masters of Edinburgh High School in 1710, and they had one other daughter. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1741–1830) historian, born in Hawick, 5th child and only son of Rev. William. He was orphaned at about age 17 and educated in Hawick, Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. One of his close early friends was Samuel Charters, who would become minister at Wilton (and whose cousin he would marry). After his father died he was involved in the litigation to claim money from the Whitehaugh estates, with his father’s 2nd wife being Isobel Scott, heiress of Whitehaugh. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1764 and acted as substitute at the Tron Kirk for 9 months. He was presented to Minto Parish in late 1766 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, becoming minister there early the following year. He was also for a while tutor of the 2 sons at Minto House (one of whom would become the 1st Earl of Minto). He was presented to Jedburgh in 1772, translated there the following year (following some objections over patronage), and this is where he spent the rest of his life. He was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s. He obtained a doctorate from St. Andrews University in 1789 and became one of his Majesty’s Chaplains for Scotland in 1793. He was arrested while visiting the House of Commons about 1798, being mistaken for the accomplice of a notorious swindler. In 1798 he was offered the Chair of Church History at Edinburgh University, but declined, and had a yearly pension from 1800. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He wrote several political and historical books, including ‘Candid Thought on American Independence’ (1780), ‘The History of Political Transactions and of Parties from the Restoration of King Charles II to the Death of King William III’ (1792), ‘Observations on the Constitution and State of Britain’ (1793), ‘The Effects of the French Revolution with respect to the interests of humanity, liberty, religion, and morality’ (1793) and ‘The History of Great Britain, during the Reign of Queen Anne’ (1798), as well as several sermons published in Kelso, Hawick and Edinburgh. He also wrote descriptions of Jedburgh and Ancrum for the Statistical Accounts. His posthumously published book ‘My own life and times 1741–1814’ (1861) contains some valuable anecdotes relating to Hawick in the latter 18th century, and describes some aspects of everyday life in the neighbourhood in those times. He married Martha Charters (daughter of Samuel, Solicitor of Customs for Scotland), who died in 1809 and they had 3 sons: William, Inspector of Military Hospitals, and second husband of his niece by marriage, Mary Somerville the mathematician; Samuel, solicitor; and James Burges, who died young. They also had 4 daughters: Christian, who married Walter Riddell of Friar’s Glen, 3rd son of Patrick Riddell of Mauselee; Janet (or Jenny), who married Joseph Pringle of Ferney Green, Consul General at Medeira, and secondly Lieut.-Gen. Henry Elliot of Rosebank (son of Capt. Robert, brother of the Laird of Harwood); Margaret (d.1843); and Martha, who married William Rutherford, solicitor of Jedburgh. His wife is said to have been a clever woman, who took great care with the education of her children, who were taught by David Brewster (later Sir David). When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest serving minister, in his 90th year. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Sir William (12th/13th C.) son of William of Carnwath. It is said that during the reign of William the Lion he slew a fearful monster, which was terrorising the district of Linton; the place was known as Wormington, and the event is commemorated in a carved stone in wall of the parish church. He was ‘Willelmo de Sumerville’ when he witnessed the granting of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. In 1174 he had the lands conferred on him by the King. He also became Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as the Chief Falconer to the King. Rev. William (1691–1757) son of Thomas, the minister of Cavers, he was minister of Hawick Parish 1731–57, and father of Dr. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1707, became a tutor for the family of Alexander, Lord Elibank, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Duns in 1719. He thereafter spent time in the household of James, Lord Somerville (presumably a relative), managing his business affairs. He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1731 and ordained early the following year. In 1735 he was involved with the Duke of Buccleuch in the sale of land within Dalkeith. He wrote an account of the Parish sometime before 1743 (perhaps in 1738), this being one of the earliest descriptions with any detail. There he mentions an examination he made of the Buccleuch vault under St. Mary’s in 1738; his transcription of stones there was eventually published in James Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’. He is listed at the Manse in 1748, when he paid the window tax in Hawick Parish. In 1733 he married Janet, only daughter of John Grierson, minister of South Queensferry (their post-nuptial contract is in the National Archives); she was said...

...to be a great beauty. Their children included: Agnes (b.1735); James (b.1740), who may have died young; Thomas (b.1741), who became minister at Jedburgh; Jean (b.1742), who probably also died young; William (b.1744), who probably also did not survive; Janet (b.1745); and Helen. The witness in 1741 was schoolmaster James Anderson and the witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (the Bailies at the time). His first wife died in 1749 and in 1753 he secondly married again Isobel (or Isabella) Scott of Whitehaugh, described as ‘a maiden-gentlewoman of about 80’, and she died in 1759. His children Agnes and Thomas brought an action in 1761 against John Scott of Whitehaugh, claiming that the marriage contract of their step-mother’s father, Walter Scott, meant that they should be entitled to payments from the Whitehaugh estate, but the judges ruled against them. He is probably the ‘Mr. Somervell’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although probably deceased before then). It has sometimes been claimed that he was the original of the ‘little round fat oily man of God’ of James Thomson’s ‘Castle of Indolence’, but others insist that the model was instead an English clergyman, Rev. Patrick Murdoch. William (1771–1860) son of Dr. Thomas and Martha Charters, he was born at Minto. He trained as a surgeon and entered the army, travelling on expeditions to the Cape of Good Hope. He also travelled on a Mediterranean expedition against Napoleon and to Canada, where he was inspector-general of hospitals from about 1807–11. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1812. In 1812 he became deputy inspector of army hospitals in Scotland and in 1816 had to move to London as a member of the army medical board. In 1806 he married Miss Rutherford of Knowesouth, but she died 2 years later. In 1812 he secondly married his cousin Mary, daughter of Adm. Fairfax, and widow of Samuel Grieg; she is known worldwide as one of the first female mathematicians. It is said that after his marriage he gave up his own ambitions to support his wife’s scientific career. In 1818 he was involved in a legal case over inheritance of Knowesouth, claiming that his first wife’s uncle, a lawyer in Jedburgh, had defrauded him out of liferent on the estate. He became seriously ill in 1838, so that his family wintered abroad and from then on lived mainly on the continent. He died in his 89th year in Florence and is buried in the Protestant cemetery there. William (c.1800–49) shoemaker who lived at Miller’s Close on the High Street. He married Isabella (1807–89), eldest daughter of James Murray, and hence he was uncle of Sir J.A.H. Their children included John, Christian, Jean and James. He may have been born in Kelso, son of William and Mary Weatherhead (also spelled ‘Somervel’, ‘Somervell’, ‘Sumervel’, ‘Sumervel’, ‘Sunnerville’, etc. in early records).

on Minto estate. It is marked to the west of the old church on a 1766 map of Minto estate. It was valued at £73 3s 6d in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still so listed in 1811.

Soothdean (sooth-deen, soo-, sow-din) n. Southdean, hamlet on the A6088 towards the Carter Bar, on the banks of the Jed, formerly written ‘Souden’ and variants. Formerly part of Jed Forest, the name ‘Soothdean’ is fairly synonymous with Chesters, although perhaps more often applied to the upper part of the district. It is also the name of the associated Parish, which extends to Wolfelee and also contains the former Free Church there. The original church dates back to at least the 13th century and was a meeting place for Scottish leaders before Otterburn. A replacement church was built about 1690 and the current one in 1876. The village itself was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and again in 1544. Jock Oliver was recorded living there in 1544. In 1669 the farm of that name was tenanted by James Oliver, David Oliver and Thomas Oliver. William Oliver and David Baptie were there in 1694. James Baptie was tenant there in at least 1797–1801. Residents in 1801 included Alexander Baptie, Robert Kerr and Peter Sinton. An old outhouse in the area was called Peden’s Barn and connected with Covenanters. The settlement has been on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since long before the modern road was developed (around the 1820s). There are many nearby archaeological remains, including hill-forts, settlements and ruined peel towers. Several Bronze Age artefacts found nearby are in Jedburgh Museum, including a flat axe, part of a rapier blade, and a socketed axe. Other items from the area include a greenstone axe, a whinstone hammer-head and 3 small whorls of polished green stone. The Statistical Account of 1794 notes that the region contained several ancient cairns, one of which was found to contain bones, and nearly all of which had been robbed for stones. ‘Souden Kirk: a Border shrine’ was published by John R. Spence in 1951 (the origin is probably a corrupted version of ‘Souden’, the original pronunciation, which may be from the Old English ‘suth dun’, meaning simply ‘the southern hill’ or may be related to Old Welsh for a hill-fort; the name first occurs as ‘Soudon’ in 1275 and has various related forms, including Sudhden in 1291/2, ‘Suthdon’ in 1319, ‘Soudon’ in 1404, ‘Soudoun’ in 1426, ‘Sowdon’ in 1455, ‘Sowdene’ in 1484/5, ‘sowdene’ in 1488/9, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1491/2, ‘Sodane’ in 1538, ‘Sodene’ in 1539, transcribed as ‘Fowden’ in 1544, ‘Sowdon’ in 1559, ‘Suddoun’ in c.1560, ‘Suddoun’ in 1572, ‘Suddoun’ in 1575, ‘Suddon’ in 1586, ‘Sadan’ in 1638, ‘Sudden’ in 1689 and ‘Souden’ in 1701; ‘Soudan K.’ is marked on Morden’s 1687 map of Scotland and ‘K. of Soudann’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Soothdean Kirk (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-kirk) n. church in Southdean Parish. The original church was first mentioned as early as the 1260s. ‘Ade de Osberneston’ was appointed cleric there by the English King in 1291/2. Adam, the Parson, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It was in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, but it is not known when it was dedicated. The patronage was held by the Douglases, passing to Scott of Branc holme in 1528, reverting to the Crown in about 1537 and recovered by the Earl of Angus in 1542/3. The church consisted of a west tower and a nave, probably of 13th century, together with a chancel, probably added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier chancel). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish command ers in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have met the English and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have met the Earl of Angus at the Battle of Otterburn. The ruins of this original ‘Souden Kirk’ stands just below the level of the main A6088 road, about a mile after Chesters. A commemorative plaque was erected there after excavations by the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1910. At the same time part of the tower was roofed over to hold some of the unearthed stonework, and the site was dedicated as a memorial to the Battle of Otterburn; repair work was carried out on the tower in 2015. A carved super-altar (of sandstone, about 23 cm by 18 cm), probably from the 15th century, was moved to the new church. This original church was abandoned in 1688 when the roof collapsed (on a Sunday, but fortunately after the congregation had left). A second church was built in 1689/90, whose roofless walls stand in the graveyard of the grounds of the new (1876) church near Chesters. This building had no ceiling and it is said that the pauper’s coffin (with its hinged bottom) was stored in the rafters, in plain view of the congregation. Its doorway survives and part of the ‘jourgs’ could be seen on the wall until fairly recent times. The new church contains a memorial window to James Thompson, author of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’ and another supplied by the tenantry of Jedforest. The organ was a gift of Mrs. Mair, wife of the minister. The new churchyard is displaced from the church, up on Chesters Brae. The Manse for the Kirk is located to the east of Whiteburn farmstead; it was built in 1795, on the site of the former building; this was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The glebe lands extended to 40 acres. The patronage was held by Sir Walter Scott of Brancolithme from 1528, then the Earl of Angus from 1542/3. The benefice of the Rectory was held by Douglas of Bonjedward in the period 1566–72. The church was linked with Edgerston 1660–73, linked with Hobkirk in 1793, united formally with Hobkirk in 1888 and then linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1888–97. It became part of the wider area of Ruberslaw in 2004 (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule and Hobkirk). The oldest communion token is heart-shaped and made of lead. A roll of the ministers of the church is: Galfrid, Vicar in 1260; Adam of Osborton from 1291/2; Adam, Parson in 1296; Robert Halliwell, Prebend in 1319; Thomas For-est, Rector in 1404; Robert Penwen, from 1424 until at least 1455; John Inglis, Rector in 1471; William Scott, Rector from at least 1482–1491/2; Richard, Parson in 1526/7; Hugh Douglas, Rector at least 1558/9–63; Walter Lyle, Exhorter in 1567; John Douglas, Reader 1574–87; Andrew Clayhills, Minister in 1575; John Scott, Reader 1579–82; William Douglas 1585; Andrew Douglas 1599–1605; George Douglas 1607–08; James Logan, presented 1608; William Weir 1610–26; James Fisher 1626–35; John Davidson 1635–66; George Baptie 1670–88; Thomas Rutherford 1689; Samuel Johnstone 1690–99; Thomas Thomson 1700–16; Thomas Leck, presented 1716; John Inglis 1718–43; John Oliver 1736–55; Robert Muirhead 1756–84; William Scott 1785–1809; John Richmond 1810–47; John Mair 1847–1902; George Henry Donald 1902–06; John R. Spence 1907–50; John Roberts 1951–65; George Urquhart 1966–72; Stephen Goodbrand 1973–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96 (it is marked ‘K. of Soudan’ and ‘K. of Sowdan’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Soudan K.’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Soothdean Mill (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-mawns) n. house of the minister of Southdean Parish. It is north of the village, to the east of the A6088. The current house was built in 1795, on the site of the former building, which was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The nearby glebe lands extended to 40 acres. A crude stone axe was built into a wall opposite here.

Soothdean Manse (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-maws) n. house of the minister of Southdean Parish. It is north of the village, to the east of the A6088. The current house was built in 1795, on the site of the former building, which was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. a corn mill and a saw mill (it is ‘molendini de Sowden’ in 1538, ‘molendini de Sowden’ in 1539, ‘Sodemynny’ and ‘molendini de Soden’ in 1541, ‘suden milne’ in 1681 and ‘Suden Mylne’ in 1694).

Soothdean Parish (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-pä-reesh) n. Southdean Parish, lying along the upper banks of the Jed, crossed by the A6088 road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It is also sometimes referred to as Chesters Parish. The Parish is about 12 miles by 7 miles in size, and is bounded by Jedburgh, Oxnam, Castleton, Hobkirk and part of Northumberland. It was formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was a Rectory of Glamis, formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was valued at £5 6s 4d in 1275 and £3 8s in 1376. In early times it was called ‘Suden’, and pronounced that way until fairly recently. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at £5500. In 1678 the lands had the same value, split between the Marquess of Douglas and Gilbert Elliot of Wolfelee. It received part of the former Abbotrule Parish in 1777 (including the area having the former church), with a small part moved from Hobkirk in 1793. However, a northern section (bordering on Bedrule, including Gatehousecote and Rueltownhead) was later transferred to Hobkirk Parish. There were 45 men listed there between the ages of 19 and 30 in 1799. It was valued at about £6500 in 1811. Some of the Cheviots are in the Parish, and the highest hills are Carter Fell, Carlintooth Fell, Peel Fell and Wolfelee Hill. Chesters is the main settlement, although it really only grew in the 19th century. The Parish contains a great many ancient forts, remains of peel towers, etc. There are Parish Council books for 1851–1930 in the Borders Archive and the Parish records date back to 1608. There were more than 70 pupils in 1718 and John Turnbull was herd 1785–97. An enclosed area on the north-east side contained a building and sheepfold, shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Sowdinryg’ in 1500, ‘Sowdenrig’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Soudenrig’in 1621, ‘Sudenrig’ in 1634, ‘Sudenrig’ in 1660, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1661, ‘Suddinrig’ in 1663, ‘Suddenrigg’ in 1693, ‘Suddenridge’ in 1708 and ‘Southdean rigg’ in 1723; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sudderig’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Sowdenrig’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Southdeanridge’; see also Soothinrigg).

Soothdean Rig (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, lying to the south of the main A6088, being essentially the northern shoulder of Charlie’s Knowe. The area is rich in archaeological remains, around the Carter Burn, as well as further north to Jordan Sike. In particular there are apparent remains of buildings within enclosures.

Soothdean Rig Shiel (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig-sheel) n. shepherd’s cottage on Southdean Rig. Francis Dickson and his son Francis, were shepherds there through much of the 19th century.

Soothdean Schuil (sooth-deen-skil) n. former school in Southdean Parish. It may have been established in the early 17th century. Thomas Turnbull was schoolmaster in 1620 and George Weir in 1622. There were more than 70 pupils in the 1830s. Thomas Armstrong was schoolmaster there from 1825 and his son Richmond Armstrong from 1837. J.D. Clark was schoolmaster around 1932. School Board minute books are in the Borders Archive for the period 1873–1919.

Soothfield (sooth-feeld) n. Southfield, farm about 4 miles south of Hawick, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It was previously split into ‘Nether Southfield’ and ‘Over Southfield’, and these farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. The name is also used for the general area around the farm. The marshy area just to the north was once dammed and labelled as ‘Mill Dam’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. James Glendinning was a tenant here in 1684 when he was listed among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Adam Laidlaw was there in 1711. Grieves farmed here from at least the 1750s until 1888, when the lease was given up by Walter; this is probably the longest tenancy by a single family of any farm of the Buccleuch Estates. William Clerk was a servant there in 1797 and George Douglas was living there in 1801. There are several forts, carins and ancient settlements in the vicinity. Several flint and chert implements found in the area around the farm are in the Museum, and some others may be in the National Museum of Antiquities. A spearhead found near here is probably still in the Museum’s collection, and has been classified as Middle Bronze Age. (it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Soutfield’, is marked as ‘N. Southfield’ and O. Southfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and also marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland; the name presumably just means ‘the south field’, but it may suggest that it was once part of Hawick Common; there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

Soothfield Gate (sooth-feeld-gā’) n. Southfield Gate, former farm, long ruined, near the road end just beyond the Caa Knowe, just after the turn-off for Southfield farm and shortly before the road reaches the Gate Burn at the Troulawford. The name is also used to refer to the road to Southfield, and hence to the far end of the Common and the Caa Knowe. Weaver Charles Murray and family were living at ‘Hawick Shiel’s Yett’ in 1841, which is probably the same place – ‘...And syne, with them, by Southfield Gate, I pray I’ll hear the Burgess-Roll and answer to my name’ [JYH] (also written ‘Southfieldgate’; it is marked ‘Southfieldgate ruins of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Sooth Hermitage Street (sooth-her-mi’-eej-stree’) n. South Hermitage Street, part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the south of Douglas Square.

Soothinrig (soo-thin-rig) n. former name for lands at Southdean Rig, being more recently part of the estates of the Duke of Buccleuch and part of Colterscleeuch farm. They were once held by an ancestor of Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells, and given for his services to the Duke (see also Southdeanrig).

the Sooth Kirk (thu-sooth-kirk) n. name formerly used in Newcastleton for the United Presbyterian Church after it united with the Church of Scotland in 1929. The name was used to distinguish it from the ‘Park Kirk’.

Sooth Liddle Street (sooth-li-dul-stee’) n. South Liddle Street, being the southern extension of North Liddle Street and Mid Liddle Street.

Sooth Port (sooth-pōr’) n. South Port, being the gate from town leading south up the Cross Wynd until the mid-18th century. The gate was probably situated a little way up the Wynd, and was once the beginning of the road towards Newcastile. It was recorded being ‘taken down’ in 1732, and may have been more fully removed in 1762 along with the Mercat Cross. A plaque was placed on the Town Hall near the original location by the Callants’ Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the ‘Cross Wynd Port’ or ‘Cross Port’).

Soothron (sooth-rin) n., adj., arch. people from the south, i.e. the English – ‘...for at that period such was the thirst of Southron revenge that things both sacred and civil met with the same treatment’ [WaD], ‘And the fierce rievers swam the currents o’er In hot pursuit of fly-ing Southron foe’ [GWe], ‘...Where pricking and spurring are rife, And the bluid boils up like a sea; But Southrons gand doon i’ the strife! And wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] adj., arch. southern – ‘Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days’ [ECS].

Sooth Synton (sooth-sin’-in) n. former name for the main farm of Synton (or Sinton), to distinguish it from ‘North Synton’ on the opposite side of the Ale valley. It was long the property of the Scotts. The house there was rebuilt in the 18th century and demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. James Scott from South Synton Mill was minister at Ashkirk in the late 1500s (it is marked ‘S: Sintoun’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘South Sintoun’ and jist ‘Synton’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘South Syn-toun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

soothwards (sooth-wurldz) adv. southwards – ‘... And, galloping doon the glen, Aye soothwards ey they disappear; They are riding their raids again
For their ain or their neighbour’s gear’ [TK].

nickname in use in the 19th century, presumably (somewhat) related to a sooty kitten – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI].

Sooty Knowe (sou’ee-now) n. small hill just south-east of Sou’field. It once contained a cairn, marked on the 1926 Ordnance Survey map, but subsequently obliterated by cultivation and quarrying.

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. farm on a side road just south of Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, once the site of a corn mill. It was confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. ‘Dauid Armstrong de Sourby’ witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. The lands were occupied by the Armstrongs into the 17th century. It was valued at £250 in 1671. John Armstrong is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm in 1672 and 1673 and there was a 1685 gravestone for John Armstrong of Sorbie in Ewes Kirkyard. Sorbie was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when it covered 329 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Glendivan, Howgill, Middle and Over Wrae, Staplegordon, lands of the Laird of Rengartha and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to eprtain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in
nial Blast’ of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. John Amos was there in at least 1794–97. John Amos was farmer there in at least 1794–97. John Amos was killed by the minister of Lawston according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was a servant at Liddel Bank (also written ‘Sorby’).

road winding between Sorbie and Staplegor-don. This was the main route through the lower Ewes valley to the Langholm area until Langholm became a separate parish in 1703. There was an old hawthorn tree at the junction of this road with the main Ewes road, which grew until sometime in the 19th century. It was said to be used as a meeting spot by the monks of Melrose (also written ‘Haas’, the word comes from Old Norse for a pass; the road is labelled on Crawford’s 1804

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. former name for lands in Lidddesdale, near to Sorbietrees. In the late 1100s Race Fitz Malger granted the whole ‘shaw’ there, and 1 acre next to the shaw, with pasture for 40 cows and their calves, 2 bulls, 10 oxen and 2 horses. This was together with half of the land of Shortbutts, which was also in the territory of Sorbie. The farm of Abbotshaws may recall this early land transfer (it was ‘Sourebi’ in the late 12th century).

the Southern Uplands

the Southern Uplands (\textit{thu-su-thurn-up-linz}) \textit{n.} range of hills near the Border, generally west of Hawick. It is sandwiched between the Southern Uplands Boundary Fault to the north and the Cheviot Hills of England to the south, reaching heights of 800 m and including the Southern Upland Way. The range is dominated by Ordovician and Silurian sedimentary rocks and includes the Carsphairn, Cheviot, Etrick, Lammmermuir, Lowther, Moffat, Moorfoot, Roxburgh and Tweedsmuir Hills – ‘Fold upon fold before me, the uplands stretch afar; A land so rich in romance, and song of love and war’ [WL].

the Southern Upland Way (\textit{thu-su-thurn-up-lind-wa}) \textit{n.} long distance walking route, opened in 1984, running from Portpatrick to Cockburnspath. It is 212 miles (340 km) in length, being the longest of Scotland’s long distance footpaths, and comes nearest to Hawick around Yair. It is sometimes jokingly referred to as the ‘Southern Upwards Way’.

the South Fencibles Regiment (\textit{thu-sowth-fen-si-bulz-re-jee-min}) \textit{n.} voluntary force set up Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1778, being embodied at Edinburgh. The Duke recruited from throughout the Scottish Borders. He is recorded being in Castleton on hiring day, for example. The regiment was disbanded at Dalkeith in 1783.

Soutra Aisle (\textit{soo-tra-I-yul}) \textit{n.} site of the Soutra mediaeval hospital, where a section of the Roman road Dere Street is also preserved. It is located off the A68 between Jedburgh and Dalkeith, the Aisle itself being a private burial vault for the Pringles, dated 1686 and built in part of the former Church.

Soutra Hospital (\textit{soo-tra-hos-pi-ul}) \textit{n.} a mediæval hospital, located on high ground about 40 miles from Hawick, just off the A68, also known as ‘Soltre’. It was founded by Malcolm IV in 1164 for the accommodation of travellers and pilgrims and the treatment of the sick and poor of the district. It was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A spring near there was known as the Trinity Well, and visited by many for its supposed healing powers. It was run with the granting of 300 estates, including a small-holding in Hawick, ‘Soutra Croft’. This is almost certainly the area that became known as the Trinity lands at the eastern end of town. The endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written ‘Soltre’ and variants).

Soutralands (\textit{soo-tra-lawdz}) \textit{n.} another name for Trinitylands, the part of Hawick given to Soutra Hospital. In 1507 they are referred to as ‘vulgariter vocatas ly Soltrelandis’ and in 1578 as ‘Sowtre landis in Hawik’.

Spalding (spawl-, spee-din) n. Charles ‘Chairlie Speedy’ (19th C.) manager and elder in Al-lars Kirk in the late 1800s. He could be the son of George and Agnes Stewart (born in Hawick in 1846, and who died in 1903) or the son of Robert and Jean (born in about 1837). Charles (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gal-lipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. George (b.1818/9) plasterer in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was at 8 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included: Agnes (b.c.1841); Charles (b.c.1845); Ellen (b.c.1847); and Jenimma (b.c.1850), Thomas (b.c.1853); Robert (b.c.1855); and Isabella (b.c.1860). James (19th C.) professional runner from Hawick. He recorded many wins in the period 1863–78. In one Common Riding Games, he won the 300 yards, 500 yards and half-mile races. He also won races in Middlesbrough, Bolton and Burnley. He is probably the son of William and Margaret born in 1845/6. John (1838–1918) son of William and Margaret Scott. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. He married Catherine Michie in 1863; she was daughter of Robert Michie and Christina Gillis. They emigrated to Canada, settling in Galt, where they were friends with fellow Teri Robert Murray. Their children were Christine, Helen, James, Catherine Wiekie and Mary. Robert (18th C.) resident in Harwood Mill. In the baptismal records his surname is recorded as ‘Speedy’ in 1790 and ‘Speeden’ in other years. This makes it clear that he was ‘Spalding’ and probably an ancestor of the family nicknamed ‘Speedy’ in Hawick in the 19th century. His children included: George (b.1790), Charles (b.1792), Jean (b.1792), Janet (b.1792) and Jean (again, b.1795). Robert (b.1810/1) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at ‘Head of Silver St’ and in 1851 was on ‘Kirkstyle Place’. By 1861 he was on Dovemount St. in Wilton. He married Jane Robson in Hawick in 1834. Their children included: Charles (b.1837); William (b.c.1840); and Isabella (b.c.1842). Robert (1855–1934) younger son of George and Agnes Stewart. He married Agnes Revel in 1876. He could be the ‘Robbie Speedy’ mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’. William (d.1430) cleric of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He had a dispensation from the Pope in 1429, that he could hold 2 benefices, despite being the illegitimate son of a priest and a married woman. He thereby became Rector of Collace and Dean of Dunblane. Later in 1429 he said he would demit Collace to be Rector of Lilliesleaf, which had also been requested by Nicholas Tunnock. He became Rector of Lilliesleaf, but died ‘in Curia’ before giving up Collace. William (b.1812/3) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Back Row, in 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and was in Mather’s Close in 1861. His Spence (spens) n. Alan (12th/13th C. listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as ‘Alano spens’. It seems likely that he was somehow associated with Lilliesleaf. Barry L. (1950/1–2017) son of William, he ran Spence’s Music Shop for more than half a century, taking over from his father in 1966. Starting at the height of Beatlemania, he was the main person from whom Terries bought hit records through the last decades of the 20th century and into the 21st. A blues fan himself, he stocked all kinds of music. He was a long-standing member of the Teviotdale Harriers. His wife is Margaret and their children Adrienne and Sandi. John of Condie (d.1573) son of James, he became a Lord Advocate in Scotland. He was also Queen’s Advocate to Mary, Queen of Scots, from 1555. He acted as one of the curators for the young Sir Walter Scott, whose father had been killed in 1552. In 1564/5 he signed the bond between the Scots and the Kers and also signed the further bond of 1568/9. Rev. John (19th C.) minister at Denholm Congregational Kirk 1844–46. In 1844 he married Ann Drew of Portobello. Rev. John Ryrie (b.1880) born in Helensburgh, son of James and Jane Ryrie. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1901 and B.D. in 1905, and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1905. He became assistant at South Leith before being ordained as minister at Southdean in 1907. He remained there until 1950. He married Janet, daughter of James Currie and their children included James (b.1911). Matthew (16th C.) farmer at Weens. His barn and yard are mentioned in the 1562 document regarding the Barony of Feu-Rule.

Spence’s (spen-seez) n. Spence’s Music Shop at 4 Buccleuch Street, which has been Hawick’s main supplier of recorded music, instruments and equipment from 1966. The business was started by William Spence in Drumlanrig Square in 1962 before moving to its familiar location. William’s son Barry retired in 2017.

Spender (spen-dur) n. Robert ‘Rab’ (17th C.) recorded on a gravestone in Abbotrule. His wife ‘Margat Turnbul’ was commemorated on a stone

s perk (s perk) n. a spark – ‘ee think ee’re a bright sperk div ee’?*, v. to spark – ‘And the roar of the pitte was in their mouthes, And its fire was sperkin i’ their eyyn’ [JTe], ‘…whaese heidmaister Robert Wood sperked off his lifelong interest in poetry’ [IWL], to issue, fly out, to sputter (as grease in cooking), to spatter.

s perkit (sper-ke’, -ki’) pp., poet. sparked – ‘The kerlyn’s eye it sperkyt wi’ joy, Her leathery chaftis grew wide …’ [JTe].

the Spetch (thu-speech) n. the Spetchman’s (or Spetchmond) Haugh, an area of the Teviot above the Laurie Bridge. For much of the 20th century it was a favourite area for bathing in the Summer – ‘Yer great-great-grannie’s great-greatgramnie Bathed in my Spetch in sunshine balmy … ’ [WP], ‘… Dookin in my Spetchman was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa’’ [IWL].

the Spetchman’s Haugh (thu-speech-minz-hawch) n. full name for the Spetch, being the flat land in the Park, on the south bank of the Teviot adjacent to the Laurie Bridge. The name is old, but not officially recorded until recently, hence its origin is obscure. It is written as ‘Spetchhaugh’ in a disposition of 1709, printed in the report on the division of Wilton Common in 1765. In 1709 the land was feued by Robert Langlands of that Illk to James Wight, weaver in Hawick. James Wight was served heir to his grandfather in 1751, who then sold the land to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick. The area was used in the period 1812–14 for morning roll call of the French prisoners of war in Hawick (although willows are a prominent riverside feature near there, there is no evidence to support suggestions that it comes from an old Scots word for ‘willow’, and it seems more likely to derive from a personal name like ‘Sペット’ which means a leather patch or a cobbler in some dialects; it was ‘Sペットin’hagh’ in 1765).

the Spetchman’s Sang (thu-speech-minz-sawng) n. poem written by David Hill, with the refrain ‘A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’. Music was written for it by Scocha in 2001.

Spetchmond Haugh (speech-mund-hawch) n. a variant on the old name for the Spetch.

spewin (spew-in) adj. extremely bad-tempered – ‘spewin o ill-naitur’.

the Spider Hoose (thu-spli-dur-hoos) n. name for an outbuilding at Branxholme. Tradition says that it was either named after one of the Duke of Buccleuch’s favourite horses, or after a story connected with Willie Craw climbing up to its rafters. It is recorded as ‘Spider’s House’ in the Ordnance Survey Name Book and map of 1859, to the west of the castle ruins.

spier see speir

Spiers (speerz) n. Rev. George pastor of Hawick Baptist Church around the 1950s. He was also minister at Shotts in Glasgow.

Spinnie Sike (spi-nee) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water near Netherraw. There are the remains of 2 stock enclosures and sheep stell to the south of the stream. There was once a blacksmith’s shop at ‘Spiniesbank-End’.

spinnel (spi-nul) n., arch. a spindle.

spinniers (spi-nee-urz) n., pl., arch. a woman’s cap with long lappets, a pinner – ‘… Aw’ll leave her ma eye-holes To be a squintin’-glass To set her spinners stright, For they often stude aglei’ [JSB].

Spinniesbank (spi-nee-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map just to the north of Langhaugh, and must have been located on Spinnie Sike.

spinnin (spi-nin) n. the industry of spinning yarn in Hawick grew up in the early 18th century and became fully established in the 1750s. Women would spin on the ‘muckle wheel’ and the yarn was carried on horseback to places such as Kendall, Boroughbridge (Yorkshire) and Stirling. The spinning wheel held a prominent place in households into the early 19th century, a wheel being the main gift for a new bride. The two main types were the ‘little wheel’ and the ‘meikle (or muckle) wheel’, an example of the former from Crumhaughhill being in the Museum. In 1733 a spinning school was opened in Hawick and in 1734 a spinning mistress was hired from England to take charge of the school, with some funding from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures. The first factor for the school was Robert Howison, and the instigation for founding it came from Douglas of Cavers, as well as Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, John Chisholme of Stirches and some other local gentlemen. Weaving appears to have been added about 1736. The industry really took off when machinery was first introduced around 1798. In about 1850 it was estimated that yarn-spinning supplied about 1300 looms in Hawick.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-ne) n. a spinning machine that allowed multiple spindles to be turned using a single wheel, invented by James Hargreaves in Lancashire in 1764, and named after his daughter. It was in use in Hawick from the late 18th century until the mid-19th. In 1816 there were as many as 100 hand spinning jennies in the town. It was eventually replaced by the ‘spinning mule’, invented by Samuel Crompton; with the invention of an automated version in 1825 it was soon in wide use in Hawick’s spinning mills.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-ne) n., arch. a cranefly, ‘daddy longlegs’, a toy made with a piece of pipe-stem and a match, which spins by twisting a thread attached to the middle of the match and threaded through the pipe-stem (cf. jenny-spinner).

spin nelle (spi-nil) n. a spindle – ‘And the yairs whussle throwe the hacks Frae spinnelle heavy banks’ [WL].

the Spion Kop (thu-spi-in-kop) n. former drinking club based on the Loan from about 1890 (named after the mountain in Natal, which was the scene of a defeat of the British by the Boers in 1900, and Dutch for ‘Look-out Hill’).

spitefie *(spi’-fi) adj. spiteful – ‘...Her mither’s choice, to be fair to the lass, For a spitefu’ dame was Herodias’ [WL] (also written ‘spitefu’).

spite o *(spit-o) prep., arch. in spite of – ‘...To drive care awa, spite o’ frost, wund, an’ snaw, The young fellows roond gathert there, man’ [JoHa], ‘Yet spite o’ their snortin’ an’ snuffin’ ...’ [JoHa], ‘...Her mither’s choice, to ‘Yet, spite o’ needle, yarn an’ clout, His waullit hair was keekin’ out’ [RDW].

spither *(spi-thur) n., poet. empty speech, frothy talk – ‘...Or some auld aunt’s loquacious swhitter O’ with and gle’’, ‘Wha valu’d not your college spither, A rigmarie’ [JR] (this word is obscure).

Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal (spi-ul) n. fishing village south of Berwick that became a seaside resort town in the 19th century – ‘Thae browt ‘im a mount for heiz got the smittal Juist half the size o’ a donkey at Spittal’ [MB]. Also a local name for Spittal-on-Rule and other former hospitals, e.g. Smallholm Spittal.

Spittal Brig (spi-ul-brig) n. bridge at Spittal-on-Rule, carrying the A698 across the Rule Water. The original bridge was built in 1748 by the Douglasses of Cavers and stands just to the north of the modern bridge.

Spittalflatt (spi-ul-flaw’) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Spittelflatt’ in 1541. It is stated to be valued at 6 merks and at that time vacant, but formerly tenanted along with the lands of Flatt. It is presumably adjacent to Flatt. The connection is to a hospital is unclear, but just to the north is Abbotsheaws.

Spittal Haugh (spi-ul-hawch) n. former farm near Spittal-on-Rule. It was a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate.

Spittal Mill (spi-ul-mil) n. corn mill of the 17th century in Spittal-on-Rule, and name of the associated farm. The old Teind Barn there was presumably connected with the mill. James Scott was miller there in 1694. In the 18th century the lands of Spittal-on-Rule were separated between the Murrays, Veitches and Bunyans, with the Veitches being tenants of the mill lands. John Veitch is recorded as tenant in 1792–97, Mark Turnbull in 1837, James Turnbull in 1852 and James Ingles in the 1860s.

Spittal-on-Rule (spi-ul-on-rool) n. former village in the easternmost part of Cavers Parish, near the confluence of the Teviot and the Rule, between Denholm and Bedrule, off the A698. Rich in history, it is now little more than a farm. A leper hospital was probably founded there before 1425, with an attached chapel, possibly dedicated to St. Mary. The location of the chapel may have been the same as the later teind barn, or very close. In the chapel in 1425/6 there was a meeting of Turnbulls, Scotts and others to investigate the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto (since lepers were legally forbidden from holding lands). John Davidson in Minto was recorded in 1493 having stolen 100 ells of woolen cloth from there. George Thomson was recorded there in 1502 (when he had 2 pigs stolen) and John Scott was also recorded there in the same year. The patronage of the church there was granted to James Douglas of Cavers in 1508 and the ‘advocation and gift of the kirk of Spitaill’ was listed among... the rights inherited by the Barons of Cavers in 1509. The small graveyard was still used in the 18th century, and the vestiges of a former orchard were still clear in the early 20th century. At the nearby ‘Dead Haugh’ the Turnbolls are supposed to have begged the King’s forgiveness (with ropes around their necks) in 1494, instead every tenth man being hanged. The town was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, probably destroying the hospital and chapel. However, the ‘advocation of the church’ was still mentioned in the 1558 Douglas of Cavers charter. In 1554 an acre of land ‘in terris hospitlis de Rowle, super lie Harparhill’ was granted to Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, along with the advowson of the chapel of St. Mary at Caerlenrig (perhaps suggesting a connection between the chapel at Caerlenrig and the one associated with the leper hospital at Spittal). The Mains of Spittal-on-Rule was sold by William Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of Primside in 1563. The lands were farmed by Patrick Storie in 1605 and Richard Brown in 1610. Robert and John Wright were tenants there in 1642. John Lindsay was tenant there in 1684 when declared as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. 9 people were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam Leyden was there in 1721, Alexander Gowk in 1726, John Bunyan in 1727–30, John Veitch in 1727, James Bunyan in 1728, William Veitch in 1729–30 and William Douglas in 1733–44. John Fairbairn was there in 1781 and Thomas Rutherford and Archibald Whillans were tenants in 1799. Thomas Rutherford, John Murray, John Henry and Archibald Whillans were living there in 1801. There were 3 tenants in the 18th century, the Murrays, Veitches and Bunyans, but the 3 holdings were combined in 1807. Thomas Bunyan was there in 1795. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone is recorded as tenant in 1797. Robert Middlemas was a servant there in 1797 and George Veitch in 1799. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and 1851, James Turnbull in 1861 and William G. Turnbull in 1868. It was purchased by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter from Mrs. Palmer-Douglas in 1913. The farm was a major local supplier of Leicester rams in the 19th century. Several ruins can still be found here, including the Teind Barn, once the oldest building in the parish, and an ancient stone grave, found in a small knoll near the modern farmhouse. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows the location of the site of the chapel and old graveyard. The Kirkyard (or ‘Leper’) Well was said to possess healing powers, and the last Denholm witch was buried here. The hospital that gave its name to the location was possibly for lepers and maintained by monks from one of the nearby abbeys. A road bridge crosses the Rule Water nearby, with the adjacent arch of an older structure. The village was the location for a toll on the road between Denholm and Jedburgh; the Toll House at the road bend has had its windows bricked up and painted over with ‘false’ windows. Often locally called just ‘Spittal’ (and spelled various ways in the past, such as ‘Spittle’ and ‘Spittalrule’; the origin of the name is ‘hospital by the river Rule’, with ‘spital’ being a Middle Scots word for a hospital, usually connected with a monastery; there are many places in Scotland and northern England that are also called ‘Spittal’ for the same reason; the name first occurs as ‘spittale de roull’ in 1493, then ‘villa de spittale’ in 1502, ‘Spittale’ in 1508, ‘Spittail’ in 1509, ‘Ecclesia de Spittale’ in 1511, ‘Rewle Spittel’ in 1545, ‘the Spytull, Roull’ in 1548/9, ‘Spittalroull’ in 1558, ‘Sptyall of Roule’ in 1563, ‘Spitroull’ in 1576/7, ‘Rowll Spittell’ in 1605, ‘Rowle-spittell’ in 1610, ‘Rowllspittle’ in 1619, ‘Spittle of Rule’ in 1649, ‘Spitill’ in 1694 and ‘Spittal’ in 1801; it is marked ‘Spittel of Roull’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Spittell’ and ‘Spittel of Row’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Spittell’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Spittal Plantin (spi’-ul-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation near Spittal-on-Rule. It is unclear whether this referred to a wood near Spittal Ford, by the Teviot, or a wood by the Rule. The linen weavers of the Denholm area used to soak their lint near here.

Spittalrule see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Toll (spi’-ul-tol) n. former toll-house at Spittal-on-Rule, on the corner of the A698, with the road to the north-west formerly leading to the ford. The building is well known for its pretend painted windows. It is also known as ‘The Lucky Hoose’.

Spittaltoon (spi’-ul-toon) n. lost place name in Liddesdale, once part of the lands of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Speteltoon’ and worth 4 pounds in a rental roll of c.1376.

Spittal Toor (spi’-ul-toor) n. Spittal Tower, modern farmhouse on the site of a former fortified house, west of Bedrule, up the Tower Burn from Spittal-on-Rule. The former farm, often just called ‘Tour’, was owned by Turnbolls in the 16th century. Gavin Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ was recorded in 1551 and James Turnbull ‘of the Tour’ in 1579/80. It was valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663. The ‘Mains of Tour’ (perhaps the same as the Mains of Spittal) was valued at £560 in 1643 and at that time owned by Douglas of Bon-jedward. By 1678 the former lands of Turnbull of Toor were then in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. The farm was tenanted by the Mur-rays in the 18th century, ancestors of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. John Murray was a gardener living there in 1715. [blank] Clerk was there in 1742 and Robert Cavers in 1778. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William John-stone, younger, was recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Charles Scott was a servant there in the same year. Robert Bain was a servant there in 1799 and in 1801 William Tait and Samuel Por-teous were servants and Thomas Oliver a shep-herd. Robert Barrie was farmer there in 1851 and 1861. It was combined into a larger farm with Spittal-on-Rule in the 19th century (it was ‘touris of Roulwode’ in 1622 and ‘Tower’ in 1715; it appears on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and Gordon’s c.1650 map simply as ‘Tour’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Tourr’).

Spottiswood (spots-wud) n. Alicia Anne (1810–1900) eldest daughter of John of Spottiswood, near Lauder. In 1836 she married Lord John Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 2nd son of Charles, 4th Duke of Buccleuch, who left her a widow in 1860. In 1870 she succeeded her brother as heir to the family estate and adopted the surname Scott-Spottoswood. She was said to have had a large collection of antiquities and to have endeavoured to save many of the ruins of Border peels. She wrote poetry and is famous for composing the tune for ‘Annie Laurie’ as well as other songs. David of that Ilk (d.c.1550) son of William and Elizabeth Hoppringle. He was probably the ‘Spottisword of that ilk’ who was listed in 1549 among the associates of Ker of Cessford who were accused by Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholm of raiding and burning his farms at Goldielands and on the Borthwick. He married Katherine Pringle and Jane Brownfield of Hardacres. He was succeeded by his son Ninian. James (15th C.) rector of the church of Rankelburn, listed in 1453 on a roll of bachelors entered at the newly founded University of Glasgow. He is ‘rector ecclesiae de Rankelburn’. James of that Ilk (15th C.) son of Henry. He was listed on a retour of inquest for lands of the Swintons in 1464. He, as well as his sons James and Adam and brother George, are recorded at the Justice-aire held in Lauder in 1493. He married a daughter of Sir Adam Johnstone of that Ilk. He was succeeded by William, who died at Flodden. John (1510–85) son of William of Spottiswood, who was killed at Flodden. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1536, went to London, returned to Scotland in 1543, became a Reformer and was appointed Superintendent of Lothian. He was recorded in 1558 as Rector of Calder, in a document along with John Sandilands, Rector of Hawick; he has been incorrectly named as Rector of Hawick at this time. He was appointed as minister of Calder in 1560. He was killed at Flodden). He married Beatrix, daughter of Patrick Crichton of Lugton and Gilmerton and had children: John, who succeeded as minister of mid-Calder; James, Bishop of Clogher in Ireland; William; Rachel, who married James Tennent of Linhouse; and Judith. John (1565–1639) son of John, who was minister of Calder, and grandson of William of that Ilk, who was killed at Flodden. He went to Glasgow University at age 12 or 13, graduated in 1581, and became a favourite churchman of James VI. He was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1603 and translated to St. Andrews in 1615. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since he granted a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headsaw, Crawknowe and Clews in 1606 and another to John Turnbull for the lands of Barnhills in 1607. He was Moderator at the Assembly that abolished the presbytery. He later became Primate of Scotland and Lord Chancellor of Scotland. He crowned Charles I at Holyrood in 1633. He objected to the Covenant, escaped to England, was deposed and died in London, being buried in Westminster Abbey. He married Rachel, daughter of David Lindsay, Bishop of Ross. His children were: Anne, Sir John; and Sir Robert. Rev. Robert (c.1634–1696) graduating from Glasgow University in 1654, he became minister at Temple in 1663 and was translated to Crichton in 1676. He was deprived in 1681 for not taking the Test. However, he was translated to Abbotsrule in 1687, but may only have been minister there for a very short time. He seems to have been a Presbyterian minister, who survived through the Episcopalian years past the Revolution. His wife’s name is not recorded, but their children included: Jean; Alexander, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1677; Robert, who also became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, in 1681; and Elizabeth, who was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1696 (spelled ‘Spitiswode’, ‘Spotswood’). He was deprived in 1681 for not taking the Test.

Terence lived there with his family in the 1770s and brought in the dyker ‘nie’ [WP] (also spelled ‘spraughle’). Springbank (spring-bawngk) n. house at the foot of Dickson Street, built in the early part of the 19th century. It was the home of 2 generations of hosiery manufacturer Alexander Laings. It took its name from a spring coming down from a former pond in Dickson Street.

Springbank Clinic (spring-bawngk-kli-neck) n. former centre for infant health, based at Springbank House, next to the Haig Maternity Home on Princes Street. The house was acquired in 1921 as a child welfare centre and home for the ‘Jubilee’ district nurses, with the clinic built as a 2-storey addition in 1929/30. Over the years it was used for many community health purposes, e.g. family planning, well-woman services and various voluntary groups. Its last such use was as offices for the Borders Health Board. It was empty after 1989 and sold in the mid-1990s as private housing.

sprot (sprö) n., arch. the withered stump of a plant – ‘Sprot. The end of a grain, or branch blown from a growing tree, in consequence of high winds, Roxb.’ [JoJ], a chip, wood shaving (see also speret).

Sprot (sprö) n. Edward William of Drygrange (1846–98) younger surviving son of Mark. He presented a bell to Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98). Frances (1808–1902) sister of Mark of Riddell. In 1883 she gave money to built 6 cottages for ‘friendless and deserving widows or daughters of clergymen, and other ladies who had formerly been in better circumstances’. John (18th C.) recorded at Woll on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at ‘New Woll’ in 1794. It is unclear if he was connected with the later Sprots of Riddell. John (1775–1817) son of James and Frances Blair, descended from merchants in Edinburgh. He lived at King’s Road. Clapham Park, London. He made his fortune in the East India Company and provided for his 2 sons (who may have been minors when he died). In 1801 he married his cousin Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield. Their children (baptised in Holborn, Clapham and Streatham) included: Mark (1802–81), who became owner of Riddell; James (b.1804), who (with an amusing coincidence of names) bought the Spott estate near Dunbar; Marion (b.1805); Janet (b.1809); Mary (1811–46), who married Sir William Maxwell; and Caroline Isabella (1817–57), who married Capt. William Fordyce Blair. It is unclear whether he purchased Riddell before his death, or whether that was done by his executors on behalf of his son Mark. Col. John (1830–1907) son of Mark. He was educated in England and Germany and entered the 83rd Regiment as ensign in 1848. He served in Ireland and then for many years in India, where he was also put in charge of public works, directing the building of a road. He was Lieutenant during the Indian Mutiny of 1858. He returned to Britain in 1860, being in charge of the depot at Chatham and serving again in Ireland and in Gibraltar. He took leave from the army spending 18 months touring Europe, but then resumed duties as Major of the 91st Highlanders. He was then appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Scotland. He is said to have been the first person to recognise the potential military uses for the bicycle. He retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1885, having succeeded to the Riddell estate in 1883. Despite reaching a higher rank, he is often referred to as ‘Colonel’, this being from his position as honorary colonel of Princess Louise’s Argyll and Southern Highlanders. He extended the main farmhouse at Riddell in 1898. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1885. In 1869 he married Georgina Mary, daughter of H.E. Surtees of Redworth Hall.
and The Grove, county Durham. In 1878 he secondly married Cecilia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. W.B. Doveton of Corston. In 1886 he thirdly married Charlotte Gertrude, daughter of W.T. Cole of Boscastle, Cornwall (whose mother was Anne Rutherford, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Lessuden and cousin of Sir Walter Scott). His children included: Cecilia Mary Dorothea (1880–1964), who married Patrick Keith Murray; John Mark Francis (1881–1946); Col. Alexander William Ramsay (b.1883); Cecil George; Edward Walter Hearle (1887–1975); Gertrude Gladys Violet (1888–1966); and Jack Hugh Stewart (b.1894). He wrote ‘History of the family of Sprot and the ancient mansion and estate of Riddell’. He also wrote several military pamphlets. Maj. John Mark Francis ‘Mark’ of Muscleee and Riddell (1881–1946) son of Lt.-Gen. John. He gained the rank of Major in the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (or ‘Greys’). He presented his regiment with the Sprot Cup in 1906 for an annual steeple chase race. He was President of the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society. He served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Meloria, daughter of Sir John Adam Hay. His eldest son was John, who succeeded. Their daughter Cecilia Doriel married Sir William Whitelaw and became Viscountess Whitelaw. Maj. John ‘Jock’ (1910–2010) of Riddell, born at old Riddell House. His sister was the Viscountess Whitelaw. He was educated in Buckinghamshire and Kent and joined the British Linen Bank in Edinburgh, later working for the International Paint and Compositions Company in London. He served with the Territorial Army and during WWII was a lieutenant at Drem Airfield, an intelligence officer in St. Boswells, a captain in charge of Italian prisoners of war in Galashiels and then was with special forces in India. He was stationed in Galashiels when Riddell House burned down in 1943. After the War he modernised the Riddell estate, developing the woodland in particular. He also served on Roxburghshire County Council. He was on the Royal Company of Archers and was an elder of Lilliesleaf Kirk. He also chaired the National Farmers' Union in Selkirkshire, the Co-operative Forestry Society and the Scottish Woodland Owners’ Association. He was awarded the M.B.E. for his role as Vice-Chairman of the Electricity Consultative Council for the South of Scotland. He became interested in the history and the history of the Riddell estate. He moved to Clerklands in 1987. He lived to his 100th year and was buried at Lilliesleaf. An autobiography was published on his 98th birthday. The estate was transferred to his nephew Andrew Grant. Mark (1802–83) eldest son of John and Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield, he was born in London, in the same house as Benjamin Disraeli. His father spent time in India and made his fortune in London. His great uncle Mark, was a financier who was involved with founding the London Stock Exchange. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. His father died in 1817, and inheriting a fortune, he abandoned plans to enter the army (with an ensign’s commission purchased for him in the 90th Regiment of Foot). The Riddell estate was purchased in 1823, while he was still a minor. He was listed as proprietor in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1826 he built an estate office there, which is now the main farmhouse. He had the lands drained and planted and built several farmhouses at that time. Letters relating to an agreement he had over the march dykes at Riddell are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1848 he was appointed as a Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and he also served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. In 1851 he was farmer of 1705 acres, employing 12 men and 26 women and had 9 servants living with his family in Riddell House. He was listed at Riddell in Slater’s 1852 directory. In about 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of the Barony of Riddell, as well as Friarshaw, Newhouse and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish; he also held some of Midlem, the superiority of lands in Ashkirk and Bowden Parishes, as well as Lilliesleaf. In 1829 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Shewell of Sutton Park, Surrey. His sons were: John (1830–1907), who succeeded; Capt. 1820s, and after he quoted some lines of poetry the visitor confessed that he was the author, William Knox, whereupon he was entertained inside the house. Robert (c.1825–90) born in Hawick, son of music teacher James, he apparently left Scotland in 1850 after an argument with his father. He became a preacher, living for a while in Chester and travelling around the north of England. He married Elizabeth Warburton and later Eliza Hayton Davis, and his sons were Robert Kirk and James H. Following a famous court case in 1867, in which several Union men were convicted of bombings and other ‘rattening’ crimes, he interceded to try to get one of the men his old job back. He is buried at Huddersfield. Samuel ‘Sam’ (1820/21–1894) a native of Berwick, he went to Nottingham to learn the stocking-making trade, then moved to Hawick, where he was Sunday School Teacher, Organist and Precentor at Wilton Church from 1855. In that same year he led the formation of the Saxhorn Band, for which he was the first bandmaster. His regular job was a woollen frameworker. He was living at 12 O’Connell Street (probably formerly No. 4) in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. He married Sarah Sales and their children included: James; John; Robert; Alexander (‘Electrician’); Ann (b.1856); Agnes (b.1858); Elizabeth (b.1860); Sarah (b.1862); Sarah Elizabeth (b.1864); George Frederick Handel (b.1867); and Charlotte (b.1869) (written ‘Stenten’ and variants).

Stalker (staw-kur) n. Rev. James (d.1816) son of John of Edinkillie, he graduated from King’s College, Aberdeen in 1777. His brother Donald was schoolmaster at Rothiemurchus. He was licensed by Channonry Presbytery in 1784 and in 1785 was ordained as assistant minister at Fort George. Here he was Chaplain to the Royal Forces, leading to some service that earned the gratitude of his Patron, William, Duke of Roxburghe (then Lord Bellenden). He was also made a Burgess of the Burgh of Nairn in 1793. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by the Duke of Roxburghe in 1804 and admitted there the following year. However, this was against the wishes of some of the Lilliesleaf parishioners, who wanted the previous incumbent’s son John Campbell as their minister. This disagreement led to about 70 families seceding to form a Relief congregation, which built the secession church in the village. Despite a rocky start, he stayed at Lilliesleaf until his death, and remained unmarried. A letter to his brother describes in detail the circumstances of his presentation to Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He died at the Manse.

Standhill (stauwd-nil) n. site for sidings on the Waverley Line, just north of Hassendean, in Ancrum Parish. The farm (or at least its 2 parts) was once owned by the Kers. David Murray was recorded there in 1494/5, when sheep, cattle, horses and other goods were pillaged from there, as well as the farm being burned. George Turnbull of Standhill is recorded in 1553/4. John Hodge was there in 1580. Hector Turnbull had a charter of ‘feu farm’ of the ‘2 1/2 lands’ of Standhill in 1610 and it was held by the Turnbuls of Knowe, as recorded in 1631 and in 1660 and existing in the National Archives. John Turnbull ‘in Standhill’ had his lands valued at £120 in 1643; he is also recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. It appears to have passed to the Riddells about 1664. However, Turnbull of Standhill is supposed to have been the leader of the Covenanters who besieged and broke into Drumlanrig’s Tower in 1679. It later formed part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto; there are deeds among the Minto papers dating from 1610 to 1806. ‘Captain Turnbull’ paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. In 1779 it is recorded that the lands were owned by ‘Mrs Turnbull and Mrs Stenhouse’ and in 1788 by Capt. Stenhouse. John Amos was farmer there in 1794–97. William Jaffrae and James King were living there in 1801. The Minto estates sold it in 1951 (it is ‘Standhill’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was ‘standhil’ in 1494/5).

(stawnd-doot) n., poet. to be in opposition, rebel – '... Nae stoutlier stude out for their laird, Nor did the lads o' Liddesdale' [CPM].

St. Andrew
(sin'-awn-droo) n. patron saint of Scotland, who was crucified on a diagonal cross in Patras, some of his bones later finding their way to Scotland. The saltire was adopted as the flag of Scotland, according to legend because it appeared against the blue sky when King Angus prayed to St. Andrew during a battle in 832 C.E. It is reputedly the oldest national flag in Europe. The same saltire has made its way onto the Hawick flag.

St. Andrew's Convent
(sin'-awn-drooz-kon-vin') n. name of the former convent and nursing home at Stitches House.

St. Andrew's Kirk
(sin'-awn-drooz-kirk) n. St. Andrew's Church, founded as a branch of the Free Church in 1866, to serve the north end of town and also Wilton. Originally called 'Wilton Free Kirk', it was founded largely through the efforts of Thomas Laidlaw and George Hobkirk, with the first organisational meeting taking place in Peter Laidlaw's warehouse in March 1866. The congregation started with 115 members from Hawick Free Kirk, first meeting in the Exchange Hall until the church was built on North Bridge Street in 1868/9, and then named St. Andrew's. Its gothic-style design was by Glasgow-based architect J.T. Rochead, and it had a spire reaching a height of 103 feet. It was constructed by local building firm George Tait. The church could accommodate about 200 for Sunday School and other activities. The church manse was built off Weensland Road in 1890. A church organ was added in 1904 and in 1911 there were major alterations (designed by J.P. Alison), with the addition of a church hall. A serious fire in 1922 resulted in major repairs and a closure of 18 months, during which time the congregation joined St. John's. The church was demolished in 1959/60, with congregation becoming part of Trinity Church. The site was used as a petrol station and later a car wash. A roll of the ministers is: Duncan Stewart 1868–1908; William Farquharson 1908–14; James A. T. Kennedy 1915–21; John Mowat 1922–30; George Sutherland 1930–40; Neil D. Craig 1941–46; John S. Miller 1954–59.

St. Andrew’s Nursin Haim
(sin'-awn-drooz-nur-sin-hâm) n. private nursing home in Stirches, located in the old home of John Blenk-horn. It cares for about 50 elderly patients, is run by Augustinian Sisters and has its own chapel. It is also known as 'Stirches Hoose' and 'the Convent'.

St. Andrew’s Place

(stân) n. a stone, stone – ‘A ye wha pry deep into nature In yirth, an' stane, an' a' sic matter ...’ [JoHa], 'My stanes the steps o' those hae borne, By which they gloried to be worn' [AD], 'Happy sal the world be now to tak's an' devals thy wee anes agayne the stanes' [HSR], ‘... an’ he rowet ane grit stane til the dor o’ the sepulchre, an’ gaed his waye' [HSR], ‘I couldna’ thole the cauld hearth stane ...’ [JEDM], ‘Oh! stane-dumb (stân-dum) adj., arch. completely silent – ‘To sit stane-dumb ...’ [JoHa].
Stanefield

Stanefield (stân-feeld) n. area around the Stonefield Place housing scheme, and the former Stonefield Mill, between Liddesdale Road and the old railway line.

Stanefield Centre (stân-feeld-sen'-ur) n. club for old people living in the area around the Stanefield housing development, converted from a building on the old brewery site. It has more recently been used as a nursery.

Stanefield Cottage (stân-feeld-ko'-eej) n. former house attached at the north end of the Rockvale block on Lynnwood Road, reached over the mill lade by a foot bridge. The block was also referred to as ‘Stonefield Cottages’ and perhaps also ‘Slitrig Cottages’.

Stanefield Mill (stân-feeld-mil) n. factory on the eastern side of Lynnwood Road, demolished in 1973. It originally received water power via the Slitrig Dam. It was purchased by William Elliot in 1850. It was occupied by Laing & Irving in the mid-19th century, then Noble & Richardson for a few years (from about 1871), and later Grieve & Laidlaw and J. & R. Macnee, becoming a spinning factory around the 1920s. A painting showing the mill was painted by J.F. Pollocq in about 1890 and is in the Museum (also written as ‘Mills’).

Stanefield Place (stân-feeld-plis) n. Stonefield Place, housing aimed at elder people, built on the sites of the former Buccleuch Nurseries and Stonefield Mill in 1971–73. A footpath leads there to the old railway line. The housing underwent extensive redevelopment in 2015/6.

Stanegarthside (stân-girth-sid, -gårt-) n. mansion house above the banks of the Liddel Water on the English side. It was originally built as a tower house perhaps around the 13th century, with wings added in 1682. It was long the seat of the Forsters. William Glendinning was at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

Stanegarthside (stân-garth-side, -garth-) n. mansion house above the banks of the Liddel Water on the English side. It was originally built as a tower house perhaps around the 13th century, with wings added in 1682. It was long the seat of the Forsters. William Glendinning was at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

Staneholm (stân-hôm) n. former farmstead in the Upper Teviot valley. It was part of the larger set of lands called Ringwoodfield when leased from Melrose Abbey by the Scots of Branxholme in 1500. It is probably the land called ‘Grangja alias Stanyhetoun’ which ‘Sym Scot of Fernill and Arche Elliot of Gorumbery’ rented from Melrose Abbey in about 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows it as ‘Stonyhelme’ south of Southdeanrig on the ‘Cairtann’ Burn. The precise location is uncertain, but a connection with Staney Hill, just east of Southdean Rig, seems likely.

the Stane o Destiny (thi-stân-o-des-ti-nee) n. stone on which Kings of Scotland were historically crowned at Scone, which was removed and taken to Westminster by Edward I in 1296, to be fitted into a chair used to crown subsequent English sovereigns. Although just a rather unremarkable oblong of locally-mined sandstone, the object was held to have mystical properties, with legends claiming it came from ancient Ireland or even the Middle East. In 1950 a group of 4 Scottish students removed the stone from the Abbey and ‘repatriated’ it to Scotland. With major Border crossings closed the group smuggled the stone by car up the A7 and there is a rumour that it spent the night in Hawick (perhaps in Bob and Nessie Oliver’s shop on Drumlanrig Square) on its way north. Certainly one of those responsible, Alan Stuart, had a granny who lived in Hawick at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

stane pirrie (stân-pi-ree) adj. daft, feather-brained – ‘Stane pirrie (for daft) derived, I think from Pirrie’s stone ginger in Hawick’ [HAST1958] (probably influenced by the adjective pirry, with a play on the name of the manufacturer Alex Pirrie).

Stanesden Burn (stânz-din-burn) n. former name for a stream near Hermitage Castle. It is mentioned in a description of the lands of ‘Merchinlee’ granted to monks of Kelso, which formed the site of the original hermitage. The description mentions a ford crossing the Hermitage Water where this stream joined. It has been suggested that it is the same as what is now called the Roughley Burn.

Stanesiel (stân-shiel) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to the Stanesiel Burn. This is probably the ‘Stanesiel’d and ‘Stanesield’ where John Nixon and Jenkin Nixon were in 1544. It was ‘Stanny sheile’ and ‘Stain sheile’ in 1590 and ‘Stanesheale’ in 1595 when Hob Elliot was there. John Crozier was also recorded at ‘Stanyesheile’ in 1590.
Staneshiel Burn

Staneshiel Burn (stān-sheel-burn) n. stream in the upper Liddel valley. It rises near Bloodbush Edge and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water between Dinlabyre and Steeleroadd-end. There are remains of cottages at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’. A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Staneshielburnfoot’ where labourer Walter Hislop was living in 1835.

staney (stā-nee) adj. stoney – ‘Whan thair jujudges ar overthrown in stanie pieces …’ [HSR], ‘…an the gray waas o Fatlips keeket oot threethween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS], ‘A flock mattress wi’ muckle lumps That felt like staney rocks’ [AY] (also written ‘stanie’).

the Staney Brae (θu-stā-nee-brā) n. alleyway from Allars Bank to Allars Crescent, with houses being part of Allars Bank. It was formerly part of Backdangate, and presumably named for its roughness. An anvil at the bottom marks the site of the old blacksmiths.

Staney Burn (stā-nee-burn) n. former name for Honey Burn.

Staney Cleuch (stā-nee-kloog) n. small stream that rises to the north of Skelfhill farm and joins the Allan Water. There are signs of cord rig around it.

Staneyford Moss (stā-nee-fōrd-mos) n. Stonyford Moss, boggy area on the former Synton estate, located to the left of the A7 just before Synton Loch. It was one of 4 boggy areas drained by the Laird of Synton around 1800, and described as covering 40 acres. During the drainage, old oaks and red deer antlers were uncovered. There are traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the south. It seems likely (although perhaps on the wrong side of the Ale Water) that this is the ‘Staniford’ listed in about 1170 in a charter describing the perambulation of the pasture lands granted toOrm of Ashkirk.

Staneygill (stā-nee-giil) n. lands in Liddesdale, to the north of Whisgills. In a rental roll of c.1376 ‘Staneygill’ was valued at 5 shillings. In a 1541 roll ‘Staneygill’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), and valued at 5 shillings. In 1632 it is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as well as among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Staneygill Rig lies to the east of Tinnis Hill, with the Staneygill Burn running roughly southwards to meet the Tinnis Burn near Redmoss. Where Black grain and Dow Sike join the Staneygill Burn is a sheepfold built over the remains of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. Jeffrey suggested this was ‘Paddingburn Ha’, but that seems more likely to be much further north, near Paddington Sike. The remains of the tower here are about 7 m by 5 m, with the east wall missing entirely. Further upstream, on the west bank, is a platform suggestive of the location of an illicit still (it is ‘Stannygill’ and ‘Stanygill’ in 1632; ‘Stainygill’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Staneyhaugh (stā-nee-hawχ) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water (it is ‘Stanyhalch’ around 1376; it could be connected with Staneshiel).

Staney Hill (stā-nee-hiil) n. hill to the south-west of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 335 m. It may be related to the lands of ‘Staneholm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but ‘Staney Hill’ today).

Staney Meadi (stā-nee-medi) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Stoney Meadow’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Staney Stewart (stā-nee-stew-ur’) n. dyke builder in John Ballantyne’s song ‘ Pawkie Paiterson’. His first name is unknown, but one possibility is Andrew Stewart, and agricultural labourer living at Crow Byres in 1841, about the time the song was written – ‘And as for Stoney Stewart, He’s often scarce o’ stanes, And for to mend his aulf fail dykes Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’ [JSB].

stang (stawng) n., arch. a sting, wound, stab or pain made by a sting – ‘Her words nae stang was cairry’ [WL].

Stanger (stān-jur) n. Tony (1967–) rugby winger, he attended Wilton an Hawick High and played for the school teams, as well as the Wanderers and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. while still in high school in 1985/6. He later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Grenoble and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner. He also played for the British Lions in 1997. He married Bid and settled in New Zealand, running a company that helps to develop coaching skills – ‘Come and tell me, Tony Stanger, have your feet Stanishope (sta-nis-höp) n. farmstead in Cavers parish, to the north of the Maidens, reached via a track from Shankend. The Catrail passes near here. It is probably the ‘Scaene-hushope’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. It is listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in a charter of 1511. There are further deeds from 1614, 1624 and 1625 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. An account of Roxburghshire written in 1649 gives it as the source of the Slitrig Water. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was listed among the lands of Elliott of Stobs in 1678. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. William Little was shepherd there in 1861 and R. Elliot was there in 1868. The area is under forestry plantation ‘Stoniehome’ in 1687 and ‘Stainhope’ in 1698).

1673, taking over the position from Patrick Scott of Langshaw. He was a Colonel in the Parliamentary army. He was murdered near Haddington by his son Philip, apparently because he disinherited him. The curious story involves the body apparently bleeding at the son’s touch, this being considered as a divine sign of his guilt, and after the son was hanged his tongue was cut out for cursing his father, his hand cut off for patricide and his severed head put on public display. William (20th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1947 he was the last ‘ploughman’ recorded in baptismal entries in the parish. This was only 2 years after the first record of a ‘tractor man’.

\textbf{stap} (stapw) v., arch. to stop up (a hole), block, stuff, choke, fill up – ‘Drawe owt alsua the speer, an’ stap the waye agayne thame that persikute me . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . thaye ar like the deef eddart that stappis hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Hawick does not use ti stap for to stop except in the expression ti stap up = to choke up or to cram’ [ECS], ‘The brander’s stapleet up!’ [ECS], ‘. . . \textbf{Staplegordon} (stů-pul-gor-din) n. village a few miles north of Langholm and name for the surrounding parish. The settlement was formerly of greater importance and was once a burgh in its own right; however, in the 17th century, it was effectively replaced by Langholm as the main town in the area. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament in 1672. It was united with Wauchope in 1702 and its name changed to Langholm Parish. The last parish minister died in 1702, but there is still an old graveyard there, the resting place of former barons, who were de Cunigburgs, Douglases, Glendinnings, and Littles (it is ‘Stabilgortoun’ in 1324, ‘Stablegortoun’ in 1493 and ‘Stablegorden’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

the Station Hotel

(\textit{thu-stä-shin-hō-tel}) n. hotel and pub on Dovemount Place, opposite Hawick’s former railway station. Also popularly known as ‘the Station’ or ‘the Station Bar’. The building was constructed in 1871, with Scots Renaissance and Baronial features, and is Grade C listed. The signal box by the station had the ability to ring a bell there to warn passengers in the bar that a train was leaving in 5 minutes.

(\textit{stä-shin-mäis-tur}) n. a station-master – ‘...where the station-maister has verra obviously juist laid doon his hewe and put on his official coat and hat when he heard the signal wires gurrin’ [DH].

staur-licht (stawr-licht/) n., poet. starlight – ‘...The whaups a’ beddit, and ilk lamb and yowe, Smug aneth the staur-licht, the haill nith afore him’[DH] (see also ster, stern and starnie).

stave (stä¨v/) v. to sprain, wrench, benumb – ‘A staved ma pinkie when the baa dunted off cet’, ‘Staived thoom = a sprained thumb (a painful strain caused by the end of the thumb coming into violent contact with a hard body)’[ECS], n. an injury caused by a sprain or twist – ‘it’s no broken, it’s just a stave’ (also written ‘staive’).

stave (stä¨v/) v., arch. to walk aimlessly (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

stavel (stä¨-vul/) v., arch. to stagger, stumble (also written ‘staivel’).

Staven (stå¨-vin/) n. John (16th C.) listed in the Admiralty Court Book in 1557 as ‘Johnne Staven in Hawick’ when he purchased a tenement in Jedburgh from advocate John Moscrop. The land was on the Canongate, and he paid £20. It is unclear if his surname has been transcribed correctly; it could be ‘Steven’ or ‘Stavert’, for example.

Stavert (stå¨-vur/) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included William (b.1635) and John (b.1640). Adam of Hoscote (1750–1827) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He bought the portion of Hoscote that his brother George had inherited from their uncle, George Pott, and also bought the other portion from his cousin John Grieve. He is probably the Adam recorded at Todrig on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls and 1791–97 at Hoscote. In 1793 he paid the land tax at Phillogar in Hownam. He is recorded at Hoscote on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was confirmed in the lands of Hoscote by Hugh Scott of Harden in 1801. He paid the land tax at Hoscote in 1802. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819 (although his name was transcribed as ‘Stewart’). He was owner of Cunzieron and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as Outerside in Roberton Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was the Laird of recorded when he borrowed money from William Elliot of Harwood in 1824 and still Laird in 1825. He married Anne, daughter of John Brownell of Breck, Recorder of the Isle of Man. Their only child was Hannah, who married Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. In 1797 he secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh; she is recorded as a widow in 1851, living with her brother James Scott at Whitehaugh, and she died in 1855, aged 83. Their children were: Thomas (1798–1847), who succeeded; Margaret (1801–65), who also later succeeded to Hoscote; Elizabeth (b.1805–1862), who married Richard Bryn; and John (1807–59), who succeeded his brother Thomas. When he died his trustees included Walter Scott, George Pott and James Pott. His gravestone in Robertson Cemetery appears to say that he died at the age of 84. Lieut.-Col. Adam William (1939– ) current holder of the ‘Stavert of Hoscote’ title. He was educated at Stowe and Sandhurst. He married Shuna Nancy McNab and has family. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included Janet (b.1776) and Walter (b.1778). Andrew (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included Elliot (b.1838). Andrew (1809–91) son of Robert, he was a farmer at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 1500 acres and employing 13 labourers. He was also there on the 1861 census and still there in 1868. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1836 and their children included: Ann (b.1834); Robert (1838–99), who moved to England; Francis (b.1840); Mary (b.1842); William (1843–91), died in Cheshire; Thomas (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); Helen (b.1849); Andrew Graham (b.1851); and Jessie Elliot (b.1854). His brother Robert (a discharged soldier) was also living with them. He died at Dykecroft. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Foster and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Henderson. Archibald (b.1806/7) tenant farmer in Saughtree. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed as joint tenant along with his brother Robert (residing in Manchester). The lands were assigned to them by their father with the consent of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on be the Elliot (b.1838), son of Andrew, baptised in Castleton. George (b.1701/2) herd at Whitfield. When between the age of 12 and 13, he was farm servant to the 4 tenants of Mabonlaw with his father and after 7 years they went to Whitfield, where his father died in about 1731. He was herd at Whitfield until about 1736 and then at Drinkstone for the next 3 years. He was recorded at Whitfield in 1730. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1730 for William Harkness in Stouslie, Robert Scott in Tandlaw and James Turnbull in Appletreehall. He married Jean Elliot in 1729 and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: George (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Bessie (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1730 were Robert Scott and William Harkness (in the same year he was witness, along with Robert Scott, for William Harkness). He was in Todshawhill in 1764 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common.

A story is told in which either he or the previous herd at Whitfield was tied up by men who were cutting peat on Wilton Common, in order to stop him hounding off their horses. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1737). He could be the same man as the contemporary George who had children baptised in Wilton Parish. George (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He married Betty (or ‘Eliza) Neil in Roberton in 1750 and their children included: Mary (b.1758); Thomas (b.1760); and Betty (b.1766), who probably married Henry Turnbull. George (18th C.) married Ann Roger in 1775, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes.

George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter is listed alongside him, and so presumably his brother or son. George (18th C.) married Jane Glestains in Hawick in 1782. George (1756–1807) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He inherited part of Hoscote from his uncle George Pott. He was a surgeon in the Royal Navy. He is probably the George who owned Outersiderig in 1788. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Brownell, sister of his brother Adam’s first wife. Their children were: Thomas (b.1787), Deputy-Lieutenant in Selkirkshire; and William (b.1792), who married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. He died in Liverpool. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Earlside. His will is recorded in 1682. He must have been related to William, who is recorded at Earlside in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded in Todshaw in 1720, 1723, 1725 and 1726. He married Marion Wilson in Roberton in 1718. Their children included: Thomas (b.1720); John (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Thomas (again, b.1726). He may be the John in Wiltonburn who was one of the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1738 he married Helen Veitch from Cavers Parish. Margaret (b.1740), baptised in Cavers, was probably their child. Perhaps the same John had children to a previous marriage, Agnes (b.1732) and Jean (b.1734). John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1769. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised at ‘Todshaw hillshiel’ in Roberton Parish in 1771. She may have been the Betty who married John Henderson in Cavers in 1791 and probably John Turnbull in Wilton and died in 1831 at West Port. He is probably related to the earlier John recorded at Todshaw. John of Hoscote (1807–59) born in Roberton Parish, son of Adam. He was Laird of Hoscote after Thomas, his older brother. He served as Justice of the Peace. In the 1850s he was living at Burngrove. He married Elizabeth Bridget Watson, who died in 1868, aged 48. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth Bruce, who was a widow. Margaret (1801–65) elder daughter of Adam Stavert with his wife Agnes Scott. In 1851 she was living with her mother and uncle, James Scott of Whitehaugh. She inherited the estate of Hoscote after the death of her brothers Thomas and John. She married her cousin, Thomas Stavert, and died without children. Hoscote was inherited by her nephew Archibald. Ralph Alan (d.1978) inherited Hoscote in 1932. During WWII he was posted to India, where he worked as an engineer. He married Pearl Gallagher and she died in 1985. The iron gates, removed during the war, were replaced after his death, as a memorial to him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) early member of this local family. He is listed at Earlside along with William on the Hecthr Tax rolls of 1694. He is also recorded in 1695 at Earlside (or ‘Earlswood’). His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: Janet (b.1695); Robert (b.1701); Isobel (b.1705); and Thomas (b.1709). Robert of Earlside (18th C.). First of the local lairds (rather than tenants) of this family, he may have been the son of Robert born in 1701. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes in 1737 and Ashybank in 1745. His children

Thomas John was baptised in 1705. (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1695 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may have been the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1684 were John Purcell and William Purdom. He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree in 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Coliforthill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He may have been related to Thomas, who was previously farmer at Coliforthill. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert (b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (b.1779) son of Robert. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Pott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1780), who farmed at Saughtree; Robert (b.1781); and Helen (b.1783). He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Coliforthill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He may have been related to Thomas, who was previously farmer at Coliforthill. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert (b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included William (b.1684) and Marion (b.1692). The witnesses in 1684 were John Purcell and William Purdom. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1695 for John Armstrong in Park. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son John was baptised in 1705. Thomas (b.1697) son of William, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Marion Williamson and whose son William was baptised in Galashiels Parish in 1723. Thomas (1709–93) son of Robert. He occupied the farm of Coliforthill, it is said this was a reward for military service rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the Horse Tax at Coliforthill in 1785–97. Although supposed to have died in 1793, he is probably the Thomas recorded at Coliforthill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1744 he married Elizabeth (or Betty, d.1793), daughter of Adam Pott of Hoscote; his wife’s sister Jean married Walter Grieve at the same time in Roberton. They had a large family, including: George (b.1756), who inherited part of Hoscote; Adam (b.1750), baptised in Cavers, who was later Laird of Hoscote; Betty (b.1752), Jean (b.1758) and Janet, none of whom reached adulthood; and Robert, who married Helen Pott. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Betty (b.1745) and unnamed child (b.1746) were baptised in Kirkton. He may also be the Thomas whose children Margaret (b.1748), William (b.1754) and Thomas (b.1761) were baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Broadlee in 1753, 1762 and 1763. His children were probably John (b.1747), Isabel (b.1750), Margaret (b.1753), George (b.1756), William (b.1759), Mary (b.1760), George (again, b.1762) and Janet (b.1763). He may be the Thomas who married Margaret Lamb in 1749, the marriage being recorded in both Roberton and Wilton Parishes. It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, farmer at Coliforthill. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1756. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1767. Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas listed there on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as dying ‘in consequence of a fall from his horse in hunting’. His son Robert probably took over as farmer of Saughtree. Thomas, listed as farmer at Saughtree in 1799 was probably his grandson. Thomas (d.bef. 1810) resident of Roberton Parish. He may have been the son of Thomas (who lived at Broadlee), baptised in Roberton in 1756. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Kidd in Roberton in 1777; her death is recorded in Hawick in 1810, by which time he was already deceased. He was recorded at Harden Burnfoot in 1781 and 1784. His children included: Margaret (b.1778); Thomas (b.1779); Marion (b.1781); and John (b.1784). Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He married Margaret Dodds, who died in 1811. Their children included Thomas (b.1801), baptised in Kirkton. Thomas (1779–1831) son of Robert and Helen Pott. He was farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the farmer at Saughtree recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801; in 1801 he was recorded being in the ‘Yeomanry Cavalry’. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. He married Janet Armstrong, probably daughter of Archibald Armstrong, farmer at Sorbietrees. Their children were: Robert (b.1802); James (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Thomas (b.1808); Elliot (b.1810), who was a doctor in Preston; Helen (or Ellen, b.1812), who married John Murray and died at Wolfelee farm; Janet (b.1814); Agnes (b.1816); and John Armstrong (b.1824). He may be the Stavert of Saughtree who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. Thomas, J.P. (b.1787) elder son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Margaret. Thomas (1791–1869) born in Hawick Parish, son of Robert. Both his parents died when he was 8. He moved to Ettrick at the age of 14, where he was one of the men employed to haul building materials for Thomas Boston’s memorial. In 1820 he married Margaret Boa, and they had their first child, Catherine in Scotland. In 1821 the family emigrated to Prince Edward Island (Canada), where he was one of the pioneer settlers. They had several children who went on to be farmers on Prince Edward Island. Thomas of Hoscoite (1798–1847) elder son of Adam. He was born at Hoscoite, and lived in the house until he died, unmarried. The family were Lairds of Earlsdon and then Hoscoite from about 1695 until 1900. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Hoscoite. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was involved with financial deals with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1830s. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as ‘Proprietor’ at Hoscoite in 1841, living with 5 servants. He was succeeded by his brother John. Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the framework knitter, married to Euphemia who lived on the Loan and was born in about 1805; his wife was Euphemia Bramwell and their children included Margaret (b.1835), Thomas (b.1837) and Jamima (b.1839). Walter (17th C.) mentioned in 1655 when Robert Rucastle was ordered by the Hawick Bailies to pay him ‘four merkis, borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and 7s. Scots for a leg of mutton’. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, along with George, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Walter recorded at Nether Tofts in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Either he or a younger Walter was recorded as a labourer at Ormiston on the 1801 Militia ballot in Cavers Parish. William (17th C.) recorded in 1684, along with his wife Jean, signing a petition to the Laird of Cavers against having to pay a year’s rent towards the fine exacted for the release of the good Lady Cavers. He is the first local man of this family on record, although they may have been retainers of Douglas of Cavers since the time of Otterburn. He may be the William listed at Earlsdon along with Robert on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is surely related to James in Earlsdon, whose will is recorded in 1682.

William (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1760); John (b.1762); Mary (b.1765); and William (b.1768). William (18th/19th C.) draper and grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the 70 year old William recorded on Main Street in 1841. He is probably the William who married Ann Brown and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included: Elizabeth (b.1812), a straw-hat maker in Lilliesleaf; William (b.1814), Sawyer and ploughman; and Janet (b.1817). He is probably the draper ‘Wullie’, after whose ‘roup’, the main village draper became John Lunn. William (18th/19th C.) stockmaking in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (b.1792) younger son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. Their eldest surviving son Archibald became proprietor of Hoscoite after the death of their distant cousin Margaret (who was also the wife of his uncle Thomas). William (b.1814) son of Lilliesleaf draper William. He was a Sawyer on Lilliesleaf Main Street in 1851 and a ploughman at Riddell West Lodge in 1861. He married Agnes Riddell and their children included: William (b.1854); David (b.1855/6); and Thomas (b.1857/8). William James (19th/20th C.) proprietor of Hoscoite. He wrote an introduction to ‘The Annals of a Border Club’ in 1898 (formerly written ‘Stavart’, ‘Stevert’, etc.).

staw (staw) n., arch., poet. a surfeit, feeling of nausea, pest, nuisance, boredom – ‘A’ve gotten a fair stew at it’ [GW], ‘Siccar the slow, slow fingers rub, Stralkin without stew, Smoothin his name on the wa’ [DH], a nuisance, bore, v., arch. to satiate, become full, fill, sicken, tire – ‘...whan ma lugs are staaed o throapply blethers’ [ECS], ‘Howt! Staward (staw-urd) n. Henry (14th C.) traditionally said to be the ancestor of the Stawert family. He may be the Stavert who carried the penion of the young Laird of Cavers (Archibald Douglas) at Otterburn. The story is also told of how his helmet was so dented at the Battle that he had to have it fixed by a blacksmith on the way back to Scotland. The Stawards (or Staverts) are traditionally retainers of the hereditary Sheriffs of Roxburghshire.

Stawed (stawd) _adj., arch._ sated, surfeited, full of drink, tired of something, wearied – ‘A’m staw’d o’ kail every day’ [GW], ‘Weel, A ranged staw’d o’ kail every day’ [GW], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS] (also written ‘staaed’; cf. seek-staaed).

Stawn (stawn) _pp., poet._ stolen – ‘...For lang might thou in Cumberland dwelt, Ere the laird’s Jock had stawn frae thee. Fala &c.’ [CPM].

Stawt (stawt) _pp., arch._ sated, wearied – ‘Ye’re fairly staw’t – I carena, gae thy way w’ye; My din’s a deevance – thankye sir, gude day t’ye!’ [JoHa].

Stay see stey

Stay (stä) _n., poet._ a help, support – ‘Becaus thou hest been my staye, therfor in the skaddaw o’ they wings wull I rejoice’ [HSR].

St. Boisel (sin’-boi-zul) _n._ (d.c.664) Abbot of Melrose Abbey and teacher of St. Cuthbert. Almost all that is known about him comes from Bede. He was a Northumbrian, trained at Lindisfarne by St. Aidan. He is supposed to have had prophetic powers, predicting his own death in a plague. He was buried at Melrose. Relics relating to him were taken to Durham, and parts of a shrine dedicated to him can be seen in Jedburgh Abbey Museum. His day was once celebrated on 23rd February. The town of St. Boswells was effectively named after him.

St. Boswells (sin’-bo-olz) _n._ formal name for the town known as Bosells.

St. Boswells Fair Road (sin’-bo-olz-für-rød) _n._ name used for the drove road across the middle of Wilton Common on the 1764 map.

St. Bullion’s Day (sin’-bu-lee-inz-dā) _n._ arch. St. Swithin’s Day, 15th July (from St. Martin of Bullion, whose feast day was 4th July, which became 15th July in the new calendar).

St. Clair see Sinclair

St. Cuthbert (sin’-kuth-bur’) _n._ (c.638–87) 7th century bishop, born in the Borders, possibly on Leader Water. He was Prior at the old Melrose Abbey in the early 660s, and this was one of the resting places for his body (although he was buried at Holy Island). He was called a saint because his body was said to have been miraculously preserved 11 years after his death (and also said to be still uncorrupted when examined at the time of the Reformation!). He is traditionally supposed to have lived for a time near the location of St. Mary’s in Hawick, founding a church there and spreading Christianity throughout Teviotdale and beyond. A description of miracles described in a 12th century account of his life (by Reginald of Durham) contains one of the earliest mentions of Hawick. It also refers to a chapel dedicated to him, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and which was associated with several apparently miraculous stories. This may be the same place referred to by Bede as a place where St.Cuthbert took shelter, and miraculously found a loaf of bread, when travelling from Carlisle to Melrose. His remains were removed from Lindisfarne by his followers and moved from place to place, finally coming to rest at Durham Cathedral, where they are to this day, along with several relics associated with him. In the Middle Ages both 20th March and 4th September were celebrated as his saints day.

St. Cuthbert’s (sin’-kuth-burts) _n._ popular name for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel (sin’-kuth-burts-chā-pul) _n._ chapel on the Slitrig dedicated to St. Cuthbert, noted in the 12th century by Reginald of Durham and believed to have been at a site near Cogsmill. The chapel is supposed to have been founded in 687 (the year the saint died) and already ruined by the 12th century. Stories were related by Reginald in about the 1170s, as told to him by Dolfinus, Pastor of Cavers. The miracles include: a crowd celebrating his saint’s day being protected from a snowstorm, even although the chapel was roofless; 2 women from Hawick, Segifa and Rosfritha, whose candle went out, but another one appeared; a woman (Dolfinus’ mother) was cured of swelling, after being an invalid for 17 years; a flock of sheep belonging to a poor widow from Cavers Parish was protected from wolves in the churchyard; a woman from Raperlaw, who was crippled from birth, was cured; and Hugh Flamang from Yorkshire, fled to Teviotdale, spending the night in the chapel, where moss from the stone basin prevented his enemies from recognising him. There is now no sign of the building, although the location has been associated with an apparently levelled shelf at Cogsmill, measuring 49 yards by 31 yards, with the probable graveyard surrounded by an earthen bank and covered with trees. This lies about 400 feet south of Adderstoneshiel farmhouse, and the stand of trees was planted to mark the site in about 1830. The area was once locally referred to as ‘the Chaipel Park’. Excavations in the late 19th century uncovered 2 carved globe-shaped stone finials, which were added as gateposts to the farm garden. It is suggested these date from the 17th century, although there is also a record of some much older stonework being unearthed earlier. The associated graveyard must have been used for centuries, but there were already no existing stones there by the mid-19th century. Note that there have also been suggestions that the site of the chapel may have been near Penchrise (presumably an erroneous interpretation of the name) or near Hummelknowes (because of the adjacent Priestcrown).
St. Cuthbert’s Court

St. Cuthbert’s Court (sin’-kuth-burts-kör’) n. housing built on Slitrig Crescent opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church in 1984, previously occupied by James Melrose & Sons engineers. It was essentially rebuilt from a wing of the former brewery.

St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club (sin’-kuth-burts-kri-ki’-klub) n. cricket club formed in 1862 for the pupils of St. Cuthbert’s School and junior members of the Church choir. They played on the Brewery Haugh and had George Peterson and Ben Tillotson as professionals at various times. Nicknamed ‘the Saints’, it was the last club to survive, other than Hawick & Wilton, folding in 1889.

St. Cuthbert’s Fitbaa Club (sin’-kuth-burts-fi’-baw-klub) n. rugby club associated with St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club in the late 19th century. It was formed in 1877, with William Laidlaw as Captain for the first 2 seasons. They played against the separate ‘Hawick’ and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ teams, and won the whole Borders championship one year. The club folded in 1892.

St. Cuthbert’s Haugh (sin’-kuth-burts-hawf) n. another name for the Brewery Haugh.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk (sin’-kuth-burts-kirk) n. St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church. The foundation stone was laid in 1857, after the 5th Duke of Buccleuch gifted the land between Slitrig Crescent and the river and paid for the building. The design was by Sir George Gilbert Scott (responsible for the resoration of several English Cathedrals, as well as the Episcopal Cathedral in Edinburgh and the Foreign Office in London), with John Herbertson of Galashiels the main builders and Melrose’s supplying the iron work. The church was opened in 1858, and gave the first permanent home to a congregation that traces its roots back to the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. In Hawick it is sometimes referred to as ‘the English Kirk’. For a long time it started its services half an hour later than the other churches. It was named after the local St. Cuthbert, who is said to have had a chapel nearby. There is a stained-glass window showing him as a bishop holding the head of King Oswald of Northumbria in his hand (apparently representing the fact that the Abbot of Melrose was the King’s Confessor, thus holding his conscience). There is also an 1889 memorial window to the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, showing him presenting a model of the building to the Bishop of Glasgow, and 2 memorial windows for the Scott-Watson family of Burnhead, as well as a War memorial window, unveiled in 1921. The nave had 4 bays and there is a bell-cot over the chancel arch. The reredos by J. Oldrid Scott (son of the main architect) was added in 1905. At that time the niche in the apse became the site for a statue of St. Cuthbert holding the head of Oswald of Northumbria, like in the window design. The chancel screen is by Sir Robert Lorimer, and was added in 1908, at the same time that a vestry was built (designed by Lorimer and John Fraser Matthew). The vestry contains the original communion table, lent to the congregation in 1847 by Isaac and Johanna Edmondson. A plaque in the church commemorates to 2 Grieves of Braugholme Park who were killed on board naval vessels before WWI. The nearby Church Hall was formerly part of the brewery (and was converted around 1980 and is now 2 houses). The church possesses its own Episcopal Cemetery, and the adjacent Rectory has been converted into houses. The church building is currently listed category B. A centenary history was written in 1958 by Hector McBean Hart. Records for the church and school covering 1847–1944 are in the National Archives. The roll of ministers (sometimes called Rectors) of the Church is: Robert Campbell 1847–54; John Rose Dakers 1854–82; Douglas Powell Ware 1882–92; James W.T. Hart 1892–1903; Edward T.S. Reid 1903–10; Alexander L. Ross, assistant 1904–09; Alexander J. Hay 1911–55; Philip Crosfield 1955–60; Edward Robertson 1960–69; Maurice Sunter 1969–70; Aidan Michael Burn-Murdoch 1970–77; Humphrey Lopdell-Bradshaw 1977–88; Jonathan Willans 1988–91; Stuart Maxwell Paterson 1992–??; Simon Cake 2019–.

St. Cuthbert’s Schuil (sin’-kuth-burts-skil) n. Episcopal school near to St. Cuthbert’s Church on Slitrig Crescent. The school was for pupils of Episcopalian families, and like the church was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was built in 1850–52 and had a house for the schoolmaster attached. The building was also used for a few years for church services. Previous to the erection of the purpose-built school there had been an Episcopal school on the Mid Raw around 1846 and another (per perhaps the same one) in the ballroom on Half-Moon Close, starting in 1847 or 1848. The new school was situated on the opposite side of Lynnwood Road, beyond Stonefield Mill and was reached via a footbridge across Slitrig Dam. The school was often known locally as ‘the English Schuil’. Pupils over the age of 12 were transferred to the High School in 1928, and it became St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. It was closed in 1956, and the pupils incorporated into the renamed Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. The school and adjacent schoolhouse were demolished in 1972. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1935–56 are in the National Archives. The register for 1934–56 and log books for 1941–56 are in the Borders Archive. A list of schoolmasters (perhaps not all of them being Head teacher, and some of them for only a short period) is: Mr. Ellis; Mr. King; Mr. Craven; Jacob Jay 1861–93; Mr. Bountvie; Mr. Beaton; James Turnbull; Walter Inglis; David Gillis 1894–1915; Mr. Lumsden; Mr. Cormack 1945–48; and Mr. Walker.

The Steel

(1826–1920) born in Saltcoats, he attended the Evangelical Union Hall in Kilmarnock. In 1866 he came to Newcastle to be minister of the Congregational Church there, and remained until 1875. After that he was minister at Dalmellington and Galston in Ayrshire. During the 1851 census he was a lodger in Newcastle, listed as ‘Independent Minister’, and so he had an association with the village long before 1866. Sir Samuel Strang of Philiphaugh (1882–1961) son of William Strang, who he succeeded at Philiphaugh. He stood unsuccessfully as an M.P. for Selkirk and Peebles in 1910 and served with the Lothians and Border Horse in WWI. He was an M.P. in Kent for a decade, was later President of the Scottish Unionist Association and was created a Baronet in 1938. He served with the Forestry Commission 1932–49 and was in charge of timber in Scotland in WWII. He was a County Councillor for Selkirkshire, Lord Lieutenant for that county 1948–56 and an Ensign in the Royal Company of Archers. He was also a member of the Archæological Society.

The Steel (thu-steel) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, north of Swanstead Hill and south of Branxholme Wester Loch, reaching a height of 326 m. It may be associated with the lands of ‘Steyll’ mentioned in the 1420 charter for half of the lands of Branxholme (probably from the old English for steep).

The Steel Bonnets (thu-steel-bo-nits) n. book by George MacDonald Fraser, full title ‘The Steel Bonnets: The Story of the Anglo-Scottish Border Reivers’, it was written in 1971. Fraser was known as a writer of swash-buckling historical fiction. His background makes this book both grippingly written and over-romanticised.

Steele (steel) n. Andrew (1811–82) local poet, born in Coldstream. He spent a few years in the parish school, worked as an agricultural labourer and was then apprenticed as a shoemaker, moving to Galashiels. He published his first poem in the Kelso Chronicle and sometime thereafter published a volume of his poems. He moved to Hawick about 1869 and published a second edition of his book in 1871. In later life he sold tea for a wholesale grocer. He was also a great dog lover, writing a poem to his dog Nailer. His longer verses are derivative of well-known English poets, but his Borders poetry is more valuable. He died at 14 Dickson Street and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (19th C.) factor of the Minto estate, recorded in 1885. Thomas (19th C.) married Margaret Landles in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1838.

Steele Knowe

(former name of lands in Liddesdale, associated with the modern Steele Road. The specific place marked on maps is the ridge of land just to the north-west of the road junction at Steele Road, between the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. ‘Willaim Niksoun in the Stele’ is recorded in 1516, ‘Barte Nixson of Stelle’, as well as Archie, Thomas and Alexander in 1544, and Will Elliot of the Steele in 1583 and 1599. In 1584 Harry and Archie Nixon ‘of the Steill’ were among men who signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John Elliot was there in 1590 when complained about for a raid into England. Additionally the lands of ‘Stellis within the Dyk’ are recorded in 1541, when it was tenanted by Nixons; it is unclear if these are the same lands or not. Francie Beattie was there in 1623. Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of Nether and Over Steele, and was combined with Brighouse, ‘Ingrasswall’, ‘Guelbeck’ and Cleuchhead. Together they covered 706 acres and were bounded by Taylorcleuchhead, Dinlabyre, Bygate and Shaws, with the farmhouse being marked near the modern location of Cleuchhead and another farmhouse to the north, perhaps around Shawshiel Rig. The Steele Road is the name given to the road that crosses here, linking the Liddel and Hermitage valleys (also written ‘the Steel’; it is ‘Stell’ and ‘Stelle’ in 1544, ‘the Steill’ in 1586, ‘Stell’ in 1694 and ‘Steill’ in 1718; the same word occurs in other place names, such as ‘Ashiesteele’, and means the spur of a hill, with the same Old English root giving us the word ‘stile’; see also Steele Road).

Steele Knowe (steel-now) n. hill in Southdean Parish, on the left side of the A6088 after the hamlet of Southdean. It reaches a height of 273 m. To the north-east is an old stock enclosure with turf walls, as well as 4 small cairns. To the north is another enclosure, with a bank and ditch. On the south-west slopes are the remains of 2 turf huts. On a terrace on the west side are the remains of 3 round-ended buildings, one of which is 26.5 m long and divided into 3 parts (and may have been a combination of byre and domestic uses). There are also other enclosures and banks in this area between the hill and Jordan Sike, some cut through by a gas pipeline. To the south of the hill there is a roughly 3 km boundary bank, which runs all the way from Jordan Sike to the east, to finish south of Lethem (also written ‘Steel Knowe’).
Steeple Loft (steel-plawn-tin) n. plantation in Liddesdale, running along the north side of the Steele road (i.e. the road connecting Steele Road station with the B6399).

Steele Road (steel-rød) n. small station on the Waverley Line, between Riccarton and Newcastleton, now a house. The station was opened in 1862 and closed in 1869 along with the rest of the railway. The name used until 1900 was Netherhope. There was a signal-box south of the station, which has been demolished. The place name ‘Steele’ long precedes the railway, with Nether and Over Steele being named by the Elliots and the Croziers from at least the 16th century and surviving into the 20th century. ‘Steele Road’ is the name of the road that crosses ‘the Steele’, and the station took its name from that. Several large enclosures have been identified to the west of Steele Road meets the main road. It may have been called ‘Riccarton roadend’. This was the ‘Road End’ where William Elliot was recorded in 1868.

Steeple (steep-pul) n., arch. a staple, metal loop.

Steeleroad-end (steel-rød-end) n. shepherd’s cottage on the B6357, south of Larriston, marked the end of the road over ‘the Steele’. It is situated where the way to the hamlet (and ex-station) of Steele Road meets the main road. It may also have been called ‘Riccarton roadend’. This could be the ‘Road End’ where William Elliot was recorded in 1868.

Stell Hoose (stel-hoos) n. house situated at the corner of Havelock Street and Wilton Hill, demolished in 1945, with the site becoming part of the garage there. It was described as 2 buildings when the land passed from George Haliburton to John Miller in 1813. Dyer Robert Scott was there in 1835, and foreman John Middlemas and mason George Oliver in 1840. James Black and John Middlemas lived there in 1841 and it is marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map (originally adjacent to the farmlands of Wilton Mains, so presumably there was once a ‘stell’ nearby; also sometimes ‘the Stil’).

Stellhooze Park (stel-hoos-pawrk) n. area beside the ‘Stell Hoose’, which was drained in 1826. The area later contained the ‘Cadger’s Well’ from 1842 until the early 20th century.

stells (stelz) n. sheep enclosures. These are usually circular and often about 50 yards in circumference and five feet high, although they vary in size. The entrances are on the leeside of the prevailing wind, and are usually built wider at the top than the bottom. The stone came by sled from nearby quarries. There are thousands of them across the Borders and there is a claim that the basic design originated in Hawick.

Stells (stelz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Stells, within the Dyk’. It is valued at 31 shillings and tenanted by Nixons. The lands of ‘Litlestel’ may have been nearby; they were valued in 1541 at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (it is also possible this was related to Steele Road or the Steel).

stend (stend) v., poet. to leap, spring, bound – ‘The spring that ilk ane lik’d he kended: Auld wives at sixty years wad stend ... ’ [CPM].

Stenhouse (sten-hoos) n. (Stenhouse) John (b.1812/3) born in Holmes, near Melrose, he was a grocer in Hawick. Steven (stee-vin) n. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1623 as schoolmaster at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. William, who was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1630, may have been related to him. Alexander (19th/20th C.) proprietor of the ‘Berwick News’ and ‘Berwick Journal’. He married Mary, daughter of David McBurnie Watson. He gave 3 bursaries to the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, in memory of ‘Ada Carr Steven’, ‘Mary Watson Steven’ and ‘Esther Watson Steven’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1702) and Beattie (b.1704). Robert (16th/17th C.) notary for a bond between Robert Turnbull, tenant in Bedrule, and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. He was also notary in 1618 for a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. In 1619 he was notary public in Raperlaw when accused of being among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who took hay from Huntliehill. As one of the few men who appeared personally, he was not declared as a rebels (also written ‘Stevin’).

Stevens (stee-vins) n. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) housekeeper at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. She was presumably wife of Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) valet at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. He is probably the Thomas from Cavers whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797.

Stevenson (stee-vin-sin) n. Agnes ‘Nancy’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of John of Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish, and sister of Nel and Maizie, whom she lived with. She kept an unlicensed drinking establishment at her cottage, apparently buying a whisky jug from Douglas Laidlaw in Hawick, to give her whisky an appearance of quality. She was visited by the exciseman one day and thereafter fined, although let off lightly because James Elliot of Wolfelee was on the bench. However, when caught again and fined more severely she gave up her illicit business. She was the last surviving member of her family and lived her last days at the old blacksmith’s house at Forkins. Alexander (d.1724) shepherd at ‘Wadiespinnells’, presumably near Lethem in Southdean Parish. His will is in the Douglas of Cavers papers. Andrew (1795–1871) younger son of George. Like his father he was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, taking over after the death of his brother John in 1823. He sold the cottage and blacksmith’s shop at Hobkirk Kirkstile to James Elliot of Wolfelee. It was said that he could neither read nor write, his education at the parish school having been hampered by a speech impediment. In 1861 he was listed as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, along with his grand-nephew Thomas Rutherford. Rutherford took over as smith at Bonchester after his death. Andrew (19th C.) Hawick carrier. He may have been the Andrew born in 1832, son of James and Marion Douglas. His cousin Elizabeth Stevenson married Thomas Huggan. Andrew (b.1905/6) Hawick man who worked for Turnbull the Dyers, where his father was Foreman. He moved to Langholm in the 1930s to work for Arthur Bell and started his own dyeing business in 1946, called the Langholm Dyeing Company. His sons David and Neil joined the family firm, which evolved into Edinburgh Woollen Mill. Ann (18th C.) servant at Wells in 1791, when she worked for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald (18th C.) merchant of Peebles, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1736. Archibald Forrester (1811–47) son of Rev. David of Wilton. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was recorded as a surgeon in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a surgeon at the Sandbed (possibly Bridge House) in 1841. In 1835 he married Mary Moodie in Lilliesleaf Parish. They had children: Jessie (b.1839); Jessie (again, b.1843); Alexander (b.1845); and James (b.1845), twin of Alexander. He died the year of a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Rev. Charles Findlater (1831–1905) son of Rev. David of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was ordained at Stobhill in 1860 and was Minister of Barry from 1866. He died unmarried. It seems likely that he was named after Rev. Charles Findlater, minister of Linton and Newlands, who died in 1828. Rev. David (1784–1851) born in Glasgow, son of David and Jean Renton, he was educated at Glasgow University. He became schoolmaster at West Linton in 1810 and was licensed by Peebles in 1817. He was presented to Wilton by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1825, taking up his new position in 1826, where he remained until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Christian Taylor, daughter of a Lasswade farmer and they had many children, including: William (1810–57), who became a merchant and died in the U.S.A.; Archibald Forrester (1811–47), a surgeon in Hawick; Jane (1813–43), who married James Farish of Montreal; Alexander (1815–41), also a surgeon; Thomas (1817–78), who worked with H.M. Customs; James (1819–44), a merchant; Catherine, who died in infancy; Anne (1821–91); Christian Buchanan (1823–87); Robert Dundas (1827–58), another surgeon; Catherine Forrester (1829–37); Charles Findlater (1831–1905), who became minister of Barry; and Ellen (1833–52). He published ‘Two Sermons preached on the death of Rev. James Strachan’ (1840) and ‘Sermons on important subjects, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1841) and also wrote a description of Wilton Parish for the New Statistical Account of 1845. David, C.B.E. (1941–) son of Andrew, he was born in the Haig Maternity Home, even although his family lived in Langholm by then. His grandfather had been foreman-dyer at Turnbulls of Hawick. He attended school in Langholm, then Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University, before qualifying as a chartered accountant. He was a champion pole-vaulter, breaking Borders and Scottish records on 10 occasions; his first open competition in the pole vault was at the Hawick Common Riding Games. He represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in 1962, 1966 and 1970, and Britain in the 1964 Olympics. He joined the family dyeing business in 1967. In order to promote the 1970 Commonwealth Games tartan he (and his brother Neil) started Edinburgh Woollen Mill. This grew into a retail company, expanding outlets, and using Heather Mills in Selkirk for producing cloth. He sold the company in 1996 and later concentrated on his firm Ashleybank Investments. He also became a racehorse owner, having several winners. Additionally he sponsored Borders show-jumper Ian Stark. He was made C.B.E. in 1988 for business achievements. He was Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire for 20 years and was made Honorary Freeman of Dumfries and Galloway in 2012. He has been involved in several charities, such as the Robertson Trust and Scottish Sports Aid, championed the redevelopment of Langholm’s Buccleuch Centre and was founder chairman of the Langholm Initiative. He was the Hawick Common Riding Chief Guest in 2017. His wife Alix is a former international long-jumper and hockey player. They have 2 daughters, Karen and Lynne. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook at Brauxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. Francis (b.c.1770s) servant at Larriston House according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. George (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Peter, who was also listed. George (d.bef. 1759) son of John. He was blacksmith at ‘Hobkirk-style’, recorded in 1735. He married a daughter of John Shiel of Hobkirk Kirkstile. Their children included: Charles (b.1732); John (b.1735); Betty (b.1738), who married gardener Adam Kersel in 1759; James (b.1740), who probably died young; Jean (b.1743), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann (b.1746), who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755). George (b.1760) son of John of Hobkirk Kirkstile, and probably grandson of the earlier George. He worked in the blacksmith’s shop with his father. He may be the George who was lived at Bonchester Bridge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Laidlaw. Their children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Jane (or Jenny, b.1787), who married Robert Amos; Betty (b.1789); John (1791–1823); Andrew (b.1795); Agnes, who married Alex Baptie; and Janet (b.1787). He appears to have changed the spelling of the family surname from ‘Stephenson’ to ‘Stevenson’. George Drummond ‘Stevie’ (1933–2012) played for Hawick P.S.A., Linden and the Greens in the period 1951–67. He was capped 24 times for Scotland, scoring a try against England in his debut match in 1956. He was also referred to as ‘Back-door Stevie’ because of the number of times he was called into the Scottish squad at the last minute. A career highlight was a solo try scored for the Scottish District when they defeated South Africa at Mansfield Park in the 1960s. He played at centre and wing, and at 6 feet 2 inches was tall for a back. Serving an engineering apprenticeship in Hawick, he then did National Service, worked for Bibby’s the farm suppliers and became a a sales representative for Ballantine’s Whisky (although ironically he was a teetotaller), settling in Currie. His married Jessie and had children Fiona and Mark. Gilbert (b.c.1770s) servant at Birneyknowe according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Helen (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Her name is given after James Scott, with Adam Scott being the tenant, and hence she may have been related to one or both of them. Helen ‘Nel’ (b.1771) daughter of John, Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile and sister of Nancy and Maizie, with whom she lived. She married a Murray, but they separated and she apparently hated to be called ‘Mrs. Murray’. She made a living by spinning yarn. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Thomson and their son John was baptised in 1672. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertton Parish. His children included: John (b.1702); William (b.1703); and John (again, b.1707). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. In 1708 he was described as ‘(in Harwood) tenant to arleton’. He married Jean Thomson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1705); James (b.1707); John (b.1708); Bessie (b.1710); and Margaret (b.1710). The witnesses in 1705 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield, in 1707 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Francis Gledstains in Braidhaugh and in 1708 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill. James (18th C.) married Jane (or Jean) Scott in Cavers Parish in 1754. His wife died in 1814, aged 87. Their children included: Jane (1754–97), who married Thomas Grieve and died at Muselee; John (1759/60–87), who died at Alderybar; and James (1760/61–85), who also died at Alderybar. James (18th C.) married Ann Dryden in Hobkirk Parish in 1766. He may be the James whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk in 1770. James (b.c.1780) tanner in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. James (1805–89) educated in Jedburgh, he entered the office of Roxburghshire Procurator-Fiscal Shortreed, and was appointed to that position himself in 1827 when he became of age. He served for the astonishing period of 60 years, latterly assisted by his son. He was also Clerk of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a clerk in Jedburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. There are letters to him preserved in the Walter Mason Collection from the 1820s. He was honorary secretary and later full member of the Jedforest Club. He was an ardent Tory, but took no part in local politics. He married Charlotte, daughter of William Graham, doctor in Jedburgh and secondly married a daughter of Rev. William Aston Shute. His eldest son James Charles took over most of his county duties. John (16th C.) priest at the Kirk of the Lowes. He was listed as ‘vicar pensioner of the Forrest kirk’ in 1574 when he was still owed for previous years in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Learmonth and their son Robert was baptised in 1634. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Gilbert was baptised in 1704. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the same John was baptismal witness in 1708 (along with weaver David Reid) in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) for James son of John Scott ‘Laird’, in 1721 (along with weaver Adam Scott) for merchant William Black and in 1725 (along with weaver George Wight) for weaver Robert Wight and for George Smith (along with weaver Robert Wight). In 1716 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Scott called ‘Laird’. Their children included: Janet (b.1717); Thomas (b.1719); John (b.1720); John (again, b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1719 were wright John...
Pringle and Walter Scott in Newbigging, in 1720 were weavers James Scott and Thomas Greenshields, and in 1722 were weavers Robert and Walter Tinlin. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary ‘Milleken’ and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1719. John (18th C.) early member of the Stevensons of Rulewater, first recorded in 1729 when he made use of the Hobkirk ‘mort cloath’ for a family burial. They were living at Singdean at that time. His mother died in 1733. His son was George, who was blacksmith at Hobkirrstile. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1716 and 1721. His children probably included: John (b.1716); Margaret (b.1721); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) recorded getting married in Kirkton in 1751, with no wife’s name given. John (18th C.) son of George, he was Laird of Hobkirktile, which he inherited from his grandfather John Shiel. He was also portioner of Kirknowe. He lived in a cottage at Singdean. He sold Hobkirktile in 1779. He had 3 daughters, Nel, Nancy and Maizie, whose lives are described in Tancred’s history of Rulewater. He may have been the John who married Agnes Douglas in 1758. George (b.1760) was probably may also his son, as well as possibly John (b.1765). Janet (b.1759) may have been his daughter, as well as Betty, whose daughter Betty Beattie married blacksmith Tom Rutherford. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son John was baptised in 1785 (or perhaps 1775). The witnesses were Archibald Elliot and John Smith. John (b.c.1770s) wright in Hawick. He is recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the list in 1801. John (d.1823) elder son of George and brother of Andrew. He took over from his father as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. After his death he was succeeded in the business by his brother Andrew. He may be the John whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Betty (b.1770), Helen (b.1771), Jean (b.1773), Douglas (b.1776), Agnes (b.1778), Maizie (b.1781) and William (b.1783). He may be the ‘J.’ who married Nelly Rodger in Hobkirk in 1769. John (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Renwick in Roberton in 1819. Rev. John (1846–1929) born in Eccles, Berwickshire, son of John, the schoolmaster there. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1865, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1869 and was ordained as assistant and successor to Rev. Archibald Craig of Bedrule in 1875. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1891. He married Christina Laing of Denholmhill, and she died in 1891. He secondly married Christina Govanlock Turnbull (daughter of John Turnbull, farmer at Priestrig), and she died in 1961 at the age of 94. His children were: Margaret Scott, who married Thomas William Brodie; Mary Farmer (d.1918), who married John B. Forsyth; and John, who was a Captain in the R.A.M.C. He demitted his charge in 1923, died at Bonchester Bridge and is buried at Bedrule, where there is a memorial plaque inside the church. John Briggs (1849–1931) son of Thomas P., he was born in Hawick. He went to Brownsea Island, Poole and then to Bournemouth in 1887, where he became Parks Superintendent, retiring in 1919. His children included Thomas, John, Charles, Harry and Hugh. He is probably the John Briggs recorded as proprietor of Commonside in about 1900. Margaret (19th C.) resident of the West Port area. In 1832 she is one of the Hawick people who contracted cholera, but recovered. Mary ‘Maizie’ (18th/19th C.) youngest daughter of John who lived at Hobkirk Kirkstile with her sisters Nel and Nancy. She had a natural son called Robert Wilson, who worked on the plantations at Wolfelee. In later life she was the cleaner at Hobkirkt Church. But she used the cushions from the ‘Lairds’ Lofts’ as a bed for lodgers during the week, and was dismissed when this was discovered. Michael (d.1789) first landlord of the Tower Inn, from about 1771. In that year it is recorded that Bailie Hardie was reimbursed by the Council ‘for a bottle of wine (Stevenson’s), at attending His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’, suggesting that he was already running the inn by then. He was brought from Yorkshire specifically to be inn-keeper and was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1773. In 1773 the Council recorded that they met ‘in Michael Stevenson’s’ to petition an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs to the Auld Brig. He is recorded as inn-keeper there in 1778 and 1780. He was taxed for having 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1785–1789 and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. In 1785 he was taxed for employing James ‘Stevanson’ (who was presumably therefore unrelated) as a waiter, as well as an unnamed waiter in 1787. ‘Mrs. Stevenson’ was taxed for carriages in the year 1789/90 and for having a female servant in 1789, suggesting that he was deceased by then. In 1798 the death is recorded in Hawick of ‘Mrs. Stevenson spouse to Deed. Mr. Stevenson tower inn’. He is described by W.N. Kennedy as ‘of Falstaffian proportions, and a fine burly specimen of the Boniface brotherhood, and is reputed to have weighed upwards of thirty stone’. It was said that he needed a pulley yo get to his feet in the morning and that after he died the coffin had to be hoisted in and out of the window of his bedroom.

Patrick (16th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Robert (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert Grieve and William Elliot. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of HowPasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Stevinsone’ right after George. Peter (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. His wife was Mary Plendergast and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Christian (b.1702). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Reid and their children included: Jean (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); John (b.1760); Jane (b.1762); Betty (b.1767); and Thomas (b.1771). The witnesses in 1762 were shoemaker John Scott and tobacconist James Scott. Robert (19th C.) stock-maker in Hawick. His infant child’s death is recorded in 1840, with his wife Christian Scott dying 2 days later. Sandy (??–2002) local solicitor, born in Kelso. He came to Hawick in 1963, was Acting Father in 1973 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee 1977–87 and again for part of 2001 Thomas (17th/18th C.) said to have come from Hummelknowes and become tenant at Little Whitlaw, where he kept more than a hundred sheep on the Town’s Common. However, the ‘Town Herd of Hawick hounded, scattered, and destroyed said Thomas Stevenson’s sheep, till he was obliged to make sale of what was left, and gave up his farm’; this is according to evidence given by John Douglas in 1767. Thomas (18th/19th C.) winder of ‘pirns’ for stocking-makers. He lived near the West Port. He had a son, also Thomas, whose wife Margaret was one of the people who contracted cholera in early 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). His son Robert with Isobel Turnbull was baptised in Hawick in 1797, with witnesses Rev. W. Knox (although hard to read) and merchant George Waldie. Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in Wilton in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19–72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (b.1860), who both died young; Agnes, who married mason James Turnbull; William Laidlaw, woolen merchant; John Briggs, who moved to England; Thomas, postman and proprietor of the Douglas Hotel; and Beatrix (b.1857). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas (19th C.) from Langholm. Around the 1860s he came to Newcastle once a week to operate a branch of the British Linen Company Bank. Thomas Pasley (b.1862) son of Thomas P. He worked as a postman and was later in the Douglas Hotel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Trow Mill in 1744 when his daughter Jane was baptised. His other children included: Walter (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Oliver. Their children included: William (b.1768); Walter (b.1768); Gilbert (b.1770); and Katharine (b.1779). The witnesses to William’s baptism in 1768 were Gilbert Oliver (probably his father-in-law) and Francis Aitkin. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 his daughter with Ann Howison died. Walter Laidlaw (19th C.) partner with Alexander Innes in the woollen merchants firm Innes, Stevenson & Co. He retired in 1892, after which the firm continued with F.E.H. Chambers as a new partner. William (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811 and valued at £3 13s 2d. William (1729/30–1807) tenant farmer at Langburnshields. He is recorded as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He also paid tax on 5 non-working dogs in 1797. His servant Gilbert Gray is recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot. He contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French) in 1803. It was said that his ‘sound knowledge, singular abilities, and successful improvements, as a store-farmer, have been seldom equalled’. He could be the William who married Isabel Vass in Hobkirk in 1773 and whose unnamed child was baptised in Hobkirk in that same year. William (b.c.1785) tanner in Hawick.
In 1841 he was living at about 23 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Agnes, Isabel, Jane, Thomas, Margaret and Williamina. His widow appears to be living at Kirkstyle in 1851. William Laidlaw (1845/6-93) worked for Laing & Irving, eventually becoming a partner in Irving, Groerson & Stevenson. He left this partnership to go into business with A.K. Innes as Innes, Stevenson & Co, retiring only about a year before his death. He built the villa Dunira. He married Susan Yule, who died in 1872, aged 26. Their only child was Bella, who married Maj. James Rodger (formerly spelled ‘Stevinsone’ etc., and interchangeable with ‘Stephenson’ before the mid-18th century).

stewart (stew-ur’) n., arch. a steward – ‘Sae whan cenin’ was come, the lord o’ the vynaird saith untill his stewart, Ca’ the laborers . . . ’[HSR].

Stewart (stew-ur’) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1723 and 1730. His children included Janet (b.1723), Adam (b.1726), Bessie (b.1728), Margaret (b.1730) and Elizabeth (b.1732). Alexander Earl of Mar and Garioch (d.1435) illegitimate son of Alexander, Earl of Buchan, and grandson of King Robert II. He was a supporter of his uncle, the Regent Albany. He married Isobel, Countess of Mar, daughter of William Douglas, Earl of Mar. Through her he inherited titles, including part of the Barony of Cavers and the Forest of Jedburgh, as recorded in a document of 1405. He was appointed Admiral of the Realm of Scotland about 1420. He had only one (illegitimate) son, Sir Thomas, who pre-deceased him. Alexander (c.1454–85) 1st Duke of Albany, 2nd son of King James II. He was Warden of the Western Marches from 1475. He also held the positions of Lord High Admiral, Governor of Berwick, and Lieutenant of the Kingdom. He was imprisoned after being suspected of plotting against his brother James III, but escaped and made pacts with Edward IV of England. He led an invasion in 1482, along with the army of the English King, assuming control of Scotland briefly. However, the Lords turned on him, he fled to England and led another invasion in 1484 (along with the unseated Earl of Douglas and others), which was unsuccessful because of lack of support from England. He also offered to give

Ewesdale and other parts of the Borders to England. After being sentenced to death in Scotland he fled to France, where he died in a tournament accident. His titles were inherited by John, son of his 2nd wife. Several men from the Borders were much later (in 1493) given remission at Jedburgh for having been among his supporters, including Ralph Ainslie, Thomas Brown in Minto, Robert Dalgleish in Howden, George Davidson in Raperlaw, John Graham of Newton, Adam Kirkton in Crailing Mill, Patrick Mow, Thomas Riddell brother of Riddell of that Ilk, Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule, George Turnbull of Bedrule, John Turnbull in Bedrule, Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote and John Waugh (possibly in Hawick). Sir Alexander of Dalswinton and Garlies (d.c.1500) son of Sir William of Minto. In 1458/9 he and his wife Elizabeth had a charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle. His family held lands locally, including Howpasley, which he resigned about 1468, when he was still ‘younger’: these may have previously belonged to an elder brother, Andrew, who must have died first. Another brother was Sir Thomas of Minto to whom he gave consent in 1476 to his father’s grant of the lands of Minto. In the same year he also resigned to his brother the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle, also with the consent of his wife, Elizabeth, reserving for themselves a 20 merk land there. In 1477 he had a charter for the lands of Dalswinton, with the permission of his son, witnessed by his brother Thomas of Minto. He served as Scottish Ambassador to England in 1485 and fought at Sauchieburn in 1488. He is probably the Alexander mentioned in 1501 when it is stated that sasine had been given to him for half of the market rights in Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 3 years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, who was killed at Flodden. His other children included: Agnes, who married John, 3rd Lord Maxwell; John; Archibald, Parson of Kirkmaho; and Janet, who married Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1513) son of Sir Alexander and Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of the Laird of Cavers. He married Elizabeth Kennedy, probably a daughter of Kennedy of Blairquhan. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander, and was said to have also had 16 daughters, each of whom married a laird of distinction. He was killed at Flodden. Sir Alexander of Garlies (c.1508–c.93) son of Alexander who was killed at Flodden. He was the 4th of Garlies, and was a minor under his uncle Archibald, parson of Kirkmaho. He was captured at Solway Moss in 1542 and his son was held as hostage in his place. Also in 1542 he erected his lands into the Baronies of Dalswinton and Garlies. The Dalswinton Barony included the family’s half merkland in Minto, and patronage of the Rectory there. He was a Commissioner for Wigtownshire in the 1550s and sat in Parliament in 1560 and 1565. He acted as ambassador to Henry VIII in 1572. He was still alive in 1593, but died soon afterwards. He firstly married Katherine, daughter of Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. He secondly married Margaret Dunbar and thirdly married Catherine, daughter of his cousin Walter Stewart of Barcyle. His children were: Sir Alexander, who died before him, with his son Sir Alexander succeeding; John; Margaret; Anthony; Robert; William; and Helen. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1597) 5th of Garlies, grandson of Sir Alexander, the previous Laird, his father (also Sir Alexander) dying before his grandfather. His mother was Katherine, 2nd daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He inherited many lands, including the small piece of land and rights within Minto. He was knighted in 1590 and sat in Parliament in 1594 and 1596. He married Christian, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of David, Earl of Angus, who was widow of Lord Maxwell. His children were Alexander (who succeeded), Thomas, William, Helen, Janet, Nicholas and John. Alexander of Garlies (d.1649) son of Sir Alexander and Christian Douglas of Drumlanrig. He inherited his father’s rights in Minto in 1603; this included a half merkland in Minto, with the advowson of the Kirk there. He became Lord Garlies in 1607 and sat in Parliament several times. In 1623 he was raised to be Earl of Galloway. A firm supporter of Charles I he was appointed as a Privy Councillor. He married Grisel, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar and their children included: Alexander (d.1638); Sir James, who succeeded; and Anne. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of James of Tinnis. In 1609 he was listed along with Walter Scott of Headshaw and other Scotts as men that Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and his tenants were fined for resetting. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. His brother John was mentioned later. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Tynneis’ witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh in 1580. Alexander (17th/18th C.) dyker in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Margaret (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker Robert Allan. Alexander (b.c.1700s) hosier in Hawick. He was recorded as a stockingmaker in Hawick in the 1799 ballot for the Militia and at the Sandbed on the 1801 Militia ballot for Wilton Parish. His unnamed child died in 1811. He could be the Alexander who married Margaret Scott and had children Ebenezer (b.1805), Betty (b.1808), David (b.1810) and David (again, b.1812), baptized in Wilton. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Stevenson in Cavers 1809. Alexander (b.c.1820) servant at Cavers House in 1841. Allan (19th C.) from Barra in Invernesshire, he was a quarryman in Hawick. He married Agnes Ekron in 1857 and their children included: Angus (b.c.1857); Anne E. (b.1862); and Elizabeth (b.1871). His wife may have been daughter of Andrew Ekron, with her mother’s name being Elizabeth. Andrew (d.c.1460) eldest son of Sir William of Dalswinton, brother of Alexander and Thomas of Minto. In 1458/9 he had a crown charter of the lands of Minto, Howpesley, Longnewton, as well as lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and Wigton. However, he probably died soon after, since his brother Alexander resigned the lands in about 1468 and later succeeded to Dalswinton and Garlies. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as servant to the Laird of Riddell in 1596. He was accused of crimes by Englishman Nicholas Forster in the previous year. Andrew of Ochiltree (c.1560–1628/9) son of Andrew, Master of Ochiltree, he was the 3rd Lord. He served as Lieutenant and Warden of the West Marches in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also General of Edinburgh Castle. He settled in Northern Ireland at Castle Stuart. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1732 and 1737, and at Langlands in 1739. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull and Elespeth Douglas, residents of Midshiels and in 1733 another for William Turnbull, also living at Midshiels. He is mentioned in 1764 as one of the men for whom Robert Easton cut peats on Wilton Common, perhaps in the 1730s; he was then ‘weaver in Langlands’. He married Marion Huntly in Wilton in 1731 and their children included: Janet (b.1732); Robert (b.1734); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (again, b.1739). The witnesses in 1732 were James Scott and John Thomson, in 1737 were John Pringle and Robert Turnbull and in 1739 were Walter Scott and James Blaikie. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Langlands’ in 1744 and 1748. He witnessed baptisms for James Gray in Langlands in 1738, William Allan in Langlands in 1739 and for John Pott in Langlands in 1741. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: Agnes (b.1742); James (b.1744); George (b.1746); James (again, b.1748); Ann (b.1750); Andrew (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1755). The witnesses in 1742 were James Douglas (perhaps related to his wife) and James Dryden, in 1744 were William Scott and what looks like James Dryden and in 1748 were John Pringle and Robert Turnbull and in 1749 were Walter Scott and James Blaikie. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Langlands’ in 1744 and 1748. He witnessed baptisms for James Gray in Langlands in 1738, William Allan in Langlands in 1739 and for John Pott in Langlands in 1741. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: Agnes (b.1742); James (b.1744); George (b.1746); James (again, b.1748); Ann (b.1750); Andrew (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1755). The witnesses in 1742 were James Douglas (perhaps related to his wife) and James Dryden, in 1744 were William Scott and what looks like James Dryden and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Andrew (18th C.) married Jean Wright in 1761, both from Andrew were Walter Scott and James Dryden. In 1744 were William Scott and his wife Janet Douglas and their children included: Agnes (b.1742); James (b.1744); George (b.1746); James (again, b.1748); Ann (b.1750); Andrew (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1755). The witnesses in 1742 were James Douglas (perhaps related to his wife) and James Dryden, in 1744 were William Scott and what looks like James Dryden and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Andrew (18th C.) married Jean Wright in 1761, both from Wilton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Crozier. Their children (born in Lilliesleaf, but baptised in Linton) included: Peggy (b.1787); and Robert (b.1790). Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at ‘Longtoun’ according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew, J.P. (19th C.) owner of the farm of Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1870s. In about 1874 he is recorded owning the share of Lilliesleaf Common (and its teinds) that formerly pertained to the lands of Bewlie Hill, as well as Hermiston. Archibald (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of James of Tinnis. In 1608 he was among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald of ‘Dephoip’ or his sons. Archibald (19th/20th C.) gardener at Wells estate. He had a brother who worked on the Maxpoffle estate and sisters who lived in Melrose. In 1882 at Bedrule Schoolhouse, he married Frances, daughter of schoolmaster William MacNeill. After Wells estate was sold off he moved to West Linton. The couple’s only child was William MacNeill. Bell (18th/19th C.) spinner from Glasgow. It is said that when the first spinning jenny arrived in Hawick, for operation at the Tower Knowe Mill, one of the strongest workers was given the task of operating it, but gave up, claiming that no one could stand to run it. The employers, Walldie & Pringle, then called for an experienced operator from Glasgow, to show the workers how it could be done easily. This was probably around the early 1820s. Charles (b.1618) son of Francis and grandson of the last Earl of Bothwell. He was born at Tranent. There are papers relating to his lands of Wilton, Liddlesdale and others in 1647 and 1648. He fought at the Battle of Worcester. He died unmarried, bringing an end to the local connection of the Hepburns and Stewarts. Charles 6th Duke of Lennox and 3rd Duke of Richmond (1639–72) son of George, 9th Seigneur d’Aubigny and grandson of Esné, 3rd Duke of Lennox. On the death of his cousin Esné he inherited the Lennox and Richmond titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. As Duke of Lennox he paid a small amount in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Ashkirk. However, it is unclear if he played any role in local affairs. He served as hereditary Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He drowned at Elsinore on a trip as ambassador to persuade Denmark to join a war on the Dutch. Although he married 3 times (the third time to Frances Teresa Stewart, mistress of his cousin Charles II), he died without issue. Charles (d.1744) 4th Earl of Traquair, son of John 2nd Earl. He succeeded to his brother William, his other brother George having died before him. He was the last of his family to be Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Burdened with his grandfather’s debts, he sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford in 1687. In 1684 he was also listed as Lord of Linton and Caverton, when he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale and was succeeded by his sons Charles and then John. Charles Edward ‘Bonnie Prince Charlie’ or ‘the Young Pretender’ (1720–88) son of James Francis and grandson of King James VII. In 1745 he attempted to capture the throne for his father, from George, landing in Scotland, gaining the support of an army of Highlanders and marching into England, where they met defeat. After being on the run for several months in Scotland he was able to flee to France and died an old man in Rome. Although there seems to have little local support for him at the time, part of his army passed near Hawick in 1745, and many tales grew up around events said to have happened at that time. Charles (18th/19th C.) married Janet Broad in 1805, the marriage recorded in Kirkton Parish and East Bank Kirk. Charles (19th/20th C.) local writer, who used the pseudonym ‘Karl Brown’. He who wrote a poem about the Scalterford skirmish and may be the ‘Carl Brown’ who wrote ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is also the author of the novel ‘Andrew Macpherson: a tale of the Borders’ (1905), which was serialised in the Hawick Express. This tells the story of the minister of the fictitious Roselea (a thinly disguised Lilliesleaf) and his love affairs, with some of the action taking place in South Africa. David (18th C.) merchant of Hawick who married Ann Fordyce of Aberdeen in Edinburgh in 1776. David ‘Dave’ (1930–2018) son of David and Jean, he was born on Ramsay Road. Contracting polio as an infant, he underwent many operations. Not letting his physical condition hold him back, he and Billy Murray cycled around Scotland when they were 19. He only received 4 years of schooling, but was an avid reader. He worked in Pringles and Pescos, where his last years before retirement were spent as gatemen. Later he joined local walking groups and was a keen member of the Archeological Society, being known as a font of knowledge on Hawick and the nearby rural areas. He was recorded speaking in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. He met Marjory McGee at Waverley Station in 1949 and they were married in 1956. Their children were Elsa (b.1958) and Norma (b.1960). The family lived on Minto Place and Wellogate Place. Derek James resident of Wilton Dean, he published ‘The Armstrongs’ (2017) and ‘Wha Daur Meddle wi Me’ (2018).

Rev. Duncan (1841–1908) from Dunblane, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He became the first minister of St. Andrew’s Free Church, being called there in 1867 (despite originally having the intention of doing missionary work in Africa), inducted in 1868 and remaining for about 40 years. He was assisted for the first year by John Tainsh. His sister also helped him with some activities associated with his church. He was said to have ‘the appearance of a jolly farmer of some twelve stones’ and to possess a powerful voice. He was also described as ‘a Puritan of the truest type’. He was involved with the temperance movement and the National Bible Society and locally with the Cottage Hospital and with Stobs. He also researched into Teviotdale connections with the Covenanters, for example publicising the besieging of Drumlanrig’s Tower. He had deep sympathy with those persecuted in the times of the Covenanters, lectured on the border and was preparing a book on the topic when he died. His widow and Rev. John Smith of Denholm put together his posthumous work ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale and neighbouring districts’ (1908). In 1890 he married Mary J.S. Mitchell, daughter of the minister of Cluny and they had a son, John Livingstone (1894–1971).

Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Denholm. In about 1684 she was accused of attending conventicles. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Liliesleaf. An account of hers to Thomas Inglis for soap, muslin and lace from Stewart to Thomas Inglis in about 1684 she was accused of attending conventicles.

Esmé 5th Duke of Lennox (1649–1660) son of James, 1st Duke of Richmond. His father died in 1655 and he was served heir to the family properties and titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. He went into exile to France with his mother and died of smallpox. His titles passed to his cousin Charles. Francis 5th Earl of Bothwell (1563–1611) nephew of James Hepburn, the 4th Earl. His father was John, Commendator of Coldingham, being an illegitimate son of James V (hence he was first cousin of James VI) and his mother was Lady Janet Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, the 3rd Earl. He was a powerful force in late 16th century Scotland. He was lay Commendator of Kelso Abbey, and held many baronies and estates, including Wilton, granted in a charter of 1568. Patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick was confirmed to him in 1581 and 1585 by James VI. In 1586, instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border), conferred responsibilities on him to make bonds with leaders in Liddesdale and set up court in either Jedburgh or Hawick. Also in 1586 he released several lands in Liddesdale to Elliots. A charter of 1587 confers on him the forfeited titles of his uncle, the 4th Earl, including Keeper of Liddesdale and Hermitage. In November 1587 (according to an English letter) he rode to Bransholm and Hawick, there meeting with leaders from Liddesdale; although he publicly reminded them of the justice on the Border, his stepson Scott of Buccleuch carried out a raid around Berwick using his trumpet and standard. In 1589 there was a charge to him and Alexander, Lord Home, to keep peace with each other during the King’s absence. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 he escaped from prison in Edinburgh and there was a ‘band’ between the main noblemen of the Borders to lay aside their quarrels in order to capture him. He led several attempts to capture King James VI, including the ‘Falkland Raid’ of 1592, which involved about 300 horsemen from the Borders. This led to him losing all his titles, including Keeper of Hermitage, as well as his estates, to Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch (his stepson). A ‘summons of treason’ of 1592 lists him and his wife, along with many men (including some from the Borders) who were his supporters. Eventually forced to flee abroad, he died in Italy. There is a bond of 1604 in which he promises ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ to his servant Walter Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) when he was restored to the King’s favour and his former privileges; this never happened, with the Privy Council recording a complaint between his sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick against William Scott of Burnfoot and his brothers Walter and Robert, and furthermore his son and heir Francis was still trying to recover the lands in the 1620s. He married Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; she was also denounced as a rebel following the Falkland Raid. His daughter Elizabeth married James, Master of Cranstoun (and their daughter married Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs). Another daughter Jean married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. A son John was Commendator of Coldingham, and another, Harry, held lands in Teviotdale. His seal showed a ‘bend’ in the 1st and 4th quarters, and a rose and 2 lions in the 2nd and 3rd, together with a surnout, a lion rampant, an anchor and a shield bearing ‘F.S.’ He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who mixes up father and son – ‘King James the Fifth his bastard Son Was of as much regard, He married Buckcleugh’s Relict He being but a Laird’ [CWS].

Francis (1584–1639) eldest son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was rehabilitated in 1614, a few years after his father’s death. But he did not get back the bulk of the lands that had gone to the Earl of Home and the Lords of Roxburgh and Buccleuch. King Charles interceded to try to resolve differences between him and the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh. In 1632 the patronage he had held of many churches around the Borders (including both Hawick and Wilton) went to Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. His rehabilitation was ratified by Parliament in 1633. In 1634 2 of the ‘tutors’ of the young Earl of Buccleuch went to London to hear the King’s determination of the ongoing dispute he had over Buccleuch lands. He received lands in Lothian and made a financial arrangement over rights to the lands in the Borders in 1634. He married Isobel, daughter of Robert Seton, 1st Earl of Winton. Their children were Charles, Robert, Margaret and Elizabeth. Francis (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Helen Muir. His son William was born in 1637. Francis (b.c.1785) stocking-maker who lived at Appletreehall. He was also an army pensioner. His wife was Rachel and their children included George, Euphemia, Agnes, Francis, John and Janet. George (16th C.) farmer at Rulewood. His barn and yard are mentioned as part of the land dispute between Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Groundstone in 1729. He married Isabel, daughter of William Harkness in 1727, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1729, with witnesses James Scott and Robert Riddell. George (c.1715–93) Professor of Humanity (i.e. Latin) at Edinburgh University for more than 30 years from 1741. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He bought the estate of Midlem Mill in 1773, but must have already held Selkirkshire property before that. He was granted liferent of Shielwood by Elliot of Minto (probably as part of the common practice of adding supporters to the county voter’s roll); he renounced this right in 1779, when it was given to Rev. Simon Haliburton. His son Gilbert was a historian and reviewer. George (b.c.1780) servant at Groundstone according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. George (b.c.1795) tenant of the quarry at Bedrule Mill in the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and they has a son William. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch over the teinds of the lands of ‘Kalrige, Commounsye and Mylnesingtoun’; the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. Hercules of Whitelaw (d.1595) son of John Stewart, Lord Darnley and brother of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was said to have owned Whitlaw near Hawick, but this is more likely to have been one of the numerous areas of a similar name elsewhere (near Bowden, Morebattle and in Lothian). In 1590 he and Francis, Earl of Bothwell were cautioners for Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Martin Elliot of Braidley. A ‘summons of treason’ listed him in 1592 and in 1593/4 he was denounced a rebel, along with others who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. He was hanged in Edinburgh. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Sir Alexander of Bonkill. She married Donald, Earl of Mar. They had 2 children: Thomas, who succeeded as Earl of Mar, and also inherited Cavers, but died childless; and Margaret, who became Countess of Mar in her own right, and was the ancestor of the Earls of Douglas. Donald was Regent of Scotland for a few months, but was killed at the Battle of Dupplin Moor in 1332, 3 years after his uncle, Robert the Bruce. She secondly married Geoffrey Murray, but divorced him soon afterwards. She thirdly married William Carswell, who was Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She claimed the sheriffship of Roxburghshire and the custody of Selkirk Forest as a hereditary right; this was looked into by Edward III in 1334 and led to the appointment of her husband by the English (then in control of the Borders) in 1347. She appears to have been deceased in 1348 when her husband William Carswall was granted her rights and lands in Scotland until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. She may have also married Alexander Balliol, Laird of Cavers. Note that a later Isabella, Countess of Mar, was her grand-daughter. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Janet Halliwell for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. She could be the Isabel born in Hawick in 1650 to Francis and Helen Muir.

James name of 6 Kings of Scotland, see under James. James (d.1513) 1st of Traquair, 2nd (and illegitimate) son of James Earl of Buchan, his mother being Margaret Murray. In 1507/8 he was the first witness to the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scots of Whitchesters. Sometime before 1505 he married Katherine, grand-daughter of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He is said to have taken her away from her family and compelled her to marry him. She is said to have failed to inherit any of the Rutherford lands because of this marriage being to a kinsman. However, their son would later become Laird of Wells, after the death of her sister Helen. They had a son William (who succeeded and married Christina, daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester), and another son James, as well as a daughter Mary and another daughter who may have married Archibald, 6th Earl of Douglas. His widow complained about her treatment at his hands and the fact that she had lost her share of the inheritance to her sister; the result was that Rutherford and Wells went to her grandson Sir John of Traquair. He was killed at Flodden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to the tenant there, Philip, or to Helen who was listed after him. James (d.1557) eldest illegitimate son of James V. His half-siblings included Mary (Queen of Scots), James (Earl of Moray, later Regent), Robert (Prior of Whithorn), Robert (Earl of Orkney), Adam (Prior of Charter House) and John (Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham). He was the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso 1534/5–57, one of the last before the Reformation, and probably lived in the Commendator’s House. He gave the ‘Monk’s Tower’ at Hassetsdean to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1546/7 and granted a charter of Cockerheugh to William Turnbull in 1556. His seal is in the National Museum of Scotland. James (c.1531–70) an illegitimate son of James V, his mother being Margaret Erskine. He was also known as ‘the Regent Moray’ and sometimes ‘the Earl of Mar’. He became chief advisor to his half-sister Mary Queen of Scots on her return to Scotland in 1561, and was one of the leaders of the Scottish Reformation. In 1561 (or 1562) he commanded an expedition against freebooting Borderers. This included surrounding Hawick on market day to surprise people reselling stolen goods. 53 men were captured and 18 of them drowned in the Slitrig, ‘for lack of trees and halters’, while another 6 were hanged later in Edinburgh. A record of 1562 mentions expenses for ‘bere in the town of Melrose eaten by the horses of the gentlemen who were at Hawik in company with the earl of Murray at the drownyn of the thevis’. In 1567 he repeated the exercise on Hallowe’en, attended by Lords Morton, Howe and Lindsay and their followers. In preparation for their visit, Hawick was among towns who were charged to ‘have in red-dines bakin breid, browin aill, hors meit, mannis meit and uther neidfull ludgeing and provision’. They then captured 34 thieves, including 22 Elliots and 6 Croziers, having 11 of them immediately hanged and 7 drowned in Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that the hangings happened on 2 beams laid across the Auld Brig. 10 of these men were held in Edinburgh Tolbooth and we have a record of their names (5 were called Robert Elliot!). He may also have revisited Hawick in 1569, and certainly in that year led an assault on Liddesdale, blowing up the tower of Mangerton, burning Whithaugh, etc. There was an order from the Privy Council for a large number of men (from all over southern Scotland) to muster in Hawick to meet him on 8th October (moved by 2 days to coincide with the full Moon), ‘weill bodon in feir of weir, with xx dayis victuallis and provisoun’, in order to subdue the ‘rebellious subjects’ of the Middle and West Marches. He was Regent from 1567, but fell from favour after falling in a bid to seize the crown from Mary. He was assassinated in Linlithgow by his old rivals the Hamiltons. He was succeeded by his daughter Elizabeth, who married her kinsman James Stewart. James of Bothwellhaugh (16th C.) in 1581 he received the Earldom of Arran from James Hamilton, who was considered insane, but these titles were restored to Hamilton in 1586. In 1584 he was appointed Lord Warden General of all the Marches, but this only lasted 1 or 2 years. James of Tinnis (16th C.) ally of Scott of Thistlestone. His home was presumably Tinnis in the Yarrow valley. In 1592 he had caution ‘to behave himself loyally and ‘not come within ten miles of the King’s presence’; he was also cautioner for several others, including William Scott in Hundleshope and his brothers Robert and David. He was listed in 1592 among those summoned for treason and William Stewart of Traquair was ordered to demolish his ‘place and houses of Tynnis’ because of his involvement in the Falkland Raid. His sons included Alexander, John and Archibald. James of Wells (16th C.) recorded in 1592 when he complained to the Privy Council about Turnbells attacking his lands of Wells. Specifically, John, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule, threatened and menaced his servant James Newlands when he was ploughing. He may be the same as another Stewart. James of Shillinglaw (d.1607) 6th of the Barony of Traquair and also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He succeeded his father William in 1605, his 3 elder brothers all having died without issue. As well as inheriting several lands, he had the right of patronage of Bedrule Kirk. However, he only enjoyed his position for a couple of years before dying and being succeeded by his grandson, Sir John, the 1st Earl. He married Catherine Kerr and their children were John (whose son succeeded), Robert of Shillinglaw, William, Margaret, Janet (who married John Veitch of Dawyck), Gelis, Walter, Isobel and Mary. James of Nether Horsburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Shillinglaw. In 1634 he was served heir to his father’s lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. He was separately served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Roulwood’, ‘Majorwellis et Westlies’, extending to a 6-pound land of old extent, lying in the Barony of ‘Hareis’ by annexation. James (16th C.) described as a cordiner when he was a witness at a trial of Hawick Magistrates Court in 1642. He was deceased in 1666 when his son Walter gave evidence for a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk. He could be the John, married to Manie Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included John (b.1643), Walter (b.1646) and an unnamed son (b.1648). Probably the same James witnessed baptisms in 1648 for George Hope and for James Lunn. James 4th Duke of Lennox, 1st Duke of Richmond (1612–55) eldest son of Esmé and Katherine Clifton. He was a key Royalist supporter in the Civil War and is buried in Westminster Abbey. Among his many titles and properties were the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, being granted these by Charles I in 1641. In 1643 he is listed as holder of feudal duties for Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £18 5s. He still held superiority over Burnhills in 1653. He was succeeded by his young son Esmé. James (17th C.) recorded as resident of a parish in Clydesdale. He married Margaret Hutchison. Their twins Susanna and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses William Scott of Brieryards and John Scott of Whitehaugh. James Francis Edward ‘the Old Pretender’ (1688–1766) son of King James VII (or II), he was forced to move to France when he was an infant and his father was ousted from the throne for being a Catholic. He this became the de facto leader of the ‘Jacobite’ movement. He led the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715, and escaped back to France when the attempt to take over from George I failed. In October of 1715 about 200 horsemen past through Hawick and proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’. About 2 weeks later the Highlander army camped at Hawick Moor. There are many stories told relating to what happened during those few weeks. His son Charles, ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’, also led an unsuccessful revolt 30 years later. James (17th C.) resident of Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Falnash. His children included: Janet (b.1701); and James (b.1703). Margaret (b.1691) and David (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may have also been his children. The witnesses in 1703 were John Scott in Falnash and Robert Riddell, miller in Falnash. Sir James of Coltness (1713–80) also referred to as 2nd Bart of Goodtrees. He was eldest son of Sir James and Anne Dalrymple. He married Frances, } daughter of James, Earl of Wemyss and was succeeded by his son, also Sir James. This branch of the family often spelled their name ‘Steuart’. He owned the Chisholme estate in the mid-18th century, being involved in a dispute with John Elliot of Borthwickbrae over Braxholme Muir in the period 1743–60 and with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763–67. James (18th/19th C.) listed as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stonedge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation ‘Serving’ suggests that he was already serving, with his name appearing again in 1798; in the amended list of 1799 he was among those already serving in the Militia. James (b.c.1780) servant at Stobsden according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. James (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the ‘Mr. Stewart’ marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 24 High Street or the other one at about No. 55. He could be the merchant of that name whose child died in 1805. James (b.1815) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He excelled at wrestling and jumping and took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. At the 1840 Common Riding Games he won prizes for wrestling, the standing and running hop-step-and-leap and the hitch-and-kick. He married Margaret (1827–1901), daughter of William of Netherwells (who had the distinction of being born after her father’s death in a riding accident). Their children were Robert (who was born at Town-o-Rule and married Elizabeth Forster), William Glass, Alexander, Penelope and Mary. James (19th C.) from Wilton Dean. His children included Mary Ann (who married George Richardson), Margaret (who married James Hool) and James (who worked for the Manchester Guardian and was proprietor of ‘Gas World’). Rev. James (1821–86) born in Stirling, 2nd son of David and Janet Galloway. He was educated in Stirling and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery, became assistant at Largs and was first ordained as minister at St. Mary’s, Dumfries in 1849. He was translated to Wilton Parish Church in 1851 and remained until his death. During his ministry the present Wilton Church was built, Mansfield Glebe and Old Manse were acquired by the town, and Wilton Hill and Stewartfield were feued for building purposes. East and West Stewart Place are named after him. A large cross in his memory stands near the main entrance to Wilton Church. He married Isabella, daughter of James Reid of Wellfield. Their children were Elizabeth Whiteman, Isabella Reid, David Charles, James Reid, Catherine, John and Eleanora. He published ‘Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal’ (Hawick, 1877) and ‘Last Sermon preached in Wilton Church, 12th Sept. 1886’ (Hawick, 1886). His funeral sermon was given by Dr. John Mair and published in 1886. James (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was schoolmaster at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1861. Jean (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She was probably from the west side. She could have been related to the dyker John, who was also listed. Jeanie (b.1820/1) born in Ettrick Bridgend. As a girl she worked at Catslack Burn and there met the Ettrick Shepherd on several occasions, sometimes acting as waitress when her master entertained the poet. She described him as a ‘muckle jolly-looking fellow, singin’ his ain songs and making grand speeches, wearing aye a shepherd’s tartan plaid tied aneath his oxter’. In later life she lived at No. 8 Melgund Place. She could be the Jean, daughter of Charles and ‘Tibby Fraiter’, who was baptised in Yarrow Parish in 1823. Sir John (d.1419) son of Sir William of Jedworth and Minto. He was referred to as being ‘of Teviotdale or Jedworth’ and also became the 1st of Garlies. In 1406–09 he had an annuity from the customs of Edinburgh. In 1396 he married Marion, the only daughter (and heiress) of Sir Walter of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Dalswinton. His wife resigned the Barony of Dalswinton in 1420 (when he was presumably deceased) to be granted to Sir Herbert Maxwell. His widow married Sir John Forester of Corstorphine in 1422. Sir John of Minto (d.bef. 1512) son of Sir Thomas, who had given up the lands in Minto, even although the family kept the designation. In 1477 he was the eldest son of Sir Thomas when he witnessed a charter for his father and mother. He also served as Provost of Glasgow. He is mentioned as being ‘now Marshall’ and son of Thomas in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, in relation to superiority of Minto. In 1502/3 he and his wife had a charter for the lands and Barony of Minto, as well as other lands. He witnessed a couple of charters in Edinburgh in 1508. Also in 1508, as superior of the Barony of Minto, he gave a precept of sasine to Sir William Cranston of that Ilk for 2 husbandlands called ‘the Stewart lands’ in
In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1566/7, Sir John the Comptrollar' recorded in relation to a case.

He may be the 'Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the moneyn related to the benefices in several Scotch counties in the 1560. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared to the Covenant, saying that 'they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair' (suggesting that he himself was a dissenter).

He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his brother Sir William.

He succeeded to the Barony of Traquair from his grandson Walter of Traquair. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in 1555. John (16th C.) listed along with George Wilson as 'servants and ministers for the time to William Ryddail', brother to the Laird of Riddell. This was in a transaction signed in Lilliesleaf Kirk, suggesting that he may have been associated with that church.

Sir John of Minto (d.1583) son of Robert. He came from the family that had previously been Barons of Minto, and continued to use the designation. He still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, which was inherited by his grandson Walter in 1614. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. In 1556 he renounced his 3-pound land in Langnewton (called 'Stuart Lands') to Sir William Douglas of Lochleven. He was a Collector for moneyn related to the benefits in several Scotch counties in the 1560. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared James as King in place of Mary in 1567. He served as surety for Borderers in 1573. He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his son Matthew, who was also Provost of Glasgow. He also had a son Robert, recorded in Glasgow in 1564. His seal bore a horizontal band surmounted by a 'bend engrailed' and a cinquefoil on the left. He may be the 'Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the Comptrollar' recorded in relation to a case in Glasgow in 1566/7.

Sir John (d.1591) 2nd son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, who died in 1548. In 1559 he settled the family disputes over succession, signing confirmation with his cousin Richard Rutherford of the lands of Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston.

In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was knighted in 1565. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1581 it was confirmed that he had the 'half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll', including the patronage etc., which had belonged to Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Traquair (c.1600–59) son of John. He succeeded to the Barony of Traquair from his grandfather James, 6th of Traquair, being served heir in 1606. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater, and probably the Earl who purchased adjoining lands from John, Lord Balermino. In 1619 he complained (through his tutor, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw) that a group of Turnbulls had cut down a large quantity of timber and removing hay from his lands at Huntliehill and further complained to the Privy Council that the Turnbulls of Bedrule were still at large, despite being denounced as rebels in 1615 and 1616 for not removing themselves from Huntliehill. He was apparently a favourite in the court of Charles I and was made an Earl in 1633. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £210 10s in Cavers Parish, £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish (these both being for the Wells estate) and £108 for lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish, as well as the teinds of Bedrule, duties in Roxburgh and a large fraction of lands in Maxton Parish. His lands included Fastcastle, where 2 residents were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that 'they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair' (suggesting that he himself was a dissenter).

He married Catherine, daughter of David Carnegie, Earl of Souteshk. Their children were John (2nd Earl), Margaret (who married James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry), Elizabeth Stewart (who married Patrick Murray, 2nd Lord of Elibank), Catherine and Magdalene. John (1622–66) 2nd Earl of Traquair and also Laird of Wells, eldest son of the 1st Earl. He served with the Marquess of Montrose and then the Duke of Hamilton. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes in 1663. He married Henrietta Gordon, daughter of George, 2nd Marquess of Huntly and second Anne, daughter of George Seton, 3rd Earl of Winton. Their children included William (3rd Earl), George, Charles (4th Earl), John, Elizabeth, Isabel and Lucy. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1661 for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He married Janet Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1651); George (b.1653); and Margaret (again, b.1656). Isobel (b.1648), with no mother’s name give, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were William Laidlaw and Robert Paterson and in 1656 were William Donaldson and Thomas Currie. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1658) and James (b.1661). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Jean (b.1649); Marion (b.1651); and Jean (again, b.1653). The witnesses in 1651 were John Scott and James Liddell. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Cavers’ in the 1684 list of those who were declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. He may be the John whose wife Elizabeth Turnbull was also reported for attending conventicles. John (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.c.1696) Burgh Officer for many years in the latter part of the 17th century. Following his death, Alex Scott was appointed in his place. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1683 for John Barrie, resident of Winton Parish and for Thomas Turnbull. He was probably the ‘John Stuart’ who witnessed baptisms in 1685, 1687, 1688 and 1689, being ‘officer’ in one record, and was probably the man of that name listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a weaver who married Marion Scott and had children: twins Janet and Jane (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); James (b.1684); Jane (again, b.1686); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Purdom and Mr. Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk, suggesting that he may indeed have been the Burgh Officer), and in 1688 were Mr. Walter Gledstains and ‘litster’ George Young. He may have been related to the John who was a Burgh Officer a few decades later. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘caliario’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The meaning of the description is unclear, but might suggest that he was a shoemaker perhaps (or he could be the same man as the Burgh Officer). John (17th C.) dyker listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. It is unclear whether he lived in the town or outside. He is probably the John ‘dyker to Irland’ listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694; he may have worked as a dyker for Thomas Ireland. Perhaps the same dyker John was recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Town’. He was probably from the west side. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the John who in 1694 witnessed baptisms for John Williamson, for James Rutherford and for William Scott. John (17th C.) listed as a merchant on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1652. He could also be the John who was married to Grizel Thomson, and whose son John was born in 1680. Sir John of Minto (d.1697) probably nephew of Sir Ludovic. He was the last in the long line of Stewarts of Minto, who were prominent citizens in Glasgow in the 16th and 17th centuries and held the Barony of Minto. The family interest in Minto had probably been lost either by his uncle or grandfather Sir Walter, although he was still referred to being ‘of Minto’. He died on the outward voyage of the Unicorn as part of the Darien Scheme. Rev. John (d.bef. 1706) minister of Wilton. He studied at St. Leonard’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1670. He became minister of Wilton in 1683, the first Episcopalian since before the Reformation. There is an existing letter referring to him in 1683, following a complaint from the Archbishop of Glasgow that John Langlands had not preached on several Sundays; the precise nature of his appointment is unclear. He was also presented to Borthwick in 1688 (the delay suggesting there was argument over the extra duties and stipend). However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for William and Mary (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopalianism). In 1706 his widow Margaret Forbes, is recorded receiving money from the Session of

Argask Parish, on the recommendation of Jedburgh Presbytery. John (17th/18th C.) ‘workman’ in Hawick. In 1709 he married Margaret Hislop, both of them being from the Town of Hawick. Their children included Walter (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His son Thomas was born in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in Hawick in 1723 and ‘town officer’ in 1725. Probably the same John was recorded in the Town Treasurer’s book receiving payments in 1731 and 1732. He was likely to be the same John recorded as Burgh Officer around 1743 along with Francis Turnbull; after the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, complained to the Magistrates about neighbouring tenants keeping their livestock on the Common, the pair were ordered to collect these animals, and managed to bring several black cattle to the West Port. He was probably related to the Burgh officer of the same name who died about 1698. He married Janet Cuthbertson and their son Walter was baptised in 1725, with witnesses Henry Orrock and Francis Ruecastle. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. Sir John of Allanbank (1714–96) from the Berwickshire family, he was Sheriff of that county. He became an Advocate in 1737 and was appointed Solicitor of the Stamp Duties in 1767. He is listed as being life-renter of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigend and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigend Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given liferent of parts of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot as a tactic to increase his support among the voters of Roxburghshire. There is no evidence that he had any other local connection. He married Margaret Agnes Smith and was succeeded by his son, Sir John. Rev. William Brown was chaplain to his family before becoming minister of Bedrule. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He married Catharine Hall and their children included: William (b.1786); and Douglas (b.1788). The witnesses in 1786 were butcher Andrew Waugh and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller and in 1788 were wigmaker Francis McKenzie and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John Govan of Hermiston (d.c.1861) lived at Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the mid-19th century. He became a member of the Peeblesshire Society in 1827. In 1835 he was involved in a dispute over closing off an old drove road on his property at Hermiston. In 1851 he was listed as a landed proprietor at Cotfield, farming 97 acres. He was listed at Cotfield in Slater’s 1852 directory and was still at Cotfield on the 1861 census, living with his nephew Peter and 3 servants. By 1874 he was owner of the lands of Bewlie Moor. His wife was Anna and her ‘Lady’s Companion’ was Maria Mackintosh from Kensington, who appears to have been listed at Cotfield in a directory of 1868. He is buried in his family enclosure in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.c.1820) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in the Hob Kirk Baa along with his brothers and was described as ‘a very tall and powerful man and whom no one dared tackle’. He married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch. John Thomson (1830/1–71) stockmaker of 1 Loan. He later worked as a carrier. He married Jane Paterson in 1852. Their children included James, John, Agnes and another John (who all died in infancy) and Jane (who died aged 18). John (b.1830/1) farmer at Hermiston in 1861. He was probably son of the previous John. He married Agnes Marshall. Rev. John (1865–1930) born in Fife-Keith, son of John Macpherson and Elizabeth Wright. He was educated in Aberdeen, graduated M.A. in 1887 and B.D. in 1890, and was licensed by the Presbytery there the same year. He became assistant at St. Clement’s Parish (Aberdeen) and then at Selkirk before becoming minister of Kirkton in 1892, where he remained until his death. In about 1900 he complained about the state of Kirkton Manse and the money he had personally spent to renovate and redecorate it. He acted as Chaplain for Stobs Military Camp 1903–12; despite this, he complained in several letters around 1921 that the Army had not paid the teinds from Stobs. His surname was usually written ‘Stuart’. John Livingstone ‘Jock’ (1894–1971) born in Hawick, only son of Rev. Duncan of St. Andrews Kirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the Royal Dick Vetinary College. In WWI he served in the Scottish Horse and the Argyll & Southern Highlanders. He played flanker for Scotland’s Rugby team in 1921. He served in the Colonial Veterinary Service 1923–9 and became a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Director of the Veterinary Service of the Gold Coast (later Ghana) 1930–48. He wrote ‘The Cattle of the Gold Coast’ (1956). He was a large man, who was said to require 2 tubes in each wheel of his bicycle and to have once run over a lion! He is buried at Limpopo, South Africa. Maj. John Ross (1918–2015) from Loganswell in Renfrewshire, he moved to the Borders with his mother, who was a teacher at Yetholm and then Denholm. He worked as a tailor, but joined the Army Reserves in 1939. He was a survivor of Dunkirk and was then commissioned with the K.O.S.B., serving in India and Burma, and retiring with the rank of Major. He then became a tailor in North Berwick and ran a guest house there. He joined the Hawick Archeological Society in 1981, serving on the Committee and as Syllabus Secretary. He wrote 'Borderers in Battle', which describes the Burma campaign of the K.O.S.B.

Rev. John T. ex-army chaplain who was minister of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1978–84. Katherine (15th C.) recorded at the Justiciary held in Jedburgh in 1493. She was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in Horsehole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from her, specifically 6 ‘chattels’. In 1494/5 the same Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, including stealing 6 cows and oxen and 2 bullocks from her in Minto. Kathleen W. nee Scott (1928/9–?) growing up at Milsington, she married Sandy and later moved to Aberdeenshire. Her son James continued to own Milsington. She was a founder member of the Borders Family History Society and helped organise the first Hawick High School reunion in 1980. She wrote ‘An Historical Record of Borthwick Wa’s Burial Ground’ (1987), ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Robertson’ (1991), ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) and ‘History of the Scotts of Milsington’ (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998).

Ludovic (1574–1624) 2nd Duke of Lennox and 1st Duke of Richmond (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998). Margaret (d.1417) elder daughter of Thomas, 2nd Earl of Angus. After the death of her brother Thomas in 1377, she and her sister Elizabeth became co-heiresses of the Angus titles and estates. However, her sister surrendered her claims in 1379, and so she became Countess of Angus in her own right. She married Thomas, 9th Earl of Mar, who died in 1374; thereafter she was known as the Countess of Angus and Mar. She became mistress of William, 1st Earl of Douglas, who was married to her ex-husband’s sister, also called Margaret. She lived at Douglas’ home at Tantallon Castle and bore him a son, George, who became 1st Earl of Angus in the Douglas line (after she resigned the Earldom in his favour in 1389). She was certainly still openly living at Tantallon in 1388, and seems to not have been castigated for her behaviour. However, in 1416 she had to give up some lands in Berwickshire because of a dispute with the Prior of Coldingham. Margaret (b.c.1775) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when she was living as a widow at the Sandbed. Her children included Mary, Margaret, Wilson, Beatrice and Margaret. Margaret (19th C.) daughter of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. She was known as an attractive girl with a charming personality. She married civil engineer William Blood of Cranagher, and their children were Blindon (who became Gen. Sir Blindon, K.C.B.), Bagot, Robert and Margaret. Mary see Mary Queen o Scots Matthew (1516–71) 4th Earl of Lennox, son of John, 3rd Earl. He was assigned the rentals of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. After his death in 1575/6 there were complaints to the Privy Council on behalf of 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh and a large number of Borderers regarding payment of the ‘mails’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Sir Matthew of Minto (d.1610) son of John. His family still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, although it is unclear if they played any direct role in the district. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. His gardener was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1601. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Cokquhoun and had a son, Robert. He witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox in 1594. His daughter (or possibly wife) may have been the ‘young lady Minto’ who made a request for a miller to be made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1608. Matthew of Barnhills (d.c.1796) son of Rev. Walter, minister of Ashkirk. He was served as heir to his father in 1750, but was not infested in the lands of Barnhills until 1780. He had a ‘decret of excambion’ with Robert Bennet in 1775. In 1780 he appears to have sold Barnhills to Cornelius Elliot and bought it back the following year. In 1780 he had a sasine for the lands of Wester Barnhills ‘in fey’ (with Alexander Alison holding them ‘in livery’). He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. His sisters Mary, Helen and Isabel inherited the lands in 1796.

Robert 1st Duke of Albany (c.1340–1420) 3rd and illegitimate son of King Robert II, brother of ‘John’ who became King Robert III. He functioned as Regent during his father’s infirmity, and also after his brother’s death during the minority of his nephew James I. He was thus involved in internal power struggles in Scotland, as well as in leading military expeditions into England. This included indirect involvement in the ‘Siege of Cocklaw’ in 1403. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, his son Murdoch was exchanged with Henry Percy, and he besieged Roxburgh Castle in 1417. Andrew ‘de Hawick’ served as his Secretary from 1406. He married firstly Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith, and secondly Harriet, daughter of Sir William Keith. His children were: Murdoch, who became the 2nd Duke of Albany and was beheaded; Isabel, who married Alexander Leslie, Earl of Ross and Walter Haliburton of Dirleton; Margaret, who married Sir John Swinton; Marjory, who married Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochow; Elizabeth, who married Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld; Joan, who married Robert Stewart, Lord of Lorn; Beatrix, who married James, 7th Earl of Douglas; a daughter who married an Abernethy of Salton; John, Chamberlain of Scotland, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas; Andrew; Robert; and (a second) Elizabeth, who married Malcolm Fleming of Biggar.

Robert of Traquair (d.1548) eldest son of William. In 1547/8 he is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his brother John. Sir Robert of Minto (d.1553) son of Sir John. In 1529 King James V granted him and his wife the Barony and lands of Minto. In 1533 he was appointed as his representative by William, son of the deceased John Turnbull. William Turnbull offered ‘kindly service’ to him, and he delivered an old reversion relating to Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. He was Provost of Glasgow 1526–36. He married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. His children included: John of Minto, also Provost of Glasgow; Agnes, who married John Wallace, 1st of Auchans and Dundonald; and Elizabeth, who married John Maxwell of Calderwood. James, brother to the Laird of Minto, recorded in Glasgow in 1580, was probably also his son. Sir Robert of Shillinglaw (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of James of Traquair. His lands of Shillinglaw lay close to Traquair in Peeblesshire. However, he also had charters in 1614 and 1617 for the Barony of Horsburgh and lands elsewhere, probably including lands in Cavers Parish. In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Tweeddale. He served as tutor to his nephew John, who became the 1st Earl of Traquair; he was tutor in 1619 when there were 2 cases brought against the Turnbuls for cutting down timber at Huntlehill and for removing hay from there. He was a member of the Commission for the Middle Shires around 1618. In 1634 his son James of Nether Horsburgh was served as his heir. Robert (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Mary ‘Malkye’ (Mackie) in Roberton Parish in 1684 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1685) and Robert (b.1687), baptised in Roberton; and William (b.1694) and George (b.1698), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1687 were George Scott (probably the one associated with Easter Groundistine) and Thomas Cowan. The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott and John...

Glendinning, and this is the earliest existing entry in the Wilton Parish records. He is probably the James recorded at Easter Groundstone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) servant of Francis Coltar in Woodburn (in the Borthwick valley). He is recorded in 1729 in the Robertson session books, having an altercation with William Bell, farmer at Broadlee. Robert (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerleunrig from 1763. It is possible that the same man was ‘Mr Robert Stuart, schoolmaster, Wilton’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (‘Peggie’) Collier and their children included: Andrew (b.1773); Agnes (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); Robert (b.1779); James (b.1781); and Charters (b.1786). The witnesses in 1776 were the Associate Congregation and in 1781 were the ‘Special Congregation’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. He married Janet Cunningham and their children included: Janet (b.1772); Mary (b.1775); Mary (again, b.1777); and Anne (b.1784). The witnesses in 1775 were James Knox (probably the gardener at Damside) and John Lorraine. Robert (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as servant to Robert Pringle in Allars. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at ‘Back of the Woods’ in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at this house near Crawbyres. Robert (b.c.1790) son of Alexander and Mary Colquhoun. The origins of the family probably lies in the north, perhaps related to the Stewarts of Appin who lost their lands after supporting the 1715 and 1745 rebellions. He was tenant of Hawthornside farm 1834–47. He rented a farmhouse for another couple of years, but then left the district. He had a sister, Mary, and a brother, Alexander, who died young. He married Margaret Burnet and their children were: Alexander (b.c.1815), who died unmarried; Margaret (b.c.1825), who married William Blood of Cranagher, and whose son was Sir Bindon Blood; Robert (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Smith, daughter of the factor of Wolfelee and secondly married Esther Hudson; John (b.c.1820), who married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch; Annie, who married John Wallace: Thomas (b.1816/7), who married Annie Donkin of Newcastle; Mary (b.c.1825), who married Daniel McPherson; and William Colquhoun (b.1828/9), who married Helen Smith. His sons James, Robert and John were prominent for the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa; however, the youngest son, William, was considered the best runner in the Borders in his day. Robert (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabella Waugh and their children included: Martha (b.1833); Robert (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); Thomas (b.1841); Andrew (b.1839); and George (b.1846). Robert (19th C.) married Elizabeth Wilkie in Southdean Parish in 1837. Robert (19th C.) married Isabella Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1847. Robert (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Margaret Oliver and their daughter Mary Oliver (b.1850) was baptised in Cavers. Sir Thomas of Minto (d.1500) son of Sir William of Garlies. His brother Alexander married Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers and at one point held the lands of Hoppasley. The family clearly had a local connection, including land in Minto Parish. His great-grandfather was Sir William of Jedworth, whose mother was a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He became Provost of Glasgow. In 1476 he had a charter of a third of the lands in the Barony of Minto, as well as superiority over the whole of the Barony, which had been resigned by his father, Sir William (and with the consent of his older brother Alexander). He had a further charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle in 1476, resigned by his brother and attached to the Barony of Minto. In 1477 he and his wife had a charter for lands in Renfrew. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1486. In 1488 he was granted a fee by the Crown, for his service as Marshal. He also had a lease of the lands of ‘Dunrod and Fintelauch’ for his fee, and continued in this position until at least 1492. In 1490 he granted the lands of Nether Crailing called ‘Stewartlandis’, which had been annexed to Minto, to Bartholomew Rutherford. In 1491/2 he resigned the lands of Sunlaws, which were granted to Robert Ramsay and his wife Agnes Haitlie. He married Isabel, daughter of Walter Stewart of Arthurlie. Their children were: Sir John of Minto, also Provost of Glasgow; William, who became Bishop of Aberdeen and High Treasurer of Scotland; Archibald; Agnes; Marion, married Adam Maxwell of Southbar; Margaret; James; Nicolas; Robert, recorded owning some of his father’s lands in Renfrew in 1514–16; and John. The family kept the ‘of Minto’ designation for several generations (including 5 Provosts of Glasgow), although they appear to have had no continuing local presence. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Thomas (b.c.1800) publican on the Loan. He is recorded as vintner at the Nag’s Head in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living with his wife Elizabeth at about the first house on the Loan. Walter (12th C.) see Walter Fitz Alan. Sir Walter (1293–1327) son of James, who he succeeded as 6th High Steward of Scotland. He was knighted after Bannockburn. In about 1320 he was ‘Walteri Senescalli Scotie’ when he was granted lands in Roxburghshire that had been forfeited by Sir John de Soulis and others. This included Eckford, Nisbet, Langnewton, Maxton and Caverton. He was Governor of Berwick, commanding there when there was a siege by the English in 1319. He was a signatory of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. Also in 1320 he witnessed the charter of the Lordship of Jedburgh to Sir James Douglas. He married Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce; she died possibly after a fall from a horse, with their son John (who became King Robert II) said by some to have been born by Cæsarian section. He had earlier married Alice, daughter of Sir John Erskine of that Ilk, and later married Isabel, sister of Sir John Graham of Abercorn. He had a son, Sir John, who died without issue. He also had a daughter who married Sir William Graham of Kincardine, and another daughter, Egidia, who married Sir James Lindsay of Crawford, secondly married Sir Hew Eglintoun and thirdly married Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. Walter (16th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto in 1542 and 1544. He was presumably a member of the Stewarts of Minto family. Sir Walter of Minto (d.1640s) son of Sir Matthew. In 1606 he was involved in some kind of fight with a group supporting Sir George Elphinstone in Glasgow, being held in Dumbarton Castle for a while. In 1614 he was served heir to his grandfather Sir John in 2/3 of the superiority of the Barony of Minto (as well as lands in Morebattle). In 1618 he was made a Burgess of Glasgow. Apart from his title, he had no direct local connection and lived in Glasgow, being Bailie to the Regality there (but not Provost, like several of his ancestors). He was also keeper of Dumbarton Castle. In 1641 he was a representative for Clydesdale to meet with the King. He married Christian Crawford in 1598/9. Their daughter Mrs. Lilias Stewart was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1663. The family fortunes dwindled at this time and he had to mortgage his property in Easter and Wester Craigs in Glasgow, which was sold off by his son, Sir Ludovic. He may also be the Stewart who sold off the family interest in the Barony of Minto. Sir Ludovic was succeeded by Sir John, who was even more impoverished (it is said he was a pauper who was sent barefoot to Edinburgh to beg a favour from one of his rich Stewart relatives) and died on a voyage out to the colony at Darien. Walter (17th C.) mentioned in one of the first existing entries in the Town book of 1638 as an officer of the Town (along with James Kinnaird). They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. Walter (17th C.) son of cordner James. In 1666 he was a witness to the fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could be the Walter baptised in Hawick in 1646, son of James and Manie Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733); Janet (b.1735); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1741); and Mary (b.1745). Rev. Walter (1706–62) son of Bailie Matthew Stewart in Newton of Mearns, he was baptised in Canongate, Edinburgh. He studied at the Universities of Edinburgh and Leiden and was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1730 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1748 and again in 1753. In 1742 he was recorded in Selkirk as ‘minister of the Gospel at Ashkirk for victual supplied for the poor’. He also bought (from John Mackenzie of Devlin) the land at Barnhills in 1749 and hence is sometimes described as ‘of Barnhill’ (or ‘Barnhills’). He was thus designated among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1750 in Edinburgh he married Mrs. Mary Duncanson (who died in 1793) of Garshake. Their children included: Mary (b.1751); Matthew (1752–82) of Barnhills; Helen (1754–1815); Margaret, who died in infancy; James (b.1756), died young, and Isabel (b.1759, or Isabella). Matthew inherited the lands of Barnhills from him and after Matthew’s death they passed to Mary, Helen and Isabel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He was at Greenbank in 1780 and Stiches in 1792. He married Betty Miller in Roberton in 1774. Their children included: Betty (b.1780); Janet (b.1782); and Walter (b.1792). Isobel (b.1776) and Marion (b.1778), baptised in Roberton, with no mother’s name listed, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1792 were Gilbert Smith and Thomas Ferguson (both servants of Chisholme of that Ilk, suggesting that he also worked for the laird of Stiches). Sir William of Jedworth (d.1402) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Darnley and Crookston or perhaps son of Sir John of Jedworth, his mother being a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He was probably grandson (or other descendant) of ‘John Senescal de Jedwith’ who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was also known as ‘of Teviotdale’. He may have been an ally of the English until 1384 when Teviotdale was recaptured for Scotland, then fighting on the Scottish side and being rewarded by Robert II with lands in Roxburghshire. He received money from the French to support the war against England in 1385 and was present at Otterburn in 1388. He was knighted around this time and in the 1390s served as auditor of the exchequer, as well as commissioner at march days. He was additionally appointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, although the extent of the appointment is not known. In the period 1390–1402 he acted as Clerk of Audit according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1390 he was granted lands within Minto by John ‘Turnbull (‘Out with the sword’), who was his uncle. This was confirmed by Robert II in 1390/1, and included the patronage of the church, which had been resigned by George Abernethy. He was thus probably the first of the Stewarts to own lands in Minto. He was probably the Sir William who witnessed a Lindsay charter for Stouisle and Groundstone about 1390. An undated charter of Robert III (probably around 1400) grants him ½ of the lands of Minto. In the late 1390s he accompanied Archibald Douglas (later 4th Earl of Douglas) in an attack on the English-held Roxburgh Castle. In 1398 he was one of the ‘borowis’ for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document. He witnessed charters for the Earl of Douglas in 1400 and 1402. He led an unsuccessful raid into Northumberland in 1400 and was at the battle of Homildon Hill in 1402. There he was captured, tried and executed at the instigation of Sir Henry Percy, his body being quartered and displayed on the gates of York. He married Isabel, who was widow of Sir Richard Oliver, although her maiden name is unknown. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, 1st of Garlies, and had at least one other son. His widow Elizabeth remarried to Walter of Birkholme and his chamberlains over taxation. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594 and in the same year was appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1592 he was surety for George Douglas of Bonjedward and Andrew Douglas of Timpendean. He was made Governor of Dumbarton Castle in 1582. In 1590 he was surety for George Douglas of Bonjedward and Andrew Douglas of Timpendean. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594 and in the same year was appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1602 he complained about ‘reif’ committed on him by James Scott of Whithopei and in 1603 was in dispute with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his chamberlains over taxation. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James of Shillinglaw. William (16th/17th C.) servant of James Douglas of Cavers. In 1612 he, along with William Douglas of Whitriggs and his brother Robert, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue.

William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he, along with John, witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Marion Henderson and whose son John was baptised in 1661, with witnesses John and Robert Henderson. Alternatively he could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Agnes Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and James Dunlop. William (b.1657) 3rd Earl of Traquair, son of John, 2nd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1666. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Charles. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the weaver in Heap who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Cairns in Wilton in 1711. William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1690. He married ‘Mals’ Hastie and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John and James Stewart (who were surely related). William (1695/6-1760) tenant farmer in Gillfoot. He is buried in Ettrick Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Elliot in 1720. Their children included Robert (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). He may be the William ‘Steward’ who witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for George Langlands of that Ilk in 1724. He also witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident of Tandlaw, in 1729. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Groundistle in 1742. He married Marion ‘Houison’ and their children included Margaret (b.1739) and Janet (b.1742). The witnesses in 1742 were James Dryden and George Lamb. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1770 and 1780. He married Margaret Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Helen (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); and George (b.1771). Probably the same William secondly married Jean Scott in 1777, with children: George (b.1778); and James (b.1780). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid. The baptism in 1780 was performed by Rev. John Young (meaning that he was a member of the Green Kirk), with witnesses James Scott and George Turnbull. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Scott and their children included George (b.1778) and James (b.1780). William (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleafe Parish. He married Mary Mackay and their children included Margaret (b.1850) and Jane (b.1852). William Colquhoun (b.1828/9) youngest son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. He was known as one of the best runners in the Borders and was unbeaten over about 30 races. On one occasion he was dancing and playing the fiddle at Billerwell until 2 a.m., set out an hour later to meet his brother in Newcastle, arriving at 4 p.m., and then won a sprint race that his brother had put him up to. He ran against Willie Scott from Martinshouse, in a specially arranged match over half a mile near Stobs, and won. He married Helen, daughter of William Smith in 1853 and moved to Newcastle (also spelled ‘Stuart’, ‘Stuert’ etc. and in earlier times interchangeable with ‘Stuart’ as well as ‘Steward’).

St. George’s Kirk (sin’-jór-jeez-kirk) n. church in St. George’s Lane, built in 1843–44 after the Disruption as the Free or Protesting Church. The land was purchased by the new congregation from James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. The original building was designed by Andrew Thomson of Glasgow and John Smith of Darnick. Several articles were placed in the foundation stone (and could not be found when the church was rebuilt). A manse was built on Wilton Path in 1846, designed by Smith of Darnick. The church was known as ‘Hawick Free Kirk’ for more than 50 years. It changed its name to ‘St. George’s United Free Church’ in 1900 (after the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches); the reasons for the choice of the new name are uncertain. After purchase of the house and grounds of ‘Ellabank’ next door the church was rebuilt in 1913–16 using Doddington stone, but with parts of the original walls and a lintel inserted from the old building. The austere Gothic design is by architect J.P. Allison. It is a grade C listed building. An adjoining hall was built a few years later. It was re-named simply ‘St. George’s Church’ in 1929 (after the union of the United Free Church and the Church of Scotland). It contains an east-end window, commemorating the 1929 reunion (possibly the only such window in Scotland), by Lilian J. Poccok of London. The organ was added in 1926 in memory of Bessie Scott (a gift of Peter Scott & Co.). A separate West End ‘Free’ congregation had been established in 1855, and after that church closed in 1956, St. George’s was renamed ‘St. George’s West’. Since 1988 it has been known as Teviot Parish Church, with links to Roberton Parish. Kirk Session records for 1842–82 and 1900–14 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministers is: John Aikman Wallace 1843–70; William H. Gaulter, assistant 1859–64; John MacGregor 1865–73; M.P. Johnstone 1873–79; W.A.P. Johnman 1880–1923; Donald G. Ross 1911–35 (assistant until 1923); C. Sydney Finch 1936–1967; Thomas N. Hood 1967–82; Neil Combe 1984–.

housing a variety of people. In 1851 Thomas Smith and family were in one house and the Campbell brothers in the other. In 1861 labourer William Thomson and family were at the cottage with James Gledstains and family at ‘Stintyknowes Far House’. The hill there was originally the ‘stenting knowe’, where Wilton Common was stented, prior to its division in 1764. In other words this site was essentially the Wilton equivalent of the Caa Knowe – ‘Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair pleasant Now oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o’ ee a phesant’ [AY] (also written ‘Stintie Knowe’, Stintyknowes. ‘Stinty Knowes’, etc.; it appears to be marked ‘Lintinhall’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Stintin Burn (thu-stin-tin-burn) n. former name for the stream in Wilton, which rises on Whitehaugh Moor and flows in a southerly direction, past Whitehaughmoor farm to join the Cala Burn. It is marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common as ‘The Stintin Burn’, rising in several springs, as well as in 2 small boggy areas called Titling Moss. There was a ford over the burn, near the confluence with the Cala Burn, which was on the boundary of Wilton Common.

Stirches (stir-cheez) n. area to the north of Silverbuthall, reached via Dickson Street. The name is now mainly identified with the council housing scheme, was developed after the property was purchased in 1971, with building commencing in 1973. The housing comprising a series of streets bounded by Stirches Road and Guthrie Drive, and contains a primary school, but no businesses. The main road to Selkirk and the north once went through here. The name goes back at least to the 16th century, and was formerly ‘Stirkshaw’ or ‘Stirkshaws’. ‘Watt Scott of Stirkschawis’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. There were sons of the Scotts of Synton (or Whitslade) there in the 16th and 17th centuries. Thomas Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £214 for the land in about 1660; it was then in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. However, he sold the ‘six merk-land of Stirkshaws’ to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk (and his son William) in 1660. William Chisholme was owner in 1678 and it was still recorded with the same value in 1788 and 1811. William Cavers was living there in 1682 and William Telfer in 1683. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 when that parish was suppressed and that part allocated to Wilton. In 1694 tax was paid on 4 hearths for ‘Stirkshaus’ his house’, and Janet Lamb was listed among the poor. James Ormiston was there in 1721, Walter Lorraine in 1724–29, John Blyth in 1728 and William Lamb in 1729. George Graham was there 1714–44 and 1749–56. Thomas Scott was tenant in about 1756–64. The estate was valued at £214 in 1764. Walter Stewart was living there in 1792 and Richard and William Turnbull were wrights there in 1797. The estate was bought by James Farrar Blenkhorn in 1898, who was already renting the house. The house was redesigned and eventually passed to the Sisters of St. Augustine, and used as a private nursing home. The estate was sold off in parts, following Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922. The lower area was developed as the Stirches housing estate in the mid-1970s – ‘Coming in by Stirches hill, I saw auld Hawick a dreaming still’ [IJ], ‘Wi’ haltin’ step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills ower . . . ’ [WFC], ‘A gentle walk up the Stirches road Then, when ee look around Ee think wi’ awe this is hame And it feels like hallowed ground’ [AY] (the name occurs regularly from 1481 until the early 18th century as ‘Stirkshaw’, ‘Stirkschawis’, ‘Stirkshaws’, ‘Styrkschaw’ and similar spellings; the modern ‘Stirches’ is first recorded in 1713, but it is still ‘Stirkshaw’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728; it is ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1500, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1501/2, ‘Stirkschawis’ in 1502, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1504/5, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1505, ‘Stokschawis’ in 1512, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1579, ‘Styrk Schawis’ in 1579/80, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1580/1, ‘Stirkschawis’ in 1590, 1592 and 1599, ‘Sterchehowis’ in 1602, ‘Stirkschawes’ in 1604, ‘Stirkshawes’ in 1694, ‘Stirkschawes’ in 1678, ‘Stirchaus’ in 1682, ‘Stirkshaws’ in 1708 and ‘Stirches’ in 1720; the origin is clearly from Old English ‘styrce’ plus ‘sceaga’ or Scots ‘shaw’, meaning a wooded area with young bullocks).

Stirches Band (stir-cheez-bawnd) n. popular name for the military band of the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps at the end of the 19th century, whose Captain was John Scott Chisholme of Stirches.
Stirches Brick Works

Stirches Brick Works (stir-cheez-brik-wurks) n. works set up by Capt. Chisholme of Stirches, which produced bricks, tiles and pottery between about 1850 and 1870, mainly used in local building projects. The original idea had been to establish a pottery works, until it was found that the local clay was unsuitable. The works were abandoned when the price of transportation and coal became too expensive. The buildings were used by the shepherd when the estate was purchased by Blenkhorn in 1890. Some ruined remains can be seen on the right of the road leading from the Convent to Stouslie.

Stirches Burn (stir-cheez-burn) n. stream that rises perhaps near Priestrig and flows through Stirches and then partially underground to become the Howden Burn.

Stirches Croft (stir-cheez-croft) n. former farm on Stirches estate, just to the west of the road to the main house (it is marked on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map).

Stirches Hoose (stir-cheez-hoos) n. Stirches House, an extensive mansion above Stirches housing scheme. A previously existing house was the residence of the Chisholms for about 200 years, being built on top of a mediaeval tower in the mid-17th century by Walter Chisholm. The original tower was square (perhaps similar to Goldielands) and had a protecting courtyard wall. It was built by Scott of Whitslade, after he became Laird in the late 16th century. Above the doorway was a Latin inscription ‘Christus Rex Regum qui non dormitat in ævum protegit hanc ædem necnon sine crimini plebem 1503’ (‘Christ the King of Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this house and the people guiltless of crime’); a copy is still above the door of the present house (an extra ‘b’ on the end of ‘crimini’ suggests it is an imperfect copy). The lower floor had a vaulted ceiling, with the upper floors reached via a staircase in the roughly 6 foot thick walls. The second level held a public room about 30 feet by 18 feet, with a fireplace at each end, and there were sleeping rooms above. The upper stories were demolished in about 1666, with new accommodations built on either side and the south front added to the house. The initials ‘W.C. M.B. 1666’ were carved above one of the windows (Walter Chisholme and his wife Margaret Balderstone), this panel now in the north-east gable. Tax was paid on 19 windows there in 1748. The main house was added to and altered over the years, becoming a white-washed cluster of buildings. The main building was in turn largely demolished in 1899/1900 for John Blenkhorn, and rebuilt to the designs of J.P. Alison. This included a fabricated Blenkhorn coat-of-arms in stained glass on the staircase and a stable for 12 horses. The only mediæval parts surviving are sections of the south gable and west wall. After it was finally completed in 1904, James Blenkhorn lived there for only another 5 years before his death. There are photographs of how the house looked during his time there. After Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922 the house went on the market and since 1926 has been run by the Augustinian Sisters as St. Andrew’s Nursing Home, better known as ‘the Convent’. An intricately carved slab from the old house, bearing the Chisholm crest, is in the Museum.

Stirches Mains (stir-cheez-manz) n. farm in the Stirches area, to the left of the road just after the Convent. The farmer there recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls was Mrs. Scott. Alexander Scott was recorded as tenant in at least 1797–1801, while Thomas was also living there in 1799–1801 and James Turnbull was a servant there in 1801. In the early 19th century was James Bunyan and in 1841 was Walter Knox – ‘Owre the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches doun; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toum?’ [WL] (presumably once the home farm for Stirches).

Stirches Mains Hill (stir-cheez-manz-hil) n. name sometimes given to the hill near Stirches Mains, reaching a height of 266 m.

Stirches Quarry (stir-cheez-kwa-ree) n. former quarry on the opposite side of the road from Stirches Mains.

Stirches Road (stir-cheez-röd) n. the main road from Dickson Street to Stirches House, and also once the main road to Selkirk and points north. It now provides access to much of the Stirches housing estate.

Stirches Schuill (stir-cheez-skil) n. primary school in the Stirches housing sheme, built in 1976 on Roxburghie Drive. It’s characteristic feature is a forest of pyramidal roof lights.

stirk (stirk) n., arch. a young bovine animal after weaning, generally those kept for slaughter rather than breeding, usually referring to bullocks or steers, but also sometimes heifers — ‘…That he keeps about a score of sheep, sometimes more, sometimes fewer, two cows, and sometimes a stirk’ [DCW1765], ‘…also from James Wardlaw, 3449

Stirkcleuch Height (stirk-klooch-hu) n. hill that is the north-eastern spur of the Pike, between Penchrise Pen and the Maidens. It reaches a height of 443 m. Further to the north-east is Burnt Craig.

stirkie (stirk-kee) n., arch. diminutive form for a young bovine animal – ‘Each ‘eer, as Januar’ – end returns, Ilk yowe and stirkie waefu’ murns . . .’ [DH].

Stirk-rigg (stirk-rig) n. small hill about 1 km north of Bedrule farm, reaching only about 160 m in height. Just to the west of the summit are the remains of a circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter, probably a settlement. It was said (in the New Statistical Account) to have been removed by cultivation in the 18th century, but is still visible in aerial photographs. This was the former site of a farm, which was incorporated into the farm of Newton, with all signs of the farmhouse disappearing. ‘Stirkig’ and ‘Stirkig-hill’ were listed as part of Newton according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also ‘Stirkie’).

Stirkshaw (stirk-shaw) n. early name for Stirches, after the stirks which grazed there. It changed to ‘Stirches’ in the early 18th century. The Chisholms were Lairds of Stirkshaw for about 250 years (also ‘Stirkschaw’, ‘Stirkschaws’, ‘Stirkshaw’, etc.; incorrectly written ‘Strikshaws’ by Keith Scott).

Stirkshielhope (stirk-sheel-hop) n. former farm in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Styrkschielhope’ in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 8 merks and listed under ‘Forestia’ (which seems to have been the northern part, including the Hermitage valley). It is recorded as ‘Streichelhope’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, and still valued at 8 merks; the tenants were Robert Elliot in Ramsiegill, John of the Hill, Adam Elliot of Lees, ‘Old’ Robert Elliot of Ramsiegill, John Elliot and John’s son James called ‘Nelis Jok’. It could be related to ‘Stitchel Hill’ near Riccarton.

Stirk Sike (stirk-sik) n. small stream that joins the west side of Dawston Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is between Watch Sike and March Sike and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Stirling (stir-ling) n. Benjamin (b.1805/6) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Pauper (formerly Tinsmith); Deaf & Dumb’.

James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James ‘Jim’ (1924/5–) from Cumnock, he volunteered for the Royal Navy at the age of 18. He was a telegraphist and then served on minesweepers. He was on a ship the cleared mines for the D-Day landings and later his ship was sunk and the crew spent hours in the water before being rescued. After the war he joined the police, serving in Duns, Coldstream, Yetholm, Jedburgh and Hawick. He retired as a sergeant. He is Hawick’s last surviving link with D-Day.

Peter (b.1812/3) from Newtown, he was a tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1851. His wife was Agnes. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included George (b.1743), Mary (b.1745), James (b.1750) and Margaret (b.1753). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, who paid the 1785 cart tax there and is also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is surely related to James, who is also listed in 1797. He was an innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He may be the Robert who married Rachel Mathison and had children including Robert (b.1771), Sally (b.1774), Peggy (b.1776), Agnes (b.1778), Rachel (b.1780) and William (b.1783). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Junior Carter’ at West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He is probably son of the older carter of the same name. He is probably the journeyman wright (suggesting that one of the occupations may have been an error) listed on the 1801 Militia ballot in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the Robert who married Jenny Gray and had a son James (b.1803) baptised in Lilliesleaf. Other children, with no mother’s name given, who may be his, include Bella (b.1794) and William (b.1799).

stishie (sti-shee) n., poet. bustle, uproar – ‘When the stishie has smoored oot my rest . . .’ [WL] (cf. strooshie).

stitch (stich) n., arch. a furrow or drill of potatoes, turnips, etc. (see also tatti-stitch).

Stitchel Hill (sti-chul-hil) n. hill just to the north-east of Riccarton junction, rising to 318 m. There was formerly a fortified house near here (it is ‘Stitchelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stritcher-hils’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaen’s 1654 map).

Stitchelhill (sti-chul-hil) n. farmstead in northern Castleton Parish, near the hill of the same name. It could be related to the lands of ‘Styrkschelhope’ listed in northern Liddesdale in a rental roll c.1376 and ‘Streichelhope’ recorded in a rental roll of 1541. ‘Willie’s Airchie’ Elliot ‘of Strychill hill’ is recorded in 1590. In 1632 it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and listed as ‘Struchelhill alias Stitchelhill’ (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it was combined with Laidlawhope and Whiptroe, and extended to 1990 acres, bounded by Laws, Dawstonburn, Millburnholm and Roughley. The lands were rented by John Laing from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd incleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in Stivert (stivet) (stiv-er) n., arch. a stupid or obstinate person – ‘He’s an auld stivet!’ [GW].

St. James’ Fair (sin’-jəm-zeez-far) n. traditional fair held near Kelso, formerly on 5th August, and now in September. Its origins go back to the days when Roxburgh was a town, and the traditional location at Friar’s Holm, where the Teviot meets the Tweed, is near the site of the old castle. It was probably for a long time the biggest fair in Roxburghshire.

St. James’ Flid (sin’-jəm-zeez-flid) n. name sometimes given to the flood of 9th August 1806, so called because it happened juts a few days after St. James’ Fair. It was particularly devastating in Rulewater, with much property at Bonchester Bridgend being swept away. Sir Walter Scott described how the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. It also took away the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm.

St. James’ Hall (sin’-jəm-zeez-hal) n. the Masonic Hall on Union Street, formerly used as a dance venue.

St. John’s Kirk

Divinity. He married Margaret (‘Peggy’) McIntosh in 1923 and they had several children (his surname is sometimes given as ‘Steven’).

stiver (stl-vur) n., arch. a small coin, something of little value – ‘...A single stiver would I give? never! Though he fell at my very door’ [JoHa], ‘Nixt race when it came oot an’ won, Hed no a stiver tae pit on’ [MB] (from an old Dutch coin).

St. John’s Kirk (sin’-jənz-kirk) n. the former St. John’s Church on Oliver Crescent. It was built as an additional Hawick church in 1878–80, largely by donations from Rev. John Thomson and his wife (who had inherited a large sum). The builder was Alexander Ferguson. It had the town’s tallest steeple at 32 m or over 100 feet, and an adjacent church hall was also constructed in 1885. It also had magnificent stained glass windows by Waiels & Strang of Newcastle. It received its official status as a ‘quoad sacra’ parish by Decree of the Court of Teinds in mid-1881. The church survived for about 80 years, but in 1958 the congregation merged with those of St. Andrew’s and East Bank to form the new Trinity Kirk. The church itself was sold and partially demolished in 1960, but re-opened as Arthur Armstrong’s department store in 1962, later becoming Almstrong’s. The steeple was removed and some of the stained glass (by Waiels & Strang of Newcastle) was rescued by R.E. Scott and the Brothers of Charity, a monastic order from Gattonside, where they were installed. The buildings are now listened on the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland and although approval was given for conversion into accommodation units, no work has been done. A roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1881–89; Alexander Thomson 1889–94; William Brown 1894–1902; Robert Dickson 1902–05; William Lindsay 1906–13; Arthur Dunnett 1913–20; Walter Carter 1920–29; ??; William Wood 1958–59.

St. Jude’s Fair (sin’-joodz-fair) n. name used for a fair held at Hawick in the 17th century, specifically mentioned in 1673. In that year the Baron (the Earl of Queensberry) complained to the Privy Council that the Bailies and others in Hawick stopped his officers from ‘riding the fair’ (i.e. collecting duties); this was probably part of a feud between the 2 parties over the use of the Common. It was also known as the ‘St. Simon and St. Jude Fair’. St. Jude’s feast day was 28th October, which was only a week or so before the date of Hawick’s Winter Fair in the 18th century. Hence it seems likely that this was an alternative name for the Winter Fair, perhaps with the date being moved at some point and hence the association with St. Jude being dropped.

St. Leonard’s see St. Leonards

St. Leonard (sin’-le-nurd) n. Christian saint, believed to have been a 6th century hermit, although his historical existence is not certain. He became one of the most popular saints in Western Europe in the late middle ages. He is Patron of pregnant women, captives and prisoners of war, based on a version of his life from the 11th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. He is supposed to have created an Abbey at Noblac (now St.-Leonard) in France, where he is buried. His cult spread through Europe, with at least 177 British churches dedicated to him, including the hospitals of that name in Peebles, Edinburgh and Alnwick, as well as a smaller one at Ednam. There was additionally a nunnery named after him in Berwick and a hill and mill in Lauder. Shrines dedicated to him were associated with the curing of leprosy, as well as the freeing of captives and the safe delivery of children. It is unclear when and for what reason his name became attached to parts of Hawick Common. He is now regarded as patron saint of the Hut.

St. Leonards (sin’-le-nurdz, sin’-lee-nurdz) n. general name for the farm and neighbouring area lying on the Common at the top of the Vertish. The tenant of the farm plays host to the Cornet and his supporters during the Chases before the Common Riding, and officially serves the curds and cream breakfast on the Friday. It is traditional that the Flag is displayed outside the farmhouse during the Thursday and Friday morning Huts. The Hut is effectively a barn at the farm, which replaced a temporary marquee in 1924. The singing of ‘Teribus’ outside the farmhouse after the Friday morning ‘Hut’ was started in 1890. The tenant was Thomas Reid in the late 19th century. A stone axe found near there is in the Museum. It is unclear when the name was attached to the farm; it is labelled ‘Hawick Townhead’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map – ‘And lang may St. Leonard’s retain the power To feast the sterling Teri; And lang may the flag Owre a cornet wag, And lang may we a’ be cheery’ [JEDM], ‘In front of old St. Leonard’s now the throng With one accord assemble, old and young All share the duties that to them belong – Again the Common Riding Song is sung’ [JCG] (named after Christian Saint Leonard, the reasons for which, and era being unknown; also written ‘St. Leonard’s’).

St. Leonard’s Handicap (sin’-le-nurdz-hawn-dee-kawp) n. former race taking place at the Common Riding. It is recorded in 1875 on the Saturday, being run over 1½ miles.

St. Leonard’s Moor (sin’-le-nurdz-moor, -mär) n. another name for Hawick Moor – ‘Then in the breast alike of rich and poor There rises up a sense of joy refined, As on they journey to St. Leonard’s Moor’ [JCG].

St. Leonard’s Moss (sin’-le-nurdz-mos) n. another name used generally for Hawick Moss, for the marshy land behind St. Leonard’s farm or more specifically applied to the boggy land near to the north of Pilmuir Rig farm, in the middle of the Dipper Field. It is marked near Pilmuir Rig on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. In 1713 the Council granted the right to ‘cast bakes’ anywhere on the mosses of the Common, except for here, Winninton Moss or Whitchesters Moss. Burgesses were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733.

St. Leonard’s Park (sin’-le-nurdz-pawrk) n. race-course at the Mair, opened in 1854, and used exclusively for the Common Riding races since 1855. It is one of the highest race courses in Britain, and also used for a few ‘flapping’ meetings every year. The paddock was extended in 1889 and offices erected in 1894.

St. Leonard’s Vaults (sin’-le-nurdz-vawltz) n. former name for the Ewe & Lamb pub in the late 19th century, at the Sandbed/Orrock Place
the St. Leonard’s Stakes

the St. Leonard’s Stakes (sin’-le-nurdz-stáiks) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least 1887. It was at one time a ‘selling stakes’, with the winner to be sold for 50 sovereigns. The 1888 race was declared void after the leading horse slowed before the post to allow the second horse to win, while another horse had jockeys of different weight switched.

St. Leonard’s Well (sin’-le-nurdz-wel) n. spring just to the south of St. Leonard’s Moss, between Pilmuir farm and Pilmuir Rig farmstead. It seems possible that this was the first local place to be associated with the saint, with the farm name following later. It may be the same as ‘Lurgie’s Well’ (if that was not nearer to St. Leonard’s farm).

St. Malachy (sin’-maw-la-chee) n. (1094–1148) Archbishop of Armagh, baptised ‘Maelmhaedhoc O’ Morgair’, who was the first Irishman to be canonised, and is known for his vision of the identity of the last 112 Popes. In 1139 he journeyed to Rome via Scotland, England and France. The chaplainry of ‘Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm’ was mentioned in 1500 as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield excepted from the lease to Walter Scott of Bramsholme. This may have been the early chapel near Northhouse.

St. Margaret (sin’-mawr-gri’) n. (d.1093) born in Hungary, her family fled William the Conqueror, were shipwrecked off Scotland, and then befriended by King Malcolm, who married her in 1070. She was brother of Edgar Ætheling, and daughter of the exiled English Prince Edward. Probably because of her family’s influence, the Scottish King made many incursions into Northumbria. She had 6 sons and 2 daughters. She died a few days after her husband and son were killed at Alnwick Castle. She was canonised in 1251 and her feast day was 10th June (recently moved to 16th November). Another St. Margaret of Antioch was an early Christian martyr, and there are also other saints of the same name.

St. Margaret’s an Wulton Sooth (sin’-mawr-gritz-an-wul’in-sooth) n. former church near the top of Commercial Road (No. 34), built in 1894 to plans drawn up jointly by J.P. Alison and J. Chalmers of Glasgow. This replaced a temporary iron structure, and used red sandstone from Langtown Quarries. Originally called Wilton South Church, it was built for a new congregation established by the United Presbyterian Church in 1888. Wilton South merged with St. Margaret’s Church in 1940 and was linked to the charge of St. George’s West and Roberton churches in 1984. The building fell into disrepair towards the end of the 20th century, and the last service was in 1987. The congregation merged with that of St. George’s and the building was demolished in 2001.

St. Margaret’s Convent (sin’-mawr-gritz-kon-vin’) n. convent in the West End, built 1910–12, for sisters belonging to the ‘Third Order’ of St. Dominic (being free to engage in pastoral work outside the convent), the first of its kind in Scotland. They originally came from Stone in Staffordshire. The first 4 sisters arrived in Hawick in 1909 (to a rather mixed welcome), setting up temporarily at 14 Buccleuch Street, opposite the Catholic Church. They included Sister Mary Antoninus, Sister Margaret Mary and Sister Theresa Margaret. A resident chaplin followed in 1912. They took immediate charge of the Guilds associated with S.S. Mary & David’s, as well as teaching at the school. They also formed a Women’s section of the Sacred Heart Confraternity. They moved to Myreslawgreen in 1912, the foundation stone having been laid there the previous year. A hall there was used as the Church Hall for S.S. Mary & David’s until the new halls were opened on Buccleuch Street in 1930. The building is believed to be the last in Hawick built using the red sandstone from Denholm Quarries, with architect Reginald Fairlie from Edinburgh. From 1934 the sisters ran the St. Margaret’s Home hospice, which was built on the grounds of the Convent. The Hall was demolished in 1970, with Myreslaw-court built on part of the site. The last nuns left the town in 1987, with the Convent building being taken over as part of the old-age Home. Chaplains at the Convent included: Michael A. Payne 1936–43; William Grant 1948–60; and Thomas Kelly 1961–63.

St. Margaret’s Drive (sin’-mawr-gritz-drív) n. dead-end road off Bright Street, formerly being on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent. It was named in 1990.

St. Margaret’s Home (sin’-mawr-gritz-hóhm) n. residential facility for the sick and aged, off Myreslaw Green. It was developed on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent from 1934, with considerable extensions being made since. It was opened by Archbishop McDonald and was founded as a ‘Home for Incurables’, with accommodation for 45 patients. In 1987 the nuns left the town, and the Home was taken over by a voluntary committee. Since 1999 it has been run privately.

St. Margaret’s Kirk (sin-mawr-gritz-kirk)

n. church on Wellington Road in Wilton, originally called Wellington Church. It was built in 1886 to house a congregation that had followed Rev. J.A. Birrell out of Hawick Parish Church following some internal disagreements. It was erected as a separate parish by a Decree of the Court of Teinds in 1896. In 1940 the congregation merged with Wilton South to become St. Margaret’s and Wilton South, with the abandoned building being used for commercial purposes until demolished in 1975. New housing was built on the site in 1977. A roll of the ministry is: William Miller 1886–98; Charles Brownlie 1898–1904; William McCullough 1905–35; ...

St. Margaret’s Schuil (sin-mawr-gritz-skil)

n. Roman Catholic primary school, originally established in 1854 by Fr. Taggart, with the financial assistance of Fr. Wallace of Traquair. This provided education for the children of Catholics within the community, originally mostly Irish workers who came to Hawick to work in the hosiery industry. Within a couple of years of its establishment it had 50 pupils enrolled. A new building was constructed on the present site on Buccleuch Terrace in 1878, and later extended. The staffing problems were largely solved when the Dominican Sisters arrived in Hawick and supplied 2 teachers. A more modern building was erected in 1965 to accommodate 140 pupils, and was opened by Cardinal Gray. However, due to declining numbers, the school was closed in 2018 and the building was demolished in 2020. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1867–1951 are in the National Archives.

St. Mary see sin-ma-ree n. title sometimes used for the Virgin Mary, the mother of Jesus of Nazareth and wife of Joseph. The church in Hawick was dedicated to her in 1214 (and this may have been a rededication). A spring in Castle Cary (the main seat of the Lovels) was also dedicated to her, there possibly being a connection here. The celebration of her Assumption (i.e. the apparent taking up of her body) on 15th August was of local importance, being mentioned in the 1511 Charter as the date on which the token payment was to be made to the Baron, as well as in the earlier charter of 1407 when the Barony was granted to Douglas of Drumlanrig, and in the 1420 charter of half of Branhomie to the Scotts of Buccleuch. There were several other feast days associated with Mary, e.g. 1st January, 2nd July (Visitation), 8th September (Nativity) and 8th December (Immaculate Conception), which may also have been important in Hawick at one time. The entire month of May was also specially dedicated to Mary. James Wilson suggests that the date towards the end of May, mentioned in 1214, when the townspeople paid tribute to their church’s saint, may have led to the Common Riding taking place at that time of year.

St. Mary’s see St. Mary’s Kirk

n. St. Mary’s Church, occupying an eminence above the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot. The existence of a church in Hawick is first recorded in 1183, and it was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214 by Adam, Bishop of Caithness (as recorded in the Chronicle of Melrose Abbey, ‘Dedicata est ecclesia Sanctae Mariae de Hawic a domnno A. Episcopo Cathenensi iiij, Kal. Junii’, i.e. ‘the Church of St. Mary of Hawick was dedicated by Lord Adam, Bishop of Caithness, May 29’). The original was probably at least as early as the coming of the Normans to the area, and may have been much earlier and Saxon. It contained ornate stonework (a few pieces of which survive in the Museum, including pillars surmounted by capitals and also a pattern of carved foliage, which was probably painted). The original may have been roofed with red flagstones. It was reslated and repaired in 1670. For centuries the church bell was rung to mark the passing of a resident of the Parish. Tradition says that a bell and clock were brought from Melrose Abbey when it was suppressed. The bell broke in 1693 and was melted and recast the following year (the Council enacting that it was only to be rung for deaths in those families that had contributed to the cost). In 1717 the charge for non-Burgesses was 2 shillings Scots (6 shillings for those outside the Burgh). The clock is recorded as early as 1701, when mention is made of it being broken for the last 12 years! In 1718 the Council asked for contributions for providing a new clock, and it was repaired in 1747, with new dial-plates made on the west and east sides; it was repaired again in 1761 at great expense, a clockmaker being brought in from Redpath for the purpose and a stent being raised to pay for it. The current clock dates from only 1873. The old steeple may have been turretted with a flat roof and a belfry at one of the corners; this ‘bell-house’ was rebuilt in 1723, since its ashlar work was in danger of falling. In 1729 it is recorded that the bell was rung daily... at 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.; by the early 19th century the times were 5.30 a.m. and 8 p.m. Stone stairs were built up to the steeple loft around 1714, and the ladder to the steeple was mended in 1727. The bell was also taken down (and presumably replaced) and the steeple mended in 1747. The main floor of the church was still not fitted with seats in 1718, when the Session records describe a dispute over space for stools. Already in 1723 there were calls for an extension to accommodate the congregation, with the Minister expressing his disappointment in 1724 at failing to convince the Session to act. In 1733 there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to repair and extend the church. It was largely demolished in 1763, apparently being too solid to bring down easily. The church was rebuilt in 1763/4, in a much more plain style and a new bell was obtained at that time (at a cost of £50, weighing 560 pounds and made by Lester & Pack of Whitechapel); the cost was £497 (exclusive of the bell), the money coming from the heritors, the Trustees of Alexander Orrock, the weavers incorporation, the rural tenantry (who carted the materials) and the Burgh (who supplied the bell). Some of the original stone was used, but all previous ornamentation was hidden. The T-shaped plan used the long wall for gathering the congregation around both the communion table and pulpit, which was the common design after the Reformation. The steeple was also rebuilt at that time, John Purves, wright in Kelso, being the main contractor. The upper gallery of the kirk was then reserved for members of the incorporation of Weavers, with the front row kept for the Magistrates. Most of the other seats were reserved for heritors, farmers and members of the session, with very few for the ordinary townspeople (who had to stand). In 1826 it is recorded that some people were paying 6 shillings (presumably annually) for the use of a seat, and there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch for a larger church (which could seat 700 for a population of around 5000). Internal renovations were carried out around 1863 by mason’s Marshall & Ballantyne and joiner’s Scott & Wright. This work revealed the memorial stones of Walter Scott of Goldielands and some later family members (concealed under wood on the west-side of the aisle, where a furnace was installed), as well as some carved stonework from the earlier church. Severeley damaged in a fire of 1880, it was substantially renovated in 1882/3 by the Edinburgh firm Wardrop & Reid, essentially as a replica of the one that burned down. The main changes were the addition of 2 circular windows in the gables as well as dormer windows, a move of the entrance from the south to the north side, and the building of 2 internal staircases instead of 3. The 18th century tower survived the fire, and is built in rubble of 5 stages, being topped with an ogival slated roof and a wrought-iron weather vane. There has been some dispute over the ownership of the tower, with the Town Council regarding itself as the owners in the 19th century (and being responsible for its upkeep, as well as that of the clock contained within it); however, the legal status of such ownership was not established. The Kirk had its exterior refurbished in 1973, when floodlights were also installed to illuminate it on special occasions. It is currently a Category B listed building. The church contains the Buccleuch Vault, resting place of many of the earliest Scots of Buccleuch, which has been sealed since the 1763 re-building. The church yard has been in use since at least the 13th century, and was in earlier times used for many civic functions, e.g. for the election of bailies. The permission to erect ‘through-stones’ appears only to have been given in 1712, following an Act of 1708. Although a proposal for enclosing the kirkyard was made in 1723, the surrounding wall was only built in 1811, and repaired in 1857. The churchyard was closed to burials in 1864. The iron gates were added in 1937 to mark the 400th anniversary of the granting of the 1537 Charter, and in 1973 the churchyard was extensively landscaped and tidied up. The 700th anniversary of its consecration in 1914 attracted an estimated crowd of 4,000. It was used for a while as a Red Cross Military Hospital in WWI. Before the Reformation (i.e. the late 16th century) St. Mary’s was, of course, Catholic, like other churches in Scotland. In 1432 there was permission from the Pope to raise money (through ‘indulgences’) for repairs on account of how many people went there for the Feast of the Assumption (because of the church being dedicated to Mary). It was part of the Archdiocese of Glasgow, and in 1447/8 was made a canonyr and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell. Patronage of the church was vested in the Baron of Hawick for most of history, but given to the Earls of Bothwell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The church became insufficient for Hawick’s population in the later part of the 18th century, when other churches began to be set up. It was the Parish Church until 1844 (when the Old Parish Church was built), becoming a ‘quoad sacra’ church in...
St. Mary’s Knot

1860, and reverting to the main parish church again in 1987. Also in 1987 the interior was refurbished. After it was separated from ‘Old Parish’ the new Manse was off the Braid Road. From 1997 it was linked to the churches of Cavers and Kirkton. Kirk Session records exist from 1700. The oldest recorded communion token bear the mark ‘M.A.K.’ for ‘Master Alexander Kynneir’. Other existing tokens date from 1843 and 1860. A ‘gaufré’, or utensil for baking sacramental wafers, exists, and may be pre-Reformation. The National Archives contain records relating to the quoad sacra parish dating from 1833. A roll of the meenisters while it was the Parish Kirk is given elsewhere. The subsequent roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1860–79; Stewart Burns 1880–1925; Eric Raff 1926–27; William Simpson 1927–33; Walter Calderwood 1933–53; J.P. Wilson 1959–66; … Duncan Clark 1976–83??; David Burt 1996–98; William Taylor 1998–??; Marina D. Brown 2010– Alastair Cook ?? – ‘While, as up yonder Sacred Mount I looke: On which the temple that’s situate on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by’ [RRC], ‘Hark! the bell of old St. Mary Finds us armed alert and wary’ [RSC], ‘I sei the Slitrig whirlin’ doon, and I hear St. Mary’s clock’ [JEDM], ‘Where stands St. Mary’s pointing to the sky, Encircled round its walls in peaceful rest And with the dust of ages interpressed The ashes of the dead forgotten lie (The while the living pass unheeding by)’ [TK], ‘… And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL] (usually referred to as just ‘St. Mary’s’ or in earlier times as ‘the Kirk’ or ‘Hawick Kirk’ or ‘the Parish Kirk’ to distinguish it from the other churches).

St. Mary’s Knot (sin’-mā-reez-no’) n., arch. a knot tied triply, so that it is hard to undo – ‘He has tied them a’ wi’ St. Mary Knot, A’ these horse but barely three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (the note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ suggests that the line refers to hum-stringing a horse, but this is inconsistent with the following verses).

St. Mary’s Loch (sin’-mā-reez-loch) n. A Loch lying in the central southern uplands, about half-way between Hawick and Moffat. It is the largest body of water in the Borders, about 4 miles long, 7½ miles in circumference and 30 fathoms deep in places. It has the smaller Loch o the Lowes at its head. A description of Selkirkshire written in 1649 describes the 2 bodies of water as the smaller ‘Over Loch of the Lowes’ and the larger ‘Nether Loch’. There was a dispute over right to the Loch between Lord Napier and Scott of Rodono in the mid-19th century. It is famous for its picturesque views and as the haunt of the Ettrick Shepherd – ‘Long, long ago, ere the Yarrow wound Or the rainclouds filled St. Mary’s, Long, long ago, when on Ettrick ground The only folk were the fairies’ [WHO] (‘St Marys Lochs’ is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

St. Mary’s Place (sin’-mā-reez-plis) n. name adopted by the Council in 1946 for what was formerly Old Churchyard or Auld Kirkyard. The house at the corner with the Kirk Wynd, No. 1 St. Mary’s Place and 31 Drumlanrig Square was designed in 1891 by J.P. Alison and built for Miss Lamb; it is a grade C listed building. Most of the other houses in the street are quite old.

St. Mary’s Schuil (sin’-mā-reez-skil) n. St. Mary’s Infant School, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in the latter part of the 19th century. The buildings were at the top of Brougham Place, behind Trinity Church. It was set up through the efforts of Rev. John Thomson as the Parish School for St. Mary’s, and hence was also called ‘St. Mary’s Quoad Sacra School’. The first master was William Murray, who had been running a private school at 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) since 1850. When the new school opened Murray marched all his students there in a body. The school became connected with the government so it could have student teachers, and after the passing of the Education Act it became the responsibility of the new School Board. A wooden building was built to house the infant department. Eventually the school became specialised as an infant department, with the older primary pupils attending Trinity. It closed in 1967, the pupils being split among the neighbouring schools. The main building was later used by a knitwear firm before being converted into 2 houses, with the outbuildings demolished. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1852–1951 are in the National Archives. The Borders Archive holds registers for 1898–1967 and log books for 1874–1967.

St. Mary’s Shiel (sin’-mā-reez-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Sant-Marie Scheillis’, and there being no tenant at that time. The location is unknown, but the name suggests it could have been associated with Hermitage Chapel.

St. Mary’s Steps (sin’-mā-reez-stepz) n. common name for the main staircase leading to St. Mary’s Kirk from the Kirkstile. There are 33 steps in all.

St. Mary’s Well (sin’-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on the north-north-west side of Ruberslaw. It was probably a ‘holy well’, i.e. at one point having some religious significance. A former spring near Hawthornside was known by the same name, or perhaps just Mary’s Well.

St. Michael (sin·’mī-kul) n. David (12th C.) witness to a charter for Richard Lovel to the Priory of St. Andrews about the 1190s. His name is given as ‘David de sco michaelae’. John was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of ‘Ylistoun’ (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Branxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews. David is also listed and so probably his son or brother. It seems likely he is descended from Walter, who is mentioned a generation earlier. John (13th C.) witness in 1249 to a charter granted by Agnes ‘de Illistunu’ (i.e. Elliston) to Dryburgh Abbey. He may well have been related to this Agnes. He is probably the same Sir John who witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk about 1250; he is there ‘Johanne de Sancto Micaele’. Sir John (13th/14th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Sire Johan de Seint Michel del Counte de Rokesburgh’. Presumably the same man is listed separately as ‘Dominus Johannes de Seint Michel, miles’. His seal consists of an oval showing St. Michael slaying the dragain and a man with a hawk on his wrist, together with the name ‘S’JOHANIS DE SCO MICHALE’. He probably held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere in the county. Another ‘Johann’ is also listed, presumably his son, along with ‘Renaud de Seint Michel, clerk’ (i.e. Reginald), possibly another son. In 1311 he is listed among Scotsmen whose lands had been taken by Edward II, but were now returned (specifically his lands of ‘Heveside’) because they ‘came to his peace’. This is said to be an old Cumberland family and may be the same family who are recorded holding lands at Reban, Kildare in Ireland around 1300. John (13th C.) son of John of St. Michael. In 1278/9 he was accused of slaying Richard Bullock at ‘Cambok’, in a group along with 3 others. He was stated to be already dead, and so not declared an outlaw. Hence he cannot have been the later John, son of Sir John. John (13th/14th C.) probably son of Sir John. He was ‘Johan de Seint Michel’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. John (d.1451/2) holder of the lands of Whitchesters in the Baron of Hawick. He was listed on a ‘return of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam and was ‘Johannem de Samichell’ in 1426 when on the inquest for the inheritance of Eilrig by Walter Scott of Rankilburn. In 1432 he witnessed a document for the Swithtons. He was probably the John of St. Michael who was witness to the 1345 charter where lands of Branxholme and others in the Barony of Hawick were transferred from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He also witnessed a document for Swithton of that Ilk in 1432. In 1447 he witnessed a decree about James, Earl of Douglas being older than his twin Archibald; he was recorded being ‘de Quitester’. He was succeeded by his son John. John ‘of St. Michael’ (15th C.), son of John. He was probably the last of his family to hold local lands. He is probably the ‘Johanne de Sancto Michaeli juniore’ who witnessed a charter between Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. A ‘return’ of 1452 confirms to him the lands of ‘Qwitchester’, on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1455 John of Langlands attested in a notarised document (made at St. Mary’s Kirkyard) that he had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters. In 1455 King James II granted Whitchesters to David Scott, heir to Buccleuch for services to the King, the lands having been forfeited by ‘John of St. Michael, traitor’ (probably his father). In 1456 there was a further notarial instrument attesting that he had inherited Whitchesters from his father; by this time his is described as ‘quondam Johanni de Sancti Michaeli, filio quondam Johannis de Sancto Michaelae’, suggesting that he was already deceased. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455. Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as ‘Roberto de Sancto Michaelae’, and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. His son ‘Elmeras’ is recorded in about 1240. Walter (12th C.) referred to in a charter sometime in the period 1163 to 1183. Henry Lovel granted the Priory of St. Andrews 2 oxgangs of land in Branxholme, which was half of the lands formerly held by him (also written ‘de St. Michael’; it is possible there is a connection with the Carmichaels).
St. Mungo’s Day

St. Mungo’s Day (sin’-mung-göz-dá) n.
Sain’t’s feast day celebrated on 13th January, the anniversary of the death of St. Mungo in the year 613. He was Bishop of Glasgow and sometimes credited as founding the city. His day was celebrated before the Reformation and still referred to in the 1622 records of the local Commissioners’ Court. Also sometimes known as St. Kentigern, his image is included on the Founder’s Window of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

Street in the Terraces, named in 1931. The name was suggested by J.P. Alison, after St. Ninian (who died in 432), since he was one of the people to whom Trinity Church in Edinburgh was dedicated, this being connected to the Trinity lands in Hawick, near which the street was built.

St. Ninian’s Well (sin’-ni-nee-inz-wel) n.
Former name for a spring on the Woll estate at Ashkirk. It is about 220 m to the west-south-west of the Parish Kirk, on a steep slope. This is one of a large number of sites throughout Scotland connected in name with this early Scottish Christian missionary. Ashkirk Kirk, which lies to the north-east of the spring, was originally dedicated to this saint. It has been suggested that the spring could have been so-named because it was used for baptisms.

A stake, fence post – ‘...Of drystone dykes or fence stobs And far the eye can see’ [WL], ‘Compared wi’ a nibbie, a walkin’-stick’s nea better than a palin’-stob’ [DH], a coarse nail (the first meaning is probably the origin for ‘Stobs’ and ‘Stobi Hill’, while the second may apply to ‘Stobicote’).

Stob Cleuch (stöb-klooch) n.
Small stream that rises on Stob-cleuch Edge and runs eastwards to join the Gorrenberry Burn.

Stobedge Wud (stöb-ej-wud) n.
Plantation to the north of Minto Crags. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Stobedge planting dyke’ formed part of the western boundary of Crigend and Minto Mill farms. An unrelated farmstead called ‘Stobedge’ was in Ancrum Parish and once part of the Chesters estate.

Hill in the upper Hermitage valley, north of Billhope. It reaches a height of 518 m.

Stobicote (stö-bee-ko’) n.
Farm between Southfield and Old Northhouse. The lands were leased to Walter Scott of Branxholme by the Abbot of Melrose in 1500 along with other lands in the ‘Lordship of Ryngwodfeld’. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. The first owner may have been David Scott, son of ‘Wicked Wat’. In about 1557 it was rented from Melrose Abbey by Simon and John Scott, sons of the Laird of Allanhaugh; it was valued at £6 at that time. It was listed as ‘Stobbit, Coitbrugh’ in 1634, ‘Stobbit, Coithburn’ in 1653, similarly in 1661 and ‘Stobitcoat-burgh’ in 1663 (i.e. merged with Brugh in the transcription), when still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was valued at £260 in 1643. In 1684 tenants James Glendinning and John Simpson were declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. 7 people were recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James Scott ‘Drover’ was tenant there in at least the period 1712-29, John Elliot was living there in 1716-22, Thomas Davidson was there in 1716, James Jackson in 1717 and William Telfer in 1720-23. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of the combined farms of Over and Nether Stobicote, covering 694 acres, bounded by Allan Water, Brugh, Doeluch, Northhouse and Braidhaugh. William Edmondson was there in 1727, James Jackson and John Elliot in 1728, Walter Henderson in 1729 and William Scott in 1738. It was also the birthplace in 1765 of Gideon Scott, millwright. William Wilson was there in 1772. James Anderson was farmer there between at least 1763 and 1797. In 1788 the lands were valued at £260, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Hobkirk and family lived there in 1841. The route for the Mosspaull ride-out passes near here (also known as ‘Stobiescot’, ‘Stobicote’ etc., and is ‘Stobitcote’ on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Stobycot’ in 1500, transcribed ‘Stobbe-Tait’ in 1540, ‘Stobocoit’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Stobitcote’ in 1643, ‘Stobbitcoat’ in 1660, transcribed ‘Stobats-cate’ in 1684, ‘Stobitcoat’ in 1694, ‘Stobitcoat’ in 1712 and 1716, ‘Stobitcott’ in 1717 and 1723, ‘Stobitcoats’ in 1718, ‘Stobit Cott’ in 1724, ‘Stobitcot’ in 1718 and ‘Stobbitcott’ in 1799; it appeared as ‘Stobycott’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and on de Wit’s c.1680 map of Scotland, while Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Stobbitcot’; the name probably means ‘cottage made with nails’).

Stobie Cote see Stobicote

Stobie Cleuch (stö-bee-klooch) n.
Small stream joining the Hermitage Water from the west near Leahaugh Cottage, just north of Redheugh. On the lower banks of the stream there are the remains of 4 circular turf stells.
Stobie Rig (stó-bee-rig) n. small ridge of land between the Liddel Water and Foulshields farmhouse, just south of Stobie Cleuch.

Stobie’s map (stó-beez-map) n. map of Roxburghshire prepared by Matthew Stobie and published in 1770. Although this map is useful, it was prepared for the gentry and hence began the insidious process of anglicising our local place names.

Stobi Hill (stó-bee-hil) n. hill in the Ale valley, between Whitslade farm and Todrig farm, with Whitslaid Hill being the southern spur. There is a linear earthwork, an old field-bank, running from the hollow between this hill and Whitslaid Hill north towards Todrig (it is marked ‘Stobiehill on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Stobi Meadi (stó-bee-me-di) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf granted by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century and recorded as ‘Stobiniedhe’.

Stobitcote see Stobicote

Stobo (stó-bó) n. John (17th C.) traveller from Kelso. In 1659 the Hawick Council decreed that the would not ‘trouble nor molest our market, in buying either butter or cheese before the bell ring for that effect’ [BR1659].

Stobs (stóbz) n. estate and former hamlet about 4 miles south of Hawick, along the Slitrig. In the 19th century it had about half a dozen homes, as well as a post office, blacksmith’s shop and joiners (mostly in a long row of cottages), although there is now little trace of these buildings. It was also a station on the Waverley Line, converted into a house after the 1969 closure of the railway, with extensive sidings linking it with the military camp. The estate is heavily wooded, with sitka spruce and other conifers dominating. The name is recorded in the early 14th century, and gave rise to a surname. Thomas Cranston was granted the barony of Stobs by David II, sometime previous to 1370. A grant sometime before 1375 has Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, granting parts of Cavers to Thomas Cranston, with his lands of Stobs being excepted. In 1458/9 the lands were among those held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1509/10 it was listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers since the time of King David. In 1544 the lands were owned by Clement Crozier, and then passed to the Gledstains family. The superiority of the lands of Stobs was held by the Cranstons as part of the Lordship of Denholm according to a discharge of 1574. Gavin Gledstains inherited the ands from his deceased brother George in 1580. They were sold before 1584 to Gavin Elliot of Bailielie, who then became the first Elliot of Stobs. On his death they were inherited briefly by his surviving daughters and a grand-daughter, but sold in 1607 to ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’, who took full possession of it in 1614 (with the superior at that time being Sir John Cranston of that Ilk). In 1608 it was attacked by William Scott of Northhouse and a party armed with ‘swords, gauntlets and plate-sleeves’ threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted; 2 years later the same William and his brother Robert Scott attacked Gilbert Elliott of Stobs on the streets of Hawick. Beginning with this Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gaitins’, the estate became the seat of the Elliott family for many generations. In 1649 it was listed (along with Adderstoneshie) as a principal house on the Slitrig. The superiors of the lands were the Lords Cranston in the 17th century. In 1678 it (along with Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Harwood Burn and William’s Rig) was valued at £1633 6s 8d, and owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. In 1694 ‘The place & ofice houses’ of Stobs was taxed for 13 hearths, while ‘Stobs his cooks wife’ was taxed for a hearth in Hawick. John Henderson was recorded living there in at least 1726–30 and Andrew Lillico in 1736–41. Sir Gilbert Elliott paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748 and 15 in 1753. In 1788 (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) it was valued at £1633 6s 8d, with the teinds having been purchased from Douglas of Cavers and valued at £400. The estate was sold to the War Office in 1902, apparently partly because the terrain resembled the South African veldt. Over the next 5 decades it was used extensively as an army training camp and also prisoner of war camp. It was broken up and sold after WWII. A memorial stone cross was erected after WWI. A plan of the estate from 1779 is in the National Archives (also spelled ‘Stobbs’, ‘Stob’, ‘Stobbis’, ‘Stobbies’, etc.; the name is recorded in 1309 as ‘Stobis’ and in 1370 as ‘stokkis’, perhaps in error, with ‘the Stobbis’ appearing in 1458/9, ‘Stobis’ in 1509/10, ‘Stobbis’ in 1511, ‘the Stobbis’ in 1586 and 1592 and ‘Stobbs’ in 1643; the modern spelling dates to at least Gordon’s c.1650 map, but is ‘Stobs’ on Blaen’s 1654 map; it may be from the Gaelic, Old Norse or Old English for ‘stakes’ or ‘stumps’, perhaps meaning that it was a place marked by tree stumps).

Stobs (stóbz) n. David (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. His Stobs Camp (stöbz-kawmp) n. army camp, about 4 miles south of Hawick, established in 1903 as a summer training ground, with the officers stationed in Stobs Castle. The camp was based at the former estate of Stobs, including adjoining farms, covering about 10,000 acres. A small gauge railway track went from the Waverley Line right up to the camp, this tramway being dismantled when the camp expanded during WWII. Used initially by volunteer units as a summer training ground, it saw increased use around the time of the two World Wars and grew to be so large that it was referred to as ‘the Scottish Aldershot’. At its peak in 1915 there may have been as many as 15,000 men stationed there. After WWI the camp wound down, with many of the huts being sold off. It was also used as a prisoner of war camp, with about 6,000 German troops interred there in WWI, and a small number in WWII. After the war it was used for the repatriation of Polish troops, and then reverted to use as a summer training camp until it closed in 1956 and was sold in 1959. Horst Rossberg wrote his recollections as a prisoner of war in the 1991 Transactions. Some concrete foundations survive, along with steps and terracing, showing the location of many more. The training ground stretched all the way to Penchrise Pen. A small cemetery, just inside the camp, was used to bury the 36 prisoners of war and 6 internees who died in the camp, the bodies being interred in 1962; the memorial was rebuilt in 2018. Interpretation boards were installed in 2020.

Stobs Castle (stöbz-kaw sul) n. family seat of the Elliots, destroyed in a fire in 1712, resulting in the loss of many of the family’s early documents. A tradition is that people from Hawick were blamed for setting the fire. The original tower stood in a plantation about 400 yards south-east of the present structure, but there are no remains to be seen (it is marked as the site on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). A new mansion was built on the same site in 1719, but in 1764 it also burned down. It was said to be ‘a twae storey heigh thack-house’ [WaD]. It is said that many of the foundation stones were removed from the old castle in 1797. William Bulman was recorded as a servant there in 1799. The house was rebuilt by Sir William Elliot from around 1793, as a gothic-style residence. After that it was always referred to as ‘Stobs Castle’ rather than ‘Stobs Hoose’. The builder was John Laing of Hawick, and the architect was Robert Adam, this being his last castle. It narrowly escaped burning down again in 1824, being saved by the actions of the servants. There were also later Victorian alterations, around 1865, probably by James Anderson Hamilton. A carved family coat of arms hangs over the north entrance. 50 High Street has a freestone cornice salvaged from the Castle at the beginning of the 19th century. Manufacturer Thomas Lindsay Watson lived there briefly around 1892, when it hosted a demonstration of perhaps 6,000 people in support of the Liberal Unionists. When the estate was sold to the War Office in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach also survives, along with the Grecian-style gateway to the approach road. And along the track south of the house is the stable block.

Stobs Cemetery (stöbz-see-ni-ree) n. small cemetery situated just inside Stobs Camp, south of the former station. This was where 36 prisoners of war and 6 civilian internees were buried. A memorial was built from stones carried up from the Slitrig by Mr. Oliver, farmer at Winningtonrig. The names of those buried there were recorded along with an inscription: ‘To our comrades who died far away from their country’. The site was maintained by locals until 1962, when the bodies were reinterred at Cannock Chase German Military Cemetery in Staffordshire. A few remains of the memorial can still be seen today.

Stobs Cottage (stöbz-ko-eej) n. former name for a cottage on the Stobs estate. The estate manager lived there in the 1860s.

Stobs Crater (stöbz-krä-ur) n. crater on Mars, named after the area of Stobs in 1976. It is roughly 12 km in size, and situated at about 5° S, 321.6° E.

Stobsden (stöbz-den) n. former name for a place in Cavers Parish, presumably close to Stobs. It could be the same as Stobs Wudfit. John Learmonth was a farm servant there in 1799 and James Stewart in 1801.

Stobs Hoose (stöbz-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Stobs Castle, particularly before the baronial style mansion was built in the late 18th century. The estate was owned from the late 16th century by the Elliots of Stobs, who built a fortified house there, which was destroyed in 1712. The new house was built in 1719, but was... lately replaced by 1800. There were also additions around 1865.

Stobsiade (stob-zeed-ad) n. newspaper produced by German prisoners of war at Stobs during WWI, with 26 issues being produced in the period 1915–19. At first it was produced by civilian internees, but by late 1916 (when the civilians were moved to the Isle of Man) it was continued by the military prisoners. It contained advertisements, news, poetry, puzzles and short stories. About 4,000 copies of each issue were printed (by Scott & Paterson in Hawick). The name means ‘news from Stobs’ in German, but is a play on the popular 18th-century epic poem ‘Jobsiade’. Despite censorship and other restrictions, the publication contains remarkable creativity and humour.

Stobs Side Hill (stob-shaw-hil) n. hill just to the west of Headshaw. It reaches a height of 298 m and may correspond to the ‘Stobs Sidin’ recorded in a description of boundaries in Headshaw in 1780.

Stobs Side Hill (stob-sid-hil) n. former name for a hill on the farm of Dryden. It is recorded as ‘Stobs Sidehill’ in 1780 and probably corresponds to the modern Stobshaw Hill.

Stobs Limery (stobz-ly-mu-ree) n. name used for the lime works at Limekilnedge. It started production in the 1790s and ran into the latter part of the 19th century.

Stobs Lodge (stobz-loj) n. former lodge house at Woodfoot, near the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle, on the west side of the Slitrig. In the early 1900s it was let in the summer to a family called Nixon.

Stobs Loch (stobz-loch) n. another name for Barnes Loch.

Stobs Park (stobz-pawrk) n. former name for a farm near Stobs.

Stobs Sidins (stobz-si-dinz) n. railway sidings built for Stobs Military Camp at Acreknowe farm. This made a connection to the Stobs Camp internal tramway via a transfer platform. The tramway connected various parts of the camp at different times, e.g. it once ran to the rifle range on Penchris Pen, and also to the ‘Meldrum Destructor’ (i.e. incinerator).

Stobs Station (stobz-stashin) n. former railway station at Stobs, once much used by the military. It was originally called Barnes, but renamed almost right away to Stobs. It had an ‘up’ platform (to London) and a ‘down’ platform (to Edinburgh) as well as a bay platform on the west side. The station building was built in a baronial style. Just south of the station was the cemetery for prisoners of war and internees.

Stobs War Memorial see Slitrig War Memorial

stock (stok) n., arch. the stalk of a plant, particularly of the cabbage family – ‘...admitted that she ‘went to the Roan Garden on the Sabbath day, and did there cut three or four stocks of green kale’’ [JaT].

stock (stok) n., arch. the rental on a leased farm in additional to the teinds, this being in kind or its monetary equivalent, the amount of crops produced in addition to the tithe – ‘This is estimated to pay communis annis [in average years], fyve scor and 12 bolls in stok, and 28 bolls in teynd’ [PR1627], ‘Rentall of the Dutches of Buccluches feme Lands of the baronie of Brauxholm en wolton and whytchester sett stock and teind att Hawick’ [Buc1690].

Stockcleugh Edge (stok-kloo-eh-ej) n. slope on the border with Dumfriesshire, being the southern part of Tamond Heights (it appears to be marked ‘Slack Cleugh Edge’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Stock Grain (stok-grain) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Stock Hill, joining Ladshaw Sike and Gavel Sike to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Stock Hill (stok-hil) n. hill lying between the headwaters of the Teviot and Borthwick valleys on the border with Dumfries and Galloway, reaching a height of 477 m (1563 ft) and having a triangulation pillar. It is about 2 km south of Craikhope. It was at the western corner of Hawick Parish before Roberton separated off. This was the site of the crash of a SEPECAT Jaguar GR1A jet (XX732) in 1986, on practice manoeuvres, with the death of its American pilot, Capt. David Ronald Buteau Jr. stockin soles (sto-kin-solz) n., pl. the wearing socks of without shoes – ‘...hei sits be the fire in his stickin soles’ [IWL] (note that in standard English the phrase is ‘stockinged feet’ or sometimes ‘stocking feet’).

stock-in-tred (stok-in-tred) n., arch. stock-in-trade – ‘The commercial kind are pairt o’ the stock-in-tred o’ maist bacca-shops ...’ [DH].

stockit (sto-ki, -kee) adj., pp. stocked – ‘Then up wi’ the purse an’ the siller, A weel-stockit maiden for me’ [JoHa], ‘My faither was laird o’ a weel stockit mailin’ ‘[JT].

stocks (stoks) n., pl. long, white neckcloth worn as part of formal riding gear, popular in the 19th century. It was first adopted by the Principals at the 1928 Common Riding.

the stocks (thu-stoks) n. wooden boards with semi-circles cut into them, placed together to hold people as a form of public punishment. Hawick’s stocks were next to the Mercat Cross. A new set is recorded being purchased in 1755. In 1787 the ‘stocks, wood and iron work, and lock’ were mended. They were in regular use until the end of the 18th century, and are preserved in the Museum (in fact the wood crumbled and was replaced with a replica, using the original ironwork around 1898). People were sentenced by the Bailies to spend up to several days in the stocks for relatively minor crimes, including theft and assault. Usually the feet were secured, but sometimes also the arms. The last use was for an elderly female offender in November 1800 – ‘...and sal lie aucht days in the stocks, and stand with ane paper with the theft written upon their forehead at the mercat-crosse, upon the mercat day’ [BR1640], ‘...the baylyes fynes and onlaws him in fyftie pound Scotts, and ordaines him to go to the stockis immediately, and yrin to continue during the sd. regall baylyea his will and pleasure’ [BR1693] (see also the juggs).

Stockwell (stok-wel) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant of Hawick butcher Andrew Wilson. In 1815 he was found not guilty of assaulting Janet Ogilvie (or Orrock). It is stated that both were married people. He appears to have been married to Elizabeth Rae and had a daughter Isabella in Kelso in 1812. He was probably son of Thomas and Margaret Fairbairn, born in Kelso in 1789.

Stockwell Orphanage (stok-wel-or-fi-neej) n. orphanage in London, established in 1867 for boys and in 1879 for girls. In the 1880s Hawick had a circulating library, based at 2 Dovecote Street, to raise money for the orphanage.

stockyaird (stok-yaird) n. a stockyard, area where livestock is kept on a farm, typically close to a slaughterhouse – ‘...and convey the chests containin the plate ti Caverton Mill where it was buried in the stockyaird where it lay until the danger was passed’ [IWl].

Stoddart (sto-dur’) n. Andrew (19th C.) married Helen Little in Robertson Parish in 1831. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with John and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was listed in 1578/9 among Borderers deemed to have continued in thieving and hence declared as fugitives. He was stated to have been ‘enterit’ and ‘deliverit in the sherif of Roxburch his handis’. In 1586/7 he was ‘cobleman at Hawick’ when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Perhaps the same man (or else his son) was ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobleman at Hawick’ when listed among those declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. What happened to him is not recorded, but it seems likely he would have been hanged or fled the area. His existence shows that there was a man employed to ferry people across the Coble Pool from at least the latter part of the 16th century. John (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. John (18th C.) described being ‘in Hawick’ in 1725. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for William ‘workman in Hawick’ in 1722. He married Margaret Stuart in Hawick Parish in 1720. Their children included: Archibald (b.1721); John (b.1723); and Janet (b.1720). The witnesses in 1725 were weaver James Weens and wheelwright William Wilson. John (18th C.) recorded in ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ in 1764, 1766 and 1772 when 3 of his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Mary Anderson in Robertson in 1762. Probably the same John was father of Isabel (b.1764), Betty (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), Jean (b.1770) and Margaret (b.1772). John (b.c.1780) journeyman nailer in Minto according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He may have worked with John Oliver, who was also listed as nailer in Minto in 1801. Kenneth (1664– ) born in Hawick, he qualified as a music teacher then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of ‘Australian Hairdresser of the Year’ in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Riddell and their son Alexander was baptised in 1637. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at the Flex. He married Jean Little and their children included: Isobel (b.1671); and Margaret (b.1674). Jane (b.1676), with no mother’s name given, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1674 were William Henderson (also in Flex) and Walter Martin. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at the Flex, probably related to the earlier Robert who was there. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson ‘younger in Flex’. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Jane (b.1684); Janet (b.1686); Robert (b.1691); William (b.1693); Margaret (b.1695); Bessie (b.1701); and Francis (b.1704). The witnesses in 1695 were William and Francis Henderson and in 1704 were William Henderson (also in the Flex) and Andrew Riddell (in Goldielands). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Little in Hawick Parish in 1726. Robert (d.1759) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw, probably in 1756. Their children included: John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759), baptised after he had already died. The witnesses in 1759 were John Turnbull and Patrick Maxwell. Thomas (18th C.) labourer in the Hawick area. He was a ‘workman’ in 1725, and was living at Stouslie in 1729, Tandlaw in 1732 and Burnfoot in 1737. He married Elspeth Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1725) and James (b.1729), baptised in Hawick; and Margaret (b.1729), Thomas (b.1732) and James (again, b.1737), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1725 were Walter Nixon and Simon Miller (both in Hawick Shiel), in 1729 were William Grieve and John Scott, in 1732 were John and James Dryden and in 1737 were James Blyth and Walter Scott. Thomas (1828–1905) born in Roxburgh, he attended school in Hawick, being apprenticed as a joiner at 16. He joined the army at 20 and left for Australia in 1853. In the Ballarat area (near Melbourne) he worked as a miner, becoming a speculator and director of many mining companies. By 1880 he was a wealthy man, purchasing statues, and inspiring a local zeal that has led to Ballaarat being called the ‘City of Statues’. His bust sits in the local Town Hall. He is recorded subscribing to Hawick Common Riding in the 1880s Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was herd at Harwood in 1711. He married Jean Scott in 1709, the marriage being recorded in Wilton Parish. Their children included Isobella (b.1711) and Margaret (b.1713). The witnesses in 1711 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot. Perhaps the same Walter had children Christian (b.1707) and Walter (b.1710) baptised in Robertson Parish. He may therefore be the same man as the Walter recorded at Meadshaw in 1710. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver at Ashieburn in Ancrum Parish, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book.
for 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Robert Simpson at West Riddell in about 1823.
He may be the Walter who married Jessie Hogg in Roberton Parish in 1842. She is probably the widow Janet (from Ashkirk Parish, with surname ‘Hogg’ scored out on the census) in 1851 living at Whitecleuchside (in Roberton Parish) with children Walter (b.c.1845), Adam (b.c.1847) and unnamed (b.1851). Walter (19th C.) marmarged Margaret Baxter in Lilliesleaf in 1845. William (17th/18th C.) married Janet Mercer in Hawick Parish in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘servant to David Gray tenant in Weensland’. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724. He married Helen Wilson (also from Hawick) in 1719 and their children included: Archibald (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); and Janet (b.1724), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1720 were David Gray in Weens-land and merchant John Johnston, in 1722 were John (who was surely related) and Richard Scott of Boghall, and in 1724 were Walter and John Scott.
Based on naming conventions, John may have been his brother, with Archibald as their fa-th. William (17th/18th C.) ‘casae’ (i.e. road-layer) in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘Casae in Flex’ when he married Marion, daughter of tai-or Walter Gledstains. Their children included: John (b.1723); Bessie (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); and Jean (b.1730). Robert (b.1720), with the mother’s name given as Agnes Gledstains, was probably also his son. The witnesses in 1730 were Will Stoddart (surely related) and John Telfer.
He may be the William who (along with Archibald Paterson, perhaps also the cassayer at the Flex) witnessed a baptism for William Cathrae in 1728. William (19th C.) woolsorter who was Cornet in 1873. He acted as Right-Hand man again in 1875, since the previous year’s Cornet was unable to attend. William ‘Willie’ (20th C.) mill worker in Hawick. He spent some time working in Canada as a teenager and served in WWI. In 1937 he became Hawick’s only Communist Town Councillor, but within a few months joined the Labour Party. He was involved in set-ing up the Hawick Workers’ Mill, which supplied woollen goods to anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as well as helping provide jobs for unemployed mill-workers in Hawick (formerly spelled ‘Stodart’, ‘Stodert’, ‘Stodert’, ‘Stotherd’, ‘Stomtherd’ and other variants; also Stothart).

stodge (stej) v., arch. to trudge, walk heavily, deliberately or unsteadily.

stog (stög) v., arch. to walk heavily, stride sturdily, stump – ‘By the policies o Ancrum Hoose

Stoghill (stög-hil) n. former name for lands near Commonside in upper Tevioldale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonsidc, Northcroft and Hillend were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear if the name is a variant of something more familiar.

stoit (stoi’, stoit) n., poet. a clumsy person – ‘Auld stoit’, said Mrs. Blearie, sharp, Then quickly she calmed doon...’[WFC], arch. a bounce by a ball.

stoiter (stoi-tur) v., arch. to stagger, stumble – ‘Making a low bow, he wheeled about, and stoitered’ away as fast as his feet could carry him’[JTe], ‘The step may stoiter, the eyne be dim ...’[WL], ‘...But byways for the likes o’ me Although the step may stoiter’[WL] (cf. the more common stotter).

Stonedge (sten-leej, stö-nej) n. farm west of
main estates of Hobkirk Parish, also formerly known as ‘Stanledge’. It was also once a barony in its own right. It is probably the seat of John ‘de Stonesleghe’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and is ‘de Stonesleighe’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. The lands were bestowed on David Home of Wedderburn by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1464. It could be the ‘Stanleche’ in Et-trick Forest, whose ‘grassum’ was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1477 (although this could be confusion with Crown lands of the same name in Stirlingshire). James Turnbull was recorded there in 1586/7 and in 1590. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1600. The size and ownership of parts of lands referred to as ‘Stonedge’ are complicated. The Earl of Angus sold off his superiority of these and other Rulewater lands to Sir William Cranston in 1605. The estate is recorded belonging to Hector Turnbull in at least 1603-09, part sold to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs in 1609 and part still owned by Andrew Turnbull in 1610. Andrew and Cuthbert ‘McDowall’ were there in 1616. It was sold by William, Earl of Lothian to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers in 1647, but given back the following year. Then in 1651 it was sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to William Eliott of Stobs (tradition says that Cranston did this to secure them against being forfeited before his joined attempts to rescue Charles I). In 1671 the lands of Over and Nether Woollee, Stonedge, Unthank, Howa, Sneep, Hobsburn and Little Gledstains were separated off from those of Stobs to become the new estate of Stonedge; this was disposed to Thomas, the eldest son of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes Scott, John Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, while the eastern part was valued at £856 12s, with Eliott of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1766 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwick. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Lord Cranstoun to Will-Stonedge Hill (stō-nejlīl) n. hill lying to the south-west of Stonedge farm, reaching a height of 369 m. On its western side is a linear earthwork, some 330 m in length, probably an agricultural boundary, now obscured by the forestry planta-

stopplet (stop-ly) n., arch. another variant of stapple).

the Store (thurstør) n. Hawick Cooperative Store, which opened in 1839 as ‘the Chartist Store’ with a small shop in Silver Street. It grew into a set of around half a dozen general stores, 5 butchers, a baker’s shop (from 1851), shoe shop (1859), coal branch (1865), drapery (1873), carting (1874), van service to the country (1884) and penny savings bank (1887). The firm also ran its own stocking-makers at the old Tabernacle building and yard on Orchard Terrace and Elm Grove, constructed for use by Hawick Cooperative Society. It was built in 1891, designed by ??, and used to run the Store’s dairy operations through most of the 20th century. The buildings were converted into Elm Court housing.

the Store Field (thurstør-field) n. field once grazed by the Hawick Co-op cows, situated behind Wester Braid Road, near the Miller’s Knowes. The Co-op employees used to organise an annual sports day and picnic there, as a sort of forerunner to the Vertish Hill Sports – ‘The picnic up at the Store Field The whole o’ Hawick was there’ [AY].

the Store van (thurstør-vawn) n. van that used to sell grocery items around the town. The vans started as a country delivery service in 1884 and continued into the latter part of the 20th century – ‘... wi’ a biscuit in my hand Fresh frae the lang mysterious spicy drawer O’ the Store van’ [DH].

Storey (stor-ree) n. George (1913–44) born in Duns, he married Yolanda Jean Wilson, who lived in Hawick. He was a Private with the 9th Royal Scots and was killed during the liberation of Brunssum in the Netherlands. Matthew (b.1842) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder at 3 Back Row. In the 1880s he had his own boot and shoemakers’ shop at 3 Silver Street. He married Helen Richardson in 1864 and their children included Thomas (b.1865), William (b.1868), Janet (b.1870) and Isabella (b.1872).
Storff Burn (storf-burn) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join Great Warring-ton Sike, before eventually running into Larriston Burn.

Storff Sike (storf-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on Larriston Fells and is joined by Little Warrington Sike. Note that it distinct from Storff Burn, which lies further south.

storfully (stör-fu-lee) adv., arch. excitably, in an agitated way – ‘...and then if she carries on storfully, as she’s amaist shure to do, thaw half-a-dozen o’ plates or sae doon i’ the floor ...’ [HAST1868] (cf. stoor and stour).

Storie (stō-ree) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Chester-house in Rulewater. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Adam (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm. His children included: Marion (b.1723); Robert (b.1728); and Marion (b.1730). Andrew ‘Dand’ (15th/16th C.) resident of Newmill. In 1502 Robert Rule (from the same place) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, with the pair fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. Ann (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 6 Allars Bank in the mid-1900s.

Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as ‘Cuth- bert Storey of Hawicke’ in a presentment where 13 sheep were stolen from him. This is Hawick in Northumberland. David (b.1809/10) born in Morebattle, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Howcleuchshiel, in 1851 at Clarilaw in Bowden and in 1861 was shepherd at Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Lunn in 1833. Their children included: Margaret (b.1834); Elizabeth (b.1836); Euphemia (b.1839); William (b.1841); Fanny (b.1844); Janet (b.1848); Joan (b.1849); Mary (b.c.1851); Ellen (b.c.1854); Robina (b.c.1855); and David (b.c.1857). Gideon (18th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, he was recorded at Roughheugh in Wilton in 1735. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1731); and Elspeth (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie (who was surely related). Harry (??– ) Common Riding Song Singer 1950s??–1972. He was ill for a while and Bert Armstrong filled in for a few years, but he returned again as the official singer. Apparently there were some complaints about his over-esticulating! Helen (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for her non-appearance. She was listed again in 1494/5. Other people who were not entered by the Sheriff were fairly local (but she is one of the only women). James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William. James (16th C.) servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs and Jean Scott. In 1573 he was placed on their recently purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. However, he was attacked by Walter and John Scott (sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot in Chamberlain Newton), who possessed the other half of the farm. They ‘crewellie sett upoun him, hurt and voundit him in sindrie partis of his body, and left him for deid; of the quhilkis hurt as yit he is in danger of his lyfe’. It is unknown whether or not he survived. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He may be the James ‘in Spitle’ whose will was recorded in 1681 (if he made a testament long before he died), or else they were father and son. Either he or a near relative was probably the ‘Laird Storie’ whose lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish were valued at £18 in 1643, 1663 and 1678. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘undermiller att ...’ (probably Newmill) in 1700. His children included: William (b.1693); Bessie (b.1698); and Anna (b.1700). The witnesses in 1698 were Robert Thomson and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were James Crawford and James Dryden, smith at Newmill. James (d.bef. 1741) from Ancrum Parish. In 1718 he married Jean Ben-net, who was from Bedrule Parish. In 1741 his widow gave money to the poor in Ancrum Parish, owing from her husband. James (18th C.) tenant and herd in East Burnfoot (on Ale) in 1731. He is probably the James who married Elizabeth ‘Mortoun’ and whose son Adam was baptised in Wilton in 1725. James (d.1797) from Rulewater, he died at Robert Biggar’s Inn in Hawick in 1797. He could be the James who married Elizabeth Henderson in Bedrule in 1755, and his wife could be the widow of that name who died later the same year in Silver Street. James (18th/19th C.) weaver recorded in Barnhills in 1799 and at Belses on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish.
James (b.c.1780) servant at Colterscleuch according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. James (19th C.) local man known for his poetry. He competed in the ‘Auld Brig’ competition and published ‘Poems on several subjects’ (1837). He was said to be a repository of local stories relating to the Covenanters. He could be the labourer, born at Southdean in about 1780, who was recorded at about 71 High Street in 1841 and on Brougham Place in 1851. John (15th C.) received a roll of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Johanni Storis’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Story’ on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John was also tenant there and so presumably related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Cavers in Wilton in 1720 and their children included: Christian (b.1723); and John (b.1726). He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1725 and 1732 for William Scott in Newton and in 1735 for Gideon in Roughlee. He could be the Robert who was joint tenant (with Robert Scott) in Newton in 1717. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He had an unknown child baptised in 1744. He could be the deceased Robert whose grandson John died in Hawick in 1800. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner at Branxholme Woodfoot. His wife was Betty and their children included Jean, Thomas, Margaret, Robert, Janet and George. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a groom who lived at Falnash. His wife was Janet Middlemas, and already dead by 1861. His children included Helen, George and Robert, and he had a nephew, William Easton. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Thomas Scott in Branxholme and John Scott in Spittal were convicted of crimes against him. They came ‘across him in villa de spittale Inter aqueduct de damys’. Thomas (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Roucastle’ in 1632 when his widow Bessie Craik feued lands in Ruecastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe (along with William Armstrong) recorded on the 1684 list of men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is surely descended from the ‘Laird Storie’ who was recorded at about 71 High Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He firstly married Mary Armstrong and their children included: William (b.1817), also a blacksmith; Hannah (b.1820);
Storiestead

Elizabeth (b.1822); and John (b.1824). He secondly married Janet Nichol and their children included: Mary (b.1830); Thomas (b.1831); Margaret (b.1834); Walter (b.1836); Helen (b.1837); Elliot (b.1838/39); Robert (b.1839); Matthew (b.1842); Alexander (b.1844); Nichol (b.1849); Janet (b.1850/1); and Esther (b.1852). His father-in-law John Nichol (b.c.1780) was living with his family in 1841. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1551 as then occupier of an acre of arable land in the lands of Spittal-on-Rule, specifically on ‘lie Harparhill’ (whose location is unknown), which was granted by the Baron of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenbury. He witnessed the associated notorial instrument and letter of reversion, with a value of 5 shillings lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental ‘Story’ and ‘Storry’.

for 1799 (also formerly spelled ‘Storey’, ‘Storrie’, ‘Story’ and ‘Storry’).

Storiestead (stö-ree-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, listed before Byreholm, and so presumably somewhere near Castleton. It appears as ‘Storiessteid alias Gudelland’, with a value of 5 shillings and tenanted by Christopher Armstrong.

storm (störm) v., arch. to beset or cover with snow or otherwise deprive livestock of pasture – ‘The term ‘being stormed’ was originally used to express the want of food suffered by sheep when the ground was covered with snow’[RB].

In 1861 he was a mason living in Ayton. Later the family moved to Hawick, living on North Bridge Street. In 1847 he married Mary Orkney (1825–99), who was from Ayton and died in Hawick. Their children included: David (1848–1921), a joiner; James (1850–1909), who was killed by a train; John (1852–89), who died by suicide; Elizabeth ‘Lizzie’ Pringle (1855–84), who married James Swan Wood and had a daughter Agnes who married revolutionary socialist John Maclean; George (b.1857), George (again, b.1862) and Mary Jane (b.1862), who all died in infancy; Joseph (1864–1933), a saddler and bootmaker; and Mary Alice Jackson (1868–1925), who married James Orr and died of self-inflicted ‘irritant poisoning’. David (b.1851) son of Joseph, he was born at Deanburnhaugh. He worked as a dyker and mason, living in Wilton and Hawick. He is recorded in prison in Jedburgh and Dumfries in 1868, 1869, 1876 and 1881. David Orkney Smith ‘D.O.’ (1900–72) son of Joseph. He was a shopkeeper at 6 High Street, where his father was a saddler and bootmaker. After he took over the shop he branched out into sporting goods, fishing tackle and toys. He took on Len Elliot as a partner and later passed the business to him. He was also involved with local operatic productions. His cousin was Herbert Stothart, Hollywood musical director who won as Oscar for ‘The Wizard of Oz’. James (1850–1909) son of David and Mary Orkney, he was born in Ayton. By the time of the 1881 census he was living in Hawick. He was co-owner of Stothart & Rutherford, bootmakers of Hawick. He was associated with the Total Abstinence Society in Hawick, serving as its President and was politcally identified with Socialist causes. He was said to have taken a great interest in the welfare of the youth of the Town. He lived at 8 Orchard Terrace, where his niece Agnes Wood acted as his housekeeper for a few years from about 1901. He was killed by throwing himself in front of a passing express train at Bishopbriggs Station in Lanarkshire. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Janet (17th/18th C.) Stouslie (stooz-lee) n. farm and cottages out beyond Stirches, reached by the left hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The Lindsays held these lands as Barons of Chamberlain Newton from the time of David II (late 14th century). There were Turnbulls here in the late 1400s, when the lands were a Lairdship. John Turnbull from the Borthwick was granted the lands by John, Lord Lindsay, having previously been held by William Lindsay of ‘Garmilton’, and Turnbull resigned them back to Lord Lindsay in 1468. Thomas ‘Trumbul’ of Stouslie was witness to a sasine in 1488. George Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and Walter Turnbull in 1494/5. In 1494/5 Thomas and Adam Grahamslaw from Newton ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 60 sheep from here; these belonged to Walter Scott of Howpalsley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, but were also said to pertain to the King. There were Scotts living here in the 1500s. In 1506 ‘Stously and the five merk lands of Grundiston were valued at £5 Scots, in time of peace at six merks, and were held of the Earl of Bothwell as baron of the barony of Chamberlain-newton for one penny blench’. In the 16th century it was still part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, with superior being the Earls of Bothwell and then the Lords of Home. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott in Stouslie’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. In 1643 it was valued at £67 3s 4d, along with Boonraw (‘but disjoined’) and recorded as ‘Stoulgie [probably a transcription error for ‘Stouzie’], or Stouslie, formerly in Hassendean Parish’. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Mary Gledstains was liferenter of this farm and another (probably Boonraw) in 1643; she was probably widow of George Scott of Boonraw. Archibald Scott was liferenter there in about 1663, when he paid tax on £91 for the land. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Boonraw. John Henderson was living there in 1682. It was leased by George Scott of Boonraw and continued by his heirs in 1692. In 1690 the lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed. David Gray was recorded there in 1694. William Henderson was there in 1706. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 101 acres, bounded by Boonraw, Heap, Wilton Common and Coldhouse. Thomas Stoddart was there in 1729, William Harkness in 1730, Adam Harkness in 1732, William Nichol in 1735–37 and George Scott in 1742. Francis Stoddart died there in 1738 and Robert Scott in 1750. There are 3 buildings marked there on the 1764 map of Wilton Common; at that time it was valued at £9 13s 4d, as part of the Buccleuch estates. William Stewart was there in 1770–80. By 1788 it had been disjoined from Boonraw and was valued at £67 3s 4d. William Stewart was recorded there in 1770. The Cala Burn was the western boundary of the farm, with the farmhouse on the burns eastern side. One of the cottages was formerly a school administered by Wilton Parish. The Town Dump is nearby and part of the farm was turned into a glamping site – ‘…His staghounds still in the leash are led, As he turns his eye to the Stowhousela’ [BCM1880], ‘Owre the hounds still in the leash are led, As he turns his eye to the Stowhouselea’ [BCM1880]. The National Archive has records relating to the period 1874–1920.

Struther (stru-thur) n. place-name in Wilton Parish, of unknown location. Thomas Irvine was living there in 1739. It is probably also the ‘Struter’ where William Hood was living in 1738. It is probably the same place recorded as ‘Whitehaugh-struther’ where Robert Scott was herd in 1749 and ‘Strother-house’ where Robert Scott was living in 1764. ‘The Struther’, ‘Struther-head’, ‘Whitehaugh-struther’ and ‘Drinkston-struther’ are all recorded in the 1765 description of Wilton Common.

the Struther (thu-struther) n. familiar name for Williestruther – ‘Perhaps the scented road o’ pines To Struther’s loch beguiles ...’[WFC].

Struthers (stru-thurz) n. Alan (14th C.) from the Northumberland family, he became Lord of Lyham through marriage. He was English Sheriff of Roxburgh in at least 1368-70. The lands he held included the Hawick in Northumberland. In about 1370 he was ‘Alano de le Strother’ when he witnessed a grant by John Neville of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. His children included Alan (contemporary of Chaucer at Cambridge), Henry, William (married a daughter of the Mayor of Newcastle) and Joan. Sir Thomas (d.1395) probably son of Henry, who was Sheriff of Northumberland. He was likely to be the Sir Thomas ‘of Strother’ whose charters are included in the collection of David Laing (although that does not match with a death in 1395). He was appointed custodian of Jedburgh Castle in 1394. He was reputedly an English champion, who was marauding around the Scottish Borders, bragging that he would take on any Scotsman. The challenge was met by Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) at Rulehaugh, witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland. Struthers was killed in single combat it is said. Other accounts describe how Inglis’ force had attempted to breach the Castle walls and after being repelled when the English soldiers returned from the town, he challenged Inglis to single combat for breaking the truce (also written ‘Strother’ etc.).
Strynds (strínzk) n. former lands in the Rule valley, near Westerhouses, later known as ‘Strange’. This was home of a prominent branch of the Oliver family in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. Robert Oliver from there, along with 7 other Oliver’s and a Shiel, had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. Several members of the same family had remission for thefts and other crimes in 1502 in a number of cases. Later in 1502 4 Olivers from here were all found guilty of rieving crimes and probably hanged. This branch was said to never have been heard of again, although it was supposedly related to the later Olivers of Lustruther. The lands were valued along with Westerhouses at £6 5s, according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 (and the comptroller was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for that year), as well as 1539. Edward Oliver was there in 1541, when the rent was 15 shillings. There were still Olivers there in the late 17th century (also ‘the Strynds’; it is written ‘le stryn-‘ in 1538, ‘Stryndis’ and ‘Stryndes’ in 1502, ‘Stryndys’ and ‘Strydis’ in 1538, ‘Stridis’ in 1539 and ‘Strydis’ in 1541; the origin is probably the Old Scots word for rivulets; see also Strange).

St. Stephen’s Chapel (sin’-stee-vinz-chā-pul) n. Roman Catholic Chapel built in 1962 on Burnfoot Road (at the corner with Fairhurst Drive) to serve the Burnfoot area. The building has a novel triangular design with a high slender spire. In 1986 it was closed as a chapel, declared surplus to requirements and in 1988 sold by the Archdiocese to the Abundant Life Church.

the Subscription Academy (thu-sub-skrip-shin-aw-ka-du-wee) n. another name for Hawick Academy. There was a school run out of the Subscription Rooms from about 1830, sometimes referred to as the Subscription School. It was renamed ‘the Subscription Academy’ in 1857 when J.A.H. Murray was invited to be headmaster (at age 17!). Not long after the school moved along Buccleuch Street to the former Quaker meeting house, and was then called ‘Hawick Academy’. It ran until 1865, after Murray had left for London. The ‘Subscription School’ meanwhile carried on with James C. Mudie as headmaster. Sometimes called ‘Hawick High School’, this ran until about 1874, when Mudie left town. Meanwhile Mudie’s assistant, James Brand, had left to start his own school in Union Street, which eventually became the senior part of the High School (the confusion and interconnection between the several Buccleuch Street schools makes some accounts very muddled!).

the Subscription Rooms (thu-sub-skrip-shin-roomz) n. building erected on Buccleuch Street in 1821 from public subscriptions, and used as an institute for the arts, as a library and as a public meeting place. The location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. The foundation stone was laid with full Masonic honours, with a speech by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson and a special verse by James Ruickbie. For the next few decades it was a popular venue for lectures, ‘magic lantern’ shows, concerts and related social gatherings. It was also used as the location for a private Academy, taught by Mr. Fleming 1837–40. Later it was rented to the Commercial Inn, although the main hall continued to be used for concerts etc. A particular event was a set of plays performed over 9 days by a company of actors (led by Burns Bryson, Keeley Halswelle and Gus Blake) from Edinburgh in October 1856, immortalised in the book 'Noctes Hawickianae'. About 1864 it was sold to Mr. Mudie, who used it to run his private school, called ‘Hawick High School’, which was later taught by Mr. Brand, who moved to Union Street. It was also used for a while as the premises for the ‘West-end Academy’, taught by Mr. Brodie. In the 1890s it was purchased by James Bonsor’s hosiery mill which used it until the 1920s. It was then purchased by the Catholic church and converted (largely through voluntary work) to become the Halls for S.S. Mary & David’s Chapel next door. Until only a few years ago it had a frontage ornamented with a portico supported by 4 Grecian pillars. It was renovated in the early years of the 21st century and saw temporary use again as a school in 2006, housing pupils following the fire in Denholm – ‘This house a public building is design’d To gratify the curious mind; Subservient to the parson and the player, By turns a theatre, and a house of prayer’ [JR].

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. former farmstead on the Sundhope Burn, above Whitropefoot. It was valued at 8 merks according to a rental roll of c.1376 and still 8 merks on the 1541 roll, when ‘Leoni Elwald’ and his brothers were tenants. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least 1613. Robert ‘Houiton’ and Adam ‘Houitone’ are listed there in 1694, as well as George Nichol. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 1654 acres, bounded by Stitchelhill, Millburnholm and lands held by the Laird of Gorrenberry and others. At that time the farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branxholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. John Anderson was farmer there in 1785. James Jackson was shepherd there in 1797, James Elliot and Ninian Scott in 1799, Ninian Elliot in 1801, Walter Anderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alvanderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branxholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alva in 1802, when valued at about £500 (including Hollandrig and ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’). There are waterfalls on the burn there. 5 flints found nearby are in Hawick Museum. North of the farmstead, towards Sundhope Rig, there is a linear earthwork, about 130m long – ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope. They ken the soond weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the dell’ [DH] (it first appears as ‘Sondayhop’ in c.1376, is ‘Sondhope’ in 1510, ‘Sandhop’ in 1516, ‘Soundhop’ in 1541 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1613 and 1799; the stream is marked ‘Soundhoup’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while the farm is ‘Soundhope’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Soundhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, where the burn of the same name meets the Yarrow from the south, just to the west of Yarrow Feus. It was a Crown property from about 1456, with the lease to the Laird of Alemoor being given up in 1488, when it was let to ‘Robert domino Lile’ in 1488. Then it was let half to William Murray and half to Roger Murray from at least 1490 until 1499. In 1493 Alexander, brother of Robert Scott of Whames, was accused of stealing livestock from there, and John Waugh also stole a large number of sheep from the Murrays. In 1494/5 Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme) was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1512 it was feued to Gavin Murray. In 1541 William Scott was tenant there, paying £14, while William and James Murray also appear to have occupied it, paying £24. A 1649 description of Selkirkshire states that ‘Sundhope Burn flows from Sundhope Edge and falls into Yaro foreanent the Caitslake [Cat-sack] at the foot of Sundhope’. William Scott was tenant there in the first half of the 18th century. There were Andersons and Laidlaws there in the 19th century. It was said to be the site of the slaying of Scott of Harden’s younger son, Scott of Gilmanscleuch – ‘But, low, low down, on Sundhop broom, My brother Harden spyd; And, with a stern and furious look, He up to him did ride’ [ES]; ‘Ere all is done, our blood may soak Our Scottish houms, and leave a stain – A stain like that on Sundup’s cloak, Which never will wash out again’ [ES] (it is ‘Sundhop’ in 1456 and 1468, ‘Sundhoip’ in 1490, ‘Soundhop’ in 1496, ‘Sondhop’ and ‘Sondhoip’ in 1499 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1541; it is ‘Soundhope’ and ‘Soundhop’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Soundhoope’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Sundhope Faas (sun-dup-fawz) n. waterfall on the Sundhope Burn, near where it meets the Whitrope Burn on the Newcastleton road, about 12 miles south of Hawick. It has been a favourite picnic spot. It is also known as the Laird’s Linn.

Sundi (sun-di) n. Sunday. Formerly there were strict rules about what behaviour was deemed suitable for the Sabbath. Work of any sort was banned, and there are fines frequently recorded in the parish records for transactions such as pulling vegetables. Certainly non-attendance at church was considered disreputable until fairly recent times, and regular non-attendance was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was considered an offence (also spelled ‘Sundih’ etc.).

sundials (sun-dil-ulz) n., pl. devices that use the shadow of a gnomon, cast by the Sun, to tell the time of day. These were common ornamentation on buildings or in gardens around the 17th and 18th centuries. The Museum has 3 local specimens, which have been saved from demolitions, labelled: ‘17 WK 48’; ‘1823’, from Dickson Street; and ‘BC BT 1756’. There was also one from Francis Gledstains of Whitalw, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Lilliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.
Sundi-mense

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mens) n., arch. ‘ti gie yin’s claes Sundi-mense’ is to attend church in one’s new clothes on the first Sunday after one gets them (also kirk-mense).

Sundi Schuill (sun-di-skil) n. Sunday School, i.e. religious instruction for school children taking place on Sundays. Hawick already had 2 such institutions in 1786 and was among the first to establish them in Scotland. The first was probably introduced by Rev. Charters of Wilton, followed shortly afterwards by Rev. Sharp of Hawick (however, it is sometimes also stated that William Crawford of Wilton introduced the first Sunday School in the 1730s). Around 1817 the town became well-known in the Borders for very popular Sunday Schools, which had been set up by Rev. James Henderson of the East-End Burgher congregation. David Russell of the Relief Kirk also set one up at about the same time. These early examples often lasted for many hours, but were about the only chance to learn reading, which many local children benefited from. Henderson’s Sunday School is sometimes said to have been the first in Scotland, and although this is clearly not correct, it may have been an early example of an ambitious educational programme on Sundays (rather than a shorter event aimed at children). Sunday Schools have continued in most of the town’s churches down to the present time – ‘Sunday Schule picnics then Horse and cairt ti Harden Glen . . .’ [IWL].

He married Mary Kerr in 1814 and their children included: Mark (b.1814); Margaret (b.1816); Ann (b.1818); James (b.1821); Janet; Helen; Isabella; Mary; and Walter. Alexander (b.1859) son of Walter, he worked in the hosiery industry. The family lived at Maxwell Street, Welllington Street, Myreslawgreen and Beaconsfield Terrace. In 1900 he became proprietor of the Imperial Hotel on Oliver Place. He married his cousin Isabella Riddell in 1880 and their children included: James (or ‘Jimmy’), who was Cornet in 1901; Isabella (b.1881); Mary; Thomas; Alexander; Walter (1890–1918), Hawick and Scotland rugby player; and John (1892–93), who died of whooping cough. He may be the Alexander, married to Janet Maben, whose daughter Christina was born in Wilton in 1891. David (19th/20th C.) married Jane Murray. Their children, born in Hawick, included: David (b.1891). Donald (19th C.) married Agnes Marshall in Wilton Parish in 1867. George (19th C.) married Sarah Laird. Their children, born in Hawick, included: James (b.1874). Rev. George (20th C.) minister of St. Andrew’s Kirk 1930–40. James ‘Jimmy’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander and brother of rugby player Walter. He was Cornet in 1901. He led his supporters on the first ride-out to Mospaul and J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father. James (b.1820/1) framemaker in the Dean, son of Alexander. In 1841 he was living on Burn Row, in 1851 at No. 6 there and in 1861 probably in the same place. He married Isabella Cairns in 1845 and their children included Isabella, Mary, Jessie, Alexander and Helen (b.1857). John (19th C.) married Isabella Simpson in Hawick in 1864. Mark (18th C.) stockmaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Flemington and their children included: Margaret (b.1787); Joanna (b.1789); Ann (b.1793); and Alexander (b.1798). The witnesses in 1787 were shoemaker Robert Elliot and workman Thomas Thomson and in 1789 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and farmer William Scott. Probably the same Mark married Janet Crow in Hawick in 1800. Norman J. (b.c.1890) son of Galashiel monument mason George P. He ran the Hawick office of the family firm, with premises on Bridge Street. He was District Commissioner of the Boy Scouts. In his honour the local Scouts pipe band adopted the Sutherland tartan in 1953. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Pratt. Their son David was born in Wilton in 1881. Rory (1992– ) born in Melrose, he was educated at Trinity and the High School. He represented the Borders and Scotland in the back row of youth teams, but switched to playing loose-head prop with Hawick R.F.C. Afterwards he played for Biggar and Gala and then professionally for Edinburgh from 2014. He was first capped for Scotland in 2016 and was named to the British Lions squad in 2021. Walter Kerr (1838/9–1902) born in Wilton, son of Alexander, he worked in the hosiery trade. In 1861 he was a ‘Finisher of Hosiery’ at 12 Back Row. He was also listed as a warehouseman and frame knitter. He married Ann, daughter of Thomas Scott and Ademine Bellom, and she died in 1902. Their children included: Alexander (b.1859); Adelina (or ‘Adeline’, 1861–1919); Thomas Scott (b.1863); Elizabeth Fiddes (b.1865), who married John Scott in 1888; Mary (b.1865); James (b.1871); Adam (b.1873); Ann Scott (b.1875); and Helen Leithead (b.1878). Walter Riddell ‘Wattie’ or ‘Suddie’ (1890–1918) youngest son of Alexander and Isabella of the Imperial Hotel. He was educated at Teviot Grove Academy. He was a member of the Teviotdale Harriers, being Border Champion over 100 and 220 yards, and was part of the team that won the 1 mile relay at the Common Riding Games of 1910. He also won the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association 220 yards title and represented Scotland. He played wing for Hawick R.F.C. from the age of 17, his first game being against Gala. He excelled at Sevens, being part of the 1912 team that won all 5 Border tournaments. He went on to become Captain of Hawick. He played for Scotland from the age of 18, his first cap being Willie Kyle’s last, and went on to be capped 13 times. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the Lothian and Border Horse, transferring to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and later to the Seaforth Highlanders, where he became 2nd Lieutenant. He was killed by a stray shell in October 1918, in the last days of the War. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as merchant among those contributing to the new Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She was also on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She seems likely to have been a shopkeeper (or similar) on the High Street. She could be the daughter of George and Margaret Bridges born in Hawick in 1642 or the daughter of Mungo and Helen Bridges born in 1672. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Margaret Bridges. Their son John was born in 1643. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Rebecca Scott. Their children included: Jean (b.1735); John (b.1737); and Rebecca (b.1741), who was the 2nd wife of Bailie John Hardie. The witnesses in 1737 were merchant James Sanderson and writer Thomas Watson and in 1741 were Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tudhope. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 for weaver John Thurburn, in 1764 for John Hardie and his daughter Rebecca and in 1768 for mason William Ekron and Betty Dobie. He could be the George Swan who witnessed a baptism for Francis Cairns in 1783. Isabel (b.c.1760) listed as a shopkeeper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. By 1841 she was a pauper, living around Eastgate. James (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant at 29 (later 27) High Street. He emigrated with his family to Detroit, where his son Andrew was involved with the Detroit Gas Company and his son James was a successful lawyer. John (16th C.) listed in 1534.
Swan

when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautions for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He may have been related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott. Their children born in Hawick Parish included: Jane (b.1676); Mungo (b.1682); and Helen (b.1685). In 1676 he was listed being ‘in Cavers’ (suggesting he lived in the Teviothead area perhaps), with witnesses William and Mungo (who were surely close relatives). He may be the same as John ‘Elder’. John (17th C.) listed as ‘Elder’ in 1694 among those ‘uest the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. The younger John was also listed, suggesting that they were father and son. The pair were also weavers ‘younger’ and ‘elder’ recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was ‘older’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly. John ‘Nuckle’ (17th C.) Hawick weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must have been separate from the elder and younger weavers who were also listed. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the Hawick weavers. In 1697 there was a case before the Magistrates dealing with Robert Tinlin, a young weaver, who had insulted him publicly, and refused to pay a fine imposed by the incorporation of weavers. He was still quartermaster in 1716 (along with the same Robert Tinlin) when he and other complained about people who were not part of the incorporated trades taking their seats in St. Mary’s Kirk. He may be the ‘John Suan younger’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax and the ‘younger’ weaver listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the John who (along with Mungo) witnessed a baptism for weaver William in 1700. He was probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for gardener Robert Roger in 1701, workman Archibald Elliot and shoemaker William Halliwell in 1704, and shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1725. He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill. He is probably one of the 2 John Swans who in 1709 witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘att ye port’. He was one of the ‘two John Swans’ (possibly ‘Black John’ and ‘White John’ or father and son) who was a Hawick elder recorded as one of the men asked in 1711 to ‘perlustrate’ the town to look for people still drinking after 8 ’clock at night. In 1718 he (or the other John) was among those charged by the Session with trying to resolve the dispute between Bailies Rucastle and Graham. There was a John Swan whose son John was born in Hawick in 1693 and another in 1696. John ‘Black John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, with a nickname to distinguish him from ‘White John’. One of them was probably the quartermaster of the weavers. He married Elspeth Clerk and their children included: Mary (b.1700); George (b.1702); Mary (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); and Elspeth (b.1707). In 1700 and 1704 he was entered in the baptismal register as ‘distinctionis causa called black John’. The witnesses in 1700 were weaver John Lunn and James Scott ‘Laird’, in 1704 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and John Scott ‘Laird’, in 1706 were Andrew Clerk and another John Swan, and in 1707 were weaver James Lunn and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the John who was witness for baptisms for John Lunn in 1705 and for Archibald Douglas (along with James Lunn) in 1707. John ‘White John’ (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1701 he is recorded being ‘distinctionis causa called white John’. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for a different John in 1706. He married Janet Allan and their children included: Mungo (b.1701); and Mary (b.1703). This suggests that he may have been son of Mungo. The witnesses in 1701 were Mungo (perhaps his brother) and weaver Thomas Turnbull (possibly his brother-in-law). Other children of either this or the other John are: William (b.1692); John (b.1693); Jean (b.1695); John (again, b.1696); and Janet (b.1706). The witnesses in 1695 were Thomas Turnbull and James Cowan. Mungo (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Briggs, who was probably daughter of William and Bessie Brown. In 1665 (although this date may an error, e.g. for 1685) his son-in-law, Thomas Turnbull, was accused of throwing his wife (Helen) down some stairs when she attempted to visit her sick daughter. The families are probably inter-related through George and Margaret ‘Bridges’ who are recorded having children in the 1640s. His children included: Helen (b.1657); and Bessie (b.1672). He is probably the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for John (who could have been his brother).
in 1676 and 1680 2 others (along with William, who was surely therefore also related) for William Bridges. It seems likely he was father of ‘White John’. Mungo (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Jean Briggs in 1702. Their children included Jean (b.1702). Other probably children, with no mother’s name given are Thomas (b.1705), William (b.1708) and Mungo (b.1710). The witnesses in 1708 were Michael Bridges and James Scott, Laird. His wife probably secondly married weaver Robert Wight in 1715, suggesting he was deceased by then. He is probably the Mungo who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for weaver William in 1700, (along with Thomas Turnbull) for weaver John Lunn in 1701, for James Beattie in 1704 and for Town Herd William Palmer in 1707. Richard (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1483 relating to lands in Hassendean, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He was also a witness in 1484 to a sasine relating to lands in the town of Hawick. Samuel (19th C.) married Isabel Rutherford in Southdean Parish in 1834. William (d.bef. 1694) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1683 for Steven Greenshields. In 1689 he witnessed baptisms for fellow weavers William Brown and James Lunn. His widow ‘Joan Bennet’ was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the William recorded as ‘Wm Suan Elder’ in the 1694 list (but likely drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier) among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the William, son of George and Margaret Bridges who was born in Hawick in 1635. He married Helen (or Jane) Bennet, and their children included: Thomas (b.1669); George (b.1672); Margaret (b.1673); Mungo (b.1677); Jane (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Purdom and William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Bridges and Andrew Dodd in 1673, Thomas Lunn in 1675, John in Cavers in 1676 (with Mungo being the other witness, suggesting that all 3 were closely related), Patrick Bridges, William Bridges (along with Mungo again), Francis Scott plus Isobel Bridges in 1678 and Andrew Jardine in 1684. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for William Bridges (again), Francis Scott, James Lunn, John Scott (of Cavers) and Margaret Scott and Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges. He may also be the William who (along with Patrick Bridges) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for Adam Lamb. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Suan, younger’ in 1687 among a group of men fined for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He could be the same as the weaver of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must be different from the William whose widow is also recorded on the same list, but could be their son. He may be the William who married Margaret Paisley and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1692), Walter (b.1698), Agnes (b.1700), William (again, b.1703) and Mungo (b.1706); the witnesses in 1696 were Henry Orrock and John Hart and in 1700 were weavers John and Mungo Swan. He is probably the William who witnessed baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1698, for weaver James Jolly (along with John, perhaps his brother) in 1700 and for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill (also along with John). He is probably the weaver of that name who was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Tinlin in 1712. He is recorded in the records of the Presbytery of Melrose in 1726 when Christian Bunzie confessed that she had ‘seen him playing at the kails in her father’s garden’. He was ‘a single, unmarried man, landlord of the house wherein Henry Gibson’s relict lives’. His name is written ‘Swain’ and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683 or the William born in Hawick to another William in 1703. Perhaps the same William married Jean Stewart and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1731, with witnesses John Elliot and John Scott. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. His wife was Janet Swan and their children included: Jean (b.1806); and Samuel (b.1808), baptised at Liddelbank (written ‘Suan’, ‘Suane’, ‘Swane’ and variants). the Swan (thu-swawn) n. former hostelry on Main Street in Denholm. It is recorded in 1852, when Thomas Field was proprietor. A meeting of 100 Total Abstinence supporters took place there the same year ‘in Mr. Field’s large room’. swang (swang) pp. swung – ‘...But when he swang the tawse I didna craw sae prood’ [WL]. the Swan Inn (thu-swawn-in) n. former public house on the Howegate, when??.
Swansheil (swan-sheel) n. farm just to the west of Hobkirk, situated on the north side of the Blackhall Burn. The farmhouse now called Nether Swansheil. The lands were formerly split into Easter and Wester Swansheil, which were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were valued at £33 6s 8d, respectively. The lands (or perhaps just superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. James Turnbull was portioner there in 1684. John Wilkie was a tailor there in 1720. Wester Swansheil was owned (along with Hartshaugh earlier) by the same branch of the Turnbull family for about 300 years until 1778. John Donaldson was tenant in at least 1797–1801. Earthworks from some ancient settlement were still visible a century ago. There was also once a joiner’s shop there (it was ‘Swansheill’ in 1567, appears as ‘Sronsheill’ in 1581, was ‘Swoonshiel’ in 1604, ‘Swansheil’ in 1643, ‘Swoonshield’ in 1684 and ‘Swanhill’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is marked ‘Swansheils’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and ‘Suamesheells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; Walter Deans says that it was formerly ‘Suin Shieles’ and ‘Sonesheills’ and suggests it meant the land facing the Sun, however ‘swain schein’ meaning ‘herdsman’s hut’ is more likely). Swansheil Cleuch (swan-sheel-klooch) n. name for the steep lower section of the Blackhall Burn, to the south-west of Hobkirk Manse.

Swansby (swan-sbee) n. Andrew (16th C.) ploughman at Riddell. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. James (18th C.) said to be from Wilton Dean, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784. He is recorded there in 1785, working for Michael Stevenson, and named again in 1788. In 1790 he was working as a ‘drawer’ for vintner Robert Armstrong and was recorded as a waiter for Robert Armstrong in 1797. He was apparently very familiar with the customers of the hotel, of all ranks. One of his favourite phrases was ‘Stick by cauld whisky, but never drink toddy, when ye’re gaun a journey’. It is said that he was at some point dismissed by Armstrong, but reappointed after the Duke of Buccleuch interceded on his behalf. He had several children including: James, who became a ship’s surgeon; and a daughter, who married weaver Tom Lunn (possibly the Mary ‘Swanston’ who married Charles and had a daughter Jane baptised in Hawick Parish in 1791). His wife Jean died in 1795. He could be the James ‘Swenstone’, married to Jane Wilson, whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hawick in 1781. James (1779/80–1803) son of James, who was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was apprenticed to Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick. In 1797 he was experimenting with concoctions and left a bowl on the window-sill, which was drunk by his niece, who unfortunately died. He left Hawick in 1798 to be a surgeon on a slave ship, sailing on 3 voyages. In 1802 or 1803 he was given command of ‘the Prudence’, which sailed to the Upper Guinea coast, returning to Liverpool with half his crew, a number of slaves, and also Tom Jenkins, who he brought to Hawick after a few weeks. It is said that attempts by the young African to say his (Swanson’s) name sounded to the sailors like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then what they called him. He died in the Tower Hotel a few days after returning to Hawick, perhaps either from a lingering disease or from delirium tremens. He died at the age of 23 (coincidentally the day before

Sir Walter Scott and the Wordsworths stayed in the Tower Hotel. He left behind an illegitimate son, who is probably the James, born to James and Betty Cairns in Hawick in 1797 (she may have been the Betty born in Wilton to Thomas Cairns in 1779). Note that a version of his life is told as part of the novel ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’; this fictionalised accounts bears only passing resemblance to reality, but perhaps the part about him being found wandering round and round in a field and then collapsing may be true. James (1797–1856) son of James and Betty Cairns. His father trained as a surgeon and became Captain of a slaving ship, returning to Hawick with Tom Jenkins, but promptly dying. He and Tom were raised by his father’s sister and her husband Tom Lunn, who lived at Shuttlehaa in Teviothead. He must therefore have been the closest thing that Jenkins had to a brother. He worked as a shepherd for James Scott of Allanshaws and then moved to Salisbury Craig in Edinburgh. He is recorded as a shepherd at Queen’s Park in 1841 and on St. Leonard’s St., Edinburgh in 1851. In May 1820 he married Sophia Glendinning (c.1802–70), the marriage being recorded in both Cavers and Ettrick Parishes; it is tempting to imagine that Tom Jenkins attended this wedding on his last trip back to Scotland before he left Britain for good. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); John (b.c.1827); Sophia (b.c.1829), who married Andrew Gunn in Edinburgh in 1851; Mary (b.c.1830), who probably died young; Walter (b.c.1833), who married Barbara Kay; Isabella (b.c.1835), who married James Reekie; and Adam (b.c.1837), who married Isabella Barrie. Their last 4 children were baptised in Cannongate Parish. He died in Carnegie Street Edinburgh. William (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter (probably after being captured at Bothwell Bridge), and escaped the shipwreck in the headwaters of the Teindside Burn, north-west of the steading of Slaidhills. It reaches a height of 333 m.

swingle (swing) n. arch. a tool for beating flax, swinge – ‘The next operation was the famous swingling, which broke up and enlivened the dullness of the winter nights so merrily in the generations by-gone’ [JAHM].

swingle (swing-lind) n., arch. a wooden tool for beating flax, swinge – ‘The swinglinds gaed like horsemen’s swords’ [JoHo] (also written ‘swinglind’; cf. swinglin and swing-bat).

swingle-haund (swing-lin-hawnd) n., arch. a sharp-edged wooden lath for dressing flax, also known as a ‘swingleing sword’ – ‘. . . and beaten with a sword-shaped stick called a swingling-hand’ [JAHM], ‘They laid sae fast upon the boards, The swinglinds gaed like horseman’s swords’ [JoHo] (also ‘swinglind’ and ‘swinglunt’).

swingle-stock (swing-lin-stok) n., arch. an upright board, over which flax was held while it was beaten – ‘The operation was performed by means of a swingling-stock a board fastened uprightly to another piece on which the foot was placed to keep it steady’ [JAHM].
swinglin-sword

swinglin-sword (swing-glin-sôrd) n., arch. a sword-shaped, wooden lath used for dressing flax.

swing-lint (swing-lin’) n., arch. a tool used for breaking flax, a swingle (cf. swinglind).

the swings (thu-swinge) n. general term for a playground – ‘grannie, can oo gaun ti the swings’.

swing ticket (swing-ti-ki’) n. a hanging tag attached to a garment (e.g. in the knitwear industry) when it is finished.

Swinnie (swi-nee) n. hamlet and farm off the A68 on the B6357 towards Hallrule. Thomas Oliver ‘de Swyne’, who witnessed a sasine in Rulewater in 1436 may have been from here. Robert Oliver was there in 1502. It was listed along with Clarilee in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the lord thereof’; at that time they were valued at £4 6s 8d. In 1557 Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst complained to the Queen that a force led by the Laird of Bedrule had terrorised the tenant, Adam Kirkton; this was presumably part of land dispute. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £400 (along with Old Jedburgh and ‘Standalane’); the Earl of Lothian owned the teinds. There were 10 separate households listed there in the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788. John Goodfellow was there in 1797. Richard Davidson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There was formerly a toll-bar there. In about 1833 a horn was found here, containing silver coins from the reign of James I of Scotland and around 1845 a set of 300–400 silver coins were ploughed up on the farm, these being from the reigns of Henry VIII and Queen Mary. There is a linear earthwork to the west of the farm, which runs about a mile and is probably an old agricultural boundary. A plantation about 1 km south of the farmhouse has an interesting jigsaw-piece shape (also written ‘Swinney’ and ‘Swinne’), it is ‘Swyynny’ in 1502, ‘Swayne’ and ‘Swayne’ in 1538, ‘Swinnee’ in 1539, ‘Swayne’ in 1557 and ‘Swynie’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sownie’).

Swinnie Moor (swi-nee-moor) n. moorland area between Boucher and Jedburgh, around the B6357, near the hamlet of Swinnie and Swinnie Plantation. An area called Swinnie Dyke Nook was once the supposed haunting ground of a ‘bogle’ (the origin of the name is possibly from Old Norse ‘svithningar’, meaning ‘the place cleared by burning’ and first occurs as ‘Swynny’ in 1528).

Swinstead (swin-síd) n. hamlet on the Oxnam Water south of Oxnam village, the area once being the seat of the Kers of Swinside. William of Abernethy held lands there in the early 14th century. In 1468 Patrick and William Douglas were tenants there. Brothers Adam, Robert, Henry, Simon and George Douglas were recorded there in 1502, as well as separately brothers James, Adam and 2 Johns. Andrew Rutherford had sasine for these lands in 1506. A Rutherford of Swinside is said to have been among those who died at Fiodden. In 1579/80 and 1586/7 George Douglas was there. There were Hislops there in 1590 and Murrays and Douglases in 1623. The lands were held by Lord Jedburgh in the early 17th century. Simon Elliot of Swinside owned the lands in 1678, when they were valued at £1675. The Hearth Tax records list 13 householders on the estate in 1694. Alexander Lindsay paid tax on 31 windows there in 1748, while William Elliot paid tax for 10 windows. John Smith was there in 1797. The farms there were run by Douglases in the mid-19th century (also written ‘Swinysyde’, ‘Swinside’, ‘Swinesyde’, ‘Swynsyde’ and ‘Swynside’; the origin is probably Old English ‘swin set’, meaning ‘place where pigs are kept’; the name may be first recorded as ‘Swyneshede’ in 1335/6, then is ‘Swynyshed’ in 1390 and ‘Swynysyde’ in about 1390).

Swinstead (swin-steed) n. Swinstead, former lands in Kirkton Parish, once held by the Elltis. This could be the ‘Swintries’ held by the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh and managed for him (along with Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Priesthaugh) by his step-father Gavin Eliott of Stobs in about the 1560s. James Murray and Hector Jardine were there in 1581. ‘Gawin Elliot of Swinteidis’ is listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. It is probably the ‘Swenesteidis’ where the fugitive Martin Burn was tenant in 1606. In 1610 it was listed as part of the Lordship of Winnington, possessed by 3 sisters called Hamilton, heirs of their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. In 1622 Gilbert of Stobs purchased the 15 merk land of Over and Nether ‘Swynesteid’ from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington; it was described as ‘now commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newton’. It then formed part of the estate of the Elltis of Stobs in the 17th century. It may be the same as the farm of ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish where Robert

Smith is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is probably ‘Swynsteis’ in 1574, ‘Swinteis’ in 1576, ‘Swynsteids’ in 1581, ‘Swynsteid’ in 1610, ‘Over and Nether Swynsteid’ in 1657, ‘Swynsteide Ovir et Nethir’ in 1670 and ‘Over and Nether Swynstead’ in 1681).

Swinton (swin'-in, swin-tin) n. village in Berwickshire on the Leet Water, set out around the green with its 18th century cross. It is the original home of the Swinton family, who claim the oldest charters of any family in Scotland and are buried in the local church. Swinton House was built around 1800 to replace an earlier house destroyed by fire and also has a tower-shaped dovecote, still occupied by pigeons. The surrounding Parish absorbed the parish of Simprin in 1761, where Thomas Boston was minister. The Wheatsheaf Hotel has won awards for its restaurant.

Swinton (swin'-in, swin-tin) n. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Margaret Douglas, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Isabella (b.1823); Thomas (b.1825); Anne (b.1829); John (b.1832); Charles (b.1835); James (b.1839); and William (b.1839). John (1832–c.1913) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. He also helped secure a Cornet in 1856, when the man elected by the Council refused to accept. He celebrated the Common Riding along with other exiles in 1858 in Galt, Canada. He also acted as starter for the Common Riding Races. He remained on the Ceremonial Committee from 1887–95. In 1861 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) Scott. Their children included Charles, Margaret, Ann and Elizabeth. Marion (18th C.) housemaid at Woll in 1791, when she was working for Charles Scott.

Sym (sim)  n. Rev. Arthur Pollok (1862–1946) born in Greenbank, near Edinburgh, son of William and Mary Thomson Pitcairn. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1881 and his B.D. in 1884. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that same year and became assistant minister at St. George’s Parish in Edinburgh. He was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1888. In the period 1895–99 he was examiner for degrees at Edinburgh University. He was Secretary of the Ministers’ Pension Fund Committee in 1907 and Clerk of the Presbytery in 1916. In 1900 he married Caroline Georgina, daughter of William Simson of the Bank of Scotland, and she died in 1938. He was awarded a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1924. He demitted his charge at Lilliesleaf in 1928. He was also Convenor of the Committee on Admissions of Ministers of other Churches 1921–46 and Convenor of Committee on Proposed Scheme for Superannuation of Ministers 1933–37. He wrote the book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ in 1913. His religious writings included ‘Sermon on Temperance’ (1890), ‘St. Paul’s Last Letter’ (1900), ‘A Border Synod’ (published in Hawick, 1902), ‘Suggestions for a Pension Scheme’ (Hawick, 1906), ‘Studies in the Period of Elijah and Elisha’ (1915), ‘The Twenty-Third Psalm: an Anthology of Metrical Versions’ (1923), ‘Marriage in Scotland’ (1933, 1936, 1940, 1942, 1949). He also contributed to Hastings’ ‘Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels’, was editor of ‘The Church of Scotland Year Book’ 1914–20 and edited Mair’s ‘Digest of Church Laws’ (1923).

synde (sünd)  v., arch. to rinse, wash out, wash perfunctorily, give a quick swill to – ‘Athens’ Senate chose the mountain: Ours prefer the running fountain, Sirpling down the shining cheerer, Sinding their ideas clearer’ [JH], ‘…An’ cow-pit the lappert milk he got His vyttles owre to synd’ [WiSp], ‘Weiceleike, A juist tuik a foot – a sirple ti seind oot ma mooth’ [ECS], ‘That wumman’s claes ir no haaf seindeet’ [ECS], ‘…Though they in Bowmont get a synd, ‘Tis for an honest leevin’’ [TCh], ‘They were weel-possed wi Carabolic saip, and weil syndit And hung-oot for a caller blaw …’ [DH] (also spelled ‘seind’, ‘sinde’ and ‘synd’; cf. the more common syne).

Syntoon  (sin-tin, sin’- in)  n. area just before Ashkirk, including several farns, formerly a large estate and separate barony, forming a disjoint part of Selkirkshire. The land was owned by the ‘de Sinton’ family for at east 4 generations. In the reign of William the Lion, Andrew de Sinton was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk, and gave up some lands in Roxburghshire, hence explaining why the estate became part of Selkirkshire. In the early 13th century the lands were described as marching with those of Lilliesleaf. In 1296 Marie de Sinton (probably widow of Alexander) signed the Ragman Rolls. In 1305 the lands were inherited by the ‘de Keith’ family through marriage to Isabella de Sinton. By the late 1400s the Barony was held by the Erskines, with some lands possessed by the Scotts in the 15th century, and with the Scotts being more or less permanent tenants from at least 1509. In 1494 the lands were valued at 40 merks, but in times of peace were worth £20; they were held for payment of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. The Barony may at one point have included the lands of Whitslade and Dalgliesh, while part, owned by the Veitches, was annexed to the Barony of Dawyck. In 1502 the estate was attacked by David Scott ‘in Stirkshawis’ (i.e. Stiches) and some Armstrongs, as well as Adam Turnbull of Hornshole, when many sheep and cattle were stolen. In 1510 the Baron, Lord Robert Erskine, and his son Sir John Erskine, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Details are complicated, but basically for 400 ‘merks’ the Kerrs were sold a 20 merk land in Synton Mains (adjacent to the 5 merk land of Walter Scott), and another piece of land of equivalent value within Synton, together with the option to take over the Scott lands after a few years. In 1537 Gilbert Ker had sasine for a 20 merk land in ‘South Syntoun’. The lands were also raided in 1562, according to a decree made for Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The Laird of ‘Syntoun’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. The Barony was granted to Walter, Earl of Bucheleuch in 1621. George Scott, said to be 14th Laird of Synton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1627. The Lairdship was revived by Sir William’s younger brother Francis. At some early time the lands were split into South and North Synton (on opposite sides of the Ale Water), as well as Synton Mill, Synton Parkhead and Syntonshiel farms. The main estate was South Synton, with North Synton owned by the Veitches from at least 1407 until 1641, when it was sold to Francis Scott of South Synton. The estate passed from Sir John Edmondston of that Ilk to John, Earl of Mar in 1593, and was bought outright by the Scotts of Bucheleuch in 1619. The Barony and lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661, 1663, including ‘the toure, fortal-ice, manor-place, housis, bigingis, yairdis, mylnes, mylnelandis, multoris, and sequellis thairof’. The estate was valued at £946 in about 1663. An account of Selkirkshire compiled in about 1680 describes ‘the House of South Sintoun a Gentleman’s Dwelling pleasantly situated, with a Village near unto it, called the Langtoun, under which toward the Water is a Myln belonging to the Gentleman, and above it, a Place called the Parkhead’, George Turnbull was living there in 1698, and James Veitch was a servant there at the same time. Thomas Bourhill was gardener there in 1717. In 1785 and 1803 the lands of Synton and Synton Mill were valued at £1600. George Helm was a servant there in 1797 and Andrew Shortreed in 1799. Residents in 1801 included valet Hugh Moffat, footman Peter McNaughton, coachman Andrew Ormiston and labourer Thomas Laidlaw. The arms of the original Scotts of Synton have 2 stars and a crescent and their motto ‘Reparabit Cornua Phœbe’. The Harden-derived Scotts of Synton (and later the Corse Scotts) were important local lairds for many generations. Their arms are a ‘bend azure’ with a star and 2 crescents and their motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. Since the estate was the site for the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk, there must have once been at least a fortified house there, but its precise location is unknown. It seems likely to have been near to where the 18th century house was built, this having stones built into it dating from 1570. This house was demolished in the latter half of the 20th century (also spelled ‘Sintoun’, ‘Sintone’, ‘Sintonne’, ‘Sintoun’, ‘Sintone’, ‘Syntoun’, ‘Suyntone’, ‘Syntoune’, ‘Syntoun’, ‘Syntoune’, ‘Syntoun’, etc., it is mistranscribed ‘Swyntoun’ in 1649; it is mentioned from at least the early 13th century; Gordon’s c.1650 maps show ‘Syntoun’ and ‘Sintoun’, Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘South Syntoun’ and ‘North Sintoun’, while Adair’s c.1688 map shows ‘Syntoun’; an early connection with ‘Swinton’ is not impossible).

Syntoncorses (sin’in-kör-seez) n. farmstead between Synton and Synton Mains. About 140 m to the east are the remains of a ‘burnt mound’, at least 3 m in diameter. Robert Scott was shepherd there in 1851.

Synton Cottage (sin’in-ko’-euj) n. cottage that is to the west of Synton farm. About 160 m to the north are the remains of a farmstead, with a building, 2 enclosures and traces of rig-and-furrow.
Synton Hoose

cit-in-hoos n. former house on the estate at Synton. It was rebuilt in about 1775 by Alexander Scott of Synton, probably on the site of the earlier house. It was located where modern maps mark ‘Synton’, although it was abandoned after WWII, demolished in around 1970 and there is now little sign of where it was. The stables are inscribed with the date 1777, and it seems likely the main house was rebuilt at this time.Reset within the walls were 2 stones from the older house, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOWN AND MARGRET EDMESTOWN HIS SP(OWS IN THE) ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR [heir] T(O WALTER SCOT)...’ The inscribed stones disappeared along with the house, although some tiles and bricks were discovered on the site in 2013 and were incorporated into new buildings there.

Synton Loch (cit-in-loch n.) small lake to the left of the A7 before coming to the main Synton area. It covers about 6 acres and is stocked for fishing. It is what is left of the much larger area of Synton Moss, which was largely drained in the 18th and 19th centuries. To the southwest some bones of an aurochs was discovered there in 1979. On a ridge about 300 m to the south lie the remains of a settlement, trapezoidal in shape, about 75 m by 65 m, with entrance near the east corner. It contains 2 sets of banks and inside are what might be 4 hut platforms. An Iron Age sword, as well as shards of pottery, found there in the Royal Museum of Scotland. These suggest earlier occupation of the site.

Synton Mains (cit-in-mänz n.) farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. It has also been known as ‘Synton North Mains’. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. In 1609 Walter Veitch was served as heir to his grandfather in the lands of North Synton, including ‘lie Maynes’ there. John Scott was tenant there in 1709. Charles Scott was tenant in 1786. John Paterson junior was living at ‘Sinton Northmains’ in 1797, Thomas Paterson and James Scott were in the same place in 1799 and Walter Inglis was there in 1801. There are quarries nearby, used in the 18th and 19th centuries for dry-stane dykes. More recently there has been a driving range there (presumably once the home farm for Synton; it is ‘the Many of Syntoun’ in 1510 and ‘Sintownmill’ in 1755; is marked ‘Mains’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Mill (cit-in-nil n.) farm and former corn mill on the south side of the Ale Water north of Synton. Isobel Scott was there in 1635, according to a court case at Ashkirk Session, with Thomas Nichol and Andrew Nichol also mentioned as tenants. Tax was paid for 6 hearths there in 1694. Andrew Fletcher was miller there in at least 1689–98. Robert Foster was miller there in 1703 and William Henderson in 1715. William Tait was cottar there in 1717 and Thomas Scott was there in 1719. John Rutherford was there in at least 1755–65. John Rutherford was tenant there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm. Adam Neil was miller there in 1851 (also written ‘Syntounmill’, it is ‘Sintoune Milne’ in 1689 and ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Sintoum mill’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Sinntoom Mill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Sintown Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Moss (cit-in-mos n.) land near Synton farm on the high ground just before Ashkirk. It was formerly a fairly extensive lake, but drained in the late 18th and early 19th centuries to obtain marl and peat. The remaining part is now called Synton Loch. Bones of several large extinct mammals were found there in the 19th century, including the skull of an aurochs ‘bos primigenius’, donated by Henry Ewen in 1857. The skull and several other bones from a prehistoric aurochs were discovered there in 1979, sent to Hawick Museum and later moved to Durham University.

Synton Mossend (cit-in-mos-end n.) farmstead at the northern end of the Synton Moss area, to the left of the A7 before Ashkirk. It may have been alternatively known as Syntonshiel or Ashkirkshiel. The name is also applied to Synton Loch. There are remains of a settlement in the woods to the south. A stone found on the farm had cup and ring markings and was moved to Whinfield Sawmills Yard in Selkirk before 1967. A hoard of Roman coins was discovered there in 2011, consisting of 228 coins produced under 11 separate emperors, now displayed in the Trimontium Museum. A cutting by the A7 near gives a good opportunity to view folding of the Silurian strata – ‘Past Ashkirk the exile feels that hame is nearly in sight Synton Mossend is left behind and it’s a climb tae the heights’[GM] (see also Ashkirkshiel).

Synton Parkhead

Synton Parkhead  (sin’-in-pawrk-heed) n.  Synton Parkhead, farm on the road to Synton, off to the right of the A7. It is known locally as simply ‘Parkhead’. William Inglis was there in 1581. Thomas Lockie was a wright there in 1715. William Scott lived there in 1764. James Sinton was a servant there in 1801. The lodge house to the north was probably from the late 18th or early 19th century, but has been demolished. The farm there is now known as the Shepherd’s House. A bronze sundial in the garden there, on a modern pedestal, is inscribed ‘SEIZE THE PRESENT MOMENT THE EVENING HOUR IS NIGH’, and ‘1705 / THOMAS GRICE’. A Bronze Age spearhead found there is in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow, a cup and ring marked stone was discovered there in about 1960 and in 2017 an enamelled cooper-alloy strap-fastener from the Iron Age (it is ‘Parkhead in Syntoun’ in 1581).

Syntonshiel  (sin’-in-sheed) n.  former farmstead in the south part of Synton estate. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map between the main road and Synton Loch, corresponding roughly to the position of Synton Mossend. Adam Henderson was a farm servant there in 1801.

Taggart (taw-gur’) n. Fr. Patrick (1809–95) born in County Tyrone, Ireland, he was ordained about 1846. He served in Dumfries and Edinburgh before becoming priest in Hawick in 1847, remaining for almost 50 years. Originally he ministered to Catholics in St. Boswells, Jedburgh, Kelso and Galashiels, as well as in Hawick. He was finally relieved of the responsibilities of Galashiels in 1853. He opened a Catholic school in Hawick in 1854. He also ran an evening school, since many of his pupils worked during the day. He had a house built for him in 1851, after living in the vestry for 2 years! He was known for regularly going walks with Rev. Dr. MacRae, and in general for being on good terms with the local protestant ministers. His services were used several times to try to quell riots that broke out during the building of the railway line, at St. Boswells and Shankend. It is also said that he helped get hosiery orders from the Admiralty directed towards Hawick firms in a time of very slack business. He later had a small cottage built behind the chapel to serve as his retirement home. In 1890 he was made a Domestic Prelate, with the title of Monsignor. He was buried in a vault at S.S. Mary & David’s and a stained glass window was erected in his memory.

Tailleycleuch (tā-lee-clooch) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly near the modern Steelroad-end. The stream there is marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. There is no sign of where the house may have been. A circular enclosure near there, and close to the railway line, was excavated in 1977; it is about 40 m in diameter, and seems to be a prehistoric settlement with later occupation, probably unrelated to the tower-house. It may be associated with the ‘Tailside’ recorded in 1632, which was probably close to there (see also Taylor’s Cleuch).

Taillyard (tā-lee-yārd) n. name for former lands within Crook, i.e. near the Kirkton Burn in Cavers Parish. It is recorded in 1581 as a ‘hortulo herbario vulgo vocat tailzard’, i.e. a small herb garden commonly called Taillyard, on the west side of the lands of Crook (note that the transcription of the name is unclear; ‘Taill’ probably refers to a small piece of land attached to a larger area).

tailors (tā-lurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were probably incorporated towards the end of the 17th century. In 1679 their quartermasters were fined for ‘making an act not to work out of their own houses’. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1734 the Council allowed a petition from them ‘to convene at six o’clock to their work, and leave at eight o’clock at night’. The first female dressmaker in Hawick was in about 1793, with dresses before this period being made by the tailors. In 1836 there were 6 weavers in the incorporation, each paying 7 shillings admission fee.

Tailor’s Slack (tā-lurz-slawk) n. short stream in Liddesdale, running into Greenshiel Sike, which becomes part of Ryedale Burn.

Tails Day (tālz-dā) n. former tradition on the day after ‘Huntie Gowk’, i.e. 2nd April, in which children (particularly at school) would try to pin paper tails on unsuspecting victims (this survived until around WWII).

Tailside (tāl-sid) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Fairside and Cleuchside. It may be associated with the modern Taylor’s Cleuch and the fortified house of ‘Tailleycleuch’.

tailzie (tāl-yee) n., arch. term in Scots law, an entailment, whereby the legal succession of an estate is restricted to designated heirs – ‘Free the gates ye thowless bailies! Leave for once your wads and tailziez! [RSC], poet. a covenant – ‘Til sic as keepe his taylye, an’ til thae that beær in mind his commandements til do thame’ [HSR].

tait (tait, tai’) n. a small amount, little piece – . . . when there’s sic a need for baith you an’ Katie to get the taitis o’ woo’ spun up’[JTe], . . . A tate o’ meal, a pickle coals, Will help their New Year’s day’[TCh], ’A’ll juist hev a wee tait o’d’, ’The Cornet, a tait reed o’ face On the road tae Monday Chase’[MB] (probably from Scandinavian).

Tait (tä’) n. Adam (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Adam (17th C.) resident of Shielswood in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (d.aft. 1595) recorded as ‘Vicar-pensioner and Reader’ at Traquair 1567–80. He was then deprived, living afterwards at St. Bride’s Kirk, Traquair. He became minister of Bedrule in 1585, but was ordered to demit this in 1591. He is mentioned as still living in 1595. Alexander (1782–1851) youngest son of miller George and Agnes Scott. He is probably the Alexander recorded as servant to William (probably meant for John) Sibbald at Borthaugh on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot Mill and his widow was living there in 1851. He died at Burnfoot in the 44th year of his service there. He married Margaret Younger, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included William and Margaret. They are buried in Wilton. Andrew (1778–1861) originally from Lauder, son of Andrew and Ann, he was a stockingseller to Green Wynd. He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk. There is a record of him being granted money by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1817 for a broad frame, after he had demonstrated that he had discovered how to make down tippets and muffms on the frame. He managed to make white feathered muffms, but when taste changed to coloured muffms, he was unable to get the feathers to dye properly. He was living on the Back Row in 1832, adjacent to where there were cholera victims. He is recorded as a widower living with the Kyle family on the Green Wynd in 1841 and 1851. Archibald (b.1705) farmer near Borthaugh. He was father of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He is said to have lived into his late 90s, have married twice and had 19 children. He may be the tenant in Whitehillbrae whose wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1760, with her funeral recorded in Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Archibald (b.1741) and George (b.1743), both baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Archibald (18th C.) married Margaret Welch in Ashkirk Parish in 1768. Archibald (d.1824) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. He is probably the Archibald, son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull, who was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1741. He married Isabella Geddes, who died in 1822, aged 84. In her death record he is listed as ‘Egglar’, meaning a pedlar who collected eggs from outlying farms to sell at markets. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1777), who married carrier James Paterson; and William (b.1782), who was a carrier. His children were baptised in Hawick and Wilton Parishes; he was at Fenwick in 1777 and Borthaugh in 1782. The 1782 baptism was witnessed by George Tait (probably his brother) and Margaret Cowan; in an adjacent baptismal entry he was witness for George. He was probably son of the earlier Archibald and brother of George, tenant at Borthaugh Mill. He may be the Archibald who was charged with theft in Hawick in 1776. Archibald (1820–79) son of William and Elizabeth Forsyth. He was proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb Hotel in Melrose. He married Elizabeth Naylor. He died in Hawick. David (19th C.) shepherd near Addestoneshiel. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an otter that had been shot on Addestoneshiel Moss. He is probably the ‘D. Tait’ recorded at Adderstonelee in 1868. Ernest E., O.B.E., J.P. (?–--) accountant in Pringle’s, he was President of the Callants’ Club in 1966. He became Secretary at Pringle’s in 1939, taking over from James Watherston. In 1947 he was made a Director of Pringle’s. George of Pirn (15th C.) listed on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He is recorded as being ‘of the Pren', his lands being in Tweeddale (near Stow). The David ‘de pryn’ recorded in the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 is probably his son (and his son George is recorded in 1498). It is said that the Taits of Pirn died out in the male line and were continued by a daughter who married Horsburgh of that Ilk; they may be the oldest known Taits. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when James Gray in Fawhope had remission for stealing livestock from his farms of ‘pyrne’ (i.e., Pirn), Gatehope, Seathope and Innerleithen. He was probably son of the previous George of Pirn. Gray had also been accused of killing Anthony Pirn), Gatehope, Seathope and Innerleithen. He was probably the brother of William, son of Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton itself in 1731 and at Highchesters in 1742. Children baptised in Roberton who are probably his include Margaret (b.1731), Isabel (b.1738), Helen (b.1742), John (b.1748) and James (b.1754). George (1743–1812) son of Archibald, he was baptised in Hob Kirk Parish. He was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, being the last miller there. He married Agnes Scott, who died in 1812, aged 70. Their children included: John; Isabel (b.1773); Archibald (b.1776); George (b.1778), builder in Hawick; William (b.1780); and Alexander (1782–1851). The 1782 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. George (1778–1853) son of George, who was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was listed as a mason at Borthaugh in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish’. In 1801 he was still listed as a mason at Borthaugh, but labelled ‘Hawick Volunteer’, suggesting that he was excepted from service because of already being in the volunteers. He became a builder in Hawick, whose son (also a mason) had 3510 parents on Wilton Kirkstyle and listed as ‘Deaf & Dumb’. Gilbert (b.1803/4) gamekeeper at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included Christian and William. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Andrew (b.1689). James (d.1815) tenant farmer at Eilrig. He is recorded there on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He is recorded as ‘Mr James Tait’ at Eilrig in 1798 when his daughter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1795, the marriage being recorded in both Robertson and Ettrick Parishes. Their children included: Janet (b.1798); Helen (b.1803); Henry (b.1806); and Georgine (b.1810). His death is recorded in Hawick in 1815, with the words ‘Died suddenly’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Helen Leithhead from Hawick Parish. James (b.1805/6) coal agent in Denholm. His wife was Helen. James (1815–63) son of builder George, he was a chemist at 27 High Street in the mid-19th century. He also had a school in the back premises. He was said to be a ‘cripple and walked very lame’. He married Catherine Anderson, from Jedburgh. James (19th C.) editor of the Kelso Chronicle. He wrote the 2 volume study ‘Two Centuries of Border Church Life: with Biographies of Leading Men and Sketches of the Social Conditions of the People’ (1889, 1891). It principally contains details of churches associated with Kelso Presbytery, encompassing several areas around Hawick, including Lilliesleaf and Liddesdale. He also edited Walter Riddell Carre’s work ‘Border Memories, or, Sketches of the So-listed as a house and riding servant. John (18th C.) tenant farmer in Fenwick in about the 1750s, when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was said to have ‘came and drunk with Bailie Ker’ in order to solve a dispute with the Town Herd over the use of the Common. John (18th C.) recorded at Winnington Rig on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1768/9–1812) road contractor who died at Abbotrule Lodge. His wife Elizabeth Bell died in Edinburgh in 1851, aged 82. Their youngest son Adam (born in Southdean Parish) died in Edinburgh, aged 30. The family were recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard.

John (1771–1851) son of George, he was born at Borthaugh Mill. In 1794 he married Agnes, daughter of Gilbert Amos, and she died in 1815. The marriage was against the wishes of her family, and so she was carried off from Adderstonelee at midnight! He then moved to Cavers, where he served as a forester on Cavers estate. Their children included: Gilbert (d.c.1819); George (1796–1856); John (1799–1863); James (1803–70); Peter (b.1805); and Margaret (b.1812). In 1819 he emigrated to New York state with 5 children, settling in Oxbow on the Oswegatchie River. His grandson James D. Taitt wrote a history of Oxbow on the Oswegatchie River. His father was John (b.1791/2) stone-cutter in Denholm Mill. He is still recorded as farmer at Denholm Mill in 1868. He married Isabella Gray, who was from Crailing. Their children included: James (b.1828); John Gray (b.1830); David (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); William (b.1835); William (again, b.1837), who was a shepherd; Peter (b.1839); Robert (b.1840); Charles Anderson Gray (b.1846); and Thomas (b.1843). Their children were born in Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes.

John (b.1808) son of builder George, he was a mason on the Cross Wynd. Like his father and brother George, he sat on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’, representing the hammermen from 1848. He and his brother built a good fraction of North Bridge Street, as well as several large mansions in the Hawick area. In 1851 he is listed as a builder, with 2 partners, employing 12 people, and residing at about 13 Cross Wynd. His wife was Agnes Reid from Langholm, and their children included Margaret, Isabella, Agnes, John, Helen, George and James.

John (b.1829) son of carrier William, who died when he was young. He probably served in the army during the Crimean War. In 1863 in Wilton Parish he married Helen, daughter of mason Walter Cranston; she died in 1913. He was at that time described as a frameworker and Chelsea Pensioner and the witnesses were Archibald Brown and Agnes Cranston. Their children included: William Walter (b.1865); and Walter (b.1866). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middlemas) in 1860.

John G. (b.1830/1) head gardener at Cavers. In 1861 he was living at ‘Cavers Garden’ which was presumably the gardener’s house on the estate. Rev. ?? (17th/18th C.) chaplain at Thorlieshope. He was one of the local clergy who gave sermons in Hawick in 1721 when Rev. Cunningham was ill.

Robert (17th C.) tenant in Honeyburn. In 1684 he was among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. He is listed separately from Robert in Hagburn. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hagburn (in Rulewater). He is listed in 1684 among men declared fugitives for refusal to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant in Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799.

Thomas (b.1801/2) born in Channellkirk Parish, he was a gardener at Wells and then farmer at Denholm Mill. He is still recorded as farmer at Denholm Mill in 1868. He married Isabella Gray, who was from Crailing. Their children included: James (b.1828); John Gray (b.1830); David (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); William (b.1835); William (again, b.1837), who was a shepherd; Peter (b.1839); Robert (b.1840); Charles Anderson Gray (b.1846); and Thomas (b.1843). Their children were born in Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes.

Thomas (1833/4–1923) son of stonemaster John. He married Christina Black, who died in 1908, aged 70. Their children included Rule (1866/7–97). Probably the same Thomas was tenant at Denholm Mill, recorded in the 1860s. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Adderstoneshiel, recorded on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786, when he was also at Adderstoneshiel. Betty (b.1784), John Caverhill (b.1787), Caverhill (b.1788), Margaret (b.1790) and Susan (b.1792) were probably also his children. Walter (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at No. 2 Dickson Street in the mid-1900s. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. In 1697 he was ‘cottar in Sinto’ (presumably Synton). He married Agnes Beattie (sometimes written ‘Brattie’ or ‘Brattine’) and their children included James (b.1689), John (b.1691), Janet (b.1694), Marion (b.1697), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Robert (b.1705). The witnesses in 1694 were James Pringle and William Brown (who lived at Ashkirk Mill). Probably the same William was cottar in Synton Mill when his daughter Alison with Isobel Gibson was baptised in 1717. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1721 he married Margaret, daughter of William Hope, gardener. Their children included: John (b.1722); William (b.1724); Thomas (b.1727); Henrietta (b.1730); and Isabel (b.1734). William (1782–1832) son of Archibald and Isabel Geddes, he was baptised at Borthaugh in Wilton Parish. He may be the servant of James Riddell at Leaheads listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Dumfries and Annan, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was listed as a carrier in the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the carrier William who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of William Forsyth, in Wilton Parish in 1813 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1812), who married James Daykins; Isabella (b.1814), who married John Lawrie; Elizabeth (b.1816), who married Peter Blair, miller at Hundalee and emigrated to Australia; Matilda (1818–1900), who married George Aitken in Linton and died in Edinburgh; Archibald (b.1820), who married Elizabeth Naylor and was proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in Melrose; Catherine (1823–64), who married farm steward Andrew Walker of Linton Parish; Williamina (1826–31); John (b.1829), who married Helen Cranston; and William (c.1831), confectioner. His wife died 2 days after him, leaving 8 children as orphans. In 1833 his former premises in the east end of Hawick were advertised for sale, including ‘dwelling-house, offices, garden, and pertinents’, with the house being built within the previous 20 years. William (b.c.1784) born in Howman, son of David and Janet (or Jessie) Armstrong. He moved to Hyndlee as a shepherd and spent most of his working life at Wauchope Walls (also known as ‘Langhaughwalls’ or ‘the Waas’). He was recorded there in 1861 and 1868. He also acted as carrier between Hawick and Jedburgh and the Wauchope area. Along with his wife Rachel and daughter Rachel, he was a member of the original congregation of Wolfleee Free Kirk. He married Rachel Riddell in 1805. Their children were David (who married Mary Paterson), Betsy (who emigrated to America), Janet (who married T. Waugh), Mary (who married A. Elliot), Margaret (who married labourer Christopher Shaketton), Agnes Douglas (who emigrated to America), Rachel, Isabel (who married Will Bell), Helen (born at Hislop), Jane and James. William (b.1802/3) from Bowden, he was a baker on the Cross Wynd. On Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a baker on the High Street. He was at about 4 Cross Wynd in 1841. He later lived on Backdamgate and Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Kerr, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Jessie, who married John Davidson; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Robert. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Rutherford in Hawick in 1834. William (19th C.) married Anne Hood in Wilton Parish in 1847. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hardie in Hawick Parish in 1853. tam-trot join (tawm-tro’join) n., arch. a social gathering to make and eat toffee — ‘Taffy-shines, or, as they were locally called, ‘Tam Trot joins’’ [HAST1909] (see also taffie-join).

Tam Wilson’s Cauld (tawm-wul-sinz-kawld) n. former weir in the Slitrig, associated with Thomas Wilson’s mill on Slitrig Crescent. In 1837, opposite here, part of the wall was taken down so that Tory supporters could be thrown into the water.

Tancred (tawng-kred) n. George (1831–1914) eldest son of George Cleghorn of Weens. He was born and raised at Weens, then educated in Edinburgh and at Leamington. When rowing on the Thames as a boy, he mangled his hand and lost part of a thumb. He joined the East India Company at age 19 and became an ensign in the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry, caught an almost fatal illness and was sent to Simla to recover. He then moved to Kashmir, when he became ill again with dysentery and returned to England in 1853. There he joined the West York Militia, purchased a commission with the 17th Lancers, and was transferred to the Scots Greys, where he became Captain, spending time in various parts of England and also Ireland. He retired from the army in 1866. He was a keen shooter, bragging that over a year he (and some friends) killed about 1000 patridges, 400 pheasants and 60 grouse. He succeeded his father in 1855, and was known as ‘Cleghorn of Weens’ for 30 years. However, he assumed the name and arms of Tancred in 1885 following the death of Charles Tancred of Arden Hall, Yorkshire, according to the conditions of succession to his estate. He substantially improved the house at Weens in the early years of the 20th century. He took possession of the ‘key of Gibraltar’ which had been taken from ‘the Rock’ by Lord Heathfield, who was born at Wells. He was a member of the Roxburghshire County Council, Chairman of Hobkirk Parish Council, Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as the North Riding of Yorkshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1862. He was also a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. He wrote ‘Historical Record of Medals and Honorary Distinctions’ (1891), ‘The Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’ (1899) and ‘Rulewater and its People: an Account of the Valley of the Rule and its Inhabitants’ (1907, reprinted in facsimile 1992). This last book is an extremely valuable account of the histories of families the Rule valley (and neighbouring areas), particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, and including ordinary people as well as the landed gentry. And the Jedforest Club book is actually an excuse for him to present the histories of a large fraction of the local land-owning families. He was said to be working on another book when he died, ‘Old Border Lairds and their Tenants’; it is not clear how far he had progressed and no manuscript survives. In 1862 he married Mary Anne Hay (who died in 1914), 3rd daughter of Col. Thomas Lumsden, from Aberdeenshire. They had 11 children: George Harry Lumsden (1863–1935), who served in South Africa, married Sarah Ann Gillespie and died in New Zealand; James Charles (b.1864), who was a Royal Navy Commander and married Cecile Margaret, only daughter of Walter Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope; Thomas Angus (b.1867), Major in the Royal Artillery; Richard Fairfax (b.1875), moved to Queensland; Edward Meynell (b.1877), also Queensland; John Yule (b.1879), with the Indian Staff Corps; Walter Cecil (b.1885), born at Weens, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy; Mary Norcliffe; Katherine Wray (b.1869), born at Weens, who married Alexander Orniston Curle, W.S.; Frances Madeline (b.1871), also born at Weens; and Edith Dalton (1873–90). A plaque in his memory was erected on the wall of Weens House in 1981 (also known as ‘George Cleghorn’ and ‘Captain Cleghorn’).

Tandlaw (tawnd-law) n. farm just out past the ‘Fower Road Ends’, with a small loch nearby, Tandlaw Moss. It appears to have been part of the estate of Robert Scott of Alton in 1643. Robert Scott of Tandlaw paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. It was contained within Hassendean Parish until 1690 when it fell within the new Wilton Parish boundaries. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1702 and mason William Gibson in 1708. Thomas Scott was tenant in at least 1716–24 and in 1764 it was stated that after 1716 it was ‘possessed by four different tenants, all now dead, till Cowdhouse it into his own hand’. Another Robert Scott was there in at least 1729–30 and Thomas Stoddart in 1732. In 1743 William Scott, younger of Coldhouse, was granted ‘Little Drinkston, commonly called Tanlaw’ by his father Robert. James (son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse and brother of William) was tenant in about 1744–47, Thomas Armstrong after that and then the farm was tenanted along with Coldhouse. Walter Scott was there in 1758 and Adam Armstrong in 1791. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleithen is recorded as owner in 1788 (continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £40 and recorded as ‘Tanlaw, or Tandlaw’. In 1851 it consisted of 200 acres. Robert Symonton was farmer there in 1797 and William Ormiston lived there in 1799. Adam Nichol was farmer in 1841 and 1851. The farm was owned by George Davidson in 1860, when a plan was drawn up showing the field layout and that at that time the lands included Crookedhaugh Moss, Coldhouse Kipp and the old building at Coldhouse (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw’; it is ‘Tandla’ in 1673, ‘Taendlaw’ in 1682, ‘Tandla’ in 1702, ‘Tanlaw’ in 1743, and ‘Tanlaw or Tandlaw’ in 1813; not to be confused with ‘Tanlaw Naze’ near Teviothead or ‘Tanlawhill’ etc. near Eskdalemuir).

Tandlaw Moss (tawnd-law-mos) n. marshy area and small loch to the west of Tandlaw farm. It is the source of the Boonraw Burn (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw Moss’).

Tandlawrig (tawnd-law-rig) n. former farmstead owned by the Scotts of Coldhouse. In 1743, William Scott, younger of Coldhouse, was granted ‘Little Drinkston and Tanlawrig, commonly called Cowdhouse’. It is unclear if it is the same as Coldhouse or just part of those lands.

Tanlaw Naze (tan-law-naz) n. hill between Falnash and Caerlenrig, reaching a height of 310m. The former farmstead near there was called ‘Tanlawness’ (and variant) in earlier documents. Will and George Turnbull are recorded there in 1503. Along with the lands of Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was confirmed by James IV in a 1511 charter to Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern Dalgleish. Along with Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald in 1647. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690 (the name probably derives from Scots ‘tandle’, meaning a bonfire, and Middle English ‘nese’ for a projecting nose of land; it is ‘tandilnes’ in 1503, ‘Tandilnes’ in 1511 and 1647, ‘Tandlaneis’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Tabdanerse’ in 1690).

Tannage Close (taw-neej-kloes) n. passageway off the middle of the west side of the High Street, between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanning pits at the bottom of the close, with the business carried out by John & Walter Wilson from 1800. In the early 1800s it was called Ewen’s Court, then was known as Moncrieff’s Close until Tannage Close was adopted about 1857 (although the 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows the bottom part called Tannage Close, with the upper part labelled Moncrieff’s Close). The Moncrieff family used to live on the east side of the close. The name ‘Guthrie’s Close’ has also been used (from the plumber and slater’s business on the west side). It was once an area of over-crowded housing, with re-development happening between the two world wars. A plaque was placed there in 2011 marking the nearby location of the workplace of Jimmie Guthrie.

tanner (taw-nur) n., arch. a sixpenny coin, sixpence – ‘Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a tanner ...’ [AY], ‘Thrippences, tanners, bobs, florins, The odd halfcroon Come floatin’ doon’ [DH].

the Tanner’s Pool

The Tanner’s Pool (thu-taw-nurz-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot near the foot of Tannage Close, which was used for tanning. The base of the old Mercat Cross was once located here (and the iron ring in it used for securing skins), but removed when Teviot Road was built.

tannin (taw-nin) n. the act of converting hides into leather by soaking in an infusion of barks containing tannic acid. The tanning of leather and dressing of sheepskins was formerly an important trade in Hawick. Tanners would usually have open tanning vessels, producing a strong smell in the vicinity. Mactaggarts skinworks was a related modern business that successfully operated through much of the 20th century. The name ‘Tannage Close’ is one of the few remnants of this occupation.

Tarras (taw-ris) n. lands lying between the Liddesdale and Eskdale. The farm was listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section labelled ‘Foresta’. ‘The Laird’s Rowie’ (i.e. Roland) Armstrong was recorded dwelling at ‘Tarrassye’ in 1583. The lands there passed to William Scott (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) in 1606 and later his descendant became the first and only Earl of Tarras. The lands and Barony of Tarras were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch; the bounds of the lands at that time are describe therein. It was valued at £1100 in 1671. The river there was so full of rocks that it was said to be impossible to drown in, since ones brains would be dashed out Tarras Heid (taw-ris-heed) n. area at the head of Tarras Water (it is ‘Tarres’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Tarras Moss (taw-ris-mos) n. high area near the Border in a side valley between the Liddel and the Esk, notorious in rieving days. The lands were recorded as early as the late 14th century. tattis (ta’iz) n., pl. potatoes. It should be remembered that this plant has not always formed part of the staple of the local diet. Potatoes are first noted in Scotland in a household book of the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1701. There is a record that Dickson of Hassendeaneburn paid William Turnbull, a Denholm carrier, 1 shilling for a peck of potatoes in 1729; this may imply one of the earliest examples of potato cultivation in Scotland. They were still a relative rarity in the 1740s and there was apparently much opposition to eating them to begin with. In about 1760 William Scott of Woll was among the first to plant them far apart in drills. they did not become a staple of the local diet until the late 18th century.

Taylor (tā-lor) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed after Simon Armstrong of Calfield and his servant in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. He could be the ‘Andro Taillour’ listed ‘in Schorthborgholme’ among Liddesdale and Eskdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing in a court in Hawick in 1605. Archibald ‘Archie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Zairdhous’ in Liddesdale. Since this is listed by other farms near Newcastleton, it could be that Yethouse is meant. Charles (19th C.) teacher, who was one of the three people who met in 1877 to plan the Hawick Golf Club. He was also part of the first committee and later Club Captain. In 1879 he won the medal (presented by Robert Fraser Watson) at the first golf championship played in Hawick. He was conductor of the Hawick Choral Union in at least the 1870s. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for a child of Thomas Barrie. His children included Helen (b.1704) and David (b.1707). The baptism in 1704 was witnessed by weavers John Taylor (surely related) and David Miller. In 1711 he was a weaver at Roughheugh when his son Walter was baptised in Wilton Parish. He is probably the David who witnessed bapisms in 1724 for John Scott from Brieryhill and John Miller from Roughheugh. David (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshall in 1756 and 1762. His children included John (b.1754), William (b.1756), Isobel (b.1759) and Walter (b.1762). Agnes (b.1748 and Thomas (b.1749), baptised in Minto, may also have been his children. David (19th/20th C.) joiner at Damfoot, Newmill. He was responsible for the original wooden Lawson Bridge, as well as the ‘Joogly Brig’. Douglas (1823–87) son of John. He was an apprentice joiner with James Rutherford at Bonchester, and his first job was to remove the thatch from the 3 ‘Sclenty houses’ in 1839. He was then a joiner on the Weens estate at Bonchester Bridge. He was the first in the area to erect wire fences, and developed a business supplying these. Henry Anderson worked for him in the late 1870s. In 1882 his joiner’s business was taken over by Walter Turnbull. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), daughter of John Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge. They had several children, including Walter. He died at Wilton Hill in Hawick and was buried at Hobkirk. Edmond (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘ewmund talor’. James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for accompanying him to steal cattle from the farm of Cauldshiels. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. George (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Margaret Hislop. Their son George was baptised in 1690, with witnesses Robert Taylor and William Hislop (who were surely related to the couple). James (15th C.) had a sasine for a merk land in ‘Betheruill’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1473. It is unclear how long he held lands in Rulewater. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Betty Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1761); Margaret (again, b.1763); and Peter (b.1766). The 1766 witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and John ‘Kerswell’. James (18th/19th C.) fined in Cavers Parish in 1792 for an ‘irregular marriage’.
James (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a spinner in Hawick. In 1842 he married Elizabeth Best, who was from Bedrule. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); John (b.1845/6); Catherine (b.1848/9); Agnes A.J. (b.1854/5); and Elizabeth Jane Boston (b.1856). They were living at about 62 High Street in 1851. In 1861 his widow had remarried to grocer William Brown and the family were living on the Mid Raw. Janet (b.1780/1) born in Hawick Parish, she was recorded as 'Independent' at Highend in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. She was listed there as farmer’s widow in 1851 and 1861 and was still recorded there in 1868. She had a daughter Margaret. John (16th C.) tenant in Alemoor. He is recorded in 1573 when he was to be entered at Edinburgh Tolbooth by David 'of Ailmure'. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John Brown and William Allan. John (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. John (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for David, who was probably his son or brother. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1725 and 1726 he was at Robertson Burnfoot and in 1729, 1733 and 1736 he was at Mains. His children included: David (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); Helen (b.1729); Walter (b.1731); Bessie (again, b.1733); James (b.1736); Helen (again, b.1741); and Marion (b.1746). John (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Rulewater. In 1771 he married Betty Amos and had a son, also John, later that year. He may be the John who was recorded as tenant at Blackcleuchmouth in 1797 and whose son Walter was listed on the Militia ballot on 1801. Other children of his may have been John (b.1771), Betty (b.1774), Margaret (b.1778), Agnes (b.1780), Walter (b.1782) and Mary (b.1785). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Lillico and their children included Margaret (b.1792). John (b.1770s) tenant farmer at Unthank, brother of Walter. He may be the son of John baptised in Hobkirk in 1771. He may be the John ‘junior’ living at Blackcleuchmouth in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was recorded as a labourer at Unthank on the 1801 Militia ballot in Hobkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Renwick of Forkins. In 1800 they had a daughter called Betty (who married Douglas Lillico), followed by a son, John. They then moved to Swanshiel, where they had sons Robert (farm steward at Wauchope, before emigrating to America) and Walter (who married Margaret Gow). In later life he moved to Blacklee farm with his eldest son John (where they were in 1841). A few years after his death the farmhouse at Blacklee was allowed to fall to ruin. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1800), John (b.1802), Robert (b.1806), Walter (b.1808), Walter (again, b.1808). Isobel (b.1811), William (b.1813), Isobel (b.1817), Margaret (b.1821) and Douglas (b.1823). Joshua Joseph Henry (1831–1910) composer of music for 'The Banner Blue'. Born in the Huddersfield area, he came to Hawick in 1884 to work as a worsted designer with the tweed manufacturers Blenkhorn & Richardson’s, and later became their mill manager. Musically talented, before coming to Hawick he wrote wrote several short choral anthems, including ‘Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion’, ‘Come, Ye Children’ and ‘Rend Your Hearts’, as well as a full Church of England Service. While in Hawick he wrote a new ‘Te Deum’, performed in Wilton Church in 1891, as well as his last anthem ‘If, With All Your Hearts’. He was honorary organist at Wilton for about a year, after it installed a pipe organ in 1886. He was said to be ‘a modest, retiring man’. He died at his hime at 2 Wilton Hill and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Neil (b.1812/3) from Dunoon in Argyll, he was schoolmaster at Chesters, Southdean Parish around the 1840s to 1860s. He is listed as master of Southdean Parish School in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Shiel, who was sister of Thomas, schoolmaster at Hobkirk, and they had a son Malcom T.S. He is recorded in 1866 as Registrar, Session Clerk and Inspector of Poor and still Inspector of Poor for the Parish in 1868. He also acted as postmaster for Chesters. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Peter (b.1766) son of James and Betty Turnbull. He was a mason in Hawick. He lived at 19 Howgate in 1841 and 1851. He was probably the Peter who was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in about 1798. Richard ‘Dick’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as ‘Dyk Talzour’ and he may have been from Ewesdale. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. His surety was Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. He was convicted for inter-communing with Adam and Thomas Turnbull, who had been declared rebels for the slaughter of Patrick Hepburn. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with John Scott of Wyndheid, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘one half-fourpitt short’. He was presumably a merchant or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1691 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Isobel Renwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1706. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Brown and their children included Janet (b.1722). In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for John Easton in Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the Robert, son of John, born in 1703 in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Tobacconist’ when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant James Douglas; this may be one of the earliest recorded instances of this word being used as an occupation. He was involved in a court case in 1748, in which he had taken £29 from his aunt Jean Taylor, getting Robert Tudhope to pretend to have borrowed it, but in fact he used it to pay a bill to merchant Thomas Turnbull; there he was stated to be a ‘writer’ (but that may be in error); he was stated to be a tobacconist in the related court case brought by Turnbull against Tudhope. He is stated to be a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull (from Hawick Shiels) in 1745. He married Margaret Douglas (proclaimed in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and their children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant James Douglas (surely related to his wife) and gardener Robert Turnbull, and in 1745 were Walter Turnbull from Hawick Shiels (whose own baptism he had witnessed on the same day) and William Sooon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Robert (19th C.) married Mary Smith in Hobkirk in 1831. Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska. Robert M. ‘Rob’ (20th C.) published ‘Teviot Reaches’ in 1951, containing sketches and etchings around the Teviot. Ronald ‘Ron’ (?) headmaster at Burnfoot Primary School who wrote the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding’, with the help of the Callants’ Club in 1983. He was unfortunately to later become Headmaster at Dunblane Primary School and witness the terrible aftermath of the shootings in 1996. He returned to Hawick as Common Riding Chief Guest in 1997. Thomas (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthorne being inherited by Hector Lorraine. He was probably local, like the other witnesses. Thomas (b.1829/30) born in Holywood, Dumfriesshire, he was a surgeon in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. His wife was Mary Ann and their children included John T.E., James Joseph and Mary. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Talzour Baron de Hassindene’ in 1493. He is otherwise unknown as Baron there, so perhaps the translation should be ‘of the Barony’. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for ‘communing with the English’, the Laird of Bucleuch serving as his surety. It is unclear how he might have been related to any other Taylors. Walter Noble (17th C.) tenant at Ellidghe who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for being a Covenanter. Walter (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1733 when he married Bessie Blyth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Janet Nichols in 1758. He was at Whihope in 1761. His children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (1761). Walter (b.1782) son to John in Blackcleughmouth according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was brother of John and farmed at Highend in Rulewater. He may be the Walter whose children, baptised in Hobkirk, included John (b.1805), Agnes (b.1806), Betty (b.1809), Margaret (b.1811), Thomas (b.1813), Walter (b.1816), Janet (b.1818) and William (b.1821). Walter (b.1809) born at Swanshiel, he was a younger son of John, who had farmed at Unthank. He worked on the farm at Howahill, becoming tenant there. In 1849 he was listed on the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was still there in the 1860s, being listed as a widower in 1861. In 1834 he married Margaret Gow (whose mother was Margaret Barry). She was said to be a very beautiful woman, who died in childbirth in 1848. Their children were: John (b.1835), who worked on the farm at Howahill; Agnes (b.1838); Isabella; George, who emigrated...

to new Zealand; Thomas, who lived at Howahill and died there from blood-poisoning, caused by an axe cut; William, who went to Australia, but returned to Howahill; Margaret; and Walter. Walter (19th/20th C.) son of William, with his mother being a daughter of Dr. Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in 1562 when he had expenses 'for keeping the tower and house of Has-sinden'. He is also recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the serv-ant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. William (17th C.) tenant in Groundistone. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. William (17th C.) married Janet Welch in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. William (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed as ‘Wm Tylzer’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he is the William, son of James and Bessie Scott, born in Hawick in 1644. He could be the William, married to Isobel Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick were Bessie (b.1674), Elspeth (b.1677), Helen (b.1680), Marion (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1687); the 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter Pur-dom and William Haswell, the 1682 baptism by Walter Purdom and Andrew Hart and the 1685 baptism by Walter Paisley and James Gray. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He was at Todshawhill in 1781. He married Betty Laidlaw in Roberton in 1778 and their children included: James (b.1781); Janet (b.1788); and Betty (b.1792). He is probably the son of David (who lived at Todshawhill) baptised in Roberton in 1756. William (b.c.1780) from England, he was a farmer at Newstead in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Anne. He could be the William recorded as a labourer in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell.

His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Anne. He could be the William recorded as a labourer at Appletreelhall in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1821) son of Walter (although which one is unclear), he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer living at Howahill Cottage (while Walter was farmer at Howahill itself). He married Mary Crozier in 1847. Their children included: Margaret; Janet; and Walter. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfe Free Kirk and was a trustee. William (b.1840s) son of Walter and Margaret Gow. He went to Aus-tralia in his early life, but returned to the fam-ily farm at Howahill. He was a County Coun-cillor for Hobkirk Parish. In 1886 he married a daughter of Dr. Pringle in Dundee and they had 5 children. William (1847/8–1916) from the Newhouses family, he was farmer at Ashybank. He was also a cattle dealer in Hawick and owned 10 Teviot Crescent. He married Barbara, daughter of blacksmith James Murray, and she died in 1911, aged 62. Their children included: George B. (d.1917), killed at Mahiwa, British East Africa; Christian R. (d.1926); William (d.1954); James (d.1955); Isabella Murray (d.1955); Eliza Lister (d.1958); Robert (d.1959) The family are buried in Denholm. Rev. William minister of St. Mary’s, Cavers and Kirkton 1998–2004 (formed ‘Tailyeour’, ‘Tailyer’, ‘Tailzeour’, ‘Talzor’, ‘Tylear’, ‘Tyler’ and variants).

Taylorcleuchheid (tā-lur-klooch-heed) n. Taylorcleuchheid, former farm in Liddesdale, situated around the stream marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It consisted of 217 acres, bounded by Riccarton, Cleuchhead, lands held by the Laird of Dinhabyre and Roughley. The farmhouse was shown on the west side of a stream, possibly Todshaw Sike, and this could be the place where post-mediaeval remains were discovered in 1977. This could be the ‘Taylor Gate’ where labourer William Potts was living in 1797 (see also Tailcycleuch and Tay-lor’s Cleuch).

Taylor’s Cleuch (tā-hurz-klooch) n. stream that runs roughly eastward to join the Liddel Water south of Larriston. There are remains of an enclosure between here and the old railway line. It was partly excavated in 1977 before being surrounded by forest. It appears to be prehis-toric with later occupation. There are also some mediaeval and post-mediaeval remains a little to the east by Todshaw Sike. It may have been called ‘Tailorcleuchside’ or Taylorcleuchheid.

tei (ti) n. tea, a hot beverage made using crushed leaves from the far corners of the Empire – ‘go’an make is a cup o tei wull ee?’, ‘coffee’s no ma cup o tei’, ‘Ee got pies and tei at the muckle tent . . .’ [AY], ‘Yin Common Ridin mornin Ma mother says ti mei ‘Ee’d better watch eer-sul, lass, Here’s a ‘stranger’ in eer tei’’ [DH], a light meal served in the early evening, high tea – ‘what’s for the tei the night?’; ‘. . . ee’re in an awfu’ hurry. Aw was watching ee while aw was takin’ ma tei’ [JHH], ‘A niver got seek o’d. At least no until it was time ti gaun hame for yer tei’ [We], ‘I’ll tak’ my aith, ye’ve hed nae tei, So’s ye could fill your wames wi’ mei . . .’ [DH]. Tea did not start being drunk locally until about the 1760s, and was quite expensive for some time. In 1768 someone in Hawick was convicted for selling thorn leaves in place of tea leaves and was ‘pinioned’ as punishment (sometimes spelled ‘tey’).

teicher (ti-chur) v., arch. to ooze, said of a slight wound bleeding or exuding pus – ‘When the skin is slightly cut, it is said to ‘teicher and blüid’, when the quantity of blood effused is scarcely sufficient to form a drop, South of S.’ [JoJ].
teicup (ti-kup) n. a teacup.

teind (tünd) n., arch. Scottish equivalent of the English tithe, a tenth part of one’s income or produce from land, or a tenth of the value of the livestock born on a farm. This originally went to support the Church, but after the Reformation typically went to the local landowner. Such payments were split into ‘vicarage teinds’, which were minor tithes, often paid in kind – ‘The Earle Bukcleugh is patrone, who payis to ye minister 800 merks yeirlie, and leidis ye teynd’ [PR1627] (and originally to the vicar rather than parson) and ‘parsonage teinds’ which were the more major tithes.
teind barn (tünd-bawrn) n., arch. a barn used for storing the grain that was collected as a ‘teind’, called a ‘title-barn’ in England. The ruins of the old example in Spittal-on-Rule can still be seen.

the Teind Barn (thu-tünd-bawrn) n. ruined building in Spittal-on-Rule. It was still thatched until the early 1900s, and was said by Tancred to be the oldest building in the parish.

the Teind Court (thu-tünd-kör) n. court set up after the Reformation, to deal with the value and sale of teinds, and the adequate provision for local ministers. It was a court within the Court of Session, set up to decide on matters of valuation of teinds, stipends for ministers, etc. After 1707 its powers passed to the Court of Session.

teinder an thirder (tín-dur-an-thir-dur) n., arch. a person who occupies arable land at a rent equal to 1/3rd of the produce (1 tenth and another 3 tenths) – ‘. . . the damage done to the corn at Whitlaw was comprised, and that Patrick Scott and John Gladstains paid the damage to the teinder and the thirder out of their own pocket . . .’[C&L].

Teinside (tünd-, teend-süd) n. farm on the A7 south of Newmill, as well as the name for the general area, also referred to as ‘Teinside’. The lands were owned by a branch of the Abernethy family from at least the late 14th century, passing from Sir William to his older brother James in 1393; they were at that time described as lying in the Barony of Hawick, with Archibald, Earl of Douglas as superior. The Abernethys sold the lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1494. In 1466/7 Oswald Abernethy appeared before William, Earl of Douglas at Newark and publicly asserted that his only superior of these lands was the Baron of Hawick. The lands were recorded belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick. However, in 1572 they were included among those held ‘in property’ by the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The Scots of Buccleuch held lands there since at least the early 1500s, although Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is listed among the property of the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1594 and 1615. In 1627 they were listed as a ‘25 merk land’ producing ‘500 merks in stok, and to 100 merks in teynd’. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653 and 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. James Grieve was tenant there in at least 1709–10. In 1724 Gideon Elliot purchased the lands from his brother Robert. James Scott was living there in 1731. Thomas Watson owned the lands in the early 18th century and sold them to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1750. There were Murays living there in the mid-1700s to early 1800s. Thomas Barrie was there in 1788. By 1788 it was valued at £426 13s 4d and still the same in 1811, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. Gideon Scott was there in 1797 and David Murray in 1799. George Aitken, John Telfer and Thomas Rutherford were living there in 1801. Robert Elliot was farmer in 1841 and Robert Govenlock in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort on the Slaidhill, which lies above, near the source of the Teindside Burn, and 2 more on Teindside Hill. Ancient burial cists were found there in 1869, with an excavation carried out by Dr. Brydon and Lord Rosehall. And there are signs of ‘cord rig’ cultivation there also (also spelled ‘Tynside’, ‘Teinside’, etc., and possibly formerly pronounced tünd-; the origin is possibly Old Welsh ‘din’ and Old English ‘side’, meaning ‘the slope by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Theynsyde’ in 1393, is ‘Tenside’ in 1446/7, ‘Teinside’ in 1494, ‘Tynsyde’ in 1502, ‘Teneside’ in 1511, ‘Tenside’ in 1528/9, ‘Teneside’ and ‘Teneside’ in 1572, ‘Teyndside’ in 1595, ‘Teynside’ in 1627, ‘Tyneside’ in 1634, ‘Tynesyd’ in 1653 and 1663, ‘Teyndside’ in 1661, ‘Teinside’ in 1751 and ‘Teinside’ in 1839; it is ‘Tennsykhall’ on both Blaen’s 1654 map and Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Teindside Brig (tünd-süd-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot just after Teindside. It was built as part of the development of the toll road, which became the A7, perhaps around 1762. At the same time as it was built the road was improved from the bridge to Teindside farm, past the Horse Pool. A new bridge was built around the 1930s. A farm adjacent to the bridge was formerly known by the same name and also called ‘Teindsidebrae’. Walter Hogg was living there in 1779–84 and William Gledstains in 1784. Alexander Miller was tenant there in 1797, when it is ‘Tiendside Bridge’. William Lamb was Taylor at ‘Teindside Bridgend’ in 1799. Hugh Johnstone and John Cairns and families lived there in 1841 and 1851 (it is ‘Teinside bridgend’ in 1781 and ‘Tienidebrigend’ in 1783).

Teindside Burn (tünd-süd-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot (from roughly the north-west) near Teindside. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail. The lands there are listed along with Teinside among the lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands there were purchased by the Scotts of Buccleuch about 1660. As it runs down from Slaidhills there is a waterfall in a ravine. A little further down there was once a cottage, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Walter Hogg was farmer there in 1797, when Andrew Elliot was also there (it is ‘Tynnesydburne’ in 1615, ‘Teyndsideburne’ in the mid-17th century, ‘Tiendsideburn’ about 1755 and ‘Tiendsideburn’ in 1797; ‘Teindburnfoot’ is marked on Stobie’s map of 1770).

Teindside Hill (tünd-süd-hil) n. hill lying on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, north of Teindside Lodge. Its contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, almost obliterated by cultivation. The one near the summit probably measured about 120 m by 65 m, while the one to the south sits on a rocky knoll, measuring about 60 m by 20 m, with a deep ditch on the north side. There were local excavations there by Mr. Govenlock in 1873, finding a ‘hut eight feet square’. There is a further fort just to the north-west near Slaidhill. Additionally, there is a modern cairn, called ‘Bert’s Cairn’, with an inscribed stone.

Teindside Lodge (tünd-süd-luj, -loj) n. house in Teviothead, also known as Commonside Cottage, situated on the side road to Commonside. It was once a farmhouse on the Buccleuch estate. Recently and part of the house has been let out for holiday accommodation. Just inside the entrance gate is a turf-covered cairn about 15 m in diameter.

Teindsideslope (tünd-süd-slop) n. former farmstead near Teindside. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls John Irvine is recorded as farmer there, with 3 working horses. Alexander Johnson was there in 1799. David Cairns and Robert Walker lived there in 1841 and Constable Michael Oliver in 1851 (also written as ‘Teindside Slope’; it is ‘Tiendsideslop’ in 1797).
teind yaird (tīnd-yārd-) n., arch. a yard used to store the produce collected as tithes – ‘Item, to James Scott, servant, for keiping of the teind yaird of Hawik, bigging the dykes therof, and heiding the stakes of the samyn the said year, eighteine pundes’ [SB1633].

teings see tyings
Teinside (teen-síd) n. alternative version of Teindside.
Tei’ot (tee-i’, tī-i’) n., arch. Teviot – ‘...an thegither oo turnt ti the richt for the Tei’ot an the county toon’ [ECS], ‘...And troots that i’ the Tei’ot tipple’ [DH], ‘As by his haugh the Tei’ot rumle’t’ [DH] (a contracted spelling to denote the older pronunciation; also written ‘Teiot’ and ‘Te’iot’).
teipot (tī-po’) n. a teapot.
teir see teer
Teisday (tīz-di) n. Tuesday – ‘I got to Berwick on Monday afternoon, and was unco weel on Teisday morning . . . ’ [RW], ‘My friens, be thankfu’ that Sabbath is upon the day that its on, for had it been a Tysday ye wad hae been at Jeddart, or if a Fursday ye wad hae been at Hawick’ [JW] (also written ‘Tysday’; cf. the more modern Tuesdi).
teistrel (tī-strul) n., arch. a scoundrel (also written ‘teistrell’; cf. taistrel).
teitim (tī-tim) n. teatime – ‘A’ll sei ee the back o teitim’ (note the usual pronunciation of the second syllable; also tei-time).
tei-time (tī-tim) n. teatime – ‘A was verrih mensef at tei-time: A duist tuik yeh cup’ [ECS].
Teiwi (tee-vee) n. earliest known form of ‘Teviot’, recorded around the year 600.

Telfer (tel-fur, tāl-fur) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Grainfoot. He is recorded in 1797 among men of Castleton Parish balloted for serving in the Militia. In 1799 he was now at Redmoss among those ‘in the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun’. He was still at Redmoss on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably related to Thomas, who was a shepherd at Redmoss in 1797. Adam (b.c.1770s) shoemaker at Netherraw according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Adam (19th C.) weaver in Newcastleston according to the ballot for the Militia in 1799. Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lillico (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtreet. Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts in 1861. Andrew (b.1808/9) from Hownam he was a shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. His wife was Mina and their children included John, Helen and Anne. Andrew Hunter Cowan (1845–1916) born at Lethem in Southdean Parish, son of shepherd William. It is said that he was the first to be baptised in the Presbyterian tradition in Wolfelee Free Kirk and was thus named ‘Cowan’ after the minister. He attended school in Chesters and at the age of 16 apprenticed to joiner Gilbert Amos there. In 1867 or 1868 he moved to Edinburgh, where he became Chair of the Trades Council, being involved in the large demonstration organised after the failure of the Franchise Bill in 1884. He was then on the School Board and became a City Councillor in 1889, being regarded as the first working-class man to hold such a position in Edinburgh. As Convenor of the Plans and Works Committee, he was involved with the merging of Portobello with Edinburgh, with improvement in the fire brigade and with city control of street lighting. Also on the Library Committee, he helped establish a free library in Edinburgh. In 1899 he became a Bailie and was also a Justice of the Peace. He was actively involved in the Edinburgh Borderers Club. His wife was Elizabeth and they had 6 children. Archibald (18th C.) married Christian Liddell in Wilton in 1729. He is probably the Archibald who was at Borrougha when his death is recorded in Wilton in 1736. Rev. Charles (1693–1731) minister of Hawick Parish 1723–31. He was the son of an Edinburgh Magistrate, also Charles, who was Captain of the Trained Band. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1712, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1719 (after reluctantly signing the Confession of Faith) and came to Hawick in 1721 as an assistant to Robert Cunningham. He helped lead sermons in Hawick while the minister was in ill-health. He was presented as the new Minister by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch at the end of 1722 and ordained early the following year (after the Hawick elders petitioned the Presbytery ‘for put-high opinion of himself. He witnessed baptisms in 1723 for surgeon Walter Scott and for Robert Henderson in Hillisland, in 1724 for workman Robert ‘Huison’, in 1725 for merchant Thomas Thomson, for William Cathrae in Closes and for merchant Andrew Turnbull, and in 1728 for Thomas Turnbull (it was unusual for the serving minister to be a witness). In 1724 he complained about drunkenness at the Common Riding and in 1725 he proposed that 2 members of the Kirk Session should inspect ‘the families on this town who give ale or brandie, either at the outgoing or incoming of the horsemen and footmen’. But, surprisingly, he reported afterwards that ‘he was well pleased with the deportment and behaviour of those who were at the riding of the Common’. In 1729 he witnessed a couple of baptisms in Hawick, including one for Andrew Leithead. He is recorded preaching before the Lord High Commissioner in 1730 and was called before the Committee on Overtures the next day ‘for certain comparisons which he had used’, but the objections were dropped without censure. He married Katherine Elliot of Arkleton (widow of David Laing of Westerkirk) in 1727 in Hawick, and she lived until at least 1746. They had children: Elizabeth (b.1728), baptised in Hawick; and Christian Ann, also baptised in Hawick in 1730, with witnesses Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and ‘Mr Cunningham’ (probably Patrick). Charles (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1771); Margaret (b.1774); and Helen (b.1777). Christian Lillico (1835–1909) daughter of James, Schoolmaster at Saughtree. She died in Newcastle. Christina (b.1796/7) tollhouse keeper at the Townhead Toll in Newcastle. She was a widow in 1861, with daughter Elspeth and grand-daughter Christina. David (b.1824/5) son of John, he was farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobkir Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 500 acres there, employing 4 labourers. David (1945/6–2010) from Hawick, he joined Aberdeen Journals in 1973, becoming motoring correspondent, business correspondent, industrial correspondent and business editor. He was then editor of North of Scotland Publications, before returning to the position of business reporter. He married Moira and had children Ross, Robbie, Colin and Lesley. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (b.1828/9) born in Hawick Parish, she was daughter of Jane, who was teacher at the girls’ school set up in Cavers in the mid-19th century. By 1861 she was the main teacher at Cavers Cottages, with Margaret Grierson as assistant teacher. George (16th C.) recorded in Dodhead in 1579 when he made an agreement with John Lauder in Singlie to exchange their lands at the end of a year. He promised, along with Adam Scott of Bonnington, to pay Lauder for tack of a quarter of the ‘rowme’. There is surely a connection with the ballad ‘Jamie Telfo o the Fair Dodhead’. George (17th C.) tenant near Adderstoneshie listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. He could be the George ‘Telfoord’ listed as shepherd at Adderstoneshie among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) herd at Nether Southfield. He married Mary Thomson and their daughter Euphan was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Ekron in 1758. George (18th/19th C.) master of the English School in Hawick until 1822. George (1797– ) joined Hawick Boxing Club along with his childhood friend Colin Bain, when they were 11, later joining Hawick Royal Albert Boxing Club in 1998. He had more than 200 amateur fights, boxing for Scotland, with a highlight being winning the Scottish Welterweight Championship in Hawick Town Hall. He had 9 professional bouts in 2003–05, winning 7 and losing 2. Henry (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hardie in Hawick in 1845. James (16th C.) tenant in Huntly and servant to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1579. There was a complaint that the neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn had taken his horse, claiming that it had crossed the march dyke and was pasturing on Hutlerburn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of William in North Synton. He married Bessie ‘Hutsone’ and their son William was baptised in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1705. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. His children included Agnes (b.1704) and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Adam and William Scott. He could be the James who married Bessie ‘Hutson’ in Ashkirk in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: Jean (b.1716); and Isobel (b.1722). Perhaps the same James had a son.
William baptised in 1718 (with his wife’s name recorded as ‘Jean’). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1716 when he married Jane Stewart and at Deanhead in 1722. His children included: Jenet (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). James (18th C.) recorded in Chapelhill in 1726 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the James who married Isobel Bell in Roberton in 1718. James (18th C.) recorded being in Southdean Parish in 1747 when his marriage to Anne Maxwell was announced in Melrose Parish, with John Young as cautioner. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1761 he married Isabel Howison from Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Dinlabyre. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. James (d.1824) dyker whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1797/8) from Langholm, he was an inn-keeper in Newcastleton. In the 1850s he was proprietor of the Buccleuch Arms on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Mary. In 1852 his name was given as ‘Telford’. James (1800–62) son of shepherd John and Isabella Taylor, with his step-mother being Anne Davidson, he was referred to as ‘the poetical schoolmaster of Saughtree’ in Liddesdale. He was born in Southdean Parish, although the census records of 1851 and 1861 state he was born in Oxnam Parish. He had 2 aunts who lived in a cottage near Battlingburn in Southdean Parish, and a story is told of one of them seeing a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) the night the other one died; he thus seems to have grown up steeped in local superstition. He was first employed as a shepherd, but through self-education became a teacher to the children of shepherds in the Jedhead area. He was a great admirer of James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’, who he got to know in his youth and who inspired and encouraged him to write poetry. In about 1824 he was stopped from attending a trial in Jedburgh by the Burgh Officer there, ‘Lang Eaby’ (or ‘Eebey’), and in revenge he wrote a satirical ballad ‘The Fearfu’ Hindend of Lang Eaby’. This became popular locally, and it is said that Sir Walter Scott enjoyed reading it; he was also said to be concerned that the poem was potentially libellous and so picked out a hiding place to flee to if any suspicious person approached his dwelling. He became schoolmaster at Castleton in 1827 and was at the smaller Saughtree school from 1834 until he died. He was listed at Saughtree among heads of households in 1835–41, and was recorded as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was locally referred to as ‘the poetical schoolmaster’, since he wrote several ballads, including a long one, ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’, about an encounter between a shepherdess and a fairy. A version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’ was transcribed by him from an old woman called Kitty Hall (who lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale). He published poems in the Newcastle Magazine (as well as a series of articles called ‘Literary Gossip’) and also in the Tyne Mercury, among other places. His first book was ‘Border Ballads and other Miscellaneous Poems’ (1824), which was dedicated to the Ettrick Shepherd; although it contains language that is rather pastoral (i.e. flowery), nevertheless it includes many dialect words that were probably common at the time and would otherwise be unrecorded. This collection contains his best-known poem, ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’, as well as ‘Auld Ringan’, about Ninian Oliver from Smailcleughfoot. ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’ was published on its own in 1843 and was additionally contained within Vol. II of the ‘Local Historian’s Tablebook’ in 1844. He contributed to Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’ and his poem ‘The Hunter-King’ was included in ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). Additionally, he wrote a novel ‘Barbara Gray, or the Widow’s Daughter: A Narrative of Humble Life’ (1835); it is a melodrama about poor farm labourers and wicked landlords. This was incorporated into an extensive volume of stories and verse ‘Tales and Ballads’ (1862), dedicated to the Duke of Northumberland (including a substantially revised ‘Auld Ringan’); at the end there is a statement about another book, ‘Border Gatherings’, being in preparation, but this never appeared. It is said that he never earned more than £20 per year, and so must have struggled to raise a family. His house was a simple ‘but and ben’, with the ‘but’ being where his family stayed, and the ‘ben’ being the schoolroom. It was described how he would sometimes tell his class ‘in a quiet, conversational way, and in the pure Border doric, of what he had been reading’, including treating them to ‘a captivating lecture on the tales and traditions of our Borderland’. He was a great friend of Robert White of Newcastle, who wrote about the history of Northumberland and the Border. However, he did not get along with everyone; he is probably the ‘schoolmaster, likewise a poet’ mentioned being antagonistic to John Halliday publishing his own verses in 1847. He married Janet Beattie (1802–89); she is recorded living at Saughtree in 1841 along with their children Margaret, Christian and Janet (he himself being absent). In 1851 the family were at Saughtree Schoolhouse (with Margaret having moved away by then). In 1861 his daughter Christian was living with them and described as a teacher; she ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters. They also had a train driver lodging with them in 1861. His children included: Margaret (b.1833); Catherine Lillico (1835–1909); and Janet Armstrong Stavert (1839–1911), who died in Liverpool. One of his daughters had a son, Telfer John Telfer, who died in 1889, aged 25. He died of a stroke at his his home, his wife Janet died at Bankend and the family are buried in Old Castleton Cemetery. James (19th C.) married Jane Sinton in 1836, the marriage recorded in both Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes. James (b.1821/2) shepherd at Wormscaleuch in Castleton Parish. His wife was Christian and their children included Andrew, Margaret, John, James, Mary and Thomas. James ‘Jim’ (1941–) born between Gala and Melrose, he played rugby for Melrose and gained 25 caps for Scotland. He became Scottish Coach, leading the team to the 1984 Grand Slam. He trained as a teacher, eventually becoming Rector of the High School 1984–93. During some of this time the school was nicknamed ‘the Rugby Academy’. He left to become the Scottish Rugby Union’s Director of Rugby. Jane nee Bunyan (b.1805) daughter of Thomas, she was born in Cavers Parish, where she married James in 1827. By 1841 she was a widow, working as a dressmaker at West Middle. By 1851 she was teacher at a school for girls in Cavers. Her daughter Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) and Jemima assisted at the school, with another relative Catherine Rutherford also being an assistant teacher. She was presumably dead by 1861, when Elizabeth was the main teacher at the school. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cook and their children included: Robert (b.1685); and Janet (b.1703). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1695 for John Armstrong in Park. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robson and their son John was baptised in 1688. Helen (b.1693) and Margaret (b.1694) may also have been his children, although no mother’s name is recorded. John (17th C.) resident of Peelbrae listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the John ‘Talefert’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook in 1685. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included James (b.1699) and Archibald (b.1703). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son John was baptised in 1707. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Smith and their son George was baptised in 1718. Margaret (b.1720) may also have been his child. John (18th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John, ‘Coater’ at Branxholme, witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme) in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bettie Muir and their children included: Mary (b.1727); Jean (b.1730); and Janet (b.1732). Charles (b.1735), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. John (18th C.) Beadle at Hawick Kirk in the 1740s. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Patrick Hardie, for carrier John Ruecastle, for Francis Scott and for Archibald Paterson in 1729, for flesher Robert Wilson in 1730, for William Helm and for George Oliver in 1731 and for Robert Riddell in 1733. He is recorded as ‘Officer’ or ‘Kirk Officer’ when he witnessed further baptisms in 1737, 1738, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745 and 1747. He may also be the John who witnessed other baptisms in 1738 and 1746. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1742), James (b.1743), James (again, b.1744), Jean (b.1745), Margaret (b.1747), Robert (b.1747), Margaret (b.1751), John (b.1753) and Margaret (b.1755). There may be 2 families here. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merrylaw in 1755. He married Helen Learmonth and their son William was baptised in 1755. Telio’s temperance hotel, set up in the late 19th century, some lasting until WWII. In Hawick the Douglas Temperance Hotel was situated on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now, Gibson’s was on Bridge Street, Inglis’s on Teviotside Terrace, Pringle’s on Union Street, and the Washington Hotel at the ‘Coffin End’. The Bucleuch and Victoria Hotels were also temperance for a time, and there were others, such as Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel.

the Temperance Movement (in 1835 and, supported by some of the churches, it led to organised signing of teetotal declarations and the setting up of rigorously teetotal establishments. Locally the first such organisation was started in 1832, but still allowed the drinking of beers. The Hawick Total Abstinence Society was founded in 1838, with members pledging to avoid all intoxicating beverages. They lasted into the early 20th century, and had a popular annual soirée. There were also the Temperance Hotels (some lasting up to WWII), the Temperance Burns Club, and even Temperance tents up the Muir. In 1920 a referendum to have alcohol banned in Hawick was opposed by a majority – ‘Ye’ve been the cause o’ muckle wae, O’ meikle scaith and scorn; I’ll sign the pledge this very day! Fareweel, John Barleycorn!’ [JT].

Tempest (tem-pist) n.  Sir Richard of Hertford (c.1309–79) son of Sir John of Bracewell, he had an older brother, Sir John and a younger brother, Peter, who married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. He spent time in France on business for the English King. In 1347 he was appointed Constable of Scarborough Castle (for life) and in 1350 was appointed Sheriff of Berwick, a position he held until 1354. In 1357 he was made Sheriff of Roxburgh and given the Wardship of Roxburgh Castle, which he held until 1361. In 1361/2 there was an inquest into whether he ‘retained Scottish grooms and other unfit persons’ at Roxburgh Castle. In 1357 he witnessed the treaty for the ransom of King David of Scotland. He was in joint charge, along with Sir William Bulmer, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523. This raid led to his knighthood. His daughter Anne married Sir Richard of Bracewell. She was one of the English commissioners for negotiating peace with Scotland in 1528.

tempit (tem-pee’, -pi’) pp., poet. tempted – ‘Whan your faethers tempet me, pruvet me, an’ saw my wark’ [HSR], ‘Than was Jesus led up o’ the speerit intill the wulderniss til be tempet o’ the deevil’ [HSR].

the Templar’s Hall (thu-tem-plurz-hal, -haw) n. former name for the hall of the I.O.G.T. – ‘...We lairned oor bible in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wilson’s Mill’ [WL].

Temple (tem-pul) n. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. His son William was baptised in Minto in 1773. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Alexander (b.1774), Violet (b.1781) and Helen (b.1775). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James (b.1779) and Nelly (b.1782). James (c.1770s–bef. 1841) recorded as a wright in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. On the 1801 list he was recorded as a joiner. He was a joiner of the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census his wife Helen Oliver and 5 children were living at about 33 High Street, with his sons carrying on the cabinet-maker’s business. His children included: Helen (b.1805); James (b.1807); Robert (b.1810); Janet (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); Marion (b.1815); John (b.1817); Margaret (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married May Halden and their son James was baptised in 1816. James (b.1807/8) son of James. He was listed as a High Street joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a master joiner and cabinet-maker, employing 7 men, at about 55 High Street. In 1847 he married Jane Turnbull, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Margaret (b.1848), Robert (b.1850), Helen (b.1852) and William Turnbull (b.1854). Loudon (1947/8– ) son of Andy, he was born in Selkirk, attended St. Mary’s and Trinity Schools in Hawick, was raised on O’Connell Street and later lived at Burnfoot. He worked at Pesco’s. Interested in music from an early age, he formed a skiffle band called the Vikings in 1959. He was singer in the Diamonds, who represented the Borders in the Macbeat contest in 1964. Along with Bob Fish he started a folk club in the Victoria Hotel and the pair formed the Anvil Crew and the Ceiling. His various bands supported many famous names. In 1968 he started a new career as a reporter for the Hawick News. In 1972 he married Brenda Smith (from Newcastleton) and they moved to Kilbarchan in Renfrewshire. He worked for various local newspapers and retired in 2018. He then formed the Brookfield-Knights music agency. During the pandemic he wrote ‘The Music Goes Round and Round’ (2020), describing his experiences in Hawick and elsewhere. R. (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1722 for a ‘jist to the steeple’. He was thus probably a wright or joiner in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Whitriggs in 1737. His children included: James (b.1733); and David (b.1737). Perhaps the same Robert had children William (b.1724), Isabel (b.1726) and Janet (b.1728) baptised in Jedburgh and a son Robert (b.1731) baptised in Ancrum. Robert (1771/2–1827) surgeon in Newcastle. He subscribed to (to 2 copies of) William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Elliot (1777/8–c.1858). She is recorded in 1841 as ‘Ind’ at about 2 South Hermitage Street; in 1851 she was listed as a grocer, maiden name Elliot, living with her widowed daughter Kitty Scott (nee Temple) and granddaughter Helen Scott. His daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) married Matthew Scott in 1836 and secondly married James Crosby in 1851. He was recorded as a surgeon at Nether Stone in Bewcastle Parish at the end of the 18th century, when he had children baptised there. His children included: Helen (b.1797), who married and moved to Canada; and Janet (b.1799), also known as ‘Jessie’, who married (probably a Robinson) in Newcastle. He was buried at Ettleton. Thomas (b.1805/6) born in Minto Parish, he was toll-keeper at Spittal. He was recorded at Spittal Bar in 1851 and in 1861 was a miller living at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Jane and their children included Alison, Betsy, William, Andrew, Thomas and James. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Hillend in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was ‘Wester hillend’ on the 1801 Militia ballot. He is probably the William who seo children James (b.1801) and Thomas (b.1805) were baptised in Minto.

Temple Croft (tem-pul-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was among lands whose liferent was held by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779. It was listed in 1779 and 1811, along with ‘Notman-shot’, with a joint value of £76 16s 8d. This may have been the land valued at 20 shillings in a rental roll of lands associated with the Templars in 1539/40 (it was ‘Temple-crofts’ in 1780).

Templehaa (tem-pul-haw, -hal) n. Templehall, farm east of Harwood, near Wauchope. The name of the lands suggests a connection with the Knights Templar, which is confirmed by the connection with James Sandilands (member of the Hospitalier Order of St John) in the 16th century. David Crozier ‘at the Tempilhall’ is recorded among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5 and 1500, although whether this was the same place is uncertain. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Wauchopebank at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. There is a 1567 charter of the lands, together with Brewlands, granted by James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 there was an action by Jean and Beatrice, daughters of the deceased Walter Turnbull of Wauchope, to remove their mother Marion Lorraine and several Turnbuls from their lands of Templehall and Brewlands. They later passed to George Turnbull of Wauchope, then to Sir James Douglas of Mordington in 1627 and later to the Earl of Lothian. The Earl of Lothian paid tax on £300 for his lands there in about 1663. It was listed as a 4-pound land in 1678, when inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule. At about that time it must have been valued at £229 15s 4d (based on Kerr of Abbotrules other lands). Adam Murray was tenant there in 1694. The farm then passed from William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751 and then immediately to Henry Elliot of Harwood. John Thomson was there in 1751. In 1788 the farm was listed among those owned by William Elliot of Harwood and valued at £229 15s 4d. In 1794 and 1797 the tenants were John and Thomas Clerk. William Hastie was a servant there in 1797, Henry Johnstone and James Dodds in 1799 and William Rutherford in 1801. In about 1811 it was still part of the Harwood estate and valued at £262 10s. John Elliot was there in the early part of the 19th century and James Smith was farmer there in the 1860s. It is also the name of a hill to the south-west, between the Lurgies Burn and the Wauchope Burn. Just north-west of the farm are the remains of a settlement, with the most visible feature being a 75-m long crescent-shaped ridge. On the slope to the south are the remains of an ancient cairn. There is also a place of the same name near Lilliesleaf that is suggested to have had connections with the Knight’s Templar, with a ‘Temple’ near St. Boswells perhaps having a similar origin (it is ‘Temphill’ in 1538, 1539 and 1604 and ‘Timpillhall’ in 1663; it is marked ‘Temphillhall’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Templ-halt’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templehaa Common (tem-pul-haw-ko-nin) n. Templehall Common, the commonty associated with the neighbouring lands, with uncertain history. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1719, and in 1734 it was arranged by James,
Lord Cranstoun, and William Kerr of Abbotrule. At that point it was possessed by the tenants of Wauchope and Templehall. It could be the same place marked ‘Wauchope Common’ on the modern Ordnance Survey map, to the east of Templehall Hill.

Templehaa Hill (tem-pul-haw-hil) n. Templehall Hill, hill in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, south-west of Templehall and to the east of Lurgiescleuch. It reaches a height of 342 m. Near the summit is an old cairn about 10 m across and on the southern ridge there is another almost twice as big, now quite denuded and within the forest.

Templehaashiell (tem-pul-haw-sheel) n. Templehallshiel, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, on the western banks of the Wauchope Burn, near Templehall Hill. William Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 18th century, Alexander Lillico shortly before 1788 and John Elliot lived there in the 1810s (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templelands (tem-pul-lawndz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Tempyllandys’ in the c.1376 rental roll. They were part of the lands owned by the church, but their precise location is uncertain (there is a place of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

the Temple o the Muses (thu-tem-pul-thu-mew-zeez) n. monument in the form of a classical Greek pavillion, erected in 1817 by David Erskine as a memorial to the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’ fame). It is situated on Bass Hill beside the Tweed, and near to Erskine’s house at Dryburgh. It contains a bust of Thomson, and the original statue of Apollo having long since disappeared a new statue by Siobhain O’Heari replaced it.

tenandry (te-nandree) n., arch. land that is leased from a superior, the condition of being a tenant, tenancy – ‘...tenandry of lande if Harden...’ [DoR1445], ‘...with tenenttis, tenandrijs and seruice of frie tennenttis of the samin, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme... ’ [SB1569].

tendit (ten-dee’, -di’) pp. tended – ‘The hills where he herdit are bonnie and green, The hirsell he tendit is white i’ the glen’ [JoHa].

tenement (te-ne-min’) n., arch. a piece of farmland that is tenanted – ‘...the tenements of Whitehaugh, Heap, Timberside, and Skawmill, Greensidehall, and Leeheads, the tenement of Mabenlaw, the North Croft, Easter Howlands ... ’ [DCW1765], a piece of land in a town held under some form of tenure and often built upon – ‘...upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ... ’ [JW1558], ‘...befor ane of the baillies of the burcht of Hawik and thair purelie and sempile resigne the said tenement of land’ [PR1571].

Tennant (te-nin’) n. Hugh (19th C.) married Mary Halliday in Hawick in 1840. Rev. Joseph (c.1575–c.1633) from Listounsheils, he was son of John of Cairns, Mid-Calder. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595, was licensed in 1598 and ordained at Traquair in 1599. He was translated to Bedrule in 1601/2. He added responsibility for Abbotrule in 1605, when he is recorded being presented to the parsonage and vicarage on the death of Alexander Crichton. He appears to have been translated back to Bedrule again in 1608/9 and the reality appears to be that he held both benefices simultaneously for about 15 years. In 1616 he had a bond with Robert Turnbull in Bedrule. He witnessed a bond for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1623 (also said by Tancred to have been witnessed by Thomas Tennant in Ruecastle, but this may be an error for Thomas Turnbull). He appears to have been deprived in about 1621, when Abbotrule was again disjoined from Bedrule. He is still recorded as a resident in Bedrule in mid-1632 (leasing ‘Roullis land’). He died before the end of 1633 (probably unmarried), when his brother John of Cairnes became heir to a tenement in Edinburgh and land at ‘Listounscheilis’. Katharine see Katharine Elliot (also spelled ‘Tennent’).

Tennant’s Map (te-nints-map) n. map of Roxburghshire published in 1840 and surveyed by N. Tennant. It was the most detailed map of the county before the Ordnance Survey. This can also refer to Walter Tennant’s ‘Plan of the Town of Hawick and Environs’, which was published in 1850, and again is the best record of the layout of Hawick streets and buildings before the large-scale Ordnance Survey maps.

tennis (te-nis) n. raquet ball game traditionally played by people in white outfits near Langlands Bridge. The game was played informally in the mid-19th century, with later tournaments on the cricket field. Early enthusiasts included J.R. Carmichael, J.B. Sime, G.C. Glenny, C.J. Glenny, James Barrie, George Murray Wilson, Elliot Oliver, George Grier, James Locke, and T. Lindsay Watson. A club was formed in the 1880s, and cinder courts laid down at the site below the cottage hospital. However, the club wound up in 1893, with many of the members having switched allegiance to golf, and the courts were abandoned. George Heron Wilson gifted the courts beside the cricket field to the High School in the 1920s, and the courts in Wilton Lodge Park were built much more recently.

tent (ten', tent) n., arch. heed, attention, care – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ (inscription at 25 High Street), ‘A’ therfor whatsaevyr they bid yow tak’ tent o’, that tak’ tent o’, an’ do’[HSR].

tenter (ten-tur) n., arch. a frame for stretching cloth, specifically rails set up outside to dry and evenly stretch cloth after fulling. Large tracts of land around the centre of Hawick were once used for this purpose, e.g. the Commercial Road, Laing Terrace and Rosalee areas, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map – ‘The tenter grounds of Messrs. Laidlaw & Sons were almost all swept away …’[BM1997], ‘…with its tenter-field for the drying of blankets scoured at the Under Damside …’ [WAPJ] (this gave rise to the phrase ‘on tenterhooks!’).

tentfi (tent-fi) adj., poet. heedful, attentive – ‘…let thine ear be tentfi’ til the voice o’ my supplications’[HSR].

tenty (ten'-ee, ten-tee) adj., arch. heedful, attentive, careful – ‘I mankind’s ways hae marked wiel, Wi’ tentie, watchfu’ e’e’[JoHa].

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) interj. short form of the Hawick slogan and battle-cry, ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘O Teribus! thy magic spell, Thy sons shall own where’er they dwell’[RH], ‘…And while the strains of Teribus float on the air Within each breast the life-blood proudly runs’[JCG], ‘…For it still sticks close to us In the town of Teri-bus. Rally round, rally round, rally round’[AW], ‘The ‘Callants’ of Hawick gathered And joined with the hastening throng; And spon- taneous The rousing Teri-bus Rang out as they marched along’[TK], ‘Cry aloud, ‘Teribus’, con- quering terror’[IWS] (various spellings exist).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. the main Common Riding song, with words written by James Hogg in 1819 to a tune that is surely much older, effectively replacing the slightly earlier words of Arthur Balbirnie. It was originally called ‘The Colour’, and is distinguished from Hogg’s other main song ‘Flodden Field’, which has the same chorus (and is about the events of 1513, rather than 1514). The words were reprinted in 1824, 1829 and 1836, with several changes. The melody bears some similarity with tunes derived from Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music (e.g. ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ and the essentially identical tune called ‘Brave Wully Forster’ that exists in a 1694 manuscript, as well as the beginning of a piece of music attributed to Praetorius, but believed to have been originally by Caroubel around 1600). However, it is unclear whether this gives any hint as to its age or origin. The version played by the Drums and Fifes also has several variations compared with the tune that is sung. An older version of the tune survives (on a manuscript page in the Museum), and said to be the one played by Walter Ballantyne, town piper in 1777; it is a variant of the better known tune, seeming more like a pipe tune, and perhaps fitting the words to Balbirnie’s song better. Hogg’s words were first published in Kelso (partly because of the two satirical verses): it is sometimes also referred to as ‘The New Common Riding Song’, to distinguish it from Balbirnie’s song (the ‘Auld Sang’) of perhaps a generation earlier, which had the same tune. Hogg’s words were clearly influenced by Balbirnie’s (although perhaps they were both using phrases from even older lyrics). A version preceding Balbirnie’s c.1800 verses had as the chorus ‘T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common’, but none of the rest survives. It may be that the song was also once called ‘Drumlanrig’s March’. Hogg’s words are not entirely historically accurate, but that has not dampened their popularity. There were at one time suggestions for ‘improving’ the words to make them more factually correct, but this never caught on (it is unclear who wrote these improved words in the latter part of the 19th century, but they are now lost). Hogg’s full version contains 24 verses, although only a subset of 14 of them are commonly sung, and 2 of the more controversial verses were not printed along with the rest until significantly later. There are also 2 additional verses attributed to Hogg that are never included: one referring to Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’; and the other commemorating the tricentenary of 1814. A shorter 5 verse version of the song is sung at each Ride-out by the ‘Big 4’, after they have mounted for the ride back to Hawick, as well as on other occasions, such as at the Overseas Night on the Wednesday and in the Avenue on the Saturday; these verses begin ‘Scotia felt . . .’, ‘After Flodden . . .’, ‘Down they threw . . .’, ‘Magistrates . . .’ and ‘Peace by thy portion . . .’. It is sung at St. Leonard’s after the Thursday night Chase, and in the same place after the Thursday and Friday morning Chases of Common Riding Week. Its singing also marks the end of the Colour Bussing on the Thursday. At the ‘Sang Singin’ on the Friday (after the return from the Mair) the Sang Singer sings the complete version. The verse beginning ‘Annual since our flag’s been carried . . .’ is used for toasts to the Cornet, ‘High the trump of fame did raise them’ for the Right- and Left-Hand Men (only relatively recently) and ‘Magistrates be faithful trustees . . .’ for the Acting Father. The Drums and Fifes also play the tune numerous times, such as when the Cornet is presented the letter on Pickin Night, on the site of the Auld Brig on the night of the Orderin o the Curds an Cream, at the Kirk Wynd at the start of proceedings on the Friday, as the official party march from the top of the Mill Path to the Song Singing, and on the Saturday when the mounted procession passes them at Drumlanrig Place, and at the Handing-Back ceremony – ‘Teerie buss and teerie heather, Aye the ewe lap o’er the heather’ [JR], ‘. . . Sings ‘Teribus’ wi’ right goodwill On pyramid or steeple’ [MG], ‘A’ man, if ye was to play ony other tune enow but ‘Teribus’, the toun o’ Hawick wad rise’ [RM].

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. pipe march (in 2/4 time and D Major), which is similar, although quite distinct from the traditional Hawick song. The tune is very similar to ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ (otherwise known as ‘In and out the dusty bluebells’), much moreso than the familiar Hawick song. Although it is a standard of many pipe tune compilations, it is not generally known to be associated with Hawick, although the name surely means there is some connection. It is unclear when it was first published, and hence it is possible that both it and the ‘Auld Sang’ derive from the same basic tune sometime pre-1800. However, the first definite appearance is in the ‘Scots Guards’ collection of 1954, and so it is also possible that this was merely a personal version from an unknown piper of the early 20th century, or simply an error in the naming of the tune. Note that some web-sites and published discussions erroneously assume this is exactly the same as the Common Riding tune. To further confuse matters there is an earlier version of the tune for the song ‘Teribus’ known, this being in 4/4 time and being a variant of the modern melody, but again with only a passing similarity to this pipe tune.

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. Sir John (14th C.) listed as ‘Johne de Teribus’ when he witnessed a charter confirming the church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1384. He also witnessed a document relating to the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch in about 1360. It is presumably a coincidence that his name is similar to Hawick’s slogan.

the Teri Bus (thu-tee-ree-bus) n. name of a mini-bus used for transporting old folk in Hawick.

the Teribus Airms (thu-tee-ree-bus-armz) n. public house in the Fore Raw in the mid-19th century, opening around 1840. The early proprietor was Michael Wintrup. A glass gin bottle labelled ‘Teribus Arms’ is in the Museum.

the Teribus Altar (thu-tee-ree-bus-awl-tur) n. Roman altar stone at Chesters Museum on Hadrian’s Wall. It appears to contain the word ‘TERIBVS’, and since it has been labelled with a reference to the ‘old gods’, some Teries have suggested that it relates to the Hawick slogan. However, when it is realised that ‘-ibus’ is a common Latin ending, other, more mundane explanations suggest themselves. Most likely the part visible reads together as ‘DIBVS VI–TERIBVS’, meaning ‘to the gods named Viteri’ (or alternatively the broken stone contains only part of an inscription), since there are many other examples of similar words on other altar stones.

the Teribus Clock (thu-tee-ree-bus-klok) n. unique ornamental clock outside Hamish Smith’s jeweller’s shop at the Horse since 1996. It was designed and constructed locally by Hamish Smith, Tosh Scott and other tradesmen. It features 3 horses with riders in Common Riding regalia, which appear every quarter hour, while the chimes play ‘Teribus’.

teribus.com (tee-ree-bus-do’-kom) n. web-site dedicated to all things Hawick, set up by Cameron Reith in 2001.

the Teribus Spitfire (thu-tee-ree-bus-spi’-fir) n. presentation Spitfire fighter aircraft, funded from £5,325 raised by townspeople during ‘Spitfire Week’ in August 1940. It was probably a Mark I Spitfire, identity number R7128, and possibly shot down on 8th July 1941.

Teribus ye Teri-Odin (tee-ree-bu-see-tee-ree-oo-din) interj. the Hawick slogan, whose origin is lost in the mists of time. A popular theory is that it derives from the Anglian ‘Tyr haeb us, ye Tyr ye Odin’ meaning ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’. However, there is no evidence that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and moreover, the period in which the area around Hawick was under the dominance of the Anglians of Northumbria (and hence speaking a version of Anglo-Saxon) but before it was Christianised (and hence not worshipping Anglo-Saxon gods) was quite short. This theory appears to have first been suggested by lexicographer John Jamieson around 1825, and was accepted by Sir James Murray. However, it is not supported by normal phonological development either (where one would have started with the Old English forms ‘Tiw’ and ‘Wōdan’ and these could not have conceivably developed into the Old Norse forms for the gods). Another idea is that the slogan derives from the Celtic ‘Tir a buidh’s, tir a dion’ meaning ‘Land of Victory, Land of Defence’. This is perhaps more likely, since Hawick people spoke a version of ancient Northumbrian (related to other ‘Brythonic’ languages, like modern Welsh) until perhaps the 8th century. A third, and least romantic theory is that the phrase is essentially a set of nonsense syllables used to sing along to the song (analogous perhaps to ‘Hey tutti tatie’, the former name for the tune used by Burns for ‘Scots Wha Hae’, said to have been the march used by Robert the Bruce’s men at Bannockburn). However, it should be stressed that all of these ideas are based on guesswork, and the truth could be something else entirely. In any case it appears that Hawick’s slogan is quite ancient, perhaps over 1,000 years old, and it is intriguing that it has survived through the Reformation and other political and social changes. Its survival is even more curious when one realises that, although familiar to everyone from Hawick, no one knows its meaning! – ‘Teeribus and Teeriodin . . . is still shouted by the inhabitants of the borough, when they annually ride the marches’ [JoJ], ‘Teribus ye Teriodin! By our sires who fell at Flodden, Muster swift and rouse the river! Strike for Hawick, and Hawick for ever’ [RSC], ‘Ter y bus! Ter y Oden! Rolls from throat, and drum, and fife, Its deeper meaning mingles With the leaven of their life’ [MC], ‘Hawick heart’s shall e’er be proud. ‘Teribus y Teriodin!’ Sing the slogan long and loud’ [IWS] (the spelling is entirely subjective).

Teridom (tee-ree-duin) n. the state of being a Teri, the area around Hawick – ‘He burns to clasp the callant’s hand ’That’s come from some far distant land, Aince mair in Teridom to stand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS].

Teridom (tee-ree-duin) n. web-site aimed at Teries, set up by Jane and Kevin Currie in 2000.

Teries (tee-rezz) n., pl. plural of Teri – ‘Hail! Hail to the Teries, True, dauntless and cheerful – Laings, Watsons, and Wilsons, Scotts, Elliots, Laidlaws’ [T].
Terie-ess

Terie-ess (tee-ree-es) n. word sometimes used to refer to female Teries (e.g. by George Luff when referring to his waitresses at the 1899 Common Riding dinner.

the Teri-hub (thu-tee-ree-hub) n. Hawick-based email news-group, set up by Graham Peacock in 1999, providing information and entertainment for Teries at home and abroad. It grew out of the old Hawick News web-site list, which was one of the first Hawick-based web-sites. It later moved to being a Yahoo group (also written ‘Teri Hub’).

Teriland (tee-ree-land) n., poet. the area around Hawick – ‘There was a priest in Teriland, An’ had he leevd lang syne He’ld been a brave Crusader, An’ gaen to Palestine’ [FL], ‘Yet are there ever in their hearts enshrined, Visions of Teri-land, with many a thought Of friends and friendships they have left behind, Beneath the shadow of the auld green Moat’ [TK].

Teriodin (tee-ree-ō-din) n., adj. second half of the Hawick town slogan, also referring to the song – ‘When that gaited Chiefian came in view, And his war bugle loud he blew, The Hawick pipes played Teri Oddin, And sallied out the Border Bowmen’ [MP], ‘…Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT], ‘They ha’e nae Teri-Odin flag …’ [JT], ‘Unfold the Teri Oden flag. To kiss the breeze o’ Summer …’ [JT], ‘Teri Odn’s strain entrancing Through the air triumphant soared …’ [TK], ‘Though names be forgotten, as time passes by, Teri-Odin for ever – united the cry’ [WFC] (also written ‘Teri Oddin’, ‘Teri Oden’, ‘Teri-Odin’, etc.).

the Teri-Optimists (thu-tee-ree-op-ti-mists) n. theatrical group who performed songs, dances and sketches in the Town Hall in the 1930s. Prominent members included Bay Armstrong, Eileen Bannerman, Cameron Conn, Jimmy Glenny and Ian Mactaggart.

the Teri Stakes (thu-tee-ree-stāks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, held on the Saturday, but dropped in 1979.

term-days (term-, te-run-dāz) n., pl. the four days on which rents and other payments were traditionally due in Scotland, also known as quarter days. These days were once very prominent in the yearly calendar, particularly those in May and November; servants were hired by the year or half-year and leases by the year or longer, almost always on those days. The names, as well as the dates, were different in Scotland than in England. Called Candelmas, Whitsun, Lammas and Martinmas, they were originally on 2nd February, 26th May, 1st August and 11th November, respectively. However, Whitsun moved to 15th May when the Gregorian Calendar was formally adopted in 1752. But in 1886 the term days for hiring and renewing domestic and agricultural workers was changed in Scotland to 28th February, 28th May, 28th August and 28th November, and this was confirmed by an Act of 1990. Until well into the 20th century it was common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers moving from one farm to another on 28th May.

termigant (ter-mi-gin’) n., arch. a violent, quarrelsome person – ‘Termigants have been rife in this same month …’ [RM].

Term Thursdi (term-thurz-di) n. popular name for the first Thursday after Martinmas term, in November. It was formerly an important day in Hawick, which was treated as a fair day by the country residents. It was a day for settling accounts in Town, and for preparing for the Winter. The ‘mairt’ (usually a fattened sheep) would be bought for the Winter’s meat supply and there would be a general ly festive atmosphere. The practice stopped towards the end of the 19th century.

the Terraces (thu-te-ri-seez) n. popular name for streets in the Wellogate, largely built through the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company starting in 1866 and continuing to roughly the end of the 19th century. The land was petitioned for from the Duke of Buccleuch, partly as a result of the 1849 cholera epidemic. The grid-like layout gives little concession to the contours of the land.

terrier (te-rec-ur) n. nickname for a Territorial Army soldier. The T.A. headquarters is on Union Street.

terrification (te-ri-fee-kā-shin) n., poet. act of terrifying, state of terror – ‘…wad meak the vera chafts to fo’ abreed, wuv doonright terrification’ [JT].

terrin (ter-in) n. the act of applying tar, particularly to sheep. This was formerly a common practice locally, used to prevent infection in cuts and for identifying the sheep from a distance. However, the benefits were never entirely clear and it became less common by the mid-19th century as the preference for white woollens grew.

Terrona (te-rō-mu) n. farm in Ewesdale, off the left-hand side of the A7 a couple of miles before Langholm. There are multiple spellings in older records. It was a 5-merk land when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. Adam Armstrong was tenant in 1679. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it covered 457 acres and was bounded by Cooms, Whitshiels, Arkin, Nether Wrae and Flask. James Little was there in 1797. James Paterson was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient walled settlement to the southeast of the farmhouse (there are many spelling variants; it is ‘Torronna’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Toroun’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Tareona’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tersy-versy (ter-seer-see-ver-see) adj., arch. topsy-turvy, in a confused state (also tarsie-versie).
tertan (ter’-in) n. tartan, a distinctive pattern of coloured lines and bands for cloth, traditionally worn in the Highlands, with specific designs attached to clans, often spuriously. Hawick District Corporate tartan was launched in 1996, with a dress version in addition. There is no indication that locals historically wore tartan clothing – ‘There’s the spot where we were lyin’ Rowed within your tartan plaid!’ [JT].
turtle (ter-tul) v., arch. to recognise, observe – ‘To take notice of; as, ‘He never terteled me,’ he took no notice of me, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (cf. tarte).

the Test (thu-test) n. one of a number of oaths of allegiance introduced, particularly in the 17th century, to differentiate between Protestants and Catholics in England or adherence to Presbyterianism versus Episcopalianism in Scotland. The most important ‘test’ was probably that of the Test Act of 1681, which enforced Episcopacy and attempt to suppress the Covenanters. In Hawick in that year it seems that the Bailies and Council subscribed to a specific text, stating that no one should ‘enter into covenants or leagues, or to convocate, convene, or assemble in any councils, conventions, or assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of state, civil or ecclesiastical, without His Majesty’s special command’. The tailors and weavers took the Test in 1684.
testamentar (tes-ta-men-tar) adj., arch. pertaining to a testament, nominated in a will, especially in the phrase ‘testament testamentar’, meaning a testament in which the details are specified by the person whose testament it is – ‘The testament testamentar, and inventar of the gudis, geir, soumes of money, and dettis pertenning to vnquaheile Walter Scot of Branxholme …’ [SB1574].
testificate (tes-ti-fee-ki’) n., arch. a testimonial, solemn declaration, evidence, specifically a document issued by a Kirk Session for someone moving to a new parish, describing whether they were married or unmarried and whether or not they were free of scandal; the requirement to produce such a document was prescribed in an Act of Assembly of 1648 – ‘…by reason of our being vagrant and vagabond persons wanting testificatts …’ [BR], ‘To a man that had a testificate’ [PR], ‘…and the beadle was further ordered to make inquiry anent the rest of the testificatts’ [PR1713].
testit (tes-ti’-ta’) adj., arch. testate, mentioned as part of a will – ‘…nor pursue …but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court, except for testat geir, under the pane of £5, toties quoties’ [BR1640]. ‘Freemen prohibited from instituting prosecution for debts in any other than the Bailie Court, except testat goods’ [JW1701] (also spelled ‘testat’).
tethert (te-thur’) pp., adj. tethered – ‘…and that nane keppe any in the day fra the 15th of April till harvest, except they be tetherit, under the lyik pane’ [BR1640], ‘…The cranes stand oot at the Port o’ Leith Whaur the boats lie trigly tethert’ [WL].
tethert (te-thur’) adj., arch. in an untidy, unkempt or confused state (also written ‘thether’).
tethery (te-thu-ree) adj., arch. untidy, unkempt, confused (also tethery-methery and tethert).
tethery-methery (te-thu-ree-meth-thu-ree) n., arch. an untidy mess, differentiated state (noted as ‘tetherie-metherie’ by E.C. Smith; related to the children’s counting rhyme, see eendy-teendy).
tetty (te-tee) adj., arch. irascible, bad-tempered – ‘Tetty. Having a bad temper, Roxb.; the same with Titty’ [JoJ].
t euch (tewch) adj., arch. tough – ‘They’re teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Hauch’ [JAHM], ‘…thin Than a robin’s leg And twice as teuch’ [DH], ‘Glooms and glints, sud- dden flashes of gold across the fields – teuch and smooth on grass …’ [DH] (the pronunciation formerly had a long dhiphong merging i and oo).
teuchent (tewch-en’) pp., poet. toughened – ‘The teuchent bow o’ toil’s unstrung, Soft ease comes laughing gay, O’ [JoHa].
teuchter (chooch-tur) n., ins. mildly derogatory lowland name for a Highlander.
Teueot

Teueot (tee-ee-i’) n. another early spelling of ‘Teviot’ (e.g. on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland).

Teuiot (tee-ee-i’) n. early form of ‘Teviot’, recorded in 1160 (the pronunciation of the time is of course unknown, but it seems that the v sound may have come later).

Tevidale (te-vee-dal) n. former name for Teviotdale, used around the 15th and 16th centuries.

Tevidalenses (te-vee-da-len-seez) n. former name for the people of Teviotdale. At the Battle of the Standard in 1130 the second division of King David’s army consisted of them along with the Cumbrenses.

the Teviot (thu-tee-vee-i’, -teev-yi’) n. major river running through Hawick, having its source at Teviot Stone and joining the Tweed 37 miles later, near Kelso. It is the longest of the Tweed’s tributaries and its main tributaries are the Borthwick, Slitrig, Rule, Ale, Jed and Kale Waters. Other minor watercourses joining it include: Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike; Giddens Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Falnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Nest Burn; Weens Sike; Teindside Burn; Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; the Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Howden Burn; Boonraw Burn; Kirkton Burn; Hassendean Burn; Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Grinding Burn; Ale Water; Oxnam Water and Kale Water. The river has always played a significant role in the life of Hawick. In the town it used to be crossed by a ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, or by boat at the Coble, until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. The river was harnessed (and much polluted) by manufacturers in the 19th century. The river is prone to flooding, some historical floods being very dramatic. It also has the potential to dry up almost entirely in hot summers, and also sometimes in the winter (as in January 1748, March 1785, January 1877, winter of 1803/4 and November 1838), presumably due to blockage by ice. Some stone artefacts found around the river in Hawick are in the Museum – ‘...And Teviot’s banks, where flowers of fairy blow, – Couldst thou with cold unraptur’d eye survey. Nor wake to bardish notes the bosom-thrilling lay?’ [JL], ‘Ah! when shall I by Teviot’s stream The haunts of youth again explore? And muse in melancholy dream On days that shall return no more?’ [JL], ‘O swiftly gae speed the berry-brown steed That drinks o’ the Teviot clear’ [JL], ‘Where nature’s lavish hand profuse has strew’d Luxuriant beauties. Here the Teviot winds Her easy course, meandr’ring round the vales’ [JR], ‘Far better loved young Lillias fair than tales of love to hear, To seek unseen her simple bower By Teviot’s waters clear’ [JTe], ‘Life, like thy tide, sweet Teviot, hath its turns, Its devious windings, wayward, wild, and free’ [GWe], ‘The moon is on the waters! and silvert white they gleam, And soothing is the melody of Teviot’s gentle stream’ [GWe], ‘There’s ae auld toon by Teviot’s side, That’s famed in days o’ yore’ [JT], ‘And while the Teviot’s stream shall glide To reach Tweed’s silver strand, They sons shall sing and dream of thee, Thou dear auld Borderland’ [AO], ‘While the silvert Teviot’s flowing Ever onward to the sea ... ’ [TK], ‘There’s a toon, by hills surrounded, stands by bonnie Teviot’s side’ [TC], ‘River of dreams, you are dear to us ever, Dear where the broad haughs invite you to Tweed; Dear where the willows dip low to your crooning Songs that you murmur through valley and mead’ [WL], ‘The Teviot babbles on its way; The clash of steel has passed away’ [IWS] (origin uncertain, although the name is very old, possibly Celtic, and perhaps even older, with a suggestion that it is derived from the Sanskrit root ‘tav´ ass’, perhaps meaning ‘surging’, which curiously may also be the same root as for the Tweed; it seems that the pre-Celtic hydronym gained the Cumbric suffix ‘ed’, probably later than the 8th century; it is ‘Teuie’t in charters around 1200, ‘aque de Teuioth’ in 1279, ‘aqua de Teveot’ in 1420, ‘Theviot’ in 1547/8 and ‘Teevot’ in 1579, with other spellings including “Teviott”, “Teiot”, etc.; it is ‘Tiot fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, and ‘Teatt fl.’ in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Teviot (teev-yi’) n. Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was ‘of the Hillhous’, and his lands were probably the Hillhouse near Newcastleton. The other men named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Alexander Bell ‘Crat Bell’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’.

Teviotbank (tee-vee-i’-bawngk) n. merchant ship, built in 1938 by J. Readhead & Sons Ltd. for the Bank Line (Andrew Weir Shipping & Trading Co. Ltd.) and sold off to a company registered in Panama in 1955. It may have been used to lay mines during WWII.

Teviot Bank (tee-vee-i’-bawngk) n. villa overlooking the north banks of the Teviot, about a mile before Denholm. A house was built there about 1791 for David Simpson, designed by Teviotbank Gairdens

Robert Burn. In 1799 Joseph Elliot was a coachman there and James Walker was a footman. The house was rebuilt in 1833 with designs by William Burn (son of the previous architect). There was also a stable building to the west and a walled garden with gardener’s cottage to the east. It was the residence of William Scott, grandson of William Scott of Woll, then J.S. Heron-Maxwell, followed by Edward Heron-Maxwell. To the north are cropmarks, indicating a possible ancient enclosure (sometimes written ‘Teviotbank; possibly also known earlier as ‘The Knowes’).

Teviotbank Gairdens (tee-vee-i’-bawngk-gär-dinz) n. street in Denholm off the north end of Canongate.

Teviot Brig (tee-vee-i’-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot, connecting the Sandbed with Wilton, built 1738–1741 with stone from Spittal quarry. This was the first bridge over the Teviot at Hawick, and it meant that traffic from the north no longer had to ford the river at Walter’s Wynd, or travel all the way down-river to Ancrum. There had been some debate about whether to put it at the Sandbed or the foot of Walter’s Wynd, the question being resolved by a group of local landowners. There was also a great deal of trouble raising the money (£450 total cost) and paying off the original bond (£250 from the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners), this being probably the largest municipal project undertaken by the town. The bridge was completed when ‘the kistone was perfected and close’ on 29th July 1741, but the debt took about 20 years to clear; this is despite other towns being asked to contribute (e.g. Glasgow contributed £5). During construction the animals used to transport materials were pastured on the Common Haugh and Myreslawgreen (with no other animals allowed there during that time). The original bridge was too narrow for carts to pass in the middle (sometimes causing arguments), and was very steep on each side. The piers were strengthened around 1751 (along with drains being added) and after many other repairs it was removed in 1865 and replaced with a less steep and contracted bridge. The architect was Andrew Wilson and the builder was John Marshall. During excavations for the new bridge the trunk of an oak tree was found embedded in the gravel, presumably left there in some long ago flood. The original bridge can be seen in paintings of 1800, 1808 and 1812. The new bridge has 3 arches and was designed by A. Wilson. The bridge was also popularly known as ‘the Haugh Brig’ and has subsequently become known as the Albert Bridge, possibly because of an error in the Ordnance Survey map of 1898. The name ‘Teviot Brig’ is also used for other bridges across the river, including the one built at Denholm in 1864.

Teviot Brig Road (tee-vee-i’-brig-rōd) n. name sometimes used for Albert Road, or the street between the Sandbed and the Teviot Bridge (i.e. Orrock Place).

Teviot Court (tee-vee-i’-kör’) n. sheltered housing development built by Eildon Housing Association in 1989–91 on the Tannage Close property previously belonging to the Co-operative Store.

Teviot Crescent (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’) n. street between the High Street and the river, originally part of the Common, with lands feued after the Division of 1777, and the Wee Haugh being the sole remaining piece of public land. The area was used as nurseries by Dickson’s. The houses were built around 1832 as skilled, middle-class workers’ residences, and are now listed for preservation. They are 2 storeys, but most have attic extensions with dormer windows. The street was obviously named after the river. William Laidlaw & Sons had their Teviot Crescent Mills here. A mill lade used to run from Laidlaw’s Cauld along the side of Teviot Crescent and through the Mills. It was filled in in 1914. The Drums and Fifes walk along this street as part of their march around the old tolls on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Teviot Crescent Mills (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’-milz) n. hosiery and tweed factory built by William Laidlaw in 1834 on Teviot Crescent, to the north of the Little Haugh, and later extended. The suitability of the site (owing to the drop in the Teviot) was first suggested by millwright Gideon Scott. The factory was once very large, extending along the Teviot from the Little Haugh until almost the foot of Dovecote Street. The footpath along the riverside was popularly known as ‘the Back o the Mill’ or ‘Chinnie’s’. The factory was also referred to as ‘Laidlaw’s’. It was demolished in about 1908 and the site cleared. The open dam was filled in around 1914, with the southern part later becoming a car park. The site of the mill was used as a garage (later a supermarket) and also contained the Henderson Technical College (now houses).

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. the valley of the Teviot, in which Hawick is nestled. The word is sometimes synonymous with Roxburghshire, i.e. extending beyond the boundaries of the river valley itself. It was also the name used for the local arch-deaconry in early church organisation. This area was part of the Diocese of Durham in the 11th century, but was transferred to the See of Glasgow by the end of the 12th century. The region was occupied by the English in the 14th century, being recovered in 1383/4 – ‘My native stream, my native vale, And you green meads of Teviotdale . . . ’ [JL], ‘When morn’s first rays fall quivering on the strand, Then is the time to stretch the darning hand, And snatch it from the bending poplar pale, The magic harp of ancient Teviotdale’ [JL], ‘And for the world I wadna leave My Bonnie Teviotdale’ [JoHa], ‘Young Mary was the loveliest lass In all green Teviotdale; Her cheek outvied the budding rose, Her breath the rosy gale’ [JTe], ‘Oh, Teviotdale! loved land of song, What memories to thee belong’ [JCG], ‘. . . Where nature’s voices join to speak In praise of glorious Teviotdale’ [RHL], ‘O sing me songs of Teviotdale That tell an old familiar tale’ [IWS] (called ‘Teuidalidia’ by the Romans; it was ‘Teuegetedale’ in about 1117, ‘Theiudallie’ around 1147, ‘Tevidat’ in a Scottish record of 1297, ‘Teyvdalle’ in an English document of 1391 and ‘Tevidalia’ in the 1407 charter for the Barony of Hawick; the early spelling varies wildly, e.g. ‘Theuydalidia’ in about 1360, ‘Teuidalidia’ in 1415, ‘Tewydalle’ in 1425, ‘Thewidalidia’ in 1427, ‘Teuidaylle’ in 1431, ‘Teuidale’ in 1433/4, ‘Teuidalidie’ in 1448, ‘Teuidalia’ in 1453, ‘Theuidalidie’ in about 1452, ‘tevidale’ in 1498, ‘Tewidalidie’ in 1498, ‘Tevidalidie’ in 1501, ‘Taviddale’ in 1516, ‘Tevidalie’ in 1479, 1500 and 1525, ‘Tvvidalle’ in 1525, ‘Tevidaille’ in 1530, ‘Taviddale’ about 1540, ‘Tewydayll’ in 1546, ‘Theviodallie’ in 1547, ‘Tevidallie’ in 1550, 1556 and 1567, ‘Tvvidalle’ in 1583 and ‘Teviodallie’ in 1591).

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. small region in New Zealand, between the town of Waipara and the coast. This north-east part of the South Island is dotted with familiar placenames, including Cheviot, Ferniehurst, Hundalee and Timpendede.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. song with words by Robert H. Laidlaw and music by Frank Simpson. The words were published in the Hawick Express in 1934 and reprinted in 1950 when the music had been written. It was first sung publicly at the Glasgow Hawick Association’s Common Riding Night, the singer being Mrs. Margaret Turnbull (a niece of Francis George Scott). The original key of D major was later lowered to B flat major. It has no chorus, and is probably a little too complex to be sung regularly.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. blend of pipe tobacco sold by D. Simpson Ltd., from about the War years until the 1960s.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. blended whisky, formerly labelled and sold by John Turnbull of Hawick.

Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club (tee-vee-i’-dāl-ahm-iott-ur-bi-see-kul-klub) n. earliest known cycling organisation in Hawick, also known as Teviotdale Cycling Club. It was formed before 1881, when the Hawick Bicycle Club (to become the Hawick Cycling Club) was formed, and some competitive events were held between them in the 1880s. The club ceased to be active in about 1889.

Teviotdale Bakery (tee-vee-i’-dāl-bi-ku-ree) n. former bakery at 2 Princes Street. It was run by Martin P. Baillie, father of singer Isobel.

the Teviotdale Club (thoo-tee-vee-i’-dāl-klub) n. former social club near the foot of Beaconsfield Terrace, also known as ‘Hawick Billiard Club’. The building was constructed in 1877, and has had many subsequent uses, including as a milliners, the office for Bonsor’s factory and the Jehovah’s Witnesses Kingdom Hall.

Teviotdale Crescent (tee-vee-i’-dāl-krens’) n. ??.

Teviotdale Cyclin Club (tee-vee-i’-dāl-sik-lin-klub) n. alternative name for Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i’-dāl-dā-ree) n. former dairy at 49 North Bridge Street, next to the Buccleuch Memorial. The buildings were designed in about 1899 by J.P. Alison as a symmetrical, 2-stotey, 3-bay block in red sandstone, with Dutch influence in the detailing. The company was set up in the late 19th century and continued in the 1930s as ‘Honeyburn and Teviotdale Dairy Company’ by Andrew Haddon and his son Andrew. Other partners were Jimmy Taddei and Mr. Collier the grocer. The company delivered certified (i.e. Brucellosis and T.B. free) milk to the local region. It was later owned by the Bute-tercup Dairy Company. It finally folded in 1982, with the building surviving (with monogrammed gable still visible) as a shop, although the bottling plant at the back was demolished.

Teviotdale Farmers’ Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-far-nurz-klub) n. organisation formed in 1859 to be a forum for discussion and to represent the interests of local farmers. The first President was William Aitchison from 1859–73, with James Oliver being secretary from 1859–1905. It used to meet in a room in the Tower Hotel, where portraits of several ex-Presidents hung through much of the 19th century. It grew out of the Agricultural society for the west of Teviotdale, formed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835 (although both existed together for several decades). The Oliver family were Honorary Secretaries for the Club 1859–1994. The regular meeting time has been Thursday nights during the winter months. The club is still going strong.

Teviotdaleheid (tee-vee-i’-däl-heed) n. name formerly used for the upper Teviot valley, particularly to refer to the Buccleuch estates there in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was once included in the lands formerly known as Ringwoodfield. It is referred to in 1551 as part of the bounds described when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Justiciar of Liddesdale (it is already 'Teviotdaleheid' in 1551 and ‘Teviotdailheid’ in 1633).

Teviotdale Harriers (tee-vee-i’-däl-hee-re-curz) n. Teviotdale Harriers, the local amateur running club. Following a cross-country run by 9 local men, who met at Deanfield, the club was formed in 1889 as a by several local merchants and professionals. The 12 founders were John R. Turnbull, Findlay Purdom, George Heron Wilson, John Purdom, Douglas Oliver, Robert Blair, James Blair, Harold Evers, Robert Anderson, Charles McLaren Purdom, Willie Laing and Robert Laing. The first Captain, Vice-Captain and Secretary/Treasurer were John R. Purdom, George H. Wilson and Charles M. Purdom, respectively. It is said to be the third oldest in Scotland in continual existence. The inclusion of track competitions came a few years after the club started. The club’s Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and a Ladies’ Section in 1930. Clubrooms were built on Bath Street in 1956, and moved to the former Citizens Advice Bureau at 1 Towerdyside in 2006. A history, ‘The First Hundred’ was written by John L. Coltman in 1989.

Teviotdale Hockey Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-ho-kee-klub) n. mixed hockey team existing before WWI, based in Hawick. The 4 Laing brothers all played for the team.

Teviotdale Leisure Centre (tee-vee-i’-däl-lei-shur-sen’-ur) n. official name for the Leisure Centre, also known as 'T.L.C.'.

Teviotdale Ludge (tee-vee-i’-däl-luj, -loj) n. house in Commonside, just past Newmill, built in 1934 as a shooting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been for many years run as a hotel, Teviotdale Lodge Country House. It has also been the site of Common Riding Ride-outs.

Teviotdale Ludge (tee-vee-i’-däl-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Lodge 10417. Sometimes known as ‘the Buffs’, this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It folded in 1990.

Teviotdale Mills (tee-vee-i’-däl-milz) n. former factory at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road, being the main premises of Scoon & Hood, previously Scoon & Barrie. It was built in 1877 (or perhaps earlier) by Greenwood, Watt & Co., and sold to Scoon & Barrie in 1888. J.P. Alison designed a new yarn store there. It was later Scoon & Hood’s until about 1930. It may also have been owned by Innes & Henderson. The building more recently became a garage, with Croall Bryson.

the Teviotdale Regiment (thu-tee-vee-i’-däl-re-jee-min’) n. foot regiment formed by Sir William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian, in 1639, after the signing of the National Covenant. It was one of the armies raised to protect Scotland against Charles I, and also referred to as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’ (Buccleuch commanded a Tweeddale regiment, Hume a regiment from the Merse, etc.). The Regiment probably consisted of about 500 men, many of whom must have been local. They were part of the Covenanters force that crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640, capturing Newcastle. The Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed in 1642 and sent to Ireland. About 1642 Lords Lothian, Buccleuch and Cranston were made Colonels of foot of a combined force, with Sir William Scott of Harden commanding the horse. They returned from Ireland in 1644, but mutinied for lack of pay in 1645 and then suffered huge losses at the Battle of Auldearn. The Regiment continued to exist for about the next 40 years.

Teviotex

Rifle Volunteers, also known as the Border Rifles.

Teviotex (tee-vee-o-tek) n. textile company based at 15 Commercial Road, weaving country tweeds and luxury cloths at Lovat Mill.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vee-i-gröw-aw-kah-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as ‘Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. The Science and Art classes were held in the Buccleuch Memorial, and James Brand was the Rector. The secondary school transferred back to Buccleuch Street in the early 20th century. School Inspectors’ Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives.

Teviothaugh (tee-vee-i-hawf) n. farm near Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, just beyond the north end of Denholm and to the south of Minto. It was once part of the Minto estate. Nailer John Oliver was living there in 1815. Christopher Hislop was farmer there in 1841. It was farmed by James Young in the 1860s and by the Miller family in the late 19th century, until the 1920s.

Teviotheid (tee-vee-i-heed, tee-vi-heed) n. Teviothead, village about 9 miles south of Hawick, which is spread out along the A7, and was formerly called Caerlenrig. Prior to the opening of the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike, there was an alternative route from Langholm to Selkirk (skirting past Hawick) which diverged at Teviothead and crossed to the Borthwick valley. The area was for many years the home of Henry Scott Riddell, who was living there in 1898. About 100 yards to the east there were 2 ancient cairns that were excavated in 1869, an iron spearhead being found, which is now in Hawick Museum. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an additional ruined building that is now gone.

Teviotheid Haa (tee-vee-i-heed-haw) n. Teviothead Hall, village hall in Teviothead, used for various community events.

Teviotheid Kirk (tee-vee-i-heed-kirk) n. church in Teviothead Parish. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig lies within the old churchyard, and contains an ancient stone, as well as the burial site of Johnnie Armstrong, with the memorial stone of 1897. ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume was recorded witnessing baptisms in the area in 1713 and 1714, suggesting he was acting as preacher there. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ near there around 1715, as part of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, built on the Thornyhaugh by Falnash, with regular services commencing in about 1721. A collection was made in Hawick Parish to raise money to repair the monastery of the meeting house in 1722. A petition of 1725, signed by about 100 locals, requested the Duchess of Buccleuch to supply an allowance for a preacher. In the 1752 Hawick Parish records the church is referred to as ‘Meeting House at Thorny Hall’. A new building constructed on the other side of the stream in 1799 (later converted into the village school). The Parish was created in 1850 from the more distant parts of Hawick and Cavers, repaired in about 1821 when a new preacher was installed. The church was built in 1855/6, and designed by Mr. Cowan, the Duke of Buccleuch’s Clerk of Works. It is a plain rectangular building of whinstone, with freestone edged and buttresses. Some alterations were designed by J.P. Alison around 1905. The church was linked with Hawick Old Parish 1972–89 and with Wilton from 1989. It celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2005, with the present Duke of Buccleuch in attendance. A communion token exists from 1854, oval in shape. A roll of the ministry is: Thomas Hume, at least 1713–14; David Graham, from 1714; John Chisholme, from 1720; John Laurie 1738–c.45; Andrew Walker 1745–50; Robert Rutherford 1750–56; Patrick Kerr, from 1757; James Erskine 1763–64; John Riccarton 1764–65; Charles Paton, from 1780; James Sanson 1785–c.88; Thomas Dyce 1792–c.1804; Robert Shaw 1804–16; Joseph Thomson 1817–19; Gavin Turnbull 1821–c.31; John Dobie, about 1831; Henry Scott Riddell, 1832–42; William Lamb 1843–44; Daniel MacNee, from 1847; James Duncan 1850–53; Robert Young 1854–84; Robert F. Colvin 1884–87; Archibald H. Dinwoodie 1887–1919; Arthur H. Dunnett 1920–24; David S. Steven 1925–29; James Livingston 1929–40; James Hill 1940–53; Robert McConnell 1966–72; David L. Wright 1972–86; George Watson 1989–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998–.

Teviothead Library (tee-vee-i’-heed-IL-bru-ree) n. former library in Teviothead Parish, also called the Caerlenrig Chapel Library. It was probably established in the early 1800s and mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839.

Teviothead Parish (tee-vee-i’-heed-pa-ree) n. Teviothead Parish, formed in 1850 from the outlying parts of Hawick and Cavers parishes, centred on the village of the same name. It is bounded on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the other sides by the parishes of Roberton, Hawick, Cavers and Castleton. There was a chapel at Caerlenrig from early times and a ‘Chapel of Ease’ here from long before the Parish was created. Parish records exist from 1824.

Teviothead Schuil (tee-vee-i’-heed-skil) n. primary school in Teviothead, which taught pupils up to the end of Primary 5. There was informal teaching there earlier, but the teacher’s salary was not established until 1803. Mr. Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ (brother of Hawick schoolmaster Christopher) was master there in the early 1800s. When the Presbytery refused to allow Tom Jenkins to take over as teacher, the smithy was converted for his use (about 1815–18), with him having as many as 45 pupils and the official school just 4. The parish-appointed schoolmaster at that time was a Mr. Elliot. When Jenkins left, the new schoolmaster for the district was Simon Little, who was there until at least 1861. It was referred to as a ‘side-parochial school’ in 1839 and was run by Hawick and Cavers Parishes together. There were more than 30 pupils in the 1830s. The school closed in 2004, with the pupils being transferred to Drumlanrig.

Teviot Kirk (tee-vee-i’-kirk) n. Teviot Parish Church, being a new name for St. George’s, adopted in 1988, and having links with Roberton.

Teviot Lodge (tee-vee-i’-loj, -luj) n. house that stood on the eastern part of the site of the present High School until shortly after WWII. It was built for the Dickson family, Miss Dickson being owner in 1824 and William Dickson living there in the mid-19th century. It was later the home of Col. William Scott Elliot. It was the first house in Hawick with electric lighting, installed by William Elliot (with the assistance of William Melrose), using 2 copper wires in porcelain insulators, running all the way from his factory at Tower Mill (across the roofs of houses, etc.). An ingenious mechanism allowed Elliot to operate a sluice at the mill so that the lights went off when he was ready for bed. And it was also arranged for signals to be sent by morse code between the house to the mill. A billiard room was added to designs by J.P. Alison in 1890. The daughters of Col. Elliot gifted the house and grounds to the school in 1933. It was used for a while as a nursery, and as the headquarters of the Women’s Voluntary Services Organisation during WWII, while the gardens became part of the ‘dig for victory campaign’ and the riverside lawn was used for games. The house was demolished in the 1950s to make way for the High School science buildings and gymnasium, built around 1960. Wood’s 1824 map shows its location and the lay-out of the grounds. A bungalow built at the corner of the site in the 1970s was given the same name.

Teviot Mill (tee-vee-i’-mil) n. hosiery factory in Weensland, built by Walter Wilson in the 1850s, on a piece of ground that had formerly belonged to John Oliver & Sons. The premises of Walter Wilson & Sons there made hosiery and tweeds. It later was associated with Sime, Williamson & Co. and Kenway & Co. Part of the mill was used for a while as barracks during WWI (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Teviot Parish (tee-vee-i’-pa-ree) n. Teviot Parish Church, being the name used for what was St. George’s Church, with a connection to Roberton.

Teviot Place (tee-vee-i’-plis) n. street name used in the mid-19th century, presumably the same as one of the other similarly named streets.

Teviot Raw (tee-vee-i’-raw) n. Teviot Row, street alongside the river in the Weensland area, previously named simply ‘Weensland’, renamed when houses were constructed in 1872 and demolished when considered unsafe in 1968.

Teviot Road (tee-vee-i’-röd) n. road along the Teviot, parallel to the High Street, leading from Teviot Crescent to the foot of the Mill Port. The houses were developed from 1824, and on Wood’s map of that year it is labelled ‘New Projected Street’. Previous to that it was a roughly 3 foot wide cobbled path, close to the water level, which was dangerous in high water, and connected the foot of Walter’s Wynd with the Round Close. In the 1830s there was a proposal to build a High Street bypass along the riverside here, together with a bridge to the Sandbed, linking with the New Road, but this never transpired. During the construction of Pringle’s Rodono Mills in the 1950s and 1960s there was extensive demolition of old buildings and closes around the bottom of the Round Close, with replacement by the path and steps. After Rodono was demolished the ground was cleared in 1980, part being grassed over and part being used as a car park. The Health Centre was built there in 1989.

Teviotside (tee-vee-i’-síd) n. poetic name for the banks of the Teviot – ‘As I came in by Teviotside, And by the Braes of Brauxholm, There I spied a bonny lass; She was both neat and handsome’ [CPM], ‘Welcome Spring’s return’d again, Trees bud, flowers deck the plain, Birds their former notes do strain, Among the woods of Tievotside’ [BY], ‘By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’ [AB], ‘No place could be so dear to me As Bonnie Teviotside’ [RHL], ‘No pen or brush can e’er describe The beauty of the Teviotside’ [JCa], ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide’ [IWL].

Teviotside Foondry (tee-vee-i’-foon-dree) n. former premises of James Melrose & Sons on the east side of Commercial Road, adjacent to the Victoria Laundry.

Teviotside House (tee-vee-i’-síd-hoos) n. former private school at 1 Teviotside Terrace (then a corner house on North Bridge Street), run by Mrs. Dumbreck from 1865 until the 1870s. It was a school for girls, but also took in small boys, one of them being Sir Thomas Henderson. It was continued by her daughters, Euphemia and Katherine, and perhaps also by the Misses Mitchell into the 1880s.

Teviotside Road (tee-vee-i’-síd-röd) n. name used for the south side of Commercial Road before it was officially named in 1884.

Teviotside Terrace (tee-vee-i’-síd-te-ris) n. short one-sided street off North Bridge Street, being the back of some houses on Dovecote Street, built around 1875. The Dumbrecks had a school for girls here on the corner from about 1865, called ‘Teviotside House’, which was presumably the origin of the name (with the street not actually very close to the Teviot).

Teviot Square (tee-vee-i’-skwär) n. former name for the Sandbed, or the western or central parts, in use between about 1847–57 (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory). The name had been officially changed by the Council, but was never very popular – ‘...An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Teviot Stane (tee-vee-i’-stän) n. source of the Teviot, reached by walking about 2½ miles over the moorland from where the road ends at Merrylaw farm. It was once the extremity of Cavers Parish, before being transferred to Teviothead in 1850. There was once a large stone there, said to be 4 feet high and ‘thickly studded with initials’, but broken into fragments, probably in the 19th century. An inscribed boulder was erected there by the Callants’ Club in 1931 – ‘...And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-stone to Eskdale moor’ [SWS], ‘Does your memory, Teviot, wake, To your birth by Teviot Stone’[RSC], ‘Near to the stream that with pellucid wave, From Teviot stone flows to the Tweed’s fair breast . . . ’[JCG], ‘And Teiot Stane pinpointed wi a dab o’ jeely . . . ’[DH], ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘Teviotsane’; it is it is ‘Trots Stane’ in 1649; it is marked ‘Tiot-stane’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Tiot stain’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Teviot Tweed (tee-vee-i’-tweed) n. tweed merchants located at 17 High Street (or equivalently the Round Close) around 1906 (the name seems like an oxymoron).

Teviot Viaduct (tee-vee-i’-vI-a-dukt) n. another name for the Station Viaduct.

tew (tew) v., arch. to toughen leather, to toughen or shrivel in cooking, to tire, wear out (see also tewed).
tew-airn (tew-ārn) n., arch. the iron plate in which a blacksmith’s belows is fitted, the nozzle through which the blast passes into a blacksmith’s fire (also written ‘tew-arn’ and ‘to-airn’).

tewd (tewd) pp., adj., arch. shrivelled, sapless (said of fruit) – ‘...whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd and rizzert’ [ECS], toughened, worn out – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, bit limber an lither’ [ECS] (see twew).

the Text House (θne-twks-t-hoos) n. building at 3 Main Street, Denholm, bearing the inscriptions ‘All was others all will be others’ and ‘Tak tent in time ere time be tint’, just like houses on Hawick High Street. The house was apparently originally built in the 18th century by Thomas Turnbull, as one of 5 houses constructed for his 5 sons. It was demolished in 1910 and rebuilt by Dr. John Haddon, with the texts inspired by the ones in Hawick.

textiles (tek-stils) n., pl. the industry that has been the mainstay in Hawick for more than 300 years. It began with hand knitting, while frame knitting was introduced around 1680, carpet weaving from the early 1750s and hosiery became commercialised by John Hardie in 1771. In 1728 the Board of Manufactures set up a person in Hawick (as well as 9 other towns), to sort, staple and wash coarse, tarred wool. In 1777 there were stated to be about 65 looms in the Town, manufacturing a range of linen and woollen products, and by 1820 Hawick had about half of Scotland’s frames. Cloth manufacturing began in about 1787. By the early 19th century there was also manufacturing of blankets and gloves. The first cloth to be made in Hawick was a coarse blue variety, which was sent to Leeds for finishing. Tweed grew to prominence from the 1830s, the blue variety, which was sent to Leeds for finishing. thiefs (theefz) n., pl. thieves (an example of the use of a different plural form in Hawick).

the Thief’s Hole (thu-theefs-hōl) n. name used to describe Hawick jail, which was a room in the old tollbooth, partly below ground level. Part of Jedburgh Jail formerly had the same name (also known as the Rogues’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Thief’s Hole Sike (theefs-sik) n. stream that rises to the west of Barnes Loch and joins the Gate Burn just before it crosses the road at the Trountlawford (the origin of the name is unclear; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Thief’s Road (thu-theefs-rōd) n. popular name for an ancient hill track, part of which leads from Dod farm over to Hermitage Castle and was used by Mary Queen of Scots when she visited Boswell. It was also the name for the road leading across Woll Rig, perhaps a continuation of the same trail. Note that ‘the Maiden’s Way’ may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o' The Roan Scartit in wi' a pencil’ [DH] (also called the ‘Thief Road’; it may be the ‘Thewesrode’ mentioned in an English document of 1255 listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots).

Thief’s Sike (theefs-sik) n. stream that rises on Thiefsike Head, to the south of Hermitage Castle, and flows near Hartsgarth to join the Hermitage Water. On the west bank there is a turf building with a knocking-stone. On the eastern side there are the remains of a township, containing about 10 buildings, along with field systems and rig lines. This is probably the settlement of ‘Brocol’ shown on Blaeu’s c.1654 atlas, which was abandoned by the early 17th century. A little higher up are the remains of shieling huts, as well as cairns and cultivation terraces (also written ‘Thief Sike’).

thieftously (theef-tis-lee) adv., arch. thievously, clandestinely, by stealth – ‘... and thieftouslie stealing and away taking out of her house ...’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis scheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteouslie ...’ [BR1640] (also theftously).

thief (thift) n., arch. theft – ‘... or that comitts greitere thifht, sal be banyshit the town, and lose thir freedom for ever’ [BR1640], ‘... that the said Bailie Ruecastle was guiltie of Sacrifice, Thift, and with most opprobrious speeches and names ...’ [PR1718], ‘For out o’ the hait proccede ill thochts, murders, advoutiers, furnacions, thists, false-wutness, blasphemies’ [HSR].

Thistlestone (thil-stān) n. former lands listed in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693. It is listed among the lands in upper Teviotdale that were once part of the Lordship of Ringwoodfield, hence presumably this is not ‘Thistlestone’.

thi’ll’ve (thi-luv) contr. they’ll’ve, they will have.

thimbler (thim-blur) n., arch. a thimblerigger, someone who runs a shell game – ‘A fiddler is here, and a thimbler is there, Wi’ nut-men and spice-men at Copshawholm Fair’ [DA].
thimble thimble (thi-mul) n. a thimble, a foxglove flower (probably the more common local form; see also thummlie; see also thimbles).

thimblefi (thi-mul-fi) n. a thimbleful – ’No, no, just a thimbleful’. It manna gaun tae ma heid or Aw’ll no’ can tell ma story’ [JEDM].

Thimble Haa (th-mul-haw) n. former name for a building in Hawick, also known as ‘Tummel Haa’ (noted by G. Watson).

thimble (thi-mul) n., pl., arch. the foxglove, Digitalis pupurea.

thing (thing) n., arch. amount, quantity, extent – ‘I understand little thing can be brought against you o’ this day’s mischief’ [RW], sort, kind (almost used as a suffix) – ‘I’ve some mair paper, but it’s no sic guid thing as that’ [JAHM], ‘Wad ye like some black ink, or some blue thing?’ [JAHM], ‘Mask iz a pickl new thing’ [ECS], ‘The broon thing’s mair uise as the yallih’ [ECS], pl. matters, duties, etc. – ‘Ee’ll finnd ee’ve other thing adae’ [ECS] (these senses not common in English; also hing).

thingubeed (thing-u-beed) n. a thingumabob, someone or something temporarily forgotten (thingubby and thingummy are also used, as well as the English ‘thingummy’).

thingubby (thing-a-bee) n. something whose name is not known or forgotten, a thingummy, thingumajig, whatsit – ’A hink wass’s ‘ei’s name din eet, thingubby, frae up the Loan’, ‘Thing-a-bee, thing-a-beet, thing-a-meet, etc., is a substitute for the name of a person or thing unknown or temporarily forgotten. Cf. Gen. Scottish thingumob, thingiment, etc.; English thingummy’ [ECS], ‘As ee get older ee yaise that a lot mair, thingubby, thingubby, thingubby!’ [ME], adj. whatchamacallit, descriptive word which temporarily cannot be recalled – ’it was aa thingubby, ee ken?’ (also written ‘thing-a-bee’; perhaps used more frequently than ‘thingummy’ when referring to a person rather than a thing).

Thinside Hill (thin-síd-hil) n. hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the north of Hartsgarth. There are many enclosures and some springs marked there.

thir (thir) pron. there – ‘thir’s only the twae o oo left’, ‘thir must be somethin guid aboot Gala, shairly?’ (something closer to the standard English pronunciation is used for the adv., adj. and interj. forms).

thir (thir) pron., arch. these – ‘…before yir witnesses, John Scot Bailzie, Robert Denis, surgeoune, George Scot, James Morlaw, and Robert Nilhag’ [JW1558], ‘When ‘thir’ is used absolutely without a noun following, it generally becomes ‘thirs’; ‘Thirs is meyne’’ [JAHM], ‘Booajdardt, Hundlie, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last’ [CPM], ‘Thirs is mine, thae’s (= those are) yours, but whae’s aucht thon yins?’ [GW], common in the legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘Be it kend til al men be thir present lettris, me David Scot of the Bukcluh …’ [SB1470], ‘…before thir witness, Thomas Glendynwyn, Alexander Scot …’ [SB1510/1], ‘…before thir witnessis, …Walter Scot of gordelandis, Walter Scot of Tuschelaw, and Johne Watsoun, with vtheris diverse’ [SB1574], ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir bulls in stok …’ [PR1627], ‘I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me be thir presents …’ [BR1701], ‘We by thir presents binds and obliesses us and our successors in the office of beylaurie and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke …’ [HAST1902], adj., arch. these – ‘Quo’ Johnie, I’d rather in England die, Ere thir sax sheep gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me’ [CPM], ‘But wha comes neir, wi’ statelye stryde? Wha is thir gentil twa?’ [WiSp], ‘…thir braes hed seen unco sichts’ [ECS], ‘The wund and the rain’s been roarin’ Thir twae nicthts and mair …’ [DH], used specifically for foods – ‘…to which a collective significance is attached by the prefixing of a plural demonstrative or other adjective, as thir kail (= these kale)’ [ECS] (sometimes plural; there is more common).

Thirat (thee-raw) n. Pierre Louis (b.1776/7) French Napoleonic prisoner of war located in Hawick. From Oranienbaum, he was an Ensign and midshipman of the Atlante. He was taken prisoner in Catalonia in 1810, taken to Leith in 1811 and from there ended up in Hawick. He was probably housed along with other officers at Slitrig Cottage. He painted ‘View of St. Mary’s’ (1813), which shows where the prisoners lived. He may also have painted other local scenes. He may have been released as part of a prisoner exchange.

thirl (thi-rul) v., arch. to bind in servitude, to be bound or under obligation – ‘they were thirled ti the mill, meanin they hed ti git their corn ground there’, ‘...and thereby what corns shall grow on the lands disposed, are thrilled to Roughheugh mill, and pay the ordinary thirldues’ [DCW1741], ‘Langsyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thrilled to ane, an’ a’ within The legal boon ... ’ [FL].

thirlage (thir-leej) n., arch. the state of being thrilled, usually applied by rule of the landowner to his tenants. It was part of the feudal structure which tied a farmer to a particular mill – ‘...whereby these Baillies created a sort of thirlage that drew all the drinking to their own houses’ [C&L1780].

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stän) n. ruined tower and surrounding area in the Ettrick valley, a mile or so north-east of the village of Ettrick. It was once the seat of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who became the Lords Napier of Merchiston and Ettrick, which included the Lord Napier who once resided at Wilton Lodge. They gained the lands in the early 1500s from the Laird of Cranston-Riddell, although there is a John Scott of Thirlestane mentioned in 1483 (when he became Baron of the half barony of Wilton). There is a record in 1493 of cattle and horses being stolen from Thirlestain Mains. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey; in 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Northhouse for his fee. This continued in the inheritance of the lands and titles of his grandfather by Walter Scott in 1533/4 (and at that time the lands were jointly valued with Northhouse at £20 Scots), as well as his grandson Sir Walter in 1564 and the next Sir Walter in 1574. These lands were raided by a group of 160 Armstrongs in 1543. The pre-eminence of the Thirlestane branch of the Scotts and ownership of the lands has a complex (and debated) history through the 17th century; the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ was used by 3 separate families (one probably for the lands of the same name west of Yetholm). Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these lands from the Commaundator of Melrose in about 1620 and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653 and 1661, when held (perhaps just the superiority) by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was listed among the principal houses of Selkirkshire in an account of 1649. The Laird of Thirlestane’s lands in Selkirkshire were valued at more than £3000 in 1678. The L-plan tower stood on the left-bank of the Thirlestane Burn, north-west of the later farmhouse. The tower was burned by the English in 1544, although rebuilt. It contains a lintel stone with the initials ‘R. S. M. C.’ for Robert Scott and Margaret Cranston. The nearby house was built by the Napiers, partly using stones from the tower; however, it was demolished in the 1960s to avoid death duties. The estate passed to George Walker in the late 18th century and then to Richard Brack. The mill lade there was still visible in the late 19th century. It should not be confused with the castle near Lauder of the same name, or the area near Yetholm – ‘Proud she looked round, applause to claim – Then lightened Thirlestane’s eye of flame; His bugle Watt of Harden blew, Pen-sils and pennons wide were flung, To Heav’n the Border slogan rung, ‘Saint Mary for the young Buccleuch!’ [SWS], ‘Wher Ettrick wandirs down a plain, With lofty hills belay’t, The staitly towirs of Thirlestane With wundir hee surveyt’ [ES] (also written ‘Thirlestane’; ‘Thyrleston maiori’ stream and ‘Thyrlestangate’ are recorded in a charter around 1236; it is ‘Thirslane’ in 1524, ‘Thyr-lstone’ in 1533, ‘Thiristine’ in 1550 and 1553/4, ‘Thirllstone’ in 1557, ‘Thirllstane’ in 1564, ‘Thyrllstone’ in 1599, ‘Thyrllstaine’ in 1661, ‘Thirs-toun’ and ‘Thirse-stoune’ in 1670, ‘Thiristine’ and ‘Thirsestone’ in c.1680, ‘Thirsestone’ in 1690 and ‘Thirsestone’ in 1695; it is marked ‘Thirse-stane’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Thırllstaine’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and is ‘Thirsestone’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is presumably a reference to the ‘mill-stone’ to which tenants were ‘thirled’).

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stän) n. Thirlestane Castle, a turretted edifice of red sandstone, near Lauder, overlooking the Leader Water. The central section was built about 1590, then rebuilt in the 17th century and enhanced around 1840. It was the seat of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, and is now owned by a charitable trust and open to the public (the only connection with ‘Thirlestane’ in the Ettrick valley was the origin of the name).

Thirlestone (thi-rul-stän) n. farm near Yetholm, just to the north of Yetholm Loch. In 1661 the lands here were purchased from Sir Andrew Ker by James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. James Scott was thus the first Laird of Thirlestane in Berwickshire, who are not directly related to the Scotts of Thirlestane in the Ettrick valley. James’ son William Scott was the 2nd Laird. It was said that a member of this family was a physician and distinguished chemist to Charles II, whose laboratory here was called the Warlock Room. William Scott-Kerr sold the lands and the house was demolished in the early 19th century.

Thirlwall (thi-rul-wal) n. John ‘the elder’ (14th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley and ‘Grenhowe’ (possibly Greenholm) in Liddesdale in 1365, when Edward III bestowed protection on his tenants there. The suggestion is that he had acquired lands that had once been part of the Conyn holdings in southern Scotland. His seat was at Thirlwall Castle in Northumbria, near the eastern end of Hadrian’s Wall.

thirs (thir) thirsel (thir-sel) pron., pl. themselves – ‘Keep thum be thirsel’ [ECS] (used as a collective plural; cf. theirsel).

the Thirteen Drifty Days (thu-ther-teen-drif-tee-dáz) n. popular name for a great snowstorm of early 1674 in which the snow fell continuously for 13 days. In the higher parts of southern Scotland whole flocks of sheep were lost, as related by the Ettrick Shepherd. It is said that many shepherds made walls from piles up the dead sheep in order to give some shelter to the living. As much as 90/Scotland perished. The winter weather began in January, and never really let up until the end of March, with the 13 days themselves beginning on 20th February (although there is some confusion over the dates). The Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch obtained a special licence in 1675 to import 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland.

the Thirty Shillin Haugh (thu-ther-ee-shi-ln-hawf) n. former name for an area of flat ground around the Hermitage Water near the old tower of Park.

this (this) adj. this, in distinction to ‘next’ (for example, on a Saturday, ‘this Mondi’ would be in 2 days, while ‘next Mondi’ would be 9 days away).

this day . . . (this-dá) pron., arch. phrases such as ‘this day ten days’ mean ‘10 days from today’ – ‘The minister told us that God willing he intended to administer the Sacrament of ye supper of our Lord this day twenty days, being the thirs Sabbath of October . . .’[PR1720].

this efternin (thu-sef-tur-nin) n., adv. this afternoon – ‘where er oo gaun this efternin?’ (treated as though it is the sefternin’ in analogy with ‘the night’, ‘the day’, ‘the morn’, etc.; sometimes shortened to the sef).

This is no my ain Hoose (this-iz-no-nil-än-hoos) n. tune that is in the repertoire of the Drums and Fifes, and sometimes played on picking night. The tune is also known as ‘Colonel David Stewart of Garth’s Reel’ and is played as a strathspey reel throughout Scotland. It is recorded from at least the early 18th century and Bonnie Prince Charlie is supposed to have danced to it before the Battle of Prestonpans (also called ‘Oh! This is no my ain Hoose’).

thistledoon (thi-sul-dooin) n. thistledown, a soft fluffy yarn used for luxury knitwear garments, called after the silky down or pappus inside the head of a thistle – ‘...An’ oor cashmeres an’ angoras An’ oor thistledoon lambswoo’’ [WL], ‘...Her step as licht as the thistle-doon, Wi’ easy grace she gaed dancin’ room’’[WL].

Thistlesike (thi-sul-sik) n. farm in Liddesdale, just south of Mangerton, on the opposite bank of the Liddel. It is on the Trysting Sike, and with the forest there known as Thistlesike Plantation. It is probably associated with the place known as ‘Sisselscheillis’ on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Alexander Armstrong.

the Thistly Bog (thu-thi-su-le-boo) n. former name for a boggy area somewhere to the north of the Wooburn. It is unclear if it was part of Threephead Moss or further north. Some regarded the syke leading from here to the Woo Burn as part of the boundary of Wilton Common, but there was disagreement. As described in 1764, this was the location of a dispute between Walter Scott of Harden and Walter Scott of Burnfoot, with Harden having peats cast there, Burnfoot having the peats thrown back into the hole or broken up, leading to some kind of court case over the boundaries of Wilton Common – ‘...never knew any attempt, by any party having interest in the common, to assume the Thistly-bog, or any of the ground to the north of the Wooburn, as a part of the common’[DCW1765].

thit (thii, thit) pron. that – ‘it was efter that thit aa moved ti Hawick’, ‘...thit there’s nae where else on earth it that moment, they wud rither be’[IHS] (only pronounced this way in certain contexts; see also that).

thits (thitz) contr. that’s – ‘...it’s that spirit thit’s instilled in oor bairns, the next generation o’ Teries, a love for song n’ poetry thit nae other toon can boast’[IHS].

tho (tho, tho) prep. though – ‘A was right tho’, ‘she’s a right affront tho’, ‘Hei cam tui, an ralied, tho, an away ei birrilt . . .’[ECS], ‘Note, too, that thee (or thoh) is used for although, though, notwithstanding, however, for which we use also for aa’ [ECS] (also written ‘thoh’; commonly used in conversation at the ends of sentences; note the short o and the common th instead of the standard English th).

thocht (thocht) n., arch. a thought, act of thinking – ‘Sic a thocht! Na’ never fear ye ...’ [RH], ‘The thocht o’ what’ll Hawick folk say Aye strengthened heart and hand’ [RH], ‘...Nor gi’e a thocht to the awfu’ clours, That may empty oor saddles ere lang’ [JBB], ‘The thocht o’ hills an’ brattlin’ burns Where grows the heather bell, lassie’ [FL], ‘Ohi! mony a fond whisper and soul cheering thocht ...’ [JJ], ‘...Their thochts wull often backward stray Ti Hawick their Border hame’ [IW], a pinch, small quantity – ‘Gie’s a thocht o’ saut’ [GW], a moment – ‘Wait a thocht’ [GW], pp., arch. thought, past tense of ‘think’ – ‘...That he heard Sammel Rutherford say, that he thocht nane had his purs bot he ...’ [BR1642], ‘If anyobody hed eyed iz, he’d heh thocht A was shuir ready for Bowden!!’ [ECS], ‘An’ aw thocht o’ a wumman, A’d kent a ma life ...’ [IJ], ‘But then oor luck began tae turn We thocht we’d try yon wee bit burn ...’ [DH], ‘He thocht, wi the fog, he’d better bide the nicht there ...’ [DH] (used for either the past tense or past participle; cf. thawt and thocht).

thochtish (thocht-teesli) adj., arch. thoughtful.
thochtless (thocht-lis) adj., poet. thoughtless – ‘The thochtless heart, the careless fit, An’ hurts the chaps that has nae wit ...’ [FL].
thochtlessly (thocht-lis-lee) adv., poet. thoughtlessly – ‘Maist folk are apt to keep in shoals, An’ thochtlessly sail wi’ the stream ...’ [FL].
thockit (tho-kee), -ki’ pp., poet. panted, breathed heavily with exertion – ‘His toothless gans they fell abreide, He thockyt and he blew’ [JTe].

Thoftcotys (thoft-kots) n. former place name in the Borthwick valley, occurring in a document of 1410, when the Regent conferred lands there and at ‘Borthwic’ on Sir William of Borthwick, on their resignation by Robert Scott. The lands are suggested to be at Hosocate, perhaps being an earlier version of the name, or just part of those lands (the name may be a rare local example of the Middle English root ‘toft’, meaning a homestead, unless it is the same as the earlier Yrostilecots; it seems likely that this was a variant of Hosocate, with the transcription of the ‘s’ for ‘f’).

thole (thól) v., arch. to endure, tolerate, suffer, undergo, bear – ‘...His beating heart could hardly thole, For thinking on her beauty’ [JR], ‘And O, for blessings, never threshe, If ye wadna the brydie thole ...’ [JTe], For she’ll ride ye post to the clutye deil, And he to the reikye hole’ [JTe], ‘’Tis love, and beauty, and the glass, Makes lifetime worth the tholin’’ [JoHa], ‘...Then where’s the rain we canna thole ...’ [JoHa], ‘Tho’ hard tae thole, they seldom last, That’s ae guid thing about them!’ [IJ], ‘...he sall nevir thole the rich teous til be muvet’ [HSR], ‘...while I thole thy terrers I am distraucht’ [HSR], ‘...Thinks little o’ the friendless form Maun thole the Winter’s cauld’ [JT], ‘Though hard to thole, there’s yet a hole, We awe get creepin’ out’ [DA], ‘I couldn’ thole the cauld hearth stane That doorway that is not’ [JEDM], ‘...And set it in the sun to dry – The waiting o’t he scarce could thole’ [WFC], ‘He’d better hae tholed wi’ a half toom wame ...’ [WL], ‘Nor can I thole their smack-bar wit, Their bowlers and their brilliantine ...’ [DH], ‘...and that she’ll just hev to thole, and hope it wadna be snittal’ [DH], to allow, suffer – ‘Jesus answirin’ said untill him, Thole it til be sae now’ [HSR] (from Old English; see also tholit).

tholemuiddy (thól-mi-dee) adj., arch. long-suffering, patient, pensive, gloomy – ‘...thae thochts help iz ti cast ma dowth, thole-muiddy thocht’.

tholit (thól-lee), -li’ pp., arch. endured – ‘Becaus for thy sak’ I hae tholit reproch: shaem hiveret my fece’ [HSR], ‘He tholit nane man til do thame wrang ...’ [HSR].

Thom (tóm, tom) n. James (d.1874) Superintendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer Corps and helped found the Lodge St. James. He was appointed as Curator of the Society’s Museum collection in June 1957. Also in 1857 he read a paper at the Archeological Society on ‘the Noachian Deluge’ and donated a collection of coins. In 1861 he donated a large axe-head, found at Northhouse, to the Museum.

Thomas of Wilton see de Wilton

Thomas the Rhymery (to-mís-thu-rí-mur) n. (c.1210–c.1290) Thomas Learmonth, Laird of Erclidoun (an old name for Earlston). Although he certainly existed, little detail is known of his life, which has been heavily romanticised. He may have been born in Earlston, where a fragment of his tower remains. His name occurs as ‘Thoma Rimor de Erclidun’ when he witnessed Thomline (Tom-lin) n. Alexander (1781-1827) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Jean Smith. He was a slater and glazier on the Cross Wynd, listed there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Janet Crawford and their children included: William (d.1808); Robert (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); William (again, b.1811); and Alexander (b.1812). His wife could be the widow ‘Tomline’ recorded keeping lodgings on the Cross Wynd according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. Alexander ‘Alex’ (19th C.) first Treasurer of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Andrew (b.1792/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. On the 1841 census he was living on Underdamside with ‘Tibby’, who was probably his mother. George (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register. James (b.c.1770s) spinner at Roughheugh according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James (19th C.) inspector of the poor in Hawick in the late 1800s. He also served as a student teacher in St. Mary’s School. He was also Registrar in Hawick in the early years of the 20th century. John (18th C.) woollen manufacturer of Hawick, in partnership with William. Since his name is given first he was presumably the older brother. They are described in David Loch’s 1778 book on Scottish trade as ‘dyers and clothiers’ who ‘have considerable business at present, and they have a brother in Glasgow instructing as to the making of clothes fit for that market, and how to use woad in dying of blues & c.’ There are records of help given to them in 1779 by the Board of Trade for Manufactures, instructing them how to use a woad vat. In 1780 he and William were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. The company operated as dyers and finishers in the old Roughheugh waulk mill until they sold it to the Inkle Company in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a casa that still exists. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh’ in Wilton Parish, valued at £22 6s, and another piece of Roughheugh valued at £9. He and William were still recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langleys’ on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. The family had been known as ‘Thomline of that Ilk’ and had long resided in Wilton, with their main residence near ‘the Nifton’. However, all trace of the family and its original home had disappeared by the 20th century. He is probably the John who married Mary Ekron in Wilton in 1772 and whose children included: Isabel (b.1773); Andrew (b.1775); James (b.1776); Jean (b.1778); John (b.1784); Andrew (again, b.1786); and William (b.1788). His wife was probably daughter of James Ekron and Isobel Betty Richardson. John (d.1849) Hawick stockingmaker who was presumably related to the old Wilton family. He is probably the John recorded on the 1841 census at the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children John and George. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810. He married Helen Scott and their son George was baptised in Hawick in 1825. Thomas (b.c.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard, on Silver Street in 1851 and by 1861 was at 48 Loan. His wife was Isobel and children included Jean (or Janet), James, Alexander, Robert, John, Ralph, Christian and James (again). Walter (b.c.1770) dyer in Wilton. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hinshelwood (or ‘Hanselwood’). In 1841 he was living at Underdamside with his wife Betty. Their children included: Jane (b.1793); and Nancy (b.1807). He is probably the ‘Walter Tomlin’ whose child died in Hawick in 1798. In 1851 his widow Betty and son William were living on Underdamside with the family of John Peacock, his son-in-law. William (18th C.) partner with John in an early wool dyeing business at the Waulk Mill in Wilton. He was probably younger brother of John. In 1780 he and John were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. He and John were recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1766. Their children included: Agnes (b.1767); Jean (b.1769); Andrew (b.1770); and Walter (b.1771). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled ‘Thom-sin’). A portrait of him exists. Adam (15th C.) resident of Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Rev. Adam (1813–74) born in Coldstream, he was son of Dr. Adam, minister there, who was instrumental in abolishing the monopoly on publication of the Bible in Scotland. In 1833 he became assistant and successor of Rev. Henderson at the East Bank Church in Hawick, having also been called to Dumnoon. He was recorded living at the East Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He suffered from ill-health, spending 6 month periods in Europe in both 1852 and 1856. However, he remained as minister for 28 years, resigning in 1860 and leaving for Sydney, Australia the following year. There he became the first Moderator of the General Assembly of New South Wales. Before his departure there was a special soirée was held, attended by almost all the local ministers. He was there presented with an illuminated address bearing the Burgh Seal, signed by the Magistrates and about 800 others, as well as other gifts, including a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica from J.A.H. Murray on behalf of the citizens of Hawick. For the last 2 years of his life he was Principal of St. Andrew’s College in Sydney. He published several sermons while minister in Hawick, including ‘A pastoral memorial; discourses . . . ’ (1860). His sister Elizabeth married John Wilson, manufacturer of Ladylaw, while another sister, Isabella, married Army Paymaster James M. Green and has a memorial obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery. He married Helen Ritchie Wilson (1819–53), daughter of hosiery manufacturer Peter. Their children were Adam, Mary (who married James Hogg) and Helen (who married James Fell). He later remarried. A memoir ‘Life and Ministry of Rev. Adam Thomson, D.D.’ was written by his son-in-law Rev. P. Landreth. A portrait of him exists. Adam (19th C.) married Jessie Affleck in Hawick in 1849. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and is also recorded there in the early 1700s. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for William...

Scott in Whitchesters in 1696. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant in Whitchesters (as well as Robert Scott, the other witness). He was attested to be tenant in about 1710 in the evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. William Wilson was his servitor in 1712 when rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. He witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1713. He is probably the Alexander, married to Marion Armstrong, whose children born in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1683) and John (b.1685). He was deceased in 1719 and ‘sometimes tenent in Whitchesters’ when his daughter Agnes married John Scott (tenant in Hawickshiel). Alexander (d.bef. 1777) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Cathrae, who died in hawick in 1777. Rev. Alexander McInroy (d.1897) licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1888, he was assistant at St. Clement’s in Dundee and then ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick in 1889. He resigned his position in 1894. Allan (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 document, where a number of people were accused of over-charging interest on loans. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who married Marion Brown in 1722. He may also have married in 1721, with the bride’s name not recorded. His children included Robert (b.1723), Mary (b.1726) and Adam (b.1729). Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish, probably distinct from ‘Dand’. His children included Margaret (b.1719), James (b.1721), John (b.1723), John (again, b.1727), John (again, b.1729), William (b.1731) and Robert (b.1734). Andrew (b.1716/7) workman of Hawick, chosen as one of the 6 representative Burgess in 1767 to define the boundaries of the Common. He may be the Andrew, son of John, born in Wilton Parish in 1715. He could be the Andrew who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leithead and Marjory Thomson. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Riddell (who died in Hawick in 1781), with their daughter Betty baptised in 1758. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1738. Andrew (18th C.) cottar at Ashkirk Mill. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1745); and James (b.1749). Andrew (18th C.) married Isobel Mathieson in Castleton Parish in 1767. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Isabella was baptised in 1784. Andrew (18th C.) married Janet Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1774. Their children included William (b.1782). Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1763/4) farmer at Bewlie, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also had 6 farm horses in 1797 and paid the dog tax at Bewlie in the same year. He was probably the Andrew recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1787 when his marriage to Christian Usher was announced in Melrose Parish, with Andrew ‘Heiton’ as cautioner; she was daughter of John Usher of Toftfield. He was at Bewlie on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded as deceased in 1828 in a letter from James Usher, writer in Edinburgh, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection; this was either an error, or referred to his father perhaps. He was at Bewlie in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. In 1851 he was a retired farmer at Bewlie Mains, where his son John was farmer. His children probably included: Robert (b.1788); John (b.1789); Janet (b.1794); Thomas (b.1796); Betsy (b.1798); James (b.1800); William (b.1803); and Andrew (b.1806). Andrew (b.c.1770s) mason at Calaburn according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was probably related to mason John, who was at Calaburn in 1799 and 1801 and George, who was there in 1801. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1804); Helen (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); Archibald (b.1810); Jean (b.1814); and Janet (b.1816). He could be the Andrew who was a servant at Fairloans on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Andrew (b.c.1780) son to the tenant of Chapel (presumably George), he was recorded as ‘Lame of one of his thumbs’ on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. Probably the same Andrew was ploughman at Chapel according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when he was living in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side of Main Street. He was there with his children Helen, George, Esther and Andrew. He married Jean Harvey and their children included: Helen (b.1815); George (b.1817); and Andrew (b.1826), who farmed at Billerwell. Andrew (b.1783/4) farm worker in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a ‘Woodforester’ at Sandholm, living with his children Janet, Andrew, Jane and Mary. He married Margaret Common, who died before 1841. Andrew (1788/9–bef. 1861) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a road surveyor in Ewesdale. He was living at Brieryshaw in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Mary Riddell; she was a widow in 1851, and listed as ‘Fund Holder’ in 1861. Andrew (19th C.) architect who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Andrew was involved with the building of St. George’s Church in Hawick. Andrew (b.1800/1) born in Wilton, he was mill master at Roughheugh Mill in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Hobkirk Parish) and their children included: William (b.1829/30), born in South Leith; Margaret (b.1839/40), born in Edinburgh; and John (b.1841/2), also born in Edinburgh. Andrew (b.c.1810) millwright in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Melgund Place. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.c.1815) stockmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Fore Row with his mother Lizzy and brother Richard. He is recorded in Dunfries Jail in 1841 and Jedburgh Jail in 1843. Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was son of Andrew, who was also a forester, like him. In 1861 he was ‘Assistant Wood Forester’ at Sandholm. He married Margaret Elliot in 1849 and their children included: James (b.1850); Robert (b.1851); James (again, b.1852); Margaret (b.1854); John (b.1856/7); and Walter (b.1859/60). Andrew (b.1826) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of Andrew and Jean Harvey. He was tenant of Billerwell farm for about 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. He was at Billerwell in 1861 as farmer of 300 acres, employing 5 people, also living with his brother George and sister Helen. He married Janet Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1851. Their children included Margaret (b.1852/3), Jane (b.1854/5), Andrew (b.1856/7) and Mina (b.1859/60). He had a brother George and a sister Helen. Andrew (b.1832/3) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a policeman in Wilton. In 1861 he was ‘1st Class Constable, Roxburghshire Constabulary’, living at Under Hope Park. His wife was Helen and they had a son William (b.1861). Andrew (b.1834/5) son of shepherd Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became shepherd at Wigg on Wauchope farm. Like his father he was a strong supporter of Wolfelee Free Kirk. His children included: William, who was also a shepherd at Wigg; and Marianne. His wife died in 1904. Andrew (19th C.) framesmith at Robert Ewen’s factory, who left for Nottingham. He was a popular local singer. He is probably the Andrew listed as a millwright jourman at Melgund Place in 1841, with wife Agnes and children Walter and Elizabeth. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Wells in 1785, when she was working for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) listed in 1576 as a servant of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. There was a promise that he, as well as Martin Crozier in Bedrule, and Martin’s son Martin, should all refrain from theft. However, they were all declared rebels in 1578/9. Archibald (18th C.) married Christian Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1729. Archibald (16th C.) foreman at Dickson’s HasSENDeanburn nurseries around 1770. Benjamin (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1729 he witnessed baptisms for miller John Henderson, John Scott and Adam Kersel. Rev. Charles (1795–1871) born in Dalserf in 1795, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick in 1821 to be assistant for Rev. James Arkle of Hawick Parish. There appears to have been some dispute with the Duke of Buccleuch about his appointment, and he did not become Arkle’s successor. He was ordained at North Shields in 1823 and became minister of Wick in 1840, then went to the Free Church at the Disruption of 1843, serving at Wick until his retirement. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1825 in Hawick he married Janet, daughter of merchant Francis Ballantyne, and had 11 children. He visited Hawick in 1837, during the contested election, and gave evidence at the later investigation. He was mentioned in a poem by David Waters, suggesting he was locally an unpopular anti-Reform minister, and also claiming that involvement in vote rigging was the reason he failed to get support from the local aristocracy for a living – ‘...Or, maybe for a dainty kirk, As did his Reverend Frien’ o’ Shiels. – (Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, roguary and cunning...’)[RDW]. It was also said that by marrying the daughter of Ballantyne, he took some of the spoils that had been fraudulently extracted from Ballantyne’s former partner, ‘Auld Cash’ – ‘A black robed son of light – yclep’d a priest, Removed a load of guilt from off his breast, He wed his daughter and then shared the spoil Which half-way went to save Francisco’s soul’[RDW]. Christopher (d.1800) recorded as ‘Old Christophor’ in the Hawick death register. David (16th C.) recorded in North Synton in 1581/2. George Caverhill in Whitehaughbrae resigned to him a tenement in Selkirk. David L. son of Rev. Lyndsay, he was educated at Hawick High School. He then attended Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities. He is an evolutionary and environmental biologist and is Associate Professor at the University of Hong Kong. Douglas (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 64 High Street in the mid-1900s. He lived at 25 Wilton Hill. In 1947 thieves raided the house and used provisions they found inside to prepare a makeshift explosive, which they used to blow open a safe! Elizabeth (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when she was allowed to ‘compound’ for resetting ‘Joiffe Glenquhin’ (possible Geoffrey Glenholm), who had been involved in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. She is referred to as ‘in Corrisheuch’, which may be Corrie Sike in upper Teviotdale. However, it is unclear where she came from or how she may have been related to other Thomsons. She is recorded as ‘Besse Thomson’ in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick parishioner who died in the early 1700s. She left a ‘mortification’ to help the poor. The Session decided to enter her name in gilt letters on a big black board in the church, as a way of encouraging other donations; unfortunately this project used up all the money she had left! Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) baker in Newcastle-on-Tyne according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. She could be the Betty Thomson (or Little) who was a widow at about 17 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1800) baker on the Fore Raw, recorded on the 1841 census. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 2 pigs stolen from him there, by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it included Hasset Dean. The baptism of his daughter Bessie is recorded in Roberton in 1684 and had children including Isobel (b.1685) and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and James. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. George of Fodderlee (18th C.) husband of Margaret Kerr, from whom he probably inherited the half lands of Fodderlee. In 1788 (and continued in 1811) he is recorded as owner of the lands of Easter Fodderlee, valued at £80. His son was Robert. George (18th C.) married Janet Gordon in Ashkirk in 1759. George (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1776. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1791, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Perhaps the same George was also listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in the same year. He was still a servants at Weens in 1792. In 1794 he was a house servant at Larriston, still working for William Oliver. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapel in the 1787–1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He is probably the tenant in Chapel whose son Andrew is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. George (b.c.1780) mason at Calaburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was probably brother of Andrew and John, who were also masons at Calaburn in 1799 and 1801. George (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Cavers Knowes in 1841. In 1851 he was a gardener in Wilton, living at Wilton Kirk Style. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. His wife was Isabella (from Roberton) and their children included Helen, George, Walter, Margaret, Isabella and Elizabeth. Dr. George William (b.1818) son of Thomas and Anna Drummond from Midlothian. He was brother of Wyville Smith Thomson, who was minister at Cardross, Dunbartonshire. He became a doctor in Hawick with practice on the High Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a druggist on ‘Market Pl’ and as part of the partnership of ‘Graham & Thomson’, physicians on Buccleuch Street. However, in 1861 he is recorded living at 10 Buccleuch Street. In 1841 he married Margaret Lang from Dunfriesshire. His children included: George William; Margaret Cadenhead, who married William Scott Elliot; Walter Gowdie; John Lang; Thomas Drummond; Anna Drummond, who married John Turnbull Laing; Emma M.; and Wyville Smyth. He lived at 10 Buccleuch Street and at Northville, Bridge Street. George (b.1820/1) from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newhouses in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his brother Andrew and sister Helen. George (19th C.) married Margaret Beck in Wilton in 1853. George (19th C.) left Hawick in about 1869 and later became Provost in Johnstone in Renfrewshire. He was Provost there 1893–99. In 1897 he gifted to the Town an ornamental fountain, which was sited in Drumlanrig Square, to be replaced about 1910 with the more elaborate Brown Fountain. He attended the 1899 Common Riding, but was reported being in ill health later that year. Gideon (b.1684) son of Robert. In 1707 he and his father were witnesses for a baptism for James Renwick, undermiller at Newmill. Gifford (b.c.1780) servant at Haggiehaugh according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. The word ‘Gifford’ is also written, making it unclear which version of this unusual name was correct. Gilbert (18th C.) married Ann Laing in Hawick Parish in 1761. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) laundry maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Isobel (17th/18th C.) received recording money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel ‘Tibbie Tamson’ (d.1790) resident of Selkirk, said to be of weak intellect. She was accused of stealing yarn and hanged herself. According to local custom suicides could not be buried in consecrated ground, so her coffin was dragged to a place ‘where 3 lairds’ lands meet’, specifically the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Bowhill and the Burgh of Selkirk, just to the north of Selkirk on Fowlshiels Hill. She was interred there, with a rough gravestone placed there later to mark the spot. At Selkirk Common Riding a wreath is placed on her grave, which was marked with a plaque in 1990. There are similarities with the story of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ in Wilton. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Westburnflat. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. James (16th/17th C.) notary who in 1599 signed a bond for John Turnbull of Minto that was subscribed to between several Turnbulls at Barnhills. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children (with no mother’s name given) included Margaret (b.1632), Thomas (b.1635), Robert (b.1638), William (b.1641), an unnamed child (b.1644), Marion (b.1644), James (b.1647) and Bessie (b.1648). Perhaps the same James, married to Isobel Scott, had a daughter Jean (b.1652). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Nivison and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1659. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1679); James (b.1680); Christian (b.1683); Bessie (b.1686); and Andrew (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Gray and Robert Graham and in 1686 were Robert and George (who were probably related). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, who witnessed a baptism for Robert in 1687 and who witnessed another for Andrew Leyden in 1683. He is probably one of the Jameses recorded at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their son David was baptised in 1689. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Weensland in 1704. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their children included: David (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk; and Alexander (b.1704), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1704 were David Miller and Walter Paisley. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Scott in Bedrule in 1715. James (18th C.) married Jean Phaup in Minto in 1722. Their children probably included Matthew (b.1723), John (b.1726), Jean (b.1729), James (b.1731) and Gilbert (b.1734). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ashybank in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Ann (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, was probably also his child. James (18th C.) tenant at Midshiel. His daughter Christian married nursery-man Archibald Dickson. He could be the James who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard Turnbull, resident of Midshiel. James (1700–48) poet born at Ednam. He grew up at Southdean, 3rd son of Thomas, who was Minister there (and who apparently died during an exorcism at Wolfelee). He should not be confused with his more famous Hawick namesake! His family moved to Southdean just 8 weeks after his birth. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed to have been a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He may have attended Southdean Parish School, but certainly went to Jedburgh Grammar School. He was inspired by Rev. Robert Riccarton of Hobkirk. He was said to have been a mediocre scholar with an early interest in poetry, but he had a Presbytery Bursary in Arts and Divinity at Edinburgh University 1715–24; he was ‘Lowland Bursar’ for Hawick Parish for the last 4 of these years. He was patronised by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto, among other men, and spent some vacations at Minto. He also held lands at Wideopen, near Morebattle, inherited via his... mother. He published his first poems in the Edinburgh Miscellany in 1720. He moved to London in 1725, firstly working as tutor to the children of Charles Hamilton, Lord Binning. He got to know Scottish and English poets in London, as well as patrons, and made a literary career for himself there. Among his acquaintances was fellow Borderer and poet John Armstrong. The best known examples of his output are the words for ‘Rule Britannia’ and the much-revised epic poem ‘The Seasons’ (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’. However, his play ‘Sophonisba’ fared less well, with the line ‘Oh, Sophonisba! Sophonisba, oh!’ being satirised in the line ‘Oh, Jimmy Thomson! Jimmy Thomson, oh!’, which was apparently much better known than the play itself. He also had plays banned for being too political. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed to have been a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He moved from the centre of London to Richmond, Surrey, where he is buried. It is said that in later life he seldom went outside and spent much of his time in bed. He was also known for his drinking habits and was reckless with money. However, he helped 2 of his younger sisters set up a milliner’s shop in Edinburgh and funded medical treatment for his younger brother John. He was said to speak in a strong Scots brogue all his life. In his 40s he fell in love with a neighbour, and wrote her several letters, but his affections were not returned. Towards the end of his life he was given the sinecure of the General of Customs for the Leeward Islands, probably due to the influence of his patron, Frederick, Prince of Wales. His play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ was popular for several decades and his last major poetical work was ‘The Castle of Indolence’ (1748), a satire on himself and his circle of friends (with some joking that it was indolence that kept it from being finished!). He died at his house on Kew Foot Lane in Richmond after over-heating and then catching a chill; his friend John Armstrong attended his deathbed. He died in debt, but this was partially recovered through performances of his play ‘Coriolanus’, the publications of his ‘Works’ and the sale of his house and possessions. His house was long a place of literary pilgrimage, and later incorporated into Richmond Royal Hospital. The armchair in which he composed the ‘Castle of Indolence’ (being high-backed and made of beechwood, with a burn on one arm where it is said a candle fell while he was absorbed in his writing) was acquired by Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, factor at Wells; Elliott insisted that Burns sit in the chair during his brief visit to Wells House in 1787. A large hawthorn bush in a garden in Southdean was long regarded as being associated with the poet. There is a memorial obelisk to him overlooking Ednam, another memorial (‘Temple of the Muses’) on the Bass Hill of Dryburgh, erected by David Stuart Erskine, and a memorial window at Southdean Kirk, as well as a monument in Westminster Abbey. A portrait was painted of him in 1725 or 1726, an etching in about 1735 and another portrait in 1746. Erskine organised a memorial celebration for him, to which Burns was invited but sent lines of apology. There was also a bicentenary celebration at Ednam in 1900 – ‘So long, sweet poet of the year, Shall bloom that wreath thou well hast sown While Scotia, with exulting tear Proclaims that Thomson was her son’. A bi-centenary celebration with speeches etc. was held at Southdean Kirk in 1900 and a more extensive celebration in Ednam – ‘To thee, fair Jed! a holier wreath is due, Who gav’st thy Thomson all thy scenes to view, Bad’st forms of beauty on his vision roll, And mould to harmony his dutile soul’ [JL], ‘And Ednam’s Bard, whose beauty on his vision roll, And mould to harmony his dutile soul’ [JL]. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhill-shiel in 1721 and 1726. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: ‘Maury’ (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included Christian (b.1718), William (b.1721), Walter (b.1723) and Margaret (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their son James was baptised in 1725. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Deans and their children included Isobel (b.1726), George (b.1728), Robert (b.1730) and James (b.1732). James (18th C.) married Mary Elliot in Hawick in 1727. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hislop and their son John was baptised in 1728. James (18th C.) married Rachel Douglas in Wilton in 1731. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Welch, perhaps in 1734 (although no bride’s name is given). Their James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Nivison and their children included Elizabeth (b.1743) and William (b.1744).

James (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Turnbull and their children included Andrew (b.1752). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howceleuch in 1764. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Bettie (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (b.1764). James (18th C.) tenant farmer at Nether Ancrum. In 1778 he had a sasine for the lands of Fodderlee, following a disposition by Robert of Fodderlee, who must have been a near relative. In 1784 East Fodderlee was sold to William Riddell, and along with Riddell he granted a disposition for the lands to John Thomson; this may have been the John born to a James Thomson in Minto Parish in 1783. He was surely related to George, who was recorded as owner of East Fodderlee in 1788 (unless there is an error in forenames). James (1752–1831) born in Hawick. In 1785 he emigrated to the Niagara district of what was then called Upper Canada. There he married Margaret Emerick and they had 10 children: this included David, who rose to the rank of Major in the Canadian militia, a founding member of the Grand River Navigation Company and owner of several mills and Canadian Member of Parliament. He and his sons built their brick house, baking the bricks themselves. He was described as 'a stern old Presbyterian'. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Paterson and their children included Robert (b.1771). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Stirling and their children included Janet (b.1775). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1778. He married Janet Shiel and their son Duncan was baptised in 1778. James (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1776), Betty (b.1778), Robert (b.1779), James (b.1781), John (b.1783), Agnes (b.1786), Archibald (b.1788), Mary (b.1791), Thomas (b.1794) and John (b.1796). James (18th C.) married Jeany Oliver in Minto Parish in 1794. Their son James was baptised in 1794. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Outerside in 1793, in 1794 was 'late in Broadlee' and in 1798 was at Unthank in Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Graham in 1792 and their children included: Jane (b.1793), James (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Janet (b.1799), all baptised in Robertson; and Mary (b.1802), John (b.1803), Edward Aitchison (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), William (b.1808), Christian Aitchison (b.1810) and Edward (b.1811), all born in Ewes. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Aitchison in Wilton in 1796. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Noble in Wilton in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Stobs. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. The entry is annotated with 'deserted', suggesting that he fled in order not to serve. His name still appears on the list in 1798, but among those who failed to appear or failed to produce substitutes; William Johnstone, farmer at Tower, was balloted in his place. A reward of 1 guinea was then offered for his apprehension. His status as a deserter was confirmed on the 1799 list. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (18th/19th C.) son of William, tenant in Raperlaw and Netherraw. He is listed in the ballots for the Militia in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1799 and 1801. He could be the James who married Margaret Easton and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included Christian (b.1810), Esther (b.1814), Jessy (b.1815) and Agnes (b.1818). James (b.1799), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. James (b.c.1780) ploughman at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is distinct from the son of William in Raperlaw who was also listed in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Teindside, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same James was resident of ‘Woodfoot’ on the 1801 ballot for the Militia; he may have been related to John, who was at ‘Branksholm Wood foot’ on the same list, and Richard, who was farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot in 1797. James (b.1776/7) born at Over Huntly, son of James and Mary Stirling. He may be the James, labourer at Woll, recorded on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish; William was joiner at Woll in 1801, and may have been a brother or other close relative. He was surveyor of roads on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the ‘Mr. Thomson’ whose land is marked on the left side of the Loan, just before the Moat, on Wood’s 1824 map.
Thomson

He was listed as a road-surveyor on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the James from Hawick, recorded in a document related to the Haremoss Toll, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in Selkirk. In 1841 he was living on the Loan with his wife Rachel and children Robert, William, Mary and Rachel. He was still living on the Loan in 1851, as a retired surveyor. He married Rachel Wilkie from Midlem and their children (all baptised in Ashkirk Parish) included: Andrew (b.1800); John (b.1804); Robert (b.1806), grocer; Janet (b.1808); William (b.1810), hosier; Mary (b.1814); Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (b.1781) born in Minto Parish, son of James. He was a forester in Castleton Parish, living at Sandholm. Probably the same James was a labourer in Newcastleton on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was listed as a labourer at Sandholm on the 1801 Militia ballot; Robert was also there and so perhaps his brother. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a ‘Woodforester’ at Sandholm in 1835–41. He married Margaret Common. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1816), who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘Pingle’ on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He probably lived at Pingle south of Langholm, but it could have been Pingle-hole. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Wilkie and their children included: Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (18th/19th C.) servant at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835. He married Janet Jackson, but they were rebuked for ‘antemiptual fornica- tion’ in 1832. James (b.c.1805) born at Apple-treehall. He was a joiner in Jedburgh. His wife was Jane and their children included Mary Ann, John, Elizabeth, Isabella, James and Thomasina. James (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1835. James ‘Jimmy’ or ‘Jamie Tamson’ (1827–1888) poet and song-writer, born in Bowden, son of Robert and Helen Wilkie. He had a maternal uncle, Dr. Wilkie of Innerleithen, who was an archæologist and friend of Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg and Dr. Jamieson. He had an aunt, Henrietta Wilkie, Mrs. Drummond of Tranent, who also wrote poetry and he was additionally a second cousin of poet Thomas Aird. As a boy, he herded cows in the Eildons, where he was said to carry a battered copy of Burns’ Kilmarnock Edition in his plaid, and where he got to know the poet Andrew Scott. From age 16 he served an apprenticeship as a wood-turner and cabinet-maker in Selkirk. He worked there for a while, before moving to Hawick, where he spent more than 30 years. His first compositions appeared in the Dumfries Herald. He was writer of ‘Up wi’ the Banner’, ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Hawick Volunteers’ and ‘The Star o’ Robbie Burns’, as well as poems such as ‘The Auld Mid Raw’, ‘The Mither Tongue’, ‘The Wee Croodlin’ Doo’ and ‘Hairst’, many contained in his book ‘Doric Lays & Lyrics’ (1870). ‘Our Robin’ was one of his first poems, being published in the late 1850s, with his ‘Hogmanay’ sung at the New Year of 1860 at the Ewan’s Mill gathering. A great admirer of Burns, he helped found the Burns Club in Hawick; it is said that Burns’ ‘Kilmarnock Edition’ was his constant companion while he was a herdsman. He was Bard for Lodge 424, as well as being Masonic Provincial Grand Bard for Peebles and Selkirk. He was said to have lived in the auld Mid Raw and later at 54 High Street, where a commemorative plaque was erected in 1995. In the 1861 census he is listed on Wilton Terrace, living with a housekeeper Mary Riddell, and her children Mary and Catherine, as well as their children together, John and Helen. In poor health in later life, he moved back to Bowden in 1886, but returned to Hawick a few months later and was supported by his Masonic brethren. At the suggestion of J.Y. Hunter, he set about composing a new Common Riding song in 1887 and later presented ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ to the Cornet, this being only about a year and a half before his death. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where Lodge 424 erected a memorial obelisk (about a decade after his death). A wooden cup he made from material salvaged from the Mid Raw is in the Museum. The Hawick Burns Club unveiled his portrait at their clubrooms in 1924. In 2005 the new bridge across the Teviot was named after him, and an adjacent statue (by Bill Landles) unveiled in 2006. James (d.1939) son of John, farmer at Synton Mains. He became a saddler of 6 High Street, taking over the butcher’s premises.

of George Davies, with Robert and Thomas Hall taking over from him. His brothers William and John were both farmers. He was secretary of the Border Oddfellows for 30 years and was for many years Session Clerk for East Bank Church. Janet (b.c.1790) confectioner at the Sandbed. In Pigot’s 1837 directory she is listed as a baker and confectioner on the High Street. She was recorded at about No. 12 Sandbed on the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine for the Erskines in their lands of Synton in 1508, where he is ‘John Thomesoun’. Judging by the other witnesses, he may have been local. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either

He is probably the John ‘Thoms’ who witnessed a baptism in 1731 for John Cook in Newton in Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Stewart in Midshiels in 1732. He may be the John in ‘Brihool’ (probably Brieryhill) whose funeral is recorded in 1750. John (18th C.) resident of Giddenscleuch. His son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John (18th C.) resident of the Flex. He married Mary Miller and their children included: Mary (b.1721), Gideon (b.1722), James (b.1726) and Robert (b.1728), baptised in Hawick; and Mary (b.1731) and William (b.1734), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1726 were George Gibson and James Gledstains. John (18th C.) married Marion Sword in Minto in 1728. Marion (b.1728), baptised in 1728, was probably his daughter. John (18th C.) married Margaret Easton in Minto in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was living at Templehall in 1751. His children included ‘Mebill’ (b.1749), George (b.1751), William (b.1754) and Janet (b.1756). John (d.bef. 1776) grocer in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1776, when his daughter Christian married David Brown. John (18th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He is probably the John who married Mary Gray in 1758 and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Andrew (b.1759); Margaret (b.1760); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who probably took over the farm of Wester Essenside; Jane (b.1765); James (b.1768); Thomas (b.1774); and Mary (b.1776). John (18th C.) married Isobel Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1763. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Boyd in 1789. Their children included: Thomas (b.1792); and John (b.1794). The 1792 baptism was carried out ‘In presence of the Congregation’ and the 1794 baptism witnessed ‘by the Burgher Congregation’. John

(18th/19th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. In 1795 he is recorded at Greenbank. He married Helen Chisholme in Roberton in 1794 and their children included William (b.1795). John (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same carrier was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was still on the list in 1801 and may have been related to carrier Walter, who was listed after him. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Deanbrae, recorded as owner of 4 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. John (18th/19th C.) possibly son of James, who owned Fodderlee and farmed at Nether Ancrum. He was granted a disposition for East Fodderlee in 1784 and in 1802 sold the lands to Thomas Gregson, farmer at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm, in the Rule valley. After the Teviot flood swept away much of Hassendean churchyard (where his ancestors were buried) he moved the tombstone to Billerwell. He could be the farmer at Billerwell whose servant William Hunter was on the 1801 Militia ballot. John (b.c.1770s) mason at Calaburn according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was probably related to mason Andrew, who was at Calaburn at the same time, as well as George, who was there in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Chisholme in Wilton in 1798. John (b.c.1780) resident of Branxholme Woodfoot according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. Perhaps the John at 'Woodfoot' on the same list is a duplicate entry. He may have been son or younger brother of Richard, who was at Borthaugh Woodfoot in 1797 and perhaps James, who was also at Woodfoot in 1801. John (b.c.1780) servant at Penchrise according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Janet and Jean (b.1803); and Cicely (b.1806). John (18th/19th C.) married Mary Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dunlop and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1808), John (again, b.1809) and Betty (b.1810). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their son John was born in 1814, with witness appearing to be Jane Scott. John (18th/19th C.) farmer in the Hawick area. He married Agnes Lamb and their children included: Maria (b.1847); John (b.1848), who was a mason; and Thomas (b.1851). John (b.1789) son of Andrew, who farmed at Bewlie. He himself is recorded in 1851 at Bewlie Mains, farming 1035 acres and employing 35 labourers. He was unmarried at that time and living with his retired father and sister Betsy. John (19th C.) married Margaret Hunter Hardie in Wilton in 1823. John (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Preston in 1828 and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Violet (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1834). John (19th C.) married Jane Little in Southdean Parish in 1833. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirke Parish. He married Mary Beattie and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1839. John (19th C.) married Margaret Latimer in Wilton in 1843. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Laidlaw and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1854. Rev. John (1823–1889) born in Over-Roxburgh, son of farmer William and Margaret Shiel. He was educated at Ancrum School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1854 and became assistant minister at Selkirk. He was ordained as minister of St. Mary’s after it had become a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860. In 1861 he became a Mason in Lodge 111, receiving the first, second, and third degrees and afterwards being elected an office bearer, all in one evening. He lived at 9 Buccleuch Street and later built Rosalee when his wife inherited a small fortune. He also owned Allanshaws in Kelso. Together they founded St. John’s Church in 1880, and he formally became its first minister in 1881 (having resigned his position at St. Mary’s in 1879). He was Chaplain to the Cornet several times in the 1880s and supported the Common Riding at a time when many of the other local ministers railed against it. His acceptance of an invitation to the Cornet’s Breakfast in 1887 was the start of that event becoming a formal part of the proceedings, and his reciprocation to invite the supporters to his church the following Sunday was the beginning of the ‘Kirkin’. The lands that he purchased included some parts of what had previously been Roughheugh (and owned by Walter Scott). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1877. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of James Scott of Allanshaws and Mary Brown. Mrs. Thomson also paid for the new iron pump at the Verter Well (she later married William Ludovic Mair, Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire, and died in 1891). Their children were Margaret Shiel (who married Robert Griersen Laidlaw of Hazelwood, Hawick), and 5 others who died young. He wrote several books including ‘Address to Ploughmen’ (also called ‘Address on the Evils of the Bondage System’, published in Hawick, 1866), ‘The art of weaving spiritualised’ (Hawick, 1869 and 1874), ‘Voices from the Plough’ (Hawick, 1872), ‘History of Peter Plough’ (Hawick, 1874), ‘Life and times of William Thomson’ (1875 and 1879), ‘Alexander Hope: a Hawick story’ (1878, perhaps with a 2nd part in 1879), ‘The Life of James Scott of Allanshaws’ (1879), ‘The Art of Ploughing Spiritualised’, plus at least one other sermon and ‘Speeches delivered on Different Occasions’ (Hawick, 1882). Although ‘Alexander Hope’ was a work of fiction (with a strong moralistic message, particularly against the evils of drink), it contains several local anecdotes that are still of interest. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Greensidehall and later Sinton Mains. He was brother of saddler James and farmer William. His son John was Secretary of the Oddfellows. John (19th/20th C.) commercial traveller of Hawick, he served as Session Clerk for St. George’s Kirk 1915–24. Rev. John Archibald Glover (b.1883) son of John Cornwallis, minister in Edinburgh and Anne Dundas Glover. His brother was James C. He was born in Sanquhar, Dumfriesshire and educated at George Watson’s College, Glasgow Academy and Glasgow University. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1906, became an assistant at St. Andrew’s in Edinburgh, and in 1910 was ordained at Wallace-town, Ayr. He moved to the Tron Kirk, Edinburgh in 1916 and served with the R.A. Chaplains’ Department 1917–18. He became minister of Hawick Parish in 1925. He also stepped in as ‘interim-moderator’ for St. George’s Kirk when it was without a minister in 1936/7. He wrote ‘Roll of the Parish Ministry of Hawick, A.D. 1183–1929’ (1936), which he had made into a fine manuscript volume, preserved in the church. He married Ethel Maud Richardson and they had a son Aiden (b.1911). Rev. Joseph (1791/2–65) son of John, the Town Clerk of Jedburgh. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1814 and appointed preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. In 1823 he married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1938–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and then moved to Hawick in 1972 as Minister of Trinity Kirk. He became a well-known and active member of the local community, growing to love its traditions and institutions. He acted as Callants’ Club Chaplain and was also involved with the Probus Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2008 and retired that year after 36 years of service. Despite being advised to move away from his charge in order to enjoy a peaceful retirement, he insisted on staying on in Hawick. He married Brenda Shanks and their children are Stuart, David and Helen. Lisa (1997– ) attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools and then Edinburgh University. She played for Melrose Ladies, Edinburgh University, French side Lille Metropole and D.M.P. Durham Sharks. She turned professional in 2016. She made her international debut against England in 2014 and was Scottish team Captain for the 2018/9 season. She has been capped 35 times for Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘i dêni’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘in dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. Richard (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He married Martha Norval and their children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1760). His wife was probably recorded in 1787 when ‘Martha Novels Grandchild’ died in Hawick. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1778 he married Euphan Cairns and their children included: James (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); John (b.1783); and Archibald (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were ‘The Associate Congregation’ and in 1781 the ‘Special Congregation’. Richard (18th/19th C.) recorded at Woodfoot in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot. He is likely to be the Richard whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1815. He may have been father or elder brother of Andrew, who was recorded at Branxholme Woodfoot in 1801. Richard (19th
Robert (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside ‘Newtown’. His barn and yard are recorded in 1562 in the document dealing with the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. Robert (d.c.1606) minister of Ratho who was presented as minister of Castleton Parish at the end of 1604. He may have held both at the same time, but not for long, since he was dead within less than 2 years. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dobie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1646. Robert (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). Along with James he witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, and along with George he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. It seems likely that he was father or brother of both George and James. He also witnessed a baptism for John Hope in 1681 and Andrew Leyden in 1683. He married Margaret Gray in Robertson Parish in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680); Dand (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). He was probably also the Robert recorded in Burnfoot in 1697 when his son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1687 were James (perhaps his brother) and Thomas Caldwell. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam Scott of Burnfoot and James White. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel mentioned in 1679 when Robert Wright was fined for destroying a load of peat that he had cut, and he himself was fined for ‘ane ryott committ upon the said Robert Wright’. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.bef. 1720) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for John Dryden (along with Alexander Riddell) in 1675 and 1683. His wife was Janet Dickson. Their son George was born in 1687, with Gideon Scott of Outerside and Rev. Thomas Shiel as witnesses (suggesting he was from the countryside to the south of Hawick). His children included: Helen (b.1675); Gideon (b.1684); Isobel (b.1685), who married Robert Nichol in Hawick in 1720; and George (b.1687). In 1707 he and his son Gideon witnessed a baptism for James Renwick, undermiller at Newmill. This suggests he may be the same man as the tenant in Castlehill and Newmill. Robert (1668–9–1740) tenant in Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott, who died in 1739, aged 73 years. He may have had a son William (also tenant in Greens), whose wife Isabella Armstrong died in 1748, aged 40. They are buried in Etterton. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at Castlehill (near Newmill) in 1690. He is listed as ‘Rot. Thomsone officer’, but it is unclear what ‘officer’ meant. He is probably the same Robert listed as tenant at Newmill on Teviot on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where he was ‘wt tuo kilns’ and paid tax for 4 hearths. He was in ‘Newmilne’ in 1696 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Storie in 1698 and for smith John Dryden in 1700. He was also in Newmill when he witnessed baptisms in 1700 for William Bell in Whitchesters and Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1701 for smith John Dryden (whose wife was a Thomson), in 1702 for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, in 1704 for Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1705 twice (one at Branxholmtown), in 1706 for Robert Henderson, in 1707 for Walter Wilson again, for Walter Craw in Branxholme Town and for Robert Scott, carrier in Branxholmtown, in 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1710 for Walter Crow in Branxholme Town again, for John Nichol in Newmill and for Robert Prendergast, in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town, for William Allan (in ‘Park’), for James Scott in Stobicote (husband of his step-daughter) and for carrier Thomas Penman, and in 1713 for John Riddell in Branxholme Town. Given all the baptisms that he witnessed, it is likely he was a Kirk Elder, acting for the Newmill area. He was recorded in Newmill in 1709 when his ‘servitor’ John Nichol had a child baptised. Probably the same Robert was in Newmill in 1723 when (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden and in 1726 other baptisms (also along with William) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill. In 1729 he and William also witnessed a baptism for Robert Goodfellow. In 1731 he witnessed a further baptism for William (who was also at Newmill). He may have been ancestor of the later Robert at Newmill on Slitrig (although maybe that is just a coincidence). He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Falsyde, and whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1694), Walter (b.1698) and Robert (b.1701). The witnesses in 1698 were John Dryden and Thomas Elliot. He is probably the Robert ‘in New milne’ whose step-daughters included: Margaret Scott, who married Walter Hume in 1707; and Anne Scott, who married James Scott (tenant in Stobicote) in 1712. It seems likely that his wife Margaret Falsyde was widow of William Scott, and that he took her children into his family. Robert (17th/18th C.) Thomson

resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Burnfoot in 1697. He married a Gray and their children included Robert (b.1697). He may be the Robert whose son Robert was baptised in 1712. He may be the Robert in Appletreewell who had a legal process against James Laing, maltman of Selkirk in 1723. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Anna Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1701); and William (b.1704). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Mary ‘E.’ in Minto in 1704. Robert (18th C.) ex-Bailie in 1738 when he was involved with the construction of the Teviot Bridge. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as an Elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highcraigs Mill in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733). He may be the Robert who in 1773 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scoon and Rachel Riddell and in 1776 witnessed another baptism for miller John Scott and Betty Thomson (who was probably related). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Gladstans in Minto in 1737. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1738. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Crowden in Minto in 1749. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm in the Rule valley. His family came originally from the Hassendean area. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. When he died (in the late 1700s) he left around £1200 to a distant relative called Boog, who spent it all within about a year. He could be the Robert whose children baptised in Hobkir Parish included John (b.1786), Gilbert (b.1788) and George (b.1790). Robert (18th C.) only son of George and Margaret Kerr. In 1757 he had a sasine for the half lands of Fodderlee. He married Mary Dick. She and her son George had a sasine for the ‘liferent’ of Fodderlee in 1764. However, he had another sasine for these lands in 1766, along with Isobel Kerr. She was presumably either a second wife, or a relative of his mother. In 1778 the lands went to James, who may have been another son. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Fairbairn in Ashkirk Parish in 1769. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He was surely related to Thomas, who was recorded as farmer in the same place in 1799. He may be the Robert who married Isabel Simpson and had children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including John (b.1812), Mary (b.1814), William (b.1816) and Isabel (b.1819). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Lockie in Ashkirk Parish in 1794. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer on Slitrig, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He is probably related to the Robert recorded there in 1712. He may be the Robert who was at ‘Newmiln’ in 1789 when his daughter Magdaline was baptised in Kirkton Parish. In 1799 he was listed at New Mill on the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) footman at Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (b.c.1780) labourer at Sandholm according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. James was also listed there and so probably his brother, suggesting he was the Robert born to James in Minto in 1781. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Nelly (b.1808). Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1809), William (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813) and Janey (b.1815). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). Robert (b.1801/2) agricultural labourer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was at ‘Gatehousecote Hinds Houses’. His wife was Agnes and their children included George (b.1832/3), Isabel (b.1835/6) and Robert (b.1838/9). Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer’s and spirit merchant’s shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (19th C.) married Agnes Hall in Wilton in 1828. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as ‘Skyehead’ and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert (b.1811/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was a ploughman at Rueltownhead. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included: Isabella (b.1839/40); Archibald (b.1841/2); William (b.1843/4); and Janet (b.1848/9). Robert ‘Bob’ (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of shepherd Robert Hume. His children were: Adam, assistant gardener at Wolfelee, who married Martha Dalgleish; Robert, gardener at Hunthill, who married Margaret Eunson; James, blacksmith at Wark-on-Tweed, who married Euphemia Hope; George, footman at Kippilaw House; John, grocer; William, tailor; Charles, gardener; Helen; and Janet. Robert (1833/4–1909) from Crookham in Northumberland, he worked in the tweed business in Carlisle and was then a traveller for one of the Hawick firms. He was later a wool agent in Galashiels, and was regarded as one of the authorities on wool, yarn spinning and weaving in the Borders. Thomas (15th C.) recorded ‘in quithalich braa’ in 1494/5. He contributed ‘1 nag’ to the itinerant court held in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk’s next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepool and finally to Slamanan.

Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinneil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 (although there were also calls from Newcastleton and Morebattle) and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning (or a ‘ball of fire’) while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain). He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In 1693 he married Beatrices Trotter of Wideopen (on Kale), daughter of Alexander Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendean, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725. Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700–48), well known as a poet, author of ‘The Seasons’: Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh’s New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thomson, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. His house in Ednam was converted into the schoolhouse. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867.

Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wark-on-Tweed, who married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was rebuked by the Hawick Session for this ‘irregular marriage’, which took place in England. Their daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1725, with witnesses Rev. Charles Telfer and weaver James Roger. Perhaps the same Thomas also married Mary Elliot and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dryden in 1718 and their children included: Robert (b.1719); and Adam (b.1722). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Deanbrae in 1726. His children included Janet (b.1724) and James (b.1726). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He is probably the Thomas who married Marion Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1728. He was recorded at Denholm in 1729 and 1730 (when he was a herd). His children included Bessie (b.1729), Helen (b.1730) and Adam (b.1734). He is probably also father of some of these children baptised in Cavers Parish (with the others being part of the other Thomas; family): Helen (b.1728); Alison (b.1732); George (b.1732); and an unmarried child (b.1739). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1732. He married Mary Elliot and their son John was baptised in 1732, with witnesses George Bell and George Home. His surname is written ‘Thomason’. Thomas (18th C.) married Margaret Kersel in Minto in 1736. Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isobel Hardie and their children included: Peter (b.1756); Isabel (b.1759); Agnes (b.1762); and Robert (b.1764). The witnesses in 1759 were fuller Robert Hardie and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Coltart and their children included James (b.1765), Walter (b.1766) and Agnes (b.1768). He may be the workman who witnessed a baptism for stocking-maker Mark Sutherland in 1787. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Oliver and their son Thomas was baptised in 1773. He may be the deceased Thomas whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1781. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1787. He married Margaret Elliot in 1785 and they had an unnamed son in 1787. Thomas (b.c.1770s) mason in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as apprentice to mason John Laing when he was on the ballot for the Militia. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815; in that record the word ‘Slorige’ or ‘Sorage’ appears after his name. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (b.c.1770s) farmer at Wester Essenside according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He was surely related to Robert, who was recorded as farmer in the same place in 1797. He could be the Thomas, son of John and Mary Gray, who was baptised in Ashkirk in 1774. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included: John (b.1821), baptised in East Bank Kirk; and William (b.1826), baptised in Ashkirk. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1817), Janet (b.1820) and Andrew (b.1823) Thomas (19th C.) married Robina Hay in Wilton in 1824. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1842 and their children included Janet (b.1844). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Alison Scott and their son George was baptised in 1849. Walter (17th C.) married Helen Grieve in Robertson in 1681. Their son James was baptised in 1685. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rutherford in Castleton in 1709. Walter (18th C.) married Helen ‘Mader’ in Bedrule in 1751. Their son George was baptised in Cavers in 1755. William (b.1753) and Janet (b.1760), also baptised in Cavers (with no mother’s name given) were probably also their children. Walter (18th C.) married Isobel Dunlop in Wilton in 1779. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Janet (b.1780), Thomas (b.1784) and Thomas (b.1785). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Horsburgh and their children included William (b.1787). Walter (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was still on the list in 1801 and may have been related to carrier John, who was listed before him. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish and their children included: Margaret (b.1790); Mary (b.1793); John (b.1795); Agnes (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); Rabina (b.1802); and Walter (b.1809). Walter (19th C.) married Beatirix Scott in Robertson in 1849. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William (b.1852) and Henry (b.1853). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Dunlop and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Walter (surely related) and John Wilson. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694.
Thomson

William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th/18th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was listed as servitor to Gideon Scott of Falnash. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included William (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1707). The witnesses in 1702 were smith John Dryden and Robert Riddell, miller at Newmill. He is probably the William ‘older’ in Newmill, who (along with William ‘younger’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote, in 1717 for William Allan and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith John Dryden in 1705; Dryden’s wife was Isobel, who may have been his daughter. He could be the William who married Agnes Cook and whose children included James (b.1680); the witnesses in 1680 were William Wilson and William Paisley. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in the Hawick Session records of 1722, when he was asked to summon a person to the Court of the Baron Depute. He was probably a Burgh Officer of the time, but may instead have been a Kirk officer. William (18th C.) resident of Newmill in Hawick Parish. He was probably son (or grandson) of Robert, tenant in Newmill. In 1733 he is recorded being at ‘New Miln’ and ‘at New miln’ in Hawick Parish in 1740. He may be the William ‘younger’, who (along with William ‘older’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. He was ‘in Newmiln’ in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town, William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He is probably the William who (along with Robert, both in Newmill) witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden in 1723. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1726 (along with Robert) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill, and another (along with Robert) for Robert Goodfellow in 1729. His servant Robert Deans witnessed a baptism in 1742 for William Anderson in Raeknowe; this was the same day as the baptism of one of his own children in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in Roberton. Probably the same William in Newmill secondly married Isobel Scott (with whom he had children baptised in Hawick in 1738 and 1740), with her name being recorded as ‘Margaret’ in 1742. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1729); Nichol (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733), Katherine (b.1735); Janet (b.1738); Helen (b.1740); and Margaret (again, b.1742). All the baptisms were recorded in Hawick, except the first Margaret, who was baptised in Roberton Parish. Janet (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his daughter. The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Scott and Robert Thomson, in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, and in 1742 were his servant Robert Deans and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (18th C.) married Agnes Gray in Minto in 1745. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Doecluch in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1750. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Lockie in 1762 and their children included Jean (b.1774) and John (b.1777). William (d.bef. 1791) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Scott and she died in 1791. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horse Park, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott and Betty (who may have been his daughter or sister). William (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servant to Capt. Douglas of Cavers’ in 1784. He was listed as footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791–73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the ‘William Thomson, Jun. Cavers’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included: Tibby (b.1778); Nelly (b.1784); William (b.1787); and George (b.1788). Additional children, also baptised in Cavers, may include: Walter (b.1779); and James (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1799 and 1801 his son James was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Lilliesleaf Parish; he is listed as ‘Tenant Repperlaw Netherrow’. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Mains according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same William was a servant at Dinlees on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the William who married Margaret Lamb and had a son James (b.1801) baptised in Castleton Parish. William (b.c.1780) mason at Damside according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (b.c.1780) servant of William Turnbull at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1801. William (b.c.1780) joiner at Woll according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been related to James who was also at Woll at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Knox (or perhaps King) and their children included John (b.1813), David (b.1815), Isobel (b.1817), Ann (b.1819) and George (b.1822). He may be the William whose child died in Hawick in 1824. William (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1826 he and Robert Dryden were put in charge of the Parish mort-safes. William (b.1790/1) stone dyker living at Longhaugh on Hermitage Water in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Thomas, Jane (whose married name was Scott), Margaret and Janet. William (b.1799/1800) from Selkirk, he was a tailor on Allars Crescent. He was listed there in the 1851 census (when he employed 3 men) and in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was at 1 Manse Lane. His wife was Isabella and their children included Agnes, Margaret, William, Andrew, Ann and Jemima. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their son George was baptised in 1823. William (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Helen Dickson and their children included: Sarah (b.1830), baptised the following year; and Helen (b.1833). William (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Cecilia Sinton and their son James was baptised in 1823. William (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Jane Brown and their children included William (b.1835), Mary Bell Elliot (b.1831) and Andrew (b.1832), with no mother’s name given, could also be his children. William (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Ann Oliver and their son Robert Oliver was baptised in 1837. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Laing in Wilton in 1840. William L. (c.1820–bef. 1861) stone dyker, born in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Stoulsie Schoolhouse. He married Elizabeth Anderson in 1845. Their children included Mary (b.1845/6), William L. (b.1847/8) and James (b.1849/50) and Isabella (b.1851/2). In 1861 his widow and children were living at Orchard Cottage. William (19th C.) married Margaret Waldie in Hawick in 1852. William (19th C.) married Jane Brodie in Wilton in 1854. William (19th C.) mason in Denholm in the 1860s. He was a registered voter at that time. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes and later Colforthill. William Lyndsay (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1908–19. William ‘Bill’ or ‘Jimpy’ (1936– ) worked in various mills in Hawick, and long involved with the British Legion, he was Common Riding Secretary 2001–05 (formerly spelled ‘Thomason’, ‘Thomesoun’, ‘Thompson’, ‘Thomsone’, ‘Thomson’, ‘Thomsoun’, ‘Thomsoune’, etc.; also pronounced as in ‘Tamson’ or ‘Thamosone’).

Thomson’s Cave (tom-sinz-kiv) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. This is said to have been a popular haunt of for the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well (thu-tom-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription ‘Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria’s record reign, 1897… It’s yer ain; protect it’. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

Thorbrand (n.) Adam (17th/18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. Probably the same Adam was recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summing him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam who married Elspeth Stevenson and whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. In 1717 he witnessed a baptism for tenant Walter Bryson. He is probably also the Wright who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson. Adam (18th C.) married Susanna Rutherford in Ashkirk Parish in 1728. George (17th C.) son of Wright James. He witnessed a baptism in 1683 for William Veitch. He was witness to the document describing his father’s work on the ‘steiple-loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as ‘my sone wryter thereof’. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Thronbrand in Wiltoum’ in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Braxholme and Buccleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbrands.

Bailie James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 as Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for theiking’ between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that ‘the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir’; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the Wright who was fined by the Magistrates in 1672 for taking the called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Also in 1673 he was witness to baptisms for John Chalmers, Thomas Cowan and James Newbie. In 1683 Wright Francis Gledstains was fined for attacking him and for stealing the 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the Wright who was late ‘baylea in Havice’ when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk.

thoosand (n.) a thousand – ‘Thosands, guide kens how mony, to the breeder, An’ hauf as muckle for a cock to tread her’ [JoHa], ‘...Mair worth than an estate a thousand miles square’ [JoHa], ‘...but A’d a thousand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘Ten thousand hands were raised on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’ [WP], ‘A thousand buttercups waited to confirm Yin’s likin’ for butter ...’ [DH], ‘What sacrifice To gie a pound Gin I’ve a thousand mair?’ [WL], ‘Weary an’ dowie, aye mysel A thoosand times I’ve tried ti tell ...’ [WP], ‘...for gettin’ a thousand folk throwe their test’ [IW], ‘Remeandering, Edin- ston Witter, twae thoosand an een’[JuH] (cf. thoosant).

thoot (prep., poet.) without – ‘...An’, holy beacons, glow ‘thoof flaw or wane’ [JoHa], ‘Nought but the vera rims o’ men, Thoot saul or spunk – a glazent den’ [JoHa].

Thor (n.) Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hogg’s song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – ‘The spirit still lies on the Border side – The spirit of Thor and Odin’ [JBB], ‘With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn’ [JBSS].
was the ‘Steeple (or Middle) Loft’ in St. Mary’s in 1684. He was married to ‘Jean Wetch’ (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the ‘Bailleyea Thorburne’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as ‘wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailiff Purdem pay’d him, is all he gote for placing about the palling raill about Mr Elliott’s grave stone, £12’. He may be the John who was listed as ‘student’ in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Elliot in Whitcheasters. Robert (16th C.) witness to an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. Simon Routledge was ‘in Cruik’, while he described as being ‘there’, presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Volle Thurbrand’ (formerly ‘Thronbrand’ and ‘Thurbrand’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).

Thorburn (thör-burn) n. Adam (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Janet Miller is recorded in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His property may be the ‘Thorburn’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798 and another who died in 1811 (where he is recorded as ‘Berwick Carrier’). He is probably the Adam who married Janet Paterson and whose children included: Agnes (b.1796); John (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); Catherine (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); George (b.1805); William (b.1807); and James (b.1815). The witnesses in 1796 and 1797 were Robert Tinlin and Michael Anderson. Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick as recorded in a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may also be the David from ‘Broumhooright’ recorded in another letter. He married Sarah Thomson and their son David was baptized in Hawick in 1790. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirke in 1707. George (18th C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedge. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedge after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew, who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or are being confounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the man recorded among Volunteers in 1803 as ‘George Thorburn, Ashkirk, lane, but willing to serve’. He married Jeanie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastle on; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastle on, operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castle-ton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedge in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.1828); William (b.c.1840); Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgleish. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedge. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1950/1– ) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Stonedge in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge. John (b.c.1780s) labourer at Bellendean, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprietor’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson refugee in 1939. He worked as foreman at the Walled Gardens and had a long association with boxing in Hawick. He married Teri Jean Cumming. They had sons George and John. The couple celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2019. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Moss and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bulloch in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); and Elizabeth (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were mason Andrew Turnbull ‘junior’ and weaver George Swan. John (d.1794) carrier. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish. He was ‘killed by his own cart at Drydon’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797. He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was ‘killed by his own cart at Drydon’. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk. He was a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprietor’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson.
in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabell Hall in Hawick in 1791. John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd minister of St. Paul’s Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dunning. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Elizabeth. John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with his elderly father. He married Margaret Rae (from England) and their children included Agnes, Susan Wright (b.1854), John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846. John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman. In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenside Cottage. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Andrew and Jessie. John son of Jock and younger brother of George. He works for the Bill McLaren Foundation and has been Secretary of both Hawick R.F.C. and the 1514 Club. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isabel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Headshaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew. Robert (18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Rae and their children included Thomas (b.1740), Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1743). He could be the Robert who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Agnes (b.1789) and John (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. His daughter Nelly died in 1800. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is unclear. Rev. Robert (19th C.) born in Bowden, son of Robert and Margaret Cochrane. He is said to have been taught by George Scott in Lilliesleaf. He attended Edinburgh University and was appointed to Falmouth in Jamaica in 1834. He joined the Free Church in 1843 and became minister of Warwick Presbyterian Church in Bermuda. His brother Walter was also minister in the same Bermuda church. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedge, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedge Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedge helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barnman’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died unmarried. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Woolplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Walter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Christian Ballantine, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Adam (b.1766); William (b.1768); Janet (b.1771); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne, in 1766 were Robert and Adam Thorburn (who were surely related) and in 1771 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or Marion) Ekron and their children included: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); and Elizabeth (b.1770). He is probably the Walter from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1780 and 1785. His children included: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1784); and Walter (b.1785). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Buccleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Huggan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). Walter (b.1822/3) resident of Roberton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Harden in 1841, was living with his mother Janet Lockie at Borthwickbrae Haugh in 1851 and was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1861. He married Beatrix Scott from Newcastle. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William, Henry, James, Janet and Marion. Walter ‘Wat’ (19th/20th C.) Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band from about 1882. He was also known as an accomplished soloist. Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time after WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Elliot and their children included: Violet Hardie (b.1798), baptised in Ashkirk, who married Hawick seedsmen John Turnbull; and Walter (b.1801), baptised in Selkirk. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howegate. He was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Ballantyne who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and their son Walter was baptised later the same year. The witnesses were weaver Robert Renwick (probably related to his wife and tobacconist William Brown. He may also have married Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosiery manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielaugh, near Duns (also written ‘Thorburne’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand).

thorle (thorl, tho-rul) n., arch. a whorl, small wheel on a spindle.

Thorleshope (thor-leez-hop) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Elliots. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is ‘Thorleshop’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. ‘Robert Elwald’ was Laird in 1488 and ‘John Elwald’ in ‘Thorleshope’ is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Lairds through the 16th century. It is probably the ‘Thorныshope’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 4 merks and with Robert Elliot as tenant. The house of ‘Thirleshope’ belonging to ‘Arche Elwode’ was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same ‘Arche Elliot of Thirleshop’ rented Southdeanrig and Caldcleuch from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called ‘Hob of Thorleshope’ was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Hawick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorleshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braudlie branch in 1583, while John ‘of Thorlosope’ signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behalf of the Elliots of Thorleshope. Adam ‘Rakquis’ was recorded there in 1611. The lands were already owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613. It could be the ‘Thorishop’ where Thomas Brown was recorded in 1618. John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mangerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse (‘Bhuidy Clavers’) wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at ‘Thorlishopes hous’ in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and William Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. Robert Beattie was a labourer there and Andrew Oliver a mason there in 1801. William Nichol was steward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was owned by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (perhaps the tower) was once described as being a ruined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms ‘DME’ and ‘WEAC’ (surely related to William Elliot of Thorleshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage). This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th century. A flint arrowhead was found in the garden in 1882, but subsequently lost. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Deadwater, was once regarded as having healing properties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorleshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th century. Thorleshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A ‘decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished’ from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for ‘Charlieshope’ in ‘Guy Manmering’ (the name probably means ‘valley with the thorny clearing’; it is ‘Thorleshop’ in 1488, ‘thornlawishop’ in 1494/5, ‘Thorleshop’ in 1498, ‘Thorlesh’ in 1500 and 1516, ‘Thirleshope’, ‘Thorleshope’ and ‘Thorlishopp’ in 1541, ‘Thorlyshop’ and ‘Thorlyshope’ in 1546, transcribed as ‘Thorilshowp’ in 1547, ‘Thorlishoip’ and ‘Thorlishop'
Thornieshope Burnfoot

in 1569, ‘Thornesope’ in 1583, transcribed ‘Thor-wisioip’ in 1587/8, ‘Thorlrishop’ in 1594, ‘Thorlesop’ in 1595, ‘Thirlishope’ in 1613, ‘Thoirleishoip’ in 1623, ‘Chorleesoi’ in 1646, ‘Thorlisleope’ in 1648, ‘thorlishop’ in 1678, ‘Thorlisle-hope’ in 1690, ‘Thirlshope’ in 1692, ‘Thorship’ in 1704 and ‘Thorlshipe’ in 1811; it is ‘Thorlsope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Thorlshope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thornieshope Burnfoot (thòr-leez-höp-burn-fí) n. former steadings in Castleton Parish, near where Thornieshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labourer David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thornieshope Heights (thòr-leez-höp-hîts) n. general name for hilly area to the east of Thornieshope farm, south of Thornieshope Pike. A triangulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foulmire Heights.

Thornieshope Pike (thòr-leez-höp-pik) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thornieshope is located to the west, and Thornieshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

thorn (thòrn) n., arch. the hawthorn tree (used in place names, e.g. Thorniewhats, Thornybank and Thornyhaugh).

Thornebog (thòr-neè-bög) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Martin Crozier, however, the exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Thornhill (thòrn-hîl) n. town in Dumfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Castle. This is where the Baron’s Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were accustomed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Michaelmas Court on account of the poor state of their crops.

Thorniewhats (thòr-neè-whats) n. farm just to the east of Hollows (Gilnockie) between Langholm and Canonbie, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. John Elliot was tenant there in 1676 (it is ‘Thornyquhat’ in 1579, ‘Thorntyhaite’ in 1583, ‘Thorntyquhattie’, ‘Thorntyquhatt’ and ‘Torniyquhatt’ in 1585, ‘Thorynyquhat’ in 1623 and ‘Thoronyquhathis’ in 1663; it is marked as ‘Thorniwhat’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map; note that it should not be confused with ‘Thornyhaugh’ near Falnash).

Thornton (thòrn-in) n. former name for piece of land on the farm of Braidhaugh near Hobkirk, probably near to the Rule Water and ‘Thornton Pool’ (also ‘Thorntoun’).

Thornton (thòrn-in) n. Lewis Henry Jenkins (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1853 he married Elizabeth, daughter of stockingmaker Peter Fraser.

Thornton Pool (thòrn-in-pool) n. deep pool in the Rule Water near the farm of Braidhaugh. The name was still in use in the early 20th century.

Thorniewood Avenue (thòrn-wud-aw-vi-new) n. Thornwood Avenue, a street in Weensland, named for its proximity to the former Thornwood House and constructed in 1976.

Thornwood Hoose (thòrn-wud-hoos) n. mansion built by James Oliver in 1870, which eventually became the Mansfield House Hotel. The name probably derived from being ‘on a bleak hill side covered with whins and thorns’, according to a contemporary newspaper report. The original design, in a Greek Revival style (with Italian elements), was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rochead in 1867. The house was sold to Lt.-Col. M. Mudie in 1936 and by the 1950s it had become a hotel (see also Mansfield Hoose).

Thornwood Park (thòrn-wud-pawrk) n. Thornwood Park, a street in Weensland, part of Daykins Drive. The whole street was called Daykins Drive when built in 1982, but this name was favoured by many residents and later made official. It derives from the proximity to Thornwood House.

Thornybank (thòr-neè-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, probably located between the lands of Harwood and Fairnielees. This could be the same as ‘Thornydykes’, where Robert French is recorded in 1603 (‘Thorningbankis’ in 1562).

Thornyleugh (thòr-neè-klooch) n. farmstead to the west of Bellendale and south of Redfordgreen, in the far corner of what was once Roberton Parish. William Little ‘in thornycluch’ is recorded in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bellendale Burn. The stream called ‘Thornicyleugh Burn’ is curiously on the other side of the B711, flowing into Clearburn Loch.

Thornyhaugh (thòr-neè-hawch, -haw) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The ‘Chapel of Ease’ for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by Robert Scott in 1738 and Robert Laidlaw was there in 1741. John Hume was there in 1781–85 and was tenant in 1797. Peter Hume was there in 1795. (it is ‘Thornihaugh’ in 1738 and 1741 and ‘Thornihall’ in 1781 and 1785; also written ‘Thorny Hall’ and ‘Thornehall’, perhaps erroneously).

thorter (thor-tur) prep., arch. across, over, transvers (the word only survives in placenames).

Thorterdykes *(thor-tur-, thor-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely overlapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdykeback and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced ‘Whirter Dykes’ in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built. The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thorter dikes’; its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse *(thor-tur-diks-rōd-hous) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.

thorter-ower (thor-tur-ow-ur) prep., arch. across – ‘Thorter-ower, Across; a pleonastic term, perhaps Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’.

thorter-thraw (thor-tur-thraw) v., arch. to pass an object back and forwards (noted by J. Jamieson).

Thorter Villa *(thor-tur-vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdykes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud *(thor-tur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

Threepheid (threep-heed) n. Threephead, former farmstead near Stintieknowe, also known as ‘Clatterin’ Brows’ – ‘...a very notable swingling at a place called Threephead or Clatterin’ Brows, near Stinty Knowes, when one of the party, being sent to Hawick to fetch a fiddler ...’ [JAHM] (it is possibly the same as ‘Threep Heid’ further to the north).

Threep Heid (threep-heed) n. Threep Head, one of the hills on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, between Cringie Law and Esdale Law. It reaches a height of 347 m and has Threephead Moss to the east. A farmstead there was where James ‘Locie’, James Watson and Alexander Nichol were recorded in the 1770s, Andrew Hogg in 1781–87, William Miller in 1795–98 and John Cavers in 1808 (the first element derives from the Old English ‘threapian’, meaning ‘disputed’).

Threephead Moss (threep-heed-moss) n. boggy area to the east of Threep Head. It is marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common, with an extensive ‘Turf and Spread Ground’ in its south part. It was also referred to as ‘Thrip moss’ in evidence given in 1764. It is still marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

threepit (threep, -pi) pp., arch. asserted, insisted – ‘He threapit at iz (or doon throw me) that etc.’ [GW], told, repeated pertinaciously – ‘He threapit a lie in ma fac’ [GW] (also ‘threapit’).

Threepridge (threep-rij) n. former name for an area in or near Hawick Common Moor, the precise location of which is not now known. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants (recorded as ‘Threapridge’: the name probably derives from the Old English for ‘the disputed ridge’).

Threep Rig (threep-rig) n. former name for an area on Wilton Common, lying to the east of the old Threephead Moss and the modern Jubilee
Threep Syke

Wood. It is recorded as ‘Threep-rigg’ in the 1765 description of the common.

It is played in a different manner in Teviotdale. Two stand together, facing each other, having their hands clinched, and lifted above their breath, so as to form an arch. Under this perhaps twenty or thirty children pass, holding each other by their clothes. When all have passed save one, the arms of the two, like a portcullis, fall down and detain this individual as prisoner. He, or she, is asked in a wisiper, ‘Will ye be Tod or Fern-buss?’ If Tod is the answer, the person takes one side, and must wait till all are caught one by one. This being done, the Tod draws one way, and the Ferns another, the two candidates still keeping hold of each other’s hands; and he, who can draw the other and his party to the opposite side of the street, and separate their hands gains the victory’ [JoJ].

Thurdsi (thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled ‘Thursdi’; cf. the older Thorsday).

the Thursdi (thu-thurs-di) n. common name for the Thursday before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbussed) flag for the first time. After the ‘Hut’ there is a ceremonial singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse at St. Leonard’s and a ride around the race-course at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer’s Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at

the Thursdi Mornin Chase

the Horse monument and the Cornet’s Walk. The evening is the first time that the ‘Big Threi’ wear their traditional Cornet’s uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Mi-ister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inns where the participants would dine on the Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments, and they would also stop on the Auld Brig for snuff, with the bussing of the Flag itself being quite an informal affair. Until the 1880s the Flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s house after the morning Chase until it was bussed in the evening. Until 1886 the Cornet and his followers used to call at the houses of his supporters for refreshments after returning from the Thursday morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after ‘the Hut’ and then proceed round by Wilton.

In the years 1900–04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursday morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-neen-chās) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursdy morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Backadgate, but at 6 m. the Cornet now has the (unbussed) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Fa-ter takes the Flag at the top of the Nipknowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse while the Cornet and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farmhouse and the riders remount. They proceed via Pilmuir field to the Moor, where they ride round the racecourse, the Cornet leading with the Flag. The return is via Crumhannahill and the Loan, passing the children arriving at Drumlanrig School. The route then takes the cavalcade along the High Street, over the North Bridge, along Dovemount and turning onto Princes Street, down Wilton Path, through the Sandbed and so back to the Town Hall. There the Principals dismount and the Flag is displayed from the balcony awaiting the Colour Bussing in the evening.

the Thursdi Night Chase (thu-thurz-dini-chās) n. name often used for the Chase at the Nipknowes on the Thursday evening before Common Riding week, officially called Orderin the Curds an Cream.

Tib (tib) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Isabella, but sometimes Elizabeth.
Tibbers (ti-burz) n. ruined motte and bailey castle on the lands of the Drumlanrig estate.
It was once owned by the Maitland family (according to the earliest surviving charter of 1369), but acquired by the Douglases of Drumlanrig in the eyears of the 16th century, and the designation ‘of Tibbers’ was added to their titles. Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a charter for the lands in 1544. ‘Baron Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers’ was among the minor titles of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig, and later the Marquesses of Queensberry.
Tibbie (tib) n. formerly common Christian name, short for Isabel, Elizabeth, etc. – ‘Sweet Tibbi’s chestnut tresses wav’d Around her heaving bosom, Her neck as if wi’ lillies pav’d, Out-vied the hawthorn blossom’ [JR], ‘...To Tibbie, ere the morning’s light, To bear you name’ [JoHa]

Isabella Hall.
Tibbie Shiel’s Inn (ti-bee-sheelz-in) n. hotel and pub between St. Mary’s Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. It was run by Tibbie Shiel (1783–1878, Isabella Richardson before her husband died) in the early-to-mid 19th century. It was a meeting point for the Ettrick Shepherd and other writers, and is still run as a hostelry. Michael Robson wrote ‘Tibbie Shiel’ (1986) – ‘The Ettrick bard, James Hogg, a happy chiel, Could sing a sang and tell a story weel. In Tibbie Shiel’s, with other bards he met, But all are gone, their suns for ever set’ [TCh].
Tibbie Tantry (ti-bee-tan-tree) n. local character of the early 19th century, a neighbour of Robbie Clinty (the nickname is possibly related

for Isabella Thomson.
Tibbie the Brotch (ti-bee-th-brōch) n. nickname of a woman from the West-end in the early part of the 19th century. She was presumably thin Like a ‘brocht’ or spindle, and her nickname distinguished her from other Isabels or Elizabeths, such as ‘Tibbie o the Green’. She led a group of women who organised themselves to taunt the members of the ‘royalist’ party at the 1809 Common Riding, including pelting Capt. Campbell with dung.
Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage (ti-bee-thu-fid-hurz-ko’-eej) n. former low thatched cottage on the Mill Path, near the railway bridge, which stood on the boundary of the Burgh property, and on the roof of which the Song Singing ceremony took place until 1859. The house was demolished in 1860 to make room for the railway, with the Song Singing taken place amid the ruins of the house in 1860 and thereafter on a platfrom constructed nearby (and shifted to the opposite side of the road in the 1960s) – ‘Song Singin’ akin tae stance on cliff, Took place on Tibbie the Fiddler’s rif, This was the last time for sic doin’s Nxt year was held mid Tibbie’s ruins’ [MB] (also sometimes spelled ‘Tibby’; who this individual was seems now unknown, and slightly mysterious, given that Tibbie is a woman’s name and female fiddlers could not have been common then).
Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil (ti-bee-tom-line-skil) n. school in Underdamside in the early 19th century, presumably run by a woman called Thomline.
Tib the Virgin (ti-thu-vir-jin) n. nickname for someone in Hawick in the mid-19th century.
Presumably the nickname had positive connotations and was not meant ironically – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate. Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders over the knowe’ [HI].

the Till (thu-till) n. river in Northumberland, which runs into the Tweed. It is deep and was hard to ford in former times. The crossing was important during the Battle of Flodden. It is also somewhat unusual in having 2 names, the upper part being called the Breamish – 'Says Tweet to Till 'What cars ye rin so still?' Says Till to Tweed 'Though ye rin wi speed And I rin slaw, For ae man that ye droon I droon twa' ' [T], her mither's throat, it's cheerfu' music still, Has socht a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmuring Till'[JYH], 'Then the dreadful roar of battle Echo'd from the distant hill, While the life blood flow'd so freely That it dy'd the sluggish Till'[JAHB], 'The minstrel climbed the sacred mound And gazing eastward where the Till To Tweed his deviuous pathway wound Through woods that fringed that fatal hill'[WHO].

Tilliele (ti-lee-lee) n. former name for the farm at Peelbrae. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. It was owned by the Elliots of Redheugh before 1497/8, when it is recorded as ‘Telliele’, along with ‘Cald-cluch’, in the Douglas of Cavers papers. There was a ‘return of inquest’ held at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of these lands by Robert ‘Elwalde’, grandson of the former Robert. It may also have been written ‘Tilloly’, and the name was mostly lost in the 17th century, although it may be related to the Timlee Stone. It was still recorded in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands had a boundary with Dod, passing along the Dod Burn and then the Rowan-tree dyke to the boundary with Priesthaugh, the line being partly marked with stones (it is ‘Tilloly’ in c.1380, ‘Tilliele’ in 1511, ‘Tillielie’ in 1687 and transcribed ‘Tilbie’ in 1698).

Tillieleehope (ti-lee-lee-up) n. alternative name for the steading of Peelbrae, recorded as ‘Tillieleehope’ in 1660.

Tillotson (ti-lit-sin) n. Ben (19th C.) local cricketer serving as professional for the Wilton team from 1857 and with Hawick and Wilton through the 1860s.

till yince (til-yins) adv., arch. until at length, until some condition has been met – ‘...that none should enter until the said loft, till once the persons that use one right and proerty to the said loft be once settled’[BR1716].

tillysow (ti-lee-sow) n., arch. a small lodging-house or commercial inn built by a landowner to accommodate the servants of his guests at their own expense – ‘He would say he would have a board placed before his house, with the announcement, ‘No Tillysow kept here’'[JJW].

the Timna Witter (thu-ti-mu-wi'-ur) n. small river that rises near the border with Dumfries & Galloway and flows about 6 miles roughly north to join the Ettrick Water at Ramseycleuch – ‘Then a murmur wakes in the heath and fern, And the fairies gather, unseen of men, Riding up from the Runkleburn And trooping down from the Teena Glen'[WHO] (it is ‘Tymeye’ in 1235/6 and ‘Temay’ in 1415; ‘Tima Burne’ and ‘Tima Burn’ are marked on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Timo B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Timberside (tim-bur-sid) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, presumably close to Timbersidemill. In 1765 it was listed among the properties of the Scotts of Whitehaugh.

Timbersidemill (tim-bur-sid-mil) n. former farm for Scawmill, a cottage in the north of the old part of Wilton Dean. It was once a corn mill, distinct from Dean Mill. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls records ‘Thomas Miller and John Bue wt an kilne betuixt thm’ there; Andrew ‘Andisone’ was also recorded there, among the poor of Wilton Parish. Francis Scott was there in 1697. John Cairns was there in 1721 and James Scott in at least 1721–27. John Turnbull was there in at least 1743–7. In 1765 it was ‘Timberside-mill, now called Skawmill’ when part of the estate of John Scott of Whitehaugh. John Scott was recorded as farmer there in 1797 (it was ‘Timbersydeminil’ and ‘timbersidmilne’ in 1694, ‘Timersydemil’ and ‘Timbersydemiln’ in 1721, ‘Timbersydmiln’ in 1727, ‘Timer miln’ in 1743, ‘Timber Syd mill’ in 1747 and ‘Timbersidemiln’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Timbersidetreis (tim-bur-sid-trīz) n. former name for a plantation near the south-west corner of Wilton Common, probably on ‘Todshaw Hill – ‘…and from the pit at the west end of the last-mentioned house, south-west cross the high-way there, to the dyke on the north side of the plantation of Timber-trees’ [DCW1765].
time (tim, tim) n. time, a specific time such as for eating or feeding livestock – ‘It’s horse-time, cow-time’[GW] (note the pronunciation with the soft i in phrases such as ‘tei time’ or ‘yon time’; also sometimes spelled ‘teime’ to emphasize the pronunciation).
time aboot (tim-u-bo’o) adv. alternately, by turns, turn and turn about – ‘…Sure, time about is but fair play, His Highness syne maun now obey’ [RDW], ‘As oo canna geet away threh the shoop thegither, oo’ve duist aye ti taik oor hoalidays teime aboot’ [ECS] (cf. the more common turn aboot).
time comin see in time comin
the time of (thu-tim-ov) adv., arch. during the period of – ‘…be the sons of vnquhile Adame Scot of Alanechaunt aganis me, the said Walter, the tyme of my minoritie …’ [SB1585], ‘…by tarrying the tyme of Divine service in the house of Geo. Renwicke, who keips ane change’ [PR1712].
the time that (thu-tim-thi) adv. while, during the period that – ‘A thocht ee’d com ti the door the teime that A was oot’ [ECS], ‘Yow be gettin a wheen mae soort the teime at A’m rowe-in thir yins up’ [ECS], ‘…men war layin on an chaappin, …the teime a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’ [ECS].

timmer (ti-nur) n., arch. timber – ‘For faix! should e’er a faeman daur To drive a nail into her timmer’ [JOHa]. ‘The leaves appear as they’d been steept In the ric blude o’ simmer; Nae hand o’ airt can imitate The hues that deck the timmer’ [TCh].
timmer breeks (ti-nur-breeks) n., arch. Humorous name for a coffin – ‘Ye’ll be forced on to try Your timmer breeks’ [JOHo].
timmersome (ti-nur-sum) adj., arch. Timorous.
timmer-tuned (ti-nur-choon’d) adj., arch. Having no ear for music, tone deaf (literally ‘timber-tuned’).
timous (ti-mis) adj., arch. Opportune, timely, keeping proper time – ‘…to the effect timeous tryall and inspection may be taken, whether such families or persons can live and subsist upon their own, without being troublesome and burdensome to the said incorporation’ [BR1699], ‘…Thomas Hardie, merchand, to carie the said Colour to the said incorporation’ [BR1706], ‘…and they were only rescued from the perilous situation by the timeous arrival of some of their neighbours’ [EM1820] (there are spelling variants).
timously (ti-mis-lee) adv., arch. Punctually, early – ‘…to attend their respective posts on ye day following, without and within ye church, and to be timeously thereat’ [PR1717], ‘And finding that they have lost considerably through their not lifting the annual rents timeouslie …’ [PR1724] (there are spelling variants).

Timpendedean (tim-pen-deen) n. Ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglases. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendedean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is surrounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglases, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. The Laird of Timpendedean was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by tin

William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpendean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been liferented in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. David Brown was a servant there in 1801. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower. The tower is about 29 ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikimm, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘din pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tympynden’ in 1499/1500, is ‘Tympyndane’ and ‘Tympanedene’ in 1504, ‘Tympenenden’ in 1540, ‘Tympintone’ in 1551, ‘Tympondane’ in 1557, ‘Tympenden’ in 1584/5, ‘Tympenden’ in 1590 and 1610, ‘Tymphindaene’ in 1600, ‘Tempandeane’ in 1655, ‘Timponden’ in 1680, ‘Timpendedan’ in 1714, ‘Timpintone’ in 1739, and is written ‘Timpentown’ in 1858; it appears to be ‘Tymptoun’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Tymptoum’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Timpedene’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Tindall (tin-dal) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Tynadale’.

tine (tin) v., arch., poet. to lose, suffer loss, mislay, forget – ‘...and runs fra the West to the east, till it go in to Tweed at Kelso, and there tyne its name and is in length 26 miles’ [MGC1649], ‘Farewell, he cry’d, I maun gae o’er the hill, But I will see ye soon, or tyne my skill’ [CPM], ‘Come on, come on’, cried Lucky Skrae, And dinna tyne the waye’ [JTe], ‘If ye tyne heart ye tyne a’’ [JTe], ‘...Or find a midge ’mang dockens tyne, An' darkness fa’ in’’ [JoHa], ‘I gat ane frae the priest, nor is it tyn’d yet, Sae lang time syne, guidfaith! I dinna mid o’it’ [JoHa], ‘Their love for thee they never time Thou bonnie Border toon’ [RH], ‘The mither tongue, what Scottish heart Its memory wad tine? The lightsome days o’ happy years, The blinks o’ langsyne’ [JT] (also written ‘tyne’).

tink (tink) n., ins. short for ‘tinker’, a somewhat derogatory name for a Traveller, someone who moves from place to place doing casual work and buying and selling things – ‘the right gypsies were fine, it was they tinks that aye left a mess ahint them’, more generally a mischievous child (see also gypsy).

tink (tink) v., arch. to mend, solder – ‘Tink, to river; including the idea of the noise made in riveting; a Gipsy word, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Tinkers’ Knowe (ting-kuru-now) n. hill on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, between the Teindside and Back Burns and east of Commonside Moor. It reaches a height of 301 m.

tinkler (ting-kur) n., arch. a tinker, metal-worker, itinerant pedlar – ‘And on 4th july of the same year a tinkler is fined for giving ‘insolent and irreverent language...’ [DMW].

the Tinkler (thu-tink-lur) n., arch. nickname for John Scott, tenant in Harwood in the latter part of the 16th century.

the Tinlee Stane (thu-tin-lee-stain) n. the Tinlee Stone, near Peelbraehope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Cattrail. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Horns-hole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the westside of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Broun and their children were: Robert; Thomas (b.1677); George (b.1679); Agnes (b.1682); and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’; as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy (probably including the unnamed baptism in 1684). The witnesses in 1684 were George Young and William Purdom. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675 and another for William Bryson in 1680. John (c.1775–1844) son of Robert. He was William Wilson’s first apprentice in 1790. He later lived in the Fore Row. He was there in 1841, with his sister Ann, and recorded as a woollen hose sorter. Perhaps the same stockingmaker John was listed on the men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; in 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797’ and he was probably the John listed as ‘Constable’ in Hawick on the 1801 ballot. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Birneyknowe. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk.

Joyce nee Cavers, known locally for her beautiful singing voice, making ‘The Fairies o’ a’’ her own. She has served as President of Wilton Dean Women’s Institute and Chair of Hawick Saxhorn Band, and has been involved with the Bright Eyed Daughters. In 2015 she became the first woman to propose one of the main toasts at the Common Riding Dinner. She sings ‘The Fairies o’ a’’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) and ‘Soft Lowland Tongue of the Borders’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Richard (1772–1851) son of James and Ann White, he was baptised in Roxburgh Parish. He was a servant at Turn in Kirkton Parish according to the 1801 ballot. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Birneyknowe. He was at Kirkton by 1802 and in Wilton from 1810. In 1802 in Kirkton he married Isobel, daughter of Francis Oliver, tenant at Turn. Their children, baptised in Kirkton, included: Mary (b.1803); Anne (b.1805); Isobel (b.1807); and James (b.1809). The same couple also had children baptised in Wilton, including: Helen (b.1812); Margaret (b.1815); and Christian (b.1817). The family emigrated to Canada and he and his wife were buried at Binbrook, Ontario.

Robert (1672–aft. 1725) eldest son of John and Agnes Broun. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1702, 1704, 1705, 1707 and 1710 he witnessed baptisms for his brother Thomas. In 1697 he was fined by the Magistrates for publicly insulting John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, resisting the payment of a fine to the incorporation, and refusing to go to the Tolbooth. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for Janet Bruntfield (wife of Walter Laing), in 1707 (along with Thomas) for Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’ younger, in 1712 for weaver Robert Turbull, in 1714 for Alexander Stewart, dyker in Hawick, and in 1717 for weaver Robert Wight. He was later quartermaster of the weavers himself along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). In 1721 he was recorded as a weaver when he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver Andrew Jardine. He and Walter (probably his brother) witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Stevenson in 1722. He is probably the weaver Robert who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas (probably his son) in 1725. He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Purdom (surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother) and carrier John Aitkin. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also Beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim ‘hae dune’. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with ‘Hawick for ever and independent’ (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a ‘blackneb’. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) ‘Tinlin & Hardie’ paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for ‘watching the town after fire’. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the ‘yule fees’. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1791 in a letter preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for Adam Thorburn and in 1792 another for James Mein. He also witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1804 and 1811. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – ‘Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to herd a Craw’ [WIS]. Robert (19th/20th C.) farm worker, who moved to Rulewater about 1879, working at Cleuchhead and then becoming hedger at Wolfelee estate. He married Jessie, daughter of Robert Minto, gamekeeper at Wolfelee. Thomas (b.1677) son of John and Agnes Brown and brother of Robert. He was a weaver like other members of his family. He and Robert witnessed a baptism in 1707 for Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’ younger. He married Bessie Dryden in 1701 and their children were: Jean (b.1702); Nicholas (b.1704), a daughter; Euphan (b.1705); Anna (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1702 included his brother Robert, in 1704 were his brother Robert along with merchant Robert Brown, in 1705 were Robert again along with Adam Brown ‘headhouse elder’, in 1707 were Bailie Robert Brown and his brother Robert again, and in 1710 were Bailie Robert and his brother Robert. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. He is probably the weaver Thomas who (along with Robert, possibly his father or brother) witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter (perhaps his brother) in 1725. In 1719 he married Janet Liddell, who was ‘servant to ye Lady Burnfoot’. Their children included: Isobel (b.1720); and Euphan (b.1725). John (b.1722), with the mother’s surname given as ‘Riddel’, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Robert Scott of Burnhead and in 1725 were weavers Robert and Walter (who had a child baptised the same day). Walter ‘Watt’ (c.16th C.) said to be a retainer of the Scotts of Buccleuch, holding a small tower in Liddesdale. He was a shoemaker by trade, but became famous as an expert archer, and supposedly shot the Captain of Bewcastle through the thigh. He was the inspiration for the fictional ‘Watt Tinlinn’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and hence fact and fiction are hard to separate – ‘If I cannot sew’, retorted Tinlinn, discharging a shaft, ‘if I cannot sew I can yerk’ [SWS]. Walter (d.1761) probably son of John and Agnes Brown, although possibly a grandson. He was a weaver in Hawick from at least 1715. He and Robert (probably his brother) witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Stevenson in 1722. He is witnessed a baptisms in 1725 for weaver Thomas on the same day that Thomas and Robert witnessed a baptism for him; they were surely all related, perhaps as brothers. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of John Tinlin of Kirklands, Ancrum. Their children were: Christian (b.1725), who married a Langlands; John (b.1727); Ann (b.1729), who may have married Robert Farquharson; Robert (b.1737), ‘Rob the Naig’; and Agnes (b.1744), who may have been the mother of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. Isabel, who married John Grierson, may have been another daughter. Witnesses to the 1729 baptism were ‘Mr’ Chisholme and Thomas Watson and to the 1737 baptism were merchant William Tuhope and surgeon James Scott. Walter ‘Wat’ (b.1677) son of ‘Rob the Naig’ and brother of ‘Wull the Naig’. He was assistant to his father and a shoemaker by trade. He was known for his strength of character and quick temper, which ran in his family; it was said that his ‘angry word, like his father’s, was quickly followed by a blow’. He liked to claim the it was his ‘forfadder yat fetched the flag off Flowden Field’. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw in 1796. William ‘Wull the Naig’ (c.1763–1836) another member of the family of Burgh and church officers. He was probably a son of ‘Rob the Naig’, and was a cousin of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. He may have been Beadle at St. Mary’s for a while. However, he was known as a half-wit, who was tormented by youngsters with shouts of ‘Naig, Naig’ or ‘splonsters’. He became a beggar, but had the same blunt, outspoken nature as his ancestors, and was often involved in street skirmishes. He was a common figure around the town in the early 1800s, living near the bottom of the Fore Row. He is listed as ‘Will the Nag’ in the death register (also ‘Tindlin’, ‘Tinlan’, ‘Tinline’, ‘Tinling’, ‘Tinlinn’, ‘Tynlin’, ‘Tynline’ and other variants).
Tinnis (ti-nis) n. lands in the Yarrow valley, between Hangingshaw and Yarrow. Modern maps show ‘Old Tinnis’ and ‘Tinnis Farm’. There were Crown lands here from around 1456, held by Sir James Liddell for his fee as Ranger of Yarrow, then John Murray from 1488, with Alexander, Lord Home thereafter. In 1494/5 Thomas, George and Robert Mark and David Pringle were recorded there. It contained some of the King’s flocks in 1502. Alexander, Lord Home, had a charter for the lands in 1512. James Pringle held the lands in feu according to a rental roll of 1541, with rental of £50. In 1551 the lands were inherited by Alexander, Lord Home from his father, George, Lord Home and in 1564/5 there was a decree by the Lords of Council that those inhabiting the lands remove themselves, namely the Stewarts and Pringles, as well as their tenants. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries; there was a letter of reversion between the Pringles and Homes regarding these lands in about 1606. Thomas Scott ‘callit of West Tynnis’ was in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1617. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there in 1653 and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century (also written ‘Tinies’, ‘Tynies’, ‘Tinny’, ‘Tynnis’, ‘Tynes’, ‘Tynnes’ and variants, as well as ‘Tunies’, ‘Tynnes’, etc.: the origin may be the Cumbric ‘din’ for ‘fort’ or ‘refuge’; it is ‘Tinnise’ and ‘Tinnes’ on Gordon’s maps, and ‘Tinny’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Tinns’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, with Old Tinnis being marked ‘Tynnis’ and ‘Tennis’ by Gordon and Blaeu, respectively).

Tinnisburn (ti-nis-burn) n. former lands in Liddesdale. ‘Over and Neather Tynnisburne’ are listed among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 (it is ‘Tenesiburn’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561., is ‘Tynesburne’ in 1580, ‘Tynesburne’ in 1599 and ‘Tynneisburne’ in 1605).

Tinnis Burn (ti-nis-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows roughly south-east to join the Liddel near Burnmouth (it is ‘Tunies burn’ in 1718).

Tinnis Burn see Tinnis Witter

Tinnisburnfit (ti-nis-burn-fi) n. former farmstead in lower Castleton Parish, on the north side of the Tinnis Burn, where it meets the Liddel Water (it is marked ‘Tinnisburnfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnisburnheid (ti-nis-burn-heed) n. former farm in Liddesdale, presumably on the Tinnis Water. It is ‘Tynneisburnheid’ in 1632 when listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale.

Tinnis Hill (ti-nis-hill) n. hill south-west of Newcastleton, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway. It reaches a height of 404 m, has a triangulation pillar and some remains of ancient cairns, sheepfolds and terraces. A wooden bowl found there, possibly neolithic, is in the Museum. There are cairns and standing stones to the south of the hill. The lands there were formerly a farm, valued at 6 pounds in 1541, and vacant at that time. There is another Tinnis on the Yarrow (including Tinnis Farm and Old Tinnis), another in Southdean Parish, east of Chesters (with an ancient settlement) and one more (with an ancient castle), near Drumelzier, between Peebles and Biggar – ‘High Tinnis is crested with flame as of yore, And flings its broad glare down the Solway’s red tide’ [Fi] (it is ‘Tyneshill’ in 1541; it is ‘Teinies hill’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Tinnes hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is also marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnis Hill (ti-nis-hill) n. another name for Hoodie’s Hill in Southdean Parish. The fort on the east side is so recorded in the R.C.A.H.M.S. listings, and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Tinnis Witter (ti-nis-wi’ur) n. Tinnis Water, also known as Tinnis Burn, stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Tinnis Hill and meets the Liddel near Kershope. It is said to have once been heavily wooded and ‘the residence of freebooters’ – ‘Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now’ [WL] (it is ‘Tynnisburne’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map; the origin may be the same as ‘Tinnis’ in Selkirkshire, namely the Cumbric ‘din’, meaning ‘fort’).

Tinniswood (ti-nis-wood) n. T. (19th/20th C.) composer of the piano tunes ‘Cornet’s Lancers’ and ‘Cornet’s Schottische’. He also organised a local orchestra in the early 20th century.

Tinniswud (ti-nis-wud) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Tenaswd’ in the c.1376 rental roll of the area. They were there valued at 9 merks. ‘Tyneswoodgrene’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. It must have been somewhere on the Tinnis Burn, but the precise location is unknown.

tint (tin’) adj., pp., arch. lost, mislaid, forgotten – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ [inscription at 25 High Street, and at the Text House toanterith (tän’-ee, tän-tee-ith) n. twentieth (cf. the more common toantyith).

toasts (tööts) n., pl. these form an important part of many Common Riding functions. By tradition the Cornet’s Toast is the verse of ‘Teribus’ that starts ‘Annual since, our Flag’s been carried …’, that of the Acting Father is ‘Magistrates! Be faithful trustees …’, while the Right- and Left-hand men get ‘They are Jolly Good Fellows’. The toast to the memory of Drumlanrig is always pledged in solemn silence. Other toasts might include ‘the Provost’, ‘the Council’, ‘the Lasses’, ‘Absent Teries’ and ‘Safe Oot, Safe In’. Dinners typically end with ‘Cornet’s Up’.

tobacci (to-baw-ki) n. tobacco, plants of the genus Nicotiana, brought back from the New World from the 16th century and prepared for smoking or taking as snuff, originally believed to have remarkable medicinal properties. Like elsewhere in Europe, social customs were to change utterly with the arrival of these dried leaves. The first record in Hawick is in 1652. There were attempts to grow it in the Borders from about 1778, with successful farms near Melrose and Kelso, but the business was scuttled by changes to agricultural laws – ‘Persewit be John Scott, merchant, for payment to him of £6 10s. worth of tobacca pypis, broken be him in carrying of thame out of Edinburgh’ [BR1652] (also bacci).

tocher (to-chur) n., arch. a dowry, marriage portion – ‘…fye luird merkis for the mariage and tochir of James of Douglas, my sone and ap-erand are, wyth Jonet, the dochter of the said Dauid …’ [SB1470], ‘…the said Walter Scot, knicht, payand the toqhir to the said James …’ [SB1519], ‘…for, if she canna reckon kith an’ kin, an’ bring a heavy tocher, she can boast of a tight shape, a lily skin, an’ a heart filled wi’ the fear o’ God’ [JTe], ‘… That tell the tocher o’ a leal Scots lass, The oat-gleam o’ a hert that’s true’ [WL] (see also toccher).

Todholes (tod-hölz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todholys’ in c.1376, with rental valued at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Toddellis’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, valued at 5 shillings and with Christopher Armstrong as tenant; given the position on the roll, its location is somewhere near Mangerton (the origin could be ‘fox hollows’).

Todholes (tod-hölz) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers, listed in the 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers, as ‘Denummains, called Todholis’ (or ‘Todeholis’). In the 16th century Helena Douglas was heiress of ‘Todehils’ when she married Robert, 3rd son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. It was listed as the principle ‘messuage’ of the demesne lands of Denholm in 1687 when part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas and when inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todhold’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholeside (tod-höl-sid) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standezanerig’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).

Todhunter Grain (tod-hun’-ur-grañ) n. stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinnis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain, As I fancy I see him on the ‘Todhunter-grain’’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1801 was James Scott. In 1851 the farmer was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the ‘Todha’ near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).

Todlaw Wells (tod-law-welz) n. plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

to-draw (too-draw) n., arch. ‘To-draw, a resource; a refuge; something to which one can draw in danger or straitening circumstances, Teviot: ’ [GW].

Todrick (tod-rík) n. older variant of Todrig.

Todrig (tod-ríg, töd-ríg, -rij) n. farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Laudir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Lauder from there was convicted of reset, communing with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the superiority of the lands to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. John Hay granted the lands to Stephen Lauder in about 1512; it was then in the Barony of Olivercastle through annexation. William Lauder inherited the Lairdship as heir of Stephen and in 1535 he announced that his tenant William Scott should be ejected from the lands. Katherine Gray had the right in 1538 to remove the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig was cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focis’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). Thomas Cowan was gardener there in 1709. John Hendry was living there in 1710. The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Robert Brown was living there in 1787–89. The estate was valued at £576 in 1785 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1862 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjoining farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one with the date ‘1698’, the other having the initials ‘G P’ (probably for George Pott), together with a lozenge and inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’. A mill is marked nearby, on the opposite side of the Todrig Burn, on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A bronze tripod pot (probably dating from around 1500) found there in 1956 is in the Royal Museum of Scotland. There is a farm of the same name south of Greenlaw, and another east of Eccles. One of these places (or more than one perhaps) gave rise to the surname ‘Toddrick’. The arms of Scott of Todrig bore a star and 2 crescents and the family motto was ‘Pro aris et focis’ (for home and hearth) – ‘First came Todrig, Then came Woll, Last came Whitlsaid. The Chief of the Water Ail’ [CWS] (the name occurs as ‘Todholerig’ in a charter of the late 12th century; the house is marked as ‘Todrigg’ and ‘Todrig’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps, ‘Todrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Todrig’ on Adair’s c.1688 map and ‘Todrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; also formerly spelled ‘Todrick’, ‘Todrick’, ‘Toderick’, etc., it was ‘Todderig’ in about 1250, ‘Toddryk’ in 1355, ‘Todryk’ in 1450, ‘Todryge’ in 1638, ‘Toddrigg’ in 1644, ‘Todrige’ in 1678 and 1682, ‘Todridge’ in c.1680, ‘Todrige’ in 1694 and 1710, ‘Todridge’ in 1720, ‘Todrige’ in 1761 and ‘Todridge’ in 1785 and 1787; whether the origin is ‘fox ridge’, or something else, is unknown).

Todrig (tod-rig) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled ‘Todrick’, and he may have had a connection to the local estate. He was also ‘domino Alexandro Todrik capellano’ when he witnessed a land transaction in 1502. Archibald (15th C.) described as ‘of Todrick’ when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same ‘Archibaldus Todryk’ who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibaldi Todrich’, Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. David (16th C.) son of Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He is recorded as witness to several documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–44. In 1536/7 he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Stephen Wilkison. In 1542 he was listed as ‘serjeant’ and in 1543 he complained about a transaction with Simon Fairley. He was witness to a transaction in 1544. David (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He may be the David recorded in 1561 in Selkirk when he made an agreement with Robert Robson ‘in Hauyk’. A tenement formerly pertaining to him is recorded in Selkirk in 1579 and he was a Burgess in 1580 when he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a dispute between Bailies in Selkirk. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as ‘Todrick’ in 1552. John (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled ‘Todrick’. Robert (d.bef. 1537) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1527. In 1528 and 1534 he witnessed documents in Selkirk, along with his son David. Also in 1528 and 1534 he was recorded as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was a ‘special tenant’ in the 20 shillingland of East Haining, wadset to John Scott, Burgess of Selkirk. He was deceased in 1536/7 when his son an heir David succeeded to his lands and money in Selkirk. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘Thomas Todrick, serjeand’ in an Edinburgh document of 1548. Perhaps the same Thomas was a traveller when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1551. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Tothrik’ in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as ‘of Todrig’ in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as ‘Willelmus Todryk’) in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled ‘Todrick’, ‘Todrick’ and ‘Tothrik’) several times in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King’s cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Todrig Burn (tod-rig-burn) n. stream that flows to the east out of Shaws Loch and past Todrig, before joining the Ale Water (it is ‘Todriggburn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Mill (tod-rig-mill) n. former mill near Todrig farm. William Riddell was miller there in Todrig Shank

1617. It is possible that he was the miller of ‘Todrig mylne’ who was said to have killed Robert, only son of Simon Scott of Bonnington, leading to the retaliatory murder of Walter, 3rd son of Walter Scott of Harden in 1616. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 and John Glendinning in 1781 (it is ‘Todrig Myyne’ in 1617, ‘Todrigg Miln’ in 1763 and ‘Todrigg miln’ in 1781; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Shank (tod-ri-gshawngk) n. former name for a place, presumably close to Todrig. It is ‘Todrik Schank’ in 1581 when it was the location where an agreement was signed by Walter Scot of Bondie lands, Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, John Scot of Roberton and William Dalgieish in Crookston, relating to a dispute between Adam Scott in Bonnington and Robert Scott of Haining.

Todscleuch (todz-klooch) n. former fortified house in the Liddel valley, near the present Steeleroad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as ‘Todcleuche alias Todcleucheside’ in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at ‘Todscleughside’ in 1797 (marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Todscleughside’ appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘Toddiscluchsyde’ is recorded in 1659 and is is ‘Todscleughsyde’ in 1694; the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated ‘Todcleuch’ near Canonbie).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawhaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the ‘haugh’ was added to the nearby farm later. In any case ‘Todshaw’ is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Turnbull, Isobel Renwick, John Turnbull, Janet Turnbull, Walter Fairgrieve, William Henderson, Sarah Rule, Michael Renwick, John Aitchison, Janet Scott, Mark Col tart, Janet Paterson, William Grierson, Mungo Brand, Isobel Shortreed, Marion Scott, Marion Brand and Grisel Hall. It was included within Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithope Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Robertson Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents there in 1694. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Miller was there in 1703, Walter Scott in 1710–15, John Jackson in 1711, William Helm in 1720, John Stavert in 1720–26, Patrick Blaikie in 1722 and John Scott in 1725. It was sold by William Scott of Thirlestane in about 1750, with John Murray of Philipehaugh having a charter in 1753 for these lands, as well as Whitfield and Mervinslaw. It was owned by John Murray of Philipehaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763–67, George Coltart in 1767 and Walter Armstrong in 1789. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map (while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268 m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleuch joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288 m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm (recorded as ‘Todsaw’ in a 1588 contract and again in 1643; the name is presumably related to the fox).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. James (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull in Robertson Parish in 1681. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Jean Kin near in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1684); John (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Scott and George Riddell. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Robertson for James Scott and Janet Elliot (formerly ‘Totchaw’).
Todshaw Cleugh

Todshaw Cleugh (tod-shaw-klooch) n. stream that rises near Todshaw Hill and runs in a north-easterly direction to join the Borthwick Water to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshaw Dean (tod-shaw-deen) n. area along a stream in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn. The stream rises on Rotten Moss, where it was known as Rotten Moss Sike, and runs southwards to eventually join the Todshaw Sike and become the Wilton Burn.

Todshawhaugh (tod-shaw-, to-pee-hawf) n. farm a mile or so along the Borthwick, opposite Highchesters. It was along a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 167 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Branxholme Park, Branxholme Mains, Todshawhill and Whames. It was also stated to have some stands of ash and birch trees. There was a William Turnbull there in 1426. It was among lands exchanged by Thomas Inglis of Manor with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It is probably the lands of ‘Todshaw’ held by Robert Scott in 1463/4, and Robert Scott was there in 1484/5. John Scott ‘of Todshawhaugh’ is recorded in 1492 and Robert Scott ‘in todshawhalch’ in 1493. The tenant in 1549 was Walter Scott, who was one of the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned the year before by a group of English and Kers. William Scott, who resided at Whames was also listed in 1549 as ‘alias callit Wille of Todschawhauch’. Through the 16th century it was held by a branch of the Scotts. In 1627 it is described as paying ‘6 bolls in stok, 1 boll half boll in tenyd, 3 lb. in vicarage’. Walter Scott from Todshawhaugh was recorded in 1628 when he was accused of cutting down some of Scott of Buccleuch’s trees on his park there. Robert Gledstains ‘pr Todshchauch’ (portioner there) signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. There were eleven ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Gledstains, Agnes Rule, James Scott, Andrew Cook, Agnes Davidson, Helen Wilson, Margaret Scott, Helen Robson, Walter Hogg, Isobel Scott and Lilias Armstrong. In 1650 John Renwick and ‘Pail’ Murray were tenants. Walter Cavers was there in 1680. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. Rev. Thomas Shiel and John Cuthbertson were tenants in 1672 and 1673, Thomas Shiel himself in 1675 and Thomas Shiel and Walter Scott in 1677. The minister was also recorded as tenant of the farm in 1690-93 and with his son Thomas also there in 1692. Robert Langlands appears to also have been tenant here in 1686. The householders recorded there in 1694 were Thomas Shiel, Thomas Turnbull, Robert Murray and Thomas Stavert, with Agnes Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. William Shiel (also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. James Grieve was recorded there in at least 1712-23, James Brydon in 1725 and Robert Govenlock in 1727. It was also the site of a blacksmith’s in the 18th and 19th centuries. John Scot was there in 1765. Walter Grieve (of Branxholme Park) farmed there in the late 18th century, until he died in 1800. The farm was then leased to Robert Scott of Singlie. Walter Armstrong was living there in 1800. In 1812 the residents included tenant Robert Scott, hind David Laidlaw, ploughman John Hobkirk and labourer Robert Murray. In 1841 Walter Scott was farm steward there and the residents at the cottages were Turnbulls and Millers. The flat land on the south side of the Borthwick there is known as Todshaw Haugh, and the hill to the west is Todshawhaugh Hill (also spelled ‘Todshawhauche’, etc., it first appears as ‘To-dishalch’ in 1426, is ‘Todschauch’ in 1446, ‘To-dschawhalch’ in 1486, ‘Todshauhauch’ in 1490, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1492, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1549, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1580/1, 1591 and 1594, ‘Todshawhaucht’ in 1581, ‘Todschahau’ in 1627, ‘Todshahau’ in 1628, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1648, ‘Todshaw-haugh’ in 1678, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1692, ‘Toitchaugh’ in 1694, ‘Todshahau’ in 1714, ‘Todshahau’ in 1721 and ‘Todziehaugh’ in 1757; it is ‘Todshawhauch’ on a 1650 parish map, appears to be marked simply ‘Hauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Todshaw Haugh (tod-shaw-hawf, -hawf) n. flat land on the south side of the Borthwick Water, just to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshawhaugh Hill (tod-shaw-hawf-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Harden Bridge, and to the south-west of Todshawhaugh farm. There are remains of a hillfort and earthworks on the northern spur. The nearly circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter has been almost obliterated by ploughing on the eastern side. The ditch of the ridge -fort appears to connect with this and runs for about 20 m to the south-west, with traces of a rampart along its inner side. A little further south is a peak called Ladies’ Seat, which is a little higher.
Todshaw Hill

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil, to-jee-hil) n. hill above Chapelhill and Todswahill farms, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (northern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The farm is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitcastle Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, between Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean, just to the east of Mabonlaw farm. It reaches a height of 268 m, and can be easily confused with another hill of the same name near Chapelhill farm, on the southern side of the valley.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill to the north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2½ miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Braxholme Mains, Braxholme Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a lo-Todshawhillshiel

Todshawhillshiel (tod-shaw-hil-sheel) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Todshawhill. William Lawson was recorded there in 1716, James Thomson in 1721–26, John Stavert in the 1770s and Robert Riddell in 1788–90. William Scoon and Robert Riddell were there in the 1780s and George Michie was shepherd there in 1799 (it is ‘Todshanga Hillshiel’ in 1771).

Todshawkip (tod-shaw-kip) n. former name for lands near Todshaw. Robert White was recorded there in 1721 when a child of his was baptised in Roberton Parish.

Todshaw Loan see Wester Loan

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream behind Highchesters Hill. It rises near Muckle Knowe, runs around Todshaw Hill and joins Wilton Burn. The upper part was once part of the southwestern boundary of Wilton Common.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor’s Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of mediæval and post-mediæval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called ‘Todcleuchside’.

Tod Sike (tod-sik) n. small stream that rises on Cockplay Hill and joins the Twislehope Burn just to the west of Twislehope farm.

Todsteed (tod-steed) n. Todstead, former farm in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todstedde’ and with a value of 4 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It is unclear where this was located.

toff (tof) n., ins. a member of the upper classes, or more generally someone with a strong ‘proper’ English accent – ‘... a toff cam in wi’ bulging pack And dumped it in the pend’ [WL].

toft (toft) n., arch. a homestead, farmstead and attached land – ‘... the lands of Sheilswood, with houses, buildings, yards, tofts, crofts, outlets, parts, pendicles, and pertinents thereof whatsoever’ [DCW1712] (the word survives in the names of several farms, e.g. Tofts, Toftfield, Toftholm and Kirkton Tofts).

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Toftes’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in toftis’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbulls ‘of Tofts’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Toftis’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Toftis’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘topt’; it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c.1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Tofts’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘SINGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. John (19th/20th C.) carter in Hawick. He lived upstairs at No. 3 Silver Street. His wife was Bessie and their children included: Robert, who was wounded twice in WWI; and James (b.1917), who was killed in Belgium and commemorated on the Tyne Cot Memorial. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’INGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was ‘persone ecclesie de Cauers’. He settled the amounts due on the lands of ‘Ethrestone’ (probably Adderstone), which had been forfeited by Robert ‘of Ethrestone’ to the English Crown. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Wilhelmus de Toftys’ in 1363 when he was Rector of ‘magna Cauers’. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier ‘of Tofts’ family.

the Tofts (thu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftholm. It is probably the ‘Toftys’ recorded as being in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Toftholm into a farm covering 329 acres, bounded by Shawls, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscoat, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tafts-hiil) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial photography has a sown 2 rectangular enclosures, some field banks and some rig lines to the south west of there.

Toftsholm Sike (tafts-hoom-sik) n. small stream that rises at Thiefsike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Toftholm).

Tofts Knowes (tofts-nouz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-ge-dur) adj., arch. together – ‘...were outlawed for being found togedder by the church censers, after the tenn hour bell was rung’ [BR1702], ‘...the present Baylycas, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, having convened and called togidder the towne Counsell ...’ [BR1706] (also written ‘togidder’; cf. the more modern the-gither).

Toilets (toi-lits) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howe-gate, the Cross Wynd, the Museum and Volunteer Park. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 ‘necessary’ and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Towerdykeside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tö-jö) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tök-lee) n. Albert Victor ‘Vic’ (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croall, Bryson. He was an all-round sportsman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committe member of the Archaological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing ‘The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies’ (2004), which was completed by his daughters Anna and Jill, with the help of Jules Horne. A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

the Tolbooth (thu-töl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick’s former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a ‘humble and primitive erection’ with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including ‘bigging of thair tolboith’. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, ‘set out to the south corner of Horsliehills House’ (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house or ‘under tolbooth’ should be leased. A staircase was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-limed. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping ‘wild beasts’ in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word ‘Tolbooth’ was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – ‘The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof . . . ’ [BR1608], ‘Item, whatsoever person that shall be committed in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘Walter Scott . . . bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith . . . ’ [BR] (also spelled ‘Tolbooth’ and ‘Tolbuith’).

tolerat (to-le-ri’) pp., arch. tolerated – ‘. . . was ordered to bring a testimony from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirkton, failing which he would not be tolerated to stay in ye toon’ [PR1717].

the Toleration (thu-to-le-rä-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll (töl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

the Toll (thu-töl) n. name sometimes given to any of the former tolls, particularly the Loan Toll.

toll-bar (töl-bawr) n. a beam placed across a road at a toll house, to prevent carriages from passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a ‘turnpike bar’. There were toll bars every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers. Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or ‘Auld Wester Toll’), Easter Toll, Dovemount Toll (or ‘North Toll’) and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written ‘toll bar’).

_toll-house_ (tōl-hoos) _n._, arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing examples include those at the Wester Toll, Greenbank (Robertson), Colterscleuch, Fiddleton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

_the Toll House_ (thu-tōl-hoos) _n._ name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road.

tolls (tōdz) _n._, _pl._ one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads. In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade’s roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1750. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6–8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Hill. There are the remains of a farmstead, a cottage was known as Greenbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Tolm (tōm) _n._ former place name in Liddesdale. On the 1863 Ordnance Survey map a small plantation in the middle of ‘The Steel’ is marked ‘Tolm Tourick’ (presumably meaning a little tower). Perhaps this was the claimed site of the former tower-house of Steele.

tomati (to-ma’i) _n._ a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’, You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’.

tombolo (tōm-bō-lō) _n._ former name for bingo, in use around the 1950s.

tombstone (toom-stān) _n._ a tombstone – ‘...but also named on the family tombstone in Duns Kirkyard’ [IW].

tome (tōm) _v._, arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘To tome, toum, to draw out any viscous substance into a line, Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘ti toam taffie’ [ECS], to undergo drawing out into a rope, be drawn out into a line – ‘It cam towmin’ out’ [JoJ], ‘To hing towmin’ down, to hang in the manner of saliva from the lips’ [JoJ] (also written ‘toam’; cf. _taw_ and _toum_).

Tomes (tōmz) _n._ Alan ‘Toomba’ (?) _–_ rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastle area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6 ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomscotsteed (tōm-skō’-sted) _n._ former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomscotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) _n._ narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hallrule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of High Tofts to Douglas of Cavers as a way of protecting him from any attempts by Eliott of Stobs to force him off his land (as he had done to Turnbull of Denesyde). The field still survives, just east of the Dean Burn, to the left of the A6088 a little before Hawthornside.

the Tongue (thu-tung) _n._ spur of land in Castleton Parish, between the Green Burn and an unnamed tributary, situated north-west of Kirk Hill. There are the remains of a farmstead, a cottage and a sheepfold there. The farmstead may be 18th century; the cottage was known as Greenburn, and probably the farmstead also. At the southern end of the spur are further enclosures and ‘lazy-beds’.

the Tongue Burn (thu-tung-burn) _n._ small stream that joins the Braidlie Burn a little to the north-east of Gorrenberry, on the north side of the Hermitage valley.

tongue-ruits (tung-ritz) n., pl., arch. roots of the tongue, especially in the phrase ‘at one’s tongue-ruits’, meaning ‘on the tip of one’s tongue’ or about to be said – ‘It was at ma tung-ruits ti cry on the hoantry affair’ [ECS].

tongue-tackit (tung-faw-kee’) adj., arch. tongue-tied, mumbling, inarticulate because of drunkeness or having something in one’s mouth.

Tonke (tongk) n. Walter (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1296. He was probably a clerk of the English King’s household.

toober (too-bur) v., poet. to beat, thrash – ‘An’ sall begin sall begin til toober his fella-servents, an’ til eet an’ drink wi’ the druken’ [HSR].

tooch (tooch) n., arch. the sound of a gunshot, pop, imitation of a pop-gun.

the ’Too’er see the Toor took (took) n., arch. a tuck, pleat, a tug, pull, an excess of food or work, surfeit – ‘A’m deed-teird: excess of food or work, surfeit – ‘A’m deed-teird: ’[BR1699], ‘But the toum-clock cheery chimes owre a’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘toum’).

toom (toom) adj., arch., poet. empty, unoccupied, vacant – ‘But, let me tell ye, gin yer pouch be toom, sirs . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘Toom as a teapot newly dreepit, Ae single plack, or I’ll be wheepit!’ [JoHa], ‘. . . an’ when he is come he fin’ith it toom, swupet, an’ decket’ [HSR], ‘. . . Mr. Spunk’ll be lyin’ lookin’ up at St. Mary’s Kirk wi’ a green blanket ower his toom ribs . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘He was tired and wat and the big creel was toom’ [UB], ‘We view them now baith toom and empty pouches’ [RF], ‘. . . Leaving the toum shafts o’ the trap To mock his fuddled ee’ [WL], not running, idle – ‘A stane-nappin in-jin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’ [ECS], ‘. . . toom to empty, particularly a drinking glass – ‘Ane faster than another strives, In tooming toil-filt’ purses’ [JoHa], ‘. . . An’ play his pouch a pliskie – Will toum’d this night’ [JoHa], ‘An’ aye we ca’d the ither cog, An’ toom’d the reamin’ horn!’ [JT] (also spelled ‘toum’, ‘tume’; see also tuim, etc.).

toom-tail (toom-tail) adv., arch. empty-handed, without a load – ‘To Cum back Tume-tail, to go away with a load, and return empty, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

toon (toon) n. a town – ‘There came a queer bodie unto oor toon . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘There’s a toon, o’ toons the pride That stands on bonnie Teviot side’ [JLH], ‘. . . Frae the silent slopes on my native toon’ [TC], ‘. . . On earth, Hawick is the only toon The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS], formerly any settlement situated at a major farm – ‘John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the touns following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with Closses’ [PR1717], ‘Were ye e’er in Hawick town? Gin ye hae, then fill your glasses’ [GWe], arch. a farmstead, adj. relating to a town – ‘. . . that no other toune or landward heritor of tenements and houses within the said burgh . . . ’ [BR1699], ‘But the toum-clock cheery chimes owre a’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘toun’).

the Toon Book (thu-toon-book) n. the official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records. The first such book that still exists was begun by Gilbert Watt on 1st October 1638 and was continued by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681. Many other books followed, listing the official business of the Town, including details of cases before the Magistrates’ Court, etc. They are crucial pieces of early historical information about events and people in Hawick, as well as the language – ‘. . . quhillikis premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toum-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641].

toon clerk (toon-clerk) n. town clerk, an official appointed as secretary to a town council, keeping records and performing administrative duties – ‘Item, whatsoever persons gevis unrevrent language to the bailies, minister or towne-clark, sal pay £10 after tryal . . . ’ [BR1640], ‘. . . for calling Gilbert Watt, Toon-Clerk, ane suckler, and for other injurious words’ [BR1650].

the Toon Clerk (thu-toon-clerk) n. the Town Clerk of Hawick. Originally he was appointed by the citizens to keep the town records and to perform other legal duties. He was chosen by the Burgess every 2 years, the only official to be elected rather than appointed by the Council. The first recorded one was ‘Hew Counston’ or ‘Cowstoun’ in a single Privy Council document of 1612, and then Andrew Sword is recorded in 1630. The earliest existing ‘Town Book’, recorded by the Town Clerk, has its first entries in 1638. The Gladstains and Purdom families gave many decades of service to this office. The Town Clerk used to lead the march around the Burgh boundaries when the riders returned from Riding the Common. It was said in 1711 that he was ‘now and then in custom to get ane burgess complimented over to him’ (i.e. had his income supplemented by the occasional burgess fee). In 1720 he was awarded 10 shillings yearly for pen, paper and ink. In 1836 it is recorded that the Town Clerk was appointed biennially by a poll of Burgessesses and paid 10 shillings annually, as well as receiving fees for courts and other services. The first full time appointment was not until 1937, and the position was dissolved along with Reorganisation in 1975. An approximate list follows (although some dates are far from certain): Hugh Cowston 1610s; Andrew Sword c.1620–1630s; John Richardson 1630s–1638; Gilbert Watt 1638–1650s; James Liddell 1658–1659; Andrew Tunno 1659–70; Andrew Rutherford 1670–c.73; Walter Gladstains 1673–96; William Rutherford 1696; Walter Gladstains c.1696–1710; Walter Gladstains and Walter Gladstains (second) 1710–18; Walter Gladstains (second) 1718–39; James Weir c.1732–61; John Gladstains c.1763–70; James Winthrope 1760s (jointly with John Gladstains); James Weir (second) 1770; John Gladstains 1770–83; James Winthrope c.1783 (possibly); James Inglis 1790–810; John Oliver 1810–41; James Wilson 1841–62; Thomas Purdom 1862–86; Robert Purdom 1886–1924; John Purdom 1924–1936; Robert F. Pollock 1937–38; Robert Barbour 1938–68; and William Hogg 1968–75. Bill Hogg was the last Hawick Town Clerk, moving to Roxburgh District in 1975.

the Toon Cooncil (thu-toon-koon-sul) n. Hawick’s Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quartermasters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called ‘the Eternal Council’. The newer Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government Reorganisation, when power was removed from the burghs and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

the Toonfit Kirk (thu-toon-fi’-kirk) n. the Townfoot Church in Newcastleton, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Burgher congregation, which would become the United Presbyterian Kirk.

toonfitter (toon-fi’-ur) n., arch. someone who lives at the lower end of a town.

the Toon Hall (thu-toon-hall) n. the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. This itself replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884–86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. The tower contains a clock, with 4 faces and bells ringing the quarter hours; the roof includes 2 separate weather-vanes. The complex contains the Council offices, the old Council Chambers, the former Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. The back part (off the Cross Wynd) was once the police house, while the basement has the old police cells and was set up for use as a nuclear shelter. The building is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building. Outside is a datum level of 352 ft elevation marked and another plaque commemorates the former site of the South Fort – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’ [AB], ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonheid (thu-toon-heed) n. Townhead, former name for the top of the town, i.e. an area around the West Port. It was used as a location in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (e.g. for Slater Robert Elliot). The Ordnance Survey map of 1863 marks St. Leonard’s farm as ‘Hawick Townhead’.

the Toonheid (thu-toon-heed) n. former name used for the top part of Denholm village, at the west end.

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’ in 1601 and ‘Tounhead’ in 1692 and 1694; it is ‘Toune head’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

toonheider (toon-hee-dur) n., arch. someone who lives at the upper end of a town.

the Toonheid Port (thu-toon-heed-pör’) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (thu-toon-heed-töl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the privilege of setting up a drinks tent on the Moor at the Common Riding. He may have lived at St. Leonard’s farm during some periods and in the cottage at Hawickmoor at others. In 1733 it is recorded that a herd was selected for horses pasturing on the Common, which was presumably a different person than the main Herd. In 1755 the building of a ‘herd’s house’ is recorded, this presumably being somewhere on the Common. In the following year 1 shilling was ‘given the herd when his child was almost burnt to death’, and so there was perhaps a fire in the house. It is unclear when the first Herd was appointed, but the position was discontinued in the latter part of the 19th century. In 1836 it is recorded that the Herd was paid £20 annually. Those filling the appointment included: William Palmer (recorded in 1707); Adam Hobkirk (recorded in 1713); Walter Scott ‘Crooked Wat’ (early 18th C.); Mungo Armstrong (c.1720–c.44); James Armstrong (recorded in 1740); Robert Hobkirk (c.1752–c.57); James Wilson (late 18th C.); William Elliot (from at least 1800); Andrew Ormiston (until 1853); and James Cairns (from about 1853) – About the year seventeen hundred and ten, Walter Scot was ‘Town Herd of Hawick’ [C&L], ‘...the pond was scythed for thatch every year in the auld days be the toon herd whae bade at St. Leonards ...’ [IWL] (also ‘Toon Hird’).

the Toon House (thu-toon-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s previous Town Hall, also sometimes called the ‘Council House’. It was built around 1781 on the site of the old Tolbooth, and was an unpretentious building with a tall steeple and an outside staircase. It had a thatched roof and was ‘of a homely description, the rafters, visible from beneath, giving it the appearance of a common barn’. It incorporated a bell (at a cost of £24, 14s.), to complement the one at St. Mary’s in order to call the curfew. Part of it was rented out for dancing lessons, singing lessons and lectures in the late part of the 18th century. One of the 6 wells fed from the Sclider Springs stood beside it from 1797. In one of the last vestiges of feudalism the weight house on the ground floor was owned by a tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch (‘tacksman of his Grace’s customs); the Duke contributed £100 to the cost of the building, plus half the cost of paving the streets at the time. There were considerable additions to the steeple in 1806 and a clock was inserted in 1809. The top of the steeple also held a weather cock. The door in the steeple at the first floor level, with its projecting ledge, was known as the ‘Oyes door’ and was used for the reading of proclamations. The ground floor on the Cross Wynd side had open arches, which were closed at night with iron gates. This was the location for meal and butter markets. The Council Chambers were upstairs. There is a single surviving photograph from about 1880. The building was demolished in 1884 to make way for the new Town Hall.

the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li’-ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying ‘stent nor lott’. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer’s Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ā-rol) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bonchester Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are is now no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1353 there is a record of ‘Thome Turnbull et Andree alias Dauid Turnbull’ who were tenants there. This could be the ‘towne in Tevedall caulyd Rowlie’ burned by John Musgrave’s men in 1542. The ‘town’ was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562 as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhill on the east and those of Hawthornside and Holehouse on the west. It is probably where Jock Tait ‘in the towne of Halingrule’ was recorded in 1586/7. ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. Walter Amos and Robert Paterson were there in 1739. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century. Gideon Wilson was herd there in 1751. Thomas Rule was there in 1788. In 1805 it was sold off by Sir William Elliott to John Wilson of Hallrule, and at that time was also referred to as being the east part of ‘Over or Outer Halrule’. William Mabon was farmer in the 1860s. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The cottage on the north side of the farm was known as ‘North Town-o-Rule’, referred to by locals as ‘Drythroppe’, and renamed ‘Heathfield’ for a while. An old well there (built in circular form) was called ‘Dobie’ or ‘Dubbie’, and probably corresponds to the well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun’s reflection off ‘Cloon Craig’ on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Toun o’ Roul’ and variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is ‘villa de Rowle’ in 1535, ‘Toun of Roull’ in 1694 and ‘Toun of rule’ in 1739; it is ‘Toû [i.e. Toun] of Roull’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, but appears incorrectly as ‘Tour of Roul’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Toù of Roull’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Toon-o-Rule Burn (toon-ō-rool-burn) n. Town-o-Rule Burn, stream, running to the north-west of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and joining the Hallrule Burn.

Toon Piper (toon-pi-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word ‘piper’ was also synonymous with ‘fifer’ in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both ‘pyper’ in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for ‘pypping at bridals’ and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick’s piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town’s piper was fined for playing through the town after the fair; it is recorded that he played the ‘great pipe’, which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703 the town’s ‘officers, pyper, and drummers’ were to be paid for ‘coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702’ and were also allowed ‘to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly; this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, ‘Jafra the Piper’, is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called ‘Fouller’ was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John ‘Meader’ (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantyne in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellowman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved ‘that the piper shall not be any longer continued’, and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as ‘late piper Hawick’ when his daughter died in 1810; however, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’. John Halliday wrote a poem ‘Davie’s Dead’, published in 1847, which appears to be about a piper. The Common Riding Procession of 1894 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fife 'and the pipers'. 'Hawick Pipe Band' traces its roots to 1937 – 'The town's piper, for his not revelling, on going on the fair not playing with the great pipe thro the haill town, is fined £100 Scots' [BR1700], '...the pyper is only allowed four pounds Scots to buy him ane coatt' [BR1713].

toony (too-n ee, too-n ee, too-n tee-ith) n. – if e'er no in bed be the time A coont ti toonty ... , 'Look ... Owre yonder, Dye see him?' Teh, toonty pund, I'm shair. Toontyith (too-n ee, too-n ee, too-n tee-ith) n. twentieth (also toontyith).

Toor (toor)n. a tower – 'Ther was a certain houshauler ...bigget ane tooner, an' let it out til husbanmen ...' [HSR], 'Grey are the stanes o' Drumlanrig's toor o' the Border' [IWS], v. to tower – 'There, at the yeh hand, tooered the threeeple Eldoons ...' [ECS] (also spelled 'toor', 'toore', 'tooner' and 'tour').

Toor Brig (toor-brig) n. occasional name used for the Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig near the Tower Knowe.
the Toor Burn

the Toor Burn (thu-toor-burn) n. stream that runs from above Spittal Tower to join the Rule Water at Spittal-on-Rule.

the Toor Close (thu-toor-klos) n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig's Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that 'trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture' were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets' Board.

Toordykeside see Toor Dykeside

Toor Dykeside (toor-dik-sid, tow-ur-dik-sid) n. Tower Dykeside, short street linking Slitrig Crescent with the Tower Knowe. The name derives from the wall which once encircled the Tower on the south side. It is a relatively new street, since the Tower is believed to have sloped down to the Slitrig perhaps as recently as the 18th century. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are all parts of the former Tower Hotel, which is grade B listed. The wall along by the Slitrig was mostly swept away in the flood of 1846 – 'And though the matin bells have not yet rung Their usual peal unto the world wide, Alert with joyous life both old and young Their steps are wending to the Tower Dykeside' [JCG] (sometimes 'the' Tower Dykeside, occasionally one word, and also formerly 'Toor-gate-side'; it is 'Tower Dyke side' on Wood's 1824 map).

toorfle (toor-ful) v., arch. to come to grief, perish – 'I'se r¯ ad he'll toorfel' [GW] (this variant said to be from Liddesdale; cf. torfel).

Toorgateside (toor-ga-sid) n. former name for Tower Dykeside. Before the wall was built the ground at the foot of the Tower sloped into the Slitrig (also written 'Toor-gate-side' or 'Tower-gateside').

the Toor Hotel (thu-toor-hōtel) n. Drumlanrig's Tower, during the days it was used as a hotel, also known as 'the Tower Inn'. This phase of the building's history started in 1773, and continued until 1981. The landlords used to farm fields at the Wellogate, with an onstead in Bourtree Place (which became the Con Club site). The ballroom inside was used for dances, theatrical performances and other social functions in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. No. 7 was formerly known as 'Kedie's Buildin', but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – 'I wish taeguidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too'r Knowe and no bother me wi' eer blethers' [JEDM].

toorie (too-ree) n. a bobble on a woollen hat, or the hat itself, particularly a knitted dome-shaped cap.

the Toor Inn (thu-toor-in) n. usual name for the Toor Hotel in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The first landlord was Michael Steven- son, from 1773, followed by Robert Armstrong for about a decade. Thomas Scott was a ploughman employed by the Inn in 1799. William Brown ('Billy', d.1839) was landlord in the early part of the 19th century, then John Fenwick (with William Crozier as long time hostler) and later Frank Fenwick. The landlord farmed some land up the Wellogate and had some space for stabling where the Con Club was later built. A coachhouse for the inn stood where the Exchange Buildings were built in the 1860s. Wordsworth stayed here in 1803 and the first Burns supper in Hawick was held here in 1815. In the 1830s, being the Town's polling station, it was the focus of troubles during several elections.

the Toor Knowe (thu-toor-now) n. area in front of Drumlanrig's Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its northern side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the 'deuil tree' upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as 'Kedie's Buildin', but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – 'I wish tae guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too'r Knowe and no bother me wi' eer blethers' [JEDM].

the Toor Knowe Brig (thu-toor-now-brig) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.
Toor Mill

Toor Mill (toor-nil) n. Tower Mill, built over the Slitrig approximately where the ‘Auld Brig’ once stood. It was constructed on the site of an earlier mill by William Elliot & Sons in 1852. The building is 3½ stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. There was strong disagreement about whether to demolish or renovate the building, but it was saved by the Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative in 1998. With funding from the European Union rural development funding, Scottish Borders Council and the Scottish Arts Council, it was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

Toor Mill Dam (toor-mil-dam) n. Tower Mill Dam, name sometimes used for one of two short mills lades in the centre of Hawick. One fed Tower Mill from the Slitrig, with the cauld being at the foot of Slitrig Crescent. The other was effectively an extension of the Back Dam, running under the Tower Knowe to power the original Hawick Mill on the Mill Port.

gathered at the home of James H. Ross and organised a Common Riding celebration of their own. It took place on 1st July (Canada Day) in High Park, with W. Matherston (who had lost a leg at Flanders) as Cornet and C. Ingles and W. Corbett as Right- and Left-Hand men, respectively. There was a replica flag, which was bussed, pipe music, a ‘snuffin’, Hawick songs, (non-alcoholic) beverages, races, a speech by Alex Craighead (from Galashiels), and all in over 30°C temperatures. Matthew Leydon probably served as Cornet in 1925. In 1926 the Cornet at High Park was Telfer Anderson Huggan, and the replica 1514 flag was bussed by Edith Whillans. In 1927 the Cornet was James Miller and the Lass was Annie Steele.

Torsonce (tor-sins) n. area on the Gala Water to the south of Stow, for long an important seat of the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Torwoodlee (tor-wood-lee) n. Georgian house north-west of Galashiels, built near to some older ruins, which were home to the Pringles. The tower dates from 1601 and replaces the one that was sacked in 1568. This was an attack by John Elliot of Copshaw and perhaps as many as 300 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Beatties and Grahams, when the master of the house (George Pringle) was murdered and a huge amount of loot stolen, including silverware and 17 horses. In the latter part of the 15th century the lease of the farm was granted to the Ranger of Tweed Ward for his fee. It was supposedly home of the Pringles. The last Clan Chief was John the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Nearby are the ancient ‘Our Lady’s Well’ as well as the remains of a chapel.

trades (trädz) n., pl. short for for the incorporated trades or incorporations, which in Hawick were the weavers, hammermen, skinners and glovers, fleshers, coroners or shoemakers, tailors and baxter. The weavers and coroners existed from before the earliest Burgh records, with the hammermen incorporated in 1686 and the skinners in 1694. About the beginning of the 18th century it is recorded that the Burgess of Hawick included 26 merchants, 18 carriers, 20 weavers, 10 tailors, 8 coroners and shoemakers, 10 wrights, 5 gardeners, 2 bakers and 2 candlemakers, as well as glovers, fishermen, thatchers, dykers, cooper, cassayers, brewers, pipers and pedees.

the Trades (thu-trädz) n. Hawick Trades, a ‘junior’ rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. It was formed in 1946, with first President Jimmy Murray, other founding members being Tom Wright and Andrew Middlemas, and with Jock Imrie and Tom Reid being long-time club stalwarts. The club grew out of efforts in the War years to keep rugby going, with teams from the B.B.'s, local mills, High School and the ‘Combined Trades’. After the War this latter team joined the South District League and Border Junior League as ‘Hawick Trades’. The team used to change in the old Baths, and later established clubrooms behind the Waverley Bar. They joined the Linden in 1963 in renting the facilities at the Volunteer Park. The team had an annual tradition of playing Welsh club Glynneath since 1956. They were also the first local junior team to tour abroad, at Pesaro in Italy. They played in sky blue tops with white shorts and navy socks. In 2004 the team withdrew from the league due to a lack of players, but the club continued as a social venue for former players. A history, ‘The First Fifty’, was published in 1995. Minute books and accounts exist from 1946. There was also a basketball section in the late 1940s.

the Tradesmen’s (thu-trädz-minz) n. the Tradesmen’s Handicap, the most prestigious race run on the Friday of the Common Riding and the ‘blue ribband’ of the flapping circuit. It is run over about 7 furlongs, with the first race being in 1884 (although a race with same name, run over 1 mile, is recorded in 1875). It probably grew out of the races for the ‘Trades’ Purse’ recorded in the 1830s, and the ‘Operatives’ Plate’ or ‘Trades Operatives’ Purse’, which were recorded being run in the 1840s to 1860s. Mr. Nichol’s ‘Ravenscraig’ won in 3 consecutive years, 1934–36 and the feat was repeated by Miss McGhie’s ‘Amandale’ in 1946–48. Sybil Howe presented a shield for the race in 1979 – ‘Well Jock that’s eet by agin, it was tremendous guid, Backed the wunner o’ Tradesman’s a’m in her fifty quid’ [MB] (see also the Operatives).

Tranter (tran-tur) n. Nigel (1909–2000) writer, born in Glasgow and educated in Edinburgh. He wrote over 90 Scottish historical novels, and also the 5 volume study ‘The Fortified House in Scotland’. His ‘Cheviot Chase’ (1953), set in the 1930s and 40s, is about a modern eminity between the towns of Hawick and Hexham caused by the Hornshole events, ‘Balefire’ (1958) is set in the Borders right after Flodden, while ‘Portrait of the Border Country’ is a useful work of non-fiction. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1957 and was made an honorary life member of the Hawick Archaeological Society after giving a talk in 1986.

Trantfille (trawn-tee??) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale, recorded in a 1525 ‘letter of reversion’ between Simon Armstrong and George, Lord Home. The name occurs in a list between Unthank and Fiddleton, although the precise location is unknown (the origin may be related to that of ‘Tranty-fit’ etc.).

trantie (trawn-tee) n., arch. a person who is intelligent above his or her station (once a common term, cf. the Tranties, Tranty-fit, and possibly Tibbie Tantry; origin uncertain, but perhaps related to Middle English ‘trant’, a trick, or the provincial ‘trant’, a pedlar; the word seems to be peculiarly local, but was already obsolete by the 1850s).

the Tranties (thu-trawn-tees) n., pl., arch. popular name for two sisters from Hawick who died about 1814 (according to James Wilson), Marjory and Isobel Hume. For about 30 years they kept a lodging house for beggars, near to the Auld Brig. They were said to be ‘rather more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humbug condition of life’. They are also mentioned in ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The lang story’ [JAHM].

Tranty-fit (trawn-tee-fi) n. Tranty-foot, supposedly a witch, sister of ‘Speed-o’-foot’ who lived at Goldielands. It may also have been a name for one of the two towers of Goldielands – ‘...The wonder-working witches Tranty-foot and Speed-o’-foot, the occupants of Goldielands Peel’ [RW] (probably related to trantie, applied to someone who was so clever as to be suspected of witchcraft).

Traquair (truk-wair) n. house south of Innerleithen, in a secluded valley of the Quair Water. It is reputed to be the oldest home in Scotland, being lived in continuously since 1107. It is associated with several Scottish Kings of the 12th and 13th centuries, as well as with the Stuarts and the Jacobite cause. Prince Charlie was entertained there by the 7th Earl in 1745. The ‘Bear Gates’ (or ‘steekit yetts’) were reputedly closed at that time, never to be reopened until a Stuart sits again on the throne (although there are other stories). Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here in 1566. The present structure is probably a 15th century core with alterations through to the 18th century. It is owned by the Maxwell-Stuarts, and now open to the public. The brewery in one of the wings of the house was built around 1700, although brewing on the site is even older. Brewing ended there in the late 19th century, but was restarted in 1965 (the first record of the name is ‘Treverquyrd’ about 1124; it is ‘Tracquhair’ in 1507/8, ‘Tracquar’ in 1527, ‘Trocquair’ in 1564/5 and ‘Trakwair’ in 1574; the first element may be the old p-Celtic ‘tref’ for ‘farm on the Quair’).

He was the first such M.P. in 1868, winning subsequent elections in 1869, 1874, 1880, 1882, 1885 and 1886 (three of which were bye-elections on account of his appointment to senior government posts). Later in 1886 he lost to A.L. Brown by only 30 votes, the election campaign being focussed on the issue of Home Rule. By this time he was a Unionist, rather than a Liberal. There are existing letters from him regarding subscriptions to Selkirk Races in 1872 and 1877. He held appointments as Secretary to the Admiralty, Chief Secretary for Ireland and also Scottish Secretary. He is perhaps best known as biographer of his uncle Lord Thomas Macaulay, and for his more famous sons George and Charles. Trevelyan Terrace is named after him.

Trimontium (tril-mon-ti-um) n. Roman name for the Eildons, where there was a substantial fort, occupied from the late 1st through 2nd centuries. It was one of the most important sites on the northern frontier of the Roman Empire in those times, and guarded an important crossing of the Tweed. It was probably built around the year 80 and abandoned around the year 200 and not rediscovered until the building of the railway line in 1860. The fort itself covered about 15 acres, with an area of as much as 200 acres occupied. At one time it probably held about 1500 men from the 20th Legion ‘Valeria Victrix’ (Valiant and Victorious), with perhaps 1500 civilians living outside the fort. Many of the items recovered in the excavations are in the National Museums of Scotland, but some are in the Trimontium Museum at Newstead. The Trimontium Stone, a granite monument, was erected by the Edinburgh Border Counties Association in 1928.

Trinity Lands' from early times. These lands were part of the endowment of the Hospital Church of Soutra in the 14th and 15th centuries. Soutra was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and also known as ‘Trinity Hospital’, with a well there, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, being known as the ‘Tarnity Well’. This hospital was annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, which had been founded by Mary of Gueldres (widow of James II); the church lay at the foot of Calton Hill, and was demolished in 1848 because of railway development. The Hawick lands appear to have been among those owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. They gave their name to Trinity Street and Trinity School, as well as later (indirectly) to St. Ninian’s Road. The naming of the new Trinity Church (not in the old Trinity area) has somewhat confused the geography.

The Trinity Bar

Trinity Gardens, public gardens below Trinity Church, near the Horse. It is a popular hang-out spot for youngsters. The gardens were renovated and a new band-stand built in 1999. The land was once known as the Wheathole, and was later the site of the East Bank Kirk – ‘Doon at the Horse, on a sunny day Sittin’ on a Trinity sate Or lookin’ up at Wulton Kirk Man it’s hard tae bate’ [AY].

Trinity Haugh

former name used for flat area by the river associated with the ‘Trinity lands’. This land was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch and was drained and feued in 1875.

Trinity Kilnhill

former name for an area south of Weensland Road, roughly opposite Trinity steps, and also known as ‘Kilnhill’.

Trinity Kirk

Trinity Church, off Brougham Place. It was built in 1843 to replace the old East Bank United Free Church meeting house, which stood lower down. In 1958 the three congregations of St. John’s, St. Andrew’s and East Bank joined together to become Trinity, when East Bank was renamed and the other two closed. The congregation was linked with Cavers and Kirkton in 2004. The building is set within its own grounds and has a session house and vestry at the south-west corner. The design is relatively plain and the architect is unknown (sometimes wrongly attributed to William Burn). It was extended to form a T-plan in 1872 and redecorated by William Jardine in 1892, with halls added in 1896. A pulpit and organ case, designed by Alexander Inglis, was added in the early years of the 20th century. The organ was installed in 1911, boasting 1,182 pipes, built by James Jepson Binns of Bramley Organ Works in Leeds. The church, session house, vestry and halls are grade C listed building. A roll of the ministers includes: Dennis Leadbeater 1960s; Lindsay Thomson 1972–2008 (the name comes from the 3 churches, and is unrelated to the Trinitylands to the east).

older name for the Trinity area of Hawick, dating back probably to the 14th century, and a connection with Soutra, also known as the ‘Trinity Hospital’. The same lands were also known as the ‘Soutralands’, since they were originally part of the endowment of Soutra, although the reason for this is not known. The boundaries and full extent of the lands are also unclear. In 1472 there was a court action brought by Sir Edward Boukle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church, against Thomas Blair, for rent on the lands. They were confirmed to Trinity Collegiate Church by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1507. They are described (as ‘Soltacroft’) in a 1557 charter, as lying between ‘Ladyland’ to the east, the lands of the town of Hawick to the west, the highway to the south and the lands of West Mains to the north. In 1565/6 they were again leased to William Scott ‘in Hawik’ and his son and heir Robert; they are there described as lying between Ladyland, lands pertaining to the town of Hawick, and the West Mains. At least some of the lands were gained by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, since the inventory drawn up after his death in 1578 states that he ‘conqueist the Sowtre landis in Hawik’. In 1627 it was a ‘three merk land called Trinity land’ estimated as ‘paying presentlie 20 bolls’ and possessed by the Lord of Buccleuch and Walter Gledstains of Dod. In 1628 Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch complained that several Hawick men had cut down trees on ‘his lands and barony of Brauxholme and Trinity lands of Hawick’. In 1692 the lands were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1696, it is included in a list of lands owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh; this could refer to part of the lands, perhaps the same as ‘Ladyland’, which was owned by the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1627. In 1748 a small part lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot was exchanged with the minister of Wilton for a part of his lands which the Duke wanted for carrying water to Burnfoot Mill. The name was still used as late as 1907 in plans for the location of new houses in the area (written ‘Trinity Land’, ‘Trinity Lands’, etc.).

Trinity Mills (tri-nii-ee-nilz) n. main factory of Hawick Hosiery Company on Earl and Duke Streets (and not Trinity Street, as the name might suggest), now the home of Hawick Cashmere Company, or ‘Hawico’. It was built in at least 1888, when it was occupied by Renwick & Raeburn, then the Raeburn brothers 1889–97. It was occupied by Messrs. F. Knox Cowie & Co. 1906, but that collapsed after about a year. Hawick Hosiery Company moved in in 1911 and was rebranded as Hawick Cashmere in 1990.

Trinity Schuil (tri-nii-ee-skil) n. Trinity Primary School, previously situated near the top of the steps on the south side of Weensland Road, to the east of the entrance to the Miller’s Knowes. It was built in 1876, and apparently originally called ‘St. Mary’s’, but changed its name when the new St. Mary’s School was built at the top of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils from St. Mary’s Parish School and another school which formerly existed in Weensland. The school moved to its present location in 1935/36, the architects for the new building being Reid & Forbes of Edinburgh. It was constructed with a raised ground floor to protect against flooding. The former building was demolished and council houses built on the site in 1955. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1915–53 are in the National Archive and log books for 1873–1906 in the Borders Archive. William Murray was first Headmaster, from 1876 and Bill Srimgeour from 1950.

Trinity Steps (tri-nii-ee-steps) n. Trinity Steps, unofficial name for steps leading from Weensland Road down to the bottom of Trinity Street. There are 56 steps.

Trinity Street (tri-nii-ee-stree) n. street running off Weensland Road, named after the Trinity lands, the former name for the area, relating to lands once owned by the church at Soutra. The main houses were built in 1885. It has long had a hotel at the top, and the primary school is at the bottom. At the corner with Earl Street there was Lizzie Fordyce’s grocer’s shop in the earlier part of the 20th century, becoming J. Wood’s.

Trinity Thistle (tri-nii-ee-thi-sul) n. Trinity Thistle Football Club, a rugby club from the Trinity area, existing before WWI. It may also have been referred to as ‘Trinity Union’.

trinkle (trin-gkul) v., arch. to trinkle – ‘Yll Waeter ... trinklin ti its treist wui Teiot’ [ECS].

But hei trippit in the straw As a wheelin’ maul came roond like a herd o’ kye’ [DH].

Trip ti Hawick Jig (trip-ti-hlk-jig) n. composition by Scottish accordion maestro Jimmy Shand, in 6/8 time.

trivage (tri-veej) n., arch. a wooden partition between stalls in a stable or cowshed (there are spelling variants; used by both Scott and Hogg).

trock (trok) v., arch., poet. to barter, peddle, deal with – ‘Trocked, whiles, wi' smuggled brandy – Unless I dae him wrang' [DH], ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock ...’ [WP], ‘Whut'rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel: It's nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deill’ [DH], n., poet. a bargain, trade, deal – ‘... And the feck o' the trock they took away, Ye wadna hae cairdied hame' [WL] (also written ‘trok’; see also truck).

trodge (troj) v., arch. to trudge – ‘But happy gae lucky, we’ll trodge on our way’ [HSR], ‘A was telld that if A was for a richt denner A wad need ti trodge on ti Jethart’ [ECS].

troke (trök) v., arch. to trade, barter – ‘... Troked whiles wi' smuggled brandy’ [??], n.
truck, trade, dealings – ‘...An' hides ilk wee bit secret troke, An' sma' transgression’ [JR] (cf. truck).

troosers (trö-urz) n. trousers – ‘Forfochen at the seams As a gaugrel's troosers’ [DH], ‘...they taen on anybody in a per o troosers’ [IWL], ‘... a wumin can rin fer faster wae it skirt up than a man can wae iz troosers doon’ [MB].
troot (troo', troot) n. trout – ‘A toddlin' troot, and a toddlin' troot, And a wee bit Bonnie toddlin' troot: If ye search a' the water aboot, Ye'll no' fin' siccan a toddlin' troot’ [T], ‘Now a man that would net bairth the fish and the troots. And troots that i' the Tei'ot tipple’ [DH], ‘Mebbe they've a' gien up at last And taen to catchin troots ...’ [DH].
trot (tro' , troit) n. trot, used in the phrase ‘on the trot’, meaning ‘in a row’, one after the other – ‘A got picked thrice on the trot’.

trooth (trooth) n., poet. truth – ‘...Sae weel's ye're harness'd, and sae trig, In trooth ye sit like ony bride. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘An’ muckle mair I cannna name, In troth I think but little shame ...’ [JoHa] (cf. trowth).
trottit (tro'-ee, tro-ti') pp. trotted – ‘...As he trotitt aboot on his short bit legs, Watchin' the rin o' play!’ [DH].

Trotter (troy-ur') n. Adam (18th/19th C.) joiner in Knowetownhead, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. He was recorded as joiner at Hassendeane on Militia ballot for 1799 and 1801. His is probably the Adam, son of James, baptised in Minto in 1775. Charles (20th C.) road surveyor. He purchased Wilton Bank from Robert Lindsay Watson in about 1950. Gavin (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as ‘Student of Physic’ at Knowetownhead, in the Lieutenancy Book, among names of men balloted for the Militia. He may well have been son of joiner Adam, who was also listed in 1797. George (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant on the High Street according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of William Beck. Their children were: Margaret (b.1806); Thomas (b.1809); William (b.1816); George (b.1818); Ann (b.1820); and Agnes Fulton (b.1822). James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He is probably the James who married Isabel Hill in Minto in 1734 and whose children included Helen (b.1735), Thomas (b.1739), Isabel (b.1743), Margaret (b.1745), James (b.1747) and Margaret (again, b.1849). James (18th C.) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He could be the son of James baptised in 1747. In 1801 his apprentice Adam Hillson was recorded on the ballot for the Militia. He is probably the James whose children, baptised in Minto Parish, included James (b.1771), Adam (b.1775), Gavin (b.1777) John (b.1781), William (b.1783), Margaret (b.1875), Thomas (b.1789) and James (again, b.1792).

Robert of Bush (18th C.) listed in 1779 as liferenter of a set of lands in Minto Parish, valued together at £433 17s 10s. The lands probably corresponded with what was previously called Deanfoot. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as having formerly been liferenter of these lands. The liferent of parts of Minto was perhaps just to get friends of Lord Minto onto the voters list in Roxburghshire. He was Postmaster General for Scotland. His wife’s portrait was painted by George Romney. William (1816–1904) stockingmaker who was long Secretary of the Hawick Stockmakers’ Association (or Hawick Framework-Knitters’ Society). He was son of George and Sarah Beck. He was a second cousin of Provost Edward Wilson and manufacturer Charles John Wilson as well as a grand-son of William Beck. He may be the William recorded in Selkirk in 1856 in a receipt for furnishings for the Charity School. He married Elizabeth Revell (1818–90) in 1837. They were on the High Street in 1841 and at Howdenburn in 1851. Their children included: Elizabeth (1838–1918); Sarah; William; Margaret; George; Thomas (b.1855); and Agnes (b.1862). William (1845–1923) probably son of William and Elizabeth Revell. He married Margaret Lyon in Hawick. Their children included: Margaret Ferguson (1878–1946); William (b.1880); Matthew Lyon (b.1881); Elizabeth R. (b.1886); and James (b.1889). William ‘Bill’ (1941–2021) son of Bill and Jenny, he was brought up in Wellington Street and spent his entire working life at Pringle’s. He was a bowler, a keen fan of the Greens and supporter of the Common Riding. He studied in Glasgow and was ordained as a minister of the Freek Kirk at Bannockburn in 1897. He later moved to New Zealand.

the Trough Inn (thu-trof-in) n. former inn on the right side of Weensland Road, by the old stone watering trough that remains there. A stockingmaker called Grey is recorded there when he died in 1840.

Trough Sike (trod-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Roan Fell and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn. Near the head of the burn, on the south side is a circular sheepfold, with a carved stone inscribed ‘James Elliot, Shepherd Sept 30’, and a second stone inscribed ‘William Elliot Builder 1820’. Peden’s stone is just south of here.

Troutlawford (trow’-law-ford) n. point that formed the western boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, remaining so until the Division of the Common in 1777. According to the 1767 description of the old boundaries of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison, the Common came to a point here, between the road and the Gate Burn. Given the strange shape of the Common here, and the possibility that the farm of Hawickshiels may have once been within the boundaries of a larger Common, it seems likely that the ford had some special significance, so that it remained within the boundaries. The site is now where the Gate Burn crosses under the road, presumably being a ford in earlier times, and is marked by a plaque. There is an illustration ‘The Troutlawford: Hawick Burgesses on the Trail of Reivers, 1546’ by Tom Scott ‘…the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawford upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’[BR1734] (marked ‘Troutling Ford’ on some earlier maps, it is also sometimes ‘the Troutlawford’: it is ‘Trowlaw Ford’ in 1767).

Trotling Ford see Troutlawford

trow (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – ‘Sae did I trow, because I wiss’d it se; Wi’ hopes, alake! we aft oursels betray’[CPM], ‘He tends me weel I trow’[??], ‘But gin they saw him when they trow he’s sleepin’, They’d fin’ him fou, an’, for ye ken what, greadin’[JoHa], ‘…but I aye trowed the time o’ sic miraculous things was past’[JTe], ‘…And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise the poor’[AD], ‘…for they trow that they sall be heard for their meikle speikin’[HSR], ‘But I’ll gi’e him his gilded la’, – I trow he’s little skill …[JT], ‘They’re some beauty-spots, aw trow, Where the Slitrig wimples throw’[TK], ‘Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi’ the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi’ Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave’[HI], trow (trow) v., arch. to troll, to fish by dragging a line through the water – ‘Heels up, [he] trowed a line through the water – ’Heels up, [he] trowed in the dam outright’[HSR], to waddle, roll about, roll (a hoop, ball, etc.) – ‘Lang may you row, trow, gazzel, swatter’[JoHa], ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; While it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh] (also written ‘trowe’).

trow (trow) n., arch. a small flat-bottomed boat, usually with an opening towards the centre, used for spearing fish, a confined river channel (see also trows).

trowant (trow-in’) n., arch. a truant.

Trow Brig (trow-brid) n. name sometimes used for the bridge over the Teviot at Hornshole.

Trow Burn (trow-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Hornshole, essentially a name for the lower part of the Kirkton Burn. It was said that the recesses around this burn were once hiding places for Covenanters – ‘Twas then the plunderers found a grave where Trow goes purling down; And hence this trophy cherished still, of those Callants who saved the town’ [JEDM], ‘...it was nae teime owregane or oo war birln owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund’ [ECS].

Trowburn Cottage (trow-burn-ko’-eej) n. cottage on the opposite side of the A6088, roughly opposite Beechurst, just outside of Hawick. The Trow Burn passes here. In a field to the west is a sand pit, seen as parchmarks in aerial photographs.

trowen (trow-in’) n., arch. a trowel.

Trowhaugh (trow-hawch) n. lands listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. They are also described in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. They were presumably the same as the Trows, or situated nearby. The description is of ‘ane land’ (presumably meaning a husbandland) ‘estimat to 4 bolls in stok, i boll teynd’ (it is transcribed ‘Troinhauch’ in 1615).

trowin (trow-in) pp., adj., arch. rolling, waddling – ‘A trowin’ walker’ [GW].

trowit (trow-ee’ ,i’) pp., poet. supposed, believed, trusted – ‘But when the first cam’, they trovet that they shud hae gotten mair’ [HSR].

Trow Knowes (trow-nowz) n. farm just outside Hawick beyond Weensland, above Trow Mill. Andrew Nichol was there about 1880 and George Oliver and Robert Murray in 1906 (see also the Trows).

Trowmill see Trow Mill

Trow Mill (trow-mill) n. small woollen mill at ‘the Trows’, on the Teviot, about 2 miles down from Hawick. The factory was built in 1885, and was latterly run by Wrights of Trowmill Ltd. The area formerly held one of the corn mills of the Cavers estate, active up until the late 18th century. William Aitkin and William Borthwick were there in 1684. Archibald Aitkin was there in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths for ‘himself undermiller & kilns’. James Scott was living there in 1724–37, Walter Stevenson in 1744 and Robert Waugh in 1753. William Ferguson was there in at least 1787–92. James Curle was tenant there in at least 1797–1801, Thomas Winthopre was miller in 1801 and Stevan Oliver was servant there. and the millers in 1841 were William Cranston and James Black. Alexander Goodfellow was miller there in the 1850s and Hugh Goodfellow was farmer in the 1860s. Rubble from houses demolished at Lynwood was used to extend the car park there in the 1980s. Known in the latter part of the 20th century for its mill shop and factory tours, it closed, with the site being cleared and redeveloped as housing – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill. ...’ [WL] (also written ‘Trowmill’, it is ‘Trow-miln’ in 1684, ‘Troumilne’ in 1694 and ‘Trowmiln’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Trowsmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Trow Mill Cauld (trow-mil-kawld) n. weir upstream of Trow Mill (near the island in the Teviot there) supplying the former mill lade.

trows (trowz) n., arch. a former small boat used for spearing fish, a confined river channel (see also trows).

Trows (trowz) n. hamlet on the south bank of the Tweed, between Roxburgh Newtown and Roxburgh Barns. It is also known as Makerstoun Trows. There is another place of the same name, and also a stream just south of Windy Gyle in Northumberland (the name perhaps derives from the narrow ‘troughs’ on the bed of the Tweed here, although another possibility is the old Celtic ‘tros’, suggesting a river crossing; it may have the same origin as for the more local area the Trows; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Trosis’).

the Trows (thu-trowz) n., pl. popular name for the area surrounding the Teviot near Trow Mill, and for the farm also called Trow Knowes. Simon Routledge is recorded there in 1494. George Douglas was recorded there in 1502. ‘Trows’ was one of the farms of the Cavers estate, listed as such in 1511. The name is also used in the earliest account of the 1514 incident (Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’) to describe the general location, rather than the word ‘Hornshole’, this being more correct if the skirmish took place on the south side of the Teviot. George Douglas of Trows is recorded in 1517. It was still part of the Cavers lands in 1558. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons in the 17th century. It was inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698, with the mill. James Douglas was there in at least 1694–1705, Archibald Douglas in 1747 and Alexander Douglas in 1791–96. The precise site of the former house is unknown, although it is marked between the Crook and Westcote on Stobie’s 1770 map, and with Trowsmill down by the Teviot at the same time – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T], ‘The lazy Griersons o’ the Crook, An’ Douglas o’ the Trows, An’ Cad- don wi’ his bluddie shears, Fra’ clippin’ o’ his yowes’ [T], ‘Hawick better lo’ed sic needfu’ rows As cowed the English band at Trows’ [AD] (often written ‘Trowes’, it is ‘le Trowis’ and ‘trowis’ in 1502, ‘Trows’ in 1511 and 1517 and ‘Trowes’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Trows’ on Pont’s c.1590 map, is still ‘Trows’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, and ‘Trowes’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; the origin of the name is unclear, but one suggestion is the Old Welsh ‘tros’, which means ‘across’ something, and occurs in other place names associated with river crossings, while another suggestion is ‘trowch’ for a channel in a river bed, or a mill trough).

trowth (trowth) n., arch., poet. truth, truth – ‘Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trowth ye mak me wae’ [CPM], ‘...Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have our doots’ [UB], ‘Thaye stan’ siccer forevir an’ evir, an’ ar dune in trowth an’ uprichtness’ [HSR], ‘...O’ ane trowth thou art the Son o’ God’ [HSR] (also written ‘trowth’; cf. trotch).

truck (truk) n., arch. goods, barter, especially used to refer to the goods formerly recived for part payment of wages in the hosiery trade (see also trock and troke).

trucker (tru-kur) n., arch. a waggish or tricky person (noted by J. Jamieson).

trudget (tru-jii) n., arch. a kind of barley paste used in fixing leaking vessels – ‘Trudget, a sort of paste used by tinkers, for preventing a newly-soldered vessel from leaking. It is made of barley-meal and water, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

The True State ... (th-troo-sti) n. possibly the first book published in Hawick, full title ‘The True State of the unhappy controversy about the Burgess Oath, being a discourse delivered before the Associate Presbytery of Earlston, at Kelso, the 8th day of October 1782, etc.’, published in 1783, written by John Young and printed by George Caw.

True Thomas (troo-to-mis) n. popular name for Thomas the Rhymier – ‘Then up bespake him true Thomas, He was the lord of Ersyltoun: ‘The wizard’s spell no steel can quell, Till once your lances bear him down’ [JL].

truth *(trith, truth) n. truth – ‘...A Wasna boass, – if the truth be telld, A was riffin-fowell!’ [ECS], ‘The truth is that in mony hymnns – as aw kenn’d fu’ weel – there was nae pretension tae observe the speerit o’ the festival’ [BW1939], ‘There’s nae truth in the rumour that the length o his sermons ...’ [WL], ‘...Nae music, truth tae tell’ [WL], ‘...But, tell the truth, the legs inna the same Nowadays. Weel, sin’ auld-age wunna hide’ [DH], ‘...For here’s a truth to shame the deil – A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’ [DH], ‘...A fed ti tell the truth’ [CoH].

truthfi *(trith-fi) adj. truthful – ‘Ilk bodie that is carefu’, thuthfu’, Can no’ get time to take a mouthfu’ ...’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘truthfu’ etc.).

Trumbull *(trum-bul) n. occasional old spelling for Turnbull, now a name in its own right.

Trummel *(tru-nul) n. variant of Turnbull, reflecting the formerly common local pronunciation – ‘But there’s nae reek i Jock Trummle’s house This nicht – an’ nane i mine ...’ [DH], ‘An there’s other families in Hawick caed ‘Turnbull’, an when oo speak about them oo caa them “Trummel”’ [DaS] (also written ‘Trummel’).

trump *(trumf) v. to trump, the suit chosen in a card game to outrank other suits – ‘that’s a stipeet game if ee hev aa the trumps’, v. to play a trump or take a trick with a trump.

trundle *(tru-nul) v. to trundle, move along by rolling or spinning – ‘it Easter oo trunnled eggs it the Miller’s’, ‘...As the warip mills trundle roound’ [WL] (cf. trimmle).

Truslye *(tru-lee) n. former name for lands near Groundestone, just to the north of Hawick, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It was listed in 1535, along with ‘Groundestone’ as when the King revoked a former charter, and so its superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. It is unclear precisely where these lands were.

tuck o the drum (tuk-ö-thu-drum) n. a proclamation made by public crier using his drum – ‘The officers are ordered to banish Elizabeth Miller ... and ordained to discharge, by toucke of drum, all persons from harboring and resetting her’ [BR1695], ‘... to be brunt on the chick with the lette H, and thereafter to be banished the town by touck of the drum ...’ [BR1697] ‘...and ane proclamation to go through the towne at night, by tuck of drume ...’ [BR], ‘...and ordain the same to be intimated this day through the town by tuck of drum accordingly’ [BR1736], ‘...A Cornet there’s been wi’ tuck o’ the drum’ [JEDM] (a familiar phrase in the 18th and 19th centuries).

the Tud (thu-tud) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

Tudhope see Tudhope Hill

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. farm just to the west of Jedburgh, presumably the origin of the surname. There is a holy well on the farm. ‘Jhone off Towdop’ is recorded in the Burgh Court Book of Selkirk in 1523 and ‘William Tudhoip’ in the following decade.

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction between John Johnstone of Hermiston and Patrick Johnstone. Adam (17th C.) tailor in Denholm. He married ‘Gellan’ (or Helen) Dryden in Cavers Parish, probably in about 1675. In about 1684 he and his wife were accused of attending conventicles. He may be the Adam who is listed as a resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish in 1694. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Adam (b.1694). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Clerk there in 1699. He may have been brother of Thomas as well as Janet, who married John Douglas in Cavers in 1707. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Isabella Stewart in Bedrule Parish in 1716. Helen who married John Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1721, and Bessie who married William Mill in 1725 may have been his sisters. Adam (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Marion Oliver in Hawick in 1722. They had a daughter Isabel (b.1723), with baptismal carriers Robert Aitken and mason Robert Mein. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Westerkirk. Their son James was baptised in 1799. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1702 in a case brought by John Turnbull for assault. Bailie Charles (18th C.) merchant of Hawick, he was Magistrate in the 1750s. He witnessed baptisms in 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745, 1747 and 1757, suggesting that he may have been an elder of the Kirk. A ‘lybell’ from him to someone in Selkirk in 1741 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He was ‘of Easter Howlands’ when listed among the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common, but sold the lands to John sharp in about 1763. David (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1536. William Douglas allowed him to grow oats and pasture cattle on the meadow of Friarshaw for the rest of his life. He was presumably a former tenant of the Douglases of Friarshaw. He also witnessed transactions in the period 1538–42. In 1562 he was appointed as executor for Janet Scott (who appears to have been someone else’s wife, rather than his), leaving him her goods and land in Peebles. Probably the same David was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. Francis (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was listed as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1767 married Betty Miller from Roberton Parish. Their children were: John (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Isabella (b.1774), who may have married Joseph Henderson in 1794; Beatrix (b.1779); and Janet (b.1781). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Francis who paid for the use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. Francis (1805–70) born in Hawick, son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Margaret Nutter from London. In 1840 he was selected as a teacher at Grahamstown in the Cape Colony, and went out to South Africa with his wife and 3 young sons, John, James and Francis. Gavin (b.1807) son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Janet Watson (from Galashiels) in Wilton Parish in 1832. He worked as a wool-spinner in Selkirk (according to the 1851 census), and had at least one child, Ann (b.1842). He was listed as a spinner at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. James (17th C.) named on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627, specifically they were said to be ‘fitter to be employed in his Majesties service nor to be suffered loyttering at hame’. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. James (17th C.) recorded as one of 3 men fined for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642. He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1642); William (b.1643); Alexander (b.1645); Walter (b.1647); Christian (b.1650); and William (again, b.1652). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Clapperton and their son Robert was baptised in 1635. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Falla and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1639. The witnesses were Robert and Allan Deans. James (17th/18th C.) brother of Robert. He was called before the Hawick Session in 1717, but excused because he was ‘att Newcastle upon his brother’s service and business’. He could be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. James (18th C.) married Margaret ‘Badie’ in Hawick Parish in 1726. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1761 their children included: William (b.1762); Adam (b.1765), mother’s Christian name given as ‘Isabel’; John (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); Charles (b.1773); and Elspeth (b.1774). The witnesses in 1762 were possibly George Turnbull and Robert Young (but hard to read), in 1765 were smith Robert Young and carrier Robert Chisholme and in 1767 were Robert Lethead and another James Tudhope. He may be the James ‘Tuleup’ whose use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ is recorded twice in 1773. He may be the James who in 1773 witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott. James (18th C.) married Janet Mason in Wilton Parish in 1767. James (18th C.) married Betty Davidson in Hawick in 1784. James (d.1797) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was presumably a carrier, and the same as one of the contemporary Jameses, perhaps the carrier married to Margaret Henderson. He is probably the carrier whose son William died in 1797. His death is recorded in Hawick, where he is stated to be ‘late Langholm Carrier’. James (b.1823) born in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. He was a tobacconist and china merchant at 10 Sandbed. In 1861 he lived with his sister Janet, and his housekeeper was Agnes Huggan. John (17th C.) described as maltman in Cavers in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers’ servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he (along with Adam Ogilvie) witnessed a baptism for James E. . . . He married ‘mellie’ Cowan and their children included Adam (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Scott. John (17th C.)wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with James Boyd, as ‘marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour annent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joyned to John Hardie, William Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers’. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John who married Isobell Huntly and whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1670), Margaret (b.1672), Marion (b.1677) and Jane (b.1679). John (17th C.) flesher on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was also listed as a flesher among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as
Tudhope

Tudhope as the saddler. Robert (perhaps his sister). He may be the same man 1798 and 1801 for Joseph Henderson and Isabel ter (perhaps his brother) witnessed baptisms in.

He is probably the John who, along with Walter (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1778). Perhaps the same Robert is recorded being in debt in documents of 1813, 1814 and 1817. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Marion Pott, who was from Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children included: Marion (b.1699), who probably married a flesher when he witnessed baptisms for wright Andrew Scott in 1704 and for merchant Andrew Turnbull in 1723. He married Helen Gilespie and their children included: Robert (b.1693); John (b.1696); and Alexander (b.1702). The witnesses in 1702 were miller James Paterson and Bailie Patrick Richardson. He witnessed a baptism in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Elliot and in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow flesher Thomas Wilson). John (18th/19th C.) married Helen Lamb in Bedrule in 1704. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1705. John (18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1733 his servant Isabel Wilson complained that someone had tried to drown her at the Cross Well in Selkirk. Probably the same John was recorded in Selkirk in 1717 and 1718, charged with debts and with assault in 1727 and in a further cases for his debts and against someone for non-payment of rent in 1736. It was probably his son who was the John ‘younger’ recorded when accused of assault in 1719 and a claim against debtors in 1720. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick who married Isabel Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1735); Andrew (b.1739); Francis (b.1742); and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and William Sooon, servant to Rev. William Somerville; fellow carrier James Paterson and his wife Helen Ruecastle had a child baptised on the same day. John (b.c.1770) saddler in Hawick who was Cornet in 1798. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799, along with his apprentices Andrew Leggat and William Turnbull. He was still on the ballot in 1801. He could be the John, from Hawick, who is on the list of subscribers for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson and Isabel Tudhope in 1794 and the John who (along with Walter) witnessed another for the same couple in 1798.

John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident married to Isabel Dryden. His wife may have been the Isabel (b.1781), daughter of Gavin Dryden, born in Hobkirk Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1805), teacher in South Africa; and Gavin (b.1807), who married Janet Watson. He may be the son of Francis baptised in Hawick in 1770. He is probably the John who, along with Walter (perhaps his brother) witnessed baptisms in 1798 and 1801 for Joseph Henderson and Isabel (perhaps his sister). He may be the same man as the saddler. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He married Margaret Wood and their children included: James (b.1698); Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Isabel (b.1708); and John (b.1710). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Raesknowe in 1704 and was herd at Over Southfield in 1709. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott and their children included Mary (b.1701), William (b.1704), Robert (b.1707) and John (b.1709). The witnesses in 1704 were John Graham (also in Raesknowe) and Robert Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was ‘servant to Fal- nesh’ in 1708. He married Esther Elliot and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1708, with wit- nesses Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and James Falsyde. Robert (18th C.) brother of James, mentioned in 1717. Possibly the same Robert was married to Helen Scott and had children: Helen (b.1727); Robert (b.1733); and Betty (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Ormiston and their children included Elspeth (b.1723). He could be the Robert who was the second Wilton Common herd, liv- ing at the house at Calaburn from about 1729. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Helen Hardie. Their children included: John (b.1730); Janet (b.1737), who may have married Robert Renwick in 1766; and Anne (b.1741). The witnesses in 1730 were John (who was surely re- lated) and Walter . . . . He could be the flesher who witnessed baptisms for skinner John Cur- rier in 1743 and 1745. This same flesher was in- volved in a pair of court cases in 1748, involv- ing the payment of a debt by Robert Taylor to Thomas Turnbull, in which he was an intermedi- ary. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resi- dent of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Jean, daughter of John Ekron and Jean ‘Dinlap’ (i.e. Dunlop); she died in 1775. He is probably the Robert who in 1768 witnessed a baptism for ma- son William Ekron (perhaps his brother-in-law). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He is recorded in a complaint in Selkirk in 1787. He married Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: Alexander (b.1768); Nelly and John (b.1770); Robert (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1778). Perhaps the same Robert is recorded being in debt in documents of 1813, 1814 and 1817. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Marion Pott, who was from Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children in- cluded: Marion (b.1699), who probably married

Tudhope

Thomas Thomson in 1728; and Thomas (b.1706). Thomas ‘Tammy’ (18th/19th C.) trader in toys and other items at local fairs. He was long remembered in Denholm by a phrase repeated by children, ‘Tammy Tudhope the toy-man!’ and the cry ‘The fair’s begun, yonder’s Tammie Tudhope’. It is unclear where he came from. Thomas (b.1791/2) tobacconist at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably part of the business marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1841 he was listed on the Sandbed and at Teviot Square (probably about 10 Sandbed) in 1851, when he was listed as a master tobacco manufacturer, employing 1 man and 1 boy. His Sandbed shop was seriously affected in the 1846 flood, with the front counter being underwater and water bursting through the back door, forcing tobacco into the street. He married Isabel Murray in 1816 and their children included: Mary (b.1817), who may have married George Porteous in 1848; Elizabeth (b.1819), who probably married Robert Biggar in 1846; Agnes (b.1821), who may have married Joseph Park in 1845; James (b.1823); John (b.1825); Thomas (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); and William (b.1837). Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the original deacons of Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick, married to Marion ‘Thor’. Their son John was born in 1634. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Graham in 1722. She was daughter of Walter Graham (perhaps the Bailie) and died in 1777. Their children included: Walter (b.1727); William (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and John (b.1737). The witnesses in 1729 were Bailie Graham and John Graham (probably his father-in-law and brother-in-law). He is probably the merchant who (along with merchant William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for shoemaker William Tait. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded being ‘with Joseph Henderson brewer’ in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and he was still a brewer on the ballot in 1801. He and John (perhaps his brother) witnessed baptisms for Joseph Henderson and Isobel (perhaps his sister) in 1798 and 1801. He may be the Walter, son of Francis, who was baptised in Hawick in 1772. Widow (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear who her husband was. William (16th C.) farmer at Hallrule. ‘William Tudopis duelling hous and yaird’ are recorded in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. Bailie William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded buying a bag of ‘Irish happenies’ from the Kirk Session about 1711 and becoming an elder in 1723. In 1717, 1723 and 1726 he witnessed baptisms for wright Richard Turnbull, with his surname being ‘Thowdup’ in 1726. He witnessed a baptism for carrier Thomas Porteous in 1720 and for merchant James (surely a relative) in 1723. He is probably the merchant who (along with merchant Walter) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for shoemaker William Tait and the William who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott of Burnfoot in 1723. In 1726 he and Charles (presumably either his brother or young son) had a charter for the lands of Easter Howlands. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Huntly. He is probably the William who (along with Robert Boyd) witnessed baptisms for William Davidson and for Robert Ker in Hawick in 1731. He was elected Magistrate in 1737, although Bailie Burn complained that many of the voters were his servants or were minors. He was Bailie in 1738 when plans started for the building of the Teviot Bridge. He witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller and another for shoemaker George Gardner. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed the baptisms of children of Walter Tinlin and William Oliver in 1737. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for druggist Gideon Scott and was ‘late Bailie’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. He was still mentioned in 1764 in connection with the lands of Easter Howlands, during the legal process for the division of Wilton Common. In 1716 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Robert Scott in Drinkstone. Their children were: Walter (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); Charles (b.1722); James (b.1723); Anne (b.1725); May (b.1728); May (again, b.1730); and William (b.1732). The baptismal witnesses in 1723 were schoolmaster James Anderson and surgeon James Scott, in 1725 were James Anderson (again) and ‘Tacksman’ Robert Elliot, and in 1728 baptism were ‘Mr. Anderson’ and Robert ‘Pote’. He is probably the William who was former owner of lands (in Wilton Parish) that George Hailburton owned in 1788, having been purchased from Langlands of that Ilk. William (18th C.) married to Isobel Riddell. Their daughter Anne was born Tudhope Hill (tu-dup-hill) n. hill east of Mosspaul, between the Allan and Hermitage Waters, on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 599 m (1,961 ft) and is topped by a triangulation pillar. A smaller peak, to the west, is called Little Tudhope Hill, and reaches 483 m (also sometimes just ‘Tudhope’ or ‘the Tudhope’ and occasionally ‘Tudhope Fell’; there were several former spellings, e.g. it is ‘Tu-top’ in 1839).

Tuesdi (tezw-, chewz-di) n. Tuesday. This is early closing day in Hawick, and traditionally the day for the mid-week Ride-outs (also spelled ‘Tuddih’; cf. the older Teisday).

the Tuesdi (thu-tezw-, -chewz-di) n. sometimes referring to the Tuesday of Common Riding week. There is a Chase in the morning. This is also usually the day when the Principals, preceded by singers and members of the Drums and Fifes, visit the local hospitals and old-folks homes.

tuffit (tu-ful) adj., arch. to ruffled, rumple, put into disorder.

tuffit (tu-ful) adj., poet. ruffled, entangled, mentally confused – ‘But, sir, my brain hath been sae tuffit, An’ my puir musie sae corfuffit’ [JoHa].

Tufty (tu-tee) n. nickname for John Wilson, Burgh officer from roughly the 1810s to 40s. Also a nickname for some members of the Thomson family, e.g. Tommy, Cornet in 1955.

tug (tug) n. a tangle in hair – ‘what’ve ee din ti yer hair ti git they tugs in eet?’, a tangle of chestnut strings.

the Tug-o-War Shield (thu-tug-ō-wawr-sheeld) n. trophy shield dating from 1911 which was presented annually at a tug-o-war contest held at the Vertish Hill Sports. The event was ‘banned’ by the Council around 1990 following concerns over safety.

Tulloch (tu-loch) n. John (19th C.) fishmonger at 30 High Street in the late 19th century. He was noted as a bass singer and was precentor of Allars Kirk. He moved to Campbelltown in 1899. Thomas of Elliston (18th/19th C.) son of Robert of Bogton. He served as Deputy Lieutenant in Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798.

Tullochgariac (tu-loch-ga-reech-aich) n., poet. word of uncertain meaning – ‘Ye’ll no forget to send an answer, An’, harkye, Wattie, gie’s a dancer, An’ ootright Tullochgariac prancer, To mak me start’ [JoHa].

Tully (tu-lee) n. Andrew (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hume in Southdean Parish in 1849. David (b.1787/8) local farmer, who gave his name to the phrase ‘Tully’s Mill’ when he was dragged into the Slitrig at the Mill Port and had the upper half of his clothing torn off by the mob for being a Tory voter. This was during the election of 1837; 5 men were tried for mobbing and rioting and assault, against 7 victims. He may have been one of the Hawick men who went down to London to be witnesses in the investigation. The court document state that the mob ‘did violently drag or force him to the side of the Slitrig River ...’ forcing ‘him off the bank into the said river, which was then in a swollen state, and of considerable depth, and did compel him the pass through to the other side of the river’. The family lived at the Millpath, in a house that was removed to make way for the railway. His wife was Janet, and their children included James and Janet. The death of a child of his is recorded in Hawick in 1824. In 1861 he was living at 25 High street with grandchildren Agnes Murray, David Murray, James Tully and Jessie Tully; he was then described as a farmer of 75 acres. George (b.c.1780) baker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. His surname is given as ‘Toolie’.

James (b.1816/7) son of David. In 1861 he was living at 17 Howegate and listed as a farmer of 30 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included James and David. John (18th C.) married Martha Jackson in 1730, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

John (18th/19th C.) mason who was chosen as ‘rebel’ Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809 in opposition to the Council’s choice of John Kyle. The dispute was over new regulations regarding invitations to supporters. He was the second choice of the ‘Wesla Water’ group, after Henry Halliburton had declined. He rode the Common on the Friday, behind the ‘royalist’ Cornet, although he had more supporters. He also entered the Haugh, although with some obstruction – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From among you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH], ‘The Westla’ Lads waur Rebels ca’d, John Tully led them on a yaud’ [MB]. John (19th C.) married Janet Tully in Hwick in 1851. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1635. Isobel Scott in Synton Mill complained that she had called her a witch and a thief; she denied the first, but claimed she could prove that Scott had stolen money from Andrew Nichol. However, after several witnesses were called there was no proof of theft, and so she had to sit in the place of repenance ‘in her linen sheffits, and to sit all the tym of preaching’, then ask the congregation for forgiveness. William (18th C.) local wigmaker immortalised in a rhyme – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T] (also spelled ‘Tullie’ interchangeably in early times, as well as ‘Tulley’).

Tully’s Mill (tu-leez-mil) n., arch. term meaning rough treatment at the hands of a mob, or more specifically being thrown into the Slitrig at the Mill Port. The term came from David Tully, known as a Tory supporter, who received such treatment during the election of 1837. Similar treatment was common during the elections.
of the 1830s. David Waters wrote a facetious poem called ‘Holy Tamnie’s Prayer, and thanksgiving for his marvellous escape from ‘Tulley’s Mill’ at the late election’, published in 1838 – ‘...he got ‘Tulley’s Mill’ in the Slitrig under the Tower Knowe bridge’ [JTu] (also written ‘Tuillie’s Mill’).

tully-wap (tu-lee-wwap) n., arch. a game involving a chain of children curling around a leader and then all falling down – ‘Tuillie-wap, a childish amusement in Teviotdale, in which a number of boys take hold of each other’s hands, and wrap themselves round the one who is at the head; clasping themselves as firmly together as possible, and every one pushing till the mass fall over. From Tuillie and Wap, to throw’ [JoJ].

tulzie (tuil-zee) n., arch. a quarrel, fight, struggle – ‘If it was wet, the langkail gully, Play’d smash amangt to end the tulzie’ [JR], v. to quarrel, come to blows – ‘Syne Tam an’ Geordie had a bout, An’ tulzied ‘boot a hizzie’ [JoHa] (see also tully and tulylie).

Tumble Law (tum-bul-law) n. hill just to the north of Howcleuchshiels, reaching a height of 3 – 2 m.

tummelt (tu-mul’) pp. tumbled – ‘...Whilk dang pur Yeddie’s head agee. Till drunk he tummilt, An’ as oor sacred authors gree, Life’s garden tummelt’ [JoHa], ‘O! Mony’s the mirry mile I’ve raiked, And mony a winch in hey tummelt ...’ [DH] (also written ‘tummle’t’).

tummle (tu-mul) v. to tumble – ‘...Losh he wammelt and tummled over on to the floor’ [UB], ‘Wha toss an’ tum’m le, waупit a’ through ither, Until the grun’ they tread on seems alive’ [JoHa], ‘Sweat, pech, an’ stacher up Parnassus’ brae, An’ though thou tum’le, try’t an’ try’t again’ [JoHa], ‘When a’ the world looks cauld an’ grey, An’ a’ things tum’lin under ...’ [WP], ‘...Here they come at the spring-cleanin’, Tummelin’ oot o’ the derk again ...’ [DH], ‘Syne aff frae his shouther’ll tummle his pack ...’ [WL], ‘...And crystal rivers tummle doon’ [IWL], n. a tumble – ‘hei took a right tummle doon they stair’.

tummle-car (tu-mul-kawr) n., arch. a kind of primitive box cart with wheels that revolved with the axle, and hence moved with a jolting motion – ‘...Roostit horseshoon, an queer wheel-rings O’ tumple cars, The swords o’ ancient knights an’ kings, Lost i’ their wars’ [JoHa].

tumshie (tum-shee) n. a turnip – ‘oo made tumshie lanterns it Hallowe’en’.

tundle (tun-dul) n., arch. tinder, especially in the phrase ‘as dry as tundle’ (also written ‘tundl’; noted by E.C. Smith).

tundle-box (tun-dul-boks) n., arch. a tinder-box (noted by J. Jamieson).

Tungrig (tung-rig) n. farm probably in upper Liddesdale, recorded in 1613 and 1622, relating to branches of the Scotts.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. name used in the 19th century for a long, dark close leading to Backdamgate from around 12 or 14 High Street. It contained several badly illuminated houses and was demolished around 1857 when the Royal Bank was built.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. epithet for the road between Hawick and Langholm, referring to the steep pass between upper Teviotdale and upper Ewesdale.

Tunno (tu-no) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) notary in Melrose. In 1612 he is recorded as schoolmaster in Melrose. He is recorded in making an extract of the 1615 sasine of Robert Scott of Alton from Gilbert Watt’s Protocol Book, with the precise date is unknown. He is listed as procurator for some cases in the records of the Regality of Melrose in 1638–51. In 1642 his son Andrew is mentioned as a witness in Melrose and by the late 1640s was ‘younger’ and already a writer. His son was probably Town Clerk of Hawick (unless this was in fact him, rather than his son). Andrew (17th C.) Town Clerk of Hawick. It seems reasonable to presume that this man was son of the Melrose notary, who was described as a student in Melrose in 1642, and already a writer in 1643. In 1659 he is described as ‘notary in Melrose, now at Hawick’, in a bond referred to in a complaint against his tenant. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1659–70. In 1670 a case was raised against him by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the Melrose court of Regality (in which he is described as ‘portioneer of Melrose’), complaining that he held the ‘protocol book’ of Gilbert Watt, notary, which contained 2 instruments of sasine relating to succession of the lands of Goldielands. He agreed to make copies, although they do not appear to have survived. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Men and women are listed, and so it is unclear if this was a male or female name. William (17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He witnessed the Earl’s last will and testament in 1633 (this could be the same as the surname ‘Tunnock’).

Tunnock (tu-nok) n. Nicholas (15th C.) priest of Aberdeen Diocese who was educated in Paris.
He was Dean of Aberdeen in 1429. In that year he was given the Rectory of Lilliesleaf, which had been vacated by Michael Ochiltree. It is unclear whether he really held the Rectory, but it was given to William Spalding in 1430. In 1430 he was involved in a dispute over the Deanery of Aberdeen.

Tunny (tu-nee) n. James Good (d.1887) proprietor of the photography business J.G. Tunny & Co., which continued long after his death. The company had several studios in Edinburgh and also opened one at 47 High Street Hawick in the period 1903-06.

the Tup Fair (thu-tup-fàr) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s main ‘tup’ market, held on September 20th and 21st during parts of the 18th and 19th centuries. It was also for a while a major lamb fair.

Tup Knowes (tup-nowz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, and may be part of the old Common.

tup-stane bottle (tup-stän-bo’-ul) n., arch. a form of stone bottle with a rounded bottom.

tur (tur) v., arch. to turf, cover with turf – ‘…that every inhabitant within the brughe shall have liberty to tur and theik, and sett ane ladder o’ elk-deer, bisons, tups, Fund i’ the mosses wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihs) a turmeet’ [BR1660].

turbleent (tur-bleen) n., arch. a sudden gust of wind, turbulence – ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihis) a turbleent weare as the ordnar dang doon the firstt Peinelheuch Moniment’ [ECS] (also ‘turbleen’ and ‘turblin’; from the Mediaeval English and Old French).

the Turf Hotel (thu-turf-hô-tel) n. former hotel at Langburnshiels, offering food, drink and accommodation to travellers. It was opened by Mr. MacDonald in early 1860. Later that year the guests and proprietor were attacked by a gang of navvies and there was an even worse riot on St. Patrick’s Day 1862. It is unclear how long the hotel operated.

turfs (turfs) n., pl., arch. pieces of sod, used for fuel or building material – ‘…and there was a strife about casting of these turfs, and Langlands did not get them, for Harden caused burn them where they were casten’ [DCW1765].

Turfy Sike (tur-fee-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlieshope Burn.

Turie (too-ree) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Hoselee and Acreknowe, although the location is unknown.

Turk’s Close (turkz-klós) n. popular name in the 19th century for a passageway between 58 and 60 High Street, home of the ‘Turks’. This was a nickname of long standing for John Scott and his family.

the Turk’s Halfpenny (thu-turkz-hàp-nee) n. name for a temporary trade union in Hawick, instigated as the result of John Scott (‘the Turk’) reducing the price of men’s hose by 6 pence per dozen (or a halfpenny each) in 1817 The stocking-makers of the Town levied 6 pence on each man and used the funds to try to fight the imposition of wage reductions. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) and James Scott were arrested and spent several days in Jedburgh Jail before the employer yielded. The resulting celebration inspired James Hogg to recite the following verse – ‘See my dear comrades, turned to ashes, The cursed page that once did fash us, And bear in mind, we once did wish Our persecutors just like this; But innocence should aye get clear – Our bonds are dead and we are here’ [JH].

Turlenbrae (tur-lin-brà) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse and Whitfield, according to its entry on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Henderson was tenant at that time (it is possible this is an error for some other place).

turneet (tur-née) n., arch. a turnip (cf. turneep).

turn (turn) v. to become, grow – ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and Aw hev him in New York now …’ [JEDM], ‘E’e denner’s turnin caald’ [ECS], (more common than in standard English, and often with the participle coming after the noun; see also turnt).

turn (turn) n. the middle of something, particularly a night – ‘…the turn o the nicht’ [ECS], the act or process of changing – ‘…a turn for the better; …the turn o the eer’ [ECS], a bout of illness, especially in the phrase ‘a bad turn’, a favour –
Turnbull

‘...ee’ve duine iz a guid turn wui that’ [ECS], a walk, stroll – ‘A’m duist oot for a bit turn afore A gaan ti bed’ [ECS] (these senses all more common than in standard English).

Turn (turn) n. former name of a farm near Stobs, roughly between Woodfoot Cottage and Railway Cottages. It could be the ‘turni’ where James Crozier was located in 1494/5. It is probably the ‘Torne’ listed along with ‘Wenerton’ and ‘Fowlernalve’ as farms on the Slitrig belonging to the Laird of Gledstanes, which were burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was still listed as part of the Barony of Winnington at the end of the 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. William Turnbull was there in 1708 and James Nichol in 1720. George Fletcher was tenant there in the 1750s. When a valuation of the separate lands in the Stobs estate was made in 1779 an entry read ‘Part of Te-ourn or Turn, possessed by William Eliott and Robert Potts in 1779’, valued at £178 5s 5d, with the other part being Smithfieldhaugh and valued at £15 10s. Walter Paterson was a slater there in 1797, John Scott was a servant there in 1799 and Richard Tinlin in 1801. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, Sir William Eliott of Stobs owned part of ‘Te-ourn, or Turn’, a small part of which was called Smithfieldhaugh; together they were still valued at about £194. It was also referred to as ‘Acreknowe Turn’ and housed 2 separate families until about the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’); it is marked as ‘Turns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and still there on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is clearly marked on the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’); it is marked as ‘Turns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and still there on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but there is no sign of it today).

turn aboot (turn-a-boo’) adv. by turns, alternately – ‘oo only hed yin bike, so oo hed ti play wi’d turn aboot’.

the Turn Again Stane (thu-turn-a-gän-stän) n. standing stone on the farm of Kaeside, overlooking Tweedbank, traditionally said to have been erected to commemorate the place where Elliot turned and speared Ker of Cessford to death at the battle of Skirmish Fール in 1526. In fact the stone lies beside an ancient pathway, and probably predates the 16th century.

Turnbull (turn-bul, tru-mul) n. Adam of Whithope (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1390 as a witness to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. In a charter of 1409 as ‘ade turnebule de quithope’ (i.e. Whithope) when his son John was granted lands at Hassendeabank. Adam of Fulton (14th C.) listed among the witnesses to the 1390 charter where John Turnbull of Minto granted Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. Adam (15th C.) listed as one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas in 1432. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbulls, but John of Bedrule and William of Hassendeabank are also listed. He may be the Adam who witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston in 1433/4. Adam of Wauchope (15th C.) described as ‘Adam de Walchhop’ (and listed after several Turnbulls) when part of an inquest into lands in Jedburgh in 1440. He may be the same Adam who was witness to a charter for Thomas Cranston being granted part of Sprouston in 1446 and who was also on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. Adam (15th C.) granted the lands of Greenwood in 1439 by charter of James II. These lands had previously been held by Walter Dalgleish of Greenwood and are probably the same as Girnwood on the Borthwick Water. He was probably father or grandfather of Thomas of Greenwood, recorded in 1488, and also related to the Turnbulls of Minto. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade’ in 1471 when he and George Cranston had remission for 2 ‘schelis’ in Ettrick Forest. Adam of Philiphaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1484 when James Turnbull claimed compensation from him for disturbing him in his lands of Westfield and spoliation of his cow at his lands of Kirkhope. At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502 he was probably the ‘Adam turnbull dominus de quhitlaw’ (likely an error for ‘Whithope’) who was fined for failing to give suit for his lands of Philiphaugh. In 1503 he was ‘de philliphalche’ when he presented Ronald (probably a relative) to the court in Selkirk as suitor for his lands of Philiphaugh. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed right after Mark, who may have been related, and before his son and heir William, followed by James in Kirkhope and James in Gargunnock. He is also listed in the 1506 remission for the same crime. His son and heir William is also recorded in 1504 as a procurator for Helen Rutherford, heiress to Rutherford of that Ilk. Probably the same Adam of Philiphaugh was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor.
Turnbull

in 1509. Janet, who was granted a charter for part of Philippaugh in 1509 was surely related to him, as well as Ralph, who held the same third of Philippaugh shortly afterwards. Adam (d.bef. 1509) resident of Hornshole recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to 'compone' for several crimes, specifically: stealing 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools from John and Thomas Young of Minto; stealing 'cattalorum' from Katherine Stewart from Minto; common theft and pilage; stealing 36 ewes from the Murrays in Sundhope; stealing 56 ells of cloth and 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 40 sheep from Philipaugh; and stealing 12 sheep from Thomas Williamson from the Kirkland of Wilton. Additionally he and Walter, also in Hornshole, were allowed to compone for a series of other crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1494/5 he had remission for several related crimes: stealing sheep, cows and a horse from John Sinton in Synton, in the company of James Elliot; stealing further horses from Torwoodlee, Fairnilee and Lauder; stealing sheep from Glenrath; stealing an ox from Heartside and ‘chattels’ from Hugh Douglas; stealing cattle from Katherine Stewart in Minto; bringing in men from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas Wilkinson; and for common theft and delivery of stolen goods. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley. He was also described as ‘in Hornshole’ (i.e. tenant there) in 1502 when he was indicted for stealing 200 oxen and 80 horses from James Newton, tenant of Synton. David Scott (called ‘the Lady’) tenant of Stirches was involved in the same or a similar incident at Synton. Later in 1502 he was ‘in Hornshole, now in chalmerslane newtoun’ when he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing 80 sheep from Broadmadows (probably also involving David ‘the Lady’ Scott in Stirches); bringing in Englishman Sir John Musgrave; stealing 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 3 oxen and a cow from Muircleuch; stealing 4 cattle from Hermiston; stealing 7 cows from Whitmuir; stealing 160 sheep from Hundleshope; stealing 25 sheep from George Bonnington; stealing 28 sheep from the ‘caulschellous’; stealing 30 sheep from Philipaugh; stealing 100 sheep from William Turnbull at Oakwood; stealing 60 sheep from Cauldshieles; bringing in Archibald and Ninian Armstrong to raid Synton, stealing 200 cattle and 80 horses from James Newton there; and stealing 17 cows, 2 horses, 100 sheep, a doublet, a sword and 40 shillings from St. Leonard’s Hospital near Peebles. James Newton in Synton and Walter Scott of Howpasley were sureties for him and Walter (son of Walter Scott of Headshaw) appears to have been involved in 2 of the same incidents. Musgrave’s men burned Selkirk and stole 1000 merks worth of goods from the inhabitants; he also had remission for his role in this raid; George of Hallrule and Bartholomew in Rawflat acted as sureties for him. Also in 1502 he may be the Adam ‘de natoun’ (perhaps Newton) who was surety, along with several other Turnbull chiefs, for Margaret in Hawick, who was convicted of theft and resetting thieves. In 1509 Andrew Crozier was hanged for several crimes, including his murder, along with the murder of another Adam, called ‘Gabirlenzie’. There are no details given for the events leading to his death. He may be an ancestor of later Turnbulls who were tenants of Hornshole. He may be the ‘Ade Trumbull’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with David and Robert, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Brauxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam ‘Gaberlunzie’ (d.bef. 1509) killed along with Adam in Chamberlain Newton (so they may have been related). Andrew Crozier was hanged in 1509 for this and other crimes. No information is given about this incident and no clues as to the reason for his nickname, which is recorded as ‘Gabirlenzies’. He was surely related to Walter, ‘gabirlenze’. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Note that there was also a separate Adam listed, but neither had another designation, and so it is impossible to know if they were the same as any of the other contemporary Adam’s. Adam (15th/16th C.) witness to the notorial instrument of 1501/2 for the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, relating to their lands of Feu-Rule in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of Walter in Stouslie. In 1502 William in Crumhaugh was surety for him at the Justice-aire, and was fined for his non-appearance. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded among the men who were put to the horn in 1502 for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton, George of Hallrule, while John in Wells was also listed and so surely related. Adam (15th/16th C.) described as ‘of Billerwell’ in 1502. In 1502 he was ‘de bullirwell’ when he was fined for failing to produce Ninian in court among a group of men charged with the murder if Robert Oliver. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Peter Turnbull in Bonchester. In 1506 he had remission for ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with William Turnbull of Minto, as well as with his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; he was there recorded as being ‘in Bullerwell’. George Turnbull was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with George and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in Wolfelee who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Hones; James was also listed there as tenants of ‘Wolfeley’, and so may have been related. Adam (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Thomas Dalgleish, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsiegill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided ‘within the boundis of Teviotdale’. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Adam (16th C.) listed along with Gavin in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers (with his name given first), but it is not clear where they were from exactly (the names match the Turnbulls of Billerwell, for example). Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1552/3 as ‘Adam Trumbull of Woulie’ when he had a bond with John Ker of Ferniehirst and others to remain within Jedforest. He is probably the Adam who was tenant in Wolfelee (along with Walter) when listed among many Borders men in the remission of 1526 for riding against the Earl of Arran. Probably the same Adam signed a bond in 1557 (along with others) with John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon; he is there recorded as ‘Adam Trumbill in Wolvlie’. Adam of Billerwell (16th C.) signed a bond in 1557 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, to bring in the thief William Nixon. Probably the same Adam of ‘Bullerwell’ is recorded in 1571 when he had to appear before the Privy Council and was warded. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He may be the same ‘Adam Trumbill of Billirwall’ who was part of the ‘pacification’ granted by the King to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and his friends and servants in 1581. He must have been related to the Adam recorded a couple of decades later. Adam (16th C.) tenant in Westwood. He is recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. He could be related to the later Lairds of Westwood. Adam (16th C.) son of Sandy. He was recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as ‘Isobel’s Robin’, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Adam (d.bef. 1578) recorded as ‘in Belsis’ when he witnessed a charter in 1549, hence he was presumably tenant of Belses. The charter was for Robert Scott of Howpasley granting Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made before the Privy Council, that his sons ‘Hekie’, David, George and John would refrain from thieving. In 1576/7 his servant Patrick Bennet was attacked by Walter in Firth, servant of John of Minto (despite the bond that had been signed between the feuding Turnbull branches); his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a brother-in-law called Patrick Richardson, and so presumably this was the husband of one of his daughters. Adam (16th C.) described as a ‘clerk’ at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of ‘Yaton Scott’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbulls of Rulewater. Adam ‘Reid Adie’ (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He is also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. Adam (16th/17th C.) son of Stephen, from whom he inherited the right of rental of the lands of ‘Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590. He resigned the rental in favour of Sir William Cranston in 1607. In 1616 he was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh, where he is referred to as Adam ‘called of the Wowlie’. He was surely related to the Adam in Woollee of the 1550s. Adam (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘sumythe servand to the said Walter Trumbill of Raffiat’ in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses. George was accused of killing a son of Walter of Rawflat, and shooting another son, and also of capturing him ‘binding him with fetteris, and hinging him be the feit and schouderis, ouer ane balk [beam], for the space of xij [12] dayis, quhairthrow his feit rottit fra him’. What became of him is unrecorded. Probably the same Adam, servant to Walter Turnbull of Rawflat was accused by the widow of Mark Turnbull of Nether Buncshester in 1617 of burning the ‘writs and evidents’ of the lands there, as part of harassment of her by Walter of Rawflat. It is possible he was the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers George and John) recorded in 1581 and 1583, when they were accused of attacking the farm of Rawflat. He could also be the brother of ‘Geordie in Belseis’ listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He may have been related to the George who was also a tenant there, and perhaps more distantly related to the Turnbills of Wauchope themselves. Adam of Billerwell (16th/17th C.) one of the members of an inquest of 1610 to judge the proper succession to James Hamilton’s lands of Appotside and Tythehouse. In 1619 he had a bond, along with his son George, with John Haliburton of Mertoun, and this was witnessed by ‘my brother’ Andrew Turnbull. His son George was witness to a datas of 1612. Probably the same Adam ‘in Bullerwall’ was one of the men accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605, when his brother Andrew was also listed; both were ‘past fra’, i.e. the case was not pursued. He then served as surety for the other Turnbills. In 1617 he was transcribed being ‘of Bullereule [Bedreule]’ when complained about along with his eldest son George at the Privy Council; it seems more likely this was Billerwell than Bedrule. John Ainslie, maltman in Jedburgh, complained that he still owed him money and should be apprehended. Adam of Abbotrule (16th/17th C.) involved in a dispute in 1610, where Andrew Turnbull accused him and others of grazing their animals on his lands at Stonedige and Harwoodtown. He is probably the Adam, called ‘of Tounheid of Abbotreuil’, who had a bond with Walter of Bedrule in 1617/8. He had a bond with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton, signed in Hawick in 1619 and registered in 1624. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Bonechester tounehead’ (i.e. Buncshester Townhead) in 1618 when he witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend, Walter Lorane in Gattascot’. He may be the ‘Adam Trumble, called the As [presumably Ass], in Buncshester’ who in 1619 was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor (or the man listed as ‘Ninian’s Adie’ or the one just listed as Adam). Perhaps the same Adam is recorded being in ‘...head’, among Buncshester landowners, in the 1643 valuation for Abbotrule Parish; his lands were valued at £25. Adam ‘Ninian’s Adie’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His name was given as ‘Ninian’s Adie’ (so his father was Roland) among several Turnbills from Buncshester. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. However, there may have been other Adams in the same family (uncles and cousins) at the same time, so it is uncertain this is all the same man. He could be the Adam recorded in Hartshaugh in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men (including Hector in Hartshaugh) under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. In 1623 he was served heir to his grandfather Hector of Hartshaugh in the lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ (i.e. Kirklands) in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshie and ‘Clerksbankies’. He is recorded as ‘in Hartshaugh’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when (along with another Adam Turnbull!) he was caution for James Turnbull of Braidhaugh, who was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairleysd’. In 1623 he was recorded as the miller ‘in Hartshauchmyyne’ when Lyle Turnbull gave security for him and when he was acquitted of stealing cattle from Gilbert Elliott’s land at ‘Leisburne’. It is unclear when he succeeded his father in the lands that had been in the family for many generations. However, it appears that he neglected to ‘enter’ with his superior and so in 1630 he lost Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Hobkirk (to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), although he held on to Wester Swanshie. He is still recorded as owner of Wester Swanshie in 1643, when it was valued at £32 10s; he may also have been the Adam ‘in Swanshell’ who was tenant in the other part of Swanshie, valued at £66 13s 4d. It is likely he is the same Adam recorded in Easter Swanshie and Wester Swanshie on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (even although he may have been deceased by then). Adam (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with David as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. Adam ‘Clerk’ (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1643 county valuation. His lands were valued at £25. He was distinct from the 2 Adams recorded at Bonchester Townhead, but could be the same as the Adam recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1663. He could be related to Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is recorded as a landowner in Abbotrule in 1663. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Walter in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Adam of Ruletownfoot (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Adam (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may have been related to Walter and William who also held Raperlaw lands at the same time. Adam (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish in about 1663. Although difficult to transcribe it appears that he also paid for his part of Hallrule in 1663. Perhaps the same Adam ‘in Roull’ was listed on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Abbotrule Parish when he paid tax on £70. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1673 when a woman was fined for telling him to hang himself and calling him ‘ane land loppon lowne’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Nether Tofts. His will and that of his wife, Margaret Douglas, are recorded in 1682. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Hawthornside. In 1678 he paid tax on £40 at Hawthornside. In 1684 his son (whose name is not legible or recorded) was listed among people declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. The will of his wife Isobel Shiel is recorded in 1688. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Elfhaw in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (1653/4–1732) son of William of Bonchester. He was tenant farmer at Doorpool. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1731, aged 75. His only daughter Helen married Walter Scott, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester. Along with his father and wife, he was buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Adam (d.1716) merchant at the Westport in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright George Haliburton in 1704. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Bessie (b.1701) and Elspeth (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and innkeeper Francis Elliot. Probably the same merchant Adam married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. In 1716 his widow presented their son Adam for baptism in Hawick, with witnesses ‘student’ Patrick Cunningham and Beadle Walter Scott. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank. He may have been son of William of Cockerheugh. He was succeeded in the tenancy by his son James and then his grandson, who was also Adam. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Nichol in Minto in 1716. Adam (17th/18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His children included: Christian (1718/9–35); and John (1723/4–45). Andrew, who was also miller at Mangerton Mill, was probably also his son. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam of Denesyde (17th/18th C.) last Turnbull Laird of Denesyde (also called ‘Nether Hawthornside’). He is said to have been a Jacobite supporter in the rebellion of 1715, probably accompanying William Kerr (‘Bitterbeard’) in fighting with the Old

Pretull Turnbull died soon after the census was taken. At that time he was encouraged to leave (or possibly run out of) the area by Sir called ‘Africa’ in about 1823, and renewed the local area. He may be the same Adam of Hawthornhis eldest son Thomas in 1848.

He was a shepherd in Tyneside, but joined his resumed to Episcopalianism. Adam (18th C.) mason in 1788 he witnessed a baptism for mason of Hassendeanbank. His father was James, who also farmed there, with his father being Adam and his great-grandfather probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, first to Tarsetfoot
in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, also paid the dog tax at Hassendean in the same probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on

in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, also from Dalkeith, and in about 1567 she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater. She passed them to Andrew, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, who may have been a relative. Agnes (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. She was probably from the Ashkirk area. Agnes ‘White Erised Nannie’ (d.1805) her death is recorded in the Hawick parish records (along with her nickname!). There are several possible births of Agneses that could be her. Agnes (b.c.1790) keeper of a lodging-house at 36 High Street. She was married to William, also known as ‘Wall the Bellman’. Their children included Mary, William and Isabella. In 1861 she was a widow, still running the lodging house. Agnes (b.1814) daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James and Margaret Dalgleish. She was teacher at the ‘Image Garden’ school in the 1840s, probably assisted by her mother, her father having died in 1834. She may have married David Host. The school building can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races, but probably did not last more than a few years. In Slater’s 1852 directory, she is listed as teacher at Wilton Cottage. Alexander (15th C.) notary public in the Fife area in 1488/9. It is unclear how he might have been related to local Turnbulls. He may be the same ‘Alexandro Turnbull’ among the witnesses to the charter granting Harden to John Turnbull in 1482, made at Kirkcaldy by Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was notary public for the diocese of St. Andrews in 1506, when there was a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) held by Melrose Abbey. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The next entry was for Robert, also in Wolfelee. Alexander (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being in Unthank, which is presumably the farm in Rulewater. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to Henry, who was also recorded in Unthank in 1494/5. Alexander (15th C.) son of Andrew of Dryden. In 1494/5 he had remission for resetting Adam ‘howatson’ and Robert Jackson, who had stolen sheep from James Ker in Fushiegh and helped the ‘Thieves and Traitors of Levy’ in killing the wife and 2 sons of Thomas Middlemas of Ploro, as well as stealing a long (and very detailed) list of his goods. He could perhaps be the same man as Alexander in Commonside, who served as surety for Adam Howison in Commonside, also in 1494/5; Alexander in Commonside was also recorded in 1502 when he was surety (along with John in Dryden) for Philip in Whithope and David in Carlinpool. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in ‘bellentyne’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He probably lived at Bellendean. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for communing with ‘the traitors of Leven’. His brother ‘Blinnd John’ was also recorded as ‘sande turnbulis brother of bellentyn’ in 1494/5, when he contributed 2 cows for the expenses of the Justicec-aire. Alexander (15th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Lauder of Todrig had remission for several crimes, including resetting him. He had apparently stolen cattle from Thomas Yair in ‘laudoma’. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘dodrik’, which is probably Dodrig to the south of Hawick. In 1502 Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill, had remission for stealing 15 sheep from him. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among men who Marjory Turnbull was convicted of resetting. His name appears after John, to whom he was probably related, but it is not stated where they were from. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as ‘sande Turnbull in braidle’, his farm probably being the one in the Borthwick valley (although those near Ashkirk and in the Hermitage valley are also possible). He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 8 cows and a horse) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with Sym and Rob also listed in the same place (and hence probably related). Probably the same Alexander was tenant at Broadlee in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was convicted of stealing 2 horses from him. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 when his son Adam was among men who David Home of Wedderburn had to present to answer charges brought by Englishmen. Alexander (d.c.1600) farmer at Crosseleuch, near Fulton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed as deceased in a letter of 1602 which states that ‘the ferme hes beine waist sen the pest tyme’, suggesting that he had died of the Plague. His wife was Margaret Cockburn. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. The baptism of his son Walter with Isobel Scott is recorded in 1650, with the label ‘for:’. The witnesses were George Turnbull and Andrew Routledge. Alexander (1691/2–1761) married to Helen Murray, who died in 1780, aged 66. His son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Langrow. His son was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Alexander (d.1810) recorded as ‘Brother to the Laird of Tofts’ when he died in Hawick. It is unclear who his brother might have been, but perhaps Anthony. Alexander (d.c.1840) baker and keeper of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1834 electoral roll he was also joint proprietor of houses with joiner John Turnbull. John was probably his son, and the public house was probably the Cross Keys on Denholm High Street. He is probably the Alexander who married Jean (or ‘Jeanny’) Scott, whose children included: John (b.1808); Betty (b.1810); James (b.1811); Robert (b.1813); William (b.1815); Thomas (b.1817); and Jeanie (b.1819). They may have also had a daughter Helen, who married farmer Robert Scott and was mother of gardner and botanist John Scott. He was dead before 1841, and his widow later became postmistress in Denholm. He may be the son of John baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785; his parents may be the John Turnbull and Jane Leyden who married in Cavers in 1781. Alexander ‘Auld Sandy’ (1791–1859) 5th son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of the schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was a carrier, based at Nursery House, Bonchester Bridge, initially helping his grandfather George Adamson. In 1851 he is listed as ‘Carrier & Grocer’ at ‘1 Woodside’ in Bonchester. In later life he moved to Kirkton, where he died. In 1817 he married Elspeth (‘Betty’), daughter of George Alexander, farmer at Bonchester farm. Their children were: James (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); and George (b.1822), who emigrated to New Zealand and died in Dunedin; Agnes (b.1824); Isobel (b.1826); Elizabeth (b.1829); Ebenezer Alexander (1831–93), who died in Leith; and Margaret (b.1834). Alexander Rutherford (1835–97) of the firm Turnbull the dyers. He was son of the company’s founder, John. In 1861 he was master dyer, employing 30 people. He married Janet Armstrong Hume and their children were: Annie Hume (b.1865), who married Town Clerk John Ritchie Purdom; John Elliot (b.1868); James Armstrong (b.1871); and Arthur Rutherford (b.1873). Alexander Dobson (1853–1932) hosiery manager, he was son of George and Jessie Mark. He was cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co. He had both Wellogate Villa and Woodside built for him by David and Peter Dalgliesh (Galashiels builders, who were his brothers-in-law). He was a member of the Hawick Archeological Society. He is recorded as ‘Alex. D.’, cashier at 2 Teviotside Terrace, where he died. He married his second cousin Mary Warwick. They had 8 children, including: William Dickson of the Crescent Cleaning Co., George, law clerk in Edinburgh; Keith; and Mary (b.1881), who married Provost James D. Lawson of Pittenweem. Alexander (b.1867) born at Newton, Jedburgh. He worked as a servant on the Wolfelee estate. In 1893 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Little, shepherd at Gorrenberry. Their children included John, Andrew, Helen and Alexander. Alison (16th C.) daughter and heir of John, Burgess of Selkirk. She is recorded in 1544 and 1545 when served as heir to her deceased father. She shared a tenement with Margaret, another heir (whose relationship is not stated). She immediately sold her share to William Elliot. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Turnbule de Dryden’, his lands probably being in upper Teviotdale. The Andrew of Dryden recorded 4 decades later may be the same man, but is more likely to be his son. Andrew (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbuls who were named (Stephen and John, who directly follow him, or Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Andreas Turnbule’. It is possible he is the same as Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is recorded as being ‘of Hawick’ and Thomas of Stouslie was another witness. It is possible he is the same man as Andrew of Stouslie. Andrew (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ of land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is described as ‘Andrew Trumbull of Stowisle’, which is presumably Stouslie. He must be related to the Thomas of Stouslie recorded in 1488. Andrew (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justise-aire in Jedburgh as being at Bonchester. George, son of Walter in Bonchester, was surety for him, and he also served as surety for himself, being fined for non-appearance. Probably the same ‘Dand’ is recorded in Bonchester in 1503, listed among men. who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; Crystal (son of Robert) and David were also listed being in Bonchester and hence perhaps related. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Dri-dane’ in 1494/5 when his son Alexander had a remission for raids on Ker at Fastheugh and Mid-demas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that same year when his son John was named among men who John Scott of Deloraine was accused of associating with. This is probably the Dryden in upper Teviotdale. He was surely related to John of Dryden, recorded in 1498, and probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as being called ‘calvus’ (i.e. ‘bald’) in 1494/5 when he had remission for burning and stealing from Fastheugh, for resetting the ‘Traitors of Levyn’ (i.e. Englishmen) and helping them in a raid on Hangingshaw. The Laird of Whithope acted as surety. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote. In 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while John and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. Presumably the same Andrew in Gatehousecote is also listed on the 1516 remission that a number of Turnbulls had for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother William is also listed, as well as Thomas, Patrick and David, who were also at Gatehousecote, and so possibly related. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Bedrule in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. Andrew in Gatehousecote was listed separately and hence was a different man. It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, Laird of Bedrule at the time. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolfihnton. Also in 1502 he was ‘in bethroull’ when he served as surety for David, brother of the Laird of Bedrule at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolfihnton. He was separate from Andrew in Gatehousecote and Andrew in Bedrule, who were also listed. Andrew ‘Dand’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1505 at the Justice-aire. Thomas of Bedrule, David of Wauchope, William of Minto and Bartholomew in Belses were joint sureties to enter him to the next court in Selkirk, after he was ‘borowit out of the castell of Edinburgh’. Also in 1505 the Chancellor of Scotland, John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle of Tinnis were sureties for Richard Lawson, the Justice Clerk, to enter him at the Justice-aire in Selkirk; he is there ‘alias dand’ and given the men involved in the pledge, he must have been of some importance. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew ‘Bellit Andrew’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Highchesters. He is recorded as ‘bellyt androu’ in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His nickname probably indicated that he was bald. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Sir Andrew’, chaplain, in 1512 when he was witness to a charter where Roger Langlands of Wilton sold Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was thus probably the Chaplain of Wilton. Possibly the same ‘Sir Andrew’ was witness to a document at Kelso Abbey in about 1520. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and George (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. His son Thomas was also listed. Other tenants there were Mark, Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David and Ninian. Andrew (15th/16th C.) brother of David, tenant of Hassendeanbank. He is on the 1516 remission for Turnbulls and others who may have assisted the Homes. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. Ninian was also a tenant there, so possibly related. Andrew (d.bef. 1535) recorded in 1535 as ‘Andree alias Daid Turnbull’ in the trial of Robert Scott of Alanhaugh. Along with Thomas, he was tenant in Town-of-Rule and said to have been cruelly killed by Scott and the men he brought in from Liddesdale. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Hornishill’ (presumably Hornshole) in 1562/3 when Alexander Lord Home tried to have several men removed as ‘pretended tenants’ from the local lands for which he was superior. He may be related to other Turnbulls who were connected with this place. Andrew (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Andro’, and he is listed after George, to whom he was surely related. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Eckie (i.e. Hector) of Belses. In 1580 he, his father, and his father’s brother-in-law Patrick Richardson were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton and were denounced as rebels. In a separate record of 1580, he was convicted, along with John Young ‘in the Cames’ of murdering and stealing from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. Young was hanged, but being still a minor he was delivered to Andrew Lindsay to be kept in ward. His name is given as ‘Andro Turnbull’ and also as ‘Dand Turnbull, sone naturall’ to Hector. Probably the same ‘Andro Turnbull, bastard sone to Heckie of Belseis’ and (presumably a duplicate entry) ‘Andro Turnbull, bastard sone to umquhile Ekkie in Belseis’ was listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes. He is probably the Andrew in Belses for whom Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety in 1587, as well as for George and David in Belses. Andrew (16th C.) son of David of Wauchope. He is recorded in a charter of 1567 when the lands of Templehall and Brewlands were feued to him by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) on resignation by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. The feu was extended to his nieces Jean and Beatrix Turnbull in 1604, daughter of his brother Walter of Templehall. Andrew ‘Spangand Andro’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 10 men accused in 1581 of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. His nickname may refer to ‘springing’ an arrow. There is no information about which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in ‘Yaton Scott’, listed in 1581 (along with Adam of the same place) among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. It is unclear where this location was, but presumably in Rulewater. Andrew (16th C.) son of John of Philiphau and brother of Mark. In 1579/80 he was brother to Mark, ‘apparent heir of Philophauch’, when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Also in 1570/80 he was son of John of Philiphau when he witnessed a promise and brother of Mark when he witnessed another proclamation. Sir Andrew of Bedrule, ‘Auld Bedrule’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ‘Raid of the Redeswire’, so presumably Laird in the late 1500s. However, his relationship with other near contemporary Lairds of Bedrule is unclear, and it is possible that he never existed – ‘But little harness had we there; But auld Badreule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Trumbills at his back’ [T]. He was supposed to be such a notorious thief that Home and Kerr refused to sign a bond of alliance with the Turnbulls and Ruthers, claiming that he had stolen cattle from Home of Wedderburn. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant in Tronheyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters). Watt from there is also listed and hence surely related. Andrew (16th C.) uncle of William of Barnhills. He is listed in 1584/5 as ‘Andro Turnbull of the Bernhills’ along with his nephews William, Robert, Gavin and Hector, among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Andrew of Howden (16th C.) listed among the Border Liards who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers George and Robert are also listed. Probably the same Andrew ‘in Howdene’ is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Lidderdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, along with his brother Robert and was a witness in 1581 and 1582. Andrew ‘Andro’ of Bewlie (d.1601) son of Walter of Bewlie and brother of Robert and Hector. He was probably among the group of Turnbulls accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Robert and Hector, among Turnbulls and Davidsions, when John Kerr of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. In 1601 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Bewlie’ when accused of attacking a Bailie of Jedburgh and his son, and later, with his brother Hector, returning to harass the Bailie, with ‘grit nowmeris of thair freindis up-oun the streitis and in houssis of the said burgh, awaiting to have assisted thame in case thay had bene straitit’; he was committed to Edinburgh Tolbooth. There was then a proclamation posted at ‘Jedburgh, Hawik, Selkirk, Peiblis, Lauder and other places’ asking for any other complaints to be lodged against him and his brother Hector. Thomas, heir apparent of Minto, acted in 1601 as cautioner for him and his brother Hector, both ‘called of Bewlie’, that they should be lawful and also pay a fine for shooting pistols. Also in 1601 he is listed along with Mark of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth, Eckie in Stonedge and James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as they were suspect guilty of’: Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Eckie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. He was beheaded at the Market Cross of Edinburgh for his role in the murder of Thomas Ker and George Gardner in Jedburgh. This was part of a feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs, in which 30 Turnbulls and associates attacked specific Kerrs on Jedburgh Fair Day, perhaps in retaliation for the earlier murder of Henry Oliver. He lost ‘the lytill fingar of his left hand’ in the fight. The court case was long and complicated, and it seems clear that the legal system was stacked in favour of the Kerrs. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of Adam of Billerwell. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. However, the case against him and some of the others was dropped, with the main Turnbulls of Wauchope being pursued instead. Andrew (16th/17th C.) heir to Hector of Stonedge. In 1610 he is recorded in a legal dispute with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and others for having their animals graze his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. In 1611 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Stanielege’ when John Riddell, younger of that Ilk was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1612 he and his sons Thomas and John, along with John ‘in EIscheuch’ complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. The details of the complaint were that Sir John Ker of Littledean, angry that he would not yield the farm at Gatehousecote, captured him and took him to Jedburgh, with the Laird of Bonjedward securing his release. Then later in 1612 Ker and his servants drove him and his family off Gatehousecote, causing his injured son Andrew ‘to be taken out of the house in a pair of blankets, and to be cast on the feldis’, as well as assaulting his son Thomas ‘with batons’. Later John Ker’s son William led an assault on him at Bonchester, capturing him again and having him put in the stocks in Jedburgh for 8 days, then apprehended his son Andrew, and meanwhile the Kers harvested all the crops. Ker of Littledean was found to have overstepped his authority and was sentenced to imprisonment in Edinburgh. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule, he was also known as David. He was a butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh. In 1616 he had a bond with James ‘called of Bedrule’ (probably his uncle) and Mark in Hartshaugh. In 1619 he witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule and George Ker of Cavers Carre. Andrew (d.1622) recorded in 1618 along with George in Belses when the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood complained that they had not paid the profits of the lands of Hawthornrig for the previous 2 years. He is recorded as ‘Andro in Belsches’ when he was tried for perjury and bribing witnesses Robert Ker, David Turnbull and James Young. They had apparently all lied in a case of theft brought by him against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to execution in Edinburgh. Andrew of Bewlie (17th C.) presumable related to earlier Turnbulls of Bewlie. He married Marion, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, according to a marriage contract of 1627. In 1628 there was caution paid for him by Thomas of Knowe to ensure that he did not molest Adam Scott of Burnfoot, Walter Scott of Midshiel, or their tenants and servants. In 1640 he paid off a debt to his step-father and wife (probably part of the marriage contract). He was recorded as owner of Bewlie, valued at ‘56 bolls victual, half bear meal, bear £6, meal £8 [actually £7] the boll’, corresponding to £364. Either he or his descendant was recorded as Andrew of Bewlie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £367. Andrew (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Andrew (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £54. He could be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (17th C.) miller at Appotside Mill. He witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654, and may have been related to the Turnbull tenants of Harwood and Templehall who were also witnesses. It is also likely he was related to the man of the same name who was miller at Woollie Mill in the 1680s and 90s. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1651) and John (b.1654). The witnesses in 1648 were David ‘Badie’ and William Briggs. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another ma-sion, Andrew Wilson. Andrew (d.1691) tenant at ‘Woollie-mill’ (i.e. Wolfee Mill) in 1684 when his servant John Hall was listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity.

His was one of the oldest gravestones in Hobkirk Kirkyard, the inscription being ‘Here lys Andrew Turnbull, miller in Wollie Mill’. His wife Elizabeth Lillie died in 1719. He could have been father of Robert, who was tenant at Wolfee Mill later. His descendants were tenants of Hallrule Mill for 3 generations. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) cooper in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was living on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He could be the Andrew, married to Margaret Chisholme, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Robert (b.1670); an unnamed child (b.1676); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); and Walter (b.1686). He could be the Andrew whose son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1698, with witnesses William Swan and John Turnbull.
Andrew (d.c.1688) tenant in Belses whose will was recorded in 1688. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean.
In 1681 he married Isobel Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1681); Janet (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1686). The witnesses in 1686 were George Scott and James (who may have been related to him). Andrew (1667–1747) son of Thomas, he is sometimes described as the last Laird of Bedrule, although he did not actually possess any of the ancestral lands. He farmed on Minto Cleuchhead. He married Jean Scott, who died in 1712, aged 32. He secondly married Agnes Turnbull, and she died in 1732, aged 39. His is the first name included on a memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. His children with his 1st wife were: Agnes; Thomas, of the Hawick carpet factory; and William tenant of Ancrum Woodhead. And with his second wife: Jean, who died unmarried; Margaret, died aged 16; Helen (Nellie); Stephen; and John. His brother William was probably tenant at Bedrule Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1702 when he married Helen Paterson. Their children probably included Marion (b.1703). Other possible children are: Jean, daughter of William, who married William Fletcher in Minto in 1732; and Jean, daughter of William, who married Jean Paterson in Minto in 1735. Andrew (17th/18th C.) Hawick mason. He was listed as a mason among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was one of the tradesmen chosen in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. He was also charged with valuing And-drew Rodger’s house for the Kirk Session, perhaps for the same purpose. Around the same time it was presumably the same Andrew who was paid by the Session for erecting a large sign with the name of Betty Thomson, who bequeathed money to the poor of the Parish. In 1715 he was the ‘younger’ mason (suggesting his father was also Andrew) when he witnessed a baptism for mason John. In 1716 and 1720 he witnessed baptisms for fellow mason John Napier. In 1720 he (along with mason John) witnessed a baptism for gardener Andrew Colwart. Either he (or possibly his son) was the mason Andrew whose illegitimate child Andrew, born to Margaret Aitken, was baptised in 1723; the witnesses were merchant James Aitken (probably Margaret’s brother) and Beddle John Scott. In 1725 he witnessed baptisms for John Hardie and Isobel Aitken and for wright Walter Scott. He married the same Margaret, youngest daughter to William Aitken (tenant in Hawick) in 1724 and their children included: Andrew (b.1723); William (b.1726); John (b.1729); and Andrew (again, b.1732). The witnesses in 1729 were John (probably a relative) and George
.... He witnessed an irregular marriage between merchant John Scott and Anna Laing in 1724.
Along with John (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young in 1725. Also in 1725 he was a candidate for Session Treasurer.
Probably the same Andrew, along with mason
John, witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull in 1721, 1726 and 1728, and for smith Robert Turnbull in 1726. He witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness in 1742, when he is ‘elder’ and another in 1743 for former Bailie Depute Walter Scott, when he was described as ‘Senior’. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner in 1743. He was probably related to the earlier mason of the same name, recorded in the 1670s (however, there may be more than 2 generations here). The ma-sion called Andrew who is recorded in the 1740s and 50s seems likely to have been his son. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drydenburn. His wife was Helen Beattie and their daughter Helen was born in 1725. Also in 1725 (on the same day) he witnessed a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Weens. In 1719 he was described as 'merchant att ye Damme bridge' when he married Marion, daughter of gardener James Falsyde. Their children included: James (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1725); James (again, b.1727); and Marion (b.1737). The witnesses in 1720 were William Cunningham (son of the minister) and Walter Scott (servant to the minister), in 1721 were baxters William Hodge and William Mitchel, in 1723 were Bailie James Burn and flesher John Tudhope, and in 1725 were Rev. Charles Telfer and John Scott. Andrew (18th C.) married Mary Lamb in Wilton in 1727. Andrew (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1742 he was 'Elder Carrier' when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew 'Younger, Town Post'. He was thus probably father of Hawick's letter deliverer. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as 'Town Post' in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick. It is unclear what this meant, but one possibility is that he was a Burgh Officer (since the Town courier seems unlikely). He was also 'Town Post' in 1742 when one of his children was baptised. He was additionally 'younger' in 1742, suggesting he was son of the 'elder' carrier (and not the same as the family of masons). He married Esther Porteous and their son Andrew was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Robert Scott and carrier Andrew 'Elder' (presumably his father). Andrew 'Little Andrew' (d.1776) mason in Hawick, probably son (or other close relative) of the earlier Andrew. He may be the Andrew 'jun' who witnessed baptisms for workman Alexander Burnet in 1738, for shoemaker Thomas Scott and for gardener Robert Kerr in 1742, for weaver John Thorburn in 1757 and for James Dodds in 1758. Perhaps the same man was listed as Andrew 'senior', mason, when he witnessed a baptism in 1745. Probably the same Andrew, described as 'elder', was paid for fixing part of the steeple of St. Mary’s in 1755. Probably the same Andrew was among the men paid in 1755 'for the herd’s house building'. In 1757 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for glazier William Turnbull and his wife Isobel Turnbull (one of whom was probably his relative). In 1759 he was 'mason, senior' when he witnessed a baptism for William Scoon. In 1765 he was 'Sen' when he witnessed a baptism (along with glazier William) for James Clerk. He may be the mason of that name who witnessed baptisms for mason Andrew (probably his son) in 1764, 1765 and 1767, as well as for for William Burnet in 1766. Probably the later masons of the same name were his descendants. He is probably the 'old Mason' of this name who died in Hawick in 1776. His son Andrew was also a mason, who died in Hawick in 1810. Andrew (18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His wife Agnes Armstrong died in 1757, aged 39 years, and is buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of Adam, who was earlier miller of Mangerton Mill. Andrew (18th C.) farmer near Hawick. He is recorded in 1789 buying 600 hawthorn plants for a hedge. Andrew (d.1810) mason in Hawick, who was son of Andrew. His father had the nickname 'Little Andrew' on the death register. He could have been the mason Andrew recorded earlier in the 18th century, but there is likely to have been another generation there. In 1763 he married Agnes Deans, who was also from Hawick Parish; in the record he is described as a mason. She may be the daughter of flesher George Deans born in 1735. Their children included: Andrew (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Andrew (again, b.1767); and Nichol (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Andrew (probably his father) and Robert Thorburn and in both 1765 and 1767 were Andrew (again) and George Deans (probably his wife's father or brother). He is probably also the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for George Deans (probably his brother-in-law) and the mason Andrew who witnessed another for William Philip, both in 1777. He is probably the deceased mason whose daughter Janet died in 1811. Andrew (18th C.) married Beatrice Turnbull (both from Hawick Parish) in 1761. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbulls. Andrew (d. bef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1811 it is recorded that his daughter 'Menie' (probably Wilhelmina) 'Burnt to Death'. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Veitch. Their children included Andrew (b.1770). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Alison (b.1777); Mary (b.1780); and Agnes (b.1786). He is probably the man recorded as 'Anne', married to Margaret Scott, whose son Walter was baptised in 1772, with witnesses merchants Andrew and Walter (possible relatives). He is probably the Andrew whose daughter ‘Ailey’ died in 1776. Andrew (b.c.1780) labourer at ‘Poperburn’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Wright Andrew was also listed there and probably his brother. They likely lived on the Piper Burn. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Janet (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1812); Olvier (b.1816); and Isabella (b.1817). The witnesses in 1808, 1810 and 1812 were Wright William Hislop and Janet Paisley; these 3 baptismal entries were recorded together, suggesting that the family were members of one of the secession churches. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosier manufacturer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Possibly the same Andrew was a stockingmaker with William Wilson on the 1801 ballot list for the Militia; however, there was a separate stocking-maker of the same name also listed in Hawick in 1801. He may be the stockingmaker called Andrew whose young daughter died in Hawick in 1823. He may also be the stockingmaker whose 'bastard' child died in Hawick in 1800. Andrew (1795/6–1827) from Jedburgh, he was Procurator Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He is recorded in letters of 1826 and 1827 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He married Isabella Mein, who died in 1833, aged 35. Andrew (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Anna (17th C.) served heir to her brother James of Wanchope in 1674. Anne (b.1812/3) sewing teacher in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 she was living in Minto village with her mother Jane and brothers John and William, who were agricultural labourers. In 1861 she was ‘Annie’, living with her brother John. Anthony of Knowe (18th C.) probably son of Thomas. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1712 when he was ‘younger of Knowe’. In 1737 he was the ruling elder of Jedburgh Presbytery at the 1737 General Assembly. He is recorded in a discharge of 1741 for rents paid to Thomas Thomson and in a bill dispute in 1743 with Walter Scott, late of Cockrenheugh. In 1742 he witnessed the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh, son of Walter of Crumhaugh, who was then residing at Midshiels; he also witnessed a baptism in the same year for James Miller in Appletreehall. He paid the window tax in Minto Parish in 1748. Letters of 1748 exists that he wrote to William Elliot of Wolfelee (lawyer in Edinburgh) concerning rents at Huntlaw and in Selkirk. He is probably the Anthony who got married in Minto in 1739, with no wife’s name recorded; if so, this was presumably his 2nd wife. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, who was probably his son, making Thomas’s sister Isabella his daughter. Anthony (18th C.) married Margaret Douglas in Ancrum Parish in 1742. Their children included Bessie (b.1746), Jean (b.1748), William (b.1750) and John (b.1753). Anthony of Tofts (d.1811) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He is probably the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded in Hawick. Archibald (15th C.) listed on the ‘return of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of ‘Johne of Rutherfurd’ and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Probably the same ‘Arche turnbull markis bruther’ is listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 4 cows and a horse) for failing to attend the Justice-air in Jedburgh. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Mark of Tofts (d.1811) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He is probably the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded in Hawick. Archibald (15th C.) listed on the ‘return of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of ‘Johne of Rutherfurd’ and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Probably the same ‘Arche turnbull markis bruther’ is listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 4 cows and a horse) for failing to attend the Justice-air in Jedburgh. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522. Hector is listed before him and possibly related. Archibald (16th C.) occupier of land in Ednholm in 1535, along with William Davidson and James Hobkirk. These lands were inherited by Janet Scott, widow of Walter Scott. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son and heir of Wat of ‘Howatt’. This seems likely to be Howa in Hobkirk Parish. In 1553/4 he pledge for his father, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. His son George was recorded in the inventory of goods and finances for Mark Ker of Kippielaw in 1579. He is probably the ‘Archie in Hawla’ whose son Gavin was recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 he was ‘in
Turnbull Turnbull

Howa’ when accused of being involved with taking sheep from Sir William Sinclair of Herdmans-toun, or at least of resetting the sheep stolen by his son Gavin. Sir Thomas of Bedrule appeared in his name, but he was found guilty and order to be confined until Sinclair received recompense. He appears to have been father of: Robert, tenant in Hallrule; William in Barnhills; Gavin in Howa; Hector in Stanedge; and George. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son of Thomas in Hartshaugh. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 on a list of defaulters who refused to appear before the judiciary court. He is ‘callit Unthank’, which is probably the farm in Hobkirk Parish. He may well have been related to other Turnbulls associated with Unthank, e.g. the earlier Leo, and the later Robert and David. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Langraw (16th C.) listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer charges of raiding into England. He is also recorded in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls who were accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was also recorded in 1579/80 in a list of men accused of taking part in raids into England. His caution was the Laird of Bedrule. He was one of those charged to repay ‘Johne Selby of Twysill tuicheing the guidis taikin furth of Monylawis’. He could be the ‘Archie Trumble’ listed along with ‘Gib Lorreyne’ among men of Teviotdale in complaints of a raid into England in 1597. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Broomhall in 1759. He married Mary Lamb in Robertson in 1755 and their children included William (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Robert Easton. Archibald (18th C.) married Anne Rutherford in 1760, the marriage recorded in Wilton and Bedrule Parishes. Archibald (18th C.) portioner of Cavers Parish. In 1771 he borrowed £5 sterling from the Kirk Session. Archibald Oliver (1825–69) eldest son of Thomas Turnbull with his 2nd wife Mary Beattie. He was born at East middle and educated at Denholm and then from the age of 12 at Minto under Mr. Grant. He was said to be Minto School’s second best scholar, after ‘General Knowledge’ Moodie. He became a legal apprentice to George Potts of Hawick at the age of 16. 4 years later he went to Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. In 1850 he became a junior partner with Elliot’s in Jedburgh then set up on his own in 1859. He researched and wrote about the Turnbull clan, and also gave recollections of Denholm, which are related in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’ book. He is buried in the place of internment of his ancestors at Bedrule. Barrie (20th C.) proprietor of the family grocer’s business at 51 High Street. His son John took over the business after he fell seriously ill. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rawflat in 1502 when he (along with George of Hallrule) was surety for Adam, in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton. He is probably the Bartholomew in Belses who was joint surety along with Thomas of Bedrule, David of Wauchope and William of Minto at the Justice-aire in 1505, the 4 men signing a bond at Caerlerrig. Possibly the same ‘Bertholomeum Trumbull’ was on the 1508 panel for Adam Helpburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Beatrice (1908–86) wife of Sir Richard, born in Armadale and died in Jedburgh. She is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Beatrix (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Templehall (also called ‘Wat o Wauchope’). Along with her sister Jean she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (in Rulewater) from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 she was represented by her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull, suggesting she was still a minor at this point. In 1632 she claimed the other half of the lands that had belonged to her by then deceased sister. Charles (b.1736) son of Robert and Euphan Douglas, born in Cavers Parish. He lived in both Wilton and Hawick, working as a gardener. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Euphan (b.1761); Robert and an unnamed child (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1768 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Alexander Bunyan. His wife may be the ‘Lizzy’, spouse of Charles ‘now in America’, who died in Hawick in 1809. Charles (b.1809/10) from Denholm, he was a joiner in Hawick. He lived at about 20 Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851, moving later to Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, Euphemia, Jane, Charles, Mary, Jessie and Isabella. Charles ‘Charlie’ (1939–2019) born at Crown Lane, son of baker George. He started his 60 year association with the Scouting movement in 1945 and joined the pipe band at the age of 12. He enlisted in the Royal Marines at the age of 18, serving for 19 years and being Pipe Major of the regimental band. He lived in Portsmouth for many years, but returned to Hawick to take over his father’s 2 bakery shops. He renewed his association with the Hawick Scouts and was their band’s Pipe Major 1975–2005. He wrote a history of the band for their 100th anniversary in 2017. He married Elizabeth Hunt and later Frances Scott, and had 5 sons. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Christian (b.1805) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Eleanor in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Esther were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent. Cock (15th C.) son of John in Tofts. He was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 when he had remission for stealing an ox belonging to William Rennie (or perhaps Rae), from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His surety was his father John. His name is given as ‘Cok turnbule’, but it is unclear if ‘Cock’ was a nickname or a short form of a forename. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford was allowed to compone for several crimes, including assisting and resetting him after this same theft from Minto. Probably the same Cock ‘of Fulton’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing and ox of his. Colin (1750) played football with the Legion and rugby with the P.S.A. and the Harlequins before debuting for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 19. He also played for the South of Scotland and professionally for the Border Reivers, as well as for club sides in New Zealand, Australia and Canada. He moved to County Durham and works as a kitchen fitter. Crystal (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as ‘Cristall [ur]bull Robin sone in bonechester’. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was presumably son of Robert, who was tenant in Bonchester. Cuthbert (d.bef. 1530) recorded as already deceased in 1530 when his tenement of land in Selkirk is mentioned in relation to lands of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1496. He may be the Cuthbert recorded in 1579 as once being owner of land in Selkirk, which later was owned by his daughter Janet, who married Cuthbert Brydon. David (15th C.) part of a ‘retour of inquest’ for the lands of Eilrig in 1426 and for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. Perhaps the same David was on a retour in 1439 for Douglas of Bonjedward. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbulls. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1484/5 for lands in Mangerton, involving the Scotts of Branxholme. 2 other signatories were Turnbulls of Rule Water. He may be the ‘Daud Trumbull’ who was among the witnessed for the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2 (and possibly the David who received 10 sheep in the will). Perhaps the same David was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was explicitly listed with George of Hawick. He may be the same as ‘David Trumbull with George Trumbull’ listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere pledging good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. It is possible that he is the same as David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being ‘in Ernheuch’ (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forrest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1464/5. David (15th C.) recorded being ‘In hoscot[is]’ (i.e. Hoscote) in the 1494/5 Justice-aire. In the accounts for the court held in Selkirk he contributed 1 horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and George. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule (probably Thomas). He is recorded in 1502 at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh when Andrew in Bedrule was surety for him (and he was additionally surety for himself), but fined for non-appearance. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirks saw had a remission for several crimes, including being part of a raid with him on the farms at Minto Craigend. Other participants of the raid were Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. They burned the farms, including 7 horses (presumably in a barn), as well as stealing 16 oxen and cows, 4 horses and sundry other goods. Perhaps the same David ‘in bonechester’ was mentioned in 1493 as surety for George Turnbull (there and in Stoulslie), who was fined for his non-appearance. He was surely related to the John in Nether B Ponchester, who is recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same David ‘in bonechestir’ was recorded in 1502 among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The people who were supposed to enter him into the court were George of Hallrulle and Robert Elliot in Redheugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. William in Bonchester was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as William’s son Lawrence, and were presumably related. He may be the David for whom Walter, son of Walter Scott had remission in 1502 for resetting in his crimes. He is also recorded being ‘in bonchester’ in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 5 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-naire in Jedburgh; Crystal (son of Robert), and Dand are also recorded in Bonchester and hence perhaps related. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Carlinpool in 1502 when he and Philip Turnbull in Whithope had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid Fastheugh and Hainingshaw. Their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonsde. David (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to a charter signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David of Wauchope (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Laird of Cranston was fined for failing to arrest him. Also in 1502 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh, including George called ‘Hawick’, Thomas Dunbar and himself. He is recorded as joint surety along with Thomas of Bedrule, William of Minto and Bartholomew in Belses, to enter Andrew at the Justice-naire in Selkirk in 1505; the 4 men signed a bond to this effect at Caerlenrig. He is also listed in 1504 among men who were given remission for involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; David, listed after him, may have been his son. He is also recorded in 1508 as ‘Davie Trumbell de Wauchhop’ when he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the same Laird of Wauchope who was injured by an arrow at the skirmish at Sclaterford in 1513. He probably had a son of the same name, since David of Wauchope is recorded in 1530 and 1567. David (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank recorded on the 1516 list of Turnbells and others who had remission for any part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Andrew is also listed. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among many Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other Turnbulls are also listed there, and so probably related, with Mark apparently the main tenant, and William and John his sons. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and Patrick. David of Wauchope (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530, along with Walter Turnbull of ‘Howay’, Philip Nesbit of that Ilk, Robert Haig of Bemersyde and others. He may be the ‘lard of Wawchop’ listed among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. He is recorded in 1549 when his brother Hector was granted 2 husband lands in Appitreehall by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers. Thomas (possibly his brother or other close relative) was pledge for him in 1553/4. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. He is probably the David of Wauchope among those who appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide lists of thieves and then required by the Queen to appear later in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives; his brother Thomas also appeared. In 1564 he is probably the ‘Lard of Wauchop’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the same David who was recorded in 1567 when his son Andrew was granted the lands of Templehall and Brelands in Rulewater; another son, Robert, was a witness to the charter. He is probably the David of Wauchope whose brother Walter of Hobsburn is listed among men ordered to appear in 1567 to answer accusations of raiding into England; he was also ordered to appear himself and to present his ‘man and servand’ Adam Lyle, while another brother of his, Thomas of Harwood-town, was also instructed to present a servant. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 along with his son and heir Hector, both ‘with our handis at the pen’. His son and heir Hector is recorded in 1572/3, when he swore allegiance to the Crown. David (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchope

according to a rental roll of 1541. Perhaps the same David was also tenant in the neighbouring farms of Wauchopehead and Wauchopebank. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Davids, perhaps even David of Wauchope. David (d.1576/7) presented to the Parish of Hobkirk in 1550, replacing James Bennet as priest there. He was referred to as ‘Sir’ David of Minto in 1569, when he was among a number of Borders clerics who were called before the Regent and Privy Council for adhering to pre-Reformation sacraments. He was recorded as the deceased Sir David in about 1577 when John Douglas replaced him as Vicar of Hobkirk. His designation ‘in Minto’ when he was called before the Privy Council suggests that he was from the family of Turnbuls of Minto (rather than being minister at Minto). David (16th C.) recorded being ‘called David of Crawden’ in 1583/4 when he was listed among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. David (16th C.) tenant in Belses. He was listed along with his brother George among a group of Turnbuls accused of performing a raid into England in 1579. He was also leader of a group of Turnbuls who attacked the farm of Rawflat in 1581, killing Walter of Rawflat there. The others in the group were his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell; the complaint was made again by the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. George was in 1603 found guilty of several related crimes. This was all presumably part of some family feud. In 1587 he was brother of George in Belses, when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety for the pair, as well as Andrew also in Belses. David (16th C.) listed among the Turnbuls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He is transcribed as being ‘of the Cronyhill’, which was probably Troneyhill (and hence he may have been son of Thomas of Troneyhill). Failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel in 1583 (mis-transcribed as ‘Andro Turnebill in Cronyhill’ in part of the citation). His son Thomas was listed in 1610 amongst Turnbuls who were to be apprehended for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. David (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being in Jedburgh, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties were recorded being Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Andrew Oliver in Ancrum. David (16th C.) recorded in 1593 being ‘in the Watter of Roule’. Along with Alexander in Odlhamstocks and 2 Frasers from the same place, he was accused of attacking the farmers of the lands of Newbigging (perhaps the one near Lauder) and were declared rebels for non-appearance. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other Davids. David (d.1598) son and heir of Hector of Wauchope. He married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593 (not 1567 as recorded in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’). He and his bride were afflicted in the lands of Langhaugh in Rulewater. He is referred to in reference to the lands of Wauchope in 1604 when his son Andrew’s nieces inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Fowlton’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Other tenants of Fulton farm were Pate Clerk, Walter Turnbull, David Turnbull (son of Adam), Willie Turnbull (the ‘Guidman’) and Thomas Turnbull. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son ‘Hob’ was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Denesyde. In 1611 his brother acted as cautioner for his appearance in court in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as ‘Davie Trumbill in West Leyis’ when he was listed among fugitives in the Middle shires. He probably came from West Lees in Rulewater and was likely related to John who was there in 1616. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as a farm worker of George, portioner of Belses. In 1618 there was a complaint that he and John Brown were tending the animals at Belses during Sunday worship when a group of Middlemases from Lilliesleaf ‘unhonestlie strak and dang thame and brak their headis, to the effusion of their bloodis’. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lustruther. In 1622 he was found guilty of perjury, apparently having been bribed by Andrew in Belses to lie in the case of theft he brought against William and Walter Middlemases. He was sentenced to have his ‘toung pearcet with ane hett boitkyn; and thaireftir Banischet effusioun of thair bloodis’. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. He inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son ‘Hob’ was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Denesyde. along with Adam as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. David ‘Millionaire Turnbull’ (18th/19th C.) younger son of Thomas of Fenwick and Brieryyards. He left for India in 1799 as part of the medical service, became an indigo planter there and also speculated in cotton. In 1818 he was a civil assistant surgeon at Mirzapore, but retired some time after that. His nickname came from the large fortune he made of Fenwick and Brieryyards. Bruce for being a Covenanter and jailed in Selkirk Tolbooth. Elizabeth (d.1698) resident of Minto Parish, possibly related to the Turnbulls of Minto or of Knowe, who are buried there. Her small headstone marked ‘Beseiy Turnbull’ is still in the old graveyard, but her husband’s name is illegible. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1770) listed as a flesher in Denholm on Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was living on Main Street in 1841, with surname Leyden, with Robert Laidlaw (probably her grandson) being a flesher. Elizabeth née Wilson (1753-1828) eldest daughter of Walter Wilson, ‘Haunless Wat’. She married draper George Turnbull and worked in the draper’s shop at 14 High Street. She is said to have had 15 children, 10 of whom survived infancy. Several of her children died of consumption, and it is said that ‘when the last one was reported to her as being about to die, she would not even go to visit the sick one, so much had her motherly instincts been blunted by the constant visit of death to her children’. She was known in later life as ‘Auld Betty Turnbull’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ née Alexander (b.c.1790) born at Swinside, daughter of farmer George Alexander. She married carrier and grocer Alexander. In 1861 she was a ‘Petty Shopkeeper’ in Kirkton, living as a widow there with her daughter Margaret, who was born at Bonchester. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) daughter of inn-keeper John. She took over as Bonchester post-mistress from her brother John and also ran the public house at Bridgend after her father died in 1838. However she soon afterwards moved to another public house in Moffat. Elliot (b.1794/5-1857) labourer living at Whisgills Edge in Castleton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was living near Canonbie and farming 3 acres. He may be the man of that name listed at ‘Sorbies’ in 1821 among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who died in 1873, aged 62. Their children included: Betty; Janet; Elspeth; Robert; Agnes (1847/8-1900), who died at Newcastleton; and Mary (1851/2-97), who died at Southfield. He died at Gillfoot and his wife in Newcastleton. The family are buried at Etterton. Elspeth (17th C.) servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Isabel Hardie (daughter to cooper Robert Hardie) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. Elspeth (17th C.) tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Elspeth (19th C.) listed as a straw hat maker in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living in the house of Rev. John Black. Esther (b.1809) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Christian in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Christian were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent, in a separate household to her older sister. Fergus (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hillhouse, listed after James, also there, in the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who might have assisted the Homes in actions against the King. This is not a common local name. Francis (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliech and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Francis (b.1700/1) Burgh Officer of Hawick. He gave evidence during proceedings for the Division of the Common in 1767, when he was described as being married. He was also a Burgess, on which account his evidence was objected to by the Duke of Buccleuch’s lawyers. He became a Burgh Officer in 1733, and remained until at least 1767. He described how he and fellow Officer John Stewart once managed to drive cattle belonging to neighbouring tenants (which were being pastured on the Common, against the orders of the Magistrates) to the West Port; this was probably around 1743. He was recorded as ‘Town Officer’ in a baptismal record of 1743. In 1753 he was one of the 2 Burgh Officers who were granted a yearly salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. He may be the Francis, son of William, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1729 for Francis Scott. He married Elizabeth Gibson and their children baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1739); James (b.1740); and Gideon (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. Francis (18th/19th C.) servant at Mackside in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire, with the annotation ‘Subst.’, suggesting that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with John Peggie, tailor in Edinburgh, serving as his substitute in the Militia. Francis (18th/19th C.) mason at Yethouse. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. At Yethouse in 1841 were Janet Brydon (aged about 70) and mason Francis (aged about 40), who were probably his widow and son. Francis (b.1797/8) stone mason at Yethouse. His mother was probably Elizabeth Brydon, who was there in 1841. It seems likely that his father was Francis, the mason at Yethouse recorded in 1821. He was still at Yethouse in 1851, but by 1861 his name appears as Francis Armstrong. Francis ‘Frank’ (19th C.) shepherd at a farm near Saughtree. He was a collector of local antiquities, including coins, flints, an iron sword, which were examined by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club when they visited in 1889. Gavin (16th C.) listed along with Adam in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers, but it is not clear where they were from exactly. Gavin (d.1574/5) tenant in Over Ancrum. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1574/5 and that of his wife Katherine Scott in 1578. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gawenn Trumble of the Wowley’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men named included James of Stonedge as well as Oliver of Westerhouses. He presumably lived at Wolfelee in Rulwater. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘called of Bullerwell’ when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope in 1593. The designation suggests that he no longer resided at Billerwell. He must have been related to the slightly earlier and late Adams. He may be the same ‘Gawin Trumbill in Bullerwall’ listed in a court case of 1605. Gavin in Howa (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert in Hallrule and Hector in Stanedge, as well as uncle of Hector of Barnhills. He is probably the ‘Gawen’, brother of William of Barnhills, who is listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. He is probably the brother of Robert ‘tutor of Barnhills’ and also Hector who (along with his brothers, as well as Hector in Barnhills) was declared as a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 men called Grahamslaw. Perhaps the same Gavin was ‘sone to Archie in Hawla’ recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is recorded in 1604, along with his nephews Hector and George, as well as Hector of Stanedge, being tried for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Gawin Turnbill in Howe’, brother of Hector in Stanedge and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule. There was clearly an ongoing feud between the 2 families. Gavin (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. He is listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in ‘…side’ in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with his land being valued at £24. He may have been related to the Laird of Tofts, who held the bulk of the property in 1643 as well as £102 worth of land in Minto. Gavin of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He was also listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish, paying tax on £273. He was presumably related to the earlier Hector of Clarilaw. He could be the same Gavin who had a charter for ‘Kerswell’ in Hassendean from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in Roberton Parish (when it included Hassendean) in 1684. A ‘bastard childs’ of his was baptised, with witnesses John (who was surely related, perhaps his father) and Andrew Leyden. Gavin (18th C.) clothier in Hawick. He was listed along with Thomas as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764. It seems likely he was either father or brother of Thomas (who was a clothier and dyer, and father of poet Gavin). He may be the Gavin who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Wilton in 1769. He and Thomas were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill) in 1770. It is possible that he was the Gavin, son of William, born in Kirkton Parish in 1731 (but this would be too late if he was indeed the father of Thomas). Gavin (d.c.1800) school friend of John Leyden’s. He was the first of his cohort to go off abroad, travelling to India, but dying soon after he arrived. He is mentioned in John Leyden’s poem ‘To Mr. James Purvis’ – ‘The first that tried the eastern sea Was Gavin, gentle youth, was he! His yellow locks fann’d by the breeze, Gleam’d golden on the orient seas: But never shall his steps be seen Bound-ing again on Denholm’s pleasant green’ [JL]. It is possible that he is the Dr. Gavin who was listed at Wiltonhall (in Wilton Parish) in the 1794 and Gavin (1764–1816) born in Hawick, son of ‘Tammy Trumle’ and Beatrice Ruecastle. He moved from Hawick when he was about 10, with his father seeking work in factories elsewhere, including Galashields and being a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. Although his parents were once fairly well-off, their circumstances changed and he was forced to abandon his education and become an apprentice in a carpet factory (Gregory & Thomson) in Kilmarnock; he writes of himself that he was ‘deprived early in life, by unforeseen misfortunes, of the means of pursuing that liberal plan of education he once had a prospect of’. He was said to be small in stature and of a dark complexion. It is also said that he spent more time thinking about poetry than weaving and as a result lived in poverty in a small garret, where ‘the poverty of Burns, of which there has been much talk in the world, was opulence compared to it!’. In Kilmarnock he became a friend of Robert Burns (whose poetry style he imitated, and they both had many of the same influences). It has been suggested that he may have told Burns the story of the giant pin of the haggis served at Haggishaa, which inspired the lines in ‘Address to a Haggis’. He moved with his family to Glasgow, where he worked as a labourer, and it was there that his first volume of verse was published. He later became an actor with George Sutherland’s Company in Dumfries and wrote at least one short play, ‘The Recruit’. In Dumfries he became reacquainted with Burns. However, the acting company in Dumfries broke up (at least in part because of its revolutionary politics, which made it unpopular with the authorities). He married an actress (who appeared with him in ‘The Recruit’ in 1794) and in 1795 emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, South Carolina. There he joined a theatre company and contributed poems to the local newspapers. He lived in modest addresses in downtown Charleston and taught part time. In 1813 he became an American citizen. He had a brother, Thomas, who also emigrated to America, and has surviving relatives. His publications are ‘Poetical Essays’ (1788) and ‘Poems, by Gavin Turnbull, Comedian’ (1794). Many of his verses are elegies and pastorals, in the tradition of the late 18th century, with one known as ‘Silvanus, or The Genius of Tiviot’ and another ode to the Tweed (as well as several to Irvine Water); however, the most interesting are in Scots dialect and in a similar style to Burns’ best-known poetry. Note that the suggested years of his birth are given in some works as being as early as 1758 and as late as 1770, while the year of his death is sometimes suggested to have been much earlier than it was; in fact his death is recorded in a Charleston newspaper in 1816, where he is described as ‘late Comedian, whose talents as a performer on the stage, will long be remembered by many of the inhabitants of this city’. Shortly afterwards a notice appeared in a South Carolina newspaper asking for subscriptions to a volume of poems to support his widow (however, no such volume ever appeared). The project ‘The Collected Poems of Gavin Turnbull Online’ was completed in 2015. He is buried in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian Scots Church in Charleston. Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Mary Blake and their son Gavin was born in 1800. Gavin (1800–54) son of Adam, tenant of Hassendeanbank, brother of Adam Ogilvie and John Robson. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became a surgeon with the East India Company. He may have married Isabella Jane Fenwick in 1826 and they had 5 children. He secondly married Mary MacDougall Stuart in 1841. He died on Jersey. Rev. Gavin (1800–32) born at Brieryhill, he became minister of Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1821, and probably remained there until his death. He was certainly still preacher there in 1831. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He published ‘A Sermon on Meekness’ in Hawick in 1832. He was probably son of John, who was tenant farmer at Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. George of Bedrule (15th C.) witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castletlaw in 1448. He may have been son of John of Bedrule, who was recorded in 1432. In 1461 he was witness to a saisine for lands near Branxholme, where he is recorded as ‘of Bethroul’; William of Minto was also a witness, so he may have been a close relative. He may be the George who (along with Hector, John and William of Minto) was on the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. He was also witness to a saisine of Denholm Mains involving the Cranstons in 1465/6. Probably the same George ‘of Bethrooul’ witnessed a saisine of 1484/5 for Walter Scott of Branxholme for lands in Mangerton. He may be the George who witnessed a saisine for Wolflee in 1479. He may be the George ‘de bethroul’ who had remission in 1493 (along with David Waugh, also from Bedrule, and weaver William White), their crimes being stealing cattle from Pringle... in Pilmuir, associating with John of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was Walter Ker of Cessford, while he himself served as surety for the other 2 men. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. ‘Thomas turnbule Junior dominus de bethroul’ served as surety for several Turnbulls in 1494/5; this suggests that he was still alive, but perhaps old and infirm, so that his son Thomas was effectively acting as chief of the Turnbulls at that time. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas, mentioned as his heir apparent in 1501 and already mentioned several times in the previous decade. Thomas had a brother William, who was thus also his son. George (15th/16th C.) infested by Walter Turnbull (probably Baron of Hassendean) in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1493. He may have been a relative of Walter. He was deceased by 1534 when his son an heir John was recorded in a dispute with Andrew Davidson in Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded being in Bonchester and also ‘in stowisle’ (i.e. Stouslie) at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. David in Bonchester served as his surety and the pair were fined for non-appearance. George (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as son of Walter in Bonchester. The entry is after that for George in Bonchester and Stouslie, and hence this is possibly a different man. He was surety for Andrew Turnbull (in the same place), who failed to appear and was accordingly fined. He may be related to Walter of Stouslie, who is recorded in 1494/5. George (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 along with 4 others. Their crime was concealing a trove of coins that had been found in Minto Kirk, but by rights were Crown property. The Laird of Bedrule served as surety for him and for John Sinclair. Perhaps the same George in Minto had remission in 1493 (in the very next case) for crimes before the date of his previous remission. George of Hallrule (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘of Haw of Roul’ when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5, along with George of Bedrule and others. He was appointed as Captain of Hermitage by Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, probably around 1492. In 1493 he was ‘de aula de roule’ when he was surety for Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule, as well as Simon in Clarilaw. Also in 1493 he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing sheep from Nettleflat on Gala Water; separately stealing a horse and tools from Nettleflat; plundering from Thomas Rutherford at Bonjedward; and involvement in the slaughter of Archibald Rutherford. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he and Patrick Earl of Bothwell (Lord of Liddesdale) were fined £40 Scots for the non-appearance of William Elliot and each of 85 other Borderers; he was there recorded as Captain of Hermitage. Also in 1494/5 he was also surety for Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote. He is probably the George ‘in the Hermitage’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere. Probably the same George of ‘Hawroull’ was listed in 1502 among about 20 Turnbulls and others who were fined for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; he was supposed to enter into the court John, Andrew and William in Gatehousecote, William in Bonchester and his son Lawrence, David in Bonchester, and David, Andrew and Hugh Shiel. Also in 1502 he was surety (along with Bartholomew in Rawflat) for Adam, tenant in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton, who had brought Englishman Sir John Musgrave to burn and plunder Selkirk. That year he was also surety (along with Robert Scott in Stitches) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme, as well as for Hector Shiel and for John Sinclair (from Cavers, who murdered John Moffat). Also in 1502 he was surety, along with several other Turnbull chiefs, for Margaret in Hawick, who was convicted of theft and resetting thieves. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. All of these records together show that he was a prominent man in Rulewater at the time. George ‘Hawick’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being called ‘hawic’ and living at ‘turri de wauchop’ (presumably Wauchope Tower). David of Wauchope was surety for him and they were fined for non-appearance. Perhaps the same man was ‘georgii turnbule de hawik’ and explicitly listed with along with David (who was probably a close relative and perhaps the same David of Wauchope), among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He presumably lived at or came from Hawick. George (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Wyndis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when along with about 20 Turnbulls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead and Thomas Brown in Cavers were called to enter him, with his surety being the Sheriff of Roxburgh. Failing to appear, he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods. George (15th/16th C.) recorded ‘in Tofts’ in 1502 when he was allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of assisting rebel Robert Turnbull, called ‘Muriale’ in the burning of Riddell and stealing of 480 sheep, 2 cows and goods. John Turnbull of Tofts served as surety, so was presumably his close relative. Note that Pitcairn appears to have mistakenly called him ‘David’. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘tandines’ (probably Tanlaw Naze) in 1503. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 4 oxen, 4 cows, a horse and 30 sheep, which was more than most others) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was probably related to William, who was listed in the same place. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, recorded in the 1516 remission for Turnbulls and others who may have given assistance to Alexander, Lord Home. It is possible that he was the Laird of Bedrule, but he is clearly listed as being ‘in Bethroule’. He may be the same George ‘in Bedrule’ mentioned in 1523. George of Bedrule (d.bef. 1528) possibly son of Thomas of Bedrule, who is recorded in 1502. He is not mentioned on the 1516 remission for a large number of Turnbulls, suggesting perhaps that he was a minor, or elsewhere at the time (William of Minto is named first and is clearly the head of the family at that time). He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523, along with George ‘in Bedrule’ (therefore possibly related). He may have been the Laird who was present at the signing of the bond among Border Lairds to help the Warden (Earl of Angus) in 1524/5. It is also possible that he was the George, son of Thomas, who was wounded by William Scott, son of Robert Scott in Allannahg. It is unclear exactly when this happened, but Scott had remission in 1535. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1519 and was succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme had a gift from King James V of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his lands, as well as the marriage of his heir, Thomas (then still a minor). He must have had other children, since Sir Walter Scott also had rights to the marriage of ‘ony vther aire or airis male, or female, of the said vmequhile George’. In 1553 Robert ‘brother german of the lord of Bedroull’ is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books and presumably his son. In 1578/9 there is a record of John, ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’, who must have been his grandson (although the son’s name is unknown). Sir Walter Scott married his widow in 1530/1. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being at Minto and listed right after William of Minto among a large number of Turnbulls pardoned in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbulls. George (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be same as George ‘in Foultoun’ who was part of an inquest into the ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘layman of the diocese of Glasgow’ in 1526 when he had permission to marry Christian Ker, despite being within the 3rd and 4th degrees of consanguinity. This is preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. George (16th C.) son and heir of Thomas ‘in Rawflat’. He is described in 1540 in a court case involving a dispute between his father Thomas and William Scott, tenant of Hassendean. Part of the dispute is over a 1536 marriage contract he had with William Scott’s eldest daughter and heir, Elizabeth. George (16th C.) listed as ‘in Bullorwell’ (i.e. Billerwell) when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest. It seems likely he is also the George transcribed being ‘of Bulleckwell’ when he was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Lady Isobel Kerr, wife of William, Viscount Drumlanrig, when she was buried in 1628. George of Standhill (16th C.) listed as pledge for the Laird of Minto in 1553/4. This was in the assurance given to keep peace with the Rutherfords and others. He and George ‘of the Tour’ were to remain in ward in Edinburgh, as pledges for Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Hector, Tutor of Minto and David of Wauchope. George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His yard there is listed among the lands disputed by the Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. He may be related to the earlier Andrew and Thomas who are recorded as tenants there. George of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he witnessed a dispute over a sum of money involving James Douglas of Cavers and William ‘Familtounne’. He was also recorded in 1562 when he was ordered to be warded in Dunbar Castle. George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward was his surety. He was also listed in 1564 among Border laiards who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Barnhills. George (16th C.) holder of quarter of the lands of Raperlaw. In 1564 his lands there were leased to William Gray and William Redford. George of Chamberlain Newton and Woolee (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was recorded as Laird of Chamberlain Newton in 1563 when he witnessed a notarial instrument between Robert Michelson and David Home of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Blackhaugh (near Clovenfords). There were Turnbulls at Chamberlain Newton earlier, but it is seems that this George no longer lived in the Hawick area, and hence it is unclear how he was related to other local Turnbulls. He may be the George who witnessed a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1567 he was ‘of Wowlie’ when he tried to eject David Elliot as tenant in his 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. In 1572 he sold half of Chamberlain Newton to Gavin Elliott of Baileylee (and later Stobs) and his wife Jean Scott; they complained to the Privy Council that David Elliots’ widow Margaret Turnbull (who is not stated to be a relative, but that is unclear), who possessed the other half of Chamberlain Newton, encouraged her sons Walter and John Scott to attack Gavin Elliott’s servant there. He is probably the George ‘of Vowly’ whose son was murdered some time before 1587, as mentioned in the Privy Council (when those at the horn for the murder were excepted from a respite given to Borderers accused of crimes); the murder is also mentioned in instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas (8th Earl of Angus and Lieutenant on the Border) as ‘the scollar named Turnble, sone to George Turnbull in Wowlie’. George (16th C.) tenant in Catlee. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. He was probably related to Eckie of Catlee, recorded in 1586/7. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Andrew, who was listed right after him. George of Hassendeankbank (16th C.) listed among among men from the Jedburgh area accused in 1573 by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed as ‘of Hassinbank’. George (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Bedrule in 1579 and 1580. There could be some confusion with John, who was Reader just before this. George (16th C.) of Hallrule, probably descendant of the earlier George of Hallrule. He is recorded as ‘in Hallrewill’ in 1557 when there was a complaint to the Regent about ‘molestatious’ by him and Thomas of Bedrule. This related to the lands of Kirklands, Hallrule and Swinnie owned by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, suggesting that there was an ongoing land dispute. He was ‘of Halrroule’ in 1561 when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was probably ‘The Guidman of Halrule’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1571 he appeared before the Privy Council and was instructed ‘to abide in Leith’. In 1574 he signed a bond of service with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus, along with other Turnbulls. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chester) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. Probably the same man was ‘in Halroule’ in 1581 when he and others were denounced as rebels for refusing to obey the charge to restore Sir Thomas Ferniehirst to the living of Bedrule parish. Also in 1581 he was listed among 10 men implicated in the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. In 1581/2 there was a charge to remove him and others from their lands for not complying. And in 1583/4 Sir Thomas Kerr had an ‘escheat’ to take his goods, along with those of John and Walter, farmers at ‘Roull’ and Hobsburn, respectively, who may have been close relations. He may be the George of Hallrule named in 1587 as one of the 13 main Lairds of the Middle March who were charged to keep thieves in check. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. He is the ‘Turnble of Halcrooull’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590, and is the George ‘of Halrrewill’ listed among Border Lairds by Monipennie in 1597. In 1595 he was recorded along with Turnbulls of Minto, Bewlie, Barnhills and Stonedge, as well as Davidsouns, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. In 1597 his daughter Isobel had a marriage contract with John, eldest son of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1603, as part of the marriage contract, he rented the half lands of Hallrule to the Turnbuls of Barnhills. It is possible that there are 2 generations of Georges compounded here. George (16th C.) brother of James ‘of the Toure’. Along with his brother he was listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is probably the ‘George Trumbill in Tour’ who signed the 1560 bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Rutherford and the Kers. He may be the George ‘of the Toure’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551 and who was one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4; he and George of Standhill were to remain in ward in Edinburgh. He is probably the George ‘of the Toure’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. George ‘Geordie’, ‘the Duds’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Geordie Turnbull, callit the Duddis’. George (16th C.) Laird of Billerwell in 1589, presumably a descendant of the earlier George and Adam. He was among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England 3 years earlier; it was claimed that 200 men raided Doortrees and Stobs, taking 80 cows, 240 sheep, 10 horses, goods and 6 prisoners. The later Adam of Billerwell (whose son and heir was also George) may have been his son. If so he also had a son Andrew. He is probably also the ‘Turneble of Bullerwell’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He may be the ‘goodman of Bullerwell’ who complained in 1601 about Englishmen stealing his cattle, sheep and horses. George of the Tofts (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of about 1590. He is probably the George ‘of the Toftis’ who was ordered to appear personally in 1567 to answer accusations about raiding into England. George (16th/17th C.) younger son of John of Minto. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father and brother Thomas, among Turnbuls and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; unlike his father and brother, he was declared as a rebel for non-appearance. George ‘the Creelman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit the creilman in Crocecleucht’ (i.e. ‘Crossecleuch’) in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton. George (16th/17th C.) farmer at Crosscleuch, recorded in 1602 (and separate from George ‘the Creelman’). He was son of the deceased John. George (d.1601) recorded as George ‘Trumbill in Phillophaucht’ when he was witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1579 and when he purchased land in Midlem in 1579/80. He is probably the George of Philiphaugh involved in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580. He was recorded in Philiphaugh in 1581 when he had a marriage contract between his son John and Katherine, daughter of Adam Hislop in Ashiestiel; his wife Isabel Murray is also mentioned. He witnessed a transaction in 1581 for James Ker in Yair. Also in 1581 he and his wife gave sasine of 2½ acres of land to Katherine, daughter of Adam Hislop in Ashiestiel. His son James witnessed him granting a sasine in 1581. In 1581 he represented the Sheriff of Selkirkshire and his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1581/2, including an agreement between the widow and son (Mark) of John of Philiphaugh. He is probably the George who witnessed a transaction for his brother Mark in Philiphaugh in 1581/2. In 1582 he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. He is described as ‘in Phillophauch’ in 1601, when his son John was served heir to his 5-merk land in Philiphaugh, called ‘Bairborisland’. He may have been son of John, who inherited these lands from his mother in 1558. George ‘Geordie’ of Belses (d.1603) brother of David in Belses, with other brothers being John and Adam. He was listed among a group of Turnbuls (led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule) who were accused in 1579 of raiding the lands of ‘Pansoun’ in England, stealing cattle and taking the Laird there prisoner; his brother David was also listed. The brothers were also recorded in 1581 when accused of attacking the farm at Rawflat and killing Walter of Rawflat. He was denounced in 1583/4 for failing to appear before the Privy Council; he was listed along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others. In 1586/7 his brother Adam was listed among Borderers accused of crimes and given a last chance to provide sureties. In 1587 Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety for him, as well as his brother David and also Andrew in Belses. He was tried in 1603 for a long string of crimes, including:
mURNING John Hamilton of Cumnock; murdering William, son of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; capturing and torturing Walter Turnbull’s servant Adam Turnbull (it is said that he had him hung by the feet and shoulders for 13 days, causing his feet to rot off); illegally carrying guns; shooting Walter Turnbull, younger of Rawflat; stealing 4 cows from John Donaldson in Melrose; stealing 6 cows, 20 sheep, 2 horses and goods from David Riddell in St. Boswells; stealing 16 cows from the Laird of Bemersyde; stealing 20 sheep from the Lady of Newton; stealing 5 sheep from George Davidson in Belses; stealing a horse from George Wilson in Langnewton; and being ‘a com-none briggane and notorious cowmone thief’. He claimed to have killed William Turnbull in self defence (suggesting some intra-family feud). He also appears to have killed the elder Walter of Rawflat, after he was pronounced a rebel for refusing to leave the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses in 1581. He was acquitted of most of the offences, but nevertheless convicted of illegally carrying fire-arms and had his right hand cut off at the Market Cross of Edinburgh. Later the same year he appeared on charges of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his brother Jock’s wife Marion. At the same time he was accused of stealing a horse from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1577, stealing 20 cows from Rawflat in 1579, stealing 4 horses from 4 millers in Jedburgh about 1600 and stealing a horse from the younger Walter of Rawflat. This time he was convicted of all charges, and hanged in Edinburgh, with all his lands and goods confiscated. He is probably the ‘Turneble of Belses’ listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of about 1590. In 1598 was accused of being part of a gang that stole 16 cattle from Bemersyde. In 1603 he was tried in Edinburgh and had ‘his richt hand strucken from his airm’. He is surely related to the slightly later George of Belses, possibly his son, as well as the Hector of Belses recorded in 1604. George (16th/17th C.)
tenant of the lands of Fulton, recorded in a 1602 letter, which lists 2 other George Turnbells! He is distinguished with the appellation ‘callit of Crawden’. He was probably related to ‘David of Crawden’ recorded in 1583/4. George (16th/17th C.) brother of Hector of Barnhills, he was tenant in Howa. He could be the George, son to ‘Archie of Howa’ recorded in the inventory of Mark Ker of Kippielaw in 1579. He could be the George, brother of Hector in Barnhills who (along with his brother, as well as Robert ‘tutor of Barnhills’ and Robert’s brothers Hector and Gavin) was de-declared a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 men called Grahamslaw. In 1604 he was denounced as a rebel (along with his brother Hector, uncle Gavin and also Hector of Stanedge) for failing to appear on the charge of murdering 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. He could be the George ‘called of Howden’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbells (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers.
He was described as being ‘in Howa’ in 1606 when he was one of the Turnbull clan accused of laying waste to Appotside and Harwood in 1598– 1605. The action against him was not pursued, although the Turnbells of Wauchope were tried and Thomas Turnbull convicted. He was probably the George in ‘Howay’, brother of Hector of Barnhills, who resigned a tenement of land off the Kirkwyd in Hawick in 1610. George (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Billerwell. He witnessed a sasine in 1612 and was part of a bond with his father in 1619, with John Haliburton of Mertoun. George (d.c.1637) 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope. In 1605 he was ‘tutor’ to his relatives Jean and Beatrix Turnbull, daughters of Walter of Wauchope.
He is also mentioned as 2nd son of Hector in a court case of 1605, where a separate George is also listed in Wauchope. In 1606 he was one of the men charged with stealing from and burning Appotside and Harwood, killing 3 men and cutting down Appotside woods in the period 1598–1605.
Although he was tried (and probably involved),
he was acquitted, with his older brother Thomas being the only one convicted. He is recorded in a ‘contract of wadset’ with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ox-nam in 1612. He held the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) in exchange for advancing money to Sir Andrew. He must have gained a portion of the lands, since in 1627 he granted them to Sir James Douglas of Mordinyon. In 1632 Temple-hall and Brewlands are described as ‘possessed by George Turnbull of Wauchope and his tenants’, but the feu of the lands were held by Jean Turnbull, niece and heir of Andrew, son of David of Wauchope (hence presumably a distant cousin).
However, his son James renounced all rights to the lands to William Earl of Lothian in 1655. He may have been the George describe as ‘there’ in relation to Templehall in a sasine of 1604. In 1637 he was described as ‘called of Wauchope’ when the guardianship of his son James was given to Hector in Clarilaw, as his closest male relative; it seems likely that this Hector was his cousin (since the record would have stated if they were brothers). George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope, recorded in a court case of 1605 in which John Elliot of Copshaw and others were accused of stealing livestock from Wauchope. He is separate from the 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope, who is also listed there, but could be related to the Adam, also tenant of Wauchope. George (16th/17th C.) son of James of West Lees. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he was witness to a bond between his father and George Rutherford, also tenant of Bedrule. He was also recorded as son of the Laird of Bedrule among fugitives listed at the Privy Council in 1618. Perhaps the same George was listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. George (16th/17th C.) acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1617–21. George of Belses (16th/17th C.) possibly son of the earlier George of Belses, who was hanged in 1603. He is later described in the Commissioners’ Court as ‘Geordie in Belsches’, when he is accused of having stolen 11 sheep from the lands of ‘Raflett’ (i.e. Rawflat) belonging to the Davidssons, in about 1612; he was sentenced to be hanged, but presumably was later acquitted. In 1618 the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood complained that he and Andrew (probably a close relative) had not paid the profits of the lands of Hawthornrig for the previous 2 years. Additionally in 1618 he is ‘porter of Belsches’ when he complained about a series of attacks by the Middlemas of Lilliesleaf. Specifically William Middlemas and his sons, brother and supporters fired at the windows of his house in the night, and were only saved ‘by the timely arrival of some country people’, then servants of William Middlemas attacked his farm workers while he was at Sunday worship and afterwards William ‘upbraidit him with mony injurious and repotechfull speiches, and proudlie and avowelde appealit him to the combat’. Several of those accused were found guilty by the Privy Council and imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Andrew Ker of Roxburgh had a bond for him in 1622. Robert owned Templehall in 1647 and may have been his son. George (16th/17th C.) probably son of William and hence grandson of Walter of Bedrule. In 1619 he was listed among Turnbulls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. Additionally in 1619 he was ‘son to the said William Turnble fiar of Badreule’ when listed among Turnbulls accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. George (17th C.) proprietor of Todshaw in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘near Edderstonesheils’ (i.e. Adderstonesheil) in 1684 when he was listed among people declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. George (d.c.1685) tenant in Birkhill when his will was recorded in 1685. It is possible this was the place of that name in Hobkirk Parish, where Walter and Robert were in 1694. George (17th C.) tenant in Doveshaugh. In 1686 he was fined in Hawick ‘for having seedie and isufficient meale in the market, being about ane gouping of seed sived out of half ane pecke of his full sackle’. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. George (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1661/2–1728) tenant in Upper Bonchester, probably son of William of Upper Bonchester. He is buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard, as recorded on an old headstone there. He was probably related to William Turnbull, miller of Harestane, whose daughter Susan is recorded on the same stone. He appears to have been the last Turnbull of Bonchester. His daughter Margaret married William Turnbull, tenant of Hartshaugh Mill. He is probably the George listed as ‘his sone’ after William ‘in ye mide of ye toun’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; both of them are listed after William ‘in Bonochaster’. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, living at Syton in 1698. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1695), William (b.1698) and Robert (b.1700). George (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1716 he gave in a bond of £60 Scots granted to Margaret Waugh (widow of Thomas), which she had bequeathed for the poor of the town. Presumably this was some loan between him and Waugh, which Waugh’s widow decided to donate to charity. In 1712 he married Janet Cavers, who was also from Hawick and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1713. The witnesses were Bailie Robert Hardie and shoemaker Walter Scott. He later married Isobell Scott and their children included John (b.1717), William (b.1718), Margaret (b.1720), George (b.1721) and Gilbert (b.1727). The witnesses in 1718 were merchant Adam Elliot and tailor James Boston. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1717 when his daughter Betty was baptised. He may be the George who married Betty Scott in Cavers in 1714. George ‘Young Whitegates’ (18th C.) married Elizabeth Dalgleish in Hawick in 1720. His wife was daughter of John Dalgleish, wright at Alton Croft. Perhaps the same George and Elizabeth had a son John in Crailing Parish in 1724. The meaning of his nickname is unclear, but it may be related to the Scotts who were called ‘Whiteyetts’. George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Almoor in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same George was at Mains in 1731 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who married Betty Lamb in 1729. Their children included John (b.1730), Helen (b.1731), George (b.1733) and James (b.1736). George (18th C.) resident of Asbybank in 1735, 1741 and 1747. He was recorded as a gardener in 1747. Children, baptised in Cavers, who are probably his include: William (b.1735); John (b.1736); Ann and Archibald (b.1738); William (b.1741); Robert (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and George (b.1749). He was surely related to Walter, who was at Asbybank at the same time. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabel Henderson in 1754 and their son Adam was born in 1757. The witnesses were tailor John Turnbull (who was probably related) and shoemaker Robert Oliver. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1772. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Irvine of Newton in 1787. He married Jean King in 1767 and their children included: Margaret (b.1768); George (b.1769); William (b.1772); John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (b.1781) and Helen (b.1786). In 1769 the witnesses were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid and in 1772 Andrew Turner and John Mathieson. George (18th C.) resident at Robertson Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1773 and 1775 and Greenbank in 1781. His children included William (b.1773), Isobel (b.1775), Robert (b.1776), John (b.1779), Margaret (b.1781) and James (b.1783). George (18th C.) married Barbara Hardie in Hawick in 17656. George (18th C.) married Isabel Kedie in Ashkirk in 1767. George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He is probably the George ‘Senr.’ recorded on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence father of George junior. He is recorded as ‘senior’ when he (along with Walter Wilson) witnessed baptisms for George ‘Junior’ in 1776 and 1777. He may also be the same man as ‘George Turnbull Senr. Vintner’ in Hawick, who is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5. He may be the George who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. He may be the ‘Senior Merchant’ whose son John was listed in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their children included: John (b.1774); John (again, b.1777); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1777 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his wife’s father) and ex-Bailie William Elliot. He is probably the George who witnessed baptisms for Bailie John Hardie in Hawick in 1768, 1772 and 1774. His marriage was probably the one with ‘Agnes’ Hardie recorded in Hwicken in 1771. George (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick, with his shop at 14 High Street. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Junior Merchant’, and was hence son of another George, who had been a merchant before him. Note that the somewhat later drapers, William and James (at 11 High Street), were not closely related. He is recorded as George ‘Junior’ on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1785–87 and 1791–97. He is probably the merchant George who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson and Isabel Turnbull (perhaps a relative) in 1780 and the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1798. He is probably the ‘George Turnbull, jun. Hawick’ on the subscribers list for ‘Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the junior merchant of that name who was among the creditors of Walter Lunn in the court case for bankruptcy against Lunn in the years 1799–1803. He is still ‘Jun Mercht’ in 1791 and in 1795 when he witnessed a baptism for John Straiton and Agnes Wilson (his sister-in-law). In 1774 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Wilson, eldest eldest daughter of ‘Haunless Wat’; she died in 1829. Their children included: George (1776–1809): Katherine (b.1777), who married William Oliver; Janet (b.1778), who died unmarried; Betty (b.1779–81); Walter (1780–1809); Elizabeth or Betty (again, b.1781), who married tobacconist James Scott; William (b.1783); Jane (b.1784); Agnes (or Nancy, 1785–1827), who George (18th/19th C.) resident of Longnewton Moor, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. George (b.c.1770s) mason in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. George (b.c.1770s) servant to William White in Denholm, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. George (b.c.1770s) mason at Shaws according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. George (b.c.1770s) servant at Burnfoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. He may be the stockmaker at Danside recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot. George (18th/19th C.) married Jenny Riddell in Southdean in 1806. It is possible that his wife was the ‘Jane Riddell or Turnbull’ whose son George’s house ‘in or near to Silver Street’ was mentioned in the court case over the 1837 election riot, with her own house being below her son’s. George (1783–1861) eldest son of James and Betty Adamson. He was born at Hillshaugh and became a carrier in the Rulewater district, like his grandfather, George Adamson. It is said he frequently acted as the disseminator of news. In later life he moved to Newcastleton and was a grocer and meal-dealer at about 41 North Hermitage Street. He was listed there on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scott (from Wilton Parish), who died in 1860, aged 89. Their children were: James, born at Kirknow; Thomas, born at Uthank; Betty; and an unnamed child. He and his wife were buried at Ettleton. George (b.c.1810) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as a male servant. He married Rachel Clyde and their children included: George (b.1832); David (b.1834), labourer; James (b.1837), miller; Christian (or Christina, b.1841); and Margaret (b.1845). His wife was still recorded in Deanburnhaugh in 1851 and 1861 (but he was absent, and so presumably deceased). George (b.1809/10) joiner at Appletreehall. He was listed as wright there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was living there in 1841 with his siblings Betsy and William. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes, William, John, James, George and Isabella. George (19th C.) son of the gardener at Borthwickbrae and grandson of George, carrier in Rulewater. He was coachman to Hawick’s Provost Wilson. George (b.1819) son of weaver William and brother of John S. He was an accountant, for a long time cashier for Nixon & MacKie, then in business for himself, later moving to Edinburgh. In 1861 he was a Commercial Accountant, living at 57 High Street. He married Jessie Allan Mark in 1843; her brother founded the wool merchant’s firm W.D. Mark & Sons of Newcastle. Their children included: William (b.1844); John Mark (b.1846); George (b.1849); Christina Dobson (b.1850), who probably died young; Alexander Dobson (b.1853), cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co.; Margaret Ogilvie (b.1856); and Christina Dobson (again, b.1859). George (1821–72) seed merchant, who was Cornet in 1841. He came from the Turnbulls of Allars House, and was son of John. In 1851 he was a seedsman and merchant at 4 Bourtree Place. He set up a partnership with the Dicksons, with office at 18 High Street, and nursery grounds where Teviot Crescent and North Bridge Street were later built. He donated coins to the Museum in the 1860s. He married Agnes, daughter of Peter Amos, farmer at Earlside. Their children included: Margaret, who married John Brown; Violet, who married Frank Wilson; Helen (b.1910), who married Thomas Telfer Charlton; Euphemia, who married his cousin Peter Amos (b.1860); Jane, who married Gilbert Davidson; John, unmarried; Agnes, also unmarried; Peter, also unmarried; Jessie, who married Rev. Peter Brice Gunn; Alice, who married Thomas Brice Gunn; and George, who married Nancy Brown. He was said to resemble ‘John Bull’ in later years. George (1826–66) 2nd son of John and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Scott. His uncles were schoolmasters at Wilton and at Hobkirk. George Purvis (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Bilerwell. He had a twin sister Mary. He emigrated to Canada, where he raised cattle. An earlier man of the same name (b.1821) was his uncle. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Newton in 1718 and Clari- law in 1724, 1726, 1729, 1733 and 1739. He wit- nessed a baptism in 1724 for James Ormiston, resident of Boonraw. He married Helen Scott in 1718 and their children included: Thomas (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); James (b.1724); James (again, b.1726); Janet (b.1729); Helen (b.1733); and William (b.1739). The witnesses in 1724 were James Ormiston and John Huntlie, in 1726 were Robert Scott and another Scott (probably William), perhaps relatives of his wife, in 1729 were Walter and William Scott, in 1733 were Robert Scott and Thomas Turnbull (who may have been related) and in 1739 were John and Walter Scott. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Patrick. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Gilbert (18th C.) son of Walter, Schoolmaster in Minto. In 1733 he became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Gilbert (b.1742) son of Thomas, who was one of the instigators of Hawick’s carpet trade. He was born in Minto Parish. In 1758 he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He joined the Honourable East India Company. It is said that he had extravagant habits and would send his bills Grisel (d.c.1685) described as ‘in Roull’ when her will was recorded in 1685. It is unclear where in Rulewater she may have lived. Hector (15th C.) member of the inquest panel for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Other men listed included George, John and William of Minto. Hector (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfleee in 1522 for the Homes of Wedderburn. Archibald is listed right after him, and possibly related. Hector of Barnhills (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Bailie in that part’, along with John Turnbull, in a sasine for William, Lord Herries of Terregles, Baron of Feu-Rule for Hector Lorraine of Harwood. He may be the Hector ‘of Bernhylis’ who was listed among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. Hector (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1549 he was granted the 2 husband lands in Appletreehall belonging to Robert Scott of Howpasley. Along with his brother David and Patrick Gordon, he was already tenant of these lands at the time. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Hector of Barnhills (16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had a sasine for the lands of Barnhills in 1554. He may have been succeeded by William (recorded in 1584/5) and then the Hector (recorded in about 1590). Hector (16th C.) recorded as ‘tutour of Mynto’ in 1551 when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Hector of Barnhills (16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had a sasine for the lands of Barnhills in 1554. He may have been succeeded by William (recorded in 1584/5) and then the Hector (recorded in about 1590). Hector (16th C.) recorded as ‘tutour of Mynto’ in 1551 when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherford and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was George of Standhill. Also in 1553/4 he was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Wal- ter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, where he is recorded as ‘tutorem de Mynto’. Hector of Barnhills was also listed, proving he was a different man, although it is unclear to which branch of the Turnbulls he did belong (but presumably associated with the Turnbulls of Minto). He was simple ‘of Mynto’ in 1561, when listed among Bor- der Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was ‘The Tour of Mynto’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was ‘Tutor of Mynto’ when he signed the 1569 bond to suppress Border thieves, also signed by several other men of Roxburghshire and neighbouring areas. Hector (16th C.) listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer charges of raiding into England. He was recorded being of ‘Vowley’, which is probably Woollee. Hector (16th C.) listed in 1567 when he was among men to be entered by David Home of Wedderburn. He is recorded being ‘in Turnbull’ (although it seems likely this is a transcription error, perhaps for Town-o-Rule) and brother to George. ‘Isobellis Robene’, as well as Adam, son to Sanyd Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers were also to be entered from there. Hector ‘Heckie’ of Belses (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses. He was recorded in 1579 when his son Thomas was listed among men accused of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was ‘Heckie’, son of Adam in Belses, for whom there was a pledge to stop thieving in 1576, along with his brothers David, George and John. Since his name was given first, he may have been the eldest son. The joint cautioners were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and William Turnbull of Barnhills. He was also ‘Ekkie Trumbill of Belsis’ in 1580 when his son Andrew (then a minor) was convicted of murder. This was probably the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock who was slain ‘vnder sileence of nycht in his bed within ane laych chalmer in the place of Polwart’. In 1580 there was a further complaint by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, that he, his son Dand, and brother-in-law Patrick Richardson, killed her husband (John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’, presumably the same man) at his home in Polwart; they were all denounced as rebels. Sir George Home of Wedderburn received the ‘escheeat’ of his (Hector’s) estate, as well as that of the other convicted man, John Young in ‘Camys’. At the end of 1580 he gave sasine to his daughter and heir Katherine for the ‘ten librates of land of old extent of Belses’. His brother John was a witness, as well as several men who lived in Belses. He was probably either deceased or exiled by 1581 when his brothers David, George, John and Adam were recorded. He is ‘Heckie of Belseis’ in 1586/7 when ‘Andro’ his ‘bastard sone’ is listed among Border criminals (this could be the same son as Dand); he is also the ‘Ekkie in Belses’ (with no surname given) whose brother-in-law ‘Pait Richesoun’ is on the same list in 1586/7. Hector (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector ‘Eckie’ of Catlee (16th C.) listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is recorded as ‘Eckie Turnbull of Catlie’, suggesting that his name was Hector. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. He may be related to the earlier Turnbulls associated with Catlee. Hector of Wauchope (d.bef. 1612) son of David. In 1571/2 he joined several Borders lairds in signing a bond to act against thieves. In 1572/3 he was recorded as son and heir apparent of David of Wauchope, when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with William Ker of Caverston as surety. In 1573 he and his father signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1580 he and Walter of Hobsburn were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. Also in 1580 he was in a group of Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn, who had a band to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is probably the unnamed Turnbull of Wauchope who was on the 1584/5 list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in order to keep peace on the Border. He is probably the ‘lard of Wauchop’ listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 Sir Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as his cautions. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590 he was in prison in Edinburgh Tolbooth when the Earl of Angus became bound to enter him to William Ker of Cessford, Warden of the Middle Marches, to answer an accusation by an Englishman. Additionally he was mentioned in a 1590 case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant; he was described ‘being now tenant and vassal to William Ker of Cessford, Warden of the Middle Marches, to answer an accusation by an Englishman. for the assurance of good behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Wauchope (separate from those derived from Minto) in 1595; he signed by ‘touching the pen of the notary’. Also in 1595 he, along with John Rutherford of Hunthill and William Scott of HowPasley, were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘bleach ferns and castle-wards’; in 1599 there was a complaint about the Sheriff (James Douglas of Cavers) for not prosecuting the men. In 1599 he complained that he had captured Gilbert and Hector Lorraine, who were ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his son David, and handed them over to James Douglas of Cavers; who had refused to enter them in court. He is probably ‘the old Laird of Vaughopp’ recorded in 1601 when and Englishman complained that he had stolen cattle from him. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace (with his hand ‘at the pen’). In 1603 he complained about Turnbulls from Nether Bonchester, Braidhaugh, Mackside and ‘Harkschaw’ stealing more than 20 cows from his lands. His 2nd son George was recorded in 1604 in a sasine for lands of Templehall. In 1605 he accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a group of about 100 riders who stole 80 cows, 100 sheep and 1 horses from Wauchope in 1602. His eldest son Thomas, 2nd son George and several other neighbouring tenants are also recorded; Elliot was found not guilty, however. His surety in this case was Robert Home, younger of ‘the Heuch’. In 1606 he was the most senior of the men accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; his sons George and John are also listed. They were accused of stealing a huge number of livestock, cutting down virtually the whole wood at Appotside and killing the young Laird of Harwood and his younger brother, as well as a servant of their mother, Lady Appotside. It is unclear exactly what Margaret (herself a daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) had done to invoke the ire of her neighbours and distant kin. Although he and the others were eventually acquitted, his son Thomas was separately found guilty of the same crimes. Probably the same Hector is recorded in 1612, when his son George was involved in a contract with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam relating to Templehall (in the Rule valley). His son and heir David married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593, but was killed before 1599; those involved in his death included Gilbert and Hector (uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood), as well as James Lorraine of Appotside; this was presumably part of the same family feud. Thomas was heir afterwards, with George being the next son. Hector of Clarilaw (16th/17th C.) listed in a bond of March 1594/5, along with Richard Turnbull, subscribed by James Gledstains of Cocklaw, that they would not harm Gavin Elliot of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He may be related to the Hector who had a charter for Pinnacle and Broomlands in 1550. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. As well as other crimes, he was singled out for his involvement with stealing livestock from and burning Appotside in 1598. However, he was cleared of all charges. He was surely related to the slightly later Hector of Clarilaw. Either he or his son was the Hector of Clarilaw who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. He is probably the Hector in Clarilaw who was put to the horn in 1618 for the murder of Gavin Elliot in Hassindeanburn. In 1619 an action was raised by Elliot’s widow and children to apprehend him, with the Laird of Cranston appointed to head the commission. Not appearing, there was an order to take his houses and goods for the King’s use. Hector (d.aft. 1610) probably son of Thomas of Harsthaung (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule). In 1580 he was a ‘kindlie tenant’ in possession of the lands of Kirklands of Hobkirk. His ancestors had probably been ‘kindly tenants’ of Jedburgh Abbey for several generations. In 1581 he was listed (along with his son Thomas) as ‘in Hartishauch’ among the 10 men accused of being involved with the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Tom ‘of Harkschaw’ and his brother ‘Lancy Trumble’, who were listed among men who stole cattle from Wauchope in 1603, seem likely to be his sons or other close relatives. He had a charter to lands of Hartshau and Swanshiel in 1604, specifically the lands and mill of ‘Hartishauch’, the lands of ‘Wester Swoonshield’, including the wood called ‘Clerksbank’, and the ‘kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, except for the manse and glebe. These lands were in the Barony of Abbotrule. He is stated as having been tenant in Hartshau beyond the memory of man’. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘in Hartshau’ when he was part of an inquest for succession to lands in Rulewater. His son Mark had a bond in 1616 (when he was presumably still alive) with William Scott of Todrig. He may be the Hector in Hartshau recorded in 1619 (along with Adam, also there) among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. He married twice, and his children (to his 2nd wife) were James, Mark and William. ‘Leonall’ (possibly Lyle) may have been another child. His grandson Adam was served heir to his lands of ‘Vic-carislandis’ in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swansen and ‘Clerksbankis’. It is unclear whether he is the same as any of the other contemporary Hectors. Hector of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) surely directly related to the earlier Hector of Barnhills, and possibly son or brother of William of Barnhills. He had a charter of confirmation issued by James VI for the lands of Barnhills. He may be the Hector, brother of [blank] Trumbill of Barnehills’ recorded as in 1581/2 in Selkirk to 2 transactions (one along with James in Selkirk, who may have been related, and another along with Mark, heir of Howden); he was also recorded explicitly as brother of William of Barnhills in several other transactions in 1581/2. He witnessed a further transaction in 1582. In 1586 he was ‘in Barnhills’ when denounced as a rebel for his part in the slaughter of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; the others named included his brother George, a son of Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert ‘tutor of Barnhills’ (perhaps his uncle) and Robert’s brothers Hector and Gavin, as well as several Douglases. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is also listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590. In 1595 he was recorded along with Turnbills of Minto, Bewlie, Hallrule and Stonedge, as well as Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1597 and a following grant of lands of Hallrule and others in 1603. In 1599 he was a subscriber at Barnhills to a bond by John of Minto to enter the Lorraines; his servants George Bell and Robert Brown also subscribed. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Mark of Bewlie, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. Also in 1602 it is recorded that he had been ‘put to the horn’ and the ‘liferent of all and sundry’ of his lands had been given by escheat to Alexander, Lord Home, including Hallrule (which a group of Armstrongs and Elliots attacked). His eldest son John married Isobel, daughter of George of Hallrule. He is probably the Hector of Barnhills who was tried in 1604 for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; also tried were his brother George, their uncle Gavin and Hector of Stanedge. They were denounced as rebels for not appearing; however, they were probably rehabilitated, since his he and his son and heir John were taken to court in 1609 by David, son of the late John Scott ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ for not paying what they had borrowed. In 1607 he and Thomas of Wauchope brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistols to their breasts for their slaughter’. In 1610 his brother George ‘in Howay’ is recorded resigning a tenement of land in Hawick. Hector of Bewlie (d.1604) probably a younger son of Walter of Bewlie. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Robert and Andrew, among Turnbills and Davidsions, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. Thomas, heir apparent of Minto, acted in 1601 as cautioner for him and his brother Andrew, both ‘called of Bewlie’, that they should be lawful and also pay a fine for shooting pistols. In 1601 he accompanied his brother Andrew of Bewlie to harass a Bailie of Jedburgh with ‘long hagbuts and pistolets’; after confessing he was committed to Edinburgh Tolbooth. There was then a proclamation posted at Jedburgh, Hawik, Selkirk, Peiblis, Lauder and other places’ asking for any other complaints to be lodged against him and his brother Hector. He was recorded in 1601 in a document to capture him and William Middlemas for the slaughter of Thomas Kerr of Cralbo. This was the outcome of a serious fight between Kers and Turnbills at Jedburgh Fair that year, which included Mark of Bewlie and his brother Robert (who was killed there); these 2 may well have also been his brothers. He was declared a rebel and there is a Commission of 1603 for the Provost of Jedburgh to gather men to apprehend him. He was killed at Lilliesleaf around Martinmas 1604 by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. Ker had remission for this and other crimes in 1615. This was all part of an ongoing feud between the Turnbills and the Kers, but the exact circumstances surrounding the events of these times are impossible to guess. Hector of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) declared a rebel in 1604 for failing to appear to answer the charge.
of murdering Thomas Kerr of Crailing and his servant George Glaidner. Hector of Belses acted as cautioner. It is possible he is the same man as Hector of Bewlie. Hector 'Eckie' of Stonedge (d.1611) brother of Gavin in Hova and Robert, called 'tutor of Barnhills', who was also tenant in Hallrule. Their father may have been Archie in Hova. In 1586 he was declared a rebel for his part in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws; his brothers Robert and Gavin were also listed, as well as Hector in Barnhills (perhaps their nephew). In 1595 he was recorded along with Turnbulls of Minto, Bewlie, Hallrule and Barnhills, as well as Davids sons, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. He is recorded in 1596 as 'Hector Trumble of Stoney letch' when he was accused of crimes by Englishman Thomas Selfie and fined 'for lack of answer'. In 1601 he is listed along with Mark and Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth and James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth 'to answer such crymes as they wer suspect gilty of'; Kerr was directed to pay the penalty for failing to produce him in particular. He is recorded as 'in Stanileche' in a bond of 1603 when he gave all his goods to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst for being unable to pay his debts and also apparently because Sir Andrew had saved his life. In 1604 he was one of the Turnbulls involved with slaughter and burning at Appotside and Harwood. Also in 1604 he was tried, along with 3 Turnbulls of Barnhills, with the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; they were denounced as rebels for non-entry, with their cautioners being Robert Home of Carolside, Hector Turnbull of Belses and James Douglas of Cavers. In 1606 he is recorded as 'Hector Turnbull in Steneledrig', brother of Gavin in Hova and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule; there was clearly a feud between the 2 families. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; however, the case against him was not pursued. In 1607 he sold the lands of 'Carlinghall, Lailsell, Brounishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill' to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Also in 1607 he brought a court case against Robert Scott in Northhouse. Additionally in 1607 he was cautioner for John Maxwell, Lord Herries. He is also recorded as 'of Steinieloche' in a set of documents in 1609 relating to the lands of 'Hard-wodtoun', 'Fairneleyis' and 'Staineleche'. Andrew held these lands in 1610, and so was probably his son. This also suggests that he had been declared a rebel by then. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were 'unrelaxed from hornings' following the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam, but whether this was an 'official' act or part of a feud is unclear. Hector 'Eckie' of Firth (16th/17th C.) listed in 1601 along with Mark and Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie in Stonedge and James, servant to the Laird of Minto. Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth 'to answer such crymes as they wer suspect gilty of'; Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Eckie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. He took part on the affray at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601, when a large group of Turnbulls drew Thomas Ker (brother of the Jedburgh Provost) out of his house and killed him along with his servants. This was part of some ongoing feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs. He was one of 4 Turnbulls who were found guilty of the crime of murder and illegally carrying pistols. Perhaps the same Hector was recorded in 1602 along with James and Mark, when John Heatley of Mellerstain and James Home of Framepath were sureties for them to remain in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Also in 1602 he was recorded along with Mark of Bewlie when William Cranston, younger of that Ilk was surety for them to re-enter ward. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were 'unrelaxed from hornings' following the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Hector of Belses (16th/17th C.) acted as cautioner in 1604 for a group of Turnbulls from Stanedge and Barnhills (including 2 other Hectors!) accused of killing 6 sons of Grahamslaw of Newton. Also in 1604 he was cautioner for Hector of Lilliesleaf, charged with the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailing. He must have been related to the George of Belses who was executed in 1603. Hector (16th/17th C.) had a charter of 'feu farm' for the lands of Standhill in 1610. He was probably ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Standhill. Hector (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 when there was an unnamed cautioner for 1000 merks for him. He promised not to molest Alexander, son of the late Sir John Drummond of ‘Halthrondaill’. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619 as brother of Thomas in Raperlaw ‘Town-fute’. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntlehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector of Clarilaw (17th C.) possibly son of the earlier Hector. In 1637 he was appointed (as closest relative on his father’s side) as tutor to James, son of George ‘called of Wauchope’. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £273. In 1643 his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Scott of Burnhead. He probably had no sons, since Clarilaw appears to have gone to the Scotts of Burnhead after that. Hector of Firth (17th C.) feued Firth from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. He was probably the son of the earlier Hector of Firth. John and Walter leased Firth later in the later 1600s, and must have been his descendants. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1637 of his daughter with George Clerk. In 1643 his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £195. Hector (17th C.) recorded in ‘Rule’ in the 1643 valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Hector (d.c.1683) tenant in Groundstone whose will was recorded in 1683. Hector of Wester Swanshiel (18th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by his son James. Helen (16th/17th C.) wife of James ‘Lethame’. She and her husband complained about being attacked by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife n Hawick in 1616. Helen of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded as owner of £80 of land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. She was probably related to James, who was also recorded at Fodderlee in 1643. Helen (17th/18th C.) see Helen Chisholme. Henry of Craik (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1431 ‘letter of transumpt’ of the earlier charter granting half of the barony of Branxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Turnbull de Craik’. Perhaps the same man was the Henry who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. Henry (15th C.) leased a quarter of the lands of Appletreehall according to a document of 1470, with Alexander Scott of Howpasley having the other parts. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded holding the lands of East Mains (of Hassendean) in 1493/4. He may be the Henry who witnessed a sasine for lands in Linton in 1509. Henry (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in dènì’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘demnum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again in 1494/5 for failure to appear. Henry (15th C.) tenant in Unthank, listed at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was indicted and did not appear, with his surety, Matthew Hobkirk being fined. He was probably related to Alexander, recorded in Unthank in 1493. Henry ‘Gy’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Cavers, recorded being ‘callit gy’. His nickname may mean ‘guide’. He is listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He is listed as ‘Harie Trumbill’. Henry ‘Harie’ (17th C.) holder of part of the lands of Westwood near Boucherstone in 1643. His lands were valued at £12 Scots, while those of Thomas (presumably his father or brother) were worth £40 Scots. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of a total of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He married Betty Stavert in Kirkton in 1789; she was born in Hawick in 1766, daughter of George. Their children included: Henrietta (b.1791); Elizabeth (b.1793); and John (b.1795). Henry (19th/20th C.) resident of Adderstoneshill. In 1906 he and his son Henry junior contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Herber (15th/16th C.) recorded in connection with lands in Bedrule in the early 1500s. Helen Rutherford of that Ilk had the ‘half merk land of Bethiroull’ confirmed to her by the King, this being near the Parish Church and ‘held in tack by Herbut Turnbull’. In 1503 James ‘harbertis sone’ was recorded for not attending the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Herman (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It could be that this is a transcription error for ‘Hector’. Isabel (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘gudwif of Woll’ among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. The name of her husband is not recorded; it is possible he was a missing first generation of the Scotts of Woll, perhaps father of Walter, who is noted in 1606. It is also possible that she was mother (perhaps if she married twice) of John Turnbull, half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, who is recorded in 1608. Isobel (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Rawflat, sister of William and Walter. In 1603 she was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against George Turnbull of Belses, for a list of crimes, including killing her brother William and shooting her brother Walter. Another of the persuers was George Rutherford ‘as kinsman’, so he was either her husband or married to one of her relatives. In 1632 probably the same ‘Issobella’ was ‘heir portioner’, along with her sister Margaret, to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Isobel (17th C.) servant in Riddell. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanters fugitives. Isobel (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) recorded as resident of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (18th C.) cook at Stirches in 1791, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Sir James (1320-55) son of William, the first Turnbull. He married Mary Haliburton and died at Nisbet Moor. James (15th C.) listed among the squires who witnessed an agreement in 1432 between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn. James of Hornshole (15th C.) witness in 1456 to an instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters, made at Branxholme. He is recorded as ‘Jacobo Turnbule de Hornshole’. He may have been an ancestor of the later Turnbulls who were at Hornshole. Perhaps he is the James who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. James (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was described as a ‘common thief’, who had stolen things with John Davidson, resident of Minto. Davidson was allowed to ‘compone’ for his crimes, including stealing a horse from him. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as the brother of the Laird of Whithope (probably the one near Harden in the Borthwick valley). He had remission for stealing 18 ewes from Bowhill, with the help of Walter Dalglish. His crimes also included stealing iron windows, doors and ‘erukis’ from the tower of Howpasey. His brother the Laird of Whithope was surety for him. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1484 when he claimed compensation from Adam of Philiphaugh for the ‘wrangwis vexacioun and disturblance’ of him in his lands of Westfield and ‘wrangwis spoliacioun of a kow’ at his lands of Kirkhope. Probably the same James ‘in Kirkhop’ is listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as brother of Mark in Bonchester in 1494/5. He failed to appear and so his brother, serving as his surety, was fined. He was also recorded as brother of Mark in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted; as well as his brother, there were Turnbuls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere also listed. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hornshole listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men who had been fined. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant at Hornshole in 1502 and John in 1516. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. In 1502 his son Thomas served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Girnwood in 1503. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 4 cows) for failing to attend the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) brother of Herbert. He is listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 4 cows) for failing to attend the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gargunnock. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Perhaps the same James of Gargunnock gave up his liferent of a tenement in Selkirk in 1538 in favour of his cousin John; his own son John was a witness. He may be related to the contemporary Walter of Gargunnock and Hassendean. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for John Stirling for lands in Dumbarton, signed in Edinburgh in 1508. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Wolfelee in 1516 on a list of many Turnbuls pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in the lands of Hillhouse, listed among the men who had remission in 1516 for any assistance given to the Homes. Fergus is also noted as being there, and so presumably related. It is unclear if these were the lands in Liddesdale or other lands in Rulwater. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame Trumbill, young Pait’s brother’ on a list of Scotsmen reset in England in 1540. He was probably son of Peter (or perhaps Patrick) of Catlee. James (16th C.) recorded in Philiphaugh in 1540/1 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. James (16th C.) recorded ‘in Cavers’ in 1579, this probably being Cavers Carre. He represented his son Thomas in a transaction in Selkirk, where a piece of land was purchased in Midlem. Perhaps the same James set a tack for his lands called ‘Scott of land was purchased in Midlem. Perhaps the same James set a tack for his lands called ‘Scott of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame’ in 1565 when there was a bond with Walter Turnbull, tenant of Howa (in Rulewater) to present him to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may be one of the unidentified James Turnbells who are on the list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. James (16th C.) listed as tenant in ‘Sironscail’ (probably Swanshiel) in 1581 among 10 men (mostly Turnbells of Rulewater) accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. James of the Toor (16th C.) recorded as ‘of the Toure’, along with his brother George, in a 1579/80 case of men accused of raiding into England. They were asked to pay recompense to the Laird of ‘Panstoun’, from whom they had presumably been accused of stealing. He is also listed among the men who were asked to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5 to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Border. He was also listed as one of the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. He was probably related to William ‘of the Tour of Rouiwode’ recorded in 1622. His lands were presumably at Spittal Tower. James (16th C.) tenant in ‘Stenlech’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1567 when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. He is recorded in 1586/7 as ‘Jamie Turnbull in Stanielege’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He was recorded being ‘of Stonyletche’ and ‘of Stonyleache’ among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for 2 separate raids into England in 1587. In one raid he is listed first and there were more than 40 other men involved, including his servant ‘Jocke Weittie’. In the other raid there are several Turnbells listed, among a group of about 200. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hassendean in 1598. He was denounced along with John in Minto, Walter Scott ‘of Ordschaw’ and James Langlands for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor to the Laird of Mynto’ in 1601. He was listed along with Mark and Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth and Eckie of Stonedge, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect gilty of’. Probably the same James was recorded in 1602 along with Mark and Hector, when John Heatley of Mellerstain and James Home of Framepath were sureties for them to remain in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James ‘Baneist James’ (16th/17th C.) one of a group of Turnbells involved in a melee at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601. This resulted in the death of Thomas Ker and his servant, and the wounding of many men. As a consequence several Turnbells were later convicted and hanged. Although he was one of those found guilty of murder and illegally carrying pistols, it is unclear whether or not he was executed. In 1610 he was named (as ‘called Baneisht James’) by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbells (plus 2 Davidson sons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Kerr of Cralinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. It is not stated to which Turnbull branch he belonged, but probably somewhere around Minto. His nickname is presumably Scots for ‘banished’. James (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1616 he is described as ‘called of Bedrule’ when along with David (or Andrew, probably his nephew), butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh, he had a bond with Mark in Hartshaugh. And in 1618 he is ‘brother german to Walter of Bedderreull’ when he had a bond with James Jamieson of Lessuden. James (d.bef. 1619) eldest son of Hector of Hartshaugh. In 1608 he had a charter of the lands of Wester Swanshiel, granted by his father to be held in feu for rental. He was also the successor to the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands. However, he could only have been Laird for a very short time after his father’s death, before his own son Thomas succeeded in 1619. He must also have been related to the contemporary Adam and Lyle (probably either brothers or sons). James ‘Jamie’ of West Lees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son George was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh; his son and heir William was also mentioned.
Turnbull

(16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘called of Rapirlaw’ in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His son John was also listed. James ‘Maltman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was among a group led by Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. James (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Willie of Braidhauche’, he is recorded in the 1622 Circuit Court, where he was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’, this being possessed by the ‘fear of Cavers (William Douglas) and his tennentis’ (hence probably Earlside). He was ‘clengit’, i.e. found not guilty. His cautioners were Adam in Hartsaungh and another Adam, who were perhaps related. In 1628 there was a complaint by Robert Kerr of Cavers against him and his father, for opposing his apprehension after he was declared ‘an idle and masterless man’ (i.e. fit for military service). Also in 1628 he is named when his father William paid caution to the Privy Council, promising to atone for the disturbance they had caused at Abbotrule Kirk. James (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Hassidenbank’ and already deceased in 1632 when his son Walter feued part of Raperlaw. Probably the same James ‘of Hassindanebank’ was complained about in 1607 by George Scott in Castleside, with his surety being Thomas Ker of Cavers. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of £180 of land at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He was probably related to Helen ‘of Fodderlie’, who was also recorded in 1643. They are presumably distinct from the people with the same names who were at Bowshot Hill at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded at ‘Bosstithill’ (i.e. Bowshot Hill) in Abbotrule Parish in a valuation roll of 1643. He was there with Helen, who was presumably his wife. Their land was valued at £33 6s 8d. James of Wauchope (d.c.1674) only son of George of Wauchope. In 1653 he inherited the 20-pound land of Wauchope in Jedforest from his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. In 1655 he renounced all claims to the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) to William Earl of Lothian. His sister Anna was served as his heir in 1674. James of West Lees (17th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier James. In about 1663 he was recorded paying £66 13s 4d on the Land Tax Rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Fenwick. He married Isobell Margaret Stoddart and their children included Robert (b.1682), James (b.1685) and an unnamed son (b.1688). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by John Law and Robert Turnbull (who was presumably closely related). James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. James (d.1686) tenant farmer who also served as ‘pyper’ for the Parish of Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1687 when he was ‘piper, in Abotroull’. He left a reasonably sum of money to his only daughter. James (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaungh. The will of his wife Agnes Turnbull was recorded in 1688. James (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Caverspark’ when his will was recorded in 1688. It is unclear if this was associated with Cavers Parish or Cavers Carr or elsewhere. James (17th C.) referred to as ‘James Trumble’ in 1688 when he was fined for assaulting the Bailie and Town Officers. They were trying to take him to the tollbooth ‘for certain riots and bluids’ and threatened ‘to take yr lives wt ane drawn penknife in his hand’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor of said Dame Magdalene’ in 1690 when he witnessed a bond. He was thus some sort of employee of the widow of Stobs. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. He may be the James who married Margaret Lillico in Bedrule in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Hobsburn according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant at Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant there at about the same time. James (17th C.) cottar at Rule-townfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleston Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Huddishouse in Castleston Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1695. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in New Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Minto and their children included Janet (b.1701), Isobel (b.1705), Andrew (b.1707)

and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Thomson in Minto in 1715. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1715 when his daughter Helen was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm in 1720 when his son John was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Tofts in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the Turnbulls of Tofts. His children included: James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1718). He was recorded at Nether Tofts in 1718. James (d.c.1724) son of Adam and grandson of Thomas. His father had lost the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton through ‘non-entry’. He is probably the James of Swanshiel listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point. In 1682 he was entered with his superior in the lands of Wester Swanshiel as successor to his grandfather. He was at that time already married to Elizabeth Scott. He is probably the same James ‘portioner of Swan-shell’ who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for not conforming to Episcopalianism. He was probably the James recorded as resident at Easter Swanshiel in 1694. His son and successor Walter was born about 1700. He was succeeded by Walter (called William in Walter Deans’ history). James (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick Parish. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Aitken, ‘younger carrier’. He married Agnes Henry, who is recorded in 1721 as a teacher of poor children. Probably the same candlemaker James is listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is recorded as a candlemaker in 1685, and his wife as ‘Isobell Hewie’, when their daughter Bessie was baptised; the witnesses were William Elliot and Thomas (perhaps a relative). James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably the tailor recorded in the Kirk Session records paying 18s ‘for 3 sticks lost from the quire’. He witnessed baptisms for fellow tailor Alexander Hislop in 1705, for tailor Archibald Scott (along with fellow tailor George Scott) in 1714, and for carrier Simon Mark in 1719. He married Margaret Forrest in 1703; both were from Hawick Parish. Their children included: James (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John Whillans and tailor William Gledstains. James (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Renwick in Wilton in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Wester Parkhill in 1714 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Other children who could be his include: Adam (b.1702); Anna (b.1706); and Mitchell (b.1712). James (17th/18th C.) wright in Cavers. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1722. Some of these children, baptised in Cavers Parish, could also be his: Helen (b.1715); Rachel (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); John (b.1720); Thomas (b.1725); and Isabel (b.1728). James (17th/18th C.) school-master in Hawick Parish, who probably also acted as Session Clerk. According to the handwriting in the baptismal records, he probably took over in the latter part of 1726, following the death of John Purdom, and perhaps after some interim person. His wife was Margaret Henderson. In 1726 he is ‘schoolmaster in this toun’ when his son Charles was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses John Turnbull (perhaps related) and John Scott. It is unclear how long he served. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Cowfauuds in 1728. He married Elspeth Martin and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Archibald (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were Thomas and Walter Turnbull (who may have been related). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew Martin) for James Dryden in 1737. James (18th C.) married Isobel Huntly in Wilton in 1729. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. He married Margaret Blyth and their son James was baptised in 1730, with witnesses George Stavert and Robert Scott. James (b.1709) son of William, he was born at Bedrule Mill, and the family claimed descent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He became tenant farmer at the Dykes, where he was recorded in 1742. He married Helen Spindie in Cavers Parish in 1739 and their children included: Thomas (b.1740); James (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); and William (b.1755). James (18th C.) married Jane Little in Cavers Parish in 1744. Their son James was baptised in Wilton in 1744. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Currie in 1758 and their children included Robert (b.1758), Janet (b.1760) and Thomas (b.1762). James (b.1736) tenant farmer at Hassendeanbank, son of Adam, who was also tenant there. He could be the James who in July 1774 was paid 2s 5d for ‘sharpening Picks’ as part of a boundary dyke at Hassendean and who in 1782 was tenant of the ‘East end farm of Hassendean’. He was recorded at Hassendean Bank in the Horse

Tax Rolls 1785–94. He was still tenant of Has sendean in 1793, when part of the farm was enclosed. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of Burnfoot and the Hawick carpet factory). Their children included Adam, who married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. He was the ancestor of the Turnbulls of Merrylaw. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jameses. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died.

James (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Wilton in 1731. James (18th C.) married Agnes Allen in Wilton in 1732. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier tailor of the same name. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) ‘Norval’ and their children included: Margaret (b.1735); James (b.1739); John (b.1741); and William (b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton who married Margaret Anderson. They were living at Horsleyhill in 1739 when their son Thomas was baptised. The witnesses were James and John Dryden. James (d.1787) wright in Bedrule. He married Euphan Peden, who died in 1792, aged 62. Their children included: Mary, who died aged 9; James, who died at 16; and William, who lived at Lanton East Park. James (18th C.) miller at Harwood Mill in 1758 when his daughter Betty was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Elizabeth (b.1762), Marion (b.1765), Isabel (b.1770) and Jean (b.1772) may also have been his children. James (18th C.) resident of Scawmill. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1764 and their children included: John (b.1766); George (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1770); Margaret (b.1772); and Ann (b.1774). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Robert Ormiston. James (18th C.) resident of Courthill. He married Jean Douglas in 1759 and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Esther (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Jean (b.1771); Helen (b.1774); and Rebecca (b.1776). The witnesses in 1770 were John Mathieson and Andrew Turner. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. James (18th C.) married Margaret Hume in Hawick Parish in 1766. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Turnbull and their children included: Robert (b.1772); and William (b.1778).

James (d.1797) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record states he was ‘Schoolmr. Biletmaster & dean of the guild’. Presumably he held the position of Dean of Guild in Hawick, and was also a teacher somewhere. James (18th C.) married Helen Wilson in Hawick in 1781. Their children included Mark (b.1784) and Janet (b.1786). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described as ‘Strong man’. His wife Agnes Thomson died in 1787. James (18th C.) farmer at East Middle in Cavers Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785. He may be the James whose son Andrew was baptised in Cavers in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as an ‘egglar’, i.e. a pedlar who collected eggs to sell at markets. He married Helen Wilson and their children included: Mark (b.1784); and Janet (b.1786). In 1794 the death of his daughter and also another child are recorded, with his wife Nelly Wilson dying in 1795. His son Mark’s death is recorded in 1804, when he was ‘Eggler Crosswynd’. James (1752–1844) younger son of Walter, portioner of Ancrum. He married in Cavers Parish he married Helen (also called Agnes) Rutherford (1761–1821), daughter of the farmer at Knowesouth Orchard. He farmed at Broomhall near Ancrum and later at Newcastleton (probably not Bewcastle, as reported by some sources). He may be the James, grandfather of William G. about whom a story is told regarding a smuggler dropping 2 kegs from his horse as he rode past the farm, which he managed to conceal while pointing the excisemen in the direction the smuggler had gone. His children included: John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; James (b.1789); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1791); Betty (b.1793); Helen (b.1795); Isabella (b.1797); and Agnes (b.1799). He was recorded as ‘Independent’ at ‘Honey town’ (i.e. Honeyburn farm) in 1841, and he died there. James (b.1754/5–1825) ancestor of the Turnbulls of Bonchester Bridge and the Hawick grocers. It is unclear precisely where he was born and who his parents were. He lived at Hoddeswoodie and other places near Bonchester. He married Betty, daughter of George and Catherine Adamson (possibly the Betty born to George Adamson in Hobkirk in 1760); she died in 1828, aged 77. Their son James (b.1786) was schoolmaster at Denholm and Wilton. Their other children included: George (1783–1861), carrier in Rulewater; William (b.1787), schoolmaster at Hobkirk; Adam, who died in Edinburgh; Alexander, carrier; Thomas, carrier in Newcastleton; and John, grocer in Newcastleton. He and some of his family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Alexander and their children included: James (b.1791); Betty (b.1793); and Adam (b.1798). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Margaret Taylor, from Roberton Parish. James (18th/19th C.) soldier in Dalkeith Parish. In 1791 he married Alice Oliver, who was from Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1792 he married Martha Hogg, who was from Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Hightofts’ (i.e. Upper Tofts), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Greenhouse at 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Highchests, when he owned 3 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs at Highchests in the same year. Probably the same James at ‘Haychests’ was on the 1821 subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. James (b.1774) son of John of Wester Swanshiel and Berryfell. He was born in Hobkirk Parish and became a tenant farmer. He was recorded as son to John in Berryfell on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Also in 1799 he was tenant at Philhope when his son was baptised in Roberton parish. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was a labourer at Berryfell, described as ‘something deformed’. He was also tenant at Philhope in 1812 in the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish; he is absent from the rectified list, suggesting he was too old. He was later tenant farmer at Galalaw outside Hawick, the lands being purchased by his elder brother Robert. He is recorded in the 1841 census at Galalaw Braefoot. He married Mary Stavert in 1798, the marriage being recorded in Yarrow and Roberton Parishes. Their earlier children were baptised in Roberton. They included: John (b.1799), Mary (b.1809), James (b.1812) and Helen (b.1815), all baptised in Roberton; Eliza (b.1801), Catherine (b.1803), Mary (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), Ann (b.1808), Walter (b.1811), Agnes (b.1814), Margaret (b.1816), Margaret (again, b.1818) all baptised in Yarrow; and William (b.1821), baptised in Wilton. James (18th/19th C.) married Annie ‘Maire’ in Roberton Parish in 1800. James (b.c.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. In 1798 he married Margaret Ainslie, who was also from Hawick. Their children, mostly baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: Walter (b.1801); John (b.1805); Margaret (b.1807); James (b.1809); William (b.1811); Alexander (b.1814); an unnamed child who died in 1816; and Janet, who married coal carrier William Graham. James (1773–1858) son of Walter of Chesterhall near Ancrum. He became farmer at Billerwell in the Rule valley; along with his sons. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Turnbull, tenant of Ancrum Mill, and she died in 1862, aged 78. His wife’s brother was also Mark Turnbull, tenant of Lanton Mill, whose grandson was Provost of Melrose. Their children were: Walter (1805–64, who was the last of Chesterhall); Thomas (b.1809); James (b.1815); John (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); George Purvis (b.1821); Margaret (1824/5–63), who died unmarried; and Mary (1812/3–60), who married John Laidlaw in Jedburgh. His daughter Elizabeth married Robert, son of John Grieve in 1853. William may have been another son. James (b.c.1770s) son of William in Acreknowe. He was recorded on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. James (b.c.1780) shepherd at Hartsgarth according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. James (b.c.1780) servant at Stirches Mains according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.1782/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton in 1835, when he was at Damside, and in 1840 and 1841, when he was at Roadhead. His wife was Mary and their children included William, James and Mary. He may be the stockingmaker James whose infant child’s death is recorded in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) married Nancy Marr in Wilton in 1805. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Muir (or Moore) in 1811 and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: John (b.1812); James (b.1816); Esther (b.1819); and William (b.1822). James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Reid in Wilton in 1815. James (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. James (b.c.1780) Thatcher living at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was there in 1851 with family members Janet and Andrew. James (18th/19th C.) married Mary Hall in East Bank Kirk in 1807. James (1786–1834) son of James and Betty Adamson (not Anderson, as stated in one source). He was born in Hobkirk Parish, being baptised at Hoddleswoodie, and came from the Nursery House Turnbulls. He was schoolmaster at Denholm and then became the successor to James Elliot at Wilton School in the 1810s. His brother William was schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was said to have a reputation for being an excellent teacher. He married Margaret Dalgleish (cousin of William Dalgleish, who established the ‘Coutard Fund’) in Cavers Parish in 1808 and they had 12 children, including: James (b.1809), Clerk of Session in Edinburgh; John (b.1811), who died in London; Agnes (b.1814), who was also a teacher; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1816), who married James Dalgleish; Jane or Janet (b.1818); Charters (b.1820), who married Elliot Armstrong; Elspeth (b.1821); George (b.1823); Margaret (b.1824); Mary Scott (b.1827); and William (b.1830), auctioneer in Edinburgh. His wife and eldest daughter ran the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s, and she survived him by about 50 years. James (18th/19th C.) son of Mark and an Elliot. He was descended from the Chesterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd at Minto Kames, then at Barnes and later at Old Fodderlee. His children include Robert (also a shepherd), Mark (a joiner in Peebles), James (a shepherd in Kingledoes) and a daughter (who kept house for him at Old Fodderlee). James ‘Wiggam’ (b.c.1780) Denholm tailor who was described as ‘half-witted’. On the 1801 ballot for the Militia he was a tailor in Denholm, with the annotation ‘has a natural Imbecility of mind’ (presumably meaning that he was unfit to serve in the military). He also acted as the village crier, ringing the Dead Bell, announcing the name, and time and place of the burial and usually adding ‘and ye’re a’ invited to the funeral’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married May Stavert and their children included: William (b.1826); Janet (or Jessie, b.1826); Agnes (b.1828); James (b.1831); and Thomas (b.1833). He is recorded at Appletreeshall in 1861 as a grocer and widower, with children Agnes and Thomas. James ‘Jimmie Springkie’ (b.c.1800) Hawick shoemaker who lived to an old age. His nickname derived from that of his father, ‘Auld Springkell’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shoemaker on the Cross Wynd. He may be the journeyman shoemaker living with James Scott and family on Damside in 1841. He is probably the James recorded at 4 Cross Wynd in the 1851 and 1861 censuses, employing a handful of men in his shoemaker’s business. He lived with his sister Margaret. He could be the son of Robert and Mary Laidlaw, born in Hawick in 1798, with sister Margaret born in 1793. He probably married Martha Blyth, who died in 1826, aged just 21. James (b.1800/1) born in Southdean Parish, he was farmer at Harelaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 11 acres. His wife was Allison and their children included William, James, Isobella, Eliza, Jane and Christina. James (1801/2–77) born in Minto Parish, he was forester at Cavers estate for almost 50 years. In 1828 he married Jane Weir, who appears to have already been deceased by 1841. He was living at ‘Cavers Cottage’ in 1851 and at ‘Cavers Wood’ in 1861. The family belonged to the Associate congregation in Jedburgh. He had a family of 2 daughters and 3 sons: John (b.1829), the eldest, baptised in East Bank Kirk; Margaret (b.c.1830); Robert (b.1832), clothier in Denholm; James (b.c.1837); and Jean (b.c.1840). James (19th C.) married Janet Cairns in Wilton in 1826. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: George (b.1828); and Andrew (b.1832). James (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jean Weir and their children included: John (b.1829), baptised in East Bank Kirk; and Robert (b.1832), baptised in Jedburgh Associate Kirk. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Mary ‘Mirder’ or ‘Mordon’ and their children included: Ann (b.1828), baptised in Jedburgh Associate Kirk. James (19th C.) recorded being ‘in Gillbraehead’ in 1832 when accused of fathering a child with Janet Scott from Gillfoot. However, he denied it. He was surely related to the blacksmiths of Gillbraehead. James (b.1813/4) son of Hawick stocking-maker William. He was one of 5 men charged for mobbing Tory supporters during the 1837 election. He was found guilty and imprisoned for 12 months, partly because he had previously been convicted of assault. Probably the same James was recorded in jail in Hawick in 1845 and 1850. He is probably the ‘Woollen Frame Work Knitter’ living on the Howegate in 1851 with his wife Catherine and children Margaret, George, Euphemia and Catherine. James (1814–74) son of Robert and Ann Mathieson. He was a Hawick draper, conducting the town’s highest class drapery business of the time at 11 High Street. This is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living with his parents on the Cross Wynd. In 1851 he was listed as a Master Draper, employing 4 apprentices, 5 women and 4 girls. In 1861 he was employing 2 men, 2 boys and 5 women. He was on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’ and was twice Senior Baillie. He was probably the Turnbull who was Junior Bailie in 1859, when he was croupier for the centenary Burns night. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk, succeeding his father, was appointed Session Clerk in 1851 and was presented with a plate service by the congregation in 1865. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; she died in 1878, aged 58. Their children included: Robert (1850–53); Ann (c.1855–61); and Christina Mary, who married John Wield. He died at Wilton Grove (his son-in-law’s house) and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Barbara Little in 1845 and their son James was baptised in 1844. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Dalgleish and their son Thomas was baptised in 1851. James (1815–88) son of James, farmer at Bilerwell. He was joint tenant of Bilerwell with his brothers, and also of Prieston. He also farmed for a while at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the James recorded as farmer at Wester Fodderlee in the 1860s. He married Mary, daughter of William Scott. Their children were: James Robert, who emigrated to Edmonton; William Scott, farmer at Tythehouse; Annie; George Purvis, who emigrated to Canada; Mary, twin to George Purvis; Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Mark, twin of Walter; Elizabeth, ‘Betsy’, married Samuel White from Stow; Janet; Thomas, farmer at Greenholm, near Newtoncastleton; and Andrew, also farmer at Greenholm. He died at Midburn in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1819) eldest son of James, Wilton Schoolmaster, and Margaret Dalgleish, he was born in Wilton. He became Clerk of Session in Edinburgh. It is said that he knew the law so well that he was often consulted by the professional lawyers. He married Jessie, sister of banker Archibald Douglas. Their children were Catherine (who married Henry Bunge) and James (a clerk in Register House). James (b.1822/3) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a blacksmith and shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule. He was recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane Scott, daughter of a Hawick joiner, with his mother-in-law being Agnes Scott. Their children included George B. and Adam. James (b.1823) eldest son of John. He took over the tenancy of Spittal farm. Nearly 80 sheep belonging to him were drowned in the flood of 1846, the carcasses being later sold cheaply in Hawick. He was miller at Spittal Mill on the 1852 directory. He is recorded there in 1861, as farmer of 500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He was living there with his step-mother Anne E. James (1825–78) eldest son of John, grocer of Newcastleton, and descended from a Hobkirk branch of the Turnbulls. His uncle James was schoolmaster at Wilton. In 1855 he acquired the old-established grocery and wine merchants at 51 High Street, and it lasted for more than a century. He also ran a cart out to Whitemo the tunnel was being built there. Accounts for the period 1889–1964 are listed in the National Register of Archives. In 1854 he married Anne, eldest daughter of James Robson, a Jedburgh shoemaker; she died in 1890, aged 65. Their children were: Isabell Young, who married Charles Firth of Fell Grove, Yorkshire; Mina, who married William Cunningham of Brisbane, Australia; James Robson, who died unmarried; John; William, who emigrated to Toowoomba, Queensland; Mary, who married Frederick William Sykes from Leeds; Margaret; and Robert, who moved to Brisbane, Australia. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) recorded in 1852 as saddler and ironmonger in Lilliesleaf. If this was not an error for ‘Thomas’, then they must as least have been closely related. It is also possible he was the same James who ran the Subscription Library in Lilliesleaf in 1852. James Douglas (b.1833) son of Thomas and Mary Beattie. He emigrated to Australia, where he farmed at Mount Prospect, Leichhardt and Kotupna in Victoria, and in 1885 settled at Guy Fawkes (now called ‘Ebor’) in New South Wales. Robyn Crossle wrote a book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994) about him, containing extracts of many family letters, especially from his brother Gen. Peter Stephenson. He married Esther Rathie, daughter of his cousin Barbara Anderson and James Rathie. Their children were Thomas Scott, Barbara, James Douglas, Mary, Archibald, Esther, John, William, Adam Robert and Barbara Esther Mabel. James (b.1830/1) carpenter in Wilton. In 1851 he was living at

his surname recorded as ‘Trumbull’. His daughter and heiress Margaret (hence presumably only child) married William Gledstains of that Ilk, so that Hundleshope passed to the Gledstains. Margaret later resigned her lands of Roberton to her son John; this suggests that this John of Hundleshope was from the Borthwick Water Turnbulls. John (14th C.) granted lands in Dumfriesshire by Dougal McDougall in the reign of David II. The lands were ‘Littelgrewy’, ‘Glen-garg’ and ‘Glencraig’. John (14th C.) Sheriff of Selkirkshire according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360. He was also recorded as Deputy to the Sheriff in 1364. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls in Selkirkshire. John (14th/15th C.) granted the lands of Wauchophead in a charter of Robert III in 1404. The lands had been forfeited by ‘John Bour’. John (14th/15th C.) son of Adam ‘of Whytehope’, i.e. Whithope in the Borthwick valley. He was granted lands at Hassendeanbank in 1409 by the Baron, William Cunningham of Kilmours. Several generations of Johns subsequently held these lands. Sir John of Falshope (14th/15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George Scott, 2nd Laird of Synton. His lands were either Phawhope near the head of the Ettrick or Fauldsopposite Oakwood. He may have been ancestor of Sir Thomas who held the same lands in the late 15th century. John of Minto (d.1423) nicknamed ‘Out with the Sword’ for his fiery temperament. He could be the ‘John Turnebole’ who held part of Minto according to an English document of c.1380. In 1390 he granted part of the Barony of Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth, probably his nephew. He was captured by the English in 1399 (along with Sir Richard Rutherford) and imprisoned in the Tower of London until 1413. Perhaps the same John had a letter of protection for setting out in the service of King Henry IV in Scotland. An English record of 1400 forbid his captors to release him and other Scottish leaders; he is there described as ‘out wyth swerd’. Thereafter he took part in the Battle of Cravant (part of the Hundred Years War), supporting the French, at which perhaps as many as 3,000 Scots fell. He appears to have died there, although it is also alleged that he died later of leprosy, causing dispute over the title to his lands. He was succeeded by his son Walter. There was an inquiry in 1424 into whether the grant to Sir William Stewart was legal, because of his supposed leprosy. His sister may have married Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley.

John (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1415 as ‘nobleman John Turnbul, doncel, when he had permission to marry noblewoman Margaret ‘de Gledstone’ from Glasgow Diocese. There had to be Papal permission because he was her godfather. It is possible this is John of Minto. John of Fulton (15th C.) part of the investigation into the leprosy of John of Minto in 1425/6. About the same time he also witnessed a retour of Walter Scott in the lands of Elrig, and is there recorded as ‘Johannem Turnbul de Foulton’, along with David Turnbull. He may be the John who was on the 1429/30 ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caver- ton. In 1432 he was recorded as ‘of the Fulton, Bailie of the regality of Sprouston’, when he gave sasine (on behalf of Archibald, Earl of Douglas) of the lands of Primside passing from Andrew Rule to his son George. In 1438 he was Bailie of the Regality of Sprouston at the ‘retour of in- quest’ for Ker of Altonburn. He is probably one of the 3 men named ‘Johannem Turnbul’ on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward in 1439. He is described as ‘of Foulton’ when part of an inquest into lands of Newlands, held at Jedburgh in 1440. Philip and James Turnbull are also named, and so may be related. He may also be the John who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. John of Bedrule (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johne turnbull domino de Bedorowll’ in 1432 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. It is not impos- sible that he is the same man as John of Fulton. His relationship to other Turnbulls is unknown, although he was probably closely related to William, founder of Glasgow University. He may be the John who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. He was probably succeeded by George of Bedrule, recorded from 1448. He may be the ‘Johne Turnbule’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. John of Lanton (15th C.) recorded as being of ‘Laingtoun’ and constable of ‘le Newerk’ when he wit- nessed a charter in 1439. The document was a grant by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn, for lands in Primside, and was made at Newark Castle. John (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451, when the cus- tom of his goods was paid to Lord Crichton. In 1453 the rentals from the west side of Dumnure (it is not clear where this was) were in his hands. John of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded in 1464 resigning the lands of Hassendeanbank to

‘William de Edmondston’. This may simply have been resigning them to his superior before they were granted again, since the family appear to still hold the lands about a century later. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He is surely related to the William of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1432. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Ern Cleuch (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Probably the same John ‘Turnebull’ was on the inquest panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5 (along with Hector, George and William of Minto). He is probably related to the David of Ern Cleuch who is recorded 30 years later. John (15th C.) granted the lands of ‘Stouslie’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, resigned by the Baron of Wilton, Henry Wardlaw. A letter for the lands of Harden in 1482, granted by the Baron of Wilton, Henry Wardlaw. A letter under the seal of James IV in 1491 requires John Scott, Baron of Wilton to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in the lands of Harden, which had fallen into the King’s hands because he had ‘died a bastard without lawful heirs’. He could be the same John who held the lands of Stouslie. He may be the John who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. He may have married a daughter of Henry, 6th Baron of Wilton and Torrie. John (15th C.) listed in 1476 as being ‘of Phirth’, which could possibly be Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is among a number of Border Lairds involved in an action over lands in Linton Parish, registered with Parliament. He is probably the John ‘dullelands in the Fithe’ who in 1479 was ordered (along with James Alemoor of that Ilk) to pay rentals of lands in Cavers Parish to Robert of ‘Murheid’. John (15th C.) son of Thomas of Phaup. He leased Phaup at least in the period 1483–7. He was listed as son and heir of Thomas ‘of Fawlishop’ in 1486 when he leased the lands of Huntly. John (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas of Greenwood to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Johanne Turnbull’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when he was assigned the lands of ‘Corscleuch’ (i.e. Crosscleuch) by James IV. He may thus have been the first of the Turnbulls of Crosscleuch. John (15th C.) son of Robert in Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John (15th C.) tenant in Ruecastle, recorded in 1493. He had remission for stealing 6 oxen, 2 horses and 12 cows from tenants ‘de slitrik’ (i.e. on Slitrig Water). His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Probably the same tenant in Ruecastle was fined in 1502 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire, when he was surety for himself. Additionally he was one of the 20 or so Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Thomas of Bedrule was fined for not entering him in the court. John of Gatehousecote (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire at Jedburgh in 1493. George of Bedrule had remission for several crimes, including assisting him in his ‘theft and treason’. Separately, George Waugh in Hawick was allowed to compose for resetting him when he was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of Archibald Rutherford. He was surely related to Thomas, who was also recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. Probably the same John ‘in gatehous coit’ was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver: the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. Also in 1502 he was ‘in gatehouscoit’ when he served as surety for his brother Thomas, both fined for non-appearance. John (15th C.)
Turnbull Turnbull

recorded being ‘in Hawick’ at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Along with Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh, he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of bringing in Englishmen and he was also charged with common theft. His surety was the Laird of Howpasley. John ‘de Newhalburn’ (15th C.) listed in the pardon granted by the King to Sir Thomas of Phaup in 1504. He may have been a son of Sir Thomas (perhaps the same son recorded in the 1480s); he and Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ are listed, with one of them being ‘suorum filiorum’ (his son), but it is unclear which one. His residence (transcribed as ‘Newhalby’ in Pitcairn’s book) may have been the Newhall Burn to the south-west of Traquair. John (15th C.) listed in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme being bequeathed 40 sheep. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John ‘Case’ (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his nickname there is given as ‘easy’. He is also recorded as ‘Johne Turnbul, callit Case, in Nethir Bonecheir’ in the accounts for the Jedburgh Justice Aire of 1494/5; he contributed 4 cows. He was probably related to the David of Bonchester recorded in 1502. He may be the ‘Jok Turnbull callit casy’ recorded in 1503 listed among men who were fined (in his case 1 cow) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th C.) recorded as being in Minto in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthrif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. It is possible he is the same as John of Minto, who was recorded in the early 16th century. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1498 as ‘Suer[?] Johannes turnbul’; along with William of Minto, Ralph Ker and others, he was part of a bond to act upon men who were already declared as fugitives. He may also be the John who was recorded as father-in-law to Robert Young in Minto, for who William of Minto served as surety in 1502. John (15th C.) resident of Bedrule, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for committing theft before the time of his previous remission and also for involvement with the Duke of Albany during the earlier revolt. John ‘Blinnd John’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Sande Turnbullis brothir of Ballentyn, callit blind Johne’ in the accounts of the Justice-aire of Jedburgh, when he contributed 2 cows (for the expenses of the court, presumably in lieu of a fine). This is probably Bellendean near Roberton, but other places may be possible. His brother was clearly Alexander. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as resident of Dryden. He was allowed to compone for the crimes of committing with rebels who were at the horn, specifically Patrick and Gilbert. Probably the same John, son of Andrew of Dryden was recorded in 1494/5 among men who John Scott of Deloraine was allowed to compound for associating with; they were said to have stolen 60 sheep belonging to William Murray from Sundhope. In the Register of the Privy Seal in 1498 he is listed being ‘in Dridane’, presumably meaning he farmed at Dryden, near Teviothead. Along with John Scott from Northhouse, he received a pardon for his crimes of assisting the English. In 1502 he was surety (along with Alexander in Comonside) for Philip in Whithope and David in Carlinpool. Also in 1502 he was surety for Robert Jackson in Wolfcleuchhead and Robert Jackson, tenant of the Laird of Howpasley (probably the same man). Probably the same John in Dryden was surety in 1502 for William Anderson and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendeane. In 1494/5 he and his brother Nicholas had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. John (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. John (15th/16th C.) son of Philip, probably the Laird of Whithope. He is mentioned in 1494/5 when the Laird of Bedrule acted as his surety and was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire. He was also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, including Turnbulls of Fulton and Boucher; his name is recorded as ‘Johannis Turnbull Philipson’. John ‘Blue John’ (15th/16th C.) one of the Turnbulls and others who were failing to appear in court in Jedburgh in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Many of the others were from Rulewater, suggesting he was also. His nickname was recorded as ‘blew Johne’, and he was distinct from John in Ruecastle, John in Jedburgh and John in Wells, who were also listed. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was among a large group of men who failed to appear to the charge of murder of Robert Oliver and were declared as fugitives. Mark Ker of Dohophilston was fined for his non-appearance. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Wels in 1502. Along with about 20 Turnbuls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Mark Ker in Dohophilston was called to enter him, and subsequently fined, while he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods; the Sheriff of Roxburgh served as his surety (unlike for most of the other men). He was probably related to Adam in Wells, who was also listed. John of Tofts (15th/16th C.) served as surety in 1502 for George, described as ‘in Toftis’, who was surely a close relative. George, along with Robert, called ‘Muriale’ had been involved in a raiding party that burned and stole livestock from Riddell. Probably the same John ‘in tofts’ is mentioned in 1493 when his son Cock had remission for theft of an ox from Minto. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. James Davidson ‘in camys’ (perhaps Camieston) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de france’ in 1502 at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. The Master of Angus (George Douglas) was fined for failing to arrest him. It is unclear where ‘France’ was located. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among men who Marjory Turnbull was convicted of resetting. His name appears before Alexander, to whom he was probably related, but it is not stated where they were from. John of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as an associate of Peter in Bouchester. Along with his accomplices, they had burned grain belonging to George Rutherford at ‘Sandystanis’. He may be the same as one of the 2 men called John ‘in Mynuto’ who were listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbuls who assisted Alexander, Lord Home; one of these men is stated to be a cousin of William of Minto. John ‘Lang John’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Whitrig (probably in the Borthwick valley) in 1503. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 4 oxen, 2 cows, a horse and 1 ruk of corne’) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John ‘Jock’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘bowosyd’, which is probably the same place later called Bowset. He is listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 3 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John ‘Jock’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as brother to the Laird of Gargunnock, who may have been Walter. He was charged a cow for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Newbattle 1503–20. It is unclear how he might be related to other Turnbuls. John (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbuls given remission for any role in helping the treasonous Homes. He was probably related to James and Adam, recorded as tenants at Hornshole in 1501 and 1502, respectively John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as owner of a tenement of land in Selkirk, lying between the main street and the Ettrick. Probably the same John is recorded in Selkirk in 1532. He may also be the John in Selkirk from whom Walter, son of Walter Scott of Haining was accused of stealing a horse in Selkirk in 1502. John ‘Black Sow’ (d.1531) hanged for ‘Common Theft, outputting and inputting thereof’. There is no information about his relationship to other Turnbuls. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with Hector of Burnhills in a sasine in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1531. John (16th C.) listed in 1531 as ‘tutor of the lord of Phillophaucht’ and grandson of Robert ‘Trumbill’ when an acknowledgement was made in Selkirk for a tack being given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. Probably the same John ‘of Phillophaucht’ witnessed a document in 1530/1. Robert was also recorded as tutor of Philiphaugh in 1531 and surely related. He was presumably tutor for John, who was son of Ralph. John of Hassendeansbank (d.c.1540) son and heir of George of Hassendeansbank. In 1533 he made a declaration in Selkirk that he had tried to pay Andrew Davidson for the redemption of a tenement there. He was also recorded in a court case of 1540 involving a dispute between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawfalt, with William Scott of Hassendeans, over a ‘wadset’ of his (as well as other issues) for the lands of ‘Nether Copit Rig’ and ‘Easter Mains, called Copit Rig’. He is probably the John ‘of Hassendeans’ recorded in 1538 when he discharged Andrew Ker and his wife Marion Pringle for all previous fees on the lands of ‘Mahallynflait’. In 1540 he sold a tenement in Selkirk to John Thompson. He is probably the John ‘of Hassendeans burn or bank’ who sold land in Selkirk to Adam Vogan in 1544; Henry was one of the witnesses and may have been related. His family appear to have held the lands of Hassendeansbank since 1409. John (16th C.) early example of a Turnbull not directly associated with the Borders. He was Deacon of the Guild of Wrights in Cupar, Fife. In 1554 he and others were imprisoned for leading the Craftsmen of Cupar in a revolt against their Provost and Bailies. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was chaplain and 'vicar pensionary of le barechy Benedochy' (i.e. the parish of Benedochy). His testament was read out in Selkirk, whereby he left everything to his servants and the poor, appointing as executors John Brydon (probably the notary in Selkirk) and his sister (perhaps wife of Brydon). John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. John (d.bef. 1544) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1544 his daughter and sole heir Alison was given sasine of his tenement there. However, confusingly she seems to have shared a tenement with another heir, Margaret. She immediately sold her half tenement to William Elliot. John (16th C.) recorded in 1559 as Clerk of Minto Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. It is possible that he is the same as ‘Johanne Trummill’, who acted as a witness for the inventory after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552. John of Philiphaugh (c.1505–bef. 1582) son and heir of Ralph, Laird of Philiphaugh. He may be the John ‘heir of Philiphaugh’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. In 1535 he was ‘of Philhop’ (but Philiphaugh is probably meant) when his wardship was held jointly by Mark Ker of Kippielaw (his uncle) and Robert (probably an uncle or grandfather). The pair agreed to each hold half of his lands until he came of age. However, in 1536 Robert gave over his half to Mark Ker. He came of age in 1536/7 when described as ‘[illegible] of Philop and lord of the lands of Holdene and Philop[hauch]’; it seems likely that ‘Philop’ refers to land near Philiphaugh and not Philhope in the Borthwick valley. He then appointed his uncle Mark Ker as curator for his lands, failing which Andrew Ker of Auld Roxburgh. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lader succeeding to Todrig. Probably the same John of Philiphaugh is recorded in 1558 when he was served heir to his mother Janet, in her 5-acre lands of Philiphaugh. He was also recorded as witness to the 1560 bond between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He is probably the ‘Lard of Phillophauch’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Perhaps the same John of Philiphaugh in 1579/80 served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead and in the same year witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar in Ashkirk. He is probably the Laird of Philiphaugh whose son and heir Mark and other son Robert both witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Additionally in 1579/80 he and his son and heir Mark witnessed a transaction for lands near Melrose. In 1580 he was deceased when Patrick Murray of Falahill gave sasine of 4 acres of land, with mansion, houses, etc., to his daughters Janet, Agnes, Margaret and Marion (alias ‘Mawsie’); his eldest daughter Elizabeth complained that this sasine should not prejudice her, while Janet and Agnes promised not to sell their parts without the consent of their mother’s brother John Scott in Catslack. The witnesses included John Scott in Catslack, John Murray in Philiphaugh and James Ker in Yair. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement involving lands in Hassendeanburn. In 1581 he witnessed a dispute involving Scotts in Hundleshope. He was deceased in 1581/2 when his widow Isobel Douglas resigned her thirds and liferents of lands to his son and heir Mark; George in Philiphaugh and William, Burgess of Selkirk, were witnesses. John (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule. His house and yard are recorded in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feurule. This could have been the same as John ‘in Roull’ recorded in 1583/4 along with George in Hallrule and Walter in Hobburn, when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had an ‘escheat’ to seize their goods for not vacating their lands. He could be the ‘Johnne Turneble of Halroule’ listed in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. John of Hassendeanburn (16th C.) recorded in 1564 when he accused David Elliot (son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill) of stealing 80 sheep from his lands of Hassendean Kirk. It is unclear how he was related to the Turnbulls of Hassendeanbank. John (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses and brother of Hector of Belses. In 1576 Adam had a pledge before the Privy Council that his sons would refrain from thieving; this included him, as well as his brothers ‘Hekie’, David and George. In 1580 he was a witness when his brother Hector gave sasine to his daughter and heir Katherine for his lands in Belses. John of Gatehousecote (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among the list of men accused of treason for assisting James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. Probably the same ‘Jok Turnbull in Gaithous Cott’ was listed in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. John (16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule. In 1569 he was warded within the Sheriffdom of Perth, with his sureties being Andrew Home, Commissary of Jedburgh, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Dundale and Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Denesye (16th C.) described as holding a peel house. He was probably a direct ancestor of Adam, who left Denesye in 1715. He may have been descended from Robert and David who were recorded in 1611. John (16th C.) tailor recorded as ‘John Trumble’ when he was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1574. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbuls. John of Howden (16th C.) recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Barnhills, Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbuls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He is surely related to the later John of Howden. In 1580 he was listed among men who owed money to John Dawson in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Bedrule 1576–78. George was Reader right after this, so it is possible that one of the names is an error. He also appears to have served as Reader at Abbotrule and Lessuden. It is possible that he was an ex-monk of Dryburgh Abbey. John (16th C.) nephew of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, with his father perhaps being Robert. He was listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’ when members of the family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for the murder of Thomas Shiel. John (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Hutlerburn in 1579 when there was a dispute over a horse with neighbouring tenants in Huntly. John (16th C.) gave a sasine in 1579 of his 10 poundland of ‘Renhop or Philop’, in the Barony of Hawick and Sherrifdom of Selkirk, to Martin Elliot. This was surely Martin of Braedlie, whose son was Simon of Philiphope. He did this with the consent of his son, whose forename is not given. It is possible he is the same as John of Howden, and possibly also John of Philiphaugh. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as occupier of 2 rigs in Lilliesleaf. These lay to the east of Porteous Croft, where William Middlemas held lands. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Nether Bonchester. In 1581 he was listed among the 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He could be the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers being Adam and George) accused of harassing the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. John of Minto (16th/17th C.) possibly son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded, since Hector Turnbull ‘tutor of Minto’ is recorded in 1553/4 and in 1569. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with Sir Thomas and 2 Rutherfords. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he signed a bond of service with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus, along with several other Turnbuls. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. He also served as surety in 1576. In 1576 he was listed among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), who had a bond not to harm another group of Turnbuls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters); however, there was a complaint a few months later that his ‘servand and dependa’ Walter in Firth attacked Patrick Bennet, servant to Adam of Belses. In about 1578 he signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbuls and another bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Wat of Bewlie, to enter pledges into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which apparently he did) or be declared a rebel. He and Wat of Bewlie had a caution for £2000 that they would appear before the Privy Council, with William Redpath of Greenlaw as surety. Also in 1580 he was head of a group of Turnbuls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn who had a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and others. In 1581 he and Martin Elliot of Braidlie were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braidlie, as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. In the same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes and additionally among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. Also in 1581 he was accused of being head of a group of Turnbuls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow.

and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm. In 1583 the Kerrs of Ancrum paid surety for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat and her tenants and servants; the document was signed for him, because he could not write. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council on 2000 penalty. In 1589 he was on a list of Turnbulls, Douglasses and others who were to appear before the Privy Council ‘concerning their obedience to his Majestie and quieting of the countrie’. He is probably the ‘lard of Mynto’ listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 he served as ‘cautioner in relief’ for Sir Thomas of Bedrule, while Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, served as cautioner for him. The Earl of Angus was cautioner for him again in 1588, that he would appear before the Privy Council on £2000 penalty. In 1588/9 Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk was surety for him that he and those he was responsible for would keep the peace, while he was surety for Hob Elliot, ‘Vicar’s Hob’ (and someone else signed for him ‘because I can not wryte’). Also in 1588/9 he served as cautioner for Wat Turnbull of Beulie. In 1589 he and Walter of Bedrule were listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels.

Additionally in 1589, he and Walter of Bedrule were cited by the Privy Council for not remaining in Edinburgh after instructed to do so because they were guilty of resetting a group of Turnbulls and Douglasses who were involved in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; James Gledstains of Cocklaw was his surety. He is also listed about 1590 among landed men of the Borders and in 1591 when he was among the Barons who pledged their support for the King against the Earl of Bothwell. Also in 1590 he acted as a ‘surety in relief’ for Walter of Bedrule and was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1591 he subscribed to a bond of allegiance to the King against Bothwell, Home and others. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Martin Elliot of Braidsie. In 1592 Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk served as his cautioner in a bond of loyalty to the King. In 1595 he was recorded along with his sons Thomas and George, among Turnbulls and Davidsens, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill. He is also recorded in 1595 when he was one of the main signatories of a letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Minto; this included the Turnbulls of Hallrule, Barnhills, Gatehousecote and ‘David Daviesoun of the Cambes’. In 1598, along with James in Hassendean, Walter Scott ‘of Ordschaw’ and James Langlands, were denounced for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. In 1599 he served as cautioner for entering the Lorraines who were accused of the murder of David Turnbull, heir of Waucopie; there was also a bond subscribed at Barnhills in the same year, with a notary signing for him. His name is recorded in 1603 on a long list of local landowners whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencarn) was trying to remove. The name of his wife is not known. In 1603 his son Thomas was served heir to his lands in Minto (suggesting he was deceased by then). He had at least one other son, George. John (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas. In 1592 he is recorded in a complaint to the Privy Council by James Stewart of Wells that he threatened his servant when he was ploughing the fields at Wells. He was assisted by his brother Robert, with the incitement of their brother Walter of Bedrule, and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as a servitor of the Laird of Bedrule (presumably Walter). He was a subscriber at Barnhills to a bond by John of Minto to enter the Lorraines of Harwood. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) nephew of George of Belses. In 1603 he was recorded as ‘Jock Trumbill in Belsis’ when his uncle George was convicted of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his wife Marion. John (16th/17th C.) from Braidsheugh. He is recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbulls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. William ‘of Brodehaugh’ is listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Macksie. He is recorded in 1601 when he was accused by Mr. Gray of Morpeth of being part of a group of Scotsmen of stealing from him. The others were Lorraines of Appotside and Turnbulls of Braidhaugh. In 1603 he was ‘of Maiksdye’ when, along with Turnbulls from Nether Bonchester, Braidsheugh and ‘Harkschaw’, he was ordered to find cautious. He had a marriage contract of 1597 with Isobel, daughter of George Turnbull of Hallrule. This was followed by a grant of the half lands of Hallrule in 1603, when he was still a minor. He had a charter for the lands of Barnhills in 1607, and a charter of confirmation in 1618. In 1609 he and his father Hector were part of an action brought by David, son of John Scott ‘of the Tour in Hawick’, for not paying what they had borrowed from him. In 1613 he sold ‘10 acres of Easter Barnhills’ to Ragwell Bennet. In 1617 there was a ‘renunciation’ to him from James and George Scott (which branch of the Scotts is unclear). He had a ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliott (both elder and younger) of Stobs in 1617, and some kind of financial arrangement with Ragwell Bennet in 1618. His brother William in Langraw succeeded to the lands of Barnhills in 1628.

John (16th/17th C.) one of the Turnbulls who were accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Trumbill, sone to Hector of Wauchope’. His brothers included George (also accused in this trial), Thomas (who succeeded to Wauchope) and probably David (who was originally the heir). He was acquitted, although his brother Thomas was found guilty.

John (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and grandson of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He married Judith Forster, probably in the 1590s. John (17th C.) son of George in Philiphaugh. In 1601 he was served heir to his father’s 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1627 he concedes some lands in Philiphaugh to William, portioner of Philiphaugh. In 1630 he was served heir to his father Mark of Howden in the lands of Philiphe in the Barony of Hawick. He is surely related to the John who succeeded his father George of Howden in 1601 and the John of Howden recorded in 1576. John (16th/17th C.) half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, described as ‘apparent of Harden’ in 1608 (even although there had not been any Turnbull Lairds of Harden for a century). Along with John Scott (brother of Walter of Woll) he attacked some of the citizens of Selkirk, and when apprehended by the Selkirk Bailies the pair were forcibly taken from imprisonment by a gang of Scotts and Turnbulls. They were then ordered to appear in Edinburgh or be declared rebels. It is possible he was a son of Isabel, who was described as ‘gudwif of Woll’ in 1579 (with her husband’s name not recorded).

John (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. He is listed as ‘apparent of Huntly’ (presumably Huntly). His brothers Robert and Andrew were also involved. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Elscheuch’ recorded in 1612, this probably being Elfhaugh. Along with Andrew in Bonchester, and Andrew’s sons Thomas and John, he complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. William was also tenant there, and so presumably a relative. John (16th/17th C.) son of James ‘called of Raperlaw’. In 1619 was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. He was one of the few men who appeared personally and hence was not denounced as a rebel. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ (possibly the one in Bedrule Parish) when he acted as caution (along Gilbert, son to Gavin Elliott of Brugh and 3 men from Headshaw) in 1623 for Mungo Scott from Castleside. Perhaps the same John was ‘in Bedrule’ in 1643 when his lands were valued at £34. John of Minto (d.1641) possibly son of Thomas. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. His sons William and Robert became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively (and so must have been quite young when he died). His son John succeeded while still a minor. He died while on army service in Newcastle, this fact convincing his superior to allow his son to marry before he was of age. He is probably the John of Minto whose daughter Alison married William Douglas of Timpendale in 1655. John of Minto (b.1620s) son of John and Elizabeth Elliott. He was brother of William and Robert. He married Rachel Inglis in 1641, even although he was technically too young; this was because his father had died while in military service (and also through the help of his uncle William Turnbull, minister of Makerstoun). In the 1643 Land Tax Rolls he was owner of the main part of Minto, along with ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ (his uncle) and Elizabeth Elliot (his mother), valued at £2006 13s 4d. He was also listed as holding the ‘Minister of Makerston’s Lands, being Hornshole’, valued at £100. He is probably the John who was in 1655 served heir to his father John of Minto in 1/3 of the lands and Barony of Minto, including a half merk of land in Minto, with advowson of the church, ‘2 parts of the said landis undisposon’. At the same time he also inherited 1 merkland of Hornshole. It is unclear what his relationship was with John of Knowe, but it seems easy to mix them up; in 1655 he received from John of Knowe his third of the rent of Hyndlee and Rouchope and in 1656 rented Minto Craig to him (definitively proving they were not one and the same man). In 1657 he was the heritable proprietor of the lands of Hornshole when he had a ‘wadset’ for them with John Scott of Brierryards, with the consent of William Turnbull, minister of Makerstoun. He appears to have owned part of Standhill in 1660 and could be the John in Standhill recorded in the 1643, 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. Payments to Lord Lyon in 1662 suggest this is when the family matriculated their arms. He was renewed as a Roxburghshire J.P. in 1663. He was probably the Laird of Minto recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £2906 13s 4d. His wife may be the ‘Lady Minto’ who paid tax on £200 for lands in Southdean Parish in 1663. He had one child, also John, and father and son are also easy to confuse. It was probably his son John who sold off the Minto estate. John (17th C.) described as ‘indweller in Machsyde’ when he was witness to a sasine in Rulewater in 1653. John of Minto (d.bef. 1684) son of John. He was involved in a bond with John Turnbull of Knowe, partly paid off in 1668. He was probably the John, recorded along with William in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably also the same John of Minto who was later married to Rachel, daughter of Cornelius Ingles of ‘Eastbarnes’ (she is recorded as his wife in 1681). In 1672 he had a charter of the Barony of Minto, which was ratified in 1681. In 1673 they were involved in a land deal with Walter Scott of Harwood, selling off the Minto estate, and ending its connection with his family, which had lasted many generations. He also sold about a third of the lands of Minto to Gilbert Elliott of Craignend (who was probably his maternal uncle, and not the same man as Sir Gilbert Elliot, who would unite them into the Barony of Minto in 1706). It seems likely that he was forced to sell off his lands to clear debts (but it may be that the arrangements in the 1670s were only wadsets, and he lost the lands for good in the 1690s). He is probably the John of Minto whose brother William is recorded in a deed in 1673. In 1674 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his wife Rachel Ingles (who was also a Burgess). His wife is recorded recovering the ‘wadset’ with the Earl of Tarras over lands in the Barony of Minto in the period 1682–94. This must be the same John of Minto described as deceased in 1684 when his son John was entered as a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in his right. He had unnamed children buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1670 and 1674. John of Langshaw (17th C.) appointed one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (along with Harry McDougall of Makerstoun) in 1665. John of Knowe (d.1675/6) probably eldest son and successor as Laird to Thomas. In 1652 his brother William was appointed as tutor to the children of their relative Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Chesterhall near Ancrum). He appears to have rented Hyndlee and Rouchope (along with other farmers) from John of Minto in 1655, and he rented Minto Craig from John of Minto in 1656. There is an account relating to him from 1664 among records in Selkirk. In 1655 he is recorded in a ‘tack’ with Thomas Turnbull, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and in 1657 in an ‘inhibition’ against Robert Turnbull, son of a Jedburgh merchant. In a discharge of 1658 he is listed along with other Turnbulls, suggesting that he was son of Thomas and brother of William. He is recorded in a bond with James Scott in 1658. He was fined £2,000 in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying £227. He was on a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and he complained against the planned division of that parish in the same year. He paid annual rent to the treasurer of Selkirk in 1667. In 1668 he is mentioned as cautioner for John of Minto (making it clear that they were not the same person, although their relationship is unclear). It was established in 1670 that he owned the burial place within the bell-house of Hassendean Kirk. His wife Agnes Liddell died in 1648. He was probably succeeded by Thomas of Knowe, who was persecuted as a Covenanter. Another son was John, recorded as the son of John of Knowe who became an apprentice surgeon with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1675. His daughter Helen married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1669. In 1678 Grizel (sister of Thomas of Knowe), who married Adam Scott of Burnhead, was probably his daughter. In the 1680s Thomas of Knowe was also recorded having a sister Marion, who was probably therefore another daughter. His children John, Alexander and Isobel are recorded in 1679 receiving money from his estate. Two wills (one dated 1661, while he was still alive, and another in 1676, possibly after he died) are among the papers of the Horsburgh family in the National Archives. His death is recorded on a table tomb in the old Minto graveyard, along with Thomas of Knowe (d.1646). John of Firth (17th C.) recorded receiving land from Walter Riddell in 1645. He paid tax on £200 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1664. In 1675 he led a ‘poinding’ against Bessie Murray, widow of James ‘Bucholme’. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for his lands of Firth. John (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter wanted ane drop’. It is unclear if he was from Hawick or elsewhere, but he must have been a trader at the market in Hawick. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He is recorded in 1684 when his former servant James Johnston was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included George (b.1680). John (17th C.) resident records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton, and ‘The malt kilne’ is listed after him, suggesting he may have been a maltman at Newton.

John (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) carrier at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in West Middle on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the later John in West Middle. John (17th C.) tenant in Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highheasters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish. John (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) shepherd at Clarilaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his wife’s will was recorded in 1690. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Miller in 1689. John of Knowe (17th/18th C.) probably son of John and brother of Thomas of Knowe. He may have been the John who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1675. He is recorded in 1689 bringing an action against Rev. Francis Scott, after he had been removed by the Privy Council. John of Minto (17th/18th C.) son of John and Elisabeth Elliott of Stobs. He sold the Minto estate in 1703 to his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw, ancestor of the Earls of Minto; it is also stated that he sold it to Walter Scott of Harwood in 1673, but perhaps this was a wadset only. His connection with the other Turnbulls (of Minto and/or Knowe) seems unclear, but he was probably the John (described as a merchant) who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father in 1684. It may have been his son Patrick who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1704, in right of his deceased father (in which case he died about 1703). John (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, brother of Michael and Robert, who were also coopers. All 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies in 1678. In 1689 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He was an elder of the Kirk, and in 1717 charged with collecting money ‘from ye foot of ye play la to the west end of ye toun’, suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He was still an Elder in 1718. In 1719 he was ‘cuper elder’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell. He was recorded as a cooper in 1699 when his son Andrew was baptised, with witnesses shoemakers Robert and George Oliver. It seems likely he was father of the cooper John who was on the shortlist for Cornet in 1710; if so his wife may have been Agnes Moffat and other children were James (b.1684) and Elspeth (b.1688). He married Helen ‘Junk’ in 1706 and had children including: James (b.1707); Michael (b.1709); Isobel (b.1712); Helen (b.1714); Mary (b.1716); and John (b.1719). The witnesses in 1709 and 1712 were cooper Michael and weaver Robert (his brothers), in 1714 were Bailies George Martin and Walter Elliot and in 1716 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Douglas (brother to the Laird of Cavers) and mason John Napier. John (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was separate from the contemporary cooper of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘oye to Mr James Ker Sometimes Minister att Abbotrule’ in 1704 and 1707. His wife was Janet Turnbull and their children, baptised in Hawick, included Thomas (b.1704) and Mary (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were Bailie George Martin and Patrick McLellan and in 1707 were William Cunningham and apothecary Walter Scott. He was presumably either nephew or grandson of James Ker, but the precise relationship is unclear. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Walter was baptised in Cavers in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was shepherd in Whitchesters in 1710. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Malie (b.1710); and Agnes (b.1712). The witnesses in 1710 were Walter Nixon and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Boonraw in 1708 and 1711 when his sons William and Archibald were baptised in Wilton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wester Groundistone in 1721 and 1725. His wife was Janet Colvin and their children included: Janet (b.1717); John (b.1718); Marion (b.1721); Andrew (b.1723); and Agnes (b.1725). The witnesses in 1721 were George and Richard Scott.
Turnbull Turnbull

and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John (17th/18th C.) mason of Hawick. He is probably the mason who witnessed baptisms in 1706 (along with mason John Napier) for mason Peter Mitchell, in 1711 (along with mason Nichol Turnbull) for mason Peter Mitchell, and in 1712 for mason John Napier. He may also be the John who witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert Chisholme in 1717. In 1717, along with John the cooper, he was ordered to collect monies from the west end of the Town, suggesting he may have lived there. It is possible he was related to the other John. In 1720 he (and mason Andrew) witnessed baptisms for Andrew Colwart and mason John Napier. He was still an elder in 1722. In 1723 he witnessed baptisms for James Beattie, innkeeper in the Sandbed and for weaver Walter White. In 1725, along with Andrew (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young. Along with Dand Gray in Weensland he witnessed a baptism in 1725 for tenant Robert Scott. He witnessed another baptism in 1726 for flesher Robert Hardie. Probably the same mason John had a child called Nichol in Hawick in 1709, the mother being Jean Dunlap (labelled ‘fornicat.’). In 1721 he was recorded as a mason when he witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew) for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull (who may have been related); the same 2 men were also witnesses in 1726 and 1728. Probably the same mason in Hawick married Helen Lauds and their children included: Margaret (b.1710); Andrew (b.1713); Andrew (again, b.1715); James (b.1717); Helen Margaret (b.1720); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1715 were baxter John Whillans and mason Andrew Turnbull, younger. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1710 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He was probably son of an earlier cooper of the same family; he may be the John born to John and Agnes Moffat in Hawick in 1686. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Mossbrae in 1718 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, who may be his (although some are probably children of John at Robertson) include: Michael (b.1703); Margaret (b.1707); Isobel (b.1709); Mary (b.1709); William (b.1712); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and James (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Robertson itself in 1718, and was distinct from the John who was at Mossbrae. His children included Janet (b.1718). He may be the John who married Janet Little in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor to Walter Elliott, bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick’ in 1718 when he was rebuked for having a horse race with Thomas Porteous on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1721. James (b.1724), Margaret (b.1728) and Anne (b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton, may also have been his children. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who was paid in 1721 for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock. He may thus have been a clockmaker or other tradesman. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at West Middle in 1723 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier John in West Middle. John (1712/3–87) tenant in Mackside. His family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although he appears to also be referred to there as Thomas). His wife Isabel died in 1756, aged 41. Their children included Betty, James and Thomas (who probably carried on as tenant of Mackside), as well as William, Mary, Elspeth and Margaret, who died in infancy. John (18th C.) resident of Parkhill recorded in 1725, 1728, 1733 and 1743 when children of his were baptised. He may have been brother of Walter who also had children baptised at Parkhill around the same time. They could both be descended from James who was at Parkhill a couplef decades earlier. His children included: Robert (b.1725); Margaret (b.1728); Janet (b.1733); and Robert (again, b.1743). Several other children baptised in Robertson could also be his. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘Bririehill’ (i.e. Brieryhill) in 1741, what appears to be ‘Timer miln’ in 1743 and Timbersidemill in 1747. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for John Hood in Hornshole in 1742. He married Margaret Easton in Wilton in 1737 and their children included: Mary (b.1738); James (b.1741); William (b.1743); Thomas (b.1747); John (b.1749); Helen (b.1752); and Robert (b.1755). The witnesses in 1741 were John and Walter Scott, in 1743 were Walter and Robert Scott and in 1747 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (18th C.) married Margaret Kersel in Minto in 1746. John (18th C.) tanner in Hawick. He paid the tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. John (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for weaver George, who was probably related to him. John (1723–81) son of William, he was born at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. Around 1744 he was schoolmaster at Kirkton School, also serving as Session Clerk. That year he married Isabel Scott in Wilton. By 1750 he was at Eves, where he was also Session Clerk. He married Bridget Monet in Hawick in 1759. His children (with his 1st wife) were: William; Betty; and John. With his 2nd wife he had at least one child: Janet. He died in Hawick. John (18th C.) married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Lamb in 1770. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. John of Wester Swanshield (b.1729–1820/1) son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1750 (note there is some confusion here, since Walter Deans says he was son of James). In 1778 he sold Wester Swanshield to Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, in order to lease a bigger farm (although he is recorded as still being the owner in 1788, so perhaps the sale had not gone through yet). This ended an association of those lands with his family for perhaps 300 years. In 1780 he occupied the farm of Berryfell and also rented Howashiel. He was a major heritor of Hobkir Parish along with Henry Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Scott of Stonedge. He is recorded as farmer at Berryfell on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He later farmed at Whitehill Brae, where he died. He married Esther Douglas, a relative of Douglas of Trows. Their children were: Janet; Walter, who used to write songs and sonnets, entered the army, moved to England and had a single daughter; Esther; John, who was tenant at Brieryhill and later Minto Kames; Robert, who purchased Galalaw; Betty; and James, tenant farmer at Galalaw. James is recorded as his son on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. The combined age of he and his wife on their Hobkir tombstone is 184 (he being 91 and his wife 93). His descendants included Mr. Turnbull of 2 Tower Common, and she died in 1803, aged 41. They had a daughter who died in infancy. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although some of the names and generations may be confused). John (b.c.1745) farm worker at Stonedge. By his first wife he had sons William (a forester in Jedforest) and James (farm worker at Unthank, who died at Midburn). He secondly married Christian Griev, and their children were: Robert, shepherd at Philiphaugh and elsewhere; Kate, who married and moved to London; Margaret, who married George Henderson, weaver at Kilnowe and was great-grandmother of Euphemia Henderson who lived at Weens Lodge; Mary, second wife of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Midburn; and Jane, who married Andrew Turnbull, gardener at Weens. John (d.bef. 1815) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Dryden, who died in 1815. Their children included Betty (b.1775), Jane (b.1776), William (b.1787) and John (b.1788). John ‘Meldrum’ (18th C.) recorded in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died in Hawick. He is surely related to James, ‘Auld Meldrum’, who died in 1781. John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He married Helen (or Agnes) Scott and their children included: John (b.1784); and Elionora (b.1789). The witnesses in 1784 were merchant George (surely a relative) and James Scott (probably related to his wife). John (18th C.) groom at Branxholme in 1785–88, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was listed as house servant at Branxholme in 1791. In 1794 possibly the same John was gamekeeper at Stobs for Sir William Elliott. However, in 1797 he was a house servant at Branxholme again. John (1762/3–1841) weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Howegate with his brother James, who was also a weaver. He is buried in St.

John (b. bef. 1770) served as an officer in Stuart’s Regiment of the Scots Brigade in Holland before turning to medicine. He was apprenticed to Benjamin Bell in Edinburgh and studied at Edinburgh University, receiving the Diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1793. He practised at Belford, Northumberland and then in Hawick. He received his M.A. and M.D. from St. Andrews University in 1796. John (18th C.) recorded at ‘Cleughhead’ in 1784 and 1787. His children Mary (b. 1784) and Helen (b. 1787) were baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear which Cleuchhead this may have been. Perhaps the same John had other children baptised in Cavers Parish, including John (b. 1786). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was herd in Southdeanrig in 1785–97 when his children were baptised: John (b. 1785); James (b. 1791); Francis (b. 1793); and Elspeth (b. 1797). John (d. bef. 1816) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1773 and she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: John (b. 1774); Margaret (b. 1776); Christy (b. 1778); Christian (b. 1782); William (b. 1785); Margaret (again, b. 1787); and Robert (b. 1788). The first child was baptised in Hawick and the rest in Wilton. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Catherine Turnbull in Wilton in 1770. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Euphemia Turnbull and their children included: Agnes (b. 1780); Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Euphemia Turnbull in 1770. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William was baptised in 1790. Betty (b. 1787) may also have been his child. John (18th C.) listed as servant at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. It may just be a coincidence that there was a servant with the same name earlier at Branxholme and at the same time at Stobs. John (18th/19th C.) married Hannah Sinton in 1795, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Rober-ton and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Harden in 1787, 1789 and 1794 and at Langlands Dean in 1797. He married Isobel Gray in 1786 and their children included: John (b. 1787); Thomas (b. 1789); Isobel (b. 1792); Walter (b. 1794); William (b. 1797); and William (again, b. 1800). John (18th/19th C.) son of Robert, tenant in Bewlie Hill. He is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (b. c. 1770s) mason at Gillbraechead according to the ballot for the Militia in Castle-ton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same mason was at Riccarton Toll at the time of the 1801 Militia ballot. John (b. c. 1770s) servant at Courthill according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. John ‘Jock’ (b. c. 1780) son of Robert, who was farmer at Hallrule Mill. He is so recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot, along with his brother Robert. A story is recounted by Walter Deans in 1887, who said that he was ‘imbued with the ancient spirit and daring of the Turnbulls’, and that he would regularly settle disputes with his enemies by picking fights at local fairs; on one occasion after he had dispatched a large group of enemies at Jedburgh, his mother, Tibbie Donaldson, said ‘ma heart was wae to see them a’ gushin’ an’ bluidin’, and oor Jock knockin’ them doon’. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Hudshouse. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (1770s–1827) Hawick clockmaker. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and still listed in 1801. His property immediately to the east of the old Town House was bought by the Council in 1827 and later used to build part of the new Town Hall; it was reported that in 1827 the Burgh borrowed £200 from cooper Walter Lamb, ‘in order to pay the price of the subjects purchased from the heirs of John Turnbull’. His niece, Anna Maria Brown, wife of C. Brown, traveller of London, was served as his heir in 1827. He may have been related to the John who was paid for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock in 1721. John (1761/2–1803) probably son of Thomas, he was tenant in Mackside, like at least 3 generations before him. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) son of George of the Cross Keys. He was recorded as son of George ‘Senior’ on the 1794 short-list for Cornet. He was elected Cornet in 1796, when he was stated to be of the Cross Keys. He was also recorded at the Cross Keys in 1808 when his son Walter died. This is probably the Cross Keys on the High Street (rather than the Sandbed), although this is unclear. He could be the John, son to George ‘Senior Merch’ recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; his name appeared again in 1798 and in early 1799 he paid £10 to avoid serving. In 1799 he was listed among men balloted in 1797 who had paid the penalty for not serving. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Colterscleuch, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs.
Turnbull

in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No information such as occupation is given about him. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in Denholm, recorded in 1795 and 1797. He is listed as a wright on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, separate from the other John in Denholm who is also listed there. His children included: Thomas (b.1795); and twins John in Denholm who is also listed there. His 1797 Horse Tax Rolls separate from the other 1795 and 1797. He is listed as a wright on the 18th/19th C. wright in Denholm, recorded in 1799 on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No information such as occupation is given about him. John (b.c.1765) merchant on the south side of Main Street in Lilliesleaf in 1841. He was tenant at Brieryhill and later at Minto Kames. He is probably the John who was listed as owner of Wester Swanshiel in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married and his children included John, Thomas, Walter and Margaret. He lived to an old age, being still at Minto Kames at the 1841 census, along with Thomas and Walter (perhaps his sons) and the family of Walter. He could be father of Gavin, who was minister at Teviothead. John (18th/19th C.) in charge of wood management at Brauxholme in at least the years 1814/5, when he is recorded supervising and paying labourers for ‘upholding the plantation dikes’. He may be the same John recorded conveying a letter for Adam Ogilvie at Brauxholme in 1790. He may also be the John who was a farm worker, about 75 years old, at Brauxholme in 1841. John (b.c.1765) merchant on the south side of Main Street in Lilliesleaf in 1841. He is probably the draper or grocer recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was recorded among those whose names had not been drawn, but his named was labelled ‘dead’ and the entry crossed out. John (18th/19th C.) weaver at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Militia ballots in 1799 and 1801. John (b.c.1770s) wright in Hawick, recorded in the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. John (b.c.1780) mason in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived on Main Street in 1841. His wife’s name was Elizabeth. John (b.c.1780) mason in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (b.c.1780) merchant in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. It is unclear if he was related to other merchants of the same name. John (b.c.1780) wright at ‘Poperburn’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Labourer Andrew was also listed there and probably his brother. They likely lived on the Piper Burn. John (b.c.1780) slater at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the John junior, recorded as a tailor in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenant Book for 1799. John (b.c.1780) joiner on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1836 electoral roll he was listed as joint proprietor with John junior. He is probably the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiner on the Round Close in 1837. His wife was Margaret. He is probably the John recorded along with his wife Margaret as a joiner on the 1841 census, around 10 High Street. John (b.c.1780) carter in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.c.1780/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a servant at Stirches. He was listed as servant at Stirches among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was footman at Stirches House on the 1851 census. His wife was Isabella and they had a daughter, Ann. John (b.c.1780/1) stocking-maker in Wilton Parish. He was listed as stocking-maker at Crawhill Park among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was also an elder in Wilton Kirk. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and George. In 1851 the family were living on Wilton Place. John (18th/19th C.) married Isabella Wilson. Their son Walter was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1809. The witnesses were Walter Wilson and William [perhaps Walthie?]. John (b.c.1784/5) agricultural labourer, both in Southdean Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh Cottages in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Beatrice and their children included Robert, Janet and John. John (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Mabonlaw, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. John (b.c.1786/7) shepherd at Burngrove in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Isabella. He is probably the John who married Mary Knox in Wilton in 1810. John (1787–1857) 2nd son of James, who farmed at Ruecastle. In 1811 he became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. He was recorded at Spittal in 1841 and 1851. He is probably the 'Mr. Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule' who was said to take a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. In 1827 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Lockie. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen Rutherford (b.1822); James (b.1823), who took over the tenancy of Spittal; Mary (b.1825) and Isabella A.G. (b.1830). He secondly married Ann Euphemia Burnett (from Edinburgh) and further children included: John Rutherford (b.1838); Margaret Catherine (b.1840); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1842); William George (b.1844); Alexander Jamieson (b.1846); Agnes R. (b.1847); Walter Douglas (b.1849); Anne Euphemia (b.1851); and Jessie Catherine (b.1856). Ann is recorded as 'Late Farmer's Widow' in the 1861 census. John (b.c.1787/8) eldest son of John, farmer at Brier-yhill and Minto Kames. He carried on the tenancy of Minto Kames when his father retired. He married Esther Turnbull. His children included John, Isabel, Thomas, James, Agnes, Robert (who became a solicitor) and Walter (a stone mason). In 1851 he is listed as retired and living at Newton in Wilton Parish with his wife Esther and children Margaret, Robert, Walter, Esther and Mary, plus his brother Thomas. In 1861 he was at Wilton Dean. He retired from farming and lived to the age of 88. John (1788–1849) son of Thomas (‘Bailie Tammy’) and Margaret Darling. He may also have been a Bailie. He was a dyer on the Crescent, carrying on some of his father’s business and founding the company John Turnbull & Son, Slitrig Dyeworks in 1819. He is recorded as dyer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and as a dyer and carpet manufacturer in the 1837 directory. He maintained the Baptists within Hawick after the death of their local leader William Thorburn; he helped the congregation acquire a room for worship on the ground floor of 8 Allars Crescent. He married Isabella Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1831. His children were: Thomas (b.1833); Alexander (b.1835); John D. (b.1838); Catherine (b.1840); and Margaret Darling (b.1842/3), who married Thomas Bell, and whose daughter Isabella R. was the first person baptised in the new Baptist Kirk on Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was living on the Crescent with his wife Isabell and 4 children, but by 1851 his wife was a widow there. He is probably the John, dyer on the Crescent listed in Slater’s 1852 directory, even although he was deceased by then (since the firm continued). A portrait of him exists. John (b.1796) born in Minto Parish, son of George. He was a seedsman and spirit dealer on Allars Bank. In 1851 he was living at Allars Bank and listed as a farmer of 130 acres (employing 5 labourers) and a nursery and seedsman (employing 42 people). In 1861 he was at the corner of Bourtree Place and North Bridge Street and listed as ‘Nursery & Seedsman’. His wife was Violet H. Thorburn (from Ashkirk Parish), and their children included: George (b.1820); Euphemia (b.1822); Jessie (b.1824); William (b.1826); John (b.1828); Isabella (b.1830); and James Alexander (b.1837), who worked in the nursery business. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer. By 1861 he had moved to the east side of Bridge Street. John (18th/19th C.) married Helen Goodfellow in Lilliesleaf in 1825. Their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (1796–1875) youngest son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson. He succeeded his father as farmer at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. He also carried on his father’s reputation as a breeder of short-horn cattle at Burnfoot. In his younger days he was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was probably the John listed at Burnfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed as farmer at Burnfoot in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 as farmer of 200 acres, employing 9 labourers and was still farmer at Burnfoot in 1868. He married Mary Kilner Anderson, who was from Huddersfield. Their children included: William (b.1833); Betsy Anderson (b.1836); Eleanor Stephenson (b.1833); Thomas Anderson (b.1839); and Mary (b.1841). His last 20 years were spent in failing health, and he was seldom seen in public. He died at Burnfoot. John (19th C.) married Beatrix (or ‘Beaty’) Scoon in 1826, the marriage recorded in Roberton and Hobkirk Parish. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (b.1803) youngest of 7 sons of James and Betty Adamson, he was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He had brothers who were schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He became a grocer in Newcastleton. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the Carter in Newcastleton listed as male head of his family in 1835. In 1824 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), daughter of George Scott, shepherd at Lodgegill. They had a family of 10: James (1825–78), grocer in Hawick; George (1826–86), who died in Edinburgh and had a daughter Elizabeth Lawrie who was also a teacher; Elizabeth (b.1828), who married Jedburgh baker W. Hollands; Thomas (1830–60), who died at Morebattle, and had a son Dr. Adam Robert, who was medical superintendent at the Fife and Kinross Lunatic Asylum; Robert (1832–64), who died unmarried at Saratoga Springs, U.S.A.; William (b.1834), who died in infancy; William again, who also died (d.1836); William Elliot (1838–68), clerk at Register House; Walter Hall (b.1841) provision merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret (b.1842), married Linlithgow paper merchant John Lovell. He is buried with his wife at Rosebank cemetery in Edinburgh. John (1807–c.49) son of John and Margaret Murray, he was born in Hawick Parish. In 1833 he married Helen (1808–98), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. In 1841 he was a joiner living on the Round Close, but emigrated soon afterwards, settling in Galt, Ontario. His children (the first 3 born in Hawick) were: John (b.1835); William (b.1836); Helen (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1850). John Robson (1807–66) youngest son of Adam, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and Betty Scott, from Skelfhill. He attended Minto School and Edinburgh University and became an architect. He was Master of Works at Windsor Castle in the period 1845–66. He married Ann Oliver from Middlesex and they had 5 children. He is buried at Windsor Castle. John (b.1808) son of Alexander and Jean Scott. He was a joiner and innkeeper in Denholm. He is probably the joiner recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Cross Keys on Main Street. In 1851 he was living with his mother Jane, who was postmistress, his sister Jane and his nephew John (who became a gardener and botanist). In 1861 he was living with his sister Jean and ‘cousin’ Agnes Scott, serving as his assistant; she was probably his niece, daughter of Robert Scott and Helen Turnbull and sister of botanist John Scott. John (19th C.) educated in Selkirk, he became schoolmaster at Millburn (otherwise known as Hermitage) in Castleton Parish in 1838. It seems unlikely that he was there for long. John (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, listed at the Round Close in 1841. He is probably son of John, who was also a joiner, and was part of the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiners on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Helen, and their children included John, William and Helen. John (19th C.) farmer at East Middle, probably son of Thomas. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John (19th C.) son of Robert. He was a grocer to trade, with his shop at Bonchester Bridge. In 1835 he became the first postmaster of the Rule valley, however he died not long afterwards and was succeeded by his sister Betty. John (19th C.) resident of Appletreeshall. In 1863 he donated a Roman bronze fibula to the Museum. It is possible this was the ‘fibula, made apparently either of jet or cannel coal and bearing a fine polish’ found on the borders of Hawick Parish and described in 1839. John (b.1803/4) shepherd and agricultural labourer in Florida in Liddesdale. He was listed there among heads of households in Castleton in 1836–41. The 80 year-old James who lived with him in 1841 was probably his father. By 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd and he is recorded as farmer at Florida in 1868. His wife was Jane, and their children included James, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth, John, William and Andrew. John (c.1818–c.1905) 2nd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denneside, he was born at Old Fodderlee. He married Jane, daughter of William Nichol, farmer at Newlands, Minto, and she died in 1896. He later lived in the Back Row, Selkirk. He had 2 sons and 3 daughters. John (19th C.) coachman at Weens estate. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Amos. Their son Walter Amos was carpenter at Bonchester Bridge and married his cousin Janet Kerr Amos in 1881. John (1825/6–75) eldest son of Alexander, who was forester at Cavers. He married Helen, daughter of James Stoddart, shepherd at Falahill. Their family consisted of 6 sons (including Alexander, servant at Wolfelee) and 5 daughters. He died at Westerhouses. John (19th C.) mason in Denholm. In 1863 he donated an old coin to the Museum. John (19th C.) son of Thomas, who was shepherd on Templehall. He married Agnes, daughter of shepherd Robert Telfer. Among their children was John, who was shepherd at several farms in Rulewater. John (19th C.) eldest son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. Along with his brother Thomas he went out to Australia when gold was discovered near Melbourne in the 1850s. He returned to Hawick and married Mary, sister of builder Adam Scott in 1866. He farmed at Priestrig. His children were John, Thomas, Christina (who married Rev. John Stevenson of Bedrule) and Esther (who kept house for her 2 brothers at Bonchester). John (19th C.) Race Judge at the Common Riding in the 1840s. John (b.1826/7) shepherd in Rulewater, son of John and grandson of Thomas who was shepherd on Templehall farm.
He was born in Hawick Parish and was related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel and also coachman John. He worked for Henry Elliot, senior and junior, then at Town-o-Rule, Westerhouses and finally Weens East Lodge. In 1861 he was shepherd at Westerhouses. He married Margaret Elliot from Newcastle upon Tyne. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Janet, who was laundress at Weens; Isabella; Agnes; John; Elizabeth; and Thomas. John (b.1828) son of tobacconist William, he was a baker in Hawick. In 1851 he and his father were both living at about 3 Howe gate, and he was employing 2 men in his baker's business. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed on the Howe gate. John Struthers (b.1829) son of weaver William. He was a bank accountant, working in Jedburgh by the time of the 1861 census. His wife was Janet and their children included Ellen L., William and John W. (who was with Thomas Purdon & Sons). John (d.1891) related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He took over driving the Hawick to Carlisle coach from Sandy Elder for the last few years that it operated. He later farmed at Wiltonburn along with his brother William. John Anderson (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He was one of the members of the first committee of Hawick Golf Club in 1878, and was later Club Captain. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Billiards Club. John (19th C.) clerk at William Watson & Sons, he was an influential early member of the Hawick R.F.C. committee. John (19th/20th C.) wine merchant at 51 High Street. He was probably son of the founder of the grocery and wine store. John A. (19th C.) draper on the Howe gate. He was later a tobacconist. His daughter Amy married her cousin James Turnbull, farmer at Galalaw. John (1836–1915) from the family of Bedrule, he was born in Jedburgh, where he worked at the Procurator Fiscal’s Office before becoming the first accountant of the Hawick Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland. After holding this position for 15 years he moved to the Gala branch where he was appointed Agent in 1902 and retired in 1909. He was also actuary for the Gala branch of the Trustee Savings Bank for almost 40 years. He married Isabella Ewen Turnbull (1834–1917) and their children were James Brydon, John William, Gilbert Kilpatrick, Helen, Robert John (killed on a train in the U.S.A.), Douglas (of the Imperial Yomany, died at Pretoria), George Hector (died in Nashville, Tennessee) and E.J. (of Dayton, Ohio). John (1838–1910) son of John and grandson of ‘Bailie Tammy’. He worked in the family dyers business. He lived at Kirkton House, which in 1901 had 9 rooms and 2 servants. He married Sarah Hall, who was from England. Their children included: Sarah Thompson (1862–78); John D. (b.1865); and Williamina Thompson (b.1869), who married James Boyd Sime. John (b.1859) son of grocer James and Annie Robson. In 1889 he married Mary Stewart at Ilkley. Their children were James Stewart; Charles Stewart; Isabella Young Firth; Donald MacLeod Victor; Frederick William Barrie; and Douglas Elliot Scott. John (19th/20th C.) master of Kirkton School. He is recorded in Slater’s 1903 directory. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Probably the same John was Registrar and Inspector of Poor in Kirkton in 1902. John Turnbull (b.1868) son of John, farmer at Priestrig and Mary Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became joint tenant at Bonchester with his brother Thomas. John Weir (b.1870) clothier in Denholm, son of clothier and tailor James. He was educated in Denholm until the age of 16, acting as pupil-teacher there. He was an apprentice with his father until 1890 then worked in Glasgow for 2 years, returning to Denholm to join his father in ‘R. Turnbull & Son’, later becoming the sole partner. He acted as local Registrar in Denholm and lived at Rosebank. In 1895 he married his cousin Isabella Macdonald; she was daughter of Jessie Scott, daughter of Robert Scott, farmer at Todlaw. John (19th/20th C.) Elder and Session Clerk of Kirkton Parish in 1908. John (19th/20th C.) cashier with Wilson & Armstrong at Weensland Mills. He later became a partner in Turnbull & Hodgson, coal merchants, then had his own coal business (based at the Coffin End) and finally was involved with Teviot Tweed Co. He married Barbara Scott Davidson, daughter of James. John (19th/20th C.) became Managing Director of Pringle’s in 1929, following J. Boyd Sime’s resignation. He himself resigned in 1933, to be replaced by Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart. John Fisher ‘Guttie’ or ‘Gutty’ (1932–82) son of Barrie, he was a local grocery merchant and Town Councillor, as well as husband of Myra. He attended George Watson’s College in Edinburgh and served an apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny before taking over the family business in 1954, based at 51 High Street. His business also sold a blended whisky called ‘Teviotdale’. He revived the Turnbull clan in 1977, after effectively being dormant for centuries. He was a Town Councillor for 11 years, starting in 1969 and later served as Roxburgh District Councillor for Teviot South. He was also heavily involved in events twinning Hawick with Bailleul. He married Myra in 1956 and they made their home at 14 Rosebank Road, later moving to St. Ables, Wilton Park Road. His children were Barrie (b.1957), Deborah (b.1959) and Hamish (b.1961). The Turnbull Clan named their lifetime achievement award after him. Joseph (19th C.) postman in the Denholm area in the 1860s. Katherine (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Hector of Belses. In 1580 her father gave her sasine for his ‘ten librates of land of old extent of Belses’. Her uncle John was one of the witnesses. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Tom ‘of Harkshaw’, which seems likely to have been Hartshaugh. The brothers were listed in 1603 along with Turnbulls from Nether Boniche, Braidaugh and Mackside, who were ordered to find caution of 300 merks each to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wanchope in the 1590s. His name is given as ‘Lancy Trumble’ (which is an unusual forename for a Turnbull). Lawrence (15th C.) part of the ‘return of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right after Archibald, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a land transaction in Edinburgh in 1501/2. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) son of William in Bonchester. In 1502 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person who was supposed to enter him into the court was George of Hallrule, who was fined for his non-appearance. His father William was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as David in Bonchester, who was probably related. Lawrence ‘Laurie in Maxsyde’ (16th/17th C.) found guilty at the 1622 Commissioners’ Court of stealing 2 cows from William Douglas of Cavers’ land at Langside about 1614 and 2 sheep from elsewhere in 1619, and sentenced to be hung. He is also referred to as ‘Lancie’. Lawrence ‘Lawrie’ of Hartshaugh (17th C.) recorded on the valuation for Abbotrule Parish in 1643. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls who lived at Hartshaugh. Leo (15th/16th C.) tenant in Unthank listed among Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for any role they played in assisting the Homes. Presumably these are the lands of Unthank in Rulewater. Lyle (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Lyell Turnbull in Hartishene’ (presumably Hartshaugh) in 1618 (registered in 1623) for a ‘wadset’ of lands in Hobkirk Parish. He was also recorded in the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Hartshaugh Mill. He was surely related to Adam. He may be the ‘Leonall’ who was possibly a younger son of Hector of Hartshaugh, who witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford (younger in Abbotrule) in 1618. Malcolm (17th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Selkirk in 1630, when he sold his tenement there. His son William witnessed another transaction in 1630. Margaret (14th C.) forfeited lands in Eyemouth (in Coldingham) which were granted to ‘Ade Corfour’. This was during the reign of David II. It is unclear how she was related to other Turnbulls. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter and heiress of John, who was granted Hundeshope in Peebleshire by David II in 1357. She also held lands in Roberton and in the town of Selkirk, suggesting that her father was from the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire Turnbulls. She married William Gledstains of that Ilk. They had a son John, to whom she resigned the lands of Hundeshope in her lifetime, probably around 1400. During the reign of Robert III she also resigned to her son John the lands in Roberton and in Selkirk. It may be that the lands the Gledstains family soon possessed near Hawick (Ormistoun, Orchard, Hummelknowes, etc.) also came from her and the Turnbulls. Margaret (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Gargunnock. Along with her sister Janet she was infefted in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1501 (her brother William probably dying before then). Margaret (15th/16th C.) described being ‘in hawic’ in 1502 when she was convicted of common reset, theft and plunder and fined £3. Her sureties were Thomas of Bedrule, Walter of Minto, George of Hallrule and Adam of ‘natoun’; she was surely from one of the local branches of the Turnbulls. She was ‘Magareta’, while the next case involved ‘Marjora’, who was presumably a different person. Margaret (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanto in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Elizabeth, who was probably her sister. Margaret see Lady Margaret Lorraine. Margaret (16th C.) daughter of Robert. In 1536 she presented proof that her deceased father had held the tenancy of the lands of ‘Uterall Burne’ in Selkirkshire. Margaret (16th C.) wife of David Elliot, who was tenant in Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls she came from. There was a court case to get her husband removed from the other half of the farm (owned at the time by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh) in 1567. There appears to have been an ongoing dispute over this half of the lands, since in 1573 Gavin Elliott of Bailielee and Stobs (who purchased the half from George Turnbull) complained that she had ordered her sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack his servant there. By this time she was widow of David Elliot (who was also from the Horsleyhill branch, like Gavin Elliott of Stobs), and must have married a Scott. She claimed that although she had no title for the lands, she had possession ‘be virtew of tak and asseedationi’, although her accusers claimed these ‘ar of lang tyme bigane outrunin’. She was represented before the Privy Council by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps therefore a relative of her husband) and was ‘visit with seiknes’ and did not attend herself. Her son John Scott did not appear and was declared a fugitive, while she and her son Walter were declared fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliot, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It seems likely that Walter and John were sons from her first marriage, perhaps to a Scott of Newton (but it this unclear). Walter and John also had a brother David, recorded in 1588, who was presumably also her son. Margaret (d.1593) daughter and heirress of William (younger of Bedrule) and Margaret Home. On the death of William, her lands and gift of marriage then came into the hands of the Crown, who appointed her uncle Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes and her grandfather Sir Thomas of Bedrule as tutors. However, Sir Thomas was declared a fugitive, leading to a lack of clarity over her future. In 1584 she was recorded as ‘oy’ (i.e. granddaughter) of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and also niece of Alexander Home of Huttonhall when there was a claim by Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes (her ‘moder broder’, i.e. another uncle) over ‘the exhibitioun of the said Margaret’, but the Privy Council decreed that control over her should remain with her ‘keeper’ Alexander Home. It was then ruled that she should stay in the house of Alexander Clerk of Balbirny, Provost of Edinburgh, until a decision about her future was made. She later married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but had no children. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Walter of Rawflat. In 1632 she and her sister Isobella were ‘heirs portioner’ to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule, Margaret (17th C.) along with Mary Chisholme she was accused of witchcraft in Lilliesleaf in 1650. It was reported that they went to Selkirk for trial by the ministers and elders ‘quhairupon markis of Satan was found upon them both’. Their fate is not recorded. Margaret (17th C.) widow who was jointly responsible, along with James Scott of Whittslade, for lands in Hassendean Parish in 1663 according to the Land Tax Rolls. She was ‘relict of Alton’, this probably being Robert of Alton, who died in about 1650. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Margaret nee Dalgleish (b.1789) son of John Dalgleish, she was born in Hobkirk Parish. She married Schoolmaster James in 1808, probably when he was teacher at Denholm. They later moved to Hawick, where he was Schoolmaster at Wilton. Her husband died in 1834 and later she ran her own school, along with her daughter Agnes, this being known as the ‘Image Garden’. The 1841 census records her living at ‘Wilton Cottage’ with children Agnes, Elspeth, Jane, Mary and William. In 1851 she was still there, with Agnes, Mary and Margaret and in 1861 just with Mary. Margaret (b.1819/20) born in Minto Parish, daughter of Janet Deans. She was listed as a teacher in Lilliesleaf in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a teacher of ‘Female School teacher (of Sewing &c)’ in Lilliesleaf, along with her mother. They lived on the north side of Main Street. Marie (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £40 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being in the same place as Mary Rutherford ‘of Rydvell’; however, it is unclear where this was. Marion nee Lorrain (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, called ‘of Wauchope’, whose daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands from him in about 1604. In 1605 their ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector of Wauchope) had her and several others removed from the lands there. This must have been part of some family feud. She was perhaps daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no proof for this). Marion (17th C.) listed as a a widow living at Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Her name appears just after William, to whom she was probably related. Marjory (15th/16th C.) described being ‘in hawic’ in 1502 when she was convicted of resetting several men. The men were John Turnbull, Alexander Turnbull, John Elliot and John Armstrong, called ‘The Fair Jock’. Mark (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and William, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Bonchester, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, when he served as surety for his brother James. He was also surety for himself, and was fined for the non-appearance of both of them. He is also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, with his name recorded there as ‘Marc Trumbull’; his brother James is also listed, as well as Turnbulls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere. He could also be the Mark (with no location given) listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his 4 cows and oxen) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; his brother Archie was also listed. Mark (15th/16th C.) listed among the many men connected with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed before Adam of Philiphaugh, who may have been related. In a separate list his name is right before David of Wauchope. Perhaps the same Mark was one of the witnesses to a document in Selkirk involving Robert, tutor of Philiphaugh. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Over Chester when he was listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Archibald is also listed, along with ‘Marc younger’, presumably his son, as well as ‘Richard Turnbull with Marc Turnbull in Overchester, David Turnbull with the same Marc, William Turnbull, John Turnbull his sons’. Presumably they were all related. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was Provost in 1561 and in 1565 (when his name is given as ‘Marcus’), during a dispute with Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Mark of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he was ‘apparent heir of Philophauht’ when he (and his brother Andrew) witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another for lands near Melrose when he was clearly son of John of Philiphaugh. He witnessed other transactions in 1579/80. He was still heir apparent in early 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, but later that year he was ‘of Philophauht’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas. In 1581/2 his father was already deceased when his mother (Isabel Douglas) resigned her lands to him, in return for a promise of 8 bolls of grain annually from his lands of Howden. Also in 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk and set a tack for his lands in Howden, with his brother George as a witness. Mark of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He was one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who entered Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601, as part of a feud with the Kers. At the end of the fight Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) and his servant were dead, along with 2 Turnbulls, one of whom was his brother Robert. There were also several serious injuries, and he himself lost ‘the thowme of his left hand’ in the fight. Another brother, Andrew, was also involved in the raid and lost his little finger. Also in 1601 he is listed along with Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth, Eckie in Stonedge and James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect gilty of’; Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Eckie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. Probably the same Mark was recorded in 1602 along with James and Hector, when John Heatlie of Mellerstain and James Home of Framepath were sureties for them to remain in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Also in 1602 he was ‘brother of the late Robert Trumbull of Bewly’ recorded along with Hector in Firth for whom William Cranston, younger of that Ilk was surety for them to re-enter ward. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Hector of Barnhills, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. He must also have been related to Hector of Bewlie, who was killed by the Kers in 1604 for his part in these events. He was convicted in late 1601, but it is unclear whether or not he was executed. He was also one of the ‘pursuers’ of the case against the Kers for the murder and maiming of several men in his party. He is probably the Mark listed in 1606 in letters of apology by the men responsible for the death of William Kerr of Ancrum. He is probably the Mark, brother of William ‘called of Beulie’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend them and 6 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Mark (d.bef. 1617) tenant in Nether Boucher. He was recorded being ‘of Neddir Boucher’ in 1590/1 among men who the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were charged to enter in court, and separately Kerr of Farniehirst (on whose Jedburgh Abbey lands he also occupied). He was recorded as a raider into England in 1589/90, being ‘in Nethir Buneche’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear in court in Edinburgh, along with 2 other Turnbulls. In 1603 he, along with Turnbulls from Braithwaugh, Mackside and ‘Harkschaw’, were ordered to find caution of 300 merks each to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. In 1606 he was the occupier of the lands of Weens and Hobsburn when they were sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He could be the Mark listed along with Turnbulls of Braithwaugh and Mackside and Lorraines of Appotside, accused of stealing from an Englishman in 1601. He married Margaret Rutherford. In 1617 his widow complained that although the family had held the ‘rowme of Nethir Boucher past memory of man, as kindlie tennentis and possessouris to the Abbotis of Jedburgh’, after her husband’s death, she was harassed there by Walter of Rawflat, destroying crops, forcing her off the land and burning the ‘write and evidents’. However Walter of Rawflat denied these acts and was found not guilty by the Privy Council. Mark of Howden (d.bef. 1631) probably the Mark ‘apparent of Howdene’ who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving Walter in Belses. He is recorded in 1612 among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging more than the allowed amount of interest. He was surely related to other Turnbulls of Howden. He failed to appear to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel. In 1631 his son John of Howden was served heir to his lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Mark in Bedrule who witnessed the bond between Robert in Bedrule and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Hector in Hartshaugh (who appears to have lived to an old age) and younger brother of James. In 1616 he had a bond with William Scott of Todrig, and another with James (called of Bedrule) and David (or Andrew), butcher of Jedburgh. He is recorded as ‘in Hairtishaugh’ in 1619 when he was cautioner for Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’. Mark (d.1689) described as ‘portioner of fotherlie’, it is unclear which Turnbulls he was related to. However, it seems likely he was related to John, who was at Fodderlee in 1694. He is recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax at Fodderlee for land valued at £100 (in one transcript of the valuation the name is given as ‘Margaret’, but that is clearly an error). He married Bessie Kerr, who was surely related to the Kerrs of Fodderlee; their only child (and heir) was Helen. The testament of him and his wife Bessie Kerr was recorded at Peebles in 1690, by Walter Chisholme, whose wife was Helen, his daughter. When he died the assets of him and his wife consisted of 2 cows, 31 sheep, half a boll of sewn barley and ‘insight and plenty’ of their house, valued at £30 Scots. Additionally William Turnbull, shoemaker in Jedburgh (who was surely related to him, perhaps his brother), acted as cautioner for the list of people who owed him money, namely: Robert Bonnar in Knowesouth; Adam Young in Hassendeanbank; Andrew Oliver in Bairnkine; William Scott in Birkhill; William Turnbull in Fulton; Andrew Rutherford in Rule; James [blank] in Earlside; and John Ker of Fodderlee. When no one appeared, Adam Chisholme in Newton became cautioner instead. Mark (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish, who married Janet Tudhope in 1700. His children included Thomas (b.1703), John (b.1706), Andrew (b.1708), Janet (b.1713) and Mark (b.1716). Mark (18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Rutherford in 1778. Mark (b.c.1780) tenant at Spittal Mill. He was one of the local Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the Radical mob at the 1837 election. 5 men were tried for rioting, with him being one of the 7 victims named. The court proceedings state that the mob ‘did surround him, and violently tear off from his person a great part of his clothes, and did strike him and kick him severely on his legs and other part of his person’. He was recorded as farmer at Spittal Mill in 1851. He married Janet Scott in Cavers in 1832 and their children included: Thomas (b.1832); William (b.1833); Walter Scott (b.1835); Walter Scott (again, b.1837); and Isabel (b.1841). John (b.1827), also baptised in Cavers to a couple with the same names, was probably also their child (although born before their marriage). Mark, who was meal dealer at Spittal in 1841, was probably also his son. Mark (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Kerr in 1814 and their daughter Agnes Rutherford was baptised in 1816. Mark (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes MacKenzie and their daughter Anne was baptised in 1821. Mark (b.1807) from Ancrum, son of Mark. He was related to the Turnbulls of Chesterhill. He was land steward at Menslaws farm. He was an agricultural labourer at Hallrule in 1841. He was recorded at Menslaws in 1851 and 1861. He married Betty Elliot (from Minto) in Cavers in 1832 and their children included: James (b.1833), baptised in Cavers Parish, who was shepherd at Minto Kames; Janet (b.1836), also baptised in Cavers Parish; William (b.1838/9), who emigrated to New Zealand; Mark (b.1844), baptised in Bedrule Parish; Margaret (b.1841); Helen (b.1846); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1849/50); and Ann Bell (b.1853). Mark (b.c.1810) probably son of Mark, farmer at Spittal Mill. In 1841 he was a meal dealer living at Spittal Mill Stable. He could have been the same Mark who in Melrose in 1843 married Margaret Govenlock, daughter of Robert Govenlock (‘Gloomy Wunter’) and Margaret Ruickbie; their children, baptised in Melrose, included Mark (b.1844), Margaret (b.1846) and Elizabeth Helen (b.1849). Mark (b.1862) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. His twin brother was Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh. He farmed at Midburn, where his mother Mary Scott lived with him. Mary (d.1816) recorded dying in Hawick, when she was listed as ‘sister to Andrew Turnbull from Jamaica’. It is unclear who this Andrew might have been or how she was related to other Turnbulls. Mary Shortreed ‘Myra’ nee Sim (1932–2020), J.P., M.B.E., daughter of George and Jessie Sim, she was born in the Haig and bred in the West End. She was entirely educated at Hawick High School and was one of the children who contracted typhoid fever in the 1938 outbreak. She worked in Wilson & Glenny’s office and married local merchant and councillor John F. Following the sudden death of her husband she wound up the Turnbull family business and moved home to the bungalow Coblestanes. She then decided to enter politics herself and was elected to the District Council in 1984, serving for 12 years, including 4 as chairperson. She was Hawick Provost 1988–1996 and was described at the time as ‘the best wumman Provost Hawick has ever had’. Her appointment was not without controversy, however, with her withdrawing her original nomination in 1986, considering Hawick not to be ready, and then getting in unopposed 2 years later. There were some serious hiccups over traditionally all-male events, e.g. she was not invited to attend the annual Callants’ Club dinner and initially not allowed to attend the Common Riding Dinner, despite being Provost. Nevertheless, she was able slowly to break barriers, being the first woman to speak at the Jethart Callants’ Club smoker, the Galashiels Manufacturers’ Association Michaelmas dinner and the Peebles ex-Cornets’ Committee dinner. She was also on the board of Eildon Housing Association for 24 years, stepping down in 2017. She received an M.B.E. in 1996 for her public service. Her children were Barrie (an architect), Deborah (manager at Borders Pet Rescue) and Hamish (who runs a knitwear agency). Matthew (15th C.) tenant in Hassendean. In 1494/5 his sons Nicholas and John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains acting as surety. Maurice made a Director of Pringle’s in 1947. There is a seat to his memory at the 15th tee on the Vertish. Michael (15th/16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh his surety was Patrick in Mackside, and he also served as surety for himself; however, the pair were fined for non-appearance. He is also listed in 1503 among men who were fined (in his case 4 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Michael (17th C.) recorded as witness to a baptism in the Hassendean part of Robertson Parish in 1686. This was for William (who was surely a relative), with the other witness being Thomas. Michael (17th C.) described as ‘victore’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The description is probably an occupation of some sort (perhaps ‘vintner’ or ‘vinturaler’ is meant). Probably the same Michael witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Andrew Porteous in 1684, James Davidson and John Thomson in 1687, Andrew Porteous and Robert Turnbull in 1688 and William Bryson in 1689. Michael (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, who had brothers John and Robert. In 1678 all 3 were involved in a case before the Bailies involving a fight with Robert Brown, whose wife they called ‘witches-gate’, with him responding that ‘their sister was ane of that sort’. He was referred to as a wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the Michael ‘Trumble’ recorded in 1683 when flesher John Briggs was found guilty of insulting him and William Paisley, ‘calling of them two drunken elders’. Probably the same cooper Michael in Hawick was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4.
He is probably the Michael listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was senior Deacon of the hammermen in Hawick. He is probably the cooper who in 1704 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Beattie. In 1709 and 1712 he and Robert witnessed baptisms for cooper John (probably all 3 were brothers). In 1715 there was a dispute between the hammermen and the weavers over seating precedence in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. The Session determined that ‘for his lifetime, [he] should have ye head of ye fore seat of ye loft, conform to ye desire of ye other two hammermen concerned’. To take this prized seat he had to be waiting at the Loft door when it was opened, and was not allowed to pass anyone else on the way to his seat. This right was not to carry on to his descendants. He may be the same Michael who, in 1714, was ‘creat burgess upon the accompt that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple’ (of St. Mary’s). He could be the Michael, son of Robert and Janet Scott, born in Haick in 1645. It seems likely he was the Michael married to Bessie Bridges, whose children baptised in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1672), John (b.1676) and Helen (b.1679). Michael (17th/18th C.) hosier at Appletreehall. He was declared bankrupt in 1704. He had a son John baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Bailie George Michael (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1731 when his daughter Mary was baptised. Michael (18th/19th C.) hosier at Appletreehall. He was declared bankrupt in 1821. Michael (1787–1849) son of William of Burn foot. He inherited the Great Seal of the Turnbulls after his elder brother was effectively disinherited. He married Mary (possibly sister of Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick, who died in 1832), and after her death emigrated to Canada with his 5 children in 1842. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: Margaret Scott (1818–1908): Walter (1821–49); William (b.1822), who died young; Peter Stephenson (1826–89); Mary (1829–80); and William (1828–1901). He died at Woodside in Brantford, Ontario. Michael (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Turnbull marked at No. 31 or around No. 66 on Wood’s map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He could be the same as Michael, son of William of Burnfoot. Michael (d.1894) 3rd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He helped his brother Thomas farm at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). He married Beatrice Nichol (known as a great beauty), sister of his brother John’s wife. He died at the old schoolhouse, Wolfelee. Mrs. ? (19th C.) resident of Kirkton Roadend. She served unofficially as distributor of mail in the district for many years. In 1893 she was presented with ‘a cosy woollen shawl’ by the Rev. John Stuart in recognition of her service to the community. Mungo resident of Fulton who in 1619 was listed among Turnbulls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. He may have been related to Walter, Thomas, Robert and Robert ‘Fendie’ who were also in Fulton. Myra see Mary Shortreed. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1488/9 as witness to an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Most of the other witnesses were local clergymen, and so the same was probably true for him. Nichol (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed (along with mason John) a baptism for fellow mason Peter Mitchell. He is recorded as a witness at Hawick Parish Session in 1718, inquired about whether he saw Andrew Jardine coming out of the Beadle’s house at a very late hour. He was probably related to mason John, who had a son called Nichol baptised in Hawick in 1705. Nichol (d.1840) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Margaret Laidlaw, who died in 1819, aged 56. They had a son Andrew (d.1804), who married Jean Ormiston (d.1838). Nicholas (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King (where his name is ‘Nichol’). Ninian (15th C.) son of William. He is recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he failed to appear and the Thomas, Laird of Bedrule was fined. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Perhaps the same Ninian was also listed in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was among more than 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the charge of murdering Robert Oliver; Adam of Billerwell was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same Ninian, son of

William, recorded in 1494/5. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Mark, Mark’s brother Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David, Andrew, and Andrew’s son Thomas. He was probably related to some of these men. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His lands were referred to as ‘Roule’, which could be the same as Town-o-rule perhaps. Andrew was also listed as a tenant there. Norman (1942–2013) born in Edinburgh, he grew up on a farm and served in the R.A.F. He then ran a garage, before becoming a shepherd in the Hawick area. After retirement he became record-keeper for the Turnbull Clan Association. In 2012 he married Terri Booth. The Clan awarded him their lifetime achievement award in 2014. Norman High School history teacher. He was Acting Father in 1997. He was President of the 1514 Club in 1982, the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1990 and the Callants’ Club in 2007, becoming the first person to have held the chain of office of all 3 clubs. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘Patricio Turnbul’ in 1447 when he witnessed the sasine for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s purchase of the Cousinlands. This was signed in Hawick, so he must have been a local man. His name appears at the end along with John Stoddart, so they may have been the Bailie’s of the time. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Gilbert. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded at Wauchope Tower at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’ for the murder of James Rutherford. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also recorded in 1502 as ‘in Walchope’ (i.e. Wauchope) when he had remission for associating with Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William, son of David Scott of Tushielaw. He was recorded being absent from the indictment when summoned by the sergeant in Jedburgh. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Patricks. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and David. Patrick (16th C.) witness to a Lorraine sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He is listed beside Robert, so they may have been related, as well as possibly related to the Lorraine family. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in the 1538 Exchequer Rolls as occupier of the lands of Wauchopebank and Templehall, which were at that time owned by the Crown. He is probably related to earlier and later Patricks of associated with these same places. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope in Rulewater. He is recorded as ‘Pait Trumbill’ in a 1605 court case. He may be a descendant of the earlier Patrick in Wauchope. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands, along with Walter Scott, recorded in a contract of ‘wad-set’ for the lands in 1612. In 1614 (registered in 1616) he is ‘of Templehall’ of marriage between his daughter Margaret and William, son of John Ainslie, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son Thomas was cautioned, while witnesses were William ‘fiar of Bedrule’ (probably his brother), Robert (possibly his uncle), and George also ‘there’ (in Bedrule or Templehall). (and probably another relative). Along with Walter Scott, he is also recorded as sometimes occupier of Templehall in 1627. He is probably the Patrick who was son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. His children included Thomas and Margaret (who married William Ainslie in 1614). Patrick (16th/17th C.) recorded in Mackside in 1618 when he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam in Abbotrule Townhead. Patrick (17th/18th C.) goldsmith in Edinburgh. In 1704 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh ‘by right of umquil John Turnbull of Minto’. It seems likely he was a younger son of Turnbull of Minto. Patrick (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Anna, daughter of William Douglas. Paul (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehal, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Andrew Turnbull in Hornshole is also listed among others. Percy (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Stonylethe’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1601, when 2 Englishmen accused him of stealing their livestock. He was fined ‘for lack of answer’. ‘Percy’ is not a common Scottish name, and so it is possible that this was an error and he is the same as one of the other Turnbulls associated with Stonedge. Peter (15th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. In 1493 he served as surety for John Waugh, who had remission for stealing sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and for associating with the Duke of Albany. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester who had remission for his involvement in a long list of crimes in 1502. This included the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick, burning and stealing goods from George Rutherford of Longnewton at Barnhill, stealing livestock from John Grahamslaw at 'Camys' (probably Minto Kames) with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’, bringing a party of English to raid from the lands of Robert Lauder at ‘Merch-cluche’ and capturing him for ransom, stealing sheep from George Tait and his tenants at ‘Fichop’, stealing sheep from John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lethanhope’, burning grain and stealing sheep from George Rutherford at ‘Sandystanis’, with the help of John of Minto and others, and for associating with the rebels Mark and John. Adam of Billerwell served as surety. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mackside in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he was surety for Michael in Abbotrule and was fined for his non-appearance. Peter (15th/16th C.) feued the lands of the east steadings of Gildhouse, also called Bailielee in 1510. Peter ‘Pait’ (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as ‘Pait Trumbill called Catle’ on a list of ‘Scotssmen rebels resete within England’. His son ‘Pait’ called ‘Catle younger’ and another son ‘Jame’ are also listed. They presumably came from Catlee near Wauchope. Peter ‘the Monk’ (d.1561) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who were hiding out in England. He is recorded as ‘Peter Trumbill called the Monk’, and he is listed among Turnbulls from Catlee and Cragwood (several of whom were also called Peter). He was hanged for theft and reset, along with William Elliot ‘callit Woddir-nek’ and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear where he came from. Peter Stephenson (1836–1921) 14th son of Thomas Scott of East Middle farm, and direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He was said to have been born at ‘Deneburn’ near Denholm, but his baptism was registered in Kirkton. He studied at Glasgow University, graduating M.D. in 1859, then studying briefly at Edinburgh Medical School before entering the army. He received a medal for serving during the Abyssinian campaign in 1867–68. In 1893 he became Surgeon Major General of the Indian Medical Service in Bombay. He was a fellow of the University of Bombay and Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay. In 1896 he returned to Britain, receiving a good-service pension, and was appointed honorary surgeon to the King. In 1870 he married Mary Oliver, daughter of George Oliver the Hawick solicitor, and she died in 1902. Their children were: Thomas (1871–72); Margaret Lindsay ‘Meta’ (b.1873) who married Maj. W.G. Cooper of the 34th Poona Horse; Mary (b.1874); Evelyn Jane (1875–76); George Oliver (b.1877), who served with the Indian Army; Nora Christian (1879–1974), married Rev. John Robert Paterson Slater of New North Church, Edinburgh; Bruce (b.1880), Lieut. in the 23rd Sikh Pioneers; Hugh Stephenson (b.1882), who became a 2nd-Lieut. in the 57th Rifles; Percy Douglas (b.1886); and Dorothy Lillian (b.1887). He is named on the memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk, which his 4 surviving children had put up in 1955. He is buried in Grange Cemetery in Edinburgh. Many of his letters are incorporated into the book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994). Philip (15th C.) son and heir of Richard of Harden. He inherited the lands in 1448 through a charter by Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. He was probably succeeded by Walter, who resigned the lands to the Lady of the Barony in 1468. Philip (15th C.) son and heir of William of Whithope. He witnessed a charter for ‘Irelandis landis’ in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Probably the same Philip witnessed a document in 1455 attesting that John of St. Michael inherited the lands of Whitchesters from his father. A charter of 1456 from William Douglas of Drumlanrig grants him the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick. He may have been related to the neighbouring contemporary Philip (at Harden). Philip of Whithope (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull for the precept leasing Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott. In 1494/5 Thomas, Junior, Laird of Bedrule, served as surety for his son John (unless there was another contemporary Philip). He also served as surety for his brother, Stephen, who had raided the lands of John and Ninian Murray at Ker -shope. He was probably the Laird of Whithope ‘in Ernheuch’ who was surety for David Craik in 1494/5, who had remission for pillaging from Harthern. In 1500 he had 4 oxen taken from him, appraised and then given to Walter Scott of Branxholme, assignee for the Murrays; since no other goods could be found, he also lost his lands of Whithope to Scott of Branxholme. In 1500 he was witness to the instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting lands from his grandfather. Probably the same Philip is described as ‘in Quhithop’ in 1502 when he and David in Carlinpool had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid the farms of Fastheugh and Hangingshaw; their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonside. He was surely related to David, son of the Laird of Whithope recorded in 1494/5, may have been his son. It also seems likely he was related to the earlier Philip of Harden. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Ralph (d.bef. 1526) recorded in a document of 1526 in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He held part of the lands of Philiphaugh. A third of those lands had been held by Janet Turnbull (perhaps related, or perhaps a first wife) and were in 1526 gained by his widow Margaret Ker. The attorney acting for his wife was Mark Ker (who was probably his brother-in-law). He was probably a descendant of Adam of Philiphaugh. In 1535 Robert declared that he (Ralph) was never given sasine of 10 shillings of rent on a tenement of William in Selkirk (all 3 men possibly related). Also in 1535 he was ‘deceased lord of the said lands of Philiphaugh’ (Philiphaugh is probably meant) when Mark Ker of Kippielaw and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of these lands until his son and heir John came of age. Chaplain Mark was one of the witnesses and may also have been related. His wife was Margaret, sister of Mark Ker of Kippielaw. He was succeeded by his son John (who may have been son of Janet Turnbull), who was a minor (with tutors Robert and Mar Ker of Kippielaw). Richard of Harden (15th C.) recorded in 1431 when he was among a number of witnesses who attested to being at the transfer of the lands of Heap between James Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Buccleuch; John and David are also listed beside him (although with no designation) and so may be related. He was possibly dead by 1448 when his son Philip inherited the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton. This family is probably related to the Turnbulls of Whithope. He may be the same Richard who was listed on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. He may be the Richard, ‘doncel’, from Glasgow Diocese, who in 1408 had Papal permission to marry Alice, widow of Sir Robert Scott; they were already living together and needed dispensation to marry since they were ‘related in the second degree of affinity’. Richard (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and John) and may be the same as Richard of Harden. He is recorded as ‘Ricardus Turnebule’. Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other men are also listed there, and so probably related. Richard (16th C.) listed along with Hector of Clarilaw (so presumably his son or brother), in a pledge made by James Gledstains of that Ilk in 1594/5, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. Richard (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism for William (probably a relative) and Christian Oliver in Roberton Parish in 1688. He may be the Richard whose son William was in Minto in 1718 when he got married. Richard (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for tenant William Sanderson and in 1722 another for merchant Francis Scott. He is recorded in 1722 when he was paid for a joist for the steeple in St. Mary’s Kirk. He married Janet Porteous in Hawick in 1714 and their children included: William (b.1716); Mary (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); Mary (again, b.1721); John (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1726); and Robert (b.1729). The witnesses in 1717 were baker William Hodge and merchant William Tudhope, in 1723 were merchants Adam Elliot and William Tudhope and in 1726 were William ‘Thowdup’ and John Scott. Richard (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiel in 1729 and surely related to Robert, who was there at the same time. He married Helen Turnbull in 1726, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1729), with witnesses James Thomson and William Turnbull. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1729 for George Scott, resident at Wester Burnfoot, and another in 1741 for Andrew Smail.

Richard (18th/19th C.) wright at Stirches. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. William was also listed as a wright there and was surely related. In 1799 he was still at Stirches among those ‘in the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish’ and he was still a wright at Stirches on the 1801 Militia ballot. Sir Richard of Ferniehirst (1908–98), G.C.M.G., career diplomat, son of Richard Francis, who was originally from the Borders. He was educated in London, taking a degree in physical chemistry. He joined the colonial administrative service and was posted to Kenya in 1931. He was Governor of Tanganyika during its hand-over and later Governor of Aden. He married Beatrice Gunn Wilson (1908–86) and they had twin children Alison and Julian, as well as another son. He was known as a wit and raconteur, as well as being an enthusiastic walker and cyclist. He is supposed to have remarked to Denis Healey, then Defense Secretary, that the British Empire would be remembered for only 2 things: ‘the popularization of Association Football and the term ‘f...off’.

He was an Honorary Fellow of University College London and Magdalene College Cambridge. In 1979 he moved to the Borders, settling near Jedburgh. He and his wife are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Robert (15th C.) Presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1431 he was the notary for the ‘letter of transumpt’ for the 1420 charter of half the lands of Branxholme being granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. This letter was made in the church of Cavers. Hence he was probably a local church official. Robert (15th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf from about 1460. In 1440 the Pope revoked the gift to the Bishop of Glasgow and attached the advowson to the Holy See. It was later given to him, and he resigned it back to the Pope in 1480. Robert (15th C.) Abbot of Jedburgh 1476–78. In 1478 he is recorded as witness to a charter granting David Scott rights in Selkirk. Also in 1478 he was involved in a case registered with Parliament involving ‘mails’ on Stewartfield, belonging to the Stewarts. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnb ulls. Robert of Hoscote (15th C.) resigned the lands of Hoscote into the hands of their superior, William Lord Borthwick in 1493/4. They were then conferred upon Alexander, Master of Home. He is referred to as being of ‘Thoscot’. It is unclear how long these lands in the Borthwick valley belonged to his family. Robert of Bradelee (15th C.) resigned his lands of ‘Bradelee’ in the Barony of Hawick into the hands of the superior, William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1479. Presumably this was to have these lands regranted. Either the same Robert, or perhaps his son is recorded in 1498 as being ‘of Bradle’ when he had remission, along with Alexander and John, son of Robert, for communing with Englishmen. He may also be the ‘Rob turnbull in braidele’ recorded in 1503 listed among men who were fined (in his case 6 cows) for failing to attend the Justice- aire in Jedburgh, with Sandy and Sym also listed in the same place (and hence probably related). Robert (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 among some Borderers who were captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. The others were several Elliots and Robert Dalgleish. He may be the same as one of the Roberts who was later declared to be a rebel. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. The previous entry was for Alexander, also in Wolfelee and a later entry was for his son John. Robert (15th C.) recorded being ‘in laris’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His lands may have been Lairhope above Falnash. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing livestock from Blackhope in Eddleston Parish; stealing 2 cows from Shieldgreen; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauder; and common theft. His surety was George, Master of Angus. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing a horse, a dagger and other items from John Smith, with surety being John Murray ‘in the Forest’; he was again described as being ‘in laris’. Robert (15th C.) resident of Wells. He is listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Robert of Mudlaw (15th C.) possibly son of Sir Thomas of Phaup. He is mentioned in the royal pardon for Sir Thomas in 1494/5, whose crimes involved receiving stolen sheep from him and other men, namely John ‘de Newhalburn’, Thomas Newton and Alex Gray; either he or John appear to have been son of Sir Thomas (but the Latin in ambiguous). He is also recorded in the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when he was fined for failure to appear (with Thomas of Phaup listed just after him). His lands were probably near where Moodlaw Loch is, on the boundary between Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire. He is probably also the Robert listed along with Alexander in 1494/5 when Edward Dunn in Phaup had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from them, from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed;
Turnbull Turnbull

Thomas in Phaup was surety for Dunn. Robert (15th C.) recorded as brother to the Laird of Bedrule in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull, ‘Junior’ Laird of Bedrule served as his surety; it is unclear if this means he was brother of Thomas or uncle of Thomas (i.e. brother of George, the elder Laird). Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was tenant ‘in le castel hil de branxame’, i.e. Castlehill near Branxholme. He ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, with his surety being Lord Home. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Wal- ter Rutherford was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing livestock from the Murrays near Ashkirk. In 1502 he was surety for Robert Rutherford in Todlaw, who had been charged with stealing from Jedburgh Kirk, as well as for another case where Rutherford had stolen livestock from several men in Jedburgh and Maxton. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for Alexander, Lord Home, signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls for Ettrick Ward in 1507, when he had an obligation for a payment. He may be the same Robert who was aid for a silver cup in 1513 in association with Yarrow. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1507 as a rebel, along with Simon, when several Dalgleishes (tenants of Braidhaugh) were given remission for associating with them. He was probably from somewhere in the Rule valley. His name is written ‘Roberto Turnebule’. Robert (15th/16th C.) feuded the east stead ing of ‘Warmwood’, also called Langeleckhead in Ettrick in 1510. Either the same Robert or a descendant was tenant in 1541 of the Crown lands of ‘Est Syde of Warnwood, alias Huitralburn’ in Ettrick. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank, listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls and others who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. David is also listed as tenant at Hassendeanbank. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given re- mission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; William and Thomas were also listed there as ten- ants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Probably the same man was also listed among the Borderers who were pardoned in 1526 for their role in marching against the Earl of Arran. Also on the list are his ‘brethir sonnis’ (i.e. nephews) David and George. He was also among the local lairds who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field and at Linlithgow. He was thus presumably a supporter of Scott of Branxholme. Robert of Howden (15th/16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1527 when he renounced his claims of wardship, relief and marriage against James, his cousin in Philiphaugh. This was done in the house of William (who was probably re- lated). In 1528 he quitsclaimed a piece of land in Selkirk called Ladylands and also witnessed doc- uments. He was also recorded in documents in 1528/9 and 1531. He was probably the Robert ‘tutor of Holdene’ who witnessed a transaction between John Scott in Myres and Walter Scott, tutor of Howden. In 1534 he demitted his lands of Howden to George and John Murray. In 1535 he was ‘tutor of Holdene’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Walter Scott of Robertson. Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1536 when he sold parts of Ladylands in Selkirk to James Crawford, to James Minto and to Thomas Forest. He may be the Robert who witnessed a marriage contract for Walter, son of Robert Scott in Howford in 1539. Robert of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as ‘superior lord of Philophauhacht’ when he assigned half of Ladylands to Thomas Forest. He was listed in 1530 as ‘Tutour of Philiphauchae’ when he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep the rievers under better control. In 1531 he was still ‘tutor’ there when Mark Ker gave up any claims to Philiphaugh in his favour. In 1531 he is probably the Robert who formally acknowledged to his grandson John, ‘tutor of the lord of Philophauhacht’, that a tack had been given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was superior of lands in ‘the Ladyland’ in Selkirk that he reigned to James Crawford and Christian Turnbull. He could have been married to Janet and father of John, who was served heir to his mother’s lands of Philiphaugh in 1558. He may be the Robert recorded in 1526/7 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) attesting to a royal letter that he should be in possession of the rents previously held by Janet Hunter, widow of Thomas Turnbull, who lived at Coldingham. He may also have witnessed a baptism in Selkirk in 1527. He could be Robert complaining in 1535 that Ralph was never given sasine of 10 shillings rent for a tenement in Selkirk belonging to William. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1535 when he and Mark Ker of Kippielaw agreed to each hold half of the lands of ‘Philhop’ (although Philiphaugh is surely meant) until their ward John (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; in 1536 he yielded up his half of the wardship. Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction there in 1532/3 and was probably distinct from the tutor of Philiphaugh. Robert (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a Lorraine sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside. Other witnesses were Patrick (possibly a relative) and 2 Lorraines. He could be the same as Robert in Hallrule. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Hutlerburn when he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk for Alexander Scott in 1541/2, Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘incola’ (i.e. resident) in 1563 when he was witness to the transfer of Spittal-on-Rule from Douglas of Cavers to Ker of Primside. Robert ‘Febble Hob’ (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1537 for stealing from Sir Walter Ogilvie of ‘Dunlugus’ at ‘Colbrandispethe’. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. His nickname is listed as ‘Febill Hob’. Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1553. His brother was presumably Sir Thomas of Bedrule and hence he was a younger son of George of Bedrule. He claimed on behalf of Chaplain William Todd, possessor of the lands of ‘Fentoun’ that Andrew Ker of Faldonside was wrongfully keeping his cows on the land. Robert (16th C.) probably farmer at Hobsburn. ‘Robert Turnbullis hous callit the auld hous and yaird thairof’ are listed among the disputed lands in the 1562 Baronial dispute in Feu-Rule. His rig lay at the ‘schadow’, i.e. west side of the lands, adjacent to Hawthornside Wood, and were assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. He may have been father of Walter, who is recorded as Laird there in 1568 and 1574. Robert (16th C.) tenant in ‘Siron Shiel’, i.e. Swanshiel, recorded in 1567 among men charged to appear before the Regent Moray. He was also listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Isobel’s Robin’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as Adam, son to Sandy Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Oliviers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Wauchope in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Kers. Robert of Bewlie (d.1601) son of Walter, he was among the Turnbuls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. His brothers William, Robert, and Andrew were also involved. In 1588/9 John of Minto was cautioner for his father Wat of Bewlie, not to harm his tenants and servants; presumably there was some kind of dispute between father and son. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Andrew and Hector, among Turnbulls and Davaisons, when John Ker of Barnhills complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhills; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. He was murdered in Jedburgh at the same time as John Middlemas (from Lilliesleaf), as well as ‘Henry Davidsoun of Combes’ and others were mutilated. There was a remission for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst (Provost of Jedburgh), Sir James Kerr of Crailing and George Moscrop, for these and other crimes, with many other Kerrs, Ainslies, Robisons and Rutherfords implicated. This was the result of some ongoing feud between the Turnbulls of the Minto area and the Kers of Jedburgh; a gang of about 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh on Fair Day seeking Thomas Ker, brother of the Provost. They eventually killed him and his servant, with John Middlemas also being killed, and many other men being wounded. Several Turnbulls were late convicted and hanged for their involvement, including his brother Andrew. His brother William was appointed tutor for his son Andrew in 1603 and Andrew was served as his heir in 1607. Robert (d.c.1605) tenant in Hallrule and ‘tutor’ of Barhills. He was brother of William in Barnhills, Gavin in Howa and Hector in Stanedge. He is probably the Robert, brother of William of Barnhills (as well as Gavin and Hector) who was listed in 1584/5 among Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was recorded in 1586 as ‘called the tutor of Barnhills’ when he was among Turnbulls and Douglases declared as rebels for the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. His brothers Hector and Gavin were also on the same list. Presumably he was at one point a ‘tutor’ for a Turnbull of Barnhills who was a minor, perhaps Hector, who could have been his nephew. Probably the same Robert ‘of the Barnhill’ was among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England. In 1592 he was listed as ‘Robert Trumbill, sometime tutor of Barnhills’ among a large number of men in a summons of treason. The list was started with Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, and Francis Stewart, sometime Earl of Bothwell (and presumably the rest were their supporters). He is probably the ‘Robert Trumble of Barnhill’ recorded in 1601, along with James Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of Whirriggs, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. In 1606 the Bailies of Hawick apprehended William and George Grahamslaw for his murder.

They were sons of Adam Grahamslaw of Little Newton, and were transferred to the Edinburgh Tolbooth. His widow, children and brothers were accused of trying to ruin the 2 accused, rather than prosecute them. The summons mentions his widow Grizel, as well as his brothers Gavin and Hector, and his eldest son Robert. Robert (16th/17th C.) possibly brother of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was among Turnbulls and others charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. He may be the ‘Robert Turnbull, called Hob of Bedrule’ who was recorded in 1599 as ‘depute and clerk’ to James Douglas of Cavers; the pair were denounced as rebels for failing to turn over the taxes that they had collected. He may also be the clerk of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire who was complained about in 1599 for refusing to register the letters of horning against Thomas Ker of Cavers. This Robert took over as Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire after the death of George Douglas, as recorded in the Ker-Turnbull feud case of 1601. He was depute to the James Douglas of Cavers in 1600 when they were charged to appear before the Privy Council and were Sheriff Depute in 1600 for the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1601 there were further complaints against him, as Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, that he had failed to register some letters of horning against Walter Scott of Goldielands and Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1614 he was witness to the marriage of the daughter of Patrick of Templehall, probably his nephew. Also that year he was probably the Robert in Bedrule who had a bond with Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule. And in 1618 he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. However, some of these entries could be for Sir Thomas’ son Robert (his nephew), with whom he is easily confused. It is probably his son John who is listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’. Robert (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert in Hallrule, with his mother being Grizel. He is recorded in a summons of 1606, in which the family are directed to prosecute the men accused of murdering his father within 15 days, or else they would be released from the Edinburgh Tolbooth. Robert (d.1611) son of David in Mackside. He was convicted and educated in Jedburgh in 1611. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Denesyde. In 1611 he acted as caupon for the appearance of his brother David in court in Jedburgh. Robert

(16th/17th C.) resident of Fulton recorded in 1619 when a group of Turnbuls and others were accused of cutting down wood at Huntliehill. He is listed after Walter and Walter’s son Thomas, but before Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’, all being in Fulton. Robert ‘Fendie’ (16th/17th C.) resident of Fulton who in 1619 is ‘callit Fendie’. He was listed among Turnbuls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. He may have been related to Walter, Thomas and Mungo, who were also in Fulton. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and brother of Walter of Bedrule. In 1586 he was among a list of Turnbuls and Douglasses who were declared as rebels for their part in the murder of 6 men called Grahamswal. In 1592 he is recorded assisting his brother John (at the instigation of their brother Walter of Bedrule) in attacking a servant of James Stewart of Wells in ploughing the fields at Wells; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1618 he witnessed a bond of his brother Walter. In 1619 he was ‘brother german to Walter Turnble of Baderule’ when listed among a group of Turnbuls and others accused of removing hay from Huntliehill; he was one of the few men to appear at the court, and hence not denounced as a rebel. He was witness to a bond of 1620 between Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowlspittle’ (probably his brother) with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichell). Also in 1620 he was probably the Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ whose son Thomas had a bond with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He married Margaret Erskine and their children included John and Thomas. He is difficult to distinguish from his uncle Robert, who lived at a similar time. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Robert (17th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647 and another of 1642, and witness to a sasine of 1654. He was also named in a disposition of 1652. His brother was Thomas, tenant at Harwood. And he must have been related to George and to James. He could be the Robert in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £104, and Thomas also listed there. Robert (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with David, recorded in 1643. Their lands were valued at £66 13s 4d. Robert (d.c.1662) tenant in Swanshiel. His daughter ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served as his heir in 1662. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1643), Michael (b.1645) and Robert (b.1648). He could be the father of weaver Michael (recorded from the 1670s until the 1710s), who also had brothers Robert and William, as well as a sister. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Leyden and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1654. The witnesses were John Scott and Walter Purdom. Robert (17th C.) son of John of Minto. His father was already deceased in 1651 when he became an apprentice merchant with John Mowbray in Edinburgh. Robert (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to William, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. Robert (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Horslie’ when his will was recorded in 1682. These are probably the lands in the Slitrig valley. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part that was Hassendean. He married Agnes Renwick and their children included Agnes (b.1689). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Roberton in 1681, another for William in 1686, one for William Scott and Bessie (who may have been related) in 1687, one for George Hood in 1687 and one for John Renwick in Horsleyhill in 1688. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rosie Oliver and their children included Janet (b.1681); Robert (b.1683); and Walter (b.1685). The witnesses in 1683 were William Paisley and Walter Oliver (who was probably related) in 1687, one for George Hood in 1688 as his heir in 1662. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1643), Michael (b.1645) and Robert (b.1648). He could be the father of weaver Michael (recorded from the 1670s until the 1710s), who also had brothers Robert and William, as well as a sister. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Leyden and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1654. The witnesses were John Scott and Walter Purdom. Robert (17th C.) son of John of Minto. His father was already deceased in 1651 when he became an apprentice merchant with John Mowbray in Edinburgh. Robert (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to William, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. Robert (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Horslie’ when his will was recorded in 1682. These are probably the lands in the Slitrig valley. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part that was Hassendean. He married Agnes Renwick and their children included Agnes (b.1689). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Roberton in 1681, another for William in 1686, one for William Scott and Bessie (who may have been related) in 1687, one for George Hood in 1687 and one for John Renwick in Horsleyhill in 1688. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rosie Oliver and their children included Janet (b.1681); Robert (b.1683); and Walter (b.1685). The witnesses in 1683 were William Paisley and Walter Oliver (who was probably related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Repertslaw’ in a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism; this was probably Raperlaw. His name is given in another version of the record as ‘Thomas’. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Birkihil in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to Walter, who was tenant there. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Cockerheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He may have been son of Thomas, who was at Cockerheugh about Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Rathie and their children included: Isabel (b.1688); Jean (b.1691); and Helen (b.1694). His wife’s name is ‘Margaret’ in 1691, when the witnesses were William Easton and James Veitch. The witnesses in 1694 were James and William Dunlop (who lived at Birkwood). Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the same Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1712 he appears to have been the first person to be allowed to plan for the erection of a ‘through-stone’ over his grave in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. This followed the reading of an Act of 1708. He was allowed permission, but asked to contribute to the poor box. He may be the same weaver who was recorded in a Sasine of 1687 disposing a West End tenement to his wife Helen Paisley, and whose daughter Isobel was born in 1688 (with witnesses Robert Allan and Michael Turnbull). He may be the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Paisley in 1700. Robert (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, brother of Michael and John. In 1678 all 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies. In 1708 he is described as ‘couper’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger. In 1709 and 1712 he and Michael witnessed baptisms for cooper John (probably all 3 were brothers). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Appletreehall in 1711 when his son James was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in ‘Falsecastle’ (presumably Fastcastle) in 1718 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. He married Janet Donaldson in 1710. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1719); James (b.1722); and Janet (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Paterson and James Johnstone. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the ‘younger weaver in ye Howgate bewest ye water in Hawick’ recorded in a baptismal record of 1708, and hence son of the older Robert; the child was called William, and the witnesses were cooper Robert Turnbull and Andrew Riddell, tenant in Goldielands. He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Porteous in 1713. He may also be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid in 1713 and another in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother of the Laird of Whitslade. He was also ‘younger weaver in Hawick’ in 1716. In 1717 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for butcher Robert Hardie in 1723. He married Margaret Elliot (perhaps the Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, who married a Robert in Hawick in 1707). Their children included: William (b.1708); Helen (b.1710); Agnes (b.1712); Robert (b.1714); Margaret (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Isobel (b.1725); and Michael (b.1727). The witnesses in 1712 were weavers Robert Tinlin and William Swan, in 1716 were Bailie Robert Rucastle and shoemaker Robert Elliot, and in 1725 were carrier James Simpson and tailor Thomas Wilkie. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Woollee Mill’, i.e. Wolfelee Mill. His wife Elizabeth Lillie died in 1719. His gravestone appeared to say that he died in 1622, but this must be an error. According to Tancred his children included: Isabel (b.1718); Janet (b.1719); Thomas; and William. He may be confused with the Robert who was miller at Woollee Mill 3 decades later. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiel in 1729 and surely related to Richard, who was there at the same time. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Stewart, resident of Midshiel. He married Elspeth Douglas and their children included Margaret (b.1729) and John (b.1738). The witnesses in 1729 were Andrew Stewart and William Douglas (who was surely related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Christian Turnbull and their children included James (b.1726) and Isobel (b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were masons John and Andrew Turnbull. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Isobel Kedie. Their children included: John (b.1737); Janet (b.1738); Isobel (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1741). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1722 when his son William was baptised and in 1730 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. There are several other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1726. Robert (18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. He could be the gardener recorded at Whitriggs in 1727 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1733 and 1736 he was living at Midshiel. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism (along with James Douglas) for... merchant Robert Taylor and Margaret Douglas (probably related to his wife). His wife was Euphane Douglas and their children included: Margaret (b.1729) Janet (b.1731), Helen (b.1733) and Charles (b.1736), baptised in Wilton; and Robert (b.1743) and and George (b.1745), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1733 were James Dryden and Andrew Douglas (perhaps related to his wife), in 1736 were John and James Dryden and in 1743 were merchants Robert Taylor and James Douglas (who was probably related to his wife).

Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Kersel and their children included: Adam (b.1760); John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); and James (b.1768). The baptism in 1768 was witnessed by the ‘whole congregation’. Probably the same weaver Robert witnessed a baptism in 1761 and another in 1766 for James Taylor. He was already deceased in 1803 when his wife died. Robert of Standhill (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may be the ‘Captain Turnbull Standhill’ listed in the Window Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in 1748. In 1737 his daughter Ann became the 2nd wife of Andrew Bennet of Chesters. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Standhill. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Elspeth (b.1753); James (b.1755); and Robert (b.1757). Robert (18th C.) recorded at Whitcleguhside in 1761 when his son Archibald was baptised in Roberton Parish and at Mabonlaw in 1763 and 1766 when his sons William and John were baptised. Other children baptised at a similar time to a Robert include Walter (b.1759) and Robert and Janet (b.1768). Robert (d.1766) miller at Woollee Mill and Hartshaugh Mill (and possible Hallrule Mill). He was at Woollee Mill in 1737 and 1739, when 2 of his children were baptised and still there in 1751 when 4 of his children’s baptisms were recorded together. Probably the same Robert was miller at Hartshaugh Mill in 1753 and 1758. He married Helen and their children included: Robert (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Isabel (b.1748); Janet (b.1749); Thomas (b.1750), who was miller at Southdean Mill, along with his brother Walter and another Robert; William (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); and Helen (b.1758). In 1774, by which time he was deceased, his widow rented the farm of Doorpool. He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. It is possible he was married twice (given the gap in births). Robert (1738/9–99) blacksmith at Gillbraehead. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1797. aged 55. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery along with 5 of their children and Elspeth (1760/1–1833). Thomas (1770/1–1854), also blacksmith at Gillbraehead, was probably his son, as well as William (1777/8–1851), who married Isabella Young. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Easton in 1761 and their children included: Margaret (b.1762); Betty (b.1765); and Robert (b.1768). Robert (18th C.) miller at Southdean Mill. In 1773 his co-tenants William and Robert were cautioners for the rental of Doorpool by Helen Turnbull, their mother, who was widow of Robert, miller at Hallrule Mill. It seems likely that the 2 Roberts were related to each other. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Hallrule Mill. He was married to Tibbie Donaldson, and their son John was said to have been prone to fighting at local fairs. It is unclear how he might have been related to the miller who died in 1766. He may be the same Robert who was recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His son Robert junior was recorded at Hallrule Mill in 1799 and his sons Robert and John in 1801. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Shillinglaw and their children included: John (b.1764); and William (b.1767). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Ker and their children included: Ann (b.1775); and John (b.1777). Robert (18th C.) married Janet Rutherford in Roberton Parish in 1771. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope Mill in 1780 when his son John was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Elliot and their children included: John (b.1782), Isabel (b.1784), Walter (b.1786), Samuel (b.1790) and Robert (b.1795). Robert (18th C.) farm labourer in the late 1700s. He is recorded planting trees at Whitchesters in 1790–91, cutting the foundation for a dyke in upper Teviotdale in 1792 and quar- ring stones for a dyke in Liddesdale about 1793. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott. Robert (d.bef. 1809) mason on the Cross Wynd. His daughter Margaret died in 1809. He could be the workman Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Johnston in 1784. Robert (b.1765) 3rd son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He purchased Galalaw, just outside Hawick, probably from Robert Pott around 1815. In 1821 he was a witness to the birth of William Turnbull to James (his brother) and Mary Stavert. He is listed as ‘Turnbull, R. Esq. Gallawlaw’ in 1821 on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Wood’s 1824 map shows him as owner of a piece of land at Dowmount. He may be the Laird of Galalaw who acquired a part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. Elizabeth, a widow (aged 83) recorded at Galalaw in 1851 may have been his wife and Robert who farmed at Galalaw in the early-to-mid 19th century was probably his son. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer in Roughley on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He loaned money to Alexander Anderson (who purchased Hobkirk Kirkstile in 1807). He may have been father of James, who was recorded as a servant at Roughley in 1799. Perhaps the same Robert from Roughley was listed as one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation ‘Serving’ suggests that he was already serving and his name appears again in 1798. He is also recorded in 1798, volunteering as substitute for Ebenezer Scott, weaver at Burnflat and was explicitly said to ‘have joined the Regiment’; his status as a serving soldier was confirmed in the 1799 list. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1796 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (b.1798) was probably also his child. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Hill in Lilliesleaf Parish, listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Probably the same Robert paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91. His son John was listed on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. Robert (1755/6–1832) weaver in Hawick. He is buried in St. Mary’s, along with his siblings John (1762/3–1841), James (d.1846) and Janet (who died aged 84). Robert (1756/7–1847) shoemaker on the Loan. He could be the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Riddell, born in Wilton in 1757. He is probably the man known as ‘Auld Springkie’. He could be the ‘R. Turnbull’ whose property is shown in the middle of the west side of the Howegate in Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living at about 21 Loan with his wife Mary, together with Margaret and Robert, probably their children. In 1789 he married Mary Laidlaw, and she died in 1848, aged 86. Their children included: Janet (1789–1821); Margaret (b.1793); James (b.1798), ‘Jimmie Springkie’; Mary (1805–1817); and Robert (1805/6–47). The witnesses in 1789 were shoemakers Robert Oliver and Adam Kersel. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, including his grandson Robert Sibbald (d.1840) and Martha Blyth (d.1826), wife of shoemaker James Turnbull. He could also be the shoemaker Turnbull whose son James was born in the 1770s (with the entry hard to read). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hallrule Mill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was recorded as ‘junior’ and was probably son of the Robert who was tenant at Hallrule Mill in 1797. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was explicitly recorded as son to Robert and brother of John. He is probably the Robert in Hallrule Mill whose children included: Robert (b.1804); John (b.1807); Isobel (b.1809); and Elizabeth (b.1811). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Blackcleuch according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Deomainholm according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. Robert (b.c.1780) resident of Troneyhill according to the ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish in 1801. He was ‘Apprentice no Indenture’. Robert (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman, in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1811. In 1815 he (along with his wife) witnessed a baptism for David Hill and his wife Elizabeth Scott. He married Ann Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: George (b.1821); Robert (b.1827); James (b.1829); John (b.1834); and Elizabeth (b.1840). Robert (18th/19th C.) saddler in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1775) tailor in Lilliesleaf, according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He is recorded as tailor in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the south side of Main Street with Jean, probably his wife. He may be the same as the saddler recorded in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Barnes according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Nelly Dickson and their son James (b.1809) was baptised in East Bank Kirk. Robert (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick. Robert & Son is listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert ‘Robbie’ (d.1838) innkeeper at Bridgend, in Hobkirk Parish in the early 1800s. He was also a joiner in the late 1700s, the house there being rebuilt as a joiner’s shop, but turned into a pub. He married Jane Chisholme, whose sister Bella married Walter Amos. His son John was a grocer.

in the same building. He also had a daughter Betty, who took over as postmaster from her brother, and also kept the public house after his death. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same Robert who was a flesher on the Howegate on the 1841 census, married to Isabel and with children Elizabeth, John and William. Robert (b.1779/80) stockmaker in Denholm. He may be the Robert, resident of Denholm, who was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. In 1841 he was probably living on Westgate, with his wife, son, 2 younger Turnbulls (Robert and Andrew) and grand-daughter Agnes Scott (probably orphaned daughter of Robert Scott and Helen Turnbull). In 1851 he was still at Westgate with his wife and grand-daughter Agnes Scott. He married Agnes Oliver, who was from Newcastle-on-Tyne and their children included Ebenezer (b.1821). Robert (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area married to Margaret Gillies. Their son James (b.1825) was baptised in East Bank Kirk 1799. Robert (1802–73) married Margaret Lillico in Wilton in 1825. Their children included: James (b.1825), baptised in Wilton; Agnes (b.1832) and Lizzie (b.1834), baptised in Yarrow; Maggie (1839–1905), Esther (b.1841), Ellen (b.1841) and Jean (b.1842), born somewhere in Scotland; and Jane (b.1845) and Mary (b.1849), born in Ontario, Canada. The family emigrated to Canada, settling in North Dumfries Township, Ontario. His wife died in 1864, aged 60 and they are buried in Mount View Cemetery, Waterloo, Ontario. Robert (b.1800/1) farmer at Galalaw, probably son of Robert. He was listed among the heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 150 acres and employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was listed as proprietor and farmer of 200 acres, employing 4 people. He was still recorded at Galalaw in 1868 and listed as owner on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Agnes Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1863. Their children included: Margaret (b.1832) and Robert (b.1834), who probably died young; James (b.1836), who was probably the later farmer at Galalaw; John (b.1838); John (again, b.1839); Margaret Scott (b.1841); Robert (b.1842); Thomas (b.1846); and Andrew Anderson (b.1848). Bailie Robert (b.c.1785) Magistrate of the mid-19th century, who was known as a tenor singer. He may have been the same Robert described as ‘Officer’ for the Excise Office in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk. He is listed in the 1841 census as a farmer on the Cross Wynd. He married Ann Mathison, and their children included: Ann Scott (b.1808); Elizabeth (b.1812); and James (b.1814), who was a draper. He is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (19th C.) married Elizabeth Baptie in Wilton in 1836. Robert (b.c.1815) blacksmith at Stiches Croft in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Christian and Andrew. He may have been related to Walter, who was joiner there at the same time. Robert (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Christian Lamb and their son Robert Lamb was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1853. Robert Laidlaw (1830–74) son of William and Margaret Scott, he was from the Merrylaw family, and presumably named after the proprietor of Falnash. He attended St. Andrews University 1847–9. He was recorded as farmer at Falnash in 1868. He was owner of Merrylaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1867 he married Apalina Christina Hogarth, daughter of Alexander Pott in Teviothead Parish in 1867. Their children included: Apalina Margaret Scott (b.1869); William Laidlaw (b.1870); Jean Elliot (b.1871); and Alexander Pott (b.1872). He died aged 44. Robert (1832–97) son of James, forester in Cavers. He was a tailor and clothier in Denholm. In 1859 he married Margaret (1833–96), daughter of Robert Scott, farmer and Elizabeth Wilson. Their children were: Robert Scott (b.1860); James (b.1862); David Wilson (b.1866); John Weir (b.1870); Elizabeth Wilson (b.1874), who died young; Thomas Mungo (b.1876), also died young; Thomas Mungo (again, b.1878); and Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), died young. The first 2 children were born at Todlaw. He and his wife are buried in Denholm Cemetery. Robert Dempster (1838–93) son of Thomas Scott. He lived at Deneburn in Denholm. He helped Rev. Duncan Stewart in his researches for his book ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale’. He was buried at Bedrule. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was descended from the Charterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd and then a farmer. In 1886 he married Isabella Gutterson, whose father had been a servant of Athol Hay. They had a son James, and 3 daughters. Robert (19th/20th C.) Bailie of Hawick. He was on the Council 1890–1900.
Robert (1864–1932) gamekeeper at Arden Hall in Yorkshire, he was tenant farmer at Weensmoor around 1910. He married Isabel Gotterson and their children were Jim, Cecilia and Tib. Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) born in Hawick, son of schoolmaster Adam and Helen Paterson. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He served as a Lieutenant in the Black Watch and the Royal Fusiliers. He was licensed to preach in 1915, was then assistant at the Tron Church in Edinburgh and also in Hawick from 1919. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1921. He married Catherine Russell, daughter of Joseph Strang. Their children were: Helen Blair Paterson (b.1920); Katherine Margaret Strang (b.1922); Dorothy Annie Wilson (b.1925); Evelyn Josephine Cathels (b.1929); and Adam Michael Gordon (b.1933). Roland (d.bef. 1503) resident of Edinburgh. In 1476 he and his wife Peronell summoned Henry Liberton to appear before the Lords Auditors over a claim for rental on a tenement in Edinburgh. In 1503 he was already deceased when his tenement in Edinburgh was recorded in another transaction. Another Roland was witness to a document in Edinburgh in 1503, and may have been related. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Roland (15th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Thomas had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; their surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Ronald (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as ‘Ranald’. Adam of Philiphaugh presented him to the court in Selkirk as suitor for his lands of Philiphaugh. Simon (14th C.) resident of Berwick-on-Tweed recorded in 1333. His surname was written ‘Turnebulle’. The existence of men of this name in the early 1300s belies the traditional story of the surname’s origin. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Clarilaw. In 1493 he had remission for associating with the ‘rebels of Leven’ (i.e. Englishmen). His surety was George of Hallrule. Simon ‘Sim’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as ‘sym turnbail in braille’, his farm probably being the one in the Borthwick valley (although those near Ashkirk and in the Hermitage valley are also possible). He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 3 cows) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with Sandy and Rob also listed in the same place (and hence probably related). Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Simone Turnbule’ in 1507. Several Dalgleishes of Braidhaugh (probably in Rulewater) received remission for receiving and communing with him and others. Robert Turnbull was also mentioned, and so presumably a relative. They must have been declared rebels for some rieving activity. He and Robert were also recorded in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was hanged for associating with them. And in 1510 John Dalgleish was convicted of several crimes including ‘inter-communing with Symon Turnbull and his accomplices, Englishmen’. Simon (16th C.) holder of the lands of Chamberlain Newton according to a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to ‘non-entries’ and other fees of the local Scotts. He is there described as the ‘grantor’s servant’ (i.e. servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell). Stephen (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, John and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Stephanus Turnebule’. Stephen (15th/16th C.) brother of Philip of Whithope. He was recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Stephanus turnbule frater domini quhithop’ when he had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the plundering and burning of Kershope, stealing 80 cows and slaughtering John Murray; his brother the Laird of Whithope served as his surety. In 1500 Philip was assessed for payment due to Murray, with 4 oxen being taken, appraised and given to Walter Scott of Branxholme. Where he himself lived is not recorded. Stephen (16th C.) son of Watt in Howa and hence brother of Archibald in Howa. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Stephen (d.c.1590) recorded as ‘of Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590 when he was succeeded by his son Adam. The family possessed the right of rental of the lands, which were still owned by the Homes of Wedderburn. He may have been son of the previous Adam. Stephen (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Appothsyd’ when he witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Stephen (17th C.) became an elder of Bedrule Parish in 1691 and was probably connected directly with the Turnbulls of Bedrule through his grandfather, who was also Stephen. He may be the ‘Stephan’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Stephen (17th C.) tenant in Minto Cleuchhead. In 1692 he represented Isobel Wright, widow of Robert Paterson, in a discharge in Selkirk. Stephen (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1703 when the Parish Session collected money for ‘his numerous family of motherless children’. He was called to the Session as a witness, but could not attend because ‘the water was not passable’. Thomas (14th C.) witness in 1390 to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. His designation is not given, but other Turnbulls listed were Adam of Whithope and Adam of Fulton. Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the ‘borowis’ for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document of 1398. Thomas (15th C.) Clerk from Scotland. He was recorded in 1440 when he had a passport of safe conduct in England for 4 years, along with William Crozier, Archdeacon of Teviotdale and others. Thomas (15th C.) soldier who fought in France for England. In 1459/60 he had a warrant from the English Chancellor of payment for his good service in Calais and at ‘Guysnes’, where he lost his horse, his armour and all his equipment. He was granted the customs of the road between Calais and ‘Guysnes’ for 20 years. Thomas of Penchrise (15th C.) recorded in 1464/5 as witness to the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1471 as being ‘of Faulysh’, which could be ‘Falnash’, but seems more likely to be the same as ‘Fawlishope’ (as recorded the following year). He was ordered to pay 3 year’s worth of taxes for the lands of Chamberlain Newton pertaining to Lord Lindsay, but failed to appear. He is probably related to the John who was connected with Stouslie (in the same Barony) in 1468. Sir Thomas of Greenwood and the Lyne (15th C.) had a sasine for the lands of Greenwood in 1461. He leased the lands of Greenwood and the Lyne, in the Barony of Minto, to Robert, son of David Scott of Buccleuch in 1488. This corresponds to the modern Girnwood. He kept 1 acre of the lands of Greenwood and 1 acre of the lands of Lyne, both in the north part, presumably for himself. He is probably son or grandson of the Adam who was granted Greenwood (or Girnwood) in 1439. In 1488 he also had a charter from James III for the lands of ‘Trarizingane’ in Ayrshire; this was for his service to the King at Blackness. He is also recorded resigning the same lands to Alexander, Lord Home in a charter of 1492/3. He may have been part of the family of the Turnbells of Minto, who sold the lands about half a century later. He is probably the Sir Thomas who witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton in 1494/5. He may be the Thomas of ‘Grynwald’ who in 1462 witnessed the copying of a discharge made a few years earlier between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. He may be the Thomas who gave a pledge for James Rutherford in 1471. He may also be the Thomas who received an annuity from the English authorities in 1489 and 1491. Thomas of Stouslie (15th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is surely related to the Andrew of Stouslie who is recorded in 1490. Andrew Turnbull of Hawick was also a witness to the same sasine, and so probably related. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘in Gaithous cot’ in 1493 when he had remission for being at the Boroughmuir of Edinburgh with the Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing sheep and a horse from John Sinclair in Lauderdale, with George in Hallrule acting as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. In 1502 he and his brother John in Gatehousecote were fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Thomas, tenant at Gatehousecote, was listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Patrick and David. Sir Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when the lease of ‘Faulishope’ was granted to him without ‘grassum’, and granted to him again in 1492. He may also be the Thomas who received an annuity from the English authorities in 1489 and 1491. He is also recorded in 1494/5 when he had a precept from King James IV for any crimes he might be accused of committing before the King’s coronation seven years earlier. It is unclear whether he was a Turnbull of Bedrule or from another branch; however it is possible that he was the same man as Thomas of Bedrule. He is recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’, which seems likely to be Phaup near the head of the Ettrick (although it could be Fauldshope further down the Ettrick). The crimes included stealing many sheep, cattle and horses from Patrick Murray at ‘Skaddamness’ (probably Scadow Ness or Rig) and Lewenshope, and stealing from David and George Tait ‘de Pryn’ (i.e. Pirn, near Stow), John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lechtanchop’ and John Scott at ‘Glensax’, as well as resetting Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ and John of ‘Newhalburn’; one of these Turnbells was his son (the Latin making it unclear which one is meant). His son and heir John leased the lands of Phaup in the period 1483–87 and Huntly in 1486. In 1494/5 he was surety for Edward Dunn in Phaup, who had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from Alexander and Robert Turnbull (who may have been his sons or other near relatives) from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed. In 1495 he was recorded as a controller of some sort for the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest. In 1499 and 1501 half of the lands of ‘Fauldishop’ in Ettrick were let to his wife, Janet Scott. In 1471 probably the same ‘Thomas Turnebull of Fawlishope’ was ordered to repay Thomas ‘Folkert’ for 2 sacks of wool. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Roland had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; his surety was the Laird of Bedrule. He was also recorded in 1494/5, when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. He is also listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls among a group of Turnbulls and others whose fines were remitted; ‘Thome Turnbull junioris’, listed before him may have been his son. He may be the same Thomas, son of James in Fulton, who served as surety for himself in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. Thomas of Bedrule (15th/16th C.) son and heir of George Turnbull. It is possible he is the same man as the Sir Thomas who was tenant in Phaup in Selkirkshire (and fined at the Justice- aire in Selkirk in 1494/5). In 1493 Peter, ‘filio domini thome militis’, served as surety at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; this suggests that Sir Thomas was indeed the Turnbull Laird (although ‘Bedrule’ is not explicitly mentioned). He is probably the Laird of Bedrule also recorded in the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493, when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for ensuring that he and his attendants would not harm James Dunn in Jedburgh (suggesting some sort of feud). He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety for David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick in 1494/5. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety (along with William Langlands) for John Sinclair in Minto, John in Ruecastle and the Turnbulls in Fulton in 1493, as well as for Gilbert Shiel in Minto in 1494/5. In 1494/5 he was also ‘Junior dominus de Bethroull’ when he served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing at the Justice- aire; the ‘Junior’ appellation suggests that his father was still alive, but that he was serving as the effective chief of the Turnbulls. In 1494/5 he additionally served as surety for: John, son of Philip; Ninian, son of William; and Robert, brother of the Laird of Bedrule (who was therefore presumably either his brother or uncle). He was recorded in 1501 when a fine of £40 imposed on 6 Turnbulls was granted to him. He was also recorded in 1502 as being ‘of Bethroull’ when he was one of about 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Ralph Ker in Greenhead was fined for failing to enter him in the court, and was fined £100 (considerably more than for the other men, indicative of his standing). His brother William was also listed, as well as Andrew in Bedrule, who may have been related. Additionally he was fined for failing to produce John in Ruecastle to answer for the same crime. He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule whose brother David was recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502, with Andrew in Bedrule as his surety. Also in 1502 he was surety, along with several other Turnbull chiefs, for Margaret in Hawick, who was convicted of theft and resetting thieves. He had a sasine for the lands of Bedrule in 1502 and is probably the Laird who served as surety for Robert Shiel in Bedrule in that year. He is recorded as joint surety along with David of Wauchope, William of Minto and Bartholomew in Belses, to enter Andrew at the Justice- aire in Selkirk in 1505; the 4 men signed a bond to this effect at Caerlenrig in 1505. He may have been son of George of Bedrule, who is recorded about a generation earlier, and must have been related to the George of Bedrule who is recorded in the next decade. He is probably the same Thomas, son and heir of George, who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 and perhaps 1528. He is probably the Laird of Bedrule from whom 10 sheep were stolen by the Olivers in Strange before 1502. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘junior’ in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted. Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester were also listed, and so he was probably from this area, and from his name was likely to have been son of another Thomas. Thomas in Fulton is listed directly after him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, this probably being Langhaugh in the Rule valley. George, Master of Angus served as surety for him in his non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; Robert and William were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Thomas (d.bef. 1535) tenant in Town-of-Rule. Along with ‘Andree alias Dauid’ he was recorded in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused (but found not guilty) of their cruel murder. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when accused of having been on a raid into England. He and George Rutherford, along with 100 other men were said to be responsible for the deaths of John Routledge and Robert Noble. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Sir Thomas of Bedrule (c.1520–c.87) son of George. In 1528 there was a gift of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his late father’s lands, to Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme. Included in the gift was the right to arrange his marriage, since he was then still a minor. He may be the ‘Trumble of Bedroule’ who was listed among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds in 1545. In 1550/1 he gave a ‘precept of clare constat’ involving Robert Scott, heir of Adam Scott in the lands of Little Drinkstone. He signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1553 his brother Robert is recorded in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was either William of Hassendean Kirk or George of the Toor. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Bransholme etc. by Sir Walter Scott. There was a complaint against ‘the molestations’ committed by him and George in Hallrule, made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, and he had to appear to answer these charges (the resolution is unrecorded, however). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 Sir John Stewart of Traquair was surety for him to answer to an accusation of stealing 3 horses from Lord Gray. He was recorded as ‘tacksman’ of Abbotrule in 1562. In 1563, along with the parishioners of Bedrule he brought an action against Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, William Kerr (the Parson) and Sir John Allan, demanding that they produce the proof that they had the rights to the benefices of Bedrule; Kerr won the legal battle in 1564. There is a ‘certificate of relaxation’ for the teinds of Bedrule between him and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564/5, and a bond between them in the same year. Also in 1564 he was listed as ‘The Lard of Badrewll’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He was recorded as being at Mary Queen of Scots’ wedding to Darnley in 1566. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He had a bond of 1567 with the Warden, Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to present ‘Rengen Foster called Can’. A few years afterwards he assisted in stopping the Regent Moray from seizing the Crown. He later supported the Regent Morton, along with the Rutherfords, but against the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress the thieves on the Border. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Along with his sons Walter and Thomas he was put to ‘escheat’ as a perjured rebel at one point. Additionally in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was surety for him, while he was surety for Adie Elliot ‘of the Cowdais’ and John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane around the 1570s. In 1571/2 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers as well as for Andrew Hall of ‘the Sykis’ and some Robsons of Hownam. Also in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572 there was a complaint that he and other lairds had reset 2 men named Hall (from either Oxnam, Jed or Rule Water), who had stolen 140 cattle from over the Border. In 1572/3 he was cautioned (along with Richard Rutherford of Edgerston) for several men from Southdean. Also in 1572/3 he was surety for William, Burgess of Edinburgh (who was thus probably a close relative). In 1573 he (and his son and heir William, and other son Walter) were among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1574 he signed a bond of service with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus, along with his son Walter, John of Minto, George of Hallrule, William of Barnhills and others. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum; also on his side were his son Walter, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chesters. Also in 1576 he was cautioned for the Turnbulls of Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Belses in their bond not to harm other Turnbulls. In about 1578 (perhaps earlier) he signed a bond with other Turnbulls and Rutherfords, and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1577/8 his sons Thomas and Walter were acquitted of the murder of John Forbes. He was also one of the 'curators' of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1576 he was a cautioner for some Borderers who were accused of rieving, and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (in his case as pledge for Adam of Over Hassendean and also Sim Armstrong). He was then declared to be liable for the fines, or the amounts would be made from his 'movabill guidis and geir, and, failyeing of thair movabill guidis, to appryse thair landis'. However, he appeared personally, and was let off, provided that the Davidson for whom he stood as caution appeared before the Justice Court of Roxburgh. Also in 1578/9 John Johnstone of that Ilk was caution for his appearance, as well as his sons Walter and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine; this was for the slaughter of 'Thomas Schevill'. Also in 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Douglas of Bonjedward) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also another agreement between him and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward. Kinmont Willie Armstrong appeared before the Privy Council in 1579 because of a feud between their families, and also Christie Armstrong of Barnbies, for the same reason. In 1579 his sons Walter and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England; also listed were 'Hobbat Hall and Mekie Hall, banished Englishmen, and servants to the Laird of Beddroule'. In 1580 he is listed as head of a group of Turnbulls who were bound over to keep the peace with John Turnbull of Minto and his followers; his group included his son Walter, as well as William of Barnhills and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood. Also in 1580 he was ordered along with John of Minto and Wat of Bewlie, to enter wards in Edinburgh Castle or be declared a rebel; later he was said to have disobeyed and was denounced as a rebel. In 1581 he was cautioned for men of the Jedburgh area and was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In about 1583 he lost the liferent of his lands of Bedrule to Robert Ker, younger of Woodhead. He was denounced in 1583/4 for not appearing before the Privy Council; he and his sons Walter and Thomas were denounced as rebels for taking 'the cumpany of utheris thevis and rebellis, intending to continew in thift and oppressioun'. He was also the Laird of Bedrule whose sons are mentioned in a letter by the King in 1584 'for ane attemptat committ be thame at Preswen in England' for which they were found guilty. In about 1584 he lost his position as one of the tutors to his niece Margaret (daughter and heiress of William), since he had been declared a rebel. He was probably the Laird of Bedrule referred to in 1584/5 when his son Robert was one of the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. In 1585/6 it was mentioned in a case before the Privy Council that the Bailies of Jedburgh blamed him and his associates for the murder of George and Harry Grahamshaw. In 1586 there was a promise by William Douglas of Cavers and George Douglas of Bonjedward that when he and his sons Thomas and Wat were released from jail in Edinburgh Castle that the Douglas would present them again to the Privy Council if required. He is probably the 'lard of Bedroule' listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He is also recorded in 1587 representing Archibald in Howa, acting as surety for David in Jedburgh, and when Robert Scott of Haining was cautioner for him 'and those for whom he is bound'. He must therefore have still been alive then. He married Mary Ker and secondly Janet Turnbull, widow of Philip Bennet of Chesters. A marriage contract of 1542 also exists between him and Margaret, daughter of George Home of Spott. He had at least 10 children: William, who probably pre-deceased him; Walter of Fulton, who succeeded to Bedrule; Thomas, probably tenant at Spittal-on-Rule; Robert, recorded in 1586 and 1592; Margaret, who married Edward Lorraine, this union apparently being unpopular with the Rulewater Turnbulls; Patrick, probably tenant at Templehall; Mark, tenant at Hartshaugh; James; Hector, who owned Hartshaugh and Swanshiel, although this may be a confusion with the son of Thomas of Hartshaugh; and John, recorded in 1592. Another daughter Agnes is recorded in an undated marriage contract with Robert, son of deceased Robert Scott of Raesknowe. Although some genealogies have him dying in 1572, it seems this is wrong (or else 2 Thomases are hopelessly confounded). Thomas (16th C.) recorded in

1553 being ‘in Rauflat’ (i.e. Rawflat) when Robert Stewart, on behalf of William Turnbull, delivered an old reversion relating to him. He is described as being ‘in Rawflat’ in a court case of 1540 when he disputed a ‘wadset’ with William Scott of Hassendean. Another case heard at the same time involved a marriage contract of 1536 between his son and heir George and Elizabeth, eldest daughter and heir of the same William Scott. Curiously in 1538 he had remission for the crime of stealing letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendean in Nicholas Rutherford’s house in Edinburgh. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘in the Tronyhill’ in a charter of 1536, where William Scott of Hassendean gave him ‘two husbandlands’ in ‘le Easter Hassendean’ described ambiguously. It is possible he is the same Thomas who farmed at Rawflat 4 years later. He may have been father of David of Troneyhull, who is recorded later in the 1500. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of the Gaittuscott’ in a document of 1550. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Hartshaugh or possibly Laird there. He is recorded in 1557 when he signed a bond (along with others) with the Warden John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in the thief William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). Hector in Hartshaugh was probably his son. Other sons included Thomas in Abbotrule, and Airchie (recorded in 1567). Thomas (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1561 he and his brother were among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. He may be the Thomas who was pledge for the Laird of Wauchope in 1553/4. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown, brother of David of Wauchope. ‘Thomas Turnbullis byir and barneyaird’ are listed among the lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule under dispute in 1562. He is listed as brother of David in 1567 when he was instructed to present his servant Ingram Oliver to answer charges relating to raids into England. It was either him or (more likely) his son who was hanged during the period when Sir William Cranston was a Border Commissioner, i.e. shortly after 1605. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Hassindenebank’ in 1567 when James Heriot of Trabroun was surety for entering him into ward in Edinburgh. He was recorded as tenant in Hassendeanbank in 1571 when he and his wife, Margaret Scott, had a charter in Melrose for lands in Darnick. Their eldest son William was also mentioned, and the witnesses included Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, who may well have been his father-in-law. This charter was confirmed in 1616. The Thomas, younger, listed in 1579 was probably a son of his. He could be the same man as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Blue Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit blew Thome’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Thomas (16th C.) recorded ‘in Cavers’ in 1579, this probably being Cavers Carre. He was son of James who represented him in a transaction in Selkirk, where a piece of land was purchased in Midlem. Probably the same Thomas was in 1592 a signatory to a caution (signed at Cavers Carre) by Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of James Scott of Whithope. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1577/8 he and his brother Walter were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer for slaughter of Thomas ‘Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Walter were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He and his brother Walter were accused of stealing 19 cows from Englishman Edward Grays in 1582. In 1583 he and Walter were supposed to be turned over to the English Warden, but William Ker of Cessford (a relative of some sort) sent them back to Scotland and they were acquitted. Ker gave caution for the pair in 1583/4 and John Cranston of that Ilk paid the £2000 penalty. He is mentioned along with his father Sir Thomas and brother Walter in 1586, in a promise to present them again before the Privy Council when requested, after their release from jail in Edinburgh Castle. He became tenant at Spittal-on-Rule in 1612. He may be the ‘Thomas Troumble of Roule’ listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. He is recorded as ‘in Rowllspittle’ recorded in a bond of 1619 with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichill), servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, with cautioners being Mark Turnbull ‘in Hairtishaugh’ and Thomas ‘Allensone’ Bailie of Jedburgh. There may also be some confusion between him and Thomas of Minto, who lived about the same time. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, he was recorded as tenant in Abbotrule in 1579, when listed among Scotsmen accused of committing raids into England. He was said to have been in a party of about 40 men, led by the sons of the Laird of Bedrule, who stole 40 cows, and took the Laird there prisoner. Thomas (16th C.) son of ‘Hekie of Hartishaugh’. In 1579 he was listed along with several Turnbulls and others of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He may be the ‘Thom Trumble of Harkschaw’ (if this is a transcription error for Hartshaugh) listed in 1603 along with his brother Luncie, as well as Turnbulls from Nether Bonchester, Braidaugh and Mackside, who were ordered to find caution of 300 merks each to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. He may be the Thomas ‘of Hartishaugh’ whose son William was a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1619. Thomas ‘the Tutor’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 as ‘Thome Turnbull, younger in Hassindanebank, alias called the Tutor’, when he was among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. The group was led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule. He may have been son of the previous Thomas in Hassendeanbank. Thomas of Billerwell (16th C.) listed in 1581 among men accused of murdering Walter of Rawflat. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls, but the Belses branch were also named in the accusation. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Denesyde 1586/7, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been related to other Turnbulls associated with Denesyde. Thomas of Hobbsburn (16th/17th C.) probably the son of Walter of Hobbsburn listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes. He was also accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year; his name is recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesburnn the younger’, and others named were Douglasses, Laidlaws and Shiels. He is probably the ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesborne’ listed along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton in 1590. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was there ‘Thome Trumble of Hoppisburne’. He was also one of the ‘Turnbulls accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside. He was probably related to some of the others who were on trial (from Wauchope, Billerwell, etc.), but the exact relationships are not clear. He is referred to as ‘houshold man to Thomas Turnbull younger of Wauchope’. He was eventually acquitted of the crimes. Either he or his son was ‘younger of Hoppisburn’ in 1606 when he sold Hobbsburn and Weens to John, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmouth. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of David of Toneyhill. In 1610 he was named along with 7 other Turnbulls (and 2 Davidsons) for continuing as rebels following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Cralinghall and 6 Grahamlaw brothers. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Fulton. Along with his father and several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. He was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear, along with others, including Robert, Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’, also in Fulton. This may be the last record of the Turnbulls of Fulton. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw ‘Townfute’ in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His brother Hector was also listed. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Home, son of the historian David Home of Godscoft (in Berwickshire). He witnessed a bond for Home of Godscoft in 1627. Thomas of Bedrule (b.c.1585) son of William and grandson of Walter. Although these generations are uncertain, he was probably great-grandson of Sir Thomas. He is probably the Thomas ‘son of William Turnbull, fear of Bedreull’ who was a witness in 1618/9 to a bond by Walter of Bedrule to Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he recorded as son of William, ‘younger of Bedreule’ when, there was a declaration to capture them, having been denounced as rebels in 1616 for carrying guns and attacking a servant of the Laird of Traquair. This is probably part of a dispute over lands of Huntliehill that the Turnbulls of Bedrule lost to the Stewarts of Traquair. He could also be the Thomas ‘Reidetoun fute’ who had already been declared a rebel along with Walter of Bedrule, William and others in 1615, for not removing themselves from the Laird of Traquair’s lands of Huntliehill. He was recorded in 1619 as son of William ‘fear of Bedrule’ when, along with his grandfather, father, brother George and others, he was declared a rebel for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair.
By the time he succeeded to the Bedrule title, the castle was long destroyed, and the Kers had taken possession of the lands in 1623. It is unclear who he married, but he seems to have been succeeded by William and then another Thomas (last of the Lairds of Bedrule). Thomas of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Hector. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 as ‘appeirand of Wauchop, for myself and my father’. In a court case of 1605 (in which they accused John Elliot of Copshaw of stealing livestock from their farms) he was still ‘younger of Wauchope’; his brother George and other neighbouring tenants are also mentioned. He was perhaps the leader of a band of Turnbulls who systematically raided the estates of Appotside and Harwood over the period 1598–1605. Although the rest of his family and associates were acquitted, he was separately brought to justice in 1606, but failed to appear and was declared a rebel. James Gledstains, younger of Cocklaw, acted as his surety. Willie Scott ‘man to Young Wauchop’ may have been his servant, when declared a fugitive in 1605.

In 1607 he and Hector of Barnhills brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Hector of Wauchope may have been his son, with Thomas his grandson. However, in 1653 his nephew James (son of his brother George) was served heir to his 20-pound land of Wauchope. Thomas of Minto (16th/17th C.) son of John. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father and brother George, among Turnbulls and Davidssons when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill. He appeared in court and was ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for £1000 that Ker and his tenants would not be harmed; however, he failed to find a surety, left the city and was denounced as a rebel. In 1601 he was ‘Tho. Trumble the younger layrd of Myntaw’ who, along with another Thomas, as well as James Douglas of Cavers, was accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag. Also in 1601 he was ‘appeirand of Minto’ when he was cautioner for Andrew and Hector ‘called of Bewlie’ to be lawful and to pay a fine for shooting pistols. He is probably the Thomas of Minto who was one of a large band of Turnbulls who were involved in a serious fight in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601: about 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh and tried to get Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) to come out of his house, whereupon the men of Jedburgh took up arms. The fight left Thomas Ker, his servant and 2 of the Turnbulls dead and many men injured, and as a result several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. In 1602 he was recorded as younger of Minto when, along with Hector of Barnhills and Mark of Bewlie, he robbed a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds as ‘fear of Mynto, for myself and for my father’. Additionally in 1602 he was probably the ‘younger of Mynto’ who was surety for Jack Laidlaw not to harm the Rutherfords of Tofts. In 1603 he was served heir to his father in the half Barony of Minto, including 5 husbandlands in the town of Minto. In 1604 he acted as cautioner for William Middlemas and his son James, charged with the crimes related to the 1601 skirmish. He is probably the Laird of Minto who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610. Also in 1610 he acted as cautioner for James Douglas of Cavers and his son William, that they would not harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues. In 1611 he had licence to travel abroad for 5 years. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to apprehend Andrew and Cuthbert McDougall in Stanedge for the murder of Fergus Lorraine and to try them in Jedburgh; however, Andrew Ker asked for him to be replaced, since there was a ‘deidlie feid standing betuixt’ them. He is also mentioned in 1622 when his son Walter became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He witnessed a report by the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire in 1627. In 1627 he paid caution for William of Braidhaugh and his son James. He is also recorded in 1628 when the major landowners of Roxburghshire convened to elect M.Ps. He is there listed as ‘Thomas Trumble of Minto’. His 2nd son was Thomas, recorded in a charter for Horneshole in 1619; his 1st son may have been John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Minto. In 1619 he was granted the lands of ‘Hornesholle’ by the Earl of Melrose. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of James of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. He succeeded his father in 1619. He was in turn succeeded by his son Adam. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ who had a bond in 1620 with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. The bond was witnessed by his father Robert, who was probably a son of Sir Thomas, but these generations are difficult to sort out. Thomas ‘in Rewcastill’ and his son John (certainly close relatives) were cautioners. Thomas ‘Andrew’s Tam’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in Bunchester in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His name is given as ‘Androis Tam Trumble in Bunchester’. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 2 deeds of 1620 as schoolmaster in Southdean Parish, the first person on record to hold such a position. There is nothing else known about him. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Rouchcastill’ in 1619 among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1620 when he was cautioner for a bond between Thomas, son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ and Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Rowcastill’ who witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1623. He is also described as ‘in Rouchcastill’ in 1632 when he feued lands in Ruecastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He was possibly a son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule, brother of Walter of Bedrule, making the other Thomas (son of Robert) his nephew. Thomas of Knowe (d.1647) probably the Thomas included in 1603 on a long list of local men that the Baron of Hassendeans was trying to remove from their lands; his son Walter (perhaps William) is also listed. He was Laird of Hassendeans Knowe. In 1613 Sir George Ramsay paid him the teinds for the lands of Knowe. In 1619 he raised ‘letters of horning an poinding’ against William Turnbull, brother of the deceased Robert. He was also a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court. His relationship with Thomas of Minto is unclear (but the families seemed to use the same names John and Thomas for the next few generations!). There are several bonds and discharges in the archives of the Horsburgh family that mention him in the early 1600s. In 1626 he and Walter Scott of Ancrum had a ‘letter of deliverance’ (probably related to a debt) against Rev. Alexander Forrest of Hassendeans. In 1628 he was Thomas ‘in Know’, who, along with Walter, were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels and other Scotts. He paid the caution in 1628 for Andrew of Bewlie not to molest the Scotts in Burnfoot and Midshiels. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is further recorded in 1640 in dealings with Walter Gledstains, factor to the Earl of Bucleuch. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of Knowe in Hasseendeans Parish, valued at £279 10s. The name of his wife does not appear to be recorded, however a carved panel on the house at Knowetownhead has ‘T.T.’ and ‘H.T.’ and the year 1628, suggesting that he married another Turnbull (probably Helen, which was the name of one of his granddaughters). His daughter Marion married Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie about 1640. Another daughter Elizabeth married Walter Scott (subject of a legal dispute against Walter and Janet Scott in 1644); she is the ‘Bessie’ who secondly married Andrew Riddell in 1652, tenant at Over Whitton. He was deceased by 1649 when his daughter Barbara married John Grierson (son of the deceased Andrew), and she appears to have put an ‘inhibition’ on her husband in 1657. One of his sons was William (recorded in 1658), while John (who appears to have succeeded as Laird) was probably his eldest son. His death is recorded on a table tomb in Minto old churchyard, along with that of John of Knowe (d.1676). Thomas of Westwood (17th C.) holder of lands near Bunchester in 1643, along with ‘Harie’, who must have been his brother or son. They appear to have held separate lands, with his valued at £40 Scots. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included Isobel (b.1634), Margaret (b.1641), William (b.1643), William (again, b.1644) and Margaret (b.1646). Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘in Tempilhall’ when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654. He was brother of Robert, the tenant at Templehall. He could be the Thomas in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £40, and Robert also listed there. Thomas (d.c.1655) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeankbank) in 1622. He is probably the Thomas who was infefted in the lands of Hassendeankbank by the Commendator of Melrose in about 1622. He is recorded as possessor of the lands of Hassendeankbank in the tax roll of the Abbey of Jedburgh in 1626. His son Thomas succeeded to the lands in 1655. Thomas of Upper Bunchester (17th C.) Laird in 1643, and probably father of William (d.1686); this is according to Walter Deans, writing in 1887. He is probably the Thomas of Bunchester whose lands were valued at £30 in 1643. He could be the same as Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is listed in the 1663 Land Tax

Turnbull

Rolls among landowners in Abbotrule Parish; it is unclear what that name meant, or whether he was related to the Scotts who shared a similar appellation, or Adam ‘callit Clerk in Bonchonster’ recorded in 1643. He may have been progenitor of the Bonchester Turnbulls who were later tenants at Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. Thomas of Tower (17th C.) listed by James Wilson among the list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He is recorded being of ‘Tour’, which probably meant Spittal Tower. He paid the land tax of £104 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Tofts (d.c.1690) son of William of ‘Weddellis-walls’. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s 5 husbandlands of Minto. He was recorded in a marriage agreement in 1669 between him and Helen, daughter of John Turnbull of Knowe. This may have been for one of his sons, since he himself married a daughter of Rev. Robert Brownlie of Kirkton. He was listed by James Wilson as one of the main local landed proprietors of the mid-17th century. He was recorded as being of ‘of Tofts in Kirktoone paroch’ when he paid land tax on £402 in 1663. He may be the unnamed Turnbull who paid the land tax on Tofts, valued at £300 in 1678. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Tofts’ whose testaments were recorded in 1686 and 1689. His son William was served as his heir in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’. Thomas of Bedrule (17th C.) son of William of Bedrule. He was probably grandson of the earlier Thomas (although these generations are not clear). He is probably the Thomas who is recording owning half of the Mains of Bedrule in 1643 (the other half being owned by William of Bedrule). In 1668 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. He was the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule, although by the time he inherited the family had already lost most of its lands. There was a final instrument of resignation of the Barony to Ker of Cavers in 1668. He was nevertheless allowed to remain in Bedrule Mill (where he is recorded in 1673) and part of the Mains of Bedrule. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Andrew, and was grandfather of Thomas of the Hawick carpet factory. His other son was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. There was also a tradition that his eldest son died in India leaving a great fortune that was taken by the government. Thomas (17th C.) brother of William, who was a mason in Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish, but possibly on Slitrig). He was one of those accused by a servant of Douglas of Cavers of stealing his wallet in a Hawick inn in 1642. He gave evidence to the Magistrates at the trial. Thomas (17th C.) brother of John of Knowe. In 1652 he was appointed as the tutor to the children of the deceased Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Charterhall near Ancrum), Thomas, William, Helen, Jean and Margaret. He was the nearest male relative, probably their uncle. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh in 1655. He is recorded as ‘in Hassendeanbank’ in 1655 in a ‘tack’ with John Turnbull of Knowe for ‘Cosier’s Acre’ in Cockersyke, at the east end of Hassendean Knowe meadow (it seems likely that he was distantly related to the Turnbulls of Knowe). He had a ‘wad-set’ with John Scott of Brieryards and his sons in 1656, also involving the ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (i.e. Cockerheugh). In 1658 he had a further bond with John Scott of Brieryards. His eldest son was probably John (according to an undated document). He could be the Thomas, tenant in Hassendean, who is recorded paying the land tax for £52 in 1663. Robert, who is recorded at Cockerheugh in 1694, seems likely to have been his descendant. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1662 as ‘in Roultounfute’. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ for the Earl of Lothian or perhaps to Walter Riddell. He may have been the same as Thomas, tenant of Templehall. Thomas ‘Captain’ (17th C.) tenant of Swanshiel. He is named (along with 7 others) in a proclamation fixed to the Mercat Cross in the early 1680s, accused of frequenting Conventicles. He is also on the long list of fugitives proclaimed in 1684. He may have been related to James who was also recorded as a fugitive in Swanshiel in 1684. Thomas (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1665 (although this would make more sense as 1685) he was accused of throwing his mother-in-law Helen Briggs (wife of Mungo Swan) downstairs, when ‘coming to see his spouse, her daughter then att the poynt of death’. His wife was probably Helen (b.1657), with whom he had a daughter Helen in 1681. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Brown in 1687 and another for William Lethem in 1684. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Swan in 1695 and another for Weaver ‘White John’ (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1701. Thomas of Allerton (17th C.) resigned the lands of ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to his cousin Thomas Turnbull of Knowe.
in 1690. How this relates to the history and political fortunes of the Turnbuls of Knowe is unclear. Thomas of Standhill (d.bef. 1658) recorded in a discharge of 1658 between Thomas of Knowe’s son William (‘tutor’ to his son Thomas) and John of Knowe. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Knowe. He may be the Thomas of Chesterhouse (near Howman) whose widow made an agreement in 1664 with his younger brother William (and tutor to his children Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) to resign the lands of Standhill to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. Thomas of Knowe (1651/2–1730) probably son of John. He was a Covenanter supporter. Note that some of these events may refer to 2 different generations. In 1678 he paid land tax on £227 8s in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Knowe). In 1678 his sister Grizel married Adam Scott of Burnhead. He is probably the Thomas ‘of Hazintorn Know’ recorded in a bond of 1679 with his brother John and sisters Margaret, Marion and Elizabeth. In 1680, along with others, he was declared a rebel by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum, with the implication that he was involved in the uprising at Bothwell Brig. David Thorris appeared as his advocate and argued that he had never taken up arms against the government; after several witnesses were called he was declared not guilty. In 1681 he was summoned to appear before the Lords of Council and Session in Edinburgh for failure to answer to a ‘decret of horn- ing’. The same years his property was confiscated by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. But he had a ‘decret of absolution’ in 1681 and in 1683 he is recorded raising ‘letters of horning’ against the minister and several officials of Selkirk. He gave what sounds like unhelpful evidence in the trial of Alexander Home in 1682. He continued to be persecuted, with property valued at 7000 merks being taken from his estate and his livestock driven off. He was forced to flee along with his wife and sister Marion, and they spent some time in Berwick. In 1684 he is listed among men still declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, his crime being ‘for reset’. After the Revolution he returned to Knowe and it was said by his friend James Pringle of Torwoodlee that ‘he lives in far better condition than he was before’. He became an Elder of Minto Kirk. He is recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in that year, for which he was arrested. Also in 1690 there is a record of Thomas Turnbull of Allerton resigning the lands of the ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to him; it is unclear whether this was just some legal manoeuver. He appears to have acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire in 1694. He also served as an elder for Minto Kirk. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He rented Huntlaw from Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw in 1703 and was still renting it in 1715. He bought Hassendean Townhead from William Little the same year. A bill for William Little from Gideon Scott of Highchester was passed on to him by Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick in 1705. He paid a similar bill for William Little according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1705. In 1716 he brought a libel case against James Elliot, an Edinburgh waiter. About 1720 he is recorded in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish (the part that had been in Hassendean). A letter of 1724 from James Clerk suggests that they were brothers-in-law to each other. His will of 1682 (while he was still alive) is in the National Archives. He married Agnes Mackie, who died in 1716 in her 58th year. He was probably succeeded by his son Anthony and in 1721 his daughter Agnes married Thomas Thomson, merchant in Hawick. He and his wife were buried in Minto Kirkyard. Thomas (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682. He is probably one of the Thomases recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bennet and their children included: Bessie (b.1677); Bessie (again, b.1685); and Walter (b.1686). His wife’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ in 1677 (perhaps in error). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Cowan and John Binnie. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Henry and their children Andrew and Esther were baptised in 1683, with witnesses another Thomas Turnbull and John Stewart. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Johnston and their children included James (b.1688). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. His children included John (b.1688). He could be the Thomas whose daughter Jean married William Beattie in Roberton in 1705. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism for William in Roberton in 1686. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1644/5–1729) tenant in Dyke farm, son of Thomas, who was also tenant there. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably one of the 3 men of that name who are listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas of Standhill (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a discharge of 1658 when Thomas of Knowe’s son William was his ‘tutor’. He was known as a leading local supporter of the Covenanting cause, being converted by John Livingstone, who preached at Ancurm. In 1676 he helped John Blackadder escape after the Sheriff broke up a meeting near Selkirk. He paid the land tax in Ancurm Parish in 1678. He fought at Bothwell Bridge in 1679, and escaped the battlefield along with Walter of Bewlie. He was persecuted, had his possessions removed from him, and was sentenced to execution in 1681, but escaped capture and eventually returned to his estate at Standhill. He was accused, among other crimes, of attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’ in 1679; Hawick’s Town Clerk, Walter Gledstains, gave evidence that he was the leader of the attack. Among the accusations against Lady Katherine Douglas of Cavers was that she sheltered him. Despite being found guilty of being a Covenanter, he was never captured and returned to his estate after the Revolution. He is probably the Turnbull ‘of Stainhall’ listed among those named as officers of the militia to defend against ‘the papists’ in 1689. He is listed among those appointed to visit schools in the Act of Parliament established in 1690 after the Revolution. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire (but may have already been deceased). He had 2 sons: one was a soldier, who died in Flanders; and the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant in Commonside. In 1706 he married Mary Hislop, who was also a servant in Commonside. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a herdsman at Nether Southfield in 1708; his wife was Margaret Hislop and their daughter Isobel (b.1708) was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Other children, baptised in Hawick Parish, which could be his, include John (b.1705), Jean (b.1708), Margaret (b.1709) and John (b.1709). Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Gledstains and may be the William who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Gledstains in Hawick in 1707. His son John was baptised in 1705, with witnesses weavers Robert Jolly and Robert Greenshields. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1708 with witnesses Michael Bridges and James Scott ‘Laird’. He may be related to the earlier weaver Thomas. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick on the shortlist of candidates for Cornet in 1711 and 1712. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls. He may be the same man as the merchant involved in a court case in 1748, in which writer Robert Taylor paid his bill with money that perhaps did not really belong to him; he also took Taylor to court to recover his money. He may be the Thomas whose mother was given money by the Hawick Session in 1723 for teaching poor children. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Turnbull in Wilton in 1714. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in

Denholm in 1717 when he married Janet Dryden, the marriage also being proclaimed in Jedburgh. Thomas (1680/1–1753) son of Thomas, tenant in Dykes farm. His wife Marion Brown died in 1743, and their son Thomas died in 1752, aged 25. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas (1691/2–1768) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Scott, who died in 1777, aged 72. Their children included: James (b.1725); ‘Beatie’ (b.1726); James (b.1727); Isabel (b.1728); Thomas (b.1731); James (again, b.1737); Walter (b.1738); Betty (b.1739); and Anne (b.1741). He may be the same man as Bailie Thomas. He was buried under a table-stone at St. Mary’s. He was ‘Mert. in Hawick’ at the 1728 baptism, when the witnesses were Rev. Telfer and Bailie Scott. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1725 he was living at Mabonlaw when his daughter Mary was baptised. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Helen Telfer in Wilton in 1729. Bailie Thomas (18th C.) father of Bailie Thomas of Fenwick. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he came from (but presumably not closely related to Bailie ‘Tammy’ and the Minto branch, despite the similarity of names). He may be the Thomas who sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch, along with John Scott and Rev. Patrick Cunningham in the 1740s. He was probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1730s, 40s and 50s. He witnessed a baptism for Skinner Walter Scott in 1746. In 1751 he was ‘merchant, and one of the then present bailies of Hawick’ when he purchased lands at the Spetch from James Wight. He was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull, elder’ when he served as Magistrate in 1757. In that year there was a dispute over residents of farms near the Common making ‘bakes’ at Black-grain Moss, which were broken up on the orders of the Council (when he was visiting Newcastle) and the offenders fined, with him settling with them in opposition to the other Bailie, Robert Scott. He is probably the Bailie Thomas who purchased Fenwick in 1762 and other properties in 1771, including Rashiegrain and Commonbrae. In 1763 he was engaged in business in London when his son (also an ex-Bailie by then) was commissioned by the Hawick Town Council to write to him to arrange for an exchange of a new bell for St. Mary’s. Also in 1763 he was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick’ when he witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas. In 1765 he is probably the Thomas ‘senior’ who witnessed a baptism for glazier William and the ‘Bailie Turnbull Senr’ who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew Scott. In 1767 he was described as ‘Thomas Turnbull, elder of Fenwick, Merchant in Hawick’ when he produced the Hawick Town Charters at the court case for the Division of the Common. In 1777 he was one of the claimants for a share of Hawick Common, when it was divided, gaining more than 15 acres. He is said to have left 2 sons and 2 daughters (although these generations seem confused by multiple Thomases!). He was succeeded by his son, also Bailie Thomas. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for glazier William (who was probably related to him) and in 1764 witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas (called ‘Junior’ at that point). In 1764 (when described as ‘late Bailie here’) and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for Walter (probably a relative) and Katherine, daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce. In 1764 ‘Bailies Turnbull older and younger’ and in 1766 both ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ and ‘Junior’ witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn. In 1772 he is probably the Bailie of Fenwick who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie William Elliot) for Bailie Andrew Scott and another for John Osburn. Thomas (18th C.) married Helen Thomson in Minto in 1734. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Denholm Dean in 1741 when his son John was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same Thomas was in Denholm in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. Some of these other children, baptised in Cavers, may also have been his, James (b.1736), Margaret (b.1737), Thomas (b.1738), Walter (b.1739), Patrick (b.1744) and William (b.1745). Thomas (b.c.1730) son of Adam of Denesyde. After the family were forced to leave the Rule valley he became a weaver in Tarsetfoot, Tyneside. His sons Adam and William returned to the Rule area, but he could not be convinced to move. He also had a son Michael (who died young), and daughters Isabella (who married William Walker, farmer at East Forderlee) and Mary (who married Thomas Telfer). He lived to be 99. Thomas ‘Tammy’ of Knowe (1723/4–1770) probably succeeded from Anthony, who may have been his father. He is recorded in a discharge of 1758 and in 1763 when he leased Appletreehall, Townhead and part of Clarilaw. He is easily confused with Thomas of Minto, who was probably a distant cousin. He was involved in an action against the Duke of Buccleuch over teinds in the parishes of Minto and Hassendean in the period 1749–65. He is probably the Turnbull of Knowe recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of those who raised an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. In 1764 he claimed rights to peat and turf on Wilton Common ‘upon immemorial possession’; he also swore that a document presented as evidence was written by Gideon Scott of Falnash, who was the uncle of his wife. In 1769 he had a marriage bond for his son John with Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee. He married Sussana Scott, daughter of Robert Scott of Falnash in Edinburgh in 1755 (and she made a disposition in 1789). He was succeeded by his son Thomas. His daughter Violet married Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1778, and the titles and lands probably passed to the Horsburgh family thereafter. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married Dr. James Watson in Kelso, and was also an heiress of his lands. His will from 1764 (when he was still alive) is in the National Archives. Some of his correspondence also survives (in the Horsburgh family collection) including letters from his cousin Patrick Heron, brother-in-law James Holt and sister Isabella. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet Hill in Minto Parish in 1737. Thomas of Knowe (d.c.1788) son of Thomas. He is recorded as part of the bond for his brother John’s marriage to Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee in 1769. He is recorded in an ‘assignation in trust’ with Robert Scott, cashier in Jedburgh in 1774. He was listed on the roll of elector for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is still recorded in 1786, although it appears that the estates passed to the Horsburgh family through marriage to his sister Violet. He was taxed for having a gardener and a footman in the period 1778–86. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 3 carriage horses, and 2 in 1787. He was taxed for owning a carriage in 1786 and 1787 and for having a female servant in 1785–87. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Know’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1790 is probably his widow. There is a disposition by him (among the Scott of Raeburn papers) in 1787, and another to Alexander Horsburgh (among the Elliot of Minto papers) in 1788 relating to Clarilaw and Hassendean. His trustees were recorded as owners of Alton, parts of Wester Clarilaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the 1788 county valuation (and 1811 Land Tax Rolls). Thomas (1706–74) of Burnfoot, and also described as ‘of Catshawhill’ (i.e. Catshawhill). He was son of Andrew, from the Bedrule family, and Jean Scott. He was factor to the Minto estate in 1738 (and hence sometimes confused with the Turnbulls of Minto) and farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He also managed the estate of Haining and the farm of North Syn- ton for Lord Alemoor, where he planted numerous hedges and plantations. He bought the farm of Catshawhill, but sold it after a few years (for a large profit). He was involved in the beginnings of the local carpet trade about 1753. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of Thomas Turnbull & Company, Hawick, manufacturing woollen articles (presumably carpets) in 1763. He represented Gilbert Elliot of Minto in the court case regarding the division of Wilton Common in 1765, when he was ‘of Catshaw-hill’ and one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the lands and value each plot. He joined with others in 1769 (or perhaps 1759) to form a partnership in the main carpet factory in Hawick. He obtained the lease for Burnfoot and also West Buccleuch in 1760. He also acted as a local money lender before there were banks; he loaned money to William Kerr of Abbotrule, Thomas Scott of Stonedge, Henry Elliot of Harwood, Gideon Scott of Falnash, Douglas of Cavers and Lord Minto. He was appointed as an arbiter for the process of deciding on the division of the Common (one of a group of 2 lawyers and 2 country gentlemen), but died before the process was completed. In 1735 he married Nellie (or Nelly) Thomson, who was said to be from Whitlee, Redewater, and she died in 1747, aged 34. In 1753 he secondly married Esther, daughter of James Douglas (farmer at the Trows); she was widow of Alexander Ogilvie and aged 38 when she remarried, but still had 3 children. He was recorded as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1758, when his son Gilbert became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This son joined the Honourable East India Company, was inclined to be extravagant, and it is said he eventually refused to pay his bills. His children with his first wife were: Andrew (b.1736), who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1737), who married James Turnbull, tenant of Hassendeanbank; Jean (b.1739); Andrew (again, b.1741), who also died young; Gilbert (b.1742) who was a surgeon in the East India Company and died unmarried; an unnamed son (b.1743); William (1745–1825), who inherited Burnfoot; and Marion (b.1747), who died young. With his second wife he had: Nelly, who married George Thomson, farmer at Bught-Rig; Esther, who married Thomas Scott of Peel; and Thomas, who became a manufacturer in Hawick. These may be the Helen (b.1754), Esther (b.1755) and Thomas (b.1758), baptised in Minto, with no mother's name given. He died at Burnfoot. It is possible that his wife could have been the deceased spouse of Mr. Turnbull 'late in Burnfoot', whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1804. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1736 and 1737 when his son James was baptised. Some of these children, baptised in Cavers Parish, are probably his: James (b.1736); Margaret (b.1737); Thomas (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); John (b.1741); Patrick (b.1744); William (b.1745); and Thomas (b.1749). Bailie Thomas (1730/1–1825) of Fenwick, merchant in Hawick. He was eldest son of Bailie Thomas, and is easy to confuse with his father. He may have been the Thomas born in Hawick to Thomas and Betty Scott in 1731. He was Cornet in 1753. In 1758 he was recorded as a skinner. He was already a Bailie by 1763, when he is described as 'younger of Fenwick'. Also in 1763 he was described as 'junior' when asked to write to his father in London to arrange for an exchange of the great bell of St. Mary’s for a new one; they are described as 'Thomas Turnbulls, late Bailies, Senr. and Jun.' In 1763 he was 'junior late Bailie in Hawick' when he received from the Town Treasurer the money to pay for the new bell. Both he and his father witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn in 1764 and 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and also a neighbouring landowner, getting 15 acres himself. He may be the Bailie Turnbull whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. He is probably the Thomas of Fenwick who gained 15 Scots acres in the Division of the Common in 1777. He is probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Fenwick (valued at £100), land in Weensland (valued at £35 18s 7d), as well as owner of two parcels of lands (valued at £31 19s 4d and £31 19s 4d, possibly near Burnflat) that had belonged to Patrick Cunningham. He paid tax in Hawick Parish for having a female servant in 1788–91 and also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was ‘of Fenick’ in 1787–97 when he paid the horse tax, being called ‘Mercht.’ in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was probably the Thomas who was ‘Esq.’ on the Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 work horses and the merchant who paid tax on a saddle horse in Hawick, as well as paying the dog tax. He may be the ‘Mr Thomas Banker’ in Hawick whose clerk Robert Scott was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (along with his son William).

In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of Fenwick, Brieryyards, Hornshole, part of Weensland, part of ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ and ‘Part of Particot Lands in Hawick’. He was the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map, although he must have been extremely old by this time; he was therefore an important heritor in the Parish. His lands included: the area later named Fenwick Park; a large section of the Terraces; fields on the north side of the Loan; and Wylie’s Dub. In 1806 the farms of Palace and Shortacres were added (and they would later own the Rodono Estate in Yarrow as well). In 1757 he married Martha, daughter of David Ogilvie of Brieryyards, through which his family gained Brieryyards in 1783; she died in 1806. Their children included: Thomas (b.1758), who died young; Martha (b.1759); William, who succeeded (b.1760); Thomas, again (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1764); and David, who died in India before his father. In 1758 and 1759 the witnesses were David Ogilvie of Brieryyards (his father-in-law) and James Weir. For the 1763 baptism he was described as ‘late Bailie’ and the witnesses were Bailie Thomas of Fenwick (his father) and Bailie John Scott. The witnesses in 1764 were ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ (his father) and Andrew Scott. It is possible he is the Thomas whose daughter Betty died in Hawick in 1777. A portrait of him, painted by Scott of Edinburgh, is in the Museum (and donated by Andrew Kennedy). He died at the venerable age of 94. Thomas (1731/2–95) merchant in Denholm, son of Alexander (d.1761) and Helen Murray (d.1780). He was recorded as a merchant in Denholm in 1783, when his son Alexander was baptised. His wife Agnes Rutherford also died in 1783, aged 29. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (b.1783), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably also his son. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Martha Ogilvie and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Martha (b.1759); William (b.1760); Thomas (again, b.1763); and Elizabeth (b.1764). It is possible he is the smith whose son William died in Hawick in 1716. Thomas ‘Tammy Trumble’ (18th C.) clothier and dyer in Hawick. It is stated that the family were once quite well off, but their fortunes changed and he had to move to find work, including as a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. It was also said that he ‘was rather an eccentric in his way’, being a frequenter of ale-houses and ‘fond of singing songs, not always of the most delicate character’. He may be the same as Thomas the dyer in Hawick who was paid in 1757 for ‘dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes’. He was listed (as a clothier) along with Gavin as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764: he was probably son or younger brother of Gavin. He was also recorded as a dyer in 1764 when he witnessed a baptisms in Hawick for George Scoon. In 1770 he was living at Roughheugh and recorded as a parishioner of Wilton, and in 1772 was at Damside. In 1770 he and Gavin were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill). By 1774 the family were in Galashiels and in 1778 were in Portsburgh, St. Cuthbert’s Parish, Edinburgh. He married Beatrix Cuthbert in Hawick in 1762; she is probably the Beatrix, daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle, who was baptised in Hawick in 1742. Their children were: Jane (b.1763), who probably married Ebenezer McLellan in Hawick in 1794: Gavin (b.1764), baptised in Hawick, poet and actor; Betty (b.1766), baptised in Hawick, John (b.1768), baptised in Hawick: Walter (b.1770), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Wilton, who later emigrated to America; Euphemia (b.1775), baptised in Galashiels; Henry (b.1778), baptised in Edinburgh; and Walter (again, b.1781), baptised in Kilmarnock, who was a weaver and died in Glasgow. The record in 1781 states that Walter was the 6th son and 9th child, and that this was the first marriage for both parents. The baptismal witnesses recorded are: in 1763, John Ruecastle (probably his father-in-law) and Gavin Turnbull (perhaps his father); in 1764 and 1766, the whole congregation; in 1768, ‘present Magistrates’ Walter Ruecastle (probably his brother-in-law) and William Elliot; in 1770 Robert Scott (perhaps the miller at Roughheugh) and Thomas Scott; in 1772 James Scott and John Mathieson; and in 1778 Edinburgh dyers Henry Duncan and James Fairney. Based on the children, his parents names were probably Gavin and either Jane or Euphemia. He may have been related to the later dyers. Thomas (18th C.) married Jane White in 1768. Both of them were from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Andrew (b.1768); and Andrew (b.1780). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1770. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Scott. Thomas (b.1740) eldest son of James, farmer at Dykes, and Helen Spindie. He was born at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He was locally very well-known in his day as a writer of poetry. He wrote a piece about the old village of Bedrule called ‘the Deserted Village’ and he also put the Shorter Catechism into verse. He was grand-uncle to John Turnbull of Sunlawhill farm. It is said that he made a lock for the old burial ground at Spittal-on-Rule, which was preserved at Weens in the early part of the 20th century. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Dykes on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Roughheugh in 1787. He married Betty Harkness in 1774 (with her name recorded as ‘Mary Herknes’) and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1774); John (b.1779); Nelly (b.1785); and Thomas (b.1787). The first 2 children were baptised in Hawick and the other 2 in Wilton. The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew Burnet and Alexander Bunyan. The witnesses in 1787 were 2 men named Robert Scott. Thomas (1756–97) son of Thomas and sister of Janet. He was probably grandson of John and brother of John, who farmed at Mackside. The family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Dodburn in 1789 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Perhaps Betty (b.1772), Walter (b.1776) and Margaret (b.1779), baptised in Kirkton with no mother’s name given, were also his children. Bailie Thomas ‘Bailie Tammy’ (1758–1823) local businessman and Magistrate. He is easy to confuse with the contemporary Thomases of Fenwick. He was the youngest son of Thomas of Minto and his 2nd wife Esther Douglas, and was father of John Turnbull of the Dyeworks. He became a partner in the Hawick Carpet Company in 1779. He later carried on the dyeing department as a separate business, for a while situated where Bridge House was later located. This business ultimately led to ‘Turnbull’s the Dyers’. He was involved in a large number of local business enterprises in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He is probably the manufacturer who in 1788 (along with merchant James Dickson) witnessed a baptism for merchant George (who was probably a relative). In 1791 he leased the land at Nos. 3 and 4 Sandbed to build houses for himself and his partner William Robertson. He was listed as a manufacturer in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794 and 1797 and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797, as well as the manufacturer of that name on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was also the first agent for the British Linen Bank in Hawick, his appointment lasting until 1806. He was known for being an independent thinker and having a caustic manner, e.g. when he ordered Warren Hastings off his land at Wilton Glebe. He was listed as a bankrupt carpet manufacturer in 1820, and hence it appears that his business did not go so well in the latter part of his life. He appears to have married 3 times: Margaret Darling (d.1829); Isabella Aitkin; and Mary, sister of John Oliver, Town Clerk of Hawick. His children (with his first 2 wives) were: John (b.1788); Isabella (1805–83), who married James Ormiston and David Miller; Christina (b.1815); Ester (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1818). He is probably the Bailie Thomas of the Sandbed whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1811. The death of one of his daughter is recorded in 1838 as ‘Miss Turnbull daughter of Bailie Turnbull Carpet Manufacturer’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in the Hawick area. His son William, stockmaker, died in Hawick in 1816. Thomas (1770/1–1854) blacksmith at Gillbraehead, probably son of Robert, who was previously blacksmith there. He was a smith at Gillbraehead on the ballot list for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He is listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Isabella Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 44. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–23); and Isabella, who died age 14. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Crosshall in Wilton Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) manufacturer in Hawick, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794. It is possible this could be the same man later known as ‘Bailie Tammy’, although that Thomas appears to have been married by 1794. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Minto Kames according to the Lientuenant Book in 1799. Thomas (b.c.1780) tailor at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas Scott (1784–1867) eldest son of William of Burnfoot. He was effectively disowned after his mother disapproved of his marriage to Margaret Goodfellow about 1810. He was at East Middle when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He farmed at East Middle from at least 1841. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres and employer of 7 people, while in 1861 he farmed 380 acres, employing 9 men and 3 boys. He was said to be the only local breeder of Border Leicesters in the 1840s. He is listed on the tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. He was a registered voter in Cavers Parish. In politics he was firmly a Tory and took a leading part in local events surrounding the Reform Bill and the disruptions at the local elections in the 1830s. In 1837 he was one of those who were besieged in the Tower Hotel (possibly for several days), and he was one of the witnesses who travelled to London for the Parliamentary inquiry. His first wife died in 1823 and about a year later he married married Mary Beattie (who died in 1880). His children with his 1st wife were: William (1812–47), whose twin brother died at birth; Thomas (1814–76); Michael (1816–92), died at Southsea; Elizabeth (b.1815); Eleanor (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). And with his 2nd wife: Agnes; Archibald Oliver (1825–69), who became a lawyer in Jedburgh; Peter (1826–27), who died young; John (1828–84); Margaret (b.1829); Peter, again (1831–34), also died young; James Douglas (b.1833); Jane (b.1834); Peter Stephenson (1836–1921), who was Surgeon General; Robert Dempster (1838–93); Scott (1839–59); and Adam (1841–80). It was said that he was heir to a fortune that had been left by a son of the last Laird of Bedrule, who died in India; he apparently told the Rev. Craig of Bedrule that if the money could be recovered he could take half himself. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish who married Charlotte Dunn. their daughter Charlotte was baptised in 1813. Thomas (1788–1883) younger son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Deneside. He farmed at Broombalks and then for a while at Tandlaw. About 1810 he married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Chisholm and had 9 children, including 3 baptised in Kirkton: William (b.1834); Andrew (b.1836); and Margaret (b.1839). He emigrated to Huron, Canada in 1860, following his son Andrew. Thomas (b.c.1790) farmer at Minto Kames. He was there in 1841, along with Thomas (perhaps his father) and Walter (perhaps his younger brother). Thomas (1795–1856) 6th son of James and Betty Adamson. He had 6 brothers, including the Schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He moved to Newcastle and became a carrier there. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory operating to Edinburgh once a fortnight. His cart also left the Nag’s Head in Hawick every Saturday, bound for Newcastle. In 1851 he was at about 1 Whitchester Street. In 1852 he was listed leaving the Coach & Horses bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday, and to Newcastleton on Thursdays from the Bull & Butcher. He married Elspeth Anderson, who died in 1873, aged 76. Their children included: James (b.1817), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (1821/2–55); Henry; John B.; Thomas; and Agnes. In 1852 he is recorded operating a twice-weekly service between Newcastleton and Hawick. He may have been his daughter. Jean, who died in Hawick in 1816, was married Margaret; Jane (b.1820), who emigrated to Australia and married George (b.1818), who emigrated to Australia and married Margaret Watt; Jane (b.1820), who married; Margaret, unmarried; and Georgina, also married. Jean, who died in Hawick in 1816, recorded as daughter of merchant Thomas, may have been his daughter. Thomas of Fenwick (1799–1874) only son of William of Fenwick. He was said to be ‘of weak intellect’ and his estates were placed in the charge of trustees, under whom they prospered and expanded. This included the purchase of Midshiels in 1852 and the Barony of Rodono and farm of Over Kirkhope. He was probably the Thomas ‘Esq. Younger of Fenwick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is recorded as Thomas ‘esq. (of Palace)’ and residing at Brieryyards along with his father, who died in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as ‘independent’ at Brieryyards, with Alison (his mother) and Martha (probably his aunt), plus 3 servants. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards along with his head trustee David D. Scott; he is described as ‘incapable’. Nevertheless he was still formally a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his cousin William. Thomas (b.1800/1) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 on Teviot Square. His wife was Margaret. It is possible he was the same man as ‘Tam-a-Linkin’. Thomas ‘Tam-a-Linkin’ (1801/2–61) town crier. Orphaned at an early age, he became a Town officer, using both bell and drum, serving as Halberdier at the Common Riding and postmaster in Lilliesleaf, being appointed Turnbull Turnbull in 1835. Eventually he was also librarian, bookseller, newsagent, stationer, seedsman and ironmonger. He was recorded as saddler and postmaster in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as the postmaster (and listed in error as ‘John’, saddler and ironmonger, as well as librarian). He may have been son of the earlier saddler Robert. In 1841 he was living with Margaret, George and Robert, probably his siblings. In 1851 he was living with his sister Betsy and brother Robert. In 1861 he was living on Main Street, as postmaster and saddler (employing 2 men). It was said that he, along with John Lunn and Bob Scott, would gather in the Post Office to sort out all the business of the village. Although they belonged to different churches and held different religious views, he was firm friends with John Lunn. He was an Elder in the established Kirk in Lilliesleaf. He was known as a great reader, with knowledge about many topics, including archaeology, numismatics, entomology, botany and photography. He started a flower show in Lilliesleaf, but stopped competing himself when it was clear he was winning most of the prizes. He also organised lectures and reading clubs in the village and was often called upon to perform first aid. He married Agnes F. Davidson, daughter of a local farmer, and they had 5 daughters, including Agnes M. (who died as a young woman), Margaret P. and 2 who died young. Their 2 surviving daughters moved to South Africa. It was said that despite his hard work and many interests, he was never in strong health, but still out-lived his old friend John Lunn. His wife died just a few months before him. Thomas (19th C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. He is probably the Thomas from Glendouglas C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. He was known as a great reader, with knowledge about many topics, including archaeology, numismatics, entomology, botany and photography. He started a flower show in Lilliesleaf, but stopped competing himself when it was clear he was winning most of the prizes. He also organised lectures and reading clubs in the village and was often called upon to perform first aid. He married Agnes F. Davidson, daughter of a local farmer, and they had 5 daughters, including Agnes M. (who died as a young woman), Margaret P. and 2 who died young. Their 2 surviving daughters moved to South Africa. It was said that despite his hard work and many interests, he was never in strong health, but still out-lived his old friend John Lunn. His wife died just a few months before him. Thomas (19th C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. He is probably the Thomas from Glendouglas who was credited with first recognising that the ‘Zedon’, which was an important muster point before the Battle of Otterburn, was Southdean rather than Yetholm. Thomas (b.1822/3) born in Wilton Parish, 2nd son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. He went to Australia with his brother John when gold was discovered there (probably in the early 1850s). After returning he farmed at Easter Boonraw, then moved to Greenhouse in Minto Parish. He was recorded as ‘fundholder’ on the 1861 census, when he was living at 13 Kirkwynd. In 1858 he married Mary Hardie, daughter of a Hawick farmer. Their children were John (b.1859, who farmed Boonraw and Stouslie), Margaret (b.1861), Jane (b.1864), Mary (b.1866), Esther (b.1868, who died young) and James (b.1871, who farmed at Greenhouse). Thomas (19th/20th C.) resident of Bonchester. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Walter of Minto (14th C.) possibly a son of the original William of Rule. He held the lands of Minto, perhaps from 1329, being confirmed by David II before 1370. Perhaps the same ‘Waltero Tornebole’ was the witness to a charter of Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Also in 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey; he is recorded there as ‘Waltero Turnbul’. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of John. He instituted an inquiry in 1424 in order to try to invalidate the grant his father had made to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth in 1390. This was on account of John Turnbull having leprosy at the time (making the transaction void under Scots law), together with the rumour at the time that Sir William Stewart had died in France. However, the Stewarts continued to hold the half barony of Minto. It was said that in 1429 he interrupted the sasine ceremony to invest Sir William Stewart in Minto. It was said that in 1429 he interrupted the sasine ceremony to invest Sir William Stewart in Minto, again claiming his hereditary right. As a result it seems that the barony of Minto was split, so that thereafter there were 2 families who were ‘of Minto’. Walter (15th C.) listed on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and another for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) Bailie of Selkirk recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of William. In 1458/9 he was granted the lands in the Barony of Minto that had belonged to his father. He may be the Walter who in 1463 was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. Walter of Harden (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1468 when he resigned the lands of Harden to Margaret Wardlaw, Lady of the half Barony of Wilton. His son John had a charter for Harden in 1482, suggesting he either died just before this, or John reached maturity then. It is possible he was the same Walter who witnessed a charter for Thomas Middlemas for lands in Peeblesshire in 1476. Walter (15th C.) mentioned at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as tenant in Bonchester, when his son George was suety for Andrew (in the same place), who was fined for non-appearance. Walter (15th C.) resident of Hornshole. He is recorded in 1493 along with Adam, also in Hornshole, when they were allowed to ‘compone’ for a series of crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their suety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of East Mains of Hassendean, which are probably the same as ‘Knowe’. This letter was transferred from the old baron to the new baron in 1493/4. He may be an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Knowe. It is also possible that he was related to the Henry who held a quarter of Appletherehall in 1470. Walter (15th C.) member of the household staff of James IV. In 1490 he was given cloth and in 1497 when he was given a horse. He is recorded being in the King’s Chamber in 1492 when he was given his fee for the term. It is not known what branch of the Armstrongs he was from. Walter ‘Gabrelunzie’ (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494/5 he was again fined for non-appearance, serving as his own suety, with his nickname given as ‘gabrelunzie’. He was surely related to Adam ‘Gabrelunzie’, who was killed in 1509. Walter of Gargunnock (d.c.1527) recorded in 1482 when William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale protested that he had caused him (the Sheriff) to be summoned, but had not himself appeared. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletherehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He also had a 1482 action against Walter Bertram, Burgess of Edinburgh for money owed, and a 1483 action against Elizabeth Somerville and others. In the judicial proceedings of Parliament in 1484 he had to prove that his neighbour stole cattle from his lands of Gargunnock (in Stirlingshire). Also in 1484 he leased the Crown lands of Single and Ernleuch. In 1497 and 1486 his son William had a lease for the ‘Weststeid of Hartwod’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he gave a charter infesting Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. His son William is also mentioned. In 1493 he had a precept of sasine to George Turnbull (probably also a relative) for the lands of Hassendeanbank. And in 1501 there was a sasine to his heirs Margaret and Janet Turnbull for Hassendeanbank. He may be the ‘Waltero Turnbulle’ who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and appears to have been Baron of Hassendean. He could be the ‘lard of gargunno’ whose brother Jock Turnbull was recorded in 1503. Walter of Stouslie (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He served as suety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘Walterus turnbulle de stowislee’. He was also listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Scott of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Graham-slaws of Newton. He was surely related to George, who was recorded in Stouslie in 1493. In 1502 his son Adam failed to appear at the Justice-aire and his suety, William in Crumhaugh, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1501, among 10 men whose fines were remitted. There were several other Turnbulls listed, including from Fulton and Bonchester. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant of Branxholme. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 168 cows and sundry goods from the Murrays at Carterhaugh, as well as stealing 2 horses from there ‘in company with the Traitors of Levin’. George Turnbull of Hall-rule and Robert Scott in Stiches were sureties.

Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as one of the King’s minstrels in 1504. His name is listed as ‘Watte Trumbull’. Walter of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1520 when he witnessed a document for Andrew Ker of Primside Loch. It is unclear how he was related to the other Turnbills of Minto, or if this was an error for William. Walter (16th C.) tenant in ‘Wolle’ (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1526 he was among the Borders men who accompanied the Homes on attacks against the Earl of Arran. Adam ‘there’ is also listed, so probably a son or brother. Walter Watt of Howa (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530 along with David of Wauchope and others, for ‘assistance given and afforded to Thieves and Malefactors in violation of their Bonds’. He was recorded there as being ‘of Howay’. He could be the ‘Watt Trumbill of Howatt’ whose son and heir Archie was pledge in 1553/4, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbills. He is probably the Watt recorded ‘in Hova’ in 1565 when he had to ‘enter’ James Turnbull of Abbotrule to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the Watt ‘in Hova’ whose son was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer changes of raiding into England. It is possible that 2 generations are represented here. He appears to have been father of both Archibald in Howa and Stephen. Walter (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1537 when he sold his tenement in Sellkirk to Peter Moffat. Walter ‘the Flooer’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit the Flour’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Walter (d.bef. 1567) described as ‘in Dalkeith’ in 1567 when his eldest daughter Agnes became heir to his lands of ‘Tempillandes and Browlandes’ at the head of the Rule. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Trumbill in Caveris’ when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. There is no way to know where in Cavers he may have been tenant. Walter ‘Watt’ of Bewlie (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Bewly’ in 1576 among a group of Turnbills and others (from Minto, Kames and Troneyhill), who swore not to harass another group of Turnbills (from Barnhills, Billwell, Belses and Chesters). In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst.
He was listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Hobsburn in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbills of Bedrule and others. Also in 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and John of Minto, to enter persons into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which he apparently did) or be declared a rebel. William Redpath of Greenlaw was his surety (for 1000 merks) that he would appear before the Privy Council. In 1580/1 he loaned 100 merks to Andrew Davidson in Kames, for which he received annual rent on Davidson’s lands in Belses. In 1581 he was accused of being in a group of Turnbills who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm; his sons Robert, William, Mark and Andrew were also listed. This accusation was repeated in 1583, and in that year Robert Kerr of Ancrum and his son William Kerr were called upon not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat, and her tenants and servants; John Andrew signed for him ‘becaus I can not wret’.
In 1583/4 he was granted half of the meadow of Belses by Andrew Home. He was listed in 1584/5 among Border Lairds who were to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Borders. His son Walter was killed in 1580. In 1588/9 John of Minto was cau-tioner for him not to harm his son Robert, as well as his tenants and servants. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1595 he was recorded along with his sons Robert, Andrew and Hector, among Turnbills and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. His sons appear to have included Walter, Robert, William, Mark, Andrew and Hector. Walter ‘Watt’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbills and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who had a bond with another group of Turnbills (from Barnhills, Billwell, Belses and Chesters), not to harm each other. Dand from there is also listed and hence surely related. Walter ‘in Rafflatt’ is recorded in 1576/7 in a complaint that the bond of 1576 had been broken; hence he may be the same man as Walter of Rawflat. Walter (d.1580) son of ‘Watt of Bewlye’, recorded in 1581 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst made a list of 10 men who were called to account for his murder in the previous year. He may have been the Walter whose son Hector was killed at Lilliesleaf by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1604. Robert, who was killed in 1601 was presumably either his brother or son, and Robert’s brother Mark must have been similarly related. Walter ‘Wat’ of Templehall (16th C.) witness in 1593 to the marriage contract between a daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and a son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He was deceased by 1604 when his daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brawlands. He was also called ‘of Vauchope’, suggesting he was probably a son of the Laird of Wauchope. His widow Marion Lorraine (along with several Turnbulls) was forced to leave Templehall and Brawlands, following a court case of 1605. It has been suggested that she might have been a daughter of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Walter ‘Wat’ of Bedrule (1560–c.1623) son of Sir Thomas and Janet Turnbull. He was listed along with his father and brother William among the group of men accused in 1573 of Raiding the farm of Ancrum Woodhead. In 1574 he signed a bond of service with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus, along with his father Sir Thomas and other Turnbulls. In 1576 he was listed along with his father, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chester in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum; he was by then listed as son and heir of Sir Thomas. It appears that by the time he succeeded the Turnbulls of Bedrule were no longer very powerful, with the Castle in ruins and much of their Barony lost through defaulted ‘wadsets’. In 1577/8 he and his brother Thomas were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardthorpe. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for ‘the slaughter of unquhile Thomas Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He was included along with his father and others in a bond of 1580 to keep peace with the Turnbulls of Minto and others. In 1583 he and his brother Thomas were charged with offences against an Englishman (Edward Grays), but the Warden, William Ker of Cessford, ‘in respect of the neirnes of kin with him’, delivered them back to Scotland, instead of to the English Warden. At that time he was referred to as being ‘of Fulton’. In about 1583 he lost the liferent of his lands to Robert Ker, younger of Woodhead. In 1583/4 several men of Hassendean were cited for failing to appear to give evidence against him and his brother; it was later confirmed that they were all declared as rebels, although this situation must have been resolved. He is mentioned along with his father Sir Thomas and brother Thomas in 1586, in a promise to present them again before the Privy Council when requested, after their release from jail in Edinburgh Castle. In 1589 he was ‘son of the late Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule’ on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. In the same year he and John of Minto were listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 William Douglas of Cavers and George Douglas of Bonjedward, as his cautioners, incurred the penalty of 5000 merks for him not returning to ward in Edinburgh Castle. Additionally in 1589, he and John of Minto were cited by the Privy Council for not remaining in Edinburgh after instructed to do so because they were guilty of resetting a group of Turnbulls and Douglases who were involved in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; Sir John Cranston of that Ilk was his surety. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In the same year William Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him, with John of Minto being ‘surety in relief’ and he was also denounced for failing to pay £100 to Elspeth Weir, Laddy Hadden. About 1590 he was listed as ‘in Bedrule’ among landed men of the Borders. In 1591 James Douglas of Cavers was surety for him for keeping good order. Also in 1591 he was one of the local Barons who signed a pledge to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell. In 1592 he was accused of inciting his brother John, assisted by another brother, Robert, in attacking a servant of James Stewart on his lands of Wells. Also in 1592 his surety was William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. In 1602 he signed the ‘General Bond’ among Border Lairds, with his son William signing separately. In 1607 a cause was brought against him by William Alanson, Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1618 he had a bond with George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, for which the witnesses were his son George, Robert in Bedrule (probably his brother) and Lionel in Harkshuh. Also in 1618 he had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule.
Turnbull

Townhead; his wife Helen Lillico is also mentioned. He had a bond in 1619 with Robert Ker of Fairnington, and another with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre relating to the good behaviour of his son William. Also in 1619 he was among the Turnbuls who were accused by Sir John Stewart of Traquair of cutting down timber on his lands at Huntliehill and taking away ‘tunety foure horse laidis thairo’, and was denounced as a rebel; others named were his son William, grandsons George and Thomas, plus Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas, as well as Robert and Mungo also in Fulton, Robert ‘Fendie’, and John and William in Crosscleuch. Further in 1619 the Stewarts complained about him leading a large group of Turnbuls and others, bearing arms, to carry of ‘threttie darge of hay’ from Huntliehill; his brother Robert, sons William and Walter, and grandsons George and Thomas were also losted. Lord Cranston the Border Commissioner tried to remove him from ‘the waist ground’ he occupied; in 1620 he appeared personally before the Privy Council and promised to withdraw himself, his wife and family from these lands and move to either Bedrule or Jedburgh on penalty of £1000. He must have received remission, because in 1623 he had a bond for the good service of his friend George Deans, servitor to Thomas Nicholson, advocate in Edinburgh. In 1623 he served as cautioner to David Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh. Also in 1623 he testified that he had seen Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst’s flocks grazing on certain lands for ‘fittie yeir syne and mair’. In his old age he is said to have been quite a nuisance, along with his sons and grandsons, and they were denounced as rebels for several crimes, including injuries done to Stewart of Traquair, owner of Wells; the alternative viewpoint is that he was simply trying to hold on to his former position of power, with no support from the local landowners. He married twice, his first wife’s name being unrecorded. His second marriage was to Helen Lillico by 1618. He had at least sons Andrew, Adam, George and William (who succeeded). In 1587 it is stated (by English Warden Lord Hunsdon) that ‘a sunne of Bedrooles’ was slain in the encounter between Borderers and Englishmen under Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. He was probably also father of ‘Gawin Turnbull, son of the Laird of Bedrool’, who was declared a fugitive in 1605. Walter ‘Wat’ of Hobbsburn (16th C.) possibly son of Robert. He is recorded in 1567 being ‘of Hopisburne’ and brother of David of Wauchope; he was among men ordered answer accusations of raiding into England, with his servant David Scott also listed. He is also recorded at Hobbsburn in 1568. In 1574 he had to appear before the Regent and the Lords of Secret Council to answer the charge of building his own mill without permission, but after producing a charter of ‘feu-ferme’ for his lands he was discharged. In 1580 he and Hector of Wauchope were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craigall as surety. He is listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Bewlie in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and others. He is probably the Walter recorded as ‘in Hopisburne’ in 1582 when he was ordered to restore Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to his lands in Feu-Rule. Kerr had an ‘escheat’ for his goods in 1583/4, along with George and John (in Hallrule and ‘Roull’), who may have been close relatives. There is another charge in 1585 for witnesses to appear to decide the ongoing court dispute. In 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale in instructions from the King to his Lieutenant on the Border. He is recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit of Howpisburne’ (suggesting that he may have lost his lands by then, or that this was a different family member), among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his son Thomas is also listed, as well as James Brown in Weens, who was said to be ‘undir Watt of Hoppisburne’ (who is probably him). He is ‘Watt Trumble of Hopesborne’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1590. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Sir Davids Wattie’ in 1601 when he was part of the band of Turnbuls who attacked Kers in Jedburgh. Walter of Rawflat (d.1581) recorded in 1579, along with his son and heir Walter. He had borrowed £80 from Alan Deans of Hawick and made an arrangement to pay him back, including that he convey to Deans’ house annually 4 bolls of malt, as well as the expenses of half his land of Rawflat. His land there is described as ‘lying in Ryndaill through the field from the Lonyng east of the said lands with the tower and fortalice, occupied by the said Walter, in the town and territory of Rawflatt in the barony of Prumside, sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. He was recorded as a tenant in 1581 who was declared a rebel and asked to remove himself and his servants from the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses. He was later that year killed by a group of Turnbuls, including David of Belses and his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell. In 1583 his wife Agnes complained to the Privy Council about this and also how another group of Turnbulls, led John of Minto, harassed her and her children by coming to Rawflat, ‘bodin in armes, with hagbuttes and pistolettis’, stole goods and livestock, and shot at them. The excuse given was that he himself was already declared a rebel, but clearly there was some family feud involved here. In 1583 Robert and William Kerr of Ancrum paid caution for Walter of Bewlie not harming his widow, or her tenants and servants. More details were recorded in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses for a long list of crimes. This included killing him, as well as his son William in 1600, capturing and torturing his servant Adam Turnbull, and shooting his son Walter. His daughter Isobel was one of the pursuers of the case. George Turnbull was acquitted of most of the crimes, but had his right hand cut off for illegally carrying fire-arms, and was later executed for other crimes, including stealing a horse from Rawflat in 1577 and 20 cows in 1579 (as well as adultery with his nephew’s wife). Walter (16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1581/2 when he became ‘cessioneer and assignee’ to recover the debt of £24 owed by Thomas Small in Lilliesleaf to Richard Wilson in Howford. The witnesses included Mark, heir of Howden and Hector, brother of the Laird of Barnhills. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Fulton in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. His son Thomas is also mentioned. He was presumably related to the Turnbulls of Bedrule as well as to Robert, Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’, who were also residents of Fulton. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1619 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being in Skelfhill in the Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Geordie Morton in ‘Harrett’, of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Walter of Rawflat (16th/17th C.) probably the ‘Walter Trumbill, younger of Rafiat’ who was shot in the arm and thigh in 1602 by George Turnbull of Belses, this taking place between Jedburgh and Belses. He also had a horse stolen from him by George of Belses about the same time, this being included in George’s final trial before his execution. In 1617 Margaret Rutherford, widow of Mark of Nether Boucher in complained that after her husband’s death he had harassed her, destroyed her crops and driven her off the farm, with his servant Adam Turnbull burning the deeds of the lands; he denied the charges and was found not guilty by the Privy Council. In 1632 his sister Margaret was served as ‘heir portioner’ to him in the 10-pound lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. He sold Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow to Ragwell Bennet of Cheisters in 1623. He may be the Walter ‘in Rawflat’ who was deceased in 1631 when his son James became a cordiner’s apprentice in 1631. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being a resident in Know in 1628, when he was charged along with Thomas in Know to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiel, Adam Scott of Burnfoot and others. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Hislop and their son John was baptised in 1636. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Adam in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Walter (17th C.) son of James ‘in Has-siden bank’. In 1632 he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He is probably the Walter listed on the 1643 county valuation ‘for his lands in Raperlaw, 17 bolls half mean half bear, £110, should be £110 10s’. He is probably also the could be the Walter of ‘Raperlaw’ listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, with the same value. Walter (17th C.) from Nether Ancrum, is recorded in a valuation of 1643. He was part of the Chesterhall branch and ancestor of the Turnbulls who farmed Spittal-on-Rule through the 19th century. He probably had sons Walter and William. He was probably related to Andrew in Nether Ancrum (son of Andrew), who was served heir to his mother ‘Malie Kinklaw’ in 1636. Walter (17th C.) son of Thomas of Minto. He became an apprentice tailor in Edinburgh in 1622, with John Coltherd (and then John Leslie when Coltherd died). Walter (d.c.1682) tenant in Strange when his will was recorded in 1682. His farm was presumably the one in Abbotrule Parish. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Thomson and their son Robert was baptised in 1669. Walter of Bewlie (17th C.) appears to have sold Bewlie to Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshiel, in 1672. However, this may have been only part of the lands (or else he retained the designation ‘of Bewlie’ after selling the family lands). He was recorded as ‘portioner of beulie’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Bewlie, valued at £390. He was declared a fugitive for being present at the Bothwell Brig uprising in 1679. In 1680 he was listed among men accused of being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point, but was found guilty in his absence. He was Laird in 1684 when the Laird’s brother William was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was never captured, and it is unclear what happened to him, although he may have been rehabilitated at the Revolution of 1689. He was recorded in the 1690 Act of Parliament for the visitation of schools. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Knox in 1686. They had daughters Bessie (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and John Turnbull (who was probably related). Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or more likely the part that was once Hassendean. He married Janet Welsh in 1679 and their children included: Mary (b.1680); Janet (b.1684); and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Scott and William Young and in 1687 were Thomas Scott and John Dodds. Walter (17th C.) married Janet Martin in Roberton parish in 1687. Walter (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Robert, who was also there at that time, as well as possibly George, recorded in 1685. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant at ‘mylnholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the Walter ‘in East Port of Hawick’ who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. He could be the ‘Walter Trumble, at the East Port’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) tailor on the east-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the same as the Walter at the East Port. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in Hawick in 1700. He married Helen Elliot and their children included: Hugh (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); Agnes (b.1685); and Walter (b.1686). The witnesses in 1685 were Baille James Gledstains and carrier John Scott. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. Walter (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also recorded there in 1696. He married Agnes Cowan and their children included William (b.1696). The witnesses were John Armstrong and Andrew Rodger. Walter (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the deceased farmer in Southdean Parish recorded in 1714 when his daughter Margaret married mason John Harrower in Edinburgh. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) gardener of Hawick Parish. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for John Napier and in the same year his sister Agnes married merchant James Tudhope. In 1717 he married Mary Simpson, ‘late servant to ye Laird of Gorrenberrie’. Their children included: George (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); and Barbara (b.1721). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Lumb in 1719. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Young and their son John was baptised in 1718. He may also be the Walter, ‘coater in Harwood’ who was married to ‘Margaret’ Young and had a daughter Margaret who was baptised in 1720. The witnesses were Simon Elliot of Harwood and Robert Scott of Falnash and he himself witnessed a baptism for Gideon Elliot of Harwood on the same day. Walter (d.c.1743) portioner of Ancrum, part of the Chesterhall branch. In 1707 he had a son Walter and in 1710 a daughter Ann. His son Walter was still ‘younger’ in 1742, but not in 1743, suggesting the year of his death. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1717, when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the Walter who married Helen Huntly in 1714. John (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1722) may have been his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, he was recorded in Cavers itself when he got married in 1727; his wife’s name was Janet, but no surname is recorded. Janet (b.1728), John (b.1731) and Walter (b.1733), baptised in Cavers Parish, were probably his children. Walter of Wester Swanshie (c.1700–c.50) son of James and Elizabeth Scott. He succeeded his father in the lands of Wester Swanshie in 1724. His children included Helen (b.1726), Magdalene (b.1727), John (b.1729, who succeeded), William (b.1729, probably a twin of John, who did not long survive), James (b.1731) and William (again, b.1733). He may also have been father of George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741) who were baptised at Lilliesleaf. Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto in the early 1700s. He may have been the same as the Schoolmaster at Hawick slightly later, if he had 2 families. Alternatively, he could have been father of the Hawick Schoolmaster. In 1725 he raised ‘letters of horning and poinding’ (to try to recover a debt) against ‘John Mekell’.

Walter, ‘the Little Maister’ (d.c.1756) master of the Parish or ‘English’ school (in distinction to the Grammar School) in Hawick in the mid-1700s. His office and school were down the Punch Bowl Close. He was also Dean of Guild as well as Session Clerk in the 1730s. He served as one of the first postmasters in Hawick, but was found not to be suitable after a short trial. His nickname came from his diminutive stature. He had very brittle legs that were constantly being fractured and became curved into ‘S’-shapes. Apparently some bones of this description were once kept in St. Mary’s steeple after being found by the grave-digger! In 1737 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick ‘for his service to the place’. He was ‘English School Master’ in Hawick in 1743 when one of his children was baptised. He is recorded as Schoolmaster in 1739, when his daughter Margaret married William Easton (Schoolmaster at Ewes) in Edinburgh, while when his daughter Ann married Alexander Ogilvie in Edinburgh in 1758, he was already deceased. It is known that James Inglis became Schoolmaster of the Parish School in 1756. He may be the same Walter recorded as Schoolmaster at Minto in 1733 (although only if he had a second family); alternatively he could be the son of the Minto Schoolmaster. The same Walter was probably the collector for the poor in Hawick, recorded in the 1740s. It is possible that Maizie (d.1808), recorded as daughter of the deceased schoolmaster Mr. Turnbull, was his daughter. He married Marjory Cunningham and their children included: Patrick (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Agnes (b.1741); Janet (b.1743); Elspeth (b.1744); and Violet (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were merchants John Ruecastle and William Oliver, junior. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1723 and 1724 he was at Highchesters. His children included Agnes (b.1723) and Janet (b.1724). Perhaps the same Walter was at Bothwick Mains in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1729 he was at Howcleuch when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are several other children born in Robertson around this time who could be his. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1721, 1731, 1734, 1736 and 1743 (although it is possible there are 2 generations here). His children, baptised in Robertson included: Bessie (b.1721); Walter (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Ann (b.1735); Robert (b.1736); John (b.1739); Thomas (b.1741); Bessie (b.1743); and Thomas (again, b.1745). He may have been brother of John who was also at Parkhill. Walter (1702–73) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His connection to other local Turnbolls is unclear. He paid the window tax for Firth in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His first wife may have been Isobel, sister of Walter Elliot of Ormiston, the marriage being in Robertson Parish in 1738. Children of this marriage may included George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741), baptised in Lilliesleaf, with no mother’s name recorded. He married as his second wife Dorothea, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Benett. He had 3 daughters: Barbara (1754–1821), who married George Pott of Todrig; Isabella (1757–1835), who married John Grieve of

Hoscote and Craik; and an unnamed daughter who may have been Dorothea (b.1761), who married Robert Laidlaw from Drumelzier. He also had a son, whose name is unknown, but whose children included Christian and John, who moved to Ontario. The payment for ‘ye bells to Lady Firth’s borile’ (i.e. announcement of the burial with St. Mary’s bell) recorded in Hawick in 1731 probably refers to his mother. Possibly the same Walter of Firth purchased the farm of Greenhouse (in Minto Parish) from Andrew Davidson in 1769. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Firth’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1789 and 1790 is probably his widow. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Cemetery along with his 2 wives and daughter Barbara; he may have died in 1777, aged 74, his 2nd wife dying in 1804. Walter (1707–97) son of Walter, he was a portioner of Ancrum. He married Betty Dun (1718–88). Their children included: Isabella (1742–98); Walter (1743–1822); Janet (1745–48); John (1747–80); James (1751–1844, ancestor of the Turnbills of Spittal-on-Rule); and Agnes (b.1754). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiels. He married Mary Scott and their children included: ‘Somervel’ (b.1737), clearly named after the minister; William (b.1740); and Alexander (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were merchant Robert Taylor and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. He may also be the Walter whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1743, with the mother’s name given as ‘Janet’ Scott. Walter (18th C.) married Christian Lunn in Hawick Parish in 1761. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Mainse’ (presumably Borthwick Mains) in 1762 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Robertson Parish. Margaret (b.1761) was probably also his daughter, as well as an unnamed child (b.1763). He is probably the Walter who married Betty Hume in Robertson in 1760. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1764 he married Katherine Dyce, as registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. She was probably the daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce born in 1737. Their children included: Thomas (b.1764); William (b.1766); William (again, b.1767); James (b.1772); and Robert (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 and 1766 were Bailie Thomas Turnbull (perhaps a relative) and William Dyce (probably his father-in-law). Walter (18th C.) rented Easter Swanshed from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1767. Walter (18th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1769. Walter (18th C.) married Violet Lorraine in Hawick Parish in 1771. Walter (18th C.) of Rashiegrain, Hawick Parish heritor around the 1770s. He was probably connected with the Turnbills of Fenwick, who owned Rashiegrain a little later. He may be the ‘Turnbull, Esq: of Rashiegrain’ (with no first name given) listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbraes, valued at £260 19s 4d. The lack of name may mean he was deceased at about that time and succession was unclear. It is also possible he is confused with William of Rashiegrain. Walter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1769); James (b.1771); and Walter (b.1773). Margaret and Mary (b.1765), as well as Agnes (b.1771), with no mother’s name given, may also be his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1776. Walter (b.1776) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Wilson in 1773. 3 years later his death is recorded as ‘Husband to Mary Wilson’. Walter (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, being a carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural instrument maker. Gideon Scott was apprentice to him around the 1780s. Walter (d.1776) son of Walter, he was portioner of Ancrum, like several generations of Walters before him. By 1781 he was ‘of Chesterhall’ rather than ‘younger, portioner of Ancrum’. He was listed as owner of part of Nether Ancrum in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, and she died in 1827, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1774); Mary (1781–1812) and James (b.1781, who farmed at Billerwell). Walter (18th C.) carrier of Belses, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1794, when his daughter Catharine married James Allan. She could have been the ‘Kathrine’ born to Walter in Ancrum in 1768. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herdsman in Tower in 1778 when his son George was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1776 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Brauxholmtown. He married Janet Riddell in 1777 and their children included: Betty (b.1778); Isabel (b.1781); Jane (b.1783); and Andrew (b.1790). The witnesses in 1781 were the whole congregation. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Roger and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1785. Walter (b.c.1765) wright in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was probably living on Canon Gate in 1841. He may be the Walter who was one of the founders of the Denholm Subscription Library in 1805. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1789 he married Janet Hogg, from Kirkton Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. His servant George Waugh was on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He is probably the tenant who was said (by Walter Deans, writing in 1887) ‘to have been a man of great strength and agility, and a famed player at the Hobkirk Ba’.

Walter (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster in Melrose. In 1796 he was recorded as ‘Mr’ when he married Euphan Dickson, who was at that time described as being from Hawick Parish; she was the only surviving daughter of William Dickson, portioner of Darnick, and held the lands of Carlythole, which later was where Sir Walter Scott built his mansion of Abbotsford. Their children included Isabel (b.1797), James (b.1798), Euphemia (b.1800), Nelly (b.1802) and William (b.1804). Walter (18th/19th C.) from Jamaica according to the 1804 death record for his son William in in Hawick. His son is described as ‘a Black Boy’. There is no other information to understand who he was or how he was connected with other local Turnbulls. Walter (b.1774) son of Walter in Chesterhall in Ancrum Parish. He is listed in 1798 as a joiner at Chesterhall among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Walter (b.1776) son of Thomas, who was blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish. He is probably the smith who was at Smithfieldhaugh in Kirkton Parish on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. In 1841 he was at ‘Birkwood Foot’. He is probably the Walter listed at Woodfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His married Helen or ‘Nelly’ Oliver in 1806. Their children included: Mary (b.1807); Thomas (b.1809), was also a blacksmith; Francis (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); William (b.1815); Eliza (b.1818); and Helen (b.1819). Walter (18th/19th C.) doctor in Hawick from 1800, also acting as a ‘man-midwife’. Walter (b.1787/8) joiner in Wilton. He was living at Stirches Croft in 1841. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, James, Mather, Ann and George. Walter (b.1794/5) born in Roberton Parish, he was a farmer. In 1851 he lived at No. 4 Burn Row in Wilton Dean, described as ‘Proprietor of Houses, formerly Farmer’. In 1861 he was a widower, farming 380 and employing 6 people at Acreknowe. He married Margaret Henderson in Kirkton in 1829 and their children included: Williamina or ‘Mina’ (b.1831/2); Janet (b.1832/3); John (b.1834); and Ann (b.1837/8). Walter (19th C.) married Mina Scoon in Wilton Parish in 1843. Walter (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. In 1896 he married Georgina Louisa, only child of Rev. A.C. McPhail of Hobkirk. He farmed Hartshaugh Mill, which included Kirknow, Swanshied, the eastern part of Langraw, plus Hartshaugh and Unthank. Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Little in Hawick in 1852. Walter A. (19th/20th C.) joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He took over the business of Douglas Taylor in 1882. He firstly married a daughter of his cousin Robert Amos, and they had a daughter Maggie. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Bonchester tailor James Grieve. William ‘de Rule’ (c.1289–1333) the first Turnbull, supposedly named for turning a bull from King Robert. He is recorded in a charter of 1313 for a piece of land at Philiphaw. He may have married Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Douglas, and is probably the direct ancestor of many local Turnbulls. His name is sometimes written ‘Turnebull’. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Rule, recorded several times around 1300. He is said to have met a grisly death at the Battle of Halidon Hill, challenging the English to hand-to-hand combat before the battle commenced, but being killed along with his dog by Sir Robert Benhale, with Benhale carrying his head back to England as a trophy – ‘With withering force his neck retorted round, And roll’d the panting monster on the ground, Crush’d with enormous strength his bony skull; And courtiers hail’d the man who turn’d the bull. William (14th/15th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. In 1419 he made a request to be given the perpetual vicarage of East Calder Church. It seems that he was older (and hence distinct from) Bishop William. William of Todshawhaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1426 as being ‘de Todgishalch’ when he witnessed a document relating to Eildrig. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘Turbule’ when he witnessed the document giving the Baron of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, in 1428/9. He may be the same as the William who became Bishop of Glasgow. He may also be the William who was listed on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and the ‘Willehmmum Turnbull de Philiphalch’ on the 1426 inquest for the lands of Eilrig. Another William (in addition to the Rector of Hawick of that name) witnessed the 1431 document for the lands of Heap, this one from Whithope. Possibly the same William was on the assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425 and the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. He may be the William who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. It is possible he is the William, whose daughter Janet was mentioned in a request to the Pope in 1420 to honour her marriage contract with Robert Gledstains (despite Robert admitting to earlier fornication with another Janet, daughter of John Turnbull, the 2 women being ‘related in the third degree of consanguinity’). William (c.1400–54) founder of Glasgow University. He was reported to have been a younger son of the Laird of Bedrule and noble on both sides (his mother perhaps being a Stewart of Minto). It is unclear who his father was, although he was surely closely related to John of Bedrule who is recorded in 1432. He was probably born in Bedrule Parish and baptised in the old church. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1420 and spent the early 1430s as a canon law student at Louvain in Belgium. He was described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ in 1430 when appointed as Dean of the Arts Faculty at St. Andrews. He was witness to a local charter (swapping Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scotts) in 1431, where he is ‘Magistro Willelmno Turnbule rectore de Havic’. He also wrote a letter testifying to being a witness to this, where he is ‘persone off Hawye’ (i.e. Parson). In 1432 he was described as ‘of noble race’ and ‘obtained said church, of lay patronage, after presentation and institution by ordinary authority, and holds it at present’, when requesting that the Pope give him the full benefice, vacated by the death of John Scott. Also in 1432 he requested permission to hold 2 incompatible benefices. Probably the same William was a ‘cubicular’ of the Pope in 1433 when he and William Crozier, the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, had a warrant of safe conduct to pass through England to come to Scotland and return to Rome. Sometime before 1434 he was presented by James I to the benefices of the deceased Walter Stewart, Dean of Moray, although he already held ‘the parish church of Haroyk (rectius Hawyk) in the diocese of Glasgow’; he is described as being ‘a chamberlain of the pope, a bachelor of canon law, and the said king’s proctor in the Roman court, and who is related to divers barons in the third and fourth degrees of kindred’. He was in Florence afterwards and in 1439 graduated as Doctor of Canon Law at the University of Pavia. He had privileges bestowed upon him by Pope Eugenius IV, including Archdeacon of Lothian and appointment to the See of Dunkeld in 1447. He was Vicar of Edinburgh around 1446 and became Bishop of Glasgow in late 1447 or early 1448. He was also important in the Scottish court, becoming Keeper of the Privy Seal, and as such witnessing many documents for James II (e.g. in 1444 and 1446 for the Earl of Atholl and in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s). He obtained a Papal Bull that led to the founding of Glasgow University in 1451, based on the granting of a tenement and 4 acres of land in the city. However, his plans for developing the new University were derailed following his death only a few years later. In 1450 he was witness the a charter of Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Branxholme. Also in 1450 it seems that he allied himself with the Kennedys and Crichtons who were acting against the interests of the Douglases, while William, 8th Earl of Douglas, was away in Rome. In about 1452 he witnessed a document for the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was stated by a later chronicler that he played a part in the downfall of William, Earl of Douglas (superior of the Barony of Hawick), who was killed by James II in 1452. He certainly loaned the King money, and earned special treatment for himself, his see and his newly adopted town (which became a regality). He was an envoy of James II in 1452 and had a passport of safe conduct to visit Rome in 1453. A tradition states that he founded Jedburgh Grammar School (although there is no evidence to support this). He probably died in

Glascow. There is a memorial to him in Bedrule Church, unveiled in 1954. A school in Bishopbriggs is named after him, as well as the Catholic Chaplaincy at Glasgow University. William of Hassendeanebank (15th C.) recorded as a witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherifldom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He is probably related to the later William of Hassendeanebank. Perhaps the same ‘Wyll Turnbul’ was recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. William of Whithope (d.bef. 1456) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap from Langlands to Scott. In his letter of ‘attestation’ he is ‘Wyllam Turnbule of Qwythope’. He was recorded as witness to the 1447 charter by Margaret Cusing to Walter Scott of Bucleuch for the ‘Cusingland’. His son Philip received a charter of the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick in 1456. William (15th C.) Chamberlain of the Bishop of Glasgow. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453, 1454 and 1455, and appears to be different from William, Bishop of Glasgow. William of Minto (15th C.) recorded in 1456 as ‘Willehmus Turnbule de Mynto’ in a document regarding the lands of Whitchesters; it is possible that this refers to his being witness to the return for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. In 1458/9 his son Walter had a confirmatory charter for his lands in the Barony of Minto. He was witness to a sasine of lands near Bramsholme in 1461, given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis. He is recorded there as ‘Wyl Turnbull de Myntow’, while George of Bedrule was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was ‘William Turnebull de Mynto’ when he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. Given that there was a suggestion that Bishop William Turnbull’s mother was a Stewart of Minto, there may be a close family connection. William (15th C.) appointed as Vicar of Innerleithen in 1475. He was said to be ‘of noble race’. By 1482 he was also perpetual Vicar of ‘Cowin’ and Canon and Prebend of Dunkeld. In that year ‘in his infirmity’ he requested that his nephew James be granted the Canonry and Prebendary, his nephew Adam the Vicarage of Cowin (although not wearing clerical dress on account of his illegitimate birth) and Adam Glendinning to the Vicarage of Innerleithen. William (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Annan when he witnessed a charter for the Church of Carlaverock in 1492/3. He may be the Master William recorded in 1490 when he was given lambs on the Crown lands of ‘Gildhouse’, because of the wars. William (15th C.) recorded as resident in ‘langhop’ in proceedings of the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for several crimes, including stealing from him: 3 cows and an ox; a cow and an ox on another occasion; a grey horse; one other horse; and 60 sheep at different times. It is unclear where ‘langhop’ was, presumably Langhope, possibly the one near Todrig, but perhaps one elsewhere (or a transcription error). He may be the same William who had something stolen from him at Shielwood Meadow by Thomas Lauder of Todrig at about the same time. He is probably also the William ‘de lahope’, who in 1502 was surety for William Elliot and James Foster at the Jedburgh Justice-airo. William of Hassendeane (15th/16th C.) son of Walter. He is listed as son and heir of Walter in 1479 when he leased the western part of Hartwood (which probably corresponds to Hartwoodburn). He was also son of Walter of Gargunnock in 1486, when he leased ‘Weststeid of Hartwod’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he was listed as son of Walter of Gargunnock when he infefted Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanebank. In 1493 he is the ‘umquhile Wilzam Trumbull of Gargunnok’ when the ward for his daughters and heirs was given to Alexander Lord Home and Duncan Forester (although whether he was already deceased then is unclear). He could be the William ‘White’ Turnbull recorded in 1494/5 when sheep were stolen from him in Harwood. He is recorded as ‘William Turnebill of Hassindene’ in a peculiar marriage contract of 1498. His 3 daughters and heirs, along with the 3 sisters and heirs of Alexander Hepburne of ‘Gargunnok’, were contracted, to John, Lord Drummond, Sir Duncan Forester of ‘Skypymche’ and John Elphinstone of ‘Erth’; each of the 3 men to have rights over 2 of the heiresses and 1/3 of their lands. He appears to have been dead by 1501, when his father’s heirs are listed as being his sisters Margaret and Janet. Possibly the same William was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendeane in 1482. William (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. John Hope in Phap was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 13 sheep from him at Huntly. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5. He and James Hall had remission for the premeditated crimes. perpetrated upon Jack Brydon, with William Ker of Yair as surety. William of Minto (15th/16th C.) mentioned in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter (heir to Branxholme) were appointed as his ‘tutors’. This suggests he was still a minor at this point, and that his superior was Scott of Branxholme. He is probably the William of Minto who is recorded at the Justice- aire in 1498, apparently entering into a bond with Kers and others, that they would pursue men who were already declared as fugitives. He is listed among several men who were entered to the King at Stirling as caution for their crimes in 1499. This included the murder of John of Rutherford, for which he had remission, as well as the crime of ‘tressonable passing and remayning in Ingland’. He is recorded as ‘Wilzame Turnbull of Myntyow’, along with 6 other Turnbulls (including Archibald, son of John), who could have been close relatives. In 1501 money was paid according to the Exchequer Rolls for his lands of Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 17 years (suggesting that he had been a minor for that time). He had sasine for 2/3 of the land in 1501 (with the other 1/3 being held by Alexander Stewart). At the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502 he served as surety for George Young, resident of Minto, as well as for Robert Young, son-in-law of John Turnbull, and John Young, and was fined for their non-appearance. He was also surety for David Scott, ‘Lady’ (who had remission for raiding farms at Minto, among other crimes). Also in 1502 he was recorded at the Jedburgh Justice- aire as having stolen 120 sheep from George Rutherford at Longnewton (which were reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters). Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for David Scott called ‘Lady’, in Stirches, who had a remission for his part in several different raids, including burning and stealing from the tenants at Minto and also stealing livestock from Broadmeadows and from Haining. Furthermore, he was fined for failing to enter Walter Aitkin in the court and was surety for Thomas Young. Also in 1502 he was surety, along with several other Turnbull chiefs, for Margaret in Hawick, who was convicted of theft and resetting thieves. He is probably the Laird of Minto mentioned in 1502 accompanying Adam Scott of Tushielaw in the theft of 10 horses from Peebles. He is recorded as joint surety along with Thomas of Bedrule, David of Wauchope and Bartholomew in Belses, to enter Andrew at the Justice- aire in Selkirk in 1505; the 4 men signed a bond to this effect in 1505. And in 1506 Adam of Billerwell had remission for associating with him and his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands relating to the Lords Home. He was also in 1506 recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood). In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he was a witness to an indenture between the Erskines and the Kerrs for lands in Synton. He may be the William of Minto who was the first in a long list of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King; George Turnbull ‘there’ is also listed, as well as John ‘in Mynoto’ and another John ‘in Mynoto’, cousin of William of Minto. He may be the same William of Minto who is recorded in 1522 being asked by James V to receive George Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Greenwood (or Girnwood), with a precept of sasine following in 1525. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers who had remission for rising up against the Earl of Arran: he is there the first listed of several Turnbulls (and the ‘William Turnbull in Mynto’ also listed may be his son). And in 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for muster- ing their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he had a royal pardon for crimes of treason (presumably assisting the Laird of Branxholme at Skirmish Field), along with Scott of Howpasley, Scott of Allan- haugh and Scott of Hassendean; there he was de- scribed as ‘frankenementar of Mynto’ (i.e. free- holder). In 1531 he and his son and heir William gave the ‘non-entry’ of a piece of land called ‘Nuk- land’ (probably Nut Bank) to his brother-in-law Ralph Davidson, and also another piece of land called ‘Chames’. He may be the William who was listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He was also listed among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. Also that year he was fined for being responsible for certain Turnbulls from Rulewater, particularly a Turnbull of Catlee who had stolen horses and goods from Alexander ‘Bertilhmow’; he had to pay for the stolen goods or else the penalty would be to ‘byrne his house, expell and hald him furth of ye cuntre’. He was recorded in 1532/3 when his son and heir William sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of

Branxholme. He may be the William ‘of Mynto’ who witnessed a document for a young William (son of John) in Selkirk in 1533. He may also be the William of Minto who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Symton in 1535. He was succeeded by his son William, who was ‘fiar’ of Minto in the 1530s. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Crumhaugh. At the Justice- aire in 1502 he was surety for Adam son of Walter in Stouslie, who failed to appear, and so he was fined. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and Mark, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. He was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and John in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. He was recorded in 1502 among men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the people called to enter him were George of Hallrule and John Rutherford of Hundlee. His son Laurence was also mentioned in the same case at the 1502 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh, as well as David in Bonchester. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Laird of Bedrule. He was recorded in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolphinton. He was distinct from William in Gatehousecote and William in Bonchester, who were also listed, but he may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William ‘Will’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘tandilnies’ (probably Tanlaw Naze) in 1503. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 2 cows and ‘a ruk of corne’) for failing to attend the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. He was probably related to George, who was listed in the same place. William (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Melrose 1503-07, as a rival to David Brown. The disputes of the time were resolved when he was transferred to become Abbot of Coupar in Angus, where he served until 1524. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh who was listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he was recorded as son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh when he had a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig, as a procurator of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford of that Ilk. He is probably the William who had a sasine for ‘Barbourisland’ (part of Philiphaugh) in Selkirkshire in 1503. He may be the William recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1527, 1530 and 1532, and owner of a tenement in 1530/1 and 1535, which he resigned in 1540. He could be the Burgess William recorded in Selkirk in 1542. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant ‘in Crag’ in 1516, when he had remission, along with several other Turnbulls, for their assistance given to Alexander, Lord Home. This was presumably Minto Craig. William (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hallrule, listed there along with Robert and Thomas in a 1516 pardon for a large number of Turnbulls for assisting the Homes against the King. William (16th C.) tenant of Rowwood recorded in the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. He is also listed as ‘in Rowlewod’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded as ‘in Roulwod’ when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the tenant of John Gourlay of Rowland, and possibly related to the later William of Rulewood. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1533 as son and heir of the deceased John. He appointed Robert Stewart of Minto ‘as his master’ and promised to be ‘in kindly service’ to him. Stewart also promised to honour an old reversion from Thomas of Raflat to an earlier William (perhaps grandfather of this William), so that those lands would go to him or failing that to his brothers. William of Minto was one of the witnesses. Perhaps the same William witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539. William of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) recorded in 1550 in a bond of obligation with Thomas Turnbull of Bothwell. He may be the William in Hassendeanbank who is recorded in a contract with John Gourlay of Rulewood in 1540 (probably not 1640, as recorded). Probably the same William had a sasine for a piece of land at Hassendeanbank in 1536 and sasine for a ‘merk land’ in Hassendean called Cockerheugh in 1556; this William’s son and heir was Thomas, who inherited Cockerheugh in 1622 (or perhaps there was another William between). He may be the ‘William Trumbill of cautioner in Selkirk for John Scott in Darnick and actions about the same time. In 1580/1 he was Burgess of Selkirk when he stood as caution for Turnbull in 1551. William witnessed the regranting of Wauchope to David Baxter in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as ‘tutor’ in 1553/4. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) described as a wright and Burgess (i.e. Girnwood) in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Bransholm. He was described as ‘fiar of Mynto’ in 1553 when he was part of an inquest held at Jedburgh into the ownership of lands at Longnewton. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. It seems likely he was the deceased Laird of Minto mentioned in 1548 when Sir Walter Scott of Bransholm was given ward of his lands until such time as his heir became of age. His heir (possibly the John recorded from the 1590s) was presumably the Turnbull of Minto who was recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as ‘tutor’ in 1553/4. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1565/6 he brought a case against Robert Kerr of Woodhead, over his lands of Over Ancrum. Probably the same William, Burgess of Edinburgh, was obliged in 1572/3 to remove himself from that city, on the orders of the Regent; Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety, and hence he was probably related. Perhaps the same Burgess of Edinburgh witnessed the regranting of Wauchope to David Turnbull in 1551. William (16th C.) recorded as Burgess of Selkirk when he stood as caution for someone in 1579. He also witnessed other transactions about the same time. In 1580/1 he was cautioner in Selkirk for John Scott in Darnick and witness for another transaction for him in 1581. He witnessed additional agreements in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581/2 he and George in Philiphaugh witnessed an agreement between the widow (Isabel Douglas) and son (Mark) of the deceased John in Philiphaugh (suggesting that the may have been related). He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. William (16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1581 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear to answer to the charge that he stole a horse from Archie Elliot of the Hill. William (16th C.) described as a wright and Burgess of Jedburgh. He was tenant of Spittal-on-Rule from 1586. William (c.1541–c.75) eldest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He had a charter granting him Bedrule in 1570/1, but probably predeceased his father. In 1573 he was recorded as ‘sone and apperand air’ of Sir Thomas, when they were listed among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He appears to have been deceased by 1576 when his brother Walter was described as son and heir of Sir Thomas. He was deceased by 1584 when the Privy Council let her uncle Alexander Home continue to have the right of choosing the husband of his daughter (and perhaps only child) Margaret, rather than yield to the claim of another uncle, Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes. In fact Margaret eventually married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but died in 1593. William of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. In 1574 he signed a bond of service with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus, along with several other Turnbulls. In 1576 he was listed along with Sir Thomas, Walter (son of Sir Thomas) and Mungo Bennet in Chesters, in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum. He was also listed in 1576 as joint cautioner, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, for Hector, David, George and John, sons of Adam in Belses. Additionally in 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who has a bond with another group of Turnbuls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other; he was one of the cautioners for John Turnbull of Howden and others. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was then found liable for the fines imposed. He was also listed in 1580 along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Thomas’ son Walter and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood, in a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Minto; he signed with ‘my hand at the pen’, meaning he was unable to write. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He may be the ‘[blank] Trumbill of Barnehills’ whose brother is recorded as witness in Selkirk to 2 transactions in 1581/2 (one along with James in Selkirk, who may have been related and another along with Mark, heir of Howden); he is explicitly named in another transaction in 1582. He was listed among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers Robert, Gavin and Hector, and uncle Andrew of Barnhills were also listed. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Lairds in the Borders. William ‘Will the Lad’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen accused in 1590 of being involved in a raid on farm across the Border in 1588. He is cited along with David Laidlaw of Antroch and Adie Laidlaw ‘Great Legs’. William (d.1600) son of Walter of Rawflat. In 1602 George Turnbull of Belses was denounced as a rebel for a long list of crimes, including his murder, and although acquitted of the new charges, he was later executed for similar crimes. This may point to some sort of feud among the Turnbuls of the Lilliesleaf area about that time. William of Knowe (16th/17th C.) one of a group of about 30 Turnbuls who were involved in a skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601, part of an ongoing feud with the Kers. He was also referred to as being ‘in Tounheid’. In the skirmish 4 men were left dead and many were wounded, including himself being shot ‘in the wambe, be the schot of ane pistolet with twa bulletis’. It is unclear how he was related to the later Turnbuls of Knowe. He is probably the William ‘in Munto-tounheid’ recorded in 1610 when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbuls (plus 2 Davidsions) for not having found caution following being found guilty for the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. William of Bedrule (c.1580–c.1625) son of Walter. He was probably the William whose letter of 1602 to Thomas Ker of Cavers (his father-in-law and presumably his superior) still exists, detailing how he took over possession of Fulton, and listing the tenants there. In 1602 he was ‘fear of Badrewle, Melros’ when he signed a bond among Border Lairds. In 1612 he was William of Bedrule, who, along with William of Hawthornside, were complained about to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. He is probably the William ‘fear of Bedrule’ who witnessed the marriage of the daughter of William of Templehall (probably his brother) in 1614. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. He is probably the ‘fear of Bedreul’ whose son Thomas witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1618. In 1619 he was ‘fear of Bedreul’ when his father Walter had a bond for him with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre, for not ‘finding caution of law-burrows to him’. In 1619 he was still ‘younger of Bedreul’ when, along with his son Thomas and his servant George Douglas, there was a declaration to capture them, having been denounced as rebels in 1616 for carrying guns; he had also been declared a rebel along with his father Walter and other in 1615, for not removing themselves from the Laird of Traquair’s lands of Huntliehill. Also in 1619 he was ‘fear of Bedreule’ listed among Turnbuls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber and hay from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair; his sons George and Thomas are also listed. He probably only succeeded his father Walter in about 1620, and although he was still called ‘Laird of Bedrule’, he lost most of his family’s hereditary possessions. He gave caution for David Turnbull of Jedburgh at the Commissioners’ Court of 1623, and probably died shortly afterwards. He married a daughter of Thomas Ker of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Thomas. He may have been the William whose only daughter Margaret married Robert French of Thornydykes and Abbotrule; however, the dates do not work out, since she died in 1593, and her mother was supposed to be Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdennknowes. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Bewlie, who was killed in Jedburgh in 1601. He also had brothers Mark and Andrew. In 1603 he was appointed as tutor to his nephew Andrew, who was served heir to Robert in 1607. William ‘Willie’...
Turnbull Turnbull

Turnbull Turnbull

Turnbull
(16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wille Turnbull, callit the guidman’ in a letter listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in 1602. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as William ‘called of Beulie’ in 1610. He was named among 8 Turnbuls and 2 Davidsons when a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend them for failing to find caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Cralinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers; his brother Mark was also listed. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Hawthorsnide (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 along with William of Bedrule when there was a complaint to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls. William ‘Will’ of Braidaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbuls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. John ‘of Brodehaugh’ is also listed and so presumably his father or brother. In 1603 he was ‘of the Braidhauch’ when, along with Turnbuls from Braidaugh, Mackside and ‘Harkschaw’, he was ordered to find caution of 300 merks to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. He is also described as ‘in Braidhawche’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. In 1606 James, son of Edward Lorraine of Harwood was declared a fugitive for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend him, after he had been declared a fugitive for theft and slaughter. William Turnbull of Braidaugh. He was recorded in 1611 when Robert Home of ‘Carrolsyd’ was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court; however, he was acquitted. His son James was found not guilty of stealing sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’ (probably Earlside) in 1622. In 1627 Robert Kerr of Cavers complained that he had acted to resist the apprehension of his son James (who had been declared fit for military duty), and hence should be held in Edinburgh Tolbooth until James was produced. Also in 1627 he paid caution to the Privy Council, promising that he and his son James would satisfy the minister and session of Abbotrule Kirk ‘for the insolence committit be him at the said kirk upon Sonday the tyme Divine service’. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish, along with John. With several other Turnbuls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntlehill in 1619, this included the Turnbuls of Bedrule and Fulton. They were denounced as rebels for failing to appear. William of Tour (16th/17th C.) cautioner for Adam Turnbull in a bond he had with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1619 (registered in 1624). In 1622 he was ‘in Tour’ when he sat on the assize at the Justice Court held in Jedburgh. He is also recorded in 1622 as ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ (i.e. Rulewood) when he had a ‘letter of apprising’ against John Elphinston of Henderstoun (in Peeblesshire) for non-payment of several bonds. He thereby obtained the Barony of Henderstoun and half of the lands of Glensax, but sold them in 1628. He was probably son of James ‘of the Toure’, recorded in 1579/80. William (16th/17th C.) served heir to his father John in Philiphaugh in 1606, inheriting the 5 acres there called ‘Barbourisland’.

William ‘Geordie’s Willie Trumble’ (so his father was George) and he lived at Bonchester. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of James of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. He was mentioned along with his father in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh. He was owner of West Lees in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. William (d.bef. 1647) recorded as being of ‘Weddellis-wallis’ in 1647, when his son Thomas of Tofts was served heir to his 5 husbandlands in Minto. It is unclear where ‘Weddellis-wallis’ might have been or if he was the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may have been the Laird of Tofts whose death before 1643 meant that the family lands in Kirkton and Abbotrule Parishes were just ascribed to ‘Laird of Tofts Turnbull’, with no forename. Also in 1643 there were £102 of lands in Minto owned by ‘Turnbull of Tofts’. Given that most of the rest of Minto... was owned by the Turnbulls of Minto, it is possible that he was related to them. William (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh. His father was already deceased in 1617 when he became an apprentice merchant with William Rutherford in Edinburgh. William of Barnhills (17th C.) brother of John of Barnhills who succeeded to the lands in 1628 and immediately sold them to William Bennet. William (17th C.) described as ‘mason in Newton’ in 1642, when, along with his brother Thomas and several other people, he was accused by Douglas of Cavers’ servant of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. William of Langraw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was ‘in Langraw’ in 1628 when served heir to his brother John of Barnhills. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £104. He may have been father of the William of Langraw recorded in the late 1600s. Rev. William (c.1606–c.67) son of Thomas of Minto, he had 3 other brothers who were also ministers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1626. It is possible he is the ‘Mr. William’ who became Burgess of Canongate in 1629. He became minister of Makerstoun in 1635, continuing there until his death. In 1632 he feued lands in Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. When his brother John of Minto died, he helped arrange for his nephew John to marry (Elizabeth Eliott of Stobs), even although he was under age. He probably acted as legal guardian for this nephew, and continued to have some rights over his estates later. He was recorded as owner of Hornshole in 1643, with John (probably his nephew, or just an error in the name) holding them in his stead. Also in 1643 he is probably the ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ who was listed as owner of most of Minto (along with John, his nephew, and Elizabeth Elliot). He may be the William listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may be the William of Minto, listed along with John in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was a member of the Assembly in 1645. In 1657 he gave his consent to a ‘wadset’ between John of Minto (his nephew) and John Scott of Brierryards for the lands of Hornshole. He is probably the ‘Mr William Turnbull’ recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hornshole, as well as in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William became minister of Eckford, and is recorded giving his permission to a dispotion of 1671 relating to Hornshole. Another son, Robert, became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1662. William of Bedrule (d.c.1667) perhaps son of Thomas and grandson of the William who died about 40 years earlier. He is recorded in the 1643 valuation of the county, as owner of half of the Mains of Bedrule, valued at £130, and Bedrule Mill, valued at £200. In 1668 his son Thomas was served as his heir in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. This Thomas would be the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. William (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £44. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where 2 Adams and a William also held lands. William (17th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. William of Bonchester (1624/5–86) recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard along with his son Adam (tenant of Doorpool) and Adam’s wife. He may have been son of Thomas of Upper Bonchester. He was probably succeeded in Upper Bonchester by his son George. Bonchester Turnbulls also later tenanted Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. It was said that the Turnbulls who farmed Doorpool were descended from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. William (17th C.) son of John of Minto. His father was already deceased in 1650 when he became an apprentice merchant with Thomas Lowrie in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) son of Thomas of Knowe, he is recorded in a discharge of 1658 in which he was ‘tutor’ for Thomas Turnbull of Standhill. He was probably brother of John of Knowe, and it is also possible that Thomas of Standhill was another brother, in which case he was also tutor to the children (Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) of the same Thomas ‘of Chesterhouse’ in 1664 when his lands were resigned to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) tenant in Newmill on Slitrig. In 1666 James Chisholme was accused of fighting with him in St. Mary’s Kirk. He pulled on Chisholme’s bonnet when he was asleep in church, and after Chisholme fell off his seat he struck at him, whereupon Chisholme pulled out a knife and cut his leg. The corn mill where he was miller was listed as ‘the Newemilne of Slitrig’. William (17th C.) brother of John of Minto, recorded in a deed of discharge in 1673. William (17th C.) elected town piper in 1674. He was ‘directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. This suggested that he was Burgh Officer, with duties including both pipes and drums. His salary was £13, 6s, 8d Scots. If he was not the same man as the piper recorded in 1702, then they were surely related. William (17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Bewlie. He was arrested around 1678 for being a Covenanter and condemned to be sold as a slave to the plantations. It seems that he was among the men who escaped from their ship in London and probably returned to Scotland. He is recorded on a 1684 list of men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. However, it is unclear what happened to him. William (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to Robert, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Robert (b.1683); Janet (again, b.1685); and George (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Robson and John Brown and in 1687 were William Rodger and John Turnbull (who may have been related). He is probably the William who (in turn) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Robson and Isobel Turnbull (probably related to him) in 1684. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leyden in 1681. He may be one of the 2 Williams who witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1687. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably in the Hassendean area. He married Christian Oliver in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Thomas Brown and Robert Turnbull (probably a relative) and in 1688 were James Redford and Richard Turnbull. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Margaret Clerk in 1685. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Bessie (b.1686). The witnesses were Michael and Thomas, who were probably relatives. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is on a 1684 list of men declared as a fugitive for frequenting conventicles. If he was later exonerated then he could be the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William of Sharplaw (b.1640/1) recorded in 1681 as witness in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe as a Covenanter. He was said to be 40 and married. He probably married Christian, daughter of William Kerr of Newhouse. In 1679, along with Walter Riddell of Newhouse he was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanter soldiers when travelling between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean and taken to Lilliesleaf Moor; he was then held by Thomas Turnbull of Standhill and others, witnessing the massing of armed men at the conventicle. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681 and Alexander Home in 1682. William of Langraw (17th/18th C.) probably the Turnbull of Langraw who paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He is recorded in 1693 when he witnessed a bond between Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichill. His eldest son William was also a witness. He was also ‘of Langraw’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He was the last Turnbull of Langraw, his heirs selling off the lands in 1801. William (17th C.) servitor to Lady Langlands. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at ‘ffoultoun’ (i.e. Fulton) in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Ruelton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Westwood in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier Lairds of Westwood. William (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Bontheaster in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier William of Bontheaster. William (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls right after William in Bontheaster. He is listed as ‘in ye midle of ye toun’, this presumably meaning Bontheaster. His son George is listed after him. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same William was gardner in Midshiels when his daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1711. He may be the William who married Jean Scott in Wilton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanebank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Richard, who was also listed there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Galalaw in 1697 when his son Thomas was baptised. The witnesses were George and Francis Scott. Perhaps another child was Margaret (b.1698).
may also be the William, married to Margaret Hill, whose son James was baptised in Wilton in 1695. William (d.bef. 1706) recorded in a ‘lyboll’ of 1703 with Andrew Mitchellhill (probably his brother-in-law). He is further recorded in the disposition of goods of his widow Janet Mitchellhill in Selkirk in 1706. He was ‘late of Broadhaugh’ and perhaps descended from the earlier Turnbulls of Broadhaugh. Alternatively he could be the same as William who was in Broadhaugh in Teviotdale. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 when his son William was baptised. Probably the same William was still at Ormiston in 1720 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may also be the William who was in Cavers in 1723 when his daughter Ann was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1709 when his daughter Helen was baptised. Thomas (b.1712), William (b.1713) and William (again, b.1715) may also have been his children. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Rae and their son Thomas was baptised in 1716. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Ledge-wood and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1720. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1718. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Bayers (or Byers) and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1722. William (17th/18th C.) miller at ‘Harestane miln’, which may be a version of Hartshaugh Mill (otherwise it is unclear where this is). His daughter Susan (1717/8–40) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with George, tenant at Upper Bonchester, so they were presumably related. He may have married Margaret, daughter of George of Bonchester (according to Walter Deans). William of Tofts (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Tofts. He was served heir to his father in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’ in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig. He is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and 1704. He was probably Laird of Tofts in 1694 when ‘Tafts his hous’ was taxed for having 2 hearths there. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Thomas (b.1708); Ann (b.1709); Euphan (b.1712); and William (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Turn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Crook. His son Andrew was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Douglases of Crook. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill whose son James was buried in Bedrule churchyard in 1711, aged 32. He must have been a descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, and was probably a son of Thomas and brother of Andrew (the last Laird of Bedrule). He is probably one of the 3 men of that name listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He is probably the William ‘in Bedroull’ whose wife Helen Scott’s will is recorded in 1685. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Ballantyne and their children included: Jean (b.1704); Rachel (b.1714); and Robert (b.1717). William (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick Parish. In 1712 his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick, having been born in ‘fornicat:’ with Elspeth Stoddart. The witnesses were James Falsye and ‘Mr’ Thomas Falsye. Probably the same cooper William married Mary Beattie and had a son Thomas in 1720. The witnesses were tailor Thomas Wilkie and Walter Scott of Nether Bonchester. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Bedrule. His son Robert was buried in Bedrule kirkyard in 1722, aged 2. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls of the area. He may have been the William whose son James was born at Bedrule Mill in 1709, and claimed descent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He was recorded as ‘Cockerheugh’ in the parish records, suggesting that he was associated with that farm and hence is probably related to other Turnbulls from there. His children included: Gilbert (1709); and Gilbert (again, b.1713). William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1719 he was described as ‘weaver without ye westport’ when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased Gideon Gardner. Their children included: Margaret (b.1720); and Gideon (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1735); and John (b.1743). The witnesses in 1724 were weaver Adam Brown and mason John Common. He was probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Waddell in 1725. William (17th/18th C.) tenant of Hassendenbank. In 1723 his daughter Bessie married Andrew, son of Thomas Irving in Westerhouses. His son Adam took over the farm. William (17th/18th C.) son of Richard, he lived at Minto. He got married in 1718, as recorded in Wilton and Minto Parishes (but with no wife’s name listed). William of Wester Swanshiel (d.1731) successor to James, who was probably his father or brother. He was succeeded by his son Hector and was buried in Hobkirk. William (18th C.) shepherd in Over Southfield. He is recorded there in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Dalgleish in Alton Croft. Perhaps the same William was in Alton Croft when he witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson, younger, in 1716. He married Jean Byers and their children included Katherine (b.1725) and Ann (b.1729). The witnesses in 1725 were Walter Dalgleish (whose own child’s baptism he witnessed on the same day) and Robert Grieve (probably in Fenwick), and in 1729 were Robin Henderson and Robin Chisholme. In 1729 he was ‘In Broadhaugh’, which was presumably the farm near Newmill. William (18th C.) mason in Cavers. In 1726 his twins Hugh and Isobel were baptised. There are several other children baptised in Cavers Parish at about the same time who could be his. William (18th C.) resident of Minto and Wilton Parishes. He was recorded at Midshiels in 1733 and in Minto Parish in 1736. He married Grissel Elizabeth Morton (or perhaps Martin) in 1736, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their daughter Grissel was baptised in Minto in 1733 (although that may be an error), with witnesses James Thomson and Andrew Stewart. He could be the William who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard, resident of Midshiels. Rev. William (1703–64) son of George, minister of Tyningham (or another account says son of Adam of Doorpool and Margaret Turnbull). It was claimed (in a history of the Scotts of Bonchester written in 1834) that he was a direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, but that there was no documentable proof of this. He was licensed in Jedburgh Presbytery in 1729 and became minister of Abbotrule in 1730, where he remained until his death. He paid window tax at ‘the manse’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He died unmarried. His sister Helen, married Walter Scott of Bonchester. William (1708–64) son of Andrew and Jean Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. His father was tenant at Minto Cleuchhead, and sometimes described as the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. He became tenant at Ancrum Woodhead. He married and had children, including Andrew and Thomas, who died young. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William ‘Will’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Rae in 1730. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1730, with witnesses John Langlands and John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded as ‘Broadlees’ in 1735. He succeeded James Douglas as tenant of Braidlies, near Brieryards (and note there was a contemporary tenant of Brieryards with the same name). He married Margaret Shiel and their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1735 with witnesses Robert Scott and James Dryden. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Turner in Burnfoot in 1741. William (18th C.) servant of Robert Buckham of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman Thomas Oliver. Perhaps the same William was ‘Junior w... ’ in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Brown. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He was probably related to the earlier weaver of the same name. William of Langraw (d.1787) last Turnbull Laird of Langraw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Boucher when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1786 he let the lands of Langraw to George and Walter Barry for 15 years, but died before the lease was up. He was succeeded by his closest relative, Mrs. Janet Rutherford, who had married Mr. Easton, an American settler, who sold the farm. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Langraw (valued at £104), as well as ‘Shell’s lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know, exclusive of that part belonging to Mr Elliot of Woollie’ (valued at £68 5s). His through-stone was on Cowdie’s Knowe by Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (18th C.) glazier in Hawick, probably one of the first men of that occupation on record. In 1765 he (along with Andrew, senior) witnessed a baptism for James Clerk. His wife was Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Margaret (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); Martha (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); and Isobel...
Turnbull (b.1767). The witnesses to the 1758 baptism were Bailie Thomas and mason Andrew, senior (who were surely related to him or his wife) and in 1765 were Bailie (probably Thomas) Turnbull, senior, and Andrew Turnbull, senior. Dr. William (c.1729–96) born somewhere near Hawick, although there is no baptismal record. His son describes him as ‘the Representative of the family of Bedrule’, who were strong dissenters; this probably means that he claimed direct descent from the Turnbull Lairds of Bedrule (e.g. he could have been a grandson of Andrew, last of Bedrule). He was educated in Hawick (presumably at the Grammar School) and at Edinburgh University (where he obtained his M.D.) and then at Glasgow. He settled in Wooler around 1752, where he was known for his care of the poor, and had patients sent to him from as far away as Edinburgh. It was said that patients came from over the Border in order to be attended by him. He also became Physician at the Bamburgh Infirmary, which was a charity helping the poor of the district. In 1777 he moved to London, where he lived at Well Close Square in Whitechapel and was a physician with the Eastern Medical Dispensary. While in Wooler he contributed medical articles to the ‘Ladies’ Magazine’ and the ‘Scots’ Magazine’ and also acted as medical editor for ‘Middleton’s Universal Magazine’. These included discussions of croup and diseases of both women and children. He also wrote medical articles for the ‘New and Complete Dictionary of Arts and Sciences’ (1778). He was preparing the publication of a practical system of medicine when he suffered a short and severe illness and died in London. His wife was Ann Turnbull, but it is unclear if Turnbull was her married or maiden name. Their children, baptised in the Presbyterian Church in Wooler, included: John Strother (b.1754), probably the eldest son, who died ‘in the prime of life, to a lingering and painful illness, which he had caught by sleeping in a damp bed at Turbridge’; William (b.1755), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (b.1756); Archibald (d.1758); William (again, b.1759), who became a surgeon with the Eastern Medical Dispensary and may be the same as the ex-naval doctor who wrote ‘The Naval Surgeon’ (1806); and Anne (b.1861). His son William posthumously published the first volume of ‘The Medical Works ... Containing a Popular Treatise on Health and the Means of Preserving it’ (1805), which includes a memoir of his life. There is a portrait of him in the form of an engraving. William of Tofts (18th C.) paid the window tax at ‘Toftshouse’ in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also recorded in an account of Lady Cavers in 1769. He was probably tenant farmer at Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and may have been related to the later James. He could be the ‘Tofteses Son Will’ who was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1715. He may be the William whose son Antony was baptised in Kirkton in 1751. William (18th C.) resident of Damside in 1751 and 1759. He married Agnes Robson in 1749 and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Christian (b.1751); Robert (b.1752); George (b.1754); Euphan (b.1756); John (b.1758); Euphan (again, b.1759); and Agnes (b.1763). The witnesses in 1751 were John and Robert Scott and in 1759 were Thomas Scott and John Anderson (probably a relation). William (19th C.) married Agnes Lamb in Hawick Parish in 1757. William (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Richardson and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for mason William Ekron in 1757. William (18th C.) Town Piper, recorded in Selkirk in 1758. William ‘Forfar’ (d.1815) tailor in Hawick. He owned property at 66 High Street, as well as the buildings behind No. 66 and 68. These were bequeathed to a relative, stockmaker Walter Murray, and later known as Murray Place. His death is recorded in Hawick, along with his nickname, whose meaning is unclear. William (1739/40–1820) tenant in Minto Townhead. His son Archibald died in 1832 and they are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the families of Andrew (tenant in Minto Cleuchhead) and William (tenant in Woodhead), who are probably closely related. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Park, and their son Andrew was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were James Waugh and William Riddell. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Bruce and their son Robert was baptised in 1774. The witnesses were Andrew ‘Birinet’ and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Swan, who died in 1778. William of Burnfoot (1745–1825), son of Thomas of Burnfoot (and sometimes called ‘of Minto’), he was born in Minto Parish. He ran the farms of Burnfoot and West Bucleuch and also managed the properties of Wilton Lodge and Tofts. He also spent a few years as joint tenant (with Charles Scott of Woolhope) of Mervinslaw; they are recorded as such.
on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785–86 and in 1788–94. He was recorded as being ‘in Burnfoot’ in 1788 on a list of voters within Roxburghshire. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. His servant William Thomson was recorded on the Militia ballot in 1801. He was a successful breeder of short-horn cattle before that was common. He was first President of the old Hawick Farmers’ Club, perhaps the first club of its kind in Scotland. An oil portrait of him was painted by John Watson-Gordon in 1821, at the expense of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, and once hung in the Tower Inn where the Club met; it was returned to the family in 1869. He leased the limestone quarry at ‘Slitrighead’ from Elliot of Harwood. He also carried out some money-lending, like his father before him. He is probably the William who was paid ‘for leading wood’ to help repair fences and for ‘banking the water’ of the Teviot at Hawick in 1785. In 1789 he and Robert Dickson were arbitrers for judging the value of a boundary dyke near Hawick. In 1797 he is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls at Burnfoot, with 4 work horses and 10 other horses. He married Eleanor (or Helen) Stephenson (of Kethorn, Durham) in Hawick in 1782 and she died in 1840, aged 84. Their children were: Elizabeth (1783–1831), who married John Renwick in 1814; Thomas Scott (1784–1867), who farmed at East Middle; Eleanor (1785–1853), who lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her sister Jane and died unmarried; Michael (1787–1849), who emigrated to Canada and died at Woodside, Brantford; Agnes (1788–1836), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William Ogilvie (b.1790), who died in infancy; Jean or Jane (1792–1866), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William (b.1794), who became a doctor; and John (1796–1875), who farmed at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. They are mainly buried at Bedrule cemetery. William (18th C.) servant on the Cavers estate. He is listed as a gardener in 1778 and coachman in 1779. He could be the William recorded at East Mains in 1782 and married to Magdalen Dryden, when their daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. Several other children baptised in Cavers at around the same time could be his, e.g. William (b.1784). William (18th C.) tenant at Bransholme Town and Castlehill farms, where he was replaced by James Grieve in about 1792. He was surely related to Walter, who was there in 1781 (or possibly ‘William’ is an error for ‘Walter’). William (1761/2–1842) 2nd son of Thomas, and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was the first of the family to return to the local area, after his grandfather had been driven away, partly for being a Jacobite supporter. He farmed near Camptown, then at Grange on the Abbotrule estate, where he was joined by his brother Adam. He married Agnes Pott, who died in 1841, aged 80. Their children included: Mary, who was born in 1793; Isabella, who died aged 19; and Agnes, who died in infancy. He later farmed at West Fodderlee until he retired in 1831, moving to Bongate, Jedburgh. His family are recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. William (18th C.) servant to the Laird of Wauchope in 1786 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1787 he married Nelly Mitchellill from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Isabel (b.1788); Mary (b.1790); and Adam (b.1794), baptised in Bedrule Parish, with the mother’s surname given as ‘Mitchel’. William (18th/19th C.) smith at Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded separately from the blacksmith and just before William at Westerhouses, and also owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Westerhouses in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) footman at Midshielis in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. William of Fenwick (1760–1840) elder son of Thomas of Fenwick. He succeeded to the lands of Fenwick and Brieryyards on the death of his father in 1825. He was ‘younger of Fenwick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. He was also recorded as ‘younger of Fenwick’ among the freeholders at the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He is probably the William ‘of Rashiegrain’ listed as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is mentioned as an important Hawick Parish heritor in the 1820s and 1830s, and was one of the Orrock Trustees appointed in 1834. He was listed at Brieryyards in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1837 he was listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory as William of Fenwick, residing at Brieryyards. He married Alison Turnbull and had an only son, Thomas. His trustees were recorded as owners of Brieryyards, Hornshole, Midshiels, Fenwick, Rashiegrain, Commonbrae and part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874.
William (18th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick, who was on the subscribers list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the stockingmaker (son of smith Thomas), whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816. Perhaps the same stockingmaker was listed in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and was still on the list in 1801. William (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (18th C.) tenant farmer in Acreknowe. His son James was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799 and his sons James and John in 1801. William (b.c.1770) tailor in Wilton Parish. He was listed as tailor at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 he was at ‘Pityhouses’ and in 1841 at Parkhouses. On the 1841 census he was living at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Burnhead Cottages). Elizabeth and William (also both called Oliver) were also there, probably his daughter and grandson. William (b.c.1770s) saddler in Hawick. In 1799 he was recorded as apprentice to saddler John Tudhope on the ballot for the Militia. He was also recorded being ‘Sadler with John Tudhope’ on the 1801 ballot list. William (18th/19th C.) wright at Stirches. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Richard was also listed as a wright there and was surely related. In 1799 he was still at Stirches among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish’ and was still a wright at Stirches on the 1801 Militia ballot. William (b.c.1770s) wright at Appletreehall according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. He is presumably distinct from the wright at Stirches who was on the 1797 ballot. He was still at Appletreehall on the 1801 Militia ballot. William (18th C.) labourer in Newcastle. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia, with the notation ‘Subst.’ suggesting that someone substituted for him; his name appears again in 1798, with labourer Joseph Balmer serving as his substitute. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had been drawn in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Longburnshiel in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot the same William was probably servant to ‘Mr Currie’ at Hallrule. William (18th/19th C.) tailor in Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (b.c.1780) servant at Burnhead in Wilton Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1801. William (1787–1846) 3rd son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of Wilton Schoolmaster James. He was born at Hoddleswoodie, Bonchester. In 1821 he became master of Hobkirk School, and served there until about a few weeks before his death. He was very fond of books and collected a small library at the school. He is probably the William listed at Hobkirk among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (1794–1870) 3rd son of Adam and Betty Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. He farmed at Merrylaw and Falnash. He was left the lease of Hassendeanbank when his father died in 1810. He also took on the lease of Skelfhill, which had been in his mother’s side of the family. He was recorded at Falthnash in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He is probably the William of Merrylaw who acted as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably also the William of Hassendean who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He married Margaret Scott (1810–45, who was probably born at Todshawhaugh). Their children included: Robert Laidlaw (1830–74); William Scott (1833–70), who died in New South Wales; James (1836–88), who died in Melrose; Thomas Scott (1837–77), who died in Adelaide; and Gideon Pott (b.1840). He secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably daughter of John Elliot of Binks. William ‘Wull the Bellman’ (c.1785–1859) Burgh Officer and bellman in roughly the 1820s to early 50s, being Halberdier along with ‘Tufty’ Wilson. He was born in Melrose. He lived in a house at the end of a close beside the old Town Hall, depicted in ‘An Old Hawick Close’. It is labelled ‘Mr. Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map, and would be at about No. 36. In 1841 he was living on the High Street with his wife Agnes and children Mary, Isabel and William. In 1851 he was at about 36 High Street and still listed as Town Officer. He was listed as ‘bellman, High Street’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 his widow Agnes was a lodging house keeper at 36 High Street. William (b.1785/6) originally from Southdean, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Ogilvie, who may have been related to the family of Thomas Ogilvie & Sons, woolen merchants in Aberdeen. In 1841 he was on Brougham Place and listed at No. 4 there in 1851, when he was a widower. His children included: George

(b.1819), cashier with Nixon’s; Joseph (b.c.1826); John Struthers (b.1829), who was a bank accountant; and Mary (b.c.1832). William (b.1794) 4th son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephen-son, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as a doctor and became Senior Physician of Huddersfield Infirmary (where his portrait hangs). His choice of location was probably influenced by the connections with his father’s wool sales. One of his sons was Vicar of Penniston in Yorkshire and Canon of Wakefield Cathedral. He died in Huddersfield. William (18th/19th C.) butcher at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory William (b.c.1790) resident of Castleton Parish. He was living at Langhaugh in 1841 and also in 1851, when he was a ‘Stone Dyker’. He was a dry-stone dyker at Snaberlee in 1861. He married Helen Armstrong (from Ireland) and their children included: Walter (b.1814); Robert (b.1821); Thomas (b.1822); Jean Scott (b.1824); Adam (b.1826); Mary (b.1828); Isabella (b.1829); William (b.1831); Andrew (b.1832); Joseph (b.1836); Margaret (b.1841); Janet (b.1844); and Elizabeth Oliver (b.1847). There may be more than one family here. William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer on Backdamgate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1836 he was assigned the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Menslaws (1794/5–1886) Accountant at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh. He could be the William, merchant in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was a tobacco manufacturer and grocer on the Howe-gate. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory his partnership is listed as ‘Irvine & Turnbull’, although it is unclear who the Irvine was. In the 1837 directory he was listed as a tobacconist himself on the Howe-gate, and is probably also the same man listed as a grocer and ‘victual dealer’ there. He was also listed as a Howe-gate tobacconist and grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jessie. In 1841 and 1851 he was a widower living at about No. 3 Howe-gate with his 4 children: John (b.1828), a baker; Andrew (b.1830), millwright; Margaret (b.1832); and William (b.1835). William (19th C.) farmer at Minto Townhead in the 1860s. He is surely related to the earlier farmer of the same place with the same name. William (19th C.) married Mary Hume in Southdean in 1836. William (b.c.1810) draper who was living at about 10 Slitrig Crescent on the 1841 census. His wife was Jean. William (b.1815/6) born in Wilton Parish, he was horse-keep at Silverbutthall in 1851 and groom at Mid-shiel in 1861. He married Margaret Whillans and their children included: John (b.1836/7); Robert (b.1838/9); Isabella (b.1840/1); William (b.1856); Margaret (b.1857); and James (b.1859). William (b.1816/7) wood merchant on Have-lock Street. In 1861 he is recorded employing 3 men, and was at about No. 12. His wife was Isabella and their children included William, Agnes, George and Isabella. William (b.1817/8) from Edinburgh, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Orrock Place and listed as a journeyman grocer. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is a greengrocer on the High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, William, John and Margaret. William (b.1819/20) head groom on the Minto estate in the 1860s. He was a non-resident voter of Cavers Parish. His wife was Elisabeth and their children included William, Isabella, Janet and John. William (19th C.) married Mary Lamb in 1847. The marriage was recorded in both Ha-wick and Wilton Parishes. William (19th C.) married Mary Hardie in Hawick in 1848. William (1830–1906) youngest son of James, School-master in Wilton, with his mother being Margaret Dalgleish, who later ran the ‘Image Gar-den’ school. In 1864 he co-founded the Edinburgh auctioneering firm Lyon and Turnbull. He mar-ried Jane Barbour and their children were William James, George Barbour, Charles Henry, Dr. Frederick John, Isabella Barbour, Margaret Mary and Jane Barbour. William Scott (1833–70) son William, farmer at Falnash and Merrylaw, his mother being Margaret Scott. He studied at St. Andrews University 1847–9. He died in New South Wales. William (d.1891) son of David (who made his fortune in India) and grandson of Thomas of Fenwick. He was born in India and lived for a while with his uncle William at Brieryyards. He leased the farm of Muirdean, near Kelso, then moved to the Channel Islands. In 1874 he returned to the Hawick area to deal with the family estates when his cousin Thomas died. He lived at Briery-yards and was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He also became a member of the Borders dining and coursing club, the Forest Club. In 1873 he was ‘Treades’ Steward’ at the Common Riding Races and was again a Steward in 1875 (when listed as ‘junior’ of Brieryyards). He later moved back to the Channel Islands, where he promoted the Presbyterian Church. He sold the Rodono estate and other lands in 1890. In 1836 he married Christian Hogarth, who pre-deceased him. His sons (all born at Makerston) were: David, who succeeded: William of Kilburn, Guernsey; and Dr. George Hogarth of Kelso. William (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Parkhead, recorded in relation to Stobs estate in the 1850s. He was probably related to James, farmer at Billerwell.

William (19th C.) shepherd at the Pietsnest in HOL Kirk Parish. He was one of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk, along with his wife, Euphemia Armstrong. He was also made an elder in 1851. William George (b.1844) son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He continued the tenancy in Spittal-on-Rule after the death of his father. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. He married Mary Mitchell, daughter of George Greig of Eccles in 1894. They had 4 children. William Scott (b.1856) son of James, who was tenant at Billerwell. He was educated as a chemist, but preferred the life of a farmer. He was tenant at Tythhouse in Rulewater. He married and had 3 children. William (19th C.) stocking-maker, who was elder of the Hawick Free Church around 1875. William (b.1854/5) son of John Struthers and grandson of weaver William. He worked for a long time with Thomas Purdom & Sons and later moved to Edinburgh. He married his cousin, daughter of his father’s brother George. William (19th/20th C.) original singer of ‘Clinty’. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William ‘Blinnd Wullie’ (?–??) Hawick man who was blind from his earliest days, but notable for his astonishing memory (remembering everyone’s birthday, for example), love for music and singing, and lack of self-pity. He was an accompanist at Common Riding events for several decades – ‘Whenever I meet Willie, I’m humbler as we part; God give me his contentment. His brave ungrudging heart’ [WL]. William (d.2002) Hawick born production director at Pesco’s, also known as leader of the Border Orchestra, and founding member of the Hawick Music Club. In addition he was involved with the Church of Scotland, Vertish Hill Sports Committee, Callants’ Club and Hawick Chamber of Commerce (also formerly spelled ‘Tornebole’, ‘Turnbull’, ‘Trumbill’, ‘Trumble’, ‘Trumbuel’, ‘Trumbull’, ‘Turnmill’, ‘Turnbul’, ‘Tymnbul’, ‘Turnbel’, ‘Turnbill’, ‘Turnble’, ‘Turnbul’, ‘Turnbule’, ‘Turnbulle’, ‘Turnbulle’, ‘Turnblw’, ‘Turnble’, ‘Turnbill’, ‘Turnbille’, ‘Turnebille’, ‘Turnebillis’, ‘Turnebole’, ‘Turnebull’, ‘Turnbulf’, and other variants).

Turnbull an Scott’s (turn-bul-an-skots) n. engineering firm based at 16, 18 and 20 Commercial Road. They moved into these buildings (previously the Urban Electric Company) when the company was established in 1933. The main office block is unusual in Hawick in having a Tudor style. The company were originally millwrights, but now specialise in custom-built heating systems. It started as Turnbull & Aitkin, later becoming Turnbull, Aitkin & Scott, and changing to Turnbull & Scott in 1955. More recently the firm moved to Burnfoot.

Turnbull an Sons (turn-bul-an-sunz) n. Charles Turnbull & Sons, a photography company of the latter part of the 19th century. Based on Jamaica Street in Glasgow, the firm branched out to Greenock, Kilmarnock, Hawick and elsewhere. In Hawick they set up their studio at 7 North Bridge Street in 1886, but only lasted until 1889. The building may have continued as a photography studio (under the name Torrance) until 1893.

Turnbull-Robertson (turn-bul-ro-burt-sin) n. main carpet manufacturing company in Hawick, operating in the second half of the 18th century in Orrock Place. It was founded by William Robertson in 1752, with Thomas Turnbull and others joining in 1769. They feued the land in the middle of the Sandbed in 1791, and the houses they built there were demolished in 1987. The Carpet Close is the one reminder of their existence.

the Turnbuls (thu-turn-bulz) n. local family, powerful during rieving days. The name is traditionally ascribed to when William de Rule saved King Robert from a bull, being rewarded with lands and the name of ‘Turnebull’. The first recorded instance of the name is a William Turnbull of Philiphaugh (possibly the same ‘William de Rule’) in 1313. Other lands in the Ettrick valley followed, as well as Minto and Bedrule in the 14th century. By the 15th century the family controlled much of the Rule valley and also held lands around Denholm and in the Borthwick valley. Closest to Hawick, there were Turnbuls Lairds at Whithope in 1454, Hornshole in 1456, Penchrise in 1464/5, Harden until 1468 and at Hassendeanbank through the 15th century. In a panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5, out of 21 prominent local landowners there were 4 of the surname Turnbull. Although no Turnbull collected a peerage, at the height of their influence they were as powerful as the Douglases, Scotts, Kerrs, Elliots and Armstrongs. Like other Border clans they played an important role in frustrating the English, but were also involved in feuds and power struggles on the Scottish side of the Border. A feud in Teviotdale with the Rutherfords was noted in Parliament in 1479. A 1503 list of men who forfeited goods for not attending the Justice-aire includes many local Turnbulls. Probably because they never rose to the nobility, their strength was challenged, their lands lost and the family eventually dispersed. In one incident in 1510 James IV publicly humiliated 200 Turnbulls at the ‘Deed Haugh’ near Rulemouth, and it is said that as many as 20 were hanged. In 1516 about 45 Turnbulls (and a few others) were pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King (the document survives among the papers of the Dukes of Roxburgh and gives a valuable record of the main family branches at that time). They are said to have sided with the English in some raids, but they fought for the Scots at Ancrum Moor in 1545, and were probably at the Redeswire in 1575. They once held towers at Minto, Barmhills (base of Minto Crags), Bedrule and Fulton, much of which passed to the Elliots and others. The Turnbulls of Bedrule and the Turnbulls of Minto appear to have been the most powerful branches in the 16th century, but their power waned in the early 17th century, with the Minto branch being involved in a serious feud with the Kerrs of the Jedburgh area in the years around 1600. Both of the main baronies were sold off before the last quarter of the 17th century. However, a related branch, the Turnbulls of (Hasseanden) Knowe were important local landowners until well into the 18th century. Descendants of the Turnbulls of Minto moved to Burnfoot, and were among the founders of the textile trade in Hawick. The Great Seal of the Turnbulls used to be in the possession of the Turnbulls of Burnfoot, before it moved to Canada when Michael Turnbull emigrated. There have been at least 18 Hawick Cornets with this surname. It seems likely that the roots of all Turnbulls can be traced back to an area within 20 miles of Hawick. Tumblows are probably derived from this family, through the early local pronunciation, and the French and French-Canadian family Tremblay may also come from Turnbulls who fought in France during the Hundred Years War. The clan as a family association was revived in 1977 by Hawick man John Turnbull. A book ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbulls’ was written by R.E. Scott in 1977. A statue, commemorating the turning of the bull and sculpted by Angela Hunter, was unveiled near the Heritage Hub in 2009 – ‘But little harness had we there But auld Badrule had on a jack, And did right well, I you declare, Wi’ a the Turnbulls at his back’ [CPM], ‘Between red ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fringed with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull; Where Turnbulls once, a race no power could awe, Lin’d the rough skirts of stormy Ruberslaw’ [JL].

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, also known as ‘Turnbull’s the Dyers’. The company was founded in 1819, with their main premises at 1–4 Slitrig Crescent and also later on Victoria Road/Carnarvon Street. The Slitrig Crescent premises were on Slitrig Dam, from which water was taken (and polluted water returned). In 1871 the firm employed 40 people. There was a major fire at the Slitrig Crescent works in 1940. The Victoria Road cleaning and dyeing works was to the west of Albert Mills, just over the mill lade, built in the early years of the 20th century. The central office block had a 70 ft high chimney tower, emblazoned with a distinctive ‘T’; it was all demolished by 1990. The surviving administration building was constructed in 1911, with designs by Alexander Inglis. It has a harled facade with red sandstone details, making it quite unique among Hawick factory buildings. The corner water tower is particularly distinctive, with architectural elements of the Modern Movement. An additional concrete building was constructed in 1920, and also demolished in 1990. The company had the largest dyeworks in the Borders, but went into liquidation in 2000. Part of the buildings were occupied by N. Peal, cashmere manufacturers from 1990 until 2006.

Turnbull's (turn-bulz) n. Turnbull’s grocery and wine shop at 51 High Street. It was established in 1855 and kept in the same family for 4 generations. The firm also made its own blended whisky, which they stored in a bonded warehouse on Walter’s Wynd. There was also a specially brewed ginger beer and other Turnbull-labelled products. Although the shop closed in the 1980, the firm continued with personalised whisky labelling before closing entirely. It was re-established by the 6th generation of the family in 2008 at 4 Oliver Place, but only lasted until 2017.

turneep

Hub on the site of the former Exchange Buildings. It was sculpted by Galashiels artist Angela Hunter, funded by the Turnbull Clan Association and depicts William of Rule ‘turning the bull’. It was unveiled in 2009.

Turner (tur-nur) n. Alan (1939–2020) artist who lived at Bairnkine near Jedburgh. In 2007 he starred in a short film shot around Hawick, called ‘Jess (alien sheep dog)’. Alexander (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Quhytlawhouse’ (presumably either Whitlaw or Whitlaw Haugh) in a 1612 document where many people were accused of charging more than the allowed percentage on loans.

Joseph (19th C.) married Margaret Rutherford in Hawick Parish in 1853. J.S. (19th C.) prominent member of Hawick Golf Club in the late 19th century, being Club Captain. He may have been the first person to achieve a hole in one on the Vertish course.

Richard (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill. He is recorded in 1684 when his son John is listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. In another version of the list he is recorded as John. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Lamb in Wilton in 1804. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is listed leaving from the Grapes every Saturday, bound for Galashiels.

John (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as ‘Jhon ’Turnour’ and he may have been from Ewesdale. John (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Johnne Turnair’. John (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Mill. In about 1684 he was on a list of Covenantant fugitives. John (18th C.) groom at Midshiels in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas.

William (17th C.) married Margaret Rutherford in Hawick in 1684. He is recorded in 1684 when his son John is listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. In another version of the list he is recorded as John. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Lamb in Wilton in 1804. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, who was at Burnfoot in 1741. He married Helen Leithead and their son James was baptised in 1741. His surname appears to be written ‘Turnen’ and the witnesses were William Turnbull and James Dryden.

William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Euphan Lamb; this could be the marriage of William with ‘Agness’ Lamb recorded in Wilton in 1757. Their twins William and Betty were baptised in 1766; the witnesses were shoemaker Andrew Scott and gardener William Scott.

William (d.1799) recorded in the register of deaths in Hawick Parish as ‘late Kendal Carrier’. William (d.bef. 1815) gardener in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1785 and 1787. He is probably the William recorded as owner of the Wheathole in 1767. He could be the William born to Andrew and Isobel Aitkin in 1757. Their twins William and Betty were baptised in 1766; the witnesses were shoemaker Andrew Scott and gardener William Scott.

William (d.1799) recorded in the register of deaths in Hawick Parish as ‘late Kendal Carrier’. William (d.bef. 1815) gardener in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1785 and 1787. He is probably the William recorded as owner of the Wheathole in 1767. He could be the William born to Andrew and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1738. He is probably the William who married Agnes (also called Janet) Lamb in 1757 in Wilton Parish and had children baptised in Hawick: Janet (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Margaret (b.1766; the witnesses were William Turnbull and James Dryden.)

James (18th C.) married Euphan Lamb in Hawick Parish in 1765. James (18th/19th C.) carrier who operated between Galashiels and Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is listed leaving from the Grapes every Saturday, bound for Galashiels.

The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were gardeners Andrew Turner (perhaps his father) and William Aitkin, in 1767 were the whole congregation and in 1772 were Andrew (again) and John Lamb (perhaps his wife's brother, whose own wife was Janet Turner). The death of his wife Agnes Lamb is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William (19th C.) grocer on the High Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (formerly ‘Turnair’ and variants).

Turner an Rutherford’s (tur-nur-in-ruthur-fordz) n. hosiery manufacturers that operated at least from 1885 until 1955, based at Mansfield Mills. The partnership was between Mr. Turner and John Rutherford, and they moved to Mansfield Mills in 1891. It may be that the firm never recovered from the 1955 fire, which destroyed part of the older buildings; at that time they employed 300 people. Their minute books and ledgers are stored in the Museum. Braemar took over the factory about 1969 and it later became Jaeger before being converted into flats.

Turner’s Corner (tur-nurz-körr-nur) n. former popular name for the sharp corner on Liddesdale Road by Lynnwood Cottage. It was named for the manufacturer who owned the property there. It was later also known as ‘Fraser’s Corner’. The road was eventually straightened to accommodate the passage of tanks from Stobs.

Turner’s Holm (tur-nurz-höm) n. area near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel Water. This was meant to be one of the locations where the cross-Border crimes and punishments were settled. It was traditionally the site of the duel between William Armstrong of Greena and Forster of Stanegarthside and perhaps where Kinnmont Willie was captured during a trance day (also ‘Turner Holm’; according to Sir Walter Scott, the name came from ‘tourney’, since games of chivalry were formerly practised here.

Turning Back the Clock (tur-nin-bawk-thu-klok) n. musical play written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, performed in the Exchange Hall in September 1912 for a Cricket Club fundraising bazaar. It was described as ‘A pathetic burlesque comedy in two acts’.

turnin hook (tur-nin-hook) n. a hand-held implement used in the knitwear industry, similar to a crochet hook, specifically used for turning up ‘run down’ stitches on a knitted garment.

the Turnpike Act (thu-turn-pik-awkkt) n. parliamentary act of 1768 which improved the roads in the Borders, specifically between Kelso and Hawick (now the A698), Jedburgh and Lauder (now the A68) and Hawick and Galashiels (now the A7). The Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss road (sometimes referred to as Mosspaulgreen to Haremoss) was also part of this general improvement. The work was paid for by landowning subscribers, who recouped their money through the tolls. This led to Toll-bars being set up at all the major routes out of Hawick.

the Turnpike Bar (thu-turn-pik-bawr) n. name sometimes used for the toll gate over the main road in one of the directions in and out of Hawick. It is explicitly used in the 1767 description of the Common to refer to the toll-bar at the top of the Loan – ‘...and from the Ford by the north dykes of the Common Loan into the Turnpyke Bar and the West Port of Hawick’ [C&L1767].

Turnpikeheid (turn-pik-heed) n. Turnpikehead, former name for a farm near Bunchester Bridge. William Telfer was there in 1868. It may be the same place known earlier as Roundabouts, near Chesters.

Turnpikeside (turn-pik-sid) n. former cottage in Southdean Parish, presumably beside the turnpike. Thomas Oliver was farmer there in 1797 and Andrew Rae was carter there in the same year. John Dalgleish and Andrew Rae were recorded there in 1799 and 1801 and George Dodds in 1799.

turnt (turn) pp. turned, became, grew – ‘Ferr on, the road turnt bieldeet o baith seides ...’ [ECS], ‘...for A’ll own A was dry again, turnt, lang or this!’ [ECS], Sic a muckle man ee hev turnt!’ [ECS] (see also turn).

turse (turs) n., arch. a bundle truss – ‘For, though thy mou’ is something wee, A mighty turse, O’ moral ills, is spued by thee – An empty purse’ [JoHa], a large bundle tied up like sticks or straw – ‘The quantity of broom to complete the thatching amounted to 290 turses, and a turse was probably a large bunch tied up like straw’ [WaD], v., arch. to truss, bundle.

Turvill (tur-vil) n. John ‘Jack’ (19th C.) stockingmaker from England who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. Along with his brother Henry, and several other Englishmen, he helped introduce cricket to the Town. In 1841 he is recorded at about 57 High Street, along with Sibbald, who may have been his wife (also written ‘Turville’).

Tushielaw (too-, tu-shue-law?) n. hill at the western end of the B711, reaching a height of 435 m. Tushielaw Inn is at its base, and nearby on the hillside is the ruined Tushielaw Tower (dating from about 1600, but built on an earlier house). This was home of the Scotts of Tushielaw, from at least the mid-15th century. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, being part of Ettrick Forest that was forfeited by the Earl of Douglas. William Scott held the lease in 1484 and Walter Scott (also of Howpasley) in 1488. John Burnet was recorded there in 1494/5 and recorded stealing 71 sheep from William Hall, who was also there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Scotts of Tushielaw branch later included Mary (of the ballad ‘Mary Scott’) and Adam ‘the King of Thieves’. William Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. In 1586 the farm ‘and the Kirkbank’ were raided by a gang of Armstrongs, who stole 200 cattle, 1000 sheep, 9 horses and ‘the whole insight of both steadings’. There was a feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thistlelaine in the 17th century. The lands were once part of the parish of Rankilburn. The lands of the Laird of Tushielaw in Selkirkshire were valued at £1615 in 1678. The lands were sold to Michael Anderson in 1688, and Andersons continued as Lairds until the mid-19th century, with the Chisholmes of Stirches also often living there. There was a fire there in the 1760s, but it is unclear if it was inhabited afterwards – ‘Ilk petty robber, through the lands, They taucht but it is unclear if it was inhabited afterwards – ‘Ilk petty robber, through the lands, They taucht

Tushielaw Inn (too-shue-law-in) n. inn in the Ettrick valley, at the road junction of the B711 from the Borthwick valley to the B709. It was once an important coach house – ‘Anon he halted at Tushielaw Inn. Where the wild flowers glow and gleam, Where the fragrant hawthorn and golden whin, With their gems bespangle the flowery linn Guarding Ettrick’s tranquil stream’ [TK].

Tutorie (choo’-ur-ee) n., arch. guardianship, state of being under a tutor, minority – ‘…or be his richt during the tyne of my tutorie, minoritie and less aige, with ony of my landis, …’ [SB1569].

T.V.E.I. (tee-vee-ee-I) n. Technical and Vocational Educational Institute, council offices, which came under Borders College when the College went private around 1992, then being called the Vocational Training Centre. It was based in a converted part of Wilson and Glenny’s mill at the foot of the Hunder Steps, and was burned down and rebuilt in 1961. The department was transferred to Gala in 2008.

twae (twä) n., arch., poet. two – ‘Item, whatsoever person committis the said theft twa several times …’ [BR1640], ‘…the ane of the present bailies and councillors of the towne and burgh of Hawick, and twa for everie trade …’ [BR1672], ‘Twa happy-hearted bairns …’ [??], ‘Sir, you’ll receive my twa pund ten, Wi’ what you call expenses …’ [JR], ‘An’ whasaeve-sir sail gar thee gang ae mile, gang wi’ him twa’ [HSR], ‘…For auld lang syne, or aiblins twa for everie trade …’ [SB1569].

‘Sir, you’ll receive my twa pund ten, Wi’ what you call expenses …’ [JR], ‘An’ whasaeve-sir sail gar thee gang ae mile, gang wi’ him twa’ [HSR], ‘…For auld lang syne, or aiblins twa for everie trade …’ [SB1569]. Tushielaw

twae-meenit’s silence (thu-twá-meeneits-sléens) n. sobriquet for the Hawick News (charitably also called the ‘threi meenit’s silence’).

Twae Rivers Theatre Company (twá-ri-vurz-thee-á-tur-kum-pi-nee) n. Two Rivers Theatre Company, local dramatic organisation formed by Jean Wintrope in 2000 to perform ‘The Gutterbludes’. Note that there are other theatre groups with the same name elsewhere.

twae-threi (twá-threí) n., arch. two or three, a few – ‘Twae-threi chiels war biggin furniter an planeeesheen on ti laaries’ [ECS], ‘A’l’ll carry twae-threi rae o waeter in for ee thre th the spoot’ [ECS], ‘And hither we’l come to breathe our guid steeds, There’ll be a twae three score o’s, We’ll laugh and jest Wi’ Teri zest, And sing our slogan chorus’ [JEDM], ‘Twa-threi gentry, and a wheen callants Are commemorated there... ’ [DH], ‘But they’re there, nane the less, and twae-threi mair I dinna ken the names o’ ’ [DH] (also ‘twae-hree’, ‘twae-hrei’; cf. twa three).

twalf (twawl) n. twelve – ‘oo’ll be it the Toon Hall when it chimes twal’, ‘Now the names o’ the twal aposels ar thae... ’ [HSR], ‘...wan Joab cam’ bak an’ smate o’ Edom in the Vallie o’ Saut twal thousan’’ [HSR], ‘And did ye imagine, Doctor, that I was to stay in Berwick ten or twal days? – ye ken that was impossible’ [RW], ‘...for no sooner did the clock strike ‘twal’ on the Sunday evening than the bell was immediately tolled to announce the ba’ morning’ [WaD], ‘What time is that? It’s chappin’ twal, Eh man, it’s flown sae fast’ [JRE], ‘...were encampit some ten or twal hunner, or mair, O’ oor braw Scottish callants, God bless them, I’m shure’ [BM1900], ‘...o’ muckle swa-drifts, twal fit deep, o’ heldstrang dugs, and donnert sheep’ [TD] (occasionally spelled ‘twal’ and ‘twel’).

twalth (twalth) n., adj. twelfth – ‘...an the name ranks aboot twalth in oor surname popularity’ [BW1979], ‘The eeleeventh’s an uphill struggle And the twalth can be a vex’ [IWL].

twallmonth (twawl-munth) n., arch. a year – ‘...A bairn wha thocht on a twalmonth As near an eternity’ [DH], ‘...I dinna care if I never see another on my plate for a twalmonth... ’ [DH], ‘A hale lang twalmonth tae wait, Afore there’ll be another yin’ [LI], ‘...about the Hoose o’ Refuge an how abune a thoosand vagrants hed passed throwe its doors in a twalmonth’ [BW1961] (cf. towmond).

twart (twawit) n., arch. twelfth, a garment on a machine that knits 12 garments at once – ‘There’s a blithe kind o’ music in the whushin’ o’ the frames, As steeks upon the needle bars Build up sae many twartls’ [WL].

twa three (twa-three) n., arch. a few, literally ‘two or three’ – ‘One day I was fishing at Bonnie Crawhill, An’ trying my best twa three trouts to kill’ [UB], ‘There’s nought but twa-three left the park in To save the breed’ [JoHa], ‘Tam tell’ him, syne he did engage, To put a twa-three week in Wi’ him that day’ [JoHa], ‘An’ wi’ the help o’ twa three queans We all were safely bedded’ [VV], ‘You’re juist the kind that, this twa three year, We’ve hoped might caa for oor Meg to speir’ [WL] (cf. twae threi).

tweed (tweed) n. generic name for fabrics made by twill weaves of coarse but soft wool, or products made from such fabrics, for which the Borders is famous. It began in Hawick probably with Wilson & Watson manufacturing ‘Scotch plaiding’ in 1817, followed by blankets, flannel and the Tweed twill. The origin of the word is apparently due to an order from William Watson & Sons’ clients Messrs. Harvey in London in around 1832, with ‘tweel’ (or perhaps ‘tweed’, meaning ‘tweedled’) being misread as ‘tweed’ when the customer re-ordered. Alternatively it is suggested that essentially the same story came from William Wilson & Sons, with client James Locke of London in 1826 (and yet another account suggested it was Wat-son’s and Locke). We shall probably never know which of these versions is correct, but whatever the details, it seems clear that the origin of the word ‘tweed’ was due to a misreading of an order from a firm in Hawick, probably with an influence of association with the River Tweed. By 1850 it was estimated that the weight of yarn used anually in Hawick to spin tweed and other woollen cloth was about 1,250,000 pounds. Around 1900 it was estimated that 15 of the Town’s mills were involved in tweed production. In the early days, manufacturing firms in Hawick tended to specialise in either hosiery or tweed, but tweed diminished through the 20th century, with no tweed being manufactured after about 1960.

the Tweed (thu-tweed) n. Tweed River, principal river of the Borders, being 97 miles (155 km) long and the 4th largest in Scotland. Its source is Tweed’s Well north of Moffat (interestingly only about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde
and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at Tweedbank Tweedenbank 1654 map). Tweedbank (tweed-bawngk) n. town constructed as urban expansion after the 1968 Johnson-Marshall Report. Its construction was resisted for years by locals before it was built. It never reached the targeted population levels, and as a community it has few services of its own, being essentially a suburb of Galashiels.

Tweed Commissioners (tweed-ko-mi-shi-nurz) n., pl. the River Tweed Commissioners, a body set up by private Acts of Parliament of 1857 and 1859 to manage salmon fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries. Another Act of 1969 extended their responsibilities to include all freshwater fish. Their activities are funded from levies on owners of fisheries. The current Council is the ruling body, with 81 members, 43 of whom are appointed by the local authorities to represent angling clubs and other community groups.

Tweeddale (tweed-dal) n. valley of the River Tweed, often referring to the upper part of the valley specifically, lying between the Yarrow and Gala watersheds. Historically the word was used to refer collectively to Peeblesshire and Selkirk-shire. It was later a district of the Borders region, essentially the same as Peeblesshire (it is ‘Tueddail’ in 1519/20).

Tweeddale (tweed-dal) n. David (17th C.) son of William, Burgess of Hawick. In 1633 he became an apprentice with painter John Workman in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) recorded as a merchant and Burgess of Hawick when his son David became a painter’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1633.

Tweedens (tweed-din) n. former seat of the Armstrongs, just to the east of Newcastleton. ‘Young Ector Armstrng’ was there in 1541, when he reset some other Armstrongs, referred to as English rebels. It is recorded as ‘Twyde’ on a map of Lidddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561.
Ringan, Hector and Jock of Tweenden are recorded in 1583 and Ninian of Tweeden in 1606. William and John Armstrong ‘of Tueden’ are recorded in 1611. ‘Johne Armstrong, callit of Tueden’ is recorded in 1622 and Francie ‘callit Tueden’ in 1623. It may be the same place that is on the list of parts of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 as ‘Helene Tweidmes lands’. In the same document is recorded the farm of ‘Megie Twedmes’, whose meaning is also obscure (it is ‘Tweed’ in 1541, ‘Tweedane’ in 1576, ‘Tweedon’ in 1580, ‘Tweedon’ in 1583 and ‘Tueden’ in 1599 and 1622).

Tweedbank (tweed-din-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to (or perhaps the same as) Hillhouse. Labourers Francis Nichol and John Armstrong lived there in 1841 and William Tweedside (tweed-vaw-lee-mown'-in-res-kew-teem) n.

twine (twIn) v., poet. to spin, twist, weave – ‘Wult thou twyne owt thine angir til a’ genera-tians?’ [HSR].

twiner (twi-nur) n. someone who twists wool into thicker yarn – ‘There are about 30 twiners in our works. There were other twiners working at the same kind of yarn’ [HAd1868].

twinset (tuIn-, tuum-set) n. a knitwear garment consisting of a cardigan worn over a short-sleeved, tight-fitting sweater. The style appears to have originated at Pringle’s around the 1940s, helping launch the company into the heights of fashion. Pringle’s designer Otto Weisz is said to have thought of the name after seeing a woman pushing twins on Hawick High Street (also written ‘twin-set’ and ‘twin set’).

the Twirlees (thu-twir-leez) n.

Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team, which works closely with other organisations. In 1988 they helped with the Lockerbie disaster as well as countless less serious incidents. The Team trains every Wednesday night.

Tweedside (tweed-sid) n. farmstead in eastern Liddesdale, near the head of the Tweed Burn, a mile or more north of Scotch Kershope. Andrew Pott was shepherd there in 1797, Walter Lunn in 1799 and John Crozier in 1835.

Tweedenside (tweed-sid) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, situated on the south bank of the Tweed Burn. Stobie’s 1770 map shows it to the west of the farmsteads of Catheugh and Spoutgills.

Tweedie (tweep-dee) n. Mary (1768–1845) born in Lasswade, she married Arbroath merchant William Renny. She was grandmother of Sir William Renny Watson and moved to Hawick later in life. She is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery.

Tweedmouth (tweed-mowth) n. town that is effectively the industrial part of Berwick, but on the English side of the Tweed.

Tweedside (tweed-sid) n. pipe tune dating from at least the late 17th century, with several alternative sets of words – ‘From Teviot’s banks I see them wind their way: ‘Tweedside’, in sad farewell, I hear them play’ [JL].

Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team (tweed-vaw-lee-mown’-in-res-kew-teem) n. organisation formed as a volunteer group in 1966 and is now a registered charity. It has helped in many search and rescue operations in the Border hills. The organisation grew out of the Cheviot Walking Club in the early 1950s, with the first search and rescue team set up in 1963 and named the Borders Search and Rescue Unit. This was in response to the growing number of inexperienced hikers walking the Cheviots. This outfit split into 3 sections (based at Yetholm, Duns and Gala), with the Gala-based section being renamed Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team, with police officer Tony Robinson as its first Team Leader. From humble beginnings, the group has grown into a well organised and experienced group, which works closely with other organisations. In 1988 they helped with the Lockerbie disaster as well as countless less serious incidents. The Team trains every Wednesday night.

The style appears to have originated at Pringle’s around the 1940s, helping launch the company into the heights of fashion. Pringle’s designer Otto Weisz is said to have thought of the name after seeing a woman pushing twins on Hawick High Street (also written ‘twin-set’ and ‘twin set’).

the Twirlees (thu-twir-leez) n. former name for an ill-defined area of the Wellogate, being associated with the approach to open country on the east side. The name is believed to have originated from a turnstile which was at the end of a straight lane running roughly from the end of the present Park Street to the Braid Road. The turnstile was there up until around 1885, and was a simple cross-wise pattern of two bars revolving on a post, probably installed to protect the town from horse traffic or straying cattle in that direction (there is no evidence to support a suggestion that the origin may be a corruption of ‘Tuileries’ from the Napoleonic War prisoners quartered in Hawick).

Twirlees Road (twir-leez-rød) n. street in the Wellogate running from the top of Brougham Place to Orchard Terrace, named in 1908. It follows the line of the former path leading to the Braid Road with a turnstile at the end, which is believed to have given its name to the area. The path ran outh from the top of the present Park Street to near the top of the steps at Braid Road. The turnstile was there until the mid-19th century, and consisted of two wooden bars fixed cross-wise onto a strong post.

Twirlees Steps (twir-leez-steps) n. name sometimes used for the stairs between the end of Twirlees Road and the Braid Road.

Twirlees Terrace (twir-leez-te-ris) n. street in the Wellogate between Twirlees Road and Douglas Road East, named in 1915, and taking its name from the name already in use for the general area.

Twislehope (twiz-lup) n. farm just to the south off the Hermitage Water road, where the Twislehope Burn meets the Chapel Grain. The lands were valued at 8 merks in 1541. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch by 1632. Archibald Goodfellow was tenant there in 1694. There were Elliots there in the 17th century, when it was sometimes referred to as ‘Castlehope’ (although that may just be an error). It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it covered 2225 acres, bounded by Billhope, Carewoodrig, Dinlees, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote, Tarras, Unthank and Blackhall. It is stated that ‘here is but little corn land or meadow for this farm is very mountainous’. In 1792 Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited ‘auld Thomas o’ Twizzlehope’, who was known for his skill on the Border pipe, and was said to have the original tune for ‘Dick o’ the Cow’. Thomas Elliot was recorded there in 1797, William Anderson, William Armstrong and William Elliot in 1799 and John Haliburton in 1801. Alexander Easton was there in 1821. Andrew Elliot was tenant there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Scott was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 19th century. Walter Elliot is recorded at ‘Cawslip’ in a directory of 1868 (also written ‘Twizelhope’ and variants; the name probably derives from the Old English ‘twisla hop’, meaning ‘valley where two streams fork’; it is first recorded as ‘Cwyslep’ in 1376 and is ‘Twylishop’ in 1541, ‘Tweyslehope’ in 1632 and ‘Tuilshope’ in 1694; ‘Tuilspoppq’ appears to be the spelling on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Tuilshep’ and ‘Tuilshope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, with the modern spelling appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Twislehope Hope (twiz-lup-hop) n. farmstead in the Hermitage valley, up the Twislehope Burn from Twislehope itself. There were Scotts there in 1841 (note the double use of ‘hope’).

Twizel (twi-zul) n. village near where the Till flows into the Tweed. The 15th century bridge there has a single-arched span of about 27 m, the longest in Britain at the time. This was a significant crossing point, where Surrey’s men crossed behind the Scots at the Battle of Flodden (also spelled ‘Twizell’).

twun (twun) n., adj. a twin – ‘...his twun brother whae’s his absolute double’ [IWL], v. to twin – ‘Hawick was twummed wi Baillieul’.

tyke (tik) n., arch. a tick, cover of a bed, mattress or bolster that contains the filling, a light mattress – ‘Lift the tyke, that’s filled wi’ flocks ...’ [IJ], a short and fat person, usually a woman.

tyke-a-bed (tik-u-bed) n., arch. a cloth case for a mattress, bed-tick, a light mattress, a very squat or fat person, particularly a woman (also written ‘teik-a-bed’; noted by E.C. Smith).

tykin (tì-kin) n., arch. a tick, linen cloth for making a bed-tick, a filled bed-tick – ‘Tyken o’ a bed, used for the bed itself, Teviodt.’ [JoJ].

the Tyne (thu-tìrn) n. river in Northumberland, formed from the confluence of the North Tyne and the South Tyne near Hexham, then flowing through the county of Tyne and Wear to reach the sea between Newcastle and Gateshead. The North Tyne rises near the Border, north of Kielder Water and passes through Bellingham and Hexham – ‘Oh, where is the huntsman in Tyne or in Teviot, In England or Scotland, that’s equal to thee?’ [JTe], ‘...Then seeking the South that held his shrine, Heard the low hills echo ‘To Tyne! To Tyne!’ [WHO].

typhoid (ti-foid) n. disease marked by fever accompanied by intestinal inflammation and ulceration. There was a major outbreak in Hawick in 1938, leading to the town being temporarily ostracised by industrialists and visitors. Many services, such as laundry and the Library were suspended and public events were cancelled. Hospitals were repurposed and laboratories were set up. The epidemic lasted for 6 weeks, with 105 cases being treated in hospital and 5 people died. It was eventually discovered that there was a probable single carrier of the disease, who worked in the Store bakery (although how they brought it to the Town is not documented).

Tyribus Ye Tyr Ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-heebbe-us ye tyr ye Odin) n. town slogan, also spelled ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ and other variants. This particular version is the one that appears on the town coat of arms (the origin, meaning and age of this phrase are all uncertain).

Tyr heebbe us ye tyr ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-heebbe-us ye tyr ye Odin) n. another version of the slogan, displayed at the Colour Bussing in the early 20th century. This spelling is inspired by one suggestion for the slogan’s meaning, ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’, from the Anglo-Saxon.

Tythehouse (ti-tis, ti'-is, tith-hoos) n. Tythehouse, farm in Hobkirk Parish, on the road between Forkins and Harwood. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate, being in 1637 described as the ‘2 merkland’ which is a ‘pendicle’ of Harwood. It passed (along with Harwood) from William Lord Herries to James Hamilton in 1602 and confirmed to Francis Hamilton in 1610. Not long afterwards it was part of the estate of the Lorraines and then sold to the Elliots along with Harwood in 1637. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernlie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. Andrew Hair was there in 1739. William Dalgleish was tenant there in 1797, Mark Elliot in at least 1799–1801, Walter Smith in 1799 and John Lunn in 1801. Thomas E. Boog and W. Maben were tenants in the 1860s and Tom Smith in the late 19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and enclosure near the Harwood Burn, to the south-west of the farm, as well as a cottage and garden just north-east of the farm, neither of which are extant. There was also formerly a mill running on the 2 mill ponds to the south-west, which probably powered a threshing mill (it may be the place transcribed as ‘Tytos Renis’ in a bounding charter of 1567 and ‘Titois Renis’ in 1604; it is spelled ‘Tythus’ in 1602, ‘Tytus’ in 1609, 1610, 1630 and 1631, ‘Tytous’, ‘Tittous’ in 1632, ‘Tythous’ in 1633 and 1637, ‘Tythas’ in 1655, ‘Tithouse’ in 1656 and 1694, ‘Tythehouse’ in 1699, ‘Titehous’ about 1700, ‘Tythehouse’ in 1739 and 1769, ‘Titus’ in 1797 and ‘Tithouse’ in 1801; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Tyth house’).

Tythehousefield (ti-tis-feeeld, tith-hoos-feeeld) n. former name for lands in Rulewater, recorded as ‘Tythhousfield’ in a 1649 discharge of a loan, along with Tythehouse and Harwood. This may be the same farmstead as ‘Titus foord’ recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Robert Scott was tenant. It may also be the ‘Tythehouse Ford’ where Walter Cavers was living in 1799 and 1801.

-ual (wel, wul) suffix, arch. occurring in words such as ‘actual’, ‘annual’, ‘continual’, ‘gradual’, ‘individual’ and ‘virtual’ (note the local pronunciation).

Uchtred (ooch-trid) n. (12th C.) priest of Lilliesleaf. In about 1160 an agreement between him and Auskittel Riddell was confirmed by Pope Alexander III. It is unknown when exactly he was priest, but the agreement appears to have been made between 1114 and 1147. The name was also recorded in the same century in the Molle and Scott families.

Uchtred (ooch-trid) n. (12th C.) son of Oswulf and grandson of an earlier Uchtred. With his consent his father regranted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in about 1166. His son Thomas and maternal uncle Edmund were witnesses to the same document, as well as Ralph ‘son of Uchtred’. A further confirmation at about the same time was made by his son Thomas. He is probably the ‘huctredo filio oulli’ who witnessed the grant of lands in Whitting to Melrose Abbey by Patrick udder-lock (u-dur-lok)n., arch. a lock of wool growing around or pulled from a ewe’s udder (often plural). v. to pull a lock of wool from near a ewe’s udder – ‘Udder-lock, to pluck the wool from the udders of ewes, to allow the lambs free access to the teats, also, for the sake of cleanliness, Roxb.’[JoJ].

ull (ul)contr. will – ‘Nochts ull stoap ir if she’s taen the maggot inti er heed’[ECS], ‘The bizniss ull no lest lang wui that waister o a son’[ECS] (sometimes just written as the contracted ‘Ill’; see also will).

the Ullies (thu-u-leez)n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Ulston (ul-stin)n. farm about a mile east of Jedburgh, formerly a barony connected with the steward of Jedburgh Abbey. It was owned by the Haswell in the 17th century and tenanted by the Caverhills in the 18th and 19th centuries. The farm was later split into Wester Ulston, Easter Ulston and Mount Ulston. Wester Ulston contains a triangulation pillar at a height of 174 m (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse prenominal name ‘Ullir’ and Old English ‘tun’ for ‘farm’; it first occurs as ‘Ullveston’ and ‘Ullmerstoun’ in the mid-12th century).

um (um)prom. him – ‘A’ll tell um’, ‘his brother persuaded um ti ride ti Mosspaule’, ‘she’ll sort um oot’, ‘…gie um a gude Hawick gill; it’ll dae um nae herm’[JEDM], ‘…A snuedy steveely on about thirty yards ahint um’[ECS], ‘Now oo’ve hed taec hide the thing frae um … ’[AY].

Umfraville (um-fra-vil)n. Gilbert (c.1244–1307) son of Sir Gilbert, an English Baron, who was 1st Earl of Angus. He was Warden of the Marches in the late 13th century. He was created Baron Umfraville and was 2nd Earl of Angus. He was recorded in 1265/6 in regard to lands in England and swore fealty to Henry III in 1266/7. Also in 1266/7 he was granted free warrant of his lands in Northumberland and granted a market at his lands in Rutland. In England he held the title of Lord of Redesdale. In 1269 he was in dispute with William Douglas over the lands of Faudon.
in Northumberland. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1291. He lived at Prudhoe Castle in Northumberland, married Elizabeth Comyn and was succeded by his son Robert. Sir Ingram (d.c.1321) son of Robert. He inherited the English and Scottish estates of Ingram Baliol. As an ambassador he helped establish the ‘Auld Alliance’ in 1295.
In 1296 he was on the English side at the siege of Berwick and fought on the English side at the Battle of Falkirk in 1298, but was on the Scottish side at the siege of Stirling Castle in 1299.
In 1300 he was appointed as a Guardian of Scotland, but resigned after a year, to be replaced by John de Soulis. He was involved in the siege of Lochmaben Castle in 1301, was made Sheriff of Jedburgh Castle in 1302 (possibly acting as Sheriff for the county) and was an ambassador to France again in 1303. Forfeiting his lands to the Englishman Sir Henry Percy in 1304, he had them reinstated by Robert the Bruce in 1306. However, he switched to the English side again in 1307, bening made Guardian of South and West Scotland by Edward II. He also fought with the English at Bannockburn, being captured and ransomed afters wards. He had a passport of safe conduct through England in 1320, along with his chaplain, 12 squires, 4 valets and 24 grooms. He was one of the signatories of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320 and died in England shortly afterwards. Sir Robert (d.1436) Governor of Berwick and Vice-Admiral of England. His men burned Jedburgh in 1410 and 1416. He owned the tower at Otterburn, and defeated the Scots at Yeavering, near Wooler, in 1414. His forces probably razed Selkirk and its castle in 1417, and burned Hawick in 1418. He was also present at the burning of Peebles. He was the last of the male line of Umfraville, a once powerful Northumberland family.

Underayll (un-dur-II) n. Thomas witness to a sasine of 1436 for lands of ‘Silwynislandis’, probably near Jedburgh. He is described as ‘burgess of Hawyc’ and he appears as witness with Richard ‘of Aynisle’, Patrick ‘Hangatsyd’ and notary Simon ‘of Dalgyles’. Since 2 of them have local connections, it is reasonable to assume that he really was a Burgess of Hawick, hence demonstrating the Burgh status in 1436, 3 years after Simon of Routledge is the first Hawick Burgess on record.

Underchesters (un-dur-ches-turz) n. former name for lands in the western part of Wilton Parish, possibly associated with ‘Highchesters’ It is referred to as a ‘3 merklands of lands of Underchesteris’ in a charter transferring it from Henry Wardlaw to Robert Scott of Muirhouse in 1482.

Underdamside (un-dur-dawn-si) n. street named after its proximity to Wilton Dam, and to distinguish it from Damside (Victoria Road). The area can be seen in a sketch from the early 19th century. It is sometimes also ‘Lower Damside’. The row of houses was originally reached by a footpath, which was turned into Bath Street in the early years of the 20th century. The houses became uninhabitable and were demolished after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959. The site was rebuilt as part of the mill in 1961, the buildings later being used for educational training purposes. All that remains of the former street is a footpath connecting to Wilton Path.

the Under Haugh

the Under Haugh (thu-un-dur-hawch, -hawf) n. formerly part of the Common Haugh, lying to the north of the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road), which separated it from the Upper Haugh. It extended approximately to where the Baths were later built and covered a little over 7 acres. It was once the site of the Bleachfield, and also formerly used for some Common Riding events. Part of it (7424/000 acres around where the Burns Club is now) was sold to the North British Railway Company in 1847 and passed into local business hands in 1854. For the Friday afternoon and Saturday Common Riding Races, there were 4 pieces of movable fence separating the Under from the Upper Haugh, so that both could be used together. The selling of the Under Haugh probably contributed to the decline in the popularity of the Common Riding in the 1860s and 1870s. But soon afterwards the area was used in the industrial development of the town and the raising of feus for the Council on Commercial Road (note this is sometimes mistakenly identified with the Little Haugh, which is sometimes called the Lower Haugh).

the Union Flag (thu-yoon-yin-flawg) n. name sometimes given to the earliest existing Common Riding flag, of 1707, from the erroneous assumption that it was made to commemorate the Union between Scotland and England. The flag still exists in the Museum. It measures about 34 inches along the staff and was pennon-shaped, bearing the date 1707, and the much faded yellow and blue colours. It was made to replace an earlier flag, which had deteriorated too much to use, and which some have suggested may even have been the original of 1514. The connection to the ‘Union’ appears to have been made by James Wilson and then William Norman Kennedy, presumably just because of the date. It is now on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower, having undergone restoration work in 1992.

Union Haa (yoon-yin-haw) n. Union Hall, former property that was part of the Linthill estate, the mansion house standing on the south side of the Ale Water. In the early 18th century it was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf. John Harvey was tenant there in 1731. The lands there were valued at £121 10s in 1788 (it is ‘Unionhall’ in 1731 and 1788).

the Union Inn (thu-yoon-yin-in) n. public house behind 28 High Street in the early 19th century.

the Unionist Club (thu-yoon-yin-ist-klub) n. the Unionists, or Liberal Unionists, supporters of a united Britain and Ireland, split from the Liberals in the 1880s, became allied with the Tories and merged with the Conservative Party in the 1910s. Hawick Unionists had a separate club from the 1880s to 1912. A company was formed to run the Clu, the Hawick Unionist Club Company Limited, existing 1896–1901 and with records in the National Archive.

the Union o the Croons (thu-yoon-yin-thu-kroonz) n. the coronation of James VI of Scotland as James I of England. This effectively ended 3 centuries of warfare in the Borders.

Union Poorhouse (yoon-yin-par-hoos) n. the Union Poorhouse, another name for the Combination Poorhouse.

Union Street (yoon-yin-stree') n. street winding between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place, built around 1865 as a useful bypass from the Jedburgh to Edinburgh roads. The name was chosen before any building started, with the houses built soon afterwards. At the end of the 19th century the Procession on the Friday of the Common Riding would pass along this street and then stop at the Bourtree Place end while the Cornet and supporters went to Bogliebarns. Th street is still used on the route to loop back to the High Street on the evening after the Thursday Night Chase. T. Lunn grocer’s shop was at No. 5 in the mid-1900s. A pet shop stood at No. 1 for a long time in the latter part of the 20th century. Masonic Lodge No. 424 is at No. 8 (the name probably comes from the Union of the two main roads, but there may also be a connection with the Border Union Railway).
Union Street

Union Street (yoon-yin-stree’)
n. street in Newcastle-on-Tyne, off the main B6357 near Douglas Square.

Union Street Hall (yoon-yin-stree’-hal) n.

Unshank (un-shawngk) n. name for lands that were once in Liddesdale. It is listed in a rental roll of 1541 as ‘Unshank’, when it was vacant. This could be the same place as John Armstrong ‘called Unshank’ on a list of thieves to be apprehended in 1642. It is possible this was Unthank in Ewesdale.

Unshope (unz-hop) n. probably name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, recorded as ‘Vnishop’. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but the other lands listed were Giddenscleuch, Binks and ‘Langbittis’.

unlockenable (un-slo-kin-u-bul) adj., poet. unquenchable – ‘. . . but he wull burn up the caff wi’ unlockenable fire’ [HSR].

Unthank (un-thauignk) n. farm in Ewesdale, on the east side of the A7, about a mile south of Fiddleton Toll. Here are the remains of the pre-Reformation Over Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Mark, with its ancient churchyard. Also nearby was a mediæval settlement owned by the Lovels, and a former farmstead further up the Unthank Burn. On the opposite side of the A7 there are the remains of another former settlement. The superiority of the lands was held by the Homes in the early 16th century and the name is recorded in a list of Ewesdale lands from at least as early as 1506 when the superiority was granted to Alexander, Lord Home. Hob Elliot was ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. Franklin D. Roosevelt was descended from James Murray who was born and farmed here, and emigrated to North Carolina in 1735. Miss Elliot was recorded there in 1787, Charles Aitchison in 1792 and Mrs. Aitchison was there in 1797, James Thomson in 1799. Edward Aitchison was farmer there in 1841, and teacher John Little was also living there. David Scott was farmer there in the 1860s (unrelated to the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish; it was ‘Vthank’ in 1535 and 1663; the origin may be Old English ‘unthances’, meaning ‘without leave’, i.e. referring to a squatter’s farm, or it may refer to lands with ‘ungegrateful’ soil).

Unthank (un-thawngk) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, located between Hobkirk Kirk and Forkins, on the west side of the Rule valley. Forkins was sometimes formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. Alexander Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and both he and Henry Turnbull in 1494/5. Leo Turnbull was tenant there in 1516. At the reformation the teind sheaves were valued at 1 boll and held by the Earl of Lothian. Archibald Turnbull is recorded there in 1586. In 1643 the proprietors were Robert and David Turnbull, and it was valued at £66 13s 4d. In the late 17th century it was part of the lands of Stobs whose rents were assigned to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott, Magdelen Nicolson, and her surviving children. It was separated from Stobs to become part of the estate of Stonedge in 1671. In the early 18th century it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and valued at £66 13s 4d. He sold it to Thomas Scott of Stonedge, who had the lands enclosed in a turf dyke, with a double thorn hedge and a row of beech trees (some of which survive). The ‘Clieugh or back brae of Unthank’ was sold by Thomas Scott of Stanedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757; this piece of land appears to have been valued at £67 11s 1d, and was £64 2s 8d in 1788. Andrew Oliver was then tenant, followed by Rev. John Riccarton. The farm was then let along with Wester Swanshield and adjacent lands and Thomas Veitch was tenant there in 1797. In the last quarter of the 18th century there were 4 residents in the hamlet there, along with a blacksmith, Thomas Scott. Labourer John Taylor was living there in 1801. It was subsequently divided between Harthshaugh Mill and Blackleemouth. It was listed as ‘Unthank, also part of Stonedge’ among lands owned by Cornelius Elliot in 1811, valued at £67 11s 1d. There were Murrays there in 1841. The farm is long gone, but the name survives in Unthank Wood and a field that was called Unthank until recent times (it is recorded at least as early as 1677 as ‘Unthank’; it appears to be ‘Unthanche’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, is ‘Unthanc’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and ‘Unthank’ on Stobie’s map of 1770; there are places of the same name in the Eves valley, near Perth and at least 2 more in Northumberland; the origin may be Old English ‘unthane’, meaning ‘ingratitude’, signifying unprofitable land, although other ideas have been suggested, e.g. a corruption of ‘shank’.
Unthank

Upper Bonchester see Ower Bonchester

Upper Burnsmooth (u-pur-burn-smooth) n. former farm at Burnmooth in Castleton Parish. William Amos was a farm servant there in at least 1799–1801 (see Burnmooth).

Upper Calaburn (u-pur-kaw-la-burn) n. former name for part of the farm of Calaburn. Agricultural labourer James Stevenson was there in 1841, as well as spinster Margaret Scott and ‘Independent’ Nelly Scott. However, it appears to have been abandoned by 1851.

the Upper Common Haugh (thu-u-pur-ko-min-hawch, -hawf) n. another name for the Big Haugh.

Upper Croft (u-pur-kroft) n. former name for a field on Minto estate, to the south of the old church (marked on the 1766 estate plan).

Upper Damside (u-pur-dawn-sid) n. another name for Damside, which became Victoria Road.

the Upper Haugh (thu-u-pur-hawch, -hawf) n. the Upper Common Haugh, or Big Haugh, now largely a car park. The Upper and Under Haughs were separated by the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road). This was the location of the afternoon races of the Common Riding until 1854 (‘the Nugget year’), when the persistence of accidents there caused the races to be moved to St. Leonard’s Park.

Upper Larriston (u-pur-law-ris-tin) n. farmstead near the Larriston Burn, far to the south-east of the present main house at Larriston. It has been suggested that somewhere near here was the original site of the tower of the Elliots. It may have corresponded to the former farm of Over Larriston. A late 18th century cottage there has a carved stone built into it, with the date 1677 and an Elliot monogram. There is also a disused lime works near there, with evidence of an old field system to the south (this is roughly where ‘Larristown’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

uppermaist (u-pur-máist) adj. uppermost – ‘An’ loe the uppermaist rooms at feasts, an’ the chief setts in the synigogues’ [HSR], ‘. . . and there werni mony Border witter-gates whasea upper-maist reaches they didin explore’ [IWL].

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. It is used in the 1841 census to distinguish it from Fore Row and Burn Row. It probably corresponded to the houses on the track running uphill from the green in the main part of the village. The name was probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch

Ordnance Survey map, lying to the north-west of Netherraw and south-west of Toftsholm, also known as ‘Over Raw’. Gavin Beattie was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 193 acres, bounded by Toftsholm, Nether Raw, and lands of the Laird of Hoscote. The farmhouse is shown to the south of Toftsholm Sike, where there is no sign of habitation on modern maps. James and William Scott were tenants there in 1797. There are remains of buildings, a field system and rig lines there (it is ‘Overraw’ in 1632 and ‘overraw’ in 1694; it is probably the ‘O. Raa’ marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Ouer Raw’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is ‘Upperraw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Upper Rig (u-pur-rig) n. name for the field on Hawick Common that is to the east of Pilnmuir Rig and north of Bottom Rig (‘rig’ here presumably refers to a strip of ploughed land).

Upper Soothfield (u-pur-sooth-feeld) n. former name for part of Southfield farm, probably the same as Ower Soothfield.

Upper Teviotdale (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl) n. name generally applied to the Teviot above (and sometimes including) Hawick, much of which later became the Parish of Teviothead. The area was burned by the English around May 1514, when it was described as ‘the hede of the Watter of Teviate, from Branksholme up unto Ewse Doors, within the same Marche, byeng 8 miles in lienth, wherupon was 24 pleughes’.

Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl-and-thu-skotts-ov-bu-kloo) n. history book written by Mrs. J.R. Oliver and published in Hawick in 1887. Its full title is ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch. A local and family history’. The book is, as the title suggests, a combination of Buccleuch family and local history. Each chapter focuses on a particular chief of the house of Buccleuch (in Victorian sycophantic tones), as well as containing a large amount of scholarly description of what was happening in the Hawick area at the time.

Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl-fi-shu-reex-aw-so-see-ä-shii) n. fishing control body of the late 19th century, made up primarily of the local landowners. It was founded in 1881, following a meeting in Hawick the previous year, and haxids as its objects the prevention of illegal fishing, promotion of sportsman-like angling, and protection of fish stocks. However, there were complaints from the Border Association for the Reform of Fishery Laws and others, that it existed to exclude working class anglers. Its President was the Duke of Buccleuch, and other committee members included Sir Walter Elliot of Walfedee and William Lockhart of Borthwickbrae. In 1911 the Association agreed to allow Hawick to have its own Angling Club, and since then has worked in cooperation with that Club in the issuing of licenses and the policing of the waterways.

Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl-ri-fül-kör) n. Volunteer company set up in 1860 at the instigation of William Elliot, with the Patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch, motivated by the perceived threat from France. The uniforms were grey, and it was the 4th Corps in Roxburghshire, with John Scott Chisholme of Stiches becoming Captain. A second company was formed in 1864 and a drill hall built at the foot of the Mill Path, which became St. Mary’s Church Hall. Some members left in an early dispute to form the Hawick Volunteer Corps later in 1860. The Corps evolved into the Border Rifles in 1868, and after several other changes became the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. in 1908. Their ‘armoury’ or drill hall was at the corner of Allars Crescent and the Mill Path in the late 19th century and later became the Salvation Army head-quarters.

Upper Tofts (u-pur-tofts) n. farm beside Kirkton, about 4 miles east of Hawick, and south-west of Nether Tofts. It was formerly also known as ‘High Tofts’ and ‘Over Tofts’. There were Turnbullys there for many generations. The lands were inherited by William, son of Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1695. John Lorraine was there in 1722. Thomas Hall was there in 1794 and James Turnbull in 1797. It was farmed by George and Robert Deans (Hawick butchers) in the mid-19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building to the west that is now gone. There are a couple of disused quarries on Tofts Hill nearby (it is marked ‘O: Tofts’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Upper Village (u-pur-vi-leej) n. former name for the upper part of the Village, distinct from the Under Village. It was first developed between 1824 and 1828 with the erection of the ‘Hen’s Nest’, on a site later occupied by ‘Woodlands’.

Uppie (u-pee) n. someone who plays towards the lower ‘hail’ in a game of ‘ban’ – ‘On nearing the uppies’ hail the leather found its way into the water and was carried across by an uppie who took it away’ [HNe1906].

Up wi’ the Banner

Up wi’ Auld Hawick (up-wi-awld-hIk) n. song written for local singer John Bell, with words by Thomas Caldwell and music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1902 Colour Bussing by Colin Jardine, and then at the following 3 Colour Bussings by John Bell. It is the only song of Grant’s with the verses and chorus having different rhythms (the change is from 4/4 time to 3/4). The tune of the verses may have been influenced by Charles Darnton’s ‘The Rescue of Lot’ (1895), while the chorus bears a similarity to part of Elgar’s ‘Pomp and Circumstance March’. However, the song is very much Grant’s own, setting it to Caldwell’s words, which had been written about 1900. Part of the enduring popularity of the song is because it is traditionally the ‘hugging song’, where during the chorus everyone links arms with their neighbours and sways to the waltz beat. Whether this practice originated with the song, or was added later, is unknown; however, such audience participation was popular in Victorian and Edwardian music halls. As sung there is usually a change to the last note in each verse, as well as an inclination to sing ‘she’s Queen’ rather than ‘the Queen’ in the chorus.

Up wi’ the Banner (up-wi-thu-baw-nur) n. song written by James Thomson, with music by William Inglis Robson. The words were written by Thomson only about a year and a half before his death. The song was written at the suggestion of J.Y. Hunter, who wanted something special to mark the Common Riding in Queen Victoria’s jubilee year; in conversations between the two, the notion had been to compose a song about the Flag, the first idea being ‘Up wi’ the Flag’, before trying ‘Up wi’ the Standard’ and finally hitting on the successful phrase. It took Thomson about a week to compose the words. It was dedicated to Cornet Tom Scott and sung at the 1887 Colour Bussing by Robert Paterson to the tune of ‘Hail to the Chief’. Thomson’s words are clearly inspired by that earlier song (written by Albert Gamse, with music by James Sanderson), which became associated with the President of the United States. These words were themselves loosely based on the ‘Boat Song’ (Canto II XIX) from Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Lady of the Lake’. Hence Thomson’s first line ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us’ derives from Scott’s first line ‘Hail to the chief, who in triumph advances’, and ‘Join in the old refrain – Shout Teriodin again and again’ is inspired by the end of Scott’s first verse ‘Sends our shout back a'gen, 'Roderigh Vich Alpine Dhu, ho! i-e-roel!’. In any case, Robson’s tune was composed in late 1887 and published early the following year. The new version was presented at the Colour Bussing of 1888, again sung by Paterson. It has been sung at almost every Colour Bussing ever since. Its popularity at that event is presumably partly because it is such a rousing song, but also because it is a triumphant song in which the Flag is prominent. Note that Thomson originally wrote ‘Boast, Scotland, boast of the deeds of your fathers’, but that quickly became ‘Boast, Hawick, boast!’ The original version also had the chorus after the first 2 verses being ‘Fling out the standard high . . .’, but that is no longer sung. Robson’s tune has an introductory fanfare, which is seldom played. Adam Ingles took the key down a tone for the 1957 song compilation.

ur (ur) v. are – ‘ur ee no Hawick then?’, ‘the Greens ur gaun ti wun the Seevins’ (er and ir are also used).

Urban Electric (ur-bin-ee-lek-treek) n. Hawick Urban Electric Supply Company, based at 18–20 Commercial Road. It was the first supplier of electricity in Hawick, starting in 1901 with The Theatre and then the Co-operative Society store. For a while it also purchased power generated by the water wheels of Wilson & Glenny’s. In 1945/46 the electricity supply was changed from locally generated D.C. to A.C. from the national grid. The building was sold to the council in 1968, later housing an engineering firm and then the Borders Distillery.

Ure (yoor) n. Rev. Neil Shaw (1828–84) born in Renfrewshire, son of William and Margaret Brown. He studied at Glasgow University and was licensed to preach by the Free Kirk Presbytery of Lanark in 1858. He was minister of Newcastleton Free Kirk 1861–75. There was a case of libel brought against him in 1875, which appears to have led to his resignation. He appears to have failed in a draper’s business in Manchester 1877 and then lived in Largs, Ayrshire, where he died. He married Jessie Simpson in 1877. Their children were: William Simpson (1879–1940), who was killed when a U-boat sunk his ship; and Annie Williamson (1881–84).

urf (urf) n., arch. a puny person, a child of stunted growth, – ‘Urf, a stunted ill-grown person, generally applied to children, Roxb., Etrr. For.’ [JoJ], someone with an irritating disposition.

Urquhart (ur-kur) n. Adam of Meldrum (1635–84) from an Aberdeenshire family, he was made a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire in 1679 in order to assist Henry Ker (Sheriff-Depute of the county) in prosecuting Covenanters. He was similarly made a J.P. in Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. Often referred as simply ‘Meldrum’, he was zealous in his duties, and subsequently hated in the district. He brought an action against Thomas Turnbull of Knoue and against the young William Douglas of Cavers and his tutors. He married Mary Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly and was succeeded by his son John. Rev. George minister at Southdean (linked with Edgerston) 1966–72. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘William, esq. Crescent’. His house on Slitrig Crescent (around No. 2) is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’;

use (yoos, yis) n., arch. tradition, custom, particularly in the phrase ‘as use is’ – ‘. . . to be bailies within the said bruche for ane yeir to cum, wha all maid faith and acceptit the said office upon thame as use is’ [BR1638], ‘This tax . . . by the Law of ‘use and wont’ . . . has become part and parcel of the system’ [RW], ‘to be in use of’ meant to be accustomed to, in the habit of doing something – ‘. . . whereas Master John Purdom their Clerk had been in use to have an house rent allowed him by the toun for teaching English Schollars . . .’ [PR1724], ‘The tenants and herds of Whitfield were in use sometimes to hound or drive the horses off the best grass’ [DCW1765], v. to enjoy the use of, be accustomed to – ‘. . . that none should come in till the said loft till once the persons that use ane right . . . be once settled in their seats’ [BR1710].

Usher (u-shur) n. Adam ‘Adie’ (d.1624) born in ‘Birkinhauch’ in Liddesdale. He was a servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1624 he was convicted of several instances of sheep and cattle stealing, along with his son William, and sentenced to hanging, with his son being banished. The chief of the Elliots escaped punishment for his part in the incident. He and his son were recorded as ‘Adie and Will Vshearis’; the 2 cows and an ox stolen from William Charlton of ‘Islysyde’ were said to have been eaten in the house of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Alexander Balmer ‘Sandy’ (1902–40) son of Sir Robert, 2nd Baronet. In about 1921 he took over running Bedrule on the family estate. He was a Major in the Lothian and Border Horse, and was killed during the Dunkirk retreat. His tombstone is at St. Valery-en-Caux, while there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Andrew (c.1782–1855) son of James of Toftfield. His uncle Thomas of Courthill arranged for him to be employed as a retail apprentice for 1 year at Nixon’s hosiery manufacturers in Hawick when he was about 20. He started his own hosiery shop in Edinburgh in 1803, but after a few years had moved into the spirit trade. In 1813 he founded Andrew Usher & Co., whisky distillers and blenders and the Usher Brewery of Edinburgh. He introduced the Glenlivet blend in 1853, had a distillery at Sciennes in Edinburgh and is credited with producing the first mass-produced blended whiskies. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Balmer of Ettrickbrae, and she died in 1860. They had 13 children, including Andrew and John, who continued the family firm, and James and Thomas who set up the brewery. Sir Andrew John (1963– ) 8th and present Baronet, eldest son of Sir William John Tevenar. He married Charlotte Louise Alexandra Eldridge and their children are Rory James Andrew and Callum William Edward. Charles Cogan (1884–1959) born in Wilton, son of Thomas, he emigrated to Canada in 1903, where he farmed in Alberta with his brother Thomas. He returned to Scotland to enlist in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He married Harriet Helen Jones and they had 3 children. Charles F.J. (b.1910s) worked under Hawick architect Alexander Inglis, from 1936. In 1950 he was taken into partnership with Inglis, and in 1957 he also became a partner in the Galashiels practice of Elder & Cairns. In 1959 he formed a partnership with J. Murray Aitken, this becoming ‘Aitken & Turnbull’s’. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1965. Charles John (1931–2017) son of Harry, he lived at Courthill. He married Catherine Eve Mowat. They had daughters Belinda ‘Jane’ and Gillian ‘Sarah’. Harry J.P. (1886–1975) youngest son of Thomas of Courthill. He served as a Major in the Home Guard during WWII. He ran Bedrule farm, among others. He married Edith (Nancy) Agnes Scott Oliver (daughter of solicitor James John Oliver) and their children were Harry James, Christian Agnes and Charles ‘John’. He was buried in Wilton Cemetery. James of Toftfield (1738–1816) son of John of Toftfield. He married Margaret Grieve in 1765; she was daughter of Hugh and Margaret Darling. Their children included John of Toftfield, Margaret (who married Dr. James Moffat), James, Thomas (who moved to Jamaica), George (also went to Jamaica), William, Andrew (the successful whisky merchant), another Janet (who married William Dunlop) and another James. James (1796–1821) son of Thomas of Courthill and brother of lawyer John and farmer Thomas. He is listed as being at Courthill in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, the same year that he died. He is buried in Wilton Kirkyard. James (1796–1839) W.S., solicitor to the Supreme Court in Edinburgh. He was son of John of Toftfield and Janet Oliver. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He represented the trustees of the deceased Andrew Thomson (who married an Usher) in 1828. Jane (1816–62) daughter of Andrew, wine and spirit merchant of Edinburgh. She married her cousin Thomas Usher of Courthill. A photograph of her exists. John of Toftfield (1766–1847) born in Melrose, son of James of Toftfield. He was the 3rd and last Laird of Toftfield, selling the estate to Sir Walter Scott in 1819, and moving to Leaderfoot and Quarryford in Haddingtonshire. Toftfield had been purchased by his grandfather, also John, in 1753. He married Janet Oliver of Chesters and later Agnes Blaikie of Melrose. Altogether he had 14 children, including James, S.S.C., John (Makerstoun) and Jane (last surviving member of the family, dying in 1897). John (1794–1864) W.S., son of Thomas and Isabella Pott. He trained as a lawyer in Edinburgh and became Writer to the Signet in 1822. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He died unmarried. John (1809–96) son of John of Toftfield, he was a farmer at Stodrig and also known as a poet, as well as being a great horse lover and authority on Border sheep. He was Honorary Secretary of the Border Coursing Club. It is said that he was rewarded with a pony for singing to Sir Walter Scott when a boy. In his day he was called ‘the Laureate of the Borders’ and known around Kelso as ‘Auld Usher’. He wrote ‘Border breeds of sheep’ (1875) and ‘Poems and songs’ (1894). He also acted as Clerk of the Course at Kelso Races. He married Margaret Warwick Morton, who died in 1877. Their children were John (farmer at Gatehousecote), Emily Gordon and Samuel Morton who died in infancy. John (1840–1892) son of John of Stodrig, Makerstoun and grandson of John Usher of Toftfield. He was educated in St. Andrews and at Edinburgh University. He became tenant at Gatehousecote in 1863 and remained there until he died. In 1868 he was referred to ‘junior’ when he was farmer at Gatehousecote. He was known as an all-round sportsman, being a keen horse-rider, fisherman, shooter and follower of the Jedforest Hunt, although apparently not such a good farmer. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles at their inaugural meeting in Hawick in 1872, where he became Colour-Sergeant. He was also a member of the Lothian Yeomanry. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1875 he was a Steward at the Common Riding Races. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hounds 1885–92. He married Isabella, 4th daughter of William Aitcheson of Brieryhill. They had only one child, a son who died in infancy. He died of pneumonia after a period of ill-health (it is said he died of a chill contracted at the Derby). Sir John (1828–1904) 1st Baronet of Norton and Wells, youngest son of Andrew. Along with his brother Andrew he carried on the family whisky distilling business in Edinburgh. He gifted the ‘John Usher Institute of Public Health’ to Edinburgh (while Andrew gifted the Usher Hall to the city). He purchased the farms and estates of Hallrule, Bedrule (including Fulton) and Wells (including East Fodderlee) from Elliott of Stobs in 1895/6; these also came with associated baronies. He also owned Norton (near Edinburgh Airport), Pitheavlis Castle (near Perth) and land in Caithness. He was said to be a keen fox-hunter, enjoying riding with the hounds till his last days. He served as Whip for the Jedforest Hounds in the period 1885–92. A keen Liberal in his youth, he transferred his allegiance to the Unionists after 1886, becoming the first Treasurer of the East and North of Scotland Liberal Unionist Association and later being Chairman of the Liberal Unionist Committee of Midlothian. He was also a benefactor of the Free Church.

He married his cousin Mary Anne, daughter of Thomas Leadbetter of Stobieside, Lanark. He died suddenly in Cairo, where he had gone for his health. His portrait was painted by Sir George Reid. Sir John Turnbull, J.P., O.B.E. (1891–1951) son of Sir Robert, became 3rd Baronet of Norton and Wells. He served in the Royal Pioneer Corps in WWII, and had a reputation for being eccentric, usually carrying a shepherd’s crook and wearing a monocle. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Jean Elspeth Usher, daughter of Harry and grand-daughter of the brewer Thomas. Their children were Katherine Alice and Jacqueline. He was succeeded by his brother Sir R. Stuart. Mary Anne (1868–1955) wife of Thomas Leadbetter. She was President of Bedrule Women’s Guild 1944–53. There is a memorial plaque to her and her husband inside Bedrule Kirk. Sir Peter Lionel of Norton and Wells (1931–90) created 5th Baronet after the sudden death of his father. Along with his brother Robert, he had Downe’s Syndrome, and was brought up in Argentina to avoid family shame. His appointment as Baronet caused great consternation in the Usher family and ultimately led to the estates being sold off.

Sir Robert of Norton and Wells (1860–1933) 2nd Baronet, son of Sir John. He earned the title of the ‘Whisky King’, with his huge warehouse at St. Leonard’s in Edinburgh. He found the old house at Wells to be unsuitable and so had it demolished, with the new Edwardian house built there in 1906. He also funded the enlargement of Bedrule Kirk in 1914 (with a memorial plaque to his parents placed in the church). He was the first President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. He married Katherine Scott Turnbull, who died in 1948 and was daughter of James Turnbull of Abbey St. Bathans. They had 6 sons: Sir John Turnbull, who succeeded; Ronald James, who died young; Sir R. Stuart; Maj. Alexander Balmer; William Dove; and Brig. Thomas Clive. His daughters were Jean and Grizel Mary, who both died as infants. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Sir Robert Stuart ‘Stuart’ of Norton and Wells (1898–1963), brother of Sir John and son of Sir Robert, he was the 4th Baronet. Note that his name was also written ‘Stewart’. He was a keen country sportsman and died at a meeting of the Buccleuch Hunt. He married Gertrude Marta (who died in 1984), and their sons Peter and Robert both suffered from Downe’s Syndrome. Robert Edward of Norton and Wells (1934–94) 6th Baronet and last of the Ushers to reside at either Norton or Wells. He suffered from Downe’s Syndrome, like his brother Peter, who he succeeded. Since he could not make a will, the estates were liquidated on his death. He is the last Usher to be buried at Bedrule. Thomas of Courthill (1755–1824), son of John of Toftfield, near Melrose. He was a ‘writer’ in Hawick and Sheriff Substitute of Roxburghshire. A letter of his from 1785 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was a writer and bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the same tax in Hawick in 1789, but in 1791 in Jedburgh. He was in Jedburgh in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He was a writer in Jedburgh in 1794 when he paid the Horse Tax there. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–89 and in Jedburgh from 1790. He is probably the Thomas who was recorded at Burnhead in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he owned 9 farm horses at that time, as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Burnhead in 1797. He served as ‘deponent’ for the estate of William Oliver ‘Old Cash’, after his death in 1808. He married Isabella Pott of Penchrise (of whom an oil painting exists). The couple resided at Courthill and were highly regarded in their day. When Dr. Chalmers was Minister at Cavers he was a frequent visitor. He was associated with Chalmers publication ‘Sermon on the duty of making a testament’, to which is added the form of a testament’, published in Hawick in 1812, and where he is referred to as a notary public. He is recorded as a subscriber to many literary works of his day, including ‘The Poetical Museum’ (published in Hawick in 1874) and Robert Burns ‘Poems, chiefly in the Scottish Dialect’ of 1787, as well as Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (published in 1825). He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. His children were: John (b.1794), W.S. in Edinburgh; James (b.1796), died aged 25; Janet (or Jean, b.1797), married John Elliot, banker of Jedburgh; and Thomas (b.1803) of Courthill, who married his cousin Jane Usher. He is buried in old Wilton cemetery. Thomas of Courthill (1803–82) son of Thomas. He farmed at Courthill, like his father. He was listed at Courthill among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 399 acres, employing 19 labourers and a factor, and in 1861 was farming 363 acres and employing 14 people. He was an elder of the Hawick Free Kirk for 32 years, and served as a Commissioner at the 1865 General Assembly. He also served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He married Jane Usher of Edinburgh. Their children were Thomas and Margaret. He became blind in later life. A photograph of him exists. Thomas (1819–94) son of Thomas and Helen Ewart. He was the 13th Usher to be feuar of lands at Eildon. His brother John trained for the ministry, but died aged 19. He was a shepherd at several farms, including Hawthornside. He married Ann Murray in 1854, and their children included: Elizabeth Coleleuch, who married Thomas Carruthers; Helen Anne, who died at Mansfield Square in Hawick; and Margaret Murray, who also died at Mansfield Square. He later lived at Weensmoor with his sister Mrs. Renwick. Thomas (1826–1902) born in Edinburgh, son of James S.S.C., he worked as a law clerk and lived at Duddingston. He married Eliza Dickson McFarlane and they had 6 children. He was founder and for a long time Acting Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, being involved in organising centenary celebrations and other events. He also wrote an account of ‘The Usher Family of Darnick’ in 1893. Thomas (1850–1910) farmer at Courthill, son of Thomas. He married his cousin Gretrude Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1897 he journeyed around the world, visiting Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, to find opportunities for his sons. His children were Eliza Jane, Gretrude, Thomas, Charles Cogan and Harry. Thomas (1882–1972) born in Wilton, son of Thomas of Courthill. He married Margaret Dorothy, a distant cousin (keeping up the tradition of marrying into the family, being the 3rd successive Thomas to marry his cousin!). He emigrated to Calgary, Canada in 1902, building up the Usher Brother’s ranch with his brother Charles. He had 5 surviving children. Thomas Clive (1907–82) career soldier. He was Military Advisor to the British High Commissioner in India 1955–57, Commanded the 18th Training Brigade of the Royal Artillery 1957–58, was Aide-de-Camp to the Queen in 1958 and in 1958 became Brigadier of the Royal Artillery Scottish Command, retiring later that year. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. William ‘Will’ (17th C.) son of Adie. In 1624 they were both convicted of a series of thefts of cattle, sheep and goats. His father was hanged in Edinburgh, but given his minority he was bannished from the United Kingdom. William Dove (1904–69) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Scott Turnbull. He married Christa Elizabeth von Tevenar and their sons were William John Tevenar and Stuart Alexander. Sir William John Tevenar (1940–98) 7th Baronet. He

the Ushers (thu-u-shurz) n. family who have long connections with the Borders, with the Courtthill branch being particularly local. The family is mentioned in the Peebles area in the 15th century, then in the Bridgend, Darnick and Melrose areas from the 17th century. Originally weavers and small-holders, Toftfield was the first family seat, from which sprang the Courtthill, Leaderfoot, Stodrig and Edinburgh branches. This last diverged into brewing and whisky blending (leaving the Usher Hall to the city, for example) and gaining several large estates, includes those at Hallrule, Hyndhope, Norton and Wells – ‘The Ushers o’ Courtthill, They’re a’ sae kind to me, Whiles they send me taties And whiles a pickle tea’ [RM].

usqueba (oos-kwe-ba) n., poet. whisky – ‘The usqueba, our gabs shall weet, By water christ’ned and their son James was baptised in 1703, with both ‘Vare’ and ‘Vayre’. He married Agnes Nichol

Utsuch Haush see Usuch Haugh

Usuch Haugh (oo-such-hawch) n. part of the original Common at the southern end of town. Its precise location is not known, but it seems likely that it corresponds to the Brewery Haugh. Whisky Houses is probably also the same place and a corruption of the name. It is recorded in 1737 that the Bailies and Council ‘marched that part of the Common called Usuch Haugh, adjacent to the Duke of Buccleuch’s interest, by setting down 8 marchstones on the east side, and one on the west side of the Water of Slitrig’ (origin uncertain, but perhaps derived from Gaelic ‘watery’ plus haugh).

Utnomound (ut-nou-mownd) n. possible name of lands in southern Liddesdale, listed along with Whisgills and Purvenin in the 1541 rental roll. The name is transcribed as ‘Vtnomound’, and it does not appear to correspond with any place on contemporary or modern maps. It is also transcribed as ‘Burnmouth’ and so it is possible the name is just an error.

uttermaist (u-tur-mäst) adj., arch. utmost, greatest – ‘...at the vittermost of our powaris, as an gentilmann aucht to do to their chieff’ [SB1585], ‘A party, admitted burgess, makes oath to defend the religion professed, and maintain and assist the bailies, officers, and the town to his uttermost’ [BR1640].

vairy (vä-ree) v., arch. to show the first symptoms of diliirium (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘vary’).

vaise (väz) n. a vase – ‘A think A’ll gang an buy that vaiz; it nate neebers thon yin on the brace at hyimm’ [ECS] (also written ‘vaiz’).

vale (väl) n., poet. a valley – ‘A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale ...’ [JT], ‘Forneit iz, athort the fer seide o Teiot’s breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale ...’ [ECS].

Valence (vaw-lins) n. Aymer 2nd Earl of Pembroke (c.1275–1324) 3rd son of William and Isabella of Angoulême. He held extensive lands in England, as well as France and was extremely powerful in the time of Edward II. In 1300 he was responsible to Edward I for provisioning Selkirk Castle. He served as a commander on the Edward I’s Scottish campaign, winning at Methven in 1306 and being beaten at Louden Hill in 1307. In 1306 he received a gift of Selkirk Castle, with forest and lands, as well as the heritable Sheriffdoms of Selkirk and Peebles. He was Edward II’s Lieutenant in Scotland, and was present at Bannockburn in 1314. He also served as Sheriff of Roxburgh. He married Beatrice, daughter of Raoul de Clermont, and secondly married Marie de St. Pol, daughter of Gui de Châtillon, who founded Pembroke College in Cambridge. He had one (illegitimate) son, Henry. He died while travelling to France. Andrew (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Andrea Valance’.

Valentine (vaw-lin-tin) n. Alec Richard (1928–97) from Hawick, he played flanker for Hawick R.F.C. He was capped 3 times for Scotland in 1953. His younger brothers Dave and Rob also played for Scotland. David Donald ‘Dave’ (1926–76) born in Hawick, he played rugby locally, then was capped for Scotland in 1947. Later that year he signed for English Rugby League side Huddersfield and eventually played under that code for Great Britain, including leading the team to victory in the 1954 World Cup. He retired in 1957, later going into coaching. The Scotland national rugby league team started an annual player of the year award in his name since 2004.

Vales Brig (väzł-brig) n. bridge taking the A7 over the Valesburn, just after Newmill. There were the remains of an earthwork on the opposite side of the Teviot from here, but now almost totally obliterated by ploughing.

the Vales Burn (thu-välz-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from roughly the west at Newmill, rising near Slaidhills Moss. It marks the boundary between Hawick Parish and Teviot-head Parish. A farm near there had the same name. An aqueduct is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, conveying the mill lade for Newmill across the burn.

Valesburn (väzł-burn) n. farm just to the west of Newmill, where the Valesburn joins the Teviot. It is ‘Vailles’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. It is probably the ‘waills’ adjacent to Newmill where John Laidlaw was listed as tenant in 1694 and the ‘vaills’ where William Nichiol was listed among the poor of the parish. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, consisting of 36 acres and bounded by Branxholme Moor, Hott and Harwood. The name ‘Valesburn’ is recorded on the 1841 census and the 1853 Ordnance Survey map, to the left of the A7 just after Newmill. James Elliot was shepherd there in the early 19th century. Riddells and Millers lived there in 1841 (also written ‘Vales Burn’, it is ‘Vailles’ in 1718).

valetudinary (va-li-chew-di-nu-ree) adj., arch. in poor health, sickly, ill, feeble – ‘...in regard he is become valetudinarie and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet whereby he is not able to go up to the usual place of repenance’ [PR1721], ‘...and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a livelihood’ [PR1725].

Vallance (vaw-lins) n. nickname of a former riever. He was recorded in 1502 as ‘unius vocatis vallange’. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Peeblesshire.

Valley View (vaw-lee-vev) n. name of a house in Sunnyhill.

Valognes (va-lo-nes) n. Philip (d.1215) 3rd son of Roger de Valognes, and Agnes, daughter of John Fitz Richard. He became Chamberlain of Scotland under William the Lion, serving about 1165–1171 and again about 1193–1214. He was reappointed Chamberlain under Alexander II, but died soon afterwards. The family lands were in Hertfordshire, however, he also held Benvie and Pannure in Angus, Torphichenow in Cumberland.

and Ringwood in Roxburghshire. Some time in the period 1165–71 he granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey, confirming the earlier grant by Oswulf. He was Chamberlain some time in the period 1173–82 when Walter of Berkeley was granted the lands of ‘Neutun’ by King William. In about 1185 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. His son William became Chamberlain after him. His daughter Sibyl married Robert de Stuteville, who held the lands of Liddell in Cumberland. He was buried in the chapter house of Melrose Abbey.

valuation roll (vawl-yoo-ä-shin-rôl) n. a list of rateable values in a city, burgh or district, along with the name of the owner and tenant. These are useful documents for tracing the history of specific properties. Hawick valuation rolls from 1868 (when Hawick became a Parliamentary Burgh) are in the National Archives, before that the Town’s roll was included in that for Roxburghshire.

van (vawn) n., poet. abbreviated form of ‘vanguard’, the forefront – ‘So I like auld Hawick and her spirit I like. That leaps still forth to the van’ [FH]. ‘The first and foremost in the van Where truant laddies flock; The leader o’ the ranger clan Is our little Jock’ [JT], ‘When drum and fife went through the town On Common Riding morn, Wi’ deadly halberts in the van, By burgh beagles borne’ [??].

Vancouver (vawn-koo-var) n. largest city in British Columbia, and area to which many locals emigrated in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A Hawick Callants’ Club was formed in Vancouver in 1913 with over 30 members. They held their own Common Riding for many years, with an elected Council. About 60 people apparently enjoyed the celebration in 1920, and there are photographs of the ‘Hawick Common Riding Annual Picnic’ on Bowen Island in c.1919, 1921, 1922 and 1923, some showing around 150 people gathered there.

vaper (vä-pur) v., poet. to boast, act with bravado – ‘Then with new keeness wad they caper, He sliely smudg’d to see them vaper ...’ [CPM], ‘Or gin we haena swords an’ spears, To stick an’ slash the vap’rin’ hodgels’ [JoHa].

vary (vä-ree) v., arch. to show the early signs of delirium, to ‘wander’ – ‘She’s varyin’ the day’ [GW].

Vass (vaws) n. Henry (b.1730) son of William, he was born in Hobkirk Parish and lived in Abbotrule. In 1762 he married Isobel Scott, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: William (b.1763); Walter (b.1768); Nelly (b.1770); Walter (again, b.1772); Henry (b.1772); an unnamed child (b.1776); and Isobel (b.1779). In 1776 he is listed in Tidlerhill. His surname may be a variant of some more common name.

Vassal (vaw-sul) n. Col. Rawdon John Popham (c.1801–84) son of Spencer Thomas, who died in the assault on Monte Video in 1807. He was younger brother of Sir Spencer Lambert Hunter, naval captain. He was Major in the 78th Regiment of Highlanders. He married Margaret Emily Boswell in 1848; she was sister of Theresa, wife of Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. He lived for a while at Wells House, possibly only during the summer months for the ‘shooting’; he is also referred to as ‘of Stobs’, and seems also to have similarly taken Stobs Castle. Many transactions involving him are recorded in the diary of Robert Grieve in the late 1850s. Along with his wife he presented a silver flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, and they were also present at its consecration in 1858. His wife presented the Crowbys Mission with a library in 1860, probably to serve the railway navvies (there are different spellings).

Vassie (vaw-see) n. Rev. William (1856–1917) born at Croftonhill in Lanarkshire, 3rd son of John and Mary Lamb Murray. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1878 and B.D. in 1881, and was licensed by Lanark Presbytery. His first charge was as assistant at Govan. Then in 1883 he was ordained as minister of Castleton Parish Kirk. In 1885 he married Cecilia Pitcairn, daughter of David Playfair, minister of Abercorn. Their children included: John (b.1887), who was a sales manager in Tacoma, U.S.A.; Jane Kincaid (b.1890); William Playfair (d.1907). He married Margaret Hunter, naval captain. He was Major in the 78th Regiment of Highlanders. He married Margaret Emily Boswell in 1848; she was sister of Theresa, wife of Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. He died at Kingussie and his wife died 3 weeks later.

vast (vawst) n., arch. a large number, great deal, lot, big portion – ‘A vast o folk dinna ken when they’re weel off!’ [ECS].

Vaughan (vawn) n. Rev. Idris John (b.1901) born in Abertridwr in South Wales, he was educated at Brecon Memorial College and became preacher at Berea in Monmouthshire in 1952. He moved to Ashby-de-la-Zouch in 1955 and Bethany, Glasgow in 1958. He was then minister

V-bed (vee-bed) n. a knitting machine in which there are 2 beds of needles arranged at roughly 90° to each other.

veand (vee-and) adj., arch. senile, in dotage, over-the-hill, superannuated (from Old French; noted as a Teviotdale word by J. Jamieson).

V.E. Day (vee-ee-dâ) n. day marking the end of WWII hostilities in Europe, held on 7th May 1945. Festivities in and around Hawick were fairly muted compared with V.J. Day, although there was some dancing in the streets and although there was little evidence of celebrations along the High Street, other areas, such as Dickson Street and the West End were festooned with flags and bunting. There were also many bonfires lit, e.g. a large one built by soldiers at Weensland, which burned for 3 days, and some had effigies of Hitler in place of Guy Fawkes. A group of about 200 people gathered on the Miller’s Knowes in the evening to watch the fires on the town and nearby Border hills. There was a 50th anniversary ceremony in the Haugh on May 7th 1995.

veecious (vee-shis, veesh-yis) adj. vicious – ‘An sic veeshyis fechtteen as it was, tui!’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

veeper (vee-pur) n., arch. viper – ‘O ganæretian o’ veepers, who heth warnet yow til flee the wræth til come?’ [HSR], ‘Ye serpints, ye ganæretian o’ veepers, wha heth warnet yow til flee the wræth til come?’ [HSR], ‘Ye serpents, ye damnatioun o’ hell?’ [HSR].

veesion (vee-ziu) n., arch. a vision – ‘Than thou spakist in veesion til thy Haly Ane . . .’[HSR], ‘Tell the vesion til nae man, until the Son o’ man be risen frae the dead’ [HSR], ‘Eh who! the glamourie an’ might That ane sae dune, sae auld, Should, in a vesion o’ the nicht, Be young again, an’ yawd’ [ECB] (also written ‘vesion’).

veesit (vee-zi) n. a visit – ‘Syne we arrived at Langholm toon And paid a veesit tae ‘The Croon’’ [DH], ‘. . .frae commercial aerial photography ti coverin twae royal veesits’ [IWL], v. to visit – ‘did ee veesit yer granny?’ , ‘. . .awaaken til veesit a’ the heæthin: bena mercifu’ til onie wicket transgresser’ [HSR], ‘. . .luik doun frae heaven, an’ behald, an’ veesit this vine’ [HSR], ‘Tae veesit the camp of coarse a’ the folk ran, Sae no juist tae be ahint Robin, ma man’[BM1900].

Veitch (veech) (16th C.) listed as ‘Adam Vache’ in 1526 when he was among the Borders men pardoned for accompanying the Homes on an attack on the Earl of Arran. It is unclear to which branch of the Veitches or Waugs he belonged. Alexander and George are listed later in the same 1526 document. Perhaps the same Adam is recorded in Selkirk in 1528 when he witnessed a document for the lands of Lewenshope.

Adam (d.1801) recorded as miller in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was ‘under miller’ of Hawick (i.e. an assistant to the miller). He had 2 children (one illegitimate) die in 1799, and another in 1801. He could be the Adam from Hawick who in 1798 married Janet Brown, who was from Langholm. Agnes (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexander la Uache’ around 1250 when he witnessed a charter for Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander. He is probably related to later local Veitches (or Waughs). Alexander (15th/16th C.) eldest son of William of Dawyck in Peeblesshire. He succeeded to his father’s lands in 1502 and had payments from the ‘fermes’ of Peebles in 1507. However, before that, in 1481, he granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (probably North Synton) to his brother in exchange for Easter Dawyck. And in 1497 he had a sasine for Dawyck and North Synton. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Synton. His son was Bernard, although he appears to have been succeeded by his brother William. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Alexander Vache’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Alexander (19th/20th C.) one of a family of eleven, descended from James Veitch of Inchbonny. He farmed at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. Andrew (18th C.) married Magdalene Rutherford in Minto Parish in 1737. Andrew (d.1808) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths as ‘a old man from Alewater’. Archibald of Bellevue (19th/20th C.) cattle-dealer and tenant farmer at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. He was a descendant of James Veitch of Inchbonny, being great-great-grandson of the James who bought Inchbonny in 1738. Barnaby of Dawyck (1370–aft. 1436) probably son of William. In 1407 he was granted a charter of North Synton by Archibald, Earl of Douglas; his name is recorded as ‘Barnabas le Vache de Dawyk’. This may be the first connection between the family and the lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1420 he was witness to the charter of the granting of half of Branxholme from the Inglis’s to the Scotts; he is there ‘Bernaba de Wache’. In 1434/5 he witnessed charter for the Hays of Yester. He was succeeded by his son Paul. Capt. ?? (17th/18th C.) served with the 21st Fusiliers. He was said to be a brother of Lord Bowhill (John Murray), so presumably a brother-in-law. He married the widow of a private in his regiment, and she was a Gledstains, related to the Gledstains of Dod. Sometime in the early 1700s his wife inherited the lands of Dod. However, he is said to have been extravagant and fairly quickly sold the lands to James Pott. Christian (18th C.) recorded at Falnash Mill in 1757 when her son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. No father’s name was given. Douglas ‘Champion Doug Veitch’ (1960–) born in Hawick, he worked as a house-painter, but turned temporary pop star, being referred to as ‘the King of Caledonian Cajun Swing’. He made several records in the 1980s and had his own minor record label, ‘Disc Afrique’, which was one of the first in Britain to promote African music. His hit ‘One Black Night’ reached No. 45 in the U.K. charts in 1985, ‘Jumping Into Love’ made the NME top-50 list for the same year, and he holds the record for the most consecutive singles (6) to make the NME single of the week. His other singles are: ‘Lumiere Urban’, ‘Another place, another time’, ‘Not the Heart’, ‘Gone Train’ and ‘Margarita’. He was also involved in bringing the Bhundu Boys to Britain (and Hawick!), which helped fuel the World Music fashion of the mid-1980s. He released an album of Scottish dance music in 1989 under the name ‘Martin, Doug and Sara’ and has recently been touring with ex-Bhundu Boys guitarist Rise Kagona. George of North Synton (d.c.1530) son of John. He was confirmed in the lands of North Synton by his superior William Veitch of Dawyck in 1525. The following year his son Walter was confirmed as heir to the lands. In 1531 his son Walter, along with Walter Scott in Synton and Adam Scott (Walter Scott in Synton’s brother-in-law) had a dispute over succession to the lands of Synton and Croslee with John and William Veitch. Adam Scott was uncle of Walter Veitch, which presumably means that he was married to Adam’s sister. In 1531 Walter Scott of Synton was ‘doughters sone and ayr to umquhill George Vaych of Norcht Synton’, suggesting that Walter Scott married one of his daughters. By 1535 North Synton was owned by John. George (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. George of Clerklands (d.c.1641). His daughter Helen married James, son of Walter Veitch of North Synton. She was served heir to his lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. George (b.c.1770s) servant at Spittal-on-Rule, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Helen (17th C.) daughter of George of Clerklands. She was served heir to her father’s lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. James of Dawyck (d.c.1552) received the estates from his father William in 1536. This included the lands at North Synton. About 1540 he married Margaret Cockburn, sister of the reiver William Cockburn of Henderland, and probably through her acquired the lands of North Synton. After her brother was hanged in 1530 and his lands forfeited, the superiority of the Cockburn estates passed to James Cockburn of Skirling in 1552. However, the ownership of North Synton (as well as Dawyck) passed to his son and heir William. James of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of North Synton. In 1580 he was son and heir of Walter when the pair witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James Scott in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert Scott in Aikwood. Also in 1580 he witnessed a sale of woods by Robert Scott of Aikwood. In 1582/3 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch (and someone else subscribed for him ‘because I can not wret’). He was probably the James, ‘younger of North Synton’ who, along with Andrew Veitch (brother of the Laird of Tourhope) killed John Tweedie (tutor of Drumelzier) on Edinburgh High Street in 1590. This was in revenge for the murder 4 days earlier of Patrick Veitch (son of William of Dawyck) by James Tweedie of Drumelzier among others. The feud continued between the families until at least 1611 when King James issued a proclamation on the matter. The 2 Veitches were eventually pardoned by the King; however, the family feud continued for at least another couple of decades. He was served her to his father Walter in North Synton in 1601; the lands were described as having ‘tower and fortalice’ and being annexed within the Barony of Dawyck. In 1604 he held a charter of the lands of Corslie in Ettrick Forest (on Gala Water) and was said to also be the tenant there. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1609. James (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of North Synton, who had sold off most of the family estates in 1641. He and John are recorded in 1643 as owners of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. He married Helen, daughter of George Veitch of Clerklands, who must have been a close cousin. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton, when it contained Hassendale. He married Helen Turnbull in 1684 and their son Robert was baptised in 1686. The witnesses were James Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and George Scott. He witnessed baptisms for John Cochrane and John Rule in Roberton in 1686. The witnesses were James Turnbull in 1684 and their son Robert was baptised in 1686. The witnesses were James Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and George Scott. He witnessed baptisms for John Cochrane and John Rule in Roberton in 1686. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) listed among the residents of North Synton estate in the Hearth Tax roll of 1694; John is listed after him and so presumably related. He is probably a descendant of the earlier James who lived at North Synton. Probably the same John married Agnes Scott and their children included: Christian (b.1679); Margaret (b.1687); Francis (b.1690); and William (b.1694). The witnesses in 1690 were William Easton (who also lived at North Synton) and George Scott; also in 1690 he and George Scott witnessed a baptism for William Easton. In 1691 he (along with William Easton) witnessed baptisms for John Tait and for Robert Turnbull. The witnesses to the 1694 of his son were John and Robert, who were probably related. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Stavert and their children included John (b.1696), James (b.1699) and Isobel (b.1704). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1698 as a servant in Synton. In 1698 he married Helen Dickson, who was a servant in Woll. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1700. James (1672/3–1766) blacksmith at Falnash Mill. He married Mary Rid dell in Hawick in 1706 and she died in 1743, aged 66. Their children included: John (b.1707); Margaret, who probably died young; Jean (b.1711), probably also died young; and James (1721/2–1807), who married Helen Elliot, who died at Binks. The witnesses in 1707 were Adam Elliot in Lymiecleuch and Archibald Elliot in Bownanhill. He died at Falnash Mill. James (1695–1775) 2nd son of wright John. He is the progenitor of the Inchbonny branch of the family. He lived at Moshburnford, working as a joiner and wood merchant. He purchased Inchbonny Braes from Sir John Rutherford in 1738. He married (possibly Isobel Richardson in 1722) and his sons were John (who carried on the business, but died unmarried), James (who farmed at Inchbonny and is the ancestor of the Jedburgh and Rulewater Veitches) and William (who was a wright at Inchbonny). James (1727–92) tenant farmer at Spittal Mill, son of John. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of John Murray, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; she died in 1808, aged 73. Their children were: Jean, who died in childhood; Andrew, who died young; Thomas, also died young; John, who succeeded his father in the farm; James (d.1800), who was a doctor in Jamaica and died at Montego Bay; William (d.1786); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married her neighbour Thomas Bunyan; and George (d.1821). Most of the family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (1762–1800) 2nd son of James and Betty Murray, born in Cavers Parish. He was educated as a doctor and practised in Montego Bay, Jamaica, where he died. James (d.c.1833) farmer at Binks, listed there in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. He was also on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the James who in 1802 witnessed a baptism for John Helm. He left Binks farm in about 1822, setting up as a grocer and meal dealer in Langholm. He is probably the James listed at Langholm in the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He does not appear on the 1841 census, and so presumably was deceased by then. He is probably the Teviothead resident, married to Isabel Brydon, whose children included: James (b.1795), a labourer in Langholm in 1841; Walter (b.1796); Thomas (b.1800), who drove meal etc. from Hawick for his father; and Margaret (b.1803), who married Francis Scoon. James (1771–1838) eldest son of wright William. He farmed at Inchbonny and worked as a plough-wright. He is probably the James at Inchbonny listed in the ballot for the Militia in Roxburghshire in 1799. He was described by Sir Walter Scott as a ‘self-taught philosopher, astronomer and mathematician’, and had a strong...
