1806. Perhaps a relative was the William in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1837 he was listed as leaving from the Grapes on alternate Tuesdays, bound for Glasgow, and on alternate Thursdays for Langholm, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. Rev. William (20th C.) minister of Kirkton from 1931 until about 1940. William G. (??–??) ‘Bill’ or ‘Wullie’, High school teacher and columnist for the Hawick News, writing the ‘G.R.’ column as well as covering rugby. He was also heavily involved with the Common Riding, being Secretary of the Committee in the 1950s. William S. ‘Willie’ (1904/05–91) owner of W.S. Robertson (Outfitters) Ltd. at 13–15 High Street from the 1930s until his retiral in 1973. He was an enthusiastic viola player with the local opera and retired to Dunbar. William ‘Wullie’, the Voo’ (1912–2000) well known Westender, brother of Jackie. The origin of his nickname is unknown, and it was also later applied to his brother. As a boy he witnessed the terrible charabanc disaster at the Vertish in 1919. He was a dispatch rider for the R.A.F. during WWII and later worked with Janet (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot in 1623 along with Archie Henderson when they had 2 sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1694); James (b.1696); and Beatrice (b.1699). In 1694 the witnesses were James Grieve and Andrew Scott. Probably the same John witnessed a baptism for Robert Paterson in 1691. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant at Byrehall in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant at Braidlie in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) married Bess Nichol in Roberton in 1727. Their children included: Janet (b.1729), baptised in Roberton; and James (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk. Matthew (17th C.) resident of Liddesdale who was mentioned in about 1645. According to the Buccleuch records ‘One Matthew Robison and his brother had just returned from an excursion into the Debateable Land after some cattle of their own, and had a sleuth-hound with them’. The hound was sent off to search out some thieves who had been challenged ‘at Catheugh and Cringleford, until they came to Carshop, from whence they stole three-score sheep’. Ralph (18th/19th C.) overseer for George Douglas of Cavers. He was ‘Mr Ralph Robison in Cavers’ when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1794. George (b.1791) was also his son. In 1806 he was residing at Berwick when he was found guilty of theft, fraud and breach of trust. Robert (17th/18th

Rob Lurgie

C.) wright in Hawick. In 1722 he is recorded refusing to pay a penalty and so being summoned to appear before the Session. It is possible he was the Robert ‘servant to John Pringle wright in Hawick’, who married Isobel Rae from Branxholmstown in 1721. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Robison’ in 1631 on a list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Yethouse in Castleton Parish. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he was rebuked before the congregation for ‘Sabbath-breaking’ and in 1697 he was chastised for ‘travelling with a load on the Lord’s day’ (also spelled ‘Robisone’; it was in 1697 he was chastised for ‘travelling with a load on the Lord’s day’ (also spelled ‘Robisone’; it was probably once interchangeable with Robson).

Rob o the Bent (rob-ö-thu-ben’) n. nickname for one of the Hawick men called Robert Scott.

Rob’s Cleuch (robz-klooch) n. small stream in the Rule valley, which rises on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill. On the south side is evidence of a former settlement, largely obliterated by cultivation, but still observable as a roughly circular hollow. Near the head of the cleuch are the remains of a farmstead, which Walter Deans suggested may be the original site of Bonchester farm (also written ‘Rob’s Cleugh’).

Robsland (robz-lind) n. alternative name for Brighoose.

Robson (rob-sin) n. Adam (1720–1805) son of Adam and Helen Hume, who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He worked for a while as a shepherd for his brother-in-law John Elliot (2 of his sisters had married John Elliots!). He married Mary, probably daughter of Thomas Pott. They had 11 children, with 6 emigrating with them to Canada in 1817, and settling in Lanark County, Ontario. Their sons John and James had already travelled to Canada a year or so earlier. Their children included Adam (b.1790), Mary (b.1791), Isabella (b.1793), Thomas (b.1795), John (b.1797), Mary (again, b.1799), Janet (b.1801), Margaret (b.1804), Peter (b.1806), Jean (b.1808) and Robert (b.1813). He died in Drummond, Quebec. Adam (b.1786/7) born in Castleton Parish, he was a carter. He was listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was also listed as a carter in Newcastleton in 1861, when he was living at about 17 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Jessie and their children included John, Jean, Robert, Alexander, James and Bessy. He may be the Adam of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (1861–aft. 1901) youngest son of William and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Galashiels. His wife was Phyllis and they had a daughter Margaret Douglas. Adam (19th/20th C.) joiner of the firm A. & J. Robson. His brother was John, partner in the firm, and their sister Mary married Robert Edgar (cousin of the Hawick Express editor). He married Janet Laidlaw Wilson, who died in 1940, aged 87. Adam (1928/9–2007) born and educated in Hawick, and then at Edinburgh College of Art, where he played rugby. He then switched to the Linden, before becoming a famous wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. from 1952 to 1961. He also gained 22 Scottish caps and went on to be President of the Scottish Rugby Union. He was also President of the Scottish Schools Rugby Union. He was Art Master at Dollar Academy for 32 years, also widely exhibiting his paintings, with one prominent in the Health Centre, and his tribute to Tom Scott (1997) on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was Callants’ Club President in 2002. He married Netta Renwick and their children were Shona and Judith. He wrote 3 books, one being a history of the Edinburgh Borderers rugby club. Robson Court is named after him. Alexander (18th C.) labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Mary (b.1788); Jean (b.1790); and James (b.1793). Alexander ‘Alec’ (b.1846) 2nd son of blacksmith Thomas.
He was a stone mason, known as a great athlete and authority on coins. In 1873 in Wilton he married Helen Brodie (b.1852) and their children included Mary Gowenlock Newton (b.1874). He died in Australia. Allan Watt (d.1881) son of William S., he was born and brought up in Hawick. His studies at the Art College in Edinburgh were interrupted by War Service, but he continued after the War to train in art and teaching. From 1949 he was Head of the Art Department at Perth High School. He developed a strong interest in nature and botany in particular. He joined the Perthshire Society of Natural Science in 1954 and for many years was Chairman of the Botanical Section. He was also an area recorder for the Botanical Society of the British Isles and helped preserve many valuable plants in and around Perthshire. He illustrated his father’s books: ‘The Story of Hawick’, with about 17 pen and ink sketches; and ‘Hawick Place Names’, with ‘Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions’, showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1357 Charter. His original ‘scraperboard’ images of ‘Auld Hawick’ are in the Museum collection. He married Jessie and had a son Alan. Andrew (17th C.) listed along with James Small in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). Andrew (19th C.) coal merchant in Hawick in the late 1800s. Andrew (c.1889–1949) born in Hawick, he was an engineering apprentice with his father, who was a foreman with James Melrose & Sons. He then worked for a steel manufacturing firm in Middleborough before studying engineering at Edinburgh University. He spent 12 years as Principal of West Hartlepool Technical College and in 1933 became Principal of Handsworth Technical College in Birmingham. He was an active member of the Institution of Production Engineers. He returned regularly for Hawick Common Riding and spent many holidays in Rulewater. He was married twice and had a daughter. Charles of Samieston (1770–1830) son of James, who was tenant of Belford and Chatto. He was one of the founding members of the Jedforest Club. He was a Captain in the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire militia. He also served as Collector of Supply for the county and was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He married Martha, eldest daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. A small portrait was painted of him around 1800. Rev. Charles (b.1861) from Hawick, son of James and Jessie Inglis. His family attended the East Bank Kirk. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1885 and was ordained as minister of Clune Park Port-Glasgow in 1889. In 1893 he moved to Pollok Street Church in Glasgow and in 1899 to Inverness Antiburgher church. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this farm is. He is recorded along with William, who was presumably his son or brother. James was also there, as well as David Hall. Euan (1954– ) born in Corbridge, Northumberland, he has been M.S.P. for Roxburgh & Berwickshire from 1999, and has also been Scottish Liberal Democrat Chief Whip. Francis (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Flatt and ‘Schortbus’ in southern Liddesdale in 1632. Gavin (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Gavin born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1781 to Robert and Elizabeth Grieve. George (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with John, plus Walter Veitch, David Do[wn?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. George (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the ‘Cadger’ listed on Main Street in the 1841 census. George (b.c.1808) stockmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and described as ‘Frame Work Knitter – Woollen & Chelsea Pensioner’. He married Agnes Donaldson, who had previously been married to the oldest son of James ‘Pawkie’ Paiterson. George (b.1831/2) quarry worker in Denholm. He lived in an old house by the school gates. When that was demolished he lived in the White Swan. His wife Matilda came from Cupar in Fife and they had a son, James. George ‘the Prince’ (19th C.) resident of the Canongate in Denholm. He worked on the railway. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in Beirhoip’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He presumably lived at Beirhope near Hownam. Isabella ‘Bella’ (19th/20th C.) resident of a house on the Kirkwynd, near where the Drums and Fifes start on the Thursday night of the Common Riding. She would regularly come out to offer a tray of rum and milks to the band. Her son Dod was a founder member of the 1514 Club. James (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1595/6 his son William was granted lands in the village. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Cuthbert and William, and so probably closely related. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Jane (b.1670); and of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Cook and their children included: John (b.1710), 2nd son; and Mary (b.1812). James (18th/19th C.) recorded at ‘Newroad’ in 1826 when the death of his wife is recorded in Hawick. James (b.1810) originally from Yarrow, son of Robert. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Brauxholme and he was shepherd at Branxholme ‘Gate’ (probably the Lodge) in 1851. He married Isabella Oliver in Anerum, and their children included: Robert (b.1830); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1832); Joan (b.1835); Williamina (b.1838), who probably died young; and Jeany. James (19th C.) second official singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He could be the same James who is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a cart and plough wright on Buc cleuch Street, or the James living on Green Wynd on the 1841 census, or even the blacksmith, father of the composer William Inglis. James (b.1816) blacksmith in Wilton, he was son of Hawick blacksmith Thomas and Elizabeth Bookless. He was on Wilton Place in 1851 and Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jessie Inglis in 1841 and their children included: Margaret; Thomas; Eliza; William Inglis (b.1853), who became a professor of music; James Alexander (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); and Charles (b.1861), who became a minister. James (19th C.) grocer in Cavers or Minto Parish, recorded in 1852. James (b.1852/3) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was known as an authority on local antiquities, particularly arrow-heads. He was also noted as a prize-winner at flower shows. He married Janet Oliver, from Denholm, and she died in 1932, aged 80. Their eldest daughter was Mary. They are buried in Denholm. James (b.1855) youngest son of William ‘Billy Buttons’ and related to the Denholm blacksmiths. He had brothers John (Hawick Town Councillor) and William and a sister Beat rix. Like his father and brothers, he started off as a stocking-maker. He later became a teacher and private tutor. He was an expert on local history and wrote extensively about the Scottish Borders, producing several books including ‘Bor der Sketches’ (1891), ‘Churches and churchyards of Teviotdale’ (1893) and ‘Border Battles and Battlefields’ (1897). He also wrote ‘Teviotside legends & stories’ (1895) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth. He died in Hawick. James Scott (1921–2010) born in Hawick, son of William Scott. He attended Hawick High School and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He won a Rockefeller Foundation Studentship to continue his studies in New York, and survived his ship being torpedoed on the way. Back in Edinburgh he graduated M.D. in 1945, then served as Captain in the R.A.M.C., worked in Edinburgh and then went to Harvard University, where he carried out renal research. He married Mary MacDonald, who was a pathologist. In Britain he set up the Acute Renal Failure Service and was significantly involved in the first kidney transplants. He also advised on dialysis treatment protocols for avoiding infection. After brief appointments at Harvard and in Australia, he became Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1977, as well as President of the Renal Association. At Edinburgh he also revised the undergraduate medical curriculum and was editor-in-chief for an influential medical text book. He was a member of Edinburgh’s New Club. John (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with George, plus Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. John ‘Jock the Laird’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose. His nickname is recorded as ‘Jok the Larde’. William is also mentioned, and surely a relative. John ‘the Pudge’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) cook to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and was elected Cornet in 1711. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for glover John Scott. He could be the John, son of Robert and Helen, born in Hawick in 1689 or the John, son of William and Helen Muir born in 1685. He is probably the John who married Isobel Huntly and whose daughter Anne was baptised in Hawick in 1718. John (1773–1834) 2nd son of James of Samieston. He was tenant farmer at Belford. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club and served with the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He married Esther, younger daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. Their elder son was Dr. James Robson-Scott of Ashtrees and their younger son was Thomas Robson-Scott of Newton. He died at Belford. John (b.1780s) son of a blacksmith in Denholm, probably Thomas. His brother Thomas was also a blacksmith there. He was an apprentice stocking-maker in Denholm, but was apparently noticed on the Green by Lord Minto, who suggested he joined the Royal Navy. He rose through the ranks, but was demoted when he allowed a deserter to escape. He spent some time at Portsmouth, where he got married to Mary Buchanan and had a son, William. He then spent 6 years serving in India, took part in the capture of Algiers in 1812 and was on the ship that took Napoleon to St. Helens. He returned to Denholm with his wife and son, ‘Billy Buttons’. John (b.1803/4) born in St. Boswells, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1837. He was listed as a joiner in 1841 and innkeeper in 1851. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was innkeeper at the Cross Keys. His wife was Jessie, and their children included William and Helen. In 1861 his wife was running the inn, and so he was presumably deceased (or travelling). John (1826–99) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. His father and brother Thomas were blacksmiths at Teviothead and elsewhere. He was blacksmith at several places, but lastly (and for the longest period) in Denholm. He was originally based on Main Street, but in 1864 moved to the Quarry Road, where he built a new smiddy, house and stable. At the age of 17 he married Mary Newton, from Gordon in Berwickshire, and she died in 1883, aged 60. He had many sons with her (8 of whom survived), including: George, who died young; Thomas (b.1844/5), blacksmith at 46 High Street; Alexander (b.1846, ‘Alec’), who died in Australia; John (b.1848/9), also a blacksmith, died in Penicuik; Robert (b.1851), mason in Hawick; Robert Newton, monumental sculptor; James (b.1853/4); William Hardie (1856–1927), who died in Canada; George (b.1858); and Mark Newton (b.1861), who became a minister. The average height of his sons was 6 ft 1½ in. He also remarried and had more children. John (b.1845/6) born at Wilton Dean, he was eldest son of William, and grandson of John, who was in the Navy. His brothers were William, Precentor at Bedrule, and James, local historian. He worked as a stocking-maker and stone hewer. He was Precentor in the Denholm Free Kirk for 13 years. He moved to Hawick, where he was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward and was heavily involved in religious and temperance movements in the town. He was associated with West Port Church, Hawick Home Mission, the Sabbath School Union, the Poorhouse Committee and the Parish Council. He married Janet Oliver from Cavers. John (b.c.1850) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was also a blacksmith and known as an athlete. He died in the prime of life in Penicuik. Mark Newton (1861–1939) youngest son of John, who was blacksmith at Denholm, and Mary Newton. He was born and attended school in Denholm, then moved to Hawick at 16. He was a teacher there for over 8 years. He wrote poetry and also produced an article on ‘Lower Rulewater and its Associations’ for the Archeological Society. From 1886 he resolved to do ‘home’ missionary work and was stationed at Fisherrow, Musselburgh. Afterwards he was a Presbyterian Minister in County Durham and Congregational Minister at Sanquhar and Cumnock. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick in the early 1900s. As well as publishing many poems in the local press, he also contributed some articles on Border life and scenes. He privately published ‘Some Denholm Families’. His first wife and child died about 2 years after he was married. Like his brothers, he was tall, being about 6 feet 3 inches. Mary nee Waugh (b.1864) daughter of Andrew Waugh and Agnes Purdom. She was assistant nurse at Weens for several years. She married Will Robson and their children included John, Agnes Purdom and Janet Oliver. Dr. Michael J.H. (1933–2017) Hawick Museum curator and contributor to the Archeological Society Transactions. He was also a founding member of the Borders Family History Society. He retired to the Isle of Lewis. He wrote several short books, including: ‘Tibbie Shiel’ (1986); ‘Ride with the moonlight: the Mosstroopers of the Border’ (1987); ‘Sheep of the Borders’ (1988); ‘No road this way after dark: George Harkness’s reminiscences of Liddesdale’ (1989); ‘Break with the past: changed days on two Border sheep farms (Langburnshiels and Riccarton) with The record book of the Riccarton Mill Club’ (1991), ‘Surnames and clansmen: Border family history in earlier days’ (1998); ‘Dykes, ditches and disputers: a history of boundary and field enclosures in the Borders’ (2004); and others relating to the Highland and Islands. He was involved in the founding of the Turnbull Clan Association, was the clan newsletter’s first editor and was working on a history of the Turnbulls when he died. Miss S. singer at Colour Bussings and other functions in the early 20th century. Mungo (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. Patrick (15th C.) witnessed in 1436 to the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. He was also on the return for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick in 1437. Peter (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shepherd at Boghall and then Hermitage Bridgend. He was also an elder at Castleton Kirk. He was listed as male head of his family at Boghall in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes, from Heiton. Their children included Peter, John, James, Agnes and Helen. Robert (16th C.) called ‘Fwl Mowth’ in a bond of 1562, where William Oliver in Lustruther and Gavin Oliver in West Houses have to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Robert (17th/18th C.) carter and merchant in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was a Burgess of Hawick. Probably the same Robert was a merchant in 1699 when he witnessed a baptism for smith James Scott. He witnessed a baptism for fellow carrier James Wilson in 1701 (where he is recorded both as a carter and as a merchant). He is probably the merchant Robert who witnessed baptisms for smith James Scott in 1704, for piper William Turnbull in 1706, for workman Robert Gledstains in 1708, for carrier James Wilson in 1712 and for carrier William Rae in 1713. John Scott was his servant in 1711 (when he witnessed a baptism for him) and Thomas Huntly (who gave evidence relating to the use of the Common in 1767) was his servant in 1715. He is probably the Robert listed as a merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for Andrew Waugh, tenant in Hawick, and in 1720 for carrier James Henderson and for smith Thomas Huntly. He and another Robert (presumably his son) were the 2 merchants who witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous in 1720. He is probably the Robert, married to Helen Robson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Marion or Margaret (b.1686); Walter (b.1687); John (b.1689); Isobel (b.1691); and Helen (b.1693). The witnesses in 1689 were Robert Douglas and Robert Wilson. Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, probably son of Robert. In 1720 the pair of Roberts witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert.

Chisholme. Robert Newton (b.1851) born in Eccles, he was 4th son of Denholm blacksmith John. He trained as a stone-hewer at Denholm Hill Quarry and became a monumental sculptor in Hawick. He was an active member of Allars Kirk and the Archaeological Society, being particularly involved in cleaning up and preserving the remains of Southdean Kirk. He carved the WWI alabaster and bronze WWI memorial tablet for Allars Kirk. He also worked on the Johnnie Armstrong memorial at Teviothead. He married Janet Oliver, from Appletreehall. In later life he had a long, flowing beard (it is said, to protect him from stone dust), making him look patriarchal. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with John Oliver in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. Thomas (16th C.) leased ‘ane quarter and half quarter of Todrik’ (i.e. Todrig) from Thomas Scott in 1538. described as ‘in Langnewton’ in a 1612 document Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Langnewton’ in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); Dand (b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were William Turnbull (probably related to his wife) and John Noble. In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for William Collin in Horsleyhill, in 1683 others for William Turnbull and for Adam Craig and in 1687 for Walter Runciman. He also witnessed a baptism in 1686 for John Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and Margaret Dodds. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as occasional tenant in Bewlie in 1716 when he leased lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. Thomas ‘Tam o the Yett’ (18th C.) former resident of Liddesdale, said to be an ancestor of the blacksmiths of Denholm. A story is told of how a Liddesdale minister examining children asked who the strongest man was, and was given his name as the reply. He may have been a descendant of ‘Thomas ‘Robison’, farmer at Yethouse. Thomas (d.1805) son of Thomas, he was probably farmer at Calaburn. He witnessed a baptism for Richard Young (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1774. He married Isobel Young in Hawick Parish in 1764. Their children included: Margaret (b.1765); Isobel (b.1767); James (b.1770); William (b.1771); William (again, b.1772); Alexander (b.1776). He died at Calaburn, with his wife following a few days later. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet Anderson in Ewes Parish in 1783. Their children, baptised in Langholm, included: Christian (b.1788), Mary (b.1790), James (b.1792), Thomas (b.1799) and William (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His shop was in a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning. He was probably father of the later blacksmith of the same name, as well as John, who was in the Navy. Thomas (b.c.1790) master blacksmith at Denholm, probably the same man named on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His brother John was in the Navy. In 1815, he married Isabella (‘Bell’) Hardie, from Dargues in Redewater. They had 6 daughters and 4 sons: Thomas (b.1816), blacksmith at Teviothead and in Hawick; James, possibly blacksmith in Middlesburgh; Ann (b.1818); William (b.1824), also a blacksmith in Denholm; John (b.1826), blacksmith in several places, but longest at Denholm; Mary; Isabella, who married William Easton from Yetholm; Betty; Catherine; and Helen, the youngest. He may be the smith of that name who was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He could be the same Thomas who donated a stone ball, found in Denholm, to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1777/8–1844) Hawick blacksmith, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1837 he was on the High Street and is recorded at about 9 Brougham Place on the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Bookless, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included: Helen (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); Elizabeth (1814–28), who probably died young; Isabel; James (b.1816); and William. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He was probably related to the other Robson blacksmiths. He may be the ‘Tam Robson’ who supervised the roasting of an ox at the Tower Knowe for the celebration of the coming of age of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. Thomas (18th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the ‘Woollen Slubber’ living on the Howegate in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Thomas and Walter. Thomas ‘Tam’ (19th C.) carrier of the mail between Langholm and Hawick. He was a keen fisherman (described in John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’), and it was said that if the trout were biting then the letters to Hawick would be late! Thomas (b.c.1815) from outside Roxburghshire, he was an excise officer living on the Howegate in 1841. The other residents were probably wife Jane, mother Barbara, sister Jane and daughter
Robson

Isabella. Thomas (1816–81) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. He was blacksmith at Teviothead and then at 54 High Street. He is listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater’s 1852 directory. He later moved to 5 Teviot Road and became a retailer. He married Catherine Waugh, from Southdean Parish, who died in 1906, aged 88. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.c.1843), who married William Wilson, Hawick rag and waste merchant; Thomas (b.1839), who died young; Robert (b.1840), who died aged 15; another Thomas (who also died young, like his following 4 siblings); William; Catherine; Robert; John; and Isabella (b.1850, died aged 26). Thomas (1819–94) born at Cappuck, he later farmed at Menslaws. He was recorded at Menslaws in a directory of 1868. He married Eliza Wilson Cockburn (who died in 1906) and their children were Agnes Cockburn (who died young), Catherine Home (who died in 1958), Janetta (who died in 1969) and Thomas Cockburn (who died in 1931). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (b.1817/8) carrier, son of carter Richard. He lived in Jedburgh and is recorded in 1852 operating a weekly service to Hawick, leaving from the Horse Market. In the 1860s he was operating a twice weekly service between Hawick and Jedburgh. Thomas (c.1845–c.1925) eldest son of John, blacksmith at Denholm. He carried on a blacksmith’s business at 46 High Street. Later he worked at Weensland Mills. He had some musical talent and was Precentor at East bank Kirk. He was also a noted angler and authority on local natural history. He died in Hawick at more than 80 years old. Thomas Cockburn (1869–1931) born at Menslaws, son of Thomas and Eliza Cockburn. He was Manager of the National Bank of Scotland in London and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (19th/20th C.) of Weensland, responsible for stuffing a large fraction of the Museum’s bird collection. He could be the same as the Thomas (d.c.1925) who worked at Weensland Mills. Walter (15th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1493 when he was accused at a Jedburgh court of conspiring with Archibald Armstrong (who was already ‘at the horn’) in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. Walter Ker served as surety for him. It is unclear if this is Harden on Borthwick Water or another one. Walter (17th C.) described as a merchant in a Magistrates Court case of 1642 when Andrew Deans was ordered to pay debts and expenses to him. Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1656 for John Porteous. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Cleughhead in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. Walter ‘Wattie’ (20th C.) fiddle player from Denholm. He often played along with Tom Hughes in the 1970s. William (16th C.) probably in Hawick in 1561 when he made an agreement with David Todrig over lands in Selkirk. He is recorded as ‘William Robesone in Hauny’. William (16th C.) tenant in Langnewton. In 1581 there was a marriage contract for his first-born son William and Elizabeth. He gave to the couple ‘half a cotland with onsets, tofts and crofts’ in Langnewton, with the liferent reserved for him and his wife Katherine King. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose; ‘Jock the Laird’ is also mentioned, and probably a relative. In 1590 he was listed among tenants in Langnewton who complained about attacks by the Kers of Newhall; James was also listed and presumably related. In about 1590 he may be the ‘William Mader of Langtoun’ listed among landed men of the Borders. William (16th C.) eldest son of William in Langnewton. In 1581 he was contracted to be married to Elizabeth Brydon, daughter of the deceased John John Brydon in Rutherford and Margaret Ker. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of James there’. William (16th C.) charged with the murder of William Hall ‘of Wollie’ (probably Wolfelee). He was recorded being ‘in Rochthewchmylne’ (probably Roughheugh Mill) and James Langlands of that ilk acted as surety for him, and so he was probably a local man. Langlands had to pay 20 merks to Hall’s only daughter when Robson failed to appear. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gowanbrae in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) from Falstone in North Tyne, he lived at Waterside in Southdean Parish. He married Barbara Baptie from Bucham. Their Children (baptised in Byrness) included: Isabel (b.1809); and Janet (b.1811). William Hutchison ‘Billy Buttons’ (b.1811/2) son of John of the Navy and grandson of the Denholm blacksmith. He was born in England, while his father was stationed there. His nickname came from the coat, festooned with military buttons, which his mother made for him when he was a child. He lived up the Doctor’s Pend in Denholm and later had the house called Rosebank built. In part of that house he ran a small stocking-maker’s with his 3 sons. He later moved to Westgate Hall and finally to Hawick. He would carry his wares throughout the Borders and into England, where he was known as ‘Stocking Willie’. In Wilton in 1845 he married Janet Cairns, from Hawick Muir. Their children were: John (b.c.1846), who was a stocking-maker and hewer and married Janet Oliver; William (b.c.1850), also a stocking-maker; Beatrix (b.c.1853), who married Bailie Kennedy; and James (b.1855), stocking-maker, teacher and local historian. William (b.1813/4) farm labourer in the Teviothead area. In 1841 he was living at Commonside Lynn, moved to Hayknowe and by 1861 was farm steward at Broadhaugh. He firstly married Ann, and secondly Margaret Wylie. His children included John, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary, William, James and Andrew (1859–1930), who emigrated to Illinois. William (1814–81) born at Falstone in Northumberland, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Woolhope. He married Margaret (1819–97), daughter of Newcastle upon John Douglas. Their children were: William (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); John (b.1848), Janet (b.1850) and John (b.1852), who all died young; Robert (1853–1930); James (1856–89), law clerk in Edinburgh; Hector (1857–1901), ironmonger in Wigtown and Stirling; Walter (1859–1932), bank clerk in Lanarkshire; and Adam (b.1861), solicitor in Galashiels. William (b.1824) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie, he was also blacksmith in Denholm, on Main Street. He married Agnes Miller (sister of John Miller) in Cavers Parish in 1854. Their children included: Robert (b.1849); Thomas (b.1852); James (b.1854); William (b.1856); John Hardie (b.1859); George (b.1862); Isabella (b.1866); and Agnes (b.1868). William Cairns ‘Billy’ (b.1849/50) 2nd son of William, ‘Billy Buttons’, and grandson of sailor John. He was born in Kirkton Parish. He had brothers John, who was a Councillor in Hawick, and James, who wrote local history books. He worked as a stocking-maker. He was Precentor at the Old Chapel in Denholm and at Bedrule Kirk. In 1872 he married Helen, daughter of William MacNeil, teacher at Bedrule. His son John was born in Eccles in 1882, and he had a grandson, also Billy, who was a teacher in Cumnock. He lived to about 80, settling in Leith and becoming a noted antiquary. William Inglis (1853–1891) son of blacksmith James. He composed music for ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ and ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. Born in Hawick he apprenticed as a blacksmith, and later worked as a frame-smith, but his career eventually turned to music. By 1881 he was advertising himself as an instructor for the ‘Tonic Sol-fa College’ at 1 Laing Terrace. He also led St. Mary’s choir. In 1882 he won a Curwen Scholarship of the Tonic Sol-fa College in London. There he became a member of the London Musical Composition Club, graduated from the Tonic Sol-fa College and was appointed by the U.P. Church as a music teacher. In 1883 he became leader of psalmody at Queen Anne Street U.P. Church in Dunfermline, and later taught in Glasgow and Govan. For his last 7 years he was choirmaster at Free St. George’s Church in Glasgow. He was appointed as Professor of School of Music for Scotland at the Glasgow Athenæum (later the Royal Scottish Academy of Music). He adopted his mother’s maiden name as a middle name, presumably to distinguish himself from other Williams. He married Nancy Scott and their son, William Scott wrote 2 books on Hawick in the mid-20th century. He died in Cambuslang and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. William Hardie (1856–1927) younger son of Denholm blacksmith John. He emigrated to Canada in 1881. He was known as an expert on Canadian fossils, with his collection given to the Ottawa Museum. He died in British Columbia. William (19th C.) Hawick cyclist, who lived at Havelock Street. He can be seen in a photograph of 1899 with his trophies. He may be the same as the engineer and sawmill owner. William (19th C.) engineer of Hawick, and member of Allars Kirk. He may be the William whose sawmill is listed on Havelock Street in a 1900 directory. William B. (b.c.1900) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. He was just 15 when he enlisted. William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of William Inglis and Nancy Scott. He worked as an advertising manager. He wrote ‘Hawick Place Names’ (1947) and ‘The Story of Hawick’ (1937, revised 1945 and 1947). He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He married Elizabeth Hannah Watt and their son James Scott was Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University (formerly spelled ‘Robesonne’, ‘Robesonn’, ‘Robsonne’, ‘Robsonne’ etc.; see also Robison and Robertson, which were formerly not distinguished). Robson Court (rob-sin-kör) n. part of the Meadows, refurbished in 1986 and named after rugby player Adam Robson.
Robson’s

Robson’s (rob-sinz) n. former sawmill on Weensland Road. Its traction engine can be seen in a photograph of 1913. This is probably the same company whose sawmill was on Havelock Street in 1900.

Robson-Scott (rob-sin-skő’) n. Dr. James of Ashtrees (1814–83) eldest son of John Robson (son of James of Samieston) and Esther Scott (daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel). Educated in medicine, he joined the East India Company and went to Madras about 1836, later being appointed surgeon with the 4th Madras Infantry, and retired in 1858. On his return to Britain he took the additional surname of Scott, having inherited the lands of Ashtrees from his uncle John Scott of Riccalton. He lived at Belford, Morbattle, where he had been born. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He joined the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club, becoming President. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He married Marianne, daughter of James Grant of Correeemony, Inverness-shire. His children were: Maj. James S., who succeeded to Ashtrees; and 2 daughters, one of whom married John Corse Scott of Synton. He died following an illness contracted while visiting his brother at Newton, and is buried in Hownam kirkyard. John Alexander of Newton and Menslaws (1858–1940) eldest son of Thomas. He was educated at Fettes College and Edinburgh University. He travelled extensively, and had a collection of stuffed birds, which he shot himself. He also bred horses, including ‘Gold’, who won the Ascot Gold Cup in 1890. In 1887 he married Margaret Suter, 2nd daughter of William Lang, and she died in 1940. Their children included: Theresa Dorothy (1888–1967); and Marjorie (1891–1967); and Thomas Selby (1894–1914), who was killed in WWI. His children are recorded as followers of the Jedforest Hunt. His sister-in-law Florence Lang married his brother Thomas of Lethem. Marjorie (1891–1967) daughter of John. On the death of her father she took over running the farm of Newton (where she lived with her sister Dorothy) and also the family stud. When she died Newton was inherited by her cousin John Lang. She is buried in Bedrule Kirkyard. Thomas of Newton, Bedrule (1815–93) 2nd son of John Robson and Esther Scott and brother of Dr. James. He inherited Newton from his uncle Thomas Scott, taking the additional Scott surname. He leased the farm at Lethem (which had long been in the Scott family), as well as several other sheep farms, and was an authority on sheep-farming. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He found a hammer of felsite on his farm in the mid-19th century. In 1861 he was farming 5600 acres at Lethem and employing 28 people. He was recorded at both Lethem and Newton in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of the lands of Newton on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1857 he married Mary Anne Leslie, daughter of Rev. T. Wight, and she died in 1897. Their children were: John Alexander of Newton; Esther Anne; Thomas William of Lethem; Sarah; Charles George; and Lilias. The family have an enclosure in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas William ‘Tom’ (b.1866) younger son of Thomas of Newton. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hunt 1894–97 and Master of Hunt 1903–32. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. He lived at Lethem and also at Lanton Tower, which he purchased. He farmed at Lethem, Southdean and Peel. In 1892 he married Florence Jane, daughter of William Lang, who was a cousin of Andrew Lang’s; his sister-in-law Margaret married his brother John of Newton. He secondly married Violet Cunningham. His children included John (killed following illness in WWI), Tom, Esther and William Douglas. His children Esther, John and Tom were all followers of the Jedforest Hunt when young. There is a signed portrait of him in the Horse & Hounds Inn at Bonchester. Thomas Selby (1894–1914) son of John, he attended Rugby School and was killed in WWI. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots and was recorded missing at Wytschaete, Flanders. There is a memorial plaque to him inside Bedrule Kirk.

William Douglas (1901–81) youngest son of Tom, born in Southdean Parish, he became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London 1968–73. He wrote several works on Goethe and translated Sigmund Freud into English, his wife Elaine helping him in some of this work.

Robsteed (rob-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Robsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirländis, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.
Rob the Clocker

Rob the Clocker (rob-thu-klo-kur) n. nickname of Robert Wilson of the mid-1800s.

Rob the Heckler (rob-thu-hek-lur) n. resident of Denholm in the 19th century. A story is recounted (in the Border Counties’ Magazine) of his youthful love for his native village. His father sent him to start service somewhere near Lilliesleaf, and when he got to Hassendean he looked back and said ‘O ma bonny Denholm! aw’ll never see ye mair!’ His father left him at his new place of employment, but was suprised to find him already back in Denholm when he returned home. His nickname presumably comes from the former manufacturing of lint.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lärd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who farmed at Binks.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lärd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, a man of gypsy descent who was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be ‘keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh’ about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lärd) n. nickname used locally in the 19th century. This may be the same man as Robert Scott, farmer at Binks – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI] (note that one version of the poem has ‘Jock the Laird’).

Rob the Naig (rob-thu-näg) n. nickname of Robert Tinlin.

Rob wi the Dog (rob-wi-thu-dög) n. nickname of Robert Oliver.

Rob Young (rob-yung) n. blacksmith Robert Young, mentioned in the song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens: Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI].

Rochead (roch-heed) n. John Thomas (1814–78) Edinburgh-born architect, who trained with David Bryce before established his own practice in Glasgow. Here he designed many of the grandest buildings of the latter part of the 19th century, e.g. St. John’s Free Church. In Hawick he was responsible for designing the Corn Exchange, St. Andrew’s Free Church and several mansions, including Silverbuthall House, Hillhead House, Langlands Park, Heronhill, Mansfield and Thornwood. He was also responsible for the design for the Wallace Monument in Stirling.

Rockvale (rok-väl) n. name for group of houses on Liddesdale Road (previously Lynnwood Road), being Nos. 1–6. The first house (No. 4) was built sometime before 1857 and took the name in the 1880s, the others being built in 1926. They were originally reached from the main road via a foot bridge over the mill lade. They were demolished in the 1980s (the origin is presumably from the rocky protuberance, now a disused quarry, overlooking the valley).

roddin (ro-din) n., poet. a track, path – ‘...gae they wayes furth bie the fit-roddins o’ the flok’ [HSR].

Rodds (rodz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Roddis’. At that time the tenants were John and James Elliot and the lands were valued at one merk. It is unclear where this is, but it was listed between Ramsiegill and Roughley, so it is possibly the same place as ‘Reddodden’.

Rodes (rödz) n. former farm near Southdean, although the precise location and name are uncertain. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and John Storie in 1694 (it was ‘Roods’ and ‘rods’ in 1694).

Rodger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in Clarilaw. It is possible he is the Andrew, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Roberton (but probably Hassendean), included Isobel (b.1683) and Margaret (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Henderson and John Armstrong. He is probably the Andrew who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 and witnessed another for John Turnbull in 1688. Andrew (18th C.) farmer on the Cavers estate who, before about 1737, made early winnowing machines or corn famners, inspired by descriptions of a Dutch model (perhaps communicated to him by Douglas of Cavers). These may have been the first mechanical means of separating grain from the chaff in the whole of Britain. Another version tells how in 1733 he found a machine discarded in Leith by James Meikle (brought back from Holland) and made one of his own in 1737, supplying them for £3 each by 1740, having given up his farm. He thereafter sold them in the area, although there were religious objections that they were supplanting the Lord’s creations. In 1723 he obtained a property in the Sandbed from his uncle James Rodger, which had previously belonged to Langlands. On either this property or elsewhere at the Sandbed he established a shop. His descendants traded in fanning machines there for about the next 100 years. Some dispute with the Hawk Parish Session (which is unclear) resulted in him giving up the title for another Sandbed property about 1724 (perhaps part of the same property) where the Grammar School would then be built. Andrew Turnbull and John Pringle were charged with valuing his house for the Kirk Session. A portrait of him exists (he is also referred to as ‘Rogers’ and sometimes called ‘William’). He was recorded living at Cavers itself in 1723 when one of his children was baptised. He is probably the Andrew, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Marion (b.1711), William (b.1713), James (b.1715), Margaret (b.1717), Betty (b.1720), Robert (b.1723), an unnamed child (b.1725), Hugh (b.1727) and Ann (b.1729). He was at Eastcote in 1727 when his son was baptised. Andrew (d.1819) fleshier in Hawick, who had sons Robert and John. He is probably the Andrew, married to Betty Grieve, whose children included: Jean (b.1769); an unnamed child (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); William (b.1773); and Robert John (b.1775). The first child was baptised in Wilton Parish and the rest in Hawick. The witnesses in 1771 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Andrew whose uncle Andrew Scott died in Hawick in 1778. Andrew (b.1785) son of John and Catherine Cairns, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. In 1816 he married Margaret Smail in Selkirk. Their children included: John (b.1822), born at Hyndlee in Southdean; and Jessie (b.c.1831), born in Southdean. It seems likely that Andrew (b.c.1829), born in Southdean Parish, was also his son. Andrew (b.1801/2) born in Traquair Parish, he was a shepherd at Sundhope and also toll-keeper at Fiddleton around the 1860s. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Priesthaughshiel. In 1851 he was at Sundhope and in 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Fiddleton, with his son James as the toll-keeper, and his daughter Joan also there. His wife was Violet Rae and their first 6 children were baptised in Yarrow Parish, then 4 in Ewes Parish and the rest in Castleton and Cavers. They included Margaret (b.1824), James (b.1826), William (b.1828), Andrew (b.1829), Violet (b.1830), John (b.1832), Walter (b.1834), Elliot (b.1835), Isabella (b.1837), Robert (also known as Rutherford, b.1839), Isaac (b.1842), Adam (b.1844), Euphemia (b.1846) and Joan Rodger

(b.1847). Andrew (b.1816/7) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 he was a handloom weaver living on the Back Raw, in 1851 was a stockingmaker on Burn Road in the Dean and in 1861 was a frame-worker living on Dean Road. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Scott in Wilton in 1839 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1840); Helen; Robert; Isabella; Gideon; Mary; John; and James. Andrew (b.1825) flesher on the Howegate. He may have been related to the earlier flesher of the same name. In 1841 he was listed along with his siblings Walter, Nancy, Helen and Elizabeth. He was at about 23–25 Howegate in 1851, along with his sister Helen. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (as ‘Rodgers’) on the Howegate. Andrew (b.c.1829) born in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he was a farm labourer at Greenhead Cottages, Selkirk and in 1851 was a shepherd at Sunderland farm. His wife was Margaret from Ashkirk and their children included Philadelphia (b.c.1850), Margaret and Mary. Andrew (b.c.1830) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was a game watcher. In 1851 he was living with his in-laws at Netheraw in Castleton Parish. He married Frances Rodger and their children included Andrew and Matthew. Andrew (b.c.1835) born in Edinburgh, son of Andrew from Earlston. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Havelock Street. His wife was Euphemia (from Langholm) and their children included Andrew. James (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the the James who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 in Robertson Parish (but actually the Hassendean part). James (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Kirkton Parish in 1721. Perhaps the same James was recorded in Cavers in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at ‘Utter Parkhill’ in 1782 and Parkhill in 1784. His children included: James (b.1779); Jane (b.1782); and Helen (b.1784). James (b.1826/7) son of Andrew, he was born in Selkirk Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as toll-keeper at Fiddleton, living there with his father as well as his sister Joan. James (19th C.) flesher in Hawick. He went bankrupt in 1873, with the Commissioners for his estate being John Nichol and Walter Forsyth. Maj. James (1864/5–1930) worked in the woollen industry. He married Bella, only child of A.K. Innes. He was probably son of John and Margaret MacRaw. Janet (d.1787) servant of Dr. William Scott, who lived at Brieryhill. She died in Hawick. John (b.1750) resident of Whitmuir Hall when his 2 sons were baptised in Selkirk Parish. In 1778 he married Catherine (1752–1816), daughter of James Cairns; she was born at Dodhead and died at Oakwood Mill. Their children included: Andrew (b.1785), who lived in Southdean Parish; and John (b.1787). John (1787–1869) son of John, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. In 1809 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Brunton at the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. Most of their 10 children were born at Howpasley and baptised at the East Bank Kirk: Christina (b.1810); Henry (b.1813); Nelly (b.1814); Helen (b.1817); Mary (b.c.1820); John (b.1822); Peter (b.1824); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1826); Dickson (b.c.1828); and James (b.c.1830). He emigrated to Canada and died in Blenheim Township, Ontario. John (18th/19th C.) butcher of the Back Row, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed on the Howegate. Matthew ‘Mat’ (d.1968) joiner in Deanburnhaugh. He took over from Adam Elliot. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as a weaver in Whitchesters in 1704. In 1704 he also witnessed a baptism for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He gave evidence in 1710 relating to a fight in St. Mary’s between 2 other weavers. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. He married Janet Glendinning in 1701 and their other children were Janet (b.1701), John (b.1703), William (b.1704), Janet (again, b.1706) and Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and James Grieve in Commonside and in 1708 were gardener William Scott and carrier Henry Paterson. Robert ‘Duke’ (19th C.) possibly the same Robert recorded as butcher at the Back Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He took over as town drummer from Caleb Rutherford, about 1830 – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM]. Walter (b.c.1820) flesher on the Howegate. He was living at about No. 17 in 1841, along with his siblings Nacny, Andrew, Helen and Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included: Robert (b.1670); William (b.1672); Bessie (b.1674); and John (b.1684). William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (but probably the part that was Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included James (b.1684) and Elizabeth (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were James and Andrew, who were surely related to him. The 1687 witnesses were 2 William Turnbulls. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and Margaret Scott. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen ‘Murie’ and their children born in Hawick Parish included: Bessie (b.1687); and an unnamed son (b.1688). William ‘pedder’ (i.e. peddler) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the William married to Helen ‘Murie’ or the one married to Janet Dryden. William (17th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for Ashkirk Parish. This suggests he was probably a Kirk elder. He is probably the William who married Margaret, daughter of William Scott, in Wilton Parish in 1711. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: William (b.1717); and Bettie (b.1719). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Parkhill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the William whose wife Mary Stavert died in 1795. William (d.1805) described as ‘weaver and shopkeeper to Mr. Oliver’. It is unclear which Oliver this was. Perhaps the same weaver married Helen Scott in 1763 and had children: Margaret (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1768); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Scott and Robert Renwick (who married Elizabeth, perhaps his sister). William (d.1837) wright of Hawick, probably a descendant of Andrew. It is possible he is the ‘Rogier’ whose premises near the top of Walter’s Wynd are shown on Wood’s 1824 map (also written ‘Rodgar’; see also Roger).

Rodgers (ro-jurz) n. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Kirk Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. Mary (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories.

Rodgie (ro-je) n. Rev. Andrew (1777–1861) from Abernethy, son of Thomas and Margaret Wright. He was minister of the Green (or West End) Church for 53 years, ordained in 1807, following the death of Rev. Dr. Young. He may have been in Hawick since late the previous year, having also been called to Jedburgh. He was well known for receiving the Cornet and his supporters every year at Myreslaw Green, sending his servant round with the bottle, giving them ‘A guid, cauld cauker, Fr ace a man that was nae Quaker’, in a verse that may have been added to Balbirnie’s ‘Auld Song’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed at Myreslawgreen in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Often referred to as ‘Rodgie o the Green’, he was known for insisting on strict observance of the Sabbath (which included no fiddling, secular singing, cooking or walking). In 1856 he was presented with a purse containing 90 sovereigns on the occasion of his jubilee. He married Isabella Summers in Hawick in 1825 and they appear to have had 4 children: Isabella (b.1826); Margaret (b.1828), still living in Hawick in 1861; Thomas (b.1831), who died young; and Mary (b.1837), also died young. A portrait of him exists. His mother-in-law died in Hawick in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in the cholera outbreak). His wife is recorded in about 1874 (along with Janet Brown, perhaps a relative) as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. William (1836/7–73) said to be from Hawick, he may have been related to Rev. Andrew. He worked as a banker in Bombay. In 1863 in Hawick he married Mary Elisabeth, daughter of Dr. Walter Graham. He is recorded being present at the famous otter hunt organised at Hawick in 1863. He died of dysentery in Jerusalem on his way back from Bombay. A cross was erected in the cemetery at Jerusalem in his memory (also written ‘Rogier’).

Rodman (rod-mun) n. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he had remission for crimes. He was listed as being from Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep and cattle from 4 separate farms. His surety was Thomas Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hundlee. He was separately listed in 1494/5 when he had remission for stealing sheep from 2 other farms, with his surety being Thomas Rutherford in the Grange of Abbotrule. This surname seems to be otherwise unknown in the area.

Rodono (ro-dō-no) n. house on the western bank of St. Mary’s Loch. The estate was an ancient barony dating to at least 1236, and was long held by the monks of Melrose. There was a nearby chapel (at Chapelhope, at the head of the Loch o the Lowes). In 1442 it was listed among lands whose fees were held by Melrose Abbey. In 1484 it was contained in a list of lands to which the monks appointed David Scott of Branzholme and his son Robert as Bailies, with Sir Walter Scott appointed to the same office in 1519. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Ringwoodfield) and in 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £82 12s 8d. In 1557 Robert Scott of Bowhill paid rental to Melrose Abbey for lands here, namely ‘Langbank’, ‘Quchthoup’, ‘Litilhoup’ and ‘Mekilagehoup’. The lands were valued at £25 in about 1564. In 1566 Queen Mary and her husband Darnley held a council here, when they mentioned the scarcity of deer seen on the royal hunting trip and emphasised the penalties for others shooting the animals. When it was bought by John Scott of Teviotbank in the mid-19th century he revived the old name. The mansion was built in 1866 for this John Scott (also called ‘of Rodono’), but he died before it was completed. It was then owned by Thomas and William Turnbull of Frenwick and sold in 1890. The Earl of Wemyss rented it out as a hunting lodge. For a while it was leased by Robert Pringle, of Pringle of Scotland, who used the name for his factory in Hawick, as well as for the unshrinkable process Pringles applied to underwear. It later became a hotel, known for wild society functions, with stories of a Model-T Ford being driven out onto a frozen St. Mary’s in 1934 to later sink, and also said to be where Mandy Rice-Davies of the Profumo affair is alleged to have hidden out in the 1960s. It was sold by Lady Elizabeth Benson in 1994 and renovated in about 2000 (the name probably comes from the old Scots for the rowan tree; it was ‘Rodanoch’ in 1235/6, ‘rodono’ in 1442, ‘Rodonow’ in 1519, ‘Rodonald’ in 1524, ‘Rodoneland’ in 1525 and 1553/4, ‘Rodonal’ in 1538, ‘Rowdonal’ in 1540, ‘Rowdono’ in 1557, ‘Rodondalland’ in 1574 and ‘Rodono’ in 1670).

Rodono (ro-, ri-dô-nô) n. Rodono Mills, part of the Pringle’s knitwear operation on Teviot Road. The original buildings of Walter’s Wynd were built for John Nixon & Sons in 1869 and renamed ‘Rodono’ by Pringle’s (after the hunting lodge at St. Mary’s Loch, which Robert Pringle leased). There was a fire there in 1939, destroying the offices and much of the company archives. The buildings were developed to their final massive (and architecturally unremarkable) size through extensions in 1952, 1955, 1958 and 1968. However, it was closed in 1976 due to costs, with all the machinery being moved to Glebe Mills and administration to Victoria Mill. The building was demolished in 1980/1. The rubble was used to fill part of Weensland dam and raise the ground level opposite the sewerage works. The land was used for the new Health Centre in 1989. The name was also adopted as a trade name for the shrink-resistant process applied by Pringles to underwear from 1899.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Parson of Rule. He may be the earliest known priest of Hobkirk Parish. Sometimes in the period 1165–78 he witnessed a charter for Richard Comyn, relating to Holyrood Abbey and land in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Roger’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted a stone of wax annually to the church of St. Cuthbert in Durham.

Roger (ro-jur) n. grieve of Hassendean who witnessed a charter around the 1220s for the family ‘of Hassendean’. His name is given as ‘Roger’. It is possible that his ancestors became Grieves.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Douglas (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 he witnessed baptisms for wright William and in 1793 he (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for the same William, who was surely related (probably his cousin). He married Elizabeth Harkness and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1806. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Thomson. In 1724 he married Janet, daughter of merchant James Simpson. Their children included: Janet (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1727). The witnesses in 1725 were merchant William Oliver and carrier John Simpson. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Haig and in 1745 another for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for James Stoddart. He may also be the James who in 1774 witnessed a baptism for James Easton from Branxholme. He married Janet Dickson. Their son Andrew was born in 1745, with the witnesses being merchants Charles Tudhope and William Riddell. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for carrier John Simpson. He married Jean Haig and their children included: Mary (b.1745); and Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker Thomas Scott and weaver Robert Douglas. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Craw and their son John was baptised in 1674. Robert (16th/17th C.) of Burnfoot Mill. He is mentioned in the 1612 complaint of the Baron of Hawick to the Privy Council, regarding taxation in Hawick and the imprisonment of the Baron’s officer, Alexander ‘Wischart’ in St. Mary’s steeple. The Magistrates were let off this latter charge, since Wischart was guilty of striking Roger, presumably at the market while trying to collect customs. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He married Helen Duncan and their children included Janet (b.1701), as well as probably John (b.1703), William (b.1704) and Janet (again, b.1706). The witnesses in 1701 were weaver John Swan and Robert Langlands. Robert (d.1808) wheelwright in Hawick, son of Andrew. His father could have been Andrew ‘Rodger’, manufacturer of agricultural implements from the early part of the 18th century or he could be the Andrew, married to Betty Grieve (whose son Robert was born in Hawick in 1775). He may be the Robert who married Elizabeth Wallace and had Ann (b.1770) or the Robert who married Margaret Davidson and had William (b.1773). He is probably the Robert, who, along with Douglas, witnessed a baptism for wright William in 1793; he may have been brother of Douglas and cousin of William. His death is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (d.1482) court musician of James III. He was knighted and appointed to the Privy Council. The King gave him the estate of Traquair in 1469. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. In 1478 he disposed of Traquair for only 70 merks to James Stewart, Earl of Buchan, uncle to the King. However, a few years later, when the King was on an expedition against the English, he was one of the royal favourites who were captured by a group including the Earl of Buchan, and hanged at Lauder bridge. William (15th C.) leased the lands of Winterburgh in 1488, along with Robert Scott, with Sir David Scott as pledge. The lease continued in 1490 and 1492. Probably the same William was bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branzholme in 1491/2. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wilzem Roger’ in 1500 when he was one of the witnesses for a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope. Probably the same man was witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for their lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1730); Isabel (b.1731); Isabel (again, b.1732); William (b.1739); Robert (b.1741); Andrew (b.1745); and Janet (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1731 were James Purcell and Thomas Scott, in 1739 were merchant John Cavers and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1745 were merchants Francis and John Ruecastle. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1763 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Margaret (b.1764), Elizabeth (b.1768) and William (b.1770). William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for John Laing. He married Marjory, daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson) in 1776 and their children included: Agnes (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1781); Janet (b.1785); Ann (b.1787); Willemina (b.1789); and Marjory (b.1793). The witnesses in 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 were Bailie Walter Hardie and Douglas (who was surely related) and in 1793 were wrights Robert and Douglas Roger (perhaps his cousins). He is mentioned as a wright in Hawick in a Selkirk court case of 1809. He may have been son of James. William (18th/19th C.) describer of a version of how Hawick men accounted for themselves at Flodden, as recounted in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850). He may be the same William who married Marjory Donaldson (sister of Agnes, Isabella, Elizabeth and Jane), and had 7 children, including Janet, who was the 2nd wife of manufacturer Alexander Laing. He may also be the William who is shown as owner of property on Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map (see also Rodger; formerly sometimes ‘Rocher’).

Rogers (ro-jurz) n. Ann (b.c.1790) milliner at 26 High Street, along with Mina. They are recorded on the 1841 census. Rev. Douglas Malcolm (1916–95) born in Leeds, he was trained at Yorkshire United Independent College and became minister of Providence Chapel, Cleckheaton in 1948. Thereafter he served as minister in Halifax and Sunderland, before becoming minister at Hawick Congregational Kirk 1969–71. After Hawick he was minister at Girlington, Yorkshire. He married Edith Doreen Speck.

Rogerson (ro-jur-sin) n. John local teacher who co-wrote ‘Jimme Guthrie, Hawick’s Racing Legend’ with journalist Gordon Small in 1997. Thomas (19th C.) general agent in Dundee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, suggesting that he had a local connection. In 1827 in Langholm he married Janet Elizabeth Renwick. In 1839 he was in Dundee jail, fighting his creditors.

Rogie see Rodgie

rogues-money (rögz-mu-nee) n. a tax raised on counties for the expense of arresting and imprisoning criminals. The local use and administration of these funds appears to have been a matter of some debate – ‘Paid Mr Weir, to carry his expenses to Jedburgh for the rogue-money relating to the brig’ [BR1740].

the Rogues’ Cairt (thu-rögz-kär’) n. spring-cart that used to be sent round to the neighbouring parishes for transporting prisoners to Jedburgh Jail. This started around the 1840s.

the Rogues’ Hole (thu-rögz-höl) n. occasional name used for the Town prison (e.g. in 1782), being under the former Town House (also called the Thiefs’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Roll-aboot (röl-u-boo’) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along. Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lits a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

the Roll o Honour (thu-röl-o-o-nur) n. record of local men who fell in the 2 World Wars, held in the Museum. The original was executed by Graham Johnston, W.R. Lawson and William Wallace MacGregor. It consists of 8 pages of illuminated vellum in a stand of oak, containing the names of 693 who were killed in WWI. The names are arranged alphabetically by Regiment. James Haig executed a similar design for the WWII roll.

the Roll o the Clans (thu-röl-o-thu-klawnz) n. list of prominent and landed men in the Borders and Highlands in the records of the Privy Council for 1590, with an abbreviated version in the records of the Scottish Parliament for 1587. Its full title is The Roll of the Clannis that hes Capitanis, Cheiffis, Chftenis, quhosome they depend, ofytmis agains the willis of thair Landislordis, alsewell on the Bordouris as Hielandis, and of sum special personis of branches of the saidis Clannis’. Like other records of the time, it shows that Border families were considered to be clans as much as their Highland cousins. It also forms an invaluable record of local lairds at the time, listing about 100 Lairdships in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire, naming many men explicitly. The 1587 document lists those in the Middle March as: [Francis Stewart] Earl of Bothwell; [Sir Andrew Kerr] Laird of Ferniehirst; [Archibald Douglas] Earl of Angus; [Sir Walter Scott] Laird of Buccleuch; [Sir William Douglas] Sheriff of Teviotdale; [Walter Turnbull] Laird of Bedrule; [Hector Turnbull] Laird of Wauchope; [William Maxwell] Lord Herries; [Walter Scott] Laird of Howpasley; George Turnbull of Hallrule; [Walter Ker] Laird of Littledean; [Sir James Douglas] Laird of Drumlanrig; and [Walter Chisholm] Laird of Chisholme. The document of about 1590 is headed ‘Landit Men’ and contains more names in each area, as well as covering the whole of Scotland. In the ‘Roxburgh and Selkirk’ section there are 101 men on the list, some named explicitly and some with just the Lairdship given. Locally the list includes the Lairds of Aikwood, Alemoor, Allanhaugh, Barnhills, Bedrule, Belses, Bewlie, Billerwell, Bonjedward, Braidlie, Buccleuch, Burnfoot, Cavers, Chamberlain Newton, Chisholme, Dryhope, Fahnash, Glack, Gledstains, Goldielands, Haining, Hallrule, Harden, Hartsgarth, Hartwoodmyres, Harwood, Hassendean, Headshaw, Horsleyhill, Howpasley, Huntly, Langlands, Mangerton, Minto, Newton, North Symton, Reidheugh, Riddell, Robertson, Stirches, Stobs, Symton, Thirlestane, Timpendale, Tofts, Toor, Tushielaw, Wauchope, Whithaugh and Whitriggs.

Romanno (rö-maw-nô) n. Matthew (15th C.) notary responsible for the sasine for the Cousinlands, sold by Margaret Cousin to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. The ‘precept’ was witnessed in Hawick, and the sasine itself signed at Branholme. He was described as a presbyter of Glasgow diocese, and so was probably a local church official. He wrote his name as ‘Matheus de Romanox’. He also wrote the sasine for Simon of Routledge selling the Birkwood and Burnflat to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448.

Romanno Bridge (rö-maw-nô-brij) n. village in Peeblesshire, in the northern part of the Scottish Borders, south of West Linton. The ‘bridge’ is over the Lynne Water. The Romannos of that Ilk came from here. John Scott in Whitehaugh had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The lands were owned by the Murrays from 1513 until 1676. In 1677 it was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shaws (it is ‘Rommanos’ in 1502 and ‘Ralmanno’ in 1526).

the Romans (thu-rö-munz) n., pl. empire builders based in Italy, who conquered England, and made in-roads into Scotland. They occupied parts of Britain from the middle of the 1st century to the beginning of the 5th. Agricola’s conquest of the North started in 78 C.E., as part of which he built the forts at Raeburnfoot and Newstead, driving a wedge between the Selgovae and Novantae tribes. Although there was no major Roman settlement in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick, there are many signs of nearby Roman habitation, including at Ruberslaw, Craik Cross and Aikwood. There is a Roman road running from Raeburnfoot to the Borthwick valley via Craik Cross, although it is unclear where it continued on the near side of Craik. However, in 1948 the remains of a stone-built culvert (used to divert the stream under the road) was discovered on the left bank of the Borthwick after flooding, midway between Craik and Northhope Haugh; this has subsequently washed away. There has been a suggestion of a continuation of this road up the Borthwick valley and then via Blawearie to Hangingshaw Hill, then between Woo Law and Groundstone Height, proceeding to Harelaw, and connecting to Newstead. There is another possible Roman road connecting Eskdale with Teviotdale, running via Ewes Doors to Caerlenrig. Several Roman altar stones were reused in the building of Jedburgh Abbey. Trimontium near Melrose was an important fort in the 1st and 2nd centuries. Hadrian’s Wall is about 40 miles to the south, and Dere Street only about 12 miles to the east. At Teviothead a Roman coin (of Vespasian) was found in 1856, and more recently a denarius of Augustus was found near Fulton Tower. A bronze swastika brooch from the late 2nd century was found at Denholmhill around 1930. Nearer to Hawick, 2 temporary Roman camps were revealed by aerial photography in the 1960s, these lying near Cavers Mains and Eastcote farms. The Romans pulled out of the Borders by 369 C.E., which was effectively the start of the Dark Ages, and the period of Roman occupation was quickly forgotten. However, there have been several local finds of artefacts. The leg of a large bronze statue was found at Milston in 1820, along with the bronze base of another statue (suggested to be loot from a site in England, and described in 1887/8). A bronze horde was unearthed on Ruberslaw in 1863 (2nd century, now in the Museum), as well as a ‘first brass’ of Vespasian found nearby, 2 bronze coins uncovered on Hallrule farm, and a couple of dressed stones from near the summit. More recently a Roman coin was found in a garden at Maclagan Drive, and a Romano-British carved stone at Appletree hall. And in 2011 a horde of 228 coins from the time of Vespasian to Commodus were found on Synton Hill – ‘Lords of the earth, the Roman legions wheel Their glittering files, and stamp with gory heel, Bathe the keen javelin’s edge in purple dew; While Death smiles dimly o’er the faulchion blue’ [JL].

Romish (rō-mish) adj. relating to the Church of Rome, usually used disparagingly by Protestants – ‘... att this time we are threatened with an invasion from Spain, the greatest enemies in ye Romish church and bloody Irish combined’ [PR1719].

Ropelawshiel (rop-law-shiel) n. cottage in Craik Forest, recorded from at least the early 18th century. It is located where the Ropelaw Sike joins the Rankle Burn, and within the boundaries of the former farm is the source of the Ranelke Burn. It was used for several years as a cottage by Chay Blyth and is now a holiday home (the origin of the name may be from roplaw, a young fox; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Roper (roo-pur) n. Moses (c.1815–91) born to an African American mother and a slave-owning father, he grew up as a slave, being tortured after many attempts to escape. Finally escaping successfully, he made it to New York and later sailed for Britain, where he settled in London, learned to read and write and published a narrative of his life’s story. He gave many lectures around Britain, starting in 1836. He spoke at the Green Kirk in Hawick in March 1846. William (19th C.) Hawick man who emigrated to Highlandville, Massachusetts. He returned for the Common Ridings of 1887 and 1888, and sang a Hawick song (to the tune of ‘Bonnie Dundees’) at the 1888 Dinner. He is probably the son of Joseph recorded aged 7 on the Mid Raw in 1841. He may be the William listed among Hawick men who met with Robert Ewen in Guelph on his Canadian tour of 1878; he is recorded singing ‘Teribus’ along with fellow Teri George Murray.

Rope Sike (rop-sik) n. stream that rises between Windburgh Hill and Brown’s Hill and flows roughly to the south to meet the Floss Burn near Langburnshiels.

Roscins (ros-kinz) n. Thomas (13th C.) granted the lands of ‘Bethrull’ in Roxburghshire in 1357 by William, Earl of Douglas. This seems likely to be the same as Bedrule. However, there is no other record of a surname like ‘Roscins’ connected with this area.

Rose (roz) n. Arthur (1634–1704) son of the minister of Birse, his name is also written ‘Ross’. He graduated from Marischal College in 1652 and became minister of Kinearny in 1656. He then became minister of Old Deer, then Rector of Marischal College, minister of St. Mungo’s, Bishop of Argyll and Bishop of Galloway. In 1679 he succeed Andrew Burnet as Archbishop of Glasgow. And in 1684, after Burnet’s death, he succeeded him as Archbishop of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. After Parliament abolished episcopalianism in 1689 he continued to preach secretly as an Episcopalian and died in the Canongate. He is buried at Restalrig.

Rosebank (roz-bawngk) n. name given in 1865 to the houses built at Thorterdykes in the years 1861–64 on part of the old Tryst ground, and also on the land known as Haggishaa. The houses were built by Thomas Reid, mason and farmer at St. Leonard’s. The name may derive from thickets of wild roses previously growing there.

Rosebank (roz-bawngk) n. house in Denholm. It was built for William Robson, who was a stock manufacture in the village. It was later home of John W. Turnbull, clothier.

Rosebank Road (roz-bawngk-rød) n. name given in the early 20th century to the road between the Loan and Burnflat Brae, after the houses called Rosebank, which already stood there. The north side was built up in 1927 and the south in 1929. The street is where the riders divide for the Chases, married men to the front and single men to the rear.

Rosedale (rōz-dāl) n. Turgis (d.bef. 1131) referred to in a charter of about 1125. He was Lord of Liddel, holding lands in what would later be called Liddesdale, and was probably a descendant of the earlier Baron, Turgis Brundis. He founded the house of Augustinian canons of Liddel (an offshoot of Jedburgh Abbey) in a place that came to be known as Canonbie. He gave the religious house of Liddel (as well as the church of ‘Kirchanders’, i.e. Kirkandrews) to Jedburgh Abbey when it was founded in about 1138. He was succeeded by his son William. William (12th C.) son of Turgis, who was Lord of Liddel, he was a baron from Yorkshire. He is recorded as being ‘de Rosedale’ in a grant of about 1160 in which he gave his lands of Kershope to the hospital of St. Peter in York. The grant is confirmed in a copy made in the early 14th century, which describes the boundaries of the lands, giving some interesting historical details. The grant is confirmed by Malcolm IV, and there are referred to as ‘Greshoppa’ (but surely the same place). In the 1150s he founded the Cistercian priory usually called Rosedale Middleton. Along with his wife he also granted lands of ‘Greshoppa’ in Yorkshire to the same religious house, as confirmed by King Malcolm. He may be the ‘Guido’ who, with the consent of his son Radulf, gave 42 acres (where the Esk and Liddel join) to Jedburgh Abbey, along with free fishing from the ditch of Liddel to the church of Liddel. His wife was Godehild and he had a son, Turgis, who is the last known member of the family.

Rosenberg (rō-zen-berg) n. one time pseudonym of Adam Grant. Sometimes also ‘M. Rosenberg’, it was used by him in for example, 1898 and 1900, for attribution as composer for ‘Hawick’ and ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’. Presumably Grant believed that a Germanic name added musical gravitas. The name continued to appear up until about WWI, even although Grant was using his own name on other publications from the early years of the 20th century. It is probably a coincidence that Mrs. Roseburgh, who lived near Galashiels, signed her poetry ‘M. Roseburgh’ in the mid-to-late 19th century (or else the name is a coincidence).

Rosenberger (rō-zen-bur-gur) n. Frederica ‘Mrs. R.’ (20th C.) from Budapest in Hungary, she left because of Nazi persecution. She worked with Walter Marcus in Vienna and followed him to London in 1939. She became manageress of the Marcus factory in Hawick, which was set up in 1940. Her husband failed to secure a work permit for Britain and her 2 children, Vera and Bob were sent over using church groups and the Red Cross. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but a brilliant dressmaker. The family lived in the West End. She moved to London after retiring, but regularly returned to visit Hawick. Robert ‘Bob’ son of Mrs. Frederica, the Hungarian manageress at Marcus’s dress-making factory. He was taught at the High School and Edinburgh University, becoming a Professor of Bacteriology.

Rosevale Street (rōz-val-stree) n. short street between Mansfield Road and Mansfield Square, named in 1888, either for thickets of wild roses that grew there or just invented. The housing here was built by Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. to provide convenient housing for workers at Eastfield Mills.

Rosfritha (rōz-fri-tha) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Sagifa) at the Chapel of St. Cuthbert (identified with a site near Cogsmill) mentioned by a contemporary historian as coming from ‘Hawich’. This was written around the 1170s, and referred to an earlier time, possibly much earlier. Hence the pair are (assuming they existed) the first named residents of Hawick. The story was that they went to the old chapel on the feast day of the saint, to join others in celeration, after the previous fast day. However, in the evening their candle went out, and after some remonstration, they prayed to Cuthbert, at which a new lighted candle appeared. Sir James Murray called his 4th daughter ‘Rosfrith’, inspired by this story (also transcribed as ‘Rosfrith’).

these was built up with whins and rositty fag-gots! [JAHM].

Ross (ros) n. Rev. Alexander L. (19th/20th C.) assistant minister of St. Cuthbert’s 1904–09. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop in 1909. His time as Curate in Hawick ended when he became Rector at Rosyth.

Andrew (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh, the ‘Ross Herald’, i.e. one of the officers of the Court of the Lord Lyon. Around 1903 he was charged by the Town Council with researching into the historical basis for the Hawick Flag. His report endorsed the views of Craig & Laing and others, resulting in the square blue and red flag being replaced with a more accurate duplicate of the 1707 flag – ‘a pennon, azure, a saltire or’. Rev. Donald G. (d.c.1940) assistant minister at St. George’s Kirk from 1911, taking over as senior minister on the death of Rev. Johnman in 1923, and remaining until 1935. He came to Hawick from Pollok Street Church in Glasgow. Although he was formerly the assistant, due to the declining health of the senior minister, he in fact took on most of the ministerial duties. He ‘kirked’ the Cornet in 1912 and 1914, and oversaw the construction of the new church 1913–16. He was the first minister of the church to reside at the new Manse at Broomieknowe. He was apparently a great elocutionist and gave very powerful sermons. He celebrated his silver wedding anniversary in 1925, but his wife (Williamina Martin) died in 1934. Due to declining health he resigned in late 1935 and retired to Edinburgh. There is a memorial window to him in the church and another to his wife.

Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Rae in 1793, but her death is recorded in 1795. J. Ian (1941/2– ) from Hawick, he grew up at Hassendeanburn and worked in a grocer’s shop in Hawick while at school. After school he was an apprentice compositor at the Hawick News. He later worked as a proofreader in several places, including Kenya and Zambia. He came back to Hawick in 1986. Sgt. James (18th/19th C.) professional soldier with the Royal North British Fusiliers. He was brought to Hawick in 1798 to work with the new Hawick Military Association of volunteers. James (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk, coming from Free St. David’s in Edinburgh in 1856 and serving until 1879. Rev. John Wallace (1886–1974) born at Turakina, New Zealand, son of Rev. John, he studied at the University of Wellington and was ordained in 1913. He became Chaplain-Captain in the New Zealand Expeditionary Force. Apparently unpopular with the men on a troop ship sailing to Suez, the captain threatened to throw him overboard! He served as Chaplain with the 5th Royal Scots at Gallipoli. He returned to New Zealand in 1919, but later attended classes at New College, Edinburgh and was inducted minister at Burnmouth, Berwickshire in 1922. He became minister of Denholm Kirk from the time of the reunion (1929, when it became part of the Church of Scotland) until 1953. In 1957 he moved to London to live with his daughter. He married Ruth Marjorie McGlashan in 1922. He died at Lewisham, London. Margaret ‘callit Nuris’ (17th C.) local woman who was attacked by Bailie James Burn in April 1641, having her forehead cut in the process. Burn accused her of being a witch, for being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was fined and put in the stocks, which must have been unheard of for a sitting Bailie. Her nickname was presumably ‘Nurse’.
