his wife's dower lands in 'Hadecote'. His wife was 'Hauwysia' and his son and heir was Geoffrey. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johannem de Ridel' in the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. This was regarding a piece of land in Denton on the Tyne, which had also belonged to his father John. 'Ela, uxor Johannis de Rydale' is also recorded separately, and so either his wife or wife of another John. In the same records 'Walterus de Chendal' is accused of striking his servant, who was also called 'Johannem de Ridal'. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother 'Hauwysia de Newenham' and her lands in 'Rodewood'. John of Ayton (13th C.) recorded as witness to several charters involving the lands of Renton and Ayton in Berwickshire in about 1280. It is unclear how he was related to other early Riddells. John (15th C.) resident of lands in Lauder, recorded in 2 charters of 1501. John of that Ilk (d.c.1545) son of James. In 1502 he was 'junior of that Ilk' when listed along with Douglasses and others from the Jedburgh area as people guilty of (and with remission for) attacking Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. In 1503 he had sasine for the lands of Whilton and Wester Liliesleaf. In 1507/8 he was a witness to the document for Scott of Whitsun and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He may be the 'Larde of Riddale' who was on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was a witness in 1529 to the indenture to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. He may also be the John who in 1529/30 witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvold'. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbitrators for Walter Scott in Headshaw's dispute with Isabel Murray. He granted part of the land at Liliesleaf to Patrick Earl Bothwell in 1534. Also in 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he was witness to a charter of George, Lord Hume, confirming the lands of Harden to William Scott of Harden, and was also witness to Simon Scott of Fenwick resigning Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden in 1540. In 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He may be the Riddell of that Ilk who married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (who later married William Scott of Harden and Todrig). He was possibly succeeded by his son George or his grandson Walter, but these generations are unclear. Documents of 1533 and 1535 list George as his heir apparent, while in 1545 (according to the Selkirk Protocol Book) his heir was then Walter (who must have been either his younger son, or son of George, and hence his grandson). His younger son James (who married Janet Ker) is also recorded in 1545. In 1551 the lands of Bawlie went to William, brother of his heir Walter; it is unclear whether he was already deceased at this time. Other possible children included John and William. In 1579 at Riddell his son Walter witnessed a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig, with his son Robert also a witness; the same day another son of his, Andrew, made an arrangement with Walter Scott of Todrig, with Andrew's wife Margaret Ker, and her mother Elizabeth Ker, also mentioned. John (16th C.) son of John of that Ilk. In 1522 he succeeded George Riddell (probably his uncle or other near relative) as Clerk of Lilliesleaf Parish. This means he was acting as assistant Priest, or at least held a small benefice for this position. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 being formerly in Ashkirk Mill when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) tenant in Newton Mill. In 1580 it is recorded James in Maxton had borrowed money from him, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife and son, James gave him sasine of half of St. Boswell's Mill. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. He was in Newton when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He may be the John in Dryburgh Mill recorded in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Elizabeth and Thomas Cochrane, who was also in Newton. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Mill in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bawlie. John (16th C.) son of George in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he witnessed the marriage contract for his sister Isabel. Sir John 1st Baronet of Riddell (d.1636) eldest son of Andrew of that Ilk. In 1602 his father resigned lands in Lilliesleaf to him. In 1611 he was cautioner for Robert Davidson in ‘Fallawis’ and for Andrew Turnbull of Staneedge. In 1610 he and his father had a bond not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other
In 1616 he had an inhibition from the Lords of Council regarding lands in Hownam. In 1617 he and his father were appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was still ‘appeirand of that Ilk’ in 1619 when he complained about a dispute in Morebattle Kirk. He was a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was still ‘appeirand of yat Ilk’, and was voted as ‘chancellor’ of the assize. He was probably the ‘Riddell, appeirand of that Ilk’ who was appointed as a new Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. In 1623–24 he was involved in a court case over teinds for the lands of Over Whitton. In 1624 he was foreman of a jury in Edinburgh for a Liddesdale cattle-stealing case. In 1628 he was ‘appeirand of that Ilk’ when charged to be part of a local Commission to hold courts. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628, with his lands erected into a barony and regality of New Riddell (comprising 16,000 acres on the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). Also in 1628 he was one of the major landowners of Roxburghshire who convened to elect M.P.s., his name recorded as ‘Jhone Riddell fear of that Ilk’, his father still being the Laird of Riddell. These proceedings were quite protracted, and he even refused to serve when selected. In 1600 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston and Blackbarony; the husbands of her sisters included the Earl of Ancrum, Patrick Murray of Phgiliphaugh and Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Capt. John, an officer in the army in Holland; Sir William, who became Governor of Desborough or Doesburgh in Holland; Thomas; and Ann, who married Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He secondly married Jane, daughter of James Anstruther, widow of James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose Abbey; they had one daughter, who married David Barclay of Colernie. One of his daughters may have married John Scott of Gorrenberry. John of Muselee (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s, also holding the lands of Bewlie. He was son of William and Bessie Ainslie and grandson of Andrew of that Ilk, and was served heir to his father in 1653. He was recorded paying £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663; he may also be the John who paid tax on £52 in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Cringles. In 1665 his tenant John Dodds made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over the boundaries between them. He had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1653 and 1662. He was also recorded in 4 deeds in 1663. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. Also in 1678 he paid the land tax on Musee in Hawick Parish and on part of Bewlie (formerly owned by the Turnbulls) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He appears to have married Elizabeth Haliburton in 1639 and only a few years later married Grezil, daughter of Rev. P. Schew. His children included William (who probably died young) and Patrick (who succeeded). He also had 3 daughters. John (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed along with Andrew, to whom he was presumably related. In 1691 he and Andrew witnessed a baptism for Walter Murray, who also lived at Dryden. He and Andrew witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedie in 1694. In 1698 he is recorded as ‘Elder in Dryden’. He married Janet Matheson and their children included Jean (b.1698). John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. He may be the same John in Headshaw Mill who was also listed among ‘ye poor’. He may be the John who (along with James Kennedy, who lived at Ashkirk Mill) witnessed a baptism for William Donald in 1690. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John 3rd Baronet of Riddell (d.1700) son of Sir Walter. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Bluebeard’ because he had 4 wives. He was served heir to his father (and grandfather Sir John) in 1669, including several lands in Lilliesleaf Parish and elsewhere. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Morebattle and Hownam Parishes, as well as tax on land valued at £1765 in Lilliesleaf Parish (having sold Riddell Mill, but purchased lands from the feuars of Lilliesleaf). In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was apparently a zealous Covenanter, being imprisoned (in the Tolbooth of Haddington) for his principles, and probably also for supporting his brother, Rev. Archibald. In 1684 he was fined the most of any Roxburghshire heritor, the huge sum of £52,000. However, he received a remission from the King in 1687. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was also appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. an M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1690 and served until his death. He married Agnes, daughter of Gideon Scott of Highchester and Harden in 1659. She received lands in Whitton ‘in liferent’ from his father in 1659. She must not have survived long, since in 1661 he secondly married Helen, daughter of Sir Alexander Morrison of Preston Grange; they had a son and a daughter together. He thirdly Margaret Swinton of that Ilk, with whom he had a son and daughter. And lastly the widow of Watt of Rosehill, formerly Miss Hepburn (this only about a year before his death). His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Christian, who married Henry, eldest son of Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean; William (d.1700), who died without children; and Margaret. He may also have had a daughter Helen, who married Robert Kerr of Cavers Carre, and another son, Alexander. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Mervinslaw among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) listed ‘est the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682, and another for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell (who was probably related to him). He could be the John who married Anna Agnes Dickson, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1679), Robert (b.1681), Helen (b.1684) and Walter (b.1686). John of Haining (d.bef. 1696) son of Andrew of Haining and grandson of the first Riddell (of Riddell) to hold the Haining estate. He was served heir to his father in 1643. He was recorded in the county valuation in 1643, his part of Bewlie being valued at £390. In 1659 there was a dispute with Selkirk over ‘whether corn and wood cut on the Common was for the use of English soldiers’. In 1660 there was a complaint about a servant of his taking divots from Selkirk Common. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663 and Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire in 1665. He is probably the Laird of Haining recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, along with his mother, when they paid tax on £390 in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Sheriff Principal and also Provost of Selkirk. In 1667 he was involved in a dispute over rights on Selkirk Common and there was a ‘bond of inhibition’ with the Burgh. In 1671 he made an agreement for setting up a stud of horses for the King’s use. He was recorded in deeds in 1673 (with his brother Walter also mentioned). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In late 1684 he was ‘playing at the curling’ with William Scott, younger of Harden and others, when William escaped from the soldiers who had been sent to apprehend him. His grand-daughter Magdalene married David Erskine of Dun and sold the estate to the Pringles. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, who was served as his heir in 1696. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for three hearths, since he was ‘wt tuo kilns’. This suggests he was a miller or some other kind of tradesman. He was probably related to Walter, who was at Whithope Mill in at least 1714–29. John of Muselee (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Patrick and Maria Elliot. He is recorded in a document of 1710 involving an exchange of the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish with John Nisbet. In 1707 he and John Nisbet were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1715 and 1716 he witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton. In 1706 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Walter Riddell from Lilliesleaf, who was tenant farmer at North Synton. Their children were: Patrick (b.1707), who succeeded; Walter (b.1709); Andrew: William (b.1713), who moved to Berwick, where he became a successful merchant; Barbara (b.1715); John (b.1717); Alexander (b.1719), baptised at North Synton; James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Thomas (b.1724), who was also a merchant in Berwick; and an unnamed daughter. He is probably the John ‘of Mewsie’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Minto Mill, probably related to the local Lairds. He is recorded in 1710 when his son Patrick became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Salenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1710. Perhaps the same James was at Borthaugh in 1712 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Anna (b.1701), baptised in Roberton, may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1703 when someone was ordered by the session to marry his daughter Margaret. He could be the tenant in Mabonlaw who witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a servant in Commonside in 1708. He married Janet Young and their children included: Robert (b.1708); an unnamed child (b.1719); Walter (b.1722); Janet (b.1726). The witnesses in 1708 were James Grieve and Walter Purdom in Commonside. John (17th/18th

C. recorded living in Branxholme Town in 1713. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Robert Thomson and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) miller, probably at Newmill. In 1724 he was witness to a Hawick Parish baptism there. He may be the John who married Mary Scott and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1724) and Walter (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson (perhaps the tenants at Newmill). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 and Harden in 1733 and 1736. His children included Agnes (b.1731), Henry (b.1733) and Margaret (b.1736). John (18th C.) tenant in Whithope Mill. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. He was surely related to Walter, who was there in the 1710s and Walter who was there in the 1770s. John (d.bef. 1747) eldest son of Sir Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He was an advocate and said to be highly accomplished. He died before his father, so that his younger brother (also Sir Walter) succeeded to Riddell. He is probably the John, younger of Riddell, who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. Sir John (d.1768) 6th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding from his father Walter, his elder brother Walter having died first. He was a merchant in Curacao, returning on his father Walter’s death. He was ‘of that Ilk junior’ in 1761 when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1762 he married Jane Buchanan, daughter and heiress of James Buchanan from Sundon, Bedfordshire; he granted her a bond of provision for lands in Riddell in 1768, and she died in 1798. In 1772 he succeeded to the Buchanan estates on the death of his wife’s brother. He died at Hamstead in Middlesex, after being Baronet for only about 3 years, leaving a young family. His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Sir James Buchanan, who succeeded his brother; and Sir John Buchanan, born posthumously, who also succeeded to Riddell. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1768. After his death his wife, referred to as Dame Jane Riddell, still held rights over part of the estate. She must have been he Lady Riddell who was recorded in 1794 paying the tax for having 4 male servants at Riddell. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife was Jean Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); Janet (b.1755); William (b.1757); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Winthrope and their children included John (b.1771), Mary (b.1774), George (b.1776), Margaret (b.1780) and William (b.1783). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Stoddart in Wilton Parish in 1770 and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1774). John (18th C.) farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–89. His daughter Maragret was born in 1786 and son John in 1787. John (18th C.) resident in Catslack in 1794 when he was recorded in Selkirk in a dispute over non-payment of a bill. John (b.1758) son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He was a gardener and also sexton (but it is not clear for which church). In 1780 he married Peggy Parris and they had 12 children: Ann (b.1784), who died young; Isabella (b.1786), who also died young; Janet (b.1788), who married Michael Dryden; Francis (b.1792), who married Euphemia Scott, drove a mail coach for about 19 years, and died in Northumberland; Isabella (b.1795), died young; James (b.1797), who married Janet Rae and worked as a coachman; Adam (b.1798), who married Martha Leatherhead and moved to Edinburgh; John (b.1801), who was killed in a threshing mill at the age of 19: Jean (b.1804), who married John Watson from Selkirk; Katherine (b.1806), who married weaver John Fairhares and emigrated to Bridgeton, Maine; John (again, b.1809), who worked as a coachman and married Barbara Hall; Mary (b.1810), who died young. He may be the John recorded in Hawick in 1791 in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. John (18th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1791 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Jean (b.1793), Agnes (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Anne (b.1800). Sir John Buchanan (1768–1819) 9th Baronet of Riddell, youngest son of John the 6th Baronet, being born posthumously. He succeeded from his 2 elder brothers. In 1878 he was recorded as owner of the Riddell estate, as well as Cringles and Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish and Whiton in Hownam Parish. He was said to be a man of elegant, but stiff manners, and who was a benefactor of the working classes. He was known as a keen agriculturalist with ambitious ideas, some of which led to the ruin rather than improvement of the Riddell estate. More than 300 acres of trees were planted during his time as Laird, 3 gate lodges were built and 2 new approaches to the estate. Both he and Lady Riddell (presumably his mother) were listed in the Carriage Tax Roll of 1792/3 and 1797/8 and paid tax for male servants and horses in 1794 and 1797. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of no fewer than 39 farm horses, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses (with Lady Riddell listed separately in 1794, with 4 carriage horses). He also paid tax for having 9 non-working dogs at Riddell in 1797. Also in 1797 he was in trouble following an allegation from a soldier who had robbed him that Riddell had made ‘a beastly suggestion’ to him. He served on the Militia committee for Roxburghshire in 1797. He purchased Wheatfield House, Hepple, from the Duke of Portland in 1804. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He tried to seek support from the Duke of Buccleuch to stand as an M.P. in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. He was eventually elected M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1812–18. However, he was not a very regular attendee in Parliament and never took part in debates. He was Colonel of the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia, based at Kelso. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He still owned the lands of Over Whittington and others in Hownam Parish according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811; he also owned the lands of Bank, Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, Hoglawburn and parts of other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was a major heritor of Ashkirk Parish, as recorded in a complaint of 1814 about payment for work done on the Manse. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. Sir Walter Scott stated that he ‘bored everybody to death’. In 1805 he married Frances, daughter of Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, and she died in 1868, aged 90. Their children (baptised in Lilleyfield) were: Frances Jane (b.1806), born in Edinburgh; Harriet (b.1807), born at Riddell House; Emily (1808–81), who married John Adams; Walter Buchanan (1810–92), who succeeded; Jane (b.1812); Rev. John Charles Buchanan (1814–79), Rector of Harriestham in Kent, whose son John Walter succeeded later; Charlotte Mary (1816–69); Gen. Charles James (1817–1903), who served with the Royal Artillery; and Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89), who was born posthumously, like his father, worked with the Indian Service, and was awarded the Star of India. John (1766–1840) 5th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was involved with the founding of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He farmed at Timpendean, later moved to Grahamslaw and then became collector of taxes. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811; he was listed as ‘J. Riddell, Esq. Timpendean. He died unmarried in Jedburgh. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Commonside. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Wauchope in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Junior, Journeyman Mason’ in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (c.1780–1851) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Wauchope. He spent 37 years as shepherd at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish) and then rented the farm of Berryhall next to Abbotsford. In 1841 he was at Clarilaw with his wife and daughter Betty. His wife was Margaret Turnbull (1777–1862) from Hawick, and they must have married when he was quite young (although not in 1791, as sometimes suggested). Their children included: Walter (1800–81), who married Margaret Baxter, and was a farm labourer in Bowden and later at Philiphaugh; Margaret (1802–94), who married stone mason Walter Ballantyne of St. Boswells; James (1804–1902), shepherd at Girrick, near Kelso; Robert (1807–67), who married Elizabeth Dickson and emigrated to Canada; William (1809–77), shepherd at Muselee, who emigrated to Australia; John (1812–76), who married Margaret Grieve and died at Faldonside; Elizabeth (b.1814), who died at about the age of 30; Jane (b.1817), who married Andrew Scott and died in Hawick; and Turnbull (c.1823–91), who married Helen Clarkson. Many member of the family are buried at Bowden. John (1785–1862) son of Henry of Little Govan and Anne Glassford, he was descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, where he specialised in peercase cases and was known as an antiquarian and genealogist. He died unmarried in Edinburgh. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Whillans in Cavers Parish in 1789. John (b.1790/1) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eastfield in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 180 acres and employing 2 labourers. His wife was Agnes and their children included Archibald, Isabella, John and Thomas. John (d.1843) joiner in Lilliesleaf, eldest son of William. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Turnbull. His children included: William (b.1816), who was also a

John Carre (1809–79) 3rd son of Thomas of Camieston. He was born at Linthill. He was educated in Edinburgh and in 1839 emigrated to Australia with his cousin Thomas Ferrier Hamilton. The land that the pair purchased (between Melbourne and Bendigo) was called Riddells Creek. He became a member of the Victoria Legislative Council and then the Victorian Legislative Assembly. Rev. John Charles Buchanan (b.1814) 2nd son of Sir John Buchanan, 9th Baronet. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge and was a Fellow of All Souls’ College. He became Rector of Harrietsham in Kent and was Honorary Canon of Canterbury. He was heir presumptive to the Barony, since his elder brother Walter Buchanan had no children. He had 8 children of his own, and his son John Walter succeeded. John (b.1832/3) son of Andrew. He took over as tenant farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in the 1860s, and was also a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish.

John (19th C.) farmer at Peel in Liddesdale in 1868. John (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, in Cavers Parish, in the 1860s. Sir John Walter Buchanan (1849–1924) 11th Baronet of Riddell, son of Rev. John Charles, he succeeded his uncle, Sir Walter to the Baronetcy of Nova Scotia. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became a barrister. He served as High Sheriff of Northumberland. In 1874 he married Sarah Isobel, youngest daughter of Robert Wharton. He was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan, who married Rachel Beatrice Lyttleton. Sir John Charles Buchanan (1934–2010) 13th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father when only 5 months old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, being 2nd Lieutenant in the King’s Royal Rifle Corps and then qualifying as a chartered accountant. He served as Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales 1985–90 and Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland 2000–09. He was also on many other boards and committees and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1969 he married Sarah, daughter of Baron Richardson of Dunstile and they had 3 sons, including Walter John Buchanan, who succeeded. Sir Jordan (12th C.) probably a son of Sir Auskittel. Although he appears to be directly descended from the Riddells of Riddell, it is unclear how he was related to other Riddells in the north of England. He was most likely named after Jordannus de Flemming, who could have been his uncle. He witnessed a grant to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1160, and another grant of lands in Berwickshire and Roxburghshire to Walter, son of Alan the Steward in 1161/2. He witnessed a confirmation of donations to Dunfermline Abbey in about 1166 and another charter of lands in the Lothians and Fife at about the same time. He was also witness in 1173/4 for lands in Angus. Probably the same man was Sheriff in Northumberland, with estates at Tilmouth in Durham. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Walter. Margaret (d.c.1631) sister of William of Greatlaws. She married Andrew Duncanson, minister at St. Boswell’s. In 1630 she was served heir to her brother’s lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish, but died soon afterwards. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded in connection with money Sir Gilbert Eliott gave to the Hawick Kirk Session for keeping her in Wilton, suggesting she was supposed to be resident in Hawick Parish. Another record refers to he ‘being mad’. Mary (17th/18th C.) also known as Margaret, she married John Scoon, who farmed at Branhholme Town. In 1705 she was renting part of Branhholme Town, with her cautioner being Walter (probably her brother or other close relative). She was still renting part in 1708 and is recorded along with her son (whose name is not given), leasing part of the farm of Branhholme Town in 1711 and 1712. By 1714 she was renting part of the farm with Robert Scoon, making it clear that this was her son. The pair were in arrears until at least 1718 and in 1719 she was replaced as tenant by Walter Scoon. Mary (1809–52) only daughter of Walter, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Muselee. Her mother was a daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. In 1835 she married George William Hutton, who was a banker at Newark (son of George Hutton of Chorlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford of Mitford Castle). Their son was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell, who succeeded to the Muselee estates on the death of her uncle Charles in about 1849. They had another son, Edward Mitford Hutton Riddell. Matthew (13th C.) recorded as ‘Matheo Rydel’ when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Ayton. This was sometime in the period 1247–60. A Matthew from the previous century was Abbot of Peterburgh. Michael (14th C.) witness to a charter of Adam de Roule for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354. He is recorded as ‘Michael de Rydale’, and was probably part of the Riddles of that Ilk. Mungo (d.1471) recorded as ‘Mungo de Redale’ in 1436/7, when Richard ‘de Lylliscleue’ resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to him as his superior. In 1435 he is ‘Mungo de Redoll’ when he gained lands in the Regality of Sprouston from ‘Marioun Wedale’, widow of John; he held his court at ‘Westirlllyssleff’ (i.e. ‘Wester Lilliesleaf’). He may have been succeeded by his grandson (or son) James. However, his relationship with the nearly contemporary Quentin is unclear. One possibility is that he was Quentin’s son (and therefore James’ father), and that they were both referred to as ‘of Riddell’ for several years; another possibility is that they were brothers, and shared the lands of Riddell and Whittington in some way. If he was James’ father, then he also had a son called Thomas, who was James’ brother. Mungo (16th C.) described as ‘Sir Mungo Riddale, chaplain’ when he was witness to a document in 1556 relating to the lands of Nether Harden. Given that all the other witnesses were fairly local it is reasonable to assume he was attached to one of the nearby churches, say Wilton or Ashkirk. His name occurs after that of Walter of that Ilk, who may therefore have been his father or brother. Mungo (16th C.) recorded in Lessuden in 1581/2 when he witnessed 2 transactions in Selkirk. Perhaps the same Mungo was recorded in the same year in a marriage contract for his sister Marion with his step-sister Janet Kyle. Sir Patrick of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 4th Laird, son of Auskettill (although some sources suggest he was son of Walter). He made donations to Melrose Abbey, including lands at Lilliesleaf and Whittington. In 1208/9 he confirmed the granting of lands at Whittington to Melrose Abbey, which had originally been granted by Auskittel (probably his father). In 1454 James II confirmed his grant of lands in Whittington to Melrose Abbey, his name being given as ‘Patricius de Ridale’ and the land being ‘ywittuna’. He married Christiana de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’) of Alnwick, one of whose relatives (possibly her father) married Margaret, an illegitimate daughter of William the Lion. He was succeeded by his son Walter. It is sometimes claimed that another son was William, who married Matilda Corbet, but he actually seems to have been a brother. Another son may have been Gaufred. His seal bore a lion ‘passant’, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIGILLUM PATRIFICII DE RIDALA’. Patrick of Riddell (15th C.) recorded in 1438 when he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. It is unclear how he might be related to other Riddells of that Ilk, particularly Mungo and Quentin, who were Lairds at about the same time. Patrick (d. bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when George Haliburton in Dryburgh entered his son William into his lands in Merton. It seems likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Patrick of Muselee (d.1698) son of John of Muselee and Grizel Schew, was probably the 3rd Riddell of Muselee. He was the 2nd son, but succeeded to Muselee and Bewlie, since his older brother William had died first. He leased Roberton from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 9 years. He was on the Commission of Supply for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the ‘muslie Elder’ who was listed on the Heath Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1681 in Roberton Parish he married Maria (or Mary) Elliot; she was from Beechwood, daughter of Thomas of Bewlie and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and hence related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1682); John (b.1683); Margaret (b.1684); Thomas (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas and William Elliot (perhaps his father-in-law and brother-in-law) and in 1686 were William Elliot and Robert Scott. He was succeeded by his son John, while his grandson William was ancestor of the Riddells of Berwick. In 1697 a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, and he himself was buried there in 1698. His name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708, although he was deceased by then and so his son John is probably meant. Patrick of Muselee (1707–72) son of John of Muselee. He was probably the Patrick ‘of Newslie’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Patrick who paid the window tax on Headshaw in 1748 and on ‘Adzhall’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1753. In 1752 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, daughter of Charles Ballfour of Broadmeadows. Their children included: John (b.1754), who died young; Charles (b.1756), also died young; Walter (1758–1809), who was a lawyer; William (b.1759); Charles (b.1759), who succeeded; Thomas (1761–1849), with the East India Company; John (1766–1840), who farmed at Timpendean; and one daughter. It is unclear if he was born in 1707 or 1709. Peter (13th C.) recorded as valet of Sir Henry de Pinkeny in a 1298 roll of war horses used on Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He is recorded as ‘Peter de Ridale’. Possibly the same ‘Petrum de Rydale’ is recorded along with his brothers Thomas and Robert in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. Philip (11th/12th C.) possibly ancestor of the local Riddells. He was probably son of Galfridus (otherwise known as Geoffrey), who accompanied William the Conqueror, gaining large English estates. He was probably brother of Hugh, who gained extensive lands in Northamptonshire, as well as Cranston in Midlothian. It is likely he was father of Gervasius, who received lands in Roxburgshire from David I. Other sons were probably Walter, Auskittel and Ralph. Philip (13th C.) Burgess of Berwick. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital, which is undated, but probably shortly before 1270. He was recorded as a merchant in Berwick in 1276 and burgess there in 1277, 1281 and 1283. He was Mayor of Berwick in 1291, as recorded in one of the Ragman Rolls. It is unclear whether he was the family chief at the time, but he is referred to as ‘Philippo de Redale’. He was also recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1292, and in 1293 had a letter of safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of a grant to the hospital there. He was also on a jury in Berwick in 1302 and may be the ‘Philippum de Rydale’ on the 1276 assize roll of Northumberland. Quintin of Riddell (15th C.) first of the family to be designated ‘of that Ilk’. His name is also written ‘Quintin’, and this was a new forename for the Riddell family. He may have been son of Sir William, but this is unclear; most family histories leave room for at least one generation around this time. In 1418 he was ‘quintino de redale’ when witnessing a document for Melrose Abbey. He was in possession of Riddell in 1421 when an inquisition was held. He was also recorded as ‘Quintin Liddale of that ilk’ as part of panel to decide on Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was succeeded by his son, whose name is unknown, and then by his grandson James. His relationship with Mungo is unclear (and confusing, since he appears to be almost contemporary). He probably had a daughter who married John Scott of Synton. Ralph (12th C.) witness to several documents in about the last couple of decades of the 12th century, particularly lands in Lilliesleaf and Whitton involving Melrose Abbey. The earliest of these is probably the settlement between the Abbey and Uhtred of Grubet in 1181–86 and the latest was a confirmation of lands resigned to Patrick of Riddell, which was after 1214. His name is usually recorded as ‘de Ridale’ or variants, and in a 1454 confirmation of the 12th century grant of Whitton to Melrose Abbey he is listed as ‘Radulfo de Ridale’. He was also witness to a charter between Ranulph de Soulis and Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s. Probably the same Ralph was the perambulator of lands on the Kale Water granted by Uhtred of Grubet to Melrose Abbey in the period 1181–86. He appears to have been brother of Gervase, and hence a son of Philip. Richard of Wittering (13th C.) owner of lands in Northampton, who was surely closely related to the Border Riddells. He was recorded in a record of Henry III in 1241/2. It seems likely that his father was Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in a document relating to ‘Wyterline’ in Northamptonshire in 1254. His son Hugh was recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. Richard (14th C.) possibly younger son of Geoffrey of Riddell, and hence brother of Sir William and Sir Robert. However, precisely how he was related to earlier and later Riddells of that Ilk is unknown. There is no record of a wife or family. He witnessed 2 charters to Ker of Altonburn in 1357/8 and 1358. Note that an earlier Richard was recorded about the 1230s, associated with Preston in East Lothian. Robert (13th C.) witness in about 1250, along with William, for a charter of Lempitlaw to Soutra Hospital. His name is recorded as ‘Roberto Redale’. Also in 1254/5 he was recorded in a charter for the lands of Mow and in about the 1250s witnessed a gift of lands in Berwick. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Cumberland in 1271/2. Perhaps the same Robert was witness in 1279–86 to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. The phrase ‘Curia de Sprowyston’ comes after his name, although it is unclear if he was the ‘curate’ of Sprouston, or some unnamed person. He was probably brother or son of William. Sir Robert of Riddell (14th C.) probably related to the nearly contemporary Richard of Riddell, but the succession in these generations is very uncertain. It is possible that he was a younger son of Geoffrey, succeeding after his brother Sir William. However, it may be that he was never Laird himself. He witnessed a charter of lands in Mow granted to Kelso Abbey. He also acted as a cautioner of the Laird of Mowe who was a hostage in England. Robert (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, in 1559 he was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden. He was Bailie of the Barony of Wilton. He may also be the Robert who received part of his father's lands at Minto. It is possible he was the 'Berte' who witnessed a transaction between Thomas Gray and Thomas Small regarding a tenement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Also in 1563 he is recorded as brother of Walter of that Ilk when he witnessed a transaction for finding a wife for William Davidson. He may have been son of Walter and Mariotta Pringle (although these generations are not clear). Perhaps the same Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk was witness in 1579 to a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig; he was also witness to another transaction involving his brother Andrew, with their mother Elizabeth Ker also mentioned. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother to Walter of that Ilk when he was involved in a transaction for land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he was at Riddell to witness an agreement between James in Maxton and John in Newton Mill. Robert (16th C.) son of James in Clerklands. In 1563 he witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf, for William Davidson, made by Walter of that Ilk. He was probably the Robert in Clerklands who in 1580 witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded at the Fanns in Ashkirk Parish in 1661. He married Janet Bell and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Bell (probably related to his wife) and William (probably his won relative). Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Newbigging when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newbigging this was. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably tenant in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, with James Davidson (probably also Newbigging) as the other witness. He may be the Robert who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for Walter in Hawick in 1684, and another for William Bell and Marion Riddell. Robert (17th C.) married Janet Sanderson in Roberton Parish in 1683. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. He could be the Robert who married Janet Sanderson and whose children included: Janet (b.1684); and Robert (b.1686). Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those 'not Listed yet payd yr'. Robert (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in 1705. The marriage was proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Newmull in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) and at Allanhaugh Mill in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Tudhope in Raesknowe. It is possible that the same Robert was miller at Falnash in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart, smith at Falnash. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1716, 1718 and 1722. He is probably the Robert who married Bessie Sinton in Robertson in 1707. His children probably included Christian (b.1708), John (b.1709), Isobel (b.1716), Agnes (b.1718), Walter (b.1720) Robert (b.1722) and James (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1717, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He was recorded living at the Sandbed in 1718 and 1736. He married Margaret Oliver in 1718, the marriage being recorded in Hawick (and perhaps also Wilton, but with no wife's name given). Their children included: Andrew (b.1719); Bettie (b.1720); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1733); and John (b.1736). The witnesses in 1719 were Robert Scott 'Crawship' and John Turnbull 'cuper older', in 1720 were James Purcell and Robert Roger, and in 1736 were William Riddell (surely a relative) and Thomas 'Gillas'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at East Burnfoot in 1721 and 1729. He married Isobel Riddell (probably in 1718, although no wife's name is recorded) and their children included: Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); John (b.1723); Walter (b.1729); and George and William (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were another Robert Riddell and Alexander Moore, and in 1729 were George Stewart and James Scott. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for George Stewart in Groundstone and in 1732 one for Walter Riddell. He was probably related to Walter, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lang in Minto Parish in 1731. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish recorded ‘at Park’ in 1744. He married Bessy Lawson and their children included: Jean (b.1733); John (b.1735); William (b.1737); Bessy (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1733 were John Telfer and James Beattie and in 1744 were shoemakers John and Thomas Scott. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Whitehauhill Mill. He took out a one year lease on Highchesters Mill in 1743. He may be related to the Robert who was later at Todshawhillshiel.

Rev. Robert (c.1710–60) 6th and youngest son of Sir Walter, the 4th Baronet of Riddell and Mary Watt of Rosehill. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1732, was presented to Lilliesleaf by Robert, Duke of Roxburghie in 1737 and ordained that year. He remained as minister there until his death. In 1748 he paid the window tax for ‘the mance’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is said that he was sometimes interrupted in his sermons by his father, who was very fastidious about points of scripture. In 1755 he married a distant cousin of the Granton Riddells, Esther, daughter of Dr. John Riddell (and she died in 1803). They had no children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabella Miller and their children included Janet (b.1758). Possibly the same Robert was herd at Fanns in 1762 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. Robert (18th C.) married Jean Stevenson in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. Robert (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Jean Arthur is recorded in 1781. Robert (18th C.) married Jane Thomson in Hawick in 1775. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1786 and Todshawhillshiel in 1788 and 1790. His children included William (b.1786), John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branholme. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirknoue in 1790 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. His other children probably included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), William (again, b.1794), John (again, b.1796), Adam (b.1798), William (again, b.1798), Betty (b.1800), George (b.1802), Janet (b.1804), an unnamed son (b.1806), Betty (again, b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). Robert (18th C.) married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. Robert (d.1809) wright, son of George, who lived at Howahill. He is probably related to the Robert in Hobkirk Kirknoue recorded about the same time. He have been the Robert, son of George born in Hobkirk Parish in 1771. He married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, as well as the death of his son James in 1808 and his wife Mary Gledstains in 1810. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Mill according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may have been son of Walter, who was tenant at Southdean Mill at about the same time. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in South Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Jean Turnbull in Southdean in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant in Chesterhill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) said to have been a native of Teviotdale, he was father of Rev. Henry Scott. He was described as ‘a man of strong though uneducated mind’. He was shepherd for a long time at Langshawburn, where he was visited by Walter Scott, Pulteney Malcolm and James Hogg. He was shepherd at Sorbie (in Ewesdale) when his famous son was born. While there it is said that he planted some saplings on a hillside above Wrae, saying that he wished to live long enough for his coffin to be made from the wood of the mature trees. He then moved to Capplefoot, on the Water of Milk. While there he hired a teacher to instruct his children. Later he returned to the Ettrick to work for Scott of Deloraine, who he had been with in his younger days. He married Agnes Scott, who was also from Teviotdale. They had 6 sons and a daughter: William; Borthwick (b.1794), who farmed at Dryden, Ashkirk, and was re-knowned as a piper; Henry Scott (1798–1870), minister at Teviothead and song-writer; Robert (1800–67), who emigrated to America and died in Rockton, Canada; Alexander Hay, who farmed in Cumberland; Walter (d.1834), who died unmarried; and Mary, who married a Jones. Robert (1800–67) born in Teviotdale, he was 4th son of shepherd Robert and brother of Rev. Henry Scott. He farmed in Cumberland for a while and then emigrated to America. He married Margaret Johnston in 1819, the marriage being recorded in Roberton Parish. They had 10 children, including Nancy, Euphemia, Benjamin, Thomas, Robert, Ann and Walter. He died in Rockton, Ontario. Robert (b.1839/40) son of farm labourer Walter, and descended from Hobkirk shepherds. He apprenticed as a blacksmith with Thomas Kedzie in Selkirk, but also worked in Hawick. He then worked in Edinburgh, Stirling and Glasgow before emigrating to America in 1864. He spent time in Michigan, Canada and Minnesotta, returned to Scotland and then went back to Canada in 1870. In 1872 he started his own wrought-iron fencing business in Chatham, Ontario. He married a Miss Tocher and had 5 children. Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Andrew of Lilliesleaf when there were complaints made against them by the Douglases of Friarslaw. His name appears as ‘Sym Riddell of Lillislie Myle’. It was specifically claimed that the Riddells put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglases and also that he and Andrew of Lilliesleaf removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas’ farmers.

It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Rev. Simon (1677–1743) probably descended from a branch of the Riddells of that Ilk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1695, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1699 and ordained at Tynron Church in 1701. In 1715 he marched to Stirling with some of his parishioners in defence of the King and the Protestant cause and in 1740 he was one of the 15 ministers who dissented against the resolution to depose the 8 Seceeding ministers. He married Annie Riddell, who was heiress of the lands of Newhouse near Lilliesleaf. Their only son Walter married Annie Riddell, heiress of Glenriddell. Steven (16th C.) recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569. He was listed along with James Langlands as heralds in Roxburghshire, ‘Ane of the Wardane Officiaris to be maid Messinger’. It seems likely he was from the Riddells of that Ilk.

Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as brother of Geoffrey in the period 1165–1204. He witnessed his brother’s charter for 2 oxiangs of lands in Primside. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Rydell’ in the 1330s when he was witness to a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh and preserved in the chartulary of Dryburgh. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Riddells. He could be the Thomas who forfeited the lands of ‘Fynlawys’ in the Barony of Oxnam, which were granted to William Stewart of Jedward during the reign of Robert II. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of James of that Ilk. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany during the time of revolt, as well as for stealing sheep. His surety was his brother, the Laird of Riddell. Thomas (d.c.1514) listed as deceased in 1514, when he was succeeded in the position of Clerk of Lilliesleaf by George Riddell. He was probably a member of the family of Riddell of that Ilk, holding the benefice of assistant priest in the Parish. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of William in Lilliesleaf. In 1592 he was signatory to a caution by Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of James Scott of Whithope. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710. His children included: Isobel (b.1705); and twins Robert and Alexander (b.1710). Thomas (17th/18th C.) sometime tenant in Bewlie. In 1716 he had a tack (jointly with George Cumming) for lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield; after a year he was to assume the lease fully for another 8 years. This was specifically for ‘a dwelling house, barn and stack yard and half a cottage in the town of Bewlie, half the said Mr. John’s lands in Bewlie, half the meadow and half the mair of Lillislief with the teinds’. In 1721 the last 3 years were cancelled. Thomas (1696–1750) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. The lands of Camieston near Newtown St. Boswells were acquired for him and he became the first Riddell Laird there. It is possible that he was the ‘Mr. Riddell of Camiestoun’ who purchased the Kirkland of Bewlie from the Duke of Roxburghe. He may be the Thomas who paid the window tax at ‘Ferningtoun’ in Roxburgh Parish in 1748. In 1740 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of daughter of Rev. William Hunter, minister of Lilliesleaf. His children were: Walter (b.1742), who died young; Margaret (1744–71), who died unmarried; Eleanor (1745–1815), also unmarried; William (b.1746), who succeeded to Camieston and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; Thomas (1748–56); and Robert (1750–93), who served with the East India Company and perished on the ‘Duchess of Athole’, being in temporary command when fire broke out, and refusing to abandon his ship. Capt. Thomas (18th C.) son of Walter of that Ilk. He was with the Honorable East India Company, being Captain of the Adm. Pocock 1762–71. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1818). Thomas (1761–1802) 4th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He joined the East India Company, rose to the rank of Major and died in India. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Jane Govenlock, who was from Hawick Parish. Thomas of Camieston (1777–1826) eldest son of William of Camieston. He qualified as Writer to the Signet in 1805, but never followed this profession. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father) when still younger of Camieston. In 1805 he married Jane, daughter of William Ferrier, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Gen. William (1805–75); Walter of Cavers Carre (1807–74); John Carre (1809–80), who emigrated to Australia, where he was a member of the Parliament of Victoria; Capt. Thomas (1810–54) of the Bengal Infantry; Lillias Wallace (b.1812), married Ross Watt and emigrated to Victoria; Robert (1813–39), who died in India; Elizabeth Carre (1816–44), who died unmarried; Georgina Vereker (b.1818), who married Malcolm McNeil Rind; and Jane Ann (d.1859), who married Elijah Imprey. Thomas (d.1843) 2nd son of Lilliesleaf joined William. He was a Thatcher. He married Rachel Stirling and their children included William (b.1803), who was a joiner. Thomas (1815–62) born in Lilliesleaf, son of Isabella, with the father’s name unknown. He emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working in the mills. He married Sarah S. Henderson and their children were James, Walter and David. He drowned after falling overboard from a steamer between Fall River and New York. Thomas (b.1818/9) stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1861 he was listed on Main Street. In the 1860s he is in a trade directory as a stocking-maker, suggesting he ran his own business. He married Janet Dow and their children included Thomas, John, Robert S., James and George. Thomas (19th C.) married Isabella Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1848. Walter (d.1150s) described as ‘de Riddale, of Whitunes’, the brother of ‘Eshetho’ (i.e. ‘Eschetho’, probably the same as Lintobank) and ‘Lillissclave’ (Lilliesleaf) from David I sometime in the period 1124–53. This is recorded in a ‘transumpt’ of 1506 (i.e. a legal copy of the frail document was made in Jedburgh at that time). He may thus have been the first Baron of Riddell and Whitton. He was probably a close relative of Gervase, who witnessed some charters along with him; he may have been brother of Gervase (or perhaps his son), and hence a son of Philip. He is further recorded as ‘Walter de ridalis’ and similar in several surviving charters he witnessed in the reign of David for St. Andrews Priory and other religious houses. A bull from Pope Adrian IV in 1156 confirms his brother and heir Auskittel in several lands. This suggests he died without any sons. However, he is known to have married Ethridge de Percy, sister of the Lord of Oxenham. Walter of Riddell (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Auskittel. A Bull of Pope Alexander III (sometime before 1181) confirms him in the lands of ‘Lillescleve’, half of ‘Langetun’, ‘Witun’ and ‘Brahebi’ (Brawby in Yorkshire), which his father and forebears held of the church of Hexham. He married Guynoldu, daughter of the Earl Gospatric. They had at least 2 sons: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; and Ralph, said to have been progenitor of the Northumberland branch of Riddells. Walter (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Jordan, perhaps the first generation of the Riddells of the Newcastle area. He succeeded his father in the lands of Tilmouth in Durham and the Lordship of Whickham. He was Sheriff of Northumberland and was succeeded by Sir William. Walter of Riddell (13th C.) 5th Laird, son of Sir Patrick and Margaret de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’). He confirmed his father’s donations to Melrose Abbey, and gave other benefactions to both Melrose and Kelso. The gift to Melrose Abbey was part of Lilliesleaf and made some time before 1253; this charter also mentions land he had previously granted to Alexander, brother of Henry of Ashkirk. He married a daughter of Hugh de Gifford. He had 2 sons, Sir William (who succeeded) and Patrick. His seal bore an eagle with wings elevated, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIG[ILL. WA]TERI DE RI[DA]LE’. Walter (16th C.) younger of Riddell, son of John. He died before his father, and the title was inherited by his son Walter. However, these generations are confused, and it is also possible that his brother George inherited, or was at least the effective Laird during the minority of his son Walter. His wife’s name is said to have been Jane. If he was father of Walter of that Ilk who was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579, then he also had sons Andrew and Robert. Walter of that Ilk (d.c.1580) probably son of Walter, he succeeded to the Lairdship from his grandfather John. George, who also appears to have been acting as Laird before him, was either his father or uncle. He may the ‘lard of Ryddell’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He was witness to a charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden in 1556 and is also mentioned in 1559 when his brother Robert was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden (although it is possible this is 1550). In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1563 he was ‘wadset’ lands at ‘Hungrie Hills’ and near the Kirk of Lilliesleaf by William Mildmases. Also in 1563 he offered 2 potential wives to William Davidson, who held lands of his in ward and relief; witnesses included his brother Robert, as well as Robert, son of James in Clerklands. He is probably the ‘Lard of Riddell’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He served as surety for the Elliots in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He was on an assize in 1577. He is probably the Walter of that Ilk whose brothers Andrew and Robert are recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579. In 1543 he married Mariotta (or Marion), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. He was probably succeeded by another Walter, and also had sons Robert and William (who witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, by which time his son was Laird). His seal bore a chevron between 3 ears of rye and the words ‘S’ VALTERI RIDDEL’, while his wife’s had 3 shells on a ‘bend sinister’ and the words ‘S’ MARION HOPPRINGIL’. Walter of that Ilk (d.bef. 1592) son of Walter. He is probably the Walter who in 1581 witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. Also in 1581 his heir apparent Andrew received sasine (in the name of his daughter Janet, Andrew’s sister) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He was listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court James Davidson in Whitton. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council and in 1590 was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. John Ramsay of Dalhousie was cautioner for him in 1590. Note that these generations of Walters seem confused in some family histories. He married Agnes, daughter of George Ramsay of Dalhousie, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He probably also had 2 daughters, one of whom married Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre and Nether Howden. His wife may have been the Lady Riddell whose conduct was singled out when the Presbyterians complained to the King about continuing supporters of Catholicism. He and his son Andrew were ‘tutors’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. His son Andrew and brother William both witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, while he was Laird. In 1595/6 (suggesting he was alive then, but perhaps just confirming an earlier grant) there is a charter for the Barony of Lilliesleaf in which he is granted thr 3½ husbandlands of Lilliesleaf, called ‘West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris’ and 6 husbandlands and 2 cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf, with Lilliesleaf Mill; his son Andrew and brother William are also listed. Walter (d.bef. 1642) referred to in 1600 as ‘fiar of that Ilk’, along with his wife Agnes, when they received the lands of Bewlie. He may have been a son of the Laird of Riddell, or else descended from the earlier Riddells who had farmed at Bewlie. He is probably the Walter referred to in 1642 when his son William gave Bewlie to his brother Walter. Walter (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He was mentioned in the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison. It was stated that Sandy ‘Hines’ wife said that Howison had given medicine to his wife and received nothing for it. Walter of Woodhouse (16th/17th C.) appeared at the Privy Council in 1616 to represent William Allan and himself in a complaint against the Douglasses of Friarshaw. He was probably also the Walter of ‘Ridhouse’ (assuming this was a transcription error) who, along with the Laird of Riddell, had had their tenants oppressed by the Douglasses. He was also a member of the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623 and was voted as Chancellor of the panel. It is unclear where ‘Wodhouse’ was and he may be the same as one of the other Walters. Sir Walter 2nd Baronet of Riddell (d.c.1669) son of Sir John. He was knighted by Charles I during his father’s lifetime. In 1632 there is a discharge to him from Violet Douglas, widow of Andrew of that Ilk and their 1st and 2nd sons Andrew of Haining and Robert of Hartside. He was served heir to his father in 1636; this included Lintobank, Boosmill, Easter Clerklands, Greatlaws and West Lilliesleaf (called ‘Murieknow’), as well as Over and Nether Whitton. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1628–1633, and he also represented Roxburghshire 1646–47 and 1650. In 1640 he had a contract with Walter Scott of Burnside concerning Chapel and other lands in Lilliesleaf. He was a supporter of the Covenant. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1643 his estate of Riddell (consisting of Mains of Riddell, Bank, Clerklands, Riddell Mill and Lilliesleaf Mill), valued at £1654; he was also owner of part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish (valued at £273), as well

Riddell as of Whitton in Morebattle Parish (valued at £1600). In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he probably the ‘W. Riddell’ among local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £6,600 (the second largest amount in Roxburghshire). He is recorded in a charter of 1659 involving his daughter-in-law Agnes Scott and lands in Whitton. He paid tax for his rentals in Hownam (£3382) and Lilliesleaf (£1629) in about 1663. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of William Rigg of Aithernie in Fife, said to be a very pious woman and aunt of Katherine Rigg, ‘the Good Lady Cavers; this may have been in 1630. Their children were: Sir John, who succeeded; William of Friarshaw, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell; Archibald, Covenanting preacher, who married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton; Thomas, who may have married Agnes Scott and died childless; Andrew; Agnes, who married James Scott, brother of Sir William of Harden in 1659; Sarah, who married Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton in 1656; and Alison, who married Rev. Gabriel Semple of Jedburgh (once a preacher of field conventicles). Note there are conflicting accounts of his children, particularly the daughters. His son Sir John was served as his heir in 1669. His wife’s will is recorded at the Commissariat of Peebles in 1682. Walter of Belses (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to the Riddells of Riddell and of Minto. He may have been the same Walter who was given the lands of Belses by his brother William (son of Walter) in 1642; if so he was described as ‘in Longhauche’. He was also possibly the ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. He may be the same Walter as the ‘portioner of Lilliesleaf’ who in 1643 held ‘20 souls’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26. He was also involved in a ‘wadset’ over lands at Fernieeles and Templehall (in the Rule valley) with William Earl of Lothian in 1649; Sir Walter of that Ilk is also mentioned. and so was clearly distinct. He extended the loan to the Earl in 1652, when he was described as ‘now indweller in Appotsyde’. In the 1652 marriage contract of Margaret Riddell and Robert Elliot, he is described as uncle of Margaret and brother of William, deceased portioner of Bewlie. He also witnessed a contract of ‘wadset’ for the Lorraines of Appotside in 1654, also signed by his eldest son ‘Harie’ (i.e. Henry), as well as further contracts in 1656. He was mentioned in discharges of 1655 for uplifting the teinds of Harwood and Tytlehouse and in further discharges of 1657 and 1658; he acted as ‘baillie in that part’ for Elliot of Harwood and was tenant at Appotside. In 1656 he witnessed the ratification of William Elliot of Harwood in his Rulewater lands and another sasine relating to Harwood was witnessed by his sons Henry and Walter. His sons William and Henry witnessed separate documents 1659, and all 3 sons witnessed a document relating to Appotside in 1656. He is probably also the Walter who rented land from John Turnbull of Firth in 1645. He may be the Walter recorded as portioner in 1678 when he owned lands in Bewlie and also for the ‘heritors’ of Raperlaw, amounting to £273, as well as Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £407 15s); however, that seems more likely to be the next generation. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, and younger brother of William. He is recorded as ‘in Langhauche’ and ‘baillie in that part’ for the said William Elliot when he was witness in 1637 for Elliot of the Binks purchasing Harwood. The Langhaugh may have been the one in Liddesdale or in Hobkirk (probably the latter). In one of the 1637 documents he is transcribed as ‘Liddell’. He also witnessed other agreements relating to vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1638 and 1648, and a discharge to him and others for the teinds in 1649. In 1642 he was ‘in Longhaughe’ when his brother disposed to him his five-pounf land in Bewlie and half a cotland in the Barony of Lilliesleaf. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Murray. Their son Robert was baptised in 1650. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Chisholm. Their son Robert was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Robert and Andrew Chisholme (who were surely related to his wife). Walter of Minto (c.1620–c.84) writer (i.e. solicitor) in Edinburgh. He was probably 2nd son of son of William of Newhouse and grandson of William of Muselee (although these generations are confused). He purchased part of the Minto estate from John Turnbull of Minto in 1676 (confirmed in 1681). He leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ to William Mather of Lanton in 1683. Also in 1683 has a disposition for Minto to his son-in-law Thomas Rutherford. There was a dispute among his children over the inheritance, but eventually Minto passed to Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1687 and not long afterwards sold to the Elliots. He married Catharine Nisbet in 1652 in Edinburgh, and secondly married Isabel Riddell. His children were: James (d.1687), who died young; Jean, who married Robert Laurie in Edinburgh, and was the mother of the Annie Laurie who inspired the song; Susanna, who married Thomas, brother of John Rutherford of Edgerston; Catharine, who probably died young; Grizel (d. bef. 1687), who was to have succeeded if she married a Riddell; John, who may also have died young; Elizabeth, who married James Dallas in Edinburgh; and Agnes. His daughters cleared all their interests in Minto in the 1690s. Walter (d. bef. 1673) son of Andrew of Haining and brother of John of Haining. He married Christian Hunter, who is recorded along with their son Andrew in a deed of 1673. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1686 he married Margaret Ker in Wilton. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray and Alison Riddell (probably a relative) in 1688. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of John ‘in Beirhope’. He is probably the Walter, ‘portioner of Beulie’ who witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. He was ‘portioner’ of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, with land valued at £273. He (or a descendant) received part of the lands of Bewlie in 1687. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scoon and their children included: Robert (b.1674); an unnamed child (b.1677); another unnamed child (b.1679); Bessie (b.1681); and Helen (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and William, who were surely related to him. Walter of Newhouse (b.1645/6). In 1689 he was named among the officers of the local Militia, charged with defending the kingdom. Along with William Turnbull of Sharplaw he was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanters soldiers who travelling between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean and brought to Lilliesleaf Moor; there they were released, but immediately taken prisoner at gunpoint by Thomas Turnbull of Standhill and others, who took their horses and held him until the preaching was over. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. He is probably the Walter of Newhouse who married Christian Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1684. In 1693 his uncle John Reid granted him a tenement in Selkirk. He was ‘Walter ridell of Neuhous’ in 1694 when he paid tax on 4 hearths in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear if he is the same man as Walter (b.c.1620) of Newhouse who appears to have died in the 1680s. His daughter may have been Annie, who married Rev. Simon. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter ‘Dusty Fit’ (d. bef. 1723) miller of Allanhaugh Mill in the years around 1700. He may have been related to the later tenant at Southdean Mill. He was listed at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was taxed for 3 hearths because he was ‘wt tuo kilns’, suggesting that he was the miller there at that time. Probably the same Walter rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1690–98. He was at Allanhaugh Mill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He may be the Walter who acted as cautioner for Margaret in 1705, when she leased part of Brauxholme Town farm. He is probably the miller at Allanhaugh Mill called ‘Dustyfit’ who was there around 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1708 he and James Paterson were ‘undermillers’ when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott wright at Millport. He is probably the ‘under-miller in Hawick’ when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Elliot, ‘tacksman of ye mill’ and James Paterson, ‘under-miller in ye sd town’. In 1711 he was still undermiller in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Aitkin, other undermiller at Hawick (with miller Walter Elliot as the other witness). His children included Anna (b.1700), with baptismal witnesses Henry Orrock and William Riddell (who was surely related). Bessie who married another Walter Miller (at Philhope Mill) in 1709 was his daughter. He was recorded as deceased and ‘sometimes in Allan-haugh mill’ when his daughter Mary married William Helm in 1723. William, who was tenant at Allanhaugh Mill and became a Burgess in 1729, was probably his son. Margaret, who married John Scoon, may have been a daughter of his (since his name appears as a witness to one of their children’s baptisms). It is possible that 2 different generations of miller are compounded here. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Margaret, who was also listed there.
Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Graham and their daughter Anna was baptised in 1700. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Wright and their son Walter was baptised in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller at Philhope Mill, as recorded in 1709. He married Bessie Riddell, daughter to Walter, miller at Allanhaugh Mill in Hawick in 1709. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Isobel (b.1707); Bessie (b.1709); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie Walter Elliot and miller James Paterson. He may be related to other millers of the same surname. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Murray and their daughter Alison was baptised in 1711. Walter of Newhouse (d.1742) apprenticed to John Wilkie, he became Writer to the Signet in 1742. He married Jean Pringle. It is unclear how he was related to the other Riddells of Newhouse. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the same Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He married Marion Liddell and their children included: James (b.1687), Jean (b.1699), William (b.1702) and Helen (b.1703). The witnesses in both 1699 and 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant John Forman and in 1709 were baker John Whillans and Henry Orrock. Probably the same tailor Walter secondly married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1704. Walter of Friarshaw (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Walter (17th/18th C.) from the Lilliesleaf branch of the family. He was tenant farmer at North Synan. In 1706 his eldest daughter Margaret married John of Muselee. Sir Walter of that Ilk (d.1747) 4th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father Sir John in 1700. In 1695 he would have been the ‘younger’ of Riddell who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also ‘younger of that Ilk’ in 1695 when he contributed £400 to the Darien Scheme. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1700 he was recorded in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. In 1706 he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest; this presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. In 1727–28 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington in a land dispute. In 1692 he married Margaret, daughter of Watt of Rosehill; she was a daughter of his step-mother. His children were: John, an advocate who pre-deceased him; Sir Walter, who did succeed; Thomas of Camieston, whose son William married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; William, who moved to Bermuda; Robert, minister of Lilliesleaf; Ann (or perhaps Jane or Eleanor), who married John Carre of Cavers; Sarah, who married John Forest; and Christian, who died young. He is said to have been very pious and somewhat eccentric, for example on occasion interrupting his son Robert’s sermons, saying ‘Robert, that won’t do!’, and he refused to stop people coming onto his land, saying ‘The Earth is the Lord’s!’ James may have been another son, who moved to Ireland, was knighted, and wrote his name ‘Riddall’. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope Mill in at least the period 1714–29. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1714); Marion (b.1717); Anna (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Walter (again, b.1729). He is easy to confuse with another Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time; he is probably the one who married Helen Scott in Roberton in 1712. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw. His daughter Marion was baptised at the end of 1717 in Roberton Parish; this was 9 months after another Marion was baptised, daughter of Walter in Whithope Mill (so it is fairly clear that this was a different man). He could be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert and Andrew. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, who may have been his, included: Margaret (b.1712); Walter (b.1720); and Walter (again, b.1725). He is probably the Walter who married Margaret Simpson in Roberton in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthaugh in 1723 and 1724. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in Borthaugh. In 1719 he married Mary Storie. Their children included: Robert and William (b.1720); twins Gideon and Andrew (b.1723); Walter (b.1724); Isobel (b.1727); Margaret (b.1729); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were George Bell and Tom (or similar) Turnbull, in 1724 were Walter and John Scott and in 1729 were James Scott and Robert Cowan. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at East Burnfoot in 1725, Galalaw in 1732 and Hornshole in 1737. He is probably the William who in 1735 witnessed a baptism for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Margaret (or Marion) Waugh in 1724 and their children included Robert (b.1725), Janet (b.1727), James (b.1730), Bessie (b.1732) and Margaret (b.1737). The 1737 baptism was separately recorded with ‘Margaret Riddell’ as the mother, with witnesses Robert Scott and John Sinton. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott and in 1732 were Robert Riddell (probably a relative) and Adam Wright.

He was probably related to Robert, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. The funeral of Janet in Burnfoot Mill was recorded in 1750 and may have been his daughter. Sir Walter of that Ilk (1695–1765) 5th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guildbrother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He was recorded as a merchant in Eyemouth in 1727 when listed (along with his brother John) among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirlton. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, and was father of Gen. Henry James Riddell, Commander of the forces in Scotland; and Andrew. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Alton in 1738. In 1737 he married Agnes Wilson and their children included: John (b.1738); and Janet (b.1740). The witnesses in 1738 were Andrew … and John Kersel. Walter of Newhouse and Glenriddell (d.1788) son of Rev. Simon. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Annie, daughter and heiress of Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, a very distant cousin. He thereby became Laird of Glenriddell (1758–1809) 3rd surviving son of Patrick of Museele and Margaret Balfour. He worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. He married Christian, eldest daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. Their children were: Patrick, who died unmarried; and Mary (b.1809), who married George Hutton, and whose son Capt. Hutton Riddell inherited Museele. He died the same year as his second child. Walter (b.1760) 2nd son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He married Janet Hamilton and moved to Carlisle. Their children were: James (b.1784), who had 3 daughters, including Jennie, who married John Hislop; Frank (b.1786), who was a store clerk in Leith and died unmarried; Willie (b.1789), who settled in Carlisle; Isabella (b.1791); Margaret (b.1793); and Walter, who was born in Hawick, was training for the ministry, but died young. Sir Walter Buchanan (c.1764–84) 7th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir John, who died when he was quite young. Said to be of delicate health, he died just about when he reached majority. He was succeeded by his brother Sir James. His tutors, who dealt with rentals of his properties etc., were James Riddell and Archibald Buchanan. Walter (18th C.) recorded as ‘of Museele’ in a marriage bond of 1769 for his daughter Agnes with John, son of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He may have been a younger son of John of Museele. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Commonside in 1785 and 1788. He married Betty Glendinning and their children included: Janet (b.1775); John (b.1778); Betty (b.1780); Rachel (b.1783); Janet (again, b.1785); Mary (b.1788); and James (b.1791). The witnesses in 1785 and 1788 were the whole congregation and in 1791 were Archibald Elliot from Bowanhill and John (probably a close relative). Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope for about 50 years. He was shepherd there according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His son John was shepherd at Clarilaw. He could be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother’s name given) included: Robert (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1783); John (b.1784): William (b.1788); and James (b.1796). Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. A note says ‘Peace officer’, suggesting perhaps that he might not need to serve on account of already working as an officer in the parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Southdean Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He may have been father of Robert, who was recorded at Southdean Mill in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Walter (b.c.1785) 3rd son of William, he was a joiner in Lilliesleaf like his father. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living with Elizabeth, probably his daughter. His sons included: William, who married Margaret Lambert and emigrated to Philadelphia; and Walter, who also emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (1798–1863) son of Hawick shoemaker William and Jean Goodfellow. He worked as a spinner in Wilton. In 1835 he was listed at Dovemount amount heads of households in Wilton Kirk, and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as living in Hawick. On the 1841 census he was on O’Connell Street and in 1851 was on Lady-law Place. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Andrew, Thomas, Jean, Janet and John. Walter (1800–81) eldest son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer near Hawick and then at Philiphaugh. In 1841 he was living at Eastfield in Bowden, in 1851 at Philiphaugh Cottages and in 1861 at Old Broadmeadows. He married Margaret Baxter and their children included John, Mary, James, Margaret, Robert and Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. Walter see Walter Riddell Carre. Sir Walter Buchanan (1810–92) eldest son of Sir John Buchanan, who died when he was young. He was born at Riddell House, and educated at Eton and Oxford. Although he became the 10th Baronet in 1819, the family sold the Riddell estate in 1823. However, he did succeed to the smaller estate of Hepple in Northumberland. He was called to the bar at Lincoln’s Inn in 1834. He was Magistrate and Chief Steward in Northumberland and Judge in North Staffordshire, as well as serving as an M.P. He gave a lot of help to Rev. G.T. Ridlon, in his compilation of a family history, published in 1884. He married Alicia Ann, youngest daughter of William Ripley in 1850, but they had no children. He was succeeded by his nephew Sir John Walter Buchanan, son of Rev. John Charles. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (1834–77) eldest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He worked with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. He married Agnes, daughter of David Arnot, minister of St. Giles. He was obviously named after his father’s patron. He died in Edinburgh. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan (1879–1934) son of John Walter Buchanan, he was 12th Baronet of Riddell. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became Principal of Hertford College there. He was also Chairman of the University Grants Committee. In 1919 he married Rachel, daughter of Cahrules Lyttelton, 8th Viscount Cobham. They had 8 children, and he was succeeded by Sir John, who was an infant at the time. Sir Walter John Buchanan (1974– ) 14th Baronet of Riddell, son of Sir John Charles Buchanan. He has been Managing Director of the companies Cluff Geothermal Limited and Lilliesleaf Limited. His son Finlay John (b.2001) is heir apparent. William (12th C.) witness to documents for ‘Morgrundus’ Count of Mar, relating to St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘Willelmo de ridal’. This was probably around the 1170s. He may be the younger son of Galfridus/Geoffrey who was Lord of Farrington in Northamptonshire and Primside and Glengarnock in Scotland, who served in the court of William I and died in 1214. William (12th/13th C.) son of Ausketill and brother of Patrick. In some genealogies he is stated to be a son of Patrick, but this appears to be incorrect. He married Matilda Corbet, to whom he granted several pieces of land in dowry. He received part of the lands of Whiton, although he had no heirs, so all these lands reverted to the head of the family later. His wife is recorded yielding up lands to her Lord, Patrick of Riddell in the early 1200s; her son seems to have been Alexander Seton, and so presumably she secondly married a Seton. He may be the same as the son of Ausketill (recorded as Walter) who had a papal letter of protection in about 1170. This mentions that the same family still held lands at Brawby in Yorkshire. Sir William of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 6th Laird, son of Walter and grandson of Patrick. He is said to have been knighted at a young age by Alexander II. He married Isabella, daughter of William, Parson of Hownam. In the early years of the 13th century his wife Isabella gave a piece of land in Whitton... to Melrose Abbey. This charter mentions several family members, proving 4 successive descents. However, the heir of Sir William is uncertain, as are the next few generations. He may have been succeeded by another William. He is probably the ‘domino Willelmo de Redale’ who witnessed a charter of lands in Lempitlaw to Soutra around 1250; ‘domino Roberto Redale’ was also listed, so presumably his son or brother. William (13th C.) listed among the jurors at Corbridge in Northumberland in 1256 as ‘Willelmus de Ridal’. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the same as the ‘Willelmo Redale’ who witnessed a charter for the lands of Lempitlaw in about 1250. Sir William (13th C.) listed in the period 1279–86 when he was witness to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Souls. He also witnessed the previous grant of the same lands by John de Vescy and its confirmation. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. William (13th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rydale’, a Burgess of Inverkeithing. There are 3 other entries for men of the same surname, all called Hugh. Sir William (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1301 when there was an arrangement to swap him (as an English supporter of Edward I) for 2 Scottish prisoners. In 1305 there was a warrant of Edward I to pay him for assisting Robert Hastings at Roxburgh Castle. And in 1306 there was a letter asking for his protection (as well as others) from the Chancellor of England, since he was helping keep down Edward’s enemies in Scotland. He may be the same man as Sir William of Tillmouth and Twizel (son of Walter), who was appointed Sheriff of Northumberland in 1314 and was one of the custodians of Norham Castle; his children included William (who succeeded) and Hugh. William (d.1328) son of Sir William of Tillmouth, who held lands in the Durham area. He was Constable of Norham Castle and High Sheriff of Northumberland, and played a role in the managing of the Marches for King Edward II. Part of his lands was held by his brother Hugh, whose descendants were later Sheriffs and Mayors of Newcastle. His lands were eventually inherited by his 3 daughters, Isabel, Constantine and Joan. This branch of family usually spelled their name ‘Riddell’. William (13th/14th C.) possibly son of William and hence 7th Riddell of that Ilk. However, this period in the genealogy is difficult to follow, and there may well be additional generations, since some accounts suggest impossibly long lifespans. He probably died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Geoffrey. Sir William (14th C.) possibly eldest son of Geoffrey and brother of Sir Robert and Richard. However, these generations are quite confused. He may have been knighted by David II and died in the reign of Robert II. He was probably father of Quentin or Mungo (or both). William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Ridd’ in 1498/9 when he witnessed a charter in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same ‘Willelm Ridd’ had an escheat in Lanark recorded in 1501. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William (16th C.) described in a sasine of 1535 (relating to Harden) as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with George. He was probably a son of the Laird of Riddell (although which one is unclear). William (16th C.) probably a younger son of John of that Ilk. He is described in a document of 1551 receiving the lands of Bewlie from John of that Ilk and his heir Walter, who was his brother. He may be the brother of the Laird of Riddell who witnessed a transaction in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1564. William of Bewlie (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, and probably son of the previous Walter. However, it seems hard to separate different Williams and Walters around this time. He may be the William who warranted the lands in Lillieleaf that William Middlemes leased to John Donaldson in 1580. He witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. He was ‘in Lyllisle’ in 1581 when he witnessed a sasine for Andrew, heir apparent of Walter of that Ilk (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He may be the same William ‘in Lillisle’ who was involved in an action with William Middlemes in 1589. He could be the William ‘in Lillesle’ whose son Thomas was signatory in 1592 to a caution for James Scott of Whithope, signed at Cavers Carre. In 1595/6 he was brother of Walter of that Ilk when he had confirmed to him the ‘5 pound lands of Bewlie and the half cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf’. William (16th C.) probably the name of William ‘Rydle’ who was accused in 1590 of rieving crimes along with Martin’s Airchie Elliot and Hob of Bowholm Elliot. He may also be the ‘William Rydle of Hawcuppe’ accused of rieving in 1590, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Nixons, Shielts and others; it is unclear where ‘Hawcuppe’ may have been. William (d.c.1630) recorded being granted the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of the deceased George and his lands were ‘6 husbandlands’. He may have been son of George of that Ilk who is recorded several decades earlier. His sister Margaret, wife of Rev. Andrew Duncanson, was served heir to his lands in 1630. William (16th/17th C.) miller at Todrig Mill. In 1617 there was a complaint by Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, that he was responsible for the death of her only son. He was said to have been encouraged regularly by Walter Scott of Harden to harass her family; this was presumably part of a family feud connected with the death of Walter Scott’s son Walter. In fact Mary Scott claimed that he was with the Scotts of Harden, fishing on the Ettrick on the lands of Scott of Bonnington, when the younger Walter was killed in a fracas. He was later part of a group of Scotts of Harden and their supporters who drove her off the land. William of Muselee (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of that Ilk, with his mother being a Pringle. He received the lands of Newhouse (in Lilliesleaf) as his inheritance. He also had a charter of Muselee in 1618. He married Bessie Ainslie. Their sons may have been John of Muselee and William of Newhouse (although these generations are confused). Helen, a direct descendant, married William Crawford, minister of Wilton, in 1716. William (d.bef. 1652) son of Walter. He is probably the William ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he gave his five-pound land of Bewlie and half a cotland to his brother Walter in Langhaugh. He married Helen Scott. In 1652 there is a marriage contract of his eldest daughter Margaret with Robert, 2nd son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. William of Newhouse (17th C.) probably younger son of William of Muselee. His 2nd son was Walter, who purchased the Minto estate. William of Bewlie (d.c.1695) son and heir of Henry. He was confirmed in the lands of Bewlie in 1669 and in 1670 gave part of the lands to his mother, Janet Scott. His sister Agnes succeeded to his lands in 1695 and married John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He is probably the resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John, 1st Baronet of Riddell and brother of Walter, 2nd Baronet. He was knighted by Charles I and served in the army in the Netherlands, being appointed Governor of ‘Desborough’ (probably Doesburgh). He married Wendelina de Bercham (or perhaps Buchan) in 1654. He had sons Walter and William, who moved to New Jersey, and other sons, Richard and John Frederick. His daughter Anne Catherine married Nicholas, son of Francis Bowyer and became heiress to her brother John Frederick (in 1677) and sister Margaret. William of Friarshaw (d.c.1693) 2nd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell. He acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Dumfriesshire and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell. He was an advocate, perhaps being the William, writer in Edinburgh, who was deputed by others to subscribe to the Darien Scheme in 1696. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope. Their son Walter was the first of the Riddells of Glenriddell (formerly Gilmerton) in Dumfriesshire. Walter was served as his heir in 1693. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included: Thomas (b.1694) and William (b.1697), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1706), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1697 were William Scott and John Turnbull and in 1706 were John Scott ‘whitegates’ and John Scott ‘younger Soger’. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of George. He may have been the William, son of George and Janet Phaup who was baptised in Robertson in 1681. He was living at Appletreehall in 1722. He witnessed a baptism for John Thomson (in Drinkstone) in 1722. He married Isobel Morrison in 1707 and their children included: Janet (b.1716); William (b.1717); John (b.1720); and Mary (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were John Thomson and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) living at Borthaugh in 1707 according to the Robertson Parish records. His wife Isobel had acted as midwife for the wife of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were smith Robert Miller and Thomas Scott in Brieryhill. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1713 and 1719 he witnessed baptisms for gardener James Dunn. He married Agnes Nichol in 1704. Their children included: Margaret (b.1705); John (b.1708); Agnes (b.1717); William (b.1719); and Helen (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were gardeners James Dunn and James Falsyde. Walter (b.1700), John (b.1706), Francis (b.1710), Janet (b.1712), Andrew (b.1713), Janet (b.1715), Robert (b.1715) and Janet (b.1717), baptised in Hawick Parish, could also be his children (although there may be 2 families here). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Armstrong in 1704.
(17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he married Margaret, daughter of David Minto and their children included: David (b.1714); Margaret (b.1719); and an unnamed son (b.1721). William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘fornicator’ in 1725 when his son James with Euphan Telfer was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were another William (perhaps a cousin or other relative) and John Graham. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Greenshields in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott). In 1717 he was abused in the street by ‘Jafra the Piper’. He married Magdalene Deans and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1738); Henry (b.1739); and Isobel (b.1741). The witnesses in 1738 were shoemaker Robert Minto and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was probably son or brother of Walter, ‘Dustyfit’. In 1729 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick and referred to as ‘late in Allanhaughm’le’. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1700. He is one of 2 Williams in Allanhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for John Scott, millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for tailor Walter Rae and another in 1745 for wright James Roger. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752); this was along with Charles Tudhope, who also witnessed the same baptism in 1745. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1761 for William Gledstains and Katherine Riddell (perhaps a relative). It is possible he was the William who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. William (18th C.) resident of Woodfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Elliot and their children included Mary (b.1756) and James (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Patrick Scott and George Hart. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1766 when his son John was baptised. He may be the William who married Mary Thomson in Robertson in 1753. His children were probably Robert (b.1753) and John (b.1766). He may be the William who in 1771 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. He could be the William from ‘Newmills’ recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. William (d.1788) described in ‘Dodsley’s Annual Register’ as dying at Selkirk at the incredible age of 116. He was said to have been a smuggler in his early life, and a great lover of brandy. He was also meant to have been a heavy drinker, who went through binges lasting several days. He married 3 times, the last being when he was 95. It is unclear how he was related to other local Riddells. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Affleck and their children included Margaret (b.1769), John (b.1772), Barbara (b.1775) and Anne (b.1780). William (18th C.) 4th son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He emigrated to the West Indies, settling in Bermuda, where he was a merchant. He married Dinah Darrel and their children included John, Margaret, Robert, William, Sarah and Elizabeth. One of his descendants wrote a medical thesis. It is thought that this branch died out after only another couple of generations. William, W.S. of Camieston (1746–1829) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded since his older brother had died young. He was educated in Edinburgh and trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Thomas Cockburn and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1770. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was listed in 1788 as owner of 5 acres in ‘Anmay’ in Melrose and Camieston in Lessuden Parish, as well as £390 of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He may be the William of George Square, Edinburgh, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He served on the Lieutenant Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798. He acquired the farm of Union Hall (also known as Linthill) in Lilliesleaf Parish, from his mother’s family, the Hunters; however, in 1822 he sold it to William Currie, along with lands in Chapel, ‘Mr. Scott’s Acres in Lilliesleaf’ and Porteous Croft (according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He also sold parts of Bewlie, which were later owned by Thomas A. Riddell Carre. He was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire in 1788 and was further was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1776 he married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Thomas (1778–1826), who succeeded; John (1779–1814), who served with the East India Company and died on the way home; Jane (1781–1849), who died unmarried; Adm. Robert (1782–1860), a decorated naval officer, who succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre and took the additional surname ‘Carre’; Elizabeth (1785–1846), also unmarried; and Margaret (1787–1843), also died unmarried. William (18th C.) wright of Hawick, recorded in 1792 when his daughter Helen married Robert Boa in Edinburgh. He could be the same as the William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick.
in 1794 when his daughter Isobel married David Simpson in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) joiner in Lilliesleaf. He was said to be a descendant of the Riddells of Riddell. He married Margaret Hervey and their children were: John, who was a joiner; Thomas, a thatcher; Walter, who married Batsy Young; Mary, who married Glasgow merchant Thomas Cochran; and Margaret, who married tailor James Walker. William (d.1800) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths. He was listed as father of Martha and Mary, so the rest of his family were presumably deceased by then. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Hermitage, born in Roxburghshire, and said to be a direct descendant of the Riddells of that Ilk. He married Catherine Brydon and they had 9 children: William (b.1801), who married Jessie Watson and emigrated to Canada; John; James; Thomas, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada and married twice; Janet; Willhelmina; Mary, also moved to Canada; Anne, emigrated to Canada and married Hugh Smith; married Robert Craig and emigrated to Canada. William (d.1827) shoemaker of Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier William. He married Jean Goodfellow in 1796, and she died in 1838. Their children included wool-spinner Walter (1798–1863). William (1789–1867) eldest son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott. He was shepherd at Bellendean at the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when he played for the Yarrow side, being known as one of the best runners in the district; he would have hailed a ball had he not been pursued by a farmer on horseback. He and Henry Scott farmed together at Ramsaycleuch. He married Elizabeth Milne (1799/1800–53) in 1831. His wife is recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1841 with 5 children. He was still recorded in a directory of 1868 as farmer at Ramsaycleuchburn. Their children (all of who were born at Ramsaycleuchburn except the first) included: Margaret (b.1831); Robert Borthwick (1833–62), who died unmarried; William Milne (1835–1913), who farmed at Ramsaycleuchburn after his father and died at Bucklands Cottage; James Scott (b.1837), who moved to Cumberland; Jessie (b.1839), who married William Easton; Agnes Scott (b.1842), who married Thomas Irving of Langholm, and secondly married James Lunn, also from Langholm; and Eliza (1844–52). Most of the family are buried at Teviothead. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (18th/19th C.) sheriff officer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first (and perhaps only) time in 1838. Maj.-Gen. William of Camieston (1805–75) eldest son of Thomas of Camieston and descendant of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. His brother was Walter of Cavers Carre. He entered the East India Company’s military service in 1823, joining the 2nd Battalion of the 30th Native Infantry, rising through the ranks until achieving command of the regiment. He commanded the 30th Regiment of European Infantry during the Indian Mutiny, and was involved in many other important campaigns. He received several medals and retired from service in 1861, returning to live at Camieston. Afterwards he played an active role in the activities of the 3rd Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteer Corps. He was also Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. His father Thomas had married a sister of Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill; after Col. Hunter’s death his father succeeded to the estate of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, but it was sold before he succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Capt. John Wilkie, and she died in 1905, aged 85. They had 9 children, and he was succeeded by his only surviving son, William. He was buried at Bowden. William (1801–83) son of William and Catherine Brydon, he was born at Hermitage. He married Jessie, daughter of John and Euphemia Watson, from Oxnam Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1831 and was a farmer in Beverley, Ontario. His children were William, John, Euphemia and James. William (b.1803) son of Thomas and Rachel Stirling. He was a joiner in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a wright. He married Agnes Deans in 1832 and their children included: Thomas, a carpenter who emigrated to America; James, also a carpenter; Janet; Walter, a baker; and Rachel. He was deceased by 1851, when his wife and 3 children were living in Hawick. William (b.1816) carpenter in Lilliesleaf, son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull and grandson of joiner William. In 1841 he was a journeyman, living with Elizabeth, who was probably his mother. In 1851 he is listed on the south side of Main Street. He married Esther Thomson in 1843 and their children were: Jane (b.1844), who married James Hogg; John (b.1846); Betsy (b.1849); Andrew (b.1852); George (b.1854); Walter (b.1856); and Ellen (b.1858). William Brown Clark (1835–56) youngest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He was born at the Flex. He attended John Watson's Institution in Edinburgh, and then went to the University there. He was described as a student and poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20. His poem 'The Lament to Wallace' appeared in some collections of Scottish verse (formerly spelled 'Reddail', 'Reddall', 'Reddale', 'Reddell', 'Reiddall', 'Ridade', 'Riddaile', 'Riddall', 'Riddale', 'Riddele', 'Ridel', 'Rydal', 'Rydale', 'Ryddell', 'Rydel', 'Ryddell', 'Rydale', 'Rydale', etc.).

Riddell-Buchanan (ri-dul-bew-ka-nin) n. compound surname adopted by some generations of the Riddells of that Ilk, after they inherited Buchanan estates through marriage in 1772. Its use was abandoned by more recent generations, who reverted to the use of 'Riddell', with 'Buchanan' as an additional middle name (see Riddell).

Robert (1782–1860) 3rd son of William Riddell of Camieston and Elizabeth Kerr, daughter of John of Cavers Carre. He was a Captain in the Royal Navy, entering in 1796 and being present at several battles, including Copenhagen and Algiers. He eventually had the rank of Admiral. He succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate following the death of his uncle Alexander in 1817, and his mother in 1828. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Walter. Thomas Alexander (1831–1905) son of Walter. He succeeded to Cavers Carre on the death of his father in 1874. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was listed as owner of lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Colonel in the 4th Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers and served with the East India Company. He was also a Captain in the Ayrshire and Wigtonshire Militia. He was a Justice of the Peace, was on the county council for Lilliesleaf and was Chairman of Bowden Parish Council. He was a member of the Jedforest Club.

In 1865 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alfred T. Fellows from near Nottingham; her brother was the archaeologist Sir Charles Fellows. He was succeeded by his son Ralph Gervase, and also had daughters Elizabeth Olive Geva and Grizel Geva.

Walter (1807–74) 2nd son of Thomas Riddell of Camieston, and descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was born in Edinburgh and educated there. He worked as a merchant at East India House in London for 20 years. In 1848 he retired to Hertfordshire and in 1860 he succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre after the death of his uncle Robert. He then took the additional surname ‘Carre’. He moved back to Scotland in 1869. He was a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He devoted much of his time to researching the families and characters of the Borders. He contributed to local newspapers, as well as ‘Notes and Queries’, and was in demand as a popular lecturer. A collection of his writings was published after his death, ‘Border Memories; or, Sketches of Prominent Men and Women of the Border’ (1876), edited by James Tait of the Kelso Chronicle. In 1830 he married Elizabeth Riddell MacLauchlan, only surviving child of Lieut.-Col. Lauchlan MacLauchlan. He secondly married Mary Falconer, daughter of William Currie of Linthill. His son Capt. Thomas Alexander succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate. He was buried at Bowden.

Riddell Chaipel (ri-dul-chä-pul) n. former chapel said to have stood on the lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, later called Riddell. The location was supposed to be near the old ash tree not far from the gate leading from the Easter Lodge to the mansion house, a little south of the site of the old tower. The field in which the ruins were located was known as ‘Chapel Park’. There is a report of 2 stone coffins being unearthed from the foundations around 1850, one containing a pot with ashes and pieces of armour, and the other containing bones of gigantic size.

Riddell Hoose (ri-dul-hoos) n. former mansion house on the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish. It replaced an earlier house, which in turn replaced the castle, which probably dates to Norman times. The original tower-house was probably constructed around the 14th century, enlarged in the 16th century and again in the 17th, making a long southerly front of 2 storeys. A third Storey was added in the 18th century, along with a north-west wing, with a north-east wing added in the 19th century. Tax was paid on 47 windows there in 1748. It was largely destroyed by fire in 1943, although it exists in photographs and drawings. The estate office, built in 1826, is now the main house of the estate, with lintels marking its construction and renovation in 1898 and the arms of the Sprots built into a gable (see also Riddell Toor).

Riddell Mains (ri-dul-mänz) n. former name for the main lands in Lilliesleaf Parish held by the Riddells of that Ilk. In 1643 it was valued at £910, being the bulk of the property of the Laird at that time. It was still listed in the same way in 1788, when owned by Sir John Riddell. It was probably equivalent to what was later just called ‘Riddell’.

Riddell Mill (ri-dul-nil) n. former corn mill on the Riddell estate, on the opposite side of the main farm. It was water powered and fed by a small lade that is now covered. The mill building survives, although all fittings have been removed and it is now in use as a barn. Situated in a bend in the Ale Water, at the foot of Dunstane Height, it was formerly also known as Dunstane Mill. In 1643 the ‘Town Mill and Mill thereof’ was valued at £247, among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk. However, it was sold before 1678, with value of £167. Thomas Lawrie was there in 1785. It was recorded as ‘Lands of Townmill, and mill thereof’ as part of the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788. John Haldane was miller there in 1841, James Haldane in the 1850s and Alexander Lauder in the 1860s. The name was also used for a water-powered saw-mill, built on the Riddell estate in the early 19th century.

the Riddells (θu-ri-dulz) n. family of Riddell of that Ilk, who gained lands at Riddell, in Lilliesleaf parish around the middle of the 12th century and were granted a baronetcy in 1628. About 1823 the estate was sold to the Sprots. For several centuries the family were buried at Lilliesleaf. The family has a Norman origin and received the lands of Ryedale in Yorkshire, being given the designation ‘de Ridel’ for several generations. Tradition (encouraged by Sir Walter Scott) told of stone coffins at Riddell bearing the dates 797 and 937. However, there is no reason to believe that the family’s origins can be traced back quite so far. The early history of the family is confused by the contemporary use of the same name by different men, with early Christian names including William, Geoffrey (or Galfridus) and Hugh. The history is further complicated by the family’s habit of calling their lands after themselves (rather than the other way around), and it seems clear that the Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish was not the original family home. The name occurs in England at the time of William the Conqueror, when lands were granted in Northumbria, following the Battle of Hastings. Another branch of the family appears to have remained on the continent, settling in Italy in the 11th century. Meanwhile the English family moved to Scotland along with David I, Gervase being the first Scotsman. The lands they were granted near Lilliesleaf appear to have been named after their former designation. The arms of Riddell of that Ilk shows 3 ears of corn (or rye) and a red chevron. The family motto is ‘I hope to share’ and the crest shows a greyhound (formerly spelled ‘Ridel’, etc., and interchangeable with ‘Riddle’).

Riddells Creek (ri-dulz-kreek) n. small town in the state of Victoria, Australia, located between the cities of Melbourne and Bendigo. It was named by John Carre Riddell, who was born near Lilliesleaf.

Riddellshiel (ri-dul-sheel) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Clerklands. The woods to the north are called Riddellshiel Plantation, and a small lake to the west is Riddellshiel Moss.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddelstead, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Riddale Steid’ on the 1541 rental roll. It is there said to be hereditary property of the Laird of Glendinning, held of the Lord of Liddesdale.

Riddell Toor (ri-dul-toor, -tow-ur) n. former peel tower on the Riddell estate. The name is also used for the more modern tower built nearby, referred to as the General’s Toor. The first fortified house on these lands was probably built shortly after the Riddell family acquired the lands in the 12th century. But the existing structure is probably from the 14th century, and was only revealed after the mansion burned down in 1943. The surviving walls are in the south-west corner. There is also evidence of 16th century stonework. The tower was probably converted into a mansion house in the 17th century, making a long southern front of 2 storeys, with a 3rd floor added in the 18th century, along with further wings in the 18th and 19th centuries. The ruins are now among mature woodland to the north-east of the main farmhouse.

rider (ri-dur) n., arch. someone who acts to separate combatants – ‘...and that he was the Rider who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan’ [PR1716].

Riddings Junction (ri-dinz-jungk-shin) n. station on the Waverley Line between Newcastle-on and Carlisle, at the junction of the Langholm branch line.

Riddington (ri-din-tin) n. Anthony (1911–98) from Countesthorpe, Leicestershire. He was a professional cricketer, who played for Hawick & Wilton in the 1930s.

Riddle (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddell) George John (1830–1920) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was a tailor and clothier and cousin of John, also a tailor in Hawick. His sister Helen married John Graham of ‘Graham’s Hotel’. He married Margaret, daughter of William Clark and Jane Murray, and she died in 1921, aged 91; she was a cousin of the father of Sir James A.H. Murray. The couple celebrated their golden wedding in 1900, when they had 5 sons, 2 daughters and 19 grandchildren, and they lived to see their 70th wedding anniversary. Their children were: John, fishmonger, who married Helen Elliot; William, joiner in Birkenhead, who married Jean Roberts; Andrew C., engineer on the Aberdeen steamships, who emigrated to Australia and married Georgina Johnstone; James, stockmaker, who married Mary Elliot; Thomas, a tailor, who married Margaret Dalgleish; George, Co-op store manager in Newcastleton; Jane, who married hosier manager Robert Hamilton; Robert, bank clerk in South Africa; Anne, hosier worker; George J., Secretary of the Universities Club, Edinburgh, who married Lily Mackenzie; Isabel, ‘Bella’; William, chemist, who married Hilda Evans; Elliot, with the Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto; Jean, who married accountant Percy Howard of Langholm; and Alexander Westwater, a chemist. Helen ‘Ellen’ (b.c.1813) born in Hawick, daughter of tailor John. She was proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 24 High Street, who also kept boarders. She started by selling 2d mutton pies at weekends, the business being carried on by her niece (of the same name) as a confectioner’s, and later by other family members. It was popularly known as ‘Ellen Riddle’s’ for about a century. She is recorded as a High Street grocer on the 1851 census, living with her brothers Francis and Walter, and nieces Helen and Isabella. Probably the same Helen is recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory as an earthenware and glass dealer on the High Street, as well as a grocer. In 1861 she was recorded as a ‘wool framework trimmer’ at 24 High Street, living with her niece Ellen and 3 boarders. Helen (b.1845/6–1914) daughter of tailor John and Margaret Armstrong. She was niece of the earlier Helen, from whom she took over the grocer’s and pie shop at 24 High Street. Already in 1851 she was living with her aunt Helen (and uncles Francis and Walter), as well as her younger sister Isabella, at 24 High Street (a few houses along from her parents and siblings). She was still living with her aunt in 1861 and in 1871 she was ‘Pie-Baker’ and head of household, living with her sister Mary Ann and brother Frank. James Haining describes her in the 1930s as maker of ‘celebrated pies still remembered’. In the latter part of the 19th century the back of the shop was also used as a meeting place for debating societies and other groups. J. (18th/19th C.) clogger in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver in Hawick. The death of his infant daughter is recorded in 1822. John (b.1800) born in Selkirk, probably son of William and Agnes Hutton. It is said that the family came from Carterhaugh in Yarrow. He was a tailor in Hawick at 12 Howegate. He is listed as a tailor on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Howegate in 1837. He is also listed as a Howegate tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory, with his son John listed as a tailor on the High Street. He was still on the Howegate on the 1861 census, and was listed as a tailor and grocer. He married Isabella Richardson. Their children included: John (b.1819), also a tailor; William (b.1821); James (b.1822); Isabella (b.1824), who married wool merchant James Melrose; Thomas (b.1826); Agnes (b.1828; George John (b.1830); Helen (b.1831); and Catherine (b.1839), who married wool-spinner Walter Scott. John (b.1811/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor on Walter’s Wynd in the 1851 census. He was thus one of 3 contemporary Hawick tailor’s with the same name! His wife was Ellen and their children included Isabella and John. John (b.1819) son of Howegate tailor John, he was a tailor on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 28 High Street, a master tailor employing 3 men; in 1861 he was listed as a tailor and clothier at 24 High Street. He married Margaret (perhaps also called ‘Mary’) Armstrong in 1843; she was sister of ironmonger John Armstrong and died in 1888, aged 66. Their children included: Helen (b.c.1846), who grew up with her aunt Helen and took over the pie-making business; Isabella (b.c.1848); Walter (b.c.1850); Mary Ann (b.c.1853), who married William C. Simpson and continued pie-making; Francis (b.1855); Margaret (1857–96), who married joiner George Gall; Lancelot Armstrong (b.1859); Agnes (b.1862); and John Armstrong (b.1865). John (b.c.1820) shoemaker at 8 Howegate. His wife was Maria, and their children included: Thomas; Frederick; and Cecilia. He could be the John who donated a model of Hermitage Castle to the Museum in 1863. John Turnbull (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-1800s, nicknamed ‘Tip-ma-daisy’. Mary Ann (1852/3–1931) daughter of tailor John. She married William C. Simpson. ride (rīd) v., arch. to fix boundaries, especially by perambulation, pp., arch. be ridden – ‘The said day the Buylyeas and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June …’ [BR1705]; ‘… did appoynt and ordaine the Common to ryd upon Fryday come eight days, being the twenty-sixth of May instant and current’ [BR1710] (also written ‘ryd’ and ‘ryde’; the word was used to describe the circuit of the itinerant High Court of the Judiciary in the 15th century, and was used in the context of boundary marking in Selkirk in the early 16th century; from Middle English; note the confusion with the word ‘ride’ meaning to go on horseback, be foridable – ‘But when the land-sergeant the water saw. It winna ride my lads, quo’ he …’ [CPM].

Ride-oot (rīd-oo’t) n. Ride-out, an organised visit to one of a number of local villages or farms on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the weeks between the Picking of the Cornet and the start of the Common Riding. They are essentially practices for the big weekend, and are not part of the official Common Riding, being organised by the Cornet. The first Ride-out seems to have been held in 1891 (with Andrew Haddon as Cornet and J.E.D. Murray as Right-Hand Man) and was an outing to Lilliesleaf by 5 consecutive Cornets, followed 2 weeks later by another ride-out via Brauxholme, Northhouse, Skelhill and Priesthaugh to St. Leonard’s. The first Ride-out to Mossapaul was in 1901, James Sutherland’s year. The Tuesday Ride-outs were originally held so that shop-workers and others could attend on half-day closing, with the mill-workers being able to attend on Saturdays. Women have been officially allowed on most Ride-outs since 1997. They extend over either 5 or 6 weeks, depending on when the Picking is. The venues are chosen each year by the Cornet (with advice from the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father). The first Ride-out has been to Bonchester since about the last war. The premier event is the ride to Mossapaul, which is 2 weeks before the Common Riding. After the last Saturday Ride-out, the Principals stop off at Hornishole. There are sometimes special one-off rides because of the place of residence of the new Cornet. Locations have included Bonchester, Cavers, Cogsmill, Denholm, Ettrickbridge, Harden House, Hermitage, Lilliesleaf, Mossapaul, Newmill, Phillhope Bridge, Robertson, Skelhill, Southfield, Teindside, Teviotdale Lodge, Teviothead, West Buccleuch and Wolfelee. Each ride-out starts with a muster in Allars Crescent, leaving from Backdamgate. The Right-Hand Man acts as front marshal and the Left-Hand Man as back marshal. There are usually lots of cars packed with picnics which go to meet the riders at the appointed location. There is usually a sing-song in the village hall or similar, and before leaving the ‘Big Pover’ sing 5 verses of ‘Teribus’ while mounted. On returning to town, the Principals dismount at the Backdamgate and usually carry children on their shoulders round to the steps of the Tower where there is a strive and more song singing. A junior ride-out (for primary school pupils) was started in 2010 – ‘oo yaise the sorta ‘no the ful shillin’ kinda general English ‘twae horses short o a rideoot’, that wud be a Hawick yin’ [IWL] (the usually plural is ‘Ride-oots’, although ‘Rides-oot’ might be more correct English).
the early 18th century and had to be rescued from the crowd by the Hawick Magistrates! Similarly the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to ride the fair one year and had to be rescued from the Bailies, with some resulting injuries – ‘The Burgh Magistrates proceeded to ryde the fair’ [BR1672] (also ridin the fair; note that this meaning of ‘ride’ always referred to being on horseback, unlike in common riding).

ridin (ri-din) n. the Riding of the Marches, or Common Riding, the annual marking of a town’s boundaries, traditionally on horse-back – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoune … ’ [BR1645] (note that the original meaning may have had nothing to do with horses, see ride).

the Ridin o the Mairches (thu-ri-din-ô-thu-mär-cheez) n. the central part of Hawick Common Riding, performed by the Cornet and his followers on the Friday of Common Riding week. The riders mount at St. Leonard’s (after the Chase) and proceed to the furthest point of the Common, via Wulliestruther and Acreknowe (the Cornet passes along the Hawick side, the others free to choose), for the ceremonial ‘Cutting of the Sod’. The cavalcade proceeds to the Moor for the Races, then rides via Crumhaughhill to Myrselawgreen. The Principals next perform the Dipping of the Flag at the Coble Pool. Afterwards the whole party goes to the Millpath for the proclamation that the marches have been ridden and the Song-singing. Before the Division of the Common in 1777 the entire Common boundary would be marched, and many marker turfs or stones positioned, as well as neighbouring sheep and cattle driven off. Sometimes this would be done on foot over the few days before the ceremonial riding. The ceremony is believed to have taken place since at least the 16th century, but could be even older. The Council used to appoint 12 Burleymen to assist the Bailies in riding the marches, the appointment being a courtesy one after the Division, and the last appointments being made in 1854. Footmen as well as horsemen are recorded as part of the procession in 1725. The practice of riding armed with pistols was officially discontinued in 1784. In the years 1900–04 and 1921 it was switched to the Thursday morning and in 1910–13 it was moved to the Saturday. J.E.D. Murray carried it on himself during WWI and Chap Landbox led the unofficial rides during WWII, while in 2001 there was an organised walk round the marches in November (see also the Common Ridin).

ridin the fair (ri-din-thu-fair) n. right of announcing a fair on horseback and collecting the duties (see also ride the fair).

ridin the mairches (ri-din-thu-mär-cheez) n. ceremonial marking of the boundaries of a town Common. Scottish towns with this tradition include, Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar, as well as the towns of the Borders.

Ridley (rid-le) n. John (b.1794/5) civil engineer from England. He was living at Thorlieshope in 1861, but probably only there temporarily for hunting. His wife was Mary. Nicholas ‘Nick’ (1929–1993) Baron of Liddesdale, born in Northumberland, he was educated at Eton and Oxford University. He became an M.P. in 1959, held several appointments under Edward Heath and then became a great supporter of Margaret Thatcher. He was Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (in the years before the Falklands War), Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Secretary of State for Transport (authoring the Ridley Report on how the Conservatives would deal with the Unions), Secretary of State for the Environment (where he popularised the phrase ‘NIMBY’, but reduced public funding for environmental protection) and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (which he was forced to resign after likening Helmut Kohl to Adolf Hitler). He was also responsible for introducing the ‘Poll Tax’. In 1992 he was created a life peer, choosing the title ‘Baron Ridley of Liddesdale’, despite objections from Scottish politicians. His puppet image on ‘Spitting Image’ always had a cigarette in its mouth, and he died of lung cancer shortly after being elevated to the Lords.

rieve (reev) v., arch. to plunder, rob, raid, rustle – ‘God send the land deliverance Frae evey reaving, riding Scot: We’ll sune hae neither cow nor ewe, We’ll sune hae neither staig nor stot’ [LHTB]. ‘…On their rieving raids through the glens and glades’ [TK] (also written ‘reive’ and sometimes ‘rieve’; cf. reave and raif).

Rieve (reev) n. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Meadshawshiel in 1794. He married Mary Balmer in Roberton in 1789 and their children included: Agnes (b.1791); Margaret (b.1794); Joan (b.1801); and James (b.1805). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Douglas and their son John was baptised in 1743. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley.

Right-Hand Man (ri-hawnd-mawn) n. Right-Hand Man during the Common Riding, being the previous year’s Cornet. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet, and provides assistance to the new Cornet. He rides with the Cornet during many of the ceremonial events, wearing the same green coat etc. He acts as front marshal during the Ride-outs. Occasionally someone has served twice as Right-Hand Man, such as William Stoddart in 1875, and W. Lockie Thorburn after WWII. Mr. Lunm stood in as Left-Hand man in 1875, even although he had not previously been Cornet, and Robert Anderson stood in as Right-Hand Man in 1897, the year before he was Cornet! It is unclear at what point the positions of Right- and Left-Hand Man became ‘official’ during the Common Riding. ‘The Cornet and his two men’ are referred to in 1809, there is a photographic portrait of the 1857 Cornet and his 2 supporters, and a painting of 1846 showing the ‘Big Threi’ crossing the Teviot.

There are the remains of a small settlement here, about 50 m by 35 m, partly destroyed by quarrying. To the south is a 0.8 m-high stone, which has been set up, probably as a marker.

ring-tails (ring-tälz) n., pl., arch. arrears in rent, odd pieces of business left when a firm is wound up, left-overs, remnants – ‘Ring-tails, Small remnants of an thing; as, in relation to drink, it is said, ‘Tak aff your ring-tails, and brew again’, Roxb.’[JoJ].

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. parish and market town in Hampshire, with the same name as lands to the south of Hawick. Ringwood is recorded as early as the 10th century, with a grant by King Edgar to the Church of Abingdon. Just before the Norman Conquest it was held by Tostig, who was Earl of Northumbria, and brother of King Harold. Given Tostig’s connection to Northumbria, and the fact that he held extensive lands elsewhere, there is a possibility that the Teviotdale Ringwood was named after the English one by either him or some other common landowner. The origin of the name is suggested to be ‘rima wuda’, meaning ‘border wood’.

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. hunting dog owned by Dr. Grant of Hawick in the mid-19th century. He was a sire of ‘Bugle’, costing 30 shillings, arrived late one night and by morning had bittern essentially everyone in the household. It took some time to train in obedience, joining the hunt at 13 months and was the biggest hound in the doctor’s otter-hunting pack. He produced several black-and-white puppies with ‘Rally’. The dog is described in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). Another dog of the same name was owned by Ballantyne of the Shaws, which won first prize at Bellingham Show and hunted for its 10th season in 1864.

Ringwud (ring-wud) n. another name for Ringwudfield.

Ringwudfield (ring-wud-feild) n. Ringwoodfield, area on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley, formerly in Cavers Parish. It was long a property of Melrose Abbey, described as lying upon the ‘Alwent (Allan) and Teviot’ and given to the monks by Oswulf during the reign of Malcolm IV (mid-12th century). The boundaries of the lands are briefly described, but most of the names are now unfamiliar – ‘Blachapol’, ‘Bolli-esburn’, ‘Crumbirche’, ‘Pennango’, ‘Brunemore’ and ‘Blackaburne’. The grant was remade by Philip de Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland just a few years later. It was confirmed by Uchtred, son of Oswulf (and his son Uchtred) in about 1166. In about 1358 the specific lands of Penangushope and Caldcleuch, within this barony, were granted to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas. There were further confirmations in the reigns of Alexander II and David II. It is recorded as ‘Ringwood’ in 1360 when Sir William, Earl of Douglas, charged Sir William of Gledstains, his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, to defend the Abbot and Convent of Melrose as lords of the lands there. The Abbey presumably held the lands throughout the 15th century, and David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were made bailies in 1484. In a document of 1500 it is referred to as ‘the lordship of Ryngwodfield’. It contained (at least) the lands and steadings of ‘Ryngwodchat, Stobycot, the Burghe, Prysthauch, Caldcluch, Standholm, Penangushop, Sowdinyrg and the Bowenhyll’ (now mostly familiar places), which were leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500. His son, Sir Walter, was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, in 1519 and reappointed in 1524. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Rodono); it seems likely that this was because Scott of Buccleuch had temporarily forfeited the lands to the Crown. In 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £52 6d; in addition the King’s shepherds were paid for various amounts of grain in the lands of ‘Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn’, ‘lie Burgh’ and ‘Vestcoterig et Southcothirig et Bolbarg’ (with transcription errors). The ‘lands of Ringwoodfield and the office of bailiery of Melroseland are recorded in the Scott retour of 1553/4; the lands were then valued at £52 Scots. In 1558 the Prior of Melrose complained about Walter Scott of Branxholme possessing the lands ‘in Ryngwodfield’ and the bailiary of other lands of the Abbey. In about 1564 the lands were valued at £3 6s 8d, and included Brugh, Stobcote, Ringwoodhaugh, Bowanhill, Grange, Priesthaugh, Penangushope, ‘Woisterrie’ [probably Westcoterig], Northhouse, Southdeanrig and Caldcleuch; Sir Walter Scott inherited them from his grandfather at this time. Sir Walter Scott (the ‘Bold Buccleuch’) inherited the lands from his father in 1574. In 1621 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose, when it is listed as Caldcleuch, Northhouse, ‘Craw-shope’, Stobicote, Brugh, Soothdeanrig, ‘Coilburn’, Westcoterig, ‘Rowanhill’ [probably Bowanhill], Priesthaugh and Penangushope’. In 1660 the lands are recorded being put in ‘wadset’ to pay the fine imposed by Cromwell on Scott of Buccleuch; it was still technically in the Lordship of Melrose and consisted of Caldcleuch, Priesthaugh, Northhouse, ‘Coliburne’, Stobicote, Doecleuch, Soothdeanrig, Brugh, Fairny-side, Peelbrae, Penangushope, Langleuchside, Phaup, Linhope and Frostylee. In the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch it appears to no longer be a Lordship, but it heads a list of farms that were mostly formerly contained within it and now referred to as lying within the Lordship of Melrose, namely ‘Ringwoodfield, Caldcleuch, Northous, Thirlestane, Braidhauch, Crowishoipe, Stobit-burgh, Suddinrig, Coat-burne, Westcoterig, Bowanhil, Presithauch, and Pannangoishope’; essentially the same list occurs in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch. It is recorded again in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693 (transcribed ‘Ringwoodfield’); it is then within the Lordship of Melrose. The name does not occur after the 17th century, but is crudely the same as ‘Teviotdale-head’, as used by the Buccleuch estates. It seems likely that if there was a tower house it was on the land of ‘Ryngwodchat’, which may be an error for ‘Ringwoodhaugh’. This probably corresponded with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken ‘Ringwoode fell’ for the farms of Berryfell, and ‘Ringwood Hatt’ for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is ‘ringwude’ in the 1160s, ‘Ringwede’ in about 1170, ‘Ryngwodfelde’ in c.1358, ‘Rengwude’ and ‘Rengwodfeld’ in c.1360s, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1484, ‘Ryngwodfeld’ in 1500, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1519, ‘Ryn-gwodfeld’ and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1524, ‘Rigwodfeld’ in 1538, ‘Ringwodfeld’ and ‘Rinwodfelid’ in 1553/4, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1557, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1564, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1574, ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1634 and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwudhaugh (ring-wud-hawch) n. Ringwoodhaugh, probable name for a steading near Ringwood Hill, recorded as ‘Ryngwodchat’ in 1500. In 1557 it was ‘Ringwodhat’ when Adam Scott of Allanhaugh paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is ‘Ringwoodhauch’. It may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh.

Ringwud Hill (ring-wud-hil) n. Ringwood Hill, hill which lies directly south of Newmilton and above Broadhaugh farm, reaching a height of 247 m. Its name is surely connected with the ancient lands of ‘Ringwood’ or ‘Ringwoodfield’ in upper Teviotdale, once owned by Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is ‘Ringwoodfield’. It may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh.

Rink Ferm (ringk-ferm) n. Rink farm, near the confluence of the Tweed and the Ettrick. It is the site of a pre-historic settlement, sometimes called ‘Rink Camp’. This was also where the Hawick Farmers’ Club instigated an annual sheep market in October 1779, which became one of the biggest in the South of Scotland. The land here belonged to the Laird of Edgerston.

Rinkie Robson (ringk-kee-robin) n. nickname for some members of the local Robson family.

Rinkvale Cottages (ringk-vale-kee-deez) n. group of houses between Wellogate Place and Dalkeith Place in the Terraces, built by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It was named in 1889 from the fact that curling was once played on the neighbouring pond at Loch Park.

Rispylaw (ris-pee-law) n. former fortified house and farm on the Hermitage Water, roughly where the modern Braidlie farm is located, and near to an old drove road. The hill just above Braidlie is ‘Rispy-Law’. In the 1718 survey of the properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is described as ‘A farm than no man doth know ye murches of’

ge (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Rispilaw’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rispylaw’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Rispelaw’; probably from ‘rispie’, meaning ‘long, coarse grass’).

rit (ri’t) v., arch. to mark ground with a spade as a guide to ploughing or cutting turf, to cut turfs with a spade.

Ritchie (ri-chee) n. Rev. John (1669/90–1744) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1697, he was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1701 and became minister of Minto Parish in 1703. He remained as minister until his death, although he had 2 separate assistants in the 1740s. He was one of the men appointed to examine Hawick’s new candidate for Schoolmaster in 1718, and preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Barbara Ainslie (daughter of Rev. James and cousin of Rev. Walter), who died in 1715, aged 45 (also written ‘Ritchie’).

rither (ri-thur) adv. rather – ‘where wud ee rither gaun yer holidays, Spittal or Whitley Bay’?, ‘what’s gaun on, or rither, what’s no gaun on?’; ‘There’s naewhere A wad rither be . . . ’ [IW], other – ‘rither is Hawick, where wud ee like ti bide?’ (cf. the locally less common rather).

Ritson (rit-sin) n. Chris Cornet in 2013. In September of his year, he carried the Borderers (Flodden quincentenary) Flag as it toured Border towns. William (1811–95) born in County Durham to a Methodist family, he became a railway contractor and was one of the main men behind the construction of the Border Union Railway. He is particularly remembered for being in charge of the construction of the Shankend Viaduct and Whitrope Tunnel. He lived at Woodley Field near Hexham.

Riversdale Mills (ri-vur-säd-nilz) n. 19th century hosiery factory on Mansfield Square, between Eastfield Mills and the railway. It was constructed around 1888 for William Kedie & Co., which was then essentially an offshoot of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. It was sold to Innes, Chambers & Co. around 1909. It was later the main site for Lockie’s, and more recently Monk Cotton (also sometimes erroneously referred to as ‘Riverside Mills’, perhaps because of similarly named mills in Selkirk and Jedburgh).

Riverside (ri-vur-säd) n. street in Denholm, off the Minto Road, also called ‘Riverside Drive’, with construction beginning in the 1900s and being completed after WWII. The land here was originally the North Crofts, given by Douglas of Cavers in 1862 for allotments.

Roadside (rōd-sīd) n. place name used in Wilton in the 19th century, apparently referring to part of the modern Princes Street, perhaps corresponding to Ladylaw Road. It may at some times have been used as an alternative name for Roadhead: however, in the 1790s both names were used at the same time and hence they were different. Walter Scott and William Nichol were recorded there in 1791 and Hector Blaikie in 1797.

Road End (rōd-end) n. former placename near Newcastle, possible the same as Steeleroadend. William Elliot was recorded there in a directory of 1868.

Roadhead (rōd-heed) n. Roadhead, road leading up from the Cauld, previously known as ‘Blaikie’s Brae’. The name was formerly applied to the top of that road, e.g. to the houses at Norwood that are above Roadhead, and on some old maps (e.g. the 1859 and 1890 Ordnance Survey maps) is marked at Langlands Road. Hence there is some confusion about whether the name applies to the whole of that road, or just the top part. It was adopted as a street name around 1890. There was once a draw well (possibly Hawick’s only one) situated there. The road is shown in a photograph dating from about 1885. William Dalgleish is recorded there in 1791 (the name derives from being at the head of what was previously described as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’).

Roadhead Brae (rōd-heed-bra) n. Roadhead Brae, another name for Roadhead.

Roadhead Cottage (rōd-heed-ko’e) n. former small cottage at Roadhead, which bore the date 1765 on a door lintel and survived until at least the late 19th century.

Robb (rōb, rob) n. William Cuthbert (20th C.) High School English teacher (nicknamed ‘Pongo Robb’), author of several educational books in the 1930s to 50s. He also wrote the ‘Touchstone’ column in the Hawick Express, possibly related to the Spalding family, cf. Chairlie Speedy).

Robbie Barrell (ro-bee-baw-rul) n. nickname for Robert Scott, one of the many of the same name in the mid-1800s.

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-di) n. nickname for a supporter of Hawick Rugby Football Club – ‘And though players come and players go, Wi my last braith I’ll prophesy – They may fade away, when they’ve had their day, But there’ll aye be a Robbie Dye!’ [DH] (the name is recorded at least as early as the 1950s, and based on some early supporter, although popularised in the mythic poem by Davod Hill).

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-di) n. poem by David Hill, first published in the Hawick Express in 1957 under the pseudonym ‘HAB’. It is included on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006), recited by Bert Armstrong.

the Robbie Dyces (θu-ro-bee-diız) n. nickname for Hawick R.F.C., derived from the popular name of an early fanatical supporter of the Club.

Robbie Hunter’s Well (ro-bee-hum′-urz-wel) n. popular name for a former public pump well, situated against the side of a house at the foot of the Back Raw.

Robbie’s (ro-beez) n. modern bar and diner at 8 High Street, run by Robbie Watt. In 2004 it became the Tower Inn.

Robbie Scare a Hair (ro-bee-skā-rə-hār) n. nickname for auctioneer Robert Scott (presumably because of his lack of hair).

Robbie Scott (ro-bee-ska′) n. name occurring in a version of a song by Jock Gray, probably from the early 19th century – ‘And the ladde he’s but young, And the ladde he’s but young, And Robbie Scott ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [DJG] (note that in another version the name is ‘Rob Rodger’, so this may be simply an error).

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-Thu-kow) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dummerum danders over the knowe’ [HI].

Robert (ro-bur′) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Robert I (1274–1329) known as ‘Robert the Bruce’, he was great-grandson of David I, he was King of Scotland 1306–1329. He refused to meet the English on even ground, and achieved immortal fame for leading the 1314 defeat of the English at Bannockburn, which made Scotland a sovereign nation. He granted part of Branxholme to Walter Conyn and the rest to Henry Baliol in 1307, and split the Baron of Wilton between Gilbert Maxwell and Henry Wardlaw at about the same time. He also granted part of Kirkborthwick to William Barbour, and moved it from Roxburghshire to Selkirkshire. He visited Jedburgh at least once late in his life, granting a charter there in 1329. His heart was supposedly returned from the Crusades by Sir James Douglas and reputedly buried under the chancel’s east window at Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him – ‘...Repeats the tles of old heroic times, While Bruce and Wallace conserrcate the rhymes’ [JL].

Robert II (1316–90) called ‘the Steward’, he was the only son of Walter, the 5th High Steward of Scotland and Marjorie daughter of Robert I. He played a strong role in the government of Scotland under his younger uncle David II, being Regent along with John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. He was one of the Scots leaders at Halidon Hill, and escaped from the Battle of Neville’s Cross. Imprisoned for rebellion against David, he eventually succeeded to the throne in 1371 after David’s death. Confusion over the legality of his marriage with Elizabeth Mure later led to disputes among his descendants. Robert III (c.1340–1406) King from 1390. He was the son of Robert II by his mistress Elizabeth Mure, later legitimised by marriage. He was disabled by being kicked by a horse. Born John, he changed his name on assuming the throne. The kingdom was effectively ruled by his brother Robert, Earl of Fife and later Duke of Albany. He married Annabella Drummond. His son David, Duke of Rothesay became lieutenant of the kingdom, but died mysteriously at Falkland Palace in 1402. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, James I.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (12th C.) son of Guy, he witnessed a document as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1147. This was confirmation of a gift to Coldingham Priory that Gospatrick, brother of Dolphin, had given to Edrom and Nisbet; his name is given as ‘Roberto filio Widonis’. The same Robert also witnessed other documents relating to lands in Scotland, the last being in about 1170. This included renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the period 1165–68 and a papal document referring to his gift to Newbattle Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear if he was part of some well known family.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (10th/11th C.) carpenter of Hassendean, who witnessed a charter in about the 1220s. He is recorded as ‘Roberto carpentario’.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (13th C.) listed on the Ragan Rolls of 1296 as ‘Robertiz filio Rafe persone del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Ewytesdale’. He was thus presumably son of Ralph and served as Parson of the Nether Kirk of Ewes.

Robert Hill (ro-bur’-hil) n. hill shown being near the source of the Slitrig and Rule Waters on Gordon’s map c. 1650, between the ‘Maidens papes Hills’ and ‘Wriggs Hill’ (probably Wigg Knowe). It is uncertain which hill this would be, since there is no similar modern name of any significant nearby hills. Perhaps Wyndburgh Hill (the highest in the area) is meant, or its southern ridge, being composed of Outer Knowe Head, Crow Knowe and Kihn Knowe, suggesting a connection with ‘Robert’s Linn’ below. This is probably the ‘Robertis hill’ mentioned in the 1562 document describing disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule; this was adjacent to the lands of Wyndburgh Hope. It may be the ‘Roberthill’ that was among lands sold in 1607 by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It is also probably the place mentioned by Scott of Satchells in relationship to the Scotts of Thirlestane – ‘John’s son, Robert, was a warden in his time. The fight of Robert’s hill he did gain; He for his king and country did maintain the truth; He married Scot, daughter to the laird of Buccleugh’ [CWS].

Robert Noble’s (ro-bur’-nô-balz) n. former tweed mill, usually known as Noble’s.

Robert of Heap (ro-bur’-ô-heep) n. holder of the lands of Heap (or ‘Hepe’) before about 1431, as mentioned in a grant transferring the lands from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

Roberton (ro-bur’-in) n. village about 6 miles west of Hawick along the Borthwick, centre for the surrounding parish. As a place name it has existed since at least the 14th century. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott in the 14th century (as recorded in 1410), and it is possible they were named after him. Sir William Gledstains acquired the lands in the last years of the 14th century and the Gledstains of that Ilk retained the lands through the 15th century. John Scott of ‘Weltoun’ and ‘Valis’ acquired the lands in 1502 and later in the 16th century there was a celebrated faster called John Scott who came from the area (and possibly the same family). James Scott, last of Roberton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1627. There were 9 ‘communica’cants’ recorded living there in 1650, namely John Hume, Margaret Walker, Patrick Hume, Robert Hume, Walter Telfer, Margaret Wilson, Malie Brown and Bessie Scott. The Parish was formed in 1689 out of parts of the surrounding parishes and after much dispute. In 1694 there were 7 hearths recorded there. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. Robert Scott was recorded as a resident in 1743. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Adam Scott of Galalaw (in 1785) and Robert Pott of Galalaw (in 1802) paid the Land Tax of £100. The present church, built in 1863/4, replaces a 17th century building, which stood behind the present Manse. This church was built in a time of religious and political upheaval in Scotland, before the new parish of Roberton was created. The church is built on what appears to be a former settlement, which may have been the ‘Robert’s Town’ from which the village takes its name. The farm there was part of the detached section of Hassendean Parish until 1690. The present village contains the Forman Hall, designed by J.P. Alison about 1922, and used for community events, as well as a stone pillar War Memorial. The police station there closed in 1931, but the small primary school remains. ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton’ was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and ‘Roberton: the making of a parish’ by George O. Wood in 1992 – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the name first appears in a charter of Robert III, probably in the late 1390s, it is ‘Robertistoun’ in 1430 and is usually spelled ‘Robertoun’ or ‘Roberton’ until the late 17th century, with Scott of Satchell’s writing ‘Robert-toun’ in 1688, ‘Roberton’ in 1710 and ‘Robertton’ still recorded in 1743; it is marked ‘Roberston’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Roberton’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map, as well as Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin is simply ‘Robert’s farm’, possibly referring to Robert Scott, mentioned in 1410 as a former owner).

Roberton (ro-bur’in) n. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletre-hall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Roberton’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Jamie local character of unknown age whose portrait is in the Museum.

Roberton Burnfit (ro-bur’in-burn-fi’) n. former farm just near Roberton, which was part of Hassendean Parish until 1689. It was mentioned in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. It was distinct from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, a mile or so up the valley. John Gowans was there in 1720, John Taylor in at least 1725–26. William Lawson and John Gowans were there in 1743, Thomas Govenlock in 1752, Walter Scott in 1763–65, David Scott in 1767–74, Adam Robson in 1775 and Adam Riddell in 1781 (it is ‘Rober-town burnfoot’ in 1772).

Roberton Cleuch (ro-bur’in-klooch-fi’) n. name given to the deep wooded part of the Glen Burn, just to the north of the B711 through the village.

Roberton Cleuchfit (ro-bur’in-klooch-fi’) n. former piece of land near Roberton. It is possibly the same as ‘Roberton Burnfit’ or could be the land on which the house known as ‘Cleuchfoot’ was built. It is described (perhaps in the 17th century) as a ‘pendicle of Robertoun’, once owned by Walter Scott of Woll and then by Alexander Scott of Galalaw.

Roberton Free Kirk (ro-bur’in-free-kirk) n. original official name for the Snoot Kirk.

Roberton Glebefit (ro-bur’in-glee-b-fi’) n. name for houses in Roberton at the foot of the Glebe road. Margaret Laidlaw was a grocer there in 1841, and Thomas Murray and family were also living there.

Roberton Kirk (ro-bur’in-kirk) n. church in Roberton village. The present church dates from 1863/4, designed in Gothic style by David Rhind. It is a rectangular building with small buttresses and a porch, with the bell hung over the gable. It has 2 memorial stained-glass windows and a war memorial in the grounds. The earlier church stood at the top of Manse Brae, where the cemetery is still located (and was marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was built in 1658/9 following complaints by Borthwick residents of the lack of a nearby church, which led to decades of dispute with Hassendean. A stone dated 1659 is built into the cemetery wall. It is recorded being re-paired in 1721 and re-thatched in 1738 and 1769, but the thatch replaced with slates in 1770. Flagstones were first laid on the church floor about 1789. The old graveyard is part of the modern one, and is the burial place of Chisholmes of Chisholme, Lockharts of Cleghorn and Potts of Todrig and Borthwickshiel. This replaced the earlier cemetery at Borthwick Waas, while the church replaced Kirk Borthwick, which formerly stood opposite that cemetery. The church bell has an inscription reading ‘For the Tolbuith of Melros – 1649’ and the initials of John, Earl of Haddington. It may have been brought from Hassendean (along with the new roof) in 1690, and may also have spent some time in the river near Hornshole (according to tradition). The oldest surviving communion token is small and made of lead, bearing the inscription ‘R.K.’ and the date 1705. The history of the earlier church, the formation of the Parish of Roberton in 1690, and the suppression of the Parish of Hassendean is complicated, and mixed up with national (as well as local) politics. In the early years the glebe and manse were far from ideal; a new glebe was arranged in 1721. The Manse was repaired in 1827 and it is stated in 1834 that the glebe consisted of 16 acres, and crossed the county boundary, so that the Minister could vote in both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. An ornate piece of stonework (a scroll capital), unearthed in an adjacent field in 1963 (and now in the Museum), may come from Hassendean Kirk. Note that a separate Free Kirk congregation was set up after the Disruption of 1843, this being known as ‘the Snoon Kirk’ and used until 1927, with the congregation merging with that of the main church in 1930. Roberton church was linked with Teviothead 1966–72, then linked with St. Margaret’s and Wilton South 1972–83. It became formally united with St. George’s West in 1984, which was renamed Teviot Parish in 1996. A roll of the ministry is: John Colt, from c.1663; Thomas Shiel 1689–c.93; John Ferguson 1696–99; Robert Scott 1700–1727; Henry Erskine 1728–73; James Erskine 1774–86; James Hay 1786–1825; William Berry Shaw, assistant 1801–12; Alexander Nivison 1826–44; Charles Kinnear Greenhill 1845–86; Mercer Hall 1887–1927; Æneas E. McInness 1894–1929; Cyrus M. Mortimer 1930–54; James B. Primrose 1955–60; Samuel Weir 1960–65; Robert McConnell 1966–83; Neil R. Combe 1984–.

Roberton Moss (ro-bur’-in-mos) n. boggy area to north of Roberton village. The filter works for Alemoor were built there.

Roberton Parish (ro-bur’-in-pä-reesh) n. parish around Roberton village and the Borthwick valley, created in 1689 from parts of the neighbouring parishes, including Hawick, Wilton and disjoint parts of Hassendean, including the area immediately around the village itself. Todshaw and neighbouring farms came from Hawick Parish, with Milsington, Girnwood and other farms coming from Hassendean, and Harden, Highchesters formerly being in Wilton. This followed about 3 decades of dispute, with Roberton Kirk being built in 1659, during confusion over the secession of Scott of Buccleuch (who owned much of Hassendean), but then material from the new Kirk being removed to repair Hassendean, following a decision in favour of Hassendean in 1666. The Revolution of 1688/9 and the restoration of Presbyterianism saw a successful petition to create Roberton as a Parish. The moving of the old church roof from Hassendean to Roberton in 1690 incited violence from the parishioners of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The Parish was about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, bounded by Ettrick, Yarrow, Ashkirk, Selkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Cavers and Eskdalemuir. The Parish long had part (about half) within Selkirkshire, but it was moved entirely into Roxburghshire in 1891. Parish registers go back to 1680, but the early ones are fairly incomplete, and the first part is really for Hassendean. An early Parish records is of £38 being stolen from the poor box in the unoccupied Manse in 1700. The first meeting to assess the Parish poor was in 1740. The records have significant gaps in the 1740s, 1750s and 1760s. Note that there is a separate parish of the same name in Lanarkshire, which sometimes causes confusion.

Roberton Place (ro-bur’-in-plis) n. private housing built in 1970 at the top of the West End, off Longbaulk Road, and named after the village of Roberton.

Roberton Schuil (ro-bur’-in-skil) n. school in Roberton village. It was noted at the General Assembly in 1724 that all parishes in the Presbytery had schools except for Roberton and Ettrick. The first record of a teacher being appointed was in 1765, and a new schoolhouse was built in 1790. In 1834 it was reported that ‘one-third of the parish is so situated that the children cannot attend’, since they are ‘at a distance of five and eight miles’. This situation was probably the reason for the establishment of small schools at Howpasley and Redfordgreen. A new schoolhouse was finished in about 1835. In 1836 it is recorded that there were 60 pupils in attendance. The present school building was erected in 1875 and long served as the local primary school, with several attempts to close it, and closure finally coming in 2010. The Borders Archive has School Board minutes for 1873–1919. The schoolmaster’s house in the 1830s contained 5 rooms, including kitchen. Robert Miller was schoolmaster in at least the period 1798–1800 and Robert Miller until 1822. Andrew Hogg was master there in the 1820s, until about the mid-1830s, and Thomas Anderson from 1833 until the 1860s.

Robert Paterson Place (ro-bur’-pi’-ur-simplis) n. Robert Paterson Place, housing development at Burnflat, built in 2006 and named after the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’, who was born there.

Roberts (ro-burts) n. Rev. John minister of Southdean Kirk 1951–65. His time as minister included the period when Southdean first became linked with Edgerston.

Robert’s Hill see Robert Hill
Robert’s Linn

Robert’s Linn (ro-burts-lin) n. waterfalls off the Slitrig, where the Newcastleton road crosses a deep ravine. This area is famous for jasper, which was used to make the first Burgh Seal for example, and also for fossils. Further up the stream can be seen signs of the former lime-workings that gave their name to the Limekilnedge. The Catrail ends near here, leading to speculation that the falls had some special significance for our early ancestors. The area is also sometimes known as ‘the Linnns’. The high bridge there was rebuilt in 1903 using girders salvaged from the Tay Bridge disaster. A story circulated that it was bombed by a Zeppelin during WWI, but this was unsubstantiated. The bridge collapsed and was rebuilt as an embankment in 1982. There was once a farmstead in the area, where Robert Elliot and family were living in 1794 – ‘Ca’in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o’ Robert’s Linn …’ [DH] (also written ‘Robertllin’); the stream there may be the one marked ‘The Ryillyn B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, suggesting either an error or a different origin for the name; it is ‘Robert’s line’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Robertson (ro-burt-sin) n. Alastair S., M.B.E., elder son of Nichol. He served as an apprentice designer with Blenkorn, Richardson & Co., then worked with Munrosun in Galashiels, before joining Walker, Caledon, tweed manufacturers of Belfast, where he became Managing Director. He was a keen rugby player for Hawick junior teams, and also in Northern Ireland and served in the Royal Navy during WWII. He married Mairi Charlton from Ireland. Alexander (b.1779) cooper in Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1797/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Robertson’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigirg in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1795/6) born at Makerstoun, he was blacksmith at Minto. He was recorded there in the electoral roll of 1837 and was still there in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jane T., Thomas, Margaret, Alexander and James. Alexander (b.1801/2) gamekeeper at Commonside in 1851 and 1861. He was living at Commonside Cottage since at least 1841. In 1834 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Govenlock, innkeeper at Mosspaul. Their children included James, Robert, Alexander, John, Margaret and William. Andrew (d.bef. 1808) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Jackson, who died in 1808. Their children included: Andrew (b.1763); Barbara (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Elizabeth (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Andrew (again, b.1773) Andrew (18th/19th C.) labourer at Appletreehall. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. Walter was also listed as a labourer there and was surely related. Derek (1965–) born in Hawick, grandson of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He is an ambulance paramedic, working in Hawick but living in Newcastleton. He wrote ‘The Men Who Marched Away – Liddesdale and the Great War’ (1992) and ‘All These Fine Fellows: Hawick and District and the Great War 1914–1918’ (1999). Rev. Edward Macallan (b.1928) educated at Aberdeen and Oxford Universities, he became an Episcopal minister. He was at Bristol and Swindon before coming to Hawick, where he was Rector at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk 1960–69. He left to take up a Scholarship at Queen’s College, Birmingham, moving to Alloa, where he worked as a teacher, before taking charge of Bathgate 1978–82, moving to Strathtay in 1982, Auchterarder in 1990 and retiring in 1993. Eric ‘Pinner’ (?–?) son of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He has been Captain of Hawick Golf Club and British one-armed golf champion (having lost an arm in an accident at Hawick Station). He is father of Margaret and Dawn. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Deanbrae in 1722 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Cavers Parish. Jessie (19th C.) from Kelso, she came to Hawick to assist in the shop of George Turnbull the draper at 14 High Street. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Janet Riddle died in 1810. John ‘Jackie’, ‘the Voo’ (1921–2019) son of John Proctor, he was known locally as a singer and Common-Riding stalwart. His brother Wullie also had the same nickname (which was not there in the previous generation). He was brought up in Drumlanrig Square and attended Drumlanrig School. He was an apprentice slater, served in the R.A.F. during WWII and in the 1950s opened an electrical shop near where he grew up. A great Common Riding supporter, he followed on horseback until he was 86. He may have been the last person to remember meeting J.E.D. Murray. He was Acting

Father in 1968 to Elliot Hutton. He was member of the Common Riding Committee from 1966, was President of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1973 and Callants’ Club President in 1986. He became known as the most knowledgeable person about details of the Common Riding. The avenue at the Nipkowes that the followers take was informally named after him. He married Margaret Hibbert and their children were: Jim, who was Cornet in 1977; John, who was Honorary Provost in 2002; and Margaret, who became a teacher. He had the rare honour of becoming Jubilee Acting Father in 2018. John (??– ) son of Jackie. He was a local Councillor and became Honorary Provost in 2002. Nichol (20th C.) apprenticed to Forbes Nursery, he served in WWI with the 1/4th KOSB. He was wounded on that fateful day of 12th July 1915 and invalided home. One of the last local survivors of the Gallipoli campaign, he wrote about his experiences afterwards. Peter H. (19th/20th C.) grocer who was Cornet in 1899, with his uncle James A. Henderson as his Acting Father. He was Cornet the year of the earliest film clips of the Common Riding, this being a hot and sunny weekend. He was also a member of the Teviotdale Harriers. He served as Acting Father to Francis A. Henderson in 1922. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Flight in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (1830–97) son of the shepherd at Branxholme, he was assistant teacher in a school run on Episcopal principles, taught by Rev. Campbell in Hawick High Street around 1850. He went to South Africa as a missionary, being transferred to Zululand (once a separate country) in 1860, where he founded the first mission of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This was at Kwa Magwaza, the mission being later destroyed in the civil disturbances. He lived and worked with the Zulu people for many years, gaining the native name ‘Unzimela’. He also (anonymously) compiled and published ‘Zulu Izaga’, that is proverbs, or out-of-the-way sayings of the Zulus; collected, translated, and interpreted, by a Zulu missionary’ in Durban in 1880. Around 1891 he moved to Tahlwati where he founded a mission using his wagon, and where he purchased part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. Andrew was also listed as a labourer there and was surely related. William (17th C.) servant of Robert Grierson from Clarilaw. In 1684 he was listed among local men listed as being fugitives because of attending field conventicles. It is unclear whether this is the Clarilaw near Hassendean or the one in Bowden Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Ann (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); William (b.1724); and Hugh (b.1725). Perhaps the same William married Margaret Taylor in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Binks in 1755. Perhaps the same William was a wright in Cavers in 1757. He married Jane Beatie and their children included: William (b.1755); Elizabeth (b.1757); William (again, b.1758); and John (b.1763). William (1720–97) from Dunfermline, he was brought to Hawick by local interests in 1752 to start carpet manufacturing and was entered as a Burgess in 1756. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others, renewing the partnership ten years later. The Hawick Carpet Company lasted until 1806. In 1763 he was rewarded with £40 from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures for mechanical inventions (a new kind of ‘throw mills’ and a machine for teasing wool) improving carpet manufacturing. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in Hawick in 1765. In 1770 he was the first feuar, from the Langlands Estate, of the lands of Roughheugh, where Rosalie Brae now is; he is still listed as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and still recorded that way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (even although he was deceased by then). In a description of Hawick’s trade in about 1777 it is stated that his company had 14 looms weaving carpets. He was member of the Common Riding Committee from 1966, was President of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1973 and Callants’ Club President in 1986. He became known as the most knowledgeable person about details of the Common Riding.

in 1797. He was a trustee of the East Bank Meeting House, and at one point complained about the meagre allowance allowed for boarding visiting preachers. He appears to have had a son, also William, with whom he is probably sometimes confounded. He may be the weaver William (some of the birth entries being written 'Robson') married to Jane (or 'Jean') French, whose children included Isabel (b.1756), William (b.1760), John (b.1761) and Ann (b.1763); Jean French died in Hawick in 1782. William (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. William (18th C.) quatemaster of the Scots Greys, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. William (18th/19th C.) son of William, the instigator of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He may be the William, son of William and Jean French born in Hawick in 1760. It is possible that he was the ‘W. Robertson, carpet manufacturer’ recorded as Cornet in 1778. He is ‘Mr William Robertson, jun. Hawick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. In 1789 he married Janet, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Their children included: Mary (b.1790); Jane (b.1794); and William (b.1795). He may also have been the William whose son John died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the deceased William ‘Robison’, ‘Carpetweaver’, whose son William’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1806. Perhaps a relative was the William in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1837 he was listed as leaving from the Grapes on alternate Tuesdays, bound for Glasgow, and on alternate Thursdays for Langholm, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. Rev. William (20th C.) minister of Kirkton from 1931 until about 1940. William G. (?–??) ‘Bill’ or ‘Wullie’, High school teacher and columnist for the Hawick News, writing the ‘G.R.’ column as well as covering rugby. He was also heavily involved with the Common Riding, being Secretary of the Committee in the 1950s. William S. ‘Willie’ (1904/05–91) owner of W.S. Robertson (Outfitters) Ltd. at 13–15 High Street from the 1930s until his retiral in 1973. He was an enthusiastic viola player with the local opera and retired to Dunbar. William ‘Wullie’, ‘the Voo’ (1912–2000) well known Westender, brother of Jackie. The origin of his nickname is unknown, and it was also later applied to his brother. As a boy he witnessed the terrible charabanc disaster at the Vertish in 1919. He was a dispatch rider for the R.A.F. during WWII and later worked with the Gas Board. He was known for performing the ‘Canoe Song’ from ‘Sanders of the River’. He also scratched ‘Voo’ into many trees up the Westend, several marked after his death with small brass plaques. His wife’s name was Cathy and his son was ‘Billy Voo’. Rev. W.M. (19th/20th C.) minister of Hawick Baptist Kirk 1916–19. He was said to be a fervent evangelical preacher, who sometimes packed the Theatre or the Town Hall. He served in France with the Soldiers’ Christian Association for several months in 1918. He left Hawick for Tuxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool. He may be the minister of the same name who was at Mount Pleasant in Vancouver from 1927.

Robin Repidcap (ro-bin-reed-kap) n. legendary servant of Lord Soulis, supposedly dwarfen with vampire-like fangs, whose ghost is said to inhabit Hermitage Castle today – ‘Lord Soulis he sat in Hermitage Castle, And beside him Old Recap sly – ‘Now, tell me, thou sprite who art mickle of might, The death that I must die!’ ’ [JL], ‘For doon i the dungeons Gleg Reid-cap still lurks, In plain disregard For the Office o Works!’ [DH] (cf. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot in 1623 along with Archie Henderson when they had 2 sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1694); James (b.1696); and Beatrice (b.1699). In 1694 the witnesses were James Grieve and Andrew Scott. Probably the same John witnessed a baptism for Robert Paterson in 1691. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant at Braidlie in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) married Bess Nichol in Roberton in 1727. Their children included: Janet (b.1729), baptised in Roberton; and James (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk. Matthew (17th C.) resident of Liddesdale who was mentioned in about 1645. According to the Buccleuch records ‘One Matthew Robison and his brother had just returned from an excursion into the Debateable Land after some cattle of their own, and had a sleuth-hound with them’. The hound was sent off to search out some thieves who had been challenged ‘at Catheugh and Cringleford, until they came to Carshop, from whence they stole threescore sheep’. Ralph (18th/19th C.) overseer for George Douglas of Cavers. He was ‘Mr Ralph Robieson in Cavers’ when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1794. George (b.1791) was also his son. In 1806 he was residing at Berwick when he was found guilty of theft, fraud and breach of trust. Robert (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1722 he is recorded refusing to pay a penalty and so being summoned to appear before the Session. It is possible he was the Robert ‘servant to John Pringle wright in Hawick’, who married Isobel Rae from Bransholmtown in 1721. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Robisoume’ in 1631 on a list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Yethouse in Castleton Parish. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he was rebuked before the congregation for ‘Sabbath-breaking’ and in 1697 he was chastised for ‘travelling with a load on the Lord’s day’ (also spelled ‘Robisone’; it was probably once interchangeable with Robson). Rob Lurgie (rob-hur-gee) n. nickname for Robert Wilson.

Rob’s Cleuch (robz-klooch) n. small stream in the Rule valley, which rises on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill. On the south side is evidence of a former settlement, largely obliterated by cultivation, but still observable as a roughly circular hollow. Near the head of the cleuch are the remains of a farmstead, which Walter Deans suggested may be the original site of Bonchester farm (also written ‘Rob’s Cleugh’).

Robsland (robz-lind) n. alternative name for Brighoose.

Robson (rob-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Esther was baptised in 1730. Adam (1720–1805) son of Adam and Jean Beattie. He married Isabella Oliver in Ancrum, and their children included: Robert (b.1830); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1832); Joan (b.1835); Williamina (b.1838), who probably died young; and Jeany. James (19th C.) second official singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He could be the same James who is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a cart and plough wright on Buccleuch Street, or the James living on Green Wynd on the 1841 census, or even the blacksmith, father of the composer William Inglis. James (b.1816) blacksmith in Wilton, he was son of Hawick blacksmith Thomas and Elizabeth Bookless. He was on Wilton Place in 1851 and Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jessie Inglis in 1841 and their children included: Margaret; Thomas; Eliza; William Inglis (b.1853), who became a professor of music; James Alexander (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); and Charles (b.1861), who became a minister. James (19th C.) grocer in Cavers or Minto Parish, recorded in 1852. James (b.1852/3) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was known as an authority on local antiquities, particularly arrow-heads. He was also noted as a prize-winner at flower shows. He married Janet Oliver, from Denholm, and she died in 1932, aged 80. Their eldest daughter was Mary. They are buried in Denholm. James (b.1855) youngest son of William ‘Billy Buttons’ and related to the Denholm blacksmiths. He had brothers John (Hawick Town Councillor) and William and a sister Beatrice. Like his father and brothers, he started off as a stocking-maker. He later became a teacher and private tutor. He was an expert on local history and wrote extensively about the Scottish Borders, producing several books including ‘Border Sketches’ (1891), ‘Churches and churchyards of Teviotdale’ (1893) and ‘Border Battles and Battlefields’ (1897). He also wrote ‘Teviotside legends & stories’ (1895) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth. He died in Hawick. James Scott (1921–2010) born in Hawick, son of William Scott. He attended Hawick High School and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He won a Rockefeller Foundation Studentship to continue his studies in New York, and survived his ship being torpedoed on the way. Back in Edinburgh he graduated M.D. in 1945, then served as Captain in the R.A.M.C., worked in Edinburgh and then went to Harvard University, where he carried out renal research. He married Mary MacDonald, who was a pathologist. In Britain he set up the Acute Renal Failure Service and was significantly involved in the first kidney transplants. He also advised on dialysis treatment protocols for avoiding infection. After brief appointments at Harvard and in Australia, he became Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1977, as well as President of the Renal Association. At Edinburgh he also revised the undergraduate medical curriculum and was editor-in-chief for an influential medical text book. He was a member of Edinburgh’s New Club. John (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with George, plus Walter Veitch, David D[owe?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. John ‘Jock the Laird’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose. His nickname is recorded as ‘Jok the Larde’. William is also mentioned, and surely a relative. John ‘the Pudge’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) cook to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and was elected Cornet in 1711. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for glover John Scott. He could be the John, son of Robert and Helen, born in Hawick in 1689 or the John, son of William and Helen Muir born in 1685. He is probably the John who married Isobel Huntly and whose daughter Anne was baptised in Hawick in 1718. John (1773–1834) 2nd son of James of Samieston. He was tenant farmer at Belford. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club and served with the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He married Esther, younger daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. Their elder son was Dr. James Robson-Scott of Ashtrees and their younger son was Thomas Robson-Scott of Newton. He died at Belford. John (b.1780s) son of a blacksmith in Denholm, probably Thomas. His brother Thomas was also a blacksmith there. He was an apprentice stocking-maker in Denholm, but was apparently noticed on the Green by Lord Minto, who suggested he joined the Royal Navy. He rose through the ranks, but was demoted when he allowed a deserter to escape. He spent some time at Portsmouth, where he got married to Mary Buchanan and had a son, William. He then spent 6 years serving in India, took part in the capture of Algiers in 1812 and was on the ship that took Napoleon to St. Helens. He returned to Denholm with his wife and son, ‘Billy Buttons’. John (b.1803/4) born in St. Boswells, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1837. He was listed as a joiner in 1841 and innkeeper in 1851. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was innkeeper at the Cross Keys. His wife was Jessie, and their children included William and Helen. In 1861 his wife was running the inn, and so he was presumably deceased (or travelling). John (1826–99) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. His father and brother Thomas were blacksmiths at Teviot-head and elsewhere. He was blacksmith at several places, but lastly (and for the longest period) in Denholm. He was originally based on Main Street, but in 1864 moved to the Quarry Road, where he built a new smithy, house and stable. At the age of 17 he married Mary Newton, from Gordon in Berwickshire, and she died in 1883, aged 60. He had many sons with her (8 of whom survived), including: George, who died young; Thomas (b.1844/5), blacksmith at 46 High Street; Alexander (b.1846, ‘Alec’), who died in Australia; John (b.1848/9), also a blacksmith, died in Penicuik; Robert (b.1851), mason in Hawick; Robert Newton, monumental sculptor; James (b.1853/4); William Hardie (1856–1927), who died in Canada; George (b.1858); and Mark Newton (b.1861), who became a minister. The average height of his sons was 6 ft 1 1/2 in. He also remarried and had more children. John (b.1845/6) born at Wilton Dean, he was eldest son of William, and grandson of John, who was in the Navy. His brothers were William, Precentor at Bedrule, and James, local historian. He worked as a stocking-maker and stone hewer. He was Precentor in the Denholm Free Kirk for 13 years. He moved to Hawick, where he was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward and was heavily involved in religious and temperance movements in the town. He was associated wth West Port Church, Hawick Home Mission, the Sabbath School Union, the Poorhouse Committee and the Parish Council. He married Janet Oliver from Cavers. John (b.c.1850) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was also a blacksmith and known as an athlete. He died in the prime of life in Penicuik. Mark (b.1803/4) son of John, he was born in Crailing Parish. In 1851 he was a ‘Wood Forester’ living at Ashkirk Cottage with his children Margaret (housekeeper there), Thomas and Janet, father John and lodger. Mark Newton (1861–1939) youngest son of John, who was blacksmith at Denholm, and Mary Newton. He was born and attended school in Denholm, then moved to Hawick at 16. He was a teacher there for over 8 years. He wrote poetry and also produced an article on ‘Lower Rulewater and its Associations’ for the Archæological Society. From 1886 he resolved to do ‘home’ missionary work and was stationed at Fisherrow, Musselburgh. Afterwards he was Presbyterian Minister in County Durham and Congregational Minister at Sanquhar and Cumnock. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick in the early 1900s. As well as publishing many poems in the local press, he also contributed some articles on Border life and scenes. He privately published ‘Some Denholm Families’. His first wife and child died about 2 years after he was married. Like his brothers, he was tall, being about 6 feet 3 inches. Mary nee Waugh (b.1864) daughter of Andrew Waugh and Agnes Purdom. She was assistant nurse at Weens for several years. She married Will Robson and their children included John, Agnes Purdom and Janet Oliver. Dr. Michael J.H. (1933–2017) Hawick Museum curator and contributor to the Archæological Society Transactions. He was also a founding member of the Borders Family History Society. He retired to the Isle of Lewis. He wrote several short books, including: ‘Tibbie Shiel’ (1986); ‘Ride with the moonlight: the Mosstroopers of the Border’ (1987); ‘Sheep of the Borders’ (1988); ‘No road this way after dark: George Harkness’s reminiscences of Liddesdale’ (1989); ‘Break with the past: changed days on two Border sheep farms (Langburnshiel and Riccarton) with The record book of the Riccarton Mill Club’ (1991), ‘Surnames and clansmen : Border family history in earlier days’ (1998); ‘Dykes, ditches and disputers: a history of boundary and field enclosures in the Borders’ (2004); and others relating to the Highalnds and Islands. He was involved in the founding of the Turnbull Clan Association, was the clan newsletter’s first editor and was working on a history of the Turnbuls when he died. Miss S. singer at Colour Bussings and other functions in the early 20th century. Mungo (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. Patrick (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. He was also on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick in 1437. Peter (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shepherd at Boghall and then Hermitage Bridgeg. He was also an elder at Castleton Kirk. He was listed as male head of his family at Boghall in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes, from Heiton. Their children included Peter, John, James, Agnes and Helen. Robert ‘Rob’ (16th C.) called ‘Fwll Mowth’ in a bond of 1562, where William Oliver in Lustruther and Gavin Oliver in West Houses have to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Robert (17th/18th C.) carter and merchant in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was a Burgess of Hawick. Probably the same Robert was a merchant in 1699 when he witnessed a baptism for smith James Scott. He witnessed a baptism for fellow carrier James Wilson in 1701 (where he is recorded both as a carter and as a merchant). He is probably the merchant Robert who witnessed baptisms for smith James Scott in 1704, for piper William Turnbull in 1706, for workman Robert Gledstains in 1708, for carrier James Wilson in 1712 and for carrier William Rae in 1713. John Scott was his servant in 1711 (when he witnessed a baptism for him) and Thomas Huntly (who gave evidence relating to the use of the Common in 1767) was his servant in 1715. He is probably the Robert listed as a merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for Andrew Waugh, tenant in Hawick, and in 1720 for carrier James Henderson and for smith Thomas Huntly. He and another Robert (presumably his son) were the 2 merchants who witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous in 1720. He is probably the Robert, married to Helen Robson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Marion or Margaret (b.1686); Walter (b.1687); John (b.1689); Isobel (b.1691); and Helen (b.1693). The witnesses in 1689 were Robert Douglas and Robert Wilson. Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, probably son of Robert. In 1720 the pair of Roberts witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert Chisholme. Robert Newton (b.1851) born in Eccles, he was 4th son of Denholm blacksmith John. He trained as a stone-hewer at Denholm Hill Quarry and became a monumental sculptor in Hawick. He was an active member of Allars Kirk and the Archæological Society, being particularly involved in cleaning up and preserving the remains of Southdean Kirk. He carved the WWI alabaster and bronze WWI memorial tablet for Allars Kirk. He also worked on the Johnnie Armstrong memorial at Teviothead. He married Janet Oliver, from Appletreehall. In later life he had a long, flowing beard (it is said, to protect him from stone dust), making him look patriarchal. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with John Oliver in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. Thomas (16th C.) leased ‘ane quarter and half quarter of Todrik’ (i.e. Todrig) from Thomas Scott in 1538. described as ‘in Langnewton’ in a 1612 document Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Langnewton’ in a 1612 document.

listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); Dand (b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were William Turnbull (probably related to his wife) and John Noble. In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for William Collin in Horsleyhill, in 1683 others for William Turnbull and for Adam Craig and in 1687 for Walter Runciman.

He also witnessed a baptism in 1686 for John Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and Margaret Dodds. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as occasional tenant in Bewlie in 1716 when he leased lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. Thomas ‘Tam o the Yet’ (18th C.) former resident of Liddesdale, said to be an ancestor of the blacksmiths of Denholm. A story is told of how a Liddesdale minister examining children asked who the strongest man was, and was given his name as the reply. He may have been a descendant of Thomas ‘Robison’, farmer at Yethouse.

Thomas (d.1805) son of Thomas, he was probably farmer at Calaburn. He witnessed a baptism for Richard Young (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1774. He married Isobel Young in Hawick Parish in 1764. Their children included: Margaret (b.1765); Isobel (b.1767); James (b.1770); William (b.1771); William (again, b.1772); Alexander (b.1776). He died at Calaburn, with his wife following a few days later. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet Anderson in Ewes Parish in 1783. Their children, baptised in Langholm, included Christian (b.1788), Mary (b.1790), James (b.1792), Thomas (b.1799) and William (b.1801).

Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His shop was in a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning. He was probably father of the later blacksmith of the same name, as well as John, who was in the Navy. Thomas (b.c.1790) master blacksmith in Denholm, probably the same man named on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His brother John was in the Navy. In 1815, he married Isabella (‘Bell’) Hardie, from Dargues in Redewater. They had 6 daughters and 4 sons: Thomas (b.1816), blacksmith at Teviothead and in Hawick; James, possibly blacksmith in Middlesburgh; Ann (b.1818); William (b.1824), also a blacksmith in Denholm; John (b.1826), blacksmith in several places, but longest at Denholm; Mary; Isabella, who married William Easton from Yethole; Betty; Catherine; and Helen, the youngest. He may be the smith of that name who was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He could be the same Thomas who donated a stone ball, found in Denholm, to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1777/8–1844) Hawick blacksmith, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1837 he was on the High Street and is recorded at about 9 Brougham Place on the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Bookless, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included: Helen (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); Elizabeth (1814–28), who probably died young; Isabel; James (b.1816); and William. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He was probably related to the other Robson blacksmiths. He may be the ‘Tam Robson’ who supervised the roasting of an ox at the Tower Knowe for the celebration of the coming of age of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in 1827.

Thomas (18th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the ‘Woollen Slubber’ living on the Howegate in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Thomas and Walter. Thomas ‘Tam’ (19th C.) carrier of the mail between Langholm and Hawick. He was a keen fisherman (described in John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’), and it was said that if the trout were biting then the letters to Hawick would be late! Thomas (b.c.1815) from outside Roxburghshire, he was an excise officer living on the Howegate in 1841. The other residents were probably wife Jane, mother Barbara, sister Jane and daughter Isabella. Thomas (1816–81) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. He was blacksmith at Teviothead and then at 54 High Street. He is listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater’s 1852 directory. He later moved to 5 Teviot Road and became a retailer. He married Catherine Waugh, from Southdean Parish, who died in 1906, aged 88. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.c.1843), who married William Wilson, Hawick rag and waste merchant; Thomas (b.1839), who died young; Robert (b.1840), who died aged 15; another Thomas (who also died young, like his following 4 siblings); William; Catherine; Robert; John; and Isabella (b.1850, died aged 26). Thomas (1819–94) born at Cappuck, he later farmed at Menslaws. He was recorded at Menslaws in a directory of 1868. He married Eliza Wilson Cockburn (who died in 1906) and their children were Agnes Cockburn (who died young), Catherine Home (who died in 1958), Janetta (who died in 1969) and Thomas Cockburn (who died in 1931). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (b.1817/8) carrier, son of carter Richard. He lived in Jedburgh and is recorded in 1852 operating a weekly service to Hawick, leaving from the Horse Market. In the 1860s he was operating a twice weekly service between Hawick and Jedburgh. Thomas (c.1845–c.1925) eldest son of John, blacksmith at Denholm. He carried on a blacksmith’s business at 46 High Street. Later he worked at Weensland Mills. He had some musical talent and was Precentor at East bank Kirk. He was also a noted angler and authority on local natural history. He died in Hawick at more than 80 years old. Thomas Cockburn (1869–1931) born at Menslaw's, son of Thomas and Eliza Cockburn. He was Manager of the National Bank of Scotland in London and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (19th/20th C.) of Weensland, responsible for stuffing a large fraction of the Museum’s bird collection. He could be the same as the Thomas (d.c.1925) who worked at Weensland Mills. Walter (15th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1493 when he was accused at a Jedburgh court of conspiring with Archibald Armstrong (who was already ‘at the horn’) in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. Walter Ker served as surety for him. It is unclear if this is Harden on Borthwick Water or another one. Walter (17th C.) described as a merchant in a Magistrates Court case of 1642 when Andrew Deans was ordered to pay debts and expenses to him. Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1656 for John Porteous. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Cleughhead in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. Walter ‘Wattie’ (20th C.) fiddle player from Denholm. He often played along with Tom Hughes in the 1970s. William (16th C.) probably in Hawick in 1561 when he made an agreement with David Todrig over lands in Selkirk. He is recorded as ‘William Robeson in Hauyk’. William (16th C.) tenant in Langnewton. In 1581 there was a marriage contract for his first-born son William and Elizabeth. He gave to the couple ‘half a cotland with onsets, tofts and crofts’ in Langnewton, with the lherent reserved for him and his wife Katherine King. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose; ‘Jock the Laird’ is also mentioned, and probably a relative. In 1590 he was listed among tenants in Langnewton who complained about attacks by the Kers of Newhall; James was also listed and presumably related. In about 1590 he may be the ‘William Mader of Langtoun’ listed among landed men of the Borders. William (16th C.) eldest son of William in Langnewton. In 1581 he was contracted to be married to Elizabeth Brydon, daughter of the deceased John John Brydon in Rutherford and Margaret Ker. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of James there’. William (16th C.) charged with the murder of William Hall ‘of Wollie’ (probably Wolfelee). He was recorded being in ‘Rochtiewchmynle’ (probably Roughheugh Mill) and James Langlands of that Ilk acted as surety for him, and so he probably a local man. Langlands had to pay 20 merks to Hall’s only daughter when Robson failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robison and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. John and Tom were all followers of the Jedforest Hunt when young. There is a signed portrait of him in the Horse & Hounds Inn at Bonchester. Thomas Selby (1894–1914) son of John, he attended Rugby School and was killed in WWI. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots and was recorded missing at Wytshaeete, Flanders. There is a memorial plaque to him inside Bedrule Kirk. William Douglas (1901–81) youngest son of Tom, born in Southdean Parish, he became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London 1968–73. He wrote several works on Goethe and translated Sigmund Freud into English, his wife Elaine helping him in some of this work.

Robsteed (rob-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Robsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Rob the Clocker (rob-thu-klo-kur) n. nickname of Robert Wilson of the mid-1800s.

Rob the Hecker (rob-thu-hek-lur) n. resident of Denholm in the 19th century. A story is recounted (in the Border Counties’ Magazine) of his youthful love for his native village. His father sent him to start service somewhere near Little Haugh. He was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be ‘keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh’ about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lärd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who farmed at Binks. Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lärd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, a man of gypsy descent who was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be ‘keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh’ about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lärd) n. nickname used locally in the 19th century. This may be the same man as Robert Scott, farmer at Binks – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Laird’ [HI] (note that one version of the poem has ‘Jock the Laird’).

Rob the Naig (rob-thu-näg) n. nickname of Robert Tinlin.

Rob wi the Dog (rob-wi-thu-dög) n. nickname of Robert Oliver.

Rob Young (rōb-yung) n. blacksmith Robert Young, mentioned in the song ‘Pawkie Patterson’ – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawk’er’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI].

Rochead (roch-heed) n. John Thomas (1814–78) Edinburgh-born architect, who trained with David Bryce before established his own practice in Glasgow. Here he designed many of the grandest buildings of the latter part of the 19th century, e.g. St. John’s Free Church. In Hawick he was responsible for designing the Corn Exchange, St. Andrew’s Free Church and several mansions, including Silverbuthall House, Hillhead House, Langlands Park, Heronhill, Mansfield and Thornwood. He was also responsible for the design for the Wallace Monument in Stirling.

rock (rok) n., arch. distaff in spinning, the staff holding the unspun flax or wool – ‘But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An’ that was a holding the unspun flax or wool – ‘But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An’ that was a them Rock (thu-rok) n. feature indicated on Wood’s plan of 1824, marking the northern end of the Little Haugh. It was situated somewhere between the current Little Haugh and the Drill Hall area, on the land once occupied by Teviot Crescent Mills, and was presumably a rock of some sort.

rock bool (rok-bool) n., arch. a hard boiled confection. Miss Lamb’s, from Needle Street, were famous in the early 19th century – ‘Bet Revel’s ‘rock bools’ were the best sweets he ever tasted’ [JTu], ‘The ‘bit’ of old Needle Street will appeal to all lovers of ‘rock bools’ [V&M], ‘Rock bools – Hawick’s distinctive sweetmeat’ [ECS], ‘Ee’d better heide thae rock-bools, or the bairns’ll kinsh thum’ [ECS] (see also Hawick Balls).

rockety-rowe (ro-ki’ee-row) n., arch. an amusement among children involving a rocking motion, also known as ‘wey the butter, wey the cheese’ – ‘And the old bairns’ game of ‘rockety-rowe’, when two would stand back-to-back with their arms linked and by stooping alternately, raise each other from the ground, chanting: ‘Wei butter, wei cheese, Wei a pund o’ cannle-grease, Yowe up, mei doon, This is the way to London toon’[DH], a rolling gait – ‘Thom sailor has a rockety-rowe o’ a walk’[GW], a vehicle with a rocking motion, v. to rock, sway, adj. rocky, rickety, wobbly.

rocklay (rok-lä) n., poet. a kind of short cloak with a long cape, a mantle – ‘...vielence kivers thame as ane rocklay’[HSR], ‘...an’ let thame kiver thamesel’s wi’ thair ain confuushion as wi’ ane rocklay’[HSR].

Rocksteid (rok-steed) n. former lands in 1632, listed among the possessions of Francis Beattie in Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Twa steids Over and Neather, with the pertinents’ thairof called Roksteid’, along with ‘Neirland’ (probably Netherraw) and ‘Podotoun’ (probably Paddington).

Rockvale (rok-väl) n. name for group of houses on Liddesdale Road (previously Lynnwood Road), being Nos. 1–6. The first house (No. 4) was built sometime before 1857 and took the name in the 1880s, the others being built in 1926. They were originally reached from the main road via a foot bridge over the mill lade. They were demolished in the 1980s (the origin is presumably from the rocky protuberance, now a disused quarry, overlooking the valley).

Rockview (rok-vew) n. house in Denholm, off Minto Road, which was a blacksmith’s in the early 20th century.

Rockville (rok-vil) n. another name used for Rockvale.

roddin (ro-din) n., poet. a track, path – ‘...gae they wayes furth bie the fit-roddins o’ the flok’[HSR].

Rodds (rodz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Roddis’. At that time the tenants were John and James Elliot and the lands were valued at one merk. It is unclear where this is, but it was listed between Ramsiegill and Roughley, so it is possibly the same place as ‘Red-dadenn’.

Rodes (rödz) n. former farm near Southdean, although the precise location and name are uncertain. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and John Storie in 1694 (it was ‘Roods’ and ‘rods’ in 1694).

Rodger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in Clarilaw. It is possible he is the Andrew, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Roberton (but probably Hassendean), included Isobel (b.1683) and Margaret (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Henderson and John Armstrong. He is probably the Andrew who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 and witnessed another for John Turnbull in 1688. Andrew (18th C.) farmer on the Cavers estate who, before about 1737, made early winnowing machines or corn fanners, inspired by descriptions of a Dutch model (perhaps communicated to him by Douglas of Cavers). These may have been the first mechanical means of separating grain from the chaff in the whole of Britain. Another version tells how in 1733 he found a machine discarded in Leith by James Meikle (brought back from Holland) and made one of his own 4 years later, supplying them for £3 each by 1740, having given up his farm. He thereafter sold them in the area, although there were religious objections that they were supplanting the Lord’s creations (i.e. the corn should be ‘fammed by God’s wind on the hills’); for some time in Hawick, when anything went wrong it was blamed on ‘the deil or Andrew Rodger’ and the machine was called the ‘deil’s wind’. In 1723 he obtained a property in the Sandbed from his uncle James Rodger, which had previously belonged to Langlands. On either this property or elsewhere at the Sandbed he established a shop. His descendants traded in fanning machines there for about the next 100 years. Some dispute with the Hawick Parish Session (which is unclear) resulted in him giving up the title for another Sandbed property about 1724 (perhaps part of the same property) where the Grammar School would then be built. Andrew Turnbull and John Pringle were charged with valuing his house for the Kirk Session. A portrait of him exists (he is also referred to as ‘Rogers’ and sometimes called ‘William’). He was recorded living at Cavers itself in 1723 when one of his children was baptised. He was said to have lived at Cavers Mains or Little Cote. He is probably the Andrew, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Marion (b.1711), William (b.1713), James (b.1715), Margaret (b.1717), Betty (b.1720), Robert (b.1723), an unnamed child (b.1725), Hugh (b.1727) and Ann (b.1729). He was at Eastcote in 1727 when his son was baptised. Andrew (d.1819) flesher in Hawick, who had sons Robert and John. He is probably the Andrew, married to Betty Grieve, whose children included: Jean (b.1769); an unnamed child (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); William (b.1773); and Robert John (b.1775).
first child was baptised in Wilton Parish and the rest in Hawick. The witnesses in 1771 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Andrew whose uncle Andrew Scott died in Hawick in 1778. Andrew (b.1785) son of John and Catherine Cairns, was born at Whitmuir Hall. In 1816 he married Margaret Snail in Selkirk. Their children included: John (b.1822), born at Hyndlee in Southdean; and Jessie (b.c.1831), born in Southdean. It seems likely that Andrew (b.c.1829), born in Southdean Parish, was also his son. Andrew (b.1801/2) born in Traquair Parish, he was a shepherd at Sundhope and also toll-keeper at Fiddleton around the 1860s. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Priesthaughshiel. In 1851 he was at Sundhope and in 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Fiddleton, with his son James as the toll-keeper, and his daughter Joan also there. His wife was Violet Rae and their first 6 children were baptised in Yarrow Parish, then 4 in Ewes Parish and the rest in Castleton and Cavers. They included Margaret (b.1824), James (b.1826), William (b.1828), Andrew (b.1829), Violet (b.1830), John (b.1832), Walter (b.1834), Elliot (b.1835), Isabella (b.1837), Robert (also known as Rutherford, b.1839), Isaac (b.1842), Adam (b.1844), Euphemia (b.1846) and Joan (b.1847). Andrew (b.1816/7) son of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 he was a handloom weaver living on the Back Raw, in 1851 was a stockmaking on Burn Road in the Dean and in 1861 was a frame-worker living on Dean Road. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Scott in Wilton in 1839 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1840); Helen; Robert; Isabella; Gideon; Mary; John; and James. Andrew (b.c.1825) flesher on the Howegate. He may have been related to the earlier flesher of the same name. In 1841 he was listed along with his siblings Walter, Nancy, Helen and Elizabeth. He was at about 23–25 Howegate in 1851, along with his sister Helen. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (as ‘Rodgers’) on the Howegate. Andrew (b.c.1829) born in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he was a farm labourer at Greenhead Cottages, Selkirk and in 1851 was a shepherd at Sunderland farm. His wife was Margaret from Ashkirk and their children included Philadelphia (b.c.1850), Margaret and Mary. Andrew (b.c.1830) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was a game watcher. In 1851 he was living with his in-laws at Netheraw in Castleton Parish. He married Frances Rodger and their children included Andrew and Matthew. Andrew (b.c.1835) born in Edinburgh, son of Andrew from Earlston. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Havelock Street. His wife was Euphemia (from Langholm) and their children included Andrew. James (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the the James who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 in Roberton Parish (but actually the Hassendeau part). James (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Kirkton Parish in 1721. Perhaps the same James was recorded in Cavers in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is possible he was the James who in 1723 sold his property in the Sandbed to his nephew Andrew. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Utter Parkhill’ in 1782 and Parkhill in 1784. His children included: James (b.1779); Jane (b.1782); and Helen (b.1784). James (b.1826/7) son of Andrew, he was born in Selkirk Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as toll-keeper at Fiddleton, living there with his father as well as his sister Joan. James (19th C.) married Jessie Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1853. James (19th C.) flesher in Hawick. He went bankrupt in 1873, with the Commissioners for his estate being John Nichol and Walter Forsyth. Maj. James (1864/5–1930) worked in the woollen industry. He married Bella, only child of A.K. Innes. He was probably son of John and Margaret MacRaw. Janet (d.1787) servant of Dr. William Scott, who lived at Brieryhill. She died in Hawick. John (b.c.1750) resident of Whitmuir Hall when his 2 sons were baptised in Selkirk Parish. In 1778 he married Catherine (1752–1816), daughter of James Cairns; she was born at Dodhead and died at Oakwood Mill. Their children included: Andrew (b.1785), who lived in Southdean Parish; and John (b.1787). John (1787–1869) son of John, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. In 1809 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Brunton at the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. Most of their 10 children were born at Howpasley and baptised at the East Bank Kirk: Christina (b.1810); Henry (b.1813); Nelly (b.1814); Helen (b.1817); Mary (b.c.1820); John (b.1822); Peter (b.1824); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1826); Dickson (b.c.1828); and James (b.c.1830). He emigrated to Canada and died in Blenheim Township, Ontario. John (18th/19th C.) butcher recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. Robert, also a butcher, was listed with him, suggesting they were brothers. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. Probably the same John was a butcher of the Back Row, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed on the Howegate. Matthew ‘Mat’ (d.1968) joiner in Deanburnhaugh. He took over from Adam Elliot. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as a weaver in Whitchesters in 1704. In 1704 he also witnessed a baptism for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He gave evidence in 1710 relating to a fight in St. Mary’s between 2 other weavers. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. He married Janet Glendinning in 1701 and their other children were Janet (b.1701), John (b.1703), William (b.1704), Janet (again, b.1706) and Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and James Grieve in Commonside and in 1708 were gardener William Scott and carrier Henry Paterson. Robert ‘Duke’ (19th C.) possibly the same Robert recorded as butcher at the Back Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He took over as town drummer from Caleb Rutherford, about 1830 – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM]. He may be the butcher, recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; John was listed along with him, suggesting they may have been brothers. In 1799 he was a butcher among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. Walter (b.c.1820) flesher on the Howegate. He was living at about No. 17 in 1841, along with his siblings Nacey, Andrew, Helen and Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included: Robert (b.1670); William (b.1672); Bessie (b.1674); and John (b.1684). William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (but probably the part that was Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included James (b.1684) and Elizabeth (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were James and Andrew, who were surely related to him. The 1687 witnesses were 2 William Turnbulls. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and Margaret Scott. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen ‘Murie’ and their children born in Hawick Parish included: Bessie (b.1687); and an unnamed son (b.1688). William (17th C.) ‘pedder’ (i.e. Peddlar) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the William married to Helen ‘Murie’ or the one married to Janet Dryden. William (17th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for Ashkirk Parish. This suggests he was probably a Kirk elder. He is probably the William who married Margaret, daughter of William Scott, in Wilton Parish in 1711. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: William (b.1717); and Bettie (b.1719). William (18th/19th C.) farmor at Wester Parkhill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the William whose wife Mary Stavert died in 1795. William (d.1805) described as ‘weaver and shopkeeper to Mr. Oliver’. It is unclear which Oliver this was. Perhaps the same weaver married Helen Scott in 1763 and had children: Margaret (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1768); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1764 were William Scott and Robert Renwick (who married Elizabeth, perhaps his sister). William (d.1837) wright of Hawick, probably a descendant of Andrew. His employee, wright John Scott, was listed among Hawick men balloted for the Militia in 1797. It is possible he is the ‘Roger’ whose premises near the top of Walter’s Wynd are shown on Wood’s 1824 map (also written ‘Rodgar’; see also Roger).

Rodgers (ro-jurz) n. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Kirk Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. Mary (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories.

Rodgie (ro-jee) n. Rev. Andrew (1777–1861) from Abernethy, son of Thomas and Margaret Wright. He was minister of the Green (or West End) Church for 53 years, ordained in 1807, following the death of Rev. Dr. Young. He may have been in Hawick since late the previous year, having also been called to Jedburgh. He was well known for receiving the Cornet and his supporters every year at Myreslaw Green, sending his servant round with the bottle, giving them ‘A guid, cauld cauker, Frae a man that was nae Quaker’, in a verse that may have been added to Balbirnie’s ‘Auld Song’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed at Myreslawgreen in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Often referred to as ‘Rodgie o the Green’, he was known for insisting on strict observance of the Sabbath (which included no fiddling, secular singing, cooking or walking). In 1856 he was presented with a purse containing 90 sovereigns on the occasion of his jubilee. He married Isabella Summers in Hawick in 1825 and they appear to have had 4 children: Isabella (b.1826); Margaret (b.1828), still living in Hawick in 1861; Thomas (b.1831), who died young; and Mary (b.1837), also died young.
A portrait of him exists. His mother-in-law died in Hawick in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in the cholera outbreak). His wife is recorded in about 1874 (along with Janet Brown, perhaps a relative) as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. William (1836/7–73) said to be from Hawick, he may have been related to Rev. Andrew.
He worked as a banker in Bombay. In 1863 in Hawick he married Mary Elisabeth, daughter of Dr. Walter Graham. He is recorded being present at the famous otter hunt organised at Hawick in 1863. He died of dysentery in Jerusalem on his way back from Bombay. A cross was erected in the cemetery at Jerusalem in his memory (also written ‘Rogie’).

Rodman (rod-mun) n. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he had remission for crimes. He was listed as being from Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep and cattle from 4 separate farms. His surety was Thomas Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hun-Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep
remission for crimes. He was listed as being from
at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he had remission for stealing sheep from 2 other farms, with his surety being Thomas Rutherford in the Grange of Abbotrule. This surname seems to be otherwise unknown in the area.

Rodono (ro-dō-nō) n. house on the western bank of St. Mary’s Loch. The estate was an ancient barony dating to at least 1236, and was long held by the monks of Melrose. There was a nearby chapel (at Chapelhope, at the head of the Loch o the Lowes). In 1442 it was listed among lands whose fees were held by Melrose Abbey. In 1484 it was contained in a list of lands to which the monks appointed David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert as Bailies, with Sir Walter Scott appointed to the same of-ice in 1519. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538
there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Ringwoodfield) and in 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £82 12s 8d. In 1557 Robert Scott of Bowhill paid rental to Melrose Abbey for lands here, namely ‘Langbank’, ‘Quithoup’, ‘Litillhoup’ and ‘Mekillehoup’. The lands were valued at £25 in about 1564. In 1566 Queen Mary and her husband Darnley held a council here, when they mentioned the scarcity of deer seen on the royal hunting trip and emphasised the penalties for others shooting the animals. When it was bought by John Scott of Teviotbank in the mid-19th century he revived the old name. The mansion was built in 1866 for this John Scott (also called ‘of Rodono’), but he died before it was completed. It was then owned by Thomas and William Turnbull of Fenwick and sold in 1890. The Earl of Wemyss rented it out as a hunting lodge.
For a while it was leased by Robert Pringle, of Pringle of Scotland, who used the name for his factory in Hawick, as well as for the unshrinkable process Pringles applied to underwear. It later became a hotel, known for wild society functions, with stories of a Model-T Ford being driven out onto a frozen St. Mary’s in 1934 to later sink, and also said to be where Mandy Rice-Davies of the Profumo affair is alleged to have hidden out in the 1960s. It was sold by Lady Elizabeth Benson in 1994 and renovated in about 2000 (the name probably comes from the old Scots for the rowan tree; it was ‘Rodanoch’ in 1235/6, ‘rodon’
in 1442, ‘Rodonow’ in 1484, ‘Rowdonov’ in 1519, ‘Rodonald’ in 1524, ‘Rodonoland’ in 1525 and 1553/4, ‘Rodonald’ in 1538, ‘Rowdondal’ in 1540, ‘Rowdono’ in 1557, ‘Rodonaldland’ in 1574 and ‘Rodondo’ in 1670).

Rodono (ro-, ri-dō-nō) n. Rodono Mills, part of the Pringle’s knitwear operation on Teviot Road.
The original buildings of Walter’s Wynd were built for John Nixon & Sons in 1869 and renamed ‘Rodono’ by Pringle’s (after the hunting lodge at St. Mary’s Loch, which Robert Pringle leased).
There was a fire there in 1939, destroying the offices and much of the company archives. The buildings were developed to their final massive (and architecturally unremarkable) size through extensions in 1952, 1955, 1958 and 1968. However, it was closed in 1976 due to costs, with all the machinery being moved to Glebe Mills and administration to Victoria Mill. The building was demolished in 1980/1. The rubble was used to fill part of Weensland dam and raise the ground level opposite the sewerage works. The land was used for the new Health Centre in 1989. The name was also adopted as a trade name for the shrinkresistant process applied by Pringles to underwear from 1899.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Parson of Rule. He may be the earliest known priest of Hobbirk Parish. Sometime in the period 1165–78 he witnessed a charter for Richard Comyn, relating to Holyrood Abbey and land in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Rogero’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted a stone of wax annually to the church of St. Cuthbert in Durham.

Roger (ro-jur) n. grief of Hassendean who witnessed a charter around the 1220s for the family ‘of Hassendean’. His name is given as ‘Rogero’. It is possible that his ancestors became Grieves.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Douglas (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 he witnessed baptisms for wright William and in 1793 he (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for the same William, who was surely related (probably his cousin). He married Elizabeth Harkness and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1806. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Thomson. In 1724 he married Janet, daughter of merchant James Simpson. Their children included: Janet (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1727). The witnesses in 1725 were merchant William Oliver and carrier John Simpson. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Haig and in 1745 another for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for James Stoddart. He may also be the James who in 1774 witnessed a baptism for James Easton from Branxholme. He married Janet Dickson. Their son Andrew was born in 1745, with the witnesses being merchants Charles Tudhope and William Riddel. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for carrier John Simpson. He married Jean Haig and their children included: Mary (b.1745); and Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker Thomas Scott and weaver Robert Douglas. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Craw and their son John was baptised in 1674. Robert (16th/17th C.) of Burnfoot Mill. He is mentioned in the 1612 complaint of the Baron of Hawick to the Privy Council, regarding taxation in Hawick and the imprisoning of the Baron’s officer, Alexander ‘Wischart’ in St. Mary’s steeple. The Magistrates were let off this latter charge, since Wischart was guilty of striking Roger, presumably at the market while trying to collect customs. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He married Helen Duncan and their children included Janet (b.1701), as well as probably John (b.1703), William (b.1704) and Janet (again, b.1706). The witnesses in 1701 were weaver John Swan and Robert Langlands. Robert (d.1808) wheelwright in Hawick, son of Andrew. His father could have been Andrew ‘Rodger’, manufacturer of agricultural implements from the early part of the 18th century or he could be the Andrew, married to Betty Grieve (whose son Robert was born in Hawick in 1775). He may be the Robert who married Elizabeth Wallace and had Ann (b.1770) or the Robert who married Margaret Davidson and had William (b.1773). He is probably the Robert, who, along with Douglas, witnessed a baptism for wright William in 1793; he may have been brother of Douglas and cousin of William. His death is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (d.1482) court musician of James III. He was knighted and appointed to the Privy Council. The King gave him the estate of Traquair in 1469. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. In 1478 he disposed of Traquair for only 70 merks to James Stewart, Earl of Buchan, uncle to the King. However, a few years later, when the King was on an expedition against the English, he was one of the royal favourites who were captured by a group including the Earl of Buchan, and hanged at Lauder bridge. William (15th C.) leased the lands of Winterburgh in 1488, along with Robert Scott, with Sir David Scott as pledge. The lease continued in 1490 and 1492. Probably the same William was bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wilzem Roger’ in 1500 when he was one of the witnesses for a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope. Probably the same man was witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for their lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. William (17th C.) resident at Midsheils according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1730); Isabel (b.1731); Isabel (again, b.1732); William (b.1739); Robert (b.1741); Andrew (b.1745); and Janet (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1731 were James Purcell and Thomas Scott, in 1739 were merchant John Cavers and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1745 were merchants...
Francis and John Ruecastle. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1763 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Margaret (b.1764), Elizabeth (b.1768) and William (b.1770). William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for John Laing. He married Marjory, daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson) in 1776 and their children included: Agnes (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1781); Janet (b.1785); Ann (b.1787); Willemina (b.1789); and Marjory (b.1793). The witnesses in 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 were Bailie Walter Hardie and Douglas (who was surely related) and in 1793 were wrights Robert and Douglas Roger (perhaps his cousins). He is mentioned as a wright in Hawick in a Selkirk court case of 1809. He may have been son of James. William (18th/19th C.) describer of a version of how Hawick men accounted for themselves at Flodden, as recounted in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850). He may be the same William who married Marjory Donaldson (sister of Agnes, Isabella, Elizabeth and Jane), and had 7 children, including Janet, who was the 2nd wife of manufacturer Alexander Laing. He may also be the William who is shown as owner of property on Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map (see also Rodger; formerly sometimes ‘Rocher’).

rogerowse (ro-gu-ows) adj., arch. given to freedom of speech, outspoken (noted by J. Jameson).

Rogers (ro-jurz) n. Ann (b.c.1790) milliner at 26 High Street, along with Mina. They are recorded on the 1841 census. Rev. Douglas Malcolm (1916–95) born in Leeds, he was trained at Yorkshire United Independent College and became minister of Providence Chapel, Cleckheaton in 1948. Thereafter he served as minister in Halifax and Sunderland, before becoming minister at Hawick Congregational Kirk 1969–71. After Hawick he was minister at Girlington, Yorkshire. He married Edith Doreen Speck.

Thomas (120th C.) general agent in Dundee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, suggesting that he had a local connection. In 1827 in Langholm he married Janet Elizabeth Renwick. In 1839 he was in Dundee jail, fighting his creditors.

Rogie see Rogie

rogues-money (rögz-mu-nee) n. a tax raised on counties for the expense of arresting and imprisoning criminals. The local use and administration of these funds appears to have been a matter of some debate – ‘Paid Mr Weir, to carry his expenses to Jedburgh for the rogue-money relating to the brig’ [BR1740].

the Rogues’ Cairt (thu-rögz-kär) n. spring-cart that used to be sent round to the neighbouring parishes for transporting prisoners to Jedburgh Jail. This started around the 1840s.

the Rogues’ Hole (thu-rögz-höl) n. occasional name used for the Town prison (e.g. in 1782), being under the former Town House (also called the Thiefs’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Roll-aboot (röl-u-boo’) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie litls a sang Tae Shauthles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

the Roll o Honour (thu-rölf-o-nur) n. record of local men who fell in the 2 World Wars, held in the Museum. The original was executed by Graham Johnston, W.R. Lawson and William Wallace MacGregor. It consists of 8 pages of illuminated vellum in a stand of oak, containing the names of 693 who were killed in WWI. The names are arranged alphabetically by Regiment. James Haig executed a similar design for the WWII roll.

the Roll o the Clans (thu-röl-o-thu-klawnz) n. list of prominent and landed men in the Borders and Highlands in the records of the Privy Council for 1590, with an abbreviated version in the records of the Scottish Parliament for 1587. Its full title is ‘The Roll of the Clannis that hes Capitanis, Cheiffis, Chiftenis, quhomeon they depend, of tymis againis the willis of thair Landislordis, alsweill on the Bordouris as Hielandis, and of sum special personis of branches of the saidis Clannis’. Like other records of the time, it shows that Border families were considered to be clans as much as their Highland cousins. It also forms an invaluable record of local lairds at the time, listing about 100 Lairdships in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire, naming many men explicitly. The 1587 document lists those in the Middle March as: [Francis Stewart] Earl of Bothwell; [Sir Andrew Kerr] Laird of Ferniehirst; [Archibald Douglas] Earl of Angus; [Sir Walter Scott] Laird of Buccleuch; [Sir William Douglas] Sheriff of Teviotdale; [Walter Turnbull] Laird of Bedrule; [Hector Turnbull] Laird of Wauchope; [William Maxwell] Lord Herries; [Walter Scott] Laird of Howpasley; George Turnbull of Hallrule; [Walter Ker] Laird of Littledean; [Sir James Douglas] Laird of Drumlanrig; and [Walter Chisholme] Laird of Chisholme. The document of about 1590... is headed ‘Landit Men’ and contains more names in each area, as well as covering the whole of Scotland. In the ‘ Roxburgh and Selkirk’ section there are 101 men on the list, some named explicitly and some with just the Lairdship given. Locally the list includes the Lairds of Aikwood, Alemoor, Allanhaugh, Barnhills, Bedrule, Belses, Beflie, Billerwell, Bonjedward, Braiddie, Bucleuch, Burnfoot, Cavers, Chamberlain Newton, Chisholme, Dryhope, Fahnash, Glack, Gledstaines, Goldielands, Haining, Hallrule, Harden, Harts-garth, Hartwoodmyres, Harwood, Hassendean, Headshaw, Horsleyhill, Howpasley, Huntyl, Langlands, Mangerton, Minto, Newton, North Syn- ton, Reidheugh, Riddell, Robertson, Stirches, Stobs, Synton, Thirlestane, Timpendean, Tofts, Toor, Tushielaw, Wauchope, Whithaugh and Whitriggs.

Romanno (rō-maw-nō) n. Matthew (15th C.) notary responsible for the sasine for the Couln- lands, sold by Margaret Cousin to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. The ‘precept’ was witnessed in Hawick, and the sasine itself signed at Branxholme. He was described as a presbyter of Glasgow diocese, and so was probably a local church official. He wrote his name as ‘Matheus de Romanox’. He also wrote the sasine for Simon of Routledge selling the Birkwood and Burnflat to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448.

Romanno Bridge (rō-maw-nō-brij) n. village in Peeblesshire, in the northern part of the Scott- ish Borders, south of West Linton. The ‘bridge’ is over the Lynne Water. The Romannos of that Ilk came from here. John Scott in Whitehaugh had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The lands were owned by the Murrays from 1513 until 1676. In 1677 it was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shaws (it is ‘Rommanos’ in 1502 was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shaws (it is ‘Rommanos’ in 1502 and ‘Ralmanno’ in 1526).

the Romans (tʰu-rō-munz) n., pl. empire builders based in Italy, who conquered England, and made in-roads into Scotland. They occupied parts of Britain from the middle of the 1st cen- tury to the beginning of the 5th. Agricola’s con- quest of the North started in 78 C.E., as part of which he built the forts at Raeburnfoot and New- steads, driving a wedge between the Selgovae and Novantae tribes. Although there was no major Roman settlement in the immediate neighbour- hood of Hawick, there are many signs of nearby Roman habitation, including at Ruberslaw, Craik Cross and Aikwood. There is a Roman road running from Raeburnfoot to the Borthwick valley via Craik Cross, although it is unclear where it continued on the near side of Craik. However, in 1948 the remains of a stone-built culvert (used to divert the stream under the road) was discov- ered on the left bank of the Borthwick after flood- ing, midway between Craik and Northope Haugh; this has subsequently washed away. There has been a suggestion of a continuation of this road up the Borthwick valley and then via Blawearie to Hangingshaw Hill, then between Woo Law and Groundistone Height, proceeding to Harelaw, and connecting to Newstead. There is another possible Roman road connecting Eskdale with Teviot- dale, running via Eves Doors to Caerlensrig. Sev- eral Roman altar stones were reused in the building of Jedburgh Abbey. Trimontium near Mel- rose was an important fort in the 1st and 2nd centuries. Hadrian’s Wall is about 40 miles to the south, and Dere Street only about 12 miles to the east. At Teviothead a Roman coin (of Vespasian) was found in 1856, and more recently a denarius of Augustus was found near Fulton Tower. A bronze swastika brooch from the late 2nd century was found at Denholmhill around 1930. Nearer to Hawick, 2 temporary Roman camps were revealed by aerial photography in the 1960s, these lying near Cavers Mains and East- cote farms. The Romans pulled out of the Bor- ders by 369 C.E., which was effectively the start of the Dark Ages, and the period of Roman occupa- tion was quickly forgotten. However, there have been several local finds of artefacts. The leg of a large bronze statue was found at Milisington in 1820, along with the bronze base of another statue (suggested to be loot from a site in England, and described in 1887/8). A bronze horde was un- earthed on Ruberslaw in 1863 (2nd century, now in the Museum), as well as a ‘first brass’ of Ves- pasian found nearby, 2 bronze coins uncovered on Hallrule farm, and a couple of dressed stones from near the summit. More recently a Roman coin was found in a garden at Maclagan Drive, and a Romano-British carved stone at Appletree- hall. And in 2011 a horde of 228 coins from the time of Vespasian to Commodus were found on Synton Hill – ‘Lords of the earth, the Roman le- gions wheel Their glittering files, and stamp with gory heel, Bafe the keen javelin’s edge in purple dew; While Death smiles dimly o’er the faulchion blue’ [JL].

Roondaboots (roon-du-boots) n. Roundabouts, former name for a house in Chesters in Southdean Parish. It is listed on the census for 1841 and 1861 and on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It may be the place also known as Turnpikehead.

definition of the Roond Close (thu-roond-klȫs) n. probably the oldest of the High Street closes, at No. 17, named after the rounded archway for which it was once notable. It also once held one of the minor gates giving access to the town. Staples for the iron gate were visible until about 1840. The building to the east bears a triangular stone with the inscription 'J.S.M.D. Feare Gode. 1600', taken from the front of the house when it was rebuilt in 1871; this pended house probably partly defended the close. It was also known as the Wide Close in the early 1800s, and around this time contained a public house (called the Royal Oak or Blue Bell). In the mid-19th century it contained Brunton’s contractors and joiners. Many of the houses were demolished in the 1930s, followed by the lower cobbled area, including the I.O.G.T. hall and further buildings after the War, to make way for the Rodono Mill factory. Steps were built to retain the right of way, and Rodono itself was demolished in 1980, and the Health Centre built in its place.

Roond Croft (roond-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land near Hawick, referred to by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900. The location is uncertain, but perhaps close to the Common, or possibly related to an earlier form of the Roond Close.

Ropelawshiel (röp-lu-sheel) n. cottage in Craik Forest, recorded from at least the early 18th century. It is located where the Ropelaw Sike joins the Rankle Burn, and within the boundaries of the former farm is the source of the Rankle Burn. It was used for several years as a cottage by Chay Blyth and is now a holiday home (the origin of the name may be from roplaw, a young fox; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Roper (rö-pur) n. Moses (c.1815–91) born to an African American mother and a slave-owning father, he grew up as a slave, being tortured after many attempts to escape. Finally escaping successfully, he made it to New York and later sailed for Britain, where he settled in London, learned to read and write and published a narrative of his life's story. He gave many lectures around Britain, starting in 1836. He spoke at the Green Kirk in Hawick in March 1846. William (19th C.) Hawick man who emigrated to Highlandville, Massachusetts. He returned for the Common Ridings of 1887 and 1888, and sang a Hawick song (to the tune of 'Bonnie Dundee') at the 1888 Dinner. He is probably the son of Joseph recorded aged 7 on the Mid Raw in 1841. He may be the William listed among Hawick men who met with Robert Ewen in Guelph on his Canadian tour of 1878; he is recorded singing 'Teribus' along with fellow Teri George Murray.

Rope Sike (röp-sik) n. stream that rises between Windburgh Hill and Brown's Hill and flows roughly to the south to meet the Flosk Burn near Langburnshiel.

roplaw (rop-lu) n., arch. a young fox (said to be only a Teviotdale word, noted by J. Jamieson; it is possibly the origin for 'Ropelawshiel').

ropple (ro-pul) v., arch. to run or grow up rapidly (of vegetation) – 'Roppled up, grown up with rapidity, large, but not strong in appearance, Teviotd.'[Jo].

Rosalee (rö-zə-lee) n. house built in the mid-19th century on the slopes above Langlands Road near Ladylaw. It was the home of the Rev. John Thomson and his family – ‘Sae ilka true Teri three cheers let us gie, For the Mr. and Mrs. o’ fair Rosalee’ [WW] (sometimes written ‘Rosalea’).

Rosalee Brae (rö-za-lee-brā) n. road above Langlands Road leading to Rosalee, Ladylaw and some other large houses. The ‘Dog Hoose’ used to stand on the left side of this road and ‘Saut Haa’ on the right.

Rosalee Cup (rö-za-lee-kup) n. locally ladies bowling trophy.

Roscins (ros-kinz) n. Thomas (13th C.) granted the lands of ‘Bethrull’ in Roxburghshire in 1357 by William, Earl of Douglas. This seems likely to be the same as Bedrule. However, there is no other record of a surname like ‘Roscins’ connected with this area.

Rose (röz) n. Arthur (1634–1704) son of the minister of Birse, his name is also written ‘Ross’. He graduated from Marischal College in 1652 and became minister of Kinearny in 1656. He then became minister of Old Deer, then Rector of Marischal College, minister of St. Mungo’s, Bishop of Argyll and Bishop of Galloway. In 1679 he succeed Andrew Burnet as Archbishop of Glasgow. And in 1684, after Burnet’s death, he succeeded him as Archbishop of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. After Parliament abolished episcopalianism in 1689 he continued to preach secretly as an Episcopalian and died in the Canon-gate. He is buried at Restalrig.

Rosebank (röz-bawngk) n. name given in 1865 to the houses built at Thorterdykes in the years 1861–64 on part of the old Tryst ground, and also on the land known as Haggishaa. The houses were built by Thomas Reid, mason and farmer at St. Leonard’s. The name may derive from thickets of wild roses previously growing there.

Rosebank (röz-bawngk) n. house in Denholm. It was built for William Robson, who was a stocking manufacturer in the village. It was later home of John W. Turnbull, clothier.

Rosebank Road (röz-bawngk-rōd) n. name given in the early 20th century to the road between the Loan and Burnflat Brae, after the houses called Rosebank, which already stood there. The north side was built up in 1927 and the south in 1929. The street is where the riders divide for the Chases, married men to the front and single men to the rear.

Rosecroft (röz-kroft) n. house on the Dean Road just outside Denholm, which was formerly called Rosebank. It once housed a stocking-shop.

Rosedale (röz-dāl) n. Turgis (d.bef. 1131) referred to in a charter of about 1125. He was Lord of Liddel, holding lands in what would later be called Liddesdale, and was probably a descendant of the earlier Baron, Turgis Brundis. He founded the house of Augustinian canons of Liddel (an offshoot of Jedburgh Abbey) in a place that came to be known as Canonbie. He gave the religious house of Liddel (as well as the church of ‘Kirchanders’, i.e. Kirkandrews) to Jedburgh Abbey when it was founded in about 1138. He was succeeded by his son William. William (12th C.) son of Turgis, who was Lord of Liddel, he was a baron from Yorkshire. He is recorded as being ‘de Rosedale’ in a grant of about 1160 in which he gave his lands of Kershope to the hospital of St. Peter in York. The grant is confirmed in a copy made in the early 14th century, which describes the boundaries of the lands, giving some interesting historical details. The grant is confirmed by Malcolm IV, and there are referred to as ‘Greshoppa’ (but surely the same place). In the 1150s he founded the Cistercian priory usually called Rosedale Middleton. Along with his wife he also granted lands of ‘Greshoppa’ in Yorkshire to the same religious house, as confirmed by King Malcolm. He may be the ‘Guido’ who, with the consent of his son Radulf, gave 42 acres (where the Esk and Liddel join) to Jedburgh Abbey, along with free fishing from the ditch of Liddel to the church of Liddel. His wife was Godehild and he had a son, Turgis, who is the last known member of the family.

Rosenberg (rö-zen-berg) n. one time pseudonym of Adam Grant. Sometimes also ‘M. Rosenberg’, it was used by him in for example, 1898 and 1900, for attribution as composer for ‘Hawick’ and ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’. Presumably Grant believed that a Germanic name added musical gravitas. The name continued to appear up until about WWI, even although Grant was using his own name on other publications from the early years of the 20th century. It is probably a coincidence that Mrs. Roseburgh, who lived near Galashiels, signed her poetry ‘M. Roseburgh’ in the mid-to-late 19th century (or else the name is a coincidence).

Rosenberger (rö-zen-bur-gur) n. Frederica ‘Mrs. R.’ (20th C.) from Budapest in Hungary, she left because of Nazi persecution. She worked with Walter Marcus in Vienna and followed him to London in 1939. She became manageress of the Marcus factory in Hawick, which was set up in 1940. Her husband failed to secure a work permit for Britain and her 2 children, Vera and Bob were sent over using church groups and the Red Cross. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but a brilliant dressmaker. The family lived in the West End. She moved to London after retiring, but regularly returned to visit Hawick. Robert ‘Bob’ son of Mrs. Frederica, the Hungarian manageress at Marcus’s dress-making factory. He was taught at the High School and Edinburgh University, becoming a Professor of Bacteriology.

the Rose o Teviotdale (θu-rov'-o-tee-yi'-dail) n. local temperance society of the late 19th century, one of the lodges of the Good Templar movement.

Rosevale Cottages (rov-vål'-ko'-ee-jeez) n. group of houses off Mansfield Road, on one side of Rosevale Street, built in 1882, and named in 1883.

Rosevale Street (rov-vål-stree') n. short street between Mansfield Road and Mansfield Square, named in 1888, either for thickets of wild roses that grew there or just invented. The housing here was built by Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. to provide convenient housing for workers at Eastfield Mills.

Rosfritha (rov-fri-tha) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Sægifa) at the Chapel of St. Cuthbert (identified with a site near Cogsmill) mentioned by a contemporary historian as coming from ‘Hawich’. This was written around the 1170s, and referred to an earlier time, possibly much earlier. Hence the pair are (assuming they existed) the first named residents of Hawick. The story was that they went to the old chapel on the feast day of the saint, to join others in celebration, after the previous fast day. However, in the evening their candle went out, and after some remonstration, they prayed to Cuthbert, at which a new lighted candle appeared. Sir James Murray called his 4th daughter ‘Rosfrith’, inspired by this story (also transcribed as ‘Rosfrithi’).

rosit (rov-zi') n., arch. resin, especially the material rubbed on the bow of a fiddle, rosin – ‘A name wi’ a scrauch o’ rosit in’t, the skirl o’ tormentit gut . . . ’ [DH].

rosity (rov-zi'-ee) adj., arch. of the nature of resin or ‘rosit’ – ‘. . . the space within and around these was built up with whins and rosity faggots’ [JAHM].

rosity-fingers (rov-zi'-ee-fing-urz) n., arch. name applied to someone who is light-fingered or sticky-fingered.

Ross (ros) n. Rev. Alexander L. (19th/20th C.) assistant minister of St. Cuthbert’s 1904–09. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop in 1909. His time as Curate in Hawick ended when he became Rector at Rosyth.

Andrew (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh, the ‘Ross Herald’, i.e. one of the officers of the Court of the Lord Lyon. Around 1903 he was charged by the Town Council with researching into the historical basis for the Hawick Flag. His report endorsed the views of Craig & Laing and others, resulting in the square blue and red flag being replaced with a more accurate duplicate of the 1707 flag – ‘a pennon, azure, a saltire or’. Rev. Donald G. (d.c.1940) assistant minister at St. George’s Kirk from 1911, taking over as senior minister on the death of Rev. Johnman in 1923, and remaining until 1935. He came to Hawick from Pollok Street Church in Glasgow. Although he was formerly the assistant, due to the declining health of the senior minister, he in fact took on most of the ministerial duties. He ‘kirked’ the Cornet in 1912 and 1914, and oversaw the construction of the new church 1913–16. He was the first minister of the church to reside at the new Manse at Broomknowe. He was apparently a great elocutionist and gave very powerful sermons. He celebrated his silver wedding anniversary in 1925, but his wife (Williamina Martin) died in 1934. Due to declining health he resigned in late 1935 and retired to Edinburgh. There is a memorial window to him in the church and another to his wife.

Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Rae in 1793, but her death is recorded in 1795. J. Ian (1941/2– ) from Hawick, he grew up at Hassendeanburn and worked in a grocer’s shop in Hawick while at school. After school he was an apprentice compositor at the Hawick News. He later worked as a proofreader in several places, including Kenya and Zambia. He came back to Hawick in 1986. Sgt. James (18th/19th C.) professional soldier with the Royal North British Fusiliers. He was brought to Hawick in 1798 to work with the new Hawick Military Association of volunteers. James (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk, coming from Free St. David’s in Edinburgh in 1856 and serving until 1879. Rev. John Wallace (1886–1974) born at Turakina, New Zealand, son of Rev. John, he studied at the University of Wellington and was ordained in 1913. He became Chaplain-Captain in the New Zealand Expeditionary Force. Apparently unpopular with the men on a troop ship sailing to Suez, the captain threatened to throw him overboard! He served as Chaplain with the 5th Royal Scots at Gallipoli. He returned to New Zealand in 1919, but later attended classes at New College, Edinburgh and was inducted minister at Burroughs, Berwickshire in 1922. He became minister of Denholm Kirk from the time of the reunion (1929, when it became part of the Church of Scotland) until 1953. In 1957 he moved to London to live with his daughter. He married Ruth Marjorie McGlashan in 1922. He died at Lewisham, London. Margaret ‘callit Nuris’ (17th C.) local woman who was attacked by Bailie James Burn in April 1641, having her forehead cut in the process. Burn accused her of being a witch, for being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was fined and put in the stocks, which must have been unheard of for a sitting Bailie. Her nickname was presumably ‘Nurse’.

the Rotary Club (ˈrō-ta-rē-klōb) n. international social and charitable organisation of businessmen and professionals, began in the U.S.A. in 1905, typically restricted to men in their 40s or above. Hawick is in District 1020, and the local club regularly met in the Buccleuch Hotel.

Rotten Moss (ˈrō-tən-mos) n. area to the west of Whitfield and east of Piggah Hill.

Rottenraw (ˈrō-tən-rāw) n. former name for land near Hundalee, once a home of the Rutherfords. In 1638 it was given by John Rutherford of Rottenrow to Robert Scott (‘in Burnfutt near Tiviot’) who was marrying his daughter Anne (spelled ‘Rattinraw’ etc.).

Rotten Sike (ˈrō-tən-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, rising near the boundary with Dumfriesshire and running north-east past the farm of Whisgills to join Tinnis Burn.

Rotten Sike (ˈrō-tən-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Knowe and joining the Tweed Burn north of Tweedenden farm.

rough (ˈrūch) adj., arch. rough – ‘...ane peck of insufficient humillcorn meill, out of which there was dight ane choppin dish full of rough seids’ [BR1675], ‘Ay whow, bairns, it’s a rough nicht. How the wund’s souchin’ i’ the chumla heid!’ [JAHM], ‘...And it’s dreich, gey dreich on this rough hill heid Whaur the cauld air gars ane nither’ [WL] (also spelled ‘dreech’).

Rouchesters (ˈrō-ch-ə-tər-s) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is unknown, but it was listed between Strange and Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants was Patrick Oliver and the lands were valued at 12s 6d (it is ‘Rouchchestris’ in 1541).

Roughcleuch Rig (ˈruf-kleych-rig) n. ridge to the east of Linhope farm, lying between Lightning Hill and Wether Law.
Rough Gill

Rough Gill (ruʃ-, rowk-ɡɪl) n. small stream in western Liddesdale, rising on Cooms Fell and running roughly south-eastwards to eventually join the Black Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rough Grain (ruʃ-, rowk-ɡræn) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Mid Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on the large scale 1899 Ordnance Survey map.

Rough Grain (ruʃ-, rowk-ɡræn) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Hartsgarth Fell and runs roughly to the north-west to join Chapel Grain and then the Twislehope Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

rough-heid (ruʃ-, rowk-heed) n., arch. a turf or divot, especially a piece of peat cut from the surface and with the grass still attached – ‘These are to give notice to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they are discharged from casting dry land soils of any part of the Common or roughheads (except roughheads in the Mosses), and from casting turfs or diviots on the Common ...’ [BR1816], ‘An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Roughheugh (ruʃ-, rowk-ɡɪw) n. former name referring to the area in Wilton between Howlands and Easter Howlands, and from Ladylaw to Lockieshedge, lying ‘contiguous to the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’, and bounded on the south by Wilton dam. So it extended roughly from Wilton Path to Old Wilton Churchyard, on both sides of Princes Street. The name was also used for the corn mill there, and the later hosiery mill. The name dates at least to the mid-17th century and is preserved in a house on Greensidehall Road. In 1650 there are 14 ‘communicants’ recorded on a map of local parishes, when it is ‘rouch-heuch’; they are Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet ‘Symontonn’, John Redford, Thomas Clerk, Mary Armstrong, John Clerk, Isobel ‘Howatson’, Robert Riddell, Margaret Shortreed, Janet Ellioe and Janet Redford. John Miller was recorded there in 1724 and George Wallace in 1737. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Haugh lying ‘between Dangerfield and the rough heugh land as described by hillocks’. The lands were part of the estate of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold off in parts around 1780: the Waulk Mill to John and William Thomline; the Corn Mill to Robert Scott; and other parts to James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson. John Clerk was living there in 1780. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) the lands are listed as consisting of the Waulk Mill and Corn Mill and 7 other parts, owned by John Thomline (plus William by 1811), Robert Scott, James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson; together they were valued at around £140. The Laird of Langlands held some enclosures in the area, which were sold off to Rev. John Thomson in the mid-19th century. By the early 20th century the name was no longer in use (the origin is presumably from the roughness of the land around the steep bank).

Roughheugh Haugh (ruʃ-ɡɪw-ɡɔuf, rowk-ɡɪw-ɡɔuf) n. former name for part of the Under Haugh – ‘There’s teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ [JAHM] (this also inspired the Hugh MacDiarmid poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’).

Roughheugh Mill (ruʃ-ɡɪw-mɪl, rowk-ɡɪw-mɪl) n. former corn mill, near the south end of Commercial Road. It was formerly a possession of the Baron of Wilton, specifically Langlands of that Ilk. It was recorded in an agreement involving Langlands in 1581. It is shown in a crude sketch of 1810, with the miller’s cottage alongside (and a water wheel, with the adjacent waulk mill also having a water wheel). It is labelled ‘Rough Heugh Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. The building that held the water wheel was once on the Burgh boundary with Wilton; in the early 1700s the Flag used to be unfurled and given 3 cheers there after the visit to the Coble Pool on Common Riding Friday. William Cavers was miller there in 1694, with Simon Wright the under-miller, and Thomas Rutherford also listed there. William Scott was there in 1709. Alexander Scott (probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester) was tenant in the mid-18th century and then his son Robert Scott was tenants after him. Robert is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1811 it was valued at £26 9s. It was still an active mill in the 1820s, when Pigot’s directory lists the millers as Walter Chisholm and David Fiddes. Thomas Goodfellow and David Fiddes were millers there in 1837 and 1841, with John Fiddes there in 1851. Soon after it (or a Roughheugh Peth  Roughlee n. Roughlee, an old name for Wilton Path or the Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Roughhope (ruf-hop, rowch-up) n. former farm in the upper Borthwick valley, lying on the Roughhope Burn, to the south of Eildrig. These are the lands of ‘Reuhop or Philipp’ sold by John Turnbull to Martin Elliot in 1579. James Oliver was there in 1785 and James Lunn and family in 1796 (it is ‘Roughshope’ in 1795).

Roughhope Burn (ruf-hop-burn) n. stream that rises on Philhope Fell, running roughly north-west to join the Eildrig Burn, and hence the Borthwick Water. There are some old field boundaries about half-way up the stream. The stream fed the reservoir, later known as Philhope Loch, which was used to boost the level of the Borthwick Water and the Teviot.

Roughhope Rig (rowch-up-rig) n. ridge just to the west of the B6357, shortly before coming to the Note o’ the Gate pass. There is a picnic spot near there. On the ridge is a linear earthwork, about 400 m long, running from the Wigg burn north-east to the main road.

Rough Joke (rowch-jök) n. nickname for John Oliver in the late 1700s.

Rough Knowe (rowch-, ruf-now) n. hill between the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, to the east of Ladhope. It reaches a height of 481 m and contains a block that acts as a triangulation point.

Roughlaw Sike (rowch-law-sik) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It is mentioned in a charter of 1606, defining the west side of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. It is unclear where this is exactly, but perhaps the small tributary of the Hallrule Burn that runs past Heathfield cottage (it is ‘Rowchelawyske’ in 1606).

Roughlee (ruf-lee, rowch-lee) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, between Falside and Edgerston. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester Roughlee. Simon Young from there had remission for plundering neighbouring farms in 1493, John Young for similar crimes in 1494/5 and Simon again in 1502. The lands of ‘Wester Roughleis’ were valued at 20 shillings in 1538, with ‘Mydroucheis’ at 30 shillings and ‘Rowchlenweke’ at 40 shillings. The 20 shilling land of ‘Rouchleis vocatarum Westir Rouchleis’ is recorded in 1539, as well as the 30 shilling land of Midroughlee and the 40 shilling land of Roughleeneuk. William Douglas was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for 1538 and in 1539 claimed £10 pertaining to his inheritance. ‘Lyonell Olyver’ is recorded there in 1544. Michael and John Young was there in 1571/2. David Laidlaw was there in 1588. Robert Douglas of Brieryards was infefted in the lands in 1588 and was served heir to his father John in 1606. The cottage there was once part of Falside farm. This is probably the ‘Ruchlie’ recorded in 1669 when the tenants were Robert and John Storie and Adam Bell. Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Oliver were tenants there in 1694. The ancient settlement on the eastern slope of the hill to the east of the current farmstead may be the former Easter Roughlee; it consists of a roughly oval enclosure, with 2 possible hut sites inside, but has been largely destroyed by forestry plantation. A little to the west is Roughlee Strip, where there are 2 enclosures visible in aerial photographs. To the north there was a plantation bank, now covered with forest. Further south, on a shelf overlooking the Jed Water, are the remains of another farmstead – ‘And her eye was fixt on the Klesly brae ’Till the red sun glinted fair; – On the Roughlee height, where now in sight, A knight did onward bear’ [JTe], (also written ‘Roughlea’, it is ‘rochlie’ in 1493, ‘rochlee’ in 1494/5, ‘rochlie’ in 1502, ‘Rouchleys’ in 1538, ‘Roughleys’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlie’ in 1571/2 and ‘Roughlie’ in 1694; ‘Eister Rowchlie et Wester Roughlie’ are recorded in 1606; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rucly’).

Roughleeneuk (rowch-lee-newk) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, to the east of Roughlee. It was valued at 40 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. It was burned by an English raiding party in 1544. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryards from his father John in 1606. Ninian, John and Lyle Young were tenants of ‘Rouchneuck’ in 1669 and Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. Andrew Ker ‘of Roughlieneuk’ was recorded as deceased in 1731. George Davidson was farmer there in at least 1790–91. James Davidson (‘Dandie Dinmont’) lived there in the late 1700s and William Scott was farmer there in at least 1794–97. George Scott was also there in 1797 and Charles and George Scott were tenants in 1799. The farmstead was still marked on maps in 1863, and is still visible in aerial photographs, with a plantation bank 150 m to the south (it is ‘Rowchlenwke’ in 1538, ‘Rouclenewke’ in 1539, ‘Rowle Newke’ in 1544, ‘Roughlenwoik’ in 1606, ‘Roughlinnock’ and ‘ruchlinuck’ in 1694 and ‘Roughlawnook’ and ‘Roughleenook’ in 1797; probably the place marked ‘Nuik’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Roughleenock’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘neuk’ could just refer to a remote place).

Roughleeneuk Hill (rowch-lee-newk-hil) n. Roughleeneuk Hill, hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 241 m, in a bend of the Jed Water to the east of Roughlee. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map showed a farmstead there, comprising 5 buildings and an enclosure, the outlines still visible in aerial photographs.

Rougly (ruf-lee) n. farmstead to the east of Hermitage, off the Roughley Burn. The tenants of the Englishman John Thirlwall were given protection by Edward III in 1365, suggesting that these lands were formerly among those held by Comyn. In 1541 the tenants were Ninian and John Elliot. Anthony Elliot was tenant there in 1622. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1632. John Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 160 acres, bounded by Laws, Riccarton, Taylorcleuchead, Shaws, Millburnholm and Stitchelhill. The farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one and another house was marked, perhaps around Dean’s Cleuch. Henry Haliburton was there in 1778. The farmer in 1794–97 was Robert Township. John Little was shepherd in 1835. There was once a large burial cairn there, which was dismantled, the cist found inside being acquired by Lord Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassendean and Brieryyards among other villages.

rough runch (rowch-runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum.

Roughside Hill (ruf-sid-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Synton Mossend. It reaches to more than 270 m.

Rough Slack (rowch-slawk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Birny Fell and running south to join Walton Burn.

the Rough Wooin (thu-ruf-woo-in) n. sobriquet for the rampage of English armies in 1544 and 1545 throughout the Scottish Border country. This was an attempt to force the Scots to allow the wedding of King Henry VIII’s young son Edward to the infant Mary Queen of Scots. Among other places, the abbeys of Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Melrose were left in ruins, and in Hawick Drumlanrig’s Tower was about all that survived the conflagration. The attacks were led by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and looted, along with 192 towers and villages in the Borders, with around 400 Borderers being killed. The devastation was even worse in 1545, when Teviotdale was laid waste, including Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassendean and Brieryyards among other villages.

rouk (rowk) n., arch., poet. mist, fog, smog, drizzle, vapours – ‘He gars the rouks ascen’ frae the en’ s o the yirth … ’[HSR], ‘Fire an’ hail; swaw an’ rouk; stormic wund hi’fillin’ his wurd’[HSR], ‘… where yin canna sei bye yin’s neb for skomfeeshin rouks an drowes’[ECS], ‘Whan the smuiky rowk fyles a’thing’[GW], ‘… to re-pay us for a’ the derk and weet, the glaur and rouk, o wunter’[DH], ‘… Herd them cannily, stot and stirk, Frac Tweedsie braes in the rowk and mirk’[WL] (also written ‘rowk’).

rouky (row-kee) adj., poet. misty, drizzly, damp, foggy, muggy – ‘The inn-man, easin the sneck, Peered into the rouky nicht’[WL] (also spelled ‘rowky’).

rountree (rown-tree) n., poet. rowan, the mountain ash – ‘A rountree bus oot o’er the tap o’t; A glassy pule to kep the lap o’t’[JBS], ‘And tho’ rountree was tied to the coo’s horns an’ tail, Her udder gaed eild ower the milk-maiden’s pail’[BM1901] (also written ‘rowntree’; cf. rauntrei).

roup (rowp, roop) n., arch. an auction – ‘his goods an effects wull be selt be public roup’, ‘… and after ye roup, the money then gotten should be given in’[PR1722], ‘Received roup of the seats in the kirk for 1755 . . . 0 10 6’[BR1755], ‘...While high-bred dame – bereft o’ hope – Is doomed to stand a public roup – The highest bidder gets her’[JR], ‘A sale o’ furniter, a roup O’ spuds at Black’s Hotel. I’ll tell ye a’ aboot it if Somebody brings my bell’[WP], v. to sell by auction. Up until the early 19th century ‘Roups’ in Hawick were announced after Sunday services at the Wester kirkstyle by the town bellman, standing on the ‘loupin-on stane’. By the mid-19th century this practice had been replaced by a printed notice attached to the church door – ‘...that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be rouped ...’[PR1722], v., arch. to cry hoarsely (from Old Norse; also spelled ‘rowp’).

roupit (row-pee’, -pi’) pp., arch. auctioned – ‘An’ when that Coffer-Ha’ was roupit, The devil’s in’t! our birkie bought it!!!’[RDW].

roupit (row-pee’, -pi’) pp., arch. cried hoarsely – ‘She ran up to the pat an’ tried to coup it, While ever anon she raised an’ she rouped’[BM1901].

Routing Burn (row’in-burn) n. Routing Burn, stream that rises on Roan Fell on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, and flows into Hartsgarth Burn. Along the stream lie 2 shepherd’s bothies, 2 sheep-folds, 6 shieling huts, a pen and a ‘knocking stone’.

Routing Burn (row’in-burn) n. Routing Burn, small stream in the headwaters of the Twislehope Burn. It rises near Pike Fell on the border with Dumfriesshire, only a couple of miles west of the other stream of the same name.

Routledge (row’, rowt-, roo’-li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s as ‘Jamie’s Adam Routledge’. He was one of a group of Englishmen complained of by Thomas Armstrong of Tinnisburn for stealing livestock from him. He could be the ‘Addame Rutledge of the Netelcueghe’ listed among Routledges of the English Border in 1583. Andrew (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650, for Alexander Turnbull and Isobel Scott. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His name appears as ‘Routlage’ right after John, who was presumably related. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded along with John in 1473 as a deputy of the Constable of Bewcastle. How he was related to the Hawick members of the family is not known, but these appear to be the first recorded members of the family near Bewcastle (possibly the eponymous home). Around 1478 they were let the lands and castle of Bewcastle by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, with instructions that they maintain the Border there. During a land dispute of 1538 an old witness in Bewcastle stated that ‘...60 years bipast when Liddisdale men came into England and were sworn to King Richard at Carlisle’ that ‘let all the lands of Bewcastle to Cuthb and John Routlege, Robt Elwald, and Gerard Nyxon, and before that’...‘as well the said castle as all the lands belonging to the same of long time lay waste’. David (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale. He was witness to Adam Hepburn being served as heir to his father Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. He is recorded as ‘Dauid Routlech, sergeando’, suggesting he was a local official of the area. Probably the same David was also witness to William Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. He may be the same man as the Bailie for Douglas of Cavers. David (15th/ 16th C.) bailiff and later factor for James Douglas of Cavers. Possibly the same David ‘Rucclarch’ or ‘Rutlethe’ held 8 participates of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter; these were on the south side of the public street, and represent one of the largest amounts of any single owner. He may be the David ‘Routlesche’ who in 1512 he was directed to be one of James Douglas of Cavers Bailies to give sasine of Denholm to William Cranston. He may be the same David who was listed on a pardon by James V in 1526, along with a great many Scotts, Kerrs, Pringles, Turnbulls and Ellios, as well as John, Archibald and Simon ‘Routlage’. Probably the same David was listed among tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court case of 1541. Probably the same David was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550 (for the lands of Colifort). Isobel (16th C.) widow on the English side, recorded in 1581. Her house was apparently raided by 30 Ellios, who stole 4 oxen, 6 cows, her only horse and all her possessions. James (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and Simon son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. Probably the same James was also called in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5. James (16th C.) holder of half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument of resignation of 1529/30 (not a century earlier as apparently written), William ‘Roulech’, son of the deceased John resigned all rights to these lands, the ‘kyndness’ of which was held of this James. He was surely related to John and William, as well as to other nearly contemporary local Routledges. He may be the ‘Jacobi Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland for 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He could be the James (‘on trows’) who, along with John (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance. James of Todhills (16th C.) from Cumbria. In 1540 the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants complained about a raid he led into Rulewater, where ‘Thome Oliver’ and ‘Will Kowman’ were slain at Abbotrule. John (15th C.) recorded in 1471, along with David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong, when they gave pledges for Walter to appear at court in Selkirk. He was probably related to Walter in some way. John (15th C.) recorded in 1473, along with Cuthbert as deputies to the Constable of Bewcastle. John (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was called by the Sheriff, William of Douglas, but failed to appear. At the same time Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon were also called. He could be the John ‘in trows’ who, along with James (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance; he seems to be distinct from John, son of Simon in the Trows, who is recorded separately in 1502 (and may have been his nephew or similar). John (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. John ‘Black John’ (15th/16th C.) Englishman who along with John Dalgleish and others was brought with his accomplices to burn Branxholme some time prior to 1510. In that year Dalgleish was convicted of this and other crimes and sentenced to hanging if he could not find sureties. He is recorded as ‘Black John Routlesche’ (which in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ is suggested to be ‘Roughcliffe, or Rowleff’, but seems clearly to be a transcription error for ‘Routlesche’) and was a ‘traitor of Levin’. He was probably related to the Simon and Matthew who burned the Scott’s seat at Bucleuch about 20 years earlier. John (d.bef. 1530) ‘kyndlie’ tenant of half of the land of Crook in Cavers Parish. He may have been son of Simon in the Trows. He was succeeded in this tenancy by his son William, who resigned his rights to his superior (Douglas of Cavers) in 1529/30. They had the ‘kyndness from James, who must surely have been a relative; his surname is recorded as ‘Routlech’. Probably the same John ‘roucelisch’ failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon, were also called and failed to appear, and were surely related. Probably the same John is recorded as son of Simon (who was ‘in le trowis’) in 1494/5 when he failed to appear again, with Douglas of Cavers being fined; his father Simon, as well as James and Simon (perhaps his brothers) were also called at the same Justice-aire. He may be the ‘Johannis Rutlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. In 1502 he is recorded as son of Simon in the Trows ‘nunc in le cruk’ (i.e. now in the Crook) when he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, and was fined for not appearing. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Archibald is listed after him and so probably related. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) son of Mungo, an Englishman. He was entered as a prisoner to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1562, by Archibald Elliot of Falnash and his son. John (16th C.) listed in 1585 as ‘Jjonn Rowclege’ among a list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell who had respite for all their crimes. He is listed along with Armstrongs from around Eskdale. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Elliot of Copshaw, recorded in 1605. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a grocer and spirit merchant of the High Street recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was living at about No. 50 with his wife Margaret in 1841. His widow Margaret was still living there in 1851. He may be the same John who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left, along with Rev. Wallace, in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Peggy, daughter of stockingmaker William Beck; she secondly married M. Thompson. They had no children.
Routledge

John (19th C.) farmer at Greenholm in Liddesdale in 1868. Mals (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. It is unclear if her first name was short for something more familiar. Margaret (b.1786/7) married John, who was a grocer and spirit merchant. By 1851 she was a widow living on the High Street. She was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. Martin (16th C.) Procurator of the Scottish Nation in the University of Orleans from 1537. He described himself as being of the Clan Scott and was the last of his family to sign his name ‘de’, in his case ‘de Roothluge’. Matthew (15th/16th C.) son of Simon, who was tenant at the Trows. In 1494 there was a decree against them to repay the value of the livestock and goods they had taken or destroyed from the house and farm at Buccleuch. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Simon at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. He may be the ‘Mathei Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with James, John and Simon (with his name appearing first), as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He was recorded again at the Justice-aire in Hawick, as son of Simon in the Trows, when he was once more surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. Matthew (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is listed in the sasine of the Barony of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name is recorded as ‘Matheo Rouclhis’. He may be the same Matthew, son of Simon, who was charged with plundering and burning Buccleuch in 1494. Nichol (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Nicholl Routleche’ along with a number of Nixons and others of Liddesdale who has remission from their crimes from the Privy Council in 1516. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry. His only surviving son Jack was a Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. who was killed in 1917. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Thorlishesope who appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1650s. Whether he was a descendant of the earlier Routledges is unknown. He married Isobel Huntly and their children included Bessie, James (b.1657) and Michael. Simon (15th C.) Burgess of Hawick who was listed among the witnesses to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there recorded as ‘Simone Rowtleg’. In a charter of 1433 he is referred to as ‘Simon of Routluge burgess of Hawik’ when William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick feued the lands of ‘Byrkwode called the oxgang’ near the present day Duke’s Wood and the lands of Burnflat to him. He is also mentioned in a deed of 1447 as a Burgess, when he conveyed part of the land of the Branxholme estate to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The land was known as ‘Cusingland’ and was the dowry of his wife Margaret (or ‘Mergrete’) Cousin (or ‘Cusyne’). In 1447 he also feued Birkwood (incorrectly transcribed in one record as ‘Birdwood’) to Sir Walter, and is again referred to as a Burgess of Hawick, and as a Bailie in the 1448 sasine. In 1453 he was one of the 2 Bailies who witnessed the first known sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick. In 1455 he is one of the Burgessess of Hawick listed on the notarised document attesting that John of St. Michael had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchester; he is there referred to as ‘burgensis ac sergendus’ of the Barony of Hawick, this second title presumably equivalent to Bailie or Baron’s Bailie. He is mentioned again in 1456, this probably referring to him witnessing an earlier retour for Whitchesters; there he is ‘Symon de Routluge de Hawik’. He is one of the earliest recorded people with this surname, and also the earliest known Burgess of Hawick. He may be closely related to the Simon Simon (15th C.) witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas in 1464/5. He is recorded as ‘Simone de Routlgh’ and one of the ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. ‘esquires’). Since the sasine was made at Cavers, he was surely a nearby landowner, but it is unclear whether he is the same as the earlier Burgess and Bailie of Hawick or the later Simon from Trows. It may be the same man who was ‘Simone Routleych’ when he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. Simon (15th C.) possibly related to the earlier Simon. He is recorded in 1484 on the panel of inquest for James Douglas as heir to his father Sir William of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick. He may also be the ‘Symone Rowclugh’ recorded in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Simon ‘rouclisch’ who William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was called to enter at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, and not appearing, Douglas was fined (similarly John, James son of Simon, and Simon son of Simon, were all failed to be entered, and were surely closely related to him, Simon and James probably being his sons).

He may be the same Simon ‘in the trowis’ who was subject was charged with plundering Buccleuch in 1494 along with his son Matthew (with their sureties the Douglases). He is recorded as ‘Symonis rouclisch in le trowis’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his sons John and Simon also failed to appear at the same Justice-aire, as well as James (probably also his son). Simon (15th C.) recorded as ‘Symon routlage i the trowis’ (and probably not ‘prowis’ as stated by William Fraser) in 1494 when Walter Scott, grandson of Sir David of Buccleuch, obtained a decree from the Lords of Council against him for the theft and plunder (‘spuilzeit’) of the manor and farm of Buccleuch. His son Matthew is also mentioned. Presumably this happened before David Scott died 2 or 3 years earlier. They stole 5 horses, 40 cows, 40 sheep, 2 oxen, large quantities of food etc., including 80 stones of cheese and butter, and ruined the manor, leaving ‘nocht on bed or baulks’. Given the similarity of the names (Simon and Matthew), it seems likely this family was closely related to that of the Hawick Burgess, possibly the same. Their residence appears to have been the Trows (and not ‘Prows’, known to be connected with the Bewcastle branch of the family), since Douglas of Horneshole acted as surety for the 1494 decree. He may be the ‘Symonis Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, James and Simon and many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. His son Matthew is recorded in 1494/5 and 1502. His son John, ‘now in le cruk’ (although it is unclear whether this refers to the father or the son) is recorded in 1502, when he was fined for failing to appear in court. Additionally, he is ‘in le trows’ in 1502 when John and James in Trows served as surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and were fined for his non-appearance. It seems likely that Simon in Trows and Simon in Crook were the same person. Simon (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and James son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. In 1494/5 he failed to appear again (as well as his father Simon and James and John, who were probably his brothers). Simon (16th C.) tenant in Crook in 1592. He is recorded as a witness to the instrument of sasine in which Martin Douglas inherited Crook from his father. He was surely related to John, who was associated with Crook about 60 years earlier, and probably also a descendant of Simon, tenant in the Trows. It is possible he is the same man as Simon in the Trows. Thomas (16th C.) subject of a bond for him to be entered as a prisoner in 1561/2. The bond was between several Elliots (Archibald of Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin, John of Copshaw and Elder Will) Sir John Kerr and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Elliots promising to deliver him to ‘the irn yettis of the Fairnehirst’, and was signed at Hawick. A few months later Elliot of Falnash in another bond entered John, ‘son to Mungo Routlache, Englisman’ as a prisoner, so this seems likely to have been a relative. The same man (or a son perhaps) could have been recorded in 1581; in a raid by the Elliots of Liddesdale, a Thomas of ‘Todholes’ (i.e. Todhills in Cumbria) was taken prisoner and his horses and oxen stolen. This same Thomas of Todhills complained in 1582 of having livestock and goods stolen by ‘Kimmont Jock, Eckie of Strubholm and Jock Armstrong of Calhill’. The same Thomas of Todhills was injured in another raid by the Armstrongs of Mangerton, Whitehaugh etc., in 1583; several other Routledges were targeted, including George of ‘Greinhileshe’ and Anthony of ‘Nutticleugh’, with Alan being killed and William, John and another Thomas being injured ‘in peril of death whereof one hath his legge cut of’. Walter (15th ) recorded in 1471 when John, as well as David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong gave pledges that he would appear at court in Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1640s and 50s. He may have been related to the contemporary Robert, and possibly was a descendant of the earlier local Routledges. He married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included 2 Michaels, Janet, Isobel and Margaret (there are many older spellings, including ‘Routledge’, ‘Rouchligis’, ‘Rouclesche’, ‘Rouclisch’, ‘Routelych’, ‘Routlthee’, ‘Routlage’, ‘Routlgh’, ‘Routlaige’, ‘Routlach’, ‘Routlche’, ‘Routleche’, ‘Routlege’, ‘Routlesche’, ‘Routlich’, ‘Routlooch’, ‘Routluge’, ‘Rowclugh’, ‘Rowtleg’, ‘Rowtugh’, ‘Rutlugh’, ‘Rutlethe’ and ‘Rutlethee’).

the Routledges (tlu-rowt-li-jeezj) n. prominent family in the Debateable land, near Bewcastle, which spread to much of the Borders. The only remnant of the early seats of the family is the name of the Routledge Burn, a couple of miles east of Kershopefoot. Nearby is the hamlet of Routledgeburn, Routledge Burn Bridge and Routledge Rigg. The earliest known member of the family is ‘Simon de Routledge’, a Burgess and Bailie of Hawick, recorded in several documents of the 1440s and 1450s. Simon and his son Matthew lived at the Trows, and were charged in 1494 with plundering the manor and lands of Buccleuch. There is a record of a payment made from the Treasurer of Scotland to ‘men of Levin callit Rowlteyche’ in 1491. Another early member of the family is John ‘Routlech’, who was already deceased in 1529/30 when his son William resigned his ‘kyndlie’ tenancy of half of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish, which they held of James (surely another relative). There were other people with this surname, probably closely related to the earlier Simon, holding prominent positions in Hawick over the next century. David held 8 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick’s 1537 Charter, probably the largest of any single laudowner). Sir Christopher Dacre, with a band of 500 men, set upon them in 1528, and although he failed to dislodge them from the lands of Tarras, the family appear to have dispersed afterwards. There were later Routledges in Hawick, e.g. the families of Robert and Walter in the 1640s and 50s, but whether directly related to the earlier Burgesses is unknown.

rovín (rō-vin) n., arch. a roving, a set of lightly twisted fibres in the process of being spun, also called a ‘slub’ or ‘slubbing’ – ‘The rovings were pieced together by boys on a leather rubber at the back of the Billies …’ [JGW].

Smith notes that ‘ti rowl is more commonly used for to roll’).

row (row) n., arch. a bread roll, small, round breakfast loaf – ‘There’s naething A leike better for ma brekfast as a new rowe’ [ECS], ‘A gowpeen-fih berries or a penny gray rowe’ [ECS], ‘Where are yon rows that garrd the hert reijke? What wairpit Breid Board said they had to go?’ [DH].

rowan (row-in, row-an) n. a slender tree with white flowers and red berries, the mountain ash, formerly believed to ward off evil – ‘…or even the rowan tree, or mountain ash, used against the charms of witchcraft’ [EM1820], ‘In Keeldar’s plume the holly green, And rowan leaves, nod on’ [JL], ‘Where the rowan and the weeping birk perfume th evening air, Where the primrose and the cowslip mix, their beauties blooming fair’ [JoHa], ‘But the kind auld miller isna there nod on’ [JL], ‘Where the rowan and the weep-ing birk perfume th evening air, Where the primrose and the cowslip mix, their beauties blooming fair’ [JoHa], ‘But the kind auld miller isna there’ wi’ shooters strang and wide, He sleeps aneath a rowan tree upon yon green hill side’ [WW], ‘The munelicht glintin’ on een sae fair, The lips like rowans, the gowden hair’ [WL] (once pronounced with a longer ő-oo diphthong; cf. rountree and raun-trei; Scandanavian origin).

Rowan  (row-in) n. James ‘Jim’ (1943–2008). He grew up in Slitrig Crescent, served an apprenticeship at Woodcock’s, and served with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. He ran the Hawick Motorcycle Centre, worked as an engineer with Pringle’s and later opened The Photo Shop on the High Street. He often contributed letters to the local press. He married Irene Gentleman. He moved to the Leicester area to be near his son Mark and died there.

Rowanhill (row-in-hil) n. former lands in the upper Teviotdale, listed as part of the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and in 1693. It seems likely this is a scribe’s or transcriber’s error for Rowantree Hill. However, it is not impossible that it could be associated with Rowantree hill, although this is probably on the wrong side of the Teviot valley or Rowantree Knowe on the right side (it is ‘Rowandhill’ in 1693).

Rowantrei (row-in-tri-hil) n. Rowantreehill, probable name for a farm in Jedforest. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 2 steadings and valued at 44 shillings. In 1541 John, Marion and Adam were tenants of part of the lands paying 22s, John and Robert Oliver were tenants in another part paying 11s and Robert ‘the Sheriff’ Oliver was tenants in the last part paying 11s (it is ‘Rowantrehill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Rowntreihill’ in 1541).

Rowantree Hill (row-in-tri-hil) n. Rowantree Hill, hill south-west of Teviothead, roughly between the farms of Hislop and Merrylaw. It reaches a height of 372 m.

Rowantree Knowe (row-in-tri-now) n. Rowantree Knowe, hill in the headwaters of the Dod Burn, north-west of Haw Hill.

Rowantree Sike (row-in-tri-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream that rises on Rowantree Knowe and flows roughly northwards to join the Dod Burn.

Rowantree Sike (row-in-tri-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Know and flowing westwards to become part of Ashy Butn and then Whitlaugh Burn.

Rowantree Sike (row-in-tri-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale rising on Hazelside Hill and flowing roughly north east to join the Black Burn.

Row a niefe (row-a-nee-fi) v. arch. to turn round every cut of corn (during harvest) so all the stalks can be intermingled in order that many can be held in one hand before laying in the band (see row).

Rowbank (rö-bawngk) n. house on Drumlanrig Square that has the back on the Square and the front overlooking the mill behind.

Rowcastle see Ruecastle

Row-chow-the-bacca-wheel (row-chow-thu-ba-ki-wheel) n., arch. a children’s game in which a chain of children surround a large child, called the ‘pin’, then sway around until everyone falls in a heap (noted by J. Jamieson, who states that it is derived from ‘imitation of the process of a tobacconist in winding up his roll round a pin’).

rowd (rowd) pp., adj. rolled, wrapped – ‘The bairn’ll taik nae ill; ee hev um weel rowd up’[ECS].

Smith notes that compared with ‘row’ the verb ‘ti rowl is more commonly used for to roll’).

rowly-powly (row-lee-pow-lee) adj., arch. roly-poly, n., arch. a fairground game in which a pole is thrown at a set of pins, the Rowly-Powly Loft (thu-row-lee-pow-lee-loft) n. popular name for the old ‘High Loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk, before it was rebuilt in the 1760s. It is recorded that in 1755 3s. 2d. was received from Adam Kersel for this loft (presumably for his right to sit there).

rowme (rowm) n., arch. a holding of land, especially a bounded area used for crops or grazing, a farm – ‘Item, he levis to Willie of Allanhauch, the Kirkland, his awne rowme’[SB1574], ‘…[Hoscote] ane rowme of Wat Scott of Hardenis’[1580 record], ‘The Larde of Gledstanes for hymselfe and his rowmes, the Larde of Harret for hymselfe and his rowmes …’[CBP1584], ‘…under the higheste paine of our lives or els

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small village that is all that remains of an important historic site. It was created a Royal Burgh in the early 12th century, with its castle used as a royal residence, and was one of the four Royal Burghs in the 13th century, being then probably the fourth most populous town in Scotland. It was a walled town with 3 churches, schools and at one time the Royal Mint. James II was famously killed here in 1460, and after the Scots captured it they had it demolished. The village went into decline after that, but there was still a Franciscan convent there in the early 1500s. The area was devastated by Hertford’s men in 1545. The village itself is built on the site of the overflow of the old town, and was thatched until the 1950s. The graveyard contains the burial vault of the Kers of Chatto as well as the grave of Andrew Gemmels (the original for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Edie Ochiltree’). A nearby railway viaduct was constructed from 1847, but 9 men lost their lives when part of it collapsed in 1849. A short history was written by Brian Wain in 1983 – ‘For soon, where scenes of seeter beauty smile Around the mounds of Roxburgh’s ruin’d pile, No more the mistress of each lovely field, Her name, her honours Tievot soon must yield’[JL], ‘Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh’s tower: Where you take, lower-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppice and bower’[WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘Hroc burh’, meaning ‘the fortified dwelling belonging to Hroc’; the name is recorded from the early 12th century, in the earliest records being ‘Rokesburgh’ and variants; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rosburgh’; an example of ‘Hroc’ occurs in the Domesday book for Suffolk and in compound form in other parts of England).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small town in Central Otago on the South Island of New Zealand. It lies on the Teviot River (now called the Clutha), and was also once called Teviot itself, with Ettrick and Mount Benger nearby. It was named by some of the early settlers and was an important centre during the local gold rush of 1862. Streets in the town include one named after Ha-burn, as well as Abbotsford, Ancrum, Berwick, Branxholm, Cheviot, Edinburgh, Ednam, Hermitage, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddle, Melrose, Scotland and Tweed. Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. John (d.1196) Canon of Glasgow, who witnessed several charters from the 1160s. It is possible he was the Master John associated with either Lessuden or Longnewton. He was appointed Treasurer of Glasgow Diocese in 1195/6, but only held the appointment for a few months before dying at Melrose Abbey. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruecastle, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1794 and 1797. He was recorded as owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stitchelhill. He is listed as male head of household there 1835–41. He emigrated to America in 1842.

Roxburgh Castle (roks-bu-rú-kaw-sul) n. also called Marchmount, built above the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed. It passed back and fourth between Scotland and England several times, with the English holding it about as often as the Scots. Alexander II was married in the Castle in 1239. A large number of Scottish charters and other records were removed there on the orders of Edward I in 1292, before subsequently disappearing forever. Robert the Bruce’s sister Mary was hung there in a cage from 1306–10 on orders of Edward I. Sir James Douglas recaptured it in 1313, but the English held it from 1334 until 1460. A bridge connecting the area with Kelso was destroyed in 1398 and its successor destroyed by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1411. During the 1460 siege James II died when one of his cannons exploded; a yew tree in the grounds of Floors Castle marks the spot. Queen Mary of Gueldres dismantled it, but it was rebuilt by the English in 1547. When the Scots regained it for the last time they razed it themselves, around 1550—`Roxburgh! how fallen, since first in Gothic pride Thy frowning battlements the war defied, Call’d the bold chief to grace thy blazon’d halls, And bade the rivers gird thy solid walls!’ [JL].

Roxburgh Drive (roks-bu-rú-drív) n. one of the bigger roads through Stirches, being he continuation of Hazelwood Road. It was built in 1976 and named after the 9th Duke of Roxburgh, George Victor Robert John Innes-Ker, who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council (often erroneously written ‘Roxburgh’).

the Roxburgh Roondie (thu-roks-bu-ru-roon-dee) n. local brie-like cheese made at Standhill farm by Jim and Anne Shanks from 2007.

Roxburghshire (roks-bu-rú-shír, roks-bu-rú-shír) n. former county which included Hawick, Jedburgh and Kelso. It was the southernmost county of Scotland and was bounded by Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Selkirkshire and the English Border. It contained what was formerly Teviotdale and part of Liddesdale and was divided into over 30 parishes. Jedburgh was the county town, although there was a proposal around 1891 to change this to Hawick. The area was 669 square miles, although changes to the boundaries means this number does not apply to all times. The county is full of archaeological remains, including Bronze Age burial cairns, British forts, Roman camps and roads, vestiges of settlements and peel towers. The county is named after the formerly important town and Castle of Roxburgh.

Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry (roks-bu-rú-shír-jen-‘ül-min-in-yō-min-ree-kaw-vul-ree) n. local volunteer regiment that existed 1797–1828, also known as the Roxburghshire Yeomanry or the Roxburghshire Light Dragoons Yeomanry Cavalry. Hawick was the main rallying point for the upper troop. In 1798 the Burgh gave them £25 to purchase drums and fifes. The western Captain-commandant was William Elliot of Harwood, while William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae served as Colonel. Their uniforms consisted of scarlet jackets laced with white cord, blue collars and cuffs, black leather helmets with a bearskin crest and a red and white heckle feather, white breeches and black boots.

the Roxburghshire Militia (thu-roks-bu-rú-shír-mí-lísh-a) n. volunteer regiments of the early 19th century, formed in 1809 after the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers had been disbanded. The 1st Regiment was headquartered at Jedburgh, and contained many local men, while the 2nd Regiment was based at Kelso. The 1st Regiment had Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) as Lieut.-Col., with James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) as Major and the first Captain was Walter Scott of Wauchope. They were disbanded in 1828 (note that several different names were used for these units).

Roxburghshire Nursin Association (roks-bu-rú-shír-nur-sin-aw-só-seé-á-shíh) n. nursing association formed in 1900 to provide for nursing needs in local country areas. Fees were paid to join the association and only members could benefit from its services. It operated until the National Health Service was set up in 1948.

the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers (thu-roks-bu-rú-shír-ri-fúl-vo-lun-teerr) n. formal name for the Border Rifles, a volunteer outfit founded in 1861.

the Roxburghshire Word-Book

the Roxburghshire Word-Book (roks-bu-ru-shir-wurd-book) n. the most useful resource for words that are peculiar to various parts of the county, written by George Watson and published in 1923. Words that are local to the Hawick area are denoted ‘[W]’, for Western Roxburghshire. As well as the word list itself, the introductory sections compile a huge amount of information about pronunciation and other facets of Roxburghshire vernacular. The book was compiled by Watson from the help of many communicants (most of whose names are unknown) from various parts of Roxburghshire, this following articles and lists of words that he published in the local press to encourage people to help him. Earlier books of poetry are much used to provide examples, and phrases from Elliot Cowan Smith are often included (sometimes without attribution). Watson was from Jedburgh and worked for the Oxford University dictionary project, effectively following in the footsteps of James Murray.

Roxburghshire Yeomanry (roks-bu-ru-shir-yo-mun-ree) n. another name for the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry.

Roxburgh Viaduct (roks-bu-ru-vl-a-dukt) n. disused railway viaduct across the Teviot, by the village of Roxburgh. Built in 1847, it has an interesting iron footbridge built into it at the level of the river bank.

Roxburgh Volunteers (roks-bu-ru-volunteez) n. name given to several distinct (but inter-related) volunteer military units. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry was first set up in 1794 and disbanded in 1802, to be re-formed as the Roxburghshire Corps of Gentleman and Yeomanry Cavalry, lasting until 1828. The Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers was formed in 1803 during the perceived threat of French invasion. It was initiated by Walter Scott of Wauchope, who became their captain. They were mobilised during the False Alarm of 1804. The unit disbanded in 1809, but was essentially replaced by the Roxburghshire Militia the same year. Another volunteer unit, called the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk Volunteer Rifle Corps was set up in 1859, with Hawick units, the 4th and 5th being set up in 1860 and 1861. The 4th absorbed the Denholm Company in 1863 and the 5th was disbanded in 1867. The 4th Roxburgh Corps became D and E Companies of the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk (The Border) Rifle Volunteer Corps in 1880. They became part of the K.O.S.B. from 1887, with K Company formed in Hawick in 1892, and the whole set of Companies renamed the 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. in 1908.

Roxbury (roks-bu-ree) n. suburb of Boston, Massachusetts, which was apparently named for the many rocks there (although a connection with our county is not impossible). The town of West Roxbury (annexed to Boston in 1874) was the site of the Boston area Common Ridings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This was organised by Hawick exiles under the auspices of the Scottish Border Club. It consisted of sports (races, baseball throwing etc.) and other events on Common Riding Saturday, with the location Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. There is a photograph of the 1886 celebration. Ex-Cornet Walter Irvine attended in 1888. There are American Cornets recorded from 1877 until at least 1926.

Roxmount (roks-mown) n. former farm a mile or so south-east of Hawick (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map close to the modern farm of Kaimend).

the Royal (thu-roi-ul) n. pub at 22 Howegate in the latter 19th and early 20th centuries. It was also known as ‘the Royal Bar’. The proprietor for many years was John Barclay.

the Royal Bank (thu-roi-ul-bawngk) n. the Royal Bank of Scotland erected an impressive building at 12 High Street in 1857/8, designed by Peddie & Kinnear, constructed by James Harkness, with ornamental work by Alex Pirnie. On the top corners of the building can be seen the monogram ‘P K’ and the year ‘1857’. It is a Category B listed building. The location had previously contained 2 adjacent hostleries, the Ordnance Arms and the Harrow Inn. The first agent was James Carmichael, solicitor, and later Haddon & Turnbull took over. The building was turned into the Registry Office and now is education service offices. Meanwhile the Royal Bank had another office at 4 Tower Knowe. After it merged with the Commercial group in 1969 it obtained its current branch at 31 High Street (built as the National Bank about 1870). It stretches over 31, 33 and 35 High Street, and is a grade C listed building.

royal burgh (roi-ul-bu-ru) n. a town granted its charter by the Crown rather than the local landowner. There were 65 royal burghs in Scotland. Nearby ones include Jedburgh, Selkirk, Roxburgh and Peebles.

the Royal George (thu-roi-ul-jorj) n. former popular name for the ‘Whisky Hooses Mill’ which stood opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church, also known as ‘the George’. It was presumably named after the famous Royal Navy vessel of the same name, which was the largest warship in the world when it was launched in 1756. The ship fought in the Seven Years War and became infamous when it sank in 1782 during routine maintenance with the loss of more than 800 lives.

Royal Highlanders (roi-ul-bli-lin-durz) n. three officers of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment, Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie, were made Honorary Burgess in 1802. This was when they passed through Hawick on their way back from Egypt after having ‘immortalised themselves in defeating the French Invincibles’.

the Royal Mail (thu-roi-ul-mal) n. name of a stagecoach operating out of Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh from the Tower Inn every day at 9.30 a.m., going via Selkirk and Galashiels, and leaving for London at 12.30 p.m., via Langholm and Carlisle. The other coach operating at the same time was ‘the Standard’.

Royal Nurseries see Buccleuch Nurseries

the Royal Oak (thu-roi-ul-oki) n. former hostelry near the top of the Round Close in the 19th century, also known for a while as the Blue Bell Inn. It can be seen in a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw. James Elliot, proprietor, was considered to have provided the finest spread of the local innkeepers at the Reform Bill open air dinner of 1832. Elliot was listed as vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It could have been where Mary Hunter was publican on the Round Close in 1841. Also the name of a separate local pub on Wilton Path at roughly the same time, and another small licensed house on the north side of Buccleuch Street in the mid-19th century (the name is shared with hundreds of other pubs in Britain and refers to the tree in which Charles II hid from Cromwell’s army).

rub (rub) v. arch. to rob.

rubber (ru-bur) n., arch. a robber – ‘Ye’re that damned Indian rubber Warren Hastings; get off the ground at yince’ [RM].

rubbers (ru-burz) n., arch. scrapie, a disease of sheep, marked by constant scratching (cf. scratchie).

Ruberslaw (ruo-burz-law) n. hill about 4 miles due east of Hawick, lying on the boundary of Cavers and Hobkirk parishes. It reaches a height of 424 m (1392 ft), and is the most prominent landmark in Roxburghshire. It was long considered to be an extinct volcano, but the reality is that the geology is much more complex (although the rocks are predominantly basaltic, the shape probably came from erosion). It is topped by an Iron Age fort, and was also used as a Roman signal station. The fortifications on the hill-top were first described by A.O. Curle in 1905. There was an extensive stone citadel on top (about 72 m by 32 m), defended by a wall, with an entrance on the north-east side. There is also an annex on the south side, including the plateau below the summit. These were probably rebuilt from the stones of the Roman signal station, as a Dark Age ‘nuclear’ fortification. With Roman stone. A less well-defined outer wall is probably part of an earlier Iron Age structure. A cairn on the east side was removed in the late 19th century. The summit also has a modern triangulation pillar.
A horde of bronze vessels was unearthed there in 1863 (including a jug handle, decorated with grotesque figures of 2 dwarfs and a bird) and are in the Museum, as well as 2 stones with diamond-shaped carvings. Several flints found there are in the Hawick Museum. Other flints and an arrowhead are in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, as well as an unfinished stone axe. The hill was used for Covenanters’ meetings of the mid-17th century, at Peden’s Pulpit (a rocky cleft at the south-west side of the summit) and elsewhere on its slopes. In a wood near the head of the Hawk Burn is a ‘burnt mound’. Pine trees on the north side are said to be remnants of the ancient Caledonian forest. Part of the slopes were used as Common land in Denholm and in the 18th century each feu’r’s allotment was marked out with stones. A song, ‘The Hunting of Ruberslaw’, about a fox hunt there, was written down by Bailie T.S. Small of Jedburgh, as recited by 2 old men in about 1900 – ‘Oft have I wandered in my vernal years Where Ruberlaw his misty summit rears’ [JL], ‘Dark Ruberslaw, – that lifts his head sublime, Rugged and hoary with the wrecks of time! On his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years’ [JL], ‘Did you see the shadow’s speedling On the slopes of Ruberslaw?’ [RSC], ‘…Waiting helpless the beak and claw Of the carrion birds of Ruberslaw!’ [WHO], ‘…where Ruberslaw’s summit stands oot and looks doon on the wild lovely Border and Denholm’s wee toon’ [GM], ‘Rest on the heights an’ look ayont Where Ruberslaw shows green, An’ a’ the countryside displayed Arroon’ the Border Queen’ [WFC], ‘When Rubers Law has on his cap, The Dunion on her hood, A’ the auld wives on Teviotside Are sure ti hae a flood’ [T], ‘If you can see Ruberslaw it’s going to rain and if you can’t see Ruberslaw it’s already raining’ [IWL] (sometimes written ‘Rubers Law’; it is marked ‘Rubburlaw hill’ on Pont’s manuscript map of the 1590s, and on a manuscript map of Gordon in c.1650, but is absent from Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unknown; it should not be confused with ‘Ruberslaw’ near Aberdeen).

Ruberslaw Drive (ruo-burz-law-driv) n. street in Denholm, running parallel to the Loaning and connected with Ruberslaw Road.

the Ruberslaw Hoard (thu-roo-burz-law-hörd) n. hoard of bronze objects discovered on the eastern slopes of Ruberslaw in 1863. The objects were donated to Hawick Museum by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee, later being studied by staff at the National Museums of Scotland and then being displayed at the Trimontium Trust’s Museum. The pieces are: 2 ‘paterae’ (sauce-pans), one decorated with a ‘thyrsus’ (staff surmounted by vegetation); a patera base; parts of a jug, including an elaborate handle; a shallow dish; a bowl about 1-foot in diameter; and fragments of 2 scabbard mounts. They are believed to date from the 2nd century.

Ruberslaw Hoose (ruo-burz-law-hoos) n. house in Crieff near Perth. It was built in the late 18th century, being a branch of the Commercial Bank from 1811, and then was a home of Sir William Elliott of Stobs from at least 1878, when his first wife died there. It is unclear who named the house (but the connection to the Eliotts of Stobs seems unlikely to be a coincidence).

Ruberslaw Pairish (ruo-burz-law-pä-reesh) n. combined parish consisting of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule, set up in 2003, and extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean in 2004.

Ruberslaw Road (ruo-burz-law-röd) n. part of Burnfoot, named after the prominent hill. It was built in 1951, with additional houses added in 1957.

Ruberslaw Road (ruo-burz-law-röd) n. street in the south-eastern part of Denholm, built on the site of a former livestock market. The private housing development there dates from the 1970s.

rubiator (ruo-bee-a-tur) n., arch. a bully, a violent, swearing person – ‘He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator’ [JoJ], ‘Hei cam in leike a roobeeaater (a violent bully), an cowpeet the taibl yownt owre’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Rubstic (rub-stik) n. race-horse, trained locally by John Leadbetter. It won the Grand National in 1979, being the first Scottish horse to do so.

ruck (ruk) n., arch. a rick, stack of hay – ‘O! as we ran about the rucks o’ hay! I hinna seen sinesyne a blyther day’ [CPM], ‘Iang Johne turnbull in quhitrig – IIII oxin II ky a hors a ruk of corn’ [CoJ1503].

the Rude Day (thu-ruod-däi) n. mediæval festival of the Exultation of the Cross, celebrated on 14th September (3rd May in England), supposedly the date of the discovery of the ‘true cross’. It was important locally before the Reformation and is recorded in the mid-16th century as a day sometimes chosen for signing documents etc. It was the occasion of a Fair in Jedburgh, the day in 1601 being marked by a skirmish, when a group of about 30 Turnbuls from the Minto area came to town seeking Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost). At the end of the fight Ker and his servant were dead, along with 2 of the Turnbulls, and several men were left seriously wounded (still referred to in the 1622 Circuit Court records; also spelled ‘Rood’).

Rudd (rud) n. Charles Clifford (b.1811/2) from Yorkshire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police in 1851. He was living at about 3 Tower Knowe. He was also listed as Superintendent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a son Thomas Frederick. By 1861 he was a widower working as Police Constable in Jedburgh.

Ruecastle (ruo-, row-kaw-sul) n. hamlet a mile or so north-east of the Dunion, formerly in the Barony of Bedrule. A piece of land there was granted by Lady Bethoc and her husband Rudolph to the monks of Jedburgh when that abbey was founded (as confirmed in several later charters). There is a suggestion that an area of elevated land to the east of the farm may have been the site of a tower. There is also a tradition that the local courts of justice were held there until moved to Jedburgh. William ‘de Ruecastel’ is recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The Fletcher family held part of the lands from before 1464 until they sold them to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1558/9. In 1491 there was a ‘procuratory of resignation’ by Thomas Dickson ofOrmiston, to resign (presumably a different part of) these lands into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh; they appear to have been gained by John Rutherford of Hundalee. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. The village there was burned by an English party led by Philip Dacre in 1513, including 2 towers, burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and burned again by Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the Abbot of Jedburgh. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1619. It was among lands granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre in 1623. Lands there were held by Lord Jedburgh in 1629. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned lands there, which he feued in 1632. In 1643 the lands there were valued at a total of £459, owned by Thomas Rutherford, Andre Turnbull, Laird Storie, Alexander Miller, George Fletcher and the Earl of Traquair. In 1665 Thomas, son of John Rutherford was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling lands there, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle. In 1788 the main part was owned by John Rutherford of Knowesouth and valued at £396 13s 10d (with teinds of £70 6s), part owned by Thomas Rutherford valued at £41 3s 10d, a small part owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters (that had been acquired by Bennet of Chesters) valued at £37 2s 4d and a another part owned by Thomas Storie valued at £18. William Roxburgh was there 1794–97 and in 1797 William Young was also farmer there, plus George Black also lived there. The residents in 1799 included hind John Mitchel, servant George Black, labourer James Carr and servant William Young. The farm was part of the estate of Knowesouth, until sold by the heirs of Capt. Rutherford to George Pott of Dod. Part of the lands were acquired by Bennet of Chesters before 1811 and combined with his estate, with the rest being owned by Rutherford of Knowesouth; together the parts were valued at about £510. Gideon Pott acquired further parts from William Oliver Rutherford and from Thomas Storie. The area may be the origin of the similar surname. A cist was found a few hundred yards to the south, containing an urn that was said in 1949 to be preserved in Monteviot House. A stone axe found enarby is in the National Museum of Antiquities. In a field about 500m to the north are the possible remains of a settlement. A former resident, perhaps fictional, is mentioned in the ballad ‘The Grey Peel’ (as recited by ‘Matthew Gotterson’) – ‘An’ gallopin’ up comes Ruecastle Hew, On his Bewcastle naig o’ the guid steel grey. An’ Fernhirst grim, but ever heart true, Whase ready Kerr hand reds mony a fray’ [T] (the name probably derives from Old English ‘ruh’ and Anglo-Saxon ‘ceaster’, meaning ‘rough fort’, suggesting an early fortification of some sort there; it is written ‘Reucastel’, ‘Reucastele’, ‘Rnewcastle’, ‘Rowcastel’, ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rochcastell’, ‘Rouchcastell’, ‘Rowcastel’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcastle’, and variants; it is first recorded as ‘Rughechestre’ in about 1140 and is ‘Rucastle’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Roucastell’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and the modern spelling appears on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘merchant of Hawick’ when he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1692. He may be related to the Adam who was born to William and Marion Scott in Hawick in 1650 and may be the Adam who was father in Hawick of an unnamed child in 1690 and James in 1693. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Adam who is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Scott. Elizabeth nee Kelly (18th C.) wife of Bailie Walter, whom she married in the early 1750s. She was apparently the first Hawick citizen to travel out to America and return safely! She was at that time 72 years old and visiting her son John, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. Francis (18th C.) probably closely related to Robert. He could have been the Francis born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1678. He is probably the Francis who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for merchant David Young in 1705, for merchant William Dickson in 1718 and for candlemaker John Scott in 1720. In 1723 he was entered as a new elder of Hawick Kirk and was a candidate for Session Treasurer in 1725. He witnessed baptisms in 1725 for workman William Henderson, in 1726 for flesher Robert Wilson and probably (the record is hard to read) along with Robert, for wigmaker Francis Miles, in 1727 for carrier George Porteous, and in 1730 for ‘junior surgeon’ Walter Scott. He is also mentioned in reference to the building of the Tievot Bridge in 1738. He may be the Francis, saddler in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He witnessed a further baptism for gardener William Paterson in 1743, in which he was also listed as a saddler. He is recorded as a merchant in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with merchant John. He is probably also the saddler Francis who witnessed a baptism for Gideon in 1745; Gideon thus seems likely to have been closely related. In 1747 he was recorded as a saddler who (along with carrier John) witnessed a baptism for wright Henry Haliburton. He may have been the Francis who died around 1750 and gave his estate to Francis, young son of Bailie Gideon (perhaps therefore his brother). George (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He may be the George who was married to Isobel ‘Merlay’ and had a son Hector in Hawick in 1636. George (17th C.) married to Janet Gilbertson, they had daughter Janet in Hawick in 1653. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1648. Bailie Gideon (b.1713) son of Robert, he was a Magistrate in Hawick roughly in the 1730s and in 1740. He may have been the Gideon who was Cornet in 1730. He was probably the (ex-)Bailie Ruecastle involved with overseeing work to rebuild the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s in 1734 and building a new Parish School in 1739. He was ‘present Bailie’ in 1741 and in 1743 when he witnessed baptisms for writer James Weir and Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and also ‘late Bailie’ in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir, and also when his own child’s baptism was recorded. He appears to have died shortly before 1751, when the Hawick Session agreed to act as trustees for his minor son Francis, who had been left the estate of another Francis (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Watson, who may be the daughter of John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) baptised in 1710. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Francis (b.1734); Thomas (b.1735); John (again, b.1738); Anne (b.1740); Francis (again, b.1741); Anne (again, b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Gideon (b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were writer Thomas Watson (surely related to his wife) and merchant Charles Tushope, in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir, and in 1745 were former Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis (who was surely closely related to him). He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although he appears to have been deceased before then). Gideon (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick when he paid the Horse Tax in 1790–92. He also paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. He contributed £1 to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He is probably the son of Gideon, born in 1747. Hector (17th C.) married to Isobel Minto, their daughter Grizel was born in 1645. Hector (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Marion Brown and their children included Bessie, Hector, and probably Andrew in the period 1687–92. He may have been son or grandson of George. He may be the ‘Hector Rencaustell younger’ listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. John (16th C.) recorded in Hawick’s 1537 charter as ‘Rowcastell’. He owned a ‘partition’ of land on the north side of the High Street. He may have been the ancestor of the later Ruecastles of the Town. John (17th C.) one of a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he is among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (b.1657) son of Robert and Janet Tweedie, born in Hawick. Probably the same John became a cooper’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. It is not impossible that he is the same as Bailie John. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor’ to carrier Walter Ruecastle in 1716, when he and William Douglas had complaints made against them for sitting in seats in St. Mary’s that were reserved for the incorporated trades. The 2 of them even broke open the door to the balcony when it was locked by Robert Jolly. He was presumably the same John who was involved in a scuffle with Robert Jolly in 1716 in the Wester Loft of St. Mary’s during the Sunday service, when ‘Jollie did thrust him hard by his feet upon his belly’. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Chief Magistrate of Hawick in the early 1700s, recorded as such during the swearing of the oath of allegiance to King George by the Council and Burgesses in 1714. It is unclear how he is related to the other Ruecastles (but based on his marriage record he was ‘nephew to Walter Ruecastle att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick’). He is probably the merchant John who in 1719 married Bessie (or Betsy), daughter of Walter Paterson of Burnafat, and had children: Margaret (b.1721), who probably married Walter Henderson; Bessie (b.1727); Walter (b.1729), baker and magistrate; John (b.1731); Jean (b.1735); Isobel (b.1739); Bessie (again, b.1740); Beatrix (b.1742), who probably married clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull; and Janet (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (both ‘present Bailies’). Given the birth years it seems likely he is also the John whose children recorded with Bessie Scott (perhaps an error, or indicating his wife had previously been married) were: Anna (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725), who may have married James Paterson, ‘Ika Thursdi’. The witnesses in 1725 were Walter (perhaps his uncle) and John Scott (possibly related to his wife). He is probably the merchant John who witnessed baptisms for workman Gilbert Oliver in 1741, for flesher George Deans, for merchant Robert Scott, for flesher Walter Sheen, for gardener Robert Balmner and for flesher William Renwick in 1742, for carrier John Pott and for Schoolmaster Walter Turnbull in 1743, and for Alexander Bynan and John Kedie in 1745. In 1744 he witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tudhope and James Paterson (who married Helen, probably his daughter), as well as for weaver John Gray and for shoemaker Thomas Scott. In 1745 he also witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with fellow merchant Francis. He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism for William Leithead in 1741 and another for wright Henry Haliburton in 1747. John (18th C.) elder of Hawick Session, recorded in 1751. He was in care of a horse belonging to the Session, with instructions to sell it, and also appointed as a trustee for the affairs of the deceased Bailie Francis Ruecastle. Since he was not referred to as a late Bailie, then he may not have been the same as the earlier Bailie John. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter in 1758. John (1755/6–1808) son of Walter. He went to America, serving in the U.S. Army during the American War of Independence, becoming a Captain. He married Phoebe Thomas of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. When his mother went out to visit him she was apparently the first Teri to take a trip out to America and return safely. Mrs. ?? (17th/18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the early 1700s. She is recorded several times in the Parish Records in connection with payment for drinks associated with Kirk Session events, such as funerals and the ‘roup’ of seats in the gallery. She may have been related to the John who was Bailie. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘viatore’, i.e. ‘traveller’ when he was witness to a 1622 sasine for land in Hawick owned by Allan Deans. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with making a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott and had son James in Hawick in 1636. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet Gledstains and had daughter Isobel in Hawick in 1646. Robert (17th C.) selected as one of 2 people in Hawick to collect the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ordered in 1655 to pay Walter Stavert money borrowed when he when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh and for a leg of mutton. He is described as a traveller in 1655 when someone was ordered to pay him for carrying wool to Edinburgh, ‘for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick’ and ‘for ane dry killit fische’. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Scott. Their children included George (b.1648), Bessie, an unnamed child (b.1653) and Walter (b.1655), in the period 1648–55. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet ‘Twiddie’, they had son John in Hawick in 1657. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Isobel Scott. Their children included William (b.1654) and Robert (b.1656). The witnesses in 1654 were Thomas Scott and John Scott (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Wintrop. Their children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1674). Robert (17th C.) married to Agnes Mow, their son William was born in Hawick in 1673. Robert (d.c.1688) tailor in Hawick. His will was recorded in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1688. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. He could be the Robert recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He served as Magistrate between about 1690 and 1710, certainly recorded in 1697, 1707 and again around 1709. He is probably the Robert who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism for merchant David Young in 1705. He was Bailie in 1707 when along with the other Bailie, Robert Brown, he was fined by the Council for ‘the publicke undeniable and unaccountable abuse . . . att the ry- deing of the Commone’, with the pair ‘strikeing att others’ horses with thair whips and staves’; the nature of the incident is not described, but it seems likely it was related to the near riots that happened at the previous year’s Common Riding over carrying the Flag. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Gledstains, John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and tailor William Donald (along with Bailie Robert Brown) in 1707, for Walter Gledstains (junior of Hilliesland) in 1708, for Walter Gledstains, ‘Walter Alison’, for Henry Orrock and for merchant William Dickson in 1709, for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1711, for Bailie James Burn in 1712 and for Bailie George Martin in 1714. He was ‘late bailie’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the Councillors given a key to the Charter Chest. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. In 1715 he was given custody of 'the charter little chest', with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the keys. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Turnbull in 1716. He was probably the Bailie Ruecastle charged in 1717 with collecting money from the area between the Cross to the bridge. And in 1718, when he was a Magistrate, there was a serious dispute with ex-Bailie Graham, who accused him (apparently at a Council meeting) of being a thief and worse; the exact nature of the argument is not recorded, but it was resolved after the Minister intervened. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721. Another dispute of 1722 led to him having all the elders publicly questioned about whether they had 'heard him speak opprobriously and disparageinglie of Mr Robert Cunningham our minister'. He continued as Magistrate in the 1720s and was also Parish Treasurer in the 1720s. He may be Bailie and the Robert who witnessed baptisms for merchant David Johnston in 1729 and 1731; he also witnessed a baptism for Andrew Young in 1729. He may have been the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Wintrop, who was born in Hawick in 1670 (although there are other Roberts recorded being born in 1648 and 1656). He may be the Robert recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun' and probably from the west side. It is possible that he was the Robert, who, along with Walter, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He married Anna Elliot and their children included: Mary (b.1700); Anna (b.1704); Beatrix (b.1705); William (b.1709); and Gideon (b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Graham and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Patrick Richardson and George Martin, in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1709 Bailies Walter Elliot, James Burn and Walter Graham. He may be the Robert whose daughter Jean married Robert Ogilvie in 1720. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish (with no mother’s name given) were probably also his: Anna (b.1702); Anna (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1711). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Moss in 1725. Simon (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott, their children included William (b.1635) and an unnamed son (b.1641). Walter (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined for insulting and assaulting the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. It seems that Scott was in the ‘houss’ (i.e. probably pub) of William Elliot, sorting out some financial business between him (Walter) and John Hardie, when he came in, calling the Bailie ‘ane fals judge’, and when there was an attempt to remove him he ‘instantly, insolentlie, and most violentlie fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head’. As well as being fined, he was ordered to go to the stocks. The financial dealings also involved his father, who was presumably alive at the time. He could be the same man as the carter. Walter (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the Walter listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded as a carrier of Hawick when he married Abigail Lamb in Edinburgh in 1694. He could be the Walter who was born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1674 (although there are other possibilities). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for cook James Wright in 1712. In 1713 he was a ‘carrier’ when he witnessed baptisms for ‘drummer’ Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex) and for weaver John Bridges (who lived at the Easter Kirkstyle). In 1716 his ‘servitor’ John ‘Roucastle’ was one of the people who the weavers complained were using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s; this John could have been a close relative. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Richard Miles in 1705. It is possible that he was the Walter, who, along with Robert, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He is probably the Walter ‘att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick’ whose nephew John married Bessie Paterson in 1719. Bailie Walter (1729–c.1795) son of John and Bessie Paterson. He was a baker of Hawick who was a Magistrate during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and served through the 1750s and 1760s. He witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Henderson and Margaret Ruecastle (probably his sister) in 1757, for clockmaker Walter Free- man in 1758 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1759. In 1769 he was appointed to the commis- sion to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He witnessed a bap- tism for Thomas Turnbull (probably his brother-in-law) in 1768. He was witness for baptisms for Archibald Paterson in 1775, 1777, 1780 and 1781 and for James Dickson in 1777. He married Elizabeth Kelly (or ‘Bettie Kellie’) and had 13 children, including: Robert (b.1756); James (b.1758); Walter (b.1759); Charles and William (twins, b.1761); Barbara (b.1762), who married Robert Howieson; Walter (again, b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); Christian, who married Andrew Haddon (from Selkirk); and John, who was a Captain during the American Revolutionary War. The baptismal entry for the twins reads ‘Gemini’. The 1758 baptism was witnessed by John (probably his father or brother) and James Paterson (perhaps his uncle), the 1759 and 1766 ones by John (again) and Walter Henderson. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Rucastel’ when he swore allegiance to Edward I of England in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal was oval, showing a figure with a branch in the right hand, a scroll in the left, and a kneeling figure on the left, with the name ‘SWILLI D’RUCASTELE’. He is also recorded receiving a pension from King Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. Whether he had a direct connection with the Hawick family of 3 centuries later is unknown. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is also mentioned in a Magistrates court case of 1642 when Thomas Oliver is accused of using irreverent language towards him, particularly calling him ‘man-sworn’. He is probably the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the William who was Bailie in the 1650s. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in 1652. He is probably also the William recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He could be the William who was married to Marion Scott and had several children in Hawick, including William (b.1639), Margaret (b.1643), Marion (b.1643), Walter (b.1646), Robert (b.1648), Adam (b.1650) and James (b.1652). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Deans and James Scott (who may have been related to his wife). William (b.1650) born in Hawick, he married Janet (or ‘Jenet’) Richardson in 1674. Their children included Marion (b.1669), Janet (b.1671), Walter (b.1674), Isobel (b.1675), William (b.1677) and Francis (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Dickson and William Purdom. William (b.1761) son of Walter and Elizabeth Kelly and twin of Charles. He is probably the William from Hawick recorded in a legal matter in Selkirk in 1791 (also spelled ‘Reucastell’, ‘Rewcastell’, ‘Rewcastell’, ‘Rewcastle’, ‘Roucastell’, ‘Roucasteil’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Ruscilst’, ‘Ruscaille’, ‘Ruscaille’ and other variants in earlier documents).

Ruecastle Burn (roo-kaw-sul-burn) n. stream that rises on the western side of the Dunion and flows in a roughly north-western direction, passing the hamlet of Ruecastle to join the Knowesouth Burn and eventually the Teviot. At Worm Rig there are remains of ancient earthworks. Near Knowesouth is Ladies’ Well.

Ruecastle Moor (roo-kaw-sul-moor) n. former name for the moor near Ruecastle. It was ‘Rowcastell Mure’ in 1616 when Douglases from Friarshaw were accused of threatening Gilbert Watt to meet them in combat there. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

the Ruecastles (thu-roo-kaw-sulz) n. family that was prominent in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries, but then entirely disappeared. The surname surely derives from the area of Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. William ‘de Rucastel’ is listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and had a pension from Robert the Bruce. The eponymous lands were in other hands by the mid-15th century, but there are no instances of the name until ‘Rowcastill’ appears as a landowner on Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Then Thomas, Margaret, Agnes and Nicholas Ruecastle were married in Hexham in 1581, 1586, 1590 and 1596, respectively. The Hawick branch is recorded continuously from the 1630s, and furnished many Magistrates, Councillors and Elders. They were probably all from a single local male ancestor. It seems likely that the Northumbrian branch was also related, however some of the occurrences further afield may have an entirely different origin. There is a vast range of spellings in early records of the name. Modern variants include ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rewcassell’ and ‘Reucastell’.

the Ruecastle Tenement (thu-roo-kaw-sul-te-ne-min’) n. former popular name for the building at 7 High Street, before the British Linen Bank purchased the land in 1862 and rebuilt on it. It was built around 1690, and was a 3 storey construction. The Ruecastle family, which provided several Hawick Bailies, had lived there for 3 generations. It can be seen in an 1860 photograph, showing the shops of W. Douglas, saddler, J. Kemp, cooper and Wm. Rutherford on the ground floor. It was demolished in 1861.

ruefi (roo-fi) adj., poet. rueful – ‘He sees that sae will be the case, An’ wi’ a lang-drawn ruefu’ face’ [RDW], ‘... an’ saufes sic as be o’ ane rewfu’ speerit’ [HSR], ‘...I wull be rewfu’ for my sin’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).
ruff (rufl v., arch. to beat a drum, n., arch. the beat of a drum, the drum roll preceding a proclamation, v. to applaud, signify approval.

ruffie (ru-fi) n., arch. a knitted neck ruff – ‘That hymn-made ruffie o' yous looks nane sae unheeltin’[ECS].

ruffin (ru-fin) n., arch. an encore, ovation – ‘Ruff um in! Gie (or gae) um a ruff-in!’[ECS] (also written ‘ruff-in’).

the Rufus Trophy (ru-fus-tro-fi) n. a trophy competed for at the Common Riding race meeting. It was first raced for in 1934, replacing the Medway Cup, which had been won outright (after 3 victories) by ex-Cornet Ian Maqtaggart on Rufus. The first winner was the same rider on his horse Rufus! It was won outright and replaced by the Horneholes Stakes in 1950.

Rufy (ru-fy) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Johammyn ruffy’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander Weens of that Ilk failed to produce him to answer to the murders of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods escheated to the King. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rutherford. He was recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. He was presumably related to Thomas who was also put to the horn for the same crime. Thomas (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He must have been a prominent Roxburghshire Laird of the time. However, it is unknown where exactly he was from or whether his surname was a variant of something else. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Adam, brother of William Douglas of Cavers, failed to enter him into the court for his part in the murder of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods forfeited.

rug (ruq) v., arch. to tug, pull roughly, plunder, spoil – ‘When frae temptation bolted snug, Wi’ commentators at his lug, Which he from shelves in thraves did rug . . . ’[JR], n., arch. a pull, tug, a bite of grass (of a farm animal), feed – ‘. . . unless when he brought them on to the several ground to give them a rugg for a part of the day’[C&Lt1767] (note by E.C. Smith).

rug an rive (ru-in-ri) v., arch. to tug, tear, pull at with great force or persistence – ‘. . . fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head . . . ’[BR], ‘Swearin’ an’ tearin’, they rug an’ they rive, Wha to be foremost wi’ Meggie M’Giveley’[JoHa], ‘. . . And boulevards o’ blankets ruggin’ and rivin’’[DH].

rugby (rug-be) n. a religion practised by many people in Hawick, with its main church at the foot of Mansfield Road. It was first introduced only in 1872, so for hundreds of years before that Terries must have had little to cheer about! The game was introduced locally when the Cricket Club decided to purchase a ball for the younger players to exercise with in the winter months. The club itself was formed in December 1873, with Robert Michie as Captain. The first organised game was against Langholm in 1874. George Wilson was a mainstay of the early committee, which was reorganised in 1885. At that time ‘Hawick’ (playing at the Volunteer) and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ (playing at the cricket field) were formed separately. They played matches against each other and the St. Cuthbert’s team for a few years, but by 1892 only ‘Hawick Football Club’ survived. Although the official game started only in the late 19th century, the local tradition of ‘Baa’ games goes back probably several centuries, and there is a description of a game (‘the pledges’) played by youths in the 18th century, which bears some striking similarities, although without the ball (often ‘the rugby’).

rugby-fitbaa (rug-be-fi-haw) n. name still used frequently, perhaps to distinguish it from other forms, before the ‘handling rules’ came in.

ruggit (ru-gi, -gee) pp., arch. tugged, pulled roughly – ‘. . . saying that he maliciously and un-reverently ract and ruggit her from her said seat’[Ash1639], ‘How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’[RH].

ruggy (ru-gi) adj., arch. tangled, knotted, difficult to comb – ‘. . . wui a toozy, taaty heed that wad be richt an ruggy ti redd’[ECS].

rubbish (ri-beesh) n., arch. rubbish – ‘Throw that rubbish aback o the feier’[ECS].

Ruickbie (rik-, rook-be) n. James ‘Jamie’ or ‘Reubie’ (c.1757–1829) born in Innerleithen, he lived much of his life in and around Hawick. The identity of his parents is unknown, but either his father or uncle was an earlier James of whom a story is told of how he used to go to the Pirm plantation to preach loudly to himself, with the Laird there overhearing him one day and saying ‘Man, Jamie, . . . ye should mind that the Lord’s no deef’. He was a miller to trade, being the assistant at Nisbet Mill and then working at Newmill. After this he became a toll-keeper, at Haremoss (for a year), then Colterscleuch (for 12 years), then at Langholm and finally at the West-End toll-bar in Hawick. Entirely self-taught, he wrote a good deal of poetry, and also played the fiddle. He settled in Hawick as landlord of the Harrow Inn (at 12 High Street), where he enjoyed the friendship of other more distinguished writers. He belonged to the Burgher (East End) congregation in Hawick and started a Sunday School at Newmill. He was also listed as a volunteer in 1803. He would recount a tale of a girl from Innerleithen who was carried away by the fairies and later turned up in Plora Wood after prayers offered by 7 ministers; he claims to have known this girl personally when she was an old lady and he was a boy. He was one of the earliest local poets to publish his work, some of it in dialect. An 8-page pamphlet of his, 'An Elegy on the death of Whisky' was printed in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1801. His 3 published collections are 'Way-side Cottager, consisting of pieces in prose and verse' (1807, while he was still at Colterscluch), 'Poems, chiefly in the Scottish dialect' (1815, while he was at the Harrow Inn), and 'Poems' (1826). This last volume contained tributes from some of his contemporaries. A few of his poems were quite popular locally, particularly ‘The Bottomless Pit, or the Lawyer Outwitted’ and ‘The Vulture and Raven or the Dinner Arrested’. He also wrote some lines about his contemporary, James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. His prose pieces include attacks on cruelty to animals and on the slave trade, complaints about drunkenness and a tribute to peace. He described himself as ‘diminutive, thin-ruif-trei (rif-tri) n., arch. main beam of a roof, hence figuritively referring to a home.

ruind (ründ, rind) v., arch. to cough hoarsely, make a disagreeable crunching noise, n. a hoarse cough – ‘A ruind o’ a cough’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith; also roound).

ruinds (ründz, rindz) n., pl., arch. strips of cloth, the selvage of a web of cloth – ‘Ruinds = short strips and odds and ends of cloth, often sewn into rugs and mats; properly the selvage of tweed cut down’[ECS].

ruindy (rűnd-dee) adj., arch. hoarse – ‘A ruindy cough’ [GW].

Ruins Moss (roo-inz-mos) n. former name for the area of ‘moss’ just to the south of the road to the Braxholme Lochs, about half-way between Chapelhill and Braxholme Easter Loch (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

ruise (růz) v., arch. to praise, extol – ‘I mind when he ca’ed me his Nannie, An’ ruis’d sae my bonnie black ec’ [JoHa], ‘Never huivvin ti ruize Jethart high’[ECS], ‘Huz Teries ruize high oor bonnie toon’[ECS], n., arch. conceit, high opinion – ‘Hei hes a guid ruize o’ his-sel’ [GW], ‘Monie a creestin bit wui a guid ruize o’ itsel ...’[ECS] (from Mediaeval English; also written ‘ruice’ and ‘ruize’; cf. raise).

ruit (ri’, růi) n. a root – ‘A tripped ower a muckle trei ruite’, ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take ruite’, ‘It’s no’ because the gowans braw are bonnie ’round o’ its ruite, For we hae seen them bloom as breaw in mony aither bit’[JoHa], ‘I’d lived on nought but ruite an’ weed, Acorns an’ nuts an’ ather seed’ [WP], ‘I’ve lived in it a good while now, and I doot I’ve ta’en ruite!’ [DH], ‘...clearin’ the soil away, till ye can sei if the ruite hes the richt

Rule (rool) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Rueul of Stawelle’ in 1225. He was brother and heir of Richard and resigned the lands of Balmerino in Fife in favour of Queen Ermen- garde (widow of William the Lion and mother of Alexander II). In the period 1211–33 he witnessed charters for St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘ade de Rule clerics’. Adam ‘de Roule’ (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with ‘Allyn’, parson of the church of ‘Roule’ in Roxburghshire. Thomas of Rule was another signatory, so perhaps related. He gained lands at Molle (south of Morebattle) through marriage. About 1300 he granted some of these lands to the monks of Kelso Abbey, with witnesses including both Hugh and William ‘de Roule’. Probably the same Adam ‘de Roule’ was recorded (along with William) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1, and also witnessed a charter for lands in Lessu- den at about the same time. He married Johanna, daughter and heiress of Sir Henry of Halyburton, and widow of Ralph Wyschard. Adam (14th C.) granted his lands of Altonburn to John ‘of Coupland’ in about 1354, with his name given as ‘Adam de Roule’. 3 years later these lands passed to John Ker (who thus became the first Ker of Altonburn); witnesses to this deed included William of Gledstones and William ‘de Roule’. He may have been the same as Adam of Yetholm, son of Alan of Rule. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Roull in Abbotroul’ in the Curcuit Court of 1622 when Walter Kerr of Linton was found guilty of stealing 6 sheep from his land at Cosser- hill. Alan (13th C.) recorded in charters of the early 1200s, during the reign of Alexander II. He witnessed a charter for the nuns of Coldstream and also for a gift of half of the lands of ‘Eschirche’ (Ashkirk) to the Bishopric of Glasgow. In the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes, with other Roxburghshire men also listed. He appears to have at this time been an English subject. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander some time before 1249. Alan ‘of Roule’ (13th/14th C.) possibly the same man as the parson of the church at Rule who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1296 his wife Alicia was forced to give up her dower lands in ‘Dovanby’ in England; this was part of a long list of followers of John Baliol who were thus ordered by Edward I. In 1317 he granted his ‘manor of Roule with Neyfs and their sequls’ to Adam of Yetham. This may have been his son Adam of Rule, who granted the lands of Altonburn (near Yetholm) to the Kers. Alison (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir William Ogilvie of Strathearn, who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. In 1507 they were granted the Barony of Strathearn, it is said because she was the first to inform the King of the birth of a son by his wife Margaret Tudor. She was also named along with her husband in several other charters in the period 1508–13. She appears to have been a member of the court and friend of the Queen. She died before her husband, and they had only one child, John. It is unclear how she was related to other Rules. Andrew of Primside (d.bef. 1439) owner of significant lands in the Regality of Sprouston and the Barony of Penderleith. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules, but it seems likely he was a descendant of Alan of Rule. He bor- rowed £100 from Andrew Ker of ‘Aldtonburne’ (Attonburn, near Yetholm, which had been acquired from the Rules in the previous century) in 1430 (or perhaps 1413) and let lands in Primside to him in the meantime, the money to be repaid at St. Mary’s in Hawick. In 1430 he sold ‘ten husbandlands of the Maynis’ in Primside to Andrew Ker, with the permission of his son George, this being confirmed in 1432 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He resigned his lands to George, his son and heir, in 1432. George had married Marg- aret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Cessford. However, George must have died before him, and he had no other surviving sons, because his 4 daughters (Marjorie, Isabella, Janet and Ellen) became co-heiresses of his lands of How- nam, Penderleith and Hyndhope, and each got one quarter of Primside. In 1439 Andrew Ker was granted 3/5 of the land outright, from his daughters Marion, Janet and Ellen (with the consent of their husbands): it is unclear what became of the other 2/5. In 1443 the Mains of Hownam, and lands of Penderleith and Hyndhope, which had belonged to the 4 co-heiresses, passed to Andrew Ker. Andrew ‘Dan’, (d.1918) 3rd son of Robert and Jane, grandson of John, Inspector of Poor, and nephew of Private Harry. He was born in Hawick and joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He was awarded the Military Medal, General Service Medal and Victory Medal and was killed in action near the end of WWI. His name is recorded on the Vis-en-Artois Memorial. Bernard (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1364 when he resigned his lands of ‘Fouceroule’ (now ‘Folla Rule’) in Aberdeenshire. Brian (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Fiftelar’, i.e. probably a fife player, at the Scottish court in 1506. His name is recorded as ‘Bryane Roule’. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Ellen (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Janet. In 1439 she is ‘Elena Roule of Prymside’ when she appointed her husband Thomas Young, along with Stephen Scot, Thomas Gledstains and others, as procurators when she resigned her part of Primside into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. The sisters’ lands of Primside were granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, and other charters transferring their lands to the Kers followed in 1443 and 1454/5. George (d.bef. 1440) son of Andrew of Primside. His father resigned his lands of Primside to him in 1432. He married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn (and Cessford). Ker gained the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule’s daughters in 1439/40, suggesting that both father and son were deceased by then. George (15th C.) recorded as witness to charter by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78. John ‘Roule’ was also a witness, suggesting they were related. He is probably the same man as George of Edmondsfield. Perhaps the same George was Bailie in that part for David Ranton of Billy (in Haddingtonshire) in 1478, with his brothers Patrick and John as witnesses. George ‘of Edmondsfield’ (15th C.) recorded in 1489–90 when he was involved in a court case with Archibald, Earl of Angus, relating to the lands of Bonkle. He was probably related to Andrew of Primside. He was appointed by the 5th Earl of Angus as Bailie of the Barony of Bonkle, but later ejected from this office. There was an inquest for his son George inheriting Edmondsfield in 1505. George (16th C.) minstrel appointed by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Perhaps the same George witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1539. George (16th C.) witness to a document of the Riddells of that Ilk in 1551. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Elizabeth Nichol, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1799); Margaret (b.1801); Walter (b.1803), carter in Hawick; Thomas (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1810), who married Alexander Pringle Scott; George (b.1815); Jane (b.1818); and Isabel (b.1821). George (b.1815) son of George and Elizabeth Nichol. He was partner in Rule & Leyden, dyers of Teviot Road. The business later amalgamated with British Cotton & Wool Dyers, Ltd. He was a dyer journeyman on the Crescent in 1841. He married Margaret Pringle in 1837 and their children included: George (b.1837); Margaret (b.1838); John (b.1841); Elizabeth (1843–1913), buried in Wellogate cemetery; Jane (b.1845); Frederick (b.1849); Adam (b.1851); Helen (b.1853); and Isabella (b.1855). Their daughter Elizabeth died in 1913 aged 70 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He is probably the son of George and Elizabeth Nichol born in Hawick in 1815. Harry (1875–1917) son of John, Inspector of Poor in Hawick. He served with the Army Service Corps, HQ 52nd Lowland Division. He married Elizabeth Linton, and their children were John, Jim and Janet. He died at sea when the S.S. Ivernia was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Greece. His name is recorded on the Mikra Memorial. Henry (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘de Reuel’ in the period 1188 when he was witness to several benefactions of William the Lion to the monastery of Arbroath. He was granted the lands of ‘Cul-trach’, which included Balmerino, in Fife. He was present at a court in Kinghorn in 1204. He must have been directly related to Richard (possibly his son) who is also recorded as witness in a similar period. He may have married Margaret, daughter ofOrm of Abernethy. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Rouel’ in 1260 when he was listed as a master of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Hugonis de Roule’ in 1320/1 when his seal was attached to a charter of Sprouston. Adam and William are also mentioned in the charter, and so they were surely all related. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded as ‘Umphra Rewll’ in a long remission for any past crimes for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. Given the others with whom he is listed, he probably lived near Langholm. Isabella (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and hyndhope, along with Marjorie, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by then. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Rowl’ in 1526 when he was a witness for a document for Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. He was ‘James Rowill’ in another in 1530, and also for others in 1531. He may be the ‘Jacobo Roull’ when he witnessed a sasine for the baronies of Lugton and Langnewton in 1522. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he was a tenant of Kelso Abbey in 1567. James (17th/18th C.) herd in Whitslade. In 1698 in Ashkirk Parish he married Janet, daughter of James Jackson, cottar in Dimpleknowe. Their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1699. Janet (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Ellen. Their are documents transferring their lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Her name is given as ‘Jenet of Roule’. John (14th C.) recorded as witness to a ‘quitclaim by Robert de Coleuyll’ to Roger of Alton, regarding revenue of lands for Kelso Abbey, in 1328. His name appears as ‘Johne de Roule’. He could be the John whose son William was recorded in 1369. John (15th C.) recorded as a priest in the King’s household in 1468. He was also recorded as a Prebyter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1468. Probably the same John (along with George) was witness to charters by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78, and was Steward of Alexander, Duke of Albany in 1479. He may be the same ‘John Laird of Roule’ listed among a set of Scottish ecclesiastics appointed as ambassadors for appeasing the truce on the Border. And in 1476 there is a summons for ‘John of Roule’ and others for stealing horses from Sir John of Swinton; there is a confirmation of this in 1477. He may also be the ‘John Roule’ who witnessed a document relating to Home of Crailing in 1479. John (16th C.) witness in 1523/4 to a charter of his sister Margaret for lands in Linlithgowshire. Another witness was James Ramsay, Prebendary of Corstorphine. This establishes a connection with Corstorphine, where the poet ‘Gentill Roull of Corstorphine’ had his praises sung by William Dunbar a generation earlier. Perhaps the same John was witness to a document of Kirkintilloch Church in 1523. Sir John (16th C.) Prior of Pittenweem before 1526. He was an ally of Cardinal Beaton. He had at least 4 sons, John, James, William and Ninian. John (16th C.) tenant of Newtown in Roxburghire, recorded in 1531. John (16th C.) signatory of the band of Dumfries in 1570. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Elspeth Nichol and their children included: Agnes (b.1671), an unnamed son (b.1671) and Stephen (b.1675), all baptised in Hawick Parish; and Bessie (b.1684) and John (b.1686), baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses in 1686 were James Turnbull and James Veitch. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was shepherd at Mervinslaw in 1709. Alexander, son of a shepherd at Mervinslaw (with the father’s name blank) was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1706. John (17th C.) listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlsdie in 1742 when his daughter Janet was baptised. His children included: John (b.1731); James (b.1739); and Janet (b.1742). John (18th C.) wright in Nether Boucher. His son John was baptised in 1788. John (19th C.) Inspector of Poor, Collector of Poor Rates and Clerk to the Burial Ground for Hawick Parish towards the end of the 1800s. He wrote the poem ‘Song by a Callant Abroad’. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in 1868, and probably wrote the history published in 1889. It seems likely that the same John Rule was also editor and part owner of the Hawick Express in the late 19th century and who was recorded as ‘Editor’ at 72 High Street in 1875. His children included Harry (killed at sea in 1917) and Robert. Margaret (b.1801/2) grocer on the Backdamgate. In the 1851 census she was living with her sister Isabella, and was unmarried. She was listed as a shopkeeper on ‘Back Damgate’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. Marjory (15th C.) daughter of Andrew (possibly the oldest). She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Primside, Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Isabella, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Martin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roule’ when he was owner of a tenement in the ‘Walkargait’ in Jedburgh in 1574. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith in 1499. He was also Provost of Dalkeith in 1478 when he witnessed a declaration by his brother George, Bailie for David Ranton of Billy. Another brother, John, was also witness. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as serving in the King’s spicery in 1499 and 1500. He was paid his fee

according to the Exchequer Rolls, with his surname written ‘Roule’. Probably the same ‘Pait Roule’ was recorded in 1497 when money was sent from the King’s Treasury to him, lying sick in Ayr. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as ‘Pait of Roul’. James and ‘Philes’ were also listed. Richard (12th/13th C.) probably son of Henry and Margaret Abernethy. He is recorded being present at the court of King William at Alyth in 1180, where his name is ‘Reuel’. He witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s. In 1205 he was a witness to a charter of William the Lion at Forfar. He also witnessed several gifts of the King to the monastery of Arbroath in the period 1188–1214. Henry, who is a witness at about the same time may have been his son or other close relative. Perhaps the same Richard is recorded in charters during the reign of Alexander II, i.e. 1214–49. This was at the same time as Alan and Thomas of Rule. Adam, brother and heir of Richard, is recorded in 1225. Richard (13th C.) recorded in connection with the lands of Bunkle, Berwickshire, in 1247. Richard (13th C.) witness to a renewal of lands in Mow granted to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Heiton in the period 1269–89; he is listed as ‘Ricardo de Rule’. In the period 1270–90 he confirmed a grant of a 20-shilling land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he had remission for wheat ‘fermes’ in 1496 for the lands of ‘Osanisden’. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘de Ryhull’ in about 1240 when along with his wife Christiana, he held half of the lands of North Middleton in Northumberland. Robert (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1391 as ‘a rebel and traitor’ when his lands of ‘Promset in Teyvdalle’ (Priamside) were forfeited to Thomas ‘Sparrowe, late prisoner with the Scots’. Robert (15th C.) Chaplain of the church of St. Nicholas in Aberdeen in 1444. He is recorded as Chaplain there in 1468. Robert (15th C.) recorded in a Berwickshire inquest in 1464. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Newcaste. In 1502 in Jedburgh he was surety for Andrew Storie, who was also a resident of Newcaste, when they were fined for non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) Border minstrel who was supposedly slain by William Henderson of Priesthaugh near Allanhaugh in 1627, as immortalised in the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. It is possible he was connected with George, who is recorded as a minstrel hired by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in charters between 1214 and 1249. For example he was witness to Petronella, daughter of Adam Herring of Minto, when she granted land in the Borthwick to Melrose Abbey. He may be the same Thomas of Rule recorded on a jury in Northumberland in 1231 and as a witness of a grant to the canons of Kirkham in Northumberland in 1256. Thomas (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I by signing the Ragman Rolls of 1296. Another signatory was Adam of Rule, as well as William ‘de Rouley’. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as Rector of Cambuslang (Lanarkshire) in 1329. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘Rouk’ (possibly just a transcription error) during the reign of David II, 1329–71. He resigned his lands of Butland or Butelend in the Sherifffdom of Edinburgh to James Douglas of Strathbok. He may also have resigned his lands of ‘Little-Rulwod’. Possibly the same Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ forfeited certain lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed the grant of the Forest of Ettrick to John Ker in 1358 and was juror at Roxburgh in 1361. And he may be the Thomas who was on an English jury in 1367 deciding which lands had been taken from English subjects by Scotsmen. Thomas (14th C.) witness to a court case in Dundee in 1348. He is recorded as ‘Ruwell’. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Aberdeen in 1390, and as a Bailie in the period 1406–35. He was Provost of Aberdeen in 1417. In 1424 he was still recorded as ‘of Rowle’ when witness to a charter in Aberdeenshire. Thomas (15th C.) eminent ecclesiastical, contemporary with the Provost of Aberdeen of the same name. In 1429 he became a Canon of Glasgow Diocese. In the period 1426–32 he was annually the ambassador to England, designated Chaplain to the King of Scots. In 1429 he was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1438 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in a Northumberland record of 1523. Thomas (16th C.) listed among tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (18th C.) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Holbkirk Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Burnfoot in Wilton. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Subst.’ suggests that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with John Goldie, cabinet-maker in Edinburgh, acting as his substitute. Waldeve (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Souls to Jedburgh
the Rule

Abbey in the late 1100s, recorded as ‘Waldevo de Rula’. His name is also translated as ‘Waltheof’.

Walter (14th C.) Precentor of Glasgow Diocese mentioned in the period 1321–33. For example he witnessed the document of 1329 where the Bishop of Glasgow confirmed the founding of a chantry at Roxburgh Church by Roger of Alton. He was surely directly related to other early ‘de Rules’.

Walter (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roull’ in 1387 when he was granted a Canonyry of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII. He already held a position at the church of Tarbolton. Walter (b.1803) carter in Hawick, son of George. In 1861 he was living at 2 Allars Crescent with his mother Elizabeth, brother John and sister Elizabeth (widow of Alexander Pringle Scott).

William (13th/14th C.) witness to a grant by Adam ‘de Roule’ of lands of Molle to Kelso Abbey about 1300. Another witness was Hugh ‘de Roule’, hence all 3 are likely to have been closely related. He may also be the William ‘de Rouley’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1302 ‘William de Rue’ was King’s Clerk to Edward I at Roxburgh. About 1304 he is mentioned in a charter of donation granted by Robert ‘Wischart’, Bishop of Glasgow. This refers to land ‘of Bromilaw’ bordering his lands. He is probably the William ‘de Rule’ who is recorded (along with Adam) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. It has been suggested by some that he may be the same as the William who became the first Turnbull. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1357/8 when he was witness for the lands of Altonburn passing to John Ker, with William of Gledstones, James of Lorraine and Alexander of Flex being other witnesses. The lands had passed from Adam of Rule in 1354, so this may have been a relative. He also witnessed a further charter of related lands in 1358, passing from William of ‘Blakdene’. In 1369 he was ‘Willemi de Roweile’, son of John, when he resigned lands in ‘Hunedoun’ to Melrose Abbey. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to charters in Edinburgh in 1465 and 1471.

William (b.c.1805) born in Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker living at 5 Round Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861 and still there in 1875. By 1861 he was employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Langholm. Their children included Alexander, Hendry, William, John, twins Thomas and Walter, and Mary (spelled ‘Reule’, ‘Reull’, ‘Roul’, ‘Roule’, ‘Roull’, ‘Roule’, ‘Rowle’, etc. in early records).

the Rule (thu-rool, -rowl) n. popular name for Rule Witter – ‘Between ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fring’d with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull . . .’ [JL], ‘On these sweet scenes I love to ponder, And each fair spot in memory see; So dear must be, where’er I wander, The valley of the Rule to me’ [FMC], ‘. . .As he crossed the Rule, girth deep at the ford, A rider rose dark from the haugh and roared With a voice that shivered the still night air And startled the wild fowl, ‘Who goes there?’ [WHO].

Rule Hervey (rool-her-vee) n. earliest known name for the lands of Abbotrule Parish, first recorded in about 1165 in a charter to Jedburgh Abbey by William the Lion. These lands were granted to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in exchange for a ‘ten pound’ land in ‘Hardinghestorn’ (Northamptonshire). The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from ‘Rule Bethoc’, i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as ‘Rulam Herevei’ in about 1165).

Rulehaugh (rool-hawch) n. area of flat land near the mouth of the Rule Water, possibly lower down in former times before the course of the rivers altered. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands of ‘Rulehalch’ to the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1395 there was a duel there when Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) was challenged by Thomas Struther (an Englishman), with Archibald Douglas and Sir Henry Percy as judges. Struthers was killed in single combat. It is possible this was the same as the Deadhaugh, where Turnbulls supplanted to James IV in 1510. About 80 sheep from here were swept away during the flood of 1846 (it is ‘Rulehalch’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Rules (thu-roolz) n. once important family whose name was connected with the area of Rulewater. Adam and Thomas ‘de Roule’ from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. They held the lands of Altonburn, Primside, Penderleith and Hyndhope, all of which were disposed of by 4 co-heiresses around 1440. There were also Rules in Aberdeenshire from early times. It is unclear what fraction of the world’s Rules are descended from this local family.

Rule’s Land (roolz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Ruecastle in the Parish of Bedrule. They were feuded by Rev. Joseph Tennant of Bedrule from Thomas Hamilton in 1632 (called ‘Roullis land’).

Rule-Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule
Ruletoon

Ruletoon (rool-tin, -toon) n. Ruletown, former name for farms and lands in Hobkirk Parish, at Town-o-Rule. Both Ruletownhead and Ruletownfoot were recorded in the 17th century. In 1694 James Grieve paid tax for 4 hearths there ‘for himself & cottars’, with William Turnbull also a cottar there. Ruletownfoot, former farmstead that was once part of the Abbotrule estate. Its precise location is unclear, but presumably associated with Ruletownhead. It may be the place transcribed as ‘Reidetoun’ where Thomas Turnbull was in 1615. Adam Turnbull and Beatrix Lorraine were there in 1643, each with lands valued at £10. On the 1694 Hearth Tax records, John Lorraine was listed there, with Andrew Mathew and William Blakie as cottars. Separately Thomas Turnbull and Thomas Scott are listed as tenants there in the Hearth Tax rolls, with James Oliver, James Wilkie and James Turnbull being cottars there, and Adam Sharp ‘deficient’ in not paying the tax (it is ‘Roultoonfit’ in 1643, ‘Roultoonfute’ in 1662 and ‘Roultoonfoot’ in 1694).

Ruletoonheid (rool-tin-heed, -toon-) n. Ruletownhead, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam and Walter Turnbull were tenants there in 1643, when it was valued at £140. It had the same value in 1678. It later became part of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the late 17th century part of it was owned by Helen Turnbull, along with West Fodderlee. In earlier times the farm seems to have been incorporated into West Fodderlee, the Grange and Bowatsyde. In 1788 it was owned by the trustees of George Dickson and valued at £96 11s. George Elliot was there in 1794 and John Walker in 1797, with James Dalglish being shepherd in the same year. In 1811 it was listed (in 2 parts, split between Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes) along with ‘Bossshil’ and Burnkinford, among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, having a combined value of about £224 and previously being owned by George Dickson and George Elliot. By about 1874 it was owned by David Henderson, including a part formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull (valued at £96 11s). The tenant was Tom Brown in the mid-to-late 19th century, then passing to the Douglas family. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £300. It seems there was once also a corn mill here (also formerly written ‘Ruletonhead’ and ‘Rule-townhead’, it was ‘Roull tounehead’ and ‘Roultounhead’ in 1678).

Ruletoonheid Mill (rool-tin-heed-mil) n. former corn mill at Ruletownhead. The last miller there was Ralph Prendergast.

Rulewater and its People (rool-wa-tur-and-its-pee-pul) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens, published in 1907. It contains a truly extraordinary number of anecdotes from the general area of the Rule valley, as Tancred systematically described the histories of all the major families of Hobkirk Parish, in addition to much of Bedrule and Southdean. Importantly, the book does not just focus on the histories of the ‘gentry’, but includes all social strata. A facsimile edition was published by Borders Regional Library in 1992.

Rule Witter (rool-wi'-ur) n. The Rule Water, a tributary of the Teviot, joining it from the south near Spittal-on-Rule. It is formed by the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns. The region gave rise to a surname, with the first recorded ‘Roules’ being in the mid-12th century. A history of the parishes along the Rule valley was written be George Tancred in 1907 and republished in 1992 – ‘Then Tividale came to wi’ spied; The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi’ Cranstane, Gladstain, good at need, Baith Rewle water, and Hawick town’[T], ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnbull’s name, And among the proud of the Borders best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame’[WHO], ‘He’s lang since left Roull’s smilin’ scene. An’ fairy nuiks o’ prattlin’ Jed, An’ Oxnam’s pines an’ banks sae green, An’ wimpelin’ Kale’s soft dreamy bed’[WP] (also sometimes one word ‘Rulewater/Rulewitter’; formerly spelled ‘Roull’, ‘Rowll’, etc.; it is ‘Ruiale’ in about 1406, ‘Watter of Rowle’ in 1530 and ‘Reullwater’ is recorded in the 17th century; the origin may be the old Celtic for ‘steep slope’).

Rulewitter Court (rool-wi'-ur-kör) n. Rulewater Court, a street planned for Stirches and appearing on Burrow’s street map of Hawick, although never built.

Rulewitter Rifle Club (rool-wi'-ur-ri-ful-klub) n. Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club, established following a meeting of 1905, called by Mr. Carr-Ellison of Greenriver. Mr. Waldie of Braidhaugh gave a piece of land on his farm for a rifle range. The original membership was 30, with office-bearers being Sir Robert Usher of Wells, George Tancred of Weens, Major E.H.M. Elliot of Wolfelee. It is the last item to be described in Tancred’s book on Rulewater, but it is unclear if the club lasted very long.
Rulewd (rool-wud) n. Rulewood, former farm in the Rule valley, probably once owned by the Rule family. ‘Thomas de Rillewod’, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, may have been owner of these lands. Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ is recorded resigning some lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. It was later home to a local branch of the Gourlay family. Henry Gourlay granted the lands to his son John in 1380, confirmed in 1390. In 1387 John was served heir to his father Archibald. John Gourlay of Rulewood is recorded in the 1490s and several times until 1509 when William Lord Herries of Terregles granted these lands to him. He was deceased by 1521 when his son John was granted lands at Kirkton, and this John was served heir to the lands in 1525. This John also appears in 1533, when he was on an inquest along with William Turnbull ‘in Roulwod’. The lands were listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10. William Turnbull was tenant in 1516. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. ‘Roulwodesyde’ is recorded in the Baronial dispute of 1562, and is described as being the east part of the lands of Hallrule; the ‘Woulroid’ mentioned there may be related, assuming an error. William Turnbull ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ is recorded in 1622. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horswood from his father in 1634. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower’ was passed to his son John in 1380, confirmed in 1390. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It later became part of the estate of Wells and was described in 1738 as ‘all and hall the land of ‘Roulwood’, otherwise Huntlyhill’ (it was ‘Roulwod’ in 1497/8 and 1509/10, ‘Roulwode’ in 1508, ‘Rowlewod’ in 1526, ‘Rowlewood’ in 1545 and ‘Roulwode’ in 1622; see also Little Rulewud).

Rum and Milk (rum-awnd-milk) n. local interest comic strip produced by Jim Colman for the Hawick News from the early 1990s.

rumballach (rum-ba-lee-ak) adj., arch. stormy (of weather), quarrelsome (of a person) – ‘a rumballach wife’, a woman given to brawls, Roxb. [JoJ].

rumberella (rum-bur-e-la) n., arch. an umbrella – ‘Gies the siller, an’ ye’se get yer rumberella’ [WNK]. Note the umbrellas were not used locally until the late 18th century; the first one seen in the Yarrow valley, for example, was in 1779 (perhaps in a joking sense).

Rumlin’ Brig (rum-blin-, rum-lin-brig) n. one of the most familiar tunes played by the Drums and Fifes (along with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and ‘Teribus’). The tune appears to be peculiar to Hawick, although there are other tunes known elsewhere that have a similar name. The tune is played on Picking Night on the march to the Cornet’s house if the route takes the band to the south. It was combined with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ in the Scocha song ‘Bottles at Dawn’.

rungiumption (rum-gump-shin) n. common sense, gumption – ‘she hedni enough rungiumption ti bide away fri um’, ‘Rungumption, Rumphiliongumption, Rumble-gumption, … the remark commonly made as regard to one who is viewed as having more sound than sense, ‘He has a gude deal o’ the rumble, but little o’ the gumption’, Roxb. [JoJ] (also rummlegumption).

rummel see rummle

rummelt (rum-nul) pp. rumbled – ‘Sae blithe and clear the Spetchman sang, As bye his haugh the Tei’ot rummle’t’ [DH] (also written ‘rummle’t’).

Rummie Riddell (ru-mee-i-dul) n. nickname for a local innkeeper around 1800, presumably someone called Riddell – ‘When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An’ up the muirland’ striddle, Ye canna lang be at a loss, Ca’ in to Rummie Riddell’ [JR] (note this is printed ‘R—e R—l’ in the published version, although it is not hard to fill in the blanks).

rummle (ru-nul) v. to move or search through something clumsily, to rummage – ‘she was rummlin throwe her drawers looking for the scissors’, ‘Burns gush it oot, as red they’re rumlin’, Aiks creak it, crash it, as they’re tumlin’, ‘When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An’ up the muirland’ [JoHa], ‘He rummled ’lang the riverside, Ne’er saw the grey trout scuttling by …’[WFC], to rumble – ‘ee’re just openin yer mouth an lettin yer belly rummle’, ‘… maist deerved an daivert an her house on the Kirkwynd to offer a tray to the band in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

rum and milk n. traditional Common Riding drink. The Drums and Fifes are given this as a reward after marching round the former tolls on the Friday morning. The origin and history are unclear, but it is said that one of the members of the Drums and Fifes was given (or asked for) milk with his rum to settle his stomach, since he was not feeling well; the drink caught on with the rest of the band, and then with Common Riding supporters in general. There is a reference in reports of the Common Riding of 1890 to ‘a liberal supply of fresh milk and other customary refreshments’ for the Thursday morning ‘Hut’. The traditional rum has for many years been ‘Skipper Rum’. Bella Robson would regularly come out of Runciman (run-see-nun) n. James (17th C.) smith in Raperlaw recorded at on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths there. His name is written ‘Runciman’. He is probably the James who owned a ‘quarter of land’ in Nether Anrcrn, valued at £13 6s 8d, listed as a former owner in 1788. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for the Routledges of Crook, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He must have been a local landowner, tenant or church official. He is an early example of this surname, which is recorded as ‘Runseman’. He may have been related to the earlier Patrick. Patrick (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men, mostly associated of William Douglas of Cavers, who had remission in 1488/9 for supporting James III. His surname is recorded as ‘Runsyman’. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Watt Runseman’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as ‘Runchiman’ in 1686 when he married Janet ‘Reeford’ in Robertson Parish. Their son Thomas was born in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Robson and Thomas Hardie. Helen (who married John Douglas in Robertson in 1687) and Bessie (who married Thomas Hardie in the same year) were probably his sisters. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Wat (formerly ‘Runchiman’, ‘Runсiaman’, ‘Runseman’, ‘Runsyman’, etc.).

Rung (rupg) n., arch. a staff, strong stick, cudgel, wheel-spoke – ‘...much more primitive than the sword... such as...’ane rung’ [BR], ‘...by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistress rocks when she was spinning there...’ [BR1693], ‘We’ll smash them, as did oor forbears, Wi’ hazel rungs and blackthorn cudgels’ [JoHa], ‘I took my rung that I had flung Ay-ont the auld jambstone...’ [WaD], a branch – ‘Whenever ye’re sent to the country your lane, Com na back like a rung that is sneddit’ [JTe].

Rung-wheel (rupg-wheel) n., arch. the spoke wheel driven by the cog-wheel in a corn mill – ‘As there are two wheels in a corn-mill, which work into one another, the one which has cogs drives the other, and is called the cog-wheel, the other, from its having spokes or rungs, is called the rung-wheel, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Runkle (rupg-kul) n., arch. a wrinkle, crease – ‘The description of feeding hungry schoolboys, by ‘taking the runkles oot o’ their wame’, amused him greatly’ [JW], v., arch. to wrinkle – ‘O the bane o’ St Giles, The bane o’ St Giles, Makes the face o’ the faithless Runckled wi’ smiles’ [FL], ‘Ach, ye’re no’ foolin’ me, Ye brazent hag, Wi your wrunkled hide . . . ’ [DH] (also written ‘runckle’ and ‘wrunkle’).

runt (run’) n., poet. the withered stem of a cabbaga or kail plant – ‘Poor Habby’s kail gat mony a nibble, De’il haet was left but runts an’ stibble’ [JR], also used figuratively – ‘E’en let the runt [Poverty], and a’ her train, Gae stamp and rage’ [JoHa].

the Rural (thu-roo-rul) n. popular name for the Women’s Rural Institute or W.R.I.

rush (rush) n., arch. a rash, skin-eruption.

Rushy Hope (ru-shee-hōp) n. small stream that rises on Wether Law and Millstone Edge, forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

Rushy Rig (ru-shee-rig) n. hilly ridge to the east of the Note o the Gate.

ruskie (rus-kee) n., arch. a basket for carrying seed corn, a large straw bonnet worn by countrywomen – ‘Ruskie, A coarse straw-hat worn by peasant-girls and others, for defending their faces from the sun, Roxb., Mearns; synon. Bongrace’ [JoJ].

Russell (ru-sul) n. Alexander (1808/9–bef. 1851) from Ancrum, he was a gardener in Wilton. In 1851 he is listed as a gardener on Upper Damside, employing 2 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Alexander, Robert and Jane. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living on Wellington Street. Rev. David (1783/4–1868) from Tollcross, he was a schoolteacher, and then was ordained at Colinsburgh Relief Church in Fife in 1811. He moved to Hawick in late 1812 to become the first minister of the new Relief (later Allars) Kirk. His son was the engineer, naval architect and mathematician John Scott Russell. In Hawick he remarried and had more children, and introduced one of the earliest Sunday Schools. Following ongoing dispute over his stipend he resigned in 1819 and later moved to Errol near Perth. He was unable to carry on his duties following some kind of ‘mental ailment’ in 1847. He seemed able to carry on in about 1849, but the same affliction returned by 1854, and he was ‘dead to the world’ for many years before his death. A photograph of him exists. Ella (d.2004) Hawick dressmaker. She worked for dressmakers W. & O. Marcus. It is said that Walter Marcus referred to her as ‘Alice’, since there were already too many Ellas working in the factory! After Marcus’ closed in 1964, she set up her own business at Loch Park, operating as ‘Alison Russell’, this running for about 20 years. In 1986 she married Heinz Melchert, whom she had met in his early days in Hawick, having settled after being a German prisoner of war. Frances, Countess Russell, see Frances Elliot. Francis (1814–95) son of Dr. James (Professor of Clinical Surgery at Edinburgh University) and Eleanor Oliver (daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre). He trained as a lawyer, was called to the bar in 1836 and in 1860 became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire, serving until 1885. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and lived at Jedbank until retiring back to Edinburgh. He married twice. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Fulton. In 1502 Matthew and Martin Oliver in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from him. George (1903/4–67) born in Hawick, he was educated at Wilton and was an apprentice gardener at Wood’s Nursery. He worked as a gardener at Langlee. During WWII he served as a constable with the Hawick Police. After the War he worked for Lyle & Scott’s. He was an enthusiastic member of Lodge 111 and was also made an honorary life member of Lodge 424. He ran with the Tevioldale Harriers and was also a keen motorist in later years. He was a member of the Archaeological Society and interested in the history of Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Lizzie’), daughter of Francis Scott and sister of local historian Dick Scott. They had one child, Isabella (‘Isla’) who was a police officer in Liverpool. The family lived at 8 Oliver Crescent. He died after collapsing of a heart attack at his niece’s wedding in Hawick. Isabella Edmondson (‘Isla’) (1934–2021) only surviving child of gardener George, who served in the Hawick Police during WWII. Her mother was Lizzie Scott, sister of local historian Dick Scott. The family lived at 5 Trevelyan Terrace and then 8 Oliver Crescent and she was educated at the Buccleuch School and Hawick High. After school she worked for Marcus, dressmakers on Commercial Road, along with her cousin Ella Russell. At the age of 20 she responded to a recruitment campaign by Liverpool City Police and left Hawick to begin an entirely new career. She joined at a time when female police officers were rare, but she managed to thrive in this male-dominated environment, her height and calm demeanour probably being strong assets. She was one of the first women in the country to be posted into a traffic department and rose through the ranks of what became the Merseyside Police, becoming one of the first women acting as Sergeant and later Inspector in charge of a largely male department. She eventually reached the rank of Chief Inspector, first in the Traffic Department and then the Warrant Department, this probably being the highest rank achieved by a woman in any force in Britain at that time. After 30 years of tireless service, she took early retirement in 1985. She was involved with the Soroptimists voluntary organisation, which works internationally to ensure that the voices of women and girls are heard. Along with her doubles partner, Marie Lupton, Isla took part in table-tennis tournaments, winning the national competition for police officers on several occasions. In Liverpool, Isla called her house ‘Haaick’, and it also became home to her mother after the untimely death of her father in 1967. She later moved to Tarleton (near Preston) and then back to her native Hawick in 1914. Always retaining close ties with Hawick, she was a member of the Archaeological Society for more than 50 years. Rev. James (b.1808) son of Robert and Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick. He attended school at Yarrow, under the instruction of James Scott. He was minister at Yarrow and wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886), which contains anecdotes about many local people of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He had a cousin, Robert Laidlaw from Philiphaugh. He married Janet Margaret Shand. His children included Robert and John Harvey Shand (1861–84). James ‘Jimmy’ (1867–1956) son of artist John Bucknell. His mother died of smallpox in Edinburgh and the family moved to Fochabers, Morayshire. His great delights were fishing and poaching. He learned painting in his father’s studio. He moved to Glasgow, painting commissions of fish and countryside scenes. In 1918 he and his wife moved to Bonchester Bridge, where they lived above the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Later they moved to Weens Cottages (‘the Sclenty’) and lastly lived in Denholm. In Rulewater he acted as telegraph boy until he was about 80. He continued to paint almost up until his death. His paintings were signed ‘J.B. Russell’, distinguishing them from those of his father. From a Catholic family, he married Protestant Annie Hendry, keeping the marriage secret for years. They had children: Peggy (b.1900); Hendry Smith (1906–88); and William Hendry (1915–41), also known as Dovish, who died in Greece in WWII. He painted the caricature of the ‘Rulewater Foothunters’ in the Horse and Hounds. His painting of Wilton Lodge gatehouse is in the Museum, as well as another of a bridge. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.1939) from Peebles, he was a motor engineer, graduating from Heriot-Watt. He worked with Croall Bryson in Hawick and was a great friend of Jimmy Guthrie, who was godfather to one of his children. He built a model car for his daughter and reconstructed a crashed biplane, which he flew on trips to Europe. He married Edith, daughter of Hawick poet Tom Ker. Their children were: Margaret; and Jocelyn (or ‘Jocey’). He lost money in the Wall Street Crash and moved to Leeds, where he was buried. James Lyon ‘Jimmy’ (1935–) son of Hendry Smith and Isabella Lyon, and grandson of the artist James, he is a social scientist born in Wilton. He lived in Denholm and Rulewater until 1960, later splitting his time between Rulewater and Ireland. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews and Ph.D. from Strathclyde and worked at the University of Ulster, specialising in issues related to children. He carried out survey research for several government agencies and other organisations, particularly in Northern Ireland. After retirement he carried out personalised funerals for people without church connections in the Edinburgh area. He wrote the words and music for the song ‘The Burn at Rins Throu’ Binstead’. He also wrote an article on ‘The Rulewater Foothunters’ for the Scots Magazine in 1987. In 1960 he married Heather Begg and had children Fiona Jane, Roisin Anne and Kevin. John (16th C.) farmer at Over Billerwell. His barn is mentioned in 1562 as part of the dispute over lands in the Barony of feu-Rule. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Kirkton in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1772. In 1760 in Ashkirk Parish he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) daughter of George Thorburn; she was sister of Jean Thorburn, who married John Anderson, farmer at Newton. Their children included: Helen (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1764); John (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); George (b.1771); Betty (b.1772); and possibly Isabella. The witnesses in 1772 were James Dryden and James Scott. Lord John (1792–1878) M.P. from 1813, he was a supporter of extending the franchise and granting religious equality, being one of the drafters of the Reform Bill. He served as Home Secretary, Secretary for War and the Colonies, and Leader of the House of Commons, before becoming Prime Minister in 1846–52 and again briefly in 1865–66. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick during a stay at Minto House in 1840. In 1841 he married the 2nd Earl of Minto’s daughter, Lady Francis Anna Maria. John Scott (1808–82) born in Parkhead, son of Rev. David, his mother (a Scott) dying at an early age. His father became minister of the Hawick Relief Kirk in 1812, where he remarried, and remained until 1819; thus the family must have spent more than 6 years in Hawick. The young John went on to become a naval engineer and architect. He is remembered as the discoverer of the ‘solitary wave’, the full significance of which was not explained and generalised until the 1960s; it gave rise to the mathematical concept of the ‘soliton’, which has diverse applications, such as in optics. Rev. Robert (1766–1847) born in Fife, one of a family of 11, he attended Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. He taught at a school briefly and was a private tutor for the Napiers at Merchiston Hall, near Falkirk. He was licensed to preach at the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1788 and ordained as minister of Ettrick in early 1790. He was a regular visitor at Wilton Lodge, which his patron Lord Napier purchased; the room he used there was known as ‘the prophet’s chamber’. He moved to Yarrow in 1791, succeeding Dr. Cramong and remained there until he died. In 1805 he became Chaplain to the Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly and obtained a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1811. Rev. Campbell of Lilliesleaf referred to him (somewhat facetiously) as ‘the beauty of holiness’. He married Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick; she died in 1843. His son James succeeded him as minister of Yarrow and wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886). He also had another son Walter and a daughter who predeceased him. He was rarely ill, never spending a whole day in bed in his life, and not requiring a doctor until 3 days before his death. When he died he was ‘father of the Synod’. Robert (19th C.) tinsmith at 4 Bourtree Bank. He married Janet, daughter of jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were James A. (a plumber), Robert (an ironmonger) and George (a plumber, who emigrated to America). Rev. Thomas (1830/31–80) from Bucklyvie, son of John, who was the minister there. He became the 6th minister of Allars Kirk in 1857. He was recorded in 1861 as ‘Minister of Crosswynd United Presbyterian Church’, living with his wife Anne W. and children Euphemia M., John W. and William J., along with 2 servants. He moved to Albion Chapel, London in 1863, then to Forest Hill, Sydenham in 1870, although he was only there 2 years. In 1872 he ceased to be recognised as a minister of the U.P. Church. Rev. William Cuthbertson (1839–90) born in Coupar, Angus, son of schoolmaster John. He was educated in Edinburgh New College 1864–68, where he trained for the Free Church ministry. He was based at Lauder before being ordained as 3rd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1872. In 1878 he married Janet Calvert, daughter of George Scott (who was visiting her aunt and uncle in Lauder), postmaster at Mimico, Canada. They had 2 children: William Cuthbertson (1880–1941), born in Hobkirk, who trained as an engineer, joined the K.O.S.B. and died in Lasswade; and Janet (b.1881), born in Hobkirk. He came down with Bright’s disease and moved to Musselburgh for a change, but died after a few months there. Rev. Winning (19th/20th C.) appointed as assistant to Rev. David Hislop at Hawick Evangelical Union Kirk in 1894. Soon afterwards the church united with the Congregational Union. It is unclear exactly how long he remained in Hawick (formerly ‘Russel’).
Ruth

Elliot of Harwood; verses to be read at the annual celebration for the Ancient Order of Foresters; an ‘Epitaph on Mr J. G. e [perhaps James Grieve]; a poem about a dance at Raesknowe; many poems related to beauty and love; a short toast; and several songs about Teviotdale.

Ruth (ru-thu-frord) n. Henry (15th C.) resident of Longnewton, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Gibson, with his surety being George Rutherford of Longnewton.

Ruthead (ru'-heed) n. Ruthead, pass at the head of Ruthead Sike, which flows into Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley. The pass here reaches a height of 352 m, and was formerly on the old road from Lairhope to Howpasley, linking the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys.

Rutherford (ru-thu-frord) n. village and former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. Before being destroyed in 1545 there was a hospital near here for the protection of travellers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, as well as ruins of the old British fort called Ringley Hall. The area was a small parish in ancient times, later absorbed into Maxton. The land is intimately connected with the Rutheaders of that Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the early 17th century, then the Scotts of Thirlestane Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the middle of his life, had to be maintained by Hobkirk Parish and died in Hawick Poorhouse. His brother William (who had emigrated to Australia) sent money back to cover the expenses for his maintenance. Alison (1712–94) daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee, Selkirkshire. In 1731 she married Patrick Cockburn of Ormiston, and thereafter was referred to as Mrs. Cockburn. She was a leading society figure in Edinburgh, and wrote a version of ‘The Flowers of the Forest’. Andrew of Hunthill (c.1430–c.82) son of John. He had a charter for Nether Wormalston in Peeblesshire in 1452. He is probably the ‘Andro of Rutherfurde’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English. In 1479 he had a sasine for Makerston and Grubet. He married Janet Rutherford of that Ilk. Their children included: John, who succeeded; Thomas of the Grange; and Andrew of Swinside, who died at Flodden, and whose daughter Margaret married her cousin (once removed) Sir Nicholas of Hundalee. There may be confusion between Andrew of Hunthill and Andrew of Hundalee. Andrew of Chatto and Hunthill (d.1529) son of George of Hunthill. He was the 3rd husband of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston. From her he inherited several lands, including the ‘half merk land of Bethiroull’ (i.e. Bedrule), which they sold to Andrew Ker of Farniehirst. He may be the Andrew who had sasine for the lands of Swinside in 1506. In 1529 he had a charter for Capehope and other lands, along with his wife Helen. He died without issue and his brother John succeeded to Hunthill in late 1529. Andrew ‘Dand’ of Grange (16th C.) tenant in the Grange, in Abbotrule Parish. He may have been related to the slightly later George of the Grange. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest; his name appears there as ‘Andree Ruthirfurde in Grange’. In 1581/2 his daughter Joanna received sasine of half of the lands of Todrig ‘in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent’ from Walter Scott of Todrig; William of Abbotrule was a witness and hence probably related. He could be the ‘David’ of the Grange recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1652 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Brown. Andrew of Hundalee (c.1530–96) son of Sir Nicholas. His older brother George died a rebel. He was ‘youngar of Hundley’ in 1567 when ordered to remain in ward in Edinburgh; at the same time he and Robert Fraser of Overton were sureties for entering a servant of Fraser’s. He was also surety for Dand Davidson of Birnryrig. Along with his father and many other prominent Borderers, he signed a bond in 1571/2 to act against thieves. He was ‘youngar of Hundley’ in 1573/2 when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Richard of Edgerston as his surety (and apparently vice versa); he himself was surety for George of the Grange, as well as ‘Jock of the Knowe’ He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 (perhaps earlier), annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court David Middlemas ‘in Grubthauch’. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his son Nicholas was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle of Smalholm in 1561. Their children included: John; Nicholas, who succeeded; and Andrew. However, it is stated in some family histories that he had no sons, and was succeeded by his brother Nicholas. It is also (or alternatively) claimed that he married Christian, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Makerston and they had no issue, so Hundalee was eventually inherited by his sister Marie, who married Sir James Kerr of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. Andrew of Townhead (d.1674) stabbed James Douglas (brother of Sir William of Cavers) while on their way to Jedburgh after dining together at Swanside. He subsequently tried to flee abroad, but was caught at Tynemouth when trying to escape to sea and returned to Edinburgh for trial. He tried to pin the blame on Robert Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the witnesses. He was found guilty and beheaded at Edinburgh Cross. He must have been related to other Rutherfords of Townhead and of the Hall. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick Town Clerk from 1670 until about 1673. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He was notary for the document drawn up (possibly in 1672) for the Commission by the Town Council to discuss an equal division of the Common with the Earl of Queensberry. He was also listed as notary when he witnessed a baptism for John Chalmers in Hawick in 1673. A man of the same name is recorded as schoolmaster in Ancrum in 1643 (but there is no obvious connection). Andrew (d.1664) 5th and youngest son of William of Wrightsland and Quarryholes, with his 3rd wife Isabel Stewart of Traquair. His father was eldest son of William, a ship’s captain in Leith, who was grandson of Archibald Rutherford, Canon of Jedburgh and descended from the Laird of Hunthill. He had a successful military career in the French service, where he became a Lieutenant General. He had 4 brothers, one of whom was a treasurer to the King of Spain. Coming to England after the restoration of Charles II, he was recommended by the King of France. He was created the 1st Lord Rutherford in 1661 and served as Governor of Dunkirk. In 1663 he was created the 1st and only Earl of Teviot. In that year there was an inventory made of his possessions (amounting to almost £200,000 Scots, as well as a will and 2 other deeds. He was mentioned several times in the diaries of Samuel Pepys. He died in Tangier after being sent there to be Governor by Charles II. Having no issue, he had named Sir Thomas of Hunthill as his heir. Andrew of Edgerston (1646/7–1718) 2nd son of John. He succeeded to Edgerston in 1686, his elder brother John having already died. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths at his house at Edgerston. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Laird of Edgerston who appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas. He contributed a legacy to ‘poor lame soldiers’ and another to the University of Edinburgh. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded ‘in Rule’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner in Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. Andrew (17th C.) listed at Swinnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) portioner in Lilliesleaf. His son Andrew junior was on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as son of Andrew, portioner in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Barnhills in the 1860s. Ann (18th C.) chambermaid at Midshiels in 1791, when she was working for Archibald Douglas. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for several crimes, including his slaughter. Perhaps the same Archibald is also mentioned when John Davidson in Minto was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 10 oxes from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Rutherfords. Archibald (d.1685) 4th son of John of Hunthill. He was ‘younger’ in a deed of 1663. In 1670 he succeeded his brother Thomas in the lands and barony of Scrabstouk, otherwise known as Hunthill, as well as Newlands and Linton in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as owner of Hunthill, Scrabstouk and Groundhouseenook in 1678, valued at £1200. In 1680 he succeeded his brother Thomas as the 3rd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament as a peer. He died abroad, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Robert. He was the basis for the Master of Ravenswood in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Bride of Lammermuir’, the bride being based on his betrothed, Janet Dalrymple. His testament was registered with the Commissariot of Peebles in 1691. Bertie (17th C.) recording being ‘of the Wood’ in 1643 when his lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £20. It is unclear where this was. Caleb (1765–c.1831) son of Robert and Mary Simpson. He was apprenticed as a shoemaker, but gave up the trade to become Burgh Officer. He worked as the town crier and drummer as well as sheriff’s officer. He would also call public auctions etc. in the time before there were newspapers in Hawick. He roused the town with his drum during the False Alarm of 1804. He also acted as crier of races and games at the Common Riding, and was one of the Halberdiers. In addition he was annually the toastmaster at the King’s Ranting, and was paid extra for singing. He was well known as a trickster and wag, and for avoiding steady work at all costs. He used to repeat things like the Burgess Roll, adding amusing comments of his own. Due to such idiosyncrasies, he frequently came to grief for breach of Bailie’s orders. His wife was referred to as ‘Jean Caleb’, and with her and ‘the Noted Beattie’ they used to perform shows around the south of Scotland and northern England. One incident is related of him claiming to exhibit ‘a horse’s head where it’s tail should have been’ at Kelso Fair. After being dismissed for being drunk one Common Riding he is supposed to have said ‘There’s ye’re drum; ye’ll carrie’t hame for me. Ye’ll sune get another drummer, but ye’ll never get another Caleb.’ He is surely the ‘Calib Rutherford, shoemaker’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784 (even although he would have been quite young at the time). He lived to a ripe old age, and his drum is in the Museum. He appears in a cameo role in ‘The Gutterbludes’ – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’[RM], ‘…Or Caleb rise to beat the drum, And I cry out ‘They come, they come!’’[AD]. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in 1766. He married Janet Richardson in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761) and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker Thomas Burnet and John Richardson (probably related to his wife). His son Charles died in Hawick in 1782. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Craill Parish. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Betty Little. Charles Faa Blyth (1824/5–1902) son of Esther Faa Blyth, who was the last Queen of the Gypsies. Born at Kirk yetholm, he spent 58 years of his life in England, but returned in 1898 to claim the gypsy crown. This was said to be to ‘boost the tourist trade’, the coronation being a pageant attended by thousands. He was visited in his palace by the Hawick Archaeological Society field trip in 1901. He died less than a year later, while sitting in his chair. Charles Dickson (1825/6–95) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. In 1841 he was an apprentice grocer living on the Sandbed. On the 1861 he was visiting his brother Walter at Mabonlaw. He went to Edinburgh as a young man and is said to have broken his leg when he kicked out at a rat, but hit something solid instead; he was attended to in his recovery by Christina Smart who he subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded ‘in Gramis’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was (although ‘Grange’ is possible if this was an error). David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose children included: Margaret (b.1682); John (b.1685); Adam (b.1682); and Marion (b.1682). The witnesses in 1685 were John Scott in Ormiston and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park when Andrew Oliver & Son moved to Weensland Road. They continued sales there until the early 1900s. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Euphan (17th C.) servant of Francis Scott, former minister of Hassendean. She is recorded in 1693 when Robert Scott was fined in Hawick for striking her ‘with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there’. Francis (1770s–bef. 1841) watchmaker of the High Street. He was recorded as a clock-maker in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is recorded as a watch and clockmaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Henderson and their children were: Francis Elliot; Agnes; and William, who carried on the jewellery business. An unnamed child of his died in 1811. His wife was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. Francis ‘Frank’ (b.c.1795) textile worker in Hawick. He was a woollen stocking dresser in 1841 and a wool hosiery warehouseman in 1861. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on the Round Close. His wife was Jessie and their children included Thomas, Jessie and Jean. Francis E. ‘Frank’ (b.1843/4) son of clock-maker William. He served as clock-keeper in Hawick from 1869. Sir George of Chatto (c.1380–c.1428) probably son of Robert of Rutherford and nephew of James of that Ilk. He was squire of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He was probably a survivor of the Battle of Vernueil in 1424. He married Janet Rutherford, possibly of Edgerston; she was related to the Lorraines who held the lands of Hummelknowes near Hawick and in 1428/9 was described as his ‘wyfe quhylem’ (probably former wife). He is probably the ‘Georgio de Rutherfurde’ as witness to a charter for Home of Wedderburn about 1413 and witness to a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben in 1414. He had a charter of confirmation for Chatto in 1429, but appears to have died shortly afterwards. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Other children were: Adam, Prior of the Anchorites in Ancrum; George of Langnewton: Walter of Redheugh: Katherine, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Helen, who married Sir Thomas Borthwick of Colylaw and Bourhouse. George of Ettles Cleuch (15th C.) son of Robert of Chatto. He was a member of the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492, when he is listed as ‘Georgium Ruthurfurde de Edilischuch’. 1495 there was a ‘retour or inquest’ at Jedburgh, finding that he was heir to his father in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddilischuch' and Hangingshaw, as well as the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill. He also had a sasine for the same lands. George of Hunthill (d.c.1496) son of Robert and Margaret Glendinning. He could not have been Laird for very long. His wife’s name may have been Mariotta. He was succeeded by his son William. George of Longnewton (d.c.1499) 3rd son of George of Chatto. He was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains in 1483 and left his seal on a document relating to Synton in 1494. In 1493 he was surety for Henry Rauch in Longnewton (who had remission for the murder of Thomas Gibbinson), as well as for Patrick and Arthur Crawford in Longnewton Mill. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1494 when Alexander, Lord Erskine succeeded to his father’s lands of Synton and hereditary Sheriffship of Selkirkshire. In 1494/5 he was surety for Henry Ruth in Longnewton. Also in 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from him at ‘Canys’, as well as 40 sheep from him at Sandystanes. In 1497 he gave a charter ‘from his place of Sandystany’ to his grandson Walter. In the same year he was mentioned in an inquest relating to the boundaries of Melrose Abbey lands. He married Catherine Lyle. His sons Adam and Gilbert were recorded in 1498. He may already have been dead when the ‘Dominus de langnewtoun’ (no forename given) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. A case at the 1502 Justice-aire at Jedburgh related how 120 of his sheep had been stolen from ‘Sandystanis’ by the Laird of Minto and ‘resett’ by Adam Scott ‘in Hawchesteris’ (probably Highchesters). Another case in 1502 involved Peter Turnbull in Bonchester, who was in a group who burned 120 bolls of barley and 60 bolls of wheat belonging to him, as well as stealing 25 oxen, 44 cows and 60 sheep from him, and burning 11 horses, and other goods of his at Barnhills. Peter Turnbull was also involved in burning 26 bolls of barley and 40 bolls of oats at ‘Sandystanis’, with the help of John Turnbull of Minto and others. One more case in 1502 recorded how Adam Grahamslaw had stolen 41 sheep and 8 threaves of barley from him. In 1510 his son Adam had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. George of Hunthill (15th/16th C.) son of William. In 1500 there was a dispensation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, allowing him to marry Elizabeth Turnbull, although they were related in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity. In 1507 there was a ‘retour of inquest’, finding that he was heir of his father William of Hunthill, in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, Ettles Cleuch and Hangingshaw. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he confirmed a charter of Scraesburgh for Ninian Glendinning. In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and John of Hundalee had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. In 1520/1 he had a charter for a 4 merk-land in Scraesburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, and married Helen, daughter of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk; John ‘Cock’ of Hunthill, who married Christine Pringle and succeeded his brother Andrew; William, who married Christian Armstrong; and Archibald, who was Canon of Jedburgh and married a Douglas of Bonjedward. George of Hundalee (c.1470–c.1545) son of John, whom he succeeded. He was ‘junior Laird of Hundalee’ in 1502 when serving as surety for Lawrence in ‘quhitmeir’. He was a Bailie for Sir William Colville of Ochiltree in 1504. In 1508 he was part (along with his father) of the panel of retour for Adam Hepburn. He was one of the major Border Barons who signed a bond in 1525 to help the Earl of Angus, the Warden. In 1526 he was listed among the many Borderers in a remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Nicholas and Andrew were also listed. He had a charter for Hundalee in 1528. In 1538 he was charged with assisting ‘George Ruthirfurd, called Cokburne, John Ruthirfurde, called Jock of ye Green, and other rebels at the Kingis horn’, In 1539 he had a charter for Ashtrees. In 1542 he resigned his lands into the hands of James V, in favour of his son Nicholas; this included Hundalee, Ashtrees, Gru- bet, Kirk Yetholm, Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees, Makerstoun, Rucastle and Lanton. In 1544 he signed a bond to serve Henry VIII during the ‘Rough Wooing’, but in the following year the English burned Hundalee anyway. He was suc- cceeded by Sir Nicholas, his son. He also had a daughter who married Adam Grahamslaw of Newton. George ‘Cockbank’ (16th C.) said to be a ‘great riever, thief and manslayer’. He was on a 1540 list of Scottish rebels ‘reset’ within England who the Wardens wanted captured. He is there ‘Geo. Rutherford called Cok Bankes’ and listed along with his brother ‘Hobbe’ and a son with unknown first name, as well as other Rutherfords. He is probably the ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne’ listed along with John ‘called Jock of ye Green’ and other rebels who Ker of Cessford, Douglas of Cavers, Rutherford of Hundalee and Ker of Dolkistone were accused of assisting in 1538. About the same time he was captured and held in Carlisle Castle with his son Thomas and Tom Bell, probably so they could be exchanged for the Englishman Dr. Hillyard. In 1540 James V refused to exchange him for the churchman, but offered to swap him for any English lawbreaker; his fate is not recorded. He was probably related to ‘Robin’ and ‘Gawen’, who are also listed in 1540. He is probably the George recorded along with Thomas Turnbull in 1541, when they were accused of having been on a raid into England with 100 other Scotsmen in which John Routledge and Robert Noble were killed. George of Longnewton (16th C.) listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He is also recorded in 1560 on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was son of William, who was murdered earlier by Robert Ker of Newhall. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, suggesting that he could not write himself. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. He may be the same man as George of Fairnington. George of the Grange (16th C.) signed a bond with John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, along with Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell. He was also part of the bond in same year among Turnbulls, Eliots and others to bring in William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). In 1560 he signed the bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1569 he was ‘George Ruthirfurd in the Grange’ when a set of Home, Rutherfords and Kers were caution for him to remain in ward in Forfar. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown, allowed with several other Borderers, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators appointed for the Eliots in their feud with the Pringles. George of Fairnington (16th C.) probably son of William of Longnewton. He is listed as ‘George Ruthirfurde of Pharnyngtoune’ when he witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scots and the Kers, signed in Melrose. In 1580/1 he witnessed a list of the feuars of Newton (near Melrose), made at Selkirk. In about 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1601 he was among a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace. In 1602 he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds (with his hand ‘at the pen’). He was probably ancestor of the later George of Fairnington. He may have married Margaret Cranston and had 5 sons. George (16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1580 when he had a marriage contract with Isabel, daughter of George Riddell in Lilliesleaf. The contract included conditions that if he died before there were offspring, then his wife was to inherit half of his possessions and get her dowry back. George of the Grange (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as ‘younger in Abbotreull’ when he had a bond with Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. This was on behalf of William Shiel of Fodderlee. He could be the George ‘of Rule’ whose ‘Airs’ were recorded as owning land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643, valued at £20. He is probably related to ‘Dand’ of the Grange, who is recorded in 1581/2. George of Fairnington (16th/17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier George of Fairnington. He was signatory of the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. His name was written ‘G. Rutherforde of flairningtoume’. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he or an earlier George signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the George ‘of Farringtoun’ who acted as bailie for a sasine for the Haliburtons at Friarshaw in 1606. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He may be the George of Langnewton whose younger sons were Thomas, Adam and Patrick, from whom sprang the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. The owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ is probably in fact Lady ‘Symington’, and unrelated to the George of Fairnington who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas (and Elizabeth Turnbull), from whom sprang the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish.

and Barbara Haliburton of Newmains. He may be the younger Laird of Fairnington whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. In 1716 he slew Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw in a drunken fight over the rights to a spring bordering their properties; the spring was afterwards known as the ‘bloody well’. He kept in hiding until it was clear that he would not be prosecuted. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. His wife could have been the ‘Lady Ferninton’ who paid the window tax at Timpendean in 1748. His son George, W.S., married Mary, daughter of Strother Ker of Littledean. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Lieut. George of Knowesouth (d.1806) 2nd son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He succeeded his brother John, who died without an heir, only a few years after inheriting Knowesouth. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, and while serving on the Trident had been responsible for sentencing some men to illegal punishments, which had led to their deaths. He was taken into custody in Plymouth, but escaped from ship the night before the trial, and was believed to have drowned. Doubts over the circumstances of his death (and rumours that he had effected an escape) led to delays in legal proceedings to decide on the inheritance of the estate. He was ultimately succeeded by his aunt, who had married Thomas Scott, and their son Charles Scott. George (18th/19th C.) watch and clockmaker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have been related to Francis, who was listed separately as a clockmaker at the same time. One of them was probably the Rutherford marked at about 39 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. George (b.c.1800) from Jedburgh, he was farm steward on the Minto estate. He married Mary (or ‘Mina’) Easton, probably in St. Boswells. In 1841 he was living at Minto Lillielaw Lodge with his wife and 4 children. Their children included: James (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1830); John (b.1833), partner in Turner & Rutherford’s in Hawick; and Isabel (b.1839). George (b.1806) joiner at Blacklee and Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. His father was James, joiner at Buncorcher Bridge, while several other brothers were also joiners. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at ‘Killknkowa’, and was a joiner at ‘Blackley’ in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis and their children included: James (b.1830); William (b.1832); Helen (b.1834); Isabella (b.1836); Thomas (b.1838); Janet (b.1839); Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845); and Margaret (b.1847). George (d.c.1895) son of James. He carried on his father’s tailor’s business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They had a son, Thomas. After his death his wife carried on the business for a few years, before it was taken over by William Sharp. She later married Mr. Irving. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Gilberti de Ruthirfurde’ in 1437 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted lands in Eckford for capturing him. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. One suggestion is that he is the same man as William, 3rd son of Sir Richard and Jean Douglas. Gilbert (1832/3–99) Hawick resident. In 1852 he married Agnes Park, and she died in 1907, aged 75. Their children included: Maggie, who died young; William (1851–98), who died at West Meridan, Connecticut, U.S.A.; Mary (1854–1925); Margaret (1856–61); Frank (1865/6–1928); Betsy (1870–1931); John (d.1936); and Gilbert, tweed merchant. He died in Howlands Terrace and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He became a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie’s coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI. Gregory (13th C.) one of the earliest of the family on record. He was witness to a document relating to Fairnington in the Melrose Abbey charters in about 1214. He witnessed another document (relating to Elliston) for Melrose Abbey in about 1220 to 1243; he is listed there as ‘Gregor de Ruthirfurde’. He witnessed 5 other documents in about the same period. Helen (d.1544) daughter of Philip, who was eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. She was also known as ‘Ellen’. She managed to gain the estates of Rutherford and Wells after the death of her brother Richard, the other lands being inherited by her uncle Thomas. She was served heir in 1502/3, but the male heirs objected, and it took until 1505 to go through the courts. She also later gained Edgerston. She delivered the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston into the hands of the King, so they could be infected to her and her husband in 1505 and 1506. Also in 1506 her husband received a pardon for the murder of Thomas Rutherford within Jedburgh Abbey. About the same time the King confirmed to her the ‘half merk land of Bethrioull’ near the parish church, ‘held in tack by Herbut Turnbull’. In 1511 James Douglas of Cavers resigned his superiority of Rutherford and Wells to her and her husband. In 1534/5 she appears to have been in debt when some of her lands in Rutherford were granted to William Jackson. In 1537 her lands of ‘Hurdhouse and Thieflknowis’ were attacked by a large band led by the Kers of Auld Roxburgh and ‘Stokstruther’. She married 4 times, her husbands being: Sir John Forman of Davine (who had been one of her tutors); Sir James Ker of Mersington, who was killed by the Rutherford’s; apparently as the newly weds left the church; Andrew Rutherford of Hunthill; and Patrick Home of Broomhouse. She gallantly defended the tower of Broomhouse from the English force led by Sir Ralph Evers, eventually being burned to death there, along with her children. The cruelty of this act was used as a rallying cry by the Scots at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. Since she never had a surviving son to succeed her, despite her desperation to do so, her lands passed to other family members. Henry Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded at Redfordgreen as Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He may only have been given the lands in order to be a voter, since there is no evidence he ever lived in the area. Hugh (18th/19th C.) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James of that Ilk (c.1395–1454) son of Sir Richard. Along with his brother Nichol he was appointed guarantor of a treaty with the English in 1449. He is probably the ‘Jamys of Rothurfurd’ who witnessed a document between Haig of Bemersyde and Melrose Abbey in 1425. In 1427 he was ‘Jacobo de Rudderfurde de eodem’ when he witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Burnflat and part of Birkwood, near the present day Duke’s Wood. He held the lands of Edgerston at least by 1448 when he had a sasine. In that year he was ‘Jacobo de Rudderfurde de eodem’ when he witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw. In 1449 he and his brother Nicholas acted as guarantors for a treaty with the English. In 1451 and 1452 he had charters for the lands of ‘Leithbert, ‘Leithbertsheils’, etc. He married Christian a grand-daughter of Sir Robert Lauder and was succeeded by his son James. James of that Ilk and Wells (c.1420–93/4) son of James. He was the first Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Note there is some debate over these generations, one genealogy suggestion being that there are 2 separate Jameses covering this entry. In 1455 he had remission for certain rents because of the damage he endured on the death of his father in defence of the realm. He was the ‘lorde of Rutherfurde’ on the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he received the patronage of the Kirk of Rutherford (previously belonging to the Earl of Douglas), was a Conservator of a truce with the English and was appointed a Warden of the Marches. In 1464 he had a sasine for Hownam. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald Douglas and on the panel for deciding on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. In 1468 he was part of an agreement with the Homes and Kers over lands of Crailing. In 1471 he received a charter of the lands of Hownam, Capehope and Swinset, confirmed along with his wife in 1483. He is probably the James who had a debt relating to Crown lands in 1471, with Thomas Turnbull and Robert Rutherford as pledges. In 1482 he had a charter for the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1483 he was also witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains and another for Smallholm. He was appointed a commissioner for settling the Border marches in 1487, under the designation of Lord Rutherford. In 1488 he was mentioned in a charter of James III re-granting the regality of Cavers to William Douglas; there he is stated

‘for the favour which he bears to the said William Douglas’ to perform his service to the King. He gained the barony of Edgerston in 1492/3 and is recorded in that year when his superior James Douglas confirmed the lands of Rutherford and Wells (or ‘Walls’, in the Barony of Cavers) to him and his heirs. His possessions described in 1492/3 included the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. He is last recorded in early 1494 when he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Erskine. Their children included: Philip, whose son Richard succeeded, and whose widow married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; John, recorded as son of the Laird of Rutherford in 1493; Thomas of Edgerston, who succeeded his nephew as Rutherford of that Ilk; Andrew; Robert; Christian, who married Sir Robert Ker of Caverton; and Janet, who married John Rutherford of Hundalee. He was succeeded by his grandson Richard, who was the last Rutherford of Rutherford. James (d.c.1500) son of Adam, he was murdered at the Kirk of Hawick. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for his murder, as well as a long list of other crimes. Some other Turnbulls (accomplices of Peter) were ‘at the horn’ for being involved in his murder. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Patrick Turnbull at Wauchope Tower ‘componed’ for associating with the Turnbulls who were responsible for his murder. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was part of a letter of ‘respite and protection’ for the friends and family of William Douglas of Cavers (Sheriff of Teviotdale), while he was away in Denmark. Other men named were William Douglas (heir of the Sheriff) and William, Robert and Thomas Rutherford. It seems likely that they were members of the family of Rutherford and Wells. He could be the same as the James listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran, recorded between the Rutherfords of Hundalee and of Grange. James ‘Kay’ (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Ancrum in 1502 when he had remission for a list of crimes. This included stealing cattle, sheep, geese and threaves of oats from Fairnington on several occasions, his surety being Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. James (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, when he paid for 8 hearths. Probably the same James married Margaret Hastie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk: Beatrice (b.1691); James (b.1692); John (b.1694); unnamed (b.1695); Margaret (b.1696); and George (b.1697). The witnesses in 1691 were Robert Pringle and John Cuthbertson and in 1694 were John Stewart and Andrew Fletcher. James (17th C.) tenant in Orniston. He was resident of Orniston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1716 in Hawick his daughter Mary married Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. James (b.1697/8) shepherd in Hawick Parish. He worked as shepherd for 20 years at Alton Croft, 14 years at Nether Southfield and later at Langflat. In 1761 he was 3 men selected to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft to regularise it. He was a widower in 1767 when he gave evidence in the court case regarding the division of the Common. James of Bowland (d.1747) only son of Robert of Bowland and Anne Murray. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1730–34, succeeding his cousin John Pringle. He also served as Commissary for Peebles in 1733. He was a ruling elder at the 1737 General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He is supposed to have owed a large sum in arrears of teinds, but was unable to find evidence that his father had purchased the right of these teinds; however, in a dream his dead father told him about the old writer who had the documents, which he was able to retrieve the next day. He married Isabella, daughter of John Sharplaw (or perhaps Simpson). His daughters Anna and Barbara emigrated to North Carolina. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was living at Eilrig. In 1726 he married Helen Haliburton, also from Roberton. His children included: Janet (b.1727); Maly (b.1728); and Isobel (b.1730). James (18th C.) farmer at Fulahill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) listed as gardener at Midshiels in 1791 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the James in Wilton who married Agnes Hogg in Melrose in 1790. He may also be the James who married Jane Thomson in Wilton in 1795. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandystones in Ancrum Parish. He owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. James (b.1768/9) born in Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Barnhills. In 1851 he was farmer there of 360 acres, employing 12 labourers. His children included Elizabeth, Agnes and Andrew. James

James Rutherford was born in 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Parish in 1799. James (d.bef. 1840) slater in Hawick. His daughter Jeniina died in 1840. James (1808–41) 3rd son of Bonchester joiner James. He married Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson and grand-daughter of John Stevenson, Laird of Kirkstyle. Their son Thomas (b.1832) eventually took over as blacksmith from his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson. James (1818/9–1900) tailor of 60 High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 21 High Street. He married Mary Wilson, who died in 1892, aged 73. Their children included Betsy Waldie, William, Isabella and Elizabeth, who all died in infancy, Robert, James, George (tailor and tobacconist), Alison and Mary (who married Andrew Wight). It is said that as a boy he ‘took part in the rare old sport of guizarding, and on one occasion appeared at Abbotsford along with some other boys’; Sir Walter Scott rewarded him with a half-crown for the performance and his rendition of ‘Scots Wha Hae’. James (b.1825/6) born in New York state, he was a hosiery warehouseman in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Teviot Place (which may be the same as 4 Teviot Road). He married Isabella Elliot and their children included: George (b.1856); and Thomas Elliot (b.1861). James (b.1842/3) born in Roberston Parish. In 1901 he was shepherd at Dodburn. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter who was also Janet. James (b.1843) son of William, farmer at Ferniehirst Mill. He was farm steward at Kershaugh and in 1877 or 1878 moved to Gatehousecote, where he was also farm steward. By 1891 he had moved to Chesters Grange in Ancrum Parish. He married Isabella Hood and their children were William Rae (b.1877), John Hood (b.1878), Cecilia Richardson (b.1880), Henry James (b.1883), Charles (b.1885/6) and Robert (b.1887/8). James (b.1876) son of Tom, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated in Hobkirk and served his apprenticeship with his father. He worked in Kelso and Hawick, returned to Bonchester, worked with a shipbuilders in Belfast and then in Edinburgh, before taking over as blacksmith at Bonchester in 1899. In about 1904 he became tenant of the inn at Bonchester and gave up the blacksmith’s business. He married Margaret Sparks, who was sister of his brother Thomas’ wife. James (b.1861) born in Hawick, he attended St. Andrews Kirk. He studied at Edinburgh University and was ordained as a minister of the Free Kirk in Coldstream in 1887. He became minister at Craigmillar Park, Edinburgh in 1896. James (20th C.) Managing Director of Turner & Rutherford’s at Mansfield Mills. He was in this position at the time of the 1955 fire, which was not long before the firm foelded. Jane see Mrs. James Rutherford Oliver. Janet (17th C.) landowner in Abbotrule Parish in 1663. She paid £70 on the Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps she was widow of a man who formerly owned lands in Abbotrule, for example ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’ or George of the Grange. Mrs. Janet (18th/19th C.) closest relative of William Turnbull, last Laird of Langraw. She inherited the property sometime in the 1790s. She married a Mr. Easton, who settled in America, and sold Langraw in 1801. Jean (18th/19th C.) wife of Caleb, she was known as ‘Jean Caleb’, and her surname is uncertain. Together with ‘the Noted Beattie’ they locally performed ‘Wild Man of Bengal’ shows. Her snuff box is in the Museum, with the date February 22 1803. John of Hundalee (15th C.) probably son of Nicholas of Hundalee. In 1434 he was ordered to leave Jedburgh Abbey and to allow the Abbot, Thomas Cranston, to take possession (probably a dispute over burial rights in the choir between the 2 families). He was witness to the sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. John, son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet was also a witness, showing that they are different men; he is there recorded as ‘Johannis de Rutherfurd de Hundwelle’. He may be the John who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1464/5 he was ‘Johne of Ruthirforde of Hundwelle’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1467 he is recorded as ‘Johannis Ruthirfurde, dominus de Hundwalyey’ when he was appointed by Parliament (along with John Ainslie of Doiphinston) to make an evaluation of Roxburghshire. He appears to have married Margaret Charteris (daughter of Thomas of Cagnore) and then a daughter of Sir Thomas Cranston. The contemporary John appears easy to confuse with him, while the later John of Hundalee was possibly his son, but more likely to have been son of Andrew of Hundalee. John (d.c.1470) son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet. Along with his father he witnessed the sasine of Woollee and Wolfhopelee to David Home in 1436. This was also witnessed by John of Hundalee, showing they are 2 separate people, even although he may be the later John of Hundalee; this is clearly confusing, and family histories may be muddled. In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1453 he had a lease of the Crown lands of ‘Kyncavil’. In 1457 he had a sasine for lands at Falnash, Hassendean, Grubet and Kirk Yetholm.

In the Exchequer Rolls of 1458 he is probably the John, heir of the deceased Nicholas who had previously dealt with the accounts for Jedburgh. He firstly married Elizabeth, sister of John Rutherford of Yetholm. His second wife was Margaret Turnbull. He was succeeded by his son Andrew of Hundalee and had another son George. John of Edgerston (d.def. 1501). In 1494 he was fined 10 pounds at the Judiciary Court for failing to produce Walter (probably a relative). He was one of the sureties (with Sir Robert Ker) for the appearance of Robert Langlands to answer to his murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw in 1494/5; they had to pay £20 when Langlands failed to show up. In the same year he was also surety for Thomas, son of Nicholas Rutherford, who had killed Duthac Rutherford, for James Davidson in Raperlaw, George Davidson in Raperlaw and for the Grahamslaw of Newton. He also served as surety for others in 1494/5 and was fined for the non-appearance of some of them. He was possibly second son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and elder brother of Thomas of Edgerston. He is probably the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2, and also the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who was surety for a resident of Edgerston in 1493. It is possible he is the ‘Johnne of ruthirfurde in edzartoun’ who was fined ‘a ruk of corne’ in 1503 for failing to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Ninian in Ancrum. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, he was surety for himself, as well as his brother acting for him. He failed to appear and was to be fined at the next court. At the 1502 Justice-aire he was surety for his brother Ninian in Ancrum, as well as for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston; failing to appear, he was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. John of Hundalee (c.1450–c.1524) son of Andrew of Hundalee. He is easy to confuse with the slightly earlier John of Hundalee (who may have been his uncle). He is probably the ‘Johanni Roderdurfr de Hundole’ who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484.

In 1491/2 he was recorded as ‘Johanni Ruthirfurde de Hundole’ when he had a charter for the lands of Ruecastle (resigned by Thomas Dickson), as well as Samieston (resigned by Thomas Ker of Cessford). In 1492 he obtained a decree from the Privy Council against William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, as well as John Gledstains of that Ilk for 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas. He was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for the lands of Synton in 1494, where he is ‘Johannes Ruthirfurde de Hundole’. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 his ‘suitor’ was Adam Sluthman, who was present at the court for his lands of Ruecastle. In 1499 he witnessed a document for Walter Ker of Cessford and also the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1502 he presented Nicholas Oliver at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Grubet. In 1502 he and his brother Thomas were sureties for Nicholas, and also had remission ‘for intercommuning with ye Ruthirfurdes, ye Kingis rebels’. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Richard in Littledean, for James in Nisbet and for John ‘Fiffe’, and he was fined for the non-appearance in court of William Turnbull in Bonchester. Additionally William of Hunthill was surety that he would not harm John Tait in Yetholm. In 1504 he acted as a specially appointed ‘bailie in that part’ for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for
He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to Tynedale. He was on retours in 1542 and 1564.

English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resetting of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably Rutherfords and also Kers. In 1541 he was ten-convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other assisting several men who were 'at the horn'; also have been a relative. He was convicted in 1538 of in Selkirk by 'the venerable sir William', who may be baronies in the 1530s. In 1535 he was represented in Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and burgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraes- that he was heir to his brother in the lands of A further 'retour of inquest' in 1558 established Douglas, widow of David Home of Wedderburn. [15th/16th C.] recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as 'Johanne ruthirfurd' called 'fiffe' in 'le grange'. In a separate court entry he was found to be infirm, with his surety being John of Hundalee. It is unclear how he might be related to other Rutherfords of Grange. John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ (c.1510–77) son of George, he succeeded his older brother Andrew. There was a 'retour of inquest' in 1529, finding that he was heir of his brother Andrew in the lands of Nether Chatto and others. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535, with David (possibly related) as his attorney and in that year the Sheriff of Selkirkshire confirmed that he was to be restored to the Lordship by royal letters, dismissing the dispute with Alison Douglas, widow of David Home of Wedderburn. A further 'retour of inquest' in 1558 established that he was heir to his brother in the lands of Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraesburgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and baronies in the 1530s. In 1535 he was represented in Selkirk by ‘the venerable sir William’, who may have been a relative. He was convicted in 1538 of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’; also convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other Rutherfords and also Kers. In 1541 he was tenant of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resett ing English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of Tynedale. He was on retours in 1542 and 1564. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Hunthill’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was listed among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for his sons was John of the Knowe. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he granted the lands of Scraesburgh (occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others) to his son and heir John. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he and his son John was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse and as part of the restitution his 2nd son William was to marry a daughter of James Ker of Corbethouse, while his son and heir John was to offer his sword to ask forgiveness from James Ker. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. In 1561 he was listed among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, and then he himself was warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. Also in 1565 he signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ (but helped by the notary). Additionally, he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council in 1565 to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered to enter ‘Sym Oliver, Cuddy Hendirson, and Mathow Dowglas’ to the Warden. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He signed the bond of peace for the Borders in 1569. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Additionally in 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour, as well as for Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and was directed to relieve Sir Walter Ker of Cessford of a debt. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and was surety for David Oliver in Whiteside. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571 and 1577. In 1572/3 he gave his assurances that he would not help Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, with Richard of Edgerston as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. In 1574 he, his son John, and several other Rutherfords had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. In 1576 he was surety for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1529 he firstly married Christine ‘Hoppringile’, daughter of David Pringle of Smailholm, this requiring special permission because of consanguinity. He secondly married Isobel, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His children included: John, who succeeded; Mariotta, who married William Rutherford of Leith; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; Betty, who married Richard Rutherford of Edgerston; Steven, recorded in 1582 and 1593; and Thomas of ‘Grundisnuk’. He may have secondly married a daughter of Ker of Greenhead. He could be the ‘vmquhile Maister Johne Rutherfurde’ named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574 in connection with the lands of Lanton. John (d.bef. 1560) probably son of Thomas and brother of Richard and Philip. He was said to have ‘dwelt in the tofts’, ‘had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot’ and to have been ‘of memorable strength and courage’. He is listed being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in 1560 on the document attempting to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean and his friends. Also ‘Johnne Ruthirfurd thair’ (hence probably related) was mutilated in the same attack. As part of the attempt to resolve the feud, the daughter of Philip in Edgerston was to marry Andrew, son of Robert Ker of Newhall. John of the Knowe (16th C.) recorded in 1553/4 as a pledge for the sons of the Laird of Hunthill, that they would keep order. His lands were probably the Knowe of Nisbet. He described as being ‘in Know’ in the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was one of the signatories of the bond, and hence must have been a fairly important family representative at that time. In 1572/3 he was ‘Jok of the Knowe’ when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Andrew of Hundalee and Richard of Edgerston as sureties. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was there recorded as ‘Jok of the Know in Nisbett’. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was ‘of the Know’ in about 1578 when he and other Rutherfords and Turnbulls agreed to annul all former bonds and swear allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He was recorded in about 1590 as ‘Johnne Rutherford of the Know in Nyisbit’ among landed men of the Borders. Perhaps he is the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He was probably succeeded by George. John of Hunthill (16th C.) son of John. He was known as ‘the Cock’, like his father. In 1558 his father granted to him (and his wife) the 8 husbandlands of Scraesburgh that was occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others. In 1565 he was ‘of Hunthill, youngar’ when he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. Along with his father and friends, he was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse; as part of the bond of 1560 to end the family feud he agreed to ask forgiveness from James Ker of Corbethouse by offering him his sword. In 1571 he was younger of Hunthill when he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for tenants in Oxnam. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He is probably the John of Hunthill who signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was juror on a retour in 1579. His brother Stephen is recorded in 1582. He is listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, at about the same time. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead and vice versa and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing (along with his son Thomas and others) to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. He is recorded in 1587 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordours’ and were denounced as rebels. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk. He is further recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell, but this was lifted a few months later. In 1593 he was again denounced as a rebel (along with his brothers Steven and Thomas of ‘Grundisnuke’, among others) for failure to appear to answer accusations about raids into England. In 1595 he, along with William Scott of Howpasley and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘blench ferms and castelward’. He married his cousin Grizel Home and also married Agnes Kirkton (perhaps in 1558, when the couple were granted lands in Scraesburgh). His children included: William, who may have been the eldest son (and if so, predeceased his father), recorded in 1592 when he was denounced as a rebel; Thomas, who succeeded and who married a Cranston of that Ilk; John, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Bankend, who married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk; Grizel, who married Walter Ormiston of that Ilk; Jean, who married Adam Rutherford of Chatto; George; Andrew; Percie; Steven; Robert; and 5 other daughters. Richard of Littleheugh may also have been his son. John ‘Jock’ of Tofts (16th C.) probably son of Richard of Edgerston. He was said to be a man of prudigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot. He was named in several accusations of raids on English farms in 1590. His son Andrew is also listed in some of them. He was also recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. In 1602 there was a complaint about him, his sons Robert, Thomas and William, his son-in-law John Stevenson and others that they attacked ‘Jacquie Laidley’ and his family and servants at his lands near Jedburgh. Thomas, younger of Hunthill was cautioner for him and his sons Thomas, Archibald and William, not to harm ‘Jacquie Laidley in Ancrauch’. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd surviving son of John ‘the Cock’ of Hunthill. In 1619 he was referred to as ‘Master John Ruthifurd, sheriff-depute of County Roxburgh’. In 1623 he had the lands of Hyndhousefield, Hordenbraes and Maison-Dieu confirmed to him, his wife and eldest son. He married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. His eldest son was John of Bankend, who served as Provost of Jedburgh. John ‘Provost’s Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstone. George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf complained that the 3 men attacked the houses at Friarshaw and Lilliesleaf. His name is given as ‘Provestis Jok’, suggesting that his father was Provost, perhaps of Jedburgh. John of Hunthill (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hunthill and Jean Cranston. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1610. In 1615 the lands of Nether Chatto, ‘Eidlescleuch’, ‘Hunganshaw’ and Gateshawfield were conveyed to him and his wife by James Ker of Chatto. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1630. His lands of Hunthill, Scraesburgh, etc. were valued at £1200 in 1643. He was still alive in 1666 when he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. He married Alison, daughter of Andrew Kerr, 1st Lord Jedburgh; she was recorded as Lady Hunthill in a deed in 1663. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, but had no male heirs; John, who succeeded his elder brother, but died unmarried; Sir Thomas, who succeeded his 2 older brothers and became the 2nd Lord Rutherford; Archibald, 3rd Lord Rutherford; Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford; Lilias, who married Henry Ker of Graden; Isobel, who married Alexander Burnet of Carlrops; Helena, who married Thomas Lewin of Amble; Anna, who married Rev. Thomas Abernethy of Hownam; and Margaret, who married William Elliot of Dinlabyre. John (d.1679) 2nd son of Richard of Littleheugh. His older brother Walter died without issue and he succeeded his father in 1626. His lands included ‘Capehope vocatis Phillop-hope, Hardroddis, Maksydbank, Priestschawi, &c.’, to which he was served heir in 1643, with confirmation in 1666. He married Euphiam, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Dod. He was succeeded by his sons Walter and John. John (17th C.) recorded in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He owned lands valued at £140, but the name of the property is not listed. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1665) transcribed ‘de Cowsnothe’ in the 1666 services of heirs. In that year his son Thomas (referred to as ‘junior’, presumably meaning he was a minor) was served heir to his lands of Ruecastle, including Harden Mains and Newtonhaugh. He was described as already deceased in 1672 when his son Andrew became a merchant’s apprentice in 1672. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, and another son Robert became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1673. John of Edgerston (c.1622–86) eldest son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He raised a troop in the 1640s and fought for King Charles; it is said that at the Battle of Dunbar he was severely wounded and all but 5 of his men were killed, and he lost a leg while defending the bridge at Worcester. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1654/5 he and Robert (Town Clerk of Jedburgh) were acquitted of liability for a sum of £300, which was taken from the tax-collector by ‘a strong party of mosstroopers’. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. After the Restoration he commanded a troop of dragoons who kept order in the Borders. He paid the land tax in 1678 for £2700 in Jedburgh Parish. Also in 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He married Barbara Abernethy, daughter of the Bishop of Caithness (and related to the family that had earlier possessed lands at Teindside and Harwood south of Hawick, with his mother being a Murray of Philiphauge). He had 4 sons and 12 daughters, including: John, who died before him; Andrew, who succeeded, but died without issue; Thomas, who succeeded Andrew; Robert of Bowland, who married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphauge; and Isabel, who married Andrew Ker of Littledean. His testament was recorded in 1682. John (1641–1710) born in Yarrow, son of John and Isabella Ker. He was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the author. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk and was master of Selkirk Grammar School; he was recorded there in at least the period 1676–85, and probably served until 1691, when he was ordained in 1691 as minister of Yarrow. In 1685 he was described being ‘in Philiphauge’ and in 1692 was ‘late schoolmaster of the burgh of Selkirk and now present minister’. He was minister at Yarrow until his death. He still had dealings with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. He married Christian, grand-daughter of John Shaw, minister of Selkirk. His children included: Robert, who died young; John (1695–1779), Professor of the Practice of Medicine at Edinburgh University; Jean (b.1693), who died unmarried; and Anne, who married William Scott of Whitehaugh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1704 he was ‘in Dernicktoun’ (presumably Darnick in Melrose Parish) and Margaret ‘ivson’ was ‘his wife in Goldilands’ when their daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. John (of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Cecilia Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn in 1711. He may have been a doctor, and succeeded his father before 1715. His sister Ann married William Chisholme, son of Robert and grandson of Walter of Stirches. His children included: John, who succeeded; William (b.1711); and Ann. John of Ladfield (17th/18th C.) descendant of John of Ladfield (d.c.1686), who was Provost of Jedburgh. His father may have been Adam. He was ‘younger’ in 1712 when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased William Rutherford of Falla, this taking place at Hummelnkowes. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1702. John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Storie in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in both Bedrule and Jedburgh Parishes. Sir John of Edgerston Rutherford (1687–1747/8) son of Thomas. He was knighted in 1706 and succeeded to Edgerston in 1720. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash (his sister Violet) sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He is probably the Sir John who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Cairncross of Langlee in 1710. They had a large family, including: John (b.1712), who succeeded; William (b.1714) of Nether Ancrum; Thomas (b.1715), who married Martha Town from York and whose sons Richard and John were in the Navy; Susannah (d.1791), who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank; Robert of Faimington (b.1723), who became a Russian Baron; James (d.1742), who was unmarried; Walter (1723–1804), who married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander, and whose son John was an American politician; Mary, who married Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean; Elizabeth, who married John Horsburgh of that Ilk; Jean, who married Charles Inglis of Manorhead; Hugh, who had 4 daughters; Archibald; Jean; and Agnes. He secondly married Sarah, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dean (sister of his son-in-law). Their children were: Henry of Hunthill, who married Agnes Lauder; and Christian, who married Rev. Dr. Davidson of Muirhouse. John (1695–1779) born in Yarrow, son of John, minister there, he was descended from the Rutherfords of Huntill. He was educated in Selkirk and at Edinburgh University. He became a partner in a medical practice in Edinburgh in 1721 and they petitioned the University to start teaching Medicine, the 4 partners becoming the first Professors of Medicine there. He delivered clinical lectures in the Royal Infirmary, beginning the relationship between the university and the hospital. He firstly married Jean Swinton and they had a daughter Anne, who was mother of Sir Walter Scott. He secondly married Anne Mackay (daughter of the Jedburgh minister) and their children included: Daniel, who was a physician and botanist; Jean, who married Col. William Russell of Ashiestiel; and several children who died young. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Tudhope in Bedrule Parish in 1721. John of Edgerston (1712–58) son of Sir John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Cairncross. He trained as an advocate and was elected M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1734, being re-elected in 1741. However, later that year his younger brother Walter convinced him to go to America, where he joined the Independent Regiment of Foot in New York. In 1756 he became a Major in the Royal American Regiment. In 1737 he married Elleonora, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto; she died in 1797 at her house in George Square, Edinburgh. They had 11 children, most of whom were born in America, and 7 of whom survived to adulthood: John, who succeeded; Jean (or Jane) married William Oliver of Dinlabyre; Robert (d.1780), who served with the East India Company; Archibald (d.1790) who was an army Captain; Eleanor (d.1822), unmarried; Elizabeth, married Andrew Sinclair of Hermandston and was mother of Lord Sinclair; and Agnes (1758–1840), who died unmarried. He died at Ticonderago and his family then relocated back to Scotland. John of Knowesouth (d.1788) son of John and Isabella Scott. He was served heir to Knowesouth in 1728 and in 1739 married Mary, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, this marriage ending in divorce. It appears that he was mentally ill, and the records describe years of abuse before she finally left him in 1749. He paid the window tax in Bedrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. By 1763 he was an inmate of the ‘Bedlam’ in Edinburgh. He is recorded as Laird in 1764 when his eldest son Thomas married Margaret Elliot of Kirklands in Ancrum. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1747 he was in a dispute with William Henry, Marquess of Lothian over his alleged wrongful possession of the lands of Ruecastle. It appears that an infeftment of Ruecastle was made obtained by his (young) eldest son Thomas in 1748 (or perhaps 1758). In 1770 this son Thomas was in dispute with his wife, younger children and creditors. These other children were: Jean, who married Thomas Scott and whose son Charles later succeeded to the estate; Capt. John of the Royal Navy; and another daughter, who married Jedburgh lawyer John Thomson. In 1788 he is recorded owning lands valued at £466 19s 10d, with his son Thomas also holding lands valued at £48 10s. He died in Edinburgh. John ‘the Little Major’ of Mossburnford (1746–1830) son of Thomas and grandson of the Laird of Edgerston. His father died in the Barbados when he was an infant, and he was sent back to the care of his grandfather at Edgerston. After going to America to seek his fortune he was apparently captured by Indians, but escaped after several years. He joined the 42nd Highland Regiment and was promoted to Captain in 1778. After retiring and returning to Scotland he purchased the estate of Mossburnford. He was later a Major in one of the local volunteer regiments (probably the 2nd Regiment of Dumfries militia). His nickname derived from his short stature. He paid tax on 2 male servants in Jedburgh Parish in 1778 and 1779. He was probably also Collector of Supply for about 35 years. He paid the Land Tax for Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1785. He was one of the Borders men who entertained Burns on his tour of 1787. He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798–9, in his capacity as a Justice of the Peace for the county. He was on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, along with his son John. In 1810 he was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1819 he was appointed as Collector of Assessed Taxes. He married Eleanor Chalk of Artane, Dublin and secondly Agnes, daughter of Rev. Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle. His children included: John W.S. (b.1777), who was the Edinburgh agent for Jedburgh; Charles (1780–1846), who inherited the lands of Fairnington, but died unmarried; Thomas (b.1784), who succeeded his brother; Martha, married Charles Robson of Samieston; Helen (or Eleanor) married William Elliot, Laird of Harwood; Walter (1801–56) who served with the East India Company in Bengal; and at least 5 who died young.

Capt. John (b.1744) younger son of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr of Abbotrule. His elder brother Thomas inherited the estate and then it passed to his sister Jean (who married Thomas Scott), since he was unmarried. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He died in the early 1800s. He could be the John who was recorded at Knowesouth in 1797, where he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as 2 non-working dogs. He may be the Rutherford of Knowesouth who was eldest son of Maj. John of Mossburnford, and was an agent for Jedburgh in Edinburgh, dying in 1801. On the other hand, he could be the Capt. John who died in 1833 and was considered as the last of his line.

John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shiplaw Cross in 1780. This was the highest cottage in Cavers Parish. He had a son James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge and his great-grandson was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. Note that Tancred lists him as James rather than John. John of Edgerston (1748–1834) son of John of Edgerston and that ilk. He was born in America, while his father was in the army there. He succeeded to Edgerston following his father’s death in 1758 (his father having been overseas since succeeding Sir John in about 1749). In 1759 he inherited lands in Hillslap from Elizabeth Cairncross. He owned land at ‘Rink’ in Hawick, which was used for the October market from 1779. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and was already on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1780 he was appointed Major and Captain in the Southern Regiment of Fencible-men and by 1797 was in command of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Militia). In 1788 he was described as a ‘popular man’ in a private list of voters in Roxburghshire, and was also said to be connected with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was additionally listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. His estate in Jedburgh Parish was valued at more than £2000 in 1788, and he also owned other lands in Oxnam Parish. He paid tax on 2 male servants in 1778, and was taxed for having male and female servants through the 1780s into the 1790s as well as for owning a carriage in the period 1788–98 and for having horses and dogs in the period 1785–97, including 8 carriage or saddle horses and 4 non-working dogs. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798. Also in 1797 he was knocked off his horse in Jedburgh and struck in the head, but fully recovered. In 1803 he became Colonel-Commandant of both battalions of Roxburghshire volunteers. He was listed as ‘Major’ on the 1808 subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He paid the land tax on his estate in 1811, and also owned Overton. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1802–06 and Roxburghshire 1806–12. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1787 he married Mary Ann, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Leslie-Melville and died without issue. He left the lands of Edgerston to William Oliver of Dinlabyre, son of his sister Jane, and Fairnington to Charles, son of John Rutherford of Mossburnford. There is a watercolour sketch of him by Lord Sinclair. John (18th C.) resident of Alton in Wilton Parish. In 1777 he married Janet Notman. Their children included: Thomas (b.1783); and Robert (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were George Scott and James Lorraine.

John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Howpasley. His children included Henry (b.1783) and John (b.1786). John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Knowesouth in 1794.
when he was working for Thomas Rutherford.
John (d.c.1805) eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He apprenticed as a lawyer to William Riddell and became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He died after succeeding his father. He died without issue and the Knowesouth estate was inherited by his brother George, who also died without issue. John (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1789 he paid a fine for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Betty Hogg. Their children included: Charles (b.1790), baptised in Wilton; Walter (b.1792), baptised in Minto; Isabel (b.1795), baptised in Minto; William (b.1802), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and Thomas (b.1805), baptised in Minto. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Synton Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also recorded at Synton Mill in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) weaver at Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was surely related to Robert, who was a weaver there at the same time. Capt. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1830). He died unmarried and so the family estate passed to Charles, eldest son of his oldest sister, who sold it. He is probably the Capt. John who is listed as owner on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He must be different from the Capt. John recorded earlier. John (b.1805) son of James, joiner at Bunclester Bridge. He was a joiner at Old Gatehousecote in Hobkirk Parish. By 1851 he was a joiner at Old Belses. He married Helen Curran Murray in 1831. Their children included Robert, James, Walter, Isabella, John, Helen and George. In 1855 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tazmania, where several sons worked as carpenters. Rev. John Hunter (19th C.) evangelical minister from Kelso from the early 1840s. The Congregational Church in Kelso started in 1841 and met in the Friends’ Meeting house there. He led the first communion service of what would become the Hawick Congregational Kirk in May of 1848. This was in the Suscription Rooms, with an audience of about 45 people. He had been invited to Hawick in 1847 by William Munro, minister of the faltering Congregational group in Hawick, and took up the invitation in the Spring of the following year. The ‘mission’ of intense prayer meetings lasted for 7 weeks and had to be moved twice to larger premises. Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh joined after the first week, and they preached together for the next 6 weeks, the direct result of which was the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk (which became today’s Congregational Kirk). He preached himself every other week until Alexander Duff arrived in late 1848. John (b.1811/2) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was at Old Larriston. His wife was Agnes Scott and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Janet, John, William, James and Andrew. John (c.1835–1906) son of Joseph, he was born in Hawick. By 1851 the family were living at Swinburn in Northumberland. He worked for the Newcastle City Police for 8 years and was then prison officer and warden at the Newcastle Borough Gaol and Correction House. From 1871 he was Chief Warder and in 1875 was Master of the Berwick Union Workhouse. There were disputes with the authorities and by 1888 he had moved to North Shields where he was innkeeper. In 1855 he married Hannah Gray (1825–c.90). It appears the couple adopted his niece Sarah. In 1894 he married his housekeeper Elizabeth ‘Isabella’ Rutter and the couple became tenants of the Britannic Inn and then the tiny Beehive Inn in South Shields. In 1898 he was found guilty of manslaughter after his wife was found dead (and beaten) in their upstairs room. He served 3 years in Newcastle Gaol. John (1838–1914) composer of the music for ‘The Border Queen’, written specifically for Thomson’s words. Born in the West End, he was (probably) son of Thomas. However, his early years are unclear. He is probably the John who was 3 years old when listed with his sister Mary living with Ann Andison on the High Street, in 1851 was a ‘pauper scholar’ lodging on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 was a boarder at 4 Melgund Place working as a shoemaker. He worked for 30 years as a shoemaker, with Robert & William Burnet of the Howegate. He apparently had a fine baritone voice and was prominent in the choir of the Catholic Church in Hawick. In 1884 he emigrated to Australia as a hotel keeper, to help out his widowed sister. There is a report of a ‘Hawick Night’ at the Middlesburgh Hotel there in 1885. He is recorded as a subscriber to the 1888 and 1889 Common Ridings, where his address is Royal Hotel, Rockdale, Sydney, N.S.W. He was a member of the Sydney Scottish Borderers Association. He returned to Hawick in 1892 and

1901, and was apparently preparing to return for the quater-centenary when he took ill. It is not known whether he wrote any other music. In 1860 he married Margaret Gallagher. Their children included: Mary (b.1861); Ann (b.1863); Edward (b.1866); William (b.1866); John (b.1870); His daughter Margaret married Bailie John Gilroy. He is buried at Rockwood Necropolis, Sydney. John (19th C.) iron merchant who was one of the early elders of St. Andrew's Free Church. Katherine (15th/16th C.) younger daughter of Philip, who was the only son of James of that Ilk and Wells. After the death of her brother Richard of that Ilk, there was dispute over succession to the lands and titles, Rutherford and Wells going to her sister Helen, with the rest going to their uncle Thomas. She lost out on her portion due to her fornication with a relative, James Stewart of Traquair, who she married when quite young. He died at Flodden and she claimed ‘that in tender age she had been reft away by the said James Stewart, held in subjection and compelled to marry him’. She was probably the Katherine who supported Patrick Murray of Falahill in 1530, against an objection to his being Sheriff, with John Scott, Vicar of Hawick as procurator. In 1536 she was ‘Lady of Trakquare’ when she had a court order not to communicate with the rebel Douglases who were in England. Her son and heir to Traquair was William Stewart. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Oakwood in 1494/5. He had remission for a number of crimes: stealing cattle from several different people, including an ox from the Vicar of Ancrum; resetting Robert Young and William Scoon; stealing sheep from Yair and Kershope; stealing and resetting horses; burning the farm of Hartwood; and stealing from the widow of William Dickson. His surety was John Rutherford of Edgerston. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He had remission for stealing sheep from Ninian Murray out of Kershope, with George, junior Laird of Hundalee as his surety. He was ‘in quhitmeir’, which was probably Whitmuir. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cows from a servant of Margaret Murray out of Traquair. He was recorded being ‘now in ‘hartwod’ (probably the lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk). His surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Mrs. Margaret née Turnbull (1850/1–1925) keeper of the post office and shop in Cogsmill. She married William and had a son William (b.1891). Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £20 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being ‘of Rydwell’ and Marie Turnbull was also there, but it is unclear where it was. Michael (18th/19th C.) clockmaker recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. Mungo (16th C.) tenant of Nisbet. He was on the 1553/4 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Bucceleuch. He is recorded as ‘Kentigernum Ruthirfurd in Nesbet’ and may also have been known as Quentin. One of his descendants was John (brother of Gavin), who married Grizel Ramsay, and died at East Nisbet in 1630. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) early member of the family. He witnessed a document in the Melrose charters in the period 1269–89. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He held the Manor of Doddington in Northumberland, which was forfeited by Edward I; in 1306 his granddaughters and heiresses, Eva and Marjorie, petitioned the English King to restore their lands of ‘Doddingtonstone’. ‘Blind Harry’, in his history of 1460, states that he met Sir William Wallace in Ettrick Forest with 60 warriors. He may have been related by marriage to Marion Braidhute, heiress of Lamington. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Nicholas of Yetholm (d.c. 1457) probably son of Sir Richard of that Ilk. He may be the Nicholas who received charters for Kirk Yetholm, Grubet, Makerstoun, Corbet and other lands in the years 1421, 1426 and 1430. However, these generations are quite confused. Probably the same Nicholas was part of a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownan. He served as Bailie in Liddesdale for William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, recorded in 1428/9. He witnessed a charter for Alexander, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. He was also Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1436 for the granting of the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn; he is there ‘Nicolaud de Ruthirfurd de Zhetam’. He is probably the Nicholas who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. He is probably the Rutherford who was Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1439 for a charter for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1449, along with his brother James of that Ilk, he was appointed as a guarantor of a treaty with the English. He may be the ‘Nechole of Rutherfurde’ who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1456 of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1458

his heir John was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to his having previous handled the accounts of Jedburgh. He may be the ‘Nicol’ who was a younger son of Sir Richard of that Ilk, and ancestor of the Henderlee (or Hundalee) branch. His son John also witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee in 1436, and separately also John of Hundalee (showing that they are separate people). His son John married Elizabeth Rutherford of Yetholm. He had a grandson, John, who became Provost of Aberdeen, with that office also being filled by 3 later generations of the same family. Nicholas (15th/16th C.) resident of Hundalee. He is recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he had remission for several crimes, specifically stealing horses from Haddington Priory, a ‘caldrone’ from the wife of Richard Rutherford, a cow from Lawrence Pile, 5 cows from the Earl of Huntly and a horse from Thomas Hall; John of Hundalee and his brother Thomas were his sureties. Also in 1502, along with Thomas in the Grange, he had remission for supplying and intercommuning with other Rutherfords, who stole 5 horses from the King’s army at Norham. And he was explicitly referred to as ‘in hundole’ when he had remission for his own part in the theft of the 5 horses at Norham; John of Hundalee was his surety and was surely related. Sir Nicholas of Hundalee (d.1572/3) probably son of George, whom he succeeded in about 1545. He was listed (along with his father George and brother Andrew) among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He may be the Nicholas said to have been one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland in 1531. In 1544 he was among local Lairds who gave their pledges to England. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford, accused of raiding the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in collusion with the English. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He is probably the Laird of Hundalee who was appointed as a deputy march warden in 1553. In 1553/4 he was first listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers and the pledge for him was Batholomew of the Grange. He and other Rutherfords also appeared to promise that Adam and Charles, their pledges, would remain in ward in Edinburgh. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. Also in 1561 was (along with Walter Scott of Sutherland and Thomas Scott of Haining) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. In 1564 he and James Langlands of that Ilk were listed as sureties for Ormiston of that Ilk in the bond between the Scotts and Kers and their supporters. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Also in 1565 he was engaged in a serious dispute with the people of Jedburgh, and tried to insist that they should chose him as their Provost, because of family tradition; a number of Burghers and local landowners were summoned before the Privy Council to resolve the ‘allegeit bluid and inmytici’. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he and his sons Andrew and Nichol were sureties for George in the Grange. In 1596 and again in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He is said to have been at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575, although it seems more likely that was his son. He signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578 (although perhaps this was 1569). He married his distant cousin Margaret Rutherford and secondly married Margaret McDowell. His children included: George, who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and brother Andrew in 1569; Marion, who married Andrew Ker of Gradens; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; and probably Martin, vicar of Makertoun. Nicholas (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. He may be the ‘Nycholl Rud erfur’ who signed the bond between the Rutherfords and Kers in 1560. Nicholas of Hundalee (c.1565–c.1628) son of Andrew of Hundalee and Margaret Hoppringle of Smailholm. However, in some genealogies he is stated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherfords, Kers and Turnbulls in a bond of allegiance to King. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his father Andrew was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He was juror on a retour in 1601. He is probably the ‘Hundielie’ who signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliament, along with Douglas of Bonjedward, to meet with the Bailies of Jedburgh to fix the price of leather. In 1606 he renewed his charter of Grubet and in 1620 gave a charter of Belses to his son-in-law, Sir James Kerr of Crailing. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. He was listed as a land-owner in the Barony of Belses in the tax roll of the Abbey of Jedburgh in 1626. He married Martha, daughter of Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded in 1633; John; James; Marie, who eventually became heiress and married Sir James Ker, 2nd Lord Jedburgh; Margaret; and Anna.

Ninian ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde’. Along with ‘Hew of Douglace’ he appears to have captured George Young, who Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring before the next Justice Aire in Jedburgh. He could be the Ninian in Ancrum who was surety for his brother John at the Justice-air in Jedburgh in 1494/5; John did not appear. This same Ninian in Ancrum was allowed to ‘compone’ for many crimes in 1494/5, in particular stealing livestock and grain from several tenants in Fairnington, as well as thefts along with his brother John, with the Laird of Rutherford as surety. In 1502 his surety was his brother John (who was also surety for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston), who failed to appear and hence was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. Presumably he was the same as Ninian in ‘uuir ancrum’ who was surety for himself in 1502 and was fined and deprived of his lands until he found surety. Philip (d.bef. 1492) eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His widow later married Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme and Buccleuch. He had an only son, Richard (who succeeded his grandfather), and 2 daughters: Helen, who married Sir John Foreman of Davine, secondly Andrew of Hunthill and may also have married 2 other times; and Katherine (or perhaps Christian), who married James Stewart of Traquair and later became heir of the Rutherfords of that Ilk. He pre-deceased his father. In 1495 his widow (now wife of Scott of Bruxholme) brought a case to the Lords of Council demanding payment of promised rentals. Philip (15th/16th C.) witness of a sasine for the Erskines in the lands of Synton in 1508. He could not have been the son of James of that Ilk (and Margaret Erskine), since that Philip died before his father, several years earlier. Perhaps the same Philip, son of Alan, was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn; his brother John was also listed. Philip (16th C.) probably younger son of Richard and son of Thomas of Edgerston. He is recorded as being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. As part of the agreement, Andrew, son and heir of Robert Ker of Newhall was to marry his daughter; he signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he was unable to write. He may have been son of John in Edgerston, whose earlier murder was part of the feud. John Rutherford, also in Edgerston, who signed the 1560 bond, was probably his brother. In 1573 he and John ‘breder in Edgarstoun’ were among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he was ‘in Edzarstoun’ when along with several other Rutherfords, he had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was a tutor to his brother Richard’s son Thomas, the Black Laird’. He may have been father of ‘Philip’s Andro’. recorded in 1601. Sir Richard (c.1345–1424/5) probably son of William (or possibly a younger brother). He was said to be a favourite of King Robert III. He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the 1380s. In 1390 he was of that Ilk when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. He was one of the ambassadors to the Court of England in 1398 and was also Warden of the Marches from about this time. About 1399 he was captured by the English, according to the story along with his 5 sons (although he may in fact have had no more than 3 sons) and John Turnbull (‘out with the sword’). In 1424 (apparently not long before his death) he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ for lands of Hownam, witnessed at Hawick. He married Jean Douglas and their sons were: Sir James; John of Chatto, ancestor of the Hunthill branch; and Nichol, ancestor of the Hundalee branch. He was succeeded by James, although there is some suggestion that he was predeceased by his son.
and succeeded by his grandson James. He may also have had sons William (or Gilbert) of Eckford and Sir John, who was killed at Cravant in France along with Sir John Turnbull. Richard of that Ilk (d.c.1502) grandson and heir of James of Rutherford, only son of Philip. He was the last Rutherford of that Ilk. He was served heir to his ‘goodfather’ (presumably grandfather) according to an inquest in 1499. A document of 1500 shows lands of his going to several Kerrs because of ‘non-entry’. He is probably the Richard whose name led a 1501 list of Ruthefords and others whose fines were compounded by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He died without children, leading to a dispute over who should succeed to the estates and titles; these mainly going to his uncle Thomas, although his sister Helen inherited the estates of Rutherford and Wells. However, in 1502 the gift of ward of the lands of Rutherford was granted by James IV to Andrew, Bishop of Moray and his brother John Forman. Also in 1502, Nicholas had remission for stealing a ‘cavobi le caldron’ from his wife (whose name is unfortunately not given). Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. In 1502 he had remission for wounding George Young in Minto Craig, as well as stealing several items from Young. His surety was John Rutherford of Hundalee. Richard of Edgerston (16th C.) son of Thomas (or perhaps Robert). He is probably the ‘Richart Rutherfurd of Edyarstoun’ listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledges were Charles and John ‘sone of the Grene’. He may have succeeded about 1558 and in 1559 he finally settled the dispute over succession to Rutherford lands and titles with his cousin, Sir John Stuart of Traquair (who received the estates of Rutherford and Wells). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands with John Haitlie of Mellerstain in order to settle the feud between those particular families and he signed ‘at the pen led by the notar’ (meaning that he could not write himself). In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1564 he was ‘Lard of Edyarstoun’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle. Also in 1567 he was surety for entering several men with the Warden. In 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour. He also signed a bond to suppress the Border thieves in 1569 and another recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with John, younger of Hunthill, and 2 Turnbulls. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule) for several men from Southdean, as well as for John of Hunthill. He himself swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Andrew, younger of Dundalee, as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He signed a ‘bond of manrent’ to Archibald, Earl of Angus in 1574. He was at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. Also in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. He signed an agreement with other Ruthefords and Turnbulls in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Ruthefords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Ruthefords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1583/4 he (or his son) was among the Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Either he or his son was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. He married Elizabeth (‘Bittie’), sister of John Rutherford, the ‘Cock o Hunthill’. He was probably succeeded by his son Richard. Other sons may have been: John of the Tofts, a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot; Philip, tutor of Edgerston; and Gilbert of ‘the Aicks’. Richard (16th C.) Provost of Jedburgh. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. In 1569 he was also among the signatories of a bond to suppress thieves on the Border. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for Hob Young in Waterside. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. Also in 1574 he was a witness for the Turnbulls in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He may have been the ‘Gray Will’ elected as Provost of Jedburgh in 1590, against the wishes of the King, who had ordered the position to be filled by Kerburgh in 1590, against the wishes of the King, been the ‘Gray Will’ elected as Provost of Jedburgh in 1590, against the wishes of the King, who had ordered the position to be filled by Ker of Cessford. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1605) probably son of Richard (although not all sources agree there was another generation here). He may be the Richard of Edgerston in 1587 when Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as his cautioner. He is probably the Richard mentioned in a 1590 case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1592 his surety was William Stewart of Traquair. He was witness to the 1595 bond between the Scots and the Kers. He married Jean, daughter of William Elliot in Hartsgarth. They had a son Thomas (the ‘Black Laird’), and a daughter Margaret, who married Thomas Haliburton of Newmains. He may also have had 8 other sons who helped him in his exploits on the Border; however, this could be confusion among generations, since it is separately claimed that he was helped by his 6 brothers. His daughter Jean was served as his heir in 1611. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1615) eldest son of Thomas ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Robert. Richard of Littleheugh ‘Dickon Draw-the-Sword’ (d.c.1634) son of John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ or possibly William of Littleheugh. He led the Jedburgh men at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575. He is probably the Richard, son of William of Littleheugh who was accused in 1590 of raiding into England. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He was on the inquest for the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622 and 1623. He also served as Provost of Jedburgh, an office later held by his nephew, John of Bankend. He appears to have been unable to write, since his signature had to be led when he supported a bond with the Earl of Bothwell. He married Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Lilias’ sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died whose fine for absence from the Beltane Court was remitted in 1478. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehagh and the eastern part of Hassendean. In 1486 he is mentioned along with George and Richard, probably his sons. He was succeeded by his son George of Hunthill, while Robert of Chatto was probably another son. Robert (15th C.) assigned the lease of Aikwood in 1484, along with his grandson and heir, Ninian. He leased it with his son Lawrence in 1485. Robert (15th C.) son of Lawrence. In 1490 he was assigned the Crown lands of the Middlestead of Hartwood. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Todlaw, probably the one near Jedburgh. In 1502 he had remission for stealing cushions, silks and other clothing from Jedburgh Kirk, with Robert Turnbull of Blindhaugh as his surety. Robert (16th C.) listed as ‘Roben’ among ‘Scottesmen rebels resete within England’ in 1540. He was said by the English Wardens to be hiding in Redesdale. He may be related to George ‘Cockbank’. Robert (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He and his friends were said to be responsible for killing William Haitlie ‘in Fawnis’, while his own son John was killed by the Haitlies. It is unclear if he was Laird of Edgerston, or just tenant there, but it seems likely he was father of Richard, who was Laird in the 1560s. He may have been the ‘lard of Egerston’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. In 1619 he complained that William, brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was still at the horn. He acted as a cautioner for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638 (even although it appears to say ‘W.’). Around 1640 he purchased the Mill of Edgerston and other lands, which had been inherited by Francis Elliot of Hartshaugh through marriage. He firstly married Marion (or Margaret) Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Turnbull of Minto. He was succeeded by his son John. He may have been father of ‘Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’, who is recorded in a document of 1666 describing the division of the choir of Jedburgh Abbey into burial lairs for various Rutherfords. Robert (17th C.) notary public recorded in 1640 at the admission of Henry Elliot as minister of Bedrule. Robert (d.1724) younger son of John of Hunthill. In 1685 he succeeded his brother Archibald as 4th Lord Rutherford, also inheriting the family lands comprising the Barony of Hunthill, including the 10 merk lands called Gledstane’s Lands. In 1691 he sold Nether Chatto and the Barony of Scraesburg to Sir John Scott of Ancrum. He sat as a peer in Parliament until the Union. He married Dame Sara Ollens and they had 2 children: Margaret, who married Charles Scott of Palace Hill; and John, who died young. Like his elder brothers, he died without male issue and the honours were later claimed by Capt. John, descendant of Richard of Littleheugh. Robert of Bowland (d.bef. 1728) son of John of Edgerston. He purchased Bowland (on Gala Water) in 1697. In 1712 he purchased Hollinglee and Thornilee in Ettrick. He married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; she was widow of Alexander Pringle of Whytbank. In 1728 his widow resigned her annuity to her only son James, who succeeded and was M.P. for Selkirkshire. They also had a daughter, Barbara. Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) solicitor in Edinburgh, he was referred to in the family as ‘the Nottar’. He was said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He served as Deputy Receiver General for Scotland. He inherited some lands from his father, acquired parts of Capelchope from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1701 and bought lands in Scraesburgh in 1702. In 1719, 1727 and probably 1734 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk, and a bond in 1731. He firstly married Bethia Lidderdale and they had 2 sons, David and Capt. William, neither of whom produced a male heir. In 1699 he secondly married Alison, only surviving daughter of John Ker of Shaw. Their numerous family included: Robert, who married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton; and Alison, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. He was the last of his family to be buried in the Bell-house at Jedburgh Abbey. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as a ‘walker’ (presumably a ‘waulker’). His wife was a Cavers (first name not listed) and their children included Robert (b.1706). Other children, baptised in Hawick, who are probably his include: John and William (b.1713); and John (again, b.1716). The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Robert Rutherford (17th/18th C.) son of James, surgeon in Jedburgh. He married Esther, daughter of Robert Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1738 he was one of the 3 ‘heirs-portioners’ (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitlaw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains of that Ilk. The lands of Dod were divided among them. Rev. Robert (1719/20–90) son of Gideon of Kidheugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1746 and became preacher at Teviothead (or Caerlennig) from 1750 until probably 1756. He moved to Longframlington in Northumberland in that year and became minister at Castleton in 1763, where he was presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–89. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Widrington of Huxley in Northumberland, and she died in 1768, aged 26. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism’ (1794). Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, who was a solicitor in Edinburgh, said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He inherited his father’s lands in Ancrum and Scraesburgh. He is probably the Robert of Fairnilee recorded in a discharge in Selkirk in 1743. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton. Robert of Fairnington (1723–c.94) 4th son of Sir John of Edgerston and Elizabeth Cairncross. He was created a Baron of the Russian Empire following the assistance he gave during Russia’s war with Turkey in 1770. He reurchased the lands of Fairnington in 1779, planting trees and naming fields after some of his Russian friends. He also built a summer house on top of Down’s Law in the 1780s; this was known ever after as the ‘Baron’s Folly’. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and was described at that time as being ‘very independent’. Also in 1788 (and still in 1811) he was listed as owner of Fairnington and neighbouring lands in Roxburgh Parish; he was listed in the county valuation as ‘Baron of the Russian Empire’. He was taxed for having 3 female servants in the period 1785–91, as well as 3 male servants 1785–91 and 4 in 1792, 1793 and 1794 (when he was deceased). He is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls in the 1780s and 1790s, but was deceased in the year 1794/5, when the duty was paid on his behalf by John of Edgerston. He left Fairnington to his nephew, John of Edgerston. There is a portrait of him by Benjamin West. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751). Robert (18th/19th C.) ploughman in Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (d.1787) mason in Hawick. He married Mary Simpson in 1761; she was daughter of Andrew Simpson and Agnes Turnbull. Their children were probably: Thomas (b.1762); Caleb (b.1765); Helen (b.1767); unnamed (b.1773); Susan (b.1775); and Robert (b.1777), known as a fiddler. The witnesses in 1767 were wright Francis Paisley and cooper John Miller. He died in Hawick. He was probably born in 1738 in Cavers, son of Thomas, although it has been suggested he is the son of Walter and Isabella Turnbull born in Wilton in 1724. Robert (b.1768/9) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Branhholme Town. He was recorded there as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and was also stated to have been a farm grieve. He married Jane (1784–1859), daughter of James Crawford and Janet Elliot; she was from Wilton, also known as Jenny and Janet and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Their children included: Walter (b.1814), who succeeded as shepherd and emigrated to Canada; and Charles Dickson (b.1825), a grocer living in Hawick. Robert (1776/7–1843) probably son of mason Robert. He is probably the weaver Robert who was listed in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire; the annotation ‘Serving’ suggests he was already enlisted and his name appears again in 1798. He was known to have been in the Militia in his youth, and noted for refusing to flog a fellow soldier. Afterwards he was not himself given corporal punishment (perhaps because he was a balloted soldier), but had his wages reduced by twopence a day as a result; it was said he submitted to this cheerfully for the man ‘had dune him nae ill’. He was well known locally as a fiddler, being described by James Wilson as ‘long remembered by the present generation as a charming performer on the violin’ and ‘without any of the dashing execution of the race of youngsters who strive to dazzle rather than delight, his object was to please’. He paid a yearly visit to Tyneside and performed often at Minto House. A portrait of him exists in the Museum, painted by Adam Brown, and donated in 1897 by his grand-daughter, Mrs. Joseph Wilson. He is probably the Robert, recorded as ‘musician’ on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, living with wife Mary and children Robert, William,
Thomas, Mary, Martha and Robert (possibly a grandson). Robert (18th/19th C.) weaver at Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was surely related to John, who was a weaver there at the same time.

Robert (1789–1838) son of Thomas and Maydeline Dryden. He was probably nephew of Caleb. He was a builder at Millbank, i.e. the Mill Path. He probably owned the building on the south side of the top of the Mill Path, labelled ‘Mr. Rutherford’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as a builder at ‘Townhead’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and at ‘Mill bank’ in 1837. He married Jane, daughter of William Waldie; she married William Laidlaw after she was widowed and died in 1871. His children included: Mary (1815–80), or ‘May’, who married William Rutherford, watchmaker; Thomas (1816–69), who married Mary Hutton, and died in Newcastle, New South Wales; William (b.1818), who married Beatrice Brydon and emigrated to Ontario, where he may have named the village of Millbank; Robert (1821–43); Elizabeth (1822–93), who married George Hogg; John (1826–75), who married Elizabeth Hackins; Jane (1828–55), first wife of auctioneer James Johnston; Agnes (b.1830), who married James Johnston and William Laidlaw; George (1831–58), who died in Hong Kong; and James (1833–8). Most of his family were still living at Millbank on the 1841 census. Robert (1814–bef. 61) son of James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge. In 1851 he is listed as a joiner at 4 Bonchester Bridge, employing 1 man. He married Isabella, daughter of shepherd Andrew Hall. Their children were: Helen (1856–60); James (b.1852), who was a joiner with Douglas Taylor; and Isabella (b.1855, although it is unclear if he was the father). He went to America, leaving his family behind, and died there. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living at Hallrule Cottages. Robert (c.1846–98) son of shepherd Walter. He became a shepherd. In 1870 he married Ellen Nichols. His children included Helen or Nellie (b.1870); Walter (b.1871), Ann (b.1875), Roberton (b.1877), Janet (b.1879), Mary (b.1880), Aggie, born in Canada; and John, also born in Canada. In 1882 the family emigrated to Huron County, Ontario and he was farmer at East Wawamash. He was killed by a bull on his own farm in the Camille district of Manitoba. Samuel (17th C.) described as servisor to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1642 when he accused a large group of his drinking companions of stealing his wallet and its £11 contents. He was also accused by John ‘Lethane’ of trying to retrieve his wallet through violence. Steven (16th/17th C.) younger son of John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ and brother of the next John of Hunthill. In 1582 he was recorded in a document with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus; he signed ‘with my hand led at the pen be the notar’. He is also recorded in 1593. Susanannah (b.c.1795) from England, she was publican in Newcastle, recorded at the King’s Arms in Pigot’s 1837 directory. This was probably the same place that became the Liddesdale Hotel at about 17 Douglas Square. In 1841 she was living with Thomasina (probably her mother).

Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for premeditated felonies carried out against him at Bonjedward. The nature of the crimes is not given, but were presumably plundering of his farm. He could be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.bef. 1504) killed in Jedburgh Abbey. At the Justice-aiire of 1504 Lord Home, the Earl of Bothwell, Hugh Douglas in Biggar and several men in Jedburgh became sureties for a list of men who were accused of his murder. Later in 1504 there was a long list of tenants, factors and servants of the Archbishop of Glasgow, Robert Blackadder, who had remission for involvement in his murder. In 1506 there was also remission to John Forman and several Rutherfords for involvement in his murder. It is unclear which branch of the Rutherfords he belonged to, and what the circumstances were that led to his death. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Nicholas, who was denounced as a rebel in 1494/5 for the murder of ‘Duthac Rutherfurde’ and who was also ‘at the horn’ in 1498 for his part in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. The Thomas who was connected with the death of Patrick Hepburn was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Adam Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Thomas of Edgerston (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of James of that Ilk and Wells. His brothers Philip and John died before him, and he succeeded his nephew Richard. However, his niece Helen gained Rutherford and Wells, and he kept Edgerston. He was thus the progenitor of the Lairds of Edgerston. He was probably the son of James of that Ilk who was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1502 Richard Hunter had remission for stealing sheep from his lands at Edgerston. He may be the Thomas who in 1503 witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralp Ker of Primsideloch. He may be the Thomas of that Ilk who (along with John of Hundalee and George of Hunthill) had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home in 1516. He was succeeded by his son Richard (or possibly Robert). Other sons may have been: Philip, who lived at Edgerston and was tutor to his nephew Thomas, the ‘Black Laird’; John, who is said to have had 6 digits on each hand and foot, and to have had ‘memorable strength and courage’, and whose descendants occupied ‘the Tofts’; and Archibald of the Townhead, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Townhead and of ‘the Hall’. It is possible he was the Thomas who was on the panel in 1482 for Elizbeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He may have been the Thomas who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525, and who was listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Thomas of the Grange (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Hundalee. He seems likely to be the brother of the Laird of Hundalee who in 1493 acted as surety for Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He was described being in the Grange of Abbotrule at the 1494/5 Justiciary held in Jedburgh when he acted as surety for Patrick Rodman. Also in 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Hundalee when he was surety for Jedburgh men. In 1502 he was recorded as brother of John of Hundalee when the pair of them served as sureties for Nicholas (who may have been related). Also in 1502 he had remission for resetting Gilbert Oliver, a man called ‘Wob-star’ and James Rutherford, who had stolen animals; John of Hundalee was his surety. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for stealing livestock and for resetting other thieves, including Nixons, who raided Raperlaw and elsewhere, and Englishmen from Redesdale; again John of Hundalee was his surety. He is listed as being ‘in the Grange’ among the Borderers (led by the Hones and Walter Scott of Brunxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His sons Andrew, George and ‘Dougal Stible’ are also listed (the last presumably being a son-in-law). He was probably succeeded by George. Thomas (16th C.) first man listed as a witness to the instrument of resignation for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30, witnessed at Cavers Kirk. It is unclear whether he was a church official or local landowner, or how he was related to other Rutherfords. Sir Thomas ‘the Black Laird of Edgerston’ (c.1550–1615) son of Richard and grandson (or perhaps great-grandson) of the first Robert of Edgerston. His nickname came from his complexion and dark hair (‘being of a swarthy complexion and black haired’), but he was also known as a local leader to be reckoned with, along with his 9 sons (or perhaps this is his 8 brothers). He supposedly turned the tide of battle at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 when he arrived with the Jedburgh contingent; however, he only succeeded as Laird in 1605 and hence it was likely to have been his father or grandfather Richard who was at the Raid. He is also said to have led the Rutherfords at the Battle of the Hencleugh. He is recorded as son and heir of Richard in 1587, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. He married Jean, daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who may have been his cousin (although there is much confusion over this). He is said to have had 9 sons (but this is not documented, and may also have referred to his brothers). He was succeeded by his sons Richard and Robert in turn. A daughter, Jean, inherited Stobs, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. He is also said to have had a daughter Joan, who married William, called ‘Neck of Steel’, son of Robert Elliott of Larriston (but this may be confusion). Thomas ‘Lippie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear what his nickname referred to. Thomas of Tofts (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Rutherfurde of Tofts’ in 1610 when he was on an inquest relating to lands in Rulewater. His brother William was listed among fugitives in 1618. His son Robert was accused of stealing horses in 1623. Thomas of Hunthill (16th/17th C.) son of John of Hunthill. In 1583 he and his father were summoned to appear at Jedburgh to answer charges. He was also denounced as a rebel (along with his father and others) in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendant of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was ‘son and apparent heir’ of John of Hunthill when his heir was recorded as William of Littleleugh. He is probably the ‘younger of Hunthill’ listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March, particularly in pursuing the Earl of Bothwell. In 1592 he was summoned for charges of treason for being an accomplice of the Earl of Bothwell, but his ‘horning’ was lifted soon afterwards. He was juror on a retour in 1601. Also in 1601 he was head of a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace; his brothers William and Robert were also listed and after confessing he was warded in Edinburgh Castle for 24 hours. Alexander Lord Home was his cautioner that he would pay 500 merks to the Crown for ‘shooting ith pistolets’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace and was cautioner for John in the Tofts and his sons. In 1603 he was cautioner for George of ‘Ewingstoun’. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance of a man he was cautioner for. In 1612 he had a charter for the lands of Hunthill and others. He married Jean, daughter of John Cranston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son John of Hunthill. His daughter Grzel married Adam Kirton of Stewartfield, the contract being signed at Wolfelee in 1612. Thomas of Ruecastle (16th/17th C.) probably a younger son of George of Longnewton, he was served heir to his brother Andrew ‘called of Qulytehouse in Nesbit’. He had a charter of ‘Rouchcastell’ in 1642, along with the attached forest and the mains of Harden. In 1643 he was ‘in Whitehouse’ when his lands in Ruecastle were valued at £240. In 1656 he was referred to as ‘Thomas of Rowcastell, called of Qulytehouse, in Nesbit’. He is probably the Thomas ‘of whyt-house’ who paid tax on £340 in Bedrule Parish in 1663, as well as £144 worth of land he had purchased from the Earl of Traquair. He married Elizabeth Mader. It is unclear how he was related to the Thomas of Ruecastle who was served heir to his father John of Knowesouth in 1666. Sir Thomas of Hunthill (d.c.1680) 3rd son of John. He succeeded his brother John in 1656. He is probably the ‘Thomas Rutherfoord called of the towrs in Sjraisburgh’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. In 1664 he succeeded to the estate of Rutherford after the death of his relative Andrew, Lord Rutherford and Earl of Teviot. In 1665 he complained to the Archbishop of Glasgow over rights to the loft in Jedburgh Church. He was also made the 2nd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Regality of Hawick in 1672. In that year he wrote to the inhabitants of Hawick exonerating them from attending the Head Court at Thornhill (near Drumlanrig) that year; he wrote from Jedburgh, suggesting that he could be same man as Thomas of Hunthill or Thomas of Knowesouth. Also in 1672 he was recorded, when setting the fair in October, being asked to use the Hawick drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’, rather than the ones from Jedburgh; he called the roll in the kirkyard for all the inhabitants to ride the fair. Thomas of Ruecastle or Knowesouth (17th C.) eldest son of John of Knowesouth. In 1666 he was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling land of Ruecastle, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ (annexed to the Barony of Grubet), as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle with a piece of land called Newtonhaugh (in Bedrule Parish), some land in the Earldom of Traquair and a further 1 1/2 merklands in Ruecastle (in the Barony of Ulston). It is unclear how he was related to the John of Ruecastle recorded a little earlier, but was described in 1666 as ‘junior’ (suggesting this was used to distinguish him, or just that he was a minor when he succeeded). In 1673 his brother Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He paid the land tax in Bedrule Parish in 1678, the lands then valued at £511 and included lands previously in Ruecastle. In 1687 he sub-leased the lands of Minto ‘Kains and Hills’ from William Mather. He is probably the Thomas of Knowesouth who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He may be have been Laird in 1694 when the Hearth Tax was paid on the Knowesouth estate. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1673 he married Isobel, daughter of Robert Ker of Linton (hereditary Bailie of Jedburgh) and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Isobel Ker. He married Cecilia Douglas, grand-daughter of George Douglas of Ardit, and daughter of William Douglas and Agnes Scott (daughter of Patrick of Ancrum). His son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708. His son John (b.1684/5) was probably a doctor and in 1710 married Isobel, daughter of the deceased William Scott of Raeburn. His daughter Ann married William Chisholme of Broadlee in 1702. His daughter Christina (1702–82) married Gilbert Ainslie in 1724. Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1683, he became minister of Southdean Parish in 1689. However, he was deprived later that year for ‘not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, and not praying for their majesties William and Mary' (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy), and was said to have instead prayed for the late King James. The case was brought to the Privy Council by a group of Southdean Parishioners. He was declared a fugitive, but what happened to him afterwards is not known. Thomas of Edgerston, Hunthill and Wells (c.1650–1720) 3rd son of John. He succeeded after his brother Andrew’s death in 1718, but only held the lands for a couple of years before his own death. They had become ‘of that Ilk’ in 1703 when Robert Earl of Rutherford re-signed his lands. He was also Laird of Wells, purchasing it (with his wife’s money) from Charles Stewart, 4th Earl of Traquair in 1687. He was also ‘of Wells’ when he contributed 19 hearths in several parishes. He was listed as Laird of Wells in 1694 when he paid for 19 hearths in several parishes. He was also ‘of Wells’ when he contributed £800 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1690 and 1704 he was listed as Laird of Wells on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. However, in 1707 he sold Wells it to William Elliot, and was thus the last Rutherford Laird of Wells. He also acquired Bonjedward, Mounthooly and Scraesburgh, before 1707, when he was recorded as owner of more than £2200 worth of land in Bonjedward. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of Walter Riddell of Minto and Catherine Nisbet of Dirloton. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir John. His other children were: Barbara; Catherine; Jean, who secondly married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1718; Agnes; Isabella; Susanna; and Violet, who married Robert Scott of Falnash. A stone preserved in the new Wells House built in the early 20th century, bore 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of both him and his wife. Thomas of Knowesouth (1742–96) son of John and Mary Ker, he held a charter of Knowesouth in 1758 (his father being declared insane). He was descended from the Rutherfords of Ruecastle. In 1788 he was ‘younger of Knowesouth’ when his lands of Westfield (and others) in Lanton were listed in the valuation roll. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having a small estate, being ‘once Sheriff-Substitute of the County under Oliver of Dinlabyre’ and probably being a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–94. He paid tax for having a male servant in 1778, 1779 and 1794. In the 1788 county valuation he is recorded as owner of ‘Lands in Rewcastle acquired from his father’, valued at £48 10s (including teinds). He is still recorded as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls of lands in Lanton, including ‘Lady Lands, formerly in Cavers Parish’. He married Margaret Elliott (perhaps also known as Christine), and their Thomas (b.1772), who probably died young; John (b.1774), who briefly succeeded; George (b.1775), in the Royal Navy, who succeeded for a very short period; Nelly (b.1777), who probably died young; Anne (b.1778), who married Dr. William Somerville; and Cicely (1778–1804), also known as Cecilia, who died at Knowesouth. None of these children produced heirs. He later married Ann, daughter of William Falla. Their children were: Thomas; Charles; Hugh, who emigrated to Ontario; and William, who lived in Anrcum and married Janet Angus. He is also recorded in Hawick in 1789 when his son Walter with Helen Scott (who appears to have ‘N.’ after her name) was baptised, with witnesses Andrew Elliot (servant to Rev. William Sharp) and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. After his death the order of inheritance was complicated and disputed, but the estate eventually went to his sister Jean, who married Thomas Scott, uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Rieve and their children included: James (b.1769); John (b.1771); Margaret (b.1773); and Walter (b.1776). The witnesses in 1773 and 1776 were William Mitchellhill and Robert Riddell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Thomas (b.1772); John (b.1774); George (b.1775); Nelly (b.1777); and Anne and Cicely (b.1778). Thomas (18th/19th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, where he is listed as ‘watchmaker’. He could be the son of clockmaker William who was born in Hawick in 1784. Thomas (b.1762) son of mason Robert and Mary Simpson. He was elder brother of Caleb. He married Magdalen Dryden and their children included: Margaret (b.1786); and Robert (1789–1838). He may have secondly married Jane Elliot and their children included Francis (b.1794). It seems likely he was a mason, like his father. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Spittal-on-Rule according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Jane Elliot, also from Hawick. Their son Francis was baptised in 1794. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw in 1773. Thomas (1784/5–1855) son of shepherd Thomas...

and Helen Reeve. He was a farm worker at Haysike, and is recorded there in 1841. He married Jane, daughter of agricultural worker George Michie, and she died in 1859, aged 75. Their children were: Thomas, gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa; John, shoemaker; and Maggie, who married James Wintrup. Thomas (b.1807/8) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Sandystones in the 1860s. In 1861 he is recorded there along with his brothers John (retired accountant), George (retired farmer), William (also a farmer) and sister Isabella. He is listed as farmer at Sandystones in 1868. Thomas (b.1811) son of Bonchester joiner James. He served for 21 years in the army. After his discharge he became a policeman in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Police Office, Chelsea Pensioner’, living at 10 O’Connell Street. He married Elizabeth Young in Hawick in 1859 and their Children included: James (b.1859), who worked with Turnbull the Dyers; and Richard (b.1861), who probably died young. Thomas Elliot (1816–1900) son of Thomas, he was born at Branxholme Park. He was gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa (also known as Byreleecaugh) near the head of the Ale and also lived at Bellendean Cottage. He married Christina Scott (granddaughter of ‘The Pether’) at Haysike and she died at Wellogate Place in 1877, aged 54. Their children were: Jane Scott (d.1844), only daughter, who died in infancy at Todshawhill; Thomas, who became a coal merchant); David; George; and Walter R. He and some of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (b.1816) mason in Hawick, son of Robert. In 1841 he was listed as head of the family at Mill Bank, living with his widowed mother and his siblings William, Robert, John, Jane, Agnes and George. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1832–1906) son of James and Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson. His father died when he was young, and in 1841 he is listed with his mother in the home of his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated by George Tancred’s mother and then at Hobkirk School. He was assistant blacksmith at Bonchester Bridgend in the mid-1800s, and effectively took over as blacksmith by the 1860s and formally after his great-uncle Andrew Stevenson’s death in 1871. He helped carry letters to Chesters for a while. His great-grandfather John was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. James Elliot took over from him as blacksmith in about 1902. In 1853 he married Agnes Burns (d.1901), who came from Ancrum. Their children were: Janet (b.c.1853); Andrew Stevenson (b.1854), blacksmith in Newcastle; Elisabeth (b.1856), who lived in New York; Christina (b.1858), a professional cook in New York, who married James Rennie; Margaret (b.1860), who married blacksmith Gideon Scott and lived in Hawick; Agnes (b.1862); John Burns (b.1863), blacksmith in Belfast, who married Jean Waugh, daughter of the tenant at Hartshaug Mill; Agnes (again, b.1865), who married Ecclefechan blacksmith Andrew Calvert; Thomas (b.1867), a tailor and clothier with businesses in Belfast and Bangor, he married Isabella Sparks, sister of his sister-in-law; Alexander Burns (b.1870); Alexander Burns (again, b.1871), wine and spirit merchant in Crook, County Durham; and James (b.1876), blacksmith for a while and later proprietor of the Fox & Hounds. Said to posses a wonderful memory, he helped George Tancred with information for his book on Rulewater. He died in Hawick. Thomas (1846–1909) son of gamekeeper Thomas and Christina Scott. He became a coal and hay merchant of Wellogate Place. He was active in the Total Abstinence Society, the Congregational Church and the P.S.A. He married Catherine, daughter of William Whillans (from Chesters), and she died in 1935, aged 88. Their children were Thomas, Isabella Christina (who married James H. Haining) and Catherine Jane. He is buried in the Wellogate. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494 when John of Edgerston failed to produce him to stand trial before the High Court of the Judiciary in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Walter ‘in falishop’ (i.e. Phaup) composed in 1494/5 for stealing sheep from Hartwood and Haining, a cow from Minto, oats from Fairnington and other crimes. Walter, son of Walter in Phaup, failed to appear at the court in 1494/5 and his surety, John of Edgerston, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘lustus’ (probably a nickname meaning ‘lusty’) in Edgerston. He was surety for John ‘Cowar’, also in Edgerston. Walter of Fairnington (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 when he claimed right to lands in Lessuden. It is unclear how he was related to other Ruthertons. Walter (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish. Their children may have included Robert (b.1724), a mason. Walter (17th/18th C.) described in 1694 as ‘portioner of Caiphope’ (i.e. Capehope) when he was involved in the discharge of a bond with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He may have been son of John of Capehope, being the Walter of Capehope who paid the land tax in Hownam Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton.

Parish. He was living at Langlands Boathouse in 1730. He married Janet Dunn in Wilton in 1729; her surname is variously written as ‘Din’, ‘Dine’, ‘Dinn’, ‘Dune’ and ‘Dyne’. Their children included: Anne (b.1726); Helen (b.1730); Margaret (b.1732); Margaret (again, b.1734); Walter (b.1735); Walter (again, b.1736); Mary (b.1738). The witnesses in 1730 were John and James Dryden. Walter (1723–1804) younger son of Sir John of Edgerston. He served with the army in America, being a Captain in the 60th Regiment. He persuaded his brother John to join him in America, and there John died at Ticonderoga (where he was probably also present) in 1758. He was later a hostage of the Americans and eventually settled there. He married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander. Their son John (1760–1840) was a land surveyor and politician, who spelled his name ‘Rutherfurd’, served on the U.S. Senate, laid out part of Manhattan and settled New Jersey’s boundaries; he named his house Edgerston’, at what is now called Rutherford, New Jersey. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Walter (1814–97) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. He worked as a shepherd in the Borthwick area. Mabonlaw. He won a silver medal for speed in shearing sheep. In 1851 he was shepherd at Branhholm town and was at Mabonlaw in 1861. In 1844 he married Ann Clark (1825–55), who may have been from Dyke, Morayshire. Their children included: Mary (b.1845), who married Andrew Huggan; Robert (b.c.1846), who emigrated to Canada; Janet (b.1847), returned to Scotland; John (b.1849), became an undertaker in Glasgow; Charles (b.1851), partner in Rutherford & Kay, wine merchants; Isabella (b.1851), who went to Frankford, New York; and Alexander (b.1854). In 1861 he secondly married Helen Scott Beattie, daughter of John Beattie, shepherd at Combe; her mother was Isobel Scott, said to be related to Sir Walter Scott. Their children were: Isabella (b.1862); Walter (b.1865); Adam (b.1866); Helen (b.1869); James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); and Ann (b.1875). In 1881 they emigrated to a farm at Turnberry in Western Ontario, and he died in Bluevale, Huron County. Walter (19th C.) farmer of Crailing Tofts. He was well known as a local golfer, being first President of the Border Golfers’ Association. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Bunyan from Spittal-on-Rule and his uncle was William Rutherford, Professor of Physiology at Edinburgh University. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. William (13th C.) recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rotherford’ parson of ‘Lillesclyue’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf). ‘Joahan de Lillesclif’ was also recorded there, as well as ‘Aymer de Rotherford’ (of Roxburghshire) although whether they were related is unknown. His seal bore a bull’s head with a human head between the horns, and with the name ‘SWIL/MI DE ROTHIRFORD’. He could also be the clerk of the same name who witnessed a gift of land in Dryfe (Dumfriesshire) in the mid-13th century. William (d.c.1363) probably son of Sir Richard. He was listed as ‘Willelmus de Rotherford’, Lord of that Ilk when he witnessed a charter for Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354 and another for Roger of Alton relating to the Church of Roxburgh. He also witnessed the same lands of Altonburn passing to the Kers in 1357/8. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey. In 1363 he was already deceased when his lands in Teviotdale were granted to the custody of John Ker until his heir William reached the age of majority. However, William probably died before this, since he appears to have been succeeded by Sir Richard, probably his son. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘of Rutherfurde’ in 1429/30 when he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caver- ton. James (probably of that Ilk) was also listed, but it is unclear how this William was related to other family members. William of Hunhill (d.bef. 1507) son of George. He had a sasine for Nether Chatto and other lands in 1496. In 1502 he was surety for John of Hundalee. In 1503 Si- mon (perhaps a relative) was his procurator for his lands of Nether Chatto at the Justice-aire. In 1504 he became surety to enter a long list of Rutherfords and others at the next Justice-aire for the murder of David ‘bachler’; his own surety was Mark Ker (presumably of Dolfhinston). His son George succeeded him in 1507. William (16th C.) younger son of George of Hunhill and brother to Andrew and John. In 1544 he was tutor to William of Langnewton. He held lands at Over Ancrum. He married Christian, daughter of Christopher Armstrong of Mangerton; her brother was John Armstrong of Gilnokie. William of Longnewton (16th C.) probably grandson of George of Longnewton and son of Walter. However, it is suggested in some genealogies that he succeeded his cousin Walter. He was a juror on a retour in 1541 and was also a Burgess of Edin- burgh. In 1544 William, younger brother of the Laith Rutherford, his tutor. He was served heir in 1547, presumably when he came of age. He had sasine for various other lands in 1550. However, he appears to have been murdered by Robert Ker of Newhall, part of a family feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers that led to a bond being signed in 1560. His son George was also mentioned in 1560, and was to be satisfied by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean. It is unclear if he or his son was the William who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. William of Kidheugh (16th C.) son of Adam, or perhaps son of Walter, younger brother of George of Longnewton. He is recorded as possessor of Kidheugh in 1545, and also owned Langrink in Selkirkshire. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was on the panel (but transcribed as ‘Reidhauch’) for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William of Longnewton (16th C.) possibly son of the earlier William. In 1578 he signed a bond of allegiance with other Rutherfords, Turnbulls and Douglas of Cavers. He may have died before 1583 when the other barons of the bond were declared rebels. William of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter Scott of Todrig and Joanna, daughter of ‘Dand’ of Grange. He seems likely to have been related to the Rutherfords of Grange. William of Littleheugh (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott ‘the Tinecker’ led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. His son Andrew was accused of being on another raid at the same time, with his sons Andrew and Richard being recorded in 2 additional accusations. His designation was transcribed ‘Lyttleheugh’. He was also recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. At about the same time he was listed among landed men of Roxburgh and Selkirk. Also in 1590 he acted as cautioner for Thomas, son of John of Hunthill. In 1593 he was denounced as a rebel (along with Rutherfords of Hunthill) for failure to appear to answer accusations about raids into England. In 1601 he was among a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horse race; his sons Adam and William were also listed. He was said to have had 4 sons (Andrew, Richard, Adam and William) and a daughter who married Thomas Selby of Biddlestone in Northumberland. William (d.c.1619) local man described as ‘in Rafflat’ probably Rawflat, Ancrum Parish) in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging too much interest on loans. He appeared to answer the charges. His son William was served as his heir in 1619. William (16th/17th C.) schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was recorded as master there in a deed of 1616. He was also witness to a ‘wadset’ for lands in the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk in 1618; Robert, ‘servitor to William Rutherford, notary public’ was another witness, and so possibly his servant. James Arbuthnott was recorded as master in 1619. He may be the William who was reader at Hownam in 1609. William (17th C.) served as heir to his father William in Rawflat in 1619. William of Bankend (d.bef. 1714) eldest son of John of Bankend, who was Provost of Jedburgh. He was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. In 1676 he sold Bankend (with the consent of James Gedstains of Cocklaw, his wife’s trustee). He was later referred to as being ‘of Lochend’. He married Esther Langlands, who was grand-daughter of George Langlands of that Ilk. His widow is recorded in a bond of 1714. They had 4 daughters, who were served as co-heirs to their father: Margaret; Isobel; Lillias; and Esther. William (17th C.) weaver who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William (17th C.) served as interim Town Clerk in 1696. He was a Bailie of Jedburgh and recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1690 when his son Thomas became a baxter’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as William of Bankend. Dr. William of Barnhills (d.bef. 1731). He bought the lands of Barnhills from Sir William Bennet of Grubet in 1703, with sasine in 1705. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester. He had 2 daughters: Margaret, who married Rev. Alexander Mackenzie of Edinburgh; Helen; and Jean, who married John Mowbray from Edinburgh. Each of his daughters inherited a third of Barnhills. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Northcroft in 1748 and 1751. He married Margaret Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1746), baptised in Ashkirk; Robert (b.1748), baptised in Wilton; and Thomas (b.1751), also baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1748 and 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. William (d.1797) clockmaker of Hawick. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas...

William (18th/19th C.) servant at Harwood Mill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) Sheriff Clerk in Jedburgh, recorded in 1814. William (1797/8–1871) probably born in Northumberland, he was teacher at Woodburn 1822–25. He then came to Hawick, where he was teacher of Mathematics and other subjects at the Grammar School. About 1832 he moved to be master at Corporation Academy, Berwick, in 1838 moved to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and retired about 1864. He was a member of the council of the Royal Astronomical Society 1844–47 and Honorary Secretary in 1845 and 1846. He contributed mathematical problems to publications such as the ‘Ladies’ Diary’ and co-edited the first volume of ‘The Mathematician’ in 1845. He also edited many other mathematical books, including ‘Simson’s Euclid’ and Hutton’s ‘Course of Mathematics’. He published about 15 papers, including a solution of spherical triangles, and the calculation of π to 440 decimal places. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a daughter, Mary Fenwick. He died at his home in London.

William Oliver (1781–1879) of Edgerston, son of Jane Rutherford Weens, with a celebratory larch planted on the side of the walk to the garden. He succeeded to Dinlabyre on the death of his father in 1830. He was ‘younger of Dinlabyre’ when he served as a Lieutenant in the Roxburgh Volunteer cavalry that responded to the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, when still ‘junior of Dinlabyre’. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club in 1805, when still ‘junior of Dinlabyre’. He was ‘younger of Dinlabyre’ when he served as a Lieutenant in the Roxburgh Volunteer cavalry that responded to the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, when still ‘junior of Dinlabyre’. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He succeeded his father as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father), when still younger of Dinlabyre. He was probably the William listed as ‘sheriff clerk, Jedburgh’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was Sheriff during some of the local election troubles of the 1830s, requesting that a troop of dragoons be sent to Hawick in 1835, and reading the Riot Act twice on that occasion. He purchased the estate of Knowesouth from Charles Scott, and had the mansion there built, but sold it not long afterwards to George Pott in 1838 (although may have held on to part of these lands). He also acquired part of the lands of Ruecastle from the heirs of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. After his uncle John of Edgerston died in 1834, he was passed the lands of Edgerston and changed his surname. He was recorded at Edgerston in Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Dinlabyre in 1852. In 1839 he was present at the banquet at Braxholm for the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Chairman of the Lunacy Board for Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, and Chairman of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He retired from his duties as Sheriff in 1868. In 1804 he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse, and she died in 1859. His children included: William, who died young in 1818; a second son who died the same year; Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Denniston in Malta; William Alexander Oliver (b.1818), who succeeded and whose son William Edward Oliver sold Edgerston; Jane, who married McDuff Rhind, Sheriff-Substitute for Wigtonshire; and Archibald John, who succeeded to Dinlabyre. His name was sometimes written ‘Oliver-Rutherford’.

William (b.1804/5) watchmaker of Hawick, son of Francis and Alison Henderson. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841–61 censuses he was living at 7 High Street. His mother was living in the adjacent house in 1851. He married May Rutherford, daughter of builder Robert. His children included: Jane (b.c.1839); Alice (b.1841); Francis (‘Frank’) E. (b.c. 1844); Robert (b.c.1845); Matilda (b.c.1848), who married Thomas Davidson; Andrew S. (b.1850); Agnes; and Elizabeth A. (b.c.1853) A portrait exists of him. William (b.1812) son of Bonchester joiner James. He emigrated to Australia and is said to have done well. When he heard of the death of his brother Alexander (who had suffered paralysis), he sent money back to Hobkirk Parish to cover the expenses for maintaining him. William (b.1813/4) born in Hawick, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was living at Mabonlaw and in 1851 his family were there (but he was presumably absent during the census). By 1861 he was at Glenkerry. His wife was Janet (from Kirkton Parish) and their children included Helen, Robert, James, Janet, William and Thomas. William (1818–80) son of Hawick builder Robert and Jane Waldie. He married Beatrice, daughter of William Brydon and Margaret Hogg. Their children were Margaret, Jean, Matilda, Robert William, Catherine Anne, Elizabeth H., Georgina, Alice May, William Thomas and Agnes, at least the first of which was born in Hawick. They emigrated to Ontario in about 1850. It may be that he was responsible for naming the area 'Millbank', near Waterloo and Stratford in Ontario. William 'Willie' (1849/50–1937) resident of the small house in Cogsmill that used to be the school. His wife ran the post office and shop there. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1925, aged 74. Their son William John was born in Hawick in 1891. They are buried in Denholm (formerly written 'Rutherfurd', 'Ruderfurde', 'Rudirfurde', 'Rutherford', 'Ruthfurde', 'Ruthirfurde', 'Ruthirfurde', 'Rwthyrfurde', etc.).

The Rutherfords (thu-ru-thur-furdz) n. prominent family around the Kelso and Jedburgh areas. The family name is believed to have originated in their lands near Maxton, various versions of the traditional story involving a fording of the Tweed that led to Scots victory. They had land in Roxburghshire since at least the 12th century. Aymer and Sir Nicholas 'de Rotherford' swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as well as William, who was Parson of Lilliesleaf. Sir Richard Rutherford, Warden of the Marches, and his 5 sons helped repel English incursions in the years around 1400. He is the direct ancestor of the Rutherford of Chatto, Edgerston, Hunthill, Hunthill, Fairnington and Fairnilee. Robert Rutherford of Chatto gained renown in helping with the victory at Otterburn. In 1544 some of the Rutherfords were among the families that 'did set on red crosses on their cotes' and support the English army in the burning of Jedburgh etc. Thomas Rutherford, the Black Laird of Edgerston, was famous for his daring attacks on the English in the 16th century, particularly at the Raid of the Redeswire. The Edgerston branch tended to spell their name 'Rutherford'. A feud with the Turnbuls in Teviotdale was recorded in Parliament in 1479. General Andrew Rutherford became Lord Rutherford in 1661 and was made Earl of Teviot (a title that became extinct) in 1663. The Rutherfords also held the lands of Wells in Rulewater. The various branches of the family are intimately connected with the other local landed families through marriage. A family of that name in Hawick were known for their abilities on the fiddle for several generations around the 18th century. The family motto is 'Nec Sorte Nec Fato' ('Neither by strategy nor by chance') and the shield is silver with a red border and three blackbirds at the top – '...' The Rutherfords, with grit renown, Convo'd the town of Jedburgh out' [T].

Rutherford Bros (ru-thur-furd-broz) n. Rutherford Brothers cycles and accessories shop at No. 3 Sandbed in the mid-to-late 20th century, the 'island' property off Orrock Place. The building has previously been a pet shop and earlier a corn merchants. It had 2 red phone boxes in front and for a while had vending machines on the outside wall. The building was demolished in 1987, despite attempts to save it due to its unique features; however, the Venetian-style windows were rescued from the demolition.

Rutherford's Directory (ru-thur-furdz-direk-tu-ree) n. directory of businesses and prominent individuals in the south of Scotland, as well as listing statistical information for each of the 3 Borders counties. It was officially known as 'Rutherford's Southern Counties Register' and was published in 1867 by J. and J.H. Rutherford of Kelso. It is an invaluable source of local information in this decade, and contains considerably more detail than the more general directories of Scotland. It was reprinted in facsimile form in 1990.

Ruthven (ruth-vin) n. William 4th Lord Ruthven (c.1541–84). Along with his father Patrick, he was involved with the murder of Mary Queen of Scots' secretary Rizzio. In 1572 he captured a force under Ferniehirst and Buccleuch, which had unsuccessfully tried to surprise Jedburgh (which was loyal to the infant James VI) and then retreated to Hawick. In 1578/9 he was the King's Lieutenant in the West Marches when he brought an action against 22 Border Lairds for the deeds of the men for whom they served as cautioners. He was later involved in a plot to seize James VI and was executed.

it was valued at £50, along with Quartersides, when owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. It was recorded in the county valuation of 1788 being owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 having been purchased by Sir John Buchanan Riddell.

Rye Croft (ri-kroft) n. former lands in the Barony of Ashkirk. They formed part of the estate of the Cochranes of Ashkirk in the early 1800s.

Ryedale Burn (ri-dal-burn) n. stream that rises on the eastern slopes of North Birny Fell, running roughly south, past Roan farm to join the Liddel Water. There are old turf enclosures and sheepfolds in the area (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Ryeknow (ri-now) n. former name for part of Rawflat in the Barony of Belses. It was sold by Walter Turnbull of Rawflat to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623. It was described being at the east end of the town of Belses in 1670 when inherited by Robert Bennet and in 1684 when inherited by John, nephew of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. It was valued at £100 in 1788 and listed under Ancrum Parish (spelled ‘Ryknow’ in 1623 and 1670).

Ryelaw Knowe (ri-law-now) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, lying to the east of Wolfcleuchhead. It is essentially the south-western spur of Ewelair Hill, and has the ‘Loupin’ Stane’ on it. To the west is Ryelaw Bog and Ryelaw Sike, which runs into the Rankle Burn.

the Ryelea (thu-ri-lee) n. linear feature on the farm of Liddelbank or Longrow, in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It is a roughly ¼-mile long green ridge, composed of gravel, sand and water. Ryeleahead lies to the north. A coin of Hadrian (156 C.E.) was found nearby in about 1860 – ‘O, the Riley’s ever green, The bonny, bonny Riley! The first time that I saw my Jean’ [BR1640], ‘...onlawed and ammerciatt in an ryott committ by her upon Jein Scott ...’ [BR], ‘The quhilike day Hewgo Ellot, smith, was fyned and onlawed in ane egregious and most insolent ryott ...’ [BR1685], ‘...even to the comitting of some ryott, abusing of Magistracie and almost to the effusione of blood’ [BR1706].

Sadler  (sawd-lur) n. Sir Ralph  (1507–87) served as an English ambassador to Scotland in the 1530s and later acted to try to arrange a marriage between Mary Queen of Scots and Edward Prince of Wales. He was Treasurer of the Army on Hertford’s expedition of 1544 and later at the Battle of Pinkie Cleugh. He was appointed Warden of the English Middle and East Marches in 1559. He was involved with the Treaty of Leith in trying to make an alliance with Scottish Protestants and was later (apparently unwillingly) appointed jailor for Mary Queen of Scots. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Mary Williamson in 1723. They had a daughter Isobel in 1724. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie. It is possible he was the tobacconist if he remarried later. William (18th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included: James (b.1737); Mary (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); Thomas (b.1743); and William (b.1747). Isobel (b.1735), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his daughter. The witnesses were shoemaker John Scott and flesher Andrew Porteous (also written ‘Sadller’).
Sadler-sike  (sawd-lur-sik) n. former name for a ditch on or near Hawick Common Moor, the exact position of which is now uncertain. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants.

Safely (sā-lē) n. Rev. Dr. John (1875–1947) born in Lanarkshire, he trained at Edinburgh Theological Hall. He was minister at Greenlaw from 1905, then at Hillhead in Glasgow and Canmore Street in Dentonlaline, before taking becoming Hawick Congregational Kirk minister in 1934. His wife was a grand-daughter of Evangelical Union founder James Morrison, and a daughter of another well known E.U. figure, George Gladstone. He was President of the Congregational Union of Scotland, and in this capacity was the first Hawick minister to broadcast a Sunday evening service on the radio, in 1936. He was well known for his talents as a preacher, and led special monthly evening services for young people. He demitted in 1941, intending to retire, but was appointed interim minister in Kilmarnock, then at Samnox, Arran, where he died.
safe oot, safe in (sāf-oō’sāf-in) interj. slogan used to send riders off at the Common Riding, and a toast drunk at some functions. It is also used in other Common Ridings (e.g. Selkirk, Annan, Biggar and Linlithgow), while in Peebles the phrase is ‘Safe oot, safe round and safe in’. The origin and antiquity of the slogan is uncertain, but it may be related to Psalm 121 ‘The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore’. It is mentioned in 1806 in the letter than William Nixon sent along with the sash for the Cornet, and so its use goes back at least to this time – ‘Wishing the Cornet and his company ‘Safe Out and Safe In’, I have the honour to remain...’ [C&L1806], ‘Safe oot, Safe in’ my Border lads! And safely win ye hame’ [RSC], ‘Safe oot, safe in’, our Border prayer ‘We lift it today as when...’ [RSC], ‘And, while tae the coast aye the T’eiot shall rin, Be it honoured the toast aye – ‘Safe oot and safe in!’ [CB].

Safeway (sā-fē) n. the biggest Safeway Supermarket in the Borders was opened on the site of the former Auction Mart in 1993. It was the subject of a humorous song to the tune of ‘My Way’, written and sung by Ian Landles. The first Safeway was a transformed version of the Presto supermarket in the late 1980s. The Safeway on Mart Street became Morrisons in 2005 after the Safeway company was bought out in 2004.

Salbe (sal-bee) v., arch. shall be – ‘...and hes fundin cautioum that the gadis and geir foirsaidis salbe furthumand ...’ [SB1574], ‘...and salbe reddy at all tymes to do our said maisteris service quhen we salbe requirit thairto ...’ [SB1595] (formerly common as one word in written documents; see sall).

Sald (sawld) pp., arch. sold – ‘...and signit thaim to be sald for the payment of the rest of the said sowme ...’ [SB1500] (cf. selt).

Salenside (sä-lin-sid) n. farm just south of Ashkirk. There was once an ancient tower there, although there is now no evidence of its precise location; however, there is a suggestion that Salenside Cottage was built on the same site. It was owned by an branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. Walter Scott of Ashkirk paid £14 for the lands and tacks there to John Scott in Kirkhouses. Andrew Scott of Salyndside was said to be part of the raid at Carlisle Castle in 1596. Robert Scott of Salenside was charged with murder in 1614. It was valued at £116 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. John Easton and William Scott were tenants in 1694. John Riddell was living there in 1710. Patrick Hume was there in 1731. In 1753 they are described as ‘twenty-shilling lands’. The house had a fire in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson, with a value of £116, and still listed with the same owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, being valued (along with Castleside and Broadlee) at £519. William Little was farmer there in the mid-19th century and William Inglis in the 1860s – ‘Warm Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Toddrig, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (the origin is possibly the Celtic ‘sallin’, meaning ‘little heel’; also spelled ‘Salinsyde’ etc.; it is ‘Salenside’ in 1580, ‘Salingsyde’ in 1609, ‘Salensyde’ and ‘Salinsyde’ in 1621 ‘Sullinsyd’ in 1632, ‘Sallinside’ in 1710 and ‘Salanside’ in the O.S. Name Book in 1858; it is marked as ‘Solansyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, although quite far south of the Ale Water, and is ‘Sallenside’ on the 1718 Bucceuch survey).

Salenside Croft (sä-lin-sid-kroft) n. name for a piece of land in Ashkirk. In 1581 it is recorded along with ‘Skakriggis’ when assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses, having previously been occupied by Richard Brown and George Easton. It is unclear if it was the same place as Salenside, or separate (it is ‘Sallanside Croft’ in 1581).

Salisbury Avenue (salz-bu-ree-aw-vi-new) n. street of relatively large houses off Weensland Road, built around 1898. It is named after Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne Cecil (1830–1903), 3rd Marquis of Salisbury, who was Prime Minister 3 times. The designs for the half-timbered villas were by J.P. Alison.

Salkeld (sal-keld) n. Thomas deputy of the English Warden, Lord Scrope. He captured Kinmont Willie in 1596, after a truce meeting to discuss Border disputes – ‘O have ye na heard o the fause Sakelde? O have ye na heard o the keen Lord Sroop? How they hae taen bauld Kinmont Willie, On Hairibee to hang him up?’ [T].

Sall (sal) v., arch. shall – ‘...sal content and pay to Jhone of Murray of Fallohill and Niniane Murray the sovm of thua hundreth merkis ...’ [SB1500], ‘Impr. whatsoever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick, sal pay 5 pundis ...’ [BR1640], ‘Item, the clerk sal tak for every bill making twa shillings ...’ [BR1640], ‘...Determined, in whate’er array, Ye sall review their rank perfay’ [JoHa], ‘A’ the yirth sall wurship thee, an’ sall sing untill thee; thaye sall sing til thy name’ [HSR], ‘Sall hae a bit jauntie, oor first ane for’ears, An’ oo’ll see what oo think o’ thae braw Volunteers’ [BM1900], ‘Sall I come skirtin the braid muis When the gloamintide is still, And meet the track aboon White-haugh, Or the road by Chapelhill?’ [WL], ‘Amid destruction Hawick sall flourish, And sall improve when ye sall perish’ [WNK] (auxiliary verb used to indicate intention; also spelled ‘sål’ and sometimes shortened to ‘si’; see also salbe).

Sallni (sawl-ni) contr., arch. shall not – ‘The Lord is my shepherd; I salna inlak’ [HSR] (cf. sanni).

Sallt (sawlt) pp., poet. shalt – ‘...thou salst basch thame inti fiendirs like ane patter’s vesshel’ [HSR], ‘I wull instruck thee, an’ teech thee in the waye thwil thou sallt gae ...’ [HSR].

Sally Maclusky (saw-lee-mu-klus-kee) n. nickname for a Hawick character, probably from the 19th century – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].
the Salmon Inn

the Salmon Inn (thu-saw-min-in) n. pub at 14 Ladylaw Place in the latter part of the 19th century.

Salt Hall see Saut Haa

saltire (sal-tir, -tir) n. a St. Andrew’s cross, particularly used as a symbol of Scotland – ‘Jes’ tear through the blue, Bring me back to you, I see my spirit fly, Saltires, I see satires, in the sky’ [Sco].

the Salvation Army (thu-sawl-, sel-vä-shin-är-mhee) n. evangelical and charitable movement with a quasi-military style, founded in London in the 1860s and re-named in 1878. Jokingly referred to as the ‘Sally Army’, the Hawick branch started in 1887, with the founder Gen. Booth visiting the town in 1905. A band was started in 1919. The first meetings were in the Temperance Hall on Croft Road, with location shifting to Silver Street, Drumlanrig Square, Tannage Close and then the foot of the Mill Path in the early 1920s. A drama group was started in 1954. This Home Mission Building was converted from use as the drill hall of the Teviotdale Rifle Corps, serving as the organisation’s Citadel until 1961 (and being demolished in 1968). In 1961 the property on Croft Road was purchased and rebuilt into the new Citadel, occupied in 1962 (also spelled and pronounced ‘Selvation’).

Salvation Army Citadel (sawl-vä-shin-är-mhee-si’-u-del) n. Salvation Army meeting house, on Croft Road, opened in 1962, with previous citadels being located in other parts of the town since 1878.

Sametoun (saw-mee-tin) n. lands said to be in the Barony of Wilton and listed along with Outersidemill and Todshaw when granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. It is unclear what lands the name could refer to, and hence it is possibly an error for the lands of similar name in Oxnam or Jedburgh Parishes.

Sam Marsden’s (sawm-nawr- dinz) n. High Street fishmonger’s shop on the north side of the High Street in the mid-20th century.

samen *(sä-min) adj., arch. same, aforementioned – ‘. . . and beis nocht tennandis til hym of the samyn’ [SB1470], ‘. . . and service of frie tenttis of the samyn, with the pertenietis, liand within the baronie of Branhxelme . . . ’ [SB1569], ‘. . . desyreing the samen to be ratified, confirmed and approvin by them . . . ’ [BR], ‘. . . and obleist him not to wrong the meiths and marches of the samen’ [BR1675], ‘By reason of y manse being remote from other houses and none at present inhabiteing ye samen . . . ’ [PR1711] (also spelled ‘samin’, ‘samyn’, etc.).

Sam’l Lawrence see Samuel Lawrence

sampl *(sawm-pul) n., arch. an example, specimen, especially of stolen goods – ‘The said John Hardie . . . to be brought to the mercatt croce of Hawick . . . and to stand thereupon with the sampell of the stouth upoun his shouldours or elis ane paper upoun his breist or fairhead to declare the fact’ [BR].

the Samey Ling Centre (thu-saw-mee-ling-sen’-ur) n. Tibetan-style Buddhist monastery and community near Eskdalemuir, about 20 miles from Hawick, formerly the estate of Johnstone House. It is named after a Tibetan monastery, and was started by 2 American buddhists who had started a small temple and gifted the house and grounds to 2 visiting abbots in 1967. It became Scotland’s first Buddhist monastery, and the first phase was largely completed by 1988, with the full courtyard still being worked on, and plans to make it the most extensive temple outside Tibet. It was inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1993.

sanct *(sangt) n., poet. a saint, either literally or figuratively – ‘A sair sanct for Ettrick hospitality Mr Boston must have been!’ [DH].

the Sandbed *(thu-sawnd-bed) n. name for the relatively low-lying area near the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot, now an official name for the street from the roundabout to Albert Road. The name derives from the alluvial, sandy deposits that were there before the area was built up; interestingly, there are places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland, e.g., Kilmarnock also had a Sandbed from early times, and there is was an area so-called in Dumfries. The name goes back at least to the late 17th century and the location was formerly part of the Common. In 1712 it is recorded that someone was fined ‘for breaking the ground in that part of the common called the Haugh and Sandbed, at the foot of the Church-wynd, by digging, delving, and digging of ane dyke there’. It eventually became an enclosed space, which was well used on market and fair days (e.g. in 1701). There were houses across what is now Buccleuch Street and an archway gave access to the gardens there. The area stopped being used for public gatherings with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1741. There were once 3 pubs there, the Plough, the Black Bull and the Ewe & Lamb. The land around the area was feued for building in 1782, split into lots for houses (with a 99 year lease) and 2 building areas in the centre were sold in 1791. The middle at the Sandbed was one of the last to be removed, this being in 1810. When the New Road was opened in 1815, the market was moved to the Tower Knowe. At the same time the houses between the Howegate and Orrrock Place were demolished to provide access to Buccleuch Street. The name was officially changed to Teviot Square by the Town Council from the late 1840s, but it was never popular and was abandoned after about 10 years. There was a public weighing machine for use by carriers near the Ewe & Lamb from before the days of the railway until the latter part of the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed renovations to Nos. 11 and 12 in 1895. The area also saw traffic lights introduced in 1939. The traffic pattern was altered with a more substantial roundabout and demolition of the island site of 3 and 4 Sandbed in 1987. The street contains a post office, a launderette and the Angling Club offices. Note that the building on the corner is unusually 5 stories high. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are grade C listed buildings – ‘Then through the Sandbed the pair did go ...’ [WE].

Sandbed (sawnd-bed) n. also called ‘Sandbed English’, a humorous term for an attempt to speak English by someone who normally speaks only broad Hawick, an affected, comical mixture of proper English and broad Hawick, e.g. ‘pussy get down off that ruif’ – ‘hei was speakin in his best Sandbed’.

Sandbed English (sawnd-bed-ing-gleesh) n. affected English spoken by someone who normally only speaks in dialect – ‘San’bed English, ‘fine’ English as attempted to be spoken by a Borderer, in which Scotch words are uttantly introduced’ [GW] (see Sandbed).

Sanderson (sawn-dur-sin) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Margaret Porteous and their children included: Janet (b.1681); and Margaret (b.1684). Walter Scott was witness in 1681, James Scott and Walter Gledstains in 1684 and Walter Sanderson (presumably a relative) and Robert Wright in 1686. He may be the tenant in ‘Hoap’ (perhaps Heap) whose will was recorded in 1686. Probably the same Adam was recorded as witness to baptisms in Roberton Parish for James Scott in 1680 and for John Hope and John Martin in 1681. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford in Roberton in 1685. Their children included: Andrew (b.1686); Helen (b.1687); and Robert (b.1689). The 1687 witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He could be the same Adam who was previously married to Margaret Porteous. Adam (17th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1711), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (b.1704), baptised in Minto, may also have been their child. The witnesses in 1711 were merchant Thomas Hardie and carrier James Aitkin. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (d.1750) resident of ‘Greenside’ in Walton Parish whose funeral is recorded. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1681). The witnesses were James Deans and Walter Sanderson (who was surely related to him). He witnessed a baptism for George Rid- dell in 1681. James (17th/18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who left £60 to the poor of Hawick Parish in 1748 (and so was presumably a native). Probably the same merchant James witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1737 and others in 1740 for gardener Walter (who was probably related) and smith Robert Young. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Newbigging in 1713. He took over part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1726, after the death of Robert Scott. Probably the same James married Beatrix, daughter of James Davidson, in Hawick Parish in 1711 and had children: James (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); and Janet (b.1717). The witnesses in 1713 were James Davidson and Walter Scott in Newbigging. In 1717 his wife’s surname is given as ‘Scott’. James (d.bef. 1815) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion (or Mary) Henderson, whose death is recorded in 1815. Their children included James (b.1783). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son James was baptised in 1811, with witnesses Robert Tinlin and Agnes Scott (perhaps a relative of his wife). The baptism is recorded right after that for a child of George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804, suggesting that his wife may have been the mother in both cases, and have married twice. Jean (c.1730–c.1810) wife of Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’. She received a widow’s pension of £40 and lived in a cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ a little below Stobs Castle, on the opposite side of the Slitrig. She became known for her dirty habits and wild appearance and was evicted by Sir William Elliot, who had her house demolished, apparently because her appearance and behaviour frightened his horses. Thereafter she lived in Hawick. She was said to have turned down a suitor later in life, when she discovered she would lose her pension if she remarried. She survived her husband by about 50 years. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret ‘Bleakie’ in 1680 and their children included: James (b.1680); Margaret (b.1683); Jean (b.1686); and Adam (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were James Scott and James Blakie and in 1686 were James Blakie (perhaps related to his wife) and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassendean’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a ‘half-pecke ane mutchkin short’. She may be the ‘Marie’ recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hanick Toun’. She could be the Marie, wife of John Nasmith, whose son William Nasmith was born in Hawick in 1652. Robert (18th C.) living in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed daughter was baptised in 1734, with no residence given. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) tenant of one of the local farms of Alexander Lord Home in 1562/3. Home (as superior of Midshields, Appletreehall, Broadlee, ‘Cotlaw’, Burnside and mill) tried to have his ‘pretended tenants’ removed. Perhaps the same Simon was recorded in 1579 as owner of a tenement on the north side of the High Street in Hawick, ‘quhilk sumtyme pertenit to Thomas Logane’, adjacent to the tenement of David, brother to Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. Thomas (17th C.) resident at ‘millmaue’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He was probably a farmer at Mooraw. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism along with Walter in 1688 for James Shiel in east Burnfoot. He married Helen Shiel in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Bessie (b.1685); and Helen (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott (probably of Lees) and James Shiel (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1680); Helen (b.1683); and Simon (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Deans and James Sheil. He could also be the Walter, married to Isobel Shiel, who had a daughter Jean (b.1694) baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish in 1681 for James, in 1682 for William Nichol, herd in Boonraw, in 1686 for Adam (who was probably a relative) and in 1688 (along with Thomas) for James Shiel in East Burnfoot. Walter (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. He is probably the Walter ‘in Appletreehall’ whose wife Janet Brown’s will is recorded in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘tenant in Hawick’ in 1719 when his son William was born posthumously. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Anna (b.1716); and William (b.1719). The witnesses in 1712 were smith John Scott and wright Francis Gledstains and in 1719 were merchant William Chisholme and cooper John Aitkin. William (18th C.) resident at Heap in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Aitken in 1725 and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1726. The witnesses were William and James Aitken (probably related to his wife). He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms in 1735 for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot, and in 1736 for James Liddell resident of Burnfoot. William (18th C.) recorded at West Cote in 1730 when he married Bessie Wilson in Cavers Parish. William (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is probably the William who married Betty Little in 1779 and had children: James (b.1780); William (b.1781); Isabel (b.1784); James (again, b.1787); and Margaret, who died in 1809. William ‘Wullie’ (1853–1945) journalist, editor of the ‘Border Magazine’, poet and museum curator from Peebles. He gave us the words and music for ‘The Soft Lowland Tongue’, which is also sung in many other Border towns. He sometimes wrote under the name ‘Tweedside Laddie’ (formerly ‘Sandersone’).
recently converted to a house. There was also a schoolhouse and smithy there. In the mid-19th century the school was run by Christian Telfer, daughter of the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saugh-tree. To the north and north-west there were 3 curling ponds (also sometimes ‘Sandiholm’; it is ‘Sandiholme’ in 1694).

Sandholm Viaduct (sawn-h⁻⁰m⁻vI-a-duk)
n. viaduct on the Waverley Line shortly before Newcastleton.

Sandhope see Sundhope

Sandie (san-dee) n. George (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Stevenson and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Agnes (b.1759); and Jane (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan and midwife Mary Simpson.

Sandilands (san-dee-linz) n. Sir James of Calder (d.bef.1426) son of Sir James and Jean Stewart, daughter of King Robert II. He was thus brother-in-law of King Robert III. He held the right to inherit several lands and titles following the death of Isabella, Countess of Mar (sister of the King’s son-in-law, George Douglas, Earl of Angus). This included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffship of Roxburghshire, Lordship of Jedburgh, Lordship of Liddesdale, lands of Bonjedward and town of Selkirk, as well as lands further afield. In 1397 he passed them on to George Douglas, Earl of Angus, but they reverted to him after the Earl’s death, as confirmed in a charter of Robert III in 1404/5. Confusion over the Barony of Cavers grew out of the earlier grant to Archibald Douglas (1st of Cavers) not being confirmed by Robert III. Sometime around 1390 he and John Haliburton of that Ilk granted the lands of Falsan and others in Tranent to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1425 he is mentioned in a charter for Patrick Lindsay and in 1426 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. He married Janet and had 1 child, Margaret. He died without an heir. John (d.1583) second son of James of Cruvie (and descendant of the daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Liddesdale and Cavers, as well as being descended from a daughter of Robert II). He was Parson of Hawick, although he may simply have held the living and not actually preached in the Parish, since William Auchmowtie served as Reader of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton at the same time. He held the ‘prebend’ of Hawick before the Reformation. He is recorded as witness to a charter relating to John Sandilands of Calder in 1554, where he is described as ‘Rector of Hawik’. He is also recorded with this title in 1557. Thus he was probably associated with Hawick Parish both before and after the Reformation. In 1558 both he and John Spottiswood are described as Rectors of Hawick in a charter for James, Lord Torpichen. In 1569/70 the Bailies of Edinburgh ordered that town to pay him the ‘maillis’ he was owed for the grammar school there; he was said to be ‘persoum de Hawik’, but clearly was based in Edinburgh. He was still ‘parson and vicar’ in 1581 according to a document relating to teinds with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear whether he held the position until his death. He married Janet Craig and had 1 child, Margaret. He died in Edinburgh, where his last will and testament is recorded (also spelled ‘Sandelandis’).

the Sands ( thu-sawndz) n. alternative name used for the Sandbed before about 1700.

Sandy (sawn-dee) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also sometimes ‘Sandie’).

Sandy Burnett’s (sawn-dee-bur-nits) n. popular name for the hill below Greensidehall, presumably named after a former owner of the nearby farm.

Sandy Fussy (sawn-dee-fu-see) n. name given to at least one rag and bone man of the early 20th century, who would give balloons to children in exchange for scrap items. The original ‘Sandy Fussy’ probably predated this, although whether he was fictional is unclear.

Sandy Fussy’s Cairt (sawn-dee-fu-seez-kar) n. name sometimes used for the local children’s rhyme, sung to the tune of ‘the Keel Row’ (and similar to ‘Charlie is my darling’), see Oo’re aa gaun ti Denun.

Sandhyaugh (sawn-deehawd) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by Scott of Woll in 1609, when it is ‘Sandiehauch’. It is ‘Sandie Hall’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map, marked to the east of New Woll, near where the Woll Burn meets the Ale Water. John Scott was recorded there in 1788 and Andrew Scott was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Cleghorn was farmer in the 1840s to 60s.
Sandyhaugh

Sandyhaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former cottage in the Ewes valley, on the other side of the main road from the farm of Bush. There were Welshes there in 1841 and Welshes, Jacksons and others there in 1861. Poet Matthew Welsh lived here.

Sandypatch Sike (sawn-dee-pawch-sik) n. small stream in southern Liddesdale, joining Tinnis Burn to the south of the farm of Rednoss.

Sandystanes (sawn-deestänz) n. Sandystones, farm by the Ale Water, east of Belses. This may be the ‘Standestanerig’ (in West Lilliesleaf) which was sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey in the early 1200s. In 1502 it is recorded that 120 of George Rutherford’s sheep had been stolen from there by William Turnbull of Minto and reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters. Robert Taylor was also recorded there in 1502. It was owned by George Rutherford of Langnewton in 1506 when the Turnbulls of Minto attacked the farm, burning barley and oats there. It is mentioned in 1508, with lands of 120 or 140 acres here between the Sandstones and ‘Vuirancrum’ (or ‘Vuiralancrum’), commonly called the Sandystanes, being attached to the Lordship of Liddesdale. John ‘Ritchisone’ was there in 1694, James Rutherford in 1797 and Thomas Rutherford in 1868 (the name derives from its situation between two fords, which are paved with stones; it is ‘sandy stanis’ and ‘sandestanis’ in 1502 and ‘Sandestanis’ in 1508).

sang (sawng, sang) n. a song – ‘E’en crune your sang as lang’s ye dow’ [JR], ‘...And never mair, at a Gloomyne Buchte, Waid she sing another sang’ [JTe], ‘...Wi’ prose an’ verse, ode, tale, an’ sang; Her hand’s been fu’, her head’s been thrang’ [JoHa], ‘The Lord kens what! eps’les, sangs, an’ scraps ... ’[JoHa], ‘...she whyles sang a verse or twae o’ some bit auld, wawesome sang’ [JTe], ‘The Sang o’ sangs, whilk is Solomon’s’ [HSR], ‘O sing untill the Lord ane new sang ... ’[HSR], ‘But trouth, by the way I sing this sang, You’ll hear wi’ my brogue there’s something wrang ... ’[JEDM], ‘...And the auld soul-stirrin’ sangs’ [WL], ‘I’ll sing a sang o’ Hawick my name: I’ll sing it a’ my days’ [GD], ‘And the never restin’ waves Sing their never endin’ sang’ [TK], ‘...But aye the sweetest sang they hear Is ‘Hawick ’mong the Hills’’ [MrsW], ‘...and lang may they flourish Wi their ain tribal plays and ceremony and sang ... ’[DH].

the Sang Singer (thu-sawng-sing-ur) n. official singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Song Singing ceremony. He also has many other duties to perform at other Common Riding functions, including (since 1921) distributing the snuff at the Smuffing. He leads the singing of ‘Teribus’ outside St. Leonards farmhouse after the Thursday Night Chase and after the Thursday and Friday morning ‘Huts’. He also leads the singing of the ‘Auld Sang’ outside the Tower before the riders set out on the Friday morning, and he sings the complete version of Hogg’s song at the ‘Sang Singin’. The first singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ was James Scott in 1819, and he was followed by James Robson, Mark Nichol and Frank Scott (‘Uncle Braid’). Then there was John Scott (in 1875). Later came Charles Hessel, William Clark (1883–1907), James Yule?? (from 1907), Hamilton B. Little (after 1918), James Yule (in 1946), ?? Black, Harry Storie (c.1950–1972), Bert Armstrong (1973–84), Henry Douglas (1985–99) and Michael Aitken (2000– ).

the Sang Singin (thu-sawng-sing-in) n. ceremony that takes place at the Mill Path on a specially constructed platform as part of the Common Riding. This is near to the site of ‘Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage’, on the thatched roof of which the ceremony took place until 1859, and at the old boundary of the Burgh with the lands of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1860 the ceremony took place amid the ruins of the old cottage, and thereafter has been held near the site, except in 1919 when it was temporarily moved to the Horse monument. Before the current permanent platform was built at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent, a temporary one used to be erected on the other side of the road. The ceremony is held on the Friday afternoon, immediately after the Principals have been to the Dipping of the Flag. It involves the singing of ‘Teribus’, following the official announcement that the marches have been duly ridden. There ceremony of 1889 may be the earliest recorded in a photograph. Since 1905 the Drums and Fifes have played the party back to the Town Hall to return the Flag – ‘A must say, A enjoyed the Sang Singin, A suppose it was an honour ti be asked ti dae eet’ [HD].

Sangster (sawng-stur) n. Evelyn along with husband Gilbert, organiser of the Hawick Summer Festival for its first 20 years. Also organiser of the Christmas Parade and involved with the Reivers Festival for 18 years.i The couple moved to Hawick from Montrose in 1974, after which they became involved in Stiches Youth Club and Hawick Community Council. Gilbert mainstay of the Hawick Summer Festival, along with wife Evelyn. They married in 1971 and he worked in the abattoir after moving to Hawick.

the Sanitarium (θu-saw-ni-ta-ree-um) n. another name for the Anderson Sanatorium.

sanni (saw-ni) contr., poet. shall not – ‘Sic dowie stuff I doona bide to hear, I hope ye sanna die this mony a year’ [CPM] ‘Ye winna believe ‘t, ye sanna believe ‘t, I’ll ne’er be dishonest to thee’ [JoHa] (also written ‘sanna’; cf. sall).

sannies (saw-nee) n., pl. plimsolls, gym-shoes (short for ‘sand-shoes’).

Sanson (san-sin) n. James (d.1790s) assistant minister at Earlston, he was preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1785 until about 1788. In that year he became minister at Leadhills. He also served as tutor to the family of Thomas Scott (uncle to the writer Sir Walter Scott), farmer at Wolfelee and elsewhere. He is described as ‘a tall, awkward, bashful gentleman’, and was nicknamed ‘Dominie Sanson’. He was keen on curling and had the habit of calling out ‘Prodeegious!’ when he threw a good stone. This story was picked up and related to Sir Walter Scott, who probably used it as inspiration for the character of ‘Dominie Sampson’ in ‘Guy Mannering’.

Senty (sawn-ee, sawn-tee) n. Santa Claus – ‘Ah thought ee got an electric razor frae Senty?’ [JCo].

The Sap (θu-sawp) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tum; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Mac-Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; bly from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and addicted to drink – ‘Sic sappy callan’s ne’er are kisses nine or ten . . . ’ [JT], ‘Sappy grund’ [GW], ‘My trulys! but we’ve got a yerkin’ – ‘Wi’ dead anes, hills are white as sarkin’’ [JoHa] (see also serkin).

sasine (sā-zeen, -zin) n., arch. Scottish legal term for the act of changing ownership of inheritable property, or the documents proving that act. Centuries ago all sales of land involved a charter, followed by an ‘instrument of sasine’, usually witnessed on the land itself. There is a Hawick Register of Sasines for the period 1779–1840 in the National Archives – ‘. . . and sail deliever the charter and seising to the said Walter . . . ’ [SB1527], ‘. . . ane instrument of saisng of Thomas Scot in Hawik’ [SPB1579] (also written ‘saisng’, ‘sasying’, ‘seisin’, and other variants).

sassenach (saw-se-nach) n. a foreigner, particularly used as a disparaging term for someone from England.

saster (saws-tur) n., arch. a kind of sausage filled with haggis stuffing, the stomach-bag or tripe of an animal – ‘Saster, A pudding composed of meal and minced meat, or of minced hearts and kidneys salted, put into a bag or tripe, Loth., Teviotd. Hence the Prov., ‘Ye are as stiff as a stappit saster’, i.e. a crammed pudding’ [JoJ].

Satchells (saw-chulz) n. former estate east of Synton, about 5 miles north of Hawick, in Lilliesleaf Parish. It was home of the Scotts of Satchells, since at least 1607, according to a charter to Robert Scott. Robert was said to be one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, holding the lands of ‘Southinrig’ (i.e. Southdeanrig) for his service. Robert’s son was Capt. Walter, who wrote ‘A True History’ of the Scott family in rhyming couplets, published in 1688 (and reissued in Hawick in 1894) In 1615 Jean and William Scott of Satchells (possibly the widow and her son) helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a group in Hawick to slaughter 60 of Sir James Douglas’s sheep. Walter Scott (the same man as the poet Capt. Walter) was owner in 1663, when it was valued at £200 and in 1678, when it was . . . ’ [WL], ‘. . . Tho’ black is my face like my breeks and my sark . . . ’ [DJ] (cf. seek).

Sark (sawrk) n. river in Galloway that marks part of the Border around Gretna. It was the site of a battle of 1448 in which a Scottish force under Hugh Douglas, Earl of Ormonde, defeated an invading English force under the Earl of Northumberland.

sarkin (sawr-kin) n., arch. the thin rough boards onto which roof slates are nailed.

sarkin (sawr-kin) n., arch. cloth, usually linen, used for making shirts – ‘. . . 28s. Scots for 3½ ells of sarking lyneing’ [BR1638], ‘My trulys! but we’ve got a yerkin’ – ‘Wi’ dead anes, hills are white as sarkin’’ [JoHa] (see also serkin).
Satchells Burn

valued at £256. John Scott was owner in 1788, when the value was £200. John Corse Scott of Synton owned it in 1811, when it was valued at £256. There is still a farm there. It is probably the ‘Schotteschael’ in Lilliesleaf Parish that was granted to Alexander of Huntingdon sometime in the period 1202–7 – ‘Tell Ashikirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’[WSB] (the origin of the name is probably from Old and Middle English ‘sceat schele’, meaning ‘the huts in a corner’; it is ‘Setschelis’ in 1618, ‘Satscheillis’ in 1609, ‘Satchells’, ‘Satscheillis’ and ‘Satschells’ in 1616, ‘Satchells’ in 1619 and ‘Satschieles’ in 1633; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Sauchiehillis’ in the 1620s).

Satchells Burn (saw-chulz-burn) n. stream that runs past Satchells in a roughly northerly direction, to meet the Ale Water near Dimple-knowe.

sate (sä’, sät) n. a seat – ‘...and the rest of the saids weivers in the back sates as they shall happen to come in’[BR1710], ‘Yeh bit sate on the kei-stane o the brig ...’[ECS], ‘...Aw hed a front sait at a High Street wunche atween the Toon Hall an the Croon Hotel’[BW1978], ‘...hei contested the new sate o Roxburgh and Berwicke-shire’[IWL], ‘...Or anld folk seekin’ a sate’[DH], pp., poet. sat – ‘And sate them on the sward so green, with thyme and violets wove’[JTe] (also sometimes ‘sait’).

sater (sä’-ur, sä-tur) n. a seater – ‘...a new toonty sater bus’[IWL].

satisfy (sa’-ees-fl) v., arch. to atone for an offence, undergo public repentance – ‘...summoned Isobel Lother, servitrix to ye Laird of Whithaugh, to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie’[PR1715], ‘...that every Transgressor or Transgressors should be obliged publickly to satisfie as Transgressors and be prosecute conform to Acts of Parliament ...’[PR1721].

satisfyin (sa’-ees-fl-in) n., arch. act of atonement, procedure of repentance – ‘The clerk was ordered to give her a testificate for ye satisfieing for ye scandal’[PR1715].

Where saughs and osiers mirk the face o’ day’[CPM], ‘They’re teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’[JAHM], ‘...Glide amongst the saughs and slaes’[GWe], ‘Ae nicht as I stood by the muckle rok o’ my reive’[HSR].

saughtree (sawch-tree) n. village and farm in Liddesdale, as well as a former station on the Border Counties Railway east of Riccarton. A track here branches east towards the Border, only 3½ miles away. The area contains a tiny church (built in 1872) and burial ground, and there was formerly a school here. The poet James Telfer was schoolmaster in the years 1834–60; note that there was also a small school at Burnmouth, with which it can be confused (although this is the Burnmouth in southern Liddesdale, and not the one near Saughtree). There was an annual ‘blanket preaching’ held nearby in the 19th century, in a natural amphitheatre. The lands there were valued at 14 shillings on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when they were tenanted by Robert and John Henrison. John Cranston was tenant there in 1685 and John Elliot was tenant there in 1694. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 481 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Hudshouse, Burnmouth, Pinglehole and ‘Leys’; it also shared a small strip of common land with Pinglehole and the farmhouse was on the opposite side of the Dawston Burn from the modern houses, near the location of the church. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. Robert Stavert was farmer there in 1785. In 1797 the farmer was Thomas Stavert, and Archibald Stavert in the 1850s and 60s. Andrew Douglas was farmer there in the 1930s. Near the shepherd’s cottage of Saughtree Grain is the site of a standing stone known as ‘the Knocking Stone’ and others called ‘the White Stones’. Saughtree Fell, to the west, reaches a height of 434 m and contains a triangulation pillar. Some flints found near there are in Hawick Museum – ‘O Willie, ’tis light, and the moon shines bright, Will ye go and watch the deer wi’ me?’ ‘Ay, be my sooth, this very night:’ – And away they went to Saughentree’ [ES] (it is ‘Saughentree’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ‘The Laird of Lairistan’ and is occasionally ‘Sauchtree’; the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘sealh treow’, meaning ‘willow tree’; it first occurs as ‘Sauchtree’ in 1541, ‘Sauchtrie’ in 1652, ‘Saughtrie’ in 1685, ‘Saughtrees’ in 1694 and ‘Saughtrees’ in 1755; it appears on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, but without a label, is ‘Saughtrees’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map).

The Saughtree Cross (thu-sawch-tree-kros) n. name sometimes given to one of 2 stone crosses found near the Abbey Sike in the vicinity of Saughtree in about 1850 and 1880. The first consists of a round piece of stone, carved with a cross, which may have formed the capital of a wayside marker. The second is a somewhat larger rough-hewn stone cross, with part of a sword pommel carved on it; this may have been a grave marker, for example. They were deposited in the Museum.

Saughtree Fell (sawch-tree-fel) n. hill to the north of Saughtree farm. It reaches a height of over 450 m and contains a triangulation pillar on the secondary summit. It appears to be labelled ‘Daston Fell’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, suggesting that Dawston Fell may have been an alternative name.

Saughtree Grain (sawch-tree-grän) n. former shepherd’s cottage near where Alison Sike and Cliffhope Burn unite in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale. Alternative names were Cliffhope (on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), Dawstoneburn Grain (on the 1841 census) and just ‘Grain’ (on the 1851 and 1861 censuses). The original cottage was a little further up than the more modern one. It was said that the steep sides of the valley here meant that the residents would not see the Sun for about 6 months. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851, and Arthur Armstrong in 1861.

Saughtree Kirk (sawch-tree-kirk) n. small church in Saughtree village, built in 1872, when there was discussion of making this a separate parish from Castleton. It began as a Home Mission station in 1865. The Manse was built right next door. It was made a ‘quoad sacra’ parish in 1910. The men who ministered there to start with were officially ‘Licentiates’, with a permanent minister only appointed in the years 1910–60. A framed parchment records the names of 9 local men who died in WWI. A roll of the ministry is: James Patterson 1866–70; William Smith 1870–77; Thomas Gordon 1877–86; Alexander Wilson 1886–89; David Ness 1889–92; Robert Galbraith 1892; James Ronald MacDonald 1892–1902; Joseph William McLean 1902–03; Adam McCaul Paterson 1903–10; William Napier Bell 1910–20; David Smith 1921–22; John Scott 1922–25; John Whyte McGill 1925–27; Robert Douglas Pettie 1927–28; Robert Forsyth McGarrity 1929–

Saughtree Schuil (sawch-tree-skil) n. former school at Saughtree, situated on the main road south of the hamlet. It opened in 1809. There were 20 pupils there in the 1830s. James Telfer, referred to as ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ ran the school 1834–62. Alexander MacGregor succeeded him. Edward J. Wilson was master there in the late 1880s. The school and house were rebuilt on the old site, perhaps around 1880. The Borders Archive have registers for the period 1938–63 and log books for 1904–63.

Saughtree Station (sawch-tree-stā-shin) n. small station on the Waverley line just north of Saughtree. The station buildings have been renovated and about 400 yards of track have been laid there, with a diesel locomotive kept in a shed, constructed from 2 railway cottages.

Saughtree Viaduct (sawch-tree-vl-u-dukt) n. former railway viaduct near Saughtree station in upper Liddesdale. It was a 5-span bridge, taking the Border Counties railway across the Dawston Burn.

Saughy Hill (sawch-ee-hil) n. hill between Staney Hill and Goat Hill, on the eastern side of the Southdean Burn near Alderybar. It reaches a height of 307 m.

saul (sawl) n., arch., poet. soul – ‘To wit, first, I recommend my saul to God, maker and creator thereof . . .’ [SB1633], ‘His saul aspir’d to higher fates, O mensfu’ John!’ [CPM], ‘He’s busy prayin’ for your saul, Wi’ pious care; An’ sends his blessin’, that is all He has to spare’ [JR], ‘Now disappeared suddenly, vanished – ‘The ramper-eel made a drumme an’ santit’ [GW], ‘Jock santit roond the corner’ [GW], ‘A could a swurn A pat ma cutty on the hud, but it’s santit!’ [GW].

saut (sawr) n., adj. salt. In former times this was a crucial commodity, and was heavily taxed. Hawick’s supplies came by cart from Berwick, Edinburgh and Prestonpans – ‘And wi’ thee I’ll cross the saut sea, Willie, And wi’ thee I’ll cross the saut sea’ [JTe], ‘An’ yet a lock o’ saut joost right laid on, By an aul’ wife, prove an effectual cure’ [JoHa], ‘What heaps our hearts wi’ heavy wae, An’ wi’ saut drapinn’s drouks our pellicit’ [JoHa], ‘… Some hoary parent ripe in years – fik e’e maun drap its ain saut tears’ [AD], ‘An’ ontae a big beezein’ fire it was set – She stirr’d it wi’ saut till it was boilin’ het’ [BM1901], ‘The wanderlust has held ye lang Across the wide saut sea’ [WL], ‘As doon the flushed cheek the saut tear is stealing’ [RF], ‘His wee heart was fu’, and the saut tears ran …’ [JT], ‘… Sae a gapin’ void was left in my heart, And a saut tear dim’d my e’e’ [JCG], ‘… Ham, Cheese’n’onion, vinegar flavour, Wi’ built-in saut that’s spent its saunt’ [DH].

saut (sawr, sawt) v. to punish, overcharge – ‘A paid ma laween (it was naething owre-the-matter – A wasna saantet)’ [ECS] (also written ‘saut’).

the Saut Box (thu-saw’t-boks) n. former name sometimes used for the jail in the old Town House – ‘If any obstreperous prisoners required watching at night in the ‘Saut box’ or ‘Rogue’s hole’ …’ [V&M] (see Hawick Jail: the epithet may have been because of the shape, a ‘saut-box’ usually having a flat back and curved front, or just because of its small size).

Sauter’s Ford (sawr’-urz-ford) n. formerly one of the main fords across the Tweed, situated near Melrose. Also the name of a for across the Ale Water, connecting Bewlie with Cavers Carre. The name is probably related to the days when the smuggling of salt was big business.

saut-fat (sawr’, salt-faw’) n., arch. a vessel for holding salt, salt-cellar – ‘… broad pleats, two chandleis, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffier’ [DMW1681] (also saut-fit).

saut-fat (sawr’-fi) n., arch. a salt cellar (probably an error of ‘salt-foot’ for the word saut-fat).

Sauthaa see Saut Haa

Saut Haa (sawr’-haw) n. Salt Hall, a house built probably in the late 17th century, which was an important centre for storing salt through the 18th century. It stood nearby the present house ‘Little Salt Hall’ above Langlands Road, on the right side of the later entrance to Rosalee. It appears on Wood’s 1824 map, but unlabelled, and was already indicated on a sketch of Wilton drawn in 1810. It was a cottage with a door and 2 small windows, and a stair leading to 2 first floor attics.
the Saut Hoose

A lane ran behind it from what is now Rosalee Brae. It was inhabited until 1887, thereafter used as sheds for nurserymen and demolished in 1901. It was notorious for the suicide of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ there in 1758 (or perhaps 1682?). Another ‘Salt House’ is recorded near West Port in the late 1700s beside Bowie’s Well and also referred to as the ‘Salter’s House’ (also written ‘Sautha’), etc.

the Saut Hoose (thu-saw’-hoos) n. the Salt House formerly at the West Port. It had behind it one of the wells coming from the ‘Schlinder Springs’.

savendle (sa-ven-dul) adj., arch. strong, firm – ‘...as, in giving orders about any work, it is commonly said, ‘Mak it very savendle’; Roxh.’ [JoJ], ‘Is the wa’ sevendle?’ [GW] (also sevendle).

the Savins Bank (thu-sa-vinz-bawngk) n. the Hawick Bank for the Savings of Industry was founded in January 1815. It has been the oldest savings bank with a continuous existence in Britain. Begun to encourage thrift among the working classes, it had a slow start, but then had several moves to larger premises, including 14 High Street, and the current building at 11 High Street. This was designed by J.P. Alison and built 1914/5 as a classical ashlar-fronted building, with interior fittings by Scott Morton & Co. The bank merged with the Langholm Savings Bank in 1960, Jedburgh in 1970, and other Trustee Savings Banks in 1970 and 1975. TSB merged with Lloyds to form Lloyds TSB in 1999. The building is grade B listed.

savree (sav-ree) adj., arch. savoury – ‘Sei bye some mair o that savree meat, wull ee?’ [ECS].
saw (saw) v., arch. to sow – ‘An’ saw the feelds, an’ settie vinyards ...’ [HSR], ‘Thaye that saw in teears, sall shairr in joy’ [HSR], ‘How be yow clippin the gress the teime A’m sawin the seed?’ [ECS], ‘It’s lang sin’ I gaed doon the furrows sawin’, And eerie’s the sough o’ the wun’; ‘The dreep o’ the rain is aye faain’, faain’, Waes me for a glint o’ the sun!’ [WL] (the past tense is sew and the past participle saw).
sawin (saw-in) pp., arch. sown, planted with seed – ‘Item sawin in Paleis twa bollis quheit estimat for the feide coirne viz. 8 bollis quheit price of the boll ourheid’ [SPB1579].

Sawmill Street (saw-nil-stree’) n. name given on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map to part of what had previously been named Dovemount and would be named Havelock Street in 1864. It was given this name because of the saw-mill at the north-western end of the street, with proprietor Mr. Robson.

sawn (sawn) pp., arch. sown – ‘...Will find where he has naething sawn That weeds will grow on field an’ lawn’ [FL], ‘Licht is sawn for the rich-teous, an’ gladniss for the upright in hairt’ [HSR] (past participle of saw; cf. the past tense sew).

Sawnie (saw-nie) n., arch. variant form of Sandy – ‘Oh! its Jamie, and Joannie, and Sawnie, and me, We’re weetin’ oor freen’ship, quo’ Donald M’Gee’ [JoHa].
sax (saks) n., arch., poet. six – ‘Item, sax pair of schewis new and old’ [SB1633], ‘Then he had left nae gear to steal, Fala &c. Except sax sheep upon a lee ...’ [CPM], ‘Which sair’d his house o’ meal an’ groats, An’ farm’d it a’ for sax pund Scots’ [JR], ‘She’d gotten sax pun’ but a croon, An’ hauf-a-croon o’ erles’ [JoHa], ‘Whip her in, whip her oot, Sax merks in a clout’ [JP], ‘Sax twalmonds were gane, when a braw strap-pin’ lad Cam’ to our door buskit fu’ gaudy’ [JT], ‘...Consultin’ hours frae sax to ten, Tho’ later whiles I patients see’ [VW]. saxhorn (saks-horn) n. a brass musical instrument invented by Adolphe Sax, resembling a bugle, but with valves instead of keys. There were many ‘Saxhorn Bands’ set up in the mid-1800s, but Hawick’s band is the only remaining one in Scotland that uses the old word.

the Saxhorn Band (thu-saks-horn-bawnd) n. Hawick’s brass band, which acts as a marching band, a concert band and a competitive band. Founded by Samuel Stainton in 1855, following a petition to the Magistrates to support the setting up of a brass band for the town. There have been many ups and downs since then, but it is still going strong after more than a century and a half. The Band briefly dissolved in 1878. In 1945 the Council decided to help financially with the Band, but this discontinued with the end of the District Council. There were originally 14 members, which has grown to around 25 at full strength. Stainton acted as leader for the first few months, with Stephen Teal then becoming the first appointed Bandmaster. Walter Atkinson was a prominent Bandmaster 40 years later, with James Amos leading in the successful post-WWII period. In 1961 they became Scottish Championship Band and later competed in the national finals, also playing in the televised evening concert in the Albert Hall. The band have practised in a huge number of locations over the years, in Orrock Halls, then Wilton School, sometimes in the Albert Hall.

the Buccleuch Memorial Halls and part of the former Dickson & Laings mill in the later years of the 20th century, before moving to O’Connell Street. They have been prominent at ceremonial parades in Hawick over the last 150 years, for example during the Wars, and in the unveiling of the Horse monument. The band have played at the Common Riding since at least 1872 when they were recorded providing music at the Games. At the Common Riding they have many specific duties, including meeting the Cornet after the Picking, meeting the cavalcade at the Volunteer after the Moss paul Ride-out, playing the Cornet from the Town Hall to the Horse on Colour Bussing night, and leading the Provost’s procession from the Horse on the Friday morning. They also play ‘Invocation’ at the Handing-Back. They were heard on the 1937 BBC radio broadcast of the Common Riding, and are on the ‘Hawick Sings’ records. In addition they usually lead the children’s procession to the Vertish Hill Sports. They have also played a New Year’s concert at the Tower Knowe for a great many years. A history ‘Seven Score Years’ was written by Owen Connelly in 1995 and Gillian French wrote a Ph.D. thesis entitled ‘Folksong to Jedburgh.’

Scarlet (skawr-li’) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Andrea Scarliie’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time, and likely to be a descendant of the earlier Robert. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto Scarlate’ when he was witness to the 1452 sasine for William Douglas of Drumlanrig being regranted the Barony of Hawick. This was signed in Hawick by a number of local men.
scarletina (skawr-li-teen-u) n. disease caused by a bacterial toxin, most commonly affecting toddlers, with symptoms being sore throat, fever, bright red tongue and a characteristic rash. It was formerly a great killer of children. The disease arrived in Hawick in 1831, Dr. John Douglas remarking that this was the first major disease to appear in the Town. It claimed the lives of many (probably tens of) children and a few adults that year. The disease was almost entirely wiped out by the use of antibiotics in the 20th century.

Scaur Pool (skawr-pool) n. Scar Pool, name for a pool in the Liddel Water, located near the cliffs by the farm of Flatt (marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map).

Scaw’d Law (skawd-law) n. hill in Cavers Parish, just south of the Maidens, reaching a height of 503 m. James Turnbull was recorded a mimic war, And drive the fox o’er moss, and moor, and scawr’ [DA], ‘And here’s a wee rogue wi’ a scaur on his chin ... ’ [TCh], ‘It may be found on all the scours along the Teviot and Slit-rig, and is especially abundant above Crowbyres Bridge’ [JAHM], ‘The Teviot takes its quiet way Past level haugh and loamy scaud, Whilees coursing through a placid pool, Whilees rippling o’er some pebbley bar’ [JCG], ‘A wee bit scaur offends her e’e. She plants a braw Scots thristle ... ’ [WP], ‘... For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scuar to glen’ [WHO] (this is the anglicised or literary version of cf. scer, with G. Watson writing that it occurs ‘only in literature or educated speech’).

Scaur (skawr) n. Scar, former farmstead in the Dod valley, corresponding roughly to the present position of Dodburn Filter Cottage, with the woods to the south of there still being known as Scar Plantation (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Scaur see the Scer

the Scaurend (th-skawr-end) n. former name for part of Robertson village, at the western side, so named because of the ‘scaur’ by the bend in the river there. The house of the same name was once the manse for the Snoot Kirk.

Scarnook (skawr-nook) n. former farmstead in Robertson Parish, probably near to Scaurend. William Murray was living there in at least 1786–94. Carrier John Elliot was there in 1841 and retired farmer Robert Elliot in 1851 (it is ‘Scair Nook’ in 1786 and 1788).

the Scaur Pool (thu-skawr-, -sker-, -pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot at Mansfield, near where the mill lade came out. This also formed the eastern end of the property once used as nurseries by Dickson’s. Also called the ‘Sker Pool’ – ‘The Doctor was one day taking his accustomed walk along the north bank of the Teviot and Mr. Williamson wading more than knee deep and fishing in the Scaur Pool’ [WNK], ‘As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o’ bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school’ [JCG].
as resident there in 1770. There are the remains of a linear earthwork on the eastern side of the hill, perhaps connected with features noted near Leap Hill and near King’s Sike, and presumably once boundary markers (the origin is probably ‘hill with a sheltering’, from Old Norse, or old Scots ‘scald’, i.e. a hill with bare patches; there are several other hills called ‘Scaw’d’ or ‘Scaw’d’ elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Scamlnh’ in 1770).

Scawmill (skaw-mil) n. cottage on the Cala (or Dean) Burn, reached from Dean via the old track along the burnside, having a very picturesque setting among the woods. It may also once have been known as ‘Timbersidemill’, but it is unclear if they were the same place or neighbouring farmsteads (both names appear in contemporary 18th century baptismal records). There was presumably once a corn-mill there, perhaps even the same one later known as Dean Mill. James Scott was there in 1724, William Brown in 1733, John Scott in 1791 and William Scott in 1797. It was still active when Walter Smith was recorded as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories – ‘Just leave the Dean by Scawmill farm, And o’er the well-worn stile, Up by the low and thick set hedge The very briars smile’ [WFC] (also ‘Scaw Mill’; it was ‘Scadmihn’ in 1724, ‘Scalmihn’ in 1733 and ‘Skawmill’ in 1791).

Scenes of Infancy (seenz-ov-in-fin-see) n. longest poem written by John Leyden. It is mainly constructed in praise of the countryside of Teviotdale, where he spent his youth, weaving in a large number of local myths and legends, but also covering wider historical ideas, international issues of his day, and religious and social topics (including a denunciation of the slave trade). Although nominally looking back to his childhood, and lamenting the changes caused by the agricultural revolution during his lifetime, it at the same time looks forward towards his future in the wider world. It was published in 1803, shortly after he sailed for India (never to return). In fact it is a collection of pieces written over several years, with connecting sections added in the months before his departure – ‘Beside the Ettrick Minstrel stood a name, The Bard who sung the Scenes of Infancy! As also stood the darling Cunninghame, Who sung old faery Cluden, Nith, and Dee’ [JTe].

scer (sker) v., arch. to scare (also spelled ‘sker’).

scer (sker) n., arch. a ridge of rock, precipitous bare bank, cliff, especially one made of red rock – ‘Fornent iz, …Minth Craigs …brent raise ther skerres’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘sker’; cf. the more anglicised scaur; from Mediaeval English and Old Norse).

the Scer (utthu-sker) n. Lynnwood Scar, i.e. the cliff behind Lynnwood – ‘…she sat on the Scer watchin Lunnwud Mills chimney bein demolisher’ [IWL]. The same name was also formerly used for the slope along the Avenue of Wilton Lodge (also ‘the Scaur’).

the Scer Plantin (th-skerr-plawn-in) n. plantation along the western side of the Dod Burn just south of the farm of Dod.

the Scer Pool see the Scaur Pool

schaedle (sha-dul) n., arch. schedule – ‘A lookeet the shuttle o the kist, bit A coodna finnd the schaedle’ [ECS].

schammared (sha-mard) pp., adj., arch. ornamented – ‘Item, ane pair of black velvot breikis, with ane clok lyned with schag all schamarred our with black silk lace …’ [SB1633].

Schanyie (shan-yee) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) wright from Brauxholme who is described in a 1612 list as being convicted along with many other local men of charging too much interest on loans. His name is also written as ‘Schang’ and he seems not to have appeared to answer the charge and hence was declared a rebel (it is unclear to which modern name this might correspond).

scheme (skeem) n. a housing scheme, typically known as a ‘housing estate’ in England, and particularly applying to those built by the council. Housing schemes in Hawick include Burnfoot, Stirches and Mayfield.

scent (shent) pp., poet. put to death, destroyed, damned, perished – ‘For the Lord kens the waye o’ the richteous: but the waye o’ the ungodlie sall be utterlie schent’ [HSR], ‘…thaye schent at the rebuik o’ thy countenance’ [HSR].

Schetky (shet-kee) n. John Christian (1778–1874) born in Edinburgh, from an old Transylvanian family, he settled in Oxford, and became professor of drawing at the naval college, Portsmouth, where he was well-known as a marine painter. He was commissioned by Sir Walter
Scheves

Schiehallion

Schoir

Scheves (sheevz) n. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He had possession of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in 1418, but in the following year resigned in favour of William Croyser. Probably the same John ‘de Scheves’ was Clerk of the Rolls and Register of Brechin in 1426 and associated with St. Andrews Diocese in the 1430s.

Schiehallion (shee-haw-lee-in) n. local folk group, consisting of the Lammies from Hawick and another couple from St. Boswells, performing since about 1980 and having released about 4 tapes (note there are other groups from elsewhere with the same name).

Schoir (shoi-ur) v., arch. to scold (cf. shoor).

Schiuill (skil) n. school – ‘what schuil did ee gaun ti?’; ‘The bairns new oot o the schuil for leave …’ [ECS], ‘He’s never out o’ some mischief, He’ll no’ gang to the schule, He tore his carritch leaf frae leaf To mak’ a dragon’s tail’ [JT], ‘…Wad tempt o’o for tae jouk the schule and seek the floory braes’ [VW], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’ [DH], ‘There werea mony bairns aboot In oor wee village schule, But, ah, it was a bonnie spot, Doon by the shelt’ring hill’ [WFC], ‘And noo, in the schule o’ the world, A hantle o’ heidstrong loons …’ [WL], ‘Nowadays schule lassies can dae better than that!’ [BW1974], v. to school – ‘…where hei schuiled yin o’ his maist famous pupils, Christopher Murray Grieve’ [IHS], ‘She’d ne’er been schuiled i’ the artfu’ wiles That jauds betray wi’ their hauntin’ smiles’ [WL], ‘I canna schule mysel’ to fit Wi townsman, drawn sae keen the bricht Upon each other’s avarice’ [DH] (spelled ‘schule’ and other variants).

the Schuil Board (thu-skil-boerd) n. the School Board, which was formed in Hawick in 1873, following the Education Scotland Act of 1872. It took over the responsibility of running the schools from the Parish heritors, and put the control in the hands of a locally elected Board. Minute books for 1873–1947 are in the Borders Archive.

Schiuillhoose (skil-hoos) n. schoolhouse, a building in which pupils are taught, sometimes also serving as the residence of the schoolmaster. The need for a separate school building (rather than using St. Mary’s Kirk) was agreed upon at least as early as 1683. Rent paid for the schoolhouse by the Kirk Session of Hawick is recorded in 1712, although this was some temporary accommodation. Some time after 1722 the first purpose-built Hawick Parish schoolhouse was erected (at Slitrig Bank), but it was carried away by the 1767 flood.

Schiuilmaister (skil-maas-tu-r) n. a schoolmaster. In the Hawick area the words was used to refer to the main (or only) teacher of a parish school. William Hay is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1606, although it is not certain this was at the Parish School. James Carmure is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1631. John Liddersdale, who signed the Solemn League and Covenant in Hawick in 1638 is recorded as being a schoolmaster, presumably in Hawick, but this is uncertain. Hawick’s schoolmaster is first explicitly mentioned in 1657, when Walter Martin held the position. He was recorded again as schoolmaster in 1665, with a Mr. Chisholme being next, but his first name is not known. John Purdom took over in 1669 and is the first of whom we have any substantial information. During his time the Grammar School was established, taking away some of his teaching duties, as well as salary; in 1710 a bond was granted by the Council for payment to the new master of the Grammar School (usually called the Rector). Some of the payment for the Parish Schoolmaster came directly from the pupils, and the income was also supplemented with the master serving as Session Clerk, as well as Kirk Reader. Subjects taught by the single master included Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Latin and Singing. John Purdom retired in 1723 and died in about 1725. John Turnbull is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1726. Walter Turnbull, ‘the Little Maister’, was schoolmaster from the 1730s until the 1750s. James Inglis was Parish schoolmaster at the time of the flood of 1767, having started in 1756 and serving until his death in 1806. He was succeeded by Christopher Armstrong, until 1820. In the 1830s there were around 150 pupils. The schoolmaster’s house appears to have been inadequate for most of the history of the school. In the early 19th century the house at 20 Buccleuch Street was... used. The first purpose-built house for the school-master was constructed along with the new Buccleuch Street school 1860. The Grammar School was founded in 1710, with the first master being James Innes, who was called Rector to distinguish him from the Parish school master. There was a common master for the two schools for much of the 18th century, until the 1770s. The two schools merged in 1824, with James Murray as the common Master. Once the schools were big enough to require many teachers, rather than just a master and a few assistants, the term ‘heidmaister’ would be used. The word ‘Rector’ was initially used at the Grammar School and transposed to the High School when they merged (also hyphenated; see Rectors for a full list of High School Rectors; cf. heidmaister and the Pesh).

schuils (skilz), pl. schools. Hawick currently has 6 primary schools (Burnfoot, Drumlanrig, St. Margaret’s, Stirches, Trinity and Wilton), several outlying primary schools (Denholm, Hobkirk, Newcastleton, Robertson, Teviothead) and one High School. St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s and Wilton Dean schools also once existed in town, along with several small private schools. There used to be several other small schools in country areas around the Town, including at the Allan Water, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Burnmooth, Clarilaw, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Howpasley, Kirkton, Minto, Newmill, Redfordgreen, Riccarton, Saughtree, Southdean, Stouslie and Wolfelee. During the 18th century there are records of people being paid by Hawick and Wilton Parishes to teach children (probably in their own houses) in the areas of Branholmetown, Borthwickhaugh, Northhouse, Raesknowe, Thornyhall (i.e. Teviothead) and Whitlaw. The earliest school in Hawick started in the mid-17th century and was located in St. Mary’s Church, with the churchyard as a playground. The first purpose-built school was on Slitrig Bank, but was washed away in the 1767 flood. The Grammar School, which originally taught in Latin, was founded in 1710. It existed alongside the Parish School (also then referred to as ‘the English Schuil’ for more than a century. They came together in 1825 as ‘the United Schuils’ and later ‘Buccleuch Schuil’. However, even the combination of the 2 schools was still insufficient provision for education, leading to many small private schools cropping up from about the 1710s, although originally they were forbidden to teach ‘further than the Psalm Book’. More small private schools appeared through the 19th century, with one being set up in 1836 by several local individuals with a young teacher hired from Edinburgh (as described by Robert Wilson). The New Statistical Account (1840) states that Hawick had as many as 10 ‘adventure schools’ and that it was not ‘known that there are any of the native population above fifteen years of age who cannot read’. There were apparently as many as 19 separate institutions existing in Hawick and Wilton in 1865. Most of these private schools lasted only a short time, and they included: Brand’s Schuil (a.k.a. Teviot Grove Academy); the Chartist Schuil; Hawick Academy; Heronhill Schuil; the Subscription Schuil; Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy. It is traditional that on the Thursday of the Common Riding the Principals visit the primary schools and the Cornet asks the Head if the pupils can have the rest of that day and the next day off to support him; the Cornet’s own school is visited first. A full list of Hawick and neighbouring schools is: Allan Water Schuil/Priesthaugh Schuil; Ashkirk Schuil; Bedrule Schuil; Beverley Schuil; Brand’s Schuil/Teviot Grove Academy; Burnfit Schuil; Burnmooth Schuil; the Chartist Schuil; Cogsmill Schuil; Clarilaw Schuil; Craigmount Schuil; Denholm Schuil/Cavers Schuil; Drumlanrig Schuil; the Industrial Schuil/the Raggit Schuil/Drumlanrig & St. Cuthbert’s Schuil; Hawick High Schuil/Hawick Grammar Schuil/the Latin Schuil/Dodd’s Schuil/Buccleuch Grammar Schuil/Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil/Buccleuch Schuil/Hawick United Schuils; Hawick Parish Schuil/the English Schuil; Hermitage Schuil; Heronhill Schuil; Hobkirk Schuil; Howpasley Schuil; the Image Gairden; Kirkton Schuil; Minto Schuil; Newcastleton Schuil; Newmill Schuil; Redfordgreen Schuil; Riccarton Schuil; Robertson Schuil; Saughtree Schuil; the Scelnty Schuil; Soothdean Schuil; St. Cuthbert’s Schuil/the Episcopal Schuil; Stirches Schuil; St. Margaret’s Schuil/the Catholic Schuil; St. Mary’s Schuil; Stouslie Schuil; the Subscription Academy/Hawick Academy; the Subscription Schuil/Hawick High Schuil; Teviothead Schuil/Caerlenrig Schuil; Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil; Trinity Schuil; Wolfelee Schuil; and Wulton Dean Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy; and Wulton Schuil.

Sclater (sklā-tur) n. Elizabeth (18th C.) born at Fodderlee Birks (according to George Tancred). In 1745 she was living with her family in one of the cottages at Weensmoor. Since her family had previously lived near Fodderlee it seems reasonable to suppose that they gave their name to the ‘Sclater Ford’ there; however, this would require that the same family had been there for more than 200 years. When they were at Weensmoor in 1745 it is said that the Highland host stopped at the farm on their march to England, but found only the children at home – ‘They did no harm and tried to pacify the bairns, who were afraid of them’. She was grandmother to Mr. Aitken, who was a plasterer in Jedburgh. It is possible she was the Elizabeth who married Robert Williamson and had children baptised at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh: Elizabeth (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Moses (b.1783). There were Sclaters recorded in St. Boswell’s, Bowden and Melrose at about this time (the name is probably a variant of the modern ‘Slater’).

Sclaterford (sklā-tur-furd) n. site of a skirmish in the months following Flodden, as reported in a (one-sided) letter from Lord Dacre in November 1513: ‘so to the Sclater Ford on the water of Bowset; was pursued by the Scots, assisted by Dan Kerr of Fernehirst, the Laird of Bondgedworth, and the sheriff of Teviotdale; the Laird of Walghope and Mark Trumbill are hurt’. The site was a ford over the ‘water of Bowset’ which is probably associated with Bowshot Hill in Abbotsrule, and has been identified with the Fodderlee Burn. It is recorded that the Laird of Wauchope (or ‘Walghope’) was injured with an arrow and had his horse slain, while Mark Turnbull (‘Trumbill’) had a spear-head left in him, and many others were injured. It is said that there was a large cairn there until the early 1800s, which may have been connected with the skirmish. The ford was probably named after the family called Sclater who once lived near there (until about the early 1700s according to Tancred, which suggests the same family lived there for about 200 years).

In 1903 a memorial plaque was erected by the Archaeological Society on the bridge over the Fodderlee Burn, which is believed to be at the site of the former ford. The plaque was replaced in 2007.

the Sclynt Schuil (thu-sklen’t-ee-skil) n. former school in Hobkirke Parish in the early-to-mid 19th century, intended for small children who were too young for the Parish school. It was established about 1831 by Mrs. Cleghorn of Weens, who supplied the money for the books and the teacher’s salary. The building was a thatched cottage with one room, divided by 2 box-beds. The schoolmistress was Nelly Laidlaw, referred to as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’. On the 16th of October each year, George Tancred’s (nee Cleghorn) birthday, Mrs. Cleghorn would give out toys and books to the children. The building was later the residence of a shoemaker. The name survives in the ‘Upper Sclynt Plantation’, on the left-hand side of the road between Bonchester Bridge and Weens House. This is probably the same place meant by the farm of ‘Stentyhaugh’, where Robert Barrie was tenant in 1797.

scodgie (sko-bi) n., arch. a brat. The 1635 baptism is one of the earliest existing Hawick Parish records. James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk 1580. His son and heir apparent John was also a witness. He witnessed further transactions in 1581 and 1581/2 when he was described as a Burgess. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1771); Janet (b.1771); Patrick (b.1773). The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related).

scoon (skoon) n. Andrew (19th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret Thomson and they had children in the 1830s. An unnamed child died in 1837. His mother, who lived at Roadhead, died in 1824. David (18th C.) smith in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1672, along with Patrick. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1771); Janet (b.1771); Patrick (b.1773). The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related).

scoolin' (sko-lee) adj., arch. a scool, characterised by a scowl, shading the face with a brow turned down at the front – ‘The scowly hat, and beard so gray, – The bridegroom stood before her’ [JTe]. ‘A scoolie hat = a hat overshadowing the eyes’ [ECS] (also written ‘scouly’).

scone (skôn) n., one of a number of sorts of cake baked on a griddle, particularly a drop-scone, but sometimes one flavoured with treacle or occasionally a more substantial cake containing potato (note that the pronunciation has a long o sound, not the o of general Scots or the diphthong e-oo affected as an attempt to sound ‘posh’).

scone-fittit (skôn-fi-it, -ee) adj., arch.flat-footed (this term, platcher-fittit and platchie-fittit are all noted by E.C. Smith).

scoon (skoon) n. Andrew (19th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret Thomson and they had children in the 1830s. An unnamed child died in 1837. His mother, who lived at Roadhead, died in 1824. David (18th C.) smith in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1672, along with Patrick. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related).

James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk 1580. His son and heir apparent John was also a witness. He witnessed further transactions in 1581 and 1581/2 when he was described as a Burgess. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Helen (b.1635); and Janet (b.1642). Witnesses to the baptisms included Patrick and Simon, who must have been closely related. The 1635 baptism is one of the earliest existing Hawick Parish records. James (1779–1827) probably son of Walter and Mary Elliot, residents of Todshawhill. He may have worked for a while as a farrier with his brother Walter in Langholm. He emigrated to South Africa in 1817, in a party of Scotsmen including his brother Robert (later a hunter and explorer). He settled in Cape Town as a blacksmith. In 1824 he married Francina, and they had 3 children, including Walter. However, he died in 1827, it is said at the age of 34. James (b.1812/3) from Canonbie, he was a labourer at Limiekinhedge Lime Works in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Dinah and Isabella. James (1836–89) son of John and Agnes Robson. He was born in Langholm, and descended from the family of the Branxholme area. He became a tweed designer at Glebe Mills and then went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Scoon & Barrie in Weensland. Later J.L. Hood became a partner and when Barrie left the company became Scoon & Hood, with main premises at Teviotdale Mills. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch Park. He had a double cottage built for him at Loch Park in about 1879, with W.S. Barrie next door. He married Anne O’Hair in 1859. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1861), who married John Milton Cass; Robert (b.1863), who married Isabella Lillico; Agnes (b.1869); James (b.1872); Margaret (b.1877); and Frank (b.1882). James (1872–1936) son of James, he was also a manufacturer. In 1900 he married Isabella, daughter of dyker Robert Scott. His wife was served heir to her father in 1917. They had a son, James (1901–70). John (16th C.) recorded at Aikwood Mill in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. His surname is recorded as ‘Skune’. Perhaps he was the same John also recorded in Philiphaugh in 1579/80 and who witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580, 1581, 1581/2 and 1582. Probably the same John was recorded as son and heir apparent of James in 1580. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, one of the earliest known of this family. He married Christian Allan, and their children included: Christian (b.1634). John (d.bef. 1705) tenant at Branxholmtown. He is listed as tenant along with Patrick in 1677, and seems likely to have been Patrick’s brother. Probably the same John was tenant along with Patrick in at least the period 1690–8, when each of them were leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1698 he and Patrick leased Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. However, it is possible that some of these entries are for a different John (b.1670), who was son of Patrick. He married Margaret Riddell, from an unknown branch of that family, although Walter and William Riddell witnessed a baptism for them. Their children included: Robert (b.1684); and an unnamed son (b.1687). Walter, who later farmed at Branxholmtown, was probably also a son. Margaret Riddell was tenant at Branxholmtown from 1705, so he was presumably deceased by then. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Helen and her husband Francis Murray. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He paid tax on his dwelling and also for ‘an smiddy’. John (b.1713) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, he was baptised at Branxholmtown. He was tenant farmer for part of Todshawhill, starting in at least 1748. He was recorded there in 1753 when one of this children was baptised in Robertson Parish. In 1751 he was renting Todshawhill with Robert (probably his father). However, it is difficult to separate from the other local contemporaries of the same name. He is probably the John in ‘in Branxhome’ whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1747, with witnesses Robert ‘Tenent’ (surely a close relative) and carrier John Wilson. His wife’s name is unknown. Their children included: Robert (1749–1832) who married Beatrix Turnbull; John (1750–1836), baptised in Robertson, who also farmed at Todshawhill; and Jean (b.1753). Walter (b.1753), baptised in Robertson, who married Mary Elliot, was probably his son; Walter’s grandson James became a tweed manufacturer in Hawick. Mary, born to John ‘in Branxhome’ in 1747 may also have been a child of his. John (1718–91) tenant farmer at Todshawhill, probably son of Walter and Isobel Millar. He is probably one of the 2 Johns recorded as tenant of Todshawhill in 1764. He is listed as resident of Todshawhill in the baptism records of several of his children. He married Beatrix Tait, who died in 1795, aged 74. Their children were: Walter (b.1748), baptised in Robertson, who died age 29; Robert (b.1749), baptised in Robertson; Jenny, who died young; Agnes (b.1751), married Robert Ballantyne; William (b.1752), died young; Isabella (b.1755), baptised in Robertson, who married James Laidlaw; William (again, b.1756), baptised in Robertson, who married Helen Elliot; John (b.1756), baptised the same day as William; Robert (b.1759), baptised in Robertson; and Jean (b.1763), baptised in Robertson, who married Adam Nichol. He is buried at St. Mary’s. His sister Mary died the same year as him. He may be the John of `Todghill' who was cautioner in 1764 for Isobel Scoon's marriage to Robert Young. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son John was baptised in 1762. John (18th C.) married Isobel Nichol in Roberton Parish in 1766. He may be the same as one of the Johns who farmed at Todshawhill. John (d.1829) farmer at Branxholme Park. A child of his died in 1816 and a son in 1829. He died in Hawick. He was surely related to the later John at Branxholme Park. A child of his died in 1816 and a son in 1829. He died in Hawick. He was surely related to the later John at Branxholme Park. John (1750–1836) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and probably Beatrix Tait (or possibly son of the John born in 1713, this generation is confused by multiple men of the same name). He may be the John recorded in 1800, 1803 and 1805 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Tait. He married Rachel Riddell in Roberton in 1770. Their children were: James (1769–1851), who died in Seneca, New York; Robert (b.1770); John (1771–1861), who died in Seneca; Janet (or Janette, 1773–1839) who married James Scott and died in Seneca, New York; Walter (b.1776); William (1779–1863) who married Margaret Hutton and Elizabeth Amos and died in Hawick; Beatrix (b.1782); and possibly Walter (b.1787), if he was at Shirenscleuch then. The first 3 were probably baptised in Roberton Parish and at least the next 4 in Hawick. The witnesses in 1773 were Robert Thomson and William Helm. He may be the same as the John who was farmer at Easter Parkhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1771–1861) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Rachel Riddell. In 1800 he emigrated to the New York, where he settled in Seneca and was one of the founders of the Associated Reformed Church there. He died in Seneca and was buried there along with his wife Margaret. John (18th C.) servant at `Whitehaugh' in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. John (b.c.1780) recorded as servant at Branxholme Park in the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was a farm worker living at Branxholme Park in 1841. His house was probably at Cowladyhall. His wife was Betty, who was from Roberton. Their children included Jess, Agnes and Mina. His wife was a widow by 1851. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw. He married Jane Watson and their son Andrew was baptised in Roberton in 1804. He may be the same John who secondly married Margaret Scott and had children: Robert (b.1812); William (b.1813), born at Martinhouse; and John (b.1822), born at Mabonlaw. John (18th/19th C.) married Jane Watson. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Andrew (b.1804). John (1789–1835) farmer at Todshawhill. He was eldest son of Robert and Janet White. His heirs were recorded as tenants of Todshawhill in the period 1834–43. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1829, aged 41. Their children included: Robert (1812–85) who married Mary Nichol and died at Sparland, Illinois; William (1813–77) who married Henrietta Pool Gass; Wilhelmina (1815–43) married Walter Turnbull and emigrated to Canada; James (1818–57) farmed at Newstead Mill; John (b.1822); and Charles Riddell (1826–93) died at Seneca, New York. He died at Hawick. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Nichol and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1841. Mary ‘the Cannie Wumman' nee Turnbull (d.1857) known as ‘Mrs. Scoon', she was listed as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851. She was listed as a vintner at the Plough in Slater's 1852 directory. She is also said to have been landlady of the Harrow Inn (but this may be confusion with the names). She married innkeeper William, and took over after his death. It is unclear what character trait gave her the nickname ‘Cannie' (or ‘Canny'). Patrick (15th C.) resident of Belses Mill. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including brining in Englishmen to steal 18 oxen and cows from him, for burning his house and pillaging goods from him. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Richardson, and their children included: Helen (b.1641). He is probably the Patrick recorded as a witness to baptisms in 1635 and 1639. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susanna Scott and their children included Anna (b.1650), with witnesses to the baptism Walter Scott and George Scott. Patrick (17th C.) lived in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Laidlaw, and their children included: James (b.1657). Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1672, along with smith David. Patrick (d.c.1699) son of Robert. He was tenant farmer in Branxholm-town in at least the period 1671–96. In 1675 he was listed as son of Robert, who also leased part of Branxholmetown. In 1690–97 he and John (probably his son) were each leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he and John leased part of Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. He married Helen Hope and had children: John (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1672); another unnamed son (b.1674); William (b.1678)
Scoon Scoon along with Walter in 1735. In 1742 he and Walter with Walter (as well as John Wilson) in 1725 and 2 ably related to him). He was tenant of Holme Park) and Margaret Scoon (who was probably related to him). He was smith at Pathhead (presumably not the one in Wilton) and is buried at Castleton. Patrick (b.1688) son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot. He was farmer at Branxholmtown. In 1711 in Roberton he married Agnes Elliot. Patrick (18th C.) recorded being paid as Park Keeper at Hassendean for the Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1764–66. He had a voucher for salary in 1765 for weeding and keeping the hedges on Hassendean Common. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scoons. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot, and their children included Walter (b.1641). He (or one of the other Roberts) witnessed a baptism for James Purdom in Hawick Parish in 1640. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott, and their children included: Margaret (b.1643); ‘Dones’ (b.1644); Helen (b.1646); and Janet (b.1648). Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included: Walter (b.1649); and Thomas (b.1650). Another Robert was witness to one of the baptisms. Robert (17th C.) farmer at Branxholmtown. In 1675 he and his son Patrick were tenants of part of the lands at Branxholmstown, and the pair were still leasing part of the farm in 1677. He is probably the same as one of the Roberts whose children were recorded in the 1640s or 1650s. Robert (1684–1672) tenant farmer at Branxholmtown and Todshawhill. He was son of John and Margaret Riddell. He witnessed a baptism for James Craw, tenant at Branxholmtown, in 1711. He is probably the son of ‘Mary’ Riddell who is recorded leasing part of Branxholme Town as early as 1711, and is explicitly listed from 1714. The pair were in arrears for the rental there in the period 1711–17. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Little (in Branxholme Park) and Margaret Scoon (who was probably related to him). He was tenant of 2½ along with Walter (as well as John Wilson) in 1725 and along with Walter in 1735. In 1742 he and Walter were ‘Tenants at Braxome Town’ when they witnessed a baptism for Walter Hume, carrier there. In 1747 he was ‘Tenant’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scoon in Brnxholme. He was tenant of Todshawhill in the period 1749–56 along with John, probably his son, or cousin. He married Agnes Elliot (1688–1736). Their children were: John (b.1712); another John (b.1713); Walter (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1720) who married Helen Murray; William (b.1722); and James (b.1724). The witnesses in 1712 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Robert Thomson in Newmill and in 1720 were James and Walter Crow, both in Branxholme Town. He died at Todshawhill farm. Robert (b.1720) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot. He married Helen Murray (from Hawick Parish) in 1766, and she died in 1808. He might be the Robert, son of Robert, who died in 1790. He may also be the Robert, ‘Branxholmtonn’, married to Janet Burton, whose son Walter was born in 1759. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1753 he married Janet Haliburton. Robert (1759–1828) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Beatrict Tait. He is recorded as farmer at Toshawhill in the estate records from 1792–1812, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and in baptismal records. He could also be the Robert who was listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792 and 1812. In 1788 he married Janet White, who died in 1795, aged 33. In 1797 he secondly married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Bunyan, who died in 1841, aged 73. His children included: John (b.1789) who farmed at Todshawhill; Janet (1791–1873) who married Thomas Hall and died in Hawick; Beatrice (b.1793); Jane (1795–1847), who married Thomas Hogg; James (b.1799), who died aged 22; Margaret, who died aged 29; Isabella (1802/3–59) married Robert Brydon, steward at Highchesters; Elizabeth, died aged 26; Robert, died in infancy; and twins Robert and Elizabeth, who died in childhood. Margaret and Mary, ‘both interred in one grave, pox’ in 1830 were probably also his daughters. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert, carter in the Fore Row, who died in 1832, and whose wife Beatrice Murray, died in 1807. Robert (1789–1837) said to be from the Hawick area, he was a trader in southern Africa. Given the name and date, it is possible he was a son of Walter and Mary Elliot, who lived at Todshawhill; this Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1788. He went to South Africa in 1819 as part of Benjamin Moodie’s Scottish settler party (his brother James also being in the party). In 1827 he and William McLuckie travelled inland to the headwaters of the Marico River, the Ndebele territory of Mzilikazi. In 1829 he reached further into the interior, to the area of modern Pretoria, hunting and trading ivory, and establishing a relationship with Mzilikazi, which may have involved selling arms. The information he and fellow traders gained was passed on to Dr. Andrew Smith, who led a significant expedition into the central South Africa in 1834. He and fellow trader David Hume explored the valley of Olifants River and the Soutpansberg about this time. He is also mentioned as an ivory trader in 1836. In 1837 he was reported as being the only man who could recognize the gemsbok when a specimen was captured. He died of a heart attack while returning from a hunting trip. Parts of his journal may have survived. Robert (1812–83) farmer at Todshawhill, son of John and Margaret Scott. On the estate records he is tenant in 1836, as his father John’s heir. He emigrated to the U.S.A. about 1842, apparently still owing money on the lease. He was the last family member to farm at Todshawhill.

In 1836 he married Mary Nichol. Their children were: Margaret; Jane; John, who married Ella Currie; Jessie; James; Charles, who married Mary Jennie; William; Minnie; Elizabeth; and Robert. Simon (17th C.) witness, along with Patrick, to a baptism for James and Janet Glendinning in 1635. This is one of the earliest Hawick Parish records. It is unclear how he might have been related to Patrick and James. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as a witness at Haining in 1787. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably brother of Robert and son of John and Margaret Riddell. He took over the tenancy of Branzholmton from Margaret Riddell in 1719 (hence it is unlikely that he was son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot). He farmed Branzholmton along with Robert until at least 1735 (when the pair were recorded still leasing the farm). In 1742 he and Robert were ‘Tenants at Branxome Town’ when they witnessed a baptism for Walter Hume, carrier there. In 1717 he married Isobel Miller, who was servant to Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill. His children were: John (b.1718), who married Beatrix Tait and farmed at Todshawhill; Margaret (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); and twins Robert and Walter (b.1729). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott, and their children included Walter (b.1714). Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer at Commonside. His parents names are not known, but he was surely related to the other local Scoons. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Falsyde; they were described as both being servants to James Grieve in Commonside. Their children included: Walter (b.1714), who was illegitimate; James (b.1720); Thomas (b.1724), born at Newmill; Walter (b.1727); Mary (b.1729) in Hawmill Parish; and Agnes (b.1736) in Wilton Parish. The 1720 baptism was witnessed by the preacher at Caerlensrig. The 1729 baptism was witnessed by the Laird of ‘Howlands’ and Robert Cook. Walter (b.1753) probably son of John. He married Mary (or Marion) Elliot in Roberton in 1779. He was also farmer at Todshawhill. He and his wife had a discharge with Thomas Elliot in Selkirk in 1790. His children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: Margaret and John (b.1780); Robert (b.1782); Walter (b.1785), blacksmith in Langholm; Robert (again, b.1788), possibly the hunter in South Africa, said to have been born in 1789; James (b.1790), who may have gone to South Africa with his brother; and William (b.1794). Walter (d.1832) shoemaker at Kirkstylefoot. In 1831 he was served heir to his father Robert, who was a farm servant in Hawick. Walter (1785–1840) son of Walter and Mary Elliot. He was born in Roberton Parish (at Todshawhill) and became a blacksmith at Langholm. He could be the Walter who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Elizabeth Young (1784–22) and secondly Janet Stothart (1799–1842). He had at least 13 children, but only a few survived into adulthood. Children with his first wife were: Walter (1811–59); John (b.1813), who died young; Euphemia (1815–97), who married and emigrated to the U.S.A.; Margaret (1818–1907); James (again, b.1821), also died young; and 3 unnamed. With his second wife there were: James (b.1823), who died young; Robert (1824–78); William (1826–46); Isabella (1828–87), who died in Wigan; Mary (1830–69); Elizabeth (1831–71), who died in Bury; Janet (b.1835); and James (b.1837). Most of the family are buried in Langholm. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Robert Young. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Sarah Winthrope in 1756 and their children included: Robert (b.1756); Andrew (b.1759); and Agnes (b.1761). He must have been a fairly prominent man in the town, since the witnesses to baptisms include ‘writer’ Thomas Winthrope (perhaps his father-in-law) and Bailie.

James Scott, mason Andrew Turnbull, senior, as well as George Scoon (presumably a relative). He may be the ‘Servant to Mr Somervel’ who witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tuhope and James Paterson, as well as for mason Andrew Wilson in 1744, and for Walter Turnbull, David Baldie, Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. William (18th C.) farmer at Todshawhill-shiel. He had children: Margaret (b.1780); Walter (b.1783); and Beatrix (b.1783). He was clearly related to the other Scoons of Todshawhill, but it is not clear how. He is probably the William who married Helen Elliot in 1779. William (b.1779/80) listed as ‘Formerly a Farmer’ in the 1861 census, when he was visiting the Young family on O’Connell Street. William (1817–c.50) innkeeper in Hawick. He was son of William and Elizabeth Amos. In 1841 he was innkeeper of the Tushielaw Inn and based on the birthplaces of his children was later at Crosslee Toll (near Stow) and then in Hawick. He married Mary Turnbull in 1836; she is recorded as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851, and she died in 1857. Their children included: Walter (1837–55); Helen (1842–89); and Isabella, twin of William, who married John Kyle. William (19th C.) shepherd at East Buccleuch. In 1836 he was married to Mary Turnbull in 1836; she married to Mary Turnbull, by the dissenting minister in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1837); and Helen (b.1839) (also former ‘Scoon’, ‘Scoane’, ‘Scone’, ‘Scoone’, ‘Scoones’, ‘Scoons’ and ‘Skune’).

In your purple robe arrayed, You’re my laughing barefoot lover and my tattered gipsy maid’ [WHO], ‘Scotlands calling (Scotland), Scottlands calling (Scotland), Calling, Calling, You home’ [AIB].

Scotland Yet (sko’-lind-ye’, sko’-lund-yet) n. the most famous song written by Henry Scott Riddell, and once regarded almost as the Scottish national anthem. It was set down in ?? at Ramsaycleuch, in Hawick Parish at that time, supposedly while sitting on a rock on a summer’s morning following a heavy rain fall. The tune was composed by Peter McLeod of Edinburgh, and the money raised from selling the sheet music was used to pay for iron railings around the Burns Monument at Calton Hill. The ‘honours three’ in the refrain refers to the crown, sceptre and sword of Scotland. The song was often sung at the Colour Bussing (in at least 1887, 1888, 1891, 1893, 1894 and 1901) and similar events in the 19th century. The song was revived by Scocha on their 2004 album – ‘The song he wrote was one day sung Wherever Scotsmen met. Its patriotic strains can still Be heard in Scotland yet’ [IW].

Scots (skots) n. the language spoken in Scotland, derived from a Germanic dialect spoken by Anglo-Saxon settlers, being a distinct, if far from homogeneous, form of English, adj. pertaining to Scotland or the Scots, Scottish. It is fiercely debated whether Scots it is a separate language or merely a set of dialects. The speech of Hawick people has much in common with Scots in general, but also much that is peculiar to Teries.

Scots an English (skots-an-ing-gleesh) n., arch. game formerly played by boys, in which 2 teams defend their hats and coats from each other. It was said (in Chambers 1841 ‘Popular Rhymes of Scotland’) that the game particularly flourished in Hawick, where the boys would defiantly shout ‘King Covenanter, come out if ye daur venture! Set your feet on Scots grund, English, if ye daur!’.

Scots Dyke an Hare Moss Turnpike (skots-dik-an-här-mos-turn-pik) n. turnpike road legislated by the general Act of 1764, with this specific road act published in 1770 (with an additional act for repairing and widening the road in 1785, and the acts repealed in 1807). This led to a great improvement in the road, allowing it to be passable by wheeled traffic, thereby allowing Hawick to develop as a centre for the carrying trade. The cost of constructing the road was borne by subscribers, who recouped their money via tolls collected approximately every 6–8 miles along its length. The road ran from the English Border at Scots Dyke (in Dumfriesshire) to Hare Moss (in Roxburghshire) just outside Selkirk, following the route of the modern A7. It passed through Hawick via Martinshouse, Langbaulk and the Loan. The Haremoss and Scots Dyke (East District) Turnpike Trust was established by an Act of 1829. It covered the administration of more than 20 miles of road in Roxburghshire. The revenue for upkeep of the road and repayment to the creditors came from 5 tolls. George & James Oliver acted as Clerks to the Trust in the mid-19th century (also called ‘Scotch Dyke’).

Scots Greys (skots-gráz) n. regiment that amalgamated to form the Royal Scots Dragoons Guards in 1971. William Robertson, quartermaster of the regiment, was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. At the election of 1835 a troop of these dragoons was sent to Hawick to try to keep the peace.

Scots Law (skots-law) n. legal system of Scotland, based on Roman legal ideas, where legality is decided by interpreting fundamental principles rather than appealing to precedent. There are also many differences with the English system in the naming of court officials etc.

Scots pound (skots-pownd) n., arch. a former unit of currency used in Scotland. It was fixed at \(\frac{1}{12}\)th of a pound sterling at the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and ceased to be a legal unit following the Union of the Parliaments in 1707. However, it continued to be used in practice for some time after that, particularly in rural areas. Hawick Parish records made the switch to sterling only in 1753.

Scotstoun (skots-toon) n. farm in Peeblesshire, on the Tarth Water, just to the north-east of Kirkurd. This appears to have been an early property of the Scots, before they moved to Buccleuch and Branxholme.

Scott (sko’) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded around 1240 when Christian, daughter of Adam FitzGilbert, donated the lands of Inglistoun to the Chapel of St. Mary, with some rights reserved to the men of Blyth, as they had in the days of ‘Adam the Scot and William the Bald, of good memory’. Since these lands were adjacent to those of Kirkurd and Scotstoun (held from early times by the family that became the Scotts of Buccleuch), it is possible that he was an early ancestor. His name is given in Latin as ‘Ade Scoti’. Adam (d.c.1255) referred to as the deceased previous owner of lands in Gullane (East Lothian) which were granted to the church there sometime between 1213 and 1255. Adam (13th C.) listed on the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. No other information is given about him, so it is not known if he is associated with later Scots. Adam (13th C.) witness to a charter that the Conyns had for lands in Kirkintilloch (Dumbartonshire) in about 1277. Adam (13th C.) messenger who was paid, along with Henry Pykard ‘cokin’, for delivering letters from King Edward I to members of the Scottish court in 1296/7. His connection to other Scots is unknown. He could be the same man as ‘Adam Skot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, perhaps at the time a prisoner in Newcastle Castle. He could also be the Adam recorded in ‘Hilderton’ church in 1279, admitting that he was a mercenary soldier and had renounced the King. Adam (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in the Parish of Linton in Peeblesshire, around 1300. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. Probably the same man was also witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. It is unclear how he might be connected to other contemporary Scotts, but Sir Walter was also on the 1438 panel, and William and his son John were witnesses to the 1441 sasine. Perhaps the same Adam was witness to the 1448 sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat, between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Simon of Routledge; the other names appearing beside his are Stephen of Castletlaw, Walter and Richard, who were probably near relations. Adam ‘Ade’ (15th C.) Ranger of Ettrick Ward according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1456, where his name is listed as ‘Atkino Scot’. He is recorded as Ranger several times from 1457 to 1467, with Sir Walter as Master Ranger; Sir Alexander (of Howpasley) took over by 1469, and David also served as a Ranger for Ettrick in the 1460s. It seems unlikely (because of the age) that he could be the later son of Sir Alexander, but he was surely a close relative, possibly an otherwise unrecorded brother of Sir Alexander and son of Sir Walter. Perhaps the same Adam witnessed a charter in 1441 for the lands of Cessford and was on the panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Adam (15th C.) Bailie of Rutherford, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1477 and 1481. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots. Adam of Annelshope (d.bef. 1502) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, and brother of Walter of Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Ade Scot’, one of the heirs of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in a charter for the Barony of Branxholme in 1484. He is probably the ‘Ada Scot’ who witnessed a document in 1482 in which Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton to David Scott of Branxholme; Robert was also a witness, probably his cousin of Whitchesters. Possibly the same Adam was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. And probably the same Adam was witness to the charter granting Robert of Allanhaugh the Lordship of Whitchesters in 1484/5 and his resignation of the lands almost immediately after. He may be the Adam who was witness to a sasine for the lands of Boomraw in 1487, along with James and several local landowners. He may be the ‘Ade Scot’ who was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne for the document leasing his lands in 1488. He was Warden of Ettrick Ward in the period 1489–92, responsible for administering the Crown lands there, and so his name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for Scotland. He took over the office from Walter, who had taken over from William (surely all closely related). In 1488 he had the farm of Caacrabank for his fee and in 1490 and 1492 he leased ‘Garlischeuch’. He also let the farm of Gamescleuch in 1492. After 1492 he is recorded being in arrears as former Ranger for Ettrick. In 1494/5 he was ‘de auldimnis hop’ when standing as surety for Bernard Shortreed in Essenside, ‘in auldimnischop’ when he was surety for John Burnet, resident of Tushielaw, and ‘in auldimnischop’ when he was surety for Oliver Lauder with Thomas Turnbull and for William Peacock in Buccleuch. He was additionally surety, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, in 1494/5 for John in Erncleuch. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as ‘in Auldimmischop’ when he was allowed to pay a fine for stealing 2 horses from the servants of the Earl of Angus at Hermitage; Walter of Howpasley was caution for him. Later he was allowed to compound for the crimes of: stealing the 2 horses at Hermitage; resetting the ‘traitors of Leven’; resetting Edmond and Fergus Storic; resetting Robert Brydon, John Frissel and John Pattinson, particularly when they plundered Wolfhope; stealing 5 cows from ‘rafftrehop’; stealing 16 cows from Deuchar; and common theft before the date of his compounding. Walter of Howpasley was again his surety. John was allowed to ‘compone’ along with him in 1494/5 and was presumably a close relative. In the Treasurer’s accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was recorded as brother of Walter of Howpasley in 1499 when he was assigned Tushielaw for 3 years. He was also assigned Gamescleuch and Corsecleuch in 1499, and still had to pay arrears as the former Ranger of Ettrick Ward. He is probably the Adam, brother to Walter of Howpasley, who was recorded as tenant in Borthwickbrae in 1500. He was referred to as deceased in the 1502 Exchequer Rolls. He may be the Adam recorded as ‘Ade Scot’ along with his son Walter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for Ettrick Forest. Adam (15th C.) recorded in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme, where he was bequeathed 30 sheep. He was listed as ‘Ade Scote’ and may be the same as one of other contemporary Adams. Another man, listed as ‘Ade Scote, clando’ (probably ‘lame’) was given 6 sheep. Adam ‘Crooked Adam’ (15th C.) son of Thomas of Bush. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aires held in Selkirk; his nickname was ‘croesus’, which could be ‘corvus’ or perhaps ‘curvus’. Probably the same man was recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh; he was surety for Thomas Clommell in Minto and recorded being ‘in wolfhop’, which may well be the Wolfhope in Ewesdale (but it could be the one near Tushielaw or Wolfehopelee in Rule-water). At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502 he was ‘in Wolfhop vocatis curvius adam’, i.e. called ‘Crooked Adam’ when he had remission for the rape of Christine, daughter of David Hope, as well as for the theft of a horse from Stobo. Adam in Annelshope also had remission for the rape of Christine Hope, and hence was presumably a different man Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aiire in Selkirk in 1502 as ‘Adam scot in aldinershope’ when he had remission for a series of crimes. He was probably associated with Annelshope (although it is also possible that Eldinhope is meant); this could be a transcription error for ‘aldinnshope’. He may be the same man as Adam of Annelshope, although he died at about the time of this court. His remission included the following: resetting, supplying and intercommunicating with Archibald Armstrong and David Scott ‘de Francia’ as well as other ‘traitors of Leven’ and Liddesdale in their rieving; resetting John Kay ‘his brother’, particularly the plundering of 80 cattle and goods from Dryhope; for burning and pillaging places on the Borthwick and Ale Waters belonging to Walter Ker of Cessford; resetting Gilbert Scott, particularly in the theft of 2 horses; the ‘hamesukin’ of Walter Scott of Tushielaw; and the rape of Christine, daughter of David Hope. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley, who would be his brother if he was indeed Adam of Annelshope; Adam in Wolfhope also had remission for the rape of Christine Hope, and hence was presumably a different man. He was also ‘in aldinnishop’ in 1502 when Walter of Howpasley was surety to present him at the next Justice-aiire in Selkirk. Perhaps the same ‘Ade’ was listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being in ‘Hawchesteris’, probably Highchesters near Hawick. He had remission for resetting 120 sheep, which had been stolen by the Laird of Minto from George Rutherford at Longnewton and ‘Sandystanis’. His crimes also included associating with rebels Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William Scott. At the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission from the King for these crimes, with George of Whames as his surety. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when it is said that he had a horse and 23 sheep stolen from him at Kershope. John in Whitehaugh has remission for these crimes. Probably the same Adam ‘native of Kershoup’ (presumably in Ettrick) is recorded as deceased in 1533 when his son William assigned John Murray of Kershope to seek restitution for the goods ‘violently stolen’ by Robert Scott of Howpasley and Philip Scott in Dryhope. Adam of Hermiston (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of Synton in 1494, where he was ‘Adam Scot de Hirdmanstoun’. In 1500 he was one of the witnesses to an instrument of resignation by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was also on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; he is recorded as ‘Adam Scot of Hirdmenstone’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Robertson (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aiire in Selkirk in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. He presented William (with no distinguishing location given) to the court as suitor for his lands (presumably of Robertson) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurs later in 1503. It is unclear how he might fit with the other Scotts of Robertson. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1522 when he had a dispensation from Thomas Ker, Archdeacon of Teviotdale, to marry Elizabeth Scott. This was necessary because they were within the 4th grade of consanguinity. Adam of Clarilaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd and Hassendeane. He is mentioned in a charter of 1521 as being cousin of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The later David in Clarilaw may have been his son or other close relative. In 1526 he was tenant in Clarilaw when he was listed on the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their attack on the Earl of Arran; ‘William Scot, and George Gledstanis, his brother’ are listed right after him (they may have been step-brothers or brothers-in-law), as well as (separately) William in Hassendeane. His eldest son was Robert of Clarilaw. He may be the same as the Adam of ‘Nethirmanis of Hassinden’ whose son Robert had a ‘precept of clare constat’ (meaning he was probably deceased) in 1550/1 for the lands of Little Drinkstone. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant of Harwoodhill in 1502 when his son Patrick had remission for being involved in several thefts of sheep. Adam (d.1530) of Tushielaw, probably son of David of Tushielaw and grandson of Alexander of Howpasley (although some accounts place him as son on Alexander). Called ‘King of the Thieves’ or ‘King of the Border’, he was a powerful chief in the early 16th century. He may be the Adam ‘in Turchelaw’ recorded paying a fine in the Exchequer Rolls of 1499. In 1502 he is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk with remission for resetting several men (namely John Young, ‘Park’, John Carrick called ‘Ginkin’, Lawrence Porteous, ‘Valance’) who had stolen many sheep from Manor and Hundleshope. In a second record of the signature of remission he is ‘in aldinmishope’ for the same resetting of John Young, Lawrence Porteous, ‘Ginkin’, ‘Park’ and ‘Valance’. In a separate case at the same Justice-aire he was ‘in tuschelaw’ when he had remission for a list of crimes; this was at the same court sitting as for Adam ‘in aldinershope’, so they must have been different men. The crimes he was forgiven for were: stealing 10 horses from Peebles, in company with the Laird of Minto; stealing a cow and money from Selkirk; resetting Lawrence Porteous, especially in the theft of 4 cows; resetting William Smith and Hugh Armstrong, especially the theft of 50 sheep from Single; plundering of ‘aldinhope’ with the Littles of Eskdale; resetting Lawrence Porteous, especially in the theft of 100 sheep from Tweedsmuir and 100 sheep and 4 horses from Stobo; resetting John Young, especially the theft of 40 sheep from Manor; and resetting John Carrock, ‘Jinkin’, especially in the theft of 140 sheep from Manorhope. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley, who was also ‘of Tushielaw’ and perhaps his uncle. He is recorded (as ‘Ade’) in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1503 receiving remission for his rieving crimes, and in 1505 he received remission for breaking out of prison in Edinburgh Castle. He received a charter for the lands of Tushielaw in 1507. In 1512 he is recorded as one of those involved in the feud between supporters of Lord Maxwell and Lord Crichton of Sanquhar. The lands of Gilmanscleuch, ‘Covinelaw’ and Gamescleuch were feued to him in 1510. The ‘ferrers’ of Corsecleuch, Cacrabank, Tushielaw and ‘Covinelaw’ were remitted to him in 1513. He is one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace on the Border in 1524/5. In 1525 he and the Laird of Henderland were warned to find pledges. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. In 1528 he was witness to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is also recorded in late 1528 as witness to the document recording the decision over the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh. The Sir Walter ‘of Tushielaw’, who was nearly contemporary with him was probably his uncle Sir Walter of Howpasley. He was arrested along with William Cockburn of Henderland, as an example to other thieves of the time. He was supossedly hanged by James V’s men on an old ash tree in front of his stronghold, although he was probably actually executed in Edinburgh. The charges against him included taking ‘blackmail’ from ‘John Brovne in Hoprow’, ‘Andrew Thorbrand and William his brother’, ‘the poor Tenants of Hopcaizow’ (possibly Howpasley) and ‘the Tenants of Eschescheill’. He was beheaded and his head placed on top of the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. Among his descendants were probably the Scotts of Horsleyhill, who were important in Hawick in the 17th century. His sons Robert, John and William are also listed in the 1526 remission. He was succeeded by William, presumably his son; this could be the William who was tenant in Cacrabank in 1541, along with ‘his moder’, who would therefore be his widow. Adam (16th C.) listed in the 1526 pardon to a large number of Borderers for taking in part in an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in Falside’ (probably the lands in the Ettrick valley), and so could have been related to the Scotts of Kirkurd and Hassendean, who held those lands. His brothers Alexander and William are also listed. In 1531 he witnessed a precept of sasine between Mark Ker in Selkirk and Patrick Murray of Falahill. He was ‘in Fawsyd’ in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme. Probably the same Adam witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1532/3, a court case in 1534 and a pledge in 1534/5. He is probably the Adam ‘of Fausid’ who was deceased in 1539 when his son Thomas was warned to remove himself and his tenants (along with those of Robert of Howpasley) from the lands of Falside, belonging to Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. He may be related to the Adam who was recorded claiming the tenancy of Falside in Ettrick in 1541. Adam (16th C.) witness in 1526/7 to a document relating to the tenancy of the lands of Harden. He was brother of Simon of Fenwick. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Scotts, with one possibility being Adam of Tushielaw. Adam of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably son of either William or Robert of Hassendean. He was Laird of Burnfoot (and probably also Burnhead) in Teviotdale (as opposed to Ale). He may be the Adam of Newhall.
who witnessed a charter relating to Harden in 1526/7. He is recorded in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott; the others who agreed to the bond were David, son of Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with William of Harden and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was among 10 Scotts and an Elliot who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was listed among the Scotts who were involved in breaking down the doors of the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking for Sir Peter Cranston. They were all later bound over not to harm Cranston. His son William is also listed, and appears to have died before him. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton. This presumably means he married a daughter of Robert of Synton and Stirches. In 1531 he, his brother-in-law and Walter Veitch had a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. Also in 1531, John, sergeant in Selkirk, read a royal proclamation that while he was declared a fugitive at the insistence of William Veitch in Yair for 'not delivering to him as tutor to Walter Vaych his bruder sone', since he had now delivered to William Veitch the house of North Synton, he was no longer 'at the horn'. Adam 'Ade' (16th C.) listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1539 'in Qhihoup' as witness to a transaction between Scott of Buccleuch and Douglas of Cavers. He was also recorded in 1549 as being 'in Qhihioip' when he was one of the first in a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complaining that their lands had been raided by the Kers in the previous year. In 1550 he was a witness to a lease granted by the curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme) to his mother, signed at Branxholme; he was there 'Adame Scott in Qhihoup'. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. His lands were probably Whitehope Adam (16th C.) younger son of Michael of Aikwood. In 1552, along with his son Adam, he sought suspension of an act of ecclesiastical cursing by the Vicar of the Forest. Adam of Allanhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was also ‘Adam Scott of Alanehanche’ in about 1557, when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Ringwodhat’. Although it is unclear, he does not appear to have been the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time, and so was possibly brother of the Laird (perhaps William), or perhaps from an earlier branch of Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is also recorded in 1562 as one of the relatives of the minor Sir Walter of Branxholme to whom letters were sent to arrange the selection of guardians. In 1564 he was listed (first) among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Allanhaugh. He could be the Adam (with brother William) listed right after Robert of Allanhaugh in the 1526 pardon for a large number of Borderers assisting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran; in this case it may even be that he and William were both brothers of Robert of Allanhaugh. He is probablt the Adam who was deceased in 1582 when his sons William and David acknowledged the return of ‘sevin peces of evidentiis all writtin in parchement’, which were delivered by David to Walter of Goldielands ‘in keping of before’ in the presence of William of Tushielaw; presumably these were documents relating to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, which unfortunately do not survive. In 1585 there was a bond signed (in Selkirk and Hawick) between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh, to settle a feud that existed between them, arising from the death of David (son of the deceased Adam of Allanhaugh) and Hob Dalgleish (Sir Walter’s servant at Braidhaugh); the bond mentions other sons of his, making it clear that he was not closely related with Robert of Allanhaugh, who was Laird at that time. Adam of Bonnington (d.bef. 1607) son of Robert, together with whom he first acquired the lands of Bonnington near Peebles in 1552, from the Wylie heiresses. His older brother had acquired Rysholm (through their mother), but died in 1549. He gained Wamphray from his mother, but (along with his father) sold it in 1549. It was said that in 1547 he acted as a guide for English raiders to burn Lochwood Tower, which belonged to the Johnstones. He was mentioned along with his father in a charter involving lands in Peeblesshire in 1557/8. In 1561/2 he resigned to his superior his lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig; he signed ‘wt my hand at the pen led by me’. He is probably the Adam ‘of Vamfra’ who in 1562 witnessed transactions in Selkirk for Robert of Howpasley and for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several Scotts and others of sheep stealing. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands in 1572. In 1579/80 he witnessed an instrument in Selkirk and another relating to lands in Ashkirk (along with his son Walter). He had a court case with Robert of Haining in 1580 relating to the lands of ‘Elestoun’ that had formerly been in his possession. George of Synton also had a case in 1580 against his claims on ‘Flistoun’ (near Melrose), with him being unable to show any titles to these lands, and also said to have been put to the horn. However, he witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. In 1580/1 he complained that the Bailies of Selkirk had wrongly apprehended a man called Taylor. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Also in 1581 he was in dispute with Robert of Haining over 6 chalders of grain, where he was supported by Scotts from from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmancescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley, with his ‘bynadaris’ being William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he received sasine for ‘Maldishaeucht miln’, with his natural son Robert as one of the witnesses and acknowledged receipt of the redemption money from Patrick Murray of Falahill, with his sons Robert and James among the witnesses. He was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590 (although perhaps drawn up earlier). From a document in 1564/5 it appears that his wife’s name was Helen Tweedie; the marriage was in 1551 and she was daughter of James Tweedie of Drumelzier. There is mention in 1565 of the deceased Katherine Scott, Lady Bonnington, suggesting that he married a 2nd wife. His children included: Simon, who succeeded to ‘Bonynoun’ in 1607, but was already called ‘of Bonnington’ in 1602; John, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596 and was on a raid in 1602; Thomas, who assisted his brother Simon in a raid on ‘Caidmure’ in 1610; and Adam, recorded in 1616. His sons Simon, John and Adam were all pursued by the Scotts of Harden for the murder of Walter Scott in Eskenside. Adam of Deephope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when he was to enter several men into ward in Edinburgh. This was along with Sir Walter of Branxholme and Sir Walter of Birkenside. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Deephope. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘Adame Scot of Lochahaucht’ when he witnessed the ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick in which Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Al lanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. All the other witnesses were quite local, but it is unclear where ‘Lochahaucht’ might have been. Adam of Gledstains (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Biewlie. The others were mainly Turnbuls of Rulewater, suggesting that his lands were possibly ‘Little Gledstains’ there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). He was tenant at Mosspeeble, and his son John is also listed. He is probably related to Nichol who was in Mospeeble in 1590. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 in ‘the Wraa’ among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been from Wrae and was probably related to Gavin who was from the same place. Adam of Todshawhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Walter of Todshawhaugh who witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. He is listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Aslo in 1581 he witnessed a dispute between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundleshope. He also signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in 1594 when his son Walter was on a long list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. William of Todshawhaugh, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, was surely closely related to him. Adam (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Ornestoun’ when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas of Crook. William Scott and Robert Scott, both ‘in Hawick’ were also involved. He was surely related to John in Ormiston, who is recorded in 1589. Adam (Adie the Peck) (d.1601) recorded in 1598/9 among ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William Elliot of Falnash when there were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of ‘Corsetburne’ (in Lothian). His name appears as ‘Adie Scott, called the Pek’ and his son (with no forename given) is also listed. There were further complaints from Sir James Sandilands, that he was among a group of Armbrongs, Elliot and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. In a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. He was hanged in Edinburgh in 1601 for a list of crimes. This included cattle and sheep stealing from several farms around the Lothians, as well as Nether Whitlaw (owned by Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre), the murder of at least a couple of men and taking the Minister of Lyne prisoner. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of ‘Sandy’s Ninian’), these being 2 of the last ‘rievers’. He is also recorded (presumably in error) as ‘Adie Steill, alias callit the Peckit . . . one of the maist notabil thieffes that evir raid’. He may be the Adam ‘little Peck’ listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; John ‘the Tinkler’ and Andrew ‘the Breadie’ were also listed. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1598 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him, meaning he was not among the Scotts for whom Buccleuch was considered chief (and hence he may have been from Ewesdale, for example). Adam of Alton (d.1604) son of Robert of Alton. In 1580 he gave his consent for his father to give up the annual rent of lands in Hassendeanburn for a loan from Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He is recorded as ‘Adame Scott sone to Robert Scot of Auldton’ in a long list of those given ‘respite’ by the King for the 1593 murder of Lord Maxwell, Warden of the Marches at Dryfe Sands. He succeeded his father Robert in 1594. Scott of Satchells says he was in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he was also ‘of Alton’ on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by the then Baron, James Cunningham. He died shortly afterwards and had 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Robert, ‘vocat de Altoun’. In 1606 his son Walter was served as his heir to the lands of ‘Littill Dombstoun’ (probably meant for ‘Drinkstone’) in Chamberlain Newton, as well as heir to his grandfather Robert in the lands of East Hassendean (thus establishing the connexion between these 3 generations of Scotts of Alton). He must have been related to the ex-Bailie of the same name recorded in 1612. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Philip of Dryhope, and probably son of John of Dryhope. In 1699 William Sinclair of Roslin was surety for him, that he would ‘keep the King’s peace’. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Bonnington and son of Adam. He was accused in 1616–17 of accompanying his brothers Simon and John, together with ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane when Walter ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick. Adam (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert, he was brother of William in Burnhead. He married Bessie, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. However, he appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his other brother, Robert. It is possible he was the ‘Adame Scot, called of Burnehead’ recorded in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Bailie Adam (16th/17th C.) ex-Magistrate of Hawick, who was involved in the incident of 1612 in which the town challenged the authority of the Baron regarding the town’s ability to impose taxes. He was also mentioned as Bailie in a murder case in the same year. His son James may have become an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1615. Rev. Adam (d.bef. 1625) minister of Hawick Parish from 1612 until at least the end of 1623. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1607 and became minister at Minto in 1608. He may well have been related to a local branch of the Scotts; his father was probably Walter, a merchant of Edinburgh. He was translated from Minto and presented to Hawick Parish by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in August 1612. He was recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1622 (it may be that at this time the minister was also schoolmaster, or it may be that he was serving temporarily in this role). The circumstances of his death are not recorded, but he must have been relatively young. After his decease he was succeeded as minister by Robert...
Cunningham. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter ‘in Slak’ recorded in 1620 along with William ‘of Slak’ and Andrew, surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. They may have been associated with Catslack. Probably the same Adam, brother of Walter in Catslack was recorded in 1599 among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Adam of Burnfoot (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 along with other Scotts when they were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Know. The other Scotts were from Midshiel and Hawick, and he paid the 1000 merks caution to ensure that Adam, son of Walter of Midshiel did not molest Thomas Turnbull of Knowe or others there. He is recorded as being ‘of Burnfitt’ in 1643, when his lands in Hassendean Parish (presumably Burnfoot) were valed at £312. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot, but he may have been a tenant of Burnfoot, rather than Laird. Adam of Shaws (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He is probably the son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch who was served heir to his brother William in 1647. He had at least 4 sons: James, who succeeded; Adam in Deiloraine, who purchased North Bowhill; Scott of Grassyard; and Francis, a shepherd mentioned by Scott of Satchells. His lands were presumably Shaws, between the Ale and Ettrick valleys. He was described as ‘in Schawis’ in 1670 when his eldest son James married Marion Scott of Shielswood. Adam ‘Wester Adam’ (17th C.) smith of Hawick who was ordered to pay a fine of 100 merks for failing to appear at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the Adam, smith in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Adam, smith, was mentioned in the Burgh Records of 1640, when there was a dispute between him and Thomas Deans; Thomas claimed that he had been promised payment of various sorts from him (presumably for being a servant), including money, a pair of shoes, oats, barley and clothing. Adam ‘in Yairliside’ (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a horse in the Town Book in 1641. His location was a variant of Earlsdie, and he may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Francis (b.1635), Jean (b.1642), Janet (b.1649), George (b.1652) and Walter (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Gledstains and George (perhaps a relative). Adam (17th C.) married Margaret Douglas and had a son Robert baptised in Hawick in 1646. Perhaps the Isobel (b.1644), baptised to Adam and Isobel Claperton was also his child. Adam (17th C.) married Bessie Anderson and had a son Adam baptised in Hawick in 1645. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He was witness to a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds in Hobkirk Parish. His ‘servitor’ Walter Scott was also a witness, while this same or a different Walter was his son, who witnessed a sasine in 1659. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included Margaret (b.1650). Perhaps the Jane (b.1671), baptised to Adam and Janet Harkness was also his child. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill, along with William (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. He could be a descendant of Andrew, tenant of Todshawhill, listed as a ‘pensioner’ of Buccleuch. Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Dunlie in the parish of Cassiltoon’ (probably Dinlees on Hermitage Water) when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Appotside in Rulewater in 1656. Adam of Ashtrees (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when his lands in Southdean Parish were valued at £33. He may be the same as one of the other Adams. Adam of Galalaw (17th/18th C.) recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He must have been related to the later Adam of Galalaw. He was probably the Laird of Galalaw who witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme of Stiches in 1708. In 1709 his servant Robert Elliot had a child baptised. Also in 1709 his son Alexander witnessed (‘younger of Galalaw’) a baptism for Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He was a resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Esther, daughter of Rev. John Langlands and their children, baptised in Robertson, included: Alexander; John (b.1683); William (b.1685), probably of Brieryhill; and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ (his brother-in-law) and Robert (perhaps his own father or brother). He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms for other Scotts in Robertson Parish in 1686 and 1688 and a baptism along with Francis (perhaps the minister) in 1688. Adam (d.c.1695) described as ‘portioner in Hassendean’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same as ‘Adam Scott of Hassendene’ who is mentioned in 1637 as ‘younger’ of Hassendean and who in 1669 was served as heir to his father, Robert of Hassendean. He was probably the Adam ‘in Over Hassendean’ recorded in a deed of 1663. He was in turn succeeded by his son Robert in 1695. In 1692 he had a renewed lease with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Over Hassendean, ‘east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same’. Adam (d.c.1693) listed as ‘in Wood, in Abotroule parish’ when his will was recorded in 1693. It is unclear where this farm might have been. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford and their children included: Walter (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Robert and William, who were probably related to him. Adam of Burnfoot (17th C.) son of Walter, as recorded in a deed of 1673. He sold Burnhead to William Scott, tenant in Burnhead. He was one of the heritors accused of instigating the riot at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It seems likely he was the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for William (later referred to as ‘of Burnhead’) in 1686 and another for Robert in Burnhead in 1687. He was probably one of the men arrested following the riots of 1690; there is a warrant for the arrest of Adam and Robert Scott of Hassendean and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690, which may relate to him. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot who paid tax for 4 hearths in his house in 1694. In 1695 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington (probably a hangover from earlier wadsets between the 2 families). In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot. His eldest son was probably also called Adam. He is probably the Adam in Burnhead who married Grizel, sister of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1678; her will is recorded in 1687. He is also recorded as ‘in Burnhead’. He was also recorded as ‘in Burnhead’ in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in 1682. His children with Grizel Turnbull included: John (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and possibly James (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were John and William Scott (who were probably related to him). In 1686 he ‘had a bastard child baptised’ called James, with witnesses Walter Paisley and John Muir. His wife could be the ‘Lady Burnfoot’ whose servant Janet Liddell got married in Hawick in 1719. Adam of Bowhill (17th C.) purchased the lands of Langhope from John in 1691. Probably the same Adam ‘of Bouhill’ had a bond recorded with the Depute Sheriff Clerk of Selkirkshire in 1701. It is unclear how he was related to the others Scotts of Bowhill. Adam (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam (17th C.) cottar at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was surely related to other Scotts of Girnwood. Adam (17th C.) rented half the farm of Overhall in 1690 and 1692, with James renting the other half. The pair were also listed as residents at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. They were surely related. In 1694–98 he was renting half of Overhall, with the other half rented by Walter Scott, ‘Chief’, who was surely also related. He and Walter also served as cautioners for Margaret Scott, widow of James Scott, who was renting part of Borthaugh in 1696; this suggests that they were closely related. In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill. He paid to rent the Wilton mortcloth in 1704, but it is unclear who had died. Adam (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Riddell and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Margaret (b.1700); and John (b.1702). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Robson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1699); Bessie (b.1700); Helen (b.1702); Agnes (b.1704); and an unnamed child (b.1708). Adam (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Wauchope and brother of William, who was Chamberlain to Buccleuch. His mother was Janet, sister of James Scott, writer in Jedburgh. He witnessed documents for the Elliots of Harwood in 1688, 1692 and 1700. He was a tenant at Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased the farms of Stonedge and Howa from Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge; these were jointly valued at £856 12s. In 1724 he transferred these lands to his brother William, who was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was subject of a ‘decret arbitral’ in 1756. He was probably unrelated to the later Scotts of Wauchope. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Lauder in Hawick in 1706. They were both from Hawick Parish. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish, where he married Isobel Scott in 1708. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses William Henderson in Flex and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1710 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. He may be the Adam who married Janet Gordon in Robertson in 1703. Other children, baptised in Robertson, who could be his, include: Margaret (b.1707); Agnes (b.1713); Adam (b.1714). Adam (17th/18th C.) probably son of Adam of Burnfoot. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Burnfoot upon Teviot’. He is probably the ‘Archibald’ (assuming this is an error) of Burnfoot listed among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He may also be the Scott of Burnfoot listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1700.

He is probably the Adam who (along with Gavin Plummer) sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Cavers par.’ in 1701 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick Parish. This suggests he was a farmer in a part of Cavers bordering on Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Paterson, probably daughter or sister of miller James Paterson. Their children included: Janet (b.1701); and Barbara (b.1715).

Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant of Woll, recorded in baptismal records in 1717 and 1719. He was also tenant of Woll in 1718 when reported for disparaging remarks against the elders of Ashkirk Parish, calling them ‘skybalds’, and complaining that one of the elders had called him a ‘ragabast’ and Jacobite villain. In 1721 he was tenant in Woll in a protest at Selkirk Sheriff Court and also recorded in a tack for 1721 (recorded in 1723). He married Margaret Brown in 1716 and their children included: Walter (b.1717); John (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). Adam (17th/18th C.) Weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Bridges in 1705 and another for merchant William Black in 1721. He married Helen Launder in 1706 and their children included: Francis (b.1710); Adam (b.1713); James (b.1718); Helen (b.1722); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1713 were William Gardner and mason John Napier (who also witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine on the same day). He is probably also the weaver whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1721, with the witnesses being merchant James Aitken and cooper John Aitken. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel. He was recorded there in 1716 when he had an ‘instrument of irritation’ at Selkirk Sheriff Court. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Fauldshope, recorded in a protest at Selkirk Sheriff Court in 1722. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1729) and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Purdom and Walter Scott. Adam (18th C.) recorded as tenant in Kershope in Ettrick in 1731 when he sued Alexander Laidlaw, herd in Eldinhopeknow, for a debt. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in at least 1721–1735. He is probably the Adam who witnessed a baptism for David Renwick at Lees in 1725. He married Mary Scott in Wilton in 1720. Their children included: William (b.1721); Isobel (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Agnes (b.1728); Adam (b.1731); Mary (b.1733); and John (b.1735). The witnesses in 1721 were William and Adam Scott, in 1731 were John Scott and John Dryden and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Gledstains Scott in Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Helen (b.1730); and Francie (b.1733). Adam (18th C.) married Isobel Leyden in Cavers in 1728. Adam (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1723, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Marion (b.1724), James (b.1726) and John (b.1733). The witnesses in 1726 were James Gledstains and Robert Ker. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Gilmanscleuch in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Gledstains in 1727 and their children included: Helen (b.1730) and Francie (b.1733). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Cavers (who was from Hawick Parish) in 1734 and their children included: Isabel (b.1739); James (b.1744); and Adam (b.1748). Probably the same Adam, married to Agnes Cavers, also had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1736. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Tullie in Wilton in 1749. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Heap. The funeral for his wife is recorded in Wilton in 1749. Adam (d.bef. 1772) of ‘Tandlaw’ in Wilton Parish (Tandlaw probably), he is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1772, when his daughter Barbara married John Greig. He is probably related to the earlier Scott of Tandlaw. Adam (18th C.) weaver in Hawick.
He was recorded as ‘younger’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Wilson. He was probably related to (perhaps the son of) the earlier weaver of the same name. Probably the same weaver married Euphan Telfer and had a daughter Rebecca (b.1761), with the whole congregation as witnesses. If his wife’s name is also given as ‘Elizabeth’ and ‘Elspeth’, then other children are Jean (b.1757), John (b.1763), Francis (b.1765) and Sarah (b.1768). Adam ‘Goud Yeddie’ (18th C.) building contractor, probably the grandfather of Mrs. Armstrong of the Post Office. He was one of 2 contractors for the Hornshole Bridge, but gave up after an early accident brought down the framework on which the arch was to be constructed. He may be the mason in Hawick recorded in deeds at Peebles Commissary Court in 1760. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Halliday abd their children included: Margaret (b.1751); John (b.1756); Margaret (b.1759); and Adam (b.1762). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Nichol and their children included: Thomas (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1761). Adam ‘Lint Aidie’ (1723/4–98) flax merchant in Hawick. He married Helen Scott in 1750, the marriage being announced in both Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes; she died in 1795, aged 68. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish included: Adam (b.1751), the eldest son, dyer, gold lace maker and travelling merchant; Elizabeth (b.1753); Ann (b.1754); Thomas (b.1756), who may have been a minister; John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759). Additional children, baptised in Hawick Parish, were: Margaret (b.1764); Helen (b.1765); James (b.1767); Walter (b.1770); and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1765 were ‘Mr John Laurie, student’ and John Kedie, in 1767 were barber Francis (probably a relative) and Alexander Bunyan and in 1772 were the whole congregation. Adam (18th C.) shepherd in Upper Dalgleish. He is famous for his home-spun prayers, as described by the Ettrick Shepherd (who had an uncle who herded with him). Adam (b.1731) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Laird of Nether Banchester, where he was born. He became a planter at Montego Bay in Jamaica and married Mrs. Thorpe. His estate may be the one called St. James, referred to in 1800, with Adam Scott as the former owner. Adam (d.bef. 1797) tailor in Hawick. He married Janet Hardie in 1758 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: Robert (b.1758); Isobel (b.1761); Barbara (b.1764); Marion (b.1767); and Adam (b.1771). The witnesses in 1767 and 1771 were the whole congregation. Adam of Galalaw (18th C.) probably descended from the earlier Scotts of Galalaw. He was listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 being entered into the lands ‘in the old parish of Hassendean’, probably the farm in Wilton Parish just north of Hawick. He may be the Adam of Borthwickshiel who paid the window tax in Roberton Parish in 1748. He was given the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiel by Walter Scott of Harden in 1770, and passed this on to Francis (brother of Walter of Harden) in 1780. He is marked as owner of Borthwickshiel on Ainslie’s 1773 map. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax in Roberton in 1785. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1785–86. He was taxed (in Roberton Parish, presumably at Borthwickshiel) for having a male servant in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was probably father or brother of Elizabeth, who married George Pott. Adam (1751–bef. 1819) eldest son of Adam, flax merchant of Hawick, known as ‘Lint Aidie’. He was a dyer, gold lace maker, and later traveling merchant of Hawick, later moving to Sunderland. He married Jane (1751–1837), daughter of baker and farmer Thomas Kedie. Adam (18th C.) miller in Hawick. On the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘Mr Adam Scott, miller, Hawick Mills’; ‘John Scott, miller, there’ (possibly the miller at Hummelknowes at that time) is listed after him, and so may have been related. ‘John and Adam Scott in Hawick’, who paid the cart tax in 1791, may be these same 2 men. He married Esther Scott in 1754 and their children included: Ann (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); and Francis (b.1762). The witnesses in 1757 were Bailie Robert and merchant George (who may have been related), in 1759 were the whole congregation and in 1762 were Bailie Robert (again) and miller James (who may also have been related). Perhaps the same miller Adam also married Agnes Hamilton and had children: James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Esther (b.1773); Adam (b.1775); Janet (b.1778); Jane (b.1779); and Betty (b.1783, probably). The witnesses in 1773 and 1783 were the Associate Congregation. He is probably the miller whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Adam (d.bef. 1810) weaver in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Cairns and their children included: John (b.1773); Janet (b.1776); Adam (b.1777); Robert (b.1780); George (b.1782); Francis (b.1785); Isabel (b.1787); and Francis (again, b.1794). The witnesses in 1776 were the whole congregation. He may have been father of Adam, junior weaver, who is recorded in 1797. He was an already deceased weaver of Hawick in 1810 when his wife Betty Cairns died. It is possible he is the ‘Kill Dryds Adam’ whose death is recorded in 1805; if so, then he was surely related to weaver Robert, who had essentially the same nickname. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Thomas (b.1788) and Margaret (b.1790). Adam (18th C.) recorded at Scabcleuch in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Graham in 1793, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Adam (b.c.1770s) resident of Denholm recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, in 1795 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Nichol, who was from Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth, daughter to John, baptised in Hawick in 1764. The couple’s children, baptised in Ettrick, included: Elizabeth (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); Margaret (b.1800); John (b.1803); Janet (1805–65), married Adam Pringle in Roberton; Adam (b.1808); and Gideon (b.1812). Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whithope (in Roberton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He married Alison Brown and their children included: George (b.1783); and Thomas (b.1786). These baptisms were not entered into the Roberton Parish records until 1808. It is possible that his marriage was in 1777 in Melrose. Adam (b.c.1770) blacksmith at ‘Spinniesbank-End’ in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was living with his wife Margaret and his son Robert, who was also a blacksmith. He could be the Adam from Langhaugh who married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert, tenant in Blackburnfoot. Adam (b.c.1770s) servant at Deanbrae according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James was also listed and hence perhaps his brother. Adam (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Southdean in 1807. Adam (1782–1857) born in Hobbirk Parish, son of John and Isabella Blaikie. Like his father, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He was at Houdshall in 1818 and Priesthaughshiel in 1820 and 1823. He was recorded as a labourer at Houdshall in Cavers Parish in 1841, while in 1851 he is listed as a ‘Travelling Grocer’ at Reaknowe, and on his death certificate was a carrier. He married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Leithead, who was born in Kirkton and died at Sunnybank in 1865, aged 78; she was daughter of Gledstone Leithead and Helen Hall. Their children probably included: John (1811/2–35); Gladstone (1813/4–90); Helen (1815/6–30); Thomas (b.1818), who married Janet Davidson; William (1820–29), who died at Priesthaughshiel; Jenny (b.c.1821), who lived at Middlebie in Dumfriesshire; Charles (b.1823), who was a shepherd at Braidliehope in Castleton Parish; Walter (b.c.1827); William (again, b.c.1829), probably the gamekeeper living at Sunnybank in 1861; James (b.c.1832); and David (1834–35). Adam (b.c.1825), who moved to northern Scotland, then the Falklands and finally New Zealand was probably also his son. He died at Raesknoewe and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery, along with his wife and 4 of their children who died young. Adam (b.1777) weaver in Hawick, son of Adam. In 1797 he was recorded as ‘Junr. weaver’ among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; presumably his father was also Adam. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, in place of Gideon Scott from Teindside; but he was able to produce a document to prove that Gideon had in fact joined the regiment. In 1799 he was ‘Junr Weaver’ among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. Adam (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded as ‘Senior weaver’ in 1799 when he was listed on the ballot for the Militia. He was distinct from the junior weaver. Adam (18th/19th C.) servant at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Gray and their children included John (b.1809). Adam (18th/19th C.) clogger on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Adam of Ashtrees (18th/19th C.) son of John of Ashtrees and brother of Thomas of Peel. He had a sasine as heir to his father in 1780. He held Ashtrees according to the county valuation of 1788. He was succeeded by his son John, whose trustees sold the lands in 1855 to John of Riccalton (a cousin). Adam of Tullich, Loch Caron (1790–1865) son of John of Ashtrees and Isabel Rae. His father’s executors sold Ashtrees and it passed to a cousin. He farmed a large farm in West Ross-shire. He married Janet, daughter of James Hall of Sciberscross, Sutherlandshire. Their children were: John of Drynoch, Skye; James, who went to Australia; Sir Henry Hall; Thomas; Margaret; Anne; Jessie; Esther; and several other daughters. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margery ‘Reddoch’ and their children included Mary (b.1816) and John (b.1819). Adam (1796–1838) son of James, who was herd in Wauchope, Hobkirk Parish. He sailed to America in 1812, along with a sister and Thomas Lockhart. He may have stayed with relatives in Bovina, New York state before settling in Ontario, on the Otonabee River. There he built a saw and grist mill in 1818, the area becoming known as Scott’s Plains. It was remaned Peterborough in 1825. He was described as being a huge man, 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighing 260 pounds. He married Patricia Ann Mann and their children were Margaret, Adam, Jeanette, James, Walter and Elizabeth. A plaque on the grounds of the Adam Scott Collegiate and Vocational Institute records how he was the first settler in Peterborough. Adam (b.1798/9) cattle dealer who was living at Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was still at Wester Parkhill and described as an agricultural labourer. His wife was Catherine (or Christina) and their children included Walter, James, Adam, William, Robert, John and Christopher. He could be a descendant of Robert, who was at Wester Parkhill in the latter part of the 18th century. Adam (b.1816/7) born at Legerwood, Berwick, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 7 Sandbed. He was recorded as a grocer at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory, and was also listed as an insurance agent for Northern. He married Agnes Laing, and their children included: George Laing (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); David Laing (b.1846); Jane Margaret Mary (b.1848); and Agnes Helen (b.1850). Adam (b.1816/7) born in Melrose, he was a policeman in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at Forkins Police Station and listed as ‘1st Class Police Constable’. His wife was Agnes (from Eckford) and their children included Samuel, Janet, Adam, Isabella C., Andrew and William. Adam (19th C.) son of John and Margaret Turnbull. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth and her husband Alexander Burnet at Penchrise. He was shepherd at Shankendshields, being recorded there in 1861. In 1859 he married Jane, daughter of John Dalglish and Jane Smith. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Mervinslaw in 1841. Adam (c.1825–87) born at Priesthaughshiel, he was son of Adam and Jessie Nicholson (according to his death certificate). It seems possible that he was instead son of shepherd Adam and Janet Leithead. He worked as a shepherd and for some reason moved to northern Scotland, where in 1850 he married Mary Gillanders. He was listed at that time being from Killmallie Parish in Argyllshire, and then he settled in Contin Parish, Ross & Cromarty, where several children were baptised. Their children included: Adam (1850–1915), who died in Kincardine; John (1853–76), died in the Falklands; Annie Gillanders (1854–1944); Alexander Gillanders (1855–1931); William (1857–1927); James Gillanders (1859–1943); Kenneth Gillanders (1862–1949); Thomas (1864–1917); Charles Gillanders (1866–1923); Jessie Isabella (1868–76), also died in the Falklands; and Walter (1871–1914). In 1861 and 1871 he was a shepherd, coming from Hawick, working as a shepherd near Inverness. In 1873 he was employed by the Falkland Island Company and sailed south with his wife and 7 children. By the late 1870s the family had moved to New Zealand. He worked as a shepherd around Canterbury and died following a fall from his horse. Adam (1826–81) joiner in Hawick, son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He is probably the apprentice joiner listed at the East End along with Adam Smail in the 1841 census. He was listed as a joiner along with his brother Charles in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a master joiner, employing 4 people. His premises were on Bourtree Place, specifically on Munro’s Close. He was the first person in Hawick to ride a ‘velocipede’. In 1861 he presented to the Archaeological Society a silver coin of Edward II that he had found at Bourtree Place. He married Agnes Fleming (from Ancrum) and they had a son, Charles William. Adam (b.1828) son of Robert and Agnes, he was born in Wilton Parish, his father being farmer at East Boonraw. He himself was farmer at Burnfoot on Ale. In 1861 he was farming 800 acres there, and employing 6 people. He married Elizabeth Anderson (from the Burnfoot on Ale family) in 1852 and their children included: Thomas Anderson (b.1853), who emigrated, but returned; Robert (b.1855); Agnes (b.1857); Alexander Miller (b.1858); Adam (b.1860); David F. (b.1863), settled in Colorado; Sybella Fotheringham (b.1865), also in Kansas; William (b.1867); Ebenezer Anderson (1869–93); Elizabeth (b.1871); Charles Anderson (b.1875); and John Marcus (b.1877). Most of the family emigrated to America, settling in Pottawatomie County, Kansas, where the last 3 children were born. Adam (d.1900) blacksmith at Yarrow Feus.
for 46 years. He took part in all activities in that district and was known as the ‘Provost of Yarrowford’. Adam (19th/20th C.) Hawick builder responsible for most of the stone-work at Stiches House, completed in 1902. There is a photograph of his work force outside the house. He may have been the same A. Scott who was Burgh Assessor around 1890. He may also be the Adam whose daughter Agnes was Cornet’s Lass in 1899. Adam (1874–1954) son of builder John and Margaret Inglis. He was a mason in Newcastleton, living at 1 Union Street. He married Agnes Dixon, who died in 1952, aged 80. Their children included: John Dixon (1908/9–19); and Margaret Inglis (‘Peggy’, 1911–19). They are buried in Et-etleton Cemetery. Agnes ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’ nee Murray (b.1500s) daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. She married William, younger of Harden in 1611. The romanticised version of the story involves the young Scott being captured in a skirmish, and choosing to marry the ugliest of Murray’s daughters in order to escape the gallows. In fact the true story is preserved in 2 detailed wedding contracts, making it clear that the marriage was a well-planned arrangement. She was still a minor at the time, and the contract involves many details about lands for female heirs, etc. The dowry had the value of £7,000. Her name is signed ‘Agnes Morraye’. Her eldest son, also Sir William, succeeded to Harden, while her 2nd son became Sir Gideon of Highchester. She is celebrated in a sculpture unveiled at Elibank in 1999. Presumably there was some basis for the characterisation of her physiognomy. Agnes (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when she was owed for her annual fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. Agnes (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Bessie were served heirs to the ‘fair grandshers’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (17th C.) convicted in Hawick in 1695 of bleeding Robert Scott ‘by thrusting her hand in his mouth, and ryveing out of his cheiks’. Agnes ‘Nans’, nee Noble (18th/19th C.) mother of James, schoolmaster at Yarrow and later occupant of Sillerbuthall. She was described (by Rev. James Russell) as ‘quite a character; kind, active, economical’. Her husband’s name is unknown. She lived with her son at Yarrow (presumably meaning she was widowed), and had a very high opinion of him. She was in charge of the boarders, of whom there were as many as 30 in the small house. Agnes (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1811 when she witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of James Sanderson and Isabel Scott (who may have been a relative, such as her sister). It was unusual for a woman to act as a baptismal witness. Perhaps the same Agnes witnessed baptisms for weaver Charles Scott in 1826 and 1828. Agnes née Cook (b.1805/6) from Roberton, she was an innkeeper and grocer, listed at about 17 High Street on the 1851 census. She was also listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow, with children Janet and Margaret, born in Midlothian, and also living with her mother, Janet Cook, from Cavers, and sister Mary Cook. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Ailmer of Molle (12th/13th C.) recorded in about 1220 when along with his wife Christian he gave an oxgate of land in Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey. His wife was a daughter of Isolda, who was daughter and co-heiress of Anselm of Molle. Several families seemed to have concurrently held lands of Molle (around the modern Morebattle), making it hard to establish clear familial relationships. Nevertheless it seems very likely that he was closely related to Richard Scott ‘de Molle’ (and ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch), who married Alice, daughter of Anselm de Molle. Alan (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Alan Skot’ when he was on an inquest at Peebles in 1303/4. He could have been related to the William, who held lands in Peeblesshire in 1296. Alan (14th C.) Burgess of Aberdeen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1362. Alan (14th/15th C.) Canon of Cambuskenneth who acted as a witness to charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. Alan (1434–1493) Hawick-based butcher. He was trained as a runner by Jimmy Bell of Ashkirk, and went on to win sprints in race meetings in the Borders and further afield. He had even greater success as a coach in the 1970s and 1980s. Albert (13th C.) merchant of Placentia (i.e. Piacenza in Italy), who is recorded in 1279. Edward I gave a letter of protection to ‘Albert Scot, and his partners of the Scotti’ for 3 years. In 1293/4 he is Albert ‘le Escot’, who along with John (presumably his brother or son) was given further protection ‘to trade in the realm during the King’s pleasure’. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Walter, son of Thomas, in the house of ‘Robert de

Prudewyk’. Alexander (13th C.) listed as ‘Al-isaunandre Scot of Perthayk’ in Lanarkshire when he paid home to Edward I in 1296. He could have been related to Sir Richard of Murieston. Alexander (13th/14th C.) ropemaker at Newcastle. Along with ‘Matilidis Scot’ and 3 other men, he is recorded in 1304 when payment was made for their wages in going to make ropes for Edward I’s castle at Stirling. Alexander (15th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch relating to the lands of Whitcheasters. This probably refers to the return for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Alexander. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as customs office in Perth in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1460s. He also rendered the accounts of the Bailies of Perth. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as tenant of several Crown lands in Kirkcudbrightshire and Wigtownshire in 1481. Probably a different Alexander leased part of ‘Ricardyangstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. Sir Alexander of Howpesley and Abington (d.1488) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of the first Walter of Buccleuch and brother of Sir David. He is sometimes said to be the same as Alexander, Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery, but this is a different man (although probably related). His father had gained the lands of Abington (in South Lanarkshire) in 1458/8, after being forfeited by the Douglases. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh for Robert Scott of Haining in 1463. In 1467/8 he was granted Howpasley by James III, the lands having previously been in the possession of the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies. In 1469 he and David together leased the farm of Mount Common. In 1470 he paid the redemption money for Midshields and Appletreehall to their superior William Livingstone of Drumry; the appended shield shows the ‘bend charged with two crescents and a mullet’ of the Scotts of Buccleuch, with another mullet on shield probably indicating cadet status. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Ettrick in the period 1469–5, taking over from Sir Walter of Buccleuch and having the lease of ‘Aldanishop’ (probably Eldinhope) for his fee; he was also stated in 1475 to be ‘de Kirkurde’. In 1471 he had a debt along with his mother and John Colquhoun, relating to Crown lands. In 1483 he was witness to a charter from Henry Wardlaw, giving the half barony of Wilton to John Scott of Thirlestane (who was probably a relative). He is recorded as dead in 1478 (an error for 1488 perhaps), when his son and heir Sir Walter of Howpasley had to pay William Inglis regarding the lands of Meiklehope. His sons Alexander and Adam are also mentioned in 1488. In 1493/4 (after he was deceased) his ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Midshields and Appletreehall were assigned by William Livingstone of Drumry to Alexander, Lord Home. His sons were: Walter of Howpasley; Adam, probably the Ranger of Ettrick Ward; Robert, who was ‘Tutor’ of Howpasley; William, Abbot of Melrose; Alexander, who had remission for thefts in 1502; and probably David of Tushielaw. ‘Sym Scot’ is probably another son (recorded in 1526 as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley). From the fact that his son Walter held the lease on Eldinhope along with his mother ‘Johannis Douglas’ from later in 1488 (probably after his death), with her name given as ‘Jonete Douglass’ in 1492, it seems that his wife’s name was Joan or Janet Douglas. He probably died at the Battle of Sauchieburn in June 1488. Alexander (15th C.) Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery and Clerk Register of Scotland. He is sometimes said to be the same as Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, but the 1488 charter for the Barony of Bruxholme proves this not to be the case (there he was the last witness, while the charter itself refers to Alexander, brother of Sir David of Buccleuch as being deceased). However, it seems likely that he was also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is possible he is the Alexander, from the Diocese of St. Andrews, who notarised the 1464/5 sasine of Kirkton Mains and Flex for William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is probably the royal clerk who witnessed charters in the Glasgow cartulary in about 1473 and 1476. In the 1470s he received an annuity from the custom of woolen cloth in Edinburgh. He was listed as Rector of Wigton, Clerk Register and auditor many times in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1480s. He is ‘clerk of the Register’ in 1482/3 when he witnessed a document for Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus. In 1483 he was Canon of Aberdeen and Clerk Register when he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Errol. And in 1483/4 he witnessed a charter for Alexander Home of that Ilk. In May 1488 he was Rector of Wigton and Clerk of the Rolls and Register for the charter regranting the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas. And in the same month he had the same titles when he witnessed the charter for the resignation (and regranting) of the Barony of Branxholme. In 1491 he was witness to a ‘procuratory of resignation’ involving Ruecastle. He also witnessed a large number of charters not relating to the Borders for James III in the period to 1483–8 and for James IV in 1488–9. He was still recorded as Rector of Wigton in 1496. His signature is recorded (and reproduced in the 1877 study of the accounts of the lord high treasurer of Scotland). Alexander (15th C.) given 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander (15th C.) tenant in Broadlee, probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. He was mentioned in 1493 and 1494/5 when his son John was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh. John ‘in braidlee’ was also mentioned, and was surely related (if not the same man as his son). Alexander (15th C.) brother of Robert of Whames. In the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically stealing cattle from the tenants of Robert Ramsay in ‘dene hous’ and stealing sheep from William Murray in Sundhope; his surety was Robert of Whitchester. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘hoptoun’ recorded in 1498 at the Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for riding Andrew Taylor’s mare to death, killing Thomas Elphinstone’s cow and hurting him, and striking a child of the Laird of Adamland. William Bell in Peebles was his surety. His home was probably associated with Hopetont Tower near Eddleston in Peeblesshire. Additionally in 1498 he had remission for the murder of Tom Robson, for wounding Walter Notman, for the premeditated wounding of Andrew Taylor and of William Allan in ‘mannisland’ a dn for ‘common oppression’ of the King’s subjects, with William Bell in Peebles again being his surety. 1502 he At the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 he had remission for the murder of Thomas Robson, with surety Robert of Allanhaugh. It is possible that he was the same man as Alexander, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, who was appointed Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534 and was progenitor of the Scots of Scotstarvit. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. He is recorded being ‘in Mouslaw’, which seems likely to be Muslee. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scots, but he could be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (15th/16th C.) son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Sir Walter of Howpasley and/or Stitches. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’ had a remission for dealing with the sheep stolen by him and Richard Armstrong (called ‘Skaw’) from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’; Walter Scott of Howpasley and Robert Scott of Stitches served as sureties. He was also recorded in 1502 receiving remission for several crimes: resetting Edmond Taylor; stealing a horse from Oakwood; stealing a horse from John in ‘Valis’; stealing 240 sheep, 10 cows, 3 horses and goods from David Pringle out of ‘Fechaine’; and stealing 200 sheep, 20 cows and goods from David Pringle’s tenants. His brother Walter of Howpasley served as his surety. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh who witnessed the letter of acquittal in 1510 between George Scott of Whames and Robert Muir of Rowallan. He is probably also the Edinburgh man who witnessed a document relating to lands in Leith held by Melrose Abbey in 1511. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Howford (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1508 when he was on an assize that convicted Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig. He was granted the feu of the middle steading of Langhope (also known as Howford) in 1510. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 as holder of the lands of Howford. It is possible he was the Alexander who in 1514 witnessed a dispensation to marry granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale for Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with the other witness being Thomas). It is unclear how he was related to other Scots. Sir Alexander (d.1513) of Has-sendean, said by Scott of Satchells to have been killed at Flodden, and to have been the ancestor of the Scotts of Haining, Stotstarvit, etc. He is also listed by Abercromby in his list of those slain at Flodden. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main Scott branches, although he could have been son of David of Hassendean (if he existed at all). Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Borders men who had respite in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. After him are listed Adam, Steven and William ‘brether to the said Alexander Scot’, with ‘brether’ being plural, suggesting all 3 men were his brothers. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts they belonged. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was in Newark. In 1526 there was a sasine for his wife, Janet Ker, for lands within Selkirk. The witnesses included Michael and David, who may have been related. Probably the same Alexander witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528 and purchased a tenement in 1529.
In 1530/1 he is recorded holding lands in Selkirk formerly belonging to Patrick Murray and in 1532 (along with Walter, tutor of Haining) sold a piece of land to Thomas Currer. In 1532 he confirmed the sale of his tenement and rigs to Thomas Currer. In 1534/5 he resigned a tenement in favour of his son and heir Thomas, who immediately sold it to James ‘Bradfutt’. He may be the Alexander who occupied a husbandland belonging to Patrick Murray, which was sold to Mark Ker in 1536. Perhaps the same Alexander sold a tenement to William Fletcher in 1541/2. It is possible he was the same man as Alexander of Palace. Sir Alexander (d.c.1542) Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts, since the name was quite common at the time. He may be the same Alexander who was presented to the vicarage of Glenholm in Peeblesshire in 1505. He was keeper of the Rolls of Exchequer for many years. He was paid by the Crown for copying rentals etc. in 1509. In 1528 he raised an action relating to crops at Ratho, and in 1529/30 he gave evidence concerning the Lordship of Dirleton, which he had possessed for 12 or 13 years. He was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts from at least 1526–42. In 1540 he founded a chaplainry in the church of Irvine. About the same time he had a letter of commendation from James V for his faithful service ‘in all sessionis, chekkeris, and register’. His name occurs frequently in the Exchequer Rolls in at least the period 1537–1540, including as witness to the accounts, for making payments in the name of the convent of St. Andrews and payments to the Dictator of the Rolls. James, who succeeded him as Provost of Corstorphine (and Auditor) was 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitcheasters. Sir Alexander (d.bef. 1540) possibly 2nd son of Robert of Allanhaugh, and grandson of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed by James V as Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534. His son Robert succeeded at an early age, and later acquired Knightspottie and other lands. Robert’s grandson John became the first Laird of Scotstarvit. It is possible he is the same man as Alexander in Hopetone, recorded in 1498 and 1502. Alexander of Palace (d.bef. 1545) son and heir of David, Vicar of Ashkirk. In 1532 he received sasine for his father’s lands in Selkirk; he was there referred to as being ‘of Paliss’. In 1532/3 he was ‘of Paliss’ he resigned the annual rents of a tenement in Selkirk to John ‘Mithag’. In 1535 he was ‘then called of Paliss near Ashkirk’ when an action was brought against him in Selkirk by Robert Paterson, Bartholomew Anderson and Archibald Brown. In 1535 he resigned 3 rigs of land to William ‘Boine’, but still held a tenement in Selkirk in that year. In 1540 and 1541 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when recorded in a dispute over money with William Fletcher. In 1541/2 he declared that he would never lease his rigs to William Burn. In 1545 his son John succeeded to the annual rent of a tenement of his in Selkirk; Andrew, Vicar of Cavers and William were among the witnesses. Alexander (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Kyrkhope’ (i.e. Kirkhope) in 1536. He witnessed the proclamation of a royal letter in Selkirk. Alexander (16th C.) recorded ‘in Hairheid’ in 1539 when he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He was also in Harehead in 1540 when he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of Steven. He is recorded selling a tenement of land in Hawick in 1558, this being one of the earliest known Hawick sasines. The land lay in the West-end, being bounded by James Brown’s land on the north, ‘the hill path on the south’, ‘Doniere Portussis’ on the east and the ‘Common Vennel’ on the west. This may have been similar to the land known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and ‘Bridgehaugh’ a century later. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkenside and Adam of Deephope. David, also ‘callit Huttitill’ was also listed (and surely his brother or similar), as well as ‘Blak Sande in Deiphop’. ‘Andishop’ may have been Annelshope or Eldinhope. He was surely related to ‘Rowie of Huttikill’, who was recorded in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle. There was a further caution by him and Mungo in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’, and the caution for Robert of Haining was confirmed later in 1581. This was concerned with the dispute between the Scotts and...
Scott Scott may have been Laird in 1671 when the land tax of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He entered into a teind agreement with the curators of Tushielaw (17th C.) eldest son of William and Grizel Scott. He obtained a charter for Tushielaw in 1663. He is recorded as ‘Andrew (Alexander) of Tushilage’ when his son Patrick was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, Edinburgh, in 1664. He may have been the Scott of Tushielaw who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He may have been Laird in 1671 when the land tax was paid in Dumfriesshire for ‘Lands pertaining to Tussilaw’. His son William succeeded when he was still a minor (and was soon after succeeded by Walter, the last Laird, who may have been his brother rather than his son). Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. He may have married Margaret Elliot (said to be the mother of Walter, the last Laird). Alexander (17th C.) ‘cottar’ at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander of Galalaw (17th C.) once owner of the lands called ‘Robertoun Cleughfoot’. If this was really in the 1600s, then he may have been father of Adam of Galalaw who was recorded around 1700. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. He was miller in Rulewater and then tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He had 2 sons: George, farmer in Falla; and Robert, who was also tenant at Roughheugh Mill. It may be that John in Hummelknowes was a 3rd son. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Laing and their children included Janet (b.1699) and Bessie (b.1703). Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of William ‘the Bellman’, who had been Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was himself Burgh Officer from 1696, replacing John Stewart. He may thus have overlapped with Alexander Young. He was stated to be a Burgess of Hawick at the time of his appointment, and eldest son and heir of the deceased William. This may have been a reappointment, since in 1693/4 he was listed as ‘town-officer’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the ‘officer’ listed as a witness (along with flesher Robert) for wright Andrew in 1700 (suggesting they were all related perhaps). He married Anna Amos (or perhaps ‘Aire’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1702); and Anna (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Alexander Young and John ‘Atkin’. He was listed as ‘officer’ in 1705 when his daughter Anna was baptised, and also when he witnessed a couple of baptisms himself. Perhaps the same Alexander was recorded being paid for ale given to the ‘cassars’ (i.e. road-layers) in 1721. Dr. Alexander (1691–1743) eldest surviving son of William of Thistlestane and Christian Don. He had his fathers goods deponed to him in 1727 and is also recorded in 1737 in records relating to the Scots of Buccleuch. These lands of ‘Thistlestain’ are probably those near Yetholm, and not the lands in the Ettrick, then belonging... to Francis, 6th Lord Napier. In 1729 he married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and grand-daughter of John Kerr of Frogden; his wife died in 1781. They had 11 children: Barbara (1730–76); William (b.1731) Edinburgh merchant; Christian (b.1732), who married Leith of Freefield; John (b.1733); Anne; James (b.1735); Rebecca; Agnes; Madeline or Magdalene (b.1739), who resided at George Square and lived to an old age; Charles (b.1740); and Walter (b.1742). His son and heir William inherited Chatto and Sunlaws and took the surname Scott-Kerr. Alexander of Synton (1690–1764) son of John, he succeeded when still a minor. His ‘curators’ (presumably during his minority) were John Erskine of Shielfield, Walter Scott of Woll, William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Scott of Todrig and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. There appears to have been a dispute over the boundary between his lands of Synton and Ashkirk with Groundstone owned by Scott of Buccleuch. He matriculated arms in 1711, a star between 2 crescents and a red rose, with motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme, younger of Stiches and his daughter Margaret. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for Hawick druggist Gideon and Susanna Scott. In 1744 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (along with his grandson), and also for Selkirkshire. In 1711 in Edinburgh he married Magdalene, daughter of Sir William Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Margaret (b.1713), baptised at Synton, probably the same daughter Margaret who married John Chisholme of Stiches in 1736; John (b.1713), who died before his father, but whose son Alexander succeeded to Synton; Elizabeth (b.1715), baptised at Synton; an unnamed child (b.1716); Gilbert (b.1717), baptised at Synton, recorded becoming an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1733; and Alexander (b.1719), baptised at Synton. The witnesses in 1715 were Elliot of Borthwickbrae (probably William, who married his sister) and John Riddell of Museele, in 1716 were Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (his wife’s brother) and Elliot of Borthwickbrae (again), and in 1717 were William Murray of Hadden and William Scott (his servant). Alexander of Thirlestane (b.1691) oldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane. He became the 3rd Laird of Thirlestane near Yetholm and was a physician. He married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and they had 11 children, including William Scott-Kerr (1731–82), who sold Thirlestane. Alexander of Galalaw (18th C.) son of Adam of Galalaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He may be the Alexander, ‘younger of Galalaw’ recorded as a baptismal witness (for Robert of Coldhouse) in 1709; he was thus son of Adam of Galalaw. He was ‘of Galala’ in 1718 when he presented for baptism in Hawick a child of his deceased brother William of Brieryhill. He was ‘of Galalaw’ in 1724 when he witnessed another baptism for Robert of Coldhouse. Although still being designated ‘of Galalaw’, it seems that he was no longer directly connected with those lands. The baptisms he witnessed suggest that he might have been related to Robert of Coldhouse. He may be the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for James Armstrong at Clarilaw in 1731. He and Robert of Coldhouse witnessed a baptism for William in Whitfield in 1744. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1756. He may be the Alexander who married Bessy Pott (who was from Cavers) in Roberton in 1749 and had children William (b.1750), Isobel (b.1752), Betty (b.1756) and Janet (b.1759). Alexander (18th C.) resident of Synton. He was recorded being ‘of Sinton junior’ in the 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He is marked as proprietor of Synton on Ainslie’s 1773 map. He had the house rebuilt around 1776. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1778 and 2 in 1779. In 1773 he married Eleanor (‘Nelly’ or ‘Helen’), daughter of Walter Grieve in Braugholme Park. Their children were: John, the only son, who succeeded: Catherine, who later inherited the estates; Mary; and Helen. Alexander (1729–1804) 7th son of Gideon, farmer in Laighope. His grandfather was John of Woll. He succeeded to his father’s tenancy of Ladhope in Yarrow. He paid the Horse Tax there in the period 1785–97 and the Dog Tax in 1797. In 1782 he married Christian, daughter of Mr. Scott, farmer in Eldinhope (perhaps Francis, who lived to be 94). Their children were: Gideon (1783–1844), who died without issue; Walter (1787–1863), who also died childless; William, who succeeded to the Ladhope tenancy; John (b.1795), who became a baker in Edinburgh, married a Miss Buchan of Peebles, and died without issue; Margaret; Jane; and Christian, who married John Scott of Over Deloraine. Alexander (c.1759–1835) younger son of George of Falla and grandson of Alexander, tenant of Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a draper in Jedburgh and a Baillie there for many years. He was known as an inventor, keen on astronomy, who encouraged James Veitch of Inchbonny and also knew David Brewster; he gave a mirror to Veitch that Veitch used to make his first reflecting telescope. He is also said to have spent a considerable amount of money on experiments with balloons and new kinds of explosives. In about 1794 he worked for the Marquis of Lothian at Newbattle, where he built a quarrying machine and sent up a balloon on the Marquis birthday. From about 1795 he was Factor for the Earl of Minto’s estate in Fifeshire and then became Factor to the Earl of Hopetoun, living at Ormiston. He made a model of a reaping machine and designed a new kind of steam engine. He is probably the Jedburgh merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Isabella (c.1763–1843), daughter and heiress of William Rutherford, thereby obtaining possession of the farm of Falla (which had been tenanted by his father) on Oxnam Water. His children were: George, who worked for the Admiralty Office; William; John, whose son inherited Falla; Thomas; Adam; Isabella; Elizabeth; Alice; and Ann. His daughters became joint proprietors of Falla. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Grieve, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk (which had been tenanted by his father) on Oxnam Water. His children were: George, who worked for the Admiralty Office; William; John, whose son inherited Falla; Thomas; Adam; Isabella; Elizabeth; Alice; and Ann. His daughters became joint proprietors of Falla. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Charles (b.1771); James (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Charlotte (b.1776); and George (b.1787). Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Hind’ in 1789 when his daughter Betty was baptised. John (b.1786) and John (again, b.1787), were probably also his children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Ashkirk on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. He is probably the Alexander who was married to either Helen Grieve or Margaret Scott. Alexander (18th/19th C.) servant at Cleuchhead in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawk Parish. He married Barbara Scott and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1803, with witnesses ‘Rev Mr Sibbald Scott; Christina A., who married Thomas H. Aitken; and Nelly Janet who married Fred L. Huston. Alexander (b.1830/1) son of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as an engineer and moved to Galashiels, where he worked as manager of the gasworks. In 1854 he married Mary (1830–1888), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Francis, Andrew, Elizabeth and Janet. Agnes Oliver. Alexander (1840–1920) son of William and Mary Scott, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1870 he married Janet, daughter of Robert Grieve and Janet Shackleton of Lilliesleaf. In 1880 they emigrated to the Canadian prairies, and he became the first postmaster in Minto, Manitoba. They had 8 children, the first 5 being born in Ashkirk, and the others in Manitoba. This included Dr. Alexander Gladstone (1882–1970), known as ‘Canada's first flying doctor’, who founded the hospital in Bossano, Alberta. Alexander (1851–1933) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He farmed at Falnash, then Kinninghall and later at Venchen, Yetholm. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Hobkirk (builder in Hawick), and later married her sister Georgina Isabella Grierson Hobkirk. He died in Yetholm. Alison (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Andrew (14th C.) clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. In 1393 he was notary for the instrument confirming Sir John Swinton in his lands. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Philip in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Doloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Andrew (15th C.) joint tenant of an acre near Linlithgow in 1484 and again in 1495. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) recorded in ‘north schelis’ (probably North Shielis) in the 1498 Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was fined for the non-appearance of his brother Thomas. Later Thomas was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (probably somewhere in Peebleshire). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) Bailie of Inverkeithing, recorded in 1541. He was probably related to earlier Scotts in Inverkeithing. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as Vicar of Cavers in 1545 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk relating to the Scotts of Palace. Perhaps the same ‘sir Andrew’ is recorded in 1544 when his son John witnessed a transaction for the Scotts of Blindhaugh. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded as indweller in Selkirk in 1579. In 1580 he was ‘alias Dandle’ in Selkirk when warned to appear in Melrose Kirk and also in a case involving William in Whitehaugh. Additionally in 1580 he received redemption money in Selkirk from Robert Govers, was ‘Dandie’ when he was a witness, was ‘Dandre’ when he received redemption money and was ‘Dandrie’ when he received an annual rent of lands in Lessuden. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1580/1. In 1581 he received money owed him by the heir of John Brydon of Well in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood and received redemption money for lands that once pertained to John Scott. Andrew of North Bowhill (16th C.) witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk in 1580, between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. He also acted as a judge to decide about a dispute in Selkirk in 1580. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmauncleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. In 1581 he and his tenants were represented by Robert of Aikwood in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Bowhill. Andrew (16th C.) brother of Philip of Dryhope and perhaps son of John. In 1592 he was a signatory to a caution by John Hay of Smithfield for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of his brother Philip of Dryhope. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Hawick’ in 1598 when he witnessed a contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He may be the earliest known doctor in Hawick. Probably the same surgeon Andrew was listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owned for his ‘pensioun the said year, foure bolles heipit oatt meill, at ellevine punks the boll, inde fourtie foure pun- des’[SB1633]. Andrew (16th/17th C.) surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh, he was brother of Walter in Catslack. In 1620 he complained about

Walter Stewart of Kirkland, who remained at large despite not paying him and another Edinburgh Burgess. Also in 1620 he represented William ‘of Slak’ (i.e. Catslack) in complaints to the Privy Council, both by him and against him. In another of the cases in 1620 he was referred to as brother of Walter in Catslacknow. His daughters Janet and Bessie were served as his heirs in 1643. Andrew of Todshawhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahill’. He was said to be among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Roberton (although from which one is unknown). Andrew of Salensis (16th/17th C.) said to have been one of the Scotts of Ale Water who was part of the 1596 raid to rescue Kinmont Willie. He may have been a younger brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade (as suggested by Scott of Rodono) or a brother of Walter ‘the Hawk’ of Whitslade and uncle to Sir Walter (as suggested by Keith Scott). He may be the Laird of Salensis who was recorded as present at the Parliament of 1592. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Salensis in 1609. He is recorded in 1613 when his son Walter became a brewer’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to Robert of Salensis, who was summoned before the Presbytery for murder in 1614. Thomas, who inherited Whitehaughbrae in 1621, was probably his son. He was recorded as father-in-law to William of Catslack in 1621 when the pair complained about Alexander Stewart of Phaup refusing attacks on William after being released from imprisonment and then injuring him (Andrew) in the head. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Scabcleuch. In 1604 he was witness to an instrument of sasine for a charter of Simon Scott of Bonnington for lands in the upper Ettrick. He may have been related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Midgehope, etc. Andrew ‘Braid’s Andro’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit Braidis Andro’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His brother Willie is also on the same list. He was ‘called the Braid’s Andro’ in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was ‘called the Braid’s Andro’ listed among men of Ewesdale who both Lord Maxwell and Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others ‘to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]’. He is also recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He is there recorded as ‘Andro Scot in Raburn, called the Braid’s Andro.’ In 1615 his son ‘Wattie’ (also referred to confusingly as ‘Braidis Wattie’) was involved in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley and executed for sheep stealing at Eilrig in 1616. It is unclear whether ‘Braid’ refers to a name or a location (possibly ‘Broadlee’ or ‘Braidhaugh’). He was probably also the Andrew ‘the Breadie’, son of John ‘the Tinckler’ (who was tenant at Harwood) among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. Andrew of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood, who succeeded in 1616. He was also served as heir to his father’s lands of Belses, the south side of Bowhill and half the lands of Kershope Forest. In 1618 he was recorded as son and heir of Robert of Aikwood, when along with his curators there was a complaint against George Turnbull in Belses and Andrew Turnbull that they had still not paid the profits of ‘Hathornerig’ in Belses for 1616 and 1617. These curators were Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw, Andrew (surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh), Philip of Dryhope and Robert of ‘Drywoodmylnes’; it seems likely that most of them were closely related to him. He is mentioned in 1627 in an action that was brought against him and Robert of Hartwoodmyres. In 1634 he was ‘olim [formerly] de Aikwode’ when he deponent Kershope to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1619 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Kerr of Chatto. He was succeeded by Philip, last of Aikwood, who was probably his brother. R.C. Reid suggests that he died in 1680 and was succeeded by his brother James. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of William ‘callit of Bowehill’. In about 1618 the pair were listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Edinburgh’ in 1624 when he had a charter of the lands of Bonnington from James VI. He must have been a close relative of John and John’s brother Simon, who had previously held the lands. It is also possible that he was the same man (or closely related to) the Andrew who was a surgeon in Hawick at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who was an apprentice to Henry Lumsden in 1592/3 in Edinburgh and Guild-brother in 1608. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Heap, recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch.
of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James 'in Holcauldruhmill' is listed after him, and may have been related. Andrew of Foulshiels (d.bef. 1647) son of James. He is recorded as owner of the lands of ‘Fadinside’ in Lindean Parish in 1643. In 1643 he married Janet, who was an illegitimate daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his brother Walter. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Hermiston. He is ‘Andro Scott, portioner of Hermiston’ when he signed the 1638 ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He was recorded as a portioner in the 1643 county valuation, with lands in Hermiston valued at £130. Probably the same ‘Andrew Scott of Hermistowne’ was listed among landowners of Lilliesleaf in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Broadmeadows (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw with his first wife. In 1624 he was son of William in ‘Faldishop’ (probably Fauldshope near Aikwood) when he had a sasine for Broadmeadows from the Murrays of Philiphaugh and in 1627 he was son of William in ‘Falishope’ when he made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He held Broadmeadows in 1628 according to a roll of properties and had a further instrument of resignation for Broadmeadows from the Murrays in 1633. In 1634 he was in the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch at Hawick; he carried the Earl’s sword. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1644. In 1648 he wadset Broadmeadows to his father William of Tushielaw and his half-brother William, reserving the liferent for himself. He probably succeeded to Tushielaw on the death of his father in about 1665. In 1667 he sold Broadmeadows to his half-brother William. In 1651 his eldest son William is listed as ‘our servitor’ in the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. Andrew of Weens (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Wayns’ when he was witness to a marriage contract of Robert Elliott and Margaret Riddell in 1652, signed at Appotside. His son Walter was also a witness. He witnessed further sasines in Rulewater in 1653 and 1654. He was recorded in about 1663 on the Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £200 for Weens. John of Weens, who paid the land tax in 1678, was probably his descendant. Andrew of Bowhill (d.c.1668) eldest son of Robert. He appears as witness to several documents in the 1660s and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. Also in 1663 he is recorded in several deeds. His younger brother James eventually succeeded to Bowhill, and may in fact have bought the estate during his and his father’s lifetime. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Broadleed in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to John, who is also listed. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John and James were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. He may be the Adam who married Bessie Robson and whose son Adam was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1690, with witnesses John Scott and Henry Mitchellhill. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Ashkirk in 1691. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as son of deceased Andrew ‘in Tushillaw’ when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Harwood in 1699. Andrew (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was recorded at the ‘milneport of Hawick’ in 1708. He was an elder in Hawick Session in 1718. His children included: William (b.1700); Robert (b.1704); and Andrew (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Alexander, ‘officer’ and Robert, flesher (who may have been related), in 1704 were Alexander Young ‘officer’ and John Tudhope ‘flesher’ and in 1708 were ‘undermillers’ James Paterson and Walter Riddell. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘customer’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for wright Robert Scott. He was also ‘customer’ in 1714 when (along with ‘officer’ Alexander Young) he witnessed a baptism for John Rae. It is unclear if this meant he was a customs official or an itinerant worker perhaps. It is possible he is the same man as the wright. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Turnbull. Their children included: Janet (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Andrew (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). The 1721 baptism was witnessed by mason John Turnbull and also Andrew Turnbull; the same men witnessed the 1726 baptism and may have been from his wife’s family. Andrew (18th C.) son of Walter. In 1722 he married Marion Maben, the wedding being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. They had a daughter Janet baptised in Hawick in 1722. Andrew ‘Black Andrew’ (d.1778) Cornet in 1724. He had a son, ‘D. Scott of Ettrickbank’. He also had a daughter who married William ‘Phillips' (probaby Mary who married William Philip). His death in Hawick is recorded in 1778. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Helen Hardie and their children included: Isabel (b.1737); and James (b.1738). Shoemaker John was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Isobel, and so was probably related. Additionally, the witnesses in 1738 were ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’. It is unclear how he might have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick Parish. He may be the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1741. He married Agnes Hardie and their children included: Agnes (b.1739); Janet (b.1743); and Helen (b.1744). The witnesses in 1743 were shoemaker William Scott and merchant John Cavers. He seems to be distinct from the shoemaker of the same name who married Helen Hardie (unless that was an earlier marriage of the same man). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Agnes Noble, who was from Wilton. Their children included John (b.1763). Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Allan in 1756. They had a son William baptised in 1764. Andrew (18th C.) described as ‘Pigman’ in Hawick Parish. His wife was Ann ‘Doeg’ and their children included Frederick (b.1758). The witnesses were wright Francis Paisley and barber Francis Miles. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1770s. He is probably the Andrew who was a merchant at 7 High Street (although it is possible there were 2 merchants of the same name around the same time). He may be the merchant Andrew from whom ribbon was purchased (18th C.) de-

or ‘Lizzy’) Irvine, also from Hawick; she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1787); and Andrew (b.1789). The witnesses were ‘The Associate Congregation’. Andrew (18th C.) married Christian Scott in Roberton in 1786. Andrew (18th C.) married Nelly Scott in Roberton in 1787. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1794 he and Robert (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck as a stockingmaker. It is possible he is the same man as the merchant Bailie Andrew and may have been related to the earlier shoemaker Andrew. Andrew (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1700s. He took over from Walter Scott, and may have taught a young John Leyden in the late 1780s. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Cavers in 1799 when one of his children was baptised. Children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include: James (b.1799); Charles (b.1801); Andrew (b.1803); and John (b.1805). Andrew (1757–1839) poet from Bowden, son of John and Rachel Briggs. He was largely uneducated, working as a cowherd and in other farming jobs. He then enlisted in the 80th Regiment and was sent to serve in the American War of Independence. After Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown, he became a prisoner of war on Long Island. Apparently the book of verse he wrote while there was lost. After the peace treaty was signed he was released and returned to Britain in 1784, settling back in Bowden. He focussed on supporting his wife and children, but eventually published his first slim volume of verse in 1805, expanded in 1808. His ‘Poems Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect’ (1811) and other publications were very influential in their day: many local people subscribed to his 1811 book. His popular poems included ‘Swingling o’ the Lint’, ‘Rural Content, or the Muirland Farmer’ and ‘Symon and Janet’ (about the False Alarm). George Watson of Edinburgh painted his portrait. Said to be a man of simple tastes and habits, he died in Bowden and is buried there. Andrew (18th/19th C.) assessor and tax-gatherer who lived in Denholm. He possessed the sword that had been used by Sir Gilbert Elliott to kill Col. Stewart in 1726, getting it from a relative of Sir Gilbert’s servant. He passed it on to his friend George Forrest, gunmaker in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of Denholm. He was an apprentice with Thomas Colledge, who was probably the first manufacturer in the village. He supplied the Glasgow market, and is said to have done well. It is claimed that the demand was so high that his customers would meet him 20 miles from Glasgow to bid against each other. It is possible he was the Andrew (corrected from ‘Alexander’ in the list), stockingmaker of Denholm, who was on the 1797 list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1796 he married Isobel Turnbull, who was from Roberton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandyhaugh in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Isabel Laidlaw and had children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish): William (b.1761); Alexander John (b.1765); and Charles (b.1767). Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Doorpool in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Shiel and their children included James (b.1814) and Agnes (b.1816). It is possible he is the same man as the schoolmaster. Andrew (1786/7–1868) boot and shoemaker in Newcastle-on-Tyne, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 45 South Hermitage Street in 1851 and 1861. He could be the Andrew from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Helen Mitchell, who died in 1852, aged 69. Their children included: Charles, who was also a shoemaker; Matthew (1810/1–42); and 2 who died in infancy. Andrew (1789–1846) spinner of Hawick, who was precentor in the Relief Kirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded at about 30 Loan in 1841, living with wife Isabel and children Isabel, Andrew, Helen, Archibald, Jane, Agnes and John. Andrew ‘Andrew the King’ (1791–1873) son of William, landlord of the King’s Head (hence the nickname). He was trained as a weaver, but known as a harmless simple-minded fellow, who was out of work for most of his life. He lived with his sister ‘Nelly the King’, and a drawing of him is in the Museum. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Mary Shiel in Cavers Parish in 1813. Andrew (18th/19th C.) son of D. of Ettrickbank and grandson of ‘Black Andrew’. His property around where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were built is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. It is said that he had no offspring. He may be the Andrew of Ettrickbank who married Jane Jarvis MacLaine (1829–82). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Andrew (b.1801/2) road labourer who lived at Berryfell Plain. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included: Agnes; Andrew; Thomas; Adam; Robert C.; and Walter, who may have hung himself in a stable at Dryhope in 1859. He was still at Berryfell Plain in 1868. Andrew (1800–70) 3rd son of William, schoolmaster at Burmemouth in Castletown, he was born there in upper Liddesdale. His mother was Isabella Veitch, from Bedrule, who was a cousin of William Veitch, author of ‘Greek Verbs’. He was a great runner, swimmer and wrestler in his youth. He was educated at Newcastle School, then in Edinburgh, also working as an assistant teacher. About the age of 19 he taught at a school in Castletown; one story is told of how he paid the blacksmith a penny to allow him to try to break off the tip of his anvil with a hammer, which he succeeded on doing at the third attempt. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh in 1829. He became a teacher at Tain, then a tutor in Lanarkshire, and then was an instructor on ships around the Mediterranean. He was classics master at Dollar from about 1835. In 1841 he moved to Brockville, near Montreal in Canada, but returned to Scotland in 1844, becoming master at Pultneytown, Wick. He was appointed Professor of Hebrew at King’s College, Aberdeen in 1846, becoming Professor of Oriental Languages at the (united) University of Aberdeen from 1860. He died unmarried. He is reputed to have fallen in love with a pupil at Dollar, Miss Todd, and was engaged to be married to her, but she died before the wedding could take place. He was said to be a proud and independent Borderer, with conservative views, and quick to argue, although with a strong sense of humour. He travelled widely, and was also a great collector and reader of books (many of which were bought by Cambridge University Library). He wrote a Latin inscription for the memorial stone of his friend and colleague Prof. William Tennant.

Andrew (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a farm labourer who lived at Hawick Shiel. He was recorded there 1841–61. His wife was Marianne, and their children included Isabella M., Andrew W., Georgina, Caroline L. and Arthur. Dr. Andrew James (1817–84) eldest son by the 2nd marriage of William of Teviot Bank. In 1854 he married Emma, daughter of Gen. Frederick Blundell. His eldest son was Col. William Augustus. Andrew (b.1821) born in Robertson Parish, son of Walter and Mary Young. He was a joiner at Stobs Woodfoot. In 1851 he was living at ‘Birkwoodfoot’ and at Stobs Woodfoot in 1861. He married Isabella Grieve and their children included: Walter (b.1844); John (b.1846); Elizabeth (b.1848); Andrew (b.1851); Robert (b.1853); and Thomas (b.1857/8). John and Thomas, who were joiners at Stobs Woodfoot in about 1900, were probably his sons. Andrew (1825/6–99) son of Charles and nephew of Adam. He was a tailor who lived at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish and was an elder of the Kirk there. He was listed at Forkins in the 1861 census, living with his mother Jane. Andrew (b.1825/6) son of Walter, who was a labourer living at Ormiston. He was farm steward at Barnes in 1861. He married Jane Paterson and their children included Isabella, Christina and Walter. Andrew (1830–c.85) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Singdean, with his mother being Elspeth Telfer. From his father he learned the secret of a herbal plaster, which was supposed to cure cancer. He became shepherd at Twislehope near Newcastle-ton. In 1867 his plasters are said to have removed a huge tumour on the wife of a Galashiels tradesman. His children included: Elspeth, who married William Mather and was post-mistress at Langhaughwalls in Rulewater; Adam, who was a shepherd at Toftholm in Liddesdale and succeeded to the secret prescription; Walter, who was shepherd at Swinelaws in Oxnam and later gamekeeper at Westerkirk and also said to possess the family recipe; and Ann (1874/5–1951), who married a Mr. Paterson and died in Roberton in the home of her nephew. He died suddenly at Carlisle Station, being on his way to Silloth for his health. His widow lived at Newcastleton Townhead. Andrew (b.1839/40) son of grocer Walter. He was an actuary with Hawick Savings Bank and later acted as Burgh Assessor. In 1875, when accountant and actuary for the National Savings Bank, he was charged with breach of trust, embezzlement, theft and forgery. Anna (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1670, she and her sister Bessie were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Bothwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Forderlee, Over and Nether Bunchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westburns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinstead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Anna Helena (d.c.1696) daughter of Walter and granddaughter of Walter of Whitehaugh. Her grandfather was also known as Walter ‘of Harlaw’ She married Sir William Adair of Kinlilt (who died 1661) and then Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall, cousin of her 1st husband. In 1694 she was served heir to her grandfather’s lands of Hartwoodburn. She was mother of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, as well as Sir Walter Adair, who was served as her heir in 1696. Anne (1651–1731) also known as ‘Anna’, youngest daughter of Francis the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch. She was born at Dundee, where her mother sought refuge after the departure of Cromwell from Scotland. Her ‘tutors’ were the same as those of her sister Mary, with the 3 Border tutors (Sir Gideon of Highchester, Sir William of Harden and Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs) continuing their disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors. Like her sister, there were struggles over her control, and in particular over who she should marry (e.g. attempts to arrange her marriage to the son of the Earl of Tweeddale). Eventually wardenship and marriage were assigned to her uncle, the Earl of Rothes. She became Countess on the death of her sister Mary in 1661, formally being served heir to her father. She became Duchess on marrying James Crofts, Duke of Monmouth, in 1663 at the extremely young age of 12; her husband was an illegitimate son of Charles II, who changed his name to Scott. This was arranged with the encouragement of her mother Lady Wemyss and her tutor Sir Gideon of Highchester. The lengthy marriage contract of 1663 describes in great detail the possessions of the family at that time. In 1663 her possessions in Hawick Parish were valued at over £5800 and those in Hassendean at £1561. She was referred to as ‘Annam Buckcleuchiae Comitissam’ in the patent where her husband was created Duke. In 1666 the couple resigned their honours and estates and obtained a new grant of the titles for the Duke, together with the titles of Duchess of Buccleuch, Countess of Dalkeith and Countess of Buccleuch for her; this gave her the rights and titles independent of her husband. However, there were still disputes over the legality of her marriage contract and whether it conflicted with her father’s entail. She resided for several years at the court in London, where she was described as ‘one of the wisest and craftiest of her sex, and has much wit’. She was mentioned there in the diary of Samuel Pepys and was said to have become lame through a dancing accident in 1668. She was also said to have been plain of features, although with a charming manner. She spent some time in France. In 1675 she and her husband were given a charter for the lands and Barony of Hawick. She appears to have remained uninvolved in her husband’s schemes to capture the Crown; her actions around this time are portrayed through the character of Marmoutière in the play the ‘Duke of Guise’. It is said that she helped save her husband after being implicated in the Rye House Plot of 1683. He then went to Holland, returning in an ill-fated expedition following the death of Charles II. After the execution of her husband in 1685, she obtained a new grant of her Buccleuch titles in 1687 (although the English titles were forfeited), in order to ensure that they passed to her children. And in 1693 an Act of Parliament ratified that the estates would pass to her eldest son James, Earl of Dalkeith. The lands and Barony of Hawick had fallen to the Crown after the death of Monmouth, but in 1686 a new charter erected Hawick into a free barony and regality, given to her (and with Walter Scott of Alton as the Bailie of Regality). She signed her letters ‘A.B.C.’ (for ‘Anna of Buccleuch, Countess’). In about 1698 it was suggested that she might resign her lands and titles in favour of her eldest son (as the Duchess of Hamilton had done), but she decided ‘to keep all the rights I injoy from God and my foirfathers. I was my sisters aire, and I bliss God I have children which I trust in his mercy will be mine when I am dead. The Duchess of Hamilton is but a woman, and we are not such wise creatures as men, so I will follow no example of that sort till I see all the noblemen in Scotland resine to their sons; then I will consider of this business’. She returned to Scotland in 1701, residing at Dalkeith House. She visited Hawick (perhaps for the first time) in April of 1702, when she signed the Sederunt Book for her local lands. She extended and improved the family’s Scottish lands, including major renovations to Drumlanrig Tower. She is also recorded as paying for ‘causay layers’ to pave the Hawick streets. She also held the patronage of St. Mary’s kirk. In a land valuation of 1710 she was by far the largest landowner in Hawick Parish, her lands being valued at more than £7000. She can be considered the last of the true Scotts of Buccleuch rather than of Great Britain. She acted throughout her life as a widow of a royal prince, and was said to be the last person in Scotland to keep young pages as attendants. Her last will of 1722/3 names her grandson Francis as her successor. In 1688 she remarried, to Charles, 3rd Baron Cornwallis of Eye (as his 2nd wife), and he died in 1698. She was predeceased by all of her children. Those with her first husband were: Charles (1672–74), Earl of Doncaster, who died young; Sir James (1674–1705), Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded; Lady Anne (1675–85), who died in the Tower of London; Henry, Earl of Deloraine (1676–1730); Lord Francis (1678–79), who also died young; and Lady Charlotte (b.1683), who died in infancy. They were buried in Monmouth’s vault in Westminster Abbey. By her 2nd husband she additionally had (also with the surname Scott): Anne (b.1690), who died in infancy; George (b.1692), also died in infancy; and Isabella (1694–1748), died unmarried. She was eventually succeeded by her grandson Francis, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith – ‘In England now the Dutches dwells, Which to her friends is a cursed fate. For if they famish, starve, or die, They cannot have a groat from that estate’ [CWS]. ‘For she had known adversity, Though born in such a high degree; In pride of power, in beauty’s bloom, Had wept o’er Monmouth’s bloody tomb’ [SWS].

Anne (19th C.) listed as a midwife in 1838 when the death of a child of hers is recorded in Hawick. She was spouse of the deceased James Scott (but there is no other identification). Anse of the Bush (16th C.) recorded as ‘Anse of the Busse’ under the heading ‘Scotts of Ewesdale’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. The other listed is ‘Thome of the Flower’. His name may be ‘Ante’ rather than ‘Anse’ (and it is also possible this was just a transcription error for ‘Arche’). ‘Watt of the Bus’, recorded in 1642, could be his son. Archibald (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Possibly the same Archibald was among the witnesses for a document relating to Whitchesters in 1484/5. He may be the Archibald, son of Sir David of Branzholme, who leased the lands of Eldinhope in 1485, with the consent of his father. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His son William is also listed. Archibald (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Arche Scott of the Buss’. He was listed along with John ‘the Braid’ and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Creelman’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His name appears as ‘Archie Scott, callit Creillmanis’, which seems likely to be ‘Creeelman’ (like George Turnbull about the same time). Archibald of Deephope (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness in 1581 to a sasine for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. He may be the man transcribed being ‘of Dryhoip’ in 1599 when charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He is recorded being ‘of Deiphoip’ in 1608 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for 2 of his sons and Walter of Whitslade not to harm him or his family. His sons Walter, Adam, Thomas, James, John, William and Archibald are all mentioned. Also in the same year other kin and associates of Scott of Thirlestane were bound over not to harm him. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Glenrachane’ (i.e. Glenrauchan) in 1606, among men declared as fugitives. He was surely related to Hob there, who was also listed as a fugitive in 1605. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Nouthous’ (i.e. Northhouse) in a summons against him in 1619. This was included in a letter from Gilbert Watt to the Earl of Buccleuch. He was probably related to the ‘Will’ of Northhouse recorded in 1608. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘of fflanesh’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to other Scotts of Falnash. It is possible that this is an error for Archibald Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) described as ‘vestiarius’ (tailor or cloth merchant) in Hawick in 1648. He was served as tutor to his grandson John Scott, as the closest relative of John’s deceased father Robert, who was a clothier in Edinburgh. He was presumably quite old in 1648, but could possibly be the Archibald, married to Janet Paisley, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1652 (or married to Margaret Thin, with son John baptised in 1652, or married to Helen Falside, with son Archibald baptised in 1654). Archibald of Synton (17th C.) recorded as ‘rootmaster’ for Selkirkshire in 1649. He is probably the same as Capt. Archibald of the Roxburgh and Selkirk Fencibles; he was not in fact Laird of Synton, but was son of Walter (13th Laird) and younger brother of George (last of Synton). He died unmarried. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as liferenter in Stouslie in the 1663 mock marriage in 1701), and it is also said that this ended the direct line of Scots of Synton and Boonraw. However, there is also a suggestion that he had a brother, Richard, who was ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1712, along with fellow tailor George, he witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Wyndhead’. He married Margaret McVittie and their children included John (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were felow tailors George Scott (who was probably a relative) and James Turnbull. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hislop, as recorded in 1709, 1711 and 1719. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for a child of John Scott, deceased tenant in Falnash. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Murray in Hislop. He married Margaret Borthwick and their children included Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were John in Falnash and William Aitchison and in 1711 were William Aitchison, his servant and John Ballantyne, tenant in Rashiegrain. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘Wyndhead’ when his son John was born in 1714. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of the Wyndhead. He is probably the same Archibald whose other children baptised in Hawick were Margaret (b.1709) and Bessie (b.1711). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnhead in 1726, 1729 and 1736. He married Jean Scott in 1719 and their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Isabel (b.1720); Walter (b.1723); Archibald (b.1729); William (b.1733); and Agnes (b.1736). The witnesses in 1726 were Thomas Dodds and John Miller, in 1729 were John and James (perhaps Dryden) and in 1736 were Thomas Dodds and Adam Armstrong. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1718 he was living at Howpasley. His children included: Helen (b.1715); and Marion (b.1718). He may be the Archibald who married Esther Turnbull in Roberton in 1701. Archibald (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for gardener James Aitkin in 1757 and 1762. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Woodburn in 1761. He married Isobel Thomson in 1750. His children included Jean (b.1751), Mary (b.1754) and Walter (b.1756) and John (b.1761). He could be the deceased Archibald whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1815. Archibald (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1780 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Janet (b.1778), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably also his child. He was probably related to the other Scotts who lived at Skelfhill. Archibald (b.c.1770) farmer at Easter Langbault. He is listed there in 1841 and 1851, and was unmarried. He may have been brother of John, who also farmed there. Archibald (b.1772/3–1858) joiner in Newcastle. probably son of George. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a wright in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street. He married Jane Turnbull, who died in 1894, aged 78. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (b.c.1770s) servant at Skelfhill, recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Gideon was also a servant on the same list and so perhaps related. He may also have been related to the Archibald recorded at Skelfhill in 1780. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded as Session Clerk in Castleton in 1832. He could be the same as the joiner in Newcastle. Archibald ‘Auld Commonside’ of Howcleuch (1779–1874) 2nd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was recorded as a farmer at Commonside in the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He succeeded to Howcleuch (his elder brother Walter succeeding to Wauchope), but lived and farmed at Commonside. His father also conveyed to him the superiority of the lands of Wigg and part of Wauchope. He was related to the nursery Dicksons, his mother being Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837). He was listed as ‘Archibald Scott, Esq. of Howcleuch’ among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He presented some items from Antigua to the Museum in 1863. In 1804 he married Charlotte, daughter of John Sibbald of Pinnacle and sister of Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle; they had no children and Howcleuch was inherited by his nephew Charles. In 1841 and 1861 he was living at Commonside, along with 5 servants. He was listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiels in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He lived to within about 4 years of a century, hence the nickname ‘Auld’ applied to him. He died in Hawick at the age of 96 and was buried in Roberton Cemetery. Archibald (b.1791/2) from Canonbie, he was a meal dealer in Newcastle. In 1841 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 2 Whitchester Street. His wife was Helen and they had sons Archibald (a carrier) and Abel. Archibald married Ann Smail in Wilton in 1826. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (1822/3–1903) second son of farmer John and nephew of Mr. Murray whom he assisted with the farm at Cleuchhead. After marrying he farmed at Townhead, Lustruther, Wauchope Common, Templehall and Hawthornside. He married Isabella, daughter of Robert Armstrong, from Meikledale, and she died at Heathfield in 1897, aged 77. They had 3 daughters (Catherine, Margaret and Ellen) and a son (John), who probably did not survive infancy. After retiring he lived at Drythropple and Orchard Cottage. He and his wife are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (1804/5–74) born in Castleton Parish, he was toll-keeper at the Note o’ the Gate. He is recorded there as toll-keeper and labourer in 1851. He was an agricultural labourer back in Newcastle in 1861. He married Jane (or Jean) Nixon, who died in 1874, aged 66. Archibald (19th C.) listed as a shopkeeper on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (b.1823/4) son of John and Margaret Murray. He was shepherd at Wolfehopelee. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, along with his wife Isabella Armstrong. In 1851 he was recorded at ‘Mackside (Townhead)’, which was probably Wolfelee Townhead. He married Isabella Armstrong in Hobkirk Parish in 1847. Their children included: Catherine (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Ellen (b.1853); and John (b.1860). Archibald (b.1826/7) son of meal-dealer Archibald. He was a carrier in Newcastle. In 1852 he is listed leaving the Coach and Horses in Hawick bound for Newcastleton every Wednesday. He may be the Archibald who was working as a railway labourer at Whitknewe in 1861; his wife was Isabella and they had children Mary Ann, Archibald, Elizabeth, John and Fenwick. Archibald (b.1826/7) joiner in Newcastleton, son of Thomas and grandson of Archibald. In 1851 he was at about 30 South Hermitage Street, living with his mother Janet and siblings Thomas, Henry, John and Helen. He was still there in 1861. His wife was Margaret, who died in 1915, aged 64. Their children included: Margaret (1880/1–1939), who married Alexander Stormont; and Archibald (1882/3–1948). They are buried at Ettleton. Archibald (19th C.) carrier who lived in Chesters and operated between Hawick and Rulewater. Arthur of Gamescleuch and Newburgh (d.c.1610) probably son of Simon... of Winterburgh. He is probably the ‘Mr. Arthure Scott of Wynterburgh’ who is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Simon Armstrong of Mangerton. In 1593 he was ‘of Gamescleuch’ when in dispute with William Cranston (fiar of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheill’; James of Gilmanseleuch and James’ son Robert were also involved and declared as rebels. In 1594 Robert Ker of Kippielaw was surety for him in a complaint made William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with William in Glack and William’s brother James. In 1602 he was part of a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch ‘in Fechan’, burning his timber, etc. and were declared rebels for not appearing. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £70 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He is referred to as ‘of Newburcht and Gemilscleuch’ (i.e. Newburgh and Gamescleuch) in 1603 when he acted as surety for John and Christie Armstrong, sons of John Armstrong of Langholm. In 1603 he was one of the men who selected Sir Walter of Branxholme to arbitrate the dispute over the lands of Gamescleuch. Also in 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Scott of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He gave the lands of Gamescleuch to his cousin Walter (ancestor of Lord Napier) when he succeeded his father to Newburgh. His illegitimate son Robert is among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane bound over in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoipt’. His sons John and Arthur are also mentioned among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. Additionally in 1617 James Mitchellhill, Burgess of Selkirk, complained that he had attacked him near Hangingshaw, wounding him and giving ‘him a grite stryk upon the head, hes dung ane ee out of his head’; he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Baldred (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Master Baldred le Scot’ in 1306 when Edward I granted him safe conduct in ‘coming from beyond seas to Stirling castle’. His connection with other Scotts is unknown. Benedict (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Benedict Scot’ in 1229, when the Bailiffs of Yarmouth were commanded by an English court to deliver his ship and let him return to Scotland. Bernard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’ in an English document of 1270. Along with others, merchants of Placentini, he was given safe conduct to trade in England for 3 years. Campbell (1747–66) younger son of Francis and brother of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. In 1764 he toured Europe along with his brother, accompanied by Adam Smith. In 1764 he was granted ‘different’ of the lands of Over and Nether Harwood and others. But he did not live long enough to enjoy these gifts. He died in Paris, and his brother the Duke then returned to Britain. Catherine (b.1774) daughter of Alexander of Synton and sister of John and Helen. After her brother John’s death she had the right of inheritance granted to her in favour of distant male relatives (namely John, only son of Hugh Scott of Gala, and Hugh Scott of Harden). In 1800 she married John Corse of Bughtrig and they changed their surname to ‘Corse Scott’. Her son John succeeded to the Synton estate. Charles (16th/17th C.) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (who was killed by the Kers in 1552), making him half-brother to Walter of Goldielands; alternatively he could have been a son of Sir Walter of Goldielands, which would make more chronological sense (and in which case he could be the Charles of Goldielands who died in ‘98 and whose grave tablet was found in St. Mary’s in 1863). His son Walter inherited Goldielands from his cousin, also Walter, and afterwards started the Scotts of Crumhaugh. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. His son may have been the last Walter of Goldielands (although it is possible there was an intervening generation). If so, then his daughters included: Jean, whose daughter Lilias married William Knox; and another, whose son was Robert Scott of Glack. However, these generations are very unclear. Charles (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1636); Agnes (b.1644); David (b.1646); John (b.1650); and Bessie (b.1655). Charles of Bonnington (17th C.) 2nd son of James of Bonnington. He succeeded after his older brother Gilbert’s death in 1675. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Edinburgh in 1678. In 1680, along with his siblings James and Catherine, he was served heir to his father James of Bonnington. Charles (17th/18th C.) recorded as a ‘student’ in 1680 when he and another student witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish. It seems possible that they were connected with the Parish Kirk in some way. Also in 1680 he and Walter were recorded as students when they witnessed a baptism for George Deans and Agnes Scott (who could be related). Charles of Langhope (d.bef. 1693) probably the successor of John, he was already deceased in 1693 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to the John, who sold Langhope in 1691. Charles of Crumhaugh (1663/4-98) probably eldest son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He may have been named after Charles II. He is probably the ‘Charles Scott of Goudilands’ who paid tax for 3 hearths on the west side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been the ‘Goldilands, younger’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldilands, elder’ being his father Walter). He is probably also the ‘younger Goldiland’ who was cautioned for James Scott when he rented 1/4 of Borthaugh in at least 1691–94 (with his name given clearly as Charles in 1691). He had a Crown charter for the estates of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1696, this included ‘Howpasley and Crumhaugh, Trinity lands, Corsback and others’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He married Rachel, daughter of Langlands of that Ilk (who may have re-married Francis Elliot of Fenwick). Their children included: Janet (b.1688), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1689), also baptised in Hawick, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1746), who married Rev. Hugh Kennedy, minister of Cavers; and Rachel, who married her cousin, Walter in Commonside, 1st Laird of Wauchope. The witnesses in 1688 were Walter of Alton Croft and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1717 he was succeeded in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others by his son Walter, this being in 1717 after 18½ years of ‘non-entry’, suggesting the time of his death. It was probably his tombstone that was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s in 1863, and reads ‘Here lyis Charles Scott of Goldilands who died in October 22 98 and of age 34’; this implies that he died before his father (although these generations are still confused, and it is possible this was a different man, in 1598, rather than 1698). Charles (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Palace Hill’. He was said to be a loyal supporter of the Stuart cause in 1715. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. Their children included: John of Belford, who married Marion Baillie from Ashiestiel, had an only child, Agnes, supported the Jacobites in 1745 and lost his estate; Patrick, who died at sea; Margaret, married Capt. Ronalds; Cecilia married Mr. Sinclair, W.S.; and Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Rose of Udny and was grandmother of Mary Yule, who married Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. He died in the Tower of London. Charles (17th/18th C.) owner of a garden to the west of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed in the 1720s. He was referred to as ‘of Goldielands’, although that designation was no longer formally recognised by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He must have been related to the Lairds of Crumhaugh, but precisely who he was is unclear; it is possible that the reference was to the already deceased Charles of Crumhaugh. Charles (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1724. Charles (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie in the period 1726–29. He took over from Thomas Scott and William Scott of Stonedge before him, so he may also have been a son of William. He may be the same as the Charles ‘in Roan’ who was former Chamberlain to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in an assignation of 1730 for rental arrears. Charles of Crumhaugh (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1733 being ‘of Crummuch’ when he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Fahnash. It is unclear how he fits in with the earlier and later Charleses of Crumhaugh. Charles of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) son of Francis of Gorrenberry. He is said to have witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras in 1731 (but this date must be wrong, or else it was a son of the Earl). His wife Jane died in 1767, aged 65, and is buried at Bromley Church in Kent.

His son John (of Gorrenberry, a doctor in London) died in 1785, and is also buried at Bromley. He may be the Charles (‘brother to Gorrenberry’) who married Margaret, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Charles of Crumhaugh and How-pasley (1719–57) eldest son of Walter and Beatrice Scott of Falnash. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1746. He is probably the Charles of Crumhaugh who (along with Robert of Fenwick) witnessed a baptism in 1747 for Gideon (likely his brother) and Rachel Scott. He was probably the Charles recorded being in arrears for renting the farms of Branxholme Town and Chapelhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1748. In 1750 he was registered as heir to his father Walter and grandfather Charles in the lands of Crumhaugh, How-pasley and others; these lands had been in ‘non-entry’ for nearly 23 years (possibly suggesting some legal challenges, and/or that his father had died when he was very young). He also held lands of Blackcleuch (near Teviothead). He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdale-head’, meaning the Parishes of Cavers, Hawick, Wilton and Roberton, in at least the period 1742–8 and possibly until 1757. His accounts for 1744 include repairs to Hassendean Mill, Hawick Kirk, Hawick Mill, Slitrig Bridge, Hawick Tower and the barns and stables of Branxholme. He is probably the ‘Cromhaugh’ recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer’s book in 1746. He paid the window tax in Hawick (for ‘Brankshole house’) in 1748. It was probably his servant William Scott who is recorded getting married in Edinburgh in 1750. He may have been the Laird mentioned in 1757 in ‘A state of the affair twixt the Laird of Cromoch and Mistris Glenhouse anent a parcel wool sold to the deceast Thomas Glenhouse’ (in the National Archives). He married Christian Anderson; his widow is recorded in a case of 1758, along with his trustees, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. His children included: Walter (b.1742), baptised in Wilton; Michael (b.1744); Robert (b.1745); and Charles (b.1747). He was living at Midshiels at the time of the 1742 baptism, the witnesses being Anthony Turnbull of Knowe and William Ogilvie of Brier-yards. Witnesses to the baptisms in 1745 were Patrick Christie ‘maltster’, and in 1747 were Walter at Commonsdie (probably a relative of some sort) and Robert Elliot of Fenwick. His eldest son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Another son was probably Gideon, tenant in Priesthaugh, while his daughter Henrietta (1740–1818) married Rev. James Erskine of Shielfield in 1768. ‘Miss B. Scott, daughter of the deceased Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, Esq.’, who died at ‘Goldlands’ in 1809 was probably also his daughter. To further confuse this family, he may also have sometimes been referred to as ‘of Goldielands’. The Crumhaugh estates were sold to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, after his death. Charles (1723/4–76) weaver in Hawick, son of Richard, said to have been a younger son of George of Boonraw. He gave evidence in 1767, regarding the former uses of the Common; he was described at that time as married and a Burgess. He had been among the party of Hawick inhabitants who went out to Blackgrain Moss to break up the ‘bakes’ made illegally on the Common by residents of Hawick Shiel and other farms. In 1756 he married Janet, daughter of shoemaker Robert Porteous and had several children baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Richard (1757–58), presumably named after his father; Charles (b.1759), probably ‘Charlie o the Crescent’; Agnes (b.1761), who may have married George Blaikie; Mary (b.1762); James (b.1763); Robert (b.1764), perhaps the hosier recorded in 1786; and Elizabeth (b.1766). The whole congregation witnessed the 1757 and 1759 baptisms and Robert Collier the 1766 baptism. He may be the Charles who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. Charles of Woll (b.1744) eldest surviving son of William of Woll, along with whom he is recorded as a witness in Roberton parish in 1766. He was ‘younger of Wool’ in 1780 when added to the voters’ roll of Roxburghshire, based on his superiority of the five pound land of Bewlie in the Barony of Lilliesleaf, as well as Mabonlaw and ‘Whinny park’ in the Barony of Harden. He is probably the Charles recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1784. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having ‘a pretty good estate’, being brother of ‘John Scott, W.S.’ and probably voting with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He paid the land tax for £560 for Midhope in Ettrick Parish, as well as about £470 for Broadmeadows and £200 for Shaws in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 his lands of Woll were valued at £595 (including the teinds). He paid tax for having a female servant in 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1791. He was also taxed for having a male servant (for most of this period Andrew Leggat, who was a coachman as well as gardener) in the period 1785–94 and for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98. He is recorded as owner of 7 farm horses at Woll in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 2 carriage or saddle horses in the period 1785–97. He may also be the Charles listed at North Synton in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded paying the land tax for Broadmeadows in 1802. In 1803 he sold the lands of Broadmeadows, which the family had gained through his mother, Jean Balfour. He paid the land tax on Woll in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son William. In 1777 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of William Waugh of Shaw and Barbara Plummer; she died in 1831. Their surviving sons were: William (b.1778), who succeeded; Andrew (1779–99), who had no children; Charles Balfour (b.1782), who succeeded his nephew, Charles Andrew; and Col. John (b.1790), who succeeded his nephew Charles. Other children included: Barbara; Jean (b.1781), who married Col. Dunsmore; Elizabeth; Gilbert (b.1790); and Janet (b.1794), who married James Grieve. He may also have been father of Catherine, who married Robert Dickson of Hassendeanburn in 1792. Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch (1728–1808) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope and Rachel Elliot. He farmed at his father’s lands of Howcleuch, and was given these lands at least as early as 1784, when his father retired. He also succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his brother Walter in 1796. His lands of ‘Mains of Borthwickshieils, formerly in Wilton’ were valued at £146 4s 9d in the valuation of Roberton Parish. He is probably the Charles Scott at Commionside who (along with Thomas Grieve) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot. He is probably the Charles at Commionside who paid the Horse Tax in 1785–94. He had 5 horses working on his farm at Wauchope according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was probably the Charles who was farmer at ‘Commonside etc.’ with 10 horses; he additionally paid tax for 2 carriage or saddle horses at Wauchope. He may be the Scott who paid tax on 3 non-working dogs at Commionside in 1797 and 2 at Wauchope. Additionally he was joint tenant in Mervinslaw with William Turnbull in 1797. Also in 1797 he paid tax for having a house servant. He is probably the Mr. Scott at Commionside who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the land tax on Howcleuch in 1802. He gave a large contribution to support the local volunteers in 1803. He was listed along with his son Walter among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He conveyed parts of the superiority of Wauchope to each of his sons Walter and Archibald, another part to Charles Douglas, and retained a last part for himself. He was still listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshieils in 1811. His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1812. It is said that he was of a much less ‘morose temper’ than his brother. In 1776 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw; he was described as being from Hawick Parish and his wife from Minto Parish. Their children were: Christian (b.1777), who married Archibald Dickson, her cousin; Walter (b.1778), who succeeded to Wauchope; Archibald (b.1779), who succeeded to Howcleuch; Charles (1782–1856), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1782), who married Hugh Mitchell from Dumfries; Robert, (1786–1833), who also died unmarried; James (b.1789), who was with the East India Company; William (b.1792), who was a Captain in India; Agnes, who died young; and Jessie, who married John Cockburn. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who died in 1816, aged 24, was probably one of his daughters. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 was probably also a daughter. He died at Wauchope and was buried in the family aisle at St. Mary’s. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Wilson and their son John was baptised in 1783. Charles (18th C.) tenant in Synton Mains in 1786. It was recorded in Selkirk that he accused 2 servants of other farmers with destroying a crop of turnips. He could be the same as one of the other Charleses. Charles ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’ (1759–1840) son of Charles and Janet Porteous. He was a Hawick linen manufacturer, who was descended from the Boonraw Scotts. He was based on the Cross Wynd and then moved to the Crescent, the location later being the showroom of John Laing’s; he gained this property from his wife, whose father James Ekron (d.1787), merchant in Hawick, had formerly owned it. He is probably the weaver Charles who (along with hosier Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1786 for George Blaikie and Agnes (perhaps his sister). His house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, opposite the end of the Kirk Wynd. He is probably the Charles recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of the ‘particatle lands’ of Hawick at Allars; this land was feued by later in the 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s

‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He witnessed a baptism for his son Charles in 1828. It was said (by his grandson, James Murray) that he employed 6–8 weavers, mostly working from home, producing ‘custom work, in which department he produced the finest diapers and napery, being the only weaver of these sorts in the district’. He also sold linen goods at St. Boswell’s Fair, ‘Boswell’s Fair sarkin being a well-known material at that time’, for which purpose ‘he employed several old women constantly spinning, – some in the country, others in the town’. It is said that when he was trying to seek a position in the excise for his son John he went to Scott of Harden for support, claiming to be a relation through the Scotts of Synton. In 1791 he married Betty (b.1771), daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron; she was said to be known to her family (for unknown reasons) as Mary or Margaret, although she was born Elizabeth and recorded as ‘Betty Oliver’ in the 1791 marriage record. Their children included: Agnes (1792–1839); Charles (b.1794) of Bourtree Place; Janet (1796–98); Janet (again, 1798–1845), the 3rd child, who married James Henderson, carrier and Hillisland ‘ Laird’; Isobel (1799–1831), who married Thomas Anderson; Mary (1803–88), the 6th child, who married Thomas Murray and was mother of Sir James A.H. Murray; John (b.1806), who worked for the excise and married Catherine Watson; and Elizabeth, who died young. His tombstone was close to the south wall of St. Mary’s Kirk, but when it became illegible his son Charles was going to have it re-carved, but instead used the stone to record his own family. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Stewart and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1799; the witnesses were the Associate Congregation. He could be the tailor at Burnflat recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. Charles (18th/19th C.) glover of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is so recorded in the club minutes of 1812. Charles (b.c.1765) carperter in Lilliesleaf. He was living on the south side of Main Street in 1841. Charles (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Mains. According to ‘Freelance’ he once said ‘A’ folk should read the Bible and the newspapers, the Bible to see how folk should leeve, and the newspapers to see how they do leeve’. Charles (18th/19th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was probably related to George, who was there at the same time. Charles (18th/19th C.) servant at Tower in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. Charles (1782–1856) born in Hawick Parish, he was 3rd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was farmer at Bush in Evesdale, being recorded there in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837), with Archibald of Howcleuch also listed (his brother). He remained unmarried. He may be the Charles baptised in Hawick in 1783, with no parents names listed. Charles Balfour, W.S. (1782–1838) 3rd son of Charles of Woll and Elizabeth Waugh. He trained as a lawyer, was apprenticed to Archibald Gibson and became Writer to the Signet in 1806. He became an Honorary Burgess of Peebles in 1823. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Yair. He is probably the Charles, W.S., recorded in letters relating to the division of Ettrick Kirk in 1726 and 1827, preserved in the Walter Ma-son Collection. In 1818 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’), youngest daughter of Alexander Ker, minister of Stobo (and she died in 1870). Their son Charles inherited Sunderland Hall in Selkirkshire and changed his name to Scott-Plummer. They also had 4 daughters: Catherine; Elizabeth, who married Capt. Alexander Munro; Isabella; and Barbara. He inherited Woll from his nephew Charles Andrew, but held the estate for only a brief period before his death. Woll passed to his brother Col. John. Charles (1783–1845) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, where his children were baptised. He married Margaret Douglas (1791–1879) in Wilton Parish in 1813; she was daughter of Archibald from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Dr. John (b.1814); Jessy (b.1815); Isobel (b.1816); Archibald (b.1818); George (b.1819), who started a cabinet factory; Charles (b.1821); Andrew (b.1823); and Jessy (again, b.1824). In 1834 he emigrated with his family to Canada, settling at the farm of Blenheimhill in Dumfries Township, Waterloo County. His family arrived in the Galt area about 10 days before a cholera outbreak, in which he and his son John helped. His cousin William Knox lived on a neighbouring farm called Langside. He is buried in Chesterfield United Cemetery, Oxford County, Ontario. Charles of Knowesouth (1784–1854) son of Thomas and Jean Rutherford, and grandson of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was born in Crailing Parish. He was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott, and had the first Canto of ‘The Lady of the Lake’ read to him at Ashiestiel in 1809. He inherited the estate of Knowesouth from his... mother, but later sold it to William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He also resided at Nisbet Mill for a while. In 1831 he obtained a lease for the farm at Milsington. He was at Milsington in 1841, with his 3 younger children, as well as Mary and James (who were probably his siblings) and 2 female servants. In 1851 there were 5 farm and house servants living with his family at Milsington. In 1814 he married Esther, daughter of Kelso architect William Elliot. Their children were: Thomas (b.1815), who succeeded as tenant at Milsington; William (b.1816), doctor in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; John (b.1818), who moved to Australia; Charles (b.1819), who died abroad; Robert (b.1821), who moved to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1822), who died young; Walter (b.1824), also died abroad; Jane, who married Hawick lawyer James Carmichael; and Mary. Charles (b.c.1785) agricultural labourer in Southdean Parish. He was at the Burns in 1841. Charles (b.c.1790) tailor at the Forkins in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Jane and they had a son, Andrew, who was also a tailor. Charles (1794–1861) eldest son of Charlie of the Crescent and uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a weaver and heddle maker at 5 Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was at Bourtree Place, listed as a handloom weaver, but by 1851 was a heddle maker there. He may be the handloom weaver of that name in about 1829 he helped rebuild the steam-powered looms that had been brought from Manchester for use in Wilton Mills. He married Margaret, daughter of Yeddie Smail (or ‘Smeal’, d.1882). Their children included: Eliza (1821–42); Margaret (1822–1902), who married baker Robert Oliver from Milsington. In 1814 he married Esther, daughter of William Munro and Agnes Scott (perhaps his aunt) and Agnes again. Charles (b.1798/9) farm worker in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside. He married Anne Waldie in 1822 and their children included: Janet (or 'Jessie', b.1823); Peter Brown (b.1824); Charles (b.1827); Margaret (b.1832); Mary (b.1839); and Charlotte (b.1849). Charles (1805–69) son of Walter, he was a boot and shoemaker of Teviot Square, i.e. the Sandbed, where he was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was also a grocer and spirit merchant, being based at 6 Sandbed. His address is given as Slitrig Bridge in 1841, Teviot Square in 1851 and 6 Sandbed in 1861. In 1841 in Hawick Parish he married Jessie (1817–88), daughter of William Laidlaw from Hobkirk. Their children were: Walter (b.1842), who died unmarried; Helen Douglas (1843–1928), unmarried, who had a family tree for the Laidlaws; William Laidlaw (‘Wowie’, 1847–1922), who was also a shoemaker; Isabella Mary (1852–1928); and Charles Douglas (1854–76), who died unmarried. He is buried in the Wellogate. He is probably the Charles whose wife’s heirs are recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Charles (19th C.) married Elizabeth Preston in Hawick in 1836. Charles (19th C.) married Janet Murray in Hawick in 1840. Charles Andrew of Woll (1817–1838) elder son of William of Woll. His father died in 1820, while he was still a child. He died unmarried, and was succeeded in the Woll estate by his uncle Charles Balfour Scott. Charles of Howcleuch (1819–95) 2nd surviving son of Walter Scott of Wauchope. He studied sheep management with the factor of Lord Breadalbane. He farmed at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish and Dykeraw in Southdean. But he was more interested in hunting than farming, being a member of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was a keen riding partner of Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood and the Hendersons of Abbotrule. Afterward he lived at Lintalee, where his mother joined him later in her life. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847, and when he retired he was the oldest member. He became attached to his sister-in-law’s sister, Margaret Amelia, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts (of Ravensbourne Park, Kent), but was financially unable to marry her; she married Capt. Robert Main, had 2 sons, but became a widow, after which he was able to marry her, although she had to give up the inheritance she had from her deceased first husband’s family. They married in 1862 and were said to have been happy together till the end of their days. That same year he came into inheritance from the death of his brother Archibald. And in 1874 he succeeded to Howcleuch from his uncle Archibald. Thereafter he purchased Langlee and had the house largely rebuilt. He is probably the ‘Trustee of Mr. Scott of Wauchope’ recorded as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in about 1860. He was recorded at Langlee and Lintalee in a directory of 1868. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard along with his wife. He was succeeded by his nephew Arthur Francis. He matriculated arms, the same as those of Scott of Wauchope with a crest of counterchanged. His portrait was painted by Sir George Reid. Charles (b.1821) see Charles Scott-Plummer. Charles (b.1822/3) shepherd at Brairdliehope in Liddesdale according to the 1861 census. He was born in Teviothead Parish, son of agricultural labourer Adam, who was later a travelling grocer at Raesknowe. He married Isabella Hope, who was from Westerkirk (where some of their children were baptised) and their children included: Isabella (b.1850); Adam (b.1851); Thomas Campbell (b.1853); Janet (b.1854/5); John (b.1856/7); and Robert (b.1859/60). His mother, Janet Scott (nee Leithead) from Kirkton, was living with his family in 1861. Charles (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jessie Laidlaw and their children included: Walter (b.1842); Helen (b.1843); William (b.1847); and Isabella Mary (b.1852). Charles (1824–96) son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a cabinet-maker at 4 Bourtree Place, according to the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory the firm is listed as ‘Charles, jun. & Adam, East end’. In 1849 he married Annie Knox and in 1854 they emigrated to Winnipeg, where they had a family of 9 children. Charles William Douglas (b.1827) son of David, who farmed at Priesthaugh. He was recorded as farm steward in 1861, living with his father at Priesthaugh. In 1857 he donated some rocks to the Archæological Society. He was listed as farmer at Priesthaugh. In 1868. Charles S. (d.1881) son of Thomas (‘Sly Tammie’) and brother of Walter (of Lyle & Scott). He was a wool merchant at 18 Oliver Crescent. He married Isabella Melrose. Their children included Mary E., Charlotte H., Agnes H., James M. (who died at Loos in 1915), Isabella and Margaret. Charles (1834–1912) 3rd son of John, tenant in West Deoraine. He farmed at Over Whitlaw and emigrated to Iowa in 1901, like his brother Alexander. In 1865 he married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter Elliot, farmer at Over Kirkhope. Their children were: John Sibbald, who married his cousin Wilhelmina Young Scott and secondly Gertrude Ducket; Walter (1869–1911); Henry (b.1871), a doctor in Chicago; Gideon (b.1873), who married Effie Smith from Selkirk and lived at Keith, Banff; Charles Alexander (b.1883), a chemist at Sheldon, Iowa; Margaret, who lived at Sheldon; Christina Agnes, who married Elmer S. Gardner; Wilhelmina Elliot, who married Dr. George Skene; Mary Arbuthnott, who married Dr. B.C. Stewart; and Grace Elliot, a nurse in Sheldon, Iowa. Charles (b.1853) 2nd son of John, estate carpenter under 4 Lairds of Edgerston. He was a forester and carpenter and also worked at Edgerston, but moved to Weens in about 1900. He married Mary Story in 1879 and had a son. Charles (1857–1940) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at Milsington. He took over the lease from his father and was able to purchase the farm from the Duke of Buccleuch after WWI. He was thus the first Scott who was Laird of Milsington. He was known as an expert judge of Cheviot sheep. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He married Mary, daughter of John Tullie, farmer at Bowanhill. Their children included: Thomas (b.1899); and John Charles (b.1903). Charles (19th/20th C.) Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, who lived at Tandlaw. Charles William (b.1866) son of joiner Adam. He was a general dealer in Trinidad. He married Margaret, daughter of George Blaikie of Bridge House. They had 2 daughters, Sybil and Margaret. Charlotte (b.1766) christened in Ashkirk, she was ‘begotten in fornication with Captain Scott of Gaudilands’, her mother being Isobel Scott in Longtown. Her father was probably Capt. Walter of Crumhaugh (since that family often also had the appellation ‘of Goldielands’). Christian (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1703. This could be the same Christian listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the Christian on the subscribers list for the new Kirk bell in 1793/4. Christian ‘Christy’ nee Anderson (18th C.) wife of Charles of Crumhaugh. She received a widow’s pension from the Duke of Buccleuch, her husband having been factor to the Duke, as well as a distant cousin. She is recorded along with her husband’s trustees in 1758, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. Her son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Christian (b.c.1788) gate-keeper at the Wilton Lodge lodge-house. She is recorded there in 1841, along with Margaret and William, who were presumably her children, and Christian Davidson, who may have been a younger child or a grandchild. Christian (b.c.1790) milliner at 41 High Street. She was already a widow in 1841. Her children included William, Ann, and Jean (or Jane). Christian (b.1804) daughter of Robert, who was farmer at Todshawhaugh. Her mother was Janet Jardine from Thorlieshope. She was a boarder at the school at Linhope in Yarrow Water, as described by Rev. James Russell. In 1827 she married James Dickson of Housebyres. Christopher (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and they had a daughter Christian (b.1798).

Christopher Bartle Hugh (1924–97) of Gala, son of Philip Beaumont Frere and Jean Winifred Mary Makdougall Scott-Makdougall. He was educated at Eton and King’s College, Cambridge. In 1941 he succeeded his uncle John to Gala and changed his surname to Scott. He married Anne Margaret D’Arcy, daughter of Henry Francis Hobart Kerr in 1948. Their children were: John Philip Henry Schomberg (b.1952), who succeeded; Dominic Christopher Hugh (b.1955); Julian Sebastian Frere (1956–84); Rupert Benjamin Bartle Frere (b.1958); and Sebastian Simon Frere (b.1961). Cochran (b.1817/8) from Neilston in Renfrewshire, he was a nailer in Hawick. He lived on Punch Bowl Close in 1841, with his wife Betsy and son Robert. By 1851 the family had moved to Coldstream. Constance Emily Monteaeth (b.1860s) only child of William Monteaeth and Amelia Douglas. She became the 9th Baroness of (b.1860s) only child of William Monteath and Constance Emily Monteath to Coldstream.

as being kinsman of Archibald Earl of Angus (although any family relationship at that point is unknown). In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. In 1471 he witnessed a sasine for lands at Borthwicksheils. He was Ranger of Ettrick Ward in at last the period 1467–78, having for his fee the lease of Cacrabank and later Eldinholpe. In 1472 he and his son David were confirmed as Keepers of Hermitage Castle and Bailies of the Lordship of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, for a period of 17 years. In 1472 he was appointed as one of Earl’s bailies to give sasine of the lands on Hermitage Water to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King’s couriers was paid to send him and the Earl of Angus a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1475 he witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Caverton. In 1478 there is a record of Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick complaining that he owed the church 44 merks. He probably remained as Keeper of Hermitage about up until his death. Sometime shortly before he died his house and lands at Buccleuch were plundered by Simon and Matthew Routledge (tenants at the Trows). He had already extended the house at Branxholme, and the primary residence of the family moved there. In 1475/6 he had the lands of Kirkurd resigned to him as superior, the lands being the dowry for the marriage of his daughter with John, son of John Lindsay of ‘Cowbanton’ce. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation relating to the Kers of Cessford. In 1482 Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton in order that a new infeftment be made in his favour. He was probably the second Scott to sit in the Scottish Parliament, in 1481 as ‘of Kirkurd’ and in 1487 as ‘Lord of Buccleuch’. In 1484 he and his son Robert were made joint Bailies of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, specifically Melrose-lands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie for some of the same lands. Also in 1484 he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick and witnessed the associated sasine. In 1487 he appointed his son Robert as procurator for resigning into the King’s hands his lands and baronies. In 1488 he resigned his lands of Branxholme, Eckford, Lanton, Buccleuch and Kirkurd to the King, in order for them to be regranted into the barony of Branxholme. This was because of service he and his son Robert gave to the King at the Battle of Blackness; this charter lists his heirs at that time. Also in 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford and he was pledge for leases granted to Walter Scott in Tushielaw and William Roger and Robert Scott in Winterburgh. In 1491 his leases of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinholpe were all vacant because of his death. In 1492 there is a record in the Kign’s Treasurer’s accounts of money for his ‘ward and marriage’s. He is said to have married a daughter of Thomas, Lord Somerville (she was left 240 sheep, 11 cows and 11 oxen in his will, but was not named). His children included: Walter, who married Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, but died before him and without an heir; David, who married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, and whose son Walter succeeded; Robert of Allanaugh, to whom in 1484/5 he granted the lands and Lordship of Whitchester; William (possibly of Foulshiels), mentioned in 1471/2 as the 3rd son; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig; Margaret, who married James Haig of Bemersyde; an unnamed daughter, who married John, eldest son of John Lindsay of Covington; and Isabella, who married Sir Simon Carruthers of Mouswald and secondly John Murray of Falahill. He also appears to have had a son John, who is mentioned in his will as ‘his son’, and also Archibald, mentioned as his son when he took over the lease of Eldinholpe in 1487. His will and testament lists his goods, a large number of people with whom he had financial obligations, and others who were bequeathed money or items; his goods were valued at £740, he was owed £380 and he gave money, livestock or grain to more than 40 people (most of them probably local). He is buried in the Church of the Holy Cross, Peebles, and bequeathed 40 shillings to the Church of Hawick, as well as Peebles and Rakleburn. David (15th C.) recorded as customs officer of Inverkeithing in the period 1486–88. He was also Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1487. He was probably related to John, who held a similar office in Inverkeithing. Either he or a later David was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1512. David (c.1450–bef. 1484) second son of Sir David of Branxholme. By 1471 he was heir apparent, since his older brother Walter had died before him. In 1476 he witnessed a charter of Robert Scott of Haining to his cousin, Thomas Middlemas, for lands in Peeblesshire. A ‘tack’ of 1478 by Archibald, Earl of Angus confirms to him lands, farms, rents, mill, capons, etc. within the Lordship of Selkirk. In 1479 Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick, brought an action against him for wrongfully collecting £44 of tax, which he said belonged to the church; it is unclear how this was resolved. He married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, this being arranged in 1471/2 by his father (who was Keeper of Hermitage) and Archibald Douglas (who was Lord of Liddesdale, later 5th Earl of Angus and known as ‘Bell-the-Cat’), her brother; the couple were jointly given Dryfesdale. In 1471/2, along with his father, he became Keeper of Hermitage and Bailie of the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, the appointments being made by the Earl of Angus. He pre-deceased his father and the titles were inherited by his (probably only) son, who became Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. David (15th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Midsteid de Gildhouse’ in Ettrick Ward, with Sir David of Buccleuch as his pledge. David of Whitehaugh (15th C.) gained the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 for yearly payment of a penny. The estate would remain in his family for about 400 years (although in fact it may have passed between different branches of the Scotts). He must have been related to Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. His son may have been Philip of Heap. He may also have been related to the Robert of Whitehaugh recorded in 1499. David (15th C.) bequeathed 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Dauid Scote’ and was probably local. David of Hassendean and Galalaw (d.bef. 1515) eldest son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was granted the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall by his father James of Kirkurd in 1494. At the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 he obtained remission for the following crimes: stealing 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell, in the company of Ninian Armstrong; stealing 19 cows and 3 horses from the Earl of Bothwell at Castlelaw; stealing 12 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell at ‘Laudonia’; and stealing 3 horses from Blackbarony. His surety was Walter of Howesley. He is listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded in 1510/1 in a charter giving him the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (probably later Burnhead and Burnfoot) and lands in Easter Hassendean called ‘Dedrig’. Also in 1510/1 he gave his ‘brother german’ Robert the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswood’ in the Baron of Hassendean. He is probably the David of Galalaw who in 1502 was surety for John, son of James of Broadmeadows. In 1512 he was witness to the sasine where Walter of Synton transferred Harden to his brother William. In 1515 wardship of his lands were given to Walter of Buccleuch and to the King’s tutor, John Stewart, Duke of Albany. Sir Alexander may have been his son, and they may both have perished at Flodden (if he existed). He appears to have been succeeded (in Hassendean) by his brothers John and then William. It seems very likely that he is the same man as David of Galalaw. David ‘Lady’ or ‘the Lady’ (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was ‘prope stirkershawis’ (i.e. near to Stiches). He had remission for stealing 60 sheep from Patrick Paterson at Colmslie, with his surety being William Turnbull in Minto. He is also described as ‘in Stikschawis’ (i.e. Stiches) in another case in 1502 when he was pardoned for several crimes: stealing a horse, 40 sheep and other items from Blackhaugh; bringing in the Robsons, Dodds and Charles from England to burn Hermiston, belonging to Adam Rutherford; stealing 5 horses from Hermiston, and burning houses and grain there; bringing in Archibald Armstrong, Ninina Armstrong, David Turnbull of Banchester and other ‘traitors of Leven and Liddesdale’ to burn 6 houses and 7 horses at Minto Craigend; bringing in the same men to steal cows and horses from the tenants of Minto; and common theft. His surety was William Turnbull of Minto. He also had remission for bringing the ‘Armstrangis’ (presumably a generic term for Liddesdale thieves) and ‘Traitores of Levin’ (i.e. thieves from across the Border) to steal 180 oxen and cows, 20 horses and goods from the tenants of Synton; since the Scotts of Stiches were closely related to the Scotts of Synton, there may have been a family dispute involved in this raid. He was also implicated in the murder of George Newton and George Cavers in the same raid. Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was indicted for involvement in this or a similar incident. Also in 1502 he had a remission for stealing a horse, sheep and household goods from ‘John Spedane and Andrew Michelsoone furth of Blackhalche’ (whether the one in Rulewater or Ewesdale is unclear), as well as for bringing ‘the Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen, to the Burning of Hirdmanstoun, belonging to Adam Ruthirfurde’ (probably ‘Hermiston’ in Lilliesleaf Parish), including stealing 5 horses and burning corn and buildings there. In addition he led Archibald Armstrong, Ninia Armstrong, David Turnbull of Banchester and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’ on a raid to Minto.
Craignend, where they burned the farms and seven horses, and stole cows, horses and goods. On top of that he stole 60 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this incident possibly also involving Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole), as well as 6 cows and other goods from William and John Aitken at the Haining. William Turnbull of Minto was surety for him for answering to these offences. Note that Robert of Stiches was the Laird at this time, and it is unclear how (or if) they were related; it is possible he was the David, son of Robert of Stiches and Synton, who was recorded in 1526. He may also be the David, brother to William in Harden, who was listed among those Borders men pardoned in 1526 for their role in attacking the Earl of Arran; if so then this would support the idea that he was a younger son of Robert of Stiches and Synton. He may also have been related to the slightly earlier David of Whitehaugh. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘de Franciscuni’ on the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501. He was listed as a debtor along with ‘Ade Scot’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. It is unclear where his lands might have been. Presumably the same David ‘de francia’ is recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502, when Adam ‘in aldinershope’ (possible Adam of Annelshope) had remission for resetting and intercommuning with him, as well as with Archibald Armstrong and ‘traitors of Leven’ and Liddesdale. Additionally in 1502 Walter of Midgehope had remission for resetting him, particularly in the theft of 6 oxen and cows from Glensax. David of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is recorded in 1502 as ‘of Tuschelaw’ when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with his son William Scott, as well as the Armstrongs. He is probably the ‘Davie wi the Tod’s Tail’ of Howpasley, referred to by Satchells, who married a daughter of Robert Elliot (12th) of Redheugh. His brother Walter was also sometimes known as ‘of Tushielaw’. His children were: Adam, who succeeded; (probably) John of Thirlestane; William; and Robert of Bowhill. David of Galalaw (15th/16th C.) listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He was a witness in 1507/8 to the document relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick for Scott of Whitchesters. He is recorded in a remission of 1510 as ‘of Gallolaw’ for assisting rebels; he is named along with John and Walter Scott and John Lindsay. He is also recorded in 1511 as being ‘of Gallowlaw’ when he claimed the lands of ‘Lang Hassindene’ of which he had been tenant, and that had been owned previously by Elizabeth Cunningham. However, 3 years later she was confirmed in these lands by the superior, Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. It seems likely he is the same man as David of Hassendean. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Quhithauche’ in 1510 when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Fulahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting he was related to some (or all) of these branches. He may also have been related to Robert of Whitehaugh who is mentioned in 1499. David (d.bef. 1532) recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk in 1516 when he witnessed a document in Glasgow, which is preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1526/7 he witnessed another document in which Archibald, Earl of Angus and others were directed not to molest Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton. In 1527 he purchased a tenement with house in Selkirk and witnessed a document relating to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528. In 1532 he was deceased when his son and heir Alexander received sasine for his lands in Selkirk. David (15th/16th C.) chaplain to Sir Walter of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1527 when ‘in the name of his master Walter Scot knight’ he requested details about a royal breve from James Bessat, Sheriff in Selkirk. He is distinct from David, Vicar of Ashkirk, who witnessed this same document; however, it is possible he is the same as the later Vicar of Cavers. Probably the same chaplain witnessed a transaction in 1532/3 involving East Haining for Margaret, wife of Selkirk Burgess John. David of Howpasley, see David of Tushielaw. David (d.c.1544) first son of Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch. He was given the baronies of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd and the Lordships of Buccleuch, Rankiburn and Lempitlaw by his father in 1528 (with liferent to himself), but predeceased him. He is recorded as son and heir of Walter in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He may also have had a son Walter, who was heir to Sir Walter (mentioned in 1551), but must also have died, since Sir Walter, son of Sir William of...
Kirkurd (his brother) succeeded. In 1574 Dame Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter of Branhulme, was granted the ward and non-entries of certain fees previously gifted to him; he is there described as ‘David Scott, sone and apparand air for the tyme to vnuquhile Schir Walter Scott of B[r]anxhelme, knycht, qhilk vnuquhile Dauid wes gudschir brothir to Walter Scott, now apparand of Branxhelme’. Also in 1574 his grand-nephew, Walter, was served heir to his baronies of Branhulme and Eckford, as well as other lands; this was presumably a legal formality, since he (David) had never in fact succeeded to these baronies. David (16th C.) Vicar of Cavers, recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1535, 1539, 1541 and 1544. He may also be the ‘sir David’ recorded in other transactions in Selkirk (with Cavers not mentioned). In 1539 and 1544 he was ‘vicar pensionary in Cavers’. He witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. He may be the ‘sir David’ who purchased a piece of land near Selkirk in 1541. In 1543 he ‘constituted commissary by apostolic authority’, but the rest of the transaction is blank or illegible. Perhaps the same David was recorded as Vicar of Cavers in 1561 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Note that he was distinct from David, Vicar of Ashkirk, who was dead by 1532. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. David (16th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ (i.e. Clarelaw) in when he gave back the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ (near Hassendean) to William of Hassendean in a ‘letter of reversion’ (i.e. following a loan). He was also witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden to William Scott in 1535. In 1541/2 he was one of the nobles serving as cau- towed by James, son of his brother Walter), who was also executed. This event played a role in the deadly feud between the Elliots and the Scotts, which lasted for the next several years. He may have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. David (16th C.) servant to Walter Turnbull of Hobsburn. He is listed in 1567, along with his employer, among men were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer accusations of raiding into England. David (d.bef. 1585) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother William acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them; the delivery was witnessed by William of Tushielaw and the acknowledgement by the Scotts of Bowden and Northhouse. He was said to have ‘fallin in my hand accidentlie’ by Sir Walter of Branxholme, while he was a minor, his death being related to the slaying of Sir Walter’s servant at Braidhaugh, Hob Dalgleish. The resulting feud was settled through a bond of 1585, between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh; however, it is unclear whether his own close family (brothers are mentioned) were simply being forced to capitulate through this bond, since they appear not to have been directly related to the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time. David (16th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Burgess of Hawick. In 1579 he purchased a tenement in Hawick for £60 from Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm. This piece of land was on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Simon Sanderson and George Halliday. However, Bailie John refused to give sasine, since ‘twa or thre inhabitantis of the burcht of Hawik’ alleged that they had rights to the same tenement. He and his brother John were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. David (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh (saddler John ‘Hairlaw’ and tailor Donald ‘Mek-dull’) were cautioners for him that he would not harm the vassals or servants of William, Earl of Angus; the nature of the dispute is unclear. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and William among 200 Scotts and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Drea. In 1594 he was denounced for not ‘finding lawburrows’ for James Tweedie of Drumelzier; he was described as ‘son natural of Walter Scott of Gouldielandis’. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David (16th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592. It is unclear what branch of the Scots he may have been from. David of Stobo Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. David (16th/17th C.) brother of the deceased Laird of Synton (either George or possible Walter) who was in a gang of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the custody of the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Walter Scott, called ‘Old Walter’ in Synton was also involved, so possibly his brother or other near relative. David (16th/17th C.) son of the late John ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’. In 1609 he had an action against Hector Turnbull of Barnhills and his son and heir John for not paying what they had borrowed from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. He also had a brother John, who inherited his father’s lands in 1609. David (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Newlands’ in 1643, when listed as owner of lands in Belses in Ancrum Parish in 1643, valued at £156. David of Canonbie (1627–48) son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and younger brother of Francis, 2nd Earl. He was born at Newark Castle. He was listed among those on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648, but is said to have died in that year, apparently in battle (and unmarried). However, his testament and inventory is confirmed in 1666 (by Jean, his only surviving sibling), making it unclear when he died; it could be that Jean, Countess of Tweeddale, was making clear that she was still owed part of his share of the amount given in their father’s will, after the death of all other legitimate siblings. David (d.c.1685) Commissary Depute of Peebles, Collector of the Forest and Commissioner of Excise and the Militia for Selkirkshire in the 1680s. He is probbly the ‘Collector of Excise and Supply for Selkirkshire’ recorded in 1683, 1684 and 1685. He was probably brother of the Laird of Tushielaw, although it is unclear which one. David (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberrie. In 1663/4 he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie. David (d.c.1683) tenant in Blackhope (although it is unclear which one). His will was recorded in 1683. David (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married ‘Lizie Loran’, i.e. Elizabeth Lorraine, in 1699 (she was surely related to other Lorraines in Ashkirk at about the same time). Their children included Janet (b.1695). It is possible that the same David married Elizabeth Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1699 and had children: Robert (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1706). David of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) said to be descended from Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He is recorded being ‘in Merriela in Cavers parish’ when his son was baptised in Hawick in 1708. He married Margaret, a younger daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. They had a son, also David, who was a Captain in the Royal Regiment of Artillery and served in the American Wars in the 1770s. He may also have had a sister, Janet, who married William Borthwick, farmer at Glendinning. His children included James (b.1708), baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses James Chisholme and Thomas Wright. He could be the David, resident at Merrlyaw, whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. He could also be the David who was at Giddenscleuch in 1727 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Cavers Parish. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1737 he was at Outersideshiel when his son James was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his, include Isabel (b.1746) and Margaret (b.1753). David (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Heap Inn’ in 1747. He married Mary Cowan in 1744, the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes. Their daughter Isabel was baptised in Wilton in 1747, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Dryden. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in 1791. He was also listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. His daughter Ann died in 1798. He could be the David who married Marion Thomline in Wilton in 1758 and had children Jean (b.1760), James (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Andrew (b.1768), John (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1776), David (18th C.) farmer at Dewyhaugh (in Teviothead Parish), when he paid the cart tax in 1791. He was also listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His son is probably the David junior, labourer at ‘Deweyhaugh’ on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish; he may have been related to mason Robert, who was also on the ballot in 1799. David (18th C.) shepherd at Merrylaw in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Subst.’ suggested that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with James Boswell Scott acting as his substitute. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Merrylaw. David (18th/19th C.) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was in the Chair for the Wisp Club dinner of 1844. He was also a subscriber to John Learmont’s book of poetry. He was a friend to the poor. In 1807 he married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1848, aged 73. They had daughters: Margaret (1809–23), and Mary (1813–41), who married Robert Stavert, merchant in Manchester. He is buried in Castle-} and 2505 hill acres, employing 5 labourers. He was still there in the 1861 census, farming 3300 acres and employing 5 men. He married Christian Aitchison and their children included: Margaret (b.1824); Walter H. (b.1823/4); Charles William Douglas (b.1827); and David C. (b.1830/1). He could be the David, son of Hugh and Margaret Amos, born in Langholm in 1791. David Dundas (b.1800/1) of Briery Yards, from Midlothian. He was a historian and friend of David Laing. He translated theological works, including Ranke’s ‘History of the Popes of Rome’. There was a publication of 1856 describing a local disagreement ‘Clerical Despotism and Synod of Justice, or True State of the Case between the Rev. J.A. Wallace, Free Church, Hawick, and David D. Scott, Esq., Briery-yards, &c.’ He chaired the centenary Burns night at the Commerical Inn in 1859. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards, along with the official owner, Thomas Turnbull, for whom he was the main trustee. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Mary C., and their children included Katherine J. and Elizabeth. David (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Linton and their son Gideon was baptised in 1830. David (b.c.1810) stocking-maker in Wilton and Hawick. He was probably the David listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, but living in Hawick in 1835 and 1840. He was David ‘Senr.’ at Dovemount on the 1841 census, living with David ‘Jnr.’ who was apparently just 5 years younger; he could be the warehouseman recorded at Dovemount in 1835 and in Hawick in 1840. He is probably the stocking-maker David whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1840. David (1834–1902) son of Thomas and Janet Notman, and grandson of wright James Scott. He was apprenticed to blacksmith John Manuel in Lilliesleaf. He was living near Liverpool when he got married in 1859 and later lived at Ladydaw Place, then at Pathfoot and Damside. In 1861 he was recorded as a blacksmith living at Whitrupie Tunnel along with other labourers; his wife and first child were in Ladydaw Place with his in-laws, wool-spinner Walter and Mary Riddell. In 1859 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Riddell. Their children were: Mary (1859–87), who married her cousin John Robson: Thomas (1861–1946); Janet Notman (b.1864), who died young; Janet (again, b.1866); and Jean (b.1869); Walter (b.1871), who also died young; Elizabeth (b.1876); and Ann Robson (1879–1947). The first 6 children were born in Hawick. In 1874 he emigrated to Ottawa, Canada with his family. He became head blacksmith at Gibson Quarry, Beamsville, Ontario. David (19th C.) mason at Bonchester Bridge. He was Parish Registrar in Hobkirk. He married Helen, daughter of Peter Bruce, who was born at Swinnie. David (19th C.) mason in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1865. In September of that year he had the added distinction of leading the procession up to the Town’s new water supply on the Allan. David (192/3– ) born and raised in Hawick, he worked for the Hawick News and then the Cumberland Evening News, before starting at the Scotsman in 1968. He eventually became the Scottish Government editor for the newspaper, and in 1999 was awarded an O.B.E. for contributions to Scottish journalism. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1999. David ‘Davy’ (1958/9– ) attended Trinity and the High School, he became a housing director for Barratt’s. Regarded as one of the greatest Burns authorities in the Borders, he has been a highly sought-after speaker at dinners. He is an honorary member of Hawick Burns Club and the 1514 Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2016. Dickson (b.1804/5) from Melrose, he was a tailor in Newmill, recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Thomas Borthwick, farmer at Newmill. Their children included Thomas (who worked as a miller), Alexander (a shepherd) and Jane (who may have married Mr. Bell, farmer at Wattamman, Dumfriesshire). Douglas Gordon (1896–1717) son of Thomas B., he was born in Hawick. He was educated at George Watson’s School and served as a 2nd Lieut. with the Royal Flying Corps. He died in a flying accident while training in Shropshire, misjudging the distance in a lopp-the-loop. He is commemorated on a memorial at the Riverdale Collegiate Institute in Toronto (where his parents lived) and also on the gravestone of his grandfather Walter Scott in Wilton Cemetery. Duncan (13th C.) son and heir of Michael of Balwearie, who may have been the ‘wizard’. He consented to his father’s gift to Dunfermline monastery, also confirmed by Alexander II in 1231. He also granted and consented to a further gift of lands in Fife and Perthshire, sometime before 1250 He had 2 sons: Sir Michael, 1st Laird of Balwearie; and Gilbert, who witnessed a charter in 1236. Duncan (13th/14th C.) son of Michael of Balwearie. He paid homage to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as ‘Duncanus Scotus’. Also in 1296 his wife Mary petitioned King Edward I for support after he was captured at Dunbar; he is there ‘Duncan le Escot’. In 1297/8 there is a record of expenses for his imprisonment in England. In 1310 he was part of an agreement for lands in Perthshire. Duthac (d.c.1491) recorded paying rent in ‘Uvir Argati’ in Doune in the period 1480–90, along with his wife Janet. His widow was still paying rent in 1492 and 1495. He was presumably naed after the Scottish saint. It is unclear how he was connected with other Scotts. Ebenezer (b.c.1775) tenant at Burnflat in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Eben Scott weaver Burnflat’ in 1797 and 1798 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; he was annotated with ‘deserted’; however, in 1798 it is recorded that Robert Turnbull acted as substitute for him. It was written that Turnbull, who had been on the first list, volunteered in his place, with him being ‘irregularly returned in the first list . . . and proved himself to be more than Twenty three years of age at the time of the return’; this was accepted by the Committee. However, he was selected for service again in 1799, but failed to appear and was later declared unfit for service. In 1841 he was listed as a woollen hand-loom weaver at Burnflat. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, Gilbert and Agnes. Edmund (17th C.) recorded as servant and ‘officier’ to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same Edmund is listed separately as ‘officier in Tivotdaill’. Edward (16th C.) recorded in a document in the Glasgow Cathedral chartulary in 1525. He appears to have been a Burgess of Glasgow. Edward (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Elizabeth (15th C.) received 6 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is listed among servants of the Laird. of Sir William. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527/8 as heir of the deceased Robert, who held lands in Selkirk. Elizabeth nee Ker (15th/16th C.) daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford. She firstly married Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk and secondly married Sir Walter of Branxholme. She long outlived her husband, who died in 1504. In 1510 she received the liferent of Deloraine and Warleshope. In 1539 she and her son Sir Walter sought to remove the tenants from their lands of Annelshope in Ettrick (which she held in liferent) and then she moved her own livestock there. She was described at that time as the ‘old lady of Buccleuch’. She was burnt to death within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. Elizabeth (16th C.) daughter of William and grand-daughter of the Sir Walter who was murdered in 1552. After her father’s death, her mother remarried to Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and so she is sometimes referred to as Elizabeth Murray. According to a 1568/9 contract between Scotts and Kerrs (atonning for the murder) she had to marry the grandson of Sir Andrew of Hirsel, when he became 14 years of age. He was John, 2nd son of Sir Walter Kerr of Cessford. In fact she married John Carmichael of Meadowflat. Elizabeth nee Hay (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, tenant in Essenside, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, who was killed on the Ettrick Water in about 1616. She was daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield) and was also known as Elspeth. She was involved in several years of legal battles to take action against the Scotts of Bonnington and Newhouse for her husband’s death. In 1619 she was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of her husband. She secondly married William Scott of Saleuside. In 1632 she renounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned some lands to her son James. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Janet and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1660 she married Charles Lauder from Wind. In 1670, she and her sister Anna were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Dodderlee, Over and Nether Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinstead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Elizabeth (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenantanter fugitives. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Elizabeth (17th C.) listed among the poor people living at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish, who were unassessed for the hearth tax in 1694. She is distinct from Bessie, who lived at Headshaw. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Town o’ Rule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident at Mabonlaw, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) married James Riddell, who farmed at Wiltonburn. Her husband was renting 1/4 of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, but she was listed as his widow renting 1/3 in 1694. She may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. Elizabeth of Mangerton (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of Mangerton and hence probably daughter of Sir Francis. Her brother was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Eskdale. She prepared the accounts for her brother in the year 1696–97, by which time he was presumably deceased (or too ill). She was served heir to her brother in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. However, nothing else is known about her. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) tenant in Crawhill in Wilton Parish when she paid the window tax in 1748. She is recorded as ‘Mrs. Betty Scott’. It is unclear who her husband was or even whether her maiden or married name was Scott. However, she is surely related to John Scott, who was living at Crawhill in 1751. Elizabeth (18th C.) recorded as witness to a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1761. The couple were Walter Cavers and Margaret Scott (who was probably related to her). It was very rare for a woman to act as a witness, so there is probably a story here. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Rutherford (1729–89) daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope and Margaret, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairmilee. She was a niece of Alison Cockburn, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. When younger she was attached to a man who drowned on a passage to Ireland, so she remained single for much of her life. However, in 1768 she married Walter of Wauchope. She was noted as an artist and poet, her collected poems ‘Alonza and Cora’ being published posthumously in 1801. In 1787 Burns visited the house on his Border Tour. She had sent him a verse epistle offering him a ‘marled plaid’ in appreciation of his work, and he replied by composing the ‘Epistle To Mrs. Scott, Gudewife of Wauchope-House’. His notebook describes how ‘she possessed all the sense, taste, intrepidity of face, and bold critical decision which usually distinguish female authors’. She was apparently a friend of Dr. Blacklock, Allan Ramsay and Allan Cunningham. She died a couple of years after Burns visit, it being said that ‘the activity of her mind has destroyed a strong constitution’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Dickson (1757–1838) daughter of Archibald of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. She was born in Minto Parish. She married Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and had 6 boys plus 3 girls. She is probably the Mrs. Scott of Wauchope recorded living on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Her portrait was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon when he was young. Elmer see Ailmer. Esther (17th C.) daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, she married Elliot of Falnash and then George Langlands of that Ilk. Esther (1772/3–1855) listed as ‘independent’ and ‘annuitant’ in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, at about 5 High Street. She lived along with her younger sister Sarah, who also died unmarried in 1855. It seems likely they were daughters of Andrew and Beatrix Turnbull, with siblings Robert (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Thomas (b.1767), Ann (b.1770) and Martha (b.1775). Their father is probably Bailie Andrew, merchant of Hawick, and the property is probably the ‘A. Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Ewen (15th C.) son of John, he acted as a Ranger for James II, like his father. However, it is unclear to which branch of the family they belonged. From 1440 his name is recorded as ‘Eugenio Scot’ and associated with lands in Arran and Bute. His name last occurs in 1451. Francis (16th/17th C.) described as ‘natural son’ of John Scott, ‘called of Tuschelaw’ (i.e. Tushielaw) in a charter of 1618. His father was son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, infamous for killing Walter of Gamescleuch in 1609. Francis of Woll (d.bef. 1643) eldest son of Robert of Woll. He was recorded as Laird in 1627. However, he was succeeded by his brother James by 1643, and so presumably died without heirs of his own. Francis (17th C.) shepherd who was son of Adam in ‘Schaws’ (or Shaws) and grandson of Robert of Gilmancleuch. He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells in his postral. Francis of Synton (d.c.1646) 4th son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was brother of Sir William of Harden, Hugh (who started the Scotts of Gala), Walter (in Essenside), Margaret (who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Esther (who married Elliot of Falnash and secondly George Langlands of that Ilk), Janet (who married Thomas Scott, later Laird of Whitslade) and Margaret (who married David Pringle of Gala); so he was locally very well connected. He is described as 'in Howfuird' and later as 'of Sinton'. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. He assisted in managing the Buccleuch estates. In 1617 he was recorded among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brothers William and Hugh were also listed. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. In 1619 he was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of his brother Walter. In 1624 he married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. In 1627 he purchased the Synton estate from his distant cousin George (their great-grandfathers had been brothers), thus starting a new line of the Scotts of Synton, which would become the Corse Scotts. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. In 1639 he complained to Ashkirk Session that his mother-in-law Margaret Scott of Castleside had called him a 'thief and traitour', after apparently he 'maliciously and unreverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat' in the church; presumably an argument over the family seat in the kirk, and a son who did not get along with his mother-in-law! It is possible she was the daughter of George of Castleside from whom he inherited the lands. In 1641 he had a 'letter or inhibition' against Gavin Cessford of Westhouses for fraud against him, the case heard in Melrose. He is also mentioned in another Melrose case of 1642. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1652. He may be the man recorded as 'Castleside for Newtowne' (presumably Newton farm) who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish for £156 in 1663; he also paid tax on £160 in Ashkirk Parish for Castleside. He was recorded as granter in a deed of 1663. He is on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish in 1666. His widow Isobel (presumably Scott) was 'liferentrix' of Westhouses and Gattonside in a document of 1669. Francis (1626–51) 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, son of Walter, the 1st Earl. He succeeded when still a minor and so had some of his male relatives as 'tutors'. Specifically, in 1634 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Baronies of Branxholme, Buccleuch, Eckford, Lanton, Whitchester, Lempitlaw, Rankiburn, Eilrig and Kirkurd (united into the Barony of Branxholme), the Barony of Hailles (which included Alemoo), as well as lands in Ettrick and Yarrow, Greenwood and the Lyne, Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool, Porterslands in Grahamslaw, the Monk’s Tour in Hassendean, the lands of the Lordship of Melrose, the Baronies of Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Town Yetholm, the Lordship of Liddesdale, including the Castle of Hermitage, the advowson of the Kirk of Hawick and other lands in Haddington, Edinburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Dumfries and Lanark, combined into the Barony of Hailes. In 1636 he was a student at St. Andrews, then at St. Leonard’s College until 1642. His wardship and marriage rights were granted to the Earl of Stirling, although his widow gave these up in 1642 for a large payment. He was present at the Parliament of 1641 when only 14 years old. He purchased the Lordship of Dalkeith from the Earl of Morton in 1642. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’. In 1643 he loaned 9000 merks to the Collector General of Scotland. In a county valuation of 1643 he was the landowner with the highest yearly value in Hawick Parish (about 2/5 of the total, amounting to £6311 3s 4d) and also almost half the total in Wilton Parish, as well as more than half of Castleton Parish, a third of Cavers Parish and about a quarter of Hassendean Parish. He was one of the men appointed as Colonels of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1643 (when only 17) and was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. New colours were made for his regiment in 1644, and this could be the ‘Bellenden Banner’. In 1644 he complained about the number of men he was being asked to supply to the army. As part of the Covenantter army his regiment took part in the storming of Newcastle in 1644 and he was also at Marston Moor. In 1645 he was appointed Judiciar over a large fraction of Roxburghshire, including the Lordships of Liddesdale, the Debatale Land etc., Evesdale, Ashkirk, Hassendean, Cavers and Hawick, with the power to appoint courts. He received a charter of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1647. In 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was a heritor of Wilton Church as well as presumably of Hawick. In 1647 was made Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was also at the 1649 Parliament that repealed the acts of the ‘Engagement’. In 1650 he resigned his baronies of Branxholme, Hassendean and others in favour of himself and his heirs, including provision for inheritance through any female heir, whose husband would have to take the surname Scott. Also in 1650 he was one of the commissioners appointed to welcome Charles II to Scotland, although his castles at Newark and Dalkeith were possessed by Cromwell. He went further north for safety, but died at Dalkeith ‘after a short illness’ (which is not specified), before reaching his 25th birthday. He was one of the last Scottish noblemen to adhere to the Royalist cause, even when it was clearly hopeless. He was buried in Dalkeith Church (and not in Hawick, like his forebears). He married Lady Margaret Leslie, 2nd daughter of the 6th Earl of Rothes, who was widow of Alexander, Lord Balgonie. She was nominated as one of the ‘tutors’ for his children, should he die before her, and she later married the Earl of Wemyss (becoming the Countess of Wemyss). Scott of Satchells is not very complimentary when he writes ‘These infants sweet were left to their guardians to keep, Their tutors oft suffered control, Their mother was so impudent That she must always have her intent’ [CWS]. His children included: Mary (b.1647), who succeeded him; Walter (b.1648), who died in infancy; Margaret (b.1650), who also died young; and Anna (b.1651), who succeeded after her sister’s death. For years after his death there were efforts by his tutors to reduce the huge fine imposed on the family for his support of Charles, claiming that he had served in a Parliamentary Regiment in 1643 and acted against the ‘Engagement’ in 1648 – ‘And he began to talk anon, Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone . . .’[SWS], ‘Earl Francis his father Earl Walter did succeed, Into his earkdom but not his head; Yet he wanted neither hand, head, nor heart, But could not act like to his father’s part’ [CWS], ‘He had no Heirs-male, but Daughters left behind, For to enjoy his great Earl dom and Land’[CWS]. Francis (17th C.) school-master of Hassendean, probably father of the last minister of the Parish, Rev. Francis. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1640) illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, with an unknown mother. In 1635 he had a charter of the lands of Mangerton from his nephew Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, and he had another daughter, Marie. He was succeeded by his brother William. He died, was buried in Holland, and in 1648 there was still a dispute over the funeral costs between the Earl of Buccleuch and William of Mangerton (his brother). Francis of Newton (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Newingetoune’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was probably son or brother of John and Walter of Chamberlain Newton, who are recorded shortly before, and may have been father of Walter of Newton, who is recorded a little later (and perhaps grandfather of the later Francis of Chamberlain Newton). Francis of Carterton (17th C.) recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. He is also recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. He was probably father of Robert of Carterton. Francis of Shielwood (b.1638) eldest son of Walter of Shielwood. He is recorded in an inventory of writs of 1648 and in a discharge with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1663. He is said to have died not long after obtaining possession of his estates. He was succeeded by his younger brother, Robert. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Hugh of Gala. He is referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James of Gala in 1664 and 1665. He was given 300 merks Scots annually according to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1650, where he is described as ‘our servand’. Francis of Arkleton (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was brother of Robert of Harwood. In 1661 he was recorded still responsible for money that his father (as Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchope dale and Eskdalemuir) owed to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He granted a bond to Isobel Ker, wife of George Douglas of Bonjedward in 1663 and was also recorded in 2 deeds that year. He sold Arkleton to Walter Elliot in 1669, with the consent of his mother Anna. In 1664 he married Isobel, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. Francis of Phaup (17th C.) described as ‘of Phaope’ in 1657 in a factor’s extract to Sir William Scott of Harden and another to his brother Capt. John Scott in 1671. He was a Colonel serving in Brussells in 1666. He was probably brother to Adam, who became a gun-smith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671, and in which case his father was Robert. He paid tax on land valued at £526 13s 4d in Selkirkshire in 1678.

James of Phaup, recorded in 1682, may be his son. Sir Francis of Mangerton (d.1672) eldest son of William. He inherited the lands of Mangerton and others from his father in 1648. This probably included Hartrigge in Jedburgh Parish. He may have been a minor when he succeeded; there is a record of discharge to his curators in 1667. However, he appears to have already been acting as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Eskdale in at least the period 1661–72. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his son Francis, who was served as his heir in 1675. The name of his wife is unknown; it was probably his mother (not his wife) who became the Lady Mangerton listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (but possibly from earlier). Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Bridges and their children included: Janet (b.1673); Archibald (b.1676); Bessie (b.1678); Thomas (b.1680); Adam (b.1681); Isobel (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1687). The witnesses in 1678 and 1680 were William Bridges and William Swan. Francis of Grassyards (17th C.) recorded in 2 discharges to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1678 and another in 1681. An undated account in Selkirk discusses ‘the mony was borrowed from Grassyards’. Also in 1688 there was an assignation of debt owed to him by the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1691 he was assignee to Sir Patrick Murray of Deuchar in another discharge in Selkirk. He may be the brother of James Scott of Shielswood referred to by Walter Scott of Satchells in the lines ‘Honest James Scott of Shiel woood, Whose like there is not many, . . . Of his Genealogy I will speak no more, Because his Brother Grass-yards is set down before’.

Francis of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) son of John. He is recorded in deeds of 1663, 1673 and 1682. He was served heir to his father in 1686. He became Commissioner of Supply (for Selkirkshire) in 1685 and was succeeded by John, probably his son. Also in 1685 he had a marriage contract with Margaret Bertram, widow of Alexander Russell. The Ettrick Shepherd wrote that he was often in his (Hogg’s) grandfather’s house. Francis (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Vaills’ when his will was recorded in one of the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh or Selkirk. It is unclear where this was (perhaps Vaelsburn or Wells, or possibly Walls in Dumfriesshire). Francis of Langshaw (d.c.1690) younger son of Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw, and younger brother of Sir John of Ancrum. He witnessed a document for Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1662. He is recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1669 and 1673 he is listed as son of Patrick of Langshaw when he witnessed 3 charters for the commissioners of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. Documents relating to the ‘mulltures’ of Langshaw mention from around 1670 to 1675. He purchased the lands of Broadwoodshiel in 1672. He obtained crown charters of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1674 and 1690. He paid land tax on Langshaw in 1678. He is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, and is recorded in cases held in Melrose in 1684. He was succeeded by his son, Walter, who was succeeded by another son, Thomas. In 1690 Walter was served heir to his lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, Calfshaw and Langhaugh in the Parish of Hawick. Thomas was served as his heir to Langshaw and other lands in 1695. Francis (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married ‘Giles’ Murray in 1683 and their children included Francis (b.1687), with witnesses Richard Thomson and Andrew Deans. He is probably the same as one of the other Francises, e.g. the one later recorded at Wester Groundistone. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1696) son of Sir Francis. There is a marriage contract of 1672 between him and Christian Kerr, involving the annual rent of Nether Mangerton. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He was served heir to his father in 1675. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Calroust in Morebattle Parish and ‘eastrige thicksyde and his lands in ulstoun’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was also the ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ who paid the land tax on £1,280 in Castleton Parish in 1678. In 1684 there is a document relating to a bond with Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, nephew of his sister. His wife, ‘Lady Mangerton’ was among the heritors fined in 1684 for refusing to accept Episcopalianism. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose (where he is ‘Sir Francis Scott of Manjertoune’). He was probably the Laird of Mangerton appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale from 1692–95. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. His sister Elizabeth prepared the accounts for 1696–97, by which time he was deceased. She was served as his heir in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartragge and others in Jedburgh Parish. Capt. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, and brother of Walter, Earl of Tarras. In 1690 he was involved in a bizarre court case in which Jean Weymss accused him of injuring her finger so that it had to be amputated. He could be the brother of the Earl of Tarras who is recorded serving in Buchanan’s regiment in Holland in 1688. He was ‘brother to the deceas’d earl of Tarras’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. In 1697 he leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Francis (17th C.) rented the farm of Whitheope from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, 1692 and 1694. Gideon of Falnash served as his cautioner in 1692 and 1694, suggesting a family connection; it is possible he was even Gideon’s brother, Francis of Greenhill. Francis (17th C.) listed as tenant at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to William, who was a cottar there. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded at Timberside Mill in 1697 when his daughter Helen was baptised; his wife was also a Scott. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam in Overhall and John in Wiltunburn. Francis (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed separately from the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He seems likely to be the weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Francis (17th C.) resident of Wester Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the same Francis recorded at Groundistone in 1696; his wife was also a Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in that year. The witnesses were James Scott and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. He may be the Francis who married Isobel Scott in Ashkirk in 1689. Helen (b.1697), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his daughter. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. George in Easter Groundistone. Rev. Francis (d.bef. 1716) probably son of schoolmaster Francis. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1659, was presented by John Turnbull, Laird of Minto to Minto Parish in 1664 and was minister there until 1678. He was then translated to Hassendean, where he was the last incumbent. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in at least 1666. He may be the Francis who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for Robert Wait in Robertson Parish in 1688. He was deprived in 1689 for refusing to read the ‘Proclamation of the Estates’, i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy, and continuing to pray for James VII after his abdication. An ‘instrument’ was brought against him by Robert Scott, younger of Hassendean and John Turnbull of Knowe, following his removal by the Privy Council. After being deprived he moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach to Episcopalians, along with Thomas Somerville, ousted minister of Cavers. This was probably on a secretive and informal basis until 1712, when the Act of Toleration was passed, and an Episcopalian meeting house was opened at the Playlaw (or Kirkwynd). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands and Rev. John Somerville of Hawick. He may be the ‘Mr Francis’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Horsleyhill in 1680. He is probably the ‘Mr Francis Scott’ listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He married Elspeth Buckham (or Buckholm) and their children were mostly baptised in Robertson Parish: Margaret (b.1680); James (b.1682); Francis (b.1684), who became a merchant in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in both 1684 and 1688 were James Scott and Thomas Gray. He died in Hawick and in 1716 his widow finally returned the church paraphernalia to Robertson, including bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. It is recorded that part of his tombstone still existed in 1879. Francis (17th C.) recorded in Borthwickbrae in 1687 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses were George (probably Scott) and Walter Scott. Given the dates, he is probably different from the Francis who married Giles Murray and also seems unlikely to be the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1685 as uncle to the Laird of Tushielaw (probably Walter, and hence brother of William). He was cautions, along with his wife, Margaret Elliot, the Laird of Tushielaw’s mother, for the amounts collected by David Scott, the Laird’s brother. He may be the same Francis, who along with David, were referred to as brother’s of the deceased Laird of Tushielaw in 1676, when they were in a court case in Melrose. Francis (b.1633) younger son of Francis of Synton and brother of William of Synton. In 1662 he was appointed as guardian for his nephew John (later of Synton), son of his brother William. Francis of Gorrenberry (d.1689) son of John of Gorrenberry and grandson of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Morton and Canonbie in 1660–61 and for Liddesdale and Canonbie in 1665–70. He was recorded as Chamberlain to the Countess of Buccleuch in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 he was appointed a Justice of the Peace and in 1685 was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Adderstone and Adderstonehill. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £1600 in Castleton Parish (presumably for Gorrenberry) and £900 in Kirkton Parish (this was probably for Adderstonehill and Adderstonelee). He was mentioned when his son Andrew became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1692. The ‘Lady Garinberry’ fined in 1684 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism was probably his wife. In 1685 he married Anna (or Penelope), youngest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie; the dowry was 10,000 merks. His daughter Anna married Archibald Douglas of Cavers, while his son Charles witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras. He was succeeded by his eldest son John. He may be the Scott of Gorrenberry whose daughter Marion married Sir James Don, 2nd Baronet. Francis of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier Francis of Newton. In 1690 he was one of the main instigators in the crowd trying to prevent the removal of Hassendean Kirk’s roof. He is probably the Laird whose estate is described as ‘Neutons Lands’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; he paid tax on 7 hearths for ‘His hous at Meitchels’ (presumably Midshiel). He is probably the Francis ‘of Newton’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and 1704. He was recorded as ‘Laird of Newton’ in baptismal records of 1705, 1707 and 1709. His children included: Mary (b.1705); Robert (b.1707); and Gideon (b.1709). When his daughter Mary was baptised, The witnesses in 1705 were Robert of Hassendean and Francis of Alton, in 1707 they appear to have been 2 other Francis Scotts and in 1709 were Robert of Hassendean and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmysres. Other children of his (also baptised in Wilton) may have been Isobel (b.1703) and Janet (b.1707). Probably the same Francis of ‘Chamberland Neutoun’ married Alison Langlands (perhaps daughter of Rev. John) in Wilton in 1713; she was from Jedburgh Parish. Francis (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars’ living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Francis (1645–1712) 1st Baronet of Thirlestane, son of Patrick of Tanlawhill. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1666 and was served heir to his father in 1667, including lands in Rutherford, Nether Crailing, Smalholm, Bowerhope, Gamescleuch, Kirkhope and the town of Selkirk. He was further served heir to his father in 1676, in the lands of Fingland, ‘Tampluthar’, Dumfelding, Davington and Nether Cassock. He was also served heir to his brother Walter in 1667. He was surely the Francis, son of Patrick of Thirlestane, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest 1660-62 (although he would have been very young, or his year of birth is incorrect). It is said that he came to the assistance of his distant cousin Francis of Davington, to protect him from his tutor’s son, John of Rennaldburn (who was trying to enroach upon him during his minority). It is also said that he narrowly escaped being implicated in the Rye House Plot. He paid £1000 for tax on his lands in Dumfriesshire in 1671. He paid tax on lands (although it is unclear which ones, this surely included Langhaugh) in Hawick Parish valued at £850 in 1678, as well as paying for Rutherford in Maxton Parish. He is probably the Scott of Thirlestane fined £2776 in 1680 for being a supporter of the Covenanters. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. In 1678 he was he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 and 1690 for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and in 1704 for Selkirkshire. He was Selkirkshire Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1669–74, 1685–6 and 1693–1702. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In 1689 he was appointed Captain of the western regiment of Militia. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Company in 1695. Also in 1695 he was served heir to his brother Walter’s lands in Upper Teviotdale, explicitly Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. In 1704 he was appointed Master of Works. In 1673 he married Henrietta, 6th daughter of William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian; she died in 1741, aged 90. They had 5 sons and 4 daughters, but only 2 survived childhood: Sir William, who succeeded; and Henrietta, who was 4th wife of William, 12th Lord Ross. An unnamed child of his was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1686. Another son may have been John, listed as ‘son to Thirleston’ when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. Francis (d.c.1684) keeper of the Minute Book of the court in Edinburgh. He is recorded retiring in favour of Patrick Falconer and receiving a small share of the profits afterwards. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. Francis of Colmslie (17th C.) recorded in 1679 in an Edinburgh court case. He was among a party of Melrose men who were returning from Bothwell Bridge when they set upon John Drurie of Grange. He is also mentioned in Regality of Melrose records in 1670 and 1682. He was cautioner for Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh (and probably the same as Patrick of Langshaw), for a bond in 1678, suggesting that they were closely related. He is listed separately from Francis of Langshaw on a list of Regality of Melrose heritors in 1682 (showing they are not the same man). Francis of Greenhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood. His brothers included Walter of Harwood, Gideon of Fahnash and William, apothecary in Hawick. He paid the land tax in Hownam Parish in 1678 (for land valued at over £400, but which lands are not listed). He was fined £800 Scots in 1680, essentially for being a Covenant supporter. Francis of Davington (d.1706) only son of Sir John of Thirlestane (who had not succeeded to the Thirlestane estates). He was still a minor when his father died in 1666, his ‘tutor and curator’ being John of Newburgh. It is said that his tutor’s son John of Rennaldburn tried to exert undue influence on his affairs, and so his distant cousin Francis of Thirlestane came to his rescue. His other curators were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Patrick of Thirlestane, Walter of Goldielands, Thomas of Whitslade and Sir James Johnstone of Wester Raw. It was said that he was ‘a man of weak understanding’. He spent some time in Dalkeith tolbooth in 1695 for failing to provide for his step-mother, Margaret Scott and Walter of Burnfoot. In 1679 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Douglas of Auchintully. Their children were: John of Davington, who succeeded, but died without children; Robert of Davington, who succeeded his brother; William, who had a farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch and whose son William lived at Moffat; Francis, who also had a farm from Scott of Buccleuch; James, whose son was Robert at Binks, who provided a family genealogy in 1792; David; Anne; and Mary, who married Rev. John Liston, minister of Aberdour. Francis (b.1684) son of Francis, last minister of Hassendean and Elspeth Buchham. He was a merchant in Hawick. He could be the merchant who (along with Robert, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. Francis (17th/18th C.) brother of William of Horsleyhill. He is recorded becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696. He is probably the same as the ‘Dr. Scott’, brother of Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the guests cited for being at the ‘supernumerary marriage’ of John Hardie and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1706. He may have succeeded his brother and could be the Francis of Horsleyhill who had a charter in 1712 for ‘the lands of Belfoord commonly called Mowtown’ and ‘the four merkland of Weymsland’ (probably Weensland). In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands of Weensland were valued at £264. He was father of Capt. Robert of Horsleyhill. He is probably the Francis of Horsleyhill who was involved with transfer of lands of Belford (formerly called Mowtown) with his father Robert. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Ainslie (from the Ainslies of Blackhill) and their children included Robert (b.1712). Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hawick Parish. His daughter May was baptised in 1720, with witnesses John Chisholme, preacher and Caerlenrig and Gideon of Harwood (who may have been related to him). He may be the Francis who married Jean Elliot in Hawick in 1711. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who may be his are Francis (b.1711) and William (b.1714). Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1704 he was at Mervinslaw, when his name is recorded as ‘Francie’. His children included Gideon (b.1704); Robert (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). He could be one of the Francises who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1707. Francis (17th/18th C.) miller at West Burnfoot, probably in Wilton Parish. A baptism of his servant William Goodfellow is recorded in 1711. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Isobel Paterson and their children included: William (b.1718); George (b.1720); James (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (b.1729). Francis (17th/18th C.) recorded as late Dean of Guild in Selkirk in 1723. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded as Treasurer in Selkirk in 1717–18. Francis (1687–1769) 4th son of Francis of Davanting. He led the legal battle against the Napiers of Thirlestane to recover his family estates, eventually taking the case to the House of Lords, but without success. It was said that he had a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He had one known child, Agnes (1723–90), who was unmarried. He died at Holm, practically bankrupt by the legal battle he had championed. Francis (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Selkirk, recorded in 1723. He may have been related to the later wigmaker of Ha-wick of the same name. Francis (d.bef. 1737) messenger in Selkirk. He married Marion Darling and their children included Bessie (b.1706) and Francis (b.1716). In 1719 his wife brought a case against him in Selkirk for assault and abuse. In 1737 his widow and daughter Agnes were involved in a debt case in Selkirk. Francis (1695–1751) 2nd Duke of Buccleuch, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith and grandson of the 1st Duke and Anne Scott, whom he succeeded. He was only the second in his family in 260 years to be of full age at succession. Before succeeding he was known as Lord Scott of Whitchester and then Earl of Dalkeith after the death of his father. In about 1720 he became engaged to Lady Jane Douglas only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas), but the match was broken off, and it is said he fought a duel with her father as a result. In 1725 he was made a Knight of the Thistle. He was confirmed in the Barony of Hassendean, Sherifldom of Selkirk, etc. in 1731. In 1738 he purchased Over Hassendean from Archibald Douglas of Cavers. The titles of Baron Tindal and Earl of Doncaster (which had belonged to his grandfather) were restored by Parliament in 1743. He was a Scottish Representative Peer in Parliament 1733–41, Grand Master of the Freemasons in 1723/4 and made a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1745 he called out his tenantry to support the citizens of Edinburgh against Charles Edward Stuart. When hereditary jurisdictions were abolished in 1747, he was compensated for losing the Regality of Hawick. He paid tax on 42 windows in Hawick Parish in 1748, perhaps for Drum-lanrig’s Tower. Although his intended marriage with Lady Jane Douglas (only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas) did not take place, in 1720 he married another Lady Jane Douglas, eldest daughter of James, Duke of Queensberry; this is where the Queensberry title and lands came to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Their children were: Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (1721–50), who predeceased his father; Jane (1723–79), who died aged 56; Anne (1724–37), who died aged 12 and who has a monument to her memory at Hillingden, Middlesex; Mary (1725–43), who died aged 17; and Charles of Bowhill (1727–47), who died aged 20; He was succeeded by his grandson Henry. His 1st wife died of smallpox in 1729. In 1744 he secondly married Alice (who had been his mistress), daughter of Joseph Powell, but they had no children; she died in 1765, aged 63. However, he also had 6 children by Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, who he allowed for in his will, and possibly 4 children with Elizabeth Jenkins. Another son was Maj. Walter of Datchet, Buckinghamshire. Lady Louisa Stuart called him ‘a man of mean understanding and meaner habits’. He was buried in Eton Chapel next to his brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Deans and their children included James (b.1724), Isobel (b.1727), Margaret (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1730). Perhaps the same Francis was tenant in New Woll in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against James Scott, ex-Deacon of the Flesher's in Selkirk. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Miller in 1715 and their children included Margaret (b.1718) and Helen (b.1723). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as tenant in Woll in 1724. He married Margaret Kedie and their children included Jean (b.1723), William (b.1724), Mary (b.1726), John (b.1728), John (again, b.1730), Anna (b.1732) and James (b.1733). Francis (1705–73) see Francis Napier. Francis (18th C.) recorded in Howdenhaugh near Selkirk in 1782. Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th C.) son of Col. Robert and Agnes Douglas. He was incorrectly named ‘John’ in Keith Scott’s genealogy. He was great-grandson of Robert of Horsleyhill who gained Weensland, Shaws and Burnflat in 1653. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 as ‘late of Horsleyhill, now of Belford’. He was still on the roll in 1788 and described as ‘An intimate of the Duke of Buccleuch’. Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Belford in Morebattle Parish, valued at £1290 6s 8d (and the teinds of £233 6s 8d). He had a daughter who married Thomas Davidson, surgeon in Kelso. He was succeeded by his son Henry. He may be the Lt.-Col. Francis James who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. Francis of Gorrenberry (18th C.) son of John. His sister Anne married Walter Scott of Harden. In 1729 he gave a bond for his sister to John, 2nd son of Walter of Harden. In 1750 he sold Adderstonelie and Adderstoneshiel to Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers (who may have been a cousin of some sort); his factor for the transaction was George Grant. He appears to have been living at Nether Tofts when his children Charles (b.1716) and Archibald (b.1719) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. Little else is known about him, and he appears to have been the last Scott of Gorrenberry. He may be the Laird of Gorrenberry who was said to have been with the Jacobite army in 1745, meeting the Hobkirk Schoolmaster Sam Oliver (who had acted as guide) and leading him safely through the camp and past the Prince. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Briggs and their children included Walter (b.1735) and Henry (b.1737). Francis (1710–39) 2nd Earl of Deloraine, eldest son of Maj.-Gen. Henry, 1st Earl and Ann Duncombe. He was thus grandson of the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. When he was born he took the title Viscount Hermitage, which had been created for his father. On the death of his father in 1730 he became 2nd Earl of Deloraine, as well as 2nd Lord Goldielands. He held the rank of Cornet of Horse. He married Mary, daughter of Matthew Lister and secondly married Mary, daughter of Gervase Scrope. He died without issue at Bath and his titles passed to his younger brother Henry.

Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Henderson in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children included Jean (b.1734). It is possible he is the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Kedie. Francis (1721–50) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest son of Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch. He also had the title of Lord Scott of Whitchester. He was great-grandson of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and in 1731 she infested him in several lands, including Nether Newhall (i.e. Burnfoot), Easter and Wester Hassendean, Gilmanscleugh, etc., as well as the lordship of Musselburgh. He was a lawyer, educated at Oxford University, and became M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1748. In 1742 he married Caroline Campbell (1718–94), eldest daughter and co-heiress of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich. His wife was god-daughter of Queen Caroline, wife of George II. She survived him and remarried to Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, later becoming Baroness Greenwich. Through this marriage the Scotts of Buccleuch inherited the lands of Granton. His eldest son John, Lord of Whitchester (1745–49) died of smallpox, aged 4. His 2nd son Henry (1746–1812) became the 3rd Duke. His only surviving daughter, Lady Frances (1750–1817), married Archibald Douglas, 1st Lord of Douglas in 1783. Other children were: Campbell (1747–66), who died unmarried, aged 19; James (1748–58), died aged 9; and Caroline (1743–53), who died aged 10. He himself died of smallpox aged 29, predeceasing his father by about a year, and was buried at Dalkeith. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Lockie and their children included Janet (b.1742), Helen (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748), Mary (b.1751) and John (b.1753). Francis (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1739); Jean (b.1741); Francis (b.1749); Janet (b.1753); Thomas (b.1757); and Christian Smeal (b.1759). Francis of Alton (18th C.) recorded at Alton in 1722 when one of his children was baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Francis ‘of Altone’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He is probably also the Francis who is ‘younger of Altoun’ in a memorandum of 1708 (among the papers of the Douglases of Cavers). He was also ‘of Aldtoun’ in a ‘search of incumbrances’ undertaken by John Hodge in 1742. It appears that he sold the lands of Alton (just north of Hawick) to John Horsburgh of that Ilk about 1742, with the agreement of his eldest lawful son Patrick. He was thus the last of the Scotts of Alton. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. He married Anna Scott and their children included John (b.1722), with witnesses Thomas Kedie and George Scott (probably the George also recorded in Alton that year). He could be the Francis who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. Francis (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1743 and 1757. The following children, baptised in in Roberton Parish, were probably his: James (b.1743); Margaret (b.1745); Walter
(b.1748); Christian (b.1749); Margaret (b.1752); and Francis (b.1757). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Young in 1754 and their children included Jane (b.1760). Francis (18th C.) wigmaker and barber of 9 High Street. There is an existing sasine of 1764 in which he borrowed money from John and William Thomeless, with his property as collateral. He later sold 9 High Street to Walter Wilson. His son Walter was made an Honorary Burgess. He could be the ‘Mr Francis Scott, Hawick’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1766 he (along with Robert of the Cross Keys) witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes. Francis (b.c.1775) resident of Deanburnhaugh. Francis (b.c.1775) resident of Beochwood (1732–1803) 2nd surviving son of Walter of Harden, brother to the next Laird, who was also Walter. He was recorded in 1735 when his father had to define his heirs. He lived for a while in Bombay, where he was a merchant. For a few years, perhaps 1770–80, he held the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiels. It is recorded in 1780 that he was struck off the voter’s roll in Roxburghshire, since he had lost his lands in the county. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was written that it was ‘believed will not take the oath’. In 1776 he married Mary (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their children were: Walter; Alexander, a minister, who succeeded: Francis, who died young; Charles, who died in Jamaica in 1805; Hugh, a Major in the East India Company; John, Lieut. in the East India Company; William, in the Royal Navy; and Mary, who married Rear Admiral Thomas Follott Baugh. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Grieve in 1763. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Blair in 1771. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Miller in 1784. Francis (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the son of Francis baptised there in 1749. He was recorded as ‘Seceder’ in 1789 when his son George was baptised in Lilliesleaf. Francis (18th/19th C.) resident of ‘West Quarter’ in Ancrum Parish, recorded in the Lieutenantancy Book for 1799. Francis (18th/19th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. In 1811 he witnessed a
Scott Napier, who was also a painter and decorator, and Hawick Magistrate. He was son of Francis (1868–1947) painter-decorator at 26 High Street in Edinburgh.

Bailie Francis William Van der Waard in Edinburgh; and John Hunter, a dentist to Mary, who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Wilton. Their children were: Alison, Thomas, Agnes, Francis, Margaret, Helen, William and Walter. Francis, M.P., see Francis Hepburne-Scott. Francis ‘Frank’ (1811–1873) known as ‘Uncle Braid’, he was fourth singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He was known as a fisherman and also wrote a small amount of verse. Francis Napier (1841–1933) born in Wilton Parish, son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a painter-decorator in Hawick, with his business premises and house at 26 High Street. In 1888 he discovered a sundial (a square block with 2 faces, dated 1683) built into one of the grates of 26 High Street. In Selkirk in 1867 he married Hannah Matilda (1844–68), born in Hendon, daughter of William Bodimeade, a blacksmith in Harrow in England and Hannah Odell; she was a teacher, and it is unclear how the couple met. They had a son, Francis William (b.1868), who was a Bailie; the mother died within a few months of this birth. In 1873 in Wilton he secondly married Esther, daughter of cabinetmaker John Hunter. Their children were: John (b.1874), who died young; Lilias, who also died young; Ella; Janet Oliver (b.1881); Jessie; Mary, who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Edinburgh; and John Hunter, a dentist in Edinburgh. Bailie Francis William ‘Frank’ (1868–1947) painter-decorator at 26 High Street and Hawick Magistrate. He was son of Francis Napier, who was also a painter and decorator, and Hannah Bodimeade. He was one of the early members of the Callants’ Club, acting as President during the War years 1915–19. In 1906 he was the first to suggest that Hawick should have its own art gallery, so it was called the ‘Scott Gallery’ when finally built in 1975. He also instigated the erection of the Caa Knowe cairn, which was unveiled in 1911. In 1916 he proposed that the Callants’ Club lay a wreath at the Horse on 12th July to comemorate the fallen in Galipoli. He was an active member of the Hawick Free Kirk (St. George’s) serving as Session Clerk 1899–1915. He travelled to the U.S.A. and is said to have brought back what was Hawick’s first record player. He married Isabella (1874–1915), daughter of Richard Edmondson. Their children were: Francis Napier (‘Napier’, b.1900); Elizabeth Kennedy (‘Lizzie’, b.1903); and Richard Edmondson (‘Dick’, b.1910). After his first wife died, he secondly married Mary Ann Rowe. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Francis George ‘F.G.’ (1880–1958) 2nd son of George, a mill parts supplier in Bourtree Place and Janet, daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. He was born in Hawick at 6 Oliver Crescent, and shared a birthday with Burns. It is said that his father insisted on a traditional religious upbringing, but his mother introduced him to Border ballads. He was educated at the High School and Teviot Grove Academy. He had piano lessons until he was 15, when his father thought it would interfere with his schoolwork. He was Dux Medalist in 1897, apparently arguing that a mistake had been made when he came second in the final exams. He went to Edinburgh University in 1897 to study English and train as a teacher, but abandoned his degree in the second year. He did teaching practice at Trinity in Hawick and taught briefly at Drumlanrig and then in Falkirk, before moving to Langholm (1903–12, where one of his pupils was Hugh MacDiarmid). He later taught at schools in Dunoon and Glasgow. He also studied for a music degree from Durham University. He studied composition under Jean Roger-Ducasse at the Paris Conservatoire. In 1925 he became lecturer in music at Jordanhill, and remained there until he retired in 1946. He also published some poetry (e.g. ‘On Border Hills’ in 1904). He became a close friend of the poet Hugh MacDiarmid and the painter William Johnstone (his cousin), with whom he tried to initiate a ‘Scottish Renaissance’; he set many of MacDiarmid’s poems to music, while Johnstone painted several portraits of him. He was musically influenced by Schönberg and Bartok, but tried to develop a Scottish style. He wrote more than 300 songs, many published in his 6 volume ‘Scottish Lyrics Set to Music’. He most often used traditional Scots words, with the musical style being contemporary folk art-music (about which opinions differ). He also wrote ‘Renaissance’ (a concert overture), ‘The Seven Deadly Sins’ (for full orchestra), ‘Cumha nan Laoch’ (‘Lament for Heroes’ for string orchestra) and ‘The Ballad of Kynd Kittock’ (for baritone and orchestra). His main local contribution is ‘Oor Bonnie Border Toon’, which he wrote while still in his teens. As a teacher he is said to have had a formidable presence, with a booming voice and piercing blue eyes. He is also said to have had a mischievous sense of humour. Although he was friendly with several other poets and artists, he seldom mixed with other musicians. He was awarded a doctorate by Glasgow University in 1957. He married Burgess Gray (a trained mezzo-soprano) of Fraserburgh and had 4 children: Francine; Lillias; George; and Malcolm. He died at his home in Glasgow and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (with the inscription being a quote from Walter Savage Landor, ‘Nature I loved, and, next to Nature, Art’. In 1980 a centenary plaque was unveiled at his birthplace, 6 Oliver Crescent, by the Saltire Society and the Archæological Society, and replaced in 2018. A biography ‘Francis George Scott and the Scottish Renaissance’ was written by Maurice Lindsay in 1980. A collection of performances of his works, ‘Moonstruck’ was released in 2006. Francis Townsend ‘Frank’ (1940–2001) son of Dick and grandson of Bailie Francis. He was elected a Town Councillor at age 26, was later a Regional Councillor, and became Hawick’s first Honorary Provost 1977–82. He was appointed a Bailie and served as Justice of the Peace for 26 years, being Chairman of the Justices Committee. Mainstay of the Common Riding Committee for more than 30 years, he served as Secretary 1988–2001. He was also President of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for 19 years and on the Committee for 40 years. In addition he was President of the Callants’ Club and of the Archæological Society, as well as Transactions editor for many years. He updated the ‘Companion to Hawick’ (1998) and wrote a history of the Conservative Club. In his work as architectural technician he had a hand in several Hawick renovation projects. He is buried in the Wellogate and Frank Scott Court is named after him. A memorial seat on the Miller’s Knowes has an entrance pillar from East Bank Church as its base. Francis William (1962– ) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. A keen football player for Hawick United, Hawick Legion and Hawick Royal Albert, he scored over 100 goals for both the Legion and the Albert. He was Common Riding Secretary 2008–16, and has also served as President of the 1514 Club and the Moststroopers’ Club. Ganeil (13th C.) recorded in 1229, in an assize held at Newcastle. He was ‘Ganeil Scot’ in relation to a tenement in ‘Chipches’ (presumably Chipchase). Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 in ‘the Wraa’ among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been from Wrae and was probably related to Adam who was from the same place. Geofffrey (13th C.) recorded as ‘Galfridium Scot’ when he was involved in a court case listed in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He may be the same man separately listed as ‘Galfridium de Scotia’ in a case at Newcastle. ‘Galfrido et Willemo’ mercenaries of Scotland were also listed in 1279. George of Synton (14th/15th C.) eldest son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton (although some sources suggest he was 4th son of the first Walter of Buccleuch). He was either the 1st or 2nd of the Scotts of Synton (accounts differ here), and probably married a daughter of Sir John Turnbull of Falshope (probably Phaup near the head of the Ettrick in Selkirkshire). He had a son Walter, as well as possibly William. This branch eventually produced the lines of Harden, etc. (but again accounts are contradictory). He may also sometimes be confused with his grandson (or great-grandson) George, one of the last of the first set of Scotts of Synton. George (15th/16th C.) owner of the lands of Lairs (adjacent to Lairshe, near the head of the Teviot). In 1501 there was an agreement between him and William, son of James Douglas of Drumlanrig, where he would be allowed to continue to hold these lands in ‘alba firma’ if he could produce proof that he had this arrangement with James Douglas. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges (perhaps George of Borthaugh). He was probably related to Robert, who was listed as tenant in Lairs in 1501. George of Borthaugh and Whames (d.bef. 1528) son of Robert. In 1502 he served as surety for Adam in Highchesters (when he was ‘de quhomys’). In 1505/6 he had a notorial instrument involving his claim on his father Robert’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton.

(somewhere near the modern Pathhead); this document mentions that his grandfather was Stephen of Muirhouse. In 1508/9 he was ‘of the Qhonomys’ when he was given ‘warrandice’ of his grandfather Stephen’s lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 he wrote (with his own hand) a letter of acquittance, stating that John Muir of Rowallan had paid him the £40 and 14 merks owed on the warrandice for Commonside, Harwood and Dryden. In 1517 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme from his father. He married his cousin, whose name is not recorded. With her he had his eldest son, John, and then remarried and had another son, Walter. He declared on his deathbed (in the presence of the Laird of Buccleuch, 2 notaries and other witnesses) that he never had dispensation to marry his cousin and so his 2nd son should succeed to his lands, which included Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdale’ (probably Dryfesdale). He may be the George who was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. In 1528 a set of arbitrators (all Scotts) met to decide on inheritance and found in favour of his elder son. In 1526 the list of Border men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran included John in Borthaugh, with the brothers Walter, Philip and George listed afterwards, so perhaps all sons of his. George of Synton (15th/16th C.) son of Walter and a Johnstone, he was probably 6th Laird of Synton. He married a daughter of Scott of Roberton, said to have been Thomas (although it is unclear there was such a man, so perhaps another Scott of Roberton is meant). This was meant to be around the 1460s. He was succeeded by his son Walter, and was said to have had another son, who was William of Harden (but this seems to be confusion over generations with similar names). Note that the connections between Synton and Harden genealogy around this time are quite uncertain. George (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Goldielands’ in 1510 when he was surety (along with William in Hawick and David in Whitehaugh, with William in Fenwick and John of Haining also mentioned) for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of ‘Aidschaw’ (i.e. Headshaw). It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, since the first Laird of Goldielands whose genealogy we know was Scott of Buccleuch’s son Walter, who was given that title about 30 years later; however, he seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Headshaw, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1522 when he had a dispensation from Thomas Ker, Archdeacon of Teviotdale, to marry Margaret Turnbull. This was necessary because they were within the 4th grade of consanguinity. The witnesses were William Pringle and William Tait. George (d.bef. 1527) owner of a piece of half a husbandland within ‘the town and bounds of Lellescleiff’. In 1527 his widow, Janet Smail, re-nounced agreements made with her brother William Smail over these lands in Lilliesleaf; the document was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. George of Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses and may have been related. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. William was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. George ‘of the Bog’ (d.1530) said to have been a resident of Liddesdale, he gains a reputation as a reiver. He was said to be particularly cruel, burning the houses of those he raided, sometimes with their wives and children inside. He was captured by Johnstone of that Ilk and presented for trial, along with Hector and their accomplices, by Robert, Lord Maxwell. It was decided to give him the same punishment he had inflicted on his victims, and so he was burned at the stake ‘quhilk deid was neuer sense in this realm of befoir, nor will be heirefter’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.bef. 1534) Burgess of Selkirk. His daughter Janet was served as heir to his inheritable goods in 1534. Burgess William was one of the witnesses and perhaps related. George (16th C.) described as ‘in Sanct Mynnynnis Well’ (and separately as ‘Mynnis’) when part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. This is probably St. Mungo’s Well in Peebles, although all the other men on the panel appear to be local (e.g. Scotts of Ashkirk and Headshaw), and so either another location is suggested or he was a relative of local Scotts. In 1539 he was ‘in Saint Myningis Voll’ when he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. George (16th C.) suggested by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been a grandson of the Walter who was immediate ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was called ‘How-coat’, suggesting he owned or farmed Hoscote. He was then said to have succeeded his father as Laird of Synton, to have married a daughter of John Edmonston (or ‘Adimston’) of Ednam and to have been succeeded by his son.
Walter. Part of his life corresponds to that of the later George of Syton, however, these generations seem to be hopelessly confused. George (16th C.) son of John of Robertson and Walls. In 1526 he is listed (along with Stephen) as son of John in the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527 receiving remission for his crimes. He may be the George ‘of Well’ who was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk in 1531/2, along with several other Scotts. He could be the George ‘of Vaillis’ who in 1539 witnessed a document at Kirkhope for Elizabeth Ker, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. George (16th C.) abbreviator of the King’s household expenses. He attested to payments in the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–1542. His name is given as ‘domino [Sir] Georgeo Scott’, and he may have been a cleric rather than a knight. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. George (16th C.) listed as ‘Sir George’ in 1538 when the benefice of Hasmendean Kirk was given to him, after John Duncan was ‘escheated for barratry’. In 1545 John Anderson asked for 18 months prorogation in order to oust him. George (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to Philip, who was the tenant at Wiltonburn. George of Blindhaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1527 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk for the widow of another George. He was ‘in Blyndhau[gh]’ (in Ashkirk Parish) when he witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531 and another involving Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1532 he and Robert, tutor of Howpasley were executors for Janet of Howpasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primsdie a fee for her marriage to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 he was recorded as ‘gudschir’ to Walter, son of Robert in Howford in a marriage contract with Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish. It seems likely that he was a brother of Robert in Howford (rather than his father). In 1540 he witnessed a sasine for William Turnbull in Selkirk. In 1543/4 his wife Margaret Turnbull purchased a tenement in Selkirk from John Fairley on behalf of their second son, Walter, reserving the liferent for herself. In 1544 his wife and 2nd son Walter were given his steadings of Blindhaugh, Broadlee and Castleside, with the 3rd son William given the lands of Langhope and ‘the leip hill’ and the youngest son John given Castleside. Probably the same George of Blindhaugh is listed in 1550 among 10 Scotts and the chief of the Elliots, who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep order and hand over criminals. He was surely related to Robert, who was recorded in Blindhaugh in the 1530s and he may be related to later Scotts of Blindhaugh. George (16th C.) witness to a sasine of 1558 (one of Hawick’s earliest surviving) relating to land in the West-end sold by Adam Cessford to James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. He could be the George ‘in Hawik’ who in 1545 bought a tenement in Selkirk from Patrick Kelso; Patrick’s wife was Christian Scott, and possibly related. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (16th C.) son of William. He married Janet Veitch. In 1561 he was son and heir of the deceased William when he paid ‘entry’ to Patrick Murray for his lands, with the assistance of his friend Walter. In 1562 he paid further ‘entries’ for land in Selkirk to Walter and his son Walter. George (d.1578) brother of Robert (who was a Burgess of Hawick) and James (a cordiner). He was killed by a group of Scotts, the circumstances being unknown, but the full group including Robert of Allanhaugh, William in Allanhaugh (‘now in Hawik’), Simon in Over Southfield, Wat there, ‘Syme’ there and ‘Watt’s Jock’. In 1581 his brothers (on behalf of their mother and all their kin) wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, describing how they had received satisfaction for the crime and forgave the assailants. Without the preservation of the record in the Buccleuch archives we would know nothing about this family; as it is, it is difficult to connect them with any other Scotts. George (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Northhouse. In 1582 his son William (and probable son Simon) witnessed a transaction at Braxholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. George of Synton (16th C.) probably second son of John, grandson of Walter (10th Laird) of Synton and brother of Walter (11th); Scott of Satchells suggests he was son of Walter, but that seems less likely, given the timing. His name was inscribed on 2 panels on the former house at Synton, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOWN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOWN HIS SP(QVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT)...’ It therefore seems that he was tenant in Synton in 1570, but recognised as the heir to Walter (perhaps the omission of the word ‘son’ is significant); this may be the year of his marriage. He was listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580 he was ‘in Syntoun’ when he and his brother William in Huntly gave their consent for Robert, son of their deceased brother James in Whitslade, to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Robert in Aikwood (this confirms that these 3 men were brothers, and hence all sons of John, younger of Synton). In 1580 he had a court case where he claimed that he had title to the lands of ‘Ilston’ instead of Adam of Bonnington, apparently gaining these lands from Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with Walter of Stirches over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundistone, with his chosen judges being Walter of Headshaw and Robert of Haining. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. He also witnessed in 1581 a marriage contract between this same William in Burnfoot and Janet (his niece), daughter of William in Huntly. He was mentioned in 1581 as one of the Scotts called before the Privy Council in Edinburgh to try to stop the feud with the Elliots. He was also ordered to confer with the council in 1583/4 regarding the quieting of the Borders. He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with Robert of Haining, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh; this caution was renewed later in 1581, with John Edmondson of Ryeslaw as surety. His servant John Scott of the Palace was charged with resetting stolen horses, and as a result of not appearing to answer for his servant, he was denounced rebel. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1586 he is recorded as a ‘curator’ of the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1586/7 he declared a rebel for failing to appear in court to answer the charges against his servant, John of the Palace. He signed the clan bond in 1589, when he was ‘George of Sinton’. He must also have been Laird on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. In 1590 he may have been the Scott of Synton for whom William Dalmahoy was surety that he would not harm the vassals of the Earl of Angus and David Edmondson of Wowmet was also separately surety for him that he would help the Warden. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He married Margaret, daughter of John Edmonston of Ednam. He and his wife’s name were inscribed on the old stone door lintel from Synton House. Their children included: Walter, who succeeded; David; John of Yorkston, who purchased Headshaw and Langhope; George, who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610; James of Kirkhouses, who helped rescue Kimmont Willie; and Agnes. George of Todrig (d. bef. 1580) probably the 3rd and youngest son of William of Harden, who was also Laird of Todrig (consistent with the description of Scott of Satchells). He succeeded to Harden in 1561 on the death of his father (probably at Todrig). He thus became the first Scott who was just ‘of Toderick’. He was succeeded by Walter, probably his son. Walter’s brothers Robert and William are recorded in 1620, and so were presumably also his sons. Note that Scott of Rodono regards him as a fiction of Scott of Satchells, and suggests instead that Walter of Todrig was descended from William ‘in the Mott’. Assuming he existed, he may have married Elizabeth Ker, who in 1581/2 was recorded as mother of Walter of Todrig. He may be the Scott of Todrig whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Pringle of Trinlyknower. George (16th C.) recorded ‘in Clarelaw’ in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving lands in Midlem. This is probably the Clarilaw in Bowden Parish. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘eister’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He was probably related to John, who had the same nickname. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘alias Goldielandis in Carterhaucht’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Goldielands. George (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Woll’ in 1608 when he was part of a large group of men accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Woll. George of Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, who died in 1608, and Isobel Douglas. It appears that he was Laird of Synton while his father was still alive. He was the 14th and last of the family to be designated ‘of Synton’. In 1610 he was served heir to the lands of Boonraw, these passing to his descendants for the next 110 years. He was also served heir to his father’s lands of Outersiderig. He married Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) and their children were: Walter, who died unmarried; George of Boonraw; and Richard, minister of Kirkbean and Ashkirk. Note that generations seem confused in some accounts. In 1627 he sold the Synton estate to Francis, son of Walter Scott of Harden (a distant cousin, their great-grandfathers having been brothers). This was probably forced on him to clear debts. His widow was probably the ‘Mar. Gladstains’ who was liferenter of an unnamed farm (most likely Boonraw) and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1643 and also the ‘Lyrfrenter of Boonraw’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. George of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as ‘callit of Deringstoun’. This was in the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, who, having gotten off the charge of slaughtering Douglas of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley, was charged with stealing sheep from his lands of ‘Castell-hill’ in 1613 (among other thefts). It is unclear whether this is the place of that name near Ashkirk or the one near Branxholme (probably the latter). He was surely related to the half century earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and the slightly earlier John ‘of Drinkstone’. It is possible he was ‘Geordie in Castel-hill’ (no surname given) who was listed among fugitives in 1618. George ‘the Souter’ and ‘Marion’s Geordie’ (d.1616) cordiner in Hawick. He assisted in the 1615 plan of Lady Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells to slaughter the sheep of Sir James Douglas, newly possessed of Howpasley. In the trial he was painted as the main instigator and was accused of threatening Jock ‘the Suckler’ at sword-point to carry through with the crime. He said he would accept his guilt if Jock repeated the accusations to his face, which Jock duly did. He then referred to his dog ‘Hyde-the-bastard’, saying ‘Sa lang as I and my Bastard served heirs portioners to this Barony and all the associated lands, which included a large part of Abbotrule; it has also been claimed that they succeeded to his lands in Linton, rather than Maxton. George (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Dinlees on Hermitage Water in 1632. George (17th C.) tenant in Bowknowe. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. George (17th C.) recorded in the Council Records of 1651 when he was fined £10 for keeping false weights, specifically ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Waugh and their children included: John (b.1634); Marion (b.1640); Thomas (b.1643); Robert (b.1648); and George (b.1651). The witnesses in 1651 were Andrew Liddersdale and John Scott. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included Robert (b.1650), Thomas (b.1652) and Elizabeth (b.1660). The witnesses were William ... and Thomas Scott. He may be the George who in 1661 in Ashkirk witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot (possibly related to his wife). George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Grisel ‘Moore’ and their children included Jean (b.1650) and Agnes (b.1652). The 2 witnesses in 1652 were both Robert Scott. George (17th C.) tenant in Netherraw in Liddesdale. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. George (d.c.1690) of Boonraw. Son of George of Synton and Boonraw. He was probably the ‘G. Scott of boneraw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was Bailie-depute of Hawick (i.e. appointed by the Baron) and resided in the Tower, as recorded in 1668. In that year it is written that, at the request of the Bailies of Hawick, he set free 3 people called ‘Bridgs’ who had been imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as ‘of Bondra’ in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was recorded in 2 bonds in 1673. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire for raising money to support the King. He paid the land tax for Boonraw and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1678, valued at £291; he was probably also the man recorded as ‘Boonrau for Overtoune’, paying the land tax in Oxnam Parish in 1678. In 1680 he witnessed (along with Robert of Horsleyhill) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In 1692 the lands of Stouslie ‘being formerly posset by the deceast George Scott of Boonraw be ane 19 yeares tack’ were possessed by his heirs and representatives. He married a daughter of Douglas of Gervald (who was hence grand-daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers). How many children he had is unclear, with Haining citing local tradition that he had 3 sons, George, Archibald and Richard, while Keith Scott records just 1 son, Archibald, and a daughter, Ann. His children may therefore have included: George (said to have been born in 1672, but that seems rather late), who probably died young; Archibald (d.1720, supposedly at an advanced age), who succeeded, but died unmarried, thus ending this branch of the Scotts; Ann, who is also stated to have died unmarried; and Richard, said to have married a daughter of Charles Ogilvie and claimed to be the ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent, who was grandfather of Sir James A.H. Murray. With the murky end of this family, the line of the original Scotts of Synton was also lost. His will is recorded in 1690 (or perhaps 1698). George (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Woll. He was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He was served heir to his father in 1670, although his elder brother James had already sold the lands of Woll. He may have been the Edinburgh surgeon of that name recorded in a bond of appearance in 1673. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Robertson Parishes. He married Margaret Fairgrieve. His wife’s surname was recorded as ‘Furgrie’ in 1671 and ‘ffeirgrive’ in 1681. Their children included: Margaret (b.1671), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1681), baptised in Robertson; and Walter (b.1684), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses to the 1671 baptism were Francis Simpson and John Scott. The 1681 witnesses were George Brown and Francis Scott (who was probably related). George (17th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. There was a bond from his father to him for 550 merks Scots. He had a son, Alexander, who was tenant at Roughheugh Mill, and was progenitor of the Scotts of Falla. He is probably the George, son of Thomas in Bonchester, who was on a list of those found guilty of ‘nonconformity’ in 1684. George (d.c.1686) probably tenant in Borthaugh. He is recorded being ‘in Bortoch’ when his will was listed in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1686. He was probably related to Walter ‘in Burtoch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Dockeuche’ (i.e. Doecleuch), he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s according to James Wilson. He paid £140 for the land tax in Cavers Parish in 1643; the same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. George (17th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish, probably somewhere to the south of the Town. He is recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He married Janet Black, and their children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1701) and William (b.1704), as well as probably Bessie (b.1702), Isobel (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1701 were smith James Scott (surely related) and Francis Elliot, in 1702 were William Henderson in the Flex and James Davidson in Newbigging, in 1704 were William and Francis Henderson (both smiths at the Flex) and in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell.

in Goldielands. George (17th C.) Hawick resident who was fined £20 Scots in 1688 ‘for deserting the town when the Militia was listing’. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. George (17th C.) tenant at Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th C.) resident at Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) listed as wright among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also a wright on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (17th C.) merchant listed as ‘called greina’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed with the word ‘Grinna’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinna’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, John is also listed in 1694 with the same name. George (17th C.) resident of Easter Groundistone. He was there according to baptismal records of 1682 and 1688 and also according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Adam Glendinning in Groundistone in 1698. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. Francis in Wester Groundistone. In 1709 George Lorraine was recorded as his servant. He married Agnes Scott in Roberton Parish (actually the old Hassendean) in 1681 and their children included: Robert (b.1682); George (b.1685); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1682 were James C. and Robert Scott and in 1688 were William Scott (who may have been related to him or his wife) and William Palmer. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or more likely Hassendean. He married Margaret Reuwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Agnes (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were William Telfer and Andrew ‘heughane’ (perhaps Huggan) and in 1687 were James Halliwell and Andrew ‘heughane’. George (17th C.) described as ‘pedder’ in 1694 when his wife Marion ‘Robison’ was fined for making ‘bakes’ on the Common. George (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Cowan in Ashkirk in 1701 and their children included: John (b.1702); Isobel (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); and George (b.1717). He may be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1690 for William Easton (along with James Veitch) and for James Veitch (along with William Easton); all 3 men probably lived at North Synton. George (17th/18th C.) listter’ (i.e. dyer) in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a son of ‘Walter Scott herd’, who may be the same man as ‘Crooked Wat’. George (17th/18th C.) removed as a Hawick councillor in 1706 for several charges, including calling the Town Clerk ‘ane knave, cheat, and rascal’. It is unclear if this is related to the disputes over the Common Riding that year, or a separate matter. He is probably the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Burnhead. His son George was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. George (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. George ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may be the George who, along with merchant Michael, witnessed a baptism for smith James in 1708. He witnessed another baptism in 1711 for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’ (servant to Robert Robson). In 1712, along with fellow tailor Archibald, he witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Wyndhead’. He was listed as a tailor in 1714 when he witnessed a further baptism for tailor Archibald (who was probably related). In 1712 he married Elspeth Scott, who was widow of William Scott. To distinguish him from other men of the same name, he is recorded as ‘called George Wyndhead’. He is probably related to other Scotts with that designation. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Redford in 1714 and their children included James (b.1729) and Walter (b.1733). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Alton in 1722 and Wester Burnfoot in 1729. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Alton in 1722 (suggesting that they were related). He married Helen, daughter of Walter Hume in Hawick in 1716. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1717); Isobel (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Bessie (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were John and James Scott (who were probably related to him) and in 1729 were John Scott and Richard Turnbull. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1724 and Silverbuthall in 1728 and 1732. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for Robert Scott, resident of Groundistone. He may be the George who got married in Wilton in 1713, with no wife's name recorded. He married Margaret Martin and their children included: George (b.1717); Agnes (b.1719); Margaret (b.1722); Bessie (b.1724); Helen (b.1728); and Ann (b.1732). The witnesses in 1724 were Richard and another George Scott (perhaps the one from Boonraw), in 1728 were Robert Scott and James Dickson and in 1732 were Robert and Walter Scott. His daughter is recorded being buried in Wilton in 1734. George (d.d. bef. 1742) was at Ormiston in 1733 when his son Robert was (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1735. In 1725 he married Mary Swan. Their children (baptised in Selkirk and Ettrick Parishes) included David (b.1731), George (b.1735), Samuel and James (b.1742). George (18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1732. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Georges. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1733 when his son Robert was baptised. George (18th C.) merchant who was appointed as one of the Commissioners for building the Teviot Bridge at Hawick in 1738. He was also one of the men (all Councillors presumably) appointed to oversee the building of a new Parish School in 1739. He witnessed baptisms in 1743 for weaver Robert Douglas and his wife Nicholas Scott (who may have been related to him), and in 1745 and 1747 for merchant Robert, who may have been related. He may be the George who is recorded in 1752 giving in money ‘for stones of Millport’, perhaps connected with repairs to Teviot Brig. Probably the same merchant George witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related). George (18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was recorded working on the mill there in 1743. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1747. He married Helen Fletcher (who was from Robertson Parish) in 1734 and their children included: George (b.1736); Robert (b.1738); Margaret (b.1742); Janet (b.1747); and John (b.1749). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and George Hart. George (18th C.) joiner at Deanburnhaugh, grandfather of the George who wrote about Deanburnhaugh, as well as Adam who was joiner in Hawick. He married a daughter of William Scott ‘the Pether’. George (1724–1815) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and then at Roughheugh Mill. He was tenant farmer at Falla. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, who died in 1790, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander (b.1756), who died young; John, who married his cousin; Euphemia; Alexander (b.1759) of Falla; Thomas (1761–1849); and Elizabeth. He is buried at Bedrule. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Agnes Robieson, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children included: John and Walter (b.1764); Mary (b.1770); and William (b.1777). George (1734/5–1818) wright in Newcastleton. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Armstrong, who died in 1806, aged 67. Their children included: Jean (1777/8–83), who died at Burnmouth; and 2 who died in infancy. Other children probably included: Archibald (1771/2–1858), also a joiner in Newcastleton, and marked on the same gravestone; and Thomas (1774/5–1846) buried in the adjacent plot. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 4 farm horses. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. He was listed as tenant in 1799, along with Charles, to whom he was surely related. George (1773–1861) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Isabel Kedzie. He was a joiner at Deanburnhaugh and also described as a merchant there in 1808 (when his children’s previous baptisms were recorded). In 1800, in Robertson Parish, he married Mary Davidson, who died in 1836, aged 64. Their children included: Mary (b.1801); William (b.1803); Isobel (b.1805); and Robert (b.1808). He was living alone on the 1841 and 1851 censuses and in 1861 was a retired joiner, living with the family of his son William. He may have been related to the earlier joiner of the same name. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. George (b.1778) son of Bailie William. He is recorded in Hawick in 1797 and 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. It is possible that the same George was recorded as a tailor in Hawick on the ballot list in 1799. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (1779–1805) from Single in the Ettrick valley, son of William, who was tenant farmer... there, and brother of Robert, who was at Toddshawhaugh. He was a school-mate of Mungo Park. He trained as a draughtsman and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. He was artist on the expedition of Mungo Park back to Africa in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) married a daughter of George Turnbull, from whom he acquired the farm of Calaburn. He had a son Thomas when he was living at Hawick Shiel. He later lived at Kirkton. He had another son, Robert (b.1800), who was a vet at Kirkton and then Cauldmill. George (d.1826) contractor in Wilton. He married ‘Lillias’ Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1789, probably when they were both quite young. Their son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1790 (his wife’s name being recorded there as ‘Lillie’), probably named after his father. Their daughter Sophie was baptised in Wilton in 1793 (his wife then being ‘Lillies Engis’), perhaps named after a daughter of Lord Napier (for whose wife his wife was probably lady’s maid) born in 1791. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1791 for William Dalgleish, resident of Roadhead in Wilton. In 1799 his wife (recorded on the Selkirk Parish baptismal record as ‘Elanor’) had twins at Yair House, where she was working as a lady’s maid. The twins were named Francis Napier (after Lord Napier, who at the time owned Wilton Lodge, and for whom his wife had previously worked) and Alexander Pringle (after the owner of Yair); the baptism was attended by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank and Rev. William Shaw of Selkirk. The family were buried in the old Wilton Cemetery and he was listed as ‘Contractor Wilton’ on the headstone (although precisely what kind of contractor is unclear). It seems likely that he was the George, son of Robert in ‘Broadlieburnfoot’, baptised in Roberton in 1771. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘George Scott, Scantiehall’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.1834) master of Minto School. He was master at Yarrow school for 2 years, in the early 1780s, taking over from Alexander Wilson, but then moving to Minto. He was certainly master at Minto by 1788 and remained until the 1820s. He signed the list of eligible men from Minto in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1799, his name appearing as ‘Geo Scott Skoolm’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Dalgleish (b.1761) in Minto in 1786. Their children included: James (b.1788), clerk of works for architect William Burns in Edinburgh; Jean (1789–1859), who married and moved to Edinburgh; Simon (1792–1871), a clerk; George (1794–1857); Margaret (1797–1867), died unmarried; Walter Dalgleish (1800–1852), advertising agent; and Betty (b.1807). He wrote a will in 1826. George (d.bef. 1816) wright and cabinetmaker in Hawick. He married Janet Dryden, who died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776), probably the wright listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1797; Walter (again, b.1777); Helen (b.1784); and Jane (b.1787). The witnesses in 1776 were John Dryden (presumably related to his wife) and Thomas Huntly. His daughter Mary died in 1781. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholmhill. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Subst.’ suggests he may not have served. His name appears again in 1798, but with Francis Neilson, weaver in Peebles, acting as his substitute. He was surely related to James, who was farmer at Denholmhill at the same time. George (1777–1853) Border minor poet, who wrote ‘Heath Flowers’. He was born at Dingleton, and educated at Melrose and Galashiels, then Edinburgh University. At age 22 he became parish schoolmaster at Livingstone and 6 years later became schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf, starting in 1805. He is recorded as master of Lilliesleaf School on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living in Lilliesleaf with his wife Isabella and children Thomas (mason) and Isabella. He retired from teaching in 1850 and in 1851 is recorded as retired schoolmaster living at the schoolhouse in Lilliesleaf. It is said that many of his former pupils rose to great heights in their respective fields. He was patronised by Sir John Riddell of Riddell and was also a correspondent with Sir Walter Scott. He published a small volume of his poetry, ‘Heath Flowers; or, Mountain Melodies’ in 1820. He also wrote a statistical account of Roxburghshire, which was never published. George (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1803 he contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French). George (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas in Longnewton. He was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798 among men balloted to serve in the Militia. John Campbell, painter in Edinburgh, served as his substitute in 1798. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as Student of Phisick’ at Bewlie Mains in Lillesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may have been son of John, who was farmer at Bewlie Mains at about the same time. George (b.c.1770s) son of Thomas in Northhouse. He was on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. George (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Porteous and their children included Janet (b.1805) and James (b.1807). George (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Davidson and their children included Isabel (b.1805) and Robert (b.1808). George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1808 and his daughter Isabel and son George died in the same year (although it is possible more than one weaver called George are compounded here). Perhaps the same weaver, son of wright ‘W Scott’, was listed among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia in 1797; in 1798 he was listed again, as son of Walter (corrected from William), wright in Hawick. He was listed among men who had failed to appear before the committee, but was later sworn in. In 1799 he was ‘Son to B. Wm Scott’ among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Young’s Street in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. George (d.bef. 1808) tenant at Whithope Mill. He was recorded there in 1786. His son George died in 1808 and his wife Margaret in 1809. He is surely related to Adam and John, who were tenants in the early years of the 19th century. He may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1774. His children included George (b.1786). George (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick, he was grandfather of manufacturer Peter. He may have been son of Thomas and Janet (possibly the George born in Wilton Parish in 1779, son of Thomas and Nelly Irwin) or perhaps was a younger brother of Thomas. He married Margaret Affleck and she died in 1867. Their children included: Christina Affleck (1815–75), who married William Laidlaw; George (b.1820/1), who was a grocer; Jane (1824–60); and probably James. He may be the handloom weaver who was living on Melgund Place in 1841, along with his children Jane and James (but with no sign of his wife). George (b.1780) gunmaker on the Sandbed. He is probably the smith in Hawick listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He was a Hawick gunsmith in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In 1837 it was said in court documents that during the election riot of 1837 David Tully was forced into the Slitrig near his shop. He is recorded at about No. 11 Sandbed on the 1841 census, along with a younger George, probably his son. In 1846 his shop was flooded and a gun in its case was later found at Burnfoot Mill. George (1794–1857) son of George, schoolmaster at Minto. He was educated at Minto and in Edinburgh. He was Parochial Schoolmaster of Cavers from 1814. He was teacher in Denholm in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In the 1830s he is listed as master of Cavers School and land surveyor in Denholm at the same time. He is responsible for a plan of Denholm village in 1835. He also served as Session Clerk. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as Parochial Schoolmaster in Denholm. He probably lived at the old schoolhouse, which was on Denholm Green. He was the earliest teacher of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. He married Helen, daughter of John Beattie and Cicily Hall. Their children were: Cecil (b.1822), who died in infancy; Cecil (1823–49); George (b.1825), who worked as an advertising and newspaper agent in Edinburgh; Jeanie (b.1828), who died in infancy; Jeanie (1830–46); Helen (b.1834); and Margaret (b.1836), who died in infancy. By 1861 his wife was recorded as Fundholder and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (1792–1850s) son of John and Helen Scott, from Selkirk Parish. He was born at Newark, where his father worked on the farm, tenanted by Robert Scott (probably not directly related). He was at Synton Parkhead and then at Synton Mill. His wife was Jean, from Yarrow. Their son John (b.1832) was born in Ashkirk and worked as a ploughman, then on the railway. They also had a daughter, Margaret. George (18th/19th C.) farm steward to Henry Elliot at Gatehousecote. His son James became steward at Hallrule. He died at Spittal-on-Rule. George (b.1804/5) gunmaker and ironmonger on the Sandbed, probably son of gunmaker George. The shop was at No. 11. His wife was Eliza and they had sons Frank C. and James L. George (19th C.) married Mary Thomson in Wilton in 1830. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he was runner-up in the 624 yards race in the 1830 St. Ronan’s Games, and winner in 1831. It is said that in 1831 ‘Scott for ever!’ was the general cry. He also won the long race in 1833 and 1834. George (b.1808) from Roberton Parish, son of William and Isobel Glendinning. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flesher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwyard in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isobel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) born in Belses, he was farmer in Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in 1851 as farmer of 12 acres, living on Main Street. His wife was Agnes from Paislay. Their children included Margaret, George, Isabella, Adamina G., Mary and John. George (19th C.) son of shepherd David Scott. He was a shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. He married Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’, d.1904). They had 9 children, including James (farmer at Overhall), Nellie, Euphemia, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. George (b.1829/30) agricultural labourer from Ettrick. He married Barbara Halliday in Hawick in 1851. His wife was probably sister of the poet John Halliday. Their children included: Robert (b.1852) and James (b.1854), baptised in Hobbirk; Agnes (b.1855), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and George (b.1857) and Helen (b.1859), baptised in Bowden. In 1861 the family were living at Stichelhill in Castleton Parish. Based on the names, it is possible he was the George, son of Robert and Agnes Mitchell, baptised in Yarrow in 1820. George (19th C.) tenant at Bedrule Mill in 1857. George (19th C.) shepherd at Wigg in Hobbirk Parish. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. George (b.1817/8) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter (born in Peeblesshire) and William (born in Cavers Parish). George (1820/1–92) from Yarrow, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Robina. George (1820/1–92) grocer on the Howegate, son of George and Margaret Affleck. He was father of Peter, who founded Pesco’s. In 1841 he was a clerk, living with Thomas and Janet (possibly his grandparents) on Walter’s Wynd. In 1851 he was a frame-worker on the Loan. In 1861 he was recorded as ‘Post Messenger’ at 19 Howegate. He married Marion Elizabeth (1829–88), daughter of Peter Adamson. Their children included: George (b.1850), a baker; Peter (1852–1925), manufacturer; Marion (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1860), who signed his death certificate; Thomas (b.1862), who was Cornet in 1887; Elizabeth (b.1864); Catherine (b.1867); Susan (b.1869); and Jemima (b.1872). He died at Drumlanrig Square. George (1836–1904) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Synton Lodge. In 1851 he was still living with his mother and brothers at Dimpleknowe. In 1861 he was a thatcher living in Denholm. He married Margaret Riddell and had children: William (b.1860); Mary (b.1862); Robert Riddell (b.1865); Helen (or ‘Nellie’, b.1872); Jessie (b.1875); and George (b.1881). All children were baptised in Cavers Parish, except the last, which was in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Canada and he died at Minto, Manitoba. George (1837–1907) son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a mill finisher in Hawick. He latterly lived at 16 Bourtree Place. In 1860 he firstly married Elizabith Miller Pringle, daughter of James Pringle, cousin of the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, hosiery manufacturers. Their children were: James Pringle (b.1862), also a mill finisher; Beatrice (b.1866); and Janet Oliver (b.1868). In 1871 he secondly married Janet (d.1897), daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. Their children were: Mary Greenwood (b.1873); Robert; Francis George (b.1880), composer; and Margaret Lilias, who married Robert Furness. George (1850–1926) born in Teviothead. He was agent for the Prudential Insurance Company in Hawick. In 1879 he married Isabella Grieve Laidlaw (1838–1927), youngest daughter of James Laidlaw, farmer at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill. Their children were: George Henry (b.1880), a miller; John (b.1881); Elizabeth (b.1883); and Jemima Margaret (b.1885). George (19th C.) builder who lived at Slitrig Bank. George (1850–1940) eldest son of George and Marion Adamson. He was brother of Peter, who established ‘Pesco’s’. He was a baker in Hawick. Apparently he and his brother were note draughts players. In 1872 he married Susan Wright Thorburn. Their children were: Margaret Rae (b.1875); Marion A. (b.1877); Agnes Thorburn (b.1878); John T. (b.1880); Georgina (b.1882); Christina (‘Kate’, b.1884); Peter (b.1886); Isabella Henderson (b.1889); and Elizabeth (b.1891). George (1879–1950) eldest son of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He was Cornet in 1904. He joined the family firm in 1892 and became a Managing Director in about 1903. He was usually referred to as ‘Mr. George’. He gifted communion cups to St. George’s Kirk in 1921 and lived at Langlee. He married Janet Riddle. George Alexander (1888–1963) born in Hawick, he became a biologist and schoolmaster. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He was Biology Master in Newton Stewart and later at George Heriot’s, where he became Head of Biology. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland and a member of the Science Masters Association, Scottish Secondary Teachers Association and Scottish Educational Film Association. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. George Douglas (19th/20th C.) served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI, where he was wounded and invalided out. He was Cornet in 1925 and Acting Father in 1958. J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father (for the 4th time). Gerard (13th C.) recorded in a document in Norwich in 1242, relating to some captured sacks of Scottish wool. Lucas ‘Scot’, mayor of Dunwich, appended his seals instead, and so is probably a relative. He is recorded as ‘le Escot’ in 1263 when he (unsuccessfully) appealed the death of his son Robert at the hands of Nicholas Percival of ‘Dunwych’ in Suffolk. Richard, his nephew, accused someone else (also unsuccessfully) of the same murder in 1272. Probably the same Gerald ‘le Scot’ is recorded in relation to a write of trespass in Northumberland in 1264. Gideon (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In 1621, along with his brother William and mother Bessie Naysmith, they complained about the murderers of his father (2 Elphinstones) still being at large. His name is given as ‘Gedane Scottis’ and he may be one of the first of the family with this forename. Sir Gideon of Highchester (d.1673) 2nd son of Sir William Scott of Harden. His forename came from his maternal grandfather, Sir Gideon Murray. He is usually described as being ‘of Highchester’, even although the farm is more often called ‘Highchesters’. In 1643 he was given the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshielis, as well as others; this was part of his marriage contract with Margaret Hamilton. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646 (as ‘Jedean’), 1648 and probably 1649. He is recorded in 1648 when commissioners had to be appointed for valuation of teinds at Harden, Highchesters, Mabonlaw and Todshaw, following a dispute between him and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1648 he was one of the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. In 1650 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He is listed (along with his wife and 19 other people, presumably servants and farm workers) on the Harden estate in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He is probably the Gideon who witnessed the baptism of Gideon (later of Falnash), son of Robert of Harwood in Hawick in 1651 and another child of Robert in Hawick in 1652. He was the main proponent for having Hassendean Church removed to Roberton in the 1660s (fighting against the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch). He was knighted in 1650. He was appointed Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire by Charles I, and continued through the 1650s. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was also one of the ‘tutors’ of the young Mary Scott of Buccleuch in the 1650s and was the executor for her will. In 1654 he acted along with John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale on behalf of the Countess Mary, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell; however, he was deeply distrustful of the Earl of Tweeddale, and it appears that both were attempting to exert influence on the other tutors for their own ends, in particular to arrange the marriage of the Countess. In fact his son Walter married Mary in secret (when they were both very young), and there was a continuing power struggle with her mother, the Countess of Wemyss, as well as with the ‘Lothian tutors’. In 1660 he borrowed £2400 pounds from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was knighted in 1660, when he accompanied the young Countess of Buccleuch to London, and his son Walter was made Earl of Tarras at the same time. He also served as tutor for Anne of Buccleuch, and continued to have disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors after the death of Mary. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £4800, presumably for backing the wrong side. He had a licence from the Privy Council, allowing him to eat meat during Lent in the 1660s. He is probably the Gideon who is recorded paying the 1663 land tax for £814 in Wilton and £600 in Hassendean. About 1666 he was appointed one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. Like his younger brother Walter of Raeburn, he sympathised with the religious views of the Society of Friends (i.e. Quakers), and entered into a dispute with Rev. James Kirkton in 1671. In 1673 he matriculated his arms. He was also recorded as grantee in a deed of 1673. He acquired the lands of Harden from his brother Sir William, who nevertheless continued to be ‘of Harden’, while he was still designated ‘of Highchester’. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir

In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchesters Howcleuch, Borthwickshiels Mains, Alemoor, etc. also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Roberton, Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of nash.

Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon peth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who Christian. One of his descendants (from the Mor- married James Kirkaldy of Grange; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell (younger) of that Ilk; Margaret, who married James Corbet of Tollcross, but appears to have later lived in Hawick; another Agnes, who married Sir James Grant of Dalvey and later William Rutherford of Barnhills; Thomas, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Rouen in 1671; Gideon; Francis, who became a Captain; and Mary. Gideon is recorded becoming an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1676, by which time Sir Gideon was dead. A year later Thomas became a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was ‘son to John Scott of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Walter). He may have been known as ‘of Newhouse’ (although it is unclear where this was). In 1704 he married Jean (b.1688), daughter of William Elliot of Be- wle and Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott of Sny- ton; she was sister of William, who was 2nd (but sometimes stated to be 1st) Elliot Laird of Borth- wickbrae. It is said that they eloped together, and found themselves unsupported by their families. The Duke of Buccleuch took pity on them and settled them on the farm of Ladhope in Yarrow. Their children were: John (b.1706), who died on the coast of Guinea; William (b.1709), tenant in Kirkhope; Walter (b.1712), who died young; Walter (b.1722), who married 3 times, to a Mowbray, a Napier and a Williamson; Gideon (b.1724): Thomas (1727–96), who settled in Mor- peth and married Ann Douglas, who died at the age of 106; Alexander (b.1729), who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope; Isobel, who married James Curle of Moodlaw; Agnes; Betsy; Mary, who married John Mair; Anne Jean, who married James Pott of Dod, farmer at Penchrisse; and Christian. One of his descendants (from the Mor- peth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see Gideon of Falnash. Gideon of Highchester (1678–1707) eldest son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Roberton, Howcleuch, Borthwickshiels Mains, Alemoor, etc. In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchethers and other farms to his mother Helen, Countess of Tarras, for supporting his brothers and sisters He- len, Walter, Elizabeth, Agnes, Thomas, Anne and Margaret. In 1695 he had a charter for the Barony of Minto, including the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, as well as Minto, which was erected into a Barony. However, he sold the lands and Barony of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1703. In 1704 he was listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 it is recorded that he owed money to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the rent of Todshawhaugh and Whames. In 1697 he married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Kinloch of Gilmerton and secondly married Mary Drummond, daughter of John, Earl of Melfort in 1700 (and after his death she re- married Sir James Sharp of Scottscaig). With his second wife he had 2 sons, Walter and John, who both succeeded to Harden, but had no male heirs. They also had a daughter, Mary. A horn powder flask belonging to him still exists at Mer- tom House. Gideon of Falnash (1651–c.1727) 5th son of Robert of Harwood and brother of Wal- ter of Harwood. Note that one of the witnesses at his baptism was Gideon, presumably of Highch- ester, indicating that this is where his forename came from. He farmed at Fenwick, Goldielands and Alton Croft and lived at Broadhaugh (and although he was ‘of Falnash’, he appears not to have lived there). He was probably the ‘Falnash’ who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick in 1677 when he ‘confessed the striking of Wal- ter Hardie, and came in the bailies’ will’. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1678–1727, and in later years was referred to as ‘Auld Falnash’. In the period 1678–94 he was Chamberlain for Hawick, Wilton, Cavers and Hassendean parishes, later referred to as Teviot- dalehead. He was still ‘of Outerside’ in 1692 when he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch, but was ‘of Falnesh’ when he served the same role in 1694 and 1698. He was Gideon of ‘Uthersy- derig’ (i.e. Outerside) in a deed of 1682 and when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. It is possible he was the Gideon who was impris- oned in 1683 along with other local lairds for be- ing supporters of Covenanters. He was ‘of Ut- tersyde’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for John Elliot in Harwood. He was the same Gideon ‘of Outtersyde’ who obtained the lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchethers half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (both in Peeblesshire) from Robert Scott of Glack (who appeared to have no heir, and was probably his brother) in 1689. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He is probably the Gideon who was listed at Broadhaugh in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was still referred to as ‘of Outtersyde’ in the early 1690s, but by at least 1694 was ‘of Falnash’. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Francis, who rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch; this suggests a family relationship perhaps. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Gideon who was served heir to his brother, William, apothecary in Hawick in 1696. In 1699 he gave up the lands of Ladyurd to James Geddes of Kirkurd, although there is a related court case against him by James Geddes’ son James in 1707. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as ‘Regal Bailie’ of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as ‘Regal Bailie’ of Hawick, i.e. the Duchess’s representative in the affairs of the town. In 1700 £100 was given by him (in the name of the Duchess) for the poor of Hawick Parish. Also in 1700 he witnessed the baptism for Gideon, son of Hawick merchant Walter Elliot (suggesting that the child was named after him). He gave a bond of 5,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1703 (presumably on behalf of the Duchess of Buccleuch), which formed the majority of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1704 he was again on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704, the Council resolve to talk with him regarding help with fixing the ‘dam brigs’, the port at Horsleyhill’s Wynd, thatching the Tolbooth, oil for the clock, rope for the bell and shoes for the piper. He had another child named after him in 1704, this time when he witnessed a baptism for his gardener at Fencwick, Walter Paterson. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot, in 1706 others for workman John Shiel and for apothecary Walter (who named his son Gideon, probably after him), in 1707 for Adam Elliot of Arkleton, again for gardener Walter Paterson and for wright John Pringle, in 1708 for Bailie George Martin and for glover John Scott, in 1709 for John Scott ‘Whitegate’ and for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood) and in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branzholme Town. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1710, he was the second largest landowner, behind the Duchess of Buccleuch. His daughter (and so presumably he) was in Broadhaugh in 1716 when she married Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1719 for Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, in 1720 in Hawick for Francis Scott from Harwood (who may have been related to him), and in 1721 in Wilton for Robert of Burnhead and Agnes Scott (his daughter). It was described in 1767 (in depositions given regarding the former use of the Common) that he had warned the tenants of the Duchess of Buccleuch from encroaching on Hawick’s Common. He appears to have first married Jeanette, eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, with the marriage contract being in 1677 (when she was probably quite young); at that time he was recorded as brother-german to Walter of Harwood. He secondly married Mary (b.1660), daughter of James Scott of Thirlestane; she probably died in 1729, since payment was received for ringing the funeral bells ‘to the Lede Fenish’s’. His children included: Robert, who succeeded to Falnash; Agnes, who married Robert Scott of Burnhead; Beatrix (or Beatrice, probably the ‘Beatricks’ baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696), who married Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; James (b.1698), baptised in Hawick; Christian, who married a Mr. Johnstone (but this could be confusion with Mary); Gideon, who became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720; and Mary, the youngest child, who married James Johnson of Park Tower in Canonbie Parish in 1727. Isabella Scott (who married William Elliot in Braudlie and Whitthaugh in about 1700), said to be a daughter of Scott of Falnash, may have also been his daughter (although perhaps she was too old for this generation). He may also have been son of ‘John Scott younger in Falnash’, whose widow Janet Aitchison remarried in 1711. The witnesses to the 1698 baptism were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. A ‘Graham’ of Falnash was recorded as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick in 1721, although this may have been an error. His son Robert is mentioned in connection with the Hawick Parish Session from 1722; so he either started performing the duties of his elderly father before his death, or his death was earlier than 1727. He was already deceased at the end of 1727 when his daughter Mary’s marriage was proclaimed in Hawick. He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon Scott’ who bequeathed £20 to the poor of Hawick Parish when he died. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard along with his first wife Jeanette Elliot. Gideon of Falnash (d.1759) eldest son of Robert of Falnash, who he succeeded in 1734. He also served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for local estates, referred to as ‘Teviotdalehead’ in the period 1747–57, being replaced by Robert of Orchard. He leased the farm of Wester Groundistone from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who sold off the Falnash estate. The 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire contains a blank for the fore-name of Scott of Falnash (presumably because it was unclear who his successor was at that time). Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1719, the marriage being at Wilton (but also proclaimed in Roberton). He was at Alemoor in 1721, 1726, 1728 and 1736, Wester Alemoor in 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1733 and 1736. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1721); Margaret (b.1726); Mungo (b.1728); Gideon (b.1729), perhaps father of Gideon the millwright; Ann (b.1729); Alexander (b.1733); twins Jean and Ann (again, b.1733); and Gilbert (b.1736). In the 1733 Roberton baptism he was recorded being in Cavers Parish, suggesting that Christine (b.1735) and Alison (b.1737), baptised in Cavers, were also his children; in 1735 he is recorded being ‘in Cavers’ itself and in 1737 at Whitriggs. Gideon (18th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He is recorded as a Thatcher in Hawick in 1740. He married Margaret (or Marion) Hislop, their marriage being recorded in Ashkirk and Cavers Parishes in 1727 (he was from Ashkirk Parish and his wife from Cavers). He was recorded at Shielswoodhaugh in 1727 when his first child was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1727); Gideon (b.1740); Marion (b.1742); and Thomas (b.1745). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Walter Graham and merchant John Cavers. In 1742 the witnesses were the same as those for shoemaker William’s child baptised the same day, namely baker Robert (who may have been related to one of them) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. Gideon (d.bef. 1763) druggist in Hawick, perhaps the son of Walter, apothecary in Hawick, born in 1706. He was recorded as ‘Druggist’ in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Douglas. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1746 in a baptism for one of his children and also when he witnessed baptisms for merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746 and 1747. He married Susanna Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Gilbert (b.1741); Catherine (b.1743); and Elizabeth (b.1746). The baptismal witnesses in 1741 were merchants Francis Gledstains and Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were Alexander of Synton and ex-Bailie William Tudhope and in 1746 were John at Winnington Rig and ex-Bailie Robert Howison. He is also mentioned as a Hawick druggist in a marriage record of 1763, when his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Burnet in Edinburgh. It was probably also his daughter Margaret who married Andrew Porteous there in 1768. He is probably the Gideon who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded living at Midshiels in 1747. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Charles of Crumhaugh and Robert of Fenwick; given these witnesses it seems likely that he is the same man as Gideon in Priesthaugh, brother of Charles of Crumhaugh, with his first wife Rachel Scott perhaps being daughter of Robert of Fenwick. Gideon (d.1806) tenant farmer at Priesthaugh, probably son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and brother of Charles of Crumhaugh. Some accounts say he was ‘in Priesthope’, but that is probably a transcription error. He was at Priesthaugh in 1753, he and his wife were ‘Mr. Gideon Scot and Mrs. Elliot’ in 1755 and he was ‘Mr.’ again at Priesthaugh in 1757. He is recorded in Priesthaugh several times in the Peebles Commissary Court documents in the period 1758–60. In 1783 he took out a bond for £700 with Sir Alexander Don of Newton, John Ker of Cavers and William Riddell of Camieston, which they owed after his death. He is probably the Gideon recorded on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. His daughter Beatrice was the second wife of Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Wauchope, marrying him in 1789. His descendants were the Scotts in Priesthaugh, which eventually failed in the male line. Walter, farmer at Priesthaugh in 1797 was probably his son. He married Rachel Elliot, and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1753), Robert (b.1755) and Charles (b.1757). His testament after he died lists his living children and executors as Charles and Jean in Priesthaugh and Margaret, widow of Charles Aitchison at Unthank. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, possibly at Stobicoite. It is possible that he is the Gideon, son of Gideon, baptised in Roberton in 1729. In 1762 he married Mary Scott, from Canonbie Parish, and she died in 1776. Their children included: Gideon (b.1765), who was probably the Hawick millwright; and Elizabeth, who married millwright James. The witnesses in 1765 were wright Gideon Easton and tailor James Dickson. It seems likely that he is the same Gideon who was resident at Borthwickbrae and was baptised in Cavers Parish when his son William was baptised in 1772) and James (b.1774) were baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the Gideon whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787. Gideon (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1777 he married Agnes Tudhope; she was also from Hawick Parish and died in 1781. Their son James was baptised in 1779, perhaps the Hawick man of that name who worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway. The witnesses in 1779 were workman James Hogg and Church Officer Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same man as the Gideon who married Mary Scott, if this was his second wife. Gideon (1762–1841) son of William, who was descended from the Scotts of Woll, his mother being Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. He was farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells. He was farmer at Kirkhope (in Yarrow Parish) according to the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. He had a daughter Christian, who died young. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Teindside. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia to replace John Pringle, who was judged unfit; however, he failed to appear and was declared a deserter, with a reward of 1 guinea offered for his apprehension. Weaver Adam Scott was balloted in his place, but then produced a document from the Earl of Dalkeith showing that he had in fact joined the Regiment. Probably the same Gideon was recorded at Southdeanrig when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. It is possible he is the same man who married Agnes Tudhope (and perhaps earlier married Mary Scott). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Mary Stewart in Cavers in 1788 and their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); Jane (b.1792); and John (b.1794). His wife is recorded as ‘Isabel Stuart’ in 1791. The witnesses in 1792 were the ‘whole Congregation’. Gideon (1765–1833) born at Stobicote, possibly son of Gideon and Mary Scott. His family were supposed to be descended from the Scotts of Davington. He received only 4 months of schooling and became a herdsman as a boy, later serving as an apprentice in Hawick with Walter Turnbull, carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural implement maker. Thereafter he started his own business as a millwright, this later becoming Gideon Scott & Sons, based on the Cross Wynd. As well as building machinery, he was hired as a surveyor and was well known locally as an inventor and amateur astronomer. He suggested the suitability of the Teviot by the Little Haugh for water power, and subsequently William Laidlaw built Teviot Crescent Mills there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a millwright on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He helped convert many of the Hawick mills to water power, for example his firm supplying the new water wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829. He also fitted out mills in Wigan and at Chillingham. He erected windmills at Adderstoneshieel and Penielheugh. In about 1802 he invented an early reaping machine, which was unpopular among the local workers, since it reduced manual labour so much; so after testing it successfully in the dead of night he smashed it up himself. He was also known for launching balloons at local celebratory events, e.g. to mark the end of the Friday Sports of 1826. Entirely self-taught, he was regarded as a prodigy by the townsfolk, and was a great believer in and advocate for education, starting the Trades’ Library in a room of his own house. He was also a leader in the running of the Hawick School of Arts, and gave a lecture there himself, being the first ‘layman’ to do so (in an age when public lectures were formal and intense affairs), illustrating an astronomy talk with an orrery of his own design. He was also an early influence on the career of John Pringle Nichol (later Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University), who came to Hawick as a school teacher. The pair would walk up to Hilliesland to watch the heavens, or spend the night talking in his astronomical study. For the solar eclipse of 1820 he blocked off a window in his observing room, and set up a screen, so that the many people he invited there could watch without staring directly at the Sun. He also described the aurora borealis seen over Hawick in 1826. Nichol returned to Hawick to watch the 1832 transit of Mercury with him, from a garden in Allars Bank (part of his property there being sold as the site for Allars Kirk in 1811). He was also a close friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny, a fellow self-taught inventor and scientist. He promoted the idea of connecting Hawick to the south by railroad (although his idea involved a route up the Allan Water). He is probably the Gideon who in 1795, 1797, 1798 and 1801 witnessed baptisms for millwright James and Elizabeth Scott (who was probably his sister). A few years before his death there was a great reunion of the families... of his 7 sons and 2 daughters, all of them attending the Common Riding festivities that year. There is no known portrait of him, although there are images of his sons Gideon and James (his 5th son), who were also millwrights. Another of his children was Susan, who married James Cranston (and whose daughter Mary married William, son of blacksmith Gavin Pow). His wife may have been Margaret Leithead (b.1772), daughter of Walter and Marjory Thomson, with the marriage taking place in Hawick in 1790. They had children baptised in Hawick, including: Gideon (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); and Marjory (b.1796). Other children were: James (b.c.1805); Andrew (b.c.1810); Gilbert (b.c.1815); Mary (b.c.1815); and Isabella (b.c.1818). The witnesses in 1792 were the Burgher Congregation and in 1794 and 1796 were the ‘Associate Congregation’; the family were thus presumably members of the East Bank Kirk. There must have been 2 additional sons born around 1800. He died at his house on the Cross Wynd. ‘Gideon Scott & Sons’, machine-makers, engineers and millwrights, is listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory (even although this was after his death); the company wrapped up in 1841. In 1841 Margaret was living on the Cross Wynd with sons James, Gilbert and Andrew, and daughter May (probably the same as Marjory). Gideon (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. He married Mary Bell and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1794. In the baptismal record he was ‘at Northhouse in the Parish of Cavers – at present in Whithope’. The same couple are recorded having a daughter Joan baptised in Canonbie in 1798. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nellie Leyden in 1793 and their children included Thomas (b.1799) and Walter (b.1801). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Janet Brydon and their children included Christian (b.1813). Gideon (b.c.1770) recorded as an ostler at Wilton Damhead in 1841. He was living there with Helen, probably his wife. He was listed at Damhead (with no occupation given) among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He could be the millwright of that name recorded at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Gideon (b.c.1770s) servant at Skelfhill, recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Archibald was also a servant on the same list and so perhaps related. He could be the Gideon, son of James in Skelfhill, baptised in 1778. Gideon (b.c.1778) grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 28 Langholm Street and living with Agnes, probably his wife. Gideon (1785/6–1839) 6th son of William, tenant farmer at Singlie. He took over the lease from his father. He married Elizabeth Ballantyne, and she died in 1878, aged 70. Their children included: Gideon, who farmed Singlie and Hyndhope; and Katherine, who married Alexander Gibson. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a direct connection to Hawick and was distinct from the Gideon living in London who also subscribed. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Barbara Armstrong in 1828. Gideon (19th C.), C.E., recorded donating several items to the Museum in 1863. Since he was an engineer and living in London, he may well be the son of millwright Gideon born in 1792. He could be the ‘Gideon Scott, London’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Eliza Smith and their children included Walter (b.1860). Gideon (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Ellen Burnet in 1861. Gideon (b.1839) probably the only son of Gideon, farmer at Singlie (who seems to have died the year he was born). He gave up Singlie and farmed instead at Hyndhope. In about 1879 he emigrated to New Zealand. He had 4 sons (including James and William) and 2 daughters. Gideon (b.1829/30) son of James. He was a frame-worker living at 6 Round Close in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Isabella. Gideon (19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret, daughter of Tom Rutherford, blacksmith at Bonchester. They had 1 son and 4 daughters, including Agnes (b.1881), who was born in Melrose Parish. His wife later lived in Hawick. Gilbert (12th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbertus Scot’ between about 1165 and 1177, when he was asked to perambulate the lands for a charter between Eschina de Molle (wife of Walter, the Steward) and the monks of Paisley Abbey. It is unclear if he was related to other Scotts. Gilbert (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ when he was on an assize for the Lovels in Sussex in 1264. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Richard ‘de Stuarland’, and was described as at that time servant in ‘Swarland’. Gilbert (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9.
Gilbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Adam ‘in aldinershope’ had remission for several crimes at the Justice-ain in Selkirk, including resetting him. His crimes including stealing a horse from James Turnbull and another horse from David Dalgleish. It is not clear what branch of the Scotts he may have come from.

Gilbert (16th C.) recorded as ‘bailie in that part’ in Galashiel in 1535 when the lands there were given to Henry, Lord Methven. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1545 as ‘indweller of Deip…’ when he and his associates were said to have taken a French ship. Gilbert of Bonnington (d.1675) probably the eldest son of James of Bonnington and his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh. He was succeeded his younger brother Charles. Note, this is Bonnington in Lothian (distinct from the earlier Scotts of Bonnington family). He is buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. In 1841 he was living at ‘Pirnie-hall’ in Hobkirk and in 1851 at Gatehousecote Cottages. He married Helen Aitchison in Maxton Parish in 1838. Their children included: David (b.1838); Andrew (b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Christian (b.1845); Janet B. (or Jessie, b.1847); Helen (b.1851); Gilbert (b.1854); and John (b.1856/7).

Some of his earlier children were baptised in An- Knighton and siblings May, Andrew and James. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. In 1831 there was a pa ternity case against him by Helen, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. In 1841 he was living at ‘Pirnie-hall’ in Hobkirk and in 1851 at Gatehousecote Cottages. He married Helen Aitchison in Maxton Parish in 1838. Their children included: David (b.1838); Andrew (b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Christian (b.1845); Janet B. (or Jessie, b.1847); Helen (b.1851); Gilbert (b.1854); and John (b.1856/7).

Some of his earlier children were baptised in An-

Henry (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at the corner of Myreslawgreen and Morrison Place in the mid-1900s. Helen (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. She is listed between 2 unnamed ‘nutrici’ (nurses), suggesting this was also her occupation. It is possible she was the same Helen listed among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he complained against the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others in 1549. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick. She was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784 (one of only 9 women listed). Grizel ‘Nelly’ (1789/90–1861) daughter of carrier William and Margaret Gray. She also had a brother William. She was a shopkeeper at Stobs Woodfoot. She died unmarried. Henry (12th/13th C.) witness to 2 grants to Lindores Abbey by Earl David, brother of the Scottish King, in the late 1190s. He also witnessed a ‘quit-claim’ in the Liders Chartulary in about 1210. Henry (13th C.) recorded on the 1256 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was ‘Henricus Scot’ from ‘Edelingham’. ‘Henricus Scoticus’ is listed in a separate case, and probably a different man. Henry (13th C.) listed on the 1279 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was a burgess of Newcastle on Tyne at that time. His name is written ‘le Scot’ and ‘le Schot’. There are also pledge made by ‘Henrici Scot’ and ‘Henrico le Scot’ in the same year. He could be the ‘Henry le Escot’ who was a pledge for Nicholas in Newcastle in 1266, and the Henry’le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1280 (with John and Nicholas also listed). Henry (13th C.) recorded in a document from King Edward I to the Sheriff of Cumberland in 1280. He bought a mare at Carlisle Fair, and stated that ‘John de Wyncheles’ claimed it was his and furtively stole it from him. This case appears to have been used as a precedent to clarify the March laws to deal with such cross-Border incidents. It seems clear that he was from the Scottish side, although how he was related to other Scotts is unknown. Henry (13th C.) man from Edinburgh who paid homage to Edward I in 1296, where he is recorded as ‘Henry le Scot’. He may also be the ‘Henricus Scotus’ who is listed in 1296 among Scotsmen renouncing their treaty with France, in order to reconcile with England. His lands in Edinburgh were also restored to him in that year. He may be the same Henry from Fife who swore fealty to Edward I in 1304. Henry (13th/14th C.) among the men on the inquest at Roxburgh for the inheritance of William de Charteris for the half barony of Wilton in 1303/4. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he is the first known Henry with a local connection. However, it is possible that he is the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and had his lands restored. Henry (14th C.) recorded in 1364 in an indenture by Henry Struther, Sheriff of Northumberland, where he is charged to pay money to vintners in Newcastle. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Henry (15th C.) mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1457 in relation to a loan in Flanders. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His son John was separately fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘in conwale riggis’, but it is unclear where this was. Henry (15th C.) recorded in Haddington in 1495 when the customs from his sheep skins. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Perhaps the same Henry, owner of a ship, was recorded in Ross in 1509 and 1513. Henry (16th C.) witness in 1549 to a charter in which Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Perhaps the same Henry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1588. Henry (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hawick Parish in 1574/5, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick and several neighbouring parishes (i.e. he was the actual minister, obtaining most of the stipend). John Sandilands was Parson about the same time. He was also recorded as Reader in Hawick in 1576, 1578 and 1579, with the position being vacant in 1580. His stiped was £10 8s. 10d. There is no evidence regarding which branch of the family he came from. Henry (17th C.) witness, along with Robert, to the baptism of a son of Thomas Scott in Hawick in 1687. These other Scotts may have been closely related to him. Note that the forename ‘Henry’ was not common among Scotts of the time. Henry (1676–1730) 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He was made Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage and Baron Scott of Goldielands in 1706, just in time to vote for the Treaty of Union. He was chosen as one of the Scottish representative peers in Parliament 1713–30, and also served in the army. His mother complained about how much money she had lavished on him and stated in one letter of 1719/20 than ‘he is now acting the old Scots proverb – ‘ens wod an’ ey the war’ [i.e. ‘daft once, daft always’]. He married Anne, daughter of William Duncombe of Battlesden, and she died in 1720. Their children were: Francis, 2nd Earl of Deloraine, who married Mary Lister and Mary Scrope; Henry, 3rd Earl of Deloraine, who married Elizabeth Fenwick; and Anne, who died in infancy. He secondly married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and their children were: Georgina Caroline (1727–1809), who married James Peachey; and Henrietta (b.1728), who married Nicholas Boyce. He himself died before his mother. Henry (1712–39/40) 3rd Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl. He held the rank of Captain in the Royal Navy. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenwick. Their children were: Henry (1737–1807), 4th Earl; and John (1738–88). After the death of his brother Francis in 1739 he gained the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. However, he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry ‘the Hero o Quebec’ (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the ‘Milnport Scotts’, he was son of George, a merchant. He became a Burgess in 1752 and married Jean Sanderson, who by all accounts drove him into the army. The local tradition of his story is as follows (related in the 1863 Transactions by William Norman Kennedy, and mentioned briefly by James Wilson in 1850 and again in 1858). He distinguished himself in military service in Canada, being promoted through the ranks and achieving a commission without purchase as a Major. He led a decisive attack on an island rock at Cape...
Breton in 1758, permitting Louisburg to be taken. His main moment of fame came in 1759 on the Heights of Abram near Quebec City, where he was reportedly first to enter the gate of the city. There he planted the Union Jack on the walls, apparently uncontrollably exclaiming ‘Hawick for ever’. In this seminal moment in Canadian history Gen. Wolfe’s forces were victorious over the French, although both leaders were slain. Wolfe was nicknamed ‘the Hero of Quebec’ throughout Britain, but in Hawick that epithet was reserved for Henry Scott. Afterwards he was once more promoted, but apparently died aboard ship on the way home before he received the promotion, with relatives and townspeople suspecting he was murdered by jealous fellow officers. This Hawick version bears some similarity to the documented life of a Maj. George Scott, although with several important differences, hence it is difficult to separate fact from fancy here (perhaps the Hawick man was at Quebec, but the connection with Louisburg may have come from the story of ‘Major’ Scott in Percy’s ‘Anecdotes of Enterprise’, popular in the early 19th century; Maj. George Scott was already in the army in 1750 and eventually became Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica, dying in a duel in 1767, his will mentioning his wife Abigail and 3 brothers, at least one of whom was in Halifax, and hence he seems unlikely to be the Hawick man). Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly the case that a man from the Mill Port Scotts played some part in the events in Quebec, even if they were not quite as dramatic as recalled later (presumably Wilson and Kennedy obtained their information from people who were only about a generation removed from the historical events). A verse of James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ commemorated Scott in the early 19th century – ‘Long this boast on truth’s been founded On Quebec’s high rampart sounded – Hawick for ever, and independent!’ [JH]. His wife survived him by about 50 years and lived for a while at the cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ near Stobs, living on a government pension. It is said that he had no children. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. In 1763 he married Frances, daughter of Thomas Heath, but they separated before 1780. He died in London without issue and his titles became extinct. Henry (1741–1817) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Singlie, and grandson of William in Milsington. He farmed at Over Deloraine in the Ettrick valley from 1770. He paid the horse taxes there in the period 1785–97 and the dog taxes in 1797. He married a daughter of Anderson of Rashiegrain, with whom he had a daughter Alison. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Sibbald. Their children were: John, also tenant at Over Deloraine; Henry, farmer at Over Kirkhope; James (1792–1864); William, who became a doctor with the East India Company; Margaret, who married Dr. Thomas Anderson of Selkirk in 1808; and Eliza, who married Rev. W.B. Shaw, minister of Robertson and later Ewes. Eliza and Margaret were said to have been the prototypes for the characters of ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’, and Eliza was also celebrated as ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Deloraine’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem (note that Keith Scott mixes the 2 daughter’s husbands). Henry (1746–1812) 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, son of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the 2nd Duke. He succeeded as a child, was educated at Eton, and when young spent nearly 3 years travelling in Europe with Dr. Adam Smith. His ‘curator’ during his minority was Charles Townshend, his step-father. He gained the Crumhaugh estates in about 1760, as well as many other local lands (including Hardwood and Teindside) about the same time. He settled in Dalkeith, and spent much of his time in Scotland. It is said that he would sometimes visit his tenants in disguise. He made his first visit to Hawick in 1764, when he was welcomed by the Bailies. In 1767 (while he was still a minor) his agents started proceedings against the Town of Hawick, claiming rights of pasturage on the Common; when the final decision was made in 1777 he gained 330 Scots acres of what had been Hawick Common. Additionally in about 1769 he (or his Commissioners) brought a case against some inhabitants of Hawick for not paying multures on ‘his Grace’s mill of Hawick’. In Selkirk in 1778 a bill is recorded ‘for drink to the men who carried the colours before his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’. He was taxed for having a either 1 or 2 gamekeepers at Bowhill in the period 1778–90 and was taxed for having 4 dogs at Bowhill and 15 in Langholm in 1797. He was responsible for making Sir Walter Scott Sheriff in Selkirkshire and was the first President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783. He published a paper called ‘Abstract of a Register of the Weather kept at Brauxholme, for ten years, ending December 31, 1783’. On the outbreak of war with France in 1778 he raised a regiment of fencibles, mainly from his own estates. In 1785 he paid for half the costs to have the main streets of Hawick properly paved and gave £100 for the new Town Hall in 1786. He is also credited with support for the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike. In 1785 he paid the land tax for lands in Selkirk Parish. In 1788 his lands in Roxburghshire included large parts of Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Melrose, Roberton and Wilton Parishes, as well as Hassendean, the Barones of Eckford and Lempitlaw, the teinds of Maxton, the customs of St. Boswell’s Fair and part of Lantont. In 1794 he succeeded to Caroline Park and other estates that were held by his mother. In 1798 he became Colonel of the militia in Edinburgh, assuming control again in 1803 after the truce broke down. He gained the Queensberry and other titles of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig in 1810. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1804–12. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. Known as ‘Duke Henry’ or ‘the Good Duke’, he had a reputation for being generous and was said to be highly popular among the locals. However, in 1767 he (or presumably his advisors) raised an action in the Court of Session against Hawick, concerning ownership of the Common, which ultimately led to the Division of 1777. ‘Midlothian Fencibles’. He also established Newcastle in 1793 and was known as an agricultural improver. In 1767 he married Lady Elizabeth Montagu, only surviving daughter of George, Duke of Montagu; she became a patron of many charities in Edinburgh and died in 1827, aged 84. The Buccleuch family gained vast estates in England through this marriage. He was succeeded by his son Charles William Henry (1772–1819), who adopted the surname Montagu-Scott. His other children were: George (b.1768), Earl of Dalkeith, who died in infancy; Mary (1769–1823), who married James George, Viscount Stopford and later Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry James Montagu (1776–1845) Baron Montagu of Boughton, younger brother of the 4th Duke of Buccleuch. He acted as guardian to his nephew Walter, the 5th Duke, during his minority. The pair were made Honorary Burgess when they passed through Hawick in 1821. He succeeded to the Montagu Baronetcy on the death of his grandfather, George Duke of Montagu, and adopted Montagu as his surname. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1804 he married his cousin Jane Margaret Douglas (d.1859), who was eldest daughter of Archibald, Lord Douglas of Douglas and his aunt Frances. They had 4 daughters: Lucy Elizabeth (d.1877), who married Cospatrick Alexander, Earl of Home; Mary Margaret, who married Lieut.-Col. Frederick Clinton; Jane Caroline (d.1846), who died unmarried; and Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry (b.c.1770s) recorded as labourer at Henderon’s Knowe on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Francis was a labourer there on the same list and so perhaps related. Henry ‘Harry’ (18th/19th C.) resident of the Millport in Hawick. The death of his wife Jane is recorded in 1824. It is possible he was one of the Millport Scotts, and hence related to Henry, the ‘Hero of Quebec’. Henry (1790–1873) 2nd son of Henry, tenant at Over Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He became Laird of Over Kirkhope and tenant in Crosslie, as well as being a hatter in Edinburgh. He was also in partnership with his cousin, Henry Scott, 5th son of William, tenant in Singlie. His company ‘Messrs. H. Scott & Co. hat manufacturers Edinburgh’ subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1820 he married Isabella Martin. Their children were: Henry (b.1830), probably died young; John, tenant in Crosslie; William Henry (b.1836), who emigrated to Canada; Elizabeth, who married James Alexander; Agnes, who married Matthew Whiting; Isabella, who married Mr. Mein, dentist in Edinburgh; Janet; and Margaret. Henry Erskine (d.1847) son of William and decendent of the Scotts of Clarilaw, he was born at Brighton. He succeeded to the lands of Ashieburn when his father died in 1807, but he sold them before his own death. Henry (1796/7–1866) farmer and farmer. He began as a ploughman and was also a shepherd, later becoming a farm steward, managing Stelshaw (near Bewcastle) for William Aitchison of Linhope. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Penchrise Cottage. In 1820 in Cavers Parish he married Mina, daughter of James Lunn; she died at Milings ton in 1888, aged 89. Their children included: Beatrice, who married Walter Thomson, and may also have had a son John with William Aitchison of Linhope in 1843, who was raised by his grandparents; Thomas (b.1825), born at Crailing; Marion (1828–1909), who married Thomas Scott, farmer at Milings ton; William (b.1831); James (1836–1921); and Henry (b.1844), who married Janet Ewart. He was grandfather of Henry Anderson, long time resident of Rulewater. He died at Stelshaw and is buried in Etterton Cemetery. Henry (b.1801/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Milings ton Shankfoot, in 1851 he was at Dee hope in Ettrick Parish and in 1861 he was a boarder at Tweed Bridge End. He married Mary Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1826 and was a boarder at Tweed Bridge End. He married Mary Moffat (from Canonbie) and their children included: Janet (b.1854/5); Mary (b.1856); James (b.1857); William (b.1859); Thomas (b.1860); Robert (b.1862); George (b.1863); and Henry (b.1866). Henry Francis of Harden, 7th Lord Polwarth, see Henry Francis Hepburne-Scott. Henry Ale

(1828–81) eldest son of John Sibbald in Over De lorraine and descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He married Jane Mills of Horsburgh Castle. Their children were: John (b.1863), who emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A.; Jane Purves, who married Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope; Christina, who married Robert M. Mills from Melbourne; Lizzie Mills, who married Archibald C. Morrison from Edinburgh; Georgina Henrietta; and Arbuth not. Henry John Alexander Makdougall of Gala (1901–40) son of Hugh James Elibank Scott-Makdougall of Makertoun and grandson of Maj. Hugh, 9th of Gala. He succeeded his uncle John as 11th Laird. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He became Captain in the 60th Rifles, King’s Royal Rifle Corps. In 1935 he matriculated arms and had his surname legally changed from Scott-Makdougall to Scott, but retaining Makdougall as a middle name. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He was killed in action in Calais, France. He was succeeded by Christopher Bartle Hugh, son of his sister Jean Winifred Mary Scott Makdougall. Herbert (12th C.) Clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He served several Bishops between about 1150 and the 1170s. For example, in the early 1160s he was ‘master’ and ‘clerk’ when he witnessed a gift to St. Andrews Cathedral Priory. Hugh (13th C.) witness in about the 1140s to a charter for the lands of Conveth in Kincardineshire and also a gift of Balcorno in Fife at about the same time. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Scot de Nessebyk’ and ‘Hugone Scot de Nesebick’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His wife Marjorie is also mentioned. He may be the same man as ‘Hugo le Scot de Kantuar’ who is recorded in 2 separate cases involving lands in Corebridge. Hugh of Greenhead and Gala (d.c.1645) 2nd surviving son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was also earlier referred to as ‘of Deuchar’, but became the first Scott of Gala. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1617 he was recorded among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). In 1619 he was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of his brother Walter. In 1622 he was mentioned in a rental document in Melrose. He is also mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records as caution for John Watson of Boldside and John White of Greenhead. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was ‘Hew Scott, sone to Walter Scott of Harden’ in 1644 in a registration of rental for Regality of Melrose lands, and further mentioned in bonds in Melrose in the 1640s, when he was Bailie of the Regality. In 1662 he married Jean Hopringle of Galashiels, daughter and heiress of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. Their children were: Anne; James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh; Walter, a Major in the Army; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Auchty-Donald in Aberdeenshire; John, who settled in Italy; David, who became a surgeon in Edinburgh; Francis, who was referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James in 1664 and 1665; and William, still alive in 1652, and was probably the Capt. William ‘brother to Galloscheills’ in 1658. Hugh of Gala (d.c.1697) son of James. He was recorded as ‘fiar’ in 1673, in a deed along with his father. He was recorded as ‘fiar’ in 1673, in a deed along with his father. He was probably the Laird of Gala whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £2789 in 1678. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1681–82 and on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. However, he was apprehended in 1684 (along with Walter, Earl of Tarras and other Border Lairds) for refusing to support Episcopalianism; his name was given as a conspirator by a tortured minister. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Thomas, who married Elizabeth Borthwick; Hugh; Patrick, who died young; John, who became a Colonel in the Guards; Grizel, who married John Pringle of Torsonce; Margaret, who died young; and Anna, who married Walter of Raeburn, then Henry McDougall of Makerstoun and finally a Home of Eccles. His son James was served as his heir in 1697 and his will was recorded in 1698. Rev. Hugh (1630/1–91) recorded as ‘Hew’, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1649. He was called to Bedrule in late 1657 and ordained there in 1658. However, he was deprived in 1662 for being a Covenanter and forced to leave the Presbytery, being later replaced by James Adamson. He was ‘indulged’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties again) in 1672 and became minister at Oxnam, moving to Galashiels later the same year. He continued there until 1678 and by 1688 (the dates may be confused here) was minister at Stow. He was a member of the Assembly of 1690. He was described as ‘faithfull and painfull in his calling’ and ‘singularly pious’. In 1659 he married Jean, only daughter of Lancelot Pringle of Leis and she died in 1709. Their their children were David, Helen (who married Thomas Waldie in Edinburgh, and was allowed a guinea by the Presbytery in 1725) and David (again, or another error). Hugh of Gala (d.1771) 5th Laird of Gala, son of Sir James. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Stewart of Stewartfield. Their children were: James (b.1730), who died young; John (b.1732), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Euphemia, who died young; Magdalene, who also died young; Anne; Catherine, who married Capt. John Douglas of Ederton, a brother of the Laird of Cavers, who later became Laird himself; Christian (b.1737); Isobel, who died young; and Stewart (b.1741). Hugh of Harden (1758–1841) son of Walter and Diana Home Campbell (daughter of the last Earl of Marchmont). There are documents of 1767, 1774 and 1779 confirming him as the heir to Harden. He was ‘younger of Harden’ when admitted to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He also inherited Mabonlaw and Highchelmers in 1796. He was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire in 1788. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1780–84 and in 1812 was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he is recorded paying tax for ‘The two Oakwoods & Mill’, as well as ‘Whithillbrae, Hitlarburn’ and Inner Huntly in Yarrow Parish. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary’s Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1678. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary’s Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1820 he assumed the additional surname of Hepburne, the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descending to him through his great-great-grandmother, Helen Hepburne, Countess of Tarras. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1795 he married Harriet Brühl, daughter of Hans Maurice, Count de Brühl of Martinskirk, Saxon Ambassador at the Court of St. James’s. This Lady Polwarth was a patron of Sir Walter Scott (and also something of an artist, with sketches of her young sons Henry Francis and Francis surviving; she died in 1853. His children were: Charles Walter (b.1796), who died young; Henry Francis, who succeeded; Rev. William Hugh (1801–68), Rector of Maiden Newton, Dorset; Rev. George William (1804–30), Rector of Kentisbury, Devon, who was given the lands of Bewlie in 1825, and died without issue; Francis (1806–84), who gained the lands of Bewlie in 1831; Harriet Diana; Maria Amabel, who married Maj.-Gen. George C.D. Lewis; Elizabeth Anne, who married Col. Charles Wyndham of Rogate, Sussex, M.P.; and Anne, who married Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswood. He had his portrait painted in 1787. Hugh (d.1818) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–97. He had 2 farm horses, as well as a saddle horse, along with David, who was presumably his brother or son. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Col. Hugh of Gala (1764–95) son of John, he was 7th Laird. He became Colonel in the 26th (Cameronian) Regiment and died during an insurrection in Grenada. He paid the land tax for Galashiels and Blindlee in 1785. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but said to be ‘an officer in the Army, now in Canada’ who would vote with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787 he married Isabella, daughter of Prof. Alexander Monro of Craiglockart and Auchenbowie. They had an only child, John, who succeeded. Maj. Hugh of Gala (1822–77) son of John, he was 9th Laird. He held the rank of Major in the Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia. He was also Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Justice of the Peace in that county. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Isabella, daughter and heiress of Capt. Charles Kinnaird Johnstone-Gordon. Their children were: John Henry Francis Kinnaird, who succeeded; Hugh James Elibank (b.1861), who adopted the surname Scott-Makdougall when he succeeded to Makerstoun from his first cousin twice-removed, and his son Henry John became 11th Laird of Gala; Magdalene Augusta Lavinia, who married Lient.-Gen. Sir Francis John Davies, Commander-in-Chief Scottish Command; and Maj. Charles Archibald Ramsay (1863–1920) of the South Wales Borderers. He died in France. Hugh (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wells. His wife Agnes Veitch died in 1821, aged 45, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard, along with a daughter, Agnes. Humphrey (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Lauder in 1493 as ‘umfridus scot’. Thomas Brown was fined for not presenting him to answer for the death of John Atkinson. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Iain Hunter (1968–) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. He worked for joinery firm Brydon’s and attended Borders College, eventually joining the technical staff and later the teaching staff. He was a founder member of the band Scocha with David Chapman. Even although he spent most of his working life in Gala, he has been heavily involved in promoting Hawick’s culture and history. In 2004 he played the part of James Knox at the bicentenary re-enactment of the ‘False Alairm’. He sings ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ for which he produced all the recordings. He has been involved in many local projects, including being the driving force behind the James Thomson memorial statue and the Archaeological Society Transactions archive. Ingram (d.1616) one of the men who, in 1615, slew the sheep belonging to Sir James Douglas at Howpasley, at the instigation of Lady Scott, widow of Howpasley. He fled to the ‘Northe’, where he was later apprehended along with ‘Wattie’ Scott (possibly a near relative) and was hanged in Edinburgh. He may have been related to some of the others, who were Jock ‘the Suckler’, ‘Marion’s Geordie’ and William ‘in Satchells’. He met them at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley before they ‘ran throw the haill flok of scheip, slew, lamet, and menzet to the number of threscoir’. Isaac (12th/13th C.) probably from Brechin, he was a Clerk of St. Andrews Diocese. His surname was sometimes ‘Forteviot’, referring to a benefice he held in Perthshire. This suggests he was not related to other Scotts. He witnessed several charters in the 1190s. He witnessed a notification by the Bishop of St. Andrews in 1204, and is not recorded after 1213. He had a son, Nazar. Isabel (15th/16th C.) daughter of Robert of Aikwood and sister of Michael. She married James Murray, who owned the lands of Bowhill. In 1529 she was already a widow when her daughter Isabella Murray resigned the southern half of Bowhill to Michael and Michael’s son William (her nephew). She is recorded in 1533 as wife of Alexander ‘Elwand’ who assigned her lands in Kershop (in Ettrick Forest) to her ‘brother german’ Michael. In 1539 she was ‘Esebell Scott’ when she discharged a loan from Michael. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when Margaret Oliver was fined by the Magistrates for calling her ‘witchesgait, and saying that she devoured her awine child’.

Isabel (18th/19th C.) recorded as a witness in 1802 and 1804 to baptisms in Hawick. The other witness was Mrs. Arkle, probably mother of the Hawick minister. The next baptisms recorded were for George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804 and for James Sanderson and Isabel Scott in 1811, both of which could also be her. One of the witnesses in 1811 was Agnes, who may have been related to her. Isabella (1694–1748) daughter of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her second husband, Charles Cornwallis. She was known as Lady Isabella Scott and was the only one of the Duchess’ children to outlive her. In 1731 she was infested by her mother in the lordship of Melrose. She was named the Duchess’ sole executrix in England in her will of 1722/3. According to her mother’s last will, she was also given the personal estate of the Duchess in England in 1732. She died unmarried and Melrose was inherited by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. Isabella nee Hogg (b.1793/4) married Walter Scott, grocer and spirit dealer. She was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow at about 8 Buccleuch Street, living with her children Agnes, Walter, Robert, Mary Ann and Andrew. Isobel (13th C.) recorded in 1296 when she paid homage to Edward I. She was from Fife and was one of only a small number of women on the list. Her name is recorded as ‘Isabele Scot’. She was presumably a widow or heiress. Isobel ‘Lady Synton’ nee Douglas (16th/17th C.) wife of the last Walter of Synton, who died in 1608. She was daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and possibly the aunt of Ann Douglas, who married Sir William Douglas of Cavers. She appears to have thereafter lived at South Synton. In 1615 she is described as ‘the guidwyffe of South Sinton’ when she was summoned to the Presbytery for publicly abusing the minister of Ashkirk, Alexander Hogg, between the Sunday sermons. In the next year she was charged with not attending her own church, saying ‘She wald not repare to her kirk all the dayes of her lyf, nouter wald she gif ane rea"son therefor’. This presumably stemmed from a disagreement with the minister’s new ways. It is stated that she preferred to take communion at Lilliesleaf and Hassendean, and was rebuked by the ministers there for doing so. She apparently eventually reconciled with the minister and was readmitted to the Ashkirk communion. Her children were George of Synton (who sold the estate), Anne, Archibald, Elspeth and Christian. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in the Ashkirk Session records of 1635 as ‘Isabel Scott in Synton Mill’. She complained that Margaret Tullie had called her a witch and a thief. Tullie denied calling her a witch, but claimed she could prove that she was a thief, and called several witnesses to support the claim that she had robbed the purse of Andrew Nichol in Synton Mill. However, the outcome was ‘that they ken her to be ane honest woman, and free of any thyft so far as they ken or know’. Her accuser was made to sit at ‘ye place of repentence’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanters. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel of Whitehaugh (d.1759) probably daughter of Walter and sister of Rev. Robert of Roberton. She succeeded to the Whitehaugh estates on the death of her brother William in 1751. In 1753 she married Rev. William Somerville, minister of Hawick (and was said to be about 80 at that point). She died without any children and her second cousin John succeeded her to Whitehaugh. J. of Grahamswood (17th C.) signatory of the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His name is given as ‘J. Scott of Grameswood’, but it is unclear where this might have been. James (13th C.) recorded as James ‘le Scot’ in 1256 when he was arrested in the town of ‘Roubiry’ (probably Rothbury) along with Robert of Crailing, on suspicion of larceny. James (15th C.) servant of the King recorded in 1454 when he received his fee. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. James (15th C.) recorded as witness to the 1464/5 sasine granting the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He appears as ‘Jacobus Scot’. He may be the same as James of Kirkurd. James (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487. Other witnesses included Adam Scott and local landowners. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but it is possible he was the same as James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. James of Kirkurd (d.c.1501) later referred to as ‘of Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean’. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Henderland; hence he was brother of David of Branxholme and Buccleuch and Alexander of Abington and Howpsayes. However, the fact that his name does not appear in an entail of Branxholme.
made by David in 1488 (while those of Alexander and other more distant Scotts appear) suggests that he may not have been a full brother of David. He was witness to a ‘letter of revision’ in 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. In 1484 he was granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) from their superior, David Lindsay of the Byres. He appears to have resigned Kirkurd at the same time. He also acquired the lands of Hassendean from the Cunninghams of Glencairn. He was probably the ‘Jacobi Scot’ who leased the lands of Falside in Ettrick Forest from 1473 and in 1490 granted the lands of Middlestod of Falside by James II for helping to expel rebels. Also in 1477 his fine for retaining a cottage in Falside was remitted. He was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492; he is there ‘Jacobum Scot de Hasinden’. He may have been the ‘James Scot of Kirkvod’ transcribed as witness to a document in 1494 relating to lands in Hassendean, and he was ‘of Hassendean’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine. Also in 1494 he gave a charter of the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his son David, reserving the liferent to himself. Among the witnesses were his son John, as well as Robert of ‘Achinstanceliech’, and 3 other Scotts, William, Walter and Robert, who may have been related. His wife Margaret was also mentioned in this charter, but her surname is not recorded. He is probably the James who had 16 sheep stolen from him at ‘fawisyl’ according to a case brought against John in Tushielaw in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘in hassinden’ when his son David had remission for stealing livestock from farms of the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the ‘Jacob Scot’ who was granted income from the land of Falside in 1499; in 1501 the rental was assigned to his wife Margaret and son John. Also in 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Jacobi Scot in Hassindane’ in relation to remittance of a fine on John Hay of Yester. In 1503 he is still recorded having the lease of Falside (although he may have been deceased by this time). His sons were: John Scott of Over Newhall (later Burnhead) and of Hassendean, his heir; David of Hassendean; William of Hassendean; Robert of Nether Newhall (later Burnfoot); and Adam of Clarilaw. One of his daughters may have married George Gledstains (who is listed as ‘brother’ of Adam in Clarilaw and William in 1526). He was probably also the James whose wife Margaret received the lands of Falside (in Ettrick) ‘in liferent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (possibly his son) being granted heredity of Falside (which was later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean). He is probably also the James of Hassendean whose son Walter was witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1494–1513. He was somehow associated with the King’s stable. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Perhaps the same James ‘once in the King’s avery’ (i.e. where oats and other food for horses was kept) was given a payment in 1538. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Askirk’ (i.e. Ashkirk) when he served as surety for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, who had stolen sheep from several farms. Robert of Stichers was also surety. This suggests that he was related to the Scotts of Headshaw and of Stirches. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing cattle from the farm of Cauldshields (along with Edmond Taylor), belonging to Ralph Ker, with his surety being John in Hassendean. Additionally in 1502 he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, for stealing horses from Lauder. In 1526 he was listed as being ‘of Askirk’ among the many Borderers who were pardoned for supporting the Homes against the Earl of Arran (perhaps a couple of years earlier); his son Walter was also listed. John of Ashkirk, killed in 1526 and Walter in Ashkirk, recorded in 1553, were possibly descendants. James of Broadmeadows (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘de braidmadois’ when his son William had remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. He was also ‘de braidmadois’ in 1502 when his son John had remission for stealing 2 horses from Yair, with David of Galalaw as surety. This suggests that there were Scotts who owned land at Broadmeadows much earlier than the branch that would be there in the 17th century. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other branches of the Scotts, but he may have been related to the Scotts of Hassendean or Galalaw. Walter in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean, was also recorded at the same Justiciary in 1502 and may have been related. Given the similarity of names, it is possible he is the same man as James of Kirkurd. James (d.1563) 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the church. During the reign of James V he was Clerk to the Treasury, and was recorded being paid as such in 1533. He is probably the James, writer in the Exchequer, who is recorded in 1538 and 1540. In 1543 he succeeded Alexander Scott (of unknown connection) as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. Like his predecessor he was also one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts (1544–62) and is recorded several times in this period as Provost of Corstorphine. In 1554 he was appointed as an Ordinary Lord of Session. He had a manse built at Corstorphine, which contained his coat of arms. In 1560 he was granted the parsonage of Kirkurd (in Peeblesshire) by Trinity Collegiate Church (in Edinburgh) along with William, Burgess of Edinburgh (and presumably a near relative). The man of the same name who was ‘servitor to the Treasurer’ in 1597/8 may have been related. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Holfurd’ (probably Howford) on the 1526 list of Borders men pardoned for their support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. James ‘Beld Jame’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as being ‘callit Beld Jame’, with James ‘in Holfurd’ and James ‘of Ingland’ listed right before and after him, respectively. He was presumably bald. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers given remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘of Ingland’, but it is unclear what this means. James (16th C.) recorded as Bailie of Selkirk in 1528, 1530, 1531, 1534 and 1541. In 1534 he was procurator for his cousin Peter Porteous. In 1541 one of the witnesses was John, who may have been related. Probably the same James was Bailie there according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1541. James of Flex (16th C.) witness to a 1556 document relating to the transfer of Nether Harden between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden. James (16th C.) resident of ‘Quhithoip’ who was listed in 1549 among those whose lands had been attacked by Walter Ker of Cessford and others, in a complaint by Sir Walter of Buccleuch. His lands were probably Whitehope in Yarrow (rather than Whithope in the Borthwick valley). Adam in Whitehope was also listed and Helen was listed right after him and so was probably a relative. He is probably related to the James, recorded in Whitehope around 1580. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘James Scott eius seruo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James ‘Bailzie’ (16th C.) mentioned in Hawick’s first existing sasine (of any detail), dating from 1558, when he was sold a piece of land (perhaps corresponding to what was later called ‘Wylie’s Dub’) by Alexander Scott. He is referred to as ‘alias Bailzie’, suggesting that this was a nickname, and that he was not in fact a Bailie of the Town (or had previously been a Bailie). James (d.c.1564) son of Walter ‘in Hassindene’. He was listed among the men tried in 1564 for the murder of David of Hassendean (who may have been a relative of some sort). Other men involved included Elliots of Horsleyhill. It appears that he was one of the men who were executed for the crime. His relationship to the other Scotts is unclear, however, it may be that he was a nephew of the David who was murdered. These events may have been the catalyst for the deadly feud between the Scotts and the Elliots that lasted for several years. James (16th C.) illegitimate son of John Scott, who was Vicar of Hawick in the 1530s. He appears to have been legitimised in 1538, the document given by John of Burnhead. In 1556 he had a precept of sasine, also from John of Burnhead. This was probably for the lands his father had held at Wester and Easter Muremaw (later called ‘Lees’). James of Alton Croft (16th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as ‘of Altoun-Crofts’ among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been descended from the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He must have been related to the later Walter of Alton Croft. James (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as the man who collected the teinds for Hassendean and Cavers. He was presumably an agent of some sort for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Roberton (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1559 involving Harden and as witness in 1579 to the payment of Ker of Cessford’s fine for the failure of young Ker of Faldonside to marry Janet, sister of Buccleuch. In 1590 he was listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland. He may be the James ‘of Robertoun’ who was listed among Scotts and others charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’ in 1599. It is unclear how he was related to the Johns of Roberton recorded earlier and later. It is possible he was a brother of the former John (and hence younger son of Stephen) and uncle of the John who was supposedly present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. James (d.bef. 1580) probably son of John, who was younger of Synton. He was described as 'in Quhistslaid' (i.e. Whitslade) in 1574 when he and William Scott ‘in Harden’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside (later Howpasaile) for a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot. They also had a ‘letter of reversion’ for a loan on the lands of ‘Auklttrouss’ in Ettrick Forest as well as Easter Craik in the same year. In 1580 he was the deceased James ‘in Quhittisland’ when there was a marriage contract between his son Robert and Elizabeth, sister of Robert of Aikwood; his brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly are also mentioned. His son Robert witnessed a transaction in 1580 for Robert of Aikwood. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘elder’ in Selkirk in 1579. This was in regard to lands pertaining to John Keane (son of William Keane) and Janet Scott, with James younger also mentioned. He also witnessed another transaction in the same year and may be the Burgess of Selkirk who represented the Laird of Buccleuch’s tenants in Huntly in another case in Selkirk in 1579. Additionally he sold lands in Selkirk to John Govenlock. In 1579/80 he was ‘elder burgess in Selirk’ when his son Robert witnessed a transaction. He is probably the James recorded as a deceased Burgess of Selkirk in 1580 in instruments relating to his son and heir Robert. In 1581 he was recorded as occupier of lands in Selkirk that had previously belonged to the Earl of Angus; James, younger was also mentioned. James (16th C.) Reader of Ashkirk Parish in 1575 (not to be confused with John, who was minister here at the same time). In 1579 he was listed as ‘reder’ among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. A record in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1579/80 states that he was to take Thomas Cranston to ‘the parish kirk of Askirk’ and ‘thair to place him in the pulpat and deliver the buk of god in his hands’, giving Cranston possession of the parsonage and vicarage, as well as the ‘mauss gleib and kirkland’. He was also described as Vicar in 1586. However, in 1586 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Southdean), who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, and then excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence. In 1590 he was ‘in Syntounmylne’ on a long list of offenders who ordered to appear to answer for their religious offences. In 1590 he was one of 3 men (the others being Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh and Thomas Newbie, vicar at Hassendean) who agreed never to abuse the sacraments nor function in the kirks after being threatened with death, and it was decided that ‘they sould be tane to the mercat-croce of Edinburghe, and stand twa houris, with paiparis on thair heidis, contening the crymne’. It may be that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation, and had not abandoned his ways. He was also the described as ‘at South Synton Mill’ and ‘in Sintonmill’ and was a close associate of Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh. James (16th C.) cordiner in Hawick recorded in 1591, brother of George and Robert (who was a Burgess). In 1581 he and his brother Robert wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh. Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘witht my hand twiceland the pen led by the notar vunderwritin’ (suggesting that, unlike his brother Robert, he was not able to write). It is unclear how this family might be related to other Scotts. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘younger’ in Selkirk, along with John ‘elder’. Also in 1581 he refused to purchase 2 horses from Borthwickbrae as part of an assessment of taxes there and was selected as an arbitrator in another case. He could be the James who represented Selkirk in a dispute with John Murray of Philiphaugh in about 1606. It is possible he is the ‘James Scott, called Little James’ who was a Burgess in Selkirk in 1590 when there was a band for not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill; ‘Little William’ is also listed and so may have been a relative. James (16th C.) resident of ‘Quhithoip’, which was probably Whitehope in Yarrow. He was surely related to (or perhaps the same man) as the James in the same place in 1549. In 1580 Alexander Gledstains, Burgess of Selkirk, transferred an annual rent for a tenement in Selkirk to him. In 1581 he was recorded in ‘Quhithoip’ and ‘collector of the maills of Ettrick Forest’ when Patrick Murray of Falahill offered to pay him for taxes due on Lewnshope, Hangingshaw and Harehead and Adam Hislop in Tinnis claimed he had already paid him for the same lands. Perhaps the same James ‘in Quhithoip’ was recorded in 1592 when Thomas Ker of Cavers gave caution for him. It is possible he is the same James ‘in Quhithope clerk in this detail’ who acted as clerk for an indenture between the March Wardens in 1594/5. He may also be the James ‘in Quhetyhop’, Chamberlain-Depute of Ettrick Forest, recorded in 1603 when he requested money from Stewart of Traquair. He was deceased in 1629 when recorded being ‘in Quheitslope’ (i.e. Whitehope in Yarrow) when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned. James of Whithope (16th C.) perhaps related to earlier Scotts of Whithope. He was ‘in Quhithop’ in 1580 when he received 200 merks from Robert Scott of Haining for the lands of ‘Maining Mot’. He could be the same man as James in Whithope in Yarrow; despite William, son of John in Whames, being one of the witnesses, it is still likely that his lands were those in Yarrow rather than the Borthwick. In 1592 his cautions was Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre, for his good behaviour and loyalty to the King. In 1602 he was ‘of Quhithoip’ and described as a ‘man’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when Sir William Stewart of Traquair complained that he had stolen from his farms and then obtained a suspension of the letters against him, later stealing 50 sheep from his tenants at Blackhouse; not appearing he was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £424 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. Robert of Haining was his surety in 1602 that he would pay what he owed. In 1603 he was referred to as ‘chamberlain depute of Ettrick Forest’ in a dispute with Sir William Stewart of Traquair over taxation. James of Gilmarscleuch (16th C.) eldest son of John of Thirlestane with his 2nd wife Marian Douglas (this was the claim of Scott of Satchells, refuted by John Scott of Rodono, but confirmed by Keith Scott). In 1580 he witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts in 1589. In 1593 he was ‘of Gilminiscleuch’ in dispute with William Cranston (of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheill’; his son Robert, as well as Arthur of Gamescleuch were also involved and all 3 were declared as rebels. He is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of the Warden, Lord Maxwell, and his men in 1593 at Dryfe Sands; his brother Robert was also listed. He is probably the man transcribed being ‘of Gemmyliscleuch’ (although that seems like Gamescleuch) in 1599 when charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. His ‘oy’ (i.e. grandson) ‘Alie Batie’ is mentioned in a bond of 1609, involving Scotts of Thirlestane, Headshaw and Tushielaw. He is ‘James of Gilmerscleugh’ when he witnessed the 1612 bond for keeping peace on the Border. He could have been one of the Scotts of Gilmscleuch who was said to be responsible for the death of a son of Walter Scott of Gilmarscleuch. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had 3 other sons: William; Andrew; and Adam. William and Adam, brothers of Robert of Gilmscleuch, were recorded in 1631. James (16th C.) tenant in Crailing of Katherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst. In 1586 his mistress complained to the Privy Council that he had been attacked by Mungo Kirkton of Famine. In 1609 he witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. In 1580 he owned money to John Dawes; not appearing he was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £424 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. Robert of Haining was his surety in 1602 that he would pay what he owed. In 1603 he was referred to as ‘chamberlain depute of Ettrick Forest’ in a dispute with Sir William Stewart of Traquair over taxation. James of Gilmscleuch (16th C.) eldest son of John of Thirlestane with his 2nd wife Marian Douglas (this was the claim of Scott of Satchells, refuted by John Scott of Rodono, but confirmed by Keith Scott). In 1580 he witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts in 1589. In 1593 he was ‘of Gilminiscleuch’ in dispute with William Cranston (of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheill’; his son Robert, as well as Arthur of Gamescleuch were also involved and all 3 were declared as rebels. He is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of the Warden, Lord Maxwell, and his men in 1593 at Dryfe Sands; his brother Robert was also listed. He is probably the man transcribed being ‘of Gemmyliscleuch’ (although that seems like Gamescleuch) in 1599 when charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. His ‘oy’ (i.e. grandson) ‘Alie Batie’
Scott

£3 10s. He may have been related to the earlier Scotts in Borthaugh. James (16th C.) son of John of Drinkstone. In 1581 he and his father witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas: Scotts of Raesknowe and Allanhaugh were also witnesses. James of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He held the lands of ‘Hundilshepe’ in Peeblesshire. In 1578/9 he was one of the men accused of accompanying his brother Walter to attack the farm of Gattonside, and denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge. In 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for James Gedestains of Cocklaw and his tenants to be harmless in ‘his three husband lands lying in Hundishoip’. He is probably the James, brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1594/5 William Cranston, younger of that Ilk was surety for him. He is recorded in a charter of 1596 and was cautioner in a bond involving Peebles in 1599. In 1602 he and others were removed from the lands of Sir William Stewart of Traquair by Gideon Murray of Elibank. His sons were probably: John; James; Robert in Holly Arch; and Thomas in Hundleshope. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Mekle Jame Eister’ in 1590, along with Robert Scott of Haining, when a group of Murrays were put under caution not to harm them. In turn, James Donaldson of Broadmeadows was caution for him not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill. It is unclear how he might have been connected with other Scotts. James of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood and brother of Robert, William and Walter. He was recorded in 1599 when he was cautioner for William in Glack, that he would not harm the community of Peebles. He is recorded in 1601 when he and his brothers Robert, William and Walter, together with John ‘in Quholplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). In 1608 he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk; his brother William was also there. He could be the James in Bowhill recorded as witness to a document in Selkirk in 1610. Sir James of Balwearie (d.1606) son of Sir William of Balwearie in Fife and distant descendent of the Scotts of Braxholmie. He was knighted in 1590, at the coronation of Queen Anne of Denmark. His younger brother Robert was a servant of the rebel Earl of Bothwell. He took part in the Falkland Raid in 1592 and was involved with Catholic-leaning leaders of Scotland to de- pose James VI. After being imprisoned, Sir Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch pleaded with Queen Anne to spare his life. He was fined and eventually released. Afterwards he served as cautioner for Sir Walter of Buccleuch several times. In particular, in 1596 he was cautioner for £10,000 that those for whom Sir Walter were responsible would obey the law. In 1599 he was absolved from liability for Walter (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. In 1600 his procurator in court was Robert of Haining, and they denied that several Armstrongs, Elliot and Scotts were Sir Walter’s ‘men’. He was succeeded by his son William, but little remained of the estates by then. James of Foulshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 and in 1617 was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council. He succeeded John, who must have been either his father or brother. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then Walter. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) from an unknown branch of the Scotts. However, later cautioners for the family were Scotts of Castleside and Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were closely related. He is probably the James, listed as tenant in Newark in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was ‘in Newerkmyn’ in 1581 when he resigned his tenement in Selkirk in liferent to his wife Marion Stoddart. Also in 1581 he and his wife owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. In 1582 his first-born son John resigned to him his lands in Selkirk. In 1585 he was ‘in Newerkmyn’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Braxholmie and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him ‘that the vassals, tenants and servants of William, Earl of Angus shall be harmless’ of him. In 1592 he was recorded as Chamberlain for Margaret Douglas, wife of the Earl of Bothwell, for the lands in Ettrick Forest that she was given in liferent by her first husband, Sir Walter Scott of Braxholmie. Sometime around 1603–7 he left Newark to his son John, and became a Magistrate in Selkirk. James (16th/17th C.) perhaps tenant at Nether Boucher; Walter Deans (writing in 1887) claims his name is recorded on a deed of 1600, and that he was succeeded by Thomas (although Thomas actually succeeded Walter). James ‘Aff-haund’ (16th/17th C.) among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands.
James of Glenrath (d.1619) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He was also referred to as 'of Boyken' (in Westerkirk). The lands of Glenrath are probably those south of Peebles. Scott of Satchells lists him among the clansmen who were at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and, to 'observe the King's peace'. His children were all minors when he died: Walter, who succeeded to Glenrath in 1628; William in Linton, whose son John succeeded his uncle; James; Marion; Elizabeth; and Margaret. His brother John of Mackersway was served as tutor to his children William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret in 1620. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'of the mylne' in 1605. He was among the inhabitants of Selkirk who had a dispute with Sir James Murray of Falahill. James (16th/17th C.) listed as 'of Newholm' in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He was brother of William of Montbenger and had a son John, who was a surgeon in Edinburgh. In 1645, his nephew Robert, son of William of Montbenger, was served as tutor to John's sons (and therefore his grandsons) James and John. James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, so probably son of the previous Sir Walter. In 1620 he had a marriage contract with Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg, involving lands at Eildon. In 1631 these lands were granted to Walter Chisholme in Darnick, and it was restated that he was brother of the deceased Sir Walter of Whitslade. He could be the James of Whitslade who in 1663 was jointly responsible (along with widow Margaret Turnbull) for land taxes in Hassendean Parish. James of Huntly (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Walter and son of Robert, who was on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was on an inquest in 1616, and probably had recently succeeded his brother (since Walter was recorded as Laird in 1612). In 1619 he complained to the Privy Council that his mother-in-law, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton, had failed to pay him 'a certane sowme of money for his tochergood', but instead assigned to him a contact she had with Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; however, she apparently visited his house and stole the relevant paperwork and when he caught up with her at the Laird of Synton’s house she tore it up and threw it at him. His mother-in-law was daughter of the last Grahamslaw of Newton, who married Robert Ker, hence his wife was a Ker. He is probably the James 'called of Huntlie' whose son John was served heir to his lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest in 1639. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as brother of Philip of Dryhope. He was listed (along with Philip’s son William and Walter, son of Robert, heir apparent of Tushielaw) among men who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John of Newark, who he succeeded in 1626. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother William for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. He apparently sold Newark to the Scotts of Buccleuch and subsequently became a merchant and burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded recorded being ‘in Newworkemylyne’ (i.e. Newark Mill) in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction; he may have been deceased by then. He was listed in the last testament of Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he owed more than £14,000. In 1605 he married Grisel, daughter of James Murray of Philiphaugh. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in ‘Aitschaw’ (possibly Headshaw) in 1619 when he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Probably the same James was a servant of Ker of Langnewton in 1621 when he was accused of being among the associates of Ker of Langnewton who attacked John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, along with his son and the miller of Belses Mill. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. James (16th/17th C.) listed as tenant in Newbigging in 1627 when he was one of 9 men responsible for making a valuation of the lands of Hawick Parish. He could be the James in Newbigging whose son witnessed a letter of inhibition in Ettrick Forest in 1639. Rev. James (1578/9–1634) appointed to the vicarage of St. Mary of the Lowes by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1608. It seems likely that he was some kind of relative. In the same year he was accused by the Presbytery ‘of being our guid companion in drinking and beirng company both in Edinburgh and at home’. He was also accused of being a card-player and being negligent in his duties. By 1618 he was non-resident and urged to find a house nearer to his congregation. However, he appears to have remained as the minister until his death. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. In 1628 he was ‘minister at Sant Marrie Kirk’ when his son William witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk. He was listed in 1633 as ‘minister at Yaro kirk’ when he was owed his annual stipend from the deceased Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 as tenant in ‘Holcaldrumhill’, among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. He is listed along with Andrew in the Heap, who may therefore have been a relative. It is unclear where his farm might have been. James (17th C.) son of George, resident of Leith, who was already deceased when he purchased Hassendean from William Cunningham in 1622. He was at that time a resident of Bruntsiland. James of Robertson (16th/17th C.) son of William of Robertson. He was the last of the Lairds of Robertson. In 1627 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Robertson and Howcleuch, with the mill, valued at £6 13s 4d. However, later in 1627 he sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden. It is not known what happened to him after that. James (17th C.) listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 as a ‘servant’. He was owed money for keeping the ‘teyn yard’ in Hawick, as well as for building the walls and ‘heiding the stakes’ (i.e. putting heads on the stakes). It is unclear where this yard was located. James (17th C.) described as ‘portur. of burn fitt’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear which Burnfoot he occupied (but probably not the one on Ale, since Walter there signed separately), and how he was related to other Scotts. James (17th C.) possibly minister or assistant at Abbotrule about 1638. In that year he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick, his name recorded as ‘Mr. James Scott, Abbatroull’. The minister at that time was James Ker, so it is possible this is a transcription error. James of Woll (d.bef. 1670) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his brother Francis by 1643. He is presumably the same James, son of Robert ‘of Well’ who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as ‘lawful son to Robert Scott of Wall’ (and separately as ‘Well’) when he complained about being imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown; he complained that Brown ‘causelessly conceived a deadly hatred against him . . . while . . . alone and engaged upon his lawful business, caused apprehend him and warded him in the tolbooth, and that without any conviction or lawful warrant’, after which he was also warded by William Duff, servitor to Lord Saltoun, who claimed he was a debtor. He complained to the Privy Council after 20 days in prison, and was freed. He had 3 daughters in the period 1642–45, but had no male heirs. He sold the lands of Woll to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1660. His brother George was returned heir to their father in 1670. James (17th C.) eldest son of William of Salensis, and brother of Thomas. In the period 1633–53 he pursued an action against his step-sisters Jean and Margaret, presumably over the lands of Essenside, which had belonged to their father, Walter of Essenside. James (17th C.) described as possessor of ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632. James of Crookston (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Katherine Jardine. He is recorded in a letter of inhibition in 1630. In 1641 he is referred to as ‘of Cruixtoun’ when he witnessed (in Hawick) a document for his brother Sir John of Thirlestane, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estate. James (17th C.) married Janet Duncan and had a daughter Janet baptised in Hawick in 1635. Rev. James (d.1679) son of Walter ‘in Cat-slag’. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1615, was presented to Kirkton at the end of that year, and became minister there, probably sometime in 1616. He was translated to Tongland in 1619. He was a member of the Commission for the Maintenance of Church Discipline in 1634 and contributed to the building of Glasgow University in 1636. However, he refused to subscribe to the Covenant and was deposed in 1639 for ‘absence from his flocke eight Sabbaths together, sacrilege, intromitting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytery, tabling (playing at draughts), conversing with excommunicated Papists, and declining the General Assembly’. He was attached to the Rectory of Ford in Northumberland in 1660 and had a stipend allowed by Parliament in 1661, which was increased in 1663 ‘because he hath been an extraordinary sufferer these twenty-four years by-gane’, and his disposition annulled in 1664. He returned to Tongland in 1663. However, in 1665 he was translated to Ancrum, as replacement to the formerly popular John Livingstone, who was exiled as a Covenanter. His appointment came amid huge disturbance, when a woman grabbed his cloak and he used his staff on her, with her brothers jumping into the fray and some boys throwing stones at him (although they missed). In the ensuing trial the 2 brothers (Turnbulls from Ashieburn) were transported to Virginia, their sister being whipped through Jedburgh (although rather leniently, according to the feelings of the populace) and 4 boys were ‘whipped through Edinburgh, branded in the face, and sold as slaves to Barbados’. He remained at Ancrum until his death about 14 years later. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Maxwell (minister of Borgue) and has a son James. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in the 1640s at the time of the Covenanters. He was Bailie in early 1641. In 1643 he was ‘late bailie’ when he ‘made count and reckoning of his intromissions with the contributions that were gathered for the soldiers at Newcastle in 1641’. He may have been the James ‘callit of Newton’ who was on the ‘leet’ for the Bailies in 1638 and the James who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. James of Hundleshope (17th C.) perhaps son of John of Hundleshope. He was recorded as laird in 1648 and also in a deed in 1673. His children included: John, who died without heirs; and David, who succeeded. James (17th C.) married Agnes Stevenson and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1644. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Miller and their children included Janet (b.1646), George (b.1648) and Walter (b.1648). James (17th C.) described as a ‘lorimer’ (i.e. saddler) in a Hawick Magistrates case of 1642, when Thomas Oliver was ordered to pay him for the oats his livestock had eaten. In 1645 the Town Clerk Gilbert Watt complained that he had called him several names, against the town’s laws. The same ‘lorimer’ was elected to the Council in 1648. James (17th C.) described as a ‘cadger’ (i.e. carrier) when he acted as appraiser in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving another James, ‘lorimer’. James of Park, in Wilton (17th C.) recorded as a landowner in a valuation of Wilton Parish of 1643. This describes ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap’, and valued at £200. He may also be the James whose lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He also signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He is probably the James ‘of Heap’ described as a local landowner of the mid- to-late 1600s, by James Wilson. He is probably also the James of Whitehaugh recorded in 1648 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Probably the same James of Whitehaugh paid the land tax on £200 for Whitehaugh in 1663 and was recorded in a deed in 1663. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh or elsewhere. One possibility is that ‘Park’ is a transcription error for ‘Glack’ or ‘Clack’. James (17th C.) proprietor of Wiltonburn in a record of 1650 relating to the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Margaret Scott and their children John, Robert and Margaret. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included: Robert (b.1638); Adam (b.1640); Bessie (b.1641); Walter (b.1642); Malie (b.1644); and Adam (again, b.1646). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Davidson. Their children included: William (b.1639); John (b.1641); Walter (b.1643); Francis (b.1645); and Robert (b.1648). James (17th C.) married Margaret Stewart and had a daughter Bessie baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) married Janet ‘Inglish’ and had a daughter Isobel baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Davidson. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses in 1651 were Robert Scott and Adam Govenlock. James (17th C.) married Margaret Nichol and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1652. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included William (b.1648) and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were William and John. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Douglas and their children included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) herd at Branzholme recorded in 1655 and 1656. It is possible he is the James ‘elder’ who rented part of Branzholme Mains and Branzholme Park, along with another James (perhaps his son) in 1671. He could be the tenant of the west end of Branzholme Muir recorded in 1677; he may have been a servant of the Scotts of Buccleuch (but the document is hard to read). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included Marion (b.1672), Margaret (b.1684) and John (b.1686) James (17th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1684 his son John was witness to the financial document for erecting the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He may one of the 2 Jameses who were on the Council in 1668. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1668) one of the ordinary Clerks of Session. This is Bonnington in West Lothian, unrelated to the place of the same name.
near Peebles that was a Lairdship of a separate branch of the Scotts. He was 2nd son of Lawrence of Harperrig, and was the 'Maistir James Scott' who had a charter of the lands of 'Boningtoune' in 1629, with ratification in 1641. He first married Violet, daughter of Robert Pringle, W.S. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Eliott of Stobs, and widow of William Bennet, minister of Anmcrum (and she may have been the sister of his son William's wife). He was appointed Clerk of Session in 1649 when his elder brother Sir William of Clerkington was appointed Lord of Session. In 1662 he is listed among those excluded from the King's pardon until they paid a fine. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. His children were: William, who married Elizabeth Eliott and died without a male heir; Robert, who succeeded, but only had a daughter; Violet, who married James Douglas of Cliftonhall; Elizabeth, who married John Maitland; Marion, who married Rev. John Lumsden; and Jean, who was married to James Park, writer, who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1678; Gilbert, eldest son by his 2nd wife, who succeeded his half-brother Robert; Charles, who later succeeded; James, last male of this family, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672; Catherine; and Barbara, who was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1668. In 1680 his son Charles of Bonnington and other children James and Catherine, were eved as his heirs. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included Mungo (b.1658) and William (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were John and William Stewart, who were surely related to his wife. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Chisim’ (i.e. Chisholme) and their son Walter was baptised in 1660, with witnesses John of Langhope and Thomas Nichol. Bailie James of Ormiston (b.c.1640) Magistrate of Hawick in the 1670s and 1680s, distinct from the ‘litster’ who was a contemporary Bailie. He was ‘called Ormeston’ in 1673 when he was named in the trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Nichol in 1680 and another for James Chisholme in 1688. In 1682 he was ‘called Ormiston, Bailie of Hawick, aged forty years, married’ when he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home for leading the Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower. He is probably the Bailie Scott of Ormiston whose servant Elspeth Scott was struck by stones in 1683 when watching linens that were being bleached by the side of Teviot. He may be descended from the Ormiston Scotts recorded in 1589 and 1592. He was ‘late bayleyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Bailyea Scott ormston’, who paid tax on 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James recorded in 1697 when, along with 3 others, he was forbidden from holding public office in Hawick on account of being ‘abettors and hounders out of the last illegal election in October 23 last’. He witnessed a baptism (for Robert Scott, ‘wyndhead’) in 1701 and another in 1702 for Gideon Gardner (when he was ‘called ormston’). He may be the James who was deceased in 1708 when his son Robert caused a commotion in St. Mary’s by trying to take his former seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ after the Council had passed a statute stating that these seats were reserved for the present Bailies. He was therefore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1685 when the finances for the new balcony were being sorted out, and may have been related to the Bailie Walter who had helped finance the balcony in 1684 and subsequently died. He may be the Bailie James who was insulted by Adam Young in 1685, along with his son John; the claim was that they had reset peas taken by some of the Royalist men. James (d.bef. 1689) recorded in Aikwood in 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1683 and 1684 when he had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. In 1689 William McGie, ‘chirurgeon barber in Glasgow’ was the assignee for the annual rent of him and his wife Janet Craig. He was probably son of Robert of Aikwood and succeeded his brother Andrew. He was surely connected with Philip, who was in Aikwood in the early 18th century. He could be the grieve in Aikwood, recorded in a discharge in Selkirk. James (17th C.) recorded in 1697 when, in October 23 last’. He witnessed a baptism for one of the Tushilaw Lairds of the late 1600s. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1675) succeeded to the lands from Robert, who was either his father or brother. He may have married Margaret Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Gilbert, who died shortly afterwards, and then succeeded by his 2nd son Charles. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Scott. Their children included Janet (b.1655) and Jane (b.1669). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Brown. Their children included Robert (b.1671), James (b.1673), George (b.1675) and Agnes (b.1678). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Brown. Their children included Adam (b.1672), Agnes (b.1676), Margaret (b.1678), Helen (b.1680) and John (b.1686). James (17th C.) married Janet Elliot in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish, but probably the part that had been Hassendean. Their daughter Bessie was born in 1687, with witnesses William Todshaw and Walter Clerk. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (actually the part corresponding with Hassendean). He married Isobel Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Isobel (b.1683); William (b.1685); and Magdalen and Martha (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Gledstains and Adam Sanderson and in 1683 were William and Robert Rodger (who were surely related to his wife). Bailie James (17th C.) dyer (or ‘litster’) in Hawick, who lived at ‘Casaend’. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1665 when he gave evidence that Bessie Douglas had indeed insulted the Bailie. His is probably one of the 2 Jameses who was on the Council in 1668. He was a Bailie during the 1670s. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is recorded in 1686 as ‘Jas. Scott, littster, lat baiylea in Hawick’, and is distinct from the James of Ormiston who was a contemporary Bailie. He was also recorded as a lster in Hawick in a bond of 1682. He may be the James who was Bailie in late 1685 (but only if the Bailieship changed between November and March). He may also be the former Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1687 as having a garden in the West End, south of the King’s Highway. He may be the Bailie John who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for miller James Paterson. He was ‘litster, late baiylea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the James ‘laite Bailyea’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Wright. He is probably the James who declared in 1703 that on the last night of the previous year there were only 2 people to be found drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704. James (17th C.) described as servitor to Robert of Horsleyhill when he witnessed a Hawick sasine of 1688. James (d.c.1688) servitor to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. His will was recorded in 1688. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James of Shaws and Shieliswood (17th C.) eldest son of Adam of Shaws. He paid the land tax in 1678. In 1692 he paid the teind duty to the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Outerside. He was ‘of Shieliswood’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. In 1670 he married Marian Scott, heiress of Shieliswood (probably daughter of Walter). He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. His eldest son was Walter. James of Bririeyairdis (17th C.) eldest son and successor of John of Bririeyairds. He is mentioned as a landowner in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean parish, and hence probably succeeded before that. He may be the person who paid the land tax on Bririeyairds and Hornshole in 1678 (with no name recorded). He had a sasine of Bririeyairds in 1682, and was listed that year among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He also had a confirming charter of the lands of Hornshole in 1683, these having been passed to him by his brother John in 1667 (as part of a ‘wadset’ with the Turnbuls) and gained from the Turnbuls in 1671. Probably the same James ‘of Bririeyairds’ was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It is stated there that his eldest son was John and that John of Cockerheugh was his brother. He married Margaret Hay and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: david (b.1680); Francis (b.1681); Elspeth (b.1683); Helen (b.1687); and Marie (b.1689). He is clearly ‘of Bririeyairds’ in 1681 when the witnesses were Walter and John Scott (presumably relatives, perhaps his brothers). The witnesses in 1687 were again Walter and John Scott. James of Gala (d.bef. 1672) son of Hugh, 1st Laird of Gala. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh. Their children were probably: Walter; George; Donald; John; David; Francis; William; and Hugh, who succeeded. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, along with his son Hugh. James (17th C.) schoolmaster in Selkirk, recorded in 1659 and 1673. He is probably also the ‘Doctor’ of that name recorded in discharges in Selkirk in 1657–65. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. James nee Crofts (1649–85) illegitimate son of Charles II and Lucy Walters (who was also known as ‘Mrs. Barlow’). He was created Baron Scott of Tindale.
(in Northumberland), Earl of Doncaster (in Yorkshire) and Duke of Monmouth (in Wales) by the King, shortly before his marriage to the young Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. He assumed the title of first Duke of Buccleuch when he married the Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. However, the marriage was arranged when they were very young (he was 14), and it is said that his real partner was Lady Henrietta Wentworth. In 1666 he and his wife resigned their titles to the crown to be regranted with separate honours. In 1669 he was appointed Colonel of a Regiment of Foot Militia in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire by Charles II. He was confirmed as Lord Dalkeith in 1672. He was appointed High Chamberlain of Scotland in 1673. He received the Barony of Hawick (including the patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk) from the Crown in 1675. He was listed in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, holding land valued at about £600 in Cavers Parish, £6000 in Cavers Parish, £2000 in Hassendean Parish, £9000 in Hawick Parish and £2500 in Wilton Parish (among others). Additionally his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at almost £20,000. In Hawick Parish his possessions included Alton Croft and Alton Town, Whames, Wester Weens and ‘Husband-lands in Hawick, with mill and customs’. He became Captain-general of the Forces and was sent to quell the insurrection in Scotland in 1679, being commander at Bothwell Brig. He then engaged in intrigues against his uncle the Duke of York and moved to Holland in 1684. Belief (probably unfounded) that his father married his mother in Rotterdam before his birth helped encourage him to seek the Crown. In 1685, following the death of Charles II, he landed at Lyme Regis, claiming to be the protector of the Protestant faith and proclaiming himself King. He marched to Taunton with about 6,000 followers, but was defeated by King James’ army at Sedgemoor and fled. Disguised in shepherd’s clothing, he hid out for 2 days, but was taken prisoner. He was executed at Tower Hill in London, having the same morning said his final goodbye to his wife and children; it was described how the executioner took 5 strokes in attempted to sever the head from the body, to the great displeasure of the crowd. He forfeited all his titles, but his wife Anna would remain as Duchess of Buccleuch. His children with her were: Charles, Earl of Doncaster, who died in infancy; James, Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded to the Buccleuch titles; Henry, Earl of Deloraine; Francis, who died in infancy; Charlotte, also died young; and Anne, who died in the Tower of London in 1685. He also had illegitimate children with Elinor, daughter of Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth: Maj.-Gen. James Crofts; Henry Crofts, Commander of H.M.S. Gosport; Isabella Crofts, who died young; and Henrietta Crofts, who married Charles Poulett, 2nd Duke of Bolton – ‘A Rebel he was in his time, And did the Nation much perplex; At his Invasion he was tane, And his Head cut off with an ax’ [CWS]. James of Thirlestane (17th C.) 4th son of Sir William of Harden, his brothers were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Walter of Raeburn and John of Woll. In 1661 he purchased Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the one in the Ettrick valley), as well as Heiton Mains and Mill from Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He was Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Liddesdale in 1659–60. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debatable Lands. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. In 1668 he exchanged some lands with his nephew Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He may be the James of Thirlestane who was fined in 1680 for being a Covenanter. He is probably the James ‘of thirlestoun’ who paid the land tax in Roxburgh and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He is probably the ‘James Scott off Thirlestone’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682 (with Sir Francis of Thirlestane also listed). He was mentioned in 1684 when arrested and brought to Edinburgh along with Sir William, younger of Harden (his nephew); he was released, but William was put in irons. He may be the Scott of Thirlestane who was cautioner for Neil, brother of the Earl of Argyll, in 1685. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk in 1659. His children included: Mary (b.1660), who married Gideon Scott of Fulfness; William, who succeeded; Walter; John; Gideon (b.1671); and 2 sisters. The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Pringle of Clifton, James Don and James Robertson. James (17th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife was Janet Scott and their son Andrew was baptised in 1678, with witnesses William Douglas and Simon Aitchison. Perhaps the same James and his wife Janet Scott had a daughter Janet baptised in 1671, with witnesses George and Robert, who were presumably related to either him or his wife. James ‘Cookie’ (17th C.) married to Bessie Douglas, and father to William. He is recorded in a case in 1674 when his wife was found guilty of striking and biting her son. His children with Bessie, included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1673 and 1682. He is possibly the same as ‘Cookie’ and it is unclear if he was the same as James the Bailie who was a ‘listter’ at about the same time. James ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’. It seems likely that he was related to the later James, ‘Laird’, the first recorded Cornet, perhaps his grandfather. James of Bowhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Andrew in 1668. However, it is possible that he purchased Bowhill during the lifetime of his father and brother. He held lands at Merton from 1657. Probably the same James, son of Robert of Bowhill was listed in 1648 as a merchant in Edinburgh when he acted as ‘bailie in that part’ for a sasine for Broadmeadows being transferred from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw. He served as some kind of agent for the Scotts of Buccleuch according to a 1660 document. In 1661 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he owed rent for the Barony of ‘Thickfoord’ to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Parishes of Castleton and Canonbie in at least the years 1671–89. He was recorded in a deed of 1682. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He could be the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch who was based in Edinburgh in the 1670s, with several letters to him (from George Scott of Pitlochie) surviving. He may have been ‘grieve’ to Sir William Scott of Harden, who had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk for annual rents in 1665 and 1667. The same James may have been Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1668 when he leased Sandieknoves from Lady Smallholm. He was recorded as tenant in Roan (in Castleton Parish) in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 3 hearths. He had a court case against Andrew Ker of Littledean in 1694 and 1695, regarding rents; he was said to then be residing in Kelso with his family. He probably married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Scott of Foulshiels. However, he may be the James ‘of bowgill’ who married Elizabeth Ker (perhaps daughter of Ker of Linton) in Pencaitland Parish in 1672. He appears to have been deceased by 1714. This branch of the family held lands at Bowhill from at least the mid-16th century, and these would eventually pass to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by John, probably his son, who would be the last male of this family line. James of Phaup (17th C.) recorded in 1682 on a list of the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He may have been son of Francis. James (17th C.) tenant in Hummel-knowe Mill in 1684 when he was part of a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the test’. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Laics’ among Roxburghshire men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity in 1684. This could be a transcription error for ‘Lairs’ perhaps. James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Marion Young and their son William was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were James Gledstains and Robert Langlands. James (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Bristo’ in 1691 and 1697 when he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is unclear who he was. James (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was separate from James in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Andrew and John were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. James (17th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John and Thomas who are also listed there. James (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as shepherd at Borthaugh. He could be the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–94; his cautioner in 1692 and 1694 was ‘young goldiland’ (probably Charles), suggesting he was related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. In 1696 and 1698 his widow Margaret was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh, with Adam and Walter (farmers at Overhall) as her cautioners. It is possible he was the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children, baptised in Wiltown Parish, included James (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) listed in 1690 as ‘Ja Scott Scrivener’ (the last word is hard to make out) when he rented 1/8 of the farm of Borthaugh. He is listed separately from another James Scott, who rented 1/4. He is surely related to ‘Robert Scot Scrivener’, who was renting Borthaugh in 1694. It is possible he is the James ‘in Borturk’ in 1684 when his wife Bessie Scott’s will is recorded; he was probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1686, as well as Walter ‘in Burtoch’. James (17th
C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Johnstone and their son James was baptised in 1691. The witnesses were James Pringle and Andrew Scott. James (17th C.) resident of Yarrow Parish. He married Bessie Murray and their son Robert was baptised in Ashkirk in 1691, with witnesses John Gray and John Helm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Curry’ (presumably Currie) and their children included Margaret (b.1687) and Janet (b.1694). The witnesses in 1694 were James and Andrew Scott, who were probably relatives of some sort. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam, who was listed there, was surely related. The pair were each renting half of Overhall from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690 and 1692. James (17th C.) tenant in Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was on the east-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 when he paid tax on 2 hearths. In 1700 and 1704 he was ‘smith in Hawick’ when his children were baptised. Probably the same smith James witnessed a baptism for smith George in Hawick in 1701. He is probably distinct from the smith at Bramsholme at the same time. His children included: James (b.1700) and Walter (b.1704). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant Robert Robson and Henry Orrock and in 1704 were merchant Robert Robson and glover John Scott. He may be the smith James who witnessed a baptism in 1723 for Walter ‘Wyndhead’ and Anne Scott. James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. In 1716 his daughter Blench married John Nichol, who lived at Eilrig. James ‘Scottie’ (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1708 he is described as ‘smith distinctionis causa called Scottie’ He married Agnes Purdom in 1707 and their children included Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1708 were merchant Michael and tailor George (who could have been related). He could be the same man as the slightly earlier blacksmith of the same name if he married for a second time. James ‘Pedee’ (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when he was fined for refusing to let the Bailies enter his house, and he also chained Bailie Gledstains’ barn. He tried to escape and had to forcibly taken to the Tolbooth. He was explicitly referred to as being ‘called Pedee’ (i.e. footman), but it is unclear what this nickname meant exactly. He was also listed as ‘pedee’ in Hawick, among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was resident of the Hawick ‘eist the water’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with ‘Pedie’ recorded after his name. This presumably distinguished him from the blacksmith and others of the same name. James (17th C.) carter in Hawick listed as ‘Colifert’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also recorded as ‘James Scott colifert’ among residents of the east-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably owner or otherwise associated with Colifort. He was again ‘Colifert’ when his daughter Margaret married William Scott (from Cavers Parish) in 1703, when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1704, when he witnessed a baptism for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1705 and when his daughter Helen married Andrew Waugh in 1713. It seems that he married Marion Young and their children included: William (b.1688); and James (b.1704). James (17th C.) resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter and another James, who were later tenants at Hawick Shiel. James (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1694), James (b.1696) and John (b.1696). The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott (perhaps a relative) and John Minto (who lived at Easter Essenside). It is possible he is the James recorded at Easter Essenside in the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as Sheriff-Clerk in Edinburgh in at least the period 1672-93. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. However, in 1672 he was involved in a process of scandal with Edinburgh surgeon George. James (1674–1705) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest surviving son of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He was titled Earl of Doncaster until the death of his father. In 1692 he was proclaimed King by a group of ‘thirty or forty wyld people’ at Sanquhar Cross, but nothing came of it. He received the lands of Chisholme and Woodburn from the estate of his deceased father in 1696. He served with the army in Flanders, returning to Britain in 1702. In 1694 he married Henrietta, daughter of Lawrence Hyde, Earl of Rochester and she died in 1730. Predeceasing his mother, the Dukedom was inherited by his eldest son Francis (1695–1751). His other children were:
Charles (b.1700), who died young; James (1702–19), who died aged 17; Henry (b.1704), who also died young; Anne (1696–1714), who died aged 18; and Charlotte (1697–1747), who died unmarried at the age of 50, the only other to survive her grandmother, Anne. He himself died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. James ‘Drover’ (17th/18th C.) tenant in Stobicote. Either he or James from an earlier generation is recorded there in 1700 when he was fined ‘for fore-stalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from a servant of James Ogilvie in Branstholme and then selling it to a Jedburgh butcher for a higher price. Probably the same James is listed at Stobicote on the 1694 Hearth Tax records; he appears right after John, to whom he was likely related (perhaps John was his father). He was ‘tenant in Stobbitcoat’ in 1712 when he married Anne Scott (daughter of William Scott and Margaret Falsyde), step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill, the marriage taking place at Newmill. He was recorded as ‘Drover’ in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish and was also ‘drover’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a weaver called Douglas. He was ‘distinctonis causa called Drover tenent in Stobbitcoat’ in 1718 when his son John was baptised; this makes it clear that ‘Drover’ was a nickname, that he was distinct from the other contemporary Jameses with different nicknames, and that the tenant in Stobicote was the same man as ‘Drover’. In 1720 he was ‘in Stobbitcoat in Cavers parish’. Also in 1720 he witnessed (along with John Elliot in Stobicote) a baptism for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children with Anne (or Anna) Scott, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: William (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); John (b.1718); James (b.1720); Ann (b.1724), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1727); and Janet (b.1729). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Thomson in Newmill (his wife’s step-father) and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill, in 1716 and 1718 were William Thomson, both older and younger in Newmill, and in 1720 were John Elliot in Stobicote and Robert Nixon. He was still at Stobicote in 1729. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton. In 1704 his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. There were several other children baptised around the same time who could also be his. James (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for gardener James Falsyde. He married Beatrix Laing and their children included Joan (or perhaps ‘Jean’, b.1700); Marie (b.1702); James (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); Anne (b.1709); William (b.1711); and Walter (b.1714). His wife may be the Beatrix born to James Laing and Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1670. The witnesses in 1700 were William Laing and ‘Mr’ James Laing, in 1702 were glover James Burn and gardener James Falsyde, in 1705 were fellow glovers James Burn and William Bruntfield, in 1707 were glover James Burn and Walter Scott in Crumhaugh and in 1709 were Bailie James Burn and William Laing. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Wiltonburn in 1705 when his son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who were probably related. He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Wiltonburn. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1706 he was listed among the men who were fined for involvement in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. He is listed separately from James ‘of Westport’, and was presumably also different from James ‘the Laird’, who was Cornet in 1703. He is probably the tailor who married Janet Falsyde and whose children included: Mary (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); James (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); and James (again, b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were James Craw and William Falsyde (who was surely related to his wife). James (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bostechester. He was a writer in Jedburgh and died unmarried. His sister Janet married Adam, tenant in Wauchope. James (17th/18th C.) joint tenant in Nether Southfield along with Walter in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He was recorded at Nether Southfield in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield and in 1713 and 1718 when his children were baptised. He is probably the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. He married Margaret Young and their children included: William (b.1709); and James (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, in 1713 were Walter and (another) James Scott, both also in Nether Southfield, and in 1718 were tailor Gideon Chisholme and Walter (also tenant in Nether Southfield). James (17th/18th C.) resident in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) when several of his children were baptised in Robertton Parish. This includes: twins George and John (b.1703); Margaret (b.1710); Agnes (b.1712); and Helen (b.1717). James (17th/18th
James recroded at Harden Burn in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is hard to separate from other local men of the same name. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel, as recorded in 1718. He was probably related to Walter, who was also tenant there. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: William (b.1704); Marion (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Adam (b.171): John (b.1713); Robert (b.1716); Euphan (b.1718); Margaret (again, b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and an unnamed child (b.1726). Perhaps the same James, tenant in Hawick Shiel, married Margaret Stevenson (also from Hawick Shiel) in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Whithope. He is recorded there in 1710, 1715, 1716 and 1726. His children include Margaret (b.1710), Adam (b.1715), Robert (again, b.1716) and Robert (b.1726). There are several other children of James Scotts in Roberton at a similar time who could be his. He may be related to the James recorded in Whithope in 1742. James of Calfield (17th/18th C.) from a prominent Dumfriesshire farming family. He may have been descended from Francis Scott of Davington's sister Katherine (although one genealogy has him as a son of Francis of Davington). He was later described as being 'of Beltenmont'. He was probably the James in Calfield who married Agnes Scott, sister to the Laird of Burnhead (William Scott) in Hawick in 1721. His children included: Katherine, who married William, 3rd son of Robert Scott of Davington; Isabel, who married John, brother of her brother-in-law William Scott; Margaret, who married Gilbert Elliot, descendant of the Lairds of Redheugh and Larriston; and William, who was a vintner in Dumfries. Jean may have been another daughter, who married David Muir, Provost of Annan. Sir James of Gala (d.aft. 1721) son of Hugh and Isobel Ker, he was the 4th Scott of Gala. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire farming family in 1695 and for Roxburghshire in 1696. He contributed £600 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was served heir to his father Hugh in 1697. He was appointed as Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1698, serving as his father-in-law had done; he remained in this position until 1702. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and their children were: Hugh, who succeeded; William, who died young; John (d.c.1754) who was States Doctor in Batavia, and died childless after returning to Scotland; Archibald, a Major in the Dutch East India Company; Catherine (or Katherine), who married Rev. Henry Davidson, minister at Gala; and Elizabeth. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsingtonshiel in 1721 and 1723. His children included Margaret (b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). It is possible this is the James who married Margaret Rae in 1717. He could be the James at Outerside in 1720 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highcesters in 1721 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1727 when his daughter Jean was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) son of John and grandson of John of Remaldburn and Newburgh. In 1721 he married Philadelphia, daughter of William Ballentine of Crookside, Cumberland. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) Hawick Bailie, recorded in 1710, 1713 and 1720, probably distinct from the earlier and later Bailies of the same name. He was one of the Bailies when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was recorded as Bailie when he witnessed baptisms in 1712 for William Miller, in 1714 for workman William Gledstains and in 1715 again for William Miller. He is probably the ‘late Bailie’ of that name who, in 1715, was given one of the keys to the Charter Chest. He may also be the ‘Bailie Scott’ referred to in 1718 in connection with resolving the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and hence was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1721 he (along with Bailie Walter Purdom) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. He is probably also the Bailie Scott appointed to collect monies at the east end of the Town in 1722 and also part of the Commission for appointing the new minister that year. It seems likely he is also the Bailie of the same name in 1727 (and referred to as John Scott, Senior). He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for miller John Henderson in 1729. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Bruxholme Town. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield. In 1714 he (and carrier Robert Scott, possibly a relative) witnessed a birth for Walter Scoon in Commonside. It seems likely he was related to the other Scots who were joint tenants in Bruxholme Town in the early 18th century, namely John, Robert and William. He is probably distinct (but related to) the James, tenant in Bruxholme Town who married Helen Wilson in 1724. James ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) first recorded name of a Cornet, in 1703. He was a weaver (as recorded in a baptismal record of 1712) and probably from the west side of the Slitrig, since the Cornet 2 years later was also from that side. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan (along with weaver John Lunn), in 1701 for weaver John Lunn (along with weaver Mungo Swan) and in 1708 for weaver Mungo Swan (along with Michael Briggs) and for weaver Thomas Turnbull (also with Michael Briggs). He is probably the same ‘James the Laird’ who is one of the members of Hawick Kirk who objected in 1711 to the appointment of Robert Cunningham as the new minister, on the grounds that he could not be heard in the west-end of the Kirk. In the 1713 baptismal record he is ‘distinctionis causa called James the Laird on the west side of Hawick’ and in 1714 he is ‘distinctionis causa called John the Laird son, weaver in Hawick’. He married Helen Lunn in June 1703; this would have been immediately after his Common Riding was over, suggesting that he did not serve as Right- and Left-Hand Man (or, if they had such supporting roles in those days, he did not have to remain unmarried). Their children included: Thomas (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); Walter (b.1710); Malie (b.1712); Andrew (b.1713); and John (again, b.1714). His wife’s name is given clearly in most of the baptismal records; she is likely to be related (perhaps sister) to weaver John Lunn for whom he served as baptismal witness. In 1704 the witnesses were James Scott, ‘westport’ (presumably the Cornet of 1705) and John Clerk ‘at ye westport’ (who could possibly be the name of an unknown early Cornet and perhaps related to to Janet Clerk, wife of Thomas ‘Laird’). The witnesses in 1706 were the same John Clerk at Westport and James ‘Doctor’, in 1708 were Francis Scott in Hawick and Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands, in 1710 were Bailleies William Laing and Walter Elliot, in 1712 were weaver Thomas Briggs and James Scott ‘called Laird ther’ (which is presumably an error, perhaps for John), in 1713 were Baille William Laing and John Laing (William’s son) and in 1714 were shoemaker John Scott and weaver John Stevenson. Based on the children’s names, one might guess that he was son of Thomas, who was recorded with the nickname ‘Laird’ in 1693; however, if the 1714 baptismal record can be trusted then his father was John, and hence Thomas may have been his uncle. His father may have been the ‘John Scott called Laird’ who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1704. He was probably also related to Robert, a shoemaker with the nickname ‘Laird’ in the 1670s to 1690s (possibly another uncle), as well as James ‘Laird’ recorded in 1676 (perhaps his grandfather). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Irvine and their unnamed children was were baptised in 1720. He may also be the James married to an Irvine whose unnamed child was baptised in 1706 and the James married to Margaret Irvine whose child Thomas was baptised in 1717. James (17th/18th C.) of Westport, merchant, son of Walter (possibly the same ‘Westport’ recorded in a ‘letter of horning’ in 1676). He was Cornet in 1705, and one of the main leaders of the rebel group in 1706, being fined and briefly imprisoned for his actions against the Bailies. It is probably only a coincidence that the first two known Cornets have the same name! However, he served as a witness for the first child of James ‘Laird’, in 1704. The mention of his name in the Town Book of 1705 contains the first recorded use of the word ‘Cornet’. He was surely related to other Westport Scotts. His father Walter was already deceased in 1706. In 1705 he witnessed (along with John Swan) a baptism for weaver John Lunn. He is probably the James, son to the deceased Walter ‘Westport’ who in 1719 married Sarah, daughter of tailor William Gledstains. Their children included: William (b.1720); Jean (b.1721); Walter (b.1723); John (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Sarah (b.1727); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald of Boonraw and John ‘Whitegates’ and in 1723 and 1726 were Robert and William Elliot. In the 1726 baptismal record he was ‘Billia James Scott’, and in 1730 ‘Bailie’, suggesting that he may be the same man as one of the Bailies of that time. The witnesses in 1730 were William Gledstains (probably his father-in-law) and wright Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). James (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William, who settled at Milsington. In 1717 he married Margaret Rea (probably daughter of Thomas) in Hawick, and they had a daughter Isobel; this could be the Isobel baptised in Roberton in 1733, daughter of James ‘son of Wm in milsinton’ (but hard to read). In 1726 he was recorded as a notary in Hawick. James ‘Doctor’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is recorded with his nickname when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for Black John Swan, in 1705 for weaver John Lunn, in 1706 for James ‘Laird’, in 1709 for weaver Archibald Douglas, in 1711 for wright John Pringle, in 1712 for weaver George Wight, in 1713 for John ‘Whitegates’ and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He was ‘called doctor’, so that this was clearly meant as a nickname, and he is not the same man as the slightly later surgeon of the same name. He is recorded as ‘distinctionæ causa called Doctor’ when rebuked in 1716 for being at the drunken brawl at Thomas Huggan’s house; he was stepson to Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in 1720 for weaver John Stevenson. It is possible he is the weaver James who married Janet Bryson and had children Malie (b.1712), John (b.1714), William (b.1717), Janet (b.1720), James (b.1722) and Walter (b.1724). The witnesses in 1720 were weaver Thomas Greenshields and merchant Walter Bryson (who was surely related to his wife). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was at Ormiston when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living in Cavers itself when he married Margaret Dryden. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1717 he was living in Denholm when he married Margaret Plendergast. He was also living in Denholm when his children George (b.1720), James (b.1722), Isabel (b.1725), Helen (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), Elspeth (b.1729) and Robert (b.1730) were baptised. He may be the James in ‘Denholm eastend’ when his daughter Janet (b.1732) was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in in Denholm when his sons John (b.1737) and William (b.1742) were baptised. He was ‘Tenant in Denholm’ in 1745 when his daughter Jane was baptised. He may be the same man as the earlier resident of Denholm, or else related to him. James (17th/18th C.) ‘chirurgeon in this towne’ (i.e. surgeon in Hawick) who married Margaret Scott in 1724 at Cornhill in Northumberland. Margaret had previously been married to Patrick Scott (also in an irregular marriage), and was sister of the Laird of Burnhead. The minister was Rev. Thomas Blair, former episcopal incumbent of Lennel (Coldstream) who had been ejected in 1689 (suggesting that at least one of the families were adherents of Episcopalianism). The couple were rebuked by the Hawick Session in 1724 for ‘the trespass of their irregular marriage’. It seems likely he was not the same man as the ‘Doctor’ James, recorded earlier; however, it is less clear if he is the ‘James Scott, called Westport, Doctor’, who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He was ‘Chirurgeon’ in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Tudhope. In 1725 he was ‘sururgeon Apoticiary’ in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Burnhead (his brother-in-law). In 1729 he was ‘Chyr:’ when he witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Watson. In 1737 he witnessed the baptisms of a child of Walter Tinlin (actually ‘Rob the Naig’) and a child of William Oliver (possibly ‘Auld Cash’). On his death his wife gave £25 4s to the Town for the use of the poor. It is not known how he might have been related to other local Scotts (e.g. Walter, who was a surgeon in Hawick at the same time). James (18th C.) younger of ‘Whitefield’, recorded in 1735 (according to James Wilson). He could have been a son of Walter of Whitfield and Harden. He may also be the James of Whitfield who witnessed a baptism in 1733 for Robert of Falnash. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wiltonburn in 1724. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); Bessie (again, b.1722); an unnamed child (b.1724); and Charles (b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitehaugh in 1721 and 1724 and Borthaugh in 1727. He married Janet Scott in 1720 and their children included: Anna (b.1721); William (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); Janet (b.1727). The witnesses in 1721 and 1721 were the same, namely William of Whitehaugh and Rev. Robert (brother to William of Whitehaugh); this suggests that either he or his wife came from the Whitehaugh branch. The 1724 baptism in Wilton was performed by Rev. Robert, with witnesses William of Whitehaugh, along with James (‘grandfather to ye child’), Walter of Cokerheugh and John (‘uncle to the sd Child’). It is hence possible he was brother of William of Whitehaugh (and perhaps also John), with the 1724 witness James being his wife’s father. He could be the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John Kersel at Borthaugh in 1727 and may be the James who witnessed another for Robert of Burnhead in the same year. William (b.1740) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Hawick born to parents of the same name may also be in this family. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Borthaugh in 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1735, but Netherhall in 1732. He is easy to confuse with the other James who was also at Borthaugh at the same time. He married Janet Wright in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); Mary (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were...
William Turnbull and Robert Cowan, in 1727 were John (perhaps a relative) and John Dryden, in 1729 were Thomas Wilson and George Bell, in 1732 were John Lamb and James Ormiston and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1721 and 1727 and Scawmill (probably the same place) in 1724. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1718); Thomas (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Anna (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); James (b.1728); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie and in 1724 and 1727 were Robert and William Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife). James (18th C.) tenant in Branxholme Town. He is probably related to the other Scotts who were tenants there, and the slightly earlier smith of the same name. He is recorded as tenant in Over Southfield in 1725. He is ‘tenant in Branxholm’toun’ when he married Helen Wilson (from the same place) in 1724. Their children included: Anne (b.1725); Walter (b.1727); David (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); John (b.1739); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1725 were cottar William Hobkirk and John Wilson, tenant in Branxholme Town (who was probably his father-in-law or brother-in-law). James (18th C.) miller at Burnfoot Mill and Crawhill Mill in Wilton Parish from the 1720s until about 1750, being tenant for the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1722 he is recorded being at ‘w: burnfott miln’ (i.e. West Burnfoot Mill), in 1724 at ‘Wester burnfoot miln’, in 1727 and 1729 at ‘W. Miln’ (i.e. Wester Mill), at ‘E: Burnfoot’ in 1733 and at Crawhill in 1738. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine at Stirches in 1727 and witnessed a baptism for James Liddell, resident of Burnfoot, in 1736. After being at Burnfoot Mill he moved to Hawick Mill, where he was miller in the 1750s. He married his first wife, Margaret Huntly, in 1719 in Wilton and they had at least 9 children, all baptised in Wilton: Jean (b.1721); Margaret (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); James (b.1727); Adam (b.1729); Helen (b.1731); Susanna (b.1733); Robina (b.1735), who may have married Walter Purdom; and Thomas (b.1738). He later had 2 children by his second wife, Margaret Ligerwood (also written ‘Lizzarhide’), including Isobel (b.1745). The witnesses in 1722 were William and John Scott, in 1724 were John Scott and John Huntlie, in 1727 were ‘James W. Jo. & Fran. Scotts’ (perhaps several relatives), in 1729 and 1733 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1735 were James and John Dryden, in 1738 were James Simpson (the new minister of Wilton) and Walter of Cockerheugh, and in 1745 were shoemaker John Brown and merchant Robert Scott. His sons and sons-in-law held several other local mills. He is probably the miller recorded in 1759 and 1760 as witness to baptisms for Walter Purdom and Robina Scott (perhaps his daughter), and also for miller Adam (perhaps a relative) in 1762. He is probably the miller whose son Joseph, a wright, had his house at the bottom of the Mill Port carried away in the 1767 flood. It is likely that the 1762 record ‘New Mort James Scott Crawhill’ was for his funeral. James (18th C.) son of John. In 1726 in Minto Parish he married Jean, daughter of Robert Kersel. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1729. In 1728 he married Jean Scott and their children included Rachel (b.1729), with witnesses Adam and William (who were probably related to him or his wife). Note than another James married another Jean Scott in Wilton in 1731. Other children of these 2 couples include: Agnes (b.1731); Agnes (b.1732); Margaret (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); Isobel (b.1737); Jean (b.1739); Ann (b.1739); and Gavin (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1732. He married Jean Scott and their children included Agnes (b.1732), with witnesses John Scott and John Dryden. He is hard to separate from the other James who also married a Jean Scott. James (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Smail and their children included Mary (b.1730). The witnesses were Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and another James. James (18th C.) resident of Parkhead or Parkhill (this is hard to read) in 1732 when his son William was baptised in Roberston in 1732. He may be the James who was in Wester Parkhill in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Robertson. Perhaps the same James was recorded as ‘Servt. to Borthwickbrea at . . . ’ in 1743 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson. James (18th C.) recorded at Weensland Mill in 1729 when he married Margaret Cavers in Cavers Parish. James (18th C.) recorded at Trowmill in 1724, 1729 and 1737. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1729); and Thomas (b.1737). There are several other children baptised in Cavers around the same time who could be his. James (1701/2–43) tenant in Doveshaw Mill (in Bedrule Parish), i.e. presumably the miller. He may therefore have been an ancestor.
of the family that supplied many millers around Hawick. He married Margaret Borthwick (who died in 1734, aged 28). Their son William died an infant. They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Based on neighbouring gravestones, his father may have been John (who died in 1705), and his son John (who died in the Grange in 1794). Thomas in Bedrule Mill (who also died in the 18th century) may have also been related. James (d.1770) eldest son of Robert of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was a surgeon in Carlisle and then Langholm. He married Mary Rae in 1728. He had a son James, who died without issue. He also had daughters Elizabeth, Mary, Susanna, Charlotte, Anna and Margaret. His brother John did have children, but this branch also failed in the male line (although there is some dispute over details of these generations). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Teinds in 1731 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1742 he married Margaret Legerwood (who may have previously been married to Thomas Elliot). This was probably his second marriage. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1743), baptised in Wilton; Isobel (b.1745), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.c.1749), tacksman at Roughheugh. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Silverbuthall in 1743 and 1748. He married Helen Irvine and their children included: Thomas (b.1743); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1748); Anne (b.1750); George (b.1751); Allison (b.1752); Helen (b.1754); and George (again, b.1756). The witnesses in 1743 were Walter Scott and James Dryden and in 1748 were George and John Scott (who may have been related). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: an unnamed son (b.1739); Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1746); Gilbert (b.1747); and Marion (b.1753). Bailie James (18th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1739 and 1740. In 1739 he was one of those appointed to oversee construction of a new Parish School. He may be the Bailie recorded in 1732 when masons were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after putting up the dial of the Kirk clock. He may be the ‘late Bailie’ who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for weaver James White, and in 1742 for gardener Robert Ker. He was Bailie along with John Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He paid tax on 12 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the ‘Bailie James’ (no surname given) recorded in 1752 paying in money for ‘stones of the well’, perhaps related to fixing the Teviot Brig. He may be the Bailie of that name who witnessed baptisms for writer Thomas Winthorpe in 1757 and for shoemaker John Oliver in 1761. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He was probably also the James who was a Bailie in the 1750s and 1760s. He is probably the ‘Cuddyfit’ who lived at the bottom of the Howgate and was elected Bailie many times, lastly in 1765. Rev. James (1717–1773) son of William of Africa and Ashieburn and grandson of Walter of Clarilaw. He succeeded to his father’s estate in 1733. He was licensed as a preacher in 1740 and became minister of the Associate Presbytery Church at Gateshaw (near Morebattle) in 1742. He preached in the open air for 7 years, until a church was built on the Kale. In 1758 and 1759 he paid the window tax in Morebattle Parish. In 1745 he married Alice (‘Allie’), youngest daughter of Ebenezer Erskine, and she died in 1814, at the age of 94; a sketch of her exists. In 1747 he sided with the Anti-Burghers, while his wife’s family sided with the Burghers, and she would thereafter attend the Burgher Kirk in Jedburgh. He was said to be infailingly regular in his habits, so that people set their watches by him. He had 3 sons: Ebenezer (d.1756), who died young; William (d.1807), who succeeded to Ashieburn; and Ebenezer (again, d.1828), a doctor in Dalkeith. Manuscript sermons of his survive, some published in a volume in 1774. James (18th C.) resident of Whithope in 1742 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to the earlier James in Whithope. James (18th C.) resident of Craikhope in 1742 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1751 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains in 1752 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) cooper recorded at Meadshaw in 1753 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same cooper James was recorded witnessing a baptism in 1743 in Hawick for workman Thomas Oliver. He may be related to the cooper James who was recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in a baptismal record of 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1756 when his son Francis was baptised.
James (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1766, when his daughter Helen married John Allan. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: James (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Andrew (b.1764); Francis (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Thomas Scott. James (18th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1763 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.1775) and William (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. James (18th C.) weaver who lived on Damside. He married Agnes Allan in Wilton Parish in 1761 and their children included: Robert (b.1764) and William (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and Helen (b.1767), James (b.1770), Jean (b.1772), Robert (again, b.1774) and Ketty (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1770 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1759 he and blacksmith Robert Young witnessed a baptism for carrier William Richardson and in 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young (suggesting some family connection). He could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. James (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1763 and 1766 when children of his were baptised in Robertson Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1763); and Helen (b.1766). He may be related to the earlier Scotts who lived at Whithope. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick who was witness to a sasine in 1764. Probably the same wright witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom in 1765; it is possible he was the same man as the miller James who witnessed earlier baptisms for Walter Purdom. He also witnessed a baptism for Walter (probably a relative) in 1767. James (18th C.) from Yarrow Parish, in 1762 he married Jane Dunlop in Ashkirk. Their son James was baptised in Yarrow in 1766. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Margaret Cockburn in 1762, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: Agnes (b.1765); and Janet (b.1768). The 1768 baptism was witnessed by William Scott and William Bower. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for George Gray and Helen Scott (perhaps his sister), with Walter Scott as the other witness. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Betty and Margaret (b.1767); Betty (again, b.1768); James (b.1770); and Jane (b.1773). James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His daughter Isobel was born in 1765 and his daughter Christian in 1771. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1738–1807) tenant farmer of Skelfhill, son of Robert who had farmed there before him. He previously farmed at Gorrenberry, where most of his children were born. He is recorded at Skelfhill on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Pott (or Potts), their children baptised in Castleton Parish including Jean (b.1766), Jenny (b.1772), Margaret (b.1773), James (b.1775), William (b.1776) and Gideon (b.1778). One of his children was Betty, born in 1769, who married Adam Turnbull. His son Robert later farmed at Skelfhill. He may be the same James whose son James became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1770. His son William, of Huddersfield, is recorded dying at Falnash in 1800. The labourers Gideon and Archibald, recorded there on the ballot for the Militia in 1799, may have been his sons. He himself died at Skelfhill. James (d.c.1772) only son of James of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm, near Eskdalemuir. He married Christina Stewart. Their only son was Robert, who farmed at Holm and then at Binks. After his death there was extensive litigation over the succession to the estate and it was eventually sold. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Dykes in 1770 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (18th C.) of Boonraw and Sillerbithall. He farmed at Boonraw and was also Laird of Silverbethall. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. He was an elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife began attending the Anti-Burgher church in Midlem, and it is said that they went to different churches each Sunday, with no disagreements in the family; but when their child was baptised in Wilton, and the minister (Rev. Simpson) used the opportunity to rebuke dissenters, he resolved to leave the established church. A meeting followed with other, like-minded people in 1763, which led to the establishment of the Green Kirk in Hawick in 1766. He was probably the James who witnessed a baptism for fellow Anti-Burgher Robert Smith in 1770 and another for William Cook in 1772 (as well as several other baptisms). As owner of Silverbethall he got part of the former Wilton Common when it was divided, and this land was later sold to William.
Oliver by Thomas Scott (who must have been his heir). He was probably also the James, tenant of Wollrig, who sold part of Silverbuthall to William Robertson (of the carpet factory) and James and Walter Knox (in Damside). In 1788 he is recorded as owner of ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’, valued at £80. He was probably unrelated to the later James of Silverbuthall. James (18th C.) tobacconist of Hawick. In 1762 he (along with shoemaker John) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Stevenson. In 1758 he married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle. Their children included: Thomas (b.1759), John (b.1760), Mary (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1765). He may have been related to the later tobacconist. James (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1776. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included George tenant in Denholm in 1776. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included George (b.1776). Capt. James of Forge, J.P. (d.1799) only son of William of Meikledale. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane and known as the ‘Laird of Canonbie’. He spent 16 years in the East India Company, where he was in the Bombay Marines. He was J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire. He married Mrs. Mary Coode in 1764, and she died childless. He secondly married Phoebe, who was daughter and co-heiress of James Dixon of Bath and sister-in-law of George Harris, Lord of Scriggspatam and Mysore. Their children were: William (b.1774), who died at Burtpore; Charles (1776–1822), Aide-de-camp to Lord Harris; Catherine Eliza (1777–1853), who married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson and was a poet and novelist; Phoebe Christian (1779–1804) died while visiting her uncle in Madras; Jemimah (b.1781), who married Maj.-Gen. Robert Bell; Sybella Frances (d.1820), who married Adm. Charles James Johnston; and George Fraser (1784–1848), who succeeded to Larriston and took the additional surname Elliot. Rev. James (1733–1818) 3rd surviving, and probably youngest son of Robert of Falnash. He was born at Crawhill in Wilton Parish and was educated in Edinburgh. He was probably brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, although in some accounts he seems to have been confounded with the contemporary Rev. James, minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He was educated in Edinburgh, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1758, ordained at Kinfauns in 1759 and translated to Perth, Second Charge, in 1762, becoming the main minister there in 1771. He gave up because of age and infirmity in 1807. He had a great love of literature and the fine arts and was well known in his day as an antiquarian. In 1784 he founded the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth and spent time translating and transcribing old documents. His collection was purchased for the Advocates’ Library, which now forms part of the National Library of Scotland. In 1760 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Mercer of Pinhill. Their children were: Robert (b.1762), who died young; Thomas (1763–1814), who lived in Jamaica; Elizabeth (b.1765); Violet (b.1766), also died young; Susan (1767–1854); and James (b.1769), merchant in Glasgow. All of his children died unmarried. He wrote ‘Sermon occasioned by the Death of the Rev. David Black’ (1771), ‘Lives of the Protestant Reformers in Scotland’ (1817), ‘History of the Life and Death of John, Earl of Gowrie’ (1818), ‘Essays on Evangelical Subjects’ (1824), and an account of the Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna Irvine and their children included Andrew (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. He married Mary (or Marjory) Irvine in Hawick in 1765 and their children included: Walter (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768), with the baptism appearing to be recorded twice; Mary (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1772); James (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). The witnesses in 1766 were William Scott and Abel Armstrong, in in 1768 were Abel Armstrong and William Miller plus William Leithead and in 1772 were Abel Armstrong and James Dunlop. James ‘the Chief’ (d.1778) recorded when he died in Hawick Parish. His nickname suggests he may be a descendant of the Walter ‘Chief’. Rev. James (1738/39–1823) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, he was a member of the Established Church, and was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian congregation in Branton, Northumberland in 1774. He was inducted as 4th minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh in 1783. He served as Moderator of the Relief Synod. He was described as ‘a tall, rather primitive-looking old gentleman’, with a black suit that he used for 40 years. His will mentions his ‘only son Revd James Scott’, minister at Dalkeith and then Cowgate in Edinburgh (and said to be the prototype for ‘Mr. Wiggie’ in Dr. Moir’s ‘The Life of Mansie Waugh’), and daughters Agnes (married to a Laidlaw) and Christian (the youngest). He is said to have been a younger brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, who appears to have been a son of Robert of Falnash; however, there is clearly some confusion with the contemporary Rev. James, minister at Perth and it is unclear which of the 2 men was brother of Rev. Thomas. He paid tax for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1815 he was becoming old enough that he was supplied with an assistant, who was the next minister. James Porteous. James (1743/4–89) buried in Bedrule kirk-yard, adjacent to the Scotts from Lantonhill. He died at Howden in Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Bell, who died at Ruelcastle in 1809, aged 67. He secondly married Alison Rae, who died at Marefield in 1823, aged 48. He had a son, Francis, who died in Edinburgh in 1806, aged 35. James (b.c.1745) from Hawick, he emigrated to America in 1775 and lived in Pennsylvania. He married his second wife Margaret Tully in Hawick in 1770. His children were: John; James; Robert; Joseph; Margaret; Isabella, who married William Davis; William; Agnes; Maria; and Thomas. His will and some personal letters survive. James (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1773 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may have been related to Archibald who was at Woodburn slightly earlier. James (18th C.) recorded as possessor of a ‘House and yard’ in Minto Parish in 1780. The rental value was 10s. James (b.c.1750) herd in Wauchope. He may have been related to former tenants of Wauchope. He is probably the shepherd at Wauchope recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He may have married Nelly Irvine in Robertson Parish in 1780. He had at least one son, Adam (b.1796), who emigrated to the U.S.A. and settled in Ontario. Other children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, who may have been his include John (b.1781), Walter (b.1784), Nelly (b.1786, to James in Hillshaugh), Isabel (b.1788), Beatrice (b.1790), James (b.1792) and Robert (b.1800). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Bowanhill in 1792 when his sons William and John were baptised and in 1797 when his daughter Rachel was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Bowknowe, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1792. James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be related to other Scotts who were skinners. James (18th C.) cooper in Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is surely related to John, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. It is also possible he was related to the cooper of the same name who was at Meadshaw in 1753. James (18th C.) listed as coachman at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Elliott. In 1786 he was a ‘House Servt.’ and was coachman in 1788 and 1791. James (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. Perhaps he could be the James whose son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. He could also be the labourer in Orchard in 1789 when his son James was baptised in Cavers. James (d.1795) from Kirkton, his death is recorded in Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in Hawick in 1791. He was living at Greenbank in 1798 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish, with his wife acting as sponsor (suggesting that she attend the church there, but he did not). James (b.c.1770s) recorded as a tailor in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Deanbrae according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Adam was also listed and hence perhaps his brother. James (b.c.1770s) son to James in Denholmhill, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother John was also listed. He could be the son of James baptised in Cavers in 1776. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Lymiecleuch, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Robert was tenant there at the same time and perhaps related. James (d.bef. 1806) tailor in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Nichol is recorded in 1806. He was probably related to other tailors called Scott. James (18th C.) recorded at ‘Newmills’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Newmill on Teviot. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Hawick. He was probably son of Thomas and Christian Weir. A family tradition says they were descended from Auld Wat of Harden. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Scott, who was from Ashkirk. Their children were: Thomas (b.1795), who married Janet Notman; Mary (b.1796); Gideon (b.1798); and David (1801–73), who married Janet Wilson. The 1795 baptism was recorded in 1812, by solemn declaration to Bailie Peter Wilson of the father and ‘nurse Agnes …’ [perhaps ‘hume’], with the 1797, 1798 and 1801 baptisms also recorded then. The witnesses were Gideon (probably his wife’s brother) and Robert Weir (perhaps his uncle). James (18th/19th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Turnbull in 1781 and their children included: Thomas (1783); Jane (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Robert (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation and in 1793 were Robert Renwick and Walter of Whitehaugh (who may have been a relative). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in the period 1787–1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. He married Jean Ogilvie and their children included: Janet (b.1777); Jean (b.1779); Mary (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); Robert (b.1789); unnamed female (b.1791); and James (b.1793). James (18th C.) married Nelly Hobbirk in Wilton Parish in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isabel Hogg. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1794, with witnesses Andrew Scott and George Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreethall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1795 when his son Anthony was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm when his daughter Euphan (b.1789) was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) married Margaret Rae in 1793, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was probably father of John, who was also tenant at Denholmhill, as well as George, who was living there in 1797. His sons James and John were on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (1746/7–1817) tenant at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with William; they owned 3 horses. His wife was Margaret Graham, who died in 1831, aged 68. Their children included Margaret (1783/4–1803), Janet (1791/2–1804), Elizabeth (1798/9–1804), Robert (d.1804) and Janet (d.1808). James of Silverbuthall (c.1765–c.1841) teacher at the school in Yarrow, his mother was Agnes (‘Nans’) Noble. He was appointed in 1784, taking over from Alexander Wilson (with George Scott being there briefly). He dramatically increased the reputation of the school, so that it attracted boarders from as far away as Hawick. He focussed particularly on handwriting, English grammar and geography. He is recorded in a letter of 1813 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In about 1816 a cousin of his came to help teach languages and he retired as schoolmaster in 1818. He was said to be of slight physique, even although his mother claimed he was as ‘buirdly’ as the minister; he wore a small yellow wig, as was the custom of the time. He kept bees and also gathered meteorological data, his records of 1837 being used by the minister in the New Statistical Account to describe Hawick’s weather. He was engaged to be married to Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. He came to live at Silverbuthall in about 1822, having bought it after ‘Auld Cash’ died. He was probably unrelated to the James who had lived at Silverbuthall a few decades earlier. He was listed as ‘James, Esq. Silverbuthall’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was also examiner at Wilton School. Former pupils from Yarrow were regular guests of his. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He is probably the James at Silverbuthall described as ‘Ind.’ on the 1841 census. He died at Silverbuthall and his fortune was split among distant relatives. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1790 he married Isabel Robson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Helen (b.1796); John (b.1797); Betty (b.1800); William (b.1801); and James (b.1806). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie Irvine and Andrew (who was probably related) and in 1797 were Bailie Irvine and James Richardson. Probably the same merchant James paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as coachman at Branxholme in 1797, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) joiner in Belses, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) apprentice under the care of James Hogg. He sang Hogg’s ‘Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ at the ‘rebel’ Common Riding of 1809. He was also the first official singer of ‘Teribus’ in 1819, i.e. the first Common Riding ‘Sang Singer’. He may be the same James who was imprisoned along with James Hogg in 1817 for illegally organising against the stockingmaker employers. He was still alive in 1863 when his recollections provided information for Robert Murray’s article on Hogg. He could be the James (b.c.1794) from Cavers Parish, living on the Loan in 1841, in Orrock Place in 1851 and at 9 Howe- gate in 1861, whose wife was Isabella and children included Walter (or Peter), Thomas, Benjamin, Gideon, Catherine and Helen. James (18th/19th
C.) married Margaret Kersel in Wilton in 1794. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Renwick, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1798); Francis (b.1808); and Margaret (b.1811). James (b.1775/6) High Street tobacconist. He was probably the son of tobacconist William (and Margaret Scott) baptised in Hawick in 1773. He was listed as a tobacconist in Hawick on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. He served as Town Treasurer, and also helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was one of the founders members of Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a tobacconist in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories; he may also be the same as the general shopkeeper listed in 1837. His shop was at No. 40 High Street and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and was probably the ‘Scott of Burnhead’ who provided the version of the Hornshole story, which was included in Wilson’s book; this was the first published account of the origin of the Burgh Standard. In 1809 he married Elizabeth, daughter of deceased Hawick draper George Turnbull. His premises (at 40 High Street) are marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the business on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. According to the 1841 census he was a ‘Tobacco Manf.’ living with his children William and Elizabeth, along with Margaret (either a second wife, or a sister or other relative) and a female servant. His children included: William (1809–77), Cornet, who helped with the business, and was later a farmer at Burnhead; George (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1812); and Margaret (b.1815). The witnesses in 1811 were tobacconist Francis (probably a relative, perhaps his brother) and merchant Thomas Turnbull (his wife’s brother) and in 1812 were hosier William Beck and wright Walter Wilson. A portrait of him exists. James of Whitehaugh (1775–1852) 3rd son of John. In 1797 he was recorded as son of John of Whitehaugh when listed among men in Wilton Parish balloted to serve in the Militia; he paid £10 to avoid serving, this being made explicit in the 1798 list. He succeeded to the Lairdship on the death of his brother Walter in 1841. He was the last of the Scott Lairds. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. His residence for many years was at Whitslade. In 1841 he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his elder brother Walter and in 1851 he is at ‘Whitehaugh-place’ with his sister Agnes Stavert, niece Margaret Stavert and 4 servants. He died unmarried. His nephew Capt. John Chisholm inherited the estates (after adding ‘Scott’ to his name). He is buried in Whitehaugh Aisle, along with his brother Walter. James (b.c.1770s) brewer in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) probably son of Gideon and Agnes Tudhope baptised in Hawick Parish in 1779. He may have been half-brother of millwright Gideon. He worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway in the 1820s, along with his brother William. James Boswell (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1798 as substitute in the Militia for David Scott in Merrylaw. It is unclear where he came from. James (b.c.1775) member of the East Bank Kirk, he was a carter in Hawick. It could be his property marked ‘Jas. Scott’ near the top of the Howegate on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with his children James, Ninian and Christian. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1805), James (b.1807), Robert (b.1810), Ninian (b.1815) and Christian (b.1818). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1805), James (b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Frances Graham and their children included Ann (b.1819), William (b.1821) and John (b.1723). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Anderson and their children included Isobel (b.1814) and Thomas (b.1818). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Isabel (b.1807) and Christian (b.1810). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Weir and their children included Robert (b.1820). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Hogg and their children included Beatrix (b.1820). James of Ellem (d.bef. 1854) 2nd son of John of Midgehope, who was a younger son of William of Woll. His wife was Agnes, and in 1854, when she was his widow, she purchased Teviot Bank from his nephew John Scott, W.S. They had a son, William John, who married Terese N. Harris. James (c.1780–1820) eldest son of Robert. He farmed at Skelfhill like his father before him. He passed on the lease to William Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. James (b.c.1785) farmer in Hawick, who may have been the older brother of ‘Robbie the Cow’. He could be the ‘Jas. Scott’ shown at 43 High Steet on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he appears to be living with Robert, who was an accountant. James (b.1787/8) farm worker who lived at Wiltonburn Cottages. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841, when he was hind at Wiltonburn. In 1851 he was a ‘hind or ploughman’ at Wiltonburn. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and they had a daughter Christian. James (1788–1855) son of William and Janet Jack. He was a ploughman, working nearly all his life in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was listed in Crailing. He firstly married Ann Dryden and had children: Rachel (b.1819/20); William (b.1820/1); and George (b.1822/3). He secondly married Margaret Byers (from Kirkton Parish), who died in 1880, aged 85, and their children were: Janet (b.1826/7); Walter (b.1828/9); Robert (b.1830/1); Jane (b.1832/3); Andrew (b.1835/6); and Richard (b.1839/40). He died at Ulston and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. James (1789–1810) 5th son of Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was born in Hawick Parish. He worked with the East India Company, travelling to India in 1806 and serving in a Madras native infantry regiment. He died unmarried. James ‘Blinnd Jamie’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick in the early 1800s. In 1822 the deaths are recorded of 2 of his infant sons. He may have run a boarding house or inn of some kind, since in 1822 it is recorded that ‘A Poor Woman’s Daughter Died at Blind Jamies’. James (b.1790/1) from Ancrum, he was a joiner on Bourtree Place in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he was living in ‘Mr McKie’s house oppos. Bourtree place’. He was listed as ‘James & Son, East end’, joiners and a wheelwrights in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Cecilly and they had a son John. James (b.1790/1) from Hawick, he was a gardener in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square. In 1851 he was at about 4 Whitchester Lane. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Elizabeth. James (1791/2–1857) mason in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was on South Hermitage Street and in 1851 he was at about 1 Walter Street. He married Margaret Scott, from Canonbie, who died in 1859, aged 63. Their children included: Andrew (1815/6–58), who died on the passage from India; William (1821/2–55), who died in Hamilton, Ontario; Mary Ann (b.1830); Jane (b.1833); James (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Robert (d.1841), who died in infancy. He is buried at Ettleton. James of Boghall (d.bef. 1811). His daughters Isobel, Janet, Margaret and Jane exchanged parts of Boghall with the lands of Boonraw, with Henry Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1811–18. He may have been son of Walter of Boghall, who is recorded in 1757. Rev. James (1799–1864) born in Cavers, son of schoolmaster Andrew and Margaret Telfer. He studied at Edinburgh University and became a minister at Torphichen in 1827, moving to Dalmeny in 1829 and Dirleton in 1843. He married a daughter of Walter Baird and they had a large family. Some of his sermons were published in 1865. James (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Helen Johnston and their son John was born in 1831 (and baptised the following year). James (19th C.) son of shepherd George and Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’). He was a farmer at Overhall and well known as a sheep dog trainer. James of Allan- shaws (1795–bef. 1863) 2nd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood, and brother of William in Girnwood. He was a cattle dealer and also farmed at Eilrig and Allanshaws. He succeeded his uncle William to the lease on the farm of Milston- ton, but lost it in 1831. He was also based for a while at the Crescent, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He could be the James Scott whose property is marked at about No. 12 Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1845 he discharged a bond of his uncle’s to Elliot of Harwood. His wife was Mary. Their daughter Mary Anne married Rev. John Thomson of St. John’s Church. James (b.1800/1) skinner at Crowbyres in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a cattle-driver living on the High Street. He could be partner in either ‘Michael & Scott, Punch Bowl close’ or ‘Scott & Michie, Teviot square’, both of which are skinners listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Barbara and their children included Janet, Margaret, John, Walter, Elizabeth and George. In 1861 he was a Skinner at 20 High Street. James (b.1800/1) wright in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he is listed on the north side of Main Street. His children included Jessie, John, James, William C. and Andrew. James (b.1802/3) mill foreman. He was listed as a weaver on Danside in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1841 he was living on Danside and in 1851 on Wilton Path, with his brother Walter, sister Margaret, son John and niece Jessie. He was probably father of John.
‘the Gover’, who was living with his aunt Margaret in 1861. James (1802/3–79) son of Walter, farmer at Howden near Jedburgh, and Christian Grieve. He lived at Hassendeane Bank. He married Euphemia Biggar, who died in 1841, aged 30. Their children included: Elizabeth (1831/2–1907); James (1833/4–60; Christina (b.1838/9–1917); and Margaret (1841/2–82). James (b.1803) born in Roberton Parish, son of Walter and Mary Young. He was a shepherd at Eilrig and elsewhere. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Eilrig. He was at the Flex in 1861 and was already a widower by then, living with his son John, daughter Margaret and brother-in-law Thomas Graham. He married Helen Hogg, who died in 1848, aged 47. Their children included: Janet (b.1825); Walter (b.1826); Mary (b.1828); Alexander (b.1829); James (b.1832); Henry (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); William (b.1840); John (b.1842); and Thomas (b.1844). He died in 1875 and was buried in Roberton Cemetery. James (b.1804/5) probably son of millwright Gideon. He worked as an engineer and millwright in Hawick. He was probably the millwright of that name who is recorded constructing a 300 seat stand (opposite the Steward’s stand) for the afternoon Games at the Common Riding of 1834. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wrapped up in 1842 he was one of the partners. In 1841 he was living at 8 Cross Wynd with his mother Margaret and siblings May, Gilbert and Andrew. By 1851 he was living with his sister, Mary Kerr, in her boarding house at 6 Cross Wynd. He appears not to have married, and probably died before 1861. James (b.1805) son of Andrew and Joan Hope, he was born in Melrose. He was a farmer living in Lilliesleaf in 1841, where his first 3 children were born. He later moved to be tenant farmer at Coliforthill. He was recorded there in 1851 as farmer of 281 acres, employing 5 labourers, and also in 1861. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Jane (probably William) and their children included Andrew, Isabella, Thomas, Alexander, John, Joanna, James and George. James (b.c.1805) shepherd at Eilrig. He was recorded there in 1851, when he was already a widower. His children included Mary, Henry, Margaret, William, John and Thomas. James (19th C.) married Ann Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1833. James (19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He worked on renovations at Branxholme Castle in 1837. James (b.c.1810) toll-gate keeper at Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded there in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Janet, Mary, Margaret and Robert. James (b.c.1810) skinner on the High Street. In 1841 he was at about No. 50, while in 1851 his widow (listed as ‘formerly skinner’) and family were at about No. 6. He could have been partner in either ‘Michael & Scott, Punch Bowl close’ or ‘Scott & Michie, Teviot square’, both of which are listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Ann, Margaret, John, Jane, Wilhelmina, Helen, James and Isabella. James (b.1810/1) recorded as an ‘Agent’, at 4 Teviot Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Ann. James (b.1816/7) from Kilmallie, near Inverness. In 1851 he was a machine-maker living at Weensland. He was manager of the gas-works in Hawick in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included James (married to Helen), Margaret, William, Walter, Andrew, Isabella, Adam, Alexander, John and Robert. James (b.1819/20) from Ettrick Parish. In 1851 he was a coachman at Appletreehall. In 1861 he was listed as an innkeeper at the back house of 6 High Street, which was the Fleece Inn. In 1868 he was listed as innkeeper of the Victoria Hotel. His wife was Margaret from Wilton and they had a daughter Mary, who was born in Ashkirk Parish. James (b.1820/1) from Portobello, he was schoolmaster in Ashkirk. He is recorded there in 1851, with his sister Helen. James (b.1821/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a joiner, living at Alanhaugh Mill in 1851. His wife was Agnes and their children included Beatrice and John. James (b.1821/2) teacher of English at the small school at Hermitage in the 1850s and 60s. In 1852 he was listed as teacher of the ‘Auxiliary Parochial’ school at Hermitage. He was son of Walter, farmer at Netherraw. James (b.1824) son of Walter and Eppy Telfer. He continued as shepherd at Singdean after his father’s death. He was there in 1861, along with his family, his brother Andrew and 2 other shepherds. He won a local sheep competition in 1862 and won ball-throwing events at the Newcastleton Games in 1866. He was still at Singdean in 1871. He married Helen Jackson in 1853 and their children included Isabella (b.1854), Walter (b.1856) and Margaret (b.1858). James (1832/3–1908) son of George, he was born at Bedrule. As a youth he worked for Mr. Turnbull of Spittal-on-Rule, then worked at Kinninghall and Greenriver, then briefly at Hawthornside. In 1868 he became farm steward at Hallrule, and remained there for about 34 years. He later became tenant at Bonchester Bridge, then at East Fodderlee. In 1864 he married Ellen (or Helen), daughter of Walter Smith, and she died in 1908, aged 73. Their children included: Isabella, who died young; and Margaret, who married Adam Young. James W. (b.1835/6) from Clarilaw, he was teacher at Cogsmill. He is recorded there in 1857, and still there in the early 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret W. and Archibald. James (1836–1921) son of Henry, farmer at Stelslaw. His sister Marion married Thomas of Milsington. He married Elizabeth Ewart, who died at Stelslaw in 1881, aged 41. Their children included: James (d.1882), who died young at Langleyburn; Grace (1873/4–97), who died in Hawick; Janet (1865/6–99), who died at Kershope; and Mina (1871/2–99). James (19th C.) farmer at Southdean Glebe, recorded there in 1866. James (1844–1928) born at Miled Burn, a few miles from Selkirk, son of William, who was a mason, his mother being a sister of Rev. Sturrock of the Secession Kirk at Miled. He spent 20 years as a mason in Galashiels, moving to Selkirk in 1878. Always interested in nature, and inspired by the great meteor display of 1885, he became fascinated by astronomy and over 5 winters he constructed an astronomical clock (that was 8 feet high and 5 feet wide). This was followed by the construction of a ‘Jupiter clock’, then a ‘solar clock’ and a fourth instrument to demonstrate the causes of the seasons for children. These were shown at the Scottish National Exhibition and later gifted to the Burgh of Selkirk. However, it may be that only one of them survives. James (19th C.) Town Crier of Hawick in the 1880s. James (19th C.) grocer of Wellington Street, who later became an usher with the Court of Session. James (19th C.) tanner in Hawick, related to the ‘Whack’ Scotts. He married Margaret, daughter of Hawick jallor Michael Anderson. Their children were James, Margaret and Michael. James (1852/3–1908) baker at 25 Howegate. He married Margaret, sister of newspaper proprietor James Edgar, and she died in 1939, aged 84. Rev. James Brand (19th/20th C.) born in Milnathort, he became minister of East Bank Church in 1900, having been at Saltcoats West (Erskine Church) from 1890. He was involved in the temperance movement. His name is usually written ‘J. Brand’. He published a collection of sermons ‘Soul-Culture’ in 1901. He moved to Crailing, then Arran in 1925 and Corsock in 1926. James (1854–1940) manufacturer in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Florence, daughter of Robert Noble. He died at Heronhill House. James (19th/20th C.) Governor of Hawick Poorhouse in the late 1800s, the precise dates being unclear. James (19th/20th C.) resident of Smithfieldhaugh. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (d.1936) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother Thomas. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. He was killed by a bull in 1936. James Brydon (1894–1958) younger son of Peter and brother of George. He served in WWI. Like his elder brother he was a Director at Pesco’s, taking on this role in 1925 and being the driving force behind the company until his death. In 1918 he married Violet Irene, daughter of John Noble Pillans. Their children were: Peter Brydon (1920–43), who lived in Teddington and died in Burma; and Christine Mary (1925–2001), who lived in Denholm, married Donald Robert McCormick and died in Red Deer. He decided not to live on Sunnyhill along with other family members, but instead moved to Denholm Lodge. He donated a baptismal font to Denholm Kirk in memory of his son Peter. He died in Milan, Italy. Maj. James Kenny Courtney of Burnhead (b.1928) succeeded from his uncle, Lt.-Col. William Scott-Watson. Educated at Marlborough and Sandhurst, he served in the Hussars and was Assistant Division Commander in Western Australia, Tasmania and Hong Kong. He matriculated arms in 1977 and has no direct ties to the Hawick area. Jane (18th C.) daughter of Margaret Dodds from Denholm. In 1795 she had ‘natural child born and baptised’ called Alexander. Jane ‘Janie’ (1788/9–1837) wife of Adam Turnbull, bookseller of Jedburgh. She is one of the few people recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. She must have had a connection with the Rulewater area. Jane nee Veitch (b.1800/1) from Langholm, she is recorded as an ironmonger in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her husband was gunmaker and ironmonger Joseph. In the 1851 census she is a widow living at about 21 High Street, employing 4 men in the ironmonger’s and tinsmith’s business. She is also listed as a tin-plate worker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Jane (b.1783/4) resident of Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in 1841. She is listed as ‘Ind.’, suggesting that she was a widow with some means. Presumably the same woman is recorded as ‘Jessie’ at Brieryshaw Cottage in Ewesdale on the 1851 census; she is described as an unmarried ‘Annuitant’. In 1861 she was ‘Fund Holder’ living alone at Brieryshaw Cottage. Jane (b.c.1805) recorded as ‘Dealer in...
Bread &c.’ on Wilton Damside on the 1841 census. She was living with Agnes, possibly a sister, and children William Whitson and James Hardie.

Janet (b.1833/4) grocer in Newcastleton. She was on Douglas Square in 1861, living with her brother James (a mason), sister Mary Ann Scott and niece Margaret.

Janet (15th C.) recorded as ‘Janet Scot’ in 1487 in a charter for lands in Glasgow. Probably the same ‘Janete’ is also listed in another charter in 1497, along with Alexander. It is possible that the same Janet leased the lands of ‘Newtoun of Reras’in Largs in 1481. It is unclear how she might be related to other Scots.

Janet (16th C.) daughter and heir of Walter of Howpasley, who died at Flodden. She must have been quite young when he died, since she did not succeed to his lands until 1530, before which she was under the guardianship of her uncle Robert. Her brother Robert succeeded to the main lands of Howpasley, while she inherited Appletreehall and Midshiels. A marriage contract of 1526 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) clearly records her as daughter of the deceased Walter, ‘lord of Howpaslot’; this was for marriage with John Baird, Lord of Posso, and contained the names of priests ‘to act jointly on their behalf and to receive the said dispensation on their behalf to prove the legitimacy of their descendants’. This suggests that the couple may already have had children, including Sir Gilbert Baird, Elizabeth Baird (who married Sir Michael Naysmith) and Janet (who married William Geddes), who died in 1527. She married (or secondly married) Thomas MacDouell (or McDougall) of Makerstoun. With his consent in 1532/3 she transferred the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels to her uncle Robert Scott, this being confirmed by King James V in 1536. Also in 1532 (with another Walter serving as her Bailie), she sold her lands of Birkenaside in Berwickshire to Robert Scott; she and her husband both signed ‘with my hand on the pen’. She was still alive in 1540, when Sir Walter of Branxholme (then in ward) was given permission to pursue legal proceedings against her. Her seal of 1532 shows a ‘bend sinister’ (i.e. the wrong way, probably in error) bearing 3 stars, with a bird and a crescent on the shield. Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1530/1 as widow of George when she was given as owner of a rig of land in Selkirk. In 1534 she and her son James leased a mill in Selkirk from Andrew Ker of Primside. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as widow of Walter. She had sasine for her husband’s 3 husbandlands in Denholm, inhabited by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. Janet (16th C.) listed in 1539/40 as widow of Robert ‘Elwand of [Toungtis?] when she purchased the lands of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley. She paid 120 pounds Scots for the farm and Robert promised to guarantee her and her heirs peaceful possession of the lands until he paid them the same. It is unclear if it is just a coincidence that the former heiress of the lands of Appletreehall was also called Janet Scott (or if perhaps there is confusion over the two nearly contemporary Roberts of Howpasley).

Janet (16th C.) heir of John, recorded in 1543 when her lands in East Haining were mentioned in a Selkirk document. The lands of Walter were adjacent, and hence he may also have been a relative. Janet née Beaton (1519–1569) daughter of Sir John Beaton of Creich and Janet Hay. She was the third wife of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and survived her husband by 16 years. She is supposed to have ridden in full armour at the head of 200 Scots in order to seize the Laird of Cranston at the Kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1559; it may be that he was suspected of being involved in the murder of her husband in 1552. She was also implicated in intrigues involving Bothwell and Queen Mary, and was popularly believed to employ witchcraft. She had married Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, then Simon Preston of Craigmillar and thirdly Sir Walter. She apparently divorced her 2nd husband (the Provost of Edinburgh) and Walter divorced his 2nd wife, so that the two could marry. The inter-relationships of their children are extremely convoluted. For example, her sister Grizel married Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, her step-son! She may also have been the mother of Walter of Goldielands, as well as David of Stobcote. In 1542 there was a discharge for her rights to the land of Cranston Riddell and Muirohouse in Edinburgh, and Blackgrain, Catslack and Montbenger in Selkirkshire. In 1550 her son James Crichton leased to her for 19 years the lands of Cranston Riddell, together with Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain. In 1552/3 she and her daughters, Grizel, Dorothy, Janet and Margaret were granted the teinds of Lessuden for 19 years. She held the superiority of the lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall until her death. In 1564 she had an order from Mary, Queen of Scots, recalling the bond made in 1552 between the Scots and the Kers, which was broken by the Kers murdering... her husband, and instructing her to pursue justice for the breaking of the bond (and not formally for the murder!). In 1567 she was instructed to present her ‘householdman and sevant’, Dand Ker ‘in Schelstokkrays’, who was among men accused of raiding into England. She is fictionally represented by ‘the Lady’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Of noble race the Ladye came, Her father was a clerk of fame, Of Bethune’s line of Picardie: He learn’d the art that none may name . . .’ [SWS]. Janet ‘Jean’ (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and his 3rd wife Janet Beaton; she may have been born before they were married. She herself married John Cranston of that Ilk (who held lands in and around Denholm, and died in 1552); she bore his successor Sir William Cranston. In 1564/5 she was contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside, as part of the arrangements to settle the feud between the 2 families; however, this never happened, since Sir Walter Ker of Cessford was fined 1000 merks in 1577/8 (confirmed in 1579) for the marriage not taking place. In 1580 she is recorded as wife of Robert of Haining. Janet (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Bessie and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Janet (d.c.1661) daughter of Sir William of Harden and grand-daughter of ‘Auld Wat’. In 1639 she may have married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh (although some histories say he married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buc- cleuch). In 1661 her brother Walter of Raeburn was served as her heir. Janet (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Janet ‘Jean’ (1750–1824) eldest surviving daughter of William Scott of Woll and Jean Balfour. She is said to have been one of 5 (or perhaps 6) daughters who were over 6 feet tall. In 1771 she married James Grieve, younger brother of the tenant of Branhomke Park, but he died 2 years later. In 1792 she secondly married Rev. Benjamin Dickison, minister of Kirkton and later Hobkirk. She is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Janet ‘Cauld Pottage’ (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1808 when her unnamed child died. Janet (b.c.1785) grocer at Whiteklowe in Castleton Parish. She is recorded there in 1841, as a widow, with her son James and also Jane Webb. She married James Kitchen (also written ‘Ketchin’ and variants), who lived at Roughley. Jasper (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Mangerton in Castleton Parish. His forename is not common in the family. Jean (16th C.) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is not clear which one). She married Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who was a descendant of the Ellots of Redheugh; it has been suggested that her marriage was an attempt to end the feud between the 2 families in the 1560s. The couple owned the ‘sex merkland of Chalmerlane Newtoum’ in 1573, when they complained that Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton, attacked her and her husband’s servant James Storie. Jean (16th C.) daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1569 she married Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Oxnam, this being part of a bond between the Scotts and the Kers. In 1573/4 she was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while her husband was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (her mother-in-law) and Andrew Kerr (her brother-in-law) were harassing her farms. Her children included: Sir James Kerr of Crailling; Thomas Kerr of Oxnam; Ann Kerr, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert Kerr, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 she and her son were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 she was ‘Lady Pharnyhirst’ when she was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Jean of Satchells (16th/17th C.). She helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a band of fellow Scotts to slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. Most of the perpetrators were brought to court by Sir William Douglas, and eventually hanged, although the two ladies were spared, along with William Scott ‘cailet of Satchellis’ who was presumably her son. She may have been the widow of Robert of Satchells and mother of Captain Walter, in which case she was daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Jean ‘Holland’s Jean’ (16th/17th C.) natural daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, her mother probably being Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland. Her name suggests that she was born when the Earl was fighting in the Dutch Wars, 1604–9. She married Robert Scott of Whitslade, but they appear to have had no surviving male heirs. Jean (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She was probably a shopkeeper or lodging house keeper. Jean (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branhomke on the 1694 Hearth

Tax rolls. She was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that she had a larger house or perhaps an inn. It is possible she was the same woman known as ‘Jean the Ranter’ in the poem ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Branhmholme’. Jean (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. She was living at Boonraw in 1729, when her death is recorded. John (d.1203) referred to by English historians around 1200 as ‘Joannes Scotus’. He may have been from Cheshire, but of Scottish parentage, with his mother being sister of Matthew Kynynmound, Bishop of Aberdeen. He was appointed Bishop of St. Andrews in 1178, but this was against the wishes of King William, who wanted the position for his chaplain, Hugh. He appealed to the Pope, and was successful, but William nevertheless banished him from the kingdom. This led to Hugh being excommunicated, followed by the King himself, with the whole of Scotland placed under interdict. After the Pope died, and a new one was installed, an agreement was reached in which Hugh became Bishop of St. Andrews and he became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1182/3. It seems unlikely he was related to anyone else of the surname Scott. John (12th/13th C.) clerk, recorded as ‘Master John le Scot’ in Reading in 1226/7. Alicia of Oxford appealed that he should be tried before the Bishop of Lincoln, for an unspecified crime. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Scotus’ in 1228 when an assize was appointed by the Sheriff of York, for men whom he accused of larceny and felony. He was stated to be in the King’s prison at Appleby. John (13th C.) listed as ‘John the Scot’ in 1231 in London, when he was found guilty of masquerading as a clergyman and stealing money from merchants. Presumably a different ‘John the Scot’ was recorded in 1225/6 in relation to a boat from Scotland that had been arrested at Lynn. Sir John (d.1249) son of David, Earl of Huntingdon, who was brother of King William the Lion. He as known as ‘John Scot’, but it is unclear if he was related to anyone else with this appellation. He was knighted at Roxburgh Castle in 1223. He also became Earl of Huntingdon and of Chester. He is probably the ‘John le Scot’ recorded in 1227, when the Sheriff of Huntingdon made a demand on the men in his bailliary. He married a daughter of Llewellyn, King of Wales. John (13th C.) recorded in 1256 as being ‘of Schele’ in a set of pleas at Newcastle. He was exonerated from murdering Jordan of Clydesdale, but fined for being present. John (13th C.) son of William ‘le Scot’, he was recorded in 1266 in a court case in York. ‘Alesia de Lacy’ was his heir and had a case against Peter, sacrist of the chapel of York. John of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick. He held the lands of Great Reston, which had previously belonged to his father. The land appears to have been gifted to Coldingham Priory and then purchased by him. He is also recorded in another document of Coldingham in 1261/2. He was succeeded by his brother Patrick, some time in the 1270s. John (13th C.) mentioned in 1261 as son and heir of William ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannes Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He could be the same man as ‘Johannes Scot de Schele’, who is recorded in a separate case. He could also be the John ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (along with Nicholas and Henry). ‘Johannem Scot’ is listed in 1279 in a case related to lands in Westmorland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannem Scot’, foreseter of ‘Beleassis’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case in Coquetdale. Probably a different man of the same name was accused of many robberies, fined and declared a fugitive. John (13th C.) resident of Glasgow. In 1283 he was ‘Johanne Scot’ when he witnessed the sale of a plot of land in Rottenrow. John (13th C.) recorded in 1285 as ‘Master Johannis Scoti de Monedy’, rector of schools of St. Andrews. He was tenant of the lands of Monethy (in Fife) in 1293 and 1294, and probably belonged to the Balwearie branch. He may be the Master John who received the benefice of Brechin in 1274, also holding the church of Cortachy (in Angus). John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni le Scot, majori Novi Castri super Tynam’ in 1290 in a list of provisions made at Berwick for the English King. He was thus presumably a resident of the Newcastle area. He could be the same ‘Johannes Scot, bailivus’ in Tynedale who was listed in another document for Edward in 1292. John (13th/14th C.) resident of Linlithgow who was involved in a case of trespass in 1290. He was also in another such case in 1302, and was also accused of stealing someone else’s cattle in the same year. His name is given as ‘Johanne Scotte’. John (13th/14th C.) listed among the men of Edinburgh as ‘John le Scot’ when they paid homage to Edward I in 1296. In 1296 he is listed among Edinburgh men in the roll of Scotsmen who renounced their treaty with France in order to reconcile with King Edward. He is probably the same man as the burgess of Haddington who was on an inquest in 1296 and was on a jury in 1312. It is possible he was the same John who was on an inquest in 1296 regarding the lands of Ballencrieff in East Lothian. John ‘the Lameter’ (14th C.) second son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn (or possibly of Sir Richard). However, information about these generations is quite uncertain. He was said in some early family histories to be the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton and Harden, among other branches. Walter, 1st Laird of Synton was his son. It is said that he attended school at St. Mingo’s in Glasgow and married in a way that may have been disagreeable to his father. His grandson is supposed to have been Walter ‘the Ratton’, who was 1st Laird of Synton. However, most of the claimed details of his life have no documentary support.

John (14th C.) recorded resigning the lands of ‘Gillastoun’ in Fife sometime during the reign of David II. He appears to have lost the lands through forfeiture. It is unclear how he was related to other Fifeshire Scotts. John (14th C.) resident of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1360s. He received an annuity from the mills of Haddington in the period 1361-1373. In 1375 the annuity was paid to his heirs and he was presumably deceased by then. It seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Bailie of Haddington of the same name and probably father of the Bailie John recorded in the following decades. John (14th C.) Bailie of Linlithgow mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1364. He was probably related to other early Scotts with a Linlithgow connection.

John (14th C.) Bailie of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379-99. He rendered the accounts of North in 1389-92. He was surely a descendant of the John from a few decades earlier. John (14th C.) custom’s officer in Inverness in the period 1365-69 according to the Exchequer Rolls. His ship was hired for building operations at St. Monands in 1366 and 1369. He was further recorded as a Burgess of Inverness during the reign of David II, giving a donation to the Lady Chapel. He was Bailie of Inverness according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1389. John of Headshaw (14th/15th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton (although there generations are very uncertain). He may have been father of Walter of Headshaw. It is possible he was brother of Robert of Stirches, as well as possibly James in Ashkirk. John (15th C.) witnessed the charter passing the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9. His designation is not given, so it is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed.

John (15th C.) served as the King’s Ranger in the 1440s and 50s, when his name occurs many times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1440 he was given his fee for the previous 2 years, for the audit associated with Crown lands in Arran and Bute. He was granted the lease of the lands of ‘Barrone’ (probably on Bute) for his fee throughout the 1440s and his name occurs associated with audits in Glasgow in 1453 and 1454. He was recorded as a courier in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1450s and 60s (although he is listed as ‘quondam’ in 1455, suggesting he may have died and that there are thus 2 generations of John here). He was paid his fee relating to Bute and Arran in 1455 and 1462 and in 1468 relating to Ayr. Perhaps the same John is recorded as a servant of the Queen in 1458. His son Ewen also acted as Ranger until the early 1450s, but then his name disappears. He may be the same as one of the other Johns.

John of Burnhead (15th C.) probably 2nd son of James of Kirkurd, who was a younger son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He received a charter for the lands of Over Newhall from his father in 1492 (it has also been suggested that he could have been a younger son of Sir Walter, but that seems unlikely). ‘Over Newhall’ was later known as Burnhead; he was thus the 2nd Laird of Burnhead. He witnessed the charter in 1494 in which his father granted Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his brother David; there he is stated to be his father James’ heir apparent. He is probably the John, son of James of Falside (as well as Kirkurd and Hassendean), who in 1501 had a lease of Falside along with his mother Margaret, on the renunciation of the lands by his father. Also in 1501 he acted as pledge for Robert of Stirkshaws. He was additionally designated ‘of Crowhill’ and may have had a son William, although these generations seem confused. John of Burnhead may have been his successor, although other accounts suggest he died without a male heir. John 4th Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of Walter, his mother being a Scott of Hassendean. He married a daughter of Quentin Riddell of that Ilk, but died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (15th C.) arrested in 1452 as a rebel, with John Tweeddale being paid a fee for his capture. This is listed under business at Linlithgow in the Exchequer Rolls, but it is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John (15th C.) owner of a ‘tenement’ on the south side of Hawick, described in Hawick’s earliest known sasine of 1453. His piece of land was to the west of the property passing from John Turnbull to Robert White. John (15th C.) Bailie of Montrose. He was recorded several times in the Exchequer Rolls of 1450s and 60s as customs officer in Montrose. Probably the same John was also recorded in association with the customs in Arbroath in 1445. John (15th C.) named first on the 1463/4 list of local men rewarded by the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was surely related to some of the other Scotts listed, e.g. Robert of Todshaw, who came after him. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Symmentoun and Wester Lymferis’ in Lanarkshire in 1466. He may have been the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) rendered the accounts for Sir David, as Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1473. He may have been a relative of Sir David. John (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to Kirkurd and David Scott of Buccleuch. He is listed as ‘Johanne Scot’ along with William; they may both have been closely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. John (15th C.) recorder in 1476 making a supplication to the Pope to give him the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick that James Lindsay was proposing to resign. It seems that this did not come to pass. He is probably from a local branch of the Scotts. John (15th C.) held a sasine for Fingask and part of ‘Rate’ in Perthshire in 1476. It is unclear how he was related to other Johns. John (15th C.) customs officer in Inverkeithing in at least the period 1475–85. He also served as Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1482. He was surely related to David (perhaps his father), who served in the same role in Inverkeithing at about the same time. Either he or a later John was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1511. Perhaps the same John was customs officer at Montrose in 1471. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Ogingstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. His name was listed first, with other Scotts there being William, junior, Katherine and Robert. They were surely all related. John (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for the lands to pass to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Scot’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1438 given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. probably the same John is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Clarilaw in the Barony of Hassendean, which passed from the old Baron to the new Baron in 1493/4. It is possible he is the same as John of Burnhead or John of Thirlestane. John of Thirlestane (15th C.) recorded in a charter of 1483, when he gained the (western) half barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw. He may thus be the first Scott to hold the half barony, although it is unclear exactly who he was. He is also referred to as ‘of Huntlee, in the forest of Ettrick’. He may have been connected with the Howpasley and Tushielaw branch, since Alexander Scott (Clerk of the Rolls for Scotland) was one of the witnesses of the 1483 confirmation (however, it seems too early for him to be the John of Thirlestane, who was probably the grandson of Alexander of Howpasley). It also seems likely he was related to Robert of Muirhouse and Whames, who received the lands of Underchesters from Henry Wardlaw a year earlier. One possibility is that he was another son of the first Walter of Buccleuch, hence brother of David of Buccleuch, Alexander of Howpasley and James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He was still Baron of Wilton in 1491, when he was asked by the King to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Harden. He had a confirming charter for the barony in 1494/5, and was there referred to as ‘Johannis Scot de Weltoun’ in Roxburghshire. He was probably not closely related to Stephen ‘of Weltoun’ (which were other lands, near the modern Cumbernauld) or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’.
will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme (and was bequeathed 40 shillings). He was probably related to Sir David, as well as to the primary witness, William, Rector of Southdean. John (15th C.) recorded among debtors in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He owed 15 nobles and is listed as ‘Johannes Scote eius filius’, suggesting that he was a son of Sir David. He is probably the same one as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Thirlestane and Wilton. John (15th C.) listed as ‘Johanni Scote, pincerne’ (i.e. cup-bearer or butler) in 1491/2 when he was bequeathed 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John of Todshawhaugh (15th C.) leased the east steading of Langhope in the period 1486–1492. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as surety for John of Whithaugh, who was fined for his non-appearance. He was ‘in braildee’, which may have been Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined again in 1494/5, along with John, son of Alexander in Broadlee. John (15th C.) brother of William ‘Gyde’. He is recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother, as well as other ‘traitors of Levin’, to raid the farm of Harehead. John (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 as son of Alexander in Broadlee. He was recorded right after John in Broadlee, and hence may have been a different man. He was surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. He was fined for a second time in 1494/5. John of Deloraine (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being called because of his lands in ‘wiltoun’. It is unclear what lands in Wilton these were (but it is not impossible that he held the half Barony and was hence the same man as John of Thirlestane). He could be the John who obtained remission along with William Inglis at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5, recorded in the King’s Treasurer’s accounts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes, this included resetting ‘John Rede and John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, resetting Hector Armstrong, stealing horses and goods, abetting the English, commuting with Robert, Philip and Andrew Scott when they were at the horn, helping John son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden to steal sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, killing a man called ‘Colthride’ and resetting thieves of Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Robert of Whitchesters was surety for him. Also in 1494/5 his eldest son Robert was surety for John Reid in Singlie; perhaps the same Robert of Deloraine was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes in 1494/5. His son Robert, called ‘Bellit Robin’ was recorded in 1502. He was probably also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connections of this branch of the family are unknown. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’. meant, or how he might have been related to other Scotts of Tushielaw. Along with ‘John Rede’, John of Deloraine had remission for resetting him; his crimes included stealing sheep from ‘Thomas Johnstone, furth of Qubithop’. He was also listed as ‘Johannes scot-stow in tuschelaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing 26 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 16 sheep from James Scott in Falside; stealing a horse from Broadmeadows; stealing 3 oxen and 60 sheep from William Ker in Yair; for common theft and delivery of stolen goods before his previous compounding; and for stealing 4 head of cattle and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair. His surety was John Murray of Hangingshaw. He was presumably tenant in Tushielaw, but it is unclear what the ‘stow’ John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘gener’ (i.e. son-in-law) to William Little in Thornycleuch. He was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, but fined £10. John (15th C.) son of Henry in ‘conwale riggis’. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance in Selkirk. John (15th C.) tenant in ‘ernheuch’ (i.e. Ernleuch) in 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, his crimes including: stealing 2 cows from Harthern; bringing in thieves ‘de levyn’ to raid ‘Thomas Middlemas’ wife in Ploro; the slaughter of Middlemas’ wife and 2 sons; stealing a black horse from Jedburgh; stealing 16 sheep; stealing 5 head of cattle at different times from Harthern, as well as goods; and for common theft before the date of his previous compounding. His sureties were Robert of Allanhaugh and Adam in Annelshope. He may also be the John who was allowed to ‘compone’ along with Adam in Annelshope in 1494/5, for a set of rieving crimes. He is recorded in 1494/5 having received remission from the King. John ‘Little’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘parvo Jo-hanne scot’. He had sheep stolen from him at Howford by David Lauder and others, for which Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’. It is unclear if he was related to later Scotts of Howford. John (15th/16th C.) husband of Margaret and father. of Alexander. He was already deceased in 1499 when his widow and son were granted the East stead of Langhope and in 1501 when they were granted the Middle stead. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Northhous’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1498 when he and John Turnbull (from Dryden) received a pardon for their crimes of assisting the English ‘of Levin’ (presumably relating to a particular raid). He is ‘Johanne Scot de Northyous’ in 1500 when he witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme. In 1501 he was pledge for David Elphinston when he was assigned the farm of Glensax in Ettrick (he may thus be the John who had 7 stirks stolen from Glensax by Sir Thomas Turnbull in Phaup according to the Justice-aire of 1494/5). In 1502 he was surety for Roland Renwick, who was accused of stealing sheep from Ettrickhouse. He may be the same John in ‘Northhous’ who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from him by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510, which, together with other crimes, led to Dalgleish’s execution.

John (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Johannem Scot’. 2 Roberts are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. John (15th/16th C.) described in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1499/1500 as ‘in Wiltoun’ when he received remission for helping the rebels ‘of Levin’ in murder, pillage etc. John of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was fined for the non-appearance of John in Broadlee. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis scot de quhirthalch’. Perhaps the same man is listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined; he appears there as ‘Johannis Scot in Quinhinach’. In 1502 he was ‘in quhirthalch’ when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from Adam Scott out of Kershope, and separately for stealing cattle from John Romanno of Romanno, with Robert in Synton as his surety. He was probably related to the slightly earlier Walter of Whitehaugh, as well as later Scotts of Whitehaugh. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Hermiton recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh, with his surety being Robert in Synton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for stealing livestock and goods from him out of Whitslaid, in the company of a gang of Armstrongs. It is possible he is the same man who also tenanted Hoddom House at the same time (where the same people also raided). It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Whitslade. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows from him out of ‘hodum hous’ (possibly Hoddom House), in the company of the Armstrongs. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502, along with Thomas in Branxholme, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was fined, while Thomas was allowed to compound. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendean, recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for the theft of 5 cows and an ox from James Arrous at Philiphaugh, with Robert Scott of Stirches serving as his surety. He may thus have been connected with either the Scotts of Hassendean or Stirches. At the same court sitting in 1502 he acted as surety for William, son of James of Broadmeadows, as well as Walter in Broadmeadows. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Bailie of Irvine and custom’s officer there in the period 1508–13. Perhaps the same John was Bailie of Irvine recorded in 1538 and 1546. He was probably related to Robert, who was also in Irvine around 1540. John of Haining (d.1513) son of Robert of Haining. He was recorded as son of Robert of Haining in 1482, with his son Robert mentioned in 1488. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Robert when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining. In about 1499 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Haining (along with his son John) with the permission of John Murray of Falahill. In 1502 Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw had remission for stealing a heifer from him. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Haining. He was surety for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw in 1510, when Thomas was convicted of being part of the killing of John Murray of Falahill. He was killed at Flodden and his son Robert was served heir in 1514. He had another son, Walter, who served as ‘tutor’ for his nephew Thomas during his minority. It seems that he also had another son, John, who leased Haining along with him in about 1499. John of Borthwick (15th/16th C.) possibly father of John ‘the faster’, as well as another son, who was father of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, and may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Roberton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Orchart’ (i.e. Orchard) when he witnessed a document for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30. His son was also John. He was surely related to other contemporary Scotts, but the precise relationship is unknown. John of Borthaugh (15th/16th C.) eldest son of George of Borthaugh, by his first wife (who was his cousin). In 1526 he is recorded (as ‘of Burtnauch’) in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was superior over some of his lands. Also in 1526 he is probably the John ‘in Borthauhc’ listed among the Borders men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran; the brothers Walter, Philip and George are listed after him. In 1526/7 he had a charter ratified for the lands of Muirhouse in Edinburghshire. In 1527 he is among the local lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527. There was dispute over succession to the lands of Borthaugh, Commside and Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdaiile’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father had sworn on his deathbed that his 1st marriage had not been fully legal and hence inheritance should go to the eldest son of his 2nd marriage, Walter. A set of arbitrators (all Scotts) in 1528 found that he should inherit, since he had never been declared illegitimate, but that ‘Qhomnis’ and ‘Woltoun Greyne’ should go to his brother. He is recorded in a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to lands of several local Scotts, e.g. he is there recorded as holding ‘lands of Drivisdaill and 40s. land in Woltoun’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie and some lands in Wilton); it is therefore possible that he is the same man as John in Walls. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to the King’s will in order to better keep order on the Border. He sold the lands of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk sometime before 1531. This may have been to settle debts with Lawson of Highriggs in Edinburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘Myrris or Vest Manes’ in Lilliesleaf in 1528, as preserved in the ‘Selkirk Protocol Books’. He received payment from John in Bewlie for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the Mains of Lilliesleaf. In 1531 John ‘of Myrris’ assigned his lands of Myres in Lilliesleaf to his cousin Walter, tutor of Haining, which he rented from the Archibishop of Glasgow. This was further confirmed in 1531/2. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1528 when he paid John in the West Mains of Lilliesleaf for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the West Mains. John (d.bef. 1532) from the Selkirk area. In 1532/3 his widow Elizabeth Chapman abdicated herself from debts and other responsibilities connected with him. This was done in the house of John Chapman, who may have been related. John of Robertson and Walls (d.bef. 1533) probably son of Stephen of ‘Welton’, who was also of Muirhouse and of Castlelaw (or Castlecary). He was probably also closely related to John of Thirlestane who held the half-barony of Wilton from 1483 until at least 1491. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Scot in Wallis’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501; most of the other 15 men listed along with him were from the area immediately around Hawick. Around 1501 he had disposed of ‘Welton’ (probably the name of lands near Cumbernauld associated with Castlecary and not the western half-barony of Wilton), and was now ‘of Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ or ‘St. Michael’s Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and not the more local ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’; however, it is not impossible that the earlier designation gave its name to the lands of Woll later). In 1502 he is recorded as being of ‘Valis’ when he acted as surety for Walter Scott of Headshaw, ‘in Walis’ when he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and ‘de Walis’ when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Galashie and for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw. Also in 1502 he was ‘in le walis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse from Adam Murray at Muselee and 3 horses from Lord Cranston at Kirkhope; his sureties were Robert in Synton and Walter of Headshaw. Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and was recorded being in ‘Valis’ when Alexander, brother of Walter of Howpasley, had remission for stealing a horse from him. In 1502 he acquired the lands of Roberton (which had belonged to a branch of the Scotts more than a century earlier). He is probably the ‘Dominius de Robertoum’ recorded in the Justice-aires held in Selkirk 1502, when he was fined for failing to give suit for his lands of Roberton. He also held a sasine for the lands of Howcleuch in 1520. In 1526 he was ‘in the Valis’ when listed on the remission given to a large number of Borders men for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Stephen and George are also listed. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow; he is there ‘of the Valis’. He was one of the Scotts who was on the... arbitration panel to decide on the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He is recorded as holder of ‘5 merklands in Dryvisdaill’ (Dryfesdale, near Lockerbie) in a discharge relating to ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9. He is also mentioned (along with several other Scotts) in the indenture of 1529 intended to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order on the Border. His wife was Isobel Douglas and his son and heir was Walter (as described in documents relating to an inquest in Selkirk to establish Walter as his successor). His son George is recorded receiving a pardon in 1527 (probably after being outlawed for rieving). The celebrated faster, John of Borthwick, may have been a member of the same family. He was succeeded by Walter of Robertson (recorded as his son and heir in 1532/3) and then Stephen of Robertson (probably a younger son). It is possible he was the same man as John of Borthaugh. John of Ashkirk (d.1526) killed at the Battle of Skirnisch Field, when the Scotts and their allies tried to wrest control of the young King James V from the Earl of Angus. In the indenture signed by Scotts and Kerrs 3 years later, one of the agreements is that Mark Ker of Dolphinston and Andrew Ker of Gradon shall visit the 4 main pilgrimage sites of Scotland, saying a mass for his soul, and those of the other Scotts killed in the battle. He was probably related to the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and Walter there in 1533. John of Hassendean (d.c.1530) brother of David of Hassendean, from whom he succeeded. He is recorded in 1528/9 for ‘non-entry’ of his lands at Galalaw. He married Agnes Scott and died without a son. His heir was his brother’s son (some accounts say his brother) William of Hassendean, who received the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire in 1539. It is possible he is the John in Hassendean who was surety in 1502 for James in Ashkirk. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in Aikwood’ in 1530. He who part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned everything; Thomas, ‘younger there’, is also mentioned. He may also be the John in ‘Aikvod called Dustyba’ listed along with William in Hartwoodburn and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. It is unclear how he might have been related to Michael of Aikwood. John (16th C.) local clergyman. It is possible there was more than one man of this name, but it seems reasonable to assume that the notary of the 1520s was the same as the Vicar of Hawick Kirk in the 1530s and 40s. He was notary in 1527 to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill; he is recorded there as ‘Schir Johne Scot, notar public’. He was ‘Sir John’ when he served as notary for a document of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (witnessed at Branxholme) relating to the Barony of Kirkurd in 1527. And he was notary for the document giving the decision on the disputed succession to Borthaugh in 1528. In 1528/9 he was ‘Sir John’ when acting as notary for the discharge by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely the ‘Schir John Scot, vicar of Hawik’ who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. In 1530 he was Vicar of Hawick when he was recorded as a procurator for several men in Selkirk for an action brought against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk; he also brought an action in Selkirk ‘in name of his brothers and others’ against Alexander Tait ‘lord of Pirne’. In 1530/1 he was ‘vicar of Hawick’ when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Janet Kerr. Perhaps the same ‘sir John’ was in 1530/1 witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. He was ‘vicar of Hawyk’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of revision when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. Also recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. He was Rector of Hawick Parish from at least 1536; a record in the Register of the Privy Seal has him taking over the Rectory following the decease of Alexander Murray (although this was probably much earlier); he is recorded as ‘D. Johannis Scott’. He was Vicar of Hawick, recorded as a witness to the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig. In the Charter he is not mentioned explicitly as the chaplain (to whom 2 particates of land are assigned), although he himself is separately listed as having 4 particates, and other clergymen are also mentioned; it is therefore unclear what his position was at St. Mary’s, but probably he held the ‘living’, without being the preacher. In 1537 there was also a priest of Glasgow diocese of the same name who was notary for a sasine for the lands of Meikledale. In 1539/40 he was ‘the venerable man John Scot vicar of Hawik’ in a record of a sale of land at Appletreehall (by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Janet Scott, widow of Robert Elwand), contained in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Probably the same man was notary for a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1540 between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden (since the witnesses are all local men, although there is some ambiguity, since ‘John of Wod’ was the last witness on the related bond). In 1544 he is also described as Vicar of Hawick when he resigned lands at ‘East Murmawe’ to John Scott of Burnhead; this suggests he may have been related to the Scotts of Burnhead. He may have still been Vicar in 1550. His brother’s great-grandson William in Catslack was served heir to his lands of East Moormaw (in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) in 1606, thus establishing a connection between him and the Scotts of Catslack. Perhaps the same ‘Sir John Scot, notar publick’ drew up the bond of 1548 when the Elliots entered Robert Crozier as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. In 1538 there is a ‘Preceptum Legitimationis’ for James, natural son of John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; thus he had at least one son. The fact that he witnessed or notarised several documents for the Scotts of Branxholme suggests that he may have been related to the Laird in some way. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawik’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, when he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. The witnesses included another John (probably the Vicar), as well as Thomas (perhaps a relative), Vicar James Young, William Brydon, John Hall and Robert Chapman. Specifically, he agreed to pay a dowry to Thomas Johnstone in a marriage contract with his daughter Janet. It seems clear he was not the same man as the Vicar of Hawick of the same name, since the Vicar (along with Bailie Thomas) represented him in witnessing the contact in the chamber of William Brydon in Selkirk. He also agreed to vest the couple in his house in Hawick after a year, while his daughter Janet received ‘in conjunct fee’ Johnstone’s tenement in Selkirk. He is probably one of the Johns who held participates of land on the south side of the main street in the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘serjeant and sheriff in that part’ in Selkirk. In 1531 he delivered a royal decree releasing Adam Scott of Synton from being at the horn. Probably the same John was ‘interlocutor’ in Selkirk for Robert Turnbull in 1526/7 and the John who witnessed other documents in Selkirk around this time. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Haining’ in about 1534. He had previously granted half a tement in East Haining to another John. He may be related to William, who was in Haining in 1535. He may be the John whose heir Janet is recorded holding lands in East Haining in 1543. John (16th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Selkirk in 1532/3 when he gave sasine of a quarter of East Haining to his son Walter, reserving a redemption to his wife Margaret Scott. This was his half of the quarter of East Haining, namely the 20 shillingland that he had in redemption from Robert Todrig, with Bailie James acting as the ‘bailie in that part’ (and possibly a relative). He was also recorded as a Burgess ‘in Peiligait’ in about 1534 when he had half a tement of ‘Le Est Hanying’ in heritable fee from John in Haining and gave sasine of it to his wife Margaret Scott (for her lifetime). Bailie James of Selkirk was a witness to the second transaction and possibly a relative. John of Borthwick (16th C.) celebrated faster, part of a local branch of the Scotts. He was possibly son of John of Borthwick and descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells says he was ‘cousin-german’ to Walter of Whitehaugh. He came to notoriety about 1531 and was written about by Archbishop Spottiswode. He is supposed to have been unable to pay the costs following a legal case and sought sanctuary near Holyrood, where he abstained from food and drink for 40 or 50 days. This drew the attention of the King, who shut him up in a room for some of this period (however, it may be that the period was more like 32 days). He claimed he received sustenance from the Virgin Mary and when done ‘came into thee street, half nake, and made a speech to the people which did flock aboute hum’. He then went to Rome with a certificate from the King, was examined there by the Pope, and given a priests habit and certificate that he had lived ‘sine cibo et potu per centum et sex dies’. After that he travelled to Jerusalem, apparently stocking up on palm leaves and stones from the pillar on which Christ was scourged before returning to England. There he cursed the behaviour of King Henry VIII, was arrested, and spent 50 days in prison, again apparently without food. He was sent packing to Scotland, and the last mention of him is in 1541 when 22 shillings were paid to ‘John Scott, callit the Sanct, at the King’s command’ – ‘To John of Borthwick, who fasted so long, Three sundry times he did perform’ [CWS]. ‘Bare-bread and water the king allowed for his meat, But John Scott refused, and would not eat; When the forty days were come and gone, He was a great deal lustier than when he began’ [CWS]. John (16th C.) recorded in Todrig in 1533. Along with William in Todrig and others, he witnessed a document in Selkirk. John (16th C.) son of John. He and his father were described as being ‘elder and younger’ tenants of Orchard when they witnessed a 1529/30 instrument of resignation for the Routledges of the nearby lands of Crook. John (16th C.) owner of 2 participates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He could be the same as one of the other contemporaries (Johns) (but not ‘Sir’ John the priest, who is listed separately). Another John was also listed as holding 2½ participates on the same side of the street. A piece of land lying between one of these John’s lands and that of John Short to the west was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1540/1 when it was agreed by a list of men that he was responsible for the death of Walter Down. Attonement had 5 parts: come to the kirk without armour, presenting his sword to the family of Down and ask for forgiveness; go to the 4 main pilgrimage sites in Scotland; pay a priest to pray for the deceased for 40 days; and bind himself to act faithfully in future towards Down’s family. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but among his supporters were: his brother William; Michael Scott of Aikwood and his sons William, Robert and Walter; Gilbert; and Thomas. John (16th C.) youngest son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 his father assigned him the lands of Castleside. In 1545 his father assigned him the lands of Castleside. It is unclear if he was the same as another John, e.g. John of Blindhaugh who died in about 1580. John (d.bef. 1545) recorded in Selkirk in 1545 when his heir Thomas was in possession of his tenement. John (16th C.) resident of Whames, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He may be related to William, who was tenant of Whames at that time. Probably the same John in ‘Quhomes’ is mentioned in 1580 when his son William witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. John of Roberton (d.c.1560) probably son of Stephen ‘in Valis’, who purchased Roberton and Howcleuch from his brother Walter of Roberton in 1535. In the 1540s he acted as surety for James White, tenant of Borthwickshiels. He is recorded as deceased in 1566 when the rights to his son and heir John’s ward and marriage fees were given to Robert Scott. He was probably father of the later John of Roberton. John ‘the Clerk’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with his brother Robert ‘of Colleufurd’ and Hob ‘Wait Aboot Um’. The 3 men were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and were instead to be pursued for their crimes. He was convicted for sheep-stealing and related crimes and hanged, along with Hob ‘callit of Colyfurd’, Mark Elliot ‘callit of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falser’. It is unclear where exactly he came from, but perhaps the Slitrig valley. John of Synton (d.bef. 1537) probably son of Walter 9th Laird of Synton (although these generations are very confused), whom he predeceased. His mother was probably Walter’s first wife, who was a daughter of Cockburn of Ormiston. In 1530/1 he was recorded as son and heir of Walter of Synton when he was entered in ward at Borthwick Castle, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. Sureties for them were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. His sons were probably: Walter of Synton, who succeeded his grandfather Walter; George of Synton, who succeeded his older brother; William, tenant in Langhope, ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly; James, tenant in Dodbank as well as in Whitslade, ancestor of the Scotts of Satchells; and Robert of Shielwood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1557. John (16th C.) described as ‘in Dringstoun’ (i.e. Drinkstone) in 1535 when Robert in Howford asked him to vacate his dwelling house and lands. Robert claimed to hold Drinkstone heritably, while he counterclaimed that ‘he was within the terms pertaining to the fermes money and customary dues on the said place’. Presumably the issue was resolved and the same John was ‘in Dringstoun’ when witness to a 1556 charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden. Also recorded as ‘in Dringston’ when witness to a sasine in 1559. In 1566 he is ‘Johne Scot of Dryngston’ when he had a letter of reversion for the lands of ‘Litill Dryngston’ in favour of Robert Scott in Hassendeanburn on payment of £70 Scots. He is probably the same ‘Johne of Dringestoun’ who is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574; he had sold a piece of land to Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent John Watson. Perhaps the same John of ‘Dringistoun’ was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colfort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his son James was also a witness. He may also be the John ‘in Drinkston’ who was listed by Scott of Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Robertson. And he is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. Sir John of Thirlestane (d.1549) probably son of David of Tushielaw, grandson of Sir Alexander of Howpsley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw, ‘King of Thieves’. Along with Robert of Howpsley he entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. He is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who in 1535 was said to be involved with contracts for Melrose Abbey made with Mark Ker in Kippielaw. In 1539 he paid the ‘ferrers’ to the King’s Chamberlain for a thir of Cacrabank in the name of his mother, who was a Gedstanes. In 1540 he paid Simon Glendinning of Megdale and Dalgleish as tenant of his lands of Dalgleish (then in the Barony of Synton through annexation). In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilmanscleuch and is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who occupied Altrieve and Crosscleuch. Also in 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Additionally in 1541 he witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, as part of the marriage contract with his daughter Margaret. He was said to be the only Baron to declare his support for James V at Fala Moor in 1542, coming ‘into the King’s host at Soutray Edge with three score and ten lancers on horseback of his friends and followers’. As a result the family were given arms with the royal fleur-de-lis and motto ‘Ready, aye ready’ (however, the veracity of this story is challenged in some accounts, and the relevant warrant is considered by some to be a forgery). He is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who along with his son Robert witnessed a bond signed in Hawick in 1543, between Nichol Graham and Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1549 the Commender of Melrose granted a discharge of all duties etc. on his lands of ‘thirlstane, ramseclewis, scadcleuch, craig and kirkhop’ now that he was deceased. Satchells (probably his great-grandson) says he married a daughter of Scott of Allanhaugh (possibly Robert, who owned land in Hawick and lived about the right time). His children included:

Robert, who succeeded; Philip of Kirkhope, who was 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade; Andrew, who died without issue; Simon of Newburgh; William, who witnessed a contract for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1567; and Margaret, who married William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. He secondly married Marion Douglas and had another son, James of Gilmancescleuch. John (16th C.) son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was described being ‘of Waikfield’ Probably Wakefield in Peeblesshire). There appears to have been a separate John, who was a natural son of Robert, recorded in 1594. In 1563 he infested his brother Adam in the lands of Waikfield in return for the Kirkstead and Kirkland of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailzie’ as witness to a sasine of 1558. The purchaser of the land in the sasine was James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. Perhaps the same John was Bailie in 1579 when David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton, purchased a tenement in Hawick. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne’ along with Simon in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guide of Alanehauh’, who was probably either William or Robert (or possibly Adam), when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. John (16th C.) son and heir of William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562 his father assigned to him his stead in Ganescleuch ‘callit Eittriksyde’, with the condition that he follow the agreements already made with Simon in Thirlestane. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) tenant in Catslack. In 1563 he was involved in a dispute over land with William Elliot, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots associated with Catslack. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John ‘the Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with Airchie of the Bush and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Elestoun’ in a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. He gave his annual-rent of a boll of beir to pay off a debt. This place may be Ulston near Jedburgh. Later in 1579 Walter of Goldielands entered Robert of Haining into these same lands, with Scott of Haining promising these half lands of 'Ilistoun' to Janet, daughter of Sir Walter of Branxholme as part of a marriage contract; he is then described as 'now in Darnik'. He is therefore presumably the same man as John, tenant in Darnick, who is recorded in a land transaction in Selkirk in 1579, witnessed other transactions in Selkirk around the same time and in 1580 was involved with several deals for lands in Darnick, some involving the superior of the lands, Andrew Ker of Falkonside. These lands included part of 'ryndail' and Broadmeadows. He may be the 'Master John' in Darnick who witnessed a transaction for lands in Darnick in 1579/80 and another in 1580. It was further recorded in 1580 that he was owed money by a Burgess of Selkirk and was wadset a rig of land, and had further rigs of land resigned to him in 1580/1. In 1581 he was 'Mr. John Scott in Darnick' when, along with his wife Euphemia McDowell, gave sasine of lands in 'ryndail', Broadmeadows and Darnick to William Young, who had loaned him money. Also in 1581 he sold some land lying in Philiphaugh, resigned 2 rigs in Selkirk, sold 2 acres in Darnick and paid the redemption money for an annual rent. John of Blindhaugh (d.bef. 1580) recorded in 1580 when his widow Isabella Turnbull leased her lands of 'Wollhaucht' to Walter, brother of George of Synton. Also in 1580 David Fairlie agreed to act as cautioner for William Scott in Huntly, who was to pay £9 3s 4d to each of his children, Margaret, Elizabeth, Isabel and John, as well as £38 13s 4d to his son Walter for his 'heirship horse' and 'two heirship oxen'. In 1580/1 his widow Isabel Turnbull and William Allan assigned their lands in Blindhaugh to Thomas Shortreed in Whitehillbras; his brother Walter was one of the witnesses. In 1581 his widow resigned her lifierent of 2 husbandlands in Blindhaugh (occupied by Thomas Shortreed and James Vogan) to their son and heir Walter. She was instead granted the lifierent of Castleside, while their daughter Marion (or Marie) would be taken into the household of William in Huntly (suggesting that he was related). This arrangement was made at Palace and witnessed by Walter of Stirches, Walter of Ashkirk, William in Burnfoot, John in Aikwood, William in Haining and William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Blindhaugh. John of Dryhope (16th C.) 2nd Laird, succeeding Simon. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80 and also served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead. In 1580 he was one of 2 judges appointed to decide on George of Synton's claim on lands in 'lilstoun'. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was father of Mary 'the Flower of Yarrow'. He signed the marriage contract for his daughter with Walter Scott of Harden in 1576/7 (despite the fact that Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford said that her father was Philip, and many others followed this version of events). He may also have had a daughter Christian, who married James Tweedie of Fruid. The testament of his wife Margaret was written in 1581/2. He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He signed the clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to the 1st Laird, Simon. He was probably father of the next Laird, Philip, as well as Philip's brothers: Simon of Montbenger; Andrew; Adam; and Walter. John (16th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another in Selkirk. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Haining and another involving a dispute over sheep at the Carterhaugh and another agreement involving the Scotts of Blindhaugh and Huntly. Also in 1580 he received £182 13s 4d Scots from Robert of Haining in redemption for the lands of Haining Rig and 'Louchknow'; John 'Easter' was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he paid Walter Scott of Ashkirk to have the 'knaifschip and bannock' of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years. This meant he had the right to appoint the millers there. The agreement also assigned to him the 'teind sheaves' from the lands he occupied called 'baik thyne'. He may be the same as one of the other Scotts. In 1581 his wife was listed in Selkirk among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the lifierent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581, involving the tenants of Robert of Aikwood and others. In 1581/2 he witnessed a marriage contract between George Brig in Langnewton and John Melrose. John of Burnhead (d.1582) probably son of John and great-grandson of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He granted a charter to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, for Easter and Wester Moormaw (later called ‘Lees’, near Appletreehall) in 1535 and 1539. He also granted a precept of legitimization to John’s son James (suggesting they were related perhaps). John, the Vicar, resigned his lands of Easter Moormaw in 1544, and he further granted a precept of sasine to John’s son James in 1556. He is said to have lived to an advanced age. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert. John ‘Johnnie’, ‘Philip’s Jock’ (16th C.) resident of Hawick who was named in a court case at Leith in 1571, along with Allan Deans, George Maxwell and Robert Scott. This was in connection with the on-going efforts of the Warden and the people of Jedburgh to quell the activities of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His name is recorded there as ‘Philpis Jok’ and the cautioner was Sir William Ker of Caverton (the younger of Cessford). In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as their cautioner. His son ‘Johne’ was involved in another case in 1574, along with Allan Deans and John Cavers. His father was presumably Philip, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the known men of that name; it is possible he was the Philip recorded in 1549 at Wiltonburn complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford. John (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Montbenger. In 1582 his widow, Margaret Lowes, complained that a gang of Armstrongs and others raided the farm of ‘Eister Montberngier’, stealing about 360 sheep and all the goods from there, and then attacking Deuchar. His sons William and Adam were also mentioned, with Adam being kidnapped by the rievers. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and son of Margaret Turnbull. In 1573 he was declared a fugitive for non-appearance when he, his brother Walter and mother Margaret, were charged with attacking the half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton occupied by a servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He and his brother David were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. John (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he owed money to John Dawson. John ‘younger’ (perhaps his son) was also mentioned as a debtor. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘alias Johnie of Fif’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 being in Alton when he witnessed a dispute over the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundleshope between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundleshope. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) son of William in Broadlee. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, relating to the lands of Sunderland. John (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His nickname is given as ‘Jok Jo’. John (d.bef. 1594) illegitimate son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger half-brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was probably distinct from John of Wakefield. His brother Adam wadset to him the lands of ‘Espehope’ in Selkirkshire. In 1594 he was deceased when his son John secured a feu from the Crown for the church lands of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John of Middlestead (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Robertson (d.1606) mentioned in 1566 as son and heir to John of Robertson, when his wardship was given to Robert Scott (it is unclear which Robert this was). Perhaps the same John signed the Scott bond of clanship in 1589. He must have been related in some way to James of Robertson, recorded in 1578. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining, witnessed at Todrig Shank, along with Walter of goldielands, William Chisholme of that Ilk and William Dalgleish in Crookston. Also in 1581 he probably (it is hard to read) witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. In 1587 he acted as surety for James White in Borthwickshielis. Scott of Satchells says that John Scott of Robertson was among the 33 chosen to accompany Buccleuch to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596; this was probably him. He was succeeded by his son William of Robertson in 1610. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Fawdonside’ (i.e. Faldonside) in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Stowslie’ (i.e. Stouslie) by Scott of Satchells when he listed the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, probably relevant to the period around 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other branches of the Scotts. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hassendean in 1575. He may be the ‘Sir John’ who was in dispute over the Vicarage of Hassendean with Ninian Westmin in 1550. Presumably the same man was the Reader of Southdean 1579-82. It is not impossible that he is also the same as the minister of Ashkirk etc. In 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk) who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. They were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence, but yielded when threatened with death in 1590. The precise basis of the theological disagreement is unclear, but it may suggest that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation. John of Foulshiels (16th C.) probably either the son or grandson of William, the first Scott of Foulshiels. In 1592 Walter Scott was surety for him and also Walter Cairnycress in Lugar that he would be loyal to the King (signed by Robert of Aikwood and Walter in Bowhill). He subscribed to a deed of loyalty in 1593 and in that same year Robert Porteous in Dalkeith was surety for him to answer the Privy Council for associating with Hercules Stewart and other traitors. He was probably succeeded by James. Rev. John (16th C.) became ‘exhorter’ at Selkirk and St. Mary’s of the Lowes in 1568. Probably the same John is recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1571. He is recorded as Minister of Ashkirk in late 1573. By 1575 he was Minister at Ashkirk, with Selkirk, Kirk of the Lowes, Ettrick and Rankilburn also in his charge. However, James (not John) Scott was also recorded as Reader in 1575, becoming Vicar in 1586. In 1576 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been dispossessed of the ‘half toun and landsis of Elistoun’ in the Lordship of Melrose by Thomas and then Robert of Haining. He had titles showing that his predecessors had been in possession of these lands as kindly tenants. John (16th C.) tenant of Newark, as described in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s last testament of 1574. He could be related to the later Chamberlain of the same name and location, who was son of James of Newark. Hence he could have been father of James of Newark, and presumably descended from one of the other family branches. John (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as ‘eister’ when he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk in 1580. One of these was between John in Aikwood and Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he witnessed a marriage contract for Simon in Philiphaugh. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. John ‘Jock’, ‘As-it-looks’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Jok Scott, callit As it Luikis’. John (16th C.) said to have been the 6th son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was killed during a hunting trip by one of the Scotts of Gilmnscluech, who then forfeited their lands to his father, who is supposed to to have said that they were worth a dead son. There is a story about how his body lay uncorrupted for many years in the vault of Hassendean Kirk, as a result of being treacherously slain. His death may have been the inspiration for the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’, but could also be confused with the murder of ‘Auld Wat’s’ other son, Walter in Essenside in about 1616 or Walter of Gamescleuch in a duel in 1609. John of the Palace (16th C.) son of Alexander, as recorded in 1545. In that year he succeeded to his father’s annual rent on a tenement in Selkirk. Andrew, Vicar of Cavers, was a witness, and hence possibly related. Probably the same John was recorded as a servant of Walter Scott of Synton, mentioned in the 1580s when charged with resetting 4 horses stolen from James Sinclair of Ewingston, one of which he kept for himself. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Scott of the Palice’, servant to George of Synton, and described as ‘sic ane dissolute and lawles persone as he will not compeir . . . for na chargeis without his said master be charged to present him’. His master, George of Synton, was subsequently pronounced rebel for not appearing before the Privy Council. His place of abode was presumably the area later referred to as ‘Palace Waas’. He was probably related to Robert of Palace, who died in 1579. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell, receiving remission for any past crimes (perhaps associated with the raid at Stirling). He is listed as a tenant farmer at Arkleton. John ‘the Tinkler’ (16th C.) tenant in Harwood. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branzholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is recorded as ‘Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, in Harret’, and he signed by ‘twychand the pen’ (meaning that he was unable to write). He was also ‘the Tinkler’ when among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; his son Andrew ‘the Breadie’ was also listed, as well as Adam ‘little Peck’. His name occurred first on the list of Scotts, Laidlaws, Oliviers and others, and they were accused by Percival ‘Clennell’ of leading about 500 men on a day-long foray in which they took 80 cows, 7 horses, goods worth £20 and ransomed 8 prisoners. Additionally, in 1586/7 he is ‘callit the Tinklare, in Harwode’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his unnamed son is also listed (presumably Andrew). He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johrne Scot in Tenisidse’ in the 1594 ‘respite’ by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. His name occurs near several other local Scotts, but it is unclear where he was tenant. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Ormiston’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. However, Adam in Ormiston, recorded in 1592, seems likely to be related. John (16th C.) listed as ‘Johne Scot in Dellorien’ (i.e. Dellorain) among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Commonside’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. He may also be the Scott of Commonside said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Sir Walter Scott of Branxhame’ in 1597 when he and Simon Armstrong of Mangerston were delivered to Lord Scrope to be prisoners within Carlisle. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Kirkstead (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining being denounced for not entering them in court. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of the Toor (d.bef. 1609) succeeded by his son John in his lands in Hawick. He is referred to as being ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ later in 1609 when his son David brought an action against the Turnbulls of Barnhills. He may be related to the earlier Robert and later William, who are also ‘of the Tour’. It is possible he is the John ‘in Hawik’ whose son John in 1579/80 purchased rigs in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th C.) tenant in Montbenger. He is recorded as signatory to a bond at Cadrono in 1595. He may be related to the earlier tenant of the same name. John ‘Jock’, ‘the Stour’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. He is recorded being called ‘Stowre of Quhynecleuch’ (perhaps Whinney Cleuch) and he is listed after Adie ‘the Peck’ and hence perhaps related. He may be the ‘Johne Scott, callit the Stowr’ who had been warded with Henry Lord Sinclair, but released by 1573. Probably the same John was brother to Thomas ‘callit Thome of the Stoir’ in 1586/7 when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be the ‘Johne Scot of Deir of the Scoir’ recorded in 1600, when along with ‘Dandie’ Armstrong, called ‘Braid Sword’ and John Armstrong, called ‘Sandy’s Johnnie’, he was accused of stealing 3 horses and 3 webs of cloth from John Simpson in Gilmerton. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him when the case came before the Privy Council. In another case in 1600 he was recorded as ‘Jok Scott, called the Stowre of Quhynecleuch’, accused of raiding the farms of Sir James Sandilands; this makes it clear that he was from Whinney Cleuch. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘of Monks-tower’ by Scott of Satchells, among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be ‘brother to old William Scott of Altoun’, but his connection to other Scotts is unclear. John the Clerk’ (16th/17th C.) resident of ‘Erlig’ recorded in 1612, which could be Elrig in the Borthwick valley. James Noble in East Burn of Stobo complained to the Privy Council that he had not found caution for killing his father. He could have been related to the earlier John called ‘the Clerk’. John (d.c.1619) probably the eldest son of James of Hundlehope. He may be the John ‘parson in Hundellishoip’ who in 1581 had a dispute with Thomas, son of Robert of Howford regarding the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundlehope. He was possibly the ‘Johnne Scot in Hundemshop’ recorded in 1583/4 when there was caution made that James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Winterburgh received the cautioner. He is referred to in 1596/7 as ‘some-time in Hundillishoip’, when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. He is probably also the John, ‘in Jedwartfeild’, brother of William in Glack, who in 1597/8 was accused (along with his brother William and Arthur in Gamescleuch) of attacking and capturing Ralph Ker, servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Hundleshop’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Hundlishop’ when he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw. Probably the same John ‘of Hundlishesop’ was recorded in 1618 when his brother William of Glack served as his cautioner not to harm the Moffats of Granton (which may be a clue to connect this family with the Scotts of Glack); similarly there was a caution for the Moffats not to harm him. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, with the rules over being a minor waived in 1621; his son also gained his lands of ‘Alcolmefeld, Wodgrevington’ and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625 and was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John of Bonnington (16th/17th C.) son of Adam and brother of Simon of Bonnington. He was probably present at the Carlisle raid in 1596 in which Kinmont Willie was freed. In 1599 Lord Salton was his surety that he would ‘keep the King’s peace’. He was tried in 1601 for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘the Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh); along with 3 other Scotts, Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’ (all brothers of Robert of Bowhill and sons of Robert of Aikwood), he was convicted and ‘put to the horne’. He was referred to as being ‘in Quholplaw’ (probably Whelplaw in Lauderdale) and ‘alias callit Johne of Bonytoune’. It is unclear why this group of Scotts attacked Napier. He was recorded as brother of Simon of Bonnington among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He may have been involved in the murder of Walter Scott in 1616. He appears to have succeeded his brother Simon to the lands of Bonnington in about 1622, but died a few years later. He succeeded his brother Simon and deceased nephew Robert to the lands of ‘Ernesheugh’ and Singlie in 1624. He is probably the same John who was accused of murdering Walter ‘in Essenside’, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in about 1616, abetted by his brothers Simon and Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane. Since the murderer was said to be a Scott of Newhouse, then perhaps they were related to the Bonnington Scotts. If this was the same man, then he must have been acquitted. He succeeded his brother Simon in the lands of Bonnington, but these went to Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh) in 1624, and later to William Burnet, his grand-nephew. He was in succeeded in his other lands by his son Robert. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Woll. Scott of Satchells lists him among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as being ‘of Ashkirk’. He is recorded in 1608 among a party accused of attacking and maltreating some residents of Selkirk. His half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) was his accomplice, and they attacked the ‘knokkeiper’ John Jackson, apparently after they were ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. After the pair were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk a group of Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and elsewhere) freed them. Along with his half-brother John Turnbull he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh or declared rebels. He could be the John in Ashkirk recorded in Selkirk in 1580 in a transaction involving Helen Scott, widow of Mungo Donaldson. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ettrickhouse, recorded in 1609 among the supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He may be the ‘Jocky ill-to-haud’ who was a natural brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Sir John of Newburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur of Newburgh. Scott of Satchells describes him as ‘that Prince of Poets than whom Chaucer, Glovet, Sir Thomas More and Sir Philip Sydney never had a more Poetic Vein’. He was served heir to his father in 1610, in the lands of Winterburgh and ‘Fawodgrange alias Craighall’ in Ettrick Forest. He was bonded in 1610, along with his brother Arthur and John of Hundleshope, for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. In addition there was a complaint in 1617 against his brother Arthur by James Mitchellhill, burgess of Selkirk. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. Along with John of Gilmanscleuch and Sir Robert of Thirlestane he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones. In 1622 he was appointed as one of 10 men to assist Walter of Bucleuch in administering justice on the Border. In 1626 he is listed as owner of a ‘£4 land’ in the Barony of Belses, part of the temporal lands of Jedburgh Abbey. In 1631 he complained against Andrew Scott, surgeon in Edinburgh. He was listed on the last testament of Water, Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He was probably succeeded by his son John. His natural son David is recorded in 1640 in a document relating to the Scotts of Thirlstane. He also had a daughter who married Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636, was surely related. John of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 on a list of land-owners in Hassendean Parish whom the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to oust. He was presumably a direct descendant of the earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and related to the George ‘callit of Deringstoun’ recorded in 1616. John ‘Wat’s Jock’ (d.bef. 1610). In 1610 his son Bailie Robert and his wife Helen Turnbull had a sasine for a tenement off the Kirkwynd in Hawick. His father was presumably Walter. One of the witnesses was ‘Jock’s Wattie’, who could have been another son. He may be the same man as ‘Jok Scot, duellan in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ named in 1581, along with Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott (resident of Hawick) 3 years earlier. And also the ‘Johne Scot, alias Wattis Jok, burges of Hawik’ who was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Braxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud; his brother Thomas (also a Burgess) was also a witness. John ‘Jean’s John’ (16th/17th C.) son of the deceased ‘Symme Scot in Southfield’, recorded in 1609 when he was among several men fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlstane. The other men included 2 sons of Kinmont Willie, suggesting he was part of a gang of would-be rievers from Liddesdale. It is unclear if this Southfield is the one near Hawick. John (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1609 to his father John, who was ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick. He also had a brother Dacid, who is also recorded in 1609. It seems likely this was a property-owning family of Scotts who lived at the Tower Knowe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their relationship with other branches is unknown. It is possible he is the John son of John ‘in Hawik’ whose in 1579/80 purchased 3 rigs of land in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘younger’ in Selkirk in 1580, along with ‘elder’ John, who was presumably his father. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1581 when his cautioners were Gavin Murray and John Young. Additionally in 1581 he made an agreement with William Keen in Lingdean. John (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Howpasley (probably William). In 1599 he was a tenant of his father, who was surety for him, as well as Walter of Ladhope (who may have been related). He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) bellman of Hawick who is mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, the events taking place in 1610 (and described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’). He was presumably a Burgh Officer, one of the earliest on record. John ‘Bonnie Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) nickname for a Hawick resident, recorded in a 1612 document along with a number of people accused of over-charging interest on loans. He is there listed as ‘Bony Johnne Scot’ and he appeared in court to answer the charge. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Johne Scott callit Bony Jony’ in the 1616 trial of the men accused of salughtering the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Along with James Wemys and James Lethen, he helped take the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott before he could shoot James Douglas. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John of Newark (d.1622) eldest son of James. His father left him Newark (although it is unclear whether this was ownership or tenancy) in the early years of the 17th century. He is probably the John recorded in 1581 being ‘in Newerkmynhe’ when he gained crofts in Selkirk. Either he or another John is the ‘bretheris sone’ of James in Newark listed among people owing money to Thomas Cruckshank in 1581. In 1582 he resigned his lands in Selkirk to his father James in Newark Mill; Selkirk Bailie William was one of the witnesses and hence perhaps related. He is described as ‘in Newark’ when he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1609–15. In 1608 his son James was among a group of Scotts and others who were accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. He may be the John ‘in Newark’ listed among local men accused of overcharging on interest by the Privy Council in 1612 (but omitted from the list of those found guilty). In 1618 his son Walter Scott was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar and in 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him, as well as his sons James and William and William in Fastheugh for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. Separately his son Walter was also to be tried in 1618 for the mutilation of Adam Dalgleigh. Also in 1618 he complained about a group of Elliot’s attacking his tenants and servants at Foulshiels in Liddesdale. His house in Selkirk is mentioned in a document in 1619.
He married Agnes Simpson and their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, Burgess of Selkirk; and Walter in Broadhau. His son Walter had cautioners George of Castleside and Robert of Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were close relatives. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Tushielaw, and younger son of William of Tushielaw. Along with his son William (a minor at the time) he was accused in 1607 of killing John, father of John Govane of Cardrona (a family that would later connect with the Scotts of Tushielaw through marriage). He was the uncle of the John Scott who killed Walter of Thirlestane in a duel. John of Kirkhouses (16th/17th C.) from a branch of the family near Ashkirk, he was son of James. His grandfather was George Scott of Synton. He inherited the lands from his father in 1609. He was probably the John ‘in Kirkhoouss‘ who witnessed to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579 (with his son James also a witness). In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580 he received redemption money from Walter of Ashkirk for the lands of ‘Ediehauch’, ‘Ediebray’, 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. Also in 1580 he borrowed £21 Scots from John Mitchellhill, Burgess of Selkirk and was recorded in an arrangement involving bolls of bere with Elizabeth Elliot, widow of Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. His ‘onset and croft’ in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Additionally in 1581 he resigned his possessions in Ashkirk that had been wadset to him by Walter of Ashkirk and under the reversion Walter assigned to him part of Salenside Croft and ‘Shakriggis’. In 1581/2 he received money from the Mitchellhill family for lands within Selkirk. In 1581/2 his first-born son James took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. He was probably the John ‘in Kirkhouse’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1614 he was summoned (along with his kinsman Robert Scott of Salenside) to appear before the Presbytery to answer to charges of murder. He is probably the John of Kirkhoouses who was part of band of Scotts that forcibly took the farm of Hartwoodburn from its tenant in 1627. John of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1619 and in 1621 the Privy Council ruled that he could become portioner of Hundleshope, even although still a minor. He succeeded to his father’s lands in Peeblesshire in 1625. In 1629 he and his wife Helen Geddes had a charter for the lands of Hundleshope and others. He was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John ‘Jock’ or ‘the Suckler’ (d.1616) son of Thomas of Nether Braidlie. He was one of the men involved in the slaughter of Sir James Douglas’ sheep at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley in 1615, apparently in revenge for Douglas taking lands at Howpasley. He was the first to be sent for by Lady Howpasley, and at the Market Cross of Hawick he met with Jean Scott of Satchells and ‘Marion’s Geordie’. After the plan was hatched, he met some of the others at the foot of the Eilrig Burn in the Borthwick valley. The other men involved were George, Walter and Ingram Scott, and William Scott of Satchells, the first 3 all being caught and hung at Edinburgh Cross after Jock had turned informer. His dispossession claimed that George had threatened him when he had second thoughts about going through with the crime; when faced with this George asked him to repeat the statements to his face, which he did. For thus turning informant he was declared to be of lesser guilt and left in prison after the 1616 trial. However, later that same year he himself (mis-transcribed as ‘Jok the Suttler’) was hanged at the same place for sheep stealing; the specific charge was for taking 4 sheep from ‘Adam Almouse’, tenant at Muselee, as well as ‘ane zow and ane hog, pertaining to George Scott, callit of Deringstoun’ from his lands at Castlehill, ‘ane blak zow, pertaining to Rosie Scott, called Rowie of Huttikill, furth of the Lyn besyde Eilrig’ and 7 ewes from James Rowie in Raeburn. These crimes took place 1612–14. Sir John of Scotstarvit (1585–1670) descended from Robert of Allanhaugh, son of Sir David of Buccleuch. He succeeded his grandfather in 1592, at the age of 7. He had the tower of Scotstarvit rebuilt near Cupar in Fife, which still survives. He was a Judge, Directory of the Chancery, Lord of Session and Privy Councillor, but lost his positions when Cromwell occupied Scotland. He assisted Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch to run his estates while he was fighting in Holland, and carried the coronet at the Earl’s funeral. Along with Sir William of Harden he went to court to hear the King’s ruling on the land dispute between Francis Stewart and the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of the Earl of Buccleuch and served as one of the trustees for Mary, when she succeeded to the Buccleuch estates. He was the last of the original tutors named as ‘sine quibus non’ by Francis Earl of Buccleuch, but lost control to Gideon of Highchester and the Borders tutors. He was instrumental in having Pont’s maps of Scotland published by Blaeu in 1654, and contributed to the accompanying text. He also wrote ‘The staggering state of the Scots statesmen’, containing satirical sketches of prominent Scotsmen of his age (and back to 1550), published eventually in 1754. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthorn Dene. Their children were: Robert, who died young; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir John; William; Alexander; Robert; Ludovic; Margaret; Jean; Helen; Eupham; Anna; Eliza; Rebecca; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Janet. His 2nd wife was Margaret Melville, with whom he had a son George (who married Mary Margaret Rigg, sister of Lady Douglas of Cavers), and was in charge of a ship that transported Covenanters to the plantations, but died on the voyage in 1685). He thirdly married Eupham Moneypenny and had sons Cecil and Walter. It seems that in 1651, when the Scotts of Bucceleuch failed to have a male heir, he was the most senior representative with an unbroken male succession. His descendant, David, was an M.P. in the mid-18th century, but the branch failed in the male line in the early 1800s. John (16th/17th C.) ‘brother-german’ to Walter in Allamouth in 1606 when he purchased the lands of Hobsburn Weens from Thomas Turnbull. He was thus the first of the Scotts of Weens. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘of Weineis’ when he was part of an inquest. In 1612 he was ‘in Weneis’ when he was Bailie to Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam for a sasine in Rulewater. He is referred to as ‘called of Allanemouth, now in Weymes’ in a sasine of 1617 when he gained a bakehouse in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allamouth who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. Note that another John, accused in 1607 of killing the father of John Govane of Cardrona, was his uncle. According to Satchells he was one of the men who took part in the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and James, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was listed as ‘Ihne Scot, his sone lawfull’ after Walter of Tushielaw, when they were witnesses to a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose in 1607. He was described as ‘John Scott, called of Tuschelaw’ in a charter of 1618. His natural son Francis was also witness to the charter, as were Robert, ‘fiar of Tuschelaw’ (his older brother) and Sir Walter ‘of Tuschelaw’ (his father). He was the John, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch (or Thirlestane), recorded in the Selkirk Presbytery records of 1609 and possibly the inspiration for ‘The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow’. He was excommunicated after this, but his pardon by James VI for the slaughter of Walter Scott, brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, is recorded in 1614 and after due repentance his status with the church was reinstated in 1615. He is probably the John, brother of Robert of Tushielaw who witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule in 1619 and who witnessed a bond in 1620 between Thomas Turnbull, tenant at Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle, servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. In 1620 he was served as tutor to William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret, children of his brother James of Glenrath. He married Jeanne, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He had at least one legitimate son, Walter. John (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. He is probably the John of Chamberlain Newton recorded in 1612 when he and Michael Hunter of ‘Pownmude’ complained to the Privy Council about several Stewarts. In 1619 he signed a bond in Hawick with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule, which was registered in 1624. Witnesses included William, ‘fiar of Quhilhauch’ and Walter ‘called of Altoun’. It is possible he is the John of Brieryyards whose nephew William of Chamberlain Newton was served heir to his lands of Brieryyards and ‘Braidleyis’ in 1633 and 1637. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brieryyards. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance at court in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allamouth who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. John (17th C.) tenant in Whithope. He was listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the Liddesdale farms of ‘Rouraltonholme’ (probably at Ralton) and Auldefields. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as joint tenant, along with Gavin Elliot, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Closse alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as ‘bailie in Liddisdaill’ in a document listing the possessors of the lands that made up the Lorship of Liddesdale. He possessed the lands of ‘Flocksteid alias Flasket’. He may have been bailie to the Lord of Liddesdale. John (d.bef. 1634) described as ‘burgess of Hawick in 1634 when his son William became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the John who acted as witness for the Hawick Parish valuation in 1627. John (d.bef. 1629) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction. John (17th C.) son of Andrew, who was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1636 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Winterburgh with mill in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgraing alias Craighill’. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Scotts of Winterburgh. John (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. John of Huntly (17th C.) son of James ‘called of Huntly’. He was served heir to his father in 1639 in the lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgraing alias Craighill’. He is one of the last recorded Lairds of Huntly. However, Walter of Huntly is recorded just a few years later, in 1644, so possibly his brother. John of Catslackknowe (17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Montbenger, and before that the Scotts of Dryhope. He may have been son of Walter of Montbenger and father of Rev. James of Kirkton and Ancrum. However, Rev. James’ father may instead have been Walter of Catlackknowe. It is unclear if he was related to the John in Catslack recorded in 1563. He may be the John ‘of Catslak’ whose daughter Helen had a sasine for lands in Deuchar in 1580, from Thomas Dalgleish in Deuchar; he was witness to the sasine. He is probably also the John ‘in Catslak’ in 1580 when he witnessed a sasine for the daughters of his sister and her husband John Turnbull of Philiphauge. He is probably the John ‘in Catslak’ in 1581 when, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in a dispute with Robert of Haing. Additionally in 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for Andrew ‘Dandie’ and witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. John (17th C.) recorded as being from Borthaugh in 1642 when he acted as an appraiser in a Magistrates Court case involving someone’s livestock eating someone else’s oats. He could be related to the John who previously owned Borthaugh. John (d.1646) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold Bucleuch’. He was Provost of Crichton. In 1632 he was recorded as ‘brother natural’ to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, who was given the rentals from Crichton; this suggests he was a son of Sir William of Kirkurd and Grizel Beaton (who secondly married Andrew Murray of Blackbarony), however, it seems more likely he was from the next generation. He bore the arms of Montgomery in the funeral procession of the Earl of Bucleuch in Hawick in 1634. In 1643 he received a gift of 400 merks from Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell ‘for advancing his fortoun’. John (17th C.) described being ‘callit of Borthwick’ in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He may have been related to earlier Scotts of Borthwick. Mary Scott, listed right after him in 1643, had land in Hawick valued at £3. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. In 1621, along with Sir John of Newburgh and Sir Robert of Thirlestane, he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones (who were responsible for the death of his father). He is recorded owning the lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1628 and was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He is recorded writing to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1656, regarding the valuation of his lands. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, presumably for being a Covenanter supporter. He was probably the Scott of Gilmanscleuch who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He was probably father of Francis. His son may have been John of Renaldburn (although this may be confused). John of Renaldburn and Newburgh (d.c.1672) grandson of Arthur of Newburgh, and son of Sir John. He may also have been knighted himself. He held the lands of ‘Renalburn’ (or ‘Renaldburn’) near Eskdalemuir (the later farm-house there said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice). He inherited Newburgh in 1654, being served heir to his grandfather Arthur. In 1656 he witnessed a charter (for lands in Dalkeith) for the Duchess of Bucleuch. In 1661 he is described as ‘callit of Newbrugh, lait bailzie of Esdaill’ when listed owing more than £2500 to the Duchess of Bucleuch. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in about 1663. He was Chamberlain and Bailie of Eskdale in a deed of 1663. From 1666 he was ‘tutor and curator’ for Francis of Davington (to whom he was distantly related), son of Sir John of Thirlestane. In 1670
he infefted Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall in the Barony of Westerhall. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale Parishes from the mid-1650s until the early 1670s. About this time other people stood in for him, suggesting either he was dead or incapacitated. However, John of ‘Ranaldsburne’ and ‘Rennelburn’ is recorded in deeds of 1673 and 1682, and may have been his son. He married Margaret Canide. His 2nd daughter Janet married Adam Elliot of Meikledale. His son John was also Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch. Other children were James (b.1623) and Marie. John of Gorrenberry (d.1668) natural son of Walter, the 1st Earl Buccleuch, by Annas (or Agnes) Drummond. In 1629 he was given the lands of Gorrenberry as well as others. He acted as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Eckford, Langholm, Lempitlaw and Liddesdale from the 1640s to the late 1650s. He was also Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead in the 1680s. His lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1600 in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 there was a letter to him from Earl Francis, discussing the teinds of Eckford and the Mains. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the ‘John Scott, bailiff and B. brother to the Lord of Buccleuch’ to whom a complaint was made in 1650 about some of Cromwell’s soldiers having their horses stolen in the Borders by tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother’s will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and served as one of the tutors of Countess Mary during her minority, signing a letter protesting against her ‘pretendit’ marriage in about 1659. He also was involved in a law suit with some of her other guardians in 1659 over breaking the locks on her charter chests. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £9000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale, where he had been Chamberlain. He was recorded paying the land tax (of £1600) in 1663. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 his wife Elizabeth Hamilton, Lady ‘Carberrie’, was recorded in a discharge. He was probably the first Scott of Gorrenberry, and may also have married a Riddell. His son and successor was Francis. He had other sons: David, who was living in 1670; John, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663; and Robert, who was living in 1668. It is also possible that Walter of Alton was another son. His sons and grandsons and those of Walter of Alton Croft were mentioned in 1681 as among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Hawick in 1648/9. He may have been the same John who was described as ‘maltman’ in the 1638 ‘leet’ for Bailies, and in the following year in reference to money gathered relating to soldiers in the Town. He was probably also one of the 2 councillors of the same name (one of whom is described as a merchant) who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He is also recorded as appraiser (for eaten oats) in a Magistrate’s Court case in 1642. He served as Bailie in the 1650s and may be the John who was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick during some of the 1660s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘John Scott Alton’ in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Sir John (c.1615–66) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, with his 2nd wife Katherine Jardine. He was younger brother of Sir Robert, who died without children. He was served heir to his brother Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621. In 1632 he is described as son and heir of his father Sir Robert in a document relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire; Robert, son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot is also mentioned, and so possibly a relative. He was involved in a court case in 1634 (referring to a contract of 1623) with Sir William Scott of Harden and Robert Scott of Headshaw, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication relating to the lands of Bourhope brought by Robert Scott of Whitslade, and decrees of appraising over the same lands with Patrick of Tanlawhill (his cousin) in 1642 and Robert of Whitslade in 1643. In 1641 he signed a contract with his cousin Patrick relating to the Thirlestane estate, but the terms were not clearly specified, and also Sir William of Harden resigned the Thirlestane estates to him, the 2 documents being signed in Hawick. This was important for the subsequent dispute of succession between him and his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill, fought (and lost) by his descendants in court in the period 1727–44. His cousin Patrick clearly manipulated the situation (even having him imprisoned in Selkirk and in Home Castle) and eventually claimed the Thirlestane estates outright, although he was still fighting for his family lands until his death. He was served heir to his father Sir Robert in 1642 (perhaps as part of the legal battle). In 1643 he was referred to as ‘son and heir of the late Sir Robert’ of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdalemuir. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Eskdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. He is probably the John of Thirlestane recorded in a deed in 1663. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir Robert of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdalemuir. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Eskdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. He is probably the John of Thirlestane recorded in a deed in 1663. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir David Ogilvie of Clova (his comrade in arms). Their children were: Francis of Davington; and Katharine, possibly an ancestor of James Scott of Calfield. He secondly married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. John of Allanhaugh (17th C.) probably son of William of Allanhaugh (or perhaps Walter of Allanmouthe). He was listed in a county valuation of Hawick Parish in 1643, with his lands valued at £110. It is possible he is the same as John of Weens, recorded in the earlier 1600s. John of Toddeshall (d.c.1653) recorded in the 1643 county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with the value being £133 6s 8d. In 1631–37 he was a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for rents in part of Branxholme and Wilton. He may be descended from Andrew of Toddeshall, who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. John of Yorkston and Headshaw (d.c.1646) 2nd son of George of Syntoun. His lands may have been near Temple in Midlothian (unless there is another place of the same name). He is probably the ‘brother german’ of Walter of Syntoun who in 1609 was involved in a sasine for the lands of Satchells. He is probably the John ‘of Sintoun’ who served as assignee to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in a complaint against the Ainslies of Jedburgh in 1617. He is also recorded as John ‘of Syn- toun’ in 1620 when a complaint was made that he and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, still owed the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth for lodging William of Howpsley there for several years. In 1629 he purchased Headshaw and Langhope from the old family of Scotts of Headshaw. He is recorded in the period 1631–42 as Chamberlain in Liddesdale to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1632 he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning for lands in Belses. He is probably the ‘John of Sintoune’ who, along with Robert Pringle of Stichel, captured ‘Geordy Armstrong of Dykraw’. In 1634 he was part of the Earl of Buccleuch’s funeral procession in Hawick, where he carried the arms of Douglas of Angus. He appears to have repurchased Headshaw, Dryden and other lands in 1636. In 1637 he was ‘Johnne Scot of Heidschaw, baillie of Liddesdale’ when he witnessed a document for the sale of Harwood. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick as ‘Johne Scott of Heidschaw’. In 1643 he was listed as owner of Dryden, valued at £290, as well as Headshaw, ‘Crawknows, and Cleuches’, valued at £760 10s. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. His son William of Headshaw is also mentioned in Buccleuch accounts for 1646, was served as his heir in 1653 and had a sasine as his heir in 1655. He was also recorded in 1660 (after his decease) when the curators for Mary Scott of Buccleuch tried to recover a debt from his sons William and John, owed to her father. His children were: William, who succeeded; Walter of Dryden; John of Langhope; Mungo in Dryden; and Robert, also in Dryden. John (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Castlehill’ in 1631–48 when he was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdalemuir and Westerkirk Parishes. In 1633 he was listed as a ‘servant’ of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch who was still owed his fee for the year. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in 1648. His designation was given as ‘Ormiston’, suggesting that he lived there. He was probably related to James of Ormiston and the later John of Ormiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Bessie Gledstains and their children included: Beatrix (b.1636); Anna (b.1639); and Walter (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. Children who were probably his included: Robert (b.1634); Robert (again, b.1637); Walter (b.1641); Janet (b.1642); and Margaret (b.1645). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1646. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Noble in 1634 and their son George was baptised in 1651. The witnesses included George (probably related). Other baptisms to a John Scott in Ashkirk may also be included: Robert (b.1634); Robert (b.1637); Walter (b.1641); Janet (b.1642); and Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whit-slade. His children included: William (b.1654), who succeeded, but sold Langhope: John, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1670; and Elizabeth (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk. In 1656 he is recorded being ‘of Langhop in the parish of Kirkop’ and the witnesses were William ‘of . . .’ (probably of Headshaw, his brother) and Robert (perhaps another brother). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Liddell and their children included Margaret (b.1635), James (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Walter (b.1642), Marion (b.1643), John (b.1645), Adam (b.1647), Marion (again, b.1649), William (b.1652) and Christian (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Walter Purdom and Robert. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Veitch (or ‘Heilling Veatche’ in 1647 and their children included: Margaret (b.1652); John (b.1655); and Helen (b.1657). Given his wife’s surname, it is possible that they were both connected with Synton. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1652 the Council found that traveller Thomas Oliver was not liable to pay him for £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pipes, another £6, 10s. for ‘hott waters’, as well as 8 merks of powder and 8 merks of white sugar, all of which Oliver had been transporting from Edinburgh for him, but were ‘brak, drownet, and lossit by the way’. John (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he accused Walter ‘Westport’ of selling him 3 barrels of spirits that were supposed to be ‘24 stoupis’, but was short. Walter was acquitted by the Hawick Magistrates. John ‘Westport’ (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when his child William with Janet Rob-Grassyards. John of Headshaw (d.1691) eldest son of William. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration (listed under Dumfriesshire). His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, etc. to him in 1688. He married Jean Hackett (or Halket) in Edinburgh in 1682; she was only daughter of Col. R. Halket, and probably a cousin of some sort. When he died his sister Mary (who had married Patrick Porteous) became heir to Headshaw. John (17th C.) son of Thomas in Bonchester (probably the same as Thomas ‘of’ Nether Bonchester). He was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. He is mentioned in 1690 as son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester when he had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. Perhaps the same John (said by George Tancred to be a Writer to the Signet) died in 1705 and was buried at Greyfriars Kirkyard in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1693. John of Synton (d.bef. 1705) son of William. If he was the 3rd son, then his 2 older brothers must have died before him and with no heirs. In 1662 his uncle Francis was appointed as tutor during his minority. He is recorded in a sasine of 1670 and annexed the lands of North Synton in 1675 (although they were partly in the family since 1641). He was recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1675 he was served heir to his father William of Synton, in the lands of North Synton; his father had died earlier than this, suggesting that perhaps this is when he reached majority. He paid the land tax at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678 (half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130) and was also owner of the lands of Essenside (valued at £365), although at that time North Synton was in the hands of Rev. Robert Cunningham. He may also be the Laird of Synton who whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £1600 in 1678. He is recorded as ‘of Syenetoune’ in a bond of 1682. He later added Satchells to the estate and gained some land from Selkirk Common. He owned additional lands in Tweedsmuir Parish, according to a ‘tack’ of 1687 by Francis Scott, minister of Tweedsmuir (who may have been a relative). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 35 hearths on his lands. In 1696 he and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with James Melville of Halhill. He is also recorded in 1670 when his ‘brother-germane’ William became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his sister Elizabeth. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Murray of Blackbarony in 1686 (probably not the daughter of John Murray of Cringletie, as stated by Keith Scott). In 1702 he secondly married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and widow of William Scott of Raeburn. His children were: William (b.1688), baptised in Ashkirk, who probably died young; Alexander (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk, who is recorded in an assignation by his grandmother Lady Blackbarony in 1697, and succeeded; Jean (b.1694), also baptised in Ashkirk, who had a similar assignation in 1697, but appears to have died a year later; and Margaret, who received money from his mother-in-law’s estate in 1699 and married William Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1706, by which date he was deceased. The 1690 baptism was witnessed by John of Woll and William (probably of Headshaw) and the 1694 one by Alexander Murray (probably his father-in-law) and Walter of Todrig. He may have been the John, son of William, born in Ashkirk in 1646. He may have died in 1710 (as stated by Keith Scott). Rev. John (d.c.1690) minister of Hawick. He was tutor in the family of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs, and may also have been related to that family. Based on his witnessing of documents of the Elliots of Harwood, he may have been a son of a sister of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1650 and became Hawick minister in 1657. He may be the John of Hawick whose behaviour was complained about at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles in 1655. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopacy, effectively being forced to leave the town; however, he is said to have preached regularly at conventicles, e.g. at Earlside. He apparently contemplated joining a Covenanter force in 1666, but refrained when he found out how disorganised they were. However, he was present at the Pentland rising in 1666. He fled to the north of England, preaching in Northumberland and Cumbria. In 1678 he chaired a meeting of outed ministers who opposed the more extreme views of Richard Cameron and others. He also helped Archibald, Earl of Argyll escape in 1681, giving him a Covenanter password, then arranging for him to stay with Pringle of Torwoodlee, and then go via Hawick to Northumberland and eventually to Holland (although Argyll was later captured and beheaded). He survived past the Revolution, but appears not to have resumed service as a minister. In 1658 he married Marion, daughter of John...
Livingsstone, the minister of Auncrum (and famous Covenanter); she died aged only 19 in 1661, and is buried at St. Mary’s. He later married Elizabeth Anderson, who died in 1698 and is buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. It is possible he was the ‘Mr John Scott’ recorded as resident of Lilliesleaf in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 James Livingsstone, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his wife Marion (probably her brother, although it is unclear why this was so long after her death). John of Ormiston (17th C.) merchant of Hawick in the 1600s. He was listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably related to (or confused with) James of Ormiston, and the earlier John. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed a baptism (along with schoolmaster John Purdom) for mason David Rutherford in 1685. John of Cockerheugh (17th C.) probably 2nd son of John of Brieryyards and brother of James of Brieryyards. His father purchased ‘a merkland of Hassendeanbank’ (probably Cockerheugh) from Thomas Turnbull in 1656 and had a ‘wapsets’ in his name in 1657 with the Turnbulls, involving ‘the markland of horneshole with houses’. He transferred the wapsets and lands to his brother James in 1667. He may be the John who (along with Walter, perhaps another brother) witnessed baptism for James of Brieryyards in Robertson Parish in 1681 and 1687. Also in 1681 there was a ‘disposition and assignation’ to him from Walter, probably also a brother (or other near relative). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the crowd that gathered to try to stop the roof being removed from Hassendean Kirk. Along with his nephew John (son of James ‘of Brieryairdis’) he was accused of striking Charles Lithgow in this incident. He is probably the John whose son Walter inherited Cockerheugh from him in 1721, and whose daughter Bessie married Walter (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’), also in 1721. In 1705 he was ‘of Cockerheugh Now Tennant in Langlands’ when a woman appeared before the Session to confess to being pregnant by his son Walter. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Skelfhill in a deed of 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Moormaw (d.c.1685) recorded being ‘of Leis’ in 1685 when his will was registered. Probably the same John is recorded being of Moormaw in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners and tenants of 1666. He was presumably related to other Scotts of Moormaw and Lees. He may be the same John as John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. In 1682 he was ‘of Iyes’ when (along with Adam) he witnessed a baptism for William of Clarilaw (who was probably related to him). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Renwick in 1680. His designation appears to be ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe). James Newbie and Andrew Angus were witnesses. Perhaps the same John, with his wife’s name as ‘Renwick’ had a son John baptised in 1696. He was surely related to Robert, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. John ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Whitegates’, ‘Cloaks’ (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. It is hard to separate the contemporary Johns, but it seems clear that the merchant and ‘Whiteyetts’ are the same man, although it is possible that the entry here describes 2 generations. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Scott ‘Flex’) for Thomas Scott and in 1682 another for Baxter James Lands. He was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon; since he confessed and appeared before the Bailie, he was excused. He is recorded as merchant in several deeds of 1682. In 1689 he witnessed (along with weaver James Beattie) a baptism for Walter Anderson. He could be the ‘merchant Elder’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could also be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1698. He is ‘Whitegates’ in 1700 and ‘Whitegates junior’ in 1705 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for merchant Michael. In 1706 he was ‘whitegates’ and witnessed a baptism (for workman William Rid dell) along with John ‘younger Soger’. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Elizabeth Wilson and in 1720 another for James Scott and Sarah Gledstains. He is recorded in 1701 in the Burgh Records and in 1718 in the Hawick Session Records, when he was rebuked for providing William Whaton with military-type coat and sword to ride through the town, as part of a wager. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for wigmaker Robert Miles. He married Margaret Paterson (being recorded as both merchant and as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘whitegates’ in separate baptismal entries) and had children: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686), who fled after getting Margaret Brydon pregnant; John (b.1688); and Gideon (b.1700). In the baptismal record of 1700 he is ‘whitegates younger’, suggesting his father was also John ‘Whiteyetts’, and making it clear that the ‘younger’ referred (at least some of the time) to him and not to his son John (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie William Laing and Adam Ruecastle and in 1700 were Michael Scott and William Laing. He could also be the John whose son John was baptised in 1699, with Walter Anderson and William Paterson as witnesses. Either he secondly married Agnes (or Ann) Scott, or this was his son, perhaps the man born in 1686; his name is given as ‘Cloaks and White gates’ in some of the records. Their children included: Gideon (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Jean (b.1712); John (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); and Thomas (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Ruecastle and Walter Anderson, in 1708 were Gideon of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1712 were shoemaker Walter Scott and William ‘Whatton’, in 1713 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and Walter Anderson, and in 1718 were Walter Henderson and David Miller. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother to the Laird of White slade. It is unclear if his nickname referred to a specific place, and if so, where this might have been. John (17th C.) son of Bailie Scott, although it is unclear which one. In 1685 Adam Young was fined for insulting him and his father, specifically ‘calumniating them and taking away yr. good name’ in claiming they had reset peas that had been taken by footboys of Lord Airlie’s troop (i.e. Royalists under James Ogilvy of Airlie). John of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1688. Along with William of Briery yards he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart (from Clydesdale), who had twins in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Whitehaugh (or if ‘John’ was perhaps an error). John (17th/18th C.) cordiner (i.e. shoemaker) in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Briggs in 1680 and another for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. His son Walter was witness to a Hawick sasine of 1688, while another son William served as ‘procurator’ for Patrick Cunningham in the same sasine. He is and was listed as a shoemaker among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the cordiner listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan in 1707, for wright John Pringle in 1711, for Thomas Greenshiels and for James Scott ‘Laird’ in 1714, for weaver James Weens in 1720, for weaver John Weens in 1723, and for gardener Walter in 1726. He may be the same shoemaker (although perhaps this is another generation) who married Janet Briggs and had a son Thomas baptised in 1708, with witnesses Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. He was probably the senior of ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’ who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. John (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Andrew, who is also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was listed along with Andrew and James, each having a single hearth. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1715 as cottar in Headshaw; he married Helen Wilson (perhaps in 1715, with no wife’s name recorded) and their children included William (b.1715), Andrew (b.1717) and John (b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed right before James, and so probably related, perhaps his father. He could be an ancestor of millwright Gideon. John (17th C.) shepherd at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from another John (not shepherd) there. John (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James and Thomas, listed after him at the same place, were presumably related to him. It is possible he is the John, in Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1680. John (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to later Scotts of Hummelknowed Mill. John (17th C.) ploughman at Adderstoneshiel listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as a tailor at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same tailor John was in Mervinslaw in 1709. The witnesses were Andrew . . ., tenant in Mervinslaw, and John Rule, shepherd there. It is also possible he was the John in Borthaugh who received money from the Wilton poor box, including for the purchase of a coat in 1705. John (17th

C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96 an a third in 1698. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; a separate John was also recorded as a webster in the same place. He witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill in 1697. He may have been closely related to Robert or Bessie (widow of James Riddel), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed with the word ‘Grimma’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grimma’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, George is also listed in 1694 with the same name. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is listed separately from men of the same name who were tailor, cordiner, ‘yonger’ and ‘Grimma’. He could be the same man as the smith recorded in 1693/4. John younger (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick ‘eist the water’. His name is written ‘John Scott yonger’. He could be the same man as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Sodger’. John (17th C.) carrier in Hawick who was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed separately from the ‘Soldier’, who was a carrier at the same time. He could be the John, who along with Robert, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. He is probably the carrier who was a witness in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters for attacking Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was listed as a carrier when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. John ‘Sodger’ (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1692 he was recorded as ‘Sodger’ when leasing 34 acres of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4, where his name was listed as ‘John Scott, carrier, called soldier’. He was listed as ‘Shouldier’ and resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1706 he was recorded as ‘carrier in Teviotdale and indweller in Hawick commonly called Souldier John’ when he is recorded making a bond in Selkirk with Walter Mitchell, merchant in Glasgow. In 1707 he and his son, John younger, were fined by the Council for ‘violent putting, thrusting, and expelling, under cloud of night’ the horses of William Aitken, younger, from his barn; the Aitkens were also carriers in Hawick, but it is unclear what the dispute was between the families. In 1713 he (or possibly his son) was ‘distinctionis causa called John the Souldier’ when when witnessing a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and Margaret Scott (who may have been related to him). John ‘Goudilands’ (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694, when he paid for 2 hearths. He was associated with Goldielands in some way, although Charles of Goldielands was also listed on the tax rolls. In 1689 he was listed as ‘brother to Goldilands’. He married Catherine Scott and their son James was baptised in 1689, with witnesses dyer George Young and merchant James Simpson. James (b.1683) and Walter (b.1686), baptised to John and Catherine Burn in Hawick in 1683 could also be his children. It is possible that he could be the same man as ‘Uncle John’. John (17th C.) shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John listed as shepherd at Dryden a few decades later. He is probably the John ‘in Dryden’ whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1706, with witnesses Adam Elliot of Arkleton and James Grieve in Commonside. Perhaps the same John was recorded as herd at Drydenburn in 1713. He married Helen Hislop and their children included: Margaret (b.1702); Isobel (b.1703); Margaret (again, b.1707); Elizabeth (b.1710); and Bessie (b.1713). The witnesses in 1713 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume ‘propanioner’ and tailor James Robson (from Robertson Parish). John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Possibly the same John in Whithope was recorded in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Whithechesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and Walter, who were also listed there. He could be the John who (along with Walter) was in Whithechesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. John (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. This is listed under Hassendean Parish, but is clearly the farm in Wilton Parish. He may have been related to Adam of Burnfoot, who was probably Laird at that time. He may be the John who (along with William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for James, tenant at West Burnfoot Mill and another in 1729 for George at West Burnfoot. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish.

in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. Probably the same John was listed in Appletreehall in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Jean Bell and their children included: Janet (b.1681), baptised in Hawick; an unnamed son (b.1685), baptised in Hawick; and David (b.1688), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses in 1685 were James and Stephen Greenshields (the latter being quartermaster of the weavers) and in 1688 were John Hope and George Scott. John ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was father of James ‘Laird’ (Hawick’s first known Cornet), according to a baptismal record for one of James’ children in 1714. He himself witnessed a baptism in 1704 (along with James ‘Doctor’) for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. It seems likely that the was also a weaver. He was surely related to the roughly contemporary Robert and the earlier James, who were both also nicknamed ‘Laird’.

John of Woll (d.c.1706) 5th son of Sir William of Harden. He purchased the lands of Woll in 1660. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He paid tax on £533 6s 8d in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678. He wrote to his brother Sir William in 1665 from Aikwood. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick, Selkirk and St. Mary’s in at least the periods 1657–63 and 1671–1703, when he also covered the Barony of Kirkurd. He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branzholmie in 1690, 1692, 1694 and 1698. He may have been the John who served as Chamberlain for the Countess of Wemyss’ rents in Teviotdale in the period 1652–66 (although there were other contemporary men of the same name); and also responsible for the Countess’ rentals in Teviotdale. He was also factor to his brother Sir William of Harden in the period 1660–83. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £700 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest. He received the East Mains of Selkirk from Walter Scott of Harden and his wife Christian Ker in 1669 (although it is unclear who this Walter could be, given the dates). He was recorded in a bond of relief in 1673. In 1678 he acted as ‘amicable compositor’ between the parties involved when part of Selkirk Common was divided. He is recorded in deeds of 1682. Also in 1682 he was on the jury that found Alexander Home guilty of being at the head of the group of Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower; however, it may be that he was one of the jurors who voted to acquit. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Scott. It was said that he paid 2600 merks to Meldrum ‘to save the Duchess of Buccleuch’s people in that shire from more particular sufferings’. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. In 1692 he was one of the 2 Chamberlains of Buccleuch who gave their consent for Francis Gledstains wanted to enclose part of the Flex. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also Berwickshire and in 1693 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1702. Also in 1693 there is an existing letter to his nephew Walter, Earl of Tarras. He witnessed a baptism in 1693, in Ashkirk Parish, for John, younger of Gilmanscleuch. He was probably the Laird of Woll who paid tax on 8 hearths at his house in 1694. When his eldest son married in 1694 he resigned the lands of Woll to him. He may be the John ‘of Well’ who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He married Agnes, only daughter of Robert Scott of Harwood and started the Scotts of Woll (or restarted, since there was an earlier branch of the Scotts who were Lairds of Woll). His wife, Lady Scott of Woll, was a strong supporter of the Covenant, attending field meetings (perhaps on Lilliesleaf Moor) and in 1684 was fined £300 Scots for failing to attend services at Ashkirk Kirk. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; John, who married Margaret Scott; Gideon; 2 other sons, who died before 1710 without having sons; Agnes (b.c.1675), who married Alexander Veitch of Glen in 1698; and Margaret, who married John, younger of Gilmanscleuch in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton. He was recorded at Wiltownburh in 1696. He married a Renwick and their children included John (b.1696). The witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1698 when his son James was baptised in Hawick. This was the day before the baptism of a child of Gideon Scott of Falnash and with the same witnesses, Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. John of Langhope (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Langhope and St. Leonards. He appears to have purchased Langhope from his father in 1688, and was served heir to these lands of his father’s in 1691. However, later in 1691 he and his wife Janet sold the lands to Adam of Bowhill.
Sir John of Ancrum (d.1712) son of Patrick and Elizabeth Simson, and descended from the Scotts of Balwearie. He is sometimes called ‘of Kirkstyle’ (in Perthshire), although his father probably sold those lands. He is also sometimes called ‘of Langshaw’, like his father, although those lands would go to his younger brother Francis. In 1654 he bought the lands of Ormiston from William, Earl of Roxburgh and was the ‘fiar of Langshaw’ who was the son of Patrick of Langshaw. He was listed as ‘fiar of Langschaw’ in 1661 when he and his partners owed money to the Scotts of Buccleuch for duties on the coal-fields of Sheriffhall. He was recorded as ‘of Langshaw’ and Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 3 deeds of 1663. In 1663 he is recorded holding lands in Melrose Parish that had previously belonged to Lord Elibank. He is recorded in document in the Melrose Regality records, relating to the ‘multures’ of Langshaw and other matters in 1663–68. In 1668 he had a sasine of the lands of ‘Wouplaw’. He acquired Ancrum from Charles Kerr, 2nd Earl of Ancrum. He had a charter of the lands and barony of Ancrum in 1670 and in 1671 became the 1st Baronet of Ancrum (in the baronetcy of Nova Scotia). He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead for the years 1660–62 (as Scott of Langshaw) and 1665–70 (as Scott of Ancrum). He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1664. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1665. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He paid the land tax on £2400 in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was tried in 1680 for speaking against the King and the Privy Council. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1694 he paid tax on 19 hearths for his estate at Ancrum. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In the early 1700s he was accused of embezzling money during the minority of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1652 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Francis (or perhaps William) Scott of Mangerton, and they had 5 sons and 5 daughters. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bennet of Grubet, and had 2 further daughters, from whom are descended Sir Hector Maclean Hay of Alderston and Sir William Henry Walsingham Calder. In 1708 he lastly married Barbara, daughter of Walter Ker of Littledean; when the local minister refused to proclaim the banns 3 times in a single day, he took his intended bride to Cornhill where they were married. His children were: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; Charles of Palace Hill, who married Margaret, sister of John, 5th Lord Rutherdford; John (b.1702), a merchant, who spent time in London and Jamaica, settled in New York and whose descendant, John Morin Scott, was Mayor of Philadelphia; Andrew, also a merchant, who participated in the disastrous Darien colony; William, an advocate, who was imprisoned for taking part in the uprising of 1715; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Eliott of Stobs; Anna (or Anne), who married William Scott of Raeburn and secondly John Scott of Synton; Cecilia (or Cicely), who married William Ainslie of Blackhill; Jean, who married John Murray of Bowhill; Elizabeth, who married John Erskine of Shielfield; Margaret, who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade, and later Sir David Murray of Stenhope; and Christian, who married Sir Thomas Calder of Muirtoune. John ‘Wyndheid’ (d.c.1712) married to Bessie Paisley. His nickname may have come from living at the head of Walter’s Wynd, suggesting he was related to the later Walter (although it is possible that the Cross Wynd or Kirk Wynd are meant). In 1676 he was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with Robert Taylor, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. There he was referred to as ‘Wyndheads’. With his wife Bessie Paisley his children included: John (b.1680); John (again, b.1685); William (b.1687); and Bessie (b.1690). The witnesses in 1685 were James Lands and William Douglass. Then probably the same John married Helen Stoddart in Hawick in 1709 and had a child Archibald (b.1711). He was John ‘called Wyndhead late servant to Robert Robson’ in 1711, with witnesses Dand Gray in Whitlaw and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. In 1712 his widow was called before the Kirk Session and rebuked for harassing her neighbours. He may be related to Robert ‘Wyndhead’, recorded in 1701, George ‘Wyndhead’ also recorded about the same time and Walter and another John ‘Wyndhead’ recorded a little later. John (d.bef. 1715) tailor in Hawick, married to Isabel Harkness. In 1704 he was ‘taylor in Hawick near ye Casyned’. He may be the John, ‘tayller’ who witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1688. He is probably the tailor John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the tailor listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1707 he was ‘taylor, and towne tresawrer’ when the 2 Bailies were fined for their behaviour at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He married Isobel Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1700); John (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); George (b.1707); Isobel and Margaret (b.1709); and Francis (b.1711). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John and merchant William, in 1702 were Bailies Robert Hardie and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1709 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. In 1715 his widow was involved in a dispute with Robert Deans over who should sit in a particular pew in St. Mary's. He may be the John described as ‘sometimes tailyor in Hawick’ in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married Town Clerk Walter Gledstains; however, if he died before 1715 then this would have to have been a different tailor John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Rashiegrain. He married Marion Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John ‘Uncle John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. His nickname was recorded in 1702 when he was a witness to a birth for Walter in Goldielands, with the other witness being Robert of Tandlaw; it seems likely he was related to the Goldielands and Tandlaw branches, but it is otherwise unclear who he was. Presumably his nickname distinguished him from other contemporaries Johns, but its meaning is unclear. He married Jean Stuart (also from Hawick Parish) in 1704, when he was ‘distinctions causa called uncle John’. Their children included: John (b.1705); and Robert (b.1707). In the 1705 baptismal record he is stated to be in Blackcleuch and the witnesses were Robert in Blackcleuch (perhaps his father) and John in Falnash (perhaps another relative). His nickname is again given in the 1707 baptismal record, the nickname is recorded once more. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddell in 1696 and their children included Robert (b.1706), John (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Bell and their children included Alison (b.1708), Andrew (b.1713) and William (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as a servant at Synton Mains in 1709. He married Helen Brown in 1706 and their children included: Janet (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Magdalen (b.1714); and Helen (b.1716). John (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for flesher Robert Renwick (along with merchant William) and for tailor John, in 1704 for Robert Scott, ‘Pope’ and for smith James Scott and in 1709 for weaver Patrick Forman. In 1707 he was ‘oulawed for deriding and mocking the bailie’. He witnessed baptisms in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Allan and in 1718 for shoemaker Walter Scott and for merchant William Dickson. He was appointed in 1718 to try to raise money for a new Kirk clock in Hawick. In 1720 (along with candlemaker John) he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Cavers and for merchant William Dickson. He may be the ‘John Scott Shoemaker’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1721. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull and he witnessed others for gardener Walter in 1740 and for shoemaker George Gardner in 1744. He married Mary (also recorded as Marion and Martha) Rutherford and their children included: William (b.1701); William (again, b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Margaret (b.1708); John (b.1711); Rachel (b.1713); Thomas (b.1715); Jean (b.1718); and David (b.1721). William Scott, shoemaker, witnessed the 1705 baptism and so may have been his father or brother. The 1708 witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot and in 1718 were Alexander Scott of Boonraw and merchant John Robson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray in 1707 and their son Thomas was baptised in 1708. John (d.1710) tenant in Falnash. He was recorded in 1711 as ‘younger in Falnash’ when his widow Janet Aitchison married William Scott in Skelfhill. He may have been related to Gideon, ‘Auld Falnash’. He is probably the John in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Stewart, smith in Falnash, in 1704 for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn, in 1705 for John in Blackcleuch and in 1709 for Archibald in Hislop. He was ‘tenant in Falnash’ when he married Margaret Anderson in 1702; she was daughter of Edward Aitchison, tenant in Eweslees. They had children: Margaret (b.1703); Marion (b.1704); Helen (b.1706); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Morton. He was already deceased in early 1711 when his son John was baptised in Hawick, his father-in-law Edward Aitchison agreeing to arrange for the education of the child; the witnesses were Archibald, tenant in Hislop and John Armstrong. John (1659/20–1738) tenant in Denholm. He is buried in Cavers Old Cemetery, along with his son William (1703/4–49). He could be the resident of Cavers Parish who in 1702 was probably at Denholm when his son William was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1710 he was recorded as servant to Robert Robson. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included: Archibald (b.1711); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1717); and Helen (b.1720). The witnesses in 1710 were George Scott ‘Wynehead’ and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He was recorded being ‘called John Scott Acreknow’ (to distinguish him from other Johns) when his son William was baptised in Hawick in 1711. The witnesses were William Gledstains and Alexander Hislop, both tailors in Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) described as a skinner in Hawick when his son William became an apprentice baxter in Edinburgh in 1717. He may be related to the earlier John of Westport (given the name and trade coincidence). He may be the same John as the glover. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in fahness’ (i.e. Falnash) in Cavers Parish in 1716 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear how he was related to Scotts in Roberton or at Falnash (e.g. the earlier John in Falnash, who died in 1710). John of Davington (1680–c.1710) eldest son of Francis of Davington. Dying without children, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. John (17th/18th C.) younger son of Scott of Bonchester (probably Walter), he is possibly the same man as John of Ashtrees. He took part in the 1715 rebellion, along with William Kerr of Abbotsrule. He was banished as a result of this. A story (recounted by Walter Deans in 1887) was told of his time in the colonies, labouring at a government building, when the Governor’s new wife recognised him, saying ‘That stane wad row easier doon Bunestir Hill, than up there’, whereon he recognised her as a local woman of lowly birth who had once been whipped through the streets of Hawick! Keeping quiet about this, his conditions were improved and he was later sent back on a ship to Britain, but lived and died on Jersey rather than in Rulewater. George Tancred states that in 1740 he was father of a girl aged 8 and a boy aged 5. He was probably nephew of George (son of Thomas in Bonchester), who was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of Francis. He also appears to have served as a Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1678 he paid the land tax of more than £800 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gilmanscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (i.e. his son John also served, although after this it is unclear whether he or his son are being described). It was his son John (and not him) who married Margaret, daughter of John of Woll. It is unclear who he married. Michael, son of John ‘of Gilmingscleugh’, recorded in a deed in 1663 and Robert, son of John ‘of Gilmanscleuch’, recorded in a deed of 1673, were probably his sons. John (d.bef. 1710) 2nd son of John of Woll and grandson of Sir William of Harden. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter, Agnes (although this could be confusion with John of Gilmanscleuch). He died before having male heirs, however. John (17th C.) married Margaret Henderson in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Ashirk Parish in 1689, with witnesses Thomas Wallace and Thomas Scott (who may have been related). John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of John, he was described as ‘younger of Gilmanscleuch’ in the period 1685–90 when they both served the county of Selkirkshire. In 1689 he was appointed as an officer in the local Militia. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gilmenscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire. He was still ‘younger off Gillmenschuch’ in 1693 when a daughter of his was baptised. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. In 1707 he was involved in a bond with Francis Scott of Bailiele and Robert Scott ‘in Overdelorain’. Sometime before 1712 he lost his estates because of debts, including Gilmanscleuch, which went to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. About 1728 he was appointed Surveyor of Roads. He married Margaret Scott, daughter of John of Woll (perhaps in Ashkirk in 1722), and their daughter Agnes was baptised in Ashkirk Parish, with witnesses John of Woll and George Currer. His son was probably William, last to be called ‘of Gilmanscleuch’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as tenant in Branxholme in 1702, 1703, 1709 and 1713. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas ‘hutson’ in 1702, for Walter Scott, herd in Branxholme Town in 1703, for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for carrier Robert in Branxholme Town (along with William in Branxholme Town) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson in 1701 and their children included William (b.1702), with witnesses James Ogilvie and William Scott, both also in Branxholme. He may be the same John who was at Branxholme Mains in the 1690s. His son-in-law was William Scott, who had a son Robert baptised in 1709; presumably this means he had a daughter in about the 1680s. John of Gorrenberry (d.bef. 1729) son of Francis. In 1691 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He took the money from the Orrock Bequest and paid interest to the Hawick heritors in the early 18th century. He must be the owner of ‘Goranberries Hous’ in either Cavers or Kirkton Parish, which was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694; it is not stated where his house was, but it seems likely to have been at Adderstone. He was ‘of Gorrenberrie’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He appears to have have held lands in Kirkton Parish, since his servant William Lorraine was resident in that parish when he is recorded marrying in 1707; but since William was married in Edinburgh it suggests he also had a house there. He is probably the Laird of Gorrenberry who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1722 there is record of a payment made to the Burgh for the use of the bell for a burial relating to him. In 1723 he was mentioned in the Hawick Session book for his interest (presumably meaning return on his money) in ‘ye building of ye Schoolhouse for ye Grammar School’. In 1724 there was again deliberation about ‘the affair of the Money in Gorrenberrie’s hands for a Schol-house and Schoolmaster’s house’. He married a daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, possibly Cecily. His children included: John (b.1698); Charles (b.1700), baptised in Hawick; Francis, who succeeded; James (b.1703), baptised; Ann, who was the 3rd wife of Walter Scott of Harden; another daughter who may have married Douglas of Cavers; and another daughter, probably Margaret, who married John Elliot of Whitaugh. The witnesses in 1703 were William Kerr of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law) and Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw. He may be the John of Gorrenberry who married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1716 (as her second husband). The witnesses in 1698 were ‘Mr’ Alexander Riddell and James Heatley and in 1700 were William Kerr of Abbotrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Adderstoneshiel. His son Walter was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.1707) may also have been his son. He may be the ‘servitor’ to John Tait in Adderstoneshiel whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch as owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 7 acres, 3 roods and 27 perches. He is surely the same as one of the contemporary Johns, but it is not clear which one. John ‘Young Sodger’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, presumably son of ‘Sodger’. In 1704 he was John ‘younger Soger’ when he (along with John ‘Whitegates’) witnessed a baptism for workman William Riddell. In 1707 he is ‘Souldier younger’ when he and William Aitken, younger, witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He is also mentioned in the parish records of 1714 answering ‘for his sin of adultery’: he is thus one of the earliest adulterers explicitly on record in Hawick Parish! He is described as ‘sojer’ and ‘younger of the Wester Kirk Style’. He was ordered to appear in sackcloth on the next Sunday, but failed to do so, appearing some months later in front of the Presbytery, along with his co-sinner where they were rebuked and referred back to the Session (presumably to pay a fine). In 1716 he is ‘Souldier’ when his son John was baptised, the mother being Isobel ‘Lithen’ and the record labelled ‘Adult’. In 1724 he was described as ‘distinctio causa, called the young Souldier’ when rebuked along with Thomas Weddell for breaking the Sabbath. It seems likely that his name was to distinguish him from John Scott, ‘Sodger’, who may of course have been his father. Walter Scott ‘Soldier’, recorded in the 1740s, may have been his son. John ‘Herd’ (17th/18th C.) listed as being ‘called herd’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘John Scott herd’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Margaret Purdom in Hawick in 1700, when he is recorded as ‘John Scott called Herd’. He is further recorded with the same nickname in 1714 when he received money from Hawick Session to help buy a horse ‘for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer’, the charity being repeated the following year for a similar purpose. He may have been Town Herd, or otherwise worked as a shepherd, or this could have been an unrelated nickname. John (17th/18th C.) tailor of Wilton Parish. He was living at Bothwickhaugh in 1709 when his son John was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1718). John (17th/18th C.) candlemaker, who was an Elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was directed to collect monies from ‘Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes and Burnflat’, suggesting he may have lived in this area. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Manuel in Hawick and in 1720 (along with glover John) others for merchant John Cavers and for merchant William Dickson. And in 1722 he was appointed to collect from ‘ye Weemle bridge to Wm. Dickson’s house’, although it is unclear to which bridge this referred. He witnessed further baptisms in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson, 1726 for John Fairgrieve and for gardener Walter in 1726 and in 1727 for William Ekron. He may also be the John who witnessed several baptisms in 1728. He married Janet Renwick and their children included Christian (b.1709) and Elspeth (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John whillans and merchant William Dickson. Probably the same candlemaker secondly married Margaret Clerk and had children Margaret (b.1714), Jane (b.1717), James (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Christian (again, b.1722), John (b.1725) and Helen (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1714 were Bailie Walter Elliot and William Hodge and in 1720 were Walter Purdon and Francis Ruecastle. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk (distinct from the candlemaker). He lived at Branxholme, and may have been related to William, ‘elder in Branxholm-toun’; the 2 were charged with collecting monies from the Branxholme area in 1717. He may also be the ‘James’ (perhaps a transcription error) mentioned as being one of the aged elders in 1718.

John (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick who was admitted as a Burgess in 1692. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms for James Grieve (from Wilton) in Hawick in 1701 and for James Henderson in Weensland in 1709. He was listed as a smith and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed baptisms in 1711 (along with Francis Gledstains) for carrier William Rae, in 1712 for William Sanderson (tenant in Hawick), in 1718 for Robert Scott, ‘Wyndhead’, in 1723 (along with John Chisholme, ‘Laird’) for gardener John Tait and for waulker William Hood, and in 1725 for workman William Henderson. He is probably the John ‘smith in ye Wynd’ who witnessed a baptism (along with Francis Gledstains) for weaver Walter White in 1718, and the John who witnessed a baptism for the same man in 1731. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme ‘Laird’. He could be the John who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He married Jean ‘Bettie’ (i.e. Beatie) (from Westerkirk) in Hawick in 1703, with children including: William (b.1704); Margaret (b.1708); Robert (b.1716); and Jean (b.1718). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Wilson and merchant Walter Oliver, in 1708 were merchant Walter Wilson, James Falsyde and John Shiel and in 1716 were wright Francis Gledstains and merchant James Simpson. In 1721 probably the same smith married Elspeth ‘Red’ (probably Reid), who was widow of George Hardie. In 1722 he is recorded as being paid 12 shillings ‘for yell [ale] when the ded bell was mended’. In 1723, along with another smith, James Beattie, he was asked to explain himself to the Hawick Session about ‘entertaining all the night in his house Janet Andison’ who was involved in a ‘scandal’ in Ettrick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) son of Robert in Skelfhill. In Hawick Parish in 1700 he married Margaret Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘John Scot at ye port’ in 1709 when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were weavers John Swan and John Swan (suggesting that he was probably also a weaver and from the West-end). He was probably related to the West Port Scotts. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker. In 1709 his daughter Anna was baptised, with witnesses Bailies Robert Hardie and James Burn, as well as ‘bailiffs’ William Laing and Walter Elliot. There are several other children who could be his. John (c.1678–1754/5) shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He married Jean Goodfellow, probably daughter of Archibald from the Newcastile area, whose brother William farmed nearby; she died in 1783, aged 93. He had sons Thomas (1713/4–42), Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw) and William (‘the Auld Mason’). John of Weens (d.1727) probably descended from Andrew of Weens. He was one of the last Scott owners of Weens estate. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, for ‘Weymes’, valued at £200. He was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He is also recorded in a bond of 1682. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for having 3 hearths at Weens. He is listed as John ‘of Weens’ when he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He may have married a daughter of Rev. James Ainslie of Minto. His son was also called John. In 1722 he and his son made an arrangement with Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, whereby they gave up their pasturage rights to Feu-Rule Common in exchange for 1/5th of the land of the Common (now Hallrule farm). He was probably the Laird of Weens for whose burial the funeral bells were rung in Hawick in 1727. In 1729 his daughter Betsy married Sam Oliver, school-master at Hobkirk. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. In 1715 he married Euphen, daughter of Robert Riddell. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); and John (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Riddell and Walter Nixon. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Bell in Ashkirk in 1723. Perhaps he is the same John who earlier married Marion Bell. John (17th/18th C.) millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. He appears to be distinct from the tenant there of the same name, but may have been related. He married Elizabeth (or 'Bessie') Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The same couple appear to have had a daughter Helen baptised in Wilton in 1728. The witnesses in 1725 were 2 William Riddells in Allanhaugh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas (b.1715) was baptised in Ashkirk in 1715. The mother was Helen Laidlaw (presumably from Ashkirk) and the couple were married earlier that same year, although the child was ‘begotten in fornicatione’. John (17th/18th C.) Beadle of Hawick Kirk in the early part of the 18th century. He was son of Walter, who died in 1717, and whom he replaced. In 1718 he was already ‘beddell’ when he witnessed baptisms for William Reid, tenant in Rauknoke, for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh and for John Napier. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Langlands. In 1720 he was witness to a baptism for a posthumously born child, another 2 for ‘Fornicators’. In 1720 he was rebuked for taking several days to return from Selkirk Fair, missing the Sabbath in Hawick. In 1723 he was witness for the baptisms of 2 illegitimate children and he witnessed other baptisms in 1724 and 1725. Also in 1724 he was severely rebuked for drunkenness, ‘(as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink’ and unable to bring another person before the Session for the same crime. After much debate he submitted to the censure of the Session, was rebuked before the congregation, and kept his job. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield. He was witness to a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. John ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Henderson and their children included: Robert (b.1721); and Charles (b.1724); and Robert (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were Benjamin Thomson and Patrick Angus and he may be described as a weaver (although it is hard to read). Sir John of Ancrum (d.1746) son of Sir Patrick, he was the 3rd Baronet. He was younger in 1727 when listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton (his father-in-law). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford for John Scott of Belford. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of William Nisbet of Dirleton and she died in 1738. His children included: Patrick (d.1742), who was an army officer and died before his father; Sir William, who succeeded: John of Craigintinnie (b.1729), who also took the surname Nisbet, and whose son John became 5th Baronet of Ancrum; Patrick; Walter (b.1733); Margaret; and Christian (1730–88). John of Harden (d.1734) younger son of Gideon. He succeeded to Harden in 1720, after the death of his brother Walter, becoming 9th Laird. He was probably a minor when he inherited the lands, since they were run by curators until 1723. About 1724–26 there were legal proceedings over claims on part of the Harden estates by his former ‘tutors and curators’, Walter of Whitfield, William of Thirlestane and Walter of Woll. He married Jean Erskine, daughter of Alexander, 4th Earl of Kellie. They had daughters: Anne, who married Thomas Shairp of Houston; and Mary Lilias (said to be a great beauty). A document of 1726 disposes Harden House as jointly owned with his wife. Dying without male issue, the estate went to his uncle Walter (of Whitfield), second son of the Earl of Tarras. John of Whitslade (d.bef. 1727) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded to the family estates after the death of his brother Thomas. He thus became the 8th and last Laird. He sold off the Whitslade estate about 1722 (having had the lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714), it having been in the family for around 6 generations. At that point the estate included Castleside, the Redfordgreens, Ashkirk farm, Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Broadlee. He leased the lands of Harden Mains for 2 years in 1723, leading to legal disputes involving his brother Walter with Walter of Whitfield after his death. He died unmarried, ending this branch of the family. He was said to have been 14th in descent from the Baron of Buccleuch. Thus the direct representation of the Synton branch passed to the Scotts of Todrig. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish.
He was recorded at ‘Bridihall’ (i.e. Brieryhill) in 1724. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1717), Agnes (b.1719), Helen (b.1722), Helen (again, b.1724) and Robert (b.1726). The witnesses in 1724 were David Taylor and John Miller. He is probably the John who on the same day in 1724 (along with David Taylor) witnessed a baptism for John Miller.

John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Thomson (‘sometimes tenent in Whitchesters’). Their children included: Margaret (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1729). The witnesses in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Scott. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Scott and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1724); and Mary (b.1726). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Scott (perhaps in 1718, with no wife’s name given in the record) and their children included: James (b.1719); Rachel (b.1723); William (b.1728); and Elizabeth (b.1731). Thomas (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk, with no mother’s name given, may also be his child. It is possible he is the same man as the John whose wife was Elspeth Scott. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Hawick Shiel in 1721 and is ‘coater in Fennick’ in 1723. He married Janet Henry. They had a son William baptised in 1721, on the same day as a child of another John (with the same witnesses), who was recorded as tenant in Hawickshiel. They also had an unnamed son in 1723. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1724 he was rebuked for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Anna, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand, widow of John Watson (who had been Clerk to the Regality in Hawick). They were married in Hawick by John Middleton, with witnesses Andrew Turnbull (mason) and Walter Gledstains (lawyer); the inclusion of a Gledstains suggests they may have been adherents of the Episcopal church. They had a child John (b.1728). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Kershope on Yarrow. In 1752 he was deceased when his only daughter Jean had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Priesthaugh in 1726 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Doecluech in 1726 and 1729. His children included: Jane (b.1726); and John (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Outerside in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Deamburnhaugh in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There are several potential marriages and many children who could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at at Mains in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Todshaw in 1725 when his son William was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Kirktone. His snuff box is in the Museum, labelled ‘John Scott in Kirkton – his box 1735’. It is unclear who he was. John (18th C.) recorded at Branhbolme in 1734 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Presumably his family or his wife came from the Borthwick valley. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Bessy Goodfellow. Their son John was baptised in 1738, with witnesses John Telfer, ‘Kirk Officer’ and William Oliver, tailor. He may be the same as the earlier tenant in Hawick Shiel of the same name (if he married twice). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Crawford and their children included: Agnes (b.1731); Janet (b.1733); and George (b.1735). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Magdalene Bowie in 1739 and their son John was baptised in 1741. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. Perhaps the same weaver witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Reid, tenant in Raeknowe and for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill, and in 1726 for weaver Walter. In 1719 he was separately recorded as weaver and as Beadle; if this was not an error, then he is the same John as the Beadle. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Kay in 1739. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was possibly 3rd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester and Jane Turnbull; however, it is also suggested that that John was sent to the plantations after the 1715 rebellion (and hence was a different man). He was factor to Capt. John Rutherford of Edgerston. He married Helen, daughter of Thomas Oliver of Ashtrees. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. These would later pass to his grandnephew Dr. James Robson-Scott. His children included: Adam, who became Laird of Ashtrees; and Thomas, who became Laird of Peel and married Esther Turnbull. John of Lees (18th C.). A 1738 letter exists in the National Archive, sent from him in Midhurst, Sussex to Mrs. Margaret Scott of Horsleyhill, mentioning that he intends to deliver an Episcopal sermon at Hassendean Kirk (long ruined by then) and mentions (possibly Alexander) Scott of Burnhead. He was surely related to the Scotts of Burnhead. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew, who was therefore probably related. He was probably the junior of ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’ who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. In 1742 he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Thomas (who was probably related) and for flesher William Renwick. In 1743 he witnessed baptisms for carrier John Pott, for tobacconist William Sadderl, tailor Walter Rae, Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and Robert Fowler in Sea Croft. In 1744 he witnessed a further baptism for shoemaker Thomas, while he and Thomas together witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell ‘at Park’. He also witnessed 3 baptisms in 1745, one for the Town Piper William Brown, another for William Wilson ‘messanger’ and the last for carrier John Pott, along with shoemaker Thomas. His name is given first and hence Thomas was probably his son or younger brother. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Waugh and his wife Margaret Scott (who was possibly related to him) in 1757. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for Francis Gledstains in 1725. He may also be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver John Elder in 1760 and for weaver Robert Stevenson in 1762. All of these witnessings suggest that he was an elder of the Kirk. He may be the shoemaker who married Henrietta Hope in Hawick in 1724. He was probably related to other shoemaking Scotts (e.g. the earlier and later Johns). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Walter (b.1731) and Walter (again, b.1735). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Appletreehall in 1744. He married Magdalene Scott and their children included: Robert (b.1740) and John (b.1741), baptised in Ashkirk; and Walter (b.1744), baptised in 1744. The witnesses in 1744 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. He may be the same as the John who married Magdalene Bowie in Ashkirk in 1739. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son was baptised in 1743. John (18th C.) recorded in 1740 as ‘Hyn at Crumhaugh’. He married Grizel Elliot in 1730 and their children included William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were Rev. James Mason of St. Boswell’s and Grammar Schoolmaster James Anderson; it is unclear what the connection was. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Elliot and their son Robert was baptised in 1728. It is possible that theirs was the marriage recorded in 1722 (with no wife’s name listed). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1742 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be related to the later Scotts who were at Broadlee Burnfoot and Broadleeshiel. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ashybank in 1742 and as herd at Ashybank in 1749. His children included Robert (b.1742) and Adam (b.1749). Other children baptised in Cavers Parish around the same time are probably his. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Giddenscleuch in 1749. He married Margaret Riddle and their children included John (b.1749). He may have been related to David, who was at Giddenscleuch a little earlier. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at East Highchesters in 1742 when his daughter Christian was baptised. It is possible this is the same man as the tenant of Highchesters Mill, if he had an earlier marriage. He may be the same John who was at Whithope in 1735 when his son John was baptised. There were several other children baptised in Roberton who could also be his. John (18th C.) recorded being at Winnington Rig in 1746. He was a witness in Hawick for merchant Gideon and his wife Sussana Scott. He may have been related to one member of this couple. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 (along with another John, shoemaker) and another in 1746 for carrier James Oliver. John of Belford (18th C.) son of Charles and grandson of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. His mother was Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. In 1738 he tried to claim the Lordship, after the death of his distant relative, Alexander, 6th Lord Rutherford. He supported the Jacobites in 1745, meeting Charles at Kelso. As a result of this support he later lost his estate, and was never able to claim the peerage. He paid the window tax for Belford (in Morebattle Parish) in the period 1748–59. However, it is possible he was the John ‘of Palacehill’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Marion, daughter of Alexander Baillie from Ashiestiel. They had 5 daughters, the eldest being Agnes, who married Thomas Cockburn of Rowchester (in Berwickshire). John (18th C.) recorded as a ‘wool comber’ in 1730 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick. In 1735 he was recorded receiving a Burgess ticket gratis. It is unclear why this happened, but perhaps he had been brought in from outside Hawick to stimulate the manufacturing of yarn. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (d.bef. 1777) son of John of Weens. He is probably the ‘younger of Weens in ye parish of Hopkirk’ recorded in 1712 when his daughter Janet ‘begoten in ye aforesd parish in fornication’ was baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert Hardie and John Craw (‘fowler’ in Branxholme Town). In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgell and Jean Elliot of Harwood. In 1733 he married Marion (or ‘Mary’), 3rd daughter of William Elliot of Harwood. In 1744 he sold the lands of Weens to John Armstrong with the consent of his wife. Marion was a widow in 1777 when she had a discharge to her brother Henry. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738 (when he is recorded being ‘of Weens’). Other children baptised there who may have been his included Elizabeth (b.1734), Margaret (b.1736), Henry (b.1739), Christian (b.1741), an unnamed son (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). John (18th C.) married Ann Thorbrand in Ashkirk in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Chisholme and their children included: Thomas (b.1748); Isabel (b.1749); John (b.1751); Janet (b.1754); Thomas (again, b.1757); and Sarah (b.1759). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Crawhill in 1751, 1759 and 1764. He married Helen Scott in 1750 (with a marriage of a couple having the same names also recorded in 1744) and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1750); Susanna (b.1751); James (b.1753); Elizabeth (b.1755); John (b.1757); Gideon (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); John (b.1762); Helen (b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Margaret (b.1768); John (b.1771); and Christian (b.1773). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and John Scott, in 1759 were Thomas and Robert Scott (who are likely to have been related to him and his wife) and in 1764 were John Scott and John Hart. John (18th C.) mason in Ashkirk. He married Helen Tait in 1761 and their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); Walter (b.1767); Alexander (b.1769); Elspeth (b.1772); John (b.1775); Alexander (again, b.1777); and Jean (b.1779). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1764. He married Jean Douglas and their children included: Mary (b.1760); Esther (b.1762); Marjory (b.1764); William (b.1767); Robert (b.1769); Agnes (b.1772); and Jean (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Easton and Thomas Reid. John (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘Herd’ in 1767 (probably his occupation, but it might instead have been a nickname). He married Helen Henry in Ashkirk in 1757 and their children included Alexander (b.1767). The witnesses in 1767 were John Rieve and Thomas Laidlaw. He was already deceased in 1781 when the death of his wife was recorded in Hawick. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766 he married Ephran Ruecastle. Their children included: John (b.1767); Walter (b.1768); John (again, b.1770); and Elizabeth (b.1771). John (18th C.) tenant in Highchesters Mill. He married Beatrix Thomson in 1756 and she died in 1797, aged 66. Their children included Archibald (b.1756), William (b.1762), Beatrix (b.1764), John (b.1777) and Mary (b.1772). Other children baptised in Robertson Parish that may have been his include Margaret (b.1760) and Nelly (b.1768). He died at the age of 50 (although not in 1748, as reported). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. He may have been related to the Robert who was at Highchesters Mill in the 1740s. John (d.bef. 1763) younger son of Robert of Davington, brother of James and William. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, although his branch failed in the male line. He was an attorney in Canonbie. He married Isobel, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children included: Robert, in the Seaforth Regiment in the American War, and also in India; James, moved to Canonbie; William, married Ann Little and killed in a quarry accident; John, also at Canonbie; probably Francis; Jane; and Margaret. John (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill, probably the son of John, born in 1725. He married Mary Dodds in 1755 and they had an unnamed child in 1758. John of Gorrenberry (d.1785) son of Charles of Gorrenberry. He was a doctor in the London area. He was recorded as a doctor on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jean Fox, who secondly married Charles Fox of Chacombe and died in 1820. Their children included: Francis (b.1768), who died in infancy; and Charles, M.D. (d.1794). The family are buried in Bromley, Kent. John (18th C.) descended from the Scotts of Synton, through millers at Boosmill on Ale Water, who also farmed at Dimpleknowe, and then moved to a mill on Rule Water. However, Keith Scott also suggests he was a son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and at Roughheugh. He himself became miller at Hummelknowes, and later married the widow Henderson, tenant of the mill. In 1755 he was recorded as miller at Hummelknowes, with wife Jane Scott. He was also recorded at Hummelknowes Mill in 1761. Children, baptised in Cavers, who were probably his include: Margaret (b.1751); George (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); and John (b.1761), who was also tenant in Hummelknowes. It is unclear if the William of Hummelknowes who paid the window tax in 1748 is an error for his name or was perhaps a relative. John (18th C.) Town Treasurer listed in 1734. He may be the same as Bailie John or one of the other contemporary men with the same name. In 1734 there is a record in the Treasurer’s book that he paid his son for joinery work on the lofts of St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1737 the Treasurer’s book records money ‘paid to my wife when ye workmen went to see where ye brige should be’; this suggests he may have been involved with the building of Teviot Brig, and may be the same man as Bailie John. Bailie John (18th C.) recorded in 1728 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Oliver and for Robert Hardie and in 1729 when he witnessed a baptism for writer Thoma Watson. He is also recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott ‘junior surgeon’. He could also be the John who witnessed the wedding in Edinburgh for the same Walter, and hence was probably related to him. Perhaps the same ‘late Bailie’ John witnessed a baptism for merchant Andrew Riddell in Hawick in 1738 (when another John appears to have been Bailie). He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Newton in 1733. He married Margaret Dryden in 1731 and their children included: Margaret (b.1733); and Jean (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 were Robert and William (who were probably related to him). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself when his son Hugh was baptised in 1737 and when his son Charles was baptised in 1742. He may be the weaver John who was in Cavers in 1744 when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) shepherd at Dryden. He was probably related to the John, shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot, recorded in 1694. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and John (b.1749), born in Cavers Parish. The witnesses in 1739 were Robert Elliot of Rigg and Walter Scott at Commonside. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1736. Bailie John (18th C.) referred to as ‘younger’ when Bailie in the 1730s (suggesting that he may have been son of another John). He was Magistrate in 1738, when plans were laid for building Teviot Bridge. Also in 1738 he witnessed a baptism of James Weir (who was Town Clerk). Along with William Tudhope he arranged for the bond to pay for construction of the bridge. He was Bailie along with James Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He may be the ex-Bailie John who, along with Thomas Turnbull and Rev. Partick Cunningham, sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1740s. He was listed as ‘late Baillie’ when he witnessed baptisms for writer James Winthrope in 1740, Walter Scott of Newton and merchant Andrew Riddell in 1743, mason Andrew Wilson in 1744 and writer James Weir in 1745. He was recorded in 1747 when the tradesmen were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after taking down the kirk bell. He may be the Bailie John who witnessed a baptism in 1757 and another in 1759 for tailor James Gledstains. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He may be the John who was still a Bailie in the 1760s. He could be the Bailie James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms for Richard Purdon and Jane Scott (perhaps his daughter) in 1762, 1764, 1766 an 1773; in 1762 the entry may say ‘skinner’ (but is hard to read). He may be the tailor who witnessed a baptism for William (perhaps a relative) in 1766 and who also hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. He is probably the Bailie John who, along with Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, witnessed a baptism for the younger Thomas Turnbull in 1763. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1746 he was living at Galalaw. His married Helen Easton in 1746. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746, when the witnesses were John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish.
In 1744 and 1747 he was living at Netherhall. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1733 and their children included: John (b.1739); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and Robert (b.1750). The witnesses in 1744 were 2 James Scotts and in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. John (18th C.) recorded in Deanbrae in 1759 when he hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John younger of Synont (d.bef. 1765) eldest son of Alexander of Synont. In 1735 he married Mary, only daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre (and grand-daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk). However, he died before his father, his only son Alexander succeeding to the Synont estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairceeding to the Synton estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairbairn, schoolmaster at Galashiels; she died in 1815. John (b.c.1749) son of James and Margaret Legerwood. He was a ‘tacksman’ at Roughleugh in Wilton Parish. John (1749–1824) miller in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. He is probably the John, miller in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, 1758–c.92) Thomson in 1767, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and St. Boswell’s parishes; however, another marriage of the same couple appears to be recorded in Hawick in 1770. Their children included: James (b.1771); Dr. William (1773–1884), surgeon who made his fortune in the West Indies; James (b.1776); Ann (1778–1852), who married miller John White; Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1782); Beatrice (b.1784); Elizabeth (1786–1853), who married Thomas Wemyss; Robert (b.1789); and Jane (b.1790). The witnesses in 1773 were James Tudhope and James Turnbull, in 1776 were Walter Purdom and Robert Thomson, in 1778 were William ‘Masen’ and Walter Purdom, in 1784 were stockmaker William Thomson and Session Clerk James Inglis, and in 1789 were John Henderson and another John Scott. An unnamed child of his died on the last day of 1790 (at the same time as the child of under-miller Adam Jardine, suggesting there was perhaps some disease in the household). Probably the same John married Ann Boyle in 1795 (recorded in both Hawick and Kelso Parishes) and in 1796 made an application to the Barons at the Exchequer Chambers in Edinburgh in respect of the estate of his deceased wife. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Aitken and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children (all baptised in Hawick Parish) were: William (b.1757); John (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Isobel (b.1761); Beatrice (b.1763); Jane (b.1765). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Thomas Laidlaw and weaver Charles Miller, and in 1765 were Walter Burn and Archibald Henderson. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1751 and 1758. He married Margaret Henderson in 1751 and their children included: John (b.1751); John (again, b.1752); James (b.1754); Helen (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Thomas (b.1762); and James (b.1764). Scott and in 1758 were Robert Ormiston and George Scott. John (18th C.) married Martha Rae in Ashkirk in 1759. John of Gala (1732–85) son of Hugh, he was 6th Laird. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’). He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants in the period 1778–79. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, only daughter of George McDougall of Makerstoun. Their children were: Elizabeth; Col. Hugh, who succeeded; Barbara (1764–1844); Adm. Sir George (1769–1841); and Col. John (1774–1832), whose eldest daughter Maria Sarah Makdougall inherited Makerstoun. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1762 and Boonraw in 1764 and 1767. In 1760 he married Margaret Lorraine, who was from Yarrow. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); twins William and John (b.1764); Helen (b.1767); and Janet (b.1768). The witnesses in 1762 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott and in 1764 were Robert and Walter Ormiston (probably both in Boonraw). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1769), James (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), John (b.1783) and Rachel (b.1786). The witnesses in 1771 were Robert and James Harkness. The witnesses in 1783 and 1786 were the whole congregation. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1780. He married Betty Martin in 1779 and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1781); Robert (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); Margaret (b.1791); Andrew (b.1797); and Thomas (b.1798). The witnesses in 1780 were James Martin and James Scott (probably related to his wife and him). It is possible he was the weaver John whose child’s burial is recorded in 1799. John (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. John John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1786. He married Isabel Turnbull and their children included: Mary (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); and Elizabeth (b.1788). Given the forename coincidence he may also have been father of Charles (b.1783), who emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1780 and 1785 when his children Nelly and Ann were baptised. Probably the same John was at Harden in 1788 and 1789 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. There are several marriages in Robertson around this time that could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He is surely related to the cooper James, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. Perhaps he is the same as the John who married Jane Irvine and was living at Muselee in 1792. John (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1780. Their children included Isabel (b.1782). John (18th C.) shepherd in Hobkirk Parish. He married Isabel Blaikie and their son Adam (who was also a shepherd) was baptised in 1782. Several other children baptised in Hobkirk around this time may also have been his. John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Borthwickbrae according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1790–91. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Irvine in Roberton in 1781. Their children included Margaret (b.1792), baptised in Robertson; and Mary (b.1799), baptised in Ettrick Parish. John (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. His daughter Sarah died in 1798. John ‘Gover’ (d. bef. 1809) Hawick resident whose wife Betty Cunningham died in 1795. The death of his daughter Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be related to the later ‘Gover’. John (18th C.) resident of Weens in 1790 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Sir John of Ancrum (1757–1812) son of John, who was 3rd son of Sir John, 3rd Baronet of Ancrum. He was born at Longnewton. His father succeeded to Craignintinnie in right of his mother, taking the additional surname of Nisbet. He became the 5th Baronet of Ancrum, succeeding his uncle Sir William. He was a Cornet with the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, then with the Horse Grenadiers and 17th Guards, then with the Horse Grenadiers and 17th Foot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to 2 copies of Burns ‘Edinburgh Edition’ in 1787. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 (when described as ‘once Aide-de-camp to the late General Mackay, Commander-in-Chief, but now not employed. At present unfit for business’. In 1794 he was appointed Major-Commandant with the Roxburgh Cavalry, later being promoted to Colonel and travelling with them to Ireland. He (as well as his mother, Mrs. Scott Nisbet) paid tax for having both male and female servants in the period 1778–91, and just himself from 1792–97. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the period 1792–98 was taxed for owning a carriage. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1799 he was on the Lieutenancy Committee in Roxburghshire. He was recorded as owner of an estate in Ancrum Parish valued at more than £2000 in 1788 and 1811. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810, and presented them with a snuff mull, which was used at dinners long afterwards. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1792 he married Harriet, daughter of William Grahame of Gartmore. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; Harriet, who married George Oldmixon; Elizabeth, who married Col. de Fevellis; Margaret; and Lucy. He was buried in Old Greyfriars in Edinburgh. John, W.S. of Midgehope (1757–1803) 3rd son of William of Woll and brother of Charles. He was apprentice to lawyer Cornelius Elliot. In 1780 he received the superiority of lands in Merton from Walter Scott of Harden, but renounced them again in 1791. He also acquired the estate of Glenormiston in Peeblesshire. He was apprenticed to Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and became Writer to the Signet in 1784. In 1782 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Caverhill. His children were: William of Woll; James; Wm. of Woll; and James. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, and described as being a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch, but having his ‘real vote from his father’. Lieut. John of Synton (d.1796) only son of Alexander. He is probably the John of Synton who paid the land tax in 1785 for Synton and Synton Mill. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of Satchells (valued at £200). He was Lieutenant in the 57th Regiment and died in Grenada. He left no male heirs, but had 2 surviving sisters Catherine and Helen, the first of whom inherited the Synton estate. John of Horsley-hill, see Capt. Francis James of Horsley-hill. John (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1779 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same John was a labourer in Denholm when his son Thomas was baptised in 1781. John (18th C.) recorded in Moss Paul in 1779 and 1782 and as innkeeper there in (probably) 1788. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1779); James (b.1782); and John (b.1788). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1780 and 1782 when his children Christian and Isabel were baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Cavers itself in 1787 when his son Paul was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded as miller in Denholm in 1789 and 1795 when his sons, both called Robert, were baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Johns, and was probably related to other Scott millers. John (18th C.) listed in the 1785–91 cart tax records as ‘John Scott Post’ and ‘John Scott the Post’, suggesting that he was deliverer of mail at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and their children included Benjamin (b.1769). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1771. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. He witnessed a baptism in 1775 for stocking-maker James Haldane. He is recorded as a shoemaker when his son Thomas died in 1787 and when his daughter Peggy died in 1794. He could be the John who married Elizabeth Aitken, with children including Thomas (b.1782), Mary (b.1784), Margaret (b.1786) and Henrietta (b.1792). The witnesses in 1792 were Peter Young and Thomas Rae. John (18th C.) described as ‘analysts of Valuation Books’. He wrote an analysis of the land valuations of Selkirkshire for the Commissioners of Supply for that county in 1785 and another for Roxburghshire in 1788. These contain valuable details about how lands had changed hands between the 1643 and 1678 valuations, and then continuing through the 18th century. He may have worked in Edinburgh, but is seems fairly likely that he was associated with one of the local Scott families. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Weensland Mill. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Mains, which he leased from Walter Scott of Harden in 1770 for 7 years. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also owned 4 farm horses there in 1797. Additionally he may be the John recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf. In 1811 it is recorded that he had feued the part of Lilliesleaf Common known as Stotfield and Nol Lair from William Riddell of Camieston. It is possible he is the same as John of Synton. It may be his son George who is recorded on the Militia ballot list in 1799. John (d.bef. 1787) resident of Hawick Parish. He was already deceased when the death of his wife Betty Lunn is recorded. John (d.1809) tailor in Hawick. He was brother of Walter, wright, who was already deceased in 1809. He could be the tailor whose son John died in 1777. It is possible he was the ‘John Wyndhead’ whose son Walter the tailor died in 1810. John (1749/50–1828) Schoolmaster in Ancrum. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, suggesting that he had a connection to Hawick. His son George was on the Militia list for Ancrum in about 1800. The schoolmaster at Ancrum from 1828 was also John, and hence perhaps his son. John (18th/19th C.) Schoolmaster at Lessuden. In 1792 he married Betty Oliver in Cavers Parish. It is possible he is the same man as the schoolmaster in Ancrum. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Nanny (b.1794); John (b.1796); and Agnes (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Hislop in Hawick Parish in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whithope Mill (on the Borthwick), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He may have been related to Adam, who farmed Whithope at the same time and George, who was referred to in 1808 when his son George died. John (b.c.1760) son of George, tenant in Falla. His grandfather was tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He married his cousin Euphemia, daughter of Robert Scott, also miller at Roughheugh Mill. Their children were: Robert; George; John; Ann, who married D. Clarke; and Betsy. They may all have died without issue. He may be the ‘John Scott Milns’ who is recorded as owner of 3 horses in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably also the John ‘in Hawick Mill’ recorded in the 1810 inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’. He is probably also the John of Hawick Mill whose wife’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. John (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, he married Agnes Beattie in Roberton Parish in 1789. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1798), baptised in Ettrick; and Walter (b.1802), Isabel (b.1803) and Robert (b.1806), baptised in Yarrow. In 1841 his widow is recorded at Catslacknowe, with sons Archibald and Robert. John (1766–1850) son of Robert, who farmed at Boonraw. In 1796 he married Euphemia Elliot (also born in 1766), both being described as from Hawick Parish; both of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1850. Their children included: Robert, who also farmed at Boonraw; George, who married Mary Thompson and had 3 children, but died of smallpox while emigrating to America; William (b.1801), who became a doctor in Canada; and 3 children who died in 1809, Janet, Margaret and John. He and his wife (although her name is given as Elspeth) are recorded at East Boonraw in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Mein in Hawick Parish in 1796. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule. He is recorded in the Lieutenant Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. In 1799 he was listed on the Militia ballot in place of Richard Renwick, who had been declared unfit to serve; however, he paid £10 forfeit. John (b.c.1770s) son to James in Denholmhill, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother James was also listed. John (18th/19th C.) married Ann Oliver in 1798, both being from Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. Their son James was baptised in 1800. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret (or Peggy) Tait and their children included Agnes (b.1805), Margaret (b.1808), Isobel (b.1811), Mary (b.1814). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Blyth and their children included James (b.1805), Thomas (b.1807), Thomas (again, b.1809), George (b.1811), John (b.1813), Agnes (b.1813). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Hill and their children included George (b.1815), Agnes (b.1817), Janet (b.1818) and David (b.1821). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Ann Gedstains and their children included Ann (b.1816) and John (b.1818). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Hume and their children included Betty (b.1817).
daughters survived childhood. Their children included: John (b.1768); Walter (b.1769), who succeeded; William (b.1770); Agnes (b.1772), who married Adam Stavert of Hoscote; Francis (b.1773). Major in the army, killed in the Peninsular War; James (b.1775), who succeeded Walter as the last Laird; Elizabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1776), who was the 2nd wife of Gilbert Chisholme of that Ilk; William (b.1782); and Margaret (b.1783). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Agnes (b.1776). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton. In 1787 he married Janet Turnbull, from Hawick Parish. John (18th C.) recorded at Sandyhaugh in 1788 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (18th C.) resident in Wilton Parish, living at Priestrig in 1790. He married Margaret Reid and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1790. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); Margaret (again, b.1795); Christian (b.1798); and Robert (b.1799). John (b.c.1765) ploughman in Yarrow and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Helen (or ‘Nellie’) Scott and their children included: George (b.1792), who married Jean Stewart; John (b.1796), who married Christian Nichol; Margaret (b.1800), who married Robert Turnbull; Mary (b.1806), who married William Scott, Thatcher and farm-worker at Synton; Walter (b.1809); and William (b.1812), who married Jane Currie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Timbersidemill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed owning 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Easter Essenside on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was also the farmer at Easter Essenside listed in 1797 among men balloted to serve in the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the ‘J. Scott’ whose letter from ‘Askirkmill’ in 1791 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may be the John, married to Anne Scott, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included: Nelly (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); Charlotte (b.1796); Alexander (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); James (b.1802); John (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1805); and James (b.1807). John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick, son of George. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire among the men balloted to serve in the Militia (there is another entry for a wright of the same name, which may be a duplicate and a third entry for John, wright with William Rodger). In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. He was probably the son of wright George baptised in Hawick in 1776. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Susan Oliver and their children included Margaret Hume (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) cooper and wheelwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the wright in Lilliesleaf whose son William was baptised in 1789. Agnes (b.1791), John (b.1793), Helen (b.1795), Susan (b.1798) and James (b.1800) were probably also his children. John (b.1772) possibly son of James, who was tenant at Denholmhill, where he was later tenant himself. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Blyth and Isabel Reid, who was born at East Middle. Their children were: Isabell (b.1802); Elizabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1803); James (b.1805), who died in Australia; Thomas (1809–67), who may have died at sea; George (1811–96), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes (b.1813); and John (b.1813). They were baptised at the Burger Kirk in Hawick. He could be the John listed at Denholm Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. John (b.c.1770) farmer at Langbaurk. He is recorded there in 1841, along with John and Mary, probably his children. He was probably related to William, who was about the same age and also a farmer there. John (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (b.c.1775) local hosiery employer, known as ‘John the Turk’. The nickname may have already been in the family, but he was known for reducing wages, having labour organisers (including James Hogg) imprisoned, etc. There is a record of him receiving help from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for purchasing a ribbed stocking frame in 1798. His attempt to reduce the price of men’s stockings by 6 pence per dozen, through wage reductions, led to the first known strike of hosiery workers in 1817. He is listed as a manufacturer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and seems to have been at ‘Turk’s Close’, around No. 60 on the 1841 census (along with his wife Ann). He is probably the Hawick spinner of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1826 he received further help from the Board of Trustees for carding and spinning machinery. His house stood on the site of the Bridge Hotel. He married Ann Gledstains, last of her family in Hawick. He had a son John who died in 1819. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin’s House in 1797, along with William. They were surely related to the later farmer at Martin’s House, also called John. John (18th/19th C.) son of John. He took over from his father as tenant of Hummelknowes Mill. He is probably the John recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married a miss Deans and his children included John (also miller at Hummelknowes) and Walter (farmer at Hummelknowes). He died at Hummelknowes Mill. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr’. This separate piece of the former lands of Rev. Cunningham was valued at £10 19s; it seems likely to have been land near the modern Allars Crescent. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns, and perhaps related to Walter, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. John of Ashtrees (b.1762/3) born in Oxnam Parish, he was son of Adam and grandson of John. He was descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was farmer at Woodhouse. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as tenant of ‘Woodhouse &c.’ when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Woodhouse in 1797. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded as proprietor of ‘Ashtree, Woodhouse, Southdean’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and of ‘Ashtree, Woodhouse’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed prop.’ at Woodhouse, occupying 100 acres, with 550 acres of hill pasture and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Isabel Rae and among their children was Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron. In 1855 his executors sold the farm of Ashtrees to his cousin, Thomas Scott of Riccalton. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Minto-hill-end’ when he subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. John (b.c.1780) cabinet-maker who lived on the Mid Raw in 1841. His wife was Jane and their children included George, David, Janet, John and Helen. His daughter Agnes married carrier James Hill (ancestor of the Hawick Ball family). John (b.c.1781/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Lillieslie Parish. He was living at Riddell in 1841 and at Riddell West Lodge in 1851. His wife was Betty and their children included Walter, Agnes, Margaret and Ann. John (1784–1860) born at Gripknowe in Kirkton Parish, son of John and Helen Renwick. He was an agricultural labourer, moving to Melrose Parish. He lived at Shielshagha Cottage and also Abbey Street, where he served as Abbey Keeper. In 1815 in Ancrum he married Beatrice (1792–1836), daughter of William Boa and Beatrice Scott. Their children were: Rev. John D. (1817–95), who died at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada; Catherine (1821–99), who also emigrated to Canada; William T. (1828–95), lived in Bruce County, Ontario; James (1828–97), who died in Manitoba; Rev. Peter (1830–1908), also in Ontario; Robert (1832–1900), also Ontario. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. John of Riccalton (1785–1858) younger son of Thomas of Peel. He was tenant farmer at Letham, jointly with his brother Thomas. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was probably the John recorded at Letham among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was elected as an honorary member at the first meeting of the Jedforest Club, and arranged to have the club coats made out of Cheviot wool. In 1829 he bought Riccalton from the daughters of the Duke of Roxburgh, also purchasing the superiority. He then became an ordinary member of the Jedforest Club. In 1855 he bought Ashtrees from the trustees of John Scott, tenant of Woodhouses (and a distant relative). He died unmarried, leaving Ashtrees to his nephew, Dr. James Robson, and Riccalton to his nephew, John Elliot (2nd son of his sister Helen). He may be the Scott of Riccalton recorded as owner of Middles Knowes in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. John (b.1787/8) born in Southdean Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Hayknowe in 1841. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd at Eliotsfield and in 1861 at Wauchope Burn, along with his wife Margaret from Jedburgh. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1818 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1819/20), who married shepherd Alexander Burnet; Ann (b.c.1828); Adam (b.1829/30), shepherd at Shankendshiel; Agnes (b.c.1842); and Jessie (b.1836/7). John (b.1787/8) proprietor of Timpendale in the 19th century. He was listed there among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was farming 700 acres and employed 18 labourers. It is said that he and his sons were instrumental in changing the way farming was done locally, turning hill farms into half-arable farms. His wife was Agnes and their children included William (who succeeded to Timpendale) and George. John (b.1788/9) farmer at Longrow in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 260 acres there. His wife was Jane and their children included Archibald, Mary, Thomas, Jane, Elizabeth, Ann, Helen and John. John (b.1788/9) from Canonbie, he was an innkeeper in Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1841 he was farmer at Langrow and in 1851 was farming 260 acres there (‘worked by family’). He kept the Commercial Inn in the 1860s (the same as the Liddesdale Hotel on Douglas Square). His wife was Jane G. (from Newcastleton) and their children included: Archibald (b.c.1830); Hector (1831–2–1909); Mary (b.c.1833); Thomas (b.c.1834); Jane (1836/7–1908); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.c.1836); Ann (1839/40–88); Hannah (b.c.1838); Helen (1841/2–1919); and John (1842/3–1906). Some of the family are buried in Ettrick Cemetery. John Sibbald (1789–1864) eldest son of Henry, farmer at Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He was tenant at Over Deloraine. In 1822 he married Christian, daughter of Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope. Their children were: Henry Ale, tenant in Gilmanscleuch; Alexander, tenant in Ransaycleuch; Charles, tenant in Over Whitlaw; John, who succeeded his father in Deloraine; Arbuthnot; Agnes, who married James Gibson of Shaw; and Christian, who married T. Ballantyne of Whithope. Col. John of Woll (b.1790) youngest surviving son of Charles of Woll. He was ‘of Ravenswood’ before the death of his brother Charles Balfour in 1838, and the relinquishing of Woll by his nephew Charles Scott-Plummer. He thus gained Woll in 1839, and sold the estate in 1863 to a Mr. Ainslie. He was recorded at Woll in 1841, along with his wife, 2 daughters, a governess and 3 other domestic servants; he was then ‘late E. I. Compsys. Service Pen’. He married Clementina Marianne, daughter of Edward Shaw. They had 2 daughters: Clementina (b.1829), who married John Henry Durbin; and Elizabeth (b.1831), who died in 1883. John of Gala (1790–1840) only son of Col. Hugh, he was 9th Laird. He became one of Sir Walter Scott’s closest friends. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. In 1820 he married Magdalen, daughter of Sir Archibald Hope of Craighall and Pinkie. Their children were: Maj. Hugh, who succeeded; Capt. Archibald (1827–70), who died without issue; Elizabeth; and Isabella. John (b.1791/2) son of John, with his mother being a Deans. He was miller at Hummelknores Mill, like his father before him. He was recorded as miller at ‘Humbknores’ in 1851, with his brother Walter as farmer. He was still listed as miller there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was unmarried. Sir John of Ancrum (1798–1814) son of Sir John, he was 6th Baronet, but only briefly. He was born at Athlone, while his father was serving there with the Roxburgh Cavalry. He joined the Navy and died on board H.M.S. Rhine at age 16, having succeeded his father only 2 years earlier. However, he was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was succeeded by his brother William. John (b.1795) youngest son of William, farmer at Singlie, and Margaret Pott. He became a physician in Edinburgh and is referred to in glowing terms in Riddell-Carr’s ‘Border Memoirs’. He had one son, William Henry, also a physician, who died aged 24. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Aitchison and their children included: Sarah (b.1819); John (b.1821); Walter (b.1823); and William (b.1825). John (b.1796/7) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Nook Haugh and in 1851 and 1861 was a road contractor at Whinfield. He married Catherine (or Christine or ‘Christy’, b.1794/5) Nichol and their children included: Janet (b.1821); and John (b.1825), perhaps the shepherd at Bowknowe who was later a grocer in Selkirk. John (b.c.1795) farmer at Martin’s House, where he is recorded in 1841. He is surely related to William and John, who are recorded at Martin’s House in 1707. He married Isabel Michie in Cavers Parish in 1816. They had a large family of perhaps a dozen children, including Isobel (b.1817), Mina (b.1818), William (b.1820), John (b.1822), James (b.1824), Margaret (b.1825), Mary (b.1827), Agnes (b.1828), Robert (b.1830), Adam (b.1833), Helen (b.1835), Janet (b.1837), Elizabeth (b.1839) and Jane (b.1841). He was presumably related to the William and John who were recorded as farmers there in 1797. He could be the John born to James in Cavers Parish in 1792. John (b.c.1795) joined at Riddell. He was living at Riddell East Lodge in 1841 and 1851.
His wife was Margaret (or Mary) and their children included Margaret, Francis, Andrew, John and George. John (b.1797/8) resident of Deanburnhaugh. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer there in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 was at Hoscote. He married Ann Henderson in 1830 and their children included Janet (b.1832), Mary (b.1834), Jane (b.1839), George (b.1842) and Francis (b.1844). John (b.1799/1800) from Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was a farm steward, living at West Nisbet farm in Crailing Parish. His wife was Ann and their children included Walter, Isobel and Robert. John (1799/1800–1872) son of a shepherd at Cauldside in Liddesdale, where he was born. He worked as a shepherd in Castleton Parish, living at Mereburnhead (near Canonbie), and later feuded land in Newcastle. He was a keen Free Kirk supporter there. In 1861 he was at 35 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Murray, daughter of the tenant farmer at Whisgills (probably Thomas); she died in 1861, aged 61. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1819–32); Archie; Thomas; David (1828/9–1911); Janet (1830–32); and Janet (again, b.1834/5). His grandsons farmed at Wolfehopelee. John (b.c.1805) flesher on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street, along with Charlotte, possibly his sister. John (b.1805/6) from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Harwood on Teviot. He was there in 1851, farming 750 acres. He was unmarried. John of Teviot Bank and Rodono (1809–67), W.S., son of William. His grandfather was John and his great-grandfather William of Woll. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Gilbert Laurie Finlay. He became Writer to the Signet in 1832. He became a Roxburghshire J.P. and was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded to Teviot Bank and sold it in 1854 to Agnes Scott, widow of his uncle James Scott of Ellem. He purchased the lands of Riskenhope from George Pott of Dod and Chapelhope from John Gray Henderson of Abbotrule, these being on the banks of St. Mary’s. He renamed the land Rodono, after the ancient barony there, and built a mansion house, but died before it was completed. In 1863 he presented the household expense book of Mrs. Bennet of Chesters to the Museum, along with manuscripts of Rev. Hardie of Ashkirk’s sermons, a letter from Rev. Thomas Boston and a stirrup-cup used by Turnbull of Knowe. In 1850 he married Anne, 2nd daughter of Henry Singleton of Belpatrick, County Louth. They had no family. He was compiling a history of the Scotts of Woll and others when he died, entitled ‘A Genealogical Memoir of the Scotts of Thirlestane with Genealogical Notes of other Families of the Name of Scott’; three typed copies of the extensive manuscript are lodged in libraries. They are valuable source of information gathered together on branches of the Scott family through the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. He died in Marienbad, Czech Republic, where his widow had a church erected in his memory in 1879. His wife died in 1891. There is a portrait of him by John Watson Gordon in the collection of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet. John (b.1806) youngest son of Charles of the Crescent, he was uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. His father sought a position for him with the excise, and got the support of Scott of Harden, claiming that they were distantly related. He claimed to be 2nd cousin of Lady Ogilvy, who was also called the Duchess of Airlie; this supports the family claim that his great-grandfather had married a daughter of Charles Ogilvy. He may have moved to Argyll for a while. He married Catherine Watson and their children were: Agnes, who married Richard Johnson, bank clerk in Liverpool; George, bank clerk in Edinburgh; and 3 other children who went to Australia. After his wife died he moved to Essenden, with his niece, Mrs. John Douglas, keeping house for him. John Young (1806/7–80) son of John and Janet Young. He was manager of the Hawick Gas Works at the Common Haugh from at least 1838 until 1851 and was then miller of Hawick Mill. He was still listed as manager of the gas works in Slater’s 1852 directory. He also farmed, and lived at Slitrig Crescent. He was noted for helping during the cholera outbreak of 1849. The Caledonian Mercury of 1838 reported that he ‘has now in his possession a stalk of oats fully seven feet long, bearing one hundred and ninety four ears or pickles’. He married Mina, daughter of another John Scott (b.1792) and Isabel Michie. Their children included Isabella, John Young, William, Jessie, Thomas, James, Helen and Agnes. He may also be the same ‘J.Y.’ who was on the Town Council and of whom a portrait exists. Lord John (1809–60) see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John of Synton (19th C.) see John Corse Scott. John (b.c.1800) cooper in Lilliesleaf. He was living on Main Street in 1841. He married Agnes, daughter of weaver John Gillon, and their children included: Isabel (b.1831); Hannah (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); and Elizabeth (b.1839).
(b.c.1800) hedger in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was unmarried and living at Linthill West Lodge in 1841, 1851 and 1861, with his sister Betty. John (19th C.) from Askirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was living at Bewliehill Avenuefoot and in 1861 he was a hedger at Netherer Cottage. He married Helen Burton and their children included: James (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Walter (b.1845); Mary (b.1848); John (b.1850); Henry (b.1852); and Adam Gourlay (b.1853). John (1814–56) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Ontario when he was about 20 years old. He became a doctor and settled in the town of Berlin, Ontario. Some of his letters back to his family in Scotland are preserved in the Scottish Record Office. He died in Kitchener, Ontario. John (19th C.) Treasurer and Secretary of Liddesdale Curling Club in the 1860s. He is probably the same as one of the Johns who lived in Newcastleton at the time. John (b.1824/5) son of Walter, farmer at Stintieknowe. He was born at Stobs Woodfoot, where his grandfather was gamekeeper. He lived at Northhouse Haugh for 11 years, then worked as a roadman, living at Castleweary for 40 years. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell, who lived nearby. For a while he had charge of the coach horses when Castleweary was used for changing horses. In 1845 he married Ann (1827–1909), daughter of William Fulton, Governor of Hawick Prison. They had 7 children, including Margaret Cairns (b.1846), Walter (b.1848), Isabella (b.1851), Robina Young (b.1853), William (b.1860), Ann (b.1862) and John (b.1862). His son succeeded him as roadman in Teviot, he was born in Oxnam Parish. In 1851 he was a thatcher, still living with his mother and brothers. In 1861 he was a police constable in Stow. He married Mary Irving and their children were William, Jane, Robert, John, Mary, Thomas, Walter and Margaret. He died in Innerleithen. John (1832/3–1903) mason in Newcastleton, living on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Margaret Inglis, who died in 1921, aged 79. Their children included: Adam (1874–1954), who was also a mason. John (b.1832/3) farmer at Harwood on Teviot, he was born in Yarrow Parish. He was described in 1861 as ‘Farmer’s Son Man-ager’ and widower. He may be related to the man of the same name who was farmer at Harwood in 1851. John (b.1835/6) born in Hawick, he was a skinner in Duns in 1861. In 1860 he married Charlotte (c.1835–1925), daughter of Hawick shoemaker Adam Kersel. Their children included: James (b.c.1860). John (b.1837/8) draper in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was based at about 3 Douglas Square and employing 5 men. He lived with his sister Elizabeth. John (19th C.) Song-Singer at the 1875 Common Riding, where it was said he had 20 years of experience. John Douglas see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John (1832/3–88) tweed finisher who lived at 18 Bourtree Place. His parents were farmer Thomas and Nancy Leithead. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1889, aged
Their children included Thomas and Annie (who died at Balbriggan). John (19th C.) known as ‘Jock the Sweep’, Sheriff Officer in the 1840s. John (1836–80) well-known botanist and horticulturist, brought up in Denholm. Son of a farmer, he was orphaned at the age of 4 and brought up by an aunt. He attended Minto School under Mr. Hamilton. Encouraged by his cousin Rev. James Duncan, he won many prizes in local flower shows as a boy. He became a gardener at the Royal Botanical Gardens in Edinburgh in 1859, where he experimented with hybridization and contributed to the transactions of the Botanical Society. He corresponded with Charles Darwin, as well as the great botanist Sir J.D. Hooker. He moved to Calcutta Botanic Garden in 1863. He caught an infection in Darjeeling and returned to Edinburgh, dying in his sister’s house at Garvald. He was said to have been extremely modest and a remarkable self-taught man. John (b.c.1830) originally from Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably the thatcher, son of widow Mary, living at Dimpleknowe in 1851. He married Mary Scott in 1852 and their children, baptised in Ashkirk, were William (b.1852) and Jane (b.1854). Probably the same John was a Police Constable in Stow by 1861, with additional children Robert, John and Mary. John (b.1832) son of George and Jean, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. His father worked on farms at Synton. He was a ploughman and then worked as a railway porter and lamplman. His wife was Margaret, and they lived at Burnfoot, then Adderstoneshiel, Upper Village and the High Street. Their daughter was Georgina (b.c.1858). John (1836–1900) 4th son of John, tenant in Over Deloraine and Christian Scott from Ladhope. He was descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He succeeded his father as tenant at Over Deloraine, later known as West Deloraine. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. In 1871 he married Jane, daughter of John Thomson from Catlackburn. Their children included: John (1872–1923); James Thomson (b.1874), who lived at Dinnington, Yorkshire; William (b.1876) who married Alice Watson McCaig from Galashiels and settled in Penrith; and Andrew Thomson (b.1885), who emigrated to Manitoba, Canada, and married his cousin Jean Thomson. John Henry Francis Kinnaird of Gala (1859–1935) son of Hugh, he was the 10th Laird. He was educated at Radley College, Abingdon, Oxfordshire. He was Justice of the Peace for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Henry John Alexander. John M. (19th C.) writer of some local poetry, e.g. ‘The Nicht Afore the Morn’ in 1893. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) minister at Dalkeith West, who moved to Saughtree Kirk in 1922. He stayed until 1925, when he was translated to Anwoth, Kirkcudbright. He demitted in 1931. John Robinson (19th/20th C.) farmer at Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish). John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Kinninghall. His father and uncle were joiners at Stobs Woodfoot. John Ross (1951– ) local man who was newspaper reporter and Hawick News editor in the 1990s. He was first on Jedburgh Council, then a Hawick Councillor from 1985, as a Liberal, being Honorary Provost from 1999 until 2002, when he took over as Convenor of the Scottish Borders Council. However, he lost his seat to Mary Beck in 2003. Also a Justice of the Peace, he has had particular interest in transport matters. Joseph (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was son of the miller, probably James. He was said to be possessor of the ‘undermost house of the Miln Port’, which was carried away by the great flood of 1767. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Scott in 1775 (registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes) and whose children included: George (b.1776); Jane (b.1783); and Joseph (b.1785). Joseph (b.c.1790–bef. 1851) gun-maker and ironmonger at the Sandbed, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is also listed as a tinsmith there. In 1837 he was listed as a blacksmith and tin-plate worker on the High Street, with ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ also being listed as ironmongers, gunmakers and tin-plate workers on the Sandbed. On the 1841 census he was at about 21 High Street and listed as a smith. His wife and daughter were still running the ironmonger’s business in 1851. However, confusingly Slater’s 1852 directory lists among the ironmongers ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ on Teviot Square and Jane Scott on the High Street. He married Jane Veitch, apparently in Edinburgh in 1826. Their children included: Joseph (b.1828), who probably died young; and Elizabeth (b.1830). He is probably the Joseph born to Joseph and Peggy in Wilton in 1785. Joseph (b.1799) born in Selkirk, son of James and Barbara Skirving. He was recorded in the 1851 census as a teacher of Latin, Greek and French on the Cross Wynd. In 1852 he was listed as a teacher in Punchbowl Close. Katherine of Colifort (16th C.) recorded in 1540 being ‘of Colinfurd’. She acknowledged receipt of 100 merks Scots from John...
Cranston of that Ilk for redemption of 4 husbandlands in Denholm. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts. Janet (with no surname given) is also mentioned as the person renouncing the 4 husbandlands. Keith Stanley Malcolm, M.B.E. (b.1884) son of Joseph Rogerson and Annie Latimer. He was from from a line of Scotts who settled in Morpeth, and were descended from Gideon, 5th son of John of Woll. He inherited Kenton Hall in Northumberland from his father, but sold it and purchased Greenwood, a small farm in Cumberland. In 1923 he published his compilation of Scott family history, called ‘Scott, 1118–1923’ (reprinted in 1969). When he was almost done with his work he discovered the unfinished study by John of Rodono; he then incorporated some of this information, and lodged 3 typed copies in library collections. In 1910 he married Rosina Marguerita, daughter of Cavalleri V.A. Montaldi of Forest Hall. Kenneth (1953–4– ) ‘Ken’ lawyer based in Denver, Colorado, but frequent visitor to Hawick. He served for 12 years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the Department of Justice. He then spent 13 years in the Hague, where he worked as a senior prosecutor in the International Criminal Tribunal. In 2017 he received the Mostar Peace Prize for his work investigating and litigating war crimes in the former Yugoslavia. He has also worked on cases in Somalia, the Lebannon and South Sudan. He has been an adjunct professor at the U.S. Air Force Academy, the University of Colorado-Boulder and Regis University. He first came to Hawick in 1998 when touring to investigate his Scottish roots, staying for the Common Riding that year. Despite the fact that he never did find any direct historical link between his family and Hawick, he has returned regularly for the Common Riding, as a rider and supporter. He was Callants’ Club Chief Guest in 2015. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a saisine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His fore-name is recorded as ‘Quintigern’. Lady widow of Howpasley (16th/17th C.), assisted by Jean Scott of Satchells, she presided over a Council of War at Hawick Cross in April 1615, complaining that Sir James Douglas had taken lands at Howpasley, and urging a band of supporters to kill all the sheep there. About 60 sheep were slaughtered, in an act of spectacular barbarism, described as ‘sic monstruous and unhard of crewaltie, as the lyk quhairof hes nicht bene hard amangist the wyld Irish and savadge people’. Several of the perpetrators were subsequently hanged. She was presumably the widow of the former Laird of Howpasley, who was either Walter or his son William. Neither her first name nor her maiden name are recorded. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded as ‘Laurence Scot’ in 1272/3 when he had a letter granting safe conduct from King Edward I so he could visit ‘the threshold of St. Andrew the Apostle’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other family members. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1495 as witness to a charter for Thomas Grundistone of Kinggask, signed in Edinburgh. His name is recorded as ‘Laurentio Scot’. Lawrence of Harperrig and Clerkington (d.1637), J.P., son of Hew of Scotscloch. He was descended from a branch of the Scotts of Buccleuch who had moved to Ayrshire. Before 1592 he was apprenticed to Robert Scott of Knightspottie, Rector of Chancery, and became an advocate. He bought Harperrig in 1605. In 1609 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1612 he was granted (the right of) the marriage of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He later served the Earl on the commission to run his affairs while he was in Holland, his son William also being a commissioner. In 1618 he represented Walter of Buccleuch before the Privy Council when several men from upper Teviotdale were accused of cutting down timber at Gorrenberry. In 1620 he was witness to a charter for the Earl of Buccleuch for the lands of Goldielands. In 1634 he carried the coat of honour at the Earl’s funeral in Hawick, and his sons William and James also took part in the procession. He had a charter for Elliston in about 1622 and was granted the lands of Bavelaw in Edinburgh in 1628, Bonnington (in West Lothian) in 1629 and Clerkington in 1634. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He may be the same advocate who was one of those representing a group of Scotts accused of slaughtering sheep at Howpasley in a trial of 1616. In 1617 he and his son-in-law James Scott were charged with assault. He represented the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 when he accused a number of Hawick men of cutting down trees on his land. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Pringle from Edinburgh. His children were: Sir William of Clerkington, who was one of the Lords of Session; James of Bonnington (in West Lothian); Lawrence of Bavelaw; Marion, who married James Scott of Vogrie, uncle to Sir John Scott of Scotstavarit; Margaret, who married William Wallace of Shewalton; Agnes, married Patrick Kinloch; Joanna, married James Clerk; and Alison, married Peter Houston. His widow Bessie was recorded in a deed of 1663. Lawrence of Bavelaw (d.c.1670) 3rd son of Lawrence of Harperrig. He seems to be sometimes referred to as ‘Lancelot’. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testators’ for the will of Francis. He was a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch 1658–59 and listed in 1661 as still owing money for the rentals for these years. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663. He married Katherine Binning (who is recorded as his widow in 1673). The couple were granted the Barony of Corstophine by Oliver Cromwell. His son Lawrence of Bavelaw was served as his heir in 1670. He also had a son, Charles, who was served heir to his brother William of Bavelaw in 1691. Lawrence (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 for Patrick Howburn. Leticia (13th C.) recorded as surname ‘Scot’ in 1272, when she gave half a mark to have a writ ‘ad terminum’ at Westminster. Lilias (17th C.) daughter of Jean, who was sister of the last Walter of Crumhaugh (although these generations are quite uncertain). She married William Knox, servant to George, Lord Ross. She inherited parts of the Goldielands and Crumhaugh estates from her uncle Walter (along with her cousin Robert Scott of Glack). But these passed to another relative, Walter of Crumhaugh, in the early 1670s. Lilias (b.1835) daughter of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver. She married spinner Adam Murray and they emigrated to Canada, living in Ontario. They had a daughter, Jessie Murray Scott (b.1857), perhaps before they were married. They had a daughter Annie who married William Roper (son of William Roper from Massachusetts and Ann, daughter of Robert Greenwood from Haddington) of thefts and outrages committed by the sons and nephews of Martin Elliot of Braedlie and Lachie Armstrong of Whitaugh; this involved her farms of Harwood, Slaidhills and Whitalaw. Additionally in 1580 her servant William ‘Dwangelson’ arranged for her to loan £60 Scots to Robert Scott of Alton, for the annual rent of his lands of the East Mains of Hassendaleburn. In 1581/2 she further complained against 15 thieves, who were declared rebels. She claimed ownership of estates of her husbands, including Bellendean, which had sheep stolen from them by a band of Elliots and Armstrongs in 1582. When the Earl of Bothwell was accused of treason in 1592 she intercepted the King in Edinburgh, pleading for mercy for her and her husband. Also in 1592 there was a complaint by Thomas, brother of Andrew Kerr of Fernhirst, who had been granted the liferent of the lands she had been granted by her first husband and subsequently forfeited, had been denied the fees and duties by her chamberlains. She had a letter of protection from the King revoked in 1595 for misusing it, but had another given to her soon afterwards. In 1598 she is recorded in a contract with her son Walter’s tenants in Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) receiving a ‘grassum’ of 33 s 4 d every 5 years during her lifetime. Her children included: Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Margaret Scott, who was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane (but this is probably confusion with an earlier Margaret); Mary Scott, who married William Elliot of Larriston; Francis Stewart (b.1584); John Stewart; Frederick Stewart; Henry Stewart; Elizabeth Stewart (b.1590), who married James, Master of Cranston and was mother of William Cranston, 3rd Lord Cranston; Helen Stewart, who married John Macfarlane of that Ilk; Jean Stewart, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; and Margaret Stewart, who married Alan, 5th Lord Cathcart. She lived to a great old age and is buried at Eckford. Margaret (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter of Burnfoot. She was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James ‘Lethame’ in 1616 in Hawick Parish Church. She claimed Francis had ‘maliciously and unrevocably rackt and ruggit her from her said seat’, while he claimed she had called him ‘thief and traitour’. The precise nature of the dispute is not clear. However, she is referred to as ‘sometyme in Castleside’. The resolution was that she ‘would hear no reason’ and so was charged to appear before the Selkirk Presbytery. The fact that she was referred to as ‘of Castleside’ suggests that she was Margaret, daughter of George of Castleside, who was served heir to her father, along with their 2 sisters Janet and Bessie, in 1632. Margaret (16th/17th C.) owner of the lands of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1643. She is recorded as ‘Mar. Scott for Braidlies’, valued at £666 13s 4d. Probably the same ‘Goodwife of braidlie’ who owned lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £637, also in 1643. Margaret (b.c.1600) only daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and his 2nd wife, Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswode of that Ilk. She married David Pringle, heir apparent of Galashiels and in 1625 secondly married Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun. The marriage contract with her brother Sir William suggested that she was still a minor in 1623. She received ‘annualrent’ of Makerstoun as part of the contract in 1625 and in 1632 renounced her right to the demesne lands of Smailholm to Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. Margaret ‘Maggy Findy’ (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Harden and Mary, ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. She married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie o the Gowden Garters’ and their son William succeeded to Stobs. In 1643 she is recorded as mother of William when she was liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish valued at £666 13s 4d. She may also have been the ‘Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsleyhill’ who owned lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £637, also in 1643. It was said that her grandson Gilbert (later 1st Lord Minto) spent a lot of time in her company. Margaret (16th/17th C.) mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Francis’ wife appears to have been Isobel, and so would have been her daughter. In 1639 there is a dispute in the Ashkirk Parish records between her and her son, apparently over access to the family seat in the Kirk. She claimed Francis had ‘maliciously and unrevocantly rackt and ruggit her from her said seat’, while he claimed she had called him ‘thief and traitour’. The precise nature of the dispute is not clear. However, she is referred to as ‘sometyme in Castleside’. The resolution was that she ‘would hear no reason’ and so was charged to appear before the Selkirk Presbytery. The fact that she was referred to as ‘of Castleside’ herself suggests that she was Margaret, daughter of George of Castleside, who was served heir to her father, along with their 2 sisters Janet and Bessie, in 1632. Margaret (d.1672) daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, and also related to the Scotts of Brieryyard. She married

Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiel and had at least 5 children, including William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. She may be the ‘Mariota’, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who was served heir to her father’s brother Simon in 1643. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Robert of Whitlade. In 1647 she was served heir to her father’s lands of Ettrickhouse, Bowerhope and Dalgleish, all of which were contained in the Barony of Synton by annexation. Margaret (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Bessie and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 as ‘goodwife of Coudhouse’, i.e. wife of Scott of Coldhouse (although her husband’s name is unrecorded). James Henderson was found guilty of giving her ‘a blow for against the heart’. It is possible she is the same woman as Marie of Coldhouse, recorded in 1663. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawkno’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She is recorded as ‘Margrat Scott in Brugh’, suggesting that she was perhaps widow of a Scott who had farmed at nearby Brugh. Margaret (17th/18th C.) wife of James, who farmed at Borthaugh in the early 1690s. In 1696 and 1698 she herself was renting ¼ of Borthaugh and was then a widow. Her cautioners were Adam and Walter, farmers at Overhall, who were probably closely related. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Margaret (d.c.1782) widow who had her will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1783. Her surname is listed as ‘Scott alias Brown’ and she was from Hawick, Roxburghshire. It is unclear if she was a Scott or a Brown. Margaret ‘Cripple Meg’ (18th C.) recorded in 1781 when her daughter Margaret died in Hawick. Her nickname seems self-explanatory. It is unclear if Scott was her maiden or married name. Her daughter could be the Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1773, with no parents names given. Margaret (18th C.) housemaid at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Margaret (d.1815) daughter of Robert of Burnhead. In 1786 she married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton. She succeeded her brother to Burnhead following his death in 1795. She died without issue and was in turn succeeded by her cousin William Watson. Margaret ‘Peggy’ nee Anderson (b.c.1780) possibly the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Robertson Parish in 1770, she married Thomas Scott and lived at Deanburnhaugh. She lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s. She was described as being ‘everybody’s body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others’. She had at least 8 children in the period 1799–1819. In 1841 she was recorded living in Deanburnhaugh with her younger son Robert, together with James (probably her grandchild) and young teacher Thomas Amos. In 1851 she was living with her son Robert, daughter Isabella and grand-daughter Isabella Miller. Margaret (1809–23) daughter of Rev. David of Castleton. She was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beaties of the Border’ in 1821. Margaret Taylor (1848–1921) daughter of James, who was a carpenter from Roxburghshire, and perhaps from the area around Hawick. She grew up in Dundas, Ontario, attended the Toronto Normal School, and then taught at Pickering, Strathroy, Brantford and Ottawa. She was headmistress of the Toronto Model School and then the Toronto Presbyterian Ladies’ College. However, in 1903 she set up her own school in Toronto, which she called ‘Bransome Hall’, probably after the fictional castle of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, rather than the real castle of Branxholme. The name was suggested by Alexander MacMillan. She moved to Vancouver because of ill health, and died there. She was survived by brothers James and William (superintendent of emigration in Ottawa), and sisters Mrs. Conklin, Elizabeth and Jean. Maria see Mary, Countess of Buc- cleuch. Marie (17th C.) liferenter of Coldhouse in the 1643 county valuation, when her lands were valued at £40. Probably the same Marie was recorded as owner of lands in Hawick valued at £3. She was probably widow of the former Laird of Coldhouse (perhaps Peter, recorded being ‘of Cowdhome’ in 1654). It is possible that she was the Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodnyres, who married Walter of How- ford (who was connected to the Coldhouse family) in 1615. She may be the ‘goodwife of Coud- house’ recorded in 1676. William of Coldhouse held these same lands in 1678 and seems likely to have been her son. Marion (17th C.) daughter of William of Fingland. She married William Wilson ‘in Gulzeaneffat’. In 1662 she was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley. However, Howplasy passed shortly thereafter to Walter, son of her cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Marion Adamson (1886–1963) daughter of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. When her father died she took over the house Norwood. She never married. Mark (17th/18th C.) recorded as drummer in Selkirk in 1708. He was given a salary in that year, including 3 pairs of shoes. Martin (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Martinus Scot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501. Along with ‘Willelmus Unys’ he had his fine in Roxburghshire compounded. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. Mary (16th C.) called ‘the Flower of Yarrow’, popularised in the ballad of the same name. She was said to be the daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope Tower and renowned for her beauty; in fact she was probably sister of Philip, and 2nd daughter of John of Dryhope, but presumably tales of her beauty had real foundation. In 1576 she married Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’, the marriage contract still exists) and bore 4 sons and 6 daughters. She is there referred to as ‘Marion’, and was to be infief in liferent in the lands of Mabonlaw as part of the contract, with Harden to pay to Dryhope 400 merks Scots. She is said to have served him his spurs when the larders were empty. Mary (16th/17th C.) wife of Simon of Bonnington. It is unclear if she was also a Scott. In 1617 she is ‘Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun’ when she complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts of Harden and others. She stated that she had several children, with only a son surviving (presumably Robert) who died at the age of 19 following injuries sustained through an attack by William Riddell, miller in Todrig Mill, with the tutors pleading for a reduction in the amount. There were schemes to marry her to the sons of many noblemen, probably including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Lord Robert Kerr, a son of the Earl of Tweeddale, the son of Scott of Scottshall in Kent and the son of John Scott of Gorrenberry. She was in fact married in secrecy to Walter, eldest son of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester, John Scott of Gorrenberry, Patrick Scott of Thirlestane, Lawrence Scott of Bavelaw and Patrick Scott of Langshaw. There were disputes between the ‘Lothian tutors’ and the ‘South Country tutors’, as well as between Gideon Scott of Highchester and John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale (her uncle), who were trying to arrange for her marriage. There was also a great power struggle between her mother, Countess of Wemyss, and the appointed trustees for control of her and her sister Anne; Oliver Cromwell was enlisted in support, affirming that the daughters should be entrusted to their mother. During her minority Dalkeith house was occupied by Gen. Monck. She had a huge fine of £15,000 imposed by Cromwell for her father’s support of Charles II, with the tutors pleading for a reduction in the amount. There were schemes to marry her to the sons of many noblemen, probably including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Lord Robert Kerr, a son of the Earl of Tweeddale, the son of Scott of Scottshall in Kent and the son of John Scott of Gorrenberry. She was in fact married in secrecy to Walter, eldest son of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester, when she was 11 years of age (and he was 14), although there was an attempt to annul the marriage until she was at least 12! However, Cromwell died in this period, which complicated the legal challenges, although there continued to be machinations to control her future and that of her sister. She was never in good health, being regularly attended by doctors (who probably did more harm than good), with an arm infection that refused to heal. She went to London for the curing power of the King’s touch, but the journey probably made her condition worse and then she caught measles on her return to Scotland. She died at the age of 13. The power struggles continued, with the last revision to her will giving family control to the Earls of Rothes and Wemyss, freezing out Sir Gideon of Highchester and her husband Walter of Tarra. She was succeeded by her sister Anne (or Anna) and was buried at Dalkeith. She was recorded in several deeds in 1663, although already deceased by then. Mary (17th/18th C.) sister and heiress of John of Headshaw. In 1681 she married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. She succeeded to the estate of Headshaw in 1691, there being no male heirs. This included Headshaw Mill and Dryden, as well as Crawknow and Clews. In 1696 she and her husband sold Headshaw to Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was involved in an ‘action of relief’ with Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1713. Her daughter Henrietta married Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She is also referred to as ‘Marie’. Mary Lilia (d.1790) eldest daughter of John of Harden. She was sometimes known as the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, like her ancestor namesake. There was a portrait of her by Allan Ramsay, which hung in Hamilton Palace (transferred to Mertom House), painted it is said for the Duke of Hamilton who was infatuated with her, although she was attached to the 2nd son of Scott of Scotstavert (who died, and she never married). She is also said to have had the song ‘Tweedside’ written about her, particularly the lines ‘What beauties does Flora disclose! How sweet are her smiles upon Tweed! Yet Mary’s still sweeter than those; Both nature and fancy exceed’. Mary ‘Floor o Rankleburn’ (18th/19th C.) married Thomas Smith, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. Her nickname came from her good looks, the story being that a gentleman visiting her father’s house asked for her name, and said that since there was a Mary Scott ‘Flower of Yarrow’, she should be the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Her daughter Mary married Robert Purdom. She also had several other children, including Peter, Patrick, Robert, Archibald, Thomas, Andrew, Margaret and Jane. Mary (18th C.) chambermaid at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Mary (b.1808/9) from Selkirk, she was school mistress at Deanburnhaugh. She is recorded there on the 1851 census. Matthew (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Master Matthew de Scotia’ in Paris in 1218. He was King’s Chancellor in 1228 when he was elected as Bishop of Aberdeen, although he resigned this in favour of Dunkeld. He may have died in 1230 before becoming Bishop. He may be the same Matthew as the Archdeacon of Cleveland. Matthew (13th C.) listed as ‘Mathæus le Scot’ along with Walter and Adam from Chillingham for robbing a house in the area of Hebburn and Linewmouth. Matthew of Belstanerig (16th C.) mentioned in 1586/7 when his brother Alexander was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Matthew (17th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘Mathew if the bent in Tuchellaw’. He promised to pay John Brydon, bridlemaker in Selkirk for an unspecified reason. Matthew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Mathou Scott, called Broid of Steill’, and was probably associated with the lands of the Steele. Michael (c.1175–c.1234) sometimes called ‘the Border Wizard’. Traditionally his birth and death have been placed in the Borders, although there is no evidence for this. He was possibly Michael, who was second son of Richard, and grandson of Uchtred. He held lands in Fife and flourished in the reign of William I, and his descendants are the Scotts of Balwearie, as well as the Scotts of Ancram. He studied in Oxford and Durham, then travelled widely around Europe, serving as court astronomer and physician (or astrologer and alchemist) to Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. He is recorded in Toldeo, Spain, in 1217 and was also in Italy. He had a licence for 2 cures in Scotland, as well as the Archbishopric of Cashel in Ireland, which he resigned by 1224. He had another licence to hold a cure in England and 2 in Scotland in 1225. He translated many important works from Arabic into Latin, thus reintroducing Aristotelian ideas to the western world. Legends of his supernatural powers abound (popularised in Dante, Boccaccio and Sir Walter Scott), and few hard facts are known about his life. He is supposed to have helped bring the infant Maid of Norway to claim the Scottish throne in 1290, when in his 70s, although this may have been a later Michael of Balwearie. He is also said to be buried in Melrose Abbey along with a ‘mighty book’ of necromancy, although others suggest he was buried at Home Coltrame in Cumberland. He is said to have caused the Eildons to be split into 3 and the local belief in his magical powers continued for centuries after his death. It may be that more than one man’s life is being compounded here. The Michael who held lands in Fife married Margaret, daughter of Duncan Syras of that ilk and was succeeded by his son Duncan – ‘The black spae-book from his breast he took, Impressed with many a warlock spell: And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott, Who held in awe the fiends of hell’ [IL], ‘In these far climes it was my lot To meet the wondrous Michael Scot’ [SWS] ‘And here, though history tells it not, Has crossed the wizard, Michael Scott’ [WNK] (often written ‘Scot’). J. Wood Brown wrote ‘An enquiry into the life and legends of Michael Scot’ (1897), Lynn Thorndike wrote ‘Michael Scot’ (1965) and Tom Hubbard wrote ‘Michael Scot: myth and polymath’ (2006). Michael (13th C.) along with his wife made a grant of Gask (in Fife) to Dunfermline Abbey sometime before 1231. He is referred to as Michael Scot ‘of the Kingdom of Scotland’ when he made a grant for income from lands in Fife. He was witnessed another couple of grants from Fife in about 1230 and 1231. He could be the Michael, son of Malothen, recorded in 1231. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Duncan Ceres and his heir was Duncan. He had another son, John. His wife was a widow in the period 1238–50 when she confirmed the grant of Gask. He was surely associated with the Balwearie family, but the details are uncertain; in particular he appears to be contemporary with Michael ‘the wizard’. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th C.) son of Duncan and probably great-grandson of the first Richard. He was knighted by Alexander II. He married the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Balwearie, and so came into possession of Balwearie in Fife, which the family held for another 13 generations, ending with Col. Walter of Balwearie, who died in Flanders in the reign of Charles II. He may have been born at Rankleburn (the first of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be born locally). He was known as a gallant warrior, who distinguished himself at Halidon Hill in 1333, and was knighted some time previous to this. He fought in the division commanded by Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, and was among the few noblemen who survived the battlefield. He also accompanied David II to the unfortunate Battle of Durham (or Neville’s Cross) where he was killed. He was succeeded by his son Robert, while his second son John is said to have been ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden, Whitslade, Todrig, Raeburn, Woll, Thirlestane, etc. His daughter Jean may have married John Ainslie of Dolfingston. Nothing much else is known about him, including the name of his wife. His Christian name may have derived from the ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie (perhaps his great-granduncle), but seems to not have been used afterwards. Michael of Aikwood (d.c.1544) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1517. Robert of Bonnington was probably his brother. Their mother’s name is unknown, but his forename may have come from that side of the family. In the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for supporting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran, he is recorded as ‘Maister Mychaell Scot in Aikwo’ and ‘Thomas Scot, thare’ was also listed and perhaps his son; it seems that he was given the designation ‘maister’ because he trained for the priesthood (or possible the law), taking an M.A. He is probably the ‘Maister Mychaell Scot’ who was among the local men who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1528 he was ‘magistro Michaeli Scot de Aikwod’ when appointed as one of the

Bailies for infefting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme. In about 1529 he and his son William were given half the lands of Bowhill in exchange for a sum to be used as the dowry for his niece Isabel Murray; Thomas in Aikwood was one of the witnesses. Also in 1529 he gained Isobel Murray’s lands of the west side of Kershope. He was probably one of the witnesses to the discharge from Patrick Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528/9, where he is recorded as ‘Mr. Michell Scott’ just before ‘sir John Scot, notary’. In 1530 he witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. He is recorded in 1530 as ‘master’ when witness to a document in Selkirk and other documents in 1531 and 1531/2. In 1532/3 he was ‘master Michael Scott master of arts’ when involved with an inquest into the succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1532/3 he was also witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1533 he was ‘brother german’ to Isabel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) when she assigned to him her lands in Kershope; ‘instruments’ were sought ‘at the manor of the said master Michael’. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was ‘master Michel Scot in Aikvod’ in 1536 when he witnessed the proclamation of a royal letter in Selkirk. Also in 1536 he purchased Hermiston ‘with the fortalice of stone and lime called the Peile in the barony of Lillescleif’ from Walter Scott of Roberton. In 1536/7 there was a complaint about him farming at Easter Bowhill. In 1538 he gave have of Hermiston to Thomas Scott in Todrig. In 1539 a loan from him to Isobel Scott (probably his sister in her second marriage, wife of Alexander Elliot) was discharged. Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam. He was witness for an action involving Alan Mitthag in 1539/40. He was one of the supporters of John Scott in 1540/1, when it was agreed that John should answer for the death of Walter Down; his sons William, Robert and Walter are also listed. According to the Exchequer Rolls he claimed the lands of Aikwood in 1541 and was also tenant in half of Bowhill, half of Huntly and the wester side of Kershope. In 1541 he bound himself to William in Bowhill (probably his son) and others, with William in Hartwoodburn as a witness. He had a charter for the lands of ‘Aikwood’ in 1541, along with his wife Isobel Ker and son William. William was also granted Bowhill in the same document and witnesses included Thomas and Gilbert Scott, as well as Robert and William Scott. In 1541/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Alexander and another in 1543/4 for George in Blindhaugh. He married Isabel Ker, from an unknown branch of the Kers. In 1541 he was said to have built ‘an honest mansion and tower’ at Aikwood when he obtained a new infeftment to himself and his wife, producing a charter from 1517 for Aikwood and Bowhill; his son and heir William is also mentioned. His children included: Walter who succeeded to Kershope; William, who succeeded to Bowhill; Robert, who succeeded his elder brothers; Adam, recorded in 1552; possibly Thomas, mentioned in the remission of 1526; and Elizabeth, stated to be sister of Robert in 1580, when she had a marriage contract with Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. His widow secondly married Robert Scott of Wamphray. Michael of Vogrie (d.bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when his son Walter had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in ‘Cartho’. Walter was to receive certain lands in Stow and John in Kirkhouses was a witness. Michael of Aikwood (16th C.) listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ in Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Oakwood at that time was Robert; however, it is possible that the long deceased Michael was meant. Michael (16th/17th C.) brother of ‘Hob Scot in the Howfurd’. The pair were described as ‘suster sones’ to Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’) in 1617 when Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington’s household. They were also said to have later ‘trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit’ and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Michael (17th C.) Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch at the time of the Earl’s death in 1633. It is unclear what branch of the family he came from. Michael (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Marion (b.1650). Michael (17th C.) son of John of Gilmancleuch. He is recorded in a deed of 1663. Michael (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ in 1700. In 1703 he was fined for drinking after the rining of the 10 hour bell. He witnessed further baptisms in 1705 (along with Walter in Crumhaugh) for innkeeper William called ‘of Goldielands’ and in 1708 for smith James Scott (along with tailor George). In 1716 he was rebuked by the minister for ‘being extremely drunk laitlie in the street, and not capable to go to his dwelling house’; the minister told him he was a ‘most sad spectacle’, but not being previously guilty of drunkenness he was only admonished and told to mend his ways. He witnessed baptisms in 1720 for smith Thomas Huntly and for weaver Walter Douglas. He married Margaret Gledstains, and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); Margaret (b.1705); James (b.1709); and John (again, b.1712). The witnesses in 1700 were baker John Whillans and John Scott ‘Whitegates’, in 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant Patrick Angus, in 1705 were John Scott of Whitegates ‘younger’ and merchant John Forman, in 1709 were tailor William Gledstains and baxter William Hodge and in 1712 were Bailie James Burn and shoemaker Robert Porteous. Mrs. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Stirches Mains on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. It is unclear who she may have been married to. Alexander was recorded as tenant at Stirches Mains in 1797 (on the Lieutenancy Book) and was surely related. Mrs. Robert (16th C.) wife of a Hawick man, mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. She is listed being owed money ‘for sum ordinar dutie’, but what this duty might have been is unclear. Mungo (16th C.) Burgess in Edinburgh recorded in the period 1574–84. In 1574/5 he was surety for a case involving Jedburgh Abbey. He was also cautioner (along with Alexander, also a Burgess of Edinburgh) for George of Synton when he was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, and also for Walter Scott of Goldielands (along with Robert, Burgess in Edinburgh and and James Gledstains of Cocklaw). There was a further caution by him and Alexander in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’. It seems likely that he was closely related to Alexander and Robert, and probably also related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Buccleuch. In 1581/2 he acted as cautioner for Robert of Aikwood. In 1593 he was a Burgess of Edinburgh listed among the cautioners for the inhabitants of Kelso being loyal to the King. He was also involved in a bond not to harm and Edinburgh tailor in 1595. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Castellsyd’ (i.e. Castleside) in the records of the Circuit Court of 1623 when several local men twice gave their security for his appearance. They included Andrew Allan, John Gowlock and James Coltart in Headshaw, John Turnbull and John Campbell in Newton and Gilbert Elliot of Brugh. It is unclear whether he was related to George and Francis of Castleside. He may be the Mungo whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included James (b.1631), Walter (b.1635) and John (b.1636). Perhaps the same ‘Mungno’ witnessed Ashkirk baptisms in 1651 for John White and in 1652 for James Easton and Janet Scott. Mungo (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mungo (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Jean Scott. In 1698 he was recorded as servant of the Laird of Bewlie. He married Helen Rae and their children included William (b.1698), Thomas (b.1703) and Walter (b.1708). He may be the Mungo, born to James and Agnes Stewart in 1658. Mungo (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Dryden and their children included Janet (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation and in 1774 included Bailie Elliot. Nelly (b.1768) and Elizabeth (b.1769) were probably also his children. Mungo (b.c.1780) hand-loom weaver in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he is listed at ‘Make Shift’ somewhere near Broadlee or Milsington. He was from out of the county and living with Jane, probably his wife. He could be the Mungo who married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1813. Mungo (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Nell ‘Nelly the King’ (19th C.) sister of ‘Andrew the King’, and also known as a simple-minded soul. Her first could be a short form of ‘Helen’. She may have been born in 1798. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, Henry and John, who are also listed. Nichol (16th C.) tenant in Mosspeebles. He is recorded in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was ‘in Mespeble’ among men who Lord Maxwell and separately Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others ‘to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fel low thieves]’. He was probably related to Adam, recorded in Mosspeebill in 1585. Nicholas (13th C.) resident of Northumberland. He is recorded in the 1279 assize roll there when his wife Agnes had rights to the young heir of ‘Walteri super Teysam’. He may already have been dead by this time. Another entry for the same year mentions ‘Nicholaus le Scot’. He could be the same as Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was listed in an assize relating to lands in Newcastle in 1266; Henry ‘le Escot’ was also a pledge for him. He may be the Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with Henry and John also listed). It is unclear whether he or his wife were related to other Scotts. Nicholas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 being ‘in Quhytsyde’, which could be Whiteside in the Jed valley. He complained that James Tweedie of Drea and his son owed him money and should be apprehended. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed among the many Borders men given remission in 1526 for their earlier support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. After his name appears ‘William brother’, presumably meaning his brother. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, but the Christian name is not common among Scotts. Ninian (dbef. 1580) listed in 1580 in Selkirk, when his widow Marion was among those who Janet Gledstains owed money to. Ninian (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes Reid and their children included William (b.1807). Osbert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Osberto scoto’ and ‘serviens’ of Walter Oliphant, Justiciar of Lothian, when he was witness to a statement about a dispute between Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, and Jordon of Corra. This was sometime in the period 1223–42. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) referred to in a charter of the 1270s involving Coldingham Priory and the lands of Great Reston. The same gift to Coldingham is described in a charter of Robert, son of Reginald of Reston, which is some time before 1233. His sons were John and Patrick. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick and brother of John. He witnessed several charters involving Coldingham Priory. In the 1170s he had a claim to the lands of Great Reston, which had previously been held by his father and brother. Patrick (13th C.) merchant of Berwick recorded as ‘Patrick le Escot’ in 1276, when there was a complaint of wool being stolen from their boat on the way to Dieppe. He is ‘Patrick Scott’ in 1296 when his former house in Berwick is mentioned in another case and he was ‘Patrick Lescot’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in that same year. His seal was oval with a classical head and cross and the name ‘S’PATRICII SCOT’. He may be the same as ‘Patricius Scot’ recorded in relation to Bamburgh in 1279. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Patrick (13th/14th C.) juror in 1310 for cases involving Lindores Abbey. Patrick (15th C.) servant of James II when he was Duke of Rothesay, recorded in 1438. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491, where he owed one merk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) served as Chamberlain of Strathearn and Comptroller of receipts. He is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500–10. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) son of Adam, tenant in Harwoodhill. In 1502 he had remission for resetting Richard Armstrong, called ‘Skaw’, who had stolen 200 sheep from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’, with the help of Alexander Scott. Walter of Howpasley and Robert of Stiches acted as sureties, suggesting one or both were related to him. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing 60 sheep from ‘langcluch’ and 15 sheep from Alexander Turnbull in Dodrig; his surety then was Robert in Synton. Patrick (16th/17th C.) said to be a surgeon and Burgess in Hawick around 1600. His great-granddaughter Janet Scott was served heir to him in 1667; she married carrier Patrick Hardie. Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane (d.1666), son of Walter of Gamescleuch and Janet Porteous (probably being named after his maternal grandfather). His father was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw, part of a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches that lasted for many years. He was a nephew of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, and also held the lands of Howpasley from his cousin Robert Scott. He was placed in charge of bringing Walter, Earl of Buccleuch’s body from London to Leith in 1633, a journey that took 15 weeks, and included being shipwrecked on the Norwegian coast. About 1634 he redeemed some of the mortgages of his cousin Sir John of Thirlestane, and had most of the lands transferred into his name. He was Chamberlain to Francis, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the 1640s, as well as Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton into the 1650s. In 1641 William Wallace made the factor’s account in his place, since he was ill. In 1641 he signed a document in Hawick with his cousin Sir John, relating to the Thirlestane estates, but with the terms unspecified. He had his cousin imprisoned on 2 occasions. Eventually he would claim permanent ownership of the Thirlestane estates, in precedence to his cousin Sir John. This was at least partly because of different allegiances in the Civil War (Sir John’s descendants would fight the succession in court a century later). In 1642 he had a decree of appraising against Sir John, relating to the lands of Bourhope. In 1643 he had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others in Peeblesshire, which he gained from his cousin John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was cautioner for a William Scott in about 1646. He supported the Parliamentary side in the Civil War and was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1648–49. After being fined by both Cromwell and the Royalists for taking sides, he repurchased Thirlestane from Sir William of Harden and others. In 1644 he was witness to a contract for lands at Smallholm. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thievery in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Amandale. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1650 he was also named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis in his will and served in this capacity for the young Marie, Countess of Buccleuch, being involved in a law suit in 1659 with some of her other tutors over breaking locks to her charter chests. In 1653 he was involved in the construction of the bridge over the Yarrow at Deuchar, acting as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a charter of the lands of Rutherford. He was fined by Cromwell in 1654 and also fined in 1662 for complicity with Cromwell! In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £8000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest, where he had been Chamberlain. In 1663 he was appointed as a justice of the peace for Selkirkshire. He was also recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Isobel, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony and was succeeded by his son Sir Francis. Other children were: David, who was buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1659; Walter, who held Howparisley briefly; Jean, who married Sir James Hay of Linplume; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Bannerman of Elsick; and Mary, who married Sir William Primrose of Carrington. He may also be the Patrick whose wife Agnes had a testament in 1637. Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw (17th C.) son of George of Kirkstyle and Catherine Montcrief. He was descended from the Scotts of Balwearie, through a son, Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle in Perthshire; Col. Walter, last Scott of Balwearie, who died unmarried in Flanders in the reign of Charles II, sent him the seal of the Balwearie family; however, similarity of Christian names, and a statement of close kinship by Scott of Satchells suggests instead, or additionally, a relationship with the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was described as ‘writer of Edinburgh’ from about 1638 and through the 1640s, when he dealt with city business for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and by 1652 he was ‘now of Langshaw’. He sold Kirkstyle in Perthshire and purchased Langshaw (although it is unclear if these were the lands in South Lanarkshire, or the place north of Galashiels). He may also later have acquired the lands and barony of Ancrum (although perhaps the first connection may have been through his son Sir John). He was also previously ‘of Eddrington’, and had a crown charter of Langshaw in 1653. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, as well as being described as ‘wryter in Edinburgh, our servitor’, when he witnessed the document. He was recorded in various documents in the Melrose Regality records in the period 1657–61. He served as ‘receiver general’ for the Buccleuch estates in at least the period 1650–72. He was recorded as ‘of Langshaw’ in a deed of 1663. He may be the Patrick, writer in Edinburgh, who had a discharge from the treasurer of Selkirk in 1664/5 for his pension. He may also be the Edinburgh writer recorded in deeds in 1663. He was Chamberlain for the Lordship of Dalkeith in at least the period 1669–74. There were legal proceedings against his son by the Duchess of Buccleuch 1673–1704 over an embezzlement he is alleged to have committed. He may be the same Patrick described as the Earl of Buccleuch’s attendant in 1636–38, and was factor in at least the period 1638–41 and 1650–56. He was recorded in deeds in 1673. In 1629 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Simson, sister of David Simson of ‘Monturpie’ and they had 3 sons and 1 daughter. In 1647 he secondly married ‘Cicilie Drurie’ (or Cicely Drury), daughter of Sir Robert Drury of Rugham, and widow of George Douglas, Doctor of Divinity; with her he had 1 more daughter.
His children were: Sir John, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, who married Elizabeth Scott of Mangerton; James, who died without issue; Francis of Langshaw; Agnes, who married William Douglas of Ardet (and may be the Agnes who later married John Wilkie, merchant in Edinburgh), and was mother of Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie; and Cicely, who married Charles Kerr of Abbotrue in 1666, and whose daughter married John Scott of Gorrenberr. Patrick, ‘lawful son of the said Patrick Scott of Langshaw’ is recorded as witness to a document for Mary, Countess of Buccleuch in 1658 and in deeds of 1663 and 1682, and so must have been another son. Francis of Colmslie was caution for a bond for the ‘deceased Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh’ according to a case heard in Melrose in 1683; this may well have been him. Sir Patrick of Longnewton and Ancrum (d.1734) son of Sir John (he is easy to confuse with his grandfather Patrick of Langshaw). He became an advocate in 1676 and was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1685. He was ‘feir’ of Ancrum in 1678 when he paid the land tax on the whole value of Longnewton Parish (valued at more than £2000). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eckford in 1689–95. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.P.s.) for Roxburghshire 1685–86 and was appointed again in 1689, but replaced in 1693 for absence; this is surely related to the politics of the day. In 1690 (before he succeeded to Ancrum) and in 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he held the ‘teinds’ of the Baronie of Eckford and the ‘tacks’ of the lands of Lemtlaw and ‘Langtoune’ (probably Longnewton) owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1694 he paid tax on 10 hearths at his house in Langnewton. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his daughter Elizabeth. There are some existing letters between him and his brother William and son John from 1709. He married Anne, daughter of William Wallace of Helington. His wife was wealthy, but they had no issue. In 1680 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Harden. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; William, who became an advocate, marrying Anne, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Barton and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie of Blackhill; Christian, who married John Pringle of Whytbank; Elizabeth, who married George Douglas of Friarshaw; Anna; Jean, married David Muirhead of Linhouse and secondly James Gartshore; and Margaret, who died unmarried. Some correspondence exists in the National Archives between him and family members. Patrick, W.S. (d.1711) nephew of Hercules Scott, who was a merchant in Edinburgh. He is easy to confuse with Patrick of Langshaw and Patrick of Langnewton. He trained a lawyer, being apprenticed to Robert Innes and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1699. He married Elizabeth Marrichael. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1691 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Although hard to read, his wife’s name is Janet ... [possibly Paterson]. Patrick (18th C.) son of Walter, minister at Westruther. His brother Francis also served as minister at Westruther. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howe to Patrick Hardie. It is unclear what his connection to the family was. Patrick (18th C.) eldest lawful son of Francis of Alton. He was ‘younger of Alton’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter of Newton, who may well have been related), for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott (who may also have been closely related). He was recorded in 1742 agreeing to his father’s sale of the lands of Alton to John Horsburgh of that Ilk. It is possible he was the Patrick who witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. He may be the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains in Wilton Parish in 1751. Patrick (d.bef. 1762) miller in Bedrule parish, recorded in 1762 when his daughter Janet married John Turnbull, wright, in Edinburgh. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is sometimes recorded as ‘Peter’. He is listed on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls at Whitlaw. He was probably the ‘Patrick Scot in Borthaugh’ described as tenant farmer in Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd; this suggests he was directly related to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh. He may have been the Patrick, son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, born in Hawick in 1728. He seems likely to have been the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains (perhaps from the Gledstains of Whitlaw family) in Wilton Parish in 1751. Peter (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Monze’ when he was Chamberlain for Strathearn, according to the Exchequer Rolls for Peter (16th/17th C.) ‘son natural’ of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 his father was caution for him, his half-brother Robert and Walter of Whitslade that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphop’ and his sons. In 1609 he was among the men (under Walter of Headshaw) whom his father and brother Robert and their tenants were bound not to reset. Sir Robert and the others were then fined for resetting him and the other men. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Peter (d.bef. 1654) referred to as being ‘of Cowdhome’ in an act of caution of 1654, preserved in the records of Jedburgh Sheriff Court. Capt. Walter Scott (the later poet) complained against his records of Jedburgh Sheriff Court. Peter (17th/18th C.) probably a Hawick Councillor. In 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the ‘stent’ in the area ‘west the water’, suggesting he lived in the West-end. Peter in Whitlaw (see Patrick). Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Ancrum Mill in 1797, when he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Clarilaw in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Peter (b.1826/7) born in Hawick Parish. In 1861 he was a ‘Game Watcher’, living at ‘Hill House (Wood)’ in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen. Peter (19th C.) coachman to Robert F. Watson in Hawick in the 1860s to 80s. Peter (1852–1925) hosiery manufacturer, born in Hawick, with residence at Norwood. He was son of George, grocer at 19 Howegate, and his brother Tom was Cornet in 1887. He started work at age 13 for Peter Laidlaw at Wilton Grove, eventually taking over the small frame shop. He founded Peter Scott & Co. in 1878, with Mr. Adamson as his partner, although it was not until 1899 that he established the ‘Pesco’ brand of underwear. The expansion of the company after that was explosive. He was Chairman of the Scottish Hosiery Association, and served on several committees during WWI. He was also President of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association, and a Director of the South of Scotland Manufacturers’ Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. He bought about 6 hectares of land on Sunnyhill, at the top of Roadhead and there had the villa Norwood built for him in 1904, designed by J.P. Alison; Norwood would be owned by the family until 1964. The gatehouse Norwood Lodge was built about the same time, with the adjacent Woodgate and Langlee built in about 1907. He was also a keen bowler, acting as President of the Buccleuch Bowling Club and took part in a bowling tour of Canada in 1910. He and his brother George were also noted draughts players. He gifted the ‘Beechwood’ and ‘Norwood’ trophies, which were competed for among the local clubs. He also gifted an organ to St. George’s Kirk in 1919 in memory of his daughter Bessie. In 1876 at Wilton Dean, he married Mary, daughter of James Brydon from Castleton. Their children were: George (1879–1940), who was a director in the family firm; Esther Laidlaw (b.1880), who died young; Marion Adamson (1886–1963), who never married; Jeanie (b.1887); Bessie (1890–1917); and James Brydon (1894–1958), also a company director at Pesco’s. It is said that he was well liked in the town and proud of his ‘guitterbluid’ heritage. He died suddenly while on holiday in the south of France, and his funeral procession was one of the biggest ever to be seen in Hawick. Peter Brydon (1920–43) son of James Brydon and grandson of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He served with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, having the rank of Lieutenant. He died while in Burma and there is a baptismal font in his memory in Denholm Kirk. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Philip of Heap (15th/16th C.) described as ‘Philip Scot of Hoip’ in 1508 when he witnessed a sasine of lands at Synton. He must have been closely related to David of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1479, and Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. He was in turn succeeded by Walter, who gained the lands of Wester Heap in 1532. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded as a sergeant at the Court in Jedburgh in 1502. Perhaps the same Philip was recorded in 1530 acting for Thomas Forest when he rented part of the lands of Philiphaugh from Robert Turnbull. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Philip of Headshaw (d.c.1531) son of Walter of Headshaw, who he succeeded. He is recorded as ‘of Aidschaw’ in 1510 when his brother Thomas was convicted of being part of the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting that some of them.
were closely related. He was on the 1517 ‘re-tour’ for Sir Walter of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and a son of the Gledstains family; he is there ‘Philp Scot of Eadschaw’. He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his son Walter also listed). And in 1527 he was among the Lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskevod’. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In a document of 1531 he assigned to his 2nd son Robert the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, which he held in tack from Queen Margaret; his brother William of Ormiston ‘sought instruments’. Also in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. In 1532 his widow, Isabel Murray was involved in a dispute with his son and heir, Walter; James Pringle and Walter in Synton represented his wife, while Philip Riddell and William in Harden represented his son. In a further dispute in 1535, Isabel mother is described as the stepmother of Walter, and hence she must have been his second wife. He was succeeded by his son Walter of Headshaw and also had another son, Robert (who is recorded as brother of Walter in 1541/2). Philip (16th C.) tenant in Dryhope and ‘Farmynhop’ in 1541. Probably the same Philip in ‘Dryhoupe’ was accused (along with Robert of Howpasley) by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there, and William sought restitution through the efforts of John Murray of Kershope. Perhaps the same Philip witnessed a transaction for John Scott of Thirlestane in 1539. He was ‘of Drihoup’ in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction where Robert of Howpasley leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgellish in Deuchar. Immediately afterwards Dalgellish leased half of Whitelaw to John, who appears to have been his son. In the In 1564 he was listed as ‘Philip Scot of Drihoup’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may be related to the later Philip of Dryhope. Philip (16th C.) tenant of Todswawhil recorded in 1549 as the first of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when they complained about their farms being raided and burned by the Kers. Either he or Philip in Wiltonburn could have been father of ‘Philip’s Jock’. Philip (16th C.) tenant in Wiltonburn in 1549 when he was among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who complained about the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others. It is possible that he was father of ‘Philip’s Jock’ recorded in the 1570s. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as son of the deceased Hector in Selkirk when he promised a promise by ‘Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw’. Philip (16th C.) brother of Scott of Hassendean, as well as brother of William. In 1580 he was ‘bother german to Scot of Scotts in Dryhope’ when he witnessed a declaration in Selkirk involving Walter of Stirches. In 1583/4 he was brother ‘to Scot of Hassendean among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time, since David was murdered in 1564 and is usually said to have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. Philip of Kirkhope (16th C.) son of John of Thirlestane, and younger brother of Robert, who succeeded. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been the 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. Since she had 2 other husbands, this presumably means that he died relatively young, and is said to have had no children. Philip of Dryhope (d.bef. 1632) probably son or brother of John. He is sometimes stated as the father of Mary, ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but she was probably his sister. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1591 he purchased half of Stanhope in Peeblesshire and sold it again in 1600. In 1591 Walter of Tushielaw served as surety for him. He purchased the lands of Glen-sax from Alexander Horsburgh in 1600. He was ‘of Dryhoip’ when denounced as a rebel in 1592 for his part in the Falkland Raid (and Dryhope was ordered to be demolished at about the same time); his brother Andrew was a signatory to the bond of caution for him by John Hay of Smithfield. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Scott of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1610 there is a bond of caution for him and his sons Philip and William.
In 1611 he gave back (presumably following re-payment of a debt) the lands of Midshiels, Apple-treehall, Coitlaw and Crawhill to Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border and was also on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Additionally in 1612 he was listed among Scots and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. His brother James (and son William) are recorded in 1617. In 1618 he was listed as one of the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood. He is ‘recorded as ‘elder of Dryhoip’ in charters of 1618 and 1621 and in 1621 when the Hays of Smithfield complained he had not settled a debt. He married Margaret, and his eldest son was Robert, although he was succeeded in the Lairdship of Dryhope by his son Philip. Another son William was complained about in 1612 and 1617 and witnessed a charter in 1618. In 1620 both Philip elder and Philip younger were vited by the tailors of Edinburgh for not paying them. In 1628 he resigned his half of the lands of Glessax. Note that these generations are quite confused (Keith Scott suggests there were 2 generations of Philips of Dryhope, father and son, but it is unclear when the son succeeded). Philip of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) possibly the same man as Philip of Dryhope. He is recorded in 1627, but by 1630 the lands of Oakwood had passed to a Murray, possibly of the Elibank family. The lands of Oakwood later became part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden.

Philip of Dryhope (17th C.) younger brother of Walter, the previous Laird (recorded in 1669). He may also have been brother of the Laird before, Robert, and hence a younger son of William. He was the last Scott Laird of Dryhope. It is possible he is the Burgess of that name recorded in Selkirk in 1665 and the witness recorded there in 1683. Philip (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to Sir William of Harden. He is recorded in 1692–1716 as factor for the lands in Selkirkshire and in 1704 when his son Walter became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In the 1720 Hawick Parish records he is stated to have been lately Chamberlain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 his eldest son Walter married Sara, daughter of Walter Scott, also an apothecary in Hawick. He may be the Philip ‘in Whitmurehall’ recorded in a bond with the Scotts of Harden in 1687 and a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1700. Perhaps he was the same as the Philip ‘in Oakwood’ who was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded being in Cogsmill in 1709 when he married Margaret Riddell in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1709, in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He was still tenant there according to other discharges of 1719 and 1729, as well as a bond in 1725. He was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. Probably the same Philip was in Oakwood in 1732 when he borrowed money from the Selkirk Merchant Company; it was due for repayment in 1736, but he had still nor paid it back by 1738. He was surely related to James, who was recorded in Aikwood at the end of the 17th century. Philip (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrigg’ in 1753 when he was paid by Scott of Buccleuch for acting as gamekeeper. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Scotts of Todrig. Rachel nee Langlands (17th/18th C.) described as ‘of Wilton’, so she was probably daughter of one of the last Langlands Lairds. She married Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, probably in the mid-1680s. She had a ‘bond of provision’ from her husband in 1696. However, Charles died about a couple of years later. She is probably the same Rachel who secondly married Francis Elliot of Fenwick. Her children included Walter (who succeeded to Crumhaugh) and probably James, who was a surgeon in Hawick. Rebecca (18th C.) paid the window tax for Midshiels in 1748. She is ‘Rebecca Scott Medsheils’. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts, but perhaps was connected to the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who sold Midshiels in about the mid-18th century. Reginald (13th C.) recorded as ‘Reginaldus le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a case in the town of ‘Lowick’. Richard (12th C.) probably the son of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He witnessed a charter by the Bishop of St. Andrews to Holyrood Abbey in 1158 (although the charter is now lost, and so there is no proof that he was son of Uchtred). He was succeeded by his son Richard. Another son was probably Sir Michael, ancestor of the Scotts of Balcwearie. Richard (12th/13th C.) son of Richard and probably grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He married Alicia, daughter of Henry and Eschina de Molla (or Molle). He and his wife received lands in Roxburgh in the reign of Alexander II. He may thus have been the first Scott to be associated with Roxburghshire, and was referred to as Richard ‘of Molle’. Sometime between 1185 and 1215 he granted lands in Mow to Kelso Abbey; he is referred to there as ‘son of Anselm of Mow’ (so perhaps there are 2 Richard Scotts confounded here, or ‘son’ meant ‘son-in-law’). He was also referred to in charters of c.1190 for lands adjacent to his in Mow. He was succeeded by his son William. It is also possible that Almer Scott of Mow, recorded about the same time, was also related to him. Richard (12th/13th C.) recorded in a court case in London in 1220. He was caught with the stolen seal of Walter de Morton, and was ordered to be hanged for the crime. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1236 along with Walter and Robert, his brother. They were accused of attacking Eustace (Bailiff of the Abbot of ‘Burgo’), beating him, killing his horse, and imprisoning his servant. The Sheriff of Northampton was commanded to make them appear at Westminster. It is unclear how they were related to other Scotts. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1244 when the Sheriff of Huntingdon commanded him to give a knight’s fee to John Baliol. Richard (13th C.) recorded in Leicester in 1262 as ‘son of Robert Scot junior’ when he gave a mark for an assize. Richard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Northumberland in 1265. He could be the same as Richard ‘le Scot’ who was listed in 1255/6, along with his wife Margery, in a court case in Northumberland. He may also be the ‘Richard Scot, essoin’ of Roger Bertram listed in a plea in Northumberland in 1258/9. Richard (13th C.) son and heir of Lucas ‘le Escot’ of Dunwich, recorded in a document relating to Norfolk in 1267/8. In 1268/9 he was Richard ‘le Scot of Dunwich’ when he was recorded in relation to money due to the English King’s Exchequer from Dunwich in Suffolk. He was also recorded in 1271 in relation to a ship that he claimed had been owned by his father Lucas. In 1272 he accused someone at Stratford of the murder of his cousin Robert ‘le Escot’ (son of Gerald). Also in 1272 he was accused of stealing a cask of wine from someone in Dunwich and paid 20 shillings for a writ. Sir Richard (c.1265–1320) Laird of Rankilburn (synonymous with Buccleuch) and Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) in Lanarkshire. He was probably son of William, but these early generations are quite uncertain; however, from him onwards, the genealogy of the Scotts of Buccleuch is generally considered to be secure. Capt. Walter says that he originally resided at Scottstoun in Peeblesshire. He swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296 (in the Ragman Rolls) under the name ‘Richard Le Scot de Murthoxtoun’, in the County of Lanark; 9 other people of the same surname are also recorded, with Alexander ‘de Pertheyk’ also being from Lanarkshire, and William (no designation given) being the only one from Roxburghshire. His seal bore a lion rampant ‘regardant’ and the name ‘S’RICARDI SCOTT’. He may have been the first Scott to have local lands, at Rankilburn, sometime before 1296. These may be the lands in Selkirkshire that were restored to him (assuming it is the same Richard) in 1296. He may have held these lands as Ranger of the King’s Forest. He may be the Richard who also swore fealty to King Edward in 1304. He acquired the Barony of Murdostoun (in Lanark) by marriage with the English heiress. As a result the crescent and stars of the Scott arms were placed on the bend of Murdostoun thereafter. He was probably father of Sir Michael of Rankilburn and Murthockstone and possibly also of John (ancestor of the first Scotts of Synton, although this may have been his grandson). The Walter ‘le Scot’ who also swore fealty to Edward in 1296 may have been his brother (perhaps older brother), and held lands in Peebles. An English record of 1302 pardons Eustace de Fenham for the death of William, son of Richard Scott, on account of his service on the coast of Scotland; this may have been his son. For some reason his Christian name was not used afterwards by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Richard (d.bef. 1420) Bailie of Dundee recorded in the period 1386–1405 according to the Exchequer Rolls. He was ‘Clerk of Cocket of Dundee’ in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1397–20. He thus held the seal for issuing customs documents. He was responsible for rendering the accounts of the Bailies of Dundee, and was also paid for numbering animal skins there. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Rev. Richard (1641–1722) 3rd son of George, the last of the old Scotts of Synton, with his mother being Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whittle. His brother was George of Boonraw. He was educated in Edinburgh, receiving his M.A. in 1658 and becoming minister at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire in 1675. He became minister in his home Parish of Ashkirk in 1685. However, he was deprived of his living in 1689 for refusing to read the Proclamation of the Estates and to pray for William and Mary, i.e. being an Episcopalian (or a Jacobite). He married Katherine Crichton and their children included Jean, who married Alexander Leslie, an Aberdeen advocate and secondly married Alexander Abercrombie of Fetterneir; she is mentioned in a disposition of 1724 as a widow of Abercrombie. He is recorded being resident in Lady Yester’s parish in Edinburgh along with his wife and daughter in 1694. He died in Edinburgh without male issue. It has been suggested that he may have helped Scott of Satchells with his ‘True History’. His year of death is sometimes incorrectly given as 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) said to be a younger son of George of Boonraw, and brother of Archibald, the last Laird of Boonraw. If he existed it would prove the claim that Charlie of the Crescent was descended from the Scotts of Boonraw. He was said (by James Haining) to have married a daughter of Charles ‘Ogilvy’ (although it is unclear who this might have been, perhaps a different Ogilvie). It is possible he was the Richard who (along with George) witnessed a baptism in 1721 for John Turnbull in Wester Groundistone and who (also with George) in 1724 witnessed a baptism for George in Groundistone and in 1729 (also along with George) witnessed another baptism for a different George in Groundistone. It is possible he was the Richard whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1703), who may have married Alexander Purdon in Hawick in 1725; Bessy (b.1705); Janet (b.1707); and Agnes (b.1710). He may also be the Richard, married to Margaret Scott, whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Richard (b.1717); and William (b.1720). Rev. Richard (1729–90) son of John, minister of Stenhouse. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, licensed by the Presbytery of Peebles in 1752 and ordained at Cranshaws in 1759. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1761 and remained there until he died. He was said to have been ‘mild and gentle in manner’, but ‘fervent in the divine service’. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785 and 1787. In 1761 he married Mary Turnbull, and she died in 1796. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Janet (b.1762), who married William Irvine; James (b.1764), a merchant in New York; Hector (b.1766); John (b.1768), who died young; Anne (b.1768), a twin to John; John (again, b.1771), merchant in London; Martha (b.1774); and George (b.1778), also merchant in London. He wrote ‘Letters on the Culture of Potatoes’.

Richard (18th C.) married Helen Rae in Wilton in 1859. Richard (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick Parish. The mother was Mary Rutherford and ‘Forni’ was indicated beside the entry. The witnesses were Walter of Boghall (perhaps his father) and carrier Walter Purdon. Richard (b.1889) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a warehouse foreman in Hawick and later became a publican. In 1916 he married Elizabeth Anderson Ballantyne (1892–1977), whose father was a mill foreman, brother was killed at the Somme and paternal grandfather was Burgh Chamberlain in Galashiels (all called Andrew). His daughter Margaret Dobson (1920–2018) married Richard Street and was known for her efforts to protect Scottish heritage.

Richard Edmondson ‘Dick’ (1910–1991) local artist, writer and historian. He was son of Bailie Francis, married Agnes Townsend and was father of Francis Townsend (Frank) and Elizabeth Anne (Anne). Born at 26 High Street, he left school at 14 to work for Watsons, then worked in the family painters and decorators from about 1935. During WWII he served in the Physical Training Corps, but did not enjoy his forced exile from Hawick. In the mid-1950s he became a reporter with the Hawick Express, eventually taking over as editor from John Hood. He was the anonymous writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for the years 1961–83. As an artist he was responsible for hundreds of Hawick scenes, usually in watercolour, signing as ‘R.E. Scott’. He exhibited at Art Club shows regularly for decades, as well as having paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1943 and 1944. And as a sign-writer his work was a familiar sight around Hawick for several decades. He was a successful sprinter with the Teviotdale Harriers in the 1930s, being club 100 yards champion in 1930, 1935, 1936 and 1937. He won the Common Riding sprint in 1930, the 120 yards handicap and 100 yard scratch race at the 1937 Lauder Common Riding on the same day, was Border 120 yards champion in 1936 and 1937 and 100 yards champion in 1937 and won a 100 yards handicap event at Clyde F.C. Sports in 1938. He was also a member of the Hawick Swimming Club, becoming Club President, Secretary and Captain. He had a 28 year connection with the Scouting movement, helping set up the first Cub troop in the late 1920s and becoming a local Cub Scout Commissioner. He was a member of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for many years, and was also a member of the P.S.A. Choir and the Masons. He spent much of his ‘spare’ time trekking the local hills with his wife Agnes. He wrote ‘The Companion to Hawick’ (1970, revised 1981), ‘Hawick’s Honorary Burgess since 1734’ (1974), ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbulls’ (1977) and ‘A Hundred Years are Gane and Mair, A History of Hawick Burns Club 1878–1978’ (1978), as well as many articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. He was Secretary, Syllabus Secretary, Transactions Editor and President of the Archaeological Society, giving 50 years of service. In 1967 he became Curator of the Museum, revelling in this job, and living in the flat on the top floor of Wilton Lodge until his retirement in 1975. He was known for his modest nature and for being an enthusiastic and meticulous local historian of his day, questions being referred to him long after his retirement - ‘...So Hawick folk both young and old, never forget Dick Scott: In praises, he deserved far more than those he ever got’ [IWL]. Robert (12th C.) witness to a grant of lands in Kinross-shire to St. Andrews Priory in the 1170s. Robert (12th C.) recorded in a record of Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire in 1189/90 as ‘Robert le Scot in Alliceshira’. The Sheriff of those counties gave account for his lands there. Robert (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Walter, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’, messenger, when there was a writ in 1242 for his payment of 1 mark for his expenses by King Henry’s gift. Robert (13th C.) recorded as Robert ‘le Scot’ of Hecham in a document of 1290 relating to the Priory of Lewes (presumably the one in Sussex). His lands may have been at Hecham. He was married to ‘Cristiana Atelhalegat’. Their son John acknowledged in the document that he was ‘servus’ and ‘rusticus’ of the Prior. He could be the same as ‘Robertum Scot’ and ‘Robertus le Scot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unknown if he was related to other Scotts. Robert (13th C.) recorded in 1296 in a case relating to Richard of Whiteacre. This was among cases at a court of the English army held at Roxburgh. Probably the same Robert (along with William) was paid in 1307/8 for acting as messenger from Cumnock, to Ayr and then to Lanark. Robert (c.13th C.) landholder in Dumfries mentioned in an undated document of Kelso Abbey. Robert (bef. 1346–c.89) 3rd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch) and also of Kirkurd and Mudieestoun. He was probably son of Sir Michael (although these early generations are still murky). His brother John was probably the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden and Raeburn. Little is known about him, probably because this was a relatively peaceful period in Scottish history! He lived for more than 40 years after succeeding his father. He held the lands in Selkirkshire, as well as those older lands in Peeblesshire and the lands in Lanarkshire that had been acquired through marriage. It is possible that he died at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, although there are no records to support this. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter, who had a charter for the superiority of Kirkurd in 1389. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in 1410 as a former owner of the lands of ‘Borthwic’ and ‘Thoftcotys’ in the Borthwick valley. Since the first record of the name ‘Roberton’ was only a few years earlier, it is possible that the area was named after his house there. It is stated that the lands were conferred on Sir William ‘of Borthwic’ on resignation by him. Hence it is possible there was a connection between the first of the Borthwick family and the Scotts. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch and possibly related to the later Scotts of Roberton and Borthwick. Robert (d.1426) 5th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), he succeeded his father, the first Sir Walter Scott, who died at Homildon Hill. He is named as the superior of the lands of Kirkurd in a charter for Ladyurd in 1406. In 1406/7 he confirmed a charter, as Lord of ‘Murfoustoun’ for lands in the Barony of Kirkurd. In 1410 he is probably the Robert who resigned his lands of Borthwick and ‘Thoft Cotys’ (possible Hoscote) into the hands of Robert, Duke of Albany, so that they could be granted to Sir William of Borthwick; however, this may have been a regranting, and it is unclear how long he may have held these Borthwick lands. In 1415 he exchanged his lands of ‘wynzehope’ called Glenkerry (on the Timawater) for lands at ‘Bellinden’ (i.e. Bellendean) with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This was with permission of his son Walter, and they kept fishing an hunting rights in their old lands. He also acquired half the lands of Braxholme from John Inglis in 1420, thereby becoming the first Scott of Braxholme. In 1426 he granted Lempitlaw to his son Walter, shortly before he died. He is also probably the Robert ‘of Murthar and Liston’ (probably a transcription error for ‘Muthokston’) who witnessed an undated charter whereby John Inglis of Manor and Braxholme granted ‘Kyrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. Other sons were probably Stephen of Castelaw and Burrellands and Robert of Haining. His 1415 seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star and the words ‘SIGILUM ROBERTI SCOTT’; this is the earliest known seal for the main branch of the family. Robert (15th C.) listed as a Bailie of Hawick (along with Thomas Blair) among the witnesses to the sasine of 1452 regranting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Presumably the same man is described as a Burgess (probably of Hawick) in 1454 when he was witness to a legal instrument relating to lands in Eckford, which was witnessed in a tenement of 'John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic'. It is unclear how exactly he was related to the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch, but this establishes that there were Scotts within the Burgh from its very earliest days. Robert of Todshaw (15th C.) name in an 'instrument of obligation' from King James III in 1463/4 for the sum of 1200 merks Scots. This was in payment equivalent to the 50 merks of money and 50 merks of land promised for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, brother of the Earl of Douglas. He may be the Robert who in 1463 was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. He is probably the same as Robert of 'Togehaugh' (i.e. Todshawhalch) who witnessed a charter for the lands of Whitchester in 1484. It seems likely that his lands were at Todshawhalch (rather than what was later called Todshaw). Perhaps the same ‘Robertus scot in todshawhalch’ was able to ‘compone’ in 1493, along with John Turnbull in Hawick for the crime of bringing in Englishmen; his surety was the Laird of Howpasley. Robert of Eilrig (15th C.) leased the lands of Craik from Alexander Cockburn of Ormiston in 1477 for 6 years. Cockburn also appointed him as ‘Bailie’ of those lands, with the power to holds courts etc. Robert (15th C.) recorded as customs officer in Arbroath in the period 1481–96. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Robert of Muirhouse and Whames (d.c.1505) son of Stephen. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Murhaus’ (i.e. Muirhouse near Edinburgh) in 1464. He is recorded in 1482 being sold the land of ‘Underchesters’ (probably adjacent to Highchesters) by Henry Wardlaw, at that time still Baron of Wilton. The ‘Murehouse’ was in the Barony of Crichton (now in Midlothian) and not the place near Dryfesdale in Dumfriesshire (where there was a connection in the next couple of generations), or the area near Lilliard’s Edge. He is probably the same Robert, son and heir of Stephen of Muirhouse, who witnessed a 1453 sasine at Milington. This Stephen seems was also referred to as being of Castlelaw, who was a brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He is probably the Robert ‘of Dochquaich’ who repaid the loan on the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1477 (which had involved Stephen of Muirhouse 15 years earlier). It also seems likely he was related to the Howpasley and Thirlestane branches; John of Thirlestane received the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw in 1483. He is ‘roberti de quhamys’ in 1493 when his brother Alexander was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing livestock. He is probably the Robert ‘in Quhommis’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, along with ‘Thome Howate’ had their fines remitted. His son and heir George had an instrument in 1505/6 where he claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse. Robert of Cockerheugh (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Cockerhaucht’ when witness to a charter of 1484/5 when Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He was probably closely related to the Scotts of Hassendean. Robert of Bowerhouse (15th C.) mentioned in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing sheep from him. He is recorded being ‘de bourhous’, which is probably Bowerhouse, perhaps the one near Lauder. Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester (d.bef. 1506) 3rd son of Sir David, 7th Laird of Buccleuch. By 1471/2 he was the 2nd surviving son of Sir David (the oldest son Walter having died) when he was named in the marriage contract between his brother David and Jane Douglas; if David died, then he was to marry Jane, sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. He may be the ‘Roberto Scot’ who witnessed the document passing Mangerton from the Armstrongs to David of Buccleuch in 1482. He received Whitchester from his father in 1483, with a charter of the lands and lordship following in 1484/5. He resigned them back to his father shortly afterwards, apparently so that Sir David could arrange the entail of his lands. Following the death of his brother David (whose son Walter would succeed to the Buccleuch titles) he became increasingly important in the running of his father’s affairs. In 1484 he was, with his father, granted the Bailiary of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey (meaning that they administered the lands financially and judicially). He is recorded as son of David of Buccleuch when he leased the Crown lands of Wintervale in 1483. The lease continued in 1488, along with William Roger, with Sir David of Buccleuch as pledge, and continued further in 1490 and 1492. In 1487 he was procurator for his father when he resigned his lands into the hands of the King. In 1488 he and his father were thanked... for their servitude to the King at the Battle of Blackness, with the Barony of Branhholme being re-granted and him named as second in line, after his nephew Walter (who became Lord of Branhholme and Buccleuch). Also in 1488 he leased the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne for 19 years from Sir Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the ‘Robert Scot of Branhholme’ who is recorded in a sasine of 1490 purchasing land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He features prominently in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme in 1491/2, being given £40 and appointed as ‘tutor’ for Sir David’s heir Walter (his nephew), as well as a ‘tutor’ for William Turnbull of Minto. In 1491/2 he was ‘of Quhytchester’ when he witnessed a sasine for William Douglas of Cavers. In 1492 his nephew Walter assigned to him all the moveable goods of his father Sir David, in order to pay off debts etc. In 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, he served as surety for: Robert, son of Gilbert Elliot; Alexander, brother of Robert of Whames; Thomas Brown in Minto; Walter of Howpsley; William, son of William of Goldielands; John Melrose in Whithaugh; George Waugh in Hawick; John Davidson in Minto; and others. In 1494/5 he was Robert ‘of Quhitchester’ when he served was surety for Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, John of Doloraine, David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick, and George Fawlaw in Hawick. That same year he ‘was permitted to compound’ (i.e. pay a fine) for the slaughter of Adam Crawford and for associating with Alexander Jardine, who was a rebel; the Laird of Buccleuch was surety for him. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also Robert ‘of Allanhaugh’ in 1494/5 when, along with Adam in Annelshope, he was surety for John in Erncluch. In 1498/9 he had remision from the King for communing with and assisting rebels and for other crimes. In 1499 he was ‘de Quhitchester’ when he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. He was one of the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. He is recorded in a bond of 1500, where Walter Scott of Branhholme (his nephew and superior) held his tenancy of the lands of Whitchesters until he repaid a debt to Alexander Cockburn of Ormiston Hall; however, it is possible that this was his son rather than him. He is probably the ‘Robertus scot de allanehalch’ who was surety in 1502 for Alexander Weens and was fined for the non-appearance of Weens at court in Jedburgh. Also in 1502, at the Justice-aire in Peebles, he was surety for Alexander in Hopeton, who may have been the same man as his son Alexander. Additionally, along with Patrick Dickson, he was joint surety in Edinburgh for entering George Dickson for the murder of Simon Dickson. He may have married Christi-

In 1484/5 he is described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a Sasine giving the lands of Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme, and in the same year he is ‘in Hanyn’ when he witnessed the charter giving Whitchesters to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh (with Adam listed after him, so possibly a son). In 1486 it is stated in the Exchequer Rolls that he held the Haining for life. He was appointed as one of the bailies in 1488 for the leasing of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne by Robert Scott from Sir Thomas Turnbull; he was there referred to as ‘Roberto Scot de Hanyn’. His son Robert was witness to a related document in 1488 and was also ‘junior’ in 1492 when he and his mother Janet had a 3 year lease on the Haining. In 1489 he was on the return panel for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. Either he or his son was ‘Robertum Scot de Hanyn’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 he was recorded when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining (with his son John also having sheep stolen). He is the ‘Robert Scot in Hanyn’ listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he witnessed a Sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig. He was succeeded by John of Haining, who is recorded in 1510 and died at Flodden. His wife’s first name was Janet, but her surname is not recorded.

Robert (15th C.) bequeathed 12 sheep in the last will of Sir David of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is separate from Robert of Allanhaugh, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Horsleyhill (15th C.). William Elliot of Larriston is said to have married his daughter and thereby inherited Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he may have been related to other local Scotts; the Scotts of Horsleyhill of the 17th and 18th centuries were descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw, and so (presumably) not closely related. Robert (15th C.) first witness listed on the 1494 charter in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. He is listed as being of ‘Achinstacleich’, but it is uncertain where these lands were. It seems likely he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with Robert Edgar. The pair were already ‘at the horn’ when James Young in Eldinhope was convicted of resetting and communing with them. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of David, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was surety for James Laidlaw in ‘Wynterburn’ (possibly Winterburgh) who had remission for killing his cousin John Laidlaw from Wolfehope. It is possible he was Robert, son of the Laird of Buccleuch, but that Robert was recorded being of Whitchester when he served as surety in the same year; hence it seems more likely he was son of David, younger of Buccleuch, and hence brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. However, he could be son of some other David with a connection to Selkirkshire. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Philip and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Robert (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Robertum Scot’. 2 Johns are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Langhope. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1499, coming after Adam in Tushielaw in the list of payments made in Ettrick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Hartshaw (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1499 when his son Walter gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope was assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was. He may have been the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) occupier of the lands of Redford for 6 years prior to 1499, when they were let instead to the Comptroller, Patrick Home, and he had to pay the balance due. These were the 3 steadings of ‘Hindhop, Drycleuchshele, and Redefurd’ in Ettrick Forest, which may have been associated with what was later called Redfordgreen. He may be the Robert, who had payment for the ‘fermes’ of some Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in the period 1503–06. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500 to a document for Scott of Branxholme, relating to the lands of Whitchesters. He is recorded as being ‘de La Toure’, although it is unclear which tower. He may be related to Adam of Hermiston or Walter, son of James of Hassendean, who are also listed. He may be the same man as one of the other contemporary Roberts. It is possible that he is son of Robert of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh, and resided as the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick, which is mentioned in a document of 1507/8. He may be related to John ‘called of the Toor’, who is recorded in 1609. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lairs who is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded as ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’. It seems likely he was related to George, who owned Lairs at that time. Robert of Deloraine (15th/16th C.) son of John of Deloraine. In 1494/5 he was recorded as older son (‘filius senior’) of John when he served as surety for John Reid at the Justice- aire in Selkirk. He may have been tenant of Deloraine, rather than owner. Probably the same Robert ‘of Dalorian’ was recorded in 1494/5 when he received ‘remission’ along with David Lauder for assisting the King’s rebels etc. Also in 1494/5 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several rieving crimes (including stealing cows from Thomas Frissell, horses from Wolfhope and cows from Newark), with Walter of Howpasley as surety. He could also be the ‘Robertum Scot de Ettrick’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 in payments made to him. He was recorded in 1502 as being called ‘Bel- lit Robin’ (probably meaning that he was bald) when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Jedburgh court. In 1510 it must be the same man who is ‘Belde Robin Scot’ when the Lady of Bucleuch (Elizabeth Kerr, wife of Sir Walter, the 8th Laird) was surety for him, but fined for his non-appearance; he was denounced a rebel and his goods forfeited. His nickname suggests that he was bald-headed. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was fined £40 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was convicted at the same time for the crime done to Philip Fawlaw, who lived in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1516) possibly a son of the first Robert of Haining, although this is far from certain. He might be the Robert, son of Robert of Haining, who is recorded in 1486, 1488 and 1492. He was the first Scott of Oakwood, and is recorded as such in 1503 when he was witness to a pledge made by William Cranston of that Ilk at the Justice- aire in Selkirk. His children included: Michael, who succeeded; and Robert, who may have been grandfather of Simon of Bonnington. He may also have had a daughter Isabel, who married James Murray of Bowhill (whose daughter later transferred her lands to her uncle, Michael of Aikwood), Robert (d.bef. 1532) son of Robert of the Haining. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Weststeide de of Filchosyde’ in Et- trick Ward. He was witness to a document relating to the lease of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne in 1488. He is explicitly referred to as son of Robert of Haining (who was one of the bailies in that part for the precept associated with the same land transfer). In 1492 he is recorded as ‘Roberto Scot juniori’ when he and his mother leased the lands of Haining. It seems that Haining was later inherited by his brother John. He may be the same man as Robert of Aikwood. Robert of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot of Quhittheff’ when witness to a sasine in 1499 for George Douglas, Master of Angus. This is probably the Whitehaugh near Hawick, although this is not certain. He was probably related to David ‘in Qhithauch’ who is recorded in 1510 and perhaps the David who first gained Whitehaugh in 1479. He may have been related to the Scotts of Hap and Borithwick. Robert of Burnfoot (15th/16th C.) probably 3rd (or 4th) son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was referred to as ‘of Nether Newhall’ and later ‘of Burnfoot’, showing that these were once different names for the same estate. He is recorded in 1510/1 receiving the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean from his brother David of Has- sendean. He may have been succeeded by Adam. Robert of ‘Stirkshaws’ and Synton (d.bef. 1509) probably 2nd son of Walter of Synton and Stirk- shaws (Stirches), although there are varied interpretations in these generations. He must have had a tower at Stirches, and was certainly involved in the transfer of Harden land to William ‘Boltfoot’, who is the ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was later the 8th Laird of Synton, making it unclear whether he was the same man as Robert ‘in Synton’, or whether there were 2 contemporary Roberts, both associated with Synton. He is probably the Robert of Stirches to whom James Newton of Dalcove sold the lands of Boonraw for 300 merks in 1481; in the associated sasine of 1487 he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw (further complicating the genealogy). In 1499 he is described as ‘Roberti Scot in Langhop’ when his rental entry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1500 he was one of the men appointed to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was assigned the ‘Weststeid de Gild- hous, alias Dodbank’; he was described there as ‘Robert Scot [mortuus] de Stirkshaw’ (i.e., already dead, suggesting perhaps that there are 2 distinct Roberts of Stirches in this period) and the pledge was given by John, son of James Scott (probably of Kirkurd and Hassendean). He also refused the rental of Redford in 1501. In 1501/2 there is a bond of reversion with Alexander, Lord Home, in which he agreed to resign the lands of Harden on payment of £100 Scots at the alter of Wilton Kirk (however, it is unclear whether this happened). In 1502 he was ‘de stirkshawis’ when he served as surety for John in Hassendean at the Justice- aire in Selkirk. In 1504/5 he bought the ‘6 merkland of Bondraw old extent’ (i.e. Bournaw, perhaps repurchasing) from David Hoppinpre, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlemas; these lands had formerly belonged to James Newton of Dalcove, and he had a charter for the lands in 1505. In 1531 he was ‘Vat Scot daughters sone and ayr to unquhill George Vaych of Norcht Synton’, suggesting that he married a daughter of George Veitch, and thereby inherited part of Synton. His sons were Walter of Synton, William of Harden and David. He was killed by Andrew Crossar (i.e. Crozier), for which Crossar was drawn and hanged in 1509. He was probably dead by 1507/8 when Walter of Stiches (presumably his son) is recorded, and in 1510, when Walter, son of the deceased Robert, is mentioned holding lands in Synton, in an indenture between the Erskines and Kerrs. He was certainly deceased in 1512 when his son Walter transferred Harden to his other son William. David ‘Lady’ was recorded as tenant in Stiches in the early years of the 16th century, suggesting he may have been a close relative, possibly his son. In 1526 the long list of Borders men who had remission for their attack on the Earl of Arran contains ‘Walter Scot of Syntoun, William Scot in Hardane, David Scot his brother’, all of whom were probably his sons. Adam Scott is recorded as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton, and hence was probably married to one of his daughters. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as ‘Robertum Scott de Turri prope Selkirk’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s lands of Alemoor. His lands were clearly near Selkirk, but it is unclear whether they were a tower, or somewhere with a similar name. It is possible he was the same Robert mentioned being ‘de La Toue’ in a 1500 document. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw, brother of Philip, David, Simon, Walter and Thomas. He was tenant in Synton and is easily confused with Robert of Stiches, who was also sometimes ‘of Synton’. In 1493 and in 1494/5 he was surety for Hector Lauder, Laird of Todrig, who had been involved with a raid on Minto and other crimes. In 1502 he is Robert ‘in syntoun’ who, along with William in Fenwick, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. Also in 1502 he was surety for John in Whitehaugh, for John in Hermiston, for John in Walls (along with Walter of Headshaw), for William in Fenwick (when he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw) and for Patrick in Harwoodhill (when he was ‘in syntoun’). Additionally in 1502 he was ‘de stirkshawis’ when he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, who had stolen livestock from Hardern and wounded a man in Selkirk, and also (along with Walter of Howpasley) served as surety for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Harwoodhill’, for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and (with George Turnbull of Hallrule) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme. Robert of Haining (d. bef. 1532) son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden. He was served heir in 1514. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, who was still a minor when he died. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family. As part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is probably the Robert whose heirs are mentioned in 1527 when James ‘Mouss’, Burgess of Selkirk, resigned the fourth part of his lands of East Haining, which he held in bond from them. His son Thomas succeeded to Haining in 1538. Robert (16th C.) son of Adam of Tusielaw. He is mentioned in 1526, when Thomas McClellan of Bomby complained that his mother-in-law was removed by her son James Gordon of Lochinvar and delivered to him. Also in 1526 he was among Borderers listed having remission for the attack on the Earl of Arran; his father and brothers John and William were also listed. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Blindhaugh in 1535 when he witnessed a document at Drinkstone. This involved Robert in Howford requesting John in Drinkstone to vacate Drinkstone. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Howford (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was then ‘in Howford’ and warned John ‘in Dringstoun’ to vacate Drinkstone, which belonged heritably to him. John protested that he had valid possession consistent with the dues agreed to be paid to him. It is unclear how this dispute was resolved. Robert in Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses. The connections here may give a clue to the origins of the Scotts of Howford. In 1538 he witnessed (along with George in Blindhaugh) a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between his son Walter and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who appears to have been a sister of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). George in Blindhaugh was described as ‘gudschr’ (i.e. grandfather or other senior male relative) of his son Walter; it seems likely that George in Blindhaugh was his brother. An entry (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1540 makes it clear that Marion Dalgleish was his wife, and hence the marriage contract was between step-brother and stepsister. He is probably the Robert ‘in Howford’ recorded in 1544 when John, heir of the deceased James Gledstanes of Cocklaw complained that he and his tutor William Scott (perhaps an uncle) had made an arrangement for 6 1/2 husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed Gledstains 200 merks redemption money. Robert ‘Tutor of Howpasley’ (15th/16th C.) probably the 2nd or 3rd son of Alexander of Howpasley. He may be the Robert of Howpasley who in 1493 served as surety for Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole and may also be the Laird of Howpasley who was surety for Robert in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick. However, Walter of Howpasley (presumably his brother) is also recorded as surety for several people in 1493 and 1494/5, and it appears that both men were designated as Laird of these lands at the same time. He is probably the ‘Robertum Scot de Holpaslot’ who was on the 1517 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the lands of Braxholme. In 1524/5 he was ‘Tutor of Howpaslot’ when he was one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace. He was listed as ‘tutour to Howpaslot’ in the large number of Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his brother Simon also listed). In 1526 he was one of the men recorded in a protest by the superior of his lands, Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may also have been tutor to the Scotts of Buccleuch, like his brother Walter. In 1527 he was witness to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Braxholme and James Murray of Falahill. In 1527 he was among the local lairds, led by Sir Walter of Braxholme, given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he (along with other supporters of Buccleuch) was pardoned for crimes of treason and had his lands restored; this was at the instigation of Buccleuch, and the crimes referred to presumably included trying to capture the young King at Skirmish Field. He is ‘tutor of Howpaslot’ in 1528, when one of the arbitrators asked to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He also witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme and James Murray of Falahill in 1528. He is further recorded as witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands in 1528/9, where he is described as ‘Robert Scot, tutor of Howpaslet’ and holder of the lands of Craik. He is mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was the first of the Lairds of Roxburghshire listed as submitting themselves to the King’s will to keep peace on the Border. In 1532 he was still ‘tutor of Houpaslot’ when he was executor (along with George of Blindhaugh) for Janet of Howpasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primside a fee for the marriage of Janet to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun; he also promised to bind himself to ‘his beloved friend’ George of Blindhaugh, against payment for this dowry. A charter of 1532/3 transfers Midshiels and Appletreehall from Janet Scott (daughter of his brother Walter) to him. This is confirmed in a royal grant of 1536, Appletreehall and Midshiels formerly being held by his father (presumably Alexander of Howpasley). Robert (d.bef. 1539) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1539 his widow Elizabeth Forsyth gave her tenement and rigs in Selkirk to their daughter Elizabeth. James (who was probably a relative) pointed out that he already had liferent of the tenement. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert ‘Auld Hob o Riskenhope’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1557 when he paid rental on Shorthope in the Ettrick valley to the monks of Melrose. He was probably related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Thirlestane etc. Robert of Howpasley (d.bef. 1567) son of Sir Walter of Howpasley. His uncle Robert was his ‘tutor’ for many years; he was a minor until at least 1530. He is probably the Robert to whom in 1532 Janet (his mother) sold her 10 merklands of Birkeneside in Berwickshire, and which he then sold to Andrew Ker of Primside. In 1533 he (and presumably not his uncle), along with John of Thirlestane, entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Flemming (Chamberlain of Scotland). Also in 1533 he and Philip in Dryhope were accused by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there. In 1539 he and Ninian Anderson received 289 sheep on behalf of Thomas Marjoribanks, which Patrick Murray of Falahill, ‘Sanders'
Murray and James Grieve owed to the King’s grace. He is probably the Robert of Howpasley who had 6 particates of land within Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He had the lands of Howpasley confirmed to him and his wife Isabel Murray in 1536, and later received the ‘non-entry’ duties of the lands for the years since the death of his father Walter. He is the Laird of ‘Howpaslot’ who was on an assize in Edinburgh in 1534. In 1535 he had a black horse stolen from his lands of ‘Wolcleuche’ by Simon Armstrong and others and his farm at Howpasley was burned by a group of Armstrongs, with 60 cattle being taken. In 1539 he and Thomas (son of Adam) were warned to remove their tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branholme and his son Walter. In 1539/40 he sold the farm of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreethall to Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’; it is written that he ‘binds himself faithfully after coming to his house from Edinburgh’ to guarantee peaceful possession of the farm by Janet until he paid her the same amount back. In 1539 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. In 1541 he occupied the lands of Whitehope (in Yarrow), Ladhope (in Ettrick) and ‘Aldishope’ (in Ettrick), as well as claiming the lands of Howford. In 1541 he was one of the cautioners (for the huge sum of £10,000) for John Johnstone of that Ilk. Also in 1541 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branholme and witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. An English document of 1543 describes how his farms at ‘Appiltre and Chauerbenton’ (presumably Appletreethall and Chamberlain Newton) were attacked by men from Tynedale, who took 70 head of cattle, 170 sheep, 28 horses and goods from the houses, as well as 12 prisoners. He is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter in 1547/8 when they complained about the Kerrs joining the English at Pinkie, and burning their lands. In 1549 he granted his 2 husband lands of Appletreethall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; his heir Walter, and other son Robert, were among the witnesses. In 1550 he gave a further charter to Hector Turnbull for the lands of Pinnacle and Broomlands. Also in 1550, he entered into a bond with Sir Walter of Branholme and 9 other Scotts (and Elliot of Redheugh) in which they promised the Queen and Lord Governor to assist in bringing in criminals. He is recorded in 1553, along with his son Walter, when their lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire were ‘apprised’, i.e. sold to pay debts. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557 he was fined for not appearing among other Scotts to answer for the attempted murder of Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1562 he leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgleish in Deuchar; the witnesses included William in Hartwoodmyres, William’s son Thomas, Adam of ‘Vamfra’, Philip of Dryhope and William in Tushielaw. Also in 1562 he witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562/3 he was elder of Howpasley when, along with his son Sir Walter, the superior of the lands tried unsuccessfully to have him removed. He is probably the ‘Laird of Howpaslocht’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the Laird of Howpasley listed on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds (even although he was long deceased by then). His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Murray, who was 2nd daughter of John ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of Falahill. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in 1578/9. His children may also have included John of Thirlestane. Robert of Allanhaugh (d.c.1557) son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters, he held 3 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He may be the same man as Robert ‘de La Toure’ who witnessed a charter relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1500 (although it is possible there was another generation of Roberts). In 1507/8 he was probably the Robert, son and heir of Robert of Whitchesters who had a loan with John Murray of Falahill involving the ‘turrim edificatam burgo de Hawic inter pontes’ (i.e. the tower built in Hawick between the bridges). If this is true, it suggests that the predecessor of Drumlanrig’s Tower was built by the Scotts of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch inheriting his father’s barony of Branholme. He was probably the Robert of ‘Allanhauche’ who, with several others, swore to help the Earl of Angus (the new Warden) keep the peace in 1524/5. He is probably also the Scott of ‘Allanhaugh’ who is recorded in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1526. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He is mentioned as... being pardoned about 1528, along with Robert of Howpasley and William of Hassendean, and also mentioned in the indenture of 1529 attempting to reconcile the Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In 1530/1 his son and heir apparent William was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle along with John, son of Walter of Synton, with sureties being Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he was indicted for not paying to George, Lord Home 9 years of rent for the lands of Greenwood and Lyne; his brother Adam acted as surety. Also in 1535 he was tried in Jedburgh of a set of rieving crimes, specifically bringing men from Liddesdale to burn Midlem and steal from several farms near there, as well as at Croslie, Fastheugh, Yair, Town-of-Rule, Sunderlandhall, Clarilaw and elsewhere; he was found innocent of the charges. He is recorded as ‘of Alanhaucht’ in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. In 1541 he was accused by Sir Walter of Buccleuch of attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff, and ‘had she not been ready, the buttc end had slain her’; later that year, on Boxing Day, he drove away the cattle from Branxholme, and clearly there was a feud of some sort between the two Scotts. He may be the ‘Rob Scott of Halowathe in Tevedall’ who was recorded in an English letter as having his houses burned by men of Bewcastle in 1542, and 16 of his cows taken. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kerrs promised not to harm. In 1554/5 he is recorded in a sasine as the tutor of the young Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was one of the group of 200 Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston in 1557, being later bound over not to harm Cranston afterwards. He may be the Robert ‘of Allanmouthe’ listed as being ‘in a former age’ a ‘Pensioner’ of the house of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He served as a ‘tutor’ for Walter Scott of Buccleuch during his minority. He may be the Robert of Whitchesters who was said to have married Christian, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland. He was succeeded by his son William, and may also have had a daughter who married John Scott of Thirlestane. In 1541 he infefted his son William (an William’s wife, Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane) in his 6 merkland of ‘Quhyisester treis’ in the Barony of Whitchesters. In 1569 his grandson and heir was stated to be another Robert of Allanhaugh (whose son William is recorded in 1581); it therefore seems likely that the succession was this Robert, William, Robert and William again, all before 1600. Robert of Alton and Clarilaw (16th C.) eldest son of Adam of Clarilaw. He is recorded as ‘in Clarilaw’ in 1528/9 in a ‘discharge’ of fees by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, relating to lands of several Scotts. He probably also related to the David ‘in Clarelaw’ recorded in the 1530s and 1540s. He is said to have lived to an advanced age and was succeeded in the lands of Alton by his son Adam. He is probably the Robert ‘in Clarilaw descended from the antient house of Hassenden’ who was listed by Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same man was recorded as son and heir of Adam of ‘Nethirmans of Hassinden’ in 1550/1 when he was infefted in the lands of Little Drinkstone. In 1566 presumably the same Robert is ‘in Hassendenburn’ when he had a letter of reversion in his favour from John Scott of Drinkstone for the lands of Little Drinkstone. He is recorded as Robert of Over Hassendean when he was witness to a confirming charter for the Turnbull of Hassendeanebank in 1571. He is similarly recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; he had purchased some land from John Scott of Drinkstone, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent, John Watson. In 1580 he gave annual rent of his lands of the Over Mains of Hassendeaneburn to the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell (widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) for the loan of £60 Scots; this was with the consent of his eldest son Adam. He ‘touched the pen’ to subscribe (meaning that he could not write himself). He was probably the Robert of Alton listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Eliots and Armstongs. He was also a witness in 1581 to a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was ‘of Altoun’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He may be the Robert of Hassendean who was involved in a dispute with Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1592 over a 2 merk land in Doweswood. Keith Scott suggests he lived to an advanced age and died about 1594, but this seems too late, so there may be 2 generations here. His son was Adam of Alton and his grandson was Robert of Alton; in 1606 Robert was served as heir to his father Adam in lands in Chamberlain Newton and to his grandfather Robert in lands in Hassendean, thus establishing the link between the 3 generations. In 1653 Robert of Alton’s daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ of Robert ‘of Easter Maines of Hassindaine’, their ‘foir grandsher’, who was probably him; hence he was great-grandfather of these 3 women. It is unclear how he was related to earlier and contemporary Scotts of Hassendean, however, it is possible he was closely connected with David (who was killed about 1564). Robert (16th C.) 2nd son of Philip of Headshaw. In 1531 he assigned to him the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, his uncle William of Ormiston acting as official for the legal transaction. It is unclear whether this happened, since his brother Walter was occupying Hartwoodburn in 1541. However, also in 1541 Walter assigned to him one quarter of Hartwoodburn, ‘lying in ryndaill by open fields’ for 5 years. He is recorded again as brother of Walter in a Selkirk document of 1541/2. In 1542 he is probably the Robert who let half of Hartwoodburn to John Angus, with the advise of Walter in Headshaw (probably his brother) and Walter of Haining. He could be the Robert in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1544, involving Thomas. In 1579 he was recorded as brotger german of Walter of Headshaw when he was witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. Robert (16th C.) Customor of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He gave in his reports with William, junior, who was surely related. He was probably also related to John, who was an official in Irvine at about the same time. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh who was recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. Robert (16th C.) possibly a son of David of Tushielaw and younger brother of Adam of Tushielaw and John of Thirlestane (although this is uncertain). He was Parish Clerk of St. Mary of the Lowes. He was described as ‘in Bowhill’ in 1557 when he was re-pledged for his part in the armed mob which came to the Church at St. Mary’s seeking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. His sureties were Sir John Scott, Commissary of the Archbishop of Glasgow and Robert Scott of Bonnington. Other men named include Scotts of Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpaseley, Synton and Thirlestane. He is probably the Robert ‘of Bowhill’ who paid rental for lands in Rodono to Melrose Abbey in 1557. He is easy to confuse with Robert of Aikwood and Bowhill. Robert of Horsleyhill (16th C.) charged by the Queen’s Advocate in 1563 with ‘Resetting of Inglismenne, and Thiftuus Steling of certane Oxin’. William of Tushielaw was fined for not producing the relevant documents. Since it appears that Horsleyhill was owned by the Elliot about this time it is unclear how he could have been Laird (perhaps this was an error of Pitcairn in ‘Scott’ for ‘Elliot’?; however, descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw would later own Horsleyhill). Robert ‘Wait Aboot Um’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 along with Robert ‘of Collefurd’ and John ‘callit the Clerk’. The 3 were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, but instead we to be pursued for their crimes. His name is explicitly recorded as ‘Wait About Him’, but it is unclear what this meant. Robert ‘Hob’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with John ‘callit the Clerk’ his brother and Hob ‘Wait About Him’. He is listed as Robert ‘of Collefurd’. The 3 were excepted from the assurance given by the Scotts that they would end their feud with the Kers, but instead these men were to be pursued (and hence presumably already found guilty of crimes). They were convicted of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged, along Mark Elliot called ‘of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falser’; he is recorded as ‘callit of Colyfur’d’. He was surely related to the William, son of Walter, who had a sasine for Colifort in 1550. It may be his widow who was the Katherine Scott, wife of the deceased Robert ‘of Collenfurde’ who remarried to Walter Dalmahoy in South Synton and resigned her lands in Hundlehope (in Peebleshire) to her son Thomas Scott. Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington (d.1563) probably from the Scotts of Aikwood, but the precise connection is not established. He could, for example, have been a younger son of the first Robert of Aikwood. Sometime in the period 1514–1524 he married Katherine, daughter and heiress of John Boyle of Wamphray (in Dumfriesshire) and Rysholm (in Ayrshire): she was widow of John Johnstone and died in 1524. He assumed the designation ‘of Wamphray and Rysholm’. In 1530 he was surety for 4 Johnstone brothers and in the same year Helen ‘Baty’ (wife of Alan Stewart) sued him for the right of marriage of the heir of Wamphray. He served on an assize in 1532 and in 1535 was cautioner for Philip Murray of Falahill. In about 1540 he and Sir Walter of Buccleuch were released from ward after making promises to help keep order on the Border. He was ‘of Wamphray’ recorded in ward in 1540 when he was released (along with Robert of Howpasley) on condition of keeping the peace, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges. In 1541 he was ‘of Wamphray’ when he claimed tenancy of the lands of Winterburgh in Ettrick. His son Robert was inflet in the lands of Rysholm in 1541, but died before 1549. He was recorded as tenant in ‘Rysholme’ in Ayrshire in 1542, when he had a kasine for those lands. He was accused of being a traitor and spy in 1545 and appears to have taken refuge at Aikwood. He is also listed being of Wamphray in 1547/8 among the supporters of Sir Walter of Bransholm in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs, and in 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts to sign a bond with the Queen, to keep order and bring in criminals. In 1550 he was ‘of Wamfrey’ when he witnessed an obligation by Sir Walter Scott to bring in criminals on the Border. He and his son Adam sold Wamphray to James Johnstone of Pocornwell in 1548/9 and they also disposed of Rysholm in about 1550. They then moved to Selkirkshire, where he was in ‘Haikwood’ (i.e. Oakwood) in 1550. In about 1550 he purchased ‘Hairtpule and Little Ernstoun’ from Lord Brthwick; he had previously been tenant in Hairtpule. At about the same time he bought ‘Halmedow and Horsward’ from John Touris of Manor. In 1552 he was described as ‘in Aikwode’ when he and his son and heir Adam purchased both halves of the lands of Bonnington from the daughters and heirs of Martin Wylie. He was ‘formerly of Wamfra’ in 1552 when he and Robert of Thirlestane paid fines for people at the Justiceaire in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed as ‘of Wanfra’ among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557/8 he was ‘sometime of Wamfray’ when along with his son Adam they were bound by a charter to sell ‘Rysholm’ in Ayrshire to John Hamilton of ‘Beynstoun’; however, they were unable to do so, having been evicted and hence had to give rentals of Bonnington and other lands in Peeblesshire to Hamilton. He is probably the same as the Robert ‘of Bonynoure’ who was surety for some of the Scotts charged in 1557 with trying to kill Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes, and who was on the panel for charging John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. In 1557 he was ‘of Bonytoun’ when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Esphoup’ and ‘Stobeclouch’. In 1558 he was ‘of Wamfra’ when he received ‘cloiss writtis’ from the Queen. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He secondly married Isobel Ker, who was widow of Michael of Aikwood. He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his son Adam, and he was grandfather of Simon of Bonnington (who was served heir to his grandmother, Katherine Boyle, in 1611); he may be the Adam ‘of Vamfra’ recorded in 1562. His other sons were: Robert, who predeceased him; John of Wakefield; John (again), an illegitimate son; Robert, another illegitimate son, who was legitimatised in 1576 (and may be the Robert of Waumfray mentioned in 1597/8). He is probably the Robert recorded in a service of heirs in 1625; William Burnet succeeded to the brother of his great-grandfather on his mother’s side, as heir to John of ‘Walkmanfield’ (in Peeblesshire), son of Robert of Bonnington, brother of Adam. Robert of Thirlestane (d.c.1576) son of John, the first recorded Laird of Thirlestane, in Ettrick valley. In 1550 he was among local lairds (including Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Howpasley) who swore to the Queen and Lord Governor that they would help bring in criminals. In 1553 there is an assurance by Walter Kerr of Cessford not to hurt him or his family and friends (this following the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in Edinburgh). In 1557 he was listed as being ‘of Schastaine’ (perhaps a transcription error) when he paid rental for ‘Craigie’, ‘Ramseclouch’ and ‘Thrilistane’ to the monks of Melrose. He was also involved in 1557 with the band of about 200 Scotts and their supporters who sought out Sir Patrick Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes as part of a feud. He was appointed one of the curators of Sir Walter of Branhxholme in 1562, when he was in his minority. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was probably the ‘Gudman of Thirlstane’ on an assize of 1564 involving the murder of David of Hassendean. In 1565/5 he was also listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter of Branhxholme in the bond signed with the Kerrs; he signed ‘with my hand at the pen’, indicating that he could not write. He was probably Warden-Depute of the West Borders, although no dates are known. In 1567 he was one of the cautioners for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Walter of Branhxholme and Thomas, son of Walter Ker of Cessford. Also in 1567 he and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. In 1568 he had a charter of feu-right for Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch, Scabcleuch and Craighill from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey. In 1568/9 his support was mentioned as a curator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on a further bond between the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. In 1569 he (along with Sir Walter of Branxholme, Langlands of that Ilk and William, Lord Borthwick) was surety for several Elliots. He was also cautioner for Walter of Headshaw in 1569 and for other Borderers in 1573. In late 1573 he was charged to enter Ade Dodds and George Laidlaw, tenants in Ramseycleuch. He was curator of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, recorded in 1575, but is deceased by 1577. He is probably the Laird listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border chiefs. He married Margaret Scott, who may have been daughter of ‘Wicked Wat’ (not a daughter of the 1st Lord of Buccleuch, as stated by Satchells); she was among the curators of her son Robert, complaining about the treatment he had at the hands of Simon Scott of Winterburgh, and was still living at Thirlestane in 1609. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert. Other sons were Walter of Gamescleuch and William of Fingland (who may also have had the lands of Merrylaw); both these sons are listed among those involved with the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands, and both were probably at the rescue of Kinnmont Willie. Robert of Allanhauch (16th C.) recorded as ‘Young Robert Scott of Allanhauch’ in 1557 when he rented the Brugh from Melrose Abbey. Probably the same Robert is described as heir to his deceased grandfather in 1569, when there was a discharge from his cousin, Sir Walter of Branxholme, for whom his grandfather acted as tutor during Sir Walter’s minority; he was also granted the non-entry of the rents and other fees associated with Whitchester, from the time of the death of the former Robert of Allanhaugh (around 1557) until he became of age. He is probably the Robert of Allanhaugh who in 1579 sold (or borrowed money on) the annual rent of ‘Reahousknow’ for £100 Scots to Walter of Tordrig; the transaction was witnessed at Riddell. Probably the same Robert of Allanhaugh is listed in 1581 among Scotts and their allies who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council; his son William is also listed. He was most likely the Robert of Allanhaugh (along with William ‘in Allanhaucht, now in Hawik’, presumably his son, and Scotts associated with Over Southfield) who were involved in the murder of Hawick resident George Scott in 1578; George’s brothers Robert and James wrote a ‘letter of slais’ in Hawick in which they forgave the assailants. In 1585 he had a bond with Sir Walter of Buccleuch, settling an old feud over the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh, and Hob Dalgleish, servant of Sir Walter’s in Braidhaugh; his ‘brother germane’ Walter is also listed. In 1590 his cautioners were Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Sir John Edmonson. He was also recorded in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders and was ‘of Allanhauch or Raisknowis’ in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Probably the same Robert ‘of Allanhauch’ was in 1599 listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. Papers relating to him in the period 1581–1600 are in the National Archives. It seems possible that he was son of William, but may have been the direct heir of his grandfather, the previous Robert. However, the history of this family is very unclear. Robert (d.1540s) probably eldest son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington. In 1542 he was infefted in his father’s lands of Rysholm, but died shortly afterwards, his father’s successor being his brother Adam of Bonnington. Another Robert was his father’s illegitimate son. Robert (16th C.) Bailie of Hawick, recorded in 1560 when Thomas Short inherited his brother John Short’s tenement on the north side of the High Street. He is probably also the Bailie who signed the 1569 bond against the thieves of Liddesdale, along with many inhabitants of Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and Peeblesshire. He may be the same as one of the other local Robert Scotts of the time. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to answer some kind of bond, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. ‘Philip’s Jock’ was one of the other men and hence possibly related. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Robert (16th C.) son and heir of William ‘in Hawik’, mentioned in 1557 and in 1565/6. His father had leases on lands in Hawick owned by Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh (and formerly belonging to Soutra). It is possible he is the same as Robert ‘in Hawik’ recorded in 1592. Robert of Stirches (16th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton by his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk. His step-mother was a Cockburn of Ormiston, from whom the family inherited the lands of Whitslade. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Stirches. He is probably the Robert, son of Walter of Synton who appeared for his father in 1561 to promise to produce ‘Hob Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick. In the same year he was listed as son to Walter of Synton among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the Robert, brother to Walter of Stirches who witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. He married a daughter (possibly Helen) of Rutherford of Hunthill and was succeeded by his son Walter ‘the Hawk’ (who was probably the first to be designated ‘of Whitslade’, and was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of Whitslade in 1605). Scott of Satchells also says he had a son Thomas, who was 1st of Todrig, but this appears to be off by a generation. It is said that another son, also Robert, accompanied Scott of Buccleuch on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may have been responsible for the building (or rebuilding) of the tower at Stirches. Robert (d.1583) natural son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington. He was legitimised in 1576. He is probably the Robert of Wamphray who received a promise of money for merchandise in Edinburgh in 1577. In 1581 was a merchant burgess of Edinburgh, ‘of the house of Wamfray’, when along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmansen cleuch, Chamberlain Newton, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington (his half-brother) in a dispute with Robert of Haining. Robert ‘of Wamphra’, who was subject to a complaint involving a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1597/8 was probably his son. His testament was not confirmed until 1601, when his grandson (also Robert, burgess of Edinburgh) as his main executor; he is there described being of Bonnington. Robert of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Harden, as stated by Scott of Satchells. He was eldest son of William with his 2nd wife, who was a Ker of Fairnilee and widow of Riddell of that Ilk. His brother was George of Todrig and his lands were Burnfoot in the Ale valley (as opposed to Burnfoot-on-Teviot). He may be the Robert of Burnfoot who, along with Robert of Burhead, was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He may have been father of William of Burnfoot in Ale and hence Robert and Walter, brothers of William. These 3 brothers were mentioned in 1612 when the sons of the Earl of Bothwell were involved in an ongoing dispute with them over land and tithes. Robert (16th C.) described as son of deceased Robert of Raesknewe in an undated marriage contract with Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Sir Thomas lived until 1572, and hence it must have been before this date. He was probably related to David of Raesknewe who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same Robert ‘of Rea housknewe’ was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundlethope to her son Thomas; his brother William was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he witnessed an agreement in Hawick between Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. Robert of Over Hassendean (16th C.) see Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. Robert (16th C.) mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is stated that ‘Robert Scottis wyf in Hawik’ was owed ‘for sum ordinar dwtie, sex pundis’, suggesting that she had provided some kind of service to the Laird (perhaps catering). Robert of Palace (d.bef. 1579) recorded in 1579 when the inventory of his widow Isabel Donald was listed in Selkirk. The witnesses were Robert (brother of Walter of Headshaw), John in Kirkhouses (and his son James), George Waugh in Kirkhouses and John Beattie in Burnfoot. His wife had previously been married to Andrew Shortreed. The executors for his children were Walter of Headshaw and George Shortreed of Essenside. His daughter with her, Marion ‘alias Mane’ was left with George of Synton. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘callit of Glen rathane’ when, along with his brother George and Hob ‘callit Huitill’ they were accused of attacking Martin Elliot of Braidlie’s farm at Northcroft. Their chief was Walter of Goldielands, and so they must have been relatively local. ‘Glenrathane’ is probably Glenrauchan in Ewesdale, rather than Glenrath south of Peebles. He is probably the ‘Hob Scott in Glenrachane’ listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was surely related to Archibald there, who was declared a fugitive in 1606. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) referred to as ‘callit Huittill’ in 1581 when there was a complaint against him and 2 other Scotts (Hob of ‘Glenrathane’ and his brother George) attacking Martin Elliot’s farm of Northcroft. It is unclear where ‘Huittill’ might have been. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1581) son of Michael of Aikwood. He was younger brother of Walter and William, who both appear to have died without heirs. In 1553 he received a precept from the Archbishop of Glasgow as heir to his father’s lands of Hermiston. In 1554 he succeeded his brother William to his half of Bowhill. He was ‘of Bowhill’ when served heirs to his brother Walter in the half stead ing of Kershope (called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ in Et trick) in 1555. Scott of Satchells describes him as the progenitor of the Scotts of Bowhill. In 1564/5 he married Marion, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk. In 1580 there was a marriage contract between his sister Elizabeth and Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. Also in 1580 he sold some woods near Selkirk to a group of men. In 1581 he and William of Tushielaw were the ‘byndaris’ in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain. He is probably the ‘Robert of … wod’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrungs. In 1581 he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Also in 1581 there was an agreement between his son and heir Robert and his widow Marion over liferents, which were in 1581/2 assigned to Isobel, daughter of John Home of Crumstane, his widow’s 2nd husband. He was succeeded by his son Robert, and it is unclear which of the Selkirk records of about 1580 relate to him and which to his son. His children include: Robert, who succeeded to Bowhill; William (in Scotstaines) who was probably at the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596; James, recorded in 1599; and Walter (alive in 1592). Rev. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of ‘Hindscha’ (i.e. Headshaw) he became minister of Ashkirk in 1585/6, on the death of Daniel Chalmers. However, nothing else is recorded about him. It is possible he is actually the same man as Robert of Headshaw, unless there are 2 generations of Walter of Headshaw and he is son of the 1st (or Walter of Headshaw had 2 sons called Robert). Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick recorded in 1579/80 when he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. He was also listed as Burgess of Hawick in 1581, when he was recorded as brother of George and James (who was a cordiner). In 1581 he and his brother James wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘wytht my hand’ (although his brother James did not). He may well be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob o the Knowe’ (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he resigned a tenement there in liferent to his wife, Alison Lyie. Robert (16th C.) servitor to Adam Hislop in Catslack. In 1581 in Selkirk he is listed among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Robert of How ford (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kimmont Willie in 1596 and to have received the lands of ‘Cowd-house’ (presumably Coldhouse) for his service. He must have been related to the later Scotts of Coldhouse. He was probably son of Robert of Howford and was succeeded by William, probably his son. He may be the Robert of ‘Cowfur’d’ recorded in 1581 when his son and heir Thomas was involved in a dispute over the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundleshope with John, parson in Hundleshope. Robert of Langhope and Huntly (16th/17th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch in Scott of Satchells doggerel verse. He is there recorded as ‘of Langup’ and having the lands of ‘Outterhunty for his service for several ages’. He was said to have been in the group that rescued Kimmont Willie in 1596. He was probably son of William ‘in Huntly’, who was 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. His brothers Walter and William were listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane about 1610. He was probably succeeded by his son Walter, who appears to have been succeeded by another James, who was probably a younger son. William, recorded in 1608 as brother of Walter, was probably yet another son. Robert of Shielwood (16th/17th C.) 5th son of John, younger of Synton. His sons probably included: Robert of Shielwood; and Walter of Girnwood. Robert of Haining Scott (d.bef. 1611) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a bond of 1576/7, not to remove ‘kindly’ tenants and in the following year lost a dispute with John, minister of Selkirk, over the possession of ‘the half toun and landis of Elistoun’. Also in 1576/7 he was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branholme’s sister Janet. In 1579 Walter of Goldielands, acting as Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose, entered him into the lands of ‘Eleston’ or ‘Ilistoun’ (which had been possessed by Adam of Bonnington). He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he appears to be recorded as Provost of Selkirk and complained that Walter of Goldielands had backtracked on his promise to appoint him as Provost Depute; Scott of Goldielands claimed he was not appointed as Depute, but elected into that role. In 1580 he had a court case against Adam of Bonnington and his wife ‘Dame Janet Scot’ was mentioned in a sasine to ‘Ilistoun’. Additionally in 1580 he received 200 merks from James in Whithope in redemption for the lands of ‘Hanyng Mot’ and was recorded in a transaction involving lands in ‘Ilistoun’, with his brothers William and Walter acting as witnesses. Also in 1580 he paid redemption money to John in Aikwood for the lands of Haining Rig and ‘Louchtknow’. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stiches. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs (he may have been involved with Scott of Headshaw in the attack on the Elliots of Braidie). He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with George of Synton, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh; Alexander was cautioner for him when the surety was renewed. Also in 1581 he leased the half land of Haining Rig to Gilbert Govenlock; William in Haining was a witness. Additionally in 1581 he had an arrangement with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the ‘feu maill’ of the lands of Haining and witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Further in 1581 he admitted Adam Broadfoot to a piece of land in East Haining, with his brother William acting as a witness, and he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. He also in 1581 took a loan from John Geddes in Branholme for annual rent of lands in Haining, witnessed by 2 of his servants. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1587 he acted as cautioner for Sir Thomas Turbull of Bedrule, for Walter of Branholme and for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He signed a bond with other Scotts in 1589 and was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 a number of Murrays were put under caution not to harm him and James Scott ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. Additionally in the same year James Pringle of Torsance and William Borthwick of Crookston were his cautioners for him not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependents. In 1590/1 he was a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was in dispute over the minister of Selkirk, according to documents of 1594, 1595 and 1607. He represented Buccleuch at a meeting of Wardens representatives at Dayholme on the Kershope Burn in 1596. Afterwards Lord Scrope’s agent, Salkeld, captured Kinmont Willie, leading later to his daring rescue from Carlisle Castle. In 1597/8 he was still Provost Depute of Selkirk. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddlesdale. Also in 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Scott of Haining listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. Also in 1600 he was procurator for James of Balwearie, who was cautioner for Scott of Buccleuch, in a case before the Privy Council. In the early years of the century he (along with Sir Robert of Thirlstane) acted for the interests of Sir Walter of Buccleuch while he was abroad. In 1601 he was mentioned in an English letter listing Armstrong who were outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch, when he appears to have been acting as a Deputy Warden. In 1602 he signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds. In 1602 (while Walter of Buccleuch was abroad) he was charged with entering a group of Scotts of Hundlehope, Thirlstane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill, who were accused of raiding the lands of Adam Veitch. He was also meant to present James of Whithope in 1602, but failing to do so, was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602
he was denounced again for not producing the Scotts of Whithope, Gamescleuch, Thirlestane and Hartwoodmyres for not paying their portion of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. In 1603 he was still standing in for Walter of Bucceulch when he failed to appear to enter the Scott Lairds of Bonnington, Newburgh, Kirkstead, Dryhope, Thirlestane and Deephope and he was also ‘keeper depute of Lid-disdail’ when there was a complaint that he had not entered Armstrongs and others for a raid on ‘Sewingdene’, delaying making restitution to the complainers, and again being denounced. In 1606 he was surety for Ninian Armstrong and Andrew Henderson in a murder trial. In 1607 he was involved in a dispute with the minister of Selkirk. In 1608 it is said that he ‘hounded out’ John, brother of Walter of Woll and his half-brother John Turnbull, leading to them attacking some citizens in Selkirk, and then being rescued from the Bailies by a gang of Scotts including his brother William; his servitors Walter and John Gledstains were also involved. Also in 1608 a letter under the seal of James VI demands that he remove himself from Yair Corn Mill. His son Robert and several of his servants were alleged to have attacked Sir Andrew Ker’s lands at Selkirk Mill in 1608; his servants included Thomas Young, Francis Scott, William Elliot, Patrick Brown and William Thomson. H was summoned to appear in Edinburgh in 1608. He is probably the Robert who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. Along with his wife Janet Scott and his son Robert (along with his wife Elizabeth Murray) had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). Some time before 1580 he married Janet, daughter of Sir Walter (9th of Bucceulch); she had previously been married to John Cranston of that Ilk, and contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside. In the marriage contract in 1579, he promised to give her his half of the lands of ‘Ilstoun’, as well as his tenement in Selkirk. In 1580 he resigned to her his lands ‘lie burynymylne’ plus the loch called ‘Hanyng Louchet’ with millrace, and the crofts called ‘lie mylnecroft’, ‘lie harisbuttis, Hoppringillis acre, Craufurdis acre, chekynis acre, myln croft’; his wife was referred to as ‘Dame Scott of Hanyng’ and the agreement was witnessed by his brother William. At the same time he granted his wife an annual rent of some lands. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had a younger son, William, who was one of the rescuers of Kinmont Willie. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 being ‘in Stirkfield’ when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. This was ‘at the pen led by William Wylie, clerk, writer of the band’. His lands were probably Stirkfield between Peebles and Biggar. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. He held the lands of the southside of Bowhill. He is probably the Robert ‘of Rowhill’ [sic] who was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Prinsideloch and Walter of Todrig, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’, together with John ‘in Quholplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). And in 1602 his brother James was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at ‘Fechane’ and he was ordered to present his brother. His son Robert may have succeeded him in 1625. Robert of North Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bowhill and nephew of Robert of (southside of) Bowhill. In 1609 he succeeded to his father Walter’s lands of North Bowhill. In 1627 he was one of the Scotts who paid reparation to the Napiers on behalf of John Scott in Wooplaw (alias John of Bonnington). Robert of Bowden (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1594 as ‘callit of Bowden’ on the list of 180 or so men who had a ‘respite’ for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He is probably related to William of Bowden, who was recorded in the 1550s. Robert ‘Hob’ of Waumphray (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 as Burgess of Edinburgh when he was one of the witnesses to a transaction made in Selkirk. This involved John Chisholme in Eldinhopeknow and the widow of John Chisholme in Mountbenger. His name is recorded as ‘Robert Scot alias Hob of Wamfery’. He was ‘of Wamfry burgess of Edinburgh’ in 1580/1 when he had sasines for the annual rent of lands in Newstead and Eldon. Probably the same Burgess of Edinburgh who in 1581 was a cautioner (with Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, as well as James Gledstains of Cocklaw) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Bucceulch). Probably the same Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh, was in 1580 one of 2 judges appointed (by Sir Walter of Birkenside and William of Tushielaw) to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. He may be the illegitimate son of Robert of Waumphray, whose birth was legitimatised in 1547. Robert (16th/17th
C.) son and heir of the deceased James, Burgess in Selkirk, recorded in 1580. David Fairlie appears to have been acting as his tutor for 5 years, in relation to his half of the mill of ‘Hadderlie’ and his future marriage. He held lands from Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch that he set to Andrew ‘Lounch’. Robert (16th/17th C.) natural son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1581/2 he witnessed a sasine for his father (recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books). Robert of Burnfoot (d.1612) son of William. His lands were Burnfoot on Teviot, and he should not be confused with Robert of Burnfoot on Ale. In 1585 he succeeded his grandfather Adam in the lands of Over and Nether Newhall. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot for whom Walter of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw acted as cautioners in 1590. He may be the ‘Robert alias Rob Scott of Burnefute’ listed (along with William of Burnfoot) among 200 Scots and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2; his unnamed brothers are also mentioned. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably the Robert of Burnfoot who in 1599 was listed among Scots and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert ‘tutor of Burnefute’ was also listed (and may have been associated to Burnfoot on Ale). He is listed among a large number of Scots and others among ‘pretended tenants’ whom the Baron of Hassendean, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands in 1603. He had at least 3 sons: Adam, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his elder brother; and William, tenant in Burnhead. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Burnefute’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot in Hawik’ when he was witness to an instrument of sasine for Crook in record of ‘Robert Scot in Hawik’ when he was recorded as ‘Robert Scott in Hawick’ when he was witnessed a sasine for his father (recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books). Robert of Burnfoot (d.1612) son of William. His lands were Burnfoot on Teviot, and he should not be confused with Robert of Burnfoot on Ale. In 1585 he succeeded his grandfather Adam in the lands of Over and Nether Newhall. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot for whom Walter of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw acted as cautioners in 1590. He may be the ‘Robert alias Rob Scott of Burnefute’ listed (along with William of Burnfoot) among 200 Scots and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2; his unnamed brothers are also mentioned. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably the Robert of Burnfoot who in 1599 was listed among Scots and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert ‘tutor of Burnefute’ was also listed (and may have been associated to Burnfoot on Ale). He is listed among a large number of Scots and others among ‘pretended tenants’ whom the Baron of Hassendean, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands in 1603. He had at least 3 sons: Adam, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his elder brother; and William, tenant in Burnhead. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Burnefute’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot in Hawik’ when he was witness to an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. William in Hawick and Adam in Ormieston are also mentioned. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Hobb (Robert) Scott called ‘bradowe’’. It is unclear whether his to-name was a nickname or location. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as ‘tutor of Burnefute’. He was listed among Scots and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert of Burnfoot (probably on Teviot) was also listed, suggesting he may have been associated with Burnfoot on Ale. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as ‘Hobbie of Candie’. He was listed among other Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear where ‘Candie’ was (perhaps a transcription error) or if he was the same as another Robert. Robert of Easter Groundstone (16th/17th C.) nephew to Robert of Headsaw according to Capt. Scott of Satchells when he listed him as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. His grandfather was Walter of Headsaw, but it is unclear what his father’s name was (possibly Walter). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Hob Scott of the Laik’, but it is unclear where this might have been. Sir Robert of Thirlestane (c.1558–1627) son of Robert, with his mother being Margaret Scott (either daughter of ‘Wicked Wat’ of Buccleuch or Wat of Harden). He is first recorded in 1568, and Satchells claims that he was born in 1566 (although he appears to have reached majority by 1581). During his minority his ‘tutor’ was his uncle Simon of Gamescleuch, while his curators were Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1578 he and his curators complained that his tutor ‘Sym Scot of Wintir-burch’ had taken 2 horses from Thirlestane, harassed his tenants and then forcibly taken possession of the house at Thirlestane; Simon was ordered to restore Thirlestane to him. He is said to have attended the University of St. Andrews along with the young Walter of Buccleuch (and at the same time as the young James VI), and about 1585 accompanied Walter to the site of the old Rankleburn Kirk, where they found some buried tombstones bearing the arms of Buccleuch. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. His brother Walter was recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk involving Thirlestane in 1581. In 1583/4 he is among the Border Lairds summoned by the Privy Council for advice on preserving peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1583/4 he and Sim of Winterburgh were cautioners for John in Hundlehope. He could be the Robert ‘in Cringillis’ who witnessed a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allenhaugh. In 1590 he was purchased the lands of Alttrieve and Corsecleuch (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord...

Home, his family having been ‘kindly tenants’ there for generations. He was also listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. A confirming charter of 1590 records that he purchased the lands of Crookston in Peeblesshire, on account of a messenger taking refuge there, this being part of a dispute between Cranston and Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch. He gained the lands of Kirkhope in Ettrick and the teinds of Ettrick Kirk in 1594; his eldest son and heir, Robert was also given liferent of these properties of Melrose Abbey. In 1596 he was one of the men consulted by Walter of Buccleuch in organising the rescue of Kimmont Willie, and he accompanied Walter to London to see Elizabeth I in 1597. In 1596/7 the citizens of Peebles complained that he had led a group of Scotts to attack their lands of ‘Kaidmure’; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. Along with his brother Walter he is included in a list of supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Walter was also listed. In the same year he served as cautioner for Simon of Bonnington and Sir Walter of Branxholme declared that he ‘holds his lands of him’ and was therefore obliged to answer for him. In the early years of the 1600s he and Robert of Haining acted for Sir Walter of Branxholme while he was abroad. In 1602 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him in regard to charges against him by the warden of the middle marches ‘at the instance of the laird of Neutoun, Englishman’; he later refused to enter himself into court or to pay the amount and hence was to be declared as a rebel. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Additionally in 1602 he was denounced for not paying £51 13s 4d for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. His brother Wat was accused of being on a raid in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he sold the lands of Cruxton to William Elliot, Burgess of Peebles. In 1605 he had a bond to enter his tenants (Scotts of Hundleshope and others) for not appearing to answer charges of attacking the lands at ‘Fechane’. He was probably knighted in 1606 and in 1607 was Member of the Scottish Parliament for Selkirkshire, the first elected representative. He was involved in every local quarrel of his day, including helping organise the rescue of Kimmont Willie. He was caution for several relatives and tenants in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Deiphoip’, and also caution for Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. There was a feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw, culminating in the death of his brother Walter at the hands of John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1609. In 1609 he and his son Robert (and several others) were bonded not to reset Walter of Headshaw and a group of other men, and were later fined for resetting the same men (including his natural son Peter and brother William). In 1609 he also complained against Armstrongs and other men who were troubling him in his lands and vowing to take his life. He witnessed a charter for Scott of Woll in 1609. In 1610 there was a bond of assurance with the Scotts of Tushielaw in order to resolve the feud. That same year he was ordered apprehended since he still had a ‘horning’ for the attack on Peebles in 1596/7. Also in 1610 he and his son had a ‘wadset’ with Robert of Whitslade and another with Robert of Burnfoot and he was cautioner for the Scotts of Whitslade and Satchells that they would not harm Walter in Hawick, called Todshawhill and his associates. In 1612 there was a complaint to the Privy Council that he and his son Sir Robert had not paid former fines and should be apprehended, the Council also asked him and Walter of Tushielaw to appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. William Scott, younger of Harden had him and others removed from the lands of Deephope in 1615/16. In about 1620 he had a charter for Thirlestane, Ettrickhouse, Ramseycleuch and Scableuch from the Commander of Melrose, as well as another charter for half of the lands of ‘Cringillis’. He and his son Robert were also granted the teinds of the new Kirk of Ettrick. In 1621 he had 15 sheep stolen from his lands of Eskdalemuir and along with John of Gilmansecleuch and Sir John of Newburgh he promised not to molest the Elphinstones. Also in 1621 he was appointed as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In the years 1621–3 he was involved with financial bonds with Sir William of Harden, as well as Sir Walter of Whitslade and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch (essentially borrowing money using his lands as collateral). In 1622 he was fined for not being on the jury for the case involving Turnbulls of Belses etc. He was recorded in a disposition of

1623 to his chief the Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1623 he was one of the representatives of Tweeddale and Selkirk on the Parliamentary Commission to discuss the export of Scottish wool. In 1624 he rented Gamescleuch from Sir William Scott of Harden. Also in 1624 his lands of Crookston were ‘apprised for debt’, and he also sold an ‘annualrent’ there. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of the jail in Selkirk (the others being Gavin Elliot of Brugh, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and his servant John ‘Skaillis’), breaking the walls on 2 sides, his prison bed being found to have 2 plow blades and ‘twa greit craw-irnes’; he must have been in his 60s by then! It appears that his estates were resigned to Sir William of Harden, and later inherited by his nephew Patrick of Tanlawhill, although there was dispute for the next century with the descendants of his son (with his 2nd wife) Sir John. In about 1626 he appears to have lost the lands of Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scabbleuch (at least temporarily) to John Fisher, perhaps because of non-payment of loans to Scott of Harden. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk sometime before 1594. In 1602 he secondly married Katherine, daughter of Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His sons were Sir Robert, Sir John and James. John was listed in the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 owing rental money to Mary Lyon (wife of Sir Robert of Crookston, i.e. his sister-in-law). In 1616 his daughter Grizel married Walter of Tushielaw without his permission. Other daughters were probably Jean, who married Robert of Satchells, and Susannah, who married Sir Walter of Whitslade. He may also have been the Robert who inspired the story told of a 2nd wife of Thirlestane being involved in the jealous murder of her stepson (this would be Katherine or Catherine Jardine and her stepson, Sir Robert). He is easily confused with his son, also Sir Robert (often called ‘of Crookston’), who appears to have pre-deceased him in 1619. In 1621 he was served heir to his son Robert’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. In 1621 he was served heir to his son’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. Also in 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilman- scleuch. His wife Catherine Jardine held lands of Davington and others ‘in liferent’ after his death, recorded in 1627 in a document with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. His son John was served as his heir in 1642. Robert ‘Sim’s Hob’ (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘in Hawick’ when he was witness to a discharge of 1605 between ‘Lang Sandie’ Scott and William Scott of Howpasley. His father was presumably Simon. Probably the same ‘Robert Scot in Hawik, callit Symmies Habie’ was recorded in 1611 when he failed to appear in court at Jedburgh; John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Burnfoot. George Langlands of that Ilk was cautioner for him in 1610, that he not harm William in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates. His brother and several other Scotts were also involved in this dispute. He was also mentioned in 1612 as brother of William of Burnfoot on Ale (along with Walter, another brother) in the ongoing dispute with the sons of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert in Northhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 when Hector Turnbull of Stonedge had a complaint against him before the Privy Council. He may be the ‘Hob Scot’, brother to Will ‘called of Northhouse’, named along with his brother, when Gilbert Elliott of Horselyhill (and later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that they attacked him in Hawick, ‘with drawn swords’; Gilbert later complained that they had not responded and requested that they should be apprehended, although it is unclear what happened next. He was ‘of Northhouse’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as ‘Hob Scot in the Howfurd’ and brother of Michael, both being ‘suster sones’ to Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’). Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington’s household. They were also said to have later ‘trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit’ and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear if he was directly related to the Scotts ‘of’ Howford, or who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield in in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. He may have been related to later Scotts of the Southfield area. Robert of Howshaw (16th/17th C.) said to have headed the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He rode fully armed, carrying a small banner of the Earl's colours on the point of his lance. The account comes from Chamber's Domestic Annals of Scotland. However, it seems likely that 'Howshaw' is an error for some different place, since this Robert is otherwise unknown. Robert of Satchells (16th/17th C.) probably son of James, who was 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He is said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace (transcribed in one version being 'of Stitschellis'). He had a charter from John, Archbishop of Glasgow for the lands of Satchells in the Barony of Lilliesleaf in 1607, and a confirming charter from the King in 1609. In 1609 he also had a charter for Dodhead in Selkirkshire, which his father James, and others before him had occupied. In 1610 Sir Robert of Thirlstane acted as caution for him, that he not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates; he was named along with Walter of Whitslade and his son Thomas, suggesting a close link between these families at that time. He is one of the signatories of the 1612 bond to keep peace on the Border. It appears that he lost the Satchells estate, probably through a loan, and moved to a small farm in Eskdalemuir. He may have died soon afterwards, since Jean (presumably his widow) was involved with the sheep-slaughter incident of 1616 along with Lady Scott of Howpasley. In 1617 he was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council; however, it is unclear if he was already deceased at this time. He is probably also the Robert who complained at the Privy Council in 1619 about men from Hindhope cutting down trees on his land at Dodhead. His wife was probably Jean, daughter of Sir Robert of Thirlstane. He was probably the father of Capt. Walter, the poet and family historian, and also William. Additional children may have included Robert, referred to as younger of Satchells in the 1620s and John, mentioned in a deed of 1655. He may be the 'Robert Scot of Satchells' who was among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch, having 'Southinrig for his Service', according to Capt. Walter's postral. Keith Scott suggests he died about 1629 (but then Lady Satchells would not have been a widow in 1616); he also suggests there are 2 generations called Robert, so the situation is quite unclear. Robert of Aikwood (d.1615) son of Robert of Aikwood and Marion Cranston. Keith Scott suggests he was son of William, but that conflicts with R.C. Reid's 1950s genealogy, which is supported by transactions made in Selkirk about 1580, which probably involved his father Robert. He may be the same man as Robert of Bowhill, eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he was son of the deceased Robert of Aikwood when his mother Marion Cranston made her step-daughter Isabel Home 'cessioner' to recover the 700 merks that he owed his mother. He also witnessed a sasine for Adam of Bonnington in 1581/2. He signed the bond with the other Scotts in 1589. In 1590 Patrick Murray of Falthill was his cautioner that he would not harm William Douglas, Earl of Angus or his dependants. He witnessed a deed in 1592. Also in 1592 he signed a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiel. He had the present tower at Oakwood built in 1602. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was summoned before the Selkirk Presbytery, accused of perjury against the minister of Selkirk and in 1614 was cited by the minister for 'drinking during the time of sermon'. In 1611 he was caution for Philip of Dryhope. He was witness to the bond for keeping peace on the Border in 1612. He was succeeded by his son Andrew in 1615, in the southside of Bowhill, half of Kershope and the 'Peile-Quarter' in Belses. Philip of Aikwood (who succeeded Andrew) may have been another son. He may also have been the 'goodman of Aikwood' whose sons James and William are listed in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Robert 'Hob the Lonkie' (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, after a man apparently hung himself in the Kirk steeple in 1610. His nickname may be a transcription error for 'Lonkie', meaning lucky or fortunate. Bailie Robert 'Hob' of Alton (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. The Robert 'of Auldton' whose son Adam is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593 may have been his direct ancestor; it is possible he was son of Adam referred to as 'vocat de Altown', who was younger brother of Walter of Alton. He was Bailie in 1603, 1612 (at the same time as 'Marion's Hob') and 1619, and possibly other years, since it is hard to distinguish the various Roberts. He may be the 'Hob Scot, bailie of Hawick', who was cautioner for Jamie Chisholme at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was involved with the incident in 1612 in which the Bailies imposed a stent and market tax without seeking the permission of the Baron, thereby testing the legal authority of Douglas of Drumlanrig within Hawick. An extract of his sasine of 1615 is in the National Archives, this having been copied from the Protocol Book of Gilbert Watt (Hawick’s later Town Clerk). In 1620 he is recorded paying back a loan made to Thomas Rutherford, brother of John of Hunthill. He was also a ‘personne of assyse’ in the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623. He is recorded in 1627–29 claiming a debt against the Earl of Buccleuch, where he is described as ‘ sometime bailie in Hawick’. ‘Robert, bailie in Hawick, called of Auldtown’ is also mentioned in a dispute with William Douglas of Drumlanrig relating to a bond of 1601. The later Robert of Alton (who died around 1650) was probably his brother Walter’s son. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William called ‘of the Know’, with George and David also being brothers. In 1608 they were bound over not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick (the nature of the dispute being unclear), and he was similarly bound. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Bailies of the same name. They may also have been related to John Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, who acted as surety for them. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in 1610, along with Adam Scott, when Jock Elliot died while imprisoned in the Kirk steeple. Elliot’s wife took the Bailies and others to court for his death, but the decision was that it was a suicide. He was one of the men called to give evidence at the trial. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Bailies Roberts, but it is unclear which one. Sir Robert of Haining (16th/17th C.) son of Robert. In 1608 he is ‘younger of Haining’ when he was part of a group of men complained about by Sir Andrew Ker of Heiton, saying that they came to his lands of Selkirk Mill and ‘violentlie caist out the dam-heid furth thairof’. They returned with a group of Scotts, Murays, Elliots, Gledstains, etc., threatened the millers and smashed equipment. He and James ‘Corsane’ were imprisoned, with 2 others being asked to appear later. In 1610 he was ‘younger of Haining’ when along with his wife ‘Elspeth’ Murray he was involved in a dispute with the Lord of Buccleuch over ownership of Haining mill. He succeeded his father in 1611. In 1612 he was one of the witnesses called by the Privy Council in an attempt to resolve the feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane. In 1614 he gave sasine of some lands in Selkirk to James Cowan. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the man who killed Robert of Gilmunsleuch. He was removed from the Earl of Home’s lands at Hartwoodburn in 1622. About 1625 he sold Haining, but was still known as ‘of Haining’ afterwards. Along with his wife Elizabeth Murray and his father Robert (and mother Janet Scott), he had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). He is probably the same Sir Robert of Haining who carried the arms of Scott of Buccleuch in the Earl’s funeral procession in Hawick in 1634. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and had at least 2 sons: Robert, who succeeded; and Walter, portioner of Guilan. Bailie Robert ‘Marion’s Hob’ or ‘Marion’s Rab’ (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in late 1612, along with ‘Hob of Alton’, when the authority of the Baron was challenged. He was also Bailie in 1622, 1623 and 1626. He served as a juror at the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623 when he was ‘laith baiyle of Hawik’. His servitor, William Johnstone, is recorded in the trial for the claimed murder of John Elliot in Hawick in 1610. He was probably one of the 2 Bailie Roberts listed among the 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He could be the Bailie Robert who acted as cauterion for James Henderson in ‘Catheuch’ in 1611. His mother was presumably Marion. It is possible his brother was the contemporary ‘Marion’s Geordie’. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1614. He is presumably different from ‘Hob of Alton’ and ‘Marion’s Hob’, but could be the Robert ‘of Westport’ recorded in documents at the same time; the proliferation of men of the same name makes this confusing. There was also a Robert (with no nickname) who was Bailie in 1627, and a ‘laith bailie of Hawick’ when he was a ‘personne of assyze’ acting in Dumfries Circuit Court in 1622. Robert of Salenside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1614, along with his kinsman John Scott of Kirkhouses, when he was summoned before the Presbytery to answer for charges of murder. He must have been related to Andrew of Salenside, who is recorded in 1613 (possibly his brother or elder son, but if so he was probably dead by 1621 when Thomas of Salenside is recorded). Robert (16th/17th C.) son of James in Whitslade and grandson of John, younger of Synton. In 1580 he had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood, with the consent of his deceased father’s brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly. He agreed to give his future wife liferent of Dodhead if he should die before her and also agreed to ratify the contract when he reached the age of 21. Also in 1580 he was recorded as son of the deceased James of White-slade when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men who were involved in the rescue of Kin-mont Willie in 1596. It is suggested that he is son of Robert of Whitlaid and brother of Sir Walter of Whitlaid; however, this appears to be muddled. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate from Hawick. In 1627 he and James Gledstains were Bailies when there was a series of records with the Privy Council involving men from Ha-wick who had been selected to be sent to the wars in Germany; he was fined 300 merks and had to find caution for a further £1000 in order to make him produce the named men. He is surely one of the two Bailie Roberts listed in 1627 among 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trin-itylands. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, who he succeeded in 1625. However, there appears to be confusion among Roberts of Aikwood and Bowhill. He car-ried the arms of Douglas of Drumlanrig in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Ha-wick in 1634. He had 2 sons, Andrew and James, both of whom succeeded to Bowhill. In 1648 his son James, a merchant in Edinburgh, was ‘bailie in that part’ who granted sasine of Broadmead-ows from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw; the Scotts of Bowhill were distantly related to the Scotts of Tushielaw. Robert of Tushielaw (d.1632) eldest son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, brother of James and John, who were both at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers James and John, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He signed a bond among Bor-der Lairds, along with his father in 1602. He was ‘apparent of Tuischlaw’ in 1604 when he acted as bailie for a sasine of the Regality of Melrose for lands in Ettrick. In 1612 he signed the bond for keeping peace on the Border. In 1617 he was ‘apparent of Tuischlaw’ when his son Walter was listed among Scotts and others who freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was described as ‘fiar of Tuschelaw’ and lawful son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw in a charter of 1618 in which he received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John, Lord Hay of Yester. In 1619 he was ‘of Tuscolaw’ when his brother John wit-nessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. In about 1620 he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for Glenkerry, Midge-hope and Phaup. However, these must have been effectively mortgaged that time, since also in 1620 the lands of ‘Glencarie’ and Midgehope, held in ‘wadset’ from him, were given by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to his youngest son James. He was ‘of Tuscolaw’ in 1620 when his brother John wit-nessed a bond between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1633, and he in turn was succeeded by the younger son, William of Fawdshope. Robert of Shielswood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and brother of Walter of Girn-wood. He had a charter for Shielswood in the Parish of Ashkirk in 1609. He is mentioned in various documents in the period 1606–26. He was Robert ‘in Schellsiswoid’ on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep steal-ing. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington com-plained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brother Walter was also listed. In 1629 he was appointed as tutor to Robert and Walter, sons of his deceased brother, Walter of Girnwood. He is re-corded in 1632 when his eldest son Walter leased part of the lands of Belses. He married Margaret, who re-married Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres after his death. He was succeeded by Walter and had another son, Robert. He may have had a daughter Isobel who married Walter Scott of Burnfoot’s brother Francis. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts (including his brother Walter), to have hornings lifted and penalties re-duced. His cautioner was George Langlands that Ilk, and one record seems to state that he was uncle of George (although this may be a transcription confusion). He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Hassendean (d.bef. 1669) recorded in a ‘letter of apprising’ (i.e. transferring heritable lands to clear debts) of 1604, with ‘Dedrig, Easter and Wester Cappitrig’ passing to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was probably a son or grandson of David of Hassendean, who was killed around 1564. He was succeeded by his son Adam in 1669, but may have died earlier. He may be the same man as Robert of Over Hassendean. He may have been the Laird listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. And he may be the Robert of Hassendean who was said to have been in the party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may be the Laird of Hassendean who in 1699 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. He may be the Scott Hassendean (no forename given) who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Sir Robert of Crookston (d.1619) eldest son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his 1st wife, who was Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk (however, it is hard to separate father and son, and some accounts confound them in a single generation). He appears to have been born before 1594, when his name first appears. In that year he was eldest son and heir of Robert of Thirlestane, when they were both granted the teinds and vicarage of Ettrick Kirk for their lifetimes. Before he succeeded his father he was known as ‘of Cruxtoun’ or ‘Criukstane’. He acquired Gamescleuch in 1605 and in 1607 (when he was ‘younger’ of Thirlestane) he had a charter for the lands of Bourhope (or ‘Bowerhope’) adjacent to St. Mary’s Loch. He is probably the younger Laird of Thirlestane (first name not given) who was on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He was involved in the bond of 1609 (along with his father and several others) not to reset Walter of Headsaw and other men, and the action by Walter of Tushielaw to fine them for resetting the same men. He was knighted about 1612. His memorial stone inscribed ‘S / R S MEMENTO MORE 1619’ is in Ettrick Kirk (although it is possible this was his father’s, and the next 8 years refer to incidents in his life). His life may be the basis of the story told (first by the Ettrick Shepherd and later by Sir Bernard Burke) of a 2nd wife at Thirlestane (presumably Katherine Jardine) having her step-son murdered so that her own son could inherit the estates, but when found out her husband had her locked up for a year while his eldest son lay in state and he spent the family fortunes in lavish feasting. It is unclear what truth there is in the story, but in 1617 he married Mary Lyon, daughter of the Earl of Strathmore, and died without issue; Mary Lyon remarried to Robert Semple of Béltries, and in 1633 was named in the will of the Earl of Buccleuch being owed money through John, ‘son and air to the said vmquhile Sir Robert of Thirlestane’ (presumably her brother-in-law). His younger brother Sir John (son of Katherine Jardine of Applegirth) did not succeed either, the titles going to their cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill who effectively purchased the Thirlestane estate. In 1621 his father, Sir Robert of Thirlestane was served heir to his lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes; this strongly suggests that he was deceased by 1621. He is the ‘Sir Robert of Cruikstane’ who is recorded as deceased in the period 1649–77 when his brother and heir John was involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over lands in Eskdale. John is described as the son and heir of Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a 1632 document involving the lands of Altrieve and Corsedieuch (so he was certainly already deceased by then). He is said to have left an illegitimate son, Peter, who was living in 1609. Robert ‘Geordie’s Hobie’ (16th/17th C.) one of 3 Hawick men acquitted in 1621 of carrying hagbuts and pistols in public. They specifically were accused of having ‘schoit and slayne thairwith greit nomberis of thair nighbouris proper dowis and wyldfoull of all kyndis, and useis the same for thair particular revenge upoun all sic personis aganis whom be beare querrell’. The other 2 were Allan Deans and Robert Armstrong. His father was presumably George. Robert (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of Arthur of Newburgh. He was listed in 1608 among relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’ or his sons. Robert of Gilmanseleuch (d.bef. 1621) son of James. He was called ‘Truth’ and was said to be one of the men who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He married Bessie Naysmith and his sons were: John, who succeeded; William; Gideon; and Adam, tenant at Shawwh who was father of Francis. He was killed by John Elphinstone in Henderson and his brother David, who were declared rebels in 1620. In the following year a commission of Scotts was formed to apprehend the 2 men, the case being brought by his widow and sons William and Gideon. He is probably the Robert of Gilmanseleuch whose son Adam was served heir to his other son William in 1647. Robert of Westport (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘personnes of assyze’ representing Hawick at the Justice Court of 1622 in Dumfries as well as in Jedburgh (along with another Robert), and in 1623 (along with Robert of Alton and ‘Marion’s Hob’). It is unclear whether this is one of the other men of the same name, but he was clearly distinct from Robert of Alton and Bailie Robert, since all 3 sat on the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622. He may be related to later Westport Scotts, e.g. father of the Walter recorded in the 1650s and 1670s. Robert of Burnhead (d.1609) probably eldest son of John of Burnhead. He is probably the Robert of Burnhead who, along with Robert of Burhfoot (probably on Ale), was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was among those listed in 1603 as men that the Baron, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands. He was succeeded by his son William and had 2 other sons, one of them probably Adam (who married Bessie Langlands) and the 3rd son probably the Robert who is said to have settled in Holland and died in 1609 (unless this is confusion with his own death). Robert of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Headshaw, whom he succeeded before 1593. He may have been the Laird of ‘Eidschaw’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He may be the Robert of Headshaw (unless this is an error for Walter) who is recorded being held in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with Paul Doig acting as caution for the pledge of Walter Scott of Goldielands, that he would answer for the hurting of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. He is probably the Robert ‘in Headshaw’ who had a charter of Headshaw and Easter Essenside in 1593 (incorrectly transcribed as 1553) from Ludovic, Duke of Lennox. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men on the Carlisle raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He is recorded in a series of writs of the lands of Headshaw ‘disponed’ to Andrew Hay in the period 1593–1624; his wife was Elizabeth and his son Robert. In 1609 he was caution for Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a bond for not resetting Walter of Headshaw (surely a relative, possibly his brother) and others. In 1610 he had a bond (along with Walter, fiar of Whitslade for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. And in another 1610 bond he was surety for Robert ‘of Well’ for the same thing. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was also cautioner, along with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade, for a bond involving the Hays of Smithfield in 1619. In 1620 he was Robert ‘elder, called of Heidshaw’ when he witnessed a charter of Goldielands for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 he had an agreement with the Countess of Home for leasing Hartwoodburn for a year, possibly longer. He is probably the Robert who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh from his sister Janet’s son Walter. He is also probably the Robert of Headshaw whose ‘brother-son’ (i.e. nephew) was Robert of Easter Groundistone, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the ‘Pen-sioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He had sons: Robert, who appears not to have succeeded, since the estate was sold first; and Francis. Walter and James, two brothers of the younger Robert of Headshaw are recorded in 1627, and so were presumably his sons also. Robert of Bonnington (d.bef. 1624) eldest son and heir of Simon. Together with his father he had ‘different’ of the lands of ‘Ernescleugh’ and Singlie in 1593, confirmed in 1607. He was succeeded by his uncle John. Robert (16th/17th C.) progenitor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, whose genealogy is given by Scott of Satchells, and called there ‘Portioner and Bailie of Hawick’. His father was William, said to be second son to Walter, Laird of ‘Midgap’, who was grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. It seems more likely that he was son of William of Midgehope, who was grandson of William of Tushielaw and great-grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. He may be the same man as one of the Bailie Roberts recorded in Hawick in the early 1600s. His son William may have been the first to be called Laird of Horsleyhill. Note there appears to be a much earlier Scott of Horsleyhill family, who are presumably not directly related. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Watis Jok’, so presumably his father was John and his grandfather Walter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Bailies. He is recorded in a sasine of 1610, along with his wife Helen Turnbull, for a ‘tenement’ in the south side of the Kirkwynd, which had been resigned by George Turnbull, tenant in Howay, brother of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. The land was specifically described as being between Nichol’s Croft (roughly the Village), a garden of Robert Dickson, a tenement belonging to the Hendersons and the Kirkwynd itself. Robert (16th/17th C.) Burgess and notary in Selkirk, recorded as writer of documents in the period 1602–30 relating to Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Andrew Scott of Wemyss. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Harwood in the Rule valley. He was witness to a sasine of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. Robert of Dryhope (d.bef. 1633) probably son of William. He is recorded in 1632 in an assignation for a bond, and in 1633 for non-payment. He appears to be already deceased in 1633 when he is mentioned in a contract over the lands of ‘Evillane’, with the consent of James Scott of Hagbrae (presumably a near relative). However, he could be the Robert ‘of Drayvpe’ who carried the arms of Hamilton of Clydesdale in the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was probably succeeded by his brother Walter. Robert (17th C.) had a charter for the lands of Brieryyards and Broadlee in 1637, with a confirmation in the name of Charles I. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, and how he was related to the later John of Brieryyards. Sir Robert of Haining (17th C.) son of Sir Robert. Although his father had sold off the Haining estate, he still had the designation. He served with the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. Also in 1643 he was witness for a charter granted by the Earl of Buccleuch to the Calderwoods in Edinburgh; he is there ‘Sir Robert Scott of Hayneing’. In 1650 he was one of the witnesses for the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. His nephew Lieut.-Col. Robert appears to be the last of the Scots of Haining. He may have died in about 1650, since in the additions to the will of Francis in 1651 200 merks yearly are allocated to his widow, Grizel Ker. Robert of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1667) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his elder brother Adam. He is recorded along with other tenants of Over and Nether Newhalls in a precept of warning issued by Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1625. He is also recorded in 1638 and 1639 when he received the lands of Rottenrow in Hundalee from John Rutherford prior to marrying Anne Rutherford, daughter of John and Isobel Bennet (this was explicitly ‘Burnfut near Tiviot’, rather than the one in Ale Water, which is easy to confuse in this period). He was succeeded by his son Walter. Robert of Whitlisle (d.1644) eldest son of Sir Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1628. He was served heir to his father in 1633 and his grandfather Walter in 1635. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication against John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane over the lands of Bourhope, followed by a decree of appraising in 1643. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1639–41 and was also made Parliamentary Convenor for the Selkirkshire War Committee in 1643. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He was served heir to his father Walter’s lands of ‘Schorthope’ and Ettrickhouse in 1643. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk (valued at £243 10s), as well as Salenside (£116), Kirkhouse (£143) and Ashkirk Mill (£84). He was also listed in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £214 10s (which were owned by William Chisholme of Stiches by 1678) and Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £130 (which were owned by William Johnstone by 1663). He married ‘Holland’s Jean’, natural daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. His children included: Walter, baptised in 1630; Francis, baptised in 1643; Mary; and Margaret, who in 1647 was served heir to his lands at Ettrickhouse (although these later went to her uncle Thomas), and married John Scott of Langhope. His 2 sons must have died in infancy. He died at the Battle of Marston Moor, probably fighting on the same side as Cromwell. He was succeeded by his brother Sir Walter (who died fighting against Cromwell) in 1645 and then his brother Thomas. His death is the subject of the verse in Caw’s Poetical Museum (1784), probably written by Capt. Scott of Satchells, entitled ‘Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitlisle’, although in fact the contents focus more on the later death of his brother Thomas. Robert of Burnfoot in Ale (d.bef. 1669) son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot. He is recorded in a document of 1632 along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, relating to the lands of Altrieve and Cossecleuch in Selkirkshire. Note that this is Burnfoot in the Ale valley (although it is easy to confuse him with the nearly contemporary Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot). He was served heir to his father in 1641. He is recorded paying £400 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Francis, who married Isobel Scott, and to whom Scott of Satchells addressed one of his dedications. He is probably the Robert of Burnfoot recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish, in the same year when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1668 when his son George became a surgeon’s apprentice there. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot recorded paying the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678 (even although perhaps he was deceased by then). Robert (17th C.) described as the heir apparent of Satchells in 1622–25 when he was involved in a court action with George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He was probably a son of Robert and father of Capt. Walter (of family history fame), although this is not certain. Presumably the same Robert was also the ‘zunger of Satchellis’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He may be the Scott of Satchells (first name not given) listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owed for rental of the lands of ‘Dodheid’. He may be the Robert of Satchells recorded in 1643 when his lands of Satchells (in Lilliesleaf Parish) were valued at £200, and also his lands of ‘Cringills’ at £156. He is probably the Robert ‘of Satscheill’ who is recorded in 1653 when his son and heir apparent Walter had a bond not to harm the Bailies of Selkirk. Robert of Alton (d.1653) eldest son of Walter of Alton. He was probably nephew of the ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick. He succeeded his father in about 1638, the year that he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £474; based on who owned these later, they were Alton, Knowetownhead and Tandlaw. His son William ‘younger of Alton’ died before him. He was already deceased in 1653 when his daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ to Robert of the East Mains of Hassendean, their ‘for grandsher’ (either great-grandfather or great-great-grandfather). Presumably the lands of Alton passed to one of them, who married another Scott, since Scotts (perhaps from the Gorrenberry branch) held the lands until about 1742. It is possible he was the ‘vmquhill Robert Scott of AuldtonCrofts’ (if Alton and Alton Croft were sometimes confused) mentioned in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch when his eldest son (name unfortunately left blank) was granted 200 merks yearly. His wife may have been Margaret Turnbull, who was recorded as ‘relict of Alton’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when she jointly with James Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £414 for lands in Hassendean Parish. Robert of Goldielands (17th C.) Bailie of Hawick (along with William Scott) at the time of the signing of the 1638 Covenant. His name appears as ‘R. Scott’, alongside Walter of Goldielands, suggesting that he might have been a brother or son of Walter (although there may be confusion of 2 R. Scotts here); this Walter was meant to have been the last of the distinct Lairds of Goldielands. Also in 1638 (in the first main entry in the Town Book) he was recorded as being ‘callit of Goldielands’ when listed as one of the Bailies at the meeting for choosing the new Bailies and Officers; he was again chosen as a Bailie for the year 1638/9. He is probably the Robert who signed the Act of Bailies and Council of 1640 (his name appearing just after the 2 Bailies). He was elected to the Council in late 1648 and was also a Bailie in the 1640s. He may be the same as the Robert who was ‘brother natural of the said Sir Walter Scott’ in the charter of Goldielands in 1620. Another possibility is that he is the same as Robert of Glack, who inherited part of the Goldielands estate through marriage. Robert of Woll (d.1630s) eldest son of Walter of Woll. In 1617 he was appointed guardian to his half-brother and sister, George and Katherine. Probably the same Robert ‘of Well’ had a bond in 1610 (with Robert of Headsaw as surety) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He is probably the Scott ‘of the Well’ who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. His wife Rachel complained about his behavour to the Privy Council several times in 1631 and 1632, where he was described as ‘some time of the Well’. He was ordered to hand over all his assets to his wife and to allow her to cohabit with him, but instead went off to England with Jean, daughter of the deceased Andrew Ker of Graden, and remained with her ‘in the filthie cryme of adulterie all the last harvest’. His wife apparently stated she would forgive him if he would return to her and their eight children, ‘quhairof foure are so young and weake that they cannot putt on thair cloathes’. Meanwhile he kept Jean Ker ‘in ane oasterhous’ until she had his child, and sold his house (probably not Woll) and belongings, making his wife and children ‘brought to beggary’. In 1641, after his death, he is recorded when his son James became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh, as well as possibly his son Robert, who became an apothecary’s apprentice the same year. In 1643 he is ‘Robert Scot of Well’ when his son James was incarcerated in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown. His wife Rachel was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in 1661. He had 4 sons: Francis, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, but sold Woll; George, who was also served heir to his father; and John. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel Tudhope and their children included Agnes (b.1635) and Isobel (b.1640). Witnesses in 1640 were William Tudhope (surely a relative of his wife) and
Andrew Leyden. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Grundiston’ in 1640, when Robert Deans was fined ‘for bluding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts, but he could perhaps be a descendant of Robert of Easter Groundstonestone, who is recorded by Scott of Satchells. Robert of Braidhaugh (17th C.) see Robert of Harwood. Robert of Howpasley (d.1658) probably eldest son of William of Ringland, brother of Walter, half-brother of Simon and cousin of Patrick of Tanlawhill. It is unclear exactly how he acquired Howpasley. On his death the lands passed to his brother Walter. He is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. Robert of Carterton (17th C.) recorded in 1667 when he granted a bond (for £332 Scots) to Walter Lorraine, tenant in Greens, who was described as his ‘good brother’ (i.e. brother-in-law). His farm was in northern Dumfriesshire, but it seems likely he was related to more local Scotts, perhaps a branch with a connection to the Lorraines of Harwood. It is possible he was the Robert, married to Alison Lorraine (perhaps daughter of Edward Lorraine and Maisie Elliot), whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Kelso in 1635. He was surely related to Francis of Carterton (perhaps his son), who is recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gillespie and their children included Robert (b.1644), Andrew (b.1645), Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1649) and Margaret (b.1653). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Gillespie and George Ruecastle. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Bessie and Marion (b.1647); Isobel (b.1650); William (b.1651); Janet (b.1653); Walter (b.1655); and Janet (again, b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were David Beattie and James Newbie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Scott and their child Christian was baptised in 1655. Robert of Shielswood (b.1640) 2nd son of Walter. He succeeded his brother Francis. He paid tax on £260 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded on an inquest in 1669. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Marian. She married Adam Scott of Shaws. Robert of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of William, he was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was Laird at the time Capt. Scott of Satchells wrote his Postral (and a family genealogy is given there). In 1673 he was charged by the Hawick Bailies of having ‘masterfully spuizliz out of James Liddell’s house five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’; the reason for this apparent theft is not known, but Liddell was Hawick’s Procurator-fiscal, and this was a time when there were serious disputes with the Baron Bailie. Probably the same Robert of Horsleyhill gave evidence at the trial of Andrew Rutherford for the murder of James Douglas of Cavers in 1674; in fact Rutherford tried to accused him, in order to discredit his testimony. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. In 1676 he was probably already acting as Bailie of Regality when there was a case in which the weavers complaining that 2 of their members had appealed to him, rather than obey the Bailies of Hawick. In 1678 he paid land tax on £637 for Horsleyhill in Hassendean Parish. Also in 1678 he witnessed (along with Walter of Goldielands) a baptism for Walter of Harwood. He is probably the Robert in ‘Horbie Hill’ who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. In 1680 he witnessed (along with George of Boonraw) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In a 1688 sasine he is described as ‘bailie in that part for James Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth’. He married Isobella Scott, probably in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 (suggesting she was from one of the branches of the Scotts in that area). His children included: William, the eldest son; John (b.1670), who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1687; Francis (b.1677), who became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696; and Marion (b.1680). Elizabeth (b.1669), Charles (b.1672), Janet (b.1681) and Patrick (b.1682), all baptised in Hawick, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1680 were Mr. Francis (probably the minister of Hassendean) and Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Scott of Horsleyhill whose daughter Eliza married Walter of Woll in 1694. In 1678, 1685 and 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He leased the Trinitylands from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. In 1692 he signed the agreement between Francis Gledstaines of Whital and the Town of Hawick, regarding planting on the edge of the Common. He was probably succeeded by his sons William and then Francis. He is probably the Robert, Laird of Horsleyhill, who married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie and Christian Scott in Jedburgh in 1708. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Raesknowe’ when he acted as Chamberlain to the Scots of Buccleuch in 1640–41 for rental records for Wilton, Branxholme and Whitchester, and in 1642–44 for Teviotdalehead and Eweshead. He may be the same as Robert of Harwood. Robert of Hartwoodmill (17th C.) recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (this may be an error for ‘Hartwoodhill’ in Lanarkshire or ‘Hartwoodmyres’). The lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. Robert of Hartwoodmyres (d.1654) probably direct descendant of William of Hartwoodmyres, who is recorded in 1589 and 1596. It is possible there are 2 generations of Roberts here. In 1612 he complained that a group of Kers and others, amounting to about 60 men, came to his lands of Hartwoodmyres and ‘rave up and tillit over agane’ his lands, then attempted to find him with violence in mind, but he was not at home; he was unable to prove his claim to the Privy Council. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded in 1615 when his sister Marie (or Mary) married Walter Scott of Howford. In 1618 he was a cautioner for Walter, son of John Scott in Newark. In 1627 he was one of the Commissioners left by the Earl of Buccleuch to attend his affairs when he left for Holland. Also in 1627 he is mentioned in an action that was brought against him and Andrew of Aikwood in Selkirk. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was part of the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch, which took place in Hawick in 1634, with him carrying the arms of Beaton of Creighe. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he witnessed a ‘supplication’ to the Privy Council. He is listed as one of the landowners in a 1643 valuation of the lands in Wilton Parish, the value being £26 13s 4d (it is unclear where these lands were, but by 1788 were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch). He is probably the Robert of ‘Hartwoodmill’ recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish; the lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (so he was M.P. for 1643–45) and in 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. In 1648 he re-married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Shielawood (and she would later marry Sir John of Thirlestan). His oldest son was William, who was the last of Hartwoodmyres. Robert of Headshaw (17th C.) listed as one of the major landowners in a valuation of Wilton Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £448 10s. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who leased part of the lands of Belses in 1632. He was probably also the son of Robert of Headshaw who sold the estate of Whitehaugh to Andrew Hay in 1623. In 1627 he was ‘of Eidsshaw, younger’ when accused of being among a band of Scots who harassed the tenant of Hartwoodburn. In 1629 he sold the family estates of Headshaw and Langhope to John of Yorkston, 2nd son of George of Synton. He was involved in a court case in 1634 with Sir William Scott of Harden and John, son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestan, over the lands of Thirlestan. In 1638 he is ‘sumtyme of Heidschaw’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is surely the Scott of Headshaw whose ‘Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh’ are recorded in 1643. He is probably the Robert of Headshaw whose daughter Jean married William Scott of Synton in 1647. Robert of Heap (17th C.) recorded as owner of teinds in Ashkirk Parish in the 1643 Roxburghshire county valuation. These consisted of the teinds of Leaphill, Woll, Castleside and Broadlee (valued at £208), Whitslade (£80) and Essenside (£60), as well as tack-duty (valued at £3 6s 8d). He is recorded as one of the heritors of Wilton Parish in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ‘of Wester Heap’ on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Wilton and also ‘of Heap’ when he paid tax in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably related to James of Heap, who is also recorded in the 17th century. It is possible he is the Robert, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Grisel was baptised in Ashkirk in 1652. Robert of Burnhead (d.1677) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s (it is unclear whether he was Laird or tenant at Burnhead). In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land valued at £156 in Hassendean Parish. He was also recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish in 1663, when he paid tax on £156 (presumably for Burnhead itself). He was only son of William of Burnhead and Margaret Cairncross. In 1636 he married Marian, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters, and they had 2 daughters. In 1643 he secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Hector Turnbull of Clarilaw (through this marriage probably acquiring the lands of Clarilaw). He was succeeded by William of Burnhead, and also had at least 3 other sons: Robert of Lees; Adam; and Alexander. Robert of Phaup (d.bef. 1671) father of Adam, who became a gunsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671. Other sons were probably
Col. Francis and Capt. John, who were recorded in factor’s records for Sir William Scott of Harden in 1657 and 1671, respectively. Robert of Girnwood (b.c.1615) eldest son of Walter of Girnwood. He was still a minor when his father died, with his uncle Robert of Shielwood acting as tutor to him and his brother, Walter from 1629. He was served heir to his father in 1636, presumably when he reached majority. In 1640 he married Bessie, daughter of Sir Walter of Whitslade. Robert of Borthwickbrae (17th C.) recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650. It appears that his wife was Margaret Scott and their sons William and Walter. In 1643 and 1644 he was appointed by Parliament to the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was probably the last Scott of Borthwickbrae. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included Bessie (b.1652) and Margaret (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Deans and William Ruecastle and in 1654 were John Scott and Walter Chisholme. Robert (d.bef. 1678) son of Thomas of Todrig and younger brother of the next Thomas of Todrig. He is mentioned in 1637 as son of Thomas when he became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He is recorded in 1678 and 1680 when his widow Isobel Scott had discharges for annual rent in Selkirk. In 1679, 1681, 1683 and 1684 his widow was ‘tutorix’ to their daughters Isobel and Janet. Her signature is recorded in 1684. Robert (d.bef. 1681) recorded being ‘in Hassendean’ in 1681 when his widow Helen Caldwell’s daughter Agnes was baptised in Roberton. The witnesses were John Noble and Thomas Scott. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Robert of Lees (17th C.) 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Burnhead and Elizabeth Turnbull. He appears to have been Laird of the lands that were later referred to as ‘West Lees’, near Appletreehall. He probably also held the lands of Clarilaw and was succeeded by Walter of Clarilaw, who was likely to be either his son or nephew. He was among the heritors accused of inciting the 1690 riot when the roof of Hassendean Kirk was removed to Roberton. He could be the same as the Robert living at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert in Lees whose son John was baptised in Wilton in 1705. It is also possible he is the Robert in Lees whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1738. Robert of Glack (17th C.) possibly son of the youngest sister of the last Walter Scott of Goldielands (although Keith Scott suggests he was married to a daughter of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands, but this seems at least a generation too early). He is recorded in a Hassendean Parish record of 1666, where he was one of those supporting suppression of the Parish. Probably the same individual is recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1643 (where he is described as ‘of Cloak’, with land valued at £100, which was almost certainly Fenwick) and of Wilton Parish in both 1643 (described as ‘of Lack’, with land valued at £130) and 1649 (described as ‘of Clak’); this suggests the possibility that he may be related to James ‘of Park’ (with a transcription error), recorded around the same time. Glack was an estate in Peebleshire, although he also owned the lands of Fenwick and Highchesters, and may have lived locally. Scott of Satchells lists him as one of the ‘Pensioners to the House of Bucleuch’ and says he was given the lands of Fenwick for his service. In 1654 he transferred the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd to Robert Scott of Harwood, but had them back 2 years later, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Bucleuch in a charter of 1668. He also paid £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663, and also in 1678 (perhaps for Fenwick), plus the land tax on lands valued at £130 in Wilton Parish (where he is recorded being ‘of Clak’, the lands probably being East Highchesters). He is easy to confuse with Robert, son of Robert of Harwood, who acquired Falnash and other lands. He also appears to have inherited part of the Goldielands estates and passed them to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1674. He may be the Robert ‘in Glack’ whose widow Jeane Brown married Malcolm Inglis of Manorhead in 1666. He is probably the Robert ‘Glack’ who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1678 and another for William of Harwood in 1680. He is probably also the Robert of Glack whose son James with Bessie Henderson (labelled ‘forn’ for fornication) was baptised in Hawick in 1680. Lieut.-Col. Robert (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Guilan, and grandson of Sir Robert of Haining. He was the last member of the Scotts of Haining of whom there is any record. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1667) son of Walter ‘in Braidhaugh’, (i.e. Broadhaugh) who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Bucleuch for upper Teviotdale and the Langholm area. The precise kinship with the Scotts of Bucleuch is uncertain. He is in Braidehaw in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He may be the Chamberlain to the Scotts of Bucleuch who was at Raeskow in 1640–44. He may be the Robert of Falnash listed as the 3rd largest landowner in the 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (with lands valued at £1400). He is described as ‘in Braidhauch’ in 1644–50 when he acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for the upper Teviot valley, like his father before him. He was also ‘in Braid Hauche’ in 1646, 1648 and 1649 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1651 he is ‘callit of Braidhauch’ and described as eldest lawful son of Walter of Arkleton in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 800 merks yearly for his lifetime. By 1652 he was referred to as ‘in Braidhauche, now of Harwode’, and he was still Chamberlain in 1660. He is the Robert ‘of Harwoode’ who acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick, St. Mary’s and Selkirk in 1657–60. A bond at the end of 1653 transfers the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd (in Peeblesshire) to him from Robert Scott of Glack (who may have been a relative). But the lands were returned in 1656, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He witnessed charters for lands in Dalcove for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1656 and 1658. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £4600 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Teviotdalehead. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £300.

In 1663 he is recorded as ‘liferenter of the lands of Dalcove’ when he renounced the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. And in 1663 he was involved in a libel action with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He returned in 1656, after the Restoration, he was fined £300. In 1663 he is recorded as ‘liferenter of the lands of Dalcove’ when he renounced the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. And in 1663 he was involved in a libel action with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. Furthermore, he is probably the ‘Braidhaugh for Harrot’ who is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663, paying £866 13s 4d. He was also recorded in 2 discharges of 1663. He married Beatrice (or Beatrix) Gledstains, from the family of Gledstains of that Ilk. Their children included: Walter (b.1640), who succeeded by 1672; Robert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1662; Francis (b.1642) of Greenhill; John (b.1644), who probably died young; David (b.1646); William (b.1649), who became an apothecary’s apprentice in 1667, and was probably the same as the surgeon in Hawick in the late 17th century; Gideon of Falnash (b.1651), ‘Auld Falnash’, Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch; John (again, b.1652); and Agnes, who married John Scott of Woll. It is possible that Andrew (b.1656), whose mother’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ Gledstains, was also his son. The witnesses in 1651 were Patrick Hamilton and Gideon (surely a relative and perhaps Sir Gideon of Highchester) and in 1652 were Gideon (again) and John Gledstains. He is probably the Robert of Harwood whose estate was sold off by his creditors in 1681, as further pursued in the courts in 1688. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. He is probably the Robert ‘of ... stoun’ recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £66 13s 4d. He is Robert ‘of Drinkstowne’ in the Land Tax Rolls for 1663 when paid tax on £66 13s 4d. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone whose wife Bessie’s will is recorded in 1682; they may have married in Ashkirk Parish in 1640, with children including William (b.1649), James (b.1651), Francis (b.1653) and Margaret (b.1660). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert and George (who were probably related to him or his wife). He could be the Robert of Drinkstone whose son Robert married Bessie, daughter of William of Galalaw, according to a marriage contract of 1663. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Miller and their children included: James (b.1671); Marion (b.1673); John (b.1676); William (b.1679); an unnamed son (b.1682); James (again, b.1684); and another unnamed son (b.1687). The witnesses in 1671 were James and Walter (who were probably relatives) and in 1673 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Tandlaw. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he was ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe) when he witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson; a witness for Wilson 2 years earlier was Robert ‘in Barnknow’, making it possible that this was the same man. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. Robert of Whitslade (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He married Jean Hay in Edinburgh in 1681. He may have been the oldest son of Thomas, or his younger brother. Robert (17th C.) resident of Burnhead according to a baptismal record of 1682. He is probably related to Adam who was also in Burnhead at that time. It seems likely they are the Adam and Robert who witnessed baptisms for William (later referred to as ‘of Burnhead’) in 1686 and 1688. He married Margaret Scott and their children (baptised in Robertson Parish) included: John (b.1680); Robert (b.1682); Bessie (b.1687); and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were John Scott and William Scott (who were presumably related to either him or his wife), in 1682 were William and John Scott.
Scott Scott

( perhaps the same 2 men) and in 1687 were William and Adam Scott. He is probably the Robert who was resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was probably related to the William who was also listed as a householder there and given the coincidence of the names, they may have both been related to the contemporary and previous Lairds of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Robert of Lees. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jean Murray and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were Thomas Gray and Robert Graham. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hwick Parish. He married Marion Thomson and their children included: William (b.1674); James (b.1677); Agnes (b.1684); and Marion (b.1688).

Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Helen Dryden and their children included: Adam (b.1679); Janet (b.1681); and Christian (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Turnbull and James Law and in 1687 were John and Robert Noble. Robert (17th C.) fined £100 Scots in 1688 for leaving the town when the militia was in Hawick charging young men ‘for throwing of dyce and drawing of balotes’. He clearly did not want to serve! He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bonnington (17th C.) son of John of Bonnington. He was in possession of the lands in 1670. He had a son John. He was succeeded by James, who was either his brother or son. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His brother Walter was a merchant, who in 1673 was accused of striking him, apparently the result of a misunderstanding involving Thomas Brown and Robert Dickson. He is probably ‘Robert Scott, laird, shoemaker’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; the ‘laird’ suggests he might have been related to Thomas and James, who had the same nickname. He is probably the cordiner of the same name listed ‘uest the water’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) son of John of Gilmancleuch. He was recorded in a deed of renunciation and discharge in 1673. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1679 George Hall was fined for ‘ane blood’ on his, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day, since ‘his arms was swollen by the stocks, and he could not shear’. He was presumably a farm worker of some sort. Robert of Tandlaw (17th C.) recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. In 1673 he (along with Walter of Goldielands) witnessed a baptism for Robert (presumably a relative) and Bessie Miller in Hawick Parish. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish. He was listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. Probably the same Robert was on the list of Hassendean heritors accused of inciting the riot of 1690. There was a warrant for his arrest along with Adam (probably a relative) and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (for Hassendean Parish). Along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism in 1698 for John Easton in Drinkstone. He was witness to the birth of a child of William in Goldielands in 1702, suggesting that they were closely related. He is probably the Robert of Tandlaw who (along with Robert in Drinkstone) witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711. He married Barbara Scott and had children baptised in Roberton Parish (actually the area of the former Hassendean Parish). He was recorded at Tandlaw in a baptismal record of 1682. He is difficult to separate from Robert in Galalaw, whose wife had the same name! His children included: Helen (b.1682); and probably Barbara (b.1685), who seems likely to be the Barbara from Tandlaw who married James Ormiston in Boonraw in 1713. Some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688) may also be his children. The witnesses in 1682 were William and George Scott, who were probably related to him and his wife. The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott and Andrew Chisholme (perhaps the man associated with Coldhouse). Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1681 being at Galalaw. He married Barbara Scott in Roberton Parish in 1680 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included William (b.1681) and probably Margaret (b.1683), as well as some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were William (perhaps his father) and George (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Bessie (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); and George (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Leyden and Walter Fowler. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in ‘Newton’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was probably one of the Scotts of Newton near Hawick. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident at Newton in 1725. Robert (17th C.) son of John in Weens. In 1684 he was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear what happened to him. Robert of Greenhill (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he and Walter of Whitehaugh were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. It seems likely he was related to Walter of Whitehaugh. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to the contemporary Francis of Greenhill. Perhaps the same man was Robert ‘of Whithaugh’ in 1689 when (along with John) he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for David Wilson in Hawick. Robert of Falnash (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood and Beatrice Gledstains. He acquired the lands of Falnash and others from Robert of Glack (with whom he is therefore easily confused). In 1689 (confirmed in 1694) he is recorded transferring his lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchests, half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (the latter 2 in Peebleshire) to Gideon Scott of Outerside (later ‘Auld Falnash’), who was his brother. This appears to have been because he had no heirs, and was with the agreement of his wife Mary Elliot. He may be the Robert, married to Mary Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Adam (b.1646), Margaret (b.1647), Walter (b.1650) and Isobel (b.1653), although these births seem too early. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Robertson Parish in the 1680s, when Hassendean was part of it. He married Marion Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and John (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were William (probably a relative) and Walter Gledstains. In 1686 the witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who may have been related to him and his wife. He may be the same as one of the Roberts recorded in Hassendean in the tax records of the 1690s. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker on the east side of Hawick. He is a ‘cordiner’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (in distinction to the one from the west). Probably the same ‘cordiner’ is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the wright who witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson in 1723. He married Isobel Stoddart and their son Robert was baptised in 1700. The witnesses in 1700 were Andrew Scott ‘customer’ and Bailie James Deans (and also listed as John Elliot and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, but that was for Robert in Newbigging). It is unclear if he was the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) thatcher in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Perhaps he was the thatcher Robert whose grandchild died in 1794. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘sometime saddler in Fanesh’ (i.e. Falnash) in 1684 when he was on the long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘flesher’ in 1693 when he gave evidence to the Magistrates in a case of disorder within the Kirk. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as flesher in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1700 he witnessed (along with ‘officer’ Alexander) a baptism for wright Andrew, suggesting that they might all be closely related. He also witnessed a baptism in 1700 for Walter Purdom. Robert of Broadmeadows (d.1694) son of William, and grandson of William of Tushielaw. In an instrument of sasine of 1692 (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection) he was given the lands of Broadmeadows by his father (recorded as ‘Robert’, perhaps in error), following his marriage to Agnes Kelso. His ‘brother german’ Thomas and servant John Ker, were among the witnesses. He died without issue and in 1694 his sisters Isabella (who married John Balfour of Kailzie) and Jean (who married advocate John Murray) inherited his lands. Through Isabella’s son, Charles Balfour, the lands passed to a granddaughter, Jean Balfour, who married William Scott of Woll. His testament is recorded in 1694. Robert (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Laird of Highchester, recorded in 1694 in a sasine for lands in Minto. In 1697 he is recorded as ‘late chamberlain to Heychesters’. He was probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was distinct from Robert in Ashkirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Borthaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) renter of a quarter of the lands of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692 and was ‘Scrivener’ in 1694 when he continued to rent Borthaugh. He continued to rent 1/4 of Borthaugh in 1696 and 1698, and was still described as ‘Scrivener’. He was also recorded as a ‘Scrivener’ at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Wilton Parish. He was presumably a lawyer, and may have been son of the James, who previously rented part of Borthaugh and was also designated ‘Scrivener’. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Potterlampert according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert ‘Pope’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear what his nickname might mean. He is probably the merchant on the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In the 1704 baptismal record he is ‘distinctionis causa called Pope’. Perhaps the same Robert was merchant who witnessed a baptism for James Dickson (tenant in Hawick) in 1714 and was the merchant who (along with Francis, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. His children included Helen (b.1704), with witnesses Bailie James Deans and glover James Scott. Robert (17th C.) candelmaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed separately from the merchant called ‘Pope’, but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was called ‘Ormiston’, to distinguish him from other Roberts; however, it is unclear if he was related to James of Ormiston. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to John and Walter, who were also listed there. He was recorded as a tenant in Whitchesters in 1706 when he (along with Alexander Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Mayns’ in 1696 when his daughter Isabella was baptised (with no mother’s name listed). The witnesses were Adam Scott and William Riddell. Robert (17th/18th C.) leased half the farm of Newbigging from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably separate from the 2 Robert Scotts (father and son) who leased Over Southfield at the same time. He was recorded at Newbigging in 1700. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Cowan, herd in Southfield and in 1708 further baptisms for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield and for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield. He was still tenant of Newbigging in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Gavin (b.1698); and Archibald (b.1700). Witnesses in 1698 were John Elliot and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were John and Gilbert Elliot, both in Southfield (who could have been related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) resident at Over Southfield in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. In the period 1690–98 half of the farm of Over Southfield was rented jointly to ‘Rot. Scott father and sone’; so there were 2 generations called Robert at that time. In 1694 there was a connection made between the rental of Over Southfield and Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th C.) listed at Todshawhill among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (d.bef. 1716) resident of Wilton, recorded at Drinkstone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the same as the earlier Robert in Drinkstone (but this seems more likely to be the next generation). It is possible he was the Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, who in 1663 married Bessie, daughter of William in Galalaw. He was recorded in Drinkstone in 1696 when he witnessed a baptism (along with James) for Francis in Groundistone and in 1698 when he witnessed another for John Easton in Drinkstone. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for James Grieve in Teindside. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone who witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1709; along with Robert of Tandlaw he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711 and also in 1711, along with Robert of Coldhouse, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. He was already deceased in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth married merchant William Tudhope in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Boyd and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Robert (b.1687), who may be the carrier in Branxholme Town about 20 years later. Robert’s baptism was witnessed by John, who may have been a relative. He could be the Robert, who along with John, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. 2 separate carriers of the same name are listed ‘eist the water’ on Hearth Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1694. One of them is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It is unclear whether he was related to the Scotts of Alton. Robert (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. Robert (17th C.) rented ⅓ of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1694–98. He may have been closely related to John or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694, and to another Riddell, widow of Thomas Mitchelson, who was renting part of the farm in 1696. His cautioner in 1698 was Robert Miller. He may be the Robert who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Hassendean (17th/18th C.) son of Adam. He may be the Robert of Hassendean, described as aged 40 and married, who gave evidence in the 1682 trial of Alexander Home for being a Covenantant. He may be the ‘Scot of Hassinden’ recorded in 1684 among Borderers fined for their wives failing to attend parish church (i.e. for supporting Covenanters); however, he was acquitted when he said that ‘he did put hir away, and served ane inhibition against hir’. He is recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk and being arrested (along with Adam Scott and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe). He was served heir to his father Adam in 1695. In 1696 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Robert ‘of Hessindane’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He sold the lands of Hassendean to Anne Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1679–1710. Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council, and this was probably his son. However, this next Robert does not appear to have succeeded, and so he himself was the last Scott of Hassendean. Nevertheless, he is probably the Robert of Hassendean who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1709. He may be the Robert ‘elder of Hassendean’ whose son Robert is recorded in a deed of 1682. The pair may be the ‘Hassanden Elder’ and ‘Hassanden yonger’ recorded each paying for 2 hearths ‘in the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘younger of Hassendean’ when he was indicted in 1680 for being a Covenantant. The accusations against him including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He was probably son of Robert of Hassendean. Perhaps the same Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council in 1689. Robert (d.c.1725) carrier in Branxholme Town. Note that there was an earlier carrier of the same name, who may have been his father. The baptism of his son William, along with Margaret Turnbull (labelled ‘fornicators’) is recorded in 1705, with witnesses Robert Cook in Branxholme and Henry Orrock; he was recorded being ‘commonly called ye Duchess of Buchughs carier in Branxholmintoun’. He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in 1711–20 (and may be related to the William, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was recorded in 1714 as a carrier at Branxholme Town, when there was a promise that he pay some of what he owed for the lease, when his son Francis was baptised in Roberton Parish, and also when he and James (smith in the same place) witnessed a baptism for the Scoons at Commonside. He was still mentioned in the rental records for Branxholme Town in 1725, but deceased in 1726, when James Sanderson took over his part of the farm. He married Agnes Armstrong (also from Hawick Parish) in 1706 and their children included: John (b.1707); Isobel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Francis (b.1717), baptised in Roberton, but also recorded in Hawick; and Adam (b.1718). The witnesses in 1710 were James Craw and William Scott in Branxholme Town and in 1712 were John in Branxholme and William in Branxholme Town. He is probably the Robert in Branxholme Town whose son Francis was baptised in Roberton in 1717 (along with 3 others from the same place on that day). He may be the Robert, tenant in Branxholme Town whose son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1720, with witnesses William Thomson in Newmill and smith James Dryden. If so, he is also the Robert in Branxholme Town who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He could be the Robert recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant in Heap in 1709 when his son Walter was baptised. There are several other children on record who could be his. He seems likely to be related to the earlier tenant in Heap with the same name. Robert of Falnash (d.1734) eldest son of Gideon (‘Auld Falnash’) and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. He is presumably the ‘Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash’, who was unanimously elected to be Cornet in 1722 (this presumably being shortly before he was married). He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead 1721–27. He was mentioned as the Baron’s representative on Hawick Parish Session from 1722, and in 1723 ceased to be an Elder of Cavers to become a member of Hawick Parish Session ‘in consideration of having his chief interest and business in this parish’. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 and 1724 for his sister Beatrix and Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in Hawick in 1725. He also witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Gideon Elliot of Harwood in 1726 and 1728. He was in charge of transferring the tenancy of Whitchesters to William Ogilvie in 1731. He was recorded at Crawhill in 1733. He married Violet, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Susanna Riddell of Minto. Their children were: Susanna (baptised in Cavers Parish in 1723), who married Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1755; Gideon (b.1724), baptised in Cavers Parish, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1726), baptised in Cavers Parish, who sold Fahnash to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1759, and may have been a minister of the Relief Kirk: John (b.1728), baptised in Cavers; Robert of Orchard (1731–1813), baptised in Hawick Parish; and James (1733–1818), baptised at Crawhill in Wilton Parish, who became minister in Perth. In 1735 his wife, Lady Fahnash, sold her property in Hawick to Patrick Hardie, described as ‘High and Leigh, back and fore, with appurtenances, trees and lime pit, in yard called the Howegate and bounded by properties of William Lang later James Scott on east, Robert Hardy and William Leiden on west and Kings hiestreet on south’. It is unclear where his young family was raised after his death. The witnesses to the 1731 baptism were James Anderson (Rector of Hawick Grammar School) and Thomas Watson (writer in Hawick) and in 1733 were James of Whitfield (after whom the child might have been named) and Charles of Crumhaugh. Robert (c.1660–1752) son of Thomas of Todrig and Janet Pringle. He served for a long time in the army, being involved with the artillery in the royal army at the Battle of Sheriffmoor in 1715. He was said to be ‘a man of great simplicity of manners, and of great integrity and honour’. He was probably the Robert, ‘brother to Todrige’, whose heirs are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1696 he leased Borthwickshiel and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He was a witness in 1700 to the marriage contract of his niece Jean Scott (with William Elliot of Harwood); she was daughter of his brother, Walter of Todrig. He died at the garrison in Edinburgh Castle at the age of about 92. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Graham in Wilton in 1703. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Hawickshiel in 1704. He married Margaret Anderson and their son James was baptised in 1704, with witnesses Simon Miller and Walter Scott, both also from Hawickshiel. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in 1705. Robert ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He presumably lived at the head of the Wynd, which was probably what became Walter’s Wynd. It is therefore possible that he was connected with the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He is recorded as ‘wyndhead’ when his children were baptised in 1701, 1712, 1715 and 1718. In 1708 he gave evidence before the Hawick Kirk Session to say that William Scott (son of John ‘Cloaks’) spent time with Margaret Brydon on Common Riding night the year before, leading to an illegitimate child. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter, who was also called ‘Wyndhead’. He married Margaret Crozier. Their other children included: Robert (b.1701); Robert (again, b.1710); Archibald (b.1712); Walter (b.1715); and Marjorie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1712 were tailors Archibald and George Scott (who may have been related to him) and in 1718 were shoemaker James Chisholme and smith John Scott. He was probably related to John ‘Wyndhead’, who died before 1712. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was tenant in Goldielands. He was thus recorded in 1702, when his son Robert was born; this was probably the same as the Robert recorded at Goldielands a few decades later. He married Mary Scott in 1701, with his father given there as Walter; from the similarity of names, it seems likely he is descended from the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. Robert of Harden (d.1710) son of William, succeeding from his brother Sir William in 1707. He was previously ‘of Iliston’ (or ‘Elistoun’, near Melrose), which he had inherited in 1686. He lived in Edinburgh before gaining the Harden titles. In 1708 he was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Berwickshire. In 1709 he sold half of Kershope to William Kerr of Chatto. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fernilee. However, he (like his brother) died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter (actually first cousin, twice removed), son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at ‘Mitcha’ (probably Meadshaw) in 1702 when his son Gideon was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch near Teviothead. He was recorded in Blackcleuch in 1704, 1708, 1716 and 1724. In 1705

he witnessed a baptism for John in Blackcleuch (also called ‘Uncle John’), who may have been a relative; the other witness was John in Falnash. In 1716 he was recorded as tenant in Blackcleuch when he witnessed a baptism for William Anderson, shepherd in Blackcleuch. He could be the tenant in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for Archibald Murray, herds in Hislop and in 1720 for John Nichol from Commonbrae. He married Mary (or ‘Marie’) Scott in 1701 and their children included: Janet (b.1704); and Walter (b.1708). His son John was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724 (with no mother’s name given). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Elliot in Commonbrae and John Beattie ‘servant’ and in 1708 were Walter in Crumhaugh (probably owner of the lands of Blackcleuch) and Walter in Lymiecleuch. Rev. Robert (1673/4–1727) brother of William, Laird of Whitehaugh, and hence son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693 and was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1698. He was called to Robertson Parish in late 1699 and became minister there in 1700, remaining until his death. Because of the ruinous state of the Manse he and his family stayed in Hawick for most of that time; a record of 1715 refers to him and his family being forced to return to Hawick. The oldest existing Robertson communion token dates from 1705, during his incumbency. It is said that in 1703 he was one of the local ministers who walked out of the Synod meeting at Duns, in sympathy with the objections of Hawick’s minister Alexander Orrick. He is probably the ‘mr Rott scott’ who (along with William of Whitehaugh) witnessed a baptism for James in Whitehaugh in 1721. He was ‘minister of the Gospell att Robertoun’ in 1727 when (along with his brother William) he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Janet Scott in Borthaugh. He married Janet Scott in Hawick, and their children (baptised in Robertson) were: Elizabeth (or Bessie, b.1710); Walter (b.1716); and Marion. He published ‘Twelve Sermons preached before and after the celebration of the Lord’s Supper’ (1729). He is buried at Robertson and a memorial tablet was built into the churchyard wall, erected by his brother William. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Bailie James. In 1708 he caused a disturbance in St. Mary’s by trying to take seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ which had been his deceased father’s, although the Council had just decreed that these front seats were reserved for the present Bailies. Along with Walter Purdom (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in jail. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary men named Robert. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at Outerside in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are many possibilities for children born in Robertson at about the same time who could be his. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Hobkirk in Hawick in 1710. Perhaps the same Isabell Hobkirk married Robert Gledstains in Hawick in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Mossbrae in 1717 when his son Andrew was baptised in Robertson Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1718 his son Simon was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Probably the same Robert was in Effledge in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he was recorded as ‘Crawship’ when he witnessed a baptism Hawick weaver Robert Riddell. His designation might signify a connection with the lands of Crawshope in upper Teviotdale. Robert of Scotsbank (d.bef. 1713) owner of the lands of ‘Scott’s Bank’, part of the farm of Hyndhope on the Ettrick. He was recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. In 1708 he is recorded as owner of land in Selkirk, adjacent to the main ‘causey’, which was laid by Hawick man Archibald Paterson. Also in 1708 he attended the ‘convention of Burrows’ in Selkirk and was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. There was a further discharge in 1709, which referred to a loan of 2000 merks he made to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1696 (perhaps related to the Darien Company). His widow Janet Halliday is recorded in a ‘lybell’ in Selkirk in 1713. He is also recorded in 1719 when his widow, Janet Halliday, complained about Thomas Hunter, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk and was also in dispute over a butcher’s bill and in another case in 1720. His widow also had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, 1730, 1732 and 1734, and she complained about march stones with the ‘burleymen’ of Selkirk in 1731. In 1708 his second daughter (and co-heir) Mary married Thomas of Todrig. He may be the Robert who married Janet Halliday in Gladsmuir Parish in 1703 (in which case she must have been his second wife); their children included Alexander (b.1710) and William (b.1712). Robert (17th/18th C.) described as a tenant in Hawick. He married Janet Greenshiels and their children included: James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); and William (b.1725).
The witnesses in 1725 were mason John Turnbull and Dand Gray in Weensland. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1725 (at the same time as another Robert) and Wester Groundistone in 1729. He married Isobel Hall (or perhaps Hill) in Wilton in 1719. Their children included: Margaret (b.1722); John (b.1725); Isobel (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); William (b.1731); and Robert (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were George Scott and Walter Riddell and in 1729 were William Turnbull and Robert Scott. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish. He was living at Girkwood in 1718 and 1722 when his daughters Janet and Helen were baptised. He may be the same as on of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he married Jean Taylor in Ashkirk in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) cottar in North Synton. He married Euphan Dunlop and their children included: William (b.1719); John (b.1731); and Bettie (b.1732). Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he married Dorothy McVittie in Hawick in 1721. Her name is written ‘Doarthe Magvitie’. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he was at Parkhill in 1723 when his son Robert was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1722 when his son William was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer at Skelfhill. He is listed as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert recorded in Skelfhill in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, tenant in Falnash (who was formerly at Skelfhill, and was probably related). In 1722 he, along with Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and James Grieve of Commonside petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1723 he is recorded in the Hawick Session records giving in ‘400 merks of ye poors money’. It is possible he is the ‘Old Hobby in Skelfhill’ who wrote a version of ‘The Braes of Bransholme’ and of who several other stories are told by William Scott, teacher in Burnemouth (see Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill whose son John was married in Hawick in 1700. He may be the ‘Auld Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ who was grandfather of Robert Scott in Skelfhill who described him in 1809; he was said to have married a daughter of John Elliot, farmer in Southfield. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Martin in 1722. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725). The 1723 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and John Glendinning in Whitchesters and the 1725 baptism by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, residing at Tandlaw in 1729. He married Janet Gledstains in 1727 and their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Bessie (b.1730); and Robert (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were Walter Scott and William Stewart and in 1730 were William Harkness and George Stavert. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1729 (at the same time as another Robert); he is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for the other Robert in 1729. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included: William (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); James (b.1729); and Mary (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were George and Richard (who were probably related to him). He may be the Robert who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kyle at Groundistone in 1737. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Boonraw in 1729. He married Margaret Easton in 1728 and their children included: Isobel (b.1729); and Janet (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were James and Robert Ormiston. Dr. Robert (d.c.1757) surgeon in Hawick, possibly the last of the Scotts of Whitslade. Dr. Thomas Somerville’s ‘My Own Life and Times’ describes him as ‘the only surviving representative of the ancient family of Whitslade. He appears to have been brother of Walter, and also of John, who sold Whitslade. He was probably the 4th son of Thomas (d.c.1698), and was said to have greatly outlived his 6 brothers. It was also said that he was 14th in descent from the Lord of Buccleuch. In his old age he became quite poor, being described as ‘a gentlemanlike person in ruin, tall, meagre – the countenance of hunger and despondency’, and is said to have survived through occasional donations of distant relatives. He was also helped by Hawick’s minister Rev. William Somerville, perhaps inspired by the assistance the Scotts of Whitslade had given to Somerville’s father, Rev. Thomas S. Somerville, when he was ousted as minister of Cavers during the Revolution and settled in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1745, for skinner John Currer. Perhaps a different Dr. Robert (or the same, but with confused details) is described as being the 4th son of William of Raeburn, and 14th in descent from Buccleuch; this Robert married Mary Flemming and their son Robert may have been a surgeon in Musselburgh, who married Elizabeth Chalmers, and whose daughter Helen apparently helped Sir Walter with the plot of Ivanhoe. He is recorded as ‘Mr. Robert Scott Whitslade Surgeon in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1753 for a daughter of John Gledstains of Whittal. This suggests that he continued to be an Episcopalian throughout his life. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Agnes Elliot and their son Patrick was baptised in 1728. The witnesses were Walter in ‘New…’ and John in ‘Ever…’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he was at Highchesters when his daughter Helen was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. His son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1732 (apparently twice in successive weeks!). There are several other children baptised in Robertson at about the same time who could be his. Probably the same Robert married Marion Scott and was recorded in Whitfield in 1747 when their daughter Susana was baptised in Wilton Parish. Other children of this same couple included Margaret (b.1750) and Helen (b.1752). The 1747 witnesses were Walter and John Scott, who seem likely to have been related to him or his wife. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwicke Shiels in 1732 and 1736. His children included: Janet (b.1732); and Margaret (b.1736). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1743 and 1744. He married Agnes Hood in Wilton in 1738. Their children included: Janet (b.1741); Robert (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); William (b.1745); Walter (b.1749); Anne (b.1752); and Robert (again, b.1755). The witnesses in 1743 were James Dryden and Walter Scott and in 1744 were Robert and Walter Scott. Robert (18th C.) servant to Rev. William Somerville in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. Robert (d.1750) resident of Stoulsie whose funeral was recorded in Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Coldhouse (d.1772) father of Robert, minister of Innerleithen and grandfather of Alexander, friend of Lord Byron. He is probably a descendant of the earlier Robert of Howford and Coldhouse, but the identity of his father is not clear. He is recorded being ‘of Coldhouse’ in Wilton baptisms in at least 1709, 1711 and 1724. In 1708 in Wilton Parish, he married Jean, daughter of James Cunningham. His children included: James (b.1709); Margaret (b.1711); Rev. Robert (b.1714); an unnamed son (b.1717); Walter (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). Helen (b.1726), baptised in Hawick to a couple with the same names, could also be his child. The witnesses in 1709 were William Chisholme of Parkhill, Alexander Scott, younger of Galalaw, and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1711 were Robert of Tandlaw and Robert in Drinkstone; also in 1711, along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1724 were Alexander of Galalaw and Walter Cunningham (who was surely related to his wife, and may have given his name to the child). He is probably the Laird recorded in Hawick in 1739 when the bells were rung for ‘Colddehouses wife’s burrell’. He witnessed a baptism (along with Alexander of Galalaw) for William Scott in Whitfield in 1744. He is probably also the ‘Lard of Coldhouse’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. His death at Tandlaw is recorded in the Scots Magazine, and he was said to be ‘aged 90 and upwards’. Robert (1688–1768) 3rd son of William in Milsington. He became tenant at Singlie before 1712. He is probably the tenant in Singlie who was involved in a case with Alexander, flesher in Selkirk in 1762. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Their children included: William, who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Henry, who farmed at Over Deloraine; Margaret, who married William Scott, farmer at Kirkhope; and Elizabeth. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1699 in Selkirk as late Dean of Guild. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Linglie, near Selkirk, as recorded in 1708 for a receipt for a transaction involving Philiphaugh Mill. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts, but it is possible he is the same man as the Dean of guild in 1715 (since the Burgh of Selkirk owned the farm of Linglie). Note the potential confusion with ‘Singlie’. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Burgh Officer in Selkirk in 1716. Robert of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1724 when his daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Whitehaugh. He must have been related to the earlier John of Gorrenberry, or perhaps to the Alton branch. However, it is possible that ‘Robert’ is an error for another Scott of Gorrenberry. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1744) son of Walter of Harwood and Christian Ker. He may have been the ‘Harwood’ recorded in 1721 paying money to the town for ringing the bells at the burial of his child. It is said that the family fortunes were lost through the extravagance of his mother. He sold Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch (or perhaps confirmed the earlier sale of his
Robert and Ann (b.1765). Robert gahon’ and their children included Mary (b.1762) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary ‘Mc-

Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of the early 1700s setting up seats and making a ‘footgang’ at Hawick Kirk. He was thus presumably a joiner. Robert of Davington (c.1682–1764) 2nd son of Francis of Davington, and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1706 and his older brother John about 1710. Sir Francis of Thirlestane had him and his widowed mother thrown off their farm at Cassock. About 1727 he (and his brothers Francis and William) started a legal battle to recover the estates lost by his great-grandfather during the Civil War (based on a document made out by his grandfather Sir John of Thirlestane in Hawick in 1641). This ended in 1744 and he renounced all rights to the lands to his brother Francis in 1747. He was known as ‘Robert the Laird’. He married Mary McAlpine. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and had an only son James, who died without issue; John, attorney in Canonbie, who had several children, but also failed in the male line; and William of Melkledale. Robert (1691/2–1763) agricultural labourer in southern Liddesdale and northern England. He married Christian Turnbull, who died in 1750, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (d.1771), who died at Longcleuchside; and James (1726/7–1801), who died at Pyke. He died at Blacklin and they are buried at Ettleton. Robert (1698–1771) son of Walter of Woll and Eliza, daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He moved to Tamnynmore in County Londonderry and was progenitor of a line of Scotts in Ulster, including proprietors of W. & C. Scott, millmen in Omagh. The family history is described in ‘The Stones that Ground the Corn, The Story of an Irish County Grain Mill, 1850–2000’, by Tony Deeson et al. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary ‘Megahon’ and their children included Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). Robert (1699–1775) son of Walter ‘Beardie’ and grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He received a lease of Sandyknowe from Scott of Harden. He paid the window tax there in the 1750s. He married Barbara Haliburton in 1728 and their children were: Walter (b.1729) W.S., father of the author; Thomas (b.1731), who married Anne Scott of Raeburn and secondly Jean Rutherford of Knowesouth; Janet (1733–1805), who lived in Kelso and died unmarried; Mary (b.1735), also died unmarried; Jean (b.1737) married her relative Walter Scott of Raeburn; Robert (b.1739), who lived at Rosebank, Kelso; Barbara (b.1742), who married Mr. Currie; and John (b.1749), who died young on H.M.S. Southampton. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Whitriggs in 1725 when his son Francis was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Fenwick (18th C.), called ‘Clack’. Son of Francis of Fenwick, he married Jean Scott and later Katherine Elliot of Arkleton. He may be the Robert of Clack who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 (although this could have been the earlier Robert of ‘Glack’, who also owned Fenwick). In about 1710 he and several tenants neighbouring Hawick Common formed themselves into a club and ‘drunk the Magistrates of Hawick, and got liberty from the Magistrates to rest their beasts on the Common from nine in the morning to twelve mid-day’ (according to evidence given on the state of the Common in 1767). He is probably the ‘Laird of Fenick’ who paid Hawick £9 for a year’s rent of the weigh-house in 1729 (suggesting he was the Baron’s Bailie for the Town). He is probably the Robert of Fenwick who (along with Charles of Crumhaugh) in 1747 witnessed a baptism for Gideon and Rachel Scott (perhaps his daughter). He had a son, Gavin, but it is unclear who his wife might have been and if they had other children. The bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1732 for ‘Lady Glask’s burial’, which was probably his wife. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1726 he married Helen Dickson from Roberton Parish, the marriage taking place at Commonside. It is possible he was the tenant in Thornyhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1738; the other witness was Walter at Commonside, raising the possibility that there was a relationship between them. It is possible he was the son of Walter in Crumhaugh and Christian Bennet, born in 1704, who is said to have been a tenant in Crumhaugh who died without issue. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters, son of David. He married Elizabeth Douglas.
Their son John was tenant at Boonraw. Walter (b.1732) and James (b.1734), born in Wilton, were probably also their children. Col. Robert of Horsleyhill (b.1704) son of Francis, descendant of the Scotts of Midgehope and Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘Captain’. His family had extensive lands in Weensland and a town-house at the top of Walter’s Wynd. In 1734 he was made an Honorary Burgess, the first one on record. In 1742 he registered arms at the Lyon Office. He also owned lands elsewhere, and was a heritor of Morebattle Parish. In 1744 he was involved in a dispute with Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle and Mow over teinds. He was Hawick Bailie for 4 years until about 1758 (and easy to confuse with the merchant of the same name who was a Bailie at a similar time). He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He was also one of the witnesses in the Division of the Common proceedings. He is probably the ‘Captain Scott of Weensland’ described in 1777, among those who gained part of the Common (his allocation being included as part of that of Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick). He may be the Robert Scott whose former lands in Weensland are recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as belonging to James Dickson and passing to auctioneer James Oliver by the mid-19th century. In 1746 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Douglas of Springbank (b.1720), daughter of George Douglas of Friarshaw. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters, with their son John succeeding. Robert (b.1704) youngest son of Walter and Christian Bennet. His father was uncle to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and had been described as sometimes tenant of Crumhaugh. In 1742 he witnessed (along with John Elliot at Goldielands) a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. In 1743 he received sasine of the lands of ‘Croftangry’ in Hawick, as heir to his half-brother Walter. He was also described as tenant in Crumhaugh himself. Also in 1743 he gained ‘a tenement of land and onstead of houses in Hawick’ which had been ‘deponed’ by his brother Walter in 1730; this may have been the same or different lands. He was then described as ‘multurer’. He probably died without children. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as a ‘baxter’ in 1742 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker William (who may have been related) and for wright Henry Haliburton, and in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Crozier. He may have been father of the later Robert Scott who was also a baker. Robert (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1742 when his son James was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident at Hightecchers in 1743 when his son daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. Probably the same Robert was recorded in ‘Easter Haychester’ in 1763 in a court case in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1742 and 1745 being ‘at Goldilands’ when his children were baptised in Hawick. He married Agnes Rutherfurd and their children included: Marjorie (b.1733), baptised in Oxnam Parish; and Walter (b.1735), John (b.1737), Anne (b.1739), Charles (b.1742) and Beatrux (b.1745), baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1742 were workman Walter Scott and Kirk Officer John Telfer and in 1745 included his servant Walter Scott. It is unclear whether he was directly connected to the former Scotts of Goldielands, but may have been son of the earlier Robert in Goldielands, born in 1702. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton itself in 1743 when his daughter Christian was baptised in that parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Burnhead (d.1755) eldest son of William, who he probably succeeded around 1720. He is probably the Robert ‘of Burnhead’ who in 1718 witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William of Brieryhill. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Walter of Crumhaugh and Beatrice Scott and for weaver Thomas Tinlin. His sister Eupham married Thomas Watson, who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick, and Margaret (probably another sister), married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. He was recorded living at Clarilaw in 1721, 1725 and 1727. In 1722 and 1724 he witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Walter of Crumhaugh. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the period 1728–43. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howe to Patrick Hardie. In 1719 in Wilton he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Mary (b.1721); William (b.1723), who succeeded; Agnes (b.1725); Gideon (b.1727); Margaret, who married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton in 1786, and succeeded her brother; and Walter. The witnesses in 1721 were Gideon of Falnash and Walter of Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1725 were Thomas Watson, writer in Hawick and James Scott, surgeon in Hawick (who married his sister Margaret). The 1727 baptism is recorded being ‘to Robert Scott of Burnhead and his Lady Agnes Scott’; the witnesses were James (perhaps the surgeon) and writer Thomas Watson. It seems like he must be the ‘Robert Scott, Laird of Burnfoot or Burnhead’ who in 1722 married Ann Stoddart in Ashkirk Parish; however, this conflicts with him marrying Agnes Scott. Robert of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1753 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. This was for 14 windows, as William (perhaps his father) had paid in 1748. His name is written ‘Robert Scott Esqr. Humbleknows’, the ‘Esqr.’ suggesting he was a man of some status. It is possible there is a connection with the Scotts of Burnhead, who owned Hummelknowes in the 19th century. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Anne Porteous and their children included: Robert (b.1741); Jean (b.1742). It is possible that the Robert married to Elspeth (or ‘Eppy’) Porteous was the same man, with children Robert (b.1737) and Janet (b.1739). The witnesses in 1742 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant John Ruecastle. Bailie Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Bailie in the 1750s and also recorded as Bailie in 1763. He was possibly the same merchant Robert who had been involved with the 1740 bond for the construction of the Teviot Bridge. He may be the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull ‘Town Post’ in 1742. He is probably the Bailie Robert who witnessed baptisms for carrier Gilbert Oliver in 1746, for merchant Walter (along with shoemaker Andrew) in 1761 and also for gardener John Lamb in 1761. In 1762 he (along with miller James) was witness for a baptism for miller Adam (who may have been related). He is probably the merchant Robert who married Betty, daughter of William Aitken (or Aitken), and whose children included: William (b.1743); George (b.1745); and William (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott (who may have been related) and in 1747 were merchant George and shoemaker Walter. He also witnessed a baptism in 1745 for miller James (who may have been a relative). Probably the same Bailie Robert witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related), along with merchant George. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew (who may have been related). In 1767 it was described that his father-in-law, William Aitken, had liferent of a house in Hawick, for which he had the fee for his son William. He is probably the Bailie Robert whose son James died in 1777. It may have been a relative of his who was the Robert whose son Robert became a Skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1682. Robert (d.bef. 1780) tenant of Skelfhill. He is recorded being at Skelfhill in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He is recorded as ‘late in Skelfhill’ in a notice to his creditors published in 1780; he had been declared bankrupt. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Skelfhill. However, it is possible he was son of Robert of Harwood (whose wife had a connection to Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert recorded at Skelfhill in 1727, 1729, 1731 and 1738 when his children Robert, George, Janet and James were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr. Scott in Scalfhill’ whose son John was baptised in 1741. It is unclear how he was related to the Robert who was in Skelfhill in 1772. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Mountbenger Burn in 1761 and 1765, when he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert (18th C.) recorded as resident of Whitchesters in 1766. He was probably related to the earlier Robert, farmer in Whitchesters. He married Margaret Turner in 1759 and their children included: Robert (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); and John (b.1766). Witnesses in 1766 were John Hobkirk and Robert Liddell. He may be the Robert recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Rev. Robert (1714–96) born at Coldhouse (in Wilton), son of Robert. He was licensed as a minister by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1774 and became minister at Innerleithen in 1777. There is a receipt from him in 1782 preserved in Selkirk. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he was recorded as owner of Coldhouse and Tandlaw, with a value of £80 together. In 1781 he married Margaret (or perhaps Agnes) Chisholme (d.1817), daughter of Thomas, the Selkirk surgeon. They had 8 children: Agnes (1782–1802); Thomas Chisholme (d.1811), who died in Bengal; William Chisholme (b.1785) who probably later owned Chisholme House; Charles James (1787–1807), who died at sea; Jean (b.1789); James Robert (b.1790); Robert (b.1791); and Alexander (b.1793), who was a friend of Lord Byron. It seems that Burns met him when he passed.
through Innerleithen on his Borders tour in 1787. Later in the 1800s his lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were owned by Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay, who was probably a descendant. Robert ‘Rob the Laird’ (18th C.) only son of James, who was a son of Francis of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm (near Eskdalemuir) and then at Binks. He took the daughters of James Scott of Davington (his cousin) to court in an attempt to gain the remaining family estates. In 1786 he was imprisoned in Dumfries Tolbooth for a month for illegally resuming possession of the farm of Davington. In 1792 he drafted a genealogy of his family. He had no known children. He is mentioned in notes to the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem ‘Thirlestane, a fragment’; it is stated that he was called ‘Rob the Laird’ because he would have been Laird, and also that he referred to the murderous Lady of Thirlestane as ‘the d–d b–h’. Robert (1721/2–1807) gardener at Wells. He was listed there in 1778 and 1779, when the estate was held by William Nassau Elliot. He was still there in 1785–88 when it was owned by Gilbert Elliott. By 1791 probably the same Robert was a gardener at Weens, working for William Oliver. In 1794 he was again recorded at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliott. He married Margaret Hope, and she died in 1786, aged 77. Their children included: Elizabeth (1748/9–1824), who married John Fiddes; and Margaret (1753/4–98). They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1748 when his son James was baptised. He could be the Robert living in Denholm whose when his children John (b.1753), Janet (b.1757) and Margaret (b.1761) were baptised. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Denholm. He seems to be distinct from another Robert who was in Denholm at the same time, based on the fact that they both had children baptised in 1757 and in 1761 (only a couple of months apart each time). His children included James (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1761). He could be the Robert, farmer at Denholm Farm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses; note that the place he farmed was distinct from Denholm Hill and Denholm Mill farms. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose nephew James was listed on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Robert (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being William ‘the Auld Mason’. He was shepherd at Merrylaw. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and shepherd John. Robert (18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick recorded supplying the refreshments to a meeting relating to Wilton Kirk in 1764. He is probably the same Robert where it is said that the local Justices of the Peace would meet in the winter, when it was too cold in the Town House. Robert (1727/8–83) resident at Lanton. His son Thomas set up a memorial stone in Bedrule kirkyard to him and other members of the family. He married Jean, who died at Lantonhill in 1819, aged 86. He may be the ‘Capt. Scott’ whose lands in Lanton are recorded in the valuation rolls of the 18th century. Robert, who is recorded in 1788 as owner of the adjacent ‘part of James Henderson’s lands in Lantontoun’ may have been his son. Robert (b.c.1730) younger son of Alexander, who was miller in Rulewater and later tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He took over from his father as tenant in Roughheugh Mill in Wilton. He was recorded there in a baptismal record of 1790 and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as owner of the ‘Cornmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the county valuation in 1788 and the Tax Rolls of 1811 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He appears to have married Ann Brown, and their children were: Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778), who married Margaret Bell: Thomas of Little Cote, who married, but died without issue; Euphan (or Euphemia, b.1775), who married her cousin John, brother of Alexander of Falla; and Alice (or Alison, b.1782), who married Mr. Briggs of Middlestones. He secondly married Janet Buckham and had children: Mary (b.1786); Helen (b.1788); Robert (b.1790); and William (b.1792). He may be the Robert who in 1770, along with Thomas, witnessed a baptism for clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull, resident of Roughheugh. Robert of Orchard (1731–1813) younger son of Robert of Falnash. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758–68 for ‘Teviotdalehead’, which included Hawick, Wilton, Cavers, Teviothead and Roberton. In 1765 he applied to the Town Council to be allowed to cut turf on Hawick Moor ‘for covering part of the office houses at Branksholm’, and was allowed to do so. However, in 1766 he is probably the Duke's Chamberlain who led a group of his tenants and farm workers to try to put their sheep and cattle onto the small pieces of land that the Town had let on the Common (in a deliberate attempt to stop encroachment by neighbouring tenants):
these confrontations came close to resulting in violence. In 1767 he represented the Duke of Buccleuch at the parambulation of Hawick Common made as part of the court case for its division. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as 'Robert Scott Esqr.' at Orchard Cottage, when he owned 3 farm horses as well as 1 saddle horse. Also in 1797 he was listed as being of 'Cottage', when he was taxed for male servants. He paid the land tax at Orchard in 1811. In Wilton in 1759 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard, and eventually became proprietor of Orchard himself (probably inheriting after the death of his nephew William Dickson in 1788). Their children were: Margaret (b.1761), who married Dr. Andrew Wilson from Kelso; Robert (b.1762), who probably died young; and Violet (b.1765), who married farmer William Bell, from whom was descended William Scott Bell of Woll. He died in Edinburgh, and is then described as 'late of Orchard'. Robert (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Deans in 1752 and their children included: Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1756); John (b.1758); Walter (b.1760); and Agnes (b.1765). He may be the Hawick carrier listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Jane Little, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included Jane (b.1762), John (b.1765) and Elizabeth (b.1767). The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at 'Broadliehesiel' (i.e. Broadleeshiel) in 1762, 1763 and 1767 and 'Broadlie burnfoot' in 1771. Perhaps the same Robert was at Gair in 1769. His children probably included: George (b.1762); William (b.1763); Janet (b.1765); Charles (b.1767); James (b.1768); Agnes (b.1769); and George (again, b.1771), probably the Wilton contractor, who was father of twins in 1799. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Dickson in Robertson in 1761. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1764); Janet (b.1771); and Helen (b.1773). The witnesses in 1764 were John (probably a relative) and Alexander Bumyan. Robert (b.1757), Walter (b.1759) and Margaret (b.1762), baptised in Wilton Parish, could also be his children. Robert (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1757, 1764 and 1765 when children of his were baptised in Robertson Parish. His children included Janet (b.1757), William (b.1764) and Robert (b.1765). He could be the Robert who married Mary Scott in Roberton in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Philhopeshiel in 1765 when his daughter Jean was baptised. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was listed as ‘Junr. Baker’ in 1762 when one of his children was baptised. He was described as ‘junior, baker’ in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was thus probably a member of the Council. It seems likely that his father was also Robert. Probably the same Robert was recorded in 1766, along with barber Francis (perhaps a relative), when he witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (perhaps also related); his designation appears to be ‘Cross Keys’, suggesting he was proprietor of one of the inns of that name (perhaps the older one on the High Street). He married Mary McGaughan (or ‘Mcgahan’), whose death in 1776 is recorded as ‘Mrs. Scott Cross keys’. Their children included: Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1765 were writer John Gledstains and baker William Elliot. Robert (1735/6–1807) shepherd at Baldhill. His wife was Betty Park (d.1798) and their children included William and Betty. The family are buried at Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1758 he married Christian Scott, this being recorded in Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1758); Isabel (b.1761); William (b.1763); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were William Paterson and ‘Mr’ Walter Scott (presumably a local landowner). Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1763 along with Betty Scott, when their daughter Mary was baptised in Robertson Parish. They were listed ‘being Sponsors for ye child’, which may suggest that they had moved from the parish. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as ‘Mr. Robt. Scott in Skelfhill’ in 1772, when his son John was baptised. It is unclear how he might have been related to the earlier and later Roberts who lived at Skelfhill. Robert (18th C.) resident at Wester Parkhill in 1774 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. There are many possibilities of children of Robert born in Robertson around that time that could be his. Robert (18th/19th C.) 4th son of William, tenant in Milsington. He was a manufacturer in Hawick and died unmarried. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he married Margaret Turner and their children included Robert (b.1760), Walter (b.1762) and John (b.1766). His wife died in Wilton Parish in 1817. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1786 he and ex-Bailie Andrew witnessed a baptism for the sitting Bailie William (who was probably related). He and Andrew (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck in 1794. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Rosebank (1739–1804) 3rd son of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was uncle of Sir Walter the writer. He was Captain of vessel in the Merchant Navy and later purchased the small estate of Rosebank near Kelso.

He is probably the bank agent at Kelso who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, with his being ‘a liferent vote from Baron Ruthervurd’. He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798. He died unmarried and was buried at Kelso Abbey. He left his estate to his nephew, Sir Walter, whose literary career he had long encouraged. Robert (18th C.) lived at Arkleton in Ewesdale. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Esther (b.1778); James (b.1780); John (b.1782); unnamed (b.1783); and James (again, b.1784). Perhaps the same Robert and Janet Turnbull had children Helen (b.1786) and Esther (b.1789) baptised in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. It is possible he is the Robert in Dykes recorded in 1784 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (18th C.) gardener and driver at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1786 he was listed as a ‘Chaise driver’. Robert (1758–1815) eldest son of James. He farmed at Skelfhill, like his father. His son James in turn became farmer there. He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill who made statements about his family history in 1809, e.g. that ‘Old Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ was his grandfather. Robert (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Jane Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1785) and James (b.1789). Robert (18th/19th C.) from Wilton Parish. In 1794 he married Isabel Armstrong, who was also from Wilton. Their children included: James (b.1796); William (b.1799); Thomas (b.1802); William (again, b.1803); and Robert (b.1805). Robert (d.bef. 1810) weaver in Hawick. His son Andrew died in 1810, when his cognomen appears to be given as ‘Killdrys’. He is surely related to Adam, who had essentially the same nickname. Robert (18th C.) hosier in Hawick. In 1786 he and weaver Charles (perhaps ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’) witnessed a baptism for George Blaikie and Agnes (who may have been sister of him and Charles). He could be the son of Charles and Janet Porteous baptised in Hawick in 1764. Robert (b.c.1760) agricultural labourer living at Dovemount in 1841. Margaret (b.c.1790) was also there, and probably his daughter. He may be the ‘R. Scott, Dovemount’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Galashiels, in 1794 he married Betty Renwick, who was from Hawick. Perhaps they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose in 1799 and 1800. farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 3 horses at that time. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Kerritrig’ (i.e. Carewoodrig) in Ewesdale in 1792–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Mervinslaw in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Mackside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) weaver at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) gardener at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Bundle’ when his grandchild died in 1805. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.1764/5) born in Wilton Parish, he lived at Dykeneuk. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Dykeneuk, along with Isabella (probably his sister) and William Ormiston. In 1851 he is listed as an unmarried retired farmer, living at Dykeneuk with a lodger, William Ormiston, and his niece Janet Ormiston. He may be the Robert listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (b.c.1765) mason who lived at Hummelknowhaugh, recorded on the 1841 census. He could be the Hawick mason who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) owner of parts of Weensland according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He had purchased 2 parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston and (presumably the same Robert) had already sold part to Andrew Porteous. By about 1874 these parts were owned by manufacturer Walter Wilson and others. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.)

tenant at ‘Titus foord’, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His farm was probably the same place also known as ‘Tythehousefield’. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Midlem Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. Robert (b.c.1770s) tenant at Lymiecleuch, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James was servant there at the same time and perhaps related. Robert (b.c.1770s) mason at Dewyhaugh on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was probably related to David, who was farmer there at the same time, and David junior who was also on the ballot. Robert (1773–1844) eldest son of William, tenant of Singlie. He became tenant farmer at Todshawhaugh in 1800 (after the death of Walter Grieve of Brauxholme Park). He was leasing ‘Helms’ (i.e. Whames) along with Todshawhaugh in 1802 and was listed being in arrears for Todshawhaugh in 1812. He was involved in a loan with the Jardines and Elliots of Harwood in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet Jardine of Thordleshope. Their children included: Christian (b.1804) who married James Dickson of Chatto and Housebyres in 1827; William (b.1806), who died young; Gideon (d.c.1835), farmer at Midlemoss, who married Barbara Armstrong; Margaret (b.1810); Janet (b.1813), who also died young; Janet (b.1814); and Agnes (b.1819). One of his daughters (possibly Jessie) married William Dove, who succeeded his father-in-law as tenant of Todshawhaugh. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. The deaths of his daughter Betty and son Walter are recorded in 1810, as well as the death of another son in 1824. He could be the wright in Hawick listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Clerk to Mr Turnbull Allars’ in Hawick when listed (along with another clerk of the same name) in the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. Robert (b.c.1780) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was based at ‘Scaur Nook’ (near Langraw) in 1841. He is probably the mason of this name who was said to be one of the last residents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Hawick Parish, he was farmer at Kaimend. He married Isabella Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1807. Their children included: Mary (b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); Janet (b.1812); Archibald (b.1815); and Robert (b.1819). He was there from at least 1841, and in 1861 was farming 160 acres and employing 3 labourers. Robert ‘Robbie the Cow’ (b.1786/7) owner of a tenement at 43 High Street, living on the ground floor in the mid-19th century. The nickname was probably because he kept cows in the back of his house. His housekeeper (Barbara Anderson) was known as ‘Babbie the Cow’. In 1841 he was recorded as an accountant and living with farmer James (probably his older brother) and 2 servants, including ‘Barbary’. By 1851 he was there with only ‘Babbie’, when listed as ‘Accountant and occupier of 26 Acres of land’. By around 1860 the house was occupied by George Brown, green-grocer and was later rebuilt by Walter Paisley, ironmonger. He may be the Robert born in Hawick in 1786 to William and Margaret Goodfellow, with brothers George (b.1778), James (b.1782) and William (b.1791), as well as 2 earlier Roberts (who must have died young). He could be the grocer and meal dealer on the High Street recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Rob’ (1788–1872) born at Harden House, son of John and Helen Elsington. He

Thursdays. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Ro. Scott’ at about 5 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Hawick, recorded at least as early as 1814. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same Robert was listed as an accountant on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the accountant listed in 1841, living on the High Street (probably No. 45) with farmer James, likely his brother; this Robert was 74 in 1861 and could be the son of William and Margaret Goodfellow born in Hawick in 1786. He is probably the Robert recorded in a letter regarding the estate of Thomas Telford, preserved in the Walter Mason collection. It is possible he is the ‘Clerk to Mr Turnbull Banker’ (perhaps Thomas Fencwick) in Hawick listed (along with another clerk of the same name) in the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. Robert (b.c.1780) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was based at ‘Scaur Nook’ (near Langraw) in 1841. He is probably the mason of this name who was said to be one of the last residents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Hawick Parish, he was farmer at Kaimend. He married Isabella Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1807. Their children included: Mary (b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); Janet (b.1812); Archibald (b.1815); and Robert (b.1819). He was there from at least 1841, and in 1861 was farming 160 acres and employing 3 labourers. Robert ‘Robbie the Cow’ (b.1786/7) owner of a tenement at 43 High Street, living on the ground floor in the mid-19th century. The nickname was probably because he kept cows in the back of his house. His housekeeper (Barbara Anderson) was known as ‘Babbie the Cow’. In 1841 he was recorded as an accountant and living with farmer James (probably his older brother) and 2 servants, including ‘Barbary’. By 1851 he was there with only ‘Babbie’, when listed as ‘Accountant and occupier of 26 Acres of land’. He may be the Robert born in Hawick in 1786 to William and Margaret Goodfellow, with brothers George (b.1778), James (b.1782) and William (b.1791), as well as 2 earlier Roberts (who must have died young). He could be the grocer and meal dealer on the High Street recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Rob’ (1788–1872) born at Harden House, son of John and Helen Elsington. He joined the local militia when very young and enlisted in the 85th Regiment of Foot in 1809. He served in the Peninsular War under Sir Arthur Wellesley (later Duke of Wellington), seeing lots of action, and was sent to America in 1814, where he was said to be close by Gen. Ross when he fell at Baltimore. He himself was wounded at New Orleans and he was discharged in 1816, retiring as a Colour-Sergeant with a pension. He settled back in Hawick where he was landlord of the Red Lion Inn at the Sandbed (as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He also worked as a stockmaker and was a noted supporter of the strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822. He could be the stocking-maker recorded in Wilton Parish at Pathhead in 1835 and Roadside in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he and his family were living at No. 5 Wilton Bank. He married Helen Oliver from Jedburgh. Their children were: Helen, who became Mrs. Greig; George; an unnamed child; John; Elizabeth; Gilbert; Robert (b.1827); Andrew; Agnes; Janet, who became Mrs. Dobson; Adam, who moved to Ballarat, Australia; and Mary. His son Adam erected a headstone in memory of him and his wife in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.1792/3) farmer at Castle-side in Ashkirk Parish, originally from Castleton Parish. He may have been son of George and Margaret Murray. His wife was Helen, and he secondly married Anne S. In 1841 he was living at Castleside with his wife and mother Helen. Robert (1794/5–1860) son of William, who was a gentleman’s servant, and Margaret Gray, he was a labourer who lived at Stobs Woodfoot. He was unmarried and lived with his brother William and sister Nell (i.e. Helen). He was buried in Wilton cemetery. Robert (1795/6–1855) shepherd at Lodgegill on the Tarras Water. He was listed there as an agricultural labourer in 1841. He married Margaret Scott, and she died in 1868. Their children included Margaret, Eliza, Jane, George and William. He died in Hawick. Robert (1796–1872) son of John and grandson of Robert. He was tenant farmer at East Boonraw; he was listed there on the 1841 census and still there in 1868. He married Agnes Margaret Scott, who died in 1831, following childbirth. Their children were: Janet or ‘Jeanette’ (b.1819), who married farmer Thomas Potts and lived near Hadden; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1820), who married farmer Robert Miller; Margaret (1821–97), who married Gideon Harkness and emigrated to Owen Sound, Ontario; John (b.1823), who emigrated to America, but was murdered for his money by the couple he was lodging with in Wisconsin; Ellen (b.1825), who died unmarried after emigrating to stay with her brothers William and then Adam; Adam (b.1828), who married Elizabeth Anderson of the Burnfoot on Ale family and they emigrated to America, his son Thomas A. later returning to Hawick; and William (b.1830), who emigrated to settle at Pine Bluff, Wisconsin, where his brother John had been murdered, and he married Martha Rice. He later married Janet Douglas, who came from Jedburgh and died in 1888, aged 71. Their children were: Robert, who married Matha Craig and lived in Toronto; Douglas, who married Susan Ann Woodcraft from Buckinghamshire, emigrated to Canada in 1869 and worked as a contractor; Euphemia, who married farmer Walter Thompson; Agnes, who married Tom Graham from Edinburgh; Eliza, who married John Moffatt and emigrated to America; John, who married Margaret Richardson, who also emigrated to America; Walter, who lived in Manchester; George, who married Julia Frizzel and worked with his brother Douglas. Robert of Eweslees (b.1797/8) one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Eweslees in 1841, in 1851 was employing 5 labourers there and by 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres, employing 2 shepherds. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Violet and their children included Barbara and Jane. Robert (b.1800/1) auctioneer and appraiser in Lilliesleaf, who also worked as a frameworker. He was on Back Road in the 1861 census. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included David, Wilhelmina K. and Elizabeth. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1800–1868) son of George of Calaburn. He was apprentice smith with Adam Legerwood at Forkins. He became a blacksmith, vet and farrier and also a local authority on cows and their diseases. He worked in Kirkton and then at Caughmill after James Smith moved to Hawick). In 1820 he married Jessie (1799–1869), eldest daughter of Moses Renwick. In 1841 he was at Caughmill with his wife and children Betty, Robert, Ann (or Mary Ann) and Jane. His children were: George (b.1820), Mary (b.1827), Jessy (b.1830); and Jane Grant (b.1840), who all died young; Violet (b.1822); Betty (b.1824), who became Mrs. Oliver and died in Canada; Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (b.1834), also a local vet; and Mary Ann (b.1837), who became Mrs. Fleming and died in Canada. He is buried in Cavers and Kirkton Parish Churchyard. Robert (b.1804/5) listed in 1861 as farmer of 10 acres, living at 1 Burnflat.
His younger brother Gilbert (a woollen weaver) also lived there. Robert (b.c.1805) farmer at Todlaw, in Cavers Parish. He was from Jedburgh. In 1841 he was listed as a mason journeyman, but by 1851 was a farmer. He married Elizabeth Wilson. Their children included Margaret (1833–96, who married Denholm clothier Robert Turnbull), Jessie and Robert. He is probably the Robert, married to Elizabeth Wilson, whose son Thomas was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1831. Robert (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Welsh and their children included Robert (b.1827). Robert (19th C.) listed as a toy dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (b.1813/4) cabinet-maker on Buccleuch Street. His wife was Margaret (from Selkirk) and children included Susan, Robert, William, Thomas, Walter, Jane and Helen. He was probably related to Thomas and Robert Scott, recorded as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It seems likely he was son of Thomas, joiner at the Sandbed on the 1841 directory, and brother of Thomas and Walter, who were also trainee joiners there. He may be the ‘Robert, jun.’ listed as a joiner on Ladylaw Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was living at 52 Loan. Robert of Kinninghall (1817–97) son of Alexander, who farmed at Kinninghall. He was grandson of the tenant of Roughheugh Mill. He farmed at Little Cote and Kinninghall in Cavers Parish. He was at Kinninghall in 1851, when he was farmer of 200 acres, employing 7 men and in 1861 he was recorded employing 20 people there. In the 1860s he was farmer of Little Cote and also Kinninghall together. He later farmed at Fahnash. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. In 1845 in Hawick he married Mary Scott Purdom (b.c.1824), daughter of Robert Purdom, Hawick Cornet and Bailie; she was sister of Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk. Their children included: Mary (1845–99); Margaret Bell (1847–1902); Alexander (b.1849), who died young; Alexander (again, 1851–1933) of Kinninghall and later Venchen, Yetholm; Robert Purdom (1853–1929), who married Kate Worth; Agnes P. (b.1855), who married Alexander Nichol; William (b.1857); Walter Purdom (1859–1934), tenant in Fahnash; Thomas John (b.1861), who married Ada M. Fox; and Ann Isabella (or ‘Annie’, 1864–1933). He died at Fahnash and bequeathed the lease of Kinninghall to his son Alexander and Fahnash to his son Walter. Robert (b.c.1820) grocer and spirit dealer at about 9 Howegate, recorded in 1841. Robert (1834–1908) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Langtonheight in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was a thatcher still living at Dimpleknowe with his mother and brothers. He was a shepherd at Synton Parkhead for the last 30 years of his life. He was an office-bearer in Ashkirk United Free Church and known for exhibiting in local horticultural shows. He married Jane Scott and their children were: William (b.1866), born in Robertson; John (b.1869), born in Lilliesleaf; Anne (b.1872), born in Lilliesleaf; and Mary (b.1875), born at Synton Moss End. He died at Synton Parkhead. Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (1834–1902) son of ‘Robbie’. He was a blacksmith and qualified veterinary surgeon, living at Cauldmill, with a practice in the Rule valley and around Hawick. He specialised in cows, like his father. He was remembered ‘as a man of few words, but of good judgement’. A story is told of how he was frustrated at a visiting couple, fawning over their newborn son, and when they said ‘What a fine heid of hair he has’ replied ‘Hair, he’s nae mair hair than a hag-gis’. He married Catherine Anne Little, daughter of William, farmer at Birneyknowe and Sainside. Their children were: Robert (b.1867), who also became a local vet; William Little (b.1868), farmer at Langrigg; Janet Thorburn (1870–1951); George (b.1871), who worked at Birmingham and Midland Pharmaceutical College; Andrew Little (1873–92); Catherine (or Kate, 1874/5–91); and James (1883/4–1938). Robert ‘Robbie Scare a Hair’ (b.c.1848) son of grocer Thomas (‘Sly Tam-mie’) he was an auctioneer in Hawick. He apparently used to attend social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street, along with almost a dozen other Robert Scotts, all of whom had distinguishing nicknames! Robert ‘Rob o the Bent’ (19th C.) one of the men of the same name who regularly gathered in a Baker Street howf in the mid-19th century. Robert ‘Kettle Robbie’ (19th C.) another of the men of the same name who gathered in a Baker Street pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘Robbie Barrel’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same inn in the mid-1800s. He may be the Robert listed along with Thomas as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Selkirk Rob’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented the same pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘De-num Rob’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same Baker Street pub in the mid-19th century. It is possible he is the Robert recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a ‘heckler’ in Denholm. This same heckler in Denholm was involved in a dispute in 1794 with James Young in Crawknowe. Robert ‘Hensmeat’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented David Shiel’s inn on Baker Street in the mid-1800s. He was brother of James, Governor of Hawick Poorhouse. On one occasion he is supposed to have been chairing the evening and said ‘Rob Scare a Hair will gie us a song’ when one of the other Robert Scotts appeared, to which the reply was ‘Aw’ve nae objection, but if ’ee wull ca’ me ‘Scare a Hair’ aw’ll ca’ you by your name ‘Hensmeat’’ [JHH], from which we can assume the name was somewhat insulting. Robert (b.1827/8) carter in Newcastle, son of Robert. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart to Carlisle once a week. In 1851 he was living with his mother Isabella and siblings Thomas, Elizabeth and Isabella at about 3 Langholm Street. His was described as a ‘Feuar’s Son’ there in 1861. Robert (1853–1929) son of Robert and Mary Purdum. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh Academy and trained as a banker. He emigrated to Australia in 1876, where he was a bank manager. In about 1897 he purchased a parcel of land near Warraninni in Bridgetown, Western Australia, which he farmed with his sons; this was later split into ‘Dalmore’ and ‘Falnash’. He married Kate Worth and they had: 3 sons, Robert Wooley, Alexander ‘Alec’ Bell and William ‘Bill’ Purdum; and 4 daughters, Mary (who married F.R. Bradley), Annie Isabel (who married M.E. Minchin), Kate Louise (who married B. Wardell-Johnson) and Ethel Margueritte. He died in Sandringham, Victoria. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robbie, he was a local vet, like his father and grandfather before him. He lived at Oliver Crescent. His children included: Robert, who was killed at Ypres on his 20th birthday; and Charles, the 4th generation vet. Robert V. (20th C.) Cornet in 1947. During WWII he saw service in France and was captured by the Japanese, spending several months working on the notorious ‘death railway’ in Siam. He was later on a transport ship that was sunk by U.S. bombers, and although he swam ashore, he was recaptured by the Japanese and witnessed the nuclear blast at Nagasaki. Robin (13th C.) listed as ‘Robinus Scot de Hedon’ on the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unclear where his lands may have been or whether he was related to the later Scottish Scots. Roger (13th C.) recorded as ‘Rogerum Scot’ on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were mentioned in a case heard at Westmorland. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as ‘capitane of the Airmetage’ in 1599 when he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1611 he was ‘captain of the Armetage’ when he was cautioner for Will Foster in Langhaugh, as well as for John Armstrong ‘called Quyteheheid’. He was additionally fined for the non-appearance of Rowie Crozier in Hartsgarthburnside. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He was also ‘Capitane of the Airmetage’ when he was fined for not appearing at a trial in 1612 (relating to the apparent hanging death of John Elliot in St. Mary’s Steeple). He may have been the last such deputy keeper of Hermitage Castle. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scots. Roland ‘Rowie of Huttikill’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 when Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ was hanged for stealing one his sheep (and other crimes). The sheep was taken ‘forth of the Lyn beside Eilrig’. He may be the same as Rowie ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outsides), one of the pursuers of the case. It is unclear where precisely this place was located, but he was surely related to David and Alexander ‘callit Huttitill’, who are recorded at ‘Andishop’ in 1573. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘Persewaris’ of the 1616 case against Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ for sheep stealing. He is recorded as being ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outsides) and his son Walter was also a pursuer. He may be the same as the man ‘callit Rowe of Huttikill’, who was one of the men whose sheep were stolen. Simon (13th C.) recorded as ‘Simonis le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His case was heard in the town of Alnwick. He is separately recorded as ‘Simone de Scotia’. Perhaps the same man is recorded as Simon Scot in Swynborne in a record of Edward I in 1293. It is unclear whether he was related to later Scots. Simon ‘Sim’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as ‘Sym Scot’ and he may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, etc.), but it is unclear how. Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, as being ‘in amekhop' (i.e. Meiklehope, perhaps the same as Meikledalehope), now 'in ...', with the location being blank. He was indicted, but did not appear, with his surety, Richard Davidson in Meiklehope, being fined (or perhaps he was surety for Davidson). Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, when he was 'in mychop', i.e. Midgehope. He served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant in Eilrig listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Simon of Arkyne (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus had to surrender the lands of Falside (in Jedforest) to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch for failing to present him at court. He had stolen 200 'angle-nobles' from the English and is recorded as 'Symonu Scot de Arkyne'. It is unclear where 'Arkyne' was. Simon 'Sym' (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, making him son of Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw (listed next in the same 1526 document). Simon of Fenwick was listed separately and so presumably not the same man. Probably the same Simon was the first witness listed for the instrument of sasine at 'Fawsyde' (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert 'Elwand') purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; James, William in Hartwoodmyres and Roland are listed after him and some may have been closely related. Simon of Fenwick (16th C.) listed as 'Symnu Scot of Fynnik' in 1526 among a large number of men who had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also mentioned in 1526/7 when his brother Adam was a witness to a document relating to Harden. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He was one of the arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. In 1530 he is listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He is also recorded in a 'letter of reversion' of 1540 in which he resigned lands of Nether Harden (described as in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) to William Scott of Harden. A bond of the same year shows William of Harden giving him the lands of Nether Harden until George, Lord Home redeems them. In 1561 probably the same 'Sym Scot of Fynnik' was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was listed as 'Sym Scot of Fynnyk' among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is probably related to William in Fenwick, who is recorded in 1510. In the 1526 remission there is a 'Sym Scot' listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, suggesting that this was a different man (even although listed right beside Robert), unless there were multiple entries in the list. Simon (16th C.) chaplain of the diocease of Glasgow. In 1537 he was invested in the Rectorship of Rankleburn Kirk, and the benefits that came with it. The ceremony was carried out at the church itself by Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. Walter of Synton was one of the witnesses. He is probably the Simon who witnessed a transaction relating to Robert Scott of Howpasley and lands in Appletreehall in 1539/40. Simon (16th C.) recorded as 'Syme' along with John in about 1557. They were sons of the 'guidman of Alanehauch', who was probably either William or Robert, when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. He could be the 'Sym Scot of Alanehauch' listed in 1561 among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may well be 'Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild' who was named along with Robert of Allanhaugh and others in 1581, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott 3 years earlier. 'Watt Scot thair, Syme Scott thair, Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok' are all listed, and seem likely to be related. He may also be the 'umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield' mentioned in 1609. Simon 'Sym' (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1518, along with 'Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild', 'Watt Scot thair' and 'Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok'. He was presumably related to the other men listed (e.g. he could have been son of Simon, tenant in Over Southfield), all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the 'letter of slains' for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Simon (16th C.) listed as 'Sym Scot of Fenni' in about 1557, when, along with Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, he rented Bowanhill and 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' from Melrose Abbey. His lands may have been Fainmilee or Fernieelees, or somewhere else. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as a Burgess of Hawick. He was appointed as procurator for Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm

(in Amandale) to deal with the sale of a tenement in Hawick to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 in Philiphaugh when he had a marriage contract with Janet, daughter of Edward Wilson who was either a weaver or a thatcher in Selkirk. If he died before any children were conceived then his goods were to be divided between his wife Janet and his sister’s son, William Dickson. John ‘Eister’, Burgess of Selkirk, was one of the witnesses. He was also in Philiphaugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction for George Turnbull in Philiphaugh. Simon ‘Sym wi the Spear’ of Gamescleuch and Winterburgh (d.bef. 1590) 2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane (although some suggest he was the 4th son). He was the ‘tutor’ of his nephew Robert of Thirlestane and progenitor of the Scotts of Newburgh and Renaldburn. He is recorded as ‘in Winterburgh’ in 1559 when he purchased the lands of Gamescleuch. He is ‘Symon Scot of Wynterburgh’ in 1561/2, when he witnessed a document for Adam, son of Robert of Bonnington. He is probably the ‘Sym Scot, brother to Robert Scot of Thirlestane’ recorded in 1562 when he promised to enter James ‘Mawar’ to the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1562 he was said to already have some arrangement with William in Hartwoodburn when William assigned his steadings of Gamescleuch to his son; he was then ‘in Thirlistane’. In 1573 he was charged to enter some of his tenants in Ettrickside. In 1578 he was ‘of Wintirburch’ when Robert of Thirlestane (for whom he was ‘tutor’) complained that he had taken away 2 horses from Thirlestane, threatened the tenants, and later forcibly took possession of the house; clearly there were serious disputes between him and his charge. He was forced by the Privy Council to yield up Thirlestane house after a few months. In 1576 he was ‘Sym Scot, tutour of Thirlestane’ when listed among the cautioners for Sim Armstrong; he was cited for non-appearance as cautioner in 1578/9. In 1578 he signed the caution ‘with my hand at the len’ (meaning that he could not write). In 1579/80 he was involved in a case with Thomas Dalgleish over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; they were seeking restitution from Robert Scott of Burnfoot and Robert Scott of Burnhead. In 1581 he was probably the Simon of ‘Gammescleucht’ who, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He was probably the William ‘of Gemmylliscleuch’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the son of the Laird of Thirlestane who was murdered by his step-mother (although the names and suggested dates for this story are confused). He was one of the representatives of Teviotdale at the General Assembly of 1581. In 1583/4 he and Robert of Thirlestane were both among Border Lairds summoned for advice on how to keep peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale; they were also caution for an agreement between John in Hundleshope and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branzholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He was declared a rebel and in 1586 his property was escheat to Alexander Douglas, Captain of Tantallon; this was for not repossessing Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus in the lands of Catslack. He was probably succeeded by John (perhaps his elder son) and then his son Arthur. Simon (16th C.) son of Walter of Newton. He was presented to the vicarage of Hassendean in 1595 on the demission of Thomas Newbie. It is unclear whether this means he became the minister or just held part of the benefice of the Parish. His father may have been Walter of Chamberlain Newton. Simon of Dryhope (16th C.) 1st Laird. Scott of Satchells suggests he was brother of Adam of Tushielaw, while Keith Scott prefers to connect him as 3rd son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. He was succeeded by John, father of the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but the relationship is unclear (Keith Scott claims his sons were Philip, Simon, Andrew, Adam and Walter, but some of these may have been sons of John). Simon (16th/17th C.) probably son of George in Northhouse and brother of William. In 1582, along with William, he witnessed a transaction at Branzholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 as brother-in-law of William Cockburn, younger of Henderland. The pair.
were denounced for not finding ‘lawborrows’ for William Veitch of Kingside in Peeblesshire. Simon (d.bef. 1609) father of John Scott who was among several men fined in 1609 for harassing the lands of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. His son was ‘Jean’s John’, suggesting that his wife was Jean. He was referred to as ‘unquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’, although it is unclear if this is the Southfield near Hawick or another. Simon of Montbenger (16th/17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He was either son of Simon (1st Laird) or John (2nd Laird). Assuming he was son of John, he would also be brother of Philip of Dryhope; he was thus recorded in 1599 whxien James Gledstains of Cocklaw was surety for him, that he would ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was succeeded by Robert, and later descendants were the Scotts of Catslacknowe. Simon (16th/17th C.) natural son of William of Fin gland, who was brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 he was among the relations and tenants of Sir Robert who were bonded not to harm Archibald ‘of De phoip’. In 1609 he was among the men (including his father William, as well as Walter of Head shaw) who Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants were bound not to reset. This was part of the feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1610 he was ordered to be apprehended for not signing the bond relating to the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1616/7 he was probably the ‘Willis Symme of Thirlestane’ who was accused of accompanying John Scott and his brothers Adam and Simon of Bonnington, when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered. Simon ‘Sim’ of Bonnington (d.bef. 1617) son of Adam of Bonnington and brother of John, Thomas and Adam. He succeeded his father as Laird of Bonnington in 1607. The designation may originally have come from the lands elsewhere (e.g. near Kilmaronock), but it is clear that he possessed Bonnington in Peeblesshire (not to be confused with the another Bonnington in West Lothian, later held by other Scotts), with a charter of James V as heir to his father in 1607. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in documents relating to the lands of Bonnington in 1591–1607. In 1592 his cautioner was John Tennant of Cairns that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he purchased ‘Ernisheuch’ and ‘Singlie’ in Ettrick Forest, confirmed in 1607; a condition was that he built a mansion-house there, which he did at Newhouse. He is recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1594. In 1594/5 he is recorded as being son of Adam, when he owned ‘Halmelow and Horsewade’ in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. In 1596/7, along with his brother John, plus Robert of Thirlestane and other Scotts, he was summoned by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles for an attack on the ploughmen at ‘Kaid mure’; there was a further dispute over the same lands in 1610, with Sir Robert of Thirlestane serving as his surety. In 1599 Robert of Thirlestane served as his surety that he would ‘keep good rule and redress parties skaitheid’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 his brother John was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at ‘Fechane’ and he was ordered to present his brother in court. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Espiehoip’ on Et trick. Also in 1604 James Tweedie of Drumelzier was surety for him that he not harm Dame Jane Herries, Lady Skirling. In 1611 he is confirmed as grandson of Robert and Katherine Boyle, when he was served as heir to his grandmother. In 1611 he had a court case against Carruthers of Holmends and the Jardines of Applegarth. Also in 1611 he was served heir to his grandmother Katherine Boyle. He was also one of the signatories of the bond of 1612 to keep peace on the Border and also on a ‘re-tour’ panel for Tweedy of Drumelzier. In 1612 ‘Simeon Scott of Bontoun’ was ordered to appear at Melrose to answer for the ‘horrible slaughter of Walter Scott’ of Tushielaw, which may be connected with the origin of the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. In 1616/17 he was one of the men said to have accompanied his brother John when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick, according to criminal complaints made by Walter’s wife. Note that these 2 murders may be confused in the re-telling. It was said that the murder of Walter in Essenside was because of the death of his only surviving son at the hands of the miller of Todrig Mill (who was subordinate to the Scotts of Harden). He was declared a rebel after the murder and was either killed or went into exile. In 1617 and 1618 (and perhaps covering the period 1611–29) he was named in a court case with Sir William Scott of Harden over the value of the lands of Bonnington and others; the Scotts of Harden purchased the ‘eschete’ of his lands and in 1617 a charter of King James VI granted Bonnington to William, heir to Harden, with a value of his lands given as £4985 6s. 6d., redeemable within 7 years. His wife was Mary, who was recorded as ‘Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun’ in 1617 when she complained about the Scotts of Harden and their supporters constantly harassing her family, to the extent that her only son (presumably Robert) was killed at the age of 19 and her grandchildren and servants were hounded out of their house and lands; this was presumably part of the ongoing feud between the families and despite her protestations to the Privy Council the accused were found not guilty. It was said that his house at Newhouse was destroyed, his old nurse assaulted and his wife and children turned out into the cold. Also in 1617 Elizabeth Hay, widow of Walter in Essenside complained that he remained at large, despite being put to the horn, along with his brothers John and Adam and Simon called ‘Willis Symme of Thirlestane’. A letter from the King in 1619 ordered the relevant parties to appear personally before the court. His son and heir Robert, appears to have predeceased him. He had at least one daughter, Margaret, who married William, son of John Burnet of Barns (near Peebles). He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his brother John, and then by William Burnet of Barns, his grandson, who inherited the lands of Bonnington in 1627. Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh also had a claim on Bonnington in 1624 and must have been a nephew or other close relative. His brother John was served heir to his brother Walter in the lands of Easter Craik in 1618, as well as Ladhope, ‘Alterhous’ and ‘Quhithope’ in Ettrick Forest. It is unclear whether his lands were Chamberlain Newton or a different Newton. Simon (d.bef. 1643) brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded in 1643 when Mariota Scott, daughter of his brother William, was served as his heir. He may be the same as Simon ‘of Newton’, Simon (18th/19th C) resident of 8 Abercomby Place in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. Stephen (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1440s and 50s. He was explicitly mentioned in 1440 in the Aberdeen area, in 1441 for work at Edinburgh Castle, for collecting the customs in Edinburgh in 1443, was paid his fee in 1444, 1445 and 1446 and received payment from Robert Moffat in Edinburgh in 1454. It is possible that he is the same as Stephen of Muirhouse and Castlelaw. Stephen of Muirhouse, Castlelaw and Burrellands (15th C.) younger son of Robert of Rankleburn and brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He may be the Stephen who was witness in 1431 to the transfer of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch (if so this was his brother); John Scott is also listed beside him and so possibly a close relative. He may be the Stephen appointed as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside in 1439 when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas and probably the ‘Stephanus Scott’ who witnessed a charter for Thomas Wiley of Bonnington (in Peeblesshire) in 1442. He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a charter for the lands of Borthwickshiel in 1444 (with Sir Walter also a witness). In 1445 (probably, since the date of 1400 on the document is wrong) he requested an ‘instrument of transumpt’ relating to the lands of Grahamslaw in the Barony of Eckford; he was there described as brother and procurator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and listed as ‘Stephanus Scott de Castellaw’ (there are several places of this name, so it is unclear which one this is). The Robert Scott who also signed this document may have been a close relative. In 1447 he was witness to a document relating to the ‘Cusingland’ involving Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge, and his brother Sir Walter. He obtained the Burrellands (in Eckford Parish) in 1448, after they were resigned by John Burrell; there he is transcribed ‘of le Castellaw’. In 1448 he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat for his brother, Sir Walter. He had a crown charter for the lands of ‘Murhous’ in 1450; these are lands in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near Pathhead in Midlothian, and not one of the Muirhouses elsewhere). In 1450 he also had a charter for the lands of ‘Castelcary, et de Weltoune’ in Stirlingshire; this suggests that the ‘Welton’ associated with him may not have been Wilton at all, and that ‘Castelaw’ was actually ‘Castle Cary’ near Cumbernauld (adjacent to Walton farm). These lands had been forfeited by Robert Livingstone and were confirmed in 1450/1. He is probably the ‘Stephano Scot’ who witnessed the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap in 1451. In 1453 he was listed as ‘of the Mwirhouse’ when he renounced the lands of Castlecarry and the Weltoune to Henry, son of Robert Livingstone of Linlithgow; it seems likely that the 'Castlalaw' sometimes connected with his name is 'Castlecarry' in the former Sheriffdom of Stirling (and the Hawick connection with Castle Cary in Somerset is just a coincidence). An instrument of 1454 relating to these lands is one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick; he may be the same 'Stephen Scot of Murehouse' mentioned there, who 'asked instruments'. He is recorded as being 'of Muirhouse' when he witnessed a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1453 and also in a document of 1454 (one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick). He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn in 1454/5. He was one of Scott of Buccleuch's Bailies in Eckford. He also had a charter of the lands of 'Weltown', which were probably the lands of Walton adjacent to Castlecarry near the modern Cumbernauld; however, the family also had a connection with Wilton Parish, which is confusing. The next recorded Laird of 'Weltoun' was John, who was probably his son or grandson. His son and heir Robert witnessed the sasine for the exchange of Milsington and Wester Roberton. In 1526 he is listed along with George as a son of John 'in the Valys' on the list of Borders men pardoned for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is described as 'in Valis' (probably 'Walls' in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) in 1528 when he witnessed the document giving the decision over the disputed succession of the lands of Borthaugh, and in 1535 when he purchased lands at Roberton and Howcleuch from his 'brother-german' Walter Scott of Roberton. His son John was also named in the charter. The witnesses were Michael Scott of Aikwood, Sir William Gordoun (or Brydoun), Chaplain, William Scott of Fauldshe, Gilbert Scott and Sir Ninian 'Bridin’, Chaplain and Notary Public. He was probably the Stephen who acted as procurator for Isabel Douglas (likely his mother) in claiming her rights to lands within her lifetime, when Walter (likely his older brother) succeeded to the lands of John of Roberton. He was probably succeeded by his son John of Roberton. Stephen (16th C.) witness to a confirming charter to William Scott of the lands of Harden in 1535. It is described as ‘in Hoip’; he may also have been the Stephen who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537 (along with George Scott and several Armstrongs and Littles). He may have been related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh (and Heap) or else was the same as Stephen ‘in Valis’. Stephen (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with John Short and Janet Lidderdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Stephen was also listed as holder of half a particate on the north side. He may be the same as one of the other Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574, when he was surety for someone. It is unclear who he was. Steven (16th C.) Hawick man recorded as ‘Stevin’ in a 1558 document where he is stated as being the father of Alexander who sold land in one of the earliest known sasines relating to Hawick. It is possible he was the same man recorded owning pieces of land in the 1537 Charter. Steven (16th/17th C.) recorded in Branchholm in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is uncertain how he was related to other Scotts. Stewart (??–??) writer of ‘East Bank Church, Hawick: Its origin and history, 1773–1923’ (1923). Susan (d.1806) daughter of the deceased ‘Docter Scott Newton’. Her death is recorded in Hawick. It is unclear who her father was and whether he was a doctor or the name was a nickname; however, she was probably part of the Scotts of Newton. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas de Colewilla cognomento Scot’ during the reign of King William the Lion. He was clearly of the surname ‘Coleville’, but for some reason had also gained the appellation ‘Scot’. His name appears in many charters of around 1200, most undated, and his seal bears the inscription ‘SIGILL. THOME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTTIT’. In 1223 he was already deceased when the Abbey of Vaudey in lincolnshire passed on his gift of lands in Ayshire to Melrose Abbey. It seems unlikely that he was related to any Thomas (13th C.) listed in 1248/9 when he was the attorney of Devorguilla, wife of John Baliol. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1255/6 when he was imprisoned at Northampton for trespassing in King Henry’s vivarium. The Sheriff there was commanded to deliver him to 12 men in his bailliy until the King’s justices arrived. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1261 in London. He was pardoned at the insistence of Margaret Queen of Scotland, for the murder of ‘Thomas le lung’ in London. Thomas (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ in 1272, when he gave half a mark for an assize in Suffolk. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1273 as ‘Thomas Scot, messenger’ when he was paid by the English court for expenses transmitting letters to the King and Queen of Scotland. He may be the same as ‘Thomas Scoticus’ listed on a jury in Warkworth, Northumberland in 1269 or ‘Thomam le Scot’ (and variants) listed several times on the 1279 assize rolls of Northumberland, some entries related to Alnwick Abbey. Thomas (13th C.) merchant of Newcastle recorded in 1302 as ‘Thomas Scot’, when canvas was purchased from him as part of an order of goods for Edward I’s fortresses in Scotland. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Bailie of Haddington. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1412–31. Thomas (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and ‘niger’ Walter), but it is unclear how. Thomas of Robertson (15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George of Synton. However, there is no evidence that any such man actually existed (and hence presumably she was the daughter of a different Scott of Robertson). Thomas (15th C.) recorded having remission for the fine of a shiel in the Eaststead of Gildhouse in 1479. He may have been related to later Scotts who were associated with Gildhouse. Thomas of Bush (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he and his son Adam were separately fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. He is recorded being ‘de Bus’ and was probably an ancestor of later Scotts of Bush in Ewesdale. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of Andrew, the pair were tenants in ‘northschelis’ (probably North Shiels) in Peeblesshire. In 1498 Andrew was fined for his non-appearance, but later he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (i.e. the arm). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being already one of the King’s rebels, along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Graham-slaw. Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with them in their involvement in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Bransholme. In 1502, along with John in Spittal, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was allowed to compound, while John was fined. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was presented by the Lord of Buccleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his ‘suitor’ for the lands of Lanton. He may be the same as one of the other Thomas. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priestdykes near Lochmaben. In 1504 at the Justice-aire in Dumfries, he ‘came in the King’s will’ for ‘intercommuning with the Armstrangis, the King’s rebels’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Head-shaw and brother of Philip of Headshaw. In 1510 he was charged with the murder of John Murray of Falahill, with Andrew Ker of Gateshaw implicated in the same crime. Failing to appear at the Jedburgh court he was denounced as a rebel. He was represented by William in Hawick, George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. The goods of William Scott in Fenwick and John Scott in Haining were used as further insurance. This suggests that all of these men were fairly closely related. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 as witness in Selkirk when George Ker, Canon of Glasgow appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. Perhaps the same Thomas witness a dispensation to marry in 1516, for Inram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with Alexander as another witness). Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Thome Scot’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as another contemporary Thomas. Bailie Thomas (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 as Bailie in Hawick. He witnessed a renunciation by John in Hawick (who may have been a relative) and along with Vicar John bound themselves to the contract between John in Hawick and Thomas Johnstone. Probably the same Thomas was owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same man who was recorded as a Burgess of Hawick in the 1540s and 50s. Thomas of Pitgormo (1479–1539) 2nd son of William of Balwearie. He became a judge in 1532, in place of his father, and was made Justice Clerk in 1535, being a favourite of James V. He is recorded being of ‘Pettgormo’ in the Exchequer Rolls. He was auditor of the Exchequer in at least the years 1537 and 1538. He married Agnes Moncrieff and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1533/4 being ‘in Aikwode ester’. He and the other tenants in Aikwood delivered £10 Scots to the Queen’s Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest for occupying Hartwoodmyres. Probably the same Thomas was ‘in Vodburne’ in 1536 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Roberton and Michael of Aikwood. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1536. Along with a Paterson, he complained that John Scott had slandered them by accusing them of stealing sheep. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when he rented ‘ane quarter and half quarter of Todrik’ (i.e. Todrig) to Thomas Robson. Probably the same Thomas in 1538 ‘asked instruments’ that the tenants of ‘the town of Quhistslands’ (probably Whitslade) wanted to graze their cattle at Todrig as their predecessors had done. He was also there when Katherine Gray had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed from Todrig. Also in 1538 he was ‘in Todrig’ when he produced a precept from Michael Scott in Aikwood for half the lands of Hermiston to fulfil a debt of service. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. In 1540 he was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) described as a Burgess of Hawick when he was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He is also witness to a confirmation of this in 1556, where he is described as ‘in Hawick’. Probably the same Thomas ‘in Hawick’ was on the 1553/4 panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch as heir to his grandfather. It is possible he was related (perhaps grandfather) to Walter, ‘burges in Hawik, somne to wmemquell Thomas Scot in Hawik, zoonger’, who witnessed a document in 1585. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as son of the deceased Adam. Along with Robert of Howpasley, he was warned to remove his tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. Perhaps he is the same Thomas, son of Adam, who was subject to a bond in 1539: Walter of Buccleuch, his son and heir David and Robert of Allanhaugh had a bond with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk that William would prove he was ‘a bastard according to the custom of the law used in such cases’. Also in 1539 he offered to the Queen’s Chamberlain the ‘ferme’ of Falside. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557. It was complained that he and another servant had been beaten at the Kirklands of Bedrule by a group of Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Thomas of Haining (16th C.) son of Robert of Haining. He was a minor when he succeeded. In 1527 he is recorded as son and heir apparent of the deceased Robert in Haining. His uncle Walter was still acting as his tutor in 1532. In 1538 he succeeded to his father’s lands of ‘all the lands and the loch of Hanyng’. He is recorded being of Haining in 1538 when he held a sasine for the lands and in 1539 when he warned certain tenants to remove themselves from East Haining and West Haining. He is probably the feuair of Haining recorded in 1540 when he gave sasine for part of East Haining to Thomas Morlaw. In 1541 he was ‘chief lord of the lands of est Hanyng’. In 1543/4 he made a bond not to harm John Wilson. He is probably the Thomas who purchased a tenement in Selkirk from Thomas Johnstone in 1544; Walter and Robert of Hartwoodburn were witnesses. He is also listed in 1557 among the Scotts who descended on the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston as part of some feud. He was probably related to some of the other Scotts who were in the band of about 200, from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. In 1561 he was (along with Walter of Synton and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Additionally in 1561 he witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk, and was listed among men who swore they did not steal a horse in Selkirk in the previous year. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564/5 he was listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the bond with the Kerrs, and was one of the signatories. He was on the assize of 1564 related to the murder of David Scott of Hasendean. He acted as a bailie for the Commender of Melrose in a sasine of 1567. In 1567 he represented Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a marriage contract for Sir Walter’s sister Elizabeth. In 1568 he was granted the lands of Elliston by the Commender of Melrose and was mentioned in a sasine of Crook in the same year. He had a charter of ‘feuferme’ for lands in ‘Ilistoun’ (as stated in 1580), which later passed to his son Robert, who was involved in a dispute over these lands in 1576, with John, minister of Selkirk. His children probably included: Robert, who succeeded to Haining; William, recorded as brother of Robert in 1580 and 1581; and Walter, also mentioned in 1580. Elizabeth Turnbull’s will and inventory was recorded in 1580; she was living in Haining Castle and had Robert and his wife as executors, as well as young daughters, suggesting that she may have been his second wife and step-mother of Robert of Haining. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there. Thomas ‘Tom of the Stour’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Scot callit the Stowir’ in 1569 when he entered a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale (excluding those already under the pledge of Andrew Armstrong of Gingills). Later in 1569 he was recorded being held in Ravensheugh Castle as pledge for ‘Johnne Scott callit the Braid; Arche Scott of the Buss; Thome Scott of Blakhir’. He was clearly a prominent Scott of Ewesdale at that time. He is ‘called the Stowir’ in the register of the Privy Council for 1573 when he was surety for someone. In 1586/7 he was ‘callit of the Stour’ when his brother John was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to the Jock ‘Stowre of Quinscleuch’ recorded in 1598. His nickname may have alluded to ‘stour’ as in a violent conflict, but appears more likely to refer to a place, perhaps in Ewesdale. Thomas (16th C.) tailor in Edinburgh. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being owed money for an account. He could be the Thomas, Burgess of Edinburgh, who ‘undertakes surety’ according to the register of the Privy Council in 1577. Thomas of Whitehaughbrae (16th C.) possibly son of Walter of Synton and Stiches and younger brother of John of Synton and Robert of Stiches. His mother was probably Margaret Riddell. He was ancestor of the Scotts of Whitehaughbrae, although it is unclear if he owned the lands himself. His son and heir was Walter of Whitehaughbrae. Thomas ‘Jock’s Tom’ (16th C.) mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He is listed among those owed money as ‘Thome Scot callit Jok Thome’. There is a good chance he was from Hawick, based on the others he is listed alongside. He was presumably a tradesman or merchant of some sort. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. He is listed as ‘alias Thome of Hauden’, which may be Howden; however, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas of Abbotsshall (16th C.) son of Thomas and Agnes Moncrieff. His family lands were in Fife. In 1581 he was listed as ‘od and overman’ (i.e. the third arbitrator, to break any deadlock) in a dispute between Adam in Bonnington and Robert of Haining. He was probably selected as a fellow Scott (and probably lawyer) with no conflict of interest. His son William of Abbotsshall is recorded in 1585, but appears not to have succeeded until 1606. He was probably the Laird of Abbotsshall who, along with the Laird of Balwearie was pledge in 1588/9 for the Scotts of Ewesdale. His children included William of Abbotsshall, Jean and Janet. Thomas (16th C.) brother of ‘Wat’s Jock’, he was a Burgess in Hawick. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. His father was presumably Walter. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) tenant at Blackhall in the Ewes valley. In 1569 he was listed as ‘Thome Scott of Blakhir’, along with John ‘the Braid’ and Archie ‘of the Buss’, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was recorded in the 1585 remission for last crimes of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. His son John is also listed. Another son Tom was recorded In 1621 he inherited Whitehaughbrae from Walter Salenside, who was on the Carlisle Raid of 1596. of Salenside (d.c.1636) possibly son of Andrew of Thome of Peebles. He is recorded as having 6 men well horsed at the time of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1610 he assisted his brother Simon of Bonnington in a raid on the lands of ‘Caidmure’ belonging to the Burgh of Peebles. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servitor to ‘Lord Bugleuch’ listed about 1610 among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Salenside (d.c.1636) possibly son of Andrew of Salenside, who was on the Carlisle Raid of 1596. In 1621 he inherited Whitehaughbrae from Walter of Whitehaughbrae, who was a near relative (son of his grandfather’s brother, hence first cousin, once removed). He had at least 2 sons: William, to whom he gave possession of Salenside during his lifetime; and Andrew, to whom he gave possession of Whitehaughbrae, also while he was still alive. He later sold both properties to Sir William Scott of Harden. Thomas (16th/17th C.) referred to being ‘called of Ormestoun’ in 1610 when he was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates and there was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. His brother Alexander was also mentioned in 1610. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas in Blackhall. In 1611 some men stood as caution for him at court in Dumfries. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Nether Braidlie, although whether this is Broadlee in the Borthwick (or in Ashkirk Parish) or Braidlie on Hermitage is unclear. His son was ‘Jock the Suckler’, who was involved in the 1615 slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of West Tynie’ in 1617. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth along with Alexander Stewart of Phau. Presumably he was associated with Tinnis in the Yarrow valley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1629 and 1630. He was ‘called easter’. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1653) younger son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. Note, however, that some histories give conflicting accounts of the connection between the Scotts of Whitslade and Todrig. He probably purchased the estate of Todrig from the older branch of Scotts of Todrig, perhaps around 1630. He and his wife had a charter from John Hay, Lord Yester for Todrig in 1635. He is mentioned in 1637 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In the early 1650s he and his son Thomas are described as Thomas Scott elder and younger of Toderick’. He is said to have married Jean Pringle, with their dowry recorded in 1643; however, this seems more likely to have been his son Thomas, with whom he is sometimes confounded. His son Thomas was served as his heir in 1653. Thomas’ brother Robert (hence another son) was recorded as deceased in 1678. Additionally he had a son called Walter. He may also have had a daughter Janet, who may be the Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Elliot of Larriston. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (d.1680) brother of Walter, ‘Wat o the Dykes’. He was given Nether Bonchester by his nephew William of Galalaw, after the death of his brother Walter (1st Laird), following some previous family agreement. He was involved in transactions with John Kerr of Grange in the 1630s relating to feu duties. He is recorded in a document of wadset for the lands of Appotside in 1654, when he was described as ‘bailie in that part’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £180 for lands in Abbotrule. He was recorded in a hereditary bond in 1673. He is mentioned in 1690 when his son John had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. He had 3 sons: Walter of Nether Bonchester; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Falla, who was listed among Covenanters in 1684; and John, who was also in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He also had 2 daughters: Christian; and Jane, who may have married a Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Elliot of Larris.... there. Like his uncles Sir Walter and Robert before him, he was Member of Parliament for Selkirk, serving 1661–63. In 1661 he is recorded as Laird when he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for William of Synton. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. He was probably the Scott of Whitslade who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1666 he was one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. In 1613 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden (and if this date was correct, he must have been quite young). In 1655 he secondly married Janet Mitchell, who was probably a widow. He is probably also the Thomas Scott of Whitslade who married ‘Ladie Ednum’ in the Canongate Kirk in 1662. His children included: George, presumably with his first wife, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663 (but must have died before him); Marie (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1657), who also died before him; and Thomas, who succeeded. The witnesses in 1656 were Sir Archibald Douglas (probably of Cavers) and John Murray (probably of Philiphaugh), the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. It is said that his death was greatly lamented and inspired the verses that appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, probably written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells (even although the title would make the poem seem to be about the earlier death of his brother Robert). Thomas of Wester Essenside (17th C.) recorded as owner of Wester Essenside in 1643, valued at £400, as well as Leap Hill, valued at £140. He also paid tax on £540 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, and he may be the same as one of the other Thomses (e.g. the younger Thomas of Todrig). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cessford and their children included Nellie (b.1644), William (b.1647), William (again, b.1649) and William (again, b.1654). His wife’s name is recorded as ‘Bessie’ in 1644. The witnesses in 1654 were John (perhaps a relative) and James Liddell. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel ‘Cowtert’ or ‘Coutert’ (probably Coltart) and their children included: John (b.1676); Andrew (b.1678); William (b.1680); and Bessie (b.1683). The baptism witnesses in 1678 were James Deans and William Scott and in 1680 were William Scott, ‘Flex’ and John Scott in Whiteyetts. Thomas (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1684 his brother Walter was among those declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) servant at Hilliesland (presumably for the Gledstains family). In 1684 he was on a list of men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was ‘Jenet Lytle’. Their son John was born in 1687, with witnesses Henry Scott and Robert Scott (so possibly relatives). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Jean Hislop. Their children included: Thomas (b.1687); and Marion (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were Thomas Wallace and Adam Hislop (who was probably related to his wife). Thomas of Synton (17th C.) recorded in 1690. However, he was not the Laird at that time, so was either tenant there or was Laird of neighbouring lands. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the James and John who are also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed along with Thomas Turnbull on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas ‘in Roul’ whose wife’s will, Janet Porteous, was recorded in 1685. Thomas (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Bridiholl’ (probably Brieryhill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he was ‘in Brierihole’ when he (along with smith Robert Miller) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell of Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the elders mentioned enacting business for Wilton Session in 1706. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same Thomas was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was also listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may have been father to James ‘Laird’, whose first-born child was Thomas; however, one record suggests that James’ father was John (also called ‘Laird’), who may hence have been his brother. He may have been the Thomas who married Janet Clerk and had children: James (b.1674); John (b.1676); Walter and William (b.1678); Andrew (b.1680); Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1684), who married weaver John Stevenson in 1716; and Robert (b.1686).

Thomas (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Thomas was ‘in hastendan’ in baptismal records of 1683 and 1688. He married Isobel Waugh and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean) included: Robert (b.1683); and Bessie (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were John Noble and Patrick Dodds and in 1688 were William Waugh (who is surely related to his wife) and William Young. He is probably the Thomas who (along with John Dodds) witnessed a Roberton baptism in 1687 for Walter Turnbull. Thomas of Whitslade (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He was probably a minor when he succeeded (as 6th Laird) in 1671, since there is a record of discharge to Sir William of Harden and his other curators in 1672. He is recorded writing to his cousin Sir Gideon Scott in 1674 about permission to cut peats. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1676 for William Laing. In 1677 he was served heir to his father’s lands in Innerleithen. In 1678 he paid the land tax for the Whitslade estate (valued at £1048 10s), as well as paying for the lands of Hermiston (£156) in Lilliesleaf Parish.

He is probably also the Laird of Whitslade whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £2168 in that year. He was a Commissioner in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire for raising money for the King in 1678 and was on the Commission of Supply for both counties in 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He is also recorded in bonds of 1682 and on a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose for that year, as well as in a horning against all Melrose heritors in 1690. He was living at Whitslade in 1688 when he is mentioned in Capt. Walter Scot’s metrical family history. Before 1688 he married Jane, daughter of Sir John Hay of Park. They had 7 sons: Thomas, who succeeded in 1695; John, who later sold Whitslade; Walter, recorded in the 1720s in a dispute with Walter of Harden, and in 1734 when he was excommunicated; Robert (d.c.1757), a surgeon in Hawick; William, a physician in Worcester; Francis, 6th son, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and James, who became a goldsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1709. It is said that only the eldest son had any surviving children. His widow may be the ‘Lady Whitslade’ recorded in 1707 as life-enter of part of the Roxburghshire lands formerly held by the Laird of Whitslade. He is described briefly in the lines on the death of his father and uncles that appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) – ‘Of beauty grave, and courage brave; Although his years be young, There’s none on earth can parallel Old Whitslade – but his son’ [CWS].

Thomas of Chapel (17th/18th C.) paid tax on 7 hearths for himself and his tenants in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1694. He was on the Committee of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He was also one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1699 he exchanged lands with John Nisbet, spouse of Agnes Riddell, portioner of Bewlie. He may be the Laird of Chapel whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He must have been related to the earlier Walter of Chapel. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Burn and their children included Thomas (b.1695) and John (b.1698). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Learmonth and their children included Janet (b.1697), Robert (b.1699), Isobel (b.1700) and Bessie (b.1703). Thomas of Whitslade (d.bef. 1714) son of Thomas, he was 7th Laird. In 1695 he was served heir to his father as well as to his grandfather Thomas in the lands of ‘Phanops’ (possibly Phaup in Ettrick) in the Regality of Melrose and in 1696 was served heir to lands in Innerleithen. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. In 1704 he was on the Committee of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum. They had 2 daughters: Elizabeth, who married William McDougall, brother of the Laird of Makerstoun; and Janet, who died unmarried. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by his younger brother John (who sold Whitslade). His widow remarried to Sir David Murray of Stenhope in 1714. Thomas of Langshaw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Francis of Langshaw. He succeeded his brother Walter, being served heir to their father’s lands and Barony of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1695. This included ‘Readhead alias Whytebank’, Colmslie... and Mosshouses. He appears to have been the last Scott of Langshaw. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Scott and their children included James (b.1701) and Walter (b.1704). Perhaps the same Thomas was married to ‘Mary’ Scott and had further children including Janet (b.1710), Walter (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), Elizabeth (b.1715), Thomas (b.1717), John (b.1718) and William (b.1719). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Northhouse in 1702 when he married Helen Allan. There are lots of children baptised in Cavers who could be theirs. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He may be the Thomas who married Bessie Richardson in Roberton in 1702 or the Thomas who married Isabel Scott in Roberton in 1705. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at West Middle in 1716 when he married Janet Scott. He was also at West Middle in 1726 when his daughter Ann was baptised. Perhaps the same couple were at Brieryyards in Wilton Parish in 1724 when their daughter Helen was baptised; the witnesses were John Scott and William Easton. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Hassendean in 1731. He complained about non-payment by William Tunno in Selkirk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Synton Mill recorded in 1719. He married Agnes Taylor and their children included: George (b.1714); Magdalen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); and Margaret (b.1723). Frances (b.1726), with mother ‘Bessie’ Taylor, was probably also his child. Thomas (17th/18th C.) cotter in ‘Langtoun’ (i.e. Langtonside) in Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1716. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1718 when his son David was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident ‘in Kirkhouses’ in Ashkirk Parish. In 1724 the Parish gave him 14s. He was probably a pauper at that time and was probably related to earlier Scotts of Kirkhouses. Thomas of Todrig (d.1753) only son of Walter of Todrig. He was the 6th and last Laird of Todrig (although he is also sometimes confounded with his son Thomas). He was educated at Glasgow University. He was ‘younger’ of Todrig in 1708 when he had a marriage contract with Mary, 2nd daughter of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. In 1713 he brought a case against several other Scotts relating to a 1669 bond of ‘Auchter Auter Struther’. He was one of the petitioners in support of the lands of Whit-sdale being ‘disjoined’ in 1714. He is probably the Laird of Todrig recorded in Hawick in 1732 when the town ‘litter’ was rented for his son’s funeral. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. He is said to have lived too liberally, having to sell Todrig in 1746 and Wester Essenside a few years earlier. His children with Mary Scott included: Walter (b.c.1710), who was in the Horse Guards; Robert (b.1714), who died young; Thomas (b.1717); John (b.1718), possibly died at sea; William (b.1719); possibly Patrick, who also went to sea and died unmarried; Janet (1710–67), who married Mr. Howie, surgeon in Selkirk and secondly Rev. David Brown of Selkirk; and Elizabeth, who was still unmarried in 1783. He secondly married Jane, sister to John Elliot of Peel (who must have been a cousin of some sort), widow of Thomas Pringle of Kirton; they had no children together. He died in Selkirk and is buried in Ashkirk. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Stokoe in Northumberland. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of William ‘in Wilindsight’ (presumably Milsington) who witnessed a document for the Eliots of Harwood in 1694. If the date is correct, then he would have been the eldest son, but if so must have died before his brother William, who succeeded to the tenancy of Milsington. Thomas (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton Parish in 1731. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1732) and Margaret (b.1736). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Alemoor in 1734. He was probably related to the other Scotts who lived at Alemoor around the same time (specifically Gideon, Walter and William). His children included Walter (b.1734). Thomas of Falnash (d.1779) son of Robert, grandson of ‘Auld Falnash’ and younger brother of Gideon, from whom he succeeded to the Lairdship. He sold Falnash, along with ‘Merrynees’ (i.e. Merry Naze) and other lands to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. He may be the ‘Dr. Thomas Scott of Fanash’ who kept a lark and a song thrush in cages in his parlour (according to a letter by A.C. Hall in 1831). It is also possible that he was the same man as Rev. Thomas, minister of the Relief Kirk in Auchtermuchty. Thomas of Stonedge (d.1786) probably son of William of Stonedge. He appears to have served as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for the Liddesdale lands in 1725 (although he must have been quite young at the time). He was already referred to as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1731, when he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgellig and Jean Elliot of Harwood, although he may not yet have succeeded to his father. He was a great improver of his lands, having dykes built and plantations laid out. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and described as ‘late of Hobsburn’ when he lived at Grange in Edinburgh. He may also earlier have been described as ‘in Wauchope’. In 1741 he had an elaborately carved through-stone erected in Hobkirk kirk-yard; this was in commemoration of Scott of Wauchope (probably his grandfather, Walter). He appears to have sold Forkins to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1767 he was recorded as tenant of Wauchope, like earlier members of his family. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He was a lawyer who gave evidence at the trial regarding the Division of the Common and then was appointed by Lord Advocate Montgomery to make the actual Division itself. He suffered an unpleasant experience at the hands of some Hawick residents as a consequence, describing that ‘the mob were very riotous, pelted the chaise I was in with the surveyors’. However, he was also made an Honorary Burgess. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780. He sold Stonedge to Robert Lisle of Acton, although the sale was never completed. In 1752 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, and in 1758 purchased part of Borthwickbrae for himself. In the 1785 Land Tax Rolls it is recorded that he was liferent about half of Borthwickbrae and the west part of Howcleuch from John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His children included: William (b.1737). Other children baptised in Hobkirk Parish who may have been his were Margaret (b.1733), Susan (b.1734), Janet (b.1736) and Thomas (b.1736). His last will and testament is dated 1778 and he died at Grange, described as ‘late of Stonedge’. Thomas (b.1717) younger son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He went to sea in 1740, received several wounds and lost an eye. Around 1750 he entered into service with the East India Company, remaining 13 or 14 years. He later lived in retirement, still being alive in 1783, but without issue. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Galalaw in 1742, 1744 and 1751. He married Isobel Blyth in Wilton Parish in 1741. Their children included: John (b.1742); William (b.1744); John (again, b.1746); Isabel (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). The witnesses were John and James Scott in 1742, John Scott and James Douglas in 1744 and James Dryden and Walter Scott in 1751. Thomas (18th C.) married Betty Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1744. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1742 for workman William Nichol, in 1745 for weaver James Roger and for carrier John Pott (along with shoemaker John, with his name given after John’s, and hence he was probably son or younger brother of John), and in 1747 for wright Robert Pringle. In 1744 he and John together witnessed a baptism for Robert Rid-dell ‘at Park’. He married Margaret Deans and their children included: Margaret (b.1737); Janet (b.1740); John (b.1742); and Henrietta (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were junior mason Andrew Turnbull and shoemaker John (who was probably related) and in 1744 were merchant John Rucastle and shoemaker John (again). Rev. Thomas (1722–90) son of Walter, a merchant in Leith, who was descended from the Scotts of Harden, his mother being Martha Cunningham. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1742. He was presented as minister of Cavers by William Douglas of Cavers in 1746 and ordained there in 1747. He was ‘Mr. Thos. Scott the mance’ when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748; he paid again in 1753. He was translated to ‘Second Charge’ of South Leith in 1762 and moved to the ‘First Charge’ in 1765. In 1750 he married Helen Balfour from Pilrig, and she died in 1806. Their children were: Walter (b.1752); Martha; Janet; John, surgeon with the 10th Light Dragoons; and Thomas, minister of Newton, near Edinburgh, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Gateshaw. Thomas of Urlings, County Tipperary (18th C.) progenitor of the Earls of Clonmell. He is probably descended from one of the Border Scott branches. He married Rachel, daughter of Mark Prim of Johnswell. Their son John (b.1739) was Solicitor-General and Attorney-General and was created Earl of Clonmell. Rev. Thomas (1722/3–92) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, and brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh (however, this may be confusion). He was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian Church in Hexham in 1756. He turned down Colinsburgh in 1761, since he thought that the size of the congregation and travel involved would be too much. In 1763 he became 1st minister of the Relief Kirk at AUCHTERMUCHTY (the 5th such congregation). He appears to have ended as minister in 1786. He was married in 1770, although his wife’s name is unknown; she was previously married to Rev. John Warden and she died in Edinburgh in 1810. He is buried in Canongate Churchyard. He could be the son of William and Christian Hoy, born in Wilton in 1723. It is unclear if he was brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh Relief Kirk or Rev. James (licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery), minister at Perth; he may thus have been an elder son of Robert of Falnash, perhaps born at Crowhill (like James), and may be the same Thomas who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch.

Thomas (18th C.) married Mary Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children, included: Walter (b.1752) and William (b.1754), baptised in Wilton; and Helen (b.1761), Thomas (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1751. He married Margaret Bell in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children included Thomas (b.1751), John (b.1753), Robert (b.1755), Isabel (b.1757), Adam (b.1760) James (b.1761), William (b.1763), George (b.1765), Elizabeth (b.1768) and Margaret (b.1771). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) married to Helen Renwick, their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1757. In the entry he is marked ‘Buccleugh’, but it is unclear if that refers to the farm or something else. Probably the same Thomas and Helen Renwick were married in Roberton Parish in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Jean Veitch and their children included: Thomas (b.1743); Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1755); and Archibald (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were William Maxwell and Charles Scott (who was probably related). Thomas (18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the 1760s and 1770s. He married Marion Elliot in 1765. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (1729–1807) eldest surviving son of Walter and brother of Rev. William of Abbotrule and Southdean. He succeeded to Nether Bonchester in 1750, as grandson of Walter. He was said to have greatly improved the Bonchester estate, making a nursery for young trees and enclosing land. The couple of acres of best land that he set aside for growing and selling young trees was called the Nursery and the cottage there was called the Nursery House. The planting of trees also became popular with his neighbours, leading to the valley of the Rule becoming well wooded. He also farmed Mackside for a while and was factor for Robert Lisle of Stonedge. However, he later struggled financially and had to place his affairs in the hands of trustees, who were William Turnbull of Langraw, Thomas Scott in Lethem and Peter Brown in Minto. This led to the sale of the Bonchester estate in 1779, the purchaser being William Oliver of Dinlabyre. The Duke of Buccleuch is said to have sympathised with his kinsman and allowed him to live at a farm on the Bowhill estate for a nominal rent. He may be the Scott of Nether Bonchester (forename not given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Hannah Burnett. His only surviving child was Dorothea (‘Dora’, b.1778), who married Dr. William Lorraine from Glasgow (although born near Canonbie, and grandson of William Lorraine from Kirkton). He also had a daughter, Nelly, who died young. He died at Bowhill at the age of 78 and is buried at Bowhill. Thomas (1732–1823) 2nd son of Robert Scott (‘in Sandyknowe’) and Barbara Haliburton. He was thus uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He gained ‘liferent’ of lands that were part of Oakwood in 1759. He also held lands at Bewlie, which he resigned to Walter Scott of Harden in 1766. He was recorded as Thomas ‘Son to Robert Scott of Sandicknow’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire. He farmed at Wolfelee, holding the tenancy until 1810, then later at Monkland, near Jedburgh. During that time he was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish. For a while the tutor to his family was James Sanson, supposed to be the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s character ‘Dominie Sampson’. He was a skilled performer on the Border bagpipes, and in about 1816 wrote a list of the best Border bagpipers of earlier times. He married Anne, daughter of William Scott, 4th Laird of Raeburn (or perhaps Barbara, daughter of Walter Scott of Raeburn). In 1780 he secondly married Jean, sister of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. His children included: James, who died unmarried in Edinburgh; Charles, who inherited Knowesouth, and farmed at Milingside; Mary; Anne; and Jean, who married Andrew Oliver of Langraw. He died at Monkland, near Jedburgh. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawickshire. He married Mary Turnbull in 1751 and their children included: Walter (b.1752); William (b.1754); Helen (b.1761); Thomas (b.1766); and Mary (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were Walter Laidlaw and John Ker (blacksmith in Hawickshire). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1767 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He may be one of... the Thomases who married Margaret Turnbull in 1754, Isobel Anderson in 1758 or Nelly Laidlaw in 1766. Isobel (b.1758), baptised in Robertson, may also be his child. Thomas (1735/6–1800) 4th son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Walter he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. Thomas of Peel (1737–1813) 2nd son of John of Ashtrees and Helen Oliver. He was tenant farmer in Lethem, Southdean Parish, and is recorded there as farmer in 1792 when he had a bond with the Ellots of Harwood. He was ‘in Letham’ when recorded as a trustee for Thomas of Nether Bonchester (who had to sell his lands) in about 1779. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785, owning 11 horses there in 1797. He also paid the dog tax at Lethem in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1807 he bought Peel (then called Baxtonlees) from Lord Douglas. He married Esther, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory), this probably being in Wilton Parish in 1777; his wife died at Lethem in 1787, aged 37. Their children included: Thomas, who inherited Peel; John of Riccalton, who later re-purchased the family lands of Ashtrees; Helen, who married Thomas Elliot, son of Elliot of Harwood; and Esther, who married John, 2nd son of James Robson of Samieston. John Robson-Scott of Newton was his direct descendant, as well as the Boog-Scotts of Peel. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish in the last quarter of the 1700s. Thomas (18th C.) described as ‘sometime of Silverboothall’, he was probably son of James, farmer at Boonraw and Laird of Silverbuthall. In the late 1700s he sold a small piece of the former Wilton Common to William Oliver ‘Auld cash’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) gardener listed at Burnhead in 1791, when he was working for William Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1805) weaver in Hawick. He married Christian Weir in 1771. Their children included James (b.1772), probably the millwright; and Thomas (b.1775), probably the weaver. He was a member of the Associate Congregation, which witnessed the baptisms. His wife’s death is recorded in 1805, by which time he was already deceased. Thomas (18th C.) recorded being let the farm of Pilhnuir Rig for the first time in 1778, after the Division of the Common. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in Hobkirk Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He was probably related to George, who farmed there soon afterwards. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish, in 1792 he married Janet Riddell in Cavers. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Northhouse, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 8 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1799 his son George was on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at ‘Woollie’ (i.e. Wolflee), when he owned 6 horses. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the contemporary Thomases (but certainly Thomas at Lethem is recorded separately). Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Wauchope in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (d.1808) son of Walter from Wiltonburn. He is described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1788 he married Helen Pott, who was from Castleton. Their children (baptised in Castleton) included: Helen (b.1789); Robert (b.1791); Helen (b.1797); James (b.1799); and Thomas (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also there in 1797 and so presumably a close relative. His son George was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Elliot, who was from Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas whose son John was baptised in Cavers in 1786. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Earlside in 1784 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a labourer at Earlside in 1800 when his daughter Barbara was baptised. Thomas (b.c.1765) joiner of the Sandbed, possibly son of Walter, who established a joiner’s firm there in 1750. He is presumably the Thomas listed as a joiner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Christian (or Chistina) Downie, and their children included Walter (who carried on the business) and Jane. A younger joiner Thomas, also listed at the Sandbed on the 1841 census, may have been his son, as well as Robert at an adjacent address. He is listed...

His daughter Evelyn married Vernon E. Angwin. His brother was John (who married Jane Little). Thomas (b.1804/5) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Mervinslaw. He is recorded there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and in 1861 was farming 1200 acres there, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Mervinslaw in a directory of 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, George, Elizabeth and Agnes. He could be related to John, who was farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797. Thomas (b.1807/8) clerk in a woollen factory according to the 1851 census. He was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as ‘cashier, Buccleuch Street’. In 1861 he was listed as manager of Wilton Mills, and was living in the Manager’s House there. He married Mary Oliver in 1840. Their children included: James; Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Janet (b.1846); Agnes (b.1848); and Andrew (b.1850). He may be the Thomas, son of James and Isabel Robson born in Hawick in 1806. Thomas (b.c.1805) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he is recorded as an agricultural labourer, and is easy to confuse with the mason of the same name, who also lived at Deanburnhaugh. He married Mina Inglis in Robertson Parish in 1830 and their children included: John (b.1831); William (b.1833); Helen (b.1834); Thomas (b.1837), ploughman in Lilliesleaf. Thomas (b.1809/10) mason in Deanburnhaugh, born in Robertson Parish, probably son of Thomas. He was living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851, but by 1861 was at Myreslawgreen. In 1829 he married Jenima King (from Canonbie) in Robertson Parish in 1829, and their children included: Thomas (b.1830); James (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); William (b.1835); Walter (b.1837); Barbara (b.1840); Isabella (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Beatrice (b.c.1846); Wilhelmina (or Mina, b.1848); and Robert (b.1852). Thomas (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. In 1841 he was living at the Sandbed. He may be the joiner from Hawick who was in the asylum in Dumfries in 1851. Thomas (b.c.1810) handloom weaver in Hawick. He was living at 53 Loan in 1851 and 1861. In 1835 he married Jane ‘Hallowell’ or Holywell. Their children included: George (b.1837); Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1840); Margaret (b.c.1843); Robert (b.c.1845); Helen (or ‘Nellie’) (c.1847–1907); James (1848/9–52); Adam (1850/1–54); Isabella (b.c.1857); and Jenina (b.c.1859). The family are buried in St. Mary’s Kirk. Thomas (1815–1879) eldest son of Charles, farmer at Milsington, who was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. His mother was Esther Elliot. He took over the tenancy from his father and farmed at Milsington from 1854 until his death. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1000 acres there. In 1856 he married Marion (or Mary), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Stelshaw. Their children included: Charles (b.1857/8), who purchased the farm of Milsington; James (b.1841), who moved to Canada; Henry, moved to the U.S.A.; Thomas of Croftheads (b.1867), who married Elizabeth Minto; William; and Mary, who married John Tullie, Highchesters. Thomas (b.1816/7) worker at Weensland Mills, where he was living in 1841. In 1837 in Hawick he married Adelia (or ‘Adeline’,1816/7–97) daughter of Ann Ekrum and French prisoner of war Adam (or ‘Auguste’) Bellom. They had children: Ann (b.1836/7), who married Walter Kerr Sutherland; Thomas (b.1837/8); Catherine (b.1839/40); Adam (b.1841/2); and Mary Ann (b.1844/5). He was deceased by 1851 when his wife was listed as a grocer on the Howegate. Thomas (1820/1–1902) carter in Newcastleton. He is listed on the 1851 and 1861 censuses on Langholm Street. He married Jane Mitchellhill, who died in 1911, aged 88. Their children included: Robert (b.c.1848); Margaret (b.c.1854); Mary (1854/5–7); Thomas (b.c.1857); Mary (1858/9–63); and William (1861–9). He was probably son of Newcastleton innkeeper Thomas, who is buried in an adjacent plot in Ettrickton Cemetery. Thomas (1824/5–89) 3rd son of Liddesdale farmer John. He was a shepherd, starting out at Hartsgarth with his uncle Mr. Murray, then moving to Westshields. After marrying he lived at the Pietsnest (on Hyndlee) and then Westshields again, where he died. He married Christian, younger daughter of Robert Armstrong (and sister of his brother’s wife); she died at Wolfehopelee in 1909, aged 78. His children John, Robert and Mary became tenants of Wolfehopelee. His children included: Thomas (d.1876); Mary Anderson (1863/4–1933), who died in Hawick; and John (1859/60–1936), who died at Priesthaugh; Robert (1866/7–1953), who died at Flint Cottage, Denholm. Thomas B. (1849–1924) son of Walter and Mary Beattie, he was born in Wilton. He was a tweed manufacturer and died in Toronto, Canada. He married Winifred Brannah. Their son Douglas G., served with the R.A.F. and was killed in 1917 at the age of 21. Thomas (19th C.) farmer recorded at Langhope in Ashkirk Parish in 1868. Thomas (b.1861) son of George, grocer on the Howegate. His grandfather and great-grandfather before him had been West-enders. He was a traveller with his brother’s firm Pesco’s. He spent some time in Ontario, Canada, where in 1883 he helped establish an annual Common Riding celebration in the Galt/Guelph area, being the first secretary of the organising committee. He was Cornet in 1887, the year that the Ceremonial Committee was appointed. His Cornet’s Lass appears to have been ‘Miss Montgomery’, perhaps Agnes (b.1867), who was the first to buss the Flag in the Council Chambers. He married Margaret Elliot (1870–1914), daughter of John Robert Brough. Their children were: George Douglas (1899–1984), who married Ella Christie in 1933; Elliot B. (b.1901), who died young; Laura Isobel (1902–96), who married George M. Clunie; Thomas (1904–93); and Peter Adamson (1905–85). He suffered from tuberculosis and took his family to South Africa for his health; however, he died in London on his way home from there. Thomas A. (1853–1926) son of Adam and grandson of Robert, farmer at Boonraw. He was born at Burnfoot on the Ale Water. He studied medicine at the University of Iowa and Rush Medical Center. He worked in Illinois and Oregon and then as a surgeon on boats that travelled in many parts of the world. He retired in 1921 and moved back to his homeland, where he married Margaret, daughter of oil extractor Archibald Johnstone Donaldson in 1922, this being his 4th marriage. He died in Hawick. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1854–1927) watercolour painter, born in Selkirk. He studied at the Royal Institution and Royal Scottish Academy in Edinburgh and had many commissions from wealthy Border tweed manufacturers. He lived at Earlston and Budden and settled at Leslie Cottage in Philiphaugh. Known for his powerful landscapes, he also illustrated many Border books, including Craig and Laing’s ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) and ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901), and was commissioned to paint ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’. He was a guest at the 1890 Common Riding and was the first guest at the Callants’ Club annual dinner in 1906. He read a paper on stone implements to the Archaeological Society in 1906 and donated a collection of his archaeological finds to the Museum, which now has more than a dozen of his paintings, including ‘Hawick Motte 1898’. In all, he exhibited 167 paintings at the Royal Scottish Academy. There is a bronze bust of him, by Thomas Claperton, in Selkirk. A book ‘Lest we Forget’, about his Hawick connections, was written by M.H. Coltman in 1991. The museum in Drumlanrig’s Tower has a Tom Scott room, containing several of his paintings. Thomas John (b.1861) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was born in Cavers Parish. In 1882 he emigrated to Australia where he married Ada M. Fox in Melbourne, Victoria. Thomas (1862/3–1918) builder in Newcastleton. He married Marion Elliot, who died in 1949, aged...

78. Their children included: John (1894/5–1916), who died of wounds in France; and James, who died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (19th/20th C.) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother James. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. His brother was killed by a bullet in 1936 and in 1946 he sold Redheugh to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Uchtred (11th/12th C.) earliest known ancestor of the local Scotts, see Uchtred Fitz-Scott. Walter (12th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Scotus’ sometime around 1200 when he was granted the lands of Allardyce in Kincardineshire. There is some suggestion that his decendents took the surname Allardyce, and that he is therefore unrelated to other Scotts. Walter (12th/13th C.) recorded as Walterus ‘Scotus’ in 1216 when he was commanded to deliver his ship to Gilbert Campion. This was at Tewkesbury. Walter (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Robert, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Walter (13th C.) guarantor for an agreement made at Auncrum in 1253 by Sir Walter de Moray. It is unclear if he is the same as any of the other early Walters. Walter (13th C.) recorded in 1254 as ‘de Escote’ in a document of Henry III relating to lands in Bedfordshire. Walter (d.c.1263) sergeant of the King’s Chapel, probably at Hereford. He was given a penny a day by the King, to be drawn by the Sheriff of Hereford. In 1263 his wife Edith and their children were granted the same penny a day for their lives. Walter (13th C.) listed as being ‘of Wyteby’ in 1265 when he gave half a mark to have an assize in Yorkshire. Walter (13th C.) gave half a mark to have an assize in Sommerset in 1270. Walter (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot of Welteledene’ in the Patent Rolls of Henry III in 1270/1. He is recorded several times in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He is ‘Walterus Schot de Welteden’, ‘Walterum Skot de Welteden’ and variants. It is unclear where these lands were, but presumably on the English side. He could be the same Walter recorded among a set of pleas of the English army made at Berwick in 1296; this particularly involved a dispute with Matilda of Blackburnshire over trespass and a coat. Walter (13th C.) holder of lands in Peeblesshire (or perhaps Lanarkshire, this is not entirely clear) who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is recorded as ‘Wautier Lescot’. It is possible that he was son of William and brother of Richard of Rankleburn and Murthockstone (who also swore fealty to Edward I). There is some suggestion that he was the elder brother, although the chieftain of the family passed through Richard, so perhaps he had no heirs. The lands he held may have included Kirkurd, which were certainly later owned by the Scotts of Bucleuch. He may have been the first of his family to have the name ‘Walter’. He may be the same ‘Waltero Scot’ who witnessed a charter relating to Soutra Hospital in about 1280. It is also possible he was descended from Adam, whose name was associated with lands in Peeblesshire in the early 1200s. Walter (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, who came from Edinburgh (although it is unclear if he is distinct from the man from Peeblesshire, or whether this is a duplicate entry). He was recorded as ‘Wautier Scot tenant le Euesqe de Seint Andreu, del counte de Edeneburgh’ (i.e. the Bishop of St. Andrews’ tenant in Edinburgh). His seal bore a hawk on a wrist, together with a crescent and star in fields and the name ‘S’WALTERI SCOTI’. The crescent and star indicate a close relationship with the Scott chiefs. Walter ‘the Ratton’ (d.c.1400) said to have been grandson of John ‘the Lame-ter’, and son of a Chamberlain to the Archbishop of Glasgow (although there is some confusion between father and son). Alternatively he was a younger son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn. He was probably the 1st Laird of Synton, although accounts differ, and information about these generations is very uncertain. His nickname came from his temper and small size. In about 1389 he settled at Burnfoot in the Ale valley and became the first (new) Laird of Synton. He married a Shortreed of Headshaw. His children probably included: George, who succeeded to Synton; John of Headshaw; Walter of Ashkirk; and William of Glack. He died during the reign of Robert III. Sir Walter (d.1402) 4th Laird of Rankilburn (Bucleuch), Murdostoun and Kirkurd, son of Robert. He was the first of a huge number of Sir Walters who would come later. He was said to be a brave man who performed many actions in service of the Crown. He had a charter of 1389 for superiority of the lands of Kirkurd. He may be the Walter who had an indenture in 1391 with Hugh Fotheringham for the lands of Caverton, made at Borthwick. In 1398 he was among the barons who were bound to keep peace on the Border and he was appointed as ‘borowis for the Erlis boundis of Douglas of the mydil marc’ (thus the first of his family associated with the Wardenship of the Marches). His wife’s name is not known, and his only known child is Robert, who succeeded him. He was killed at the Battle of Homildon Hill, serving in the army of Archibald, Earl of Douglas.

Walter of Ashkirk (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, these generations are very uncertain, and nothing else is known about him. He was probably ancestor of the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and 1526.

Walter ‘Wat’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Sim, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Sir Walter of Buccleuch (d.c.1468) eldest son of Robert, he was 6th (and last) Laird of Murdockston (or Murdostoun) and the first to be described as ‘of Buccleuch’. He was also sometimes still described as ‘of Kirkurd’. He was mentioned as son and heir of Robert in 1415, when his father swapped lands of Glenkerry for Bellendean with Melrose Abbey. In 1426 he is described as son and heir of Robert of ‘Murtousnton’ when he was granted the lands of Lemiptlaw in the regaility of Sprouton. He was probably the Walter on the ‘retour’ for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. In 1431 he had a ‘transumpt’ made of the charter of 1420 in which his father was granted half the lands of Branxholme. He obtained lands of Heap in Wilton from James Langlands in 1431, a public instrument to that effect being signed at St. Mary’s Kirk; he swapped these lands for Milbington in 1451 at Wilton Kirk (with a confirming deed in 1453). He witnessed a confirming charter for lands in Primside in 1432 and another for Nether Crailing in 1434, both granted by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1434 he was ‘lord of Morthouystoun’ in a document relating to Ladyurd. He was knighted by James II in 1437, and also granted a charter for lands in Eckford in 1439 (confirmed in 1450), apparently for capturing Gilbert of Rutherford. He is recorded in a document as Lord of ‘Morthouystoun’ in 1434, and was still presiding over the Baron Court of Kirkurd in 1455. He witnessed several charters granted by James II in the 1430s to 1450s. In the 1430s he gained lands at Grahamslaw from William Crichton of that Ilk (who is described as his relative, and was clearly a close political ally). In 1438 he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter for Borthwickshiel in 1444 and a lease for related lands in 1445. In 1446 he exchanged the family’s Lanarkshire property (Murdockston) for the rest of Branxholme, with Thomas Inglis; in response to Inglis’ complaint about English incursions on Branxholme, he supposedly remarked that ‘the Cumberland cattle were as good as those of Teviotdale’. He thereby acquired Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whittlaw, Whitrig and part of Over Harwood. In 1446 he was witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn and in 1446/7 was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he bought the ‘Cousinslands’ (to the north of Branxholme) from Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Roulte and mother of Robert Scott (hence probably a relative). He witnessed a charter for Stephen of Castletlaw (his brother) in 1448. In 1449/50, with the consent of his eldest son David, he renounced his superiority over the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd to the chaplains of the prebend of Kirkurd (then part of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith). In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick. During the reign of James II he was one of the conservators of truces with England. He was a conservator of truces with England in 1449, 1451, 1453, 1457 and 1459, and he was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1451 he exchanged the lands of Heap for those of Milbington with John of Langlands. He was on an assize for the Douglases in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the document creating the Barony of Kilmains for Alexander Cunningham; this was done while part of the expedition into England, led by James II. In 1453 he was granted the fees of the men of Teviotdale according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he led a group of Borderers against the remnants of the army raised to revenge the murder of William Douglas by the King, the battle taking place at Arkinholm. Thereby he was granted ‘Qhuyetehestir’ (Whitchester) in the Barony of Hawick (forfeited by John St. Michael), as well as lands in Selkirkshire. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he witnessed the document appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest.
In 1458/9 he obtained lands at Abington, Phareholm and Glendonanrig, which had previously belonged to the Douglases. Along with his son Sir David he was also granted part of Langholm. In 1458 he had a charter for Glendonran and other lands in Lanarkshire (which may have been held by a cadet branch for another 3 centuries). He is recorded as Master Ranger of Ettrick ward from at least 1455 and was probably the ‘Sir Walter of Kirkurd’ listed as Master Ranger in 1467 when he had the farm of Eldinhome for his fee; he remained in this position until 1468. In 1461 (as superior of Branxholme) he transferred the lands of ‘Kirkton and Tofts’ to Katherine Inglis. His sons David and Alexander witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1463. Also in 1463 he resigned his lands to the King, so that they could be regranted; this included Branxholme, Lanton, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Eckford, Kirkard and Whitchesters. Branxholme was then erected into a Barony; this was for services rendered to King James III and his father James II, particularly against James of Douglas. In 1463/4 he was given a discharge for sureties that he was liable to pay to the King’s officers, on account of helping to expel James Douglas. And in 1463/4 he witnessed the document where the King rewarded a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also present in Parliament in Edinburgh in 1464. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh. Also in 1464/5 he witness the document giving a reward to Robert Scott of Todshaw and other local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also on the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret, daughter of Peter Cockburn of Henderland, and appears to have had at least 3 sons (although things are still confused in these generations): David, who succeeded; James of Kirkurd and Hassendean, ancestor of the Scotts of Hassendean, Burnfoot and Burnhead (although there is some suggestion that he was not a full brother of David); and Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpsasley, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane, Howpsasley, Horsleyhill, Gilmanscleuch, Newburgh and Tushielaw. It seems feasible that John of Thirlestane, who gained the half Barony of Wilton in 1483, was another son. His seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star, and the words ‘S’ WALTERI SCOT DE BUKCLUCH’. Walter (d.1471) eldest son of Sir David of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1465 he was contracted to marry Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. However, it is unclear that the marriage ever happened. In 1469/70, along with his father, he was made Keeper of Hermitage Castle by Archibald Douglas ‘Bell the Cat’. However, he did not live much longer, predeceasing his father and dying without issue. He is mentioned in 1470 in a charter for lands in the Hermitage valley; he is there described as son and heir of David of Buccleuch. In June 1471 he was gifted the relief of the lands of West Lilliesleaf and Whitton. By the following year David (his brother) was the heir (although he may be the Walter who was witness, along with David of Buccleuch, to a sasine for the lands of Borthwickshiel in May 1471). Walter of Fenwick (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1456, possibly relating to a ‘retour’ witnessed a few years earlier. Probably the same Walter of Fenwick is recorded as witness in 1484/5 to a charter where Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed for the precept in 1488 in which Sir Thomas Turnbull leased Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott, and also witnessed the same document. He may have been ancestor of later Scotts of Fenwick. Walter 3rd Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of George. He is said to have married a daughter of Scott of Hassendean during the reign of James II; however, it is unclear which Scott of Hassendean is intended. His children were John and Walter, both of whom succeeded. Walter 5th Laird of Synton (d.c.1463), younger son of Walter and brother of John the 4th Laird. He married a daughter of Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and his sons included George, who succeeded. He is said to have died near the beginning of the reign of James III, but James IV is more likely. Walter (15th C.) listed among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for helping to capture John Douglas of Balveny. He is recorded as ‘niger Walterus Scot’, presumably a reference to a swarthy complexion. He is surely related to some of the other Scotts mentioned (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and Thomas), but it is unclear how. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Wester Lymfleris’ in Lanarkshire in 1478. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Whitehaugh (15th C) recorded in the 1488 Charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He was listed among the heirs of Sir David of Buccleuch, the last to be explicitly related, suggesting he may have been a nephew of Sir David perhaps. He must have been related to David of Whitehaugh who is recorded in 1479, John in Whitehaugh, listed in 1501, and Philip of Heap, mentioned in 1508. Walter of Heap (15th C.) member of the panel or the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Walter, grandson of Sir David in 1492. He was also ‘Walterum Scot de Hep’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) see Sir Walter of Howpasley.

Sir Walter of Howpasley (d.1513) eldest son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. His brothers were Robert (who probably started the Scotts of Thirlestane); William, Abbot of Melrose; Adam; Alexander; and probably David of Tushielaw. In 1478 (possibly an error) he was ordered to pay William Inglis for the lands of Meiklehope in an arrangement involving his deceased father Alexander. He was witness to a transfer of land between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branhxholme in 1482. He may be the Walter who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branhxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484 there was a claim by Jane Douglas (widow of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch) for 8 years’ rent of lands detained by him. He was mentioned in a charter of the Barony of Branhxholme in 1488, clearly stated there to be son of the deceased Alexander. In 1491/2 he was one of the executors of the will of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed as tutor to young Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch by Walter the 8th Laird and handled his affairs during his minority. In 1487–90 he was Master Ranger of Ettrick (and stated to be son of Alexander), when assigned the lands of Auldshole. In 1488 (probably just after the death of his father) and in the period 1484–90 these lands were said to be in the hands of him and his mother, Lady Joan Douglas; the lease was extended until 1496. In 1488 he was also leased the lands of Tushielaw, with David of Buccleuch as pledge. In 1493 he was surety for William Grahamshaw at Hassendean Kirk (however, Robert of Howpasley also served as surety in 1493, and was probably his bother). He was also allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of bringing William Scott, called ‘Gyde’, William’s brother John (it is unclear whether they were related to him) and other ‘Traitors of Levyn’ to raid the lands of Harehead, as well as resetting Henry Scott and others. In 1494/5 he was surety for Adam ‘in Auldinnischop’ (probably his brother), Robert of Deloraine, David son of James in Hassendean, Adam Turnbull in Hornshole, William Dickson in Ladhope, Thomas Lauder of Todrig and Andrew Dickson in Buccleuch. Also in 1494/5 he is probably the Walter recorded being ‘of Tushielaw’ (since these lands were also held by his family) when he was surety for David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whithope. He was additionally listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Turnbull of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. It is unclear if he or Walter of Buccleuch was the Walter listed as Ranger for Ettrick in 1494–6 (with John as Deputy Ranger). It is unclear when he ended his position as Custodian for the Ward of Ettrick, since it is difficult to separate him from Walter of Buccleuch (his cousin’s son), who held a similar role around 1500. In 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Laudehop’ (presumably Ladhope on the Yarrow), with the pledge being the Laird of Buccleuch; he also acted as pledge for Walter of Buccleuch in some other lands. He may also be the Walter of Tushielaw who was ‘coronator principalis de Ettrik’ according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, when he was liable for the fines of David Scott, Adam Scott and James Laidlaw; it was stated that since he had no means within the Sheriffdom of Selkirk, the charge was to be transmitted to the Sheriff of Peebles. He was also listed as ‘Walterus Scot de Howpaslot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Appletreehall with Alexander Lord Home in 1502. Also in 1502 he served as surety (along with Robert of Stirches) for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’; also mentioned is Alexander Scott, probably his brother. In that same year he served as surety for his brother Alexander, who had remission for several thefts (from John in ‘Valis’ and from David Pringle out of ‘Fechane’) and for Adam Turnbull in Hornshole. Additionally in 1502 William in Broadmeadows had remission for several crimes, including injuring him at Tushielaw (when he was described being ‘de tushelaw’) and he was surety for Adam ‘in aldinershope’ (probably Annelshop) and Adam in Tushielaw (who may have been related to him). In 1504 he was one of the ‘Bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in lands in Annandale. Also in 1504 he was fined at the Justice-naire in Dumfries for failing to give suit for his lands of ‘Rig’ (i.e. Caerlenrig). In 1504/5, along with David Hoppringle, George Hepburn and William Middlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which were sold to Robert Scott of Stirches. In 1506/7 he was ‘tutoure to the Larde of Bukkleuch’ (the young Walter, who had just succeeded) when he gave in his tutory accounts. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Ladhope in Etrick Forest. He was still ‘tutor’ in 1509, when he was said to be the closest male relative. In 1509 he was on the panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. In 1510 he was fined along with 35 others of ‘destroying the Woods of Etrick-Forest’. Also in 1510 he was recorded in a pledge by Margaret, wife of James Scott in Falside. He was recorded as part of an assize in Edinburgh in early 1513. He married a daughter of Elliot of Larriston (perhaps Elizabeth, based on the names of his daughter Janet’s children). The gift of wardship of his lands and marriage (meaning the financial gains from the contract etc.) of his daughter went to James Lundie in 1517. His daughter and heiress (at least for some lands) was Janet, who appears to have firstly married John Baird, Lord Posso (who died in 1527) and secondly married Thomas MacDowell; she transferred Midshiels and Appletreehall to her uncle Robert in 1532/3. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He is one of the most prominent local Lairds who died at Flodden. Walter (15th C.) name of 2 men recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, in addition to Walter of Howpasley. ‘Waltero Scote’ was left 3 sheep and ‘magnu Waltero Scot’ was left 20 shillings. Walter of Whitchester (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he was surety for Thomas Brown in Minto. It may be that this is an error for Robert of Whitchester. Sir Walter (1470s–1504) 8th Laird of Buccleuch, grandson of Sir David, who he succeeded in 1492, his father David having died first. He was the only child of David and Jane Douglas, daughter of the Earl of Angus. He must have been the Walter of Branxholme receiving the lands of Mangerton in a sasine of 1484/5 (with George Fairneylaw as notary). In his grandfather’s last testament he was granted £40 and 11 oxen and made a ‘tutor’ of William Turnbull of Minto. In 1492 he succeeded to the lands of Branxholme, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Milsington and Kirkurd. However, he received sasine of half of Branxholme, together with Eckford and Langton only in 1500, the lands having been held in ward by the Crown for 7 years; this suggests he only reached majority in this year. He was still superior of the Barony of Kirkurd (Peebleshire) recorded in sasines of 1493 and 1495. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1494/5 he acted as surety at Jedburgh Justice-aire for George Young, who had been captured at Minto. In 1494 he obtained a decree from the Lords of Council regarding the earlier plunder of his grandfather’s lands and house at Buccleuch. He may be the Walter who leased the lands of Whitshiels (near Langholm) in 1494. He is probably the ‘Walteri Scot’ who was made custodian of the Ward of Ettrick in at least the period 1496–98 (although there may be confusion with Walter of Howpasley); in 1496 he was liable for the fines of Adam Scott and others and he was given the rental of ‘Aldanehop’ for his fee as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. In 1499 he was tenant of Deloraine and ‘Wardship’. In 1500 he was infested in the lands of Grahamlaw by the Earl of Bothwel, and also his uncle Robert of Allanhaugh resigned Whitchesters into his hands as security for a loan. He was granted the lands of Whithope (in the Barony of Hawick) in a charter of 1502. Also in 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Branxholme, Lanton and Eckford (as well as his lands of Buccleuch in Selkirkshire). Additionally he was surety for William Dalgleish in Braidhaugh and for John Cockburn in Milsington. His name was mentioned in connection with negotiations for the marriage of King James IV with Margaret, daughter of Henry VII of England in 1502/3, and he witnessed the infentment of Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest at Galashiels in 1503. Also in 1503 he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford, who was widow of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk. She long outlived him, being burnt within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’). A 2nd son was William of Whithope. He was said to have been one of the few nobles to escape from Flodden, but this seems more likely to have been his son, Sir Walter. His widow and son are recorded being assigned the lease of Deloraine and Wallsheope in 1504; she had liferent of these farms in 1510. Walter of Synton (d.c.1500) probably son of George, he is usually referred to as being the 7th of Synton. However, there is sometimes confusion with his grandson, Walter. He is mentioned in family writs in 1487 and flourished during the reign of James IV. Some early family histories say he married a daughter of Cockburn of Hernderland and secondly a daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk, but this seems to be incorrect. His son was Robert of Stiches and later of Synton (however, the relationship between the Scotts of Synton, Stiches and Headshaw are confused in these generations). Walter (15th/16th C.) son of James of Hassendean (probably the same as James of Kirkurd) who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Branhomie in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Robert of Hartshaw. In 1499 he gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope to be assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ae valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was (perhaps an error for Headshaw). Probably the same Walter was feued the west stead of Langhope in 1510, and was the son and heir of Robert who feued the west stead of Gildhouse (also called Dodbank) in the same year. Walter of Headshaw (d. bef. 1510) probably descendant (perhaps son) of John of Headshaw, son of Walter of Synton. He is recorded as ‘of Eidschaw’ when witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for lands of Mangerton going to the Scotts of Branhomie. In 1484 he was ‘Walter Scot de Eidschau’ when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1484/5 he also witnessed a document relating to Whitcheaters. His son David leased lands in the Ettrick valley in 1486. In 1487 his son Robert bought the lands of Boonraw from James Newton of Dalcove, and he was one of the witnesses to the sasine (this Robert appears to be the same as Robert of Stiches). In 1493 he was ‘of Eidschaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone; for being associated with ‘the thieves and traitors of Leven’. In 1493 and 1494/5 his son Robert was surety for Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Tordrig. He is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He may be the same Walter of Headshaw recorded in 1502 when he had a remission for stealing 8 oxen and 4 horses from Robert Lauder. John Scott of ‘Valis’ acted as surety (and hence may have been a close relative). Also in 1502 his son Walter had remission for stealing sheep from farms at Yair, Selkirk, Cauldshiel and Broadmeadows, with James in Ashkirk and Robert of Stiches acting as sureties. In 1502 he and Walter in Synton (his son) were sureties for John in Walls and also in 1502 he was surety for William in Fenwick. Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw is recorded in 1510, so surely his descendants. His sons may have been: Philip, his heir; David; Simon of Dryhope; Robert; Walter; and Thomas. Walter (15th/16th C.) described as son of Walter ‘of Edshaw’ (i.e. Headshaw) in 1502. He had remission for several thefts, specifically stealing 80 sheep from William Ker at Yair, 60 sheep from Robert Brown and John Turnbull at Selkirk, 60 sheep from the Abbot of Kelso and Ralph Ker at Cauldshiel (this incident perhaps also involving Adam Turnbull in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton), 80 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this probably also involving Adam Turnbull, as well as David ‘the Lady’ in Stiches), 60 cattle from Ralph Ker at Whitlawhouse, a horse and goods from Alexander Pringle, 2 horses from a house in Selkirk, another horse from Selkirk Castle, a grey horse from William Ker in Whitmuir, a heifer from John Scott of Haining, 6 oxen from Haining, and a horse and 4 oxen from the Hospital of St. Andrew in Peebles; also for resetting David Turnbull, John Somerville, Christopher Taylor, Edmund Taylor and the ‘traitors of Leven’. James Scott in Ashkirk and Robert Scott in Stiches acted as sureties, the remission being described at the Justice-aine held in Selkirk. His daughter may have been the Janet who married Walter of Whitehaugh. The Walter in Headshaw who was recorded in 1532 and 1533 is probably his nephew. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in le newhalburnhed’; Along with Thomas Brown in Cavers he was surety for George Turnbull in Weens (who was one of the men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh). He was presumably tenant at Burnhead, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Burnhead or Over Newhall. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when John Elliot in Foulshiel was convicted of stealing 100 sheep from his farm at Hartwoodburn. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean. At the Justice-aine in Selkirk in 1502 he had remission for stealing 7 cows from William Wood in Williamhope, 2 horses from William Wood in Broadmeadows 14 cows, 4 horses and various goods from Thomas Denholm in Blackgrain, 24 sheep from George Bonniton in Whitlaw Hous and Greenhead, and 28 sheep belonging to the Abbot of Kelso and William Lowry in Cauldshiellhouse. His surety was John in Hassendean, his brother. He may have been related to William and John, sons of James of Broadmeadows, who were recorded at the same Justice-aire. Walter of Midgehope (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for resetting David ‘de francia’, especially in the theft of cows from Glensax. Walter Scott of Howpasley (who also held Tushielaw) was his surety and hence perhaps related. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Adam. Along with his father he is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for ‘fermes’ of their steadings in Ettrick Forest. He may have been son of Adam who was son of Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. Walter (15th/16th C.) had the ‘fermes’ of Shaws and Berrybush remitted to him in 1513. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the 1526 remission for Borderers involved in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in the Hauceid’, which may be Haughead near where the Boonraw Burn joins the Teviot or the Haughhead in Eckford Parish. His sons William and Adam are also listed. Walter (15th/16th C.) probably the son of James of Ashkirk, who was listed in the remission given in 1526 to a large number of Borderers for attacking the Earl of Arran. He was probably also related to the John of Ashkirk who was killed in 1526. He was recorded being ‘in Ashkirk’ in about 1530 when he assigned half of Liliesleaf Mill to his brother William and his wife Beatrix. He may be the Walter ‘in Askirk’ who witnessed documents for the Scotts of Headshaw and for the Scotts and Veiches of Synton in 1531. He was listed in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. He was described as ‘in Askirk’ when part of an inquest at Jedburgh in 1533 regarding lands at Longnewton. In 1535 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Synton and another for Walter of Headshaw. He is probably the deceased Walter in Ashkirk whose widow Margaret Falside and son and heir Walter are recorded in Selkirk in 1539 acknowledging receipt of interest from the subtenants in Ashkirk and Falside. Sir Walter ‘Wicked Wat’ (1499/1500–1552) 9th Laird of Bucleuch and Branzholme, son of Sir Walter, whom he succeeded in 1504, with a reinfement of his lands in 1516 and a ‘retour’ in 1517. In 1508 he had a charter of Branzholme and Kirkurd. His ‘tutor’ when he was a minor was Walter of Howpasley. In 1512 he was feued the lands of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, along with his mother Elizabeth Ker. He was probably made a knight on the eve of Flodden and is said to have been one of the few Scots noblemen to have escaped the battle. Throughout most of his life there was conflict with the Douglasses and the Kers of Cessford, as well as many Border raids. In 1515/6 he and his mother Elizabeth had a ‘notorial transumpt of papal indulgences’ seeking a condensor to absolve them from all crimes and sins. In 1519 and again in 1524 (confirmed in 1525) he was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, but also ‘Melroseland’, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir and East Teviotdale; this was said to be for the ‘divers diligent labours and travails’ that he and his family and friends had done towards the Abbey, and the appointment was hereditary afterwards. In the 1524 charter he was assigned the farms of Northhouse and Thirlestane for his fee. In 1523 he and his wife Elizabeth Carmichael had a regrant of the family charter of the Barony of Eckford. In 1524 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh over a dispute with the Queen-Dowager over lands in Ettrick Forest, but he managed to escape. Later in 1524 he was part of an unsuccessful coup in Edinburgh, along with the Earls of Angus and Lennox and others. In July 1525 there was also remission to a group containing him (and William, Master of Glencarrin) for a breach of peace and crime committed in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and that they help in ‘repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers’; on the back of this document is an obligation to them for ‘the slauchtir of Duchemen, etc.’ In 1525 he was part of a bond among Border Barons to assist the Earl of Angus in keeping the peace. In 1526 he was pardoned (as leader of a large number of Borderers) for his role in gathering ‘in feir of weir’ in Edinburgh and then attempting to capture the Earl of Arran at Stirling (the events probably taking place a couple of years earlier). Also in 1526 he led a group of Scotts, Elliots and their followers to try to capture the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. This battle against Angus and his local supporters (the Kers and Homes) led to the loss of many men, and also the death of Ker of Cessford, which fuelled the later feud with the Kerrs. He was exiled for this act, but had remission along with several other Scotts and Turnbulls in 1527. There was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Synton, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. He was summoned to appear in Selkirk in 1527, according to a royal breve. He was fully pardoned in 1527/8 (probably because the young King had encouraged him in the attack at Skirmish Field) and was made Principal Cupbearer to the King, as well as Warden of the western part of the Middle March. In 1528 he was charged, by the King and his Lords who were at Jedburgh and Melrose, to show his support to the King; he came ‘in ane lederin cote and ane blak bonet on his heid’ ready to obey the King’s commands. And in 1529 there was also royal ratification of an Act of Parliament stating that he had come to Melrose specifically at the request of the King and so was innocent of treason. In 1527 he had an agreement with James Murray of Falahill to end the feud between the Scotts and Murrays. In 1528 he was ‘oversman’ to the arbitrators chosen to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. Also in 1528 he had a discharge from the King for paying the non-entry fees for the Lordship of Bedrule; he also had the right to arrange the marriage of the heir of Bedrule. He infested his son and heir David in all of his lands in 1528. In 1528/9 he had a ‘discharge’ from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for his wardship and related fees and ‘non-entry’ fees associated with several local Scotts. In 1529 he also received Angus’s former Lordship of Jedforest. About the same time he also had remission for ‘breaking ward’ from Blackness Castle. In 1530 he came ‘in the King’s will’ for the murder of John, Lord Flemming, and was fined for not entering 6 men for the same crime. Shortly after the raid on Border thieves, which James V arranged in 1530, he slew the ‘verrie crewall Thief’ Robert Johnstone ‘to gratiffie the King’, but this led to a feud with the Johnstones. In 1530/1 he received the hereditary office of bailie of the monastery of Melrose. In 1531 he was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle (for unspecified crimes), his surety being Sir James Hamilton. In 1532 there was remission for Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier for the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knyght, in cumpany with Inglismen, and tresonabill inbringing of thaim within the realme’. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. Also in 1532 he is probably the Sir Walter who, along with Robert, made a public complaint in Selkirk about John Hepburn ‘pretended rector of Hawyk’ who had claimed teinds from them and then acted to have them excommunicated. In 1532 the Earl of Northumberland burned Branxholme Tower and he made a retaliatory raid into England, laying waste Northumberland as far as the River Beamish, with a force of 3,000 men. In 1533 he complained in Selkirk that a precept from Alexander ‘Carnag’, to remove him from certain lands ‘had na officiar nemnit . . . was of na streucht norcht valour’. In 1534 the King discharged him of the bond he had made for the good behaviour of Adam and Gavin Turnbull. His charter for the lands of Westhouses and Easter Mains of Hassendean was revoked by the King in 1535, as well as his charter of the superiority of the lands of Harden. This was for supposedly helping Lord Dacre burn Denholm and Cavers in 1535, for which he was briefly imprisoned; his estates were only restored in 1542/3 (as ratified by Queen Mary in 1545). In 1538 he was accused of ‘intromitting’ over lands in Jedforest that had previously belonged to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1539 he issued an instruction that Douglas of Cavers should not deal with certain (unspecified) lands. Also in 1539 he had a bond (along with his son David and Robert of Allanhaugh) with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas, son of Adam. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 there are records of payments made to the ‘King’s shepherds’ in his lands of parts of Ringwoodfield, Broadlee, Philiphope, Bellendean, Buccleuch and Eskdalemoor; this was presumably since he had temporarily forfeited these lands to the Crown. In 1540 the was in ward when the King gave him permission to pursue legal actions, particularly against Janet, daughter of Walter of Howpalsey. Around 1540 he (along with Robert of Wamphray) was released on condition that he help keep peace on the Border, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges; he also agreed to take on the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if Lord Maxwell did not take it, and also to assist Lord Bothwell at Hermitage. In 1540/1 several other noblemen served as caution for him when he was prisoner in Edinburgh Castle. Then in 1541 he appeared in Elgin as instructed by the King and was ordered to stay north of the Spey and later to remain within Dumbarton. Also in that year he raised an action against Scott of Allanhaugh.

... along with the Kers. In 1548/9 he was granted the lands of Easter Craik, which had been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston; this was for service defending the kingdom against the English and 'for the great losses and burning of his lands'. In 1548 he had a letter from Mary of Guise (the Queen Dowager) supporting him in all endeavours, in return for his 'band of manrent'. Also in 1548 he received ward of the lands belonging to Turnbull of Minto, until the heir was of lawful age. In 1549 he was (re)appointed Provost of Selkirk. In 1549 he petitioned the Lords of Council for the right to post summonses at the market crosses of Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Haddington, Hawick and Melrose for Walter Ker of Cessford, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others who had helped the English in the spoliation of the Borders, and also of attacking his lands at Newark, within Ettrick Forest and in the Borthwick valley. He was made Warden of (half of) the Middle Marches in 1550 (between Minto Craig and Craik Cross) and also Warden and Justiciar of Liddesdale in 1550/1, with permission to hold courts and in pursuing fugitives 'burn their dwellings, and put their families to fire and sword'. In 1550 John, Archbishop of St. Andrews had a bond of maintenance with him, in response to his bond of manrent. In 1551 there were letters from the Queen, to be proclaimed at market crosses, in support of his work as Warden, and an Act of the Privy Council brought by him for the same purpose, laying down rules that were expected also to be imposed by the English Wardens. Also in 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh', his name appearing first. In 1551/2 there is a 'letter of inhibition' by him against Walter Ker of Cessford and others to prevent them disposing of property to avoid paying his claimed damages. In the middle of 1552 he had a letter excusing him of attendance at inquests etc., on account of his duties as Warden and since he was 'now past the dait of lx zers'. He was slain on Edinburgh High Street by Ker supporters and is buried at St. Mary's in Hawick. The gravestone of his natural son, Sir Walter of Goldielands, eulogises thus: 'the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh vithin ye nicht being vnaccvmpaneit vith his friends or servandis onlie except tvta of his dependers attending on him not respecting nor svspecting thair intentivne: This happinit in September the 53 yeir of his age ye zeir of God 155(2)'. He married 3 times and had several children, including: Sir David, who died unmarried; Sir William of...
