influence on the young David Brewster. All the learned men of the day would visit him, including French naval officers who were prisoners of war in Jedburgh; one of the Frenchmen painted a portrait of him. He was a great maker of telescopes, which he used to observe the heavens; he was the first person in Britain to see the Great Comet of 1811. Along with the astronomer Francis Baily he observed the annular eclipse of 1836 at Inchbonny; during this eclipse Baily described the phenomenon that was referred to as ‘Baily’s Beads’. Brewster described him as one of the finest telescope makers in the land; he provided telescopes for Lord Minto, Sir Walter Scott, Dr. Thomas Somerville, Mary Somerville, Sir Thomas M. Brisbane, Sir Henry McDougal and John Rutherford of Edgerston. Among other instruments he made were barometers, thermometers and spectacles. He also made clocks and a new plough design. Weights and Measures Inspector for the County of Roxburgh, he published tables for how to convert the weights and measures used in Roxburghshire to the Imperial standards (this with the assistance of James Elliot of Goldielands). He is supposed to have preserved the sword of the famed Ringan Oliver, whose sister was his own great-grandmother (this was among historical artefacts shown by his descendant James in 1924); his version of the deeds of Ringan are published in James Telfer’s ‘Tales and Ballads’ (1852). He is listed as a maker of telescopes, microscopes, etc., in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a great friend of Hawick millwright and amateur astronomer Gideon Scott. He was also a very devout Christian, strictly observing the Sabbath and leading family worship. However, he was also known to indulge in scientific pranks. Physically he was described as tall and strong, with an extraordinarily large, bald forehead and piercing eyes. He married Betty Robson, who was said to have shared his interest in astronomy. His children were: William (1805–88), millwright at Inchbonny, who married Agnes Barrie from Hawthornside; Rev. James (1807–79), who became minister of St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh; John (1814–31), who died young; Betty, who lived to her 90s, and was one of the last people living to have spoken with Sir Walter Scott; and 3 other daughters. James (19th/20th C.) tenant of Harwood Mill. He was Secretary of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Janet (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John of Synton (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of William of Dawyck. In 1481 he was granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (possibly North Synton) by his brother Alexander, in exchange for Easter Dawyck. He thus started the branch of the Veitches of North Synton (although the lands were held by the family since at least 1407). He and his father William were granted the lease of Crosslee (in Ettrick) in 1488, until at least 1492. In 1503 he is ‘Johannes Waith de syntoun’ when he presented John Buchanan as suitor for his lands of Synton at the Justice-ained in Jedburgh. He is probably the ‘Johanne Waych de Syntoun’ who witnessed the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters in 1507/8, and probably the ‘Johannem Vaiche’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. In 1531 he and William, and their ‘brothers german’ were involved in a dispute over the lands of Synton and Crosslee with Walter Scott in Synton, Adam Scott (brother-in-law of Walter Scott) and Walter, son of George (and nephew of Adam Scott); they were pleading to have the tutorship of Walter (and hence rights to his lands, marriage, etc.). He was probably the same man later known as John of North Synton, possessing the estate from at least 1533, when he was part of an inquest in Jedburgh over lands in Longnewton. The next owner appears to have been Walter, probably the young son of George. In 1535 there was a dispute with William Veitch of Dawyck, his superior, which ended with him giving up Corslee (on the Gala Water) in return for keeping North Synton. He could be the ‘John Vache’ who was listed among the Border Lairds of Selkirkshire who submitted themselves to James V in 1530, to keep better order. He was probably the ‘Johanne Waithie’ who had 5 cows stolen from ‘Corsle’, as claimed in the 1535 trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. Also in 1535 he was ‘of Norcht Syntoun’ when he sought a copy of the royal letters for expenses from the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He may be the John whose wife Marion Scott was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1545. He was succeeded by his son George. He may also be the same man as the contemporary John Waugh. John (16th C.) tenant in Hassendean. He is recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to answer charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. John (16th/17th C.) son of Walter in Synton. In 1590 he was listed among Veitches (including his brother Robert) who the Tweedies promised not to harm. John of Dawyck (1579–1606) son of William. He was tenant in Clerklands in 1590 when listed among Veitches who the Tweedies promised not to harm; John, son of Walter in Synton, was also listed and so clearly a separate man. In 1593/4 he was ‘apparent of Dawik’ when Walter Scott of Ashkirk and Alexander Scott of Clerklands were his sureties not to harm the Tweedies of Drumelzier and Drea. He is referred to in 1595 as ‘Iohn Waiche, fear of Dawik’ when he signed a ‘bond of manrent’ in Hawick with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. The witnesses were Andrew and 2 Williams (one of them surely his brother). He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602, ‘for my selff and in name of my father, being present’. He succeeded to Dawyck on the death of his father in 1602. He married Janet Stewart. In some histories he is succeeded by his son Malcolm; however, in 1606 his eldest son William is recorded being served as his heir in the 10-pound land (of old extent) of North Synton (perhaps this just being the superiority of the lands). John (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with James as owner of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. He was probably one of the Veitches of Dawyck. Sir John of Dawyck (1614–82) son of William. He was regarded as the most important member of the Maasons in Scotland in his time. He served as Master of Works in Scotland for Charles I and was in charge of building work carried out at Holyrood Palace. He may be the younger of Dawyck who was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1664. He married Christian Naesmyth; their son John succeeded and sold off the Dawyck estate in 1691. His son David became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1652 and his son Michael became a merchant’s apprentice there in 1663. John (17th C.) wright at Bedrule in the late 1600s. His eldest son was Thomas and a younger son was James. He is probably the John who listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule in 1694. He could be the John who married Bessie Lillico in Bedrule in 1708. John (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is listed right after James, to whom he was presumably related. He may be related to the earlier John, associated with Clerklands. In 1694 (along with Robert) he witnessed a baptism for James. He is probably the John who married Jean Coltart and whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Ashkirk in 1689. The witnesses in 1689 were Walter Coltart and James Pringle. He is probably the John who in 1691 (along with James Pringle) witnessed a baptism for Robert. John (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoot’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. John of Dawyck (d.1704) son of John of Dawyck, who was Master of Work in Scotland for Charles I. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother in Edinburgh in 1687, gratis, in right of his father. He sold of the family estate in 1691. He was ‘precentor of the signatures’ in Edinburgh, giving his son John the right to become Burgess and Guild Brother gratis in 1703. Another son, Robert, became a Burgess gratis in 1704 (by which time he was deceased). He married Isabel Grierson. John (18th C.) recorded at Spittal in 1727. He was part of the same family who were later tenants at Spittal-on-Rule. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: James (b.1727), who farmed at Spittal; and Alexander (b.1733). John (1752–1839) born in Jedburgh, eldest son of Thomas, who was gardener to Sir William Scott at Anrum House. At the age of 14 he became an apprentice gardener with Robert Dickson & Son in Hassendean. He finished his apprenticeship in Hammersmith and founded a nursery himself in about 1800. This grew to be a family business, based in Devon and London. John (1759–1816) eldest son of James and Betty Murray. He succeeded his father as tenant at Spittal-on-Rule. He is probably the John who is recorded at Spittal Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. It is said that he was unable to convince his wife to stop home-brewing ale, which had become illegal, and so he informed on her to the authorities in Jedburgh, who, however, were amused by his honesty and let her off with a warning. He married Jean Elliot from Knowesouth in 1791. 6 of their children were baptised in Cavers Parish. Their children were: Jane or Jean (b.1791), who married Thomas Turnbull, merchant in Hawick; James (b.1792), who trained as a minister; William (b.1794), also trained as a minister; Betty (1798–1838); John (b.1796), who was a gardener; Robert (1798–1834), trained as a minister and became a Greek scholar; George (b.1799), died in Lanton; Margaret (b.1801), who died in infancy; Mabel (1802–48), who died unmarried; Margaret (again, b.1804), who also died in infancy; Elliot (d.1842); and an unnamed girl. His wife Jean, died a few days after the last child... was born John (18th/19th C.) listed as a meal dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Kathleen Anne (1908–68) daughter of tweed manufacturer James and Margaret Anne Currie. She became an Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1930. About 1931–4 she worked for the Duke of Roxburgh on estate improvements. She exhibited watercolours at the Hawick Art Club in the 1930s. In about 1937 she designed Little Salt Hall adjacent to Summerfield (possibly her parents’ home), off Rosalle Brae. It has an unusual curved plan, with Arts & Crafts elements. She was unmarried and lived with her sister Maude in a house she designed near Gattonside. After retirement she converted to Catholicism. From 1958 she spent the last decade of her life working on renovations of the Church of Our Lady and St. Joseph in Selkirk. She spent time at the Catholic retreat at Elie (in Fife) and went missing from there. Her body was later found on the beach and she had been strangled. Her murder was never officially solved, although the later accidental death of a worker dismantling the railway there may have been the cause of the police shutting the case. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: John (b.1656); and James (b.1660). The witnesses in 1656 were Robert (surely a relative) and John Hislop. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of North Synton. In 1580/1 he paid the agent of Margaret Douglas of Bothwell the sum of £30 for part of the annual rent on the lands of ‘Over Maines of Hassindaneburne’, which had been wadset by Robert Scott of Alton. In 1590 he was listed among Veitches including his brother John who the Tweedies promised not to harm. He may be the Robert ‘in North Sintoun’ whose ‘son natural’ William became a cordiner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1609. Robert (17th C.) married ‘Heilling Dods’ in Ashkirk in 1644. Note that Thomas Dodds married ‘Heilling Wauche’ in Ashkirk in 1648, with either or both perhaps being related to this couple. He may have been father of John (b.1646) and Jams (b.1649), with no mother’s name given. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 (along with John) he witnessed a baptism for James (who lived at North Synton). He married Janet Coltart and their children included: John (b.1689); James (b.1691); Gideon (b.1693); Janet (b.1695); Margaret (b.1697); James (b.1701); and Robert (b.1703). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Philhope in 1715 and 1718 and Broadlee in 1722. His surname is written ‘Veatch’. He is probably the son of James and Helen Turnbull, born in Robertson Parish in 1686. His children included: Jean (b.1713); Helen (b.1715); Mary (b.1718); William (b.1719); and Christian (b.1722). Robert (18th C.) married Isabella Thomson in Minto in 1744. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for John Hislop and Isobel Veitch. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘meal-maker’ at Newton Mill, Bedrule Parish in 1691, probably related to John the wright at Bedrule. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694, with ‘The Kilne’ listed right after him. He is probably the Thomas whose children, baptised in Bedrule, included William (b.1691) and Isabel (b.1694). Thomas (b.1692) son of wright John. He was shepherd at Spittal Tower. His children included: Thomas (b.1714), baptised in Bedrule; Walter (b.1716), baptised in Cavers; and William (b.1719), baptised in Bedrule. Helen (b.1728), baptised in Cavers, may have been his daughter, if he was living at Dykes at that point. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Neil and their children included Marion (b.1716), Janet (b.1721) and Patrick (b.1724). Perhaps the same Thomas in recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included William (b.1737). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1764). Thomas (1720/1–1807) gardener in Edgerston. His wife, Mary (or Mariane) Scott, died in 1780, aged 50. Their son Archibald (1777/8–1836) lived for a while in Jamaica. They had an unnamed son baptised in Jedburgh in 1767. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard and must be related to the Spittal Mill family. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Jane Cockburn and their son James was baptised in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Agnes Hall and their son Adam was baptised in 1773. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Unthank in Hob Kirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He probably also farmed at Wester Swanshie, and other nearby lands, which were at that time let along with Unthank. ‘T. Veitch’s wife’ who died in Hob Kirk Parish in 1812 could have been his wife. Helen (b.1773), Margaret (b.1775), Ann (b.1777) and Betty (b.1782), baptised in Hob Kirk, could be his daughters. Thomas (b.1800) son of James. He drove meal etc. between Langholm and Hawick for his father, who had farmed at Binks and then moved to Langholm. He is listed at Binks in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Walter (16th C.) son of George of North Synton. He was given these lands in a sasine of 1526. In 1531 he was involved in a dispute over the succession to Synton (and the ‘kyndness’ of Corslie) along with Walter Scott in Synton and Adam Scott, his brother-in-law, against John, William and their brothers. By 1535 the lands of North Synton were owned by John. He is probably the Walter ‘Vauch’ listed in 1538 along with George Robson, John Robson, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. In 1541 he witnessed a transaction for the Scotts of Headshaw. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Watt Vaiche’. Walter of North Synton (d.c.1600) probably son of John, although these generations are uncertain. He may be the ‘Walter Vache of Syntoun’ who is recorded as a supporter of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is given, may also have been his child. William (d.c.1502) probably son of Paul.

In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. He could be the William who served as officer for Thomas Ker; with her permission and that of his eldest son James, he sold North Synton (with the exception of Clerklands) to Francis Scott of South Synton in 1641. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Nicholas (b.1708); and James (b.1711). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was in Appletreehall in 1718 when he married Margaret (or Marion) Turnbull. They were living at Galalaw in 1724. Their children included: Isabel (b.1724); and Martha (b.1728). The witnesses in 1724 were John Easton and James Telfer. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in ‘Longtown’ (probably Langtonheight) in Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1715, 1718 and 1719. He married Margaret Archibald and their children included William (b.1712), Janet (b.1713), Robert (b.1716), Helen (b.1715), John (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1719). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Neil and their children included Jean (b.1708), John (b.1710), Janet (b.1717), Agnes (b.1722) and Andrew (b.1726). Janet (b.1705), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. William of Dawyck (d.c.1502) probably son of Paul. He held the family estates in Peeblesshire, aligned with the young Walter (son of George). William of Dawyck (d.c.1545) 2nd son of William. He had a charter for North Synton in 1509. He held the family estates in Peeblesshire, succeeding to his brother Alexander. He was also superior of the lands of North Synton, granting a charter to his nephew George in 1525 and a ‘precept of sasine’ to George’s son Walter in 1526. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. He could be the William who served as officer for Thomas Ker of Yair in 1531 in a dispute with Patrick Murray of Falahill. He purchased letters to declare Adam Scott in Synton as a fugitive for not delivering to him the tutorship of his (Adam’s) nephew Walter; he was at that time referred to as ‘William Vaych in the Yair’. In 1535 he had a debate over these lands with John Veitch, but received Corslee (on the Gala Water) in return for John retaining North Synton. William of Dawyck (d.1602) son of James. He was known as ‘the Deil of Dawyck’. He inherited the family lands, which included acting as superior for North Synton, as embodied in a crown charter of 1564. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1590 the Tweedies had a bond not to harm him and other Veitches, including his brother George and son William and some Veitches from Synton. In 1600 he and James Tweedie of Drumelzier were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to resolve their feud. He was also listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. He married Marion Fleming and his sons included: John, who succeeded; Patrick, killed by the Tweedies in 1590; and William. William of Dawyck (d.aft. 1654) eldest son of John. In 1606 he is recorded being served as heir to his father John in the lands of North Synton, including the advowson of the church. He was said to have killed James Tweedie of Drumelzier in a duel in 1617. In 1637 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis). In 1613 he married Christian, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony. Their children included: Sir John, who succeeded; James; Robert; and David.

Rev. William (1640–1722) son of John, minister of Roberton in Lanarkshire. He had brothers who were ministers at Westruther, Mauchline and Govan. He was educated in Glasgow and spent time as tutor to the family of Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. There he was influenced by John Livingstone and became friends with Gilbert Elliot (later Lord of Minto). He was licensed in 1664, but identified himself with the Pentland Rising and was declared as a fugitive. Escaping to England, he became chaplain to the Mayor of Newcastle. He then preached in Scotland under an assumed name, but was arrested and imprisoned on the Bass Rock in 1679. With Gilbert Elliot acting as his agent, petitioning people in positions of power in London, he was liberated after 6 months. Travelling again to England, he is said to have preached at Kielderhead, Wheelcauseway and Deadwater. He also at one point hid out in a turf-covered hut near Carter Fell, while the dragoons searched for him. He also acted an agent on behalf of the Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He became minister at Whitting Hall, Morebattle in 1688, moving to Peebles in 1690 and then Dumfries in 1694. He married Marion Fairley, who died the day after him. Their children were: William, Captain in the Darien Expedition; Samuel, first Governor of Nova Scotia; Ebenezer, minister of Ayr; Elizabeth; Sarah; Agnes; Janet; and 3 others who died young. His memoirs were published in 1825. William (17th C.) resident at Outerside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John was also listed there and must have been related. He is probably the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Margaret (b.1673); George (b.1675); Marie (b.1677); Janet (b.1678); and Robert (b.1683). The witnesses in 1675 were James Thorbrand and William Laing. The witnesses in 1683 were William Laing and George Thorbrand (whose mother may have been a Veitch). It is possible that his name was ‘Velch’, i.e. Welsh. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His surname is written ‘Vaith’. He could be the William who married Agnes Bowie and had children (baptised in Ashkirk): Jean (b.1690); and William (b.1692). The witnesses in 1690 were James Kennedy (who was probably also at Ashkirk Mill) and John Bowie (who was probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) wright listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. William (18th C.) resident of Spitill in 1729 and 1730. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1729) and Bessie (b.1730). He was surely related to other Veitches of Spittal-on-Rule. William (18th C.) gardener at Branxholme. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme). He is listed as ‘Gardiner to Midlamiln at Branxome’, i.e. he worked for Robert Elliot of Midlamil Mill, who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, living at Branxholme. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1741. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Whitriggs in 1761 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. He married Nelly Scott and their children included: an unnamed child.
Veltoun (b.1756); Janet (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1761). William (d.bef. 1787) merchant in Hawick. In 1758 he was witness to a baptism for Walter Rae and in both 1758 and 1762 he witnessed baptisms (along with shoemaker John Oliver) for merchant Andrew Scott. He married Christian Scott in 1753; this could also be the marriage of William ‘Velch’ recorded in Kirkton Parish in 1753, with no bride’s name given. Their children included: Agnes (1757–87); Elizabeth (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); William (b.1763); Elizabeth (again, b.1765); Alison (b.1768); James (b.1768); and Andrew (again, b.1768). The witnesses in 1757, 1759 and 1765 were merchant Andrew Scott (possibly related to his wife) and shoemaker John Oliver. William (1738–1818) 3rd son of James of Inchbonny. He was a wright at Inchbonny, inheriting part of the property on the death of his father, his descendants later becoming sole owners. His wife died in 1823 aged 84. His eldest son James was well known as a self-taught philosopher and astronomer and his 2nd son William became a millwright in Jedburgh. He could be the William listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. His daughter Agnes died in 1787. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Ormiston Mains, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Probably the same William was a servant at Sunnyside on the 1801 Militia ballot. William (b.1800/1) born in Linton, he was farmer at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 290 acres and was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. He married Janet Davidson. Rev. William (1794–1885) son of John Veitch and Jean Elliot, he was born at Spittal-on-Rule and his baptism was recorded in Cavers Parish. Like 2 of his brothers (and his cousin James Veitch, D.D.) he trained for the ministry. He was educated in Jedburgh and then at Edinburgh University, where Thomas Carlyle was one of his contemporaries. He was a seceder, with severe Presbyterian views and although he trained for the ministry and preached a few times, he never took charge of any parish. Instead he devoted much of his life to teaching Greek in Edinburgh and wrote ‘Greek Verbs, Irregular and Defective’ (1848), which was reprinted several times. He also served as editor of several Greek and Latin texts and wrote many reviews. Although he failed to get the Greek Professorship in Edinburgh in 1852, he was made LL.D. in 1866. He had a reputation for being fond of sport and a popular storyteller. He was said to be ‘esteemed in his select private circle for genial humour and familiarity with border story’. In late life he lived in a cottage at Linton. He died at his home on North West Circus Place in Edinburgh and is buried in Dean Cemetery there (also formerly written ‘Vach’, ‘Vaiche’, ‘Vaitch’, ‘Vaitche’, ‘Veitch’, ‘Vetche’, ‘Vetch’, ‘Vetch’, ‘Vitch’, ‘Wache’, ‘Wauch’, ‘Weache’, ‘Weche’, ‘Weich’, ‘Wetch’, etc., and with the modern Waugh also possibly being a variant).

Veltoun (vel-tin) n. old form of Wulton, used on a Church of Scotland register of 1586.

vennel (ve-nul) n., arch. an alley, small lane, narrow thoroughfare in a town – ‘...the common vennel that leads from the town head to the back dam of the mill’ [BR] (early Hawick documents speak about the ‘Common Vennel’ and the ‘Back Vennel’; from French).

the Vennel (thu-ve-nul) n. name sometimes used for the ‘Common Vennel’ running from Myreslawgreen down to the Coble Pool, which marked part of the town boundary in the 1537 Charter.

Venner (ve-nur) n. Corbyn Morris (d.1803) Captain in the East India Company. His first name is also written ‘Corrybine’. He was Captain of the ‘Queen’ in 1796 and the ‘Walpole’ 1797/8, which ship he purchased in 1803. In 1800 he was served heir to his uncle James Lauder of Whitslade. As well as gaining the lands of Whitslade, he also got Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel. The 1802 Land Tax Rolls lists him paying tax on £169 for those farms and £266 13s 4d for Whitslade. His will describes him as ‘of Inner Temple, City of London’. John (18th/19th C.) succeeded his brother Corbyne in 1805, gaining half of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel. He also gained the other half of the lands that had previously belonged to his great-uncle John Adam of Whitslade (also written ‘Vennor’).

Vernon (ver-nun) n. Joshua John (c.1847–1923) born in West Calder, Midlothian, son of William Francis. He worked as a dentist in Hawick. He was writer of ‘The Parish and Kirk of Hawick, 1711–1725’ (1900) and the text for ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J. McNairn. He was one of the earlier writers to insist that the Mote was the remains of a Norman palisaded stronghold. He was Exhibition Secretary for the Hawick Fine Arts Association and also wrote 33 articles for the Transactions. He also helped James Sinton compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. In 1874 in Hawick he married Isabella Douglas, daughter of butcher William Nisbet, and had a son, Robert Douglas (b.1874). In 1877 in Stow he secondly married Mary Jamieson and their children included Alice Edith (b.1879), Ethel (b.1881) and Maria Diana (b.1883).

verray (ve-rä) adj., arch. genuine, true, actual – ‘… in the soume of twa hundreth merkis of vsuale monе of Scotland, becaus of verray det′ [SB1470].

verrih see verra

verter (ver-tur) n., arch. virtue, efficacy in healing certain diseases – ‘To hae verter. To possess, or be supposed to possess virtue, by which certain diseases may be cured, Roxb. Ettr. For.’ [JoJ], a charm (cf. vertew).

the Verter (thu-ver-tur) n. shortened form of the Verter Well – ‘Thus keep it intact frae the rude ruthless hand, And protect the famed well o′ the Verter′ [RF].

the Verter Well (thu-ver-tur-wel) n. spring that entered the Teviot near the Dunk, about 350 yards upriver from the Pipleheugh Well. It supposedly had healing powers, and even had its mineral properties tested once. A pipe was fitted in the 1860s and an iron fountain was erected on the river bank in 1874, with its position moved to the other side of the road in 1888. There was a poetry competition inspired by the Verter Well in 1888, with the best entries published in a booklet. The iron fountain, paid for by the wife of Rev. Thomson of Rosalee, had a Latin inscription which translated as ‘Drink, pass on, give thanks to God’. However, the supply was never the same after being interfered with. Before the end of the 19th century the spring had found another channel and the well dried up – ‘From Hawick Verter Well shall spring A cure for every evil thing′ [T], ‘Ne′er mix it wi′ spirits, but take it itself′, ‘There′s a pure healing virtue in our grand Verter Well′ [VW], ‘Or ailblins gin we will′d it how we′d scamper aff sae fell To play the truant laddies at the auld Verter Well′ [VW] (the origin is from the word ‘verter’ or virtue, but note there was a more famous Verteir Well near Airdrie, popular in the 18th century, and others near Duns, Yetholm and probably elsewhere).

Vertew (ver-too) n., arch. virtue, moral excellence – ‘...the quhilk Adam Cessfurde, bailzie, through the vertew and strenth of his office ...’ [JW1558] (cf. verter and virtue).

the Vertish (thu-ver’-eesh, -teesh, -tish) n. popular name for the Vertish Hill, which extends from Burnflat to the Nip Knowes. Long in use as a recreational part of the Common, it was the location for horse racing at the Common Riding until 1819. It is now home of the Hawick Golf Club, venue for the Vertish Hill Sports, well trodden during the Chases, and offers a glorious panorama of the Borders – ‘Sune we maun climb the Vertish heicht To watch the worthy emblem waving’ [RH], ‘Fit yet to face the Nipknowes or storm the Vertish high, For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘But hei has the Vertish to bield his back ... ’ [DH] (in older documents it is ‘Fertish’, suggesting an origin in the Gaelic ‘fàir tais’, meaning a damp ridge).

the Vertish Brae (thu-ver’-eesh-brä) n. occasional name for the Vertish Hill, or the Nip Knowes – ‘...Nae gallop up the Vertish Brae, Nae rider, horse nor goal’ [WP].

the Vertish Hill (thu-ver’-eesh-hill) n. part of the Common, let to the Golf Club for a nominal rent, and used annually for the Vertish Hill Sports since 1881. Up until 1803 the riders at the Common Riding used to go over the hill on their way to the Moor. The hill reaches a height of 856 feet and the land covers an area of 68 acres. It is more commonly known simply as the Vertish – ‘...O’er the Vertish hill nor tire’ [AB], ‘From Robber’s Law o’er to the Vertish Hill, When auld wives in Denholm, cry out for a gill’ [MP], ‘But I’m fain for a sicht o’ the Vertish Hill Wi’ his plaid flung owre his shooder’ [DH], ‘...For there’s never a hill like the Vertish Hill To a guitter-bluid Wast-ender!’ [DH], ‘But when A stand on the thirteenth tee The view ma hert diz thrill Lookin’ sooth owre God’s ain country Fraud the Vertish Hill’ [IWL] (there are spelling variations; it is still ‘Fertish Hill’ in 1863).

the Vertish Hill Sports (thu-ver’-eesh-hilspörtz) n. the Children’s Annual Festival and Sports, held on a specially levelled part of the Vertish Hill. It includes races for primary school children, preceeded by a procession, latterly from the Evergreen Hall (formerly from the Buccleuch Memorial) to the Vertish Hill, where the children receive a gift of money (or sometimes another item). Started in 1882 as a kite flying contest for boys under 16, other games and races were soon added. At the special sports for the Queen’s Diamond Jubilee in 1897 it is estimated that the crowd was 12,000. It was moved to the Park for a couple of years, but returned to the Vertish in 1906. There is film of the procession to the sports and some of the competitions in 1909/10. There was a special Vertish Hill Sports in 1914 on the Saturday before the Common Riding, as part of the Quater-Centenary celebrations. The procession was led by the Cornet and 25 mounted supporters and included 3,600 children, each of whom was given a ceremonial enamelled mug. In 1915 the Sports were held on the Friday of the Common Riding in place of traditional events, and more than 2,800 children received a box of chocolates. In 1919 a special Victory Vertish Hill Sports were held. There have also been other special celebratory Sports over the years. The precise day has varied, but it is usually held on a Saturday near the end of June, at earlier times being in July. At one point the cost of the Games was underwritten by the Town Council, but for a long time has relied entirely on donations and administered by a voluntary committee. The providing of tea to the public has long been a tradition. In 2020 the event was cancelled because of Covid-19, with people encouraged to fly kites instead.

Vesey see Vesey

Vesey (vee-see) n. Agnes (d.1301/2) mother of William ‘de Chartres’, and probably wife of Henry Charteris. She died at ‘Appletierig’ (probably Appletreehall, although stated to be in the regality of Sprouston) at Martinmas in 1301 and the lands there were inherited by her son William. Lady Jane (13th C.) probably heiress of the half-barony of Wilton, her name is also given as ‘Joan’. It seems reasonable to suppose that she was daughter of John, Lord of Alnwick. Her husband was Sir Thomas de Charteris, with whom she jointly held the half-barony in a grant by Alexander III, after having previously resigned them into the King’s hands. According to an inquest of 1303/4 these lands were inherited by William de Charteris, son of Andrew and Agnes de Vesci (who may well have been her sister). It was said at the 1303/4 inquest that the jurors ‘know nothing about the manner of such enfeoffment … they know there was such, but not its tenor’; hence there is some mystery surrounding how she came to hold the half-barony. Note that an earlier member of her family, Margaret, married Sir Patrick of Riddell, and an even earlier member, Sybil, married Walter Bombeck, who gifted the original ‘Hermitage’ in Liddesdale. Her husband Thomas died in 1302 and she died earlier, ‘long before the Scots war’. To further complicate matters, the Barony had earlier passed through Walter de Percehay, from his mother Joan de Wilton, except that Walter de Percehay’s mother appears to have been Joan (or Jane) de Vesey; the names cannot be coincidental, but it is unclear what the relationships were (also ‘Vesey’, ‘de Vesey’, ‘de Vesci’, etc.).

Vetch see Veitch

vex (veks) n. a worry, concern, annoyance, regret – ‘A was seek on Thursdi an hed ti miss the Colour Bussin, which was a right vex’, ‘A war is an awfih vex’ [ECS], ‘…fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark …’ [ECS] (only used as a verb in standard English; see also vexit).

vexed (veksd) adj. concerned, troubled, distressed, annoyed, sorry – ‘A’m awfi vexed for un’, ‘An’ ee felt sae vexed when his team got bate’, ‘A was vext A’d naebody nerr iz ti speak ti … ’ [ECS], ‘A war is an awfih vex’ [ECS], ‘… But lookit sae vexed when his team got bate That ye gied him half your pie’ [DH] (also written ‘vext’; this word is used more commonly in Hawick than in standard English, and with a slightly different meaning).

the Vic (thu-vik) n. the Victoria Hotel, existing from the 19th century at 52 High Street. It was designed by J.P. Alison around 1893 and built on premises formerly occupied by Nixon’s hosiery factory. The hotel closed in the 1970s and was demolished in 1980.

vicarage (vi-ku-rej) n., arch. a minor tithe, originally payable to the local vicar (rather than parson), also referred to as ‘vicarage teind’ – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estmat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane flrit, and 20 libs of vicarage’ [PR1627], ‘Thomas Gray peyed formerly for the viccorage of Hassindeune alias Tounhead 13s 4d’ [Buc1692].

Vicar’s Hill (vi-kurz-hil) n. former name for lands near Hobkirk Kirk, long owned by the church and later called Kirknowe. This is probably the ‘Vicarie-hill’ referred to in the documents relating to Rev. George Douglas in 1602. It could be the ‘Vicars Hall’ mentioned along with ‘Vicars land’ of Hobkirk Kirk when inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigenhead in 1683.

Vicar’s Hob (vi-kurz-höb) n. nickname for Robert Elliot in the latter part of the 16th century.

Vicar’s Land (vi-kurz-lawnd) n. former name for lands attached to Hopkirk Kirk. They are mentioned as ‘Vicars land’ in 1683, along with ‘Vicars Hall’ and Wester Swanshiel, among lands inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigenhead.

Vicar’s Rob (vi-kurz-röb) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of the thieves captured at Hawick market in October 1567. He may be the same man as ‘Vicar’s Hob’ recorded in 1589.

Vicar’s Waas (vi-kurz-wawz) n. former name for a field near Hobkirk Church, which had been the site of the old vicarage lands, a little to the west of the steading of Kirknowe.

vicker (vi-kur) n. a chestnut that has won a game of ‘conkers’, being referred to as a ‘yin vicker’, ‘twae vicker’ etc., depending on how many games it has won, and the surviving chestnut inheriting the score of its opponent – ‘if ma cheggy baits your eeleeven vicker, then mine’ll be a twal vicker’ (presumably from ‘victor’).

Victoria (vik-tö-ree-u) n. Alexandrina Victoria (1819–1901), grand-daughter of George III, she was Queen of the United Kingdom 1837–1901, during a time of great political change in Britain and the building of the Empire. In Hawick she gave her name to a street, a hotel, a bridge and a laundry, amongst other things. She was a frequent visitor to Bowhill. On her first visit to Scotland in 1842, she was a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch at Dikleith. On another royal visit to the Borders in 1867, the train passed through Victoria Baths

Hawick at a walking pace, with crowds lining the railway; she gave an address in Kelso and stayed at Floors Castle, with the beacons being lit on Border hills in the evening, then visited Melrose Abbey, Abbotsford and Jedburgh.

Victoria Baths (vik-tö-ree-u-bawths) n. former name for the Victoria Laundry, operating on Commercial Road in the latter part of the 19th century, run by John Saunderson. It may have originally operated as a public bathing facility, but became a laundry when the ‘Baths’ opened nearby in 1912.

Victoria Brig (vik-tö-ree-u-brig) n. footbridge from the Little Haugh to Commercial Road. The first wooden trellis bridge was built in 1851/2, by Walter Scott the builders (Buccleuch Street), painted by Andrew Kennedy in white, blue and yellow (imitating the Crystal Palace) and funded by public subscription. It was situated a few yards further down the river than today’s and was built by subscription (with the final debt cleared by the Road Trustees) to provide a link to the High Street area from near William Watson’s factory. The bridge was named in honour of Queen Victoria by the Bridge Committee. It was replaced in 1873/4 by a narrow iron bridge, which was widened in 1910, but destroyed in a flood of 1938. The bridge was rebuilt in 1939 and then again in 1991. Before the bridge existed there were stepping stones across the river there, and some of Watson’s workers used stilts to cross at the same general location. As part of the flood protection scheme, the bridge was replaced with a wider and higher version in 2021 and reopened in 2022.

Victoria Hotel (vik-tö-ree-u-hō-tel) n. hotel formerly at 52 High Street, which held dances and other social events. It was for a time a temperance hotel. The building was of red sandstone in an Elizabethan style, with 2 half-timbered gables (which were very distinctive on this part of the street). It was built on the former site of Nixon’s hosiery premises, which from 1831–61 was the residence of Dr. John Douglas. James Scott was proprietor in 1868. It was remodelled sometime around 1900, with designs by J.P. Alison dated 1893. Andrew Deans was owner in the 1950s and 1960s and he later leased it to brewers Drybrough & Co. The hotel was demolished in 1980 (also known as the Vic).

Victoria Laundry (vik-tö-ree-u-lawn-dree) n. the Victoria Steam Laundry on the Teviot side of Commercial Road, which operated through much of the 20th century, closing in the 1970s. It also contained baths in earlier times, but developed into a laundry, presumably when the public swimming baths opened nearby. It was used by many local hotels etc., and also by householders for their special linens. Items were deposited there for washing (in distinction to ‘the Steam’, where one had to do it oneself) and it also had dry cleaning facilities. The last manager was Mr. Stanger. The building was later used as a warehouse, but has been empty for many years.

Victoria Mills (vik-tö-ree-u-milz) n. the main knitwear manufacturing factory of Innes, Henderson & Co., situated on Victoria Road, and later becoming Braemar Knitwear. The firm had started in modest premises at Wilton Grove, building this new Mill in 1875. Innes & Co. split from Henderson & Co. in 1885, with Henderson in the front and Innes in the rear. There was an extension in 1891 and a further 2 storeys were added to the front building by 1912. Because of the split between Innes and Henderson, the mill had 2 separate boilers and hence 2 chimneys. Innes-Henderson reamalgamated in 1920 and later bought the adjacent Howlands Mill. This meant that precisely what was known as ‘Victoria Mills’ changed over the years. In 1976, with the closure of Rodono Mills, the administration department of Pringle’s was moved there. The factory closed in the 1990s and was demolished in 2004, along with the neighbouring Howlands Mill (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Victoria Road (vik-tö-ree-u-rōd) n. street alongside the Common Haugh, originally called Damside, then Upper Damside (after Wilton Dam) before being renamed after Queen Victoria about 1864. There were a few houses there (some thatched) from at least the early 19th century, with fruit gardens where the factories were later built. The development of the area for hosiery mills started in the late 19th century. The former offices of Turnbulls are a grade C listed building.

victual (vikt-wal) n., arch. produce, foodstuff, particularly grain or other crops – ‘The lands of Clarilaw sett to James dryden and Thomas Henderson in tack for 26 bols victuall half meall & half bear’ [Buc1692] (spelling and probably punctuation varied).

violence (vee-lins) n., poet. violence – ‘He sall redeim thair sauls frae deceite an’ vielence . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Delifer me, O Lord, frae the ill man: preserfe me frae the man o’ violence’ [HSR].

vielent (vee-len’t) adj., poet. violent – ‘. . . an’ the assemblies o’ vielent men hae soucht efter my saul . . . ’ [HSR].
Viewforth

Viewforth (vew-forth) n. former name of a house on West Stewart Place, built for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was then the home of I. Washington Wallis of Braemar and temporarily John Farrar Blenkhorn. It was later Gibson’s Temperance Hotel and later became Kirklands Hotel. It was converted into housing in 2007.

the Vikings (thu-vi-kinz) n., pl. Norse people who plundered the coasts of Northern Europe in the 8th–10th centuries. Groups mainly from Denmark started a conquest of Northumbria from 867, establishing their capital at York in 876. Whether the Hawick area was ruled from here is uncertain, but in general Bernicia was largely unaffected by the Viking presence (and you can’t get very close to Hawick by boat!). Vikings settled and presumably inter-married with the natives, but their political influence in Scotland ended with the Battle of Largs in 1263. Hawick’s Thor and Odin myth may relate to a pre-Christian Anglian past, but almost certainly has nothing directly to do with the Vikings. However, some words and place names of Norse origin survive (although they may well have come only indirectly from the Vikings). Hog-back gravestones (symbolic of a longhouse) usually indicate Viking influence; two fragments are in the church porch and a path through the woods offers a popular walk. On the hill to the north are the remains of an earthwork and possible homestead – ‘My thoughts serene in Violet Woods I gaze on Teviotdale’ [JCa], ‘...Where the gentle breezes rustle through the Violet Woods serene’ [WL] (named after the wood dog-violet that grows there).

the Village (thu-vi-lee) n. group of houses by the Slitrig, to the west of the Kirkwynd, presumably named for their former relative isolation from other parts of the town (although perhaps the name was meant partly as a joke). Essentially the same area was known as Matthew Henderson’s Croft in the 16th century and Nichol’s Croft from the 17th century. The separate names Under Village and Upper Village appear in the early 19th century, with the houses renumbered as simply ‘the Village’ in 1904. The land was formerly known as Matthew Henderson’s Croft and then as Nichol’s Croft. The large tenement there was erected by Messrs. R. Elliot & Co. in about 1879. A white briar bush that grew there was supposed to have been planted by some supporters of Prince Charlie around 1745.

Viltone (wil-ton) n. former spelling for Wulton (e.g. used in a 1508 ‘retour’ of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell.

Viscomont Hermitage

Viscombe (vi-nee-kum) n. Walter (b.1890s) he served in WWI and was an early wireless operator. He became an amateur radio enthusiast, with the call signs 2CCA and GM8RV, while his brother Sidney was 2BTD and G2BTD. He lived in Galashiels, but after WWII moved to Hawick, perhaps working with a radio relay company. He was a member of the Hawick Radio Society, was the Hawick contact for the Radio Society of Great Britain and published articles in the Short Wave Magazine in the late 1940s and early 1950s. He lived on O’Connell Street.

vinyard (vin-yard) n. vineyard – ‘...while gaed out early in the mornin’ til fee laborers intill his vinyard’ [HSR].

violent (vI-lin’) adj., arch. relating to the taking of land by force and without paying rent – ‘...and grantit to the said Robert Ellot ane heretabill richt of the saidis lands, with ane dischairg of all byginne violebt proffeititis’ [SB1624].

the Violet Wuds (thu-vI-li’-wuds) n. also known as the Violet Wood, popular name for the picturesque wooded glen in the Netherhall wood of Wilton Park, just by Wilton Dean. It forms part of the boundaries of the town, and a path through the woods offers a popular walk. On the hill to the north are the remains of an earthwork and possible homestead – ‘My thoughts serene in Violet Woods I gaze on Teviotdale’ [JCa], ‘...Where the gentle breezes rustle through the Violet Woods serene’ [WL] (named after the wood dog-violet that grows there).

Virgin Kate (vir-jin-kai’) n. nickname for a Hawick resident in the mid-1800s – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe’ [HI].

virtue (vit-tew) n., arch. thrift, diligence, industry – ‘In many parts of Scotland the word virtue is limited entirely to industry; and a young divine who preached upon the moral beauties of virtue was considerably surprised at learning that the whole discourse was supposed to be a panegyric upon a particular damsel who could spin fourteen bundles of yarn in the course of a week’ [SWS] (cf. vertew).

Viscoont Hermitage (vl-koon’-her-mi’-eej) n. title created in 1706 for Henry, 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth. The lands of Hermitage had been in the hands of the Scots of Buccleuch for more than a century. The title (along with Earl of Deloraine and Lord Goldielands) was used by descendants until the death of the 4th Earl in 1807.

Vision 2014 (vi-shin-twā-thoo-zind-in-fow-ur-teen) n. umbrella term for a series of events in the years leading up to the quincentennial. Originally suggested by Kate Houston and Janice Chapman, the idea grew from an event to celebrate the 2012 London Olympics to encompass the 2014 quincentenary and celebrate several aspects of life in the Town. 2011 was the year of Arts and Culture, with the focal event being the Big Sing. 2012 was the year of Sport, with several events, including the use of the Hawick Torch in the Big Parade. 2013 was the Year of Industry, with the Big Show in the High Street. Finally, 2014 was the Year of Heritage, culminating in the Big Return.

the Visit (thu-vi-xi‘) (n. Hawick-based pop band of the early 1980s, with single ‘City Lights’. They won an award from the Prince’s Trust, ??.

visy (vi-see) (v., arch. to visit, communicate with by letter – ‘...I haue taine the hardiess heirby till visy zou in my auin absence ... as ane messager quha sall assur zou ...’ [SB1584].

vitiat (vi-tee-at) (v., arch. to spoil, impair the legal validity of something – ‘...ploittit aganis the said Erle of Buccleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the said dispositioun and chairtour ...’ [SB1624].

vizzy (vi-see) (n., arch. a look, scrutiny, survey – ‘Afore they were oot o’ ma sicht, as I ran for ma part, I took another vizzy, an’ I was mortified to see them rather losing grund’ [BCM1881].

V.J. Day (vee-jā-dā) (n. official end to WWII hostilities, on 15th August 1945. On this evening in Hawick there were spontaneous celebrations, with sirens going off, houses lighting up, the gas company’s hooter, etc., and people pouring into the street. On the following day there was a parade by the massed pipe bands and Saxhorn Band in the High Street, as well as Reid’s radio van, an address by the Provost from the Town Hall balcony, fireworks and bonfires at the top of the Loan and on the Miller’s Knowes, as well as in the hills around Stobs Camp.

Vogan (vō-gin) (n. man listed in 1586/7 as one of the Borderers who failed to appear to answer charges regarding reiving. He was recorded as being a tenant in Borthwickshils, but his forename is not given.

for the Common Riding Games since 1893, as well as High School sporting events, junior rugby, etc., and has clubrooms behind the grandstand. A shed was erected for use at the Games in 1908 and a new stand opened by Mrs. Renwick, wife of the Provost, in 1923. The facilities there have been used jointly by the Linden and the Trades since 1963. Administration of the Park was handed over to the Common Good in 2003. In 2005 an all-weather sports pitch was opened further to the south, on what was formerly called ‘The Playin Fields’, and is also now known as Volunteer Park.

volunteers (vo-lun-teerz) n. voluntary members of military units who are civilians subject to military regulations when in service. In Hawick there were several units formed in response to perceived threats of French invasion, each unit lasting for typically a few years. The first units appeared following the Volunteer Act of 1794, with large numbers formed by landowners in 1798. Officers were typically local landowners and their military titles were often used long afterwards. Many of the wealthier citizens, or those with access to a horse, were in the yeomanry cavalry. The Hawick Military Association operated from 1798–1802, followed by the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers 1803–09, which was consecrated by Rev. Arkle of Hawick and received regimental colours from Miss Elliot of Minto. During the False Alarm of 1804 the local men were mobilised and commended for their readiness. Their uniforms then consisted of red coat, white buckskin breeches and leggings and a feathered hat. These volunteer units were disbanded after Waterloo, but following other invasion scares units were formed again from about 1859. Later local volunteers were the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (4th Roxburgh) 1860–68 (ultimately becoming the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B.) and Hawick Volunteer Corps (5th Roxburgh) 1861–68. Note that the Volunteers were technically calved volunteers were the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (5th Roxburgh) 1861–

the Votadini ( thu-vö-ta-dee-nee) n., pl. Bronze Age or Iron Age tribe, with their centre at Edinburgh and boundaries covering much of the Lothians, Borders and Northumberland. The original capital may have been at the Trappinz Law hill-fort. Hawick was surely within their territory, and many local hill-forts would have been Votadini outposts. They were essentially the same people who were referred to as the Gododdin in Roman and post-Roman times. The Romans recorded them as a British tribe, coming under Roman occupation in the area between the Antonine and Hadrian’s Walls; they may later have had some sort of alliance with the Romans. The Gododdin kingdom was formed around 470, although the southern part of the Votadini territory became a new kingdom of Brynach (or Bernicia). The Votadini/Gododdin occupied land to the north and east of the Selgovae (the tribe of the upper Tweed and Teviot valleys); whether Hawick was inside or outside its boundaries at this time is unclear. A sub-tribe under Prince Cunedda is supposed to have migrated to Wales, driving out the Irish settlers there, and establishing a direct connection between the Lothian/Borders Scots and the modern Welsh.

Waddell (wa-dul) n. Alexander (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. George (18th/19th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Henry (b.c.1780) recorded as ‘Bleacher’ at Bedrule Mill on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. His children, baptised in Bedrule, included: Betty (b.1807): an unnamed child (b.1813); another unnamed child (b.1816); and Henry (b.1819). James (17th C.) glover in Hawick who witnessed a sasine in 1688. He was listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and is probably the same James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1723 he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child of Agnes (perhaps his daughter) and John Richardson. John (16th C.) recorded as chaplain in 1541 when he witnessed a dispute over a sum of money involving James Douglas of Cavers and William ‘Familtounne’. He may have been chaplain at Cavers. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1786 and Borthwickbrae in 1788. He married Nelly Paisley in 1785 and their children included Margaret (b.1786) and Agnes (b.1788). Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant to William Gardner, merchant in Hawick. In 1721 he was rebuked for fighting with Robert Kay on the Sabbath and rebuked again in 1724 for breaking the Sabbath along with John ‘Young Sodger’ Scott. In 1725 he was recorded as ‘tenant in Hawick’. He married Jean Clerk and their children included: Marion (b.1724); James (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1727). The witnesses in 1725 were smith William Young (b.1724); James (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1727). The witnesses in 1725 were smith William Young and weaver William Turnbull. Wadeshill (wadz-hil) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, between Slack and Northbank. Andrew Laidlaw was tenant in 1541, paying 22s yearly. Andrew Waugh is recorded there in 1590 and Steven Waugh in 1591. The tenant there in 1669 was John Laidlaw, with James Laidlaw at ‘Wadsholm’, which was probably nearby. Robert Laidlaw and Robert Oliver were there in 1694, with William Storie and Isobel Young listed among the poor of the Parish. Judging by the location, it could correspond to the more modern farmstead of ‘Waterside’, even although the older Waterside may have been further to the west (it is ‘Waldoishill’ in 1541, ‘Waldoishill’ in 1571/2, ‘Wadishill’ in 1590, ‘Weddeshill’ in 1591, ‘Wadeshill’ in 1669 and ‘waddest hil’ and ‘wadis-shill’ in 1694: it is marked ‘Wadeshill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that there could be confusion with ‘Wattie’s Spindles’ to the south-east, marked ‘Wadespinnells’ on Blaeu’s map).

Wake (wāk) n. Baldwin (d.1281) son of High and Joan de Stuttville. He held the manor of Liddel in Cumberland, which was presumably Liddel Strength. His lands are described in a record of 1281/2, although it is unclear to what extent this included lands in Scottish Liddesdale. He married Hawise de Quincy. His son John was Baron of Liddel. Sir John (1268–c.1300) eldest son of Baldwin of Bourne and Liddel (on the Cumberland side). He became the 1st Lord of Liddel. He was gifted Hermitage Castle and lands in Liddesdale by Edward I. He married Joan (or Johann), who was possibly daughter of the Baron of Fiennes. Their children were Thomas and Margaret (both of whom married Plantagenets). His widow retained partial possession of the revenues of these lands after his death, and successfully petitioned to continue this during the minority of William de Soules. After his death his lands were given to Sir Simon Lyndsay in 1300. Sir Thomas (c.1280–1347) son of Hugh. He was involved in the siege of Berwick in 1319 and was a hostage in Scotland for the Earl of Moray in 1323. He served in Aquitaine and had his English lands and castles restored to him 1328/9, with the English King petitioning for his Scottish lands to also be restored. This included Liddel Castle; however, it does not appear he ever had these lands reinstated. He married Blanche, daughter of Henry, Earl of Lancaster. His widow was given possession of all his lands in 1349.

(b.1861). Andrew (19th C.) wright recorded in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Archibald (19th C.) resident of Hawick who married Helen Turnbull in 1844. He is probably the Archibald who was a journeyman baker with William and George Hob Kirk, living on the Sandbed in 1841. His son Thomas James was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1845. Charles (b.1830) son of dyer John. In 1851 he was a ‘Woollen Dyer’ living on Mather’s Close. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Henderson and their children included John (b.1765), William (b.1767) and James (b.1769). The witnesses in 1767 were carrier James Henderson (possibly his wife’s father) and merchant John Hardie. He is probably the carrier George who in 1789 witnessed a baptism for John (probably his son). George (18th C.) married Agnes Oliver In Hawick in 1772. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Wilson and their children included James (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778) and Thomas (b.1783). Perhaps the same George paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. The later George was likely his son. He is probably the George, carrier in Hawick who in 1794 was involved with a dispute over non-payment with William Allwood in Selkirk, who was formerly of Hawick. He may be the merchant George who witnessed a baptism in 1797 for Thomas Stevenson. He may also be the merchant whose son George died in Hawick in 1799. George (b.c.1770s) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1797, when he was listed as ‘George Waldy Junior’. Probably the same George was a merchant in Hawick in 1799 when listed on the Ballot for the Militia. He may be the George who married Jean Irvine in Hawick in 1794, with children including Betty (b.1797) and George (b.1802), or the George who married Betty Cowan in Hawick in 1797. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. The George who was a carrier at Walter’s Wynd on the 1841 census is probably his son. George (18th/19th C.) married to Nelly Weir, their unnamed child was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1795. George (18th/19th C.) draper on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He could be the merchant of Hawick who died in 1824. George (b.c.1795) carrier in Hawick. He was based on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, the Village in 1851 and 6 Green Wynd in 1861. He may have been son of the earlier carrier of the same name; in 1841 May (b.c.1775) was living with him and presumably either his mother or aunt. He married Mary Leithead, and their children included: William (b.1834); May (b.1840); George (b.1842); and Robert (1846–1921). George (b.c.1828) frameworker in Hawick, probably son of Robert. In 1861 he was living at 14 Kirkwynd. In 1851 he married Jane Cavers, from Kirkton. Helen (b.1787) daughter of John and Helen Scott. She is recorded as ‘Ind.’ at about 20 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and ‘Annuitant’ in 1851. And in 1852 she is listed as ‘Miss Helen’ at Teviot Square, among the gentry of Hawick. She is probably the ‘Miss Waldie’ who ran a ladies’ boarding school on Buccleuch Street according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish whose son Walter died in 1776. James (b.c.1780) recorded at Timpendean on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Jedburgh Parish. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Helen Glendinning. Their son James was baptised in 1812. James (b.1810/11) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 21 High Street; the shoemaker Robert who was living with him was probably his brother. His wife was Jessie and their children included John (b.c.1832) and Ann (b.c.1834). He could be the James who married Jessie Caruthers in Langholm in 1831. James (b.1822/3) from Edinburgh, he was a coachman at Wilton Lodge. He was living at Wilton Lodge Cottages in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included: James (b.1845/6), born in Jedburgh; Andrew (b.1848/9), born in Southdean; and Margaret Robertson (b.1856/7), who was adopted. James (19th C.) married Euphemia Paterson in Southdean Parish in 1834. James (b.1820/1) farm servant in Rulewater and then at Wilton, serving mainly as a coachman. He was born in Midlothian. He was factotum for John Henderson at Abbotrule until Henderson died in 1861, then became coachman for David Pringle of Wilton Lodge. His wife Margaret was from Morebattle. Their children included Mary, Agnes, James and Andrew. James (b.1862/3) son of Alexander and Jemima Anderson. He was a frameworker in Hawick. He was living on the Mill Path in 1883 and at 14 Lothian Street in 1901. In 1883 he married Barbara, daughter of blacksmith John Halliday; the witnesses were Robert Waugh and Mary Lillico. Their children included Alexander, John, Robert, Janet, James, William and Nellie. John (18th C.) factor for Walter Scott of Harden in at least the period 1764–72. He could be the writer of that name who was in Kelso at about the same time. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Agnes Stewart. Their son Walter was baptised in 1812. John (18th C.) carrier from Hawick to Edinburgh recorded in a ‘Process of Scandal’ with Robert Scott, merchant of Lasswade, in 1790. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was probably closely related to carrier George. John (d.c.1825) hosiery manufacturer based in Slitrig Crescent. He is probably the son of George baptised in 1765. He went into partnership with Robert Pringle and Peter Wilson at the Whiskyhouse Mill in 1815. By the time of Wood’s 1824 map the factory belonged solely to him; it is marked ‘Wool Manufactory’ and straddled the mill lade, near the north end of the modern Stonefield Place. He could also be the ‘Mr, Waldie’ who owned property on the Tower Knowe on Wood’s map. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a manufacturer of stockings and woollen cloth. He lived near the corner of Silver Street and the Howegate, the well near there being known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. He married Helen Scott in 1786, and their children included: Helen (b.1787); Betty (b.1789), who married postmaster Robert Armstrong; George (b.1791); and Adam (b.1793). The witnesses in 1789 were bakers Thomas Kedie and George (probably his father). His daughter Helen was living in the family property in the 1840s and 50s, and appears to have been his heiress. John (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Borthwick Mains, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He could be the son of Peter baptised in Roberton in 1792. Perhaps the same John married Agnes Rath in Roberton Parish in 1818. John (b.1792/3) dyer in Hawick. He was living on Slitrig Crescent.
in 1841. He married Agnes Ralph and their children included: William (b.1819/20), perhaps from an earlier marriage; Charles (b.1830); Janet (b.1835); and Mary (b.1837/8). John (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1819. Perhaps the same man was ‘Br. Waldie’ of Lodge 111, who died in the 1880s after holding office continuously for 56 and was buried with full Masonic honours. He was also said to have never missed a Common Riding for 71 years. John (b.1820/1) from Edinburgh, he was a wool spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Teviot Crescent and in 1861 was living on Wilton Terrace. He married Christina (or Christian) Dobson in Hawick in 1848. Their children included Ann (b.1849/50), James (b.1853/4), John (b.1856/7) and George (b.1861). In 1841 he was on the South side of Main Street.

He had a daughter, Mary. It may be his father who was the Lilliesleaf tailor who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (c.1795–bef. 1864) nephew of William. In 1832 he inherited the farm of East Fodderlee from his uncle. He was listed at East Fodderlee among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1864 the farm was sold to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs by his son James, when it was heavily burdened by debt. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Jane and their children included James, Isabella, Jane, Agnes, John, Thomas and Margaret. His daughter married Dr. A.B. Bruce, Professor of New Testament Theology in the Free Church College in Glasgow. James (19th C.) son of James, from whom he inherited East Fodderlee. Since there were many debts, the farm was placed in the hands of the Crown and sold in 1864 to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs. He was said to be a great lover of books, and after the farm was sold he moved with his books to Edinburgh, where he worked as a book-seller. However, his health was never very robust and he died fairly young. James (19th C.) married Isabella Whillans in Hawick in 1856. James Campbell (1821–88) architect from Auchtermuchty, who designed the first Carnegie Library in Dunfermline, built 1881–83, as well as Hawick Town Hall, 1884–86. Dunfermline Town Hall is probably his other building that most closely resembles Hawick Town Hall. Other local contributions include Galashiels Poorhouse, Langlee and Netherby (near Galashiels), Waverley Hydropathic (Melrose), enlargement of Lilliesleaf Kirk and Ancrum Police Station. He trained in the office of William Burn and David Bryce and set up on his own in 1856/7. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Walcar’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (d.bef. 1532) recorded in 1532 when his nephew and heir William sold a croft and tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. John (16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract for people in Langnewton and Standhill. Adam in Langnewton was also a witness and could have been related. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruletownhead, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In the Land Tax Rolls for about 1874, David Henderson is listed as owner of ‘Part of Ruletownhead formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull’. Mary (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at the corner of Wellington Road and Wellington Street in the mid-1900s. Nikki (1982– ) winger with Hawick R.F.C. in 2000–02, scoring a try in the 2002 Scottish Cup Final. He then played for the Border Reivers, Ospreys, Worcester Warriors and Edinburgh Rugby. He was capped 24 times for Scotland and served as head coach in Hawick 2014–17. He works as a lecturer at Borders College. Norman member of the Hawick Saxhorn Band for over 60 years. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Belses. He is recorded in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against William Tunno in Selkirk. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cocklecotie, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Acreknowe in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Robert (1813/4–61) from Jedburgh, his mother was Margaret Douglas. He was a baker in Hawick, with his shop at Orrock Place. His business was one of those.
said to have suffered severe damage during the 1846 flood. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed at 2 Orrock Place and in Slater’s 1852 directory he was a baker on Central Square. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth Douglas and Margaret Hall (1850–68). His widow later moved to Bonjedward, where she died. His premises later became ‘the pawnshop that’s kept by Milmo’. Robert (19th C.) smith who owned 72 High Street in 1875. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belse in 1502. He was surely for William Waugh, who was also in Belse. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Walker of Hawyk’, nephew and heir of John Walker, in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1532, when he sold a croft and a tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. The ‘certain croft in the bounds of the lordship of Hawyk’ was presumably Morlaw’s Croft, while the tenement was on the north side of the High Street, bordering on the Slitrig, i.e. was at the Tower Knowe. The sale included an agreement that he would pay 40 shillings Scots if necessary to rebuild the tenement there in ‘better form than now’. His name does not appear as an owner of any particates of land on Hawick’s 1537 Charter; this suggests that his uncle John had owned the lands in Hawick, but he himself lived elsewhere (maybe Selkirk) and sold off all the Hawick property he inherited. William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as tenant in Clerkirk, ‘now in Roanhill’ in a legal case in Selkirk. William (18th/19th C.) owner of Thorshospace according to the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He may be the same man as the farmer in Mervinslaw. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw. In 1815 he purchased East Fodderlee from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Isabella, daughter of Thomas Turnbull, and grand-daughter of Adam Turnbull of Denesyde. His wife died in 1857, aged 76. Having no children, his nephew James inherited the lands. William (19th C.) early photographer in Fife and Edinburgh who also ran a studio somewhere in Wilton in 1866–67. It may be that J.B. Cartlidge was acting as his manager, and that he never himself worked in Hawick. Rev. William Lowe (1845–1930) born in Inverarity and Methy Parish, Angus. He trained at Edinburgh Theological Hall and became minister of Hawick Congregational Union Kirk in the period 1873–76, taking over from William Munro. Note that this was the dwindling original Congregational Church, and not the Evangelical Union Church, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He left to become minister at Thurso and then of a Unitarian church in Great Hamilton Street, Glasgow. He was finally a minister at Laurencekirk. He married Janet Rutherford in Edinburgh in 1870 and their children included Mary Louisa (1871) and Agnes Margaret (1873) (formerly written ‘Waker’). Walkerburn (waw-kur-burn) n. village about 20 miles north of Hawick, between Galashiels and Innerleithen, on the A72. It was effectively founded to house workers after the construction of Henry Ballantyne’s Tweedvale mill around 1850. In the 1920s a novel system for powering mills was built here, with water pumped up to a reservoir and used to drive turbines. The town has a Museum of Textiles in the converted Ballantyne’s Mill, and the unusually patterned sandstone house, the Kirna, dating from 1867. Population (1991) 658 (from ‘Wauker’s Burn’). Walker’s (waw-kurz) n. general store on Wellington Street in the early-to-mid 20th century. the Walker’s Road (Thun-waw-kurz-röd) n. former name for the road that connects the A698 with the Rule valley, between Denholm and Spittal, also known as ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. It was said to have been given the name because people would get off their horses or carts to make the pull up the steep hill easier. Walkingshaw (waw-kin-shaw) n. William (1840/1–1927) married Martha Lyon, who was daughter of Andrew Lyon and Joan Inglis and died in 1914, aged 73. His grandmother was Peggy Leggat, probably daughter of Wilton coachman Andrew. Their children were Jessie and Jenima. walkit (waw-kée’, -ki’) pp. walked – ‘...but naither him nor his doug tuik the least notice o’ mey, but wawkit on . . . ’ [BCM1880], ‘...Sae in oo baith walkit, as crouse as could be, An’, losh man, it was a fine sicht for tae see!’ [BM1900], ‘Langsyne, Aa walkit up the watterside And owre the Station Brig, efter a game . . . ’ [DH]. wall (wawl) n., arch. a well, spring, drinking fountain – ‘The wall news was generally much more interesting to them than the contents of a newspaper’ [V&M], ‘Ane fuuntan o’ gairdens, ane wal o’ leivin’ waters . . . ’ [HSR], ‘He turns the wuldirniss

Wallace (waw-lis) n. Andrew (18th C.) married Janet Davidson in Minto Parish in 1741. Andrew (b.1809/10) born in Hawick, he was a stockingmaker in Wilton and Hawick. He was living on ‘L. Damside’ in 1841 and at 8 Teviot Crescent in 1851. He married Helen Waugh in Wilton in 1837. Their children included: James (b.1838/9); Christian (b.1840/1–1914), who married John Stafford; Margaret (b.1843/4), who married James Riddell; Charlotte (b.1845/6); Wilhelmina (b.1847/8), who married John Kenyon; and Agnes (b.1850/1). Andrew (19th C.) married Margaret Reid in Wilton in 1880. Their children included James (b.1883) and John (b.1885). Bartholomew ‘Bartie’ (16th C.) servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst at the Kirklands of Bedrule in 1557. There was a complaint made to the Queen that Kerrs servants there were attacked by a group including Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. His name is given as ‘Wallaune’. Sir David James (1945– ) born in Hawick, son of Robert (‘Bobby’) and Janie of Garfield Street and then Silverbuthall. He was a pupil at the High School and then studied at Edinburgh University, where his Ph.D. was supervised by Nobel Laureate Peter Higgs. He had a fellowship at Princeton before taking up a lectureship in Physics at Edinburgh University in 1972. After a brief interlude at the University of Southampton, he became Tait Professor of Mathematical Physics at Edinburgh University 1979–93, Head of Physics 1984–87 and Director of the Edinburgh Parallel Computing Centre 1990–93. His interests developed from a variety of topics in theoretical physics to applications of parallel computing, for services to which he received the C.B.E. in 1996. He was Vice Chancellor of Loughborough University 1994–2005, is a Fellow of the Royal Society and has served on several national education and science committees. He was Director of the Isaac Newton Institute for Mathematical Sciences in Cambridge in 2005–11, and Master of Churchill College, Cambridge 2006–14. He has also been Chair of the Council for Mathematical Sciences, President of the Institute of Physics, Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire and Vice-President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Common Riding Chief guest in 1987 and was knighted in 2004 for services to U.K. science, technology and engineering. He married Elizabeth Anne Yeats and they have a daughter, Sara Elizabeth (b.1981). Eric (1938/9–2004) presenter on Border Television from 1968 until he retired in 1998. He was probably the most recognisable news reader during that time. Gavin (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. George (18th C.) wool-comber who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1741. He may have come from outside the Town, as part of efforts to encourage the wool trade (but perhaps he was just from Wilton). He is likely the George, married to Margaret Waugh (probably in 1736 in Wilton, with no wife’s name given), whose children, baptised in Wilton, included James (b.1737), an unnamed child (b.1739) and Anne (b.1741). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1737, when the baptismal witnesses were John Lockie and James (who was surely related). He was still at Roughheugh in 1739 and in 1741, when the witnesses were Thomas and John Miller. The couple were rebuked by the Wilton Session in 1736 for their ‘irregular’ marriage, and he had to pay a fine to the poor box. Their marriage certificate was witnessed by David Laing (probably the mason) and Archibald Campbell (perhaps the excise officer). George (b.1769) son of James and Isobel Tait, he was an inkle weaver, living in Wilton. Probably the same George witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810, along with John Thomline. He may be the 75-year old ‘Parish Pauper’ recorded at Wilton Pathhead on the 1841 census. He married Alison Cockburn in Hawick in 1799 and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: James (b.1800); John (b.1802); William (b.1804); Isabel (b.1806); and George (b.1808). George (b.1808) son of George, he was born in Wilton and worked as a spinner there. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Underdamside. He married Janet Wilson in Wilton in 1825; either he soon afterwards married Janet.
Young, or there was some confusion over her surname. Their children included: George (1829–1900); Alison (1833–1900), who married William Balmer; Peter (1839–1908); James (b.1840); and Jessie (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. George (b.1829/30) eldest child of spinner George. He was a handloom weaver living on Wilton Path in 1861. He married Janet Cairns in 1852, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Janet (or Jane) Young (b.1853), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; Margaret Hope (b.1857); Alison (b.1859); Janet Young (again, b.1855); Jane Gray (b.1861); and Georgina (b.1864). George (19th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Hawick in 1859. Their children included Grace (b.1859), Ann (b.1861), Grace Armstrong (b.1868), John (b.1870), Thomas (b.1873), Thomas Laidlaw (b.1875) and George (b.1881). James (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1661 for James Miller. James (18th C.) son of George, he was born in Wilton and became a tailor in Hawick. He married Isobel Tait in 1766 and their children included: Margaret (b.1767), who may have died in 1813; George (b.1769), inkle weaver; and William (b.1772). James (18th/19th C.) workman in Hawick. His son John was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hunter and their children included: Agnes (b.1805); and Anwick Parish. He married Margaret Hunter and their children included: Janet (or Jane) Young (b.1853), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; Margaret Hope (b.1857); Alison (b.1859); Janet Young (again, b.1855); Jane Gray (b.1861); and Georgina (b.1864). George (19th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Hawick in 1859. Their children included Grace (b.1859), Ann (b.1861), Grace Armstrong (b.1868), John (b.1870), Thomas (b.1873), Thomas Laidlaw (b.1875) and George (b.1881). James (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1661 for James Miller. James (18th C.) son of George, he was born in Wilton and became a tailor in Hawick. He married Isobel Tait in 1766 and their children included: Margaret (b.1767), who may have died in 1813; George (b.1769), inkle weaver; and William (b.1772). James (18th/19th C.) workman in Hawick. His son John was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hunter and their children included: Agnes (b.1805); and Andrew (b.1810). Rev. James Nisbet (b.1842) son of John A., he must have grown up in Hawick. He was himself ordained as a minister in 1867 and served for a long time in Swindon, and then in Torquay. He returned to Hawick for the jubilee celebrations of Hawick Free Kirk in 1893. His son was Vicar of St. Matthew’s in Nottingham. James (19th C.) married Jane Turnbull in Wilton in 1867. Their children included: George (b.1868); Mary Jane Dalgleish (b.1869); James Turnbull (b.1871); Peter (b.1873); Robert Turnbull (b.1875); and Thomas Turnbull (b.1877). James (19th C.) married Violet Mitchell in Hawick in 1877. James (1879–1947) youngest child of Peter and Susan Elder. He grew up in Wilton, but was living in Hawick by the time of the 1891 census. In 1905 he married Agnes McGee (c.1881-1958) and their children were: Peter Turner (1906–80), who married Agnes White Thompson; John Lewis (1908–78), who married Ellen Law Brown and secondly Mary Humphreys; Jessie Haig (1910–2006), who married Thomas Wilson Glendinning; Susan Elder (b.1912), who died at birth; Robert Elder (1914–78), who married Jane (or ‘Jenny’) McConnell Elliot and was father of Sir David; Agnes Garland (b.1918), who died in infancy; and Marion Garland (1923–85), who married George Hagen. John (b.c.1790) farmer at Chesters. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded as a farmer of 20 acres. He is probably the John who married Margaret Wallace in Southdean Parish in 1818. Their children included Marion (b.1819), Robert (b.1821), John (b.1823) and Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1826/7). He was a widower by 1851. John (d.c.1798) son of workman James. In 1797 he was recorded among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In the revised list of 1799 he is marked as ‘in 4 Regmt of Militia son to James Wallace Dead’, with the entry crossed out. Rev. John Aikman (1802–70) born in Edinburgh, son of James, a gunmaker, and Janet Clapperton. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by the Presbytery there in 1825 and became assistant minister at Burntisland in 1827. He was minister of the Parish of Hawick from 1833, being presented by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch on April 1st, following the suggestion of Dr. Chalmers. Early in his ministry he made a useful record of the number of people living in each street in Hawick. He was nominated as a trustee of the Orrock Bequest in 1834. He was residing at Hawick Manse in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1840/1 he was called to Gala, but his translation was refused by the Presbytery, after considering the petition signed by 815 Hawick communicants. In 1841 he was living at Hawick Manse, along with his family, 3 female servants and 2 visiting preachers. During the Disruption of 1843 he walked out with about ¾ (close to 600) of the congregation to form the Hawick Free Kirk (which later became St. George’s). He was thus the first local Free Church minister, and served until 1864. In 1861 he was living at the Free Church Manse in Wilton with his family, as well as 3 female servants and Probationer Thomas Joseph Scott. In 1858 he became senior minister (of the Presbytery presumably). As a result of leaving the established church his annual salary dropped dramatically. He lived on Wilton Path. There are several letters preserved in the National Archives relating to his subsequent disputes with the Duke of Buccleuch (his former patron). He was also a skilled woodworker and much of the pulpit and other ornaments of the original Free Kirk were carved by himself. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Velvet Heels’ or ‘The Pope o Hawick’ by his opponents.
He gifted a bell to the new Free Kirk in Kelso. He wrote a description of the Parish in 1839 for the New Statistical Account of Scotland, including in it a detailed list of the insect and plant species found in the Parish, as well as descriptions of the Auld Brig, the excavation at the Caa Knowe, the local prevalence of nicknames, etc. He also wrote ‘Statistics having reference to the ravages of Cholera in the town and neighbourhood of Hawick in 1849’ (1850). His other publications included ‘The Death of the Righteous’ (in ‘The Protestant Pulpit’, 1830), ‘The Church built by Human Agency’ (1831), ‘Sermons’ (1838), ‘The Seven Churches of Asia’ (1842), ‘Reasons for concurring in the Resolutions of the Convocation’ (1843), ‘Pastoral Recollections’ (1843, 1854 and 1864), ‘Testimonies in Favour of the Principles and Procedure of the Free Church of Scotland’ (1844), ‘The Chariot of Israel, and the Horsemen thereof, a discourse’ (1847), ‘The Railway Guide’ (1847), ‘A Pastor’s Legacy’ (extracts from manuscripts of Rev. Robert Nichol of Gala, 1864), ‘Jewels for the Crown of Glory’ (1864), ‘Attributes and Aspects of the Divine Redeemer’ (1864), ‘Communion Services according to the Presbyterian Form’ (1865), ‘Waymarks for the Guiding of Little Feet’ (1866), ‘Lessons from the Life of James Nisbet’ (1867) and ‘Farewell Addresses’ (1870). He also wrote a hymn, entitled ‘The Power of Prayer’, which has sometimes been attributed to other writers. In 1857–59 he took a 2 year rest, travelling on the continent, and was assisted as minister by William Gaulter 1858–64. He was presented with a silver epergne by his congregation. He married Isabella, daughter of James Nisbet, a London bookseller; she died in 1855, aged 42. Their children included: David (d.1834); William (b.1835/6); John (b.1840/1); David (d.1847); and Andrew Oliver (b.1844/5). John (b.c.1825) son of John, who was farmer at Chesters. In 1861 he was an agricultural labourer living at Chesters. He married Agnes Stewart in Southdean Parish (but the date of 1854 must be an error). Their children included John (b.1849) and Margaret (b.1856/7). John (b.1825/6) from Edinburgh, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 9 round Close. In 1851 he married Elizabeth Graham, from England. John (19th C.) married Janet Tough in Wilton in 1868. Their children included Robert (b.1869). John (19th C.) married Sibella Murray in Hawick in 1872. Their children included Srah Dagg (b.1872) and William (b.1874). Peter (1839–1908) son of George, he was born in Wilton. In 1864 he married Susan (1838–1923), daughter of Robert Elder and Isabella Farquhar. Their children included: Isabella Farquhar (b.1865), who married John Turner; Janet (1867–1949); Margaret (1869–1951); George (1872–1913); Robert (b.1874); Alison (or ‘Alice’, 1876–1928); and James (1879–1947). Robert (19th C.) married Helen Reid in Wilton in 1870. Their children included Margaret (b.1871). Thomas (17th C.) married Bessie Waugh in Ashkirk Parish in 1662. Probably the same Thomas witnessed Ashkirk baptisms in 1689 for John Scott, in 1690 for Thomas Scott and for William Scott, in 1691 for George Robison, for someone (with the page damaged, but along with George Tait), for Robert Gledstains and for William Scott, and in 1694 for William Palmer. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait in 1701 and had children Helen (b.1703) and Janet (b.1705). He seems likely to have been related
Wallace Court

... to the earlier Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) shoe-maker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). In 1786 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker Robert Oliver. Probably the same Thomas was witness to a baptism for William Jackson in 1793.

Sir William (c.1270–1305) from humble birth in the West of Scotland he sought to regain independence for the nation. He is often referred to simply as ‘Wallace’. He was declared Guardian of the Kingdom of Scotland at Selkirk in 1298. He is said to have visited Langlands around 1297 and tethered his horse to a thorn bush behind the Lodge (now Museum). A stone marks the site, but there is no evidence to support the story, although there is a connection between him and the Lougueneville/Charters family who were connected with the early Barons of Langlands. A large boulder on Meigle Hill near Galashiels is known as ‘Wallace’s Putting Stone’ and a boundary line on Minchmoor (north of Yarrowford) is ‘Wallace’s Trench’. He was barbarically executed by the soldiers of Edward I. An imposing 31 foot high red sandstone statue was erected near Dryburgh Abbey in 1814, and in Hawick Wallace Court was named after him in 1970 – ‘O Wallace! that Scotchman is not worth his room Who weeps not when he remembers thy doom’ [JR], ‘... Banners waved by Bruce and Wallace! What would future ages call us?’ [JH], ‘What need we say how Wallace fought, And how his foemen fell? Or how on glorious Bannockburn The work went wild and well?’ [HSR].

Fr. William (1768–1854) born near Huntly, he was educated in Banffshire and the Scots College of Douay, escaping back to Scotland at the outbreak of the French Revolution. Ordained at the Scots College of Valadolid in 1798, he remained there for 10 years, but had to flee Spain when Napoleon’s soldiers arrived. He then worked in Perthshire, back in Spain, then at the Edinburgh Mission, before becoming Chaplain at Traquair House. After deciding that there should be a chapel somewhere in the Scottish Borders, he ‘discovered’ a group of Catholics in Hawick in the summer of 1837. In an 1840 appeal for funds to build a Chapel in Hawick he states ‘it is remarkable that the seeds of religious animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth’. He is supposed to have travelled over to Hawick on horseback in 1841 (a ride that was ceremonially re-enacted in 2019). He sought out the help of the Magistrates and Council of Hawick and after raising the money (including his own savings) purchased the land (from William Wilson). He officiated at the foundation stone laying ceremony, and lived to see the chapel flourish, as well as providing additional financial help to establish a Catholic school in Hawick. He is buried at Traquair. He wrote some lines as a tribute to the new chapel – ‘Now’s the day when exiled truth Returns to galdden Hawick’s youth; It fears no gag to galle its mouth; It heeds no Border foray. To bid the light of truth to shine, Our hearts and morals to refine, And wing our hopes to joys devine, Such is its peaceful story’. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son John was baptised in Minto in 1810. William (19th C.) married Helen Mein in Southdean Parish in 1829. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1843. William (19th C.) married ‘Elliot Pattison’ in Castleton Parish in 1837. William (b.1806/7) born in Earlston, he was a butcher on the Howe gate. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 8 Howe gate. He married Margaret McLean and their children included Jane, William, David, Margaret, Robert, Mary Ann and John. William (19th C.) married Helen Mather in Wilton in 1859. Their children, registered in Hawick, included Alison (b.1860), Margaret (b.1861), James (b.1864), John (b.1865), George (b.1867), James (again, b.1869), Alison (again, b.1871) and Robert (b.1873). William (19th C.) local shepherd. the Walled Gairdens (Thu-wawld-gar-dinz) n. ornamental and show garden, which is the pride of Wilton Lodge Park, and winner of many competitions. It lies on the road above the western side of the Park, and was formerly part of the Wilton Lodge Estate. Originally the gardens had been near the public bowling greens, but were moved to their present location by David Pringle in the 1850s. For a while the town let them as a market garden, before the Parks Department took them over as a showcase for the public and a nursery for plants in the Park and elsewhere. It contains floral displays, and a tropical greenhouse, as well as a scented garden and an aviary. The range of plants is beyond compare in the Borwick [DH], ‘And I couldna fancy the Walligate – Yet their mirry memorials Where they stand their state Arena in modest stones In Walton and Walrig …’ [DH], ‘And I couldna fancy the Walligate: It’s fer owre fer ootbye …’ [DH] (also written ‘Walligate’).

Walter  (wawlt-tur) n.  (12th C.) name of the Chaplain of ‘Lillesclive’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf) who was witness at Linton in 1174 to a grant of land from William the Lion to William de Somerville. He also witnessed a charter from the Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1150 (although this has been suggested to be a fabrication). He may have been related to the later John of Lilliesleaf. He is probably also the ‘Gauterio de Lillesclive’ who was a Clerk of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1177.

Walter  (wawlt-tur) n.  (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale recorded sometime in the period between 1227 and 1238. His surname is unknown.

Walter, James see James Watson the Walter Mason Collection  (thu-wal'-ur-ma-sin-ko-lek-shin) n.  collection of old documents relating to Selkirk and surrounding area, including some that date back to the 16th century. This included the ‘protocol books’ of clergymen and notaries, particularly Brydons and Chapmans. They were stored in the attic of the Commercial Bank in Selkirk, but ordered to be burned during WWII, along with other documents kept in storage spaces and vaults, which were regarded as a fire hazard. Walter Mason, baker in Selkirk (and his brother Bruce), stole into the garden of the bank next door and rescued several bags of ancient documents. Fearful of prosecution Mason kept the existence of the documents secret until shortly before his death in the early 1970s. He handed them over to Walter Elliot, who set up a trust and deposited the documents in Selkirk Library for safe keeping. With the help of Teresa Maley a large fraction of the earlier documents were transcribed and published. They provide a fascinating insight into the lives of inhabitants of Selkirk and surrounding area, including many transactions relating to Hawick, as well as Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf, etc.

Walter’s Wynd  (Wal'-urz-wind) n.  narrow street running from the middle of the High Street (between nos. 47 and 49) to the Teviot, once an area of very over-crowded housing. Before about the middle of the 18th century it was known as Horsleyhill’s Wynd, and renamed after Walter Scott, tailor (‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’), whose shop was there. The name certainly was fixed by 1790. The North Port stood at the top of the road, which was one of the old entrances to the town, and to mark this the drums and fifes marched here on the Thursday night. There was formerly a pended house at the top of the Wynd, and in the early 19th century there was a public house in the Wynd. The foot of the street was once the site of the main ford used to enter the town through this gate, and the main route towards Selkirk and Edinburgh until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. John Nixon’s hosier factory was here, later becoming Pringle’s, and renamed Rodono. The Drums and Fifes walk up this street as part of their march around town on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Walter Wilson’s (wawl’-ur-wul-sinz) n. Walter Wilson’s factory, on Allars Crescent (No. 7) at the foot of the Mill Path, and at Teviot Mills in Weensland, in the latter part of the 19th century. Walter Wilson & Sons began in 1851, as part of the split up business of William Wilson & Sons, when Walter’s share was the mill on Allars Crescent, the property at 13 High Street and a piece of land in Weensland, on which he had Teviot Mill built. The firm manufactured tweeds at Teviot Mill and hosiery on Allars Crescent. After Walter the company was run by his sons Francis Elliot and Edward.

Also a hill in the Ettrick valley lying north of Ettrickhill, reaching 594 m, and another in the Yarrow valley north of Dryhope, reaching 421 m. A charter of 1618 records transfer of the lands of ‘Waird-lawrig’ from John Lord Hay of Yester to Robert Scott of Tushielaw. There is also a hill of the same name near Caerlaverock Castle in Dumfries & Galloway, which was the rallying place of the Maxwells (‘Wairdla hill’ is on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is related to a ‘ward’ or ‘watch’ hill, and probably has no direct connection with the Barons of Wilton).

Wardlaw (wawrd-law) n. Adam (14th C.) recorded as collector of the contributions from the Sherifftom of Roxburgh in 1360. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Wardlaws of Wilton. Alexander (d.bef. 1388) younger son of Henry, 2nd of Wilton. He is mentioned in a petition of 1378 by his uncle, Cardinal Walter, for a canonry of Glasgow for him, with the expectation of a prebend. He held a Canonry and Prebend of Glasgow and in 1387 was also appointed Archdeacon of Argyll. However, he appears to have died within about a year. Andrew (14th/15th C.) probably son of Sir William (although possibly his younger brother), he was the 4th Baron of Wilton and 1st of Torrie. There is no direct evidence of where he was born or resided, but perhaps somewhere on the north side of the Borthwick valley. He seems likely to be the Andrew who witnessed a charter in 1394/5, dated at Abernethy. He married Christian, daughter of Sir James de Valoniis (or Vallance), through whom he succeeded to the Torrie estates. This included the Barony of Lochore and a third part of Rosyth. The focus of the Wardlaws this moved from Roxburghshire to Fife. His children probably included: Sir Henry, who succeeded; George, mentioned in a charter in 1435/6; William, recorded as a cleric at St. Andrews in 1432/3; Janet, who married John Wemyss of Kilmanny; and Margaret, who married William Maitland of Lethington and Thirlestane. His widow remarried, to Sir John Cockburn. Henry ‘Henrico de Wardlaw’ (d.1329) earliest known Wardlaw with a local connection. The identity of his parents is not known, but suggested to be Wardlaw of that Ilk and a daughter of McDowall of Galloway. He was granted the western half of the Barony of Wilton (with Gilbert Maxwell being granted the other half) by King Robert the Bruce, in about 1306, presumably as a reward for services to Scotland’s liberator. However, it may be that he could not take possession of the lands until after Bannockburn and other events ended English control of Teviotdale. There appears to be a confirming charter in about 1321 (in ‘Robertson’s Index’), stating that the lands had previously belonged to William de Charteris and Walter de Pertchay. The ‘reddendo’ for this grant was the fifth part of the service of one soldier, along with 3 suits yearly at the King’s Court in Roxburgh. There is no direct evidence that he lived in Wilton, but presumably he did, with a house somewhere on the north side of the eastern part of the Borthwick valley. The family later gained land in Fife, and were known as ‘Wardlaw of Torrie’, probably being the descendants of all the Wardlaws in Scotland, including the later Henry who was Bishop of St. Andrews. He was the first of the Wardlaws of Wilton, a family connection that lasted for over a century. He married a Stewart (possibly Mary, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Durrisdeer), who was niece of Walter, the High Steward. Their children may have included: Ellen; Henry, who succeeded; Walter, who became Cardinal of Scotland; William, recorded in 1362/3, who was Precentor of Glasgow; Gilbert, ancestor of the Wardlaws of Riccarton and Warriston; Christian, who married Sir Thomas Hay of Lochorwort; and at least one other daughter. Henry 2nd of Wilton (c.1318–c.98) son of Henry and brother of Cardinal Walter. He may have lived in the western part of the Barony of Wilton, but there is no direct evidence of this, or where he was born. He married a daughter of Halket of Pitfirrane. He is mentioned in a record of around 1365 and in 1366 his relative Margaret of Ressuneth sold some land to him. It may be that he died soon after, since his brother Walter is said to have held lands in Wilton in 1367. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Walter, mentioned in 1378, when a petition was made to his uncle, Cardinal Walter, for a benefice; Alexander (d.bef. 1388), also mentioned in a petition of 1378, who later held a canonry of Glasgow; Henry, who became Bishop of St. Andrews; a daughter, who married Sir John Carmichael; a daughter who married John Inglis, probably the Laird of Manor and Branxholme; a daughter who married Alexander Newton of that Ilk; and a daughter who married James Melville of Cambe. These generations are confused, since it is said in some accounts that Andrew was also his son, but was probably his grandson. Henry (d.c.1440) Bishop of St. Andrews, son of Henry, 2nd of Wilton and nephew of Walter, who became a Cardinal. He is sometimes confused with the later son of Sir Andrew. Since he is usually referred to as nephew of Cardinal Walter (because that is the important ecclesiastical connection), there is no direct evidence of his parentage. However, he was referred to as being of noble and baronial birth and used a seal and arms that were only slightly different to those of Wilton. He was first recorded in 1378, in a petition from his uncle Walter to the Pope for a benefice for him, specifically a canonry in Glasgow Diocese, with the promise of a prebend. In 1379 his uncle’s provision for him of the Prebend of Auld Roxburgh was confirmed. He and Alexander (presumably his brother) had a passport of safe passage through England in 1380. He was educated at Oxford and Paris, probably also spending time in Orleans and Avignon. He returned to Scotland in 1385 and received many benefices. He was made Precentor of Glasgow (and Prebend of Kilbride) in 1387, this being vacated by the death of his uncle William; he was then supposed to resign his Canonry of Glasgow, but in 1388 had permission to also have a parish cure. He was given the benefice of Rector of Cavers in 1389 when he was given the Canonry of Aberdeen and Prebend of ‘Balhelvi’. He became Bishop of St. Andrews 1403–40 and made efforts to found a university there in 1411/2, becoming its first Chancellor; his residence was the old castle overlooking the sea. He additionally had the title of Papal Legate for Scotland in 1404. In some litigation in 1423, it was claimed that Henry Dryden, Abbot of Holyrood, was his kinsman. He was also tutor to the young James I, helped arrange his release from English captivity, crowned him at Scone in 1424 and then acted as one of his most trusted advisors. Also in 1424 he requested a benefice for his nephew Nicholas Inglis. In 1428 he was ‘a sexagenarian . . . of various infirmities . . . often detained’ when he asked the Pope for visitation rights to churches in his diocese. In 1433/4 he witnessed an ecclesiastic gift by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was buried at St. Andrews Cathedral, which he had helped restore. He is also credited with founding St. Andrews University in 1411. He appears to have had a son Henry, who he united in marriage with ‘Mariot de Riklington’; a few years later, in 1428, the couple asked the Pope to confirm their marriage because he had administered the sacrament to the bride, as well as because the bride had previously had marriage contracts with Patrick and John Dunbar who was related to the groom in the third degree of consanguinity. He also had another son, William, with ‘an unmarried noblewoman’; he was a cleric in St. Andrews Diocese. Henry of Spott (14th/15th C.) probably son of Sir William, 3rd Baron of Wilton. His lands were in East Lothian. In 1417 there was a document confirming an agreement in his favour from a court held by Bishop Henry, who was probably his uncle. Sir Henry (d.bef. 1458) son of Andrew. He was 5th of Wilton and 2nd of Torrie. In 1434/5 he was on an inquest for James Kinninmonth. An indenture of 1435/6 records him inheriting all the lands and rights from his mother Christian of Valance (with the permission of her 2nd husband, Sir John Cockburn) in exchange for a third part of Rosyth; his mother kept life rent and his brother George was mentioned as a potential heir. In 1436 he accompanied Lady Margaret (daughter of James I) to France so marry the Dauphin and was probably knighted then. He is named in 1438 in a document relating to the Prior of St. Andrews. He was also witness to charters for the university or city of St. Andrews in 1437 and 1440 and...

for an agreement between the university and the city in 1444. He witnessed a transumpt made at Cupar in 1439. In 1448, as Laird of the half Barony of Wilton he granted lands of Harden to Philip Turnbull. He and other noblemen had a letter of safe passage in 1449. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1452. In 1454 he was Baron of Wilton when the Irelands-lands were granted to David Scott. Also in 1454 he was ‘justis and stewart’ to James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews at a court held there. He married Beatrix (although some accounts say Christian), daughter of John Lauder and grand-daughter of Sir John Lauder of Aldcathy; she was one of 4 co-heiresses of her mother, Katherine Landells, who owned Hownam, Crailing and Swinside in Roxburghshire (the other 3 sisters were Maritota, who married Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Home, and Christian, who married James Rutherford of that Ilk). Their children included: Henry, who succeeded; Walter, witness in 1468 to a document relating to Hownam; Sir Robert, who had lands in Galloway; Sir John, Prior of St. Mary’s Isle; and possibly Isobel (although this may be the next generation). Henry (d.bef. 1475) son of Sir Henry, he was 6th of Wilton and 3rd of Torrie. He witnessed a document in Fife in 1451, when he was son and heir of the Lord of Torrie. In 1458 he had a sasine for the lands of Hownam (which had belonged to his grandmother, Katharine Landells). In 1465 he had sasine for several lands in Fife. In 1468 she had the lands of Harden resigned to her, with Robert of Wardlaw as a witness (so possibly a son). In a 1468 document for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk it is recorded that Andrew Ker of Cessford and his son Walter acted as procurators for him. He is Henry ‘of Torry’ when he received money from the Kers of Cessford for the lands in Hownam in 1468; this was done in Edinburgh, with Walter (perhaps his brother) as one of the witnesses. Also in 1468 he witnessed a charter for lands in Kin- cardine, involving his brother-in-law, Lawrence, Lord Oliphant. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Oliphant of Aberdalgie. His children included: Sir Henry, who succeeded; John, who was factor to his brother and accused of the murder of his brother’s wife, Margaret Lindsay; Alexander, recorded in 1484; Sir William, Rector of Tul- liallan and Dalry; possibly Isabel (or Elizabeth), who married Sir Laurence Mercer of Meikleour and Aldie (as recorded in a charters of 1475 and 1497), and by 1511 had secondly married Patrick Mercer of Inchbrakie; Egidia, who married Hector Brude of Cultmalundy; and probably a daughter who married John Turnbull of Harden. He may have died relatively young, since his wife survived him by many years. Sir Henry (d.c.1513) son of Henry. He was the last Wardlaw of Wilton, being usually designated as the 7th Baron of Wilton and also of Torie. He had a sasine for the lands of Dalginch in Fife in 1473. In 1477 he had a charter of confirmation from James II for several lands in Fife; he is said to have rebuilt Lochoire Castle at about the same time. In 1479 he had a sasine for the Barony of Wilton. He is recorded in 1482 transferring lands at ‘Underchasteris’ (in the Barony of Wilton) to Robert Scott of Muirhouse. Also in 1482 he was Baron when he gave a charter for Harden to John Turnbull (son of the late Walter Turnbull), described as ‘my beloved brother-german’ (perhaps meaning that he was his brother-in-law). In 1483 he appears to have transferred all the lands of Wilton (including ad- vocation of the parish church) to John Scott of Thirlestane, thus ending his family’s direct connection with the area. In 1490, as superior of Ar- biriot, he granted part of that land to Sir Alex- ander Home of that Ilk. He is recorded as superior of Torrie in several documents in the 1490s. In 1498 he had license ‘to pas our the sey for the hele of his person: To endur fra the day of the passing of him furth of the realme quhil his hame cum- myng again in the sammyn and xl dais thaireftir’; he also had respite for assaulting John (presumably his brother). He had another passport to travel overseas in 1503 and was pronounced inca- pable of managing his affairs. He was knighted sometime before 1503 and may have disposed of his lands in Forfarshire about the same time. His brother John acted as his factor, but had disputes with his sons John and William, as recorded in 1506/7. In 1511 and 1512 he had charters for lands in Fife, witnessed by his son Robert. In 1473 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Lindsay, 1st Lord of the Byres; she was appar- ently murdered before 1506, with suspicion falling on his brother John, who was asked by his son John to pay restitution, but John (his brother) denied that he was responsible and stated that he could not pay; how the matter was respolved is not recorded. His children with Margaret Lind- say included: John, 8th Laird of Torrie; William, progenitor of the Wardlaws of Dubhouse; Robert of Torrie and Balmule, recorded in 1512; Andrew of Otterston in Fife; James, Rector of Ballingry; Nicholas, who was tenant in Lochoire and East

Lothian; Herbert, who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1507; and Isabel (also called Elizabeth), who married firstly George Durie of that Ilk, secondly Sir Robert Logan of Restalrig and thirdly to Sir Alexander Hepburn of Whitstone and Riccarton. It is sometimes stated that another daughter was Helen, who married Sir John Makgill, Provost of Edinburgh, but she was daughter of a distant cousin, Thomas of Foulford. He secondly married Margaret Gourlay, probably from the Kincaig family, but they had no children. Given the year and month of his death, he may have died at Flodden, but there is no evidence either way. James (18th C.) farmer in Riccarton, recorded in 1748. Janet (14th/15th C.) nun of Haddington Monastery. She was described as the daughter of an unmarried man and an unmarried woman. In 1408 there was a dispute after Bishop Henry proposed her as Prioryress and 2 other nuns complained (because of her ‘defect of birth’), were threatened with excommunication and then complained to the Pope. She was surely a relative of the Bishop, perhaps even his daughter. Simon (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Wilton when he was witness to a charter in 1432, along with Henry Wardlaw of Sprot and Sir William Wardlaw, Chaplain. He was probably a younger son of the Baron of Wilton. In 1454/5 he was ‘Symonis de Wardlaw rectoris de Wylton’ in a document from St. Andrews University. Probably the same ‘Symon de Wardlaw’, presbyter of Glasgow Diocese, was the notary for the instrument of sasine in 1464 whereby Archibald Douglas took possession of the Barony of Cavers. He may be the Simon who graduated from St. Andrews in 1422 and 1426 (with a Masters degree) and hence may have been related to the university’s founder, Henry. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as an esquire in the garrison of Roxburgh Castle in about 1340. Perhaps the same Thomas sat in Parliament in 1369. It is unclear if he was related to the Wardlaws of Wilton. Walter (c.1317–1387) Cardinal, son of Henry, he is recorded as holding part of the Barony of Wilton in 1367, and was the 2nd (or possibly 3rd, the confusion probably being because both his father and elder brother were Henrys) Wardlaw of Wilton. However, it may be that he simply held part of the lands, or held them while his brother’s son was in his minority. He attended Paris University and had a doctorate of theology by 1358. In 1361 he had passage for going to London and York. By 1359 he became Archdeacon of Lothian within the Diocese of St. Andrews and was elevated to Bishop of Glasgow in 1367, on the death of William Rae. He was also Secretary to the King and auditor in at least 1364–66 and was part of an envoy to England in that period. He received many benefices, partly due to the support of William Landels, Bishop of St. Andrews, whose family also had a Roxburghshire connection. He was also appointed Royal Secretary to David II in the 1360s. However, he had a less close connection with Robert II, and spent many years away from Scotland during his reign. In fact in 1374 he was rumoured to be dead and his assets in Scotland were seized. In 1383 he was appointed as the first Cardinal from Scotland. He helped negotiate the Anglo-Scottish truce at Berwick in 1380 and the Franco-Scottish alliance at Vincennes in 1383. His nephew Henry was Rector of Cavers and Bishop of St. Andrews. Walter (b.c.1360) nephew of Cardinal Walter and probably son of Henry, 2nd Baron of Wilton. He received the Canonyry and Prebend of Carstairs in Glasgow Diocese in 1375/6 when studying in Paris. In 1378 his uncle Walter made a request for him to receive a benefice in St. Andrews Diocese. He was probably older brother of Henry and Alexander, who were also mentioned in requests for benefices in 1378. He appears not to have graduated M.A. in Paris like Henry and Alexander did in 1382/3, so he may have been dead by then. Carstairs was certainly held by someone else by 1387/8. William (d.bef. 1387) son of Henry, 1st of Wilton. He was brother of the 2nd Henry of Wilton, as well as brother of Cardinal Walter. He was Precentor of Glasgow, and the associated Prebend of Kilbribe. These were vacated by his death and given to his nephew Henry (later Bishop of St. Andrews). Sir William (d.c.1417) probably son of Henry, he was the 3rd Baron of Wilton (although these early generations are confused). A charter of Robert III (probably around 1405) granted him the lands of ‘Uchterseatmynhe [Outerside], Sametoun, Todshaw’ in the Barony of Wilton. He may have lived in his Wilton lands, i.e. somewhere on the north side of the Borthwick valley. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He married Margaret Wardlaw (perhaps a cousin of some sort) and their children included Andrew (who succeeded) and probably Henry (of Spott); however, other accounts suggest he died childless, with Andrew and Henry being his brothers. In 1417 his widow ‘Margarita de Wardlaw’ was granted dispensation to marry Walter Turnbull, who may have been from a local family. William (14th/15th) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. He was son of Bishop

Henry with ‘an unmarried noblewoman’. Sometimes before 1428 he was promoted to ‘minor orders’, despite his birth, and was made Rector of the Hospital at Musselburgh. He also had Papal permission in 1428 to hold the Canony and Prebend of Kingask and 2 other benefices (formerly written ‘Vardlaw’, ‘Wardlau’ and variants).

Wardle (war-dul) n. Joseph (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick, being listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 15 Backdamgate with his wife Mary and daughter Charlotte.

Wardmoor Hill (wawr-moor-hil) n. hill at the south-western corner of Southdean Parish, just to the south-east of Black Hill, reaching a height of 365 m. On its southern slopes are 2 hollow tracks, which are part of an old road, possibly associated with the Wheel Causeway.

Ware (wär) n. Rev. Douglas Powell (b.1854) born in Ashton, Devon, son of Rev. John Middleton, Rector of Ullingsworth. Educated at St. John’s College, Cambridge, he became a curate of St. Mary’s Episcopal Cathedral in Glasgow. He was then moved to Hawick as minister of St. Cuthbert’s Church 1882–92. His incumbency saw the properties of the Church being given to the congregation by the Duke of Buccleuch and St. Cuthbert’s being transferred from the Diocese of Glasgow and Galloway to the Diocese of Edinburgh. He was also Honorary President of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club. In 1892 he exchanged with J.W.T. Hart, minister of St. Paul’s, Swindon. He married Mary Jane Octavia Sankey in 1879. He wrote ‘Confirmation in the Bible’ and ‘Six Questions and Answers for Good Friday’. The church contains a brass plaque commemorating him.

Wark (wawrk) n. Gilbert (17th C.) Town Clerk and notary public, who witnessed the signing of the 1638 Covenant in Hawick. Robert ‘Bobby’ (b.1922) married Bert Leishman’s daughter. He was an employee of Lyle & Scott who lived in Burnfoot and published poetry under the pseudonym ‘Auld Yid’. He was a regular contributor to the local press and published a collection ‘Div ee Mind?’ in 1990.

Wark Castle (wawrk-kaw-sul) n. ruined motte-and-bailey castle facing across the Tweed into Scotland near Coldstream, originally built in the early 12th century. It was taken 7 times by the Scots, and said to be the site of an incident that led to the forming of the Order of the Garter in 1348. There is another Wark Castle near Hexham, with a mote-hill, which was the seat of the Tynedale Lordship and where local justice was meted out.

Warleshope (waw-rulz-hop) n. area on the south side of the Ettrick valley, south of Deloraine. The Warleshope Burn meets the Ettrick Water there, with Warleshope Plantation marked on modern maps, but no sign of a former farmstead. It was Crown land from about 1456, leased along with Delorain. Both farms were leased to Sir David Scott in 1490, but assigned to Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1491. It was leased by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1499 and still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1512 and 1653 (it is ‘Wardleshope’ in 1546, ‘Wardlishop’ in 1490, ‘Warldishop’ in 1499 and 1502, ‘Wardlishop’ in 1512, ‘Wairlishoipe’ in 1634, ‘Warldshop’ in 1653 and ‘Warldlishope’ in 1661).

warly (war-ly) adj., poet. wordly – ‘...And hence, ye war’ly cares awa’, And dinna gie my bosom pain’ [JTe].

the War Memorial (thu-wawr-me-mo-ree-ul) n. memorial to the dead of two World Wars, located beside Wilton Lodge Museum. The site was chosen after much controversy, with the Tower Knowe being the plan at one point, and other locations also suggested. The life size bronze ‘Spirit of Youth Triumphing over Evil’ is by Alexander J. Leslie of London. Its inclusion was highly controversial at the time, with many Teries considering it inappropriate. James B. Dunn, A.R.S.A. was commissioned to design the memorial, which consists of a pedestal in front of a 27 ft (6.5 m) high cenotaph of Doodington stone, from near Wooler. The pedestal contains two lamps, modelled on those in the Burgh coat-of-arms, which are always illuminated. It was unveiled in October 1921 by Robert Munro, M.P., Secretary of State for Scotland. The Cornet and his Right and Left-Hand Men lay wreaths there on the Saturday morning of the Common Riding. The ‘Passchendaele Negatives’ is a set of 3 silhouettes in steel set up near the War Memorial in 2019 (part of the multi-site ‘Long Road to Passchendaele’ project). There are also memorials to the dead of both World Wars in most of the local churches, including stained glass windows in Wilton Kirk, an alabaster and bronze tablet in Allars Kirk, a memorial window and brass plaques in St. Cuthbert’s, plaques from both World Wars in West Port Kirk (moved to St. George’s), a marble plaque and window in St. George’s (Teviot) Kirk, as well as the Roll of Honour in the Museum. Other local memorials include: a plaque inside Ashkirk Church; stone pillar at Bedrule; stone pillar at Bonchester; memorial at Deanbrae; illuminated scroll within Cavers Church; memorial cross at Denholm; statue of K.O.S.B. soldier in Newcastleton; stone memorial in Lilliesleaf; memorial statue at Minto; plaque in Newmill schoolrooms; stone pillar in Robertson; stone cross at Chesters; stone cross at Stobs; stone memorial at Teviothead; and also the Comrades’ Hall in Denholm and the Forman Hall in Robertson.

warrant sale (wawr-in-sail) n. a forced sale of a debtor’s property under Scots law, essential goods being excluded.
Warwick (waw-reek) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Adame Warrok in Braidley’ in 1576, when he and Matthew Little in Lairhope were pledged to the Privy Council not to be involved in thieving. The sureties were Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. His name seems likely to have been Warwick, and given the sureties he was probably a tenant in Broadlee in the Borthwick valley, rather than Braekeide on Hermitage Water. He was among those declared as rebels in 1578/9. Thomas ‘Tom’ (d.2002) shephermed from the Robertson area, well known for his local poems and recitations. Born near Bentpath, he worked on farms throughout the Borders, coming to Girnwood in 1958, and retiring to Hawick in the 1990s. He served on many committees in Roberton, and was particularly remembered for his renditions of ‘Tam o’ Shanter’ and ‘Copshawholm Show’. Walter (b.1815/6) from Langholm, he was a needle-maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Back Row, and he was listed there in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Walter, Jane, Janet and Robert.

was (wawz) pp. was, but sometimes also used in place of ‘were’ – ‘ee was so there’, arch. used along with a present participle where English would have ‘was being’ plus the past participle – ‘…within the church yesterday, and in the interim when the Scriptures was reading …’ [BR1710] (cf. wes and wuz).

Washinpool Sike (waw-shin-pool-sik) n. small stream that rises on Belmanshaws and Langhope Rig and runs south-eastwards to join Langhope Burn to the west of Langhope farm. It is marked ‘Bilmingshaws Syke’ on a 1767 map of Langhope farm.

the Washin Pool (thu-waw-shin-pool) n. name used for a pool in the upper part of the Kirkton Burn, to the south of Birneyknowe.

the Washington Hotel (thu-waw-sheen-tin-ho-tel) n. former temperance hotel on North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 19th century. It was part of the ‘Coffin End’, seen in a photograph of 1890, and was demolished a few years later to make way for the Central Hotel.

wasla (was-la) prep., arch. to the west of, western – ‘The wasla water’ lads have to play against the stream [RM], n. the western district, applied to describe the western part of Hawick (delineated by the Slitrig) in the 18th and 19th centuries (also written ‘waslass’; cf. wesla and easla).

the Watchknowe (thu-wawch-now) n. Hill above the south-west of Hawick, being the highest point at Crumhaugh Hill, to the right of the road. It was used as a lookout station and for setting warning bonfires in former more warring times. In the early years of the 19th century it was attended by Serg. Stewart of the regular army, who lived with his wife in a flat-roofed house there, with the barrel of tar waiting on top; the three volunteers assisting the Sergeant were named Lamb, Miller and Cairns. The last time it was used in earnest was during the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804 – ‘See! the Watchknowe beacon blazing, Tower and town and water rasing’ [RSC]. Essentially the same place had a bonfire litten there for the False Alarm centenary and bi-centenary. The name is also used for the hill adjacent to Hummelknowes farm and another next to Borthwickshiel farm. It is also a hill near Bedrule, 957 ft high, which is the site of a Bronze Age burial cairn (sometimes written as two words).

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. Hill to the south-west of Teviothead, this being the ‘rig’ of Caerlenrig. It contains Caerlenrig farm, and just to the north are the remains of a fort, overlooking the steep descent to the Teviot. The fort was probably originally about 250 ft in extent (the ‘camp’ is marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map).

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. Small hill between Bedrule and the farm of Swinnie to the south-east. The area contains several grass-covered cairns, which are probably quarry or clearance heaps.

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. Hill between Roberton and Borthwickshiel.

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. Hill in Liddesdale, between Ewe Knowe and Wilson’s Pike, south-east of Dinlabyre. It reaches a height of 356 m.

Waterloo (waw’-ur-loo) n. Final battle of the Napoleonic Wars on 18th June 1815, with a British force under the Duke of Wellington being assisted by Prussian and Dutch troops at Waterloo near Brussels. The battle was decided on the Sunday, but news did not reach Hawick until the following Saturday, when there were celebrations. When the London newspapers arrived on the mail-coach it was flying the red flag as a sign of victory, and Robert Wilson read out the newspapers from his window at the Sandbed. Penielheng monument was later built to commemorate the victory – ‘Here’s a health to valient Wellington, brave Blucher we’ll observe, Likewise General Bullo, with his army of reserve, And every gallant Waters (\textit{\textipa{wa v urz wi urz}}) \textit{n.} Alexander (b.c.1795) gardener at Lawrie’s Den in 1841. His wife was Jane and they had a son, John. He is probably the same Alexander who was one of the first deacons at St. George’s Kirk, from 1844.

Rev. David (1813–89) a native of Hawick who only got 1/4 year’s schooling, becoming a spinner at Lynnwood Mill and later a Minister elsewhere. In 1841 he was living at Nixon’s Mill, with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Janet and William. He was active in the temperance movement and wrote some poetry, much of which he later disapproved of. This included the publication of ‘The Twa Friens’: or, The Ghost o’ Cofer-Ha’, published in 1838 (in a booklet, along with 2 other poems). This was about the story, popular in Hawick at the time, that Franky Ballantyne had swindled his boss ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver), whose ghost haunted him afterwards. He died in Shipley, near Bradford – ‘Yonder’s David wi’ his een glentin’ like brass tackets in his heid’ [RMi].

Watschod (\textit{\textipa{wa shod}}) \textit{n.} nickname for Archibald Henderson ‘Watshod’ and Thomas Oliver ‘waitschod’, perhaps coming from the word for a kind of material, often blue.

Watson (\textit{\textipa{wa sin}}) \textit{n.} Abraham (17th/18th C.) innkeeper of Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being at a drunken brawl in Thomas Huggan’s house. In 1717 he witnessed a baptism for tenant Walter Bryson, with the child called Abraham, perhaps after him. Abraham (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harden in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 4 horses at that time. He could be the Abraham of Castleton Parish, married to Isabel Henderson, whose children included: Jean (b.1809); and John (b.1811). Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son Francis was baptised in 1696. Alexander (19th C.) married Christina Jack. Their children (baptised in Robertson United Kirk) included: Robert Scott (b.1845); William (b.1849); and William (again, b.1851). Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk when he witnessed a sasine of 1693. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1757. His children included Jean
Watson

Andrew (b.1754), John (b.1757), Mary (b.1760) and Walter (b.1762). Andrew (b.c.1770s) tailor in Hawick, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. Ann (18th C.) maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Anna E. nee Hedley (1844/5–1938) daughter of soap manufacturer and Newcastle Mayor Thomas Hedley. She married tweed manufacturer Thomas Lindsay in 1869 and they had 9 children. She privately published an account of her time (in London) during WWI, ‘Extracts from War Diary, by a Grandmother’. A signed copy was gifted to the Library. She died in Monte Carlo. Charles (1816/7–c.1860) from Musselburgh, he was a local artist, who had a painter’s business in the back of 10 High Street in the mid-19th century. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Some of his paintings of local characters, e.g. Rachel Anderson, are in the Museum. In 1844 he married Margaret Tod, who was from Prestonpans. Their children were: Isabella Hutton (b.1844); Jane (b.1846); Margaret (b.1848), who died young; Rachel Tod (b.1850); Charles, also died young (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); another Charles, commission agent; John William (b.1856), grocer of Edinburgh; and Nancy Tod (b.1860). Charles (19th C.) married Mary Bertram Chalmers. Their children (baptised in Hawick Free Kirk) included: Thomas Chalmers (b.1852). David (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Ebenezer was baptised in 1756. David McBurnie (1838–1902) commission agent in Hawick. He was son of Robert and Isabella, and brought up at the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street. He worked for William Laidlaw & Sons for about 30 years, latterly as cashier. In the early 1880s he set himself up as a commission agent. In 1861 he was a woolen manufacturer’s clerk, living at 6 Bridge Street. He was a lifelong promoter of Hawick Public Library, for which he served as Secretary to the Committee, and collected antiquarian books for the reference room. He was also a member of the Library Association of the United Kingdom and of the Scottish History Society. He was a founder member of the Hawick Parliamentary Debating Society and active in local Liberal politics. Joining the Archaeological Society in 1857, he served as Secretary and Treasurer, as well as President 1874–75. He was a frequent contributor to the Transactions in the late 19th century, specialising in well-researched articles on early Hawick history. Of particular value are the articles he wrote about extracts from the Burgh Records of Hawick, which he had trawled through personally. He also acted as Secretary for the Science and Technical School. He married Margaret Kennedy (who was related to Bailie James Kennedy), and she died in 1892. Their children were John (said to be a clever student, who died at Glenmoral, Queensland, aged 29), Robert (bank teller in Hawick, who died aged 31) and Mary (2nd wife of Alexander Steven, newspaper proprietor in Berwick), as well as another Robert who died in infancy. He secondly married Marjorie, daughter of mason Adam Laidlaw; she was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. He lived at Hillside Cottage and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Watson Wood. Edward (19th C.) married Jane Milligan. Their children (baptised in Roberton United Kirk) included George (b.1847). He may be the ‘John’ married to Jane Milligan whose son Robert was also baptised in 1847. George (b.1785) born in Melrose Parish, son of John and Katherine Lees. He was a skinner on Buccleuch Street. His first 2 children were born at Buckholmside (near Galashiels), then he appears to have been living in Kelso in 1817 and Warkworth, Northumberland in 1820, with the move to Hawick before 1824 (after which all children were baptised in Hawick). ‘Watson & Sons’ was recorded as a tanners and skinners on Buccleuch Street in 1837, and was the family firm. He was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street in 1841, with 2 female servants in the household. In the 1846 flood about 160 fleeces belonging to his company were swept away. In 1851 he was ‘Retired Skinner; Annuitant’, a widower living on Allars Crescent and in 1861 he was living in Denholm. He married Anne Whale (or Wheale) in 1807 and their children included: John (1809–32), who died in Hawick; James (1811–81), who emigrated to Huron County, Ontario, Canada; Thomas (1812–91), also emigrated to Canada; George (1815–16); George (1817–47), who was born in Kelso and died in Hawick; Andrew Henry (1820–99), who died in Weehawken, New Jersey; Lancelot (1824–1913), who died in Aurora, Illinois; William Nixon (1826–1911), also died in Ontario; Isabella Whale (b.1828), who died young; Christian (or Christopher) Whale (1830–1921), died in Ontario; and Isabella Whale (1833–1908), who died in England. George (1814–46) youngest son of William Watson. He emigrated to Canada and died at Hamilton, Ontario. Rev. George Bruce Scoular (1843–1923) born in Methven, son of George Bruce, minister there and Jane Scoular.
He had brothers who were ministers at Lauder, in South Melford, Yorkshire, and at Maidstone Prison, Kent. He was educated in Edinburgh and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1874. He was ordained as minister at Logie (Dundee) that year, but translated to Cavers in 1876. He married Elizabeth Whitson Fleming and their children were: Dorothea Margaret Fleming, who married Robert Calvert Sibbald; and Mabel Jane, who married John James Scott Morrison, minister of John Knox in Aberdeen. He remained minister until his death at the very end of 1923. George Plederleith (b.1855) son of Robert, Station-master at Hasseendean. He succeeded his father as Stationmaster in about 1881 and remained until 1906. George Marr (1876–1950) native of Jedburgh, he was the illegitimate son of Peter and Elizabeth Marr, although the couple later married. His father’s cousin was the Jedburgh local historian James Watson. He was educated in Jedburgh and worked briefly for the Jedburgh Gazette and then for printer Thomas Smail. He had an early interest in local history, joining the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1900 and was appointed Curator of Jedburgh Museum in 1901. He then worked as a proofreader in Edinburgh, where he took some courses. In 1907 he became a lexicographer on the staff of the Oxford English Dictionary (possibly with a recommendation from J.A.H. Murray, who must have known of him). He worked in Oxford until 1927 under the main editor of the time, William Craigie, eventually taking responsibility for the letters ‘U’ and ‘W’. He served with the Devonshire Regiment from early 1917 (when married conscription came in) and is said to have edited dictionary proofs at the front, and even for a while in a captured German dugout. He wrote the extraordinarily comprehensive ‘Roxburghshire Word-Book’ (1923), research for which included reading virtually all sources of dialect literature available at the time, and corresponding with a veritable army of helpers over many years. He also contributed extensively to the Archeological Society Transactions throughout the first half of the 20th century, eventually amounting to 50 articles. Additionally he helped with the proofs for James Sinton’s Hawick-related bibliography in 1908. With Craigie’s encouragement he started to collect quotations for a Scots dictionary, this material being used as the starting point for the Scottish National Dictionary, to which he later became a major contributor. He moved to Chicago in 1927 to join Craigie to work on the ‘Dictionary of American English’, where he became Assistant Professor at the University of Chicago. He then contributed to the ‘Dictionary of American English’ and the ‘Dictionary of the Older Scottish Tongue’. He also worked on the supplement to the completed Oxford English Dictionary in 1933 and the corrected reissue. He felt like he did not get full recognition for his efforts; however he did receive an honorary M.A. from Oxford University in 1933. He returned to Oxford in 1937, but remained on the staff of the University of Chicago (teaching a proof-reading course by correspondence) until 1946. He also served as editor for Volume 1 of an edition of Hector Bocce’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1946). In 1910 he married widow Alice Mary French (nee Plummer), but they had no children. His last contribution to the Archeological Society Transactions appeared only a few months before he died at his home in Summertown, Oxford. Rev. George (1925–98) a native of Dundee, he served with the Reconnaissance Corps during WWII and afterwards in the Black Watch, He then obtained his M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1950 and B.D. in 1953. He was licensed by Dundee Presbytery in 1953 and immediately became minister of Brechin Maison Dieu Church. He moved to Wilton Church in 1960, soon becoming an adopted Teri. He earned his Mosstroopers badge in 1963 and was Chief Guest at the 1979 Common Riding. He was active in the Masons, becoming Senior Grand Chaplain to the Grand Lodge of Scotland as well as Provincial Grand Chaplain for Roxburgh, Peebles and Selkirk. In addition he was Chaplain to Wilton School, Industrial Chaplain to Turner & Rutherfords and Honorary Chaplain to the Callants’ Club. He also had responsibility for Teviothead Kirk 1989–91. He acted as Clerk to Hawick Presbytery 1965–72 and to Jedburgh Presbytery 1972–85. He was also involved with the Weens House Committee and the R.S.S.P.C.C., becoming Chairman of the local committee. An accomplished cross-country runner as a youth, he later became a keen hill walker. His wife Betty was first Captain of the Callants’ Club. Gladys Lindsay (b.1879) daughter of Thomas Lindsay. She was a soprano, who performed under the name ‘Gwladys Lindsa’. She gave her first recital at the Bechstein Hall in London in 1905. She married Capt. Reynaldo Gillian of the Royal Engineers, in St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. Guy Lindsay son of Anthony Lindsay. He did not follow his father into the local textile industry. His wife is Marika and their son is Ian Robert. Helen (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. Her son Robert was baptised in 1764. Hugh (19th C.) married Ann Reid. Their children (baptised in Hawick Free Kirk) included: Hannah (b.1847). Isabella nee McBurnie (b.1815/6) from Kirkpatrick in Kirkcudbrightshire, she married Robert. Her husband was innkeeper of the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street, and their children were David McBurnie (of the Archæological Society) and Mary. By 1851 she was a widow, listed as the innkeeper herself. Her uncle David McBurnie, a retired innkeeper from Holywood, Dumfriesshire, was also living with her. James (d.1418) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Chaplain of St. Nicholas Church in Dalkeith. He was made Rector of Cavers in 1406; he was allowed to keep the Vicarage of Innerleithen for 2 years because the Cavers ‘on the borders of English territory and troubled by wars, amounted to very little’. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1408 until his death (then giving up Cavers). He was appointed by Papal decree in 1408, despite holding a canonry and prebend of Glasgow, Chaplaincy of Dalkeith, Vicarage of Innerleithen, and being litigating over Cavers. He witnessed a charter of James Douglas of Dalkeith in the 1410s. In 1414 the name of the Archdeacon is given in Latin as ‘Jacobi Walteri’ and in 1415 as ‘Walteri Jacobi’, and so there appears to be some confusion about his name. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Fula and their children included Bessie (b.1673). James (18th C.) recorded at Harden in 1771 and Threiphead in 1773 when children of his were baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the James who married Mary Thomson in 1770 and whose children included Betty (b.1771) and Nelly (b.1773). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included James (b.1769), Betty (b.1771), John (b.1773) and John (again, b.1776). He was probably distinct from the John who was at Harden and Threiphead.

Dr. James (18th/19th C.) purchased the farm of Muirfield (formerly part of Hassendean Common) in 1789 from the trustees of Thomas Turnbull. His son was Thomas. He was probably the Kelso doctor who paid taxes for having servants and horses in at least the period 1789–94. James (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Douglas. Their children (baptised in East Bank Kirk) included: John (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Alexander (b.1823); Helen (b.1824); and Walter (b.1826). James (1810–61) younger son of manufacturer William. He became a draper in Tyneside, working for Charles Bragg & Co., Newcastle. He lived at North Shields, Tynemouth and Newcastle. In 1835 (in the Friends’ Meeting House in North Shields) he married Mary, daughter of Robert Spence, and she died in 1871. Their children were William Lindsay, Margaret, Robert Foster, Emma, Edith, Alice, Anna, James, Ernest and Emma Lindsay. James (19th C.) married Margaret Lindsay. Their children (baptised in Robertson United Kirk) included Helen (b.1847). James (1836–98) son of weaver Andrew, he was born in Jedburgh. He worked as a soda factory manager, grocer and newspaper reporter. However, he became known as the pre-eminent Jedburgh historian, writing several articles for local historical societies and magazines. He edited ‘Small’s Guide to Jedburgh and Vicinity’ and also published ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859), ‘Jethart Worthies’ (b.c.1870) and ‘Jedburgh Abbey: Historical and Descriptive’ (1877, 1894). He married Anne Cameron and they had 11 children. His cousin Peter’s son, George Watson, became a lexicographer. James (19th C.) letter carrier in Rulewater, recorded in the early 1860s. He operated between Hawick and Hobkirk Parish. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries both he and Miss Renwick (the postmistress at Bonchester) were relieved of their positions. This was probably in the late 1860s. James (b.1852/3) son of Robert, who was Stationmaster at Hassendean. He himself worked as a porter and then signalman at Hassendean.

Rev. James minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden, 1988–94. Jessie (b.1802/3) from Selkirk, she was a grocer on the Howegate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she is listed as a ‘Provision dealer’ at about 14 Howeigate. She was unmarried and living with her sister Elizabeth. Jessie (1847–1944) daughter of William Lindsay and sister of Provost Robert Fraser. She bussed the Flag at the 1887 Colour Bussing ceremony, the first to be held in the Town Hall. In her younger days she was an enthusiastic oil painter, having studied at the Slade School of Art in London, and having a studio at Wilton Bank. She was said to be ‘a tall woman of commanding appearance’. She was a Life Member of the Archæological Society. She left Hawick at the age of 57, thereafter living in Cambridge and London. She was turned out of her house at the age of 94 when it was requisitioned as a W.A.A.F. hostel.

and lived her last years with her nieces in Edinburgh. She was the last member of her generation of Hawick’s early manufacturing families and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to William, who was also listed. Rev. John (16th/17th C.) son of Peter, minister of Flisk, and Christian Stanehouse. He is recorded as Reader at Kirkton in 1588 and as Dean at Cavers in the 1580s. He may have been the same John connected with Kirkmichael 1579–86 or with Melrose in 1569. He demitted the vicarage of Cavers in 1601 (in favour of the Parson there, William Clerk), when he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’. He may thus have been Cavers minister from the early 1580s until about 1599, but held on to some of the ‘living’ of the parish for another couple of years. It is possible he was the ‘Dene Jhone Watsone’ recorded along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk deputes of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the Regality of Melrose. Note that the minister of Melrose was one of the witnesses to the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. John (16th C.) recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme in 1574 as being the collector of the crops and other rents for the farms around Hawick. He also held money for a land deal between John Scott of Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Over Hassendean. Additionally he was left ‘fourtie bollis beir’ in the will and was one of the witnesses to the will. He could be an ancestor of the Clerk to the Regality of Hawick recorded more than a century later. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son William was baptised in 1637. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mallie Bennet and their son John was baptised in 1654. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when, along with John Minto, he witnessed a baptism for flesher George Renwick in 1716, for William Ogilvie (along with ex-Bailie William Laing (his father-in-law) in 1718 and for ‘apothecarie’ Walter Scott in 1719. He was listed as just ‘Clerk’ in a baptismal record of 1717. He married Anna Laing in Hawick in 1709; she was born in Hawick in 1688, daughter of Bailie William Laing and Jane Thorbrand. They had 6 daughters, Jean (b.1710), May (b.1711), Margaret (b.1713), Anne (b.1715), Agnes (b.1717) and Christian (b.1718). The witnesses in 1717 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Walter Scott of Crumhauk. In 1724 his widow married John Scott in an ‘irregular marriage’. He is surely related to Thomas, who succeeded him as Clerk to the Regality of Hawick; but the precise relationship is unclear (perhaps a son from an earlier marriage). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His irregular marriage in Edinburgh to Helen Scott is recorded in 1720. He could be the John recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton and the John at Parkhill in 1725 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Margaret (b.1730) may also have been his child. John (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscote in 1737 and Craik in 1743. His children were Thomas (b.1737), William (b.1739), Helen (b.1741), Isobel (b.1743) and James (b.1747). He could be the John of ‘Castledean’ Parish who married Jean Bennet in Ancrum Parish in 1735. He may also be the John who married Isobel Lamb in 1749; this marriage was recorded in both Wilton and Roberton Parishes. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Janet Scott. Their daughter Katherine was baptised in 1771. John (18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw in 1773 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) groom at Weens in 1778, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. By 1785–92 he was listed as ‘Stable Servant’ or ‘Groom’ at Weens. He was probably related to Walter, who was a house servant for Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was overseer at Dinlabyre when listed as male head of household in 1835. He is probably the John who died at Dinlabyre in 1837, aged 80, and is buried in Castleton along with his daughter Mary (d.1809). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Isabella (b.1795); Andrew (b.1797); Jean (b.1799); William (b.1801); George (b.1805); Betty (b.1807); and Mary (b.1811). John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Jane ‘Bremure’ and their children included James (b.1825). John (b.c.1810) carter in Newcastleton. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 1 Doncaster Street. He may be the same John who was proprietor of the Buck Inn in Newcastleton in 1837. He married Jane Glendinning and their children included Abraham (b.1834). John Edward (1821–85) born in Hawick. He was articled to John & Benjamin Green in Newcastle as an architect in 1840, leaving in 1852 to set up his own business. He entered a design for the Great Exhibition, for which he was commended by Prince Albert. In 1869 he became President of the Northern Architects Association and became F.R.I.B.A. in 1877. He worked on Bowes Estate, at Barnard Castle and at Streatham Castle. He died at Newcastle.

Lancelot (19th C.) native of Hawick who moved to Waco, Texas, and gifted the 1889 portrait of Henry Scott Riddell that hangs in the Museum. He was a guest at the 1887 Colour Bussing. He may have been the ‘Launcelot’ who was born in 1825/6, son of skinner George. Margaret ‘Meg the Manty’ or ‘Meg the Mantua’ (1808/9–66) 19th century character who came to Hawick from Minto Parish with her mother, and referred to herself as ‘Miss Walker’ (although this may be an error for ‘Watson’). In 1841 census she was living with her mother Eleanor, a ‘mantua-maker’ in Minto village. She was a tenant at 70 High Street (and also 5 Melgund Place) and was eccentric but harmless, her great weakness being for extravagant dress, particularly hats. She affected the manners of the upper classes and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. She became the most expensive pauper for Hawick Parish, because of the extended legal wrangling with Minto. She met with an accident in the Spring of 1866 and died 2 months later – ‘Braw news has come to the toon, Braw news has come to the toon, Meg the Manty’s married’ [T] (the name derived from ‘manty’ meaning a mantle or woman’s gown). Ninian (16th/17th C.) listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. He was said to be ‘sometime in Tynnesburne, now in Quhilltiesyde’. Peter (19th C.) married Elizabeth Kerr. Their children (baptised in Roberton United Kirk) included Grace (b.1848). R. (d.bef. 1707) landowner in Abbotrule Parish. In the 1707 county valuation, ‘Grange’s lands’ were held by ‘Airs of R. Watson’ and valued at £396. He presumably purchased part of the former estate of Kerr of Abbotrule, or perhaps was related to the daughters of George Scott, who inherited Grange and other lands in 1670. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Watsons. Robert (b.c.1795) innkeeper on Buccleuch Street according to the 1841 census. This was the Commercial Inn at about No. 13. He married Isabella McBurnie, and she carried on as innkeeper after his death. His children were: David McBurnie (b.1838), who became a local historian; and Mary (b.1841). Robert (b.1803) eldest son of manufacturer William Watson. He attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire. He moved to North America about 1834, settling near Guelph. Robert (1818–1906) from Chirnside, where he worked with his father Joseph in a carrier’s business. He was foreman porter at Galashields and came to Hassendean to be Stationmaster in about 1854. He retired in about 1881, afterwards faming at Minto Townhead. He married Margaret Pledgerleith who was from Coldstream and their children included: James (b.1852/3); George Pledgerleith (b.1855), who succeeded him as Stationmaster, and Robert (b.1860), who farmed with him. It was said ‘there was never a more obliging or more cheerful stationmaster and helpful ways made him a universal favourite’. Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, originally from Dumfriesshire. In 1851 he was employed as a butler, living at Newhouse. He married Isabella Robertson (from Inverness) and their children included: Isabella (b.1845); and Janet Mary (b.1853). Robert Fraser (1839–1904) born at Wilton Bank, he was son of William Lindsay and brother of Thomas. He was 10 years old when his father died, and the firm was run by trustees until him and his brother Thomas Lindsay came of age. He became senior partner of William Watson & Sons, Dangerfield Mills, tweed manufacturers. He served in the Volunteers, becoming an Ensign in 1860 the newly formed 5th Roxburgh Corps led by Provost George Wilson and his uncle Bailie George Hardie Fraser. In 1861 he was living at Wilton Bank as a manufacturer of Woollen hosiery and tweed, employing 250 men and 250 women; there was a governess and 2 domestic servants in his household. By 1871 he was described in the census as a ‘Scotch Tweed Manufacturer’. He enjoyed travel and was in America in the 1860s when he met some of the military leaders in the Civil War there. He was a councillor for Wilton Ward for 18 years from 1869 and Provost for 3 full terms, 1878–87. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Liberal Association, later switching allegiance to the Liberal Unionists. There were many town improvements under his Provostship, including the Dodburn water scheme, the new Town Hall, widening of North Bridge Street, Duke Street built, and Pilmuir divided into two farms. He was the first to have the Provost’s Lamp outside his house, from 1882. He was an ardent advocate for the Liddesdale railway line and a follower of the Buccleuch hounds. He was a founder member and Captain of Hawick Golf Club in 1878, and in 1879 he gave a silver Champion Medal to be competed for annually. He was a strong Common Riding supporter, inducing members of the Council to patronise the Common Riding again after a period of much debate over Council involvement. This was effectively the start of the period of revitalization of the Common Riding. He inaugurated the Provost’s breakfast in 1885 (at Wilton Bank), and led the Councillors in the Procession to the Mair, as well as organising the first Colour Bussing in the Council Chambers in 1887, with the Provost Presiding. He was President of the Archaeological Society and credited with rejuvenating the organisation with the inauguration of a series of summer excursions. He was also Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, a director of Hawick Gas Company and involved with the Library, Cottage Hospital, Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute and Sacred Harmonic Society. In 1887 he represented Hawick a function in London to celebrate Queen Victoria’s Jubilee and can be seen in his court dress in a photograph from that time. In 1892 he stood as Liberal Unionist candidate for the Hawick Burghs, being defeated by Thomas Shaw. In later life he lived at Brieryyards and Hassendeanburn, and never married. He purchased the writing desk that Napoleon had used on St. Helena (from the estate of the former island Governor Gen. Walker of Bowland, near Galashiels). He died at Hassendeanburn, and his funeral was attended by many local officials, led by the Bailies with draped halberds. He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Knighton Warren in 1888). He can also be seen riding near the head of the Procession in 1899, the first year the Common Riding is recorded on film. Robert (1868/9–1900) elder son of D. McBurnie. He worked as a bank teller with the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick. He died of consumption, like his younger brother John the year before.

Robert Hamilton Lindsay (1886–1956) son of Thomas, from whom he took over the family manufacturing firm. He was educated at Glenalmond School in Perthshire and at Cambridge University, which he represented in the sports of hammer and billiards. On the rugby field he was known as a fast wing three-quarter with a strong barrel-like chest. He played for Hawick R.F.C., being part of the 1908/9 team that only suffered one loss in the entire season, being in the 1911/2 sevens team that won all 5 competitions and capturing the side in 1912/3. He was capped by Scotland once, in 1909, and played for the South of Scotland team in 1911. He also represented Britain in the hammer throw in the 1908 Olympics, finishing 10th overall. He was clearly an all-round sportsman. He was a Lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders in WWI, losing 2 fingers at the Battle of Loos, and never played rugby again. He took over the family firm of William Watson & Sons after the death of his father in 1925, and oversaw its gradual decline during the depression of the 1930s. He was a member of the Con Club, St. Cuthbert’s Church and a keen golfer. His name is sometimes given as ‘Lindsay-Watson’. In 1920 he married Norina Isabella (1900–88), daughter of local solicitor Thomas Armstrong. They had a son, Robert Anthony, and 3 daughters, including Phyllis and Millicant Mary. He died suddenly at his home at Brieryyards. Robert Anthony ‘Anthony’ (1921–89) only son of Robert Hamilton. During his time managing the family firm there was a downturn in demand for tweed and he decided to focus on yarn production. However, by 1967 the firm only employed 30 workers and had sold off many of its properties. He sold Dangerfield Mills to Thuleknit in 1982 and retired completely in 1983. His wife was Grizel and their children included Guy Lindsay. After retiring he moved to Dorchester. Thomas (17th C.) married Agnes Hogg in Ashkirk Parish in 1659. Thomas (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who lived at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as Clerk to the Regality of Hawick in 1720 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Little. He was also Clerk to the Regality in 1721 and in 1722 when he witnessed another baptism. He took over as Clerk from John, who was surely related (perhaps his father) and died in 1720. He was appointed one of the Commissioners overseeing the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. In 1724 and 1727 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott of Burnhead, in 1729 baptisms for Walter Tinlin and for tailor Thomas Wilkie, and in 1731 another for Robert Scott of Falnash. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1735. He was one of 4 men... who proposed building a stillhouse and brewery (probably in Hawick) in 1737, possibly becoming the original ‘Whisky Hooses’ on Slitrig Crescent. He witnessed baptisms for weaver George Swan in 1737 for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1738, and for Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and Jean Watson (probably a relative) in 1740. In 1744 he leased from the Buccleuch Estates the lands of ‘Reidmoss’ and others in Castleton, plus Gerwald and others in Eskdalemuir Parish. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750 when his daughter Marion (possibly born in Hawick in 1726) married Thomas Weir, Commissary of Lanark. He is described as ‘clerk to the regality of Hawick’ (i.e. the Baron’s agent in the Town) when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1742 and still has the same title in 1757 when John Horsburgh of that Ilk tried to recover a debt from him. He notarised a saisine relating to lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1757. In 1720 he married Euphany (or ‘Euphan’), daughter of William Scott of Burnhead, and sister of Robert of Burnhead. This was an ‘irregular marriage’ at Kirk Arthur, with a licence being given by the Bishop of Carlisle, which suggests that he was a supporter of the Episcopalian church. Their children included: Agnes (b.1721); James (b.1722); William (b.1724), who became heir of Burnhead when his cousin Margaret (wife of Rev. Dr. Charters) died without any children; Marion (b.1726); Robert (b.1729); John (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1732). The witnesses in 1722 were Robert Scott of Burnhead (his brother-in-law) and Beadle John Scott.

Thomas (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1725. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Teindside. He sold Teindside to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, about 1755. Perhaps the same Thomas has a son John baptised in Cavers Parish in 1758. He may also be the Thomas whose son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1768. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Langnewton, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1792. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His children included: an unnamed daughter (b.1795); and Andrew (b.1797). Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of Dr. James. In 1804 there was a ‘retour’ determining him as the legitimate son of James. He inherited the farm of Muirfield in the same year, and also purchased parts of the old Common that had been allocated to William Scott of Burnhead. He appears to have sold these to Lord Minto in 1808, but perhaps bought them back, since he still held the lands in 1814. Bailie Thomas (1807–42) 3rd son of William and brother of William Lindsay. In one version of the story of the origin of the word ‘tweed’ (told by his brother James in about 1855), it was his mistake in invoicing a parcel to Harvey & Co. of London that led to the accidental naming. In the electoral roll of 1834 he is listed along with his brother as joint proprietor of the Hawick spinning mill left to them by their father. He lived on Slitrig Crescent according to the 1841 census; the inventory of his goods after his death shows that his house was supplied with gas burners and lightint. He served as Magistrate 1839–41. He was said to be a modest man. He married Mary Renny (1811–83) from Arbroath; marrying a non-Quaker caused him to have to resign from the Society of Friends. Their children included: William Renny (1838–1900); Mary Renny (1840–1914), who married Spencer Shelley; and Margaret (1841–1921). He died of a fever at his home in Slitrig Crescent and was buried in Old Wilton Kirkyard. Thomas Lindsay ‘Tom’ (1844–1925) son of William Lindsay and brother of Robert Fraser, he was a partner in the family manufacturing firm. He became senior partner on the death of his brother Robert Fraser in 1904. He was prominent in local Liberal and Unionist politics and was a founder of the local Constitutional Club. In 1871 he purchased the town-house at Leaburn and also later owned Brieryyards. In about 1874 he and his mother were listed each as half owners of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland. He was recorded in 1881 having 6 domestic servants in his household and in 1901 had 7 domestic servants, as well as a coachman and other servant living in the lodge at Brieryyards. He was Captain of the Golf Club at one time, and an early player of tennis. He was also a contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was also an adherent of the game of curling and supporter of rugby and other local sports. He was long connected with St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, being a Churchwarden and Lay Elector there, and unveiling the War Memorial plaque in 1921. In 1869 he married Anna Eliza (b.1846), daughter of Thomas Hedley of Cox Lodge Hall, Newcastle (who was Mayor of that city). His children included: Evelyn Lindsay (b.1870), who married Rev. W.H. Price; Jessie Lindsay (b.1872); William Lindsay (1873–1915); Margaret Winifred Lindsay (1874–80); Gertrude Lindsay (b.1875); Amora Lindsay (1878–80); Gladys Lindsay (b.1879); Phyllis Lindsay (b.1882), who married John Holland in London; and Robert Hamilton Lindsay (1886–1956). His children generally used the hyphenated surname ‘Lindsay-Watson’. He was buried in St. Cutlibert’s Kiryard. After his death the firm was taken over by his son Robert H.L. His wife died in Monte Carlo in 1938. Walter (16th C.) occupier of the lands of Langhope and Leap Hill in Ashkirk Parish in 1544. These lands were owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh, with superiority held by the Bishop of Glasgow. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the Walter, married to Mary Hardie, whose son Walter was baptised in Ashkirk in 1688. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1723, 1725, 1726, 1728, 1729 and 1734. He married Agnes Easton in 1722 and their children included: Margaret (b.1723); William (b.1724); twins George and Agnes (b.1725); Margaret (b.1726); Helen (b.1728); John (b.1729); Janet (b.1732); and Walter (b.1734). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Hardwood on Teviot. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Bettie’) Birnie in 1755 and their children included: Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed child (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). Walter (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1785–88, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He could be the Walter whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Andrew (b.1779), an unnamed child (b.1781), William (b.1785) and Walter (b.1787). Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Dickshall’ in Kirkton Parish. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1788. Walter (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parishes. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer on Lilliesleaf Main Street. He married Helen Inglis and their children (baptised in Ashkirk) included: Elizabeth (b.1850); and Isabella (b.1853). William (15th C.) recorded as late Vicar of Ashkirk in the Protocol Book of Glasgow Diocese in 1508. It appears that David Scott filled the vacancy, at least temporarily. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘subtenant’ in Ashkirk in 1539. He acted on behalf of the tenants there in a legal action with Margaret Falside, widow of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. He may be related to John, who is also listed. He may be the Watson (forename illegible) in Ashkirk recorded in 1579/80 as witness to an agreement between Dalgleishes and Scotts, done at Kirkhouses. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Bennet and their children included John (b.1654). William (17th C.) resident at Shaw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William of Burnhead (d.1818) son of Thomas and Eupham Scott of Burnhead. He succeeded to Burnhead after the death of his cousin Margaret Scott (daughter of Robert Scott of Burnhead) in 1815. He married Rebecca Peters in Naussau, Island of New Providence (modern Bahamas) in 1785. They had 1 son and 2 daughters. He died only 3 years after he succeeded to Burnhead and was succeeded by his son William. William (1773–1843) hosiery manufacturer, originally from Dalkeith, he was son of Robert and Agnes Brown and grandfather of Provost Robert Fraser. He was a dyer in Dalkeith, moving to Glasgow in the 1790s, where he was a retail draper. He became a customer of William Wilson, hosier in Hawick. On account of asthma, Wilson found it hard to travel and so was looking for a partner. He joined the Society of Friends in 1801 and in 1802 he married schoolteacher Margaret Brown, who was also a Quaker, then the couple settled in Hawick in 1804; she died in 1850, aged 77, at Deanfield, Perthshire. In that year he started his partnership with William Wilson, forming Wilson & Watson and building Dangerfield Mills. He focussed on travelling and sales, while Wilson oversaw production in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He probably had the villa Wilton Bank (also called ‘Old Wilton Bank’, or No. 2 Wilton Bank) built for him on the modern Princes Street; he was living there in 1841 with his wife and 2 servants. The partnership at Dangerfield effectively began the factory system in Hawick. The firm was split in 1819 with Dangerfield Mills remaining with William Watson & Sons, which then became known as Watson’s. As well as manufacturing hosiery, his firm also spun yarn and made blankets. He was a Liberal in politics. In 1818 he wrote to the British and Foreign School Society regarding Tom Jenkins and his suitability for a missionary post. His wife Margaret died at Deanfield, Perthshire in 1850, aged 76. His children included: Robert (1803–49), who emigrated to America; William Lindsay (b.1805), who took over the hosiery firm; Bailie Thomas (1807–42); James (1810–61), who married Mary Spence and became a draper in North Shields; Agnes (b.1812), who died in infancy; George (1814–46), the youngest son, who died in Canada; Elizabeth (1815–29); and Margaret (1816–73), who married Hendry Sanforth Richie and secondly George Wilson. Portraits of him and his wife from 1831, painted by Robert Allan, are in the Museum (donated by the Lindsay-Watson family in 2005). He died at his house, Wilton Bank, and is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard (originally without a gravestone, following Quaker principles, but one was added later). William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Turnbull in Hawick in 1809. The marriage took place in the East Bank Kirk and their children (also baptised in that church) included: Margaret (b.1810); Walter (b.1812); Betty (b.1814); James (b.1816); Jean (b.1819); Helen (b.1821); Jessie (b.1825); and Mina (b.1830). The 1816, 1819 and 1830 baptisms were also recorded in Kirkton Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet John in East Bank Kirk in 1819. William of Burnhead (1787–1870) son of William and Rebecca Peters. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1840. In 1841 he is recorded as an ‘Independent Gentleman’ at ‘Burngrove’ (i.e. Bucklands). He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He held parts of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot, Crawhill and Lees. In 1818 he married Bridget, daughter of William Abraham Bowles of Bath. They had 3 sons and 1 daughter, Margaret, who married John Stavert of Hoscote. He was succeeded by his eldest son, William Scott. William (b.c.1790) shepherd in Castleton Parish, originally from Hobkirk. In 1841 he was at ‘Larriston House alias Haggiehaugh’ and in 1851 was living at about 4 Montagu Street in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living with his daughter ‘Wilimina’ at about 1 Whitchester Lane in Newcastle. His wife was Jane (or ‘Jeannie’), from Wilton. Their children included Helen and Wilhelmina Lindsay (or ‘Menie’). William Lindsay (1805–49) 2nd son of William and father of Provost Robert Fraser. He worked in the family hosiery and tweed firm. He is listed on the 1834 electoral roll, along with his brother Thomas, as joint proprietor of the spinning mill left to them by their father. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street. In the description of the election riots of 1837 he was stated to have been one of the only people to come to the assistance of Thomas Scott, farmer at Little Cote. In 1836 he married Janet (or Jessie, 1818–81), sister of Provost Fraser; she was from outside the Society of Friends. Their children included: William (1837–43); Robert Fraser (1839–1904); Rebecca (1841–66); Thomas Lindsay (1843–1925); Margaret Fullarton (1846–1900); Jessie (1847–1944); and Wilhelmina Lindsay (1849–1924), who was born posthumously and married James Locke. Most of the children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. He lived on the High Street, possibly No. 16. He did not live for many years after his father’s death in 1843; the firm was managed by John Paterson until his sons Robert Fraser and Thomas Lindsay took over in 1864. He died at Wilton Bank and was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. His wife was listed in about 1874 living at Wilton Bank and owning half of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland (the other half being owned by his son Thomas Lindsay). William (19th C.) married Ann Stoddart. Their children (baptised in Robertson United Kirk) included Janet (b.1848). Dr. William Scott of Burnhead (1819–85) eldest son of William and Bridget Bowles. He was educated under Dr. Arnold at Rugby and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1842, practised in Brighton, but gave up when he married in 1851. He then lived in Edinburgh and Melrose until 1860 when his father gave him Bucklands House, where he is recorded in 1868. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1873 and was also a member of the Ettrick Forest Club. He became a Lieutenant in the Upper Teviotal Rifle Corps (Volunteers) when it formed in 1860. He later became Captain-Commandant of the 2nd Company. He also served as Justice of the Peace, member of the first School Board, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was listed as owner of Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, Appletreehall Townfoot, Crawhill, Lees and Hummelknowes in about 1874. In 1851 he married Louisa Sarah, daughter of Thomas Dennis of Pilton. They had a large family: William Scott (1855–1929), who succeeded; Thomas John (1859–60); Charles Abraham (1861–1902), who died in Australia; Bridget Sarah (1852–85); Anna Louisa Elizabeth (1853–74), who died in a riding accident; Louisa Margaret (1856–88); Susan Harriet (1858–75); and Frances Emmeline (1863–1905), who married Ernest Leonard Mahon. Sir William Renny (1838–1900) born on Slitrig Crescent in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Renny. His father died when he was 4. He trained as an engineer with James Melrose & Sons, worked with Platt Brothers until 1868, then becoming a partner with Mirrlees, Tait & Watson.
Watsonians

later Mirrlees, Watson & Yaryan Co., who manufactured cane sugar machinery in Glasgow. He was Chairman of the Glasgow and South Western Railway Company. He was a Director of the National Bank of Scotland, served for a few years as Councillor in Glasgow and was a member of the Clyde Trust. Having a keen interest in the arts and sciences, he was President of a local branch of the Royal Geographical Society. In later life he devoted efforts to charitable work, for example serving as Director of the Glasgow Workmen's Dwellings Company and Chairman of Governors of the Victoria Infirmary. He lived at Braco Castle in Perthshire and was knighted in 1892. He gifted the Silver Challenge Cup to Hawick Golf Club. In 1889 he was one of 2 speakers at the Colour Bussing (and was hence effectively one of the first Chief Guests). He presented the prizes at the Buccluch Memorial School in about 1890. In 1866 he married Mary Ann Caird, sister of a wealthy Dundee jute manufacturer; she died in 1825, aged 77. In later life he and his wife were philanthropists, with interests in literary and scientific pursuits. William Scott of Burnhead, J.P. (1855–1929) son of William Scott and Louisa Sarah Dennis. Educated at Cambridge, he was Captain in the 1st Essex Regiment. He sold Bucklands House in 1887. He was a speaker at the Common Riding in 1889. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. In 1892 he married Mabel Agnes, 4th daughter of Lieut.-Col. Thomas Mahon. Their son William was born in 1893 and appeared to have ‘Scott Watson’ as a surname. He died at his sister’s house in Edinburgh and was buried in Dean Cemetery there. William Lindsay (1873–1915) son of Thomas Lindsay. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1890s, both in the full side and sevens. He scored the winning try against Watsonians at Mansfield Park in 1896 that won Hawick its first Scottish Championship. He was also Captain of Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club 1897/8 and later played golf. He lived at Leaburn and also worked for the family manufacturing firm. He was appointed as a special constable within Hawick in 1914. In 1899 in London he married Jessie Florence Allen, who was from America; she died in Barbados in 1951. He died near his house, apparently having struck his head on a post when crossing a plank footbridge bridge. He is buried at St. Cuthbert’s (also formerly ‘Vatson’, ‘Watsone’, ‘Watsoun’ and ‘Wattson’). Watsonians (wats-on-ee-inz) n. rugby football club, established in 1875 for ex-pupils of George Watson’s College in Edinburgh. The club lost the first Scottish Cup final in 1996 with a score of 15 to Hawick’s 17. Watson’s (wat-sinz) n. Messrs. William Watson & Sons, hosiery and tweed manufacturers. Founded in 1819, after William Wilson and William Watson split their partnership, it occupied the large mill at Dangerfield. The name was usually applied to the main Dangerfield mill, or collectively to the group of buildings there. It is labelled ‘Spinning Mill, Mr. Watson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was an apparent error in reading an invoice from this firm that led to the word ‘tweed’ being coined in about 1832 (although other accounts connect it with Wilson’s). The firm also had about 50 workers in Selkirk at one point. The company is listed as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer in Pigot’s 1837 directory. The ground flat of the factory was flooded in the 1846 flood. In Slater’s 1852 directory it was listed at Dangerfield Mills and Selkirk. From about 1863 the hosiery part of the business (carried on at the old Incle House) was sold to George Hogg. The tweed business was carried on by the sons and then grandsons of William Watson. In 1871 the firm was employing 250 people, manufacturing over 170,000 pounds of goods yearly and dying 100,000 pounds. It was said in 1904 that the firm had treated its workers better than others, and as a result had never had a strike or walk-out. The company suffered during the depression and in 1939 needed a bond from the British Linen Bank for £10,000. Later the firm turned away from tweeds and back to hosiery. In 1982 the last Lindsay-Watson retired and the company was sold to Thuleknit Ltd. In 1986 a fire in the offices destroyed most of the firm’s records, including pattern books and the letter establishing the word ‘tweed’. The firm finally went into liquidation in 1991, although the mill was used from 1996 by International Knitwear. The carding shed off Bath Street burned down on Common Riding Friday 2003, followed by the main mill a month later. Company records from the period 1847–1950 are stored at Edinburgh University, and a single pattern book for the years 1924–30 survives.

Watt (waw’) n. Adam, W.S. (d.bef. 1674) recorded in a discharge by his 2nd son Patrick in 1674, when his lands within the Barony of Hawick were sold to the Duke and Duchess of Bucleuch. It is unclear what his Hawick connection was. Allan (19th/20th C.) born in Dundee, he became a journeyman printer. Travelling as far as London and Ireland for work, he spent some time in Hawick, where he met and married Margaret Shiell Smith, daughter of James Smith, Cornet in 1846. He became Foreman Printer with the Hawick Advertiser, but in 1880 rented a wooden hut near the station. There he started a newsagent and printers of Station Road. This firm, Allan Watt & Son, lasted for more than a century, being run in turn by Allan junior, and then by a third Allan. The tenement built at the corner of Station Road and Commercial Road in about 1894 was designed by J.P. Alison. He married Margaret (‘Maggie’) Smith in 1875. Their children included Allan S. (b.c.1877) and Helen Sutherland (b.1881). Gilbert (17th C.) Town Clerk from 1638 until about 1658. He had previously been Clerk of Circuit for the Court of the Sheriffdoms of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Peebles and Dumfries and the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Annandale (also known as the Commissioners’ Court), which included some cases relevant to the Hawick area. He was Clerk of Circuit for 1622 and 1623, the records from that time being preserved in the Hawick Burgh archives and transcribed in James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’. It is unclear when he first had an association with Hawick, but he is probably the Gilbert in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Gilbert wrote to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619, with a summons to Alexander Scott of Northhouse and other matters. He may be the same assistant of advocate Lawrence Scott recorded in a charter of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1609. He may also be the Gilbert described in 1616 as ‘ordinar clerk to the justiceis of peace’ in Roxburghshire, as part of a complaint to the Privy Council against the Douglases of Friarshaw who ‘avowis to haif his lyff’; they lay in wait for him and challenged him to combat on Ruecastle Moor. He was witness to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He was also involved with drafting the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’, and signed it as ‘Clk.’. He had a ‘protocol book’ which sadly does not survive, but is referred to in the existing extract of Robert Scott of Alton’s sasine of 1615, which was copied from it; it is also referred to in a case brought in 1670 in Melrose against Andrew Tunno (Hawick’s new Town Clerk) who held the book, from which Walter Scott of Goldielands demanded copies of sasines of Goldielands. In 1643 his lands in Hawick were valued at £13 6s 8d. In 1645 he complained to the Bailies that James Scott, lorimer, had called him several names, including being a ‘ruminat beggar fra toune to toune’ (suggesting perhaps that he was not popular with everyone in Hawick because of being Clerk of Circuit). In 1650 someone was fined by the Council for calling him ‘and suckler, and for other injurious words’. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Westport’ in 1656. James (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant of the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. James (b.c.1800) recorded as ‘Messenger at Arms’ on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He must have been a Sheriff Officer of some kind. He married Elizabeth Maben. Their children included: George Thomas (b.1828); and Agnes (b.1830). Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Merrylew, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799.

Watters (waw’-urz) n. Alexander Marshall (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1919–45. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1903, was a geologist by profession, and served as a Sound Ranging Officer in the 3rd Army in WWI. It is said that his ruddy complexion gave rise to the nickname ‘Le Pêche’ which became ‘the Pesh’. He wrote a history of secondary education in Hawick for the Transactions in 1927. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh.

Wattie Scott the Cairrier (waw’-ee-skoe-thhu-kä-ree-ur) n. usual name given to Walter Scott of the early 19th century.

Wattie’s Spindles (waw’-ee-spun-nilz) n. Wattie’s Spindles, former settlement in Southdean Parish, just west of Lethem. The remains are at the top of a small hill of that name, which is also known locally as Katey’s Croft. They consist of the turf-covered walls of 2 long rectangular buildings and a third to the west. A peel house was at the centre, but has been so robbed of stones that it is hard to make out anything other than its size, about 5 m by 4 m. There are other enclosures, boundary banks and rig lines nearby; the rig extends over at least 12 hectares, going west to the Windy Cleuch. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 steadings and was valued at £3 6 shillings. John Laidlaw was tenant there in 1541, paying 44s yearly. John Douglas was tenant there in 1617 before moving to Linlathen. The 1694 Hearth Tax return lists a single occupant with hearth there (Alexander Sten-son), but the place is not marked on maps of the 18th century. The 1724 will of Alexander Steven-son, shepherd in ‘Wadiespinnells’ is in the Dou-glases of Cavers papers (it is ‘Wawdospynillis’ in 1538, ‘Wawdospynlis’ in 1539, ‘Waldospindillis’ in 1541, ‘Wadaspinillie’ in 1617, ‘Wadiespindles’ in 1684, ‘waddispindels’ in 1694 and ‘Wadespinnells on Blaen’s c.1654 map).

Wattie Wilson’s (waw’-ee-wul-sin) n. popular name for the factories of Walter Wilson & Co., particularly the one at the corner of Teviot Road and Mill Port, which was latterly used by Glen-mac – ‘…We lairned oor bile in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wilson’s Mill’ [WL].

Watts (wats) n. Reuben pseudonym for Daniel Marriot.

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, just to the east of Thorliveshope farm (it is unclear who the ‘Watt’ was, but the fact that this is a ‘Burn’ rather than a ‘Sike’ might suggest the name is relatively modern).

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Arnton Fell and running approximately south-west to join Roughley Burn. It is unclear who the Watt would have been. It is presumably unassociated with the other stream of the same name in the same Parish.

Watt’s Jock (wats-jok) n. nickname for John Scott in Hawick around 1600.

Watt Tinlinn (waw’-tin-lin) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Min-strel’, who brings the first news of the approach of the English to Branxholme. Based on a proba-bly historical figure (see Tinlinn) of which fireside tales were told in Scott’s youth – And Wat of Tin-linn, much aghast, Rode back to Branksome fiery fast’ [SWS].

Wat Wat Sail (wa’-wa’-säl) n. nickname for a Hawick character in the 19th century – ‘The Sootie Ktitlin’ and Bunma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkle, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI] (origin obscure).

wauch (wawch) adj., arch. insipid, unpalatable – ?? [JAHM].

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. area in Hobkirk Parish by the Wauchope Burn, with a farm and other cottages, which was once a major estate. A tower there is mentioned in 1494/5 and was burned by the English in 1545. The site of this tower and foundations of cottages in the adjacent settlement could still be made out in the early 20th century; this was referred to as ‘the old town’ on a map of 1772 (this map, drawn by William Scott, also shows other forgotten features). It was in the wood to the south west of the modern farm. The family who took their names from the lands are first recorded in the late 12th and early 13th centuries, establishing that the original estate was in Roxburghshire. It appears that William ‘de Wallehope’ exchanged his lands in Ireland with the lands of Wolfelee and Rouchhope in the early 1300s. Alexander ‘de Walchope’ was confirmed in the lands in 1389. The Tower was originally held by the Wauchopeis, followed by the Glendinningis. ‘turri de wauchop’ is recorded in 1502 when George Turnbull called ‘Hawick’ was there (presumably the associated farm), with David Turnbull of Wauchope also recorded at the same time. David Turnbull was still Laird in 1508. In 1551 Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, granted ‘the twenty pound lands of Wauchope of old extent, with castle, tower, fortalice, and mill’ to David Turnbull and his son Hector Turnbull, which they had previously held from him and his predecessors. Later the superiority of the lands were held by the Homes of Wedderburn, who sold them to Sir William Cranston shortly after 1605. At that time the tenants were Turnbulls, who held them on feudal tenure from the Douglasses, this going back to at least 1530. The Laird of Wauchope (probably a Turnbull) is recorded as being hurt by an arrow and his horse slain during pursuit of Lord Dacre’s force in Rule Water in late 1513. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £20. A local tradition says that Mary Queen of Scott’s horse drank at the well by the old tower on her return ride from Hermitage Castle in 1566. David Turnbull of Wauchope is recorded in 1567, Hector Turnbull was recorded there in 1580 and another David Turnbull of Wauchope was slaughtered near his house in the early 17th century. In the 1590s a gang of other Turnbills stole more than 20 cows from Hector of Wauchope, and in 1602 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a band of about 100 men to steal 80 cows, 100 sheep and 12 horses from Wauchope. In 1653 the 20-pound land there was inherited by James Turnbull, as heir of his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. The superiority of the lands passed from the Cranstones of that Ilk to the Eliotts of Stobs in the 1650s, and are described in 1677 as the ‘twenty pound land of Wauchope with pertinents called Catley and Cattleyescaw’. There were Scott tenants there in the latter part of the 17th century, e.g. Walter in 1681. In 1678 the lands are valued at £1433 6s 8d. Walter Scott was there in 1694 when he paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths at the main house and 2 for his shepherds. In 1767 it was

‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Longhaugh of the old extent with the Castle, Tower, Fortalice, Miln thereof, Miln-lands…’. In that year Walter Scott (a descendant of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh) purchased the estate from James Cranston. The estate was passed to his descendants, down to the Macmillan-Scotts into the 20th century. John Sinton was a tailor there in 1758. In 1797 James Lillico was a servant there and William Henderson a labourer, Thomas Scott was servant there in 1799, John Riddell in at least 1799–1801 and Henry Elliot and William Armstrong in 1801. In 1811 Walter Scott of Wauchope is recorded as owner of Wauchope Common, Wauchope-head, Wauchope-rig, Wauchope House and Wigg; the whole was valued at £1433 6s 8d, with Walter being superior of part of the lands, holding them directly of the Crown. In 1797 the shepherds there were John Wilson, James Scott, Walter Riddell and Alexander Lillico. The mottos of this branch of the Scott family are ‘Miseris Succuro’ and ‘Ardenter Amo’. A new mansion was built in 1875/6 to replace the house visited in by Burns. But even that new Wauchope House is no more, the ruin being purchased by a religious order, pulled down and the stone used to build their Seminary at St. Boswells. There are now self-catering cottages on the farm, and an old piece of pottery found on the farm is in the Museum. The house was visited by Burns on his Border Tour of 1787, perhaps the closest he came to Hawick. A cairn was built there (by Henry Brown) using some stones from the former house; this is visited annually by the Burns Club and a pipe tune (written by Brian Gillis) called ‘Wauchope Cairn’ is played – ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnbull’s name, And among the proud of the Border’s best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame’ [WHO], ‘And with sigh for the oak and sob for the flower Rule ran slowly by Wauchope Tower’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Waughope’, spelling variations exist in earlier documents, including ‘Walchop’, ‘Walchope’, ‘Wal-hope’, ‘Walkhope’, ‘Wauchope’, ‘Wauchhop’, ‘Wauhup’, ‘Wauhop’, ‘Wauh-up’, ‘Waughope’, ‘Wauhge’, ‘Wauhchop’ and ‘Wauchope’; the origin may be a family name, although there is a suggestion that if it is very old it may be ‘valley of the strangers’, since the Anglians referred to the native Celts as ‘Waugh’, meaning ‘Welsh’; it occurs as ‘Wachopp’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Wachope’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and is ‘Wouchope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it should not be confused with the area of the same name near Langholm, although the name was probably transplanted to there).

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. area around the Wauchope Water, just west of Langholm. It is easily confused with the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish, both sites probably being connected with the Wauchope family. It was later the seat of the Lindsays. The castle there was built as a motte and bailey, being rebuilt as a tower house then a manse, before becoming ruined by the 18th century. Grains (or Grange) Well in the upper part of Wauchopedale was formerly frequented as a medicinal spring. The parish of Wauchope was united with Canonbie in about 1609, and in 1672 (along with other eastern Dumfriesshire parishes) was attached to Roxburghshire, although probably not for long. It was finally united with Staplegordon in 1702.

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) witness of a charter by Simon de Lindsay of lands in Molle to Melrose Abbey in the reign of William the Lion. His name was recorded there as ‘Ada de Waleuhope’. He also witnessed another charter for lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey about the same time. He was also witness to a charter of lands in Elliston to Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243; he is there ‘Ada de Walchope’. Given that the other witnesses were mainly connected with Roxburghshire, it is likely that his lands were those in Hobkirk Parish. Adam of Techmuiry (16th C.) witness to the marriage of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murry, ‘Mucke Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. Alan (12th/13th C.) listed as ‘Alano de Walechope’ when he witnessed a charter in Kincardineshire sometime in the period 1203–13. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. He may have been father of the Robert recorded in 1247 as son of Alan. Alan (13th C.) Chamberlain to Donald, Earl of Mar. He is recorded in transactions in 1291 and 1292 as well as 2 undated documents. Alexander (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in 1389 when the lands of Wauchope (probably in Eskdale) were confirmed to him by James, Earl of Douglas. His daughter married Adam ‘de Glendonwin’, whose family eventually acquired Wauchope. George of Pinnacle (17th C.) recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1678, with the lands valued at £500. He was listed as ‘George Waucho of Pendicle’ and was probably son of Gideon, owner in the 1600s. Gideon of Pinnacle (17th C.) described as ‘of Pinickle’ when he witnessed a contract involving lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1652. He is probably the ‘Jedeon Wauchope’ who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1649. He was fined £2400 in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter; he was there described as brother to the Laird. He was taxed for Pinnacle in about 1663. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1761 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Cavers. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Margaret (b.1758) and John (b.1759). John (13th C.) recorded receiving a grant in Inverness-shire in 1263. He is there ‘Joanni de Walchope’. John (d.c.1280s) granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. These lands were in ‘Ballihaulis’, ‘Balliotyre’ and ‘Ballimachiores’, and this was probably the start of the connection between this family and Ireland. He left a widow, Margery and 2 daughters, Alienor and Margaret. In 1300 the Irish lands were passed to his brother William. John (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in a charter of 1359, confirming the lands of ‘Tullibotil’ and ‘Little Culter’ to Alexander Burnard, which had formerly belonged to him. Sir John of Niddrie-Marischal (17th C.) son of Sir Francis, who he succeeded in about 1632. He married Anna, daughter of Sir Andrew Hamilton of Redhouse, and their children included: Andrew, who married Anna, daughter of Sir Andrew Hamilton of Redhouse; and Anna, who married Francis Scott of Gorrenberrie. In 1652 he secondly married Jean, daughter of John Ker of Littledean (unless this is an error) and widow of Sir John Ker of Lochtour and they had a son, James. He acquired the lands of Lochtour, through wadsets with his Ker in-laws. Sir Robert (13th C.) recorded in several charters in the period from about 1240 until 1271 in the counties of Aberdeen, Fife, Angus and Perth. His name is given as ‘Roberto de Walchope’ and variants. He is probably the Robert, son of Alan, who had the lands of Culter in Aberdeenshire confirmed to him in 1247. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘Robertus de Walghop’ when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. It is unclear where he came from. There was a separate Robert ‘de Waghope’ from Fife, although this could be the same man entered twice. If so he was surely related to the earlier Sir Robert. There was also a Thomas Walghop’, tenant of the Bishop of St. Andrews in Edinburgh, listed in the Ragman Rolls. Roger (13th C.) witness to some documents in Fife in the period 1200–62. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Walghope’ in the Ragman Rolls in 1296.
Wauchopebank

His seal shows a hawk killing a bird. Thomas (d.1389) Bailie for the lands of Queen Margaret, wife of David II in the Sheriffdom of Perth in 1368 and 1373. His name was listed as ‘Thome Valchope’ and ‘de Walchop’. He appears to have been Deputy Sheriff of Perth, and was given annuities in the 1380s. In 1380 he was auditor of accounts for Strathearn and had an annuity paid to him in the years 1381–88. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘de Wauchope’ is recorded in 1371 when he witnessed a charter relating to lands in the county of Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchopes. William (13th/14th C.) probably brother of John, who was granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. After the lands were lost to the Crown, on the death of his brother, he recovered them again in 1300. He petitioned the King sometime in the period 1300–07 to exchange his lands in Ireland for 20-pound lands in Jedforest, then yielding 34 marks yearly to the King. These were specifically the lands of ‘Wileys’ (probably Wolfelee) and ‘Rughope’ (Rouchhope), which would become the lands of Wauchope. The lands were bounded by lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, by William de Soulis and by Sir Alexander de Baliol. His request was because he was in the King’s service at the ‘conquest of Berwick’, at Dunbar, at Falkirk, at Melrose and at ‘many other journeys’. William (14th C.) Constable of Edinburgh in 1382.

Wauchopebank (waw-chup-bawngk) n. former name for lands lying to the west of Wauchope. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Templehall at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands are described in a bounding charter of 1567 (it is ‘Wauchopbank’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Wauchope Bank’ in 1541 and ‘Wauchap bank’ in 1604).

Wauchope Burn (waw-chup-burn) n. stream in the upper Rule valley. It rises on Wyndburnghill and Fanna Hill and flows in a northerly direction to join the Harwood Burn at Tythehouse – ‘The storm in the night had twisted the fern, And the rain had flooded the Wauchope Burn’ [WHO] (it appears twice on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, as ‘Wachop B’ and ‘Wachopp B’ and is ‘Wachoph B.’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Wauchope Cairn (waw-chup-karn) n. commemorative cairn erected at the site of old Wauchope House, using some of the house’s stones. It was erected in 1985 by local Burns Clubs to mark the visit of Robbie Burns visit to Wauchope House in 1787, the nearest he came to Hawick. It has been visited annually (in July) since it was built. A stone tablet in the ground by the cairn reads ‘F.S. + E.C. WAUCHOPE’.

Wauchope Castle (waw-chup-kaw-sul) n. ruined castle south-west of Langholm, on the Wauchope Water, formerly home of the Lindsay. It was once a very impressive fortress, built in the late 13th century and ruined by the late 16th.

Wauchope Common (waw-chup-ko-min) n. former name for part of the lands of Wauchope in upper Rulewater. In 1811 it is ‘those parts and portions of the Lands of Wauchope called Common’ on the Land Tax Rolls when it was part of the estate owned by Walter Scott of Wauchope. It may be the same as the place called Templehaa Common.

Wauchope Forest (waw-chup-for-rist) n. large commercial forest to the south-east of Hawick. It combines with Kielder Forest to form the Border Forest Park and was named after the area at the head of the Rule valley.

Wauchopeheid (waw-chup-heed) n. Wauchopehead, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish in the upper reaches of the Wauchope Burn. In 1404 it was granted to John Turnbull after being forfeited by John ‘Bour’. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s. It is recorded in 1562 in the document describing lands disputed by the Barons of Feurule. An account of Roxburghshire written in 1649 gives this area as the source of Rule Water. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘part of that called Hawkleytongues, or Waughope-head, now known by the name of the North-west division of the said Lands of Waughope’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Wauchoheid’ in 1404 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1538, ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1539 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1541).

Wauchope Hoose (waw-chup-hoos) n. former house at Wauchope. It was originally a tower, owned by the Wauchopes, then the Turnbulls and then the Scotts. The site of this old tower could still be made out in the early 20th century, with foundations of cottage nearby marking the former settlement. In 1694 the tax was paid on 3 hearths there by Walter Scott. The newer house was developed in the 18th century, and was famously visited by Burns in May 1787. His hostess was Mrs. Scott who was known as an artist and poet in her own right, writing the epistle ‘The guid-wife of...

Wauchope to Burns. The tumbler out of which Burns drank was long preserved by the family. There is a sketch of the house by Mrs. Macmillan Scott in 1848, and was still there in the 1890s when the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club visited.

Situated beside the public road, it was of the typical farmhouse construction, being of 2 1/2 storeys, with large, white-sashed windows, and two lateral wings of a single storey. The house was rebuilt in 1875/6 by Walter Macmillan-Scott, 6th Laird, to plans by Peddie, Kinmear & Co, built of red sandstone. It survived into the mid-20th century, but was torn down in 1936 after being purchased by a religious group, and most of the stones used to construct their college in St. Boswells. However, some of the stones were also used to build a cairn in the house’s location, which is visited annually by the Burns Club. The site now has some shingles-clad holiday cottages.

Wauchope Rig (waw-chup-rig) n. hill above Wauchope in the Rule valley, to the west of the main road between Wolfepoolee and Hyndlee. Part of the lands here were where the house was built; the 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Wauchope-rig, now known by the name of the House, or middle division of the Lands of Wughope’. An ancient earthwork situated, on the north-east spur, has been used as a quarry. It is said that some Roman coins were found there. The earthwork was probably a small settlement, and unlikely to be Roman; it is now within the forest. The sides of the Rig also have signs of old terracing.

Wauchope Waas (waw-chup-wawz) n. another name for Langhaugh Waas.

Wauchope Witter (waw-chup-wi’-ur) n. river that meets the Esk at Langholm. The valley is sometimes known as Wauchopedale; its history is wrapped up with that of the Wauchope family. It should not be confused with the Wauchope Burn, which flows through Wauchope Forest to meet the Rule Water (although the names may of course be historically related; it is ‘Wauchope fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Waucht (wawcht) n., poet. a draught of liquid, long drink, swig – ‘...Else headachs fierce, an’ pouches toom, Will make ye o’ repentance, Drink waughts next day’[JoHa], ‘A waucht o waeter’[ECS], ‘...an slokent ma drooth ... wui a lang waucht that garrd iz sich’[ECS], a draught, breeze – ‘Up! up yet higher on the slippery mount, Another waucht frae strengthening Helicon’[JoHa] (also written ‘waught’).

Wauch Witter (waw-ch witter)

The witnesses in 1714 were Bailies Walter Elliot and James Deans and in 1719 were merchant Robert Robson and Bailie James Deans. Andrew (18th C.) listed along with James as farmer at Broomebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He could be the Andrew who married Janet Elliot in Hawick in 1764, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Thomas (b.1765), Robert (b.1766), James (b.1768), Betty (b.1770), Walter (b.1772) and Adam (b.1775). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Robert (b.1766); James (b.1768); Betty (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); and Adam (b.1775). He may be the flesher whose son Walter’s death is recorded in 1799. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included: William (b.1779); Janet (b.1780); Andrew (b.1782); Violet (b.1786); Marjory (b.1787); unnamed (b.1789); and Helen (b.1791). Andrew (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism (along with Kirk Officer Thomas Miller) in 1786 for John Stewart. Andrew (19th C.) shepherd at Whitropefoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was still a shepherd at Whitropefoot on the 1801 ballot list. Andrew (1784–1836) probably father of Bailie Andrew, he was a clothier on the High Street, and one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in 1810. He was recorded as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. ‘Andrew & David’ were recorded as High Street tailors in 1837, probably referring to him and a son. His premises at around 38 High Street are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife may have been Janet (who was living there in 1841). Andrew (b.c.1785) music teacher in Denholm. His wife was Martha, and their children included Mary and Betty. Bailie Andrew (1813–85) tailor and clothier at 38 High Street. In 1841 he was there with his wife Euphemia and brothers William and Robert. In 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 apprentices. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was the last Senior Magistrate of the town in 1861. He presented a coin to the Museum in 1863. He was a long time manager of Allars Kirk and Treasurer for 26 years. He married Euphemia Kerr, and their children included: Euphemia (b.1842); Janet (b.1844); Mary Kerr (b.1846), who probably died young; Andrew (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); Thomas (b.1853); Robert (b.1855); and Georgina (b.1861). Andrew (b.1839) builder who lived on the Wolfelee estate at Blackcleugh Cottage and later at Wolfelee School Cottage. He was son of Thomas, mason at Denholm and his grandfather had been a music teacher who went from house to house. He is probably the journeyman mason recorded in 1861 at 61 High St., Hawick. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as a supporter of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He married Agnes Purdon at Bonchester farmhouse. Their children were: Mary, who was nurse at Weens and married Will Robson; Thomas Waugh, mason who married Agnes Goodfellow; John, mason who married Jane Moore; Janet, who married William Mackay; Agnes, who married James Renwick; Robert, who married Jane McQueen; Andrew; William, who emigrated to America; and Arthur Young. He became deaf later in life, but kept up his business as well as an association with the Jedforest Hounds until late in life. Andrew (d.1924) third generation clothier of the same name. He was a Trustee and Manager of Allars Kirk. He was known for being ambidextrous. He is probably the Andrew from Hawick who was a collector of local fossils. Andrew (19th/20th C.) barber in Hawick. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Hawick Home Mission. He served as President of the organisation at the times of its 40th, 50th and 70th anniversaries. Archibald (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Isabel Farquharson in 1756 and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. The death of his boarder is recorded in Hawick in 1777. David (15th C.) resident of Bedrule recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and weaver William White they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was ‘in Bedrule or in Hawick’ when he had further remission for several crimes, including: stealing 24 sheep from Thomas Scott of Bowerhouse; stealing 26 cows from James Pringle of Pilmuir; stealing 85 cows, 3 heifers, 13 horses and tools from John Borthwick of Crookston and his tenants; and for common theft before his previous remission. His sureties were the Laird of Bedrule and Robert Scott of Whitchester. His surname was given as ‘Walch’. Edward (16th C.) tenant in part of the farm of ‘Burwinyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. William and George were tenants of the other part and surely related. Evelyn Arthur St. John (1903–66) writer, born in London and educated at Oxford University, he was already a fairly established author when WWII broke out and he joined the Royal Marine Infantry Brigade, being their oldest recruit at age 36. He transferred to the Commandos, and saw some active service, but disputes with senior officers led to several other transfers, and him spending much of his time in training. This included a move to Hawick where he trained as part of ‘5RM’, in the latter part of 1941. His most famous novel ‘Brideshead Revisited’ was written while on medical leave (after breaking his leg in parachute training) in the first half of 1944. George (15th C.) mentioned as one of the witnesses to the sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is probably the same man as ‘Georgius Walch in hawic’ who was surety for John Liddersdale in Hawick, who was fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Additionally in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for: resetting John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, who had been declared a rebel for the murder of Archibald Rutherford; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauder; stealing 22 sheep from Thomas Scott in Bowerhouse; and common theft. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George (16th C.) tenant along with William in part of the farm of ‘Burwynyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with Thomas, as well as 2 Purdoms. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded in Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish in 1579. He was a witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579. Additionally in 1579/80 he was recorded in Crawknowe when he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. Perhaps the same George was recorded in Kirkhouses in 1580 when he was witness to a double marriage contract for the widow and daughter of the deceased Robert in Ashkirk (who was probably a relative). Perhaps he was the George in Blindhaugh recorded in 1580/1 as witness to a wadset between Andrew Davidson of Kames and Walter Turnbull of Bewlie. He was recorded in 1586/7 as ‘Geordie Vauch in Crawis Know’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. George (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as ‘George Vauch in Eidschaw’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He clearly resided at Headshaw, but it is possible his surname was Veitch rather than Waugh. George (17th C.) resident of the westside of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. George (18th/19th C.) recorded being ‘with James Inglis writer’ in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was recorded as having ‘Absconded And enlisted’, suggesting that he had joined the army. George (b.c.1780) servant to Walter Turnbull at Harwood Mill in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) recorded ‘of Schaw’ in 1724. His factor William (who was also Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirk) had a receipt from Selkirk for rent of a seat in the kirk there. He may have been related to Andrew of Shaw. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as servant to Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He was witness to a transaction done at Riddell, between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig. Isabel (17th/18th C.) recorded in Wilton Parish in 1705. She confessed in front of the Session that she was having the child of Walter, son of John Scott of Cockerheugh. She stood ‘in the publick plaiz of repentance’, probably for several Sundays, and then had to pay 10 groats into the poor box. The father, Walter, was fined £4 Scots, but there is no record of him sitting on the stool of repentance. Isabel (18th/19th C.) one of the Waughs of Luggage Hall. The death of her unnamed child is recorded in Hawick in 1808, with the notation ‘a Bastard …Luggage’. Isabella (18th C.) jailed in Edinburgh along with 3 men, for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant of part of Mervinslaw in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. His steadings was valued at 18s 9d. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘James Vauch’ in 1543 when he was one of the men who failed to appear to answer for helping Henry VIII’s men burn and sack Borthwickshiel and neighbouring areas. James (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as ‘James Vauch in Borthuikscheillie’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He clearly resided at Borthwickshiel, but it is possible his surname was Veitch rather than Waugh. James (16th/17th C.) grandson of John of Heap. In 1635/6 he was served heir to his grandfather’s 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. The name of his father is not recorded, but this could have been Robert of Heap, who is recorded in 1615 and 1616. James (17th C.) ‘officiar’ named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’, suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627. They were described as ‘fitter to be employed in his Majesteis service nor to be suffered to ly louttering at home’. However, when later produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. He presumably had worked as some kind of officer, perhaps a Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) resident of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish. In 1640, along with James Allan, he was accused by the Kirk Session of ‘sowing cloathes about some of their sheep’. Presumably this was a discretion on the Sabbath. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. He is recorded ‘in hassendan’ in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Janet Waugh in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Thomas Lockie and Thomas Caldwell. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1757); Robert (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Jane (b.1765); Sarah (b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 were shoemaker John Scott (probably related to his wife) and butcher Thomas (probably a close relative), in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1768 were Thomas, both senior and junior. He was probably also father of shoemaker Thomas. He could be the James, son of John and Helen Riddell, born in Wilton in 1722. It is possible he was the James who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Dodds and their children included Thomas (b.1771) and Elizabeth (b.1786). In 1786 he (or his wife perhaps) was recorded as ‘pauper’ in the baptismal record, with witnesses the whole congregation. It is possible he is the James, designated ‘Luggage Died suddenly’ in his 1804 death record. James (18th C.) listed along with Andrew as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in 1810. James (19th C.) Curator of the Archæological Society collection when located in the Buccleuch Memorial in the 1880s. James (1831–1905) son of Richard, a farmer in Jedburgh. He was a steeplechase jockey who became a trainer, working at Cessford Moor, then East Lothian, before moving to Berkshire and Newmarket, spending time in Poland and Hungary, before returning to Newmarket. In 1854 he married Isabella (d.1881), daughter of William Scott of Tamshielaugh in Southdean Parish. John (15th C.) witness to an instrument of 1454 relating to the lands of Burrell in the barony of Eckford. Information was given by Alexander Henderson ‘in tenement of John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic’. ‘John Walch, younger’ was also a witness, as well as Robert Scott. They are all described as Burgessess, presumably of Hawick. Probably the same ‘Johanne Walch’ is listed as a witness to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452, where he is ‘Johanne Walch’. And he is probably the John who witnessed the charter of 1453 relating to the first known sasine within the burgh of Hawick. In 1455 he is one of 4 Burgesses listed on a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, and is listed as a Burgess in a related document in 1456. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni Walch in bone jedworth’ (i.e. Bonjedward) at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. John Wilkinson in Nether Ancrum had remission for a crime against him. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes Walch’ at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for stealing a large number of sheep from the Murays in Sundhope and also for associating with the former Duke of Albany. His surety was Peter, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Wach’ as a witness to a charter of David Scott of Hassendean in 1510/11. He was probably related to the later John, tenant of Clerklands. Perhaps the same ‘Johannem Walch’ was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean in 1482. He may be the same ‘Johanne Walche’ who was notary among the witnesses for the charter of Over Newhall in 1484. John of Heap (16th C.) recorded in an agreement of 1534 preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He was ‘lord of Heip’ when along with his wife Elizabeth Ker they re-signed her claims to a third of Heap and Craigwood in Rulewater, for payment of 10 merks a year. The fact that this was done in Selkirk suggests that his wife was from there; Richard was a witness and probably related. He was surely connected to the other Waugh's of Heap. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Probably the same John was also holder of a particate of land on the north side. He may be a descendant of the earlier John in Hawick. John (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with Robert. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Waitche in Clerklandis’ (i.e. near Lilliesleaf) when he was witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden in 1559. The name ‘Waitche’ could also be the modern ‘Veitch’ or other possibilities. John (16th C.) tenant in Auld Jedburgh. In 1567 he was listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. John of Heap (16th/17th C.) owner of the lands of Easter Heap. In 1635/6 his grandson James was served as heir to his 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. John (17th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest, with his name recorded as ‘Wach’. He may have been descended from the much earlier Robert. John (17th C.) shepherd at Orchard according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier Waughis from Heap. John (17th C.) resident at Commonside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who (along with Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat in 1695. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Slaidhills in 1701 when he is recorded giving money to Hawick Parish after the burial of his son William. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Apple Tree Hall in 1725. He married Helen Riddell in 1719 and their children included: James (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); Bessie (b.1725); William (b.1736); and Thomas (b.1738). The witnesses in 1725 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Betty Laidlaw is recorded in 1799. His name could be an error for Robert (whose wife had the same name). John (18th/19th C.) Slater in the Hawick area. His unnamed child died in Hawick in 1798. John (b.1814) son of Thomas and Sarah Beattie. Like his father, he was a farmer at Burmoot, in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was recorded as cattle dealer at Under Burmoot. His wife was Isabella and they had children Margaret, Sarah, George, Janet and Mary Jane. John (1824–1904/5) son of Robert and Elizabeth Hindmarsh, he was born in Southdean Parish. He succeeded his father as blacksmith at Chesters. He was there for about 20 years, and then became tenant farmer at Highend (in Rulewater) for 32 years, while his nephew Elliot Murray succeeded as blacksmith at Chesters. He married Euphemia Turnbull at Roughlea. They had 2 children, Mary (1860–77) and Robert (1861–92), both of whom died at Highend, along with their mother. He moved to Kirknowe where he died. John (b.1868) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdon. He was born at Wolfelee Glen and became a Rulewater mason. In 1893 he married Jane, 5th daughter of James Moore and Jane Thomson, at Blacklee Brae. Their children included Jane Thomson, who was born at Swanshield. Margaret (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Mrs. Margaret (d.c.1716) left £60 for the benefit of the poor of Hawick Parish in 1716. Margaret (b.c.1810) recorded as a midwife at about 12 High Street on the 1841 census. She lived there with Mary and Margaret, who are probably her daughters. Philip (15th C.) recorded as ‘Philippo Walgh, perpetuo vicario de Sibbaldy’ in 1451, when he witnessed the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap. This was dated at Wilton Kirk. It is unclear where ‘Sibbaldy’ is. This is surely the same ‘domino Philippo Walch capellano’, who witnessed a charter in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1534 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John of Heap and his wife Elizabeth Ker. He was probably related to John. Richard (b.1830) from Lessuden, son of James and Margaret Mercer. He was also a descendant of the Weens family, who were shoemakers in Hawick. He became a successful businessman in Winnipeg. In 1904 he wrote a memoir of his early life, which contains some interesting anecdotes of the mid-19th century. Robert ‘de Hep’ (13th C.) entered in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal showed a star enclosed by a serpent. This is probably Heap. John ‘de Hep’ (his surname being effectively ‘Heap’ and so presumably not related) also signed, so they probably separately held the west and east parts of the lands of Heap. There were still Waughis associated with Heap about 400 years later. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw. In 1502 he had remissum, along with several Olivers from Jedburgh and Rulewater, for the murder of Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnifsader’ at ‘Kelshop’. His surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with John. Robert (d.bef. 1580) recorded being formerly ‘in Askirk’ in 1580 when his widow Elizabeth Elliot had a marriage contract with John Winthproe, and at the same time his daughter Janet with John Winthproe’s son Robert. He also had a son James, who was arranged to remain with his widow’s new family until he came of age. George in Crawknowe was a witness and hence

Robert (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in a sasine of 1615 for the lands of Easter Heap, following a charter by George Langlands of that Ilk. He is probably also the Robert Wauch of Hoip who was on the 1616 jury for the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, for sheep-stealing. He may have been son of John and father of James; certainly in 1635/6 James was served heir to the lands of his grandfather, John of Heap. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Jams (b.1641), Bessie (b.1646) and Walter (b.1648). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton and Cavers Parishes. He is recorded at Trow Mill in 1753 and Groundstone in 1759. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1748), Helen (b.1750), and John (b.1753), baptised in Cavers Parish; and Betty (b.1759), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Knox and Robert Scott. He is probably the man recorded as ‘John’ in 1799 when his wife Betty Laidlaw died in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He must have been closely related to the contemporary tailor Thomas. He is recorded as a tailor in 1799 when an unnamed daughter of his died in Hawick. He is probably the tailor and merchant Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1815 and the tailor Robert whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1819. He probably married Mary Paterson and had children Thomas (b.1805), Andrew (b.1807) and Mary (b.1809). Robert (1774–1859) blacksmith at Chesters. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hindmarsh at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was blacksmith at Chesters for 45 years, being succeeded by his son John and then John’s nephew Elliot Murray. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1815), who married Adam Sinton; Catherine (b.1817), who married Thomas Robson, blacksmith at Teviothead; Helen (b.1819), who married Robert Murray, farm steward at Dimplenet; William (1822–81), vet in Hawick; John (1824–1904), who was blacksmith at Chesters and at Highend; Mary (b.1827), who married John Kedie, master blacksmith at Heatherlie, Selkirk; and Robert (1830–59), who helped his father as blacksmith. Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick. In 1798 he acted as substitute for Robert Pringle (son of carrier Thomas Pringle), who had been balloted to serve in the Militia. Robert (1783/4–1827) shepherd at Whitehaugh Mains. He is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Craik, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Ewes Parish, he was tollkeeper at the New Toll Bar in Ewesdale in 1851. He married Mary Irving and their children included William and Janet. Rev. Robert minister of Denholm 1954–74, linked with Bedrule from 1963. Serg. ?? (18th/19th C.) recruiting sergeant for the Dumfries Militia. In 1809 he loaned his sash for use by the ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tully. He also tried to take the coach to Selkirk to find musicians in Selkirk for the rebel party, but was pushed off the coach at Pathhead, the guard having been paid off by the ‘royalist’ party. Stephen (d.c.1591) tenant in Wadeshill in 1571/2 when he was listed among men of the Southdean area for whom William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge. He was ‘in Wedeshill, par. of Sowden, sher. of Roxburgh’ when his will was recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1591. Thomas (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Purdoms. His name is given as ‘Thomas Waighe’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Marion (b.1633) and Margaret (b.1636). Thomas (17th C.) Hawick merchant who was persecuted for being a Covenanter. He was arrested in 1678 and brought before the Privy Council (along with William, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bowlie) for attending field conventicles throughout 1674–78. Margaret Barclay was arrested at the same time. The charges also included harbouring ousted ministers and guiding them to the locations of the meetings. He did not deny the charges and was condemned to be sold as a slave to the plantations. Although we know that his compatriot William Turnbull eventually returned to Hawick, there is no such information about what happened to him. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Waugh, whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1674. Thomas (d.bef. 1716) merchant of Hawick. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James Liddell and Mary Waugh (probably a relative) in Hawick in 1683. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto and in 1704 he witnessed a baptism for fellow-merchant Bailie George Martin. In 1716 his widow Margaret gave in a bond for £60 Scots (which she held with candlemaker George Turnbull) for the benefit of the poor of the Parish. He could be the Thomas who paid tax for 2 heartlys on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in 1684. He could be the Thomas who (along with John) witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat in 1695 and who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Wilson in Branxholme in 1696. Thomas (17th/18th C.) fleshers in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed baptisms for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); Thomas (b.1715); Agnes (b.1716); James (b.1718); and an unnamed son (b.1721). Witnesses in 1716 were fleshers John Tudhope and Thomas Wilson. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty or Margaret Clerk and their children included Thomas (1735), Walter (b.1739), James (b.1741), Andrew (b.1743) and Adam (b.1744). Thomas of Hawkburn (1717/8–1804) writer in Jedburgh, also referred to as being ‘of Hagburn’. In 1767 he served as Proctor for the Duke of Buccleuch in the perambulation of Hawick Common, carried as out as part of the court case over the division of the Common. He is probably the Thomas who gained some of Lanton Common when it was divided in 1769. His lands in Jedburgh Parish are listed in the 1788 draft valuation of the county, including parcels of land in Hawickgate; he also owned Hawkburn and other lands in Melrose Parish. In 1790 and 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his private description being ‘Rich, An only daughter married to Captain Ormiston, Jedburgh. Attentive to interest. Will probably go with Sir Gilbert Elliot’. He paid tax on servants and horses in the 1770s to 1790s. As a Justice of the Peace, he served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798 and 1799. Thomas (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism (along with fellow fleshers William Renwick) for cooper William Richardson. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James, who was probably a close relative. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for wright Gideon Easton and in 1767 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Thomas (who was probably his son). He is probably also the Thomas senior who, along with Thomas junior, in 1768 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James (perhaps his son). He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas and Betty Clerk, born in Hawick in 1735. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick Parish. He is probably the Thomas, junior, who (along with Thomas senior) witnessed a baptism in 1768 for shoemaker James (perhaps his brother). It thus seems clear that he was son of Thomas. He married Helen Lawson and their children included Margaret (b.1766), Walter (b.1767), Thomas (b.1769), Rachel (b.1771), an unnamed child (b.1774), Dorothy (b.1779) and Peter (b.1781). The witnesses in 1767 were butcher Thomas (probably his father) and carrier William Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Henderson in 1773 and had children William (b.1777) and Walter (b.1780). Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor of Hawick. In 1762 he married Helen Ferguson from Wilton Parish; he was already deceased in 1805 when she died. Their children included: John (b.1763); Isabel (b.1765); Robert (b.1767); Thomas (b.1769); and Alexander (b.1770). Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. During the 1767 flood he and John Oliver ‘got to the top of the kiln’, but then needed people to throw ropes to save them. He could be the Thomas whose son was one of 2 men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. He may have been father of shoemaker James. Thomas (b.1769) tailor in Hawick, son of Thomas. In 1799 he was listed as ‘Junior Taylor’ on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. Probably the same tailor was also listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801 (but in that case he must have been born a few years later than 1769). Thomas (d.1811) shoemaker, son of James. His death is recorded in Hawick. He may have been grandson of the earlier Thomas. Thomas (b.1779/80) farmer at Burnmouth in the south part of Castleton Parish. He may be the servant of that name who was listed at Larrieston on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was listed at Burnmouth among heads of households in 1835–41. He married Sarah Beattie. In 1841 he was also living with Robert (probably his brother), and Janet (either daughter of niece). In 1851 he was farming 45 arable acres and 355 acres of moorland, with 5 labourers. His son John was also a farmer at Burnmouth. He could be the drover of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) weaver in Hawick. It is said that during the procession to the election in Jedburgh in 1831 he walked by the coach of the popular candidate, Sir William Francis Elliott, and whenever the crowd became quiet would shout ‘Rend the Heavens with another cheer’. Thomas (19th C.) son of a music teacher, who went door to door. He became a mason at Denholm. He married Jessie Tait in 1833. Their children were Rachel, William, Andrew and Martha. Thomas (b.1866) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom, he was a mason in Rulewater. He married Agnes Goodfellow and their children included Emma (housemaid at Weens), Andrew (telegraph boy and gardener at Weens), Robert, James and William. Tib (18th C.) local character of the early 1700s century. Walter ‘Wattie’ (16th C.) merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He supplied ‘buttir, saip, and vthir necessaris’ and hence was clearly a merchant, probably from Hawick, given the other people with whom he is listed. His name is given as ‘Wattie Waucht’. Walter (16th C.) listed in 1579 in Clerklands among the debtors to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Heap in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashybank. He married Janet Douglas in Wilton in 1734. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: George (b.1734); Isabel (b.1736); Helen (b.1739); and Janet (b.1740). He was surely related to George, who was at Ashybank at the same time. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Service and their children included John (b.1771) and James (b.1774). He may be the ‘W. Waugh’ who is recorded in the Hawick Parish records (suggesting he was beadle or elder or similar). Walter (b.1818/9) from Hawick, in 1851 he was working as a servant at Cavers House. He was unmarried at that time. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. Thomas Walker was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1502. Along with John Glendinning, he had 4 cows stolen from him, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole having remission for the theft. William (16th C.) tenant along with George in part of the farm of ‘Burwynyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. His name was given first. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1592 as servant of ‘Abie’s Sandie’ Armstrong. They were complained about by Routledge of ‘Comecrocke’ for stealing his livestock. William (17th C.) wright in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. In 1699 he married Margaret Grieve, who is listed as ‘in Common…’ (possibly Commonside). In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for ‘Wester’ James Grieve in Commonside. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth ‘Goodbun’ and their son William was baptised in 1813. He may be the weaver of this name listed in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; he appears to be listed twice, with the annotation ‘Serving’ beside the second entry. In 1798 he is recorded as a weaver from Hawick who was acting as substitute in the Militia for William Clerk from Lochend. However, later in 1798 he was sworn into the Militia as substitute for Thomas Hall from ‘Mainholm’ in Castleton Parish. He was listed ‘Serving as Substitute’ in 1799, but with the entry crossed out. William (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick Parish, listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1797. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. It is unclear if he is the same as the other William on the 1797 ballot. William (1822–81) son of Robert, blacksmith at Chesters. He was a veterinary surgeon in Hawick and later in Stirling. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a blacksmith and veterinary surgeon on the High Street. He married Catherine Rutherford in 1848 and secondly married Margaret Jaffray. His son Robert Jaffray was Procuretor Fiscal (formerly also spelled ‘Wauch’ and ‘Wauche’, as well as ‘Walch’, ‘Walche’, ‘Walghk’ and ‘Waucht’; formerly it was easily confused, or perhaps the same as, Veitch).

waukriefe (wawk-rif, -rif) adj., poet. wakeful, sleepless – ‘...gif the Lord keepena the citie, the watcheman is waukriefe in vaine’ [HSR], ‘And waukriefe bodies that daurnt about The suburbs, out in the rain ...’ [TCh], ‘At nicht A’m waukriefe, an’ aft the lee-lang simmer’s day ...’ [WFC] (also wakerife).

the Waulk Mill (thw-wawlk-mil) n. name for the former mill at the Tower Knowe, which for a long time was the only major mill within the Burgh boundaries. It was purchased in 1815 by Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. for carding and spinning. Waldie, Elliot & Co., yarn spinners and manufacturers of stockings, are listed there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. By the mid-19th century it was the oldest factory building in Hawick. It was owned by Peter Wilson & Co. at the time of the 1846 flood, when it is reported that 3 wooden bridges were left there by the flood waters. It was purchased in 1850 by William Elliot, who had it pulled down and a new mill (the current building) built in 1851/2 at the same location.

Waulk Scott (wawlk-sk’o) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century, perhaps a Scott who worked in the Waulk Mill – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

Waverley Line

Waverley\textsuperscript{1} (w\-a-vur-lee) n. novel by Sir Walter Scott, published anonymously in 1814, it was Scott’s first foray into prose fiction, and hence is often regarded as the first historical novel. It is set around the time of the Jacobite uprising of 1745, with the main protagonist being an Englishman called Edward Waverley. Its name was later used for the whole set of Scott’s historical novels, and thereafter the name was given to various things, e.g. the main station in Edinburgh, the railway line running through Hawick, a pub on Hawick High Street and towns all over the world. The novel contains a reference to ‘the winder fair at Hawick’.

Waverley (w\-a-vur-lee) n. pen-name of Raymond Corbett, sports columnist for the Hawick News.

the Waverley (thu-w\-a-vur-lee) n. the Waverley Bar at 78 High Street.

Waverley Brig (w\-a-vur-lee-brig) n. new bridge across the Teviot at the end of Mart Street, built in 2000 to carry the main south-bound traffic on the A7, this being part of the ‘road traffic relief scheme’. It was the first major new bridge in Hawick since the construction of Slitrig Crescent Bridge in 1864.

Waverley Cottages (w\-a-vur-lee-ko’-ce-jeez) n. group of houses adjacent to Glebe Place in the Wellogate area, and named after Sir Walter Scott’s novels. The whole row of cottages was built by another Walter Scott, joiner from Ormiston Parkhead, and funded through Hawick Working Men’s Building Society.

the Waverley Express (thu-w\-a-vur-lee-eks-pres) n. principal express train that used to pass through Hawick between Edinburgh and London St. Pancras.

Waverley Hoosin (w\-a-vur-lee-hoo-sin) n. tenant-controlled company, which acts as landlord for low-cost housing in the Borders. It was founded in 1992 and owns and manages over 1700 properties, including many in Hawick. Their offices are at 27 North Bridge Street.

Waverley Hotel (w\-a-vur-lee-h\-o-tel) n. hotel and pub at 19 High Street in the latter part of the 19th century, later moving to No. 78.

the Waverley Line (thu-w\-a-vur-lee-lin) n. former railway line running between Edinburgh and Carlisle, built by the North British Railway. It was 98.25 miles in length and opened in 1862, following the completion of the Hawick-Edinburgh part in 1849. The name came from Sir Walter Scott’s series of novels. The operation of the railway was discontinued in 1969, when it was the first main-line closure in Britain. This closure event was quite contentious in the Borders at the time. Part of the line from reopened in 2015 as the Borders Railway, but only runs from Edinburgh to Tweedbank, stopping far short of Hawick. Books on the railway include: ‘The Waverley route’ (1985) by Neil Caplan; ‘The District Controller’s View, The Waverley route – Edinburgh-Hawick-Carlisle’ (2004) by J. Hodge; ‘Waverley route reflections’ (1983) and Main line to Hawick’ (1986) by Bill Peacock; ‘Waverley – Portrait of a famous route’ (1988) by Roger Siviter; ‘On the Waverley route’ (1995) and ‘The Waverley route: the postwar years’ (1999) by Robert Robotham; ‘Waverley Route: The Life, Death and Rebirth of the Borders Railway’ (2012) by David Spaven; and ‘The Waverley Route Through Time’ (2012) by Roy Perkins and Iain Macintosh – ‘Trains uffed and puffed For mony an ’eer But, i’ the end, the nation Decided (per yon Richard Marsh) Rail had nae de-destination: And now, Auld Jock and Auld ghost trains Share spectral assignation, – At Copshaw station!’ [DH].

Waverley Mills (w\-a-vur-lee-milz) n. 19th century woollen factory off Mansfield Road beyond Eastfield mills, near the gasworks. Tant & Anderson were there at the end of the 19th century and Macdonald & Gibb in the early 20th century. It may also have been associated with Porteous, Morrison & Shortreed, Ballantyne, Tait & Co. and Macdonald & Gibb. It is now the area of Eastfield Road.

the Waverley Pool (thu-w\-a-vur-lee-pool) n. swimming pool in the Leisure Centre, named after the Waverley Line on whose station the centre was built.

Waverley Terrace (w\-a-vur-lee-te-ris) n. street in the Wellogate, built in 1866 and named after the Waverley novels of Sir Walter Scott. It was the first street developed by the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company in what would become known as ‘the Terraces’. The upper houses were originally called Queensberry Place until 1882. In the mid-20th century it contained a fish and chip shop.

wax-kirnel (wawk\-kis-nul) n., arch. a build-up of wax in the ear (noted by E.C. Smith; also wax-kirnel).
'way (wāi) adv. away – 'I'll be hanged if aw can tell ee what change ee should get; gae 'way doon to Willie Hogg an' he'll merk it doon!' [RM] (see also g'way).

Wear (weer) n. Alan Cornet in 1995. In his Silver Jubilee year he married his Cornet’s Lass, Julie Hodgins. Bert (1943–2020) middle child of 5, he was raised at Oliver Park, attending Trinity and the High School. He was an apprentice joiner with Brydon’s before setting up his own business with his brother Mo in 1970. He also ran the Balmoral pub for a few years in the 1980s. In 1986 he was Acting Father to David Nuttall. He served as President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and the Ex-Cornets’ and Ex-Acting Fathers’ Association. He was also an Elder at Trinity Kirk and was also a Community Councillor. He married Jessie Ingles in 1965 and had children Lesley, Carol and Alan.

weather-gleam (we-thur-gleem) n., arch. twilights, specifically a band of clear sky visible at that time (also wather-gleam).

weathert (we-thur') adj. pp. weathered – ‘...College and Kirk and Schule uprear Waas that are sere and wehert’ [WL] (also written ‘wethert’).

Weatland Burn (wee'-lind-burn) n. stream that rises at Closses and flows between the end of the racecourse at the Moor and Whitchesters farm, into the Fenwick Burn. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common.

weavers (wee-vurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades or guilds in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were a very old incorporation, preceding the Burgh Records (i.e. existing from before 1638). In early records they were referred to as ‘webers’. In the 1640 Burgh Act it is described how the incorporation would call meetings, with members fined for not attending, and how no weaver should take work from someone who had not paid another weaver for earlier work. They are referred to in 1643 when each of the ‘websters’ was fined 12 shillings for breaking the rule of not reeling out yarn out of sight of the owner. In 1660 they fined someone for taking less money for weaving than the agreed rate. In 1683 the Bailies imprisoned all of them until they paid the fine of £20 Scots each for ‘working linen cloth narrower than an ell and two inches’, as confirmed by the Supreme Court; at that time there were stated to be 19 weavers. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. The incorporation was renewed in 1760 and they contributed money for the rebuilding of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1763. In 1836 there were 16 weavers in the incorporation, each paying 10 shillings admission fee. They were often prominent in local parades and celebrations, sometimes decked in white and scarlet ribbons – ‘Warpers and weavers all, We have celebrations, sometimes decked in white and scarlet’.

The front row of this gallery was reserved for use by the Magistrates until into the 20th century.

Weaver’s Moss (wee-vurz-mos) n. area between the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’ and the Ale Water, between Esdale Sike and Harehope Sike (it is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Weaver Will (wee-vur-wil) n. character mentioned in Arthur Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’, from whose whisky flask the riders take a drink at Haggishaa. There is no reason to doubt that this was a real person of the late 18th century, but his full name is not known.

webster (web-stur) n., arch. a weaver – ‘To the webstor for 15 ell and ½ of cours [perhaps ‘coms’] girding at 1s. 4d. the ell £1 8d.’ [BR], ‘Item, that the hale websters within the Bruch of Hawick and freedom thereof . . . ’ [BR1640] (also webster and webstur).

Webster (web-stur) n. George (1823/4–1880) born in Ceres, Fife, he was a teacher in Hawick. He was described as an assistant in the Parish School around 1860 and on the 1861 census was Burgh Schoolmaster and living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1862 he was described as mathematics teacher of the United Schools. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archæological Society, being elected as first Vice-President. He also gave the very first lecture at the Society, on 27th September 1856, the subject being ‘The Study of Archaeology’. He stated ‘The man, who gives a proportion of his time to the study of the relics of years that are gone, will become a wiser and it may be reasonably concluded a better member of the community’. He was also known locally as a poet. His poems ‘Give Me Again the Look of Love’, ‘Stanzas to the Teviot’, ‘The Moon is on the Waters’ and ‘Here’s to Hawick’s Bonnie Lasses!’ were included in ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). He married Mary Henderson Thomson, from Leven in Fife. Their children were: David John (b.1854); Elizabeth (b.1855); Peter M.; George Lawson (1858–1919); Barbara Lawson (1860–61); James Hay (1862–1927); Henry Darling (1865–86); Isabella Thomson (b.1866); Mary Georgina (1868–1940); Helen Linton (b.1870); and John Jaffray (b.1872). In the 1860s he left Hawick to become Parochial Schoolmaster in Dunbar and died at West Barns, Dunbar – ‘. . . Auld Dodds, his buirdly form I mind, And Webster’s smiling face’ [WL].

George (b.1824/5) from Brechin, he was a draper in Hawick. In 1851 he is listed as a journeyman draper, living with James R. Laing and his family at about 2 Howegate. The draper’s firm of Laing & Webster is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. It appears that the business expended and he moved to Australia. Later they split and George Webster & Co. failed in 1896. John (d.c.1784) said to have been buried at the Dimples ‘where three lairds’ lands meet’, because he was a suicide. He could be the John who married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1770 and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1770).

wecht (wecht) n., arch. weight – ‘The wecht gars the string hing strecht’.[?], ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntie gier with trone wecht, sall sell it agin in small with the ilk merchand that buys cuntie gier with trone wecht . . .’[BR1640], ‘George Scott was fined £10 for keeping false weights, viz. ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’’[JW1651], ‘She’s borne the awfu’ wecht o’ baith pestilence an’ sword’[JEDM], ‘It was a wee bit yin-sidit’, ‘hei was a teeny weede away’[Jean Elliot], ‘And there, alas! amongst the rest, The Flowers o’ Hawick were wed away’[AD], ‘Maist o’ th’ auld yins that used tae attend are a wede away’[HE1924] (also ‘wed’ and variants; the earliest version of Jean Elliot of Minto’s lyrics has ‘weede’).

Wedensdi (we-denz-di) n. Wednesday (also spelled ‘Wedensdii’).

the Wedensdi (thu-we-denz-di) n. name sometimes used to refer to the Wednesday of Common Riding week. There is a Chase in the morning, after which the Cornet takes the practice flag to the Moor and the Acting Father brings it back to the top of the Nipknowes before the riders return to town.

Wedoshiels (we-di-sheeldz) n. former name for lands in Lidesdale, transcribed as ‘Wedonscelis’ in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 14 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Wedoschiels’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinniburn), and valued at 14 shillings. It is probably situated near Mangerton, but could also be the same place as ‘Westshiels’.

wee (wee) adj. small, little – ‘gie’s a wee plate-fih’, ‘it was a wee bit yin-sidit’, ‘hei was a teeny weed-a’, ‘The bonnie wee gowan again decked the lea . . .’[JoHa], ‘We Wullie, the cowherd, sae hardy and crouse . . .’[JoHa], ‘For yet ane wee while, an’ the wicket sallna be . . .’[HSR], ‘. . . an’ the wee hills rejouissance on ilka syde’[HSR], ‘. . . weeger (wee-jur) n., arch. a wager – ‘Yibbles ei thoicht it was for a weeger’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘weeger’).

the Wee Green (thu-wee-green) n. the Little Green in Denholm, as distinct from the main or ‘Big Green’, being off the road towards Minto. This is part of the land managed by the Feuars. An auction mart took place here until the early 20th century, and then there was a market garden until the mid-1960s, when it was grassed over and the surrounding wall removed.

the Wee Haugh (thu-wee-hawf, -hawch) n. the Little Haugh, a triangle of land bordered by Teviot Crescent and the river, with many uses over the years: once the traditional burial-ground for horses; a public drying green; an impromptu sports ground for many generations of children; and now planted with shrubbery. It was the detached part of the Common lying on the east side of the Teviot, the area stretching from Ewen’s Court to ‘The Rock’ on old maps. In 1676 it was described as ‘a little Haugh on the south side of the Teviot, bounded by William Kerr and Bailie Turnbull’s garden dykes’. The area was rented soon after the Division of the Common, but later came back to public use. A report of 1836 states that it cost the Burgh £4 9s for ‘Footpath along the side of the Teviot to Littlehaugh’. Since at least the beginning of the 20th century a footpath has crossed the area from the bottom of Baker Street to the end of the riverside path leading to Laidlaw Terrace. At the end of the 20th century it was redeveloped, with the public toilets being removed and a playground located there – ‘To the Little Haugh fu’ sorry, While the horses neigh ‘Memento Mori’ [AB] (also known as the ‘Easter Common Haugh’ or ‘Lower Haugh’, and sometimes included in the ‘Under Haugh’, which was across the river).

Weens (weenz) n. estate just north of Bonchester, containing a mansion house that was converted to a nursing home. The estate was once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule and formerly an important part of Hobkirk Parish, being recorded before the Reformation. The lands were owned by the family of Weens of that Ilk in the 15th century and Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was recorded in 1502. George Turnbull ‘in le wyndis’ was also recorded in 1502. The town was burned by the Armstrongs in 1544. It could be the place transcribed as ‘the Wens’ where James Brown was recorded in 1586/7. There were Turnbull Lairds there from at least the early 16th century and it was sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott (brother of Walter in Allammouth) in 1606. In 1643 it was part of the lands in Hobkirk Parish owned by Lord Balmerino. Andrew Scott was there in about 1663 and John Scott in 1678, when it was valued at £200. John Scott was there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 3 hearths. James Oliver was tenant in 1738. The Scotts held the estate until 1744 when John Scott sold it to John Armstrong in Brieryhill. His executors sold it to Adam Cleghorn in 1760, and it passed quickly to David Cleghorn, William Sharp and then William Oliver of Dinlabyre, who built the current house about 1775 (the wood used being the finest Baltic timber, carried by wagon from Berwick). Henry Hall was herd there in 1752. Robert Renwick was living there in 1799. In 1793 Oliver sold it to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie, then it was sold to Adm. Thomas Pringle in 1796. James Crinklaw was a servant to Admiral Pringle there in 1801. In 1804 the estate was bought by Thomas Cleghorn, who quickly added Town-o-Rule and Hallrule Mill; his descendants renovated the house in the mid-19th and early-20th centuries. In 1788 (and still in 1811) the farm was valued at £200. In the mid-19th century the estate consisted of Nether Bonchester, Weensmoor, Town-o-Rule, and Hallrule and covered about 800 acres. A red sandstone doorway from the old house has been set into a wall of the kitchen garden, where there is also an old sundial. It was also said that an old baptismal font stone in the garden here was from Hobkirk Kirk – ‘Most justly, too, they earn his praises, Those loftier hills and glorious scenes; Yet more I love the humble daiesies That grow around my home at Weens’ [FMC] (the mansion is also referred to as ‘Weens Hoose’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and variants; sometimes also formerly ‘the Weens’; it is ‘Wyndis’ in 1502, ‘Weynis’ and ‘Weinnis’ in 1562, ‘Weynds’ in 1606, ‘Wayns’ in 1652, ‘Wen- nies’ in 1653, ‘the Weyns’ in 1654, ‘weimes’ in 1663, ‘weimes’ in 1678, ‘Weins’ in 1684 and 1727 and ‘Weems’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Wyndys’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Wynds’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Weemys’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Weens (weenz) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, located between Commonside and Dryden, presumably on the Weens Sike. It is probably recorded as ‘the Weynis’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish, when it paid ‘40 merks,
Weens

8 merk in teynd’ (marked as ‘Wyind’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Weens (weenz) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1437 as ‘Alexander of the Weyndis’, when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the superior, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was probably the lands later known as Weensland. His ‘procurators’ were James of ‘Paiblis’ of that Ilk and George of ‘Pringil’. It is unclear if he was connected with the family of ‘Wemys of that Ilk’, based in Fife. Alexander of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wyndis de eodem’ in 1502 when he was convicted of the ‘forethought felony’ done to ‘Philip Faula’ on St. Mary’s Day while he was riding to Branxholme. His surety was Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, who was fined £10 for his non-appearance at the court in Jedburgh. It is unclear precisely what the crime was. Also in 1502 he was fined for failing to enter John ‘ruffy’ at the Justice-aire, this man being charged with murdering 2 Jacksons; his surety was the Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was probably owner of the estate of Weens in the Rule valley and descendant of the earlier Alexander of Weens. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick. In 1582 he warned Alan Deans to appear at Hawick Kirk to receive redemption money of £160 for an annual rent on his 4 mearks in Hawick and £30 for Weens Croft. His surname is written ‘Weyndis’ and Robert was also a witness (and hence surely related). Perhaps the same man was ‘Sandie Wemys in Hawik’ recorded in 1589 when David Dundas ‘of Preistisinche’ accused him, along with Robert Elliot in Borthwickbrae, Robert Fraser younger of Overton and Andrew Armstrong of resetting 2 horses stolen from him; not appearing to answer the charges, they were denounced as rebels. Alexander (17th/18th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He could be the ‘Sanders Weins’ recorded in 1676 among several Hawick people found guilty of using insufficient weights; specifically he was found to have a ‘half-pecke about half ane inch short’. Alexander (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: James (b.1709); William (b.1711); Walter (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Alexander (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); William (b.1721); and John (b.1723). The witnesses in 1709 were weaver David Miller and shoemaker Robert Elliot, in 1711 were merchant William Oliver and Bailie Robert Brown, in 1713 were carriers James Richardson and James Aitken, and in 1721 were cooper John Aitken and ‘tenant’ James Richardson. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Alexander (b.1759). He may be the Alexander whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1781. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1772); George and John (b.1774); Isabel (b.1778); an unnamed child (b.1780); and John (again, b.1784). The witnesses in 1772 were George Scott (probably related to his wife) and Alexander Bunyan. The witnesses in 1774 were George and John Scott (surely related to his wife), who the children were probably named after. Alexander (d.1794) tailor from Hull whose death is recorded in Hawick. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1808) cobbler who was son of Tam and younger brother of Jock, with shop on the Kirkstile. They are listed at ‘Silver Street Head’ on the 1841 census – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI]. Ebenezer ‘Eben’ (b.c.1790) woollen spinner, living at the Maltsteep in Wilton. He was part of the party of Hawick men who took part in the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815, perhaps being the man who scored the first ‘hail’. As the band came back to Hawick he triumphantly carried the Yarrow banner, which had been stolen from the field. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was recorded at Malt Steep among heads of households in 1835 and 1840. He married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1819 and their children included: Mary (b.1824); David Stevenson (b.1826), who married Ganes Duncan; Jane (b.1830); Esther (b.1833); and Alexander (b.1833). By 1851 his wife was a widow living on the Cross Wynd. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) from Hawick, she was sister of shoemaker ‘Tam’. In about the 1750s she was hired as a girl on a farm in Liddesdale, her wages being half-a-crown, a pair of clogs, and all the wool she could gather off bushes. When she died she left her niece 40 gold sovereigns. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) wife of Robert Crawford. She was found guilty of stealing a shirt in 1792, but absolved of blame later. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Baptie and their children included Alexander (b.1795). James (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He witnessed a baptism for carrier William Aitken in 1685. He is listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4.
He is also probably the James ‘weins’ listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he was fined for selling oatmeal at higher than the set price. He witnessed a baptism for tailor James Cowan in 1703. He is recorded in 1706 regarding his appointment the previous year to collect some of the ‘stent’ imposed on the Burgesses to pay for putting lead on the steeple of St. Mary’s. He could have been the James born to Alexander and Elspeth ‘Corsall’ in Hawick in 1648. He could be the James, married to Janet Aitkin, whose children included Alexander (b.1685) and Janet (b.1687). Other children may have been James (b.1690) and Walter (b.1693), with no mother’s name given. James (18th C.) weaver of Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for John Stoddart. He married Mary Hart and their children included: Janet (b.1718); John (b.1720); Margaret (b.1724); Walter (b.1725); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were shoemaker John Scott and William Riddell, in 1725 were merchant Andrew Turnbull and John Scott, Beadle, and in 1730 were John Turnbull and Bailie Graham. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in 1722. James (18th C.) tenant in Weens. His son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who may be his include Marion (b.1732), Margaret (b.1735), Samuel (b.1749) and Janet (b.1751). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1776 he married Isabel Beattie, who was from Wilton. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Davidson and their children included James (b.1811). John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1721); James (again, b.1722); Janet (b.1723); Helen (b.1726); Walter (b.1730); Alexander (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (b.1741). The witnesses in 1723 were innkeeper Francis Gledstains and shoemaker John Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Napier and their children included Janet (b.1759), with the whole congregation as witnesses. John (d.bef. 1801) weaver from Hawick. His son James died in 1801. He could also be the John whose son Walter died in 1809; this child was also recorded as grandchild to ‘John Scott mill’ (possibly miller), suggesting that he was related to the Scotts. John (d.1835) shoemaker in Hawick, whose death is recorded in the Parish Records. He was surely related to ‘Jock’ and ‘Sandy’, perhaps their uncle. Probably the same shoemaker John married ‘Luke’ Henderson and had children Jane (b.1781), Betty (b.1783) and Walter (b.1786). The witnesses in 1786 were shoemaker George Gardner and Church Officer Thomas Miller. John ‘Jock’ (1784–1866) elder brother of Sandy and son of Tam, the family were cobbler who lived at the head of Silver Street, with a shop on the Kirkstile. They were known for their outspokenness and resistance to change, and their motto was ‘ready money for cobblin’’. He is recorded as ‘John Wemyss’ in Silver Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed with his brother Alexander, as well as Margaret, who was probably his daughter. He appears to have been married to Mary Fachney and their children included: Alexander (b.1810) and Margaret (b.1813). Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a peck that was ‘ane double gill short of the ordinar gadg of the town’. Perhaps the same Margaret was the resident of Hawick ‘eist the water’, who paid the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She was probably an innkeeper or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (16th C.) recorded in ‘Mostoure’ in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), with his name recorded as ‘Wemyss’. He could be the son of Thomas born in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their children included Elizabeth (b.1739). Thomas ‘Tam’ (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, sister of Betty. In 1780 he had a precept in Selkirk with John Haldane. He married Margaret Aitkin in 1759 and their children included: Thomas (b.1760), probably the father of shoemakers Jock and Sandy; Robert (b.1761); Walter (b.1765); William (b.1768); and Jane (b.1770). The witnesses in 1765 were shoemakers William and Andrew Scott. It is said (by Richard Waugh, a later relative) that he had 6 sons, all of whom fought at Waterloo, with only 1 surviving (however, this seems a little late, and so may be confusion with other family members). His wife’s ‘muckle press’ was carried away from their house by the great flood of 1767, and he found it 15 miles down the Teviot, with the clothing inside hardly Weens Cottages

Weens Croft

Weens Cottage (weenz-ko-ee-jeez) n. cottages on the left hand side of the B6357 just outside Bonchester and before coming to the old entrance road to Weens House.

Weens Croft (weenz-kroft) n. former name for a croft of land near Hawick. In 1582 it was wadset from Alexander Weens to Alan Deans, with Weens warning Deans to accept payment of the redemption money of £30. Perhaps these lands were in Weensland.

Weens Cottage (weenz-ko-ee-jeez) n. cottages on the left hand side of the B6357 just outside Bonchester and before coming to the old entrance road to Weens House.

Weens Croft (weenz-kroft) n. former name for a croft of land near Hawick. In 1582 it was wadset from Alexander Weens to Alan Deans, with Weens warning Deans to accept payment of the redemption money of £30. Perhaps these lands were in Weensland.

the Weenses (thu-ween-zeez) n. well-known Hawick shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries, attending local fairs and markets throughout the Borders. Jock and Sandy were probably the last of this cobbling line (also called ‘Weenses’).

Weensforth (weenz-forth) n. purported tweed factory in Hawick, the name being used by conman John Graham Henderson in the late 19th century.

Weensgate (weenz-ga’) n. electoral ward in the town, being approximately the combination of Weensland and Wellogate districts.

Weensgate Drive (weenz-ga’-driv) n. housing development built in 1964 off Weensland Road and named because of its proximity to Weensland and the Wellogate, and from being in the Weensgate Ward.

Weens Haugh (weenz-hawgh) n. former name for land near Weens, farmed by the tenant of Gatehousecote. 28 sheep were lost from there in the flood of 1846.

Weens Hoose (weenz-hoos) n. mansion house just north of Bonchester, now used as a nursing home. It was built about 1775 for William Oliver of Dinlabyre, in red sandstone with 18th century wrought-iron gates. The previous house, dating from perhaps the early 17th century, was demolished in 1774, although some parts were built into the new one: it stood about a hundred yards to the east, with a former doorway later being used as a garden entrance. The new house can be seen shortly after it was built in a sketch of 1804. It was the home of George Cleghorn in the mid-19th century and was substantially renovated in the early years of the 20th century by George Tancred. A plaque was unveiled there in memory of George Tancred in 1981. The Cornet’s party traditionally visit the nursing home during the Bonchester Ride-out. It has been suggested that the location of the original peel house was one of 2 circular earthworks near the old main drive to the current house, but there is no evidence for this; Tancred suggests it was ‘on the top of the bank above the garden walk not far from old Weens loaming’ and that foundation stones had been dug up there occasionally.

Weensland (weenz-liind) n. area around Weensland Road on the flat land south of the Teviot in the eastern part of town. ‘Weens’ is probably a corruption of ‘Wyndis’, who may have been an early the owner of the land (like Weens in Rulewater, perhaps even being related to the same...

family). The lands probably once covered an extensive area; in a 1718 survey of the lands belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch it appears to extend down the east side of the Burgh boundaries. In 1437 Alexander ‘de le Weyndis’ resigned the lands of ‘Weyndis’ (in the Barony of Hawick) into the hands of the Baron, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were among those lands held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, when confirmed to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511 and when inherited along with the Barony by James Douglas in 1572. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In 1627 it is described as consisting of 3 husbandlands, yielding 12 bolls in stock and 3 in teind. William Scott of Horsleyhill was granted part of the land in 1653 by James, Earl of Queensberry, described as a ‘four merk land’; it remained in that family until about 1772. Some of it may be the land of ‘weemen’ valued at about £133 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (among the Earl of Queensberry’s rents). Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was owner in 1678, when ‘Weinesland’ was valued at £264. George Armstrong was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. In the early 18th century, the tenants of the lands there paid the Hawick Town Herd to have their sheep under his care, along with the Town’s animals. Another place of the same name near Harden (in the lower Borthwick valley), sometimes with the prefix ‘Wester’ is mentioned in the 16th and 17th centuries, suggesting this was once owned by the same family. William Scott was living there in 1696. James Henderson was tenant there in 1709. The Douglasses of Cavers owned the superiority of part of it in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. By 1788 parts of the lands were held by John Hardie (valued at £36 5s 8d), Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick (valued at £35 18s 7d), James Dickson (valued at £19 13s 7d), William Dickson of Orchard (valued at £47 8s 4d, previously owned by William Irvine and valued at £41, previously owned by Adam Ormiston), Archibald Dickson (valued at £38 5s 6d), William Irvine (valued at £18 1s 8d), and George Douglas of Cavers (the part called Haughhead, valued at £27 6s 8d). In 1811 the parts were listed being the same, but Robert Scott had purchased the parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston (valued at £64 8s 10d) and Andrew Porteous purchased part from Robert Scott (valued at £23 19s 6d). The name was later specifically applied to some of the first houses built there, also known as ‘Weensland Cottages’. It grew as a residential area as a result of the growth of mills alongside the Teviot, and until the early 20th century was an isolated village and mill. The rows of houses there were called Weensland Place, Heronhill Terrace, Teviot Row and Weensland Terrace, almost all of which have been demolished and the street names lost. Oliver Park in the Weensland area, was the first council housing development in town in 1922. When the old Trinity School was demolished in 1955 more council houses were built on the site, and there was further housing built at the far end in the 1980s. The road through the area, skirting the south bank of the Teviot, has been the main route from Hawick to Denholm and Jedburgh since time immemorial. But the connection to the Carter Bar, via Haughhead, Deanbrae, Kirkton and Bonchester was only laid out around the 1830s. A bronze socketed spearhead found in the river here is in the Museum. James Jardine published the article ‘Weensland: Past and Present, and the Old Corn Mills of the District’ in 1896 (the first record of the name is as ‘terras meas de le Weyndis’ in 1437, then ‘Weyndis Landis’ in 1511; it is ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1572, ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1615, ‘Weynslands’ in 1627, ‘Weyneslands’ in 1654/5, ‘weimes land’ in 1678, ‘weinsland’ in 1694, ‘Weinsland’ in 1762 and ‘Wiensland’ in 1764).

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. former name for an area in the Teviot or Borthwick valleys, perhaps near Harden and Whames. It is listed in 1594 as ‘Weyndslands’ among lands to the south and west of Hawick for which the Baron of Hawick was superior. There are several writs for 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers for ‘Weynslands called Wester Weyndis, and Quhalmes, in barony of Hawick, regality of Drumlanrig, sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. The 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch lists ‘the lands of Windlands, commonly called Wester Winds’, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside. There is also in 1686 a privilege listed of ‘free chappell and chancellary within the bounds of the said lands of Windslands and Whalms’ for the Baron, perhaps suggesting a connection with the former chapel at Chapeldhill. Presumably there is a connection, at least through former ownership, with the Weensland within Hawick (see also Wester Winds).

Weensland Cauld (weenz-lind-kawld) n. weir near Weensland Mill, first dammed around 1839 to supply water through the mill lade to drive the mill machinery – ‘As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o’bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school’ [JCG].

Weensland Cottages (weenz-lind-ko’-ee-jeez) n. housing built around 1836, also known just as ‘Weensland’ at the time, and renamed Weensland Place in 1875, only to be demolished about 1960. It may also have been referred to as ‘Weensland Village’ in the 1861 census. It is marked ‘Weensland Cottage’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Weensland Haugh (weenz-lind-hawch) n. former name for the flat land near the Teviot in Weensland. There is a plan of the area in 1825 in the Douglas of Cavers papers.

Weensland Mill (weenz-lind-nil) n. in the 18th and early 19th centuries this was the name of a corn mill in the Weensland area, between the main road and the river. James Stot was miller there in 1723. James Scott was living there in 1729. Wright David McDougall and John Scott were living there in 1797. It was still active when John Shiel was listed as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. The name was later used for 2 woollen mills, built in the same area by Walter Wilson & Sons, beginning in 1835. The Corn Mill was purchased from Douglas of Cavers at this time, jointly by William Wilson & Sons and John Oliver & Sons (who quickly got out of woollen manufacturing). The erection of the new Weensland Mill led to the construction of a much more substantial mill lade a few years later, and a hamlet of workers’ cottages developing nearby. The original equipment consisted of ‘four sets of Carding Engines, 60 inch Scribblers, and 42 inch Carders with placing machines attached’. Fire destroyed much of the mill in 1852, but it was rebuilt by 1858. The mill had a 20 foot diameter water wheel, made by Melrose’s. In the late 19th century it was the name given to the premises of Wilson & Armstrong’s, before 1876, when they reconstituted as Wilson & Glenny’s. Wilson & Armstrong’s made tweed and blankets there. It later housed several companies, including the Weensland Spinning Co., and Sime & Williamson. By 1888 there were 3 separate tweed companies operating in Weensland, George McLeod & Son (which only lasted a year), Scoon & Barrie and the Weensland Spinning Company, and the name ‘Weensland Mill’ or ‘Weensland Mills’ was applied to all of them. The name also came to include the adjacent ‘Atheenic Mills’. The oldest part of the structure was 4 storeys high and built of whinstone, and the mill was partly destroyed in a fire in 1999. The structure had a mixture of mainly 19th century styles, including an unusual cupola with open colonnade and ogee roof. It was acquired by the Scottish Development Agency, partly demolished and developed since 1991. The main surviving part was once a spinning mill, but converted more recently into the offices and store for the Weensland Spinning Company, and now a function suite. It is 2 storeys high with a loft space, having 8 bays and a rectangular plan, built in the mid-19th century. The building is listed as category C – ‘Upon a night when all was dark and still, Rank and file they march’d by Weensland mill’ [MP] (also sometimes ‘Weensland Mills’; it is ‘Weensland milne’ in 1717).

Weensland Place (weenz-lind-plis) n. original name for Weensland Terrace and new name for Weensland Cottages in 1875, but the houses were demolished about 1960 and the street name lost.

Weensland Road (weenz-lind-röd) n. main road leading out of town to the north-east, named because it was the road to Wyndis or Weens land. There was once a grocer’s shop, R. Main at the corner of the entrance to Heronhill House and another, Peggy Paterson’s at No. 178. The old Trinity School was demolished and new houses built in 1955, when the whole street was renumbered and Eskdaill Bank incorporated into Weensland Road.

Weensland Row (weenz-lind-rö) n. a lost street, built in 1866, renamed Heronhill Terrace and demolished in 1966.

Weensland Slated Hoose (weenz-lind-slâ’-eed-hoos) n. former name for a house in Weensland, possibly the same as Ivybank. It was used as an address on the 1841 census.

Weensland Spinnin Company (weenz-lind-spi-nin-cum-pi-nee) n. tweed manufacturers based at Weensland Mills from the late 19th century and finally closing in the 1990s. Most of the structure was badly damaged in a fire in 1999. The surviving part was converted into a function suite, containing the restaurant Spinners.

Weensland Terrace (weenz-lind-te-ris) n. housing built in 1864, originally named Weensland Place, then for a time Alexander Terrace, becoming Weensland Terrace in 1885. The tenement block at the western end was demolished in 1978.

Weensmuir

and Town-o-Rule. It is also known as ‘Weensmuir’. In 1745 one of the cottages was occupied by the Sclater family, and it is said that the Highlanders stopped at the farm on their march to England, when only the children were at home. The Barry family were also there in 1748. Thomas Oliver was there in 1774 and weaver George Craw in 1776. James Laidlaw lived there from at least 1780. The old, thatched, clay-built cottage there was torn down in the late 19th century and the foundations showed that there had previously been 2 houses there. The separate farm stealing was renovated in 1841 and still survives. A spring there flows into the clouch on Toon-o-Rule farm to join the Rule Water. Robert Dickson was farmer there in the 1860s and Robert Turnbull in the early 1900s (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Weens Place (weenz-plis) n. short street in Bonchester.

Weens Sike (weenz-sik) n. small stream running in an easterly direction to join the Teviot between Commonsie and Colterscleuch. It gave its name to the lands of Wester Weens, which were attached to the farm of Commonside.

Weenswud (weenz-wud) n. former name for a wood near Weens in the Rule valley. It is recorded as ‘the Weyniswode’ in 1562 in the document regarding the Baronial dispute over lands in Fowl Rules (i.e. Hobkirk Parish).

weepers (wee-pruz) n., pl., arch. bands of fabric worn on the sleeves as a mark of mourning. Locally such bands of light linen fabric were stiched on the sleeves of male relatives and worn for 2 or 3 weeks – ‘Male relatives wore ‘weepers’, a narrow band of lawn stiched on the cuffs of the coat’ [V&M].

weer (weer) v. to wear – ‘what on earth er ee weerin the day?’, ‘if the shoe fits, weet eet’, ‘ee’re no gaun oot weerin that, ir ee?’, ‘...and that’s because hei was juist a boy and hei’s depicted weerin his fither’s breast-plate ...’ [IWL], ‘...The wud hei weers like a croon’ [DH], ‘...For A weer Nick Faldo jerseys Frae the Pringle factory’ [IWL], ‘Hard-weenin worset thredis for wairp ...’ [WL], ‘...Tae weer the Cornet’s livery’ [MB] (sometimes spelled ‘weir’; as well as the usual English forms, the past tense can be wuir and the past participle wurn).

weer (weer) v., poet. to proceed slowly, walk quietly – ‘The mither tongue grows dearer now, When wearin’ doon the brae; The aged heart the closer clings To youth’s unclouded day’ [JT] (also spelled ‘wear’).

the Wee Thea (thu-wee-thee) n. the Hawick Picture Theatre, also known as ‘the Theatre’, a picture-house in Croft Road, converted from the Temperance Hall, and showing films from the early 1900s. J.P. Alison was responsible for designs for renovations in 1901. Adam Grant was the managing director in the early days. It was renamed the ‘New Theatre Picture Palace’ in 1913, when there is an existing picture (with another of 1914 showing the audience). Mrs. Pankhurst, the suffragette, spoke here in 1913. The interior had 3 levels, the stalls, dress circle and gallery, or ‘the Gods’, with plush red seats and plaster gilt crowns around the front of the gallery. It was destroyed by fire in 1955, and the site rebuilt in 1961/2 as the Salvation Army Citadel.
wee-winkies (see weir) n., pl., arch. popular name for the gas lamps introduced to Hawick streets in 1813. They used train oil and were lit nightly in the winter months. They were replaced by gas lamps about 1833.

Patrick Hardie. He was clerk involved with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. In 1743 he witnessed baptism for late Bailie Depute Walter Scott, mason Andrew Wilson, Bailie Gideon Ruecastle, ‘messanger’ William Wilson and Walter Scott of Newton. He may have been the ardent Jacobite supporter who entertained a group of officers while in Hawick in 1745, and refused to take the oaths of Government in 1746, another lawyer being allowed to take the oaths as proxy. He was probably the man mentioned in 1757 when the Burgh ‘paid in Mr Weir’s for gilt paper &c., when writing to the Countess anent the minister’. He witnessed a baptism for skin-ner Thomas Turnbull in 1758 and another for skin-ner Thomas Turnbull in 1759. The Clerk is still referred to in the Town Treasurer’s books of 1761, and in 1763 it is recorded that money was spent ‘by bailies and council electing clerk, vacant by Mr Weir’s death’. James Wilson suggests that he died in 1762. His wife was Christian Watson. Their children included: Anne (b.1738), who may have married John Gedstains; Thomas (b.1739); Mary (b.1741); John (b.1743); Thomas (b.1746); James (b.1747); Thomas (b.1756); and John (b.1757). The 1738 baptism was witnessed by William Ogilvie of Hoscote and Bailie John Scott, the 1743 one by Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and ex-Bailie Robert Boyd, the 1745 one by ex-Bailies John Scott and Gideon Ruecastle and the 1757 one by Bailies John Scott and Charles Tudhope. James, junior (d.c.1770) Town Clerk for a very brief time, perhaps as short as 1 month or as long as 1768–70. He took over after John Gedstains (probably his brother-in-law) refused to take the oaths of Government. He was presumably son of the previous Town Clerk. James Wilson says that he was elected as Town Clerk in October 1768 and died a month later. In April of that year he was witness to a baptism for writer John Gedstains. John (18th C.) recording being in Ashkirk Parish in 1794 when his marriage to Isabel Henderson was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Ballantyne as cautioner. Patrick (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He married Agnes (or Ann) Easton. Their children were baptised in Wilton (with the first also recorded in Hawick), including: Mary (b.1744); Margaret (b.1748); George (b.1750); Adam (b.1752); George (again, b.1754); and Mary (again, b.1762). The witnesses in 1744 were Robert Wilson, Schoolmaster of Wilton, and thatcher Francis Allan. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1795, 1797, 1798 and 1801 for James Scott and Elizabeth Scott. James Scott’s mother was Christian, who may have been his sister. He could be the son of Andrew baptised in Hawick in 1772. Rev. Samuel minister of Robertson Kirk 1960–65. Walter (19th/20th C.) employee of Innes, Henderson & Co., he served as Clerk of the Deacon’s Court at St. George’s Kirk around the 1920s. Rev. William (d.1651) nephew of John, an indweller in Edinburgh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1606. He was presented to Southdean in late 1609 and ordained there in early 1610. He was translated to Hobkirk in 1626. In 1630 he had a sasine of the lands of Appotside and Tythhouse, granted by Francis Hamilton, his brother-in-law, as well as gift of ‘non-entry’ of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1630 he was also involved in a ‘wadset’ for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside by Edward Lorraine, the lands being resigned by Lorraine the following year, but used in another ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliott in 1632. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His children included James (who witnessed local documents in 1648 and 1649 and may have been the Schoolmaster), Margaret (who married Thomas Wilson from Dryburgh) and William (who became minister at Linlithgow). James (the eldest son) and William (the 2nd son) were both mentioned in a discharge of 1657 relating to repayment of money spent repairing the Manse at Hobkirk. He was buried in the west corner of the churchyard, where a flat stone bore the inscription ‘I HAVE FIN(ISH)ED MY COVR(SE), MWM, 1651’. A grandson of his, William, received charity from the Presbytery of Kelso in 1663. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1752 he married Christian Telfer and their children included Helen (b.1758) (also written ‘Wear’ and ‘Weer’).

weird (weerd) n., poet. fate, destiny, doom, a fateful being or story – ‘And I a woeful weird maun dree, And mourn the love I canna rue’ [JTe], ‘...for I sall nevir be in wanluck weird’ [HSR], ‘...I dree my weird, an’ I maun leave thee’ [JS], ‘Syne in the mind’s cauld oothoose, His weird, the Christ maun dree’ [WL], ‘...Stirrin, whiles, in nichtmares o auld hen-weirds – Squatterin wi a thrown neck ...’ [DH], adj., arch. relating to destiny – ‘Then oot spak the dread weird wyf, wi’ stern prophetic e’e: – ‘Curse, curse, on bloody Cavers hoose, An’ a’ her progeny’’ [T].

Weisz (wɪs) n. Otto (d.1994) Pringle’s designer, credited with creating the cashmere ‘twin-set’ around the 1940s, popularised by actresses such as Jean Simmons, Deborah Kerr, Heddy Lemarr and Dorothy Lamour. The idea to name the product the ‘twin-set’ is meant to have occurred to him after seeing a woman pushing twins in a pram on Hawick High Street! His designs were partly responsible for Hawick knitwear’s post-war success. In Hawick, he rode at the Common Riding. He was a Jewish refugee from Austria, being apprenticed to Bernhard Altmann of Vienna. Originally an artist, he was appointed by Pringle’s in 1934 (on his 3rd attempt to get hired), becoming a Director in 1937, Assistant Managing Director in 1952 and Joint Managing Director in 1964. He finally retired in 1969, and moved to Jersey, where he died. In 2006 his son David donated the Anwick Museum – ‘How a stylish bit knitwear disappeared from the scene. The classic twin-set – Otto Weisz’s big dream’ [GM].

Weittee (wɪ-tee) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) servant to James Turnbull of Stonedge. He was recorded in 1590, along with his master, Gavin Turnbull of Woollee and Alexander Oliver of Westerhouses, when they were accused of raiding farms in England. It is unclear how to spell or pronounce his surname.

Welch (welsh, welch) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1738) and Bettie (b.1740). Adam (18th C.) married Janet Murray in Robertson Parish in 1737. Adam (18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Robertson Parish in 1739. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Cavers Parish in 1794. Their children included: Helen (b.1795); Thomas (b.1797); William (b.1799); Aitkin (b.1802); and Agnes (b.1804). Beatrix (18th C.) probably the daughter of Thomas born in Castleton in 1768. In 1799 she is recorded having a daughter Beatriz in Castleton Parish. Christopher (18th/19th C.) married Mary King in Kirkton Parish in 1820. Gilbert (17th C.) married Bessie Fala in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. Their children included: Robert (b.1751); John (b.1754); and Thomas (b.1755). Janet (16th C.) listed in 1552 as ‘Jonete Welche’ among people who were owed money in the testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. It is unclear whether she was ‘Waugh’ or ‘Veitch’. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William, who was also listed there, was surely related. He could be the same man as the John ‘Welsh’, married to Malie ‘Huton’, whose daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1685. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Philhopeshiel in 1727 and Broadlee in 1732. In 1726 he married ‘Bitrich’ Young, also from Roberton. His children, baptised in Robertson, included: Thomas (b.1727); James (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and Elizabeth (b.1735). John (18th C.) married Margaret Gray in Ashkirk in 1750. Their children included: Robert (b.1751); John (b.1754); and Thomas (b.1755). John (18th C.) married Helen Sinton in Ashkirk in 1765. Their children included: Robert (b.1766); Katharine (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1775). John (18th C.) married Margaret Balmer in Ashkirk Parish in 1778. John (18th C.) married Mary Blyth in Ashkirk Parish in 1778. Their children included: Robert (b.1751); John (b.1754); and Thomas (b.1755). John (18th/19th C.) married Helen Broad in Kirkton Parish in 1817. John (d.1990) born in dinburgh, he served with the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders in WWI and was wounded at Loos. In 1924 he founded the Hawick accountancy firm Welch’s. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1722 and Girnwood in 1725. He married Margaret Hislop in 1721. His children included: Thomas (b.1722); and Thomas (again, b.1725). Robert (18th C.) listed in a marriage record in Ashkirk in 1732. No bride’s name is given. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1704. Perhaps the same Thomas had a son Thomas baptised in Robertson Parish in 1707. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Grieve and their son John was baptised in 1759. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1764); Gilbert (b.1765); Beatrix (b.1768); and Thomas (b.1775). Thomas (19th C.) married Margaret Wilson in Cavers Parish in 1823, his surname there recorded as ‘Welsh’. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Thomas (b.1831) and Thomas Ballantyne (b.1843). William see William Veitch (see also Welsh).
Wellfield’s

Welch’s (wel-sheez) n. Messrs. J.J. Welch, accountancy firm at 19 Buccleuch Street (note the pronunciation).

wele (wel) adv., arch. well, faithfully (in wording related to holding lands) – ‘... the quhilk soume of twa hundreth markis wele and leley to be made ...’ [SB1470] (cf. the more modern weel).

welkin (wel-kin) n., poet. the sky, upper air, vault of heaven – ‘Far beyond the setting sun, Where ever brood the shadows dun, Where bends the welkin to the wave, And ocean’s utmost waters lave’ [JL], ‘The maiden stray’d till dark’ning night O’erspread the welkin wide’ [JTe], ‘... And laverocks speck the welkin blue, And the merle is in the glen’ [Wil], ‘Which makes the upland welkins ring Far from the din of busy throng’ [RHL], ‘... Striking the welkin here, her old Norse slogan, On festive, storied, Common-Riding morn’ [JBSS], ‘In this dour job that he maun dae On land an’ sea an’ welkin ...’ [WP] (from Old English).

well (wel) n., arch. a spring, source of fresh water – ‘I like to drink the muirland wells, For that was aye the hame for me’ [DA] (most springs or pumps in the Hawick area were called ‘Wells’; see also wall and wells).

the Well Brae (thu-wel-brä) n. former name for a track down to the Dean Burn in Denholm, on the east side. It is now a path leading from the War Memorial down to Deanburn House. James Murray says that the earliest course of the road towards Hawick used to go this way, much higher up the Burn than the modern road.

Wellbutts Park (wel-buts-pawrk) n. former name for Wellfield (on account of the butts, or archery targets, being placed there).

Wellton (we-le-ton) n. Roger (13th/14th C.) appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale by Edward II in 1307. He was probably from England, probably one of the Wiltons there. He remained in this position, at least titularily, until about 1310.

Wellfield (wel-feeld) n. area around the former Wellfield House, probably named after the well, which stood near there and was known in the latter part of the 19th century as ‘Dickson’s Well’.

Wellfield Bank (wel-feeld-bawngk) n. housing built on the grounds of Wellfield Lodge in 1960.

Wellfield House (wel-feeld-hoos) n. villa in Wellfield, demolished in the early 1970s to make way for the new Wilton School. It was built for William Dickson in the early 1860s. It was the residence of the Nobles in the 1880s, then the Scotts in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with the final residents being the Montgomery family. There were alterations in 1895 and additions made around 1908, both to designs by J.P. Alison. The name is also sometimes used for the former lodge house at 31 Dickson Street.

Wellfield Ludge (wel-feeld-luj, -loj) n. former lodge house for Wellfield House, situated at 31 Dickson Street.

Wellfield Road (wel-feeld-röd) n. road connecting Dickson Street with Havelock Street, roughly between the positions of the former Wellfield Lodge and Silverbuthall Lodge. It was built in 1969 when the house was already derelict.

We’ll Follow Oor Cornet (weel-fo-lö-oor-kör-nil) n. song adopted as the club song of the 1514 Club. The words are by David Johnston, first published in the Hawick Express in 1951. The music was by Adam L. Ingles, provided at the request of the Club, and dedicated to them in 1975, when it received its first performance.

Wellgreen (wel-green) n. house on Sunnyside in Denholm.

Wellington Court (we-ling-tin-kör) n. housing for single people built off Wilton Path in 1982, and named after the streets that used to be there. It was redeveloped in 2002 into 21 larger units.

Wellington Kirk (we-ling-tin-kirk) n. Wellington Church, built in 1886 following a disagreement in 1881 in which the assistant minister of Hawick Parish Church, Rev. J.A. Birrell, walked out with part of the congregation. The new church was built in Wellington Street and took that as its name. It was renamed St. Margaret’s and created a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1896. After the congregation merged with Wilton South in 1940 the building was used commercially, e.g. as storage for fruits and vegetables by Proudfoot’s. It was demolished in 1976.

Wellington Place (we-ling-tin-plis) n. houses constructed in 1853 and named around 1857, being previously part of Wellington Street. The whole area was cleared in 1973-75.

Wellington Road (we-ling-tin-röd) n. street off Wilton Path, with houses constructed around 1876 and 1885, the western part originally being called Pringle Street. St. Margaret’s Church was formerly there. The area was cleared in 1973–75 and new houses built.

Wellington’s Pillar (we-ling-tin-pi-lur) n. name by which Penielheugh was known around the time it was built.

Wellington Street (we-ling-tin-stree) n. street in Wilton named after Arthur Wellesley, the Duke of Wellington (1769–1852), famous for his victory over Napoleon at Waterloo, and also Prime Minister 1823–30. The mill lade used to cross under the bottom of the street. There also used to be a baker’s at the top, a general shop at the bottom, and two sweet and tobacco shops between. In the mid-1900s at the corner with Carnarvon Street was John Gebbie’s grocer’s shop, with Robertson’s nearly opposite. The original houses were constructed 1850–55. J.P. Alison designed the house at the corner with Wellington Place, built in 1910. There was major demolition in 1973–75 with new houses constructed around 1977, as well as the 1982 sheltered housing development called Wellington Court.

the Wellogate (θu-we-lō-gā’-lu-, wa-lō-gā’) n. area in the east of Hawick, around Wellogate Brae. Up until the early 20th century the area contained many fields rented to farmers with barns and stabling in the town. In the 19th century some of these farmers were the Grieves of the Cross Wynd, the Tullys of the Millpath, the Hardies of the Kirk Wynd, the Aitkens of the Kirk Wynd, the Tower Hotel landlords and Hawick Mill. In 1715 gardener John Tait was fined for ‘breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Duchess of B. at the Wolliegate’; however, it is unclear where such a boundary could have been. The housing there was largely built by the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., Ltd. in the latter half of the 19th century. A number of the streets in the Terraces had different names for the upper and lower houses (as well as for each side if the street) until rationalisation of the names by the Council in 1882. The ‘Well o’ Gate’ spring was marked by a monument in 1985. A stone ball found in the area is in the Museum. The name is also used more specifically to refer to Wellogate Brae – ‘In wellogate the Eastern Gate …’ [NM], ‘…’Twas then I found mysel alane In Wellogate, Where deid folk mony a year hae lain – Caule, calm, sedate’ [WP] (the name occurs in many forms, including ‘Walliegate’, ‘Woolee gate’ and ‘Wellygate’ in the 18th century, and ‘Wooliegate’, ‘Wallygate’ and ‘Well o’ Gate’ in the 19th; it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map; it is likely to have derived from ‘Woolee Gate’, i.e. the way to Wolfelee, with some later influence on the name from the wells or springs there).

Wellogate Bank (we-lō-gā’-hawngk) n. house on Wellogate Brae, roughly opposite the cemetery gates.

Wellogate Brae (we-lō-gā’-brā) n. main road leading out to the east of Hawick, being the continuation of the Cross Wynd and Allars Bank. It was officially named in 1934, with council houses built on the right-hand side at the top, along with Fisher Avenue. Collier’s grocer’s shop was located at the corner with Wellogate Place in the mid-1900s.

Wellogate Cemetery (we-lō-gā’-see-mi’-ree) n. one of Hawick’s two main cemeteries, lying between the old railway line and Fisher Avenue in the Wellogate district. 7½ acres of land on the Common was sold to the heritors of Hawick Parish in order to be exchanged with land for the new cemetery. It was opened in 1849, as an overflow for St. Mary’s Churchyard, and almost immediately had to cope with the 1849 cholera epidemic, with most of the victims buried in the vacant middle area. The Heritor’s area, containing the final resting place of many of Hawick’s worthies, was opened in July 1849 and its control transferred to the Parish Council in 1903. The entrance to this area was formerly higher up than the present main gate. The cemetery has expanded several times since then. A staircase also connects with the former railway. There is a shelter within the grounds, designed by J.P. Alison. It was for a while known as ‘Hawick Cemetery’ to distinguish it from Wilton Cemetery – ‘Then one day as gloamin descends on my valley, As dark shadows lengthen and evening comes still, I will be ready to take my last journey, To lie wi oor fithers on Wellogate’s hill’ [IWL].

Wellogate Place (we-lō-gā’-plis) n. street in the Wellogate, built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. The lower houses were originally called Douglas Terrace until 1882.

Wello Gate Villa  (wel-ô-ga’-vi-la)  n.  house on Wello Gate Brae, built in the mid-19th century by Galashields builders David and Peter Dalglish for their brother-in-law Alexander Turnbull.

the Wello Gate Well  (thu-wel-o-ga’-wel)  n.  another name for the Wello Gate.

Well Plantin  (wel-plawn’-in)  n.  plantation in Hawick there used to be public wells situated at several points down the Loan and Howegate and along the High Street, and elsewhere in the area, as well as many private supplies. They were the traditional gossiping place in town, with women gathering in line with their pitchers. The important thing to understand is that a ‘well’ (or ‘wall’) was typically a stand-pipe and trough, and not the traditional draw-well (like the new fake one in the Park) which is the more modern meaning of the word. Water would be fed to the wells through pipes from sources such as the Smaile Burn, the ‘Well-o-Gate’ and other natural springs. In 1731 the Council paid for 3 loads of clay for ‘the well’ and in 1737 the well in the High Street was directed to be rebuilt. In 1783 the Council resolved to provide 2 street wells using piped spring water, these being the Cross Well and the Pant Well (and masons William Phillop & Co. were paid for the work). In 1786 the Council paid for white paint ‘for wester fountain-head’, suggesting that these public wells were painted. In 1797 the Scudder Springs were piped into Hawick, providing 6 additional public wells. However, there were also smaller, local or private wells (often named after a nearby inhabitant), and several more which were opened up through the 19th century. These open wells were largely responsible for outbreaks of cholera and other diseases, and the decline in their use came with the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865. W.A.P. Johnman wrote an article on the Town’s former wells for the Archaeological Society.

Wells  (welz)  n.  estate near Bedrule, formerly owned by the Douglases of Cavers, the Rutherfords and the Cavers-Carre families. In some of the earliest documents it was known as ‘Wollis’. It was listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380, state to have been formerly held by William ‘Rothestone’. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The superiority appears to have passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The first Rutherford of Wells was James of that Ilk, who held it from at least 1492 (when it was described as a 5-pound land and granted by Douglas of Cavers). Robert Turnbull was recorded as tenant there in 1493. John Turnbull and Adam Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. ‘Non-entry’ of the lands is recorded in 1508. It passed to James’ grandson Richard, then to Richard’s sister Helen. About this time it was separated from the Barony of Cavers, with the Crown being the direct superior thereafter; an extract charter of 1511 confirms how James Douglas of Cavers resigned the superiority into the hands of the King, to be given to Helen Rutherford and her husband John Forman. Since Helen had no children, the lands passed to James Stewart of Traquair (the husband of Katherine, sister of Richard and Helen). In 1524/5 the Laird (probably a Stewart) was among the Border Barons who swore the bond of allegiance to the Earl of Angus (Warden at that time). In 1592 James Stewart of Wells complained that a group under John, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule, attacked his servant there. Several generations of the Stewarts of Traquair were Lairds until Charles, the 4th Earl, sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford of Wells in 1687 (and thus the estate passed back into the hands of the Rutherfords after 2½ centuries). Stewart of Traquair was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £214 10s in Cavers Parish and £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish. Andrew Ker paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. Thomas was the last Rutherford Laird, selling the estate to William Elliot (descendent of the Elliots of Brugh) in 1706/7, who had a house built there. Meanwhile Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had a charter of the lands of Over and Nether Wells in 1659 indirectly from William, Lord Cranstoun. Archibald Jerdan was factor there from 1728 until 1760; his rental book gives many details of the running of the estate in the 18th century. The rentals (including Ormiston and Hadden) amounted to £744 in 1729 and £921 in 1735 (but with many farmers in arrears). Archibald Jerdan paid tax on 45 windows there in 1753. In 1788 part of the lands were listed in Cavers Parish, valued at £...

£214 10s. It was sold to the William Nassau Elliot, M.P. towards the end of the 18th century. It was valued at £409 10s in 1811. It passed to Sir William Francis Elliott in 1818 when William Nassau Elliot died. The house was extended around 1862. The house was leased to John Bald in the period 1865–76. The estate having a considerable debt, the trustees had lots of the old trees cut down in the late 1800s, this being locally quite unpopular. Sir William and Lady Elliott of Stobs lived there themselves in the years around 1890. But the estate was sold to the Ushers in 1895/6, who rebuilt the main house in 1906, although it was demolished in the 1950s. The new development included a herony, as well as alterations to the banks of the Rule to form a small lake. The wrought-iron gates are retained from the 18th century, while an armorial pediment from about 1690 is in the Museum. Extensive and irregularly shaped plantations also survive. The entire Wells and Hallrule estates were sold off in 1995 – ‘Adieu, fair Wells! I gladly quit Thy mutilated glade, But who can look without regret Upon thy ruined shade? Years, countless years, may come and go, And heirs thee still retain, But what thou wert in former years Thou’lt never be again’ [T] (often formerly written ‘Walls’, ‘Wellis’, etc.; it is ‘le wellis’ in 1502; it is marked as ‘Wells’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Wells’ and ‘Wellis’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Wells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Wells (welz) n. former estate to the east of Jedburgh, including Over Wells, Nether Wells, Wells Shawhead and Wells Mill, long owned by the Kerrs. The spelling varied as ‘Wollis’ etc., and is thus easily confused with Wells in the Rule valley (formerly ‘Wellis’ and variants).

Wells (welz) n. David (1834/5–72) son of John, he was Schoolmaster at Stouslie. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster at Newcastleton in the early 1800s. He subscribed (for 2 copies) to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Moffat and their children included: John Moffat (b.1812); Jane (b.1814); Sally Smith (b.1816); Elizabeth Scott (b.1819); William (b.1821); and David Scott (b.1823). George (19th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Riddell. Their children, baptised in S.S. Mary & David’s, included George (b.1889).

John (14th C.) listed as ‘John de Wells’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. The other witnesses were all local men. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1806/7) Burgh Officer and Halbardier in the 1850s. He was listed as the Keeper of the ‘House of Refuge’ in the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as keeper of an eating house on the Howegate as well as ‘sheriff’s officer, Howegate’. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter Maria.

Wells Hoose (welz-hoos) n. former house near Bedrule, on the Wells estate. The name has existed for centuries, and so probably there was a house there from at least the 16th century. Shortly after the estate passed to the Rutherfords in 1687 a mansion was built. The original house can be seen on a sketch from the mid-18th century. It was the birthplace of George Augustus Elliott (Lord Heathfield) in 1717, and was visited briefly by Burns in 1787. The rental book of Archibald Jerdon lists the contents of the house in about 1730. ColWilliam Elliott paid tax for 37 windows there in 1748. The house consisted of 6 main rooms, a kitchen, a servants’ room and an attic. The house was extensively repaired in 1753 and there is a sketch as it was around 1790. During the late 18th and much of the 19th century it was mainly used by the factor of Wells. It was altered and extended by Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells around 1862, and became the home of Sir William’s mother. A sundial was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house was then rented by the Vassals and by the new Sir William himself, in order to try to pay off the debts on the estate, but it was sold off to John Usher in 1896. The house was demolished in 1905 by Sir Robert Usher soon after the estate was acquired, and a photograph exists showing it shortly before demolition. A new Edwardian-style house was then constructed for the Usher family on the same site, designed by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter. Only 2 stones survived from the original house, one bearing 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of Thomas Rutherford and his wife, and the second was the lintel bearing the motto ‘Ne des tua robora scortis’ (‘do not give away your strength to whores!’). The new house fell into disrepair and was dynamited in 1955. A modern bungalow was built there in 1999. There is an ancient earthwork, of unknown age, in the woods to the south.

Well Sike (wel-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising near Ewe Knowes and running south through signs of a former settlement (probably Over Foulshiels) to become part of the Ryedale Burn.
Welsh

Welsh (welsh) adj., poet. insipid – ‘A welsh kind of theory that’ [DH] (probably a variant of wersh).

Welsh (welsh) n. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton Parish in 1742. Adam (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Mary Tait. Their son Alexander was baptised in 1804, with their surname given as ‘Welsh’. Alexander (18th C.) married Elizabeth Morrison in Wilton Parish in 1829. Christian (b.c.1805) from Eskdalemuir, he was a labourer in Wilton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Commonside Bankhead, with John (probably his brother). In 1851 he was a widower and agricultural labourer living at Borthaugh Cottages. In 1861 he was a domestic servant living at Haysike. His children included James (b.1832/3), Margaret (b.1838/9), John (b.1840/1) and Thomas (b.1842/3). Christopher (18th/19th C.) married Mary King in Wilton Parish in 1820. Matthew (b.1831/2) from the Ewes valley, son of labourer Matthew and Margaret. In 1861 he was ‘Wood Forester’ at Sandyhaugh. He was known for his poetry. He wrote ‘Maggie Elliot: a romance of Ewes, and other poems’ (1906). The inscription on his tomb reads ‘Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire’. Robert (17th/18th C.) servant on the Falnash estate. In 1720 he confessed to the Hawick minister his fornication with ‘Isbel Batie’, and subsequently stood in the place of repentance 3 times and paid a fine. Their son William was baptised in 1720, with the couple recorded as ‘Fornicators’ and witnesses Walter Scott (servant to Rev. Robert Cunningham) and John Scott (Beadle). Perhaps the same Robert was recorded in Bowanhill in 1731 when his son John was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (18th C.) servant on the Falnash estate. In 1720 he Robert Brown (1943– ) Hawick R.F.C. player who was one of the 3 men who played in all 10 of the consecutive events that the team won in 1966–67. He starting playing rugby at the High School, moving to the P.S.A. in 1958, followed by the Linden and then the Greens. He initially played on the wing, but moved to be stand-off and centre. He also played regularly for the South and earned 2 caps for Scotland. In 2021 he and Chay Blyth were recorded reminiscing about their Common Riding memories. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son William was baptised in 1694. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane ‘Welsh’ and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1797; the witnesses were ‘Mr Hardy’ (perhaps the minister at Ashkirk) and Andrew Gray. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Stirches according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. Probably the same Thomas ‘Walsh’, married to Jean Ballantyne, had these children baptised in Wilton: Christopher (b.1800); Martha (b.1803); and Thomas (b.1807). Thomas (19th C.) Hawick resident married to Jane ‘Linza’ (presumably Lindsay). Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1826. Thomas (b.1807/8) born in Wilton Parish, in 1841 he was a wool sorter living on Wilton Kirkstyle. In 1851 he was a wool sorter in Innerleithen and in 1861 was living in Earlston. He is probably the Thomas who married Elizabeth...

In Boston he was an Oddfellow and Mason and was President of the Scots’ Charitable Society, the British American Association of the State of Massachusetts, the Boston Curling Club and the Hawick Club. James (b.1840) born in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Duncan. Thomas (1787/8–1861) manager at Dicksons & Laings. In about 1829 he was sent to Manchester to learn about power looms from the firm of Sharp & Roberts & Co. (in order to avoid the exorbitant fees the company there charged to set up the machinery), which were then introduced to Hawick. ‘Thomas Wemyss, spinner’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. It is said that he personally dismantled the machinery in Manchester and (with the aid of Charles Scott) had them rebuilt after transportation to Hawick. He remained responsible for running the looms until he died. He was listed as foreman at Wilton Mills among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was recorded as woollen factory foreman, living at Dovemount in 1841 and on Wilton Place in 1851. In 1861 he was a widower living with his son Alexander. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: Isabella (1812–58), the eldest daughter, who became 2nd wife of John White, miller of Hawick, and her cousin; Alexander (b.1814), who also worked at Wilton Mills; and Mary. A portrait of him exists (also spelled ‘Wemys’, ‘Weymes’ and variants; the name was once interchangeable with Weens).

Wenelaciam (we-ne-la-see-un) n. place recorded in the late 12th century in a document relating to the lands of Glasgow Diocese in Ashkirk Parish. Most of the other locations are recognisable, but the modern equivalent of this particular name is unclear.

Wenerton (we-ner’in) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Fowler-awe’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

wesh-hoose (wesh-hoos) n. a communal washing area, typically a building behind a block of flats by the ‘back green’ where clothes would be washed (cf. weshin-hoose).

weshin (we-shin) n. the washing. Until well into the 19th century women would take tubs to the Slitrig or Teviot, trampling their clothes in the tub with their bare feet and leaving them to dry on the grass. Communal drying greens were later very common, before the ‘Steam’ and the advent of the home washing machine – ‘Weel can I mind o’ The Bleach and the wild Ballet o’ weshin’s on blawy spring Mondays’ [DH], ‘...It’s him that muckle steam produces, Doon at Turnbull’s Weshin’ Hooses’ [MB], ‘Monday mornin, weshin day, Wringer and mangle then held sway ...’ [IWL] (formerly this was weshineen).

weshin-cloot (we-shin-clo) n., arch. a dishcloth – ‘A’ll sklatch ee round the hgs wui this weshin-cloot if ee dimna haad eer tung’ [ECS].

weshin-hoose (we-shin-hoos) n., arch. a public washing facility, laundry. In Hawick there was the Steam and Victoria Laundry, and before that there were public washing facilities at the Sandbed. There was also one in Denholm at the north-east corner of Main Street around 1900 (cf. wesh-hoose).

wesla (wes-la, -la) adj., arch. westerly, western (cf. wasla).

Wesla (wes-la, -la) adj., n., arch. formerly used to describe the western part of Hawick, in distinction to the ‘Eastla’ part. Also referred to as ‘Wesla Witter’, because the Slitrig was the line of demarcation. There used to be a strong rivalry between the two sides, with competing bonfires on special occasions (the ‘Wesla’ one being at Myreslawgreen), as well as the tradition of appointing the Cornet from alternating sides (also written Westla).

Wesla Lads (wes-la-ladz) n. group who selected their own Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, in opposition to new regulations introduced by the Town Council regarding invitations to the Cornet’s supporters. They were also referred to as the ‘Wesla Water’ party. They had to get the Selkirk drummer and fifer to supply the music for the processions, and held a separate Ball in the Cross Keys. Their ‘rebel’ flag is in the Museum, and James Hogg’s ‘Address to the inhabitants of Hawick’ was written for this occasion – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From amongst you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH].

Wesla Witter (wes-la-wi-ur) n. former name for the part of town west of the Slitrig, effectively the old version of the ‘Westend’ (also Westla).

West (west) n. Fr. Joseph (19th/20th C.) first Chaplain appointed to St. Margaret’s (Dominican) Convent in 1912. He helped the priest of S.S. Mary & David’s with the extra early morning services he had instituted. He also offered mass at Stobs Camp. However, by 1914 he had moved on.

Westbarns (west-bawrnz) n. former lands in Belses Barony, near Lilliesleaf. In 1569 it was listed among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French. In 1632 it was feued from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning, to Robert Grieve from Commonside, William Davidson from Caerlernrig, John Gray from Lilliesleaf and Robert Law from Kames. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. (it is ‘Westbarns’ in 1569 and ‘Westbernis’ in 1588 and ‘Westbyres’ in 1670).

West Beechwud (west-beech-wud) n. name for a field on Hawick Common to the north of the road between Williestruther cottage and the Flex.

West Boonraw (west-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’, just next to East Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It was also known as ‘Wester Boonraw’. Elizabeth Davidson lived there in 1841 and 1851 and labourer William Hewitson was there in 1841. A plan was drawn up for owner William Davidson in 1856, showing the layout of the fields (see also Boonraw).

West Buccleuch (west-bu-kloo) n. farm on the south-west bank of the Rankle Burn, off the B711, near East Buccleuch, in the centre of Scott country. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 3909 acres and the farmhouse is marked in much the same location as the present one. Adam Linton was tenant there in 1728. The ‘West side of Buccleugh’ stock and teind was valued at about £916 in 1785. It was tenanted by Turnbells in the early 19th century and was then composed of 1,400 acres of land. It was for a time run as a hotel. Part of the old drove road can also be seen near here.
West Burnfit

There was a Ride-out here in 1988 (also sometimes ‘Wester Buccleuch’).

West Burnfit see Wester Burnfit

West Burnfoot (west-burn-fi’) n. West Burnfoot, farm in the Ale valley, being the partner of East Burnfoot. It is also known as ‘Wester Burnfoot’ and is easily confused with the place of the same name in Wilton Parish. There was also a mill there, although it may have been a separate farm. There were 3 tenants listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, namely James Henderson, Walter Wilson and Robert Culbertson. Daniel Kedie was tenant there in 1709. Robert Scott of Coldhouse was tenant for 1716–18. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map off the streamlet that emerges from Shielswood Loch. The location is south of the other farm, but actually a little further to the east on Ainslie’s map (it is ‘Westburnfoot’ in 1744; see also Burnfit Mill).

West Burn Park (west-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common opposite the entrance to the racecourse and north of Burn Park.

Westburnflat (west-burn-flaw’) n. former tower of the Armstrongs on Hermitage Water, perhaps just south of its junction with the Liddel. It was listed as a land with rental 37 shillings and 4 pence in a c.1376 list of the area around Mangerton among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. Archie of Westburnflat is listed by Monipenny among Border chiefs in the late 1500s. It was burned in 1599 by the Gideon Murray of Elibank, Walter Scott of Harden and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill. It was possessed by Lancie Armstrong in 1632 and John Armstrong until about 1683. John Glendinning was tenant there in 1694, with William Elliot also listed as a householder. It is said that one of the last owners, William Armstrong, was captured for stealing cattle and hanged at Selkirk, in the early 1700s; he was referred to as the last of the Border rievers, but it is unclear if he ever existed. Labourer Francis Armstrong was there in 1835 (it is ‘Westburneflat’ around 1376, ‘Wastburneflatt’ in 1599 and ‘westernburnflatt’ in 1694; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westcotrig (west-ko’-rig) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley; perhaps on the Cromrig Burn north of Southdean Rig, although its precise location is uncertain. It was recorded in 1540 among lands (probably part of Ringwoodfield) farmed by the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson. In 1557 it was ‘Westcoitrig’ when rented from Melrose Abbey by Walter Scott and William Elliot; at that time it was valued at £5. It was probably the ‘Westcoitrig’ where Archie Elliot was recorded in 1590. It was listed as part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and 1634 and listed among the same upper Teviotdale lands in 1693. In 1620 Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands was infet in these lands, along with those of Goldielands. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1744 it was leased along with Colterscleuch by William and Gideon Grieve (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘West cotrigg’; it is ‘Vestcotrig’ in 1540, ‘Westcoatrig’ in 1621, ‘Westcoitrig’ in 1634, ‘West Coitrig’ in 1653, ‘West Coitrig’ in 1661, ‘Westcoitrig’ in 1663, ‘Westcoitrige’ in 1670, ‘Westcoatrig’ in 1693 and ‘west-coat-riggs’ in 1744).

the West End (thu-wes-tend) n. popular name for an area of Hawick, corresponding approximately the part of town to the west of the Slitrig and south of the Teviot. It was traditionally where the workers and poorer residents lived, and where the strongest dialect was spoken. In a case of reverse snobbery, Westenders typically regard the area as the ‘real’ Hawick. The area has been occupied for many centuries and it seems likely that it was the original centre for the settlement of Hawick. It is clearly shown as an inhabited area on Pont’s map of c.1590. In 1770 there were 110 houses there owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £13,000. In 1804 the Council resolved for footpaths in the area. The modern street layout was mostly developed in the 19th century.

West End Academy (wes-tend-aw-ka-du-mee) n. former private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie. It started in 1883 on Buccleuch Street, and moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name to Wilton Lodge Academy.

the West End Bar (thu-wes-tend-bawr) n. hostelry at 3 Loan in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle from there (when the proprietor was James Shiel) is in the Museum (also known as the ‘West End Spirit Bar’).
West-Ender

West-Ender (wes-ten-dur) n. someone from the West End of Hawick – ‘Maister Thompson, a Wastender like masel’ [HE1924] (also spelled ‘Westender’, cf. the older West-End).

the West End Kirk (thu-wes-tend-kirk) n. previously known as the Green Kirk, it was home of the Anti-Burgher congregation and then part of the United Presbyterian Church from 1847. It should not be confused with the West Port (Free) Kirk.

the West End Meetin Hoose (thu-wes-tend-meec’-in-hoos) n. the West End Meeting House, also known as the Green Kirk, at Myres-law Green.

wester (wes-tur) adj. part of an area that is further west (cf. waster).

Wester Adam (wes-tur-aw-dum) n. nickname for Adam Scott.

Wester Alemoor (wes-tur-äl-moor) n. farm just before Alemoor Reservoir on the B711. The present farm was built fairly recently, with the older one close to the dam at the end of the reservoir. This was formerly the site of a peel tower, on the high left bank of the Ale Water, dating probably from the 15th century. There are several enclosures and signs of former cultivation near the old farm location. The farm was in Selkirkshire in 1511 when it was included in a grant of lands to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The separate farm of Easter Alemoor is known from at least 1573, when it had a separate owner. Wester Alemoor was forfeited (along with many other estates and titles) by Francis Stewart, the 5th Earl Boswell, to Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch in 1594. The farm remained with the Scotts, but by the late 18th century was owned by Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was transferred to Roberton in 1689 when that Parish was created. Thomas Scott and Walter Scott were recorded there in 1734 and Robert Anderson in 1741. John Sinton was there in 1771–74. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae paid the land tax on £308 3s 4d there in 1785 and William Elliot in 1802. John Oliver was living there in 1812. The new farm was built adjacent to the B711, just before the Loch is reached, essentially south of Easter Alemoor. The earlier location for the farm was covered by the reservoir extension, and chimneys from the old farmhouse can be seen in the Loch when the water is low. The name is also used for the western side of Alemoor Hill, which lies north of the Loch, with peaks 366 m and 376 m and an observation tower (also called ‘West Alemoor’, it is ‘West: Ealmuir’ in 1734; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Clarilaw

Wester Barnhills (wes-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. In 1618 it was gained by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from John Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1678 it was combined with Easter Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. In 1780 Robert Bennet gave sasine of the lands to Alexander Allison ‘in liferent’ and Matthew Stewart of Barnhills ‘in fee’. By 1788 the lands were owned by the Misses Stewart and valued at about £350. John Robson was labourer there in 1801 (it is ‘W: Barnhills’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map).

Wester Boonraw (wes-tur-boon-raw) n. another name for West Boonraw.

Wester Braid Road (wes-tur-bräd-röd) n. extension of Braid Road to the other (southern) side of Wellogate Brae. The track there was formerly also known as the Cross Road. It was developed in the early 1930s to provide access to Fisher Avenue. The road continues as a right of way to Hardie’s Hill.

Wester Broadlee (wes-tur-bröd-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicants’ recorded there were William Wylie, Margaret Armstrong, William Chisholme and Bessie Spence.

Wester Buccleuch see West Buccleuch

Wester Burnfit see West Burnfit

Wester Burnfit (wes-tur-burn-fi’) n. former name for part of the lands of Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Ale Water. James Shiel was living there in 1682 and 1688 and Robert Wait was a gardener there in 1688. In 1718 it was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Easter Burnfoot. It consisted of 226 acres, bounded by Easter Burnfoot, the River Teviot, Wilton, Burnhead and Galalaw. The mill is shown in the south-eastern corner, and there are woods near there along the river, as well as along the Boonraw Burn. James Easton was living there in 1722, James Young in 1724, William Scott in at least 1724–35, George Scott in 1729, John Thomson in 1731, William Lamb in 1735 and Adam Laidlaw in 1736.

Wester Burnfit Mill (wes-tur-burn-fi’-mil) n. another name for Burnfit Mill.

Wester Bushes (wes-tur-bu-sheez) n. hilly area in Craik Forest, west of Howpasley, and north-east of Craik Moor. It is crossed by the Roman road. There are old enclosures there, visible on aerial photographs.

Wester Clarilaw (wes-tur-klä-ree-law) n. former name for the western half of Clarilaw in Wester Clerklands
Wilton Parish. In 1678 it was owned by William Scott of Clarilaw and valued at £182. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the eastern section was. It was stated that 6 acres of land belonging to it were mixed with Easter Clarilaw, while one acre mixed with it belonged to Wester Clarilaw. Part of it was recorded being owned by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knope in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (valued at £65), with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead (valued at £117). The parts were later owned by the Dicksons of Alton and Watson of Burnhead.

Wester Clerklands (wes-tur-klerk-lindz) n. former name for part of Clerklands.

Wester Commonside (wes-tur-kom-miin-syd) n. name for part of the farm of Commonside. It was described as a 40-shilling land in 1603 when leased to Gilbert Elliot (it was ‘Westir Comoun-syde’ in 1603).

Wester Craik (wes-tur-kräk) n. former name for part of the lands of Craik.

Wester Dykeback (wes-tur-dik-bak) n. land lying approximately between Burnflat Brae and Crumhaughhill Road, probably once the back part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Easter Dykeback, which was to the north-east. The Burgh boundary passed diagonally through here.

Wester Essenside (wes-tur-e-sin-syd) n. farm west of Ashkirk, close to Easter Essenside, along the Todrig Burn. George Riddell was recorded there in 1579. It was owned by the Scotts of Burnfoot on Ale in the early 17th century and was farmed in the 18th century by the Laings. In 1643 it was valued at £400 and owned by Thomas Scott. It was valued at £540 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. William Laidlaw was herd there in 1697. Robert Cranston was tenant there in 1724. David Henderside was owner in 1761. By 1788 the lands were valued at £400 and owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (with the teinds of these lands and Leap Hill being another £12). John Thomson was farmer there in at least 1789–94. Robert Thomson was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Thomson in at least 1799–1801. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1878 (and still recorded in about 1811). Walter Scott was a servant there in 1797 and Robert Dodds and John Fairbairn in 1801. It was owned by Allan Elliot Lockhart by 1874. William Aitken was there in the mid-19th century and J. Paterson in the 1860s. On Essenside Head, about 1 km north-west of the farmhouse, lies the remains of a fort and settlement (see also Essenside; it is ‘wester Eschiside’ in 1579, ‘Wester Eschinsyde’ in 1609, ‘westessensynd’ in 1663 and ‘Wester Essensyde’ in 1724; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Grundistone (wes-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former lands at Groundistone, which, along with ‘Easter Groundistone’, were owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. ‘Thomas Scott in Wester-groundiston’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Francis Scott was tenant there in 1694, with James Dean as shepherd, and Adam ‘Inglish’ recorded being ‘out of the shire’. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1709. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 362 acres, bounded by Easter Groundistone, Boonraw, Drinkstone, Wilton Common and Salenside. A stream separated it from Easter Groundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. John Turnbull was living there in at least 1721–25. Robert Scott was there in 1729. The lands were leased from Buccleuch Estates by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1744, along with a declaration about what would happen if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided. The lands were valued at £30 in 1764, as part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Wester Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘Westergrundiston’ in 1694, ‘Wester Grundiston’ in 1718, ‘W: Grundiston’ in 1725 and ‘Wester Grundiston’ in 1765; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westerhall (wes-tur-hal) n. house in Eskdale, near Bentpath, long a seat of the Johnstones. The mansion was largely built in the 17th century, and repaired following several major fires, the last in 1955 – ‘The Johnstones met at Westerhall, And they sang o’ the raid and the moon, Wi their ‘Ready aye ready’; the Johnstones cry, For they’re ‘ready’ baith late and soon’ [T].

Wester Hassendean (wes-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the lands which were ‘commonly called Horsliehill’ according to a charter of 1616, when they were sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs.

Wester Heap (wes-tur-heep) n. older name for the farm at East Whitehaugh and surrounding area. It was exchanged for Milsington between the Langlands and Scott families in 1453. In 1650 there is a list of 8 ‘communicants’ there, namely Bessie Scott, Marion Scott, Bessie Scott, Robert Waugh, Thomas Scott, Margaret Easton, John

Wester Hermiston

Almond and Jean Scott. Robert Scott paid £448 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for these lands and Whitehaugh in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. In 1694 John Barrie was blacksmith there and 7 other householders were listed. In 1698 William Scott of Whitehaugh had a sasine for these (and other) lands, as heir to his father Walter. ‘Wester Heap, otherwise called Easter Whitehaugh’ is recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (and the 1788 county valuation) as part of the estate of Scott of Whitehaugh (also spelled ‘Hepe’, ‘Heip’ and other variants; it is ‘Wester heape’ on a 1650 parish map).

Wester Hermiston (wes-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade in 1643 and valued at £150. Thomas Scott of Whitslade owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Easter Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Wester Highchesters see West Highchesters

Wester Hislop (wes-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘Wester Heislehoip’ in 1572 and ‘Wester Heissilhoip’ in 1615).

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, former farm between Clarilaw and Horsleyhill. It is referred to in a charter of 1516, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme gained this (and other lands) after being forfeited by Alexander, Lord Home, and belonging to John Murray of Falahill. This charter was revoked by the King in 1535, when superiority returned to George, Lord Home. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; it is there said to have also been called Little Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish in 1690. James Smith and Walter Armstrong were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century. William Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Robert Lamb was a labourer there in 1801. Later the lands became part of Horsleyhill, and is now called Horsleyhill Cottages. It was still listed as ‘Wester houses’ on the 1861 census, when there were Thomsons, Hallidays, Cairns, Milveens and Turnbulls there. An axe-head (made of felsite) found there is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (it is ‘Wester Houssis’ in 1535; referred to as ‘Westhouses’ in 1690, it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Wester Howlands (wes-tur-how-linz) n. former name for lands in Langlands, being the west side of Howlands, just to the east of Roadhead. John Orniston was living there in 1742 and 1748. David and James Knox, John Orniston and Robert Oliver were owners of different parts of the lands in 1765 (it is ‘Westerhoulands’ in 1742).

Westerkirk (wes-tur-kirk) n. village and surrounding parish in Dumfriesshire, to the north-west of Langholm. Thomas Telford was born here. The church was granted to the monks of Melrose by John Graham, Lord of Westerkirk and confirmed by Robert I in 1321. A separate chapel (at Boyken) within the parish was founded following a charter of 1391, dated at Glendowyn (in Ewesdale) in which Archibald, Earl of Douglas mortified certain lands in the Barony of Hawick to pay for its foundation, under the direction of his Bailie Adam of Glendowyn (or Glendinning); the chaplain was to pray for the souls of the late James, Earl of Douglas and for his ‘brother’ Sir Simon of Glendowyn (who also died at Otterburn), as well as the living Douglasses. In 1447 William Scott was presbyter and ‘perpetual vicar’ in this parish, when he witnessed the sasine for the Cousinlands, signed at Branxholme. The patronage and teinds of the parish were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament of 1672. Before the creation of Teviothead Parish, it had a boundary with the south-western portion of Hawick Parish (it is ‘Waststirker’ in 1324).

Wester Kirkstile (wes-tur-kirk-stil) n. name once given to the western approach to St. Mary’s Church, which is now gone, but shown in old drawings (e.g. a water-colour sketch by T.H. Laidlaw) as steps leading through the wall in St. Mary’s Place. This was formerly where auctions and other public notices would be announced by the town bellman after Sunday services. Wilton Crescent was also once known as ‘the Wester Kirkstyle’ of Wilton (also spelled ‘Wester Kirkstyle’).

Wester Lilliesleaf see West Lilliesleaf

Wester Loan (wes-tur-lon) n. loanings leading up to Wilton Common. It ran ‘betwixt Todshaw and Whitfield’ and in 1764 was described as ‘a wide loan, fit for driving, tho’ that loan is now greatly straitened, by Mr Murray’s building stone-dykes on each side of it, greatly within the bounds of the old loan’. Probably the same route was also known as Todshaw Loan.

Wester Loch (wes-tur-loch) n. name used for the western of the 2 Branxholme Lochs, also known as Chisholme Loch. ‘Wester Loach’ and ‘Wester loch house’ must have been a cottage near here, where Walter Heatley was living in at least 1771–74.

the Wester Loft (thu-wes-tur-loft) n. name sometimes used for the Weaver’s Loft in St. Mary’s Kirk, also known as ‘the Bailie’s Loft’ – ‘...it was found therein specified that ye loft bewest the church door was allocat to the Mechanicks in ye toun as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 ...’ [PR1717].

Wester Middle see West Middle

Wester Mill (wes-tur-mil) n. former name for a corn mill in Wilton Parish. It is unclear exactly where it was located, but it is possible it was the same place as Wester Burnfit Mill. James Scott was there in at least 1727–29. Agnes Elliot was from there in 1749, George Lamb in 1751 and Archibald Irvine in 1759 (it is ‘wester milln’ in 1749).

Wester Moormaw see Moormaw

westermaist (wes-tur-mäst) adj., arch. furthest west (variant of westmaist: also wastmaist and wastermaist).

Western Bank (wes-turn-bawngk) n. bank based in Glasgow, which became the second largest in Scotland. The Hawick agent was Charles Kirk in the mid-19th century. The bank failed in 1857, ruining many people around Scotland, and was eventually taken over by the National Bank of Scotland.

Western End (wes-turn-end) n. Hawick-based musical duo made up of Graeme Tinlin and Euan Robson. They started in about 2015 and have made several videos.

Wester New Moss (wes-tur-new-mos) n. former name for a boggy area within Wilton Common, northwest of Woo Law and southwest of Easter New Moss. It is recorded in the description of the common in 1765.

Western Star (wes-turn-stawr) n. one of 3 cricket teams set up in 1849, representing the western part of Hawick. The team only survived for a short time.

Western Tollbar (wes-turn-tol-bawr) n. another name for Western Toll.

Wester Nurseries (wes-tur-nur-su-reez) n. former nurseries between the New Road and the river, starting at the Coble Entry. The area was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and used as a nursery for raising forest trees and shrubs by Dickson & Turnbull’s in the 19th century. The land was gifted to the town in the 1930s. Also called ‘West Nurseries’.

Wester Parkhill (wes-tur-pawk-hil, -perk-) n. former name for part of the farm of Parkhill, to distinguish it from Easter Parkhill. In 1678 Walter Chisholme paid the land tax there for the farm and mill, when it was valued at £100. James Turnbull was there in 1714 and James Scott in 1733. Robert Elliot and Robert Scott were there in 1774 and Thomas Elliot in 1781. By 1788 (and still recorded that way in 1811) it was valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by Thomas White, merchant in Jedburgh; however, £33 6s 8d of Chisholme Mill had been separated out and was then part of the Chisholme estate. William Rodger was farmer in 1797 and David Johnstone was living there in 1799. Cattle dealer Adam Scott was living there in 1841, as well as labourer George Richardson, and their families. By 1874 it was part of the estate of William Richardson Dickson of Alton (along with Easter Parkhill).

Wester Perk Hill (wes-turn-perk-hil) n. Wester Park Hill, hill just to the north-west of Branxholme East Loch, lying between Chapel Hill and Easter Park Hill, with the farm of Parkhill to the north-west. It reaches a height of 303 m. The farm of Wester Parkhill was nearby.

Wester Roughlee (wes-tur-rough-lee) n. former name for a steading in Jedforest. It was recorded along with Midroughlee and Roughleeneuk in 1538 and 1539, valued at 20 shillings (it is ‘terrarum de Roughleis vocatarum Westir Roucheis’ in 1539; see Roughlee).

Westershielhope (wes-tur-sheel-höp) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, recorded as ‘Westirschelehoip’ in 1538 and ‘Westirscheilhop’ in 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglasses to the Crown in about 1537, which had lain waste for the previous 20 years, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch accused of occupying it during that period.

Wester Swanshiel (wes-tur-swan-sheel) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, the western part of Swanshiel, the division happening around the early 17th century. In 1622 the lands were inherited by Adam Turnbull of Harsthaugh from his grandfather Hector. In 1643 the western part was smaller, and valued at £32 10s. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was valued at £32 10s. The lands of ‘Wester Swansheill’ are recorded in 1683, when inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigend. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. It was held by a branch of the Turnbulls until the late 18th century, being recorded belonging to John Turnbull in 1788. Charles Scott was a tailor there in 1758. It was let along with the neighbouring farm of Unthank in the late 18th century. A tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries was John Donaldson, whose wife Peggy Deans was still reaping at harvest time at the age of 77. It was then tenantied by the Taylors and others, before being incorporated into Kirknowe. A cottage there has a corner stone, previously a lintel, bearing the dates 1684 and 1798. In 1811 it was owned by John Turnbull and valued at £33 6s 8d. By about 1875 it was owned by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee (it is ‘Wester Suanscheid’ in 1622, ‘wester Swansheil’ in 1663 and ‘Wester Suansheill’ in 1694).

Wester Toll (wes-tur-töl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, which was in use when the New Road opened. Its position is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. A plaque marks its position near the Coble Entry by the High School. There was once a well there at the head of the Coble Entry. The earlier ‘Auld Wester Toll’ was also known as the Loan Toll, and was at 26 Loan (also called the ‘Western Toll-bar’ and other variants).

Westertinoon (wes-tur-toon) n. Westertown, farmstead between Skelfhill farm and Foulde (marked on the c.1860 Ordnance Survey map).

West Fodderlee

Wester Weens see Wester Winds

Wester Wells (wes-tur-welz) n. former name for a farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Easter Wells.

Wester Whitehaugh (wes-tur-whi‘-uf) n. former name for the lands known as Whitehaugh.

Wester Winds (wes-tur-wündz) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley also called Weensland, situated near Weens Sike. They are mentioned in the 1686 confirmation of lands to the Scotts of Buccleuch and were at that time in the middle of lands possessed by Robert Grieve in Commonside. ‘Wester Weens (in Hawick)’ was valued at £179 according to a valuation of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1707. The lands of ‘Wester Weines’ are listed as part of Commonside in the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands. In 1811 ‘Wester Weens, acquired from Earl of Queensberry’ was part of the Buccleuch estates, valued at £179 (see also Weensland).

Westfield Works (west-field-wurks) n. small knitwear factory on the left-hand side of Drumlanrig Square, at Nos. 27–28. It is run by William Lockie & Co. Ltd. It had previously been George Scott & Son.

West Fodderlee (west-foor-dur-lee) n. part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying west of Easter Fodderlee, and south of Old Fodderlee. It was also referred to as ‘Wester Fodderlee’ and was separated from East Fodderlee in the 17th century. It was owned by Helen Turnbull in the late 17th century, and after she married William Chisholme of Parkhill it passed to their son Mark. William Chisholme was recorded as owner in 1707 when it was valued (probably along with Ruletownhead) at £175. By 1788 it was owned by Barbara Chisholme and valued at £78 9s. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in 1801 and Robert Scott was a servant. Henry Oliver was farm steward there in the 1850s and 1860s. James Turnbull was tenant there in the 1860s. It was recorded being owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule in about 1874, and valued at £78 9s. The Bruces became tenants in 1887 and ‘Mrs. Joan Wood or Bruce’ is recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of the end of the 19th century, when it was valued at £142. The farm is the location for the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between Lord Dacre’s men and a band of Scots in 1513, with the Sclaterford bridge being located just to the south. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. In the fields to the south-east a linear cropmark was found in aerial photographs (see also Fodderlee; it is ‘Wester Fodderly’ in about 1874).

Westgate (west-gā’) n. street leading out of Denholm to the south, passing the War Memorial and Westgate Hall and turning into Dene Road.

Westgate Haa (west-gā’-haw) n. oldest house in Denholm, at the corner of the main street and Westgate, essentially marking the south end of the village. The name was used to distinguish it from ‘East Castle’. It was built in 1663 for Archibald Douglas, possibly on the site of a much older building, West Castle, which belonged to Guy of Denum around 1300. The house measures about 17 m by 7 m and consists of 2 floors plus a garret (with a modern addition to the south-west and modern fore-stair). A lintel over the entrance on the north-east side bears the date 1663. A corner stone of the roof has a Douglas heart, and there are other carved stones on the exterior. The Douglas coat of arms and monogrammed initials of Sir Archibald and his wife Dame Rachel Skene are still carved over a fireplace inside. It may be the ‘Denholme House’ listed with 3 hearths on the tax records of 1694. In 1907 the upper level was given by the Palmer-Douglases for use as a village meeting hall, with an outside staircase added. It was used for this purpose until the 1950s. It is now a ‘Class A’ listed building.

West Highchesters (west-hi-ches-turz) n. former name for the main estate at Highchesters, distinguished from the smaller estate of East Highchesters. There were 11 communicants there in 1650, namely Robert Riddell, Maly Cowan, John Riddell, William Riddell, William Brash, Janet Robson, Bessie Riddell, Marion Riddell, Walter Gledstains, Margaret Wilson and Janet Brown. John Hume was tenant in about 1713–21. It was listed among the tenanted farms of Walter Scott of Harden in 1765 and 1788. James Wilson was living there in 1792 (it is ‘Wester Haychesters’ in about 1795). In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Rutherford was tenant there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued at £66 13s 4d, when owned by William Elliot of Wells. It was later owned by Sir William F. Eliott of Stobs. John Armstrong was tenant in at least 1841–1861 (also written ‘Westleys’; it is ‘Westleys’ on Gordon’s c.1590 manuscript map, Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, but as just ‘Lees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Lees (west-leez) n. farm just north of Halirule, which was one of the estates of Hobkirk Parish, recorded before the Reformation. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. James Turnbull held these lands in at least the period 1605 to 1616. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. William Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in about 1663 when it has the same value, which also continued in 1678. Robert and Thomas Caldwell were there in 1694. The lands were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Buckham was Laird there in at least 1738–45. The farm became part of the estate of Wells in 1775. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Rutherford was tenant there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued at £66 13s 4d, when owned by William Elliot of Wells. It was later owned by Sir William F. Eliott of Stobs. John Armstrong was tenant in at least 1841–1861 (also written ‘Westleys’; it is ‘Westleys’ on Gordon’s c.1590 manuscript map, Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, but as just ‘Lees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Lilliesleaf (west-li-leez-leef) n. farm just north of Ha-wick, between the A7 and Appletreehall. In the 16th centuries the lands were known as ‘Wester Moormaw’ and were held by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick from the 1530s, afterwards passing to his illegitimate son James. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Scott ‘in Lies, alias Milma’ was (sometime around 1600) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. The lands here were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 after which they fell within the bounds of Wilton. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 (also spelled ‘Lies’, etc.; it is marked as ‘Westlies’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, but as just ‘Lees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).
the lands of ‘Wester Lillieslie’ called ‘Murieknow’, which lands are called Riddell, were inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father. In 1669 part of the lands of ‘Wester Lillislie lie Murieknow now called Riddell’ were inherited by Sir John Riddell, as well as the remaining 6-pound lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, which were presumably not called Muirknow (it is ‘Westlillisleif’ in 1471 and ‘Wester Lellesleif’ in 1503; it is ‘W: Lilsy or Riddell’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and ‘Riddell or W. Lilsly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

West Linton (west-lin’-in) n. town on the Lyne Water in the old county of Peeblesshire, known for its sheep markets, stone carvers and silver and lead mines. Two well preserved prehistoric burial cairns are in the hills nearby, as well as the remains of old silver and mining operations. A festival associated with the Whipmen, an old horsemen’s society, has been held most years in June since 1803. Population (1991) 1,157.

West Ludge (west-luj, -loj) n. former lodge house for Cavers estate, located by the main road near Deanbrae, at the end of a track leading to Cavers House. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, while today’s maps only show the wood called ‘West Lodge Covert’.

Westly Sike (west-lee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join the Larriston Burn.

West Mains (west-mänz) n. former name for lands owned by the Baron of Hawick on the west side of the Town. This was part of the demesne lands of the Baron, distinct from East Mains, which was to the east of the Town. Rather than being a specific ‘home farm’, this was just the name given to a set of lands. In a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 its detailed outline is shown at that time; it was composed of 2 parts, the largest part bounded by Hawick Common, the River Teviot and the western edge of the Burgh lands, including Myreslawgreen and the Loan, while the smaller part was on the eastern side of the Loan, from Burnflat to about the Kirkwynd, and going all the way down to the Slitrig. Over time parts of the lands were sold to the Burgh or incorporated into neighbouring farms. In 1494 it was given (along with Crumhaugh) by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir James; it is there valued at £5 ‘of old extent’. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick it is listed explicitly among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron. It is named in the 1547 Charter and had a boundary with the Common. It is also listed among the Baron’s properties in a promise of infeftment in 1559 and in the retour of 1572 for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1590 there is a document of rental of the land by Sir James Douglas from Walter Scott, younger. It is described there as a ‘2 merkland’. It probably once formed part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron, and is listed among the Baron’s property in the ratifying Parliamentary Act of 1594. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘possest and wadset’ by Rev. Robert Cunningham, William Ruecastle, James Laing and Walter Scott at West Port. In 1686 it is described as ‘extending to eight husband lands’. In 1675 it was described as ‘extending to 8 husband lands, when there was a ‘wadset’ on it, and it is still recorded among the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1690. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of 186 acres, mostly of ‘corn land’ and ‘moderately good but very stoney’. In the 18th century it was described that the tenants of these lands had similar privileges to the Common as the Burgess of Hawick. Based on the 1767 description of the Common it lay to the west of the Nipknowes by that time. It is unclear when the name ‘West Mains’ ceased to be used to describe lands – ‘Then east the martch dyke with Crumhaugh to the march with the Westmains of Hawick, and along the Westmains dyke down to the Burnfooord . . .’[C&L1767] (it is ‘West Manys’ in 1494 and 1511, ‘West Manys’ in 1511/2 and 1514, ‘West Manys’ in 1514, ‘West Manys’ in 1559 and 1572, ‘West Manys’ in 1594, ‘West-maynes’ in 1615, ‘West Maynes’ in 1686 and ‘Westmains’ in 1767; there are many places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

West Mains (west-mänz) n. name of farm that was formerly part of the Cavers estate. It was once a centre for spinning. It is probably the West in Cavers Parish where William Douglas was tenant in 1745 and 1747. It is on Stobie’s 1770 map, located near the modern farm of Kinninghall. In at least 1794–97 the farmer there was Robert Hall. Andrew Oliver was a farm servant there in 1801.

West Mains (west-mänz) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf. John Scott held 3 pieces of land there, for which he received £40 Scots from the West Mairch (thu-west-märch) n. the West March, consisting of Dumfries & Galloway and neighbouring areas on the Scottish side, generally held by the Maxwells. More specifically it consisted of the valleys of Esk, Ewes (although this was sometimes in the Middle March), Wauchope, Annan and Nith, along with part of Galloway.

West Middle (west-mi-dul) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, just south of Midgard. The name distinguishes it from East Middle. John Turnbull was there in 1694, William Dryden in 1704, Thomas Scott in 1716, William Shiel in 1719, another John Turnbull in 1723, Thomas Scott in 1726, John Douglas in 1744 and Thomas Douglas in 1788–90. Alexander Ferguson was farmer there in at least 1797–1801 and Andrew Ferguson was also there then, with John Ferguson recorded there in 1799 and John and Andrew in 1801 (it is ‘Wester Middle’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and still so marked on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Westermiddle’ in 1694, ‘Westmiddle’ in 1719, ‘Westermiddle’ in 1790 and ‘West Middles’ in 1797).

West Middles (west-mi-dulz) n. farm just south of Lilliesleaf. Robert Stirling junior was carter there in 1799. John Preston was there in the 1860s (there is no obvious connection with East Middle in Cavers Parish; ‘Westermiddles’ and ‘Eastermiddles’ are marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Minti (west-min’-i) n. former farm near Minto village. It was among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545.

the West Nurseries (thu-west-nur-su-reez) n. a former name for the land that became the Buccleuch Playing Fields, now forming the part of Wilton Lodge Park on the south side of the river, also called ‘Wester Nurseries’.

Weston (west-tin) n. Rev. Thomas (16th C.) Parson of Wilton recorded in 1567, perhaps serving until 1574, when he demitted. In 1567 he and Robert Scott of Thirlestane relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorrenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn; he was recorded there as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun’. He held the vicarage teinds of Hassendean in the period 1568–72. Presumably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, aduocat’ was mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, with Sir Walter still owing him for an account. Thomas, advocate, is recorded demitting the vicarage of Hassendean Parish in October 1576, and appears to have been recorded in that benefice from 1568; so he may have held the vicarage of Hassendean for 2 years after he was Parson of Wilton. He is probably the ‘Mr. Thomas Westoun, attornay’ who presented the briefs in Roxburgh Sheriff Court for the serving of heirs to David Scott and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1569. He is probably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoune, advocat’ who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers at Melrose. He may be the same as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, advocat’ who prepared ‘And Inventare of Walter Scot of Branxholm’s evidentis’ in 1577 (also spelled ‘Westoun’).

West Port (west-pör’) n. original entrance to the town from the west and south-west directions, i.e. the Carlisle road. It was once known as the Townhead Port and situated at the foot of the Loan. Work was done on it in 1734. The old gate was removed around 1762, with a jutting stone at pavement level indicating its position, with a matching rybat stone in the Museum. It remained the main entrance to the town from the south until the New Road was opened in 1815. The roadway was widened in 1895, and the Loan/Beaconsfield Terrace junction altered in 1978. A plaque at No. 2 Loan was erected by the Callants’ Club in 1964 to mark the Toll location. The area was home of a branch of the Scott family in the 17th and 18th centuries. James Scott ‘Westport’ was Cornet in 1705. John Clerk was recorded ‘at ye westport’ in 1704, Adam Turnbull was merchant there in 1704 and Thomas Oliver was smith there in 1712 – ‘Fri West Port gate oo’d hear them cum, Playin Rumblin Brig an Dumbarton Drum’ [ABo].

Westport (west-pör’) n. nickname of Walter Scott in the 17th century.

West Port Hoose (west-pör’-hoos) n. sheltered housing built on the site of the former West Port Church in 1971–73, at 19 Drumlanrig Square (also known as West Port Day Unit or West Port Sheltered Homes).
West Port Kirk

West Port Kirk \((\text{west-pör’-kirk})\) \text{n.}\ church near the former western entrance to the town, at the upper left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. It was built in 1866 following the establishment of a Free Church Mission in 1855 (in the building vacated by the stocking-shop of Andrew Haddon). In the early days it was sometimes referred to as the ‘Territorial Church’, to distinguish it from the main Free Church in Town. The building was constructed in a plain Gothic style, and a church hall was added in the 1890s. The congregation merged with St. George’s in 1956 and its War Memorials were moved to that church.

The building was used for a while as a factory, bought by the council in 1961 and demolished to build sheltered housing in 1971. A school associated with the church, taught by Mr. Fowler, ran from 1865–75, when it was merged with Drumlanrig. Kirk Session records for 1859–92 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministry is: R.R. MacQueen 1869–72; Robert Fordyce 1872–93; Alexander Westwater 1894–1913; … Horace Walker 1939–44; Tom Morton 1945–51; … (not to be confused with the West End or ‘Green’ Kirk).

West Port Mission \((\text{west-pör’-mi-shin})\) \text{n.}\ branch of the Free Church established in Walter Haddon’s old stocking-shop in the Fore Raw in 1855, supported by William Kedie and others. It led to the establishment of the West Port Church, which was erected in 1866.

Westport Road \((\text{west-pör’-rōd})\) \text{n.}\ old name (on Wood’s 1824 plan, for example) for what became Beaconsfield Terrace.

Westrop see Wilstop

West Riddell \((\text{west-ri’-dul})\) \text{n.}\ farm on the former Riddell estate. Thomas Orr was farmer there in the 1860s.

Westshiels \((\text{west-sheelz})\) \text{n.}\ farm in Southdean Parish, near Lustruther, now in the middle of Dykeraw Plantation. Patrick Oliver was tenant there in at least 1794–1801, with William Telfer the shepherd in 1797 and Andrew Scott a servant there in 1801. It was farmed by Andrew Common from at least the 1840s to 60s. Part of a polished stone axe was found on the farm about 1974 (also written ‘West Shiels’; it is ‘Westshields’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westside \((\text{west-sid})\) \text{n.}\ street in Denholm that runs along the west side of the Green, and continues south of Main Street.

Westside Mill \((\text{west-sid-mil})\) \text{n.}\ stocking-machine mill in Denholm, on the west side of the Green, behind Greenview. It dates from the late 18th century. It has 3 storeys and small windows for lighting each machine, and represented an early stage in the development of textile factories. It ceased operating as a textile mill in the late 19th century and later became a warehouse for Scott the joiners, then a barn for a nearby farm. Around the 1980s it was converted into a house, preserving the building (it has been locally known as ‘The Old Mill’ and ‘The Stocking Shop’ and has also been referred to as ‘Denholm Mill’, confusing it with the old corn mill near the river).

West Sooth Croft \((\text{west-sooth-kroft})\) \text{n.}\ former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. ‘Wester Southcroft and house’ was valued at £43 18s 1d in 1779 and it is ‘West South Croft and House’ in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. It is ‘Wester south croft’ in 1779, among the lands differentiated by Rev. Robert Elliot, and listed separately from Sooth Croft Park.

West Stewart Place \((\text{west-stew-ur’-plis})\) \text{n.}\ street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, with houses built in 1879, and named after Rev. James Stewart. It contains Kirklands Hotel, Abbeyfield House and Wilton Bowling Club.

West Teviotdale Agricultural Society \((\text{west-teev-yi’-dāl-aw-gree-kul-chu-rul-su-sl’i’-ee})\) \text{n.}\ local farmers’ organisation established by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835. It included the parishes of Ancrum, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Bowden, Cavers, Hawick, Hobkirk, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Roberton, Southdean and Wilton, with its annual meeting being held in Hawick on the 1st Thursday in August. It existed along with Teviotdale Farmers’ Club through the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Its office was listed as Bridge House in 1852, with James Oliver as Secretary and Treasurer. It may have become more of a horticultural society than a farmers’ club. It organised shows in the Volunteer Park until 1955.

West Teviotdale Farmers \((\text{west-teev-yi’-dāl-fer-murz})\) \text{n.}\ West Teviotdale Farmers’ Book Association ran a library, based at 50 High Street, in the late 19th century, and presumably was associated with the Agricultural Society.

West the \((\text{west-thu})\) \text{adv., arch.}\ towards the west, ‘west of the’.

West-the-witter \((\text{west-thu-wi’-ur})\) \text{adj., arch.}\ another form of Wesla or Westlia water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the western side of the Slitrig – ‘...for east the water Alexander Hyslop and William Hardie, and for west the water Peter Scott and James Badie’ [BR1701], ‘Bailly Gledstanes and James Gledstanes, taylor, for west the water, to collect the subscriptions for the bridge’ [BR1740] (cf. East-the-witter).

West Troop o Yeomanry see the Yeomanry

Westwater (west-waw'-ur) n. Rev. Alexander (1857–1941) born in Lochgelly, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College there. He was minister of West Port Church from 1894. He was a member of Hawick Parish Council and gave lectures on social reform. In 1894 he married Agnes C. Dey and in 1899 secondly married Chrissy Henderson. He served at Prestonpans from 1913. He retired to Edinburgh in 1928, where his house on Liberton Brae was called ‘Ruberslaw’.

West Whitfield (west-who'feeld) n. former farmstead south-west of Whitfield, in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn. It was marked ‘Old Whitefield’ on the 1764 map of Wilton Common. Agricultural labourer Robert Glendinning was living there in 1841 (when it is ‘Whitefield West’). Buildings are shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map; a nearby enclosure is also shown in the corner of an adjacent field.

Westwud (west-wud) n. Westwood, a Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie in an Italianate style. It has a striking cast-iron porch, and interior features including a heavily arced staircase topped by a stained-glass cupola. It was built in 1880 for Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk, and his son Robert Purdom also lived there later. Bay windows were added in the early years of the 20th century and in 2007 some windows were restored to match the original style. It is a grade C listed building.

Westwud (west-wud) n. former farmstead on the south-west side of Bonchester Hill. All signs of settlement there have been erased, and it is no longer clear exactly where it was located. However, it was probably on the former ‘hie gait Street to Jedburgh’, which went by the south side of the Hill. Adam Turnbull was tenant there in 1567. Thomas and Harie Turnbull are recorded as Lairds there in 1643, with their lands valued at £40 Scots and £12 Scots, respectively. William Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. The lands were absorbed into the estates of Abbotrule and Wolfelee (it is ‘Westwod’ in 1567 and ‘westwood’ in 1694).

we’t (we’) pp. went – ‘hei we’t ti Wulton Schuil’ (see also we’i).

Wether Law (we-thur-law) n. hill near the boundary of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire. It lies roughly between Lightning Hill and Millstone Edge and reaches a height of 509 m.

wewlock (wi-lok) n., arch. a tool for twisting ropes from straw – ‘Wewlock, an instrument for making ropes of straw, for thatching cornstacks, Teviotd. Eskdale, Ettr. For. also Wewlock. Synon. Thraw-crook, Wyle, Wylie’ [JoJ] (also ‘wewleek’).

wey (wi) v. to weigh – ‘...ye wie the violence o’ your han’s in the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Hye, wei this poak-fih meal, an sei at it’s wecht!’ [ECS], n. an act of weighing – ‘Gie’s a wei ti see what wecht A’ [GW], a weight, particularly in a pair of scales (also written ‘wei’ and ‘wie’; cf. weigh; see also weys).

wey (wi) n. way – ‘Noo, temptation should never be thrown in folk’s road, For, gudesakes, the wey tae destruction’s sae broad’ [BM1900], ‘In fact, ‘...definitely ma biggest hero, for mair weis than a care ti gaun intae ...’ [IHS], said he, ‘we’ve a wey o’ dealin’ Wi’ forritsome callants that come here stealin’!’ [WL] (also spelled ‘weii’).

the Wey-hoose (wi-hoos) n. the Weigh House, formerly occupying the lower level of Hawick’s Tolbooth. In 1727 it was ‘now possessed by Henry Orrok and others, tacksmen of the customs’ when the Council decreed that it be leased. In 1786, when the Duke of Buccleuch gave money towards the erection of the new Town House, it was stated that ‘the tacksman shall possess the weigh-house till such time as the weigh-house falls, or decays so much as to render a new one necessary’. This surveyor of weights and measures was a tenant of the Baron in the 18th century, as a late vestige of the feudal system. In the 19th century the last 2 superintendents were James Kennedy and then George Hunter.

weys (wiiz) n., pl., arch. a weighing machine, scales (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘weiz’ and ‘weis’).

wey the butter, wey the cheese (wi-thu-bu'-ur-wi-thu-cheez) n., arch. a game played between 2 children, linking arms and picking each other up on their backs by turns, while singing something like ‘Wey the butter, wey the cheese, yow up, mei doon, An this is the road ti London toon’ (see also rockety-rove).

Whack (whawk) n. nickname for several of the Scott family who were milliners at 47 High Street in the early 19th century.

whacked oot (whawk’d-oo’) pp., adj., arch. tired, exhausted, dead beat.

Wha Daur Meddle Wi Me? (wha-dawr-me-dul-wi-mee) n. Border ballad about ‘Wee Jock Elliot’. The refrain is a Scots version of the Latin motto of the royal coat of arms ‘Nemo me impune lacessit’. Apparently the tune was played when the Liddesdale men marched to Hawick to muster for the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804. When Dr. John Leyden heard of this in a letter read to him at his sick-bed in India he leapt out of bed to sing the song with wild and enthusiastic gesticulations – ‘Oh, ma name it’s wee Jock Elliot, an’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’[T].

wha-div-ee-caaed (wha-di-vee-kawd) n. whatchamacallit, something whose name has been forgotten, thingumajig, ‘...unless its a box that they’re nintento whatdiveecaued comes in’[We].

whae (whâ) pron. who – ‘whae din eet?’, ‘whae, mei?’, ‘whae let off and didnit let on?’, ‘...Lang life tae the lasses whae bussed it wrong, my lad!’ ‘The referee’, says Dye[DH] (E.C. Smith notes that it was not used in his day as a relative pronoun, but only interrogatively; see also wha, which is the form prevalent elsewhere in Scotland, and also the older quha).

whae’d (whâld) contr. who’d, who had – ‘whae’d hev thought it?’, who would – ‘whae’d dae seek a thing?’; ‘A wee group came in 1926, relatives o the men whae’s been killed ...’[IWL].

or auld or guid or bad Dan happ’d thm wi’ his spade’ [AO].

Whames (whāms) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, between Whithope and Todshawhaugh. It is probably the seat of Adam of ‘Wanmæs’, recorded around the 1190s when lands adjacent to his were granted to the Priory of St. Andrews by Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick. It is probably also the seat for ‘Henry (or perhaps John) del Whommes’ who was on the 1303/4 inquest in inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It was owned by Robert Scott of Muirhouse and Whames in the late 15th century, probably passing to his son, George Scott of Borthaugh. Robert Scott was recorded as tenant in 1501. It is listed in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615 among the lands that the Baron of Hawick held in ‘tenantry’. This may be the lands called ‘Quhomnis’ in 1528 when passed from John Scott of Borthaugh to his brother Walter. It is possibly the ‘Whelley’, which was burned by the English along with Branxholme and Whithesters in 1533/4. The farm was among those belonged to Scott of Buccleuch, which were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was William Scott, and other residents were ‘Willie’ Scott ‘called of Todshawhaugh’, John Scott and William Hall. The year before the farm had been among those whose crops were destroyed just before the harvest by a group of Englishmen supported by the Kers. Scott of Satchells lists ‘Scott of Whames’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, and descended from the Northhouse Scotts (this applying to some time around 1600). In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it is estimated to pay ‘40 merks, vicarage 8 merks’. In 1650 it is recorded as ‘Quhames’ on a list of communicants of the Borthwick and western Wilton Parish; 8 ‘communicants’ were recorded there, namely William Laidlaw, William Stewart, John Cook, Patrick Cook, Marion Hardie, Katherine Laidlaw, Marion Scott and Margaret Pott. It is likely the same as the ‘Quhalmes’ which were part of ‘Weyneslands’ in the Barony of Hawick, subject of several writs of 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers. In 1672 and 1673 it was the ‘Rowme of Whelms’, formerly possessed by William Scott, which was leased to Ninian Elliot along with Todshawhill. In the 1686 confirmation of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is recorded that this farm was ‘sometyme occupied by Robert Langlands in Todshawhaughs’.

It is also recorded that Robert Laidlaw was tenant about that time (unless this is an error for ‘Langlands’). Originally part of Hawick Parish, it became part of the new Parish of Robertson in 1689/90. In 1691 it was recorded that ‘Whelms dissolved from this rental and annexed to the new rental of the Lordship of Hawick’, suggesting that it was administered along with Hawick properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch thereafter. It was listed among the Buccleuch properties in 1707, when valued at £124 5s 8d. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 105 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill and Whithope; it was also stated that there were trees along the Whithope Burn there, but no farmhouse at that time. It was leased along with Todshawhaugh from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 and 1751 by James Grieve, by Walter Grieve in 1792 and by Robert Scott in 1802. It was still valued at £124 5s 8d in 1788 and 1811. It is uncertain exactly where this farm was, but it came between Todshawsaugh and Whithope in the 1686 rental list. The small stream ‘Holm Sike’, to the east of Whithope is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and may be the same name (it is ‘Qhames’ on a 1650 parish map, is marked ‘Whomms’ on Blaen’s 1654 map, between Todshawaugh and Whithope, close to the Borthwick, and ‘Whelms’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘quhamys’ in 1493, ‘Quhomnis’ in 1501, ‘quhomys’ in 1502, ‘Qhummys’ in 1505/6, ‘Qhumys’ in 1508/9 and 1511, ‘Qhumnyms’ in 1510, ‘Qhommys’ in 1517, transcribed as the ‘Quhannys’ in 1549, ‘Qhomis’ and ‘Qhumys’ in 1572, ‘Quhawnes’ in 1594, ‘Qhummys’ in 1615, ‘Qhomis’ in 1627, ‘Quhalmes’ in 1654/5 and 1686, ‘Quomes’ in 1663, ‘Whelms’ in 1686, ‘Whelms’ in 1677 and 1744, ‘Whelms’ in 1705 and 1751, ‘Whelms’ in 1707, ‘Helms’ in 1802 and ‘Whalms’ in 1811; the name could be related to Scots ‘wham’, meaning a broad hollow through which a stream runs).

Whames (whāms) n. Adam (12th C.) recorded in about the 1190s in a charter of Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick, when he granted lands adjacent to those of Adam of ‘Wanmes’ to St. Andrews Priory. Henry (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Hommes’ in 1296 when he paid hommage to Edward I. He was also recorded as ‘Henry del Whommes’ on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. However, there seems to be confusion over whether he was John or Henry. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Adam. His seal attached to the Ragman Rolls shows a stringed hunting horn and the name ‘S’HENRICI DE WOVUMVS’. It seems likely that his lands were Whames in the Borthwick valley, but there are probably other possibilities.

whan (whan) adv., arch., poet. when – ‘Whan wearyly the streams wad flow, And sad was Nature a’ and still ...’[AD], ‘Auld grannie tells her stories best whan seait at the fire ...’[JJ], ‘And whan the mild sunbeams began to smile ...’[WiSp], ‘An’ whan the bonnie gowden sun i’ the lang bright simmer days ...’[VW], ‘A vast o folk dinna ken whan they’re weel off!’[ECS], ‘... and in summer, whan the smuists are wearest ...’[ECS], ‘Whan wast ye said ye went away?’[WL], ‘To kill or free I forrit ran – Whan on my shooser was his han’’[DH].

whankit (whang-kee’,-ki’) pp., poet. beaten, flogged – ‘But tho’ I get my hurdies whankit, An’ wi’ the hare-brain’d core be rankit ...’[JR], pulled out or thrust in with force – ‘The dentist whankit oot ma tuith’[GW].

Wharton (whar’-in) n. Sir Thomas 1st Lord Wharton of Helagh (c.1495–1568) son of Sir Thomas, he was Deputy March Warden under Lord Scrope. In 1542 he described a plan to ‘burn the towne of Awyke’ in West Tevidell’ in an attempt to punish the rievers of that area. The plan was further discussed in 1543/4, but it is unclear if actually happened. However, he did send a force to attack Liddesdale at that time, burning 19 houses, killing 2 men, and taking 3 prisoners, along with 240 head of cattle and a great amount of goods; as a result Hermitage Castle was sent pieces of artillery by the Scots. He was made Warden of English West March in 1547. He also fought at Solway Moss. In 1553 he was made Deputy Warden General of all the Marches under the Duke of Northumberland. He was later Deputy Warden to the English Middle and East Marches until his death. He married Eleanor Stepletton of Wighill and was succeeded by his son Sir Thomas. His tomb can still be seen in Kirkby Stephen Church, although the locals still blame him for demolishing the village of Wharton because it was a blight on the view from his house.

whasae (wha-sä) pron., poet. whose, whoever – ‘Whasae slanners his neebers unnerhan’, him wull I sneg aff ...’[HSR]; whatnih (whaw-nil) adj., arch. what kind of, what description of – ‘What’n a buik ha’ ee boucht now?’ [GW] (also written ‘what’n a’ or whatna’; cf. what’n).

Whaton (wha-in) n. William (17th/18th C.) fiddler in Hawick. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whitegates’. He was recorded in 1718 when rebuked by the Hawick Session. He apparently rode through the town in a military style outfit, including a sword, boots, spurs and red clothes, with James Oliver (the Town Officer) playing before him, scaring some of the townspeople. He was ordered ‘to be summoned when in ye toun’, suggesting he lived elsewhere and in 1719 was ordered to appear before the Presbytery (the name may be ‘Wharton’, ‘Whitton’ ‘Whitson’ or similar).

Whaup o’ the Rede (whawp-o-thu-reed) n. epic poem published by Will Ogilvie in 1909, subtitled ‘A Ballad of the Border Raiders’. It tells the story of a child who was accidentally taken along with the spoils of a raid into England by Walter Scott of Harden and his men. The story derives from an old tradition that Mary Scott ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ raised such a child, who became a poet and wrote several of the Border ballads. The book was reprinted in a facsimile edition by the Will H. Ogilvie Memorial Trust in 2019, to mark the sesquicentenary of the poet’s birth – ‘Well did they name thee ‘Whaup’, I trow, For a very whaupe o’ the moor art thos’ [WHO].

Whaupshaw (whawp-shaw) n. isolated farmstead in the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. William Inglis was shepherd there in 1851 and 1861. It may also have been known as Milstonshiel (it is ‘Whap Shaw’ in 1851).

whaur (whawr) adv., arch. where – ‘Whaur Teviot, Gala, or Jed’s bonnie streams ...’ [WS], ‘...Rypit the reid-cheeket aipples whaur they

hung [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

the Wheathole (thu-whee-lôô) n. name used up until the end of the 18th century for the area corresponding to Trinity Gardens, named presumably for being a hollow in which wheat and other crops once grew. It was owned by William Turner in 1767, in a description of privileges to Hawick Common enjoyed by various tenants. The East End Meeting House (later East Bank Church) was built there around 1780 – ‘The Burgher congregation assembling at Wheathole was the second dissenting body which obtained a footing in Hawick’ [WNK] (sometimes just ‘Wheathole’ or ‘the wheat hole’).

wheech (wheed) v. to move quickly, especially with a whizzing sound – ‘she wheeched the bottle away away afore A could git a drink’ (also sometimes pronounced wheek and related to wheeg).

wheeg (wheeg) v., arch. to jog, frisk, dance about – ‘...coonjert wui its moween an its skeeletin-maigs, aa the braw folk wheegin an dancin’’ [ECS] (also whig).

wheegle (whee-gül) v., arch. to swindle – ‘She wheegled ’im oot o’ the siller’ [GW], to cajole, wheedle, get round a person by insinuation.

Wheelans (whee-linz) n. James, C.B.E. ‘Jim’ (??–2004) born in Hawick, he graduated in law from Edinburgh University in 1935. He became a solicitor, ultimately being President of the Law Society of Scotland. He became Lieutenant-Colonel during WWII, being Commandant at Brussels after its occupation, for which he was awarded the M.B.E. His private legal career started in Galashiels. He became involved in the Law Society, and served as President 1974–76, for which he received the C.B.E. (the surname is a variant of Whullans).

the Wheel Causeway (thu-wheel-kaw-zee) n. former name for the Wheel Causeway, used by locals in Southdean Parish – ‘He also says that some stones of the ‘wheel causey’ were torn up to build the faulds’ [GT].

the Wheel Kirk (thu-wheel-kirk) n. former chapel in Castleton Parish, which may have once been the main one in the area. It was situated near the Wheel Causeway and not far from Deadwater at the head of the Liddel. Apparently Edward I spent the night here when he was on a pilgrimage to St. Ninian’s shrine in Galloway in 1296. It is also mentioned in a document of 1346, where ownership is stated to belong to William of Emeldon. The nearby village was called ‘Whële’ and gave its name to the church. In 1307/8 Adam Liddesdale captured an English chaplain near there. It was given to William de Sandeford by Edward III in 1347. The tower of Peel (or Baxtonlees) also stood nearby. As part of Castleton, the revenues were connected with Jedburgh Abbey before the Reformation. The church was already disused when Castleton was united into a single parish in 1604, and is still shown on Blaeu’s c.1648 map. Over and Nether Wheelkirk and again, referred to there as ‘Wyeł’. It was a route later used in rievings, and was first referred to as the ‘Wheel Causeway’ perhaps in 1533. Part of it was also used as a drove road in the 17th and 18th centuries. Sections can still be made out, but because of the multiple uses over many centuries, it is impossible to trace the age of specific parts. In Southdean Parish the route north passes through Wauchope Forest via Wardmoor Hill and then appears to separate into 3 paths, one going slightly west to cross the eastern slopes of Wolfeele Hill, another proceeding more northward and the third going further east over Highlee Hill and Lustruthur farm. Other branches are said to follow along each side of the upper Jed Water, one past Westshields and Dykeraw Tower and the other over Millmoor Rig. Sections are also hard to trace because there were actually multiple alternative routes in places, e.g. on Causeway Rig in Southdean Parish, where there are at least 2 sets of tracks. A description of Roxburghshire in 1649 gives this area as the source of the Jed Water (it is ‘Quheill Causey’ in 1649; it is marked ‘ye wheele Cawsey’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map; the origin of the name may be the Old English for ‘wheel’, but it seems unlikely that this was because the track was suitable for wheeled carts, as has been suggested).

the Wheel Kirk (thu-wheel-kirk) n. former chapel in Castleton Parish, which may have once been the main one in the area. It was situated near the Wheel Causeway and not far from Deadwater at the head of the Liddel. Apparently Edward I spent the night here when he was on a pilgrimage to St. Ninian’s shrine in Galloway in 1296. It is also mentioned in a document of 1346, where ownership is stated to belong to William of Emeldon. The nearby village was called ‘Whële’ and gave its name to the church. As part of Castleton, the revenues were connected with Jedburgh Abbey before the Reformation. The church was already disused when Castleton was united into a single parish in 1604, and is still shown on Blaeu’s c.1648 map. Over and Nether Wheelkirk and ‘Wheeland’ were once among lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. They are probably the ‘Quheilekirk and Quiyteland’ (mis-transcribed) referred to among lands granted to Scott of Harden by John Home, Abbot of Jedburgh, around the 1530s. The lands there were listed in 1632 among those owned by the Earl of Buccleuch. However the lands of ‘Quheilkirk’ and ‘Quheilelands’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Over and Nether Whillkirk’ was listed (along with Wheellands, Wormsleuch, Abbotsike and Abbotshaws) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653 and by her sister Anne in 1661. ‘Kirk Wheilland’ was listed along with ‘Nether Wheill’ in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch among the Scott possessions in the ‘lordschip of Liddisdaill, abacie of Jedburgh, and schirred dome of Roxburgh’. Gravestones were still visible in the Old Statistical Account of 1793, and in 1880 the outline of the church was clearly delineated by changes in the grass. A holy water basin from the church was used as a dish in one of the cottages of Peel farm, but had been broken up before 1851. An old quern was also said to have been taken from the site, and several stones in the nearby sheepfold showed carvings. There is little remaining of the church or village, but an investigation was carried out by the Hawick Archeological Society in 1914. A fragment of carved stone (specifically a vountsoir) from the church is in Hawick Museum. The site was robbed for stone, and by the 19th century all sign of tombstones in the graveyard had disappeared. The remains are probably about 100 m from the north-east corner of the sheepfold, the building being about 12 m by 6 m, with an enclosure on its north-west side, 20 m by 15 m, possibly being the graveyard. There are also other enclosures, banks and quarry-pits in the area, probably associated with a former farmstead and perhaps the older village. Unfortunately much of the site has been destroyed by forestry ploughing. One theory of the origin of the surname ‘Whillans’ is that it comes from ‘Quheilelands’, being the lands near here – ‘At Wheel-Kirk, within the Catrail, Priest David had thirty-and-three Gude nowt that were stown head and tail By Percy o’ Keeldartanelee’ [T] (the name itself is of obscure origin, but probably derives from the Old English ‘hweol’, meaning wheel, perhaps deriving from a circular camp; it first occurs in 1296 and is still marked on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland; spelling variants include ‘Wheilkirk’, ‘Whel’ and ‘Quheilekirk’; also written ‘Wheel Kirk’, without the article, and ‘Wheelkirk’ without the space).

Wheellands (wheel-lindz) n. former name for lands near the Wheel Kirk, usually referred to along with those of the old church.

Wheel Rig (wheel-rig) n. ridge in the northeastern part of Castleton Parish, between the Wormsleuch and Peel Burns, and with the Wheel Causeway running across it. It was ‘Quheilrig’ in 1623 when Adam Colart was there. An old enclosure there is of unknown date. A little further north, at Wheelrig Head there is a linear earthwork, running about 650 m. The area was once used as a meeting point for shepherds in the area, who would gather there twice a year to exchange stray sheep (also written ‘Wheelrig’).

wheen (wheen) n., adj., arch. a few, several, indeterminate but reasonably large number, bunch – ‘How mony laives hae ye? An’ they said, Se’en, an’ awheine sma’ fishes’ [HSR], ‘Peisoop, a wheen grand thing A faand thum’ [ECS], ‘A mairst eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds’ [ECS], ‘..set a guid wheen hertstrings quiverin’ [ECS], ‘..bit they left quite a wheen offsprings ahint thum that still leeve in the toon’ [BW1979], ‘..By a wheen o’ soople shanks’ [WL], ‘Let water-drinkers rant and whine, They’re but a wheen conceited asses’ [GWe] (from Anglo-Saxon: sometimes followed by ‘of’ and sometimes not; it can be hard to tell if the word is being used as a noun or an adjective).

call the Wheenge (thu-wheeng) n. sometimes nickname for Sir Thomas Henderson used by his workers.

wheenie (whee-nee) n., poet. a little bit, small amount – ‘..O’ days a wheenie warm, the sun sae unco bright’ [WFC].

wheepit (whee-pee’, -pi’) pp., poet. whipped – ‘Toon as a teapot newly dreepit, Ae single plack, or I’ll be wheepit!’ [JoHa] (cf. whuppit).

wheeple (whee-pul) v., arch. to chirp or squeak, said of birds, fowls, mice, etc., to whistle shrilly – ‘Wheeple, to whistle with a shrill melancholy note, as plovers, &c., Roxb. Clydes.’ [JoJ], to whine or whimper.

wheesht (wheesht, weesht) n., interj. silence, quiet, lussh, shush – ‘wheesht, wull ee no?’, ‘haud yer wheesht’, ‘Wheesht, ye daft haveril, gie us facks ..’ [WNK], ‘Mam – whae was ma faither?’
Where Tummels Doon (wār-teev-yī'-tu-mulz-doon) n. song written for the Bright Eyed Daughters by Alan Brydon.

whew (hwew) v., arch. to howl, yelp – ‘As he bruisst and whewed the bullet-shells, and bang’t the drum away’ [DH] (cf. yuoot).

whey (hī) n. whey – ‘And bonny scab, bairn-high. Whiter than whey, On a gryn simmer’s day Wi’ a tear in its ei’ [DH] (note the pronunciation).

whey-brose (hī-bros) n., arch. a dish made by boiling whey with meal and milk (also called float-whey).

whey-sey (hī-sī) n., arch. a tub in which milk is curdled (in [HAST1910]).

the which ([θu-chich] adj., pron. which – ‘The which day the Baillies and Council unanimously appoint the two present magistrates of Hawick . . .’ [BR], ‘The qch day Robert Welsh in Faulnash . . .confest his guilt of fornication with Isbel Batie . . .’ [PR1720] (once used in a relative adjectival sense with the definite article; also shortened in various forms; see qhich and whilk).

whidder (wī-dur) conj., poet. whither – ‘Whidder is they beloofet gane, O thou fairst amang wemen?’ [HSR], ‘Whidder the clans gae up, the clans o’ the Lord . . .’ [HSR] (cf. whather).

whiff (whīf) interj. euphemistic ‘hell’, used to express scorn or disagreement – ‘ee er whiff’ (cf. the more common whuff).

whiffinger (whīf-ing-ur) n., arch. a worthless person, neer-do-well – ‘Waffinger, Whiffinger, a vagabond, a worthless vagrant, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

whig (whīg) v., arch. to jog, move at a steady pace, frisk about – ‘To whig awa’, to move at an easy and steady pace, to jog, Liddesdale’ [JoJ] (also wheeg).

whig (whīg) n., arch. a member of the Presbyterian Church – ‘Now learned Sir, put on your wig, The story’s done, and I’m a whig’ [JR] (formerly the word was applied to those who signed the National Covenant, later to those who were anti-Jacobite and eventually came to be an informal synonym for Liberal in politics).

whigmaleerie (whig-ma-lee-ree) n., arch. a vagary, whim, a fanciful piece of ornamentation (see also kickmaleerie).

whiles (whilz) adv. sometimes, occasionally, at times – ‘...Tho’ whyles mysel’ I tak a pouring, A wee bit gill; An’ whiles wi’ Meg – but there’s nae curing O’ ilka ill’ [JR], ‘For ane that lo’ed ye dear, Ye’ll whiles drap a tear’ [JTe], ‘...An’ whyles ne’er a word he can find oot to say, For glentin’ an’ glimin’ at Meggie M’Givelry’ [JoHa], ‘...An’ whiles we leuch, an’ whiles we grat’ [JJ], bide an tak’ it hooley, I am no’ sure but I can rede it oot ...’ [JoHa] ‘Whiles found half-dead, just in his sark ...’ [RDW], ‘...but the meat’s whiles in ane door and the mouth in the other’ [RM], ‘And whiles wi’ freends frae over the main Auld memories to revive again’ [RH], ‘...Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o’er some pebbly bar’ [JCG], ‘And whiles in the glooming gray, Or the mirk afore the dawn ...’ [TK], ‘...Whiles drank a stowp wi’ Dandie, And saw the yeomen thrang’ [DH], ‘The Dean’s still fine ...’ [JL], ‘Yiung Scramfeast, Your whingers with unering speed, Plunge within the freedom of Hawick’ [BR1639], ‘And if whinger’ ‘ [BR], ‘...Thomas Olipher actit himself on Ainslie’s 1773 map’.

whilom (whi-lom) adv. poet. sometimes, at an earlier time – ‘Where Hazledutha’s crystal tide Winds through its rural vale, Whilom an ancient hermit staid, The subject of my tale’ [JTe].

whimmer (whi-mur) n., arch. to whimper, whine, go about complaining – ‘To whimmer, to cry feebly, like a child, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

whin (whin) n. gorse, furze, thorny shrub with yellow flowers – ‘I hear the linites in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘I follow Teviot frae the heid, I ken each bend and whin ...’ [JCa], ‘The skylark sings his praises loud Above the whins, so sweet, The rising Heap Hills smile and laugh Where happy couples meet’ [WFC].

Whinfield (whun-, whin-feeld) n. former farm near Synton, east of Ashkirk. John Scott was farmer there in 1797 and John junior was also there in the same year. John Nichol (d.1828) was tenant there. Thomas Hobkirk and family were there in 1841 and John Scott in 1851 and 1861. It is described in the 1863 Ordnance Survey Name Book as consisting of a row of thatched cottages, 1-storey high, with a blacksmith’s shop attached, and occupied by farm labourers. A farm of the same name near St. Boswells was owned by the Scotts of Harden until sold off in about 1920 (the name is presumably related to gorse; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

whing (whing) n., arch. a leather bootlace – ‘For gray thrid whings ...2d’ [HAST1972] (also whaing and whang and whyng).

whinger (whing-ir) n., arch. a short stabbing sword – ‘...in Edinburgh Gib Elliott boght ane quhingear and brought it to the deponer and Robin Young ...’ [SB1624], ‘...much more primitive than the sword ...such as ...’ane whinger’ [BR], ‘...Thomas Olipher actit himself not to weir nor carie ane whinger about him within the freedom of Hawick’ [BR1639], ‘And if the bull’s ill-omen’d head Appear to grance the feast, Your whingers with unering speed, Plunge in each neighbour’s breast’ [JL], ‘Yiung Scrammeldykes had a whynger Danglin’ by his syde ...’ [WiSp].

whink (whingk) n., arch. a stifled bark, yelp – ‘A little, wee creaturie, ...coming straight for him, whyles gie’in a whink o’ a greet’ [HAST1922], v., poet. to yelp, bark in a suppressed manner – ‘Butte aye he ran with whinkin scream, Till he drappit in a swoone’ [JTe].

Whinney Cleuch

Windy Knowe and running roughly westwards, just to the north of Thorlieshope.

Whinney Cleuch (whi-nee-kloogh) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley, joining the river on the north side between Meadshaw and Craik. It is fed by Moss Sike on the north side. It may be the ‘Quhynincleuch’ where ‘Paltt Gavinslok’ is recorded in 1586/7. ‘Jok Scot, called the Stowre of Quhynincleuch’ was recorded in 1600. The farm there was listed in the 1718 survey along with Craik. The lands there were leased from the Buccleuch Estates by Walter Scott of Merrylaw in 1744. The farm of ‘Whinnycleugh’ is valued along with Craik and Meadshaw at about £667 in 1785 and 1802, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll (it may be the same as Wormiecleuch; it is ‘Winniecleuch’ in 1718 and ‘Whinniecleugh’ in 1744; the name presumably means the gorse-clad stream; it is probably unrelated to Whinny Park).

Whinny (whi-nee) adj. covered with gorse – ‘Ye whinmie knowes and craggy glens, The sedgy lake and haz'ly shaw’ [JoHa], ‘The Millers Knowes are green again, And whinny banks their gold display ...’ [WP] (also written ‘whinnie’).

Whinny Park (whi-nee-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead near Whitchesters. The lands of part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The lands of ‘Mabenlaw and Highchesters Whinny-park’ were valued at £327 13s 4d in 1788 and in 1811 at £312. It seems easy to confused with Whinney Cleuch, but is probably unrelated (it is ‘Whinny park’ in 1779).

whirken (whir-kin) v., arch. to choke, suffocate, particularly with smoke – ‘Butte a rumbling noise they hearde aneathe, And a whirk'ning reek they fand ...’ [JTe] (J. Jamieson notes, perhaps in error, ‘thwricken’ in use in Teviodale; also whurken).

whirkens (whir-kinz) n., pl., arch. the hips or buttocks – ‘I'll whither your whirkins to ye’ [JoJ].

whirl see whurl

whirlagigg (whir-la-gig) n., arch. a whirligig, spinning toy, roundabout, hectic thing – ‘...if aw got the chance an’ was yibble tae participate in the whirlagigg o’ fun ...’ [BW1939].

Whirter Dykes (whir-tur-diks) n. alternative name for Thorterdykes (mentioned by William Norman Kennedy in 1863).

Whisgills (whiz-gilz) n. farm south of Newcastleton, on the Tinnis Burn. It was once home of a branch of the Armstrongs. In 1541 the lands of ‘Over Guhisgillis, Nether Guhisgillis, Purvangen et Vtnomound’ were valued at 9 merks and tenanted by Bartolomew and Ninian Armstrong. Adam Armstrong of Whisgills is recorded in 1581, ‘Lancie’ of Whisgills was one of the Armstrongs accused by the English of raiding near Bewcastle in 1587 and the ‘the Whisgills’ was included among Scotsmen accused of another raid in 1588. ‘John of the Whisgills’ (probably also an Armstrong) is recorded in 1601. Thomas Wilson was possessor of both Over and Nether Whisgills in 1632, with a separate entry for just Whisgills under the possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. John, son of William Wigham in Nether Whisgills is recorded in 1642. Robert Oliver and Alexander Wilson were recorded as Nether Whisgills in 1694 and Robert Blaiklaw and William Armstrong in 1698. John Murray was farmer at Whisgills in at least the period 1788–91. Thomas Murray was farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still farmer in the 1830s. John Murray was servant there in 1799 and 1801. James Murray was farmer in 1861 and David Murray was there later. The New Statistical Account describes in 1839 how there was a cairn where ‘the quantity of stones is immense, and they are mostly of very large size’, with a 5 foot high standing stone nearby; this could be the cairns and standing stones noted on modern maps to the south of Tinnis Hill, just over the border into Dumfriesshire. The top stone of a quern from near the farm is in Hawick Museum (it is ‘Quhisgillis’ in 1581, ‘Whisgills’ in 1632, ‘Quhisgills’ in 1642, ‘netheruhiisgils’ in 1694 and ‘Whisgilles’ in 1797; it is ‘ye whiskills’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whisgills Edge (whiz-gilz-ej) n. hilly region on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, to the south-west of the farm of Whisgills (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey of the farm of Nether Whisgills).

whisht (whisht) interj. silence, be quiet – ‘Whisht! I hear his doggie barkin’, – Yon’s his bonnet on the hill’ [JT], ‘...Whisht, bairnies, whisht! while frae her e’en Tears on the hearth-stane fa’’ [TCh] (variant of wheesht).

whist drive (whist-driv) n. a group of people playing progressive whist. This was a very popular form of entertainment in the early-to-mid 20th century. There were whist nights organised by several of the mill social clubs etc., and it was possible to play almost every night. There were Whitcastle Hill

Whitcastle Fort (whi’-law-sul-för’) n. hill-fort just to the south of Denholmhill farm, on the north-western slopes of Ruberslaw. It has been mostly destroyed by Denholmhill Quarry, but a roughly 60m long rampart on the north side of quarry still exists. It is unclear if the site is a genuine hill-fort, or a mediæval fortified house.

Whitcastle Hill (whi’-law-sul-hil) n. hill between Chapelhill farm and Branhholm Easter Loch, containing several earthworks and settlements, which are extremely clear in aerial photographs. It appears to have formerly been known as simply ‘Castle Hill’. The ridge on the east side of the summit is the location for a particularly good example of Iron Age earthworks, consisting of a fort and 6 smaller earthworks. The fort is about 65m by 40m, with double ramparts and an entrance at the south-west. The other earthworks are of a range of sizes and shapes, some appearing contemporary with the fort and some later. There is also a linear earthwork round the ridge to the north, with a sharp bend in it. A finger ring found here was said to be perhaps Roman. There is another earthwork south-east of the summit, on a ridge sloping to the north-east, much denuded by ploughing. It is probably the remains of a settlement, internally about 47m by 87m and containing 3 possible hut scoops. On the south-eastern slopes, just north of the road, about 300m south-west of Chapelhill farmhouse, are the remains of a settlement, known as ‘the Clints’. About half a kilometer to the west, and also just north of the road, is another similar settlement on an oval rocky knoll. It measures about 32m by 27m and has an unnamed tributary (possibly Whitcastle Sike) of the Newmill Burn passing round its west side. There are also archaeological remains on the neighbouring Todshaw Hill, and a little to the south was the location of a former chapel, possibly also built on the site of one more fort (the name is likely related to the nearby ‘Whitehope’ and ‘Whitrig’ as well as the former ‘Whitlaw’ which was probably nearby).

Whitchesterhoose (whi-ches-turz-hoos) n. recorded as ‘Whitchesterhouse’ in 1545 on the list of farms and towers in Teviotdale that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men. It is

Whitchester see Whitchesters

Whitchester (whi-ches-tur) n. farm in Berwickshire, not to be confused with Whitchesters near Hawick. It lies on the north side of Black Hill, about 8km north-west of Duns. The farmhouse was converted into a mansion in the late 1800s (it is ‘Whytchester’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Whitchester-holm (whi-ches-tur-ōm) n. farm tenanted by Philip ‘Faulo’ (probably ‘Fawlaw’) about 1510 when 4 horses were stolen from there by associates of John Dalgleish. The place is recorded as ‘Quhitchester-holme’, and it seems reasonable to associate it with Whitchesters, since Branhholm is mentioned in the same document and Philip Fawlaw is also recorded being attacked while riding to Branhholm in 1502. It was also among the farms burned by the English in 1533/4 (it is ‘Whichestre-helme’ in 1533/4; possibly related to ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land near a river).

Whiteacre (whi-tu-kur) n. Harry (1944–2020) played rugby for the High School first team when just a 3rd-year schoolboy, then turned out for the P.S.A. and the Y.M., before starting with Hawick R.F.C. in 1963. He went on to play 109 times for the Greens and was Captain in the 1967/8 season. He was also part of the Hawick Sevens team that won 10 successive Borders tournaments in 1966–67. He played for the South of Scotland, but was never capped for his country, being said by many to have been the best rugby player never to have played for Scotland. As a scrum-half, he had a memorable partnership with Colin Telfer. In 1968 (to the shock of many in Hawick) he moved away to become a professional rugby league player for Workington Town, then for York. After suffering several injuries, he retired from rugby and qualified as an osteopath, practicing back in Hawick from his house on Beaconsfield Terrace. He was also an accomplished golfer, being opening batsman for Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club and scored a hat-trick for the Albert when asked to fill in at the last minute. He also had a bookmaking business on Baker Street, as well as being known as a great reader with a large book collection. He was named as scrum-half in an all-time ‘dream team’ compiled at a dinner at Mansfield Park in 2013.

Whita Monument (whi-ta-mo-new-min’) n. 100ft obelisk erected to Gen. Sir John Malcolm in 1835 on Whita Hill above Langholm. It is locally referred to as simply ‘the Monument’.

Whiteacres (whi-tu-kur) n., arch. short form of Whit-sunday.

Whit (whi’) adj., arch. white – ‘Payd to James Simson for lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the weather-kok . . . ’ [BR1731] (see also quhyt).

prizes for the winners and often a booby prize also. It was effectively replaced by bingo from around 1960.

Whit (whi’, whit) n., arch. short form of Whit-sunday.

Whitchesterhoose

Whitchesterhoose (whi-ches-turz-hoos) n. recorded as ‘Whitchesterhouse’ in 1545 on the list of farms and towers in Teviotdale that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men. It is listed right before Timpendean, suggesting this is a place in Bedrule Parish.
Whitchester Lane

Whitchester Lane (whi-ches-tur-lân) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, just before Whitchester Street.

Whitchester Retreat (whi-ches-tur-ree-tree) n. Whitchester Christian Retreat and Guest House, located at Borthaugh House (and not Whitchesters, confusingly).

Whitchesters (whi-ches-turz) n. farm in the hills to the south of Branxholme, with a hill-fort nearby. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 243 acres, bounded by Alton Croft, Hawick Common, Newbigging, Raesknowe and the River Teviot. The lands were held by the St. Michael family from before 1183 until about 1445, when they were forfeited. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. In 1399 Elizabeth St. Michael, widow of John Ker, resigned her lands there to have them granted to her new husband, John Maxwell of Pollock. In 1455 John of St. Michael was attested to have inherited his father's lands there, valued at £20 Scots (and so may have been in dispute). The lands were granted by James II to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1455, along with some annual rents in Hawick. The lands were held of the superior on payment, if asked, of a silver 'denarius' on the Feast of Pentecost. Technically it was for a while a 'Lordship', within the Barony of Branxholme. The traditional Lairdship of Whitchester (usually not plural) was transferred to the Barony of Branxholme in 1463, and is now held by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1470 the lands were promised as part of a marriage contract (between the heir of Douglas of Drumlanrig and a daughter of Scott of Buccleuch), to be held in ward and relief by William Douglas of Drumlanrig and his heirs. In 1484/5 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh had a charter of the lands and Lordship from his father David of Branxholme. He still held the lands in 1500 when he surrendered them to Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew) as security for a loan; the lands of Whitchesters are mentioned, along with 'the husband lands of the town of Quhitchester'. Adam Scott was recorded there in 1502. The Scotts of Whitchesters are described in 1507 as possessing a tower in Hawick 'between the bridges', one of these presumably being the 'Auld Brig', but it is a mystery what the other one could have been. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick, i.e. Douglas of Drumlanrig; this continued until at least 1615. It could be that the Douglases and Scotts both held part of the lands at the same time, since it was included in the list of lands inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (from his great-uncle David Scott) in 1574. The farm was among those around Branxholme that were burned by the English in 1533/4. The lands were valued at 20 pounds Scots in 1553/4 and in 1627 were 'estimated to 16 bolls in stok, 4 bolls parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. vicarage'. The farm there was long a tenanted one owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Jock Henderson was tenant there in 1628. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still valued at £20 in 1653. The tower house of the Whitchesters Scotts was already in ruins by 1663. William Bell was there in 1689. The householders listed there in 1694 were Alexander Thomson, William Bell, Janet Cessford, Walter Scott, Robert Scott and John Scott, with William Cowan listed among 'the poor'. John Glendinning was there in at least 1704–23. Tenants in 1706 included William Scott, Robert Scott and Alexander Thomson. Thomas Penman and James Gray were there in 1708. William Scott was tenant in 1709. John Turnbull was shepherd there in 1710. Alexander Thomson was tenant in about 1710–16, with John Bell also there in 1710. William Wilson and John Hobkirk were there in 1714. William Williamson was herd there in at least 1716–22. Thomas Scott was there in 1791. The farmers recorded there in 1797 were George Scott and William Davidson, with William Elliot also there. Walter Grieve was living there in 1801. Robert Grieve was farmer in 1841. The Curds and Cream (i.e. the Friday 'Hut') took place at the farm there in 1846. The modern farm buildings are situated quite a bit to the east of the original farmhouse. Ancient flints and a small circular polished stone found there are in the Museum (the name means first occurs as ‘Whitchestre’ in about 1383, and is ‘hawchester’ in 1502; other variants such as ‘Quhichester’, ‘Quichesters’, ‘Quhitchester’, ‘Quichestir’, ‘Quhichestire’, ‘Quhitechestir’, ‘Quhitechistir’, ‘Quhitechistir’, ‘Quhityechistir’, ‘Quhychestir’, ‘Quhyechestir’, ‘Quhyechestir’ and ‘Qwitchester’ occur in early documents until the modern form from 1592, although it is also later still sometimes singular ‘Whitechester’ or ‘Whytchester’, or ‘Whitchester’, as on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is still ‘Quhitchester’ in 1636 and ‘Whitchaster’ in 1694; the origin is simply ‘the white camp’ from Old English ‘ceaster’; there is a place of the same name near Longformacus in Berwickshire).

1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in a mystery what the other one could have been. In Whitchesters Bank

Whitchesters Bank (whi-ches-turz-bawngk) n. former place name near Whitchesters. In 1790 willows were planted there, presumably to serve as a shelter for livestock.

Whitchesters Cottage (whi-ches-turz-ko-eej) n. cottage on a farm track to the east of Whitchesters farm.

Whitchesters Hill (whi-ches-turz-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Whitchesters farm, reaching a height of 259m. On the summit is a memorial cairn for Nan Lyle, unveiled in 2011. The granite toposcope that caps the cairn indicates the directions of local landmarks, as well as distant countries where work was done by the Borders Exploration Group.

Whitchesters Moss (whi-ches-turz-mos) n. boggy area by Sea Croft, above Whitchesters farm, originally being part of Hawick Common. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common. In the 1777 Division of the Common, the south side was given to Robert Oliver, John Laing and Thomas Turnbull, while the rest went to the Duke of Buccleuch.

Whitchester Street (whi-ches-tur-stree’) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Montagu Street.

Whitchester Treis (whi-ches-tur-triz) n. former name for lands in the Barony if Whitchesters. In 1541 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh infested his son William in his 6 merklands there, as part of a marriage contract (it is ‘Quhyiseseter treis’ in 1541).

White (whi) adj., arch. fallow, unploughed – ‘...but they are not in use to call on the head rooms, these being white ground’[DCW1765] (this is the meaning found in many placenames).

White (whi) v., arch. to whittle, pare – ‘Dinna gaun an wheit ma kitchein taibil, callant! That kneif’s a keindh daingeriss waipin thay’ve gien ec’[ECS] (also written ‘wehit’; the past tense is whate or whut and past participle whutten, as noted by E.C. Smith).

White (whi) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sandy Quhyt in Foultoun’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Andrew recorded in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbolls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. William, Thomas and Robert were also there, and presumably related. Andrew (1819–49) youngest son of miller John. He worked as a baker. He married Christian Hogg, sister of George Hogg, manufacturer in Hawick; she died in 1882. Their children included John, Ann and Andrewina. He was buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Andrew C. (20th C.) Director at Pesco’s 1923–71. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Qhyite’ in 1531 on a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Claire (1888 – ) last person to be born in the Haig Maternity Home. George (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘George Quyhtis’ when his barn and yard are listed among the disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (17th C.) tenant at Fulton in Bedrule Parish according to the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. Perhaps the same George married Janet Lamb in Bedrule Parish in 1702. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He married Jean Scott in Cavers in 1709 and their children included John (b.1710), Margaret (b.1712), George (b.1714), Walter (b.1716), James (b.1718), Robert (b.1721) and Adam (b.1724). His son may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Minto in 1738. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753, 1763 and 1767. He married Janet Gledstains in Roberton in 1759. He was probably father of Isobel (b.1753), Janet (b.1760), Betty (b.1763) and Jean (b.1767). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falside in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was an active member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He may be the George, married to Nelly Oliver, whose children, baptised in Southdean, included Janet (b.1792), James (b.1794), William (b.1796) and Nelly (b.1799). George (b.c.1780) servant at Doorpool in Southdean Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (15th C.) resident of ‘aula de Roull’ or Hallrule. He was living in Caerlaverock in 1541. Perhaps the same James married Margaret Scott in Minto in 1541.

may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot in 1697. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in Bedrule in 1704. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son James was baptised in 1710. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Marion Douglas and their children included: Marion (b.1739); Walter (b.1741); Archibald (b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Jean (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were gardener Robert Ker and ‘late Baillie’ James Scott. James (18th C.) married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1775. James (b.c.1770) weaver in Hawick, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. On the 1801 list he was recorded as a joiner. He could have been related to Simon, who was listed after him in 1801 (hence perhaps another son of John and Agnes Larson). James (b.c.1780) miller in Hawick, according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. This could be an error for ‘John’. James (19th C.) married Helen Douglas in Southdean in 1825. James Oliver (1830–1901) son of Hawick miller John. He married Janet Wallis (or Wallace) Pringle in 1854. They emigrated to Australia, where he worked as an early photographer (from about 1862). He later moved to Otago, New Zealand, where he lived for a while at ‘Hawick Street, Roxburgh, Teviot valley’. James Pollock ‘Jimmy’ (1905–2010) Hawick man, known for his quiet and unassuming nature. He reached his 100th birthday in 2005, repeating the earlier feats of his mother and sister. He worked for 51 years in Lyle & Scott’s knitting department. He married Janet Telfer and had one daughter, Kathleen. He was a founder member of the Probus Club and spent much of his time in his Wellogate allotment. He died at the age of 104, perhaps being the oldest ever Teri. John (d.bef. 1432) Rector of Rankilburn Parish Church. His death ‘outwith the Roman Court’ is recorded when Walter Hassendean was appointed to replace him as Rector. His surname is recorded as ‘Quhite’. John (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 when he witnessed a baptism for James Vogan. He married Janet Kedie and their children included Thomas (b.1651) and William (b.1653). John (d.c.1683) tenant in Belses Mill. His will was recorded in 1683. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Marie (b.1690). The witnesses were Andrew Scott and Andrew Riddell. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John who married Christian Rutherford in Southdean in 1785. John (18th C.) breeches maker in Hawick. The death of a child of his was recorded in 1790. John (1774–1836) miller of Hawick Corn Mill. He may be the ‘James’ who was recorded as a miller on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. In 1797 he married Ann Scott (1778–1852), who was sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: John (b.1798), who was also miller; James (b.1803); and Andrew (b.1819), who was a baker. He is probably the ‘John White Mealman’, whose unnamed child died in 1808. John (1798–1866) eldest son of miller John, he was also proprietor of Hawick Corn Mill. He inherited a large sum of money from an uncle, Dr. William Scott, and took a lease on Midshiels. He is recorded as farmer at Midshiels among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He may be the John recorded as a meal dealer on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded at Midshiels, and is there in 1851, farming 157 acres and employing 4 labourers. In 1820 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Oliver, said to be daughter of the miller of the Roughheugh Mill, but more likely daughter of John Oliver, from Ashkirk. Their children included: Anne (b.1821), who married Andrew Haddon; John (b.1823); William (b.1824), who joined the Navy; Isabel (b.1827); James (b.1830), who married Janet Wallace Pringle and emigrated to Australia; George Tucker (b.1833); and Oliver (b.1839). His wife died in childbirth in 1839. In 1841 he secondly married another Isabella, daughter of Thomas Wemyss (who worked at Wilton Mills); she was his 1st cousin. They had 2 daughters: Janet, who died in infancy; and Elizabeth Scott (b.1842), who married James Church and lived in Langholm. He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. John (19th C.) married Elspeth Rutherford in Wilton Parish in 1846. Leonard (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert (d.bef. 1453) Burgess of Hawick. He must have died just before the ‘instrument of sasine’ in which he gained lands in Hawick from John Turnbull in October 1453, sasine being given to his widow Janet. His name is written ‘Wayte’ and the ‘tenement’ was on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert (d.bef. 1453) Burgess of Hawick. He must have died just before the ‘instrument of sasine’ in which he gained lands in Hawick from John Turnbull in October 1453, sasine being given to his widow Janet. His name is written ‘Wayte’ and the ‘tenement’ was on the south side of Hawick, between those of John Chapman and John Scott. Robert (15th C.) resident of Fulton recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was listed as ‘Roberto quhite de foultoun’. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 4 of his ewes from Bedrule.
He was surely related to William of Fulton, who also had sheep stolen at the same time. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. William, Thomas and Andrew were also there, and presumably related. He was one of the few men who appeared personally and hence was not denounced as a rebel. Robert (17th C.) resident of Tofts. In 1684 he was tried in Jedburgh for being a Covenantter. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Todshawkip’. An unnamed child of his was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1721. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Ann Ruecastle in 1754 and their children included: Betty (b.1756); John (b.1757); and Jane (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by the ‘Whole Congregation’. He could be the Robert, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1713. Robert (1802–74) born near Yetholm in Roxburghshire, he grew up in Otterburn and became known as a historian of Northumberland. He worked for a while as a weaver in Jedburgh, but spent about 40 years in a counting-house in Newcastle. He spent holidays in the Borders, often visiting his friend James Telfer, the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. He collected local legends and songs, and also built up a collection of books. He published poetry and wrote papers for the Newcastle Society of Antiquaries on topics such as the Battles of Neville’s Cross, Flodden and Bannockburn. In 1858 he edited the ‘Poems and Ballads of John Leyden’. In Vol. II of ‘The local historian’s table book, of remarkable occurrences, historical facts, traditions, legendary and descriptive ballads’ he wrote an introduction to James Telfer’s ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’, describing some Borders stories relating to fairies. He died unmarried.

S. (18th/19th C.) owner of land in Wilton Parish, recorded on Wood’s 1824 map. His land was located roughly where part of the Mayfield scheme was built. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) from Alemoor. In 1623 along with William White he acted as caution for ‘Hob Wigholme, sum tyme in Ailmire’. Simon (b.1777) son of John and Agnes Larson. He was a weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as a weaver in Hawick in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and was still on the list in 1801. In 1800 he married Janet, daughter of Michael Anderson. His daughter Agnes died in 1801 and an unnamed daughter died in 1808. His father-in-law died in 1823, aged 80. Thomas (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. At the 1493 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission for common theft before his existing remission. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas quhote in bethroll’. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. William, Robert and Andrew were also there, and presumably related. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Jedburgh. In an assessment of the valuation of Roxburghshire in 1788 (and again in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d. Thomas (1787/8–1860s) from Southdean Parish, he was joiner at West Port. Probably the same Thomas was listed as joiner at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He was recorded at about 3 Loan in 1841 and the back house of 8 Fore Row in 1851. He was on the ‘Middle row’ as a joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory, but also on the ‘Front row’ as a wheelwright. He married Mary Oliver, who died in 1867. Their children included: John; Isabel, who married James Rae; William, James, Barbara, Agnes and Thomas. Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick and Wilton. He married Jean Ker (from Hawick Parish) in 1709; he was there recorded being from Wilton Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: James (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Robert (b.1713); Adam (b.1716); Walter (b.1718); Adam (again, b.1720); Helen (b.1723); Jean (b.1725); John (b.1727); James (again, b.1728); and William (b.1731). The witnesses in 1710 were the 2 Walter Paisleys in Weensland, in 1712 were miller Walter Paisley and weaver David Miller, in 1718 were wright Francis Gledstains and smith John Scott, in 1723 were smith John Scott and mason John Turnbull, in 1725 were gardeners James Dunn and Robert Ker (probably related to his wife), in 1728 were John Scott and David Reid, and in 1731 were David Miller and John Scott. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Bettie Kedie and their children included Walter (b.1765) and Andrew (b.1767). Witnesses in 1767 were the whole congregation. Walter (d.bef. 1779) resident of Hawick Parish. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1779. William (15th C.) weaver, probably in Bedrule. He was recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and Whiteacres

David Waugh, also in Bedrule, they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. His surname was given as ‘quhite’. Perhaps the same William ‘de fouldoun’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 11 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to Robert who was also a Fulton resident in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) farmer in the ‘heid of the parochin of Hawick’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme as owing him money for crops and teinds. He may have acted as Sir Walter’s factor or chamberlain in the outer parts of Hawick Parish. He could have been ancestor of the later William from Museele. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His name was listed first of the Whites, with Thomas, Robert and Andrew also there, and presumably related. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) from Museele. He acted (along with Syme White from Alemoor) as security for Robert Wigholm of Braithwaugh in 1623. In the Circuit Court records his name is written ‘Quhytt in Muslie’. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname was written as ‘Whitt’. William (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Clesspool’ in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was probably tenant of the lands associated with Clesslee Peel. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Denholm Mill and later Whinfield, he was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. It is possible he was the William from Denholm whose servant George Turnbull was on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Betty Turnbull. Their children included James (b.1801), William (b.1803), George (b.1805), John (b.1808), Thomas (b.1810) and Robert (b.1814). William (b.1800/1) dyer in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at 16 Buccleuch Street by 1861. He married Ann Preston and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Janet (b.1833); John (b.1835); Ann Scott (b.1837); Thomas (b.1841); Isabella (b.1844); and Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1849). William (b.1813/4) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on Silver Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Janet from Hobkirk, and it appears that they had no surviving children. He may be the William who married Janet Baptie in 1837, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Lilliesleaf Parishes; she may be the daughter of Robert Baptie baptised in Hobkirk in 1815. Rev. William Spranger (19th C.) Episcopalian minister of St. John’s in Jedburgh, where the church was consecrated in 1844. He started a mission in Hawick in 1846. The mission proved so successful that the master of St. John’s School in Jedburgh was transferred to Hawick as the new Episcopalian minister the following year. William (1824–53) son of Hawick miller John and Isabella Oliver. He was in the Navy, his last ship being the S.S. Inflexible. He is said to have caught some disease and returned to Hawick to die, his pregnant wife disappearing to London afterwards. His wife was Eliza Dearden. William ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) served with the Royal Engineers in WWII, being attached to the 1/4th K.O.S.B. His campaign medals were gifted to the Callants’ Club (formerly written ‘Quhite’, ‘Quhyt’, ‘Quhyte’, ‘Whyt’, ‘Whyte’, ‘Whytt’ and variants).

Whiteacres (whi’-ä-kurz) n. former farmstead on the western side of Whiteacres Hill, south of Kaimend farm (marked ‘Whitacres’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteacres Hill (whi’-ä-kurz-hil) n. hill south-east of Hawick, beyond Kaimend, reaching 275 m and containing an ancient enclosure on its slopes. It is also described as part of the Kaimend Hills, and sometimes called the ‘second Kaimend’ (it is ‘Whitacres Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteburn (whi’, whi’-burn) n. farm on the main A6088 between Chesters and Southdean, near where the White Burn joins the Jed Water. The Manse for Southdean Kirk is situated just to the east. John Amos was farmer there in 1851. This could be ‘the Burne’ listed in 1571/2 among places where William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge for the Olivers there.

White Burn (whi’-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising near Highlee Hill and flowing north to join the Jed Water near Chesters. A field near the upper part of the stream is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and the area also contains rig and furrow lines and lazy beds (the stream is labelled ‘Whyburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Whitecastle Fort

Whitecastle Fort (whi’-kaw-sul-för’) n. earthwork just south of Denholmhill farmhouse. It has been mostly destroyed by the large quarry to the south, with the only surviving feature being a rampart about 200 ft in length. It is unclear whether this is a mediæval homestead or an older hill-fort.

Whitecastle Hill (whi’-kaw-sul-hil) n. name sometimes used for Whitcastle Hill near Chapelhill farm.

Whitecastlepark (whi’-kaw-sul-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead in Cavers Parish, situated on the Dean Burn to the west of Denholmhill, in roughly the same location as the modern Todlaw (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

White Cleuch (whi’-kloo-ch) n. stream that rises on Harden Moss and Mabonlaw Moss and flows in a southerly direction. It is also labelled as Marchelton Burn on the Ordnance Survey map, as it continues past Mabonlaw farm to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. The farmstead of Whitecleughside was formerly along its banks.

Whitecleuchside (whi’-kloo-ch-sid) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, just west of Mabonlaw. It was on the west side of the White Cleuch, a burn that flows past Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn just above Harden Brig. It is shown on draft maps of the neighbouring parishes in 1650, with 2 ‘communicants’ recorded there, namely Walter Fairgrieve and Maly Richardson. It was part of Wilton Parish until Roberton was created in 1689/90. William Elliot was recorded there in 1727 and Robert Turnbull in 1761. William Wilson was a labourer there in 1761. Robert Turnbull in 1727. William Wilson was a labourer there in 1812. In 1841 mason William Elliot and family, along with Charles Scott and family were living there. Widow Janet ‘Stothert’ and her family were there in 1851 (also spelled ‘Whitescleughside’, ‘Whiteclough-side’, ‘Whitscleughside’, ‘Wyhtcleuchysde’, ‘Whytcleuchysde’, etc.; it is ‘Whitecleuchside’ on a parish map of 1650).

White Coomb (whi’-koom) n. craggy hill rising 821 m above the Grey Mare’s Tail, just over into Dumfries & Galloway.

the White Dyke (thu-whi’-dik) n. ruined dry-stone wall around Hermitage Castle, probably once the boundary of the deer park. It starts at the Hermitage Water between the village and the Castle, running uphill, then along Green Sike, turning west across the southern slopes of Hermitage Hill ending near Coldwell Snab. It is about 5ft high and 4ft thick and built of limestone blocks in a different style from the local farm walls of later times. It has been much robbed of stones, and hence its full extent is hard to ascertain. In its interior are other walls and ditches that are probably a deer trap.

white-faced (whi’-fæsd) adj. having a white face, in distinction to ‘black-faced’ – ‘An all-round increase of at least 4d. per lb. for whitefaced wool’ [HEx1917].

Whitefield (whi’-feeld) n. alternative name for Whitfield.

Whitefield (whi’-feeld) n. farm in the Yarrow valley. The ‘Yarrow Stone’ is here, near the main road, turned up by the plough at the beginning of the 19th century, along with some bones. 2 other nearby stones are probably related, the ‘Glebe Stone’ and the ‘Warrior’s Rest’. There were also formerly about 20 large burial cairns on the moor above, and it appears that the site was used for burials from the Bronze Age through to early Christian times.

Whitefield (whi’-feeld) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were owned by Lord Minto. In 1779 (and also 1811) there are 4 pieces of land listed separately (valued together at £190): Quarter of Whitefield House and North Croft Park; Langlands and Quarter of Whitefield; Howden and Quarter of Whitefield; and Quarter of Whitefield and House. It was among the lands formerly called ‘Minto Townhead’, which were differentiated by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779 (it is ‘Whitefield’ in 1780).

Whitfield (whi’-feeld) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were owned by Lord Minto. In 1779 (and also 1811) there are 4 pieces of land listed separately (valued together at £190): Quarter of Whitefield House and North Croft Park; Langlands and Quarter of Whitefield; Howden and Quarter of Whitefield; and Quarter of Whitefield and House. It was among the lands formerly called ‘Minto Townhead’, which were differentiated by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779 (it is ‘Whitefield’ in 1780).

Whitegates see Whiteyetts

the White Hart (thu-whi’-hawr’) n. 19th century hostelry at 31 High Street until replaced by the National Bank Building about 1870. It had a thatched roof and the proprietor at one time was Mr. Lake (although that could be an error for ‘Leck’). The property there was labelled ‘Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert Leck was publican there in 1841 and 1851. It was also known as ‘the Buck Inn’.

Whitehaugh (whi’-uf, whi-tuf) n. farm and mansion house beyond the Dean, named after the white flowers (daisies etc.) which grow on the level parts near there. The existing house was built in 1822, but there were earlier structures in the same place, with the Scotts of Whitehaugh living here for several centuries. The road passing here used to be part of a drove road, avoiding Hawick on its way to the Borthwick valley. David Scott was granted the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 and the estate was in the family for (on and off) about 400 years. Walter of Whitehaugh was recorded in 1488 as one of the heirs of Sir David Scott, although the precise relationship is unclear. John Scott ‘de quhillach’ is recorded in 1493 and John Scott was mentioned as tenant there in 1501 and 1502. Walter Scott of Whitehaugh sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert Scott of Headshaw in the early 17th century. Robert’s son sold the lands in 1623 to lawyer Andrew Hay, who sold them to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1656, and he sold them to his nephew Walter Scott of Headshaw in 1671. The 1643 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Scott of Headshaw’s Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh’ being valued at just under £450, while ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Hep’ were valued at £200. There were 13 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Scott, John Scott, William Scott, James Scott, Thomas Mitchell, Alexander ‘Aikeneid’, Janet Robson, Marion Scott, Margaret Easton, Bessie Easton, Agnes Thorburn, John Bell and Bessie Scott. James Scott of Whitehaugh is recorded paying £200 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for both these lands and Wester Heap in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. 5 separate households were listed in 1694, with Robert Brown as tenant; in Hawick ‘Leddie Whithaugh’ was taxed on 2 hearths for a house on the west-side. William, son of Walter Scott of Whitehaugh, had sasine for ‘the east part of the lands of Whitehaugh’ in 1697 and ‘Westside of Whitehaugh, had sasine for ‘the east part of the lands of Whitehaugh’ in 1697 and ‘Westside of Whitehaugh’ being valued at £448 10s; John Scott of Whitehaugh was still listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John Hume was there in 1797 and Robert Elliot was a servant there in 1801. Walter Scott, Esquire, was there in 1841. The last 2 Lairds are commemorated on plaques in the family burial aisle at Whitehaugh. The last of the family died in 1852, when the lands became part of Stirches estate. John James Scott Chisholme was listed as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. A circular stone pot lid from here is in the Museum – ‘Sall I come skirtin’ the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still; And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh Or the road by Chapelhill?’ [WL], ‘We’ve roam’d far o’er the countryside, But the grandest to be seen Is the burn that takes our fancy, Frae the Whitehaugh to the Dean’ [WFC] (also formerly spelled ‘Whithaugh’, ‘Whythauke’, ‘Whithauke’, ‘Whiteauke’, ‘Whithauke’, etc.; it is ‘Quhiteauke’ in 1488, ‘quithalch’ in 1493, ‘Quithauke’ in 1501, ‘quithalch’ in 1502, ‘Quithauke’ in 1510, ‘Quithauke’ and ‘Quithauke’ in 1580/1, ‘Quithauke’ in 1619, ‘Quithauke’ in 1627, ‘Whythauke’ in 1648, ‘Whythauke’ in 1663 and 1692, ‘Whithauk’ in 1721 and ‘whithauke’ in 1724; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Whithauke’, is on Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Wythauke’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Wythauke’).

Whitehaugh (wi-tu) n. farm in the Liddel valley, between Castleton and Dinlabyre. It is easily confused with the more significant Whithaugh, a former seat of the Armstrongs. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 148 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Dinlabyre, Kirndean, Cocklaiik and a common (on the north). It included a small piece of land on the east side of the Liddell Water and the farmhouse is shown close to the modern Whitehaugh Ford. The land was said to be ‘much damnified by the water, and the pasture is sorry land in general’. It appears to be the place recorded as ‘Wythauke’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale (given the places it is listed near). It was then valued at 10 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by James Armstrong. Given that it was then associated with the Armstrongs, it may be that the 2 places in Liddesdale with essentially the same name were once connected. Will Armstrong possessed the lands in 1632. It is probably the ‘Whithaugh’ where Thomas Armstrong was tenant in 1694. It is possible this was the ‘Litle Whithaugh’ listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Thomas Mather as tenant. John Telfer was farmer there in 1797. This is probably the ‘Wheathaugh’ where Thomas Riddell was a ‘Driver’ in 1801 and that was tenanted in the early 1800s by an Oliver, whose brother George was shepherd there and was father of James of the ‘chilled plough’. John Ballantyne was shepherd there in 1835. Gilbert Telfer was gamekeeper there in 1861. There is now a row of 19th/20th century cottages there, but there was an earlier farmhouse in the same vicinity (it is ‘Whítëhauch’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Wheathaug’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Wheathaugh’; it is ‘Wheithauche’ in 1632, ‘Wheathaugh’ in 1797 and ‘Wheathaugh’ in 1861).

Whitehaugh Aisle (whī-tuf-il) n. isolated memorial at Whitehaugh farm, which is the burial place of the last 2 Scotts of Whitehaugh, Walter and James.

Whitehaughbrae (whī-tuf-brā) n. former lands that were owned by a branch of the Scott family. They were once Crown lands in the Ettrick Ward of Selkirkshire (and hence presumably unrelated to Whitehaugh in Wilton), probably associated with ‘Whitehillbrae’ on modern maps. ‘Voile Chesholme Quithauch bray’ was recorded in 1540/1. In 1541 the wester side of ‘Warm-wod’, ‘alias Quhitehauch Braa’ was occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, but claimed by Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, paying £24 yearly. Also ‘Quhitehill Braa alias Cathmarlee’ was tenanted by Thomas Chisholme, paying £35, with 3 steadings and the mill set by Patrick Wright, Chamberlain to the Forest. George Caverhill ‘in Quithauchbrae’ is recorded in 1581/2. Thomas Scott was the first Laird at the end of the 16th century, passing the lands to his son Walter, from whom they were inherited by a cousin, Thomas of Selenside in 1621. This could be the ‘quithauch braa’ where Thomas Thomson was recorded in 1494/5 when he contributed a horse to the itinerant court held in Selkirk (incorrectly written ‘Whitchhauchbrae’ by Keith Scott, it is ‘Quhytehauchbraes’ in 1621).

Whitehaugh Burn (whī-tuf-burn) n. former name for a stream near to Whitehaugh farm, on the edge of Wilton Common. It may be an alternative name for the Dean Burn or another feature – ‘Find such of the tenements having interest in the common, . . . after the division, shall be restricted and confined to the Long Moss’ [DWC1765].

Whitehaugh Cottages (whī-tuf-ko’-ee-jeez) n. group of cottages on the left-hand side of the road just before Whitehaugh farm. There were 2 families there in 1841.

Whitehaugh Heidroom (whī’-uf-, whī-tuf-heed-room) n. former name for the part of Wilton Common adjacent to Whitehaugh lands – ‘He has seen at times, as he was coming to Hawick, the common herd’s cattle and beasts pasturing on that part of the common called Whitehaugh-head-room’ [DWC1765].

Whitehaugh Mains (whī-tuf-mānz) n. former farm near Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish. William Scott was a farm servant there in 1799.

Whitehaughmains Slack (whī-tuf-mānz-slawk) n. pass to the east of Wiltonburn Hill and south-west of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitehaughmoor (whī-tuf-moor) n. farmstead north of Whitehaugh, reached by the ‘Forty Fits’ track. Andrew Chisholme lived there in 1841. There are remains of 5 rectangular structures and a later sheepfold about 500 m to the north-west. Aerial photography has also shown at least 4 rectangular enclosures about 1.2 km north-west of the farm steadings.

Whitehaugh Moor (whī-tuf-moor) n. area of moorland around Whitehaughmoor farm.

Whitehaugh Park (whī-tuf-pawrk) n. alternative name for the main house at Whitehaugh.

Whitehaugh Road (whī-tuf-rōd) n. street built in the Dean in 1791 along the road leading to Whitehaugh farm (although the road was popularly given this name long before the houses were built).

Whitehaugh Struther (whī-tuf-stru-thur) n. name for area on Wilton Common, perhaps corresponding to the modern Whitehaugh Moor. It is ‘Whitehaugh-strother’ in 1765.

Whitehaugh View (whī-tuf-vew) n. part of the Longbaulk housing development, constructed in 1970 and named for the view of the Whitehaugh area across the valley.

Whitehead (whī’-heed) n. James pseudonym of Dr. Dixon. William ‘Bill’ (b.c.1800) from England. He was said to be among the ‘finishers’ who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. He was listed as a ‘Fuller Journeymen’ in 1841, with his brother John having the same job; by 1851 he was a ‘Fuller Miller’. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Path-head and in 1851 at Roadhead. By 1861 his widow was living at 4 Tannage Close. His wife was Nancy and their children included John, Betsy, Martha and Janet.

White Hill (whī’-hil) n. hill just south-east of Hawick, with a triangulation pillar and height 301 m. Note that this is a common hill name, including 5 others (listed separately) and another to the west going into Selkirkshire.

of 397 m. It contains a linear earthwork (probably an agricultural boundary) running from the head of Pen Sike to the north-west for about 350.

Another pair of earthworks cross the south-west shoulder of the hill, connecting a tributary of Py-atknowe Sike with the Dod Burn. There are also

3 other overlapping linear earthworks, although none seems connected with the hill-fort on the southern spur. Some of the earthworks were formerly associated with the Catrail, but they are of a different character. The hill-fort appears to have had a later homestead built on it; it measures about 60 m by 45 m, with double ramparts and a ditch. The homestead built inside is about 45 m by 30 m, with a hut circle and hut scoop

and Earlside, reaching 299 m. It contains an earthwork consisting of 3 ramparts and with a linear earthwork to its south-west, as well as cultivation terraces on the north-west slopes.

Penchrise and south of Stobs, reaching a height of 311 m. It should not be confused with the more prominent hill to the west of Penchrise. On its north-east side is some kind of enclosure.

south-west of) Skelfhill, reaching 474 m.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill in Southdean

Parish, reaching a height of 262 m and containing

lines of various types surrounding the entire hill.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill between Lin-dean and Bowden, reaching a height of 323 m and topped by a triangulation pillar.

stead between the farm of Dodburn and Dodburn Filters, on the western slopes of White Hill.

‘Archie Elliott callit Possettis’ was recorded as tenant in 1574, when listed among men accused of being thieves who were to be removed from their farms. Gilbert of Stobs purchased 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh’s infeftment) from Robert Elliot of Redheugh, along with Dodburn and the rest of the lands of Wimmington. Walter Scott was the tenant there on the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. George Pott (ancestor of the Potts of Caerlenrig, Dod, Hoscote and Todrig) was there in the early 1700s.

Archibald Tait was tenant in about 1760. James

Sibbald (the publisher) had the lease of the farm

there for a few years until 1779. In 1788 it was valued (along with Newton) at £455 7s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Elliott of Stobs estate; it was still valued along with Newton at the same amount in 1813. William Telfer was a servant

there in 1801. It was occupied until the 1930s.

The remains of the cottage and stone dyke enclosures are still visible (marked on Stobie’s 1770

map; it is ‘Quheittilbray’ in 1574, ‘Whithilbray’ in

Whitehillbrae (whi’-hil-brä) n. former far-stead on the south side of the Ettrick valley, between Hutlerburn and Howford (it is ‘Whittelbrae’ in c.1680; it is ‘Whytupbrae’ on one of

‘Whytihillbrae’ on another of Gordon’s c.1650

Whitehillshiel (whi’-hil-sheil) n. farmstead

in Castleton Parish, south of Saughtree and east of Burnmouth farm. It may correspond roughly to Dykecroft, as marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

The top stop of a quern found there is in Hawick

Museum.

Whiteholm (whi’-hööm) n. farmstead in South-dean Parish, on the side road from the A6088 to Hass on the A68. There are remains of an enclosure and signs of ancient cultivation there.

stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises near White Holm, southwest of Howpasley Hope.

Whitehope (whi’-tup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, just west of Yarrow village, with standing stones and the Yarrow Stone nearby. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, being leased to the Ranger of Yarrow for his fee.

It was still crown property in 1541, occupied by

In 1562 Scott leased the lands to John Dalgleish in Deuchar for 5 years. Dalgleish was still there in 1582 when the farm was attacked by a gang of Armstrongs and their followers. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century – ‘... And Yarrow lay dark at Whitehope’s feet Like a warrior’s blade on his winding sheet’ [WHO] (there are several other Whitehopes elsewhere; formerly spelled ‘Quhithop’, ‘Quhitehop’, ‘Quhitehope’, etc.).

Whitekirk

Whitekirk (whi'-kirk) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, probably adjacent to Cliffhope Burn and Abbey Sike. In about the 1530s Scott of Harden was granted the lands of ‘Over and Nether Cliffhousis, Quhytkeirk and Qhyteland, Ermscleuch and Abbotisykes’. It may be related to the ‘White Stones’, which is marked near Saughtree Grain on the modern Ordnance Survey map. However, it seems more likely this is a transcription error for the relatively nearby lands of Wheelkirk and Wheellands.

Whiteknowe (whi'-now) n. former farmstead on the Blindhaugh Burn, to the east of Acremoor Loch (marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Whiteknowe (whi'-now) n. former cottage in Liddesdale, by the side of the road between Toftholm and Netherraw.

White Knowe (whi'-now) n. hill lying to the west of Stobs, just before Barnes Loch, reaching a height of 339 m. On its north-eastern spur, called Newton Hill, are remains of a couple of settlements. Aerial photographs have also shown signs of cord rig here.

White Knowe (whi'-now) n. hill in southern Liddesdale, near the boundary with Dumfriesshire, lying between Windy Edge and Whisgills Edge.

Whiteland (whi'-lind) n. former name for lands near the Cliffhope Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is ‘Quhyteland’ in about the 1530s when the Abbot of Jedburgh granted a set of lands to the Scotts. This is probably an error for ‘Wheelland’, lands attached to the Wheel Kirk.

Whitelaw see Whitlaw

Whitelaw (whi'-law) n. former place name in Melrose Parish, probably corresponding to the modern ‘Whitelee’ (the origin is probably Old English ‘withig hlaw’, meaning ‘willow hill’ and is first recorded about 1200 as ‘Wylithlaw’; there are several other places with the same name, e.g. near Duns and near Peebles, as well as others like ‘Whitlaw’ and ‘Whitlee’).

Whitelaw (whi'-law) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum Quhitlaw’ in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitelaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1505 charter of Boonraw, granted to Robert Scott of Stiches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Quihtlaw’.

Probably the same ‘Andrea Quytlaw’ was witness to the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, as well as the associated sasine. Henry (b.1827/8) from Coldstream, he was a shoemaker in Hawick, probably son of Francis and brother of John. He was part of the firm of ‘Francis & Sons’, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. This firm, with branches in Coldstream, Duns and Hawick, was dissolved in 1851. In 1851 he was at about 38 High Street, and employing 4 men and 1 apprentice. His wife Cathrine was from Jedburgh. John (15th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1475. He may have been related to Archibald who was Archdeacon of Lothian in 1483 when he confirmed the charter transferring the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlestane. He could be the same John, Rector of Pennicuik who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitelaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. John (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Borthwick Mains, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. Mrs. Mary see Mary Shannon, Patrick (16th C.) Parson of Hawick in 1532, recorded in a letter from Lord Dacre to King Henry VIII. He states that on hearing of a possible raid of the Scottish King into Liddesdale, this parson ‘the Parsonne of Awyke, one Pate Whitelow’ and 2 Hepburns, kinsmen of the Earl of Bothwell, went to Hermitage to safeguard it from the King’s forces. His name was presumably Patrick, and ‘Whitelaw’ may be the same as ‘Whitlaw’ or ‘Whitlaw’ (although a connection with Whitlaw by the Flex seems possible, but unlikely); a distant cousin of the Earl’s, Margaret Hepburn, daughter of Sir Patrick of Waughton, married Patrick Whitelaw in about the right decade, and this may be the same man. If so he was Sir Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, who later married Margaret Hamilton, was accused of treason in 1567 for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and died before 1571. Patrick of that Ilk was also recorded in 1534/5 along with Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, and several other Hepburns (some of them priests) for killing Gilbert Wauchope on the highway. And in 1526 Patrick of that Ilk was listed in a remission for Sir Patrick of Waughton, ‘Mr. John Hepburne’ (possibly the priest of Hawick) and others for assisting David Home of Wedderburn. William (b.1810/1) from Bunkle in Berwickshire, in 1851 he was living at Hallrule Gardener’s House. His wife was Jane (from Roxburgh) and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, Isabella, Helen, Jane and George. (also spelled ‘Whitlaw’ and ‘Whitlowe’).

Whitelea Gill

Whitelea Gill (whi'-lee-gill) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorleshope Burn.

Whitelee (whi'-lee) n. farm near the head of Redesdale, just over the Carter Bar on the A68. It was formerly the site of a roadside inn. This is the area where ‘Parcy Reed’ met his end at the hands of the Crozier’s in the Border ballad.

Whitelaw see Whitelaw

the White Peel (thu-whi'-peel) n. former popular name for the fortified house at Satchells, so-called because it was white-washed.

white puddin (whi'-poo-din) n. a type of sausage containing oatmeal, suet, onions and spices, also known as ‘mealie puddin’ and sometimes served battered in a fish and chip shop – ‘A’ll hev twae white puddin suppers please’.

whiterick (whi-tu-rik) n., arch. a soot or weasel (cf. whntret).

the White Rose o Liddesdale (thu-whi'-rúz-ò-li-diz-däl) n. nickname for Helen Elliot.

White’s (whîts) n. White of Hawick Ltd., knitwear retailers at 2 Victoria Road, specialising in lambswool and cashmere. The firm was established by James White in 1968. It was later owned by Bill Atkins and sold to Locharron of Scotland in 2008.

white-seam (whî-seem) n., arch. plain needlework – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this wheit-seem was shewd be hand’ [ECS].

white shillin (whi'-shi-lin) n., poet. a silver shilling – ‘...Ye’d burn what cost me guid white shillings twa’ [JoHa].

Whiteside (whi'-sîd) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, a little to the east of Chesters, on the north side of the river, between Roughlee and Falside. Patrick, Gilbert, Andrew and John Oliver were there in 1541. ‘Jake’, ‘Gorge’ and ‘Patte’ ‘Ollyver’, as well as ‘Edde Ladlay’ were listed there in 1544 when they were among Olivers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII.

Dand Oliver was mentioned there in 1571 and 1572/3 and David Oliver in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryards from his father John in 1606. Robert Laidlaw, Thomas Oliver and William Oliver were tenants there in 1669 and Thomas Oliver in 1694 (it is ‘Quhiteside’ in 1536, ‘Quhightsyde’ in 1541, ‘Whitside’ in 1544, ‘Quhiteside’ in 1571/2, ‘Quhightsyde’ in 1572/3 and 1606, ‘Whytsyd’ in 1669 and ‘whittsyd’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whytsyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and shown to the south-west of Roughlee on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the White Swan (thu-whi'-swawn) n. former hostelry on the Howegate. Also the name of a former hostelry in Denholm, now Leyden’s View.

White Well (whi'-wel) n. spring in southern Liddesdale, near the former farmstead of Powgill-craig, to the west of Burnmouth.

whitewesh (whi'-wesh) n. whitewash – ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis . . .’ [DH].

white wund (whi'-wund) n., arch. flattery, ca-jolery – ‘To blaw white wind in ane’s lug, to flatter one; Clydes., Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Whiteyetts (whi'-yetts) n. local place of uncertain location, where John Scott was living in the late 1600s and early 1700s. Additionally George Turnbull ‘Young Whitegates’ is recorded in 1720, but it is unclear if this was the same place or not (it is ‘qiteyetts’ in 1680, ‘Whityetts’ in 1682, ‘Whityetts’ in 1701, ‘Whityatts’ in 1718 and ‘Whitegates’ in 1725).

Whitfield (whi'-feeld) n. farm about 2 miles north-west of Hawick, near Calaburn farm, and reached via the ‘Forty Fits’ track off the road past Whitehaugh. There are about 9 Bronze Age ‘cairns’ or ‘saucer barrows’ on the hills to the west of here, 7 on the north-east slopes of Pigsah Hill (although these have also been suggested to be ‘ring-ditch houses’). There is also the remains of an old dyke, about 1900 yards (1500 m) long, stretching from the headwaters of the Cala Burn, crossing the Wilton Burn near West Whitfield, and ending to the north-east of Mabonlaw; it was probably an agricultural boundary, perhaps referring to the boundary of the Common. There was disagreement in 1765 about whether or not the herd’s house there was on the lands of Wilton Common. Aerial photographs have shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the north-west of the farmhouse. There were 8 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Jean Scott, Jean Gray, Robert Tweedie, Margaret Brown, Thomas Hunter, Walter Miller, Margaret Miller and Isobel Hislop. In 1694 it was listed among the lands held by Langlands of that Ilk and there were 6 separate households listed there. John Leithead was there in 1698. William Lorraine was gardener there in the early 1700s. George Douglas was tenant for Langlands of that Ilk and then again for the Scotts starting in 1706. Andrew Bell was there in 1709 and John Hendrie was gardener there in at least 1709–21. James Learmonth was there in 1713. Thomas Hunter was tenant in the part east of the Cala Burn from about 1717 until 1728, although for the last part his widow and sons ran the farm; Robert Shortreed was tenant west of the Cala Burn. George Stavert was there in 1730, William Elliot in 1731 and Robert Scott in 1732. Later in the 1730s Scott of Whitfield was his own tenant. William Scott in 1741 and 1743, William and Walter Scott in 1748, Robert Smith in 1751, Andrew Fletcher in at least 1759–65, John Scott in 1762, Patrick Hume in 1765, George Coltart and Robert Scott in 1765, Walter Scott in 1770 and 1772 and Walter Rae in 1772. In the early 18th century (perhaps around 1710) the lands were sold by Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden (and Earl of Tarras), and they went to his 2nd son Walter, who became known as ‘of Whitfield’ (and later succeeded to the Harden titles himself on the death of his 2 nephews without male heirs). The farm was once part of the estates John Murray of Philiphaugh had a charter in 1752 for these lands, as well as Mervinslaw and Todshaw. By 1788 it had been sold off from the Langlands estate and was owned by John Johnstone of Alva, valued at £352 2s 2d. It later passed to George William Hutton Riddell. William Hart was living there in 1790. John Oliver and Robert Scott were farmers there in 1797 and Walter Hume and John Cook were there in 1799. Francis Turner was a labourer there in at least 1799–1801 and was farm overseer there on the 1841 census, when it is listed as ‘Whitefield East’. There are many other places of the same name (also sometimes ‘Whitefield’ and formerly ‘Whitfield’; it is marked ‘Whitefield’ and ‘Whitefeild’ on 1650 parish maps, ‘Whitfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whetfield’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; ‘Old Whitefield’ and ‘New Whitefield’ are marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common and ‘New Whitfield’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whitfield (whi'-feeld) n. former farm in the northern part of Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Qwytfeld’, with a value of 20 merks, in the ‘Foresta’ section of the Liddesdale rental roll of about 1376. In 1452 the lands of ‘Qhitfelde, the toftis and the park lyand within the said lordship of Ledallisdale, nere about the said castell’ was assigned to Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers and his son William, when they were appointed as Keepers of Hermitage Castle. Its precise location is uncertain, but clearly somewhere near Hermitage Castle.

Whitfield Heidroom (whi'-feeld-heed-room) n. former name for the upper part of Wilton Common adjacent to Whitfield lands.

Whithaugh see Whitehaugh

Whithaugh (whi-tuk, -tuf) n. farm and former home of the Armstrongs in Liddesdale, just to the north of Newcastleton, on the other side of the Liddel. Note that there can be confusion with the less significant ‘Whitehaugh’, further up the Liddel valley. It was listed as being worth 4 merks on a rental list c.1376 among the charter of the Douglases of Morton. As an Armstrong seat it was second in importance only to Mangerston. It was valued at £400 in 1678. In 1580 a band of Scotts and Gladstains, who were returning from following a party that had raided Whitlaw, were attacked here by the Armstrongs; Walter (or perhaps William) Gledstains was killed, more than a dozen others were wounded and about 40 men captured, including Walter Scott of Goldielands. The house was taken by the English in 1582 and burned in 1599. The tower was once raided by a party of men from Bewcastle, led by a Taylor, when Armstrong was away in Evesdale; they captured documents that they later burned, resulting in Armstrong riding into Cumberland where he burned Taylor’s house. Andrew, Francis and John Armstrong, sons to the ‘auld laird of Whithaugh’. The Laird of ‘Quhitehauch’ (which was probably here) was listed among ‘Lan- dit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. Lancie Armstrong was owner in the 1630s. It was valued at £400 in 1643 and again in 1678. It is probably the ‘Whithaughs house’ on which tax was paid on 3 hearths in 1694. It is said that tower was once used to obtain a commanding view of the horse races that used to take place on the flat land where Newcastleton would later be built. About 1730 it was bought by William Elliot for his eldest son John. John Elliot was taxed for 25 windows there in 1748. William Lockie was living there in 1764. Half of the lands were sold to the Duke of Buccleuch before 1788; in that year the Duke’s lands there were valued at £199 17s. The re- mainer of the lands were in 1788 owned by John Elliot of Whithaugh and valued at £200 3s. This is probably the ‘Whitehaugh’ where John Scoon and Francis Armstrong were living in 1797 and John Elliot in 1801. The tower was destroyed in about 1770 and stones used to build the new farmhouse, including an armorial stone dated 1552 and inscribed ‘BIGIT B(E) LONSI ARMS’ of the Douglases of Morton. The tower was destroyed in about 1770 and stones used to build the new farmhouse, including an armorial stone dated 1552 and inscribed ‘BIGIT B(E) LONSI ARMSTRONG’; there is an original cellar beneath. John Elliot was there in 1785. It is said that Sir Walter Scott wrote parts of some of his novels while visiting Elliot there. John Elliot is recorded as farmer with 6 horses there in 1797, with Walter Elliot also there with 1 horse. John Elliot was listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when it was valued at Whithaugh Burn (whi-tuf-burn) n. stream that rises on Priest Hill and Stell Knowe and runs roughly westwards past the farm of Whithaugh to join the Liddel at the north end of Newcastle.

Whithaughburn (whi-tuf-burn) n. former farmstead near Whithaugh, on the Whithaugh Burn, to the north-east of Newcastle. Labourer James Elliot and family were there in 1851.

Whithaugh Mill (whi-tuf-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of Whithaugh in Liddesdale, just north-east of the modern Newcastle. John Graham was there in 1642. Robert Riddell was the miller there in 1743. Christopher Armstrong is recorded there in 1797 when it is ‘Whithaughmiln’, William Armstrong is there on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, Walter Armstrong in 1837 and John Crozier in 1851 (it is ‘Quhithauchmilne’ in 1842 and ‘Whithaugh-mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whither (whi-thur) conj. whether (also whither). Whither (whi-thur) n., arch. a smart blow, stroke, drubbing, v. to whiz through the air – ‘Whither, to whirl rapidly with a booming sound, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], to beat or belabour someone – ‘I’ll whither your whirlkins to ye’ [JoJ] (also whither).

Scott, with other residents being William Elliot, Thomas Telfer, James Scott and Helen Scott; they were among those who complained that their lands had been burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers. There was a dispute over the lands between Walter, Lord of Buccleuch and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig about 1610. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. John Scott was tenant there in 1627. In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it was listed as ‘ane corne rowme estimat to pay 16 bolls’ in a typical year, ‘3 bolls in personage, 7 lb. 10 sh., in vicarage’. There were 16 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely John Scott, Adam Scott, Bessie Scott, James Noble, Walter Miller, James Scott, Malie Scott, Robert Miller, Adam Glendinning, Bessie Govenlock, Margaret Scott, Bessie Runciman, Helen Thomson, William Currie, Helen Wigholm and Isobel Almond. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Barony of Hawick. The lands passed from Hawick Parish to Robertson in 1690. Francis Scott was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1690, 1692 and 1694. The householders recorded there in 1694 were James Scott, Robert Goodfellow, John Wilson, Robert Cook and John Riddell, with Archibald Douglas, Robert Lawson, James Noble and John Davidson listed there among ‘the poor’. The rental rolls of 1694 and 1696 state that ‘Fahnes [the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain] is to see the wood fenced and hained’. Walter Scott, younger of Woll, was renting the farm in 1696. John Scott and Walter Scott of Merrylaw rented in 1698. This is probably the ‘Wheathop’ where James Burnet was tenant in 1701. Walter Scott was there in 1703, James Scott in at least 1710–26, James Halliday in 1716, James Greenshields in 1717–21, John Murray in 1718–21, John Hume in 1721, John Wilson in 1722, Andrew Main in 1722 and 1728, James Nichol in 1734 and William Scott in 1742, Robert Scott in 1757–65, William Reid in 1757–63, Walter Taylor in 1761, James Scott in 1763 and 1766, George Coltart in 1763, James Crow in 1764 and Walter Elliot and Thomas Scott in 1767. William Miller and William Reid were there in the 1770s. Gideon Scott was living there in 1794 and Gideon Goodfellow in 1795–98. Adam Scott was tenant in 1797 and William Richardson was living there in 1808. In 1841 the Laidlaw family lived there, as well as pauper Helen Broad along with her daughter and granddaughter, and others. There are signs of a settlement a little to the west of the present steading – ‘...To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Commonside, and Milsanton-hill, And Eilridge is left all alone, Except some Town Lands in Lanton’ [CWS] (also sometimes ‘Whitehope’ it was formerly spelled ‘Qhilthope’, ‘Quhithop’, etc.; the name dates to at least 1390, when it is ‘Quhytthope’; it is ‘quhithope’ in 1409, ‘Qwythope’ in 1431, ‘Qwhithope’ in 1447, ‘Qhilthop’ in 1454, 1484, 1500 and 1594, ‘Quhithope’ in 1500, ‘Qhithop’ and ‘Qhithope’ in 1511, ‘Qhilthope’ in 1549, ‘Qhihilhoup’ in 1550, ‘Qhitehoip’, ‘Qhytehoip’ and ‘Quhithoip’ in 1572, ‘Qhithtope’ in 1574, ‘Qhilthop’ in 1580, ‘Qhilthehoip’ in 1615, ‘Quhit- tore’ in 1627, ‘Whittope’ in 1650, ‘Quhityhope’ in 1663, ‘Whithope’ in 1686, ‘Whithope’ in 1694 and ‘witup’ in 1734; it is marked ‘Wlytupp’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Whittop’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is probably just ‘the white valley’ from Old English ‘hop’; note there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near St. Mary’s Loch).

Whithope (whi-tup) n. farm on the Yarrow Water, shortly before St. Mary’s Loch (it is ‘Wheithope’ in c.1680; it is ‘Wlytupp’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Whithope Edge (whi-tup-ej) n. hill among the headwaters of the Teviot, reaching a height of 475 m (1506 ft) and lying at a corner of the border with Dumfries and Galloway. The boundaries of Hawick Parish once reached this far in the southwest (also written ‘White Hope Edge’).

Whithope Knowe (whi-tup-now) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick, just west of Whithope steading. It has an enclosure at its summit, with some structures within it; this is probably a livestock enclosure of no great antiquity.

Whithope Mill (whi-tup-mil) n. former farm on the south side of the Borthwick near Harden, and adjacent to the separate farm of Whithope. It once had one of the local corn mills. The position of the mill and mill lade are clearly marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (when it was part of the farm of Whithope). There were 3 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Riddell, Margaret ‘Colban’ and Mary Riddell. It was mong lands from Hawick Parish that became part of the new Parish of Robertson in 1690. Walter Riddell was living there in at least 1714–29, John Johnstone in 1743, John Riddell in 1765, another Walter Riddell in 1767–74, Robert Turnbull in 1780, William Duncan in 1781 and George Scott in 1786. John Scott was tenant in 1797 (referred

Whithope Moss (whi-tup-mos) n. marshy area to the north of Branxholme Easter Loch and east of Wester Park Hill.

Whithope Sike (whi-tup-sik) n. small stream that runs past Whithope farm, joining Holm Sike to become Howford Sike and then run into the Borthwick Water (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

whitit (whi-tee’, -ti’) pp., poet. whited – ‘...for ye ar like whitet sepulchres, whilk trewlie kythe bonne outwaerd ...’ [HSR].

Whitlaw (whi’-, whit-law) n. area in the Slitrig valley from Lynnwood to the Acreknowe Burn, rising to the Vertish Hill in the west. There was once a small thriving hamlet there, with a teacher in the 18th century. The name more specifically refers to the farm or farms of Whitlaw, near the bottom of the Flex road, at the edge of the old Common. They were owned by the Gledstains family in the 16th and 17th centuries, and then passed to the Duke of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells lists Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), and suggests he had the lands of Whitlaw for his service. It is probably the ‘Manis of Quhytlaw’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when there were ‘nyne drawand oxin’ there. Sir Walter left the farm to John Gledstains in his will. In 1580 part of the lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell, when 100 sheep were stolen by a gang of Ellots and Armstrongs; this is in addition to the lands of Meikle Whitlaw being raided by a gang of English and Scottish thieves a couple of months earlier. The lands were said in 1627 to be ‘1 myll from the kirk, neuer payit ferne [probably never having been let to a tenant for rent], estimat to pay 100 merkis in stok, 2 bolls in parsonage, 5 lbs. in vicarage’. The estate of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw was valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643. There were disputes over the boundary with Hawick Common; in 1668 the Council decreed to support the ‘casting doune the dykes buildt be Whitlaw and other adjacent nighboures upon the Common Dyke of the Com- mon’. The estate of Francis of Whitlaw was still valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678. A sundial from here, engraved with the initials F.G. (for Francis Gledstains), the date 1693, and the motto ‘Fide et Virtute’, was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection. It is probably the ‘place of Gladstens’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with tax paid on 5 hearths. William Armstrong was also listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James ‘Colwort’ (probably Collier) was tenant there in at least 1698–1702 and Dand Gray in 1702–10. Robert Cairns was recorded as taylor there in 1704 and James Gray was there in at least 1708–13. Christian Wright was there in 1709. Adam Hobkirk was herd there in 1712. Archibald Paterson was living there in 1716. John Anderson was a weaver there in 1719. Robert Turnbull was tenant in 1725 and James Scott in 1766. James Knox, David Knox and Peter Scott were tenants there in 1797. By 1788 the former lands of Whitlaw had been divided into ‘Meikle and Little Whitlaws’, owned by the Duke of Buccleuch (and valued at £152 2s 7d) and Flex, owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (valued at £114 10s 9d). Two farms here were long called ‘Meikle Whitlaw’ and ‘Little Whitlaw’. The 2 farms were still valued in 1811 at about £152. Robert Scott was living there in 1801. Part of the road there was washed away in the flood of 1846. They were still owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch until 1895, when they were exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. This was once the point where the boundary of the Common passed through a house, so during the riding of the marches, a sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it. The area was used at the end of the 19th century for rifle practice by Hawick Volunteers. The ‘Quhitlaw’ recorded passing from the Inglis to Scott families in 1446 may be a different place near Branxholme, perhaps related to Whithope and Whitsfield. However, ‘Whytlaw law and Lytle Whetlawe the larde of Bowcloughes’ were listed among farms burned by the English in 1547/8 – ‘...When, on their palfreys, they wad soon Frae Linnwood skip, and Whitlaw-braes, Beneath the soft-eyed summer moon’ [AD], ‘And echoed sternly back by Whitlaw braes – Renowned alike for bairns, and nuts and slaes’ [WNK], ‘O happy were the days I spent at Whitlaw braes, Pu’ing haws and slaes, A merry hearted boy’ [JCG] (also spelled ‘Whitelaw’, ‘Whitla’, ‘Whytlaw’, etc.; presumably named for being a white hill, possibly because of the white-blossomed blackthorn that Whitlaw (whi’-law) n. lands near Branxholme, probably adjacent to Whitrig. In 1446 the lands of ‘Quhitlaw et Quhitergy’ are listed among those exchanged between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. It seems unlikely these were the same as the Whitlaw on the Slitrig.
Whitlaw

Whitlaw Bank (whi’-law-bawngk) n. farmhouse off the main Newcastleton road shortly after Crowbyres Bridge.

Whitlaw Burn (whi’-law-burn) n. former name for the Flex Burn. It is so named in the 1767 description of the Hawick Common.

Whitlaw Gairdens (whi’-law-gar-dinz) n. street built on the edge of Hawick on the Newcastleton Road and named after the area in 2006. It was constructed roughly where the former curling pond was located.

Whitlaw Haugh (whi’-law-haf) n. part of the Common near Whitlaw, once used for shows etc. (e.g. for the Buffalo Bill Wild West Road Show in 1904). It is uncertain exactly what area this referred to, although it seems likely it was the flat land between the B6399 and the river, opposite the bottom of the Flex road. The name is also applied to a farmstead on the left-hand side of the road before Colislinn, presumably at the southern end of the Haugh. William Leithead was there in 1741. After the cottages at Stobs Woodfoot were pulled down about 1903, the joiners bought a piece of land here and built a joiner’s shop, as well as a smiddy (it is ‘Whitla-hauch’ in 1716).

Whitlaw Mains (whi’-law-mänz) n. former name for the major farm at Whitlaw. It is recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as the ‘Manis of Quhitlaw’, when the livestock and crops there are inventoried.

Whitlawside (whi’-law-sid) n. farm in the lower Liddel valley, a few miles south of Newcastleton into Dumfriesshire. It was a former seat of the Armstrongs with Simon of Whitlawside and his close kin listed in 1583. ‘Sime of Whitslesidis’ tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the debatable land, and he is listed as ‘Svim in Quhitley Syde’ in Monipennie’s Border chief’s list of c.1594. There are Wigholms there in 1622. ‘Geordy’ (probably Armstrong) of Dykeraw and Whitlawside was tried for resetting cattle in 1633. A later tenant named Simon Armstrong is recorded in 1642 and 1646. The lands are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. John Armstrong of Sorbie leased the farms of Over and Nether ‘Whitlawsyde’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1673. There were generations of Scoons there from the late 18th century (it is ‘Quhitiliesyde’ in 1605, ‘Quhitleyseyd’ in 1622, ‘Whyttlesyde’ in 1633, ‘Quhiteliesde’ in 1642, ‘Whittlesyde’ in about 1645, ‘Quhitelysyd’ in 1663 and ‘Whitelasde’ in 1792).

Whitlaw Slap (whi’-law-slap) n. small stream that joins the Flex Burn at Whitlaw and effectively marking part of the old boundary of the Common. It is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777, running roughly south-east from the back of the Vertish Hill to join the Flex Burn to the west of Meikle Whitlaw. Farm draining must have obliterated much of its course, since it is now scarcely visible (‘slap’ formerly meant a gap or drain).

Whitlaw Wud (whi’-law-wud) n. proper name for the wooded area that was more often known as the Duke’s Wud. The wood has been felled frequently, leading to a diversity of plant species. There have been several botanical surveys there from the 1970s. It is partly a reserve of the Scottish Wildlife Trust.

Whitmuir (whi’-mewr) n. lands just to the east of Selkirk Common. This is probably the ‘Vithmer’ granted to Kelso Abbey around 1150. A tower near there was said to have been built in 1250 and pulled down in the 18th century. William Ker was there in 1494/5 and 1502 and James Ker in 1531. William Dunn and James Elliot were also there in 1502 when they had remission for separate crimes involving theft and murder; John Lauer, James Elliot and Janet Ker were also recorded there in 1502 when they had 7 cows stolen. Meanwhile, in 1502 James Davidson was in Whitmuirhall when he had remission for thefts. A branch of the Ker family acquired the lands in 1566 from the Commendator of Kelso Abbey; this included Whitmuir Hall, further to the east. The Lairds of Whitmuir and Whitriggs Hall were listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. The ‘Hittringburn Loch’ listed among bodies of water in Selkirkshire in 1649 is probably meant for the loch here. James Ker is recorded there in 1663, with Whitmuir Hall owned by Andrew Ker of Maisondieu. In 1678 John Currier paid tax on £392 13s 4d for Whitmuir and Samuel Morrison paid tax on £281 at Whitmuirhall. William Currier was there in 1691. Thomas Elliot was at Whitmuir Hall in 1709. John Goudie (Divinity Professor from Edinburgh University) acquired the property in the mid-1700s from the last representative of Thomas Ker. In 1760 it was bought by James Dunlop, and passed down through that family until sold by Archibald in 1818, with Whitmuir Hall continuing to be held by the Dunlops for another couple of generations (it was ‘quhitmer’ in 1502; ‘Whytmoorloch’ is recorded on Pont’s c.1590 map, while ‘Whyhtmurechat’ and ‘Whytmure’ are on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).
Whitriggs

Whitrick (whi’-, whit-rik) n. another name for Whitriggs.

Whitrig (whi’-, whit-rig) n. wood on the Chisholm estate, near Chapel Hill. This may be the ‘Quhitrig’ in the barony of Hawick, mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, and among the lands swapped by Inglis of Manor for lands belonging to Scott of Buccleuch in Lanarkshire; in this charter it is listed along with Whitlaw, which was presumably adjacent. It is also recorded as ‘Quhitrig’ in the Barony of Branxholme in a contract of 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. This is probably the ‘quhitrig’ where ‘lang Johne turnbull’ was recorded in 1503. The lands were part of the Harden estates and were passed from Sir William Scott of Harden to his son Sir William in 1649 – ‘...And or we passed the Whitrig road A mirky hap cam douin’ [WL] (it is ‘Quitrig’ in 1435, ‘Quhityeryg’ in 1446, ‘Quhitrik’ in 1511 and ‘Whitrig’ in 1649; it is also the name of a bog on the road to Smailholm, famous for its bird life).

Whitriggs (whi’-, whit-rigz) n. farm to the east of Cavers, in Kirkton Parish. Whitriggs Cottages are between Whitriggs and Effledge. It was listed as part of the ancient holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10, dating back to the time of King David. In about 1541 James Douglas of Cavers and others complained that ‘a peil and hous of stane’ there, valued at £20, had been burned by Scott of Buccleuch. It was also burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. There are deeds in the Douglas of Cavers papers for the years 1527, 1530, 1570 and 1620. John Douglas is recorded there in the 1580s. William Douglas of Whitriggs is recorded there in 1601 and 1612. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 county valuations. Douglas of Cavers paid the land tax on £195 there in 1663. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. There was additionally a merkland of land there that was part of the kirklands of Cavers, called ‘Housie’ in 1698. 7 individuals are listed there on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John Douglas was there in 1716, Alexander Davidson in 1718, James Huntly in 1720, John Turnbull was a mason there in 1721, James Buchkham was living there in 1722, Robert Scott in 1725, Robert Turnbull in 1727, Robert Temple and Gideon Scott in 1737 and William Veitch in 1761. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. Andrew Currier was tenant there in the 1780s and 1790s. Henry Turnbull was farmer there in at least the period 1791–97. James Telfer was there in 1797 and James Dalgleish was a labourer there in 1800. The residents in 1801 included tenant Thomas Blyth, labourer John Rutherford and servant Andrew Brown. Thomas Blyth was farmer there in the early part of the 19th century, with his nephew William Blyth taking over around the 1850s. There were Shiels and Lockies there in the early 1900s. It was still part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in the 1870s. Flints found there are in Hawick Museum, and a flint knife and arrowheads in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (also ‘Whitrick’ etc. in earlier documents; it first appears as ‘Quhitrig’ in 1509/10, is ‘Quhitrik’ in 1511, ‘Quhitrig’ in 1541, ‘Whitrike’ in 1545, ‘Quhitrig’ in the later 16th century, is transcribed ‘Quhytekirk’ in 1589, is ‘Quhitrig’ in 1590, ‘Whyterige’ in 1687, ‘Whytrig’ in 1698, ‘Whitridge’ in 1694, 1716 and 1718, ‘Whitrich’ in 1721, ‘Whitridge’ in 1737, ‘Whitrick’ in 1781 and ‘Whitrig’ in 1797; it is ‘Whittrigg’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Whytrig’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Whittrig’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Whitrope (whi-trup) n. area around Whitrope Cottages and Whitropefoot, about 12 miles south of Hawick along the Newcastleton Road. The farm there is listed as ‘Wytwrahop’ in the 1376 rental of Liddesdale, valued at 8 merks. It was still valued at 8 merks on the 1541 rental roll when the tenants were William Elliot in Ramsigill, Leon, John, Robert and (another) Leon. It is probably the ‘Quhiuthop’ (with the ‘r’ missing)
Whitrope Summit (whi-trup-su-mi’) n. highest point on the Waverley Line, about 14 miles south of Hawick, and 1,006 feet above sea level. Near here there were sidings and a signal box (demolished). A local railway preservation group relaid a short section of track and opened an interpretive centre in an old railway carriage.

Whitrope fit (whi-trup-fi’) n. Whitropefoot, a farm on the Newcastleton road, near where the Sundhope Burn meets the Whitrope Burn. John Deuchar was tenant there in 1691, Richard Main was shepherd there in 1797, Andrew Waugh in 1799 and 1801, James Reid in 1801 and James Beattie in 1861. There is a good example of a well-constructed sheep dip here, which was last used in around the 1950s (also spelled ‘Whitterhope’).

Whitrope Cottages (whi-trup-koe-ee-jeez) n. former railway linesmen’s cottages on the B6399, lying between the road and the old railway line just at the end of Whitrope Tunnel.

Whitrope Bar Whitslade

listed in 1632 along with Stichelhill and ‘Laidhop’ as lands in Liddesdale (among the rentals of Kelso Abbey) owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1718 it was combined with Laidlawhope in the farm of Stitchilhill, with the farmhouse marked near the modern Whitropefoot. The area changed dramatically in 1859 when it became a centre for navvies working on the nearby tunnel and viaduct on the railway. More than 100 huts were built, along with a carpenter’s shop, blacksmith’s and Jamieson’s store, arranged around a square with a belfry in the middle. Huts typically contained a married couple and children in one room, and several lodgers in the other. The village was temporary, however, since the railway was completed by 1862. 4 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum, as well as a spear-head, was subject of a ‘treasure trove’ dispute in 1861 (also spelled ‘Whitterhope’ and ‘Whitehope’, it is ‘Whittroope’ in 1691 and used in around the 1950s (also spelled ‘Whitroopefoot’). A ‘treasure trove’ dispute in 1861 (also spelled ‘Whittroope’).

the Whitrope Burn (thnu-whi-trup-burn) n. stream that flows alongside the B6399 Newcastleton road, roughly from the Limekilnedge to Hermitage. It was said that stone from here was used to construct the ‘Auld Brig’ in Hawick (also spelled ‘Whitterhope’).

Whitrope Toll (whi-trup-tol) n. former toll-house on the turnpike road built to connect Newcastleton to Hawick on the B6399 in the early 19th century. Like all toll houses, this also acted as an inn and was extremely popular with the navvies during the construction of the Whitrope Tunnel and Viaduct. All that remains now are the turf-covered foundations on the west side of the road near Whitropefoot. The tolls were collected largely to recoup the costs incurred by the Duke of Buccleuch in building Newcastleton and the road connecting it with Hawick. Carter Thomas Scott lived there in 1835. Andrew Calvert was tollkeeper there in 1841. The house and stables were swept away in the flood of 1846, but must have been rebuilt (also known as ‘Whitrope Bar’).

Whitrope Tunnel (whi-trup-tu-nul) n. railway tunnel on the Waverley Line, about 12 miles south of Hawick, being 1,208 yards (1104 m) long, and constructed underneath Sandy Edge. There were numerous casualties during its construction, as commemorated by a nearby plaque. The tunnel crossed the boundary between Cavers and Castleton Parishes. The tunnel was blocked off in the late 1970s. There are 5 spoil heaps on the surface, left over from the excavations. A bronze spearhead, unearthed near there during railway construction in the 1860s is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland.

Whitsiels (whit-, whi’sheelz) n. area just north of Langholm, to the east of the A7, now marked by Whitsiels Bog and Whitsiels Knowe. It was leased to Walter Scott (but it is not clear which one) in 1494. The superiority was inherited in 1550 by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. William Armstrong of ‘Kirkton’ was there in about 1641. There were Elliots here in the 17th century (it is ‘Quhiteschelis’ in 1494, ‘Quhitscheills’ in 1550, ‘Quhitscheills’ in 1641 and ‘Whytcheills’ in 1661; it is marked ‘Whitscheills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whitshiels’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Whitside (whi’sid) n. farm on the upper Jed Water, also known as Whiteside.

Whitslade (whi’, whi-släd) n. former 16th century tower in the Ale valley, about 6 miles west of Hawick, also known as ‘Whitslades’, the area now being a farm of the same name. The name is first recorded as ‘Whitslade in Alne’ in the reign of William I in a document describing the boundaries of lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk, and another royal charter granting the lands to Andrew, son of ‘Uviet’ in about 1173. The boundaries of the lands are described there, although some of the place names are not recognisable. The ‘petra stante’ (possibly ‘standing stone’) between Whitslade and Almood is mentioned, as well as the Langhope Burn, another stream called ‘Harwude’, ‘Condosum’, ‘Wienesae’ and ‘Blake-den’. The house there was burned by a group of Armstrongs and Hector Lauder in Clerklands some time before 1502; they also stole 16 cows, 2 horses and goods. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) appear to have passed from the Erskines to John Cockburn of Ormiston in 1507/8. It may be that Walter of Synton (who married a daughter of Cockburn) gave up Synton to his son John, and resided himself at Whitslade. Walter’s second wife, Margaret Riddell died at Whitslade in 1585. The first Scott of Whitslade was Walter ‘The Hawke’, son of Robert of Stirches, who had held the Lairdship from 1575. The superiority of the lands resided with the Erskines, and was part of the Earldom of Mar in 1635. In 1643 the Roxburghshire teinds were valued at £80 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £586 in about 1663. Thomas Scott paid land tax on £1048 10s in 1678 and the lands in Selkirkshire belonging to the Laird of Whitslade were valued at £2168 in that year. An account of Selkirkshire compiled in about 1680 describes it as ‘a Gentleman’s Dwelling commodiously situate, and a large Park by it’. Tax was paid on 17 hearths on the estate in 1694. James Rule was herd there in 1698, and William Learmonth was gardener. In 1707 the Roxburghshire estate of the Laird of Whitslade was valued at £786 8s, and the lands lferented by Lady Whitslade at £26 2s. The estate was finally sold off by John Scott in 1722. It was then owned by the Adam family, and passed to the Venners through marriage. James Anderson was farmer there in at least 1786–1801 and William Amos was a servant there in 1801. William Brydon was farmer there in at least 1851–72. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858 says that the foundations of the tower were dug up ‘some years ago’ for the sake of the lime. In the first half of the 20th century the foundations could still be traced under an ash tree in the garden to the south of the farmhouse. Today only a set of indistinct bankings and turf walls can be made out in this general area. It has been suggested that there may once have been an extensive lake to the east of the farm. A dormer pediment with fleur-de-lys finial (as well as perhaps a cross) from there is preserved in the Museum. The Laird of Whitslade (probably Thomas, who died in 1671) was sung about in a ballad (probably written by Scott of Satchells) – ‘...Whitslades, wi’ mony a sigh and groan’, thought to be written by Walter Scott of Satchells – ‘Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Etrick-head; – Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade’s dead’[CWS]. A local version of the ballad ‘Ewe-buchts’ (or ‘The Broom o’ Cowdenknowes’) states that the Merry-Knowes are part of Whitslade – ‘Come round about the Merry-Knowes, my Marian, For Whitslade is lying lee’[T]. The arms of the Scotts of Whitslade was mostly the same as for the Syntons and Boonraw families, namely the usual Buccleuch arms with 2 stars and a crescent – ‘First came Todrig, Syne came Woll, Last came Whitslade – Chief of the Water-Aill’[CWS], ‘Whitslade is slumbering undisturbed and down in Harden Glen The tall trees murmur in their dreams of Wat’s mosstrooping men’[WHO] (the name occurs in the late 12th century as ‘Whitslade’ and ‘Witslade’; also formerly spelled ‘Whitslaid’ and sometimes ‘Whitslades’; it is ‘Quhit-slaide’ and ‘quhitslaid’ in 1502, ‘Quhnitslaid’ in 1507/8, 1574, 1581, 1583, 1591, 1608, 1610, 1619, Whitslade (whi’slad) n. Adam (14th C.) recorded in 1342 as witness to a grant by Gilbert Maxwell of rights of the Barony of Wilton to Melrose Abbey. He was a clerk of Melrose.

Whitslade Faulds (whi’slad-fawldz) n. farmstead to the south of Whitslade, situated on the Bleakhill Burn.

Whitslade Hill (whi’slad-hil) n. hill to the north of Whitslade farm, reaching a height of 346 m and essentially being an eastern spur of Barrel Law. There is a linear earthwork on the north-east of the hill.

Whitson see Whutson

Whitson’s Moss (wit-sinz-mos) n. former name for a boggy area in the headwaters of the Woo Burn, south of Threephead Moss. It is marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common, in a location that is now at the western side of Jubilee Wood (it is probably named after someone called ‘Whutson’; it is ‘Whitsons Moss’ in 1764).

Whitsun (whit-sun) n. short form of Whitsunday.

Whitsunday (whit-sun-dai) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, typically when annual rents were due. It originally fell on 26th May, but shifted to 15th May in 1752, with the adoption of the Gregorian Calendar. The date is close to the seventh Sunday after Easter, which is also known as Pentecost, a Christian feast. It is also known as ‘Whit’ or ‘Whitsun’. In 1886 all of the Scottish ‘term days’ were set to be the 28th of the appropriate month. This was the day on which it was formerly common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers travelling by cart between farms – ‘…that is to say Witsonday and Martynnes in wyntir, be twa ewyny porcionis …’ [DoR1445] (see also Whussunday).

Whittaker (whi-tu-kur) n. Francis ‘Frank’ proprietor of a grocer’s shop at No. 9 Dickson Street in the mid-1900s.

Whittle (whi-tul) n. Thomas (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was recorded as ‘Whetle’.

Whitton (whi’in) n. farm south of Morebattle, between Oxnam and Hownam. The lands there were long the property of the Riddells of Riddell and Whittington and were once split into Over Whittington and Nether Whitton, which were annexed to the Barony of Riddell. There were Davidsons recorded farming there in 1494/5. The lands were valued at £1600 in 1643, when owned by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk. The name is preserved in the hamlet of Over Whitton, as well as Whittington Edge and Whitton Loch (it was formerly ‘Quhit-toun’ and variants; the origin of the name is either ‘Whita’s farm’ or ‘white farm’ in Old English; it first occurs as ‘Wittunes’ in 1156).

Whitworth (whi’-wurth) n. William (b.c.1785) from England, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children Isabella, Ann and Robert.

Whullans (whel-linz) n. (Whillans) Aaron (1766–1856) son of Robert and Janet Scott. His forename is said to have come through the Scott family. He may was a drover and cattlesalesman who lived at Turnpike-side in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he was living at Chesters with his son Thomas, grand-daughter Margaret, great-granddaughter Janet and grand-daughter Margaret Hume. He married Margaret Swan (who was surely related to his aunt Mary Swan). His children included: an unnamed girl; Jennet (b.1796), who married Andrew Hume; Robert (b.1798); William (b.1800), who married Isabella Riddell; Thomas, who died young; Agnes (b.1804), who married John Murray from Kelso; Nelly (b.1806); Aaron (b.1808); Thomas (again, b.1811), who married Helen Brown; and James (b.1813), who married Mary Lawrie. Alexander (b.1856) son of Thomas and Helen Brown. He was born in Southdean Parish and learned the trade of a stonemason. He emigrated to Australia in about 1880. He married Mary Josephine Chalker. Andrew (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer in Southdean Parish. He was a hind at Falside in at least 1831–37. In 1841 he was at Letham, in 1851 at Camptown and at 1861 in Mossburnford. On the 1801 ballot list he was at Spittal and ‘has two children & an immediat prospect of a third’. In 1851 he was ‘Formerly Farm Servnt’, born in Hobkirk Parish and living in jedburgh with his daughter Betty Anderson and her family. His children probably included: Betty (b.1797/8), baptised in Cavers; and Robert...
Charles Noel ‘Chuck’ (1924–2018) local knitwear retailer and Common Riding stalwart. His father was John Bell and he was great-grandson of Kinly Stick. He and his family have been involved in owning and training racehorses. He was one of the people who accompanied Chap Landles round the marches in 1940, and he won one of the first Common Riding Races held in 1945. He was Cornet in 1948 and in 1967 was Acting Father to George Peden, son of the man who was his own Acting Father. He was also President of the Mostroopers’ and Callants’ Clubs and Common Riding Master of Ceremonies for 18 years. He was one of the men who rode the marches during WWII. He donated a new Common Riding flag in 1992. He rode during the Common Riding in his jubilee year and celebrated 50 years as Acting Father in 2017. He was also a President of Hawick R.F.C. He married Nan and has children Alister, Donald and Ian. Christopher Glendinning (b.1876) born at Bewlichill, Lilliesleaf, son of John who farmed at West Boonraw. He worked as a builder and as a tenant farmer. He was at Longbaulk Farmhouse in 1911. He married Elizabeth Robson and they had at least 5 children, Isabel (b.1745), John, Eland, Donald and Ian. Christopher Glendinning (b.1938/9) son of John ‘Jack’ Glendinning Irving (b.1938/9) son of John ‘Jack’ Glendinning and Netta Irvine. He was known locally as an arsonist, responsible for at least a couple of mill fires, pleading guilty to setting fire to Wilson & Glenny’s. He ironically died in an accidental fire in his flat on Allars Bank. James (16th/17th C.) servant of John Watson in Coldingham. He was recorded as ‘Quhillans’ as a witness to a saisine in 1622, which may be the earliest record of this surname, albeit in Berwickshire. How he may have been connected to the Roxburghshire family members is unknown. James (17th C.) witnessed in 1657 to the baptism of John, son of Cuthbert. He was surely a close relative of Cuthbert, as well as John, the other witness. James (c.1688–1783) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a weaver at ‘Firbank’ (probably near Northbank) in Jedburgh. Parish. His parents could be the John and Janet who were required to marry in Ednam Parish in 1687. He seems likely to have been brother of William, who was also a weaver at Firbank. In 1720 he married Jean Lookup. Their children included: Janet, who must have died young; John (1718–1813), born at Blackheasters and married Mary Swan; James (1720–1811), who married Jean Oliver; Thomas; Janet (again, b.1722), who married a Crawford and had 5 children; Robert (1723–87), who married Janet Scott; and Thomas (again, b.1726), who died unmarried. He and his family are buried at Chesters, some descendants living at Rougletce. James (1720–1811) son of James and Jean Lookup. He lived at Antroch. He married Jean (or Janet) Oliver and their children (mostly baptised in Jedburgh Parish) included: James; John, who married Isabel Scott from Oxnam; Jean (or Janet, b.1763); Thomas, who married Nelly Scott from Cleithaugh; Helen (b.1773); and at least one other. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish, with his surname recorded as ‘Whillas’. His children Isabel (b.1783) and Robert (b.1786) were baptised in Southdean. James (b.1766) eldest son of John and Mary Swan. He was born in Castleton Parish. He moved to England and married Ellen Weare in 1798. Their children were John, James, Thomas, Mary, Mungo, Jenny, William and Margaret. James (b.1813) youngest son of Aaron and Margaret Swan. He lived near Chesters, like many of his family before him, and later resided at Smailholm. He worked as a dyker, like his father and some of his brothers. In 1841 he was living at Chesters with his brother Thomas and a female servant. In 1845 he married Mary Laurie at Coldstream. Their children were: Aaron (b.1847); George (b.1849); John Stephenson (b.1852); Elizabeth (b.1854); James (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1859). James (19th C.) married Jane Bell in Hawick in 1852. James (19th C.) married Annie Scott in Hobkirk in 1875. James (b.1850/1) probably son of George ‘Kinly Stick’. He and his wife were living at 29 High Street in 1911. He married Margaret Robson (b.1848/9) in Hawick in 1877. They had 3 children. James Dunn (b.1880), William (b.1888), Henry (b.1885) and Stanley (b.1889). John (17th C.) witness in 1657 to the baptism of John, son of Cuthbert. He was surely a close relative of Cuthbert (perhaps even his father), as well as James, the other witness. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1702, where his name is recorded as ‘Weelands’. He may be the same as John ‘Whillace’, son of Cuthbert, who was born in Hawick in 1657 and may thus have been a baker as well as brewer. He was listed as a ‘baxter’ in several baptismal entries. He witnessed baptisms in 1695 for fellow baxter William Hodge, in 1699 for Walter Wilson in Hawick and for tailor Walter Riddell, in 1700 for merchant Michael Scott, in 1702 for Michael Scott and for merchant Patrick Angus, in 1705 for Bailie Walter Graham, in 1706 (along with Bailie John Binnie) for Bailie Robert Hardie, in 1709 for Walter Riddell, for tailor James Turnbull, for candlemaker John Scott, for Bailie Robert Hardie again and for merchant William Craig, and in 1715 for mason John Turnbull. John (b.1657) son of Cuthbert and Bessie Glendinning, with the baptism witnessed by John and James Whillans. His surname when baptised is recorded as ‘Whillace’. He is probably the John ‘Weillands’ who was mentioned as a ‘baxter’ (i.e. baker) in Hawick in 1694 and 1710. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was probably the John who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may have witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1699. He was ‘John Weelands baxter’ when he witnessed a baptism (for tailor Walter Riddell) in 1702; John Forman (the other witness in 1702) later married Margaret ‘Weelands’, who was probably his daughter or sister. He witnessed another baptism (along with William Gledstains, perhaps related to his wife) in 1705. He was a baxter and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the John who married Margaret Gledstains and had children: Margaret (b.1690); Margaret (again, b.1691); and John (b.1693). Note that James Gledstains married Helen ‘Whillance’ and had a daughter in 1683; they may have been related to his wife and to him, respectively. John (1718–1813) son of James and Jean Lookup. He was born at Blackheasters in Southdean Parish and lived in Castleton. In 1765 he married Mary Swan and she died in 1806; this is probably the marriage of John ‘Whillie’ recorded in Castleton in 1765. Their children included: James (b.1766) who married Ellen Weare and moved to England; Thomas (b.1768) who married Agnes Riddell; John (b.1772) who married Mary Geddes and lived in Castleton; William (1779–1856) who married Agnes White and died in Ontario; Jean (b.1780) who married Thomas Oliver; Robert (b.1781) who must have died young; and Robert (again, b.1783) who married Barbara Oliver and also emigrated to Canada. He is buried at Southdean. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was living at Henslawshill when most of his children were baptised. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1769); Charlotte (b.1771); Hannah (b.1773); and Archibald (b.1774). It is possible that a 2nd Archibald (b.c.1779) and Sophia (b.1779) were also his children. John (b.1768) son of John and Mary Swan. He lived in Castleton Parish. He married Mary Geddes in about 1795. Their children were: John; David; William; Margaret; Agnes; James; Mary; Andrew; Isabel; and Jean. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is recorded as owner of 2 horses. Perhaps the same John ‘Whillas’ had children Jean (b.1780), William (b.1781) and Robert (b.1783) baptised in Southdean Parish. John Bell (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Alison Muir and their son James was baptised in 1794. John (18th/19th C.) son of James and Jean Oliver. He was a weaver at Antroch in Southdean Parish in 1811. Thomas, who was a weaver in the same place in 1799 was probably his brother. In 1818 he was a weaver at Newbigging in Oxnam Parish. He married Isabel Scott of Oxnam in 1810. Their children included: James (b.1811), who married Mary Robson; Isabella, who married Thomas Simson; and John, who married Mary Blacklock. He could be the John from Oxnam whose death is recorded in Southdean Parish in 1834. John (d.1847) from Southdean, he married Jane Lillico in Bedrule in 1833. His wife was a daughter of William Lillico and Margaret Nichol. They emigrated to Canada in about 1835 (along with Robert, who was surely a relative), settling in Gloucester Township, Ontario. His wife’s brothers James and Robert Lillico joined them in Canada later. He farmed at Hurdman’s Bridge, Ontario and died of consumption, just before the last of his 7 children was born. John (b.1809) eldest son of Robert and Barbara Oliver, he was born at Chesters. He emigrated to Canada and lived in the Ottawa area. His children included Robert, William, Alex, John (‘Big Jack’), Margaret and Barbara. John (b.1811) son of John and Isabel Scott, he was born in Oxnam and lived in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. In 1851 he was a ploughman at Doorpool. He married Mary Blacklock (from Middlebie) and their children included: Janet (b.1847/8); John (b.1849); Isabella (b.1851); Janet (again, b.1852); and James (b.1854). John (b.1825/6) son of Richard and brother of George ‘Kinly Stick’. He was born in Hawick and worked as a framework knitter. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard and in 1851 and 1861 at 10 Kirkwynd. He lived only a few doors down from his brother George. He married Elizabeth Turnbull, who was from Selkirk, daughter of John Turnbull and Catherine Grant; she was sister of his brother George’s wife Helen. Their children included: Richard (b.1847/8); a son Grant (b.1849/50), presumably named after his maternal grandmother; William (b.1850/1); a daughter Grant (b.1852/3); perhaps Mary (b.1855); Mary (again, b.1857); and John (b.1859). George (b.1861), Walter Wilson (b.1862), Joan (b.1864) and Helen Turnbull (b.1866) may also have been his children. In 1911 his widow Elizabeth and son William were living at 23 Drumlanrig Square. John (b.c.1830) son of James, who was a carrier and labourer in Ancrum. He married Helen Dunn, who was also from Ancrum. The family later lived at 5 Weensland Road. Their children included: James (b.1850); John (b.1854); Agnes (b.1856); Isabella (b.1859); Henry (b.1861), baptised in Hawick; George Dunn (b.1864), baptised in Wilton; and Ann Dunn (b.1867), baptised in Hawick. John (b.1849/50) from Bowden, he married Annie Glendinning in Teviothead in 1873. He was later a farmer at West Boonraw. Their children included: Christopher Glendinning (b.1876); Jessie (b.1878/9); William (b.1880/1); and John (d.1904). John Bell (1896–1928) son of Isabella and an unknown father, he worked as a warehouseman. He had partial deafness, but nevertheless he enlisted in the Seaforth Highlanders in 1916 and discharged in 1919. He was awarded the Victory Medal and the British Military Medal. He married Agnes Alice Walker Darling in 1920. Their children were Alice Darling (b.1921), Charles Noel (‘Chuck’, b.1924) and Catherine Darling. His wife secondly married John Bell and died in 1973. He died in a biking accident near the Mair. John ‘Jack’ (20th C.) eldest son of Christopher G. He was father of Irving. Margaret (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. Her daughter Margaret was baptised in 1723, with her surname listed as ‘Whollis’. Walter ‘Whillis’ accepted responsibility for sponsoring the child’s education (suggesting perhaps that he was the grandfather, and hence may be Walter from Denholm, whose wife was Margaret Lamb). Richard (d.bef. 1841) possibly born in Dent, Yorkshire in 1783, he was the father of ‘Kinly Stick’. He worked as a mole-catcher in Kirkton Parish, and later his family moved to Hawick. He firstly married Katherine (or Christian) Stevenson, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1809); and Janet (b.1813). He secondly married Mary Miller, and their children included: Mary (b.1818), who married Broughton Newell; George (b.1819), also known as ‘Kinly Stick’; Margaret (b.1822); John (b.1827), frameworker in Hawick; Jane (b.1830/1); James (b.1834); and Betty (b.c.1835). His wife Mary was listed as head of the family on the Mid Row in 1841 and as a widow on Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) in 1851. Richard (b.1845/6) frameworker in Hawick. He was probably son of John and nephew of ‘Kinly Stick’. In 1911 he was a widower at 41 Loan. Robert (18th C.) son of William who was a weaver at Firbank. He moved over the Border and was recorded in a militia list at Spithopehaugh, with his brother Cuthbert also living nearby. He married Isabel Crinklaw and their children included: William (b.1739); and Robert (b.1743). Robert (1723–87) son of James and Jean Lookup. He lived in Southdean Parish, specifically at ‘Roughhint’ and Roughlee and married Janet Scott. Their children were: James (b.1759); Janet (b.1762); Robert (b.1763); Aaron (b.1766); Jean (or Ellen, b.1770), who may have married John Kincaid; Betty (or Isabel, b.1772); and probably Andrew. The family name is sometimes recorded as ‘Hollans’. He died at Chesters. Robert (1783–1861) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born at Chesters. He was an agricultural labourer, living at Turnpikehead in 1814. He married Barbara Oliver in 1808 and their children were: John (b.1809); Margaret, who married Alexander Anderson; Thomas (b.1814), who married Mary Anderson; Mary, unmarried; George, who married Margaret Clarke; Betty, who married Charles Sharpe; and Jane, who married Alexander Watters. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1837, like his brother William, settling at Hurdman’s Bridge near Ottawa, Ontario. His grandchildren included Rev. Robert and Rev. Dr. George. Robert (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He had 2 sons who died in 1819. These may be the William and James from Hawick whose deaths were recored in Southdean in 1819. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Presumably the same Robert is also listed as proprietor of a public house and stabler on the High Street. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a meal dealer on the High Street. He may be the same as the agricultural labourer recorded at about 20 High Street in 1841. Robert (b.c.1785) born in Southdean Parish, he was a farm worker. He was agricultural labourer recorded at about 20 High Street in the 1841 census and was a ‘Labourer Shepherd’ on the High Street in 1851. He married Margaret Beattie (from Castleton) and their children included Margaret (b.1819), Helen (b.1821) and Isabel (b.1825). Robert (b.1811/2) probably son of Archibald, farm worker in Southdean. He was an agricultural labourer at Minto Deanfoot in 1841, a ploughman at Ruletownhead in 1851 and a farm servant in Sprouston in 1861. His children were baptised in Hobkirk, Minto and Southdean Parishes. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Henderson and their children included: Isabella (b.1840); Archibald (b.1841), who married Elizabeth Galbraith and lived in Melrose; William (b.1843); Janet (b.1849), who probably married Fife Paterson and lived in Sprouston; James (b.1851); and Agnes (b.1853). Sophia (b.1778/9) born in Hobkirk Parish, she married a Whillans. In 1841 she was living at Rutherford with her children James and Margaret, and in 1851 she was ‘Formerly Domestic Servant’ living at Cralling Tofts, with her children Helen and James. Her children, baptised in Bedrule, included: Helen (b.1809/10); James (b.1812/3); and Margaret (b.1816/7), who married Peter Hinselwood and lived in Jedburgh. Thomas (b.1768) 2nd son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Riddell (or perhaps Liddell) in about 1794 and their children included John and ‘May’ (probably Mary). It may not be a coincidence that Agnes, daughter of John Riddell and Agnes Whillans was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (d.1810) lived at Town-o-Rule and is buried at Southdean. This is according to an old gravestone. Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of James and Jean Oliver. He was a weaver at Antroch in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John was a weaver there in 1811 and probably his brother. In 1801 he married Nelly Scott from Cleithaugh. Their children probably included James and George, who lived at Camptown, Jedburgh. Thomas (b.1811) younger son of Aaron. He was a dyke-builder, living at Chesters. In 1841 he was living at Chesters with his brother James and a female servant and in 1851 was with living with his father and other family members.

In 1854 he married Helen Brown, who was from Cavers. His wife had an illegitimate daughter Janet (b.1848) with George Burns, blacksmith at Barnkine. Their children included: Robert (b.1854); Alexander (b.1856); Margaret (b.1857), who married Capt. Kellock on the ship to Australia; Euphemia (b.1859); Helen (b.1861); Agnes (b.1862), who married Capt. Joseph Pinto and emigrated to Australia; and Elizabeth (b.1865).

Thomas (1814–94) son of Robert and Barbara Oliver, he was born at Chesters in Southdean Parish. He emigrated to Canada with the rest of his family in 1837. There he married Mary Anderson and raised 11 children at Hurdman’s Bridge near Ottawa. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1843–1924) born in Southdean Parish, youngest son of William. He became head gardener to the Duke of Marlborough at Blenheim. He suffered from ill-health and moved to Oxford. His children included David, Maude, Isabel Frances, Ralph and Sydney James.

Walter (17th/18th C.) probably son of Cuthbert and brother of John. He married Margaret Lamb. When he had a daughter baptised in 1690 he was living in Hawick, but subsequent children were baptised in Cavers Parish, with his address specifically listed as Denholm Deanhead in 1705 and 1712, and Denholm Dean in 1708. His children probably included: William, who married Janet Stothart; Elspeth (b.1690); Archibald (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Ann (b.1707); Christian (b.1708); and John (b.1712). Note that in 1703 his name appears as ‘Mewhillance’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as a ‘fowler’ in 1729 in the rental book for Archibald Jerdon, factor to Capt. Elliot of Wells. He is probably either the man who lived at Denholm Dean, one his son who was born in 1705. Walter (b.1720) son of William and Janet Stothart. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. In 1756 he is probably the Walter who married Jean ‘Dowgall’ in Glasgow. Their children were: Margaret (b.1754); John (b.1755); George (b.1758), who moved to London; William (b.1760); Hannah (b.1764); and Helen (b.1768). William (1779–1856) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Southdean Parish. He is probably the William recorded as ‘Husbandman’ at Chesters on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He compiled a Whillans family tree in 1823. He emigrated to Canada in 1824, settling in London, Ontario (with his brother Robert settling near Ottawa), where he built a home at Ilderton. He married Agnes White in 1813 and they had 9 children: John (b.1814); Jean; William (b.1818); Mary; Betty; Adam; Robert (b.1828); Thomas (b.1830); and Agnes (b.1833). He died in Ontario. Jane, who was recorded dying at Abbotrule in 1816, may be his daughter. William (18th/19th C.) possessor of part of the lands at...
Acreknowe. He is recorded as former owner in a valuation of 1779 (when the lands were owned by Sir Francis Elliott) and also on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (when Sir William Elliott of Stobs paid the tax there). It is recorded that £22 5s 8d of land that was of Acreknowe was ‘possessed in 1779 by William Williards’. He could be the William (b.1728), who was earlier associated with the Flex or his son William (b.1760). William (1800–68) son of Aaron and Margaret Swan. He was a dyke-builder and lived at Chesters in Southdean Parish. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was the enumerator for Southdean Parish for the 1861 census and probably also the William who is recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book. In 1828 he married Isabella Riddell, who was also from Chesters. Their children included: Jane (b.1828); Aaron (b.1830); Margaret (b.1832), who probably married David Fairbairn; Robert (b.1835), also a dyke-builder; William (b.1837), died young; Walter, twin of William; Jessie (b.1838), who married John Inglis; William John (b.1841), who married Jane Maben and was a letter-carrier; Thomas (1843–1924) gardener; James, twin of Thomas; and Catherine (b.1846), who married Thomas Rutherford, coal merchant in Hawick. 3 of his sons emigrated to America. William John (b.1841) son of William. He was born in Chesters, his family being in that area for at least 3 generations before. He was educated at Chesters, and for a few years (starting at age 10) acted as letter-carrier between Southdean and the post office at Bonchester Bridge. After working with his father, in 1868 he became the letter-carrier between Bonchester and Hawick. He lived at Weens Lodge in the period 1868–73, but retired as postman in 1883 due to ill-health and moved to Bonchester Bridge. After working with his father, in 1868 he became the letter-carrier between Bonchester and Hawick. He lived at Weens Lodge in the period 1868–73, but retired as postman in 1883 due to ill-health and moved to Bonchester Bridge, where he also acted as carrier to Hawick. He and his wife moved to Hawick in 1893. In 1873 at Melrose he married Jane, daughter of farmer James Maben, in a ceremony in which his sister Catherine also married Thomas Rutherford. His son was William James (b.1889) and his daughter Annabell became a teacher. William (b.c.1850) born at East Fodderlee, he was a ploughman who lived in a cottage on Bonchester farm. He became paralysed and had to be looked after by his wife. He married Agnes Grieve, who was born at Liddel Bank. Their children included: William, born at Whitelee, hind to the Turnbulls in Bonchester; Janet Agnes (b.1891), kitchen maid at Weens; and James, born at East Fodderlee. He could be the William, son of Robert and Elizabeth Henderson, baptised in Southdean Parish in 1843 or William, son of James and Agnes Jack, baptised in Hobkirk in 1856. William (b.1854/5) probably son of George ‘Kinly Stick’, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1911 he was living at No. 2 Loan with his wife Catherine (b.1855/6) from Gala. They had 12 children, 8 of whom survived. William (b.1883) son of James and Mary Skedd, he was an insurance agent in Hawick. In 1911 he married Fiona Amelia, daughter of Conrad Glanch; the witness was his brother Stanley. They had a son James Dunn (b.1913), who was born on Havelock Street. William ‘Bill’ (20th C.) hosier foreman at Pescos. He sang with the P.S.A. choir. He married Helen Charters, who was a founder member of the Hawick Amateur Operatic Society. He himself became club secretary for many years. The couple’s children were Nan, Jim and Jean (Wintrope) (one theory on the origin of the name is that it relates to lands at the Wheel Kirk; it is one of the surnames with the most spelling variants, including ‘Hollans’, ‘Weallan’, ‘Weelands’, ‘Weillands’, ‘Wellands’, ‘Wheelans’, ‘Whelans’, ‘Whelians’, ‘Whellans’, ‘Whillands’, ‘Whillas’, ‘Whillace’, ‘Whillance’, ‘Whillons’, ‘Whillis’, ‘Whillin’, ‘Wholence’, ‘Whollance’, ‘Whyllance’, ‘Willan’ and ‘Willans’).

whusky (whus-kee) n. whisky. The first local record of ‘acquawyttie’ is in the Town Book in 1642. In 1737 Robert Elliot of Fenwick, William Ogilvie, Robert Harrison and Thomas Watson (in Hawick) proposed the building of a stillhouse and brewery to the Duke of Buccleuch’s Commissioners, and in the following year land on the eastern side of the Slitrig was leased to Robert Elliot of Fenwick for that purpose. Hence we might suppose that whisky was produced locally at the ‘Whusky Hooses’ site on Slitrig Crescent from about that time. It is first mentioned in terms of payment for workers (in place of the earlier brandy) in the Town Treasurer’s books in 1747. The occupation of ‘distiller’ first occurs in a baptismal record of 1757 (for John Aitchison and Gilbert Corbet). Whisky did not start being used as a cure for almost every ailment! The drink had many illicit stills at one time, and in the late 18th century a great deal of smuggling to England, where the duties were much higher. It was only legitimately manufactured in Hawick around 1818–19 – ‘Whiskie given the workers at the bridge, 1 pint, 1 gill, . . . 0 2 10. Half-a-mutchkin whisky to glaziers and officers, . . . 0 4’ [BR1747], ‘. . .Wi’ what some bellums ca’ the bottle, An’ I ca’ whisky, When ’boot yer plans ye frendly tattle, An’ speech gets huskie’ [JoHa], ‘Wha’s oily words, like eighty-year-aul’ whisky, Slip ovr the palate wi’ a din unhusky’ [JoHa], ‘. . .While someone slips a whisky in your tumbler unaware’ [WHO], ‘Aw can offer ee maist o’ the usual things The likes o’ whisky, rum or beer . . .’ [AY], ‘. . .aboot ice-cream flavoured wi port, sherry, whisky and sice-like alcoholic beverages’ [DH].

the Whusky Burn (thu-whus-kee-burn) n. stream entering the Slitrig near ‘Whusky Hooses’, which must have been buried for at least a couple of centuries (mentioned in Parish Records of 1762).

Whusky Gore (whus-kee-gor) n. name for a former ditch or stream that ran south from Acremoor Loch to the Langhope Burn. It is marked ‘Whisky gore’ on a 1767 map of Langhope farm, but does not appear on modern maps.

Whusky Hoose Mill (whus-kee-hoo-seez) n. Whisky House Mill, on Slitrig Crescent (at No. 14). It was built for William Richardson in 1787–88, located on Slitrig Dam, and used for the manufacture of cloth and then carpets. This firm was continued by William’s son Walter until his death in about 1808. From 1815 it was owned by Walddie, Pringle, Wilson & Co., and probably from about 1819 was solely Walddie’s, becoming J. & W. Walddie, manufacturers of stockings and woollen cloth. It was sold off in 1829 and later the building became a storehouse as part of James Melrose & Sons, millwrights. It was also popularly known as ‘the Royal George’ or ‘the George’. This may have been the first real ‘mill’ in Hawick and the beginnings of the tweed industry (note that it is probably named after an already existing name for the area, and only coincidentally related to a distillery).

Whusky Hooses (whus-kee-hoo-seez) n. Whisky Houses, old place name for an area immediately next to the Slitrig near what became Melrose’s on Slitrig Crescent. Sometimes the name was applied more to the area between the Crescent and the river. It was probably the same as the area that was earlier called Usuch Haugh, and later called the Brewery Haugh. A 1738 record of Robert Elliot of Falnash leasing from the Buccleuch Estates a ‘stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also, a malt kih and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick’ may refer to this site. It was used as the town dump until the latter part of the 18th century (origin uncertain, but probably a corruption of Usuch Haugh).

Whusky Meg (whus-kee-meg) n. nickname of the years around 1800, perhaps meant as a familiar name for James Ruickbie’s wife – ‘An if ye

whussles (whu-sulz) n., pl. whistles from the main mills in Hawick used to go off at regular times and could be heard at home by most of the employees. Each mill’s whistle had a distinctive tone, and they were once familiar to all Teries. Typical times were 8 a.m., 12.30 p.m., and at night. The practice was suspended during WWII and never really picked up again.

Whussunday (whu-sun-di) n., arch. Whitsunday – ‘Oo’ll beide i this hoose ti Whussenday, an than oo’ll fit’[ECS] (also written ‘Whussenday’; see Whitsunday).

Whutson (whu’ri) n. (Whitson or Hewitson)

Betty see Betty Whutson. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His name is listed as ‘Whitson’. He married Margaret Stoddart and their son William was baptised in 1819.

John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, with surname recorded as ‘Heutsone’. He married Bessie Rae and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His surname is recorded as ‘Heutsone’. He was minister of Newcaetleton Congregational Church 1890–91. Robert (188-1902) trained at Glasgow and Kilmarnock Evangelical Union Halls, he was minister at John Street, Montrose 1866–70 and then at Beith and at Anstruther East. He was minister of Newcaetleton Congregational Church 1890–91.

Nancy nickname of Agnes Hewitson. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Kirkton in 1720, when his name was written ‘Hotson’. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1724. He was there recorded as ‘Robert Huisen workman in Flex’ and the witnesses were ‘Mr’ Charles Telfer and Beadle John Scott. It is possible

he is the Robert ‘Whitsone’, married to Margaret Elliot, whose son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728. He is probably also the Robert ‘Whitsone’ who witnessed baptisms in 1729 for merchant David Johnston and Andrew Young.

Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their son Walter was baptised in 1728. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1730 he is ‘Robert Huison […]dler’ and in 1739 he is ‘Whitson’ and ‘Tennent’. He was stated to be from Eves Parish when in 1729 in Cavers Parish he married Janet Scott from Hawick. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: James (b.1730); Walter (b.1739); and Helen (b.1741). The witnesses in 1730 were ‘Mr Kennedy’ (minister of Cavers) and Robert ‘Huison’ (probably merchant Robert Howison) and in 1739 were William Elliot of Rigg and Walter Scott at Commonside. Based on the witnesses, he probably lived near Teviothead. In 1741 he is recorded being ‘at Blackcleugh’ and the witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Archibald Elliot at Bowanhill. It seems likely he is the fiddler, married to Bessie Scott, whose son Gavin was baptised in Hawick in 1744, with witnesses Walter Scott at Falnash and Walter Scott at Commonside. He could be the Robert whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1746 and the Robert whose daughter Marion was baptised in Kirkton in 1731. His name is variously spelled ‘Howison’, ‘Huison’, ‘Hutson’, ‘Whitson’ and ‘Whotson’. However, he appears to be distinct from the contemporary Bailie ‘Howison’.

Robert see Bailie Robert Howison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1775. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son George was baptised in 1736 (there are many spelling variations, including ‘Huison’, ‘Hutson’, ‘Whitson’ and ‘Whotson’; note confusion with other surnames, such as Hotson, Howieson, Howison, some of which were probably once interchangeable).

whutter (whu'-ur) v., arch. to mutter, witter, chatter, gossip – ‘A cleeken o guidweives at a gardeen-yett whuttert ti other when thay eyed iz’ [ECS] (also whitter).

-wick (wik) suff. placename ending, generally derived from the Anglo-Saxon ‘wic’, meaning a settlement or farm, perhaps fortified. Despite occurring in the name of our Town, it is not common locally, with Borthwick and Fenwick being among the only other examples. In coastal towns, like Berwick, the ending is believed to have a different origin, perhaps Viking, with the meaning being ‘bay’, as in Jorvik.

Wicked Tammy (wi-kid-taw-mee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmanus and Neddy Lamb’ [HI].

Widow Richardson

Widow Richardson (wi-dō-ri-churd-sin) n. lady who kept a lodging house in Hawick in the early 18th century. This is recorded in the 1723 Parish records, although further particulars of her name, her husband and her address are not given.

Wield (weel’d) n. Bailie John (1836/7–77) druggist of 48 High Street, who was Hawick Magistrate. He came from the Annan area, son of a farmer. His chemist’s business operated for about 20 years, and he was succeeded by W.R. Ross. He started a paraffin works on Commercial Road around 1866 (where Donaldson’s later had an oil extracting works), but he was bankrupt in a couple of years. He was a Councillor for Teviot Ward from 1871, immediately being appointed as a Magistrate, but retired in 1875 due to business difficulties following the Collie failure. In 1870 he married Christina Mary, daughter of draper John Turnbull. In later years he lived at Wilton Grove and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

wifie (wi-fe) n. a wife – ‘Aw’ll maybe pick up a bit wifie o’ ma ain in the by gaun’ [JEDM], mildly derogatory term for a woman, particularly a middle-aged one – ‘The gawsie auld wifie cam’ [JJ], ‘If ye want a bit wifie that’s bustlin’ ben’ [JEDM], ‘If ye want a bit wifie that’s usefae an’ neat’ [WAP].

Wigg (wig) n. farm on the B6357 in the upper Rule valley, near where the Wigg Burn meets the Hyndlee Burn. William, Lord Cranstoun (superior of the Barony) owned the woods there in 1621 when 2 Shiels were denounced as rebels for cutting down his ‘greenwood’. James Laidlaw was shepherd there in the early part of the 18th century. John Elliot was living there around 1770 and Thomas Grieve in 1788. The lands there were held by Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1811, along with part of Wauchope-head, ‘now known by the name of the South-west division of the Lands of Wauchope’, with the superiority held by Archibald Scott of Howcleeuch. George Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Thomson was shepherd in the latter part of the 19th century (it is ‘Wig’ in 1621).

Wigg Burn (wig-burn) n. stream in the upper part of Rulewater. It rises on the slopes of Wigg Knowe and flows roughly north to meet the Hass Sike and then the Hyndlee burn near the farm of Wigg. Recorded in 1677 when the lands of Wauchope are described as ‘on Southside of water called Wig’.

Wiggins (wi-ginz) n. possible name for lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, and for which Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted the office of Bailie in 1524, confirmed in 1525. It is unclear where these lands were, but the others named were Melroselenads, Ettrickhead, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale. They are not listed in the earlier grant of 1519 (it is ‘Uiggynnis’ in 1524 and ‘Wggennis’ in 1524).

Wiggins (wi-ginz) n. John (17th/18th C.) married Isobl Dodds in Ashkirk in 1705. His name is written ‘Wiggins’.

Wigg Knowe (wig-now) n. hill in the Wauchope Forest, to the west of the Note o’ the Gate. Wigg Burn rises on its eastern slopes. It reaches a height of 491 m and has a communication mast on top (it is drawn on Pont’s c.1590 map, labelled ‘Wyggs hill’, is ‘Wriggs Hill’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Wriggs hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Wigham see Wigholm

Wigholm (wi-gum) n. Adam ‘Edy’ (16th C.) listed in 1541 among English rebels who had been reset in Scotland. He was listed among some Armstrongs who were reset by young Hector Armstrong at Tweed. Probably the same ‘Edde Weghame, servante to Anton Armstronge’ was listed in 1541 among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots, Croziers and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Arche Wiggein’. He is surely related to the ‘Rynne Wiggein’ who was tenant of a farm near Skelfhill. Helen (16th C.) merchant of some sort recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. She was owed money for supplying fowls. Given the others she is listed alongside, it seems likely she was from Hawick. John ‘Cock’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Wighame alias Cok’ in a document of 1500 listing men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas who gave pledges for good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Perhaps the same ‘Cok Wighame’ is listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. John (17th C.) son of William, tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 he is on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Actually there are 2 separate men listed with the same name. They may have been related to other Wigholms who were also listed, namely Cock and William. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) listed among the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Rynme Wiggein’ (and there is some guesswork on his name). Ninian (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Niniane Quhigholme in Peilbrae’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case of the death of a man while imprisoned in the Hawick Kirk steple.
Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Todscleugh-
syde’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.)
from Braidhaugh and formerly Alemoor. William White from Muselee and Simon White from Ale-moor were caution for him at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. William (15th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.)
tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 his son John was listed among many Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. ‘Wilwigholms steid’ is listed in 1632 among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum, and seems likely to have been the farm he tenanted in Liddesdale. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Newton in Roxburghshire (although it is unclear which Newton) in 1684 on the list of men declared rebels for not taking ‘the Test’ (also written ‘Wiggam’, etc.).
wight (wi’t, wi’t) n. adv. stout, strong, mighty, brave – ‘…That had he been as wight as Wallace was, Away brave Noble he could not win. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], ‘When I was spankie, young, and wight, You in my weelfare took delight’ [JoHa], ‘…one of these wight and wannel lads …’ [HSR], ‘When Wallace wight, and Douglas stern, Led on the spearman o’ the Border’ [JS], ‘Whiles, at the Daisy and the Bard, They [gulls] tak their spite – But it’s a gey coorse maa daur fyle Wallace, wight’ [DH].
Wight (wi’t) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Ellen Clerk (1776– 1860). He died abroad and is commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Adam (b.1805/6) farmer at Newton in 1841. In 1851 he was working as a ‘miller’s man’ at the Maltstep in Wilton. He married Helen Elliot and their children included John (b.1838), Jane (b.1842) and Mary (b.1847). Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at the Grange in South-dean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) living at Over Kirkhope in Ettrick Parish in 1799 when his son Andrew was baptised in Robertson. Andrew (19th C.) cabinet-maker of Scott & Wight, 58 High Street. Their premises may be the place marked ‘Mr. Scott’ around No. 58 on Wood’s 1824 map. The business is listed on Bucclench Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. They are listed as ‘Scott & Wight’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Rutherford, and they had no children. Daniel ‘Dan’ (19th C.) landlord of the Half-Moon Inn in the latter part of the 19th century. He was also well known as a Powderhall runner. In 1889 he refuse to sell some land to allow an extension of the Evangelical Union Kirk on O’Connell Street, presumably because of their promotion of temperance. George (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick who was Cornet in 1709.
He married Helen Cook in Hawick in late 1711 and their children included James (b.1712), Janet (b.1714), Robert (b.1717), Margaret (b.1719) and Jean (b.1722). The witnesses in 1712 were cooper
Robert Hardie and James Scott ‘Doctor’, in 1714 were Bailie George Martin and flesher Robert Deans, and in 1722 were flesher Robert and George Renwick. Note that his name was written ‘Wight’ in 1712. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1728 he married Janet Beattie from Langholm Parish. In 1721 and 1725 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Robert, who was surely related. James (d.1716/7) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto, in 1704 for workman Archibald Elliot, in 1707 for weaver Andrew Jardine and in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hilliesland. In 1709 he was ‘weaver, burgess of Hawick’ when he had a grant from Robert Langlands of that Ilk for the lands of ‘Spetchenhaugh’ (i.e. the Spetch). This gave him the right to cut turf on Wilton Common, which he did. His son Robert succeeded him in his lands and his grandson James was served as his heir in 1751. He died the same year that his grandson Robert Douglas was born; he therefore must have had a daughter who married a Douglas. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, son of Robert. He was grandson of James, who was feued lands at the Spetch by Langlands of that Ilk in 1709.
He was served as heir to his grandfather in 1751.
He then sold the lands to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, with his cousin, weaver Robert Douglas, serving as his bailie. Rev. James (1786–1859) born in Midlem, son of George. He is said to have been taught by George Scott in Lilliesleaf. He attended Edinburgh University, was licensed in the Janet Henderson and whose children, baptised the Militia. He may be the Robert who married liesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for (b.c.1780) servant at Raperlaw Townhead in Lil—Robert (b.1754) and William (b.1756).

and in 1725 were weaver George (again) and iam Riddell, in 1721 were wright John Pringle and were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker William.

Francis Elliot and wright William Murray, in 1717 were merchant are also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milstone in 1725 when his son Andrew was baptised. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a shepherd at Bedrule on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Mary (b.c.1780) listed as a widow who was a midwife at about 25 High Street in 1851. Robert (17th C.) indweller of Unthank in Ewesdale. In 1653 he inherited half a husbandland in Midlen from James Bald, his grandmother’s brother. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He seems likely to be son of weaver James, who inherited his father’s piece of land at the Spetch. He witnessed baptisms in 1706 for carrier David Minto and in 1725 for George Smith (‘tenant in Hawick’). In 1715 he married Jean Bridges (‘or Swan’); she may therefore be the Jean who previously married Mungo Swan in 1702. Their children included: Robert (b.1716); Margaret (b.1717); James (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); James (again, b.1721); Helen (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Robert (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1716 were merchant Francis Elliot and wright William Murray, in 1717 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker William Riddell, in 1721 were wright John Pringle and weaver George Wight (who was surely related) and in 1725 were weaver George (again) and weaver John Stevenson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Robert (b.17540 and William (b.1756). Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Raperlaw Townhead in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He may be the Robert who married Janet Henderson and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included Robert (b.1812), Margaret (b.1814), Jessy (b.1817), Thomas (b.1818), Helen (b.1820) and Violet (b.1823). Robert (1944/5—) joined Pesco’s in the yarn store in 1964, eventually becoming Managing Director 1992–2000. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John, who were also listed there. Walter (d.1819) tailor in Hawick. His name is the second one on the list of ‘Donations’ to the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son Archibald was baptised in 1702. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. William (1806–92) son of Adam and Ellen Clerk, born in Robertson Parish. He was a Slater at Borthaugh Cottages. He donated some interesting stones to the Museum in 1863. He married Helen Lillico, who died at Borthaugh in 1850, aged 40. He may also have married a second time. His children included Christian (b.1848), Helen Clerk (1851–1883) and Isabella Douglas (1853–1936). His mother Helen (or Ellen) Clerk was also living with him in 1841 and 1851. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. William (19th/20th C.) joiner and cabinetmaker who ran the business ‘Scott & Wight’ at 58 High Street. In 1906 he transferred the firm to his son Andrew (also formerly written ‘Weight’).

the Wilderness (thu-wil-dur-nis) n. former name for a plantation on the east side of the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, i.e. near where the bowling part of the Leisure Centre is located now. A little stream used to run through the grounds (long buried in conduits).

the Wilderness Road (thu-wil-dur-nis-rød) n. name once used for the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, located where the Station was built. The road ran between 2 high hedges and was called after the popular name for the plantation on its eastern side.

wild hyacinth (wild-hI-a-sinth) n. usual name in Scotland for the flower called the bluebell in England, Scilla non scripta.

wild rewub (wild-roo-bub) n., arch. the common butterbur, Petasites vulgaris (also ‘wild rhubarb’).

wile (wil) v., arch. to deceive, beguile, entice – ‘...O but ye be a wilin’ rogue – Fareweel John Barleycorn!’ [JT], ‘Until a lass wi’r saft sweet words Did wyle the glove in play ...’ [DH], n., poet. a snare, trap – ‘Keep me frae the wyles whilk thay hae layde for me, an’ the girms o’ the wurkers i’ inequitie’ [HSR] (also written ‘wyle’).
Wilkie (wil-kee) n. James (17th C.) cottar at Rueltownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (d.1760) described as being ‘in Hartshaugh miln’ when her funeral is recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. John (17th C.) tenant in Hassendean. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. He is recorded in 1684 when his servant Thomas Brown was listed among those declared fugitives for being Covenanters. Also in that year the will of his wife Helen Davidson is recorded. He is probably the John ‘akiie’ who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in Hassendean in 1683. John (d.c.1685) listed as ‘younger, in Rafflat’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was presumably farmer at Rafflat. John (17th C.) married Janet Scott in Southdean Parish in 1690. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Swanshiel. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for waulker Robert Rutherford. John (18th C.) married Janet Grieve in Hawick in 1754. John (d.bef. 1808) wright in Hawick. His son John was a shoemaker whose death was recorded in 1808. He may be the John who married Margaret Renwick (also from Hawick) in Hawick in 1776 and whose children included Janet (b.1777) and John (b.1780). John (18th C.) married Helen Lamb in Bedrule Parish in 1726. John (c.1775–1808) shoemaker in Hawick, son of wright John. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Margaret (16th C.) probably name of a tenant of Sir James Douglas of Cavers according to a list in the court proceedings of the Lords of Council in 1541. Mary (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a shop somewhere around the Howe gate in the early 19th century. She sold ‘tam trot’, gingerbread and other confectionaries. T. (18th/19th C.) listed at Minto House among subscribers for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was probably a house servant at Minto. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine of the Erskines on Synton lands in 1508, where he is ‘Thomas Wykinsone’. He may have been local, since several of the other witnesses were. Rev. Thomas (d.c.1638) first post-Reformation minister at Lilliesleaf (those earlier being just readers). He was related to John Row, the Reformer. He was educated at St. Leonard’s College and St. Andrews University, becoming ‘laureated’ in 1583. He became Lilliesleaf minister in 1588 (after being Reader for 2 years) and continued until at least October 1638. He was presented to the parsonage and vicarage by Robert, Lord Roxburgh about 1609. It is said that he ‘did frequently shed tears while he was preaching’. In 1615 he was rebuked for allowing ‘the gudewife of Sinton’ (possibly the widow of Walter Scott of Synton) from Ashkirk parish to take communion, ‘she being a contenmer of her awin minister and of her awin kirk’. In about 1618 he was listed as reader at Selkirk among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. He may be the same man as Thomas ‘M.A.’ recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1626 and 1629. His elder son was Thomas (who was Reader at Selkirk and then minister of Crailing), and his younger son William (who succeeded as minister at Lilliesleaf). Rev. Thomas (c.1592–c.1658) probably son of Thomas, minister of Lilliesleaf, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and became minister of Crail ing in 1621. He left a widow and son, John. Note that there were other ministers of the same name living at a similar time, and who were probably related. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1659, he was a minister in London and then became minister of Galashiels in 1665. He is recorded holding lands at ‘Feirlienown, Bewlie’ in 1669. He was translated to North Leith in 1672 and translated to the Collegiate or Second Charge of the Tolbooth (Edinburgh) in 1687. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was licensed in 1676 and later the same year became minister at Abbotrule. He was translated to Beith (Ayrshire) before mid-1687. But he was only minister there for 2 years. Rev. Thomas (1645–1711) nephew of Rev. Thomas (who was minister at Galashiels and the Tolbooth in Edinburgh, and who held lands at Bewlie). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1662 and was part of the meeting of Lothian and Tweeddale ministers after the Toleration. In 1689 he became first minister of the Canongate. He was twice Moderator of the General Assembly. He married Rachel, daughter of John Sinclair, minister at Ormiston. Note that it is easy to confuse the various nearly contemporary ministers of the same name. He may be the Thomas who was said to have officiated at a field conventicle in 1679 when Graham of Claverhouse was searching the local countryside. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Adam Inglis ‘in huntla’ (i.e. Huntlaw) in Robertson Parish in 1682. Probably the same Thomas ‘akiie’ is recorded in Hassendean in a baptismal record of 1683. His wife was Janet Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1683) and William (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were John ‘glkie’ and Walter Davidson. Thomas (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1720 for cooper William Turnbull, in 1725 for weaver Robert Turnbull, and in 1742 for gardener Alexander Donald. He paid tax for 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1720 he married Margaret, daughter of John Purdom (schoolmaster and Session Clerk). Their children included: Marion (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); John (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Margaret (again, b.1727); Robert (b.1729); Christian (b.1731); Margaret (again, b.1734); and William (b.1737). Walter (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. The 1723 baptism was witnessed by tailor Henry Orrock and merchant William Chisholme, the 1726 one by William Sadler and Henry Orrock, the 1729 one by ‘Mr’ Chisholme and Thomas Watson and the 1731 one by Walter Scott and John Glendinning. He could be the merchant Thomas who witnessed baptisms for Walter Purdom (perhaps related to his wife) in 1759, 1760 and 1765, the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for merchant Richard Purdom in 1762 and 1773, and the merchant Thomas who witnessed baptisms for shoemaker James Chisholme in 1762 and for Baxter William Elliot in 1763. Thomas (b.1806/7) from Kirkliston in Midlothian, he was a farmer in Newcastle. In 1861 he is listed as a horse hirer on Douglas Square. He was on the Town Committee of Management in the 1860s. His wife was Agnes and their children included John and Margaret. Rev. William (d.1671) probably son of Thomas, Lilliesleaf minister, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and himself became minister at Lilliesleaf in 1640. While preaching at Melrose in 1640 he was apparently interrupted in the middle of a sermon by the passage of English troops going from Berwick to Duns. His initials are inscribed on a panel containing a sun-dial that is built into the modern kirk at Lilliesleaf and bears the passing of English troops in 1640 he was apparently interrupted in the middle of a sermon by the passage of English troops going from Berwick to Duns. His initials are inscribed on a panel containing a sun-dial that is built into the modern kirk at Lilliesleaf and bears the date 1642. The county valuation of 1643 records that £20 was paid to the Reader, who was probably him. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He apparently died suddenly. His son Thomas was the first minister of the Canongate in Edinburgh (formerly written ‘Whillkie’ and ‘Wilky’).

Wilkinson (wil-kin-sin) n. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Huntlywood, Melrose, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751. Richard (20th C.) hosier foreman with Pesco’s. He played rugby for the P.S.A. He married Joan, daughter of George Cairncross, who manufactured aerated waters. Their children included Richard and Irene, who married a McLeod. Richard ‘Dick’ (1931/2–2020) son of Richard and Joan Cairncross. He worked for John C.Laurie, framesmith’s of Teviot Crescent. Later he worked in Innerleithen and then lived in Gala. He was a keen member of the Teviotdale Harriers, being Captain 1953/4 and becoming a life member in 1988. In 1952 he won the 4-mile Jubilee Trophy, as well as the 7-mile cross-country and 1-mile titles, and in 1958 won the 5-mile Menzies Trophy. Thomas of Chesterhall (18th/19th C.) merchant in Amsterdam. In 1753 he had asine for the lands of Ashkirk Mill, Kirkhouse, Salenside, Broadlee, Castleside, Leaphill, Ryemerscroft, Ryecroft, Roundhaugh, Sandiehaugh and Langhope Meadow. He had an additional asine for essentially the same lands in 1779. He was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He also paid tax on lnds in Cranston Parish, Midlothian, in 1771. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, being admitted in 1780, with no objections. He was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1788 (and still according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), which had previously belonged to Scott of Whitslade, including Ashkirk Mill, Kirkhouses, Salenside, Castleside and Broadlee. Some of these lands were sold to Archibald Cochrane in 1795 (sometimes written ‘Wilkeson’; see also Wullison).

will (wil, wul) n., arch. power, choice – ‘But there’s an auld saying, Sir, an’ a true ane, – a woman likes her will’ [JTe], particularly used in the phrase ‘to come in someone’s will’, meaning to surrender to someone’s wishes – ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, …confessed of the said pettis in the nicht, and cam in will for the same’ [BR1638], ‘…the said Robert Deans came in will for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand …’ [BR1640], ‘He, the said John Hardie came in the baylyea will for his illegal and irregular marriage’ [BR1712], ‘This day Mr Watson in Leeds and me bargained for the Brodly wool, he came in my will for 6/- the stone’ [JB], or ‘put in one’s will’, meaning to leave things to the other’s discretion – ‘Hyred Will Nickle to caw the plewgh from Martinmas to Whitsunday for a pair of shoes – 2s that he put in my will …’ [JB] (cf. wull).

willcorn (wil-körn) n., arch. wild oats, Avena fatua.

willfi (wil-fi) adj., arch. willful – ‘And of the willfu’, woeful waste, Right conscious was he’ [JLu].

Willglen Mill (wil-glen-mil) n. name sometimes used for the building at 22 Commercial Road. The name presumably came from this being part of the set of mills run by Wilson & Glenny. It was built around the 1890s for Hunter & Young’s hosiery manufacturers, then used by Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 1922–25 and by Willglen Hosiery Ltd. from 1925. It was used by dressmakers W. & O. Marcus 1940–1964, with part also occupied by the Red Cross. It then became the Scout Headquarters. The main part of the building was demolished in 2000 as part of road improvements to Commercial Road, with the back part of the original ‘L’ still standing (also sometimes written ‘Wilglen’).

William (wi-lee-um) n. popular surname, particularly popularised in Scotland because of early Kings and Wallace. It is unusual in being common for a millennium despite not being from the Bible. In early documents the Latin version occurs as ‘Willelmus’ (and similar forms) and was often abbreviated to ‘Wm’. Pet forms include ‘Bill’, ‘Billie’, ‘Will’, ‘Willie’, ‘Wull’ and ‘Wullie’.

William (wi-lee-um) n. name of one King of Scotland and 4 Kings of the United Kingdom.

William I ‘the Lion’ (1143–1214) King from 1165. His name came from his standard, the red lion rampant on a yellow background. He was part of the Canmore family and was Earl of Northumbria from 1152, until forced to yield the title to Henry II of England in 1157. He tried to regain Northumbria, but was captured at the Battle of Alnwick in 1174 and taken to Normandy. To be released he had to acknowledge Henry as his feudal superior in the Treaty of Falaise, which lasted for 15 years. Because of this focus on the Borders, it is probable that he passed near or through Hawick. He certainly spent some time in Jedburgh, where he granted many charters. He also arranged the ‘Auld Alliance’ with France, which effectively existed for the next 300 years. He was succeeded by his son Alexander II. William III of England (1650–1702) King of England from 1689, taking the crown from James II in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ and re-establishing a Protestant monarchy with Mary II. He was son of William II, Prince of Orange and Mary Stuart (daughter of Charles I). He married Mary, daughter of James II and ruled the United Provinces of the Netherlands from 1670, until invited to England by James’ opponents. In 1689 the clergy were required to pray for the new King and Queen and to denounce James II or lose their positions. Only 3 ministers out of 33 in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Kelso and Selkirk did this. There was also continued opposition in Scotland from the Jacobites. William IV (1765–1837) King from 1830, being crowned after the death of his brother George IV. There was a Coronation Dinner held in the Town Hall in 1831, chaired by Dr. John Douglas. He was originally a Whig supporter and helped push through reforms, although by the time the Reform Bill was passed he had switched his sympathies to the Tories.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (11th/12th C.) 2nd Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk (which would become Kelso Abbey). He took over from Radulf in 1117 or 1118, but retired in 1119, after only a couple of years. He returned to Tiron and was succeeded by Herbert.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (12th C.) one of the chaplains (‘capellano’) probably of Hawick (along with Algar) who was recorded as witness to a charter in about 1183, the first mention of a church at Hawick. He is also one of the first people associated with Hawick of whom we have record, although whether he actually resided there is unknown. He may be the William, Clerk of Hawick (‘Willo, Cleric de hauwic’) mentioned as witness to: a Lovel charter of about the 1190s, swapping the lands of Branxholme for some nearby lands in the Barony of Hawick granted to the canons of St. Andrews; a charter of Geoffrey Riddell to Kelso Abbey in the period 1185–1204; a charter of Ralph de Vere to Kelso Abbey sometime in 1165–1195; and a charter of William de Moreville... to Melrose Abbey in 1189–1195. He may have still been Hawick chaplain when St. Mary’s was dedicated in 1214.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (d.1227) son of John, who was son of Orm, who gave his name to Ormiston on Kale Water. He was referred to William of Hownam and also William de Landales. He confirmed his father’s gift of land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey, but there followed a dispute with the monks, and he ended up having the property for his life. He witnessed many grants to religious institutions, e.g. in the period 1165–85 a grant of Anselm of Whitton to Melrose Abbey, lands in Clifton around the 1180s, lands in Whiton by William, son of Walter de Ryedale in the period 1185–1215 and lands in Eskdale and elsewhere in Dumfriesshire by Gervase, son of Robert Avenel. In the 1210s he witnessed a grant to the Convent of Dunfermline and perhaps a little later a grant to St. Andrews Priory. In the 1210s he also witnessed a grant by Patrick of Ryedale of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey, and a further grant of lands in Lilliesleaf by Walter, son of Patrick of Ryedale to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed further grants to Melrose and Kelso in about 1220. He was last recorded as witness to a transaction by Alexander of Chatto to Melrose Abbey for lands in Hownam in 1226. His wife was Donancia de Cleresei. They had sons: John of Landles, who may have been ancestor of the later Landles’; and William of Ormiston, ancestor of the Ormistons.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (12th/13th C.) son of Hugh. In the period 1214–49 he witnessed the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham. It seems likely he was a local man, perhaps a cleric.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, recorded sometime in the period between 1251 and 1274. His surname is unknown.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (13th C.) Vicar of Hassendean. He is recorded as a witness for several undated documents, preserved in the chartulary of Coldstream Priory, from around 1280.

William Fawlaw’s Close (wi-lee-um-faw-lawz-kłös) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish, mentioned in a land dispute of 1561 and 1562. It lay to the east of Nether Billerwell.

Williamhope (wi-lee-um-höp) n. farmstead between the Yarrow and Tweed valleys, just south of Ashiestiel Hill and west of what is now Yair Hill Forest. These were Crown lands from around 1456 and were leased by Thomas Ker of Merchiston in 1488 and David Murray in the early 16th century. Sheep were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. William Wood had cows stolen from there, for which Walter Scott in Broadmeadows had remission in 1502. Alexander Pringle in ‘Craglesche’ held the lands in 1541, paying £24. Covenantor John Stoddart was there in the 1680s. John Stoddart was there in 1741/2 (the name occurs as ‘Williamhop’ in 1456, ‘William hop’ in 1494/5, ‘Williamhop’ in 1502 and ‘Williamhoip’ in 1541).

William Inglis’ (wi-lee-um-ing-ul-zeez) n. carrier’s firm of the early 19th century, operating weekly between Hawick and Dumfries (there was a separate ‘Inglis’ which ran to Berwick).

William Laidlaw Memorial Hall (wi-lee-um-läd-law-me-mō-reel-ul-hawl) n. village hall in Bonchester Bridge, designed by J.P. Alison and built in 1899. Its erection was funded by Sir Robert Laidlaw in memory of his son William, who died in infancy, and his father, also William. It was designed to have a hall seating 250, a recreation room, library and keeper’s house. It was renovated with help from the Lottery Fund in 2003.

William Lockie’s Well (wi-lee-um-lo-keez-well) n. a former private pump, also sometimes used by the public, its precise location uncertain. There are at least a couple of possible William Lockies after whom it might have been named.

William of Deloraine (wi-lee-um-ov-de-lo-rān) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. He is the champion of the Lady of Branxholme, who rides to Melrose Abbey to get Michael Scott’s mystic book, is injured by the evil dwarf page of Henry of Cranstoun and through magic is impersonated by Henry for the final duel with Sir Richard Musgrave – ‘A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e’er couch’d Border lance by knee; Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross’ [SWS].

William of Hawick (wi-lee-um-ov-hIk) n. prebend (i.e. member of the clergy receiving a stipend) of Sir David Guthrie, mentioned in 1435. There was also a ‘William, clericus de Hawick’ who witnessed a charter of about 1300.

Williams (wi-lee-unz) n. A.S. (19th/20th C.) teacher at the Buccleuch School who moved to Teviot Grove Academy in 1895 when it became the new secondary school. He was the main assistant teacher of the senior classes, replacing Mr. Brown. Dr. Harry (1913–2016), O.B.E., living at Gattonside in his later life, he was a member of the Hawick Salvation Army for many years. He trained in medicine and as at the Salvation Army training college and became a missionary surgeon, specialising in reconstructive surgery. He worked at several hospitals in India and was involved with relief work in Vietnam and elsewhere. A hospital was named after him in Bolivia. He was appointed O.B.E. in 1970 for work in the field of plastic surgery, particularly for leprosy sufferers. He was Chief Medical Officer for the Catherine Booth Hospital. He married Eileen Neeve in 1939. He died at the age of 103. John (18th C.) servant at Borthwickbrae when his child (or perhaps he himself) was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1775. He was footman at Borthwickbrae in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for John Elliot. By 1785 he was a house servant at Borthwickbrae. His name is transcribed in one document as ‘William’. Robert (18th/19th C.) stabler and public house proprietor of the High street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825 directory. William’s Cleuch (wi-lee-unz-klooch) n. small stream rising on Burnt Craig and running north-east to join the Slitrig. William Scott’s Well (wi-lee-unz-skots-wel) n. a former private pump at the foot of the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace, or perhaps the continuation of Morrison Place). Williamson (wi-lee-unz-höp) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, located somewhere in upper Teviotdale. It is listed between Corriesike and Giddenscleuch when the Barony was inherited in 1687 and 1698. There may be a connection with ‘Williamsgrig’, which was also in the Barony. However, it seems unlikely to be related to ‘Williamhope’ in the Yarrow valley.

Williamhope (wi-lee-unz-hop) n. name said to have been given to the location in Ettrick Forest where in 1353 Sir William Douglas (the Knight of Liddesdale) was killed by his godson, who was also Sir William Douglas, Lord Douglas. A 1649 description of Selkirkshire states that ‘William Croce is the place, where one of the Earles of Douglass was killed of old. It stands in the heicht of an Edge beside Braidmeadows within a mile of Philiphauch’. The farm of ‘Williamhope’ lies near the head of the Glenkinnon Burn, north of Broadmeadows. There has been no sign of a monument there for centuries. Williamson (wi-lee-unz-sin) n. Alan (1897/98–1969/70) from Dunfermline, he came to Hawick to teach History and Modern Studies, moved to the Highlands, then was Principal Teacher of History at Earlston, returning to Hawick as Depute Headteacher in 2002. He was High School Rector from 2006. Charles (19th C.) Hawick draper, listed on the 1837 electoral roll. He was also recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a draper on the High Street. He was mentioned in connection with ‘fictitious voters’, having a reciprocal life-rent agreement with John Robertson in Selkirk. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as Secretary of the Hawick Reading Room at the Tower Knowe. He had a business at the Tower Knowe, which was taken over by William Kedie and Walter Armstrong when he emigrated to Australia in 1839. He sailed on the ship Palmyra and founded a business in Collins Street in Melbourne. He married Elizabeth Waldie and their children included Joan (d.1833), who is buried at St. Mary’s and Isabella (d.1840), who died in Melbourne. Cornelius (b.1814/5) from England he was a ‘sinker maker’ in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at about 12 Howegate in 1851. He was also listed as a ‘sinker maker, Back row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Sarah. Rev. George (1741/2–1817) native of Alloa, he was the first minister of the East Bank (‘Burgher’) Church, from 1774. However, he lasted only about 9 years, there being dissaray among the congregation and argument about his stipend. The precise details of why a segment of the congregation turned against him are now unknown, but one suggestion is that he declined to marry someone who had effectively been selected for him, and another idea is that his acceptance of charity from Dr. Charters of Wilton was resented. James Winthrope published a pamphlet about the dispute, ‘A Dialogue between Two Burglers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, but no copies are known. He finally left in 1783 following disagreements with his congregation, his successor referring to his ‘offensive peculiarities’. Nevertheless, he remained in Hawick for several months, preaching to his sympathisers in the Little Haugh. The East-end congregation subsequently had a difficult time finding a new minister, calling at least 2 other men before James Henderson was ordained in 1791. In 1785 a group of the congregation obtained a ‘decreet of removing’ from the meeting house against him. After leaving Hawick he attached himself to the ‘Auld Licht’ party and was a probationer for 6 years before becoming minister at St. Andrews in 1789. However, in 1795 there was again a dispute over the payment of the stipend, with him claiming he had not been paid, but then a paper being produced in which he signed for the payment. He left to become an independent preacher, suffering from ill-health and poverty and dying in Kirkcaldy. He wrote ‘Separation no schism . . . ’ (1800). In Hawick in 1775 he married Betty Dalglish, daughter of the farmer at Fastheugh in Yarrow. An unnamed daughter of his died in Hawick in 1781 and a son Simon in 1782. There is no known portrait of him. George (b.1814/5) born in Collessie in Fife, he was head gardener at Minto House in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Eliza and George. James (b.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Alexander and Helen Jamieson. He moved to Edinburgh with his parents when young. He married in 1845 and travelled around the countryside with his wife selling baskets. In 1866 his wife died after he had assaulted her and he was sentenced to 15 years in prison. In 1868 there was a legal dispute between Southdean and an Edinburgh Parish over who was liable to support his children Helen and Anne. His other children were David and John. James ‘Nellie Swinton’ (19th/20th C.) well-known Hawick character whose nickname was, for some reason, that of a woman. He was noted for training runners. His father had died from a fall in the Sandbed while decorating a shop for Edward, Prince of Wales’ wedding.

William Wilson & Sons

(18th/19th C.) slubber in Hawick. The death of his wife is recorded in 1824. William (17th/18th C.) minister in the Hawick area who was one of the first members of the Curling Club in 1803. William (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Whitchesters. He is recorded there in 1714, 1716, 1719, 1722 and 1725. He witnessed baptisms in 1720 for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters and in 1725 for William Cathrae in Closes. He is probably the William ‘Willieson’ who (along with John Hobkirk) witnessed a baptism for James Glendding (who also lived at Whitchesters) in 1731. He married Marion Thomson in Wilton in 1713 and their children included: Margaret (b.1714); Alexander (b.1716); William (b.1719); William (again, b.1722); Marion (b.1725); and John (b.1727). Note that sometimes his name may be transcribed as ‘Wilson’. The witnesses in 1714 were Walter Scott and James Davidson (both in Newbigging), in 1716 were John Glendinning and Alexander Thomson (also in Whitchesters), in 1719 were John Glendinning ‘Elder’ and tailor Robert Gledstains, in 1722 were John Glendinning in Whitchesters and merchant Francis Scott, and in 1725 were John Glendinning (again) and Robert Gledstains. William (b.1807/8) from Edinburgh, he worked as a tinsmith and gas-fitter in Hawick. In 1841 he was at ‘Kirkyard’ and in 1851 on the Loan. He married Mary Williamson in Southdean in 1830. Their children included Margaret, James, Charles, William and Ann (formerly written ‘Williamson’).

William’s Rig (wi-lee-unz-rig) n. ridge in the Slitrig valley, to the north of Burnt Craig and just to the west of an extensive series of earthworks. The ridge contains the remains of an enclosure, about 38 m in diameter. This is probably the ‘Williamrig’ described being in Cavers Parish and owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott in 1692. It appears on a list between ‘Herretburn’ and ‘Mirlaw’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is ‘William-rig’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Williamslidg’ in 1687 and is ‘Williamsrig’ in 1698).

William Wilson & Sons (wi-lee-un-wul-sin-an-sunz) n. William Wilson & Sons hosiery manufacturers from 1819–51, founded by William Wilson, who had been in business since 1788. It began with Langlands Mills and with warehouses behind 13 High Street. The warehouse moved to the top of Wilton Path and a mill was opened. at Weensland in about 1835. They started with hosiery, but branched out into flannel, blankets and tweed. The company received regular support from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures through the 1830s. With business booming and the families of the original ‘Sons’ having several sons growing up to enter the trade, in 1851 the business was essentially split among the 3 sons who mainly controlled it, Walter, John and George: Ladylaw and Langlands Mills went to John Wilson; Weensland Mill went to George Wilson; and additional land at Weensland, together with Allars Crescent and the property at 13 High Street went to Walter Wilson.

Windburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. former farmstead near Windburgh Hill, in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish. Alexander Lillico was shepherd there in 1801 (it is written ‘Winebrough’ in 1801).

Windburgh Hill (wind-bu-ru-hil) n. hill above Langburnshiel off the Newcastleton Road, 507 m (1,662 ft) high. There are the remains of 2 old cairns on the summit, as well as evidence of a former enclosure. The hill is the source of several streams that flow into the Sitrig. There seems to have been a belief that there was a body of water nearby, as described in a 1649 account of Roxburghshire, which mentioned ‘Wynburghlaw Loch, on the head of the Hill’. By tradition the bottomless loch near the summit was a home of the fairy folk, specifically a kelpie, which, if disturbed, would send a flood into the burn below; Leyden describes poetically how a careless shepherd caused the Sitrig flood of 1767 – ‘From you green peak, black haunted Slata brings The gushing torrents of unfathomed springs: In a dead lake, that ever seems to freeze, By sedge enclosed from every ruffling breeze, The fountains lie; and shuddering peasants shrink To plunge the stone within the fearful brink’ [JL], ‘... Then Greatmoor and Windburgh against a purple sky’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Wyndburgh’ and formerly ‘Wineburn’; it appears as a drawing on Pont’s c.1590 map, labelled ‘Wynebrughlaw’, but is not on Gordon’s c.1650 maps or Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Windburgh Hope (wind-bu-ru-heep) n. former name for lands somewhere around Windburgh Hill, once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. The lands appear to have been between those of Whelpinside and Robert’s Hill (written ‘WimbruchHoip’ and ‘Winbruchthope’ in 1562).

winder (win-dur) n. formerly someone who wound yarn etc. in the textile industry, a job often performed by children in Victorian times. Later the word referred to a machine for winding the yarn from the dyed hanks of wool onto cones (also wunder).

Windhead (wind-hed) n. name used for one of the tallest hills in Castleton Parish, as described in the New Statistical Account in 1839. It is probably the same as Windy Edge, which is Winna

Winnington

He settled back in as a solicitor in Hawick, becoming first President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and Common Riding Committee Secretary 1923–25. However, in 1925 he moved to Edinburgh to set up Hamilton & Winning, solicitors, in Dundas Street. He was appointed Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

Winnington (wi-ning-tin) n. area to the north-west of Stobs, containing the farm of Winningtonrig and the marshy land at Winnington Moss. Stobs army camp was on this land. The farm of Winningtonhall was lower down, perhaps near the present Woodfoot Cottage. The lands were long held by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and for a period had the status of a barony, including ‘the lands and towns of Wyndinton, the lands of Wyndintonhall and mill, the lands of Smynsted, Over and Nether Kirkwoodheid, Barnsyd and Horslie’ and some pieces of land in Jedburgh; in 1610 the barony was inherited by Marion, Jean and Margaret Hamilton, heirs of Patrick Hepburn. In 1621 Winnington and Winningtonhall were purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh; this sale included Winningtonhall, Winningtonrig, Dodburn, Whitehillbrae, Sвинstead, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe and Birkwood. In 1657 the Barony passed to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, after having been held by his father William of Stobs. It was transferred to Sir William Elliott in 1677, when it consisted of ‘Windingtoun and Windintounhall and the mill thereof, the lands of Parkheid, Horslie, Turne, Acreknow, Windintounrig, Durnsteads, Dodburne, Kirkwood, Bransidebrae, Huntshnil, Abbotsacre’. However, in 1670 the same lands were among those whose superiority was inherited by the daughters of George Scott, brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. And in 1680 they (or perhaps their superiority) were among lands inherited by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. In 1788 the value of separate parts of the estate of Elliott of Stobs are given and ‘Windington-mill and mill-lands’ were listed as £62 19s 9d. It is unclear where exactly this was, with one possibility being that it is effectively the same as Newmill-on-Slitrig.

Winnington Mill (wi-ning-tin-mill) n. former corn mill at Winnington. In 1788 the value of separate parts of the estate of Elliott of Stobs are given and ‘Windington-mill and mill-lands’ were listed as £62 19s 9d. It is unclear where exactly this was, with one possibility being that it is effectively the same as Newmill-on-Slitrig.

Winnington Moss (wi-ning-tin-mos) n. boggy area between Winnington Rig and Hawick Moor. The boundary of the Common ran through it, this being the ‘Wintownmoss on the south’ described in the 1537 Charter. Acreknowe Burn rises there. A field in this area is the most extreme part of the modern Common of Hawick, where the ‘Cuttin o the Sod’ ceremony takes place annually. Peat was cut there by Burgesses, although there were orders for it not to be used, e.g. in 1713 and 1733. In 1755 the Burgh Officers and others were paid ‘for baking bakes, and breaking and throwing the same in the moss’ there – ‘…the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’[BR1734], ‘…in all the Mosses of the Commonty of Hawick for the present year, 1743, except in Windington
Winnington Moss Syke

Moss . . . ’[BR1743] (‘Windingtoun Moss-side’ is recorded in 1717).

Winnington Moss Syke (wi-ning-tin-moss-sik) n. former name for a small stream or ditch, which formed part of the boundary of Hawick’s Common in 1537 – ‘The syke of Wintownmoss on the south’. It probably corresponds to the streamlet or ditch that runs from Winnington Moss into Acreknowe Reservoir.

Winnington Rig (wi-ning-tin-rig) n. farm above what was the Stobs Military Camp, extending over to the edge of the Common. It was once part of the Barony of Winnington. In 1622 the farm was sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his brother William Elliot of Hartgarth. John Laidlaw was located in 1494/5 when he had remission for murder. In 1499 they were let to Robert Scott in 1483, then in 1488–92 let to William Roger and Robert Scott. It is probably the ‘Wynterburn’ where John Laidlaw was located in 1494/5 when he had remission for murder. In 1499 they were let to Robert Scott. It is probably the ‘Wynterburn’ where John Laidlaw was located in 1494/5 when he had remission for murder. In 1499 they were let to John, son of John Murray of Falahill. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. By 1512 it was feued to James, 2nd son of John Murray of Falahill. Robert Scott of Wamphray claimed tenancy of the lands in 1541, paying £21 yearly. The lands were later owned by a son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. It was owned by the Scotts of Newburgh in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. The lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest in 1663 and part of the Buccleuch estates afterwards (it is ‘Wyntyrburgh’ in 1456, ‘Wyntyr-burgh’ in 1460, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1469, ‘Winttir-burgh’ in 1488, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1490, ‘Wintyr-burgh’ in 1492, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1501, ‘Winterburgh’ in 1541, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1578 and ‘Wynbergh’ in 1583/4; it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map and is ‘Winterbrugh’ on Blair’s c.1654 map).

In 1740 he was a witness to a baptism for wright James, who seems likely to have been his son or brother. He married Bessie Hardie (also from the Town of Hawick) in 1709. Their children included Margaret (b.1707), Anna (b.1710), Thomas (b.1714), Sara (b.1717) and Sara (again, b.1721). The witnesses in 1710 were Bailie Robert Hardie and wright Robert Cowan. Andrew S. (1876/7–1900) son of Mrs. Wintrup of 20 Trinity Street, he was a grocer to trade. He served with the 1st Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and was killed in South Africa. He is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. George (b.1847) son of James and Margaret Rutherford. He became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of joiner Richard Purdom. James (d.bef. 1798) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1735 the Council paid him for providing ‘falding brods in Bailies’ loft’ for St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1755 he was paid for ‘helping the fit-gang of the bailies’ loft’. He married Margaret, whose surname was also ‘Winthrop’. Their children included: James (b.1737), who probably died young; Elizabeth (b.1740); James (b.1742), Hawick lawyer; and Thomas (b.1745), perhaps the wright in Jedburgh. Andrew (b.1733) and Christian (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. The witnesses in 1737 were baker Robert Boyd and gardener Robert Ker, in 1740 were wright Andrew (probably his father or brother) and former Bailie John Scott and in 1745 were merchants Francis and John Ruecastle. He was already deceased when his son James, the writer, died. James (d.1798) lawyer in Hawick, son of James. He was probably the James born in Hawick in 1742, his mother being Margaret. He is recorded as ‘the Clerk Writter in Hawick’ in 1778. He may have been Town Clerk from about 1783. Around that time he published a pamphlet about the dispute that had led to the demission of the minister of the East-end Kirk entitled ‘A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, of which there are no known copies. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is listed as ‘writer’ in 1778 when he witnessed a baptism for ex-Bailie Andrew Scott. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795. He is probably the James who was Secretary of Lodge 111 in about 1780. He married Agnes (1745–1828), daughter of William Wilson and Mary Hardie. Their son was also James. James (d.1820) son of writer James and Agnes Wilson. He served in the army in France. James (1775/6–1849) tailor of the Sandbed who was also a pawn-broker, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may also be the James listed there as an insurance agent for ‘Hercules’. In 1837 he was a tailor and clothes dealer on the Sandbed. His premises were at ‘Sandbed Bridge End’, and according to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret and they had at least one child, William. James (b.1812) born in Ancrum, he was son of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick. He was a shoemaker of the High Street (around No. 48), listed there in 1837 and 1841. He was near the Crown Close in 1851 and later at 7 Cross Wynd. He also worked as an auctioneer (and was listed as such in Slater’s 1852 directory). He married Margaret Rutherford (daughter of Thomas of Haysike) in Hawick in 1839. Their children included: Jane (or Jean), who married builder George Aitken; George, who became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas; Helen, dressmaker of Oliver Crescent; Christina, who married builder John Elliot; Thomas Hope; and John (b.1855). James (19th C.) school friend of John Inglis, known locally as a poet. He left Hawick in the early 1880s and emigrated to Ontario, where he called his boat ‘Teri Odin’ and continued to write poetry. He was the ‘Border Minstrel’ mentioned in Inglis’ ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. John (15th/16th C.) resident of ‘langcluch’ recorded in 1502. Along with Robert Paterson and James ‘aronyk’, he had 60 sheep stolen by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill. His surname was written ‘Wintrop’. John (17th C.) resident in Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) assistant Town Clerk to John Gladstones roughly 1762–68. It is unclear how he was related to other Winthropes. John (b.1802/3) probably born in Cavers Parish, he was miller at Leaderfoot Mill in Melrose Parish. He was said to be son of Thomas, who was a miller in the Hawick area and buried in Hawick. He married Margaret Gray, and their children included: Thomas (b.1827/8); James (b.1829); William (b.1832), who is meant to have served in the U.S. Civil War; Robert (b.1834), who emigrated to America in the 1880s; Mary Ann (b.1837); John (b.1838/9); and Michael (b.1841/2). He is buried in the graveyard at Melrose Abbey. John (b.1805) son of Robert, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he became a master Winthrope Winthrope was probably also (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). Agnes (b.1806), Margaret (b.1815); Jessy (b.1820); Christian (b.1808); Euphan (b.1811); Agnes (b.1813); John (b.1805), who moved to Liverpool; his younger son Robert and is probably the relieleaf. In 1841 he published the poem 'Friendship, Love, and Truth', which are the foundational principles of the Society of Oddfellows. In Liverpool in 1831 he married Anne Evans, and she died in 1848. Their children were: Robert (b.1832); Ann (b.1836); Mary (b.1839); and John (b.1842). All 4 children emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Delaware. John Ainslie (b.1853/4) son of Michael. In 1872 he married Eliza Robertson. Their children included: Thomas Michael (b.1872); and John Kemp (b.1873). Margaret (b.1766/7) from Lilliesleaf Parish, in 1851 she was a widow living around the Crown Close and listed as 'Formerly (Farmer)'. She was probably sister-in-law of Thomas, the carrier who lived next door. Michael (b.1814/5–94) shoemaker who lived at the Howegate and then Old Manse Lane. He was Burgh Officer and Halberdier from about 1860, for a while along with Jamie Smith and then with Thomas Cook. He also acted as town Bellman and drummer. In 1851 he was at about 16 Howegate. In 1861 he was living at 2 Manse Lane. In 1863 he donated to the Museum an old collection ladle and iron font stand from St. Mary’s. In the 1870s he kept the Teribus Arms at the Fore Raw. In 1847 he married Helen Kemp from Melrose. Their children included: Thomas (b.1847/8); John Ainslie (b.1853/4); Margaret (b.1853/4); Helen (b.1855), who probably died young; Andrew (b.1857); James (b.1860); William Robert (b.1862); and George (b.1863) – ‘The Duke o’ the Dean comes staggerin’ doon; O’ the ring i’ the Haugh auld Broughton’s boss, And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin’ siller that’s squandered at Pitch and Toss’ [HI]. Robert (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Robert (b.1787/8) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1841 he was living in Maxton with his younger son Robert and is probably the retired shepherd living in St. Boswells in 1851 and 1861. In 1804 in Ancrum Parish he married Douglas Hall (with what now seems an unusual first name for a woman). Their children included: John (b.1805), who moved to Liverpool; Isobel (b.1808); Euphan (b.1811); Agnes (b.1813); Margaret (b.1815); Jessy (b.1820); Christian (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). Agnes (b.1806), baptised in Ancrum Parish, was probably also their daughter. Robert (b.1821) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Helen Anderson. He was a carrier in Hawick like his father. His wife was Janet, from Langholm. Robert (1835–1909) born in Melrose Parish, he was son of John, miller at Leaderfoot, but probably related to the Hawick Wintrups. He married Cecilia Fairbairn in 1856 and their children were: John (b.1856); Janet (b.1858); George (b.1860); Thomas (b.1862); Robert (b.1868); Margaret (b.1870); and Archibald (b.1871). The last 2 children were baptised in Hawick Parish. In the 1880s he emigrated to the U.S., following some of his children. He died in Philadelphia. Thomas (d.1776) writer in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for merchant Andrew Riddell. In 1746 the Town Treasurer paid for giving an account of the poor rates to him. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1756 and 1759 (for William Scoon and Sara Wintrope, probably a relative). Around the 1760s he assisted as Town Clerk; James Wilson says that he and John Gledstains refused to take the Oaths of Government and so resigned in 1768. He may be the same Thomas who was notary for the sasine for the sale of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. It is possible he is the same Thomas who was Provost of Jedburgh in 1767. His daughter Christina married James Murray, and was the paternal grand-mother of Sir James A.H. Murray. He owned land at the Wheathole (now Trinity Gardens) where East Bank Church was built. His wife was Jean Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, were: Sarah (b.1745); Thomas (b.1756); and Charles (b.1757). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were Bailie James Scott and Bailie Kerr. He hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. His daughter Elizabeth married William Ormiston, barber in Kelso. In 1799 his daughter Elizabeth’s elder son, James, was served heir to him. His office cabinet is in the Museum. Thomas (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness (although this could be confusion between wright James and writer Thomas). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Easton and their children included: Margaret (b.1770); and William (b.1775). Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller at Lilliesleaf Mill in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He could be the same man as the later carrier in Hawick. Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Lilliesleaf. He was a carrier.
in Hawick, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory operating along with John Cochrane between Hawick and Langholm. In 1837 he was operating between Hawick and Langholm, leaving from the Grapes every Tuesday and Friday. His premises were on Buccleuch Street in 1841 and the High Street (near the Crown Close) by 1851. In 1852 he was operating Mondays and Thursdays to Dumfries and Langholm, leaving from the High Street. He married Helen Anderson and their children were: Isabella (b.1808); Janet (b.1810); James (b.1812/3), shoemaker; Thomas (b.1816); Robert (b.1818); Robert (again, b.1821); and Michael (perhaps the shoemaker and Burgh Officer). He was still alive in 1861. Thomas (b.c.1780) miller at Trow Mill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (b.1801/2) tailor on Orrock Place. He was listed as a tailor on the Howegate in 1837 and at ‘Teviot square’ in 1852. In 1851 he was at 6 Orrock Place. In 1861 he is recorded at ‘1 Backhouse’ in Hawick. His wife was Margaret and children included Margaret, James, Adam, Isabella, Thomas and George. Widow ?? (18th/19th C.) keeper of a tavern in the early 19th century. There is a record of a Town Council meeting there in 1808. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident of a tavern in the early 19th century. There is a record of a Town Council meeting there in 1808. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there (spelled ‘Windrope’, ‘Winterhope’, ‘Winterup’, ‘Wintrop’, ‘Wintrop’, ‘Wintrup’, ‘Wintrup’, ‘Wintrop’, ‘Wynterhop’ and other variants in early records; see also Winthrope).

wintle (win-tul) v., arch. to wriggle, writhe – ‘He’ll wintle in a widdie [hangman’s rope] yet, i.e. he will writhe in a halter, Roxb.’ [JoJ].
Wintoun (win-tin?) n. variant of Winterton, ‘the syke of Wintoun moss’ forming the southern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter.

Winthrope (win-trup) n. Jane Maben ‘Jean’ nee Whillans (1927–2021) youngest daughter of Bill Whillans and Helen Charters, sister of Bill and Helen, she grew up on Orchard Terrace and was educated at St. Mary’s and the High School. She was involved in local theatre for more than 60 years, joining Hawick Junior Drama Club and having her first leading role at the age of 10. She became a member of Hawick Amateur Operatic Society in 1948 and organised the annual shows from 1978. She eventually produced more than 50 shows. She also started the ‘Two Rivers Theatre Company in 2000, putting on ‘The Gutterblades’ over 25–28 April, the first time it had been performed in almost a century. Her soprano voice can be heard on the original ‘Hawick Songs’ recording. She sang in many venues, including TV and radio and won a gold medal for Leider singing in the Usher Hall. She also performed a one-woman play about Burns at the Edinburgh Fringe. She worked as a secretary at Haddon & Turnbull’s and married Neil (originally from Kendal) in 1953; the couple had 2 daughters, Anne (b.1955) and Sybil (b.1959). Later in life she was manager at Thurnams the stationers. She was Hawick’s Citizen of the Year in 2003. She finally retired from producing and directing at the age of 82. Those who knew her described her as a ‘total professional’, who brought musical theatre in the Borders to a new level – ‘Winthrope and Lyons, and thame treading the boards A’ kinds o’ bands, whae aye strike the right chords’ [AlB]. Neil (1916/7–2010) originally from Kendal, his father ran the gentlemen’s outfitters ‘George Bell’ at 9 High Street. He met his wife Jean Whillans at the Teviotdale Tennis Club, they married in 1953 and had daughters Anne and Sybil. They lived at Wilton Hill Terrace (see also Winthrope).

Wintrup see Winthrope

wi’oot (wi-oo’, wi-oot) prep. without – ‘...Or doffed oor claes wi’oot a blush, To splash aboot in fun’ [WFC], ‘...duist try ti imagine any Common Riding function wi’oot ‘The Border Queen’ or ‘Up wi’ the Banner’’ [IHS] (cf. without and withooten).

wi’r (wir) contr. with here – ‘Aw got her in blue and aw’ll pairt wi’r in blue’ [RM] (also pronounced wi-ur, depending on context).

wire in (wr-in) v., arch. to eat heartily – ‘A’ll heh ti wire in, or thance A’ll no can wun doon in teime for the majeek-lantreen’ [ECS].

Wise (wiz) n. H.C., M.P. (19th C.) made a pencil sketch of the Auld Brig in 1850, perhaps from the foot of the Mill Port. It shows some of the houses formerly at the head of Silver Street.

Wishart (wi-shur’) n. Agnes listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1623. Presumably the same Alexander 'Wishart' was officer of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. In 1612 the Magistrates stopped him collecting customs at the market in Hawick, took him from his house and had him imprisoned in the steeple of St. Mary's tower. This was also apparently because of him striking Robert Roger of Burnfoot Mill (presumably at the market). He was there for 4 days and nights until released on the orders of the Sheriff of Roxburgh. This incident was part of a complaint by the Baron to the Privy Council. In 1613 it was recorded that there was no schoolmaster in Melrose but he 'keeps the schole' there. He was presumably related to other clerics from that same family, which produced Bishops of Glasgow in the 13th and 14th centuries. James (b.1825/6) from Dalmeny in West Lothian, he was toll-keeper on Wilton Hill in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella D. and Jeanie Manual (who married Alexander Scott). James (19th C.) mason at Blackburn in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1879. Janet (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.1337) probably son of John, Sheriff of Mearns. He was Archdeacon from at least 1321. He became Bishop in 1335 and was consecrated at Avignon in 1337, but died a few months later, as a result of being captured at sea by the English. His seal showed a bishop in a niche and a kneeling bishop with the words 'SIGILLUM JOHAN- NIS DEI GRATIA EPI. GLASGUENSIS'. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. She could be the Marion, married to Adam Martin, whose son William Martin was born in Hawick in 1674. Robert (c.1240–1316) probably son or nephew of William, Bishop of St. Andrews, who made him Archdeacon of Lothian in 1267. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1271, after William (who was Bishop-elect) was appointed to St. Andrews. As Bishop of Glasgow, he held authority over Teviotdale. He was Bishop when John Comyn donated the land of 'Rulehalch', as confirmed in 1279. He became one of the Guardians of the Kingdom after the death of King Alexander III in 1286. He was active during the Wars of Independence, being a strong supporter of Robert Bruce (grandfather of the future king) against John Baliol. He stated to the English King Edward that 'the kingdom of Scotland is not held in tribute or homage to anyone save God alone'; however, he swore fealty to Edward, along with other prominent Scotsmen in 1296. He is believed to have encouraged William Wallace in 1297, and was imprisoned for a while, then censured by the Pope for opposing English authority. In 1306, instead of excommunicating Robert the Bruce (for murdering John Comyn in a church of his Diocese) he absolved him, and was present at his coronation later that year. Taking an active part on the battlefield, he was captured at Cupar and held as a prisoner 1308–15. He lived out his last year or so back in Scotland, although blind. John, who was a later Archdeacon and then Bishop of Glasgow, may have been his son. He is buried in the crypt of Glasgow Cathedral. His existing seal is of fine workmanship, depicting a full-length figure of a bishop standing on a lion, with heads of 2 saints and a bird below him and the words 'S' ROBERTI DEI GRATIA EPI. GLASGUENSIS'. William (d.1279) probably son of John, Sheriff of Mearns. He was Archdeacon of St. Andrews from 1254 and was said to have as many as 12 benefices. In 1270 he was elected Bishop of Glasgow after the death of Nicholas de Moffat. However, he was not consecrated in that position before being elected as Bishop of St. Andrews (which was seen as a more senior appointment) in 1271. He died in Morebattle, Teviotdale; however, his association with the region is uncertain. He may have been father of Robert, who was the next Bishop of Glasgow. Mary, who married William Oliphant, may have been his daughter. William (13th/14th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was surely related to the Bishop of the same name and also Bishop Robert, although the precise connection is unknown. He became Archdeacon of Teviotdale by 1288, and in that year is listed as 'Guillelmo Thevidalæ' in a papal bull. He was mentioned again as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1297. In about 1306 he was imprisoned by the English, and replaced as Archdeacon by Edward II soon afterwards. In 1306 there is a record of the Sheriff of Dorset asking for expenses for housing him, in 1307/8 there is a record of the Sheriff of Dorset being ordered to pay his expenses as a prisoner in Sherborne Castle and he was in the Tower of London in 1309. The Archdeaconry was vacant in 1312, suggesting he may have died by then. Rev. William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John of Pitarrow and Jean Douglas. He graduated from King's College Aberdeen in 1606, and was given the charge of Fettercairn in 1611. In 1613 he was translated to Minto as helper to Samuel Cockburn, and returned again to Fettercairn in 1618, so that he never became Cockburn's successor. He sat on the Court of High Commission in 1634 and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636. He was translated to South Leith in 1630, but deprived in 1639 'for erroneous doctrine'. An opponent of the Covenant, he was forced to flee Scotland in 1639 and died in Cornwall several years later. He married Elizabeth Keith, heiress of Phesdo, and their children were: John, who married Elizabeth Home of Manderston and was killed at Edgehill; Jean, who married Alexander Wood of Benholme; and Elizabeth, who married Sir William Forbes of Monymusk. He wrote 'An Exposition of the Lord's Prayer' (1633); 'Immanuel, a poem' (1642) and 'Aaron's Obsequies' (1635). Rev. William (c.1625–92) minister of Minto Parish, possibly the grandson of the previous Rev. William. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1676 and was ordained at Minto in 1682, where he was presented by Thomas Rutherford of Minto. In 1685 he gained the 'escheat' (i.e. goods forfeited as the result of criminal prosecution) of Alexander Wishart, merchant and Burgess of Glasgow (and presumably a near relation). In 1684 a letter from him to the Earl of Tarras describes the manse as so ruinous that he cannot live in it. He was presented to Sprouston Parish in 1686, but the move did not happen. He was deprived of his living in 1690, presumably for refusing to give up Episcopalianism. He appears to have married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Commissary Wishart in 1685 in Edinburgh (this may have been John Wishart, member of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh, who was nephew of George Wishart who had been Bishop of Edinburgh). She may also have been known as Elizabeth, or else he remarried. They had a daughter Catherine (who married Ninian Home of Manderston) and was killed at Edgehill; their children were: John, who married Elizabeth Home of Manderston and was killed at Edgehill; Jean, who married Alexander Wood of Benholme; and Elizabeth, who married Sir William Forbes of Monymusk. He wrote 'An Exposition of the Lord's Prayer' (1633); 'Immanuel, a poem' (1642) and 'Aaron's Obsequies' (1635).

wisp (wisp) v. arch. To put a wisp of straw inside shoes to make them more comfortable, especially during farmwork – 'To wisp the shoon, to put a wisp of straw into the shoes or brogues worn by the peasantry, in order to keep their feet comfortable, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also wusp).

the Wisp (thu-wisp, -wusp) n. Wisp Hill, immediately to the west of Mosspaul, reaching a height of 1,953 ft (595 m). It is topped by a triangulation pillar and a cairn, and from the summit on a clear day the Solway and the Lake District can be seen to the south, as well as a magnificent prospect of the Borders to the north and east; it is even said that the Isle of Man has been seen. J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant wrote a musical play called 'The Witch o' the Wisp Hill'. There was also a farmstead on the western side (reached from the Merrylaw road), with John Anderson and family living there in 1861. James Hogg (of 'Teribus') was shepherd lad here for a couple of years. There is an ancient cairn on the summit, about 9 m in diameter – 'Emerging from the glen so drear, With giant Wisp upon your rear; The Vale of Ewes its charms display, Bright shining in the noon-tide ray' [WSB], 'To count each magic summit frae the Wisp to Ettrick Pen, Frae the Black Hill to the Eildons and the heights by Harden Glen' [JYH] (the origin is unclear; note there is another Wisp Hill near Eskdalemuir).

the Wisp Club (thu-wisp-klub) n. Former club of the mid-19th century, which met at Mosspaul. It was formed in the Spring of 1826 at a meeting at Mosspaul by several of the local farmers. The founding members were: Alexander Pott, Burnfoot, Langholm; William Brown, Tower Inn, Hawick; James Elliot, Goldielands; Walter Grieve, Southfield; Thomas Lamb, Woodhead; Robert Elliot, Teindside; John Wilson, Hawick; Thomas Davidson, Milnhollom; William Aitchison, Linhope; George Aitchison, Linhope; Robert Scott, Eweslees; and Robert Govenlock, Mosspaul. The Club dined annually at the Mosspaul Inn on the Friday after the Dumfries Spring Horse Market, and set prices for cattle, sheep and wool; records exist for the prices of lambs and wool for the period 1796–1852 and were genuinely useful in the days before local newspapers. Robert Govenlock (landlord of the Mosspaul Inn) was the Treasurer. Dr. Adam Elliot of Goldielands and Henry Scott Riddell (in 1833) were Honorary members. The last annual dinner of the Club appears to have been in 1858.

Witter-side (wi’-ur-sūd, wi-tur-sūd) n. water-side, riverside, banks of a river – ‘. . . the horses belonging to the tenants of sundry tenements, on the water-side’ [DCW1765], Whae beides i youn hoose doon the waeter-seide?’ [ECS], ‘Lang-syne, Aa walkit up the witterside And owre the Station Brig, efter a game . . . ’ [DH], ‘Magic flute an piper Led mice ti the witterside . . . ’ [MB] (there are spelling variants).

Witterside (wi’-ur-sūd) n. Waterside, former farmstead and possibly fortified house on the south side of the Jed Water, a mile or so east of Chesters. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver was there in 1541, along with Marion and Robert Young, paying 22s yearly. Hob Young was there in 1571/2. The tenant there in 1669 was Thomas Douglas. George Nichol was there in at least 1799–1801. The tower indicated there may be the one whose remains are near where the Langslack Sike meets the Jed Water, about 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead; this is close to where it is marked by Pont around 1600. The more modern farm is located much further to the east, alongside an old drove road (near where Pont marked ‘Wadeshill’). The remains of the house there probably date from the late 17th century (perhaps replacing the pele house)

Witterfaa (wi’-ur-faw, wi-tur-faw) n. a waterfall – ‘. . . And ere ane wist, sight caught her, high ‘bune the waft-erfa’ ’ [HSR], arch. the line of descent or incline of a watercourse on a hill – ‘. . . and from thence they walked and described the march east up the know by pits along the water-fall of the know’ [DCW1765].

witter-wader (wi'-ur-wa-dur) n., arch. a poor quality, homemade candle – ‘Water-wader, a home-made candle of the worst kind, Roxb. When a family make their own candles ... there is generally some tallow left in the pot, swimming in a scum on the top of the water. Into this, for licking it up, a few wicks are immersed ... they of course prove miserable lights’ [JoJ] (cf. Sweeg).

witter-witter (wi'-ur-wi'-ur) n., arch. river water – ‘... waeter-waeter, waal-waeter, sprigget-waeter, or waeter threeth a pownd!’ [ECS].

witter works (wi'-ur-wurs) n. water-works. Hawick’s first modern water supply came from the Allan, constructed in 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The second supply came from the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882.

wittin (wi-tin) n., poet. knowledge, notion, information – ‘... otherwise he wad hae been sending ye a letter or some wittens o’ him’ [JTe], ‘Hae the warkers o’ inequitie nae wuitin?’ [HSR]... he that teeches men wuitin, sall he nat ken?’ [HSR] (frequently used in the plural; there are spelling variants).

Witton (wi-tin) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Wyttone’ in Selkirkshire, where he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a small shield and the name ‘S’ADE DE WITTONA’. Michael (13th C.) another of the men who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He was from Selkirkshire, like Alan, and had the same surname, ‘de Witton’, as the Parson of Hawick at that time. His seal showed a deer running and the name ‘S’MICHAELIS DE WITTIVN’. He was also mentioned in about 1300 in a letter to King Edward written at Melrose, where he craves the tithes of Bothwell. Richard ‘de Wyttone’ (13th/14th C.) Parson of Hawick, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick clergymen on record. His seal shows a lion fighting a dragon and the words ‘S’RICARDI DE WYNHOV’.

wu-tin (wi'-ur-tun) *(13th C.) another of the men who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a small shield and the name ‘S’ADE DE WITTONA’.

wu-tur (wi'-ur-tur) (13th C.) Parson of Hawick, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick clergymen on record. His seal shows a lion fighting a dragon and the words ‘S’RICARDI DE WYNHOV’.

whisp (whisp) (n., arch.) to lisp (noted by J.A.H. Murray; said to have been common before about 1875; direct from the Anglo-Saxon).

Wm. (wi-, wu-leem-un) n. formerly common abbreviation for ‘William’.

woark (woork) (n., arch.) work – ‘... wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark i the mids o a waurlet’ [ECS].

woarry (woree) (n., arch.) worry (spelling to emphasize the occasional pronunciation).

wob (wob, wobe) (n., poet.) a web, woven material, piece of woven cloth – ‘... Weavin’ a wob to hap oor banes’ [WL], ‘... And aa frae the ae shoddy wob’ [WL].

wobster (wob-stur) (n., arch.) a weaver – ‘The said day, in presence of the bailies and council of Hawick, the haill wobstaris being accused for usurping the bailies’ office ...’ [BR1643], ‘... that the Wobstairs shall receive the town’s work, and refuse none of the town’s work ...’ [BR1657] (also written ‘wobstair’ and ‘wobstar’; cf. webster and webster.

the Webster’s Loft (thnu-wob-sturz-loft) n. alternative name for the Weaver’s Loft – ‘...the hail persons...concerned in and have particular interest to that loft in the church of Hawick commonly called the webster’s loft...’ [BR1710].

Woden Law (wō-din-law) n. hill of 1,388 feet (422 m), about 15 miles east of Hawick, near the Border. It was once home for Iron Age settlers and Roman legions, and is now a favourite walking area.

Wedensday (wō-denz-di, -ā) n., arch. Wednesday – ‘Wodensday, the name given to Wednesday by old people in the upper district of Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also spelled ‘Wodni’slay’).

woft (woft) v., arch. to weft or woof, n. weft, woof, cross-threads, employment in general – ‘Oo’ve naething adae the day – oo’re eidl for woaf at the mill’ [ECS], ‘wairp an woaf = warp and weft’ [ECS] (also written ‘woaf’).

Wolfcleuch Burn (wolft-cloogh-burn) n. stream in what is now Craik Forest, joining the Aithouse Burn, which becomes part of the Borthwick. There is a footpath from the car park at Craik village to the scenic waterfall on this burn. The lands of ‘Wolfcleuche’ are recorded in 1535/6 when a horse was stolen from there, belonging to Robert Scott of Howpasley. The stream is fed by several smaller water courses, including Cat Sike.

Wolfcleuchheid (wolft-cloogh-heed) n. Wolfcleuchhead, a former shepherd’s cottage near the head of the Borthwick, about 12 miles from Hawick. Until 1689/90, when Roberton was formed, it was part of Hawick Parish. The building is in a clearing of Craik Forest just above the 20 foot high waterfall on the Wolfcleuch Burn. It is said that conventicles were held there in the 17th century and also supposedly used as a hiding place for Peden. One story tells of a thick mist that came down and hid the cottage from the dragoons. Robert Jackson was recorded there in 1502. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Michael Anderson, Margaret Grieve, Thomas Anderson and Bessie Grieve. J.A.H. Murray claims that the cottage once hid the Covenanting preacher Alexander Peden from the dragoons. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that time it covered 1224 acres and was bounded by Craikhope, Langshawburn, Buccleuch, Craik, Howpasley, Borthwick Water and Craikhope. William Park was there in 1734–37 and Andrew Park in 1737–41. Another William Park was there in at least 1763–75 and William Crozier in 1786. Robert Pringle was shepherd there in 1797, farm labourer Andrew Scott in 1841 and William Armstrong in 1861. The cottage was still occupied into the early 20th century. It was renovated and used as an outdoor centre for groups from Wester Hailes in Edinburgh. Just to the north are the remains of a small turf-banked enclosure (sometimes written ‘Wolfcleughhead’, it is ‘Wolfcluched’ in 1502, ‘Wolfcleuchheada’ in 1650, ‘Oulvcleuch head’ in 1737 and ‘Wolfcleughhead’ in the 1760s and 1770s; it is marked ‘Wolfcleuch’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Wolfcleuchhead’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wolfehopelee (wool-fup-lee) n. farm on the B6357 between Wolfelee and Hyndlee, long part of the Wolfelee estate. The lands were partly in Hobkirk, but mostly in Southdean Parish. David Home of Wedderburn was granted these lands, along with those of Wolfelee in 1436. They passed to the Cranstons of that Ilk who sold them to Elliott of Stobs in the 1650s. William Hume was shepherd there in 1801. The tenant farmer was John Telfer in the early-to-mid 1800s and later Robert Inglis (also written ‘Wolfehopelee’; it is ‘Wolhpopelee’ in 1650, ‘Wolhopelee’ in 1718, ‘Wolhople’ in 1550, probably ‘Wooflee’ in 1574, ‘Woollie’, so the name may indeed be related to ‘wolf’).

Wolfehopelee Burn (wool-fup-lee-burn) n. stream that rises to the east of Wolfehopelee Hill and is joined by the Cross Sike and the Catlee Burn, becoming part of the headwaters of the Rule. Near the head of the stream there was a linear earthwork linking to the head of the Battling Sike.

Wolfehopeshiels (wool-fup-sheelz) n. former herds cottage associated with Wolfehopelee. It is recorded in 1762, but there was already no sign of it by the mid-19th century.
Wolfelee (woolf-, woo-lee) n. mansion, estate and hamlet south-east of Hawick, beyond Bonniefiddes in Hob Kirk Parish. On the near side of Wolfelee Hill there are the remains of an ancient settlement, where Roman remains were discovered. In early times the lands may have been owned by Jedburgh Abbey. It is probably the lands of ‘Wilies’ which William of Wauchope was granted in the early years of the 14th century. The lands were given to David Home of Wedderburn in 1436 by William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, who was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest. They were held of the superior for a red lie in 1612. It was used as a dower-chamber, which was about all that was still standing, or a sasine of 1479 and again in the 17th and 18th centuries. The old farmhouse was close to the site of the mansion house and was demolished in 1824, some of the stone being used for Wolfelee House. The newer farm of Wolfelee was called Cleuchhead. There have been Tuesday Ride-outs to here. The beech hedges that enclosed the house were burned by the English in 1545. There were also Turnbull tenants there in the 16th century, e.g. James and Adam in 1516 and Hector in 1567. It was valued at £1000 along with other Southdean lands of Lord Cranston in 1643. The Cranstons in turn sold the estate to the Elliots of Stobs in 1651, who passed it to the Stonedge branch. Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge paid the land tax on £1000 in 1678. The Elliots of Stonedge, being in serious debt, were ordered to sell it off in 1730, the purchaser being William Elliot, an Edinburgh lawyer. His descendants held it until 1912. Bonnie Prince Charlie and his men camped near here in 1745. Robert Shortreid was occupier for a short period, paying tax for 17 windows there in 1748 (when it was listed in Southdean Parish). William Oliver is recorded paying the horse tax there in 1792–94. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1797 and William Henderson was servant there in 1799. The lands were valued at £1000 in 1788 (when held by Cornelius Elliot). James Elliot changed the name from ‘Woollee’ when he had the main house built 1825–27, with architects and building work by Smith of Darnick. This incorporated part of an earlier building (specifically the lower, vaulted chamber, which was about all that was still standing), which had been itself rebuilt in 1698. This earlier house is mentioned as the location for a marriage contract in 1612. It was used as a dower-house by the Elliots of Stobs and Stonedge in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Tax was paid on 10 hearths at ‘The Place of oulie’ in 1694, suggesting it was already a large house; at the same time ‘The farmer at woolie’ paid tax on 2 hearths. A stone marked ‘D M N G E S 1698’ (for Dame Margaret Nicholson, Gilbert Elliott and Elizabeth Scott) from the old house was built into the later one. This new house was extensively renovated as a Scottish Baronial mansion in 1860–62. Its most famous resident was Sir Walter Elliot, the 4th Laird, who lived there 1860–87, and was well-known as a naturalist and collector, with part of the house being essentially a private museum. Sir Walter’s son Edward sold the estate in 1912 to Sir Robert Laidlaw and in 1930 to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. The house had several later uses, including as Beverley School around the years of WWII, and then as a hotel. It was destroyed by fire in 1977, and is now little more than a lawn, although the stable block has been converted into a house. The burial aisle of the Elliots of Wolfelee is in the southwest corner of Chesters Cemetery. Locals continued to call it by the earlier name well into the 20th century. The house was probably the original of Sir Walter Scott’s Wolfcraig castle in ‘Heart of Midlothian’ and ‘Guy Mannerings’. The noted art critic John Ruskin, who visited, said that the view from his bedroom window was the most beautiful he had seen in the United Kingdom. The lands were split into the farms of Over and Nether Wolfelee according to a sasine of 1479 and again in the 17th and 18th centuries. The old farmhouse was close to the site of the mansion house and was demolished in 1824, some of the stone being used for Wolfelee House. The newer farm of Wolfelee was called Cleuchhead. There have been Tuesday Ride-outs to here. The beech hedges that enclosed the house survive, as do 2 lodges (also spelled ‘Woollee’ and variants; it is probably first recorded as ‘Wilies’ in about 1305 and is certainly ‘Wollee’ and ‘Wolle’ in 1436, ‘Wolle’ in 1469, ‘Wowlee’ in 1493, ‘Wowlie’ and ‘Wolley’ in 1538, then ‘the Wollee’ in 1526, ‘Wolffy’ in 1516, ‘Wolle and Wolffy’ in 1528, ‘Wowlie’ in 1538, ‘Wowlee’ in 1539, ‘The Wolles’ in 1545, ‘Wowie’ in 1552/3, ‘Wolhoplee’ in 1550, ‘Wollie’ in 1557, ‘Wowlee’ in 1567, ‘Wolley’ in 1574, ‘Wowlie’ in 1590 and 1616, ‘Wowlie’ in 1626, ‘Woolie’ in 1649, ‘Woolyes’ and ‘Wolleyes’ in 1677, ‘Wooly’ in 1690, ‘Woolie’ in 1691, ‘Woelie’ in 1709, ‘woolie’ in 1748, ‘Woolly’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Woollee’ in 1811; it is ‘Oulie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is still ‘Woolie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘wulf leah’, meaning ‘wood of the wolves’, however this may be confusion over the deliberately changed form of the name; it probably never contained the ‘f’ until the name was changed in the early 19th century, but this is confused because of the neighbouring ‘Wolfehope’ which does appear to have been related to the word ‘wolf’; it has also been suggested that the Wellogate in Hawick was named as the road to ‘Woollee’.

Wolfelee Free Kirk (woolf-lee-free-kirk) n. Free Church in the Rule valley. It was also sometimes known as Southdean Free Kirk. The congregation was first set up in 1846, following the Disruption, with a congregation formed from those who ‘came out’ in Hobkirk and Southdean. The meeting constituting it was held in Hawick in March 1849, with a list of 83 members drawn up as the initial congregation. The first minister was Rev. James Barbour Johnstone. James Elliot of Wolfelee gave some of the lands of Mackside for the church and manse. The original kirk was in the Crown Plantation, to the south of the A6088, just to the east of the junction with the B6357. The Manse was built a little to the east, on the north side of the A6088. The church roof started to give way in 1867 and a new building was constructed on another nearby site in 1868. A roll of the ministry is: James B. Johnstone 1849–62; Robert Milligan 1863–71; William C. Russell 1872–90; William Smith 1891; Robert Leggatt 1891–98; David Wilson Baird 1898–

Wolfelee Glen (woolf-lee-glen) n. former pair of cottages in the glen near Wolfelee, also known as ‘The Glen’. They were on the earlier site of Wolfelee Mill.

Wolfelee Hill (woolf-lee-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, lying just south-east of Wolfelee. It reaches a height of 393 m (1,288 ft) and contains a triangulation pillar. Burns apparently climbed this during his Border tour of 1787. On the north-west slopes are the remains of a settlement, measuring about 50 m by 40 m, consisting of a bank and ditch, and perhaps connecting with a hollow road to the north. A number of metal finds were uncovered at this location in the 1990s, including a Romano-British trumpet brooch and Roman-style iron axehead, now in the National Museum of Scotland. The slopes of the hill also show signs of old cultivation and plantation banks. The east side is crossed by a section of track, which is part of the Wheel Causeway.

Wolfelee Ludge (woolf-lee-luj, -loj) n. gatehouse for Wolfelee mansion, located by the B6357, at the north end of the former driveway.

Wolfelee Mill (woolf-lee-mill) n. mill on Wolfelee farm. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1684 when his servant John Hall was among those declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. The location was later called ‘The Glen’, where 2 cottages were built.

Wolfelee Schuil (woolf-lee-skil) n. former school near Wolfelee.

Wolfelee Schuil Cottage (woolf-lee-skil-ko’eej) n. name used for the house that was formerly the small school Wolfelee. The Waugh family lived there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Wolfhope (woolf-fup) n. former farm in the Ettrick valley on the Wolfhope Burn and above the farm of Tushielaw. Also in 1494/5 James Laidlaw of ‘Wynterburn’ had remission for the murder of his uncle’s son, John Laidlaw, who was from here, and John Cook from here had cows stolen by Robert Scott of Deloraine. Additionally in that year it is recorded that a group of men who were reset by Adam Scott in Annelshope, had pillaged the farm there. There was a ruined shepherd’s cottage near where the stream meets the Tushielaw Burn (it is ‘Wolfhop’ in 1494/5).

Wolfhope Burn (woolf-fup-burn) n. stream in the Ewes valley, which joins the Meikledale Burn at Rigfoot. It is said that this was where the last wild wolf in Scotland was shot. Also on a steep slope here is the monument for Lady Florence Cust’s wild ride down the steep bank during a fox hunt. It may be where Adam Scott ‘in wolfhop’ was from, recorded as surety for himself in 1494/5 and having remission in 1502. The ‘landis of Wolfhope and pendicle theirof callit Beit stanerig’ is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands of ‘Wooffhope’ are among those whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696 (this could be the ‘Wulfhope’ in Ettrick Forest granted to Melrose Abbey in the reign of Alexander II; ‘Wulffhooop’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Wolfhopefit (woolf-fup-fit) n. land at the foot of the Wolfhope Burn, on the farm of Bush in Ettersdale. Around 1900 ground there was brought under the plough and a large amount of stonework was unearthed, suggesting there had once been several buildings there. It is marked ‘Settlement’ on modern maps.

Wolflee see Wolfelee
wolfs (woolfs) n., pl. wolves, once indigenous in Britain. They appear to have survived in the Borders into the 16th century. Scotland’s last wolf was killed either near Killiecrankie in 1680, Brora around 1700, Perthshire in 1743 or Morayshire also in 1743. The 12th century historian Reginald of Durham recounts a tale told him by Dolfinius, parson of Cavers; a poor widow, who could not afford a shepherd, had her flock protected from wolves by appealing to St. Cuthbert and seeking sanctuary in the churchyard of the chapel of St. Cuthbert (probably at Cogsmill). The only local legacy of their existence is in the name ‘Wolfe-cluch’ near Craik and ‘Wolfhopelee’ near Wauchope (with Wolfelee probably being unrelated, the ‘f’ being a relatively recent addition) – ‘Woods of dark oak, that once o’er Teviot hung, Ere on their swampy beds her mosses sprung. On these green banks the ravening wolf does prowl, And fitful to the hoarse night-thunder howl’ [JL], ‘Old Wat o’ Harden, tireless and keen, Rode first of the troop; he was lithe and lean As a Liddesdale wolf, and his glance was swift As the glance of the sun when the low clouds life’ [WHO].

Woll (wol, wol) n. large house in Ashkirk, traditionally home of the Scotts of Woll. It is unclear what the lands here were called before the 17th century. One possibility is that the Scots ‘in le walis’ (who derived their byname from lands called ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie) transferred their designation to this area. In 1579 Isobel Turnbull was recorded as ‘gudwif of Woll’, although the name of her husband is not given. William Allan was also tenant there in 1579. The first known owner of the lands was Walter Scott of Woll, recorded from at least 1606, and said to be descended from the Scotts of Haining. His grandson James sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden and William’s 5th son John, in about 1660. This established the more modern Lairdship. John Murray was a tenant there in 1638 and William Laidlaw in 1639. In 1643 the lands were valued at £533 and owned by Walter Scott of Woll; the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Castleside and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £533 6s 8d according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678 (when owned by John Scott). The house was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694, and there were 4 other tenants listed on the estate, namely John Stewart, Robert Hownam, Robert Crawford and James ‘Muere’. George Easton was tenant in at least 1715–17, Adam Scott in 1717–19 and Francis Scott in 1724. Tax was paid on 22 windows there in 1748 and 31 in 1753. William Scott is marked as proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. It was valued at £533 in 1788, with the teinds valued at an additional £62, and the owner being Charles Scott of Woll; it had the same value and owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. James Thomson was a labourer there in at least 1799–1801 and William Thomson was joiner there in 1801. In 1839 it was inherited by Col. John Scott, the last Scott of Woll, whose heirs sold it to George Combe Ainslie in 1860. It was in turn sold to George William Bell, and then his son William Scott Bell became the owner. The house was remodelled in about 1850, with designs by Edinburgh architect John Lessels. The estate is drawn on Roy’s c.1750 map, with some walled enclosures and a small plantation. The 1843 map by Crawford & Brooke shows both Woll and New Woll. It is also the name given to the general area just west of Ashkirk. Woll estate is home to a golf course (expanded recently from 9 to 18 holes). The buildings include a stable block (formerly spelled ‘Wall’ and other variants; it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 and Blaeu’s 1654 maps as ‘Woll’, Adair’s c.1688 map as ‘well’, is ‘Wool’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Wool’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Wollis’ in 1617, ‘Well’ in 1636, ‘Woll’ in 1643, ‘Wool’ in 1661, ‘Wool’ in 1673, ‘waalls’ in 1678, ‘Well’ in c.1680, ‘Woll’ in the 1680s and 1690s, ‘Wool’, ‘Wool’ and ‘Woll’ in the 1690s, ‘Wall’ in 1690, ‘Wool’ in 1692 and 1698, ‘Woll’ and ‘Wool’ in 1704, ‘Waalls’ in 1715, ‘Wool’ in 1726, ‘Woll’ in 1737, ‘Walls’ in 1748, ‘Wool’ in 1753, ‘Wool’ in 1761, ‘Wool’ in 1765, ‘Wool, or Wall’ in 1788, ‘Wool’ in 1801 and 1805, ‘Wool’ in 1811 and 1815 and ‘Wool or Wall’ in 1834: the origin is obscure, with possibilities including ‘wall’ for a spring, or a connection with either sheep or wolves!).

Woll Burn (wol-burn) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Ale Water about half a mile south of Ashkirk. It is fed by the Wollrig Burn, Hutler Burn and Blindhaugh Burn.

the Woll Golf Course (thu-wol-golf-kötris) n. a 9-hole golf course on the Woll estate just outside Ashkirk, opened in 1993.

Wollhaugh (wol-hawch) n. former lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1580 they were owned by Isabella Turnbull, widow of John Scott of Blindhaugh and leased to Walter, brother of George Scott of Synton. These lands had Palace Waas on the east, lands of the tenants of Blindhaugh on the south, and the ‘Mercat gait’ on the west and north.
Wollie Miln

(w-o-lee-miln) n. former corn mill in Hobkirk parish, around the 17th and 18th centuries, on a site later occupied by ‘The Glen’ cottages. It may be the same as Woollee Mill.

Woll Rig (wol-rig) n. hilly area on the back road connecting Ashkirk with the Ettrick valley, which reaches a height of 337 m (1,095 ft). The ridge offers an extensive panorama of the Borders and the Moffat Hills to the west. Robert Davidson is recorded as farmer there in 1797. James Scott was farmer there in at least 1799–1801, Robert Nichol was a servant in 1799 and Robert Miller was a servant there in 1801. Peter Clark was there in the 1860s. The Bishop’s Stone lies under the dyke near the cattle-grid here. The farm of Wollrig contains a possible old enclosure as well as the turf base of a former shieling hut. There is also further cultivation remains and a possible enclosure by the road between Wollrig farm and the Bishop’s Stone – ‘By high Woll Rig to Ettrick Or over Chapelhill The lure of upland places They bend me to their will’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Woll Rigg’ and ‘Woolrigg’; it is ‘Woolrigg’ in 1801).

Wollrig Burn (wol-rig-burn) n. small stream in Ashkirk Parish. It rises on Woll Rig and in Tocher Lodge Moss, and runs roughly south-east to join the Woll Burn. It is probably the ‘small rivulet on the east side of Hunlie’ recorded in a charter of about 1170, describing lands granted toOrm of Ashkirk.

won (won) v., arch. to reside, dwell – ‘...let us gae furth intil the feeld, let us won in the clachans’ [HSR], ‘The richeous sall inheerit the lan’, an’ won theirin forver’ [HSR] (also written ‘wone’; cf. win and wun; see also wonit).

wonderfi (wun-dur-fi) adj. wonderful – ‘Colin and Danny here, whae next? This is wonderful! Whae next?’ [JEDM] (also written ‘wonderful’ etc.).

wondert (wun-dur’) pp. wondered – ‘A wondert how ee got here’, ‘Is there a moral to be pykit here? Aa’ve whiles wondert’ [DH].

wonit (wu-, wo-ni’) pp., poet. resided, dwelled – ‘An’ he cam’ an’ wonet in ane citie ca’t Nazareth ...’ [HSR] (see won).

wonner (wu-, wo-nur) n., arch. a dweller, inhabitant (noted by J. Jamieson).

wonnin (wu-, wo-nin) n., arch. the main house of a farm – ‘Wonnyng, wyning, a dwelling ...also called the Wonnin-house or Wunnin’-house, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

wonsome (won-sum) adj., poet. winsome, attractive – ‘...for thy voyce is sweit, an’ they continement is wonsome’ [HSR] (also wainsome).

wont (wont) pp., adj., arch. customary, usual – ‘...of the sayd James off Langlandis and hys harys, makand haucht and wont servuis for the sayd landys’ [SB1431].

woo (woo) n., arch. wool – ‘Then oot a pickle woo’ Tam draws, And preens unto his bonnet’ [JoHa], ‘O wae to the day that I first cardit woo’, O dool to the weary beginning o’t’ [JoHa], ‘...when there’s sic a need for baith you an’ Katie to get the taits o’ woo’ spun up’ [JTc], ‘He gies snaw like woo’, he skatters the haair-frost like assis’ [HSR], ‘Sae let them get their taits o’ woo Wash’d in the purlin’ river Though they pollute it at the time It sune turns clear as ever’ [TCh], ‘Tarry woo’ is best of a’’ [T], ‘...And some brought dumplies o’ woo’ And some brought flitches o’ bacon’ [ES], (see also ‘oo’).

the Woo Burn (thu-woo-burn) n. stream that rises near Woo Law, gathering water from Ashkirk Loch and Shielwood Loch to join the Ale Water near Burnfoot. Part of it formed the northern boundary of Wilton Common.

Woo Burnheid (woo-burn-heed) n. former name for an area on Wilton Common, to the northeast of Woo Law. It is recorded in the 1765 description of the common.

wooch (wooch) v., arch. to bark like a dog, n. a stifled bark.

Woodburn (wood-burn) n. William (13th C.) person from Roxburghshire who may have sworn fealty to Edward I in 1296, as stated in ‘Origines parochiales Scotiae’. Both James Robson and James Murray wrote that he was ‘William of Wodeburn, parson of the Church of Mynetowe’. He is transcribed as ‘Willielmus Wodeburn, Parsona ecclesiæ de Mynetowe’ in Borthwick’s 1775 list. However, he does not appear in later published versions of the Ragman Rolls.

Woodger (woo-jur) n. John (19th C.) coachman to Mark Sprot of Riddell for 58 years – ‘His cheerful greeting and his ready joke Will be remembered long by all who felt The influence of his individuality, Genial and robust. His kindliness Will always be recalled with kindliness’ [FL].

woodie (woo-dee) n., arch. willow twigs twisted together to bind the end of a broom – ‘Woodie, two or three willow twigs twisted together, in a circular form, used for binding the end of a broom besom, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (see also wuddie).
woodie-carl (woo-, wu-dee-kaw-rul) n., arch. a variety of pear – ‘Woodie-carl, the name of a pear introduced into this country by the Cistercian monks. Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Wood’s Plan of Hawick (woodz-plawn-ov-hlk) n. map of 1824, surveyed by John Wood (c. 1780–1847) of Edinburgh for his ‘Town Atlas of Scotland’ (1828). This is one of the earliest maps of Hawick showing any detail, and indicates buildings, plots of land (with owners names), wells and even trees.

Woo Law (woo-law) n. hill to the north-east of Whitfield farm, about 4 miles from Hawick, reaching a height of 322 m. Woolaw Loch and Woolaw Moss are nearby, as well as Woolaw Covert, and a spring called the Woolaw or Cheese Well. The Woo Burn also has its source near here, running near Ashkirk Loch to eventually join the Ale Water. There is an ancient rectangular enclosure on the east of the hill, about 900 m north-north-west of Whitfield farmhouse, and the remains of a farmstead and enclosures a little to the east. There is also a claim of evidence of a Roman road between here and Groundistone Heights.

Woolaw Craig (woo-law-kraeg) n. former name for an area on Wilton Common, presumably corresponding to the head of the hill at Woo Law, also known as ‘Woolaw Edge’ – ‘... but claims a mile within the common, to the top of Woolaw-craig, reckoned to be a fourth of quality of the hail common’ [DCW1765].

Woolaw Knowes (woo-law-nowz) n. former name for hilly region in the middle of Wilton Common, probably meaning essentially the same as Woo Law. It is mentioned in part of a description of Wilton Common in 1765. ‘Woolaw edge’ is also mentioned, this presumably being the name for the highest point on the hills.

Woolaw Moss (woo-law-mos) n. marshy area near Woo Law. It is marked clearly on the 1764 map of Wilton Common and was said to be ‘mostly within the limits of Mervinslaw head-room, and the west end of it is within Whitfield head-room. Lots of peat was cut there in the early part of the 18th century. A drain was constructed, probably in the 19th century to improve the land for agricultural use, draining the Moss into the Cala Burn. However, Woolaw Moss and Woolaw Loch are both marked there on the modern Ordnance Survey map, with the Woolaw (or Cheese) Well to the west. Aerial photography has shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation there, about 450 m north-west of Whitfield (it is ‘Woola Moss’ on the 1764 map of Wilton Common).

Woolaw Moss Rig (woo-law-mos-rig) n. moor to the south of Woolaw Moss, mentioned in the 1765 description of Wilton Common – ‘...the muir on the south of the Woolaw-moss, called the Woolaw-moss-riigg’ [DCW1765].

Woolaw Well (woo-law-wel) n. marshy area near Wool Law. It is marked ‘Chease Weel’ to the northwest of Woolaw Moss on the 1764 map of Wilton Common. It is ‘Woolaw Well’ on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map and is marked ‘Woolaw or Cheese Well (Spring)’ on the modern map – ‘... and saw a parcel of wood lying on the foreside of the Woolaw, just above the Woolaw well’ [DCW1765].

Woolhope (oo-lok, woo-hup) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on the Kiln Sike, about a mile or so to the north-west of Newcastleton. There is an extensive ancient field system in the area, including ‘lazy beds’ to the north of the cottage. The area is probably the same as what is marked ‘Oulack’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map and first recorded as ‘Wilayk’ in c.1376. Alexander Armstrong possessed the farm of ‘Willock’ in 1632, which was probably here. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 and William Robson in 1861. The farmhouse is derelict (note the local pronunciation; it is ‘Woolock’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Woollegate (woo-lee-gai) n. another name for the Wellogate – ‘A party is fined for breaking of the marches betwixt the propertie of the Duchess of Buccleuch and the commonti at the Woolee gate’ [JW1715] (it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Woolie’s (woo-leez) n. branch of Woolworths P.L.C., situated at 46 High Street. The store opened in about 1930 (as store No. 413), with its original sign reading ‘F.W. Woolworth & Co. Ltd., 3d and 6d Stores’. It closed in 2009. The building was purpose-built as a Woolworth’s store, and has the typical 5 bays and central pediment to be found on ex-Woolworth’s shops elsewhere. During construction in 1930 there was an accident in which one worker died and several were injured.

Woollee (woo-lee) n. former name for Wolfelee, changed by James Elliot when he built the mansion there 1825–27. It is believed that the ‘Wellogate’ is derived from being the ‘gate’ to ‘Woollee’. The name is known from at least the early 15th century, and in 1605 is recorded as the separate ‘Over Woollee’ and ‘Nether Woollee’. It is probably the ‘Woolie’ recorded in papers in

Woollee
Woollee Mill

Selkirk in 1655 suggesting it was used as a garrison by Royalists soldiers (also spelled ‘Woollee’, ‘Wolle’, ‘Woolie’, ‘Wowlee’, ‘Wowie’, etc.; it is ‘Overwollie’ and ‘Neather Wolley’ in 1636; it is labelled ‘Wowlye’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and ‘Oulie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, as a large tower).

Woollee Mill (woo-lee-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). It is recorded in 1659 along with other lands sold by William, Lord Cranston to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Turnbells were tenants in the late 17th century (it is ‘Woollie-mill’ in 1684, ‘Wollie Miln’ in 1691 and ‘Woolie miln’ in 1739).

Woollee smiddy (woo-lee-smi-dee) n. former name for the blacksmiths at Forkins near Wolfelee.

Woollie Rig (woo-lee-rig) n. hill just to the south of Riccarton Junction, being the southern ridge of Fawhope Knowe.

Wooplaw (woop-law) n. farm just north of the Carter Bar, in Southdean Parish. William Ainslie was there in 1623. Walter Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Douglas Davidson was tenant in the mid-19th century. There is another area of the same name north of Gala (it is ‘Wouplaw’ in the mid-19th century. There is another area of the same name in Melrose Parish).

Wopen (wō-pin) adj., arch. wrapped, tied up – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, … gitt beens, wheet, wopen cole plants …’ [DMW] (cf. waupit).

Wor (wor, wur, wer) pron. our – ?? (used only in some particular contexts).

Worchard (wor-churd) n., arch. an orchard (also orchart, worthchat and woachet).

Worch (wor-chur)’ n. old name for Orchard farm and surrounding area.

Wordsworth (wurds-wurth) n. Dorothy (1771–1855) sister of the poet William. In 1803 she accompanied her brother on a tour of the Borders, led for much of the way by Sir Walter Scott. Her diary records the party leaving Jedburgh on 22th Sptember, passing through Denholm, then stopping off at Hornshole (where Scott told them an imaginative story about the name deriving from an old school master who lived nearby), before arriving in Hawick, where they stayed at the Tower Inn. The next morning they ‘walked with Mr. Scott along a high road for about two miles, up a bare hill’ from where they had a great view to the south; this was probably the Vertish, although other places are possible. Scott left them after breakfast and they travelled on towards Langholm, stopping off at Brauxholme, Caerlenrig and Mossopaul, where she described: ‘The scene, with this single dwelling, was melancholy and wild, but not dreary, though there was no tree nor shrub; the small streamlet glittered, the hills were populous with sheep; but the gentle bending of the valley, and the correspondent softness in the forms of the hills, were of themselves enough to delight the eye.’ William (1770–1850) English poet who visited Hawick in 1803 as part of a Border tour with his sister Dorothy, led by Sir Walter Scott. They spent the night in the Tower Inn and walked up the Wellogate (or perhaps the Vertish) to enjoy the view. There is a brief entry in his sister’s diary. A plaque commemorating the visit was placed on the Tower in 1921 by the Callants’ Club. Next day they travelled south and stopped at Mossopaul, spending the next night in Langholm.

Wordy (wur-dee) adj., poet. worthy – ‘Sae dinna vex a heart that is your ain. But end at anes a wordy wooer’s pain’ [CPM], ‘It’s no wordie a dad of a bonnet,’ was a common phrase used when expressing contempt . . . ’ [EM1820], ‘A teaspoon o’ silver is wordy some brass – Have fingers aye tarry, but look to the lass’ [JTe], ‘I wull ca’ upon the Lord, wha is wurdie til be preyet’ [HSR], ‘. . . whase shoon I amna wurdy til bear’ [HSR], ‘The keeper o’ that ale-hoose Is wordy nocht but scorn’ [WL] (also written ‘wordie’, ‘wurdie’ and ‘wurdy’).

Wore (wür) pp., arch. tended, kept watch over, warded off – ‘Robert Scot of Cowdhouse wore a part of the common as his head-room, and would not allow other beasts, tho’ they had right to pasture on the common, to eat his head-room, but hounded them off it’ [DCW1765] (a past tense of weir).

Wore in (wör-in) pp., arch. herded into an area, hemmed in – ‘. . . and thereby wore in the sheep and nolt of Over Southfield so that they could not get to the Common for part of that day’ [C&L1767] (cf. weir).

Workeet see workit

the Workhouse (thu-wurk-hoos) n. another name for the Paishoose.

the Workin Men’s Buildin Society (thu-wur-kin-menj-bil-din-su-sl-i-ce) n. also known as ‘the Building Society’ or the Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company Limited, a name which it adopted in 1888. It formed in 1864, registered under the Friendly Societies’ Acts, after a previous failed attempt to start a local building society in 1851 (the Hawick Benefit Building Society). It offered a safe investment opportunity and cheap housing for the working classes, with the house being paid off over time by the purchaser. The society was instrumental in raising the quality of accommodation in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century. Much of ‘the Terraces’ in the Wellogate were built by the society, starting with Waverley Terrace. In all it built 324 quarter-house units, 20 half-houses and 94 cottages in the Wellogate. In the early days houses were sold by auction and the street names often suggested by the successful bidders.

workit (wur-kée, -ki’) pp. worked – ‘in they days the men aye workit over Christmas’, ‘His faither workit at the mill Like mony a decent chap’ [DH] (also written ‘workeet’; alternative past tense to wrocht and wrought, which can also be the past participle).

worlín (wör-, wur-, lin) n., arch. a worldling, someone only concerned with worldly matters – ‘Worl’ings get wealth, and let rioters squander These your enjoyments – e’en let it be so’ [JoHa], ‘Let warl’ins worsle on the way that leads to grief an’ care’ [JoHa]. ‘The worlìn weel had lo’ed the ha’, Doun in yon bonnie greenwud shaw’ [HSR] (also warlin).

worlít (wur-, wō-rl’, -rult) n., arch. world – ‘The native floo’rs the auld-worlít stories …’ [??], ‘Aa yow yins that’s ooreet an oold wui this neeger-wheeper ov a woarlt’ [ECS] (this is the older pronunciation, which once had the ọ vowel, rather than u; also written ‘woarlt’; cf. world).

Wormiccleuch (wurm-me-klooč) n. farmstead between Meadshaw and Craik, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Wyrmycleuch’. The only feasible connection on modern maps is ‘Whinney Cleuch’, between Meadshaw and Craik, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Whyrmycleuch’. The only feasible connection is a stream that joins the Borthwick roughly opposite Eilrig (marked on de Wit’s c.1680 map as ‘Eilrig’). It is the former name for a stream that joins the Borthwick roughly opposite Eilrig (marked on de Wit’s c.1680 map as ‘Eilrig’).

Worm Ríg (wurm-rig) n. wooded ridge between the Ruecastle and Knowesouth Burns, in the northern part of Bedrule Parish, directly to the east of Newton. A series of earthworks was revealed in aerial photographs in 1946, covering an area about 140 m by about 60 m. It lies on the narrow ridge between the 2 streams and is formed of double ramparts and ditches, although partially obliterated by cultivation. Note there is another earthwork much higher up on the Knowesouth Burn, described in the New Statistical Survey in 1837.

Wormscleuch (wurm-klooč) n. farmstead to the north of the road linking Saughtree with Kielder, on the Wormscleuch Burn and close to the Wheel Causeway. An old road, possibly once a branch of the Wheel Causeway, passes south of here, crossing the Wormscleuch Burn and going south-west to the Holy Grain. It was probably the ‘Errmscleuch’ among lands granted to Scott of Harden by the Abbot of Jedburgh about the 1530s. It was ‘Ormscleuch’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. The lands of ‘Ormscleuch’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Ormscleuch’ was listed (along with Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Abbotsike and Abbotshaws) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653. In 1663 it is still listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. James Telfer was shepherd there in 1861 (also written ‘Wormscleugh’; the name probably derives from the Old Norse personal name ‘Orm’ and is recorded as early as 1606; it is ‘Ormscleuch’ in 1663).

Worms Cleuch (wurmz-klooč) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Rams Cleuch at the steading of Ramscleuch-burn. A steading there, ‘Ormscleuch’ was listed in a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 along with Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb’.

Wormwud (wurm-wud) n. former name for lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1479 the eastern part was held by William Chisholme, with Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick holding the ‘grassum’. In 1541 it is described that the western part was called Whitehaugh Brae and the eastern part was Hutlerburn. Hence the lands lay along the B7009 between Inner Huntly and Ettrickbridge. There were Scotts and Murrays there in the mid-15th century (it is ‘Warwud’ in 1479 and 1541).

worset (wu-séi’l) n., arch. worsted, twisted woollen yarn – ‘Hard-weerin worset threids for warip …’ [WL] (also written ‘worsit’ and ‘wurset’).

worship (wu-ship) n., arch. religious denomination – ‘Wey had been schuled thegither, an’ oor pawrents belanged to the same wurship’ [BCM1880].
worshippit

worshippit (wur-shi-pee”, -pi”) pp., poet. worshipped – ‘Than cam’ she an’ wurshuppet him, sayin’, Lord, help me’ [HSR].

wortchat (wor’-cha’, wort-chat) n., arch. an orchard (J.A.H. Murray notes the form ‘wortchet’; cf. the more common worchard).

woszlie (woz-lee) adj., arch. having a pinched face, stunted in growth, unhealthy looking. n. an unhealthy-looking person – ‘Woslie, wozlie, a shrivelled, small-featured, and hard-looking person, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also wuzlie).

wot (wot) v., poet. first and third person singular present tense of wit, to know – ‘When my competitors got wot That I was gaun to leave them . . . ’ [AHS], ‘I have been away for many a day. For many a month, I wot’ [JoHa], ‘Weel I wot I hae heard o’ sic things – I hae heard o’ lords, an’ yirls, an’ dukes fa’ing in love wi’ maidens o’ low degree’ [JTe], ‘For wee I wot it wadna serve To make ye frae your purpose swerve’ [AD], ‘For days lang syne, I wot ye weel, Her sons made English foe-ye frae your purpose swerve’ [AD], ‘For days lang gree’ [JTe], ‘For weel I wot it wadna serve To make an’ dukes fa’ing in love wi’ maidens o’ low de- many a month, I wot’ [JoHa], ‘Weel I wot I hae: : : : ’ [AHS], ‘I have been away for many a day, For present tense of wit, to know – ‘When my com- son, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also wuzlie).

wozlie (wot-lee) adj., arch. having a pinched face, stunted in growth, unhealthy looking, n. an unhealthy-looking person – ‘Woslie, wozlie, a shrivelled, small-featured, and hard-looking person, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also wuzlie).

wochit (wo-chi’, -chit) n., arch. an orchard (see also wortchat and the more common worchard).

woundit (woon-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. wounded – ‘But God sall schunt at thame wi’ ane arra; suddanlie sall thaye be wuundet’ [HSR].

wowf (wowf) n., poet. a wolf – ‘Beware o’ fause prophets, whilk come til yow in sheep’s claiethin’; but inwairdlie they ar ravenin’ wouffes’ [HSR], ‘Behald, I sen’ yow furth as sheep in the middle o’ wouffes’ [HSR], ‘Has the wowff worried yer lambs, gudewyffe?’ ‘Is the rot amang yer sheip?’ [WiSp] (also written ‘wouff’).

wowf (wowf) adj., arch. mad, unhinged – ‘Wowf, in some degree deranged. Nearly synon. with Skeer, but understood as denoting rather more violence, Upp. Lanarks. Roxb.’ [JoJ].

wowfish (wow-fish) adj., arch. of slightly unsound mind – ‘Wowfish, approaching to a state of derangement, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

wowfness (wowf-nis) n., arch. the state of being deranged (noted by J. Jamieson).

Wowie (wow-ee) n. nickname for William Laidlaw Scott.

Wowlick (wow-lik) n. former lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Wlak’ (valued at 5 shillings) and ‘Wlak maior’ (valued at 18 shillings), the section called ‘Luche’. In a rental roll of 1541 they are ‘Wowlyk’, valued at 20 shillings and leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). This is surely the same as ‘Oulack’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, which is situated neat the modern farm of Woolhope, and hence probably the same place, i.e. north-west of Newcastleton.

Wrae (rai) n. farm in the Ewes valley, between Sorbie and Langholm. There was formerly a mill there. Along with Park it was described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619. There were Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. Easter, Wester and Middle ‘Wraes’ are listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale in about 1610, when the superiority was granted to the Earl of Home. It is listed as ‘Wray’ among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The 12-merk lands of ‘Ovir et Nathir Wraithes’ in the Parish of ‘Nathir Yeues’ are listed among the lands whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. Middle and Over Wray were surveyed together along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when they covered 255 acres, bounded by Sorbie, Howgill and Flask, but with no farmhouse there at the time. Neither Wrae was surveyed separately, covering 265 acres, bounded by Flask, Terrona, Middle Wrae and Staplegordon, with the farmhouse roughly where the modern farm of Wrae is located. William Anderson was there in at least the period 1785–97. William Knox (the poet) farmed there for a few years. Mina Maxwell was there in 1841, as well as Bells. In 1851 there were Bells, Andersons and Littles there. The farm was merged with that of Terrona in the late 1800s (sometimes formerly ‘Wra’ and occasionally ‘Wrea’; ‘O. Wrae’ and ‘N. Wrae’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while ‘Midle and Over Wrae’ and ‘Nether Wrae’ are on the 1718 Bucleuch survey).

wraith (räth) n., v., arch. wraith.

wrang in the heid (rawng-in-thu-heed) adj. mentally imbalanced, somewhat unhinged, deranged, insane – ‘If Colin disna come back sume – A’ll gaun fair wrang in the heid’ [JEDM].

wrangous (rawng-is) adj., arch. wrongful, unjust, illegal – ‘...and Robert Elliot, called Zoun Robene, for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytaking of thair teindis of the landis of Cruik, Skelfhill, Peilbra, and Penangushope ...’ [SB1574].

wrangously (rawng-is-lee) adv., arch. wrongfully, incorrectly – ‘...wha hethna liftet up his saul untill vainitie, nar swurn wrangouslie’ [HSR].

the Wrangway Burn (thu-rawn-ga-burn) n. stream that joins the Limiecleuch Burn in the headwaters of the Teviot. Its source is near Rashiegrain Height, and it runs near Ewes Doors and to the west of Wisp Hill. There is some evidence for a possible Roman road linking the valley of this burn with that of the Eweslees Burn. A large stone on its banks contains cup-shaped hollows, although it is unclear whether they are man-made or natural (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is said to derive from when a group of Scottish rievers were being pursued up the burn by the English and slipped over to Eweslees via Ewes Doors, with the English continuing the wrong way; however, the meaning may be from the stream appearing to come from the pass at Ewes Doors, but in fact originating on Haggis Side).

wrench (rawch) n., poet. a wrench – ‘When death gat the warrant Lang Eaby to catch, ’Twas needless to think o’ escapin’; And Eaby was feared, he had been such a wrench ...’ [JTe].

wreath (reeth) n., poet. a snow drift, bank of snow – ‘The hill was steep – the glen was deep; And our twa sons thegither Were stan’in’ wi’ their father’s sheep, When down the wreathie cam’ wi’ a sweep, That lane could aid the ither’ [HSR].
Wreathlongshot

Wreathlongshot (reeth-lang-sho’) n. former name for part of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. This is the place within Salenside called ‘Breaths [sic] Langshot and Broomhaugh’ in the 1753 sasine of Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall. In Wilkinson’s 1779 sasine there is reference to the ‘20 shilling land of Salenside called Wreaths’. In 1815 they are described as ‘the twenty shilling land of Salenside called Wreathlongshot and Broomshaugh’.

the Wreck (reth) n. local nickname in use around the early 19th century.

wreckit (ree-ki’, -kee’) adj., pp. wrecked – ‘Can it keep peace o’ mind frae being wreckit? O never, laddie, sae think o’t nae mair’ [JoHa], ‘…They’d ruined lives and wreckit toons, In mony a fray’ [JCG].

wreesle (ree-sul) v., arch. to wrestle – ‘Hoo memory wreesals at the sneck Whene’er the ‘slogan’s soonded …’ [RH] (also spelled ‘wresaal’).

Wreth (reth) n. Alexander (16th C.) miller recorded in 1554 when he witnessed the grant of an acre of land on ‘Harpahill’ to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry by James Douglas of Cavers, and also witnessed the letter of reversion by Elliot to Douglas that followed. In fact two men of this name are listed, with one being ‘molen-dinario’ (i.e. miller) to distinguish him from the other. He may have been miller at Spittal-on-Rule or elsewhere in Cavers Parish (‘Wreth’ is otherwise unknown and may be a transcription error for some other name, e.g. ‘Veitch’).

the W.R.I. (thu-du-bul-yoo-awr-I) n. the Women’s Rural Institute, also sometimes called ‘the Rural’. The Scottish W.R.I. was founded in 1917, partly as an outgrowth of the suffrage movement, and partly following success of such institutes in Canada 20 years earlier. This quickly spread into a set of social clubs for women in sparsely populated rural areas, with an emphasis on preserving traditional handicrafts and cooking. Since their formation these groups have been important for organising community events in local rural areas, and also for having community halls built. The members of each Institute usually meets once a month. There have been active W.R.I. groups in Appletreehall, Bedrule, Burnfoot, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Minto, Newcastleton, Newmill & Teviothead, Roberton, Southdean, and Wilton Dean, as well as further afield.

Wright (ri’) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Dean Mill in 1729. In 1732 he (along with Robert Riddell) witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell (probably related to his wife). He married Marion Riddell and their children included: Anna (b.1727); Robert (b.1727); William (b.1731); and Bessie (b.1733). The witnesses in 1729 were William Scott and Adam Easton. Rev. David L. minister of Hawick Old Parish 1972–86, also with responsibility for Teviothead. He was the last minister of the ‘Auld Pairish’, which finally closed in 1987 and was demolished a few years later. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Riddell and their children included Grizel (b.1655) and an unnamed child (b.1656). George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Tudhope and their children included Janet (b.1669), Robert (b.1677) and John (b.1680). George (d.beef. 1719) described in 1719 as ‘sometimes under miller in Hawick’ and already deceased when his son George got married. George (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was under-miller in Hawick. In 1719 he married Helen, who was also from the town of Hawick. Their children included Margaret (b.1721). George (18th/19th C.) joiner in Denholm. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. George (d.1911) baker at 2 Allars Crescent. He married Helen Davidson, who was related to the Hawick plasterers, and died in 1915. They had a daughter Georgina, who was a shopkeeper in Irby, Cheshire, and other daughters Mary Jane and Isabella. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hector (16th C.) smith of Hawick, mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He was owed money ‘for shone to the Lairdis horse’. James (17th C.)

tenant of Harry Riddell, probably near Bewlie, recorded in 1665. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Janet Jackson in Hawick in 1673. He could be the James recorded as ‘Cook’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for ‘drummer’ Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex); it is unclear for whom he might have been a cook. He was also recorded as a cook in a baptismal record of 1712. He married Jean Robson and their children included Jean (b.1712) and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1712 were carrier Walter Ruecastle and shoemaker George Oliver. James Hunter (d.1765) killed falling from a steeple in Jedburgh, he is buried in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. His tombstone reads ‘Stop, traveller, as you go by, I once had life and breath; But falling from a steeple high I swiftly passed through death. Take you example by my fate. And be by me advised: Repent before it be too late, Lest you be thus surprised’. John (17th C.) described along with Robert as tenant of Spittal in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642 when Samuel Rutherford accused them and a large number of their drinking friends of stealing his wallet. John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was surely related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) smith in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish, but was taxed for 2 hearths. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John ‘Jackie’ (1922–??) sales rep by trade, he was scum-half for Hawick R.F.C., also capped for Scotland and playing for the Barbarians. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Ma Baa’ from his rugby-playing days. He was Cornet in 1952 (and hence one of the few who have worn both the green jersey and green coat). It was at his suggestion that Ex-Cornets were allowed to wear their green coats at the Ball, provided they could still get into them! John (1947–2008) professional folk musician. Born in Bournemouth, and brought up in Manchester, he worked as a sales rep and played in rock bands as a youth. He joined the Household Cavalry 1970 and left in 1974, becoming a shepherd. He lived in Derbyshire, then North Yorkshire and Northumberland, before settling near Newcastle upon Tyne in 1980. In 1990 he made a cassette recording of unaccompanied traditional songs, called ‘Border Crossings’, funded from the sale of a horse. Teaming up with Kenny Spiers on guitar and Wattie Robson of fiddle, he formed the John Wright Band in 1993 to support a tour for their CD ‘Ride the Rolling Sky’. He popularised the Hawick song ‘The Wail of Flodden’ (after asking Henry Douglas to suggest a local song he could learn), although in a somewhat folk music version. Further albums included ‘The Things We’ve Handed Down’ (1996), ‘Other Roads’ (1997) and ‘A Few Short Lines’ (2000). Robert (17th C.) resident of Spittal in 1642 when he was named among acquaintences of Samuel Rutherford who were accused of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He was probably related to John, who was also listed in Spittal in the same case. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Margaret Deans. Their children included: Robert (b.1643); Margaret (b.1644); and Janet (b.1649). Margaret’s will is recorded in 1697, by which time he was already deceased. He is probably the smith of that name who was elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the Robert in Hawick who was deceased in 1659 when his son Robert became a locksmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert (b.1643) son of Robert and Margaret Deans. Probably the same Robert, son of Robert, became an apprentice with locksmith James Paton in Edinburgh in 1659. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Bailie in the 1680s. He was tried for abusing another Bailie in 1685, and a man is recorded being fined for calling him a ‘basse kniffe’ (i.e. ‘base knife’) in 1689. He owned 2 ‘tenements’ in the West End of Hawick, according to a sasine of 1687 (for a tenement between his). In 1688 James Turnbull was fined for assaulting him, when he tried to take him to the Tolbooth. He was probably the son of the deceased Robert of Hawick who became a locksmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. He may be the Robert who was born in Hawick in 1643, son of Robert and Margaret Deans. He was probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675. He was probably the Robert who was fined in 1679 for destroying a load of peat belonging to Robert Thomson in Hawick Shiel, with the other man also fined for fighting with him. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms for Thomas Briggs and for Thomas Beattie in 1683 and for William Laing, Patrick Scoon and Robert Hogg in 1688. He is included among the contributors to Hawick’s new church bell in 1693/4. He was ‘late bailie Havek’.
in 1696 when a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in Edinburgh. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. He may be the Robert who married Helen Glendinning and whose children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1671); the witnesses in 1671 were George Renwick and James Burn. Robert (17th C.) cordiner in Easter Burnfoot who was made a Burgess for free in 1690 ‘in respect it is the custom of all towns, that the Provost or other Magistrates have the liberty to create 2 or 3 Burgesses gratis’; he thus may be the first known Honorary Burgess. He was also resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Bailie Robert (unless this is the same man and he married twice). He married Margaret Fraser and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1702, with witnesses Bailie James Deans and litster James Scott. Mary (b.1693), with no mother’s name listed, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1702 were Bailie James Deans and Bailie John Scott, litster. Samuel ‘Sam’ (20th C.) Burgh Chamberlain in the 1960s. Simon (17th C.) under-miller who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed as under-miller at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army in 1644. He could be the William, married to Agnes Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick included Robert (b.1636), Bessie (b.1639), Thomas (b.1641) and Francis (b.1643). The witnesses to the 1641 baptism were William Liddell and Andrew Lidderdale. Alternatively he could be the William, married to Bessie Huggan, whose children baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1647) and Maragret (b.1653). William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (b.1679/80) tenant in Doveshaughead. His wife, Helen Turnbull, died in 1740, aged 60. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1696 he was served heir to the 5-merk land of Alton Croft, from his cousin Walter Scott of Alton Crofts. His mother was Marion Scott, sister of Robert, who was father of Walter. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1718 there was a dispute between him and Robert Wilson over the spaces their wives occupied in St. Mary’s Kirk. His claim was that his wife had the space for 3 years before he moved to ‘easter Burnfoot mylne’. He married Christian Renwick in 1712 and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); William (b.1721); and Robert (b.1723). The witnesses in 1721 were fleschers Robert and George Renwick (who were surely related to his wife) and in 1723 were ‘Tenant’ John Ekron and merchant John Little. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Robert Renwick in 1728 and 1733 and in Hawick for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. He could have been the William born in Hawick to Francis and Jane Graham in 1673. William (19th C.) married Helen Lillico in Wilton in 1848. William (1972–2020) 3rd child of Bill and Nancy, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He was known as a dancer, winning his first competition at the age of 8, reaching the national youth finals in disco, and being crowned the British Disco King in 1989. He appeared in ‘The Hit Man and Her’ on TV and also performed in pantomimes. He worked as a redcoat at Butlins and as a hairdresser and barman. He wrote a dance show called ‘Rok til U Drop’, which launched at the Con Club in Hawick and later toured Britain (formerly spelled ‘Wricht’ and variants).

Wud (wud) n. (Wood) Agnes (1879–1953) daughter of James Swan, she was born in Ayton. Her mother was Elizabeth Pringle Stothart, daughter of David Stothart. Her mother died when she was 5 years old and she moved with her family to Swansea. However, by 1901 she was living in Hawick, keeping house for her uncle James Stothart, bootmaker, who lived at 8 Orchard Terrace. It is said that while in Hawick she met John Maclean (1879–1923), the revolutionary socialist, perhaps in 1904, and the couple were married in 1909. By 1919 she left her husband, who was obsessed with his political causes. She worked as a maternity nurse, while her daughters Nan and Jean were raised by relatives and later by their Aunt Rose at Blacklee Cottages near Hobkirk. She died in Hawick, when visiting family at 4 Laidlaw Terrace. Nan worked to promote her father’s legacy. Basil (18th C.) wright at ‘Dangerfields’ according to a document in Selkirk in 1793 when he was summoned for non-payment by a carrier in Selkirk. Also in 1794 he was in ‘Dangerfield’ when he was subject to another summons by George Gray in Wiltonburn ‘for non payment of price of a stirk’; he was ‘now in Whitehill Brae’. Presumably he lived at Dangerfield in Hawick. Charles (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains in 1681 and another for John Henderson in 1682. David (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehall, Broadlee, Cotlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Francis Watson ‘Frank’ (1862–1953) born in Edinburgh, he worked in the Navy and then became a well known painter, specialising in water-colours, particularly landscapes and maritime scenes. He attended Berwick Art School, finished his training at South Kensington Art School and the Academie Julian in Paris and in 1883 was appointed 2nd master at the School of Art in Newcastle. In 1889 he moved to Hawick as Art Master at the Buccleuch School. In 1899 he gave up teaching to become a professional painter, specialising in marine landscapes. He lived at Southsea, Portsmouth, Berwick and Edinburgh. He painted many scenes around the Borders, including one of Wulliestruther Loch. He also painted a portrait of Robert Milligan in 1890 (hanging in the Town Hall), a portrait of Thomas Purdom (in the Museum) in 1891, one of Robert Murray in 1897 (in the Museum), and one of D. McBurnie Watson in 1898. In 1893 he painted a view of Wilton Dean, as well as a view showing the old red and blue Common Riding flag at the Town Hall, in 1895 he painted a view of Hawick based on the 1813 painting of French prisoner-of-war M. Prefort and in 1902 painted a view from Wester Braid Road. He was present at the surrender of the German fleet at Scapa Flow, making some sketches of some of the ships before they were scuttled. In 1939 he accompanied George VI and Queen Elizabeth on a royal tour of Canada. He died in Perthshire. Several of his descendants have also been artists. George (1763/4–1834) resident at Doveshaughmill. He married Jennet Wright, who died in 1846, aged 72. Andrew, who lived at Spittal and married Margaret Rule was probably his son. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. George Ormiston ‘Ormie’ (1918–2003) born in St. Boswells, he moved to the Borthwick valley at 4, when his father took over the Robertson police station. He was educated at Robertson and Hawick and spent most of his life living at Thornbank in Denholm. He became a joiner in Hawick, enlisted in the K.O.S.B., being present at the Letzlingen Common Riding, and returned to Denholm in 1947. He married Maisie Scott of Overhall. He was a great lover of the Border hills, greeting each New Year from the summit of Ruberslaw, and helping rejuvenate the pine trees near the top. He worked as an insurance man and in Lyle & Scott’s and retired in 1982. He also regularly won Denholm’s best kept garden prize. He was an office bearer of the Archaelogical Society for 30 years, being Field Secretary 1962–72 and 1982–88, and organising excavations at Crumhaugh Tower, Dod Burn peel tower and Heronhall, as well as the restoration of the Norman burial ground at Minto. He published ‘Roberton, the Making of a Parish’ in 1991. Due to infirmity he moved into Hawick and ended his days at Crumhaugh House. Just weeks before he died he was presented with the Dutch Liberation Medal. His photo album and scrapbook covering 1935–89 is in the Borders Archive. Prof. Hamish (1926–2009), C.B.E., born in Hawick, son of Joseph and Robina Baptie. He attended Trinity and the High School (where he was inspired by chemistry teacher Dr. Alison Cook. His father was in charge of coal supplied for the town during WWII, and his mother was headmistress at Cogsmill. He was a keen member of the Scouts and the Scout Pipe Band and served as a messenger for the Home Guard in WWII. He obtained a B.Sc. in Chemistry from St. Andrews in 1947 and a Ph.D. in 1950. He joined the forming Australian National University staff in London in 1951, but then moved to Strathclyde in 1953, where he stayed until retirement in 1991. He was Vice-Principal there 1984–6. He also contributed to forming several colleges into Glasgow Caledonian University, where the Hamish Wood Building was named in his honour, and from where he received an honorary doctorate in 1994. He received the C.B.E. for services to higher education in 1993, and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and the Royal College of Chemistry. His research focussed on inorganic and medicinal chemistry, particularly anti-bacterial drugs. He married Jean Mitchell, who was a Cub Scout leader in Hawick. Their children were Sheena Margaret (Mrs. Walker, b.c.1960) and Colin (1957–2010). Helen (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an innor shop of some sort. Henry (15th C.) Chaplain who in 1445 leased his tenandry of the lands of Harden Wood, lying within Borthwickshielis, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. It seems likely that he was a local chaplain, e.g. for the nearby Kirk Borthwick or for Hassendean, in which Parish Borthwickshielis lay. His name is recorded as ‘Henry of Wod chaplan’. The lease, which is written in the vernacular, is one of the earliest known local pieces of Scots writing (assuming it is genuinely local of course). James (18th C.) mason of Hawick, son-in-law of mason David Laing. He possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776 along with Gala mason John Haldane. James (19th C.) landlord of the Commercial Inn in the mid-1800s. A caricature of him appears in ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. James (1852–1936) from Ayton, he married Elizabeth ‘Lizzie’ Pringle Stothart, from the Hawick family. His first wife died in 1884 and he remarried. By 1891 he was living in Swansea and in 1901 was living at 8 Orchard Terrace in Hawick. He became a master plasterer. His children included: Rose Orkney (1877–1959), a teacher who died in Hawick; Agnes (1879–1953); Robert (b.1880); Thomasina (b.1882); and Joseph (1884–1958), who married Robina Leggatt Baptie and was a coal supplier in Hawick. Capt. James John (d.1911) of the 45th Regiment. In 1868 he married Blanche, who was daughter of Sir William Eliott of Stobs and Wells. Along with his wife he acted as trustee for the Wells estate in the latter part of the 19th century. Because of the debt on the estate, they had to cut down lots of the old trees to meet the trust payments (this being locally quite unpopular). He may be son of the Mr. C. Wood who rented the ‘shooting’ at Stobs from 1861. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) of Whitfield, one of the local men accused in 1612 of charging too much interest on loans; ; his name is omitted from the list of those found guilty. It seems likely this is the Whitfield near Hawick, but it may be another one in Roxburghshire. John (1782–1847) surveyor and cartographer who produced town plans of around 150 places across Scotland, as well as in England and Wales. This includes his 1824 ‘Plan of the Town and Environs of Hawick from actual survey’, which provides the first detailed map of the Town. It can be assumed that he spent some time in Hawick carrying out the survey himself. He lived in Morningside in Edinburgh from 1813 and was elected Permanent Director of the Land Surveyors’ Society in around 1833. Joseph (1884–1954) son of James and Lizzie Stothart, he was born in Ayton. He moved with his father to Swansea and then Hawick. During WWII he was in charge of coal supplied for Hawick and later ran a mail-order knitwear firm. He married Robina Leggatt Baptie (1892–1987), widow and daughter Margaret (a milliner) were living at Courthill in 1851. He married Euphemia Henderson and their children included: William (b.1826), who died young; Jane (b.1828); William (again, b.1830); and Margaret or ‘Maggie’ (1832–1913), who married George Elliot Wilson William (b.1831/3) from Wilton Parish, he was a draper. Along with the Graham brothers he established Wood, Graham & Co. in about the late 1850s. Their business was at 6 Tower Knowe, where they are recorded in 1861, with 8 draper’s assistants. He may be the William whose trustees were recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Rev. William appointed in 1958 as the last minister of St. John’s in Hawick, for a term appointment. He had retired from Half Morton in 1956 (formerly ‘Wod’, ‘Wode’ etc.).

Wudburn (Wud-burn) n. Woodburn, farm on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near the end of the back road leading past the Branxholme Lochs. The lands were attached to the Chisholme estate at one time. In 1627 it was valued along with Muselee as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Shiel, Jean Stuart, John Elliot, Isobel Shiel, Mary Shiel, Robert Scott, Janet Nichol, John Scott, Bessie Scott and Margaret Scott. In 1678 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. William Falsyde was living there in 1686. Like much of the area, it was transferred from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. John Noble lived there in 1712 and 1717, John Miller in 1716–21, Walter Scott in 1716–20, William Bell in 1723, William Heatley in 1722–42, Thomas Heatley in 1727–37, Francis Coltar in 1727–42, James Inglis in 1731, Thomas Heatley in 1756, Henry Mitchellhill in 1757, Archibald Scott in 1761, Robert Elliot in 1763–67, Katherine Cowan in 1765, Alexander Heatley in 1767, Walter Scott in 1769, William Miller in 1772, James Scott in 1773 and John Hislop in 1774. Walter Hume was there in the period 1789–94 and John Elliot in 1798. In 1878 and 1881 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. John Nichol was there in 1800 and James Nichol in 1812. William Gorries died there in 1816. Andrew Anderson was farmer in 1841 and still in 1868. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (formerly spelled ‘Woodburne’, etc.; it is ‘Wodburne’ in 1627, ‘woodburne’ in 1686 and ‘Widburne’ in 1694; it is ‘Woodeburne’ on a parish map of 1650, is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map with its modern English spelling and is also on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wud Burn (wud-burn) n. Wood Burn, stream that rises to the south-west of Branxholme Wester Loch and runs to the north past Woodburn farm to join the Borthwick Water.

Wudburn Mill (wud-burn-mil) n. former farm near Woodburn and Chisholme. In 1797 the tenant was John Nichol. It may be the same place as ‘Chisholme Mill’ (it is ‘Woodburnmill’ in 1797).

Wudcock (wood-kok) n. (Woodcock) George (20th C.) purchased Edward Walker’s engineering business on Commercial Road in 1928. George Woodcock & Sons provided engineering services for the knitwear industry for the next 75 years, finally closing in 2003. During WWII he served as an A.R.P. Warden.

Wudcock’s (wud-, wood-koks) n. Woodcock’s local engineering company, specialising in hosiery equipment. It was established in 1928, when George Woodcock purchased the business from Edward Walker. The premises were on Commercial Road and the firm closed in 2003.

Wuddenn (wu-den, wu-din) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ‘wudden ee expect eet?’, ‘that’d be just like the hing, wudden eet?’ (shorter form of wudden).

Wuddent (wu-den’, wu-din’) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ‘she wud, wuddent she’, ‘wudden ee juist credit eet?’ (also written ‘wudn’t’; sometimes shortened to wudden; this form always precedes the pronoun; cf. wudni which comes after the pronoun).

Wuddie (wu-dee) adj., arch. woody, relating to wood, n. a wood-eating insect, insect that infests wood, especially in the phrase ‘As yald as a wuddie’ (see wud).

Wuddie (wu-dee) n., arch. the gallows, noose, a rope, a willow, willow branch, wand of flexible wood, crook – ‘I threw by my crook, an’ wi’ thravin’ the wuddie, Fu’ eithly I aided to firrit the fray’ [JoHa], ‘...an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie’ [ECS] (see also woodie).

Wuddle (wu-dul) v., arch. to stagger, stumble, struggle through adversity (often used along with the verb describing the adversity) – ‘She’d mony a hatter, puir craittir, bit she wuddlt an brocht thae bairns up rael faisible, for aa’ [ECS], to work laboriously and with perseverance – ‘He wuddlt on a’ day lang’ [GW], n., arch. a struggle, bustle, scene of a struggle – ‘This wearifu’ world’s a wuddle o’ care, Wi’ forests o’ fate on ilk side o’ the road’ [JoHa], ‘...fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o work ...’ [ECS].

Wudend (wud-end) n. Woodend, a cottage on the right of the road heading up the Nip Knowes. The name is also used for that general area near the end of the trees – ‘A yince unleashed a muckle slice Wi’ sic tremendous bend That it ended in ablow the swing In the gairden at Wudend’ [IWL].

Wudend (wud-end) n. Woodend, former farm between Synton and Ashkirk. In 1579 it was listed in the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace, who had crops growing there (it is ‘Wodend’ in 1579; it is marked as such on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaen’s c.1654 map).

Wudfit (wu-fit) n. Woodfoot, area in the Slitrig valley where the side road to Barnes leaves the B6399. Near Woodfoot Cottage there is a late 18th century archway with Doric columns, once the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle. There is a small war memorial by the bridge. This area is sometimes called ‘Woodfoot-on-Slitrig’, since the name has also been used for Borthaugh Woodfoot. It was formerly also called ‘Birkwud Fit’. The porter’s lodge there was filled with 5-foot deep water in the flood of 1846, with a woman spending the night on top of a table inside, and huge sinkhole appeared in the road, which swallowed a horse and threw off the rider (although they both survived). Just to the south the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building on the east side of the main road, which is no longer visible. Local ministers would sometimes preach at the blacksmith’s shop there in the 19th century. The former row of cottages near here once housed a blacksmith’s, a joiners shop, a mason’s and a forester’s; as many as 9 units are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, arranged in a north-south row, just to the west of Stobs Lodge. All but one of the cottages (the one belonging to the mason) were pulled down when the military purchased the whole estate in 1903. Walter Scott was recorded there in 1790 and J. Thomson in 1868.

Wudfit (wud-fi’) n. Woodfoot, former farmstead near Roberton village, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. In 1841 the residents were Elliots and Higgs. It may be the same place referred to as ‘Cleuchfoot’.

Wudfit (wud-fi’) n. another name used for Borthaugh Wudfit.

Wudfit Brig (wud-fi’-brig) n. Woodfoot Bridge, where the B6399 crosses the Slitrig for the first time after Crowbyres. It was built in 1815 and carries the name of Elliot of Stobs.

Wudheid (wud-heed) n. Woodhead, lands on the north side of the Ale Water and west of Ancrum, also known as Ancrum Woodhead. The farm was an amalgamation of 3 previous farms, noted in the rhyme ‘The Randy Raw, The scabbiest Scaaw, The drucken wives o’ Gersetlaw’. It was formerly a seat of the Kers. In 1571 it was raided by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and a group of other Turnbulls plus Rutherfords and others, who claimed that Robert Ker had reset the fugitive Sir Thomas Kerr of Fernihirst there; the record in the Register of the Privy Council gives a detailed list of the goods in the house at that time. Alexander White was farmer there in 1797. The farm was also a location where the preparation of lint was carried out into the early 19th century (it is ‘Woodhead’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Woodheath’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with a large wooded estate drawn).

Wudhooose (wud-hoos) n. Woodhouse, farm on the western side of the Jed valley, off the A68 near the Jedforest Hotel. George Oliver, ‘Zimian’ Oliver and John Chatto were there in 1694. John Scott was recorded as tenant there and elsewhere in 1797 and John Fiddes was a servant there in the same year. Thomas Scott, William Eckford and William Oliver were servants there in 1799 and Robert Fraiter in 1801. John Goodfellow and family were there in 1861 (it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘woodhous’ in 1694).

Wudhoooseelee (wud-hoos-leez) n. Woodhouseelee, farm just south of Canonbie. The area may have previously been connected with Kinmont Willie. In the ‘Kimmont Willie’ ballad it is the place where Buccleuch and his men stopped on their way to Carlisle. There was a branch of the Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1588 it was listed among houses ordered by the King to be cast down by his Lieutenant on the Border, on account to being the home of rebels. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The tenants were the Bell family from 1707 until 1861. The farm of Over Woodhouselee was farmed by George Bell for the 2nd half of the 18th century. George Scott-Elliot farmed at Nether Woodhouselee in the early 1800s – ‘Where are ye gaun, ye mason lads, Wi’ a’ your ladders, lang and hie?’ – ‘We gang to herry a corbie’s nest, That wons not far frae Woodhouselee’ [T], ‘Warl Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee’ [WSB] (it is ‘Wodhousleyis’ in 1586, ‘Wodhouslies’ and ‘Wodhousleyes’ in 1623 and ‘Woodhouslies’ in 1663).

wud-ill (wud-il) n., arch. a disease affecting cattle, said to be caused by them eating woodland vegetation (also called ‘moor-ill’; see -ill).

wudniv’ (wud-ni-uv, -nuv) contr. wouldn’t’ve, would not have – ‘ She wudniv’d din eet, she’s ower guid naired’.

Wudnorton (wud-nor’-in) n. Woodnorton, a villa in Sunnyhill, located up the private drive that is a continuation of Roadhead. It was built in 1881 as ‘Craigmore’ for Robert Pringle, head of Pringle’s at the time. The design was by local architect John Guthrie. It is a Scots Renaissance-style house with a prominent entrance tower and crow-stepped gables, together with Gothic and Flemish details. Pringle was apparently keen for the house to be more impressive than the neighbouring Westwood. It also contains a large library and a private armour collection. The ballroom extension was added at the rear in 1908. The house was long the home of the Pringles, then the Scott-Nobles. Dr. Keith Salmon had the house restored in about 1975 and it was sold to Dr. Adrian Kendall in 2015. It is a grade B listed building (also written as 2 words, ‘Wud Norton’).

Wulliestruther (wu-lee-stru-thur) n. Wulliestruther Loch, in the middle of Hawick Moor, near Pilnuir farm, covering about 17 acres and stocked for fishing. It is sometimes referred to simply as ‘the Struther’. Its level was raised by damming in the early 19th century, in the interests of mills on the Slitrig (to raise the level of the river during dry spells). This allowed the mills on the Slitrig Water to survive through some of the summer of 1844, for example, when the local rivers dried up to a trickle. Previously it would have been little more than a bog, and possibly also contained the area once called Crawstruthers. In 1767 the foot of the Struther was stated to mark the western boundary of the region of the Common where the Town Herd typically pastured the Hawick livestock. The loch has been the site of several drownings over the years. In 1939 it almost completely drained due to a fault with the outlet valve. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building between the south-west end and Pilnuir (the origin is Old Scots ‘struther’, meaning marsh, with a prefix indicating either willows, oily or slimy, or wool or wolf, cf. Buckstruther, Crawstruthers, Holstruther and Lusther; a personal name is also possible for the origin, although there is no reason to believe the story sometimes given of it being named after a person who drowned there, although a Willie Strathearn did in fact drown there in 1884; it is ‘Wullies Struther’ in 1767).

Wullie Wunter (wu-lee-wun-tur) n. nickname of a gypsy (probably of the 18th century) who murdered a woman in a secluded cottage somewhere near Chevy Chase, being executed for the crime and his bones hung on a pole near the location to warn others. The local landowner, Sir Charles Trelvelyan, is said to have later replaced them with a wooden efigy. The pole survived well into the 19th century, being a well-known landmark on the heights near the Border, and also the savour of William Laidlaw when he was lost in a snowstorm.

Wull Inglis’ (wu-ing-ul-zeez) n. popular name for the inn at 64 High Street later called the Half-Moon Hotel. It was also known as ‘Mrs. Inglis’.

Wullison (wu-lee-sin) n. (Willison) Adam (18th C.) resident of Raesknowe in Hawick Parish. His name is written ‘Willison’ in 1756 when he married Isabel Storie. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1757), William (b.1759) and Robert (b.1766). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by the whole congregation. The name appears to be spelled ‘Willisone’ in 1757 and ‘Wilkeson’ in 1766. Alexander (18th C.) married Agnes Telfer in Hawick in 1767. William (b.c.1770) gardener in Hawick. He married Betty Turnbull in 1818 and their children included: Janet (b.1818); Agnes (b.1820); Betey (b.c.1822); and Jean (b.1824). The couple were married, and most of their children baptised, in East Bank Kirk. He was recorded as a gardener on the Kirkwynd in 1841 and at Wilton Place in 1851. Perhaps the same William was farmer at Wiltonburn in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 work horses (see also Wilkinson).

Wull Leppie (wu-le-pee) n. nickname for one of the Burgh Officers in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

wullni (wu-nil) contr. won’t, will not – ‘For I wullna trust in my bowe, næther sall my sword saufe me’ [HSR], ‘The Lord heth sworn an’ wullna rew . . . ’ [HSR] (also written ‘wulna’; see also the shorter form wunni, as well as wullen and other variants).

wulln’t (wu-lin’ contr. won’t, will not – ‘wulln’t yon jist be the same is it was afore?’; ‘they wull show up, wulln’t they?’ (cf. the more common shorter forms wunt, as well as wullen and wullni).

Wull Slush (wu-shush) n. nickname for William Ramsay – ‘O! Hush, hush, Wull Slush, Wull Slush, The Ostler o’ Black Bull, As lazy a loon as what’s i’ the toon, And his head’s like a weel picked skull’ [WNK], ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

Wull the Cutler (wu-thu-kni’-ler) n. nickname for wright William Smith – ‘...Made Wull the Cutler fair think shame O’ Lean Yeddie Gibson’ [T].

Wulson (wu-son, wil-sin) n. (Wilson) Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Helm in 1756 and their children included: Christian (b.1758); and John (b.1761). The witnesses in 1758 were Francis Scott and Robert Dryden. Adam (18th/19th C.) son of flesher Robert and brother of Andrew, he was a shoemaker on the High Street. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Adam who married Margaret Young in 1788, and whose children included: Robert (b.1789); Margaret (b.1791); Richard (b.1793), who was also a shoemaker; Sarah (b.1795); and Andrew (1805–08). Adam (b.c.1815) chemist recorded at about 3 High Street in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Thomas and George. This is probably the same as the firm ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’ recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. The company made ‘aerated waters’, as well as its own sheep dip and other products. It was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘A.R.
Wilson & Co.’, druggists and manufacturers of soda water; but the proprietor was deceased by then. The company was sold to Thomas Howie Hopper some time before 1856, when George (from Coldstream, perhaps his brother) ceased to have any business interest. Adam (b.1827) farmer at Midshiel, son of John and Margaret Elliot. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a Steward of the West Teviotdale Coursing Club in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 426 acres at Midshiel, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Midshiel in 1868. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Allars Garden, which had previously belonged to John Scott. Agnes (b.c.1795) daughter of shoemaker Peter. She was a milliner and straw hat maker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory along with Jane (her sister). They were both recorded again in Pigot’s 1837 directory, but now on the Sandbed. In 1841 they were living at about 5 Buccleuch Street with their brother James, who was Hawick Town Clerk. They were also listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Agnes (b.1796/7) wife of shoemaker Richard. By 1851 she was a widow and working as a mid-wife. In 1851 she was at about 73 High Street and in 1861 at 1 Teviot Place. Her children included shoemaker Adam and woollen spinner Joseph. Agnes (1829–1905) daughter of shoemaker William. In 1851 she was living with her step-mother Isabella at about 1 Buccleuch Place. In 1861 she was a ‘Teacher & House Proprietor’, living at 1 Green Wynd (probably the same location), with her sister Joan and old family servant Esther Reid. Alan (17th C.) listed as ‘Allane Wilsoun’ in 1627 among men stated to be fit for the military. Later in the year he was the first named of 7 inhabitants of Hawick held in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh who complained that they were not ‘ydle and maisterlesse men’, but ‘honest, simple men attending that calling quherunto it hes pleased God to call us’, and hence should not have been pressed into military service. Nevertheless the Privy Council ordered that they be transported by the Earl of Nithsdale to the wars in Germany. It is unclear if any of them returned to Hawick. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Alexander was baptised in 1695. He probably (although it is hard to read) witnessed a baptism in 1691 for Robert Mark, who lived at Burnfoot on Ale. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Nether Whisgills in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Alexander (1766–1813) from Paisley, he is described as ‘the Father of American Ornithology’. He was apprenticed as a weaver and inspired by Burns tried his hand at verse. Imprisoned for a satirical verse against a mill-owner, he afterwards emigrated to America. Sometime before he left in 1794 he is meant to have visited Denholm Dean with an itinerant packman by the name of Bertram; the old packman claimed to have later sent Leyden’s lines on Denholm over to him in America. Alexander M. (b.1810/1) from Duns, he was a house painter listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 46 High Street in 1841, with his brother Thomas. In 1851 he was on Allars Crescent. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Elizabeth. In 1870 his business was purchased by T.H. Laidlaw. Dr. Alexander Christie (1845–1925) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born in Hawick. He was partly educated at Hawick Subscription Rooms, where he was taught by James A.H. Murray. He graduated M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1870 and moved to Doncaster in 1871, where he was a doctor for 55 years. There he lived at 21 South Parade and then 39 Hallgate. He was President of Doncaster Y.M.C.A. for 30 years and also warden at St. James’ Church there. In 1873 he married Emma Bewley. Their children were: Walter Reginald (1874/5–1965), who joined his father’s medical practice; Agnes Bewley, also a doctor, who died in 1909 from blood poisoning after being bitten by a suicidal woman patient; Norman; and Eleanor (or Norah), who died unmarried in 1952. Rev. Alexander (1860–1917) son of Rev. James of Enzie and Charlotte Allardes. He was educated in Aberdeen, becoming assistant at Holburn, before in 1886 moving to Saughtree as ‘missionary’ or assistant minister in charge of this small church. He remained there until 1889. He then moved to Blairdaff, before becoming a minister at Ythan Wells, Aberdeenshire. He married Margaret Isabella Anderson and their children were: Charlotte Mary; Margaret Anderson; and Alexander Gordon. Alfred Cruickshank (1843–69) 3rd son of Walter of Orchard. In 1866 he married Rebecca Fraser Scott, who died in 1870, aged 22. They had a daughter, Florence Margaret (b.1867). Allan (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 on a list of men fit to be sent to the wars in Germany (and hence presumably undesirable to the town!). Andrew (17th C.) simpleton in the Branxholme area. He is described in a 1638–40 financial account of the Scotts of Buccleuch as ‘the fool at Branxholm’.
Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in Millholm. His will is recorded in 1685. Andrew (d.c.1697) leased 1/5 of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1692. He may have been related to Janet, who also leased part of the farm in 1692, and by 1694 he appears to have taken over her 1/5. He was still leasing part of Branxholme Town in 1697, but in 1698 his widow (with her name not recorded) was leasing part of the farm, with Walter Wilson as her cautionser. He may be the Andrew whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Helen (b.1692), Elizabeth (b.1694) and Walter (b.1696). The witnesses in 1696 were Henry Orrock and Thomas Waugh. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described in 1725 as ‘servant to Falnesh’. He married Isobel Murray and their children included Robert (b.1725), Walter (b.1729) and Bessie (b.1731). The witnesses in 1725 were James and Walter Crow, tenants in Branxholme Town. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for James Riddell (at Menslaw) in Hawick in 1745. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be descended from the earlier mason Andrew. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Isobel (b.1741); James (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Betty (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir and in 1744 were late- Bailie John Scott and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. It is possible that his children included Dr. James, Bailie John and Betty who married George Hailburton (with the other 2 acting as baptismal witnesses for one of her children). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Robert (b.1738), Isabel (b.1741) and William (b.1748). Dr. Andrew (18th C.) paid tax on 16 windows at Bedrule Parish in 1753. He appears to have had a daughter Margaret baptised in Bedrule in 1757. It is unclear how he was related to other local Wilsons. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1749 he is recorded purchasing 75 stones of ewe’s milk cheese from Robert Elliot, farmer at Braidlie. And in the same year he sold whisky and malt to the same Robert Elliot. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Dodds and their children included Janet (b.1754). Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was a ploughman at Friarshaw on the 1801 Militia ballot. Andrew (c.1770s – 1847) son of flesher Robert, he was also in the same line of business. He is probably the flesher who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was recorded as a butcher in Hawick on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He was Cornet in 1800. In 1804 the death of his son John is recorded in Hawick. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick in 1810 (in the inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’). His premises were on the High Street, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a ‘flesher’ and ‘bacon dealer’. In 1815 his servant Henry Stockwell was found not guilty of an assault. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was referred to in 1829 in a letter that farmer Adam Brydon wrote to the King, complaining about paying taxes; it ended with a request for the receipt to be directed ‘to the care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick’. It is possible he is the Andrew who married Janet Hogg and whose children baptised in East Bank Kirk, included Isabel (b.1815), Janet (b.1819) and Violet (b.1821). Andrew (b.c.1780) son of John, farmer at Deanfoot. He was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Minto Parish. Rev. Andrew (1798/9–1831) appointed assistant minister of the Presbyterian Church in Liverpool in 1824, in an attempt to resolve disputes between the minister, David Thom, and the congregation. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825; his connection to Hawick is unclear. He was minister at the Rodney Street Kirk from 1825 until 1830. He married Sarah Murray. He was struck with a debilitating illness and died less than a year later. Andrew (b.c.1810) baker at about 24 High Street. He is listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is listed with his wife Martha and son Andrew. He could be the merchant who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. Andrew (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Martha Yule and their children included George (b.1838), Andrew (b.1840) and Margaret Stewart (b.1843). Andrew (b.1812/3–74) son of James, he was a road surveyor like his father. He was Road Surveyor for the Haremoss Turnpike Trust from about 1863 and was also Master of Works for Hawick. He was living at Ovenshank in Castleton parish in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He donated an old coin to the Museum in 1863. He was the architect for the
Albert Bridge in 1865. He was listed as the Surveyor for the Liddesdale Turnpike Trust in 1866. He married Margaret Kyle, who died in 1889, aged 75. Their children included: James; William (1848/9–60); Margaret (1851/2–1904); Georgina (1856/7–60); James (d.1916); and Frances Helen (d.1927). He and his wife both died in Hawick (he after suffering a heart attack in his carriage near Effedg) and are buried at Ettleton. Andrew (b.1821/2) grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the ‘Middle Row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at 11 Mid Row in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Ann (c.1822–77), daughter of shoemaker Adam Kersel. Their children included William (b.1842), Isabella (b.1843), Adam Kersall (b.1845), George (b.1847), Janet Hannah (b.1851), John (b.1854) and Margaret (b.c.1856). Andrew ‘Dan’ (b.c.1870) son of William and Betsy Robson. He carried on his father’s rag and waste business at 5 Teviot Road and later emigrated to Australia. Andrew (d.1945) married Mary Ekron in Hawick. His wife Mary (1875–1939) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children were: Agnes (d.1977), who married Joseph Farries; Isabella, who married John Stewart; Helen (d.1975), who married Andrew Aitken; and John, who married Elsa Farquharson. Anne nee Hope (1807/8–1903) from Canonbie, she was a grand-niece of Mungo Park. When she died she was said to be Selkirk’s oldest inhabitant, although she spent most of her life in Newcastleton. She married weaver John and they lived on Whitchester Lane in the village and then moved to Wilton. Their children included: Anne (b.1827); George (b.1829/30); John (b.1830/1); Mary (b.1832/3); Helen (b.1835/6); William (b.1840/1); and Thomas (b.1843/4). She outliers her husband and their 9 children and died at the house of her grand-daughter Mrs. Walter Scott of Forest Road. She was said to be able to read and sew, without the aid of spectacles, within a week of her death. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as ‘weaver at the Kirk’. He married Isobel Jardine and their children included Janet (b.1715), Marion (b.1717) and Marion (again, b.1721). Archibald (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Agnes Johnstone and their children, baptised in Roberton Free Kirk, included Jane (b.1847) and Matthew (b.1849). Basil Fritz Aubrey (1919–95) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Dennis. He studied English and History at Edinburgh University, became Assistant Headmaster at Wilton and then Headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He was one of the first teachers to introduce outdoor pursuits into his schools activities. He instigated the use of pre-recorded music in church. In the late 1980s he also oversaw the reconstruction of the organ at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth M. Hogg and they had sons Michael and Johnny. Bruce son of George, who was Cornet in 1932. He was himself Cornet in 1969. He lost his Cornet’s Badge at the Monday morning Chase, but found it again on Wednesday! He married his Cornet’s Lass Valerie Franklin. They lived in Glasgow for 28 years before moving to North Berwick. Bruce ‘Jimpy’ rugby player for the P.S.A. in about the 1990s. Catherine (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She is listed along with Josiah, who was presumably her son. He is probably the man from England with that name listed as a handloom weaver on the Howgate in 1841. Catherine (b.c.1785) grocer at about 57 High Street in 1841. She is probably the same person as Christian. Charles (18th C.) father of Robert. He may also have been called ‘Lurgie’. He was a shoemaker and innkeeper like his son, and may also have been son of a shoemaker. He appears to have had literary interests, like his son, since he was among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1781 he was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller. In 1771 he married Agnes Tinlin and their only surviving child was Robert, born about 5 months later (with witnesses being the whole congregation). He was probably the Charles born in Hawick Parish in 1746, son of Robert and Bessie Lorraine (or possibly the Charles born in Cavers in 1743, son of James). It is said that he was named Charles because his father had been in the company of officer’s from Prince Charles’ army when they passed through Hawick in 1745. Charles (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Greenbank in 1779 (presumably the place in Roberton Parish). He married Mary Dryden and their children included: Betty (b.1771); James (b.1773); David (b.1779); William (b.1781); John (b.1784); and Samuel (b.1790). Charles (b.c.1825) framework knitter in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Leith. In 1851 he was living at about 14 Loan and in 1861 at 50 Loan. He married Elizabeth Leyden and their son George Leyden (b.1852) was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Other children included Robert (b.1852/3) and James (b.1854/5). His second wife was Janet and they had a son
Wulson

Walter (b.1860). Charles M. (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He is recorded from at least 1866. He served as Depute for the Justices of the Peace for Hawick. He was a member of the Berwick Naturalists’ Club. He was half of the partnership of Wilson & Anderson, who were a firm of writers, conveyancers and bank agents, which dissolved in 1874. He may be the Charles who was recorded at Ormiston House in a directory of 1868. Charles John (1842–1923) son of Provost George. At the age of 14, after a year in boarding-school in London, he was brought into the family business, learning about every department in the factory. In 1860 he was made factory manager, when still a young man. In 1875, along with his father and brother George Murray Wilson, he went into partnership with James Glenny, purchasing the Ladylaw and Langlands Mills. He served as a local councillor in the late 1800s, and was on the School Board and Parish Council. He was one of the original members of the Hawick Science and Art Committee and was the founder of the Hawick Technical Classes. He was Chairman of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society. He was a Director of the North British Railway, President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and first President of the South of Scotland Woollen Trades Approved Society. An enthusiastic member of the British Association, he attended their meetings in South Africa in 1905 and in 1902 (partly to recover his health) he went on a round-the-world tour. He gifted the barometer outside the Town Hall in 1898 and jointly (with his brother and James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He also offered to build a bridge at the Spetch, long before the Laurie Bridge was built. In 1908 he and his wife paid for central heating to be installed at the Cottage Hospital. In 1911 he gifted his aunt Elizabeth’s needlework sampler to the Museum. He wrote the article ‘Hawick and its people’ for the 1921 Transactions. He lived at Deanfield. In 1865 he married Mary Ann Glenny (sister of James Glenny), who was his cousin; she died after 52 years of marriage. They had 3 children: Katherine (b.1866); George Heron (b.1868), who was Provost; and Charles Glenny (died aged 14). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He left money to establish the C.J. Wilson Educational Bequest and C.J. Wilson Medal Fund at Wilton School and the High School. Christian (b.1784/5) from Eskdalemuiir, she was a grocer recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow and ‘Small Grocer’ at 3 High Street (corresponding to the modern No. 76). David (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1689 his illegitimate son James (with Margaret Paterson) was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Robert Scott of Whitehaugh and John Scott. David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Marion (b.1698). David (17th/18th C.) carrier recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to ‘pay into Baylyea Mertine sex pound per piece, . . . for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drummers coats att the Common ry-deing in annon 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. Probably the same carrier married Janet Tait (also from Hawick Parish) in 1709 and their children included William (b.1710), David (b.1712), Jean (b.1715), Robert (b.1718), John (b.1721) and James (b.1724). Rachel (b.1703) may also have been his daughter, if he had an earlier marriage with Margaret Elliot. The witnesses in 1710 were merchant William Gardner and mason Peter Mitchell and in 1721 were wright John Pringle and carrier David Minto, and he was then recorded as ‘Tenent in Hawick’. He may have been related to other Wilsons who were carriers, like James and Robert. David (b.c.1768/9) from Greenlaw, he was land steward at Cavers farm. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Jane, Margaret and Mungo (who was a shopkeeper). He was still at Cavers in 1861. David (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Hynd’ at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Peggy ‘Sud-den’ and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included David (b.1815), James (b.1816) and Mungo (b.1822). David (19th C.) teacher of a school on Tannage Close. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the schoolmaster in Hawick whose unnamed daughter died in 1819. David (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isabella Turnbull and their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Jane (b.1844); and Margaret (b.1846). Dennis Elliot Aubrey (1916–64) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Basil. He was the last Wilson owner of the firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Doris Stevens and had a son, Colin Aubrey, who moved to the U.S.A. Edward (1841–1920) tweed manufacturer, son of Walter of Orchard and nephew of Provost George. He entered the Council in 1869 for North High Street Ward, later becoming a Bailie. He was Provost for 8 months in 1875, having to resign after the Collie collapse. He later returned to politics, being beaten by 1 vote in 1884 and was re-elected to the Council in 1886. He helped open a school in Weensland, was a committee member of the Roxburghshire Liberal Association, a keen horseman and also involved with the Cottage Hospital, Savings Bank and Congregational Church (for which he served as 3rd Treasurer). In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. He married Margaret, daughter of builder Robert Hobkirk, and they had 6 daughters: Ada Elizabeth (b.1883), who married a Mr. Rams, minister in South Africa; Bessie Elmira (b.1885); Constance Rebecca (b.c.1890); Freda M. (b.c.1893); Muriel (b.c.1896), who married a Mr. Davis; and Olive P. Edward (b.c.1900). He built Beechhurst in 1889, later moved to Switzerland for health reasons and died in London.

Edward Joseph (1858–1917) born at Chatton, where he was a pupil teacher. He then became schoolmaster at Charlton, and was at Saughtree in the late 1880s. He helped describe the area of upper Liddesdale for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1889. He later moved to Bolton (East Lothian) and finally Abbey St. Bathans, and died in Earlston. He contributed other articles to the Berwickshire Naturalists and wrote an account of the area around Wooler, where he grew up. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Janet Leydon, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Francis (b.1791) son of hatter James and Isabella Newberry. He was listed as a grocer on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He presumably died before the 1841 census. He married Jean Knox, who had previously married William Thomson and later married John Eddie. Their children included: Jane, who married William Thorn in Australia; Elizabeth, who married Robert Turnbull and emigrated to Enfield, New South Wales; Isabella (b.1832/3); Janet (b.1835/6); and James. In 1841 his widow was running a boarding house on the Loan, and by 1851 was living in a boarding house on Walter’ Wynd with frameworker John Eddie. Francis Elliot (1839–96) born in Hawick, son of Walter of Orchard and older brother of Edward. He became a hosiery manufacturer of the late 1800s and early 1900s. He lived at Broomlands, which he had built for him about 1880. He gave the toast to the Acting Father at the 1893 Common Riding. In 1873 he married Agnes, daughter of Adam Laing (and grand-daughter of the James Hogg of ‘Teribus’); she died in 1910, aged 54 (and there was a dispute over her will in 1913). Their children included: Walter (b.1874), who died in infancy; Walter Francis (b.1875); Agnes Edith (b.1877); Stanley (b.1879); Fritz-Aubrey (b.1881), who married Maud Johnson; and Jane Maud (b.1882). Francis ‘Frank’ (1845–88) son of manufacturer John and Margaret Scott. He married Violet Turnbull in Hawick in 1871 and their children included: John (b.1872); Agnes Amos (b.1873); George Turnbull (b.1874); Margaret (b.1876); Frank (1877–1916); John (b.1878); Violet Turnbull (1879–1973); William Richardson (1881–1916); Nellie Turnbull (1882–1931); Annie (b.1884); and Peter Turnbull (b.1886). He moved to Dumfries, where most of his children were born. One of his daughters was Cornet’s Lass in 1894, to her cousin William R. He died at Cruden Bank, Dumfries. Francis D. (b.c.1854) son of James and Janet. He was a hosiery manufacturer and stalwart member of Hawick Free Kirk, holding many offices, including Clerk of the Deacon’s Court from 1889. Fritz Aubrey (b.1881) son of Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. He worked for the family firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Maud Johnson and had sons Basil and Dennis and daughters ‘Pamela’ Agnes (1910–39) and ‘Barbara’ Constance (1913–95). George (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. George (16th C.) listed along with John Stewart as ‘servants and ministers for the time to William Ryddail’, brother to the Laird of Riddell. This was in a transaction signed in Lilliesleaf Kirk, suggesting that he may have been associated with that church. George (17th C.) shepherd at Raesknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1708 he was recorded at Skelfhill when he married Bessie Griew. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: William (b.1715); and Gideon (b.1722). Robert (b.1718), also baptised in Hawick Parish, with mother’s name given as ‘Christian’ Griew, was probably also their son. Bessie (b.1724), with no mother’s name given, was probably also their daughter. George (18th C.) living at Hott in Hawick Parish in 1722 when son Gideon was baptised in Roberton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1743 he married Marion (or Mary) Nichol. Their children included Betty (b.1745); Isabel (b.1747); an unnamed child (b.1750); and Janet (b.1754). George (18th
C.) married Janet Hood in Kirkton Parish in 1745. Possibly the same George had children Betty (b.1753) and George (b.1756) baptised in Kirkton. George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, probably a carrier there. In 1753 he was paid by the Burgh of Selkirk for carrying timber from Berwick. Perhaps the same George married Elsepeth Smith and had children Andrew (b.1766), Elizabeth (b.1768) and Isabel (b.1771) baptised in Lilliesleaf. George (d.c.1815) son of James. He was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers James and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. All 3 of the brothers were listed as carriers in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He had 2 horses at that time. He could be the George who married Elizabeth Turnbull in Wilton in 1752 and whose children included: Isobel (b.1756); James (b.1758); Helen (b.1761); Jane (b.1766); twins George and Mary (b.1767); and George (again, b.1769). Their first 2 children were baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1766 were carrier William Aitkin and writer William Wilson (possibly ‘Whusky Wullie’) and in 1767 were carrier James Wilson (probably either his father or brother) and writer William Wilson again. George (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull and their daughter Katherine was baptised in Hawick in 1766. It is possible he is the same man as the George married to Elizabeth Turnbull. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Murray Wilson and their son George was baptised in 1778. George (18th C.) carrier, selected as Cornet in 1790 in opposition to the Council’s official selection. This was after the Council’s choice, Philip Elliot, made a list of invitees to the Common Riding that was considered to be too narrow, leading many of the young men of the Town (and probably the West-enders in particular) to choose their own Cornet. His cavalcade was stopped at the West Port by Bailie Hardie, and thereafter the two parties effectively held separate Common Riding celebrations. It is unclear how he was related to other Wilsons, but he could possibly be connected with tanner John. George (18th C.) married to Mary Gardner. The death of an unnamed child of theirs is recorded in Hawick in 1792. George (d.bef. 1804) carrier in Hawick, probably son of the earlier George, born in 1767. In 1793 he married Betty ‘Houieson’ (or Howison), who was also from Hawick and died in Hawick in 1804; she may have been daughter of William Howison and Elizabeth Renwick baptised in Hawick in 1765. The death of one of their children is recorded in Hawick in 1792, apparently before they were married. They had 5 children whose baptisms are listed together in the Hawick Parish records, but the reason for this is unclear; 3 of the baptisms are before the couple were married and so it is possible that some of the children were from one of the parents and adopted by the other. Their children (with the mother’s surname recorded as ‘Whitson’) were: William (b.1790), who had died, perhaps in 1792; Betty (b.1791); George (1792–1862); William (again, b.1795); and James (b.1796). The witnesses were being William and James Wilson, perhaps his brothers. He was already deceased when his wife’s death is recorded, making their children orphans. George (b.c.1770s) son of carrier William. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. In 1798 it was recorded that he had been found unfit for the army, with William Miller, servant at Haggiehaugh, serving in his place. He was still listed as a carrier in Hawick on the 1801 ballot. It may be the same as one of the other Georges. If ‘carrier’ is an error for ‘carrier’, he may be the George who was Cornet in 1802. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as a labourer in Hawick on the 1801 ballot list for the Militia. It may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Acreknowe in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotated ‘Subst.’ suggests that someone substituted for him. He was listed again in 1798, with William Miller (servant at Haggiehaugh) acting as his substitute. His status of ‘Serving by Subst.’ was confirmed in the amended list of 1799. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included: Margaret (b.1811); and John (b.1813). George (b.1775/6) handloom weaver in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was a cotton weaver living at about 17 South Liddel Street and in 1851 was in the same place, but now a woollen weaver. In 1761 his widow and 3 children were living in the same place. He married Mary Nicholson, who was from England. Their children included: George (b.1820/1); Isabella (b.1826/7); Andrew (b.1828/9); Helen (b.1831/2); Jane Murray (or ‘Jean’, b.1834 or 1835); and Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1838). George (1792–1862) stockmaking in Hawick, son of carrier George and Betty ‘Whit’ or Howison. He was living on the Loan (at No. 29) in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Margaret Wulson Wulson important improvements in the town, including Wulliestruther Moss. He was involved in many of Scotland from 1863. In 1857 he gave to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox found on the lands and Ladylaw Mills) in 1876. He was also served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society and of Hawick Gas Light Company. He was elected Provost at the first meeting of the reconstituted council in November 1861, served until 1868, and was then a councillor again until 1888. He was later helped by his sons Charles John and George Murray. After the great Colli failure of 1875 he went into partnership with Walter Armstrong as a partner, and as the firm grew they built workers’ housing in Weensland. He was a Councillor and Bailie 1846–61, being a strong supporter of the Special Act to revise the council, which he helped frame. He was elected Provost at the first meeting of the Hawick Voluntary Corps, and a Director of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society and of Hawick Gas Light Company. He also served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. In 1857 he gave to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox found on Wulliestruther Moss. He was involved in many important improvements in the town, including the water works, Corn Exchange and promoting the railway to Carlisle. He was a Liberal in politics, being Honorary President of the local Liberal Association and fighting against the Corn Laws (being Treasurer of the Anti-Corn Law League in 1844) and for the Reform Bill. He also played a role in the management of ‘The Economist’ after the death of his brother James. In 1861 he was recorded as a wool manufacturer, employing 85 men, 94 women, 28 boys and 6 girls. He was married twice, firstly in 1840 to Jane Law (who died in 1851), who was daughter of Rev. John Law of Newcastle (and said to be aunt of Andrew Bonar Law and great-aunt of politician Richard Kidston Law, although this is unclear); she died in 1851, aged 34. They had 4 surviving sons and 3 children who died young. Their children were: William Richardson; Charles John (b.1842), who married Mary Glenny; Jane Murray (b.1843/4), who married draper John Graham; William Milner; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; George Murray (b.1846); and James Glenny (b.1849), who became a politician in New Zealand. In 1864 he secondly married Margaret Watson (aunt of the later Provost Robert Fraser Watson), who was widow of Hendry Sanforth Richie, and she died in 1873, aged 56. He lived at 13 High Street, then stayed at Ormiston House (while Col. MacDonald had it in the Autumn). About 1865 he built Heronhill House and then Kilmeny about 1879, where he died. There was a huge public funeral for him and he is buried in the Welloge. His portrait is in the Town Hall, painted by James Tait. George (b.1817/8–81) son of stockmaker George and Margaret Leithead. He was a stocking framework knitter living at 29 Loan in 1851 and 1861. By 1871 he was an innkeeper at 21 Howegate. He was also described as a green grocer and fishing tackle dealer’ on his own death certificate and a ‘taxidermist’ on his son George’s. He married Helen Scott (1822/3–95) in Hawick in 1844; she was daughter of Walter Scott and Eliza Borthwick. Their children, mostly baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’, b.1844/5); Janet Anderson (b.1847); Margaret (1850–1932), who married Robert Nichol; George (b.1852); George (again, 1854–1923); Walter (1856–1939); Janet (1860–1941), who married John McGovern and Walter Scott; and Robert (1862–1927). He died at 22 Howegate. His widow was a greengrocer at 22 Howegate in 1881 and at 8 Howegate in 1891. George (b.1820/1) son of George and Mary Nicholson. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Braidlie and in 1861 he was a farmer of...

16 acres, living at about 17 South Liddel Street in Newcastleton. George (b.1825/6) married Christian Hogg in Hawick in 1845. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Robert (b.1845), Agnes (b.1847) and John Amos (b.1849). He was probably the George from Hawick who is recorded at ‘Killochyett’ in Stow in 1851, with wife Catherine Hogg and children Robert, Agnes and John. He was probably son of Robert, who was a dyer living on Tannage Close. George (19th C.) married Sarah Paterson in Southdean in 1848. George (19th C.) married Agnes Purdom in 1849, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. George Elliot (1833–75) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He worked for the City of Glasgow Bank. He married Margaret Wood (1832–1913), of the Wilton family, and their son William Elliot (1868–1950) became a chemist. George (b.1834/5) originally from Greenock, he is recorded as a ‘Boot Closer’ at 9 Howegate in 1861. His mother-in-law Agnes ‘Blackie’ (from Salton, East Lothian) was also living with him in 1861. He married Sarah Black in 1857 in Hawick. Their children included: Maxwell (b.1857/8); William (b.1859/60); and George (b.1861). George Murray (1846–1924) son of George, partner of Wilson & Glenny’s, being a Director until he retired in 1896. He was taught for several years at the Subscription Rooms, for a while under James A.H. Murray. He describes Murray as ‘a cold, conceited man of great ability and indefatigable perseverance, but very narrow in his views, and vain of success’: one story is described about how he was dared to put a ‘cracker squib’ in the stove, after which Murray went door to door to all the parents until he found out who did it. He jointly (along with his brother Charles John, and their partner James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town for a while under James A.H. Murray. He describes Murray as ‘a cold, conceited man of great ability and indefatigable perseverance, but very narrow in his views, and vain of success’: one story is described about how he was dared to put a ‘cracker squib’ in the stove, after which Murray went door to door to all the parents until he found out who did it. He jointly (along with his brother Charles John, and their partner James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He was one of the early tennis enthusiasts in the town. He translated ‘Practical Perspective applied to Artistic and Industrial Design’ from the French in 1886. Later in life he lived at Dale End, Grasmere. He married late in life and had a daughter, Evelyn. George (1854–1923) son of stockingmaker George and Helen Scott. It was said that his forename went back at least 5 generations before him. He spent some time in Selkirk, where he was a joiner. He later lived worked as a janitor at the High School. He lived at 1 Slitrig Place, 8 Gladstone Street, 23 Beaconsfield Terrace, 45 High Street and 13 Yarrow Terrace. In 1877 in Wilton he married Janet (1855–1920), daughter of Johnston Nichol, who was born in Warwickshire. Their children were: George (1877–1952); Johnstone Nichol (1880–1948), who emigrated to Australia; Helen (or ‘Nellie’, 1886–1914), who married Robert Campbell; and Walter (1891–1950), who died in Hawick. George (1855–95) printer in Hawick, he was involved with local cricket from its earliest days, playing for Hawick and Wilton for several years, often as wicket-keeper, and being Honorary Secretary. He was also involved with other sporting clubs in the town. He was on the original Hawick R.F.C. committee, playing in the very first match, being a team regular for 9 years and Honorary Secretary for many years after that. He scored the winning try in the 1879 game against Melrose, probably the first to be played in Hawick under electric light. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery with a large monument erected over his grave by members of the Hawick Rugby Football Club. George of Langheugh (19th/20th C.) one of long line of Georges, son of the joiner and janitor. He was a yarn merchant of George Wilson & Sons (who were successors to William Laidlaw & Sons). His son George was Cornet in 1932 and his daughter Netta was Cornet’s Lass in 1936. George Heron, C.B.E. (1868–1959) grandson of Hawick’s first Provost, and elder son of Charles John. He was born at Ormiston, educated at Kirkton School, George Watson’s and in Switzerland and London. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1885/6 season. He was a founder of the Harriers and the Tennis Club, and a keen golfer. He became a junior partner in Wilson & Glenny in 1885, and was Managing Director after it became a private limited company. He taught a French class for businessmen at his own expense, entered the Council in 1901, was elected a Magistrate and was also on many Council committees. He served as Deputy Controller of the Priority Department of the Ministry of Munitions. He became the first Provost when the Council reconstituted after WWI, serving 1919–22. His Provostship saw the War Memorial erected (he was Chairman of the War Memorial Committee), the sewage works extended and other improvements. He gifted the crimson robes, trimmed with ermine, for use of the 4 Burgh Magistrates. He was J.P. from 1912 and Chairman of the County National Health Insurance Committee, as well as member of various education committees, and he gifted Kilmeny to the Education Authority in 1929, for use as a hostel for girls from rural areas attending Hawick High School. He ran a French language course for young men in Hawick at his own expense. He helped the Common Riding Committee purchase the Volunteer Park, and gave money for tennis courts near the High School, as well as establishing the George Heron Wilson Bequest Fund. He entered the Ministry of Munitions in 1915, becoming Section Leader and then Deputy Controller, as well as being member of the Special Wages Arbitration Court, for which services he received the C.B.E. He married Julia Tod of Leith in 1902. He left Hawick in 1924 to live at Orchard near East Grinstead, where he became involved in the local council and educational committees. George Lithgow ‘Jinglin Geordie’ (d.1940) United Free Church minister at Cullen and then Cardenden in Fife. He came to Newcastle to minister of the South Church in 1930, taking on the combined charge (with the Park Kirk) in 1934. His nickname came from his enthusiasm for playing the piano. His daughter Margaret Fairley Callan was a teacher. He died on a train at Riccarton Junction. Gideon (18th C.) shepherd in Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes. He was herds at Town o’ Rule in 1751 when one of his children was baptised; his other children were baptised in Bedrule. His children included: Betty (b.1751); Helen (b.1754); Isabel (b.1756); George (b.1759); and James (b.1764). Gideon (19th/20th C.) Hawick tweed and hosiery manufacturer. He had the house Almonte built for him on Braid Road in 1893, but sold it to Thomas Elliot Rutherford in 1901. He is probably the Gideon who was involved with Wauchope Mills in Langholm. He took part in the inaugural competition for the 6-hole golf course that existed for a while at Moss-paul. Henry (b.c.1810) smith in Hawick, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory at the Sandbed. He was recorded at ‘Sandbed bridge end’ on the 1841 census. He helped James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) to make some stocking frames. He married Helen Wintrop in Wilton in 1829. Their children included James, Thomas, Walter and Henry. Isabell (d.1799) resident of Hawick Parish. In her death record of 1799 she is ‘sister to Jane & Nelly’. These were the names of daughter of Peter Wilson, but would surely have been too young at the time; it seems likely these were daughters of a onceprominent deceased Wilson. Isabella (1800–76) daughter of manufacturer William. Like most of her siblings, she attended Hawick Grammar School and at the age of 10 went to a Quaker School in Ackworth. A needlework sampler of hers from 1814 is in the Museum. After the death of her mother, she and her sister Katherine helped care for their younger siblings. In about 1824 she and Katherine joined their brothers William and James in London. She returned to Hawick when her father’s health declined and she was active in gathering local support for a petition against slavery. In Hawick in 1837 she married Andrew Galloway Hunter, a hat manufacturer from Glasgow, where she spent much of the rest of her life. Marrying outside her faith, she was rejected by the Quakers. She was also involved in the Dorcas Society (providing clothing for the poor) and visiting prisons. Her children were: Andrew George Hunter (b.1838); Sir William Wilson Hunter (b.1840), historian and Indian scholar; and James (b.1841). She took lessons in Latin and Greek so that she could educate her sons at home. In later life it was said that those who knew her ‘were impressed by her stately mein and coronet of snow-white locks’, with ‘a measure of the old-world courtesy, the culture, and the high sense of duty which shine so brightly in the followers of William Penn’. She died at Deanburn Villa, Denholm and was buried in Cavers Kirkyard. A photograph exists of her, aged 60. Isabella (19th C.) milliner on the Howe-gate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was daughter of baker Walter. In 1851 she was living with her widowed mother and several siblings at about 10 Howegate. James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 in complaints made by the Lord of Gilsland about raids into England by Elliots, Nixons and others. His name is given as ‘Rytche James Wylson’, which could mean he was James, son of Richard. James (17th/18th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also at Mabonlaw in 1710, 1713, 1715 and 1723 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1710); Marion (b.1713); Jean (b.1715); and James (b.1723). James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He is probably the carrier listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same James is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Marion Scott and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1701. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who could be theirs, include Margaret (b.1692) and James (b.1700). The same carrier appears to have secondly married Helen Murray (also from Hawick Parish) in 1709 and had a daughter Margaret (b.1712), as well as perhaps sons John (b.1710) and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1701 were tailor Robert (who may therefore have been his brother or other close relative) and carrier Robert Robson and in 1712 were merchant Robert Robson and tailor Robert again. James (17th C.) resident at Huntlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded in 1708 as servitor at Horsleyhill when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Briggs. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Kirkton’ farm. His son Robert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1719. James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk, recorded there in 1719 and 1724. He married Elizabeth Douglas and their children included: Alexander (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1724); and William (b.1727). James ‘the Baron’ (1687–1774) son of tailor John and Bessie Beattie. He was said to be one of 2 sons of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time, the other probably being William. He was born at Whitcheusters, where the family may have resided for a long time. He was a farmer and carrier in Kirkton and later a carrier in Hawick. He is probably the Hawick carrier who witnessed a baptism for workman William Nichol in 1742. He married Isabella Blyth (1692–1747), daughter of James and they had 5 children: William (1713–91), ‘Whusky Wullie’; Anne (b.1727); James (twin with Anne, but died young); James (b.1730); and Beatrice (b.1735). He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In the 1791 death record of his son James, he is listed as ‘the old Baron’. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1737 he was recorded at ‘Mains’, which was presumably Cavers Mains. His children, baptised in Cavers, probably included William (b.1734), Thomas (b.1737), Archibald (b.1740), Charles (b.1743) and James (b.1746). James (18th C.) tanner in Hawick, also recorded as a carrier. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Robert (b.1739); Bessie (b.1740); Margaret (b.1744); Helen (b.1744); John (b.1745); Adam (b.1745); Janet (b.1747); and Robert (again, b.1757). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were the whole congregation. He may have been related to the tanners and candlemakers of about the same time, John and Walter. He may be the ‘carrier’ (or perhaps ‘currier’) James who witnessed a baptism (along with weaver John) for shoemaker Robert Elliot in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1743 when his marriage to Catherine ‘Mabane’ was announced in Melrose Parish, with Thomas Vair as cautioner. James (b.1730) son of carrier James and Isobel Blyth. He had 3 sons, George, James and William, all of whom were carriers. It is possible he was the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for carrier George (perhaps his brother) in 1767. James ‘Craft’ (d.bef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1763 and their children included Walter (b.1764). He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine in 1764. His wife died in Hawick in 1811, when his nickname is recorded (but it is unclear what it meant). James (18th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1781 when his daughter Emily was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may have been living at a farm in Hawick Parish close to the boundary with Robertson. His daughter’s name is uncommon for that time. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. Dr. James (d.c.1800) surgeon in Hawick, said to be from Otterburn originally. He probably lived on the south side of the High Street, since during the great flood of 1767 it is said that the Backdamgate flooded ‘as far as Doctor Wilson’s cross-head’. Hawick printer, postmaster and Bailie, Robert Armstrong, was an apprentice with him. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster James Inglis and in 1775 (along with James Inglis) he witnessed a baptism for ‘Town Clerk John Gledstains. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. In 1780 he (along with Bailie John) witnessed a baptism for George Haliburton and Betty Wilson (who might have been related to him). He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. He was a bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant; he continued to pay in 1788–91, and paid the lower rate for a ‘bachelor servant’. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. About 1799 he is recorded contributing money to the war against France. His unnamed daughter is recorded dying in 1801 in the Parish records, by which time he was already deceased. He is recorded as an owner of ‘Part of Particot Lands of Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although probably dead long before then); by about 1874 the lands were recorded being owned by feuars. He may be the ‘Dr Wilson’ recorded on Wood’s 1824 map (even although deceased by then) as owner of lands where Melgund Place and the southern side of Brougham Place were built, and also of a plot of land on what would become Allars Bank, as well as the property at 22 High Street. James of Otterburn, listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 may have been related. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton and Hawick Parishes, recorded at Damside in 1780. He married Margaret Miller and their children included: George (b.1780), baptised in Wilton; and Isabel (b.1782), Robert (b.1784), George (b.1788) and Elizabeth (b.1790), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1780 were George and James Wilson (who were surely relatives, perhaps the carriers). James (18th C.) hat manufacturer of James Wilson & Co., Hawick. There is a record of a grant of £10 being awarded to the company by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1785. By 1787 he was carrying on the business on his own, rather than in a partnership. He is recorded as a hatter in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–92. He should not be confused with the later hat manufacturer (and economist) of the same name; it is unclear if he had any link to the manufacturing Wilsons. He may have married Isabella Newberry and had children Ann (b.1787), James (b.1789), Francis (b.1791) and Mary. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at West Highcesters in 1792. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Roberton in 1792 and their son Thomas was baptised in that year. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bebes, recorded as owner of no fewer than 14 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) horse-dealer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same John was blacksmith in Denholm on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James ‘the Bean’ (1747–1821) clock and watchmaker, son of William (‘Whusky Wullie’). He was known as the leader of Hawick fashion in the mid-to-late-18th century. He was Cornet in 1781 and was also Dean of Guild. In 1778 4 of his silver watches were reported as part of goods stolen from the coach office at the Bull and Mouth Inn, near Birmingham. He is recorded as ‘clockmaker’ when he (along with his father William) witnessed a baptism for his brother Peter in 1779. He is probably the James of Hawick described as a watchmaker when he took out fire insurance in London in 1781. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is said to have been standing at his new shop door when ‘Blinnd Wullie’ Craw passed, and asked him to make a poem about his new house, whereupon he replied ‘A certain one has built a house, Whose fortune it was low, A wooden cornice he put on – I mean the charming Beau’. In 1783 he married Janet Gibson of Cardrona, Peeblesshire, and she died in 1839, aged 76. Their children were: Peggy (or Margaret, b.1784); Mary (b.1787); Nancy (or Agnes); and Hardie James (b.1797). James (b.c.1770s) son of skinner John. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia in 1797; his name appears again in 1798 when he was listed among those men who paid £10 to avoid serving. In 1799 he was listed on the ballot in place of Ebenezer Scott in Burnflat, but was found unfit for service and was still on the list in 1801. He could be the James, son of John and Margaret Waugh, born in Hawick in 1776. His sons Thomas and Robert died in 1808 and 1810, with his wife Lizzy Reid also dying in 1810. James (b.1762/3–1843) originally from England, he was a road surveyor living at Ovenshank in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835–41 and was there on the 1841 census. He married Margaret Foster, who died in 1853, aged 56. Their children included: Andrew (1812/3–74), also a road surveyor; Helen; and Jane. The family are buried at Ettleton. James (c.1770–1831) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1789–91. He was recorded with his brothers as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 2 horses. He also served as Town Herd. He is probably the carrier who is listed on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1799 and still on the list in 1801 (unless there was a second generation here). He may be the James who, along with William, witnessed 5 baptisms for carrier George in the 1790s. He is probably the carrier James whose son William died in Hawick in 1840. James (b.c.1770s) labourer at Coldhouse according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. It is possible he was the James who married Margaret Nichol and had children Nelly (b.1798) and Betty (b.1800) baptised in Wilton Parish. He could be the 77-year-old ‘Pauper (Formerly Ag. Lab.)’ from Wilton living with his grandson James at Baittings in Crailing Parish in 1851. James (b.c.1770s) recorded as journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. James (1797–1862) Hawick Town Clerk. He was the youngest son of shoemaker Peter and his brothers included shoemaker William, candlemaker John (‘the Dip’) and manufacturers Peter and Thomas. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) and bank agent in Hawick. He was listed as a writer in Hawick on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). He is probably the James recorded as writer and notary on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His premises were probably one of those marked ‘Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. A letter to him is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as writer, and agent for the National Bank of Scotland as well as agent for Caledonian fire insurance and Standard life insurance; he was at that time on Buccleuch Street. In 1852 he was agent for both Caledonian and Standard insurance companies. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1841–62 and may also have been a Councillor. He wrote ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) and ‘Hawick and its old Memories’ (1858, also known as ‘Memories of Hawick’), which were compiled from Burgh and Parish records; these form an invaluable record of the early history of Hawick, with his detailed insight and interpretation being crucially important. However, he probably did a disservice to the Town by suggesting that the 1537 Charter may have represented the original granting of Hawick’s Common. Additionally, he sided very clearly with those who caused Hawick to lose part of the Common in the Division of 1777, and he was not a great fan of the Common Riding, describing it as ‘now a mere pageant for the enjoyment of youth’. Despite this, for many years until 1859 he headed the Procession to the Moor, and called the Burgess Roll. He also produced a very useful register of deaths for the period 1825–62. His legal office was at 5 Buccleuch Street. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his unmarried sisters Agnes and Jane (or Janet). In 1851 he is listed as Procurator before the Sheriff Court of Roxburghshire. He may be the Liberal supporter who was mentioned in connection with the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, specific because of buying property in Selkirkshire in order to vote there. He traced an extended family tree for the local Wilsons. He appears to have died unmarried. A portrait of him exists. James (b.1798/9) horse-keeper on the High Street, listed on the 1851 census. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Reid’s Close, which was at about 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Elizabeth, Archibald and Janet (b.1827/8). He was a widower by 1861. James (b.c.1800) from Castle Douglas, he was a blacksmith on the High Street. In 1841 he was living at about No. 75 with his wife Janet and children Andrew, James (frame-worker) and Adam. By 1861 he was a widower, living with his son James at 7 Kirkwynd. He is probably the same James who was blacksmith on Walter’s Wynd; was said that James (‘Teribus’) Hogg had a ‘double-decker’ frame made on his anvil. He may have been related to Henry, who was also a smith in Hawick. James (b.1800/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. It seems likely that he was related to Robert ‘Lurgie’, who came from there. He married Isabel Elliot, and their children: included John (b.1847); Mary (b.1850); Janet (b.1852); Matthew (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1862); and Andrew (b.1866). Their children were born in Cavers, Kirkton and Teviothead Parishes. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Peelbraehope in 1841 with Margaret (probably his mother). James (1805–1860) politician and economist, born in Hawick. Third son of manufacturer William (of a family of 15), he was educated in Quaker schools at Ackworth and Earlscombe. However, he returned to Hawick at the age of 16 to be apprenticed to a hat manufacturer, apparently frustrated that Quaker beliefs prevented him from pursuing a legal career. With his brother William they took over the business (purchased for them by their father), which prospered in Hawick, and did even better when they moved it to London in 1824. The company was called Wilson, Irwin & Wilson, but in 1831 became James Wilson & Co. After some financial troubles (including disastrously speculating in indigo) he retired from business in 1844. He then speculated in indigo, and lost almost all his money, but avoided bankruptcy and eventually recovered. Meanwhile he wrote essays against the Corn Laws, in favour of free trade and on fiscal policy, establishing a reputation as a political campaigner. He established ‘The Economist’ magazine in 1843, writing most of it himself for the first few years. It was established on the principle of stimulating ‘every man who has a stake in the country...to investigate and learn for himself’ about public affairs. He became a Liberal M.P. first in 1847, and was financial secretary to the Treasury then turned down an appointment as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He was also nominated as Governor of Victoria, Australia, but this was blocked by the Queen, because his ‘position and status’ were not deemed high enough. Thus snubbed he almost resigned from politics, but stayed on to become Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He later accepted a position as financial member of the Council of India (effectively India’s Chancellor of the Exchequer), which meant resigning his parliamentary seat. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1859. Later in 1859 he travelled to India, where he quickly adapted to life there, learning the ropes rapidly, and doing much to reform Indian finance. However, he died of dysentery there. In 1831 he married Elizabeth Preston (who died in 1886), after converting to the Church of England. They had 6 daughters, all of whom were later joint proprietors of the Economist: Eliza, married Walter Bagehot, whose romantic correspondence was later published; Julia, married William Rathbone Greg; Matilda, married Matthew Horan; Zenobia, married Orby Shipley; Sophie Victoria, married William Halsey; and Emilie Isabel, who married Russell Barrington and wrote a biography of her father. His daughter Emilie wrote the biography ‘The Servant of All’ (1927). He is buried in the Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. There is a bust of him in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. A full-size marble statue of him by acclaimed sculptor John Steell, started off in Calcutta, then stood inside the Economist’s offices at 25 St. James’s Street in London, but was relocated onto Drumlanrig Bridge in 2017 (then after being damaged, was moved to the Heritage Hub). Another statue is inside the Standard Chartered Bank in Hong Kong. A copy of his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by John Watson-Gordon) and in 2005 a plaque was placed at 11 High Street, his probable birth place. The Museum also has a bust of him. James (b.c.1805) stockingmaker living on Damside in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Alexander (b.1837/8) and William (b.1839/40). He may be the James, married to Eliza Miller, whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Wilton in 1842. James (b.1817/8) woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 1 Allars Crescent and in 1861 at 4 Teviot Crescent. He married Margaret Renwick and their children included: Robert (b.1846), who was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk: James (b.1848/9); Jessie (b.1851); Jemima (b.1852/3); and Benjamin H. (b.1861). James (b.1823/4) hosier worker in Hawick. In 1851 he was a ‘Hosiery Dresser’ at about 4 Silver Street and in 1861 was a ‘Woollen Hosiery Finisher’ at 4 Backdamgate. He married Janet Deans and their children, mostly baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included William (b.1846), Robert Deans (b.1848), Robert Deans (again, b.1850), Frances D. (b.1853), George (b.1855/6) and Helen R.S. (b.1857/8). James (19th C.) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s.
boarding house on Walter’s Wynd. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1690 when she leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town from Scott of Buccleuch. She was probably a widow of the previous farmer, but it is unclear if Wilson was her maiden or married name. She was also tenant in 1691 and 1692, and may have been related to Andrew Wilson who also leased part of Branxholme Town then. Her name does not appear again after that, and so either she died, or other family members took over farming. Joan (1827–1910) daughter of shoemaker William. In 1851 she was living with her step-mother Isabella at about 1 Buccleuch Place. In 1861 she was a ‘Milliner & House Proprietor’, living at 1 Green Wynd (probably the same location), with her sister Agnes and old family servant Esther Reid. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hartwoodmyris’ (i.e. Hartwoodmyres) in 1494/5. He contributed goods the itinerant court held in Selkirk, his surety being John Murray of Hangingshaw. John (16th C.) recorded on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (16th C.) recorded in Wester Phaup in Ettrick in 1580, when he had an agreement over borrowing money from James Stewart in Tinnis. John (16th C.) recorded in Thirlstane in 1581, when he was recorded as witness to a sasine for the lands of Thirlstane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. John (d.1602) shepherd at Hallrule. In November 1602 he was working for Alexander, Lord Home, who had received all of the former lands of Hector Turnbull of Barnhill. A group of 20 Armstrongs, Elliots and others, led by Simon Armstrong of Whitaugh came to the farm ‘all armed with hagbuts, pistols, lances and other weapons’ and attacked him while he was sleeping, ‘cutit af frome him his richt fute, woundit him in his heid and divers utheris woundis in his body’, leading to his death. they also drove off about 120 sheep, dividing them up at Whitaugh in Liddesdale. The Privy Council denounced all the attackers as rebels and ordered Home to take their sheep or goods in recompense. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Waugh and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1636. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who in 1651 witnessed baptisms for William Thomson and for John Renwick and in 1652 for George Henderson. Perhaps the same John had children Alexander (b.1643), John (b.1646) and Janet (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or Marion) Scott and their children included Marion (b.1646), William (b.1651) and William (again, b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were James Scott and Walter Riddell. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Allan and their children included: Andrew (b.1683); and Margaret (b.1686). It is possible that Walter (b.1692), with no mother’s name listed, was also his child. John (17th C.) tenant in Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the later John at Whithope. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He is probably the tailor recorded at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The later tailor (in Newbigging) of the same name was probably his son. He witnessed a baptism for his son John in 1713; he was then described as ‘taylor called old John’. His wife was Bessie ‘Betie’ (i.e. Beattie) and their children included: Agnes (b.1678); Bessie (b.1680), who married John Nichol in 1708; Janet (b.1682); John (b.1685), also a tailor at Newbigging and Whitchesters; and James (b.1687). Baptismal witnesses were Robert Scott, ‘Glack’ and Walter Henderson in 1678, Robert Scott in Barn Knowe and John Martin in 1680, Walter Scott of Altoncroft and John Scott in 1682, and John Stewart and William Riddell in 1687. It is unclear whether or not he was the Army Sergeant during the reign of Queen Anne, who had 2 sons (possibly James and William), who were said to be progenitors of many of the local Wilsons. He could be the John Wilson who enlisted as an ensign in the Coldstream Guards in 1688/9. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included John (b.1691) and Archibald (b.1717). John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Newbigging in Hawick Parish, probably related to the earlier tailor of the same name (perhaps his son). In 1708 he was tailor at Newbigging when he witnessed baptisms for John Dryden, smith at Newmill and for dyker William Pearson. In 1713 he was ‘younger and Taylor in Whitchesters’ when one of his children was baptised. He was still ‘younger’ in 1716. However, in 1722 he was listed as ‘Eggman in Hawick’ and as ‘Eggman’ in 1725, suggesting he had 2 occupations. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: James (b.1711); John (b.1713); John (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Bessie (b.1722); and Christian (b.1725). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott and Robert Davidson in Newbigging, in 1713 were Alexander Thomson (tenant at Whitchesters) and John Wilson (‘taylor called old John’, his father), in 1716 were John Dalgleish and William Turnbull (both from Alton Croft), in 1722 were Walter Scott (servant to the Minister) and Beadle John Scott, and in 1725 were Bailie George Martin and Elder John Glendinning. John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town. He could be the son of Walter, who was recorded at Branxholme Town in 1694. He was at Branxholme Town from at least 1702. He was recorded being in arrears at Branxholme Town in the period 1712–17. During that time he was renting 1/5 of the farm along with Walter Craw. In 1723 he was tenant in Branxholme Town (along with John Craw, also tenant) when he witnessed a baptism for James craw in Branxholme Town. He was also tenant there in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Helen (perhaps his daughter). In 1725 he was renting 3/5 along with Robert and Walter Scoon and 1/5 with Walter Craw. He was still recorded as farmer of part of Branxholme Town in 1735 and was in arrears for rent there in 1742. In 1699 he married Margaret Crow, who died around 1739. Their children included: Helen (b.1702), perhaps the Helen who married John Scott in 1724; William (b.1705), who may have emigrated; and Walter (b.1712), ‘Haunless Wat’. He may be the carrier who witnessed a baptism at Branxholme in 1747. The baptism in 1702 was witnessed by merchant Walter, who was surely related, as well as by merchant Walter Oliver. The 1712 baptism was witnessed by Bailes Walter Elliot and James Burn. James (b.1711), baptised in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. He is said to have had 2 of his horses requisitioned by Bonnie Prince Charlie’s army in 1745, to carry baggage as far as Carlisle. John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh in 1716. His daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick (although he was living in Cavers Parish) in 1716. The witnesses were the same as for the other baptism that day. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his included Margaret (b.1710), Francis (b.1714), Archibald (b.1717) and Ann (b.1720). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at East Highchesters in 1714, Highchesters in 1716 and 1718 and East Highchesters in 1720. Perhaps the same John was at Whithope in 1722. His children probably included: Agnes (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); William (b.1718); James (b.1720); and Janet and Jean (b.1722). He is probably the John who married Janet Laidlaw in Roberton in 1713. Perhaps the same John also married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1707. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Dalglish and their children included Walter (b.1719); and John (b.1722), mother recorded as ‘Bessie Dalgliss’. Adam (b.1727), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his son. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Irvine in langlands in 1722 and another (along with Robert) for Walter Douglas, weaver in Hawick. He may be the servitor of Rev. William Crawford, minister of Wilton, who in 1723 accused a Selkirk couple of stealing ‘a new cloth coat with other linen’. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1736. John ‘Light Pack’ (18th C.) son of (probably) William, elder son of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time. He was a weaver and married Margaret Elliot. Their sons John and Walter both worked as tanners and candlemakers; neither of these sons have surviving baptism records. They also had daughters Margaret (b.1746), Janet (b.1756) and Margaret (again, b.1759). It is possible that his wife was the ‘Peggy Wilson, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the weaver John who (along with currier James) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot in 1765.

Note that there was a later John, also married to a Margaret Elliot, which can confuse the Wilson genealogies in Hawick. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Janet (b.1758). Bailie John (18th C.) Hawick baker who was a Bailie in 1772. He could be the John who paid to have the Parish ‘mortcloth’ for a child’s burial in 1773. He may be the John who was one of the Bailies during the disturbances in Hawick involving clashes with the ‘Patriots’ in about 1778. He is recorded as Bailie John in 1780 when (along with Dr. James) witnessed a baptism for George Haliburton and Bessie Wilson (who may have been related). He is probably the ex-Bailie John who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk John Gledstains in 1781. He may be the John who leased Pilmuir farm in 1787. He could be the John whose daughter Jean died in 1781. He may have been related to the later John (b.1771/2), married to Janet Armstrong, who had children in Hawick in the period 1795–1812. John (18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the late 1700s. He was a second cousin of shoemaker Peter, and probably a descendant of the William who resided at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) skinner in Hawick Parish. His sister Betty died in Hawick in 1800. He could be the son of tanner James and Janet Elliot baptised in Hawick in 1745. He married Margaret Waugh and their children included James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778), Jane (b.1780), Mary (b.1782), Thomas (b.1784) and Robert (b.1786). He could be the skinner whose shoemaker son James was among the Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797. John (18th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1786 when his son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. It seems likely he was related (perhaps brother) of Charles, and hence potentially uncle of Robert ‘Lurgie’, the Hawick historian. Margaret (b.1783), also baptised in Hobkirk, was probably also his child. John (18th C.) gardener in Cavers. He was recorded there in 1779 and 1781, and was also at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas of Cavers. His children included: John (b.1779); and Alexander (b.1781). It is also possible that he is the John whose unnamed child was baptised in cavers Parish in 1765. John (18th C.) stable servant and gamekeeper at Larriston in 1794, when he was working for William Oliver. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Skelfhill. He paid tax in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to Walter, who was shepherd at Priesthaugh. John (1752/3–1828) of Hallrule, local farmer. He purchased Hallrule in about 1803 and built the main house there. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of the east part of Outer Hallrule, as well as 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule. He was stated by the local minister in 1836 as being one of those responsible for land improvements in Hobkirk Parish. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s churchyard in Edinburgh along with his youngest daughter, Barbara. His lands were later owned by Sir William A.F. Elliott of Stobs. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Amos in 1781 (although his name is incorrectly recorded as ‘James’). Their children included Andrew (b.1781), Janet (b.1783), William (b.1785) and James (b.1787). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’) Irvine, also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1794); Isabel (b.1796); Thomas (b.1799); Walter (b.1801), wool-sorter in Hawick; Andrew (b.1803); and William (b.1805), frame-worker in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton Lodge in 1805 when his son George died. He may have been a gardener or other employee of the estate. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Burnfoot on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same John was at Deanfoot in Minto Parish on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned no less than 13 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. His son Andrew was on the Militia ballot for Minto Parish in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope in 1797 according to the Dog Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. John (b.c.1778) born in Cluny Parish, Perthshire. He was a tailor by trade. He deserted from the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Light Dragoons in Hawick in 1799, having probably had his name drawn by ballot. He could be the son of John born in Cluny in 1776. John (b.c.1770s) servant at New Woll according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included: William (b.1802); and Thomas (b.1810). He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Brydon and their children included: Charles (b.1811); Margaret(b.1813); and Jessy (b.1819). John (d.1828) son of John and Margaret Elliot and brother of Walter. Both brothers worked as tanners and later became candlemakers. He was a candlemaker and Chief Magistrate in the 1820s. He is recorded as Bailie in 1828 when the Slitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was widened. He was also Cornet in 1812 and there is a portrait of him in Cornet’s dress; he is likely to be the first Cornet of whom we have an image. He is probably the candlemaker of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetic Museum’ in 1784. His premises were on the Howegate (according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He may have been the John who was a founder member of the Wisp Club in 1826. Note that he is easily confused with another candlemaker of the same name (‘the Dip’), who lived in Hawick at the same time (although a little younger) and to whom he was related. John ‘Tufty’ (b.c.1780) Hawick Burgh Officer and drummer in the early part of the 19th century, being Halberdier along with William Turnbull (‘Wull the Bellman’) and for a while with Sandy Bryson. He may be the same John who is described as an auctioneer and Sheriff Officer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is recorded as ‘sheriff officer’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. It is unclear which other Wilsons he was related to. He is recorded as an ‘Officer’ on the Howegate in the 1841 census, living along with his wife Janet at about No. 18. He was known for being a law unto himself, and as a terroriser of evil-doers – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’ [HI]. John (1771/2–1838) baker in Hawick and later Carlisle. He may have been related to the slightly earlier baker of the same name who was a Bailie. He was recorded as baker on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1799. In 1794 in Wilton Parish he married Janet, daughter of William Armstrong, Schoolmaster in Hobkirk. Their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Ann (b.1801); James (b.1802); James (again, b.1803); Jean (or Jane, 1805–76), who died in Jedburgh; Elizabeth (b.1807); William (b.1809); and Janet (b.1812). The birth of Ann is crossed out in the Parish Records for 1802, with witnesses Robert Armstrong, printer (his brother-in-law) and Robert Tinlin, Church Officer. The witnesses in 1795 were Thomas Scott and Robert Stewart, in 1801 were Robert Armstrong and Robert Tinlin, in 1803, 1805 and 1807 were Robert Armstrong and George Gray and in 1809 were Bailie James Elliot and Robert Armstrong. He is probably the baker John whose unnamed child died in 1797 and whose daughter Anne died in Hawick in 1810. He witnessed a baptism for William Brown in 1801 and baptisms for his brother-in-law Robert Armstrong in 1802 and 1805. After all his children were born he moved to Carlisle, where he ran a bakery and corn-dealers on Scotch Street. He was listed as a baker in Carlisle on the list of subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). After his death his Carlisle bakery was continued by his son William and then his daughter Jane. Some of his children were mentioned in the will of Elizabeth Waldie, widow of Bailie Robert Armstrong, his wife’s brother. He died in Carlisle and his wife followed in 1847 at the age of 82.

John ‘the Dip’ (1783–1857) son of shoemaker Peter. His brothers included hosiery manufacturers Peter and Thomas, as well as Town Clerk James. He was also a distant relative of the other candlemaker John. He himself was a candlemaker and grocer. He was recorded as son of shoemaker Peter on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as a seedsman in 1837, as well as a candlemaker on the Howegate. He is probably the grocer recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Probably the same man is additionally listed as a general and tar merchant on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in 1841 (at about 6 Howegate) and by 1851 was a widower who was a ‘Proprietor of houses and land’ on Buccleuch Street. He is the Mr. John of Buccleuch Street listed among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1818 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Elliot of Goldielands (making this couple have the same names as the earlier John ‘Light Pack’ and his wife). Their children included Adam (b.1827), farmer at Midshiels, and Agnes (b.1833). He died at Midshiels. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum.

John (1785–1854) reviewer and essayist, born in Paisley, but settled in Edinburgh, where he became Professor of Moral Philosophy. He was a leader in the city’s literary society, where he also wrote bold articles under the pseudonym ‘Christopher North’. He was a great help to Henry Scott Riddell when he was at Edinburgh University, giving him the run of his house, and apparently refusing the standard fee from Riddell. He supposedly once stayed in a lodging-house in Mill Port along with a band of travelling gypsies. He was said to have visited Denholm Dean, where he read Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’. His grand-daughter Mary married William Aitchison of Brieryhill. His portrait, by John Watson Gordon, is in Hawick Museum. In 1862, Mrs. Gordon published ‘Christopher North, A Memoir of John Wilson, Late Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh’. John (b.c.1790) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and on the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella, and their children included Walter, Margaret and James. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shankend and then at Wauchope Common. He is recorded as shepherd at Wauchope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be related to the John who was shepherd at Shankend and Hawklaw several decades later. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Henry was baptised in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Agnes Hume and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1824.
Anne Hope, who was from Canonbie and was a grand-niece of Mungo Park. The family were living at about 1 Whitchester Lane, Newcastle in 1841, at Wilton Kirkstyle in 1851 and on Langlands Place in Wilton in 1861. Their children included: Anne (b.1827); George (b.1829/30); John (b.1830/1); Mary (b.1832/3); Helen (b.1838/9); William (b.1840/1); and Thomas (b.1843/4). His wife survived him and their 9 children and moved to her grand-daughter’s house in Selkirk, where she died in 1903 at the age of 95. John Mackay (1804–35) Scottish writer, particularly known for his 6 volume ‘Tales of the Borders’. Born in Duns, he was brought up in Tweedmouth and apprenticed with a printer in Berwick. He spent time in Edinburgh and London trying to secure employment, and was eventually hired to the staff of the Literary Journal in Edinburgh. He published poetry and other literary and dramatic work (including ‘The Gowrie Conspiracy’ and ‘Margaret of Anjou’), and travelled to give lectures. In 1832 he became editor of the Berwick Advertiser. He was an advocate for the abolition of slavery, for a national education system and for free trade. He began to publish his ‘Tales’ in the Advertiser, and they were successful enough that they were printed in weekly segments, circulation growing dramatically. However, within a year of the first volume being completed he was dead (perhaps as a result of alcoholism). Further volumes were printed in Edinburgh, on behalf of his widow, with many contemporary writers (including his brother) contributing chapters. In all, 6 volumes were published (with more added in later editions), covering a wide range of historical characters associated with both sides of the Border. The tales included many pieces of dialogue in dialect, which (even if imperfect) are a valuable record of vocabulary and modes of speech from the early 19th century. He is buried at Tweedmouth. John (b.1805/6) frame-worker in Wilton, born in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Gib’s Nose. His wife was Elizabeth (from Tranent, East Lothian) and their children included Elizabeth and William (both born in Midlothian). John G. of Ladylaw (1806–86) son of manufacturer William and older brother of Provost George. He spent 3 years in a Quaker school at Ackworth in Yorkshire, which is said to have broken him of his Hawick vernacular. After returning to Hawick he worked for the family firm. In about 1835 he decided to start manufacturing flannel from Cheviot wool and so went to Rochdale to spend some time there working as a weaver, starting some looms back in Hawick. He also brought back to Hawick several weavers from the Rochdale area, including Robert Greenwood, James Kershaw, Edward Dearden, Bill Peacock and Bill Shaw, as well as finishers, such as Bill Whitehead and Jim Nuttall. After the firm of William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851, he took over the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and had Langlands Mill built adjacent to it. He carried on both hosiery and tweed manufacturing. He also built Ladylaw House, the first home in what is now Sunnyhill. He was listed on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was living at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed 190 people. According to the Land Tax Rolls he owned a large fraction of the former lands of Roughheugh. He may be the Wilson recorded in about 1874 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He is also listed as owner of half of the part of Roughheugh previously belonging to the Eastons, and the part once owned by William Robertson. He married at least twice, in 1838 to Margaret Scott (1810–51) and in 1863 to Elizabeth Thomson (sister of Rev. Adam Thomson). He may also have married Jeannie Laidlaw. His children included: William Richard (b.1839), also a manufacturer; Annie (b.1840), who married Simon Graham; Frank (1845–88); Elizabeth; Maggie (b.1845), who married George Walker; and Mary (b.1851). A portrait of him exists as a young man. John (b.1811) son of Richard and Agnes Weir. He was church officer in Ashkirk in 1858, serving like several generations of his family before him. John (19th C.) married Christian Rutherford in Hawick in 1836. John Fiddes (b.1813) son of Thomas and Margaret Fiddes (whose sister Janet married David Laing). He became a wool merchant and lived at Leaburn. He acted as standard bearer for the 1832 celebratory procession for the passing of the Reform Bill. He was recorded along with skinner Walter (probably his brother) as joint proprietor of houses on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was recorded as a farmer living at 1 Teviot Crescent with his mother, as well as Thomas Fiddes, his cousin. In 1851 he was there with his mother, cousin and brother, Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool merchant, employing 12 men and 6 apprentices. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He married Margaret Bell.

His wife was Mary and they had daughters Helen and Margaret. John (b.1826/7) born in Hawick, son of shoemaker William, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. He was living around the Canongate in 1861. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Sharp, who was from Minto Parish. Their children (all but the first baptised in Cavers) included: William (b.1852); Robert Gilbert (b.1855); Helen (b.1856/7); and John (b.1858/9). He could be the ‘J. Cavers’ who was paid as Precentor in Cavers in 1864. John (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Purdie and their daughter Margaret (b.1853) was baptised in Roberton Free Kirk. Rev. John Rudge (c.1857–1930) son of Thomas of Glasgow and Catherine Mary Relton. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1876 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1878. He was assistant at Barony Parish, Glasgow, then ordained at Morton in 1879. He was translated to Greenside, Edinburgh in 1884 and then to Wilton in 1887. He lived at the new Manse on Wilton Hill. He preached the sermon at the inauguration of the 1st Hawick Company of the Boys’ Brigade in 1893. He was also Chairman of the School Board for Wilton Parish, first President of Wilton Bowling Club, and acting Chaplain in the Volunteers. He was the Chaplain for the 1890 Common Riding and was a fairly vocal supporter during a time when most of the local clergy were attacking the Common Riding. He also talked at the 1899 Colour Bussing. He was Chaplain to the forces in the South African War in 1900, and was mentioned in dispatches in 1901; in his absence, Rev. S.D. McConnell of Pollokshaws officiated at Wilton Kirk. In 1905 he took charge of St. Andrews Church, Simla (India). However, he was soon back at Wilton, and remained there until leaving the area in 1926. He was Chaplain of the K.O.S.B. from 1912 and received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1913. His ministry saw the building of the church halls and the addition of a chancel and transepts to the church. He was apparently widely known as an eloquent preacher. In 1903 he married Georgina Underwood Fiddes (sister of Walter Fiddes Wilson), and she died at Wetheral, Cumberland in 1947. There are descendants of the Retons, Rudges and Wilsons living in Tasmania. He published ‘Prophecy and Poetry: a Sermon on the Death of Lord Tennyson’ (Hawick, 1892), ‘Spirited Weapons of War’ (Hawick, 1895), ‘The Foundation Rock of the Church’ (Hawick, 1896), ‘Patriotism, a sermon’ (Hawick, 1897), ‘Not Peace, but a Sword, a sermon’ (Hawick, 1899), ‘Hardship and Character, a sermon’ (Hawick, 1904) and ‘The Soldiers of the Cross’ (Hawick, 1907). John Graham (1862–1928) son of William R. He was a tweed manufacturer in Hawick, like generations before him. In 1899 he married Mary Murray Elliot, daughter of Walter Elliot, tenant farmer in Hermitage. His sister Isobel married his brother-in-law Robert Elliot, also farmer in Hermitage. His children were: Agnes Armstrong (b.1890); William E.G. (b.1894); and Walter Elliot (b.1898). Rev. J.P. minister of St. Mary’s 1959–66. Katherine (1798–1863) eldest daughter of Hawick manufacturer William. She went to London with her brothers William and James about 1824 to keep house for them while they developed their hat manufacturing business. She married John Glenny of Aberdeenshire in 1834, and their son James became partner in Wilson & Glenny. Lucy Ann (1853–1944) daughter of Walter of Orchard. She was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association. She provided family information for James Haining in... compiling his notes for the monumental inscriptions in Hawick. She died at Belmont, at the age of 92. Luke (16th C.) merchant who was owed money for an account, according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or perhaps Edinburgh. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer on the Knowesouth estate. Margaret nee Fiddes (b.c.1785) listed as owner of a tanners and skinners business in Pigot’s directory of 1837. She was by that time the widow of Thomas. In 1841 she was at about 1 Teviot Crescent with her son John. In 1851 she was a widow working as a wool merchant and Skinner, employing 6 men, with her sons Walter and John as partners. ‘Margaret Wilson & Sons, Teviot crescent’ are listed as tanners and skinners in Slater’s 1852 directory. Margaret Stavert worked as Head of the Training Department of Barrie’s. She received the B.E.M. in 1978 for services to export.

Marion (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was ordered by the Council to pay ‘for 10 ells of sheets woven in the Holland reid, 5 groats the ell’. Mina (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear how she was related to any other Wilsons. Mungo (b.1821/2) son of land steward David, he was born at Cavers. In 1841 he was listed as a shopkeeper at Cavers, although less than 20 years old at the time. He became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Howegate, where the Post Office had formerly been. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer on Silver Street, living with his sister Jane. He was recorded as a Silver Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower, living with his sister Jessie (probably the same as Jane). His business was taken over by his assistant, James Laing, grandson of James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’ fame). He married Janet, daughter of William Mercer from Earlston, and she died in 1857, aged 30. They had a daughter Helen (b.1857), who died in infancy. Nichol (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he and John White were accused of coming to Burgh-by-Sands and killing Englishman Thomas Bull. It is unclear what part of the Borderland he came from. Patrick see Peter. Peter (1750–1836) shoemaker and Magistrate, who lived at Slitrig Bank. He was son of William (‘Whusky Wullie’) and Mary Hardie, and was christened ‘Patrick’. In 1784 he and weaver Archibald Douglas (who also married a Kedie) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kedie. He was listed as Patrick in 1794–97 when he paid the Horse Tax in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for William Young in 1796. He was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In 1776 he married Joan (1756–1840), daughter of baker John Kedie and she died in 1840. Their children were: Betty (b.1777), who must have died young; William (1779–1845), also a shoemaker; twins Betty (d.1782) and Mary (d.1781), who died in infancy; John (1783–1857), ‘The Dip’; Helen (b.1783); Peter (1784–1862), hosier manufacturer; Betty (b.1785), who also died in infancy; Thomas (1787–1859), manufacturer; Joan (1788–1857); Archibald (b.1789), died in infancy; Agnes (1795–1866), dressmaker; James (1797–1862), Hawick Town Clerk; and Jane (1798–1885), also a dressmaker. The witnesses in 1779 were his father writer William and brother clockmaker James, in 1783 were baker John Kedie (his father-in-law or brother-in-law) and weaver Archibald Douglas (who was married to his wife’s sister), in 1788 were William Wilson and William Elliot, in 1789 were baker John Kedie (his brother-in-law) and Postmaster John Inglis and in 1795, 1797 and 1798 were merchant James (perhaps his brother) and baker John Kedie (his brother-in-law). A portrait exists of him, by an unknown artist, as well as perhaps another with his wife and servants. He is probably the Peter who purchased barley from ‘Auld Cash’ sometimes before 1810. Peter (1784–1862) hosier manufacturer and yarn spinner of Peter Wilson & Co., sometimes called ‘junior’, since his father was also Peter. His brothers included William (shoemaker), John (‘the Dip’), Thomas (also a manufacturer) and James (Town Clerk). He was in partnership with John Waldie and Robert Pringle at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent from 1815, but left the partnership in 1819. He is listed as a hosier among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Around 1825 he ran a yarn spinning operation at Appletreehall Mills, as recorded in Pigot’s directory. He operated Tower Mills and Allars Mill (near Jedburgh) from 1823, and was still running the Waulk Mills (along with his brother Thomas) at the time of the flood of 1846. Around 1837 he was operating a mill on Slitrig Bank, at the foot of the Kirk Wynd; this same building is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed in 1835 as a manufacturer in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Kirk. He was listed there in Pigot’s (16th C.) recorded as ‘curate’ of Wilton in 1552 High Street and then 1 Teviot Place.

Robert widow, working as a mid-wife, living at about 73 and Joseph. In 1851 and 1861 his wife was a wife Agnes and children Margaret, Agnes, Robert librarian of Hawick Trades Library listed in 1837. Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably also the in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Richard (b.1811).

James (b.1805); Agnes (again, b.1810); and John (b.1796); George (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); James (b.1805); Agnes (again, b.1810); and John (b.1811). Richard (b.1756) son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. He was church officer in Ashkirk, like his father before him. He was succeeded in that office by his son John. He is probably the Richard who was church officer by his son Robert. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably church officer in Ashkirk like other generations of his family. He married Bessie Halliwell and was succeeded in that office by his son Robert. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably church officer in Ashkirk like other generations of his family. He married Bessie Halliwell and was succeeded in that office by his son Robert. Richard (16th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Malie Lauder and their son Francis was baptised in 1684. Margaret (b.1693), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. Robert (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may be the same Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1687 and 1689. He is recorded as a tailor in 1701 and 1712 when he witnessed baptisms for carrier James (who may therefore have been his brother). He is recorded in 1718 in a dispute with William Wright over the spaces occupied by their wives’ stools in St. Mary’s Kirk. He also witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson in 1721. He married Isobel Tait in 1700 and their children included: Margaret (b.1701); Robert (b.1704); Isobel (b.1706); and John (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were glover John Hart and flesher Thomas. 1706 included flesher Thomas (who may this have been related). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Weens in 1718, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Robert (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Wilton. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1722, with the other witness being Rev. William Crawford of Wilton. He may be the Robert in Wilton who (along with John) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for Walter Douglas, weaver in Hawick. He was recorded as ‘Schoolmr’ in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Robert Aitken in Hawick. He is probably the Robert who recorded simply at ‘wiltoun’ and 1724 in the 1723 baptismal record for one of his children; the entries are more detailed than most, suggesting he was important in the Parish. He is probably the Robert who witnessed Wilton baptisms for John Cairns in Timbersidemill in 1731 and for John Ormiston in Wester Howlands and James Miller in Appletreeshall in 1742. He loaned the town £25 to help pay off the Teviot Bridge debt in the mid-1700s. He is probably the Wilton Parish Clerk who wrote the record in 1720 stating ‘Received for the mortcloth at the funeral of Walter Wilton my son’. He was schoolmaster in 1744 when he witnessed a baptism for wright Patrick Weir. He is probably the Robert who married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Walter Weens in 1718 (recorded in both Wilton and Hawick), and whose children, baptised in Wilton, included: Walter (b.1719); Rachel (b.1721); William (b.1723); Bessie (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Walter (again, b.1728); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were John Blyth and Adam Easton and in 1724 were John and Walter Scott, ‘both in wiltoun’. Robert (18th C.) flesher in Hawick. He married Janet Huntly in 1725 and their children included: Esther (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); John (b.1730); James (b.1736); and Marion (b.1739). The witnesses in 1726 were Henry Orrock and Francis Ruecastle, in 1728 were Henry Orrock and Robert Huntly (who was surely related to his wife), and in 1730 were another Robert, as well as John Telfer. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a shoemaker when one of his children was baptised in 1742. He witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker John Smail in Hawick in 1743. He married Bessy Lorraine (who may have been daughter of William Lorraine, b.1712). Their children included: John (b.1742); and Charles (b.1746). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Aitchison and baker John Kedie. He was already deceased in 1778 when the death of his wife Betty is recorded. It is possible that he was grandfather of ‘Lurgie’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Shiplaw Corse in 1749. His children included John (b.1746), Elizabeth (b.1749) and Jane (b.1756). Robert (b.1723) son of Richard and Bessie Halliwell. He was church officer in Ashkirk. It is said that 9 or 10 generations of the same family held this office continuously. He married Margaret Riddell in 1753. Their children included: Betsy (b.1754); Richard (b.1756), who succeeded as church officer; Agnes (b.1759); and Isabel (b.1760). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Paterson in 1756 and their son Robert was baptised in 1757. Robert of Bewlie (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Irvine in Hawick in 1786. Robert (d.1799) butcher of Hawick, possibly related to the same old family who traced themselves back to the late 17th century in the Whitchesters area. He could be the son of flesher Robert who was born in Hawick in 1728. He had at least 2 surviving sons: Andrew, who was also a flesher; and Adam, who was a shoemaker. He married Sarah Scott in 1760 and she died in 1781. Their children included: James (b.1760); Christian (b.1762); Adam (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1766); Margaret (again, 1768–91); Robert (again, b.1769); Janet (b.1771); and Andrew (b.1774). The witnesses in 1766 were James Waugh and Robert Turnbull. He may be the Robert who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth twice in 1760. In Hawick’s death records he was recorded as ‘Drummer’ in 1781 and (twice) in 1791, and then for his own death he was ‘flesher & town Drummer’. He was therefore presumably in an early incarnation of the Drums and Fifes. He is probably the Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1777. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Duncan in 1793. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Easton and their son Robert was baptised in 1798. He could be the Robert recorded as ‘Chaise driver’ in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and still on th list in 1801. Robert ‘Lurgie’ (1772–1837) shoemaker, who was Cornet in 1799 and also a local historian and writer. He was son of Charles and Agnes Tinlin, with ‘Wull the Naig’ being one of his cousins. His nickname came from Lurgiescleuch, once a family home (said to be where his grandfather was from). His baptism is recorded in Hawick, but there is no record of the date of his birth (but it was likely the end of April or beginning of May). He was an only child and followed his father Charles into the combined trade of shoemaker and publican. He received only rudimentary and brief education in Hawick, and was largely self-taught. He was also known as a singer from an early age. His political views were strongly affected by the French Revolution, and it is said that his religious views were influenced by his friendship with Dr. Freeman. He was listed as a shoemaker on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and also on the list in 1801. He is listed as a shoemaker at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and as a vintner on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He inherited the publican’s business when his father died, the upstairs room at 2 Buccleuch Street being used as a public house, the Burns Inn. It was frequented by many of the most respectable local citizen’s and was often a meeting place for Hawick’s literati and local reformers. Since newspapers were scarce in those days, he would sometimes read important news from the window of his house, e.g. news of the victory at Waterloo. He used to set aside time every day for reading and from 1822 he started daily committing some of his thoughts to paper. At the encouragement of his friends he collected various pieces written on different scraps of paper and published them as ‘A Sketch of the History of Hawick’ (1825). The introduction for the second second edition, called ‘The History of Hawick’ (1841), was written only about a month before his death. This work represented the first serious history of the town, as well as being a discursive outline of the author’s Liberal political views. He argues vehemently for equality and for peace, using carefully thought out positions, and often utilising humour. He took a particular stance (in many cases surprisingly modern) against: the House of Lords; the length of the Civil List; too much power in the hands of the Clergy; religious education; out-dated educational methods; religious intolerance; the laws of entail and the legal system generally; simplistic attitudes to solving Ireland’s problems; and the state of the Carlisle-Edinburgh road near Hawick! He argued in favour of mediation in labour disputes, for religious toleration in Ireland, the support of the poor through taxation, for the Duke of Buccleuch to return the part of Hawick’s Common taken in 1777 and to encourage the development of mills on his property, and also to build housing on the Common Haugh to solve Hawick’s overcrowded housing problems! He also described how in Hawick people of all classes mingled together: ‘Perhaps there are few places where fashionable vanity, artificial consequence, or empty assumption, in in lower estimation than in the town of Hawick … there is a familiarity of manners, and an equality of intercourse, among the inhabitants of this Border burgh, antipodal to such erroneous distinctions in society’. The editor of the Scotsman was so impressed he came to Hawick to find him, arriving on Common Riding Saturday and being told he was at the Haugh, his servant girl said ‘just look out for the largest, the leanest, and maist ill-faured man that ye can see. Ye’ll sune find him, for he wears a white hat’. In addition he wrote ‘Disquisition on the corn-laws, with a few observations on pauperism, etc.’ (1826) and ‘Observations on the character and working of the Reform Bill’ (1834). A prominent Liberal in local politics, he took the part of the King of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin for the shoemakers in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory procession and gave a speech at the banquet held in the Haugh. He is said to have helped in the selection of songs in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1811. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Curling Club. He was much respected in Town, and often consulted about the running of the trades Incorporations, the history of the Town, etc. He was Clerk for both Hawick’s friendly societies of the early 19th century, one being an annual benefit club (perhaps the Hawick Friendly Society) and the other the Hawick Medico-Relief Society. He was also distributor of the funds from the Association for the Purpose of Suppressing Public Begging in the Town of Hawick. He is probably the Robert recorded as Dean of Guild in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his last few years, when his health was declining, he became Master of Works for Hawick. Under his supervision the plantations at the Vertish and on Hawick Moor were undertaken, and he enjoyed checking on the growth of the trees. In 1822, later in his life, he married Margaret Miller (who died in 1852), but they had no children. He is said to have walked the Common every day and caught a fever after falling asleep beside a damp spring (later referred to as ‘Lurgie’s Well’, near St. Leonard’s) and never recovered. Over 500 people attended his funeral. He is buried in St. Mary’s, although there was no headstone. A portrait of him exists (by an unknown artist, a friend of his), and he is described as being about 5 ft 10 in., with small, deep-set eyes, angular features, a protruding forehead and pale complexion. He is said to have had a temperate nature, but to be extremely perceptive, imaginitive and excitable. He also wrote many letters on political matters, which appeared in newspapers.
He was a great admirer of Burns, and would regularly give the addresses at meetings of the earliest incarnation of the Hawick Burns Club (e.g. in 1821 and 1823). The only example of poetry attributed to him are in supplement to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Sweet Teviot’ lines: ‘All now is changed, and halcyon years Succeed the feudal baron’s sway; And trade, with arts and peace, appears To bless fair Scotia’s happier day’ [RW].

His Masonic insignia are in the Museum. A biography of him was written by Robert Murray in 1881. An anonymous contemporary wrote ‘Then hail to thee Rob! I am glad that our town, Can call such a blade as Rob Wilson our own. Oh, lang mayst thou flourish in our parish Thy Whiggisms, too, independent and true, And returns snap for snap when the Tories grow currish!’.

Robert (c.1788–bef. 1851) spinner at Nixon’s Mill. In 1841 he was living at ‘Nixon’s Mill’, probably meaning Lynnwood Cottages. He married Janet, eldest daughter of William Laidlaw and Margaret Aitken. His children included: Margaret, who married Benjamin William Laidlaw and Margaret Aitken. His children, baptised in Hawick, including George.

Robert (19th C.) married Isabella Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1850. Robert (19th C.) married Agnes Ballantyne in 1853, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton. Robert (b.1837/8) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish, originally from Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farming 1110 acres and employed 5 labourers. He was living with his brother William and sister Margaret. Robert Brodie (1840–1906) son of Margaret Brodie, with the father probably being cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. In 1861 he was living on Albion Place with his grandmother Helen Brodie. He worked as a wool sorter. In 1862 he married Annie J. (1839–87), daughter of Andrew Ekron. They had 12 children, including Robert (b.1863), Elizabeth Scott (b.1864) and Margaret (b.1866). He secondly married Susan Stewart (who had formerly been married to a Waldie). He died in Dunedin, New Zealand.

Robert (1862–1927) son of George and Helen Scott. His wife was Margaret. Robert (1886/7–1914) son of milkvan man Thomas. He was a mill-worker and then enlisted in the K.O.S.B. in 1904, serving for 2 years and re-enlisting in 1908. He was discharged in 1913 and worked as a groomsmen at Wells House. However, when war broke out he was mobilised as a trooper with the 2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys). He was shelled at the First Battle of Ypres and killed by a German bullet. He is buried at Wytschaete Cemetery in Belgium and commemorated on the War Memorial at Bedrule and Hobkirk. Roland (16th C.) tenant at Catslack, as recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhxholme in 1574. This seems most likely to be the ‘Catlochill’ (essentially the same as Branhxholme Bras) which is mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’. S. C. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘The Barony of Hawick and the Lovell Family’ for the 1932 Transactions. Samuel (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Davidson and their son James was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1823. Simon (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. Simon (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Symon Wilsone in Priesthauch’ when he (along with 3 other local men, from the Branhxholme area and Craik) were cautioners for ‘Hob Cowan in Allmure’ in 1623. He may have been related to later local Wilsons. Simon ‘Sim the Colt’ (17th C.) recorded on a long list of Borders men to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. He could be the ‘Sycmeone Wilsone’ listed in about 1648 among ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves on the Border). Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of Over and Nether Whisgills and Redmoss in Liddesdale. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at £22 when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Henderson, whose children included Robert (b.1640) and Margaret (b.1644). Thomas (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas was listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He was recorded as a flesher in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms for tailor William Scott in 1701 and tailor Robert Wilson (possibly a relative) in 1704. He also witnessed a baptism in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow flesher John Tudhope). He could be the Thomas, married to Esther Fowler, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Robert (b.1687) and James (b.1689). Other children (as recorded in the baptismal entries) were Bessie (b.1700) and Thomas (b.1705). The witnesses in 1700 were ‘late Bailie’ James Deans and glover John Hart and in 1705 were carter John Aitken and fellow flesher Walter Anderson. Thomas (18th C.) son of flesher Walter Thomas. In 1715 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas, son to the deceased merchant Thomas ‘Huison’ in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Borthwick valley. He was in Borthaugh in 1729 and ‘H...’ (perhaps Highchesters) in 1732. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Borthaugh. In 1723 he married Violet, daughter of George Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children included: Thomas (b.1726), George (b.1727), Janet (b.1729) and Thomas (again, b.1733), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1732), baptised in Roberton. James Scott and George Bell (both in Borthaugh) witnessed the 1729 baptism and John and James Dryden in 1733. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Turnbull in 1743 and their children included George (b.1745); Betty (b.1750); and Janet (b.1759). Thomas (d.c.1786) second Schoolmaster at Caerlenuig, appointed in 1757, and staying until 1761 when he was appointed as Schoolmaster at Kirkton. He was teacher to the class that included the young John Leyden, but he died after only teaching Leyden for a year or two. He was succeeded as schoolmaster by Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) from Ireby in Cumbria. He is recorded in 1779 along with his wife Katherine when their son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. The witnesses were William Irvine, merchant in Hawick and his apprentice John Nixon. Thomas (1785–bef. 1837) son of Walter (and probably not brother of Walter). He had a tanner’s business and lived at 1 Teviot Crescent. He is probably the ‘T. Wilson, skinner’, listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). His wife was Margaret (b.c.1785), daughter of John Fiddes, from Hobkirk. Their children included Walter (b.1811) and John Fiddes (b.1813), both wool merchants and skinners. He had a son who died in 1815 and another in 1819. He could be the tallow dealer and candlemaker listed on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. After his death his wife continued the tanning and skinning business, with their sons Walter and John becoming partners. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Armstrong and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: William (b.1806); and Thomas (b.1810). Thomas (b.1787–1859) son of shoemaker Peter and brother of hosiery manufacturer Peter, as well as Town Clerk James. He ran a hosiery factory at 8 and 9 (or perhaps 7 and 8) Slitrig Crescent, where he is recorded on Wood’s 1824 map; the building there is shown straddling the mill lade. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him in partnership with William Elliot. This partnership lasted only 7 years, ending in 1830, with William Elliot & Sons going their own way next door, and Wilson's being eventually taken over by John Laing & Sons about 1851. He was also in partnership with his brother Peter and others in the Waulk Mill (Tower Knowe), under the name Waldie, Elliot & Co. He was among the local men implicated in the 1837 Commons inquiry into 'fictitious voters' on account of purchasing property in Selkirkshire. Pigot's 1825/6 directory further lists a Thomas as skinner and wool merchant on the High Street, and this is also probably him. The 1837 directory lists him as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer on the Crescent. In 1819 he married Charlotte, only daughter of Edinburgh lawyer Charles Grant. Their children were: Peter Grant (b.1820); Charles George (1820–23), who died young; Eliza Wemyss (b.1824); Joan Kedie (1826–1831), who also died young; George Grant (b.1828), in the Civil Service in Somerset; Thomas Grant (b.1832), who married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson; Charlotte Grant (1834–42); and Agnes Jane (b.1837). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scoular and their son Thomas Scoular was baptised in 1830. Thomas (b.1812/3) shoemaker in the West-end. He was listed on the 1841 census on the Mid Row and in 1851 at 4 Kirk Wynd, where he was a Master Shoemaker in 1861. His wife was Agnes Ewen (from Selkirk) and their children included John, Margaret, William, Isabella, Janet (b.1837), Thomas, Robert, Eliza and Gideon (b.1855). He could be the shoemaker Thomas whose child's death was recorded in 1838. Thomas Grant (b.1832) son of hosiery manufacturer Thomas. He worked in the cotton business in Liverpool, then emigrated to Canada and the U.S.A. and died in Chicago. He married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson. Their children included Thomas Herbert Grant, who married Blanche Sanders. Thomas (19th/20th C.) milk van driver in Hawick. He lived at 8 Upper Village with his wife Annie. Their children were: Robert (d.1914), who died at Ypres; James; and 6 daughters. Thomas 'Tom' or 'the Bottler' (d.1918) prominent back in Hawick R.F.C. in the early 1900s, who was also capped for Scotland. He first appeared for Hawick in 1903, and could play in almost any position. He also excelled at Sevens, and played in nearly 50 tournaments. He was killed during WWI. He may have been connected with the Thomas of Bourtree Place who made aerated waters. Thomas (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Roberton for over 50 years, retiring in 1920. He lived at the schoolhouse in Roberton and wrote an article about the area for the 1924 Transactions. In 1875 he firstly married Mary Scott Grieve. He secondly married Ellen Mary Douglas, son of John, farmer at Easter Essendine (and also descended from Charles Scott, 'Chairlie o the Crescent'). His children were: James (Jim); Margaret; Thomas (b.1888), who died in WWI; Christina ('Chrissie'), who was teacher at Ashkirk; and George, a doctor at Redditch. Thomas 'Tom' (1888–1917) second son of the Roberton Schoolmaster. He became a civil engineer, moving to Glasgow, Carlisle and then Singapore. He played rugby for several sides and was selected to go on tour with the English national side in 1907; however, a dispute with the Scottish Union led to him being de-selected by England. During WWI he was drafted to East Africa, where he was a Lieutenant with the King's African Rifles. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1916 and transferred to the Royal Engineers. He was killed when his car was attacked by a sniper in German East Africa. Thomas Michael Aubrey 'Michael' (1951– ), F.R.S.E., son of Basil, headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He attended Hawick Hawick School. He was Chief Executive Officer of Horticulture Research International and acted as Editor-in-Chief for the Journal of Horticultural Science & Biototechnology. He has been a spokesman on behalf of a scientific approach to genetically modified crops. Tony (1938– ) related to the manufacturing Wilsons, he was involved with the Hawick Welcome Initiative and the Hawick Hosts. He played the part of Andrew Carnegie in the centenary re-enactment of the opening ceremony for the Library in 2004. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘blindhalch’, which is probably Blindhaugh near Ashkirk. In 1502 Robert Turnbull (in the same place) was surety for him when they were fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (d.c.1681) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his will was recorded in 1681. He may be the same as the later merchant of Hawick, if he registered a will significantly before his death. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their son James was baptised in 1671. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Nichol and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Archibald (b.1671); Helen (b.1677); and Robert (b.1680).
Probably the same couple had a daughter Isobel baptised in Robertson Parish in 1684. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Marion (b.1686). Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He may be the Walter who married Isobel Lamb and whose son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1690, with witnesses William Stewart and James Murray. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and is probably the Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He is probably the Walter who (along with merchant Walter Oliver) witnessed baptism for John Scott, smith in Hawick in 1704 and for fellow merchant William Douglas and for wright William Brack in 1706. He also witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the Walter who married Agnes Riddell and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Walter (b.1698), with the mother’s surname not recorded; Isobel (b.1700), with the mother’s name given as Isobel; Helen (b.1702); Marion (b.1704); Walter (b.1707); and William (b.1709). The witnesses in 1698 were James and John Aitken, in 1704 were James Ogilvie in Branxholme and Robert Thomson in Newmill, in 1707 were Robert Thomson and William Nixon in Stobicote and in 1709 were Francis Gladstains (servitor to Scott of Fahnash) and Walter Scott. Janet (b.1694), John (b.1695) and Margaret (b.1699), with no mother’s name recorded, may also be his children; the witnesses in 1695 were Walter Graham and Henry Orrock and in 1699 were John Scott and John ‘Weelands’. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Castlehill. He was renting part of Branxholme Town in 1693, rented the farm of Castlehill in 1698 and acted as cautioner for the widow of Andrew, tenant in part of the farm of Branxholme Town. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Prendergast (along with Robert Thomson in Newmill) in 1710. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Marion (b.1686), who probably married John Riddell in Hawick in 1720; Agnes (b.1702); and Bessie (b.1705). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Castlehill. He was recorded in 1700 as ‘younger in Castlehill’ (suggesting he was son of the previous Walter in Castlehill). He was at Castlehill in 1700, 1704, 1707 and 1709 (when still ‘younger’). He married Isobel Riddell and they had children: Margaret (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700); and Bessie (b.1705), who may be the ‘Old Betty’, daughter to the deceased Walter, who died in 1795. The witnesses in 1698 were James and John Aitken, in 1700 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Henry Orrock and in 1705 included Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Walter (18th C.) married Jean Byers in Ewes Parish in 1723. Walter (18th C.) listed as ‘Servant to Walter Scott at Common-side’ in 1737 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Jackson, hind at Fahnash. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Haunless Wat’. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Douglas and their children included: James (b.1739); and Mary (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Adam Scott ‘younger’ weaver and shoemaker William Scott. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Haunless Wat’. Walter ‘Haunless Wat’ (1712–1795) son of John and Margaret Crow, he was born in Hawick Parish. His nickname came from the fact that he was born with only one hand. He was grand-father of William, and great-grand-father of Provost George. He worked as a travelling packman for William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’ (or perhaps more likely, the father of ‘Auld Cash’), taking goods back and forward across the Border using pack-horses. He set up as a merchant in 11 High Street, later buying No. 9 from Francis Scott and finally acquiring No. 13 through exchange of property on the Back Row. No. 11 High Street belonged to 3 generations of Walters, the last being Cornet in 1820. It is labelled as ‘Wa. Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. After the death of Oliver, he set up in business on his own. He also tried running the Cross Keys Inn for a while, but returned to being a merchant. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1752 (at a fairly advanced age) he married Catherine (or ‘Katharine’), daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was a niece of the William Oliver he worked with (although cousin seems like the correct generation), as well as sister of the wife of Bailie Walter Purdom; she died in 1788, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1753), who married draper George Turnbull; Margaret ‘Peggy’, who died in infancy; John (b.1756), died young; Robert (b.1758), also died young; Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (again, b.1759), who married William Beck; Agnes (b.1761), who married currier John Stratton; Ann (b.1763), who married Cornet James Oliver; William (1764–1832), merchant in Hawick; John (again, 1767), also died young; Walter (b.1770), cabinetmaker in Hawick; and Katherine (1773–81). He was recorded as a merchant in 1758 when the baptismal witnesses were Robert Oliver (perhaps his father-in-law) and merchant William Oliver, and also in 1764 when the witnesses were Robert Oliver and Walter Purdom (his wife’s brother-in-law). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray in 1758 and another for Walter Hogg in 1772. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom and Agnes Oliver in 1774. He died at the ‘Old Cross Keys’ and is buried in Winton Old Churchyard. A wooden folding yardstick of his (from around 1734) is in the Museum. Walter (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Armstrong and their son Thomas was baptised in 1750. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Glendinning and their son Andrew was baptised in 1756. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Oliver in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. His children included Isabel (b.1765) and Christian (b.1782). Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1766. His children included Isobel (b.1761) and Ann (b.1766). Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Howcleuch in 1788 and Commonside in 1799. He married Jane Scott in Roberton in 1781 and their children included: Euphan (b.1784); Thomas (b.1788); Jane (b.1792); and Robert (b.1799). Walter (d.bef. 1809) resident of Newmill. The death of his grandson is recorded in Hawick in 1799. He married Isabel Renwick in Hawick in 1759 and she died in 1809. He may be the Walter who (along with John Martin) witnessed a baptism for William Elliot (or Gledstains) in 1777. Walter (18th C.) married Mary Wilson in Hawick in 1773. Walter ‘Wat the Buck’ (18th/19th C.) originally from the Selkirk area, he was a baker in Hawick, based at 10 Howe-gate. His nickname distinguished him from his Hawick contemporaries, such as ‘Wat the Laird’. He was described in 1772 as a ‘Wiver in Yeair’, i.e. a weaver in Yair; he was in Hawick a few years later. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was listed as a Howeagate baker in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Bailie in Hawick, and was said by the Tories to have been engaged in intimidating Tory voters before the 1837 election. On the other side, he was said to have ensured that when the military were called out in 1835 (after all the trouble had quietened down in Hawick) they were received warmly by the townspeople, rather than reinstigating the riot. In Selkirk in 1772 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson) and Agnes Hardie. Their children, the first of whom was was baptised in Selkirk and the others in Hawick, included: James (b.1773); Agnes (b.1775); Janet (b.1777); Margaret (b.1780), who married William Rathie; Jane (b.1782); Isabel (b.1784); Janet (again, b.1787); Alexander (b.1789); Walter (b.1794), who carried on the baker’s business; and Barbara (d.1794). He was the witness for the groom at the wedding in Selkirk was James in Traquair Parish, who was probably his father or brother (and the witness for the bride was Alexander Donaldson, his father-in-law). The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation. Based on naming conventions, it is possible that his parents were the James who married Janet Turnbull in Traquair in 1746. He was probably still alive for his granddaughter’s baptism in 1812. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to John, who was a shepherd at Skelfhill. He may be the Walter, resident of Cavers Parish, who married Nelly Scott in 1788. Walter ‘Wat the Laird’ (18th/19th C.) distinguished from ‘the Buck’ by his nickname. The ‘Laird’ suggests he farmed some fields, perhaps up the Loan or the Wellogate. Walter (18th/19th C.) Lieutenant in the Hawick Military Association (volunteers) around 1800. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Irvine in 1780 and their children included: Isabel (b.1782); Thomas (b.1785), probably the skinner; Margaret (b.1787); and Ann (b.1789), who married Alexander Laing. The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation. Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1847) wright and cabinet-maker of the High Street, 2nd son of ‘Haunless Wat’ and Catherine Oliver. He was listed as a cabinet-maker on the 1801 ballot for the Militia; he did not appear on the 1799 list, suggesting that he was born later than 1770. His joiner’s and cabinet-maker’s business was down the close at 9 High Street. He inherited this property from his father, and it included land that went all the way down to the river, with stables at the foot. He lived above the property at the front, which was rented to a grocer; his parlour windows faced the street above the shop. This property is shown

It was said that as a joiner he was known for some local specialties, including a kind of nutcracker that he made with a circular ring of wood and wooden screw. He was also on the Town Council, and served as Master of Works. He was a keen fisherman, and told stories of sailing his ‘trows’ from Hawick to Berwick when the river was full. He is probably the Walter ‘wright in Hawick’ who was listed as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’. In 1812 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Elizabeth Turnbull. He is probably the wright who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He is recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a joiner on the High Street and in 1837 as a joiner and undertaker. In the 1834 electoral roll Walter senior and Walter junior (both cabinet-makers) are mentioned, and they are still on the High Street (at about No. 9) on the 1841 census. He married Agnes Fletcher, who died in 1802, aged 27. They had 2 sons: Walter (b.1798); and Robert (b.1801), who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1798 were merchants William Wilson and George Turnbull. In older life he was known as ‘Uncle Wattie’. A portrait of him exists. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Walter (18th/19th C.) smith at Birkwoodfoot in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Bailie Walter (d.1840) tanner in Hawick. He was brother of John and son of John and Margaret Elliot. Both brothers were tanners and later candlemakers. He is easy to confuse with his nephew Walter, who was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Walter who was a Bailie in the 1790s and early 1800s and who was recorded as eldest Bailie in 1808. He could be the tanner whose son John died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Peggy Rae and their daughter Peggy was baptised in 1808. Walter (1794–1849) son of baker Walter and Margaret Donald. He was Cornet in 1814. He carried on his father’s baker’s business at 10 Howegate and was listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1830s he was among a list of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. He is listed as a baker in Hawick among the heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. He later became Burgh Treasurer. In 1821 he married Isabella Richardson, daughter of James Richardson (Cornet in 1777) and Jane Scott from Milsington; she carried on the business after his death. Their children included: Jane (b.1822), who married baker George Armstrong; Walter (b.1824), the eldest son, who helped his mother with the baker’s; Margaret D. (b.1827); Isabella (b.1829); James Donaldson (b.1831), later worked in the family business; John (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); Agnes, who married Thomas Dryden; and Jessie (d.1891), who married John Riddle Thompson. He died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. A portrait of him exists. Walter of Orchard (1796–1890) eldest son of William and Elizabeth Richardson, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. It is said that when the partnership between his father and William Watson dissolved in 1819 he began to travel on horseback, with commercial samples in his saddlebags, spending up to 6 weeks on the road. He may be the ‘Walter Wilson, hosier’ who is recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). In 1841 he is recorded living at 13 High Street, with his wife, 2 children and 4 servants and in 1851 was at Orchard, also with 4 servants. He took over part of the family manufacturing business, forming Walter Wilson & Sons of Teviot Mills (Weensland) and Allars Crescent in 1851. He manufactured both hosiery and tweeds. Along with several other local manufacturers and Mr. Croall of Edinburgh he organised a cheaper (than the mail coach) stage-coach between Hawick and Edinburgh 1823–46. He was Secretary of the Board of Health set up to deal with the 1832 cholera outbreak. It was said that once William Grieve of Branxholme Park challenged him to a fight, and as a Quaker he put his hands in his pockets and stated ‘That’s what I do when anyone asks me to fight’. He was leader of the group in the 1850s pushing for the Hawick-Carlisle railway to go via Liddesdale rather than Langholm. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire; he may have been the first J.P. from Hawick. He was living at Orchard from at least the 1850s. He was recorded there in 1861, listed as a Justice of the Peace and farmer of 270 acres, as well as a manufacturer in Hawick, employing almost 200 people. He also owned part of Weensland (perhaps where the mill was) that had been owned by Robert Scott. In 1827 he firstly married Rebecca Gibb (sister of James Gibb, who married his sister Margaret); she died in 1832. In 1838
he secondly married another Rebecca (1818–96), daughter of Alexander Cruickshank (with whom his father had started in business in 1794). Both of his marriages were within the Society of Friends and he remained in the organisation all his life. His children included: William (1829–59); Francis Elliot (b.1839) of Broomlands; Edward (b.1841), who married Margaret Hobkirk; Alfred Cruickshank (b.1843), whose wife was also Rebecca; Dr. Alexander (b.1845), who married Emma Bewley; Susan Cruickshank (b.1847), who married Rev. Robert Hislop, brother of Hawick minister David Hislop; Walter Stuart (b.1850), who married Janet Cairns; Lucy Ann (1853–1944), who was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association; and Emily Richardson (b.1857), who died in infancy. His involvement in the railway debate left a big impression in the area – ‘Twas said to Walter Wilson, ‘Sir ‘twas you that shut the door’, ‘I deny it’, said the Quaker, ‘We can prove it’, said a score’ [T]. Walter (1798–1862) son of Walter, was a cabinet-maker like his father. He was on the short-list for Cornet in 1817 and was elected as Cornet in 1820. He was listed as ‘Walter Wilson, Jun. wright’ among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He is listed along with his father on the High Street on the 1841 census. By 1851 he was a widower at about 9 High Street, and was employing 3 men. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a joiner on the High Street. By 1856 he was a ‘Proprietor of Houses’ on the High Street. By 1861 he was a retired cabinet-maker living at Silverbuthall House. He had a son called Walter (b.1823), apparently before he was married (with the mother being Wilhelmina Bell); this son became a baker in Selkirk and then emigrated to Australia. He firstly married Janet Gray (who probably died in 1829); they had a daughter, Jessie (or Janet, 1828–1913), who married George Hobkirk, of Slitrig Villa. He also appears to have had an illegitimate son (Robert Brodie Wilson, 1840–1906) with Margaret Brodie. In 1856 he secondly married Isabella (c.1824–98, from Lilliesleaf), daughter of farmer James Gray. He was said to be very keen on fishing, and left his business largely to be run by John Rae, while he went on angling excursions. He was also said to be a great storyteller. An early photograph of him exists. Walter (b.1801) wool sorter in Hawick, son of John and Wilhelmina Irvine. He was recorded living at about 30 High Street in 1841, along with grocer Isabel Oliver. In 1851 he was with his brother William at about 32 High Street and in 1861 was an unmarried lodger at 6 Cross Wynd. Walter (b.1811) son of Thomas and brother of John Fiddes. He was a skinner and wool merchant in Hawick. He is easy to confuse with Bailie Walter, his uncle, who was a tanner. He was listed in the 1837 electoral roll (along with John Fiddes) as a joint proprietor. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ he was claimed to have gone to Edinburgh to seek votes. In 1851 he was living with his widowed mother, brother John and cousin Thomas Fiddes at 1 Teviot Crescent. In 1861 he was living with his brother at 1 Teviot Crescent, and was unmarried. Walter (19th C.) hawker in Hawick. He was deceased in 1879 when his representatives were rebuilding his house at the top of the north side of the Howegate. Walter (1823–1903) son of Walter, with his mother being Wilhelmina Bell (from Riddings). His half-sister was Jessie, wife of George Hobkirk of Slitrig Villa. He lived with his father and grandfather, cabinet-makers at 9 High Street, but then became an apprentice baker in Selkirk. He spent about 5 years as a baker in London, returned to Selkirk in 1849 and then in 1852 emigrated to Australia, following the gold rush. He married Janet Brydon (who was from the Ettrick valley) and they had children Robert, Walter and William. Walter (19th C.) married Janet Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1844. Their son John was baptised in Minto in 1845. Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Beattie in Roberton Parish in 1845. Their daughter Isabella was baptised in 1845. Walter (b.1824) son of Walter and Isabella Richardson. After his father’s death, he helped his mother run the family baker’s business on the Howegate. He was listed as baker in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at 10 Howegate, running the business with his mother and brother James, and sisters Elizabeth and Agnes also living there. Walter Francis (1875–1957) son of Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. Like his forebears, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. He was married twice, firstly to Ann Brown Alexander and secondly to Delia Frances Tighe. He had a son Walter Elliot Francis (1907–59). Walter Stuart (1850–1926) younger son of Walter of Ormond House. He had a son Walter Elliot Francis (1907–59).
they had a son, Arthur Hamilton (b.1881). He retired in 1922, moving to Lancashire, where he died. Walter (1856–1939) son of George and Helen Scott. He married Margaret Hart Henderson (1856–1931) and died in Providence, Rhode Island. Walter Fiddes (1861–1925) son of John Fiddes and Margaret Bell Underwood. He abandoned the tweed manufacturing trade and studied music in Italy. He was a organist at St. John's 1880–91 and then organist at Wilton Kirk (where his brother-in-law, Rev. John Rudge Wilson, was minister). He was also a singing teacher, and great organiser of musical performances in Hawick at the end of the 19th century, including conducting the Sacred Harmonic Society, which mounted ambitious choral performances in the Exchange Hall. He was also founder of the Hawick Amateur Opera Company in 1897. He and his wife he gave a processional cross to St. Cuthbert's Kirk. In 1906 his wife contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1641 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gillespie. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their children included an unnamed son (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681), Jane (b.1683) and Agnes (b.1687). He could be the William who witnessed a baptisms for William Thomson and Agnes Cook in 1680, for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell in 1682 and for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott in 1685. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw, among the poor of Wilton Parish, in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) married Janet Thomson in Cavers in 1703. He may be the William whose son John was baptised in 1713. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Fenwick. He married Margaret Stevenson and their daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldieland and James Falsyde. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1704. William (17th/18th C.) said to have been son of an army sergeant in the time of Queen Anne, and brother of James. He is one of the first known of an old Hawick family. Probably the same William, servitor to Alexander Thomson of Whitchesters was admonished for not observing the Sabbath in 1712. It also seems likely he was the tenant in Hawick Shiel who was found in 1717 to have ploughed a distance of 5 or 6 yards into the Common, east of the corner marker near Longflat. It may be that he is confused with William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. William (17th/18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for John Stoddart in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Isabel was baptised in 1725. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Stewart and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1740. William ‘Whusky Wullie’ (1713–91) born in Kirkton, eldest son of carrier James. He was admitted a Burgess of Hawick in 1736 and worked as a ‘messenger and writer’. He also acted as Burgh Procurator Fiscal. He was recorded as ‘messenger’ in 1745. He witnessed a baptism for his son Peter in 1777. He was a ‘writer’ when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. He is also a writer when he (along with his son James) witnessed a baptism for his son Peter in 1779. He is probably the ‘Mr William Wilson, there’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Mary Hardie (1717–96), who was related to Bailie John Hardie; the marriage took place in Edinburgh in 1737. Their children were: Isobel (b.1743), who married wright John Telfer of Jedburgh and emigrated to America; Agnes (b.1745), who married writer James Wintrope; James (1748–1821), clockmaker and Cornet; and Peter (1750–1836), shoemaker; as well as Patrick (b.1739), Agnes (b.1741), William and John (b.1756), who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir and in 1745 were John Telfer and shoemaker John Scott. He himself witnessed baptisms for carrier George in 1766 and 1767, and another for exciseman Robert Pringle in 1778. He died in Hawick in 1791, when he is recorded as a ‘writer’, son of James ‘the old Baron’. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1745. William (18th C.) married Margaret Henderson in Hawick in 1758. William (18th C.) married Elizabeth Crawford in Hawick in 1759. Their son William was baptised in 1762. He may also have been father of John (b.1760), with no mother’s name recorded. William (18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Castleton Parish in 1763, with his wife’s name not given. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Stobiceote in 1772 when his son William was baptised. William (18th/19th C.) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and James. His premises were at the East End. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. All 3 brothers were listed as carriers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; at that time he had 5 work horses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for saddler Thomas Huggan in 1797. He may be the William who, along with James, witnessed 5 baptisms for carrier George in the 1790s. He was said to have had 3 sons, James, William and Robert, and a daughter, who became Mrs. A. Mair (and whose daughter was Mrs. Drummond). His son is probably the carrier William living with the Mair family on the Mill Path in 1841. He probably married Ann Murray (from Roberton Parish) in 1777; she was spouse of carrier William Murray, who is recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805, by which time he was already deceased. Their children included: George (b.1778), probably the son of carrier William listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797; James (b.1780); Elizabeth (b.1784); Ann (b.1785); and William (b.1787). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Betty Crawford and their children included: William (b.1762), baptised in Hawick; and an unnamed child (b.1783), baptised in Wilton. William (18th C.) recorded at Adderstonelee on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (1764–1832) eldest son of Walter and Catherine Oliver, he was a Hawick-born hosiery manufacturer, and well-known Quaker in the Town. He was said to have been a sickly child, but grew to be healthy (although afflicted with asthma, for which it is said he sought relief in trips to Glasgow in later life). After seeing the stocking-frames introduced to Hawick by Bailie Hardie, at the age of 24 he went to Glasgow, where he worked as a journeyman to make enough money to buy a stocking-frame, which he brought back to Hawick. Thus in 1788 he set up in the hosiery business on his own, with the frame originally in a room of his father's house on the High Street at 9 or 11 High Street. He was also Cornet in 1786 and Town Treasurer for many years. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed baptisms in 1791 and 1795 for his sisters Betty and Agnes. He was recorded as ‘Hosier’ in 1796, when he witnessed a baptism for James Richardson. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter (likely his brother) in 1798. In 1797 (by which time he probably had 4 frames) he acquired a lease of part of the old Inkle Company’s property, off what would be Commercial Road, where he started carding and spinning. He met William Watson on sales trips to Glasgow and in 1804 formed the partnership Wilson & Watson, then building Dangerfield Mills. In 1819 he split with Watson to form William Wilson & Sons, Roughheugh (Langlands) Mill, and the family name passed to several subsequent hosiery firms through his sons, including George, who became Hawick’s first Provost. About 1800 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. A debt of his is recorded in Selkirk in 1814. In 1825 he is recorded as a hosiery manufacturer, yarn spinner and blanket maker on the High Street. He lived in a house on the south side of Buccleuch Street (about No. 19), shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He may also be the William whose property on the left side of Drumlanrig Square and near Rosalea Brae is marked on the same map; additionally he was the William about at 11 High Street (with his brother Walter, adjacent at No. 9). He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was active in the Edinburgh Meeting of the Society of Friends and many of his family were educated at Quaker schools. In 1794 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1772), daughter of William Richardson, who built the Whiskyhouse Mill; she died in 1815, following the birth of their last child. The couple moved into 11 High Street, where Mrs. Wilson ran a shop in the front, and built out at the back was the stocking shop. They had a family of 15, including: Isabella (b.1794), who died young; Walter of Orchard (b.1796); Katherine (1798–1873), who married John Glenny; William (b.1799), who died in infancy; Isabella (1800–76), who married Andrew Galloway Hunter, Glasgow manufacturer, and was mother of Sir William Wilson Hunter, historian and Indian scholar; William (b.1801), hat manufacturer; Elizabeth (1802–72), who married cattle-breeder John Cruickshank; Margaret (1803–63), who married James Gibb from Edinburgh, who went to India to be secretary to James Wilson, but arrived on the day of his funeral, and was father of a Liberal M.P., also James Gibb; James (1805–60), founder of ‘the Economist’; John (1806–86), who married Margaret Scott, and lived at Ladjalaw; Ann (1808–77), who married Anthony Cruickshank, brother of her brother-in-law; Agnes (1809–13); Deborah (1810–12); Jane (1812–13); and George (1815–98), Hawick’s first Provost. The witnesses in 1794 were merchant George Turnbull and currier John Straiton (both married to his sisters). Most of his children attended Hawick Grammar School and were then sent to a Society of Friends boarding school in Yorkshire, Ackworth. He died from William (18th/19th C.) known artist). He is buried in Peckham. His business day-book from about 1790 is preserved in the Museum, which also has a portrait of him (by an unknown artist). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Aitkin and their children included: William (b.1790); Francis (b.1792); Ann (b.1795); Robert (b.1796); Ann (again, b.1799); and Betty (b.1801). William (18th/19th C.) ‘Hynd’ at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He is probably the William who married Mary Grieve and whose son Robert was baptised in 1801. William (b.c.1770s) stockmaking in Denholm, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. William (b.c.1780) servant at Deanbrae according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. William (b.c.1780) shepherd at ‘Ashtrees hill’ in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. A note states that he had 2 children, presumably suggesting that he should be exempted from serving. He may be the William whose children Walter (b.1797), Ann (b.1800) and Isabel (b.1803) are recorded being baptised in Southdean. It is possible that the same William was married to Isabel Cuthbertson and had children Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’, b.1806), Andrew (b.1809) and Helen (b.1814). William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Tudhope in East Bank Kirk in 1809. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Hoy and their son John was baptised in 1814. His name appears on the Militia ballot list for Roberton Parish in 1812; he is absent from the rectified list, suggesting he had moved or become too old. William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Paterson in East Bank Kirk in 1818 William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Ker and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included Elizabeth (b.1820), Andrew (b.1822) and Mary ‘Ridden’ (b.1824). William (1779–1845) eldest son of shoemaker Peter, he was a shoemaker himself. He was recorded as a shoemaker on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1799 and again in 1801. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a shoemaker and leather cutter on the Howegate. On the 1841 census he is recorded at about 2 Howegate, with his large family and female servant, Esther Reid. He served as a Town Councillor. In 1821 he married Judith Grant, housekeeper at Wilton Lodge, daughter of John Grant, who was overseer to George Cumming of Rulgas, near Forres. Their children included: Patrick Hardie (1821–44); John Grant (1823–56); Harriet (b.1826); Joan (1827–1910); Agnes (1829–1905); James Anderson (b.1830), engineer in the Royal Navy; William Henry Brougham (1831–56), sugar planter; George Elliot (1833–75) of the City of Glasgow Bank; James; Beatrice; and Alexander. He appears to have secondly married Isabella, who was from Elgin; in 1851 she was ‘House Proprietor’ at about 1 Buccleuch Place, recorded as mother of 3 of his children, and with Esther Reid still with the family. William (b.1800/1) frameworker in Hawick. He was living on Tannage Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes Michie and their children included: Margaret (b.1820); James (b.1823); George (b.1826); Jane (b.1828); and Robert (b.1834). William (19th C.) married Jane Sibbald in Wilron in 1830. William (1801–57) second son of manufacturer William. Like most of his other siblings, he went to Hawick Grammar School and then Ackworth School in Yorkshire, run by the Society of Friends. He apprenticed to a hat-maker in Hawick, Mr. McCaskie. He went to London with his brother James and sister Katherine around 1824, as a hat manufacturer (with Christie & Co.), and became a successful businessman there. He is listed as ‘hat manufacturer, London’ among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He lived on Coburg Road in Peckham, originally with his brother James, their sisters Margaret and Elizabeth keeping house for them. The firm was called Wilson, Irwin & Wilson, with a hattery on the north side of London Bridge. They started by making beaver hats, but moved into silk when that became the fashion. It is said that he retired at a fairly young age, with a considerable fortune. He was called upon in 1851 to arbitrate in the splitting of the business of William Wilson & Sons between his brothers Walter, John and George. He married Margaret MacDonald and their children were: William (d.1868); Katharine; Helen (d.1857); James (d.1857); Alice (d.1857); Henry, who married a Henderson; John Treader, Isa Elder; George; and Annie. He died, along with 3 of his children (James, Helen and Alice), in a tragic bathing accident at Dunbar. William (b.1805) frameworker in Hawick, son of John and Wilhelmina Irvine. He was living on Tait’s Close in 1841 and at about 32 High Street in 1851 (with his brother Walter also living with him). He married Jane

Wulson an Airmstrong’s

Scott in Wilton in 1830 and their children included: John (b.1830); David (b.1834); Gilbert Elliot (b.1836); Jane (b.1838); and Williamina (b.1842). William (b.1824), with the mother’s name given as Janet Scott, may also have been his child. William (b.c.1805) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 2 Drumlanrig Square. In 1851 his widow was a ‘Poultry Keeper’ at Easter Hillend in Minto Parish. His wife was Joan or Jean Scott and their children included: John (b.c.1826); Joan (b.c.1828); Gilbert Elliot (b.1836); Robert (b.c.1838); Thomas (b.c.1840); and William (b.c.1842). William (b.1805/6) wool sorter in Hawick, born in Galshields. He was living on O’Connell Street in 1841 and 1851. He married Janet Hunter in Wilton in 1827 and their children included: Margaret (b.c.1828); Isabella (b.c.1831); Mary (b.c.1834); Walter (b.1836); Jane (b.1839); Janet (b.1841); and Elizabeth (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. William (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Nicholas Little and their children included: Walter (b.1822); Jane (b.1824); William (b.1826); James (b.1828); Helen (b.1830); and Andrew (b.1832). Thomas (b.1836), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. William (1823/4–76) son of William and Isabella Laidlaw. He was a spinner at Lynnwood, like his father, before emigrating to Australia. William Richardson (1839–96) son of John and grandson of the William, the original manufacturer of the family. He lived at Ladylaw, like his father before him and continued his father’s manufacturing business. He married Jane Macpherson (1839–1924) and their children included: John Graham (1862–1928); Isabella (b.1864), who married Robert Elliot, farmer in Hermitage; Margaret Scott (b.1866); William Richardson (1869–1902), Cornet in 1894; Elizabeth (b.1873); Thomas (b.c.1876); and perhaps James (b.c.1885). William Elliot (1868–1950) son of George Elliot and grandson of Hawick shoemaker William. He became a chemist and was associated with Hawick Archaeological Society. He was a friend of James Sinton, who was one of those who helped him compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He donated the painting of John Wilson (in Cornet’s dress) to the Museum. William A. (19th/20th C.) clerk and later cashier at Blenkhorn’s. He was long connected with Allars Kirk.

a partnership between Thomas Wilson and William Elliot and lasted between the years 1823 and 1830. Wilson then started on his own, and Elliot’s grew to be the most prominent hosiery firm in the country.

Wulson & Glenny’s (wul-sin-in-gle-neez) n. Wilson & Glenny’s tweed mill at Langlands and Laidlaw. It started in 1876 (following the Collie Disaster) from the former Wilson & Armstrong’s. The partnership was between George Wilson and James Glenny (his nephew), together with Wilson’s sons Charles John and George Murray. The name was originally ‘Wilsons & Glenny’, but it became ‘Wilson & Glenny Ltd.’ in 1891. The firm became one of the largest tweed manufacturers in the South of Scotland. The families retained control of the company until around WWII. The main factory was decimated by fire in 1959, although rebuilt in 1961. It closed in 1980 and was converted into the Lidl supermarket and car park. Company records exist covering the period 1902–75. The mill was also known in later years as ‘Glenny’s’.

Wulson an Watson’s (wul-sin-in-wawt-sinz) n. hosiery firm of William Wilson & William Watson, established in 1804 in the old Inkle House on what would be Commercial Road. They then constructed Langlands Mill and Dangerfield Mill further along Wilton Dam. It is said that Wilson was the meticulous businessman and Watson the consummate salesman. The firm split in 1819, with the Wilsons taking Langlands Mill and the Watsons taking Dangerfield Mill. This was the beginning of several of the largest manufacturers in Hawick.

Wulson Burn (wul-sin-burn) n. Wilson Burn, stream that emerges from Hellmoor Loch and runs in a roughly southern direction to reach Alemoor Loch.

the Wulson Cup (thu-wul-sin-kup) n. bowling trophy, it was presented to the Town Council in 1925 to be competed for on the bowling green in the Park. Last presented in 1959, it is now in the Museum.

Wulson Drive (wul-sin-driv) n. Wilson Drive, a street in Burnfoot, lying above Hamilton Road. It was built in 1967 and named after Provost George Wilson.

Wulson’s (wul-sinz) n. hosiery firm started by William Wilson in 1788 when he brought back a stocking-frame from Glasgow. In 1797 he acquired part of the old Inkle Company’s property on the Under Haugh, and began carding and spinning there. By about 1804 he formed a partnership with William Watson, but this split again in 1819. He later assumed his sons as partners, and the firm of William Wilson & Sons lasted until 1851, when the 3 sons (Walter, John and George) each took part of the firm to run themselves. In 1826 the firm were the first to use foreign wool for the manufacture of fine flannels. William Wilson & Sons was the first firm in Hawick to use steam power, Melrose’s supplying the engine in 1831. Around 1832 the firm moved to manufacturing woollen belts that were said to be a preventative for cholera. In about 1835 they started weaving flannel. In Pigot’s 1837 directory the firm is listed at Langlands and Weensland Mills, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. It was still listed at Langlands and Weensland Mills in Slater’s 1852 directory, although dissolved by then.

Wulson’s Close (wul-sinz-klos) n. once the popular name for the passageway at 13 High Street, also known as Quaker’s Close. It was named after William Wilson & Sons who had premises (and possibly a residence) there.

Wulson’s Shooder (wul-sinz-shoo-dur) n. Wilson’s Shoulder, southern ridge of Pike Fell, south-east of Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. There are remains of a settlement, about 39 m by 34 m, divided into 2 courts, of uncertain age.

wult (wult) v., poet. wilt – ‘An’ saith untill him, A’ thae things wull I gie thee, gif thou wult fa’ doun an’ wurship me’ [HSR], richteous . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Wi’ the mercifu’ thou wult shaw thyself’ mercifi’: wi’ the upricht man thou wult shaw thyself’ up-richt’ [HSR].

wultna (wult-na) contr., poet. wilt not – ‘Wultna thou, O God, who rest casen us aff?’ an’ wultna thou, O God, gang furth wi’ our hosts?’ [HSR].

Wulton (wul’in, wil’in, wil’tin) n. Wilton, originally a separate settlement on the north side of the Teviot. It is first mentioned in a deed of about 843 in which Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne secured to that See land in Teviotdale including ‘Wiltuna’. The church transferred to the Diocese of Glasgow in the 12th century, when there are also several references to ‘ecclesiam de Wilthona’. A large part of the Parish of Wilton was owned by the Langlands family for centuries. The town had its own Common in the area behind Stirches, the feuars being called together at Stintieknowe. In 1627 it was reported that ‘there is no foundation for hospital or schooll, albeit they war necessar’. In the 18th century Wilton consisted of the Langlands and Stirches estates, together with Wulton Auld Kirk (wul'-in-awld-kirk) n. popular name used in the latter part of the 19th century to refer to the former church of Wilton Parish, after it was replaced in 1861 with a new building across the street. This church stood in the middle of the old churchyard and was built in 1762, replacing what was probably the pre-Reformation church. It was a square construction, with windows on either side, 2 entrances, the pulpit on the south wall, and a belfry on the west side. Since it was too small for the congregation, an extension was built to the north side in 1801, designed by William Elliot of Kelso. A new gallery was formed at about that time, with the expense split between the Duke of Buccleuch, Rev. Dr. Charters, William Oliver and other subscribers; the lower part became a vault for the Charters family. The church was abandoned in 1861 when the new building was ready. At that time there was some remodelling done, including removal of the belfry. The ruins of the church can be seen in an early photograph. The churchyard was largely cleared of tombstones in 1957. David Hill wrote a poem about watching the demolition of the last gable of the church itself – ‘I watched the deliberate Last Destruction o Wulton Yin simmer Setterday afternoon. Wulton was biggit in comely stane Quarryt frae native hills – Frei-stane and whun ...’ [DH].

Wulton Bank (wul'-in-bawngk) n. house on the eastern side of Princess Street, built on the site of the stables of Old Wilton Bank. Also formerly the name used for ‘Old Wilton Bank’ the home of the Watson family, built above their main factory at Dangerfield. It was later the home of David Laing and then Robert Innes (sometimes written as one word).

the Wulton Bar (thu-wul'-in-bawr) n. former pub at the foot of Dickson Street, popularly known as ‘Genties’.

Wulton Boolin Club (wul'-in-bö-lin-klub) n. organisation established in 1895 or 1896, with green and clubhouse at 6 West Stewart Place. The first President was Rev. J.R. Wilson, with Provost Barrie as Vice-President and D.D. Deans the first Secretary.

Wulton Burn (wul'-in-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot at the far end of the Park, near Overhall. It is said that some windings in this stream were used as locations for secret sermons by Covenanter preachers around the 1660s and 70s. There was formerly a small mill lade going past Netherhall farm (not to be confused with the Wilton Dean or Cala Burn).

Wultonburn (wul'-in-burn) n. farm on the Wilton Burn past Overhall, now rented out as holiday cottages and having a Cashmere shop. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was Philip Scott, and other residents included Matthew Hunter, George Scott and William Duncan. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in ‘liferent’ to Margaret a few smaller farms, the Roughheugh corn mill, the Parish Kirk, Manse and School, and houses at Damside, Sandbed, the Peth-heid, Gib’s Nose, the Maut Steep, Saut Haa and Lockiesedge. It remained a scattered village until it was developed as cheap housing for mill workers in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, when it became increasingly dependent on Hawick. With bridge access across the Teviot becoming easy, it grew more and more clear that Wilton and Hawick were two parts of the same town. Wilton came within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick following the local Police Act of 1861 (which was not without its critics), bringing new life to the community. For ecclesiastic matters the parish has remained separate, however – ‘And for the Priest o’ Wilton, His coat it is worn thin ...’ [JSB], ‘...While Wilton’s broad domain, that shuts the view With pleasant blending, skirts the western sky’ [JCG] (sometimes written ‘Wultin’; the name first occurs in the early 9th century, about 3 centuries before the first record of Hawick; it has been spelled in various ways over the years; it is ‘Wiltona’ and ‘Wiltona’ in the late 12th century, is ‘Wiltoun’ in 1434, ‘Wylton’ in 1394, ‘Wyltoun’ in 1431, ‘Wilton’ in 1448, ‘Wiltoune’ in 1453, ‘Wilton’ in 1468, ‘Weltoune’ in 1495, ‘Wiltoun’ in 1499/1500 and 1502, ‘Weltoune’ in 1501/2, ‘Weltoun’ in 1511, ‘Vultoun’ in 1576/7 and 1588, ‘Woltoun’ in 1594 and 1615, ‘Woltoun’ and ‘Woulton’ in 1611, ‘Woltun’ in 1634, ‘Waltone’ and ‘Woltoune’ in 1663, ‘Woltoune’ again in 1688 and 1690 and ‘Weliton’ locally in 1722; the local pronunciation is also written ‘Wultin’; the most likely origin is the Old English ‘welig’ or ‘wilig tun’, i.e. ‘farm by the willows’, while the suggestion that it was once owned by someone called William has no supporting evidence).

Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. The land appears to have been part of the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1643. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Scott, Mary Scott, John Scott, Robert Scott, Margaret Scott, Bessie Rashie, James Scott, Philip Scott, Marion Miller, Robert Scott, Mary Scott, Walter Scott, Helen Scott, Robert Scott, Isobel Thomson, Robert Scott, Robert Scott and Isobel Scott. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and the Turnbulls in the 19th. It was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch listed in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1690 it was rented by James Riddell, James Hogg, John Scott and John Hunter. In 1694 it was rented to Robert Scott, Bessie Scott, John Scott and Robert Langleys. In 1694 there were 8 households listed there. John Scott was recorded there in 1696. In 1696 the widow of Thomas Mitchelson joined the farmers, and James Irving in 1698. William Scott was also there in 1698 and James Telfer and Janet Scott in 1705. James Irving was still there in 1708. William Scott and James Irvine were tenants there in 1711. Walter Scott was living there in at least 1713–27, another Walter Scott 1721–32. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it extended to 361 acres and was bounded by Whitehaugh, Brieryhill, Easter Highchesters, Todshaw, Whitfield and Mervinslaw; farmhouses are shown on both side of the Wilton Burn. James Riddell was there in 1718 and died there in 1736. James Scott was there in 1724, William Scott in at least 1735–39, Andrew Irvine in at least 1739–59, Alexander Burnet in 1747–49 and Robert Easton in 1748. John Stavert was there in 1765, Adam Easton and James Robson in 1770, William Cook in 1772, James Cairns in 1780 and William Miller in 1786–89. The lands were valued at £33 10d in 1764 when the former churchyard had run out of space. It contains 17 graves maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. By 2011 it contained no new burial plots.

marked ‘Wiltoune burne’ on a 1650 parish map, is on Blaue’s 1654 map as simply ‘Wiltoun’ and is ‘Wiltouneburne’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey). Wultonburn Epps (wul’-in-burn-eps) n. former small holding, now the name of a field on Wiltonburn farm. It is ‘Wiltonburne Esps’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with John Gray recorded as the farmer there. Wulton Burnfit (wul’-in-burn-fi’) n. former name for a steading in Wilton Parish, probably at the foot of the Wilton Burn. It is recorded as ‘W: burnfoot’ in 1727, when William Scott was there.

Wulton Camp (wul’-in-kawmp) n. army camp, at Howdenbank, where the Police and Fire Stations were later built. It was used during WWII for British troops, and also used for holding prisoners of war. There were around 200 German prisoners there in 1946. Aerial photographs show at least 44 Nissen huts. It may also have been known as Wilton Hill Camp.

Wulton Ceemetry (wul’-in-see-mi’-ree) n. burial place of a large fraction of local residents, having two separate locations over the centuries. The Old Cemetery was begun with the construction of Wilton Old Church in 1762 and essentially closed along with the church in 1861. There must have been an earlier churchyard on more or less the same site, since there was a church there for many hundreds of years. The old cemetery was neglected for many years, with many headstones being replaced in 1957, the railings and wall being removed in 1961 and all but a few notable stones being removed to make way for public pathways and grassy areas. The new Wilton Cemetery lies between Wilton Hill and Burnfoot, and is one of the town’s two main cemeteries. It was opened in 1864 when the former churchyard had run out of space. It contains 17 graves maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. By 2011 it contained no new burial plots.
Wulton Common (wul'-in-ko-min) n. the Common formerly associated with the Parish of Wilton. The rights to ‘fog and feal’ on the land included the tenants of Langlands, Brieryhill, Borthaugh, Borthaugh Mill, Wiltonburn, Overhall, Drinkstone, Stousle, Wester Groundstone, Whitfield, Mervinlaw, Todshaw, Whitehaugh, Heap, Timberside, Scawmill, Greensidehall, Leaheads, Mabonlaw, Northcroft, Easter Howlands, Wester Howlands, Silverbuthall and the Minister of Wilton. It contained several areas of boggy land, including Benty Mosses, Craggy Squair Moss, Hodies Moss, Long Moss, Rotten Moss, Threehead Moss, Titling Moss, Todshaw Moss, Whitsons Moss and Woolaw Moss, from which peat and turf was cut. There were tracks out to several of these mosses. A road crossing the middle of the Common was labelled ‘The St. Boswells Fair Road’, corresponding to an old drove road; it was said that drovers coming from the Highlands would rest on the Common during their journey. There were at least 3 distinct loans leading up to the Common, namely the Western, Eastern and Heap Loans. The tenant at Callburn was employed as the ‘common herd’, who had charge of the ‘common hirsel’, which pastured on the Common from April to September. The Common was perambulated by Langlands of Langlands, Scott of Whitehaugh and Scott of Falnash in about 1705 and again in 1764. The area was estimated to be 962.5 acres. The Common was divided in the period 1764–66, before which it was annually ‘stented’ at Stintyknowe. ‘State of the Process of Division of the Commonty of Wilton, being Robert Langlands of that Ilk and others against Henry Duke of Buccleuch and others’, was published in 1765, and contains a map showing owners’ names and acreages, as well as a description of the heritors who owned land in the Parish and evidence given regarding the usage of the common. Some sasines for land included phrases such as ‘together with the liberty of fog and seal in the commonty of Wilton agreeable to his share amongst the other heretors of Wilton’. The land was divided among the local landowners, namely the Duke of Buccleuch and Lairds of Harden, Philippaugh, Langlands, Whitehaugh, Howlands, Coldhouse and Easter Heap, as well as the Minister of Wilton (who received about 13 acres). Unlike for Hawick Common, where the Burgesses had land rights, here the rights were only held by the heritors of Wilton. The National Archives contains several related documents and the Borders Collections Online contains a full transcript of the legal proceedings.

Wulton Cottage (wul'-in-ko'-eej) n. small house off the south side of Langlands Road in the mid-19th century. It was home of Margaret Turnbull (nee Dalgleish) who probably ran it as the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Wulton Crescent (wul'-in-kre-sin’) n. street named in 1864, incorporating Langlands Place in 1865 and Wilton Terrace and Hopepark in 1869. The house at the top was built using stone from the original Wilton Mause, around the 1840s. The east side was demolished in 1971/72 along with Dickson Street. New houses were then built at the south end in 1973, closing it to traffic.

Wulton Crescent Lane (wul'-in-kre-sin’-län) n. lane between Wulton Crescent and Dickson Street, described as ‘Wester Kirkstyle of Wiltown’ in a 1726 charter and later as ‘Wilton Kirkstyle’. It disappeared with the reconstruction of the area in 1971–73.

Wulton Dam (wul'-in-dawm) n. Wilton Dam, mill lade beginning at the Cauld, running parallel to the Teviot behind Victoria Road, turning at roughly right angles (along the side of Macagt-gart’s skinworks) and continuing alongside Commercial Road. It was also sometimes referred to as the Roughheugh Dam. The lade dates from at least the 18th century, but probably existed in a primitive state from much earlier, and was much expanded later. From its source down to the Mill the land lay within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick, and so in the 18th century it was ceremoniously possessed during the Common Riding, with stones and earth symbolically thrown into it. It was more fully developed by the Wilton Dam Company in the early 19th century to provide water power for the factories of Wilton, specifically Ladylaw, Dangerfield and Wilton Mills. In 1815 it is recorded that the Hawick Council earned money from the rent of two wooden bridges over the dam. The course of the lade is shown clearly on Wood’s 1824 map. An extension was built from Wilton Mills through Wilton Glebe lands to come out at Mansfield in 1827–29. A flood carried some of the lower part away in 1835–36 and it was further extended in 1837, with a new outlet. Yet another outlet was built near the North Bridge in 1876, but never used. Several other outflows into the Teviot were built along the side of Commercial Road during the 19th century. A court case in 1871 for having the dam fenced led to an outcome in favour of the manufacturers, although a wall was built for public safety. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Philhope and Broadlee Lochs to flow into the Borthwick (and hence the Teviot). From 1864 the dam could be fed by water from the new Allan Water supply and the flow was managed jointly by Wilson & Glenny, William Watson & Sons and Dicksons & Laings. The sluice gate at the Coble was closed from Saturday evening to Monday morning to allow water to flow over the Cauld. The lade was largely filled in after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959, with parts behind Victoria Road disappearing in the 1970s, and a small last section visible behind Wilton Mills disappearing in 2016.

Wulton Dean (wul'-in-deen) n.  Wilton Dean, an area to the west of Hawick, on the higher ground behind the Park, constituting a separate community in Wilton. It was mentioned as early as the 15th century, and was formerly part of the Langlands estate, being originally known as ‘Langlands Dean’, and more familiarly as ‘the Dean’. The name became officially ‘Wilton Dean’ in 1861. The centre of the village is around the Cala (sometimes Dean) Burn. Here was the site of the only trade that developed there, stock-making in the Dean Spinning Mill, which thrived in the 19th century. Because of this factory the population was as high as 250 in 1850. However, the factory did not last into the 20th century, and the old mill pond was drained to form a drying green and play area by the stream. The village was once illuminated by gas lamps, with a lamp-lighter going round each evening and morning. There was also once someone appointed to wake up the villagers in the mornings. It has been suggested that the novel ‘The Cottagers of Glenburnie’ by Elizabeth Hamilton is based on the Dean, and written when she visited James Anderson in Wilton Lodge in 1808. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

Wulton Dean Schuil (wul'-in-deen-skil) n.  former school in Wilton Dean, run by the Wilton School Board. It was probably set up in the 1870s as a primary school. Its pupils famously went on strike in 1889 (perhaps inspired by an earlier strike in Gala), marching into town in an unsuccessful attempt to close the Trinity Board School, demanding ‘shorter hours, fewer and easier lessons and better teachers’. The one-day strike made the national press and led to other school strikes throughout Britain. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

the lower Borthwick valley whose residents complained about a raid by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year; the tenant at that time was Patrick Hunter. In 1569 the superiority of lands (along with Wiltonburn and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; they were held for payment of a silver penny at Pentecost. In 1586 the lands are among those promised in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 the lands were granted to William Cairncross of Colmslie and his wife Grizel Scott. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. In 1604 they were resigned and granted to Walter Scott of Branxholme. There is a deed relating to them in the Douglass of Cavers papers in 1605. It was still listed among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Wiltoune Greyne’ in 1549, ‘Wiltoun Greine’ in 1569, ‘Woltoun Grene’ in 1586, ‘Woltoungrein’ in 1603, ‘Weltoungrein’ in 1653, ‘Woltoungrein’ in 1661 and ‘Waltenmegrein’ and ‘Waltongrein’ in 1663).

Wulton Grove (wul’-in-gröv) n. house built in the early 1800s for William Cathrae, merchant and banker, near the family land at Damside (‘Cathrae’s Haugh’). The land between Victoria Road and Albert Road was originally feued to John Ormiston in 1764. There was a wooded region north and west of Wilton Grove, hence the name. The house was occupied by Peter Laidlaw in the mid-19th century. There was also a small stocking shop there, run by Laidlaw. When he moved to Jedburgh it was taken over by Robert Murray, then a Mr. Routledge, and eventually Peter Scott, being the antecedent of Pesco’s.

Wultonhaa (wul’-in-haw) n. former name sometimes used for the main house in Langlands, seat of the Baron of Wilton. It is unclear what farm was meant by the same name on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Thomas Darling and Dr. Gavin Turnbull are recorded there (‘Wiltonhall’ in a charter of 1531/2).

Wultonhill (wul’-in-hil) n. place name used for the location of James Langlands of that Ilk in 1574, when he was listed as superior of the lands of Borthaugh. The phrase ‘de Wiltouinhill’ may simply be an error for the Barony of Wilton.

Wulton Hill (wul’-in-hil) n. street being the continuation of Dovemount Place, running up and over the hill towards the Burnfoot junction. It was named in 1871, previously being called Stell Brae or ‘Stelloose Brae’. It contains several large villas on the east side. In the mid-1900s there was W. Knox’s grocer’s shop at the corner with Wilton Hill Terrace. The name is more generally applied to the high ground roughly between the Leisure Centre and the Police Station.

Wulton Hill Lane (wul’-in-hil-lan) n. lost street name for the short stretch joining Wilton Hill to Wilton Hill Terrace. It was popularly more often by the name of the shop at the foot of the hill.

Wulton Hill Terrace (wul’-in-hil-te-ris) n. street above Wilton Hill, built in 1879, originally called ‘Hill Terrace’ and renamed in 1882.

Wulton Home (wul’-in-häm) n. former children’s home located roughly where Melrose Place is today, in the former Wilton Manse building. The house was demolished before the area was developed in the 1960s.

Wultonian (wul., wil-tö-nee-in) n., arch. a resident of Wilton, particularly before the town became part of Hawick in 1861 – ‘...and it was held incompetent for a Wiltonian to act as Cornet at the Common Riding’ [RM], ‘Viv Sharp wasni a Hawick man, hei was a Wultonian and prood o’d’ [IWL].

Wulton Kirk (wul’-in-kirk) n. Wilton Church, the main church serving the Parish of Wilton, the present building dating from 1859. It was a Rectory from early times, associated with Glasgow Diocese (with the second highest value, after Hawick, in the Deaconry of Teviotdale in 1275). In about 1225 John of Wilton settled a dispute with the Bishop of Glasgow in which he granted 5 merks to the mother church, payable annually at the fairs of St. James of Roxburgh. The church was thereafter an independent parsonage, with the patronage held by one half of the Barony of Wilton. The earliest clergyman that we have any record of is ‘Robert de Dene’ in 1296, although the first structure was probably built even earlier. The parsonage and patronage were transferred to Melrose Abbey in 1342, the patronage shortly thereafter passed to John, son of Margaret (possibly the Langlands family) and by 1494 the patronage was held by the Earl of Bothwell. The Old Church was built in 1762 in the middle of Wilton Old Churchyard, to the south of Princes Street. Earlier churches stood on the same site. There was an investigation into the state of the Kirk and Parish in 1627 and ‘stents’ for kirk repairs in 1659 and in 1673/4. There is a record of the church being neglected during the vacancy in the ministry in 1694, and including mention of a ‘quire’ (suggesting it may have been the pre-Reformation chapel). A corner-stone from that building is all that survives. This church also had a loft of Scott of Highchester, trasferred to Roberton after 1690 (but the sittings there were still disputed in the early years of the 18th century). Extra seating, namely ‘common forms’ in the choir, was mentioned in 1736. The roof was in a sorry state by 1761 and the building was replaced in 1762, along with a new schoolhouse. This church was a plain square building, with the pulpit on the south wall, a large window on either side, two entries on the same side, and a belfry on the west gable. This building was enlarged to the north in 1801, repaired in 1829 and closed in 1861 when it was replaced by the new church across the road. The building was for a while used as a mission hall, but later demolished. Photographs of the old church exist. The new building, started in 1859, was designed by John Thomas Emmett of London (after winning a competition), and built by George Tait, builders. It is in a Gothic revival style that went against the trend for Presbyterian churches of its time. The exterior has a 4-storey bell tower, with a slated pyramidal roof. Interior columns are in Caen stone (common in English churches, but unusual in Scotland), with also some Bath stone arches and some exterior stone from Denholmhill. Construction was completed by 1862. However, it was extensively altered in 1907/8 to plans by J.P. Alison. The galleries were removed and a chancel and transepts added, with Caen stone and some Iona marble used in the interiors. The adjacent extensive church halls were built in 1897, also with J.P. Alison as architect, this time in a red brick Arts & Crafts style. War Memorial windows by Lilian J. Pocock were added in 1924. The building to the north, with its red brick spiralling Tudor chimneys and cupola-style bell tower, was designed as the Sunday School. The church and halls are both Grade B listed buildings. The church once held a great deal of land called Wilton Manse or Wilton Glebe, almost all of which was sold off to the town in the 19th century. The Earl of Bothwell held the patronage of the Kirk in the early 16th century, and it transferred to Scott of Branxholme in 1550. Kirk Session records exist from 1694. The oldest existing communion token is from 1763; it is lead and square with the letters ‘W.K.’. Other tokens exist from 1861, oval in shape and made of mixed metal. The congregation was linked with Burnfoot and Teviothead in 2004. Famous ministers include William Crawford and Samuel Charters. The parish was left vacant for about 5 1/2 years following the Revolution of 1689. A roll of the ministry is: Robert de Dene, Parson in 1296; John Langton from 1394; Simon Wardlaw, Rector in at least 1432–1454; Philip Waugh, Chaplain in 1454; George Carmichael, Rector in 1477; James Davidson, Clerk in 1489; James Murray, Rector in 1503; Andrew Turnbull, Chaplain in 1512; Peter Langlands until 1549; John Greenlaw from 1549; Robert Wilson, Curate in 1552; Michael Balfour, at least 1561–63; Thomas Weston, Parson at least 1567–74; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Langlands, Reader from 1574 until about 1589; John Bonar 1593; John Johnston 1594–95; John Abernethy (possibly united with Jedburgh) 1596; William Clerk 1602–c.41; John Langlands 1641–69; John Stewart 1683–89; Robert Cunningham 1694–1712; William Crawford 1713–37; James Simpson 1738–71; Samuel Charters 1772–1825; David Stevenson 1826–51; James Stewart 1851–86; John Rudge Wilson 1887–c.1926; Charles Cooper 1926–30; John Beattie 1931–59; George Watson 1960–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998–(it is ‘Ecclesiam de wiltona’, ‘Ecclesiam de Wiltona’, ‘Ecclesiam de wilton’ and ‘Ecclesiam de Wilton’ in the reign of William; it appears as an unnamed church symbol on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript and is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Wiltoun K.’).

Wulton Kirkstyle (wul’-in-kirk-stil) n. former street name in Wilton Parish, recorded on the 1841 census. It is probably another name for Wulton Lane.

Wulton Kirkyaird Entry (wul’-in-kirk-yärd-en’-ree) n. another name for Wulton Lane (also called just Kirkyaird Entry).

Wulton Lane (wul’-in-län) n. Wilton Lane, running between Commercial Road and Princes Street, formerly known as Kirkyard Entry because it ran past Old Wilton Churchyard. There are no addresses on this street, although there was once a joiner’s yard there.

Wulton Loan (wul’-in-lön) n. one of a number of loanings leading from the main inhabited parts of Wilton Parish up to Wilton Common. There was one called Heap Loan, which ran through the Heap area to about Stintyknowe. Then there was the Easter Loan, which roughly followed the Cala Burn and the Wester Loan ‘betwixt Todshaw and Whitfield’.

Wulton Lodge

Wulton Lodge (wul’-in-loj, -luj) n. name of the mansion within the Park, and also formerly the name of the estate it occupied, called Langlands before about 1790. The walls of a much older fortified house were discovered in the grounds behind. The Hearth Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths there. Tax was paid on 10 windows there in 1748. The current house may have been started in the 18th century, although it was remodelled in 1859 (the date on the house), when an extra storey and bow windows were added. The name of the architect is unknown, but was probably the same as whoever did the designed for Hoscote at about the same time. Apart from modern heating, lighting etc., and the addition of the Scott Gallery, the house is much as it was in the late 19th century. It is currently a Category B listed building. A carved stone above the entrance has the monogrammed letters ‘DMF’ for David and Mary Pringle, the last private owners, with a lower stone bearing half of the Pringle and Anderson coats of arms, with the motto ‘Sursum corda’ (‘lift up your heart’). On the gable overlooking the War Memorial there are also two biblical texts. The estate was for centuries known as Langlands and had encompassed the entire western half of the modern Wilton. The earliest recorded owner is Thomas de Charteris in the mid-13th century. It was granted to the Langlands family in 1451, who owned it for over 300 years. Unfortunately all the early charters relating to the property have been lost. It passed to Thomas Elliot in 1783, then to Lord Napier in 1790. James Anderson purchased it in 1805, and had the Avenue created around 1810. His daughter married David Pringle, and it was the Pringle family home until the Burgh purchased its 107 acres in 1889 for £14,000. The boundaries of the estate were first ridden on the Saturday of the Common Riding in 1890 (this followed by refreshments and some speeches and singing outside the Lodge were the only official marking of the new public purchase of the estate). It was used as a private school from about 1892–98, then remained unoccupied for a few years while the Council contemplated many suggestions for its use. Finally it was converted into the town’s Museum in 1910, when the Archaeological Society’s extensive collection was moved there. A 25 foot captured German field gun was positioned there in 1920, but moved in WWII. A stone ball found on the grounds is now in the Museum. The nearby grounds contains several items of interest: the Wallace Thorn memorial; an old well; stonework from the Buccleuch Memorial; the Burgh coat-of-arms from the Corn Exchange; a carved stone verse from Linden Park House; the ‘Glorious Dead’ War Memorial; the Fountain; the waterfall; the Guthrie Memorial; etc. – ‘Aa’ll sing o’ bonnie Wilton Lodge And o’ the Wallace Thorn’ [GD].

Wulton Lodge Academy (wul’-in-loj-aw-ka-du-mee) n. private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie, which moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name from the West End Academy. It taught both sexes as day pupils and boarders, including some pupils from abroad. There were several assistant teachers, some of whom were foreign. The school closed in 1898, and whether it moved to another location is uncertain.

Wulton Lodge Gate Lodge (wul’-in-loj-gä-loj, -luj, -luj) n. gate lodge house for Wilton Lodge, at the entrance to the Avenue and the foot of Roadhead. It was built in the early 1850s, being a pet project of Catherine Anderson. The builders and architects may have been Robert and John Hall (of Bowden), who worked on renovations to the main house. An extension to the west in the early 20th century resulted in the fork in the road being moved to outside the gates. The pillars for the gates are unusually topped with pyramids supported by balls (it appears on the Ordnance Survey map from about 1858).

Wulton Lodge Stables (wul’-in-loj-stä-bulz) n. former building behind (i.e. to the north of) the Museum, part of the estate of Wilton Lodge. It was situated at the top of the access road, essentially on the site where the Park-keeper’s house was later built. Probably built in the 19th century, the building is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It had an unusual design, consisting of 3 parts, with the central section having an ‘onion-shaped’ roof. It was used by a riding school, as stabling for the Mosstroopers’ Club and as finally as Parks Department storage. As well as stables, the building contained a house, which was last occupied in 1938, by the Cranston family. The entire construction was demolished in the 1950s. It can be seen in the background of several photographs of Wilton Lodge, but there are and no good images of the house itself. It was painted from memory by Walter Cranston and was the inspiration for an exhibition by local artist Andrew Cranston in 2013.
Wulton Lodge Witterfaa

Wulton Lodge Witterfaa (wul'-in-loj-wi'-ur-faw) n. name sometimes used for the picturesque waterfall on the Cala Burn behind Wulton Lodge, also referred to by local residents as just ‘the Witterfaa’. It was partly created by quarrying activity (and hence it is artificial), with some of the stone being used for the rebuilding of the Lodge itself.

Wulton Ludge (wul'-in-huj) n. alternative name for Wulton Lodge – ‘It’s a nice bit, Wultan Ludge’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ve a pairk in Wulton Ludge That e’en Fairyland micht grudge’ [TK].

Wulton Mains (wul'-in-mänz) n. former name for the lands attached to the Manse of Wilton Church, also known as Wulton Glebe and sometimes ‘the Mains of Wilton’.

Wulton Manse (wul'-in-manz) n. former Manse of Wilton Church, at 6 and 7 Mansfield Square. The original building was on the site of the Railway Station, specifically where the railway tank was later built, adjacent to the area known as ‘the Wilderness’, and with a small stream passing nearby. It was built around the 1780s, but probably replaced an earlier building on the same site; tax was paid on 18 windows in this earlier building in 1748. When it was demolished some of the stone was used to build the upper house in Wilton Crescent (nearest to Mansfield Lodge). The new manse was erected by the railway company in 1849 on ‘the Haugh’, i.e. the flatter land nearer the river. For several decades water was piped to it from the ‘Cadger’s Well’. Before the council bought the surrounding land in the 1870s it was the only house in the area. The house survives and has been split into flats. It is a grade C listed building. When this land was sold a new Manse was built in 1880 on Wilton Hill, standing near where Melrose Court is now. This building consisted of 3 storeys, with front stairs for the family and official visitors and a back staircase for the servants, and there were 4 outbuildings, initially stables, but later converted to garages. There were 6 bedrooms, with overnight accommodation often provided for visiting clergy, speakers, etc. The extensive gardens were on 2 levels and included a tennis lawn. In the 1940s it was deemed that the house was too large and the minister’s family was down-sized to Fenwick Park. The former building was converted into a children’s home and was demolished in 1960 to make way for Melrose Place. The (4th) house at Fenwick Park known as ‘The Elms’ was used as the Wilton Church Manse from 1945–89. The most recent Manse is on Wilton Hill Terrace.

Wulton Mill (wul'-in-mil) n. flour mill in Wilton, marked on Wood’s 1824 map on the east side of the foot of Wilton Path, and just to the south-west of Roughheugh Mill. It should not be confused with ‘Wulton Mills’. It may also have been known as Roughheugh Mill at times.

Wulton Mills (wul'-in-milz) n. Dickson & Laings main mill in the middle of Commercial Road (Nos. 31 and 32), with its distinctive clock tower, which is listed. The buildings were began in 1810–15, with the original mill being 46 feet long and 36 feet wide. The first spinning Jennies in Hawick driven by water were introduced here, as well as the first power-looms in 1830. A major new mill lade constructed in 1827–28. The mill was powered by 2 huge water wheels (installed by Gideon Scott and James Melrose), supplemented by a steam engine in 1831. The mill can be seen on a sketch made around 1830. In the 1846 flood, water burst through a partition at the side of the water wheel, flooding the scouring house. The factory was mostly destroyed by a fire in 1867, but rebuilt in 1869, and extensively altered over the years. In 1871 the workforce was estimated at 600 and the mill made 400,000 pounds of goods annually. The clock tower was constructed about 1877. The firm struggled, and by 1908 had closed, with the buildings put to other uses. Part was sold to the Scottish Tweed & Woollen Company, and other parts used by Mactaggart Bros., as a joiner’s yard, garage etc. There were local authority workshops and offices there, the buildings being upgraded in 1979–83. However, the mill was mostly empty from this time. Into the late 20th century, behind the main building, it was still possible to see part of the old mill lade of Wilton Dam (which once marked the boundary of the Common Haugh), as well as a pit for the former mill wheel. It was a grade B listed building, but nevertheless part was demolished in 2014 and the remainder in 2016. The mill lade and wheel-pit were filled in and the site was developed as an Aldi supermarket.

Wulton Pairish (wul'-in-pë-reesh, -paw-) n. Wilton Parish, which has always been separate from Hawick Parish, generally lying to the north side of the Teviot. It was a Rectory within the Diocese of Glasgow, taxed at £5 6s 8d in 1275 and £4 10s 6d in 1376. Around the time of the Reformation the boundary on the east was the Howden Burn, while on the west it stretched almost to the head of the Borthwick valley, with a detached part of Hassendean Parish splitting it in two between the Robertson and Harden Burns. The southern boundary of the Parish was essentially the Borthwick and Teviot, with the Ale bounding it to the north. For centuries the western part of the parish was served by a small church at Kirk Borthwick. The unsatisfactory state of affairs resulting in the suggestion in 1650 of moving the main Kirk to the Borthwick. In 1678 the rents of the parish were valued at £5672 in Roxburghshire, with an additional £960 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 the parish was extended to the east to include some of the former Hassendean Parish, while it lost its western part to the newly formed Robertson Parish. In more recent times it has been about 5 miles long, running south-west to north-east, about 17½ square miles, and having borders with Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Cavers, Hawick and Robertson Parishes. The boundary with Hawick has always been peculiar, with the area towards the Sandbed for a long time being in Wilton, and the Common Haugh etc. being in Hawick. In 1891 a detached part of Hawick Parish (where Albert Mills were built) was transferred to Wilton Parish, while a 1 acre part of Wilton, detached by the Common Haugh, was transferred to Hawick Parish. Whether the Parish once had a single owner is unknown, but since at least the early 13th century the west and east half-Baronies had separate owners. The Langlands family long held the eastern part, and the Wardlaw family held the western part in the 14th and 15th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch were major landowners for centuries, and eventually became Barons. The Chisholmes, and other Scotts are also prominent in Parish history. The Bothwells also held half the Barony from 1494 for about a century. For a long time the patronage of the church (i.e. right to choose the minister) alternated between Langlands and the holders of the other half of the barony; this right was confirmed to Bothwell in 1585, but was held by Scott of Buccleuch by the early 17th century. Kirk Borthwick was a chapel that served the western outlying portion of the Parish from at least the early 1300s until the 1650s. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £5400 in Roxburghshire and £700 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 it was valued at £5672. In more modern times, for ecclesiastical purposes, part of the Parish was attached to St. Margaret’s quoad sacra church in 1896, another part to Wilton South in 1929 and a further part to Burnfoot in 1951. The ecclesiastical boundaries of Wilton Parish were set at a Presbytery meeting in 1930. The Parish had small schools at Clarilaw, the Dean and Stoulsie. Wilton Path has long been the main thoroughfare through the heavily inhabited part of the Parish, as well as part of the road from Hawick to Edinburgh. Ecclesiastically the Parish was long in the Presbytery of Jedburgh, and synod of Merse and Teviotdale, and formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow from about 1100 (and earlier attached to Durham, and before that Lindisfarne). Heritors minutes books exist from November 1740 and Parochial Board minute books from 1853–95 are in the Borders Archive. The Session records start in 1694 and are fairly complete. However, the register of births is quite irregular (e.g. a gap 1699–1702 and spotty in the 1790s), there are no early death registers, and marriages are only recorded through the proclamation of banns. Minute books of the heritors start in 1723. The population in 1755 was 936. In 1799 there were approximately 1/3 as many men on the Militia ballot as in Hawick Parish (and about a factor of 3.5 smaller in 1801). Heads of households are recorded in 1835 and 1840, earlier than the first census. Note there are also Wilton Parishes in Berwickshire, Norfolk, North Yorkshire, Somerset, Wiltshire, Connecticut and elsewhere.

Wulton Park (wul’-in-park) n. another name for Wilton Lodge Park or the Park.

Wulton Park Road (wul’-in-park-rød) n. the road behind Wilton Lodge Park, which was only named in 1971 when private bungalows were built on some of the former allotments near the Walled Gardens. There has been more development in the subsequent years.

Wulton Peth (wul’-in-peth) n. Wilton Path, more commonly known as the Peth – ‘Now aw wad compare that, wi’ a shop in Hawick That was in Wulton Peth, at the fit ...’ [AY].

Wulton Place (wul’-in-plis) n. lost street, named about 1850 and incorporated into Princes Street in 1971. It ran from Dickson Street to the foot of Havelock Street and once contained the Wilton branch shop of the Hawick Co-op, as well as the Railway Hotel. In the mid-1900s there was a grocer’s at No. 11, Knox & Smith, and another at the corner with Havelock Street, C. & G. Whillans. The name only applied to the block on the north side (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with the block on the south side always known as Princes Street.
Wulton Place North Bar (wul'-in-plis-north-bawr) n. toll-bar situated at Wilton Place, probably another name for the Dovemount Toll (this name recorded in the 1841 census).

Wulton Roadheid (wul'-in-rōd-heed) n. alternative name for Roadheid.

Wulton Roadside (wul'-in-rōd-sīd) n. 18th and 19th century name for what became Princes Street. Also known as just ‘Roadside’.

Wulton Schuil (wul'-in-skīl) n. school that has existed in Wilton since about the time of the Reformation. The old primary school was built in 1847–8 at what became No. 36 Princes Street, across from the Old Church. It has an open colonnade in the playground and an enormous external staircase. This was once the Parish School of Wilton, and was considerably enlarged when the new public school system was introduced. The original school had been between the old Kirk and Manse (roughly near the modern entrance to the Leisure Centre car park), with a small stream (now piped underground) passing by. There was a nearby willow tree there, which effectively served as the gymnasium for the children. The old schoolmaster’s house in the mid-19th century consisted of one room plus a kitchen; its site later became the railway booking office. These buildings were probably the ones erected in 1762 at the same time as the Kirk was rebuilt; the school there is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. There were more than 110 pupils there in the 1830s. In the mid-19th century the infant school part was located separately, off Wilton Crescent. The School Board took over running the school in 1872. Until well into the 20th century the school took pupils up to the statutory leaving age in 1987, was abandoned by the new owner and was demolished in 2001–02 after becoming unstable. A stained glass window, ornate chimney pots and weather vane were salvaged. The congregation merged with St. George’s West, now Tievot Church. A roll of the ministry is: Malcom Smith 1890–91; James W. Shannon 1892–.

Wulton U.P. Kirk (wul'-in-yew-pee-kirk) n. Wilton United Presbyterian Church, otherwise known as St. Margaret’s and Wilton South.

Wunter (wu-tur) n. (Winter) George (19th/20th C.) horse-dealer in Hawick. His stables were behind Dovemount Garage. Robert (19th C.) brewer in Hawick, who took over from John George King in the 1860s.

the Wunter Fair (thu-wun-tur-fār) n. Hawick’s winter fair in the 17th to 19th centuries, taking place in early November, often on the 8th. The holding of this market was a legal right of the Baron (latterly the Duke of Buccleuch). It was essentially a repeat of the May Hiring Fair (although not as extensive), with stalls etc. in the Sandbed and along the High Street. The market would run from 9 a.m. and finish at 2 p.m. It is recorded taking place on 28th October in 1675. It stopped happening in the late 19th century, although it was probably a continuation of the annual fair, which happened in late October from early times. It was during one such fair in the 1560s that the Regent Moray captured several thieves in Hawick. In the early 18th century there was also one year where there was a riot after the County officers tried to impose a tax during the fair, and a similar event later when the Officers of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to extract a tax and a riot broke out. In the mid-18th century there was a large fight at the event between the Lochmaben and Yetholm gypsies.

wunters (wu-turz) n., pl. wunners. There are records and memories of several severe winters over the years. Sheep, cattle and horses suffered in great snowstorms in 1615, 1633 and 1665. The storm of early 1674 was particularly harsh (‘The Thirty Drifty Days’), wiping out many flocks. Another storm of the 17th century was known as ‘The Blast o Maich’. The winters of 1709 and 1740 were also severe, and in 1772 it was said handeed in their paper ...’ [We] (used instead of wunni in the interrogative; also wulln’t, wullen and wuzzen, which are longer forms).

that more than half the sheep in Scotland died. Many thousands of sheep and nearly 20 Border shepherds perished in a snowstorm of early 1794, ‘the Gonial Blast’, which began on January 23rd (described by the Ettrick Shepherd). A storm in 1795 never ceased for a week. Around this time the flocks were sometimes herded to lower farms in Annandale, which were largely free of snow. The storm of 1803 claimed the lives of at least 2 shepherds. A great snowstorm of 1809 held up the mail coach between Hawick and Edinburgh for 10 days. 1813/4 and 1816 were also severe winters. The winter of 1822/23 was particularly harsh, with snow lasting from December 20th until February 9th, and snowbanks of 6–10 ft in town. The winters of 1831, 1836/7, 1845, 1854/5, 1859/60, 1860/1, 1878/9, 1885/6, 1880/1 and 1895 are also recorded as being severe in the Borders. John Halliday wrote the poem ‘Gauld Weather’s Dead’ about the stormy days during the lambing season in 1845. The storm of late 1859 was quite devastating to sheep, because it came on so unexpectedly, and the winter of 1860 was also particularly calamitous for sheep in the whole of the Ettrick Forest, where lambs were destroyed to save the strength of their mothers. Other harsh winters on record in Hawick include 1900 (when there was still snow lying until May), November 1901 (when there was a storm of rain, which turned into sleet and then snow, with huge gusts of wind, doing great damage about 1400 feet), 1903 (when there is a photo of people playing ‘shinty’ on the Teviot), 1917/18, 1937 (spring), 1940 (January, with the Dean Burn waterfall frozen), 1941 (New Year, the quickest freeze-up in living memory), 1947, 1962/3 (when freeze-up in living memory), 1947, 1962/3 (when there is a photo of people playing ‘shinty’ on the Teviot), 1917/18, 1937 (spring), 1940 (January, with the Dean Burn waterfall frozen), 1941 (New Year, the quickest freeze-up in living memory), 1947, 1962/3 (when hay was dropped by helicopter on some remote farms), 1981 and 2018 (February/March, ‘the Beast from the East’).

wutchcraft (wuch-krawft) n. witchcraft. There were bouts of frenzied panic among the public in the Middle Ages, where individuals were seized upon as being witches and put on trial or killed by superstitious mobs. This started in earnest after the 1563 Witchcraft Act in Scotland, which was effectively part of the Reformation. The peak in prosecutions came in about the period 1590–1662, but the victimisation of eccentrics in this way did not end till well into the 18th century. Fortunately Hawick seems to have been among the more rational towns. Although there are many records of people being accused of witchcraft in Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries, there is no evidence that anyone was locally found guilty of being a witch or killed as a result of such accusations. In 1641 one of the Bailies was found guilty of attacking a woman after accusing her of witchcraft upon a deceased child and on his wife. In 1644 the Burgh Records show that Janet Scott was accused of being a witch and had to promise to present herself to the Justice-General. Suggesting someone was a witch was considered an extremely serious offence, and there are other cases of people being fined or sentenced to the stocks for such behaviour in the 17th century. ‘Tranty-fit’ and ‘Speed o fit’ are two sisters who are supposed to have lived near Goldielands and said to have been witches. Strong and independent women were often rumoured to be witches, e.g. Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, Jean the Ranter and Jean Hall in more recent times. The wife of Rev. James Ker, covenanter and former minister of Abbotrule, was accused of witchcraft (but ‘most unjustly’) in the 1680s. Nearby communities appear to have succumbed more easily to superstition, with the execution of witches said to have taken place last at Spittal-on-Rule. There are certainly records of 25 people being accused of being witches in Jedburgh, with the peak year being 1649. In 1628 ‘Issobell Howetsone’, in Riddell and ‘Katharine Leithame’ were tried in Selkirk, and in 1629 the J.Ps. of Selkirkshire were given permission to try 9 people for witchcraft. The accounts of the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch contain an entry for ‘a commission for burning of witches in Eckfurd’ in 1650. Selkirk also burned to death Agnes Lawson for witchcraft in 1660 and Jean Taylor, wife of James Scott, junior teacher at Selkirk School, was held for witchcraft, but released in 1662. There are records of a number of further accusations and trials in Selkirk, including at least 2 women from Lilliesleaf in 1650. A legend spoken of in the 19th century tells of the wife of the Schoolmaster called Brown drowning him with the help of her associates, who cavorted drunkenly in the grounds of the Abbey. Langholm used to drown its witches at a place called the ‘Grieve’, possibly at the confluence of the Ewes with the Esk. Local methods used to ward off the effects of witchcraft include affixing branches of the rowan or alderwood to stables, etc., tying scarlet thread to the horns of cattle and carrying around an ear of wheat. An article on tales of local witches, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’, appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine of 1820: it contains a story about the Devil cavorting.
Wutch Craigs

with witches at Allanhaugh, among other anecdotes. A tale is told (in the 1914 ‘Highways and Byways of the Border’, repeated from the 1820 article) of an old woman in Teviotdale (no specific location given) who was believed to have appeared as a greyhound trying to rescue the heart of a horse (which died as a result of witchcraft) from the fire, and was later herself burned in the same fire when she failed to recite the Lord’s Prayer.

\textbf{WWII} see the Second World War

\textbf{Wyhenes} (wheenz) \textit{n.} John (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘John del Wyhenes’ on the inquest of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that he was a local man, like the others. Note that he is separate from John (or perhaps Henry) of Whames, who was also on the jury. It is possible that his lands were Weens, but there are probably other possibilities.

\textbf{Wylie} (wi-lee) \textit{n.} Elizabeth (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Her name is given as ‘Bessie [or Besses] Weile’. John (17th C.) resident at Leahaugh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His surname appears to be written ‘weill’. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant, along with Margaret Oliver, in the part of the lands of Wylie’s Hill in Jedforest, according to a rental roll of 1541. It may be that she was connected to the family who gave their name to this farm. Her name is recorded as ‘Mergerete Wyle’.

\textbf{Rev. Robert} (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas, minister of Kirkcudbright. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1668, and became tutor to the Douglases of Cavers. He was tutor at Ochiltree in 1676 and governor for Francis Lord Semple in 1678. In 1679 he was imprisoned for several weeks in Glasgow (presumably as part of the Revolution). He went overseas with some of his pupils, but returned to go on trial before the General meeting of Presbyterians of 1687. He was ordained at Weathope in 1690 and became minister at Yarrow. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly and also the Commission for Visiting Schools. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1690 and ordained there in 1691. There is a letter of 1691 from ‘R. Wylie, Wooll, to Tarras’ (i.e. to Scott of Harden) saying that he hopes the Rev. Shiels could be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Robertson is re-erected. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1692 and translated to Hamilton in that year. He was still alive in 1709. Mr. ?? (19th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto.

He took over from William Grant, who had given the school a very strong reputation, and went on to become minister of Minto Parish in 1840. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘Ranyon Wille of Wylleshill’, among Olivers of Jedforest and others, although it is unclear where his lands were. William (17th C.) tenant in Belses who was among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. William (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname appears to be written ‘Willie’.

\textbf{William} (b.c.1800) from Fife, he was a tailor at Commonside Bankhead in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included Janet, William, Helen, Nichola and Mary (also spelled ‘Wyllie’).

\textbf{Wylie’s Dub} (wi-leez-dub) \textit{n.} former name for the area immediately east of what is now Beaconsfield Terrace, forming part of the northern boundary of the Common at Myreslawgreen. It belonged to Bailie Turnbull at the time of the Division. Roughly the same piece of land may be recorded in Hawick’s first existing sasine, when Alexander Scott sold it to James Scott. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common (when it belonged to Bailie Turnbull) and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map (variously referred to as ‘Willies Dub’ and ‘Weylys Dub’, or just ‘the Dub’, it is ‘Weylys Dub’ in 1767; it may be the same as ‘Bridgehaugh’; it was presumably marshy at one time).

\textbf{Wylie’s Hill} (wi-leez-hil) \textit{n.} lands in Jedforest listed being valued at 25 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 part of the lands were tenanted by Margaret Oliver and Margaret Wylie, paying 25s yearly, another part by Margaret Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly and a last part by Robert Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly. It is possible that the farm was named shortly before this period and connected to the family of this same Margaret Wylie. ‘Wille of Wylleshill’ was recorded in 1544 along with many Olivers and others from Jedforest, but it is unclear exactly where his lands were (it is ‘Wylleshill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Wyleshill’ in 1541).

\textbf{Wylie’s Pile} (wi-leez-pil) \textit{n.} location marked on a map of part of Lilliesleaf Parish in 1766. It is unclear what sort of feature is labelled, but it is to the southeast of Raperlaw farmhouse, perhaps near the modern Wellrig Strip.
Wyltoun

Wyltoun (wil-toon) n. variant of Wulton, recorded in a document of 1453 involving Milsington and Wester Heap.

wynd (wind) n. a narrow, often twisting road leading off a main street – ‘Auld Hawick my dreams are all of thee, Thy storied wynds and streets’ [RHL], ‘There’s a silence in the cobbled wynds . . . ’ [JYH], ‘What though at times the moorland mist Creeps up by wynd and street’ [RSC], ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the sheltering Are brought to the wynds o’ the grey town again’ [WL].

the Wynd (thu-wind) n. informal name for the Kirk Wynd – ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the town’ [WL]. In earlier times the same name may have applied to what was known as Horsleyhill’s Wynd and became Walter’s Wynd – ‘John Scott smith in ye Wynd’ [PR1718].

the Wynd (thu-wind) n. street in Denholm, leading off the west side of the Green towards Denholm Mill. The local fire brigade used to be based here.

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. alternative spelling for Windburgh, a hill near the head of the Slitrig valley.

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. racehorse, trained locally by Ken Oliver. The horse was well-known for coming in the top 4 in the Grand National on 4 separate occasions (2nd in 1957, 4th in 1958, 2nd again in 1959 and again in 1962). Most famously it managed to hold on to 2nd place in the 1959, with jockey Tim Brookshaw effectively riding the end of the race bareback after his stirrup leather broke at Bechers. The horse was retired at Hassendeanbank along with its beloved friend, a donkey. A nearby house was named after it.

Wyndheid (wind-heed) n. former name for an area in Hawick. It may have referred to the top of the Kirk Wynd, or the top of what became Walter’s Wynd, or perhaps both.

Wyndheid (wind-heed) n. nickname of several Scotts around the early years of the 18th century, presumably all of the same family, including Archibald, George, John, Robert and Walter.

Wyndis see Weens

Wynzehope (win-zup) n. former name for lands in Glenkerry on Tima Water. These were exchanged in 1415 for Bellendean by Robert Scott of Rankilburn, with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This is probably the same as the modern ‘Winghope’ on the eastern side of the Tima valley (written ‘wynzehope’ in 1415).

the Wyoming Silver Challenge Cup (thu-wi-ó-min-sil-vur-chaw-linj-kup) n. trophy presented by Wyoming Hawick Exiles Club in 1909 and competed for in a 1 mile relay race at the Common Riding Games. The Wyoming callants also contributed £15 for a horse racing or other event in 1910, and as a result the American Handicap was renamed the Wyoming Handicap.

the Wyre Brig (thu-wir-brig) n. former light footbridge over the Slitrig opposite St. Mary’s Church, indicated in a painting of 1813. It was probably destroyed in the 1846 flood and replaced with a wooden footbridge, recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer’s accounts as ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’. This in turn was replaced by the Slitrig Crescent Bridge in 1864.

wyre-worm (wi-ar-wurm) n., arch. a kind of grub that attacks grain – ‘Wire-worm, A sort of crustaceous grub, of a yellow colour, which destroys grain by eating the stalks underground, viewed as another name for Cut-worm, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

wysen (wi, wee-, wi-zin) n., arch. the throat, windpipe – ‘Does your trow your wizen cuntit?’ [JoJ], ‘With some sharp knife, or razor dight, Presumes to nick his wyson’ [JR], ‘By crackin’ t’ye in this odd-fashion’d way, It creeps sae natural up a youthfu’ weezon’ [JoHa], ‘Sae he fingered awa’ at her weezon a while, And then he performed a wizard-like feat . . . ’ [TCh], ‘Whan naigs an troopers – the deed-ruckle glutherin i ther weizants – war cowpeet inti ilka seike’ [ECS], the gullet, especially in phrases referring to impatience for food – ‘Is your guts thinkin’ your wizen’s cuntit?’ [GW], (there are several spelling variants, including ‘wzeen’, ‘weizant’, ‘wisen’, ‘wizen’ and ‘wyson’).

wyte (wit, wi) v., arch. to blame, accuse – ‘. . . Joost wyte thysel’ for fateing me the sphere O’ rustic life . . . ’ [JoH], ‘It was a’ their neebor’s wite That life was mair black than white’ [FL], n., poet. blame, fault, responsibility – ‘The blithe birds sing This Aprile night, And why they sing Is nae my wyte’ [DH] (also written ‘wite’).

x (eks) n. there are no peculiarly Hawick (or even Scottish) words that start with ‘x’.

-y (ee) suffix used to form adjectives, perhaps more commonly adopted than in standard English – ‘A overheard a wuman in Dorwards telling her pallet that she was not 'dried-floorey'. Ower the festivity period ce night weel hear somebody sayin' they irn 'Christmas cakey' or declarin' thumself ti be no verra 'ginqer-winey'! [IWL] (the prefix -ie is more common in Scots than -iy).

Yair (yār) n. house a few miles north of Selkirk, overlooking the Tweed. It was originally built around 1580 by the Kers, this branch holding the hereditary office of coroners of Selkirkshire. It was built as part of the turnpike road from Selkirk to Edinburgh until about 50 years later. The lands were sold by Pringle of Whytbank to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758, but the house was reacquired by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in 1784 and rebuilt in 1788/9. Robert Horsburgh lived there in the 1790s – 'From Yair which hills so closely bind, Scarce can the Tweed his passage find, Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil 'Till all his eddyng currents boil' [SWS], 'O, the vale o' the Tweed is bonny Frae Yair to auld Elibank …' [FL] (also sometimes 'the Yair', it was formerly written 'le Yair', 'le Yare', 'Yaire', 'Yare', 'Yhair', 'Yhare', 'Zar', 'Zare', etc.).

yaird (yārd) n. a yard, piece of enclosed ground attached to a building – 'oo yaised ti play in the yaird ahint the Store', '…ane tenement of land bak and fore with the yaird thairof liand in Hawik'[SPB1579], 'Item, giff any nickbour mindes to big ane thorn hedge in his yaird …'[BR1640], '…the Sacrament of our Lord should be administered after ye gathering in of ye corn to ye farm yeards'[PR1716], specifically a kirkyard – '…To see auld Dauvit’s heidstane In a lirk o’ St. Mary’s Yaird’[DH] (also spelled 'yeard' etc.; note that yird is used fairly interchangeably).

yaird (yārd) n. a yard of length, i.e. 3 feet – 'a yaird's about three inch shyo a metre' (yaird is used interchangeably; in earlier centuries a 'yard' might also be used to mean a square yard and hence was used as a unit of area).

yaise (yāz) v. to use – 'yaise yer een wumman', 'deh yaise yer sleeve is a hankie', 'John Broon yaised ti make an sell spunks'[RM], 'That a man or wumin should bei sae misgueded as tae yase the occasion for a debauch shouldna bei laid at the door o’ the festival' [BW1939], 'This great tongue o oors is dyin oot …but let us a resolve ti dae oor bit ti preserve eet be yaisin eet whenever oo can'[IWL], 'A was amazed at the amount o folk that still yaise snuff'[MA] (also written 'yas'; note that the noun form is usually yiss).

yaised (yāzd, yäst) adj., pp. used – 'A’m no yaised ti aa they new-fangled things', 'The grey auld toon be Teviotside, Where a’ ma forebears yaised ti bide'[IWL] (also spelled ‘yast’; cf. yissed, and note that the combination 'yaised ti' is often pronounced yāzd-tī).

yaisual (yâsh-yul) adj. usual – ‘...got up ti the yaisual ploys o’ a’ the West End laddies’ [HJ].

yaisually (yâsh-yu-lee) adv. usually – ‘A yaisually dae ma washin on a Mondi’, ‘...Ye’ll no ken this yin son, it’s no the yin oo yaisually dae’, aye bit hei hednae reckon’d on oor Adie’ [IHS] (also written ‘yaisially’).

Yarrow Kirk

Yarrow Kirk (ya-rô-, ya-ri-kirk) n. church in the Yarrow valley, serving the parish, which was amalgamated with St. Mary’s and Deuchar. In early times the parish was referred to as ‘the Yarrow Knowe

Forest’. Administration along with neighbouring parishes changed over the centuries, and in 1650 the former parish of Rankilburn was disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick. The earliest church in the parish was the kirk of St. Mary’s of the Lowes, near the north end of St. Mary’s Loch. The first church in Yarrow village stood to the east of the present one, on a small stream (and may have been called Deuchar Chapel). The present church was built in 1640, altered in 1772, and with major renovations in 1826. It was gutted by fire in 1926, but restored. A sun-dial dating from 1640 is inscribed ‘Watch & Pray, Time is short’. The parson in the 1290s was Edmund of Letham. Around 1484 the rector there was Alexander, brother of Patrick Murray of Falahill. James Scott was minister 1607–34, who was rebuked for drunkenness, ill-discipline, and non-residence. William Elliot (brother of Thomas in Borthwickshiels) was minister 1641–66 and 1679–80. John Rutherford (maternal great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott) was minister there 1691–1710. Robert Russell (who married Agnes Turnbull from Hawick) was minister 1791–1847 and his son James afterwards. The minister used to receive four bolls of oatmeal annually from Hassendean, the origin of the payment being lost in time (‘Yara Kirk’ is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Yarrow Knowe (ya-ri-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south of Sauthtree (it is unclear if the origin of the name is related to that of the river).

the Yarrow Stane (thu-yar-oo-stan) n. ancient Christian burial stone inscribed ‘here lie buried the two sons of liberalis’, dating from the 5th or 6th century, standing within a small enclosure beside Whitehope farm near Yarrow village. It is the possible location for the ballads ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ and ‘The Warden of Yarrow’ – ‘I dreimed a dreirie dreim last night; God keep us a’ frae sorrow! I dreimed I pu’d the birk sae green Wi’ my true love on Yarrow’ [T], ‘Tis better by far to leave publican’s bar, And doon by the Yarrow to stray’ [RF] (in the past the river was known as ‘Gierua’, ‘Gyrwa’, ‘Yarou’ and similar; in earlier times the name was sometimes written ‘Zarrow’; ‘Water of Yaro’ is recorded in 1649 and ‘Yara fl.’ is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map; it derives either from the Gyruii tribe, of the Fens, who may have given their name to Jarrow in Tyneside, or more likely from the Gaelic for ‘rough stream’).

yate (yät) n., poet. a gate – ‘And when he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out bespak auld Gibby Elliot – ‘Whae’s this that brings the fraye to me?’ ’ [T] (variant of yett).

yatter (ya-ur, ya-tur) v. to chatter, talk incessantly – ‘what’s she yatterin on about now?’, ‘She’s ay yatter-yatterin’, and never de-vaulds’ [JoJ], ‘Their yatterin’, like the stream goes on forever’ [HN 1972], to yelp continuously – ‘Col-lies yatterin’ at their cluits’ [GW], n. an incessant talker or complainer (cf. yitter).

yaud (yawd) n., arch. an old horse, nag, usually a mare – ‘Aw’m Pawkie Paitsier’s auld grey yaud . . . ’ [JSB], ‘. . . O’er moss an’ muir, an’ never grumble, Tho’ my auld yad should gie a stum-ble’ [BS], ‘Ma collar lay roond ma craigie as wan-resthif as branks an brecham roond a yaud’ [ECS], ‘. . . For the Cornet’s lads Are saddling their yauds To follow the banner blue’ [TK], ‘While every Teri lad, Striddlin’ his gallant yaud . . . ’ [JEDM] (the word is used by Burns, Hogg and Scott; from Middle English; cf. the little-known English word ‘jade’ and also jaud).

Yaud Linns

Yaud Linns (yawd-linz) n. former name for a narrow pass and waterfall near Langbursk, perhaps near where the road gets closest to the river between Shankend and Langburskis. Graptolites have been found in the black shale here (the origin is ‘linn’ meaning a narrow gorge, and it said the ‘yaud’ comes from the resemblance to an old horse of a rock lying across the stream; it is ‘Yad Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

yauld (yawld) adj., arch. alert, nimble, strong, vigorous, sprightly – ‘The young an’ the auld, they were a’ alike yauld, an’ seem’d a’ alike find o’ th’ dancin’ . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘Oor faithers lee’v’d, were yauld an’ strong . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘O, Tammas the Tipp, as I ken that ye’re yauld. And I think it was mak’ me some better . . . ’ [JTè], ‘And she lap sae yauld, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle’ [JTè], ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH], ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld, We trow they weel never forget ‘Foosty Broon’ ’ [AY], ‘I’ve lambed this fifty year or mair, and what I’ll tell ye’s true, I swear’ [TD].

yauldness (yawld-nis) n., arch. sprightliness, vigour – ‘. . . for a richt Nibbie has aye a kinnin’ o’ the yauldness o’ life left in’t’ [DH], ‘There are no “Yauld, bang fallows” or “Muckle leasie fallows” now-a-days’ [JTu], ‘The air is frosty and the ground is cauld, But Davie’s heart is warm – his legs are yauld’ [HNo], ‘A wiry wee cratur and yauld. Wi’ his bundle and shears At the guidwife he speirs Gin we’re aye keepin’ clear o’ the cauld’ [WL] (also written ‘yald’; the origin is unknown).

yaup (i-klept) pp., poet. named, called – ‘These are some of the acts that are yclept rights of the Duke of Bucleuch’ [RW].

ye (yu) article, arch. form of ‘the’, common in Burgh and Parish Records before the mid-18th century – ‘. . . for cutting of William Elliot, merchant, with ane sword in ye head’ [BR1669], ‘Ac-count of ye collection and disbursements since ye death of Mr Alexr. Orrok, our minister, who deceased April 23d 1711’ [PR1711] (this form became common in print, because of the similarity of the letter ‘y’ to the Old English ‘thorn’ symbol for th; it was never pronounced yee’).

ye (yee, yu) pron., arch., poet. you – ‘The streets ye kent when ye were bairns . . . ’ [WL], ‘Safe oot, Safe in’, my Border lads! And safely win ye hame’ [RSC], ‘Ye may ken I was born and bred i’ the Loan . . . ’ [DH] (this is often written, to conform with general Scots, even when the more common local pronunciation ee is meant).

year (yeer) n. a note, that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘they were members for twal year’, ‘it was a few year ago’, ‘. . . aye, no e’en to Jean Rae, ma ain wife, for twae or thrie year after we were married’ [BCM1880], ‘It’s an awfu’ lot mair than fifty year But aw’ll never forget ‘Foosty Broon’ ’ [AY], ‘I’ve lambed this fifty year or mair, and what I’ll tell ye’s true, I swear’ [TD].

Yeavering Bell (ye-ver-in-bel) n. peak in Northumberland National Park, above the village of Yeavering, west of Wooler (and not too far from Flodden), reaching a height of 1,182 ft (361 m). On its summit is one of the largest iron-age forts in the area, a tribal centre for the Votadini. Nearby was the palace of Edwin and other Northumbrian (and presumably therefore Hawick’s) Kings, until abandoned about 670 – ‘As the scornful words from the fair lips fell, A flush, like the red on Yeavering Bell When the monring sun comes out of the south, Trembled and flut-tered from brow to mouth’ [WHO] (the origin of the name could be p-Celtic).

Yeddie see Yedie

Yedie (ye-dee) n. formerly a local pet form of Adam – ‘Lockt in a box – but few may see – Is Eve’s first glance o’ wanton glee, Whilk dang puir Yeddie’s head agee . . . ’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘Yedde’; cf. Adie, Yeddie and Yid).

Walter (18th/19th C.) stockmaker recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation ‘Serving’ suggests that he was already serving and his name appears again in 1798: his status as a serving soldier is confirmed in the 1799 list.

The Yeomanry (Thu-yō-mun-ree) n. one of a number of volunteer cavalry forces, particularly those set up following the Yeomanry Act of 1794. Members were most often farmers, with landowners acting as officers. Troops of volunteer were active during the period of perceived danger of French invasion. The local troop was variously called the ‘West Troop of Yeomanry’ or ‘Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry’. It was connected to the Lothian and Borders Horse, which was set up in 1797, with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster. Such units were embodied several times during the Napoleonic Wars. They were cut back during the decades of peace, but occasionally used to deal with civil unrest. Lothian and Border Horse remained active through the late 19th century and many wealthier locals joined it on the outbreak of the First World War. Note that the Yeomanry was technically distinct from the Militia and the Volunteers, although all of their histories are intertwined and they were jointly the precursors of today’s Territorial army – ‘...Thus yeoman troops were raised to stand As bulwark to the Borderland’ [WHO].

Yetholm (ye-tum) n. parish and twin villages in south-eastern Roxburghshire. Town Yetholm and Kirk Yetholm are two parts of the settlement, across the Bowmont Water from each other, with Kirk Yetholm being slightly older. First mention of the village was around 1200. It was said that the Scottish noblemen killed at Flodden were buried in the churchyard here. The town was formerly known for its ‘baa’ and other games on ‘Eastern E’en’, like other Border towns. It was also once known as a centre for whisky smuggling. Kirk Yetholm was once the headquarters of the Faa gypsy royal family, from the 16th century until the last gypsy king died in 1902. There are several books about the local gypsies, including one by Hawick man Vic Tokely. Kirk Yetholm is the beginning (or end) of the Pennine Way – ‘Blithe April wandered through the glen, An’ ower the flank o’ Cheviot, An’ doon by Yetholm’s auld grey toon, An’ syne ti wimplin’ Teviot’ [WP] (probably from Old English ‘village at the pass’,...

Yethoose (yet-hoos) n. Yethouse, farm just to the east of Newcastleton. It could be the ‘Zairdhous’ in that area recorded being possessed by Archibald Tailor in 1632. It has long been owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1694 Thomas Robson (or Robison) paid the Hearth Tax there and is also recorded there in 1696 and 1697, when he was rebuked for working on a Sunday. Other residents recorded there in 1694 were John Elliot and Isobel Elliot. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with ‘Noutlaires’ and consisted of 70 acres, bounded by Chingills, ‘Baxtongill’, Hillgill, Tweedden Burn and a common on the west. The farm also shared a common of 116 acres with the neighbouring farms of Greens and Chingills. Robert Little was there in 1748. Mungo Armstrong was farmer there in 1797; his sons James and Francis are recorded on the Millitia lists in 1797, 1799 and 1801. James Armstrong was tenant from at least 1835 to 1851. The tenancy passed from Armstrongs to Alexander Temple Robson in the 1880s and there were Rutherfords there in the 1930s (spelling varies; it is ‘Getbles’ in 1797, 1799 and 1801). Young (yung) n. Adam (17th C.) smith in Hawick. In 1685 he was fined by the Magistrates for fighting with fellow smith Hugh Elliot in the Kirk. They pulled each other’s bonnets off and threw them down. He may be the same Adam who was fined in his absence in 1685 for insulting the good name of Bailie Scott and his son John by claiming that they had reset the peas taken by some of the Royalist forces. He may be the Adam who in 1676, along with Alexander Hislop, was found guilty of using a ‘half-pecke ane inch short or thereby’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Adam (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Adam recorded as a witness to a baptism in Roberton in 1680 (although crossed out). He was recorded at Hassendeanbank in 1690 when listed as someone owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Janet Arres in Bedrule Parish in 1709. Adam (18th C.) married Janet Rutherford in Minto Parish in 1729. Adam (b.1768/9) from Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Burnhead. He was already there in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was listed as farmer at Burnhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was listed at Burnhead in 1841 and 1851, when he farmed 160 acres and employed 4 labourers. He lived there with his sister Margaret and was unmarried. Rev. Adam (18th/19th C.) minister of Wilton in the early 1800s. It is unclear precisely who he was, perhaps an assistant minister. He was listed as ‘Rev. A. Young, Burnhead’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). Adam ‘Ad’ (d.1874) brother of Pim, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. He had a reputation for being saucy and sullen, was a skillful poacher and fisher, and also had a knowledge about herbal medicines. More cautious than his brother, he was nevertheless often in trouble with the law. He was found dead in the stables of the Victoria Hotel and is buried in the Wellogate – ‘Ad Young went to bed alive at night, and wakened a corpse next morning’ [T]. Adam (b.1814/5) from Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Dunstone in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Dunstone in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Jessie, William, James and Adam. Agnes (17th C.) resident in Firth. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenantant fugitives. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Stewart and their children included Helen (b.1682) and Jane (b.1686). The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were William Purdom and George Young (possibly his brother). He could be the Alexander, son of James and Helen born in Hawick in 1653. It is possible that he is the same man as the Town Officer. Alexander (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Officer. In 1696 the 2 Bailies ‘hess confirmed the kirke bell ringing at even and morning’ in his hands (this being the new bell at St. Mary’s) as well as ‘the toum’s common deid bell’. He was Burgh Officer at the same time as Alexander Scott, and witnessed the baptism of two of Scott’s children in 1702 and 1705. In 1698 he was found to be due £4 Scots ‘for his last yeirs Common ry-deing coat’, which is the first explicit mention of the ceremonial aspects of the Common Riding in the Burgh Records. In 1704 he was listed as ‘officer’ when he witnessed a baptism for wright Andrew Scott. In 1707 there was a new arrangement by which he should himself buy oil for the clock and bell-ropes, and in exchange ‘that he should pay nothing inward to the toune for tolling of the bell at landward burials’, i.e. he would keep those fees. He was ‘officer’ in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for John Rae. Andrew (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Andrew (d.bef. 1581) tenant in Langnewton. He is recorded as deceased in 1581 when his son and heir John resigned a husbandland in Langnewton to Patrick Dobson. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Andro Young, sometime in Bernehills’ Andrew (17th C.) portioner of Caverton. He was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He is also recorded in 1684, among men from the Southdean area, on a list of Covenantant fugitives. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. ‘Andrew younger’ who is also listed there seems like an error, perhaps meaning his son. He is surely related to John, Lyle and Ninian, who were at the same farm in 1669. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Barry and their son William was baptised in 1729. The witnesses were Bailie Rucecastle and Robert ‘Whitsone’. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in Belses in 1788 when he had a court case in Selkirk with William Thompson in Yair over unpaid wages. Andrew (19th C.) servant to John Oliver at Hawick Mill. In 1837 he was involved in a paternity case with Christy Miller of Roxburgh Rig and in 1839 in another with Mary Riddell, servant at Orchard. Perhaps the same Andrew was an agricultural labourer living at 15 Loan in 1861. Andrew (b.1818/9) from Oxnam, he was farm steward at Ashtrees in the 1850s. His wife was Mary, from Southdean Parish. Their children included John, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. Archibald (b.c.1815) stocking weaver living on O’Connell Street in 1841. His wife was Agnes and their children included Helen, John and Mary. Archibald (19th C.) frameworker living at around 60 High Street in 1841 and 1851. He married Isabella Good (who was from Dunscore, Dumfriesshire) and their children included: Helen (b.1835/6); John (b.1837/8); Betsy (b.1842/3); Margaret Robison (b.1847); Jane (b.1849); Robert (b.1851). The last 3 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Archibald (1818/9–60) from Applegarth, he was an agricultural labourer in Teviothead Parish, living at ‘Houdshall’ in 1851. In 1842 in Roberton he married Mary Lamb. Their children included James, Janet, Walter, Andrew, John, William and Mary. In 1861 his widow was a ‘Draper (Formerly Ag. Lab.)’ at Appletreehall, with 4 children. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Howegate. She is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Daniel (d.1774) said to be buried in Castleton Kirkyard, according to ‘Monuments and monumental inscriptions in Scotland’. His gravestone bears the inscription ‘Oh reader, stay your car, and stay And read what I have here to say: You walk on earth as once did I, Remember you and all must die. For in my health I little thought My glass was run so near; But now the hour for me is come No longer to be here’. David (16th C.) listed as ‘Davuid Zowng’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. David (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. David (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1707. He was fined for not appearing before the Magistrates to answer the charge that when he was before the Kirk Session ‘cited for immoralities’ he stated that ‘ther was some (as is alledged) in the said Sessione as guiltye as he was’. He is probably the merchant David who married Marion Newbie in Hawick in 1704 and whose children included John (b.1705), William (b.1707) and Marie (b.1708). In the 1708 baptismal record he was ‘hairbuyer in Hawick’. The witnesses in 1705 were Robert and Francis Ruecastle and in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and gardener James Falsyde. David (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1707 he was cited before the Session by the Minister and an Elder, but responded by saying that some in the session were as guilty as he was! David (19th C.) one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848. David ‘Dave’ (1922–2008) Hawick-born Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band 1963–75. He played with the Salvation Army from an early age, and in the Navy during the War. He joined the local dance band the Dixie Seven and was briefly a professional musician with the Maurice Sheffield Dance Band, also being included on some dance band recordings. He played with the Methil Colliery Band and also conducted the Selkirk Silver, Jedforest Instrumental and Newtonrange Silver Bands. He was musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society for 7 years and a founder member of the Borders Big Band. In addition to playing the cornet, he was an accomplished soloist on the flugel horn. He won the Best Instrumentalist Award at the Whitburn Entertainment Contest in 1997 and the soloist prize at the inaugural Borders Entertainment Contest in 2001. Douglas ‘Doug’ (b.1961) from Jedburgh, he was a member of the boxing club in Hawick. He worked on a farm, and joined the Hawick Amateur Boxing Club at age 16. He won the Scottish Heavyweight Championship in 1983 and the ABA British title in 1984. He represented Britain in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and in 1986 he represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh, gaining a silver medal in the Heavyweight class. He turned professional in 1987 and had 7 fights. However, he then suffered horrendous injuries when struck by a motorcycle while labouring on the roads, ending his boxing career. He later worked as a sales manager in Jedburgh. Elizabeth nee Scott (b.c.1763) known as ‘Widow Young’ or ‘Bet Young’, she was the wife of William Young, blacksmith. She is recorded as Betty Scott when she married William Young in Hawick in 1785. Her baptism does not appear to be recorded, but at the end of her 1823 book of verse she says ‘I’ve seen three score, the twelfth of August’, making it clear her birthday was on that date in 1763 or perhaps the year before (and hence she cannot be the Elizabeth born to Walter Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1759, for example). She was known for dabbling in politics and for composing poetry, publishing ‘Songs and poems, on various subjects’ (1823) in Hawick. This contains 30 of her pieces of verse (and one by Margaret Park), many of them commemorating contemporary events, such as Waterloo and other military victories, deaths in the royal family, Lord Minto’s return, etc. Several are in praise of the local Militia and Scottish regiments, while others are full of religious sentiment that was common at that time. There are occasional Scots words, but mainly the poems are in English. It was surely unusual in those times to have a woman poet, and she seems likely to have been Hawick’s first who published anything. She was described by Robert Murray as ‘a woman of great vigour both of body and mind, and had a quaintness and off-handedness of expression which marked her out from the ordinary tanor of womanhood’. She is probably the pauper ‘Betty Young’ recorded aged 81 living with Martha Young (perhaps a granddaughter) on Walter’s Wynd at the 1841 census. Her children included; Richard (b.1786), blacksmith in Hawick; Walter (b.1788); Henry (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); and Christian (b.1796). Based on one of her poems, she had a son who was in the army from the age of 17 in about 1807 (and hence was born around 1790). Murray says in 1897 that she had many descendants in Hawick, including Mary Nesbit Briggs, in the 4th generation, who also wrote poetry. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. She was recorded in 1818 claiming a ‘stolen child’, apparently taken at Hawick. She probably married someone called Smith, and her daughter Peggy Smith (who apparently later worked as a nurse to the Duchess of Buccleuch) is reported to have stolen a child herself. George (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Georg Zoung’. Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring him before the next Justice-aire at Edinburgh. He had been captured by ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde, Hew of Douglass, and thare complices, furthe of Mynto toune’.

Probably the same George in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety;
he was probably related to John and Robert, who were also recorded. It is probably also the same Thomas Young recorded in 1502 having had 14 geese stolen from him by Adam Grahamslaw.
Probably the same George at ‘le crag de mynto’ was recorded in 1502 when Richard Rutherford in Littledean had remission for wounding him and stealing a series of items (including a horse, a waistcoat, a lance, a shield and a knife). George (16th C.) owner of a quarter particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owers who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. George (16th C.) resident of somewhere in Teviotdale. He was recorded in an English letter of 1542 as ‘one of the chief setters forwardes of all spoyles and robberyes’. The other man listed was Will Davidson, ‘oon of the Pringles’. They robbed a village in England, but were intercepted on their return and 14 men captured. George (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown in the Rule valley. His barn and yard are listed in the 1562 document over disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. George (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule. He is listed as a fugitive in 1684, along with his brothers Robert and James and many other men, for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (17th C.) servant of George Gray, who was tenant at ‘Rupertlaw’ in Roxburghshire. This seems likely to be Raperlaw (but could conceivably be Ruberslaw). He is listed in 1684 among men declared to be fugitives because of religious non-conformity.
George (17th C.) dyer in Hawick who witnessed a sasine in 1687. Probably the same George wittnessed baptisms for Margaret Purdom in 1684, for John Tinlin also in 1684 and for William Elliot in Hawick in 1687. He was also recorded as dyer in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, ‘brother to Goldilands’ and as ‘litster’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Lunn. He was listed as ‘litster’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stuart. He could be the George listed among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. He may be the George, married to Janet Purdom, whose children born in Hawick included:
Jane (b.1680); William (b.1682); Walter (b.1683);
John (b.1685); and Margaret (b.1686). The witess to the 1680 baptism were Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk) and John Purdom (the schoolmaster). He may be the George, son of James and Helen Martin, who was born in Hawick in 1650. It seems likely he is the George who wittnessed a baptism for Alexander (possibility his brother) in 1682, as well as a baptism for a Mr.
Reid in 1680. George (17th/18th C.) wright in North Synton. He married Margaret Lorraine and their children included Isobel (b.1703).
George (b.c.1805) stocking-maker in Hawick.
He was living at the West Port in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Janet, Margaret, James and Mary. George (19th/20th
C.) resident of Hawick. He lived on Wellington Street. He was father of John H., who lived in the Transvaal. George (d.c.1940) leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir. Helen (18th C.) listed as ‘Miss Nelly Young, Hawick’ in 1784 among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. It is unclear how she was related to other Youngs.
Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot.
Henry (1828/9–1907) gamekeeper at Harwood (on Rule) for many years, starting in 1855. He was responsible for much of the planting on the estate. He was born at Millhaugh, Oxnam Water, son of farm steward Robert and Maragret Riddell from the Lammermuirs. He worked for a while with Andrew Goodfellow, father of the Abbot-rule forester. He married Isabella Hogg of Melrose and their children were Robert (who emigrated to Toronto in 1873), Henry (an engineer in Minnesota), Another (1957/8–2020) educated at George Heriot’s in Edinburgh, he worked for Scottish Widows, but moved to Hawick in 1993 to be Fire Station Manger. He was also Honorary Secretary of the local Ex-Servicemen’s Club and worked as a driver for the charity Home Basics. Isobel (17th C.) listed at Wadeshill among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) clerk of St. Andrews Dioces who was notary for the 1500 document for the Scotts of Branxtholme, dealing with the lands of Whitchesters, and signed in Edinburgh. James (16th C.) canon who was recorded in a document for the Rout-ledges, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He is recorded as ‘Sir James Zung’. He was presumably attached to the Diocese of Glasgow and was possibly the same as the contemporary priest who owned land in Hawick. James (16th C.) priest, named as a land-holder in Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was possibly the same James Young who was burned to death in his tower, along with 10 others, by the English forces led by Sir Ralph Bulmer and Sir Oswald Westropp in 1547/8; the letter states ‘they burned a towar of a Prestes called Sir James Yonge who did resists, and shot ij. hackebuttes at the footmen which priest was burned in the tower and tenne others with hym’. He is given the designation ‘Sir’ in the Charter, indicating that he only had his bachelor’s degree. His exact status and relationship to the other priests mentioned in the Charter is unknown. He may be the same James who was presented to the chaplainry of ‘Carlangrig’ (i.e. Caerlenrig) in 1533. It seems like he was the ‘James Yonge vicar’ who witnessed a renunciation for John Scott in Hawick in 1534 (with Vicar John Scott also involved). James (d.1622) recorded as being ‘in Belsches’. He was executed for perjury, having apparently been bribed to lie in a case of theft that Andrew Turnbull in Belses brought against the Militia. James (d.c.1687) servitor to Sir William Eliott of Stobs. His will is recorded in 1695. James (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hasseendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Easter Groundstone. James (18th C.) recorded at West Burnfoot in Wilton Parish in 1724. He married Janet Clerk in 1713, the proclamations being made in Ashkirk and Minto Parishes. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1724, with witnesses Thomas Irvine and William Easton. James (18th/19th C.) recorded in Crawknowe in 1794 when he was involved in a dispute with heckler Robert Scott in Denholm. This was over the price of a mare. He was surely related to Walter, who was recorded in Crawknowe in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Knowesouth. He is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. In 1799 he was recorded as a labourer at Knowesouth and in 1801 as servant to Mr. Rutherford. He could be the James whose children Mary (b.1810) and Anne (b.1813) were baptised in Bedrule Parish. James (18th/19th C.) smith in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Wilson is recorded in 1800 and his daughter Mary in 1804. Rev. James (1774–1822) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Peter. He was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1802 and became minister of Eckford in 1807. He married Marion, eldest daughter of James Hume, Schoolmaster of Lasswade, and she died in 1857, aged 75. His children were: Margaret Simpson; Euphemia; Peter, surgeon in Hong Kong; Marion, who married Rev. James Hope of Roxburgh; Beatrix Laing; James Hume, doctor at Amoy, China, who died at Musselburgh; and Janet. James (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (b.1794/5) mason and innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is probably also the same man listed as a grocer in 1837. In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded at the Cross Keys Inn. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a mason and innkeeper at the Cross Keys. By 1861 he was at Dryden near Ashkirk, farming 400 acres and employing 3 labourers. He married Jean Manuel in 1819 and their children included Jane, James, Elspeth and Simon. James (19th C.) married Mary Cairns in Lilliesleaf in 1823. James (19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Bower and their son James was baptised in 1834. James (b.1815/6) from Oxnam, he was farmer at Teviothwaugh. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861, when he was farmer of 100 acres and employer of 2 labourers. He married Margaret Nurdie and their children included Janet, James, Elspeth and Simon. James (19th C.) married Mary Cairns in Lilliesleaf in 1823. James (19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Bower and their son James was baptised in 1834. James (b.1815/6) from Oxnam, he was farmer at Teviothwaugh. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861, when he was farmer of 100 acres and employer of 2 labourers. He married Margaret Nurdie and their children included Janet, Alice (or Alison) and Robert. James (b.c.1820) Sawyer in Hawick. He was probably the son of Sawyer John who was baptised in 1818. He was living at about 79 High Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and their children included John and Thomas. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. His name is transcribed as ‘James Long in Denbray’, so he was probably a tenant in Deanbrae, and his surname was word likely to be Young; most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He is also listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his name is there given as ‘Johannem Zong scissorem in denebra’, suggesting he was a carver (or perhaps carpenter) at Deanbrae. His name was also recorded (as ‘Johis young scissoris in’) in 1494/5, but scored out, and then entered again later when he had remission for stealing a cow from Simon Landle, with the Laird of Gledstains as his surety. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with Thomas, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same John in Craigen of Minto was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 14 ewes from him; he was probably related to Thomas, who is also recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same John in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice- aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to George and Robert, who were also recorded. He was indicted in 1502 (as well as Thomas, Richard and William, to whom he was probably also related), with William Turnbull of Minto again as his surety. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant at Roughlee in 1494/5. He had remission for bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas ‘Leipden’ and Matthew Mitchelson, living at Hundalee, with his surety being the Master of Angus. He had further remission in 1502 for the same crime. He was probably related to Simon, who was recorded at Roughlee in 1493 and 1502. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Johnnis young’. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Peebleshire. John (16th C.) owner of a quarter particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. John (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as brother of Thomas. Isabel Ker of Cessford complained that it had been 18 years since their father had died, and they still occupied her quarter of Hassendeanbank without paying her. John (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with ‘Michaely’. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge. John (d.1580) described as ‘in Cames’ (probably Kames) under the Laird of Minto when he was convicted and hanged for the murder of and theft from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. His accomplice, Andrew Turnbull from Belses, was still a minor at the time. John (16th C.) son and heir of Andrew, tenant in Langnewton. In 1581 he resigned a husbandland in Langnewton to Patrick, son of John Dobson. Patrick paid him £27 Scots. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jok Young in Toune of Roull’ in the records of the Curcuit Court of 1622. He was accused of stealing sheep belonging to William Scott of ‘Weyns’, but cleared of the charges. John (17th C.) tenant in Fastcastle, recorded along with Thomas in 1644. The pair were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’. Thomas was probably his son or brother, and they were probably related to other Youngs in Rulewater. John (17th C.) tenant in the farm of ‘Rouchneuck’ (i.e. Roughleeneuk) according to a 1609 rental roll of Jedforest. Ninian and Lyle are also listed and surely closely related. John (17th C.) resident at Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was fined in 1706 for ‘his disorderlie and irregular marriage with Margaret Clerk’. She was daughter of Andrew Clerk, also a merchant in Hawick. They were married by Thomas Blair at Cornhill in Northumberland, suggesting (at that time) that at least one of the 2 families still followed the Episcopalian Kirk, or that the couple simply eloped there because the wedding was against the wishes of the families. John (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1780 when his marriage to Janet Slaiter was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Slaiter as cauteriser. Rev. Dr. John (1743–1806) first minister of the Hawick Anti-Burgher Kirk. He was born in Kinross-shire, probably son of John, a small farmer at Mlnathort, and Janet Millar. When aged 5 it is said that a soldier who stopped off in his village, mortally wounded, had the Bible read to by him, everyone else who could read being out at harvest. He took a course at the University of St. Andrews when he was just 10 and entered the Secession theological seminary 2 years later. He is said to have failed to qualify 2 years in a row, purely as a result of his age, and was 21 when he became a probationer of the Anti-Burgher Kirk. He then taught at a school in Perthshire. In 1766 he was licensed at Sanquhar, and in 1767 he was appointed the first minister of... the new secessionist Anti-Burgher congregation at the Green Church in Hawick (after a trial period of several weeks). His arrival in Hawick was on the day after the devastating Great Flood. He was recorded baptising a child in Hawick in 1768 (and there must have been others). He wrote what was possibly the first book published in Hawick, ‘The True State of the Unhappy Controversy about the Burgis-Oath, being a Discourse delivered at Kelso, the 8th of Oct., 1782’ (1783). He also wrote ‘A history of the commencement, progress, and termination of the late war between Great Britain and France’, published in 2 volumes in Edinburgh in 1802. This book apparently came to the notice of Mr. Pitt, who sent a complementary letter and arranged a pension, which he declined, but it later went to his widow and two of his daughters. His ‘Essays on Government’ (1794, 1798) was well read in its day, and was a justification of the British government’s opposition to revolutionary France, probably written as a deliberate attempt to counter the perception that the Secession churches were full of radicals. Its contents led to a complaint to the Synod, although the matter was eventually allowed to drop. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He was also an early member of the Hawick Curling Club. In politics he was a Tory, and had no patience for the ‘blacknebs’ who were well represented in Hawick in his day. He was an eminent scholar, but said to be perhaps too academic for some of his congregation. Services in his time were about 3½ hours in duration, with hour-long doctrinal prayers while the congregation stood. For many years he also led ‘evening exercises’ on Sunday nights (in addition to the 2 earlier sermons of the day), which were usually lectures on Old Testament history or political matters. It is said that about half of the seats in the Green Kirk were paid for by members of the Established Kirk, due to his popularity. He is said to have also been called on much more frequently than the parish ministers for public visits as well as funerals. He was said to be the most tolerant local minister in regard people of other denominations, but was unpopular with many of the others. He was twice called before the Session. In order to eke out his meagre stipend, he and his family farmed a garden at the Green, and for several years also farmed at Silverbuthall and some fields at Crumhaugh-hill. He refused a call to the Secession Church in Nicholson Street, Edinburgh, saying that only death would sever his connection with Hawick; the call was later accepted by Dr. John Jamieson, the lexicographer. He received a doctorate from King’s College Aberdeen in 1794, the first given to a secession clergyman. His other publications include ‘The true nature of evangelical covenanting with God’ (1778), ‘Rules for the Direction of Praying Societies, or Fellowship Meetings’ (1781), ‘Duty of relieving the indigent and distressed’ (1795) and ‘Sermons on various important subjects’ (3 volumes, 1797). However, most of his manuscripts and correspondence were lost, as well as the diary he kept (except for a brief extract from 1777 and 1778). An original letter of his is in the Museum. He additionally helped Sir John Sinclair prepare the ‘Statistical Survey of Scotland’ for publication. In 1804 he suffered from what might now be called a stroke. As a result of this he required a colleague to preach for him in about his last year, since it was difficult for the congregation to make out what he said. For his last 5 months he could neither move nor speak, but recovered his speech one day, and gave a blessing to his family for 3 hours before again becoming insensible. A communion token from the church bears the inscription ‘M.–I.Y.–1768’ (i.e. ‘Minister’ and his initials) on one side and ‘A.C.–H.K.’ (for ‘Associate Church Hawick’) on the other. He married Helen Gibb in Wilton in 1768; she was from Muckhart, where he had lodged before coming to Hawick, and she died in 1809 in her 60th year. They had 6 sons and 5 daughters, 9 children reaching maturity. His children included: James (b.1769), who presumably died in infancy; the eldest daughter, who married Rev. William Patrick of Lockerbie, and assisted Dr. Jamieson with his dictionary; Euphemia (b.1774), who was 2nd wife of Alexander Davidson, blind lecturer in chemistry, then secondly married Dr. Thomas Dick; John (b.1776); Janet (b.1778), who married John Scott, manager of Hawick gasworks and also miller of Hawick Mill; Margaret (b.1780); James (b.1782); Ann (b.1784); and an unnamed son (b.1791). The 1791 baptism was recorded in Hawick Parish and done ‘in the presence of the Associate Congregation’. 2 of his sons trained for medicine, one obtained an army commission, and another became a merchant. There is no known portrait of him, although there is a water-colour of his daughter, Mrs. Janet Scott. He was long remembered in Hawick as a popular and dedicated minister. Sir Walter Scott was working on editing his memoirs when he had some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. John (b.1771/2) farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Young Parish. He married Elizabeth Boa. They had a son Richard (b.1801) in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Broomiebrae according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same John was a labourer in Hawick on the list for the ballot in 1801. John (1788/9–1864) sawyer in Hawick, originally from Peebles. He was living on O'Connell Street in 1841 and 1851 and at No. 7 (perhaps the modern No. 17) in 1861. He married Beatrice (or 'Beaty') Scoon in East Bank Kirk in 1815; she died in 1865, aged 68. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk (and several also in Wilton), included: Jane (b.1816), who died aged 18; James (b.1818); Mary or Marion (b.1820); John (b.1822), who died in infancy; John (again, b.1823); an unnamed child (b.1826); Anne (b.1827); and Beatrix (b.1833). Many of the family are buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Perhaps the same John earlier married Annie Broadfoot and had a daughter Annie baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1813. John (b.1791/2) woollen framework knitter in Hawick, originally from Maxton. He was living at ‘Greenwind foot’ in 1841 and at Myreslawgreen in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Mary (from Hawick) and their children included Margaret (b.1819/20). He is probably the weaver John recorded as a member of Allars kirk in 1829. John (b.1800/1) physician in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was born in Yetholm Parish. He is listed as a surgeon in Denholm on the 1841 census and a ‘licentiate of R.C.L. Edinburgh’ (i.e. the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburgh) in 1851 and 1861. He probably lived on the Wynd. He married Isabella Rutherford late in life, and their children included: Walter J.; Isabella C.; Jane T.; John R.; and William. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Betsy Turnball and their daughter Helen was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1817. John (b.c.1805) stocking dresser living at about 37 High Street in 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella, Helen, Jane, Margaret and Beatrice. John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hutton in Lilliesleaf in 1839. John (b.1814/5) framework knitter living on the Back Row in 1851 and at 22 Kirk Wynd in 1861. He married Janet Smith and their children included: John (b.1839/40); Archibald (b.1843); James (b.1845); Walter (b.1847/8); and Helen (b.1850/1); and Archibald (again, b.1852/3). 2 of their children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (19th C.) member of Hawick Free Kirk. He married Isabella Scott and their children included: Georgina (b.1844); and John (b.1846). John (19th C.) married Helen Rutherford in Hobkirk Parish in 1848. John (b.1823/4) wool machine cleaner living at 3 Round Close in 1861. John (b.1830/1) woollen handloom weaver in Hawick. He was living on Wellington Place in 1861. His wife was Ann and their children included George, Margaret, Sarah and Thomas. John (b.1840/1) son of farmer and baker William, he was baker at 12 and then 11 Sandbed. He ran a baker’s cart out to Whitrope when the tunnel was being constructed. He had the house Oakwood built in Buccleuch Road. In 1871 at Greenriver he married Mina, daughter of Peter Smith of Harwood Mill. They had 14 children: John, an engineer who emigrated to Canada; William, also a baker; Peter; Thomas, a chemist in Australia; Andrew, a designer in Torquay; Robert, a joiner who married Margaret Barclay and moved to South Africa; Wilhelmina, who married James Thomson (of the Oddfellows); Nellie, married John Crosbie; Margaret ‘Daisy’, married J.E.D. Murray; Bella, married tweed designed Harold Platt; Mary, married William Martin and moved to South Africa; Tina, married A. Bell of Wrexham; Bessie; and Flora, who died young. He was a Magistrate for a while, and became quite notorious (since the national press picked it up) for a decision regarding an altercation in a pub, when he could not make up his mind and so said ‘Guilty or not guilty, three days or 5 shillings to pay’. John H. (19th/20th C.) son of George of Wellington Street. An article from the 1900 Hawick News (reprinted in the Border Magazine) describes how he had just returned from the Transvaal, where he was a businessman in Klkersdorp. The Boers tried to press him into service in the war, but he was able to obtain a pass to leave the country, where he describes the conditions in some detail. Lyle (17th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk, along with Ninian and John, according to a rental roll of 1669. Margaret (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Margaret Paulin Young (1864–1953) born in Lilliesleaf, where her father, Rev. William, was the minister of the Burgher Kirk. J.M. Barrie was her cousin. She was head girl at Lilliesleaf School, but the family moved to Glasgow when she was 10 and she attended Park School there. She went through teacher training in London (at the only institution providing such training for women), taught for 2 years at Oxford High School and then moved back to Park School in Glasgow, where she taught English, Mathematics and Latin. She was then appointed Head at a new school in Kilmalcolm, but 3 years later was lured back to Park School as Head. She is credited with modernising Park School, where she introduced classes in science and art, as well as supporting the introduction of hockey. When she retired she was presented with a portrait of herself by James Gunn and the school introduced a prize in her name for the school dux. She was remembered ‘for her pungent wit, gracious courtesy, gaiety, and dignity’. She died in Hillhead. Marion (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Robert, as well James Oliver. They paid 22 shillings yearly. It seems likely she was a sister or daughter of James Oliver with Robert being husband or son. Mark (17th C.) resident of Barnhills. His brothers George, James and Robert lived in Bedrule. He was jailed in Jedburgh for attending field conventicles rather than his own church. Refusing to take the oath, he was sentenced to banishment to the plantations. Michael (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with John. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge. His forename is written ‘Michaelly’. Mina nee Smith (b.1847) youngest daughter of Peter Smith and Betty Dunlop. She married Hawick Baker John Young in 1871 at Greenriver, in the Rule valley. They set up their home at Oakwood on Buccleuch Road. She provided information about her family for Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. Her own children included J.E.D. Murray’s wife. Mungo (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf. His wife was Meg Smail, who was an acquaintance of Isobel Howison, who was convicted of witchcraft in 1628. It was stated that Wat Henderson came to his house, and seeing Howison there, was afraid and turned back. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Rouchneuk’ (i.e. Roughleeneuk) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John and Lyle are listed after him and so presumably younger brothers or sons. Patrick (17th C.) resident of the Hassendeaen part of Robertson Parish. In 1688 he ‘had a child baptized gotten in fornica[ti]ne wt Issobell ghram’ called Bessie. The witnesses were Robert Caldwell and William Graham (who was surely related to the mother of the child). Peter (18th/19th C.) dyer in Hawick. He married Janet Scoon in 1792. Peter (b.c.1800) stockinmaker and frameworker in Hawick. He was living on the Kirk Wynd in 1841, at about 9 Howegate in 1851 and at 16 Buccleuch Street in 1861. His wife was Martha Sinclair and their children included Peter, William, Janet, David, John, Marion and Anthony. Pim (19th C.) brother of Ad, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. A well known town character, he was big, burly and frank. Known as a poacher, he also once rushed into the Coble Pool to save a boy. On at least 2 occasions he was rescued from arrest by a mob of his friends, but in 1844 he was sentenced to transportation to Australia. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and William in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. Richard (d.1679) of Cavers Parish. He drowned on the ‘Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. He may have been related to James who survived. Richard (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for William Young, probably his son or brother. In 1761 he married Margaret Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1762), probably the blacksmith who was husband of poet ‘Bet’ Young; Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); Robert (b.1771), probably ‘Rob Young o the Back Raw’; John (b.1774); Isabel (b.1777); Mary (b.1779); Richard (b.1783) and George (b.1786). The witnesses in 1774 were Robert (probably the smith) and Thomas Robson, and in 1786 were carrier John Scott and smith William Young. He witnessed a baptism for smith Robert (surely a relative) in 1766. Richard (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet College and their son John was baptised in 1809. Richard (b.c.1786) son of William and Elizabeth (the poet), he was a blacksmith on the High Street. He was probably the smith in Hawick recorded on the 1801 ballot for the Militia; in which case he must have been born a few years before 1786. His premises around No. 54 are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as blacksmith on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He was one of the victims in the election ‘riot’ of 1837; he was said to have once been a leader of the Radicals, but switched allegiance when he received a grant of land from the Duke of Buccleuch. At the court case, he was alleged to have been attacked near the Tower Inn, had most of his clothes torn from him and was threatened with being thrown in the Slitrig. His wife was Elizabeth Blacklock (born in Kirkton Parish). Their children included: William (b.1819); Margaret (b.1821); Robert (b.1823/4); Elizabeth (b.1825/6); Agnes (b.c.1830); and Joan (b.1834/5). He was still alive in 1851. Richard (1793–1849) son of Adam and Margaret Young. He was a shoemaker at about 17 High Street. He married Agnes (or ‘Nancy’) Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1818); Adam (b.1820); Margaret (b.1822); Margaret (again, b.1824); Agnes (b.1829); Robert (b.1834); and Joseph Hume (b.1837). Robert, a weaver who lived with him in 1841, was probably his brother. By 1851 his wife was a midwife, living at 73 High Street. He is probably the Richard who served in the 73rd Regiment of Foot 1813–16, being discharged at the age of 23. Richard (b.1801) son of John Young and Elizabeth Boa, he was born in Wilton Parish. He lived at Liliesleaf with his parents in 1841 and was farm steward at Todshawhaugh in Wilton Parish in 1851. He was unmarried and had 4 servants in 1851 and was farm steward in 1861. Richard (b.c.1805) blacksmith on the Mid Raw. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: Robert (b.1829/30); Alexander (b.1830/1); Joan (b.1834); Thomas (b.1835/6); Francis (b.1841); and Catherine (b.1843). He must have been related to the older man of the same name who was blacksmith on the High Street. Robert (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a young bull from him. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with William Scoon. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in Selkirk in 1571/2, when Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh, was surety for him. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may served as factor or similar. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Yhoung’ (or ‘Zoung’). Robert (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He went to Edinburgh with Elliot in 1624, apparently part of the plot to try to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, although it was not claimed that he was directly involved. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Ruecastle and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1678. Robert (17th C.) resident of Barnhills, he was cottar to Bessie Turnbull. In about 1684 the pair were arrested by Capt. Bruce for being Covenanters and jailed in Selkirk Tolbooth and he was banished to the plantations. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at Burmemouth in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–88. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for carrier William Richardson and Isabel Henderson (perhaps his sister-in-law) in 1759 and 1766. He also witnessed baptisms for carrier James Tudhope in 1765 (and probably 1762) and for John Nichol in 1768. In 1774 he witnessed a baptism for Richard, who may have been his brother. He married Margaret Henderson in 1754 and their children included: Isabel (b.1757); William (b.1760); James (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); Mary (b.1768); William (b.1771); and Agnes (b.1780). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by carrier James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law) and Alexander Bunyan (who was a gardener), the 1760 baptism by carriers James Scott and William Hardie, the 1762 baptism by James Henderson and William Richardson, and the 1766 baptism by James Henderson and Richard Young (surely a close relative). It is unclear how he was related to the later ‘Rob Young o the Back Raw’. Robert ‘Rob’ (b.1771) probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He was recorded as a smith on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He was recorded as a blacksmith of the Back Raw on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (when he was listed as being on the Howegate). His premises are marked ‘Young’ on Wood’s 1824 map, in the middle of the Back Row. In the 1841 census he lived with several other Youngs, but it is unclear what their relationship was: Catherine (b.c.1890); Thomas (b.c.1809), also a blacksmith; Robert (b.c.1822), blacksmith’s apprentice; and Agnes (b.c.1825). He is mentioned in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘And Rob Young o’ the Back Raw, Hei’s often shod ma clutes, Saë Aw wull leave him ma shank banes To bei a pair o’ butes’ [JSB]. Robert (18th/19th C.) ledger at Larriston, listed among heads of households in 1835. Robert (19th C.) blacksmith on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is separate from the blacksmith Robert on the Howegate, and hence there must have been 2 men in the same trade with the same name at that time. He does not appear on the 1841 census, although there is a blacksmith of the same name in Oxnam Parish. Robert (1800–c. 70) son of William, he was born at Ruecastle. He became a joiner, first working with Walter Amos at Blacklee. He later lived at Mackside and then Hobkirk, where he worked on the Wolfelee estate. After 10 years he moved to Edgerston, working on the estate of William Oliver Rutherford. His son William followed him into the joinery trade. Along with his sons William and James he emigrated in 1851, settling in Ontario, where he purchased 100 acres. Rev. Robert (d. 1884) born in Covington, Lanarkshire, son of Schoolmaster James and Margaret Ferguson. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Lanark Presbytery and became assistant at Selkirk before being ordained as minister of Teviothead in 1854. He died unmarried. He wrote ‘Dr. Bisset’s Address and Remembrances’ (1864), ‘Henry Scott Riddell: Notes and Remembrances’ (published in Hawick, 1875), ‘On the History of Education in Scotland’ (1879) and ‘The Buccleuch Book, with Specific Reference to Allanhaugh’. Robert (b. 1822/3) frameworker in Wilton. In 1851 he was living on Ladylaw Place with his wife Jane and in 1861 they were at 3 High Street. Robert (b. 1829/30) wool sortar in Hawick. He was living on the Round Close in 1851, with his wife Magdalene, daughter Mary and sisters Joan and Catherine. In 1861 the family were at Mather’s Close. His wife was Magdalene and their children included Thomas, Mary, Richard and Margaret. Robert (19th C.) baker at 75 High Street. He also made aerated waters. He married Agnes Lamb, probably the same ‘Bonnie Aggie’ who was said to have made the first recipe for Hawick Balls. Their children included: Isabella Frank (b. 1856); Helen (b. 1858); Helen Jane (b. 1860); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b. 1862), who married Robert Riddle Thompson; Alexander (b. 1865); Mary Lamb (b. 1867); Janet Hall (b. 1872); and Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), who married William Laidlaw. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick joiner, son of baker John. He married Margaret Barclay. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Roughlee. In 1493 he had remission for the crimes of bringing in Englishmen and plundering from Hundalee. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as his surety. In 1502 he obtained remission for bringing in 2 men to steal cows, sheep and horses. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Roughlee in 1494/5 and 1502. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with John, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 6 sheep of his ewes from Minto (with John also recorded). Probably the same man was recorded in 1502 as ‘Thomas Zoung’: he was a tenant in Cragend of Minto, along with his son Thomas, William Johnstone and Simon Leitch. His farm there was burned by a group consisting of David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. This raid included the burning of seven horses. He was also recorded in 1502 when a cow of his from ‘cragend’ was stolen by Adam Grahaamslaw. Additionally William Turnbull of Minto was fined when he failed to appear in court; John, Richard and William in Minto were also recorded and hence probably related to him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas, tenant in Minto Cragend. In 1502 it is recorded that their farm had been plundered by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, from Stirches. Thomas (16th C.) ‘official of Lempetlaw’ for Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as brother of John. Isabel Ker of Cessford complained that it had been 18 years since their father had died, and they still occupied her quarter of Hassendeanbank without paying her. His name was listed first, so he was probably the older brother. Thomas (‘the Clan’) (16th C.) recorded in Altonburn in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Thomas (16th/17th C.) granted a husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Herrett’ (possibly Harwood) in a document of 1602. He was ‘bailie in that part’ to Lord Herries for a sasine in Rulewater.

C.) Schoolmaster at Hobkirk, recorded in 1616. He was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1644, along with John. The pair were cited at the Presbytery for refusing to subscribe to the Covenant. They were surely related to each other and to other Youngs of Rulewater. Thomas (b.c.1810) son of blacksmith Rob. He was a blacksmith, like his father, being the eldest son, running the business on the Back Row in 1841. He does not appear on the 1851 census. Bailie Thomas ‘Farthin Tom’ (1815/6–91) from Duns, he was a draper at 45 High Street for more than 40 years, and owner of this building in the mid-19th century. His nickname came from his use of vulgar fractions in pricing. He was also one of the founders of the Hawick Billiard Club. He played an active role in public life, being a member of the old Town Council and made a Magistrate, although in later years he led a more private life. He was living on Buccleuch Street (at about No. 1) in 1841 and at 45 High Street in 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he was ‘Linen Draper, Master’ and magistrate, employing 3 people. He married Agnes Grieve (from Craik), who died in 1876, aged 62. Their children included Mary Stenhouse and Christina Brydon, neither of whom reached adulthood, as well as Robert, Mary S. and Agnes. Thomas (19th C.) married Jane ‘Walls’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1851. Thomas (b.1826/7) from Crailing, he was a blacksmith at about 22 High Street in 1851. His wife was Ann and their children included Jessie and Ann. Thomas (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk 1850–53. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it still contained Hassendean. He married Margaret ‘creake’ (probably Craig) and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were William Scott and Patrick Dodds. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull in 1723; they were ‘both att ye milport’. Their children included: Isobel (b.1724); William (b.1727); Andrew (b.1728); Margaret (b.1728); Margaret (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1735). The witnesses in 1728 were George Scott and Walter Riddell. The deceased Walter whose daughter Margaret died in 1791, could be him. Walter (18th C.) shoemaker recorded in ‘Crawnows in Lilliesleaf’ in 1788 when he was accused of non-payment of a bill in Selkirk. He probably lived at Crawknowes near Ashkirk and was related to James, who was there in 1794. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and Richard in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Yong Clemytt Crossers servaunte’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. His brother ‘Jake Yong’ is also listed. It is unclear where they lived, or which Clement this was, although lands near the Slitrig are likely. William (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him (or James Middlemas or a servant of James) before the Warden of the East Marches. He is recorded as ‘quhyte Will Young’, this probably being a nickname. This was to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. William (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. William (17th C.) ploughman at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Robertson Parish (but probably Hassendean) in 1684 and 1687 for Walter Turnbull, in 1687 for William Martin and in 1688 for Thomas Scott in Hassendean. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1720 he (and ‘fowler’ Archibald Little) witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown ‘Headhous’. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Waddell. He married Janet Little in 1718 and their children included: William (b.1725); and Isobel (b.1730). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by masons John and Andrew Turnbull and the 1730 one by another William Young and James Scott. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He married Isobel Aitkin and their children included James (b.1740) and Isobel (b.1742). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant James Sanderson and in 1742 were weaver David ‘Harg’ and workman Robert Boyd. He could be the same man as the William who earlier married Janet Little. William (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, possibly a cooper. In 1754 he was paid ‘for clasping the bell wheel’ of St. Mary’s Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He is probably the son of Richard and Margaret Scott baptised in Hawick in 1761. He is probably the smith who in 1786 witnessed a baptism for Richard (probably his brother). He is probably the William recorded as blacksmith at the Midrow on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Betty Scott in Hawick in 1785. Their children included: Richard (b.1786), also a blacksmith; Walter (b.1788); Henry (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); and Christian (b.1796), who married James Grieve in Midlem. The witnesses in 1786 were smith Richard (probably his father or brother) and Thomas Miller and in 1796 were James Richardson and Peter Wilson. He died before 1823, when his wife, ‘Widow Young’ published a small volume of poetry. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnhead, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 4 horses at that time. He was probably succeeded as farmer by Adam. William (b.c.1770) portioner at Ruecastle. He sold coals in Hawick which he drove from the English Border. He is recorded at Ruecastle on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. Probably the same William was a servant at Ruecastle according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. In 1832 he was one of the 13 voters in the Parish of Bedrule. He was recorded at Ruecastle in 1841. In 1795 he married Agnes Scott from Acrum Parish. Their children were: Agnes, who died in infancy; Peggy; Robert, who became a joiner; Agnes (again); James; and William. He is buried at Bedrule. William (b.c.1780) apprentice gardener at Minto according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. William (b.c.1803) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was Parochial Schoolmaster at Lasswade in 1851. His wife was Susan and they had a daughter Agnes. William (19th C.) from Hawick, he published ‘A new song on the spirit of the Times’ in 1832. This was to the tune of ‘Johnny Cope’ and written to celebrate the passing of the Reform Act. Rev. William Langlands (1828–1907) from Kirriemuir, son of John and Elizabeth Barrie, who was related to J.M. Barrie. He was minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk from 1857. In 1874 he moved to Parkhead, Glasgow where he was minister until 1907. He married Margaret Brown Paulin (1832–99) in Aberdeen in 1858 and their children included: William Thomas (1860–93); Margaret Paulin (1864–1953), who became a school Headmistress; James Paulin (1866–1940); and Elizabeth Barrie (1869–1951). the family are buried at Dennistoun, Glasgow. William (1816/7–82) farmer at Rockvale. He married Margaret Fairbairn, who died in 1895, aged 80. Their children included: Catherine, who died in infancy; William, who farmed his father’s fields; and John, Sandbed baker. William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a baker at the Sandbed. His business was one of those said to have suffered severe damage during the 1846 flood. In 1851 he was listed at Teviot Square, probably around 12 Sandbed. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is also on Teviot Square and in 1861 he was at 12 Sandbed as baker, employing 9 bakers and 2 carters. His wife was Margaret (from Cramond) and their children included John, Mary, Sarah and William. William (b.1819) son of Richard and Elizabeth Blacklock. He was a blacksmith on the High Street, at around No. 28 in 1851 and No. 54 in 1861. His wife Sarah was from Nottinghamshire. Their first child, Richard (b.1847/8), was born at Newton in Northumberland, suggesting that he worked there for a while. They also had children William (b.1849/50), Jane (b.1851/2) and Henry (b.1853/4). William (19th C.) Judge at the Common Riding Games in the 1850s. He may be the same William who won the standing high leap at the 1840 Games. William (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parish, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. William (b.1831/2) recorded as miller at Spittal in 1861. He lived at ‘Spittal Cottars House’. His wife was Sarah, and they had a son Thomas. William (19th/20th C.) son of Rulewater joiner Robert. He was educated at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’ and Hobkirk School, then went with his father to work on the Edgerston estate. In 1851 he emigrated along with his father, settling in Ontario. There he purchased 500 acres, which he cleared and farmed. He married Janet Brown, daughter of an Edinburgh builder who settled in Lambton County, Ontario. Their children were: Robert, who married Sarah Walton; John, who also married; and Janet, who married W. Johnston. He returned to visit the Rule valley in 1905. Y.W.A.M. see Youth With A Mission the Y.W.C.A. (thu-wl-du-bu-lew-sey-ah) n. the Young Women’s Christian Association, established in England in 1855, with an active group in Hawick by the 1880s, run by Mrs. Elliot Lockhart and Mrs. Glenny.

z (yi) n. letter that sometimes stands for the ‘yogh’ symbol, since that was indistinguishable from a tailed cursive ‘z’. It was therefore sometimes printed as a ‘z’, although often the same words were alternatively spelled with a ‘y’. This led to pronunciations which voice the z (like the modern ‘Menzies’ and the usual pronunciation of the local name ‘Kedzie’), even although the correct pronunciation was originally more like yee. This confusion is particularly apparent in words containing ‘lz’, such as ‘assoilzie’, ‘balzie’, and ‘failzie’.

zebra crossin (ze-bru-kro-sin, zee-bru-kro-sin) n. these black and white striped crossings, accompanied by Belisha beacons, appeared experimentally in 1949 and were fully approved in 1951. The first one appeared in Hawick at least from 1952, on the High Street between Baker Street and O’Connell Street. Another 2 appeared near the Town Hall and across North Bridge Street near the Horse. These have been prominent landmarks ever since. The main one at the Town Hall was moved further north, denuded of stripes, and became a pedestrian-controlled crossing, but is still referred to as a ‘zebra crossing’. There are also pedestrian-controlled crossings at the top of Commercial Road and on Mart Street. The crossing over North Bridge Street/Oliver Place was removed following road changes at the Horse. There are still zebras with Belisha beacons over the Mart Street car park and across Mansfield Road near the Leisure Centre.

Zeppelins (zep-linz) n., pl. German airships, which bombed targets in Britain during WWI, leading to the imposition of black-outs. 2 of them entered near Berwick in April 1916, killing 10 people on its way to Edinburgh. There was a local scare in August 1916, which turned out to be a British airship. A story that a Zeppelin bombed Robert’s Linn Bridge is unsubstantiated.

Appendix A: Abbreviations in quotations

The following is a list of abbreviations for authors from whom quotations have been taken, as credited in the text. Note that for some of the quotations (particularly older or anonymous ones) the reference given is to the author of the book or article in which the quote was found, and so in not all cases is the person listed the originator of the quote. In order to save space, specific publications and page numbers are not given, but in most cases the relevant body of work is modest enough that it would not be too difficult to find the relevant passage; however, for some historical examples the year is also given. Since older sources are scarce, some liberality is used in deciding whether the text represents local speech. The abbreviations used are:

Appendix B: Bibliography

This list represents not just a compendium of publications relevant to Hawick, but specifically includes those works that have been scrutinised for information to add to this Word Book. Conversely, it should be the case that the Word Book will serve as a glossary for the dialect words in those publications, and should be a good resource for people reading anything on this list and wanting to know more about something relating to Hawick or its neighbouring district. The format for entries here is:

author, year of publication, title, publisher, location; further editions if applicable.

Adam C.E., 1887, ‘View of the Political State of Scotland in the Last Century, A Confidential Report on the Political Opinions, Family Connections, or Personal Circumstances of the 2662 County Voters in 1788’, David Douglas, Edinburgh

Acting Fathers and Cornet’s Lasses are known only patchily in the 19th century. The earliest Acting Fathers were the Cornet’s own father. Long before the Cornet’s Lass was a formal position, there was a young lady chosen to buss the Flag. A very brief phrase is used to describe the Chief Guest and brackets indicate a main guest at the Common Riding in the years before there was an official Chief Guest.
